TO

ROBERT M. PATTERSON, M. D.,

DIRECTOR OF THE MINT OF THE UNITED STATES; VICE PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY; LATE PROFESSOR OF NATURAL PHILOSOPHY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA; ETC. ETC.

MY DEAR DOCTOR,

When I dedicated the first edition of this work to you, we were colleagues in the University of Virginia. Since that period, we have been placed in various relations with regard to each other; and in all you have maintained those sterling qualities which led me at the time to inscribe it to you. Need I add, that I embrace with eagerness the opportunity, a third time afforded me, of manifesting to you the regard and esteem with which I am

Faithfully Yours,

ROBLEY DUNGLISON.

PHILADELPHIA,
SPRUCE STREET, FEBRUARY 6, 1842.

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION.

THE second edition of this work was exhausted so soon after its appearance, that not many new terms were introduced, in the interval, into Medical Nomenclature. These have been added, with several that had escaped the author in the former editions. He has, likewise, incorporated in the body of the work the synonymes, which formed an index of not fewer than twenty thousand words in the last edition. This will be found an important improvement. If the simple synonymy of a term be needed, a mere reference to it may be sufficient; but if farther information be desired, it may be obtained in the body of the work, under the term referred to. For example, the French word Tronc is said to be synonymous with Trunk. This may be sufficient for the inquirer; should it not be, however, the requisite information may be found by turning to "Trunk."

The circumstance of the work not being stereotyped, enables the author to be constantly enlarging and improving it; and he has no doubt, that the present edition will be found to possess stronger claims on the attention of the practitioner and student than its predecessors.

PHILADELPHIA,
SPRUCE STREET, FEBRUARY 6, 1842.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

THE present undertaking was suggested by the frequent complaints, made by the author's pupils, that they were unable to meet with information on numerous topics of professional inquiry,—especially of recent introduction,—in the medical dictionaries accessible to them.

It may, indeed, be correctly affirmed, that we have no dictionary of medical subjects and terms which can be looked upon as adapted to the state of the science. In proof of this the author need but remark, that he has found occasion to add several thousand medical terms, which are not to be met with in the only medical lexicon at this time in circulation in the country.

The present edition will be found to contain many hundred terms more than the first, and to have experienced numerous additions and modifications.

The author's object has not been to make the work a mere lexicon or dictionary of terms, but to afford, under each, a condensed view of its various medical relations, and thus to render the work an epitome of the existing condition of medical science. In its preparation, he has freely availed himself of the English, French, and German works of the same nature, and has endeavoured to add every subject and term of recent introduction, which has fallen under his notice; yet, with all his care, it will doubtless be found that subjects have been omitted: the numerous additions, however, which he has made, and his strong desire to be useful, “by removing rubbish and clearing obstructions from the paths through which learning and genius press forward to conquest and glory,” will, he trusts, extenuate these and other objections that might be urged against the work; especially when the toil, which every compiler of a dictionary must endure, is taken into consideration; a toil which has been so forcibly depicted by the great English Lexicographer, as well as by the distinguished SCALIGER:

“Si quelqu'un a commis quelque crime odieux,
S'il a tué son père, ou blasphémé les Dieux,
Qu'il fasse un Lexicon: s'il est supplice au monde
Qui le punisse mieux, je veux que l'on me tonde.”

ABBREVIATION

A, before a consonant; An before a vowel, a, av, have, in the compound medical terms, a privative or debasing signification, like that of the particles in, im, un, ir, in English. Thus: Stheni'a means strength. Astheni'a, want of strength. Anamia, want of blood, &c.

AACHEN, Aix-la-Chapelle.

A, or AA. See Abbreviation.

AARZHIL, MINERAL WATERS OF. A is in the canton of Berne in Switzerland. The chief spring contains muriates of lime and soda, sulphates of lime and soda, oxyd of iron, and hydrosulphuric acid gas.

ABACH, MINERAL WATERS OF. A hydrosulphuretted saline spring, not far from Ratisbon or Regensburg in Bavaria.

ABAISSEMENT DE LA MATRICE, Pro-lapsus uteri.

ABAISSEUR DE L'AILE DU NEZ, Depressor alae nasi—a. de l'angle des lèvres, Depressor anguli oris—a. de la lèvre inférieure, Depressor labii inferioris—a. de la Machoire inférieure, Digastricus—a. de l'ail, Rectus inferior oculi.

ABALIENA'TUS. Corruptus. Corrupted. Membra abaliena'ta. Limbs dead, or benumbed.—Celsus, Scribonius Largus.

ABANGA. Name given by the inhabitants of St. Thomas to the fruit of a palm tree, the seeds of which they consider very useful in diseases of the chest, in the dose of three or four, given two or three times a day.

ABAPTIST'A. Abaptiston, from a privative, and βαπτίζω, 'to plunge.' A term applied to the old Trepan, the conical shape of which prevented it from plunging suddenly into the cavity of the cranium.

ABAREMO-TEMO. A Brazilian tree, which grows in the mountains, and appears to be a mimosa. Piso relates that the decoction of its bark, which is bitter and astringent, was applied, in that country, to ulcers of a bad character.

ABARNAHAS, Magnesia.

ABARTICULA'TIO, Diarthrosis and Synarthrosis.

ABATTIS, Giblets.

ABBEYCOURT, MINERAL WATERS OF.

A chalybeate spring, six leagues from Paris, and one from Poissy. It was once much frequented, but is now abandoned.

ABBEVILLE, MINERAL WATERS OF. An acidulous chalybeate at Abbeville, in the department of the Somme.

ABBREVIATION, Abbrevia'tio, Brachym'sis, Brachys'mos, Abbrevia'tura. (F.) Abréviation. Abbreviations are chiefly used in medicinal formulæ. They are by no means as frequently employed now as of old, when every article had its appropriate symbol. The chief abbreviations now adopted are the following:

A. AA, ANA, (ava) utriusque, of each.

ABDOM. Abdomen.

ABS. FEBR. Absente febre, In the absence of fever.

AD. or ADD. Adde or addatur.

AD. LIB. Ad libitum, At pleasure.

ADMov. Admoveatur, Let it be applied.

ALTERN. HOR. Alternis horis, Every other hour.

ALV. ADSTRICT. Alvo adstrictâ, The bowels being confined.

AQ. Aqua, Water.

AQ. COMM. Aqua communis, Common water.

AQ. FONT. Aqua fontis, Spring water.

AQ. BULL. Aqua bulliens, Boiling water.

AQ. FERV. Aqua fervens, Hot water.

AQ. MARIN. Aqua marina, Sea water.

B. A. Balneum arenae, A sand-bath.

BALS. Balsamum, Balsam.

B. B. BDDS. Barbadoensis, Barbadoes.

BIB. Bibe, Drink.

BIS. IND. Bis indies, Twice daily.

B. M. Balneum mariae, A salt water bath.

BOL. Bolus.

BULL. Bulliat, Let it boil.

BUT. Butyrum, Butter.

B. V. Balneum vaporis, A vapor-bath.

CÆRUL. Cæruleus, Blue.

CAP. Capiat, Let him take.

C. C. Cornu cervi, Hartshorn.

C. C. U. Cornu cervi ustum, Burnt hartshorn.

C. M. Cras manè, To-morrow morning.

COCHL. Cochleare, A spoonful.

COCHL. AMPL. Cochleare amplum, A large spoonful.

COCHL. INF. Cochleare Infantum, A child's spoonful.

COCHL. MOD. or MED. Cochleare modicum or medium, A dessert spoonful.

COCHL. PARV. Cochleare parvum, A tea-spoonful.

COL. Cola, colaturæ, Strain, and to the strained.

COMP. Compositus, Compound.

CONF. Confectio, Confection.

CONS. Conserva, Conserve.

COQ. Coque, Boil.

CORT. Cortex, Bark.

CRAS. Crastinus, For to-morrow.

CUJ. Cujus, Of which.

CUJUSL. Cujuslibet, Of any.

CYATH. Cyathus, A glassful.

CYATH. THEÆ, A cup of tea.

D. Dosis, A dose.

D. et S. Detur et signetur, (placed at the end of a prescription.)

D. D. Detur ad, Let it be given in or to.

DEB. SPISS. Debita spissitudo, A due consistence.

DEC. Decanta, Pour off.

DECUB. Decubitus, Lying down, going to bed.

DE D. IN D. De die in diem, From day to day.

DEJ. ALV. Dejectiones alvi, Alvine evacuations.

DEF. Depuratus, Purified.

DET. Detur, Let it be given.

DIEB. ALTERN. Diebus alternis, Every other day.

DIEB. TERT. Diebus tertiis, Every third day.

DIG. Digeratur, Let it be digested.

DIL. Dilutus, Dilute.

DIM. Dimidius, One half.

DIST. Distilla, Distil.

DIV. Divide, Divide.

DONEC. ALV. SOLUT. FUER. Donec alvus solutu fuerit, Until the bowels are opened.

DRACH. Drachma, A drachm.

EJUSD. Ejusdem, Of the same.

ENEM. Enema, A clyster.

EXHIB. Exhibeatur, Let it be exhibited.

EXT. SUPER ALUT. Extende super alutam, Spread upon leather.

F. Fiat, Let it be made.

F. PIL. Fiat pilula, Make into a pill.

F. VENÆ. OF F. V. S. Fiat vene sectio, Let bleeding be performed.

FEB. DUR. Febre durant, The fever continuing.

FEM. INTERN. Femoribus internis, To the inside of the thighs.

FIST. ARMAT. Fistula armata, A bag and pipe, a clyster pipe and bladder fitted for use.

F. L. Fluidus, and Flores, Fluid, and Flowers.

FRUST. Frustillatim, In small pieces.

GEL. QUÆVIS. Gelatinâ quævis, In any kind of jelly.

G. G. G. Gummi guttæ Gambiæ, Gamboge.

GR. Grænum, A grain.

GUT. Gutta, A drop.

GUT. or GUTT. QUIBUSD. Guttis quibusdam, With some drops.

GUM. Gummi, Gum.

GUTTAT. Guttatim, By drops.

HOR. DECUB. Horâ decubitûs, At bed-time.

HOR. INTERN. Horis intermediis, At intermediate hours.

H. S. Horâ somni, At bed-time.

INF. Infunde, Infuse.

IND. Indies, Daily.

INJ. ENEM. Injiciatur enema, Let a clyster be given.

IN PULM. In pulmento, In gruel.

JUL. Julepus, a julep.

LAT. DOL. Lateri dolenti, To the pained side.

LB. and LIB. Libra, A pound weight.

LLB. Libra, Pounds.

LIQ. Liquor.

M. Misce, Mix.

MAC. Macerata, Macerate.

MAN. Manipulus, A handful.

MAN. PRIM. Manc primo, Early in the morning.

MIC. PAN. Mica panis, Crumb of bread.

MIN. Minimum, The 60th part of a drachm, by measure.

MITT. Mitte, Send.

MITT. SANG. Mittatur sanguinis, Let blood be drawn.

MOD. PRÆSCRIPT. Modo Præsripto, In the manner directed.

MOR. SOL. More solito, In the usual manner.

MUC. Mucilago, Mucilage.

N. M. Nux moschata, Nutmeg.

P. R. N. Pro re natâ, As occasion may be.

PULV. Pulvis, A powder.

Q. P. Quantum placcat, As much as may please.

Q. S. Quantum sufficiat, as much as is sufficient.

QUOR. Quorum, Of which.

Q. V. Quantum volueris, As much as you wish.

—(Douglas.) Hypothënar minor metacarpeus. Sec Flexor parvus. It originates fleshy from the os pisiforme, and from the annular ligament near it; and is inserted, tendinous, into the inner side of the base of the first bone of the little finger. Use, to draw the little finger from the rest.

ABDUCTOR MINIMI DIGITI PEDIS, Calco-sub-phalangeus minimi digiti, Calcanco-phalangien du petit orteil, Parathënar major—(Winslow, by whom the muscle is divided into two portions. Parathënar major and metatarsus.) Calcanco-sous-phalangien du petit orteil—(Ch.) (F) Abducteur du petit orteil. This muscle forms the outer margin of the sole of the foot, and is immediately beneath the plantar aponeurosis. It arises, tendinous and fleshy, from the outer side of the protuberance of the os calcis, and from the root of the metatarsal bone of the little toe, and is inserted into the outer part of the root of the first bone of the little toe. Use. To draw the little toe outwards.

ABDUCTOR POLLICIS BREVIS, Abductor Pollicis Manus, Scapho-carpo-super-phalangeus Pollicis, Sus-phalangien du pouce, A. pollicis manus and A. brevis alter—(Albinus.) (F) Abducteur court du pouce. Carpo-sus-phalangien du pouce—(Ch.) A short, flat, triangular muscle, which arises from the anterior surface of the os scaphoides and the annular ligament of the carpus, and terminates at the outside of the upper extremity of the first phalanx of the thumb. A particular portion, on the inner side of this muscle, is called, by Albinus, Abductor brevis alter.

ABDUCTOR LONGUS POLLICIS, A. l. P. Manûs, Extensor ossis metacarpi pollicis manûs, Extensor primi internodii—(Douglas.) Extensor primus Pollicis, Cubito-radi-sus-métacarpien du pouce, Cubito-sus-métacarpicn du pouce—(Ch.) (F) Abducteur long du pouce. A long, thin muscle, arising from the posterior surface of the ulna, radius, and interosseous ligament, and inserted at the outer side of the upper extremity of the first metacarpal bone.

ABDUCTOR POLLICIS PEDIS, Calco-sub-phalangeus Pollicis. (F) Abducteur du gros orteil. This muscle arises, fleshy, from the anterior and inner part of the protuberance of the os calcis, and tendinous from the same bone where it joins with the os naviculare. It is inserted, tendinous, into the internal os sesamoideum and root of the first bone of the great toe. Use. To pull the great toe from the rest.

The name Abductor has been given also to all those interosseous muscles of the hand and foot, which perform the motion of abduction on the fingers or toes, and to muscles which execute the same function on other parts of the body.

ABDUMEN, Abdomen.

ABEBÆ'OS, from  $\alpha$  neg. and  $\beta\epsilon\beta\alpha\iota\omicron\varsigma$ , 'firm,' infirmus, deb'ilis. Weak, infirm, unsteady.

ABEILLE, Bee.

ABELMOSCHUS, Hibiscus Abelmoschus.

ABELMUSK, Hibiscus Abelmoschus.

ABELMELUCH. One of the names of the Ricinus, according to some authors.—Prosper Alpinus says that a tree, which grows about Mecca, is so called. Its seeds, which are black and oblong, are said to be a most violent cathartic.

ABENSBERG, MINERAL WATERS OF. A. is a city of Bavaria, where there is a cold, sulphureous spring.

ABERRA'TION, Aberra'tio, from aberra're, 'to wander from.' This word has several meanings.

1. The passage of a fluid of the living body into an order of vessels not destined for it. The passage of red blood, for example, into white vessels.

In this sense it is synonymous with the Error Loci of Boerhaave.

2. The flow of a fluid towards an organ different from that to which it is ordinarily directed; as in cases of vicarious hemorrhage. Aberrations of sense or judgment are certain errors in the images perceived or certain derangements of the intellectual faculties.

The word is used in optics to designate the dispersion of the rays of light in passing through a lens.

The ABERRATION OF SPHERIC'ITY, or spher'ical aberrat'ion, takes place, when the rays, as in a common lens, which pass through the centre of the lens, and those which pass near the circumference, are unequally refracted, so that they do not meet at a common focus.

This aberration of sphericity in the human eye is corrected by the iris.

The ABERRATION OF REFRAINGIBIL'ITY exists, when, as in a common lens, the rays that pass near the circumference of the lens are decomposed, so that a coloured image is observed. This aberration in the human eye is corrected by the iris, which does not permit the rays to fall near the circumference of the lens, and also by the crystalline lens itself, which, owing to its structure, serves the purposes of an achromatic glass.

ABËSSI, Realgar.

ABEVACUATIO. Apocno'sis, from ab, diminutive, and evacu, 'I empty.' An evacuation. A partial or imperfect evacuation. By some, it is applied to an immoderate evacuation.—Kraus.

ABHAL. A fruit well known in India, and obtained from a species of cypress. It passes for an emmenagogue.

ABIES, Pinus Picea—a. Canadensis, Pinus balsamea—a. Gallica, Pinus picea—a. Rubra, Pinus rubra.

ABIGA, Teucrium Chamæpitys.

ABIOTOS, Conium Maculatum.

ABIRRITA'TION. Ab-irrita'tio, from ab, privative, and irrita'tio, 'irritation.' This word strictly means, absence or defect of irritation. The disciples of Broussais use it to indicate a pathological condition, opposite to that of irritation. It may be considered as synonymous with Debility, Asthenia, &c.

ABLACTATIO, Weaning.

ABLATIO, Extirpation.

ABLUENS, Abstergent.

ABLU'TION. Ablu'tio, Aponip'sis, Cataclysmus, from Ablu'erē, 'to wash.' A name given to legal ceremonies in which the body is subjected to particular affusions. Ablution (especially of the extremities) with cold or tepid water is employed, therapeutically to reduce febrile heat. Also, the washing by which medicines are separated from the extraneous matters mixed with them.

ABNORMAL, Abnormous.

ABNORMITAS, Anomalía.

ABNORMOUS, Abnormal, Anormal, from ab, from, and norma, 'rule.' Not conformable to rule, irregular.

ABOLI'TION, Aboli'tio, destruction or suppression. A word, often employed, especially by the French, to express the complete suspension of any symptom or function. Abolition of the sight, e. g. is the complete loss of sight.

ABOMA'SUS, Abomasum, Enys'tron, Rcn-nect. The lowermost or fourth stomach of ruminating animals.

ABOMINA'TIO, Disgust.

ABONDANCE, Plethora.

ABORSIO, Abortion.

ABORSUS, Abortion.

ABORTIF, Abortive.

ABORTION, Abor'tus, Abor'sus, Abor'sio, Dysto'cia aborti'va, Omotocia, Paracy'sis abor-tus, Amblo'sis, Amblo'ma, Diaph'thora, Ectro'sis, Ezamblo'ma, Ezamblo'sis, Ectros'mos, Apopal-le'sis, Apopal'sis, Apoph'thora, Pthora, Concul-sio u'teri, Deperdi'tio. (F) Avortement, Bles-sure, Miscarriage. The expulsion of the fœtus before the seventh month of uterogestation, or before it is viable. (q. v.) The causes of this accident are referrible either to the mother, and particularly to the uterus; or to the fœtus and its dependencies. The causes, in the mother, may be:—extreme nervous susceptibility, great debility, plethora; faulty conformation, &c.; and it is frequently induced immediately by intense mental emotion, violent exercise, &c. The causes seated in the fœtus are its death, rupture of the membranes, &c. It most frequently occurs between the 8th and 12th weeks of gestation. The symptoms of abortion are:—uterine hemorrhage with or without flakes of decidua, with intermitting pain. When abortion has once taken place, it is extremely apt to recur in subsequent pregnancies about the same period. Some writers have called abortion, when it occurs prior to three months, Efluxion. The treatment must vary according to the constitution of the patient and the causes giving rise to it. In all cases, the horizontal posture and perfect quietude are indispensable.

TO ABORT', Abori'ri. To miscarry. (F) Avorter.

ABORTIVE, Aborti'veus, Amblo'ticus, Phthor'ius, Apophthor'ius, Ectro'ticus. (F) Abortif. A medicine to which is attributed the property of causing abortion. There is probably no direct agent of the kind.

ABORTMENT, Abortion.

ABORTUS, Abortion.

ABOUCHEMENT, Anastomosis.

ABOUISSEMENT, Suppuration.

ABOULAZA, a tree of Madagascar, used, according to Flacourt, in the practice of the country, in diseases of the heart.

ABRABAX, Abrasax, Abraxas. A mystic term expressing the number 365, and to which the Cabalists attributed miraculous properties.

ABRACADA'BRA: the name of a Syrian Idol, according to Selden. This word, when pronounced and repeated in a certain form and a certain number of times, was supposed to have the power of curing fevers and preventing many diseases. It was figured on amulets and worn suspended round the neck.

ABRACALAN, A cabalistic term to which the Jews attributed the same virtue as to the word ABRACADABRA.

ABRASAX, Abrabax.

ABRA'SION, Abra'sio, Aposyr'ma, Apoxys-mus, from abra'dere, 'to rasp.' A superficial excoriation, with loss of substance, under the form of small shreds, in the mucous membrane of the intestines. (F) Raclure des Boyaux. Also, an ulceration of the skin, possessing similar characters. According to Vicq d'Azyr, the word has been used for the absorption of the molecules composing the various organs.

ABRATHAN, Artemisia abrotanum.

ABRAXAS, Abrabax.

ABREVIATION, Abbreviation.

ABRICOT, Prunus Armeniaca.

ABROSIA, Abstinence.

ABROTANUM CATHSUM, Artemisia abrotanum—a. Mas, Artemisia abrotanum.

ABROTONTES, Ἀβροτονίτις, (οἶνος 'wine' understood). Wine impregnated with the Artemisia Abrotanum or Southernwood.

ABRUPTIO, Abduction.

ABSCESS, from abscedo, 'I depart,' or 'separate from.' Absces'sus, Absces'sio, Aphiste'sis, Aposte'ma, Impos'thume, Ecpye'ma, Ecpye'sis, Rcces'sus. (F) Abcès, Depôt. A collection of pus in a cavity, the result of a morbid process. See Pyogenia and Suppuration.

The French have various distinctive terms for Abscesses.

The Abcès chaud, aigu, soudain, is one which follows violent inflammation.

The Abcès froid, chronique, scrofuloux, one which is the result of chronic or scrofulous inflammation.

The Abcès par congestion, A. métastatique, is a symptomatic abscess, one which occurs in a part at a distance from the inflammation by which it is occasioned: e. g. a lumbar abscess; (q. v.) in which the inflammation may be in the lumbar vertebræ, whilst the pus exhibits itself at the groin.

ABSCESS, Psoas, Lumbar abscess.

ABSCESSUS CAPITIS SANGUINEUS NEONATORUM, Cephalæmatoma—a. Gangrænescens, Anthrax—a. Gangrænosus, Anthrax—a. Lumborum, Lumbar abscess—a. Mammæ, Mastodynia apostematosa—a. Nucleatus, Furunculus—a. Oculi, Hypopyon—a. Pectoris, Empyema—a. Pulmonum, Empyema —a. Spirituosus, Aneurism—a. Thoracis, Empyema.

ABSCISION, Abscis'io, Abscis'sio, from abscid'ere or abscin'dere, 'to cut off' Apoc'opē, Apothrau'sis, Diac'opē. Excision or extirpation of a part, especially of a soft part.—Fabricius Hildanus.

A fracture or injury of soft parts with loss of substance.—Hippocrates.

Diminution, or loss of voice.—Celsus.

Sudden and premature termination of a disease.—Galen.

ABSCISSIO PRÆPUTII, Circumcision.

ABSCISSIO, Sinus.

ABSINTHITES, ἀψινθίτης, Apsinthi'tes, Wine impregnated with Absinthium or Wormwood.—Dioscorides.

ABSINTHIUM, Artemisia absinthium—a. Maritimum, Artemisia maritima—a. Ponticum, Artemisia pontica—a. Romanum, Artemisia pontica—a. Santonicum, Artemisia santonica.

ABSORBANT, Absorbent.

ABSORBENT, Absorb'ens from absorbere, 'to drink, to suck up.' (F) Absorbant. That which absorbs.

The ABSORBENT SYSTEM is the collection of vessels and glands, which concur in the exercise of absorption.

A medicine used for absorbing acidity in the stomach and bowels, as magnesia, chalk, &c.

Also, any substance, such as cobweb, sponge, &c., which, when applied to a bleeding surface, retains the blood, and forms with it a solid and adhesive compound, which arrests the hemorrhage.

ABSORPTION, Resorp'tio, Inhala'tio, Imbi'bitio, Absorp'tio, Catarrhoph'e'sis, Catar'rhophe, same etymon. The function of absorbent vessels, by virtue of which they take up substances from without or within the body. Two great divisions have been made of this function. 1. External absorption, or the absorption of composition, which obtains, from without the organs, the materials intended for their composition: and, 2. Internal absorption, or the absorption of decomposition, which takes up from the organs the materials that have to be replaced by the exhalants.

By external absorption is meant not only that which takes place at the external surface of the body, but also that of the mucous membranes of the digestive and respiratory passages. Hence, again, the division of external absorption into cutaneous, intestinal or digestive, and pulmonary or respiratory.

Internal absorption is also subdivided into, 1. Molecular or interstitial, nutritive or organic, which takes up from each organ the materials that constitute it, so that the decomposition is always in equilibrium with the deposition. 2. The absorption of recremental secreted fluids, such as the fluid of serous membranes, synovia, &c. As these are constantly exhaled on surfaces, which have no external outlet, they would augment indefinitely, if absorption did not remove them in the same proportion as that in which they are deposited. 3. The absorption of a part of the excremential secreted fluids, as they pass over the excretory passages.

Absorption does not effect the decomposition of the body immediately. It merely prepares the fluid which has to be eliminated by the secretory organs.

The great agents of external absorption are the veins and chyliiferous vessels; of internal absorption, probably the lymphatics. In the chyliiferous vessels and lymphatics the fluid is always found to possess the same general properties. In them, therefore, an action of elaboration or selection must have taken place.

The veins, on the other hand, seem to exert no selection. Any fluid, possessing the necessary tenuity, passes through the coats of the vessel readily by imbibition, and proceeds along with the torrent of the circulation. Watery fluids in this manner enter the blood when they are taken into the stomach. Substances that require digestion, on the other hand, must pass through the chyliiferous vessels and thoracic duct.

ABSTÈME, Abstemious.

ABSTÈMIOS, Abste'mius, Aoi'nos, from abs, 'without,' and tem'e'tum, 'wine.' (F) Abstème. Used by the ancient writers as well as by the French in the sense only of its roots;—one who abstains from wine or fermented liquors in general.

ABSTERGENT, from abster'gere, 'to clean.' Abster'sivus, Abster'sivæ, Ab'tuens, Abster'sorius, Deter'gens, Rhypp'ticus, Tran'maticus. A medicine that cleanses the part to which it is applied.

ABSTERGENTIA, Detergents.

ABSTERSIVUS, Abstergent.

ABSTERSORIUS, Abstergent.

ABSTINENCE, Abstinen'tia, from abs, 'from,' and tenere, 'to hold,' Abrosia, Asitia, Liman'clia, Limoc'tonia, Fasting. Privation, usually voluntary, as when we speak of abstinence from pleasure, abstinence from drink, &c. It is more particularly used to signify voluntary privation of certain articles of food. Fasting is a useful remedial agent in certain diseases, particularly in those of an inflammatory character.

ABSUS, a kind of cassia—C. Absus—which grows in Egypt and in India, the seeds of which, pulverized and mixed with powdered sugar, have been employed, in form of a dry collyrium, in the endemic ophthalmia of Egypt.

ABUS DE SOI-MÈME, Masturbation.

ABUTA, Pareira brava.

ABVACUA'TIO, an excessive or colliquative evacuation of any kind.

ACACIA GERMANICA, see Prunus spinosa—a. Indica, Tamarindus—a. Nostras, see Prunus spinosa—a. Vera, see Acacia gummi—a. Zeylonica, Hæmatoxylo'n Campechianum.

ACACIÆ GUMMI, G. Acu'cia Arab'ica, G. Arab'icum, G. Acanthinum, G. Leucum, G. Thebaicum, G. Serapio'nis, G. Lamac, G. Senega or Seucea, Gum Arab'ic. (F) Gomme Arabique. The gum of the Mimosa Nilot'ica, Acacia vera, Spinu' Egyptiaca, of Upper Egypt, Nat. Ord. Mimoseæ. Sex. Syst. Polygamia Monœcia. It is in irregular pieces, colourless, or of a pale yellow colour, hard, brittle, of a shining fracture, transparent, soluble in water, and insoluble in alcohol. s. g. 1.4317.

It is mucilaginous; but is rarely used, except in Pharmacy. Sometimes it is administered alone as a demulcent.

ACAJOU, Anacardium occidentale.

ACAM'ATOS, from a priv. and καμνω, 'I labour.' This word has been sometimes used for a good constitution of the body. According to Galen, it means that position in which a limb is intermediate between flexion and extension; a position which may be long maintained without fatigue.

ACAMPSIA, Contractura.

ACANOS, Onopordium acanthium.

CANTHA, Vertebral column. Also, Spino-process of a vertebra.

ACANTHAB'OTOS, Acan'thulus, Volsel'la, from ακανθα, 'a spine,' and βαλλω, 'I cast out.' A kind of forceps for removing extraneous substances from wounds.—Paulus of Ægina, Fabricius ab Acquapendente, Scultetus, &c.

ACANTHALZUCA, Echinops.

ACANTHE FAUSSE, Heracleum spondylium.

ACANTHIUM, Onopordium acanthium.

ACANTHULUS, Acanthabulos.

ACANTHUS MOLLIS, Melampyllum, Bran'ca ursi'na, Brankur'sinc, Bear's Breech, (F) Pied d'ours. This plant is mucilaginous like the Athæa, and is used as a demulcent.

ACAPATLI, Piper longum.

ACAR'DIA from a priv., and καρδια, 'the heart.' The state of a fetus without a heart.

ACARICOBA. The Brazilian name for the Hydrocotyle umbellatum, used by the Indians as an aromatic, alexipharmic, and emetic.

ACARON, Myrica gale.

ACARUS from a privative, and καρς, 'divisible.' A minute insect, noticed by several observers, in the itch. The Acarus Scabiei, Sarcopte, Ciron.

ACARUS CIRO, see Psora—a. Scabiei, see Psora.

ACATALEP'SIA from a privative, and καταλαμβάνω, 'I comprehend.' Uncertainty in diagnosis. Its opposite is Catalepsia.—Galen.

ACATAPO'SIS, from a privative, and καταποσις, 'deglutition.' Incapacity of swallowing. Vogel has given this name to difficulty in deglutition.

ACATASTAT'IC, Acatostat'icus, from a priv., and καθιστημι, 'to determine.' An epithet given to fevers, &c., when irregular in their periods or symptoms.—Hippocrates.

ACATHAR'SIA, from a priv., and καθαρίζω, 'I purge.' Sordes, Impurities. Omission of a purgative.—Foësius.

ACATSJAVALLI, a Malabar plant, which is astringent and aromatic. A bath of it is used in the country in cases of Hemierania. It is supposed to be the Cassytha filiformis of Linnæus.

ACAWERIA, Ophioxylum serpentinum.

ACCABLEMENT, Torpor.

ACCELERATEUR, Accelerator urinæ.

ACCELERATOR URINÆ, Bulbo-cavernosus, Bulbo-uretral—(Ch.) Ejaculator Seminis, Bulbo-syndesmo-cavernosus. (F) Accélérateur. A muscle of the penis, which arises, fleshy, from the sphincter ani and membranous part of the urethra, and tendinous from the crus and beginning of the corpus cavernosum penis. In its course it forms a thin, fleshy layer, the inferior fibres of which run more transversely than the superior, which descend in an oblique direction; the muscles of both sides completely enclosing the bulb of the urethra. It is inserted into its fellow by a tendinous line running longitudinally on the middle of the bulb. Its use is to propel the urine or semen forwards.

ACCENT, Sonus vocis. Inflection or modification of the voice, which consists in raising or dropping it on certain syllables.

The accent exhibits various alterations in disease.

ACCES, Paroxysm.

ACCES'SION, Acces'sio, from acce'do, 'I approach.' The invasion, approach, or commencement of a disease.

ACCESSOIRE, Accessory—a. du long fléchisseur commun desorteils: see Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans (accessorius)—a. de l'Obturator interne, Ischio-trochanterianus—a. du pied d'Hippocrampe: see Cornu ammonis—a. du Saero-lombaire: see Sacro-lumbalis.

ACCESSORIUS FLEXOR LONGUS DIGITORUM PEDIS: see Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans (accessorius)—a. Pedis hippocampi. See Cornu ammonis.

AC'CESSORY, Accesso'rius, (F) Accessoire, Annex. A consequence or dependance on any thing; as accessory ligament, muscle, nerve, &c.

The ACCESSORY SCIENCES TO MEDICINE are those which do not relate directly to the science of man in a state of health or disease; as physics, chymistry, &c.

The term accessory is also given to several muscles.

The ACCESSORY OF THE PAROTID is a name given by Haller to a small gland, which accompanies the parotid duct, and which is commonly a mere prolongation of the Parotid itself.

ACCESSORY OF THE FAR VAGUM, Spinal nerve.

ACCESSUS, Coition.

ACCIDENS, Symptoma—a. Consecutifs, Consecutive phenomena.

AC'CIDENT, Aecidens, from accidere, to happen. A casualty; an unforeseen event. The French use the term in nearly the same sense as symptom. It means also an unexpected symptom.

ACCIDENTAL, adventitious. That which happens unexpectedly.

The French give the name Tissus accidentels to those adventitious textures, that are the result of a morbid process.

ACCIPITER, Hierax, εραξ, 'the hawk.' Mence'ratis Accip'iter. (F) Épervier. A bandage applied over the nose, so called from its likeness to the claw of a hawk.

ACCLIMATED, Clima'ti assue'tus, a word of recent introduction from the French, which means 'accustomed to a climate.'

ACCLIMATEMENT, Acclimation.

ACCLIMATION, Seasoning. (F) Aclimatement. The act of becoming acclimated, or accustomed to a climate.

The constitution of a person, who goes to live in another and very different climate, usually experiences changes, which are frequently of an unfavourable character, and the study of which is of considerable importance in medicine.

ACCOMPANIMENT, Adjunctum. (F) Accompagnement. That which is joined to any thing.

An Accompaniment to the cataract is a whitish, viscid substance, which sometimes surrounds the opaque crystalline and remains after the operation for cataract, causing a secondary cataract.

ACCOUCHÉE, Puerpera.

ACCOUCHEMENT, Parturition—a. Laborious, Dystocia—a. Contre nature, see Presentation, preternatural—a. Laborieux, Laborious labour.

ACCOUCHEUR, (F.) Adjutor Partus, Obstetricans, Maieuter. He who practises the art of midwifery. A Physician-Accoucheur, a Surgeon-Accoucheur, A man-midwife, &c.

ACCOUCHEUSE, Midwife.

ACCOUTUMANCE, Habit.

ACCRETION, Accretio, from ad, 'to,' and crecere, 'to increase.' Augmentation; also, increase by juxta-position.

ACCROÏSSEMENT, Increase.

ACCUSATIO, Indication.

ACE/DIA, Incuria, from a privative, and κηδος, 'care.' Want of care, neglect. Also, fatigue.—Hippocrates.

ACELLA, Axilla.

ACEPHALOBRACHUS, from a privative, κεφαλη, 'head,' and βραχιων, 'arm.' A fœtus without head or arms.

ACEPHALOCHIRUS, from a privative, κεφαλη, 'head,' and χειρ, 'hand.' A fœtus without head or hands.

ACEPHALOCYST, Acephalocystis, from a privative, κεφαλη, 'head,' and κυστις, 'bladder.' An hydatiform vesicle, without head or visible organs, ranked amongst the Entozoa, although possessed of few animated characteristics.—See Hydatid.

ACEPHALOGASTER, Athoracocephalus, from a privative, κεφαλη, 'head,' and γαστρος, 'the belly.' A name given to monsters devoid of head, chest, and abdomen; or to those which have an abdomen but no chest or head.

ACEPHALOSTOMA, from a privative, κεφαλη, 'head,' and στομα, 'mouth.' An acephalous fœtus, at the upper part of which there is an opening resembling a mouth.

ACEPHALOTHORUS, from a privative, κεφαλη, 'head,' and θωραξ, 'chest,' Apctoccephalus. A monster, devoid of head or chest.

ACEPHALOUS, from a priv. and κεφαλη, 'head.' A monster born devoid of head. The condition is called Acephalia.

ACER, Acid.

ACER SACCHARINUM. The Maple, Sugar Maple. (F) Érable. This tree contains a large amount of sweet sap, whence a considerable quantity of sugar may be extracted. When purified, this sugar can scarcely be distinguished from that obtained from the cane.—See Saccharum.

ACERB, Acervus, Striphnos, from acer, 'sharp.' A savour, or taste, compounded of the acid, bitter, and astringent; such as is met with in unripe fruits, &c.

ACE/RIDES, from a privative, and κηρος, 'wax.' Plasters devoid of wax.—Galen.

ACERO'SUS, Achyrodes, Pithyrinus, from αχυρον, 'chaff.' Furfura'ceous. An epithet used, by Hippocrates, for the coarsest bread, made of flour not separated from the chaff.—Foesius.

ACERVULUS CEREBRI. See Pineal Gland.

ACES'CENCY, Acescencia, from acescere, 'to grow sour.' A disposition to acidity. The Humourists believed that the animal humours are susceptible of this change.

ACESIS, Curation, Medicament.

ACESMA, Medicament.

ACESTOR, Physician.

ACESTORIS, Midwife.

ACESTOS, Curable.

ACESTRA, Needle.

ACETA MEDICATA, Acetica.

ACETABULA UTERINA, Cotyledons.

ACETABULUM, from acetum, 'vinegar,' because it resembles the old vinegar vessel oxybaphon, οξυβαφον. A measure capable of containing the 8th part of a modern pint.—Athenæus. Galen. See Cotyloid. According to Castelli, the lobes or cotyledons of the placenta of ruminating animals have been so called.

ACETABULUM, Cotyle, Cotyloid—a. Marinum, Umbilicus marinus.

ACETA'RIA, same etymon. A salad or pickle.

ACETAS, Acetate.

AC'ETATE, Acetas. A salt formed by the union of the acetic acid with an alkaline, earthy, or metallic base. The acetates, chiefly used in medicine, are the acetates of ammonia, lead, potash, and zinc.

AC'ETICUM, AC'IDUM, Acidum Aceticum fortius, A. A. forte. A. Aceticum purum, Acetum radicalē, Oxos, Acetic Acid, Strong Acetous Acid, Acidum Acetosum forte, Radical Vinegar, Spiritus Venēris (when made from verdigris), Spirit of Verdigris. Concentrated acetic acid, prepared by decomposing an acetate and receiving the acetic acid by distillation, has a very pungent and grateful odour, and an acid and acrid taste. Its s. g. is about 1.046, and it is very volatile.

It is stimulant, rubefacient, and escharotic, and is applied to the nostrils in syncope, asphyxia, headaches, &c. It destroys warts.

An AROMATIC SPIRIT OF VINEGAR, Ac'idum Aceticum Camphoratum, A. acetosum camphoratum, is formed of this strong acid,  $\frac{3}{5}$  vj, Camphor,  $\frac{3}{5}$  ss, Ol. Caryoph.  $\frac{3}{5}$  vj.

A strong Acetic Acid is ordered by the London Pharmacopœia prepared from wood. It is called Vinegar of wood, Improved distilled Vinegar, Pyroligneous Acid, Acetum Ligno'rum, and its strength is such, that 87 gr. of crystallized subcarbonate of soda should saturate 100 grains of the acid.

The AC'IDUM AC'ETICUM DILUTUM, A. a. tenuē, Acetum destillatum, Acidum aceticum, Acidum acetosum destillatum, Acidum aceticum debilius, Distilled vinegar, (F) Acide Acétique faible, Vinaigre distillé, is prepared by distilling vinegar, rejecting a 4th or 5th part of that which comes over first, and avoiding empyreuma. Its properties are like those of vinegar.

ACETICA, Aceta Medica'ta, (F) Vinaigres Medicinoux. Pharmaceutical preparations of Vinegar.

ACETOSA NOSTRAS, Rumex acetosa—a. Pratenſis, Rumex acetosa—a. Romana, Rumex scutatus—a. Rotundifolia, Rumex scutatus—a. Vulgaris, Rumex acetosa.

ACETOSELLA, Oxalis acetosella.

ACETUM, εξου, Oxyς, Acetum Vini, Common Vinegar, Acidum acetosum, Alegar, Acetum Cerevis'ie, (F) Vinaigre. A liquor obtained by the acetous fermentation. Vinegar has a pungent odour, and pleasant acid taste, s. g. 1.0204. It is refrigerant in fevers; antiseptic, and anti-narcotic; and externally is stimulant and discutient.

ACETUM AROMATICUM, Acidum Aceticum Aromaticum, Acetum Theriacale, Thieves' Vinegar, Vinegar of the four Thieves, Marseilles Vinegar, (F) Vinaigre Aromatique. V. des quatre voleurs, (Rorismartin. Caicum. sicc. Fol. Sarrivie sing ʒ j. Lavand. flor. sicc. ʒ iv. Caryoph. cont. ʒ ss. Acid. Acet. lb ij. Macerate 7 days and filter. Ph. E.) Odour pungent and aromatic. Used as a perfume.

ACETUM COLCHICI, Vinegar of meadow saffron, (Colch. rad. recent. concis. ʒ j. Acid. Acetic lb. j. Sp. tenuior, ʒ j. Ph. L.) It is used as a diuretic and also in gout. Dose, ʒ ss to ʒ iss.

ACETUM DISTILLATUM: see Aceticum acidum—a. Lignorum: see Aceticum acidum—a. Mulsium dulce, Oxyglycus—a. Radicale, Aceticum Acidum.

ACETUM SCILLÆ, Acidum Aceticum Scilliticum. Vinegar of Squills. Vinaigre scillitique. (Scillæ rad. recent. exsicc. lb j. Aceti, lb vj. Sp. tenuior. lb ss. Ph. L.) Diuretic, expectorant, and emetic. Dose ʒ ss. to ʒ ij. as a diuretic and expectorant.

ACETUM THERIACALES, Theriaca aromatica.

ACEYTE DE SAL. A remedy for Bronchocele used in S. America. Roulin found it to contain a portion of Iodine.

ACHACANA. A species of Cactus, in the province of Potosi in Peru. Its root is thick and fleshy, and of a conical shape. It is a good edible, and is sold in the markets of the country.

ACHANACA. A plant of the kingdom of Mely in Africa. It is used by the natives as an antisyphilitic.

ACHAOVAN, a species of Egyptian chamomile.—Prosper Alpinus.

ACHAOVAN-ABIAT. The Egyptian name of the cineraria maritima, used in female diseases.

ACHAR, Atchar.

ACHE, Apium graveolens—a. des Montagnes, Ligusticum levisticum.

ACHEPLIA, from α priv. and χολος, 'lip.' A malformation, consisting in a deficiency of a lip or lips.

ACHEIR, demanus, from α privative, and χερς, hand. One devoid of hands.—Galen.

ACHEROIS, Populus.

ACHIA, Achiar. A name given in India to the pickled shoots of the bamboo.

ACHIA, Atchar.

ACHIAR, Achia.

ACHIC'OLUM, Achitolus, Hylrot'erion, Sudd'rium, Fornix, Tholus, Suddat'rium. The sweating-room in the ancient bagnios.

ACHILLE'A AGE'RATUM, Balsami'ta femin'ea, Eupato'rium MESUES, Age'ratum, Costus horto'rum Minor, Maudlin, Maudlin Tansley. (F) Achille Visqueuse. Nat. Ord. Compositæ. Sub. Ord. Anthemidæ. Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia superflua. Has the same properties as tansley, bitter and aromatic, and is used in like affections.

The ACHILLE'A ATRA'TA, Herba Gen'ipi veri, (F) Achillee Noire, has similar virtues.

ACHILLE'A MILLEFO'LIUM, Achille'a Myriophyllon, Chrysoc'oma, Millefo'lium, Chiliophyl'lon, Lumbus Ven'eris, Milita'ris herba, Stratio'tes, Carpen'taria, Spe'culum Ven'eris, Common Yarrow or Milfoil. (F) Millefeuille. The leaves and flowers have an aromatic smell, and a rough, bitterish, somewhat pungent taste. They have been used in dyspepsia, flatulence, &c.

ACHILLE'A PTAR'MICA, Pseudo-pyret'hrum, Pyret'hrum sylves'tre, Draco sylves'tris, Tarchon sylves'tris, Sternutament'aria, Dracon'culus Præ'tensis, Sæce-aort, Bastard Pel'litory, Ptarm'ica. (F) Herbe à éternuer. The roots and flowers have a hot, biting taste, approaching that of the Pyrethrum. Their principal use is as a masticatory and sialogogue.

ACHILLÉE NOIRE, Achillea atrata—a. Visqueuse, Achillea ageratum.

ACHILLE'IS, a beautiful species of barley, mentioned by Theophrastus and Galen, called after a labourer, Achilles. The decoction was used in fevers and jaundice.—Hippocrates.

ACHILLIS, TENDO, Funis Hippoc'ratidis, Corda Hippoc'ratidis, Corda magna, Nervus latus, (F) Tendon d'Achille. The strong tendon of the gastrocnemii muscles above the heel; so called, because it was the only vulnerable part of Achilles, or because of its strength. See Tendon.

ACHIMBASSI, Archid'ter. The chief of physicians. A name given, at Grand Cairo, to a magistrate who licenses physicians.

ACHITOLUS, Achicolum.

ACHILYS, Caligo.

ACHMELLA, Spilanthus acmella.

ACHNE. Lint. Also, small mucous folliculi situate in front of the cornea.—Hippocrates.

ACHNE, Lintum.

ACHOLUS, from α privative, and χολη, 'bile.' Deficient in bile.

ACHIOR, Porrigo larvalis.

ACHO'RES. A term often employed by the ancients to designate both the crusta lactea, and small superficial ulcerations on the skin of the face and head. See Porrigo Larva'lis.

ACHORES CAPITIS, Porrigo scutulata.

ACHORIS'TOS, from α privative, and χωρίζω, 'I separate.' Any sign which necessarily accompanies a state of health or disease.

ACHOUROU. The Carab name for a species of myrtle used in dropsy.

ACHRAS SAPOTA. El Nispero. A very abundant tree in South America, the fruit of which is excellent. It is astringent. The leaves are likewise astringent. The seeds are aperient and diuretic. It belongs to the family Sapotem.—Scr. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia.

ACHROI, from  $\alpha$  privative, and  $\chi\rho\omicron\mu\alpha$ , 'colour.' Pale individuals.—Hippocrates. It is nearly synonymous with  $\lambda\upsilon\phi\alpha\iota\mu\iota$ , persons without colour, bloodless.

ACHROMATIC, Achromaticus, from  $\alpha$  privative, and  $\chi\rho\omicron\mu\alpha$ , 'colour.' A lens so constructed as to correct the aberration of refrangibility of common lenses. The Crystalline Lens is an achromatic lens.

ACHROMATOP'SIA, Chromatopsudop'sia, from  $\alpha$  privative,  $\chi\rho\omicron\mu\alpha$ , 'colour,' and  $\sigma\tau\omicron\mu\alpha\iota$ , 'I see.' Incapability of distinguishing colours. A defect situate in the cerebral part of the visual organ.

ACHYRODES, Acerosus.

ACHYRON, Furfur.

ACIA, from  $\alpha\kappa\eta$ , a point. A word used by Celsus, and which has puzzled commentators; some believing it to have meant a needle; others the thread; and others, again, the kind of suture. "Acia mollis, non nimis torta."—Celsus, Galen. (Chifflet thinks it meant the thread, Antwerp, 1638.)

ACID, ACETOUS, STRONG, Aceticum acidum—a. Aerial, Carbonic acid—a. Antimonious, Antimonial diaphoreticum—a. Azotic, Nitric acid—a. Benzoic, Benjamin, flowers of—a. Boric, Boracic acid—a. Calcareous, Carbonic acid—a. Carbonaceous, Carbonic acid—a. Carbonous, Oxalic acid—a. Gastric, Gastric juice—a. Hydrochloronitric, Nitro-muriatic acid—a. Igaruric: see Jatropha curcas—a. of Lemons, Citric acid—a. Lithic, Uric acid—a. Dephlogisticated marine, Chlorine—a. Mephitic, Carbonic acid—a. of Milk, Lactic acid—a. Nitro-hydrochloric, Nitro-muriatic acid—a. Nitrous dephlogisticated, Nitric acid—a. Oxyseptic, Nitric acid—a. Polygalic: see Polygala senega—a. Prussic, Hydrocyanic acid—a. Pyroligneous: see Aceticum acidum—a. Pyrolignic, Pyroligneous acid—a. of Sorrel, Oxalic acid—a. of Sugar, Oxalic acid.

ACIDE ACÉTIQUE FAIBLE, see Aceticum acidum—a. Sulphureux, Sulphurous acid—a. Sulfurique delayé, Sulphuricum acidum dilutum.

ACIDS, Ac'ida, Ac'ores, from  $\alpha\kappa\iota\varsigma$  'a point,' genitive  $\alpha\kappa\iota\delta\omicron\varsigma$ . Any liquid, solid, or gaseous body, possessed of a sour, more or less caustic taste, and the principal character of which is the capability of saturating, wholly or in part, the alkaline properties of bases.

The acids, in general, are refrigerant and antiseptic. Their particular uses are pointed out under the individual articles.

ACIDITIES, Ac'ores, Acidita'tio, Ac'idum morbo'sum, Ac'idum prim'drum via'rurum, (F) Sig'rcurs. Sourness of the stomach, the result of indigestion, indicated by acid eructations, &c. The affection is very common in children, and must be obviated by absorbents, as magnesia, chalk, &c., and by regulated diet.

To ACIDULATE. To render acidulous, or slightly acid. (F) Aiguiser, Aciduler.

ACID'ULOUS, Acid'ulus, Ozodes. (F) Acid-ule, Aigre, Aigrelet. Substances are called acidulous, which possess a sourish taste, as tamarinds, cream of tartar, &c.

ACIDULOUS FRUITS. Oranges, Gooseberries, &c.

ACIDULOUS WATERS, Aqua acid'ula. Mineral Waters containing carbonic acid gas sufficient to render them sourish. See Waters, Mineral.

A SIMPLE ACIDULOUS WATER, Aqua d'eris fixi, A'qua acid'ula simpl'x. (F) Eau Acidule simple, is water impregnated with fixed air.

Water, so impregnated, is cooling, and slightly stimulating. It is used beneficially in dyspepsia, and in cases of vomiting, &c.

ACIDUM ACETICUM, Aceticum acidum—a. Aceticum aromaticum, Acetum aromaticum—a. Aceticum camphoratum: see Aceticum acidum—a. Aceticum empyreumaticum, Pyroligneous acid—a. Aceticum Scilliticum, Acetum scillæ—a. Acetosellæ, Oxalic acid—a. Acetosum, Acetum—a. Allantoicum, Allantoic acid—a. Amnicum, Amniotic acid—a. Boracicum, Boracic acid—a. Borussicum, Hydrocyanic acid—a. Carbonicum, Carbonic acid—a. Citricum, Citric acid—a. Hydrocarbonicum, Oxalic acid—a. Hydrochloricum, Muriaticum acidum—a. Hydrocyanicum, Hydrocyanic acid—a. Hydrothionicum liquidum, see Hydrosulphuretted water—a. Jatrophicum, see Jatropha curcas—a. Lacticum, Lactic acid—a. Lignicum, Pyroligneous acid—a. Ligni pyro-oleosum, Pyroligneous acid—a. Marinum concentratum, Muriaticum acidum—a. Morbosum, Acidities—a. Muriaticum nitroso-oxygenatum, Nitromuriatic acid—a. Nitricum, Nitric acid—a. Oxalinum, Oxalic acid—a. Phosphoricum, Phosphoric acid—a. Primarium viarum, Acidities—a. Prussicum, Hydrocyanic acid—a. Pyroaceticum, Pyroligneous acid—a. Sacchari, Oxalic acid—a. Saccharinum, Oxalic acid—a. Salis, Muriaticum acidum—a. Salis culinaris, Muriaticum acidum—a. Salis marini, Muriaticum acidum—a. Succinicum, Succinic acid—a. Sulphuricum alcoolisatum, Elixir acidum Halleri—a. Sulphuris volatile, Sulphurous acid—a. Sulphurosum, Sulphurous acid—a. Sulphurosium, Sulphurous acid—a. Tartari essentielle, Tartaric acid—a. Tartaricum, Tartaric acid—a. Tartarosum, Tartaric acid—a. Uricum, Uric acid—a. Vitriolicum, Sulphuric acid—a. Vitriolicum aromaticum, Sulphuricum acidum aromaticum—a. Vitriolicum alcohole aromaticum, Sulphuricum acidum aromat.—a. Vitriolicum vinosum, Elixir acidum Halleri—a. Zooticum, Hydrocyanic acid—a. Zootinicum, Hydrocyanic acid.

ACIDURGIA, Surgery (operative).

ACIER, Chalybs.

ACIES, Chalybs—a. Digitorum manus, Phalanges of the fingers—a. Diurna, Hemeralopia.

ACIESIS, Sterilitas.

ACINE'SIA, Akin'cia, Immobil'itas, Quies, Esychia, Ercm'ia, from  $\alpha$  privative, and  $\kappa\iota\upsilon\iota\varsigma$ , 'to move.' Immobility. Also, the interval between the systole and diastole of the heart.

AC'INUS, Ac'inus glandulo'sus, from  $\alpha\kappa\iota\upsilon\varsigma$ , or ac'inus, 'a grape-stone.' A glandiform corpuscle or granulation. A fancied termination of a secretory artery of a gland in a granular body, in which the secretion is supposed to take place, and the excretory radicle to take its rise. Acini are the glob'uli arteriul'rum ter'mini of Nichols. The term acini glandulosi has also been given to glands, which, like the pancreas, are arranged as it were in clusters.

ACMASTICOS, from ακμη, 'the top,' and σταα, 'I remain.' A fever, which preserves an equal degree of intensity throughout its course. It is also called Homolonos. The Greeks gave it the name Epacmasticos, and Synochos, when it went on increasing, and Paracmasticos, when it decreased.—Galen.

ACME, Vigor, Status, Fastigium. The period of a disease at which the symptoms are most violent. Αρχη, is 'the commencement;' αυξασις, 'the period of increase;' and ακμη, 'the height.'

ACMON, Incus.

ACNE, Acna, Ionthus varus, Psydracia Acne, Stone Pock, Whelk, Bubucle. A small pimple or tubercle on the face.—Gorræus. Foësius thinks the word ought to be Aeme, and, according to Cassius, it is, at all events, derived from ακμη, 'vigour,' the disease affecting those in the vigour of life, especially.

Wilan and Bateinan have adopted the term in their Nosology of cutaneous diseases, and placed it in the Order, TUBERCULA.

Acne, with them, is an eruption of distinct, hard, inflamed tubercles, sometimes continuing for a considerable length of time, and sometimes suppurating slowly and partially. They usually appear on the forehead, temples, and chin; and are common to both sexes; but the most severe forms are seen in young men. They require but little management, and consist of four varieties; the Acne indurata, A. simplex, A. punctata (Ionthus varus punctatus, Puncta mucosæ or Maggot Pimple), A. rosacea.—See Gutta Rosea.

ACNE ROSACEA, Gutta rosea.

ACNES'TIS, from α privative, and κνησις, 'to scratch.' The part of the spine which extends, in quadrupeds, from between the shoulders to the loins. According to Pollux, the middle of the loins.

ACNESTOS, Cneorum tricoceum.

ACE'LIOS, from α privative, and κοιλια, 'belly.' Devoid of belly. One who is so emaciated as to appear to have no belly.—Galen.

ACOESIS, Audition.

ACOLASIA, Intemperance.

ACOLOGY, Materia Medica.

ACONE, Mortar.

ACONIT à GRANDS FLEURS, Aconitum cammarum—a. Salutare, Aconitum anthora.

ACONITINE, see Aconitum napellus.

ACONITUM, from Acone, a place in Bithynia, where it is common. Cynoctonon, Canicida, Ac'onite, Wolfsbane, Monkshood. Nat. Ord. Ranunculaceæ. Sez. Syst. Polyandria Trigynia.

ACONITUM ANTHORA. Aconitum Salutariferum, Anthora vulgaris, Antithora, Salutarly Monkshood. (F) Aconit salutare. The root of this variety, like all the rest, is poisonous. It is used as a cathartic and anthelmintic. Dose ʒss to ʒj.

The ACONITUM CAMMARUM. A. paniculatum. (F) Aconit à grands fleurs, resembles the Aconitum Napellus in properties.

ACONITUM NAPELLUS, Napellus verus, Aconitum, Common Monkshood or Wolfsbane. A. Neomontanum. (F) Chaperon de Moine. The leaves are narcotic, sudorific, and deobstruent (?) They have been used in chronic rheumatism, scrofula, scirrhus, paralysis, amaurosis, &c.

The active principle is called Aconitine. It has been used of late, applied externally, in Neuralgic cases, iatroléptically and endermically. Dose of the Aconitum, gr. j. to gr. iij.

ACONU'SI, from ακουη, 'audition,' and νοσος, 'disease.' Morbi aurium et auditûs. Diseases of the ears and audition.

AC'OPON, from α privative, and κοπος, 'weariness.' A remedy against weariness.—Foësius, Gorræus, &c. Acopum.—Celsus, Pliny. See Anagryris.

AC'OPIS. Pliny gives this name to a precious stone, which was boiled in oil and used against weariness.

ACOR BENZOINUS, Benjamin—a. Boracicus, Boracic acid—a. Succineus, Succinic acid—a. Sulphuris, Sulphuric acid—a. Tartaricus, Tartaric acid.

ACORE BÂTARD, Iris pseudacorus—a. Fauz, Iris pseudacorus—a. Odorant, Acorus calamus.

ACORES, Acids and Acidities.

AC'ORIA, from α privative, and κορεω, 'I satiate.' An inordinate or canine appetite.—Hippocrates.

ACORITES. A wine made of the Acorus.—Dioscorides.

ACORN, JUPITER'S, Fagus castanea—a. Oily, Guilandina moringa—a. Sardinian, Fagus castanea.

ACORNS. See Quercus alba.

AC'ORUS CALAMUS. A. Verus, Calamus Aromaticus, C. Odoratus, Calamus vulgaris, Typha Aromatica, Acorus Brazilian'sis. (F) Jonc Roseau on Canne aromatique, Acore odorant. Nat. Ord. Aroideæ. Sez. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia. Clara rugosa, Sweetflag or Ac'orus. The root is stomachic and carminative, but is rarely used. It is regarded a good adjuvant to bark and quinine in intermittents.

ACORUS ADULTERINUS, Iris pseudacorus—a. Palustris, Iris pseudacorus—a. Vulgaris, Iris pseudacorus.

ACOS, Medicament.

ACOS'MIA, from α privative, and κοσμος, 'order, ornament.' Disorder, irregularity in the critical days, according to Galen, who uses the word κοσμος for regularity in those days. Others, and particularly Pollux, call bald persons ακοσμοι, because they are deprived of one of their most beautiful ornaments.

ACOUOM'ETER, from ακουω, 'I hear,' and μετρον, 'measure.' An instrument designed by Itard for measuring the degree of hearing.

ACOUOPHONIA, Cophonia; from ακουω, 'I hear,' and φωνη, 'voice.' 'Auscultatory Percussion:' a mode of auscultation, in which the observer places his ear on the chest, and analyzes the sound produced by percussion.—Donné.

ACOUS'MA, an imaginary noise. Depraved sense of hearing.

ACOUS'TIC, Acusticus, that which belongs to the ear; as Acoustic nerve, Acoustic trumpet, &c.

An ACOUSTIC MEDICINE is one used in diseased Audition.

ACOUS'TICS, Acustica, (F) Acoustique, is the part of physics which treats of the theory of sounds. It is also called Phonics.

ACOUSTIQUE, Acoustics.

ACQUA BINELLI, Aqua Binellii—a. di

Napoli, Liquor arsenicalis—a. della Toffana, Liquor arsenicalis.

ACQUETTA, Liquor arsenicalis.

ACQUIRED DISEASES, Morbi acquisiti, Adventitious diseases, M. Adventitii. Diseases which occur after birth, and which are not dependent upon hereditary predisposition.

ACRAΨALA, from a privative, and κρασις, 'drunkenness.' Remedies against the effects of a debauch.—Gorræus.

ACRA'LEA, the extreme parts of the body, as the head, hands, feet, nose, ears, &c.—Hippocrates and Galen. See Acraea.

ACRA'NIA, from a privative, and κρανιον, 'the cranium.' Want of cranium, wholly, or in part.

ACRAS SAPOTA, Sapota.

ACRASIA, from a privative, or 'bad,' and κρασις, 'mixture.' Intemperance. Excess of any kind.—Hippocrates.

It has been employed to denote debility, synonymously with Acratia; but this may have been a typographical inaccuracy.

ACRA'TIA, from a privative, and κρατος, 'strength.' Impotence; weakness.

ACRATIS'MA, from a privative, and κραννυμι, 'to mix.' A breakfast, consisting of bread steeped in wine, not mixed with water.—Galen, Athenæus.

ACRATOM'ELI, from κρατον, 'pure wine,' and μελι, 'honey.' Wine mixed with honey.

ACRATURE'SIS, from Acratia, 'weakness,' and ουρον, 'urine.' Inability to void the urine from paralysis of the bladder.

ACRE. The extremity or tip of the nose. See Acrimony.

AC'CREA, ακρωτηρια, Acrotèria, from ακρος, 'the summit.' The extreme parts of the body, as the feet, hands, nose, ears, &c.

Also, the extreme parts of animals that are used as food. Acroclia.

ACRID, from ακρος, 'a point or summit,' or from ακρη, 'a point,' Acra. An epithet for substances which occasion a disagreeable sense of irritation or of constriction at the top of the throat.

ACRIDS, in Pathology, are certain imaginary substances, supposed, by the Humourists, to exist in the humours, and to cause various diseases. See Acrimony.

An Acriid heat, (F) Chaleur âcre, is one that causes a hot, tingling sensation at the extremities of the fingers.

ACRIDOPH'AGI, from ακρις, 'a locust,' and φαγω, 'I eat.' Locust-eaters. Acridophagous tribes are said to exist in Africa.—Strabo.

ACRIMONY, Acrîtas, Acrimonia, Acre. Acrimony of the humours. An imaginary acrid change of the blood, lymph, &c., which, by the Humourists, was conceived to cause many diseases.

ACRINIA, from a privative, and κρνω, 'I separate.' A diminution in the quantity, or a total suspension of the secretions.

ACRIS, a sharp bony prominence. Also, the locust.

ACRISIA, from a privative, and κρισις, 'judgment.' A condition of disease, in which no judgment can be formed; or in which an unfavourable opinion must be given.—Hipp. and Galen.

ACRITICAL, Acritos, from a privative, and κρισις, 'judgment.' That which takes place without any crisis, or which does not foretell a crisis; as a critical symptom, abscess, &c.

ACRITOS, Acritical.

ACRIVIOLA, Tropæolum majus.

ACROBYS'TIA, Acroposthia, from ακρος, 'top,' and βυα, 'I cover.' The extremity of the prepuce.—Hippocrates. Rufus.

ACROCHEIR', Acrochir', Aerocheir'on, from ακρος, 'extremity,' and χειρ, 'the hand.' The fore arm and hand.—Gorræus. Also, the hand.

ACHROCHOR'DON, from ακρος, 'extremity,' and χορδη, 'a string.' A tumour, which hangs by a pedicle. A kind of hard wart.—Aëtius, Celsus.

ACROCHORIS'MUS, from ακρος, 'extremity,' and χορευω, 'I dance.' A kind of dance, with the ancients, in which the arms and legs were violently agitated.

ACROCOLIA, Acraea.

ACROD'RYA, from ακρος, 'extremity,' and δρυς, 'a tree.' Autumnal fruits, as nuts, apples, &c.

ACRODYN'IA, from ακρος, 'extremity,' and δυνη, 'pain.' A painful affection of the wrists and ancles especially, which appeared at Paris as an epidemic, in 1828 and 1829. It was supposed by some to be rheumatic, by others to be owing to spinal irritation.

ACROLENION, Olecranon.

ACROM'IAL, Acromiâlis. Relating to the Acromion.

The ACROMIAL ARTERY. External Scapular.

A. Artèria Thorac'ica humeralis, Artère troisième des Thoraciques,—(Ch.) A. Thoracique humérale, arises from the anterior part of the axillary artery, opposite the upper edge of the pectoralis minor. It divides into two branches: one, superior; the other, inferior: the branches of which are distributed to the subclavius, serratus major anticus, first intercostal, deltoid, and pectoralis major muscles, as well as to the shoulder joint, &c. They anastomose with the superior scapular, thoracics, and the circumflex arteries.

The ACROMIAL VEIN has the same arrangement as the artery.

ACRO'MIO-CORACOIDEUS. Belonging to the acromion and coracoid process.

The triangular ligament between the acromion and coracoid process of the scapula is so called.

ACRO'MION, Acromium, from ακρος, 'the top,' and ωμος, 'the shoulder,' Os Acromii, Humerus summus, Armus summus, Mucro humeri, Rostrum porci'num, Caput Scapulae. The process which terminates the spine of the scapula, and is articulated with the clavicle.

ACROM'PHALON, Acromphal'ion, from ακρος, 'the top,' and μφαλος, 'the navel.' The extremity of the umbilical cord, which remains attached to the fœtus after birth.

ACROPOSTHIA, Acrobystia.

ACROPSI'LON, from ακρος, 'extremity,' and ψιλος, 'naked.' The extremity of the glans penis, ACROS, ακρος, 'extremity, top.' The strength of the Athletæ, and of diseases: the prominences of bones: the extremities of the fingers, &c. See Acrocheir, Acromion, &c.

ACROTHERIA, Acrea.

ACROTHERIAS/MUS, from ακροτηρια, 'the extremities;' hence ακροτηριαζειν, 'to mutilate.' Amputation of the extremities.

ACROTHYMION, from ακρος, 'top,' and θυμον, 'thyme.' A kind of conical, rugous, bloody wart: compared by Celsus to the flower of thyme.

ACROTICA, from ακρος, 'summit.' Diseases affecting the eminent functions of the external surface of the body.

Pravity of the fluids or emunctories that open on the external surface; without fever or other internal affection, as a necessary accompaniment.

The 3d order of the class Eccritica of Good.

ACROTISMUS, Asphyxia.

ACT, Actus. The effective exercise of a power of faculty. The action of an agent. Acte is used by the French, to signify the public discussion, which occurs in supporting a thesis:—thus, soutenir un Acte aux Écoles de Médecine, is, 'to defend a Thesis in the Schools of Medicine.'

ACTÆA RACEMOSA, Cimicifuga, Macrorrhizis racemosa. Black snakeroot, Rickweed, Cohosh. (F) Actæa à grappes. Nat. Ord. Ranunculaceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monogynia. A common plant in the United States. The root is astringent; and, according to Barton, has been successfully used in the form of decoction, as a gargle in putrid sore throat. A decoction of the root cures the itch. It is acronarcotic, and has been used in rheumatism, acute and chronic; chorea, &c.

ACTE, Sambucus.

ACTE, Act.

ACTÉE à GRAPPES, Actæa racemosa.

ACTIF, Active.

ACTION, Actio, Operatio, Enérgh'a, Praxis: from agere, 'to act.' Mode in which one object influences another.

The animal actions are those that occur in the animal body: the vital, those that are seen in bodies endowed with life: the physiological, those of a healthy character: the pathological or morbific, those that occur in disease, &c. The ancients divided the physiological actions into vital, animal, natural, sexual, particular, general, &c. See Function.

ACTIVE, same etymon. Draſticus, Activus, Stenicus, Hyperstenicus. (F) Actif. This adjective is used, in Pathology, to convey the idea of superabundant energy or strength. Active symptoms, c. g. are those of excitement. In Therapeutics, it signifies energetic:—as, an active treatment. The French use the expression Médecine agissante, in contradistinction to Médecine expectante. In Physiology, active has a similar signification, many of the functions being divided into active and passive.

ACTON. A village near London, at which there is a purgative mineral spring, like that at Epsom.

ACTUAL, Actualis. That which acts immediately. A term usually restricted to the red hot iron, or to heat in any form; in contradistinction to the potential or virtual, which is applied to caustics or escharotics.

ACTUARIUS. Originally a title of dignity given to the Byzantine physicians.

ACUITAS, Acrimony.

ACULEUS LIGNEUS, Splinter.

ACUPUNCTURE. Acupunctura, from acus, 'a needle,' and punctura, 'a puncture.' A surgical operation, much in use amongst the Chinese and Japanese, which consists in puncturing parts with a very fine needle. It has been employed, of late years, in obstinate rheumatic affections, &c., and apparently with success. Acupuncture is likewise a mode of infanticide in some countries: the needle being forced into the brain through the fontanelles, or into the spinal marrow, &c.

ACURGIA, Surgery (operative.)

ACUS, Needle—a. Capitata, Pin—a. Paracentica, Trocar—a. Triquetra vulgaris, Trocar—a. Veneris, Eryngium campestre.

ACUSIS, Audition.

ACUSTICA, Acoustics.

ACUTE, Acutus, αξυς. (F) Aigu. A disease which, with a certain degree of severity, has a rapid progress, and short duration. Oxyptosema, Oxyptosis, Oxyptosis.

Diseases were formerly subdivided into Morbi acutis'simi, very acute, or those which last only three or four days: M. subacutis'simi, which continue seven days: and M. subacuti, or those which last from twenty to forty days.

The antithesis to acute is chronic. Acute, when applied to pain, sound, cries, &c., means sharp.

ACUTENACULUM, Porte-aiguille.

ACYANOBLEPSIA, a privative, κυανος, 'blue,' and βλεπω, 'I see.' Defective vision, which consists in incapability of distinguishing blue.—Göthe.

ACYESIS, Sterilitas.

ACYRUS, Arnica montana.

ADÆMONIA, Anxiety.

ADAKO'DIEN. A Malabar plant of the family Apocinæ, used in that country in diseases of the eyes.

ADACA. The Spharandthus Indicus, a Malabar plant, which is acrid and aromatic.

AD'ALI, Lip'pia. A Malabar plant, which the Orientals regard as an antidote to the bite of the naja.

ADAMAS, Diamant.

ADAMI'TA, Adamitum. A very hard, white calculus.—Paracelsus.

The first word has been used for stone in the bladder: the second for lithiasis or the calculus condition.

ADANSONIA DIGITATA, Baobab.

ADAR'CE, Adar'cion, Adar'cis. A concretion found about the reeds and grass in the marshy regions of Galatia, and hiding them, as it were: hence the name; from a privative, and δικοω, 'I see.' It was formerly in repute for cleansing the skin from freckles, &c.

ADARIGO, Orpiment.

ADARNECH, Orpiment.

ADARTICULATIO, Arthrodis.

ADDAD. A Numidian plant. Bitter and poisonous.

ADDEPHA'GIA, from αδην, 'much,' and φαγῖν, 'to eat.' Voraciousness. Galen and Hoffman have given this name to voracious appetite in children affected with worms. Sauvages refers it to Bulimia. Also, the goddess of gluttony.

ADDER'S TONGUE, Ophioglossum vulgatum.

ADDITAMENTUM. A term once used synonymously with Epiphysis. q. v. It is now restricted to the prolongations of two cranial sutures, the lambdoidal and squamous.

ADDITAMENTUM COLI. Appendix vermiciformis cæci—a. Necatium, Olecranon—a. ad Sacro-lumbalem, see Sacro-lumbalis—a. Uneatum ulnæ, Olecranon—a. Ulnæ, Radius.

ADDUCENS OCULI, Rectus internus oculi.

ADDUCTEUR DE L'ŒIL, Rectus internus oculi—a. du gros orteil, Adductor pollicis pedis—a. Premier ou moyen, Adductor longus femoris—a. du pouce, Adductor pollicis manus—a. Second ou petit, Adductor brevis—a. Troisième ou grand, Adductor magnus.

ADDUCTION, Adductio, from ad, 'to,' and ducere, 'to draw.' Paragoge. The action by which parts are drawn towards the axis of the body.

The muscles, which execute this function, are called Adductors.

ADDUCTORS OF THE THIGH. These are three in number, which have, by some anatomists, been united into one muscle—the Triceps Adductor Femoris.

1. The Adductor longus femoris, Adductor femoris primus, Triceps minor, Pubio-femorialis—(Ch.) (F) Premier ou moyen adducteur. Arises by a strong tendon from the upper and fore part of the os pubis and ligament of the symphysis, at the inner side of the pectinalis. It runs downwards and outwards, and is inserted by a broad, flat tendon into the middle of the linea aspera.

2. The Adductor brevis, A femoris secundus, Triceps secundus, Sub-pubio-femorialis—(Ch.) (F) Second ou petit Adducteur. Arises tendinous from the os pubis, at the side of its symphysis, below and behind the last muscle. It runs obliquely outwards, and is inserted by a short, flat tendon into the inner and upper part of the linea aspera, from a little below the trochanter minor to the beginning of the insertion of the adductor longus.

3. The Adductor magnus, Adductor femoris tertius et quartus, Triceps magnus, Ischio-femorialis—(Ch.) (F) Troisième ou grand adducteur, is much larger than either of the others. It arises from the ramus of the pubis, from that of the ischium, and from the tuber ischii, and is inserted into the whole length of the linea aspera. Near the lower part of the linea aspera it is pierced by a kind of oblique, fibrous canal, through which the crural artery and vein pass.

ADDUCTOR MEDII DIGITI PEDIS, Posterior medii digiti pedis—a. Oculi, Reetus internus oculi.

ADDUCTOR POLICIS MANUS, A. Pollicis, A. ad minimum dig'itum, Metacar'po-phalangæus pollicis—(Ch.) (F) Adducteur du pouce. A muscle which arises, fleshy, from almost the whole length of the metacarpal bone of the middle finger, and is inserted into the inner part of the root of the first bone of the thumb.

The ADDUCTOR POLICIS PEDIS, Autill'car Metatarso-subphalangæus pollicis—(Ch.) Tarso-metatarsi-phalangium du pouce. (F) Adducteur du gros orteil, arises by a long, thin tendon, from the under part of the os calcis, from the os cuboides, os cuneiforme externum, and from the root of the metatarsal bone of the second toe. It is divided into two fleshy portions, and is inserted into the external sesamoid bone, and root of the metatarsal bone of the great toe.

The ADDUCTOR METACARPI MINIMI DIGITI, Metacarpeus, Car'po-metacarpeus minimi dig'iti, is situated between the abductor and flexor, next to the metacarpal bone. It arises, fleshy, from the unciform process of the os unciforme, and from the contiguous part of the annular ligament of the wrist, and is inserted, tendinous and fleshy, into the fore-part of the metacarpal bone of the little finger, from its base to its head.

Bichat has given the general name, Adductors, to those of the interosseous muscles of the hand or foot, which perform the action of adduction.

ADDUCTOR TERTII DIGITI PEDIS, Prior tertii digiti pedis.

ADEC. The inner man.—Paracelsus.

ADECTA, Sedatives.

ADELIPARIA, Polysareia.

ADELODAGAM. A bitter Malabar plant, used in asthma, catarrh, and gout.

ADELPHIA, see Adelphixia.

ADELPHIX'IA, Adelphix'is, from ἀδελφος, 'brother.' Consignuity of parts in health or disease. Frater'nitas, Fratr'itio. Hippocrates used the epithet ἀδελφία, Adel'phia, for diseases that resemble each other.

ADELPHIXIS, Sympathy.

ADEN, ἀδην, 'a gland;' hence Adenalgia, Adeniform, &c.—See Gland.

ADENALGIA, from ἀδην, 'a gland,' and αλγος, 'pain,' glandular pain.

ADENEMPHRAX'IS, from ἀδην, 'a gland,' and εμφραξις, 'obstruction,' glandular obstruction.

ADENIFORM, Adeniformis, Adenoides, ἀδενουιδης, from Adeu, 'a gland,' and Forma, 'form or resemblance.' Glandiform, or resembling a gland.

ADENITIS, from ἀδην, 'a gland,' and Itis, a termination denoting inflammation. Glandular inflammation.

ADENOCHIRAPSOLOG'IA, from ἀδην, 'a gland,' χειρ, 'the hand,' απτεω, 'I lay hold of,' and λογος, 'a description.' The doctrine of curing serofula or the king's evil by the royal touch.

ADENOGRAPHY, Adenographia, from ἀδην, 'a gland,' and γραφω, 'I describe.' That part of anatomy which describes the glands.

ADENOIDES, Adeniform.

ADENOL'OGY, Adenologia, from ἀδην, 'a gland,' and λογος, 'a description.' A treatise on the glands.

ADENO-PHARYNGÆUS, from ἀδην, 'a gland,' and φαρυγγξ, 'the pharynx.' Some fleshy fibres have received this name, which pass from the constrictor pharyngis inferior to the thyroid gland. Their existence is not constant.

ADENO-PHARYNGITIS, same etymon. Inflammation of the tonsils and pharynx.

ADENOPIETHALMIA, Ophthalmia tarsi.

ADENOPHYMA, Adenopus; from αδην, 'a gland,' and φυμα, 'a swelling.' Swelling of a gland, or glandiform ganglion. (F) Glandage. Adenophyma is used by some to signify a soft glandular swelling. Adenopus, one of a harder character.—Kraus.

ADENOPHYMA INGUINALIS. Bubo.

ADENOSUS, (Abseesus.) A hard, glandular abscess, which suppurates slowly.—M. A. Severinus.

AGME, Fracture.

AGMINA DIGITORUM MANUS, Phalanges of the fingers—a. Membrana, Annios.

AGNA'THIA, from a priv. and γναθος, 'jaw.' A malformation which consists of a want of the jaw, especially of the lower.

AGNOIA, from a priv. and γινωσκω, 'I know.' State of a patient who does not recognise individuals.—Hippocr., Galen, Foësius.

AGNUS CASTUS, Vitex.

AG'GE, αγωνη, the order or condition of a disease.—Hippocr., Galen. Likewise the state of the air.—Hippocr., Galen, Gorræus, Foësius.

AGOGUE, αγωγος, 'a leader,' from αγω, 'I lead or expel.' Hence Cholagogue, an expeller of bile: Hydragogue, &c.

AGOMPHASIS, Agomphosis, from a privative, and γομφω, 'I nail.' Looseness of the teeth. Gorræus. See Gomphiasis.

AGOMPHOSIS, Agomphiasis.

AGONE, Hyoscyamus.

AGONIA, Sterilitas.

AGONIS'TICA, from αγων, 'a combat.' The part of ancient gymnastics, which had reference to the combats of the Athleta.

Also, very cold water, given internally, to calm febrile heat. Paulus of Ægina.

AG'ONY, Agonia, An'gor, from αγων, 'a combat.' The last struggle of life.—Galen, Gorræus, &c. The agony, which is of longer or shorter duration, is characterized by great change in the features, gradual abolition of sensation and motion, loss of voice, dryness or lividity of the tongue and lips, rattling in the throat, small and intermittent pulse, and coldness of the extremities. This state is not present in those who die suddenly. See Facies Hippocratica.

AGOS'TUS, from ἀγω, 'I lead.' The fore arm from the elbow to the fingers. Also the palm of the hand.—Gorræus. See Palm.

AGRA, ἀγρα, from ἀγρεω, 'I seize hold of,'—a seizure, as Odontagra, a tooth seizure, tooth-ache; Chiragra, Podagra, &c.

AGRAHALID, Agriahalid.
AGREGATIVES PILULES. See Aggregate.

AGRIA, Herpes exedens.

AGRIAMPELOS, Bryonia alba.

AGRIFOLIUM, Ilex aquifolium.

AGRIMONY, Eupatorium, Caf'al, Lappula Hepatica. (F) Agreinoine. The Agri-monia Eupatoria. Nat. Ord. Rosaceæ, Sex. Syst. Icosandria Digynia. A mild astringent and stomachic. Dose, in powder, from ℥j to ʒi.

AGRIMONY, hemp, Eupatorium cannabinum.
AGRIOCASTANUM, Bunium bulbocastanum, Lycoperdon tuber.

AGRIOCINARA, Sempervivum tectorum.

AGRIOCCIMELEA, Prunus spinosa.

AGRIORIGANUM, Origanum majorana.

AGRIOSELINUM, Smyrniolum olusatrum.

AGRIOTHYMIA, from ἀγριος, 'ferocious,' and θυμος, 'disposition' Ferocious insanity. —Savages.

AGRIPALMA GALLIS, Leonurus cardiaca.

AGRIPAUME, Leonurus cardiaca.

AGRIP'PA or ÆGRIP'PA, from ager partus, 'difficult birth:' or perhaps from ἀγρεα, 'taking or seizure,' and πους, 'the foot.' This term has been given to those born by the feet. It is pretended that the family of Agrippa obtained their name from this circumstance. Parturition where the feet present is called Agrippa partus, Agrippinus partus.

AGRIPPINUS PARTUS. See Agrippa.

AGRO DI CEDRO. See Citrus medica.

AGROSTIS, Bryonia alba.

AGRUNA, Prunus spinosa.

AGRYPNIA, Insomnia.

AGRYPNOCOMA, Coma vigil.

AGRYPNODES, ἀγρυπνοδης, from ἀγρυπνος, 'sleepless.' Characterized by sleeplessness, as Febris agrypnodes, a fever accompanied with sleeplessness.

AGRYPNUS, ἀγρυπνος, 'sleepless,' 'vigilant;' hence Agrypnodes (Febris), fever attended with watching.

AGUE, Intermittent fever—a. free, Laurus sassafras—a. Quartan, Quartan—a. Tertian, Tertian fever—a. weed, Eupatorium perfoliatum.

AGYRTA, Charlatan.

A'GUE CAKE, Placenta febrilis, Physcolonia splenicum, P. splenica, Splenis Tumor;

(F) Gâteau fébrile,—a visceral obstruction (generally in the spleen), which follows agues, and is distinctly felt by external examination. To a greater or less degree, it is not uncommon.

AGUL or ALHA'GI, the Hedisarum alhagi. A thorny shrub of Persia and Mesopotamia, which affords manna. The leaves are purgative.

AGY'ION, from α priv. and γιεν, 'limb.' Mutilated, or wanting limbs.—Hippocr. Weak, feeble.—Galen.

AGYRTAS, from ἀγυεις, 'a collection.' Opacity of the crystalline.—Aëtius. Paré.

AGYRTA, from ἀγυεις, 'a crowd.' Formerly meant a stroller, who pretended to supernatural powers. Subsequently, a quack or illiterate pretender. See Charlatan.

AGYRTIA, Charlatanry.

AHOUAL, Thevetia Ahouai.

AHUSAL, Orpiment.

AIDE, (F) Adjutor minister. An assistant to a surgeon in his operations.

AIDOROMANIA, Nymphomania.

AIERSA, Iris Germanica.

AIGE, Ægias.

AIGLE. Near the city of this name, in Normandy, is the chalybeate spring of Saint Xantim, much used in the 16th and 17th centuries.

AIGLE, Ægias.

AIGRE, Acidulous.

AIGRELET, Acidulous.

AIGREMOINE, Agrimony.

AIGREURS, Acidities.

AIGU, Acute.

AIGUILLE, Needle.

AIGUILLON, (F) Spina Helmontii. A term used since the time of Van Helmont, to designate the proximate cause of inflammation. According to him, an inflamed part is in the same condition as if an aiguillon or thorn was thrust into it.

AIGUISER, to Acidulate.

AII, Allium.

AILE, Ala, Aileron.

AILERON, (F) Extréma ala vel Pin'ula, diminutive of (F) Aile, a wing. The extremity of the wing of a bird, to which the great feathers are attached.

AILERONS DE LA MATRICE, three folds at the base of the broad ligaments of the uterus, which are occupied by the ovary and its ligament, the Fallopian tube, and the round ligament.

AIMA, αιμα, See Hæma.

AIMANT, Magnet.

AIMATERA, Hepatitis.

AIMORRHŒA, Hæmorrhagia.

AIMORRHŒA, Hæmorrhagia.

AIMORROIS, Hæmorrhoids.

AIMORROIS, Hæmorrhoids.

AINE, Inguen.

AIP1, Jatropha manihot.

AIP1MA COXERA, Jatropha manihot.

AIP1POCA, Jatropha manihot.

AIR, Aer, from αα, 'I breathe,' Common air, Atmospheric air, is an invisible, transparent, inodorous, insipid, ponderable, compressible, and elastic fluid, which, under the form of the atmosphere, surrounds the earth to the height of 15 or 16 leagues.

Air is essentially composed of two gases, oxygen and azote, in the proportion of 20 of the former to 80 of the latter. Oxygen is the vital portion, but the azote is necessary to dilute it. Air also contains a small portion of carbonic acid gas, and it has, always floating in it, aqueous vapour, different terrestrial emanations, &c. Its effects upon the human body vary according to its greater or less density, temperature, moisture, &c.; hence, change of air is found extremely serviceable in the prevention and cure of certain morbid conditions. See CLIMATE.

AIR, Cells of the Lungs, Bronchial cells; see Cellule—a. Dephlogisticated, Oxygen—a. Empyreal, Oxygen—a. Factitious, Carbonic acid—a. Fixed, Carbonic acid—a. Inflammable, Hydrogen—a. Pure, Oxygen—a. Solid, of Hale's Carbonic acid—a. Vital, Oxygen.

AIR, acide vitriolique, Sulphurous acid—a. alcalin, Ammonia—a. du feu, Oxygen—a. gaté, Azote—a. ricié, Azote.

The AIR PASSAGES, (F) Voies aériennes, aëriifères, are the larynx, trachea, bronchi, &c. AIRAIN, Bellmetal, Brass.

AIRE, Areola.

AIRELLE ANGULEUSE, Vaccinium myrtillus—a. ponctué, Vaccinium vitis idæa.

AIRIGNE, Hook.

AISSELLE, Axilla.

AISTHESIS, Æsthesis.

AITHOMOMA, from αἴθος, 'black.' A black condition of all the humours of the eye. A. Paré.

AITIA, Cause.

AITIOLOGY, Ætiologia.

AITION, Cause.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE, MINERAL WATERS OF. Called by the Germans, A c h e n . A thermal, sulphureous, mineral water, which contains, in 1000 grammes, 28.54 cubic inches of hydro-sulphuric acid gas, 18.05 cubic inches of carbonic acid gas, 0.1304 grammes of carbonate of lime, 0.0440 grammes of carbonate of magnesia, 0.5444 grammes of sub-carbonate of soda, 2.3697 grammes of muriate of soda, 0.2637 of sulphate of soda, and 0.0705 of silica. The temperature is 46° R. (135.5 F.)

The factitious water of Aix-la-Chapelle, Aqua Aquisgranensis, (F) Eau d'Aix-la-Chapelle, is made by adding pure water  $\frac{3}{4}$  xvijss, to hydro-sulphuretted water  $\frac{3}{4}$  iv, carbonate of soda gr. xx, muriate of soda gr. ix. Ph. P.

There are thermal sulphureous springs at Aix in Savoy, and some thermal springs at Aix in Provence.

AIZOON, Sempervivum tectorum.

AJU'GA. A. pyramidalis, Consolida Média, Bu'gula, Upright Bugloss, Middle Consound. (F) Bugle pyramidale. This plant is subastringent and bitter. See, also, Teucrium Chamæpitys.

The AJU'GA REPTANS, Bu'gula, Common Bugle, (F) Bugle rampante, has similar properties.

AKATALIS, Juniperus communis.

AKATERA, Juniperus communis.

AKINESIA, Acinesia.

AKOLOGY, Materia Medica.

ALA, Pinna, Pteryx, 'a wing.' (F) Aile. A term often used by anatomists for parts which project, like a wing, from the median line; as the Alæ nasi, Alæ of the uterus, &c. See Axilla and Pavilion of the Ear.—a. Extrema, see Aileron.

ALABASTER, Alabastrum. (F) Sibâtre, Alabastrites. A variety of compact gypsum; of which an ointment was once made;—the unguentum alabastrinum; used as a discutient. Alabaster likewise entered into several Dentifrices.

ALABASTRITES, Alabaster.

ALÆ INTERNÆ MINORES CLITORIDIS, Nymphæ—a. Majores, Labia pudendi—a. Minores, Nymphæ.

ALÆAGNUS, Myrice gale.

ALAITER, To suckle.

ALALIA, Mutitas.

ALAMBIC, Alembic.

ALANFU'TA. A name given, by the Arabians, to a vein, situate between the chin and lower lip, which they were in the habit of opening in cases of fœtor of the breath.—Avicenna.

ALAUQUE'CA. The Hindustanee name of a stone, found in small, polished fragments, which is considered efficacious in arresting hemorrhage when applied externally. It is a sulphuret of iron.

ALARES MUSCULI, Pterygoid muscles.

ALARES VENÆ. The superficial veins at the fold of the arm.

ALARIA OSSA. The wing-like processes of the sphenoid bone.

ALATERNUS, COMMON, Rhamnus alaternus.

ALA'TUS. Pterygo'des. One whose scapula project backwards like wings.

ALBADA'RA. The sesamoid bone of the metatarso-phalangeal joint of the great toe. The Rabbis and Magicians attributed extraordinary virtues to it.—Arabians.

ALBAGIAZI, Sacrum.

ALBAMENTUM, Albumen ovi.

ALBAN, SAINT, MINERAL WATERS OF. A French acidulous chalybeate, in the department of the Loire.

ALBÂTRE, Alabaster.

ALBARA, Lepra alphoides.

ALBARÆS, Lepra alphoides.

ALBARAS NIGRA, Lepra nigricans.

ALBAROS, Lepra alphoides.

ALBICANTIA COR'PORA. C. Candican'tia, from al'bio, 'I grow white.' Willis's glands in the brain; anterior to the tuber annulare. See Mammillary Eminence.

ALBIN D'ŒUF, Albumen ovi.

ALBINO. 'White.' Leuca'thiops, Æthiops albus, Dondo, from albus, 'white.' (F) Blafard, Nègre-blanc. A Spanish word applied to individuals of the human race who have the skin and hair white, the iris very pale, bordering on red; and the eyes so sensible, that they cannot bear the light of day. This condition, which has been called Leucathio'pia, Alpho'sis Æthiopi'ca, Albonois'mus, Leucopathi'a, is seen more frequently in the Negro. Both sexes are exposed to it; but it does not seem to be true, that there are tribes of Albinos in the interior of Africa.

ALBINISMUS, see Albino.

ALBOR OVI, Albumen ovi.

ALBORA. A kind of itch or complicated leprosy—Paracelsus.

ALBOT, Crucible.

ALBOTIM, Terebinthina.

ALBUGIN'EA, Tunica albugin'ca. A. Testis, Peritestis, Membr'na capsula'ris testis. (F) Albuginée, Tunique albuginée, is a strong, fibrous, and resisting membrane, which immediately envelops the testicle, and has, at its upper part, an enlargement, called corpus Highmorianum. From its inner surface it sends off a number of flat, filiform prolongations or septa, between which are contained, the seminiferous vessels. Externally, it is covered by the tunica vaginalis testis.

ALBUGINÉE, Albuginea.

ALBUGIN'EOUS. Albugin'eus, from albus, 'white.' A term applied to textures, humours, &c., which are perfectly white.

ALBUGIN'EOUS FIBRE, (F) Fibre albuginée, a name given by Chaussier to what he considers one of the four elementary fibres.

The albugineous fibre is linear, cylindrical, tenacious, elastic, but little extensible, and of a shining, satiny appearance. It always forms fasciæ or fasciculi, which constitute the tendons, articular ligaments, and aponeuroses: hence the name Albugineous membranes, given by Chaussier to the fibrous membranes.

Gautlier considers that the recte mucosum consists of four layers, to two of which he gives the names,—membr'na albugin'ca profun'da, and membr'na albugin'ca superficial'is, respectively.

ALBUGO Oculorum, Leucoma—a. Ovi, Albumen ovi.

ALBULA, Leucoma.

ALBUM GRÆCUM, Cynoc'oprus, Spo'dium Græco'rum, Album Canis, Stercus Caninum Album. The white dung of the dog. It consists almost wholly of phosphate of lime, from the bones used as food. It was formerly applied as a disient to the inside of the throat in quinseys, but is now justly banished from practice.

ALBUM CANIS, Album græcum—a. Ceti, Cetaceum.

ALBUM NIGRUM. The excrement of the mouse.

ALBUMEN, from albus, 'white.' (F) Albumine. An immediate principle of animals and vegetables, which constitutes the chief part of the white of egg. It is found in the serum, chyle, synovia, serous fluids, &c.

The ALBUMEN OVI, Album'or, Albu'go Ovi, Albor Ovi, Can'didum Ovi, Albu'men, Clare'ta, Ori albus liquor, Albumen'tum, Lac avis or white of egg. (F) Blanc d'œuf, (Old F) Albin d'œuf, is used in pharmacy for suspending oils, &c., in water. See Ovum.

ALBUMINE, Albumen.

ALBUMINURIA, a hybrid, from 'Albumen,' and cyp'is, 'the urine.' The condition of the urine in which it contains albumen, the presence of which is indicated by its coagulation on the application of adequate heat.

ALBUMOR, Albumen ovi.

AL'CAEST, Al'caest Al'caest, perhaps from (G) all, 'all,' and geist, 'spirit.' A word invented by Paracelsus to designate a liquor, which, according to him, was capable of removing every kind of swelling.

The same word was used by Van Helmont for a fancied universal solvent, capable of reducing every body to its elements.

The AL'CAEST OF GLAUBER is a thick liquor obtained by detonating nitrate of potass on hot coals, which transforms it into subcarbonate of potass.

The AL'CAEST OF RESPOUR is a mixture of potass and oxyd of zinc.

ALCAHEST, Alcaest.

ALCALES'CENTE, Alkales'cence, Alkales'centia. The condition in which a fluid becomes alkaline.

ALCALESCENCE OF THE HUMOURS was an old notion of the Humorists. It can only occur during the putrid fermentation of animal matters, which contain azote, and produce ammonia. 'Alcalinity' is the quality of being alkaline.

AL'CALI or AK'KALI, from al (Arab.) 'the,' and kali, the name of the Salsol'a Soda, a plant which contains a large quantity of one of the principal alkalis—soda. The alkalis are substances soluble in water, possessing generally a urinous, acrid, and caustic taste, turning the syrup of violets green, and restoring to blue the infusion of litmus, which has been reddened by acids; reddening the yellow of turmeric, and having the greatest tendency to unite with acids, whose character they modify, and form salts with them. In medicine we understand by this term Potassa, Soda, or Ammonia (q. v.)

CAUSTIC ALCALI, Al'kali Causticum. A pure alkali. One deprived of its carbonic acid.

The FIXED ALCALIS are soda and potassa; the Volatile Alkali, ammonia.

ALCALI AMMONIACUM ACETATUM, Liquor ammoniæ acetatis—a. Ammoniacum fluidum, Liquor ammoniæ—a. Fixum tartarizatum, Potassæ tartras—a. Mineral sulphuricum, Soda, sulphate of—a. Tartari aceto saturatum, Potassæ acetat—a. Vegetabile salito dephlogisticatum, Potassæ murias hyperoxygenatus—a. Vegetabile tartarizatum, Potassæ tartras—a. Vegetabile vitriolatum, Potassæ sulphas—a. Volatile acetatum, Liquor ammoniæ acetatis—a. Volatile acratum, Ammoniæ carbonas—a. Volatile ex sale ammoniaco, Ammoniæ carbonas.

ALCALIGENE, Azote.

ALKALINITY, see Alkaescence.

ALCANA, Anchusa officinalis.

ALCANA ORIENTALIS, Lawsonia inermis—a. Spuria, Anchusa tinctoria—a. Vera, Lawsonia inermis.

ALCEA, Hibiscus abelmoschus—a. Ægyptiaca, Hibiscus abelmoschus—a. Iudica, Hibiscus abelmoschus.

ALCEA RO'SEA, Common hollyhock. Emollient, like the Althæa.

ALCHACHENGE, Physalis.

ALCHACHIL, Rosmarinus.

ALCHAEST, Alcaest.

ALCHEMIL'LA, A. vulga'ris, Common Ladies' Mantle. Pes Leo'nis, Leontop'dium (F) Pied de Lion. Formerly in great repute as an astringent in hemorrhage.

ALCHEMY, Alchymy.

ALCHITRAM, see Pinus Sylvestris.

ALCHITURA, see Pinus Sylvestris.

ALCOCALUM, Cynara scolymus.

ALCHYMY, Al'chemy, Alchemi'a, Alchimi'a,

Adepta Philosophia, from al, an Arabic particle, signifying superiority, excellence, and Chimia, 'Chymistry.' This word was formerly synonymous with Chymistry; but, from the 7th century, it has been applied to the mysterious art of endeavouring to discover a universal remedy, and a mode of transmuting the baser metals into gold: an operation to which they gave the name Opus magnum, and Philosopher's stone.

Alchemy has also been called Scientia vel Philosophia Hermetica, from an idea that Hermes or Mercury was its inventor.

Harris has well defined this chimerical art: 'Ars sine arte, eujus principium est mentiri, medium laborare, et finis mendicare.'

AL'CHYMIST, Flatuarius, Adept'; one pretending to alchemy.

AL'COHOL, Al'cool, Al'kool; an Arabic word, formerly used for an impalpable powder, and signifying 'very subtle, much divided.' At the present day it is applied to the highly rectified spirit of wine. See Spiritus rectificatus, or rectified spirit, distilled from dried subcarbonate of potassa.

Alcohol is an inflammable liquor, lighter than water, of a warm, acrid taste, colourless, transparent, and of a pungent, aromatic smell. It is the product of the distillation of vinous liquors. Alcohol is miscible with water in all proportions, and it is the direct solvent of resins, balsams, &c. Various other vegetable principles are soluble in it, and hence it is used, in different states of concentration, in the preparation of elixirs, tinctures, essences, &c.

Alcohol acts on the animal body as a powerful stimulus: as such, in a dilute form, it is used in the prevention and cure of disease. Its habitual and inordinate use is the cause of many serious affections, of a chronic character especially, as visceral obstructions, dropsy, &c.

ALCOHOL ÆTHEREUS FERRATUS, A. sulfurico-æthereus ferri—a. cum Aloe perfoliata, Tinctura aloes—a. Ammoniaë et guaiaci, Tinctura guaiaci ammoniata—a. Ammoniatum, Spiritus ammoniaë—a. Ammoniatum aromaticum, Spiritus ammoniaë aromaticus—a. Ammoniatum fœtidum, Spiritus ammoniaë fœtidus—a. cum Aromatibus sulphuricatus, Sulphuricum acidum aromaticum—a. cum Aromatibus compositus, Tinctura cinnamomi composita—a. Castoriatum, Tinctura castorei—a. cum Crotonæ cascarrilla, Tinctura cascarrilla—a. Dilutum, Spiritus tenuior—a. Ferratus, Tinctura ferri muriatis—a. cum Sulphate ferri tartarisatus, see Ferrum tartarizatum—a. cum Guaiaco officinale ammoniatus, Tinctura guaiaci ammoniata—a. Iodii, Tinctura Iodinæ—a. cum Opio, Tinctura opii—a. Sulphuricatum, Elixir acidum Halleri—a. Sulphuricum, Elixir acidum Halleri—a. Sulphuris, Carbonis sulphuretum.

ALCOOL, Alcohol—a. Camphré, Spiritus camphoræ.

ALCOOLAT, Tincture.

ALCOOLATUM, Tincture—a. Antiscorbuticum, Tinctura de cochleariis—a. Carminativum Sylvii, Tinctura carminativa Sylvii—a. de Cochleariis, Tinctura de Cochleariis—a. de Croco compositum, Tinctura de croco composita.

ALCOOLISER (F). Formerly, 'to reduce into an impalpable powder.' No longer used.

ALCOOLOMETER, Areometer.

ALCORNOQUE (F) Cortex Alcornoco, A bark but little known and distributed in France, which has been considered capable of curing phthisis. It is bitter, tonic and slightly astringent. Dose of the powder  $\text{ʒi}$  to  $\text{ʒss}$ .

AL'CYON, Hal'cyon. A swallow of Cochin China, whose nests are gelatinous and very nutritious. They have been proposed in medicine as analeptic and aphrodisiac.

ALCYONIUM, Bastard sponge. The ashes were formerly employed as dentifrices: they were believed proper for favouring the growth of the hair and the beard, and were used in Alopecia.

ALDER, BLACK, Prinos, Rhamnus frangula.

ALE, Cerevisia.

ALEACAS, Glycyrrhiza.

ALECOST, Tanacetum balsamita.

ALECTORIUS LA'PIS, Alectoria; from αλεκταγ, 'a cock.' The name of a stone, supposed to exist in the stomach of the cock, or, according to others, in that of the capon, four years old. Many marvellous properties were formerly attributed to it, which are as groundless as its existence. There are no stones in the stomach, except what have been swallowed.

ALEGAR, Acetum.

ALEIMMA, Liniment.

ALEIPHA, Liniment.

ALEIPTERIUM, from αλειψω. 'I anoint.' The place in the ancient gymnasium where the combatants anointed themselves.

ALEIPTRON, Same etymon. A box for containing ointments.

ALEMÀ, Farina.

ALEM'BIC (Arab.) Moorshead, Capitellium, Capitulum, (F) Alambic. A utensil made of glass, metal, or earthen ware, and adapted for distillation. It consists of a body or evcurbit, to which is attached a head or capital, and out of this a beak descends laterally to be inserted into the receiver.

ALEM'BROTH (Salt.) The alchemists designated by this name, and by those of Sal sapientia, Sal vita and S. Scientia, the product resulting from the sublimation of a mixture of corrosive sublimate and sal ammoniac. It is stimulant, but not employed.

ALESE (F) Alèze, Lintecum, from αλεζω, 'I preserve.' A guard. A cloth arranged in several folds, and placed upon a bed, so as to guard it from the lochia or other discharges.

AL'ETON, Farina.

AL'ETRIS FARINO'SA. Stargrass, Starwort. Nat. Ord. Asphodeleæ, Sex. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia. This plant is an intense and permanent bitter, and is used as a tonic and stomachic. It is common in the United States.

ALEURON, Farina.

ALEUROTESIS, see Cribration.

ALEXANDERS, Smyrnum olusatrum.

ALEXANDRI ANTIDOTUS AUREA, see Alexandrine.

ALEXAN'DRINE, Emplas'trum Alexan'dri, a garlic plaster, invented by Alexander, contemporary of Mesuë. Other ancient preparations were called 'Alexandrine;' as the Alexandri antidotus aurea, used in apoplexy; the Collyrium sicum Alexandri, or 'Collyrium of King Alexander,' mentioned by Aëtius.

ALEXICACUM, Amuletum, Alexipharmic.

ALEXIPHARMIC, Alexipharmicus, Anti-pharmaceutus, Alexidicus, Cacoalexiteria, Lexipharmicus, (F) Alexipharmicus, from αλεξειν, 'to repel,' and εργαζομαι, 'poison.' A term formerly used for medicines which were considered proper for expelling from the body various morbid principles, or for preventing the bad effects of poisons taken inwardly.

ALEXIPYRETICUS, Febrifuge.

ALEXIR, Elixir.

ALEXITERIA, from αλεξισθραι, 'to assist.'

Originally, alexiterium was used synonymously with remedy. In more modern times it has been applied to a class of medicines, that counteract poisons placed in contact with the exterior of the body, in contradistinction to alexipharmic.

ALEXITERIUM CHLORICUM, see Disinfection—a. Nitricum, see Disinfection.

ALÈZE, Alèse.

ALFUSA, Tintia.

ALGALIE, Catheter.

ALGAROTH, Algarot, Algarothi Pulvis, Pulvis Angelicus, Oxidum seu submurias Stibi præcipitans paratum: Antimoni Oxidum: Oxidum antimoni Nitro-muriaticum, Oxidum Stibi Acido Muriatico oxygenatum paratum, Mercurius Vite, Mercurius Mortis, so called from Victor Algarothi, a Veronese physician; the sub-muriate of protoxide of antimony, separated from the muriate of antimony by washing away some of its acid. It was formerly much used as an emetic, purgative, and diaphoretic.

ALGEDO, from αλγος, 'pain.' Violent pain about the neck of the bladder, occasionally occurring in gonorrhœa.—Cockburn.

ALGEDON, Pain.

ALGEMA, Pain.

ALGESIS, Pain.

ALGETICUS, see Algos.

ALGIDUS, from algor, 'cold.' That which is accompanied by coldness.

FEBRIS ALGIDA, F. horridica, F. querquera.

(F) Fièvre algide. A pernicious intermittent, accompanied by icy coldness, which is often fatal in the second or third paroxysm.

ALGOR, Rigor.

ALGOS, αλγος, 'pain.' See Pain. Hence, Algelicus, αλγετικός, 'painful,' as Epilepsia algæica. The suffix algia has the same signification, as in Cephalalgia; Pleuralgia, Neuralgia, &c.

ALHAGI, Agul.

ALIBILIS, Nutritious.

ALICA, Halica, Farinarium, Chondrus, from αλιξ, 'bouillie.' A grain from which the ancients made their tisanes; supposed, by some, to have been the Triticum Spelta. At times, it seems to have meant the tisan itself.

ALICES, from αλιξω, 'I sprinkle.' Spots which precede the eruption of smallpox.

ALIENATIO, Anomalia.

ALIENATION, MENTAL, Insanity.

ALIENUS, Delirious.

ALIFORMIS, Pterygoid.

ALIFORMES MUSCULI, Pterygoid muscles.

ALIGULUS, Confection.

ALIMELLE, Parotid.

ALIMENT, Alimentum, Cibarium, Broma, Comiste, Cibus, Esca, Nutritus, Nutrimetum, Sitos, Trophæ, (F) Aliment, Nourriture, from alere, 'to nourish;' food. Any substance, which, if introduced into the system, is capable of nourishing it and repairing its losses.

The study of Aliments forms one of the most important branches of Hygiène. They are confined to the organized kingdom: the mineral affording none.

As regards the immediate principles which predominate in their composition, they may be classed as follows.

TABLE OF ALIMENTS.

ALIMENTARY TUBE, Canal, alimentary.

ALIMENTATION, Alimentatio; the act of nourishing.

ALIMENTUM, Pabulum.

ALIMOS, Glycyrrhiza.

ALINDE'SIS, from αλινοματι, 'to be turned about.' A species of exercise, which consisted in rolling in the dust, after having been anointed with oil.—Hippocr.

ALIPÆNOS, Alipænum, Alipæutos, from α priv. and λιπαιν, 'to be fat.' An epithet formerly given to every external remedy, devoid of fat or moisture; such as powders.—Galen.

ALIPANTOS, Alipænos.

ALIP'ITA, Aliptes, from αλειψω, 'I anoint.' He who anointed the Athletæ after bathing. The place where this was done was called Alipterium.

ALIP'TICA, same etymon. The part of ancient medicine, which treated of inunction, as a means of preserving health.

ALISIER BLANC, Cratægea aria.

ALISMA, Arnica montana.

ALISMA PLANTAGO, Water Plantain, (F) Plantain d'Eau. Nat. Ord. Alismaceæ, Sec. Syst. Hexandria Polygynia. The fresh root is acrid, and the dried leaves will vesicate. The leaves have been proposed as substitutes for the Uva Ursi.

ALITURA, Nutrition.

AL'KALE, Oleum Gallinæ; an ancient pharmaceutical name for pullets' fat.

ALKALESCENCE, Alcalescenc.

ALKALI, sec Alcali—a. Ammoniacum causticum, Ammonia—a. Ammoniacum spirituo-sum, Spiritus ammoniæ—a. Minerale nitratum, Soda, nitrate of—a. Minerale phosphoratum, Soda, phosphate of—a. Minerale salinum, Soda, muriate of—a. Vegetable, Potash—a. Vegetabile cum aceto, Potassæ acetæ—a. Vegetabile fixum causticum, Potassæ fusa—a. Volatile, Ammonia—a. Volatile causticum, Ammonia—a. Volatile, concrete, Ammonia carbonas—a. ALKANET, bastard, Lithospermum officinale—a. Dyer's, Anchusa tinctoria—a. Garden, Anchusa officinalis—a. Officinal, Anchusa officinalis.

ALKAR, Medicament.

ALKEKENG, Physalis.

ALKERMES, Confectio Alker'mes, Alcher'mes. A celebrated electuary, composed of a multitude of substances. It was so called from the grains of kermes contained in it. It was used as a stimulant.

ALKERVA, see Ricinus communis.

ALKITRAN, Cedria.

ALKOOL, Alcohol.

ALLAITEMENT, Lactation.

ALLAITER, To suckle.

ALLAMAN'DA, A Cathartica, Ore'lia grandiflora, Gal'arips, Ech'ri'nus scandens, Apoc'y'num scan'dens: a shrub, native of Guiana, the infusion of whose leaves is said by Linnæus to be useful in colica pictonum.

ALLANTOIC ACID, Ac'idum allantoinum, a peculiar acid, found in the liquor of the allantoids of the cow.

ALLANTOIS, Allantoides, Membra'na urinaria, M. Farcinul'lis, M. Intestinalis, the Allantoid Vesicle, from αλλας, 'a sausage,' and ειδος, 'shape.' A sort of elongated bladder, between the chorion and amnion of the fœtus, and communicating with the bladder by the urachus. It is very apparent in quadrupeds, but not in the human species. The fluid of the allantoid has been considered inservient to the nutrition of the fœtus, but our ideas, in regard to the vesicle, in man, are far from being determinate.

ALLANTOTOXICUM, from αλλας, 'a sausage,' and τοξικον, 'a poison.' The Germans have given this name to a poison developed in sausages formed of blood and liver.

ALLELUIA, Oxalis acetosella.

ALLGOOD, Chenopodium bonus Henricus. ALLHEAL, Heracleum spondylium.

ALLI'CEOUS, allia'ceus, from allium, 'garlic.' Belonging to garlic, as alliaceous odour.

ALLAIRE, Alliaria.

ALLIARIA, Erys'imum allia'ria, Jack-in-the-hedge, Stinking hedge mustard, Sauce-alone, Hesperis allia'ria, (F) Alliaire. This plant has been sometimes given in humid asthma and dyspnoea. It is reputed to be diaphoretic, diuretic, and antiscorbutic.

The Parisian Codex has a compound syrup of alliaria, Sirap d'erysimum composé, which is used in hoarseness.

ALLIGATURA, Fascia, Ligature.

ALLIUM, from olco, 'I smell.' A. sativum, Thiaca rusticorum, Ampeloprasum, Scor'odon, Garlic, (F) All. Nat. Ord. Asphodelææ, Sex. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia. A native of Sicily, but cultivated for use. The bulbs or cloves, Ag'lithes, have a strong, offensive, and penetrating odour; and a sweetish, biting, and caustic taste. Internally, garlic is stimulant, diuretic, expectorant, emmenagogue (?), diaphoretic, and anthelmintic. Externally, it is rubefacient, maturative, and repellent.

Dose, one to six cloves, swallowed whole, or from ʒss to ʒij of the juice.

TAYLOR'S Remedy for Deafness, a nostrum, appears to consist of garlic, infused in oil of almonds, and coloured by alkal root.

ALLIUM ASCALONICUM, Echalotte.

ALLIUM CÉPA, Common Onion, Cepulla, Crom'myon. (F) Oignon. Acid and stimulating, and possessing very little nutriment. Onions have been used as stimulants, diuretics, and anthelmintics. The boiled or roasted onion, as a cataplasm, is emollient and maturating. The fresh root is rubefacient. The expressed juice is sometimes used in otalgia and in rheumatism.

ALLIUM Gallicum, Portulaca.

ALLIUM PORRUM, Porrum, Prasum, περισσον, the Leek or Porret; (F) Poireau, Porreau. Possesses the same properties as the onion.

The virtues of the genus Allium depend upon an acid principle, soluble in water, alcohol, acids, and alkalies.

ALLIUM, Redolens, Teucrium scordium.

ALLIUM VICTORIA'LE, Victoria'lis longa. The root, which, when dried, loses its alliaceous smell and taste, is said to be efficacious in allaying the abdominal spasms of pregnant women (?).

ALLOCHOOS, Delirious.

ALLOCHROMA'SIA, from αλλας, 'another,' and χρωμα, 'colour.' A change of colour.

ALLOIOSIS, Alteration.

ALLOIOTICUS, Alterative.

ALLOPATHIC, Allopath'ic, Heteropath'ic, from αλλας, 'another,' and παθος, 'affection.' Relating to the ordinary method of medical practice, in contradistinction to Homœopathic.

ALLOPATHY, Allopathia, from αλλας, 'another,' 'different,' and παθος, disease. The opposite to Homœopathy. The ordinary medical practice.

ALLOPHASIS, Delirium.

ALLOTRIODON'TIA, from αλλοτριος, 'foreign,' and ειδος, 'a tooth.' Transplantation of teeth.

ALLOTRIOPHAGIA, Malacia.

ALLOTRIU'RIA, from αλλοτριος, 'foreign,' and ουρον, 'urine.' Admixture of foreign matters with the urine.

ALLSPICE, see Myrtus pimenta.

ALLUCINATIO, Hallucination.

ALLURE, Influenza.

ALMA, Water.

ALMARIAB, see Plumbi oxydum semivitreum.

ALMEZERION, Cneorum tricoccum.

ALMOND, Amygdala.

ALMOND BLOOM. A liquid cosmetic: formed of Brazil dust, ʒi, water lbij; boil and strain; and add isinglass ʒvj, grand sylvestria ʒij, or cochineal ʒij, alum ʒj, borax ʒij; boil again, and strain through a fine cloth.

ALMOND CAKE; see Amygdala—a. of the Ear,

Tonsil—a. Paste, see Amygdala—a. Powder, see Amygdala—a. of the Throat, Tonsil.

ALNUS NIGRA, Rhamnus frangula.

ALOE'DARIUM, αλοειδριον; a compound medicine, containing aloes.—Gorræus.

ALOES, Αλοῦ, Fel Nutura; the inspissated juice of the aloe. Nat. Ord. Asphodelææ, Sex. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia.

The Soc'OTRINE ALOES, A. Saecotori'na, Turkey aloes, East India aloes, Alôes lu'eida, A. Zoclorinia, A. spica'ta, A. spica'tæ extractum, A. extractum, An'ima Alôes, is the best species. Its odour is not unpleasant, taste very bitter, and slightly aromatic; colour reddish-brown, with a shade of purple; mass hard, friable; fracture conchoidal and glossy; soluble in dilute alcohol. Powder of a bright cinnamon-yellow colour. It is cathartic, warm, and stimulating; emmenagogue, anthelmintic, and stomacheic. As a cathartic, it affects the rectum chiefly. Dose, as a cathartic, gr. v to ℥j in pill.

ALOES HEPAT'ICA, A. vulgaris, A. Barbadoensis, Hepatic aloes, Bombay aloes, Barbadoes aloes, A. vulgaris extractum, (F) Aloes en calébusse, A. des Barbadoes. This species has a very disagreeable odour, and an intensely bitter and nauseous taste. Properties the same as the last.

ALOES CABALLI'NA, A. Guinien'sis, Horse-aloes; used chiefly for horses. It is collected in Spain and Portugal, and is very coarse.

ALOES WOOD, Agallochum.

ALOET'IC, Aloet'icus. A preparation, which contains aloes.

ALOGOTROPHIA, from αλογος, 'disproportionate,' and τροφη, 'nutrition.' Irregular nutrition. Used particularly to designate the irregular manner in which the nutrition of bones is operated in rickety individuals.

ALOPECES, Ψωῶ.

ALOPE'CIA, from αλοπηξ, 'a fox;' (this animal being said to be subject to the affection.) Capillorum desu'vium, Athrix dep'ilis, Phalacro'tis, Areæ, Depilatio, Trichosis Athrix, Gangræna Alopec'ia; falling off of the hair; loss of the hair. When this is confined to the crown of the head, it is called calvities (q. v.), although the terms are often used synonymously.

ALOPECIA AREATA, Porriigo decalyans.

ALOUCHIE, Cratægus aria.

ALOUCHI. The name of a gum procured from the canella alba tree.

ALOUCHIER, Cratægus aria.

ALPAM. A shrub which grows on the coast of Malabar. Certain parts of this, infused in oil, form an antispasmodic ointment. The juice of the leaves, mixed with that of the calamus, is employed against the bites of serpents.

ALPHENIC, Saccharum candidum.

ALPHITEDON, see Fracture.

ALPHITON, αλειτον, Polenta, Fari'na.

Any kind of meal. Toasted barley-meal.—Hippocrates. Polenta means also a food composed of Indian meal, cheese, &c. See Farina.

ALPHON'SIN, Alphonsi'num; a kind of bullet forceps, similar to a Porte-Crayon, so called from the inventor, Alphonso Ferri, of Naples.—Scullettus.

ALPHIOS, Lepa alphoides.

ALPHOSIS ÆTHIOPICA, See Albino.

ALPINA CARDAMOMUM, Amomum Cardamomum.

ALPISTE, Phalaris Canadensis.

ALSINE ME'DIA, Morsus Galli'nae, Holostæum Alsine, Mouse-ear, Chickweed, (F) Mouron des Oiseaux, Morgeline. This plant, if boiled tender, may be eaten like spinach, and forms an excellent emollient poultice. It was formerly regarded as a vulnerary and detergent.

ALTAFOR, Camphor.

ALTERANS, Alterative.

ALTÉRANT, Alterative.

ALTERA'TION, Alteratio, from alter, 'other,' Alloio'sis. This word is used in France to express a morbid change which supervenes in the expression of the countenance (altération de la face), or in the structure of an organ (altération organique), or in the nature of fluids excreted (altération de l'urine, des larmes, du lait, &c.)

Alteration is also used in an entirely different sense, to express intense thirst in disease. In this case its etymology is different. It comes from halere, and was formerly written halétration.

AL'TERATIVE, Alterans, Alloio'icus, a medicine considered to be capable of producing a salutary change in a disease, but without exciting any sensible evacuation. As Medicine improves, this uncertain class of remedies becomes, of necessity, diminished in number.

(F) Altérant. (The French term likewise means, that which causes thirst. Situel'ousus, Dipsel'icus, as Altérer means both to change and to cause thirst. S'altérer, is, to experience a change for the worse.—corrum'pi.)

ALTERCANGENON, Hyoscyamus.

ALTERCUM, Hyoscyamus.

ALTHA'A, from αλθειν, 'to heal;' A. officinal'is, Malcavis'cum, Aristalthæa, Hibis'cus, Hibis'cha mismal'va, Bismal'va, Marsh-mallow. (F) Guinauve. Nat. Ord. Malvaceæ. Sex. Syst. Monodelphia Polyandria. The leaves and root contain much mucilage. They are emollient and demulcent, and are employed wherever medicines, possessing such properties, are required.

ALTHANAIHA, Orpiment.

ALTHEUS, Physician.

ALTHEXIS, Curation.

ALTILIBAT, Terebinthina.

ALU'DEL, Alu'tel, Vitram sublimato'rium; a hollow sphere of stone, glass, or earthenware, with a short neck projecting at each end, by means of which one glass might be set upon the other. The uppermost had no aperture at the top. Aludels were formerly used in the sublimation of various substances.

ALUM, Symphytum—a. Egyptian, Ægyptia styteria—a. Root, Heuchera cortusa—a. Solution of, compound, Liq. aluminis, compos.

ALU'MEN, (an Arabic term, alum) Alum, Hypersul'phas Alu'minae et Potas'sæ, Sul'phas

Alumina Acidulus cum Potassâ, Sulphas Alumina, Sulphas Kalico-aluminicum, Super-sulphas alumina et potassæ, Argilla sulphurica alcalisata, A. vitriolata, Stypticaria, Super-sulphas Argillæ alculisatum, Argilla Kalisulphurica. (F) Alun.

COMMON ALUM, English alum, Rock alum, Alumen factitium, Alumen commune, A. crystallinum, A. rupeum, (F) Alun d'Angleterre, is the variety usually employed. It is in octahedral crystals, but generally in large, white, semitransparent masses; has a sweetish, styptic taste; effloresces in the air, and is soluble in 16 parts of water at 60°. It is tonic and astringent, and as such is used internally and externally. Dose, gr. v. to xv.

ROMAN ALUM, Alumen Romanum, A. Rutilum, A. Rubrum. (F) Alun de Rome. In crystals, which are of a pale red when broken, and covered with a reddish efflorescence.

ROCHE ALUM, Alumen de Rochi, (F) Alun de Roche, so called from Roccha in Syria, where there was a manufactory. It is in pieces of the size of an almond, covered with a reddish efflorescence.

COMMON ROCHE ALUM, A. Rochi Gullis. Fragments of common alum, moistened and shaken with prepared bole. It is white when broken.

ALUMEN EXSICCATUM, Alumen ustum, A. calcinatum, Sulphas aluminae fusus, Argilla sulphurica usta, Burnt alum, dried alum. (F) Alun calciné, (alum melted in an earthen vessel until ebullition ceases.) Escharotic.

ALUMEN CATIONUM, Potash of commerce—a. Fixum: see Potash.—a. Kinosatum, Pulvis sulphatis aluminae compositus.

ALUMINA PURA, Argilla pura.

ALUMINÆ ET POTASSÆ HYPERSULPHAS, Alumen—a. et Potassæ supersulphas, Alumen—a. sulphas, Alumen—a. Sulphas acidulus cum potassâ, Alumen—a. Sulphas fusus, Alumen exsiccatum.

ALUMINE FACTICE, Argilla pura.

ALUN, Alumen.

ALUNSEL, Gutta.

ALUS, Symphytum.

ALUSIA, Hallucination—a. Hypochondriasis, Hypochondriasis.

ALUTEL, Aludel.

ALVAQUILLA, Psoralea glandulosa.

ALVEARIUM, Auditory canal, external.

ALVEOLAR, Alveolaris, from alveus, 'a cavity.' (F) Alvéolaire. That which relates to the alveoli.

The ALVEOLAR ARCHES, (F) Arcades alvéolaires, are formed by the margins of the two jaws, which are hollowed by the Alveoli (q. v.)

The ALVEOLAR ARTERY, Supra-maxillary A. (Artère sus-maxillaire) of Chaussier, arises from the internal maxillary, descends behind the tuberosity of the upper jaw, and gives branches to the upper molar teeth, gums, periosteum, membrane of the maxillary sinus, and buccinator muscle.

The ALVEOLAR VEIN has a similar distribution.

The ALVEOLAR MEMBRANES, are very fine membranes, situate between the teeth and alveoli, and formed by a portion of the sac or follicle which enclosed the tooth before it pierced the gum. By some this membrane has been called the alveolo-dental periosteum.

ALVÉOLE, Alveolus.

ALVEOLO LABIAL, Buccinator.

ALVEOLUS, same etymon. Botrion, Bothrion, Frena, Morturiolum, Holmicos, Præsepium, Pha'nion, Præsepium, Putne, Pathne. (F) Alvéole. The alveoli are the sockets of the teeth, into which they are, as it were, driven. Their size and shape are determined by the teeth which they receive, and they are pierced, at the apex, by small holes, which give passage to the dental vessels and nerves ALVEUS, Auge—a. Ampullosus, Receptaculum chyli—a. Ampullescens, thoracic duct—a. Communis: see Semicircular canals—a. Utriculus; see Semicircular canals.

ALVI EXCRETIO, Defecation—a. Fluxus Aquosus, Diarrhœa—a. Profluvium, Diarrhœa.

ALVIDUCUS, Laxative.

ALVINE. Alvînus, from olvus, 'the abdomen.' That which relates to the lower belly, as alvine dejections, alvine flux, &c.

ALVUS, Abdomen—a. Adstricta, Constipation—a. Renum, Pelvis of the kidney.

ALYCE, Anxiety.

AL'YPON, from  $\alpha$  privative, and  $\lambda\upsilon\pi\eta$ , 'pain.' An acrid, purging plant, described by Matthioli. By some it has been supposed to be the Globularia ulypum of botanists.

ALYSIS, Anxiety.

ALYSMUS, Anxiety.

ALYSSUM PLINII, Galium Mollugo.

AL'ZILAT. In some of the Arabian writers, a weight of three grains—Ruland and Johnson.

AMADOU, Boletus igniarius.

AMADOUVIER, Boletus igniarius.

AMAIGRISSEMENT, Emaciation.

AMANDES, Sec Amygdala.

AMANT'Æ from  $\alpha$  priv. and  $\mu\alpha\upsilon\eta$ , 'madness:' i. e. not poisonous. A name given, by the Greeks and Romans, to the edible champignons. Amanita forus, at the present day, a genus, some of which are edible, others poisonous. Amongst others, it contains the Agaricus aurantiacus and A. pseudo-aurantiacus.

AMARA DULCIS, Solanum dulcamara.

AMARACINUM, an ancient and esteemed plaster, containing several aromatics, the marjoram, μαρρακος, in particular.

AMARACUS, Origanum majorana.

AMARITITES, Bitterness.

AMARITUDO, Bitterness.

AMAROR, Bitterness.

AMARUS, Picros, bitter. (F) Amèr. The bitter principle of vegetables is the great natural tonic, and hence bitters, as they are termed collectively, belong to the class of tonics. Several are used in medicine; the chief are, gentian, quassia, cinchona, calumba, dogwood, &c.

AMASESIS, Amassésis, from  $\alpha$ , privative, and  $\mu\alpha\sigma\sigma\iota\varsigma$ , 'mastication.' Mastication when impeded or impracticable.

AMATORIUM VENEFICIUM, Philter.
AMATORIUS MUSCULUS, Obliquus superior oculi.

AMAURO'SIS, Obscured'tio, offuscad'tio, from μαυρος, 'obscure.' Drop serena, Gutta serena, Cataracta nigra, Parop'sis amauro'sis, Immobilitas pupillæ, Black cat'aract. (F) Goutte-serene, Cataracte noire. Diminution, or complete loss of sight, without any perceptible alteration in the organization of the eye; generally, perhaps, owing to loss of power of the optic nerve or retina. Counter-irritants are the most successful remedial agents, although the disease is always very difficult of removal, and generally totally incurable.

AMBARUM, Ambergris—a. Cineritium, Ambergris.

AMBER, Succinum—a. Liquid: see Liquidambar styraciflua.

AMBE, from αμβανω, 'I ascend;' Ambi. A superficial emmenagogue on a bone. Also, an old surgical machine for reducing dislocations of the shoulder; the invention of which is ascribed to Hippocrates. It is no longer used.—Hippocr., Scultetus.

AMBERGRIS. Ambra grisea, Ambor, Ambra cineracea, A. ambrosiaca, Ambarum, Succinum cincteum, S. griseum, Ambarum cineritium. A concrete substance, of the consistence of wax, cineritious colour, studded with yellow and blackish spots, and exhaling a very pleasant odour. It seems highly probable that ambergris is formed in the intestines of the whale, and voided with its excrements. Like all aromatic substances, ambergris is slightly antispasmodic and excitant; but it is oftener employed as a perfume than as a medicine.

AMBIA. A liquid, yellow bitumen, the smell and virtues of which are similar to those of the resin tacamahaca. It is obtained from a spring in India.

AMBIDEX'TER, Amphidex'ios, from ambo, 'both,' and dexter, 'right.' One who uses both hands with equal facility. Celsus says the surgeon ought to be 'non minus sinistrâ quam dextrâ promptus.' One of the aphorisms of Hippocrates says, that a woman is never ambidexter. This is a mistake.

AMBILÆVUS, Ampharisteros.

AMBLOMA, Abortion.

AMBLOSIS, Abortion.

AMBLOTHRIDIUM, Abortion.

AMBLOTICUS, Abortive.

AMBLUS, αμβλυς, 'obscure.' Hence.

AMBLYOGENOS, Amblyopia.

AMBLYOPIA, from αμβλυς, 'obscure,' and οφθαλμος, 'the eye.' Amblyos'mos, Amblyog'mos, Amblyop'ea (so called by some, according to Castelli, ob ignorantiam Græcæ linguæ.) Hebilitudo visus. Feebleness of sight. (F) Vue faible. First degree of amaurosis.—Hippocr.

AMBLYPIA CREPUSCULARIS, Hemeralopia—a. Dissitorum, Myopia—a. Meridiana, Nyctalopia—a. Proximum, Presbytia.

AMBLYOSMOS, Amblyopia.

AMBON, αμβων, 'the raised rim of a shield or dish,' from αμβανω, 'I ascend.' The fibrocartilaginous rings or bonnets, which surround the articular cavities, as the glenoid cavity of the scapula, the acetabulum, &c., have been so called.—Galen.

AMBOR, Ambergris.

AMBRA, Succinum—a. Ambrosiaca, Ambergris—a. Cineracea, Ambergris.

AMBLAGRISSEA, Ambergris.

AMBRE BLANC, Succinum (album)—a. Jaune, Succinum.

AMBLETTE, Hibiscus abelmoschus.

AMBROSIA, from α privative, and βροτος, 'mortal.' Food which makes immortal, or the food of immortals. The food of the gods.—Homcr. See, also, Chenopodium Botrys.

AMBROSIA MARITIMA. A plant which grows on the shores of the Levant, and has a pleasant, bitter, and aromatic taste. It is given, in infusion, as a tonic and antispasmodic.

AMBROSIE DU MEXIQUE, Chenopodium Ambrosioides.

AMBULANCE, (F) from ambulare, 'to walk.' A military hospital attached to an army, and moving along with it. Also called Hôpital ambulante.

AMBULANT, (F) Ambulans, Ambulati'vus, Ambulative. A morbid affection is said to be ambulante, when it leaves one part and goes to another; as Erysip'les ambulans, &c. When blisters are applied successively on different parts of the body, they are called Vésicatoires ambulants.

AMBULATIO, Walking.

AMBULEIA, Cichorium intybus.

AMBULLI. The Brachmanic name for an Indian aquatic herb, which appears to belong to the family Lysimachia. The whole plant has a sweet smell. Its decoction has a very bitter taste, and is an excellent febrifuge. It is also taken in milk in cases of vertigo.

AMBULO FLATULENTUS ET FURIOSUS. Flatus furiosus, Vare'ni. Painful, mobile, and periodical tumours affecting different parts, which were once considered as the effect of very subtle vapours.—Michaelis. Their nature is by no means clear.

AMBUSTIO, Burn.

AMBUTUA, Pareira brava.

AMBUYA-EMBO. A very beautiful, creeping Aristolochia of Brazil, the decoction of which is exhibited successfully in obstructions. It is also used in fumigation and in baths as a tonic.

ÂME, Anima.

AMELI. A Malabar shrub, belonging to a genus unknown. The decoction of its leaves is said to relieve colic. Its roots, boiled in oil, are used to repel tumours.

AMENIA, Amenorrhæa.

AMENORRHŒA. Parame'nia obstructio'nis, Menocryph'ia, Menosta'sia, Apophrax'is, Arrha'a, Defec'tus men'sium, Menstruat'io impedi'ta, Ischome'nia, Ame'nia, from α privative, μην, 'a month,' and ρεια, 'I flow.' Suppression of the menses. This suppression is most commonly symptomatic, and hence the chief attention must be paid to the cause. Usually, there is an atonic state of the system generally, or of the uterus in particular, and hence chalybeates and other tonics are advisable.

Two great varieties of Amenorrhæa are commonly reckoned. 1. A. Emansio'nis, Eman'sio men'sium, Menos'chesis, or retention of the men- ses, when the menses do not appear at the usual age: and, 2. Suppressio Menstruum, Amenorrhœa Suppressivæ, Interruptio menstruatio-nis, in which the catamenia are obstructed in their regular periods of recurrence. See Emansio Menstrui, and Menses.

AMENORRHŒA DIFFICILIS, Dysmenorrhœa.

AMENTIA, Dementia. See, also, Fatuitas, and Idiotism.

AMÉR, Amarus.

AMERICANUM TUBEROSUM, Solanum tuberosum.

AMERTUME, Bitterness.

AMETHYST, Amethystus, from α priv. μεθύω, 'I am drunk.' A precious stone, to which the ancients attributed the property of preventing drunkenness. It was also used as an anti-diarrhœic and absorbent.—Pliny, Albertus Magnus.

AMETRIA, Intemperance.

AMICULUM, Amnios.

AMIDUM, Amylum.

AMINÆA, Anime.

AMINEUM VINUM, Aminean wine, highly esteemed as a stomachic. Virgil distinguishes it from the Falernian.—Pliny, Macrobius, &c.

AMMA, Truss.

AMMI, Ammi nojus, Bishop's weed, A. Vulgaris. The seeds of this plant are aromatic and pungent. They are said to be carminative and diuretic, and are tonic and stomachic.

AMMI VERUM, see Sison Ammi—a. des Boultiques, see Sison ammi.

AMMION, Hydargyri sulphuretum rubrum.

AMMOCHO'SIA, from αμμος, 'sand,' and χέω, 'I pour.' Arcudtio. Putting the human body in hot sand, for the cure of disease.

AMMONIA, Ammonia or Ammoniacal gas, Volatile alkali, Alkali ammoniacum causticum, A. volatile causticum, Ammonia caustica, A. pura, Ammoniacum, A. causticum, (F) Ammoniaque, Air alcalin, Gaz ammoniacal. An alkali so called, because obtained principally by decomposing sal ammoniac ( muriate of ammonia) by lime. This gas is colourless, transparent, elastic, of a pungent, characteristic odour, and an acrid urinous taste. It turns the syrup of violets green, and its specific gravity is 0.596. When inhaled, largely diluted with common air, it is a powerful irritant. When unmixed, it instantly induces suffocation.

AMMONIA, ACETATE, SOLUTION OF, Liquor ammoniacetatis—a. Caustica liquida, Liquor ammoniac—a. Hydriodate of, see Iodine—a. Hydrochlorate of, Ammonia murias—a. Hydrosulphuret of, Ammonia sulphuretum—a. Iodide of, see Iodine—a. Liniament of, strong, Liniamentum ammoniac fortius—a. Liquid, Liquor ammoniac—a. Muriatica, Ammonia murias—a. Nitrata, Ammonia nitras—a. Præparata, Ammonia carbonas—a. Pura liquida, Liquor ammoniac—a. Solution of, Liquor ammoniac—a. Tartrate of, Ammonia tartras.

AMMONIAC, GUM, Gummi Ammoniacum, (F) Ammoniac, Gomme ammoniacque, so called from Ammonia in Libya, whence it is brought. A gum-resin, obtained from the Hæraclæum or Bubon gummiferum of Barbary, Abyssinia, &c. It is in irregular, dry masses and tears, yellow externally, whitish within. Its odour is peculiar, and not ungrateful: taste nauseous, sweet, and bitter. It forms a white emulsion with water: is soluble in vinegar, partially so in alcohol, ether, and solutions of the alkalies.

Gum Ammoniacum is expectorant, deobstruent (?) antispasmodic, discutient, and resolvent. It is chiefly, however, used in the first capacity, and in the formation of certain plasters.

Two varieties are met with in the market, the Gutta ammoniaci, the best; and the Lapis ammoniaci, the more impure.

AMMONIACÆ NITRAS, Ammonia nitras—a. Sulphas, Ammonia sulphas.

AMMONIACUM, Ammonia—a. Succinatum, Spiritus ammoniæ fetidus—a. Volatile mite, Ammonia carbonas.

AMMONIÆ ACETAS, Liquor ammoniacetatis.

AMMONIÆ CARBONAS. A. Subcarbonas, Salt of bones, Sal Osium, Salt of wood-soot, Sal Fuliginis, Salt of urine, Volatili Sal Ammoniac, Baker's salt, Alkali volatile aratum, A. volatile ammoniacale, A. volatile ex sale ammoniaco, Ammoniacum volatile mite, Ammonium carbonicum, A. subcarbonicum, Carbonas ammoniac alkalinus sea incompletus seu superammoniacus, Hypocarbonas ammoniac, Flores salis ammoniaci, Sal cornu cervi volatile, Sal volatilis salis ammoniaci, Concrete volatile alkali, Carbonate or subcarbonate of ammonia, Ammonia præparata, Sal volatile, Smelling salt. (F) Carbonate d'ammoniaque, Sel volatil d'Angleterre. A white, striated, crystalline mass: odour and taste pungent and ammoniacal: soluble in two parts of water: insoluble in alcohol: effloresces in the air. It is stimulant, antacid, diaphoretic, and antispasmodic. Dose, gr. v to xv.

AMMONIÆ ET FERRI MURIAS, Ferrum ammoniatum—a. Hydrosulphuretum, Liquor fumus Boylii—a. Hypocarbonas, Ammonia Carbonas.

AMMONIÆ MURIAS, Muriate of Ammonia, Hydrochlorate of Ammonia, Sal Ammoniacum, Sal Ammoniac, S. Ammoniacus, Ammonia Muriatico, Ammonium Muriatum, Hydrochloras Ammoniac, Sal Ammoniacum, Salmiac, Fuligo Alba Philosophorum, (F) Muriate d'Ammoniaque. A saline concrete, formed by the combination of the muriatic acid with ammonia. In Egypt it is manufactured in large quantities by subliming the soot formed by burning camels' dung—26 pounds of the soot yielding 6 pounds. It is also prepared, in great quantities, by adding sulphuric acid to the volatile alkali obtained from soot, bones, &c., mixing this with common salt, and subliming.

Muriate of ammonia is inodorous, but has an acrid, pungent, bitterish, and urinous taste. Three parts of cold water dissolve one. Soluble also in 4.5 parts of alcohol. It is aperient and diuretic, but seldom used internally. Externally, it is employed, producing cold during its solution, in inflammations, &c.

AMMONIÆ NITRAS, Nitrate of Ammonia, Alkali volatile nitratum, Sal ammoniacum nitrosus, Ammonia nitrat, Nitras ammoniac, Nitrum flammans. (F) Nitrate d'Ammoniaque. A salt composed of nitric acid and ammonia. It is diuretic and deobstruent (?) Externally, it is discutient and siatagogue.

AMMONIÆ SULPHAS, Sulphate of Ammonia,

Sulphas ammoniæ acæ, Ammonium sulphuricum, Alkali volatile vitriolatum, Sal Ammoniacum secretum GLAUBERI, Sal secretus GLAUBERI, Vitriolum ammoniacale, (F) Sulfate d'Ammoniacque. Formed by adding sulphuric acid either to sal ammoniac or to ammoniacal liquor. Its properties are like those of the muriate of ammonia.

AMMONIÆ SULPHURETUM, Sulphuret of Ammonia, Hydrosulphuret of Ammonia, Hydrosulphus Ammonia, Spiritus BEGUI'NI, Sp. farnans BEGUI'NI, Sulphuretum ammoniacæ, Sp. salis ammoniaci sulphuratus, Liquor ammonii hydrothiodis, Hydrosulphuretum Ammoniacum, Hydrarg. ammoniacale aquosum, Hydrosulphuretum ammoniacæ liquidum, Spiritus sulphuris volutilis, Hepar sulphuris volutile, BOYLE'S or BEGUI'N'S fuming spirit. (F) Hydrosulfate sulfuré d'Ammoniacque, Liqueur farnante de BOYLE. Sulfure hydrogéné d'Ammoniacque. Hydrosulfure d'Ammoniacque. Odour very fetid; taste nauseous and styptic; colour dark yellowish green. It is reputed to be sedative, nauseating, emetic, disoxygenizing, (?) and has been given in diabetes and diseases of increased excitement. Dose, gr. viij to gr. xx.

AMMONIÆ TARTRAS, Alkali volatile tartarizatum, Sal ammoniacum tartareum, Tartarus ammoniacus, Tartrate of Ammonia, (F) Tartrate d'Ammoniacque. A salt composed of tartaric acid and ammonia. It is diaphoretic and diuretic; but not much used.

AMMONIACQUE, Ammonia—a. Hydrosulfure d', Ammonia sulphuretum—a Hydrosulfate sulfuré d', Ammonia sulphuretum—a. Liquide, Liqueur ammonia—a. Sulfure hydrogéné d', Ammonia sulphuretum.

AMMONIO-CUPRICUS SUBSULPHAS, Cuprum ammoniatum.

AMMONION, from αμμος, 'sand.' An ancient collyrium of great virtues in many diseases of the eye, and which was said to remove sand from that organ.

AMMONIUM ARSENICUM, Arseniate of ammonia—a. Carbonicum, Ammonia carbonas—a. Iodide of, see Iodine—a. Muriaticum martiatum seu martiale, Ferrum ammoniatum—a. Muriatum, Ammonia murias—a. Sub carbonateum, Ammonia carbonas—a. Sulphuricum, Ammonia sulphas.

AMNA ALCALIZATA, Water, mineral saline.

AMNESIA, Amnesia, from α priv. and μνησις, 'memory.' Moria imbecillitas amnesia, Oblio, Recollectio nis jactura, Dysasthesia interna, Debilitas memoria, memoria delecta, (F) Perte de Mémoire, 'loss of memory.' By some Nosologists, Amnesia constitutes a genus of diseases. By most it is considered only as a symptom, which may occur in many diseases.

AMNESTIA, Amnesia.

AMOME FAUX, Sison amomum.

AMNIOCLEP'SIS, from Amnion, and κλεπτω, 'I steal or take away clandestinely.' Premature escape of the liquor amnii.

AMNIOS, Am'nion, Am'nium, Charta virginæ, Armata, Agni'na membrana, Pellucida membrana, Galea, Indusium, Amic'dum, Membrana factum involvens. The innermost of the enveloping membranes of the fœtus. So called because first observed in the sheep. (?)

αμνος, 'a sheep.' It is thin, transparent, perspirable, and possesses many delicate, colourless vessels, which have not been injected. It sends a prolongation, which serves as a sheath to the umbilical cord. Its external surface is feebly united to the chorion by cellular and vascular filaments. Its inner surface is polished, and is in contact with the body of the fœtus and the liquor amnii, (q. v.)

AMNIOTIC ACID, Ac'idum Amnium vel amnioticum. A peculiar acid, found, by Vauquelin and Buniva, in the liquor amnii of the cow.

AMNITIS or AMNIITIS, from Amnion and itis, Inflammation. Inflammation of the Amnion.

AMOMUM CARDAMOMUM, A. racemosum, A. verum, Alpinia cardamomum, Caropi, Mato'nia Cardamomum, Eleutheria Cardamomum, Cardamomum minus, Lesser or official Cardamom, Amomum repens. (F) Cardamome de la Côte de Malabar, Cardamome. The seeds of this East India plant have an agreeable, aromatic odour; and a pungent, grateful taste. They are carminative and stomachic: but are chiefly used to give warmth to other remedies. The fruit is called Amomis. Dose, gr. v. to ℥j.

AMOMUM GALANGA, Maranta G.

AMOMUM GRANUM PARADISI, Cardamomum majus, Melegueta, Maniguetta, Cardamomum piperatum, A. maxillimum, (F) Graines de Paradis. Greater cardamom seeds resemble the last in properties. They are extremely hot, and are not much used.

AMOMUM PIMENTA: see Myrtus pimenta—a. Zedoaria, Kamperia rotunda.

AMOMUM ZINGIBER, Zingiber officinale, Zingiber album, Z. nigrum, Z. commune, Zingiber, Ginger, (F) Gingembre. The white and black ginger, Zingiber fuscum and album, are the produce of the same plant, the difference depending upon the mode of preparing them.

The odour of ginger is aromatic; taste warm, aromatic, and acrid. It yields its virtues to alcohol, and in a great degree to water. It is carminative, stimulant, and sialogogue.

The PRESERVED GINGER, Zingiberis Radix Conditâ, Radix Zingiberis conditâ ex Indiâ allatâ is a condiment, which possesses all the virtues of ginger.

GINGER-BEER POWDERS may be formed of white sugar, ℥j and ℥ij. zingib. gr. v, sodæ subcarb. gr. xxxvj in each blue paper: acid of tartar, ℥iss in each white paper,—for half a pint of water.

Oxley's Concentrated Essence of Jamaica Ginger is a mere solution of ginger in rectified spirit.

AMOR, Love.

AMORGE, Amurca.

AMOSTEUS, Osteocolla.

AMOUR, Love.

AMOUREUX (muscæ,) Obliquus superior oculi.

AMPAC, Ampacus; an East India tree, the leaves of which have a strong odour, and are used in baths as detergents. A very odoriferous resin is obtained from it.

AMPAR, Succinum.

AMPELOCARPUS, Galium aparine.

AMPELOPRASUM, Allium.

AMPELOS, Vitis vinifera—a. Agria, Bryonia alba—a. Idæa, Vaccinium vitis idæa—a. Oinophoros, Vitis vinifera.

AMPHIAMPHOTERODIOPSISIA, Diplopia.

AMPHARIS'TEROS, Ambilæ'vus, awkward, from αμφι, and αριστερος, 'the left;' opposed to ambidexter.

AMPHIMERINOS, Quotidian.

AMPHI, αμφι, 'both, around, on all sides.' Hence.

AMPHIAM, Opium.

AMPHIARTHRO'SIS, from αμφι, 'both,' and αρθρωσις, 'articulation.' A mixed articulation, in which the corresponding surfaces of bones are united in an intimate manner by an intermediate body, which allows, however, of some slight motion. Such is the junction of the bodies of the vertebræ by means of the intervertebral cartilages. This articulation has also been called Diarthrose de Continuité. The motion it permits is but slight.

AMPHIBLESTROIDES, Reticular.

AMPHIBRAN'CHIA, from αμφι, 'around,' and βραγχια, 'the throat.' Amphibron'chia. The tonsils and neighbouring parts.—Hippoc.

AMPHICAUSTIS, Vulva.

AMPHIDEXIOS, Ambidexter.

AMPHIDIARTHRO'SIS, from αμφι 'about,' and διαρθρωσις, 'a movable joint.' A name given by Winslow to the temporo-maxillary articulation, because, according to that anatomist, it partakes both of ginglymus and arthrodia.

AMPHION, Maslach.

AMPHIMERINOS, Quotidian.

AMPHIPLEX, Perinæum.

AMPHISMELA, Knife, double-edged.

AMPHISMILE, Knife, double-edged.

AMPHISPHAL'SIS, Circumductio, Circumductio, from αμφι, 'around,' and σφαλλα, 'I wander.' The movement of circumduction used in reducing luxations.—Hippoc.

AMPHRODIPLOPIA, Diplopia.

AMPHORA, per syncope. for αμφιφορευς, from αμφι, 'on both sides,' and φορεω, 'I bear:' because it had two handles. A liquid measure among the ancients, containing above 7 gallons. Also called Quadrantal, Ceramium, Ceramium, Cadus.

AMPHORIC RESPIRATION. See Cavernous Respiration.

AMPLEXATIO, Coition.

AMPLIOPEA, Amblyopia.

AMPOSIS, Anaposis.

AMPOULES, Essera.

AMPULLA, Cavitas elliptica—a. Chylifera seu chyli, Receptaculum chyli.

AMPULLÆ, Phlyctæna.

AMPUTA'TION, Amputatio, from αμπτύω, 'to cut off.' Apo'tomē, Apotomia. The operation of separating, by means of a cutting instrument, a limb or a part of a limb, or a projecting part, as the mamma, penis, &c., from the rest of the body. In the case of a tumour, the term excision, removal, or extirpation, (F) Resection, is more commonly used.

CIRCULAR AMPUTATION is that in which the integuments and muscles are divided circularly.

The FLAP AMPUTATION, (F) A. à lambeaux, is when one or two flaps are left so as to cover the stump, when the limb has been removed.

JOINT AMPUTATION, (F) A. dans l'article ou

dans la contiguité des membres, is when the limb is removed at an articulation.

Each amputation requires a different process, which is described in works on operative surgery.

AMULETTE, Amuletum.

AMULETUM, from Amoli'ri, 'to remove.' An Amulet,—Periam'na, Apotropæum, Periur'pton, Phylact'eron, Spoteles'na, Exarte'na, Alexica'cum, (F) Amulette. Any image or substance worn about the person for the purpose of preventing disease or danger.

AMURCA, αμοργη. The marc or grounds remaining after olives have been crushed and deprived of their oil. It has been used as an application to ulcers.

AMUSA, Musa Paradisiaca.

AMYCHE, Excoriation, Scarification.

AMYC'TICA, from αμυσσα, 'I lacerate.' Medicines, which stimulate and vellicate the skin.—Cælius Aurelianus.

AMYDRIASIS, Mydriasis.

AMYE'LIA, from a privative, and μυελος, 'marrow.' A monstrous formation, in which there is an absence of spinal marrow.

AMYGDALA, same etymon as Amyctica; because there seem to be fissures on the shell. The almond, of which there are two kinds; is the Amygdala amara and A. dulces, (F) Amandes douces, A. amères, obtained from two varieties of the Amygdalus communis; or A. sativa, a native of Barbary. Nat. Ord. Amygdalæ. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Monogynia.

The taste of the Amygdala dulcis is soft and sweet; that of the A. amara, bitter. Both yield, by expression, a sweet, bland oil. The bitter almond contains Prussic acid. They are chiefly used for forming emulsions.

ALMOND CAKE, Amygdala Placenta, is the cake left after the expression of the oil. The ground Almond Cake, Almond Powder, Fari'na Amygdalarum, is used instead of soap for washing the hands.

ALMOND PASTE, a cosmetic for softening the skin and preventing chaps, is made of bitter almonds, blanched,  $\frac{3}{4}$  iv, white of one egg; rose water, and rectified spirit, equal parts, or as much as is sufficient.

AMYGDALA, Tonsil.

AMYGDALÆ, Tonsil.

AMYGDALÆ PLACENTA. See Amygdala.

AMYGDALATUM, Emulsio Amygdalæ.

AMYGDALITIS, Cynanche tonsillaril.

AMYGDALUS PER'SICA. The common peach-tree, (F) Pêches. The leaves and flowers have been considered laxative. They are bitter and aromatic, and have been given in hæmaturia, nephritis, &c. The fruit is one of the pleasant and wholesome summer fruits, when ripe. The kernels, Amygdala Per'sica, contain prussic acid, as well as the flowers.

PEACH BRANDY is distilled from the fruit, and is much used in the United States.

AMYGDALUS. See Amygdala.

AMYGMOS, Scarification.

AMYLEON, Amylum.

AMYLUM, Am idum, Fec'ula, Amyl'con, Amyl'ion, from a priv., and μυλη, 'a mill,' because made without a mill. Starch. (F) Amidon, Amydon. The Starch of Wheat, Fari'na, Trit'ici fari'na, Fec'ula amylica, is inodorous and insipid, white and friable. It is insoluble in cold water and alcohol; but forms with boiling water a strong, semi-transparent jelly. It is demulcent, and is used as an emollient glyster, and as the vehicle for opium, when given per anum. Starch is met with abundantly in all the cereal grains, in the stalks of many of the palms, in some lichens, and in many tuberos roots, particularly in the bulbs of the orchis.

AMYLUM IODATUM. See Iodine.

AMYON, from a priv. and μῦον, 'a muscle.' Emuscula'tus, without muscle. Applied to the limbs, when so extenuated that the muscles cannot be distinguished.

AMYOSIS, Synecyria.

AMYRIS ELEMIFERA, (F) Balsamier Elmifere. Nat. Ord. Terebinthaceæ, Sex. Syst. Octandria Monogynia. The plant whence, it is supposed, the GUM EL'EMI is obtained. This gum or resin is brought from the Spanish West Indies. It is softish, transparent, of a pale whitish colour, inclining a little to green, and of a strong, though not unpleasant smell. It is only used in ointments and plasters, and is a digestive.

AMYRIS OPOBAL'SAMUM, (F) Balsamier de la Mecque, Bal'sem, Bal'samum. The plant from which is obtained the BALSAM OF MECCA. Bal'samum genuinum antiquorum, Balsame-læon, Ægyptiacum Bal'samum, Bal'samum Asiaticum, B. Judaicum, B. Syriacum, B. c Meccæ, Coccolbal'samum, B. Alpinum, Oleum Bal'sami, Opoal'samum, Xylobal'samum, Balsam or Balm of Gilead. (F) Bamme blanc, B. de Constantiople blanc, B. de Galaad, B. du Grand Caïre, B. Vrai, Térébinthine de Gilead, T. d'Egypte, T. du Grand Caïre, T. de Judée. A resinous juice obtained by making incisions into the Amiris Gileadensis of Linnæus. The juice of the fruit is called Carpobal'samum; that of the wood and branches Xylobal'samum. It has the general properties of the milder Terebinthates.

AMYRON, Carthamus tinctorius.

AMYXIS, Scarification.

ANA, ana, a word which signifies 'of each.' It is used in prescriptions as well as ā and āā, its abbreviations. As a prefix to words, it means 'in,' 'through,' 'upwards,' 'above,' in opposition to cata, (q. v.); also 'repetition,' like the English re. Hence,—

ANABASIS, from αναβαίνω, 'I ascend.' The first period of a disease, or that, of increase.—Galen. See Augmentation.

ANABEXIS, Expectoration.

ANABLEP'SIS, from ana, 'again,' and βλεπω, 'I see.' Restoration to sight.

ANABOLE'ON, Anabolens, from αναβαλλω, 'I cast up.' An ointment for extracting darts or other extraneous bodies.

ANABOLE, from ana, 'upwards,' and βαλλω, 'I cast.' Anagoge, Anaph'ora. An evacuation upwards. An act by which certain matters are rejected by the mouth. In common acceptation it includes, Expuition, expectoration, regurgitation, and vomiting.

ANABROCHIS'MUS, Anabronchis'mus, from ana, 'with,' and βροχίς, 'a running knot.' An operation for removing the eye-lashes when they irritate the eye, by means of a hair knotted around them.—Hippocr., Galen, Celsus, &c.

ANABRONCHISMUS, Anabronchismus.

ANABROSIS, Corrosion, Erosion.

ANACAMPSEROS, Sedum telephium.

ANACARDIUM OCCIDENTALE. Cassurium pomiferum. (F) Ac'ajou, Cashew (W. Indies) Nat. Ord. Terebinthaceæ, Sex. Syst. Enneandria Monogynia. The Oil of the Cashew Nat., O'leum Anacar'dii, (F) Huile d'Acajou, is an active caustic, and used as such in the countries where it grows, especially for destroying warts, &c.

ANACARDIUM ORIENTALE, Avicennia tomentosa.

ANACATHAR'SIS, from ανα, 'upwards,' and καθαίρειν, 'to purge.' Purgation upwards. Expectoration. (q. v.) See, also, Repurgatio.

ANACATHARSIS CATARRHALIS SIMPLEX, Catarrh.

ANACATHARTICUS, Expectoant.

ANACHREMP'SIS, Exspuition.

ANACHRON, Soda.

ANACLASIS, Repercussion.

ANACLINTE'RIMUM, Recubito'rium, from ανακλινω, 'I recline.' A long chair or seat, so formed, that the person can rest in a reclining posture.

ANACOLLE'MA, from ανα, 'together,' and κollaω, 'I glue.' A healing medicine.

ANACOLLE'MATA, Frontal bandages.

ANACOLUP'PA, a creeping plant of Malabar, the juice of which, mixed with powdered pepper, passes in India as a cure for epilepsy, and as the only remedy for the bite of the naja. It is supposed to be the Zapania Nodiflora.

ANACOMIDE, Restauratio.

ANACONCHYLISMOS, Gargarism.

ANACTESIS, Restauratio.

ANACTIRION, Artemisia.

ANACYCLEON, Charlatan.

ANADESMUS, Fascia.

ANADIPLO'SIS, from ανα, 'again,' and διπλαω, 'I double.' Epanadiplo'sis, Epanalep'sis, Reduplicatio. The redoubling which occurs in a paroxysm of an intermittent, when its type is double.—Galen, Alexander of Tralles.

ANADORA, Ecdora.

ANAD'OSIS, from αναδίδωμι, 'I distribute.' Purgation upwards, as by vomiting. Anadosis seems also to have meant, occasionally, chyli-fication, whilst diadosis meant capillary nutrition.—Hippocr., Galen.

ANAD'ROME, from ανα, 'upwards,' and δρεμω, 'I run.' The transport of a humour or pain from a lower to an upper part.—Hippocr.

ANÆMANSIS, Anæmia.

ANÆMATOPOE'SIS, from a, an, privative, αίμα, 'blood,' and ποιεω, 'I make.' Impeded or obstructed hæmatisis.

ANÆ'MIA, Anæmasis, Anahæ'mia, Polyan-hæ'mia, Anæmo'sis, Olighæ'mia, Anæ'mia, αναίμα, from a priv. and αίμα, 'blood.' Privation of blood. The opposite to plethora (q. v.) It is characterized by every sign of debility. Also, diminished quantity of fluids in the capillary vessels:—the opposite to Hyperæmia.—Andraël.

ANÆMOSIS, Anæmia.

ANÆSTHES'IA, Insensibil'itas, Anaph'ia, Anaph'ia, Analgé'sia, from a priv. and αισθηγομαι, 'I feel.' Privation of sensation, and especially of that of touch, according to some. It may be general or partial, and is almost always symptomatic.

ANÆSTHISIA, Insensibility.

ANAGAL'LIS, from αν and γαλα, 'milk,' from its power of coagulating milk. A. Phœnic'ca, Red Pimpernel. Nat. Ord. Primulaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. (F) Mouron rouge. A common European plant; a reputed antispasmodic and stonachic.

ANAGALLIS AQUATICA, Veronica Beccabunga.

ANAGARGALICTA, Gargarism.

ANAGARGARISTON, Gargarism.

ANAGLYPIE, Calamus scriptorius.

ANAGOGE, Anabole, Rejection.

ANAGRAPHÉ, Prescription.

ANAG'YRIS, Ac'opon, Anag'yris fat'ida, Stinking Bean Trefoil. Native of Italy. The leaves are powerfully purgative. The juice is said to be diuretic, and the seeds emetic.—Dioscorides, Paulus.

ANAL, An'dlis. That which refers to the anus;—as Anal region, &c.

ANALEMSIA, Analepsia.

ANALENTIA, Analepsia.

ANALEP'SIA, Analep'sis, Analc'ntia, Analem'sia, from αν, 'afresh,' and λαμβάνειν, 'to take.' Restoration to strength after disease.—Galen. A kind of sympathetic epilepsy, originating from gastric disorder. See Epilepsy.

Also, the support given to a fractured extremity. Appensio.—Hippocr.

ANALEP'SIS, Restauratio.

ANALEP'TICA, same etymon; Analep'tics. Restorative medicines or food; such as are adapted to recruit the strength during convalescence:—as sago, salep, tapioca, jelly, &c.

JAMES'S ANALEPTIC PILLS consist of James's Powder, Gum Ammoniacum, and Pill of Aloës and Myrrh, equal parts, with Tincture of Castor sufficient to form a mass.

ANALGE'SIA, from α priv. and αλγος 'pain.' Absence of pain both in health and disease. See Anæsthesia.

ANALOGOUS TISSUES, see Tissues.

ANALOSIS, Atrophy.

ANALTESIS, Restauratio.

ANAMNES'TIC, from ανα, 'again,' and μνᾶσμαι, 'I remember.' A medicine for improving the memory. See, also, Commemorative.

ANANAS, Bromelia ananas—a. Acostæ ovatæ, &c., Bromelia ananas—a. Americana, Bromelia pinguin—a. wild, broad-leaved, Bromelia pinguin.

ANANAZIP'TA, a word formerly scrawled on amulets to charm away disease.

ANAPET'YA, Expansio med'tuum, from ανα, and πεταω, 'I dilate.' A state opposite to the closure of vessels.—Galen.

ANAPHALANTY'ASIS, from αναφαλαντιας, 'bald.' Loss of the hair of the eyebrows. Also, baldness in general.

ANAPHIA, see Anæsthesia.

ANAPHONE'SIS, from ανα, 'high,' and φωνη, 'the voice.' Exercise of the voice: vociferation:—the act of crying out. Vociferatio, Clamor.

ANAPHORA, Anabole.

ANAPHRODIS'IA, from α priv. and Αφροδιστη, 'Venus.' Absence of the venereal appetite. Sometimes used for Impotence and Sterility.

ANAPHROMELI, Mel despumatum.

ANAP'LASIS, from αναπλασσω, 'I restore.' Confirmatio. Union or consolidation of a fractured bone.—Hippocr.

ANAPLERO'SIS, from αναπληρωω, 'I fill up.' Repletion. That part of Surgical Therapeutics whose object is to supply parts that are wanting. Also, Apposition or Pros'thesis, περοσθεσις.

ANAPLERO'TICUS, Incarnans.

ANAPLEU'SIS, Fluctuatio, Innatio, from αναπλειν, 'to swim above.' The looseness or shaking of an exfoliated bone; or of a carious or other tooth, &c.—Hippocr., Paulus.

ANAPNEUSIS, Respiration.

ANAP'OSIS, Amposis, from ανα, 'again,' and ποσις, 'drink.' A recession of humours from the circumference to the centre of the body.—Hippocr.

ANAPSE, Auante.

ANAPSLA, Cœcitas.

ANAPTYSIS, Expectoration.

ANARRHEGNU'MINA, from αναρρηγνυμαι, 'I break out again.' Fractures are so called when they become disunited; as well as ulcers when they break out afresh.

ANARRHI'NON, from ανα, 'upwards,' and γειν, 'the nose.' That which returns by the nose.—Gorræus.

According to others, that which issues by the skin, from ανα, and μινος, 'the skin.'

ANARRHCE'A, Anarrh'opia, Anas'tasis, from ανα, 'upwards,' and εωω, 'I flow.' Afflux of fluid towards the upper parts of the body.

ANARRHOPIA, Anarrhœa.

ANAR'THROS, αναρθρος, from α priv. and αρθρον, 'a joint.' One who is so fat, that his joints are scarcely perceptible.—Hippocrates.

ANASAR'CA, from ανα, 'through,' and σαρξ, 'the flesh.' Anasarch'a, Aqua intercutem, Hyposar'ca, Hydrops cellulæris totius corporis, General dropsy, Katasar'ca, Episarcid'ium, Hydrosar'ca, Sarci'tes, Polylym'phia, Hyposarcid'ios, Leucophlegmatia, Dropsy of the cellular membrane. (F) Anasarcuc. Commonly, it begins to manifest itself by swelling around the ancles: and is characterized by tumefaction of the limbs and of the soft parts covering the abdomen, thorax, and even the face, with paleness and dryness of the skin, and pitting when any of these (especially the ancles) are pressed upon. Like dropsy in general, Anasarca may be active or passive; and its treatment must be regulated by the rules that are applicable to general dropsy. See Hydrops.

ANASARCA HYSTERICUM, Anathymiasis—a. Serosa, Phlegmatia dolens.

ANASAR'CHA, Anasarca.

ANASAR'QUE, Anasarca.

ANASPADLÆ'US, Anaspadias, from ανα, 'upwards,' and σπαω, 'I draw.' One whose urethra opens on the upper surface of the penis.

ANAS'PASIS, from ανασπασω, 'I contract.' Contraction, Retractio, especially of the stomach.—Hippocrates.

ANASSA, Bromelia ananas.

ANASTALTICA, Styptics.

ANASTASIS, Anarrhœa.

ANASTŒCHEIOSIS, from ανα, 'again,' and στοιχειον, 'element.' Re-clementatio. Resolution of a body or its parts into their elements.—Galen.

ANASTOMOSIS, from ανα, 'with,' and στομαχ, 'a mouth.' Inosculation, Exanastomosis, Concur'sus. (F) Abouchement. Communication between two vessels. By considering the nerves to be channels, in which a nervous fluid circulates, their communication has likewise been called Anastomosis. By means of anastomoses, if the course of a fluid be arrested in one vessel, it can proceed along others.

ANASTOMOSIS, JACOBSON'S, see Petrosal ganglion.

ANASTOMOTICS, Anastomotica. Certain medicines were so called, which were formerly believed to be capable of opening the mouths of vessels:—as aperients, diuretics, &c.

ANASTOMOTICUS MAGNUS, RAMUS, (F) Artère collatérale interne, A. collatérale du coude, is a branch of the brachial artery which comes off a little above the elbow, and bestows branches to the brachialis internus, to the under edge of the triceps, and to the muscles, ligaments, &c. about the elbow-joint.

ANĀTASIS, Extension.

ANATHYMIASIS, from ανα, 'upwards,' and θυμα, 'fumigation.' Ede'ma fugax, edema spasticum, edema hysteriicum, Anasarca hysteriicum. An uncertain and transient swelling, said to have been at times observed in nervous and hysterical persons. It also means Exhalation, Fumigation, and Hypochondriasis, (which see.)

ANATOME ANIMATA, Physiology.

ANATOMIE, Anatomy.

ANATOMIA VIVA, Physiology.

ANATOMIST, Anatomicus. One who occupies himself with anatomy. One versed in Anatomy.

ANĀTOMY, Anatōmē, Anatōmia, from ανα, and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' (F) Anatomic.

The word Anatomy properly signifies dissection: but it has been appropriated to the study and knowledge of the number, shape, situation, structure, and connexion, in a word, of all the apparent properties of organized bodies. Anatomy is the science of organization. Some have given the term a still more extended acceptation, applying it to every mechanical decomposition, even of extra-organic bodies. Thus, Crystallography has been termed the Anatomy of crystallized minerals. Anatomy has also been called Morphology, Somatology, Somatology, Organology &c. It assumes different names according as the study is confined to one organized being, or to a species or class of beings. Thus Andrology, or Anthropology, or Anthropography, or Anthroposomatology, is the Anatomy of man:—Zoology, that of the other species of the animal kingdom: and Veterinary Anatomy, is the anatomy of domestic animals: but when the word is used abstractedly, it means human Anatomy, and particularly the study of the organs in a physiological or healthy state. The Anatomy of the diseased human body is called Pathological or Morbid Anatomy, and when applied to Medical Jurisprudence, Forensic Anatomy. Several of the organs possessing a similarity of structure, and being formed of the same tissues, they have been grouped into Systems or Genera of Organs; and the study of, or acquaintance with, such systems, has been called General Anatomy, Histology, or Morphology, whilst the study of each organ, in particular, has been termed Descriptive Anatomy. Descriptive Anatomy has been divided into Skeletology, which comprises Osteology and Synskeletalogy; and into Scrology, which is subdivided into Myology, Neurology, Angiology, Adenology, Splanchnology, and Dermatology. Surgical Anatomy, Medico-Chirurgical Anatomy, (F) Anatomic chirurgicale, A. des Régions, Topographical Anatomy, Regional (!) Anatomy, is the particular study of the bones, muscles, nerves, vessels, &c., with which it is indispensable to be acquainted before performing operations. Comparative Anatomy is the comparative study of each organ, with a view to an acquaintance with the modifications of its structure in different animals or in the different classes of animals. Transcendental or Philosophical Anatomy inquires into the mode, plan, or model upon which the animal frame or organs are formed; and Artificial Anatomy is the art of modelling and representing, in wax or other substance, the different organs or different parts of the human body, in the sound or diseased state.

ANATOMY, practical, see Dissection.

ANATON, Soda.

ANATREPSIS, Restauratio.

ANATRESIS, Perforation, Trepanning.

ANATRIBE, Friction.

ANATRIPSIS, Friction.

ANATRIPSOL'OGY, Anatrisol'gia, from ανατριψις, 'friction,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A treatise on friction as a remedy.

ANATRON, Soda.

ANATROPE, from ανα, 'upwards,' and τροπεα, 'I turn.' A subcrsion. A turning or subversion or inverted action of the stomach, characterized by nausea, vomiting, &c.—Galen. We still speak of the stomach turning against any thing.

ANAUDIA, Catalepsy, Mutitas.

ANAXYRIS, Rumex acetosa.

ANAZESIS, Ebullition.

ANAZOTURIA, see Urine.

ANCHA, Haunch.

ANCHILOPS, Egilops.

ANCHORALIS PROCESSUS, Coracoid.

ANCHUSA OFFICINA'LIS, Alca'na, Lingua Bovis, Buglossum sylvestre, Officinale or Garden Alkanet or Bugloss; Nat. Ord. Boraginæ, Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia, (F) Buglose; a native of Great Britain. The herb was formerly esteemed as a cordial in melancholia and hypochondriasis; but it is now rarely used. It is also called Buglossa, Buglossum angustifolium majus, B. vulgare majus, B. sativum.

ANCHUSA TINCTORIA, Alcan'na, spuria, Dyer's Bugloss, Ancibium, Buglossum Tincturum, Lithospermum villosum, Dyer's Alkanet, (F) Oycanette; a European plant. The medical properties are equivocal. It is used to give a beautiful red colour to ointments.

ANCHYLOSIS, Ankylosis.

ANCYSTRON, Hamulus.

ANCOLIE, Aquilegia vulgaris.

ANCON, Elbow, Olecranon.

ANCONÉ, Anconcus.

ANCONÉUS, from ἀγκων, 'the elbow.' A term once applied to every muscle attached to the olecranon. Winslow distinguished four:—the great, external, internal, and small; the three first being portions of the same muscle, the triceps brachialis. The last has, alone, retained the name. It is the Anconéus minor of Winslow: the Anconéus vel Cubitalis RIGLA'NI of Douglass: the Epicou'dylo-Cubitalis of Chaussier: the Brevis Cubiti (F) Anconé, and is situate at the upper and back part of the forearm. It arises from the external condyle of the os humeri, and is inserted into the posterior edge of the upper third of the ulna. Its use is to aid in the extension of the fore-arm.

ANCONÉUS EXTERNUS, see Triceps extensor cubiti—a. Internus, see Triceps extensor cubiti.—a. Major, see Triceps extensor cubiti.

ANCTERES, Fibulae or Clasps, by which the lips of wounds were formerly kept together.—Celsus, Galen.

ANCTERIASMUS, Infibulation.

ANCU'BITUS, Petrifactio. An affection of the eye, in which there is a sensation as if sand was irritating the organ.

ANCUNULEN'T.E. A name formerly given, according to James, to females during menstruation, who were regarded as unclean.

ANCUS. Ankus, from ἀγκων, 'the elbow.'

Also, the deformity resulting from a luxation of the humerus or fore-arm.—Hippocr.

ANCYLE, Ankylosis.

ANCYLOBLEPHARON, Ankyloblepharon.

ANCYLOGLOSSUM, Ankyloglossum.

ANCYLOMELE, Ankylolemele.

ANCYLOMERISMUS, Ankylomerismus.

ANCYLOSIS, Ankylosis.

ANCYLOTOMUS, Ankylotomus.

ANCYRA, Hook.

ANCYROIDES PROCESSUS, Coracoid.

ANDA. A tree of Brazil. Anda Gomesii, Joannesia princeps. Nat. Order, Euphorbiacæ. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Monadelphia. An oil is obtained from the seeds by pressure, 50 to 60 drops of which act as a cathartic. The fruit is an oval nut, containing two seeds. These have the taste of the chestnut; but are strongly cathartic, and even emetic. The shell is astringent, and used as such in diarrhœa, &c.

ANDELY, MINERAL WATERS OF. A. is in France, near Gysore, and 8 leagues from Rouen. The water is a cold and weak chalybeate. It is used in chlorosis and abdominal obstructions.

ANDIRA INERMIS, Geoffræa inermis—a. Surinamensis, Geoffræa surinamensis.

ANDRACHAHARA, Sempervivum tectorum.

ANDRACHNE, Arbutus unedo, Portulaca.

ANDRANOT'OMIA. Andranat'omē, Androt'omia, Androt'ome, Anthropol'omy, from ἀνδρ, genitive ἀνδρῶς, 'a man,' and τεμνωμιν, 'to cut.' The anatomy of man.

ANDRI'A, Adult age.

ANDRI'A MULLIER. Mullier Hermaphroditi'ca. A female hermaphrodite.

ANDROGENI'A, from ἀνδρ, 'man,' and γενεσις, 'generation.' The procreation of males.—Hippocr.

ANDROG'YNUUS, from ἀνδρ, 'a man,' and γυνή, 'a woman.' An hermaphrodite. An effeminate person.—Hippocr.

ANDROMANIA, Nymphomania.

ANDROM'EDA MARIA'NA. Broad-leaved Moorwort. A decoction of this American plant is said to have been successfully employed as a wash, in a disagreeable affection,—not uncommon amongst the slaves in the southern parts of the United States,—called the Toe Itch, and Ground Itch.—Barton.

ANDROPOGON CHCENANTHUS, Juncus odoratus—a. Nardus, Calamus Alexandrinus, Nardus Indica.

ANDROSACE, Umbilicus marinus—a. Malthioli, Umbilicus marinus.

ANDROSÆMUM, Hypericum perforatum.

ANDROTOMY, Andranatomia.

ANDRUM. An Indian word, latinized by Kæmpfer, signifying a kind of elephantiasis of the scrotum, endemic in southern Asia.

ANÉANTISSEMENT, (F) Virium extinctio. This word is often employed hyperbolically by patients, in France, to signify excessive fatigue, debility, or syncope.

ANÉBIUM, Anchusa Tinctoria.

ANEBUS, Impuber.

ANECPYE'TUS, from ἀν, for ἀνεω, 'without,' and πυνω, 'I promote suppuration.' That which does not suppurate, or is not likely to suppurate.

ANEGER'TICE, from ἀνεγερσις, 'I awaken.' The art of resuscitating the apparently dead.

ANEILE'MA, Anile'cisis, from ἀνιλεσθαι, 'to be rolled upwards.' Applied particularly to the motion of air in the intestines and the tormina accompanying it.—Hippocr.

ANEILESIS, Anilema.

ANEMIA. Anæmia.

ANEMO'NE. The Wind Flower, from ἀνεμος, 'the wind,' because it does not open its flowers till blown upon by the wind.

ANÉMONE DES BOIS, Anemone nemorosa.

ANEMO'NE HEPAT'ICA, Hepat'ica nobilis, Herba Trinitatis, Hepat'ica or Herb Trinity, Hepat'icus Flos, Trifolium Hepaticum, Anem'ony. The plant is a mild astringent and tonic. Dose, ℥j of the powder. It may be given in infusion.

ANEMO'NE NEMORO'SA, Ranunculus albus, Wood anem'ony. (F) Anémone des bois. The herb and flowers are poisonous, acrid, and corrosive. They have been used as rubefacients.

ANEMO'NE PRATEN'SIS, Pulsatilla nigricans. This plant has similar properties with the last. It is also called Meadow Anemony. (F) Pulsatille noire, P. des prés.

The ANEMO'NE PULSATIL'LA, Pulsatilla vulgaris, Herba ventis, Nola culinaria, Pasque flower, (F) Coquelourde, possesses like properties.

ANEMONY, Anemone hepatica—a. Meadow, Anemone pratensis—a. Wood, Anemone nemorosa.

ANEMOS, Wind.

ANENCEPH'ALUS, from ἀ priv. and εγκέφαλος, 'brain.' A monster devoid of brain.—Bonetus. Also, one that has a part only of the brain. Paraceph'alus. A weak, silly person.—Hippocr.

ANEPITHYMIA, from ἀ priv. and επιθυμία, 'desire.' Many Nosologists have used this word for a loss of the appetites; as of those of hunger, thirst, venery, &c.

ANEPHITHYMA CHLOROSIS, Chlorosis.

ANERETHISIA, Inirritabilitas, from a priv. and ερεθισις, 'irritability.' Defect of irritability.—Swediaur.

ANESIS, Remission.

ANESON, Anethum.

ANESUM, Pimpinella anisum.

ANET, Anethum.

ANETH, Anethum graveolens.

ANETHUM. Aneson, Aneton, Anethum Fœniculum, Fœniculum, F. Dulcè, Ligusticum fœniculum, Fennel or Finckle, Mar'athrum, Anet, Sweet Fennel, (F) Fenouil ou Anis doux. Nat. Ord. Umbelliferae. Scz. Syst. Pentandria. Dignia. The seeds have an aromatic odour, and warm, sweetish taste. They are carminative. The root is said to be pectoral and diuretic.

ANETHUM FENICULUM, Anethum.

ANETHUM GRAVEOLENS, A. hortense, Dill, Anethum. (F) Aneth, Fenouil puant. A native of the south of Europe. The seeds are stimulant and carminative. Dose, gr. xv to ʒj.

The OLEUM ANETHI, or Oil of Dill, (F) Huile d'Aneth, possesses the carminative properties of the plant.

ANETICUS, Anodyne.

ANETON, Anethum.

ANETUS, Intermittent fever—a. Quartanus, Quartan—a. Quotidianus, Quotidian—a. Tertianus, Tertian fever.

ANEURISM, An'curysm, Aneuris'ma, from ανυγειναι, 'to dilate or distend.' Dilatatio Arteriarum, Ectasia, Emboris'ma, Exang'u aneuris'ma, Absces'sus spiritu'sus, Arteriectasis, (F) Anévrysme, Aneurysme. Properly, Aneurism signifies a tumour, produced by the dilatation of an artery; but it has been extended to various lesions of arteries, as well as to dilatations of the heart.

There are various kinds of aneurism. The following are the chief.

I. When the blood, which forms the tumour, is enclosed within the dilated coats of the artery. This is the true aneurism, Aneuris'ma verum, Hernia Arteriarum. (F) Anévrysme vrai.

II. When the blood has escaped from the opened artery, it is called spurious or false aneurism, Aneuris'ma spurium, Ruptura Arteriae, Arteriorrhæxis, Arteriodiasthesis, Ecchymoma arteriosum. (F) Anévrysme faux. The latter is divided into three varieties.

1. The diffused false aneurism, (F) Anévrysme faux, primitif, diffus, noncirconscrit, ou par infiltration, which occurs immediately after the division or rupture of an artery, and consists of an extravasation of blood into the cellular texture of the part.

2. The circumscribed false aneurism, (F) A. faux consécutif, circonscrit ou par épanchement, enkysté ou succiforme, tumeur hémorrhagiale circonscrite, in which the blood issues from the vessel, sometime after the receipt of the wound, and forms itself a sac in the neighbouring cellular membrane.

3. The Aneurism by Anastomosis, or Varicose Aneurism, Phlebarteriodiasthesis, Aneurisma venoso-arteriosum, A. varicosum, (F) An- évrysme par Anastomose ou variqueux, A. par Erosion, A. de Port, A. des plus petites artères, is that which arises from the simultaneous wounding of an artery and vein: the arterial blood passing into the vein, and producing a varicose state of it.

III. Mixed Aneurism, (F) Anévrysme mixte, is that which arises from the dilatation of one or two of the coats, with division or rupture of the other. Some authors have made two varieties of this.

1. Mixed external Aneurism, where the internal and middle coats are ruptured, and the cellular is dilated.

2. Mixed internal Aneurism, in which the internal coat is dilated, and protrudes, like a hernial sac, through the ruptured middle and outer coats. This variety has been called Aneuris'ma Herniam Artèriæ sistens.

Aneurisms have been likewise termed Traumatic and Spontaneous, according as they may have been caused by a wound, or have originated spontaneously. They have also been divided into internal and external.

The internal aneurisms are situate in the great splanchnic cavities, and occur in the heart and great vessels of the chest, abdomen, &c. Their diagnosis is difficult, and they are often inaccessible to surgical treatment.

The external aneurisms are situate at the exterior of the head, neck, and limbs, and are distinctly pulsatory.

Aneurisms, especially the internal, may be combated by a debilitating treatment, on the plan of VALSALVA, which consists in repeated blood-letting, with food enough merely to support life. In external aneurism the artery can be obliterated. This is usually done by applying a ligature above the aneurismatic tumour.

A DISSECTING ANEURISM is one in which owing to rupture of the inner coat of an artery, the blood makes itself a channel between the coats or between the laminae composing them.

Aneurisms of the Heart, Cardion'chi, Cardienrys'ma, (F) Anévrysmes du cœur, have been divided into active and passive. The former can scarcely be esteemed aneurisms, as they most commonly consist of increased thickness of the parietes of the heart, which diminishes its cavity instead of increasing it. The term, Hypertrophy of the heart, (q. v.) better indicates their character. Passive aneurisms, on the contrary, are attended with extenuation of the parietes of the organ, and enlargement of the cavities. The physical signs of dilatation of the heart are the following.—The action of the heart is not visible, and no impulse is conveyed to the hand. On percussion, there is a loss of resonance over a larger surface than usual, but the dulness is much less intense than that which accompanies hypertrophy. On auscultation, the action of the heart is only slightly felt, and communicates at once the impression of its diminished power. The impulse is feebler than usual. Both sounds are widely transmitted over the thorax, and are not much fainter at a distance from their point of origin.

ANEURISMAL, Aneurys'mal, Aneurismat'ic, Aneurismal'is. That which belongs to Aneurism.

The ANEURISMAL SAC or CYST, (F) Sac ou

Kyste anévrysmal, is a sort of pouch, formed by the dilatation of the coats of an artery, in which the blood, forming the aneurismal tumour, is contained.

ANEURISMATIC, Aneurismal.

ANEURYSME, Aneurism.

ANEURYSMUS, Dilatation.

ANÉVRYSMÉ, Aneurism.

ANFION, Maslach.

ANFRACTUOSITÉS CÉRÉBRALES, Anfractuosités, cerebral—a. Ethmoïdales, see Anfractuosity.

ANFRACTUOSITY, Anfractus, Gyrus, a groove or furrow. Used in anatomy to signify sinuous depressions, of greater or less depth, like those which separate the convolutions of the brain from each other.

These CEREBRAL ANFRACTUOSITIES, Anfractus Cerebri, Gyri Cerebri, Intestinula Cerebri, (F) Anfractuosités Cérébrales, are always narrow, and deeper at the upper surface of the brain than at its base; and are lined by a prolongation of the pia mater.

The Ethmoid Cells are, sometimes, called Anfractuosités ethmoïdales.

ANFRACTUS, Anfractuosity—a. Cerebri, Anfractuosités (cerebral).

ANGIEOGRAPHY or ANGIOGRAPHY, Angiographia, from αγγειον, 'a vessel,' and γραφω, 'a description.' The anatomy of the vessels.

ANGIEOHYDROGRAPHY, Angiohydrography, Angieondrography, Angieohydrographia, from αγγειον, 'a vessel,' υδωρ, 'water,' and γραφω, 'I describe.' A treatise on the lymphatics.

ANGIEOHYDROTOMY, Angiohydrotomy, Angieondrotomy, Angieohydrotomia, from αγγειον, 'a vessel,' υδωρ, 'water,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' Dissection of the lymphatics.

ANGIOLEUCITIS, Lymphangectis, from αγγειον, 'a vessel,' λευκος, 'white,' and itis, inflammation, (F) Inflammation des tissus blancs. Inflammation of the lymphatics: lymphatic or serofolous inflammation.

ANGIEOLOGY, Angiologgy, Angieologgia, from αγγειον, 'a vessel,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A description of the vessels. The anatomy of the vessels. It includes Arteriologgy, Phlebologgy, and Angieohydrology.

ANGEION, Vessel.

ANGIEONDROGRAPHY, Angieohydrography.

ANGIEONDROTOMY, Angieohydrotomy.

ANGIEOPATHIA, from αγγειον, 'a vessel,' and παθος, 'a disease.' Disease of the vessels.

ANGIEORRHAGIA, Hæmorrhagia activa.

ANGIEOSTEOSIS, Angiostosis, from αγγειον, 'a vessel,' and οσσεωσις, 'ossification.' Ossification of vessels.

ANGIEOTOMY, Angiotomy, Angieotomia, from αγγειον, 'a vessel,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' Dissection of the vessels.

ANGELICA. So called from its supposed angelic virtues. Angelica Archangelica, Nat. Ord. Umbelliferae, Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. Native of Lapland. Garden Angelica. (F) Angélique, Racine de Saint Esprit. The roots, stalk, leaves, and seed are aromatic and carminative. A sweetmeat is made of the root, which is agreeable.

ANGELICA SYLVES'TRIS, A sati'va. Wild Angelica, (F) Angélique sauvage. It possesses similar properties to the last, but in an inferior degree. The seeds, powdered and put into the hair, are used to destroy lice.

ANGELICA TREE, Aralia spinosa—a. Sylvestris, Ligusticum podagrarum.

ANGELINÆ CORTEX. The bark of a Grenada tree, which has been recommended as an anthelmintic and cathartic.

ANGÉLIQUE, Angelica—a. Sauvage, Angelica sylvestris.

ANGELOCACOS, Myrobalanus.

ANGIECTASIA VENOSA, Varix.

ANGIECTASIS, from αγγειον, 'a vessel,' and εκτασις, 'dilatation.' Any dilatation of vessels.—Grafe and Alibert.

ANGYNA, Febris Anginosa, from angre, 'to suffocate.' Quinsy or Sore throat, Isthmitis. Inflammation of the supra-diaphragmatic portion of the alimentary canal, and of the air-passages. The Latin writers applied the term to every disease in which deglutition or respiration, separately or united, was affected, provided that such affection was above the stomach and lungs.—Boerhaave speaks of the angina of the moribund, which is nothing more than the dysphagia or difficult deglutition preceding death.—See Cyananche.

ANGINA APHTHOSA, Aphthæ—a. Bronchialis, Bronchitis—a. Canina, Cyananche trachealis—a. Epidemica, Cyananche maligna—a. Epiglottidea, Epiglottitis—a. Exudatoria, Cyananche trachealis—a. Externa, Cyananche parotidæa—a. Gangrænosa, Cyananche maligna—a. Inflammatoria, Cyananche, Cyananche trachealis—a. Laryngea, Laryngitis—a. Linguarum, Glossitis—a. Maligna, Cyananche maligna—a. Maxillaris, Cyananche parotidæa.

ANGINA NASALIS, Nasitis postica. An inflammation of the posterior portion of the Schneiderian membrane lining the nose.

THE ANGINA ŒDEMATOSA, (F) Angine œdémateuse, Œdème de la Glotte, is an œdematous swelling of the glottis; the effect of chronic cyananche laryngea.

ANGINA PAROTIDÆA EXTERNA, Cyananche parotidæa—a. Perniciosa, Cyananche trachealis—a. Polyposa sive membranacea, Cyananche trachealis.

THE ANGINA SICCA, (F) Angine sèche, is a chronic inflammation of the pharynx, with a distressing sense of dryness and heat, in chronic diseases of the stomach and lungs. See Pædanchone.

THE ANGINA SQUIRROSA, (F) Angine squirrueuse, consists in difficulty of deglutition, caused by scirrhus disorganization of the pharynx or œsophagus.

ANGINA PECTORIS, Sternalgia, Asthma spasmodico-articulicium inconstans, Sternodynia syncoptica et palpitans, Cardiognus Cordis sinistri, Asthma pectoralis, Agor pectoris, Stenocardia, Diaphragmatic gout, Asthma convulsivum, Asthma arthriticum, A. dolorificum, Syncope anginosa, (F) Angine de Poitrine. A disease, the precise pathology of which is not well known. The principal symptoms are, violent pain about the sternum, extending towards the arms; anxiety, dyspnoea, and sense of suffocation. It is an affection of great danger, being usually dependent upon ossification, or other morbid affection of the heart. The most powerful stimulating and narcotic antispasmodics are required during the paroxysm.

ANGINA PELLICULARIS, Diphtheritis, Diphtheritic Inflammation. A name recently given to those inflammations about the throat and elsewhere, in which exudations or false membranes are thrown out, during the phlogosis of mucous membranes. Aphtha, Tracheitis, when accompanied with the membraniform exudation, and Diarrhœa tubularis are, with some, specimens of diphtheritic inflammation.

ANGINA SUFFOCATORIA, Cynanche trachealis—a. Trachealis, Cynanche trachealis—a. Ulcerosa, Cynanche maligna—a. Uvularis, Staphylœdema, Uvulitis.

ANGINE GUTTURALE, Cynanche tonsillarum—a. Laryngée, Laryngitis—a. Pharyngée, Cynanche parotidæa—a. de Poitrine, Angina pectoris—a. Sèche, Angina sicca—a. Squirrhuse, Angina squirrosa—a. Tonsillaire, Cynanche tonsillarum.

ANGINEUX, Anginosus.

ANGINO'SA, (F) Angincuz. That which is accompanied with angina; as the Scarlatina angino'sa.

ANGIOGRAPHY, Angeiography.

ANGIOHYDROGRAPHY, Angeiohydrography.

ANGIOHYDROTOMY, Angeiohydrotomy.

ANGIOLOGY, Angeiology.

ANGIOPYRA, Synocha.

ANGIOTOSIS, Angeiostosis.

ANGIO'SIS, from αγγειον, 'a vessel.' Under this term, Alibert includes every disease of the blood-vessels.

ANGIOTENIC, Angeiotenic, Angiotenicus seu Angeiotenicus. From αγγειον, 'a vessel,' and τενω, 'to extend.' An epithet given to inflammatory fever, owing to its action seeming to be chiefly exerted on the vascular system.

ANGIOTOMY, Angeiotomy.

ANGLE, Angulus, from αγκυλις, 'a hook.' The space between two lines which meet in a point.

The FACIAL ANGLE, pointed out by Camper, is formed by the union of two lines, one of which is drawn from the most prominent part of the forehead to the alveolar edge of the upper jaw, opposite the incisor teeth, and the other from the meatus auditorius externus to the same point of the jaw. According to the size of this angle it has been attempted to appreciate the respective proportions of the cranium and face, and, to a certain extent, the degree of intelligence of individuals and of animals. In the white varieties of the species, this angle is generally 80°; in the negro not more than 70°, and sometimes only 65°. As we descend the scale of animals, the angle becomes less and less; until, in fishes, it nearly or entirely disappears. Animals, which have the snout long and facial angle small, are proverbially foolish; at least they are so esteemed, such as the snipe, crane, stork, &c., whilst intelligence is ascribed to those in which the angle is more largely developed, as the elephant and the owl. In these last animals, however, the large facial angle is caused by the size of the frontal sinuses:—so that this mode of appreciating the size of the brain is very inexact, and cannot be depended upon.

The following is a table of the angle in man and certain animals.

FACIAL ANGLES.

|             |           |                 |
|-------------|-----------|-----------------|
| Man         | - - - - - | from 65° to 85° |
| Sapajou     | - - - - - | 65              |
| Orang-Utang | - - - - - | 56 to 58        |
| Guenon      | - - - - - | 57              |
| Mandrill    | - - - - - | 30 to 42        |
| Coati       | - - - - - | 28              |
| Pole-cat    | - - - - - | 31              |
| Pug dog     | - - - - - | 35              |
| Mastiff     | - - - - - | 41              |
| Hare        | - - - - - | 30              |
| Ram         | - - - - - | 30              |
| Horse       | - - - - - | 23              |

The OPTIC ANGLE, (F) Angle optique, is the angle formed by two lines, which shave the extremities of an object, and meet at the centre of the pupil.

ANGOISSE, Angor.

ANGOLAM, a very tall Malabar tree, which possesses vermifuge properties.

AN'GONĒ, Præfoeditio Fau'cium, Globus hystericus, Orthopnœa hystericæ, Dysphægia globosa, D. hystericæ, Nervous Quinsey. A feeling of strangulation, with dread of suffocation. It is common in hysterical females, and is accompanied with a sensation as if a ball arose from the abdomen to the throat.

ANGOR, Anguish, (F) Angoisse. Extreme anxiety, accompanied with painful constriction at the epigastrium, and often with palpitation and oppression. It is frequently an unfavourable symptom.

ANGOR, Agony, also, Orthopnœa—a. Pectoris, Angina pectoris.

ANGOS, Bubo, Uterus, Vessel.

ANGOURION, Cucumis sativus.

ANGUIS, Serpent.

ANGUIISH, Angor.

ANGULAIRE DE L'OMOPLATE, Levator scapulae.

ANGULAR, Angula'ris, from angulus, 'an angle.' (F) Angulaire. That which relates to an angle.

The ANGULAR PROCESSES of the frontal bone are seated near the angles of the eyes. See Orbital.

ANGULAR ARTERY AND VEIN. A name given, 1. to the termination of the facial artery and vein, because they pass by the greater angle of the eye; and, 2. to the facial artery and vein themselves, because they pass under the angle of the jaw. See Facial.

The ANGULAR NERVE is a filament furnished by the inferior maxillary, which passes near the greater angle of the eye.

ANGULARIS, Levator scapulae.

ANGULI-SCAPULO-HUMERAL, Teres major.

ANGULUS OCULARIS, Canthus.

ANGURIA, Cucurbita citrullus.

ANGUSTATIO CORDIS, Systole.

ANGUSTIA ABDOMINALIS, Pelvis, (Brim)—a. Perinæalis, Pelvis (Outlet.)

ANGUSTURA, Cusparia febrifuga—a. Spuria, Brucea antidysenterica.

ANGUSTURE, FAUSSE, Brucea antidysenterica—a. Ferrugineuse, Brucea anti-dysenterica—a. Vraie, Cusparia febrifuga.

ANGUS'TIA, Angusta'tio, Stenoch'o'ria. Anxiety or constriction.

ANHEMATOSIA, Asphyxia.

ANHEMIA, Anæmia.

ANHELAT'IO, from anhe'lo, 'I pant.' Anhel'itus, Panting. (F) Essouflement. Anhelation. Short and rapid breathing. See Dyspnœa.

Anhelat'io is sometimes employed synonymously with Asthma.

ANHELITUS, Breath.

ANHIS'TOUS, from α, αν, 'privative,' and ἴστος, 'organic texture,' 'anorganic.' The tunica decidua uteri is termed by Velpeau the anhistous membræ.

ANHUIBA, Laurus sassafras.

ANICE'TON, Mesia'dum, from α privative, and νικη, 'victory,' 'invincible.' A plaster much extolled by the ancients in cases of achores. It was formed of litharge, cerusse, thus, alum, turpentine, white pepper, and oil.

ANIDRO'SIS, from α priv. and ἰδρῶς, 'sweat.' Sudor'is nullitas vel privat'io. Absence of sweat. Deficiency of perspiration.—Hippocr.

ANILITAS. See Dementia.

ANIMA, Ani'mus, Mens, Psyche, the mind, breath, &c., from ανεμος, 'wind or breath.' (F) Ame. The principle of the intellectual and moral manifestations. Also, the principle of life: the life of plants being termed An'ima vegetat'iva, (F) Ame végétative; that of man, An'ima sensiti'va, (F) Ame sensitive.

Under the term Anima Mundi, the ancient philosophers meant a universal Spirit, which they supposed spread over every part of the universe.

The precise seat of the mind in the brain has given rise to many speculations. The point is unsettled.

ANIMA ALOES: see Aloes—a. Articulorum, Hermodontylus—a. Hepatis, Ferri sulphas—a. Pulmonum, Crocus.

ANIMAL, ζῷον, from an'ima, 'the mind.' A name given to every animated being provided with digestive organs; even if such be merely a simple tube, as in the polypi. The greater part of animals have the power of locomotion; some can merely execute partial movements, such as contraction and dilatation. In other respects it is often a matter of difficulty to determine what is an animal characteristic. The study of animals is called Zoölogy.

ANIMAL, (adjective,) Animal'is. That which concerns, or belongs to, an animal.

THE ANIMAL KINGDOM, (F) Règne Animal, comprises all animated beings.

ANIMAL HEAT, Calor animal'is, Cal'idum animal'e, C. innat'um, Biolyel'uion, (F) Chaleur animale, is the caloric constantly secreted by the body of a living animal, by virtue of which it preserves nearly the same temperature, whatever may be that of the medium in which it is placed. This secretion seems to take place in the capillary system over the whole of the body, and to be connected with the action of nutrition.

The following are the natural temperatures of certain animals; that of man being 98° or 100°.

| ANIMALS.  | Temperatures. |
|---|---------------|
| Arctic fox, - - - - -   | 107           |
| Arctic wolf, - - - - -  | 105           |

ANIMAL/CULE, Animal'culum, a diminutive of animal. A small animal. An animal perceptible only by means of the microscope.

ANIMAL/CULIST, Animal'ist. One who attempts to explain different physiological or pathological phenomena by means of animalcules.

ANIMALIST, Animalculist.

ANIMALITY, Animal'itas. Qualities which distinguish that which is animated. That which constitutes the animal.

ANIMALIZATION, Animalisat'io. The transformation of the nutritive parts of food into the living substance of the body to be nourished.

ANIMA'TION, Zoo'sis, Anima'tio, from anima, 'the soul or mind.' The act of animating. The state of being enlivened.

ANIMATION, SUSPENDED, Asphyxia.

To ANIMATE, Anima're. To unite the living principle with an organized body. The French use it in the sense of,—to excite or render active; as, animer un vésicatoire: to excite a blister to suppurate.

ANIMÉ, Gum an'imé, Amina'a, Can'eamy, Gummi an'imé, Can'eanum. A resin obtained from the trunk of the Hymenæ'a cour'baril. It has been given as a cephalic and uterine. It is not used. The plant is also called Cour'baril.

ANIMÉ, (F) an epithet applied to the countenance, when florid, in health or disease.

ANIMELLÆ, Parotid.

ANIMI CASUS SUBITUS, Syncope—a. Deliquium, Syncope—a. Pathemata, Passions.

ANIMIST, from anima, 'the soul.' The Animists are those who, following the example of Stahl, refer all the phenomena of the animal economy to the soul.

The soul, according to Stahl, is the immediate and intelligent agent of every movement, and of every material change in the body. Stahl therefore concluded, that disease was nothing more than a disturbance or disorder in the government of the economy, or an effort by which the soul, attentive to every morbid cause, endeavoured to expel whatever might be deranging the habitual order of health.

ANIMÛS, Anima, Breath.

ANIS, Pimpinella anisum—a. Aigre, Cuminum cymium—a. de la Chine, Illicium anisatum—a. doux, Anethum—a. etoilé, Illicium anisatum.

ANISA'TUM, from Anisum, Anise. A sort of medicated wine, formerly prepared with honey, wine of Ascalon, and aniseed.

ANISCALPTOR, Latissimus dorsi.

ANISE PLANT, Pimpinella anisum.

ANISEED: see Pimpinella anisum—a. Trec, yellow flowered, Illicium anisatum.

ANISI SEMINA. See Pimpinella anisum.

ANISOT'HENES, Inæquali rob'ore pollens. That which is unequal in strength: from a priv. ισος, 'equal,' and σθενος, 'strength.' An epithet applied particularly to the muscular contractility, which, in the sick, is sometimes augmented in certain muscles only: in the flexors, for example.

ANISOT'ACHYS, from a priv. ισος, 'equal,' and ταχυς, 'quick.' An epithet for the pulse when at the same time quick and unequal.—Gorræus.

ANISUM, Pimpinella anisum—a. Africanum frutescens, Bubon Galbanum—a. Fruticosum Galbaniferum, Bubon galbanum—a. Sinense, Illicium anisatum—a. Stellatum, Illicium anisatum.

ANKLE, Astragalus, Malleolus.

ANKUS, Ancus.

ANKYLOBLEPH'ARON, Ancylobleph'aron, Palpebra'rum coal'itus, from αγκυλη, 'contraction,' and βλεφαρον, 'eyelid.' A preternatural union between the free edges of the eyelids.

Also called Symbbleph'aron, Symbblepharo'sis, and Pros'physis.

Also, union between the eyelids and globe of the eye.—Aëtius.

ANKYLOGLOS'SUM, Ancyloglos'sum, Concre'tio lingue, from αγκυλος, 'crooked,' or 'contracted,' and γλωσσα, 'the tongue.' Impeded motion of the tongue in consequence of adhesion between its margins and the gums; or in consequence of the shortness of the frænum: the latter affection constituting the Tonguetie, Olopho'nia lin'gue fræna'ta. It merely requires the frænum to be divided with a pair of scissors.

ANKYLOME'LE, Ancylome'le, from αγκυλος, 'crooked,' and μηλη, 'a probe.' A curved probe.—Galen.

ANKYLOMERIS'MUS, Ancylomeris'mus, from αγκυλη, 'a contraction,' and μερος, 'a part.' Morbid adhesion between parts.

ANKYLOPS, Ægilops.

ANKYLO'SIS, Ancylo'sis, Anchylo'sis, Orthoco'ton, Orthoeyclo'sis, An'cyllē, Stiff Joint, from αγκυλος, 'crooked.' An affection, in which there is great difficulty or even impossibility of moving a diarthrodial articulation. It is so called, because the limb remains, commonly, in a constant state of flexion. Anchylosis is said to be complete or true, when there is an intimate adhesion between the synovial surfaces and union of the articular extremities of the bones. In the incomplete or false anchylosis, there is obscure motion, but the fibrous parts around the joint are more or less stiff and thickened. In the treatment of this last state, the joint must be gently and gradually exercised; and oily, relaxing applications be assiduously employed.

ANKYLOT'OMUS, Ancylo'tomus, αγκυλοτομος, from αγκυλος, 'crooked,' and τεμνει, 'to cut.' Any kind of curved knife.—Paulus. An instrument for dividing the frænum lingue.—Scultetus.

ANNEAU, Ring—a. Crural, Crural canal—a. Diaphragmatic, Diaphragmatic ring—a. Fémoral, Crural canal—a. Inguinal, Inguinal ring—a. Ombilical, Umbilical ring.

ANNEXE, Accessory, Appendix.

ANNI CRITICI, Climacterici (anni)—a. Decretorii, Climacterici (anni)—a. Fatales, Climacterici (anni)—a. Genethliaci, Climacterici (anni)—a. Gradarii, Climacterici (anni)—a. Hebdomadici, Climacterici (anni)—a. Heroici, Climacterici (anni)—a. Natalitii, Climacterici (anni)—a. Scalares, Climacterici (anni)—a. Scansiles, Climacterici (anni).

ANNOTATIO, Episema'sia. Under this term some have included the prelude to an attack of intermittent fever—as yawning, stretching, somnolency, chilliness, &c.

ANNOTTO. See Terra Orleana.

ANNUAL DISE'ASES, Morbi an'ni, M. anniversa'rii. (F) Maladies annuelles. A name given, by some, to diseases which recur, every year, about the same period. Febris annua is a term used for a fancied intermittent of this type. (F) Fièvre annuelle.

ANNUENS, Rectus capitis internus minor.

ANNUIT'IO, Nod'ding. A gesture denoting assent in most countries. Also, the state of somnolency, (when the individual is in the erect or sitting posture, with the head unsupported,) in which the power of volition over the extensor muscles of the head is lost, and the head drops forward.

ANNULAR, Annularis, Cricoides. Any thing relating to a ring, or which has the shape or fulfils the functions of a ring; from annulus, 'a ring.'

THE ANNULAR FINGER, or Ring Finger, Digitus annularis, Parameos, is the fourth finger; so called from the wedding-ring being worn there.

THE ANNULAR LIGAMENT OF THE RADIUS, is a very strong fibro-cartilaginous band, which forms, with the lesser sigmoid cavity of the cubitus, a kind of ring in which the head of the radius turns with facility.

THE ANNULAR LIGAMENTS OF THE CARPUS, Annulæ manus membranosæ, are two in number. The one, anterior, is a broad, fibrous, quadrilateral band, extending transversely before the wrist, into a canal. It is attached, externally, to the trapezium and scaphoides; and internally to the os pisiforme and process of the ulniforme. It keeps the tendons of the flexor muscles, median nerve, &c., applied against the carpus. The posterior ligament is situate transversely behind the joint of the hand, and covers the sheaths of the tendons, which pass to the back of the hand. Its fibres are white and shining, and are attached, externally, to the inferior and outer part of the radius; internally, to the ulna and os pisiforme.

THE ANNULAR LIGAMENTS OF THE TARSUS are two in number. The anterior is quadrilateral, and extends transversely above the instep. It is attached to the superior depression of the os calcis, and to the malleolus internus. It embraces the tendons of the extensor muscles of the toes, the tibialis anticus, and peroneus anticus. The internal is broader than the last. It descends from the malleolus internus to the posterior and inner part of the os calcis, with which it forms a kind of canal, enclosing the sheaths of the tendons of the tibialis posticus, flexor longus digitorum pedis, and F. longus pollicis pedis, as well as the plantar vessels and nerves.

THE ANNULAR VEIN, Vena annularis, is situate between the annular finger and the little finger. Aëtius recommends it to be opened in diseases of the spleen.

ANNULARIS, Cricoid: see Digitus—a. Ani, Sphincter ani.

ANNULITENDINO-PHALANGIENS, Lumbrales manus.

ANNULUS ABDOMINIS, Inguinal ring—a. Fossæ ovalis: see Ovalis fossa—a. Repens, Herpes circinatus—a. Umbilicalis, Umbilical ring—a. Ventriculi, Pylorus.

ANO, νω, a prefix denoting 'above, up.'

ANOCÆLIA, Stomach.

ANODIA, from νω priv. and αδη, 'song.' An unconnected or dissonant mode of speech.

ANODIV, Anodyne.

ANODOS, Edentulus.

ANODYNE, Anod'ynus, Antod'ynus, Anti'd'ynous, (improperly) Paregor'icus, Hypnot'icus,

Anel'icus, Antal'gicus, (F) Anodin or Anodyn, from α, νω, priv. and αδυνη, 'pain.' Anodynes are those medicines which relieve pain, or cause it to cease; as opium, belladonna, &c. They act by blunting the sensibility of the brain, so that it does not appreciate the morbid sensation.

ANODYNIA, Indolent'ia. Cessation or absence of pain. Vogel has given this name to a genus of diseases, characterized by a cessation of pain, and the exasperation of other symptoms; as we see in gangrene.

ANODYNUM MINERALE, Potassæ nitras sulphatis paucillo mixtus.

ANCEA, from α privative, and νοος, 'mind.' Delirium, imbecility. See Dementia and Idiotism.

ANOMAL, Anomalous.
ANOMALIA, from νω priv. and ομαλος, 'regular.' Abnor'mitas, Alien'd'tio. Anomaly, irregularity. In Pathology, anomaly means something unusual in the symptoms proper to a disease.

ANOMALIA NERVORUM, Nervous diathesis.
ANOMALOTROPHIES, from νω, privative, ομαλος, 'regular,' and τροφη, 'nourishment.' A class of diseases, which consist in modifications in the nutrition of organs.—Gendrin.

ANOMALOUS, Anomalus; the same etymon. Irregular, contrary to rule. (F) Anomal. In Medicine, a disease is called anomalous, in whose symptoms or progress there is something unusual. Affections are also called anomalous, which cannot be referred to any known species.

ANOMALUS, Irregular.
ANOMOCEPHALUS, from α priv. νομος, 'rule,' and κεφαλη, 'head.' An individual, whose head is deformed.—Geoffroi Saint-Hilaire.

ANOMPHALOS, from νω privative, and ομφαλος, 'the navel.' Devoid of navel. Many writers have endeavoured to show that Adam and Eve must have been ανομφαλοι, as they could not have been nourished by umbilical vessels.

ANONYME, Innominate.
ANONYMOUS, Anon'ynus, innominate, (F) Anonymic, from νω priv. and νομα, 'name.' That which has no name.

The word has been applied to many parts of the body:—to the Anonymous bone or Os innominatum:—the Anonymous foramen or Foramen innominatum, &c.

ANOP'SIA, from νω priv. and αψ 'the eye.' A case of monstrosity in which the eye and orbit are wanting.

ANOR'CHIDES, from νω priv. and ορχις, 'a testicle.' Those born without testicles.—Fortunatus Fidelis.

ANOREX'IA, from νω priv. and ορεξις, 'appetite.' Inappetent'ia, Limo'sis exers. (F) Perte d'appetit. Absence of appetite, without loathing. Anorexia or want of appetite is symptomatic of most diseases. Indigestion, Dyspepsia (q. v.)

ANOREXIA EXHAUSTORUM, Frigidity of the stomach—a. Mirabilis, Fasting.

ANORGANIC. See Inorganic.

ANORMAL, Abnormal.

ANOSIA, from α priv. and νοσος, 'disease.' Health. Freedom from disease.

ANOS'MIA, from a privative, and σμη, 'odour.' Loss of smell. Diminution of the sense of smell. Called, also, Anosphre'sia, Paros'mis, Olfac'tus, amis'sio, Dysasthe'sia olfac'toria, Odora'tus deper'ditus, Caco'dia.

ANOSPIRESIA, Anosmia.

ANSE (F), Ansa (L), ansis, signifies, properly, the handle of certain vessels, usually of an arched form. By analogy, it has been applied to that which is curved in the form of such handle. Thus, the French speak of—Anse intestinale, to signify a portion of intestine, supported by its mesentery, and describing a curved line:—also, Anse nerveuse, Anse Anastomotique, &c.

Anse de fil is used, in Surgery, to designate a thread, curved in form of an Anse.

ANSERINA, Potentilla anserina.

ANSÉRINE, Chenopodium ambrosioides—a. Anthelmintique, Chenopodium anthelminticum—a. Bon Henri, Chenopodium Bonus Henricus—a. Botrys, Chenopodium Botrys—a. Fléide, Chenopodium vulvaria.

ANSÉRINE VERMIFUGE, Chenopodium anthelminticum.

ANTIAC'IDS or ANTI-AC'IDS, Anti-ac'ida. Remedies, which obviate acidity in the stomach. They are chemical agents, and act by neutralizing the acid. Those chiefly used are ammonia, calcis carbonas, calx, magnesia, magnesiæ carbonas, potassa, potassæ bicarbonas, p. carbonas, sodæ bicarbonas, and s. carbonas. They are, of course, only palliatives, removing that which exists, not preventing the formation of more.

ANTAGONISM, Antagonis'mus, from αντι, 'against,' and αγωνιζειν, 'to act.' Action in an opposite direction. It applies to the action of muscles which act in a contrary direction to others. In estimating the force of the muscles, this antagonism must be attended to.

ANTAGONIST, Antagonis'ta. A muscle, whose action produces an effect contrary to that of another muscle. Every muscle has its antagonist, because there is no motion in one direction without a capability of it in another.

ANTALGICUS, Anodyne.

ANTAPHRODISIAC and ANTAPHRODITIC, Antaphrodisiacus, from αντι, 'against,' and αφροδισιακικς, 'aphrodisiac,' Anteroticus. A substance capable of blunting the venereal appetite.

ANTAPOD'OSIS, from ανταποδιδωμι, 'I return in exchange.' The succession and return of febrile periods.—Hippocr.

ANTATROPHIC, Antatroph'icus, Antiatroph'icus, from αντι, 'against,' and ατροφια, 'atrophy.' A remedy opposed to atrophy or consumption.

ANTEBRACHIAL. See Antibrachial.

ANTECEDENTIA. The precursory or warning symptoms of a disease.

ANTELABIA, Proche'la, from ante, 'before,' and labia, 'the lips.' The extremity of the lips.

ANTELOPE, Antilopus.

ANTEBALLOMENOS, Succedaneum.

ANTEM'BASIS, from αντι, mutually, and εμβασιν, 'I enter.' Multus ingres'sus. The mutual reception of bones.—Galen.

ANTEMETIC, Antiemetic.

ANTEDEIXIS, Counter-indication.

ANTENEAS'MUS, from αντι, 'against,' and ναρ, 'audacious.' One furious against himself. Mania, in which the patient attempts his own life.—Zacchias.

ANTENNA'RIA DIOICA, Catsfoot, Gnaphalium dioicum, Hispid'ula, Pe'scati, Elich'rysium montanum (F) Pied de chat. A common European plant, which has been advised in hemorrhage, diarrhœa, &c.

ANTEPHIALTIC, Antiephialtic.

ANTEPILEPTIC, Antiepileptic.

ANTEREISIS, from αντι, 'against,' and ερειδω, 'I support.' The resistance—the solidity—of bones.—Hippocr.

ANTÉRIEUR DU MARTEAU, Laxator tympani—a. de l'Oreille, Anterior auris.

ANTÉRIOR, Anterior, Ant'icus. Situate before. Great confusion has prevailed with Anatomists in the use of the terms before, behind, &c. Generally, the word anterior is applied to parts situate before the median line, the body being in the erect posture, with the face and palms of the hands turned forwards; and the feet applied longitudinally together.

ANTÉRIOR AU'RIS MASCLE, Auricularis ant'erior, (F) Auriculaire antérieur, Antérieur de l'oreille, Zygomato-oreculaire. A small muscle, passing from the posterior part of the zygoma to the helix. Use. To draw the ear forwards and upwards.

ANTÉRIOR MALLEI, Laxator tympani.

ANTEROTICUS, Antaphrodisiac.

ANTEUPHORBIUM, Cacalia anteuphorbium.

ANTEVERSION, Antever'sio, from ante, 'before,' and ver'tere, 'to turn.' Displacement of the uterus, in which the fundus is turned towards the pubes, whilst its orifice is towards the sacrum. It may be caused by extraordinary size of the pelvis, the pressure of the viscera on the uterus, &c.; and is recognised by examination per vaginam. See Retroversio uteri.

ANTHELITRAGUS, (F) Anthélitragien, one of the proper muscles of the pavilion of the ear.

ANT'HELIX or ANTI-HELIX, from αντι, 'before,' and ελιξ, 'the helix.' An eminence on the cartilage of the ear, in front of the helix, and extending from the concha to the groove of the helix, where it bifurcates.

ANTHELMIA, Spigelia Marilandica.

ANTHELMIN'TIC, Antihelmin'ticus, Antiscoll'icus, Anticernino'sus, Vermif'ugus, Vermifuge, from αντι, 'against,' and ελμινς, 'a worm.' A remedy which destroys or expels worms, or prevents their formation and development. The chief anthelmintics are, the Chenopodium, Dolichos, Oleum animale Dipelii, Oleum Terebinthinæ, Sodii Chloridum, Spigelia, and Pulvis Stanni. See Worms and Helminthogues.

ANTHEMA ERUPTIO, Exanthem.

ANTHEMIS COT'ULA, Cot'ula fat'ida, Cota, Cynanthemis, Chamæm'tum, fol'idum, Mayweed, Stinking Chamomile. Nat. Ord. Compositæ Corymbifæræ, Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Superflua, (F) Maroute, Camomille fétide. This plant has a very disagreeable smell; and the leaves have a strong, acrid, bitterish taste. It is reputed to have been useful in hysterical affections.

ANTHEMIS NOBILIS, Chamæmelum, Chamæmelum Nobile, Chamomilla Romana, Euanthemion, Anthemis, Chamæmelum odoratum, Leucanthemum, Matricaria, αθημισα, αθημισ, (F) Camomille Romaine. The leaves and flowers have a strong smell, and bitter, nauseous taste. The flowers are chiefly used. They possess tonic and stomachic properties, and are much given as a pleasant and cheap bitter. A simple infusion is taken to produce or to assist vomiting. Externally, they are often used in fomentations.

The OLEUM ANTHEMIDIS possesses the aromatic properties of the plant, but not the bitter and tonic. Consequently, the 'Camomile Drops,' as sold by the druggists, must be devoid of the latter qualities. They are made by adding Ol. anthem. ʒj. to Sp. vini rectific. ℥j.

ANTHEMIS PYRETHRUM, Pyrethrum, Pyrethrum verum, Bupthalamum creticum, Dentaria, Herba salivaris, Pes Alexandrinus, Spanish Chamomile, Pellitory of Spain, (F) Pyrethre, Racine salicaire, Pied d'Alexandre. The root is hot and acid; its acrimony residing in a resinous principle. It is never used except as a masticatory in toothache, rheumatism of the face, paralysis of the tongue, &c. It acts as a powerful sialagogue.

ANTHEMIS TINCTORIA, Bupthalmi Herba, Dyer's Chamomile. A European plant. Has a bitter and astringent taste, and has been regarded stomachic and vulnerary, (F) Camomille des Teinturiers, Ceil de Bœuf.

ANTHERA, ανθηρα. A remedy compounded of several substances, myrrh, sandarac, alum, saffron, &c. It was used under the form of liniment, collyrium, electuary, and powder.—Celsus, Galen.

ANTHEREON, Mentum.

ANTHORA VULGARIS, Aconitum anthora.

ANTHOS: see Rosmarinus—a. Sylvestris, Ledum sylvestre.

ANTHRACIA, from ανθραξ, 'coal.' Carbuncular Ecanthem. An eruption of tumours, imperfectly suppurating, with indurated edges, and, for the most part, a sordid and sanious core. A genus in the order Eczanematica; class Hæmatica of Good, and including Plague and Yaws.

ANTHRACIA, Anthraxis—a. Pestis, Plague—a. Rubula, Frambesia.

ANTHRACION, see Anthrax.

ANTHRACOID, Anthracoïdes, from ανθραξ, 'coal,' and ειδος, 'resemblance,' (F) Charbonnoux. That which is black as a coal. That which is accompanied by, or resembles anthrax.

ANTHROCOMA, Anthrax.

ANTHRACOSIA, Anthrax.

ANTHRACOSIS, Anthracia, Carbo Palpebrarum, from ανθραξ, 'a coal.' A species of carbuncle, which attacks the eyelids and globe of the eye.—Paulus of Ægina. Also carbuncle in general. It has been used recently for the black lung of coal miners.

ANTHRAKOKALI, from ανθραξ, 'coal,' and kali, 'potassa,' an article recently introduced as a remedy in cutaneous diseases. It is formed by dissolving carbonate of potassa in 10 or 12 parts of boiling water, and adding as much slacked lime as will separate the potassa. The filtered liquor is placed on the fire in an iron vessel, and suffered to evaporate, until neither froth nor effervescence occurs, and the liquid presents a smooth surface like oil. To this, levigated coal is added in the proportion of 160 grammes to 192 grammes of potassa. The mixture is stirred, and removed from the fire, and the stirring is continued, until a black homogeneous powder results. A sulphuretted anthrakokali is made by mixing accurately 16 grammes of sulphur with the coal, and dissolving the mixture in the potassa as directed above. The dose of the simple and sulphuretted preparations is about two grains three times a day.

ANTHRAX, Antrax, Carbo, Rubinus verus, Codæcilla, Erythema gangrenosum, Grantristum, Pruna, Per'sicus Ignis, Granatristum, Phyma anthrax, Erythema anthrax, Carbunculus, Anthrococ'ia, Anthrocoma, Abscessus gangrenascens, A. gangrenosus, Furunculus malignus, F. gangrenosus, Carbuncle, (F) Charbon. An inflammation, essentially gangrenous, of the cellular membrane and skin, which may arise from an internal or external cause. In the latter case it is called by the French pathologists, Pustule maligne, Anthræcion, Bouton d'Alep, and is characterized at the outset by a vesication or bleb filled with a sero-sanguinolent fluid, under which a small induration is formed, surrounded by an areolar inflammation, which becomes gangrenous. It has been thought by some to be induced altogether by contact with the matter of the carbuncle of animals, or of the exuviae of bodies of such as had died with the disease. But it is now known to arise primarily in the human subject.

Anthrax is a malignant boil, and its treatment is similar to that which is required in cases of gangrene attacking a part.

ANTHROPE, Cutis.

ANTHROPOCHYMY, Chymistry (human.)

ANTHROPOGENIA, from ανθρωπος, 'man,' and γενεσις, 'generation.' Knowledge or study of human generation.

ANTHROPOL'OGY, Anthropologia, from ανθρωπος, 'man,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A treatise on man. By some, this word is used for the science of the structure and functions of the human body. Frequently, it is employed synonymously with,—Natural History, and Physiology of man.

ANTHROPOMANCY, Anthropomanti'a, from ανθρωπος, 'a man,' and μαντια, 'divination.' Divination by inspecting the entrails of a dead man.

ANTHROPOMETRY, from ανθρωπος, 'a man,' and μετρον, 'measure.' An acquaintance with the dimensions of the different parts of the human body.

ANTHROPOPH'AGUS, from ανθρωπος, 'a man,' and φαγω, 'I eat.' A name given to one who eats his own species.

ANTHROPOPH'AGY, Anthropophag'ia, same etymon. The custom of eating human flesh. A disease in which there is a desire to eat it.

ANTHROPOSCOPIA, Physiognomy.

ANTHROPOTOMY, Andranatomia.

ANTHYPNOTIC, Anthypnoticus, from ατις, 'against,' and υπνωτικος, 'stupefying.' A remedy for stupor.

ANTHYPOCHONDRIAC, Anthypochon-

drī'acus, from αντι, 'against,' and υποχονδριακος, 'hypochondriac.' A remedy for hypochondriasis.

ANTIHYSTERIC, Antihyster'ic, Antihyster'icus, from αντι, 'against,' and υστερα, 'the uterus.' A remedy for hysteria.

ANTI, αντι, as a prefix, in composition, generally means 'opposition.'

ANTIADDES, Tonsils.

ANTIADITIS, Cynanche tonsillarum.

ANTIADON'CUS, from αντιαδες, 'the tonsils,' and ογκος, 'tumour.' A swelling of the tonsils.—Swediaur. Anti'ager has a similar meaning.

ANTIAPOPLECT'IC, Antiapoplec'ticus, from αντι, 'against,' and αποπληξια, 'apoplexy.' A remedy for apoplexy.

ANTIARIS TOXICARIA. See Upas.

ANTIARTHRITIC, Antiarthrit'ic, Antiarthrit'icus, Antipodagric, from αντι, 'against,' and αρθριτις, 'the gout,' (F) Antigoutteux. A remedy for gout.

ANTIASTHMATIC, Antiasthmatic'us, from αντι, 'against,' and ασμα, 'asthma.' A remedy for asthma.

ANTIATROPHICUS, Antatrophic.

ANTIBRA'CHIAL, Antibrachid'lis. That which concerns the fore-arm. Bichat. J. Cloquet suggests that the word should be written antebrachial from ante, 'before,' and brachium, 'the arm':—as antebrachial region, antebrachial aponeurosis, &c.

The ANTEBRA'CHIAL APONEURO'SIS, (F) Aponevrose, antebrachiale, is a portion of the aponeurotic sheath which envelops the whole of the upper limb. It arises from the brachial aponeurosis, from a fibrous expansion of the tendon of the biceps muscle, from the epicondyle, epitrochlea, and, behind, from the tendon of the triceps brachialis. Within, it is inserted into the cubitus, &c.; and, below, is confounded with the two annular ligaments of the carpus. It is covered by the skin, by veins, lymphatics, and by filaments of superficial nerves; covers the muscles of the fore-arm, adheres to them, and sends between them several fibrous septa, which serve them for points of insertion.

ANTICACHECT'IC, Anti-cachec'ticus, Anticacochym'ic, from αντι, 'against,' and καχεξια, 'cachexy.' A remedy against cachexy.

ANTICACOCHEM'IC, Anticachectic.

ANTICANCRO'SUS, Anticancerous.

ANTICAN'CEROUS, Anti-cancerous, Anti-cancer'osus, Anti-carcinomat'ous, from αντι, 'against,' and καρκινωμα, 'cancer,' carcinoma. Opposed to cancer.

ANTICARDIUM, Fossette du cœur, Scrobiculus cordis.

ANTICARCINOMATOUS, Anticancerous.

ANTICATAR'RHAL, Anticatarrrhal'is, from αντι, 'against,' and καταρρος, 'catarrh.' A remedy for catarrh.

ANTICAUSODIC, Anti-causol'ic, Anti-causod'ic, from αντι, 'against,' and καυσος, 'a burning fever.' A remedy for Causus or inflammatory fever. Jünken speaks of a Syrī'pus Anticausol'icus.

ANTICAUSOTIC, Anticausodic.

ANTICHEIR, Pollex. See Digitus.

ANTICHOLERICA, Sophora heptaphylla.

ANTI'IPATING, Anti'ipans, Prolcpl'icus.

A periodical phenomenon recurring at progressively shorter intervals. An anticipating intermittent is one in which the intervals between the paroxysms become progressively less.

ANTICNEMION, Shin.

ANTICŒUR, Scrobiculus cordis.

ANTICOLIC, Anticol'icus, from αντι, 'against,' and κολικος, 'the colic.' That which is opposed to colic.

ANTICUS, Anterior.

ANTIDARTREUX, Antitherpetic.

ANTIDIARRHŒIC, Anti-diarrhœ'icus. A remedy for diarrhœa. Opposed to diarrhœa.

ANTIDIN'IC, Antidin'icus, from αντι, 'against,' and δινοσις, 'vertigo.' Opposed to vertigo.

ANTIDOTA'R'IUM, from αντιδοτον, 'an antidote.' A Dispensatory. A Pharmacopœia or Formulary, a Dispensatory, (q. v.)

ANTIDOTE, Antid'otum, from αντι, 'against,' and διδωμι, 'I give.' Originally this word signified an internal remedy. It is now used synonymously with counter-poison, and signifies any remedy capable of combating the effect of poisons, by decomposing them.

ANTIDOTUM MITHRIDATICUM, Mithridate.

ANTIDOTUM HERACLIDIS, Enneapharmacos.

ANTIDYNOUS, Anodyne.

ANTIDYSENTERIC, Anti-dysenter'icus, from αντι, 'against,' δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and εντερων, 'intestine.' Opposed to dysentery.

ANTIEMETIC or ANTEMETIC, Antiemet'ic, from αντι, 'against,' and μετειςος, 'emetic.' A remedy for vomiting.

ANTIPIHAL'TIC or ANTEPIHAL'TIC, Antiephial'ticus, from αντι, 'against,' and επιαλτις, 'nightmare.' A remedy for nightmare.

ANTIPILEP'TIC or ANTEPILEP'TIC, Antiepilep'ticus, from αντι, 'against,' and επιληψια, 'epilepsy.' A remedy for epilepsy.

ANTIFEBRILIS, Febrifuge.

ANTIGALACTIC, Antigalac'ticus, Antilac'teus, from αντι, 'against,' and γαλα, 'milk.' (F) Antilait'eur. Opposed to the secretion of milk, or to diseases caused by the milk.

ANTIG'ONI COLLYRIUM NIGRUM, Black collyrium of Antig'onus. It was composed of cadmia, antimony, pepper, verdigris, gum arabic, and water.

ANTHECT'IC, Antihæc'ticus, from αντι, 'against,' and εξίς, 'habit of body.' The Antihæc'ticum POTERII is the white oxyd of antimony: also called Diaphoret'icum Soria'ic.

ANTHELMINTICUS, Anthelminctic.

ANTHEMORRHOID'AL, Antihæmorrhoid'al'is, from αντι, 'against,' and αιμορροιδες, 'hemorrhoids.' A remedy for hemorrhoids.

ANTHERPETIC, Antitherpet'icus from αντι, 'against,' and εγπης, 'herpes.' (F) Antidartreux. A remedy for herpes.

ANTHYDROPHOB'IC, Antihydrophob'icus, Antily'ssus, from αντι, 'against,' υδαρ, 'water,' and φοβος, 'dread.' A remedy for hydrophobia.

ANTHYDRO'IC, Antihydrop'icus, from αντι, 'against,' and υδρωψ, 'dropsy.' A remedy for dropsy.

ANTIHYSTERIC, Antihyster'ic.

ANTI-ICTERIC, from αντι, 'against,' and ικτερος, 'jaundice.' A remedy for jaundice.

ANTI-IMPETIGENES, SOLOMON'S. See Liquor hydrargyri oxymercurialis.

ANTILACTEUS, Antigalactic.

ANTILACTEUS, Antigalactic.

ANTILEP'SIS, Apprehensio, from ἀντιλαμβάνω, 'I take hold of.' The mode of attaching a bandage over a diseased part, by fixing it upon the sound parts.—Hippocrates. The mode of securing bandages, &c. from slipping.

ANTILITHICS, Antilithica, from ἀντι, 'against,' and λίθος, 'a stone.' A substance that prevents the formation of calculi in the urinary organs.

The chief antilithics—according as the calculi are lithic acid or phosphatic—are alkalis or acids; with revellents, especially change of air; tonics, especially the diosma crenata, (?) and uva ursi. (?)

ANTILLY, MINERAL WATERS OF. A celebrated French medicinal spring, near Méaux in France. The waters have not been analyzed; but astonishing and chimerical effects have been ascribed to them.

ANTILIOBIUM, Tragus.

ANTILOPMIC, Antilopmicus, Antipestilentialis, from ἀντι, 'against,' and λοιμός, 'the plague.' A remedy for the plague.

ANTILOPUS. The Antelope. (F) Gazelle. An African animal, whose hoofs and horns were formerly given in hysteric and epileptic cases.

ANTILYSSUS, Antihydrophobic.

ANTIMELANCHOLIC, Antimelancholicus, from ἀντι, 'against,' and μελαγχολία, 'melancholy.' A remedy for melancholy.

ANTIMOINE, Antimonium—a. Beurre d', Antimonium muriatum—a. Chlorure d', Antimonium muriatum—a. Oxide blanc d', Antimonium diaphoreticum—a. Soufre doré d', Antimonii sulphuretum præcipitatum—a. Sulfuré, hydrosulphure rouge d', Antimonii sulphuretum rubrum—a. Verre d', Antimonii vitrum.

ANTIMONIAL, Antimonia'lis, Stibia'lis, from Antimonium, 'antimony.' A composition into which antimony enters. A preparation of antimony.

The ANTIMONIAL POWDER, Pulvis antimonia'lis. Oxydum antimonii cum phosphate calcis, Phosphas calcis stibiat'us, P. Calcicum stibiat'um, Pulvis Jume'sii, Pulvis stibia'us, Pulvis de phosphate calcis et stib'ii compos'itus, Facilius JAMES'S Powder, SCHWANBERG'S Fecce Powder, CHENEVIX'S Antimonial Powder. (F) Poudre antimoniale composée ou de JAMES. A peroxide of antimony combined with phosphate of lime. (Take of common sulphure of antimony, ℥ij; hartshorn shavings, ℥ij. Roast in an iron pot, until they form a gray powder. Put this into a long pot, with a small hole in the cover. Keep it in a red heat for two hours, and grind to a fine powder.) This preparation has long been esteemed as a febrifuge: but it is extremely uncertain in its action. The ordinary dose is ʒ or ʒ grains.

ANTIMONIALE CAUSTICUM, Antimonium muriatum.

ANTIMONIATUM SULPHUR, Antimonii sulphuretum præcipitatum—a. Tartar, Antimonium tartarizatum.

ANTIMONII BUTYRUM, Antimonium muriatum—a. Calx, Antimonium diaphoreti-cum—a. Cerussa, Antimonium diaphoreticum—a. Murias, Antimonium muriatum—a. Oleum, Antimonium muriatum—a. Oxydulum hydro-sulphuratum aurantiacum, Antimonii sulphuretum præcipitatum—a. Oxydum, Algaroth—a. Oxydum auratum, Antimonii sulphuratum præcipitatum—a. Oxidum nitro-muriaticum, Algaroth—Oxydum cum sulphure vitrifac'tum, Antimonii vitrum—a. Oxydum sulphuretum vitrifac'tum, Antimonii vitrum—a. Regulus medicinalis, Antimonium medicinale—a. Sal, Antimonium tartarizatum—a. Sulphur auratum, Antimonii sulphuretum præcipitatum—a. Sulphur præcipitatum, Antimonii sulphuretum præcipitatum—a. Sulphuretum, Antimonium—a. Tartaras, Antimonium tartarizatum—a. Tartaras et Potassæ, Antimonium tartarizatum—a. Vitrum hyacinthinum, Antimonii vitrum.

ANTIMO'NI SULPHURE'TUM PRÆCIPITATUM, Sulphur antimoni'dum, Hydrosulphure'tum stibio'sum cum sul'phure, Oxy'des stib'ii sulphur'dum, Oxy'dulum antimoni'ii hydrosulphur'dum aurantiacum, Oxy'dum aur'dum antimoni'ii, Sulphure'tum stib'ii oxy'dul'di, Hydro-sulfur'e'tum lu'teum oxy'di stib'ii sulfur'di, Sulphur antimoni'ni præcipit'dum, Sulphur aur'dum antimoni'ni, Golden Sulphur of Antimony.

The Antimoni'ii Sulphure'tum Præcipit'dum, (F) Soufre doré d'Antimoine, of the London Pharmacopœia is nearly the same as the old Kermes Mineral. It is a powder of an orange colour, and of a metallic, styptic taste. It is emetic, diaphoretic, and cathartic, according to the dose, and has been chiefly used in chronic rheumatism and in cutaneous affections. Dose, gr. j to gr. iv.

ANTIMO'NI SULPHURE'TUM RUBRUM, Red Sulphure't of Antimony, Hydrosulfur'e'tum stib'ii rubrum. Sub-hydrosulf'as stib'ii, Hydrosulphur'e'tum rubrum stib'ii sulphur'di. Pulvis Carthusiano'rum, Kermes mineral. (F) Hydrosulfure rouge d'Antimoine sulfuré, Vermillon de Provence. Properties the same as the last. Dose, gr. j to gr. iv.

ANTIMO'NI VITRUM, Glass of Antimony, Antimoni'ni oxy'dum sulphure'tum vitrifac'tum, Oxy'dum stib'ii senic'it'um, Antimoni'um vitrifac'tum, Oxy'dum antimoni'ni cum sul'phure vitrifac'tum, Vitrum stib'ii, Antimoni'ni vitrum hyacin'thinum, Oxy'dulum stib'ii vitreatum. (F) Verre d'Antimoine. (Formed by roasting powdered common antimony in a shallow vessel over a gentle fire, till it is of a whitish gray colour, and emits no fumes in a red heat; then melting it, in a quick fire, into a clean, brownish-red glass.) It is used for preparing the tartarized antimony and antimonial wine.

ANTIMONIOUS ACID, Antimonium diaphoreticum.

ANTIMONIUM, from ἀντι, 'against,' and μόνος, 'alone.' i. e. not found alone: or according to others, from ἀντι, 'against,' and μοινο, 'a monk:' because, it is asserted, certain monks suffered much from it. Sibi, Stib'ium, Regulus Antimoni'ni, Miner'alium, Gynac'cum, Magnes'ia Satur'ni, Marcas'ita plum'bea, Platyophthal'mon, Stim'ni, Aurum lepro'sum, Common Antimony, Sulphure't of Antimony, Antimoni'um crudum, Antimoni'ni sulphur'e'tum, Sulphur'e'tum stib'ii nigrum. (F) Antimoine. The sulphure't of antimony is the ore from which all the preparations of antimony are formed. When prepared for medical use, by trituration and levigation, it forms a powder of a black, or bluish gray colour, which is insoluble. It is slightly diaphoretic and alterative, and has been used in chronic rheumatism, cutaneous diseases, &c.

ANTIMONIUM CALCINATUM, Antimonium diaphoreticum.

ANTIMONIUM DIAPHORETICUM, Diaphoretic Antimony, Antimonious Acid, Mineral Bezoard, Antimonium Calcinalum, Mineral Diaphoretic, Matière perlée de KERkring, Peroxide of Antimony, Calx Antimonii, Antimonium diaphoreticum lotum, Cerussa Antimonii calx, Antimonii elot'a, Oxides stibii album, Oxidum stibiosum, Deutoride of Antimony, Oxidum stibii album median'te nitro confectum. (F) Oxide blanc d'Antimoine préparé par le moyen du nitre. (Common antimony, lbj; purified nitre, lbij.—Throw it by spoonfuls into a red-hot crucible; powder and wash. The flowers that stick to the side of the crucible must be carefully separated, otherwise they render it emetic. Dose, gr. x to xxx.

ANTIMONIUM MEDICINALE, Regulus Antimonii Medicinalis, Medicinal Regulus of Antimony. (Common Antimony, ℥v, Kali ppt. ℥i, Soda muriat. ℥iv. Powder, mix, and melt. When cold, separate the scorïe at top, powder the mass, and wash it well.) It is conceived to be more active than common antimony.

ANTIMONIUM MURIATUM, Antimonii Murias, Chloruret of Antimony, Chloruretum stibii, Spuria trium draco'nium, Deuto-murias stibii sublimatus, Butter of Antimony, Muriate of Antimony, Chloride of Antimony, Butyrum Antimonii, O'leum Antimonii, Butyrum stibii, Caus'ticum antimoniale; Antimonium salitum. (F) Chlorure d'Antimoine, Beurre d'Antimoine. (Common antimony and corrosive sublimate, of each equal parts: grind together, and distil in a wide-necked retort, and let the butyraceous matter that comes over, run, in a moist place, to a liquid oil.) A caustic, but not much used as such. Sometimes taken as poison.

ANTIMONIUM SALITUM, Antimonium muriatum.

ANTIMONIUM TARTARIZATUM, Tartaris Antimonii, Tartar Antimoniatum, Sal Antimonii, Tartras Potassae stibiosus seu stibialis, Tartris liziv'ie stibid'us, Deuto-tartras potassae et stibii, Tartarized Antimony, Emetic Tartar, Tartar Emetic. (F) Tartre stibié, Tartre Émétique, Émétique. In some parts of the United States, vulgarly and improperly called Tartar: Tartarus emeticus, Tartarum emeticum, Tartras antimonii, Tartras Antimonii et Potassae. (Glass of Antimony, Cream of Tartar, each lbj; water, one gallon. Boil, filter, and crystallize.—Ph. L. 1824.)

Tartarized antimony is emetic, sometimes cathartic and diaphoretic. Externally, it is rubefacient. Dose, as an emetic, gr. j to gr. iv. in solution:—as a diaphoretic, gr. one sixteenth to gr. one-quarter.

The empirical preparation, called NORRIS'S Drops, consists of a solution of tartarized antimony in rectified spirit, disguised by the addition of some vegetable colouring matter.

ANTIMONIUM VITRIFACTUM, Antimonii vitrum.

ANTIMONY, BUTTER OF, Antimonium

muriatum—a. Chloride of, Antimonium muriatum—a. Chloruret of, Antimonium muriatum—a. Deutoxide of, Antimonium diaphoreticum—a. Glass of, Antimonii vitrum—a. Golden sulphur of, Antimonii sulphuretum præcipitatum—a. Medicinal, regulus of, Antimonium medicinale—a. Muriate of, Antimonium muriatum—a. Peroxide of, Antimonium diaphoreticum—a. Submuriate of protoxide of, Algaroth—a. Sulphuret of, red, Antimonii sulphuretum rubrum—a. Tartarized, Antimonium tartarizatum—a. Vegetable, Eupatorium perfoliatum.

ANTINEPHRITIC, Antinephretic, Antinephreticus, from αντι, 'against,' and νεφριτις, 'nephritis.' A remedy for inflammation or pain of the kidney.

ANTINEUROPATHIC, Nervine.

ANTINEUROTIC, Nervine.

ANTIOCHI HERA. A preparation extolled by the ancients in melancholy, hydrophobia, epilepsy, &c. It was formed of gerrmander, agaric, pulp of colocynth, Arabian stœchas, opoponax, sagapenum, parsley, aristolochia, white pepper, cinnamon, lavender, myrrh, honey, &c.

ANTIOCHI THERIACA. A theriac employed by Antiochus against every kind of poison. It was composed of thyme, opoponax, millet, trefoil, fennel, aniseed, nigella sativa, &c.

ANTIODONTALGIC, Antodontalgic, Antodontalgicus, Odontalgic, Odontalgicus, from αντι, 'against,' and οδονταλγια, 'toothache.' A remedy for toothache.

ANTIORGASTIC, Antiorgas'ticus, from αντι, 'against,' and οργαω, 'I desire vehemently.' A remedy for orgasm or erethism, and for irritation in general.

ANTIPARALYTIC, Antiparalyticus, from αντι, 'against,' and παρλυσις, 'palsy.' Opposed to palsy.

ANTIPATHIA, from αντι, 'against,' and παθος, 'passion, affection.' Aversion. A natural repugnance for any person or thing.

ANTIPATHIC, Antipathicus. (F) Antipathique. Belonging to antipathy. 'Opposite, contrary;' as 'Humours Antipathiques.' Humours opposed to each other; also, palliative, (q. v.)

ANTIP'ATRI THERIACA, Theriac of ANTIPATER. A farrago of more than 40 articles: used as an antidote against the bites of serpents.

ANTIPERISTALTIC, Antipercristalticus, Antivermic'ular, from αντι, 'against,' and περιστ'ελλαω, 'I contract.' An inverted action of the intestinal tube.

ANTIPERISTASIS, from αντι, 'against,' and περιστ'ασις, 'reunion, aggregation.' A union of opposite circumstances: the action of two contrary qualities, one of which augments the force of the other.

The Peripateticians asserted, that it is by Antiperistasis, that fire is hotter in winter than in summer. Theophrastus attributes the cause, which renders men more vigorous, and makes them digest more readily in winter, to the augmentation of heat caused by Antiperistasis.

ANTIPERTUSSIS, see Zinci sulphas.

ANTIPESTILENTIALIS, Antioimic.

ANTIPHARMACON, from αντι, 'against,' and φαρμακον, 'poison.' A counter-poison. An antidote.—Dioscorides.

ANTIPHARMACUS, Alexipharmic.

ANTIPHLOGIS'TIC, Antiphlogisticus, from αντι, 'against,' and φλεγω, 'I burn.' Opposed to inflammation;—as Antiphlogistic remedies, A. regimen, &c.

ANTIPHTHIS'ICAL, Antiphthisicus, from αντι, 'against,' and φθισις, 'consumption.' Opposed to phthisis.

ANTIPHYSICA, Carminatives.

ANTIPHYS'ICAL, Antiphysicus, from αντι, 'against,' and φυσω, 'I blow.' An expeller of wind: a carminative, (q. v.)

It has also been used for any thing preternatural; here, the derivation is from αντι, 'against,' and φυσικος, 'nature.' The French sometimes say, 'Un goût antiphysique.'

ANTIPLEURIT'IC, Antipleureticus, Antipleuretic, from αντι, 'against,' and πλευριτις, 'pleurisy.' Opposed to pleurisy.

ANTIPODAGRIC, Antiarthritic.

ANTIPRAX'IS, from αντι, 'against,' and πρασσω, 'I act.' A contrary state of different parts in the same patient: e. g. an increase of heat in one organ, and diminution in another.

ANTIPSOR'IC, Antipsoricus, from αντι, 'against,' and ψερα, 'the itch.' (F) Antigaleux. Opposed to the itch.

ANTIPUTRID, Antiseptic.

ANTIPY'IC, Antipyicus, from αντι, 'against,' and πυρ, 'pus.' Opposed to suppuration.

ANTIPYRET'IC, Antipyreticus, from αντι, 'against,' and πυρετος, 'fever.' A febrifuge, (q. v.)

ANTIPYROT'IC, Antipyroticus, from αντι, 'against,' and πυρ, 'fire.' Opposed to burns.

ANTIQUARTANA'R'IIUM, Antiquar'ticum. A remedy formerly used against quartan fever.

ANTIRACHIT'IC, Antirachiticus, from αντι, 'against,' and rachitis. Opposed to rachitis, or rickets.

ANTIRRH'NUM LINA'RIA, Lind'ria, Osyris, Urin'ria, Common Toad Flux. (F) Linaire. The leaves have a bitterish taste. They are reputed to be diuretic and cathartic. An ointment made from them has been extolled in hemorrhoids.

The ANTIRRH'NUM ELAT'INE, Elat'ine, Fluellen or Female Speedwell, was formerly used against scurvy and old ulcerations.

ANTISCOLICUS, Anthelmintic.

ANTISCORBU'TIC, Antiscorb'iticus, from αντι, 'against,' and scorbutus, 'the scurvy.' Opposed to scurvy.

ANTISCROF'ULOUS, Antistrum'dus. Opposed to scrofula.

ANTISEPTIC, Antisepticus, Antiputrid, from αντι, 'against,' and σπυρος, 'putrid.' Antiputredin'dus. Opposed to putrefaction. The chief Antiseptics, internally or externally employed, are the Acidum Muriaticum, Acidum Nitricum, Acidum Sulphuricum, Carbo Ligni, Calcis Chloridum, Chlorinum, Cinchona and its active principles, Creasote, Dauci Radix, Fermentum Cerevisiæ, and Sodæ Chloridum.

ANTISPASIS, Revulsion.

ANTISPASMOD'IC, Antispasmod'icus, from αντι, 'against,' and σπασω, 'I contract.' Opposed to spasm.

The whole operation is probably revulsive. The following are the chief reputed antispasmodics. Ether Sulphuricus, Asafetida, Castoreum, Dracontium, Galbanum, Moschus, Olea Essentialia, Oleum Animale Dippelii, Petroleum, Sagapenum, Spiritus Ætheris Nitrici, Succinum, Valeriana—with the mental antispasmodics, abstraction, powerful emotions, fear, &c.

Of direct antispasmodics, we have not an example.

ANTISPASTIC, Derivative.

ANTISTERIG'MA, from αντι, 'against,' and στηριγμα, 'a support.' A fulcrum, support, crutch.—Hippocrates.

ANTISTER'NUM, from αντι, 'against,' and στερνον, 'the sternum.' The back.—Rufus.

ANTISTRUMOSUS, Antiscrofulous.

ANTISYPHILIT'IC, Antisymphilit'icus, Antisymphilit'ic, from αντι, 'against,' and symphilis, 'the venereal disease.' Opposed to the venereal disease.

ANTITASIS, Counter-extension.

ANTITHENAR, Opponens pollicis—a. Metatarso-sub-phalangæus pollicis, Adductor pollicis pedis.

ANTITHORA, Aconitum anthora.

ANTISTRAG'ICUS, or ANTITRAG'EURS, (F) Muscle de l'Antitragus, M. antitragien.—Ch. Belonging to the Antitragus. A small muscle is so called, the existence of which is not constant. It occupies the space between the antitragus and antihelix.

ANTITRAG'IEEN, Antitragicus.

ANTITRAGUS, from αντι, 'opposite to,' and τραγος, 'the tragus.' A conical eminence on the pavilion of the ear, opposite the tragus.

ANTITYPIA, from αντι, 'against,' and τυπηω, 'I strike.' Resistance. Hardness.

ANTIVENE'REAL, Antivene'reus, from αντι, 'against,' and Venus, 'Venus.' The same as Antisymphilitic. Formerly it was used synonymously with Antaphrodisiac.

ANTIVERMICULAR, Antiperistaltic.

ANTIVERMINOSUS, Anthelmintic.

ANTODONTALGIC, Antiodontalgic.

ANTODYNUS, Anodyne.

ANTRAX, Anthrax.

ANTRE, Antrum—a. d'Hyghmore, Antrum of Highmore.

ANTRUM, 'A cavern,' Cavern'a (q. v.) Bar'athrum, (F) Antre. A name given to certain cavities in bones, the entrance to which is smaller than the bottom.

ANTRUM OF HIGHMORE, Antrum Highmoria'num, Antrum Genæ, Antrum maxilla're vel maxilla' superio'ris, Genyan'trum. The Maxillary Sinus, Sinus genæ pituitarius. (F) Antre d'Hyghmore, Sinus Maxillaire. A deep cavity in the substance of the superior maxillary bone communicating with the middle meatus of the nose. It is lined by a prolongation of the Schneiderian membrane.

ANTRUM Auris, Tympanum—a. Buccinosum, Cochlea, Labyrinth—a. Pylori, see Stomach.

ANULUS, Fossette.

ANURIA, Ischuria.

ANUS, Podex, Potex, Mol'ynē, Cath'edra, Cyr'ceon, Cys'saros, Cysthos, Hedra, Proctos, Archos, Sedes, Culus. The circular opening situate at the inferior extremity of the rectum, by which the excrement is expelled. The fundament. The seat. The body.

ANUS also signifies the anterior orifice of the Aqueduct of Sylvius. By some, this Anus, called also Foramen commune posterius, has been supposed to form a communication between the back part of the third ventricle and the lateral ventricles. It is closed up, however, by the tela choroidea, and also by the fornix, which is intimately connected to this. The foramen is situate between the commissura mollis of the optic thalami and the pineal gland.

ANUS, ARTIFICIAL. An opening made artificially, in case of the rectum being wanting, to supply the natural anus. The term is often used to include also the following.

ANUS, PRETERNATURAL, (F) Anus contre nature or *A. anormal. An accidental opening which gives issue to the whole or to a part of the fæces. It may be owing to a wound, or, which is most common, to gangrene attacking the intestine in a hernial sac.

This term is also employed, as well as Anus devici, devious anus, to the case where the anus, instead of being in its natural situation, is in some neighbouring cavity, as the bladder, vagina, &c.

ANUS, IMPERFORATE. A malformation in which there is no natural anus. See Imperforation.

ANUS, CONTRACTED, (F) *Anus rétréci. A state of the anus when, from some cause, it is constricted.

ANXIETY, *Anxietas, Anxietude, Adæmonia, Dysphoria anxietas, Alys'mus, Al'yce, Al'ysis, Asê. A state of restlessness and agitation, with general indisposition, and a distressing sense of oppression at the epigastrium. Inquietude, anxiety, and anguish, represent degrees of the same condition.

AOCHLE'SIA, from a priv. and οχλος, 'disturbance,' Tranquillity. Calmness.

AORTA, Arteria magna, A. crassa, A. maxima. (F) *Aorte. This name was given by Aristotle to the chief artery of the body. It may have been derived from αορτιζομαι, 'I am suspended,' as it seems to be suspended from the heart: or from αυγ, 'air,' and τηρω, 'I keep,' because it was supposed to contain air. It is probable, that Hippocrates meant by αορται, the bronchia and their ramifications. The Aorta is the common trunk of the arteries of the body. It arises from the left ventricle of the heart, about opposite the fifth dorsal vertebra, passes upwards (ascending Aorta), forms the great arch of the Aorta, and descends along the left of the spine (descending Aorta), until it reaches the middle of the fourth or fifth lumbar vertebra, where it bifurcates, to give origin to the common iliacs. The Aorta is sometimes divided into the Thoracic or pectoral, and the Abdominal. For the arteries which arise from it, &c., see Artery.

AORTEURYS'MA, from αορτη, 'the aorta,' and ωρυς, 'dilated.' Aneurism of the Aorta. By carefully auscultating over the dorsal vertebra, a bellows' sound, with a deep and not always perceptible impulse, may be detected.

AORTIC, *Aorticus. Relating to the Aorta. The Aortic ventricle, (F) Ventricle aortique, is the left ventricle. The Aortic valves are the sigmoid valves at the origin of the Aorta, &c.

AORTITIS, *Inflammatio Aortæ, from Aorta and itis, denoting inflammation. Inflammation of the aorta.

AORTRA, AORTRON, αορτρα, αορτρον. A lobe of the lungs.—Hipp.

APAG'MA, *Apoclas'ma, Apoccaulis'menon, from απο, 'from,' and αγρα, 'I remove.' Separation, abduction. (q. v.) Separation of a fractured bone.—Galenus, Foësius.

APAGOGE, Inductio.

APALACHINE, Ilex vomitoria—a. à feuilles de Prunier, Prinos—a. Gallis, Ilex vomitoria.

APAL'LAGE, from απαλλαγω, 'I change.' Mutation, change. It is generally taken in a good sense, and means the change from disease to health.—Hippocr.

APALOT'ICA, from απαλοτης, 'softness, tenderness.' Fortuitous lesions or deformities affecting the soft parts. The first Order in the Class Tychica, of Good.

APANTHIS'MUS, from απο, 'from,' and ανθισω, 'I flower.' The obliteration of parts, previously inservient to useful purposes, as of the ductus venosus and ductus arteriosus, which are essential to fetal existence, but are subsequently unnecessary. See, also, Stuprum.

APANTHRO'PIA, from απο, 'from,' and ανθρωπος, 'man.' Detestation of man; desire for solitude.—Hippocrates. One of the symptoms of hypochondriasis.

APAPHRISMOS, Despumation.

APARACH'YTUM VINUM, from a priv. and παραχυω, 'I pour over.' The purest wine: that which has not been mixed with sea-water.—Galen.

APARINE, Galium aparine.

APARTHROSIS, Diarthrosis.

AP'ATHY, *Apath'ia, from a priv. and παθος, 'affection.' (F) Apathie. Accidental suspension of the moral feelings. It takes place in very severe diseases, particularly in malignant fevers.

APECHE'MA, from απο, 'from,' and ηχος, 'sound.' Properly the action of reflecting sound. In Medicine, it is synonymous with the Latin Contrafissura. A counter-fissure, a counter-blow.—Gorræus, Celsus.

APECTOCEPHALUS, Acephalothorus.

APEL'LA or APPEL'LA, *Leipodermos, from a priv. and pellis, 'skin.' One whose prepuce does not cover the glans.—Galenus, Linnæus, Vogel. Retraction or smallness of any other soft appendage.—Sagar.

APEPSIA, Dyspepsia.

APE'RIENT, *Aperiens, Aperit'ivus, from aperire, 'to open.' A laxative, (q. v.) (F) Aperitif. A medicine which gently opens the bowels. The term had, formerly, a much more extensive signification, and was given to every substance supposed to have the power of opening any of the passages, and even the blood-vessels.

APERIS'TATON, *Aperis'tatum, from a privative, and περιστημι, 'I surround.' An epithet for an ulcer not dangerous or considerable, or surrounded by inflammation.

APÉRITIF, Aperient.

APERITIVUS, Aperient.

APERTOR OCULI, Levator palpebræ superioris.

APERTO'RIMUM, from aperio, 'I open.' An instrument for dilating the os uteri during labour.

APEUTHYSMENOS, Rectum.

APEX. The point or extremity of a part:—as the apex of the tongue, nose, &c.

APHERESIS, Apheresis, Extirpation.

APHASSOMENOS, from αφασσω, 'I touch, I feel.' The touching of the parts of generation of the female as a means of diagnosis.—Hippocr. See Esaphc.

APHELIA, αφελιας, 'simple.' Simplicity. The simple manners of the sect of Methodists in teaching and practising Medicine.

APHELXIA, from αφελια, 'I abstract.' Voluntary inactivity of the whole or the greater part of the external senses to the impressions of surrounding objects, during wakefulness. Revery, (F) Réverie.

Dr. Good has introduced this into his Nology, as well as Aphelia socors or absence of mind—A. intentia or abstraction of mind: and A. otiosa, Studium indane, brown study or listless musing.

APIEPSEMA, Decoction.

APHEPSIS, Decoction.

APHESIS, Languor, Remission.

APHE'RESIS or APIE'RESIS, from αφαιρω, 'I take away.' An operation by which any part of the body is separated from the other. Hippocrates, according to Foësius, uses the expression Aphaeresis Sanguinis, for excessive hemorrhage; and Sennertus, to express the condition of an animal deprived both of the faculties of the mind and of the mind itself.

APHESIS, from αφηναι, 'I relax.' A remission. This word expresses sometimes the diminution or cessation of a disease; at others, languor and debility of the lower extremities. See Languor and Remission.

APHILANTHROPY, Aphilanthropia, from a privative, φιλαιω, 'I love,' and ανθρωπος, 'a man.' Dislike to man. Love of solitude. Vogel has given this name to the first degree of melancholy.

APHISTESIS, Abscess.

APHODOS, Excrement.

APHONIA, Mutitas, Catalepsy—a. Surdorum. Mutitas Surdorum.

APHORIA, Sterilitas.

APHORME, αφορμη, 'occasion.' The external and manifest cause of any thing. The occasional cause of a disease.—Hippocrates.

APHRODES, αφροδης, 'frothy,' from αφρος, 'foam,' and ειδος, 'resemblance.' Applied to the blood and the excrements.—Hippocrates.

APHRODISIA, Coition, Puberty.

APHRODISIAC, Aphrodisiacus, from Αφροδιτην, 'Venus.' (F) Aphrodisiaque. Medicine or food believed to be capable of exciting to the pleasures of love; as ginger, cantharides, &c. They are generally stimulants.

APHRODISIACUS, Venereal.

APHRODISIASMUS, Coition.

APHRODISIOGRAPHY, from Αφροδιτην, 'Venus,' and γραφω, 'I describe.' Etymologically, this term means a description of the pleasures of love, but it has been placed at the head of a work describing the venereal disease.

APHROG'ALA, from αφρος, 'foam,' and γαλα, 'milk.' Lac spumosum. A name formerly given to milk rendered frothy by agitation.

APHRONIA, Apoplexy.

APHRONITRUM, Soda.

APIROSYNE, Insanity.

APHTHÆ or APHTÆ, Apthæ, from απτω; 'I inflame.' The Thrush or sore mouth. Apthæ lactu'cima, Emphlysis apthæ, Ulcera serpentina Oris, Pustula oris, Febris apthosa, Angina apthosa, Vesicula gingiværum, Typhus aphthoides, Follicular Stomatitis. It consists of roundish, pearl-coloured vesicles, confined to the lips, mouth, and intestinal canal, and generally terminating in curd-like sloughs. In France, the Apthæ of children, Apthes des enfans, is called Muguet, and Catarrhe buccal: and generally receives two divisions—the mild or discret, (F) Muguet bénin ou discret, and the malignant. (F) Muguet malin ou confluent, the Black Thrush. Common Thrush is a disease of no consequence, requiring merely the use of absorbent laxatives. The malignant variety, which is rare, is of a more serious character, and is accompanied with typhoid symptoms.

APIHTÆ SERPENTES, Cancer aquaticus.

APHTHES DES ENFANS, Apthæ.

APHTHEUX, Apthous.

APHTHOUS, Apthosus, (F) Apthoux. Belonging to Apthæ; complicated with Apthæ. As Apthous Fever.

APIASTRUM, Melissa.

APICES CRURUM MEDULLÆ OBLONGATÆ, Corpora striata.

APILEPSIA, Apoplexy.

APIOS, Pyrus communis.

APIS, Bee.

APITES, πιτης, from απιον, 'a pear.' Perry.—Gorraeus.

APIUM GRAVEOLENS, Apium, Paludarium, Bellivum, Smallage. (F) Ache. Nat. Ord. Umbellifera. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The plants, roots, and seeds are aperient and carminative.

The Selery is a variety of this.

APIUM PETRÆUM, Bubon Macedonicum.

APIUM PETROSELINUM, Apium Hortense, Elcoselinum (?), Grielinum; the Petroselinum or Common Parsley. (F) Persil. The roots and seeds are diuretic and aperient.

APLESTIA, Ingluvies, Intemperance.

APLEUROS, from a privative, and πλευρος, 'a rib.' One without ribs.—Hippocrates. Galen.

APLOTOMY, Aplotomia, from απλος, 'simple,' and τευνα, 'I cut.' A simple incision.

APNEUSTIA, Apnœa, Asphyxia.

APNEA, from a privative, and πνεω, 'I respire.' Absence of respiration, or insensible respiration.—Asphyxia, Apneustia: also, Orthopnœa, (q. v.)

APNÆSPHYXIA, Asphyxia.

APNUS, απνους. One devoid of respiration.

An epithet applied by authors to cases in which the respiration is so small and slow, that it seems suspended.—Castelli. It is probable, however, that the word was always applied to the patient, not to the disease.

APO, απο, a prefix, denoting 'from, of, off, out.' Hence—

APOBAINON, Eventus.

APOBESOMENON, Eventus.

APOBIOSIS, Death.

APOCAPNISMUS, Fumigation.

APOCASTASTASIS, Considentia, Restauratio.

APOCATHARSIS, Catharsis.

APOCATHARTICUS, Cathartic.

APOCEAULISMENON, Απαγμα.

APOCENOSIS, from απο, 'out,' and κενωσις, 'evacuation.' A partial evacuation, according to some, in opposition to Cenosis, which signifies a general evacuation.—Cullen and Swediaur apply it to morbid fluxes.

APOCENOSIS, Αβvacuatio—a. Diabetes mellitus, see Salivation—a. Vomitus pyrosis, Pyrosis.

APOCHOREON, Excrement.

APOCHREMPISIS, Exspuition.

APOCHYMA, from αποχρω, 'I pour out.'

A sort of tar, obtained from old ships; and which is impregnated with muriate of soda.—Aëtius, Paulus, Gorraeus.

APOCIN GOBE-MOUCHE, Apocynum androsæmifolium.

APOCLASMA, Abduction, Απαγμα.

APOC'OPĒ, from απο, and κοπτειν, 'to cut.'

Abscission, (q. v.) A wound with loss of substance. Fracture, with loss of part of the bone. Amputation.

APOCRISIS, Contagion, Excrement, Secretion.

APOCRUSTICA, Repellents.

APOCYESIS, Parturition.

APOCROUS'TIC, Apocroustica remedia, from απο, 'out,' and κρουα, 'I push.' An astringent and repellent.—Galenus.

APOC'YNUM ANDROSÆMIFOLIUM, Dog's Bane. (F) Apocin gobe-mouche. Nat. Ord. Apocynæ. Scr. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. This American plant is found from Canada to Carolina. Thirty grains evacuate the stomach as effectually as two-thirds of the amount of Ipecacuanha, by which name it is known in various parts of the eastern states. It is in the secondary list of the Pharmacopœia of the United States.

APOC'YNUM CANNAB'INUM, Indian Hemp. This American plant possesses emetic, cathartic, diaphoretic and diuretic properties, and has been strongly recommended in dropsy. It has been given in decoction,—ʒij of the root boiled in three pints of water to two. A wine-glassful for a dose.

APOCYNUM SCANDENS, Allamanda.

APODACRYT'ICUS, Delachrymativus, from απο, 'from,' and δακρυα, 'I weep.' A substance, supposed to occasion a flow of the tears, and then to arrest them.—Columella, Pliny, Galenus.

APODYTERIUM, Conist'erium, Spoliato'rium, Spoliad'rium, from αποδυα, 'I strip off.' The ante-room, where the bathers stripped themselves in the ancient Gymnasia.

APOGALACTISMUS, Weaning.

APOGALACTOS, Exuber.

APOGEUSIS, Agustia.

APOGEUSTIA, Agustia.

APOGLAUCOSIS, Glaucosis.

APOG'ONUM, from απο, and γινωμαι, 'I exist.' A living fœtus in utero.—Hippocrates.

APOLEP'SIS, from απολαμβανω, 'I retain.' Retention, suppression.—Hippocrates. Asphyxia.

APOLEX'IS, from αποληγω, 'I cease.' Old age, decrepitude.

APOLINO'SIS, from λινον, 'a flaxen thread.' The mode of operating for Fistula in ano, by means of a thread of Homolinon or Linum cruidum.—Hippocrates, Paulus.

A POLLINARIS ALTERCUM, Ηυοσηγamus.

APOLUTICA, Cicatrisantia.

APOLYS'IA or APOLYSIS, from απολυα, 'I loosen.' Solution. Relaxation: debility of the limbs or looseness of bandages.—Erotian.

Expulsion of the fœtus and its dependencies. Termination of a disease.—Hippocrates, Galen.

APOMATHE'MA or APOMATHE'SIS, from απο, and μηθανα, 'I learn.' Forgetfulness of things taught.—Hippocr.

APOM'ELI, from απο, 'of,' and μελι, 'honey.' An oxymel (q. v.) or decoction made of honey.—Galen, Aëtius, Paulus, &c.

APOMEXIS, Munctio.

APOMYLE'NAS, from απομυλλανω, 'I make a wry mouth.' One who pushes his lips forwards, pressing them against each other. Occasionally a symptom of nervous fever.—Galen, Erotian.

APOMYTHIO'SIS, from απομυθισσα, 'I snore.' A disease in which there is Stertor.—Sauvages, Sagar.

APONEUROGRAPHY, Aponeurographia, from απονευρωσις, an 'aponeurosis,' and γραφη, 'a description.' A description of the Aponeuroses.

APONEUROLOGY, Aponeurologia, from απονευρωσις, 'an aponeurosis,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' Aponeurosiology. The Anatomy of the Aponeuroses.

APONEUROSILOGY, Aponeurology.

APONEURO'SIS or APONEVRO'SIS, from απο, 'from,' and νευρον, 'a nerve.' Pronervatio, Εξαν'σio νερω'σα. (F) Aponeurose, Aponevrose. The ancients called every white part νευρον, and regarded the Aponeurosis as a nervous expansion. The Aponeuroses are white, shining membranes, very resisting, and composed of fibres interlaced. Some are continuous with the muscular fibres, and differ only from tendons, by their flat form. They are called Aponeuroses of insertion, (F) Aponevroses d'insertion, when they arc at the extremities of muscles, and attach them to the bone.—Aponeuroses of intersection, (F) Aponevroses d'intersection, if they interrupt the continuity of the muscle, and are continuous on both sides with muscular fibres. The others surround the muscle, and prevent its displacement: they are called Enveloping Aponeuroses, (F) Aponevroses d'enveloppe.

APONEUROSIS, Fascia—a. Crural, Fascia lata—a. Femoral, Fascia lata—a. Iliac, Fascia iliaca.

APONEUROT'IC, Aponeuroticus. What relates to Aponeuroses:—thus we say, Aponeurotic expansion, Aponeurotic muscle, &c.

APONEUROT'OMY, Aponeurotomia, from απονευρωσις, 'aponeurosis,' and τεμνω, 'I cut.' Anatomy of Aponeuroses.

It has, also, been proposed for the division, (débridement) of filaments, &c. in aponeurotic openings.

APONEVROSE SUPERFICIELLE DE L'ABDOMEN ET DE LA CUISSE, Fascia superficialis.

APONEVROSIS, Aponeurosis.

APONIA, from α privative, and πονος, 'pain.' Freedom from pain.

APONIPSIS, Ablution.

APOPALLE'SIS or APOPAL'SIS, from αποτρελλω, 'I throw off.' Expulsion. Protrusion.—Hippocr; also, Abortion, (q. v.)

APOPATE'MA and APOP'ATHOS. The excrements, and the place where they are deposited.—Dioscorides, Erotian.

APOPE'DASIS, Luxation.

AOPHLEGMATISANS PER NARES,
Erhrline—a. per os, Sialagogue.

AOPHLEGMATISANTIA, Apophlegma-tison'ta, from απο, 'out,' and φλεγμα, 'phlegm.'
Medicines, which facilitate the upward expulsion of mucus from the mucous membrane of the digestive or air-passages,—as gargles, masticatories, &c.

AOPHLEGMATISM, Apophlegmatis'mus,
the action of Apophlegmatisantia.—Galen.

AOPH'RADES, from απεφρες, 'unlucky,' an epithet applied to unlucky days (dies nefandi.) Days on which a favourable change is not expected to occur in a disease.—A. Laurentius.

AOPH'RAXIS, Amenorrhœa.

AOPH'THORA, Abortion.

AOPH'THORIUS, Abortive.

AOPH'THAR'MA and AOPH'THORA, from απο, and φθιρω, 'I corrupt.' Abortion, as well as a medicine to procure abortion.

AOPHYADES, from απο, 'from,' and φυα,
'I spring.' The ramifications of veins and arteries.—Hippocr.

AOPHYSE BASILAIRE, Basiliary process
—a. engainante ou vaginale, Vaginal process.

AOPHYSES ÉPINEUSES, Spinous processes of the vertebrae.

AOPH'YSIS, from απο, 'from,' and φυα,
'I rise.' Processus, Appendix. A process of a bone. When the apophysis is yet separated from the body of the bone by intervening cartilage, it is called Epiphysis. The apophyses or processes are, at times, distinguished by epithets, expressive of their form; as A. styloid, A. coracoid, &c. Others are not preceded by the word apophysis; as Trochanter, Tuber-osity, &c.

AOPH'YSIS OF INGRAS'SIAS, is a term applied to the lesser ala of the sphenoid bone.

AOPHYSES OF RAU, Grêle apophyse du Marteau: see Malleus.

AOPIES'MA, from αποπιεζω, 'I compress.'
Hippocrates uses the term to signify a fancied expression or forcing out of humours, by the application of bandages in wounds and fractures.

AOPLANESIS, Error loci.

AOPLEC'TIC, Apoplecticus. Referring to Apoplexy. This word has various significations. It is applied, 1. To individuals labouring under apoplexy: 2. To remedies proper for combating apoplexy: 3. To the constitution, temperament, or make, Architectura apoplectica, which predisposes to it: and, 4.
To the symptoms, which characterize apoplexy; as Apoplectic sleep, A. stroke, A. stertor, &c. The jugular veins have also, by some been called Apoplectic veins.—Venæ apoplecticae.

AOPLEXIA CATALEPSIA, Catalepsia—
a. Hydrocephalica, Hydrocephalus internus—a.
Temulenta, see Temulenta.

AP'OPLEXY, Apoplexia, *Hæmorrhagia
Cerebri*, Aphro'nia, Carus Apoplexia, *Coma
Apoplexia*, Pulpc'zia, Sideratio, Apilexy'sia,

Morbus atton'itus, Gutta, Theople'gia, Theoplex'ia, from αποπληττω, 'to strike with violence.' (F) Apoplexie, Coup de sang. A disease, characterized by diminution, or loss of sensation and mental manifestation; by the cessation, more or less complete, of motion; and by a comatose state,—circulation and respiration continuing. It generally consists in pressure upon the brain; either from turgesc-cence of vessels or from extravasation of blood; and the general prognosis is unfavourable; especially when it occurs after the age of 35.

When A. is accompanied with a hard, full pulse, and flushed countenance, it is called apoplexia sanguin'ea, cataph'ora coma; when with a feeble pulse and pale countenance, Apoplexia serosa, and A. pùitiosa, serous apoplexy, cataphora hydrocephalica.

APOPLEXY, PULMONARY, see Hæmoptysis.

APOPNI'XIS, Suffocation.

APOPSYCHIA, Syncope.

APOPTOSIS, from αποπιπτω, 'I fall down.'
A relaxation of bandages.—Erotian.

APORRHŒA, Contagion.

APORRE'IA, from απεργω, 'I flow from.'
An emanation, effluvia, contagion.—Moschion.

APOSCEM'MA, and APOSCEP'SIS, from αποσκηντω, 'I lie down, I direct myself towards.' Afflux of fluids towards a part. Metastasis. The first word has been applied to the excrements.—Hippocr., Galen.

APOSCEPARNIS'MUS, Dease'ntio, from απο, and σκαπαρον, 'a hatchet.' Wound of the cranium, by a cutting instrument, in which a piece of the bone has been cut out, as with a hatchet.—Gorræus.

APOSCEPSIS, Apocsemma.

APOSCHASIS or APOSCHAS'MOS, from αποσχάζω, 'I scarify.' Scarification. A slight superficial incision in the skin. Also, bloodletting.—Hippocr.

APOS'IA, Sitis defectus, from a privative, and ποσις, 'drink,' want of thirst, absence of desire for liquids.

APOSIT'IA, from απο, 'from,' and σιτος,
'food.' Aversion for food.—Galen. See Disgust.

APOSIT'IC, Apositicus; the same etymology. Any substance which destroys the appetite, or suspends hunger.

AOSPAS'MA, from αποσπασ, 'I tear or lacerate.' A solution of continuity, especially of a ligament. Rhegma ligamentaria, Laerula ligamentaria. Arachement, (q. v.)

AOSPHACEL'ESIS, Aosphacclis'mus, from απο, and σφαικελος, 'mortification.' Gangrene in wounds and fractures, owing to the bandages being too tight.—Hippocr.

AOSPHINX'IS, αποσφιξις; constriction, compression. The action of a tight bandage.—
Hippocr.

AOSPONGIS'MUS, αποσπογγισμος; the act of sponging for any purpose.—Gorræus.

APOSTALAG'MA, and APOSTAG'MA, from απο, 'from,' and σταλαζω, 'I flow.' The ancient name for the saccharine liquor which flows from grapes when not yet pressed.

APOSTASIS, from απο, and σταμημι, 'I stop.'
The ancients had different significations for this word. It was most commonly used for an abscess. The separation of a fragment of bone by fracture. Removal of disease by some excretion, &c.

APOSTAX'IS, from αποσταξω, 'I distil from.' The defluxion of any humour, as of blood from the nose.—Hippocr. Staxis (q. v.)

APOSTEMA, from απο, 'from,' and ιστημι, 'I settle,' or from αφιστημι, 'I recede from.' This word is used by the ancients, somewhat vaguely. It meant an affection in which parts, previously in contact, are separated from each other by a fluid collected between them. The moderns regard it as synonymous with Abscess. (q. v.) Some, even of the moderns, have applied it to any watery tumour, and even to tumours in general.

APOSTEMA EMPYEMA, Empyema—a. Parulis, Parulis—a. Phalangium, Fourche—a. Psoaticum, Lumbar abscess.

APOSTERIG'MA, from αποστηριζω, 'I support.' Any thing that supports a diseased part, as a cushion, a pillow, &c.—Galen. A deep-seated and inveterate disease of the intestines.—Hippocr.

APOSTOLO'RUM UNGUENTUM, Doceaphar'macum, Ointment of the Apostles. So called, because as many solid ingredients entered into its composition as there were Apostles. It contained several resins and gum resins, yellow wax, oil, vinegar, verdigris, &c., and was formerly employed as a vulnerary.

APOSTROPHE, from απο, and στροφω, 'I turn.' An aversion, disgust for food.—Paulus.

APOSYRMA, Abrasion, Desquamation.

APOTELES'MA, from απο, and τελεσμαι, 'completion.' The result or termination of a disease. See, also, Amuletum.

APOTHANASIA, see Death.

APOTHE'CA, αποθηκη, Pharmaceutum, from απο, and θημι, 'to place.' Any place where things are kept, and therefore 'a shop.' A place where medicines are kept. See Pharmacopolium.

APOTHECARY, Apothecarius, Dispensator, Pharmacopola, Pigmentarius, Pharmacopœus, Rhizotomus, Myriopoles, same derivation. (F) Apothicaire, Pharmacien, Pharmacopole. In every country, except Great Britain, it means one who sells drugs, makes up prescriptions, &c. In addition to these offices, which, indeed, they rarely exercise, except in the case of their own patients, the Apothecaries in England form a privileged class of practitioners—a kind of sub-physician.

APOTHECARIES' HALL; the Hall of the Corporation or Society of Apothecaries of London, where medicines are prepared and sold under their direction, &c. This Company obtained a charter of incorporation in the 15th year of James the First. No general practitioner can establish himself in England or Wales without having obtained a license from the Court of Examiners of the Company.

APOTHERAPEIA, from αποθεραπεω, 'I cure.' A perfect cure.—Hippocr. In the ancient Gymnastics, it meant the last part of the exercises:—the friction, inunction, and bathing, for the purpose of obviating fatigue, or curing disease.—Galen, Gorræus.

APOTHER'MUM, a pickle made of mustard, oil, and vinegar.—Galen. From απο, and θερμ, 'heat.'

APOTHE'SIS, from αποτιθημι, 'I replace.' The position proper to be given to a fractured limb, after reduction.

APOTHECAIRE, Apothecary.
APOTHECAIRERIE, (F), from αποθηκη, 'warehouse, shop.' The same as Apotheca; also, a gallipot.

AIOTHLIM'MA, from απο, and θλιβω, 'I press from.' Anciently, the dregs, and sometimes the expressed juice of plants.—Gorræus.

APOTHRAU'SIS, from αποθραυω, 'I break.' Fracture of a bone, with spicula remaining. Extraction of a spiculum of bone.—Gorræus. Also, Abscission. (q. v.)

APOTYOKOS, from απο, and τυτω, 'I bring forth.' An abortive fœtus.—Hippocr.

APOTILMOS, Evulsion.

APOTOME, Amputation.

APOTROPÆUM, Amuletum.

APOTROPE, Aversion.

APOXYSMUS, Abrasion.

APOZEM, Decoction.

APPARAT'US, Parasceuë, from παρ'ε, 'to prepare.' This word signifies,—a collection of instruments, &c. for any operation whatever. (F) Appareil.

In surgery it means the methodical arrangement of all the instruments and objects necessary for an operation or dressing. By extension, the French give the name Appareil, capsa chirurgica, to the case or drawers in which the apparatus is arranged.

APPARATUS, IMMOVABLE, (F.) Appareil immobile, Immovable Bandage, Permanent Bandage. An apparatus used for fractures, which is generally formed by wetting the bandages on some substance, as starch or dextrine, which becomes solid, and retains the parts in situ.

Apparatus has likewise been applied to the different modes of operating for the stone.—See Lithotomy.

In Physiology, Apparatus (Appareil) is applied to a collection of organs, all of which work towards the same end. A system of organs comprehends all those formed of a similar texture. An apparatus often comprehends organs of very different nature. In the former, there is analogy of structure; in the latter, analogy of functions.

APPARATUS ALTUS, see Lithotomy—a. Lateralis, see Lithotomy—a. Major, see Lithotomy—a. Minor, see Lithotomy.

APPAREIL, Apparatus—a. Grand, see Lithotomy—a. Haut, see Lithotomy—a. Immobile, apparatus, immovable—a. Lateralisé, see Lithotomy—a. Petit, see Lithotomy.

APPAREILS DE FORMATION, (F.) Gall admits, in the brain, two kinds of fibres: the one, divergent, proceeding from the cerebral peduncles to the convolutions, and constituting what he calls appareils de formation: the other, convergent, and proceeding from the convolutions to the centre of the organ, constituting what he calls appareils de réunion. The first, as a whole, form the organs of the mental faculties: the latter are commissures, which unite parts of the organ that are double and in pairs.

APPÄUVRI, Impoverished.

APPENDICE, Appendix—a. Cæcal, Appendix vermiformis cæci—a. Digital, Appendix vermiformis cæci—a. Epiplœiques, Appendicula epiploicæ—a Sous-sternale, Xiphoid cartilage—a. Sphænoïdale du cerveau, Pituitary gland—a. Xiphoidæ, Xiphoid cartilage.

APPENDICES COLI ADIPOSÆ, Appendiculæ epiploicæ.

APPENDICULA CEREBRI, Pituitary gland—a. Vermiformis cæci, see Appendix—a. Epiploicæ, Epiploic appendage.

APPENDICULÆ PINGUEDINOSÆ, Epiploic appendages.

APPENDICULÆ EPIPLOICÆ, Appendices coli adiposæ. (F) Appendices Epiploïques. Prolongations of the peritoneum beyond the surface of the great intestine, which are analogous in texture and arrangement to omenta.

APPENDIX, ἐπιρροισίς, from appendere, 'to hang from.' Any part that adheres to an organ, or is continuous with it:—seeming as if added to it. An appendage, an apophysis, (q. v.) (F) Appendice, Annexe.

APPENDIX OF APPENDICULA VERMIFORMIS CÆCI, Ἐπιφύας, ἐκφύσις, Additamentum Coli, Appendix Cæci. (F) Appendix vermiforme, A. cæcal or digital. A vermicular process, the size of a goose-quill, which hangs from the intestine cæcum. Its functions are unknown.

APPENDIX CEREBRI, Pituitary gland—a. ad Cerebrum, Cerebellum—a. Ventriculi, Duodenum.

APPENSIO, see Analeptia.

APPETENCE, Appetentia, from appetere, 'to desire.' An ardent, passionate desire for any object.

APPETIT, PERTE D', Anorexia.

APPETITE, Appetitus, Appetentia, Appetitia, Cupido, Orex'is, Ormē, same etymology as the last. An internal sensation, which warns us of the necessity of exerting certain functions, especially those of digestion and generation. In the latter case it is called reuercal appetite. (F) Appetit vénérien: in the former, simply appetite. (F) Appetit ou appetition. If the desire for food, occasioned by a real want, be carried to a certain extent, it is called hunger, when solid food is concerned; thirst, when liquid. Appetite and hunger ought not, however, to be employed synonymously; they are different degrees of the same want. Hunger is an imperious desire: it cannot be provoked, like the appetite. It is always allayed by eating: but not so the appetite; for, at times, it may be excited in this manner. They are very generally, however, used synonymously.

APPETITE, MORBID, Limosis.

APPETITUS CANINUS, Boulimia.

APPLE, BITTER, Cucumis colocynthis—a. Curassoa, Aurantium curassaventium—a. May, Podophyllum peltatum—a. Tree, Pyrus malus.

APPLICATA, from applicare, 'to apply.' A word, unnecessarily introduced into medical language, to express the objects which are applied immediately to the surface of the body, as clothes, cosmetics, baths, &c.—Hallé.

APPLICATION, Applicatio, in a moral signification, is synonymous with Attention. Also, the act of applying one thing to another; as the A. of an apparatus, of a bandage, blister, &c.

APPREHENSIO. This word is employed in various senses. It means catalepsy, (q. v.) or catochia.—Paul Zacchias. A kind of bandage for securing any part. Also, a therapeutic indication.

APPROXIE, Coition.

APPROXIMATION, Approximatio. Ettmüller gave this name to a pretended method of curing disease, by making it pass from man into some animal or vegetable, by the aid of immediate contact.

APRAC'TA, from a priv. and πρασσα, 'I act.' Without action. An epithet for the parts of generation, when unfit for copulation or generation.

APRICATIO, Isolation.

APRICOT, Prunus Armeniaca.

APROSOPIA, from a priv. and προσωπov, 'the face.' A malformation, which consists in the face being deficient.

APSINTHATUM, from αψινθινον, 'wormwood.' A sort of drink made of wormwood.—Aëtius.

APSINTHITES, Absinthites.

APSYCHIA, Syncope.

APTHÆ, Aphthæ.

APTYS'TOS, from a priv. and πτυσσ, 'I spit.' Devoid of expectoration. An epithet given to certain pleuritis, in which there is no expectoration.—Hippocr.

APYETOS, from a priv. and πυον, 'pus.' An external affection, which does not end in suppuration.

APYIQUE, Apyos.

APYOS, from a priv. and πυον, 'pus.' (F) Apyique. That which does not afford pus.

APYRENOMELE, Apyromele.

APYRETIC, Apyreticus, from a priv. and πυρ, 'fire, fever.' Without fever. This epithet is given to days in which there is no paroxysm of a disease; as in the case of an intermittent; as well as to some local affections which do not induce fever. Urticaria is sometimes called an apyretic exanthem.

APYREXIA, the same etymology. Absence of fever: Diacrimma, Intermissio. Apyrexia is the condition of an intermittent fever between the paroxysms: the duration of the apyrexia, consequently, depends on the type of the intermittent. Occasionally, the term has been applied to the cessation of the febrile condition in acute diseases.

APYROMELE or APYRENOMELE, from a priv. πυρην, 'a nut,' and μελεν, 'a sound.' A sound or probe, without a button or nut. It is the Melo'tis, Specillum auriculæ rium or auricular sound of Galen.

AQUA, Water—a. Acidula hydrosulfurata, Naples water (faetitious)—a. Aeris fixi, Acidulous water (simple)—a. Alkalina oxymuriatica, Eau de Javelle—a. Aluminis compositus, Liqueur a. c.—a. AQUÆ DESTILLATÆ, Distilled Waters. Hydrolata, (F) Hydrolats. These are made by putting vegetable substances, as roses, mint, pennyroyal, &c. into a still with water, and drawing off as much as is found to possess the aromatic properties of the plant. To every gallon of the distilled water, 5 oz. of spirit should be added to preserve it. The simple distilled waters are sometimes called Aquæ stillatit'ie simplicis: the spirituous, Aquæ stillatit'ie spirituosæ, but more commonly Spiritus.

AQUÆ MINERALES ACIDULÆ, Waters, mineral, gazeous—a. Minerales ferruginosæ, Waters, mineral, chalybeate—a. Minerales salinæ, Waters, mineral, saline—a. Minerales sulphuræ, Waters, mineral, sulphureous—a. Stillatitæ, Aquæ distillatæ—a. Solis, Bath Mineral waters.

AQUÆDUCTUS, Aqueductus, (F) Aqueduc. Properly, a canal for conducting water from one place to another. Anatomists have used it to designate certain canals.

AQUÆDUCTUS CEREBRI, Infundibulum of the brain—a. Cotunnii, Aqueductus vestibuli,

AQUÆDUCTUS FALLOPII, Canal spirôide de l'os temporal, of Chaussier, Aqueduc de Fallope. A canal in the pars petrosa of the temporal bone, which extends from the meatus auditorius internus to the foramen stylo-mastoideum, and gives passage to the facial nerve. The opening into this aqueduct is called the Hidus Fallopii.

AQUÆDUCTUS VESTIBULI or Aqueductus Cotunnii, (F) Aqueduc du vestibule and Aqueduc de Cotugno. This begins in the vestibule, near the common orifice of the two semicircular canals, and opens at the posterior surface of the pars petrosa.

AQUÆDUCTUS COCHLÆE, (F) Aqueduc du Limaçon;—a very narrow canal, which proceeds from the tympanic scala of the cochlea, to the posterior edge of the pars petrosa.

AQUÆDUCTUS SYLVII, Aqueduc de Sylvius, Iter ad quartum ventriculorum, Canalis medius, Canal intermédiaire des ventricules of Chaussier. A canal forming a communication between the third and fourth ventricles of the brain.

AQUALICULUS. That part of the abdomen which extends from the umbilicus to the pubes. See Hypogastrium. It has also been applied to the stomach or intestinal canal.

AQUAS"TER. A word used, by Paracelsus, to express the visions or hallucinations of patients.

AQUEDUC, Aqueduct—a. de Cotugno, Aqueductus vestibuli—a. de Fallope, Aqueductus Fallopii—a. du Limaçon, Aqueductus cochleæ a. de Sylvius, Aqueductus Sylvii—a. du Vestibule, Aqueductus vestibuli.

A'QUEOUS, Aquo'sus, 'watery,' Hydato's, Hydro's, from aqua, 'water,' (F) Aqueux.

The absorbents or lymphatics are sometimes called, in France, Conduits ou canaux aqueux.

AQUEOUS HUMOUR OF THE EYE, Humor aquo'sus, the Albugineous humour, Ophi's, oφιδης, Hydatoid's, υδατωιδης, Ov'dus or Ovifor'mis humor, (F) Humeur aqueuse. The limpid fluid, which fills the two chambers of the eye, from the cornea to the crystalline, and which is, consequently, in contact with the two surfaces of the iris. Quantity, 5 or 6 grains: s. g. 1.0003. It contains gelatine, albumen, muriate of soda, and phosphate of lime in small quantity; and is enveloped in a fine membrane:—the membrane of the aqueous humour—the Tunica propria seu Vag'ina humo'ris d'quei, Denur'id'na membr'd'na.

AQUIDUCA, hydragogues.

AQUIFOLIUM, Ilex aquifolium.

AQUILA, Hydroa, Hydrargyri submurias, Sulphur.

AQUILA. The alchemists used this word for sublimed sal ammoniac, precipitated mercury, arsenic, sulphur, and the philosopher's stone. See Hydrargyri Submurias, and Sulphur: also, Hydroa.

AQUILA CELESTIS; a sort of panacea, of which mercury was a constituent.

AQUILA LACH'RYMÆ; a liquid prepared from several ingredients, especially from colomet.

AQUILA PHILOSOPHO'RUM; the alchemists, whose terms were always mysterious, called mercury thus, when reduced to its original form.

AQUILA VENERIS; an ancient preparation, made by subliming verdigris and sal ammoniac.

AQUILÆ VENÆ, Temporal veins.

AQUILE'GIA VULGA'RIS, Common Columbine, (F) Ancolie. The seeds, herb, and flowers were formerly used in jaundice and cutaneous diseases. They are still retained in many of the Pharmacopœias of continental Europe.

AQUO-CAPSULITIS, Aquo-membranitis?

AQUO-MEMBRANITIS, Keratoiritis, Aquocapsulitis: inflammation of the anterior chamber of the eye. A badly compounded term, denoting inflammation of the capsule or membrane of the aqueous humour.

AQUULA, Ceratocele, Hydatid—a. Acustica, Cotunnus, liquor of.

ARA PARVA, a small altar;—a kind of bandage invented by Sostratus; which represents the corners of an altar.—Galen.

ARABĒ; a wound, a blow.—Erolian.

ARABICA ANTIDOTUS HEPATICA, Arab'ic Hepat'ic Ant'idot. A powder, composed of myrrh, costus, white pepper, &c. It was administered in new wine.

ARABICUS LAPIS. A sort of white marble, found in Arabia and analogous to alabaster. It was regarded as an absorbent and desiccative, and was employed in hæmorrhoids.

ARABIS MALAG'MA. An anti-scorfulous medicine, composed of myrrh, oilibanum, wax, sal ammoniac, iron pyrites, &c.—Celsus.

ARABS, MEDICINE OF THE. The Arabians kept the torch of medical science illuminated, during a dark period of the middle ages. Before the year of the Hegira, they had Schools of Medicine; but these were most flourishing during the 10th, 11th, and 12th centuries. The chief additions made by them to medical science, occurred in the departments of pharmacy and in the description of diseases. Their principal writers were Avicenna, Serapion, Averrhoes, Hali Abbas, Moses Mainonides, Avenzoar, Rhazes, Albucasis, &c.

ARACH'NĒ, αραχνη, 'a spider, a cobweb.' Hence—

ARACHNITIS or ARACHNOIDITIS, Inflammation of the Arachnoid. A variety of phrenitis; which see.

ARACHNOID MEMBRANE, Meninx Media, Arachnoideus, Arachno's, from αραχνη, 'a cobweb,' and ειδος, 'form, resemblance.' Tu'nica ar'anea, Tu'nica arachno's, Menin'gion. A name given to several membranes, which, by their extreme thinness, resemble spider-webs.—Celsus and Galen called thus the membrane of the vitreous humour,—the tunica hyaloidea. The moderns use it now for one of the membranes of the brain, situate between the dura mater and pia mater. It is a serous membrane, and composed of two layers; the external being confounded, in the greater part of its extent, with the dura mater, and, like it, lining the interior of the cranium and spinal canal: the other being extended over the brain, from which it is separated by the pia mater, without passing into the sinuosities between the convolutions, and penetrating into the interior of the brain by an opening at its posterior part under the corpus callosum. It forms a part of the investing sheath of the nerves, as they pass from the encephalic cavities. Its chief uses seem to be;—to envelop, and, in some measure, protect the brain, and to secrete a fluid for the purpose of keeping it in a state best adapted for the proper performance of its functions.

ARACHNOIDITIS, Arachnitis.

ARACK' Arrack; Indian. A spirituous liquor made in India in various ways, often from rice, sometimes from sugar fermented along with the juice of the cocoa nut: frequently from toddy, the juice which flows from the cocoa nut tree by incision, and from other substances. It is a strong, heating spirit.

MOEK ARAEK is made by adding  $\frac{1}{2}$  of Benzic acid to a quart of rum. The celebrated Vauxhall punch is made with such arack.

ARACOUCHINI, Iceia aracouchini.

ARACUS AROMATICUS, Vanilla.

ARADOS, from αραδω, 'I am turbulent.' The agitation excited in the stomach by the coction of aliments of different nature.—Hippocr. Likewise, the motion produced by cathartics.

ARÆOTICA, from αρατω, 'I rarefy.' Medicines supposed to have the quality of rarefying the humours. See Rarefaciens.

ARAKI, see Spirit.

ARALIA NUDICAULIS, False Sarsaparilla. This American plant is said to be a mild stimulant and diaphoretic, and has been recommended as a substitute for the sarsaparilla. It is used, also, as a tonic. In the secondary list, Pharm. United States.

ARALIA SPINOSA, Anglica Tree, Prickly Ash, Toothack Tree. Its properties are not clear. The berries, and a tincture of them have been employed, it is said, successfully in toothach. A spirituous infusion has also been used in colic.

ARANEÆ TARENTULA, see Tarantula.

ARANEÆ TELA, Cobweb, (F) Toile d'Araignée. Formerly, this substance was much employed, and supposed to possess extraordinary virtues, especially when applied to the wrists. It has been recently used again in intermit- tents. It is a mechanical styptic, and is so applied, externally, at times.

ARANEÆSA URINA; a term applied to the urine when loaded with filaments, like cobwebs.

ARANEÆSUS PULSUS; a term employed to express extreme weakness of pulse; when the movements resemble those of a delicate net raised by the wind.

ARANEÆUM ULCUS, Astakillo's. A name given by Paracelsus to a malignant, gangrenous ulcer, extending from the feet to the legs.

ARARA, Myrobalanus citrina.

ARASCON, Nymphomania, Satyriasis.

ARATRUM, Vomer.

ARBOR BENIVI, Benjamin—a. Indica, Laurus cassia—a. Maris, Coral—a. Thurifera, Juniperus Lycia.

ARBOR VITÆ, (F) Arbre de vie. A name given to an arborescent appearance, observed on cutting the cerebellum longitudinally; and which results from the particular arrangement of the white substance with the cineritious; also, the Thuya occidentalis, (q. v.)

ARBOREŒ. A morbid alteration of the skin, which precedes its alteration.—Ruland.

ARBOUSIER, Arbutus unedo.

ARBRE DE VIE, Arbor Vitæ.

ARBUSCULA GUMMIFERA BRAZILIENSIS, Hypericum Bacciferum.

ARBUSUS UVA URSI, Arctostaphylos, Uva Ursi Folia. Nat. Ord. Ericææ, Sec. Syst. Decandria Monogynia, (F) Busserolle ou Raisin d'Ours. The leaves of this plant are tonic and astringent, and have been employed, chiefly, in diseases of the urinary organs. Dose of powder from gr. xv. to ʒss. The English name is Bear's Whortleberry.

The ARBUSUS UNE'DO, Andrachne, Une'do, Une'do papyra'cea, κμαγος, (F) Arbousier. A decoction of the leaves is astringent, and has been used in diarrhœa.

ARC or ARCH, Arcus. Any part of the body resembling an arch in form; as the Arch of the colon. (F) Arc du colon;—the transverse portion of that intestine:—Arch of the aorta, Arcus aortæ, (F) Crosse de l'Aorte, &c.: the turn which the aorta takes in the thorax.

An ANASTOMOTIC ARCH, (F) Arcade anastomotique, is the union of two vessels, which anastomose by describing a curved line. The vessels of the mesentery anastomose in this manner.

ARCHES OF THE PALATE. These are two in number on each side of the throat, one of which is termed anterior, the other posterior.

The anterior arch arises from the middle of the velum palati, at the side of the uvula, and is fixed to the edge of the base of the tongue.

The posterior arch has its origin, likewise, from the side of the uvula, and passes downwards to be inserted into the side of the pharynx.

The anterior arch contains the circumflexus palati, and forms the isthmus faucium. The posterior arch has, within it, the levator palati: and between the arches are the tonsils.

ARCA ARCANORUM, Hydrargyrum—a. Cordis, Pericardium.

ARCADE ANASTOMOTIQUE, Arch anastomotique—a. Crurale, Crural arch—a. Inguinale, Crural arch—a. Orbitaire, Orbital arch—a. Pubicæ, Pubic arch—a. Zygomatique, Zygomatich arch.

ARCADES DENTAIRES, Dental arches.

ARCADES PALMAIRES, Palmar arches.

ARCA-DI-TEMPORO-MAXILLARE, Temporals.

ARCÆUS or ARCŒUS, BALSAM OF. (F) Baume d'Arcæus. A kind of soft ointment used in sores, contusions, &c. It is made by melting two parts of mutton suet, one part of hog's lard: of turpentine and rosin, each one part and a half: straining and agitating till cold.

ARCANSON, Colophonia.

ARCANUM, from ar'ca, 'a chest.' A secret, a nostrum, (F) Arcane. A remedy whose composition is kept secret; but which is reputed to possess great efficacy.

ARCANUM CORALLINUM, Hydrargyri nitricooxydum—a. Duplicatum, Potassæ sulphas—a. Tartari, Potassæ acetas.

ARCATOS, Meros.

ARCEAU, Arculus, Cradle.

ARCEUTOS, Juniperus communis.

ARCHÆUS, Archæus, from αρχη, 'commencement,' (F) Archée. A word, invented by Basil Valentine, and afterwards adopted by Paracelsus and Van Helmont. The latter used it for the internal principle of our motions and actions. This archæus, according to Van Helmont, is an immaterial principle, existing in the seed, prior to fecundation, and presiding over the development of the body, and over all organic phenomena. Besides this chief archæus, whose seat Van Helmont placed in the upper orifice of the stomach, he admitted several of a subordinate character, which had to execute its orders: one, for instance, in each organ, to preside over its functions: each of them being subject to anger, caprice, error, and every human failing.

ARCHANGELICA, Lanium album.

ARCHĒ, αρχη, Initium, Principium, Invasio; the first attack of a disorder.

ARCHĒE, Archæus.

ARCHELL, CANARY, Lichen roccella.

ARCHELO'GIA, from αρχη, 'beginning,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A treatise on the fundamental principles of Medicine.

ARCHIEN'DA. A powder of the leaves of the ligustrum, used, by the Egyptians, after bathing, to obviate the unpleasant odour of the feet.—Prosper Alpinus.

ARCHIATER; Protomedicus, Protiatros, from αρχη, 'authority,' and ιατρος, 'physician.' The original signification of this word is a matter of dispute. Some consider, with Mercurialis, that it meant physician to a prince, king, emperor, &c.; others, with C. Hoffmann, apply it to every physician who, by his situation, is raised above his colleagues. The former opinion seems to have prevailed,—Archiatre des Rois de France, being applied to the chief physician to the king.

ARCHIG'ENI MOR'BI. Acute diseases; because they hold the first rank: from  $\alpha\rho\chi\eta$ , 'beginning,' and  $\gamma\iota\nu\omicron\mu\alpha\iota$ , 'I am.'

ARCHIMAGIA, Chymistry.

ARCHINGEAY, MINERAL WATERS OF. Archingeyay is situate in France, three leagues from St. Jean d'Angely. The waters are prized in all diseases. They seem to contain carbonate of lime, a little muriate of soda, carbonate of iron, and some bitumen.

ARCHITECTURA APOPLECTICA, Apoplectic mæke.

ARCHOPTOSIS, Proctocle.

ARCHORRHA'GIA, from  $\alpha\rho\chi\omicron\varsigma$ , 'the anus,' and  $\rho\omega$ , 'I flow.' Hemorrhage from the anus. Archorra'ia.

ARCHORRHŒA, Archorrhagia.

ARCHOS, Arcus, Rectum.

ARCHOSYRINX, Fistula in ano.

ARCTA'TIO and ARCTITU'DO, from arcto, 'I make narrow.' Contraction of a natural opening or of a canal, and especially of the vulva; of the orifice of the uterus, or of the intestinal canal. Constipation. Reunion by surgery or infibulation.—Scribonius Largus, Paul Zacchias, &c.

ARCTITUDO, Arctatio.

ARCTIUM LAPPÄ. The root and seed; the Clit-bar, Barda'na, Arctium, Plaphis, Lappa glabra, Lappa major, L. persou'ita, Burdock, (F) Bardane, Glouteron. Nat. Ord. Compositæ. Scr. Syst. Syngenesia æqualis. Root diuretic, seed cathartic. It has been used in decoction in diseases of the skin and in syphilis.

ARCTOSTAPHYLOS, Arbutus uva ursi.

ARCTU'RA, from arcto, 'I straiten.' The effects of a nail grown into the flesh, Arcta'ra unguis—Linnæus.

ARCUATIO. An anterior gibbosity or projection of the sternum. Concava'tio.

ARCUEIL, WATERS OF. Arcueil is about one league south of Paris. The water contains carbonic acid, carbonate of lime, sulphate of lime, muriate of soda, and some deliquescent salts.

A celebrated society held its meetings at this village, of which Berthollet, Humboldt, La Place, &c. were members.

ARCULA CORDIS, Pericardium.

ARCULÆ. The Orbital Fossæ:  $\rho\alpha\sigma\lambda\iota\delta\epsilon\varsigma$ .—Rufus of Ephesus.

ARCULUS. A small arch; a cradle, (q. v.) (F.) Arceau, Archet. A semicircular box or basket used for preventing the coverings of the body from coming in contact with injured or diseased parts. An ordinance of the Grand Duke of Tuscany forbade mothers to sleep with an infant near them, unless it was put under a solid cradle.

ARCUS MEDULLARIS, Fornix—a. Senilis, Gerotoxon.

ARDALOS, Excrement.

ARDAS, Excrement.

ARDENT. Ardens, from ardere, 'to burn.' Ardent Feccr, (F.) Fièvre ardente. The Causas, Synoeha, or inflammatory fever.

Mal des ardens, a name given to a species of pestilential erysipelas, or Saint Anthony's Fire, which reigned epidemically in France in 1130.

Ardent, or inflamed eyes, (F) Yeux ardens; so called when they are injected, red.

Ardent urine, (F) Urines ardentes; when it is of a deep red, &c.

ARDESIA HIBERNICA, Hibernicus lapis.

ARDEUR, Ardor—a. de l'Estomac, Ardor ventriculi—a. de la Fièvre, Ardor febrilis—a. d'Urine, Ardor urinae.

ARDOR, (F) Ardeur. Heat, (q. v.) A feeling of burning, of violent heat. Æstas, Æstudo'io, Causo'na.

ARDOR URINÆ, (F.) Ardeur d'Urine, a scalding sensation occasioned by the urine in passing over the inflamed mucous membrane of the urethra, or over the neck of the bladder.

ARDOR FEBRILIS, (F) Ardeur de la Fièvre, the hot period of fever.

ARDOR STOMACHI, Pyrosis.

ARDOR VENTRICULI, (F) Ardeur d'Estomac, Heartburn. See Cardialgia and Pyrosis.

ARĒA. A Latin word used by some authors to designate a variety of Alopecia, (q. v.) in which the hair changes colour, but does not fall off; also, Porrigo decalvans, (q. v.)

ARĒCA. The fruit of the ArĒca Cat'echu, Caul'ga. Nat. Ord. Palmæ, Scr. Syst. Monœcia Monadelphia. (F) ArĒc, is astringent and tonic, and enters into the composition of the Betel, the great masticatory of Orientals.

ARĒFAC'TION, ArĒfactio,  $\xi\eta\rho\alpha\tau\iota\varsigma$ , from arĒfacere, 'to make dry.' The process of drying substances, prior to pulverization.

ARENAMEN, Bole Armenian.

ARENATIO, Sand or Earth Bath, from arĒna, 'sand.' Saburra'tio. The application of hot sand to the body of a patient, instead of placing him in a water-bath. Pedila'ria of sand were formerly used in Ascites.

ARENOSA URINA. Sandy Urine. Urine when it deposits a sandy sediment. The person, passing such urine, has been called ArĒnosus.

ARENOSUS, Sabulosus.

ARĒOLA. A diminutive of ArĒa. Anatomists understand, by ArĒole, the interstices between the fibres composing organs; or those existing between laminæ, or between vessels which interlace with each other.

ArĒola is, also, applied to the coloured circle or Halo, which surrounds the nipple; and which becomes much darker during pregnancy, as well as to the circle surrounding certain vesicles, pustules, &c.; as the pustules of the small-pox, the vaccine vesicle, &c. Chaussier, in such cases, recommends the word AurĒola. (F) Aurtole, Aire.

ARĒOLAR, ArĒolaris, appertaining to an areola.

ARĒOLAR EXHALATIONS are those recremental secretions, which are effected within the organs of sense, or in parenchymatous structures,—as the aqueous, crystalline and vitreous humours, &c.

AREOMETER, Areom'eter, Gravim'eter, Alcoölon'eter, Aërostat'ic Bal'ance, from  $\alpha\rho\alpha\iota\varsigma$ , 'light,' and  $\mu\epsilon\tau\rho\nu$ , 'measure': i. e. measure of lightness. An instrument, so called, because first employed to take the specific gravity of fluids lighter than water. The Areometer of Beaumé, which is the most used in Pharmacy, particularly in France, consists of a tube of glass, largely expanded towards its inferior extremity, and terminating, below, by a small ball, containing mercury or lead, which serves it as a balance, so that it may remain upright in the fluid. This tube is furnished with a graduated scale. If the fluid, into which the Areometer is plunged, be heavier than water, the instrument rises: if lighter, it sinks. There are various Areometers, as those of the Dutch, of Fahrenheit, Nicholson, &c. The Areometer is also called Hydrom'ctcr, (F) Aréomètre, Pèsc-liqueur.

SCALE OF THE AREOMETER WITH CORRESPONDING SPECIFIC GRAVITIES.

1. Ascending Scale for light liquids.
(Beaumé.)

| Scale of Beaumé. | Specific Gravities. | Substances.   |
|------------------|---------------------|---|
|                  | 700                 | Pure hydrocyanic acid.— Gay Lussac .   |
| 66               | 715                 | Very pure sulphuric ether.  |
| 60               | 742                 | The same concentrated.  |

ARES; a term invented by Paracelsus to designate the principle on which depends the form of mercury, sulphur, and salt. These the Alchymists regarded as the three bodies that give birth to every other.

AR'ETĒ, ἀρετή, 'virtue.' Mental or corporeal vigour.—Hippocrates.

A'REÛS, A pessary, mentioned by Paulus of Ægina.

AR'GEMA and AR'GEMON, from ἀργός, 'white.' Fos'sula, (F) Encavure; a white spot or ulceration of the eye.—Hippocr. See Leucoma.

ARGEMONĒ MEXICANA, Thorn Poppy. A native of Mexico, but naturalized in most parts of the world. Nat. Ord. Papaveracæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monogynia. The juice resembles gamboge, and has been used as a hydragogue. The seeds are employed in the West Indies as a substitute for Ipecacuanha. They are also used as a cathartic.

ARGENSON, MINERAL WATERS OF. A chalybeate situate at Argenson in Dauphiny: used in cases of obstruction, jaundice, &c.

ARGENT, Argentum—a. Nitrate d', Argenti nitras.

ARGENTERIA, Potentilla anserina.

ARGENTI NITRAS, Argentum Nitratum, Sal argenti, Argentum Nitricum, Nitrate of Silver. This preparation is sometimes kept in crystals, the Nitras Argenti in crystallos concretus, Nitrate d'Argent cristallisé of the Codex of Paris, Crystalli Luna, Argentum nitricum crystallisatum, Nitras argenti crystallinus, Nitrum luna're, Hydrago'gum Bov'LEI. Generally, however, it is in the fused state: and it is this which is admitted into most Pharmacopœias, and which, besides the name Nitras Argenti, is called, Nitras argenti fusus, Cauticum luna're, Lapis infernalis, Argentum nitricum fusum, and lunar caustic. (F) Nitrate d'argent fondu, Pierre infernale.

The virtues of Nitrate of Silver, are tonic, and escharotic. It is given in chorea, epilepsy, &c.; locally, it is used in various cases as an escharotic. Dose, gr. 1-8 to gr. 1-4 in pill, three times a day.

The CHLORIDE CYANIDE and IODIDE of SILVER, the Oxide and the Chloride of Ammonia and Silver, have been used in Syphilis. At first, these different preparations were administered iatrapeptically on the gums; the chloride, the cyanide and the iodide in the dose of 1-12th of a grain; the chloride of silver and ammonia in the dose of 1-14th of a grain, and the oxide of silver and the divided silver in the dose of 1-8th and 1-4th of a grain. M. Serre, of Montpellier, who made many trials with them, soon found that these doses were too small, he therefore raised that of the chloride to 1-10th, and of the iodide to 1-8th of a grain, without any inconvenience resulting. The dose of the other preparations was likewise increased in a similar ratio. M. Serre extols the preparations of silver, used internally, as well as iatrapeptically, as antisiphilic, but they are not to be depended upon.

ARGENTINE, Potentilla anserina.

ARGENTUM, Argyrum, from ἀργός, 'white.' Silver, Luna, (F) Argent. A solid metal of a shining white appearance: insipid; inodorous; highly sonorous; malleable and ductile; somewhat hard; crystallizable in triangular pyramids; fusible a little above a red heat, and volatilizable. Not used at all in Medicine, unless in some places for silveum pills. SILVER LEAF, Argentum foliatum, is the state in which it is used for this purpose.

The argentum divinum, or metallic silver in very fine powder has been recommended internally in syphilis.

ARGENTUM FUGITIVUM, Hydrargyrum—a. Fusum, Hydrargyrum—a. Mobile, Hydrargyrum—a. Vivum, Hydrargyrum.

ARGILE OCHREUSE PALE, Bolus alba.

ARGILLA PURA, Terra Aluminis, T. bolaris seu argillacea pura, pure Argil or Alumina, Alumine factice. This substance, which is prepared by drying alum and exposing it, for twenty or twenty-five minutes to a red heat, until the sulphuric acid is driven off, has been recommended in indigestion as antacid, as well as in vomiting and diarrhoea accompanied with acidity. The dose to a very young child is from ʒss to ʒj; for older children from ʒj to ʒij.

ARGILLA FERRUGINEA RUBRA, Bole, Armenian—a. Kalisulphurica, Alumen—a. Pallida, Bolus alba—a. Sulphurica alcalisata, Alumen—a. Sulphurica usta, Alumen exsiccatum—a. Supersulphas alcalisatum, Alumen—a. Vitriolata, Alumen.

ARGOL, RED, Potassæ supertartaras impurus—a. white, Potassæ supertartaras impurus. ARGUMENTUM INTEGRITATIS, Hymen.

ARGYROCHÆTA, Matricaria.

ARGYROPHORA, from αργυρος, 'silver,' and φορεω, 'I bear.' A name given, by Myrepsus, to an antidote which he regarded as extremely precious.

ARGYROTROPHEMA, Blancmanger.

ARGYRUS, Argentum.

ARHEUMATIC, Arheumat'icus, αρθροματιστος, from α privative, and ρευμα, 'fluxion or rheumatism.' One without fluxion or rheumatism.

ARIA, Cratægus aria.

ARIC'YMON, αρικυμων. A name given to women who conceive readily.—Hippocr.

ARIDE'NA. A Latin word employed to designate the leanness of any part.—Etmuller, Sauvages.

ARIDITY, Ariditas. (F.) Aridité. The French use the word Aridité to express the dryness of any organ, and particularly of the skin and tongue, when such dryness is so great as to render the organ rough to the touch. Aridité, also, means the lanuginous appearance of the hair in some diseases, in which they seem covered with dust.

ARIDURA. Wasting or emaciation of the whole or any part of the body.—Marasmus, Atrophy, (q. v.)

ARIKA. See Spirit.

ARISTALTHÆA, Althæa.

ARISTOLOCHIA, from αριστος, 'very good,' and λοχεια, 'parturition;' so called, because the different varieties were supposed to aid parturition. Birthwort. (F) Aristolochie. Several varieties were once in use.

ARISTOLOCHIA CLEMATITIS, Aristolochia vulgaris, Adra Riza, Aristolochia tenuis. (F) Aristolochie ordinaire, Upright Birthwort.

The root has been considered stimulant and emmenagogue, and as such has been used in amenorrhœa, chlorosis, and cachexia.

ARISTOLOCHIA FABACEA, Fumaria bulbosa.

ARISTOLOCHIA LONGA and A. ROTUNDA, (F) Aristolochie longue et ronde, Long and round Birthwort. Virtues the same as the preceding.

ARISTOLOCHIA PISTOLOCHIA, Pistolochia, Aristolochia polyrrhiza. This variety has an aromatic odour, and an acrid and bitter taste. (F) Aristolochie crénelée.

ARISTOLOCHIA SERPENTARIA, Serpentaria, Viperaria, Viperina Virginiana, Colubrina Virginia'na, Contra'yer'va Virginia'na, Colubrine de Virginie, S. Virginia'na, (F) Serpentaire and Aristolochie serpentaire de Virginie, Virginia Snake root. Virtues—tonic, stimulant; and, as such, employed in debility, intermittents, &c. The other varieties of Aristolochia have similar properties.

ARISTOLOCHIA TRILOBATA. (F) Aristolochie trilobée. A plant of Surinam and Jamaica; possessing the general virtues of the Aristolochia.

ARISTOLOCHITIC, same etymology. An old term for remedies supposed to have the property of promoting the flow of the Lochia.—Hippocr., Theophrastus, Dioscorides, &c.

ARISTON MAGNUM and ARISTON PARVUM. These names were formerly given to pharmaceutical preparations, used in phthisis, tormina, and fever.—Avicenna.

ARISTOPHANEYON. A sort of emollient plaster, prepared with four pounds of pitch, two of apochyma, one of wax, an ounce of opoponax, and half a pint of vinegar.—Gorræus, not used.

ARKANSAS, MINERAL WATERS OF. About 5 miles from the Washita river, and about a quarter of a degree north of the Louisiana line, there are 70 of those springs. They are thermal, and upwards of 150° Fahrenheit, and are employed in rheumatism, cutaneous affections, &c.

ARLADA, Realgar.

ARM, Biachium.

ARMA VENTRIS, Penis.

ARMAMENTARIUM, Arsenal.

ARMATORY UNGUENT, Hoplochrysmata.

ARMATURA, AMNIOS.

ARME, Suture.

ARME, from αγα, 'I adapt;' αγωμ. Any physiological or mechanical junction or union of parts.—Hesychius. The sutures of the cranium.—Galen.

ARMENIACA MALUS. The A'pricot. See Prunus.

ARMENIAN STONE, Melochites.

ARMENITES, Melochites.

ARMILLÆ MANUS MEMBRANOSÆ, Annular ligament of the carpus.

ARMOISE BLANC, Artemisia rupestris—a. Estragon, Artemisia dracunculus—a. Ordinaire, Artemisia vulgaris.

ARMORACIA, Cochlearia armoracia.

ARMOUR, Condom.

ARMURE DES JAMBES. See Cornu ammonis.

ARMUS, Humerus—a. Summus, Acromion.

ARNICA MONTANA. Derivation uncertain. Arniea, Leopard's Bane, Doron'icum German'icum, Alis'ma, Acyrus, Diurc'ica, Arni-

ca Plaucn'sis, Panac'ea lapso'rum, Plat'mica mont'na, Caltha seu Calen'dula Alp'na, (F) Arnique, Bêtoine des Montagnes. Tabac des Vosges. Ser. Syst. Syngenesia, Polygamia superflua. Nat. Ord. Synantheræ. The plant and flower are considered, or have been considered, narcotic, stimulant, emmenagogue, &c.; and, as such, have been given in amaurosis, paralysis, all nervous affections, rheumatism, gout, chlorosis, &c. Dose, gr. v to x in powder. In large doses, it is deleterious.

ARNICA SFURIA, Inula dysenterica—a. Suedensis, Inula dysenterica.

ARNOGLOSSUM, Plantago.

AROMA, ἀρωμα, 'perfume.' Spir'itus Rector. (F) Arome. The odorous part of plants: an emanation—frequently imponderable—from bodies, which acts on the organ of smell, and varies with the body exhaling it.

AROMATIC, Aromaticus, (F) Aromatic. Any odoriferous substance obtained from the vegetable kingdom, which contains much volatile oil, or a light and expansible resin. Aromatics are used in perfumes, in seasoning, and embalming. In Medicine they are employed as stimulants. Ginger, cinnamon, cardamoms, mint, &c., belong to this class.

AROMATOΠΟΛΑ, from ἀρωμα, 'an odour,' and πωλειω, 'I sell.' An apothecary or druggist. One who sells spices.

AROPH. A barbarous word, which had various significations with the ancients. Paracelsus employed it to designate a lithontriptic remedy. The Mandragore, according to some:—Also, a mixture of bread, saffron and wine.—Helmont.

AROPH PARACELSI, Ferrum ammoniatum.

ARQUEBUSADE, Eau d', Aqua traumatica Thed'nia, Aqua Thedia'na, Aqua scolopet'ria, Aqua vulner'ria, Aqua catapulta'rum, Mist'ura vulner'ria, ac'ida. A sort of vulnerary water, distilled from a farrago of aromatic plants. (Rosemary bliss, milkfoil thyme, each lbss. Proof spirit 2 gallons—distil a gallon. This is one form.)

ARRABON, Arraphon.

ARRACHEMENT, (F.) from arracher, 'to tear out,' Apospas'ma, Abruptio, Avulsio. Act of separating a part of the body by tearing it from the bonds connecting it with others; Evulsion (q. v.) Laceration (q. v.)

Arrachement, is applied to certain operations, as to the extraction of a tooth, the extirpation of a polypus, &c.

ARRACK, Arack. See Spirit.

ARRAPHON or ARRABON, from α priv. and εραφν, 'a suture,' 'without suture.' A term applied to the cranium when it presents no sutures.

ARREPTIO, Insanity.

ARRESTA BOVIS, Ononis spinosa.

ARRÊT D'HILDAN, Remora Hildani.

ARRETEBŒUF, Ononis spinosa.

ARRHŒA, from α priv. and ερα, 'I flow.' The suppression of any flux. Amenorrhœa, (q. v.)

ARRHOSTEMA, Disease.

ARRHOSTENIA, Disease.

ARRHOSTIA, Disease.

ARRHYTHMUS, Cacorrhhythmus.

ARRIÈRE-BOUCHE, Pharynx.

ARRIÈRE-FAIX, Secundines.

ARRIÈRE-GOUT, (F) 'after taste.' The taste left by certain bodies in the mouth for some time after they have been swallowed, owing probably to the papilla of the mouth having imbibed the savoury substance.

ARRIÈRES NARINES, Nares, posterior.

ARROCHIE, Atriplex hortensis—a. Puant, Chenopodium vulvaria.

ARROSEMENT, Aspersio.

ARROW ROOT. The fecula of the Maranta Arundin'ca, Fec'ula Marant'ca which, like all fecula, is emollient and nutritive, when prepared with water or milk.

ARROW ROOT, COMMON. See Solanum tuberosum.

ARS CABALISTICA, Cabal—a. Chymiatrica, Chymiatria—a. Clysmatica nova, Infusio de medicinis—a. Coquinaria, Culinary art—a. Cosmetica, Cosmetics—a. Culinaria, Culinary art—a. Empirica, Empiricism—a. Hermetica, Chymistry—a. Infusoria, Infusio de medicinis—a. Machaonia, Medicina—a. Majorum, Chymistry—a. Medica, Medicina—a. Obstetricia, Obstetrics—a. Sanandi, Art, healing—a. Separatoria, Chymistry—a. Spagirica, Chymistry.

ARSALTOS, Asphaltum.

ARSATUM, Nymphomania.

ARSENAL (F) Chirurgi'ca, Armamenta'rium. A collection of surgical instruments. A work containing a description of surgical instruments.

ARSENIATE, Arsenias. A salt formed by a combination of arsenic acid with a salifiable base.

ARSENIATE OF AMMONIA, Arsenias Ammoniacum, Ammonium Arsenicum, (F) Arseniate d'Ammoniaque. This preparation is highly extolled in cutaneous diseases. A grain of the salt may be dissolved in an ounce of distilled water, and 20 to 25 drops be commenced with as a dose.

ARSENIATE OF IRON, Arsenias Ferri, Ferrum Arseniatum, F. Arsenicum oxydulatum, (F) Arseniate de Fer. This preparation has been applied externally to cancerous ulcers. An ointment may be made of ʒss of the arseniate, ʒij of the phosphate of iron and ʒvj of spermaceti ointment: the arseniate has also been given internally in cancerous affections, in the dose of one-sixteenth of a grain.

ARSENIATE OF PROTOXIDE OF POTASSIUM, Proto-arseniate of Potassium, Arseniate of Potass, Arsenias Potasse, Arsenias Kali. Properties the same as those of the Arsenious Acid.

ARSENIC, Arsenicum. A solid metal; of a steel-gray colour; granular texture; very brittle; volatilizing before melting; very combustible and acidifiable. It is not dangerous of itself, and only becomes so, by virtue of the facility with which it absorbs oxygen.

ARSENIC, IODIDE OF, Arsen'iei Iodidum, A. Ioduretum, Arsenicum Iodatum. This preparation has been highly extolled by Biett in various cutaneous affections, applied externally. The ointment he uses contains 3 grains of iodide to ʒj of lard.

ARSENIC, OXIDE OF, Arsenious acid—a. White, Arsenious acid.

ARSENICAL PASTE, (F) Pâte Arsenicale. This application to cancers is formed of 70 parts of cinnabar, 22 of dragon's blood, and 8 of arsenious acid; made into a paste with saliva, when about to be applied.

ARSENICUM RUBRUM FACTITIUM, Realgar.

ARSENIOUS ACID; White Arsenic, Oxide of Arsenic, Ratsbane, Arsenici, oz'ydum album, Arsenicum album, Ac'idum Arsenicosum, Calx Arsenici alba. An acid which is met with in commerce, in compact, white, heavy, fragile masses; of a vitreous aspect, opaque, and covered with a white dust: of an acrid and nauseous taste; without smell when cold; volatilizable by heat, and exhaling the odour of garlic: soluble in water, alcohol and oil; crystallizable in regular octahedrons. It is this that is meant by the name Arsenic, as commonly used.

The ARSENICUM ALBUM SUBLIMATUM or Sublimed Oxide of Arsenic is the one employed in medicine. It is tonic and escharotic, and is the most virulent of mineral poisons. It is used in intermittents, periodical headaches, neuroses, &c. Dose, gr. one-tenth to one-eighth in pill.

See Poisons, Table of.

ARSENIS POTASSÆ, Arsenite of protoxide of potassium—a. Potassæ aquosus, Liquor arsenicalis—a. Potassæ liquidus, Liquor arsenicalis.

ARSENITE, Ar'senicis. A salt, formed by a combination of the arsenious acid with a salifiable base.

ARSENITE OF PROTOXIDE OF POTASSIUM, Proto-arsenite of Potassium, Arsenite of Potass, Ar'senicis Potassæ. An uncrystallizable and colourless salt, which forms the basis of the Liquor Arsenicalis, which see.

ARSE-SMART, Persicaria—a. Biting, Polygonum hydropiper.

ART, HEALING, Ars sanandi, Medicina, (q. v.) The appropriate application of the precepts of the best physicians, and of the results of experience to the treatment of disease.

ARTABA, αγραβη. Name of a measure for dry substances, in use with the ancients, equal, at times, to 5 modii; at others, to 3; and at others, again, to 7.—Galen.

ARTELSHEIM, MINERAL WATERS OF. These German waters have been much recommended in hysteria, gout, palsy, &c. Their physical or chymical properties have not been described.

ARTEMISIA, Anact'rión: called after a queen of the name, who first employed it; or from Αρτεμις, 'Diana;' because it was formerly used in diseases of women, over whom she presided. The Gauls called it Brievinum.

ARTEMISIA ABROTANUM, Abrotanum Cathusum, Abrotanum mas, Abrathan, South-ernwood, (F) Aurone, Aurone mâle, Aurone des Jardins, Garderobe, Citronelle. Supposed to be possessed of stimulant properties.

The Oil of Southernwood, O'leum Abrotani, (F) Huile d'Aurone, possesses the aromatic properties of the plant.

ARTEMISIA ABSINTHIUM, Absinthium, Absinthium vulgare, Barypi'eron, Common Wormwood, (F) Absinthe. Properties:—tonic and anthelmintic. The Oil of Wormwood, O'leum Absinthii, (F) Huile d'Absinthe, contains the aromatic virtues of the plant.

ARTEMISIA BOTRYS, Chenopodium ambrosioides.

ARTEMISIA CAMPETRIS, Field Southernwood, (F) Aurone des Champs. This possesses the same properties as the A. Abrotanum.

ARTEMISIA CHENOPODIUM, Chenopodium botrys.

ARTEMISIA DRACUNCULUS, Tar'agon, (F) Armoise estragon. Virtues:—the same as the last.

ARTEMISIA INDICA, Artemisia santonica.

ARTEMISIA PONTICA, A. Roma'na, Absinthium Ponticum seu Romanum, Roman Wormwood, Lesser Wormwood. This plant possesses like virtues;—as well as the

ARTEMISIA GLACIALIS or Silky Wormwood; and the

ARTEMISIA MARITIMA, Absinthium Maritimum, Sea Wormwood, Maritime Southernwood.

ARTEMISIA RUFETRIS, Creeping Wormwood, Gen'ipi al'bum, (F) Armoise blanc, Gen'ipi blanc. This variety has aromatic virtues, and is used in intermittents and in amenorrhœa.

ARTEMISIA SANTONICA, Santonicum, Artemisia contra, Semen contra Vermes, Semen contra, S. Zedou'ria, Canni Herba, Chamæcedris, Chamæcyparissus, Semen Cina, Hagiospernum, Sanctum Semen, Absinthium Santonicum, Semina'na, Xantoli'na, Scheba Arabum, Artemisia Juda'ica, Wormseed, Tartarian Southernwood, (F) Barbotine. Virtues:—anthelmintic and stimulant. Dose, gr. x to ʒj in powder.

ARTEMISIA VULGARIS, Artemisia rubra et alba, Singulum Sancti Joannis, Mater Herbarum, Bereusecum, Bubusteor'dium, Canapa'cia, Mug'wort, (F) Armoise ordinaire, Herbe de Saint Jean. This, as well as some other varieties, possesses the general tonic virtues of the Artemisia. The Artemisia Vulgaris has been of late highly extolled by the Germans in cases of epilepsy. Dose of the powder in the 24 hours from ʒss to ʒj.

From the Mugwort the Chinese form their Moxa (q. v.)

ARTERIAL, Arterio'sus. Belonging to arteries.

The ARTE'RIAL DUCT, Candlis arterio'sus, Ductus arterio'sus, D. Botalli (F) Canal artériel, is the portion of the pulmonary artery, which terminates in the aorta, in the fœtus. When this duct is obliterated after birth, it is called Arterial Ligament, (F) Ligament artériel.

ARTERIAL BLOOD, (F) Sang artériel. Red blood is so called because contained in the arteries. The pulmonary veins, however, also contain red blood: hence the name arterial veins, (F) Veines artérielles, applied to them.

The ARTERIAL SYSTEM includes all the arteries, from their origin in the heart to their termination in the organs. See Vascular System.

ARTERIALIZATION OF THE BLOOD, Hæmatosis.

ARTERIECTASIS, Aneurism.

ARTERIODIALYSIS, see Aneurism.

ARTERIOGRAPHY, Arteriographia; from ἀρτηρια, 'artery,' and γραφή, 'a description.' A description of the arteries.

ARTERIOLOA. A small artery.

ARTERIOLOGY, Arteriologia; from ἀρτηρια, 'artery,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A treatise on the arteries.

ARTERIO-PITUITOUS. An epithet applied to vessels which creep along the interior of the nostrils—Ruysch.

ARTERIORRHÆXIS, see Aneurism.

ARTERIOTOMY, Arterioto'mia, from ἀρτηρια, 'an artery,' and τέμνω, 'I cut.' This word has been used for the dissection of arteries. Most commonly, however, it means a surgical operation, which consists in opening an artery, to draw blood from it.

Arteriotomy is chiefly used in inflammatory affections of the head, when the blood is generally obtained from the temporal artery.

ARTERITIS, from ἀρτηρια, 'an artery,' and itis, a termination denoting inflammation. Inflammation of an artery.

ARTERY, Arteria, (F) Artère, from ἀνγ, 'air,' and τεινεν, 'to preserve,' quasi, 'receptacle of air,' because the ancients believed that it contained air. They, at first, gave the name, Artery, to the trachea, ἀρτηρια τραχεια, because it is filled with air; and afterwards they used the same term for the arteries, properly so called, probably because they commonly found them empty in the dead body. We find, also, φλεβες to designate the arteries, called by the Latins, Vena micantes, pulsatiles. Arteries, with the moderns, signify that order of vessels, which arise from the two ventricles of the heart, and have valves only at their origin. They are cylindrical, firm, and elastic canals: of a yellowish white colour; little dilatable; easily lacerable; formed, 1. Of an external, laminated or cellular membrane, of a dense and close character: 2. Of a middle coat composed of fibres, which does not, however, contract on the application of the galvanic stimulus: and 3. Of an inner coat, which is thin, diaphanous, reddish, and polished.

The use of the arteries is, to carry the blood from the heart to the various parts of the system. It will be obvious, however, that they cannot all convey arterial blood. The pulmonary artery, for example, is destined to convey the venous blood to the lungs, there to be converted into arterial; whilst the pulmonary veins convey arterial blood back to the heart.

A TABLE OF THE PRINCIPAL ARTERIES OF THE BODY.

All the arteries take their rise from the Pulmonary Artery, or the Aorta: and the names generally indicate the parts to which they are distributed.

I. ARTERIA PULMONARIS.

The Pulmonary Artery arises from the right-ventricle, and soon divides into a right and left branch, which are distributed to each lung.

II. ARTERIA AORTA.

The Aorta rises from the left ventricle. It is the common trunk of the arteries of the body, and may be divided into five portions.

a. Arteries furnished by the Aorta at its origin.

1. A. Cardiaca or coronaria anterior.
2. A. Cardiaca or coronaria posterior.

b. Arteries furnished by the Aorta at its arch.

The arch of the Aorta gives off, to the left, two considerable trunks—the Arteria carotidea primitiva, and the A. subclavia; and, to the right, a single trunk, which is larger—the A. imominata or Brachio-cephalica, which divides into the primitive carotid and subclavian.

A. ARTERIA CAROTIDEA PRIMITIVA. } Divides into A. Carotidea externa, A. Carotidea interna.

- a. A. Carotidea externa. } {Furnishes, 1. A. Thyroidea superior.
2. A. lingualis, which gives off the A. dorsalis linguee and A. sublingualis.
3. A. facialis or A. Maxillaris externa, which furnishes the A. palatina inferior, the A. submentalis, and A. coronaria superior and inferior.
4. A. occipitalis, which gives off the A. mastoidea posterior.
5. A. auricularis posterior, which gives off A. stylo-mastoidea.
6. A. pharyngea inferior.

The external carotid ultimately divides into the temporal artery and internal maxillary.

1. A. Temporalis. } {Furnishes A. transversalis faciei, A. auricularis anterior, and A. temporalis media.

2. A. Maxillaris interna. } {Furnishes 13 branches, viz. A. meningea media, A. dentaris inferior, A. temporalis profunda posterior, A. masseterica, A. pterygoidea, A. buccalis, A. temporalis profunda anterior, A. alveolaris; A. suborbitaris, A. vidua, A. pterygopalatina or pharyngea superior, A. palatina superior, and A. sphenopalatina.

b. A. Carotidea interna.

Furnishes, 1. A. ophthalmica, which gives off A. lachrymalis, A. centralis retinae, A. supraorbitaria or superciliaris, A. ciliares posteriores, A. ciliares longae, A. muscularis superior et inferior, A. ethmoidalis posterior et anterior, A. palpebralis superior et inferior, A. nasalis, and A. frontalis. 2. A. communicans, Willisii. 3. A. choroidea. 4. A. cerebralis anterior. 5. A. cerebralis media.

B. ARTERIA SUBCLAVIA.

Furnishes, 1. A. Vertebralis, which gives off A. spinalis anterior et posterior, A. cerebellosa inferior, and forms by uniting itself with that of the opposite side—the A. basilaris, divided into A. cerebellosa superior and A. cerebralis posterior. 2. A. Thyroidea inferior, which gives off A. cervicalis ascendens. 3. A. mammaria interna, which gives off the A. mediastina anterior and A. diaphragmatica superior. 4. A. intercostalis superior. 5. A. cervicalis transversa. 6. A. scapularis superior. 7. A. cervicalis posterior vel profunda. Farther on, the subclavian artery continues its progress under the name A. axillaris.

A. Axillaris.

Furnishes, 1. A. acromialis. 2. A. thoracica superior. 3. A. thoracica inferior or longa or mammaria externa. 4. A. scapularis inferior or communis. 5. A. circumflexa posterior. 6. A. circumflexa anterior. Farther on, the axillary artery continues under the name A. brachialis.

A. Brachialis.

Furnishes A. humeralis profunda or collateralis externa. 2. A. collateralis interna. It afterwards divides into the radial and cubital arteries.

1. A. Radialis.

Gives off A. recurrens radialis, A. dorsalis carpi, A. dorsalis metacarpi, A. dorsalis pollicis, and terminates in forming the Arcus palmaris profundus.

2. A. Cubitalis.

Gives off A. recurrens cubitalis anterior and posterior; A. interossea anterior and posterior, which latter furnishes A. recurrens radialis posterior. It terminates in forming the superficial pulmar arch, which gives off A. Colluterales digitorum.

c. Arteries given off by the Aorta in the Thorax.

These arteries are,

1. A. bronchica, dextra et sinistra.
2. A. oesophagæ (to the number of four, five, or six.)
3. A. mediastinae posteriores.
4. A. intercostales inferiores vel Aorticae (to the number of eight, nine, or ten.)

d. Arteries furnished by the Aorta in the Abdomen.

These branches are,

1. The A. diaphragmatica vel phrenica, dextra et sinistra.

2. A. Celiacæ.

{Which divides into three branches, 1. A. coronaria ventriculi. 2. A. Hepatica, which gives off A. pylorica, A. gastro-epiploica dextra and A. cystica; and, lastly, the A. splenica, which gives off A. gastro-epiploica sinistra and vasa brevia.

3. A. Mesenterica superior { Which gives off at its concavity the A. colica dextra superior, media et inferior, and at its convex part from 15 to 20 Rami intestinales.
4. A. Mesenterica inferior { Which gives off A. colica superior media, and inferior, and divides into A. hæmorrhoidales superiores.
5. The A. Capsulares media (to the number of two on each side.)
6. A. Renales et Emulgentes.
7. A. Spermaticæ.
8. A. Lumbares (to the number of four or five on each side.)

e. Arteries resulting from the Bifurcation of the Aorta.

The Aorta, a little above its Bifurcation, gives off the A. sacra media, and divides into A. iliaca primitiva.

A. Iliaca primitiva { Divides into A. iliaca interna and A. iliaca externa.

a. A. Iliaca interna { Furnishes, 1. A. ilio lumbaris. 2. A. sacra lateralis. 3. A. glutea or iliaca posterior. 4. A. umbilicalis. 5. A. vesicales. 6. A. obturatoræ. 7. A. hæmorrhoidæ media. 8. A. uterina. 9. A. vaginalis. 10. A. ischiatica. 11. A. pudenda interna, which gives off the A. hæmorrhoidales inferiores, A. of the septum A. transversa perineæ, A. corporis cavernosæ, and A. dorsalis penis.

b. A. Iliaca externa { Furnishes 1. A. epigastrica. 2. A. iliaca anterior et circumflexa ili, and is continued afterwards under the name of Crural Artery.

A. Cruralis. { Furnishes, 1. A. subcutanea abdominalis. 2. A. pudenda superficialis et profunda. 3. A. muscularis superficialis. 4. A. muscularis profunda, which gives off the A. circumflexa externa et interna, and the three Perforantes, distinguished into superior, middle, and inferior. Farther on, the crural artery continues under the name A. Poplitea.

A. Poplitea. { Furnishes, 1. A. articulares superiores, interna, media, et externa. 2. A. gemellæ. 3. A. articulares inferiores, interna et externa. 4. A. tibialis antica, which, at the foot, takes the name A. Dorsalis Tarsi, and gives off the tarsal and metatarsal arteries. In the leg, the popliteal artery divides into the peroneal and posterior tibial.

1. A. Peronæa. { Divides into A. peronæa antica and A. peronæa postica.

2. A. Tibialis postica. { Divides into A. plantaris interna and A. plantaris externa. The latter, by anastomosing with the A. dorsalis tarsi, forms the plantar arch, whence arise Rami superiores et perforantes postici, R. inferiores postici et antici, which give off Rami perforantes antici.

ARTETIS/CUS; from artus, 'a limb.' One who has lost a limb.

ARTHANI'TA, from αγτος, 'bread;' the Cyc'lamen or Soubread. It was formerly made into ointments, with many other substances, and was employed as a purgative, being rubbed on the abdomen. It formed the Unguentum Arthani'tæ.

ARTHANITA CYCLAMEN, Cyclamen.

ARTHETICA, Teucrium chamæpitys.

ARTHRAL'GIA, Arthronal'gia, from αρθρον, 'a joint,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the joints.

ARTHREMBOLUS, from αρθρον, 'a joint,' εν, 'in,' and βαλλω, 'I cast.' An ancient instrument used in the reduction of dislocations.

ARTHRETICA, Teucrium chamæpitys.

ARTHRITIC, Arthrit'icus, from αρθρον, 'a joint.' (F) Arthritique, Goutteux. That which relates to gout, as arthritic symptoms, &c.

ARTHRITICUS VERUS, Gout.

ARTHRITIS, Gout, Arthrosia—a. Aberrans, Gout (wandering)—a. Acuta, Gout (regular)—a. Arthrodynia, Rheumatism, chronic—a. Atonic, Gout (atonic)—a. Asthenica, Gout (atonic)—a. Erratica, Gout (wandering)—a. Hydrarthros, Hydrarthrus—a. Inflammatoria, Gout (regular)—a. Nodosa, Gout (with nodosities)—a. Podagra, Gout—a. Rheumatismus, Rheumatism, acute—a. Retrograda, Gout (retrograde.)

ARTHROC'ACË, from αρθρον, 'a joint,' and κακος, 'bad.' Disease of the joints; and especially carries of the articular surfaces; Spina ventosa. (q. v.)

ARTHROCACOLOG'IA, from Arthrocacia, —according to Rust, a chronic disease of the joints; and λογος, 'a description.' The doctrine of chronic disease of the joints.

ARTHRO'DIA, from αρθρον, 'a joint,' αρθροδία, Adarticulatio. A moveable joint, formed by the head of a bone applied to the surface of a shallow socket, so that it can execute movements in every direction. Arthrodium is 'a small joint:' diminutive of Arthrodia.

ARTHRODYNIA, Arthronal'gia, from αρθρον, 'articulation,' and δύον, 'pain.' Articular pain. Pain in the joints. See Rheumatism, chronic.

ARTHIROM'BOLE, from αρθρον, and βαλλω, 'I cast.' Coaptation, reduction. Reduction of a luxated or fractured bone.

ARTHRON, 'a joint.' The ancients used the word Arthron, for the articulation of bones with motion, in opposition to Symphysis, or articulation without motion.

ARTHRONALGIA, Aithralgia, Arthrodynia.

ARTHRO-RHEUMATISMUS, Rheumatism (acute.)

ARTHROPHLOGOSIS, from αρθρον, 'a joint,' and φλεγμων, 'I burn.' Inflammation of the joints.

ARTHROPUOSIS, from αρθρον, 'a joint,' and πυον, 'pus.' Suppuration or abscess of the joints.

ARTHROSIA, from αρθρωω, 'I articulate.' Arthritis, (of some.) Inflammation mostly confined to the joints, severely painful; occasionally extending to the surrounding muscles. A genus of diseases in the Nosology of Good, including Rheumatism, Gout, &c. Articular inflammation, Jointache.

ARTHROSIA ACUTA, Rheumatism, acute a. Chronica, Rheumatism, chronic—a. Lumborum, Lumbago—a. Podagra, gout—a. Podagra complicata, Gout (retrograde)—a. Podagra larvata, Gout (atonic)—a. Podagra regularis, Gout (regular.)

ARTHROSIS, Articulation.

ARTHROSPONGUS, from αρθρον, 'a joint,' and σπογγος, 'a sponge.' A white, fungous tumour of the joints.

ARTIA. According to some, this word is synonymous with αετηγεια; others use it synonymously with Trachea.

ARTICHAUT, Cynara scolymus.

ARTICHOKE, Cynara scolymus.

ARTICLE, Articulation.

ARTICOCALUS, Cynara scolymus.

ARTICULAR, Articularis: that which relates to the articulations;—as the articular capsules, &c.

The ARTICULAR FACETTES are the contiguous surfaces, by means of which the bones are articulated.

The ARTICULAR ARTERIES OF THE KNEE, arise from the popliteal artery, and surround the tibio-femoral articulation. Although of a small size, they are important, as they furnish blood to the lower extremity after the operation for popliteal aneurism. They are distinguished into superior and inferior.

The superior articular arteries, popliteal articular arteries, are commonly three in number: one of which is internal, another external, and another middle. The first anastomoses by one branch with the external circumflex; and by another with the external superior articular. The second anastomoses with the external circumflex, the superior internal articular, and the inferior external articular; and the third is distributed within the joint.

The inferior articular arteries are two in number: an internal and external. The former anastomoses with the internal superior articular, and the external inferior articular. The latter anastomoses with the recurrent branch of the anterior tibial, and the external superior articular.

The ARTICULAR VEINS of the knee follow the same course as the arteries.

ARTICULATION. Joint; Articulatio, Arthro'sis, Assarthro'sis, Articulus, Junctura, Cola,

Conjunctio, Nodus, Commissura, Compages, Synar'tis, (F) Articulation, Artide. The union of bones with each other, as well as the kind of union.

TABLE OF ARTICULATIONS.

Articulations are generally divided into Diarthroses or moveable articulations, and Synarthroses or immoveable.

ARTICULATION means the combination of letters which constitute words. See Voice.

ARTICULATION, FALSE, Pseudarthrosis, Articulus falsus, (F) A. fausse, A. accidentelle A. contre nature, A. anormale. A false joint, formed between fragments of bone, that have remained ununited; or between a luxated bone and the surrounding parts.

The Articulations are subject to a number of diseases, which are generally somewhat severe. These may be physical, as wounds, sprains, luxations, &c.; or they may be organic, as ankyloses, extraneous bodies, caries, rheumatism, gout, hydrarthroses, arthropusis, &c.

ARTICULATION EN CHARNIERE, Ginglymus—a. de la Hanche, Coxofemoral articulation.

ARTICULI DIGITORUM MANUS, Phalanges of the fingers—a. Digitorum pedis, Phalanges of the toes.

ARTIFICIAL, Artificialis. (F) Artificiel. That which is formed by art.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH are teeth made of ivory, porcelain, &c.

ARTIFICIAL EYES are usually made of enamel, and represent a sort of hollow hemisphere, which is applied beneath the eyelids, where the eye is lost.

Pièces d'anatomie artificielles are preparations of anatomy, modelled in wax, plaster, paper, &c.

ARTISCOCCUS LEVIS, Cynara scolymus.

ARTISCUUS, from αρτος, 'bread.' A troch of the shape of a small loaf. Also, and especially, a troch made of vipers.

ARTISCUUS, Trochiscus.

ARTOCARPUS. The Bread-fruit Tree. An Otagaitan tree, so called because the fruit, which is milky and juicy, supplies the place of bread to the inhabitants. It grows to the height of 40 feet.

ARTOCARPUS INTEGRIFOLIA, Caoutchouc.

ARTOCREAS, from αρτος, 'bread,' and κρεας, 'flesh.' A kind of nourishing food made of various aliments boiled together.—Galen.

ARTOG'ALA, from αρτος, 'bread,' and γαλα, 'milk,' An alimentary preparation of bread and milk. A poultice.

ARTOM'ELI, from αρτος, 'bread,' and μελι, 'honey.' A cataplasm of bread and honey. Galen.

ARTUS, Membrum.

ARTYMA, Condiment.

ARUM DRACUNCULUS, Dracunculus polyphyllus, Colubrina Dracontia, Erva de

Santa Maria, Gig'arus serpenta'ria, Arum polyphyllum, Serpenta'ria Gallo'rum. Family, Aroideæ. Scr. Syst. Monœcia Polyandria. The roots and leaves are very acrimonious. The plant resembles the next in its properties.

ARUM MACULA'TUM, Cuckow Pint, Barba Aard'nis, Serpenta'ria minor, Zin'giber, Germanicum, Wake Robin. (F) Gowet, Pied de l'œau. The fresh root is stimulant internally. Dose, ℥j of the dried root. Externally, it is very acid.

From the root of this Arum a starch is prepared, which is called Portland Island Sago, Gersa serpenta'ria, Ceras'sa serpenta'ria, Fédula ari macula'ti.

ARUM TRIPHYL'LUM, Indian Turnip, Dragon Root. This plant grows all over the United States, and is received into their Pharmacopœia under the title of Arum. The recent root is very acrimonious, and has been employed in asthma, croup, and whooping-cough. Boiled in lard, it has been used in tinea capitis, and boiled in milk in consumption.

ARUMARI, Caramata.

ARUNDO BAMBOS, Bamboo—a. Brachii major, Ulna—a. Brachii minor, Radius—a. Indica, Sagittarium alexipharmacum—a Major, Tibia—a. Minor, Fibula—a. Saccharifera, see Saccharum.

ARVUM NATURÆ, Uterus.

ARYTÆNA, αρυταινα, 'a ladle.' Hence,

ARYTÆNO-EPIGLOT'TICUS. Arytæno-epiglottida'us. That which belongs to the arytenoid cartilages and epiglottis. Winslow gives this name to small, fleshy fasciculi, which are attached, at one extremity, to the arytenoid cartilages, and, by the other, to the free edge of the epiglottis. These fibres do not always exist. They form part of the arytenoid muscle of modern anatomists.

ARYTÆNOID, Arytenoid'es, αρυταινοειδ'es, from αρυταινα, 'a ladle,' and ειδος, 'shape.' Ladle-shaped.

THE ARYTÆNOID CAR'TILAGES, Cartilag'ines arytenoid'es, C. guttura'les, C. gutturi'na, C. gutturifor'mes, C. trig'netra, Guttur'nia, are two cartilages of the larynx, situate posteriorly above the cricoid, and which by approximation, diminish the aperture of the glottis. Their upper extremities or cornua are turned towards each other, and are now and then found loose, in the form of appendices, which are considered, by some, as distinct cartilages, and termed cornifor'm or tuberculat'ed, or Cornic'ula Laryn'gis.

THE ARYTÆNOID GLANDS, Glandulæ Arytenoid'a'æ, are small, glandular, whitish bodies, situate anterior to the A. cartilages. They pour out a mucous fluid to lubricate the larynx.

ARYTENOIDÆ/US. (F) Arytenoidien. A small muscle, which passes from one arytenoid cartilage to the other, by its contraction brings them together, and diminishes the aperture of the glottis. Winslow divided the muscle into three portions;—the Arytenoid'a'us transver'sus, and two Arytenoid'a'ii obli'qui.

ARYTHM, Aryth'mus, from a privative, and ρυθμος, 'rhythm,' 'measure.' Irregular. This word is applied chiefly to the pulse.

ASA, Asafetida.

ASAFETIDA, Assafat'ida, Stercus diab'oli, Asa, Devil's dung. A gummy resin obtained from the Fœ'ulu Assafat'ida, Order, Umbellifera'æ. It is in small masses of a whitish, reddish, and violet hue, adhering together. Taste bitter and subacid: smell insupportably alliaceous. The Asiatics use it regularly as a condiment.

Its medical properties are antispasmodic, stimulant, and anthelmintic. Dose, gr. v. to xx, in pill.

AS'APES, 'crude,' Asp'eton. A term applied to the sputum, or to other matters evacuated, which do not give signs of coction.

ASAPH'ATUM, from a priv. and σαφης, 'clear.' This term has been applied to collections in the sebaceous follicles of the skin, which may be pressed out like little worms, with a black head. See Acne.

ASAPH'IA, from a privative and σαφης, 'clear.' Dyspho'nia immoda'ta palati'na, Parapho'nia guttura'tis; P. palati'na. Defective articulation, dependent upon diseased palate.—Hippocr., Vogel.

ASARABACCA, Asarum.

ASAR'CON, from a privative; and σαρξ, 'flesh.' Devoid of flesh. Aristotle uses the term for the head when it is but little fleshy, compared with the chest and abdomen.

ASARET, Asarum.

ASARITES, from ασαρον, 'the asarum.' A diuretic wine, of which asarum was an ingredient.—Dioscorides.

ASARUM, from a priv., and σαγειν, 'to adorn' because not admitted into the ancient coronal wreaths. As'arum Europ'a'um, Nardus Monta'na, Nardus Rus'sica, Asarum. (F) Asaret ou Cabaret, Oreille d'homme, Oreillette, Girard-Roussin, Nard Sauvage. Fam. Aroideæ. Scr. Syst. Dodecandria Monogynia. The plant, used in medicine, is the As'arum Europ'a'um, the Asarabac'ca, and of this the leaves. They are emetic, cathartic, errhine, but are hardly ever employed, except for the last purpose.

ASARUM CANADEN'SE, Canada Snake-root, Wild Ginger, Colt's Foot. It is used as a substitute for ginger, and is said to act as a warm stimulant and diaphoretic.

ASCAIN, MINERAL WATERS OF. Ascain is a village, situate about a league from St. Jean-de-Luz in France. The water is a cold chalybeate.

ASCARDAMYCTES, from a priv., and σκαζδαμυττω, 'I twinkle the eyes.' One who stares with fixed eyes, and without moving the eyelids.—Hippocr.

ASCARIDA ANTHELMINTICA. Vernonia anthelmintica.

AS'CARIS, pl. ASCARIDES, from ασκαριζω, 'I leap.' A genus of intestinal worms, characterized by a long, cylindrical body, attenuated at the extremities; and having a mouth furnished with three tubercles, from which a very short tube is sometimes seen issuing.

Formerly, there were reckoned two varieties of the Ascaris—the As'caris lumbricoi'des, Lumbric'us. L. Trres or long round worm; and the As'caris Vermiculat'ris—the Ascaris proper—the thread worm or navy worm. The former is alone included under the genus, at present, —a new genus having been formed of the A. vermicularis under the name Oxy'uris.

ASCARIS TRICHURIA, Tricocephalus.

AS'CELLES or AS'KELES, Carens crur'ibus, from a privative, and σκελες, 'a leg.' One who has no legs.

ASCELLA, Axilla.

ASCEN'DENS, from Ascendere, 'to ascend.' (F) Ascendant. Parts are thus called, which are supposed to arise in a region lower than that where they terminate. Thus, Aorta ascendens, is the aorta from its origin to the arch: Vena cava ascendens, the large vein, which carries the blood from the inferior parts to the heart: Obliguus ascendens (muscle), the lesser oblique muscle of the abdomen, &c.

ASCEN'SUS MORBI. The period of increase of a disease.

ASCESIS, Exercise.

ASCHILL, Scilla.

ASCIA, Αξινῆ, 'an axe,' Secpar'nos, Dolabra, Fascia spiralis. Name of a bandage mentioned by Hippocrates and Galen, and figured by Scultetus, in the shape of an axe or hatchet.—Galen. See Doloire.

ASCILLA, Axilla.

ASCITES, from ασκος, 'a bottle.'—Hydrocele Peritonæi, Hydrops Abdominis, Hydrogaster, Asclites. A collection of serous fluid in the abdomen. Dropsy of the lower belly. (F) Ascite. Ascites proper is dropsy of the peritoneum; and is characterized by increased size of the abdomen, by fluctuation and the general signs of dropsy. It is rarely a primary disease, but is always dangerous, and but little susceptible of cure. Most generally, it is owing to obstructed circulation in some of the viscera, or to excitement of the vessels of the abdominal organs. The treatment is essentially the same as that of other dropsies. Paracentesis, when had recourse to, can only be regarded as a palliative.

ASCITES HEPATO-CYSTICUS, Turgescentia vesiculæ fellæ—a. Ovarii, Hydrops ovarii—a. Saccatus, Hydrops ovarii.

ASCLEPIADE, Asclepias Vincetoxicum.

ASCLEPIAS TUBEROSA, Butterfly Weed, Pleurisy Root, Flux Root, Wind Root, White Root. Nat. Ord. Asclepiadæ, Sex. Syst. Pentandria Gynia. Said to have been first recommended by Ασκληπιιδης. In Virginia and the Carolinas, the root of this plant has been long celebrated as a remedy in pneumonic affections. It is sudorific, and the powder acts as a mild purgative. Its chief powers are said to be expectorant, diaphoretic, and febrifuge. It is occasionally given to relieve pains of the stomach from flatulence and indigestion.

ASCLEPIAS SYRIACA, Common Silkweed, Milk Weed, (F) Herbe à la houette. The cortical part of the root has been given, in powder, in asthmatic and pulmonic affections in general, and, it is said, with success.

ASCLEPIAS VINCETOXICUM. Called from Æsculapius probably. The Swallow Wort. (F) Asclépiade, Dompte-venin. The root is said to be stimulant, diuretic, and emmenagogue, but is hardly ever used. It is called, also, Hirundinaria.

ASCLEPIAS DECUMBENS, the root. Esclarcotic, cathartic, sudorific, diuretic.

ASCLEPIAS ASTHMATICA. (F) Ipecacuanha blanc de l'Île de France. A creeping plant of the Isle of France, regarded as a specific in asthma.

ASCLEPIAS CURASSAVICA. The leaves are emetic in the dose of one or two scruples. It is the Ipecacuanha blanc of St. Domingo.

ASCLEPIAS GIGANTEA. The milky juice is very caustic. It is used in Malabar against lacerps; and, mixed with oil, in gout.

ASCLEPIAS PROCFERA (?) Beidcl-ossar; Beidelsar. An Egyptian plant, the leaves of which are made into plaster, and applied to indolent tumours. The milky juice is caustic, and is used as such.

ASCLITES, Ascites.

ASCOMA, from ασκος, 'a bottle.' The eminence of the pubes at the period of puberty in females.—Rufus of Ephesus.

ASE, Anxiety.

ASELLI, Onisci aselli.

ASELLUS, Oniscus.

AHEMA CRISIS, κρίσις ασημα, from a priv. and σημα, 'a sign.' A crisis occurring unexpectedly, and without the ordinary precursory signs.

ASEPTON, Asapes.

ASH TREE, Fraxinus excelsior—a. Mountain, Sorbus acuparia—a. Prickly, Aralia spinosa, Xanthoxylum clava Herculis.

ASITIA, from a priv. and σιτος, 'food.' Abstinence from food (q. v.) Want of appetite.

ASJAGAN, As'jogam. An Indian tree, the juice of whose leaves, mixed with powdered cumin seeds, is employed, in India, in colic.

ASJOGAM, Asjagan.

ASKELES, Asceles.

ASPALASOMUS, from ασπαλαξ, 'a mole,' and σωμα, 'body.' A genus of monsters in which there is imperfect development of the eyes.—I. G. St. Hilaire.

ASPALTUM, Asphaltum.

ASPARAGINE. See Asparagus.

ASODES, Asso'des, from αση, 'disgust,' 'satiety.' A fever accompanied with anxiety and nausea. Febris aso'des vel azo'des.

ASPARAGUS, Aspar'agus officinalis, Common Asparagus, Sparrow Grass, Grass. Nat. Ord. Asphodelæ, Sex. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia. Aspar'agi officinalis Turionnes. (F) Asperge. The fresh roots are diuretic, perhaps owing to the immediate, crystallizable principle, Asparagine. The young shoots are a well known and esteemed vegetable diet. They communicate a peculiar odour to the urine. A syrup made of the young shoots and an extract of the roots has been recently recommended as a sedative in heart affections.

ASPASIA. A ball of wood soaked in an infusion of galls, and used by females for constringing the vagina.

ASPERGE, Asparagus.

ASPERITAS DES PAUPIERES, Trachoma.

ASPERTAS ARTERIÆ ASPERÆ, Rucedo.

ASPERTITY, Asperitas, roughness. Asperities are inequalities on the surfaces of bones, which often serve for the insertion of fibrous organs.

ASPERMATIS'MUS, from a priv. and σπερμα, 'sperm.' Reflux of sperm from the urethra into the bladder, during the venereal orgasm.

ASPERSIO, Catapasma, Fomentation.

ASPERULA, Galium aparine.

ASPERSION, Asper'sio, (F) Arrosment.

Act of sprinkling or pouring a liquid guttation over a wound, ulcer, &c.

ASPERULA ODORATA, Matrisyl'va, Hepatica stellata, (F) Aspérule odorante ou Maguet des bois, Hépatique étoilée. Fam. Rubiacæ. Scz. Syst. Tetrاندria Monogynia. Sweet-scented Woodroof. Said to be diuretic, deobstruent, tonic, and vulnerary.

ASPERULE ODORANTE, Asperula odorata. ASPHAL'TUM, Νεφ'τα, Arsal'tos, Asphaltum, from ασφαλιζεν, 'to strengthen.' With the Greeks, this word signified any kind of bitumen. It is now restricted chiefly to the BITUMEN OF JUDE'A, B. Judaicum, B. sol'idam, Jew's Pitch, or Karabé of Sodom. (F) Asphalte. It is solid, friable, vitreous, black, shining, inflammable, and of a fetid smell. An oil is obtained from it by distillation. It enters into the composition of certain ointments and plasters.

It is collected on the surface of the water of the Dead Sea, or Lake Asphaltites in Judæa.

ASPHAL'TITES, same etymon. A name, given by some to the last lumbar vertebra.—Gorræus.

ASPHARINE, Galium aparine.
ASPHODELUS RAMOSUS, Asphodelus, A. Albus, A. Maris, Ha'stula Regis. (F) Lis asphodèle. The bulbs of this southern European plant have an acrimony, which they lose in boiling water. They contain a fecula with which bread has been made, and have been considered diuretic. They have been used as a succedaneum for the squill.

ASPHYXIA, from a priv. and σφυζεις, 'pulse.' Defectus Pulsus, Aerotis'mos. For a long time, Asphyxia was confined to the sense of 'suspension of circulation.' It now generally means suspended animation, produced by the nonconversion of the venous blood of the lungs into arterial blood. Απν'α, (q. v.) Apneus'tia, Απνασπληξ'ια, Ανηκματ'ισια. Owing to the supply of air being cut off, the unchanged venous blood of the pulmonary artery passes into the minute radicles of the pulmonary veins, but their peculiar irritability requiring arterial blood to excite them, stagnation takes place in the pulmonary radicles, and death occurs chiefly from this cause,—not owing to venous blood being distributed through the system, and 'poisoning' it, as was the idea of Bichat. Carus asphyxia, Mors apparatus, Mors putativa, or Apparent death, is characterized by suspension of respiration, of the cerebral functions, &c. Several varieties of Asphyxia have been designated.

1. ASPHYXIA BY SUBMERSION, A. by Drowning, a. Immersorum, as occurs in the drowned, who perish in consequence of the medium in which they are plunged being unfit for respiration. See Submersion.

2. ASPHYXIA BY STRANGULATION or Suffocation; produced by mechanical impediment to respiration, as in strangulation.

3. ASPHYXIA BY NOXIOUS INHALATION, or inhalation of Gases, some of which cause death by producing a spasmodic closure of the glottis: others by the want of oxygen, and others are positively deleterious or poisonous.

4. ASPHYXIA OF THE NEW-BORN. This is often dependent upon the feeble condition of the infant, not permitting respiration to be established.

Mr. Chevalier has used the term Asphyxia Idiopathica for fatal syncope owing to relaxation of the heart. See Suffocation.

ASPHYXIA, LOCAL. See Gangrene.

ASPIC, Aspis, also, Lavendula.

ASPIDISCOS, Splincter ani externus.

ASPIDIUM CORIACEUM, Calaguala radix—a. Filix mas, Polypodium filix mas.

ASPIRATIO, Inspiration.

ASPIRATION, Adspiratio, Aspiratio. The French sometimes use the term synonymously with inspiration. It also means the act of attracting or sucking like a pump. Imbibition, (q. v.) Also, the pronunciation of a vowel with a full breath.

ASPIS, ασπις. A name given by the ancients to a venomous serpent—the Egyptian viper, of Lacépède. (F) Aspic. Its bite is very dangerous, and it is supposed to have been the reptile which Cleopatra used for her destruction.

ASPLENIUM, from a priv. and σπλην, 'the spleen.' Splenwort, Miltwaste.

ASPLENIUM CET'ERACH, Doradilla, Blechnum squamosum, Scolopendria, Althyrion, Cet'erach officinarum. (F) Doradille. Supposed to be substringent and mucilaginous, and has been recommended as a pectoral. It has also been given in calculous cases.

ASPLENIUM RUTA MURARIA, A. murale, Paronychia, Wallrue, White Maidenhair, Tentwort, Adiantum album, Ruta muraria, Salvia vite. (F) Rue des murailles, Sauverie. Used in the same cases as the last.

ASPLENIUM SCOLOP'ENDRIUM, Scolopendrium officinarum, Hurt's Tongue, Splenwort, Phyllitis, Lingua cervina, Blechnum lignifolium. (F) Scolopendre, Langue de cerf. Properties like the last.

ASPLENIUM TRICHOMANOIDES, A. Trichomanes, Calliphyl'ium, καλλιφυλλον, Trichomanes, Adiantum rubrum, Common Maidenhair, Polytricum communc, (F) Polytric. Properties like the last.

ASPREDO, Trachoma—a. Miliacea, Miliary fever.

ASPRELE, Hippuris Vulgaris.

ASSA DOUX, Benjamin—a. Dulcis, Benjamin—a. Odorata, Benjamin.

ASSABA. A Guinea shrub whose leaves are considered capable of dispersing buboes.

ASSAIERET. A compound of bitter, stomachic, and purgative medicines, in the form of a pill.—Avicenna.

ASSAISONNEMENT, Condiment.

ASSAKUR, Saccharum.

ASSALA. See Myristica moschata.

ASSARTHOSIS, Articulation.

ASSELLA, Axilla.

ASSATIO, Opt'sis. The boiling of food or medicines in their own juice, without the addition of any liquid. Various kinds of cooking by heat.—Galen.

ASSERAC, Assis. A preparation of opium or of some narcotic, used by the Turks as an excitant.

ASSERULUM, Splint.

ASSERVATION, Conservation.

ASSIDENS, from ad, 'to,' and sedere, 'to be seated.' That which accompanies or is concomitant. An epithet applied to the accessory symptoms and general phenomena of disease.

ASSIMILATION, Assimilatio, Appropriatio, Exomoiōsis, Homoiōsis, Threpsis, Threpticē: from assimilare, 'to render similar.' The act by which living bodies appropriate and transform into their own substance, matters with which they may be placed in contact. In man, assimilation is a function of nutrition.

ASSIS, Asserac.

AS'SIUS LAPIS, Asius Lapis. A sort of stone or earth found near the town of Assa in the Troad, and which had the property of destroying proud flesh.

ASSODES, Asodes.

ASSOUPISSEMENT, Soli Somnolency.

ASSOURON. See Myrtus pimenta.

ASSUETUDO, Habit.

ASSULA, Splint.

ASSUMPTIO, Prehension.

ASTACUS FLUVIATILIS, Crab.

ASTACI FLUVIATILIS CONCREMENTA, Cancerorum chela.

ASTAKILLOS, Araneum ulcus.

ASTASIA, Dysphoria.

ASTARZOF. An ointment, composed of litalge, frog's spawn, &c. Also, camphor dissolved in rose-water.—Paracelsus.

ASTER ATTICUS, Bubonium—a. Inguinalis, Eryngium campestre.

ASTERIA GEMMA, Asterias, Astroites, Astrios, Astrobolos. The ancients attributed imaginary virtues to this stone,—that of dispersing Navi Materni, e. g.

ASTHENIA, from  $\alpha$  priv. and  $\sigma\theta\epsilon\upsilon\omicron\varsigma$ , 'force,' 'strength.' Want of strength, debility. (q. v.) Infirmitas, (q. v.) A word used in this sense by Galen, and employed especially by Brown to designate debility of the whole economy or diminution of the vital forces. He distinguished it into direct and indirect: the former proceeding from diminution of stimuli; the latter from exhaustion of incitability by the abuse of stimuli.

ASTHENIA PECTORALIS, Angina pectoris.

ASTHMA, from  $\alpha\omega$ , 'I respire,' A. spasticum adultorum, A. Seniorum, A. Convulsivum, A. spasticum intermitiens, Dyspnœa et orthopnœa convulsiva, Broken windedness. Difficulty of breathing, recurring at intervals, accompanied with a wheezing sound and sense of constriction in the chest; cough and expectoration.

Asthma is a chronic disease, and not curable with facility. Excitant and narcotic antispasmodics are required.

The ASTHMA ACUTUM of Millar, A. spasticum infantum, Cyanicæ trachealis spasmodica, (F.) Asthma tigu, probably spasmodic croup. (?)

The ASTHMA SICCUM, so called when the paroxysm is sudden, violent, and of short duration: cough slight, and expectoration scanty: spasmodic constriction.

ASTHMA, HAV, FEVER, hay.

The ASTHMA HUMIDUM, Humid, Common or spitting asthma, is when the disease is accompanied with expectoration. It is also called A. humorale, A. flatulentum, A. pneumonicum, Blenorrhœax chronicus, &c.

There are no pathognomonic physical signs of asthma. In some cases, the respiration is universally puerile during the attack. In the spasmodic form the respiratory murmur is very feeble or absent during the fit; and in all forms of the disease percussion elicits a clear pulmonary sound.

The disease generally consists in some source of irritation, and occasionally, perhaps, in paralysis of the pneumogastric nerves: more frequently of the former—all the phenomena indicating constriction of the smaller bronchial ramifications.

The treatment is one that relieves spasmodic action—narcotics, counter-irritants—change of air, &c.

ASTHMA AERIUM, Pneumothorax—a. Arthriticum, Angina pectoris—a. Convulsivum, Angina pectoris—a. Emphysematicum, Pneumothorax—a. Infantum, Cyaniche trachealis—a. Dolorificum, Angina pectoris—a. Nocturnum, Incubus.

ASTHMA PULVERULENTUM. The variety of asthma to which Millers, Bakers, Grinders and others are subject.

ASTHMA SPASTICO-ARTHRITICUM INCONSTANS, Angina pectoris.

ASTHMA THYMICUM, A. T. Koppii, Spasmus glottidis, A. intermittens infantum, A. Denticium, A. periodicum acutum, Koppian Asthma, Thymic Asthma, Laryngismus stridulus. A disease of infants characterized by suspension of respiration at intervals; great difficulty of breathing, especially on waking, swallowing, or crying, ending often in a fit of suffocation with convulsions.

The pathology of the disease has been supposed to consist in enlargement of the Thymus gland, or of the glands of the neck pressing on the pneumogastric nerves.

The ear, on auscultation, at a distance from the chest, detects an incomplete, acute, hissing inspiration, or rather cry; whilst the expiration and voice are croupal, both at the accession and termination of the paroxysm. The heart's action has been observed to be distinct and feeble.

ASTHMATIC, Asthmaticus; one affected with asthma. What relates to asthma.

ASTOMUS,  $\alpha\sigma\tau\omicron\mu\omicron\varsigma$ , from  $\alpha$  priv. and  $\sigma\tau\omicron\mu\alpha$ , 'a mouth.' One without a mouth. Pliny speaks of a people in India without mouths, who live anhelati et odore!

ASTRAGALE COL D', Collum astragali.

ASTRAGALUS, Talus, the Ankle, Quadratio, Diabolos, Peza, Cavicula, Cavilla, Tetroros, Astriion, Os Ballistæ. A short bone situate at the superior and middle part of the tarsus, where it is articulated with the tibia. It is the ankle bone, sling bone or first bone of the foot. The anterior surface is convex, and has a well-marked prominence, supported by a kind of neck, and hence has been called the head of the Astragalus. The astragalus is developed by two points of ossification.

ASTRAGALUS EXCAPUS, Stemless Milk-vetch, (F) Astragalus à gousses velus. Nat. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sez. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. The root is said to have cured confirmed syphilis.

ASTRAGALUS VERUS, Goat's thorn, Milk-vetch, Spina hirci, Astragalus ucedalus. The plant which affords Gum Tragacanth. See Tragacantha.

ASTRAGALUS TRAGACANTHUS, see Traga-canth.

ASTRANTIA, Imperatoria.

AS'TRAPE, Coruscatio, Fulgur, Lightning. Galen reckons it amongst the remote causes of epilepsy.

ASTRICT'ION, Astrictio, στριψις, from ad-strin'g're, 'to constrict.' Action of an astrin-gent substance on the animal economy.

ASTRICTORIA, Astringents.

ASTRINGENTS, Astringen'tia, Katasta'l'tica, Constringen'tia, Contrahen'tia, Stegno'tica, Syncrit'ica, Astricto'ria, from astrin'g're, 'to con-strict.' Medicines, which have the property of constricting the organic textures. External astringents are called Styptics.

The following are the chief astringents :

|                          |                |
|--------------------------|----------------|
| Acidum Sulphuricum,      | Kino,          |
| Alumen,                  | Krameria,      |
| Argenti Nitras,          | Liquor Calcis, |
| Catechu,                 | Plumb. Acetas, |
| Cupri Sulphas,           | Quercus Alba,  |
| Ferri Muratis, Tinct.    | " Tinctoria,   |
| Ferri Nitratiss, Liquor, | Tanuinum,      |
| Ferri Sulphas,           | Zuici Sulphas, |
| Gallat,                  |                |
| Hæmatoxyton,             | Creasoton.     |

ASTRION, Astragalus.

ASTRIOS, Asteria gemma.

ASTROBLES, from αστρον, 'a star,' and βλαβη, 'I strike.' One struck by the stars (sideratus.) One who is in a state of sidera-tion—in an apoplectic state.—Gorræus.

ASTROBOLIS'MOS, same etymology. Sid-deration or action of the stars on a person. Apoplexy.—Theophr., Gorræus.

ASTROBLOS, Asteria gemma.

ASTROITIS, Asteria gemma.

ASTROLOG'Y, Astrolo'gia, from αστρον, 'a star,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' The art of di-viding by inspecting the stars. This was for-merly considered to be a part of Medicine ; and was called Judicial Astrology, to distinguish it from Astronomy.

ASTRON'OMY, Astron'omia, from αστρον, 'a star,' and νομος, 'a law,' 'rule.' A science, which makes known the heavenly phenomena, and the laws that govern them. Hippocrates places this and Astrology amongst the neces-sary studies of a physician.

ASTYSIA, Impotence.

ASUAR, Myrobalanus Indica.

ASULCI, Lapis lazuli.

ASYNODIA, Impotence.

ATACTOS, Erratic.

ATAVISM ; from Atavus, 'an old grandsire or ancestor, indefinitely.' The case in which an anomaly or disease, existing in a family, is lost in one generation and reappears in the fol-lowing.

ATARACTAPOIE'SIA, from a priv. ταρακ-τος, 'troubled,' and ποιειν, 'to make.' Intre-pidity, firmness. A quality of which, according to Hippocrates, the physician ought to be pos-sessed in the highest degree.

ATARAX'IA, from a privative, and ταραξις, 'trouble,' 'emotion.' Moral tranquillity, peace of mind.

ATAX'IA, from a priv. and ταξις, 'order.' Disorder, irregularity. Hippocrates employs the word in its most extensive acceptation Galen applies it, especially, to irregularity of pulse ; and Sydenham speaks of Ataxia Spi-rituum for disorder of the nervous system. Ataxia, now, usually means the state of disorder that characterizes nervous fevers, and the ner-vous condition.

ATAxia SPIRITUUM, Nervous diathesis.

ATCHIAR, Achia, Achur. A condiment used in India. It is formed of green fruits of various kinds;—garlic, ginger, mustard, and pimento, pickled in vinegar.

ATECNIA, Sterilitas.

ATELES, ατελης, 'imperfect, defective.' Hence,

ATELOENCEPHAL'IA, from ατελης, 'im-perfect,' and εγκεφαλον, 'the encephalon.' State of imperfect development of the brain.—Andral.

ATELOCHIE'LIA, from ατελης, 'imperfect,' and χειλος, 'lip.' A malformation which con-sists in an imperfect development of the lip.

ATELOGLOS'SIA, from ατελης, 'imper-fect,' and γλωσσα, 'tongue.' A malformation which consists in an imperfect development of the tongue.

ATELOGNA'THIA, from ατελης, 'imper-fect,' and γναθος, 'the jaw.' A malformation which consists in an imperfect development of the jaw.

ATELOMYELIA, from ατελης, 'imperfect,' and μυελος, 'marrow.' State of imperfect de-velopment of the spinal marrow.—Beclard.

ATELOPROS'OPIA, from ατελης, 'imper-fect,' and προσωπον, 'the face.' A malforma-tion which consists in imperfect development of the face.

ATELOSTO'MIA, from ατελης, 'imperfect,' and στομα, 'mouth.' One whose mouth is im-perfectly developed.

ATER SUCCUS, Atrabilis.

ATHANASIA, Tanacetum.

ATHAMAN'TA, from Athamas, a place in Thessaly. A genus of plants.

ATHAMAN'TA CRETEN'SIS or Cre'tica, Dancus Cre'ticus ; D. Candianus, Myrrhis annua, Cardy Carrot. The seeds of this plant are acrid and aromatic. They have been used as carminati-ves and diuretics.

ATHAMAN'TA AUREOSELI'NUM, Orcoseli'num, Black Mountain Parsley. (F) Persil de Mon-tagne. The plant, seed and roots are aromatic. It has been considered attenuant, aperient, de-obstruent, and lithontripic. The distilled oil has been used in toothache.

ATHANA'SIA, from a priv. and θανατος, 'death.' An antidote for diseases of the liver, jaundice, gravel, &c. It consisted of saffron, cinnamon, lavender, cassia, myrrh, juncus odo-ratus, honey, &c., and was esteemed to be su-dorific.

ATHIARA, Athera.

ATHELAS'MUS, from a priv. and θηλη, 'a breast or nipple.' Impracticability of giving suck ; from want of nipple or otherwise.

ATHELXIS, Sucking.

ATHE'NA, αθηνα. Name of a plaster, recom-mended by Asclepiades, and composed of oxide of copper, sublimed oxide of zinc, sal am-moniac, verdigris, gall-nuts, and a variety of resinous and other ingredients.—Oribasius, Aëtius, and P. Ægiucta.

ATHENIONIS CATAPOTIUM. A pill, composed of myrrh, pepper, castor, and opium; used to allay coughing.—Celsus.

ATHERA, Atha'ra, from αθηρ, 'an ear of corn.' A kind of pap for children; also, a kind of liniment.—Dioscorides, Pliny.

ATHEROMA, from αθηρα, 'pap or pulp.' Emphy'ma cneystis athero'ma, Molluscum. A tumour formed by a cyst containing matter like pap or Bovillie.

ATHEROMATOUS, Atheromato'des. Having the nature of Atheroma.

ATHLETA, from αθλεις, 'combat.' Athletes were men, who exercised themselves in combat at the public festivals.—Vitruv.

ATHLETIC, Athlet'icus; concerning Athlet'ice. Strong in muscular powers.—Fœsius.

ATHORACOCEPHALUS, Acephalogaster.

ATHRIX DEPILIS, Alopecia.

ATHYMIA, An'imi defectus et anx'etas, An'imi demis'sio, Tristia, from a priv. and θυμος, 'heart,' 'courage.' Despondency. The prostration of spirits, often observable in the sick.—Hippocr. Melancholy.—Swediaur. Sec Panophobia.

ATHYRIUM FILIX MAS, Polypodium filix mas.

ATLANTION, Atlas.

ATLAS, Atlantion, from ατλαω, 'I sustain.' The first cervical vertebra; so called, from its supporting the whole weight of the head, as Atlas is said to have supported the globe on his shoulders. Chaussier calls it Atloid. This vertebra in no respect resembles the others. It is a kind of irregular ring, into which, anteriorly, the processus dentatus of the second vertebra is received. Posteriorly, it gives passage to the medulla spinalis.

ATLOIDO-AXOID, (F) Atloido-axoidien. Relating to both the Atlas and the Axis or Vertebra Dentata.

ATLOIDO-AXOID ARTICULATION. The articulation between the two first cervical vertebrae.

ATLOIDO-AXOID LIGAMENTS. These are two in number; one anterior and another posterior, passing between the two vertebrae.

ATLOIDO-OCCIPITAL. Relating to the Atlas and occiput. The Atloido-occipital Articulation is formed by the condyles of the occipital bone and the superior articular surfaces of the Atlas.

ATLOIDO-OCCIPITAL, Rectus capitis posticus minor—a. Sous-mastoïdien, Obliquus superior oculi—a. Sous-occipitale, Rectus capitis lateralis.

ATMIATRIA, Atmidial'rica, from ατμος, 'vapour,' and ιατρεια, 'treatment.' Treatment of diseases by fumigation.

ATMIDIATRICA, Atmiatria.

ATMISTERION, Vaporarium.

ATMOS, Breath.

ATMOSPHERE, Atmosph'ra, from ατμος, 'vapour,' and σφαιρα, 'a sphere:'—as it were, Sphere of vapours. The atmosphere is a spherical mass of air, surrounding the earth in every part; the height of which is estimated at 15 or 16 leagues. It presses on the surface of the earth, and this pressure has, necessarily, sensible effects on organized bodies. The surface of the human body being reckoned at 15 square feet, it is computed that a pressure of 33,000 pounds or more exists under ordinary circumstances; and this pressure cannot be increased or diminished materially, without modifying the circulation and all the functions.

ATMOSPHERIZATION, Hæmaturis.

ATOL'MIA, from a priv. and τολμα, 'confidence.' Want of confidence; discouragement. A state of mind, unfavourable to health, and injurious in disease. It is the antithesis of Eutol'mia.

ATONY, Ato'nia, Infir'mitas et Remis'sio v'rium, Languor, Lax'itas, from a priv. and τονος, 'tone,' 'force.' Want of tone. Weakness of every organ, and particularly of those that are contractile. Violent gastritis has been described by Scribonius Largus under a similar name, ατονον, At'onon.

ATRABILIARY, Atrabil'ious, Atrabil'ialis, Atrabilio'sus. An epithet given by the ancients to the melancholic and hypochondriac, because they believed the Atrabilis to predominate in such.

The Atrabiliary capsules, arteries, and veins, are the renal capsules, arteries, and veins; the formation of Atrabilis having been attributed to them.

ATRABILIS, from atra, 'black,' and bilis, 'bile:' Ater succus, Black Bile or Melancholy. According to the ancients, a thick, black, acrid humour, secreted, in the opinion of some, by the pancreas; in that of others, by the suprarenal capsules. Hippocrates, Galen, Aëtius, and others ascribe great influence to the Atrabilis in the production of hypochondriasis, melancholy, and mania. There is really no such humour. It was an imaginary creation.—Arcæus, Rufus of Ephesus, &c.

ATRACHELOCEPHALUS, from a priv. τραχηλος, 'neck,' and κεφαλη, 'head.' A monster whose neck is partially or wholly deficient.

ATRACHELUS. Same etymon. One who is very short-necked.—Galen.

ATRACTYLIS GUMMIFERA, Carduus pincus, Ir'ine, Gummy-rooted Attractylis, Pine Thistle. The root, when wounded, yields a milky, viscid juice, which concretes into tenacious masses, and is said to be chewed with the same views as Mastich.

ATRAGENE, Clematis vitalba.

ATRAMENTUM, A. Sutorium, Ink, Calcan'thon, (F) Encre. It has been advised as an astringent, and as an external application in herpetic affections.

ATRAMENTUM SUTORIUM, Ferri sulphas.

ATRESIA, Adherence, Imperforation.

ATRETISMUS, Imperforation.

ATRE'TUS, from a priv. and τρειω, 'I perforate.' One whose anus or parts of generation are imperforate.

AT'RICES. Small tumours, which appear occasionally around the anus. Some commentators consider the word to be synonymous with condylomata.—Forestus.

AT'RICI. Small sinuses in the vicinity of the anus, not penetrating the rectum.

ATRIPLEX HORTENSIS, A. Sati'va, (F) Arroche, Bonne Dame. The herb and seed of this plant have been exhibited as antiscorbutics.

The Atriplex al'innus, A. Portulacoï'des, and A. Patula, are used as pickles, and have similar properties.

ATRIplex FœTIDA, Chenopodium vulvaria—a. Odorata, Chenopodium botrys—a. Olida, Chenopodium vulvaria.

ATRIUM CORDIS DEXTER, Sinus dexter cordis—a. Cordis sinistrum, Sinus pulmonalis.

ATROPA, from ἄτροπος, 'the goddess of destiny;' so called from its fatal effects.

ATROPA BELLADON'NA, Belladonna, Deadly Nightshade, Sola'num lutha'le, Sola'num maculatum, S. Furi'osum, Sola'num melanocerasus. (F.) Belladone, Morelle furieuse, Belle Dame. Nat. Ord. Solanææ, Sex. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia. The leaves are powerfully narcotic, diaphoretic, diuretic, and repellent. They are occasionally used where narcotics are indicated. Sprinkling the powdered leaves over cancerous sores has been found to allay the pain; and the leaves form a good poultice. Dose, gr.  $\frac{1}{2}$  to gr.  $\frac{1}{j}$  of the powdered leaves.

ATROPA MANDRAG'ORA, Mandrag'ora, Mandrake. The boiled root has been used in the form of poultice in indolent swellings.

ATROPHIA, Tabes—a. Mesenterica, Tabes mesenterica.

ATROPINE, Atropi'na, Atro'pia, Atro'pium. The active principle of the Atropa Belladonna, separated by Brandes, by a process similar to that for procuring Morphine.

ATROPHY, Maras'mus Atro'phia, Atro'phia, Maras'mus, Macies, Contubescen'tia, Tabes, Marco'res, Analo'sis, from α privative, and τροφή, 'nourishment.' (F.) Atrophic, Dessèchement. Progressive and morbid diminution in the bulk of the whole body or of a part. Atrophy is generally symptomatic.

ATTACHE, Insertion.

ATTAGAS, Attagen.

ATTACK', Insultus, Irreptio, Invasio, Eis'bole, Lapsis, (F) Attaque. A sudden attack, invasion or onset of a disease. A seizure.

ATTAGEN, At'agas, the Fran'colin. Celebrated with the ancients both as food and medicine.—Martial. Aristophanes.

ATTANCOURT, MINERAL WATERS OF. A mineral water in France at Attancourt in Champagne; and about 3 leagues north of Joinville. The water is a chalybeate, and contains sulphate of lime. In large doses it is purgative.

ATTÂQUE, Attack—a. des Nerfs, Nervous attack.

ATTELLE, Splint.

ATTENÖTING, MINERAL WATERS OF, in Bavaria. The water contains carbonic acid, carbonates of lime and soda, sulphates of lime and magnesia, muriate of soda, iron, and alum. It is much used in skin diseases, fistula, old ulcers, calculi, and hemorrhoids.

ATTENUANTS, Atteman'tia Leptun'tica, from τείνω, 'thin.' Medicines which augment the fluidity of the humours.

ATTRAHANT, Attrahent.

ATTITUDE, Situs Cor'poris. Situation, position of the body. The attitudes are the different postures which man is capable of assuming. In General Pathology, the attitude will often enable the physician to pronounce at once upon the character of a disease, or it will aid him materially in his judgment. In St. Vitus's dance, in fractures, luxations, &c., it is the great index. It will also indicate the degree of nervous or cerebral power: hence the sinking down in bed is an evidence of great cerebral debility in fever.

The position of a patient during an operation is an interesting subject of attention to the surgeon.

ATTOLLENS AUREM, Attollens Auric'ula, Levator Auris, Superior Auris, Attollens Auric'ulam, (F) Auriculaire supérieur, Temporo-auriculaire. A muscle of the ear, which arises, thin, broad, and tendinous, from the tendon of the occipito-frontalis, and is inserted into the upper part of the ear, opposite to the antihelix. It raises the ear.

ATTOLLENS OCULI, Rectus superior oculi.

ATTOUCHEMENT, Masturbation.

ATTRACTION OF AGGREGATION, Cohesion, force of.

ATTRACTIVUM. See Magnet.

ATTRACTIVUS, Attrahent.

TRACTORIUS, Attrahent.

ATTRAHENT, Attrahens, Attract'ivus, Attracto'rius, from ad, 'to,' and traho, 'I draw.' (F) Attractif, Attrayant. Remedies are so called, which attract fluids to the parts to which they are applied, as blisters, rubefacients, &c.

ATTRAPE-LOURDAUT, (F.) A bistouri invented by a French surgeon, called Biennaise, and used in the operation for hernia. See Bistour caché.

ATTRITA, Chafing.

ATTRITION, Attrit'io, Ecthlisma, from terere, 'to bruise.' Friction or bruising. Chafing.—Galen. Also, a kind of cardialgia.—Senertus. Likewise, a violent contusion.

ATYPIC, Atypicus, At'ypos, from α privative, and τυπος, 'type.' That which has no type. Irregular. Chiefly applied to an irregular intermittent. Febris atypica.

ATYPOS, Erratic.

AUANTE, Anap'se, from αυαντες, 'desiccation.' Hippocrates gave this name to a disease, the principal symptom of which was emaciation.—Atrophy.

AUBE-VIGNE, Clematis vitalba.

AUBERGINE, Solanum Melongena.

AUBÉPINE, Mespilus oxyacantha.

AUBIFOIN, Cyanus segetum.

AUCHEN, Colum.

AUDE, Voice.

AUDINAC, MINERAL WATERS OF. Audinac is situate in the department of Ariège, France. The water contains a small quantity of hydrosulphuric acid; carbonic acid, sulphates of lime and magnesia, carbonates of lime and iron, and a bituminous substance. It is much used in chronic rheumatism, herpes, scrofulous diseases, &c.

AUDITION, from audire, 'to hear.' ἰσοῦ, Audit'io, Audit'us, Acos'is, Acu'sis. Hearing. The act of hearing. The sensation arising from an impression made on the auditory nerves by the vibrations of the air, produced by a sonorous body. The Physiology of Audition is obscure. It probably takes place:—1. By the vibrations being communicated from the membrana tympani along the chain of small bones to the membrane of the foramen ovale. 2. By means of the air in the cavity of the tympanum, the membrane of the foramen retundum is agitated. 3. The transmission may be made by means of the bony parietes.

In these three ways the vibrations, produced by a sonorous body, may reach the auditory nerves. Audition may be active or passive: hence the difference between listening and simply hearing.

AUDITORY, Auditivus, Auditivus. That which relates to audition.

The EXTERNAL AUDITORY CANAL, Meatus auditivus externus, Alveolum, (F.) Conduit auditif externe, Conduit auriculaire, commences at the bottom of the concha, at the Foramen auditivum externum, passes inwards, forwards, and a little downwards, and terminates at the membrana tympani. It is partly cartilaginous, partly osseous, and partly fibrous.

The INTERNAL AUDITORY CANAL, Meatus auditivus internus, Cylind., (F.) Conduit auditif interne. C. labyrinthique, is situate in the posterior surface of the pars petrosa of the temporal bone. From the Foramen auditivum internum, where it commences, it passes forwards and outwards, and terminates by a kind of cul-de-sac, perforated by many holes, one of which is the orifice of the Aquæductus Fallopii; and the others communicate with the labyrinth.

The AUDITORY NERVE, Nervus labyrinthicus—(Ch.), is the Portio Mollis of the seventh pair. It arises from the corpus restiforme, from the floor of the fourth ventricle, and, by means of white striae, from the sides of the calamus scriptorius. As it leaves the encephalon, it forms a flattened cord, and proceeds with the facial nerve through the foramen auditivum internum, and as far as the bottom of the meatus, where it separates from the facial and divides into two branches, one going to the cochlea; the other to the vestibule and semicircular canals.

The AUDITORY ARTERIES AND VEINS, are vessels which enter the auditory canals, and are, like them, distinguished into internal and external. The external auditory artery, A. Tympanica—(Ch.), is given off by the styloid, a branch of the external carotid: the internal is a branch of the basilar artery, which accompanies the auditory nerve, and is distributed to it.

The AUDITORY VEINS empty into the internal and external jugulars.

AUGÉ, All'vous. Some of the older Anatomists gave this name to reservoirs, into which liquids flow in an interrupted manner, so that they are alternately full and empty. Such are the ventricles and auricles of the heart.

AUGMENTATION, from augere, 'to increase.' Augmentum, Incrementum, Aunal'asis, Auctio, Aux'esis. The stage of a disease in which the symptoms go on increasing.

AULISCOS, Canula.

AULOS, Canula. See Vagina, and Foramen.

AUMALE, MINERAL WATERS OF. Aumale is a town of Upper Normandy, in the country of Caux. Several springs of ferruginous mineral waters are found there, whose odour is penetrating, and taste rough and astringent. They are tonic, and employed in debility of the viscera, &c.

AUNE NOIR, Rhamnus frangula.

AUNÉE, Inula helenium—a. Dysentérique, Inula dysenterica.

AURA, Pnoë. A vapour or emanation from any body, surrounding it like an atmosphere. Van Helmont regarded the vital principle as a gas and volatile spirit, which he called Aura vitalis.

AURA SEMINIS or A. seminalis;—an active principle fancied to exist in the sperm, and regarded by some as the fecundating agent. Such is not the case.

AURA SANGUINIS. The odour exhaled by blood newly drawn. See Gaz Sanguinis.

In Pathology, Aura means the sensation of a light vapour, which, in some diseases, appears to set out from the trunk or limbs; and to rise towards the head. This feeling has been found to precede attacks of epilepsy and hysteria, and hence it has been called Aura epileptica and A. hysterica.

AURANITE. See Agaric.

AURANCUM. See Ovum.

AURANTIA CURASSAVENTIA, Curassoa apples or oranges. Immature oranges, checked, by accident, in their growth. They are a grateful, aromatic bitter, devoid of acidity. Infused in wine or brandy they make a good stomachic. They are also used for issuc peas.

AURANTIA CURASSAVICA, see Citrus aurantium—a. Poma, see Citrus aurantium.

AURANTIUM, Citrus aurantium.

AUREOLA, Areola.

AURI CHLORETUM CUM CHLORETUM NATRII, see Gold—a. Chloridum, Gold, muriate of—a. Chloretum, Gold, muriate of—a. Cyanidum, see Gold—a. Cyanuretum, see Gold—a. et Natrii chloruretum, see Gold—a. Murias, Gold, muriate of—a. Nitro-murias, see Gold—a. Oxidum, see Gold.

AURICHALCUM, Brass.

AURICULA. Diminutive of auris, an ear. The auricle of the ear. See Pavilion.

The AURICLES OF THE HEART, Cavitate innominata, (F.) Oreillettes, are two cavities; one right, the other left, each communicating with the ventricle of its side. These two cavities receive the blood from every part of the body. Into the right auricle, the two venæ cavæ and coronary vein open: into the left, the four pulmonary veins. Chaussier calls the former the Sinus of the Venæ Cavæ:—the latter, the Sinus of the Pulmonary Veins. See Sinus.

AURICULA JUDÆ, Peziza auricula—a. Muris. Hieracium Pilosella—a. Muris major, Hieracium murorum.

AURICULAIRE, see Digitus—a. Postérieur, Retrahens auris—a. Supérieur, Attollens aurem.

AURICULAR, Oreicular, Auricul'aris, from auric'ula, 'the ear.' That which belongs to the ear, especially to the external ear.

The AURICULAR ARTERIES AND VEINS, Oreiculaires—(Ch.), are divided into anterior and posterior. The anterior are of indeterminate number. They arise from the temporal artery, and are distributed to the meatus auditorius externus, and to the pavilion of the ear. The posterior auricular is given off by the external carotid, from which it separates in the substance of the parotid gland. When it reaches the inferior part of the pavilion of the ear it bifurcates; one of its branches being distributed to the inner surface of the pavilion, the other passing over the mastoid process, and being distributed to the temporal and posterior auris muscles, &c. Before its bifurcation it gives off the stylo-mastoid artery.

THE ANTERIOR AND POSTERIOR AURICULAR VEINS open into the temporal and external jugular.

THE AURICULAR NERVES are several. 1. The auricular branch, Zygomato-auricular, is one of the ascending branches of the cervical plexus. It ramifies and spreads over the two surfaces of the pavilion. 2. The auricular or superficial temporal, Temporal-cutaneous—(Ch.), is given off from the inferior maxillary. It ascends between the condyle of the jaw and the meatus auditorius externus, sends numerous filaments to the meatus and pavilion, and divides into two twigs, which accompany the branches of the temporal artery, and are distributed to the integuments of the head. There is also a posterior auricular furnished by the facial.

THE AURICULAR FINGER, (F.) Doigt auriculaire, is the little finger, so called because, owing to its size, it can be more readily introduced into the meatus auditorius.

AURICULARIS ANTERIOR, Anterior auris.

AURICULE, Pavilion of the ear.

AURICULO-VENTRICULAR, Auriculo-ventricul'ris. That which belongs to the auricles and ventricles of the heart. The communications between the auricles and ventricles are so called. The Tricuspid and Mitral Valves are auriculo-ventricular valves.

AURIGA. A species of bandage for the ribs, described by Galen. See, also, Liver.

AURIPIGMENTUM, Orpiment—a. Rubrum, Realgar.

AURIGO, Icterus—a. Neophytorum, Icterus Infantum.

AURIS, Ear.

AURISCALPIUM, Earpick.

AURIST, from auris, 'the ear.' One who occupies himself chiefly with the diseases of the ear and their treatment.

AURIUM FLUCTUATIO, Bombus—a. Marmorata, Cerumen—a. Sibilus, Bonibus—a. Sonitus, Bombus—a. Sordes, Cerumen—a. Susurrus, Bombus.

AURONE, Artemisia, abrotanum—a. des Champs, Artemisia campestris—a. des Jardins, Artemisia abrotanum—a. Mâle, Artemisia abrotanum.

AURUGO, Icterus.

AURUM, 'Gold,' (q. v.)

AURUM CHLORATUM, Gold, muriate of—a. Chloratum natronatum, see Gold—a. Foliatum, Gold leaf—a. in Libellis, Gold leaf—a. Leprosum, Antimonium—a. Limatum, see Gold—a. Muriaticum, Gold muriate of—a. Muriaticum, see Gold—a. Muriaticum natronatum, see Gold.

AURUM MUSIVUM, Aurum Mosadicum, Sulphuret of Tin. The deutosulphuret or persulphuret of tin. (Quicksilver, tin, sulphur, sal ammoniac, aa, equal parts. The tin being first melted, the quicksilver is poured into it, and then the whole are ground together, and sublimed in a bolthead. The aurum musivum lies at the bottom.) It is used in some empirical preparations.

AURUM OXYDATUM, see Gold—a. Oxydulatum inuriaticum, Gold, muriate of—a. Nitro-muriaticum, see Gold—a. Salitum, Gold, muriate of.

AUSCULTA'TION, Ausculta'tio from auscultare, 'to listen;' act of listening. Buisson has used it synonymously with listening. Laennec introduced auscultation to appreciate the different sounds, which can be heard in the chest, and in the diagnosis of diseases of the heart, lungs, &c. This may be done by the aid of an instrument called a stethoscope (q. v.), one extremity of which is applied to the ear, the other to the chest of the patient. This mode of examination is called Mediate Auscultation, (F.) Auscultation médiate.—the application of the ear to the chest forming immediate auscultation.

The act of exploring the chest is called Stethosco'pia, and Thoracosco'pia; of the abdomen, Abdominosco'pia, (q. v.)

AUSCULTATORY PERCUSSION, see Acouophonia.

AUSTÈRE, Aust'rus. Substances, which produce a high degree of acerb impression on the organs of taste.

AUSTROMAN'CY; Austromanti'a. The art of predicting from observance of the winds.

AUSTRÛCHE, Imperatoria.

AUTALGIA DOLOROSA, Neuralgia, facial, Pleurodynia—a. Pruriginosa, Itching—a. Vertigo, Vertigo.

AUTARCI'A, from αυτος, 'himself,' and ακαω, 'I am satisfied.' Moral tranquillity.—Galen.

AUTEMES'IA, from αυτος, 'self,' and εμεσις, 'vomiting.' Spontaneous or idiopathic vomiting.—Alibert.

AUTHE'MERON. A medicine which cures on the day of its exhibition; from αυτος, 'the same,' and ημερα, 'day.'

AUTOCHIRIA, Suicide.

AUTOCRASY, Autocrati'a, Autocrato'ria, from αυτος, 'himself,' and κρατος, 'strength.' Independent force. Action of the vital principle, or of the instinctive powers towards the preservation of the individual.—See Vis Medicatrix Naturæ. Also, the vital principle.

AUTOCRATIA, Autocracy, Vis medicatrix naturæ.

AUTOCRATORIA, Autocracy—a. Physiatrix, Vis medicatrix naturæ.

AUTOCTONIA, Suicide.

AUTOLITHOT'OMUS, Autolithot'omist, from αυτος, 'himself,' λιθος, 'a stone,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' One who operates upon himself for the stone.

AUTOMATIC, Automaticus, from αυτοματος, 'spontaneous.' That which acts of itself. Those movements are called automatic, which the patient executes without any object; apparently without volition being exercised.

AUTOMN'ALE, Autumnal.

AUTONOMIA, Vis medicatrix naturæ.

AUTOPEPSIA, from αυτος, 'self,' and πεπτω, 'I concoct.' Self-digestion,—as of the stomach after death.

AUTOPIHIA, Autopsia.

AUTOPIHOSPHORUS, Phosphorus.

AUTOPLASTY, Morioplastice.

AUTOP'SIA or AUTOP'SY; from αυτος, 'himself,' and οπισ, 'vision.' Autoph'ia. Attentive examination by one's self. Improperly used occasionally for the following:

AUTOP'SIA CADAVERICA, (F.) Autopsie, Overturecadaverique. Postmortem examination after death, Examination post mortem, Sectio Cadaveris, Dissection, Necroscopy, Necropsy;—practised for the purpose of investigating the causes and seat of an affection of which a person may have died, &c.

AUTOPYROS, Syncomistos.

AUTOSITE, from αυτος, 'self,' and σιτος, 'nourishment.' A single monster, capable of deriving nourishment from its own proper organs, in contradistinction to Omphalosite, (q. v.)

AUTUMN, Autumnus, Phthiroporon, (F.) Automne. One of the seasons of the year, between the 23d of September and the 22d of December. In all climates, the Autumn or Fall is liable to disease; a combination of local and atmospheric causes being then present, favourable to its production.

AUTUMNAL; Autunnalis. (F.) Autumnale. Relating to autumn; as Autumnal Fruits, Autumnal Fevers, &c.

AUTUMNAL FEVER, generally assumes a bilious aspect. Those of the intermittent kind are much more obstinate than when they appear in the spring.

AUXESIS, Augmentation, Increase.

AUXILIARY, Auxiliaris, from auxilium, 'aid.' (F.) Auxiliare. That which assists;—from which assistance is obtained.

AUXILIARY MUSCLES are those which concur in the same movement. Some Anatomists have applied the term to several ligaments, as well as to the fleshy fibres, which hang from the sacro-spinalis muscle.

AN AUXILIARY MEDICINE is one which assists the principal medicine or basis. It is synonymous with Adjuvant.

AUXILIUM, Juvans, Medicament.

AVAILLES, WATERS OF. A small village in France, 13 leagues S. S. E. of Poitiers, at which there is a cold saline chalybeate. It contains muriates of soda and lime, sulphate and subcarbonate of soda, iron, &c.

AVANT-BOUCHE, (F.) Os anticum. This name has been applied by some, to the mouth properly so called, in contradistinction to the Arrière-bouche or Pharynx.

AVANT-BRAS, Forearm.

AVANT-CŒUR, Scrobiculus cordis.

AVANT-GOUT, (F.) Prægestatio; a Fore-taste, Prægnation.

AVANT-MAIN, (F.) Adversæ Manus. The inside of the hand, when extended.

AVANT-PIED, (F.) The most advanced part of the foot.

AVANT-POIGNET, (F.) The anterior part of the wrist.

AVELLANE, Corylus avellana (nut.)

AVELLANA, Cathartica, Jatropha curcas.

AVEENA, Oats, Bromos. The seeds of the Avena sativa. Nat. Ord. Gramineæ. Sex. Syst. Triandria Digynia. (F.) Avoine. Oats are used as food for man, in some parts, particularly in the North of England and Scotland. When deprived of the husks they form GROATS, which see. Reduced to meal, they are applied as cataplasms, to promote suppuration. The dry meal is sprinkled over erysipelatous parts.

AVENHEIM, MINERAL WATERS OF. Avenheim is three leagues from Strasburg, and near it is an aperient mineral water.

AVENNES, MINERAL WATERS OF. Avennes is a village in the department of Héruault in France, and near it is a saline spring, the temperature of which rises to 84° Fahrenheit.

AVENS, COMMON, Geum urbanum—a. Water, Geum rivale.

AVERICH, Sulphur.

AVERRHO'A CARAM'BOLA. Malum Coënsè, Prunum stellatum, Tam'ara, conga, Caram'bolo. An Indian tree, whose fruits are agreeably acid. The bark, bruised, is employed as a cataplasm, and its fruit is used as a refrigerant in bilious fever and dysentery.

The AVERRHO'A BILIM'BI, Bilim'bi, Bilimbing teres, has a fruit, which is too acid to be eaten alone. It is used as a condiment, and in the form of syrup as a refrigerant.

AVERSION, Aversio, αποτροπη, from averte, 'to turn from.' Extreme repugnance for any thing whatever.

AVERSION (F.) also means, in Therapeutics, the action of medicines which turn the afflux of fluids from one organ, and direct them to others: being synonymous with counter-irritation, or rather réulsion or derivation.

AVERTIN, (F.) A disease of the mind, which, according to LAVOISIEN, renders the patient obstinate and furious.

AVEUGLE, Cæcus.

AVEUGLEMENT, Cæcitas—a. de Jour, Nyctalopia—a. de Nuit, Hemeralopia.

AVICEN'NIA TOMENTO'SA. The plant which affords the Malac'ca Bean or Anacar'dium Orient'le of the Pharmacopœias, Scmear'pus Anacar'dium. The oil drawn from the bark of the fruit is a corrosive, and active vesicatory, but it is not used.

AVICULA CIPRIA, Pastil—a. Margaritifera. See Pearl.

AVOIN, Avena.

AVORTEMENT, Abortion.

AVORTER, to Abort.

AVORTIN, Abortion.

AVORTON, Abortion.

AVULSIO, Arachement.

AVULSION, Evulsion.

AX, MINERAL WATERS OF. Ax is a small town in the department of Arriège, France; where there are several sulphurous springs; the temperature of which varies from 77° to 162° of Fahrenheit.

AXE, Axis—a. de l'Œil, Axis of the eye.

AX'EA COMMISSU'RA, Trochoïdes. A pivot-joint. See Trochoid.

AXIL'LA, Ala, Axcil'la, Assel'la, Ascil'la, Acl'la, Cordis emuncto'rium, Male, Hypo'mia, Fovea axillaris, Mas'chalz, (F.) Aisselle. The cavity beneath the junction of the arm with the shoulder; the armpit. It is bounded anteriorly, by a portion of the pectoralis major; posteriorly, by the latissimus dorsi. It is covered with hair, contains much cellular membrane, lymphatic ganglions, important vessels and nerves, and numerous sebaceous follicles, furnishing an odorous secretion. In consequence of such secretion, the ancients called it emuncto'rium cordis.

AX'ILLARY, (F.) Axillaire, from axilla, 'the armpit.' Belonging to the armpit.

ARTE'RIA AXILLA'RIS; a continuation of the subclavian, extending from the passage of the latter between the scapular muscles as far as the insertion of the pectoralis major, when it takes the name Brachial.

VENA AXILLA'RIS, Vena Subala'ris. This vein corresponds with the artery; anterior to which it is situate. It is a continuation of the brachial veins; and, at its termination, assumes the name Subclavian.

The AX'ILLARY NERVE, Scap'ulo-hu'meral (Ch.) Nerf circonflexe, Articular nerve, arises from the posterior part of the brachial plexus, particularly from the last two cervical pairs and the first dorsal. It is chiefly distributed to the posterior margin of the deltoid.

The AX'ILLARY GLANDS are lymphatic glands, seated in the armpit; into which the lymphatic glands of the upper extremity open.

AXINÉ, Ascia.

AXIRNACH, An Arabic word, used by AL-BUCASIS to designate a fatty tumour of the upper eyelid, observed particularly in children.

AXIS, Axon, (F.) Axe. A right line which passes through the centre of a body.

The AXIS OF THE EYE, (F.) Axe de l'œil, called, also, Visual Axis and Optic Axis, is a right line, which falls perpendicularly on the eye, and passes through the centre of the pupil.

AXIS, is also the second vertebra of the neck, Axon, Epistro'pheus, Muschalister; the Ver'tebra Denta'ta. (F.) Essieu. So called because it forms a kind of axis on which the head moves. Chaussier calls it Axöide, from αξων, 'axis,' and ειδος, 'shape.'

AXIS, CEREBRO-SPINAL. See Encephalon.

AXOIDE, Axis—a. Occipitale, Rectus capitis posticus major.

AXOIDÓ-ATLOIDEUS. What refers to both the axis and atlas; as Axoido-atloidean articulation.

The lesions of the Axoido-atloidean articulation, are, 1. Fracture of the Processus Denta'tus. 2. Rupture of the odontoid ligaments, and consequently passage and pressure of the process behind the transverse ligament: and, 3. The simultaneous rupture of the odontoid and transverse ligaments. These different accidents are fatal.

AXOIDO-ATLOIDIEN, Obliquus inferior capitis.

AXON, Axis.

AXUNGE, Adeps præparata.

AXUNGIA, Pinguedo—a. de Mumia, Marrow—a. Articularis, Synovia—a. Porcina, Adeps præparata.

AZARNET, Orpiment.

AZARUM, Asarum.

AZEDARACH, Melia Azedarach.

AZOODYNA'MIA, from a priv. ζωη, 'life,' and δυναμις, 'strength.' Privation or diminution of the vital powers.—Gilibert.

AZOTE, AZO'TUM, from a priv. and ζωη, 'life.' Azote or Nitrogen, Alcaligene, Gas azoticum, Zoögen'ium, (F.) Air gaté, Air ricicé, is a gas which is unfit for respiration. It is not positively deleterious, but proves fatal, owing to the want of oxygen. It is one of the constituents of atmospheric air, and is the distinguishing principle of animals. Vegetables have it not generally diffused, whilst it is met with in most animal substances. It has been variously called, phlogistic air, vitiated air, &c.; has been looked upon as sedative, and recommended to be respired, when properly diluted, in diseases of the chest.

AZOTE, PROTOXIDE OF, Nitrogen, gaseous oxide of.

AZOTENE/SES, from azote, and ροςος, 'disease.' Diseases fancied to be occasioned by the predominance of azote in the body.—Baumes.

AZOTURIA. See Urine.

AZUR, Coral, Smalt.

AZURIUM. A compound of two parts of mercury, one-third of sulphur, and one-fourth of sal ammoniac.—Albert the Great.

AZYGES, Az'ygus sine pari, from a priv. and ζυγος, 'equal.' Unequal. The sphenoid bone, because it has no fellow. Also, a process. Processus Az'ygus, projecting from under the middle and forepart of this bone.

VENA AZYGOS, Veine Prélombothoracique—(Ch.) Vena sine pari, Vena pari carens. This vein was so called by Galen. It forms a communication between the V. cava inferior and V. cava superior, permitting the blood to pass freely between the two. It rises from the vena cava inferior, or from one of the lumbar or renal veins, passes through the diaphragm, ascends along the spine to the right of the aorta and thoracic duct, and opens into the V. cava superior, where it penetrates the pericardium. On the left side, the SEMI-AZYGOS, Left Bron'chial or left superior intercostal vein, V. demi-azygos, Veine petite prélimbo-thoracique—(Ch.,) presents, in miniature, nearly the same arrangement.

The Azygos Muscle, Az'ygus U'vulae, is the small muscle, which occupies the substance of the uvula.—Morgagni. The name is, however, inappropriate, as there are two distinct fasciculi, placed along side each other, forming the Palato-staphyli'ni, Staphyli'ni, or Epistaphyli'ni muscles, Staphyli'ni me'dii of Winslow.

AZYMUS, from a priv. and ζυμη, 'leaven.' Azymous bread is unfermented, unleavened bread.—Galen.

B

BABEURRE, Buttermilk.

BABILLEMENT, Loquacity.

BAC'ARIS, Bach'aris. A name given by the ancients to an ointment described by Galen under the name Ointment of Lydia. It was sometimes employed in diseases of the womb.—Hippocr.

—b. Norlandicæ, Rubus arcticus—b. Piscatoriæ, see Menispermum cocculus.

BACCAR, BAC'CARIS, or BACCHARIS.

An herb used by the ancients in their garlands, to destroy enchantment. Perhaps the Digitalis purpurea (q. v.) Some authors have erroneously thought it to be the Asarum.

BACCHTA, from Bac'chus, 'wine.' A name applied to the red or pimpled face of the drunkard. See Gutta rosea.

BACCHICA, Hedera-helix.

BACHARIS, Bacaris.

BACHELOR'S BUTTONS. See Strychnos nux vomica.

BACIL'LUM, Bac'ulus, Bac'culus; 'a stick.' This name has been applied to a kind of troch, composed of expectorants, and having the shape of a stick. Bacillum was used by the ancient chemists for several instruments of iron.

BACILĒ, Crithmum maritimum.

BACOVE, Musa sapientum.

BACULUS, Bacillum.

BADEN, MINERAL WATERS OF. Baden is a town six miles from Vienna. Here are 12 springs, containing carbonates of lime and magnesia; sulphates of lime, magnesia, and soda; and the muriates of soda and alumina. The water is used in diseases of the skin, rheumatism, &c. There are two other towns of the same name; one in Suabia, and the other in Switzerland, where are mineral springs. The waters of the last are sulphureous.

BADIAGA. A kind of sponge, sold in Russia; the powder of which is said to take away the livid marks from blows and bruises in a few hours. Its nature is not understood.

BADIANE, Illicium anisatum.

BADISIS, Walking.

BADUKKA, Capparis badukka.

BAGEDIA, Pound.

BAGNERES-ADOUR, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bagnères-Adour is a small town in the department of the Hautes Pyrénées, having a great number of mineral springs; some, cold chalybeates; others, thermal salines, but the greatest part sulphureous and warm. The temperature of the last rises as high as 97° Fahrenheit.

BAGNERES DE LUCHON is a small town in the department of Haute Garonne, on the frontiers of Spain. It has been, for a long time, famous for its numerous sulphureous springs, the temperature of which is from 86° to 147° of Fahrenheit.

BAGNIGGE WELLS. A saline mineral spring in London, resembling the Epsom.

BAGNIO, Baignoire.

BAGUE'NAUDIER, Colutea arborescens.

BAGNOLES, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bagnoles is a village in the department of the Orne. The water resembles that of the Bagnères de Luchon.

BAGNOLS, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bagnols is a village, two leagues from Mende, in the department of Lozère. The waters are hydrosulphurous and thermal: 113° Fahrenheit.

BAHEL, Colum'nea longifolia; a labiated plant of Malabar, whose leaves, bruised, are applied as cataplasms to suppurating tumours.

BAHEL SCHULLI, Genista spinosa Indica.

BAIGNEUR, Bather.

BAINS, MINERAL WATERS OF. These are situate at Plombières, department of the Vosges. They are said to be saline and thermal by some; others deny them any medical properties.

BALAMPULLI, Tamarindus.

BALANCE, AEROSTATIC, Aerometer.

BALANDA, Fagus Sylvatica.

BALANEUM, Bath.

BALANITIS, Gonorrhœa spuria.

BALANOBLENNORRHŒA, Gonorrhœa spuria.

BALANOCASTANUM, Bunium Bulbocastanum.

BALANORRHŒA, Gonorrhœa spuria.

BALANOS, βαλανος, 'glans,' 'an acorn.' The glans penis. Hence, Balanoblennorrhœa, Blennorrhœa of the glans, and Balanitis, Inflammation of the glans. Suppositories and pessaries were, also, so called.

BALANOS PHENICOS, Date.

BALANUS, Glans—b. Myrepsica, Guilandina moringa.

BALARÛC, MINERAL WATERS OF. Balaruc is a town in the department of Hérault, in France. The waters are saline and thermal. They contain carbonic acid, carbonate of lime, carbonate of magnesia, muriates of soda, lime, and magnesia, sulphate of lime, and a little iron. They are considered tonic, and are largely used. Their temperature is about 118° Fahrenheit.

The FACTITIOUS BALARUC WATER, (F.) Eau de Balaruc; Aqua Bellilucana, is made of simple acidulous water (containing twice its bulk of carbonic acid)  $\frac{3}{4}$ xxss; muriate of soda  $\frac{3}{4}$ ss; muriate of lime, gr. xviii; muriate of magnesia, gr. 5*ʒ*; carbonate of magnesia, gr. j.

BALATRO, Bambalio.

BALAUSTINE FLOWERS. See Punica granatum.

BALBIS, βαλβις, 'a foundation.' Any oblong cavity.—Galen. Hippocrates, in his treatise on the joints, gives the name Balbitodes to the olecranon cavity of the humerus.

BALBUS. (F.) Bègue. One habitually affected with stammering. A stammerer.

BALBUTIES, Psellis'mus, Psellotes, Blasitas, Baryglossia, Dysd'lia, Mogila'lia, Battaris'mus, Bamba'lia, Stammering. (F.) Balbutiement, Bégaînement. Also, vicious and incomplete pronunciation, in which almost all the consonants are replaced by the letters B and L, Traulis mus.

BALCHUS, Bdellium.

BALDMONEY, Æthusa Mœum.

BALENAS, Leviathan penis.

BALIMBAGO, Hibiscus populæus.

BALSAM, Balsamum, (q. v.) Bole son, Bellison. (F.) Baume. This name is given to natural vegetable substances, concrete or liquid, but very odorous, bitter, and piquant; composed of resin, benzoic acid, and sometimes of an essential oil;—which allow benzoic acid to be disengaged by the action of heat; readily dissolve in volatile oil, alcohol, and ether; and, when treated with alcalis, afford a soluble benzoate, and throw down resin. We know of only five balsams:—those of Peru, of Tolu, Benzoin, solid Styrax or Storax, and liquid Styrax. See those different words.

There is, however, a multitude of pharmaceutical preparations, and of resinous substances, possessed of a balsamic smell, and to which the name balsam has been given; but they differ essentially in composition and properties: hence the distinction of balsams into natural and artificial. The natural balsams include the five before mentioned: the artificial the remainder.

BALSAM, ACOUSTIC, Balsamum Acousticum. (F.) Baume acoustique. A mixture of fixed and essential oils, sulphur, and tinctures of fetid gums. Used in cases of atonic deafness, dropped into the ear.

BALSAM, AMERICAN, see Myroxylon peruvianum—b. Anodyne, Bates', Linamentum saponis et opii.

BALSAM, APOPLECTIC, Balsamum Apoplecticum, (F.) Baume apoplectique; a medicine, composed of several balsams properly so called, resins, and volatile oils. It is of a stiff consistence, is worn in ivory boxes about the person, and is smelled at, in headachs, &c.

BALSAM APPLE, Momordica balsamina.

BALSAM OF ARCEUS, Balsamum Arcei, Unguentum Elemi, (F.) Baume d'Arceus; a soft ointment; sometimes employed in wounds, ulcers, &c. It is made by melting, with a gentle heat, two parts of mutton suet, one of lard, one and a half of turpentine, and as much resin.

BALSAM, CANADA, see Pinus balsamea—b. Canary, Dracocephalum canariense—b. Capivi, Copaiba.

BALSAM OF CARPATHIA, Balsamum Carpathicum. (F.) Baume de Carpathie. The resin of the Pinus Cembra, (q. v.) a tree, which grows in Switzerland, Libya, and the Krapack mountains in Hungary.

BALSAM, CHALYBEATE, Balsamum Chalybeatum, (F.) Baume d'acier ou d'aiguilles; a mixture of nitrate of iron, alcohol, and oil, prepared by dissolving needles in nitric acid. It was, formerly, employed in frictions in pains of the joints.

BALSAM, COMMANDER'S, Tinctura benzoini composita—b. for cuts, Tinctura benzoini composita.

BALSAM, CORDIAL, OF SENNER'TUS, Balsamum Cordiale Senner'ti, (F.) Baume cordiale de Sennert. A stimulant medicine, composed of the essential oils of citron, cloves, and cinnamon, of musk, and ambergris. Dose, 6 to 15 drops.

BALSAM, SPIRITUOUS, OF FIORAVENTI, Balsamum Fioraventi spirituosum, (F.) Baume de Fioraventi spiritueux. Different products of the distillation of resinous and balsamic substances, and of a number of aromatic substances, previously macerated in alcohol, have been thus called. The Spirituous Balsam of Fioraventi, the only one now used in friction, in chronic rheumatism, is the first product of the distillation from a sand-bath. It is entirely alcoholic. The Oily Balsam of Fioraventi is obtained by removing the residue; and distilling it in an iron vessel, at a white heat. It has the appearance of a citrine-coloured oil. The Black Balsam of Fioraventi, is the black oil, obtained when the temperature is sufficient to carbonize the substances, in the cucurbit.

BALSAM OF FOURCROY or LABORDE, (F.) Baume de Fourcroy ou de Laborde; a kind of liniment, composed of aromatic plants, balsams, resins, aloes, turpentine, theriac, and olive oil. Used in chaps of the skin and nipples.

BALSAM, FRIAR'S, Tinctura benzoini composita.

BALSAM OF GENEVIEVE, (F.) Baume de Genevieve; an ointment composed of wax, turpentine, oil, red saunders, and camphor. Used in contused wounds, gangrene, &c.

BALSAM OF HONEY (HILL'S); a tincture of tolu, honey (āā ʃij) and spirit, (a gallon.) A pectoral, used in coughs. The committee of the New York College of Pharmacy recommend the following formula:—(Gum Benzoin ʒv, Bals. Tolut ʒj, Mellis, f. ʒviij, Alcohol Olij—digest for 10 days and filter.) See Mel.

BALSAM OF HOREHOUND (Ford's;) a tincture of horehound, liquorice-root, camphor, opium, benzoin, dried squills, oil of aniseed, and honey. The same property as the above. See Marubium.

BALSAM, HUNGARIAN, see Pinus mughos.

BALSAM, HYPNOTIC, Bal'samum Hypnoticum, (F.) Baume Hypnotique; a preparation of which opium, hyoscyamus, camphor, and some other sedative substances form the basis. It is used externally to provoke sleep, in friction.

BALSAM, HYSTERIC, Bal'samum Hystericum, (F.) Baume Hystérique; a preparation made of opium, aloes, asafoetida, castor, distilled oils of rue, amber, &c. It is held to the nose, applied to the navel, or rubbed on the hypogastrium in hysterical cases.

BALSAM, INDIAN, see Myroxylon peruvianum.

BALSAM OF LEICHTOURE, of CONDOM or VINCIGUERE, Bal'samum Lectorense. A strongly stimulant and aromatic mixture of camphor, saffron, musk, and ambergris, dissolved in essential oils. The ancients burnt it for the purpose of purifying the air of a chamber, when infested with a disagreeable odour.

BALSAM OF LIFE, of HOFFMANN, Bal'samum Vita Hoffmanni, (F.) Baume de vie d'Hoffmann. A tincture, composed of essential oils and ambergris, employed internally and externally as a stimulant. A mixture of essential oils without alcohol constitutes the Saxon Balsam, Bal'samum apoclecticum, B. aromaticum, B. cephalicum, B. Saxonicum, B. nervinum, B. SCHERZERI, B. Stomachicum. Employed in friction as a stimulant.

BALSAM OF LIFE, Decoction aloes composition—b. of Life, Turlington's, see Tinctura benzoini composita.

BALSAM OF LOCATEL'LI or LUCATEL'LI, Bal'samum Lucatelli, (F.) Baume de Lucatel; a sort of ointment, composed of wax, oil, turpentine, sherry, and balsam of Peru, coloured with red saunders. It was once administered in pulmonary consumption.

BALSAM OF MECCA, see Amyris opobalsamum—b. Mexican, see Myroxylon peruvianum—b. Natural, see Myroxylon peruvianum.

BALSAM, NEPHRITIC, of FULLER, Bal'samum Nephreticum Fulleri; a liquid medicine, composed of oils, resins, and balsams, which have experienced an incipient state of carbonization from concentrated sulphuric acid. It was given in the dose of 15 or 30 drops in certain affections of the kidneys.

BALSAM, NERVOUS, Bal'samum Nervinum, (F.) Baume nervin ou nerval. A kind of ointment, composed of fatty bodies, volatile oils, balsam of Peru, camphor, &c. It is employed by friction in cases of sprains and rheumatic pains.

BALSAM, PARALYTIC, of MYN'SICHT. A sort of liniment or soft mixture of the essential oils of different aromatic plants, oils of turpentine and amber.—Lémery.

BALSAM OF PAREIRA-BRAVA, Bal'samum

Pareira-brava. A soft mixture of balsam, resin, muriate of ammonia, and powder of the root of the Pareira-brava. It is given, internally, to excite the urinary secretion.

BALSAM, PERUVIAN, see Myroxylon peruvianum—b. of Peru, red, see Toluifera balsamum—b. of Peru, white, see Myroxylon peruvianum.

BALSAM OF RAKASIRA or of RAKASIRI. This substance is of a yellowish-brown colour; semi-transparent; fragile, when dry, but softening by heat; adhering to the teeth, when chewed. It has a smell similar to that of the Balsam of Tolu, and is slightly bitter. It is brought from India in gourd shells, and has been employed in diseases of the urinary organs, especially in gonorrhœa.

BALSAM, RIGA. Prepared from the shoots of the Scotch Fir, macerated in spirit of wine. Internally, stimulant and diuretic; externally, a vulnerary. See Pinus Cembra.

BALSAM OF SATURN, Bal'samum Saturni. A solution of acetate of lead in spirit of turpentine, concentrated by evaporation; and to which camphor has been added. This balsam was applied to hasten the cicatrization of wounds.

BALSAM OF THE SAMARITAN, (F.) Baume du Samaritain. A sort of liniment, prepared by boiling together, at a gentle heat, equal parts of wine and oil. It is said to have been the ointment used by the Samaritan of the Gospel to cure a patient covered with ulcers.

BALSAM, SAXON, Balsam of Life of Hoffmann.

BALSAM OF SULPHUR, Bal'samum Sulphuris, (F.) Baume de Soufre. A solution of sulphur in oil.—B. sulph. anisatum, (F.) B. de soufre anisé. A solution of sulphur in essential oil of aniseed; given as a carminative.—B. sulph. succinatum, (F.) B. de soufre succiné. A solution of sulphur in oil of amber.—B. sulphur terbinthinatum, Common Dutch Drops, (F.) B. de soufre térébinthiné. A solution of sulphur in essential oil of turpentine, administered as a diuretic.—The Balsam of Sulphur of RULAND is a solution of sulphur in linseed oil or nut oil.

BALSAM OF SYMPATHY, Bal'samum Sympatheticum, (F.) Baume de Sympathie. A balsam, used in the days when sympathetic influence was strongly believed in. It was composed of the raspings of a human skull, of blood, and human fat, and was applied to the instrument which had inflicted the wound.

BALSAM, THIEBAUT'S. A tincture of myrrh, aloes, dragon's blood, flowers of St. John's wort, and Chio turpentine. Internally, diuretic; externally, vulnerary.

BALSAM OF TOLU, see Toluifera Balsamum.

BALSAM, TRANQUIL, Bal'samum tranquilum, (F.) B. tranquille. A liquid medicine employed externally in the shape of friction: it is prepared by macerating and boiling, in olive oil, narcotic and poisonous plants,—belladonna, mandragora, hyoscyamus, &c.—and afterwards infusing, in the filtered decoction, different aromatic plants. It was employed as an anodyne.

BALSAM, TURKEY, Dracocephalum Canariense.

BALSAM OF TURPENTINE, Dutch Drops, Bal'samum Terebinthinae. Obtained by distilling oil of turpentine in a glass retort, until a red balsam is left. It possesses the properties of the turpentine.

BALSAM, GREEN, OF METZ, Bal'samum Vir'idē Meten'siava, Bal'samum Vir'idē, (F.) Baume vert de Metz, Baume de Fenillet, Huile verte, O'leum ol'ydi cupri vir'idē. This is composed of several fixed oils, holding, in solution, sub-carbonate of copper, sulphate of zinc, turpentine, aloes, and the essential oils of cloves and juniper. It is green and caustic, and is employed to hasten the cicatrization of atonic ulcers.

BALSAM, VERVAIN'S, Tinctura Benzoini composita.

BALSAM, WOUND, Tinctura Benzoini composita.

BALSAM, VULNERARY, OF MINDERERUS, Bal'samum vulnerarium Mindereri, (F.) B. vulnéraire de MINDERER. A kind of liniment, composed of turpentine, resin elemi, oil of St. John's wort, and wax. Employed in friction, and as a dressing to wounds.

BALSAM'IC, Balsam'icus, from βαλσαμων, 'balsam.' Possessing the qualities of balsams. Balsamic odour—a sweet, faint, and slightly nauseous smell. A balsamic substance;—One resembling the balsams in property.

BALSAMIER ELÉMIFFÈRE, Amyris elemifera—b. de la Mecque, Amyris opobalsamum.

BALSAMINE, Momordica balsamina.

BALSAMITA SUAVEOLENS, B. odorata, B. maris, Mentha saracenicā, M. Romāna. Fam. Compositæ Corymbifère. Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia superflua. A plant, common in the south of France, and cultivated in the gardens; where it bears the names Menthecoq, Grand baume, Baume des Jardins. Its smell is strong and aromatic, and taste hot. It is used for the same purposes as the tansy, i. e. as a stimulant, vermifuge, &c.

BALSEM, Amyris opobalsamum.

BAMBA, Bamboo.

BAMBALIA, Baluties.

BAMBAL'IO, Bald'tro, from βαμβαρω, 'I speak inarticulately.' One who stammers or lisps, or utters inarticulate sounds. According to KRAUS, one who speaks as if he had pap in his mouth, or as if the tongue were paralyzed.

BAMBOO, (F.) Bambou, Bambu. Fam. Gramineæ; Scz. Syst. Hexandria Monogynia. The young shoots of the Bambos arundinacea or Arun'do bambos, and of the Bambos verticillata contain a saccharine pith, of which the people of both the Indies are very fond. They are sometimes made into a pickle.

BAMBOS ARUNDINACEA, Bamboo—b. Verticillata, Bamboo.

BAMIX MOSCHATA, Hibiscus abelmoschus.

BANANA, Musa sapientum.

BAMMA, from βαπτω, 'I plunge,' 'a paint; a dye.' Anciently, liquids were so called, in which certain bodies were plunged, to moisten or soften them. In the case of tea, for instance, into which bread is dipped, the tea would be the bamma.

BANANIER, Musa sapientum.

BANAUSIA, Charlatanry.

BANC D'HIPPOCRATE, Bathron.

BANCAL, (F.) One who has deformed legs. It includes the valgus compernis, and varus, which see.

BANCROCHE, (F.) A vulgar epithet for a rickety individual.

BANDAGE, Dcsma, Hypodes'mis. This word, with the French, is generally used to express the methodical application of rollers, compresses, &c., to fix an apparatus upon any part: corresponding to the words déligatio, fasciatio, fasciarum applicatio, Epid'csis. With us, the noun is usually applied to the result of the application; or to the bandages themselves;—a sense in which the French employ the word Bande.

Bandages are simple or compound. The simple bandage is equal, if the turns are applied circularly above each other; unequal, if the turns are not accurately applied upon each other. If each turn of the bandage be only covered one-third, it forms the doloire of the French; if the edges touch only slightly, it is the moussé; if the turns are very oblique and separated, it is the spiral or creeping, (F.) ram-pant; if folded upon each other, it is termed the reversed, (F.) renversé. By uniting various kinds of bandaging, we have the compound; and these compound bandages have received various names expressive of their figure, or of the parts to which they are applied, as capistrum, spica, &c.

Bandages are divided, also, as regards their uses, into uniting, dividing, retaining, expelling, and compressing.

BANDAGE OF SEPARATE STRIPS, or B. OF SCULTETUS, Fascia fasciolis separâtim dispositis, seu Sculte'ti, (F.) Bandage à bandelettes séparées ou de Scultet. This is formed of linen strips, each capable of surrounding, once and a half, the part to which they have to be applied, and placed upon each other, so as to cover, successively, one-third of their width. It is used chiefly for fractures, requiring frequent dressing.

THE EIGHTEEN-TAILED BANDAGE, Fascia octod'ecim capit'ibus, (F.) Bandage à dix-huit chefs. This bandage is made of a longitudinal portion of a common roller; and with a sufficient number of transverse pieces or tails, to cover as much of the part as is requisite. It is a very useful bandage, inasmuch as it can be undone without disturbing the part.

THE COMPRESSING BANDAGE or ROLLER, Fascia compressi'ca seu convoluta, (F.) Bandage compressif ou roulé, is the simple roller with one head; and is employed in cases of ulcers, varices, &c. of the limbs. Whenever this roller is applied to the lower part of the limbs, it is carried upwards by the doloire and reversed methods above described.

THE BODY BANDAGE, Mantile, (F.) Bandage de Corps, is used for fixing dressings, &c. to the trunk. It is formed of a towel, napkin, or some large compress, folded three or four times; the extremities of which are fastened by pins. This is again fixed, by means of the scapulary bandage, which is nothing more than an ordinary bandage, stitched to the anterior and middle part of the napkin, passing over the clavicles and behind the head, to be attached to the back part of the napkin.

BANDAGE, GALEN'S, or B. for the Poor, Fascia Galeni seu Pav'perum, (F.) Bandage de Galien ou des pauvres, Galea, is a kind of cucul'us or hood, (F.) Couvrechef, divided into three parts on each side; and of which GALEN has given a description. See Cancer Galeni. For Hernial Bandages, see TRUSS.

BANDAGE, IMMOVABLE, Apparatus, immovable.

BANDAGE, INGUINAL, Fascia inguinal'is. A bandage for keeping dressings applied to the groin. It consists of a cincture, to which is attached a triangular compress, adapted for covering the groin. To the lower extremity of this, one or two bandages are attached, which pass under the thigh, and are fixed to the posterior part of the cincture. This bandage may be either simple or double.

Other bandages will be found described under their various names.

BANDAGE, PERMANENT, Apparatus, immovable—b. of the Poor. See Cancer Galeni and Bandage, Galen's.

BANDAGE DIVISIF, Dividing bandage—b. en Doloire, Doloire—b. Unissant, Uniting bandage.

THE BANDAGE OF ROLLER, Fascia, (q. v.) Tania, Epides'nos, Vin'culum, the Bande of the French, is derived from (G.) binden, 'to bind.' It may be made of linen, flannel, or other stuff, capable of offering a certain resistance. The two extremities of a bandage are called tails, (F.) chefs, and the rolled part is termed its head, (F.) globe. If rolled at both extremities, it is called a double-headed roller or bandage, (F.) Bande à deux globes.

The word Bande, in Anatomy, is used by the French for various, narrow, flat, and elongated expansions. Bande d'Héliodore, is a kind of bandage for supporting the mammae.

BANDAGIST. One whose business it is to make bandages, and especially those for hernia.

BANDE, Bandage.

BANDEAU (F.) A kind of simple bandage, which consists of a piece of cloth, folded four times, and applied round the head. There is also the Bandeau or Mouchoir en triangle or triangular bandage, a kind of Couvrechef (which see,) made of a square piece of cloth or a handkerchief, folded diagonally, and applied round the head.

BANDELETTE (F.) Diminutive of Bande, Fasciola, Taniola, Vitta: a narrow bandage, strip or fillet. Also, Tania semicircularis (q. v.)

BANDELETTE SEMICIRCULAIRE, Tania semicircularis—b. des Cornes d'annon, Corpus fimbriatum—b. des Eminences pyriformes, Tania semicircularis—b. de l'Hippocrampe, Corpora fimbriata.

BANDELETES AGGLUTINATIVES, small strips, covered with a glutinous plaster. Vitta agglutinantes. See Agglutinant.

BANDELETES DECOUPEES, are strips of linen, notched on one edge, and covered, on one side, with ointment. They are applied to wounds to prevent the lint from sticking, and the laceration of the cicatrix.

BANDURA, Nepentha distillatoria.

BANGUE or BANGI or BENG. A species of Indian hemp, which Adanson believes to be the Nepenthes of the ancients, Can'nabis Ind'ica Family, Urticæ. Sez. Syst. Diœcia Pentandria. Its leaves and flowers are astringent. They are chewed and smoked. Its seeds, mixed with opium, areca, and sugar, produce a kind of intoxication, and are used for this purpose by the people of India.

BANICA, Pastinaca sativa.

BANILAS, Vanilla.

BANILLA, Vanilla.

BANILLOES, Vanilla.

BANISTERIA ANGULO'SA. This plant, in Brazil and the Antilles, passes for a powerful sudorific, and an antidote to the poison of serpents.

BANNIÈRES, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bannières is a village in Quercy, Diocess of Cahors, France. The waters are probably chalybeate. They are celebrated in amenorrhœa, cachexia, jaundice, &c.

BA'OBAB. The Adansonia digitata of Africa; Nat. Ord. Bombacæ; one of the largest productions of the vegetable kingdom. Its fruit is called, in the country, Pain de singe. The pulp is sourish, and agreeable to eat; and a refreshing drink is made from it, which is used in fevers. Prospero Alpini and Dr. L. Franck, think that the Terra Lemnia was prepared, in Egypt, from the pulp. All the parts of the Baobab abound in mucilage.

BAPTISTERIUM, Baignoire.

BARAQUETTE (F.) A name given by Rasous, physician at Nimes in France, to a catarrhal epidemy, which occurred there in 1761. See Influenza.

BARATHRON, Juniperus sabina.

BARATHRUM, Antrum.

BARBA, Beard—b. Aronis, Arum maculatum—b. Capræ, Spiræa ulmaria—b. Jovis, Sempervivum tectorum.

BARBADOES LEG. See Elephantiasis.

BARBAREA, Erysimum Barbarea.

BARBAROS'SÆ PIL'ULÆ, Barbarossa's Pills. An ancient composition of quicksilver, rhubarb, diagridium, musk, &c. It was the first internal mercurial medicine, which obtained any real credit.

BARBÉ, Beard—b. de Bouc, Tragopogon.

BARBEAU, Cyanus segetum.

BARBER-CHIRUR'GEONS. A Corporation of London, instituted by king Edward IV. The Barbers were separated from the Surgeons, by 18 Geo. II. c. 15; and the latter were erected into a Royal College of Surgeons at the commencement of the present century.

BARBERIE, MINERAL WATERS OF. These mineral waters are half a league from Nantes. They contain carbonic acid, muriates of magnesia and soda, sulphate of magnesia, carbonates of magnesia, lime, and iron. They are used as chalybeates.

BARBERRY, Oxycantha Galeni.

BARBITIUM, Beard.

BARBOTINE, Artemisia santonica.

BARBULA CAPRINA, Spiræa ulmaria.

BARDADIA, Pound.

BARDANA, Arctium lappa—b. Minor, Xanthium.

BARDANE PETITE, Xanthium.

BARÈGES, MINERAL WATERS OF. Barèges is a village in the department of Hautes Pyrénées, near which are several springs. They are sulphureous and thermal, the heat varying from 73° to 120° Fahrenheit. They contain muriates of magnesia and soda, sulphates of magnesia and lime, carbonate of lime, sulphur, &c.

These springs have long enjoyed a high reputation, and are daily advised in cutaneous and scrofulous affections, &c.

FACTITIOUS BARÈGES WATER, Aqua Barcigen' sis, (F.) Eau de Barèges, is made by adding, hydrosulphuretted water, ℥ iv, to pure water, ℥ xvijss, carbonate of soda, gr. xvj, muriate of soda, gr. ss. Bottle closely.

BARGADA, Convolvulus pes capræ.

BARIGLIA, Soda.

BARILLA, Soda—b. Alicant, Soda—b. Cartagena, Soda—b. Turkey, Soda.

BARILLOR, Soda.

BARIUM, CHLORIDE OF, Baryta, muriate of—b. Protoxide of Baryta.

BARK, Cinchona—b. Calisaya, Cinchona cordifolia cortex—b. Caribæan, Cinchonæ Caribææ cortex—b. Crown, Cinchonæ lancifoliæ cortex—b. Elk, Magnolia glauca—b. Essential salt of, see Cinchona—b. Georgia, Pinckneya pubescens—b. Indian, Magnolia glauca—b. Jesuit's, Cinchona—b. Loxa, Cinchonæ lancifoliæ cortex—b. Pale, Cinchonæ lancifoliæ cortex—b. Peruvian, Cinchona—b. Pitaya, Cinchonæ Caribææ cortex—b. Red, Cinchonæ oblongifoliæ cortex—b. Saint Lucia, Cinchonæ

Caribææ cortex—b. Yellow, Cinchonæ cordifoliæ cortex.

BARLERIA BUXIFOLIA, Cara schulli.

BARLEY, PEARL, see Hordeum—b. Scotch, Hordeum.

BARM, Yest.

BARNET, MINERAL WATERS OF. Barnet is not far from London. The water is of a purging quality, like that of Epsom, and about half the strength.

BAROMACROMETER. Baromacrom' eterum, from βαρος, 'weight,' μακρος, 'long,' and μετρον, 'measure.' An instrument, invented by Stein to indicate the length and weight of a new-born infant.

BAROMETER, from βαρος, 'weight,' and μετρον, 'measure.' (F.) Baromètre. An instrument which measures the weight of the air. A certain degree of density in this medium is necessary for health: when we ascend high mountains great inconvenience is experienced, owing to the diminished density. Changes of this character are indicated by the Barometer or Weatherglass.

BAR'OS, βαρος, 'heaviness.' Employed by the Greek physicians to designate the feeling of lassitude and heaviness observable in many diseases.—Hippocrates, Galen.

BAROSMA CRENATA, Diosma crenata.

BAROTES SALITUS, Baryta, muriate of.

BARRAS. See Pinus sylvestris.

BARRE (F.) Bar'rure, Vara. Projection or prolongation of the symphysis pubis;—a deformity rendering delivery difficult.

BARRE (F.) A term applied, in France, to females whose pelves have the deformity described under Barre.

DENTS BARREES. The molar teeth, when the roots are spread or tortuous, so that they cannot be extracted without being broken; or without a portion of the alveolar arch being removed.

BARRE, MINERAL WATERS OF. Barre is a small town, six leagues from Strasburg. The waters are thermal, and contain much iron, calcareous salt, &c. They are diuretic and tonic.

BARREL OF THE EAR, Tympanum.

BARRENESS, Sterilitas.

BARROS, Terra Portugallica.

BARRURE, Barre.

BARCOCCALON, Datura stramonium.

BARYCOITA, Barycoëia.

BARYCOÏA, Deafness.

BARYCOÏA or BARYCOÏTA, Parac' sia obtu'sa, Diseco'ia, Dysec'ia, Audi'tus diffi'c'ilis, Obaud'it'io, A. gravis, A. immi'nutus, Hy'pocoph'osis, (F.) Duretè d'Oreille, from βαρος, 'heavy,' and ακου, 'hearing.' Hardness of hearing, incomplete deafness. See Cophosis.

BARYGILOSSIA, Balbuties.

BARYI HYDRAS IODATI, Baryta, hydrilate of.

BARYOD'YNĒ, from βαρος, 'heavy,' and οδυ, 'pain.' A dull heavy pain.

BARYPHONIA, from βαρος, 'heavy,' and φωνη, 'voice.' Difficulty of speech.

BARYPICRON, Artemisia abrotanum.

BAR'YTA, from βαρος, 'heavy,' Terra pondero'sa, Barytes, Protox'ide of Bar'rium, Heavy Earth, Ponderous Earth, (F.) Baryte, Terre pesante. This earth and its soluble salts are all highly corrosive poisons. It is never employed in medicine in the pure state. When externally applied, it is caustic, like potassa and soda.

The MURIATE OF HYDROCHLORATE OF BARYTA, Chloride of Barium, Chloruret of Baryum, Terra ponderosa salita seu muriata, Sal muriaticum baroideum, Baroites salitum, is the combination chiefly used. It is given in the form of the Solutio Muriatis Baryte, (F.) Solutio de Muriate de Baryte. (Baryte Murias, one part; distilled water, three parts.) It is employed in serofulous cases, worms, and cutaneous diseases. Externally, to fungous ulcers and to specks on the cornea.

The HYDRIODATE OF BARYTA, Baryte Hydriodas, Baryta Hydriodica, Hydras Baryi Iodati, (in the dry state,—the Iodide of Baryum, B. Iodatum, Baryum iodidum) has been given in serofulous and similar morbid conditions. It may be administered internally in the dose of one-eighth of a grain three or four times a day, and applied externally to serofulous swellings, in the form of ointment, (gr. iv. to ʒi of lard.)

BARYTA HYDRIODICA, Baryta, hydriodate of.

BARYUM, chloruret of, Baryta, muriate of—b. Iodide of, Baryta, hydriodate of.

BAS-FOND. See Urinary bladder.

BAS LASSÉ, Stocking, laced.

BAS VENTRE, Abdomen.

BASAAL. The name of an Indian tree, the decoction of whose leaves, in water, with ginger, is used as a gargle in diseases of the fauces. The kernels of the fruit are vermifuge.

BASANASTRA'GALA, from βασανος, 'torture,' and αστραγαλος, the 'astragalus.' Pain in the ankle joint, gout in the foot.

BASANIS'MOS, from βασανιζειν, 'to explore.' 'A touch-stone.' Investigation or examination.—Hippocr., Galen.

BASE, Ba'sis, from βαινω, 'I proceed,' 'I rest,' 'I support myself.' That which serves as a foundation or support. That which enters, as a principal matter, into a mixture or combination. In Anatomy, it is employed in the former sense, as Base of the Cranium, Base of a Process, &c., Base of the Heart, Basis vel cor'na cor'dis. In the art of prescribing, Basis is the chief substance which enters into a compound formula.

BASIATIO, Coition.

BASIATOR, Orbicularis oris.

BASIL, BUSH, Ocimum caryophyllum—b. Citron, Ocimum basilicum—b. Common, Ocimum Basilicum—b. Small, Ocimum caryophyllum—b. Wild, Chenopodium vulgare.

BAS'ILARY, Basila'ris, (F.) Basilaire. That which belongs to the Base, from βασις, 'base.'

This name has been given to several parts, which seem to serve as bases to others. The sacrum and sphenoid have been hence so called.

The BASILARY VERTEBRA is the last vertebra of the loins.

The BASILARY PROCESS, Processus basila'ris ossis occip'itis, P. cuneiformis ossis occip'itis, (F.) Apophyse Basilaire, Prolongement sous-occipital, Cu'neiform Proc'ess, is the bony projection, formed by the inferior angle of the os occipitis, which is articulated with the sphenoid.

BASILARY SURFACE, (F.) Surface basilaire, is the inferior surface of this process. It is covered by the mucous membrane of the pharynx.

BASILARY FOSSA, (F.) Gouttière ou Fosse basilaire, is the upper surface of the same process,—so called because it is channeled like a Fossa or Gutter. The Taber annulare rests upon it.

BASILARY ARTERY, A. basila'ris, A. cervicel'lis, (F.) Artère ou Tronc basilaire, A. mesocephalique (Clt.); the union of the two vertebral arteries. It is larger than either of these, but smaller than the two taken together. It ascends along the middle groove on the inferior surface of the tuber, and is supported, beneath, by the Fossa basilaris. It terminates in the posterior cerebral arteries.

BASIL'IC, Basil'icus, from βασιλικος, 'royal.' This name was given, by the ancients, to parts, which they conceived to play an important part in the animal economy.

BASILIC VEIN, Vena Basilica, V. Cu'biti interior, (F.) Veine Basilique, Veine cubitale cutanée of Chaussier. This vein is one of those on which the operation of blood-letting is performed. It is situate at the internal part of the fold of the elbow, in front of the humeral artery, and is formed by the anterior and posterior cubital veins, and by the median basilic. It terminates, in the armpit, in the axillary vein. The ancients thought, that the basilic of the right arm had some connexion with the liver, and hence they called it hepatic. The vein of the left arm, for a similar reason, they called splenic. The Median Basilic Vein, (F.) Veine médiane basilique, is one of the branches of the preceding vein. It joins the median cephalic at an acute angle, or rather by a transverse branch, and receives some branches of the deep radial and cubital veins, and a considerable subcutaneous vein—the common median.

BASILIC COMMUN, Ocimum basilicum.

BASILIC SAUVAGE, GRAND, Chenopodium vulgare.

BASIL'ICON or BASIL'ICUM. 'Royal,' or of great virtue. An ointment, composed of yellow wax, black pitch, and resin, of each one part, olive oil four parts. Hence it was called Unguentum Tetraphar'macum, (τετραφαρμακα, 'four drugs.')

The BASILICON or BASILICUM, of the Parisian Codex, is the Onguent de Poix et de Cire. In most Pharmacopœias, it is represented by the Unguentum or Ceratum Resinæ. It is used as a stimulating ointment. See Ceratum Resinæ, and Unguentum Resinæ Nigræ.

BASILICUM, Ocimum basilicum—b. Citratum, Ocimum basilicum—b. Majus, Ocimum basilicum.

BASIO-CERATO-CHONDRO-GLOSSUS, Hyoglossus.

BAS'IO-CER'ATO-GLOSSUS, from βασις, 'base,' κερας, 'cornu,' and γλωσσα, 'tongue.' A name given to a part of the hyoglossus, which is inserted into the cornu of the os hyoides and base of the tongue.

BASIOCES'TRUM, from βασίς, 'the base,' and ἄστρον, 'a dart.' An instrument for opening the head of the fœtus in utero, invented by Mesler, a German.

BASIO-GLOS'SUS, Hypseloglossus, Hypobasioglossus, Ypseloglossus, from βασίς, 'base,' and γλῶσσα, 'the tongue.' A name formerly given to the portion of the hyoglossus, which is inserted into the base of the os hyoides.—Riolan, Thomas Bartholine. See Lingual Muscle.

BASIO-PHARYNGÆUS, from βασίς, 'base,' and φαρυγίς, 'the pharynx.' A name given to some fibres of the constrictor pharyngis medius.—Winslow.

BASSI-COL'ICA. Name of a medicine composed of aromatics and honey.—Scribonius Largus.

BASSIN, Pelvis—b. Oculaire, Scaphium oculare.

BASSINER, to Foment.

BASSINET, Pelvis of the kidney, Ranunculus bulbosus.

BATA, Musa paradisiaca.

BATABAS, Solanum tuberosum.

BATA'TAS. The inhabitants of Peru gave this appellation to several tuberous roots, especially to the Convolvulus Batatas or Sweet Potato. (q. v.) Our word, Potato, comes from this.

BATERION, Bathron.

BATH, Balneum, Balane'um, Loutron, (F.) Bain. Immersion, or stay, for a longer or shorter duration, of the whole or a part of the body in another medium than the atmosphere.

Immersion, total or partial, of the body in water.

Act of plunging into a liquid, sand, or other substance, in which it is the custom to bathe.

Also, the vessel in which the water is put for bathing.

A public or private establishment for bathing.

In Pharmacy, a vessel, placed over a fire, and filled with any substance, into which another vessel is placed, containing matters for digestion, evaporation or distillation.

The HOT BATH, Balneum calidum, (F.) Bain chaud, is a bath, the temperature of which is 98° and upwards; the TEPID or WARM BATH, (F.) Bain tiède, B. tempéré, Balneum tepidum, from 62° to 98°; the COLD BATH, Balneum frigidum, Frigidarium, (F.) Bain froid, below 62°; and the VAPOUR BATH Balneum Vaporis, (F.) Bain de Vapeur, Étude Humide, from 100° to 130°, and upwards. See Vaporarium.

BATH, Earth, Arenatio.

An ELECTRIC BATH, (F.) Bain électrique, consists in placing the person upon an insulated stool, communicating, by a metallic wire, with the principal conductor of the electrical machine in action. The Electric Bath produces general excitement of all the functions, and especially of the circulation and secretions. See Electricity.

A GENERAL BATH, (F.) Bain entier, is one, in which the whole body is plunged except the head; in contradistinction to the partial bath, Merobalane'um, Merobal'neum.

A HIP BATH, Coxalutivium, (F.) Bain de Fau-teuil, Bain de Siège, is one in which the lower part of the trunk and upper part of the thighs are immersed.

The HAND BATH, Manulu'cium, (F.) Bain de Mains or Manuluce, is a bath for the hands.

The FOOT BATH, Pedilu'rium, (F.) Bain de Pieds, a bath for the feet: and the HEAD BATH, Capitulu'rium. (F.) Bain de Tête or Capituluce, a bath for the head.

A HALF BATH, Semicu'pium, Excathis'ma, Inces'sio, is one adapted for half the body. One, for receiving only the hips or extremities, is also so called.

A SHOWER BATH, is one in which the water is made to fall like a shower on the body. See Douche.

A MEDICATED BATH, Balneum medicatum, (F.) Bain médicinal, is a bath, formed of decoctions or infusions of vegetable substances, or of any ingredient, introduced into the water for therapeutical purposes.

An ANIMAL BATH, Balneum Animale, consists in wrapping an animal, recently killed, or its skin, around the body or some part of it.

A SEA WATER BATH, Balneum Mar'ia, (F.) Bain Marie, consists of a vessel filled with boiling sea water, or salt water, in which the vessel is placed, that contains the substance to be evaporated.

A STEAM BATH may be formed by introducing steam into the first of those vessels, properly closed, in place of water.

A SAND BATH, Balneum Ar'ena, (F.) Bain de Sable, consists of a vessel filled with sand, and placed over the fire. Into this vessel, the one is put, which contains the substance to be evaporated.

A DRY BATH is one made of ashes, salt, sand, &c. The ancients used these frequently for therapeutical purposes.

Bathing is much employed in the treatment of disease. The cold bath is a sedative and indirect tonic, and especially the cold sea bath: the warm bath is a relaxant; and the hot bath stimulates.

The regular use of the bath is extremely conducive to health: but if too much indulged in, it is apt to produce injurious effects.

BATH, NITRO-MURIATIC ACID, Scott's acid bath—b. Vapour, Vaporarium.

BATH, MINERAL WATERS OF, Aqua Bathonia'ca vel Bad'ia, Aqua Solis, Aqua Bad'igua. Celebrated thermal springs at Bath, in England. They contain but little impregnation, and are chiefly indebted to their temperature, which is about 116° Fahrenheit, for their utility.

These waters are employed in the most heterogeneous cases; and are serviceable where the simple thermal springs are indicated, as in rheumatism, paralysis, &c.

BATHER, Balned'rius, Balned'tor, Balned'tor. (F.) Baigneur. One who bathes. Anciently, the name was given to those, that administered baths to the diseased,—the Etwistes of the French.

BATHMIS, Bathma, 'base, support.' The cavity of a bone, which receives the eminence of another; and especially the two Fossettes at the inferior extremity of the humerus; into which the processes of the ulna are received, during the flexion and extension of the fore arm.

BATHRON, Scamnum Hippo'retis, (q. v.)

Batéron, 'a step, a ladder.' (F.) Banc d'Hip-pocrate. An instrument, used for the extension of a limb, in cases of fracture or luxation. The description of it is found in Galen, Oribasius, and Scultetus, with a figure.

BATIA, Retort.

BATISSE, MINERAL WATERS OF. Batisse is three leagues from Clermont in France. The water is tepid, and contains sub-carbonate and sulphate of soda, sulphates of lime and iron, muriate of magnesia, and carbonate of lime.

BATOS, Rubus Idæus.

BATRACHOS, Ranula.

BATTARISMUS, Balbuties.

BATTATA VIRGINIANA, Solanum tuberosum.

BATTEMENT, Pulsation.

BAUDRICOURT, MINERAL WATERS OF. Baudricourt is a town of France, two leagues and a half from Mirecourt. The waters are sulphureous.

BAUDRUCHES, Condom.

BAUHIN, VALVE OF, Valve of TULPIUS, FALLOPIUS OR VAROLIUS, l'eo-cæcal Valve, Ileo-colic Valve, Valvula Ileï, Valvula Coli, V. Cæci, Operculum Ileï, Sphincter Ileï. This name is given to the valve, situate transversely at the place where the ileum opens into the cœcum, and which Bauhin says he discovered at Paris, in 1759. It had, however, been previously described by several Anatomists; as by Vidus Vidius, Postius, &c.

BAUME, Balsam—b. d'Acier, Balsam, chalybeate—b. Aromatique, Balsam aromatic—b. d'Aiguilles, Balsam, chalybeate—b. Apoplectique, Balsam apoplectic—b. d'Arcæus, Arcæus, balsam of—b. d'Arcæus, Balsam of Arcæus—b. d'Arcæus, Unguentum elemi compositum—b. Benjoin, Benjamin—b. Blanc, see Amyris Opobalsamum—b. du Brésil, Copaiba—b. de Cannelle, Laurus cinnamomum—b. de Carpathic, Balsam of Carpathia—b. de Carthagène, see Toluifera balsamum—b. de Constantinople blanc, see Amyris opobalsamum—b. de Copahu, Copaiba—b. Vert, see Fagnra octandra—b. Vanille de Metz, Balsam, green, of Metz—b. de Vie d'Hoffmann, Balsam of Life, of Hoffmann—b. de Vie de Lelière, Tinctura aloes composita—b. Vrai, see Amyris opobalsamum—b. Vulnèraire de Mindercr, Balsam, vulnerary, of Mindercrus.

BAURAC, (Arab.) Nitre, or salt in general. From this word comes Borax.

BAURIN, MINERAL WATERS OF. Baurin is a village four leagues from Roye, department of Somme. The waters are strongly chalybeate.

BAVE, (F.) Saliva ex ore fluens, Spuma, Humor salivus. Frothy, thick, viscid saliva, issuing from the mouth. This driveling, or, slavering, (q. v.) we see in children, old people, &c. The term is, also, applied to the frothy liquid, which flows from the mouth of rabid animals. Sauvages uses it synonymously with salivation.

BAY, ROSE, Rhododendron chrysanthemum—b. Sweet, Laurus—b. White, Magnolia glauca.

BDALSIS, Sucking.

BDELLA, Hirudo.

BDELLIUM, Myrrha imperfecta, Bolchon, Madcleon, Balchus. A gum resin, brought from the Levant and India; and supposed to be obtained from a species of Amyris, little known. It is solid, brittle, of a deep brown colour, of an acrid and bitter taste, and sweet odour. It was much vaunted by the ancients, but is now little employed.

BDELLOMETER, from βδέλλα, 'a leech,' and μετρον, 'measure.' An instrument, proposed as a substitute for the leech; inasmuch as we can tell the quantity of blood obtained by it, whilst we cannot by the leech. It consists of a cupping-glass, to which a scarificator and exhausting syringe are attached.

BDELLUS, Fart.

BEAD TREE, Melia Azedarach.

BEAM TREE, WHITE, Cratægus aria.

BEAN, CARTHAGENA, Habilla de Carthagena—b. Egyptian, Nymphaea nelumbo—b. French, Phaseolus vulgaris—b. Garden, common, Vicia faba—b. Kidney, Phaseolus vulgaris—b. Malacca, Avicennia tomentosa—b. Pontic, Nymphaea nelumbo—b. St. Ignatius's, Ignatia amara—b. Trefoil tree, see Cytisine.

BEAR'S BREECH, Acanthus mollis.

BEAR'S FOOT, Helleborus foetidus.

BEAR'S WHORTLEBERRY, Arbutus uva ursi.

BEARD, Barba, Pogon, Gencion, Barbitium, (F.) Barbe. The hair, which covers a part of the cheeks, the lips, and chin of the male sex, at the age of puberty.

BEARWEED, Veratrum viride.

BEASTINGS, Colostrum.

BEAUGENCY, MINERAL WATERS OF. Beaugency is a quarter of a league from Orleans. The waters contain subcarbonate of soda, iron, magnesia, and lime. They are tonic and aperient.

BEAUMONT ROOT, Gillenia trifoliata.

BEAUVAIS, MINERAL WATERS OF. These waters are chalybeate. Beauvais is in Picardie.

BEAVER, Castor fiber—b. Wood, Magnolia glauca.

BEBEERINE. See Bebeeru.

BEBEERU, a tree of British Guiana, which yields an active principle—Bebeerine; and in its properties resembles the Cinchona. The Sulphate of Bebeerine has been employed in intermittents.

BEC (F.) Rostrum (q. v.) Beak. This name has been applied to various parts.

The CORACOÏD BEAK, (F.) Bec Coracoïdien, is the end of the coracoid process. The beak of the Calamus Scriptorius, (F.) Bec de la plume à écrire, is a small cavity at the superior part of the medulla oblongata, which forms part of the 4th ventricle.

BEC DE CUILLER, Hamulus. An instrument used for the extraction of balls. It consists of an iron rod, 7 or 8 inches long, having at one extremity a small cavity, into which the ball is received to be drawn outwards. See Cochleariformis.

BEC DE GRUE MUSQUÉ, Geranium Moschatum—b. de Grue Robertin, Geranium Robertianum—b. de Lièvre, Harelip.

BEC (LE.) MINERAL WATERS OF. Bec is six leagues from Rouen in Normandy. The water is strongly chalybeate.

BECCABUNGA, Veronica Beccabunga. BE'CHIC, Bechica, Becha, Be'chica, Be'chita, from βήξ, 'cough.' (F.) Béchique. Medicines adapted for allaying cough.

BECHITA, Bechic.

BECHIUM, Tussilago.

BECHORTHOPNŒA, Pertussis.

BECUIBA, Ibucuiba.

BEDEGAR, BEDEGUAR, or BEDEGUARD, Spongia Cynosbati, Fungus Rosarum, F. Cynosbati. (F.) Pomme mousseuse, Eponge d'eglantier. An excrescence, which makes its appearance on different species of wild roses, and which is produced by the puncture of a small insect—the Cynips Rosæ. It was formerly employed as a lithoniptic and vermifuge, but is not now used. It is slightly astringent.

BEE. Sax. beo, Apis, Melis'sa, Melitta. (F.) Abeille. This insect was formerly exhibited, when dried and powdered, as a diuretic.

BEDFORD, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bedford is a village, situate on the great Western Turnpike road from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, a few miles east of the chief elevation of the Alleghany mountains. There are various springs, saline, chalybeate, and sulphureous.

BEDSTRAW, LADIES', GREATER, Galium mollugo. Galium verum.

BEEBREAD, Propolis.

BEECH, Fagus sylvatica—b. Drops, Orobanche Virginiana—b. Mast, see Fagus sylvatica.

BEER, Cerevisia.

BEET, Beta.

BÉGAÏEMENT, Balbuties.

BEGMA, βήγμα, according to some Bregma, βρηγμα, from βήσσειν or βρησσειν, 'to expectorate after coughing.' The sputum or expectorated matter.—Hipp.

BEGONIA. The Begonia grandiflora and B. tomentosa have astringent roots, which are used in Peru in cases of hemorrhage, scurvy, low fevers, &c.

BÈGUE, Balbus.

BEHEN ABIAD, Centaurea behen—b. Album, Centaurea behen—b. Officinatum, Cucubalus behen—b. Rouge, Stactice limonium.

BEHMEN ACKMAR, Stactice limonium.

BEIAHALALEN, Sempervivum tectorum.

BEIDELSAR, Asclepias procera.

BEJUÏO, Habilla de Carthagena.

BELA-AYE or BE-LAHE. A tonic and astringent bark of a Madagascar tree. Dupetit-Thouars and Sonnerat think it may be substituted for the Simarouba.

BE-LAHE, Bela aye.

BEL'S EYE, Belloculus.

BELADAMBOC. A species of convolvulus of the Malabar coast, which contains an acrid milky juice. From this a liniment is formed with oil and ginger, which is used against the bites of rabid animals.

BELA-MODAGAM. A kind of Scavola of the Malabar coast, the leaves of which are considered diuretic and emmenagogue.

BELANDRE, (F.) A litter, surrounded with curtains, in which patients are sometimes carried to hospitals.

BELCHING, Eructation.

BELEMNOID, Belenoid.

BELEMNOIDES PROCESSUS, Styloid processes.

BEL'ENOID, BEL'ONOID, BELEM'NOID or BELOID, Belenoides or Belennoides Processus, from βελος, 'an arrow,' and εἶδος, 'shape.' This name has been given to the styloid processes in general.

BELONOID, Belenoid.

BELESON, Balsam, Mussænda frondosa.

BELI OCULUS, Belloculus.

BELILLA, Mussænda frondosa.

BELINUM, Apium graveolens.

BELL, CANTERBURY, Campanula trachelium.

BELLADONNA, Atropa belladonna.

BELLE DAME, Atropa belladonna.

BELLEGU, Myrobalanus.

BELLEGI, Myrobalanus.

BELLESME, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bellesme is about three leagues from Montagne in France. The waters are chalybeate.

BELLEY, MINERAL WATERS OF. The waters at Belley, department of Ain, in France, are saline aperients.

BELLIDOIDES, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum.

BELLIS, B. perennis, B. minor, Bruisewort, Common Daisy. (F.) Paquette vivace, petite Marguerite. The leaves and flowers are rather acrid. They were, at one time, considered to cure different species of wounds. It is called also Symphytum minimum.

BELLIS MAJOR, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum.

BELL METAL, Cal'cocos. (F.) Airain, Métal des cloches. An alloy of copper, zinc, tin, and a small quantity of antimony, used for making bells. The mortars of the apothecary are often formed of this material. They require to be kept clean, to avoid the formation of verdigris.

BELLOCULUS, Beli Oculus. A kind of gem, which the Assyrians considered efficacious in the cure of many diseases. They imagined that the figure of an eye could be seen in it, and hence its name, Bel's Eye.

BELLON, Colic, metallic.

BELLOTAS. See Ilex major.

BELLOWS' SOUND, Bruit de soufflet—b. Encephalic, see Bruit de soufflet—b. Placentar, Bruit placentaire.

BELLYACHE, Colica—b. Dry, Colic, intestinallic.

BELMUSCHUS, Hibiscus abelmoschus.

BELNILEG, Myrobalanus.

BELOID, Belenoid.

BELOIDES PROCESSUS, Styloid processes.

BELONE, Needle.

BELONODES, Styloid.

BELUL/CUM, from βελος, 'a dart,' and ελωω, 'I draw out.' An instrument, used for extracting darts or arrows. Many instruments of this kind have been noticed by surgeons.—Ambrose Paré, Fabricius ab Acquapendente.

BELZOE, Benjamin.

BELZOIM, Benjamin.

BELZOINUM, Benjamin.

BEN, Guilandina moringa—b. of Judæa, Benjamin—b. Nut, Guilandina moringa.

BEN MOENJA. A Malabar tree. An alexipharmic decoction is made of its roots, in the country, which is much praised in cases of malignant fever. Its bark, boiled with Calamus aromaticus and salt, forms a decoction used in bites of poisonous serpents.

BENATH, Pustule.

BENEDICTUM LAXATIVUM, Confectio senne.

BÉNÉFICE DE LA NATURE, Beneficium naturæ—b. de Ventre, see Beneficium naturæ.

BENEFIC/IUM NATU/RÆ. (F.) Bénéfice de la Nature. This term is used, by the French Pathologists, for cases, in which diseases have got well without medical treatment. With them, Bénéfice de nature or B. de ventre, is synonymous also with Alvi Profluvium; a spontaneous diarrhœa, acting favourably either in the prevention or cure of disease.

BENEL, Croton racemosus.

BENEOLENTIA, from bene, 'well,' and olere, 'to smell.' Euodes. Sweet-scented medicines, as gums, &c.

BENG, Bangué.

BENGAL INDORUM, Cassumuniar.

BENGAL ROOT, Cassumuniar.

BENGI, Hyoscyamus.

BENIGN', Benignus, Euethes, (F.) Bénin, Bénigne. Diseases of a mild character are so called; as well as medicines, whose action is not violent, as a Benign Fever, Febris benigna imputris, &c.

BÉNIN, Benign.

BENJAMIN or BENZOIN, Benzo'inum, Benzo'inum verum, Belzo'inum, Assa odora'ta, Benjui, Benjuin, Assa duleis, Ben'jaoy, Benjo'inum, Belzoë, Belzoim, Benzoë, Styracis Benzoi'ni Balsamum, Liquor Cyreniacus, Croton Benzoe, Ben, of Juda'a, Acor Benzoi'nus, Sal Ac'idum seu essentialè seu volat'ilè Benzoes. (F.) Benjoin, Baume Benjoin, Assa doux. A resinous, dry, brittle substance, obtained from the Styrax Benzoin, Arbor Benivi, of Sumatra. The odour is extremely fragrant, and taste slightly aromatic. It is principally used for the preparation of the acid which it contains. It is also employed in some vulnerary tinctures, and as an expectorant. The Benzoic Acid is obtained from it by sublimation. The purest is in amygdaloid masses: hence called (F.) Benjoin amygdaloidè.

BENJAMIN, FLOWERS OF, or BENZOIC ACID,

Ac'idum Benzoi'cum Flores Benzoes, Flores Benzoi'ni, Ac'idum Benzoi'cum per sublimatio'nem. (F.) Acide Benzoi'que. This acid exists in all the balsams, but chiefly in the Benzoïn. It is in the vanilla, canella, the urine of infants, and of herbivorous animals. Its odour is aromatic and fragrant; taste hot, slightly acidulous, and agreeable. The crystals consist of white, satiny flakes, slightly ductile. It is probably stimulant; and has been used, as such, in chronic catarrh; but it has little efficacy.

BENJOINUM, Benjamin.

BENJAOY, Benjamin

BENJUI, Benjamin.

BENNE, Sesamum orientale.

BENNET, HERB, Geum urbanum.

BÉNOITE, Geum urbanum—b. Aquatique, Geum rivale—b. des Ruissaux, Geum rivale.

BENZOE, Benjamin.

BENZOENIL, Vanilla.

BENZOIN, Benjamin.

BERBERIS, Oxycantha Galeni.

BERCE, Heracléum spondylium.

BERENDAROS, Ocyneum basilicum.

BERENICE, Succinum.

BERENICIUM, Potassæ nitras.

BERENISECUM, Artemisia vulgaris.

BERGAMOTE, Bergamotta, (F.) Bergamotte. A small orange, of a very agreeable taste; and a peculiar odour. From its bark an oil is obtained, which is much employed as a perfume, and sometimes in medicine.

BERIBERI, Beribéria, Synclonus Beribéria, Paral'ysis Ber'iberi. This word is said to be Hindusthance, and to mean a sheep.—Bontius. The Beriberi is an Indian disease, little known in Europe. It consists in debility and tremors of the limbs,—sometimes, indeed, of the whole body; with painful numbness of the affected parts, &c.:—the patient walking doubled; and imitating the movements of sheep! Some authors have esteemed it rheumatic; others, paralytic; others, to be a kind of chorea. It is, almost always, incurable, but rarely fatal; and is treated by exercise, stimulant frictions, sudorifics, &c. It is sometimes called Ber'ibiers.

BERICOCCE, Prunus armeniaca.

BERLE NODIFLORE, Sium.

BERLUE, Metamorphopsia.

BERNARD THE HERMIT, Cancellus.

BERRIES, INDIAN, see Menispermum cuculus—b. Turkey, yellow, see Piper cubeba.

BERS. A sort of electuary, composed of pepper, seed of the white hyoscyamus, opium, euphorbium, saffron, &c. The Egyptians used it as an excitant.—Prospero Alpini.

BERU, MINERAL WATERS OF. Beru is in Champagne, France. The waters are slightly chalybeate.

BESASA, Ruta.

BESICLES, Spectacles.

BESOLN, Want—b. de la Vie, Necessary of life.

BESSANEM. A word used by Avicenna for redness of the skin, limbs, and face, produced by the action of cold.

BESSON. } See Gemellus.

BESSONNE. } See Gemellus.

BETA. The Bect, Sic'ula, (F.) Bette, Bet-

terave. Family, Chenopodæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. A genus of plants, of which the following are the chief varieties.

1. BETA VULGARIS ALBA, White Beet. The root yields sugar, and the leaves are eaten as a substitute for spinach.

2. BETA VULGARIS RUBRA, Red Beet. Root red and nutritive: yields a small quantity of sugar.

3. BETA HYBRIDA, Root of Scarcity. Root red, outside; white, within. Very nutritive; yields sugar.

BETEL, Piper Betel. A species of pepper, cultivated in several parts of India. The Indians are in the habit of chewing the leaves with lime and areca; and they give the name Betel to this preparation. It is used in all the equatorial countries of Asia. Betel is said to be tonic and astringent. It is also called Bette, Bêtre, Belle. See Areca.

BÊTISE, Dementia.

BÊTOINE, Betonica officinalis—b. des Montagnes, Arnica montana.

BÊTON, Colostrum.

BETONICA AQUATICA, Scrophularia aquatica.

BETONICA OFFICINALIS, Cestron, Betonica purpurea, Vetonia Cordi, &c., Betony, Psycholophum, Veronica purpurea, (F.) Betoinæ. Family, Labiatae. Sex. Syst. Didymia Gymnospermia. Betony was in much esteem amongst the ancients, who employed the flowers and leaves in decoction, in gout, sciatica, cephalalgia, &c. Antonius Musa is said to have written a number in praise of it; recommending it in no less than 47 different diseases. It has, however, little or no virtue. The leaves are said to be aperient, and the root emetic.

BETONICA PAULI, Veronica.

BETONY, Betonica officinalis—b. Water, Scrophularia aquatica.

BETRE, Betel.

BETTE, Beta.

BETTERAVE, Beta.

BETULA ALBA. The Birch, (F.) Boulcau commun. The young leaves are slightly odorous, astringent, and bitter. They are applied to wounds and ulcers. They have been regarded as antiscorbutic and anthelmintic. The tree furnishes a saccharine juice, which is considered antiscorbutic and diuretic.

BEURRE, Butter—b. de Bambouc, Butter of bambouc—b. de Cacao, Butter of cacao—b. de Coco, Butter of cocoa.

BEUVRIGNY, MINERAL WATERS OF. Beuvrigny is in the vicinity of Bayeux in Normandy. The water is chalybeate.

BÊVUE, Diplopia.

BEX, Tussis—b. Convulsiva, Pertussis—b. Humida, Expectoration—b. Theriodes, Pertussis.

BEXIS, Tussis.

BEXU'GO. Under this name a purgative root was introduced into Europe, formerly from Peru. It is supposed to have been the root of a Hippocratea.

BEZOAR, BEZ'AR, BEZ'EHARD, PA'ZAHAR, from Persian Pa, 'against,' and zahar, 'poison.' Lapis Bezoar'dicus, Enterolithus Bezoar'dus, Bezoard. A calculous concretion, found in the stomach, intestines, and bladder of animals. Wonderful virtues were formerly attributed to these Bezoars. There were two great varieties: the Bezoar orientale, Animal Bezoar'ticum orientale, formed in the fourth stomach of the gazelle of India (Gazella Indica, or rather Antelope cervicapra); and the Bezoar occidentale, Animal Bezoar'ticum occidentale, found in the fourth stomach of the wild goat or chamois of Peru. These substances were esteemed to be powerful alexipharmics; but the former was the more valued. It was believed that no poison, and no eruptive, pestilential, or putrid disease could resist its influence. As so many virtues were ascribed to it, other animal concretions were substituted for it; and factitious Bezoards were made of crabs' eyes and claws, bruised and mixed with musk, ambergris, &c.

BEZOAR BOVINUM, (F.) Bézoard de Bœuf, Bezoard of the Beef. A concretion formed in the fourth stomach of bees; also, a biliary calculus found in the gall-bladder.

BEZOARD OF CAYMAN. This was once much prized. It is now unknown.

THE BEZOARD OF THE CHAMOIS, HORSE, &c. exhibit their origin in their names.

THE BEZOARD OF THE INDIAN PORCUPINE, BEZOAR HYS'TRICIS, LAPIS PORCINUS, LAPIS MALUCENS'ISIS, Petro del Porco, (F.) Bézoard de Porc-Épic, was formerly the dearest of all the Bezoards, and was sold at an enormous price in Spain and Portugal.

BÊZOARD d'ALLEMAGNE, Ægagrophila—b. Mineral, Antimonium diaphoreticum—b. Vegetable, see Calappite.

BEZOARDIC, Bezoar'dicus, (F.) Bézoar'dique, concerning the Bezoard. Bezoardic medicines are those supposed to possess the same properties with the Bezoard; as antidotes, alexiteria, alexipharmics, cordials.

BEZOARDICA RADIX, Dorstenia contrajerva.

BEZOARDICUM SATURNI. A pharmaceutical preparation, regarded by the ancients as antihysteric. It was formed of protoxide of lead, butter of antimony, and nitric acid.

BEZOARDICUM VEN'ERIS. A pharmaceutical preparation, formerly employed in lepra, diseases of the brain, &c.; and which was made from filings of copper, butter of antimony, and nitric acid.

BEZOARDICUM HUMANUM. Urinary calculi were formerly employed under this name as powerful alexipharmics.

BEZOARDICUM JOVIA'LE. A sort of greenish powder, used as a diaphoretic, and formed of antimony, tin, mercury, and nitric acid.

BEZOARDICUM LUNA'RE. A medicine formerly regarded as a specific in epilepsy, convulsions, megrim, &c. It was prepared of nitrate of silver, and butter of antimony.

BEZOARDICUM MARTIA'LE. A tonic medicine, used by the ancients in diarrhœa. It was prepared from the tritoxide of iron and butter of antimony.

BEZOARDICUM MERCURIA'LE. A medicine, formerly valued as an antisyphilitic, and prepared from the submuriate of mercury, butter of antimony, and nitric acid.

BEZOARDICUM MINERA'LE. The deutoxide of antimony, so called, because its properties were supposed to resemble those of animal Bezoard.

BEZOAR'DICUM SOLA'RE. A diaphoretic medicine, prepared of gold filings, nitric acid, and butter of antimony.

BI, as a prefix to words, has the same signification as Di.

BIBITORIUS, Rectus internus oculi.

BIBLIOGRAPHY, MEDICAL, from βιβλος, 'a book,' and γράφω, 'I describe.' Skill in the knowledge of medical books. The most distinguished medical bibliographers have been: J. A. VAN DER LINDEN, Amstelod. 1662, 8vo. (L.) M. LIPENIUS, Francf. ad Mœn. 1679, fol. (L.) G. A. MERCKLEIN, Norimb. 1686, (L.) J. J. MANGET, Genev. 1695 to 1731, (L.) BIJON. See Pinus sylvestris.

BILAZAY, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bilazay is a town in France, two leagues from Thouar, department of Deux Sèvres, near which is a thermal sulphureous spring. Temperature about 77° Fahrenheit.

BILBERRY, Vaccinium myrtillus—b. Red, Vaccinium vitis idæa.

BILE, Bilis, Fel, Chol'os, Cholè, (F.) Bile, Fiel. A yellow, greenish, viscid, bitter, nauseous fluid, secreted by the liver. It is distinguished into hepatic and cystic; according as it flows immediately into the duodenum from the liver or from the gall-bladder. It contains soda; phosphate, sulphate, and muriate of soda:—a little phosphate of lime and oxide of iron:—albumen, and a yellowish and resinous matter. Its use is,—to complete the digestive process in the small intestines, by aiding in the separation of the chyle.

BILE, Furunculus—b. Black, Atrabilis—b. de Bœuf, see Bile—b. Ropandue, Icterus.

The GALL OF THE OX, Ox Gall, Fel Tauri, Fel Bovis, (F.) Bile de Bœuf, was once reputed cosmetic and detergent, antialgic and emmenagogue; as well as to possess the power of facilitating labour. It has also been given as a bitter stomachic and anthelmintic.

The GALL OF THE BEAR, Fel Ursi, was thought to be antiepileptic, and that of the Eel, Fel anguillæ, to facilitate labour.

BILIARY, Bilia'ris, Bilia'rius. That which relates to bile.

BILIARY APPARATUS, B. organs, B. passages. The collection of parts, that concur in the secretion and excretion of bile:—viz. the liver, pori biliarii or tubuli biliferi; hepatic, cystic, and choledoch ducts and gall-bladder.

BILIARY CONCRETIONS are concretions found in some parts of the biliary apparatus.

BILIEUX, Bilious.

BILIMBI, Averrhoa bilimbi.

BILIMBING TERES, Averrhoa bilimbi.

BILIOUS, Bilio'sus, Epick'olos, Picroch'olos, (F.) Bilicuz. That which relates to bile, contains bile, or is produced by bile. An epithet given to certain constitutions and diseases, which are believed to be the effect of superabundance of the biliary secretion; as Bilious temperament, B Symptoms, B. fever.

BILUMBI BITING-BING, Malus Indica.

BIMANUS. One that has two hands. A term applied only to man, because he is the sole mammiferous animal that possesses two perfect hands.

BINDWEED, GREAT, Convolvulus sepium—b. Lavender-leaved, Convolvulus cantabrica—b. Sea, Convolvulus soldanella.

BINKOHUMBA, Phyllanthus urinaria.

BINOCULUS, Bin'ocle, Diopthal'mica Fascia, Oculis duplex, from bis, 'twice,' and oculus, 'an eye.' (F.) Ceil double. A bandage applied over both eyes. It was, also, formerly called Diopthal'mus.

BINSICA. Disorder of the mind. According to VAN HELMONT, an atrophy of the organ of imagination.

BIODYNAMICS, Biodynam'ica, Biodynam'icē; from βίος, 'life,' and δυναμικ, 'power,' forcē. The doctrine of the vital activity, or forces.

BIOGAMIA, Magnetism, animal.

BIOLOGY, Physiology.

BIOLYCHNION, Animal heat.

BIOLYCHNIUM, from βίος, 'life,' and λυχνιον, 'a lamp.' Innate heat, vital heat. Also, a secret preparation of which BEGUIN and BERGRAVE make mention.

BIOMAGNETISMUS, Magnetism, animal.

BIOS, βίος. Life, (q. v.) Also, what is necessary for the preservation of life.

BIOTE, Life.

BIO THAN'ATI,—from βίος, 'life,' and θάνατος, 'death.' Those who die very suddenly, or as if there was no space between life and death.

BIR, Thorax.

BIRA, Cerevisia.

BIRTH, CROSS, Presentation, preternatural.

BIRTHWORT, Aristolochia.

BISCHE, Biccho. A malignant kind of dysentery, which often prevails in the Island of Trinidad.

BIS'CUIT, Biscoctus, 'twice baked.' A kind of dry, hard bread, or cake, which is variously made; and, when without eggs or butter, is easy of digestion. It was formerly called Dipyrites, διπυριτης, and Dip'yros.

BISERMAS, Salvia sclarea.

BISFERIENS, Dicrotus.

BISHOP'S WEED, Ammi.

BISLINGUA, Ruscus hypoglossum.

BISMALVA, Althæa.

BISPIRUS, Dipnoos.

BISMUTH, Bismuthum, Wismuthum, Regulus of Bis'muth, Marcas'ita, Tin Glass. (F.) Étain gris, E. de Glace. A metal, in spicular plates, of a yellowish-white colour; s. gr.

9.822. Fusible at 400° Fahrenheit, and volatilizable at a high temperature. It is used only in the preparation of the subnitrate.

BISMUTH, SUBNITRATE OF, Oxyd of Bismuth, Marcas'ita alba, Plumbum cinereum, Mag'istry of Bismuth, Pearl White, Spanish White, Magist'rium Marcas'ite, Bismuthum Nitricum, B. Subnitricum, Nitras Subbismuthicum, Nitras Bismuthi, Calx Vismuthi, Bismuthum oxydulatum album, (F.) Sousnitrate de bismuth, Oxide blanc de B., Blanc de fard, Blanc de perle. It is considered to be tonic and antispasmodic, and has been chiefly used in gastrodynia.

BISSUS. The silky filaments, which fix the Pinna Mari'na to the rocks. In Italy and Corsica, clothes are made of these, which are considered to favour perspiration, and are recommended to be worn next the skin in rheumatism, gout, &c.—See Byssus.

BISTORT, OFFICINAL, Polygonum bistorta.

BISTORTA, Polygonum bistorta.

BISTORTIER, (F.) A name given, by the Pharmacien, to a long wooden pestle used for reducing soft substances to powder, and in the preparation of electuaries.

BISTOURI, (F.) Pistorius' sis gladius, Scalpel'lus; from scal'pere, 'to cut.' A Bistoury. A small cutting knife, used in Surgery, so called, according to Huet, from the town of Pistori, which was formerly celebrated for the manufacture of those instruments. A bistoury has the form of a small knife, and is composed of a blade and handle. The blade, which is most commonly movable in the handle, may be fixed by a button, spring, &c. When fixed in the handle, the bistouri is called by the French, B. à lame fixe ou dormante.

The chief Bistouries are:—1. The STRAIGHT B. (F.) B. droit, in which the blade and cutting edge are straight: the point being fine, round, or square. 2. The CONVEX B. (F.) B. convexe; the blade of which is convex at the cutting edge, concave at the back. 3. The CONCAVE B. (F.) B. concave; the blade of which is concave at its edge, and convex at the back. 4. BLUNT-POINTED B. (F.) B. boutonné; the blade of which has a button at its extremity. 5. The BLUNT OR PROBE-POINTED BISTOURI OF POTT is concave at its cutting edge, and its point is blunt; so that it can be carried on the palmar surface of the index finger, to divide the stricture, in strangulated hernia. Sir Astley Cooper has recommended a useful modification of this, to avoid wounding the intestine, should it come in contact with the edge of the knife. His Bistouri has an edge of not more than eight lines in length, and situate about five lines from the point. 6. BISTOURI A LA LIMF. (F.) is a straight Bistoury; the blade fixed in the handle; the extremity with a button, and the edge made with a file. It is chiefly used for dilating parts. 7. BISTOURI ROYAL, (F.) A Bistouri, used in operating upon Louis XIV., for fistula in ano. 8. BISTOURI GASTRIQUE, (F.) A complicated instrument, invented by Morand, for dilating wounds of the abdomen. 9. The BISTOURI CACHÉ, B. herniaire, ou Attrapé-lourdaud de Bicnaise. A curved bistouri, the blade of which is placed in a canula, whence it issues on pressing a spring.

The word Bistouri is used by the French, at times, where we would employ knife.

BIT NOBEN, Salt of Bitumen, Padnoon, Soucherloon, Khala mimuc. A white, saline substance, which is a Hindoo preparation of great antiquity, and has been supposed to be the Sal Asphaltites and Sal Sodomænus of the ancients. It is used by the Hindoo in the prevention or cure of almost all diseases.

BITHNIMAL/CA or GASTERANAX. Two words, used by Dôlaus, to designate an active principle supposed to have its seat in the stomach, and preside over chymification, &c.

BITTER, Amarus—b. Holy, Hiera picra.

BITTERNESS, Amaritudo, Amaritides, Amâror, Picria, (F.) Amertume. A particular taste, which belongs to many substances. In some diseases there is a sense of bitterness felt in the mouth.

BITTERSWEET, Solanum dulcamara.

BITTERS, COLUMBO, Tinctura Calumbæ—b. Spirit, Tinctura gentianæ composita—b. Wine, Vinum gentianæ comp.

BITTOS. A disease, in which the chief symptom is an acute pain in the anus.—Chomel.

BITUMEN, GLUTINOUS, Pissasphaltum—b. Judaicum, Asphaltum—b. of Judæa, Asphaltum—b. Petroleum, Petroleum—b. Malta, Pissasphaltum—b. Salt of, Bitnoben—b. Solidum, Asphaltum.

BIVENTER, DIGASTRICUS—b. Cervicis, Complexus musculus.

BIXA ORLEANA, Terra Orleana.

BLABE, Wound.

BLACCLE, Rubeola.

BLACKBERRY, AMERICAN. See Rubus fruticosus.

BLACKWATER, Pyrosis.

BLADUM, Blé.

BLÆSITAS, Balbuties.

BLÆSITAS, Blasa lingua. Some authors have used this word as synonymous with stammering. See Balbuties. Sauvages understands by it a defect in pronunciation, which consists in substituting soft consonants for those that are hard; as the z for s, the d for t, the s for c and j, &c. Also, Lipping, Traulis mus, Traulotes, (F.) Blésité, Blé (parler).

BLÆSUS. A distortion; especially the outward distortion of the legs. Also, a stammerer.

BLAFARD, (F.) Pallidus, Pallidulus. This epithet is sometimes given to the skin, when pale and dull; but, most frequently, to the flesh of a wound, when it has lost its colour, and become white. The word is, also, sometimes used synonymously with Albino, (q. v.)

BLANC DE BAILEINE, Cetaceum—b. de Fard, Bismuth, subnitrate of—b. de l'ail, Sclerotic—b. d'œuf, Albumen ovi—b. de Perle, Bismuth, subnitrate of.

BLANC MANGER, (F.) Cibus albus, Leucopha'gium, Argyrotrophe'ma. An animal jelly, (so called on account of its colour,) combined with an emulsion of sweet almonds, to which sugar has been added, and some aromatic. It is sometimes prescribed as a nutrient in convalescence and chronic diseases.

BLANC RHAZIS or BLANC-RAISIN. An ointment composed of cerusse, white wax, and olive oil.

BLANCA, Plumbi subcarbonas.

TO BLANCH, from (F.) blanchir, 'to whiten, to bleach.' To deprive of the outer rind; as 'to blanch almonds;' i. e. to peel them.

BLANCHET, (F.) A blanket. A term given, by the French Pharmaciens, to the woollen strainer, through which they filter syrup and other thick fluids.

BLANCON ORIBASII, Polypodium filix mas.

BLAS; an unmeaning term, invented by Van Helmont, to designate a kind of movement in the body; at times, local, at others, under extraneous influence. Thus he speaks of the Blas meteoros, or of the heavenly bodies, and the Blas humanum, that which operates in man.

BLASÉ, (F.) An epithet given to one whom the abuse of enjoyment has prevented from any longer deriving satisfaction or pleasure from it.

BLASTE'MA, Blaste'sis, from βλαστανω, 'I bud.' A germ, (q. v.) The sense of this word, which is often used by Hippocrates, is obscure. Castelli thinks it means the eruption of some morbid principle at the surface of the body.

BLASTODERMA. See Molecule.

BLATTA BYZANTIA, Unguis odoratus, (F.) Blatte de Byzance. This name seems, formerly, to have been given to a marine production, from some of the Conchyli. It had an agreeable smell, a reddish tint, and the shape of a nail. It was prescribed in epilepsy, hysteria, and hepatic obstructions. Rondelet affirms that it was the production of the shell-fish murex or purpura; and that the name Blatta is derived from the Greek βλαττος, 'purple.'

BLAVELLE, Centaurea cyanus.

BLAVÉOLE, Centaurea cyanus.

BLAVEROLLE, Centaurea cyanus.

BLÉ, Bladum. This word answers, in France, to the word Corn (q. v) in England; i. e. any kind of grain employed for making bread. Wheat being most commonly used for this purpose, Blé is sometimes restricted to this. Blé méteil is a mixture of wheat and rye.

BLÉ, CORNU, Ergot—b. d'Espagne, Zea mays—b. d'Italie, Zea mays—b. Noir, Polygonum fagopyrum—b. de Turquie, Zea mays.

BLÉ (PARLER), Blæsitas.

BLEABERRY, Vaccinium myrtillus.

BLEACHING LIQUID, Eau de javelle.

BLEAR EYE, Lippitudo.

BLEB, Bulla.

BLECHNON, Polypodium filix mas.

BLECHNUM LIGNIFOLIUM, Asplenium scolopendrium—b. Squamosum, Asplenium tetrach.

BLECHROPYRA. See Blechros.

BLECHROPYRUS, Typhlus mitior.

BLECHROS, βληρρος, 'weak, feeble, slow.'

An epithet, applied to different affections, and particularly to fevers. Hence Blechrop' yra, 'a slow fever;' Blechrosphyg'mia, 'a slow pulse.'

BLECHROSPHYGMIA. See Blechros.

BLED, Corn.

BLEEDING FROM THE NOSE, Epistaxis.

BLÈME, (F.) This word has nearly the same signification as Blafard. Generally, however, it includes, also, emaciation of the countenance.

BLENNA, Mucus—b. Narium, Nasal mucus.

BLENNELYTRIA, from βλεννα, 'mucus,' and ελυτρον, 'a sheath.' A discharge of mucus from the vagina. Leucorrhœa, (q. v.) Alibert.

BLENNEMESIS, Blennœm'esis, Vom'itus

pituitosus, from βλεννα, 'mucus,' and εμεσις, 'vomiting.' Vomiting of mucus.

BLENNENTERIA, Dysentery.

BLENNISTH'MIA, from βλεννα, 'mucus,' and ισθμος, 'the gullet.' Increased flow of mucus from the pharynx and larynx.—Alibert.

BLENNOMEMESIS, Blennemesis.

BLENNOG'ENOUS, Blennog'enus, from βλεννα, 'mucus,' and γεννω, 'I form.' Forming or generating mucus. Breschet and Roussel de Vauzème describe an apparatus of this kind for the secretion of the mucous matter that constitutes the cuticle, composed of a glandular parenchyma or organ of secretion situate in the substance of the true skin, and of excretory ducts, which issue from the organ, and deposit the mucous matter between the papillæ.

BLENNOPHTHALMIA, Ophthalmia, (purulent.)

BLENNOP'TYSIS, from βλεννα, and πτυω, 'I spit.' Expectoration of mucus. Catarrh (q. v.)

BLENNOPYR'IA, from βλεννα, and πυρ, 'fire.' Alibert has classed, under this head, various fevers with mucous complications; as Mesenteric fever, Adeno-meningeal fever, &c.

BLENNORRHAGIA, Gonorrhœa—b. Genitalium, Leucorrhœa—b. Notha, Gonorrhœa spuria—b. Spuria, Gonorrhœa spuria.

BLENNORRHAGIC EPIDIDYMITIS, Herma humoralis.

BLENNORRHAGIE FAUSSE, Gonorrhœa spuria—b. du Gland, Gonorrhœa spuria.

BLENNORRHINIA, Coryza,

BLENNORRHŒA, Blennorrhœa, Blennorrhag'ia, Phlegmorrhœa, Phlegmorrhag'ia, from βλεννα, 'mucus,' and ρεω, 'I flow.' Inordinate secretion and discharge of mucus.

BLENNORRHŒA, Gonorrhœa—b. Chronica, (gleet,) see Gonorrhœa—b. Genitalium, Leucorrhœa—b. Luodes, Gonorrhœa impura—b. Nasalis, Coryza—b. Urethralis, Gonorrhœa—b. Urinalis, Cystorrhœa—b. Vesicæ, Cystorrhœa.

BLENNOSSES, from βλεννα, 'mucus.' Affections of the mucous membranes.—Alibert.

BLENNOTHORAX, Catarrh, Peripneumonia notha—b. Chronicus, Asthma humidum.

BLENNOTORRHŒA, Otitrhœa.

BLENNURETHRIA, Gonorrhœa.

BLENNURIA, Cystorrhœa.

BLEPHARELOSIS, Entropion.

BLEPHARIDES, Cilia.

BLEPHAROPLASTICE, Blepharoplastice.

BLEPHARITIS, Ophthalmia tarsi.

BLEPHAROBLENNORRHŒA, Ophthalmia, purulent.

BLEPHARŒDEMA AQUOSUM, Hydroblepharon.

BLEPHARON, Palpebra—b. Atoniaton, Blepharoptosis.

BLEPHARONCO'SIS, Palpebrarum Tumor, from βλεφαρον, 'eyelid.' A tumour on the eyelid.

BLEPHAROPHTHALMIA, Ophthalmia tarsi.

BLEPHAROPLAS'TICĒ, Blepharidoplas'ticē, Insisio Ciliotrum from βλεφαρον, 'the eyelid,' and πλαστικός, 'forming,' 'formative.' The formation of a new eyelid.

BLEPHAROPLEGIA, Blepharoptosis.

BLEPHAROSPASMUS; from βλεφαρον, 'eyelid;' and σπασμος, 'spasm,' a spasmodic action of the orbicularis palpebrarum muscle.

BLEPHAROPTOSIS, Blepharoptēgia, Cusus pal'pebræ super'ioris, Delap'sus pal'pebræ, Prolap'sus pal'pebræ, Proptō'sis pal'pebræ, Pto'sis pal'pebræ, Ato'niaton blepharon, from βλεφαρον, the eyelid, and πτωσις, 'fall.' A falling down of the upper eyelid over the eye, caused by a paralysis of the Levator pal'pebræ superioris muscle. This paralysis is an unfavourable symptom, as it is generally connected with a state of the brain favouring apoplexy or palsy.

BLEPHAROPTOSIS ECTROPIUM, Ectropium—b. Entropion, Entropion.

BLEPHAROTIS, Ophthalmia tarsi.

BLEPHAROTITIS, Ophthalmia tarsi.

BLEPHAROTOSIS, Ectropium.

BLEPHAROXYSTUM, from βλεφαρον, 'eyelid,' and ξυω, 'I scrape.' An instrument used, by the ancients, for removing callosities, which made their appearance in the affection called, by the Greeks, τραχυμα.—Paulus of Ægina, Goræus.

BLĒSITĒ, Blēsitas.

BLESSURE, Abortion, Wound.

BLESTRIS'MOS. Restlessness of the sick.—Hippocr.

BLĒTA. A word, used by Paracelsus for white or milky urine, arising from diseased kidneys. Blota alba has the same meaning.

BLĒVILLE, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bleville is a village about two miles from Havre. The waters are acidulous chalybeates.

BLINDNESS, Cæcitas.

BLISTER, Vesicato'rium, Emplas'trum Vesicato'rium, Emplas'trum Lytta, Epispasticum, from Vesi'ea, 'a bladder,' (F.) Vésicatoire, Vésicant. Any substance which, when applied to the skin, irritates it, and occasions a serous secretion, raising the epidermis, and constituting a vesicle. Various articles produce this effect, as cantharides, mustard, garou, euphorbium, garlic, ammoniac, &c.

Blisters are used as counter-irritants. By exciting a disease artificially on the surface, we can often remove another, which may be at the time existing internally.

A perpetual blister is one, that is kept open for a longer or shorter time by means of appropriate dressings.

Blister or vesication also means the vesicle produced by vesicatories.

BLISTERING FLY, Cantharis.

BLOOD, Sanguis, Cruor, Lapis animalis, Hæma, ζῆμα, (F.) Sang. An animal fluid, formed chiefly from the chyle; acquiring important properties during respiration; entering every organ through the circulation; distributing the nutritive principles to every texture, and the source of every secretion. The blood is white, in the molluscous and inferior animals, which have been, hence, called white-blooded, to distinguish them from the red-blooded; which class includes the mammalia, birds, reptiles, and fishes. Human blood is composed of water, albumen, fibrine, an animal colouring substance, a little fatty matter, and different salts; as muriates of potass and soda, phosphate of lime, subcarbonate of soda, lime, magnesia, oxide of iron, and lactate of soda, united with an animal matter.

Arterial blood is of a florid red colour, strong smell, temp. 100°; s. g. 1.049. Venous blood is of a brownish-red; temp. 98°; s. g. 1.051. This difference in colour has given occasion to the first being called red blood; the latter black. The former, which is distributed from the heart, is nearly the same through its whole extent; the latter is the remains of the arterial blood after the different elements have been taken from it, in nutrition, and probably differs in composition. It likewise contains different substances absorbed. Venous blood, taken from a vessel and left to itself, becomes solid; and separates into two distinct parts;—the serum or watery, supernatant fluid; and the cror, coagulum, crassamentum, hepar sanguinis, placenta, in'sula, or clot. The serum is chiefly water, holding albumen in solution and the salts of the blood. The clot contains the fibrine, colouring matter, a little serum, and a small quantity of salts. The colouring portion of the blood consists of red globules, which contain iron; and this is probably one of the agents of the coloration operated in the lungs:—the oxygen of the air combining with the venous blood in the pulmonary artery. In diabetes, the blood contains a large quantity of sugar formed at the expense of the system.

M. Lecanu found the blood to be composed—in 1000 parts—of water 785.590; albumen, 69.415; fibrine, 3.565; colouring matter, 119.626; crystallizable fatty matter, 4.300; oily matter, 2.270; extractive matter soluble in alcohol and water, 1.920; albumen combined with soda, 2.010; chlorides of sodium and potassium, alkaline phosphate, sulphate, and subcarbonates, 7.304; subcarbonate of lime and magnesia, phosphate of lime, magnesia and iron, peroxide of iron, 1.414; loss, 2.586.

The following table exhibits the computations of different physiologists regarding the weight of the circulating fluid—arterial and venous.

The proportion of arterial blood to venous is about as 4 to 9.

Dried human blood was, at one time, considered to be antiepileptic. That of the goat, dried, Sanguis hirci siccatus, is sudorific, and antiepileptic.

BLOOD, BLACK, VASCULAR SYSTEM OF, see Vascular—b. Loss of, Hæmorrhagia—b. Red, system of, see Vascular—b. Spitting of, Hæmoptysis—b. Vomiting of, Hæmatemesis—b. White, Lymph.

BLOOD-LETTING, Missio Sanguinis, Hæmaxis. (F.) Saignée. A discharge of a certain quantity of blood produced by art.—an operation, which consists in making an opening into a vessel to draw blood from it. When practised on an artery, it is called Arteriotomy; on a vein, Phlebotomy; and on the capillary vessels, local or capillary, in contradistinction to the former, which is termed general.

Blood-letting is used both during the existence of a disease, as in inflammation, and in the way of prophylaxis. It is employed to fulfil various indications. 1. To diminish the actual mass of blood;—when it is termed, by the French Pathologists, Saignée évacuative. In such case, fluids ought not to be allowed too freely afterwards. 2. To diminish the turgescence in any particular organ—(F.) Saignée révulsive, when performed far from the part affected; and Saignée dérivative, when near.) 3. To diminish the consistence, or the red particles, of the blood, (F.) Saignée spoliative.) The immediate effects of blood-letting are: diminution of the mass of blood and of heat; retardation of the pulse, and sometimes syncope. Blood-letting from the veins, or phlebotomy, is practised on the subcutaneous veins of the neck, the face, the fore-arm, and the leg; sometimes on those of the hand or foot. The necessary apparatus consists of a bandage or riband, a compress of rag, and a lancet or phleam.

The veins selected for the operation, are, 1. In the fold of the arm, five;—the cephalic, basilic, the two median, and the anterior cubital. 2. In the hand, the cephalic and salvatella. 3. In the foot, the great and little saphena. 4. In the neck, the external jugular. 5. In the forehead, the frontal. 6. In the mouth, the ranine. The operation of phlebotomy in the limbs is performed by tying a circular bandage round the limb, in order that the subcutaneous veins may become turgid, by the course of the blood being obstructed: the bandage not being so tight, however, as to compress the arteries of the limb. A puncture is made into the vein, and the desired quantity allowed to flow. The ligature is now removed; and a compress and retaining bandage applied. Capillary or local blood-letting is practised on the skin or mucous membranes, by means of leeches, the lancet, or cupping.

BLOODROOT, Sanguinaria canadensis.
BLOODSTONE, Hæmatites.
BLOTA ALBA, Bleta.
BLOW, Ictus, Plegè, (F.) Coup. Effect produced by one body striking another. The impression made by any body, which strikes us, or against which we strike;—a common cause of wounds, contusions, fractures, &c.

BLUE BOTTLE, Centaurea cyanus, Cyanus segetum.
BLUE STONE, Cupri sulphas.
BLUET DES MOISSONS, Cyanus segetum.
BLUSH, CUTANEOUS. See Efflorescence.
BOA. An eruption of red, ichorous pimples. Pliny. See, also, Hydra and Sudamina.
BOA UPAS, Upas.
BOBERRI, Curcuma longa.
BOCIUM, Bronchocele.
BOCHIUM, Bronchocele.

BODY, Corpus, Soma, (F.) Corps. The human body is the collection of organs, which compose the frame. At times, however, body is used synonymously with trunk. We say, also, the body of the femur, of the sphenoid, &c.

to designate the shaft or middle portion of those bones; the body of the uterus, &c.

BODY, COMING DOWN OF THE, Proctoclele.

BOETHEMA, Medicament.

BOGBEAN, Menyanthes trifoliata.

BOHON UPAS, Upas.

BOIL, Furunculus—b. Gum, Parulis.

BOIS DE CAMPECHE, Hæmatoxylin Campechianum—b. de Chypre, Rhodium lignum—b. de Couleuvre, see Strychnos—b. Puant, Prunus padus—b. de Rose, Rhodium lignum—b. de Sappan, Casalpinia sappan—b. Sudorifique, Wood sudorific.

BOISSE, MINERAL WATERS OF. These waters are situate about half a league from Fontenay-le-Comte in France. They are purgative, and seem to contain carbonate and sulphate of lime and muriate of soda.

BOISSON, Drink.

BOITE (F.) A box or case, Capsa, Pyxis. An apparatus for the reception of any matters, which it may be desirable to preserve. In Surgery and Anatomy, Boîtes à dissection, B. à amputation, B. à trépan, B. à cataracte, &c. mean the cases in which these various instruments are kept. Boîte du Crane is the bony case which receives the brain. Boîte is, also, the portion of the stem of the trephine, which receives the pyramid or centrepin. Boîte de Petit is a machine, invented by M. Petit, to retain the fractured portions of bone in apposition, when the leg has been fractured in a complicated manner. Boîte is, also, a kind of case put before an artificial anus to receive the fæces, which are continually being discharged. The vulgar, in France, give the name Boîte to various articulations,—B. de genou, B. de la hanche; Knee-joint, Hip-joint.

BOITEMENT, Claudication.

BOITIER (F.) Capsula unguenta'ria. A Dressing-case. A box, containing salves and different apparatus, used more particularly by the dressers in hospitals.

BOL, Bolus—b. d'Arménie, Bole, Armenian—b. Blanc, Bolus alba.

BOLA, Myrrha.

BOLBID'ION, BOLBID'EON, BOLBIT'ION, βολβιτιον, βολβιδιον. A species of polypus, recommended by Hippocrates to be boiled in oil and wine, and to be given in different diseases, and especially in amenorrhœa.

BOLBITION, Bolbidion.

BOLCHON, Bdelium.

BOLE ARME'NIAN, BOLE ARME'NIAC or B. AR'MENIC, Argil'la ferrugin'ca rubra, Sinapi'sis, Aren'na, men, Bolus Orient'lis, Bolus Armenia, B. Arménie, B. rubra. (F.) Bol d'Arménie. A red, clayey earth, found, not only in Armenia, but in several countries of Europe,—in Tuscany, Silesia, France, &c. It was once esteemed a tonic and astringent, and was applied as a styptic. It is now scarcely, if ever, used. It consists of Argil, mixed with lime and iron.

BOLESIS, Coral.

BOLESON, Balsam.

BOLET ODORANT, Dædalea suaveolens.

BOLETUS ALBUS, Boletus laricis.

BOLETUS ESCULEN'TUS, (F.) Morelle. An eatable mushroom, found in the woods in Europe, and much admired by Gastronomes. It was formerly esteemed to be aphrodisiac.

BOLETUS IGNIARIUS. The systematic name for the Agaricus of the Pharmacopœias. Agaricus Chirurgo'rum, Agaricus Quercus, Is'ca, Is'ca, Boletus Ungula'tus, Spunk, Am'adou, Punk, Fungus Ignari'us, fungus Quercin'us, Agarie of the Oak, Touchwood Boletus, Female Agarie. (F.) Agarie de chêne, Amadouvier. It was formerly much used by surgeons as a styptic.

BOLETUS LAR'ICIS, B. LARICIN'us, Fungus Laricis, Polyporus officinal'is, Agaricus albus, A. albus opt'imus, B. purgans, B. albus, (F.) Agarie blanc. On the continent of Europe it has been given as a cathartic and emetic, as well as to moderate the sweats in phthisis—(De Haen.) Externally, styptic.

BOLETUS PURGANS, Boletus laricis—b. Salicis, Dædalea suaveolens.

BOLETUS SUAV'EOLENS, Fungus sal'icis, Fungus albus salig'neus, Dædalea suav'eo lens. (F.) Agarie odorant. It has been used in phthisis pulmonalis, and asthma, in powder. Dose, from ʒss to ʒij.

BOLETUS TOUCHWOOD, Boletus ignari'us.

BOLI MARTIS, Ferrum tartarisatum.

BOLISMOS, Bouldimia.

BOLITES. The mushroom; perhaps the Agaricus Aurantiacus.—Pliny, Martial, Sen-tonius, Galen. It was so called, in consequence of its shape, from Bolus.

BOLUS, βολος, a morsel, a mouthful, a bole. (F.) Bol. A pharmaceutical preparation, having a pilular shape, but larger; capable, however, of being swallowed as a pill.

BOLUS ALBA, Terra sigilla'ta, Argil'la pallid'ior:—called sigilla'ta, from being commonly made into small cakes or flat masses and stamped or sealed with certain impressions. (F.) Bol blanc, Terre sigillée, Argile ochreuse pâle. It was used like the Bolus Armenia, and was brought from Etruria. See Terra.

BOLUS ALIMEN'TARY, Bolus alimentari'us. The bole, formed by the food, after it has undergone mastication and insalivation, in the mouth; and been collected upon the tongue prior to deglutition.

BOLUS ORIENTAL'IS. A kind of Bolar earth only distinguished from Bole Armenian, in being brought from Constantinople. See Bole, Armenian.

BOLUS RUBRA, Bole, Armenian.

BOMA'REA SALSIL/LA. The inhabitants of Chili use this plant as a sudorific. It is given in infusion, in cutaneous diseases.

BOMBAX, Gossypium.

BOMBEMENT, Bombus.

BOMBUS, Aurium fluctu'tio, A. sib'illus, A. son'itus, A. susur'rus, (F.) Bombement. A kind of ringing or buzzing in the ears;—characterized, according to SAUVAGES, by the perception of blows or beating repeated at certain intervals. See Flatulence, and Tinnitus Aurium.

BOMBYX MORI, See Sericum.

BON, Coffea Arabica.

BONA, Phascolus vulgaris.

BONE, Os, Osteon, οστεον, (F.) Os. The bones are the solid and hard parts, which form the basis of the bodies of animals, of the superior classes; and the union of which constitutes the skeleton. The human body has at the adult age, 203 bones, without including the 32 teeth, the ossa wormiana and the sesamoid bones. Anatomists divide them, from their shape, into, 1. Long Bones, which form part of the limbs and represent columns, for supporting the weight of the body, or levers of different kinds for the muscles to act upon. 2. Flat Bones, which form the parietes of splanchnic cavities; and, 3. Short Bones, met with in parts of the body, where solidity and some mobility are necessary. Bones are formed of two different textures; the spongy and compact. They afford, on analysis, much phosphate and carbonate of lime, a little phosphate of magnesia, phosphate of ammonia, oxides of iron and manganese, some traces of alumine and silica, gelatine, fat, and water. The uses of the bones are mentioned under each bone. They give shape to the body, contain and defend the viscera: and act as levers to the muscles.

BONNES, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bonnes is a village six leagues from Pau, in the department Basses Pyrénées, France. Here are several thermal springs. They were celebrated as early as the time of FRANCIS I., under the name Eaux d'Arquebusade. They contain muriates of soda and magnesia, sulphates of magnesia and lime, sulphur, and silica. The temperature is from 86° to 90° Fahrenheit.

The factitious Eau de BONNES is made of Hydrosulphuretted water, ℥iv: pure water, ℥ij and ℥ss; muriatic of soda, 30 grains; sulphate of magnesia, 1 grain.

BONNET, Reticulum.

BONNET A DEUX GLOBES, Bonnet d'Hippocrate.

BONNET D'HIPPOCRATE, Cap of Hippocrates, Mitra Hippocratica, Fascia capitulis, Pileus Hippocraticus. A kind of bandage, the invention of which is ascribed to HIPPOCRATES. It consists of a double-headed roller, passed over the head, so as to envelop it, like a cap. The French, also, name it, Bonnet à deux globes, Capeline de la tête.

BONNYCLABBER, from Irish, baine, 'milk,' and clabar, 'mire.' Sour milk.

BONPLANDIA TRIFOLIATA, Cusparia febrifuga

BONUS GENIUS, Peucedanum—b. Henricus, Chenopodium Bonus Henricus.

BOON UPAS, Upas.

BOONA, Phaseolus vulgaris.

BORAC'IC ACID, Ac'idum Borac'icum, Sal sedat'ivus HOMBER'GII, Boric Acid. An acid obtained from Borax, which was once looked upon as sedative. It was also called Acor Borac'icus, Sal vitrioli narcoticum, Sal volat'ile Borac'is, and Flores Borac'is.

BORAGE, Borago officinalis.

BORAGO OFFICINALIS, Buglos'sum verum, Bug. latifolium, Borra'go, Corra'go, Borag. hortensis, Borage, (F.) Bourrache. Nat. Ord. Boraginæ. Ser. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. The leaves and flowers have been considered aperient.

BORAS SUPERSODICUS, Borax.

BORATHRON, Juniperus Sabina.

BORAX, Boras Soda, Subboras Soda, Boras supersaturas soda, Soda Boraxata, Chrysocol'la, Capistrum auri, Subborate of protoxide of Sodium, Subprotoborate of Sodium, Boras Soda alcales'cens seu alcali'num, Boras superso'dicus, Borax Ven'ctus, Subbo'ras Na'tricum, Borax' trion, Nitrum factitium, &c. The Subborate of Soda, (F.) Sous-borate de Soude, Borate saturé de soude. It is found in an impure state in Thibet and Persia. It is inodorous; taste cool, and somewhat alkaline; soluble in 12 parts of water. Borax is seldom used except as a lotion in aphthæ.

The Borate of Mercury has been recommended as an antisyphilitic.

BORAXTRION, Borax.

BORBORYG'MUS, from βορβορυζω, 'I make a dull noise.' Murmur, Motus Intestinalis, (F.) Gargouillement, Grouillement d'Entrailles. The noise made by flatus in the intestines. This happens often in health, especially in nervous individuals.

BORD, (F.) Margo, Edge, Margin. Anatomists have so named the boundaries of an organ. Thus, the bones, muscles, &c. have bords as well as bodies. The 'free edge,' bord libre, is one not connected with any part; the 'adhering edge,' bord adhérent, one that is connected; and the bord articulaire, or 'articular margin, or edge,' that which is joined to another bone.

BORD CILIAIRE, Ciliary margin.

BORDEAUX, MINERAL WATERS OF.

Near this great city, in the south-west of France, is a saline, chalybeate spring. It contains oxide of iron, carbonate and sulphate of lime, muriates of soda and lime, subcarbonate of soda, and sulphate of magnesia.

BORGNE, (F.) Coelus, Uno'culus, Luscus.

One who has only one eye, or sees only with one. The word has been used, figuratively, for blind, in Surgery and Anatomy. See Cæcus.

BOR'OSAIL, Zael. Æthiopian names for a disease, very common there, which attacks the organs of generation, and appears to have considerable analogy with syphilis.

BORRAGO, Borrage officinalis.

BORRI, Curcuma longa.

BORRIBERRI, Curcuma longa.

BORSE, MINERAL WATERS OF. Borse is a village in Béarn. The waters are chalybeate.

BO'SA. An Ægyptian name for a mass, made of the meal of darnel, hempseed, and water. It is inebriating.—Prospero Alpini.

BOSOM. See Mamma.

BOSSE, Hump, Protuberance—b. Nasale, Nasal protuberance.

BOSWELLIA SERRATA. See Juniperus lycia.

BOTAL FORAMEN, Ford'nen Botale; the Ford'men ovale, (F.) Trou de Botal. A large opening, which exists in the fœtus in the partition between the two auricles of the heart; and by means of which the blood passes from one to the other. Its discovery is generally attributed to Leonard Botallus or Botal, who wrote in 1562. It was spoken of, however, by Vesalius, and even by Galen.

BOTANIQUE MÉDICALE, Botany, medical.

BOT'ANY, MEDICAL, Botan'ica Med'ica, Medic'na Botan'ica, from βοτανη, 'an herb,' (F.) Botanique Médicale. The knowledge of the properties, differences, &c., of those vegetables which are used in Medicine.

BOTAR'GO, (F.) Botarguc. A preparation made in Italy and the south of France, with the eggs and blood of the Mugilcephalus or Mullet; strongly salted, after it has become putrescent. It is used as a condiment.

BOTARGUE, Botargo.

BOTHOR. An Arabic term for abscess in the nares. It means, also, tumours in general; especially those which are without solution of continuity.

BOTHRION, from βοθρος, 'a pit, cavity,' &c. An alveolus, (q. v.) or small fossa. A small, deep ulcer on the cornea.—Galen, Paulus of Ægina. See Fossette.

BOTHRIOCEPHALUS or BOTRIOCEPHALUS LATUS, from βοθριον, 'a small pit,' and κεφαλη, 'head,' Tænia lata, T. vulgaris, Lumbr'icus latus, Plate'a, T. o'culus lateralis gem'inis, T. grisea, T. membrand'eca, T. tenella, T. dentata, T. hum'dra inermis, Hal'ysis membrand'eca, T. prima, T. o'culus lateralis solitarius, T. acephala, T. o'culus superficialibus, T. à anneaux courts, Ver solitaire, the Broad Tape Worm. Common in Switzerland, Russia, and some parts of France. It inhabits the intestines of man, and extends to an enormous length. A broken specimen has been obtained 60 yards long.—Gœze.

BOTHRIMUM, Fossette.

BOTHROS, Fovea.

BOTIN, Terebinthina.

BOTIUM, Bronchocele.

BOTOTHINUM. An obscure term, used by Paracelsus to denote the most striking symptom of a disease:—the Flos Morbi.

BOTOU, Pareira brava.

BOTRIOCEPHALUS, Bothriocephalus.

BOTRION, Alveolus.

BOTRYS, Chenopodium botrys, see Vitis vinifera—b. Ambrosioides, Chenopodium ambrosioides—b. Americana, Chenopodium ambrosioides—b. Mexicana, Chenopodium ambrosioides.

BOTTINE, (F.) A thin boot or buskin, O'crea l'vior. An instrument, which resembles a small boot, furnished with springs, straps, buckles, &c., and used to obviate distortions of the lower extremities in children.

BOUBALIOS, Momordica elaterium, Vulva.

BOUBON, Bubo.

BOUCAGE MAJEUR, Pimpinella magna—b. Minor, Pimpinella saxifraga—b. Petit, Pimpinella saxifraga.

BOUCHE, Mouth.

BOUCLEMENT, Infubulation.

BOUES DES EAUX, (F.) Balnea Cano'sa, Boues Minérales. The mud or swamp, formed near mineral springs; impregnated with the substances contained in such springs, and consequently possessing similar properties. The Boues are applied generally and topically, in France, at the springs of St. Amand, Bagnères de Luchon, Bagnols, Baréges,—White Sulphur, Virginia, &c.

BOUES MINÉRALES, Boues des eaux.

BOUFFE, (F.) The small eminence, formed by the junction of the two lips.—Dulaurens.

BOUFFISSURE, Puffiness.

BOUGIE, (F.) A wax candle, Candel'ula, Candel'la e'rica, Candel'la mediet'a, C'cerulm medic'um, Cereolus Chirurgo'rum, Da'dion, Specill'um c'cerum, Virga c'erca, Cercola. A flexible cylinder, variable in size, to be introduced into the urethra, œsophagus, rectum, &c., for the purpose of dilating these canals, when contracted.

A SIMPLE BOUGIE is composed of solid and insoluble substances; as plaster, elastic gum, catgut, &c. It acts of course only mechanically.

A MEDICATED BOUGIE, (F.) B. médicamenteuse, has the addition of some escharotic or other substance to destroy the obstacle; as in the Cautic Bougie, which has a small portion of Lunar Cautic or Common Cautic, inserted in its extremity. Ducamp has recommended a Bougie, which swells out near its extremity for the better dilating of the urethra. This he calls B. à creute. The metallie Bougie, invented by Smyth, is a composition of metal, allowing of great flexibility; and a hollow Bougie is one, with a channel running through it, to be used in the same manner as the catheter, or otherwise.

BOUILLIE, (F.) Pultic'ula, Pap, from (F.) bouillir, 'to boil.' Flour, beaten and boiled with milk. It is a common food for infants.

BOUILLON, (F.) from bouillir, 'to boil,' Jus, Sorbi'tio. A liquid food, made by boiling the flesh of animals in water. The osmazome gelatine, and soluble salts dissolve; the fat melts, and the albumen coagulates. B. is nourishing, owing to the gelatine and osmazome. The Jus de Viande is a very concentrated Bouillon, prepared of beef, mutton, veal, &c.

Bouillons médicinaux ou pharmaceutiques, medicinal or pharmaceutic Bouillons, contain infusions or decoctions of medicinal herbs. The Bouillon aux herbes is generally composed of sorrel or beet.

BOUILLON BLANC, Verbascum nigrum.

BOUILLON, in common language, in France, means a round fleshy excrescence, sometimes seen in the centre of a venereal ulcer.

BOUILLON D'OS, (F.) or Bouillon from Bones, is obtained by treating bones with muriatic acid, in order to dissolve the earthy parts. The gelatine, which remains, is then boiled with a little meat and vegetables.—D'ARCEY. Bouillon, however, can be easily obtained from the bones of roast meat by simple coction.

BOUILLONNEMENT, Ebullition.

BOUIS, Buxus.

BOULE D'ACIER, Ferrum tartarizatum—b. de Mars, Ferrum tartarizatum—b. de Molsheim, Ferrum tartarizatum—b. de Nancy, Ferrum tartarizatum.

BOULEAU COMMUN, Betula alba.

BOULIMIA, Bulim'ia, or Bulim'ius, Bulimosis, Bulimiasis, Bolismos, Fames, cani'na, Appetit'us cani'nus, Appetit'ia cani'na, Adeph'agia, Cynopez'ia, Bupci'na, Phage'na, Phaged'na, Fames Bovi'na, F. Lupi'na, from βovs, 'an ox,' and λιμος, 'hunger;' or from βσ, augmentative particle, and λιμος, 'hunger.' (F.) Bulimie, Faim canine. An almost insatiable hunger. A canine appetite. It is sometimes seen in hysteria and pregnancy; rarely under other circumstances.

BOULIMIE, Bulimia.

BOULOGNE, MINERAL WATERS OF. B. is in the department, Pas-de-Calais, France. The waters are chalybeate.

BOUQUET ANATOMIQUE DE RIOLAN

(F.) from bouquet, a collection of flowers or other substances tied together. A name given, by some Anatomists, to the collection of ligaments and muscles, inserted into the styloid process of the temporal bone.

BOUQUET FEVER, Dengue.

BOURBILLO. See Furunculus (core.)

BOURBON-LANCY, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bourbon-Lancy is a small village in the department of Saône-et-Loire, France; where there are thermal, saline springs, containing carbonic acid, muriate and sulphate of soda, muriate and carbonate of lime, iron, and silica. Their heat is from 106° to 135° Fahrenheit.

BOURBON L'ARCHAMBAUT, MINERAL WATERS OF. This town is in the department of the Allier, and has been long celebrated for its thermal chalybeate waters. They contain muriate and sulphate of soda, magnesia, and lime, carbonate of iron, and silica. Their temperature varies between 140° and 145° Fahrenheit.

BOURBONNE-LES-BAINS, MINERAL WATERS OF. These springs are seven leagues from Langres, department of Haute-Marne, France. They are thermal and saline, and have been long celebrated. Temperature from 106° to 133° Fahrenheit. The Fuctitious water, (F.) Eau de Bourbonne-les-Bains, Aqua Borbonen'sis, is composed of water, containing twice its bulk of carbonic acid,  $\frac{3}{4}$  xxxs; muriate of soda  $\frac{3}{4}$  j, muriate of lime, gr. x, &c.

BOURBOULE, MINERAL WATERS OF. A village near Mont d'Or, where there are two thermal saline springs.

BOURDAINE, Rhamnus frangula.

BOURDONNEMENT (F.) Bruissement, Murmur, Susurrus. A sensation of buzzing or humming in the ear, which may be either dependent on some modified condition of the ear itself, or may be seated in the brain.

BOURDONNET, Tent.

BOURGÈNE, Rhamnus frangula.

BOURGEON, Granulation, Papula—b. Charnu, Granulation.

BOURGEONS, Gutta rosea.

BOURRACHE, Borago officinalis.

BOURRELET (F.) A Pad, a Border. A fibro-cartilaginous border, which surrounds certain articular cavities, such as the glenoid cavity of the scapula and the acetabulum; and by which the depth of those cavities is augmented.

BOURRELET ROULÉ, Cornu ammonis.

BOURSES, LES, Scrotum.

BOURSOULFURE, Puffiness.

BOUTON, Papula—b. d'Allep, see Anthrax—b. d'Or, Ranunculus acris.

BOUTONNIÈRE (F.); Fissu'ra, Incis'io. A small incision made in the urethra to extract a calculus from the canal, when it is too large to be discharged.

Also, a small incision or puncture, made in the peritoneum, or above the pubis, to penetrate the bladder in certain cases of retention of urine.

BOVILLE, Rubeola.

BOVISTA, Lycoperdon.

BOXWOOD, Cornus Florida.

BOYAU, Intestine.

BRABYLON, Prunum Damascenum.

BRACHERIOLUM, Truss.

BRACHERIUM, Truss.

BRACHIÆUS, Brachial—b. Internus, Brachialis anterior.

BRACHIAL, Brachialis, Brachia'us, from Brachium, 'the arm.' What belongs to the arm.

MUSCULUS BRACHIA' LIS ANTE'RIOR, Brachialis internus, Brachia'us, Brachia'us internus, (F.) Muscle brachial interne, Humero-cubital—(Ch.) This muscle is situate at the anterior and inferior part of the arm, and before the elbow-joint. It arises, fleshy, from the middle of the os humeri; and is inserted into the coronoïd process of the ulna. Usc. To bend the forearm.

THE BRACHIAL ARTERY, Arteria brachialis, Humeral Artery, (F.) Artère ou Tronc brachial. The artery, which extends from the axilla to the bend of the elbow; where it divides into A. cubitalis and A. radialis. It passes along the internal edge of the biceps, behind the median nerve and between the accompanying veins. Under the name Brachial Artery, M. Chaussier includes the subclavian, axillary, and humeral; the last being the brachial proper.

THE BRACHIAL VEINS are two in number, and accompany the artery,—frequently anastomosing with each other: they terminate in the axillary. Under the term Brachial Vein, Chaussier includes the humeral, axillary, and subclavian.

BRACHIAL APONEURO'SIS. An aponeurosis, formed particularly by expansions of the tendons of the latissimus dorsi, pectoralis major, and deltoïdes muscles, and which completely envelops the muscles of the arm.

THE BRACHIAL PLEXUS, Plexus Brachialis, is a nervous plexus, formed by the interlacing of the anterior branches of the four last cervical pairs and the first dorsal. It is deeply seated in the hollow of the axilla, and extends as far as the inferior and lateral part of the neck. It gives off the thoracic nerves, supra and infra scapular, and the brachial (which are six in number,) the axillary, cutaneous, musculo-cutaneous, radial, cubital, and median.

BRACHIALE, Carpus.

BRACHIALIS EXTERNUS. See Triceps extensor cubiti.

BRACHIO-CUBITAL, Brachio-cubitalis. That which belongs both to the arm and cubitus. This name has been given to the internal lateral ligament at the elbow-joint; because it is attached to the os brachii or os humeri and to the cubitus or ulna.

BRACHIO-RADIAL, Brachio-radialis. That which belongs to the brachium and radius. This name, has been applied to the external lateral ligament of the elbow-joint, because it is attached to the humerus and to the radius. See Supinator Radii longus.

BRACHIUM, Lacertus, (F.) Bras, the arm. The arm from the shoulder to the wrist, or the part between the shoulder and elbow. See Humeri, Os.

BRACHIUM MOVENS QUARTUS, Latissimus dorsi.

BRACHUNA, Nymphomania, Satyriasis.

BRACHYAU'CHEN, from βραχυς, 'short,' and αυχνη, 'neck.' One who has a short neck.

BRACHYCHRONIUS, from βραχυς, 'short,' and χρονος, 'time.' That which continues but a short time. A term applied to diseases which are of a short duration.—Galen.

BRACHYNSIS, Abbreviation.

BRACHYPNŒA, Dyspnœa.

BRACHYP'OTI, from βραχυς, 'short,' and ποτης, 'drinker.' They who drink little, or who drink rarely.—Hippocr., Galen, Foësius.

BRACHYSMOS, Abbreviation.

BRACING, Corroborant.

BRADYMASE'SIS, Bradymass'esis, from βραδύς, 'difficult,' and μασησις, 'mastication.' Difficult mastication. See Dysmasesis.

BRADYPEP'SIA, Tarda cibo'rum concoctio, from βραδύς, 'slow,' and πεπτω, 'I digest.' Slow digestion.—Galen. See Dyspepsia.

BRADYSPERMATIS'MUS, from βραδύς, 'slow,' and σπερμα, 'sperm.' A slow emission of sperm.

BRADYSU'RIA, Tenc'smus ves'cæ, from βραδύς, 'difficult,' and ουρην, 'to pass the urine.' Painful evacuation of the urine, with perpetual desire to void it.

BRAG'GAT, Braggart. A name formerly applied to a tisan of honey and water. See Hydromeli.

BRAI, LIQUIDE, see Pinus sylvestris—b. Sec, Colophonia.

BRAIN, LITTLE, Cerebellum.

BRAINE, MINERAL WATERS OF.

Braine is a small village, three leagues from Soissons, France, which has purgative waters similar to those of Passy.

BRAKE, COMMON, Pteris aquilina.

BRAMBLE, COMMON, Rubus fruticosus.

BRAN, Furfur.

BRANC URSINE BÂTARDE, Heracleum spondylium.

BRANCA URSINA, Acanthus mollis—b. Germanica, Heracleum spondylium.

BRANCH, from (F.) Branch, originally probably from βραχιον, 'an arm;' because branches of trees, &c., go off like arms. A term, applied, generally, to the principal division of an artery or nerve. The word is commonly used synonymously with Ramus: but often, with the French, Branch signifies the great division;—Rameau, Lat. Ramus, the division of the branches; and Ramuscules, Lat. Ramusculi, the divisions of these last.

The French, also, speak of the branches of the pubis, for the Rami of that bone, branches of the ischium, for the rami of the 1., &c.

BRANCHES DE LA MOELLE ALLONGÉE (PETITES), Corpora restiformia.

BRANCHI or BRANCHÆ. Swellings of the tonsils, or parotid, according to some;—of the thyroid gland, according to others.

BRANCHUS, βραγχος, Raucc'do (q. v.) A catarrhal affection of the mucous membrane of the fauces, trachea, &c.—Galen.

BRANCIA, Vitrum.

BRANDY. (G.) Brantwein, 'burnt wine.' Aqua Vita. (F.) Eau de vie. The first liquid product obtained by distilling wine. It is composed of water, alcohol, and an aromatic, oily matter, which gives it its flavour. Brandy is a powerful and diffusible stimulant, and as such is used in medicine. It has been also called Liquor Aquilegiius. See Spirit.

BRANKS, Cynanche parotidea.

BRANKURSINE, Acanthus mollis.

BRAS, Brachium—b. du Cervelet, Corpora restiformia.

BRASÉGUR, MINERAL WATERS OF. Braségur is a place in the diocess of Rhodéz, where there are cathartic waters.

BRASIUM, Malt.

BRASMOS, Fermentation.

BRASS. Sax. bpaρ, Welsh, près. A yellow metal, formed by mixing copper with calamine. Aurichalcum, Orichalcum, Escavum, Chrysochalcos. (F.) Airain. The same remarks apply to it as to copper. See Cuprum.

BRASSICA. The Cabbage. The Bras'sica oleracea; the B. capitata—cumana of the old Romans. (F.) Chou potager. Family, Cruciferae. Sex. Syst. Tetradymania Siliquosa. Cato wrote a book on its virtues. It is a vegetable by no means easy of digestion when boiled; raw, it appears to be more digestible. When forming a solid globular mass, like a head, it is the B. Capitata, (F.) Chou-Cabus, Chou-Pommé.

BRASSICA CANINA, Mercurialis perennis.

BRASSICA FLORIDA. The Bras'sica Pompeiana of the ancients—the Cauliflower, Caulis Florida, (F.) Chou-fleur, is a more tender and digestible variety.

The Broccoli belongs to this variety, the B. Sabellica of the Romans—B. Italica.

BRASSICA MARINA, Convolvulus soldanella—b. Pompeiana, Brassica Florida.

BRASSICA NAPUS, Rapa rotunda, Rapum majus, Rapa napus, the Turnip. (F.) Chou-navet, Navet, Rave. The turnip is liable to the same objection (but to a less extent) as the cabbage.

BRASSICA NAPUS, NAPUS SYLVESTRIS or BU'NIAS, Rape. (F.) Navette. The seed yields a quantity of oil.

BRASSICA ERUCA, Eruca, Garden Rocket, Roman Rocket, &c. (F.) Chou-Roquette, Roquette. This was considered, by the Romans, an aphrodisiac.—Columella. The seeds were ordinarily used.

BRAITHU, Juniperus sabina.

BRAITHYS, Juniperus sabina.

BRAYER, Truss.

BRAYERA ANTHELMINTICA. An Abyssinian plant, of the Family Rosaceæ. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Digynia. The flowers have been highly extolled as anthelmintic, especially in cases of Tapeworm. They are given in decoction.

BRAZIL WOOD, Cæsalpinia sappan.

BREAD. See Triticum—b. Household, Syncomistos.

BREAD-FRUIT TREE, Artocarpus.

BREAST, Thorax—b. Abscess of the, Mastodynia apostematosa.

BREATH, Halitus, Anhelitus, Animus, Spiritus, Atmos. (F.) Halcine. The air expelled from the chest, at each expiration. It requires to be studied in the diagnosis of thoracic diseases especially.

BREATH, OFFENSIVE; Factor Oris. An offensive condition, which is usually dependent upon carious teeth, or some faulty state of the secretions of the air passages. The internal use of the chlorides may be advantageous.

BREATH, SHORT, Dyspnœa.

BREATHING, DIFFICULTY OF, Dyspnœa.

BRÉCHET (F.) The Brisket. This name is given, in some parts of France, to the cartilago ensiformis, and sometimes to the sternum itself.

BRÉDISSURE (F.) Trismus Capistratus. Incapacity of opening the mouth, in consequence of preternatural adhesion between the internal part of the cheek and gums; often occasioned by the abuse of mercury.

BREDOUILLEMENT (F.) Titubantia. A precipitate and indistinct mode of utterance, in which a part only of the words is pronounced, and several of the syllables viciously changed. This defect is analogous to stuttering, but differs from it in being dependent on too great rapidity of speech; whilst stammering is characterized by continual hesitation, and frequent repetition of the same syllables.

BREGMA, from βρεχειν, 'to sprinkle.' Fontanel'a (q. v.), Sinciput (q. v.) The top of the head was thus called, because it was believed to be humid in infants, and, according to some, because it was conceived to correspond to the most humid part of the brain.

BRENNING, Burning.

BREPHOCTONON, Conyza squarrosa.

BRESILLET, Cæsalpinia sappan.

BRE'VIA VASA, Short Vessels. This name has been given to several branches of the splenic arteries and veins, which are distributed to the great cul-de-sac of the stomach.

BREVIS CUBITI. See Anconeus.

BRIAR, WILD, Rosa canina.

BRICK, (F.) Brique. Hot bricks are sometimes used to apply heat to a part, as to the abdomen in colic, or after the operation for popliteal aneurism: or, reduced to very fine powder, and mixed with fat, as an application to herpetic and psoric affections.

BRICKS, Formæ Testæ, or Tiles, were formerly bruised in vinegar, and the liquid used as a specific in cutaneous affections. They entered, also, into a cerate used for scrofulous tumours, &c.

To the Terra Formæcum, the same virtues were assigned.

BRICUMUM, Artemisia.

BRIDE, (F.) A bridle. Frenulum, Retinaulum. This term is given, in the plural, to membranous filaments, which are found within abscesses or in deep-seated wounds, and which prevent the exit of pus. The term is, also, applied to preternatural adhesions, which occur in cicatrices in the skin, in the urethra, or in inflamed serous or synovial membranes.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEY, see Kidney, Bright's disease of the.

BRIMSTONE, Sulphur.

BRINE, Muria.

BRION, Corallina.

BRIQUE, Brick.

BRIQUEBEC, MINERAL WATERS OF. This town is three leagues from Cherbourg, in France. The water contains muriate of iron.

BRISE-PIERRE ARTICULÉ, (F.) An instrument invented by Jacobson for crushing the stone in the bladder.

BRISTOL HOT WELL, Bristolien'sis Aqua. Bristol is about thirteen miles from Bath, in England. The water is a pure thermal; slightly acidulated. Temperature, 74° Fahrenheit. The Hot Well has been long celebrated. Its action is like that of the thermal waters in general. The climate of Bristol is mild; and hence the water has been celebrated for the cure of incipient pulmonary consumption.

BROAD. Sax. brad, Latus, (F.) Large. Any body is so termed whose transverse extent is considerable compared with its length. The Broad Bones, such as the frontal, parietal, occipital, iliac, aid in forming the parietes of splanchnic cavities. Broad Muscles generally occupy the parietes of cavities, and especially those of the chest and abdomen. The epithet has also been applied to other parts—as to the broad ligaments of the womb, &c.

BROCCOLI, Brassica sabellica.

BROCHOS, βροχος. Laqueus, (q. v.), a bandage.

BROCH'THUS, βροχθους, Gula. The throat. Also, a small kind of drinking-vessel.—Hippocr.

BROCHUS, βροχος. This name has been given to one who has a very prominent upper lip.—Castelli. According to others, it means one, whose teeth project in front of the mouth.

BRO'DIUM. A synonyme of Jus or Jusculum. Broth, or the liquor in which any thing is boiled. Bro'dium Salis—a decoction of salt.

BROIEMENT. See Cataract.

BROKEN-WINEDNESS, Asthma.

BROMA, Aliment.

BROMATOG'RAPHY, from βρομα, 'food,' and γραφη, 'a description.' Bromography A description of aliments.

BROMATOL'OGY, βρομα, 'food,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A treatise on food. Sitiof'ogy.

BROME, Bromine.

BROME'LIA ANA'NAS, Car'duus Brazil'ianus, Ana'nas acosta ova'ta seu aculeatus, Ana'sa, Ca'pa-Isiak'ka, Ana'nas or Pine Apple. A West Indian tree, which produces the most delicious of fruits.

BROME'LIA PINGVIN, Ana'nas America'na, Pinguin, Broad-leaved wild Ana'nas, &c. The West India plant, which affords the Pinguin fruit. The fruit is refrigerant, and the juice, when ripe, very austere. It is used to acidulate punch. A wine is made from the Pinguin, which is very intoxicating, and has a good flavour.

BROMIDE OF IRON, see Bromine—b. of Mercury, see Bromine—b. of Potassium, see Bromine.

BROMINE, Brominum, Brome, a simple body, of a very volatile nature, and highly offensive and suffocating odour, whence its name, from βρομος, 'a stench.' It is met with chiefly in sea-water, and in many animal and vegetable bodies that live therein. It has likewise been found in many mineral waters of this and other countries.

In its chemical relations, it may be placed between chlorine and iodine. With oxygen it forms an acid, the Bromic, and with hydrogen another—the Hydrobromic.

The pure Bromine, the Bromide of Iron, (dose gr. i or ij) and the Bromide of Potassium or Hydrobromate of Potassa, (dose gr. iv to viij in the day,) have been used medicinally, and chiefly in scrofulosis, internally as well as applied externally. Bromine may be dissolved in forty parts of distilled water, and six drops be commenced with, as a dose. The Bromide of Mercury (Hydrar'gyri Bromidum) has been given in syphilis.

BROMOS, βρομος. One of the cerealia, supposed, by some, to be oats, see Avena.

BRONCHIES, Bronchia—b. Ganglions lymphatiques des, Bronchial glands.

BRON'CHIA, Bronchie, Bronchi, from βροχος, 'the throat.' The Latins used the term Bronchus, for the whole of the trachea; whilst they called its ramifications Bronchia. Bronchia, Bronchie, and Bronchi, (F.) Bronches, now mean the two tubes, with their ramifications, which arise from the bifurcation of the trachea, and carry air into the lungs.

BRONCHIA, DILATATION OF THE. Dilated Bronchia. The physical signs of this condition are the following:

Percussion usually clear, but not unfrequently less so than natural, although very seldom quite dull.

Auscultation detects coarse mucous or gurgling rouchi, increased by the cough, combined with, or replaced by, bronchial or cavernous respiration, which is often effected as if by a sudden puff or whiff. The resonance of the voice is increased, but it seldom amounts to perfect pectoriloquy.

The most common situations for dilated bronchia, are the scapular, mammary, or lateral regions. They are almost always confined to one side.

BRONCHIA, OBLITERATION OR COMPRESSION OF THE. The inspiratory murmur on auscultation is weaker or wholly suppressed over a limited portion of the chest; the expiration is generally more distinct and prolonged: all the other conditions are natural.

BRON'CHIAL or BRONCHIC. That which relates to the bronchia.

BRON'CHIAL ARTERIES, (F.) Artères Bronchiques. These are generally two in number, one going to each lung. They arise from the thoracic aorta, and accompany the bronchia in all their ramifications.

BRON'CHIAL CELLS, (F.) Cellules bronchiques, the Air-cells; the terminations of the bronchia.

BRON'CHIAL COUGH, (F.) Toux bronchic, T. tubaire. This generally accompanies bronchial respiration. They both indicate obstruction to the entrance of air into the air-cells.

BRON'CHIAL GLANDS, (F.) Glandes bronchiques ou Ganglions lymphatiques des bronches, are numerous glands of an ovoid shape; of a reddish hue in the infant, and subsequently brown and black, seated in the course of the bronchia. Their functions are unknown. The Bronchial glands may be presumed to be affected by scrofulosis, when, in addition to the existence of tumours in the neck, percussion gives a dull sound under the upper and central part of the sternum, whilst there is no appreciable lesion of the lungs.

The BRONCHIAL VEINS arise from the last divisions of the arteries of the same name, and pass, on the right side, into the vena azygos; on the left, into the superior intercostal.

The BRONCHIAL NERVES, (F.) Nerfs Bronchiques, are furnished by the two pulmonary plexuses.

BRONCHIAL RESPIRATION. See Murmur, Respiratory.

BRONCHIC, Bronchial.

BRONCHITIS, Angina bronchialis. Inflammation of the lining membrane of the bronchial tubes.

This is always more or less present in cases of pulmonary catarrh; and is accompanied by cough, mucous expectoration, dyspnoea, and more or less uneasiness in breathing. The acute form is accompanied with all the signs of internal inflammation, and requires the employment of antiphlogistics followed by re-solvents.

The chronic form may be confounded with phthisis: from which it must be distinguished mainly by the absence of hectic fever and of the physical signs that are characteristic of the latter, as well as by the nature of the expectoration, which is generally mucous, although at times muco-purulent.

Peripneumonia Notha, (q. v.) is nothing more than chronic bronchitis.

BRONCHITIS, Catarrh—b. Asthenica, Peripneumonia notha.

BRONCHIUS, Sterno-thyroideus.

BRONCHLEMMITIS, Polypus bronchialis.

BRONCHOCE'LE, from βρογχος, 'a bronchus,' and κλῆ, 'tumour.' An inaccurate name for the affection which is called, also, Bochium, Botium, Hernia gutturis, Guttur tu'midum, Trachelophyma, Hernia guttura'lis, Thyrocele, Thyrocc'le, Thyremphraxis, Thyreon'eus, Thyron'eus, Thyrophra'ia, Gossum, Erechebronchus, Gongro'na, Struma, Bocium, Hernia bronchia'lis, Tracheloc'le, &c., the Derbyshire neck, Swelled neck, &c., (F.) Goutte, Gouëtre. This is no rupture, but consists of an enlargement of the thyroid gland. It is common at the base of lofty mountains in every part of the world; and has been supposed to be owing to the drinking of snow-water, but it occurs where there is no snow. The tumour is, sometimes, very extensive. Iodine has great power over it, and will generally occasion its absorption, when the case has not been of such duration as to be of a cartilaginous condition.

BRONCHOPHONY, Resonance.

BRONCHOPLAS'TIC, Bronchoplas'ticus; from βρογχος, 'the throat,' and πλασσω, 'I form.' An epithet given to the operation for closing fistulæ in the trachea.

BRONCHOTOME, Bronchol'omus, from βρογχος and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' A kind of lancet, with a blunt and rounded point, mounted on a handle, and fitted to a canula, which passes in along with it, and is allowed to remain in the opening made in the trachea. The instrument is not used.

BRONCHOTOMY, Bronchotomie. Same

etymology. A surgical operation, which consists in making an opening either into the trachea, (Tracheot'omy;) into the larynx, (Laryngot'omy;) or into both, (Tracheo-laryngot'omy;) to extract foreign bodies or to permit the passage of air to the lungs. These different parts are divided transversely or vertically, according to circumstances.

BRONCHUS, Trachea.

BRONKLIME, Veronica beccabunga.

BROOM, Sophora tinctoria, Spartium scoparium—b. Butcher's, Ruscus—b. rape of Virginia, Orobanche Virginiana.

BROSSARDIÈRE, MINERAL WATERS OF. Brossardière is a chateau in Bas-Poitou, France. The waters contain carbonates of iron and lime, muriate of soda, and sulphate of lime. They are aperient.

BROSSE, Brush.

BROW-AGUE, Neuralgia frontalis.

BROUILLARD, Caligo.

BROUSSAIST. One who is a believer in, and professor of, the physiological and pathological opinions of Broussais. The system itself is called Broussaism or the Physiological Doctrine.

BROW, Front.

BROWN RED, Colcothar.

BROWNIAN or BRUNO'NIAN. Relating to the system or opinions of John Brown.

BROWNIISM or BRUNONIANISM. The doctrines of Brown.

BROWNIST or BRUNO'NIAN. A follower of the system of Brown.

BRUCEA ANTI-DYSENTERICA. B. ferrugin'ea, Angustura spuria, (F.) Fausse Angusture, A. Ferrugineuse. The systematic name of the plant, whence is obtained the false Angustura Bark. It affords the Brucine.

BRUCIA, Brucine.

BRUCINE, BRUCIA, BRUCINA. An organic, salifiable base, discovered in the false Angustura—Brucea anti-dysenterica, and obtained from the Strychnos nux vomica. It is of a pearly white; crystallized in oblique prisms with a parallelogrammatic base; very bitter, slightly acid and styptic, and soluble in water, but more so in alcohol.

Brucine is a less active poison than strychnine. It resembles it, however, and may be used as a substitute for the extract of nux vomica. Dose, half a grain.

BRUCOURT, MINERAL WATERS OF. Brucourt is three leagues and a half from Caen in Normandy. The waters contain carbonic acid, muriate and sulphate of soda, much sulphate of lime, &c.

BRUISE, Contusion.

BRUISEWORT, Bellis, Saponaria.

BRUISSEMENT (F.) Frem'itus. This word has much the same signification as Bourdonnement, (q. v.) as well as Bruit.

BRUIT (F.) 'Sound.' A term applied to various sounds heard on percussion and auscultation, viz.

BRUIT DE CRAQUEMENT, B. de Tiraillement, Bruit de cuir neuf, 'sound of crackling, or bursting, or of new leather.' A sound produced by the friction of the pericardium, when dried and roughened by inflammation.

BRUIT DE CUIR NEUF, Bruit de craquement.

BRUIT DE DIABLE, Rouflement de Diable, 'noise of the diable or humming-top.' A high degree of Bruit de soufflet, heard on auscultating the arteries. It denotes an impoverished state of the blood.

BRUIT DE FROTTLEMENT ASCENDANT ET DESCENDANT, 'Sound of friction of ascent and descent.' Sounds said to be produced by the rubbing of the lung against the parietes of the chest, as it rises and falls during inspiration and expiration. They are distinctly heard in pleuritis, when the pleura has become roughened by the disease.

BRUIT HUMORIQUE, B. Hydropneumatique. The sound afforded on percussion when organs are filled with liquid and air.

BRUIT HYDRO-PNEUMATIQUE, Bruit humorique.
BRUIT DE PARCHEMIN, 'Parchment tone.' A sound as if produced by two sheets of parchment applied to each other. It is said to be produced by thickening and rigidity of the valves of the heart.

BRUIT PLACENTAIRE, B. de soufflet placentaire, Placental bellows' sound. The bellows' sound heard on auscultating over the site of the placenta in a pregnant female.

BRUIT DE POT FÊLÉ, 'Sound of a cracked vessel.' This sound is heard on percussion, when a cavern in the lungs is filled with air and has a narrow outlet.

BRUIT DE RACLÉMENT, 'Sound of scraping.' A sound produced by the scraping of a hard, bony substance against the pericardium.

BRUIT DE RAPE, 'Sound of a rasp.' A sound heard during the contraction of either the auricles or ventricles. It is constant; and the contraction of the cavity is more prolonged than natural, and emits a hard, rough, and—as it were—stifled sound.

It indicates contraction of the valvular orifices, by cartilaginous deposits or ossification, and accompanies the contraction of the auricles if the auriculo-ventricular valves are concerned,—that of the ventricles if the semilunar valves be the seat of the disease.

The BRUIT DE SCIE, or 'saw-sound,' and the BRUIT DE LIME À BOIS, or 'file-sound,' resemble the last.

BRUIT DE SOUFFLET, 'bellows sound.' A sound like that of a bellows, heard occasionally by the ear applied to the chest during the contraction of the ventricles, auricles, or large arteries. It coexists with affections of the heart, but is heard, also, without any disease in that organ,—whenever, indeed, an artery is compressed.

An Encephalic bellows' sound has been described by Dr. Fisher, of Boston. It is heard on applying the ear to the occiput or to the top of the head; and is considered to indicate turgescence of vessels, or inflammation. When such turgescence exists, the vessels are compressed, and the compression gives rise to the sound in question.

BRUIT DE SOUFFLET PLACENTAIRE, Bruit placentaire,—b. de Tiraillement, Bruit de craquement.

BRUIT TYMPANIQUE, 'Tympanic sound.' The clear sound afforded by percussing the stomach and intestines when containing air.

BRÛLURE, Burn.

BRUNELLE, Prunella.

BRUNNER'S GLANDS. Brunneri Glandulae, Glandula solitaria. Muciparous follicles of a small size, seated between the mucous and muscular coats of the stomach, along the two curvatures of that organ, and in the small intestines, especially the duodenum; so called from their discovery having generally been attributed to Brunner. See Peyeri Glandulae.

BRUNONIAN, Brownian.

BRUNONIANISM, Brownism.

BRUNUS, Erysipelas.

BRUSCUS, Ruscus.

BRUSH, Scop'ula, (F.) Brosse. A well known instrument, used in Medicine chiefly for the following purposes. 1. To clean the teeth. 2. To remove the sawdust, which adheres to the teeth of the trephine, during the operation of trephining. 3. To rub the surface of the body, for the purpose of exciting the skin, and favouring transpiration. Westring, a Swedish physician, has recommended metallic brushes for the purpose of conveying galvanism to a part. These brushes consist of a plate of ebony fitted to another of gold, in which threads of the same metal are fixed;—the brush being connected with one of the poles of the galvanic pile.

BRUSH, STOMACH, Excuvia ventriculi.

BRUTA, Juniperus sabina.

BRUTIA. A sort of thick pitch, obtained from Brutia in Italy. From the Pix Brutia was obtained the Oleum Picinum.

BRUTIA, Instinct.

BRUTINO, Terebinthina.

BRUXANELI. A Malabar tree, the bark and leaves of which have a strong smell, and are astringent. On the coast of Malabar, its juice, mixed with butter, is applied to boils. Its bark is esteemed to be diuretic, and its roots anti-arthritis.

BRUYÈRE VULGAIRE, Erica vulgaris.

BRUYÈRES, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bruyères is a small village,  $7\frac{1}{2}$  leagues from Luneville. The waters are acidulous and chalybeate.

BRYCHETHMOS, Rugitus.

BRYGMUS, βρυγμος, Stridor Dentium. (q.v.) Grinding of the teeth.

BRYONIA ALBA. White Bryony, Vitis alba sylvestris, Agrostis, Agriampelos, Ampeplos agria, Archeostris, Echetrosis, Bryonia aspera, Cedrositis, Chelidonium, Labrusca, Melothrum, Ophrostaphylon, Psilothrum, Bryonia Dioica. Nat. Ord. Cucurbitaceæ. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Monadelphia, (F.) Coulucrée, Vigne vierge, V. blanche. The root is large and succulent, and has an acrid, bitter, and disagreeable taste. It is a drastic cathartic. Externally, it has been applied, in form of cataplasm, in gout. When repeatedly washed, a good starch is obtained from it. The active principle has been separated from it, and called Bryonine.

BRYONIA MEXICOACANNA NIGRICANS, Convolvulus jalapa—b. Peruviana, Convolvulus jalapa.

BRYONINE. See Bryonia alba.

BRYTIA, Marc of grapes.

BRYTON, Cerevisia.

BU, βου, abbreviation of βους, 'an ox;' in composition expresses, 'excess, greatness.' Hence Bulimus, Buphthalm'a, &c.

BUBASTECORDIUM, Artemisia vulgaris.
BUBE, Pustule.

BUBO, βουβων, Pano'chia, Panus inguinalis, Adenophy'na inguinalis, Bubonop'anus, Camba'ca, Angus, Boubon, Codocelē, Codoscella, (F.) Bubon, Poulain. In the works of Hippocrates and Galen, this word, sometimes, signifies the groin; at others, the inguinal glands; and at others, again, swelling or inflammation of these parts. The moderns apply the term to an inflammatory tumour seated in the groin or axilla, and they generally distinguish, 1. Simple or sympathetic Bubo which is independent of any virus in the economy. 2. Veneral Bubo, (F.) Bubon vénérin which is occasioned by the venereal virus. 3. Pestilential Bubo or B. symptomatic of the Plague. The last two have by some been called the malignant Bubo, (F.) Bubon malin. Primary Bubo, (F.) Bubon primitif, shows itself with the first symptoms of syphilis: the consecutive not till afterwards.

BUBON, Bubo, Inguen—b. Gummiiferum, see Ammoniac gum.

BUBON GAL'BANUM. The systematic name of the plant, which affords the Galbanum. Metopion. The plant is also called Ferala Africa'na, Oreoseli'nam Africa'nam, Ani'sum frates'cam galbanif'eram, Anisam Africa'num frates'cens. The long-leaved or loague-leaved Gal'banum. Nat. Ord. Umbellifera. Galbanum is the gummi-resinous juice of this tree. Its odour is fetid, and taste bitter and acrid: the agglutinated tears are of a white colour, on a ground of reddish brown. It forms an emulsion when triturated with water, and is soluble in proof spirit of wine, and vinegar: s. g. 1.212. It has been given as an antispasmodic, and expectorant, in pill or emulsion. Dose, from gr. 10 to 60. Externally, it is applied as a cataplasma.

BUBON MACEDON'ICUM, Petroseli'nam Macedon'icum, Apium petraeum, Petra'pium, Macedonian Parsley, (F.) Persil de Macédoine. Its properties are similar to those of common parsley, but weaker and less grateful. The seeds are an ingredient in the celebrated compounds—Mithridate and Theriac.

BUBONIUM, Aster Atticas, Golden Starwort. A plant, anciently supposed to be efficacious in diseases of the groin, from βουβων, 'the groin.'

BUBONOCE'LE, from βουβων, 'the groin,' and κηλη, 'tumour,' 'rupture.' Hernia inguinal'lis, In'guinal Hernia or Rupture of the Groin, (F.) Hernie inguinale. Some surgeons have confined this term to hernia when limited to the groin, and have called the same affection, when it has descended to the scrotum, Os'cheocèle or Scrotal Hernia. The rupture passes through the abdominal ring: and in consequence of the greater size of this opening in the male is more frequent in the male sex.

BUBONOPANUS, Bubo.

BUBONOREX'IS, from βουβων, 'the groin,' and ρηξις, 'a rupture.' A name given to bubonoe when accompanied with a division of the peritoneum, or when, in other words, it is devoid of a sac.

BUBONULUS, a diminutive of Bubo, (q. v.) A painful swelling of the lymphatics of the penis, extending along the dorsum of that organ to the groin. It is an occasional accompaniment of Gonorrhœa.

BUCAROS, Terra Portugallica.

BUCCA, Gnathos; the mouth. The cheeks and hollow of the cheeks.

BUCCAC'RATON, from Bucca, and κραω, 'I mix.' A morsel of bread sopped in wine, which served of old for a breakfast—Linden.

BUCCAL, Buccal'is, from Bucca, 'the mouth,' or rather 'the cheek.' That which concerns the mouth, and especially the cheeks.

BUCCAL MEMBRANE, (F.) Membranc Buccale. The mucous membrane, which lines the interior of the mouth.

BUCCAL OR MOLAR GLANDS. Mucous follicles, seated in the buccal membrane, opposite the molar teeth. They secrete a viscid humour, which mixes with the saliva, and lubricates the mouth.

The BUCCAL ARTERY, A. Sus-maxillaire,—(Ch.) arises from the internal maxillary or from some of its branches, as the Temporalis profunda antica, or the Alveolar. It distributes its branches to the buccinator muscle, and to the buccal membrane.

The BUCCAL VEIN follows the artery.

The BUCCAL NERVE or Buccinator Nerve, Bucco-labial—(Ch.) is given off by the inferior maxillary. It sends its branches to the cheek, and especially to the buccinator muscle.

BUCCELAT'ON or BUCCELAT'US. A loaf-shaped cathartic medicine; made chiefly of scammony.—Aëtius, Paulus of Ægina;

BUCCEA and BUCCELLA. The fleshy excrescence of nasal polypus, so called because it was believed to proceed from the mouth.—Paracelsus. Also, a mouthful.

BUCCINA, Turbinated bones.

BUCCINATOR, from Buccina're, 'to sound the trumpet,' The Buccinator Muscle, Retrac'tor An'gali Oris, Bucco-Alvéolo-maxillaire, Alvéolo-labial—(Ch.) Mansor'ius. This muscle is situate in the substance of the cheeks. It extends between the posterior portions of the alveolar arches of the two jaws and the commissure of the lips, which it draws backwards. It assists in mastication, by pushing the food back towards the teeth; and, if the cheeks are distended by air, its contraction forces it out.

BUCCO. One who is blub-cheeked, or wide-mouthed.

BUCCO-ALVÉOLO-MAXILLAIRE, Buccinator.

BUCCO-LABIAL NERVE, Buccal nerve.

BUCCO-PHARYNGEAL, Bucco-pharynge'as, (F.) Bucco-pharyngien. Belonging to the mouth and pharynx. The Bucco-Pharyng'eal Aponeuro'sis, or Intermaxillary Lig'ament, extends from the internal ala of the pterygoid process to the posterior part of the lower alveolar arch, and affords attachment, anteriorly, to the buccinator, and posteriorly to the constrictor pharyngis superior.

BUC'CU'LA, from Bucca, 'the mouth.' A small mouth. The fleshy part beneath the clin.—Bartholine.

BUCCELLATIO. A mode of arresting hæmorrhage, by applying a pledget of lint to the bleeding vessel.—Avicenna, Fallopius.

BUCERAS, Trigonella fœnum.

BUCHU-LEAVES, Diosma crenata.

BUCKBEAN, Menyanthes trifoliata.
 BUCKEYE, Æsculus hippocastanum.
 BUCKET FEVER, Dengue.
 BUCKHO, Diosma crenata.
 BUCNEMIA. See Elephantiasis—b. Tro-pica. See Elephantiasis.
 BUCKTHORN, PURGING, Rhamnus.
 BUCTON, Hymen.
 BUCKWHEAT, Polygonum fagopyrum—b.
 Plant, eastern, Polygonum divaricatum.
 BUFF, INFLAMMATORY, Corium phlogisticum.
 BUG, BED, Cimex.
 BUGANTIA, Chilblain.
 BUGLE, Prunella—b. Common, Ajuga reptans—b. Pyramidale, Ajuga—b. Rampante, Ajuga reptans.
 BUGLOSE, Anchusa officinalis.
 BUGLOSS, Dyer's, Anchusa tinctoria—b.
 Garden, Anchusa officinalis—b. Upright, Ajuga.
 BUGLOSSA, Anchusa officinalis.
 BUGLOSSUM ANGUSTIFOLIUM MA-
 JUS, Anchusa officinalis—b. Latifolium, Bora-go officinalis—b. Sativum, Anchusa officinalis—
 b. Sylvestris, Anchusa officinalis—b. Tinctorium,
Anchusa tinctoria—b. Verum, Boracic acid—b. Vulgare majus, Anchusa officinalis.
 BUGULA, Ajuga.
 BUGRANDE EPLNEUSE, Ononis spinosa.
 BUGRANE, Ononis spinosa—b. des Champis,
Ononis arvensis.
 BUIS, BUXUS.
 BUISARD, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bui-sard is two leagues from Chateau-Thierry, in France. The water contains muriate and carbonate of lime.
 BULB, Bulbus, (F.) Bulbe. A name, given by Anatomists to different parts which resemble, in shape, certain bulbous roots. The Bulb of the Aorta is the great sinus of the Aorta.
Bulb of the Teeth; the vascular and nervous papilla contained in the cavity of the tooth.
 The Bulb or Root of the Hair, is the part whence the hair originates. The Bulb of the Urethra is the dilated portion formed by the commencement of the Corpus spongiosum towards the root of the penis. We say, also, Bulb, for Globe, of the eye.
 BULB, Rachidian. Sec. Medulla oblongata.
 BULBE DE LA VOUTE A TROIS PI-
 LIERS, Mamillary tubercles.
 BULBI PRIORUM CRURUM FORNICIS,
 Mamillary tubercles.
 BULBO CAVERNOSUS, Accelerator urinæ
b. Syndesmo-cavernosus, Accelerator urinæ—b.
Urætral, Accelerator urinæ.
 BULBOCASTANEUM, Bunium bulbocastanum.
 BULBONACH, Lunaria rediviva.
 BULBUS ESCULENTUS; the Esulent
bulb; a particular kind, so denominated by the ancients. It is supposed to have been the Copa
Ascalonia.—Dioscorides, Celsus, Pliny, &c.
 BULBUS VOMITORIVUS. A plant, said by Dios-corides to be emetic and diuretic. It is the Musk-grape flower, according to Ray:—the Hyacinthus Muscari.
 BULIMIA, Boulimia.
 BULLITHOS, from βους, 'an ox,' and λίθος,
 'a stone.' A bezoar or stone, found in the kidneys, gall-bladder, or urinary bladder of an ox or cow.

BULLA. A Bleb. (F.) Bulle. A portion of the cuticle, detached from the skin by the interposition of a transparent, watery fluid. It forms the 4th Order in Willan's and Bateman's arrangement of cutaneous diseases, and includes Erysipelas, Pemphigus, and Pompholyx. By some Bulla has been used synonymously with Pemphigus. See, also, Hydatid.
 BULLACE PLUM, Prunus invitia.
 BULLÆ ROTUNDÆ CERVICIS UTERI,
 Nabothi glandulæ.
 BULLFISTS, Lycoperdon.
 BUMELLIA, Fraxinus excelsior.
 BUNA, Coffea Arabica.
 BUNDURH, Corylus avellana.
 BUNIAS, Brassica napus.
 BUNITES VINUM. A wine, made by infusing the Bunium in must. It is stomachic, but scarcely ever used.
 BUNIMUM BULBOCAS'TANUM. Balanocastanum. The systematic name of a plant, whose root is called the Pig-nut, (q. v.) Agrio-castanum, Nucula terres'tris, Bulbocastaneum,
Bulbocastanum majus et minus, Earth-nut,
Hawk-nut, Kipper-nut, (F.) Terrenoix. The root is tuberous, and is eaten raw or roasted.
 It has been supposed of use in strangury. It is not employed in Medicine.
 BUNNIAN, Bunyon.
 BUNYON, Bun'nian, from βουνος, 'an eminence.'(?) An enlargement and inflammation of the Bursa mucosa at the inside of the ball of the great toe.
 BUPEINA, Boulimia.
 BUPHTHALMI HERBA, Anthemis tinctoria.
 BUPHTHALMIA, Buphtal'mos, from βους,
 'an ox,' and οφθαλμος, 'an eye.' Ox eye.
 Under this name the generality of authors have designated the first stage of hydrophthalmia.
 Others, with Sabatier, mean, by this term, the turgescence of the vitreous humour, which, by pushing the iris forwards, forms around the crystalline a sort of border.
 BUPHTHALMUM MAJUS, Chrysanthemum
leucanthemum.
 BUPHTHALMUM CRETICUM, Anthemis Pyrethrum.
 BUPHTHALMUS, Hydrophthalmia, Sem-pervivum tectorum.
 BUPLEUROIDES, Bupleurum rotundifolium.
 BUPLEU'RUM ROTUNDIFO'LIVM, Bu-pleu'ron, Bupleuroï'des, *Round-leaved Hare's-
 Ear*, or Thorow-wax, (F.) Buplèvre, Percefeuille.
 The herb and seeds are slightly aromatic. It was formerly celebrated for curing ruptures, being made into a cataplasm with wine and oatmeal.
 BUPLEVRE, Bupleurum rotundifolium.
 BURAC, Borax. Also, any kind of salt.
 (Arabic.)
 BURDOCK, Arctium lappa—b. Lesser, Xan-thium.
 BURIS. Hernia, accompanied by scirrhus tumefaction; or, perhaps, a scirrhus tumour only.—Avicenna.
 BURN, Ustio, Ambus'tio, Adus'tio, Tresis
Causis, Erythéma Ambus'tio, Causis, Encar'sis,
Combustura, Catacal'ma, Combustio, (F.) Brûlure. An injury produced by the action of too great heat on the body. Burns are of greater or less extent; from the simple irritation of the integument to the complete destruction of the part. The consequences are more or less severe, according to the extent of injury and the part affected. Burns of the abdomen, when apparently doing well, are sometimes followed by fatal results. Their treatment varies: at times, the antiphlogistic being required: at others, one more stimulating.

BURNEA. See Pinus Sylvestris.

BURNING, or BRENNING. A disease mentioned by old historians, from which authors have unsuccessfully endeavoured to demonstrate the antiquity of syphilis.—Parr.

BURRHĪ SPIRITUS MATRICALIS. The Spirit of Burrhus for diseases of the Womb. It is prepared by digesting, in alcohol, equal parts of myrrh, olibanum, and mastic. BOERHAAVE frequently prescribed it.

BURSA TESTIUM, Scrotum—b. Virilis, Scrotum.

BURSÆ MUCOSÆ, Synovial Crypts or Follicles, (F.) Bourses Synoviales. Small membranous sacs, situate about the joints, particularly about the large ones of the upper and lower extremities, and, for the most part, lying under the tendons. They are naturally filled with an oily kind of fluid, the use of which is to lubricate surfaces over which tendons play. In consequence of bruises or sprains, this fluid sometimes collects to a great extent. The Bursæ are, generally, either of a roundish or oval form, and they have been arranged under two classes, the spherical and vaginal.

BURSALIS, Obturator internus.

BURSERIA GUMMIFERA, Terebinthus gummifera, Jamaica Bark Tree. A resin exudes from this tree, which is solid externally, as met with in the shops: softish internally: of a vitreous fracture: transparent: of a pale yellow colour: turpentine smell, and sweet, perfumed taste. It has been used like the Balsams and Turpentine in general, and is called, by the French, Cachibou, Chibou, and Resine de Goumart.

BURSULA, Scrotum.

BUSSANG, MINERAL WATERS OF. Bus-sang is a village in the department of Vosges, France. The waters are slightly chalybeate.

BUSSEROLLE, Arbutus uva ursi.

BUSSII SPIRITUS BEZOARTICUS. The Bezoardic Spirit of Bussius. A preparation, regarded as sudorific, diuretic, and antispasmodic: obtained by distilling subcarbonate and muriate of ammonia, amber, oil of cedar or juniper, &c.

BUTEA FRONDOSA. See Kino.

BUTIGA, Gutta rosea.

BUTOMON, Iris pseudacorus.

BUTTER, Butyrum, Pice'ron, (F.) Beurre. A sort of concrete oil, obtained from the cream, which forms on the surface of the milk furnished by the females of the mammalia; especially by the cow and the goat. Fresh butter is very nutritious, whilst the rancid is irritating. The ancient chemists gave the name Butter to many of the metallic chlorides. It has also been applied to vegetable substances, which resemble, in some respects, the butter obtained from milk.

BUTTER OF BAMBOUC or BAMBUC, (F.) Beurre de Bambouc ou Bambuk. A vegetable oil obtained from a species of almond, and used in Senegal in neuralgic and rheumatismal pains.

BUTTER OF CACAO, Oil of Cacao, Oleum Cacao spissatum, O. Theobroma Cacao expressum, (F.) Beurre de Cacao, Huile de Cacao. A fat substance of a sweet and agreeable taste, obtained from the Theobroma cacao, or Chocolate Nut.

BUTTER OF COCOA, (F.) Beurre de Coco. A fatty, concrete substance, which separates from the milk of the Cocoa nut. It is sweet and agreeable.

BUTTERBUR, Tussilago petasites.

BUTTERCUPS, Ranunculus acris.

BUTTERFLYWEED, Asclepias tuberosa.

BUTTERMILK, (F.) Babeurre, Lait de Beurre. The thin, sour milk, separated from the cream by churning. It contains caseum and a little butter. It is a refreshing drink when newly made.

BUTTERWORT, Pinguicula vulgaris.

BUTUA, Pareira brava.

BUTYRUM, BUTTER—b. Amygdalarum dulcium, Confection (almond)—b. Saturni, Unguentum plumbi superacetatis—b. Zinci, Zinci chloridum.

BUVEUR, Rectus internus oculi.

BUXTON, MINERAL WATERS OF, Buxtonien'ses Aquæ. Buxton is a village in Derbyshire. The springs are thermal, and about 82° Fahrenheit. They are used in cases in which thermal springs, in general, are recommended. They contain little or no mineral impregnation.

BUXUS, Buxus sempervirens. The Box-tree. (F.) Buis ou Bouis. The leaves are bitter and aromatic, and, as such, have been used in medicine, in cases of worms, dyspepsia, &c., in the form of decoction. They are sometimes, also, added to beer. The seed was anciently called Carthégon.

BYRE'THRUM. A sort of cap or Couvre-chef, filled with cephalic substances.—Forestus.

BYRSA, βορσα. A leather skin to spread plasters upon.

BYRSODEP'SICON. A Tan stuff, with which CÆLIUS AURELIANUS sprinkled wool, which he applied in certain cases to the umbilical region: from βορσα, 'leather,' and δεψωω, 'I tan.'

BYSAU'CHEN, from βωω, 'I stop up,' and αυχιρ, 'the neck.' A morbid stiffness of the neck.

BYSSOS, Vulva.

BYSSUS or BYSSUM. The ancients gave this name to several vegetable substances, which were used for the fabrication of stuffs, prized for their fineness, colour, and rarity of the material. It is now chiefly applied to the filaments, by the aid of which the acephalous mollusca attach their shells to the rocks. B. was formerly also applied to the femur pulendum.

BYTHOS, βυθος, 'depth.' An epithet used by HIPPOCRATES for the fundus of the stomach.

C

C. This letter in the chemical alphabet signifies Nitric. It is also sometimes used in prescriptions for Calx.

CAA-APIA, Dorstenia Brazilianensis. The root, according to Piso, is employed as emetic and anti-diarrhœic.

CAA-ATAY'A. A plant of Brazil, supposed to be a species of Gratiola. It is very bitter, and considered to be one of the best indigenous cathartics.

CAACICA, Euphorbia capitata.

CAA-GHIYU'YO, Frutex bacifer Brazilianensis. A shrub of Brazil, whose leaves, in powder, are considered detersive.

CAAOPIA, Hypericum bacciferum.

CAAPEBA, Fareira brava.

CAAPONGA, Crithmum maritimum.

CAA'ROBA. A Brazilian tree, whose leaves, in decoction, promote perspiration.—See Cerantonia.

CABAL, Cab'ala, Cabal'la, Cal'bala, Cabalia, Kabala, Gaballa. This word is from the Hebrew, and signifies knowledge transmitted by tradition. Paracelsus and several authors of the 16th and 17th centuries have spoken much of this species of magic, which they distinguished into Judaic or Theologian, and hermetic or medicinal; the latter being, according to them, the art of knowing the most occult properties of bodies by an immediate communication with spirits:—the knowledge being thus acquired by inspiration, and incapable of inducing error. It was also called Ars cabalistic, 'cabalistic art.'

CABAL/HAU. A plant of Mexico, according to Dalechamps, which passes for an antidote to white hellebore, and yet is used for poisoning arrows. It is unknown to botanists.

CABALIST, Cabalista. One instructed in the Cabal.

CABALLATION, Cynoglossum.

CABARET, Asarum.

CABBAGE, Brassica—c. Skunk, Dracontium fetidum—c. Tree, Geoffræa inermis—c. Bark tree, Geoffræa inermis.

CABUREIBA, Myroxylon Peruiferum.

CABUREICIBA. See Myroxylon Peruiferum.

CAC'AGOGUE, Cacago'gus, from [κακκν, 'excrement,' and αγειν, 'to expel.' An ointment, composed of alum and honey; which, when applied to the anus, produced an evacuation.—Paulus of Ægina.

CACA'LIÀ ANTEUPHOR'BIUM, Anteuphor'bium. A plant, which Dodoens and others considered to be capable of tempering the caustic properties of the euphorbium. It is also called Kleinia.

Many varieties of the Cacalia are used, in different countries, chiefly as condiments.

CA'CAO, Ca'coa, Co'coa, Cacavif'era, Cacavi, Quahôil, Caca'da. The Cocoa or Chocolate Nut; the fruit of the Thaëbro'ma; Family, Malvaceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyadelphia Pentandria.

CACATION, Defecation.

CACATORIA, Diarrhœa.

CACAVATA, Cacao.

CACAVI, Cacao, Jatropha manihot.

CAC'ATORY, Cacato'rius, from caca're, 'to go to stool.' Febris cacato'ria; a kind of intermittent fever, accompanied by copious alvine evacuations.—Sylvius.

CACCE, Excrement.

CACCION'DE. A sort of pill, chiefly formed of catechu, recommended by Baglivi in dysentery.

CACHANG-PARANG. A sort of bean of Sumatra, mentioned by Marsden, whose seeds are given in pleurisy. Jussieu considers it to be the Mimosa scandens.

CACHECTIC, Cachecticus, same etymon as Cachexia. One attacked with cachexia. Belonging to cachexia. Cachectica remedia, are remedies against cachexia.

CACHEN LAGUEN, Chanchalagua, Chironia chilensis.

CACHEX'IA, from κακος, 'bad,' and ἕξις, 'habit.' Status cachecticus. A condition in which the body is evidently depraved. A bad habit of body; chiefly the result of scorbutic, cancerous, or venereal diseases when in their last stage. Hence we hear of a Scorbutic C., Cancerous C., &c. Sauvages and Cullen have included under this head a number of diseases—consumptions, dropsies, &c. Cachexia has been sometimes confounded with diathesis. The *Cachexia Icteric*a is jaundice or icterus itself, or a disposition thereto. The fluor albus is sometimes called Cachexia Utrina.

CACHEXIA AFRICANA, Chthonophagia.

CACHEXIA ALBA, Leucorrhœa—c. Calculosa, Lithia.

CACHEXIA, CHLOROTIC, Chlorosis—c. *Icteric*a, Icterus—c. Scrophulosa, Scrofula.

CACHEXIA SPLENICA. The state of scorbutic Cachexia, which often accompanies diseases of the spleen, especially in India.—Twining.

CACHEXIA VIRGINUM, Chlorosis.

CACHIBOU. See Bursaria gummifera.

CACHINNA'TTO, from cachin'no, 'I laugh aloud.' A tendency to immoderate laughter, as in some hysterical and maniacal affections.

CACHIRI. A fermented liquor made, in Cayenne, from a decoction of the rasped root of the manioc. It resembles perry.

CACHLEX. A small stone or pebble, found on the sea-shore. One of these, when heated in the fire, and cooled in whey, communicates an astringency to the liquid, so that it was anciently esteemed to be useful in dysentery.—Galen.

CACHOS. An Oriental fruit, apparently of a Solanum, which is esteemed lithontriptic.

CACHOU, Catechu.

CACHRY'S LIBANO'TIS. An umbelliferous plant, which grows in Africa and the South of Europe. It is aromatic and astringent. Its seeds are extremely acrid.

CACHUN'DE. An Indian troch or pastile composed of amber, mastic, musk, cinnamon, aloes, rhubarb, galanga, pearls, rubies, emeralds, garnets, &c. It is regarded by the people of India as an antidote, stomachic, and antispasmodic.

CACO-ALEXITERIA, Alexipharmic.

CACOCHO'LIA, from κακος, 'bad,' and χολη, 'bile.' Diseases induced by a depraved condition of the bile.

CACOCROI, from κακος, 'bad,' and χρως, 'colour.' Diseases in which the complexion is morbidly changed in colour.

CACOCHYL'IA, from κακος, 'bad,' and χυλος, 'chyle.' Depraved chyfication.

CACOCHYM'IA, Corruptio Humorum, from κακος, 'bad,' and χυμος, 'juice,' 'humour.' Deprivation of the humours.

CACOCYH'IA VENEREA, Syphilis.

CACOCYHM'US, Cacochymicus. One attacked with cacochymia. Belonging to cacochymia.

CACOCNE'MOS, Malis suris præditus; from κακος, 'bad,' and πημη, 'the leg.' One who has bad legs.

CACOCORE'MA, from κακος, 'bad,' and κορεω, 'I purge, or cleanse.' A medicine which purges off the vitiated humours.

CACODÆ'MON, from κακος, 'bad,' and δαίμων, 'a spirit.' An evil spirit, to which were ascribed many disorders. The Nightmare.

CACODIA, Anosmia.

CACOËTHES, from κακος, 'bad,' and ἦθος, 'disposition, habit,' &c. Of a bad or vitiated character.

CACOGALACT'IA, from κακος, 'bad,' and γαλα, gen. γαλακτος, 'milk.' A bad condition of the milk.

CACOMORPH'IA, Deformation.

CACOPATH'IA, Passio Mala, from κακος, 'bad,' and παθος, 'affection.' A distressed state of mind.—Hippocr.

CACOPHO'NIA, from κακος, 'bad,' and φωνη, 'the voice.' A dissonant condition of voice:—vitiosa vox.

CACOPRA'GIA, from κακος, 'bad,' and πραττω, 'I perform.' Depraved condition of the chylipoietic organs.

CACORRHACHI'TIS, from κακος, 'bad,' and ραχις, 'the spine.' Cacorrhachis, Spondylia. Deformity of the spine. Disease of the spine. Spontaneous luxation of the vertebrae and ribs dependent upon internal causes.

CACORRHATH'MUS, Arrhythmus, from κακος, 'bad,' and ρυθμος, 'rhythm,' 'order.' Irregular.

CACOS'IS. Vice, Mala dispositio. A bad condition of body.—Hippocr.

CACOSIT'IA, from κακος, 'bad,' and σιτιον, 'aliment.' Disgust or aversion for food.—Fastidium ciborum.

CACOSOMIUM, from κακος, 'bad,' and σωμα, 'the body.' An hospital for leprosy, and incurable affections.

CACOSPIRYX'IA, from κακος, 'bad,' and σπυρις, 'pulse.'—Vitiosus pulsus. Bad state of pulse.—Galen.

CACOSTOM'ACHUS, from κακος, 'bad,' and στομαχος, 'the stomach.' What disagrees with the stomach. Indigestible.—Gorræus.

CACOSTOMUS, from κακος, 'bad,' and στομα, 'a mouth.' Having a bad mouth.

CACOTHYM'IA, Vitium Animi, from κακος, 'bad,' and θυμος, 'mind,' 'disposition.' A vitious state of mind.—Linden.

CACOTRIBULUS, Centaurea calcitrapa.

CACOTROPH'IA, from κακος, 'bad,' and τροφη, 'nutrition.'—Vitiosa nutritio;—disordered nutrition.—Galen.

CACOU, Cagot, Catechu.

CACOU'CIA COCCIN'EA, Coccinea Coccinea, Schousbaea coccinea, Tikimma. A perennial twining shrub of South America; the plant of which, as well as the fruit, is possessed of emeto-cathartic properties.

CACTEÆ, Cactus opuntia.

CACTUS OPUN'TIA, Opuntia. The Indian Fig, (F.) Cactier, Raqette, Figurier d'Inde. This plant grows in South America, Spain, Italy, &c. Its fruit, which has the shape of the fig, is of a sweetish taste, and colours the urine red when eaten. Its leaves are considered refrigerant.

CADA'BA, Stroëmia. A genus of the family Capparideæ, natives of India and Arabia. The young shoots of the Cada'ba furino'su are considered to be an antidote against venomous bites.

CADA'VER, Ptoma, Necron, νεκρον. A dead body; a subject; a carcass, (F.) Cadavre. The word has been supposed to come from cadō, 'I fall;' and by some, to be a contraction from caro data vermis, 'flesh given to the worms!'

CADAV'EROUS, Cadaverosus, Necrodes. (F.) Cadavreux. Belonging to the dead body; as cadaverous smell. The Cadaverous or Hippocratic face (see Face) is an unfavourable sign in disease, and generally denotes a fatal termination.

CADEJI-INDI, Malabathrum.

CADEL-AVANACU, Croton tiglium.

CADIA. An Egyptian, leguminous plant. The Arabs attribute to its fresh leaves the power of relieving colic.

CAD'MIA, Calamina, Tutia.

CAD'MII SULPHAS, Cadmium Sulphuricum, Sulphas Cadmicus, Melli ni Sulphas, Klaprothii Sulphas, Klaprothium Sulphuricum, Mellinum Sulphuricum, Sulphate of Cadmium. Used in spots on the Cornea, and in chronic torpid inflammation of the conjunctiva, in the quantity of half a grain to a grain to the ounce of water.

CADMIUM SULPHURICUM, Cadmii Sulphas.

CADTCHU, Catechu.

CADUCA HUNTERI, Decidua.

CADU'CIETY, Imbecillitas, Debil'itas, Caducitas. The French use the word Caducité, for the portion of human life, which is comprised generally between 70 and 80 years. The age, which precedes decrepitude. It is so termed in consequence of the limbs not usually possessing sufficient strength to support the body. The precise age must of course vary in individuals.

CADUS, καδο. A Greek measure, equal to ten gallons English.—Pliny.

CADUS, Amphora.

CÆCAL, Cæcalis. Belonging to the caecum, from cæcus, 'blind, hidden.' The Cæcal arteries and veins, are the branches of the Arteria et vena colicæ dextræ inferiores, distributed to the caecum.

CÆCATRIX, Cicatrix.

CÆCITAS, Blindness, Anap'sia, Typhlotes, Typhlosis, (F.) Accuement, Cécité. C. may be dependent upon many different diseases,— as upon amaurosis, specks, hypopyon, cataract, glaucoma, ophthalmia, atrophy of the eye, &c.

CÆCITAS CREPUSCULARIS, Hemeralopia—c. Diurna, Nyctalopia.

CÆCUM or CŒCUM, Intesti'nium cæcum, Monom'achon, Monocolon, Monocolum, Typhloteron monocolon, Inti'tium intesti'ni crassi, Saccus, Cæcum Caput Coli, Prima cella coli, from cæcus, 'blind.' The Blind Gut, so called from its being perforated at one end only. That portion of the intestinal canal, which is seated between the termination of the ileum and commencement of the colon; and which fills, almost wholly, the right iliac fossa: where the peritoneum retains it immovably. Its length is about 3 or 4 fingers' breadth. The Ileo-cæcal valve or Valve of Bauhin shuts off all communication between it and the ileum; and the Appendix vermiformis cæci is attached to it.

CÆCUS. 'Blind.' One deprived of sight. (F.) Aveugle, Borgne. In anatomy, it is used to designate certain holes or cavities, which end in a cul-de-sac; or have only one opening.

The FORAMEN CÆCUM of the frontal bone is a small cavity at the inferior extremity of the internal coronal crest or crista—Fronto-ethmoidal foramen—(Ch.), (F.) Trou aveugle ou borgne. Morgagni has given the same name to the small cavity, in the middle of the upper surface of the tongue, near its base; the sides of which are furnished with mucous follicles—Lacune de la langue—(Ch.)

HÉMORRHOÏDES CÆCÆ, Blind Piles, (F.) Hémorrhoides aveugles, are those unaccompanied by any discharge.

BLIND DUCTS of the Ure'thra, (F.) Conduits aveugles de l'urèthre, are the Mucous Lacu'næ of the Ure'thra.

The FORAMINA CÆCA,—ANTERIOR ET POSTERIOR, are situate at the fore and back parts of the tuber annulare of the brain, and at the extremities of the depression made by the vertebral artery. The former is placed between the nerves of the 3d, and the latter between those of the 6th pair.

CÆLA-DOLO, Torenia Asiatica.

CÆMENTUM, Lute.

CÆRULEUM BEROLINENSE, Prussian blue—c. Borussicum, Prussian blue.

CÆRULOSIS NEONATORUM, Cyanopathy.

CÆSALPINIA SAPPAN, (F.) Brèsillet. Bois de Sappan. A small Siamese tree, the wood of which is used in decoction, in cases of contusion.

The Brazil wood or Fernambuco wood, formerly used as an astringent, is the wood of the Cæsalpin'ia echina'ta.

The kernel of the Cæsalpin'ia Bonducell'a, the seed of which is called in India Kutkulca and Kutoo Kurunja is given as a febrifuge tonic. Dose ten grains.

CÆSAREAN SECTION or OPERATION, Tomoto'cia, Cæsarea sectio, Partus cæsareus, Operatio cæsarea, Metrotom'ia, from cadere, 'to cut.' An incision made through the parietes of the abdomen and uterus to extract the fœtus. In this manner Julius Cæsar is said to have been extracted.—Pliny. It is also called Hysteroto'mia, Hysterotomato'cia, and Gastrohysterot'omy, (F.) Opération Cæsarienne.

An incision has been made into the uterus through the vagina; constituting the Vaginal Cæsarean Section, (F.) Opération cæsarienne vaginale.

The Cæsarean Section may be required when the mother dies before delivery;—when there is some invincible obstacle to delivery, from the faulty conformation of the pelvis; or when the child has passed into the abdominal cavity in consequence of rupture of the uterus.

CÆSARIES, Capillus.

CÆSIUS, Glaucoma.

CÆSONES, CÆSARES. Children brought into the world by the Cæsarean operation.

CÆSULLÆ. They who have gray eyes.

CÆSURA, Cut.

CÆTCHU, Catechu.

CAF, Camphor.

CAFAL, Agrimony.

CAFAR, Camphor.

CAFÉ, Coffea.

CAFÉ A LA SULTANE. This name has been given to an infusion or decoction of the ground coques or pericarps which surround the coffee.

CAFÉ CITRIN. The aqueous infusion of unroasted coffee, so called on account of its yellowish tint.

CAFEEYER, Coffea Arabica.

CAFFA, Camphor.

CAFIER, Coffea Arabica.

CAGAS'TRUM. The principle or germ of diseases, which are communicable. Paracelsus.

CAGNEUX, Cagot. See Kyllosis.

CAGOSANGA, Ipecacuanha.

CAGOT, (F.) A name given to deformed and miserable beings, met with in the Pyrenees, Bearn, and Upper Gascony in France, where they are also called Capots. In other districts they are called Gézits, Gézitains, Crétins, Gahets, Capons, Coliberts, Cucous, Cagnoux, &c. See Crétin. The word Cagot is supposed to be an abbreviation of Canis Gothus, 'Dog of a Goth.'

CAHINCÆ RADIX, Caincæ radix.

CAJEPUTI or CAJ'EPUT, OIL OF. Kajaputty, Cajuputi Oleum, Melaleuca Leucodendri Oleum. The oil has a strong smell, fragrant, like camphor; taste pungent and aromatic: limpid. It is stimulant, and useful where the essential oils in general are employed. It has also been called Oil of Witneben, from the person who first distilled it.

CAILLE, Tetrao coturnix.

CAILLEBOTTE Curds.

CAILLELAIT BLANC, Galium mollugo—c. Vraie, Galium verum.

CAILLOT, Coagulum.

CAINANE RADIX, Caincæ radix.

CAINCÆ RADIX, Radix Chiococ'cæ, R. Cainanæ, Caninana, Cahinca, Kahinca, Serpent'rie Brazilien'sis, Cainca Root. The bark of the root of the Chiococ'ca anguif'uga, a plant of the Family Rubiaceæ, Sec. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia, of Linnæus. It is bitter, tonic, and diuretic, but has not been long introduced. Dose of the powder from ʒj to ʒss.

Dr. John H. Griscom, of New York, considers there is a remarkable analogy between the Cainca and the Apoecium cainabinum.

CAINITO, Chrysophyllum Cainito.

CAIPA SCHORA. A cucurbitaceous Malabar plant, the fruit of which has a pyriform shape. The juice is drunk in that country for the purpose of arresting hiccough. The fruit, when unripe, is emetic.

CAISSE. Casc—c. du Tambour, Tympanum.

CAITCHU, Catechu.

CAJAN, Phaseolus creticus.

CAJUPUTI, Cajeput.

CALABASH TREE, NARROW-LEAVED, Crescentia Cujete.

CALAF, Salix Ægyptiaca. A large-leaved Egyptian willow, called, also, Ban. The distilled water of the flowers, called Maeahalef, passes, in that country, for an excellent antiphrodisiac. It is also used as an antiloimic antiseptic, and cordial.

CALAGERI, Vernonia anthelmintica.

CALAGIRAH, Vernonia anthelmintica.

CALAGUALÆ RADIX, Calague'la Radix. The root of the Polypodium Calagua'la, or Aspidium cori'æcum. It has been exhibited in Italy in dropsy, pleurisy, contusions, abscesses, &c. Its properties are not, however, clear.

CALAMBAC, Agallochum.

CALAMANDRINA, Teucrium chamædryis.

CALAMBOUK, Agallochum.

CALAME'DON, from καλαμος, 'a reed.'

This word has had various significations. Some have used it for an oblique fracture of a bone; the fractured portions having the shape of the nib of a pen. Others have used it for a longitudinal fracture, and others, again, for one that is comminuted.—Dictionaries.

CALAMINA, Calamine, from calamus, 'a reed,' so called from its reed-like appearance. Cadmia, Cathmir, Cadmia lapido'sa aëro'sa, Cadmia Fos'silis, Lapis Aëro'sus, Calim'ia, Lapis Calaminaris, Calaminaris, Car'bonas Zincii impu'rus, (F.) Pierre calaminaire, P. c. préparée. Calamine is chiefly used for pharmaceutical purposes in the form of the CALAMINA PRÆPARATA, Lapis Calaminaris præparatus, Car'bonas zincii impu'rus præparatus, Præparé Calamine;—Calamine reduced to an impalpable powder by roasting. In this state it is sprinkled or dusted on excoriated parts, or to prevent excoaration, &c.

CALAMINARIS, Calamina.

CALAMINTA HUMILIOR, Glechoma hederacea.

CALAMUS ALEXANDRINUS. Celsus has thus called a medicine, which was long confounded with the Calamus Aromaticus. It is not a root, however, but the stalk of a plant of India and Egypt, probably the Andropogon Nardus. It entered into the theriaca, and has been regarded antihysterical and emmenagogue; Calamus aromaticus verus.

CALAMUS AROMATICUS, Acorus calamus—c. aromaticus verus, Calamus Alexandrinus—c.

Indicus, see Saccharum—c. Odoratus, Acorus calamus, Juncus odoratus.

CALAMUS ROTANG. The systematic name of a plant, whence the Dragon's Blood, Sanguis Draco'nis, is obtained. The Cinnabaris Græcorum, Drucontha'ma, (F.) Sang-Drac'on. It is the red, resinous juice, obtained, in India, from wounding the bark of the Calamus Rotang. It has been used as an astringent in hemorrhages, &c.; but is now rarely employed.

CALAMUS SACCHARINUS, see Saccharum.

CALAMUS SCRIPTORIUS, Anaglyphæ, Rhomboïdal Sinus. A Writing pen, (F.) Fossette angulaire du quatrième ventricule. A small, angular cavity, situate at the superior extremity of the medulla, in the fourth ventricle of the brain, which has been, by some, supposed to resemble a pen.

CALAMUS VULGARIS, Acorus calamus.

CALAPPITE. Rumphius has given this name to calculeous concretions, found in the interior of some cocoa nuts. The cocoa tree itself the Malays call Calappa. These stones are, likewise, termed Vegetable Bezoards. The Malays attribute potent virtues to them, and wear them as amulets.

CALASAYA, Cinchonæ cordifoliæ cortex.

CALBALA, Cabal.

CALBIANUM. The name of a plaster in Myrepsus, the composition of which we know not.

CALCADINUM, Ferri sulphas.

CALCAIRE, Calcareus.

CALCANEO-PHALANGIEN DU PETIT ORTEIL, Abductor minimi digiti pedis—c. Phalangien commun, Extensor brevis digitorum pedis—c. Sous-phalangien commun, Flexor brevis digitorum pedis—c. Sous-phalangien commun, Flexor brevis digitorum pedis—c. Sous-phalangien du petit orteil, see Abductor minimi digiti pedis—c. Sous-Phalangien commun, Extensor brevis digitorum pedis.

CALCA'NEUM, from calx, 'the hecl.' Calcæneus, Calcar, Os Calcis, Pierna. The largest of the tarsal bones; that which forms the heel. It is situate at the posterior and inferior part of the foot; is articulated above and a little anteriorly with the astragalus; anteriorly, also, with the os cuboides. Its posterior surface, called Hecl, Talus, Calx, (F.) Talon,—gives attachment to the tendo achilles: the lower has, posteriorly, two tuberosities, to which the superficial muscles of the sole of the foot are attached. The small Apophysis or lateral Apophysis of the Calcæneum, (F.) Petite Apophyse ou Apophyse latérale du Calcæneum, is a projection at the upper surface of this bone, on which is formed the posterior portion of the cavity, that receives the astragalus. The great Apophysis or anterior Apophysis of the Calcæneum is the projection, which corresponds, on one side, with the cuboides; and on the other forms the anterior part of the facette, which receives the astragalus.

CALCANTHON, Atramentum.

CALCAR, Calcancum, Ergot.

CALCA'REOUS, Calcærius, from calx, 'lime.' (F.) Calcaire. Containing lime:—as calcareous concretions, C. depositions, &c.

CALCAREUS CARBONAS, Creta.

CALCARIA CHLORATA, Calcis chlori-

dum—c. Chlorica, Calcis chloridum—c. Phosphorica, see Cornu cervi—c. Pura, Calx—c. Pura liquida, Liquor calcis.

CALCARIÆ CHLORUM, Calcis chloridum.

CALCATOR, Ferri sulphas.

CALCATREPPOLA, Centaurea calcitrapa.

CALCENA, CALCE'NON, CALCENONIA, CALCINO'NIA. Words employed by Paracelsus, to designate the concretions of tartrate of lime, which form in the human body.

CALCENOS, Calcetus.

CALCEOLA'RIA, from calceolus, 'a small slipper;' Slipperwort.

The CALCEOLA'RIA PRIMATA is used in Peru as a laxative.

The CALCEOLA'RIA TRIF'IDA is esteemed to be febrifuge.

CALCE'TUS, Calceno'nus, Calc'e'nos. That which abounds in tartrate of lime. An adjective used, by Paracelsus, in speaking of the blood; Sanguis calc'e'tus. Hence came the expression Calcined blood, Sang calciné.

CALCEUM EQUINUM, Tussilago.

CALCIG'RADUS, Pternobates, from Calx, πέτρα, 'the heel,' and βαίω, 'I walk.' One who walks on his heels.—Hippocr.

CALCII CHLORURETUM, Calcis chloridum—c. Oxychloruretum, Calcis chloridum—c. Oxydum—c. Calx viva—c. Protohydrosulfate de, Calcis sulphuretum—c. Protochloruretum, Calcis chloridum.

CALCIGEROUS CELL, see Tooth.

CALCINA'TION, Calcina'tio, Calc'e'non, Concrema'tio, from calx, 'lime.' The act of submitting to a strong heat any infusible mineral substance: which we are desirous of depriving either of its water, or of any other volatilizable substance, that enters into its composition; or which we wish to combine with oxygen. Alum is calcined to get rid of its water of crystallization;—chalk, to reduce it to the state of pure lime, by driving off the carbonic acid; and certain metals are subjected to this operation to oxidize them.

CALCINATUM MAJUS POTERII, Hydrargyrum præcipitatum.

CALCINONIA, Calcena.

CALCIS BICHLORURETUM, Calcis chloridum—c. Carbonas, Creta—c. Hepar, Calcis sulphuretum—c. Oxymurias, Calcis chloridum.

CALCITEA, Ferri sulphas.

CALCITEOSA, Plumbi oxydum semivitreum.

CALCITHOS, Cupri subacetas.

CALCITRAPA, Centaurea Calcitrapa—c. stellata, Centaurea calcitrapa.

CALCITRAPPA, Delphinium consolida.

CALCIUM, PROTOXI-CHLORURETUM, Calcis chloridum—c. Protoxide of, Calx.

CALCO-SUBPHALANGEUS MINIMI DIGITI, Abductor minimi digiti pedis—c. Subphalangeus pollicis, Abductor pollicis pedis.

CALCOCOS, Bellmetal.

CALCOIDEA, (ossicula,) Cuneiform bones.

CALCOTAR, Ferri sulphas.

CALCUL, Calculus.

CALCULEUX, Calculous.

CAL'CULI, ARTIC'ULAR. See Calculi Arthritic, and Concretions, Articular.

CALCULI, ARTHRIT'IC, Chalk stones, (F.)

Pierres crayeuses, Calculs arthritiques. Concretions, which form in the ligaments, and within the capsules of the joints, in persons affected with gout. They are composed of uric acid, soda, and a little animal matter; very rarely, urate of lime and muriate of soda are met with. Similar calculi are found in other parts besides the joints.

BILIARY CAL'CULI, Calculi bilio'si, Cysthepatolith'asis, Biliary Concretions, Gall-stones, Chololithus, Cholelithus, Cholelith'ia, (F.) Calculs biliaires, Pierres au fiel. Some of these contain all the materials of the bile, and seem to be nothing more than that secretion thickened. Several contain Picromel; and the greater part are composed of from 88 to 94 parts of Cholesterine, and of from 6 to 12 of the yellow matter of the bile. Biliary calculi are most frequently found in the gall-bladder: at other times in the substance of the liver: in the branches of the Ductus Hepaticus, or in the Ductus Communis Cholelochus. The first are called Cystic; the second Hepatic; and the last, sometimes, Hepatocystic. The causes which give rise to them are very obscure. Often they occasion no uneasiness, and at other times the symptoms may be confounded with those of hepatitis. At times, they are rejected by the mouth, or by the bowels, along with a considerable quantity of bile, which had accumulated behind them; at other times, they occasion violent abdominal inflammation, abscesses, and biliary fistule, rupture of the gall-bladder, and fatal effusion into the peritoneum. The passage of a gallstone is extremely painful; yet the pulse is not affected. Antiphlogistics, when there is inflammatory action, and strong doses of opium, to allay the pain and spasm, with the warm bath, are the chief remedies. Solvents are not to be depended upon. They cannot reach the calculi.

CAL'CULI IN THE EARS, (F.) Calculs de l'Oreille. Hard, light, and inflammable concretions, which occur in the meatus auditorius externus, and are merely indurated cerumen. They are a frequent cause of deafness. They can be easily seen, and may be extracted by appropriate forceps, after having been detached by injections of soap and water.

CAL'CULI LACH'RYMAL, (F.) Calculs lacrymaux. Concretions sometimes, but rarely, form in the lachrymal passages, where they occasion abscesses and fistula, which do not heal until they are extracted. No analysis has been made of them.

CALCULI OF THE MAMME, (F.) Calculs des Mamelles. HALLER gives a case of a concretion, of a yellowish-white colour, which had the shape of one of the excretory ducts of the mammary gland, having been extracted from an abscess seated in that organ.

CAL'CULI OF THE PANCREAS, (F.) Calculs du Pancreas. These are but little known. Analogy has induced a belief that they resemble the salivary. Some have supposed that certain transparent calculi, rejected by vomiting, or passed in the evacuations, have proceeded from the pancreas, but there seems no reason for this belief.

CAL'CULI OF THE PINEAL GLAND, (F.) Cal-

culs de la Glande Pinéale. These have been frequently met with. No symptom announces their presence during life. They are composed of phosphate of lime.

CALCULI OF THE PROSTATE. These are not very rare. They have generally the same composition as the preceding. They usually present the symptoms common to every tumefaction of the prostate, and sometimes those of calculi in the bladder.

CALCULI PULMONARY, Phthisic calculeuse of Bayle, (F.) Calculs pulmonaires. These concretions are very frequently met with in the dead body, without seeming to have produced unpleasant symptoms during life. At other times, they are accompanied with all the symptoms of phthisis. At times, they are expectorated without the supervention of any unpleasant symptom. They are usually formed of carbonate of lime and animal matter.

CALCULI SALIVARY, (F.) Calculs salivaires. Concretions, usually formed of phosphate of lime and animal matter, which are developed in the substance of the salivary glands or in their excretory ducts. In the first case, they may be mistaken for a simple swelling of the gland: in the second, they may be generally detected by the touch. They may be extracted by incision, in the interior of the mouth.

CALCULI, SPERMATIC, (F.) Calculs spermaticus. These have been sometimes found in the vesiculæ seminales after death. They cannot be detected during life. No analysis has been made of them.

CALCULUS OF THE STOMACH AND INTESTINES, Enterolithus, E. Calculus, (F.) Calculs de l'estomac. Calculi of the stomach are rare, and have almost always been carried thither by the antiperistaltic action of the intestines. The symptoms, occasioned by them, are those of chronic gastritis. It has been imagined that the continued use of absorbent powders, as magnesia, will give occasion to them.

Intestinal concretions, (F.) Calculs intestinaux, are not uncommon in animals (see BEZOLD:) but they are rare in man. The causes which give rise to them are little known: sometimes a biliary calculus affords them a nucleus. Their composition varies. They are light, hard, very fetid, and not inflammable. They are formed, ordinarily, between the valvulae of the small intestines, or in the cells of the large, and sometimes in old herniæ. Whilst they do not obstruct the passage of the alimentary mass, they produce no unpleasant symptom. At times, the movable tumour, which they form, may be felt through the parietes of the abdomen. They are generally evacuated per anum.

CALCULI OF THE TONSILS. Calculous concretions, which sometimes form in the tonsils. (F.) Calculs des Amygdales. They are easily recognised by the sight and touch: sometimes they are discharged by spitting, either alone or with the pus of an abscess occasioned by their presence. They have not been analyzed.

CALCULI URINARY, Urolithi, (F.) Calculs urinaires, Pierres urinaires. Concretions, which form from the crystallizable substances in the urine, and which are met with not only in the whole course of the urinary passages, but in fistulous openings wherever the urine stagnates naturally or accidentally. Their causes are but little known. They are more common at the two extremities of life than at the middle, and more so in some countries and districts than in others. At times, a clot of blood, a portion of mucus, &c., will form the nucleus. The symptoms and treatment vary according to the seat of the calculus. There is no such thing probably as a medicinal solvent. See Urinary Calculi.

Modern chymists have demonstrated the existence of several components of urinary calculi, viz. Lithic Acid, Phosphate of Lime, Ammoniac-Magnesian Phosphate, Oxalate of Lime, Cystic Oxide, and Xanthic Oxide, with an animal cementing ingredient. The varieties of calculi, produced by the combination or intermixture of these ingredients, are thus represented by Dr. Paris.

A TABULAR VIEW OF THE DIFFERENT SPECIES OF URINARY CALCULI.

| SPECIES OF CALCULI. | EXTERNAL CHARACTERS.  | CHEMICAL COMPOSITION.  | REMARKS.  |
|---------------------|---|--|---|
| 1. LITHIC OR URIC.  | FORM, a flattened oval. S. G. generally exceeds 1.500. Colour, brownish or fawn-like. Surface, smooth. Texture, laminated.  | It consists principally of Lithic Acid . When treated with nitric acid a beautiful pink substance results. This calculus is slightly soluble in water, abundantly so in the pure alkalis. | It is the prevailing species; but the surface sometimes occurs finely tuberculated. It frequently constitutes the nuclei of the other species. |
| 2. MULBERRY.        | Colour, dark brown. Texture, harder than that of the other species. S. G. from 1.428 to 1.976. Surface, studded with tubercles.   | It is oxalate of lime , and is decomposed in the flame of a spirit lamp, swelling out into a white efflorescence, which is quicklime .   | This species includes some varieties, which are remarkably smooth and pale-coloured, resembling hempsced .                                     |
| 3. BONE EARTH.      | Colour, pale brown or gray; surface, smooth and polished; structure, regularly laminated; the laminae easily separating into concrete crusts.   | Principally phosphate of lime . It is soluble in muriatic acid.   |   |
| 4. TRIPLE.          | Colour, generally brilliant white. Surface, uneven, studded with shining crystals, less compact than the preceding species. Between its laminae small cells occur, filled with sparkling particles. | It is an ammoniac-magnesian phosphate , generally mixed with phosphate of lime. Pure alkalis decompose it, extracting its ammonia.  | This species attains a larger size than any of the others.  |

A TABULAR VIEW OF THE DIFFERENT SPECIES OF URINARY CALCULI.

| SPECIES OF CALCULI. | EXTERNAL CHARACTERS.  | CHEMICAL COMPOSITION.   | REMARKS.   |
|---------------------|---|---|--|
| 5. FUSIBLE.         | Colour. Grayish white.  | A compound of the two foregoing species.  | It is very fusible, melting into a vitreous globule. |
| 6. CYSTIC.          | Very like the triple calculus, but it is unstratified and more compact and homogeneous. | It consists of cystic oxide . Under the blowpipe it yields a peculiarly fetid odour. It is soluble in acids, and in alkalis even if they are fully saturated with carbonic acid. | It is a rare species.                                |
| 7. ALTERNATING.     | Its section exhibits different concentric laminae.                                      | Compounded of several species, alternating with each other.   |  |
| 8. COMPOUND.        | No characteristic form.   | The ingredients are separable only by chemical analysis.  |  |

1. Renal Calculi, (F.) Calculs rénaux. These have almost always a very irregular shape; at times, there will be no indication of their presence: at others, they occasion attacks of pain in the kidneys, sometimes accompanied with bloody or turbid urine. Often, they cause inflammation of the kidneys, with all its unpleasant results. They are generally formed of uric acid, animal matter, and oxalate of lime, with, sometimes, phosphates. The treatment will have to vary, according to the absence or presence of inflammatory signs, relieving the irritation by opiates. A surgical operation can rarely be applicable.

2. Calculi in the Ureters. (F.) Calculs des Urètres. These come from the kidneys, and do not produce unpleasant effects, unless they are so large as to obstruct the course of the urine, and to occasion distention of the whole of the ureter above them; or unless their surface is so rough as to irritate the mucous membrane, and occasion pain, hemorrhage, abscesses, &c. The pain, during the passage, is sometimes very violent, extending to the testicle of the same side in the male; and occasioning a numbness of the thigh in both sexes. The treatment consists in general or local blood-letting, warm bath and opiates.

3. Calculi Vesical. Stone in the Bladder, Lithia Vesicalis, Lithiasis cystica, Lithiasis vesicalis, Cysto-lithiasis, Dysuria calculosa, D. irritata, Calculus vesicae, (F.) Calculs vésicaux. These are the most common. Sometimes, they proceed from the kidneys: most commonly, they are formed in the bladder itself. Sense of weight in the perinaeum, and sometimes of a body rolling when the patient changes his position; pain or itching at the extremity of the glans in men: frequent desire to pass the urine; sudden stoppage to its flow; and bloody urine—are the chief signs which induce us to suspect their existence. We cannot, however, be certain of this without sounding the patient. Sometimes, when of a small size, they are expelled: most commonly, they remain in the bladder, the disorganization of which they occasion, unless removed by a surgical operation.

4. Calculi Urethral. They almost always proceed from the bladder. The obstruction, which they cause to the passage of the urine, the hard tumour, and the noise occasioned when struck by a sound, indicate their presence. They are removed by incision.

5. Calculi in Fistulous Passages. These arise when there is some fistulous opening into the urethra. They can be readily recognised, and may generally be extracted with facility. (F.) Calculs placés hors des voies urinaires. See Urinary Calculi.

CALCULI OF THE UTERUS. (F.) Calculs de l'Utérus. These are very rare. The signs, which indicate them during life, are those of chronic engorgement of the uterus. Their existence, consequently, cannot be proved till after death.

CALCULIFRAGUS, Lithontriptic.

CALCULOUS, (F.) Calculoux, Graveleux, that which relates to calculi, especially to those of the bladder.

CALCULUS BILIAIRES, Calculi, biliary—c. de l'Estomac, Calculi of the stomach—c. de la Glande pinéale, Calculi of the pineal gland—c. Intestinalis, Calculi of the stomach and intestines—c. Lacrymalis, Calculi, lachrymal—c. des Mamelles, Calculi of the mammae—c. de l'oreille, Calculi in the ears—c. du Pancreas, Calculi of the Pancreas—c. Placés hors des voies urinaires, Calculi in fistulous passages—c. Pulmonaires, Calculi, pulmonary—c. Rénaux, Calculi, renal—c. Salivaires, Calculi, salivary—c. Spermaticques, Calculi, spermatic—c. Urinaires, Calculi, urinary—c. des Urètres, Calculi in the ureters—c. de l'Utérus, Calculi of the uterus—c. Vésical, Calculi, vesical.

CALCULUS, Lapis, Lithos, λῑθος. A diminutive of calx, a lime-stone. (F.) Calcul, Pierre. Calculi are concretions, which may form in every part of the animal body, but which are most frequently found in the organs that act as reservoirs, and in the excretory canals. They are met with in the tonsils, joints, biliary ducts, digestive passages, lachrymal ducts, mammae, ears, pancreas, pineal gland, prostate, lungs, salivary, spermatic and urinary passages, and in the uterus. The causes which give rise to them are obscure.

Those, that occur in reservoirs or ducts, are supposed to be owing to the deposition of the substances which compose them, from the fluid as it passes along the duct; and those which occur in the substance of an organ are regarded as the product of some chronic irritation. Their general effect is to irritate, as extraneous bodies, the parts with which they are in contact; and to produce retention of the fluid, whence they have been formed. The symptoms differ, according to the sensibility of the organ, and the importance of the particular secretion, whose discharge they impede. Their solution is generally impracticable.

spontaneous expulsion or extraction being the only ways of getting rid of them.

CALCULUS, ENCYSTED, *Calculi chatonné—c. Vesicæ, Calculus, vesical.

CALDAS, WATERS OF. Caldas is a small town, ten leagues from Lisbon, where are mineral springs; containing carbonic and hydrosulphuric acid gases, carbonates and muriates of lime and magnesia, sulphates of soda and lime, sulphuret of iron, silica, and alumina. They are much used in atonic gout. They are thermal. Temperature 93° Fahrenheit.

CALDE'RIÆ ITALICÆ. Warm baths in the neighbourhood of Ferrara, in Italy, much employed in dysuria.

CALÉBASSES, Cucurbita lagenaria.

CALEFA'CIENTS, *Calefacien'tia, Therman'tica, from calidus, 'warm,' and facio, 'I make.' (F.) Échauffants. Substances which excite a degree of warmth in the part to which they are applied, as mustard, pepper, &c. They belong to the class of stimulants.

CALEFACTIO, Échauffement.

CALENDULA ALPINA, Arnica montana.

CALENDULA OFFICINA'LIS, C. Sat'iva, Chrysan'themum, Sponsa solis, Caltha vulgar'is; Single Mar'igold, Garden Mar'igold. Family, Synanthereæ, Syngenesia necessaria, Linn. (F.) Souci. The flowers and leaves have been exhibited as aperients, diaphoretics, &c., and have been highly extolled, of late, in cancer.

CALENDULA ARVEN'SIS, Caltha Arven'sis, Wild Mar'igold. (F.) Souci des Champs. This is, sometimes, preferred to the last. Its juice has been given, in the dose of from  $\zeta\text{ij}$  to  $\zeta\text{iv}$ , in jaundice and cachexia.

CALENDULÆ MARTIALES, Ferrum ammoniatum.

CALENTU'RA, from calere, 'to be warm.' The word, in Spanish, signifies fever. It is a species of furious delirium, to which sailors are subject in the torrid zone:—a kind of phrenitis, the attack of which comes on suddenly after a broiling day, and seems to be characterized by a desire in the patient, to throw himself into the sea. It is only a variety of phrenitis.

CALENTU'RAS; Palo de Calentu'ras. Pomet and Léméry say, that these words are, sometimes, applied to the cinchona. Camelli says, they mean, also, a tree of the Philippine Isles, the wood of which is bitter and febrifuge.

CALIDARIUM. See Stove.

CALF OF THE LEG, Sura.

CALICE, Calix.

CALICES RÉNALES. See Calix.

CALICO BUSH, Kalmia latifolia.

CALIDUM ANIMALE, Animal heat—c. Innatum, Animal heat.

CALIGATIO, Dazzling.

CALIGO. 'A mist.' Achlys. (F.) Brouillard. An obscurity of vision, dependent upon a speck on the cornea: also, the speck itself, Caligo corneæ, Macula corneæ, Pitharua caligo, C. à nephelio, Hebetu'do visus, C. à leuco'matè, M. Sémipellu'cida, Nebula, (q. v.) Opake corneæ, Web-eye. (F.) Nouage de la Cornée, Tuye, Obscurcissement de la vue.

CALIGO LENTIS, Cataract—c. Pupillæ, Synze-sis—c. Synze-sis, Synze-sis.

CALIHACHA CANELLA, Laurus cassia.

CALIPERS. See Pelvimeter.

CALIX. Infundib'ulum, from καλιξ, 'a cup.' (F.) Calice, Entonnoir. Anatomists have given this name to small membranous canals, which surround the papillæ of the kidney, and open into its pelvis, whither they convey the urine. Calices rénales, Cylin'dri membran'cei Renum, Fistulæ uteram renum, Canales membra'nei Renum, Tu'buli pelvis renum. Their number varies from 6 to 12 in each kidney.

CALIX VOMITORIA, Gobiet, emetic.

CALLEUX, Callous.

CALLICOCCA IPECACUANHA, Ipecacu-anha.

CALLICREAS, Pancreas.

CALLIOMARCHUS, Tussilago.

CALLIPEDIA, from καλος, 'beautiful,' and παις, παιδος, 'a child.' The art of begetting beautiful children. This was the title of a poem by Claude Quillet, in 1655. Callipædia, sive de pulchræ prolis habendæ ratione. The author absurdly supposes, that the beauty of children is affected by the sensations which the mother experiences during her pregnancy.

CALLIPESTRIA, Cosmetics.

CALLIPHYLLUM, Asplenium trichoma-noides.

CALLOSITAS, Induration—c. Palpebrarum, Scleriasis.

CALLOS'ITY, Callos'itas, Seyros, Tylo'ma, Tylo'sis, Dermatol'yus, Eceph'yma Callus. Hardness, induration, and thickness of the skin, which assumes a horny consistence, in places where it is exposed to constant pressure. (F.) Durillon. Also, that induration, which is observed in old wounds, old ulcers, fistulous passages, &c.

CALLOUS, Callo'sus, Ochtho'des, from cal-lus, 'hardness.' (F.) Calleux. That which is hard or indurated. A Callous Ulcer is one, whose edges are thick and indurated.

CALLUNA VULGARIS, Erica vulgaris.

CALLUS or CALUS or CALLUM. (F.) Cal. The bony matter, thrown out between the fractured extremities of a bone, which acts as a cement, and as a new bony formation. The words are, likewise, used occasionally in the same sense as Callosity.

CALMANTS, Sedatives.

CALME, (F.) The interval that separates the paroxysms of an acute or chronic disease. When the type is intermittent, the word intermission is used.

CALOMBA, Calumba.

CALOMELANOS TURQUE'TI. A name given, by Riverius, to purgative pills, prepared with calomel, sulphur, and resin of jalap.

CALOMELAS, Hydrargyri submurias.

CALO'NIA, καλονια. An epithet, formerly given to myrrh.—Hippoc. See Myrrha.

CALOPHYLLUM INOPHYLLUM. See Fagara octandra.

CALOR, Heat—c. Animalis, Animal heat.

CALORICITÉ, (F.) Caloric'itas. The faculty, possessed by living bodies, of generating a sufficient quantity of caloric, to enable them to resist atmospheric cold, and to preserve, at all times and in every part, a temperature nearly equal. See Animal Heat.

CALORIFICA'TION, Calorified'tio. The function of producing animal heat.

CALORINE'SES, from calor, 'heat.' The name, under which M. Baumes proposes to arrange all diseases, characterized by a sensible change in the quantity of animal heat. The Calorinées form the first class of his Nosology.

CALOTROPIS MUDARII, Mudar.

CALOTTE, (F.) Pileolum. Anatomists, sometimes, give the name—Calotte aponevrotique—to the aponeurosis of the occipito-frontalis muscle, which covers it externally, and that of Calotte du crane to the skull cap.

Calotte is also applied to an adhesive plaster, with which the head of a person, labouring under tinea capitis, is sometimes covered, after the hair has been shaved off. This plaster is pulled suddenly and violently off, in order to remove the bulbs of the hair. It means, also, a sort of coil made of boiled leather, worn by those who have undergone the operation of trepan, &c.

CALTHA ALPINA, Arnica montana—c. Arvensis, Calendula arvensis—c. Vulgaris, Calendula officinalis.

CALTROPS. See Trapa natans.

CALUMBA, COLOMBO, CALOMBA, COLOMBA, Radix Calumbæ. (F.) Calumbæ or Columbe. The root of the Menispermum palmatum, Cocculus palmatus, indigenous in India and Africa. Its odour is slightly aromatic; taste unpleasantly bitter. It is tonic and antiseptic. Dose, gr. 10 to ʒj in powder.

The FRASERA WALTERI, F. Carolinensis, American or Marietta Columbo, is used in the same cases as the true Calumba.

CALUS, Callus.

CALVA, Cranium.

CALVARIA, Cranium.

CALVA, CALVARIA. The cranium;—the upper part especially;—the Vault of the Cranium, Camara.

CALVATA FERRAMENTA. Surgical instruments, which have a head or button.

CALVITIES, Calvitium, Phalacro'sis, Glabrities, Ophiasis, Depilatio Capitis, Phalacroma, Madarosis, &c., from calvus, 'bald.' (F.) Chauvété. Absence of hair, particularly at the top of, and behind, the head. Calvities palpebrarum:—loss of the eye-lashes.

CALX, Lime, Calxium Terra, Protoxide of Calcium, Calcaria pura.

CALX CHLORINATA, Calcis chloridum—c. Cum kali puro, Potassa cum calce—c. Salita, Calcis murias—c. Bismuthi, Bismuth, subnitrate of.

CALX VIVA, Oxidum Calci, Calx recens, Fumans nix, Calx usta, Calx et Calx viva. Lime or Quicklime. (F.) Chaux vive. The external operation of the calx viva is escharotic, but it is not used as such. Lime is a good disinfecting agent. It is employed internally in the form of Liquor Calcis, (q. v.)

CALX TESTIS; lime prepared from shells. It has no advantages over that prepared from marble.

CALCIS CHLORIDUM; Chloride of Lime, Calx chlorinata, Protochloruret of Calcium, Calcaria chlorata, Chlorum Calcarie, Chloratum Calcarie, Calcaria Chlorica, Oxychloruretum Calci, Protochloruretum Calci, Chloruretum Oxidi Calci, Bichloruretum Calcis, Oxyurias Calcis, Bleaching Powder, Tennant's Powder. The Chloride of Lime is a most valuable disinfecting agent, (see Disinfection), when dissolved in the proportion of one pound, to six gallons of water. It has likewise been employed both internally and externally in various diseases, as in serofula, factor oris, foul ulcers, &c. &c.

CALCIS MURIAS; Muriate of Lime, Calx salita. Calci Chloruretum seu Chloridum. This salt has been given, in solution, as a tonic, stimulant, &c., in serofulous tumours, glandular obstructions, general debility, &c. The Solutio Muriatis Calcis, Liquor Calcis Muriatis, Solutio of Muriate of Lime, Liquid Shell, is composed of muriate of lime ʒj, dissolved in distilled water ʒiij. Dose, from gr<sup>ss</sup>. xxx to ʒj in a cupful of water.

CALCIS SULPHURETUM; Hepar Calcis, Sulphuret of Lime. (F.) Proto-hydrosulfate de Calcium, Hydrosulfate de chaux. Principally used in solution, as a bath, in itch and other cutaneous affections.

CALYSTEGIA SOLDANELLA, Convulvulus soldanella.

CAMARA, Calva.

CAMAREZ, MINERAL WATERS OF. Camarez is a small canton near Silvanès, in the department of Aveyron, France, where there are some acidulous chalybeates.

CAMAROSIS, Camardina, from καμαρα, 'a vault.' Camardtio, Tesudinatio Cranii. A species of fracture of the skull, in which the fragments are placed so as to form a vault, with its base resting on the dura mater.—Galen, Paulus of Ægina.

CAMBING. A tree of the Molucca Islands, from the bark of which a kind of gum-resin exudes, which has been highly extolled in dysentery. It appears to have some resemblance to the simarouba.—Rumphius.

CAMBIUM, 'Exchange.' A name formerly given to a fancied nutritive juice, which was supposed to originate in the blood; to repair the losses of every organ, and produce their increase.—Sennertus.

CAMBO, MINERAL WATERS OF. A village in the department of Basses Pyrénées, France, where there are two mineral springs; the one an acidulous chalybeate, the other sulphureous. Temperature, 73° Fahrenheit.

CAMBODIA, Cambogia.

CAMBOGIA, from Cambodia, in the East Indies, where it is obtained. Hence, also, its names Cambo'dia, Cambo'gium, Gambo'gia, Gambo'gium. It is called, also, Gutta, Gutta gamba, Gummi Gutta, Catagau'na, Cultagau'ma, Chryso'pus, Laxati'vus Indicus, G. Bogia, Gummi gaman'drae, G. de Gou, G. de Jenu, Ghitta jenoco, Gutta Gamandra, Gummi ad Podagram, Cambo'ge or Gambo'ge, &c. (F.) Gomme Gutte. Ord. Guttiferæ. Cambo'ge is the gum of the Stalagmitis Cambogioides. It is inodorous, of an orange-yellow colour; opaque and brittle: fracture glassy. It is a drastic cathartic, emetic, and anthelmintic; and is used in visceral obstructions and dropsy, and wherever powerful hydrogogue cathartics are required. Dose, from gr. ij to vi in powder, united with calomel, squill, &c.

CAMBU'CA, Cambuca membrata. Buboec and venereal ulcers, seated in the groin or near the genital organs.—Paracelsus. See Bubo.

CAMELÉE, Cncorum triocceum.

CAMERA, Chamber, Fornix, Vault—c. Cordis, Pericardium.

CAMERATIO, Camarosis.

CAMINGA, Canella alba.

CAMISIA FÆTUS, Chorion.

CAMISOLE, Waistcoat, strait.

CAMMARUS, Crab.

CAMOMILLE FETIDE, Anthemis cotula—c. Romaine, Anthemis nobilis—c. des Teinturiers, Anthemis tinctoria—c. Vulgaire, Matricaria chamomilla.

CAMOSIERS, WATERS OF. C. is a canton, two leagues from Marseilles, where are springs containing carbonate of lime, sulphur, muriate of soda, &c. They are purgative, and used in skin complaints.

CAMPAN'ULA. Diminutive of Camp'na. A bell.

The CAMPANULA TRACHE'LIUM, Canterbury Bell or Throatwort, was formerly used in decoction, in relaxation of the fauces. It is, also, called Cervic'ria.

CAMPE, Flexion.

CAMPHIRE, Camphor.

CAMPHOR, from Arab, Kaphur or Kam'phur, Cam'phora, Cam'phura, Cuffa, Caf, Cufar, Caph'ora, Altafor, Camphire, Camphor, &c. (F.) Camphre. A concrete substance, prepared, by distillation, from the Laurus Cam'phora, an indigenous tree of the East Indies. Order, Laurineæ. Its odour is strong and fragrant: it is volatile, not easily pulverizable; texture crystalline. Soluble in alcohol, ether, oils, vinegar; and slightly so in water. Its properties are narcotic, diaphoretic, and sedative. Dose, gr. v to ðj. Dissolved in oil or alcohol, it is applied externally in rheumatic pains, bruises, sprains, &c.

CAMPHORATA HIRSUTA SEU MONSPELIENSIIUM, Camphorosma monspeliaca.

CAMPHORA'TED, Camphor'tus, (F.) Camphrê. Relating to camphor; containing camphor; as a camphorated smell, a camphorated draught.

CAMPHOROS'MA MONSPELIACA. Sed'go, Camphora'ta hirsu'ta seu Monspelien'sium, Hairy Camphoros'ma, (F.) Camphrêe de Montpellier. Family, Atriplicææ. Sex. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia. This plant, as its name imports (σσφρ, 'odour,') has an odour of camphor. It is regarded as diuretic, diaphoretic, cephalic, antispasmodic, &c. It is also called Chamæpeuce and Stinking Ground Pine.

CAMPHRE, Camphor.

CAMPHRE, Camphorated.

CAMPHRE'E DE MONTPELLIER, Camphorosma monspeliaca.

CAMPSIS, καμψις, Flex'io, Curva'tio, Inflex'io. Bone or cartilage, forcibly bent from its proper shape, without breaking.—Good.

CAMPSIS DEPRESSIO, Depression.

CAMPYLOTIS, Cataclasis.

CAMPYLUM, Cataclasis.

CAMUS (F.) Sinus, Res'mus. One who has a short nose. The French speak of a Nez camus, a short nose.

CANAL, Canal'is, Ductus, Meatus, Poros, Och'utos, (F.) Conduit. A channel, for affording passage to liquids or solids or to certain organs.

CANAL, ALIMENT'ARY or DIGES'TIVE. Canal'is ciba'rius vel digestivus, Diges'tive Tube, Alimentary Duct or Tube, Ductus ciba'rius. The canal, extending from the mouth to the anus.

CANAL ARTÉRIEL, Arterial duct—c. de Bartholin, Ductus Bartholinus—c. Bullular, of Petit, Godronné canal—c. Carotidien, Carotid canal—c. Cholêdoque, Choledoch duct—c. Godronné, Godronné canal—c. Hépatique, Hepatic duct—c. Infra-orbital, Suborbital canal—c. Inflexe de l'os temporal, Carotid canal—c. Intermédiaire des ventricules, Aquæductus Sylvii—c. de Petit, Godronné canal—c. Rachidian, Vertebral canal.

CANAL, INTES'TINAL. Canal'is or Ductus intestinal'is. The portion of the digestive canal, formed by the intestines.

CANAL of SCHLEMM. A minute circular canal, discovered by Professor Schlemm, of Berlin. It is situate at the point of union of the cornea and sclerotica.

CANAL SPINAL, Vertebral canal—c. Spiroïde de l'os temporal, Aquæductus Fallopii—c. de Stenon, Ductus salivalis superior—c. Thoracique, Thoracic duct—c. Veineux, Canal, venous—c. Vulvo-uterine, Vagina—c. de Warthon, Ductus salivalis inferior.

CANAL, VENOUS, Canal'is or Ductus veno'sus, (F. Canal veineux). A canal, which exists only in the fetus. It extends from the bifurcation of the umbilical vein to the vena cava inferior, into which it opens, below the diaphragm. At times, it ends in one of the infrahepatic veins. It pours into the cava a part of the blood, which passes from the placenta by the umbilical vein. After birth, it becomes a fibro-cellular cord.

CANALES CIRCULARES, Semicircular canals—c. Lachrymales, Lachrymal ducts—c. Membranei renum, see Calix—c. Tubæformes, Semicircular canals.

CANALICULATUS, Cannelé, Grooved.

CANALICULI LACHRYMALES, Lachrymal ducts—c. Limacum, Lachrymal ducts—c. Semicirculares, Semicircular canals.

CANALIS ARTERIOSUS, Arterial duct—c. Canaliculatus, Gorget—c. Caroticus, Carotid canal—c. Lacrymalis, Lachrymal or nasal duct—c. Medius, Aquæductus Sylvii—c. Nerveus fistulosus renum, Ureter—c. Orbitæ nasalis, Lachrymal or nasal duct—c. Petitianus, Godronné canal—c. Sacci lacrymalis, Lachrymal or nasal duct—c. Scalarum communis, Infundibulum of the cochlea—c. Urinaris, Urethra—c. Vidianus, Pterygoid canal.

CANALES, NUTRITIVE, or for the Nutrition of Bones, Ductus nutritii, (F.) Canaux nourriciers ou de Nutrition des os.—Conduits nourriciers ou nutriciers. The canals, through which the vessels pass to the bones. They are lined by a very fine lamina of compact texture, or are formed in the texture itself. There is, generally, one large nutritious canal in a long bone, situate towards its middle.

CANAUX AQUEUX, see Aqueous—c. Demi-circulaires, Semicircular canals—c. Éjaculateurs, Ejaculatory ducts—c. Nourriciers, Canals, nutritive—c. de Nutrition des os, Canals, nutritive.

CANAUX DE TRANSMISSION. According to Bichat, the bony canals intended to give passage to vessels and nerves going to parts more or less distant; as the Canal'is carot'icus, &c.

CANAUX VEINEUX. Venous Canals. The canals, which convey venous blood, situate in the diploë.

CANAPACIA, Artemisia vulgaris.

CANCAMY, Anime.

CAN'CAMUM. A mixture of several gums and resins, exported from Africa, where it is used to deterge wounds. Dioscorides calls, by the name xayzaour, the tears from an Arabian tree, which are similar to myrrh, and of a disagreeable taste. He advises it in numerous diseases. This name is given, also, to the Anime. (q. v.)

CANCEL/LI. Lattice-work. The Cellular or Spongy Texture of Bones, (F.) Tissu cellulæ; consisting of numerous cells, communicating with each other. They contain a fatty matter, analogous to marrow. This texture is met with, principally, at the extremities of long bones; and some of the short bones consist almost wholly of it. It allows of the expansion of the extremities of bones, without adding to their weight; and deadens contusions.

CANCEL/LUS, from cancer, 'a crab.' A species of crayfish, called the Wrong Hair, and Bernard the Hermit; which is said to cure rheumatism, if rubbed on the part.

CANCER, καρκίνος, Carcinus, Lupus cancerosus, Ulcus cancerosum, 'a crab.' (q. v.) A disease, so called, either on account of the hideous appearance, which the ulcerated cancer presents; or on account of the great veins, which surround it; and which the ancients compared to the claws of the crab. Called also Carcinoma. It consists of a scirrhus, livid tumour, intersected by firm, whitish, divergent bands; and occurs chiefly in the secretory glands. The pains are acute and lancinating, and often extend to other parts. The tumour, ultimately, terminates in a fetid and ichorous ulcer. It is distinguished, according to its stages, into occult and open; the former being the scirrhus, the latter the ulcerated condition. At times, there is a simple destruction or erosion of the organs, and, at others, an encephaloid or cerebriform degeneration. The use of irritants, in cancerous affections, is strongly to be deprecated. When the disease is so situate, that excision can be practised, the sooner it is removed the better.

CANCER AQUAT'ICUS, Gangrenous stomatitis, Cancrum Oris, Canker of the mouth. Called, also, Apluche serpentis, Gangra'na Oris, Noma, Noma, Stomac'acæ gangra'nosum, &c. (F.) Cancer aquaticus. Certain sloughing or gangrenous ulcers of the mouth, so called, perhaps, because they are often accompanied with an afflux of saliva. The disease is not uncommon in children's asylums, and demands the same treatment as hospital gangrene—the employment of caustics, and internal and external antiseptics.

CANCER AQUATIQUE. Cancer aquaticus, Stomacæc—c. Astacus, see Cancrorum chelæ—c. Caminariorum, Cancer, chimney sweeper's—c. Cérébriforme, see Encephaloid.

CANCER, CHIMNEY-SWEEPERS', Sootwart, Cancer mundiorum, Cancer purgatoris infumiculi, Cancer scroti, Cancer caminariorum, Oschocarcinoma, (F.) Cancer des Ramoneurs. This affection begins with a superficial, painful, irregular ulcer, with hard and elevated edges, occupying the lower part of the scrotum. Extirpation of the part affected is the only means of effecting a cure.

CANCER, DAVIDSON'S REMEDY FOR, see

Conium maculatum—c. de Galien, Cancer Galieni.

CANCER GALE'NI, (F.) Cancer de Galien. A bandage for the head, to which Galen gave the name Cancer, from its eight heads resembling, rudely, the claws of the crab. It is now supplied by the bandage with six chefs or heads, which is called the Bandage of Galen or B. of the Poor.

CANCER LUPUS, Lupus—c. Mollis, see Encephaloid—c. Munditorum, Cancer, chimney-sweepers'—c. Oris, Stomacæc—c. Ossis, Spina ventosa—c. Purgatoris infumiculi, Cancer, chimney-sweepers'—c. Seroti, Cancer, chimney-sweepers'—c. Soft, Hæmatodes fungus—c. Uteri, Metro-carcinoma.

CANCÉREUX, Cancerous.

CANCER-ROOT, Orobanche Virginiana, Phytolacca deandra.

CAN'CEROUS, Cancerosus, (F.) Cancéreux. Relating to cancer. Thus, we say, Cancerous ulcer, Cancerous Diathesis, &c.

CANCHALAGUA, Cachen laguen, Cachin lagua, Chance lagua, Erythra'a Chilensis. A bitter Chili plant, which is considered aperient, sudorific, stomachic, vermifuge, and febrifuge.

CANCRENA, Gangrene.

CANCROID, Cancroïdeus, from cancer and ειδος, 'form.' That which assumes a cancerous appearance. A name given to certain cutaneous cancers by Alibert, called also Cheloid or Keloid (γελύς, 'a tortoise,' and ειδος, 'likeness,') from their presenting a flattish raised patch of integument, resembling the shell of a tortoise.

CANCRO'RUM CHELÆ, Oc'uli vel Lap'idis Cancro'rum, Lapilli cancro'rum, Concrementa Astaci fluvial'is, Crab's stones or eyes, (F.) Yeux d'écrevisse. These are concretions, found, particularly, in the Cancer Astacus or Crayfish. They consist of carbonate and phosphate of lime; and possess antacid virtues, but not more so than chalk.

CANCROSUS, Cancerous, Chancreuse.

CANCROM ORIS, Cancer aquaticus, Stomacæc.

CANDELA FUMALIS, Pastil—c. Medicata, Bougie—c. Regia, Verbascum nigrum.

CANDELARIA, Verbascum nigrum.

CANDI, Candum, Canthum, Cantion; 'white, bleached, purified.' Purified and crystallized sugar. See Saccharum.

CANDIDUM OVI, Albumen ovi.

CANE, SUGAR. See Saccharum.

CANELE, Grooved.

CANELLA CUBANA, Laurus cassia.

CANELLA ALBA, Cortex Winteranus spurius, Canella Cubana, C. Winterania, Cinnamomum album, Cortex Antiseobuticus, C. Aromaticus, Costus corticosus, Camin'ga, Canella of Linnaeus. Canella Bark, (F.) Canelle ou Cannelle blanche, Fausse Écorce de Winter, Écorce Caricostine. Fam. Magnoliacæe. Sex. Syst. Dodecandria Monogynia. This bark is a pungent aromatic. Its virtues are partly extracted by water; entirely by alcohol. It is a stimulant, and is added to bitters and cathartics.

CANELLA CARYOPHYLLATA—c. Malabarica et Javensis, Laurus cassia—c. Zeylanica, Laurus cinnamomum.

CANELIFERA MALABARICA, Laurus cassia.

CANEPIA. (F.) A fine lamb's skin or goat's skin, used for trying the quality of lancets.

CANICACEOUS, Furfuraceous.

CANICÆ. Meal, in which there is much bran. Also, coarse bread, or bread in which there is much bran. Panis Canicæus.

CANICIDA, Aconitum.

CANICULA; the Dogstar, from canis, 'a dog'; Σεισιος, Sirius, (F.) Canicule. This star, which gives its name to the Dogdays, because they commence when the sun rises with it, was formerly believed to exert a powerful influence on the animal economy. The Dog-days occur at a period of the year when there is generally great and oppressive heat, and a certain degree of liability to disease.

CANIF, Knife.

CANIN, Canine.

CANINANÆ RADIX, Caincæ radix.

CANINE, Caninus, Cynicus, κυνικός, from canis, 'a dog,' (F.) Canin. That which has a resemblance to the structure, &c. of a dog.

CANINE TEETH, Dentes Canini, Cynodon'tes, D. Laniarii, D. angulæres, cuspidati, columellares, oculares, morden'tes, Eye Teeth, (F.) Dents canines, lanières, angulaires, oculaires, aillères, ou conoides. The teeth between the lateral incisors and small molares of each jaw;—so named because they resemble the teeth of the dog.

CANINE FOSSA, Fossa Canina, (F.) Fosse Canine. A small depression on the superior maxillary bone, above the dens caninus, which gives attachment to the caninus or levator anguli oris muscle.

CANINE LAUGH, or Sardon'ic laugh, Risus Caninus, Risus Sardon'icus, Sardi'asis, Sardon'asis, (F.) Ris canin, sardonique, moqueur. A sort of laugh, produced particularly by the spasmodic contraction of the Caninus muscle. Probably, this expression, as well as Cynic spasm, Caninus spasmus, may have originated in the resemblance of the affection to certain movements in the upper lip of the dog.

CANINUS, Levator anguli oris—c. Sentis, Rosa canina.

CANIRAM, Strychnos nux vomica.

CANIRUBUS, Rosa canina.

CANIS INTERFECTOR, Veratrum sabbilla—c. Ponticus, Castor fiber.

CAN'TIES, from canus, 'white.' Whiteness or grayness of the hair, and especially of that of the head, (F.) Canitie. When occurring in consequence of old age it is not a disease. Sometimes, it happens suddenly, and apparently in consequence of severe mental emotions. The causes, however, are not clear.

CANKER, Stomacacæ—c. of the mouth, Cancer aquaticus.

CANNA, Cassia fistula, Trachea—c. Brachii, Ulnæ—c. Domestica cruris, Tibiæ—c. Fistula, Cassia fistula—c. Indica, Sagittarium alexipharmacum—c. Major, Tibiæ—c. Minor, Fibula, Radius—c. Solutiva, Cassia fistula.

CANNABIS INDICA, Bangue.

CAN'ABIS SATI'VA, (F.) Chanvre, Chambric. The seed of this—Hempseed, Sem'ina Can'abnis, (F.) Chenevis, are oily and mucilaginous. The decoction is sometimes used in gonorrhœa.

CANNACORUS RADICE CROCEA, Curcuma longa.

CANNAMELLE. See Saccharum.

CANNE AROMATIQUE, Acorus calamus—c. Congo, Costus—c. de Rivière, Costus—c. à Sucre, see Saccharum.

CANNEBERGE, Vaccinium oxycoccus—c. Punctatæ, Vaccinium vitis idæa.

CANNELÉ or CANELÉ (F.), from canalis, 'a canal.' Sulcat'us, Striat'us, Canaliculat'us. Having a canal or groove—as, Muscle cannellé (Lieutaud,) the Gemini; Corps cannellés ou striés (Corpora striata:) Sonde cannellée, a grooved sound, &c. See Grooved.

CANNELLE, Laurus cinnamomum—c. Blanche, Canella alba—c. de la Chine, Laurus cassia—c. de Coromandel, Laurus cassia—c. Fausse, Laurus cassia—c. Giroflée, Myrtus caryophyllata—c. des Indes, Laurus cassia—c. de Java, Laurus cassia—c. de Malabar, Laurus cassia—c. Matte, Laurus cassia—c. Officinale, Laurus cinnamomum—c. Poirrée, see Winters aromatica.

CANNULA, Canula.

CANOPUM. See Sambucus.

CANTABRICA, Convolvulus cantabrica.

CANTABRUNO, Furfur.

CANTARELLUS, Meloe proscarabæus.

CANTATIO, Charin.

CANTERBURY, WATERS OF. Aqua Cantuaric' ses. The waters of Canterbury in Kent, England, are impregnated with iron, sulphur, and carbonic acid.

CANTERIUM, Cantherius.

CANTHARIDE TACHETÉE, Lytta vittata.

CANTHARIDINE. See Cantharis.

CANTHARIS, from καρθαρος, 'a scarabæus.' Musca Hispan'ica, Mel'oe vesicato'rius, Cantharis vesicato'ria, Lytta vesicato'ria. The Blistering Fly, Spanish Fly, (F.) Cantharides, Mouches, M. d'Espagne. This fly is much employed in medicine. It is the most common vesicatory. Given internally, and even when absorbed from the skin, it affects the urinary organs, exciting strangury. This may be prevented, in cases of blisters, by interposing between the blistering plaster and skin a piece of tissue paper. Diluents will relieve the strangury. Dose, half a grain to one grain. If kept dry, the flies will retain their activity for many years.

Their active principle has been separated from them—Canthar'idine, Cantharid'ina.

CANTHARIS VITTATA, Lytta vittata.

CANTHERIUM, Cantherium. The cross piece of wood in the apparatus, used by Hippocrates, for reducing luxations of the humerus.

CANTH'ITIS. Inflammation of the Canthus of the eye.

CANTHUM, Candi.

CANTHUS, καρθος, Epicant'his, Angulus ocul'aris; the corner or angle of the eye. The greater canthus is the inner angle, Hir'quis, Rbanter; the lesser canthus, the outer angle, Par'opia, Pega.

CANTIA'NUS PULVIS. A cordial powder, known under the name 'Countess of Kent's powder,' composed of coral, amber, crabs' eyes, prepared pearls, &c. It was given in cancer.

CANTION, Candi.

CAN'ULA or CAN'NULA, Au'liscos, Aulos.

Diminutive of Canna, 'a reed'; Tribulus, (F.) Canule ou Cannule. A small tube, of gold, silver, platina, iron, lead, wood, elastic gum, &c., used for various purposes in surgery.

CAOUTCHOUC, Indian Rubber, Elastic Gum, Cauchouc, Resina elastica, Cayenne Resin, Cauteluc. A substance formed from the milky juice of the Hevea Guianensis, Jatropha elastica, Ficus Indica, and Artocarpus integrifolia.—South American trees. It is insoluble in water and alcohol; but boiling water softens and swells it. It is soluble in the essential oils and in ether, when it may be blown into bladders. It is used in the fabrication of catheters, bougies, pessaries, &c.

CAPA-ISIAKKA, Bromelia ananas.

CAPBERN, WATERS OF. C. is in the department Hautes-Pyrénées, France. The waters contain sulphates, and carbonates of lime and magnesia, and muriate of magnesia. Temperature, 75° Fahrenheit. They are purgative.

CAPELET, Myrtus caryophyllata.

CAPELINE (F.) 'A Woman's Hat,' in French; Capistrum, from caput, 'head.' A sort of bandage, which, in shape, resembles a riding-hood. There are several kinds of Capelines. 1. That of the head, C. de la tête. See Bonnet d'Hippocrate. C. of the clavicle, employed in fractures of the acromion, clavicle and spine of the scapula. C. of an amputated limb—the bandage applied round the stump.

CAPER BUSH, Capparis spinosa.

CAPERS. See Capparis spinosa.

CAPETUS, Imperforation.

CAPHORA, Camphor.

CAPILLAIRE, Capillary, see Adiantum capillus veneris—c. du Canada, Adiantum pedatum—c. de Montpellier, Adiantum capillus veneris.

CAPILLAMENTUM, from Capillus, 'a hair.' Capillitium, Trichoma, Trichomation. Any villous or hairy covering. Also a small fibre, fibril.

CAPILLARY, Capillaris, Capillaceus, from capillus, 'a hair,' (F.) Capillaire. Hair-like; small.

The CAPILLARY VESSELS, (F.) Veissaux capillaires, are the extreme radicles of the arteries and veins, with perhaps a spongy tissue or parenchyma between the two. These, together, constitute the Capillary or intermediate system. In this system, all the secretions are performed, and animal heat probably elicited. They possess an action distinct from that of the heart, and are the seat of febrile and inflammatory diseases.

CAPILLATIO, Trichismus.

CAPILLUS, Coma, Chatē, Crinis, Pilus, Thrix, Cæsdries, (F.) Cheveu. This term is generally applied to the hair of the head: the characters of which vary, according to races, individuals, &c. Hairs arise in the cellular membrane, where the bulb is placed: and are composed of two parts—one, external, tubular, and transparent, of an epidermoid character; the other, internal and sui generis, which communicates to them their colour. The hair is insensible, and grows from the root.

CAPILLUS CANADENSIS, Adiantum pedatum.

CAPILLITIUM, Capillamentum, Entropion, Scalp.

CAPILLORUM DEFLUVIUM, Alopecia.

CAPIPLENIUM, from caput, 'the head,' and plenum, 'full.' A word, employed with different significations. A variety of catarrh.—Schneider. A heaviness or disorder in the head common at Rome, like the καρφαρία, Carbaria, of the Greeks.—Baglivi.

CAPISTRATIO, Phimosia.

CAPISTRUM, Capeline, Chevestre, Trismus—c. Auri, Borax.

CAPISTRUM, Phimos, Cemos, χιμος, 'a halter.' This name has been given to several bandages for the head.—See Capeline, Chevestre.

CAPITALIA REMEDIA, Cephalic remedies.

CAPITALIS, Cephalic.

CAPITELLIUM, Alembic.

CAPITELLUM. See Caput.

CAPITEUX, Heady.

CAPITONES, from caput, 'the head.' Fœtuses whose heads are so large as to render labour difficult.

CAPITILUVIUM, from caput, 'the head,' and lavare, 'to wash.' A bath for the head.

CAPITULUM, Alembic, Condyle, see Caput.—c. Martis, Eryngium campestre—c. Santorini, Corniculum laryngis.

CAPITULUVIUM, Bath, (head.)

CAPNISMOS, Fumigation.

CAPNITIS, Tutia.

CAPNORCHIS, Fumaria bulbosa.

CAPNOS, Fumaria.

CAPOJ, Cagot.

CAPOT, Cagot.

CAPPARIS SPINOSA, Cap'paris, Cappar, Cap'pria. The Prickly Caper Bush, (F.) Capprier. Family, Capparidæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monogynia. The bark of the root and the buds have been esteemed astringent and diuretic. The buds are a well known pickle:—Engl. Capers, (F.) Câpres.

CAPPARIS BADUC'CA, Baduk'ka. A species of caper, cultivated in India, on account of the beauty of its flowers. The Orientals make a liniment with its juice, with which they rub pained parts. The flowers are purgative.

CAPPONE, WATERS OF. At Cappone, in the isle of Ischia, are waters containing carbonate and muriate of soda, and carbonate of lime. Temp. 100° Fah.

CAPREOLARIS, from capreolus, 'a tendril,' Cissoïdes, Elicoides, (F.) Capréolairc. Twisted.

VASA CAPREOLARIA. Some have thus called the spermatc arteries and veins, on account of their numerous contortions.

CAPREOLUS, Helix.

CÂPRES. See Capparis spinosa.

CAPRIA, Capparis spinosa.

CAPRICORNUS, Plumbum.

CÂPRIER, Capparis spinosa.

CAPRIFOLIA, Lonicera periclymenum.

CAPRIZANS, δοξαδίζωρ. That which leaps like a goat. An epithet used by Herophilus for the pulse when irregular and unequal.

CAPSA, Boîte, Capsule, Case—c. Cordis, Pericardium.

CAP'SICUM AN'NUUM, from καπιω, 'I bite.' The systematic name of the plant whence

Cayenne Pepper is obtained. Piper Indicum, Solidum urens, Sitiquastrum Plinii, Piper Braziliarum, Piper Guineense, Piper Calcutticum, Piper Turcicum, C. Hispanicum, Piper Lusitanicum, Cayenne Pepper, Guinea Pepper, (F.) Piment, Capsique, Poivre d'Inde, Poivre de Guinée, Corail des Jardins. The pungent, aromatic properties of the Baccæ Capsici, Capsicum Berries, are yielded to ether, alcohol, and water. They are highly stimulant and rubefacient, and are used as a condiment. Their active principle is alcaloid, and is called Capsicine.

CAPSICUM HISPANICUM, Capsicum annuum.

CAPSIQUE, Capsicum annuum.

CAPSITIS, Phacitis.

CAPSULA, Boütië—c. Articularis, Capsular ligament—c. Cordis, Pericardium—c. Nervorum, Neurilema.

CAPSULÆ SEMINALES, Vesiculæ s.

CAPSULAIRE, Capsular.

CAPSULAR. Relating to a capsula or capsule, Capsularis, (F.) Capsulaire.

CAPSULAR LIGAMENT, Ligamentum capsularis, Capsula articularis, Articular capsule, Fibrous capsule, &c. (F.) Ligament capsulaire, Capsule articulaire, Capsule fibreuse, &c. Membranous, fibrous, and elastic bags or capsules, of a whitish consistence, thick, and resisting, which surround joints.

CAPSULAR OF SUPRARENAL ARTERIES AND VEINS. Vessels, belonging to the suprarenal capsules. They are divided into superior, middle, and inferior. The first proceed from the inferior phrenic, the second from the aorta itself, and the third from the renal artery. The corresponding veins enter the phrenic, vena cava, and renal.

CAPSULE, Capsula, Capsa, a box, (F.) Capsule. This name has been given, by the Anatomists, to parts bearing no analogy to each other.

CAPSULE OF THE HEART, Capsula cordis, the Pericardium, (q. v.)

CAPSULE, FIBROUS, Capsular ligament.

CAPSULES, GELATINOUS, Capsule gelatinæ, Capsules of gelatine. A recent invention by which copaiba and other disagreeable oils can be enveloped in gelatine so as to conceal their taste.

CAPSULE OF GLISSON, Capsula Glissonii, C. communis Glissonii, Vagina Portæ, V. Glissonii. A sort of membrane, described by Glisson, which is nothing more than dense cellular membrane surrounding the vena porta and its ramifications in the liver.

CAPSULES, RENAL OR SUPRARENAL OF ATRABILIARY, Renal Glands, Glandulæ suprarenales, Capsulæ renales, suprarenales vel atrabiliales, Renæs succenturiati, (F.) Capsules surrenales ou atrabilières. Two flat, triangular bodies, which cover the upper part of the kidneys, as with a helmet. A hollow cavity in their interior contains a brown, reddish or yellowish fluid. They were long supposed to be the secretory organs of the fancied atrabilis. They are much larger in the fœtus than in the adult. Their uses are not known.

CAPSULE, SEMINAL, Capsula seminalis. BARTHOLINE thus designates the extremity of the vas deferens, which is sensibly dilated in the vicinity of the vesiculæ seminales. Some anatomists apply this name to the vesiculæ themselves.

CAPSULES, SYNOVIAL, Capsule Synoviales. Membranous bags, surrounding all the movable articulations and canals, which give passage to tendons. They exhalate, from their articular surface, a fluid, whose function is to favour the motions of parts upon each other. See Bursa Mucosa, and Synovia.

CAPSULES SURRENALES OU ATRABILIAIRES, Capsules, renal.

CAPSULITIS. See Phacitis.

CAPUCHION, Trapezium.

CAPUCINE, Tropœolum inajus.

CAPUT, 'the head,' (q. v.) Also the top of a bone or other part, (F.) Tête. The head of the small bones is sometimes termed capitulum, capitellum, cephalidium, and cephalum.

CAPUT ASPERÆ ARTERIÆ, Larynx.

CAPUT GALLINAGINIS, Verumontanum, (F.) Crête urétrale. A projection, situate in the prostate, before the neck of the bladder. It is like the head of a woodcock in miniature, and, around it, open the seminal ducts and the ducts of the prostate.

CAPUT MONACHI, Leontodon Taraxacum—c. Obstipum, Torticollis.

CAPUT PURGIA. Remedies, which the ancients regarded as superior for purging the head:—errhines, sternutatories, apoplegmatissantia, &c.

CAPUT SCAPULÆ, Acromion.

CAPUT SUCCEDANEUM. A term sometimes used for the tumefied scalp, which first presents in certain cases of labour.

CAPUT TESTIS, Epididymis.

CAQUE-SANGUE OU CAGUE-SANGUE. Old French words, which signify Bloody evacuations, (F.) Déjections sanguinolentes. They come from caquer, 'to go to stool,' and sanguis, 'blood.' Under this term was comprehended every affection, in which blood is discharged from the bowels.

CARABACCIUM. An aromatic wood of India, of a yellowish colour, and a smell like that of the clove. Its decoction and infusion are given as stomachic and antiscorbutic.

CARABUS. A genus of coleopterous insects. Two species, the chrysocephalus and ferruginus, have been recommended for the toothache. They must be pressed between the fingers, and then rubbed on the gum and tooth affected.

CARACTÈRE, Character.

CARAGNA, Caranna.

CARAMATA, Arumari. A tree in the inland parts of Pomerani, which furnishes a febrifuge bark, which Dr. Hancock says may be used in typhoid and remittent fevers in which the cinchona is either useless or pernicious.

CARAMBOLO, Averrhoa carambola.

CARANANA, Caragna, Tucamahaca Caragna, Caranæ Gammi, G. Brell'sis, (F.) Caragne, Gomme Carague ou Caranc. A gummy substance, obtained from South America in impure masses, which flows from a large tree in New Spain. It preserves its softness for a long time, has an aromatic smell, and a slightly acid and bitter taste. It was formerly used as a vulnerary and in plasters.

CARA SCHULLI, Frutex Indicus spinosus, Barleria braxifolia. A Malabar plant, which, when applied externally, is maturative and resolvent. The decoction of its root is used, in the country, in ischuria.

CARAWAY, Carum.

CARBASUS, Linteum Carptum, Carpia, Motos, Linamentum, from καρπος, 'a filament, or from car'pere, 'to card.' Celsus. Charpie, Lint. The filaments, obtained by unravelling old linen cut into small pieces; or by scraping it with a knife. The former is termed Charpie brute, the latter Charpie rapée. Charpie is applied to many useful purposes in Surgery. Of it are formed compresses, tents, &c.

CARBO, Carbo Ligni, Charcoal, (F.) Charbon. Fresh charcoal is antiseptic. It is used to improve the digestive organs in cases of worms, dyspepsia, &c., as a cataplasm to gangrenous and fetid ulcers, tinea, &c., and forms a good tooth-powder. Dose, gr. x to ʒj. Also, Anthrax, (q. v.)

CARBO ANIMALIS, Carbo carnis, Animal charcoal, (F.) Charbon animal. It is given in the same cases as the Carbo Ligni, and has been extolled in cancer. Dose, gr. ss to gr. iij.

CARBON HUMANUM. The human excrement.—Paracelsus.

CARBO, Mineralis, Graphites—c. Palpebrarum, Anthracosis.

CARBONAS or CARBO'NAS. A carbonate, (F.) Carbonate. A salt, formed by the combination of carbonic acid with a salifiable base. The carbonates are either full, or with an excess of base—i. e. Subcarbonates.

CARBONAS NATRICUM, Sodæ carbonas.

CARBONÉ, Carbonated.

CARBONATE D'AMMONIAQUE, Ammonia carbonas.

CARBONATED, Carbonatus, Aërat, (F.) Carboné, Aéré. That which is impregnated with carbonic acid.

CARBONIC ACID, Ac'idum Carbonicum, Solid Air of Hales, Fictitious Air, Fixed Air, Carbonaceous Acid, Calcareous Acid, Aërial Acid, Mephitic Acid, (F.) Acide Carbonique. This gas, which neither supports respiration nor combustion, is not often used in Medicine. It is the refreshing ingredient in effervescent draughts, poultices, &c. It is often found occupying the lower parts of mines (when it is called the choke damp), caverns, tombs, wells, brewers' vats, &c., and not unfrequently has been the cause of death. Lime thrown into such places soon absorbs the acid.

CARBO'NIS SESQUI-IODIDUM, C. Sesqui-Ioduratum, Sesqui-Iodide or Sesqui-Ioduret of Carbon. This is made by mixing concentrated alcoholic solutions of iodine and potassa, until the former loses its colour; a solution is obtained from which water throws down a yellow precipitate—the sesqui-iodide of carbon. It has been used in enlarged glands and in some cutaneous affections, applied externally, (ʒss, to ʒvj of cerate.)

CARBO'NIS SULPHURE'TUM, Sulphure'tum Carbonii, Carbonicum Sulphuratum, Alcohol Sulphuris, Bisulphure'tum Carbonii, Sulphuret of Carbon, Carburet of Sulphur, (F.) Sulfure de Carbon. This transparent, colourless fluid, which has a very penetrating, disagreeable odour, and a taste which is cooling at first, but afterwards acrid and somewhat aromatic, is a diffusible excitant. It is diaphoretic, diuretic, and has been said to have proved emmenagogue. It is also used in nervous diseases as an antispasmodic. Dose, one drop to four, repeated frequently.

It is used externally, where a cooling influence has to be rapidly exerted.

CARBUNCLE, Anthrax—c. Fungous, Terminus—c. of the Tongue, Glossanthrax—c. Berry, Terminus.

CARBUNCLED FACE, Gutta rosea.

CARBUNCULAR EXANTHEM, Anthracia. CARBUNCULUS, Anthrax—c. Anginosus, Cynanche maligna.

CARBUNCULUS RUBINUS. A red, shining, and transparent stone, from the Isle of Ceylon; formerly employed in medicine as a preservative against several poisons, the plague, &c.

CARBUNCULUS ULCUSCULOSA, Cynanche maligna.

CAR/CAROS, from καρζαίρω, 'I resound,' 'I tremble.' A fever, in which the patient has a general tremor, accompanied with an unceasing noise in the ears.

CARCINOSES, Carcinomatous, Chancruse.

CARCINO'MA, from καρκινος, 'a crab.' Some authors have called thus, indolent tumours different from cancer; others, incipient cancer; and others, again, the species of cancer in which the affected structure assumes the appearance of cerebral substance; whilst the majority of authors use Carcinoma in the same sense as Cancer.

CARCINOMA HEMATODES, Hæmatodes fungus—c. Melanoticum, Melanosis—c. Spongiosum, Hæmatodes fungus.

CARCINOM'ATOUS, Carcinodes, Carcinoides. Relating to cancer.

CARCINÔME SANGLANTE, Hæmatodes fungus.

CARCINOS, Cancer.

CARDAMANTICA, Cardamine pratensis, Lepidium Iberis.

CARDAMINDUM MINUS, Tropæolum majus.

CARDAMINE PRATEN'SIS, Cardaminæ, Cardamantica, Nasturtium Aquaticum, Cardamon, Culi flos, Iberis sophia, Nasturtium pratense, Ladies-smock, Cuckoo flower. Ord. Cruciferae. (F.) Cresson élégant, Cresson des prés, Passerage sauvage. The flowers have been considered useful as antispasmodics, in the dose of ʒj to ʒij. They are probably inert.

CARDAMINE FONTANA, Sisymbrium nasturtium.

CARDAMOM, LESSER, Amomum cardamomum.

CARDAMOME, Amomum cardamomum—c. de la Côte de Malabar, Amomum cardamomum.

CARDAMOMUM MAJUS, Amomum grana paradisi—c. Minus, Amomum cardamomum—c. Piperatum, Amomum grana paradisi.

CARDAMON, Cardamine pratensis.

CARDÈRE, Dipsacus sylvestris—c. Cultivé, Dipsacus fullonum.

CARDIA, καρδία, 'the heart,' Stomachus, Orific'ium sinistrum ventriculi. The superior or œsophageal orifice of the stomach. Also, the Heart, (q. v.)

CARDIAC, Cardiacus, from καρδια, 'the heart;' or the upper orifice of the stomach, (F.) Cardiacæ. Relating to the heart or to the upper orifice of the stomach.

The CARDIAC OR CORONARY ARTERIES, (F.) Artères cardiaques ou coronaires, are two in number. They arise from the aorta, a little above the free edge of the sigmoid valves, and are distributed on both surfaces of the heart.

The CARDIAC OR CORONARY VEINS, (F.) Veines Cardiaques, are commonly four in number; two anterior and two posterior. They open into the right auricle by one orifice, which is furnished with a valve, and is called, by Portal, Sinus coronaire du Cœur.

CARDIAC NERVES, (F.) Nerfs cardiaques. These are commonly three on each side; a superior, middle and inferior, which are furnished by corresponding cervical ganglia. Commonly, there are but two on the left side; the upper and middle, which draw their origin from the last two cervical ganglia. Scarpa calls the superior—C. superficialis; the middle—C. profundus or C. Magnus; and the inferior—C. parvus. There are, besides, Cardiac filaments, (F.) Filæ cardiaques, furnished by the par vagum or pneumo-gastric nerve, and which become confounded with the above.

The CARDIAC PLEXUS, Ganglion cardiacum. A nervous network, formed by the different nerves above mentioned. It is situate at the posterior part of the aorta, near its origin. It affords numerous branches, which are distributed to the heart and great vessels. The name Cardiac has also been given to the glands, vessels, and nerves, which surround the superior or cardiac orifice of the stomach.

CARDIACA CRISPA, Leonorus cardiaca—c. Passio, Cardialgia.

CARDIACUS, Cardial, Stomachal.

CARDIAGMUS, Cardialgia.

CARDIAGRAPHY, Cardiagra'phia, from καρδια, 'the heart,' and γραφη, 'a description.' An anatomical description of the heart.

CARDIAL'GIA, Cardiaca Passio, Colica Ventriculi, Cordolium, Cardilæa, Dyspepsody'phia, Cardiod'yncæ, Gastral'gia, Gastrodym'ia, Stomocal'gia, Cardiacus Morbus, Cardiog'mus; from καρδια, 'the cardiac orifice of the stomach,' and αλγος, 'pain:' pain of the stomach, also, Heartburn, (F.) Cardialgie. Impaired appetite, with gnawing or burning pain in the stomach or epigastrium,—Morsas vel ardor ventriculi, Soda, Limo'sis cardial'gia mordens, Rosio Ston'achi;—a symptom of dyspepsia.

CARDIALGIA INFLAMMATORIA, Gastritis—c. Sputatoria, Pyrosis.

CARDIALO'GIA, from καρδια, 'the heart,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A treatise on the heart.

CARDIARIUS; same etymology. A name given to worms, said to have been found in the heart or pericardium.

CARDIATOMIA, from καρδια, 'the heart,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' Dissection of the heart.

CARDIEURYSMA. See Aneurisma.

CARDILÆA, Cardialgia.

CARDIM'ELECH, from καρδια, 'the heart,' and מלך, Melech, (Hebr.) 'a governor.' A supposititious active principle seated in the heart, and governing the vital functions.—Dolæus.

CARDINAL FLOWER, BLUE, Lobelia syphilitica.

CARDINAMENTUM, Ginglymus, Gomphosis.

CARDIOBOTANUM, Centaurea benedicta.

CARDIOCE'LE, from καρδια, 'the heart,' and κληνη, 'rupture.' Rupture of the heart, especially into the abdominal cavity.

CARDIODYNE. Cardialgia.

CARDIOG'MUS. Hippocrates employed this word synonymously with Cardialgia. In the time of Galen it was used, by some writers, for certain pulsations of the heart, analogous to palpitations. Sauvages understood, by Cardiog'mus, an aneurism of the heart or great vessels, when still obscure.

CARDIOGNUS CORDIS SINISTRI, Angina pectoris.

CARDIONCHI. See Aneurism.

CARDIOPALMUS, Cardiotomus.

CARDIORRHÆ'XIS, Ruptura Cordis, from καρδια, 'the heart,' and ρηξις, 'laceration.' Laceration of the heart.

CARDIOTROMUS, Palpitatio Cordis trepidans, Cardiopalmus, Trepidatio Cordis, from καρδια, 'the heart,' and τρομος, 'tremor.' Rapid and feeble palpitation, or fluttering of the heart.

CARDIOTROTUS, from καρδια, 'the heart,' and τροπος, 'I wound.' One affected with a wound of the heart.—Galen.

CARDIPERICARDITIS. See Pericarditis.

CARDITIS, from καρδια, 'the heart,' and the termination itis. Inflammation of the fleshy substance of the heart. Empress'na Carditis, (F.) Cardite. The symptoms of this affection are by no means clear. They are often confounded with those of Pericarditis;—the inflammation of the membrane investing the heart. Carditis, indeed, with many, includes both the inflammation of the investing membrane and that of the heart itself. See Pericarditis, and Endocarditis.

CARDO, Ginglymus.

CARDOPATIUM, Carlina acaulis.

CARDUUS AL'TILIS, Cynara scolymus—c. Benedictus, Centaurea benedicta—c. Brazilianus, Bromelia ananas—c. Domesticus capite majori, Cynari scolymus—c. Hemorrhoidalis, Cirsium arvense.

CARDUUS MARIANUS, Carduus Mar'ia, Silybium, Carduus lactens, Spina alba, Common Milk Thistle or Ladies' Thistle, (F.) Chardon-Marie. The herb is a bitter tonic. The seeds are oleaginous. It is not used.

CARDUUS PINEUS, Atractylis gummifera—c. Sativus, Carthamus tinctorius—c. Sativus non spinosus, Cynara scolymus—c. Solstitialis, Centaurea calcitrapa—c. Stellatus, Centaurea calcitrapa—c. Tomentosus, Onopordium acanthium.

CAREBA'RIA or CAREBARI'A, from κρη, 'the head,' and βαρος, 'weight.' Scordinc'ma, Cardinc'ma, heaviness of the head.—Hippocr., Galen.

CARE'NA, Karc'na. The twenty-fourth part of a drop.—Ruland and Johnson.

CAREUM, Carum.

CAREX ARENARIA, Sarsaparilla Germanica.

CARIACOU. A beverage, used in Cayenne, and formed of a mixture of cassava, potato, and sugar, fermented.

CARICA, Ficus carica.

CARICA PAPAYA. The Papaw tree, (F.) Papayer. Ord. Artocarpæ. A native of America, India, and Africa. The fruit has somewhat of the flavour of a pumpkin, and is eaten like it. The milky juice of the plant, and the seed and root have been regarded as anthelmintic.

CARICUM;—said to have been named after its inventor Caricus. Car'yeum. A detergent application to ulcers; composed of black hellebore, sandarach, copper, lead, sulphur, opiment, cantharides, and oil of cedar.—Hippocrates.

CARIE, Caries.

CARIE, Carious.

CARIES, Nigri'ties os'sium. An ulceration of bone,—Necrosis being the death of the bone. It resembles the gangrene of soft parts. Hence it has been termed Caries gangrenosa, Gangrana Caries, G. Ossium, Tere'do, Euros, (F.) Carie. It is recognised by the swelling of the bone, which precedes and accompanies it; by the abscesses it occasions; the fistulæ which form; by the sanious character, peculiar odour and quantity of the suppuration, and by the evidence afforded by probing.

The most common causes of caries are blows;—the action of some virus, and morbid diatheses. When dependent on any virus in the system, this must be combated by appropriate remedies. When entirely local, it must be converted, where practicable, into a state of necrosis or death of the affected part. For this end stimulants are applied, the actual cautery, &c.

CARIES DENTIIUM, Dental gangrene—c. of the Vertebra, Vertebral disease.

CARIEUX, Carious.

CARIM CURINI, Justitia ecbolium.

CARINA, Vertebral column.

CARIOUS, Cario'sus, (F.) Carie, Carieuz. Affected with caries.

CARIUM TERRÆ, Calx.

CARIVE, Myrtus pimenta.

CARIVILLANDI, Smilax sarsaparilla.

CARLYNA. 'Carline Thistle.'

The CARLYNA ACAULIS, Chamaeleon album, Cardopatum, (F.) Carline suns tige, which grows in the Pyrenees, and on the mountains of Switzerland, Italy, &c. has been recommended as a tonic, emmenagogue, and sudorific.

CARLINE SANS TIGE, Carlina acaulis.

CARLO SANCTO, RADIX. 'St. Charles's Root:' found in Mechoacan, in America. The bark is aromatic, bitter, and acrid. It is considered to be sudorific, and to strengthen the gums and stomach.

CARLSBAD, MINERAL WATERS OF. Carlsbad is a town in Bohemia, 24 miles from Egra, celebrated for its hot baths. It contains about 47 parts in the 100 of purging salts. It is a thermal saline; temperature 165 Fahrenheit.

CARMANTINE, Justitia pectoralis—c. Pectorale, Justitia pectoralis.

CARMEN, 'a verse,' because charms usually consisted of a verse. A charm (q. v.) an amulet.

CARMINANTIA, Carminatives.

CARMINATIVES, Carminant'ia or Carminat'ia, from carmen, 'a verse,' or 'charm,'

Antiphys'ica, Xantica, Ξαντα, (F.) Carminat'is. Remedies, which allay pain, and cause the expulsion of flatus from the alimentary canal. They are generally of the class of aromatics.

THE FOUR GREATER CARMINATIVE HOT SEEDS, Quatuor sem'ina cal'ida majo'ra carminat'ia, were, of oid, anise, carui, cummin, and fenel.

THE FOUR LESSER CARMINATIVE HOT SEEDS, Quatuor sem'ina cal'ida mino'ra, were bishop's weed, stone parsley, smallage, and wild carrot.

CARMOT. A name given, by the alchemists, to the matter, which they believed to constitute the Philosopher's Stone.

CARNABADIA, Carum, (seed.)

CARNABADIUM, Cuminum cyminum.

CARNATIO, Syssarcosis.

CARNELIAN, Cornelian.

CARNEOLUS, Cornelian.

CARNEOUS, Car'neus, Carnosus, Sarco'des, from caro, 'flesh,' (F.) Charnu. Consisting of flesh, or resembling flesh.

FLESHY OF MUSCULAR FIBRES, (F.) Fibres charnues ou musculaires, are fibres belonging to a muscle.

THE COLUMNÆ CARNEÆ of the heart, (F.) Colonnes charnues, are muscular projections, situate in the cavities of the heart. They are called, also, Musculi Papillares.

PANNICULUS CARNOSUS, (F.) Pannicule charnu;—Carnosa Cutis; a muscular membrane, adhering to the skin of certain animals, whose use is to move the integuments with the hair, feathers, &c.

CARNEUM MARSUPIUM, Ischio-trochanterianus.

CARNICULA. Diminutive of Caro, 'flesh.' The gums, Gingivæ, (q. v.)—Fallopium.

CARNIFICATION, Carnificatio, from caro, 'flesh,' and fieri, 'to become.' Transformation into flesh. A morbid state of certain organs, in which the tissue acquires a consistence like that of fleshy or muscular parts. It is sometimes observed in hard parts, the texture becoming softened, as in Osteo-sarco'ma. When it occurs in the lungs, they present a texture like that of liver. Hepatization is, however, the term more usually applied to this condition.

CARNIFORMIS, ABSCESSUS. An abscess, whose orifice is hard, the sides thick and callous; and which ordinarily occurs in the neighbourhood of the articulations.—M. A. Severinus.

CARNIVOROUS, Carnivorus, Sarcophagus, Creophilus, Creophilus, (F.) Carnivore, from καρξ, 'flesh,' and φαιω, 'I eat.' That which eats flesh. Any substance which destroys excrescences in wounds, ulcers, &c.

CARNOSITAS. Carnosities or Caruncles in the Ure'thra, (F.) Carnosités ou Caroncules de l'urètre, (F.) Carnosités, are small fleshy excrescences or fungous growths, which were, at one time, presumed to exist in the male ure'thra, whenever retention of urine followed gonorrhœa.

M. Cullérier uses the term Carnosité rénérienne for a cutaneous, cellular, and membranous tumour, dependent upon the syphilitic virus. See, also, Polysarcia.

CARNOSUS, Carneous.

CARO, Flesh—c. Accessoria, see Flexor lon-

CARPOS, Fruit.

CARPOTICA, from καρπος, 'fruit.' Diseases affecting impregnation. Irregularity, difficulty or danger produced by parturition:—the 3d order, class Genetica, of Good.

CARPUS, Carpis'mus, Brachia'le, Rassecta, Rassecta, the wrist, (F.) Carpe, Poignet. The part between the forearm and hand. Eight bones compose it, (in two rows.) In the superior row there are, from without to within—the Scaphoides or navicula're, Laudrè or Semilunarè, Cu'neiformè, and Orbicula'rè or Pi'siformè. In the lower row—Trapezium, Trapezoides, Magnum, and Un'ciformè.

CARRAGEEN MOSS, Fucus crispus.

CARRÉ DE LA CUISSE, Quadratus femoris—c. des Lombes, Quadratus lumborum—c. du Menton, Depressor labii inferioris—c. du Pied, Extensor brevis digitorum pedis.

CARREAU, Tabes mesenterica.

CARRÉE. See Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans, (accessorius.)

CARRELET, (F.) Acus triangularis. A straight needle, two or three inches long, the point of which is triangular; and which the ancients used in different operations, also, a wooden, triangular frame for fixing a cloth through which different pharmaceutical preparations are passed.

CARROT, CANDY, Athamanta cretensis—c. Deadly, Thapsia—c. Plant, Daucus carota.

CARTHAMUS TINCTORIUS, An'yon, Cnicus, Crocus Germanicus, Crocus Saracenicus, Carthamum officinarum, Car'duus sativus, Saffron flower, Safranum, Safflower, Bastard Saffron, (F.) Carthame, Safran bâtard, Carthame des Teinturiers. Family, Cynaroccephalæ. Scz. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia æqualis. The seeds are aromatic, cathartic, and diuretic; yet to the parroquet they are an article of food, hence their name, Graines de Perroquet. The flowers are employed as a cosmetic.

CARTHEGON. See Buxus.

CARTILAGE ANONYME, Cricoid, (cartilage)—c. Epiglottic, Epiglottis—c. Supraarytenoid, Corniculum laryngis—c. Tarsal, see Tarsus.

CARTILAGINES GUTTURALES, Arytenoid cartilages—c. Triquetrae, Arytenoid cartilages.

CARTILAGINIS ARYTENOIDÆÆ CAPITULUM, Corniculum laryngis.

CARTILAGINOUS, Cartilagin'ens, Cartilagin'ous, Chondr'des, Chondroï'des, (F.) Cartilagin'eux. Belonging to, or resembling cartilage.

CARTILAGO, Chondros, Car'tilage, (F.) Cartilage. A solid part of the animal body, of a medium consistence between bone and ligament, and which in the fetus is a substitute for bone, but in the adult exists only in the joints, at the extremities of the ribs, &c. Cartilages are of a whitish colour, flexible, compressible, and very elastic, and some of them apparently inorganic. They are composed, according to J. Davy, of .44 albumen, .55 water, and .01 phosphate of lime.

The ARTICULAR CARTILAGES, or Obdu'cent Cartilages, invest bony surfaces, which are in contact; hence they are called investing or in- crusting cartilages, (F.) Cartilages de revêtement ou d'encroutement.

The INTERARTICULAR CARTILAGES are such as are situate within the joints, as in the knee-joint.

The CARTILAGES OF THE RIBS are, in some respects, only prolongations of the ribs. Those of the nose, of the meatus auditorius, and Eustachian tube, present a similar arrangement. Other cartilages resemble a union of fibrous and cartilaginous textures; hence their name, Fibro-cartilages.

CARTILAGES OF OSSIFICATION are such as, in the progress of ossification, have to form an integrant part of bones; as those of the long bones in the new-born infant. These are termed temporary; the others being permanent. All the cartilages, with the exception of the articular, are surrounded by a membrane analogous to the periosteum, called Perichondrium.

CARTILAGO CLYPEALIS, Thyroid cartilage—c. Ensiformis, Xiphoid cartilage—c. Innominata, Cricoid—c. Mucronata, Xiphoid cartilage—c. Peltalis, Thyroid cartilage—c. Scutiformis, Thyroid cartilage—c. Uvifer, Uvula—c. Xiphoides, Xiphoid cartilage.

CARUM, from Caria, a province of Asia. Cd'reum, Carum Car'ui, Carvi, Cum'num pratense, Carus, Car'uon, the Car'away, (F.) Carvi, Cumin des prés. Family, Umbelliferae. Scz. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The seeds, Carnab'dia, Car'oua, are carminative. Dose, gr. x to ʒij, swallowed whole or bruised. The oil, Olèum Car'ui, (F.) Huile de Carvi, has the properties of the seeds. Dose, gr<sup>tt</sup> ij to vj.

CARUNCLE, Carun'cula, diminutive of caro, 'flesh.' A small portion of flesh, Sar'cion. A fleshy excrescence,—Echyma carun'cula, (F.) Caruncule.

CARUNCLE, Carnositas.

CARUNCULA LACHRYMALIS, (F.) Caruncule lacrymale. A small, reddish, follicular body, situate at the inner angle of the eye. It secretes a gummy substance.

CARUNCULÆ CUTICULARES, Nymphæ.

CARUNCULÆ MAMILLARES. The extremities of the lactiferous tubes in the nipples. The olfactory nerves (q. v.) have been so called by some.

CARUNCULÆ MYRTIFORMES, C. vaginal'es, Glandulæ myrtiform'es, (F.) Caruncules Myrtiform'es. Small, reddish tubercles, more or less firm, of variable form, and uncertain number, situate near the orifice of the vagina, and formed by the mucous membrane. They are regarded as the remains of the Hymen.

CARUNCULÆ PAPILLARES, Papillæ of the kidney.

CARUNCULOUS. Relating to caruncles or carnosities. Carun'cular.

CARUON, Carum.

CARUS, καρος, Sopor cardiacus, Profound sleep. The last degree of coma, with complete insensibility, which no stimulus can remove, even for a few instants. Sopor, Coma, Lethargia, and Carus, are four degrees of the same condition.

CARUS APOPLEXIA, Apoplexy—c. Asphyxia, Asphyxia—c. Catalepsia, Catalepsy—c. Ecstasis, Ecstasis—c. Hydrocephalus, Hydrocephalus internus—c. ab Insolatione, Coup de soleil

CARVI, Carum.

CARYA, Juglans regia—c. Basilica, Juglans regia.

CARYEDON CATAGMA. See Fracture.

CARYOCOSTINUM, Confectio scammoniae.

CARYOCOSTINUS. An electuary prepared of the costus and other aromatic substances, &c. It was cathartic.

CARYON PONTICON, Corylus avellana (nut.)

CARYOPHYLLA, Geum urbanum.

CARYOPHYLLATA, Geum urbanum.

CARYOPHYLLUM RUBRUM, Dianthus caryophyllus.

CARYOPHYLLUS AMERICANUS, see Myrtus pimenta—c. Aromaticus, Eugenia caryophyllata—c. Hortensis, Dianthus caryophyllus—c. Vulgaris, Geum urbanum.

CARYOTI. The best kind of dates.—Galen.

CAS RARES, (F.) Rare cases. This term is used, by the French, for pathological facts, which vary from what is usual. See a celebrated article under this head in the Dictionnaire des Sciences Médicales, Vol. iv.

CASAMUM, Cyclamen.

CASAMUNAR, Cassumuniar.

CAS'CARA, CASCARILLA. Spanish words which signify bark and little bark, under which appellations the bark (Cinchona) is known in Peru. They are now applied to the bark of the Croton cascarilla.

CASCARILLA, Croton cascarilla.

CASCHEU, Catechu.

CASE, Capsa, Th'ea, (F.) Caissc. This name is given to boxes for the preservation of instruments; or for medicines necessary in hospital or other service. We say, e. g.—A case of amputating, or trepanning instruments.

CASE, Casus. The condition of a patient;—as a case of fever, &c. (F.) Observation. Also, the history of a disease.

CASEARIUS, Cheesy.

CASEOSUS, Cheesy.

CASEUS, Cheese—c. Equinus, Hippace.

CASEUX, Cheesy.

CASHEW, Anacardium occidentale.

CASHOO. An aromatic drug of Hindustan, said to possess pectoral virtues.

CASHOW, Catechu.

CASIA, Laurus cassia.

CASMINA, Cassumuniar.

CASSA, Thorax.

CASSADA ROOT, Jatropha manihot.

CASSAVA ROOT, Jatropha manihot.

CASSE AROMATIQUE, Laurus cassia—c. En bâtons, Cassia fistula—c. en Bois, Laurus cassia—c. des Boutiques, Cassia fistula—c. Sené, Cassia senna.

CASSE-LUNETTES, Cyanus segetum, Euphrasia officinalis.

CASSEENA, Ilex vomitoria.

CASSENOLÉS. See Quercus cerris.

CASSIA, Laurus cassia—c. Absus—c. Cinnamomea, Laurus cassia—c. Caryophyllata, Myrtus caryophyllata—c. Canella, Laurus cassia—c. Egyptian, Cassia senna.

CAS'SIA FIS'TULA, Cas'sia nigra, Cassia fistula'ris, C. Alexandri'na, Canna, Canna soluti'va, Canna fistula, Cathartocar'pus, Purging Cassia, (F.) Casse Cuneficier, Casse en bâtons, Casse des Boutiques. The pulp of the Cassia Fis'tula or Cathartocar'pus Fis'tula. Fam. Leguminosæ. Ser. Syst. Decandria Monogynia, Pulpa Cas'sie, Cassie Aramentum, which is contained in long pods, is black, bright, and shining; sweet, slightly acid, and inodorous. It is laxative in the dose of  $\zeta$ iv to  $\zeta$ j.

CASSIA LIGNEA, Laurus cassia—c. Lignca Malabarica, Laurus cassia.

CASSIA MARILAN'DICA, American Senna. The leaves of this plant are similar, in virtue, to the cassia senna. They are, however, much inferior in strength.

CASSIA, PURGING, Cassia fistula.

CASSIA SENNA. The name of the plant, which affords senna. Senna Fo'lia, Senna Alexandri'na, Senna Itali'ca, Sena, Senna or Egyptian Cassia, (F.) Sené, Casse Sené. The leaves of senna have a faint smell, and bitterish taste. The active part is extracted by alcohol and water. Their activity is injured by boiling water. They are a hydrogogue cathartic, and apt to gripe. Dose of the powder  $\mathfrak{z}$ j to  $\mathfrak{z}$ j. Infusion is the best form.

CASSIÆ ARAMENTUM, see Cassia fistula—c. Flores, see Laurus cinnamomum.

CASSIALA, Hyssopus.

CASSIDE BLEÛE, Scutellaria galericulata.

CASSINA, Ilex vomitoria.

CASSINE, EVERGREEN, Ilex vomitoria.

CASSIS, Ribes nigrum.

CASSITEROS, Tin.

CASSUMU'NIAR, Casamu'nar, Casmina, Risagon, Bengalè Indo'rum, Bengal Root, (F.) Racine de Bengale. A root, obtained from the East Indies, in irregular slices of various forms; some cut transversely, others longitudinally. It is an aromatic bitter, and is consequently tonic and stimulant. It was once considered a panacea.

CASSUVIUM POMIFERUM, Anacardium occidentale.

CASTANEA, Fagus castanea—c. Equina, Æsculus Hippocastanum.

CASTANEA PUMILA, Fagus castanea pumila.

CASTELLAMARE DI STABIA, WATERS OF. C. is a town in Naples, in the Principato Citra, 15 miles S. S. E. of Naples. There are two springs here, the one sulphureous, the other chalybeate.

CASTELLETTO ADONO, WATERS OF. These waters, situate near Acqui, in Italy, are sulphureous.

CASTERA-VIVENT, WATERS OF. C. is a small village in the department of Gers, near which is a cold acidulous chalybeate, and another which is sulphureous and thermal. Temp. 84° Fahrenheit.

CASTIGANS, Corrigent.

CASTJOE, Catechu.

CASTLE-LEOD, WATERS OF. A sulphureous spring in Ross-shire, Scotland, celebrated for the cure of cutaneous and other diseases.

CASTOR FIBER, Fiber, Canis Ponticus. The Beaver, (F.) Castor. It furnishes the Castor. RONDELET recommends slippers made of its skin in gout. Its blood, urine, bile, and fat, were formerly used in medicine.

CASTOR OIL PLANT, Ricinus communis.

CASTOREUM, Castor, from καστωρ, 'the beaver,' quasi γαστρος, from γαστήρ, 'the belly,' because of the size of its belly, or à castrando: Castoreum Ros'sieum et Canadense. A peculiar matter, found in bags, near the rectum of the beaver. Its odour is strong, unpleasant, and peculiar; taste bitter, subacid; and colour orange-brown. It is antispasmodic, and often employed. Dose, gr. x to ℥j.

CASTRANGULA, Scrophularia aquatica.

CASTRAT, Castratus.

CASTRATION, Castra'tio, Ectomē, Evira'tio, Excastra'tio, Etesticula'tio, Exsectio virilium, Eumelis'mus, Celoto'mia, Orchoto'mia, Orcheotomy, Orchidotomy. Operation for removing the testicles. Sometimes, the term is employed for the operation, when performed on one testicle; hence the division into complete and incomplete castration. Castration renders the individual incapable of reproduction.

CASTRATO, Castratus.

CASTRATUS, (I.) Castra'to, Ectomius, Ema'sculatus, Exsectus, Etesticulatus, from castra're, 'to castrate.' One deprived of testicles, (F.) Castrat, Châtré. This privation has a great influence on the development of puberty. It is adopted to procure a clearer and sharper voice; and in the East, the guardians of the Harem are, for the sake of security, converted into Castra'ti or En'nuchs, ενουχοι. The ancients called those, deprived of one testicle, Spado'nes. Eumuchs have generally both testes and penis removed.

CASUS, Prolapsus—c. Palpebræ superioris, Blepharoptosis.

CATA, Κατα, 'downwards,' 'after,'—applied to time: a common prefix, as in—

CATAB'ASIS, from καταβαινω, 'I descend.' An expulsion of humours downwards.

CATABLEMA, Epible'ma, Perible'ma. The outermost bandage which secures the rest.

CATABYTHISMOMANIA, from καταβυθισμος, 'submersion,' and μανια, 'mania.' Insanity, with a propensity to suicide by drowning.

CATACAUMA, Burn.

CATACAUSIS, Combustion, human—c. Ebriosa, Combustion, human.

CATACERAS'TICUS, from κατακρῆσιννυμι, 'I temper,' 'I correct.' The same as Epiceras'ticus. A medicine capable of blunting the acrimony of humours.

CATACHASMOS, Scarification.

CATACHRISIS, Inunction.

CATACHRISTON, Liniment.

CATACHYSIS, Effu'sio, Perfu'sio, from καταχω, 'I pour upon.' Affusion with cold water.—Hippocr. Decantation, (q. v.)

CATAC'LASIS, from κατακλαω, 'I break to pieces.' Camp'ylum, Campylo'tis. Distortion or spasmodic fixation of the eyes; spasmodic occlusion of the eyelids; also, fracture of a bone.—Hippocr., Vogel.

CATACLEIS', from κατα, 'beneath,' and κλεις, 'the clavicle.' This term has been applied to many parts, as to the first rib, the acromion, the joining of the sternum with the ribs, &c.

CATACLYS'MUS, Catacly'sma, from κατα-

κλυζειν, 'to submerge, inundate.' A Clyster.—Hippocr. Others mean, by the term, a shower-bath, or copious affusion of water; Catcone'sis. Ablution, (q. v.). Douche, (q. v.)

CATÆONESIS, Cacantlema, Cataclysmus.

CATAGAUNA, Cambogia.

CATAGMA, Fracture—c. Fissura, Fissure, see Contrafissura—c. Fractura, Fracture.

CATAGMAT'ICS, Catagnat'ica remedia, from καταγμα, 'fracture.' Remedies supposed to be capable of occasioning the formation of callus.

CATALEN'TIA. Epilepsy, (q. v.) or some disease resembling it.—Paracelsus.

CATALEPSIA SPURIA, Ectasis.

CATALEPSY, Catalep'sia, Catalep'sis, Cat'ochē, Cat'ochus, Congela'tio, Deten'tia, Encatalep'sis, Aphonia—(Hippocr.) Anau'dia—(Antigenes.) Apprehen'sio, Contempla'tio, Prehen'sio, Carus Catalep'sia, Trance (?) Oppres'sio, Comprehensio—(Cæli Aureliani.) Apoplex'ia Catalepsia, from καταλαμβάνω, 'I seize hold of,' (F.) Catalepsia. A disease in which there is sudden suspension of the action of the senses and of volition: the limbs and trunk preserving the different positions given to them. It is a rare affection, but is seen, at times, as a form of hysteria. Some of the Greek writers have used the word in its true acceptation of a seizure, surprise, &c.

CATAL'PA, C. Arbo'rea, Bigno'nia Catalpa, Catal'pa Cordifo'lia, C. Arborescens. The decoction of the pods of the Catalpa, an American tree, of the Nut. Fam. Bignoniaceæ, Didynamia Angiospermia, has been recommended in chronic nervous asthma.

CATALYSIS, Paralysis.

CATAMENIA ALBA, Leucorrhœa—c. Menstrua, Menses.

CATAMENIORUM FLUXUS IMMODICUS, Menorrhagia.

CATANANCE, Cichorium intybus.

CATANGELOS, Ruscus.

CATANTLEMA and CATANTLE'SIS, from κατα, 'upon,' and αντλω, 'I pour,' Catone'sis and Catæone'sis. Ablution with warm water; a fomentation.—Moschion, Marcellus Empiricus.

CATAPAS'MA, from καταπασσω, 'I sprinkle,' Catapas'tum, Conspers'sio, Epiras'ton, Pasma, Sympas'ma, Empas'ma, Xerion, Asper'sio. Compound medicines, in the form of powder, employed by the ancients to sprinkle on ulcers, absorb perspiration, &c.—Paulus of Ægina.

CATAPH'ORA, 'a fall,' from καταφερω, 'I throw down.' A state resembling sleep, with privation of feeling and voice. Somnolency, (q. v.) According to others, Cataphora is simply a profound sleep, which it is difficult to rouse from—in this sense being synonymous with Sopor. (q. v.)

CATAPHORA HYDROCEPHALICA, see Apoplexy—c. Cymini, Theriaca Londinensis.

CATAPHRACTA, a Cuirass, from καταφρασσω, 'I fortify.' A name given by Galen to a bandage applied round the thorax and shoulders. It was also called Quadrif'ga.

CAT'APLASM, Cataplas'ma, Epiplas'ma, Bæos, from καταπλασσειν, 'to besmear,' (F.) Cataplasme. A medicine to be applied externally, under the form of a thick pap. Cata- plasms are formed of various ingredients, and for different objects. They may be anodyne, emollient, tonic, antiseptic, irritating, &c. A simple poultice acts only by virtue of its warmth and moisture. Meal, fatty substances, leaves of plants, certain fruits, crumb of bread, &c., are the most common bases.

The chief poultices which have been official are the following.

| ANODYNE.      | EMOLLIENT.         | TONIC ANDASTRINGENT. |
|---------------|--------------------|--------------------------|
| C. Cicuta,    | C. Lini,           | C. Alum.                 |

| C. Acetosæ.   |                    |                          |
| C. Cuminii.   |                    |                          |

The Parisian Codex has some other official cataplasms. 1. Catoplasma anodynum, made of poppy and hyoscyamus. 2. Catoplasma emolliens, made of meal and pulps. 3. Catoplasma ad suppurationem promovendam, of pulps and Basilicon. 4. Catoplasma rubefaciens vel antipleuriticum, formed of pepper and vinegar.

The only cataplasms, the preparation of which it is important to describe, are the following:

CATAPLASMA FERMENTI, C. effervescentes, Yeast Cataplasma or Poultice, (F.) Cataplasme de Levure. (Take of meal ℥ij, yeast ℥ss. Expose to a gentle heat.) It is antiseptic, and a good application to bruises.

CATAPLASMA SINAPIS, C. Sinapicos, Sinapism, Mustard Cataplasma or Poultice, (F.) Cataplasme de Moutard or Sinapisme. (Mustard, and Linseed meal or meal  $\bar{a}\bar{a}$  equal parts. Warm vinegar, or water, q. s.) A rubefacient and stimulant applied to the soles of the feet in coma, low typhus, &c., as well as to the pained part in rheumatism, &c.

CATAPLEXIS, Stupor, from κατα and πληρωω, 'I strike.' The act of striking with amazement. Appearance of astonishment as exhibited by the eyes in particular. See Hæmodia.

CATAPOSIS, Deglutition.

CATAPOTION, Pilula.

CATAPSYXIS, from καταψυχω, 'I refrigerate.' Peripsyxis. Considerable coldness of the body, without rigor and horripilation.—Galen. Perfrictio. Coldness in the extreme parts of the limbs.—Hippocr.

CATAPTOISIS, Decidentia, a fall. This word expresses, sometimes, the fall of a patient, attacked with epilepsy, (q. v.) or apoplexy; at others, the sudden resolution of a paralytic limb.

CATAPULTA VIRILIS, Penis.

CATAPUTIA MINOR, Euphorbia lathyris, Ricinus communis.

CATARACT, Cataracta, Catarrhacta, Suffusio Oculi, Ptharma cataracta, Caligo lentis, Gutta opaca, Hypochyma, Hypochylisis, Phacocosis opaca, Paropsis cataracta, Glaucōma Woulhouli. A deprivation of sight, which comes on, as if a veil fell before the eyes. Cataract consists in opacity of the crystalline lens or its capsule, which prevents the passage of the rays of light, and precludes vision. The causes are obscure. Diagnosis.—The patient is blind, the pupil seems closed by an opaque body, of variable colour, but commonly whitish:—the pupil contracting and dilating. Cataracts have been divided, by some, into spurious and genuine. The former, where the obstacle to vision is between the capsule of the lens and the uvea: the latter, where it is in the lens or capsule. A lenticular cataract is where the affection is seated in the lens;—a capsular or membranous, where in the capsule. The capsule is divided again, by Beer, into the anterior, posterior, and complete capsular cataract. When the capsule is rendered opaque, in consequence of an injury, which cuts or ruptures any part of it, it thickens, becomes leathery, and has been called Cataracta arida siliquosa. Cataracta Morgagniana lactea vel puriformis, is the milky variety, in which the crystalline is transformed into a liquid similar to milk, (F.) Cataracte luteuse. The capsulo-lenticular affects both lens and capsule, and Beer conceives the liquor Morgagni, in an altered state, may contribute to it. Cataracts are also called stony, (F.) (pierruse), milky or cheesy (laitense ou caseusc.) according to their density:—white, pearly, yellow, brown, gray, green, black, (F.) blanche, perlée, jaune, brune, grise, verte, noire, according to their colour:—fixed or vacillating,—cataracta capsulo-lenticularis fixa vel tremula, (F.) fixe ou branlante, according as they are fixed or movable behind the pupil. They are also called Cataracta marmorata, fenestrata, stellata, punctata, dimidiata, &c., according to the appearances they present.

Cataracts may be simple or complicated with adhesion, amaurosis, specks, &c. They may be primary or primitive, when opaque before the operation;—or secondary, when the opacity is the result of the operation.

The cataract is commonly a disease of elderly individuals, although, not unfrequently, congenital. It forms slowly: objects are at first seen as through a mist, light bodies appear to fly before the eyes, and it is not until after months or years that the sight is wholly lost.

No means will obviate the evil except an operation, which consists in removing the obstacle to the passage of the light to the retina. Four chief methods are employed for this purpose.

1. Couching or Depression, (F.) Abaissement, Déplacement de la Cataracte. This consists in passing a cataract needle through the sclerotica and subjacent membranes, a little above the transverse diameter of the eye; and at about two lines distance from the circumference of the transparent cornea, until the point arrives in the posterior chamber of the eye. With this the crystalline is depressed to the outer and lower part of the globe of the eye, where it is left. 2. By absorption,—by the French termed broiement, or bruising. This is performed in the same manner as the former; except that, instead of turning the crystalline from the axis of the visual rays, it is divided by the cutting edge of the needle, and its fragments scattered in the humours of the eye, where they are absorbed. 3. By extraction, which consists in opening, with a particular kind of knife, the transparent cornea and the anterior portion of the capsule of the crystalline; and causing the lens to issue through the opening. Each of the processes has its advantages and disadvantages, and all are used by surgeons. 4. Some, again, pass a cataract needle through the transparent cornea and pupil, to the crystalline, and depress or cause its absorption. This is called Keratonyxis, which see.

CATARACT, BLACK, Amaurosis.

CATARACTA GLAUCA, Glaucoma—c. Nigra, Amaurosis.

CATARACTE, ABAISSEMENT DE LA, see Cataract—e. Déplacement de la, see Cataract—e. Noire, Amaurosis.

CATARACTÉ, (F.) Cataractus, Cataractû vitiatûs. One affected with cataract. The French use this term, both for the eye affected with cataract and the patient himself.

CATARRH', Catarrhus, Catarrhopus, Catarrheuma, Rheuma, Defluxio, from κατα, 'downwards,' and ρεω, 'I flow.' A discharge of fluid from a mucous membrane. The ancients considered the catarrh as a simple flux, and not as an inflammation. Generally, it partakes of this character, however. Catarrh is, with us, usually restricted to the inflammation of the mucous membrane of the air-passages; the French extend it to that of all mucous membranes. (F.) Flux muqueux, Fluxion catarrhale.

CATARRH, in the English sense, Rheuma Pectoris, Catarrhus Pectoris, Blennoptysis, Tussis catarrhalis simplex, Anacathar'sis catarrhalis simplex, Gravelle (of many,) a cold, Febris Catarrhalis, Blennorrhæa, Bronchitis, Catarrhus à frigore, (F.) Catarrhe pulmonaire, Rhume de Poitrine, is a superficial inflammation of the mucous follicles of the trachea and bronchi. It is commonly an affection of but little consequence, but apt to relapse and become chronic. It is characterized by cough, thirst, lassitude, fever, watery eyes, with increased secretion of mucus from the air-passages. The antiphlogistic regimen and time usually remove it. Sometimes, the inflammation of the bronchial tubes is so great as to prove fatal.

CATARRH, ACUTE, OF THE UTERUS, see Metritis—c. Summer, Fever, hay.

CATARRH', EPIDEMIC, Catarrhus epidemicus, C. à contagio, Rheuma epidemicum. Catarrh occurring owing to some particular Constitutio aëris, and affecting a whole country:—Influenza, (q. v.)

CATARRHACTA, Cataract.

CATARRHÆTICA, from καταρρηγνυμι, 'I break down.' Remedies considered proper for dissolving;—as diuretics, cathartics, &c.—Hippoc.

CATARRHEUMA, Catarrh.

CATARRHEUX, (F.) Catarrhus. One subject to catarrh, affected with catarrh.

CATARRHÆXIA, Catarrhexis; same etymon as Catarrhæctia: the action of Catarrhæctia. Also, effusion, evacuation of the bowels.

CATARRHÆXIS, Catarrhexia, Excrement, (q. v.)—c. Vera, Hæmatochezia.

CATARRHÆYCUS, from καταρρεω, 'I flow from.' An epithet for disease, produced by a discharge of phlegm; Catarrhal.

CATARRHŌPIA PHYMATATA, from καταρροπος, καταρροπος, 'sloping downwards.' Tubercles tending downwards, or with their apices downwards.

CATARRHOPHE, Absorption.

CATARRHŌPIA, Catarrhysis, from κατα, 'downwards,' and ροπη, 'inclination.' An afflux of fluids towards the inferior parts, and especially towards the viscera of the abdomen. The Greek word αναρροπια expresses an opposite phenomenon, or a tendency towards the upper parts.

CATARRHOPUS, Catarrh.

CATARRHYSIS, Catarrhopia, Defluxion.

CATARRHUS, Defluxion, Tussis—c. Æstivus, Fever, hay—c. Bellinulanus, Cynanche parotidæa—c. Gonorrhœa, Gonorrhœa—c. Intestinalis, Diarrhœa—c. ad Nares, Coryza—c. Suffocativus barbadensis, C. trachealis—c. Urethralis, Gonorrhœa—c. Vesicæ, Cystirrhœa.

CATARTIS'MUS, from καταρτιζειν, 'to repair,' 'replace.' The coaptation of a luxated or fractured bone.

CATASCEUE, Structure.

CATASTAGMOS, Coryza.

CATASTALAGMOS, Coryza, Distillation.

CATAS'TASIS, from καθιστημι, 'I establish.'

The constitution, state, condition, &c. of any thing.—Hippoc. Also, the reduction of a bone. See Constitution, and Habit of Body.

CATATASIS, from κατατερω, 'I extend, extension,' (q. v.) The extension and reduction of a fractured limb.—Hippoc.

CATATHLIPSIS, Oppression.

CATAXIS, Fracture.

CATCH FLY, Silene Virginica.

CATCHUP, Ketchup.

CATE, Catechu.

CATECHU. The extract of various parts of the Mimosa Catechu, Caatehu, an oriental tree. The drug is also called Terra Japonica, Extractum Catechu, Japan Earth, Casheu, Cadtehu, Cashow, Caitehu, Castjoe, Cacau, Cate, Kaath, Cuti, Cutch, Coïra, Succus Japonicus. (F.) Caehou. It is a powerful astringent, and is used in diarrhœa, intestinal hemorrhage, &c. Dose, gr. xv. to ʒss in powder.

CATEIAD'ION, from κατα, and εια, 'a blade of grass.' A long instrument, thrust into the nostrils to excite hemorrhage in headache.—Aretæus.

CATENÆ MUSCULUS, Tibialis anticus.

CATEONESIS, Catantlema.

CATGUT, Galega Virginiana.

CATHÆRESIS, καθαρωσις, 'subtraction, diminution.' Extenuation or exhaustion, owing to forced exercise.—Hippoc.

CATHÆRETICUS, Catheretic.

CATHARETICUS, Cathartic.

CATHARISMOS, Depuration.

CATHARMA, Purgamentum. Matters evacuated by a purgative, or by spontaneous purging, also, a cathartic, (q. v.)

CATHAR'MUS. Same etymon; a purgation.—Hippoc. Also, the cure of a disease by magic, &c.

CATHAR'SIS, from καθαριζειν, 'to purge.' Purgatio, Apocathar'sis, Coprophœria. A natural or artificial purgation by any passage;—mouth, anus, vagina, &c.

CATHARTIC, Catharticus, Catharticus, Cathar'ma, Coprocritica, Dejectorium Remedium, Eccatharticus, Hyparticus, Hypelatos, Laparticus, Apocatharticus. Same etymon, (F.) Cathartique. A medicine, which, when taken internally, increases the number of alvine evacuations. Some substances act upon the upper part of the intestinal canal, as calomel and colocynth; others, on the lower parts, as alocs; and some on the whole extent, as saline purgatives. Hence a choice may be necessary. Cathartics are divided into Purgatives and Laxatives, (q. v.)

The following is a list of the chief Cathartics:

|                      |                          |
|----------------------|--------------------------|
| Aloe,                | Podophyllum,             |
| Cassia Marylandica,  | Potassæ Acetas,          |
| Colocyntis,          | —— Bisulphas,            |
| Elaterium,           | —— Sulphas,              |
| Gambogia,            | —— Supertartras,         |
| Hydrargyri Chloridum | —— Tartras,              |
| mille,               | Rheum,                   |
| — Oxylum nigrum,     | Scammonium,              |
| Hydrarg. cum Mag-    | Senna,                   |
| nesiâ,               | Sinapis,                 |
| Jalappa,             | Sodæ et Potassæ Tartras, |
| Juglans,             | —— Phosphas,             |
| Magnesia,            | —— Sulphas,              |
| —— Carbonas,         | Sodii Chloridum,         |
| —— Sulphas,          | Sulphur,                 |
| Manna,               | Veratrina,               |
| Mannita,             | Aquæ Minerales Sulphu-   |
| Oleum Euphorbiæ La-  | reæ et Saline,           |
| thyridis,            | Ememata,                 |
| —— Ricini,           | Suppositoria.            |
| —— Tiglii,           |                          |

CATHARTINE. See Convolvulus jalapa.

CATHARTIQUE, Cathartic.

CATHARTOCARPUS, Cassia fistula.

CATHEDRA, Anus.

CATHERMERUS, Quotidian.

CATHERETIC, Catharticus, Ectyloicus, Sarcophagus, from καθαίρειν, 'to eat,' 'destroy.' Substances applied to warts, exuberant granulations, &c., to eat them down. They are mild caustics.

CATH'ETER, from καθίημι, 'I explore.' Jenc'a, Algalie, Catheteris, Decmissor, Inmissor. A hollow tube, introduced by surgeons into the urinary bladder, for the purpose of drawing off the urine. Catheters are made of silver or elastic gum. See Bougie. The French generally use the word catheter, for the solid sound or staff; and algalié and sonde for the hollow instrument.

CATHERETERIS, Catheter.

CATHERETERIS'MUS, Catheterisis, same etymon. The introduction of a catheter into the bladder, or Eustachian tube.

CATHID'RYSIS, from καθίδημι, 'I place together.' Reduction of a part to its natural situation.

CATHMIA, Plumbi oxydum semi-vitreum.

CATHMIR, Calamina.

CATHOLIC HUMOURS, (F.) Humeurs Catholiques, are the fluids spread over the whole body.

CATHOLICON or CATHOLICUM, from καθ', and ολικος, 'universal.' A remedy, believed to be capable of curing all diseases—a panacea.

CATHOLICON DUPLEX, an ancient, purging electuary, chiefly composed of cassia, tamarinds, rhubarb, senna, &c.

CATH/LIA. A weight of nine ounces.

CATILLUS, Cup.

CATINUS FUSORIUS, Crucible.

CATLING, Knife, double-edged.

CATO, κατω, 'below,' 'beneath.' This word, in the writings of Hippocrates, is often used for the abdomen, especially the intestines. When he advises a remedy—κατω, he means a purgative; when ανω above or upwards, an emetic. As a prefix, Cato means 'beneath,' as in CATOCATHARTIC, Catocatharticus, from κατω, 'downwards,' and καθαίρειν, 'I purge.' A medicine, which purges downwards. One that produces alvine evacuations. The antithesis to Anacathartic.

CATOCHE or CATOCHEIS, from κατεχω, 'I retain,' 'I hold fast.' This word has, by some, been used synonymously with Catalepsy: (q. v.) by others, with Coma vigil; by others, with Tetanus.

CATOCHEUS, Ecstasis—c. Cervinus, Tetanus—c. Holotonicus, Tetanus—c. Infantum, Induration of the cellular tissue.

CATOMIS'MOS, from κατω, 'beneath,' and μοσ, 'shoulder.' Subhumeral'tio. A mode with the ancients, of reducing luxation of the humerus by raising the body by the arm.—Paulus of Ægina.

CATOPTROMANCY, from κατοπτρον, 'a mirror,' and μαντιεα, 'divination.' A kind of divination by means of a mirror.

CATOPTER, Speculum.

CATOPTRON, Speculum.

CATORCHITES. A kind of sour wine, prepared with the orchis and black grape, or dried figs. It was formerly employed as a diuretic and emmenagogue.—Dioscorid. Called, also, Sycites.—Galen.

CATORETICUS, Purgative.

COTOTERICUS, Purgative.

CATOTICA, from κατω, 'beneath.' Diseases infecting internal surfaces. Pravity of the fluids or emunctories, that open on the internal surfaces of organs. The second order in the class Ec critica of Good.

CATSFOOT, Antennaria dioica.

CATTAGAUMA, Cambogia.

CATTITEROS, Tin.

CATULOTICUS, from κατουλοειν, 'to cicatrize.' A remedy for removing cicatrices.—Galen. A medicine, proper for producing cicatrization.

CATU-TRIPALI, Piper longum.

CAUCALOIDES, Patella.

CAUCHEMAR, Incus.

CAUCHEVIEILLE, Incus.

CAUCHUC, Caoutchouc.

CAUDA, Coccyx.

CAUDA EQUINA. The spinal marrow, at its termination, about the 2d lumbar vertebra, gives off a considerable number of nerves, which, when unravelled, resemble a horse's tail,—hence the name. (F.) Queue de Cheval, Q. de la Moelle Epinière. See Medulla Spinalis.

CAUDA SALAX, Penis.

CAUDA'TIO. An extraordinary elongation of the clitoris.—Blasius.

CAUDIEZ, MINERAL WATERS OF. Caudiez is a small town, nine leagues from Per-pignan, where there is a thermal spring, containing a little sulphate of soda and iron.

CAUL. The English name for the omentum. Also, when a child is born, with the membranes over the face, it is said to have been "born with a caul." In the catalogue of superstitions, this is one of the favourable omens. The caul itself is, likewise, supposed to confer privileges upon the possessor; hence the membranes are dried, and sometimes sold for a high price. (L.) Pilus, Pileolus, Galca, Vitta. (F.) Cocffe, Coiffe—(Etre né colffé—"to be born with a caul.") See Epiploon.

CAULE'DON, Siey'dou, from καυλος, 'a stalk.' A transverse fracture.

CAULIFLOWER, Brassica Florida.

CAULIFLOWER EXCRESCENCE, Exerescencia Syphilitica, (F.) Chouffleur. A syphilitic excrescence, which appears about the origin of the mucous membranes, chiefly about the anus and vulva, and which resembles, in appearance, the head of the cauliflower.

CAULIS, Penis.

CAULIS FLORIDA, Brassica Florida.

CAULOPLÉ'GIA, from καυλος, 'the male organ,' and πληγη, 'a wound,' or 'stroke.' An injury or paralysis of the male organ.

CAUMA, καυμα, 'a burnt part,' from καω, 'I burn.' Great heat of the body or atmosphere. Synocha (q. v.) Empresina (q. v.)

CAUMA BRONCHITIS, Cynanche trachealis—c. Enteritis, Enteritis—c. Gastritis, Gastritis—c. Hæmorrhagicum, Hæmorrhagia activa—c. Ophthalmitis, Ophthalmia—c. Peritonitis, Peritonitis—c. Phrenitis, Phrenitis—c. Pleuritis, Pleuritis—c. Rheumatismus, Rheumatism, acute.

CAUNGA, Areca.

CAUSA CONJUNCTA, Cause, proximate—c. Continens, Cause, proximate.

CAUSÆ ABDITÆ, Causes, predisponent or remote—c. Actuales, Causes, occasional—c. Præincipientes, Causes, procatarctic—c. Prögumena, Causes, predisponent.

CAUSE, Cau'sa, αιτια, Aitia, αιτιον, Aition. An act which precedes another, and seems to be a necessary condition for the occurrence of the latter. The causes of disease are generally extremely obscure; although they, sometimes, are evident enough. The predisponent and occasional causes are the only two, on which any stress can be laid; but as authors have divided them differently, a short explanation is necessary.

CAUSES, ACCESSORY, (F.) Causes Accessoires, are those which have only a secondary influence in the production of disease.

ACCIDENTAL CAUSES, OR COMMON CAUSES, (F.) Causes Accidentelles, are those, which act only in certain given conditions; and which do not always produce the same disease. Cold, e. g., may be the accidental cause of pneumonia, rheumatism, &c.

EXTERNAL CAUSES, (F.) Causes externes, are such as act externally to the individual; as air, cold, &c.

CAUSES FORMELLES (F.) are such as determine the form or kind of the disease. They differ from the Causes matérielles, which are common to a set of diseases; as, to the neuroses, phlegmasiæ, &c.

INTERNAL CAUSES, (F.) Causes internes, are those, which arise within the body;—as mental emotions, &c.

MECHANICAL CAUSES, (F.) Causes mécaniques, are those, which act mechanically, as pressure upon the windpipe in inducing suffocation.

NEGATIVE CAUSES, (F.) Causes négatives, comprise all those things, the privation of which may derange the functions;—as abstinence too long continued. They are opposed to positive causes, which, of themselves, directly induce disease;—as the use of indigestible food, of spilituous drinks, &c.

OCCASIONAL OR EXCITING CAUSES, Causæ actuales, (F.) Causes occasionelles, are those which immediately produce the disease.

OCCULT OR HIDDEN OR OBSCURE CAUSES, (F.) Causes occultes ou cachées ou obscures. Any causes with which we are unacquainted;—also, certain inappreciable characters of the atmosphere, which give rise to epidemics.

PHYSIOLOGICAL CAUSES, (F.) Causes Physiologiques, those which act only on living matter;—narcotics, e. g.

PHYSICAL CAUSES, (F.) Causes Physiques,—those which act by virtue of their physical properties; as form, hardness, &c. All vulnerating bodies belong to this class.

PREDISPOONENT OR REMOTE CAUSES, Causæ prægumena, Causæ ab'dite, (F.) Causes prædisponentes, Causes éloignées, Causæ remotæ;—those which render the body liable to disease. These may be general, affecting a number of people, or they may be particular, affecting only one person.

PRINCIPAL CAUSES, (F.) Causes principales:—those which exert the chief influence on the production of disease, as distinguished from the accessory causes.

PROCATARCTIC CAUSES, Causæ procatarctice, Causæ præincipien'tes, from προκαταρκτηκος;—the origin or beginning of a thing, from καταρχω, 'I begin,' and προς, 'before.' These words have been used, in different significations. Some have employed them synonymously with predisponent or remote causes; others, with occasional or exciting causes.

The PROXIMATE CAUSE, Causa proxima vel continens vel conjuncta (F.) Cause continente ou prochaine, is the disease itself. Superabundance of blood, e. g., is the proximate cause of plethora.

SPECIFIC CAUSES, ESSENTIAL CAUSES, &c. (F.) Causes spécifiques, C. essentielles, Causes déterminantes; those, which always produce a determinate disease; contagion, for example.

CAUSES CACHEES, Causes, occult—c. Déterminantes, Causes, specific—c. Eloignées, Causes, predisponent—c. Prochaines, Causes, proximate.

CAUSIS, Burn, Ebullition, Fermentation, Incendium, Ustion.

CAUSOMA, Inflammation.

CAUS'TIC, Caus'ticus, Cautereticus, Dia-reticus, Erodens, Pyroticus from καω, 'I burn,' (F.) Caustique. Bodies, which have the property of causticity; and which, consequently, burn or disorganize animal substances. The word is also used substantively. The most active are called Escharotics. Caustics are also called 'corrosives.'

CAUSTIC BEARER, Porte-caustique.

CAUSTICA ADUSTIO, Cauterization.

CAUSTICITY, Caustic'itas, from καυστικός, 'that which burns.' The impression, which caustic bodies make on the organ of taste; or, more commonly, the property which distinguishes those bodies.

CAUSTICUM ALKALINUM, Potassa fusa—c. Americanum, Veratrum sabadilla—c. Antimoniale, Antimonium muriatum—c. Commune, Potassa fusa—c. Commune acerrimum, Potassa fusa—c. Commune fortius, Potassa cum calce—c. Lunare, Argenti nitras—c. Potentiale, Potassa fusa—c. Salinum, Potassa fusa.

CAUSTICUM COMMUNE, Potent'ial Caustery, Common Caustic, Cauterium potentiale, Lapis septicus, Causticum commu'nem'itius. This consists of quicklime and black soap, ãã equal parts.

CAUSTIQUE, Caustic.

CAUSUS from καω, 'I burn.' A highly ardent fever, Deũrens. Pinel regards it as a complication of bilious and inflammatory fever; Broussais, as an intense gastritis, accompanied with bilious symptoms. See Synocha.

CAUSUS, ENDEMIAL, OF THE WEST INDIES, Fever, yellow—c. Tropicus endemicus, Fever, yellow.

CAUTCHUC, Caoutchouc.

CAUTÈRE, Cauterium, Ponticulus—c. Inhérent, Inherent cautery.

CAUTERETICUS, caustic.

CAUTERETS, MINERAL WATERS OF.

C. is a bourg seven leagues from Baréges (Hauts-Pyrénées), France. The waters are hydrosulphurous and thermal. They are used in the same cases as the Baréges water.

CAUTERIUM, Cautery, Insto'rium, Rup'orium, from καω, 'I burn,' (F.) Cautère, Feu actuel. A substance, used for burning or disorganizing the parts to which it is applied. Cauteries were divided, by the ancients, into actual and potential. The word is now restricted to the red-hot iron; or to positive burning. It was, formerly, much used for preventing hemorrhage from divided arteries; and also, with the same views, as a blister. The term, Potent'ial Caustery, Cauterium potentiale, (F.) Feu potentiel, was generally applied to the causticum commune, (q. v.) but is now used synonymously with caustic in general.

Cautère also means an issue.

CAUTERIZATION, Cauterisatio, Exus'tio, Instus'tio, Caustica Adus'tio. The effect of a cautery.

The French, amongst whom cauterization is much used, distinguish five kinds: 1. Cauterisation inhérente, which consists in applying the actual cautery freely, and with a certain degree of force, so as to disorganize deeply. 2. Cauterisation transcurrente, which consists in passing the edge of the Cautère cutellaire, or the point of the Cautère conique lightly, so as not to disorganize deeply. 3. Cauterisation par pointes, which consists in applying on the skin here and there, the hot point of the conical cautery with sufficient force to cauterize the whole thickness of the skin. 4. Cauterisation lente, slow cauterization, by means of the moxa. 5. Cauterisation objective, which consists in holding the cautery at some distance from the part to be acted upon by it.

TO CAUTERIZE. Caustico adu'terē, (F.) Cautériser. To apply the cautery. To burn with a cautery.

CAUTERY, Cauterium—c. Potential, Causticum commune.

CAVA, Vulva.

CAVA, VENA. The hollow or deep-seated vein, (F.) Veine cave. A name given to the two great veins of the body, which meet at the right auricle of the heart. The vena cava superior, thorac'ica vel descen'dens, is formed by the union of the subclavians; and receives successively, before its termination at the upper part of the right auricle, the inferior thyroid, right internal mammary, superior diaphragmatic, azygos, &c. The vena cava inferior, abdominalis vel ascen'dens, arises from the union of the two primary iliaes, opposite the fourth or fifth lumbar vertebra, receives the middle sacral, the lumbar, right spermatic, hepatic, and inferior diaphragmatics, and opens at the posterior and inferior part of the right auricle.

CAVATIO, Cavity.

CAVEA, Cavity—c. Narium, Nares.

CAVERNA, αντρον, Antrum. 'A cavern.' This term has been used for the female organs of generation. See Cavity and Vulva.

CAVERNA NARIUM, Nares.

CAVERNÆ FRONTS, Frontal sinuses.

CAVERNEUX, Cavernous.

CAVERNOUS, Cavernosus, (F.) Cavernoux. Filled with small cavities or caverns,—as a sponge.

CAVERNOUS RESPIRATION, (F.) When a cavity exists in the lungs, and one or more ramifications of the bronchia terminate in it, a loud tubal noise is emitted, provided the cavity be not filled with fluid, which is called cavernous respiration. In this condition the cough is cavernous likewise, (F.) Toux Cavernense. When the capacity of the cavern is very great, the sound of respiration is like that produced by blowing into a decanter, with the mouth at a little distance from the neck. This kind of cavernous respiration has been called amphoric, from amphora, 'a flask,' (F.) Respiration amphorique.

CAVERNOUS TEXTURE OF TISSUE, (F.) Tissu cavernoux. The spongy substance which forms the greater part of the penis and clitoris. It seems to consist of a very complicated lacework of arteries and veins; and, probably, of nervous filaments, with small fibrous plates, which form, by their decussation, numerous cells, communicating with each other. This spongy texture produces erection, by dilating and swelling on the influx of blood; and probably, also, by virtue of some property inherent in it.

CORPORA CAVERNO'SA OF THE PENIS, Corpora nervosa, C. Ner'vco-spongiosa Penis, (F.) Corps cavernoux. The corpus cavernosum is a kind of cylindrical sac, separated, through its whole extent, by a vertical, incomplete septum; and forming nearly two-thirds of the Penis. The corpus cavernosum, on each side, arises from the ascending portion of the ischium, and terminates obtusely behind the glans. The arteries of the corpora cavernosa come from the internal pudic. See Helicine Arteries. Nerves are found on the surface of the outer membrane, but they do not appear to penetrate the substance.

Müller's researches have led him to infer, that both in man and the horse, the nerves of the corpora cavernosa are made up of branches proceeding from the organic as well as the animal system, whilst the nerves of animal life alone provide the nerves of sensation of the Penis.

THE CORPORA CAVERNO'SA CLITOR'IDIS, are two hollow crura, forming the clitoris.

THE CORPUS CAVERNO'SUM VAGI'NÆ, Plexus retiformis, is a substance, composed of blood-vessels and cells, similar to those of the penis and clitoris, which covers the outer extremity of the vagina, on each side. It serves to contract the entrance to the vagina, during coition.

SINUS CAVERNO'SUS, Sinus polymorphus seu Receptaculum, S. sphenoidalis, (F.) Sinus cavernæ. The Cavernous Sinuses are venous cavities of the dura mater, filled with a multitude of reddish, soft filaments, intersecting each other; and, as it were, reficulated. They commence behind the inner part of the sphenoidal fissure, pass backwards, on the sides of the fossa pituitaria, and terminate by opening into a cavity, common to the superior and inferior petrosal sinuses. They receive some meningeal veins, the ophthalmic veins, &c.

CAVIARE, Kaviac. A culinary preparation, much used by certain people, and made on the shores of the Black and Caspian Sea, from the roe of the sturgeon, mixed with salt and other condiments.

CAVIC'ULA or CAVIL'LA, from cavus, 'hollow.' The Anclæ, or space between the malleoli. Some have given this name to the os cuneiforme. See Astragalus.

CAVICULÆ PEDIS NODUS, Tarsus.

CAVILLA, Astragalus, Cavicula.

CAVITAS ANTROSA AURIS, Tympanum—c. Buccinata, Cochlea—c. Cochleata, Cochlea.

CAVITAS ELLIP'TICA, Annulla. A dilatation at one end of the semicircular canals of the ear.

CAVITAS NARIUM, Nares, Cavitas Pulpæ, see Tooth.

CAVITATES CEREBRI, Ventricles of the brain—c. Duræ matris, Sinuses of the dura mater—c. Innominate, Auricles of the heart.

CAVITÉ, Cavity—c. Dentaire, Dental cavity—c. des Epiploons, see Peritonæum—c. du Tympan, Tympanum.

CAVITY, Cavitas, Cavum, Calotes, Calon, Caeca, Caver'na, Cava'tio, κοιλότης, κοίλον, (F.) Cavité. Every thing hollow, as the cranium, mouth, nasal fossæ, &c.

THE SPLANCH'NIC CAVITIEB, (F.) Cavités splanchniques, are those which contain the viscera. They are three in number;—the cranium, chest, and abdomen. The cavities of bones, connected with joints or otherwise, are described under their particular denominations.

CAVUM, Cavity.

CAVUM CRANII, Venter Supre'mus. The cavity formed by the proper bones of the cranium.

CAVUM NARIUM, Nares—c. Oris, Mouth—c. Tympani, Tympanum.

CAYAN, Phaseolus creticus.

CAZABI, Jatropha manihot.

CEANOTHOS, Cirsium arvense—c. Americanus, Celastrus.

CEAR, Heart.

CEASMA, Fissure.

CEBI GALLI'NÆ. The liver of the fowl, bruised.—Castelli.

CEBIP'ARA. A large Brazilian tree, whose bitter and astringent bark is used in making anti-rheumatic baths and fomentations.

CECES. See Quercus alba.

CECITÉ, Cæcitas.

CEDAR, RED, Juniperus Virginiana.

CEDEIA, Embalming.

CED'MATA, κεδευατα. Rheumatic pains of the joints, especially of the hips. A form of gout or rheumatism.

CEDELE'UM, from κεδρος, 'the cedar,' and ελαιον, 'oil.' The oil of the cedar.—Pliny.

CE'DRIA, Cedrium, Cedrinum, Cedri lachryma, Alkitran. The oil or resin, which flows from the Cedar of Lebanon. It was supposed to possess great virtues.—Hippocr., Foësius, Scribonius Largus, Dioscorides. It has been supposed to be the same as the pyrolignous acid. See Pinus Sylvestris.

CE'DRINUM VINUM, Cedar Wine. A wine, prepared by steeping half a pound of bruised cedar berries in six French pints of sweet wine. It is diuretic and subastringent.

CE'DRITES, from κεδρος, 'the cedar.' A wine, prepared from the resin of cedar and sweet wine. It was formerly employed as a vermifuge, &c.

CEDRIUM, Cedria.

CEDROMELA. See Citrus medica.

CEDRONELLA, Melissa.

CEDROS, Juniperus lycia.

CEDROSTIS, Bryonia alba.

CE'DRUS BACCIFERA, Juniperus sabina.

CELINTURE, Cingulum, Herpes zoster—c. Dartreuse, Herpes zoster—c. de Hildane, Cingulum Hildani—c. de Vif Argent, Cingulum mercuriale.

CELANDINE COMMON, Chelidonium majus—c. lesser, Ranunculus ficaria.

CELLAQUE, Cæliac.

CELASTRUS, Celastrus, Ceanothus Americanus, New Jersey Tea. Used by the American Indians, in the same manner as the Lobelia, for the cure of syphilis. It is slightly bitter and somewhat astringent.

CELATION, (F.) Concealment. A word used by French medico-legal writers for cases where there has been concealment of pregnancy or delivery.

CELĒ, κελη, a 'tumour, protrusion, or rupture;' a very common suffix, as in Hydrocele, Bubonocèle, &c., see Hernia.

CEL'ERY, (F.) Celeri. The English name for a variety of the Spium graveolens, (q. v.)

CE' LIS, κηλις, 'a spot, a stain.' A macula (q. v.) or spot on the skin.

CELL, Calcig'rous, see Tooth—c. germinal, see Cytoblast.

CELLA TURCICA, Sella Turcica.

CELLULÆ BRONCHICÆ. See Cellule.

CEL/LULAR, Cellula'ris, (F.) Cellulaire. Composed of cells or cellules, from cella or cellula, 'a cell.'

The CEL/LULAR TISSUE, Tela cellularis, T. cellulosa; reticulated, filamentous, laminated, cribriform, porous, areolar, and mucous Tissue, Reticular or cellular substance, Contextus cellulosis, (F.) Tissu cellulaire, réticulé, lamineux, cribléux, poreux, aréolaire, muqueux, &c., is the most common of all the organic tissues. Anatomists do not agree, regarding its intimate structure. It seems to contain cellules or irregular areolæ between the fibres and plates; as well as serum, fat, and the adipous tissue. The cellular tissue or texture unites every part of the body, the shape of which it determines; and, by its elasticity and contractility, and by the fluid, which it contains in its cells, facilitates the motion of parts on each other.

The cellular tissue has been divided by anatomists into the external, general or common cellular tissue—textus cellularis intermedius seu laxus, which does not penetrate the organs,—the cellular texture which forms the envelopes of organs—textus cellularis strictus, and that which penetrates into the organs, accompanying and enveloping all their parts,—the textus cellularis stipatus.

Constituting the basis of all the organs, it has likewise been termed Textus organicus seu parenchymalis.

The CELLULAR SYSTEM, is the whole of the cellular tissue of the human body.

The CELLULAR MEMBRANE, Membrana cellulosa, M. Cellularis, Panniculus adiposus, M. adiposa, pinguedinosa, of some,—is membrane formed of cellular tissue, (F.) Membrane cellulaire. Generally, it is used for the tissue itself.

CELLULAR TISSUE OF BONES. See Cancelli.

CELLULE, Cellula, diminutive of cella, 'a cavity.' A small cavity, (F.) Cellule. Cellules are the small cavities between the laminae of the cellular tissue, corpora cavernosa, &c.

The term BRONCHIC CELLS, Cellule Bronchique, has been given to the air-cells of the lungs,—the vesicule pulmonales.

CELLULO BRONCHIQVES, Bronchial cells.

CELOSOMUS, from κηλη, 'a Rupture,' and σωμα, 'body.' A monster in which the trunk is malformed, and eventration or displacement of the viscera exists.

CELOTOMIA, Kelotomia, from κηλη, 'a tumour,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' An operation, formerly employed for the radical cure of inguinal hernia; and which consisted, principally, in passing a ligature round the hernial sac and spermatic vessels. It necessarily occasioned atrophy and loss of the testicle; and did not secure the patient against the return of the disease. The intestines were of course not included in the ligature. See Castration.

CELSA. A term, used by Paracelsus for a cutaneous disease, dependent, according to him, on a false or heterogeneous spirit or vapour, concealed under the integuments, and endeavouring to escape. Perhaps the disease was the Urticaria. (?)

CELSUS, METHOD OF. See Lithotomy.

CEMBRO NUTS. See Pinus cembra.

CEMENTERIUM, Crucible.

CEMENTUM, see Tooth.

CENCHRON, Panicum miliaceum.

CENDRE DU LEVANT, Soda.

CENDRES GRAVELÉES, see Potash—c. de Sarment, see Potash.

CENDRE, Cineritious.

CENEANGIA, from κερος, 'empty,' and αγγειον, 'a vessel.' Inanition. Empty state of vessels.—Galen.

CENEMBATE/SIS, from κερος, 'empty,' and εμβαινω, 'I enter.' Paracntesis, (q. v.) Also, the act of probing a wound or cavity, Melosis.

CENEONES, Flanks.

CENIGDAM, Ceniptam.

CENIGOTAM, Ceniplam.

CENIPLAM, Cenigdam, Cenigotam, Cenipotam. The name of an instrument, anciently used for opening the head in epilepsy.—Paracel.

CENIPOTAM, Ceniplam.

CENO/SIS, from κερος, 'empty.' In/sis, In/ethmos. Evacuation. It is sometimes employed synonymously with inanition, (q. v.) and opposed to repletion. Exinanitio.

CENOTICA, from κενωσις, 'evacuation.' Diseases affecting the fluids. Morbid discharges or excess, deficiency or irregularity of such as are natural. The first order, class Genetice, of Good; also, Drastics, (q. v.)

CENTAUREA BEHEN, Behen abiad, Behen album or White Behen. Ord. Gentianæ. Astrigent.

CENTAUREA BENEDICTA, Carduus benedictus, Cnicus sylvestris, Cnicus benedictus, Cardiodiobolus, Blessed or Holy Thistle, (F.) Chardon bénit. Fam. Cynarcephalæ. Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia frustranea. A strong decoction of the herb is emetic:—a strong infusion, diaphoretic (?); a light infusion, tonic and stomachic. Dose, gr. xv to ʒj of powder.

CENTAUREA CALCITRIFA, Calcitripa, Calcatrep'pola, Carduus solstitialis, Carduus stellatus, Jacea ramosissima, Cacotribulus, Calcitripa stellata, Stellata rupina, Centaurea stellata, Common Star-Thistle, Star-Knapweed, (F.) Centauree étoilée, Chardon étoilé, Chaussetrappe, Pignerole. It is possessed of tonic properties, and has been given in intermittents, dyspepsia, &c. It is now not much used.

CENTAUREA CENTAURIUM, Rhaponcticum vulgare, Centaurium magnum, Centaurium majus, Greater Centaury, Centaurium officinale, (F.) Centauree grande. It is a bitter; and was formerly used as a tonic, especially the root.

CENTAUREA CYANUS, Cyanus, Blue-bottle, Corn-flower, (F.) Blavette, Blacole, Blaverolle. The flowers were once much used as cordial, tonic, &c. They are now forgotten.

CENTAUREA STELLATA, Centaurea calcitrapa.

CENTAUREE ÉTOILÉE, Centaurea calcitrapa—c. Grande, Centaurea centaurium—c. petite, Chironia centaurium.

CENTAURIUM MAGNUM, Centaurea centaurium—c. Minus vulgare, Chironia centaurium—c. Officinale, Centaurea centaurium—c. Parvum, Chironia centaurium.

CENTAURY, American, Chironia angularis—c. Greater, Centaurea centaurium—c. Lesser, Chironia centaurium.

CENTESIS, Paracntesis.

CENTIGRAMME, (F.) from centum, 'a hundred,' and γραμμα, 'gramme.' Centigramma. The hundredth part of a gramme. A centigramme is equal to about the fifth part of a grain, (F.) gr. .1544, Troy.

CENTILITRE, Centilitrum, from centum, 'a hundred,' and λιτρα, 'litre,' an ancient Greek measure for liquids:—the hundredth part of a litre—equal to nearly ten grammes or a spoonful. 2.7053 fluidrams.

CENTIMÈTRE, Centim'ctrum. The hundredth part of a metre—equal to about four lines. .39 7 English Inch.

CENTIMORBIA, Lysimachia nummularia.

CENTINERVA, Plantago.

CENTINODE, Polygonum aviculare.

CENTINODIA, Polygonum aviculare.

CENTO VIRGINALIS, Hymen.

CENTRAL ARTERY OF THE RETINA, Arteria Centralis Retinæ. Central Artery of Zinn. This artery is given off from the arteria ophthalmica, and penetrates the optic nerve a little behind the ball of the eye; running in the axis of the nerve, and spreading out into many small branches upon the inside of the retina. When the nerve is cut across near the eye, the orifice of the divided artery is observable, which was formerly called Porus opticus.

CENTRE OF ACTION. The viscus in which the whole or a great part of any function is executed, and to which several other organs contribute. Thus, the vital activity seems to be wholly centred in the stomach, during chymification; in the duodenum, during chylification. In like manner, the uterus becomes a centre of action during gestation.

CENTRE OF FLUXION. The part towards which fluids are particularly attracted. An irritated organ is said to be a centre of fluxion.

CENTRE OF SYMPATHETIC IRRADIATIONS, (F.) Centre d'irradiations sympathiques. Any organ, which excites, sympathetically, the action of other organs, more or less distant from it; and with which it seems to have no immediate communication.—Marjolin.

CENTRE, EPIGASTRIC. The ganglions and nervous plexuses, formed by the great sympathetic and pneumogastric nerves, in the epigastrium, around the celiac artery; where the impressions received from various parts of the body seem to be centred.

CENTRE, NERVOUS OR NERVOUS CENTRES, (F.) Centres nerveux. The organs, whence the nerves originate; as the brain and spinal marrow.

CENTRE, OVAL, Centrum ova'le, C. O. Vicus-se'nii, Tegmen'tum ventriculo'rum cer'e'br'i. When the two hemispheres of the brain are sliced away, till on a level with the corpus callosum, the medullary part is of an oval shape: hence called centrum ova'le. Vieussens supposed all the medullary fibres to issue from that point, and that it was the great dispensatory of the animal spirits.

CENTRE, PHRENIC, or Tendinous Centre of the Diaphragm, Centrum Phrenicum, C. Nervum, or C. Tendinosum, (F.) Centre phrenique ou C. tendineux du Diaphragme. The central aponeurosis of the diaphragm.

CENTRE, TENDINOUS OF THE DIAPHRAGM, Centre phrenic.

CENTROMYRINE, Ruscus.

CENTRUM COMMUNE, Solar plexus—c. Nervum, Centre, phrenic—c. Tendinosum, Centre, phrenic.

CENTUM CAPITA, Eryngium campestre.

CENTUMNODIA, Polygonum aviculare.

CEPA ASCALONICA, Bulbus esculentus, Echalote.

CEPÆA, Veronica beccabunga.

CEPHÆLIS IPECACUANHA, Ipecacuanha.

CEPHALÆA, Headache, (F.) Céphalée. Some use the term synonymously with Cephalalgia. Others, for a periodical headache:—others, again, for a more violent headache than Cephalalgia implies; and others for a chronic headache.

The Cephalæa spasmodica, Cephalalgia spasmodica or Sick-headache, is characterized by partial, spasmodic pain; often shifting from one part of the head to another: chiefly commencing in the morning, with sickness and faintness. It is extremely apt to recur, notwithstanding every care.

CEPHALÆA HEMICRANIA, Hemicrania—c. pulsatilis, Crotaphe.

CEPHALÆMATOMA, from κεφαλη, 'head,' and αιμα, 'blood.' Abscessus Capitis sanguineus neonato'rum, Cephalophyma. A sanguineous tumour, sometimes developed between the pericranium and the bones of the head of new-born children. Similar tumours are met with occasionally above other bones, and at all periods of existence.

CEPHALAGRA, from κεφαλη, 'the head,' and αγρα, 'seizure.' Gout in the head.

CEPHALAGRAPHIA, from κεφαλη, 'the head,' and γραφη, 'a description.' An anatomical description of the head.

CEPHALALGIA, Cephalop'onia, Homonop'algia, from κεφαλη, 'the head,' and αλγος, 'pain,' Encephalalgia, Pain in the head; headache, (F.) Cephalalgie, Mal à tête. Every kind of headache, whether symptomatic or idiopathic, is a cephalalgia. It is ordinarily symptomatic, and has to be treated accordingly.

CEPHALALGIA CONTAGIOSA, Influenza—c. Inflammatoria, Phrenitis—c. Pulsatilis, Crotaphe—c. Spasmodica, See Cephalæa.

CEPHALALOGIA, from κεφαλη, 'the head,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' An anatomical dissertation on the head.

CEPHALARTICA, Cephalic remedies.

CEPHALATOMIA, Cephalotomia, from κεφαλη, 'the head,' and τεινειν, 'to cut.' Anatomy or dissection or opening of the head.

CEPHALE, Head.

CEPHALIC, Cephalicus, Capitalis, from κεφαλη, 'the head.' (F.) Céphalique. Relating to the head.

The CEPHALIC VEIN, Vena Cephalica, Vena Capitis, (F.) Veine céphalique, Veine radiale cutané of Chaussier. The great superficial vein at the outer part of the arm and forearm. It begins on the back of the hand, by a number of radicles, which unite into a single trunk, called the Cephalic of the Thumb, Cephalica Pollicis, (F.) Veine céphalique du pouce. It ascends along the anterior and outer part of the forearm, where it forms the superficial radial. At the fold of the elbow it receives the median cephalic, ascends along the outer edge of the biceps, and opens into the axillary vein.

The name, Cephalic, was given to it by the ancients, because they thought it had some connexion with the head, and that blood-letting must be performed in this vein, in head affections.

Chaussier calls the internal jugular, Veine céphalique, and the primary or common carotid, Artère céphalique.

CEPHALIC REMEDIES, Cephalica vel Capitata remedia, are remedies capable of relieving affections of the head, especially headache:—Cephalar'tica.

CEPHALIDIUM. See Caput.

CEPHALINE, κεφαλίνη. The base or root of the tongue.—Gorræus.

CEPHALITIS, Phrenitis.

CEPHALUM. See Caput.

CEPHALOMETER, Cephalometrum, from κεφαλή, 'the head,' and μετρον, 'measure.' An instrument for measuring the different dimensions of the fœtal head, during the process of accouchement. A kind of forceps.

CEPHALON'OSUS, from κεφαλή, 'the head,' and νοσος, 'disease.' This term has been applied to the Febris Hungar'ica, in which the head was much affected. See Fever, Hungaric. Others have so called,—any cerebral disease or fever.

CEPH'ALO-PHARYNGÆUS, from κεφαλή, 'the head,' and φάρυγξ, 'the pharynx:' belonging to the head and pharynx. Winslow has given this name to the portion of the constrictor pharyngis superior, (q. v.) which is attached, above, to the inferior surface of the basillary process of the os occipitis. The Ceph'alo-pharyng'cal Aponeu'rosis is a thin, fibrous membrane, which is attached to the basillary process, and gives insertion to fibres of the constrictor superior pharyngis.

CEPHALOPHYMA, Cephalæmatoma.

CEPHALOPONTIA, Cephalalgia.

CEPH'ALO-SPINAL, Cephalo-spinalis. Belonging to the head and spine.

The CEPH'ALO-SPINAL FLUID, is an exhaled fluid, which is found between the encephalon and pia mater; and which seems to have a protecting office, and to keep up a certain degree of pressure on the organ,—at least in the spinal canal.

CÉPHALOTRIBE, (F.) An instrument invented by Baudelocque, the nephew, for crushing the head of the fœtus in utero, from κεφαλή, 'the head,' and τριβω, 'I bruise.' It consists of a strong forceps, the blades of which are solid: 16 lines broad, and 3 thick. The handles are perforated at their extremity to receive a screw with three threads, the direction of which is very oblique, so as to allow great rapidity of rotation, and the screw is moved by a winch 6 inches long, to increase the force of the pressure. The bones of the head are easily crushed by it.

CEPHALOTRYPESIS, Trepanning.

CEPHALOXIA, Torticollis.

CEPULLA, Allium cepa.

CER, Heart.

CERA FLAVA et ALBA, κηρός, Yellow and White Wax, (F.) Cire Jaune et Blanc. An animal substance, prepared by the bee, and by some plants, as the Cerox'ylon and Myr'ica cerif'era. Its colour is yellow, and smell like that of honey, but both are lost by bleaching. It is demulcent and emollient: is sometimes given in the form of emulsion, in diarrhoea and dysentery, but is chiefly used in cerates and ointments.

CERÆ'Æ, from κερας, 'a horn,' κεραία. The Cor'nua of the U'terus. (q. v.)—Rufus of Ephesus.

CERAM'ICĒ, CERAMITIS. A sort of earth, used as a Cataplasm in peripneumony.—Hippocr.

CERAMIUM, Amphora.

CERAMNIUM, Amphora.

CERAMURIA. See Urolis.

CERANTHEMUS, Propolis.

CERAS, κερας, 'genitive,' κερατος, 'horn,' (Cornu q. v.) also, the Cornea (q. v.) Hence Ceratocomia, Ceratocle, &c.

CERASION. See Prunus cerasus.

CERASMA, κερασμα, from κεραττω, 'to mix:' something mixed. A mixture of hot and cold water. Melacrasma.—Gorræus.

CERASUM. See Prunus cerasus.

CERASUS AVIUM, Prunus avium—c. Laurocerasus, Prunus laurocerasus—c. Padus, Prunus Padus—c. Racemosus Sylvestris, Prunus padus.

CÉRAT BLANC ou DE GALIENI, Ceratum Galeni—c. de Blanc de Baleine, Ceratum cetacei—c. de Goulard, Ceratum plumbi—c. pour les lèvres, Cerate for the lips—c. de Plomb composé, Ceratum plumbi compositum—c. de Saxon, Ceratum Saponis—c. de Surcétate de plomb, Ceratum plumbi superacetatis.

CERATE, Ceratum, from κηρος, 'wax.' Cereleum, Cero'ma, Cero'nium, Cer'dum, Ceratomalog'ma, (F.) Cérat. A composition of wax, oil, or lard, with or without other ingredients.

CERATE, Simple Cerate, Ceratum, Ceratum simplex, P. L. (F.) Cérat simple. (Yellow wax ℥iv, olive oil ℥iv.) It is applied as an emollient to excoriations, &c.

CERATE OF CAL'AMINE, Ceratum Calami'næ, C. Carbonat'is zinci impu'ri, Ceratum lap'idis Calamini'aris, Ceratum epulot'icum, Turner's Cerate, Hooling Salve, (F.) Cérat de Pierre Calaminaire, C. de Calamine. (Olive oil ℔j, yellow wax lbss; melt, cool, and, when it begins to set, stir in calomine lbss.)

CERATE OF CANTHARIDES, Ceratum Canthar'idis, Blistér Ointment, Ointment of Spanish Flies, Unguentum ad vesicato'ria, Unguentum Pul'veris Mel'ocis vesicato'rii, Ung. epispas'ticum fortius, Ceratum Lyttæ, (F.) Cérat de Cantharides. (Spermucei cerate ℥vj, cantharides in powder. ℥j. The cerate being softened by heat, stir in the flies.) It is used to keep open blisters, issues, &c. See Unguentum Lyttæ.

CERATE, KIRKLAND'S NEUTRAL. (Diacycl. ℥viiij, olive oil ℥iv, prepared chalk ℥iv: when nearly cool, add Acet. dist. ℥iv, plumb. superacet ℥iiij.) A cooling emollient.

CERATE OR POMMA'TUM FOR THE LIPS, Ceratum labia'le rubrum, Pomma'tum ad labia demulcen'da. Ph. P. (F.) Cérat ou pommade pour les lèvres, (Wax 9 parts; oil 16 parts;—coloured with alkanet.)

CERATE, LEAD, COMPOUND, Ceratum plumbi compositum.

CERATE, MARSHALL'S. (Palm oil ζvi, calomel ζij, sugar of lead ζss, ointment of nitrate of mercury ζij.)

CERATE, SAVINE, Ceratum sabinæ—c. Soap, Ceratum saponis—c. Spermaceti, Ceratum cetacei—c. of Superacetate or Sugar of lead, Ceratum plumbi superactatis—c. Turner's, Cerate of calamine.

CERATECTOMIA, from κερας, 'the cornea,' and εκτομος, 'cut out.' An incision through the cornea. See Ceratotomy.

CERATITIS, from κερας, 'the cornea,' and itis, 'inflammation.' Inflammation of the cornea, Ceratodē'itis, Ceratomening'itis. See Corneitis.

CERATIA, Ceratonium siliqua.

CERATION, Siliqua.

CERATIUM, Ceratonium siliqua.

CER'ATO, in composition, in the names of muscles, is used for the cornua of the os hyoides;—as Cerato-glossus.

CER'ATOCELE, Aqunla, Uva'tio, Hernia Cor'neæ, Ceratodoecl'le, from κερας, 'horn,' and κηλη, 'tumour.' A protrusion of the transparent cornea, or rather of the membrane of the aqueous humour through an opening in the cornea.

CERATODEITIS, Ceratitis.

CERATODEOCELE, Ceratocele.

CERATOGLOS'SUS or KERATOGLOS'SUS, from κερας, 'horn,' and γλωσσα, 'the tongue.' A muscle, extending from the great cornu of the os hyoides to the base of the tongue. It is a part of the hyoglossus (q. v.)

CERATOIDES, Cornea.

CERATO-MALAGMA, Cerate.

CERATO-MENINGITIS, Ceratitis.

CER'ATO-PHARYNGE'US or KER'ATOPHARYNGE'US, from κερας, a 'horn,' and φαρυγξ, 'the pharynx.' The great and small Cer'ato-pharyngē'i are small fleshy bundles, forming part of the Hypopharyngeus of Winslow.

CER'ATO-STAPHYLINUS or KER'ATOSTAPHYLINUS, from κερας, 'horn,' and σταφυλη, 'the uvula.' Some fleshy fibres of the Thyro-Staphylinus of Winslow.

CERATO'NIA SIL'IQUA. The Carob Tree. Ceratium, Cer'atia, Sil'iqua dulcis, Car'oba Anabati, the Sweetpod, (F.) Caroubier (Fruit, Carouge.) This—the fruit of the Ceratonium siliqua—is mucilaginous, and employed where mucilages are indicated, in decoction.

CERATONYX'IS or KERATONYX'IS, from κερας, 'the cornea,' and νυσση, 'I puncture.' An operation by which the crystalline is depressed by means of a needle introduced into the eye through the cornea. Some divide the crystalline into fragments with the needle, and leave them to the action of the absorbents. The operation is as old as the 17th century.

CERATOPLASTICĒ, from κερας, 'the cornea,' and πλαστικός, 'forming, formative.' The operation for the formation of an artificial cornea. It has not been practised on man.

CER'ATOTOMIA, Ceratotomy, from κερας, 'horn,' 'cornea,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' Section of the transparent cornea. This incision is used in the operation for cataract: to give exit to pus effused in the eye, in case of lypopyon, &c.

CERATOT'OMUS, Keratol'omus, Kerat'omus, from κερας, 'cornea,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' A name given by Wenzel to his knife for dividing the transparent cornea, in the operation for cataract. Many modifications of the instrument have been made since Wenzel's time. See Knife, cataract.

CERATUM ALBUM, Ceratum cetacei, Ceratum Galeni—c. de Althæa, Unguentum de Althæa—c. de Cerussa, Unguentum plumbi subcarbonatis.

CER'ATUM CETA'CEI, Ceratum spermoeceti, Ceratum album, Ceratum simplex, C. Ceti, Unguentum adipocetræ cetorum, Linimentum album, Emplastrum Sperm'atis Ceti, Spermaceti Cerate, (F.) Cérat de blanc de baleine. (Spermaceti ζiv, white wax ζij, olive oil ζiv.) A good emollient to ulcers, &c.

CERATUM CETI, Ceratum cetacei—c. Cicutæ, Ceratum conii—c. Citrinum, Ceratum resina.

CER'ATUM CONI'I, Ceratum Cicutæ. (Ung. conii lbj, cetacci ζij, cera alba ζiij.) A formula in Bartholomew's Hospital: occasionally applied to cancerous, scrofulous sores, &c.

CERATUM EPULOTICUM, Cerate of calamine.

CER'ATUM GALE'NI, Ceratum album, C. refrigē'rans Galeni, Unguentum ceratum, U. amygdal'inum, U. simplex, Emplastrum ad fontic'ulos, Oleo-ceratum aquâ subactum, Cold Cream, (F.) Cérat blanc ou de GALIEN. (White wax 4 parts; oil of sweet almonds 16 parts; add, when melted, water or rose-water 12 parts. Ph. P.) A mild application to chaps, &c.

CERATUM LABIALE RUBRUM, Cerate for the lips—c. Lapidis calaminaris, Cerate of calamine—c. Lithargyri acetati compositum, Ceratum plumbi compositum—c. Lyttæ, Cerate of cantharides—c. Mercurialis, Unguentum hydrargyri—c. Picatum, Pisselæum.

CER'ATUM PLUMBI SUPERACTA'TIS, Unguentum Ceru'sæ Aceta'tæ, Cerate of superacetate or Sugar of Lead, Ceratum Plumbi Acetatis, Unguentum Acetatis Plumbi. (F.) Cérat de suracétate de Plomb. (Acetate of lead ζij, white wax ζij, olive oil lbss.) Cooling and astringent.

CERATUM PLUMBI COMPOSITUM, Ceratum Lithargyri Aceta'ti Compositum, Goulard's Ointment, Ceratum subaceta'ti plumbi medicatum, Ceratum Saturni, Compound Lead Cerate. (F.) Cérat de Goulard, C. de Plomb composé. (Liq. plumb acet. ζiiss, cera flavæ, ζiv, ol. oliv. ζix, camphora ζss.) Its virtues are the same as the last.

CERATUM REFRIGERANS GALENI, Ceratum Galeni.

CER'ATUM RESINÆ, C. Resinæ flavæ, C. citrinum, Unguentum basilicon flavum, Ung. Resinæ flavæ, Ung. Resin'um, Resin Cerate or Ointment, Yellow Basilicon. (Resin flav., Cera flav., āā lbj, ol. oliv. lbj.) A stimulating application to old ulcers, &c. Digestive.

DR. SMELLOME'S Ointment for the Eyes consists of finely powdered verdigris ζss, rubbed with oil, and then mixed with an ounce of ceratum resina.

CER'ATUM SABINÆ, Unguent. Sabinæ, Savine Cerate, (F.) Cérat de Sabine. (Fresh Savine leaves, bruised, lbj, yellow wax lbss, hog's lard lbj.) Irritative, 'drawing.' Used in the same cases as the cerate of cantharides.

CERATUM SAPONIS. Soap Cerate, (F.) Cérat de Savon. (Hard Soap ℥viii, yellow wax, ℥x, semivitreous oxide of lead lbj, olive oil lbj, vinegar l gallon. Boil together the vinegar and oxide of lead, over a slow fire, stirring constantly till they combine: add the soap, and boil again until the water be evaporated: then mix in the oil and wax previously melted.) It is applied in cases of sprains or fractures.

CERATUM SATURNI, Ceratum plumbi compositum—c. Simplex, Ceratum cetacei—c. Spermaceti, Ceratum cetacei—c. Subacetati plumbi medicatum, Ceratum plumbi compositum—c. Tetrapharmacum, Pissekæum—c. Carbonatis zinci impuri, Cerate of calamine.

CERAUNION, from κεραινος, 'thunder,' a thunderbolt.' Lapis fulmineus. A kind of stone, which was believed to be formed during thunder; and to be possessed of the power of inducing sleep, and numerous other prophylactic virtues. It was rubbed on the knee, breast, &c. in swellings of those parts.—A. Chiocci.

CERBERUS TRICEPS, Pulvis corachini.

CERCIS, Pilum, Radius.

CERCA'RIA. A genus of agastric, infusory animalcules, one of the most curious of which inhabits the tartar of the teeth. The spermatozoa are presumed by some to belong to this genus.

CERCHNOS, Cerchnus, from κερχνηω. 'I render hoarse.' A rough voice produced by hoarseness. See Rattle.

CERCIS, κερκισ. A sort of pestle for reducing substances to powder. Also, the radius or small bone of the arm. See Pilum and Radius.

CERCLE, Circulus—c. de la Choroidé, Ciliary ligament—c. Ciliaire, Ciliary ligament.

CERCO'SIS, from κερκος, 'a tail.' Men'tula mulie'bris, the Clit'oris. Some authors have employed the word synonymously with Nymphomania and elongation of the clitoris, and with Polypus Uteri, the Sarco'ma Cerco'sis of Sauvages.

CERCOSIS EXTERNA, Clitorisin.

CEREA, Cerumen.

CEREA'LIA, from CERES, 'goddess of corn,' (F.) Céréales (Plantes). The cerealia are gramineous plants, the seed of which serve for the nourishment of man;—as wheat, barley, rye, &c. At times, the same term is applied to some of the leguminous plants.

CEREBEL'LA URINA. Urine of a whitish appearance of the colour of the brain, from which Paracelsus thought he could distinguish diseases of that organ.

CEREBELL'ITIS. Inflammation of the cerebellum: a variety of Phrenitis or Encephalitis.

CEREBEL'LOUS, Cerebello'sus, from cerebellum, 'the little brain,' (F.) Cérébelleux. Chaussier has given this name to the vessels of the cerebellum. These are three in number: two of which are inferior: the larger, Inferior Cerebelli, which arises from the posterior cerebral or vertebral; and the smaller, whose existence is not constant, from the meso-cephalic or basiliary:—the third, called, A. cérébelleuse supérieure (superior cerebelli), is also a branch of the basiliary.

CEREBEL'LOUS AP'OPLEXY, Apoplexia cerebelli'sa: apoplexy of the cerebellum. It is often accompanied with irritation of the genital organs, as erection, &c.

CEREBEL'LUM. Diminutive of Cer'ebrum, C. parvum, Appen'dix ad cer'ebrium, Cer'ebrium posterius, Encra'nion, Encra'nis, Epencra'nis, Paraneceph'alis, the Little brain. (F.) Cer'ebet. A portion of the medullary mass, contained in the cavity of the cranium. It fills the lower occipital fosse, below the tentorium, and embraces the tuber annulare and medulla. It is composed, like the brain, of cortical and medullary substance, arranged in laminae, as it were, so that, when a section is made of it, it has an arborescent appearance, called Arbor vite. The cerebellum is divided into two lobes or hemispheres, or lateral masses, and each lobe is again subdivided into Monticuli or Lobules. In the cerebellum are to be observed the Crura cerebelli, the fourth ventricle, the valvula magna cerebri, the processus vermiculares, superior and inferior, &c.

CEREBRAL, Cerebra'lis, from cerebrum, 'the brain.' Belonging to the brain, and similar to the brain. (F.) Cé'rébral.

CEREBRAL APOPHYSIS, Pineal gland.

The CEREBRAL ARTERIES are three on each side:—the anterior or artery of the corpus callosum, and the middle, Arteria Sylviana, are furnished by the internal carotid: the posterior or posterior and inferior artery of the brain, A. profunda cerebri, arises from the vertebral. Chaussier calls these arteries lobaires, because they correspond with the anterior, middle, and posterior lobes, whilst he calls the trunks, whence they originate, cerebral.

The CEREBRAL NERVES are those which arise within the cranium, all of which, perhaps, with the exception of the olfactory, arise from the medulla oblongata. See Nerves.

In Pathology, an affection is called cerebral, which specially occupies the brain. Fèvre cérébrale, Cerebral fever, is a variety in which the head is most affected.

CEREBRIFORM, Encephaloid.

CEREBRUM. The brain. (F.) Cerveau, Cervelle. This term is sometimes applied to the whole of the contents of the cranium: at others, to the upper portion;—the posterior and inferior being called cerebellum. The brain, properly so called, extends from the os frontis to the superior occipital fossæ. Anteriorly, it rests on the orbital vaults: behind this, on the middle fossæ of the base of the cranium; and, posteriorly, on the tentorium cerebello superextensum. The upper surface is divided by a deep median cleft (Scissure interlobaire,—Ch.) into two halves, called hemispheres, which are united at the base by the corpus callosum. At its surface are numerous convolutions. The inferior surface exhibits, from before to behind, three lobes, distinguished into anterior, middle and posterior. The middle is separated from the anterior, by the fissure of SYLVIVS; and from the posterior, by a shallow furrow which corresponds to the upper portion of the pars petrosa. Internally, the brain has, on the median line, the corpus callosum, septum lucidum, forix, pineal gland, and third ventricle:—and, laterally, the lateral ventricles, in which are the corpora striata, optic thalami, &c.

The brain is contained in a triple envelope.

(See Meninges.) Its texture is pulpy, and varies according to age. Two substances may be distinguished in it—the medullary, and cortical or cineritious. The former is white; and occupies all the interior and base of the brain. The latter is grayish and softer. It is situated particularly at the surface of the organ.

The brain receives several arterial vessels, furnished by the internal carotid and vertebral. Its veins end in the sinuses. It is the material organ of thought:—of the mental and moral manifestations.

According to M. Gall, each part is the special seat of one of those faculties, and the brain and cerebellum, inclusive, are called by him "the nervous system of the mental faculties."

The following Table, from Haller and Cuvier, exhibits the proportion between the mass of the brain and that of the body in man and in animals.

|   |                   |          |
|---|-------------------|----------|
| A child of 6 years (HALLER)                         | }                 | 1-22     |
| lb. 2, oz. 3 1-2.                                   |                   |          |
| Adult (HALLER)                                      | }                 | 1-35     |
| (From lb. 2, 3 oz. to lb. 3, 3 3-4 oz. SOEMMERING.) |                   |          |
| Gibbon ( Simia )                             |                   | 1-48     |
| Sapajou   | from 1-41         | to 1-22  |
| Ape   | from 1-48         | to 1-24  |
| Baboon  | from 1-104        | to 1-86  |
| Lemur   | from 1-84         | to 1-61  |
| Bat ( Vespertilio Noctula )                  |                   | 1-96     |
| Mole  |                   | 1-36     |
| Bear  |                   | 1-205    |
| Hedgehog  |                   | 1-168    |
| Fox   |                   | 1 205    |
| Wolf  |                   | 1-230    |
| Beaver  |                   | 1-290    |
| Hare  |                   | 1-223    |
| Rabbit  | 1-140             | to 1-152 |
| Rat   |                   | 1-76     |
| Mouse   |                   | 1-43     |
| Wild Boar   |                   | 1-672    |

| Carp  |                   | 1-560    |

The substance of the nervous system has been analyzed by Vauquelin and found to contain, water 80.00; white fatty matter 4.53; red fatty matter, called cerebrine, 0.70; osmazome, 1.12; albumen, 7.00; phosphorus, 1.50; sulphur, acid phosphates of potassa, lime, and magnesia, 5.15.

CEREBRUM ABDOMINALE, Solar plexus—c. Elongatum, Medulla oblongata—c. Parvum, Cerebellum—c. Posterius, Cerebellum.

CEREFOLIUM, Scandix cerefolium—c. Hispanicum, Chærophyllum odoratum—c. Sylvestre, Chærophyllum sylvestre.

CERELÆUM, Cerate.

CEREOEA, Bougie.

CEREUM MEDICATUM, Bougie.

CEREVISIA, Zythos, ζυθος, Liquor Cerevisis, Vinum hordeaceum, Barley Wine, Bira, Bryton, βρυτον, from CERES, 'corn;' whence it is made. Ale, Beer, Porter, (F.) Bière, Cervoise. These fluids are drunk by the inhabitants of many countries, habitually, and in Great Britain more than in others. They are nourishing, but not very easy of digestion. The old dispensaries contain numerous medicated Ales, which are no longer in use.

CERFÈUIL, Scandix cerefolium—c. Musqué, Chærophyllum odoratum—c. Sauvage, Chærophyllum sylvestre.

CERION, Favus, Porrigo favosa.

CÉRISIER, Prunus cerasus—c. à Grappes, Prunus padus—c. de Virginie, Prunus Virginiana.

CERNIN, SAINT, WATERS OF. St. C. is a parish in the diocese of St. Flour, Upper Auvergne, France. The water is a chalybeate. It is called Eau du Cambon.

CERNOS, Capistrum.

CEROE'NÈ, CEROU'NÈ, or CIROU'NÈ, Cerœnum, from κηρός, 'wax,' and οἶνος, 'wine.' A plaster, composed of yellow wax, mutton suet, pitch, Burgundy pitch, Bole Armeniac, Thus, and wine. It was used as a strengthening plaster. Sometimes it contained neither wax nor wine.

CEROMA, Cerate.

CEROMANTIA, from κηρός, 'wax,' and μαντεία, 'divination.' The art of foretelling the future, from the figures which melted wax assumes, when suffered to drop on the surface of water.

CERONIUM, Cerate.

CEROPIS'SUS, from κηρός, 'wax,' and πίσσα, 'pitch.' A depilatory plaster, composed of pitch and wax.

CEROS, Cera.

CEROSTROSIS, Hystriçiasis.

CEROTUM, Cerate.

CEROXYLON. See Cera flava et alba.

CERUA, Ricinis communis.

CERUMEN, from cera, 'wax.' Cerumen Aurium, Cereæ, Aurium Sordes, Marmorata Aurium, Cyp'sele, Ceruminous Humor, Cyp'sclis, Fulgile, (F.) Cire des Oreilles. A name given to the unctuous humour, similar to wax in its physical properties, which is met with in the meatus auditorius externus. It is secreted by follicles, situate beneath the membrane lining the meatus. It lubricates the meatus, preserves the suppleness of the lining membrane, prevents the introduction of bodies floating in the atmosphere, and by its bitterness and unctuousness prevents insects from penetrating.

CERUMINOUS, Cerumino'sus, (F.) Cérumineux. Relating to cerumen.

CERUMINOUS GLANDS or FOLLICLES, (F.) Glandes cérumineuses ou Follicules Cérumineuses. Glands or follicles, which secrete the cerumen.

CERUSSA ACETATA, Plumbi superacetatis—c. Alba Hispanica, Plumbi subcarbonatis—c. Alba Norica, Plumbi subcarbonatis—c. Psymithron, Plumbi subcarbonatis—c. Serpentariæ. See Arum maculatum.

CERUSSE, Plumbi subcarbonatis.

CERUSSEA URINA. Terms used by Paracelsus for the urine, when of a dull colour, like cerusse.

CERVARIA ALBA, Laserpitium latifolium.

CERVEAU, Cerebrum.

CERVELET, Cerebellum.

CERVELLE, Cerebrum.

CERVI ELAPHI CORNU, Cornu cervi. See Cervus.

CERVICAL. Cervicalis, from cervix, 'the back of the neck.' Trachelian. Every thing which concerns the neck, especially the back part.

The CERVICAL ARTERIES are three in number: 1. The ascending, anterior, or superficial, a branch of the inferior thyroid, distributed to the scaleni muscles and integuments. 2. The transverse (Cervico-scapulaire—Ch.) a branch of the axillary artery, or of the subclavian: distributed to the levator scapule, trapezius, &c. 3. The posterior or profound, A. transversalis colli (Trachélo-cervicale—Ch.) a branch of the subclavian, distributed to the deep-seated muscles on the anterior and posterior parts of the neck.

The CERVICAL VEINS have nearly the same distribution as the arteries.

The CERVICAL NERVES are eight in number, on each side; and form the eight cervical pairs, which are the first given off from the spinal marrow.

The CERVICAL PLEXUS, (Plexus Trachéloscutanéus Ch.) The nervous net-work, formed by the anterior branches of the first three cervical nerves, above the posterior scalenus muscle, and at the outer side of the pneumogastric nerve, carotid artery, and jugular vein.

CERVICAL GLANDS. The three ganglions of the great sympathetic. The cervical glands or lymphatic glands of the neck are, also, so called.

CERVICAL VERTEBRÆ. The seven first vertebræ of the spine.

CERVICAL LIGAMENTS. These are two in number. 1. The anterior, extending from the basilar process of the occipital bone to the anterior part of the first cervical vertebra. 2. The posterior or supraspinous, Ligamentum Nuchæ, which extends from the outer occipital protuberance to the spinous process of the seventh cervical vertebra. In animals with large heads it is very strong.

CERVICALIS DESCENDENS. See Sacrolumbalis.

CERVICARIA, Campanula-trachelium.

CERVICI-DORSO-SCAPULAIRE, Rhomboideus—c. dorso-costal, Serratus posticus superior—c. dorso-mastoidien et dorso-trachélien, Splenius—c. Mastoidien, Splenius.

CERVISPINA, Rhamnus.

CERVIX, Collum. (q. v.) The neck. A neck.

CERVIX OBSTIPA, Torticollis.

CERVIX UTERI. The neck of the uterus; also the vagina. The term cervix is applied to other parts, as the cervix of a bone, or the part between the head and body, &c. See Collum.

CERVOISE, Cerevisia.

CERVUS, CERVA. The horn of the Cervus Elaphus, called Cornu, Cervi Elaphi Cornu, Cornu Cervinum, Hartshorn, (F.) Corne de cerf, contains 27 parts of gelatine in the 100. A jelly made from the shavings is emollient and nutritive.

The STAG'S PIZZLE, Prid'pus Cervi, was once considered to be aphrodisiac. Dose, ℞j to ℥j in powder.

CERVUS AL'CES. The Elk, (F.) Elan. The hoof of this animal was anciently used as an anti-epileptic. The animal, it was asserted, was subject to attacks of epilepsy, and always cured them by putting its hoof into the ear. The hoof was also worn as an amulet.

The Cornu Ustum or Burnt Hartshorn has been used as an antacid, but it consists of 57 parts of phosphate, and but one of carbonate of lime. It is, therefore, not of much use.

CESTRITES. A wine prepared from betony, (κεστόρον, 'betony.')

CESTRON, Betania officinalis.

CETA'CEUM, from κητος, 'a whale.' Album Ceti, Adipocera cetosa, Spermacti, (F.) Blanc de Balaine, Cétine, Adipocire de Balaine. An inodorous, insipid, white, crystallized, friable, unctuous substance, obtained from the brain of the Physéter Macrocephalus or Spermacti Whale, and other varieties of whale. S. g. .9433: melts at 112°. It is demulcent and emollient; has been given in coughs and dysentery, but is mostly used in ointments. Dose, ℥ss to ℥iiss rubbed up with sugar or egg.

CETERACH OFFICINARUM, Asplenium ceterach.

CÉTINE, Cetaceum.

CETRARIN. See Lichen Islandicus.

CEVADILLA HISPANORUM, Veratrum Sabadilla.

CEVADILLE, Veratrum Sabadilla.

CHAA, Thea.

CHÆROFOLIUM, Scandix cerefolium.

CHÆROPHYLLUM, from χαίρω, 'I rejoice,' and φυλλον, 'a leaf.'

CHÆROPHYLLUM TEMULUM, Chærophyllum sylvestre.

CHÆROPHYLLUM SYLVESTRE, Cicuta'ria, Chærophyllum Temulum, Cerefolium sylvestre, Bastard Henlock, Wild Chervil or Cow-wed, (F.) Cerfeuil sauvage, Persil d'Anc. It is a slightly fetid aromatic; but is not used.

CHÆROPHYLLUM ODORATUM, Scandix Odorata, Myrrhis Odorata, Cerefolium Hispanicum, Sweet Cic'ely, (F.) Cerfeuil musqué ou d'Espagne, has the smell of aniseed, and is cultivated on account of its aromatic properties.

CHÆTE, Capillus.

CHAFING, Erythéma Intertrigo, Paratrin'ima, from échauffer, 'to heat.' Fret, erosions of the skin, Attrita, (F.) Échauffemens, Écorchures. The red excoriations which occur in consequence of the friction of parts, or between the folds of the skin, especially in fat or neglected children. Washing with cold water and dusting with hair powder is the best preventive.

CHAIR, Flesh.

CHALASIS, Relaxation.

CHALASMOS, Relaxation.

CHALAS'TICUS, from χαλαω, 'I relax.'

A medicine proper for removing rigidity of the fibres.—Galen. An emollient or relaxant, (q. v.)

CHALAZA, CHALAZION, CHALAZOSIS, Poro'sis, Grando, Hail, (F.) Grêle, Gravelle. Certain hard, round, transparent tumours, developed in different parts of the body, more especially in the substance of the eyelids.

CHALCANTHUM, Ferri sulphas—c. Album, Zinci sulphas.

CHALCEDONIUS, Cornelian.

CHALCITES, Colcothar.

CHALCOIDEUM, (os) Cuneiform Bone.

CHALCOS, Cuprum, Æreolum.

CHALEUR, Heat—c. Acree, see Acrid—c. Animale, Animal heat.

CHALK, Creta—c. Red, Rubrica fabrilis—c. Stones, Calculi arthritic.

CHALYB'EATE, Chalybeatus, Ferrugin'eus, Ferrugin'osus, Martialis, (F.) Ferrugin'eux; from chalybs, 'iron or steel.' Of, or belonging to iron. Any medicine, into which iron enters; as, a chalybeate mixture, pills, waters, &c. See Waters, Mineral.

CHALYBIS RUBIGO, Ferri subcarbonas. CHALYBS, from Chalybes; a people of Pontus, who dug iron out of the earth; Acies, Steel. The Proto carburet of Iron, (F.) Acier. As a medicine, steel does not differ from iron.

CHALYBS TARTARIZATUS, Ferrum tartarizatum.

CHAMA, Cheme.

CHAMÆACTE, Sambucus ebulus.

CHAMÆBATUS, Fragaria.

CHAMÆCEDRIS, Artemisia santonica.

CHAMÆCISSUS, Glecoma hederacea.

CHAMÆCLEMA, Glecoma hederacea.

CHAMÆCYPARISSUS, Artemisia santonica.

CHAMÆDROPS, Teucrium chamædrys.

CHAMÆDRYS, Teucrium Ch., Veronica—c. Incana maritima, Teucrium marum—c. Minor repens, Teucrium Ch.—c. Palustris, Teucrium scordium—c. Vulgaris, Teucrium Ch.

CHAMÆDRYTES. A wine, in which the Teucrium Chamædrys has been infused.

CHAMÆGEIRON, Tussilago.

CHAMÆLAI'TES. A wine, impregnated with the Chama'ica or Daphne Alpina.

CHAMÆLEA, Cneorum tricoccum.

CHAMÆLEAGNUS, Myrica gale.

CHAMÆLEON ALBUM, Carlina acaulis.

CHAMÆLEUCE, Tussilago.

CHAMÆLINUM, Linum catharticum.

CHAMÆMELUM, Anthemis nobilis—c. Fœtidum, Anthemis cotula—c. Nobile, Anthemis nobilis—c. Odoratum, Anthemis nobilis—c. Vulgare, Matricaria chamomilla.

CHAMÆMORUM, Teucrium Chamæpitys, Rubus chamæmorus.

CHAMÆPEUCE, Camphorosma monspeliaca.

CHAMÆPITU'NUM VINUM. A wine, in which the leaves of the Chama'pitys, the Teucrium Chama'pitys, have been infused.

CHAMÆPITYS, Teucrium chamæpitys—c. Anthyllus, Teucrium iva—c. Moschata, Teucrium iva.

CHAMÆPLION, Erysimum.

CHAMÆRAPHANUM, from χαμαι, 'on the ground,' and ραφανος, 'the radish.' So Paulus of Ægina calls the upper part of the root of the Spium.

CHAMBAR, Magnesia.

CHAMBER, Camera. This term is used in speaking of the eye; in which there are two chambers:—an anterior and a posterior. (F.) Chambre antérieure et postérieure. The anterior is the space between the cornea and the anterior part of the iris:—the posterior, the space between the iris and anterior surface of the crystalline. They are filled with the aqueous humour, and communicate by the opening in the pupil.

CHAMBERLAIN'S RESTORATIVE PILLS. This nostrum, recommended in scrofula, and all impurities of the blood, has been analyzed by Dr. Paris, and found to consist of cinnabar, sulphur, sulphate of lime, and a little vegetable matter. Each pill weighs 3 grains.

CHAMBRIE, Cannabis sativa.

CHAMELEA, Daphne Alpina.

CHAMOMILE, DOGS', Matricaria chamomilla—c. Dyer's, Anthemis tinctoria—c. Spanish, Anthemis pyrethrum—c. Stinking, Anthemis cotula.

CHAMOMILLA NOSTRAS, Matricaria chamomilla—c. Romana, Anthemis nobilis.

CHAMPACA, Michelia champaca.

CHAMPIGNON, Fungus—c. de l'Appareil des Fractures, Clavaria—c. de Couche, see Agaric—c. de Malte, Cynomorium coccineum.

CHANCE LAGUA, Canchalagua.

CHANCER, (F.) Ulcus cancro'sum, Ulcus-culum cancro'sum. A sore, which arises from the direct application of the venereal virus; hence it is almost always seated, in men, on the penis. The French use the word Chancre, in popular language, for cancerous ulcers, the malignant aphthæ of children, &c. Formerly, the terms Caroli and Caries pudendo'rum were used for venereal pustules or sores on the parts of generation.

CHANCREUSE, (F.) Cancro'sus, Carcinodes. Having the nature of chancre, or of cancer.

BOUION CHANCREUX is a small tumour of a cancerous nature, which makes its appearance on the face—most frequently on the upper lip—Noli me tangere.

CHANT DES ARTÈRES, Sifflement modulé.

CHANVRE, Cannabis sativa.

CHAOMANTYA. The Alchemists meant, by this word, the art of predicting the future from observation of the air. The word Chaos was used by Paracelsus for the air.

CHAOSDA, Plague.

CHAPERON DE MOINE, Aconitum napellus.

CHAPPETONADE, (F.) Vom'itus rabio'sus. Vomiting, accompanied with furious delirium, attacking strangers in hot countries.

CHARACTER, χαρακτήρ. (F.) Caractère. A mark or impression. In Pathology, it is used synonymously with stamp or appearance. We say, "A disease is of unfavourable character." "The prevailing epidemic has a bilious character," &c. In Mental Philosophy it means—that which distinguishes one individual from another, as regards his understanding and passions.

CHARADRIUS, χαραδριος. Ælian thus calls a bird, which was reputed to cure jaundice. The word now means the plover.

CHARANTIA, Momordica elaterium.

CHARBON, Anthrax, Carbo.

CHARBONNEUX, Anthracoid.

CHARCOAL, Carbo.

CHARDON AUX ANES, Onopordium acanthium—c. Béné, Centaurea benedicta—c. à Bonnetier, Dipsacus fullonum—c. Etoilé, Centaurea calcitrapa—c. à Foulon, Dipsacus fullonum—c. Hémothoidal, Cirsium arvense—c. Marie, Carduus Marianus—c. Roland, Eryngium campestre.

CHARLATAN, Circulator, Circumforaneus, Periodeutes, Pseudomedicus, Agyria, Anacyclon. A Quack, an Empirical Pretender, Empiric. Probably, one who goes from place to place to sell any medicine, to which he attributes marvellous properties. By extension—any individual, who endeavours to deceive the public by passing himself off as more skilful than he really is. According to Ménage, the word comes from circulatanus, a corruption of circulator.

CHARLATANRY, Agyrtia, Banau'sia, the conduct or action of a charlatan. (F.) Charlatanerie, Charlatanisme, Quackery, Empiricism.

CHARM, Carmen, Cantatio, Incantamentum. Trick. (F.) Charme. A sort of magic, or superstitious practice, by which it was believed, that individuals might be struck with sickness or death, or be restored to health.

CHARNIÈRE, Ginglymus.

CHARNU, Carneous.

CHARPIE, Carbasus.

CHARTA VIRGINEA, Amnios.

CHARTRE, Tabes mesenterica.

CHAS (F.) Acus foramen. The eye of a needle. Sometimes, this opening is near the point of the instrument, as in the ligature needle.

CHASME, Yawning.

CHASPE, Variola.

CHASSE (F.) Movabrium. A kind of handle composed of two movable laminæ of horn, shell, or ivory, united only at the extremity, which holds the blade of the instrument,—as in the common bleeding lancet.

CHASSIE (F.) Lema, Lippa, Glama, Gramia; the gum of the eye. A sebaceous humour, secreted by the follicles of MEIBOMIUS, which sometimes glues the eyes together.

CHASSIEUX (F.) Lippus; covered with Chassie—as Paupières chassieuses.

CHASTE TREE, Vitex.

CHATAIGNE, see Fagus castanea—c. d' Eau, Trapa natans.

CHATAIGNIER COMMUN, Fagus castanea —c. Nain, Fagus castanea pumila.

CHATEAU-LANDON, WATERS OF. A town three leagues from Nemours, in France. The waters contain alum and iron.

CHATEAU-SALINS; a town in the department of La Meurthe, France. The waters contain carbonate of lime, sulphates of lime and magnesia, and muriates of magnesia, and soda.

CHATEL-GUYON, MINERAL WATERS OF. A village in France, in the department Puy-de-Dôme, near which there are five thermal and acidulous springs. Temperature, 86° Fahrenheit.

CHATON (F.), 'a husk.' In Pathology, it means a funda, or cavity formed by the irregular or hourglass contraction of the uterus, in which the placenta is often retained or enchatonné after the birth of the child. It is detected by passing the fingers along the cord as far as the part which is contracted, when the placenta will not be discoverable.

The treatment consists in relaxing by a large dose of an opiate, then passing the fingers along the cord, and gradually dilating the opening through which it passes, until it permits the hand to go through. The placenta must then be grasped and gently withdrawn.

CHATON, Vaginal process.

CALCUL CHATONNÉ (F.) Calculus incarceratedus, Encysted Calculus, Calcul enkysté. A urinary calculus, adherent to the inner surface of the bladder, so that it is immovable, and cannot pass to the different parts of that organ. This happens when calculi form in some natural or accidental cavity of the bladder; or when the organ by ulceration, gives rise to fungi, which surround the calculus; or when it is lodged in the orifice of the ureter or urethra.

PLACENTA CHATONNÉ (F.) The placenta when retained as above described. See Chaton.

CHATONNEMENT (F.) Incarceratio, Chatonnement du placenta, Enkystement.—Hour-glass contraction of the uterus. See Chaton.

CHATOUILLEMENT (F.) This word sometimes means the action of tickling (q. v.) or titillation (Titillatio), and, at others, the sensation which gives rise to the action (Pruritus), Itching.

CHIATRE, Castratus.

CHAUDEBOURG, MINERAL WATERS OF. C. is three quarters of a league from Thionville in France. The waters contain iron, sulphate of lime, sulphate of magnesia, and carbonate of lime.

CHAUDEPISSE, Gonorrhœa impura—c. Cordé, Gonorrhœa cordata.

CHAUDS-AIGUES, MINERAL WATERS OF. A small town in the department of Cantal, France, where there is a number of saline springs. Temp. 190° Fahrenheit.

CHAUFFOIR (F.) Lintum Calefactorium. According to the Académie, a warmed cloth, used either for the purpose of warming a patient, or to apply to a female recently delivered.

CHAUSSE (F.) Chausse d'Hippocrate, Manche d'Hippocrate, Manica Hippocratis, Manica Hippocrates' Sleeve. A conical bag, made of flannel, for straining liquids.

CHAUSSE-TRAPPE, Centaurea calcitrapa.

CHAUVETÉ, Calvities.

CHIAUX, HYDROSULFATE DE, Calci sulphuretum—c. Vive, Calx viva.

CHEEK, Gena.

CHEESE, Caseus, Tyros, τυρός; (F.) Fromage. An aliment, prepared from the caseous and oleaginous parts of milk. Fresh cheeses owe their chief medical properties to the immediate principle, essentially cheesy, to which the name caseum or casein has been applied. Those, which have been recently salted, are digested with comparative facility. The flavour of cheese is owing to an ammoniacal caseate. On the whole, cheese itself is not easy of digestion, although it may stimulate the stomach to greater exertion, and thus aid in the digestion of other substances.

CHEESE RENNET, Galium verum.

CHEE'SY, Casca'rius, Cased'sus, Tyro'des, (F.) Caséux ou Caséux. Having the nature of cheese.

CHEF, Bandage (tail.)

CHEILITIS, or CHILITIS, from χειλος, 'a lip,' Inflammation of the lip. See Chilon.

CHEILOCACĒ, from χειλος, 'a lip,' and κακος, 'evil.' Labrisul'cium. A disease, characterized, it is said, by swelling, induration, and slight redness of the lips without inflammation, reputed, but without any authority, to be common in England and Scotland, amongst children; also, the thickness of the upper lip of scrofulous children. See Stomacace.

CHEILOCARCINO'MA, from χειλος, 'a lip,' and καρκινωσις, 'cancer.' Cancer of the lip.

CHEILOMALACIA, Stomacace.

CHEILON, Chilon.

CHEILOPLASTICĒ, Chiloplastice, from χειλος, 'a lip,' and πλαστικός, 'forming.' The operation for an artificial lip.

CHEILOS, Lip.

CHEIMA, Cold.

CHEIMETHLON, Chilblain.

CHEIMIA, Rigor.

CHEIR, Manus.

CHEIRAN'THUS CHEIRI. The systematic name of the Common Yellow Wall-flower, Viola lutea, Leucoïum luteum; Keyri Cheiri, (F.) Gesflee ou Violier jaune. The flowers have been esteemed nervine, narcotic, and deobstruent.

CHEIRAP'SIA. The action of rubbing or scratching, from χειρ, 'the hand,' and απτω, 'I touch.' A troublesome symptom in the itch.

CHEIRIATER, Surgeon.

CHEIRIS'MA, Cheiris'mus. The act of touching;—handling. Any manual operation.

CHEIRIXIS, Surgery.

CHEIRONO'MIA, Chirono'mia, from χειρονομωω, 'I exercise with the hands.' An exercise, referred to by Hippocrates, which consisted in using the hands, as in our exercise of the dumb-bells.

CHEIROPLETHES, Fasciculus.

CHELA, χηλη. This word has several significations. Chela, a forked probe used for extracting polypi from the nose. Chelæ—chaps or cracks on the feet, organs of generation, &c. Chelæ likewise means claws, especially those of the crab. See Cancrorum Chelæ.

CHELE PALPEBRARUM. See Tarsus.

CHELAPA, Convolvulus jalapa.

CHÉLIDOÏNE GRANDE, Chelidonium majus—c. Petite, Ranunculus ficaria.

CHELIDON, χελιδων; the hollow at the bend of the arm. Hirun'do. (q. v.)

CHELIDONIA ROTUNDIFOLIA MINOR, Ranunculus ficaria.

CHELIDONIUM, Bryonia alba.

CHELIDONIUM MAJUS, Papa'ver Corniculatum, P. luteum, Common Celandine, Petterwort, (F.) Chéldiyoine grande, L'Éclair. Family, Papaveraceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monogynia. The root and recent plant have been considered aperient and diuretic. Externally, the juice has been employed in some cutaneous diseases.

CHELIDONIUM MINUS, Ranunculus ficaria.

CHELIDONIUS LAPIS. A name given to stones, which it was pretended, existed in the stomach of young swallows. They were formerly believed capable of curing epilepsy.

CHELOID, Cancroid.

CHELO'NĒ, χελωνη, 'a tortoise.' An instrument for extending a limb; so called because, in its slow motions, it resembled a tortoise.—Oribasius. See Testudo.

CHELO'NION, Chelo'nium, from χελωνη, 'a tortoise,' from its resembling in shape the shell of that animal. The upper, gibbous part, of the back.—Gorræus.

CHELONOPH'AGI, from χελωνη, 'the tortoise,' and φαγω, 'I eat.' An ancient name for certain tribes, who dwelt on the coasts of the Red Sea, and who lived only on tortoises.—Pliny, Diodorus of Sicily.

CHEL'SEA PEN'SIONER. An empirical remedy for rheumatism is sold under this name. (Gum guaiac,  $\zeta j$ ; powdered rhubarb  $\zeta ij$ , cream of tartar  $\zeta j$ , flowers of sulphur  $\zeta j$ , one nutmeg, finely powdered: made into an electuary with a pound of clarified honey.) Dose two spoonfuls.

CHEL'TENHAM, MINERAL WATERS OF. C. is a town in Gloucestershire. England, nine miles from Gloucester, and 94 W. of London. Its water is one of the most celebrated natural purgatives in England. It is a saline, acridulous chalybeate, and is much frequented.

ARTIFICIAL CHELTENHAM WATER may be made from Epsom salt, gr. xij, iron filings, gr. j; Glauber's salt,  $\zeta iv$ ; water, 4 gallons: impregnated with the gas from marble powder and sulphuric acid,  $\text{aa } \zeta ij$ .

CHELTENHAM SALTS. These are sometimes made from the waters; at others, factitiously. The following is a formula. Soda muriat., magnes. sulphat., soda sulph.,  $\text{aa } lbj$ : dissolve, filter, evaporate to dryness: then add Ferri sulph.,  $\zeta ss$ .

CHELYS, Thorax.

CHELYS'CION, χελυσκιον, from χελυς, 'the chest.' A short, dry cough.—Galen, Hippocr., Foësius.

CHEMĒ, CHA'MA, CHE'RAMIS. An ancient measure, equivalent to about two teaspoonfuls.

CHEMEUTICE, Chymistry.

CHEMIST, Chymist.

CHEMISTRY, Chymistry.

CHEMO'SIS, from χημη, 'an aperture,' or from χυμος, 'an humour.' A name given to ophthalmia, when the conjunctiva, surrounding the cornea, forms a high ring, making the cornea seem as it were at the bottom of a well. By some, it is used synonymously with ophthalmia membranarum. See Ophthalmia.

CHENAY, MINERAL WATERS OF. C. is a town in France, two leagues from Rheims. The waters are chalybeate.

CHÈNE, Quercus alba—c. Marin, Fucus vesiculosus—c. Petit, Teucrium chamædryd—c. Vert, Ilex aquifolium.

CHENEVIS. See Cannabis sativa.

CHENOBOSCON, Potentilla anserina.

CHENOC'OPRUS, from χηνη, 'a goose,' and κοπρος, 'dung.' The dung of the goose is so designated in some old Pharmacopœias. It was formerly employed as a febrifuge and diuretic.

CHENOPODIUM AMBROSIOIDES, from χην, 'a goose,' and πους, 'a foot.' Botrys Mexicana, Chenopodium Mexicanum, Botrys Ambrosioides Mexicana, Botrys Americana, Mexico Tea, Spanish Tea, Artemisia Botrys, (F.) Ansérine, Thé du Mexique. Ambrosie du Mexique. The infusion was once drunk as tea. It has been used in paralytic cases.

CHENOPODIUM ANTHELMINTICUM, Chenopodium, Wormseed, Wormgoosefoot, Jerusalena Oak of America, (F.) Ansérine anthelmintique, A. vermifuge. This plant grows plentifully in the United States. It is much used in cases of worms. Dose of the powder, from a tea-spoonful to a table-spoonful or more. The oil, from 8 to 10 drops, is more frequently exhibited. It is as much used in America as the Semen Santonici with the English.

CHENOPODIUM BONUS HENRICUS, Chrysolactanum, Mercurialis, Bonus Henricus, Totobona, Lap'athum unctuosum, Chenopodium, English Mercury, Allgood, Angular-leaved goosefoot, (F.) Ansérine Bon Henri, Epinard sauvage. The leaves are emollient, and have been applied to ulcers, &c. It has also been considered refrigerant and ecoprotic.

CHENOPODIUM BOTRYS, Botrys, Botrys vulgâris, Ambrosia, Artemisia Chenopodium, At'riplex odorata, At'riplex suaveolens: the Jerusalem Oak, (Eng.) (F.) Ansérine Botrys. It was once given in diseases of the chest, palsy, &c. It is useless.

CHENOPODIUM FÆTIDUM, Chenopodium vulvaria.

CHENOPODIUM VULVARIA, At'riplex fatida, At'riplex olida, Vulcaria, Garosimum, Raphex, Chenopodium Fatidum, Stinking Orach or Goosefoot, (F.) Vulvaire, Arroche puante, Ansérine fœtide. The fœtid smell has occasioned it to be used as an antispasmodic and nervine.

CHEOPINA, Chopine.

CHERAMIS, Cheme.

CHERBAS, Lettuce.

CHERBACHEM, Veratrum album.

CHERMES, Kermes.

CHERNIBIUM, Urinale.

CHERRY, BIRD, Prunus padus—c. Tree, red, Prunus cerasus—c. Tree, black, Prunus avium—c. Tree, wild, Prunus Virginiana—c. Water, Kirschwasser—c. Wild cluster, Prunus padus—c. Winter, Physalis.

CHERSÆ, Fæces.

CHERVIL, Scandix cerefolium—c. Wild, Chærophylum sylvestre.

CHEST, Thorax.

CHESTNUT TREE, Fagus castanea.

CHEVAUCHEMENT, (F.) O'sium superpositio vel equitatio, Parallaxis, Parallagma. The riding of one bone over another after fracture; giving rise to shortening of the limb. See Riding of Bones.

CHEVESTRE or CHEVÈTRE, Capistrum, from caput, 'the head,' A bandage, applied round the head in cases of fracture or luxation of the lower jaw. According to the mode in which it is made, it is called simple, double, oblique, &c.

CHEVEU, Capillum.

CHEVILLE DU PIED, Malleolus.

CHÈVRE-FEUILLE, Lonicera Periclymenum.

CHEZANAN'CÈ, from χέζω, 'I go to stool,' and ανάγκη, 'necessity.' An ointment composed of honey and alum, and rubbed on the anus to occasion evacuations.—Paulus of Ægina.

CHIA, Chia terra, from Chios, an island where it was found. A kind of white earth, formerly used in burns.—Galen.

CHIACUM COLLYRIUM. A Collyrium consisting of several drugs and Chian wine.—Paulus of Ægina.

CHIADUS, Furunculus.

CHIASMOS, Chiasmata, from χιάζω; to form like the letter χ. The crucial union of parts,—as the decussation (q. v.) of the optic nerves.

CHIASTER, Kiaster.

CHIAS'TOS. Same etymon. A bandage, so called because it resembles the letter χ.—Oribasius.

CHIBOU. See Bursera gummifera.

CHV'CA. A drink made in Peru with Indian meal, dried in the sun, and fermented with water. Its taste is that of bad cider.

CHICKENPOX, Varicella.

CHICKWEED, Alsine media.

CHICORÉE DES JARDINS, Cichorium endivia—c. Sauvage, Cichorium intybus.

CHIENDENT, Triticum repens.

CHILBLAIN, Per'nio, Bugantia, Erythema Per'nio, Erythema à Frig'ore. Cheimeth'lon, from chill, 'cold,' and blain, 'a pustule,' (F.) Engelure. An erythematous inflammation of the feet, hands, &c., occasioned by cold. It is very common in youth—not so in the adult or advanced age. It is apt to degenerate into painful, indolent ulcerations, called Kibes. Chilblains are prevented by accustoming the parts to exposure; and are treated by stimulant, terebinthinate and balsamic washes, ointments, and liniments.

CHILDBED STATE, Parturient state.

CHILI, MINERAL WATERS OF. The most celebrated mineral springs of Chili, in South America, are those of Feldehues and Cauquenes. The former are not far from St. Jago. They consist of two springs, one thermal, the other cold. The hot spring is clear, inodorous, and contains soda and carbonic acid. The cold spring contains iron and sulphate of soda. Cauquenes is much resorted to by invalids during the summer. Mineral waters are very common in Chili.

CHILIOGRAMMA, Kilogramme.

CHILIOPHYLLON, Achillea millefolium.

CHILITIS, Cheilitis.

CHILL, Rigor.

CHIL'ON, Cheil'lon, Cheil'tis, from χειλος, 'a lip.' Inflammation of the lips.—Vogel. One who has a thick lip.

CHILOPLASTICE, Cheiloplastice.

CHIMAPHILA, Pyrola umbellata.

CHIMIA, Chymistry.

CHIMIATER, Chymiater.

CHIMIATRIA, Chymiatria.

CHIMIE, Chymistry.

CHIMISTE, Chymist.

CHIMON, Cold.

CHINA, Cinchona, Smilax china—c. Ameri- can or West India, Smilax pseudo-china—c. Occidentalis, Smilax pseudo-china—c. Root, Smilax china—c. Spuria nodosa, Smilax pseudo-china.

CHINCAPIN, Fagus castanea pumila.

CHINCHE, Cimex.

CHINCHINA, Cinchona.

CHINCHUNCHULLI, Ionidium maruccii.

CHINCOUGH, Pertussis.

CHINESE, MEDICINE OF THE, Medicina Sinica. Medicine has been long, but most imperfectly, practised by the Chinese. From their therapeutics we have obtained the old operations of Acupuncture and Moxibustion.

CHINICUS ACETAS, Quinine, acetate of—c. Citras, Quinine, acetate of.

CHINII ACETAS, Quinine, acetate of.

CHININI ACETAS, Quinine, acetate of.

CHININUM, Quinine.

CHININUM ACETICUM, Quinine, acetate of—c. Ferrocyanogenatum, Quinine, Ferrocyanate of—c. Hydrochloricum, Quinine, muriate of—c. Muriaticum, Quinine, muriate of—c. Nitricum, Quinine, nitrate of—c. Phosphoricum, Quinine, phosphate of—c. Salitum, Quinine, muriate of.

CHINNEYWEED, Lichen roccella.

CHINWHELK, Sycosis.

CHIOCOCCE RADIX, Cainæ radix.

CHIOLI, Furunculus.

CHION, Snow.

CHIQUE, (F.) Pulx penetrans, Tick. A small insect in America, which gets under the epidermis, and excites great irritation.

CHIR, or CHEIR, χεῖρ, 'the hand,' hence:

CHIRÁGRA, from χεῖρ, 'hand,' and ἀγρᾶ, 'a seizure.' Gout in the hand.

CHIRAPOTHECA, Arsenal.

CHIRIATER, Surgeon.

CHIRIATRÍA, Surgery.

CHIROMANCY, Chiromantia, from χεῖρ, 'the hand,' and μαντεία, 'divination,' (F.) Chiromancie. Art of divining by inspection of the hand.

CHIRONAX, Surgeon.

CHIRO'NIA, (from Chiron, Χείρων, the Centaur, who is said to have discovered its use.) A genus of plants. Fum. Gentianæ.

CHIRO'NIA ANGULA'RIS, American Centaury, Sabbatia Angularis. Every part of this plant is a pure and strong bitter, which property is communicated alike to alcohol and to water. It is used as a tonic and a stomachic.

CHIRO'NIA CHILEN'SIS, Gentidna Cachena-luen, Cachen-laguen, Erythraea Chilensis, Gentiana Peruviana. A very bitter plant, indigenous in Chili. It possesses the virtues of the Chironææ. Given in infusion—(℞j, to water Oj.)

CHIRO'NIA CENTAU'RIMUM, Centaureum minus vulgare, Centaureum parvum, Gentidna centaureum, Centaureum minus, Erythraea Centaureum, Smaller Centaury, Lesser Centaury, (F.) Centauree petite. The tops of the lesser Centaury, Centaurei Cacumina, are aromatic and tonic, and are sometimes employed as such.

CHIRONI'UM, from χείρων, 'bad, malignant.' An ulcer difficult of cure:—of a swollen, hard, and callous nature.—Galen. Some have supposed the word to come from Chiron, the Centaur; who was unable to cure such ulcers.

CHIRONOMIA, Chironomia.

CHIRO'PODIST, (F.) Pedicure. One who treats diseases of the hands and feet, or rather whose profession it is to remove corns and bunions, from χεῖρ, 'the hand,' and πους, 'the foot.'

CHIRORRHEUMA, Chirrheuma.

CHIROSIOS, Subactio.

CHIROTHE'CA, from χεῖρ, 'the hand,' and θηρη, 'a sheath.' A bandage for the hand; a kind of bandage in which the fingers and hand are enveloped in spiral turns. When the whole hand and fingers are covered, it is called the double or complete Chirotheca, Ch. completa, Vinctura omnibus dig'itis; and when only a finger is covered, the half or incomplete, Ch. incompleta, Vinctura pro uno dig'ito. See Gantelet.

CHIROTRI'BIA, from χεῖρ, 'the hand,' and τριβω, 'I rub.' Friction with the hand. According to others, dexterity in an art.—Hippocrates, Galen.

CHIRRHEU'MA, Chirrheuma, Rheumatismus manus, from χεῖρ, 'the hand,' and ρευμα, 'flux.' Rheumatism of the hand.

CHIRURGEON, Surgeon.

CHIRURGIA, Surgery—c. Anaplastica, Morioplastice—c. Curtorum, Morioplastice—c. Infusoria, Infusion of medicines—c. Transfusoria, Transfusion.

CHIRURGICUS, Surgical.

CHIRURGIE, Surgery—c. Militaire, Surgery, military.

CHIRURGIEN, Surgeon—c. Hernieux, see Hernial.

CHIRURGIQUE, Surgical.

CHIRURGUS, Surgeon.

CHIST; an Arabic word, which signifies the sixth part. The sixth part of the Congius or gallon.

CHITON, Tunic.

CHITONISCOS, Indusium.

CHIUM VINUM, from Chios, the island where it was produced; Chian wine, used by the physicians of antiquity in cases of defluxions and ophthalmiæ.—Scribonius Largus.

CHLIAROS, χλιαρος, 'tepid.' A name given to slight fevers, in which the heat is not great.—Galen.

CHLIAS'MA, χλιασμα, same etymon. A tepid and moist fomentation.—Hippocr.

CHLOAS'MA, Pityriasis versicolor, P. nigra, Ephélide scorbutique, Macula hepatica, Livenspot, from χλωος, 'a greenish-yellow colour.' A cutaneous affection, characterized by one or more broad, irregular-shaped patches, of a yellow or yellowish-brown colour, and occurring most frequently on the front of the neck, breast, abdomen, groins, &c. The patches do not generally rise above the surface. There is usually some degree of itching.

The causes are not very evident. Sulphur externally—in any and every form—generally removes it speedily. Should there be difficulty, the external use of the remedy by baths or fumigations may succeed.

CHLORA, Chlorine.

CHLORAS KALICUS DEPURATUS, Potassæ murias hyperoxygenatus.

CHLORASMA, Chlorosis.

CHLORETUM CALCULÆ, Calcis chloridum.

CHLORINE, from χλωρος, 'green.' Chloræ, Oxy muriatic Acid Gas, Oxygenated Muriatic Acid Gas, Dephlogisticated Murine Acid, Hallogenc, Mdrigene, Chlorum. So far as we know, this is an elementary substance. It is a greenish, yellow gas, of a strong suffocating smell, and disagreeable taste: incapable of maintaining combustion and respiration, and very soluble in water. One of its characteristics is, that of destroying, almost immediately, all vegetable and animal colours. It is employed in fumigations, as a powerful disinfecting agent. A very dilute solution has been administered internally, in certain cases of diarrhœa and chronic dysentery. Immersion of the hands and arms in it has often removed itch and other cutaneous affections. It has also been inhaled in a dilute state in the early stage of phthisis, but it is of doubtful efficacy, and is better adapted for chronic bronchitis.

CHLOROPHYLLE, Fecula, green.

CHLOROSIS, from χλωρος, 'green,' Pallidus Morbus, Fædus Virginum color, Pallidus color virginæus, Ictericæ tibia alba, Icterus albus, Morbus virginæus, Morbus Parthenius, Dyspepsia chlorosis, Febris amatória, Cachexia virginitatis, Febris alba, Ancipithymia chlorosis, Greenickness, Chlorasma, Cittósis. (F.) Chlorose, Pâles-couleurs. A disease which affects young females, more particularly those who have not menstruated. It is characterized by a pale, lurid complexion, languor, listlessness, depraved appetite and digestion, palpitation, &c. The disease generally goes off on the occurrence of the menstrual flux; but sometimes it is long before this is established.

On auscultation, a bellows' sound has been almost invariably detected over the heart, and a continuous blowing sound in the larger arteries, (especially the carotids and subclavians,) reinforced by each systole of the ventricle, and resembling the buzzing of a humming-top, the cooing of doves, the whistling of air through a keyhole, &c., (see Bruit.) Very similar sounds are heard in the arteries after copious hemorrhage: they seem, therefore, to coincide with enfeebled circulation.

Tonics are usually required in the treatment: the disease most commonly occurring in those in whom there is considerable torpor of the system.

CHLOROSIS AMATORIA, Hectic fever.

CHLOROTIC, Chloroticus, (F.) Chlorotique. Affected with chlorosis, or pertaining to chlorosis;—as a chlorotic female, chlorotic symptoms, &c.

CHLORUM, Chlorine.

CHLORURE D'OR, Gold, muriate of.

CHLORURETUM OXIDI CALCII, Calcis chloridum.

CHOA, Chu.

CHOA'CUM EEMPLAS'TRUM NIGRUM.

A black plaster, mentioned by Celsus, and composed of equal parts of litharge and resin. The litharge was first boiled in oil.

CHOAK, Cynanche trachealis—c. wolf, Lycanche.

CHOANA, Pelvis—c. Cercbri, Infundibulum of the brain.

CHOANE, Infundibulum.

CHOANORRHAGIA, Epistaxis.

CHOAVA, Coffea Arabica.

CHOC'OLATE, Chocolata, Suceola'ta. Dr. Alston says, that this word is compounded of two Indian words:—choco, 'sound,' and atle, 'water,' because of the noise made in its preparation. Chocolatum. An alimentary paste prepared from the kernels of the Theobroma cacao or Cacao, with sugar, and often aromatics. (See Cacao.) The chocolate thus simply prepared—as it is met with, indeed, in commerce—is called in France, Chocolat de santé. It is not very easy of digestion.

The chocolat à la vanille contains three ounces of vanilla and two of cinnamon to twenty pounds of common chocolate. The addition of the aromatic renders it somewhat more digestible. Chocolates may likewise be medicated.

CHOCUS, Chu.

CHŒNICIS, Trepan.

CHŒNION, Cord.

CHŒNOS, Cord.

CHŒRUS, Scrofula.

CHOIROS, Vulva.

CHOLAGO, Cholas.

CHOL'AGOGUE, Cholago'gus, Chole'gon, from χολη, 'bile,' and αγω, 'I expel.' The ancients gave this name to cathartics, which were reputed to cause the flow of bile.—Galen.

CHOLAS, χολας, Plur. χολαδες. The cavity of the hypocondres; Cholago. The intestines.—Homer.

CHOLASMA, Cholosis.

CHOLĒ and CHOLOS, χολη, and χολος 'bile,' (q. v.) in composition.—Hence:

CHOLECYSTI, Gall-bladder.

CHOLECYSTITIS, Inflammati'o Vesicæ fell'cæ, I. cystidis fell'cæ, Cystitis fellea, from χολη, 'bile,' and κυστις, 'bladder.' Inflammation of the gall-bladder.

CHOL'EDOCH, Choledo'echus, from χολη, 'bile,' and δοχος, 'containing or receiving.' The Ductus choledochus, Ductus communis choledochus, (F.) Conduit ou Canal Cholédoque, is the duct, formed by the union of the hepatic and cystic ducts, which pours the hepatic and cystic bile into the duodenum.

CHOLEDOG'RAPHY, Choledogra'phia, from χολη, 'bile,' and γραφειν, 'to describe.' A description of what relates to the bile.

CHOLEDOL'OGY, Choledolo'gia, from χολη, 'bile,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A treatise on the bile.

CHOLEGON, Cholagogue.

CHOLEHÆMIA, Icterus.

CHOLEIA, Claudication.

CHOLELITHIA ICTERUS, Icterus.

CHOLELITHUS, Calculi, biliary.

CHOLEN'CHYSIS, from χολη, 'bile,' and εκχυσις, 'effusion.' Effusion of bile.

CHOL'ERA and CHOL'ERA-MORBUS, χολερα, Cholerrha'gia, Passio cholericæ, Felliflua passio, Holera, from χολη, 'bile,' and ραω, 'I flow.' According to others, from χολαδες, 'intestines,' or from χολερα, 'the gutter of a house to carry off the rain.' A disease, characterized by anxiety, gripings, spasms in the legs and arms, and by vomiting and purging (generally bilious:) vomiting and purging are, indeed, the essential symptoms. The disease is most common in hot climates,—and in temperate climates, during summer. In India, the spasmodic cholera, Asiatic cholera, Malignant ch., Cholera asphyxia, Trisplanchnia, morbus oryzeus, Rice discuse, (because supposed by Tytler to be caused by damaged rice,) (F.) Mort de Chien, is frightful in the rapidity of its progress, the patient sometimes dying in a few hours from the first onset. In temperate climates, common cholera is not usually a disease of much consequence. It requires, that the stomach and bowels should be cleared, and afterwards the irritation be allayed by full doses of opium. In the malignant cholera of India, bleeding at the outset, without regard to the signs of apparent depression, and large doses of calomel, with opiates, form the great reliance of the practitioner.

CHOLERA INFANTUM. The Cholera of Children. A disease, so termed by American physicians. It occurs generally in the middle states of the Union, in June or July, and continues during the hot weather, hence called the 'summer complaint.' The chief symptoms are vomiting, purging of green or yellow matter, slime or blood, attended with pain or uneasiness; and swelling of the abdomen, with some pyrexia, generally. The heat of the weather seems to be the predisposing, if not the exciting, cause. It is a fatal disease in towns; differing little, if at all, from what is vulgarly called the Watery Gripes in England. Clearing, gently, the alimentary canal, so as to remove the offending matter, and then exhibiting chalk mixture and laudanum, with counter-irritants, as sinapisms to the abdomen, is the most satisfactory plan of treatment.

CHOLERAPHOBIA, Cholermania.

CHOLERIC, Choler'icus. Belonging to cholera morbus or to the bile. The French use the term Fievre cholérique for the fever accompanying cholera.

CHOLERIC TEMPERAMENT is the same as Bilious Temperament.

CHOLERINE. A diminutive of cholera. The first stage of epidemic cholera; also, the precursive symptoms of cholera.

CHOLEROMANIA, Cholero-pho'bia, from cholera and mania. A dread of cholera to such an extent that the individual fancies himself affected or threatened by it.

CHOLERRHAGIA, Cholera.

CHOLESTERINE, CHOLESTERINA, Cholestearine, from χολη, 'bile,' and στερεος, 'solid.' An inodorous, insipid substance, in white, shining scales; fusible and crystallizing in radiated fibres, on cooling. Soluble in alcohol. It forms the crystalline part of certain biliary calculi. See Adipocire.

CHOLICELE, from χολη, 'bile,' and κηλη, 'tumour.' A swelling, formed by the bile morbidly accumulated in the gall-bladder.

CHOLOLITHUS. See Calculi, biliary.

CHOLOMA, from χολος, 'lame, maimed.' Distortion of a limb: incapacity of moving it. Also, the act of limping, claudication, (q. v.)

CHOLOS, Bile, Chole.

CHOLO'SIS, from χολος, 'lame.' Cholot'is, Cholas'ma, Claudication. (q. v.) Hippocrates employs this word particularly for a lameness of the hand, which renders a person one-handed, manchot, (F.)

CHOLO'SES, from χολη, 'bile.' M. Alibert includes, under this head, every morbid affection of the liver and spleen.

CHOLOTES, Cholosus.

CHONDRODES, Cartilaginous.

CHONDROGENESIA, Chondrogen'esis, from χονδρος, 'a cartilage,' and γενεσις, 'formation.' Formation of cartilage. A morbid conversion of parts into cartilage.

CHONDROGLOSSUS, from χονδρος, 'a cartilage,' and γλωσσα, 'the tongue.' A fasciculus of fleshy fibres, passing from the lesser cornu of the os hyoides to the tongue. It forms part of the HYOCLOSSUS.

CHONDROGRAPHY, Chondrogr'aphia, from χονδρος, 'cartilage,' and γραφη, 'description.' A description of cartilages.

CHONDROID, Chondroi'des, from χονδρος, 'cartilage,' and ειδος, 'resemblance.' Resembling cartilage.

CHONDROLOGY, Chondrolo'gia, from χονδρος, 'a cartilage,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A treatise on cartilages.

CHONDROMA, Enchondro'ma, from χονδρος, 'cartilage.' A cartilaginous growth proceeding from bones, and including the spina ventosa, osteosarcoma, &c. of many.

CHONDRO-PHARYNGEUS, from χονδρος, 'a cartilage,' and φαρυγξ, 'the pharynx.' Fibres of the muscular coat of the pharynx, which arise from the lesser cornua of the os hyoides, and form part of the Constrictor medius. See Constrictor Pharyngis.

CHONDROS, χονδρος, 'a cartilage.' (q. v.) The Xiphoid cartilage, (q. v.) in particular.

CHONDROSYNDESMUS, χονδρσυνδεσμος, from χονδρος, 'a cartilage,' and συνδεσμος, 'a ligament.' Union of bones, by means of fibro-cartilage.—Galen.

CHONDROTOMY, Chondroto'mia, from χονδρος, 'a cartilage,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' Dissection of cartilages.

CHONDRUS, Alic—c. Crispus, Fucus crispus—c. Polymorphus, Fucus crispus.

CHONOS, Infundibulum.

CHOPINE, CHOPINO, CHEOPINA. A measure, which contains 16 ounces. A pint measure.

CHORA, χωρα, 'region.' Any void space. Also, the orbit of the eye.

CHORD, TESTICULAR, Spermatic chord.

CHORDA or CORDA. A string of an instrument. It has several meanings. A tendon,—the intestines (Chordæ.) Paracelsus calls the genital organs, chordæ. Chorda or Funiculus Tympani; a branch of the 7th pair of nerves, which passes through the tympanum, Nerf Tympanique—(Ch.) Corde du Tambour ou du Tympan. Chordæ Willis'ii, Trabecule Willis'ii, the small fibres, which cross the sinuses of the dura mater: so called from their first describer, Willis. Chordæ Tendin'ca; the tendinous and cord-like substances, which connect the columnnæ carneæ of the ventricles of the heart to the valves, &c.

CHORDA, Intestine—c. Veneris, Chordee.

CHORDÆ, Chordec—c. Ferreuii, Chords, vocal.

CHORDÆ LONGITUDINÆLES LANCISI. Two or three longitudinal elevations and lines on the upper surface of the corpus callosum.

CHORDÆ VOCALES, Chords, vocal.

CHORDAP'SUS, from χορδή, 'intestine,' and αλτεν, 'to tie.' Constriction or twisting of the intestines.—Celsus. The Colica Ileus. See Enteritis and Ileus.

CHORDEE' or CORDEE', Chorda Ven'eris, Chordæ, Chordæ Gonorrhœa. A painful affection of the penis, attending gonorrhœa, and happening chiefly at night. It occurs when the violence of the inflammation is such, that the urethra cannot expand as much as the corpora cavernosa during erection, and consequently the glans seems painfully drawn downwards. The application of cold water topically and the administration of opium internally palliate it.

CHORE'A, Chorea Sancti Viti, from χορεία, 'a dance.' Sometimes called Scoloty'bê, Viti Saltus, Sald't'o Sancti Viti, Ballis'mus, Conrulsio habitud'lis, Siph'ita prava, Syn'clonus Chorea, Myoty'bê, and Choromad'nia, because the movements resemble dancing. (F.) Chorée, Danse de SAINT-WITT, Danse de St. GUY. The characteristics are:—irregular and involuntary motions of one or more limbs, and of the face and trunk. It is a disease, which usually occurs before puberty; and is generally connected with torpor of the system, and of the digestive system in particular. Its duration is long, but it is devoid of danger; although frequently, but little under the control of medicine. The spasms do not continue during sleep. The indications of treatment are:—to strengthen the general system, and stimulate the intestinal canal. Purgatives, once or twice a week, and chalybeates, with appropriate regimen, will fulfil these.

CHORE'GIA, from χορός, 'a troop of dancers and singers,' and ἄγω, 'I lead.' Hippocrates uses this term for the whole of the apparatus, necessary for a physician or surgeon.

CHOREOMANIA, Chorea.

CHORIODEIT'IS, Chorioideit'is, Chorioideit'is, from χοριοειδής, 'the choroid,' and itis. Inflammation of the choroid coat of the eye.

CHORION, χορίον, 'skin,' from χωρεῖν, 'to contain,' 'include.' Camis'ia Fetus, the chemise or shirt of the fetus in utero. A thin, transparent membrane, which surrounds the fetus in utero on every side. It is exterior to the amnion.

CHORION also means the true skin. See CUTIS.

CHORION FUNGOSUM, Decidua—c. reticulatum, Decidua—c. Shaggy, Decidua—c. Spongiosum, Decidua—c. Spongy, Decidua—c. Tomentosum, Decidua.

CHOROID, Choroïdeus, Choroïdes, from χορίον, 'the chorion,' and εἶδος, 'shape,' 'resemblance.' Several parts are so called, which resemble the chorion, in the multitude of their vessels.

MEMBRANA OF TU'NICA CHOROIDEA, or simply the Choroid. (F.) Membrane choroïde, Choroïde. A thin membrane, of a very dark colour, which lines the sclerótica, internally. The part, behind the iris, is called Urea. It is situate between the sclerótica and retina, has an opening, posteriorly, for the passage of the optic nerve; and terminates, anteriorly, at the great circumference of the iris, where it is continuous with the ciliary processes. The internal surface of the membrane is covered with a dark pigment, called Pigmentum nigrum, Æthiops animal, (F.) Enduit choroidicm. Its use seems to be, to absorb the rays of light after they have traversed the retina.

PLEXUS CHOROIDES, Plexus choroïdeus, Choroïd Plexus. Two membranous and vascular duplicatures of the pia mater, situate in the lateral ventricles. They are fixed to the Tela choroïdea by one edge, and are loose and floating at the other.

TELA CHOROIDEA, (F.) Toile choroïdicme. A kind of vasculo-membranous prolongation of the pia mater, which lines the lower surface of the fornix, united with the corpus callosum. It is stretched above the third ventricle, and covers the posterior commissure and corpora quadrigemina. Anteriorly, the tela choroïdea is continuous with the plexus choroïdes.

VENÆ CHOROIDEÆ, Vena Gal'ni, (F.) Veins choroïdiennes. Two veins, which creep along the tela choroïdea; and into which almost all those of the lateral ventricles, of the upper part of the cerebellum, of the pineal gland, and the corpora quadrigemina open. The Venæ Galeni open into the sinus quartus or fourth sinus.

CHOROIDE, CEINTURE BLANCHE DE LA, Ciliary ligament—c. Commissure de la, Ciliary ligament.

CHOSÈS CONTRE NATURE, Res contra naturam—c. Naturelles, Res naturales—c. non Naturelles, Res non naturales.

CHOU CABUS, Brassica capitata—c. Croûte, Sauer kraut—c. Fleur, Brassica Florida, Cauliflower excrescence—c. Marin, Convolvulus soldanella—c. Navet, Brassica rapa—c. Pommé Brassica capitata—c. Potager, Brassica—c. Rouquette, Brassica crucea.

CHRISIS, χρισίς, from χρίω, 'I anoint.' The action of anointing. Inunction (q. v.)

CHRISTI MANUS. Troches, prepared from refined sugar boiled in rose-water, with or without prepared pearls.

CHRISTOS, χριστός, from χρίω, 'I anoint.' Any medicine applied under the form of liniment or ointment.

CHREAS, Scrofula.

CHROMATOG'ENOUS; from χρομα, 'colour,' and γέννω, 'I make.'

CHROMATOG'ENOUS APPARATUS. A particular apparatus for producing the colouring matter of the skin, composed of a glandular or secreting parenchyma, situate a little below the papillæ, and presenting special excretory ducts, which pour out the colouring matter on the surface of the true skin.—Breschet.

CHROMATOPSEUDOPSIA, Achromatopsia.

CHROMOP'SIA, Chromopia, Visus coloratus, from χρομα, 'colour,' and οψίς, 'vision.' A state of vision in which a coloured impression is made on the retina. Said to be occasionally observed in jaundice.

CHRONAGUNEA, Menstruation.

CHRONIC, Chronicus, Chro'nicus, Poly-

chronicus, from χρονος, 'time.' Of long duration.

CHRONIC DISEASES, Morbi chronici, (F.) Maladies Chroniques, Macronos'ia, Macro'sia, are those whose duration is long, or whose symptoms proceed slowly. The antithesis to chronic is Acute, (q. v.)

CHRYSALEA, Nitro-muriatic acid.

CHRYSANTHEMUM, Calendula officinalis.

CHRYSANTHEMUM LEUCANTHEMUM, from χρυσος, 'gold,' and ανθος, 'a flower.' The Ox-eye daisy, Maudlin-Word, Bellis major, Bupththalmum majus, Leucanthemum vulgare, Bellidifolius, Consolida media, Oculus Boris, (F.) Chrysanthème, Chrysène, Grande Marguerite des prés. The flowers and herb are slightly acid; and were once used in pulmonary diseases.

CHRYSÈ, from χρυσος, 'gold.' The name of a yellow plaster, described by Paulus of Ægina, and composed of thus, alum, lead, colophony, resin, oil, and orpiment, boiled in vinegar.

CHRYSÈNE, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum.

CHRYSITIS. See Plumbi oxydum semivitreum.

CHRYSOBALANUS GALENI. See Myrsitica moschata.

CHRYSOCALIS, Matricaria.

CHRYSOCHALCOS, Brass.

CHRYSOCOLLA, Borax.

CHRYSOCOMA, Achillea millefolium.

CHRYSOLACHANUM, Chenopodium bonus Henricus.

CHRYSOLITHUS, Chrysolite, from χρυσος, 'gold,' and λιθος, 'stone.' A precious stone, of a golden colour, regarded by the ancients as cardiac, cephalic, &c.

CHRYSOMELIA. See Citrus aurantium.

CHRYSOPHYLLUM CAYNITO, Cañito, Sideroxydon, Broad-leaved Star-apple. A tree of the Antilles, which produces one of the best fruits of the country. There are several varieties of it.

CHRYSOPUS, Cambogia.

CHRYSOS, Gold.

CHRYSOSPERMUM, Sempervivum tectorum.

CHTHONOPHAGIA, Cacher'ia Africa'na, from χθων, 'earth,' and φαγω, 'I eat.' A disorder of the nutritive functions observed amongst the negroes in the West Indies, in which there is an irresistible desire to eat earth. It is accompanied with most of the signs of chlorosis.

CHU, Choa or Chus, χυσ, Chocus. A liquid measure amongst the Greeks, answering to the Cognis of the Romans, and containing six sextarii, or twelve attic cotylæ, or nine pints.—Galen.

CHUTE, Prolapsus—c. du Fondement, Proctocele—c. de la Matrice, Procidencia uteri—c. du Rectum, Proctocele.

CHYLAIRE, Chylosus.

CHYLAR, Chylous.

CHYLARION, Chyle.

CHYLE, Chylus, χυλος, Succus nutri'tius, from χυνω, 'I flow.' The word, in Hippocrates, means Tisane or Decoction of Barley, Chylarion, χυλαριον. Galen first used it in its present sense;—i. e. for a nutritive fluid, extracted from the food by intestinal absorption; after the food has been subjected to the action of the digestive organs. It is of a whitish appearance; and is separated from the chyme in the duodenum, and the rest of the small intestines: and is absorbed by the chyliiferous vessels, which arise at the mucous surface of the intestine. Along these it passes through the mesenteric glands to the thoracic duct, and is finally poured into the left subclavian. It is composed, like the blood, of a coagulable part and of serum.

CHYLEUX, Chylous.

CHYLIFEROUS VESSELS, Vasa chyli'fera, Vena lactea, Vasa lactea. The Lacteals, (F.) Vaisseaux chyli'fers, V. Lactés. Vessels which convey the chyle from the intestines to the thoracic duct.

CHYLIFICATION, Chylica'tio, Chylo'sis, Chylopoi'e'sis, from chylus, 'chyle,' and facere, 'to make.' Formation of chyle by the digestive processes.

CHYLINE, Cyclamen.

CHYLISMA, Extract.

CHYLOCYSTIS, Receptaculum chyli.

CHYLOGRAPHY, from χυλος, 'chyle,' and γραφειν, 'a description.' A description of the anatomy, &c. of the chyliiferous vessels, &c.

CHYLOPOIESIS, Chylica'tio.

CHYLOPOIETIC, Chylopoi'e'ticus, from χυλος, 'chyle,' and ποιω, 'I make.' Any thing connected with the formation of chyle. Chiefly applied to the organs immediately concerned in it; as the stomach, intestines, omenta, and mesentery. Assistant Chylopoietic:—those viscera which aid in the formation of chyle, as the liver and pancreas.

CHYLORRHŒA, Cæliac flux—c. Pectoris, Chylothorax—c. Renalis, Chyluria—c. Urinalis, Chyluria.

CHYLOSIS, Chylica'tio.

CHYLOSTAGMA DIAPHORETICUM MINDERERI. A compound prepared by distilling the theriaca of Andromachus, the mithridate of Damocrates, and other alexipharmics, &c. It is nearly the same preparation as the Aqua Theriac'lis Bezoar'dica.

CHYLOTHORAX, Pleurorrh'a a chylo'sa, Chylorrh'a a Pectoris, Hydrothorax chylosus; from χυλος, 'chyle,' and θώραξ, 'the chest.' Effusion of chyle into the chest, owing to the rupture of a chyliiferous vessel.

CHYLOUS or CHYLAR, Chylo'sus vel Chylaris, (F.) Chyleux, Chylaire. Relating to the chyle; or having some analogy with that fluid.

CHYLU'RIA, Galact'ria, Diab'etes lactea, Py'ria lactea, P. Chylo'sa, Ca'lica urin'al'is, C. ren'al'is, Chylorrh'a a urin'al'is, Ch. ren'al'is, from χυλος, 'chyle,' and ουρον, 'urine.' A discharge of milky urine, without any apparent lesion of the kidneys or bladder.

CHYME, Chymus, χυμος, 'juice,' from χυνω, 'I flow.' A kind of grayish or homogeneous pulp, formed by the food, after it has been for some time in the stomach. It continues in the state of chyme as far as the biliary and pancreatic ducts, which open into the duodenum; where the conversion into chyle occurs, which is absorbed by the chyliiferous vessels:—the excrementitious portion of the food traversing the large intestine to be evacuated per anum. Castelli asserts, that Chyme and Chyle were used in an inverse sense, by the ancients, from that accepted at present.

CHYMI, Humours.

CHYMIA, Chymistry.

CHYMIATER or CHIMIA'TER, from  $\chi\upsilon\mu\alpha$ , 'chymistry,' and  $\iota\alpha\rho\epsilon\iota\alpha$ , 'a physician.' Iatro-chymicus. A chemical physician.

CHYMIATRIA or CHIMIATRIA, Iatro-chymia, Ars Chymiatrica, from  $\chi\upsilon\mu\alpha$ , 'chymistry,' and  $\iota\alpha\rho\epsilon\iota\alpha$ , 'cure.' The art of curing by chemical means.

CHYMICAL. A medicine, formed by the aid of chymistry, in contradistinction to Galenical.

CHYMICOPHANTA, Chymist.

CHYMICUS, Chymist.

CHYMICA, Chymistry.

CHYMIFICATION, Chymificatio, from  $\chi\upsilon\mu\alpha$ , 'juice,' and facere, 'to make.' Formation of chyme. Chymosis.

CHYMIST or CHEMIST, Chymicophanta, Chymicus, (F.) Chimiste or Chymiste. One acquainted with chymistry. In Great Britain it has, also, the signification of "one who sells chemicals."

CHYMISTE, Chymist.

CHYMISTRY or CHEMISTRY, Chymia, Chimia, Chementice, Philosophia per ignem, Spagyria, Pyrotechnia, Pyrosophia, Ars hermetica, Archimologia, Ars magorum, Ars separativa, Ars spagyrica; from  $\chi\upsilon\mu\alpha$ , 'juice,' or from Arab. chema, 'a secret,' (F.) Chimie or Chymie. A branch of the natural sciences, whose object is to investigate the principles of bodies;—to examine the properties, enjoyed by the different compounds, produced by the union of those principles; and to study the force or power, by virtue of which every combination is effected. It investigates the action between the integrant molecules or atoms of bodies.

ANIMAL CHYMISTRY is the chymistry of substances, afforded by the dead or living animal body. This branch of chymistry has been farther subdivided into physiological, when it considers the changes produced in animal substances by the action of life; pathological, when it regards those produced by organic or other diseases. Anthropochymy is the chymistry of the human body.

Chymistry is called THERAPEUTICAL or PHARMACEUTICAL, when it is engaged in the analysis of simple medicines; in improving the prescribing and preparing of chemical and Galenical medicines; in the means of preparing them, and detecting adulterations, &c. HYGIENIC CHYMISTRY is that which is applied to the means of rendering habitations healthy, of analyzing the air we breathe, preventing the occurrence of disease, pointing out healthy aliments, and appreciating the influence of professions, &c. on the health of man. All these different subdivisions, with vegetable chymistry, are, at times, included under the head of MEDICAL CHYMISTRY; at others, the term comprehends only the Animal, Vegetable and Pharmaceutical subdivisions.

A knowledge of chymistry is of great importance to the physician. Many of the functions are of a chemical nature: many diseases require a chemical mode of treatment; and without an acquaintance with it, two or more substances might be given in combination, which, by forming a chemical union, might give rise to other compounds, possessing very different virtues from the components taken singly, and thus the prescriber be disappointed in the results.

CHYMOCHEZIA, Cæliac flux.

CHYMORRHOEA, Cæliac flux, Lientery.

CHYMOISIS, Chymification.

CHYTLEN, RADIX. A cylindrical root, bitter and inodorous, brought from China. It is held by the Chinese to be stomachic.—Murray.

CHYTLON,  $\chi\upsilon\tau\lambda\omicron\nu$ , from  $\chi\epsilon\iota$ , 'I pour out.' A liquid formerly used for rubbing the body after bathing.

CIBARIUM, Aliment.

CIBARIUS PANIS. 'Coarse Bread.' Bread, made of second flour.—Celsus.

CIBATIO. The taking of food, Trophe,  $\tau\rho\phi\omicron\eta$ . In Pharmacy, it is the same as Incorporation.

CIBUS, Aliment—c. Albus, Blanc manger.

CICATRICE, Cicatrix.

CICATRICULA. Diminutive of Cicatrix. A small cicatrix. The term is, also, applied to a small white spot, called the tread, observable at the surface of a fecundated egg. See Molecule.

CICATRISANTIA, Epulotica, Synulotica, Aplotica, Ulotica. Remedies formerly considered to be capable of producing cicatrization.

CICATRIX, Cæcatrix, Ule,  $\upsilon\lambda\epsilon$ , from cæcare, 'to conceal,' because it conceals the wound, (F.) Cicatrice. The union of parts, which have been divided. A scar or formation, of a reddish colour, afterwards whitish, and more or less thick, which takes place at the surface of wounds or ulcers after their cure. A cicatrix may vary much in shape, consistence, and thickness. The cicatrix of a bone is called Callus. A vic'ious cicatrix (F.) Cicatrice vicieuse, is one which interferes with the action of the parts on which it occurs.

The scars, which occur after small-pox, are called Pits or Pockmarks, (F.) Coutures par la petite vérole.

CICATRIZATION, Cicatrization, Epulosis. The process by which a cicatrix is formed. Every tissue, except the nails, epidermis, hair, and enamel, is probably, capable of cicatrization.

CICELY, SWEET, Chærophyllum odoratum, Scandix odorata.

CICER ARIETINUM. The Cicer plant. Erebinthus, (F.) Cicérole, Pois Chiche. The seeds are ground into flour, and used as bread in some countries.

CICERA TAR' TARI. Small pills of turpentine and cream of tartar—of the size of a vetch or cicer.

CICERBITA, Sonchus oleraceus.

CICÉROLE, Cicer arietinum.

CICHORIUM ENDIVIA. The systematic name of the Endive. Endiv'ia, Endiv'va, In'tubum, In'tybum (Antiq.), Scariola, In'tybus hortensis, (F.) Chicorée des Jardins, Scariole. Family, Cichoracæ. Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia æqualis. It is a common pot herb, and is eaten as salad.

CICHOBIUM IN'TYBUS, Seris, In'tubum erraticum. The systematic name of the Wild Succory, Wild Cickory, Cickory, Wild Endive,

Ambuleia, Heliotrop'ion, Catanan'cē, Cichoreum, (F.) Chicorée sauvage. It is bitter, and was once used as a tonic. The root, roasted and ground, is often used instead of, or mixed with, coffee.

CICHORY, WILD, Cichorium intybus.

CICI, Ricinis communis.

CICINDELA, Lampyrus, λαμπυρίς, Noctiluca, Nitid'ula. The Glow-worm, (F.) Vcr luisant. This insect was once thought anodyne and lithontriptic.

CICIS. See Quercus cerris.

CICONGIUS; an ancient measure, containing 12 pints.

CICUTA, Conium maculatum.

CICUTA AQUATICA, Cicuta viro'sa, Cicuta'ria aquatica, Water Hemlock, Cowbane, (F.) Cigue aquatique ou vireuse. Family, Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. A violent poison, often eaten by mistake for the Wild Smallage, Apium Græcoles. It produces tremors, vertigo, burning at the stomach, and all the symptoms occasioned by the Narcotico-Acid class of poisons.

CICUTA MAJOR, Conium maculatum—c. Major fœtida, Conium maculatum—c. Terrestri, Conium maculatum—c. Virosa, Cicuta aquatica—c. Vulgaris, Conium maculatum.

CICUTARIA, Chærophylum sylvestre—c. Aquatica, Cicuta aquatica, Phellandrium aquaticum.

CIDER, Poma'ceum, (F.) Cidre. This word is said to have been, formerly, written sidre, and to have come from Sicera, σικερα, which signifies any kind of fermented liquor other than wine. It is made from the juice of apples, and, when good, is a wholesome drink.

CIDRE, Cider.

CIGNUS; an ancient measure, which contained about two drachms.

CIGUE AQUATIQUE, Cicuta aquatica—c. d'Eau, Phellandrium aquaticum—c. Grande, Conium maculatum—c. Ordinaire, Conium maculatum—c. Vireuse, Cicuta aquatica.

CILIA, βλεφαροειδς. The eyelashes. The hairs on each eyelid, (F.) Cils. Their use seems to be, to prevent the entrance into the eye of light bodies flying in the atmosphere; and to diminish, in certain cases, the intensity of light. Also the tarsi, ταρσοι. Also a peculiar sort of moving organs, resembling small hairs, which are visible with the microscope in many animals. These organs are found on parts of the body, which are habitually in contact with water, or other more or less fluid matters, and produce motion in these fluids, impelling them along the surface of the parts.

Cilia have been found to exist in all vertebrated animals except fishes, having been discovered on the respiratory and uterine mucous membranes of mammalia, birds, and reptiles.

The terms "vibratory motion" and ciliary motion" have been used to express the appearance produced by the moving cilia; and it is probable, that this motion is concerned in the progression of fluids along the mucous membranes.

As yet, the motion has been observed only in the direction of the outlets of canals.

CILIAIRE, Ciliary.

CILIARY, Ciliaris. Relating to the eyelashes, or to cilia, (F.) Ciliaire. This epithet has, also, been applied to different parts, which enter into the structure of the eye; from the resemblance between some of them (the ciliary processes) and the eyelashes.

CORPUS CILIARE, Ciliary Body, (F.) Corps ciliaire. A ring, surrounding the crystalline in the manner of a crown; placed behind the iris and the ciliary circle. It resembles the disk of a radiated flower, and is formed by the union of the ciliary processes.

CILIARY PROC'ESSES, Processus ciliares, Rad'ii ciliares, Rayons sous-iricus—(Ch.,) (F.) Processus ciliares. Triangular folds, sixty or eighty in number, placed at the side of each other, and radiating, so as to resemble the disk of a radiated flower. They are lodged in depressions at the anterior part of the vitreous humour. The uses of these processes are not known.

CILIARY LIGAMENT, or C. Circle, Ligamentum cilia're, Annulus ciliaris, A. cellul'osus, Commissure of the Uvea, Commissure de la Choroide,—(Ch.,) (F.) Ligament ou Cercle ciliaire, Cercle de la Choroide, Ceinture blanche de la Choroide. A species of grayish ring, of a pulpy consistence, situate between the choroid, iris, and sclerotic. It seems to be nothing more than cellular tissue.

CILIARY ARTERIES, Arteria ciliares, (F.) Arteres ciliaires. These are furnished by the ophthalmic artery. They are distinguished into 1. Short or posterior (Art. uveales,—Chauss.) 30 or 40 in number, which are distributed to the ciliary processes. 2. Long (Art. Iricnes of Chauss.,) two in number, which, by the anastomoses of their branches, form two arterial circles at the anterior surface of the iris: and, 3. The anterior, Arteria ciliares anteriores of Haller, the number of which is variable. These pierce the sclerotic a few lines from its union with the cornea; and are principally distributed to the iris.

The CILIARY STRIÆ are numerous, pale, radiated striæ, in the posterior portion of the Corpus ciliare, but so covered by the Pigmentum nigrum, as not to be distinctly seen till the paint is removed. The ciliary processes are formed by these striæ.

ZO'NULA CILIA'RI'S vel Membran'ula Coro'na Ciliaris. Under the corpus ciliare, the capsule of the vitreous humour sends off an external lamina, which accompanies the retina, and is inserted, with it, into the forepart of the capsule of the lens, a little before its anterior edge. This is the Zonula ciliaris. It is of a striated appearance and circular form, and assists in fixing the lens to the vitreous humour.

The CILIARY VEINS, (F.) Veines ciliaires, follow nearly the same course as the arteries. In the choroid they are so tortuous, that they have received the name Vasa vorticosa. They open into the ophthalmic vein.

CILIARY NERVES (Nerfs Iriens,—Chauss.) (F.) Nerfs ciliaires. These are 12 or 16 in number. They arise from the nasal nerve, and particularly from the anterior part of the ophthalmic ganglion. They unite in two fasciculi, which pass around the optic nerve, and pierce the sclerotic near the entrance of that nerve into the eye. They are lost in the ciliary ligament.

CILIARY OF TARSAL MARGIN of the eyelids; (F.) Board ciliaire, the edge in which the cilia or eyelashes are situate.

CILIARY MOTION. See CILIA.

CILIARY MUSCLE, Musculus ciliaris. The part of the orbicularis palpebrarum in the vicinity of the ciliary margin.

CILLEMENT, Nictation.

CILLO. A name given by some authors to those, whose upper eyelid is perpetually tremulous. A trembling, which in some cases is called Life's blood. "To have life's blood in the eye," in other words, is to have this affection. Vogel calls it Cillo'sis.

CILLOSIS, Cillo.

CILS, Cilia.

CIMEX, Koris, κορις, Cimex lectularius. The Wall or House or Bed Bug or Chinche. (F.) Punaise. Six or seven of these, given internally, are said to have prevented ague! There is scarcely any thing, which is sufficiently disgusting, that has not been exhibited for this purpose, and with more or less success. The bug has also been esteemed emmenagogue.

CIMICIFUGA. See ACTÆA RACEMOSA.

CIMOLIA PURPURESCENS, Terra Saponaria, Terra Fullonica. Fuller's Earth. A compact, bolar earth, employed in the arts. Used at times as a cooling application to inflamed breasts, legs, &c.

CIMOLIA TERRA, Cimolia alba, Smectis, Smectris, Cimolos, from Κιμωλος, an island in the Cretan Sea, where it is procured. It was formerly used as an astringent, &c.—Scribonius Largus, Pliny. Probably the same as the last.

CINA CINA, Cinchona.

CINABARIS, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum.

CINABARIUM, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum.

CINARA HORTENSIS, Cynara scolymus.

CINCHONA. So called from the Spanish Viceroyn's Lady, the Countess de Cinchon, who was cured of fever by it at Lima, about 1638. Called also Cortex or Pulvis Jesuiticus, Jesuit's Bark or Powder, Cortex Patrum, because it was introduced into Europe by the Jesuits; and also Pulvis Comitissa or the Countess's Powder, and Cardinal del Lugo's Powder, Cortex Cardinalis de Lugo, because he introduced it at Rome. It is the pharmacopœial name of several kinds of barks from various species of the Cinchona. Nat. Order, Cinchonaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. Called, also, Cortex Bark, Peruvian Bark, English Remedy, Cortex Chinae, Cortex Chinae Regius, China, Chinchi'na, Palos de Calentura, Kina Kina (Bark of Barks), Kinki'na, Cina Cina, Quina Quina, Quinquina, Magnum Dei donum. (F.) Quinquina.

CINCHONÆ LANCIFOLIÆ CORTEX. Cortex Peruvia' cortex, Cortex pallidus, Cinchona officinalis, Cortex commu'nis, Cinchona pallida.—Pale Bark, Loza Bark, Crown Bark. (F.) Quinquina gris de Loza, Quinquina Orange. Its odour is aromatic; taste pleasant, bitter, and astringent. The pieces are rolled in double or single quills. Epidermis brown, cracked; fracture resinous. Internally of a cinnamon colour. Its active principle is the Cinchonine.

CINCHONÆ CORDIFOLIÆ CORTEX, Cortex fla-

vus, Cinchona officinalis cortex flavus, Yellow Bark, Calisaya Bark. (F.) Quinquina jaune ou jaune royal, Calisaya. Odour aromatic; taste strong, bitter, astringent. Not rolled; often without the epidermis, which is very thick and inert: light, friable; fracture fibrous. Active principle Quinine.

CINCHONÆ OBLONGIFOLIÆ CORTEX, Cortex ruber, Cinchona officinalis, Cortex ruber. Red Bark, (F.) Quinquina rouge. Odour and taste the same as the pale, but more intense: in large flat pieces, solid, heavy, dry: fracture short and smooth; of a deep brownish-red colour. Although this variety of bark is assigned to the Cinchona oblongifolia by some, it would seem, that nothing is certainly known as to its source. Active principles, Cinchonine and Quinine.

CINCHONÆ CARIBÆÆ CORTEX. Exostema Caribæa, C. Caribæan Bark; the Saint Lucia Bark, (F.) Écorce de Saint Lucie, Quinquina Piton, and the Pitaya Bark, Quinquina bicolor, from an exostema (?) or from the Strychnos pseudoquina (?), are useful substitutes for the cinchona of Peru.

All these barks are bitter, astringent, tonic, and eminently febrifuge. The yellow bark, is, at least, equal to any of the others, although the red contains more active principle. The discovery of their active principles is one of the most important gifts of modern chymistry. Still, in pernicious intermittents, the bark, in substance, is often demanded. It is employed in every disease in which there is deficient tone: but in cases where the stomach is much debilitated, the powder had better be avoided, in consequence of the woody fibre, which might disagree. Externally, it is used in enemata, gargles, &c., and in gangrenous ulcerations. When it excites nausea, an aromatic may be added to it: if purging, opium; if costiveness, rhubarb, &c. Dose, ℥ss to ʒj or more.

The ESSENTIAL SALT OF BARK, as it is called, is an extract, prepared by macerating the bruised substance of bark in cold water, and submitting the infusion to a very slow evaporation.

CINCHONA OFFICINALIS, (CORTEX FLAVUS), Cinchona cordifoliae cortex—c. Pallida, Cinchona lancifoliae cortex—c. of Virginia, Magnolia glauca.

CINCHONINE, Cinchonina, Cinchonin. Cinchonia. The active principle of the Cinchona lancifolia. An organic, crystalline alkali; of a white colour, and bitter, slightly astringent taste; very soluble in alcohol and ether, but almost insoluble in water.

The sulphate of Cinchonine, which is formed directly from the cinchonine, is soluble in water and alcohol. The action of the sulphate of cinchonine is similar to that of the sulphate of quinine; but it is less energetic, and consequently requires to be given in a stronger dose.

CINCHONINE, TARTRATE OF. See QUININE, tartrate of.

CINC'LISIS, κινκλισις, Cinclidismus, agitation; rapid and frequent motion. The movement of the thorax in dyspnœa.—Hippocr. It has been used, also, synonymously with Nictation, (q. v.)

CINE'MA, Cine'sis, from κινεω, 'I move.' Motion.

CINERARIA MARITIMA, Achaovan, Abiat.

CINERES CLAVELLATI, see Potash—c. Gravellati, see Potash—c. Russici, Potash of commerce.

CINEREUS, Cincritious.

CINERITIOUS, Cinereus, from cineres, 'ashes;' (F.) Cendré, of the colour of ashes. The cortical substance of the brain has, by some, been so called. See Cortex Cerebri.

CINESIS, Cinema, Motion.

CINETHMICS, from κινεω, 'I move.' The science of movements in general.

CINETICA. Same etymon. Diseases affecting the muscles, and characterized by irregular action of the muscles or muscular fibres, commonly denominated Spasm. The 3d order in the class Neurotica of Good.

CINETUS, Diaphragm.

CINGULARIA, Lycopodium.

CINGULUM, Zone, ζώνη, from Cingo, 'I bind.' (F.) Ceinture. The part of the body, situate below the ribs, to which the girdle is applied. The waist.

CINGULUM HILDA'NI, Zo'nula Hilda'ni. (F.) Ceinture de Hildane. A leathern girdle formerly used for the reduction of luxations and fractures of the extremities.

CINGULUM MERCURIALE, C. Supientiae, C. Stulti'tiae. A woollen girdle, containing mercurial ointment. It was used as an antisyphilitic, and in diseases of the skin. (F.) Ceinture de vif argent.

CINGULUM SANCTI JOANNIS, Artemisia vulgaris.

CINIS FÆCUM, see Potash—c. Infectorius, see Potash.

CINNABARIS, Hydrargyri sulphuretum rubrum—c. Græcorum, see Calamus rotang.

CINNAMOMUM, Laurus cinnamomum—c. Album, Canella alba—c. Indicum, Laurus cassia—c. Malabaricum, Laurus cassia—c. Sincense, Laurus cassia.

CINNAMON, Laurus cinnamomum—c. Malabar, Laurus cassia—c. Wild, Laurus cassia.

CINONOSI, from κινεω, 'I move,' and νοσος, 'a disease.' Diseases of motion.

CINOPLANE'SIS, from κινεω, 'I move,' and πλανησις, 'a wandering about.' Irregularity of motion.

CINQUEFOIL, Potentilla reptans.

CINZILLA, Herpes zoster.

CION, Uvula.

CI'ONIS. The Uvula, (q. v.) Also, tumefaction, or elongation of the uvula. Staphylo-dialysis.

CIONI'TIS, from κίονις, 'the uvula,' and itis, 'inflammation.' Inflammation of the uvula.

CIPPA. See Jatropha manihot.

CIRCÆA LUTETI'ANA, Enchant'er's Nightshade, (F.) Herbe de Saint-Etienne, Herbe aux Sorciers. This plant, common in the vicinity of Paris, was formerly considered to be resolvent and vulnerary. It was also supposed to possess wonderful magical and enchanting properties.

CIRCOCELE, Cirsocele.

CIRCONCISION, Circumcision.

CIRCONFLEXE, Circumflexus.

CIRCONSCRIT, Circumscribed.

CIRCONVOLUTION, Convolution.

CIRCUIT, Circuitus, in Pathological language, generally means 'period,' 'course.'

CIRCUITUS, Period.

CIRCULAR, Circul'ris, from circulus, 'a circle.' (F.) Circulaire. Having the form or figure of a circle. As Circular Amputation, &c.

The French use the expression "Une circulaire," for a turn of a bandage around any part.

CIRCULATION, Circulatio, Cyclophoru, from circulus, 'a circle:' or rather, from circum, 'around,' and ferre, latum, 'to carry.' (F.) Circulation. Physiologists give this name to the motion of the blood through the different vessels of the body:—to that function, by which the blood, setting out from the left ventricle of the heart, is distributed to every part of the body by the arteries;—proceeds into the veins, returns to the heart, enters the right auricle, and passes into the corresponding ventricle, which sends it into the pulmonary artery to be distributed to the lungs, whence it issues by the pulmonary veins, and passes into the left auricle. From this it is sent into the left ventricle, and is again distributed by means of the arteries.

The PULMONIC or LESSER CIRCULATION, is the circle from the right to the left side of the heart by the lungs.—The GREATER or SYSTEMAT'IC or SYSTEM'IC, that through the rest of the system.

The CAPILLARY CIRCULATION, C. des Parenchymes, is that, which takes place in the capillary vessels; and which is, in some measure, independent of the action of the heart. It is in this capillary circulation, that the various secretions are effected; and that animal heat is evolved. It is the seat of nutrition.

CIRCULATOR, Charlatan.

CIRCULUS. A circle or ring; Cyclus, Cirrius, (F.) Cercle. Any part of the body which is round or annular, as Circulus Oculi—the globe, bulb, or orb of the eye.—Hippocr., Galen. It is, also, applied to objects, which, by no means, form a circle,—as to the Circle of Willis, an Anastomatic circle at the base of the brain, formed by the carotid and basilar arteries.

CIRCULUS ARTERIOSUS IRIDIS. The artery, which runs round the iris, and forms a circle.

CIRCULUS MEMBRANOSUS, Hymen.

CIRCULUS QUAD'RUPLEX; a kind of bandage used by the ancients.

CIRCUMCAULALIS MEMBRANA, Con-junctiva.

CIRCUMCISION, Circumcisio, Præcisio, Abscisio Præputii, Circumcisura, Circumsectio, Peritome, from Circum 'around,' and cadere, 'to cut.' (F.) Circumcision. An ancient operation, performed by some nations as a religious ceremony. It consists in removing, circularly, a portion of the prepuce of infants:—a custom, which was probably suggested, with a view to cleanliness. In cases of extraordinary length of prepuce, or when affected with disease, the operation is, sometimes, undertaken by surgeons. A similar operation is performed on the female, by removing a portion of the nymphæ, amongst the Ægyptians, Arabians, and Persians.

CIRCUMCISURA, Circumcision.

CIRCUMDUCTIO, Perisphalsis.

CIRCUMDUCTIONIS OPIFEX, Obliquus superior oculi.

CIRCUMFLEX'US, from circum, 'around,' and flectus, 'bent.' (F.) Circonflexe. Curved circularly. A name given to several organs.

CIRCUMFLEXUS MUS'culus, Tensor Pala'ti, Peristaphyl'nus exter'nus vel inf'erior, Circumflex'us Pala'ti Mollis, Spheno-salpin'go staphyl'nas seu Staphyl'nus exter'nus, Mus'culus tabe nove, Pala'to-salpingeus, Pter' ygo-staphyl'nus, Petro-salpin'go-staphyl'nus, Spheno-pter' ygo-palati' nus, (F.) Palato-salpingien. A muscle, which arises from the spinous process of the sphenoid bone, and is inserted into the velum pendulum palati. Its use is to stretch the velum.

The CIRCUMFLEX or ARTICULAR ARTERIES of the arm are distinguished into;—anterior and posterior. They arise from the axillary, and are distributed around the shoulder.

The CIRCUMFLEX ARTERIES OF THE THIGH are distinguished into external and internal (A. Sous-Trochant'ricnes—Ch.) They are given off from the Profunda, and surround the head of the thigh bone.

The CIRCUMFLEX VEINS follow the arteries.

CIRCUMFORANEUS, Charlatan.

CIRCUMFU'SA. Hallé has thus designated the first class of subjects, that belong to Hygiène—as the atmosphere, climate, residence, &c.; in short, every thing which acts constantly on man externally and generally.

CIRCUMLIT'TIO, Perichrasis, Perichriston. A term formerly used for liniments, but especially for those to be applied to the eyelids; from Circumlitto, 'I anoint all over.'

CIRCUMOSSALE, Periosteum.

CIRCUMSCRIBED, Circumscriptus, (F.) Circonscriit. A term applied, in Pathology, to tumours, which are distinct at their base from the surrounding parts.

CIRCUMSECTIO, Circumcision.

CIRE JAUNE ET BLANCHE, Cera flava et alba—c des Orilles, Cerumen.

CIRON, Acarus, Psora.

CIRIOS, Circulus.

CIRRAGRA, Plica.

CIRRHOSIS, Cirronosis.

CIRRHON'ISIS, Kirrhono'sis, from κίρρος, 'yellow.' A yellow colouring matter, sometimes secreted in the tissues, owing to a morbid process. Also called cirrho'sis, or Kirro'sis. It is not uncommon in the liver.

CIRSIUM ARVEN'SĒ, Carduus hemorrho'idalis, Ceano'thos, (F.) Chardon hémorrhoïdal. A common plant used in France in the form of cataplasms in hemorrhoids, and worn as an amulet.

CIRSOCE'LE, Cir'cocel'è, from κίρρος, 'varix,' and κίλη, 'hernia.' Varicose Hernia. The greater part of authors have employed the term synonymously with Varicocele, (q. v.) Pott gives it a different signification. Varicocele, he calls the tumour formed by the veins of the scrotum; Circocele, Funiculus varicosus, the varicose dilatation of the spermatic veins. The scrotum feels as if it contained earthworms. It is commonly an affection of no consequence, demanding merely the use of a suspensory bandage.

CIRSOI'DES, from κίρρος, 'varix,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' Varicose, or resembling a varix. Rufus of Ephesus, according to James, applies this term to the upper part of the brain, as well as to the spermatic vessels. (?)

CIRSOM'PHALUS, from κίρρος, 'varix,' and ομφαλος, 'navel.' Varicose dilatation of the veins surrounding the navel. The term has, likewise, been applied to the aneurismal dilatation of the arteries of that region, called also Varicomphalus, (F.) Hargne unévrysmale, Aneurismal Hernia.

CIRSOPHTHAL'MIA, from κίρρος, 'varix,' and οφθαλμος, 'the eye.' Varicose ophthalmia, Ophthalmia varico'sa, Varico'sitas conjunctiv'ae. A high degree of ophthalmia, in which the vessels of the conjunctiva are considerably injected.

CIRSOT'OMY, Cirsotomia, from κίρρος, 'a varix,' and τομή, 'an incision.' Any operation for the removal of varices by incision.

CIRSUS, Varix.

CISEAUX, Scissors.

CISSA, Malacia.

CISSAMPELOS, Pareira brava.

CISSARUS, Cistus creticus.

CISSINUM, κισσινον. Name of a plaster of ivy, used in wounds of the nerves or tendons.—Paulus of Ægina.—from κίσσο, 'ivy.'

CISSOIDĒS, Capeolaris.

CISSOS, Hedera helix.

CISTER'NA, from κίστη, 'a chest,' (F.) Citerne. This term has been applied to various parts of the body, which serve as reservoirs for different fluids. The fourth ventricle of the brain has, also, been so called.—Arantius.

The LUMBAR CISTERN, Cister'na lumb'ris or Reservoir of Pecquet, consists of a dilatation, which the thoracic duct presents in the lumbar region. See Receptaculum Chyli.

CISTHORUS, Cistus creticus.

CISTUS, GUM, Cistus creticus.

CISTUS CRETICUS, Cistus Ladanif'era, Cisthorus, Cissarus, Dorycin'tium, Gum Cistus. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Monogynia. The systematic name of the plant, whence the Lad'anum is obtained—Gum'mi Lad'anum. Lad'anum is a gum-resinous substance, of a very agreeable smell, found in the shops in great masses. Its colour is blackish-green; taste, warm and bitter. It is but little used now. Formerly, it was a component of warm plasters, and was prescribed internally as a stomachic.

CITERNE LOMBAIRE, Receptaculum chyli.

CITHARUS, Thorax.

CITRAGO, Melissa.

CITRARIA, Melissa.

CITREA MALUS. See Citrus medica.

CITREOLUS, Cucumis sativus.

CITRIC ACID, Acidum cit'ricum. The Acid of Lemons, Ac'idam Limon'rum, (F.) Acide Citrique. This acid is found in the lemon, orange, &c. It is in rhomboidal prisms, which slightly effloresce on exposure to the air. It dissolves in a twelfth part of its weight of boiling water, and has an extremely acid but agreeable taste. It is employed in medicine as antiseptic, refrigerant, and diuretic. Rubbed up with sugar and with a little of the essence of lemon, it forms the dry Lemonade, (F.) Limonade sèche.

CITRON, see Citrus medica—c. Tree, see Citrus medica.

CITRONELLE, Artemisia abrotanum, Melissa.

CITRUL SICILIAN, Cucurbita citrullus.

CITRULLUS, Cucurbita citrullus.

CITRUS. See Citrus medica.

CITRUS AURANTIUM. The systematic name of the Orange Tree, Aurantium, A. Hispaniense, Malus Aurantia Major, Malus Aurantia, Aurantium vulgare, Malus Aurantia Curassavica, Oranges, Poma Chinenſia. The Flowers of the Orange, Floris Naphæ, are highly odoriferous, and used as a perfume. On distillation, they yield a small quantity of essential oil—Oleum vel Essen'tia Neroli. They were once used in convulsive and epileptic cases. The leaves, Folia Aurantii, have a bitterish taste, and furnish an essential oil. They have been used for the same purposes as the flowers. The yellow rind of the fruit, Cortex Aurantii, Orange Peel, is an aromatic bitter, and is used in dyspepsia, and where that class of remedies is required. The Juice, Succus Aurantii, Orange juice, is a grateful acid, and used as a beverage in febrile and scorbutic affections.

CITRUS MEDICA. The systematic name of the Lemon Tree.

The Lemon, Limonium malum, Limonum Bacca, Malus Medica, Malus Limonia Ac'ida, Limon, Cit'ra Malus, Citrus, (F.) Citron, has a fragrant odour, depending upon the essential oil, Oleum Limonis, of the rind. The juice, Succus Limonis is sharp but gratefully acid, the acidity depending upon the citric acid it contains. The outer rind, Cortex Limonium, Lemon Peel, Zest, Flav'co Corticum Citri, is used in the same cases as the Cortex Aurantii. The juice is given as a refrigerant beverage, in febrile affections. Alone, or combined with wine, it is prescribed in scurvy, putrid sore throat, &c. Its general properties are refrigerant and antiseptic. Sweetened and diluted, it forms a Lemonade.

The CITRON TREE is likewise considered to belong to the same species—the Citrus Medica. Its fruit is called cedrom'la. It is larger and less succulent than the lemon. Citron juice, when sweetened with sugar, is called by the Italians Agro di Cedro.

The CITRUS MELLA ROSA of De Lamarck, another variety of the Citrus Medica, affords the Bergamote, (which see.)

CITTA, Malacia.

CITTARA, MINERAL WATERS OF. These springs are in the Isle of Ischia, near the sea. They contain carbonate and sulphate of lime, and muriate of soda. Their temperature is 100° Fahrenheit.

CITTOS, Hedera helix.

CITTIOSIS, Chlorosis, Malacia.

CIVET'TA, Zib'ethum, Civ'et. (F.) Civet.

An unctuous perfume, of a very penetrating odour, obtained from different mammalia of the Viverra kind, particularly from the Viverra civet'la. It is contained in a fold of the skin, situate between the anus and the organs of generation.

CLADISCOS, Ramusculus.

CLADONIA ISLANDICA, Lichen Islandicus.

CLADO'NIA RANGIFERRI'NA. The ancients regarded this European plant as pectoral and stomachic. It enters into the composition of the Poudre de Chypre.

CLADOS, Ramus.

CLAIRET, Claret.

CLAIRVOYANCE, (F.) 'Clearseeing.' A clearness of sight, said to be communicated by animal magnetism, which not only enables the magnetized person to see in the dark, through stone walls, &c but even to observe prospects, whilst he fancies he is flying in the air, which he has never seen previously. It need hardly be said, that the possession of such powers is fabulous.

CLANGOR, Paraphonia.

CLAP, Gonorrhæa impura.

CLAPIER (F.) A clapper, Latibulum. A purulent focus of disease: concealed in the flesh or under the skin—from κλειπτεν, 'to conceal.' See Sinus.

CLAIRET, Clare'tum, Vin de Bordeaux. (F.) Clairet. A pleasant French wine, which may be used, whenever wine is required. Also, a wine impregnated with spices and sugar, called likewise Vinum Hippocrat'icum, or Potus Hippocrat'icus, Hippocras, Hyp'ocras. Schröder speaks of a Clare'tum al'terans and a C. purgans.

CLARETA, Albumen ovi.

CLARETUM, Claret.

CLARIFICA'TION, Clarifica'tio, Depuratio, from clarus, 'clear,' and facio, 'I make.' A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in separating from a liquid every insoluble substance held in suspension by it, and which affects its transparency. Decanting and filtering are the operations necessary for this purpose.

CLARY, COMMON, Salvia sclarea.

CLASIS, Fracture.

CLASMA, Fracture.

CLASS, Clas'sis, (F.) Classe. An assemblage of a certain number of objects. In Natural History and in Medicine, a class is a group of objects or individuals having one or more common characters. The classes are divided into orders, the orders into genera, the genera into species, and these last into varieties.

CLASSIFICA'TION, Classifica'tio, from clasis, 'a class,' and facio, 'I make.' The formation of classes. A methodical distribution of beings, or any objects whatever into classes, orders, genera, species, and varieties. See Nosography and Nosology.

CLASSY, MINERAL WATERS OF. Classy is near Laon in Picardy, France. The waters are chalybeate.

CLAUDICATION, Claudica'tio, from Claudica're, 'to be lame.' The act of halting or limping. Lameness, Clauditas, Cholo'sis, (q. v.) Cholei'a, Cholo'ma. (F.) Claudication, Boit'ement. This condition is not any particular disease, but is produced by different causes or affections. It may be the effect of the shortening or elongation of one of the lower limbs, of ankylosis of the joints, palsy of the muscles, pain, &c.

CLAUDITAS, Claudication.

CLAUSTRUM GUTTURIS, Isthmus of the fauces—c. Palati, Velum pendulum palati—c. Virginitatis, Hymen.

CLAUSURA, from clau' dere, 'to shut.' An imperforation of any canal or cavity.

CLAUSURA UTERI, preternatural imperforation of the uterus.

CLAVA MYOSA, Acorus calamus.

CLAVALIER A FEUILLES DE FRÊNE, Xanthoxylum clava Herculis.

CLAVARIA CORALLOIDES, Coralloides Fungus, Coralwort. Said to be corroborant and astringent. A kind of clavaria, called Digital blanc, Digital humain, Champignon de l'appareil des fractures, formed of digitations, grouped together, and two or three inches in length, is said to have been often found, formerly at the Hôtel Dieu of Paris, on the splints of white wood used in the treatment of fractures, in autumn.—H. Clouquet.

CLAVATIO, Gomphosis.

CLAVES CALVARIÆ, Wormiana ossa.

CLAVICLE, Clavic' ula, Clavis, Clavic' ulus, Lig' ula, Fur' cula, Os Jug' uli, Cleis, Cleid' ion, from clavis, 'a key,' (F.) Clavicule. The collarbone. The clavicle is shaped like the letter S, and is placed transversely at the upper part of the thorax. It is articulated, at one extremity with the sternum, at the other with the acromion process of the scapula. It gives attachment, above, to the Sterno-cleido-mastoidens; below, to the Subclavius; before, to the Pectoralis Major and Deltoides; and behind, to the Trapezius. It serves as a point of support for the muscles of the arm, and protects the vessels and nerves passing to that extremity.

The fibres, connecting the lamellæ or plates of bones, have, also, been called Clavic' uli or Nails.

CLAVICULE, Clavicle.

CLAVIS, Clavicle, Key—c. Anglica, Key—c. Secalinus, Ergot.

CLAVUS. A nail, Helos, ἦλος, Gomphos, γομφος, (F.) Clou. This word is employed in Medicine in various senses. It means, 1. A Corn, (q. v.) from its resemblance to the head of a nail. 2. Certain condylomatous excrescences of the uterus. 3. A callous tumour, which forms on the white of the eye, and resembles a nail, the Clavus Oculi, (F.) Clou de l'œil. This last, by some, is considered to be synonymous with staphyloma; by others, with staphyloma of the cornea.

CLAVUS HYSTERICUS, Monop' dia, (F.) Clou hyst' erique. An acute pain, confined to a small point of the head, described by the sick as resembling that which would be produced by a nail, driven into the head. It has been particularly noticed in hysterical females, hence its name. It is called Ovum hyst' ericum, when the pain occupies a greater extent.

CLAVUS SILIGINIS, Ergot.

CLEANSINGS, Lechia.

CLEARSEEING, Clairvoyance.

CLEAVERS, Galium aparine.

CLEAVERS' BEES, Galium aparine.

CLEF DU CRANE, Wormianum, os—c. de Garcengcot, Key—c. à Noix, see Key—c. à Pivot, see Key—c. à Pompe, see Key.

CLEIDAGRA, Cleisagra.

CLEIDION, Clavicle.

CLEIDO-COSTAL, Costo-clavicular.

CLEIDO-MASTOIDEUS. Albinus thus designates the posterior portion of the sternocleido-mastoideus, (q. v.) which he considers a separate muscle. It has been corrupted into clino-mastoideus.

CLEIS, Clavicle, Key.

CLEIS'AGRA, Cleid' agra, from κλεις, 'the clavicle,' and αγρα, 'a seizure.' Gout in the clavicle.—A. Paré.

CLEMATIS DAPHNOIDES MAJOR, Vinca minor.

CLEMATIS RECTA, Flam' mula Jovis, Upright Virgin's Bower, (F.) Clematic droite. Family Ranunculaceæ. Sex. Syst. Polyandria Polygynia. The leaves contain an acrid principle. They have been esteemed anti-venereal; and, in the form of powder, have been used as escharotic.

CLEMATIS VITAL'BA, Vital' ba, Vior' na, Atrage' ne, the Trad' eller's Joy, Common Virgin's Bower, (F.) Clematite, Herb aux guëux, Aub' nique. It has been used in the same cases as the former. In infusion it has been applied in cases of itch. The leaves of the Clematis crispa have similar properties.

CLEMATITE, Clematis vitalba—c. Droite, Clematis recta.

CLEONIS COLLYRIUM. A collyrium, described by Celsus, composed of equal parts of Samian earth, myrrh, and thus, mixed with white of egg.

CLEONIS GLUTEN. An astringent formula of myrrh, frankincense, and white of egg.

CLEPSYDRA, from κλεπτω, 'I conceal, and υδωρ, 'water.' An instrument contrived by Paracelsus to convey fumigations to the uterus.

CLEVES, MINERAL WATERS OF. This spring is a quarter of a league from Cleves in Westphalia. It contains carbonate and sulphate of iron.

CLIGNEMENT, Nictation.

CLIGNOTEMENT, Nictation.

CLIMA, Climate.

CLIMACTERIC, Climacter' icus or Climacter' icus, from κλιμακτηρ, 'a step,' (F.) Climact' erique or Climat' erique. A word, which properly signifies, by degrees. It has been applied to certain periods of life, regarded to be critical.

ANNI CLIMACTERICI. Climacter' ic Years, are, according to some, all those in the life of man, which are multiples of the number 7, Septennials. Others have applied the term to years, resulting from the multiplication of 7 by an odd number. Some have admitted only three climacterics; others, again, have extended them to multiples of 9. Most, however, have considered the 63d year as the Grand Climacteric;—63 being the product of the multiplication of 7 by 9; and all have thought that the period of three, seven, or nine, which they respectively adopted, was necessary to the entire renewal of the body; so that there was, at these times, in the economy, none of the parts of which it had previously consisted. The climacteric years have also been called, hebdomad' ici, scala' res, grada' rii, scan' silcs, genethliaci, natali' tii, fata' les, crit' ici, decret' rii, hero' ici, &c. The whole of the notions on the subject are essentially allied to the doctrine of numbers of Pythagoras.

At present, the word Climacteric is chiefly applied to certain periods of life, at which great changes occur, independently of any numerical estimate of years. Such are the period of puberty, in both sexes, that of the cessation of the menses in women, &c.

CLIMATE, Clima, κλίμα, (F.) Climat. In Geography, the word climate is applied to a space of the terrestrial globe, comprised between two circles parallel to the equator, and arbitrarily measured according to the length of the days. In a Hygienic point of view, we understand by climate, since Hippocrates, a country or region, which may differ from another in respect to season, qualities of the soil, heat of atmosphere, &c. Climate, indeed, embraces, in a general manner, all the physical circumstances belonging to each district: circumstances which exert considerable influence on living beings. The dark complexion, e. g. of the inhabitants of the torrid zone is easily distinguishable from the paleness of those of the frigid,—so are the diseases. They are all modified, more or less, by climate or locality. Hot climates predispose to abdominal complications in febrile affections, cold climates to thoracic, &c.

One of the most important considerations with regard to climates, is their comparative fitness for the residence of invalids, and especially of those who are liable to, or suffering under catarrhal or consumptive affections.

The great object, in such cases, is to select a climate which will admit of regular and daily exercise in the open air, so that the invalid may derive every advantage, which this form of revulsion is capable of effecting.

To an inhabitant of the northern and middle portions of the United States—and the same applies to Great Britain, France, and the northern parts of the old world—a more southern climate alone affords these advantages in an eminent degree.

During the summer months, there are few, if any, diseases, which require a milder climate than that of the United States, or of the milder districts of Europe. The temperature of the winter months is, consequently, the most important object of attention.

Equability of temperature is essential, inasmuch as all sudden changes interfere with the great desideratum—exercise in the open air. In the whole continent of North America the changes are very sudden and extensive. It is not uncommon for the range to be 40°, between two successive days. So far, therefore, as this applies, the American climate is not well adapted to the invalid. In the southern portions, however, of the Union, this objection is counterbalanced by many advantages.

The following Tables exhibit the mean temperature of the year, and of the different seasons—with the mean temperature of the warmest and coldest months of different places in America, Europe, Africa, &c., as deduced from the excellent paper of Von Humboldt on Isothermal Lines, the Meteorological Registers kept by the Surgeons of the United States Army, the work of Sir James Clarke on Climate, &c.

‡ Perpignan, Mean temperature 59.°54.

§ Nismes, Mean temperature 60.°26.

The following tabular views show the mean monthly temperature, maximum, minimum, and range, as well as the greatest daily, and mean daily range, during the corresponding months—but of different years—at some of the prominent retreats for the valetudinarian, in Great Britain, on the continent of Europe, and in the African islands. It is proper, however, to remark, that in no situations, except in those to which an asterisk is affixed, was the register thermometer used. In the others, the observations were made during the day only, and consequently the numbers given are far below the real range throughout the twenty-four hours.

The places are ranged in the order of their mean temperature.

In the United States, the most favourable region for the phthisical invalid is that of Florida,—especially of Pensacola. St. Augustine is frequently chosen, but it is liable to north-east storms, which interfere with the movements of the valetudinarian, and are the source of much discomfort. Still, great benefit has often been derived from it as a winter retreat.

Of the Atlantic Islands, Madeira appears to be best adapted for the consumptive: and those affected with chronic bronchitis. In Italy, Rome and Pisa,—and in England, Torquay and Undercliff, are to be preferred.

Chronic Rheumatism and Gout are benefited by a warm climate. This, again, is unfavourable to those who are predisposed to cerebral diseases, especially to diseases that are characterized by debility and mobility of the nervous system—as paralysis, epilepsy, mania, &c. Hypochondriasis and Dyspepsia require rather change of climate and travelling exercise than a sojourn in any one. (See the Author's Elements of Hygiene, Philad. 1835.)

For the mortality of different countries and cities, see Mortality.

CLIMATERIC, Climacteric.

CLIMATIC, Climaticus. Belonging to, or dependent upon climate.

CLIMATIC DISEASES, Morbi climatici, are such as are caused by climate.

CLINĒ, κλινῆ, 'a bed.' Hence:

CLINICAL, Clinicus, (F.) Clinique. Relating to a bed.

CLINICAL LECTURE, (F.) Leçon clinique. One given at the bedside, or on a particular case or cases.

CLINICAL MEDICINE, (F.) Médecine clinique, that which is occupied with the management of diseases, taken at the bedside or individually.

Clinique, in French, is occasionally used, substantively, for Ecole clinique, or Clinical School;—a school in which Medicine is taught, by examining diseases on the patients themselves. Thus, the French say,—La Clinique de la Charité; "The Clinical School of the Hospital La Charité."

CLINIQUE, Clinical.

CLINOID, Clinoides, from κλινῆ, 'a bed,' and εἶδος, 'form.' Resembling a bed.

THE CLINOID PROCESSIONS, (F.) Apophyses

clinoides, are four processes at the upper surface of the sphenoid bone, which have been compared to the posts of a bed. On them the pituitary gland rests. They are divided into anterior and posterior. Each of the anterior terminates in a point called Transverse Spinous Process.

CLINOPODIA, Thymus mastichina.

CLINOPO'DIUM VULGARĒ, from κλινῆ, 'a bed,' and ποῦς, 'foot,' so called from the shape of its flowers. Wild Basil. (F.) Grand Basilic sauvage. A European plant, which was formerly considered to be an antidote to the bites of venomous animals, to facilitate labour, relieve strangury, stop diarrhœa, &c.

CLIQUE'TIS, Crepitation.

CLISEOMETER, Cliscom'etrum, from κλίσις, 'inclination,' and μετρον, 'measure.' An instrument, intended to measure the degree of inclination of the pelvis, and to determine the relation between the axis of the pelvis and that of the body.—Oslander, Stein.

CLITBUR, Arctium lappa.

CLITORIDIS INFERIORIS LATI ET PLANI MUSCULI, Constrictores cunni.

CLIT'ORIS, from κλιτωρ, 'a servant who invites guests.' (?) Dulce'do Amoris, Myrton, Estrum, Penis mulie'bris, Mentula mulie'bris, Membrum mulie'brē, Superla'bia, Cercos'is, (q. v.) A small, round organ, situate at the upper part of the vulva, and separated by a small space from the anterior commissure of the labia. Its base is surrounded by a slight fold, similar to the prepuce; and it is, internally, of the same structure as the corpora cavernosa penis. The artery of the Clitoris, (F.) Clitoricne, is a branch of the internal pudic. The vein communicates with the internal pudic; and the nerve with the pudic.

CLIT'ORISM; a word, invented to express the abuse made of the clitoris. Also, an unusually large clitoris, Cercosis caterna.

CLOACA, (F.) Cloaque, from cluere, 'to purge itself;' from λούω, 'I wash.' The pouch at the extremity of the intestinal canal, in which the solid and liquid excretions are commingled in birds, fish and reptiles. In the male it gives exit to the excrements, sperm and urine: in the female to the eggs, fœcal matters, and urine.

CLOANX, Orpiment.

CLOAQUE, Cloaca.

CLOCHE (F.) A popular expression in France, for a blister or other vesicle.

CLOISON, Septum—c. des fosses nasales, Septum narium—c. Transparente, Septum lucidum.

CLONIC, Clon'icus, from κλονος, 'agitation,' 'motion.' (F.) Clonique. Irregular convulsive motions. Convulsion with alternate relaxation; in contradistinction to tonic, which signifies a constant rigidity. Clonus, Clonici partiales.

CLONICI UNIVERSALES, Synclonus.

CLONIQUE, Clonic.

CLONISM, Clonismus; same etymon. Clonic spasm.—Baumes.

CLONODES, from κλονος, 'agitation,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' Convulsive. Galen applies this term to the pulse, when convulsive, as it were, and unequal. He compares the sensation it communicates to the finger to that produced by a bundle of sticks or rods in vibration.

CLONOS EPILEPSIA, Epilepsy—c. Hydrophobia, Hydrophobia.

CLONUS, Synclonus—c. Nictitatio, Nictation—c. Palpitatio, Palpitation—c. Paudiculation, Paudiculation—c. Paudiculation maxillarium, Yawning—c. Singultus, Singultus—c. Sternutatio, Sneezing—c. Subsultus, Subsultus tendinum.

CLOPEMANIA, Klopemania.

CLOPORTES ORDINAIRES, Onisci aselli.

CLOT OF BLOOD. See Blood.

CLOTHING, Vestitus.

CLOU, Clavus, Furunculus—c. Hystérique, Clavus hystericus—c. de l'œil, Clavus oculi.

CLOUDBERRIES, Rubus chamæmorus.

CLOUDBERRY TREE, Rubus chamæmorus.

CLOVE, see Eugenia caryophyllata—c. Bark, see Myrtus caryophyllata—c. Pink, Dianthus caryophyllus—c. July flower, Dianthus caryophyllus.

CLUBFEET, Kyllosis.

CLUBMOSS, Lycopodium—c. Fir, Lycopodium Selago—c. Upright, Lycopodium selago.

CLUNES, Nates.

CLUNE/SIA, from Clunes, 'the nates.' Proctalgia, Proctitis. An inflammation of the buttocks.—Vogel.

CLOPEA THRYSSA. The Yellow-billed Sprat; a very poisonous fish of the West Indies.

CLYDON, Flatulence.

CLYSMA, Clyster—c. Tonicum, Enema fætidum.

CLYSOIRE (F.) An apparatus consisting of a long funnel-shaped tube of elastic gum, furnished with a pipe at the apex; for administering enemata.

CLYSTER, Clysterium, Clysmata, Enclysma, Clysmus, Enema (q. v.) from κλυζειν, 'to wash.' (F.) Clystère, Lavement, Remède. A liquid, thrown into the large intestine by means of a syringe, or bladder and pipe properly prepared, &c.; the nozzle of the syringe or pipe being introduced into the anus. See Enema.

CLYSTER, ANODYNE, Enema anodynum—c.

Common, Enema commune—c. Domestic, Enema commune—c. Fætid, Enema fætidum—c. Pipe, Elasma—c. Purging, Enema catharticum—c. Starch and opium, Enema anodynum—c. Tobacco, Enema tabaci—c. Turpentine, Enema terebinthinæ—c. Uterinus, Sparallium.

CLYSTERE, Enema.

CNEME, Leg, Tibia.

CNEORON, Daphne gnidium.

CNEORUM TRICOC'CIUM, Almezerion, Acnes'tos, Chama'lea, Widow-wail, Spurge-Olive. (F.) Camêcê. This plant, a native of Southern Europe, contains a very irritating, acrid principle. The ancients employed its leaves as a powerful purgative. It is now sometimes used for deterring ulcers.

CNESIS, κνησις, Cnesmos, κνηγμος. A painful itching.—Galen.

CNESMOS, Cnesis, Itching.

CNICELÆUM, from κνικος, 'carthamus,' and ελαιον, 'oil.' Oil of Carthamus.—Dioscorides.

CNICUS, Carthamus tinctorius—c. Sylvestris, Centaurea benedicta.

CNIDELÆON, Cnidelæum, from κνιδεις, 'cnidia,' and ελαιον, 'oil.' Oil made from the Grana Cnidia or Mezereon Berries.—Dioscorides.

CNIDIA GRANA, Cnidii Cocci, Coc'cognidia, Ætalion, Coccum. The berries of the Daphne Cnidium.—Fœsius.

CNIDOSIS. A pungent itching, compared to that produced by the Urtica urcus or Nettle. (κνιδη.)—Hippoc.

CNIP'OTES, Pruritus. Itching. The dry ophthalmia, Xerophthalmia.

CNISSA. See Nidorous.

CNISSOREG'MIA, from κνισσα, 'the smell of burnt fat,' and ορεγω, 'I put forth.' A nidorous eructation.

CNYMA, κνυμα. A slight itching. Also, a puncture or vellication.—Galen.

COAGMENTATIO, Gomphosis.

COAGULANTS, Coagulantia. Remedies or poisons, supposed to possess the power of coagulating the blood, or to give consistency to animal fluids. The word, and the absurd notions connected with it, are equally abandoned.

COAGULATION, Coagulatio. The conversion of a liquid into a more or less soft and tremulous mass. Many animal and vegetable fluids are capable of coagulation.

COAGULUM, Grumus, (F.) Caillot. A soft mass, formed in a coagulable liquid. 'The Clot of the Blood is particularly so called—the Cruor, Insula, Placc'nta, Hepar San'guinis, Crassamentum:—the red mass, composed of fibrine, serum, and colouring matter, which separates when the blood is left to itself. See Blood.

The word is also applied, in Pathology, to the sanguineous concretions, which form in different natural and accidental cavities; and which, when they occur at the mouth of a divided artery, sometimes suspend the flow of blood. This is, indeed, one of the means by which hemorrhage is arrested.

COAGULUM ALUMINIS, Coagulum Aluminosum. This is made by beating the white of eggs with a little alum, until a coagulum is formed. It is applied in cases of ophthalmia, where an astringent is necessary.

COALES'CENCE, Coalescen'tia, from coales'cere, 'to run together,' (from cum, 'with,' and alere, 'to nourish,') Syn'physis. The adhesion or union of parts previously separated, as in case of wounds and preternatural adhesions.

COAL'TION. The same etymon as coalescence. It has been used in the same cases as coalescence; as well as to express the action of several parts of the frame, which have the same nutrition.

COALTER'NÆ FEBRES. A name, given to two intermittents, which attack a person at the same time, but whose paroxysms are distinct: so that the attack of one supervenes when the other has ceased. The term Double Intermittent expresses the same meaning.

COAPTATION, Coapta'tio, from cum, 'with,' and aptū're, 'to adjust,' 'adapt,' Paragō'gē. The act of adapting the two extremities of a fractured bone to each other; or of restoring a luxated bone to its place. Coaptation must be effected gently. Usually, extension and counter-extension are, in the first place, necessary.

COARTICULATIO, Diarthrosis, Synarthrosis.

COARCTATIO, Stricture.

COARCTA'TION, Coarctā'tio, from coarctare, 'to straiten.' Stricture. Avicenna speaks of Coarctation of the Pulse.

COBALT, PROTOXIDE OF, Smalt.

COBHAM, MINERAL WATERS OF. Cobham is seven miles from Kingston, in Surrey, England. The waters are weak saline purgatives.

COBRA DE CAPELLO, Crotalus horridus.

COBWEB, Aranei Tela.

COCCA'RIVM. A very small pill.

COCCHIA, Cochia.

COCCI GRANUM, Kermes—c. Orientales, see Menispermum cocculus.

COCCIGIO-CUTANĒ SPHINCTER, Sphincter ani externus.

COCCINELLA, Coccus cacti.

COCCINEL'LA SEPTEMPUNCTA'TA. Lady-bird, Lady-cov, Lady-bug. This insect, bruised upon an aching tooth, has long been regarded antidontalgic!

COCCION, ροζιον. A weight, mentioned by Myrepsus, the same as the Siliqua.

COCCIONELLA, Coccus cacti.

COCCOBALSAMUM. See Amyris opobalsamum.

COCCOGNIDIA, Cnidia grana.

COCCONES. See Punica granatum.

COCCULÆ OFFICINARUM. See Menispermum cocculus.

COCCULI INDI AROMATICI. See Myrsine pimenta.

COCCULUS CRISPUS, Menispermum tuberculatum—c. Indicus, see Menispermum cocculus—c. Palmatus, Columba—c. Suberosus, see Menispermum cocculus.

COCCUM, Cnidia grana, Kermes—c. Baphicum, Kermes—c. Infectorium, Kermes—c. Scarlatinum, Kermes—c. Tinctorium, Kermes.

COCCUS AMERICANUS, Coccus cacti.

COCCUS CACTI. The systematic name of the Cochineal Insect. Coccinella, Cochinilla, Coccinella, Coccinilla, Coccinilla, Ficus Indica grana, Coccus Polonicus, Scarabaeolus hemisphaericus, Cochiniferu cochinilla, Coccus Americanus, Coccus Indicus Tinctorius, Cochinella, Coccus. The Cochineal Animal, (F.) Cochinille, Graine de l'Ecarlate. The cochineal insects have a faint, heavy odour; their taste is acrid, bitterish, and astringent: colour blackish-red externally,—purple-red within. They are used chiefly for giving a red colour to tinctures, &c. They were, at one time, esteemed astringent, stimulant, diuretic, and anodyne.

Coccus Ilicis, Kermes—c. Indicus, see Menispermum cocculus—c. Polonicus, Coccus cacti.

COCCYGIO-ANAL, Sphincter ani externus.

COCCYGIO-CUTANĒ SPHINCTER, Sphincter ani externus.

COCCYMELEA, Prunus domestica.

COCHEMAR, Incubus.

COCHERIA, Cochia.

COCHIN LEG. See Elephantiasis.

COCCYCEPH'ALUS, from coccyx (q. v.) and κεφαλή, 'the head.' A monster whose head has the shape of the os coccygis.

COCCYGEUS, from κοκκυξ, because it is inserted into the coccyx. Ischio-Coccygeus, (F.) Ischio-coccygien. Belonging both to the ischium and coccyx. The muscle Ischio-coccygeus, Levator Coccygis, Triangularis Coccygis. It arises from the spinous process of the ischium, and is inserted into the extremity of the sacrum; and into nearly the whole length of the os coccygis laterally. It retains the coccyx in place, and prevents it from being forced backwards during the evacuation of the fæces.

COCCYX, Os Coccygis, 'a cuckoo;' whose bill it is said to resemble. Cauda, Ossis sacri acutūmen, Os All'agas, Rump Bone, Cuculus, Uropygion. An assemblage of small bones, suspended at the lower part of the sacrum; the curvature of which it prolongs, and of which it seems to be an appendage. Generally, it consists of four bones. Behind the base of the coccyx are two small tubercular eminences. These are called Cornua of the Coccyx.

COCHENILLE, Coctus cacti.

COCHIA, COCCHIA, COCHE'RIA, from ροζιον, 'berry,' 'seed,' or from ροζιον, 'to flow profusely.' An ancient name for several official purgative pills; thus called, either because they produced copious evacuations, or because they were shaped like a seed.

COCHINEAL, Coccus cacti.

COCHINELIFERA COCHINILLA, Coccus cacti.

COCHINILLA, Coccus cacti.

COCHLEA. A Snail's shell, (F.) Limaçon, Coquille. Anatomists have given this name to the most anterior of the three cavities, which constitute the labyrinth of the ear, the Pelvis Aurium—or Concha auris inter'na;—Cavitas cochleata, C. buccinata, Antrum buccinosum, Concha Labyrin'thi, and that of Scala of the Cochlea, (F.) Rampes du limaçon, to two spiral cavities in the interior of the cochlea. One of these scalæ terminates at the Fenes'tra rotunda, and is called Scala Tympani: the other opens at the anterior and inferior part of the vestibule. It is called the Seale vestibuli.

COCHLEA, SCALE OF THE. See Cochlea.

COCHLEAR AURICULARE, Earpick.

COCHLEA'RE, from cochlea; its bowl resembling a shell:—a spoonful; (F.) Cuillérée, abbreviated in prescriptions usually to Coch. See Abbreviation. Also, a scoop, (q. v.)

COCHLEA'RE MAGNUM a table-spoonful; C. Medium, a dessert or pap-spoonful; and C. Minimum, a tea-spoonful.

COCHLEA'RIA, from cochlea'rē, 'a spoon,' so called from its resemblance.

COCHLEA'RIA ARMORA'CIA, Raphanus rusticus, Armoracia, Raphanus marianus, Raphanus sylvestris, Horseradish. Family, Cruciferae. Scz. Syst. Tetradynamia Siliculosa. (F.) Raisfort sauvage, Le Cran. The root of horseradish is frequently used at table; and has long been in the Materia Medica. It is stimulant and diuretic. Externally it is rubefacient.

COCHLEA'RIA CORON'OPUS, Coronopus, Wild, Scurry Grass, Swine's Cress. This European plant is considered to be diuretic and antiscorbutic. (F.) Corne de Cerf, Coronopus Ruelii. The term Coronopus was given, by the ancients, to various plants.

COCHLEA'RIA HORTENSIS, Cochlearia officinalis.

COCHLEA'RIA OFFICINA'LIS, C. horten'sis, Lemon Scurry Grass, Common Scurry Grass, (F.) Cranson, Herbe aux cuillers. It has been considered a powerful antiscorbutic. It is sometimes eaten in salad.

COCHLEARIFORMIS, from cochlea'rē, 'a spoon,' and forma, 'shape.' (F.) Bee de Cuiller.

PROCES'SUS COCHLEARIFORMIS:—a small, very thin plate, which separates the bony portion of the Eustachian tube from the canal for the passage of the tensor tympani.

COCHO'NĒ, κοχωνή. The junction of the ischium, near the seat or breech.—Fœsius. The breech properly, from the hip bones to the anus. The perinæum, (q. v.)

COCIL'IO; a weight of eleven ounces.

COCKLES, INDIAN. See Menispermum Cocculus.

COCKMINT, Tanacetum balsamita.

COYLES, Borgne.

COCO, Cocos nucifera.

COCOA CACAVIFERA, Cacao.

COCOBAY, Mal de San Lazaro.

COCOS NUCIF'ERA, (F.) Cocotier. Order, Palmæ. The systematic name of the plant whose fruit is the Cocoa nut, (F.) Coco. It is an agreeable kernel, but not easy of digestion. Emulsions, orgeat, &c. are made from it. The juice of the cocoa, when fermented, forms wine, and arrack is distilled from it.

COCOS BUTYRA'CEA. The name of the plant, which affords the palm oil, Oleum Palma, obtained chiefly from the fruit, by bruising and mixing the kernels with water, without the aid of heat, by which the oil is separated and rises to the surface. It is of the consistence of an ointment, with little taste, and a strong, though not disagreeable, smell. It is applied to sprains, &c.; but has no advantages over other oils. It has been called, also, Oleum Palmae sebaceum, O. firum nucum cocos butyra'cea and Mackaro fat. It is procured likewise from the Ela'is

Guineen'sis, and Ela'is Occidentalis, two species of palms.

COCO OF THE MALDIVES, Cocos de Maldive. The fruit of a palm, called Lodoicea by Commerson. It was formerly termed, in the shops, Nux Medicea, and enjoyed great reputation.

COCOTIER, Cocos nucifera.

COCTIO, Digestion.

COCTION, Coctio, Pepsis, Pepansis, Pepasmos, Concoctio, from coquere, 'to boil.' This word has been employed in various senses. 1. With the ancients, coctio meant the particular kind of alteration, which the food experiences in the digestive organs, particularly in the stomach. It meant a preparation from its crude state. 2. It expressed the maturation or change, which the Humoral Pathologists believed morbid matter to experience before elimination. It was considered, that coction was produced during the violence of the disease; and hence this was called the Period of Coction. See Humorism.

COCYTA, Malis.

CODAGAPALA, BARK, Nerium antidysentericum.

CODE, Codex.

CODEINE, from κωδία, 'a poppy head.' An alkaloid, discovered, by Robiquet, in opium, in 1832. It is soluble in water, alcohol and ether, and unites readily with acids. As a hypnotic, Magendie thinks one grain of Codeine equal to half a grain of Morphine. The muriate of Codeine appears to be stronger than the pure Codeine.

CODESELLA, Anthrax.

CODEX, a collection of laws. (F.) Code. By extension, a collection of approved medical formulæ, with the processes necessary for forming the compounds, referred to in it. The Parisian Pharmacopœia is styled Codex Medicamentarius.

CODEX MEDICAMENTARIUS, Formulary.

CODIA, Papaver (capsule.)

CODOCELE, Bubo.

CODOSCELLA, Bubo.

CŒCUM, Cæcum.

COEFFE, Caul.

CŒLIA, κοιλία, κοίλη, 'a hollow place.' This word generally meant a cavity in the body:—the abdomen, in particular. It has also been used for the alimentary canal, &c.:—ενω κοιλία, 'the stomach,' κατω κοιλία, 'the abdomen.' Also, an alvine evacuation.

CŒLIAC, Ca'liaca. (F.) Cæliaque ou Cæliaque, from κοιλία, 'the abdomen,' 'intestine.' Relating to the abdomen or intestine.

CÆLIAC ARTERY, A. Ca'liaca, (A. opistogastrique Ch.), A. Cæliaque, Tronc cæliaque, Trépid de la cæliaque, is situated above the pancreas, and behind the upper part of the stomach. It arises from the anterior part of the abdominal aorta, where it passes between the pillars of the diaphragm, and soon divides into the coronaria ventriculi, hepatic, and splenic arteries.

CÆLIAC OR SOLAR PLEXUS, Plexus mesenterii proprius et maximus, P. gangliiformis semilundaris, (Plexus median ou opistogastrique Ch.), (F.) Pl. Cæliaque ou solaire, Ganglion de Vieussens, is formed of numerous nervous filaments, which proceed from the semilunar ganglia of the great sympathetic. It is strengthened by several branches of the right and left pneumogastric nerves; is seated around the trunk of the cæliac artery, behind the stomach, and furnishes the secondary plexuses—the diaphragmatic, coronary of the stomach, splenic and hepatic, which accompany the arteries of the same name.

CÆLIAC FLUX or PASSION, Cæliaca chylo'sa, Diarrhœa chylo'sa, D. chylo'sa, Fluxus cæliacus, Passio cæliaca, P. Ventriculo'sa, Chymoche'zia, Fluor albus intestino'rum, Chylorrhœ'a, Chymorrhœ'a, Cæliaca lac'tea, Morbus cæliacus. (F.) Flux cæliague. A species of diarrhœa, in which the food is discharged by the bowels in an undigested condition. By some, defined to be diarrhœa attended with discharges of chyle or chyme. It is, in general, symptomatic of tubercular disease of the mesenteric glands. See Lientery.

CÆLIACA, from κοιλιακος, 'cæliac,' (q. v.) Diseases of the digestive organs; the 1st class in Good's Nosology. It comprises two orders, Enterica and Splanchnica.

CÆLIACA CHYLOSA, Cæliac flux—c. Lactea, Cæliac flux—c. Renalis, Chyluria—c. Urinalis, Chyluria.

CÆLIALGIA, Tormina.

CÆLIAQUE, Trépiéd de la, Cæliac artery.

CÆLIOCELE. See Hernia, hypogastric.

CÆLIOPYOSIS, from κοιλια, 'the abdomen,' and πυωσις, 'suppuration.' Suppuration in the abdomen or its parietes.

CÆLIORRHŒA, Diarrhœa.

CÆLOMA, from κοιλος, 'hollow.' A round ulcer of the cornea, broader and deeper than that described under the name Bothrion.

CÆLON, Cavity.

CÆLOPHthalmus, from κοιλος, 'hollow,' and οφθαλμος, 'eye.' One who is hollow-eyed.

CÆLOSTOMIA, from κοιλος, 'hollow,' and στομα, 'mouth.' A defect in speaking, when the voice seems as if it came from a cavern;—that is, obscure, and as if at a distance.

CÆLOS'TOMUS, same etymon. One who has a hollow voice.

CÆLOTES, Cavity.

CÆNÆSTHESIS, from κοινος, 'common,' and αισθησις, 'feeling.' Cænæsthesi. Common feeling. Some German writers mean, by this, a sixth sense. It is the feeling of self-existence or individuality, and is manifested by the sense of buoyancy or depression, which we experience without any known cause;—by involuntary shuddering, feeling of chill or glow, &c.

CÆNOLOGIA, Consultation.

CÆNOTES, κοινοτης, 'commonness,' from κοινος, 'common.' The physicians of the Methodist Sect asserted that all diseases arise from relaxation, stricture, or a mixture of both. These were called Cænotes: or what diseases have in common.

CÆUR, Heart.

COFFEA ARABICA, (F.) Cafier and Cafeyer. Family, Rubiaceæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. The plant, which affords the coffee. Jasminum Arabicum, Choava, Bon. Originally from Yemen. Buna. (F.) Café.

The infusion of coffee is an agreeable and wholesome article of diet. It is, to a certain extent, tonic, and is employed as such in convalescence, especially from fevers, &c. In cases of poisoning by opium, and in old asth-mas, its use has been extolled. For this purpose the Moka is the best. It ought to be newly torrefied, but not too much burnt; should be strong, and drunk soon after grinding. Facilitious Coffees have been, from time to time, recommended, but they are infinitely inferior to the genuine. Various substitutes have been proposed;—wheat, barley, hollyberries, acorns, sunflower-seeds, beechmast, peas, beans, suecory-root, seeds of gooseberries and currants left in making wine, and washed;—sliced turnips, &c. These have been roasted, with the addition of a little butter or oil: but they have not the aroma of coffee. The best substitute is said to be the seeds of the Yellow water flag—Gladiolus luteus or Iris pseudacorus.

HUNT'S ECONOMICAL BREAKFAST POWDER consists of rye, roasted with a little butter. It is a good substitute for coffee.

COGNITIO PHYSIOLOGICA, Physiologia.

COHABITATIO, Coition.

COHABITATION, Cohabita'tio, from cum, 'with,' and habita're, 'to dwell.' The act of dwelling together. In Legal Medicine, it means the consummation of marriage. Copulation.

COHESION, Cohæsio, from cum, 'with,' and hæ'rere, 'to stick.' Vis cohæsio'nis, Vis adhæsio'nis, Vis attractio'nis, Force of cohesion, Attraction of cohesion, A. of aggregation. That force, in the particles of matter, whereby they are connected in such a way as to resist any attempt towards their removal or separation. This force has to be attended to, in the management of disease. Emollients, rubbed into a part, act by diminishing the cohesion.

COHOBATION, Cohoba'tio, Coho'bium, Co'hob, Co'hoph. Distillation of a liquid,—already distilled,—on the same substances. When this was repeated three or four times, it was called Recobobation.

COHOL. Synonyme of Alcohol. Also, a dry collyrium.—Avicenna.

COHOSH. See Actæa racemosa.

COIFFE, Caul.

COIGN. See Pyrus cydonia.

COIGNASSIER, Pyrus cydonia.

COÏNCIDENTIA. Some authors have translated, by this term, the word παρομπτωσις, used by Galen to designate the occlusion of the foramen opticum by a humour, proceeding from the base of the brain, and occasioning blindness.—Castelli.

COÏNDICANT, Coïn'dicans, from con, 'with,' and indico, 'I indicate.'

COÏNDICANT SIGNS are those, which furnish the same indications; or which confirm the indication afforded by another sign:—συνεπιδεικνυμενα.

COIRA, Catechu.

COIRAS, Scrofula.

COIT, Coition.

COÏTATION, Coitus, from coco, 'to go together.' Copula'tio, Copula'tion, Copula carna'lis, Aphrodis'ia, Aphrodisiasm'us, Acces'sus, Basia'tio, Amplexa'tio, Complex'io, Conju'gium, Lognœia, Syndyas'mus, Concu'bitus, Congres'sus, Cohabita'tio, Vœnus, Res veneræ, Vœneræ, Sexual intercourse. (F.) Coit, Approchc. The carnal union of the sexes.

COL, Collum.

COLA, Articulation.

COLATORIUM. A strainer of any kind. (F.) Couloir. A term, by which the ancient physicians described every canal or conduit, through which the excrementitious humours of the body are evacuated. Ulcers, fistule, setons, caustics, &c., have been called artificial or accidental Calatoria, because they were considered to be passages by which the animal economy is freed from some morbid matter.

COLATU'RA, from colare, 'to strain.' A filtered or strained liquor. It likewise means, straining a liquid. (F.) Colature.

COL/CHESTER, MINERAL WATERS OF. Aqua Colcestren'sis. The waters of Colchester are of the bitter purging kind, similar to that of Epsom.

COL/CHICUM AUTUMNA'LE. The Meadow Saffron. Colchicum, Coum, (F.) Colchique, Tue-chicu, Mort aux chiens, Safran des prés, Safran bâtard. Family, Colchicaceæ. Class, Hexandria. Order, Monogynia. The bulb or root (Bulbus vel Radix), and the seeds are the parts used in medicine. The taste is acrid, excoriating the mouth; but the acrimony is lost by drying. It is narcotic, diuretic, and cathartic: and has been given in dropsy, gout, and rheumatism. Dose, from gr. j to vj of the fresh bulb. It is supposed to be the active ingredient of the Eau médicinale d'Husson. The active principle is called Veratrine. The Colchicum, in an overdose, is an acro-narcotic poison.

Dr. Wilson's Tincture for the Gout, is merely an infusion of Colchicum.—Paris.

COLCHICUM ZEYLANICUM, Kæmpferia rotunda.

COLCHIQUE, Colchicum autumnale.

COL/COTHAR, Colcothar Vitrioli, Henri-cus rubens, Chalci'tis, Brown red, Rouge, Crocus, Oxidum Ferri rubrum, Tritox'ydum Ferri, (F.) Safran de Mars astringent, Sulphas Ferri calcinat'um, Ferrum vitriolat'um ustum, Terra vitrioli dulcis, Crocus martis vitriolat'us seu adstrin'gens. (F.) Rouge d'Angleterre. The red oxide of iron, obtained by calcining sulphate of iron to redness, with or without the contact of air. It possesses the general properties of the preparations of iron, and has been applied to stanch blood, &c.

COLD, Frigus, Psychos, ψυχος, (F.) Froid. The sensation produced by the abstraction of caloric from our organs. See Heat.

Three degrees of cold are generally distinguished in disease. 1. The simple feeling of cold (Algor), 2. Chilliness (horror), and 3. Shivering (Rigor). Cheima, Chimon χειμα, χειμων. Cold is employed in medicine, chiefly, as a refrigerant and sedative.

COLD IN THE HEAD, Coryza.

COL/EITIS, Colposis.

COLEOPTOSIS, Prolapsus vagina.

COLEOSITIS, Leucorrhœa.

COLÈRE, Rage.

COLES, Penis.

COLIBERT, Cagot.

COLIC, Colicus, from καλον, 'the colon.' (F.) Colique. Relating to the colon.

COLIC ARTERIES, Artèria colicæ. (F.) Artères coliques, are six in number, three of which, given off by the superior mesenteric, are called

Colica dextra; and three, proceeding from the inferior mesenteric, Colica sinistra. All proceed towards the colon, passing between the two laminae of the peritoneum, which form the meso-colon, where they ramify and anastomose with each other. The first Colica dextra, Ramus colica dexter, is called C. dextra superior (Mésocolique,—Ch.) The second, C. dextra media, Colica media, Ramus colicus medius, Arteria media anastomot'ica, (C. droite,—Ch.), and the third, C. dextra inferior, or Ileo-colica (A. cæcale,—Ch.) Of the three Colica sinistra, the first or superior is called by Chaussier, Colica magna sinistra; the second or media is not distinguished from the preceding, as they often arise from a common trunk; and the third is called by Chaussier, Colica parva sinistra. To these arteries as many veins correspond, which open into the great, and little mesenteric.

The COLIC LOBE of the liver is the great lobe of that organ.

COLIC, Colica Passio, Col'ica, Bellyache, Col'ice, Colicodyn'ia, Enter'algia. In its etymological acceptation, this word signifies an affection or pain in the colon. But it is employed in a more extensive signification. It includes every acute pain of the abdomen, aggravated at intervals. The word has, however, epithets affixed to it, which render it more or less precise. See Tormina.

COLIC, DEVONSHIRE, Colic, metallic—c. Horn, Priapismus—c. Lead, Colic, metallic—c. Madrid, Colica Madridensis—c. Menstrual, Colica menstrualis—c. Metallica, Colica metallica—c. Painters', Colic, metallic—c. Plumbers', Colic, metallic—c. of Poitou, Colic, metallic—c. Saturnine, Colic, metallic—c. of Surinam, Colic, metallic—c. Worm, Colica verminosa.

COLICA ACCIDENTALIS, Colica crapulosa—c. Acuta, Enteritis.

COLICA BILIO'SA, Bilious Colic, (F.) Colique bilieuse. Colic, occasioned by an accumulation of bile in the intestines or in its own passages. The treatment required resembles that proper for the next variety.

COLICA CONVULS'IVA, C. spasmod'ica, C. pituit'osa, C. nerv'osa, C. idiopath'ica. Colic, not the symptom of any other affection. It is characterized by griping pain in the bowels, chiefly about the navel, with vomiting and costiveness,—the pain increasing at intervals. The indications are to clear the intestines, and allay spasm. Calomel and opium—castor oil and opium—emollient and cathartic enemata, with fomentations, wet or dry, to the abdomen usually succeed.

COLICA CRAPULO'SA, C. accident'alis, C. Heluo'num, Surfeit, Colique d'Indigestion. A colic, arising from eating indigestible aliments, or digestible aliments in too great abundance. The remedy is obvious.

COLICA CALLO'SA. Colic, attended with sense of stricture in some part of the intestinal canal: often of flatulency and pain: the flatulency gradually passing off by the stricture: the bowels tardy: at length discharging small liquid stools.

COLICA DAMNOSIORUM, Colic, metallic—c. Febricosa, Colica inflammatoria.

COLICA FLATULENTA, Inflatio, Gastrodynia flatulenta, Physospasmus, (F.) Colique flatulente, C. flatuense, C. ventuense. Colic, arising from an accumulation of air in the intestines. It is very common in infants, and may be relieved by aromatics, especially when combined with antacids—e. g. oil of aniseed with magnesia.

COLICA HELLUONUM, Colica crapulosa.

COLICA HEMORRHOIDALIS, Hemorrhoidal Colic, (F.) Colique hémmorrhoidale. A kind of colic, supposed to precede hemorrhoids or to supervene on their suppression.

COLICA HEPATICA, Hepatic colic. Pain in the region of the liver, chiefly about the gall-bladder, occasioned by the passing of a biliary calculus through the cystic and choledoch ducts.

COLICA IDIOPATHICA, Colica convulsiva—c. Ileus, Ileus—c. Iapponica, see Seta equina—c. Lochialis, Dyslochia—c. Madridensis, Colic of Madrid—c. Nervosa, Colica convulsiva, Colic metallic—c. Phlogistica, Colica inflammatoria.

COLICA INFLAMMATORIA, C. phlogistica, C. plethorica, C. febricosa, C. pulsantis, Inflammatory colic. The same as enteritis, (q. v.)

COLICA MADRIDENSIS, Colic of Madrid, Madrid Colic. A species of colic, endemic in several provinces of Spain, whose nature is not clear. Its symptoms resemble those occasioned by lead.

COLICA MENSTRUALIS, Menstrual Colic, (F.) Colique menstruelle. Colic, which precedes or accompanies the menstrual evacuation, or which is owing to the suppression of that evacuation.

COLICA METALLICA, Colic Metallic, Painters' Colic, Colica pictonum, Colic of Poitou, Colic of Surinam, Bellon, Devonshire Colic, Dry Belly-ache, Saturnine Colic, Lead Colic, Plumbers' Colic, Rachialgia Pictonum, R. Pictavensium, Morbus Metallicus, Colicoplegia, Colica Rachialgia, Rachialgia, Colica Damnoniorum, C. Plumbariorum, Paralysis rachialgia, Colica nervosa, Colica Pictorum, Palmus Plumbarius, (F.) Colique de Poitou, Colique végétale, (?) Colique des peintres, (F.) Colique de Plomb. There is not much to distinguish this variety of colic from others. The same violent pain about the navel is present, with retraction of the abdomen towards the spine. It is apt also to occasion palsy. The only difference of treatment is, the necessity of employing more opium along with the purgative. The paralytic sequelæ must be treated by change of air, rubbing the spine, exercise, &c. Treating the disease upon general principles is infinitely more philosophical, and more successful than the empirical management at la Charité, Paris, which it is unnecessary to detail.

COLICA NEPHRETICA, Nephretic Colic, (F.) Colique Néphrétique. Acute pains, which accompany nephritis, and especially calculous nephritis, or the passage of a calculus into the ureters.

COLICA PICTONUM, Colic metallic—c. Pictorum, Colic metallic—c. Pituitosa, Colica convulsiva—c. Plethorica, Colica inflammatoria—c. Plumbariorum, Colic metallic—c. Pulsatilis, Colic, inflammatory—c. Rachialgia, Colic metallic—c. Spasmodica, Colica convulsiva, Ileus

—c. Stipata, Colica stercorea—c. Ventriculi, Cardialgia.

COLICA STERCOREA, Stercoraceous Colic, Colica Stipata, (F.) Colique stercorale. A species of colic, ascribed to the retention of fecal matters in the intestines. The retention is itself, however, an effect, that may be caused in the same manner as the colic pains themselves.

COLICA UTERINA, Uterine Colic, (F.) Colique utérine. Pain seated in the uterus, sometimes called Hystericalgia.

COLICA VERMINOSA, Worm Colic, (F.) Colique vermineuse. Abdominal pain, occasioned by the presence of worms in the intestines.

COLICODYNIA, Colic.

COLICOPLEGIA, Colic, metallic.

COLIMACON, Limax.

COLIQUE, Colic—c. d'Indigestion, Colica crapulosa—c. de Miséricorde, Ileus—c. des Peintres—Colic, metallic—c. de Plomb, Colic metallic—c. de Poitou, Colic, metallic—c. Venteuse, Colica flatulenta—c. Végétale, Colic, metallic.

COLIQUES, Pains (after.)

COLITIS, from κόλον, 'the colon,' and itis, 'denoting inflammation.' Colomit, Inflammation of the peritoneal or mucous membrane of the colon. Dysentery, (q. v.)

COLIX, Trochiscus.

COLLA PISCUM, Ichthyocolla.

COLLAP'SUS, Collapse, Concidit. A sudden and complete prostration of strength, either at the commencement or in the progress of a disease.

COLLAR-BONE, Clavicle.

COLLAT'ERAL, Collateralis, from cum, 'with,' and latus, 'side.' That which accompanies or proceeds by the side of another.

ARTE'RIÆ COLLATERA'LES BRACHII, Collateral Arteries of the Arm, (F.) Artères collatérales du bras. They are given off by the brachial. They are distinguished into, 1. The collateral—superior or external (Grande musculaire du bras)—Ch.) They arise from the inner part of the brachial, and extend as far as the inferior and external part of the arm. 2. The collateral—inferior or internal (Collatérales du Coude)—Ch.) They arise from the brachial, near the elbow-joint, and descend towards the upper part of the fore-arm.

The vessels which pass to the fingers and toes, are also called collateral.

Speaking generally, collateral branches are those which follow nearly the same course as the vessel, whence they emanate.

COLLATERALIS, Ischio-cavernosus.

COLLE-CHAIR, Sarcocolla.

COLLE DE POISSON, Ichthyocolla.

COLLECTION, Collectio, from colligere, 'to collect.' This word is often united to the epithet purulent, serous, &c., to express a gathering of pus, serum, &c.

COLLESIS, Agglutination.

COLLETICUS, Agglutinant.

COLLI'CLE. Drains to collect and convey away water. See Gouttière. Union of the ducts passing from the puncta lachrymalia. Collic'ia punctorum lachrymalium.

COLLICULA VAGINÆ, Nymphæ.

COLLICULI NERVI ETHMOIDALIS, Corpora striata—c. Nervorum opticorum, Thalami nervorum opticorum.

CALLICULUS CAVEÆ POSTERIORIS VENTRICULORUM LATERALIIUM, Hippocampus minor.

COLLIER (F.) A collar. A name given to certain eruptions which surround the neck like a collar.

COLLIGAMEN, Ligament.

COLLINSONIA CANADENSIS. This indigenous plant is possessed of diuretic properties, which seem to reside in a volatile oil. Infusion is the best form of administration. The leaves are, in domestic practice, applied to wounds and bruises.

COLLIQUAMEN'TUM, from colliquo, 'I melt.' The first rudiments of an embryo.—Harvey.

COLLIQUATION, Colliquatio, Eliquatio, Syntexis, Ectex'is, Solutio, Dissolutio. The ancients meant, by this term, the progressive diminution of the solid parts, with copious excretion of liquids by one or more passages. They thought, that all the solids melted; and that the liquids, and particularly the blood, lost a portion of their density.

COLLIQUATIVE, Colliquativus, Colliquescens, from colliquescere, 'to grow liquid.' (F.) Colliquatif. An epithet, given to various discharges, which produce rapid exhaustion. Hence we say, Colliquative sweats, Colliquative diarrhœa, &c.

COLLIQUESCENS, Colliquative.

COLLISIO, Contusion.

COLLIX, Trochiscus.

COLLODES, Glutinosus.

COLLOID, from κόλλα, 'glue,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' An epithet applied to a product of morbid secretion, resembling glue.

COLLOSTRUM, Colostrum.

COLLUM, Cervix, Trache'los, Auchen, (F.) Col, Cou. The part of the body situate between the head and chest. Also, a part of an organ resembling the neck, as in the following cases.

COLLUM OF CERVIX ASTRAGALI, Neck of the Astragalus, (F.) Col de l'astragale. A depression, which separates the anterior extremity of the astragalus from its body.

COLLUM OF CERVIX COSTARUM, Neck of the Ribs, (F.) Col des Côtes. The narrow part of the ribs, between the head and tubercle.

COLLUM OF CERVIX DENTIUM, Neck of the Teeth, (F.) Col ou Collet des Dents. The part of the teeth between the corona and fang, which is embraced by the gum.

COLLUM OF CERVIX FEMORIS, Neck of the Thighbone, (F.) Col du Fémur. The long, narrow, and oblique portion of the os femoris, which separates the head from the two trochanters.

COLLUM OF CERVIX OSSIS MAGNI vel CAPITATI, Neck of the Os Magnum, (F.) Col du grand Os. A circular depression beneath the head of this bone of the carpus.

COLLUM OF CERVIX HUMERI, Neck of the Humerus. A circular, depressed portion, which separates the head of the os humeri from its two tuberosities. Some surgeons place the neck below the tuberosities, no precise line of demarcation indicating its extent.

COLLUM OF CERVIX UTERI, Neck of the Uterus, (F.) Col de la Matrice. A narrow, cylindrical, and flattened portion of the uterus, which terminates it inferiorly, and opens into the vagina by the Os Uteri or Os Tinca. This neck is perceptible on examination per vaginam, until near the end of the utero-gestation. As the uterus enlarges, however, it becomes shorter and wider, so that a manifest difference exists between its condition at seven and nine months.

COLLUM OF CERVIX MANDIBULÆ vel MAXILLÆ INFERIORIS, Neck of the lower jaw, (F.) Col de l'os maxillaire inférieure. A depression observable on each side of the lower jaw, immediately below the condyles.

COLLUM OF CERVIX SCAPULÆ, Neck of the Scapula, (F.) Col de l'Omoplate. A narrow portion, observable below the glenoid cavity of the scapula, which seems to separate it, as it were, from the rest of the bone.

COLLUM OF CERVIX FIBULÆ, Neck of the Fibula, (F.) Col du Péron. A slight narrowness, seated below the head or upper extremity of the fibula.

COLLUM OF CERVIX RADII, Neck of the Radius, (F.) Col du Radius. A narrow portion of the radius, which supports the head of the bone.

COLLUM OF CERVIX VESICÆ, Neck of the Bladder, (F.) Col de la Vessie. The anterior part of the base of the bladder, which resembles the neck of a bottle, and is continuous with the urethra.

COLLUM OBSTIPUM, Torticollis.

COLLURIUM, Collyrium.

COLLUTORIUM, Gargarism—c. Adstringens, Mel Boracis.

COLLUVIES, from colluo, 'I cleanse.' Filth, excrement. Discharge from an old ulcer.

COLLUVIES GASTRICA, Embarras gastricæ.

COLLYRIUM, Colluriæum, κόλλυριον, κόλλυριον, from κόλλω, 'I check,' and ρεω, 'I flow,' or from κόλλα, 'glue,' and ουρα, 'tail,' (F.) Collyre. The ancients designated, by this term, a solid medicine, of a long, cylindrical shape; proper to be introduced into the vagina, anus, or nostrils. They are said to have given it this name because it was shaped like a Rat's Tail, and because there entered into its composition, powders and glutinous matters.—Celsus, Oribasius, Scribonius Largus. At the present day, Collyrium means an application to the eye. Some are pulverulent and dry, but the greatest part are liquid; when they receive different epithets, as astringent, emollient, &c. The term is now little more than synonymous with Eye-water. Collyria are generally extemporaneous formulæ.

COLLYRIUM SICCUM ALEXANDRINUM. See Alexandrine.

COLOBOMA, Colobosis, 'Mutilation.'

COLOCYNTH, Cucumis colocynthis.

COLOMBINE, COMMON, Aquilegia vulgaris.

COLOMBO, Columba.

COLON, κώλον, Colum, Intestinum majus, I. cellulosum, I. crassum et plenum, I. grande, I. læzum. That portion of the large intestines, which extends from the cæcum to the rectum. It is said to have been so called from κόλον, 'hollow,' or from κόλωω, 'I arrest,' because the excrements are arrested, for a considerable time, in its sacs. The colon is usually divided into four portions. 1. The right lumbar or ascending, Colon dextrum, situate in the right lumbar region, and commencing at the cæcum. 2. Transverse colon, Colon transversum, or transverse arch of the colon, the portion of the colon, which crosses from the right to the left side, at the upper part of the abdomen. 3. The left lumbar or descending, Colon sinistrum, extending from the left part of the transverse arch, opposite the outer portion of the left kidney, to the corresponding iliac fossa. 4. The Iliac colon or Sigmoid flexure of the colon, (F.) Colon iliaque ou S. du colon, the portion of the intestine which makes a double curvature in the left iliac fossa, and ends in the rectum.

COLON, Membranæ.

COLONITIS, Colitis, Dysentery.

COLONNE, Columna—c. Vertébrale, Vertebral column.

COLONNES CHARNUES, Carnæ columnæ—c. Charnues du cœur, Columnæ carneæ.

COLOPHANE, Colophonia.

COLOPHONIA, so called from ΚΟΛΟΦΟΝ, a city of Ionia; Phryete, Fricta, Pix Græca. Resina nigra, Black Rosin, Pitch, Brown Rosin, (F.) Colophone, Colophane, Arcanson, Brai sec, The black resin, which remains in the retort, after the distillation, by means of a strong fire, of common turpentine. It is used like the turpentines in general, and in some pharmaceutical preparations.

COLOQUINTE, Cucumis colocynthis.

COLOQUINTIDA, Cucumis colocynthis.

COLOR VIRGINEUS PALLIDUS, Chlorosis—c. Virginum fædus, Chlorosis.

COLOSTRATION, Colostratio. The diseases of new-born children, attributable to the colostrum.

COLOSTRUM, Colostræ, Collostrum, Colustrum, Trophæis, Protogála, Neogála, (Beastings or Beastings in the cow, &c.) from κολοι, 'food,' (?) (F.) Béton. The first milk after accouchement. It contains more serum and butter, and less caseum than common milk; and seems to possess an evacuant property, which renders it fit to aid in the expulsion of the meconium. Colostrum formerly meant an emulsion prepared of turpentine and yolk of egg.

COLOURS, ACCIDENTAL. Opposite colours, Complementary and Harmonic colours. If the eye has been for some time regarding a particular colour, the retina becomes insensible to this colour; and if, afterwards, it be turned to a sheet of white paper, the paper will not seem to be white, but will be of the colour that arises from the union of all the rays of the solar spectrum, except the one to which the retina has become insensible. Thus, if the eye be directed for some time, to a red wafer, the sheet of paper will seem to be of a bluish-green, in a circular spot of the same dimensions as the wafer. This bluish-green image is called an ocular spectrum, because it is impressed upon the eye and may be retained for a short time; and the colour bluish-green is said to be the accidental colour of the red. If this experiment be made with wafers of different colours, other accidental colours will be observed, varying with the colour of the wafer employed, as in the following table:—

| Colour of the Wafer. | Accidental colour, or colour of the ocular spectrum. |
|----------------------|--|
| Red - - -            | Bluish-green.  |
| Orange - - -         | Blue.  |
| Yellow - - -         | Indigo.  |
| Green - - -          | Violet, with a little red.                           |
| Blue - - -           | Orange-red.  |
| Indigo - - -         | Orange-yellow.                                       |
| Violet - - -         | Yellow-green.  |
| Black - - -          | White.   |
| White - - -          | Black.   |

If all the colours of the spectrum be ranged in a circle, in the proportions they hold in the spectrum itself, the accidental colour of any particular colour will be found directly opposite. Hence the two colours have been termed opposite colours.

It will follow, from what has been said, that, if the primary colour, or that to which the eye has been first directed, be added to the accidental colour, the result must be the same impression as that produced by the union of all the rays of the spectrum—that of white light. The accidental colour, in other words, is what the primitive colour requires to make it white light. The primitive and accidental colours are, therefore, complements of each other; and hence accidental colours have also been called complementary colours. They have likewise been termed harmonic, because the primitive and its accidental colour harmonize with each other in painting.

COLPITIS, Colposis.

COLPOPTOSIS, from κολπος, 'the vagina,' and πτωσις, 'fall.' Prolapsus of the vagina, (q. v.)

COLPORRHAPHY, Elytrorrhaphy.

COLPOS, Sinus, Vagina.

COLPORRHA'GIA, from κολπος, 'vagina,' and ῥηγνυμι, 'I break forth.' Discharge of blood from the vagina.

COLPO'SIS, Inflammation of the vagina. Synonymous with Elytritis, Elytritis, Colcitis, Colpitis.

COLPOSTEGNO'SIS, from κολπος, 'vagina,' and στεγνωσις, 'I close.' Atresia or obliteration of the vagina.

COLT'S FOOT, Asarum canadense, Tussilago.

COL'UBER BERUS. The systematic name of the viper, Vipera, (F.) Couleuvre, Vipère. A poisonous reptile—the poison lying in small sacs near its teeth. The flesh is innocent, and has been often taken in scrofula, and in cutaneous disorders in general, but it is inefficacious.

COLUBRINA DRACONTIA, Arum dracunculæ—c. Lusitanica, Euphorbia capitata—c. Virginiana, Aristolochia serpentaria.

COLUM, Arion.

COLUMBO, American, see Calumba—c. Marietta, see Calumba.

COLUMELLA, Pillar, Uvula.

COLUM'NA, Column, (F.) Colonne. Anatomists use this word for parts which resemble a column or pillar, (q. v.)

COLUMNA ADSTANS INGUINIBUS, Penis—c. Dorsi, Vertebral column—c. Oris, Uvula—c. Spinalis, Vertebral column—c. Virginitatis, Hymen—c. Foraminis ovalis, see Ovalis fossa

—c. Valvulæ Vieussenii, see Valvula Vieussenii—c. Vertebralis, Vertebral column.

COLUMNÆ CARNEÆ, Columnæ Cordis, Lacerti vel Lacertuli vel Funes vel Fasciculi teretes Cordis, Trabes Cordis, (F.) Colonnas carneas du cœur. Small, fleshy columns, which project, more or less, into the auricles and ventricles of the heart, whose use appears to be to prevent too great dilatation of those cavities.

COLUMNÆ NASI. The cartilaginous part of the septum of the nostrils.

COLUMNEA LONGIFOLIA, Bahel.

COLUMNS OF MORGAGNI or OF THE RECTUM. See Rectum.

COLUS JOVIS, Salvia sclarea.

COLUSTRUM, Colostrum.

COLUTEA ARBORESCENS, Bladder Senna, (F.) Baguenaudier, Faux Séné. Fam. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. The leaves are slightly purgative, and are often mixed with those of the cassia senna.

COLUVRINE DE VIRGINIE, Aristolochia serpentaria.

COLYMBADES, Pickled Olives. These, when bruised and applied to a burnt part, were supposed to be able to prevent vesication.—Dioscorides.

COMA, κομα. A profound state of sleep, from which it is extremely difficult to rouse the individual. It is a symptom, which occurs in many diseases. Two varieties are distinguished, 1. The Coma vigil, Coma agrypnodes, Perrigilium, Vigilia nimia, Typhonia, Veterinus, Agrypnodoma, Carus lethargus vigil, Typhomonia, (q. v.) which is accompanied with delirium. The patient has his eyes closed, but opens them when called; and closes them again immediately. This state is accompanied with considerable restlessness. 2. Coma Somnolentum, C. Comatos des;—in which the patient speaks when roused, but remains silent and immovable in the intervals. Coma is a deeper sleep than sonor, but less so than lethargy and carus.

COMA, Capillus—c. Apoplexia, Apoplexy—c. Cæsarea, Plica—c. Somnolentum, Somnolency.

COMACON, Myrsina moschata.

COMAROS, Arbutus unedo.

COMATA, from κομα. Diseases characterized by diminution of the powers of voluntary motion, with sleep or impaired state of the senses.—Cullen.

COMATEUX, Comatose.

COMATODES, Comatose.

COMATOSE, Comatos des, (F.) Comatoux. Relating to or resembling coma;—as comatose sleep, comatose fever, &c.

COMBUSTIBILITY, PRETERNATURAL, Combustion, human.

COMBUSTIO, Burn.

COMBUSTURA, Burn.

COMBUSTION, HUMAN, or SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION, or PRETERNATURAL COMBUSTIBILITY, Catacausis, Incedium spontaneum, Catacausis chrisa, Combustion humaine, C. spontanea. These terms have been applied to the extraordinary phenomenon of a rapid destruction of the human body, (being reduced to ashes,) either spontaneously or by the contact of an ignited substance. It is said to have always occurred in the aged, and in those that were fat and hard drinkers. In such, Dr. Traill has found a considerable quantity of oil in the serum of the blood. Vicq d'Azyr, Lair, and Dupuytren think it necessary, that the body should be placed in contact with an ignited substance. Le Cat, Kopp, and Marc are of opinion that this is not necessary. The former appears to be the true view.

COMES ARCHIATRORUM. See Exarchiater.

COMESTIBLE, (F.) Edu'lis, from comedere, 'to eat.' Eatable. When this word is used substantively, in French as in English, it means solid food.

COMESTIBLE, Esculent.

COMEZ. Half a drop. Ruland.

COMFREY, Symphytum—c. Spotted, Pulmonaria.

COMISTE, Aliment.

COMMANDUCATIO, Mastication.

COMMERCIIUM, Sympathy.

COMMEMORATIVE. Commemorativus, from commemora're, 'to cause to remember.' That which recalls, or rather which is recalled.

COMMEMORATIVE SIGNS, (F.) Signes commemoratifs are those, deduced from circumstances which have gone before: or rather, according to others, those which point out the preceding condition of the patient. They are also called Anamnes'tic signs.

COMMI, Gummi.

COMMUNUTED, Communutus, from comminu'ere, 'to break to pieces.' (F.) Communitif. A comminuted fracturæ is one in which the bone is broken into a number of pieces.

COMMUNUTION, Comminutio, Thrypsis, Leio'sis, θρυψις, λειωσις. Fracture of a bone into a number of pieces.

COMMISSURA, Articulation—c. Magna cerebri, Corpus callosum—c. Ossium carnea, Syssarcosis.

COMMISSURE, Commissura, Compages, Compagnatio, Symphysis, Symbole, from commi'to, 'I join together.' A point of union between two parts: thus, the commissures of the eyelids, lips, &c., are the angles, which they form at the place of union.

COMMISSURE, ANTERIOR, OF THE BRAIN, Commissura anterior cerebri, (F.) Commissure antérieure du cerveau. A small medullary fasciculus, situate transversely at the anterior part of the third ventricle, and uniting the two hemispheres.

COMMISSURE, POSTERIOR, OF THE BRAIN. A similar medullary band, situate at the posterior part of the third or middle ventricle.

THE GREAT COMMISSURE OF THE BRAIN, Commissura Magna Cerebri, (F.) Grande commissure du cerveau, which unites the two hemispheres for some extent, is the Corpus callosum.

COMMISSURE, OBLIQUE OR INTERCEREBRAL. See Valvula Vieussenii.

COMMO'SIS, κομμωσις, from κομωω, 'I adorn.' The art of concealing natural deformities, as by painting the face. See, also, Propolis.

COMMOTICE, κομωτική, in the older writers, meant the art of communicating factitious beauty to a person.—Painting the face,—Comoporia.

COMMOTIO, Motion.

COMMOTION, Concussion—c. du Cerveau, Concussion of the brain.

COMMUNICANS, Conjun'gens. That which communicates or establishes a communication. Communicant. There are two Arteria Communicantes; both within the cranium; the one anterior, very short, and extending transversely from one anterior cerebral artery to the other,—the other, posterior, called also Communicans Willisii, which passes from the internal carotid to the posterior cerebral artery. It is a branch of the basiliary.

COMPACT, Compactus. Solid, close, (F.) Compacte. The term Compact Tissue is given to the hardest and closest parts of bone.

COMPAGES, Articulation, Commissure—c. Vertebrarum, Vertebral column.

COMPAGINATIO, Commissure.

COMPAS D'ÉPAISSEUR. See Pelvimeter.

COMPASSIO, Sympathy.

COMPEBA, Piper cubeba.

COMPEPER, Piper cubeba.

COMPERNIS. One who has his knees turned inwards. A case of distortion of the legs.

COMPLETIO, Plethora.

COMPLEX, Complexus. Embracing several distinct things. Chaussier uses this term in his anatomical descriptions for complicated.

COMPLEXIO, Coition, Confusio, Temperament.

COMPLEXION, Complexio. This is often employed, in English, for the colour of the face: as, "He has a good complexion,"—a "sal-low complexion," &c. It formerly had a more extensive signification, and still has in France. It signifies the aggregate of physical characters presented by any individual; considered with respect to his external arrangement or condition. It means more than constitution, for which it is used synonymously in many cases, and differs from temperament, which is less the external condition of the body than the state or disposition of the organs in health.—H. Cloquet.

COMPLEXUS. 'Complicated, complex,' from complexor, 'to comprise,' 'embrace.'

COMPLEXUS MUSCULUS, Biven'ter Cervicis, Complexus Major, Dorsotrachelon-occipital, Trachelo-occipital (Ch.) (F.) Muscle grand complexus. A muscle, situate at the hind part of the neck, where it extends from the interval that separates the two prominent ridges on the posterior surface of the os occipitis, to the transverse and articular processes of the last six cervical vertebræ, as well as to those of the five first dorsal. It serves to straighten, incline, and turn the head.

COMPLEXUS MINOR, Mastoïdeus lateralis, Trachelo-mastoidien, Trachelo-mastoïdeus, (F.) Muscle petit Complexus. It arises from the transverse processes of the last four cervical vertebræ, and is inserted into the mastoid process.

COMPLICATION, Complicatio. In Medicine it means the presence of several diseases, or of several adventitious circumstances, foreign to the primary disease.

COMPOSITION, Compositio, from componere, 'to place together.' Syn'thesis. The act of composing or compounding. Also, the Compound, Compositum, or thing compounded. Likewise, a combination.

COMPOSITUM, Compound.

TO COMPOUND. Same etymology; to mix medicines. To mingle different ingredients into one whole. Used adjectively, it signifies the result of the union of several medicinal agents, as "a compound medicine."

COMPREHENSIO, Catalepsy.

COMPRESS, Compres'sa, Splénium, Plaguila, Penicillum, Peniculum, from comprimere, 'to press together.' (F.) Compre. Folded pieces of lint or rag, so contrived as, by the aid of a bandage, to make due pressure upon any part. According to their shape, direction, and use, compresses have been called long (F.) longuettes, square (Carrées), triangular, prismatic, graduated (graduées), split (fendues), fenêtrées, criblées Croix de Malte, oblique, circular, dividing (divisives), uniting (unisantes), &c.

COMPRESSEUR DE DUPUYTREN, Compressor of Dupuytren—c. du Nez, Compressor nasi—c. de la Prostate, Compressor prostate.

COMPRESSIO, Thlipsis.

COMPRESS'ION, Compres'sio, Encrasis. Same etymology. Pressure, Methodical Compression. This is an agent, frequently had recourse to in Surgery. We compress a limb, affected with adema, varices, hydrops articuli, callous ulcer, &c. The abdomen is compressed after delivery, after paracentesis abdominis, &c.

The compression is produced by means of the roller, laced stocking, &c. according to the part and to the particular case. Moderate pressure aids the contractility of parts, and excites the action of the absorbents; so that large tumours will sometimes disappear after it has been for some time used. A greater degree of pressure occasions, still more, the emaciation of the part, but it is apt to impede the circulation. Pressure is often used to stop or moderate the flow of blood in cases of aneurism or wounds of arteries and veins. In such cases the compression may be immediate, when applied upon the artery itself, or it may be mediate, when applied through the integuments and soft parts. The French use the term—Compression immédiate latérale—for that which is exerted perpendicularly to the axis of a vessel, so as to flatten its sides. It is practised with the finger, forceps, tourniquet, compresses, &c.

COMPRESS'ION OF THE BRAIN. This may arise either from coagula of blood, a soft tumour, a bony excrescence, a depressed portion of the skull, or the presence of some foreign body. The effects vary, according as the compression takes place suddenly or gradually. When suddenly, the symptoms are of the comatose or apopleptic character. When gradually, mania, convulsions, &c. are more likely to occur. Compression, arising from a depressed portion of skull, requires the use of the trephine.

COMPRES'SIVE, Compressivus. That which compresses. A compressive bandage is one that compresses the parts to which it is applied.

COMPRESSOR OF DUPUYTREN, (F.) Compresseur de Dupuytren. An instrument for compressing the femoral artery, invented by Dupuytren. It is constructed on the same principles as the tourniquet of J. L. Petit, from which it only differs in this respect;—that, instead of being maintained in its place by a strap, which always compresses more or less the circumference of the limb, the two pads are placed at the extremities of a semicircle of steel, which by passing from one to the other without touching the parts, limits the pressure to two opposite points of the thigh, and permits the collateral circulation to go on.

COMPRESSOR OR CONSTRICTOR OF URETHRA. An instrument for compressing the urethra, to obviate incontinence of urine. It consists of a girdle of iron, which surrounds the pelvis, to which is fixed a plate of the same metal, that compresses the urethra in Perinæo.

COMPRESSOR NARIS, Rina'us, Nasa'lis, Transversalis Nasi, Myrtifor'mis, Dilatores alarum nasi, Maxillo-narinal, Constrictor Nasi, C. Narium, C. Naris, Triangula'ris Nasi, Sus-mazillo-nasal.—(Ch.) (F.) Compresseur du nez, Transversal du nez. A muscle, situate at the sides of the nose; flat and triangular. It arises from the inner part of the fossa canina, and passes to the dorsum of the nose; where it is confounded with that of the opposite side.

COMPRESSOR PROSTATÆ, Prostat'icus superior, Pubio-prostat'icus, Sub-pubio-prostat'icus, (F.) Compresseur de la prostate. A muscle, admitted by ALBINUS, which is formed of the anterior fibres of the Levator ani, that embrace the prostate. It is the Prostat'icus superior of WINSLOW.

COMPUNCTIO, Paracentesis, Puncturing.

CONÆSTHESIS, Conæsthesis.

CONARIUM, Pineal gland.

CONATUS, Effort.

CONCASSER (F.), from conquassa're 'to break to pieces;' 'to comminute.' To reduce roots, woods, &c. into small fragments, in order that their active principles may be more readily separated from them.

CONCAUSA OR CONCAUSSA, συναρτιον, Synætion. A cause which co-operates, with another, in the production of disease.

CONCAVITAS CONCHULARIS CEREBRI, Infundibulum of the brain.

CONCAVUM PEDIS, Sole.

CONCENTRANTIA, from concentra're, 'to concentrate.' A name once given to acids and absorbents.

CONCENTRANTION, Concentra'tio, from cum, 'with,' and centrum, 'a centre.' A word sometimes used, in medical theories, to express an afflux of fluids, or an accumulation of sensibility or of vital force, towards an organ. It is applied, also, to the pulsation of arteries, when not easily felt under the finger.

POULS CONCENTRÉ, (F.) is a term applied by the French, to a pulse of the above character.

CONCEPTACULA SEMINARIA, Vesiculae seminariae.

CONCEPTACULUM, Uterus.

CONCEPTION, Concept'io, Cye'sis, κυησις, from concip'io, 'I conceive.' The impregnation of the ovum in the ovarium, by the positive contact of the male sperm, whence results a new being. In order that conception may take place, it is necessary, that there should be a uterus, and that the female should be capable of menstruating in a healthy manner. There is every reason, also, to believe, that, occasionally, the male sperm is not fecundating; but of this we know little. The whole subject of conception is a most mysterious one. It seems to occur as follows. During the sexual union, the male sperm passes along the uterus and Fallopian tubes: the fimbriated extremities of the latter seize hold of the ovarium: the sperm, in this manner, comes in contact with an ovum, and impregnates it. The fecundated ovum remains some time in the ovarium; but at length bursts its covering, is laid hold of by the fimbriated extremity of the Fallopian tube, and passes along the tube into the cavity of the uterus, where it remains the full period of utero-gestation.

FALSE CONCEPTION, Falsus Concept'us, Spurium germen, (F.) Fausse conception, Faux germe. An irregular, preternatural conception, the result of which is a mole or some similar production, instead of a properly organized fœtus. See MOLE.

CONCEPTUS. The first rudiments of the fœtus, after conception.

CONCEPTUS FALSUS, Conception, false.

CONCHA, κογχη. A liquid measure, amongst the Athenians, equal to half an ounce. Anatomists apply this term to several hollow parts of the body;—as the Concha of the Ear, (F.) Conque,—Concha Auris, Concha auriculæ; the hollow part of the cartilage of the external ear. It has, also, been applied to the genital organs of the female; to the patella, &c.

CONCHA, Patella, Turbinated bone, (middle,) Vulva—c. Auris interna, Cochlea—c. Cerebri, Infundibulum of the brain—c. Inferior, Turbinated bone, (inferior)—c. Labyrinthi, Cochlea.

CONCHÆ NARIUM, Turbinated bones.

CONCHA'RUM ANTIFEBRILĒ. A febrifuge and sudorific preparation in Bates's Pharmacopœia. It was composed of vinegar, mussel-shells, and water of the Carduus benedictus.

CONCHO-HELIX. A small, fleshy fasciculus, attached to the concha of the ear and helix. It is also called the small muscle of the helix.

CONCHUS, κογχος. The cranium, (q. v.) The orbital cavities.—Castelli.

CONCHYLIA, Turbinated bones.

CONCIDENTIA, Collapse.

CONCILĪUM. A milky plant, referred to, by Pliny, as aphrodisiac and antiphthisical. Adanson considers it to be a Campanula.

CONCOCTION, Coction.

CONCOMBRE ORDINAIRE, Cucumis sativus—c. Sauvage, Momordica elaterium.

CONCOMĪTANT, Concom'itans. That which accompanies. A symptom which accompanies others.

CONCRETATIO, Calcination.

CONCRETIO, Adherence.

CONCRE'TION, Concretio, from concre'scere, 'to condense, thicken, become solid:' Pezis, Symplex'is, πηξις, συμπληξις. The act of becoming thick or solid. It was once used synonymously with adhesion or growing together,—as "concretion of the toes." Most commonly, it is applied to extraneous and inorganic bodies, of a solid character, met with in different textures, after certain chronic inflammations; or which make their appearance in the joints or in the reservoirs for excremential fluids. Concretion is, therefore, frequently synonymous with Calculus, and is then rendered, in Latin, by the word concrementum. But Concretion has a more extensive signification than Calculus; thus, accidental ossifications or deposits of phosphate of lime, in certain organs and especially in the liver and lungs, are properly called osseous concretions. They could not well be called osseous calculi.

CONCUBITUS, Coition.

CONCUR'SUS, from concur'rere, 'to meet together,' Syn'drome. (q. v.) The congeries or collection of symptoms, which constitute and distinguish a particular disease.

CONCUS'SION or COMMOTION, from concu'tio, 'I shake together.' Concus'sio, Thlasma Concus'sio, (F.) Commotion. In Surgery, it is used for the agitation often communicated to an organ by a fall upon another organ; as to the brain from a fall on the breech, &c.

CONCUSSION OF THE BRAIN, Encephalosis'mus, (F.) Commotion du Cerveau, sometimes gives rise to alarming symptoms, even to abolition of the functions of the brain, yet without any sensible organic disease. Slight concussion of the brain, called stunning, consists in vertigo, tinnitus aurium, loss of memory, and stupefaction; all these being temporary. When more severe, there is instant loss of sensation and volition, vomiting, the patient being as if in a sound sleep, but there is no stertorous breathing. Pulse variable, generally more rapid and feeble than in compression; extremities cold. Little can be done here, till reaction has occurred; after this, the case must be treated according to general principles,—by bleeding, blisters, cold applied to the head, &c. After severe concussion, a patient, although apparently well, is not safe till some time after the accident.

CONDENSAN'TIA, Incrassan'tia, (q. v.) Medicines once esteemed proper for inspissating the humours.

CONDENSATIO, Stegnessis.

CONDENSA'TION, Condensa'tio, Inspissatio. Increase in density of the blood and other liquids, or of the solids, which enter into the composition of the human body.

CONDIMENT, αρτιμα, Condimentum, Αρτιμα, Hedys'ma, ἡδυσμα, Conditi'ra, from condi'terē, 'to season,' (F.) Assaisonnement. Some substances are called, at times, aliments, and, at others, condiments, according as they may constitute the basis or the accessory to any dish: such are cream, butter, mushrooms, olives, &c. Others are always condiments, as they are only used to improve the savour of food, and contain but little nutritive matter. Such are pepper, salt, cinnamon, &c. Almost all condiments are possessors of stimulant properties.

CONDIT, Confection.

CONDITUM, same etymon. A pharmaceutical compound of wine, honey, and some aromatics, especially pepper. Also, a confection.

CONDITURA CADAVERUM, Embalming.

CONDOM, Armour, (F.) Baudruches, Redingotes Anglaises, Gants des Dames. The intestina cæca of sheep, soaked for some hours in water, turned inside out, macerated again in weak, alkaline ley—changed every twelve hours,—and scraped carefully to abstract the mucous membranc, leaving the peritoneal and muscular coats, exposed to the vapour of burning brimstone, and afterwards washed with soap and water. They are then blown up, dried, cut to the length of 7 or 8 inches, and bordered at the open end with a riband. They are drawn over the penis prior to coition, to prevent venereal infection and pregnancy.

CONDUCTIO, Tonic spasm, convulsion.

CONDUCTOR, Director, (q. v.) Itinera'rivum, (F.) Conducteur. That which conducts. The Conductor was an instrument, formerly used in the high operation for the stone, for directing the forceps into the bladder.

CONDUIT, Canal.—Auditif externe, Auditory canal, external.—Auditif interne, Auditory canal, internal.—Auriculaire, Auditory canal, external.—Cholédoque, Choledoch duct—c. Déférent, Deferens vas—c. d'Eustache, Eustachian tube—c. Gutturale de Vorcille, Eustachian tube—c. Labyrinthique, Auditory canal, internal.—c. Pterygoïdien, Pterygoid canal—c. Sousorbitaire, Suborbital canal—c. Spermatique, Deferens (vas)—c. Thoracique, Thoracic duct—c. Vidian, Pterygoid canal.

CONDUITS ADIPEUX, Fatty canals.—Aqueus, see Aquocus—c. Accugles de l'urèthre, see Cæcus—c. Dentaires, Dental canals—c. Éjaculateurs, Ejaculatory ducts—c. Lacrymaux, Lachrymal ducts—c. Lactifères, Lactiferous vessels—c. Nourriciers, Canals, nutritive—c. Nutriciers, Canals, nutritive.

CONDULODES, Condyloid.

CONDYLE, Cond'yle, Con'dylus, Capitulum, 'a knot, eminence.' An articular eminence, round in one direction, flat in the other. A kind of process, met with, more particularly, in the ginglymoid joints;—such as the condyles of the occipital, inferior maxillary bone, &c. Some Anatomists have applied the term, however, to eminences, that are not articular; as to the lateral tuberosities at the inferior extremity of the os humeri, and even to certain depressions; as to the concave, articular surfaces or facets at the upper extremity of the tibia. Chaussier calls the transverse root of the zygomatic process, Condyle of the Temporal Bone.

CONDYLI DIGITORUM MANUS, Phalanges of the fingers.

CONDYLOID, Condyloïdeus, Condulo'des, from κονδυλος, a 'condyle,' and ειδος, 'shape.' Having the shape of a condyle.

FORAMINA CONDYLOIDEA, (F.) Trous condyloïdiens. (F.) Fosses condyloïdiennes. These are distinguished into anterior and posterior. They are four in number, seated in the occipital bone; two anterior, and two posterior, to the condyles or condyloid processes of the same bone, and to depressions, which are called Fossæ Condyloïdæ.

As the word Condyloïdien means—"that which has the shape of a condyle," it has been judiciously proposed, by some French anatomists, that condylien should be used in preference, in the case of the foramina and fossæ.

CONDYLO'MA, Con'dylus, from κονδυλος, 'a knot,' 'an eminence.' A soft, fleshy excrescence, of an indolent character, which appears near the orifice of the genital organs and rectum, and occasionally on the fingers and toes. It is the consequence of the syphilitic virus. Such tumours are also called Dermophymata venerea.

CONDYLUS, Condyloma.

CONESSI CORTEX, Nerium antidysentericum.

CONFECTIO, Confection, from conficere, 'I make up.' Alig'ulus. (F.) Confiture, Condit. In general, it means any thing made up or preserved with sugar. In the late London Pharmacopœias, it includes the articles before called electuaries and conserves. Confectio or Confectum also means Confectionary.

CONFECTIO ALKERMES, Alkermes.

CONFECTIO AMYGDALARUM, Almond Confection, Almond Paste, Pasta regia, P. Amygdal'ina, Pasta Emuls'ca, Butyrum Amygdal'arum Dulcium. (F.) Confection d'Amandes. (Sweet almonds ʒj, gum acacia ʒi, white sugar ʒiv. Blanch the almonds, and beat into a paste.) A good mode of keeping almonds in a state fit for making emulsions.

CONFECTIO ARCHIG'ENI, C. Pauli'na. (Castor, long pepper, black pepper, storax, galbanum, costus, opium, of each ʒss, saffron ʒi, syrup of wormwood ʒij.) It was much recommended as a stimulant in nervous affections.

CONFECTIO AROMATICA, Electudrium Aromaticum, C. Cardiaca, C. Raleigh'na, Aromatic Confection, Sir Walter Raleigh's Cordial. The following is the London formula. (Cinnamon, nutmeg, of each ʒij, cloves ʒj, cardamom seed ʒss, saffron ʒij, prepared shells ʒxvi, rectified sugar lbj, water lbj. Rub the dry substances to a powder, adding the water gradually till the whole be incorporated.) Dose, ʒj. to ʒj.

CONFECTIO AURANTIORUM, Conser'va Corticium Aurantium, C. Corticis Eterid'ris Aurantii Hispan'ensis, C. Flavod'inis Corticium Aurantium Hispan'icum, Conser'va Aurantii, C. Citri Aurantii, Confection of the Orange, Conserve of Orange Peel. (Yellow part of the peel of the orange lbj, rectified sugar lbij, beat into a conserve.) It is stomachic, and an agreeable vehicle, corrigent, and adjuvant for other remedies. Dose, ʒss.

CONFECTIO CARDIACA, Confectio aromatica.

CONFECTIO CAS'SIACA, Electudrium Cassia Fistula, E. Cassia, E. e Cassia, E. laxativum, Conser'va Cassia, Electuarium Cassia tamarindatum seu lenitivum, Electudrium e Cassia, Diacassia cum Mannâ, Cassia Confection. (Cassia pulp lbss, manna ʒij, tamarind pulp ʒj, syrup of roses lb ss. Bruise the manna, dissolve by heat, mix the pulp, and evaporate.) It is gently laxative. Dose, ʒss.

CONFECTIO DEMOCRATIS, Mithridate.

CONFECTIO HAMEC;—so called from an Arabian physician,—was composed of the bark of the yellow myrobalans, black myrobalans, violets, pulp of colocynth, the polypodium of the oak, leaves of wormwood, thyme, aniseed, fennel, red roses, pulps of prunes, raisins, sugar, honey, senna, rhubarb, &c. It was used as a purgative in gylsters.

CONFECTIO HYACINTH, Hyacinth Confection, Electuarium seu Confectio de Croco emendata, olim dicta de hyacinthis (P.) A tonic and slightly astringent confection, composed, according to Baunié, of terra sigillata, crab's stones, cinnamon, leaves of the dittany of Crete, myrrh, saffron, syrup of lemon, camphor, Narbonne honey, oil of lemon, &c.; and formerly the hyacinth was added, whence its name.

CONFECTIO OPII, Electuarium Opium, Confectio Opia'ta, Philonium Londinense, Thebriaca Edin'ensis, Philonium Romanum, Opium Confection, Electuarium Theb'icum. (Hard opium ʒvj, long pepper ʒj, ginger root ʒij, caraway seeds ʒij, syrup lbj: one grain of opium in 36 Ph. L.) It is narcotic and stimulant. Dose, gr. x to ʒj.

CONFECTIO PAULINA, Confectio Archigeni—c. ex Capitibus papaveris, Diacodium.

CONFECTIO PIP'ERIS NIGRI, Ward's Paste for Fistula. (Black pepper, elecampane root, each lbj, fennel seed lbij, white sugar lbij.) Dose, size of a nutmeg three or four times a day.

CONFECTIO RALEIGHANA, Confectio aromatica.

CONFECTIO ROSÆ CANINÆ, (L.) Conser'va Rosæ Canina, Conser'va Cynosbati, C. Cynorhodi, Rob Cynosbatus, Confection of Conser'va of Dog Rose. (Pulp of dog rose lbj, sugar ʒxxx. Incorporate.) It is chiefly used as a vehicle for other remedies.

CONFECTIO ROSÆ GAL'LIÆ, (L.) Conser'va Rosæ Gal'lica, Conser'va Rosæ, C. Florum Rosarum Rubra'rum, C. Florum Rosæ Rubra, Rhodosa'charum, C. Rosæ Rubra, Confection of the Red Rose. (Petals lbj, sugar lbij.) It is astringent, but chiefly used as a vehicle for other remedies.

CONFECTIO RUTÆ, Confection of Rue. (Rue leaves dried, caraway seeds, bay berries, of each ʒiiss, sagapenum ʒiv, black pepper ʒij, honey ʒxvj. Mix.) It is given in clysters, as an antispasmodic and carminative.

CONFECTIO DE SAN'TALIS, Confection of the Saunders, (F.) Confection de Sandaux. (Sandal wood, red coral, bole armeniac, terra sigillata, kermes berries, tormentil root, dittany, saffron, myrtle, red roses, calcined hartshorn, cloves.) It was formerly used as an astringent.

CONFECTIO SCAMMONIÆ, Electuarium Scammoniæ, Electuarium e Scammonio, Caryocostidum, Confection of Scammony. (Powdered scammony ʒiiss, bruised cloves, powdered ginger, aa ʒvj, oil of caraway ʒss, syrup of roses, q. s.) A stimulating cathartic. Dose, ʒss to ʒj.

CONFECTIO SENNÆ, Electuarium Cassia Sennæ, E. Sennæ cum Pulpis, E. Sennæ compositum, Benedictum Laxativum, Electuarium ap'eriens, E. cathol'icum commu'nè, E. diapr'ivum, E. ecoprot'icum, Elect. Sennæ, E. e Sennâ, E. lenitivum, Confection of Senna, &c. (Senna leaves ʒviii, figs lbj, tamarind pulp, cassia pulp, pulp of French prunes, each lb ss, coriander seed ʒiv, liquorice root ʒij, sugar lbiiiss.) It is a laxative, and is used in habitual constipation, and in constipation during pregnancy. Dose, ʒss to ʒ ss.

CONFECTIO DE THURË, Frank'incense Confection, (F) Confection d'Encens. A compound of the coriander seeds, nutmeg, thus, liquorice, mastich, cubes, prepared hartshorn, conserve of red roses, sugar, &c.

CONFECTIO D'AMANDES, Confectioui, almond—c. d'Encens, Confectio de Thure—c.

Frankincense, Confectio de Thure—c. of the Orange, Confectio aurantium—c. of the Red rose, Confectio rosæ gallicæ—c. of Rue, Confectio rutæ—c. of Sandax, Confectio de santalis—c. of the Sanders, Confectio de santalis.

CONFECTUM, Confection.

CONFERVA HELMINTHO-CORTOS, Corallina corsicana.

CONFERVA RIVALIS. This species of River Weed has been recommended in cases of spasmodic asthma, phthisis, &c.

CONFIRMANTIA, Tonics.

CONFITURE, Confection.

CONFLUENT, Confluens, from fluere, 'to flow,' and cum, 'together.' An epithet for certain exanthematous affections, in which the pimples, pustules, &c., run together. It is particularly applied to small-pox, under such circumstances. Some authors have called Scarlatina or Scarlet Fever—Confluent Measles, Morbilli Confluentes.

CONFLUENT DES SINUS, Torcular Hephilli.

CONFLUENTIA, Confederatio; same etymon. A term, employed by Paracelsus to express the concordance between a disease and its remedies.

CONFLUXIO, Sympathy.

CONFEDERATIO, Confluentia.

CONFORMATIO, Conformatio, Diaplasis, from conformare, 'to arrange,' 'dispose.' The natural disposition or arrangement of the body. Faulty conformation, (F.) Vice de conformation, is vice of original formation;—existing, of course, from birth. In French Surgery, Conformation is used synonymously with Coaptation, and both it, Diaplasis and anaplasis, mean, also, restoration to the original form—as in fractures, &c.

CONFORTANTIA, Tonics.

CONFORTER, (F.) Confirma're, Confortu're, Corrobora're. To make stronger—to give energy. Conforter l'estomac, 'to strengthen the stomach.'

CONFRICATION, Confricatio, from confricare, 'to rub against.' The action of reducing a friable substance to powder, by rubbing it between the fingers; and of expressing the juice of a plant with the hand.

CONFUSÆ FEBRES. Intermittents, whose paroxysms are irregular and confused.—Bellini.

CONFUSIO, from confundo, 'I mix together,' Synchysis. A disease of the eye, which consists in the mixture of the humours.—Galen. It has, also, been used synonymously with Complexio.

CONGELANTIA, Congelativa.

CONGELATIO, Catalepsy.

CONGELATION, Congelatio, Congelatio, Gelatio, from congelare, 'I congeal,' 'I freeze.' The action of congealing, of passing to the solid state by the abstraction of heat; as congelation of water, mercury, &c.

The term had once other acceptations. 1. It was synonymous with concretion. 2. With coagulation, in which sense it is still occasionally employed. 3. The ancients called all diseases, produced by cold, congelations, as well as those in which there was a kind of stupor or torpor—particularly catalepsy.

CONGELATIVA MEDICAMENTA, Conglutinantia, Congelantia. Medicines, considered capable of uniting, or consolidating wounds, &c.

CONGENER, Congen'erous, from eum, 'with,' and genus, 'kind,' (F.) Congénère. Of the same kind or species. Resembling each other in some manner. When applied to muscles it means that they concur in the same action; in opposition to the word antagonist, or that which acts in an opposite direction.

In France Congénères is applied to those who join in the dissection of the same subject.

CONGENITÆ NOTÆ, Nævus.

CONGENITAL, CONGENITE, Congenialis, Congen'itus, from gen'itus, 'begotten,' and cum, 'with,' (F.) Congénial or Congénital. Diseases which infants have at birth; hence, Congenital affections are those that depend on faulty conformation; as congenital hernia, congenital cataract, &c.

CONGESTION, Conges'tio, from congerere, 'to amass,' 'accumulate,' &c. Symphorema, Synathrois'mus, Engorgement. Accumulation of blood or other fluid in an organ. It is an important symptom in febrile and other disorders. It may arise, either from an extraordinary flow of blood by the arteries, or from a difficulty in the return of blood to the heart by the veins. More often, perhaps, it is owing to the latter cause, and is termed venous congestion, stasis or stagnation:—being not unusually attended with symptoms of oppression and collapse.

CONGLACIATIO, Congelation.

CONGLOBATE, Conglobatus, from conglobare, 'to collect,' 'to gather into a ball,' (F.) Conglobé.

CONGLOBATE GLAND, Glandula conglobata, Glandula Mucosa, Conglobate gland, Globate gland, Lymphatic ganglion, (F.) Glande englobée, Ganglion lymphatique. A round body, formed of lymphatic vessels, connected together by cellular structure, but having neither a cavity nor excretory duct. The mesenteric, inguinal and axillary glands are of this class.

CONGLOBÉ, Conglobate.

CONGLOMERATE, Conglomeratus, Glomerate, Glomera'tus, (F.) Congloméré. Heaped together.

CONGLOMERATE GLANDS, Glandula conglomerata, Glandule vasculosa, are those whose lobules are united under the same membrane; as the liver, kidney, testicle, &c.

CONGLUTINANTIA, Congelativa.

CONGRÈS, (F.) Congress, Congressus. This term, which has often been used synonymously with Coition, means, also, the ocular proof, formerly ordered by the Judicial Authority, in the presence of surgeons and matrons, to test the impotence or capabilities of the parties;—a most unsatisfactory and indecent exhibition. It was forbidden by the Parliament of Paris in the year 1667.

CONGRESSUS, Coition.

CONIA, Lixivium.

CONIASIS, Incrustation.

CONIOTOSIS, Pulverization.

CONIS, Pulvis.

CONISTERIUM, Apodyterium.

CONI VASCULOSI. Conical bundles.

formed by the vasa efferentia of the testis: having their base towards the epididymis.

CONIA, xoria. A wine, prepared by fermenting the must of the grape on tar previously washed in sea-water.—Orfila. See, also, Lixivium.

CONIUM MACULATUM, ζωνειον, Conium, Cicut'a, Cicut'a major, Abiotos, Cicut'a terrestris, Cicut'a major fa'tida, C. vulga'ris, Common Hemlock, Hemlock, (F.) Cigu'e ordinaire, C. grande. Nat. Ord. Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The leaves and seeds are narcotic and poisonous in an overdose. Light destroys the virtues of the leaves; and, therefore, the powder should be kept in opaque bottles, well corked. It has been used as a palliative in cancer and other painful affections; but is not equal to opium. Externally, it has been applied in fomentation to cancerous and scrofulous ulcers. Dose, gr. ij to x.

DAVIDSON'S REMEDY FOR CANCER is said to consist of powdered hemlock and arsenious acid.

CONJUNCTIVE, Conjunctiva.

CONJUGATION, Conjugation.

CONJUGATION, Conjuga'tio (F.) Conjugaison. Assemblage, union, Conju'gium.

FORAMINA CONJUGATIONIS, (F.) Trous de conjugaison. The apertures at the sides of the spine, formed by the union of the notches of the vertebræ. They give passage to the nerves of the spinal marrow, and to the vessels, which enter, or issue from, the vertebral canal.

CONJUGIUM, Coition, Conjugation.

CONJUNCTI MORBI. Diseases joined together. Authors have distinguished two kinds of these;—one, in which the diseases go on simultaneously—morbi connexi;—the other, in which they succeed each other—morbi consequentes.

CONJUNCTIO, Articulation.

CONJUNCTIVA MEMBRANA, Circumcaula'lis, Epipheph'yeos, Tu'nica agna'ta, Tu'nica adna'ta, T. conjuncti'va, (F.) Conjunctive, Membrane adnéc. A mucous membrane, so called because it unites the globe of the eye with the eyelids. It covers the anterior surface of the eye, the inner surface of the eyelids, and the caruncula lachrymalis. It possesses great general sensibility, communicated to it by the fifth pair.

CONJUNCTIVITIS, Ophthalmia.

CONJUNGENS, Communicans.

CONNATE, from eum natus, 'born with.'

CONNATE DISEASES, (F.) Maladies connées, Morbi connati, are such as an individual is born with:—Connate having the same signification as congenital. A difference has been made by some, however; those diseases or conditions, which are dependent upon original conformation, being called congenital;—whilst the diseases or affections, that may have supervened during gestation or delivery, are termed connate.

CONNECTICUT, MINERAL WATERS OF. There is a mineral spring at Stafford in this state, twenty-four miles from Hartford, which has obtained more celebrity than any one in New England. Its principal ingredients are iron and carbonic acid. It, consequently, belongs to the class of acidulous chalybeates. There are other springs in the state, of which, however, little that is accurate is known.

CONNEXIO OSSIUM CARNOSA, Syssarcosis.

CONNUTRITUS, Syntrophos, συντροφος, from cum, 'with,' and nutritior, 'I am nourished.' A disease is so called which has grown up, as it were, with an individual, or has been con-nate with him.—Hippocr., Galen.

CONOID, Conoïdeus, Conoï'des, from ζωνος, 'a cone,' and ειδος, 'shape,' (F.) Conoïde. Resembling a cone.

CONOID LIGAMENT. A ligament, passing from the coracoid process to the scapula, and forming part of the coraco-clavicular, (q. v.) ligament of some anatomists.

CONOIDES CORPUS, Pineal gland.

CONQUASSANT, (F.) Conquassans, from cum, 'with,' 'together;' and quassa're, 'to shake.' Douleurs conquassantes are the pains of parturition, at the time of their greatest intensity, when the head is engaged in the pelvis.

CONQUASSATION. Same etymon. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in dividing, with a pestle, fresh vegetables, fruits, &c. See Confrication.

CONQUE, Concha.

CONSECUTIVE, Consecuti'vus, from cum, 'with,' and sequi, 'to follow.'

CONSECUTIVE PHENOMENA OR SYMPTOMS, (F.) Phénomènes ou accidens consécutifs, are such as appear after the cessation of a disease, or, according to others, during its decline; but without having any direct connexion with it.

CONSENSUS, Consent of parts, Sympathy.

CONSENT OF PARTS, Consensus, Consensus partium, Sympathi'a, from cum, 'with,' and senti're, 'to feel.' (F.) Consentement des Parties. That relation of different parts of the body with each other, which is more commonly denominated sympathy, (q. v.)

CONSENTEMENT DES PARTIES, Consent of parts.

CONSERVATION, Conserva'tio, Phylax'is, φυλαξ'is, from conserva're, 'to preserve.' (F.) Conservation des Drogues, Asservation. The art of preserving any object of pharmacy; any remedial agent, &c., from decay.

CONSERVA, Conserve, from conserva're, 'to preserve.' A pharmaceutical preparation, composed of a vegetable substance and a sufficient quantity of sugar. The London and American pharmacopœias prefer the term CONFECTION, (q. v.)

CONSERVA ABSINTHII, C. Absinthii maritimi, Conserve of Wormwood. (Leaves lbj, sugar lbij.) It has been employed as a tonic, stomachic, and vermifuge.

CONSERVA DE ANGELICÂ (P.), Conserve d'Angélique, C. of Angelica. (Pulp of root 250 parts; white sugar, boiled in a decoction of the root, and reduced to the consistence of a solid electuary, 1000 parts.) It is tonic, aromatic, and stomachic.

CONSERVA DE APIO GRAVEOLENTE (P.), Conserve d'Ache, Conserve of Smallage. Prepared like the preceding. Reputed to have the same properties.

CONSERVA ARI, Conserve of Arum. (Fresh root lbsss, sugar lb iss.) Esteemed diuretic and stimulant.

CONSERVA AURANTI, Confectio aurantium—c. Cassiæ, Confectio cassiæ—c. Citri aurantii, Confectio aurantium—c. Corticis exterioris aurantii Hispanensis, Confectio aurantium—c. Corticum aurantium, Confectio aurantium—c. Florum rosarum rubrarum, Confectio rosæ gallicæ—c. Cynosbati, Confectio rosæ caninæ—c. Cynorrhodi, Confectio rosæ caninæ—c. Flavedinis corticis aurantium Hispanensium, Confectio aurantium—c. Rosæ, Confectio rosæ gallicæ—c. Rosæ caninæ, Confectio rosæ caninæ—c. Rosæ gallicæ, Confectio rosæ gallicæ.

CONSERVA COCHLEA'RIÆ HORTENS'IS, Conserve of Lemon Scurvy Grass. (Leaves lbj, sugar lbij.) Reputed to be stimulant and antiscorbutic.

CONSERVA LU'JULÆ, C. Folio'rum lu'julæ, Conserve of Woodsorrel. (Leaves lbj, sugar lbij.) Gratefully acid and refrigerant.

CONSERVA MENTHÆ, C. Mentha folio'rum, C. Mentha sativæ, Conserve of Mint. (Leaves lbj, sugar lbij.) Stomachic in nausea and vomiting.

CONSERVA PRUNI SYLVES'TRIS, Pulpa prunorum sylvestrium condita, C. Prunæ sylvestris, Conserve of Sloes, (Pulp 1 part, sugar 3 parts.) Possessed of astringent properties.

CONSERVA SCILLÆ, Conserve of Squill. (Fresh squills ʒi, sugar ʒxx.) Possesses the diuretic and other virtues of the squill.

CONSERVE D'ACHE, Conserve de apio graveolente—c. Lemon scurvy grass, Conserva cochleariæ hortensis—c. of Mint, Conserva menthæ—c. of Orange, (red.) Confectio aurantium—c. of Aloe, Conserva pruni sylvestris—c. of Smallage, Conserva de apio graveolente—c. of Woodsorrel, Conserva lujulæ—c. of Wormwood, Conserva absinthii.

CONSERVES, Spectacles.

CONSIDENTIA. This word has two acceptations. 1. It is synonymous with Apocatasias; and, 2. It signifies contraction of any cavity or canal:—See Synezisis.

CONSISTENTIA. A Latin term, employed in two senses. 1. When joined to the word Morbi or Ætatis, it expresses the acme of a disease, or the age at which the constitution has acquired its full strength. 2. By Consistentia humoris is meant the density of a humour.

CONSOLIDA MAJOR, Symphytum—c. Media, Ajuga, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum—c. Minor, Prunella—c. Regalis, Delphinium consolida—c. rubra, Tormentil—c. Saracenia, Solidago virgaurea.

CONSOLIDANTIA, Consolidativa Medicamentata. Substances, formerly given for the purpose of consolidating wounds, or strengthening cicatrices.

CONSOLIDATIVA, Consolidantia.

CONSOMMÉ, Consummatum, Zomos, ζωμοc. Soup, strongly charged with gelatine, and consequently very nutritious, although not proportionably easy of digestion.

CONSUMPTION, Consumption.

CONSORTIUM, Sympathy.

CONSOUDE, GRANDE, Symphytum.

CONSOUND, MIDDLE, Ajuga.

CONSPERSIO, Cataplasma.

CONSPICILLA, Spectacles.

CONSPIRATIO, Sympathy.

CONSTELLA'TUM UNGUEN'TUM. An ointment, composed of cleansed earthworms! dried and pulverized; and of the fat of the bear or wild boar. It was formerly employed in toothache, and to hasten the cicatrization of wounds.

CONSTERNATIO, Stupor.

CONSTIPATIO, Stagnosis.

CONSTIPATIO, Constipatio, from constipare, 'to cram close.' Obstipatio, Adstrictio, Obstipatio alvina, Ischocolia, Alvus adstricta, Stypsis, Constipatio alvi, Coprosistis, (F.) Échauffement, Ventre resserré. Costiveness. A state of the bowels, in which the evacuations do not take place as frequently as usual; or are inordinately hard, and expelled with difficulty. It may be owing, either to diminished action of the muscular coat of the intestines, or to diminished secretion from the mucous membrane, or to both. Cathartics will usually remove it; after which its exciting and predisponent causes must be inquired into and obviated, to render the cure permanent.

CONSTITUTIO, Habit of body—c. Nervosa, Nervous diathesis.

CONSTITUTION, Constitutio, Catastasis, Status, from cum, 'with,' and stare, 'to stand.' A collection of several parts, forming a whole. In Medicine, Constitution means the state of all the organs of the human body, considered in regard to their particular and respective arrangement, order, or activity. A good constitution is one in which every organ is well developed, and endowed with due energy, so that all perform their functions with equal facility. Any want of equilibrium in their development and energy, forms a difference in the constitution. We say that a man is of a good or robust, a delicate or weak constitution, when he is commonly healthy, or commonly labouring under, or unusually susceptible of, disease.

CONSTITUTION OF THE ATMOSPHERE, Constitutio Aeris, (F.) Constitution Atmosphérique. The different conditions of the atmosphere, as regards dryness and humidity, temperature, heaviness, direction of the winds, &c., considered as respects their influence on the animal economy.

EPIDEM'IC CONSTITUTION OR MED'ICAL CONSTITUTION, (F.) Constitution médicale, C. épidémique. The aggregate of meteorological conditions, so far as they are appreciable, during which diseases prevail epidemically.

CONSTITUTIONAL, (F.) Constitutionnel. Belonging to the constitution of an individual; to his manner of being; as, constitutional phthisis, C. Gout, &c. By some, this epithet has been given to diseases, produced by the constitution of the atmosphere, but this acceptance is not common.

CONSTRICTIO, Systole.

CONSTRICTIVA, Styptics.

CONSTRIC'TOR, from constringere, 'to bind.' (F.) Constricteur. That which binds in a circular direction. A Sphincter (q. v.). Different muscles are so called.

CONSTRICTORES CUNNI, Clitoridis inferioris lati et plani musculi, Sphincter Vaginalis (F.) Con- stricteurs du Vagin, C. de la Vulve. Small muscles, which originate beneath the clitoris, descend along the sides of the vagina, and terminate by becoming confounded with the transversus perinæi and externus sphincter ani muscles. Their use is to contract the entrance of the vagina.

CONTRACTOR ANI, Sphincter ani externus—c. Isthmi faucium, Glosso-staphylinus—c. Nasi, Compressor naris—c. Oris, Orbicularis oris—c. Palpebrarum, Orbicularis palpebrarum.

CONTRACTORES ALARUM NASI, Depressor Alæ Nasi.

CONTRACTORES LARYNGIS. Lieutaund describes under the name, Grand contracteur du larynx, the muscle Crico-arytenoidicus lateralis with the Thyro-arytenoidicus.

CONTRACTOR ŒSOPHAGI, Constrictor of the Œsophagus, (F.) Contracteur de l'Œsophage, Muscle œsophagien. A fasciculus of fleshy, circular fibres, at the upper part of the œsophagus.

CONTRACTORES PHARYNGIS, Constrictors of the Pharynx, Sphincter Gulæ. Muscular expansions, which assist in forming the parietes of the pharynx. Three of these are generally admitted. 1. The Constrictor Pharyngis inferior, Crico-pharyngeus and Thyro-pharyngeus, Crico-thyro-pharyngien. It is broad, very thin, quadrilateral, and seated superficially, extending from the thyroid and cricoid cartilages as far as the middle of the pharynx, and uniting, on the median line, with that of the opposite side. 2. The Constrictor Pharyngis Medius, Hyo-pharyngeus and Chondro-pharyngeus, Syndesmo-pharyngeus, Hyo-glossobasi-pharyngien, occupies the middle part of the pharynx. It is triangular, and attached, anteriorly, to the great and little cornu of the os hyoides; to the stylohyoid ligament; and terminates, posteriorly, by joining its fellow of the opposite side. 3. The Constrictor Pharyngis superior, Cephalo-pharyngeus, Glosso-pharyngeus, Mylo-pharyngeus, Pterygo-pharyngeus, Pterygo-syndesmo-staphylo-pharyngien, is quadrilateral, and extends from the internal ala of the pterygoid process, from the inter-maxillary ligament, from the internal oblique line of the jaw, and from the base of the tongue to the posterior part of the pharynx.

The constrictors of the pharynx contract it. They can likewise approximate the ends to each other. Chaussier considers those and the stylo-pharyngeus as but one muscle, and includes all under this last name.

CONSTRINGENTIA, Astringents, Styp-tics.

CONSUETUDO, Habit—c. Menstrua, Menses.

CONSULTATION, Consulta'tio, Delibera'tio, Cavola'gia, Conten'tio, Symbolæ'sis. This word has several acceptations. In English, it means, almost always, the meeting of two or more practitioners, to deliberate on any particular case of disease. In France, it signifies the written result of such deliberations, as well as the opinion of a physician, given to a patient, who consults him, either personally or by writing.

CONSULTING PHYSICIAN or SURGEON. One, who consults with the attending practitioner, regarding any case of disease.

Some physicians, surgeons, and accoucheurs confine themselves to consulting practice.

CONSUMMATUM, Consummé.

CONSUMPTION, from consum'mere, 'to waste away.' Consump'tio, Syntex'is, συντηξις. (F.) Consumption. Progressive emaciation or wasting away. This condition precedes death, in the greater part of chronic diseases, and particularly in phthisis pulmonalis: on this account it is, that phthisis has received the name consumption.—See Phthisis. Fèvre de Consumption, Consumptive fever, is the same as Hectic fever, (q. v.)

CONSUMPTION, PULMONARY, Phthisis pulmonalis.

CONSUMPTIVA. Same etymology. Caustics, used for the destruction of fungi; as burnt alum, lunar caustic, &c., were formerly so called.

CONTABESCENTIA, from contab'escere, 'to grow lean.' Consumption, marasmus, atrophy, (q. v.) &c.

CONTACT, Contactus. The state of two bodies that touch each other. In the theory of contagious diseases, we distinguish immediate or direct contact, as when we touch a patient labouring under one of those diseases, and mediate or indirect contact, when we touch, not the patient himself, but objects that have touched, or emanated from him. The air is, most commonly, the medium by which this last kind of contact is effected.

CONTACTION, Contact'io, Contages, Contact'ium, Aporrh'a, Apoc'risis, from contingere, 'to meet or touch.' The transmission of a disease from one person to another, by direct or indirect contact. The term has, also, been applied, by some, to the action of miasmata arising from dead animal or vegetable matter, bogs, fens, &c., but in this sense it is now abandoned. Contagious diseases are produced, either by a virus, capable of causing them by inoculation as in small-pox, cow-pox, hydrophobia, syphilis, &c., or by miasmata, proceeding from a sick individual, as in plague, typhus gravior, and in measles and scarlatina. Scrofula, phthisis pulmonalis, and cancer have, by some, been esteemed contagious, but apparently without foundation. Physicians are, indeed, by no means unanimous in deciding what diseases are contagious, and what not. The contagion of the plague and typhus, especially of the latter, is denied by many. It seems probable, that a disease may be contagious under certain circumstances, and not under others. A case of common fever, arising from common causes, as from cold, may, if the patient be kept in a close, foul condition, be converted into a disease, capable of producing emanations, which will excite a similar disease in those exposed to them.

Contagion and infection are generally esteemed synonymous. Frequently, however, the former is applied to diseases not produced by contact; as measles, scarlet fever, &c., whilst infection is used for those that require positive contact; as itch, syphilis, &c., and conversely.

Diseases, which cannot be produced in any other way than by contagion, are said to have their origin in specific contagion; as small-pox, cow-pox, measles, hydrophobia, syphilis, &c.

Those, which are produced by contagion, and yet are sometimes owing to other causes, are said to arise from common contagion; as typhus, cyanicæ parotidæa, &c.

CONTAGIOUS, Contagiosus. Capable of being transmitted by mediate or immediate contact; as a contagious disease, contagious fever, contagious effluvia, &c.

CONTAGIUM, Miasm.

CONTEMPLATIF, (F.) Contemplatifus. Appertaining to contemplation. The predominant idea of the melancholic—of the monomaniac—is sometimes called contemplative.

CONTEMPLATIO, Catalepsy.

CONTENSIO, Tension.

CONTENTIO, Consultation.

CONTEXTURE, Textura, Contextus, from cum, 'with,' and texere, 'to weave,' to make a web.' Arrangement of parts;—texture. A name given, metaphorically, to the structure of organized bodies; as the texture of muscles, fibres, &c. See Tissue and Texture.

CONTIGUITY, DIARTHROSIS OF. See Continuity.

CONTINENCE, Continentia, from contine-re, 'to contain oneself;' 'to restrain.' Abstinence from the pleasures of physical love.

CONTINENT, Continens. This word is synonymous with Continued. (F.) Continu.

CONTINENT CAUSE, Causa conjuncta, is a cause, real or presumed, which, having given rise to a disease, continues to act during the whole of its duration. It may be considered synonymous with proximate cause. A continent fever, Febris continens, is one which preserves, during its whole course, the same degree of intensity, without any remission or sensible exacerbation. A disease, which continues uninterruptedly, has been, also, called Æiopathet'ia or Æiopathet'ia, αἰσθητικῆ.

CONTINUED FEVER, Febris contin'ua, F. continens, F. anab'lica, F. assid'ua. A fever which presents no interruption in its course. Continued fevers form a division in the class Pyrexia of Cullen, and include three genera,—Synocha, Symochus, and Typhus.

CONTINUITY, Continuitas. An adhesion of two things between each other, so that they cannot be separated without fracture or laceration.

DIARTHROSES OF CONTINUITY, (F.) Diarthroses de Continuité, are movable joints, in which the bones are continuous, but do not touch immediately: there being, between them, a ligamentous substance, whose flexibility permits motion. The vertebral articulations are examples of this. DIARTHROSES OF CONTIGUITY, Diarthroses de Contiguité, on the other hand, are movable articulations, in which the bones are not continuous, but touch by surfaces covered with a cartilaginous layer, which is always moistened by synovia.

SOLUTION OF CONTINUITY is any division of parts, previously continuous. Wounds and fractures are solutions of continuity.

The word Continuity is opposed to Contiguity; the latter meaning the condition of two things which are near each other, or touch without uniting. There is contiguity between the head of the humerus and the glenoid cavity of the scapula, but not continuity.

CONTONDANT, Contunding.

CONTORSION, Contorsio, from contor'quo, 'I twist about.' Violent movement of a part, accompanied with a kind of torsion; as contortion of the face.

CONTRA-APERTURA, from contra, 'against,' and apertio, 'I open.' A counter-opening. Contra-incisio, Incisio priori opposita, (F.) Contre-ouverture. An incision, made in the most depending part of a wound or abscess, when the first opening is not situate in a manner favourable for the discharge of the pus.

CONTRA-EXTENSIO, Counter-extension.

CONTRACTILE, Contractilis, from contra'here, 'to draw together.' Capable of contracting. The fibre of muscles is contractile.

CONTRACTILITY, Contractilitas; same etymon. (F.) Contractilité. That vital property, which gives, to certain parts, the power of contracting. The muscles of locomotion are endowed with a power of voluntary contractility, or one dependent immediately on the action of the brain; the muscles of the viscera of digestion, and other internal organs, enjoy an involuntary contractility. Contractility and irritability are frequently used synonymously to signify the property possessed by any tissue of contracting on the application of an appropriate stimulus.

CONTRACTION. Same etymon. Systolè. Action of contracting. When we speak of the contraction of a muscle, we mean the phenomena it exhibits during the time it is in action.

CONTRACTURA. Same etymon. Acamp'sia, Ent'asia articula'ris, Mus'cular Stiff-joint. A state of permanent rigidity and progressive atrophy of the flexor muscles, which prevents the motions of extension beyond a certain limit. The affected muscles form hard cords beneath the skin. On dissection, they are found converted into tendinous fibres, the fleshy fibres having almost disappeared, when the disease has been of any duration. It succeeds, frequently, other diseases, particularly rheumatism, neuralgia, convulsions, syphilis, colica pictonum, &c. The warm bath, vapour bath or thermal waters, oleaginous embrocations, mechanical extension of the limbs, &c., are the chief means of treatment.

CONTRA-FISSURA, from contra, 'against,' and findo, 'I cleave.' Repercus'sio, Reson'itus, Catag'ma Fissura contrajacens, Apech'ma, (F.) Contre-coup, Contre-fente, Contre-fracture. A fracture, contusion, or injury, produced by a blow in a part distant from that which is struck. Five species of contra-fissura or contre-coups may occur in the skull. 1. When the internal table yields and fractures. 2. When the bone breaks in any other part than the one struck. 3. When a bone, which has been struck, remains uninjured, and its neighbour is fractured. 4. When a bone is fractured in a place diametrically opposite to that struck, as in fractures at the base of the cranium, from a fall on the vertex; and lastly, when the violence of the blow produces a separation of the neighbouring or distant sutures. These fractures of the skull are also called Fractures par résonnance.

CONTRA-INCISIO, Contra-apertura.

CONTRA-INDICATIO, Counter-indication.

CONTRA-IRRITATIO, Counter-irritation. CONTRACTILITÉ PAR DÉFAUT D'EXTENSION, Elasticity—c. de Tissu, Elasticity. CONTRACTILITY, Irritability. CONTRACTIO CORDIS, Systole. CONTRAHENTIA, Astringents, Styptics. CONTRA-LUNARIS, from contra, 'against,' and luna, 'the moon.' An epithet for a woman who conceives during the menstrual discharge.—Dietrich.

CONTRA-STIMULANS, Contro-stimulant. CONTRAYERVA, Dorstenia contrayerva—c. Balls, Pulvis contrayervæ compositus—c. Mexican, Psoralea pentaphylla—c. Nova, Psoralea pentaphylla—c. Lisbon, Dorstenia contrayerva—c. Virginiana, Aristolochia serpentaria. CONTRE-COUP, Contra-fissura.

CONTRE-EXTENSION, Counter-extension.

CONTREXEVILLE, MINERAL WATERS OF. C. is a town in France, in the department of Vosges, four leagues from Neufchâteau. The waters contain carbonate of iron, muriate and carbonate of lime, a bituminous substance, and free carbonic acid. They are frequented by those labouring under cutaneous, scrofulous, and calculous affections.

CONTRE-FENTE, Contra-fissura.

CONTRE-FRACTURE, Contra-fissura.

CONTRE-INDICATION, Counter-indication.

CONTRE-OUVERTURE, Contra-apertura.

CONTRITIO, from contero, 'I bruise or make small':—Syntrinnum, Syntripsis, Tritura, Tritus, Trituratio, Tri'itio, Comminatio.

CONTRO-STIMULANT, Contrastimulans, from contra, 'against,' and stimulus, 'that which excites.' A substance that possesses a particular, debilitating property, acting upon the excitability in a manner opposite to stimulus. A name given to therapeutical agents, which, according to the Italian theory of Contro-stimulus, are endowed with the property of diminishing excitement by a specific action. These agents are by no means clearly defined.

CONTRO-STIMULUS. Same etymon. The name given by Rasori, about thirty years ago, to a new medical doctrine, of which he was the originator—La nuova Dottrina Medica Italiana. It is founded on the contro-stimulant property, attributed to a certain number of medicines. In this doctrine, as in that of Brown, under the name excitability, a fundamental principle of physiology is admitted, by virtue of which living beings are endowed with an aptitude for feeling the action of external agents or exciting influences, and of reacting on these same influences. When this excitability is too great, there is excess of stimulus or Hypersthenia: when too little, there is deficiency or Hypothenia. Diseases, general and local, are divided into three great classes, or into, 1. Hypersthenic; 2. Hypothenic; 3. Irritative. The contro-stimulant physicians admit only two classes of medicines—stimulants and contro-stimulants.

CONTUNDING, Contundens, (F.) Contondant, Contundens, from contundere, 'to bruise.' That which causes contusions. An epithet given to round, blunt, vulnerating projectiles, which bruise or lacerate parts without cutting them.

CONTUS, Contused.

CONTUS, Penis.

CONTUSED. Same etymon. (F.) Contus. Affected with contusion. Thus we say—a contused wound.

CONTUSION, Contusio. A Bruise; Collisio, Phlasma, Thlasis, Thlasma, Th. Contusio, (F.) Meurtrissure. Same etymon. An injury or lesion—arising from the shock of a body with a large surface, which presents no loss of substance, and no apparent wound. If the skin be divided, the injury takes the name of contused wound. The differences of contusion, as to extent, are of course infinite. When slight, the blood stagnates in the capillaries of the skin, or is effused into the subcutaneous cellular tissue. Time and cold applications remove it. When the texture of the parts has been lacerated, there is effusion of blood, with more or less torpor in the part. Cooling applications, general or topical, V.S., emollients, poultices, compression, &c., are here necessary, according to circumstances. In the severest kinds of contusion, all the soft and solid parts, except the skin, are bruised, and, at times, reduced to a kind of pap. When the disorganization is to this extent, there is no hope except in amputation. A deep contusion of the soft parts has been called Sarcothlasia, and Sarcothlasma.

CONVALS'ENCE, Convalescentia, from convalescere, 'to grow well.' Exanastrophe. Recovery of health, after disease. The time which elapses between the termination of a disease, and complete restoration of strength.

CONVALLA'RIA MAIALIS, Lilium Convallium, Convallaria, Maianthemum, Lily of the Valley, May Lily, (F.) Muguet, Muguet de Mai. The recent flowers are reputed to be aromatic, cephalic, emetic, cathartic. They are not used.

CONVALLA'RIA POLYGONATUM. The systematic name of Solomon's Seal. Sigillum Salomonis, Polygonatum. The root was once used as an astringent and tonic. It is, also, a reputed cosmetic.

CONVERSION, Conversio. Change from one state into another.

CONVERSION OF DISEASES, (F.) Conversion des maladies, is the change or transformation of one disease into another.

CONVOLUTION, Convolutio, from convolvere, 'to entwine.' Episphaerion, Gyrus, (F.) Circonvolutio.

The INTESTINAL CONVOLUTIONS are the turns made by the intestines in the abdomen.

The CEREBRAL CONVOLUTIONS are the round, undulating, tortuous projections, observed at the surface of the brain. In them, Gall's organs, of course, terminate.

CONVOLVULUS BATATAS, from convolvere, 'to roll together.' C. Indicus. The Sweet Potato, Spanish Potato. This is the only esculent root of the genus Convolvulus. It is much eaten in the United States.

CONVOLVULUS CANTABRICA, Cantabrica, Lavender-leaved Bindweed. It has been considered anthelmintic and actively cathartic.

CONVOLVULUS, Heus,—c. Indicus, c. Batatas.

CONVOLVULUS JALAPA, A systematic name of the Jalap plant, properly the Ipomœa Jalapa. Jalapa'pium, Mechoaca'na nigra, Jalappa, Jalapa, Jalap Root, Gialappa, Xalappa, Bryonia Mechoachan'na nigricans, Bryonia Peruvia'na, Chelapa, Rhabar'barum Nigrum, Gelappium, (F.) Jalap, is procured from South America. Its odour is nauseous; taste sweetish and slightly pungent. It is solid, hard, heavy, brittle; fracture resinous; internally, light gray; externally, covered with a deep brown, wrinkled bark. Its operation is cathartic—the resinous part griping violently. Dose, 10gr. to ʒss. A drop or two of any essential oil may prevent it from griping. An active principle has been separated from Jalap, to which the names Jalapine and Cathartine have been given.

CONVOLVULUS MAJOR ALBUS, Convolvulus sepium—c. Maritimus, Convolvulus soldanella. CONVOLVULUS MECOACHAN, Mechoaca'na Radix, Jalappa alba, Rhabar'barum album, Mechoacœu, (F.) Rhabarbe blanche. A Mexican convolvulus, the root of which possesses aperient properties, and was once extensively used instead of jalap.

CONVOLVULUS PANDURATUS, Wild Potato, Mechameek, Wild Rhabarb, Wild Potato-Vine, Kassauder, Kassaler. In Virginia, and some other parts of the United States, the root of this plant has been much recommended in cases of gravel. It is used either in powder or decoction.

CONVOLVULUS PERENNIS, Humulus lupulus.

CONVOLVULUS PES CAPRIÆ, Bargada. A plant used in India in cataplasm, in arthritic cases.

CONVOLVULUS SCAMMONIA. The systematic name of the Scammony Plant. Scammony'nia, Scammonia Gummi-Resina, Convolvulus Syriacus, Scammonium Syriacum, Diagrydium, Dacrydium, Scammony, Mahmoudy, (F.) Scammonée d'Alip. A Syrian and Mexican plant; the concrete gummi-resinous juice of which comes to us in blackish-gray fragments, becoming whitish-yellow when touched with wet fingers. It is a drastic, hydrogogue cathartic. Dose, gr. iij to gr. xv, triturated with sugar.

CONVOLVULUS, SEA—c. Soldanella.

CONVOLVULUS SEPIUM, Convolvulus major albus. Great Bindweed, (F.) Liseron des Haies, Grand Liseron. The juice of this plant is violently purgative, and is given in dropsical affections.

CONVOLVULUS SOLDANELLA. The systematic name of the Sea Convolvulus. Brassica Maritima, Calystegia Soldanella, Sea Bindweed, Convolvulus Maritimus, Soldanella, (F.) Chou-Marin. The leaves of this plant are said to be drastic cathartic; but they are not much, if at all, used.

CONVOLVULUS SYRIACUS, Convolvulus scammonia.

CONVOLVULUS TURPETHUM, Turpethum. The systematic name of the Turbit plant, (F.) Racine de Turbit. The cortical part of the root of this species of convolvulus is brought from the East Indies. It is a cathartic, but not used.

CONVULSIBILITAS. See Subsultus tendinum.

CONVULSIF, Convulsive.

CONVULSIO HABITUALIS, Chorea—c. Indica, Tetanus—c. Raphania, Raphania—c. Soloniensis, Ergotism—c. Tonica, Tonic spasm—c. Uteri, Abortion.

CONVULSION, Spasmus, Convulsio, from convellere, 'to pull together.' Conduetio, Iteran'osus, Disten'tio nervorum, Clonic Spasm, Convulsio clon'ica, Eclampsia. This word has several acceptations. It means any violent perversion of the animal movements. The word Convulsions generally, however, signifies alternate contractions, violent and involuntary, of muscles, which habitually contract only under the influence of the will. This alternate contraction, when slight, is called Tremor; when strong and permanent, tetanus, trismus, &c. Spasms, Cramp, Risus Sardonicus, St. Vitus's Dance are convulsions.

CONVULSIO CEREA'LIS, Convulsio ab Ustilag'ine, Cereal Convulsion, (F.) Convulsion céréale, Ergotisme convulsif, Convulsion de Sologne. A singular disorder, of the convulsive kind, attended with a peculiar tingling and formication in the arms and legs. It is said to be endemic in some parts of Germany, and to arise often from the use of spoiled corn.

CONVULSION DE SOLOGNE, Convulsio cerealis.

CONVULSIONNAIRE (F.) A name given, during the last century, to individuals, who had, or affected to have, convulsions, produced by religious ideas.

CONVULSIVE, Convulsivus, Spasmodes, Agitativus, (F.) Convulsif. That which is accompanied by, or is analogous to, convulsions, as convulsive cough, convulsive disease.

CONYZA, Inula dysenterica—c. Coma aurea, Solidago Virgaurea—c. Media, Inula dysenterica.

CONYZA SQUARROSA, Brepho'tonon, Great Fleabane or Spikenard, (F.) Herbe aux Mouches. A European plant, whose strong and disagreeable odour was formerly considered to be destructive to flies, fleas, &c. Its infusion in wine was once used as an emmenagogue and antiperiostic: in vinegar as an anti-epileptic.

COOKERY, Culinary art.

COOPERTORIUM, Thyroid cartilage.

COPAIBU, Copaiba.

COOSTRUM. The middle part of the diaphragm.—Ruland.

COPAIBA. The resinous juice of the Copaifera officinalis. Family, Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Monogynia. It is the Copaifera officinalis Resina, Balsamum Copaiba, B. Brazilianse, B. de Copaiba, B. Capivi. The Balsam of Copaiba or Copaiba. (F.) Copahu, Baume de Copahu, B. du Brésil, Térébinthe de Copahu. Its odour is peculiar, but not unpleasant. Taste pungent, bitter; consistence, syrupy; colour yellowish, and transparent. It is soluble in alcohol, ether, and the expressed oils. S. g. 0.950. Its properties are stimulant and diuretic; in large doses it is purgative. It acts on the lining membrane of the urethra, and on mucous membrans, in general. It is given in gonorrhœa, gleet, leucorrhœa, &c.: in the dose of gtt x to ʒi, twice or thrice a day. Should symptoms of urticaria or diarrhœa arise, the dose is too large, and must be diminished. It can be insipiated by means of magnesia so as to be made into pills, and recently a plan has been devised for enveloping it in gelatine, so that its taste is entirely concealed. See Capsules gelatinosæ.

COPAIFERA OFFICINALIS. See Copaiba.

COPAL or COPALE, Resina Copal. The resin, which flows, spontaneously, from the Elæocar'pus Copaliferu, a Guinea plant. It is a stimulant, like all the resins; and, dissolved in rectified spirit of wine, has been used in cases of spongy gums and looseness of the teeth; but it is now only employed in varnishes.

COPE, Cut.

COPHONIA, Acouphonia.

COPHO'SIS, Sur'ditas, Epicopho'sis, Paracu'sis, Dysæsthesia audit'ria, from κοφος, 'deaf.' (F.) Surditè. Diminution or loss of hearing. Cullen uses the word synonymously with Dyscæcia, and Pinel with Paracu'sia or Paracu'vè. According to Sauvages, Cophosis differs from both: from Dyscæcia, because, in it the sonorous rays cannot reach the labyrinth; and from Paracusia, which consists in a confused state of hearing.

Cophosis seems, usually, to be synonymous with deafness, (q. v.)—Paracu'sis Sur'ditas.

COPOS, κοπος, Lassitudo, Fatigatio, Lassitudo, Fatigue. A state of the body, in which the greater part of the animal functions are exerted with less promptitude and vigour than common.

The ancients admitted three species: 1. That arising from plethora, Lassitudo tensiva, Tonodes, τονωδης, 2. From plethora and increased heat combined, Lassitudo phlegmonosa, æstuosa, φλεγμονωδης, Phlegmonodes, and, 3. Owing to a morbid condition of the humours, Lassitudo ulcero'sa. 'ελκωδης, Helco'des.

COPPER, Cuprum—c. Ammoniated, Cuprum ammoniatum—c. Subacetate of, Cupri subacetatas—c. Sulphate of, Cupri sulphas—c. Ammoniacal sulphate of, Cuprum ammoniatum.

COPPERAS, Ferri sulphas—c. White, Zinci sulphas.

COPRACRATIA, Scoracrasia.

COPRAGO'GUM, from κοπρος, 'fæces,' and αγω, 'I bring away.' Stercus c'primis viis educens. A cathartic. The name of a laxative electuary, mentioned by Ruland.

COPREM'ETOS, Coproem'ctos, from κοπρος, 'excrement,' and εμεω, 'I vomit.' One who vomits fæces.—Hippocr.

COPROCRIT'ICUS, Coprocrit'icus, from κοπρος, 'excrement,' and κρινω, 'I separate.' A mild cathartic, (q. v.)—an ecoprotic.

COPROEMETOS, Copremetos.

COPROPHORIA, Catharsis.

COPRORRHŒA, Diarrhœa.

COPROS, Excrement.

COPROSCLERO'SIS, from κοπρος, 'excrement,' and σκληρωω, 'I harden.' Induration of fecal matters.

COPROSTASIS, Constipation.

COPTE or COPTON, from κοπτω, 'I beat or pound.' A sort of cake, composed of vegetable substances, which the ancients administered internally, and applied to the epigastric region in the form of cataplasm.

COPTIS, Gold Thread, Coptis Trifolia, Nigella. The root of this is much used in Massachusetts, in aphthous and other ulcerations of the mouth, as a local application. It is a pure bitter, and can be used, wherever such is indicated.

COPTIS TECTA, Mishme Tecta, (Upper Assam) Honglane (Chinese.) The root of this plant is considered to be a powerful tonic and stomachic.

COPTON, Copte.

COPULA, Ligament—c. Carnalis, Coition.

COPULATION, Coition.

COQ, Phasianus Gallus.

COQUE DU LEVANT, see Menispermum cocculus—c. d'Eufr, see Ovum—c. Levant, see Menispermum cocculus.

COQUELICOT, Papaver rhœas.

COQUELOURDE, Anemone pulsatilla.

COQUELUCHE, Influenza, Pertussis.

COQUERET, Physalis.

COQUETTE, Influenza.

COQUILLE, Cochlea—c. d'Eufr. See Ovum.

COQUENTIA MEDICAMENTA, from coquere, 'to digest.' Medicines, which were formerly believed to be proper for favouring the coction or digestion of food.

COR, A corn. Also, Heart, (q. v.)

COR'ACO-BRA'CHIAL, Cor'aco-brachia'lis.

Belonging both to the coracoid process and arm.

The CORACO-BRACHIALIS (Muscle,) Coracohumeral—(Ch.) Perforatus CASSE'RII, Perforatus, Coraco-brachia'us, is situate at the inner and upper part of the arm. It arises from the coracoid process of the scapula, and is inserted at the middle part of the inner side of the humerus. It carries the arm forwards and inwards, raising the humerus a little. It can, also, by acting inversely, depress the shoulder.

CORACO CLAVIC'ULAR, Coraco-clavicula'ris. Belonging to the coracoid process and clavicle.

The CORACO-CLAVICULAR LIGAMENT, called, also, Omo-clavicular, serves to unite the clavicle to the coracoid process. It is very irregular, and formed of two fasciculi, which the greater part of anatomists have described as particular ligaments, under the names Conoid and Trapezoid.

CORACO-HUMERALIS, Coraco-brachialis—c. Hyoideus, Omo-hyoideus—c. Radialis, Biceps flexor cubiti.

COR'ACOID, Coracoïdeus, Coracoïdes, C. Processus, Cornicula'ris Processus, Rost'rs-beak-like Process, Processus anchora'lis, rostriformis, ancyroides, from κοραξ, 'a crow,' and ειδος, 'resemblance.' (F.) Coracoïde. Resembling the beak of a crow. A name given by Galen, (and still retained,) to the short, thick process, situate at the anterior part of the upper margin of the scapula; and which has some resemblance to the beak of a crow. This process gives attachment to the Coraco-clavicular and Coraco-acromial ligaments, and to the Coraco-brachia'lis, Pectora'lis minor, and Biceps muscles.

The CORACOID LIGAMENT, Ligamentum coracoïdeum, (F.) L. Coracoïdien. This name is given to the small fibrous fasciculus, which converts the notch, at the superior margin of the scapula, into a foramen.

CORAIL, Coral—c. des Jardins, Capsicum annum.

CORAL, Coralium, Corallus, Arbor Maris, Azur, Bolosis, from κορειω, 'I adorn,' and 'αις,' 'the sea.' (F.) Corail. One of the most beautiful productions of the deep. It is fixed to submarine rocks, in the form of a shrub; and is of a bright red colour. It is the habitation of a multitude of animals, of the Zoophyta order, and is formed of a calcareous substance, secreted by these animals themselves. It is in very hard, concentric layers; covered, externally, by a species of porous bark, full of cellules, each of which contains one of these animals. Linnæus calls the red coral, Isis nobilis, and M. de Lamarck, Corallium rubrum. It is much fished for, on the coasts of Barbary and Sicily. Coral was formerly esteemed tonic, absorbent, astringent, &c., but analysis has shown, that it contains only carbonate of lime and a little gelatine.—Dioscorides, Pliny, Orbasius, the Geoponica, &c. The Corallium album is a hard, white, calcareous, brittle substance, the nidus of the Madrep'ora oculata. It has been exhibited as an absorbent.

CORALLINA. Diminutive of Corallium; Muscus marit'imus, Corallina officinal'is, Brion, Corallina alba, Sea Cor'alline, White Worm-weed. The production of an animal, which belongs to the genus Pol'ypi, and which is found in all the seas of Europe;—particularly in the Mediterranean. It has the appearance of a plant, is homogeneous, an inch or two in height, of a white, reddish, or greenish colour, salt taste, and marine smell. It contains gelatine, albumen, muriate of soda, phosphate, carbonate and sulphate of lime, carbonate of magnesia, silica, oxide of iron, and a colouring principle. It was once much used as a vermifuge: but is not now employed. Dose, ʒss to ʒj in powder.

CORALLINA CORSICA'NA, Helmintho-corton, Elmintho-corton, Muscus helmintho-cortos, Melitho-corton, Muscus coralli'nus, M. Mari'nus, Conferva Helmintho-cortos, Coralli'na rubra, Coralli'na melito-corton, Lemitho-corton, Fucus Helmintho-corton, Corsican Wormweed. (F.) Coralline de Corse, Mousse de Corse. It is a mixture of several marine plants and zoophytes, of the fucus, ceramium, ulva, coralline, conferva, &c., and has gained great reputation, for destroying all kinds of intestinal worms, when given in the form of strong decoction. The Geneva Pharmacopœia directs an officinal syrup—the Syrop de Coralline.

CORALLINE DE CORSE, Corallina Corsicana.

CORALLOIDES FUNGUS, Clavaria Coralloides.

CORALWORT, Clavaria coralloides.

CORD, Funis, Funiculus, Chanos, Chad'nion, χοινος, χοιριον; from the Latin Chorda which is itself derived from χοδη, 'intestine'; and, afterwards, was applied to musical cords or strings, which are made of the intestines of animals. See Chorda.

CORD, UMBILICAL, Funiculus umbilicalis.

CORDS, VOCAL. Cords of Ferrein, Chorda vocal'es, Ch. Ferré'ni. A name, given to the ligaments of the glottis, which Ferrein compared to stretched cords, and to which he attributed the production of voice. See Thyreocarytenoid Ligament.

CORDA, Chorda—c. Hippocratis, Achillis tendo—c. Magna, Achillis tendo.

CORDE DU TAMBOUR, Chorda Tympani—c. du Tympan, Chorda Tympani.

CORDEE, Chordee.

CORDIA MYXA, Sebestina—c. Smooth-leaved, Sebestina.

CORDIAL, Cordial'is, Cardiacus, from cor,

'the heart.' Tonic or excitant medicines, which were judged proper for exciting the heart.

CORDIAL, NERVOUS, BRODUM'S, see Tinctura gentianæ composita—c. Sir Walter Raleigh's, Confectio aromatica—c. Warner's, see Tinctura rhei composita.

CORDINE'MA, from καρα, 'the head,' and δινειν, 'I move about.' Headache, accompanied with vertigo. See Carebaria.

CORDIS EMUNCTORIUM, Axilla.

CORDOLIUM, Cardialgia.

CORDON, (F.) Funiculus, diminutive of funis, 'a cord.' A term applied to many parts, which resemble a small cord.

CORDON NERVEUX; Ramus nervosus. A principal division of a nerve or the nervous trunk itself.

CORDON OMBILICALE, Funiculus umbilicalis—c. Spermatique, Spermatic chord—c. testiculairé, Spermatie chord.

CORDONS SUS-PUBIENS, Round ligaments of the uterus—c. Vasculaires, Round ligaments of the uterus.

CORE, Pupil. See Furnculus.

CORECTOMIA, Coretomia.

COREDIALYSIS, Coretomia.

COREMATA, from κορειν, 'I cleanse.' Remedies, proper for cleansing the skin.—Paulus of Ægina.

COREON'CION, Coron'cion, from κορη, 'the pupil,' and ογκειν, 'a hook.' An instrument, used for the formation of artificial pupil by Langenbeck. It is hooked at its extremity. A double hooked forceps, used by Graefe, is similarly named.

CORETODIALYSIS, Coretomia.

CORETO'MIA, from κορη, 'the pupil,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' Coroto'mia, Coretoto'mia, Iridoto'mia, Corecto'mia, Coretonecto'mia, Iridecto'mia, Coreodial'ysis, Corodial'ysis, Coretodial'ysis, Iridodial'ysis. Various operations for the formation of artificial pupil are so termed. The last three signify the separation or tearing asunder of the iris from the ciliary ligament; the three preceding the incision of the iris, with loss of substance; and the remainder signify a simple incision of the iris, without loss of substance.

COREFONECTOMIA, Coretomia.

CORETOTOMIA, Coretomia.

CORIAN'DER, Coriandrum sativum.

CORIAN'DRUM SATIVUM, Corian'der, Corian'on, (F.) Coriandre. Family, Umbellifera. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The systematic name of the Corian'drum of the pharmacopœias. Coria'on. The seeds of the coriander have an aromatic odour, and grateful, pungent taste. They are carminative; but are chiefly used to cover the taste of other medicines.

CORIANNON, Coriandrum sativum.

CORIGEEEN, Fucus crispus.

CORION, Corium, Hypericum perforatum.

CORIS, Cimex—c. Monspeliensis, Symphytum Petrum.

CORIUM, Corion (F.) Cuir. The skin of several animals is so called, especially when tanned. The cutis vera (q. v.), or the thickest part of the human skin.

CORIUM PHLOGISTICUM, Crusta pleuretica, C. inflammatoria, C. phlogistica, Inflammatory Crust or Buf. (F.) Cowanne, C. Pleurétique,

C. inflammatoire. The grayish crust or buff, varying in thickness, observed on blood drawn from a vein during the existence of violent inflammation, and during pregnancy. It is particularly manifest in pleurisy, and hence one of its names. The reason of it is by no means easy of appreciation. When the blood presents this appearance, it is said to be buffy.

CORK, Suber.

CORMIER, Sorbus domestica.

CORN, (G) Korn. In England, this word means the Cereal, or those seeds, which grow in ears, not in pods. In the United States, Corn always means Indian Corn. Its English sense corresponds to the French Blé, or Bled.

CORN, Zea mays—c. Guinea, Panicum Italicum—c. Indian, Zea mays—c. Wild, Matricaria chamomilla—c. Flag, Gladiolus vulgaris—c. Flower, Centaurea cyanus—c. Salad, Valeriana dentata.

CORN, Clavus, Clavus Pedis, Eophyma, Clavus, Gemur'sa, (F.) Cor, Ognon. A small, hard, corneous tumour, which forms upon the foot, generally on the toes; and which is commonly produced on the most projecting parts, by the pressure of too tight shoes. A part of the corn is raised above the skin, and forms a round tumour, like the head of a nail: the other portion, which serves as its base, is buried more or less deeply in the integuments, and occasionally extends as far as the tendons and periosteum. Corns may, sometimes, be removed, by immersing the feet in warm water, but commonly they return. They can, likewise, be destroyed by the knife or caustics; but these operations are not as simple as they seem. In the way of palliation,—they must be constantly pared; and any soft plaster, spread upon linen or leather, may be applied with a hole in the centre, to receive the corn; and layer after layer of plaster be added, until they attain the level of the corn.—for the purpose of preventing pressure. When very irritable, the lunar caustic, merely rubbed over the surface, will generally diminish irritability in a surprising manner, and in one not easy of explanation.

CORNALINE, Cornelian.

CORNE, Cornu—c. d'Ammon, Cornu ammonis—c. de Béliet, Cornu ammonis—c. de Cerf, Cervus, Cornu cervi, Cochlearia coronopus—c. de Chamois, Cornu rupicapra—c. de la Peau, Cornu.

CORNÉ, Corneous.

CORNEA, Cornea transpa'rens, C. pellu'cida, C. lucida, Ceras, Sclerot'iea cerato'ides, Cerato'ides, Membra'na cornea. The transparent cornea. (F.) Cornée. One of the coats of the eye, so called because it has some resemblance to horn. It is termed transparent, to distinguish it from the opaque—Cornea opa'ca or Sclerotie. It is convex, anteriorly; concave, posteriorly; forming nearly one-fifth of the anterior part of the eye, and representing a segment of a sphere about seven lines and a half, or in. 0.625 in diameter. It seems to be constituted of laminae in superposition, but of the precise number anatomists are not agreed.

CORNEA, OPAKE, Caligo—c. Opaca, Sclerotic.

CORNÉE, Cornea.

CORNEÏTIS, Cerati'tis, from Cornea, and itis, 'inflammation.' Inflammation of the cornea.

CORNELIAN, Carnelian, Chalcedo'nium, Carniolus, Lapis Carneolus, Cornelus, Corneolus, Lapis Sardius. (F.) Cornaline. A precious, semi-transparent stone, found in Sardinia. The ancients ascribed to it a number of absurd properties.

CORNELUS, Cornelian.

CORNEOLUS, Cornelian.

COR'NEOUS, Corneus, (F.) Gorné. Having the nature or appearance of horn.

The CORNEOUS TISSUE is that, which forms the nails. The corneous membrane is the cornea.

CORNES DE LIMACON, (F.) Snail's Horns. A name given, by Anel, to the lachrymal puncta and ducts.

CORNES DE LA MATRICE, Cornua uteri—c. de la Peau, Horny excrescences.

CORNESTA, Retort.

CORNET ACOUSTIQUE, Ear-trumpet—c. Moyen, Turbinated bone, middle—c. de Morgagni, Turbinated bone, superior.

CORNETS DE BERTIN, Sphenoidal cornua—c. Sphénoïdaux, Sphenoidal cornua.

CORNICHON. See Cucumis sativus.

CORNIC'ULA. A species of cupping instrument, shaped like a trumpet, having a hole at the top for sucking the air out, to diminish the pressure in its interior.—Sculptetus, Hildanus.

CORNICULA LARYNGIS, Capit'ula Santorini, Supra-arytenoid Cartilages, Capit'ula Cartilag'inis arytenoidæ. A small, very movable, cartilaginous tubercle, found on the arytenoid cartilages. (q. v.)

CORNICULARIS PROCESSUS, Coracoid process.

CORNIER, Cornus Florida.

CORNOUILLER, Cornus Florida—c. à feuilles arrondies, Cornus circinata—c. à grandes fleurs, Cornus Florida—c. Soyeux, Cornus sericea.

CORNU, Ceras, κερας, Corn. (F.) Corne. A conical, hard, epidermeous projection, which grows on the heads of certain animals, serving them as a weapon of offence and defence. Anatomists have given this name to parts of the human body, which have nearly the same shape as the horns of animals.

CORNU. A horny excrescence. A Corneous Wart, which occasionally forms on the skin, and requires the use of the knife. (F.) Corne de la Peau. Also, Cornu Cervi, (q. v.) See Cervus. Also, a Retort. (q. v.)

CORNU ACUSTICUM, Ear-trumpet.

CORNU ANTERIUS VENTRICULI LATERALIS; Anterior Cornu of the Lateral Ventricle. The portion of the lateral ventricle of the brain, which is lodged in the middle of the lobe, and forms the commencement of that cavity.

CORNU AMMON'IS, Cornu Arietis, Hippo-cant'pus major, Protuberant'ia cylind'rica, Vermis Bombyc'inus, Processus cer'ebri later'al'is. (F.) Corne d'Ammon, Corne de Béliet, Grande Hippocampe, Pied de cheval marin, Protubérance cylindroïde (Ch.), Bourrelet roulé. A broad, considerable eminence, curved on itself, and situate at the posterior part of the lateral ventricle. Its surface presents two or three tubercles separated from each other by shallow grooves.

The Accessorius Pedis Hippocampi, (F.) Accessoire du pied d'hippocampe, is a prominence, usually formed by the base of the inferior cornu of the lateral ventricle of the brain. It is merely a fold of the hemisphere, and was by Malacarne called Cuissart ou Armure des Jambes.

CORNU CERVI, Cornu, Hartshorn, Cornu Cervinum, Cervi Elaphi Cornu. (F.) Corne de cerf. The horns of various species of the stag. They contain about 27 per cent. of gelatine. The shavings, Raspaturæ seu Rasuræ Cornu Cervi, C. C. raspatum, boiled in water, have, consequently, been used as emollient and nutritive.

When burnt, they constitute the Cornu cervi calcinatum or Cornu ustum, Phosphas Calcis, Calcaria phosphorica, (F.) Corne de cerf calcinée, which consists of 57.5 per cent. of phosphate of lime. It has been used as an antacid, but is wholly inert, as its composition would indicate. It contains only 1 per cent. of carbonate of lime.

Hartshorn was once supposed to possess a leucardic power.—J. Vesti.

CORNU CERVINUM, Cervus, Plantago coronopus—c. Ethmoidal, Turbinate bone, middle.

CORNU DESCENDENS VENTRICULI LATERALIS, Distal Cav'ity, Descending or inferior cornu of the lateral ventricle. The termination of the lateral ventricle in the middle lobe of the brain, behind the Fissure of SYLVIUS.

CORNU, MIDDLE, Turbinate bone, middle.

CORNU RUPICAPRÆ, (F.) Corne de Chamois. The horn of the Chamois. It has the same properties as the Cornu Cervi.

CORNUA, Turbinate bones.

CORNUA CARTILAGINIS THYROIDÆ. Eminences on the thyroid cartilage, distinguished into great or superior;—which are articulated with the great cornu of the os hyoides;—and into small or inferior, united with the cricoid cartilage.

CORNUA COCCYGEA, Cornua of the Coccyx. Two small, tubercular eminences at the base of the coccyx, which are articulated with those of the sacrum.

CORNUA CUTANEA, Horny excrescences.

CORNUA HYOIDEI OSSIS, Cornua of the Hyoid Bone. Four fragments of the os hyoides, situate above the body of the bone, and distinguished into the small or superior, and the great or lateral.

CORNUA LACHRYMALIA, Lachrymal ducts—c. Limacum, Lachrymal ducts.

CORNUA UTERI, Cornua of the Uterus, Cerææ, νεφραι, Plectanæ, (F.) Cornes de la Matrice. The angles of the uterus, where the Fallopian tubes arise. Sometimes applied to the Fallopian tubes themselves.

CORNUA POSTERIOR VENTRICULI LATERALIS, Posterior Cornu of the Lateral Ventricle. The triangular prolongation of the lateral ventricle of the brain into the substance of the occipital lobe.

CORNUA SACRALIA, Cornua of the Sacrum. Two tubercles, situate at the posterior and inferior surface of the sacrum, which are sometimes united.

CORNUE, Retort.

CORNUMUSA, Retort.

CORNUS FLORIDA, Dogwood, Borwood.

(New England.) (F.) Cornouiller, Cornier, C. à grandes fleurs. The bark of this beautiful tree, which grows every where in the United States, has been long employed as a substitute for the cinchona. Dose, from ʒss to ʒj. Its active principle has been separated from it, and received the name of Cornine.

CORNUS MAS ODORATA, Laurus sassafras—c. Sanguinea, Sebestina.

CORNUS SERICEA, Swamp Dogwood, Red Willow, Rose Willow, (F.) Cornouiller soyeux. The bark, it is said, has been found little inferior to the Cinchona Pallida in intermittents.—Barton.

CORNUS CIRCINATA, Round-leaved Dogwood, (F.) Cornouiller à feuilles arrondies. The bark of this variety has been used for similar purposes.

CORNUTA, Retort.

CORODIALYSIS, Coretomia.

CORONA, Crown—c. Dentis, Crown of a tooth—c. Glandis, Crown of the glands—c. Posterior ulnæ, Olecranon—c. Regia, Trifolium melilotus—c. Ulnæ, Olecranon—c. Veneris, Crown of Venus.

CORONÆ CILIARIS MEMBRANULA, Ciliaris (zonula)—c. Palpebrarum. See Tarsus.

CORONAL, Coronalis, Corona'rius. Relating to the crown; from corona, 'a crown.' A name formerly given to the frontal bone, because on it partly reposes the crown of kings, &c.

The CORONAL SUTURE, Suturæ coronalis, S. Fronto-parietalis, Puppis Sutura, S. Arcu'lis. The suture of the head, which extends from one temporal bone to the other, over the crown of the head, and unites the parietal bones with the frontal. The SUTURE CORONALE, of the French anatomists, is the suture which unites the two halves of the os frontis at the early period of life. It is a prolongation of the sagittal.

CORONALE, MINERAL WATERS OF. These waters are found near Lucea, in Italy. They received their name from an erroneous notion, that they are particularly adapted for curing diseases of the os frontis. Their temperature is 95° Fahrenheit. They contain free carbonic acid, sulphates of lime and magnesia, muriates of soda and magnesia, &c., and some iron.

CORONARIUS, Coronal.

CORONARY, Corona'rius, (F.) Coronaire, from cor'na, 'a crown.' Resembling a crown.

The ARTERIA CORONARIA VENTRICULI, A. Gastrica superior, (F.) Artère coronaire stomachique, A. Stomogastrique (Ch.), is one of the branches of the celiac, which passes towards the superior orifice of the stomach, extends along its lesser curvature, and ends by anastomosing with the pyloric branch of the hepatic. This artery furnishes branches to the inferior part of the œsophagus, the cardiac orifice, the great cul-de-sac, the middle part of the stomach, the lesser omentum, and anastomoses with the other arteries of those organs.

The VENA CORONARIA VENTRICULI accompanies the artery and terminates in the vena porta. Sömmering, and some other anatomists, call all the four arteries of the stomach Coronarie stomachicæ.

The CORONARY LIGAMENT of the liver is a reflection of the peritoneum, which surrounds the posterior margin of the liver. The same term is likewise applied to ligaments, which unite the radius and ulna.

CORONCION, Coreoncion.

CORONĒ, from κορωνή, 'a crow.' The coronoid process of the lower jaw.

CORONOID, Coronoides, from κορωνή, 'a crow,' and εἶδος, 'shape,' 'resemblance.' Resembling the beak of a crow. This name has been given to two processes. One, situate at the anterior and superior part of the ramus of the os maxillare inferius, and affording attachment to the temporal muscle: the other, called, also, sharp process, situate at the superior part of the ulna, anterior to the great sigmoid fossa, and forming a part of the lunge of the elbow-joint.

CORONOPodium, Plantago coronopus.

CORONOPUS, Coelilearia coronopus—C.

Ruellii, Coelilearia coronopus.

COROTOMIA, Coretomia.

CORPORA ALBICANTIA, Mamillary tubercles—C. Arantii, Noduli Arantii, Tubercula A.—C. Bigemina, Quadrigenina corpora—C. Candicantia, Albicantia corpora, Mamillary tubercles—C. Fibrosa, Corps fibreux.

CORPORA FIMBRIATA, Tenia Hippocampi. Fimbriated or fringed bodies. (F.) Corps frangés, C. Bordés, Bandelettes des Cornes d'Ammon, Bandelette de l'Hippocampe. The thin, flattened, and very delicate band, situate along the concave edge of the cornu ammonis, and which is a continuation of the posterior crura of the fornix.

CORPORA GENICULATA, (F.) Corps geniculés. Two tubercles, situate at the lower and outer part of the optic thalami, which furnish several filaments to the optic nerves.

CORPORA GLOBOSA CERVICIS UTERI, Nabothi glandulae—C. Nerveo-Spongiosa penis, Corpora cavernosa—C. Nervosa, Corpora cavernosa.

CORPORA OLIVARIA, C. ovata, Eminenciae Olivares, (Eminences latérales Ch.) Oblong, whitish eminences, situate at the occipital surface of the medulla oblongata, exterior to the corpora pyramidalia.

CORPORA OVATA, Corpora olivaria.

CORPORA PYRAMIDALIA, Eminenciae pyramidalis, (F.) Corps pyramidaux, Pyramides antérieures (Gall.), Eminences pyramidales (Ch.) Two small medullary eminences, placed alongside each other, at the occipital surface of the medulla oblongata, between the corpora olivaria.

These bodies have also been called Corpora Pyramidalia antica, to distinguish them from the C. olivaria, which have been called Corpora Pyramidalia lateralia.

CORPORA PYRAMIDALIA POSTERIORA, Corpora restiformia—C. Quadrigenina, Q. corpora.

CORPORA RESTIFORMIA, Crura medullae oblongatae, Peduncululi medullae oblongatae, Corpora pyramidalia posteriora: Peduncles of the medulla oblongata. (F.) Corps restiformes, Cuissees postérieures, Pyramides postérieures du cerrelet, Racines, Bras ou Jambes du cerrelet—Petites branches de la moëlle allongée, Pédoncles du cerrelet. Two medullary projections, oblong, and of a whitish appearance, which proceed from each side of the upper extremity of the medulla oblongata, and contribute to the formation of the cerebellum.

CORPORA STRIATA, Grand ganglion supérieur du cerveau (Gall.) Couches des nerfs ethmoïdaux, Corps cannelés, Eminenciae Lenticulares, (Ch.) Colliculi Nervi Ethmoïdalis, Apices Crurum medullae oblongatae, (F.) Corps striés. Pyrrum eminences, of a slightly brownish-gray colour, which form part of the floor of the lateral ventricles of the brain. When cut, a mixture of gray and white substance is seen, arranged alternately, to which they owe their name. All the white bands are continuous with the primary fasciculi of the corpora olivaria. Willis considered the soul resided here.

CORPORA STRIATA SUPERNA POSTERIORA, Thalami nervorum optiocrum.

CORPS, Body—C. Bordés, Corpora fimbriata—C. Calloux, Corpus callosum—C. Cannelés, Corpora striata—C. Cæcæneux, Corpora cavernosa—C. Cendré, Corpus dentatum—C. Dentelé, Corpus dentatum—C. Étranger, Extraneous body—C. Festonné, Corpus dentatum.

CORPS FIBREUX, Corpora fibrosa. Bayle has given this name to adventitious, fibrous productions, of a round form,—more or less adherent, and sometimes having a pedicle,—which form in certain parts of the body, particularly in the substance, of the uterus, CORPS FRANGES, Corpora fimbriata—C. Genuculés, Corpora geniculata—C. Hyaloïde, Corpus vitreum—C. d'Hygnore ou d'Highmore, Corpus Highmori—C. Jaune, Corpus luteum—C. Muqueux, Corpus mucosum—C. Organisés; Organized bodies—C. Pampiniforme, Corpus pampiniforme—C. Pyramidale, Corpora pyramidalia—C. Restiformes, Corpora restiformia—C. Rhomboïde, Corpus dentatum—C. Striés, Corpora striata—C. Thyroïde, Thyroid gland—C. Variciforme, Epididymis—C. Variqueux, Corpus pampiniforme, Epididymis—C. Vitré, Corpus vitreum.

CORPULENTIA, Corpulence, from corpus, 'the body,' and lentus, 'thick,' is synonymous with Obesity and Polysarcia, (q. v.)

CORPULENTIA CARNOSA, Torositas.

CORPUS, Soma, σωμα. A Body. (q. v.) Any object, which strikes one or more of our senses. Gases, liquids, metals, vegetables, animals, are so many bodies. Natural bodies have been divided into animal, vegetable, and mineral; or into inorganic, including the mineral kingdom;—and organized, including the animal and vegetable.

The chief differences between organized and inorganic bodies consists in the former having an origin by generation, growth by nutrition, and termination by death:—the latter, a fortuitous origin, external growth, and a termination by chemical or mechanical force.

Many parts of the frame have, also, been distinguished by this name, as Corpus Callosum, C. Mucosum, &c.—See Body.

CORPUS ADENIFORME, Prostate—C. Adenoides, Prostate—C. Adiposum, Pinguedo—C. Alienum, Extraneous—C. Annulare, Pons varolii.

CORPUS CALLOSUM, Commissura Magna cerebri, (F.) Corps calleux, Voûte médullaire, Plafond des ventricles du cerveau, Mésolobe (Ch.) Trabes medullaris, Trabecula. A white, me-dullary band, perceived on separating the two hemispheres of the brain, which it connects with each other. La Peyronie regarded it as the seat of the soul.

CORPUS CILIARE, Corpus dentatum—c. Cinerium, Corpus dentatum—c. Conoides, Pineal gland—c. Crystalloides, Crystalline.

CORPUS DENTATUM vel DENTICULATUM, C. Ciliatè, (F.) Corps dentelé, Corps festonné. A central, oval nucleus, of ciceritious substance, met with in the cerebellum; the circumference of which exhibits a number of indentations, surrounded by medullary substance.—Vicq d'Azyr. It is seen by dividing the cerebellum vertically into two equal parts.—Vieussens gave to the same body the name Corps cendré ou Rhombôide, Corpus Cinerium, C. Rhomboidium, Ganglion du cercelet, Noyau central des Pédoncules du cercelet.

CORPUS DISCOIDES, Crystalline—c. Externum, Extraneous body—c. Extraneum, Extraneous body—c. Glandiforme, Prostate—c. Glandosum, Prostate—c. Glandulosum, Prostate.

CORPUS GLANDULOSUM MULIERUM, Glandula Prostata Mulierum. A vascular, spongy eminence, which surrounds the orifice of the urethra, and projects at its under part.

CORPUS HIGMORII, C. Higmoria'num, Mucus semina'rius, (F.) Corps d'Hygmore ou d'Highmore, Sinus des vaisseaux séminifères, (Ch.) An oblong eminence, along the superior edge of the testicle, which seems formed of a reflection of the tunica albuginea, through which the principal trunks of the seminiferous vessels pass before they reach the epididymis.

CORPUS LUTEUM, (F.) Corps jaune. A small yellowish body, perceived in the ovarium, owing to the rupture of one of the vesicles. It was, for a long time, considered an evidence of previous impregnation: but it is now maintained, that Corpora lutea may be met with in unquestionable virgins.

CORPUS MUCOSUM, C. reticulatè, Retè mucosum, Mucus Malpig'hii, Retè Malpig'hii, Mucous web, (F.) Corps muqueux. The second layer of the skin has been so called. It is situate between the cutis vera and cuticle, and gives colour to the body. In the white varieties of our species it is colourless; in the Negro, black.

CORPUS OKENSE, Corpus Wolfianum.

CORPUS PAMPINIFORME, C. varicosum, from pamp'pinus, 'a tendril.' Corpus pyramidatè, Hedera'ceus plexus, (F.) Corps pampiniforme, C. variqueux. The plexus or retiform arrangement of the spermatic arteries and veins, in the cavity of the abdomen, anterior to the psoas muscle.

CORPUS PAPILLARE. The nervous and vascular papillæ, situate beneath the epidermis, called by Breschet Neurothelic apparatus.

CORPUS PHACOIDES, Crystalline—c. Pituitare, Pituitary gland—c. Psalloides, Lyra—c. Pyramidale, Corpus pampiniforme—c. Reticulare, Corpus mucosum—c. Rhomboidium, Corpus dentatum—c. Thymianum, Thymus—c. Thymicum, Thymus—c. Thyreoidium, Thyroid gland—c. Turbinatum, Pineal gland—c. Varicosum, Corpus pampiniforme, Spermatic chord—c. Varicosum testis, Epididymis.

CORPUS SPONGIOSUM URETHRÆ, Substantia

spongi'osa ure'thræ. This substance arises before the prostate gland, surrounds the urethra, and forms the bulb. It then proceeds to the end of the corpora cavernosa, and terminates in the glans penis, which it forms.

CORPUS VITREUM, Humor Vitreus, H. hyaloides, Glaci'lis humor, Vitreous humor. (F.) Corps vitré, C. hyaloïde, Humeur hyaloïde. The transparent mass of a gelatinous consistence, which fills the eye, behind the crystalline. It is contained in cells, formed by the tunica hyaloïdea.

CORPUS WOLFFIIANUM, Corpus Okense. At a very early period of fœtal formation, bodies are perceptible, which were first described, as existing in the fowl, by Wolff, and in the mammalia, by Oken. According to Müller, they disappear in man very early, so that but slight remains of them are perceptible after the 9th or 10th week of pregnancy. They cover the region of the kidneys and renal capsules, which are formed afterwards; and they are presumed to be the organs of urinary secretion during the first periods of fœtal existence.

CORPUSCULE, GLANDIFORM, Acinus. CORPUSCULA ARANTII, Tubercula A.—c. Glandularum similia intestinorum, Peyer's glandulæ—c. Globosa cervicis uteri, Nabothi glandulæ.

CORPUSCULUM ARANTII, see Sigmoid valves—c. Sesamoideum, see Sigmoid valves.

CORRAGO, Borago-officinalis.

CORRĒ, CORSĒ, ζορρη, ζορρη, from ζεῖρον, 'I shave.' (?) The temples or the part of the jaws, which it is usual to shave.—Gorræus.

CORRECTIF, Corrigent.

CORRECTION, Correctio, from corrigerè, 'to correct.' The act of correcting medicines; that is, of diminishing their energy or obviating unpleasant effects, by mixing them with substances which mitigate their operation.

CORRECTORIÛS, Corrigens.

CORRIGENT MOSS, Fucus crispus.

CORRIGENT, Cor'rigens, Correcto'rius, Casti'gans, Infrin'gens, Emen'dans; same etymon. (F.) Correctif. That which corrects. A corrigent, in a pharmaceutical formula, is a substance added to a medicine to mollify or modify its action. In the following formula, the aloe, if not corrected, might induce tormina. The Oleum Mentha is added as a corrigent.

|   |                                      |     |
|---|--------------------------------------|-----|
| ℞ | Aloes,                        | ʒj  |
|   | Olei Mentha,                  | gʒv |
|   | Syrup. q. s. ut fiant Pilule, | xvj |

CORRI'GIA. A leathern strap. By extension, the term has been applied to the tendons and ligaments.

CORROBORANT, Corrob'orans, Rob'orans, Bracing, from corrobore'are, 'to strengthen.' (F.) Corroborant, Corroboratif, Fortifiant. Any substance, which strengthens, and gives tone. Wine, e. g., is a corroborant. See Tonic.

CORROBORANTIA, Tonics.

CORROBORATIF, Corroborant.

CORRODANT, Corrosive.

CORRODENS, Corrosive.

CORROSIF, Corrosive.

CORRO'SION, Corro'sio, Diabro'sis, Anabro'tia

sis, Ero'sio. The action or effect of corrosive substances.

CORROSIVE, Corrodens, Diabroticus, Corrosivus, from corrodere, 'to eat away'; same etymon. (F.) Corrosif, Corrodant. Corrosives are substances, which, when placed in contact with living parts, gradually disorganize them. Caustic alkalies, Mineral acids, Corrosive sublimate, are corrosives. They act either directly, by chymically destroying the part, or indirectly, by causing inflammation and gangrene.

CORRUGATION, Corrugatio. Wrinkling, Frowning. (F.) Frontemur; the contraction of the Corrugatores Supercilii muscles. Corrugation of the skin is often owing to the application of styptic medicines: it is rendered by them unequal and rugous.

CORRUGATOR COITERII, Corrugator supercilii.

CORRUGATOR SUPERCILII, from corrugare, 'to wrinkle,' same etymon. Musculus supercilii, Superciliaris, Musculus frontalis verus seu Corrugator Coiterii;—Cutanéo-sourcilier, Muscle Sourcilier ou Sarcilier, M. Fronto-Sourcilier. A muscle, situate in the eyebrows. It is attached, by its inner extremity, to the superciliary ridge, and is confounded, externally, with the occipito-frontalis and orbicularis palpebrarum. It carries the eyebrow inwards, and wrinkles the skin of the forehead.

CORRUPTION, Corruptio, Phthora, Diaphthora. Act of corrupting. State of being corrupted. Reaction of the particles of a body upon each other. It is probable, that something like corruption may take place even in the living body.

CORSE, Corre.

CORSET, Stethodesmium, Tu'nica Thora'cis, Thorax. An article of dress, which closely embraces the trunk, and is much used by females in civilized countries. When corsets or stays are worn very tight, many serious evils result from the unnatural compression.

Different bandages, more or less complicated, which embrace the greater part of the trunk, are likewise so called.

CORSET DE BRASDOR. The name of a bandage, invented by one Brasdor, to keep in situ the fragments of a fractured clavicle.

CORTALON, Senecio.

CORTEX, Phloios, Phloos, Phloos, φλοιος, φλοος, φλους, Bark. (F.) Écorce. This word has often been applied, exclusively, to Cinchona: thus, we say Bark—the cortex or bark καὶ ἔσχαλον. It means, also, any bark.

CORTEX ALCOMOCO, Alcomocoque—c. Anisi stellati, see Illicium anisatum—c. Antiscorbuticus, Canella alba—c. Aromaticus, Canella alba—c. Canelle Malabaricæ, Laurus cassia—c. Cardinalis del Lugo, Cinchona—c. Caryophyllatus, see Myrtus caryophyllata—c. Caryophylloides, Laurus culilawan—c. Chacarillæ, Croton cascarilla—c. Chinæ, Cinchona—c. Chinæ regius, Cinchona—c. Crassior, Laurus cassia—c. Culilawan, Laurus culilawan—c. Eleutheriæ, Croton cascarilla—c. Flavus, Cinchona cordifoliæ cortex—c. Lavola, see Illicium anisatum—c. Magellanicus, see Wintera aromatica—c. Pallidus, Cinchona lancifoliæ cortex—c. Patrum, Cinchona—c. Profluvii, Nerium antidysentericum—c. Ruber, Cinchona oblongifoliæ cortex

—c. Striata dentium, Enamel of the teeth—c. Thuris, Croton cascarilla—c. Winteranus, see Wintera aromatica—c. Winteranus spurius, Canella alba.

CORTEX CEREBRI, the Cortical or Cineritious substance of the Brain. The gray portion observed at the exterior of the cerebrum and cerebellum; so called, because it forms a kind of bark to the medullary substance. Gall considers, that this substance forms the nerves; and, therefore, calls it Substance matrice des nerfs.

The name cortical is likewise given to the external substance of the kidney, because it is of a deeper colour than the inner part of the organ, and forms a kind of envelope to it.

CORTEX OVI, Cortical Membrane. This membrane, so called by Boer and Granville, is usually regarded as a uterine production, and designated Decidua reflexa. They consider it to surround the ovule when it descends into the uterus, and to enclose the shaggy chorion. It is absorbed during the first months of uterogestation, so as to expose the next membrane to the contact of the decidua, with which a connexion takes place at the part where the placenta is to be formed. In that part, Boer and Granville consider, that the Cortex Ovi is never altogether obliterated, but only made thinner, and in process of time is converted into a mere pellicle or envelope, which not only serves to divide the filiform vessels of the chorion into groups or cotyledons, in order to form the placenta, but also covers those cotyledons. This, Granville calls the membrana propria. See Decidua Membrana.

CORTICAL, Corticalis, from cortex, 'bark.' Belonging to bark.

CORTICAL MEMBRANE, Cortex ovi.

CORU. An Indian tree, the bark of whose root furnishes a milky juice, which is employed in diarrhoea and dysentery. It is also called Coru Canarica.

CORUSCATIO, Astrape.

CORYBANTIASM, Corybantiasmus, from Κορυβας, one of the CORYBANTES. A name formerly given to a kind of phrensy, in which the sick were tormented by fantastic visions, and perpetual want of sleep.

CORYDALUS BULBOSUS, Fumaria bulbosa.

CORYLUS AVELLANA, Bundurh, Corylylus. The Hazel-nut Tree. (F.) Coudrier, Noisetier. Family, Amentaceæ. Scz. Syst. Monœcia Polyandria. The nut of this tree is much eaten in many countries. Like all nuts, it is by no means easy of digestion. It is the Nux avellana, χαρυν ποτικον, of the ancients. (F.) (the nut) Avelinc, Noisette.

CORYMBETRA, Hedera helix.

CORYPHE, Vertex.

CORYZA, Gravelo, Catastagmos, Catastagmos, Stillicidium Narium, Phlegmatorrhœgia, Blenorrhœa nasalis, Destillatio, Catarhus ad Nares. Vulgarly, 'running at the nose,' 'A cold in the head.' In French, Rhume de cerveau, Enchifrènement; in Old English, Pose or Mur; whence Murgen and Murrain. Blenorrhin'ia, from κorys, or κρυα, 'the head,' and ζωω, 'I boil.' Inflammation (attended with increased discharge) of the Schneiderian membrane lining the nose, and the sinuses communicating with it. The affection generally subsides without any medical treatment.

CORYZA ENTONICA, Ozæna—c. Ozænosa, Ozæna—c. Virulenta, Ozæna.

COSCINISMUS, Cribration.

COSCINOI. See Cribration.

COSMESIS, Cosmetics.

COSMETICS, Arts cosmetica, Callipis'tria, Cosme'sis, (F.) Cosmétique, from κοσμεν, 'to adorn,' 'to embellish.' The art of preserving the beauty.

Cosmetic, Stilbo'ma, is, also, used for the different means employed for that purpose; as the compounds into which enter the oxides of lead, bismuth, mercury, arsenic, &c. All of these, however, injure the skin, and often give rise to unpleasant cutaneous affections.

Frequent ablution with cold water and bathing are the best cosmetics. Essences, soaps, and all the preparations intended for the toilet, fall, also, under this head.

COSMÉTIQUE, Cosmetics.

COSMOS, from κοσμος, 'the world,' 'order,' &c. The order, which was supposed to pre- scribe over critical days. Hippocrates and others have so termed bracelets, employed not only as ornaments (κοσμεν, 'to adorn,') but as therapeu- tical agents.

COSSA, Haunch.

COSSUM. A malignant ulcer of the nose, often of a syphilitic character.—Paracelsus.

COSSUS or COSSIS. A sort of white, short, thick worm or larve, found in trees, logs of wood, &c., and used by the Romans as a great article of gourmandise. They were, also, ap- plied to ulcers.—Pliny.

The term has, likewise, been given to those small vermiform pimples on the face, which arise from inflammation of the sebaceous folli- cles.

COSTA. A Rib, from custodi're, 'to guard,' 'defend;' (F.) Côte. The ribs are 24 in num- ber;—12 on each side. They are irregular, long, bony curves: slightly flattened, and situate obliquely at the sides of the chest. The inter- vals between them are called Intercostal spaces, (F.) Espaces intercostaux, and they are numbered first, second, third, &c., reckoning from above to below.

They have been distinguished into Costa vera, True ribs, (F.) Vraies Côtes, Côtes ster- nales, Côtes vertebro-sternal (Ch); and into Costa spu'ria, Mendo'sæ Costæ, False ribs, Côtes aster- nales, (Ch,) Fausse Côtes. The true or sternal ribs, as they have also been called, are the first 7; which are articulated, at one extremity, to the spine, and at the other, by means of their cartilages, to the sternum. The false ribs are the remaining 5: the uppermost three being united, by means of their cartilages, to the car- tilage of the last true rib. The others are free at their external extremity, and, hence, have been called Floating ribs, Côtes flottantes. The vertebral extremity of each rib is slightly ex- panded. It is called the head of the rib—Capitulum Costæ: the space between this and the tubercle is the collum or neck. Anterior to the tubercle is the angle. The angle is the part where the bone bends to form the lateral part of the thorax.

COSTIVENESS, Constipation.

COSTMARY, Tanacetum balsamita.

COSTO-ABDOMINAL, Obliquus externus abdominis—c. Basi-scapulaire, Serratus magnus—c. Claviculaire, Subelavio muscle.

COSTO-CLAVICULAR, Costo-clavicula'ris. Be- longing to the ribs and clavicle.

The COSTO-CLAVICULAR LIQ'AMENT, Cleido- costal L., is a fibrous, flattened fascia, which extends, obliquely, from the cartilage of the first rib to the inferior surface of the clavicle.

COSTO-CORACOIDIEN, Pectoralis minor—c. Scapulaire, Serratus magnus.

COSTO-STERNAL, Costo-Sterna'tis. Relating to the ribs and sternum. The articulation of the sternum with the anterior extremity of the first seven ribs.

COSTO-TRACHELIANUS. Relating to the ribs and to the trachelian or transverse processes of the neck. Under the name Costo-trache'lian, Chaussier designates the anterior and posterior scaleni.

COSTO-TRANSVERSARIUS. Relating to the ribs, and to the transverse processes.—Bichat gave this name to the articulation of the tuberc- osities of the ribs with the transverse processes of the spine.

COSTO-VERTEBRAL, Costo-vertebra'lis. Be- longing to the ribs and vertebræ.—Bichat gave this name to the articulation of the head of the ribs with the vertebræ, and to the ligaments connected with it.

COSTO-XYPHOID, Costo-xyphoidæus. The name of a ligament, which unites the cartilage of the seventh rib to the xiphoid or ensiform cartilage.

COSTUS. The ancients seem to have given this name to several plants. One has borne the appellation, since the time of Dioscorides,—the Costus Arabicus, Costus Indicus, C. amarus, dulcis, orientalis, Tsia'na, Canne Congo, Canne de Rivière: Family, Amomeæ, Sex. Syst. Mo- nandria Monogynia; the root of which is aromatic, and has been considered tonic, carmina- tive, diuretic, emmenagogue, &c. The virtues of the ancient costus are highly extolled.—Theo- phrastus, Dioscorides, Pliny, Galen.

COSTUS-CORRICOSUS, Canella alba—c. Hortorum, Tanacetum balsamita—c. Hortorum mi- nor, Achillea ageratum—c. Nigra, Cynara scolymus.

COSTYLE, Cotyle.

COTA, Anthemis cotula.

COTARONIUM; an obscure term, used by Paracelsus for a universal solvent: such a thing as does not exist.

CÔTE, Costa.

CÔTES, COL DES, Collum costarum.

COTIGNAC. A kind of conserve or pre- serve, prepared from quinces, not entirely ripe, and sugar. It is esteemed stomachic and astringent.

COTON, Gossypium.

COTTON, Gossypium.

COTULA FÆTIDA, Anthemis cotula.

COTUNNIUS, LIQUOR OF. Liquor Cotun'ni, L. of Cotug'no, Aquila acus'tica, Aqua auditoria, Per'ilymph, (F.) Lymphæ de Cotugno. A transparent, slightly viscid fluid, which fills all the cavities of the internal ear, and of which Cotugno made mention. It is also called Aqua Labyrinthi.

COTURNIX, Tetrao coturnix.

COTYLĒ, Cot'yla, Cotyl'don, CostylĒ; the same as Acetabulum. A hollow cavity in a bone, which receives the head of another bone: particularly the cotyloid cavity, Κοτυλή, signified a drinking cup, and, indeed, any thing hollow, as the hollow of the hand.—Athenæus.

COTYLEDON, Cotyle—c Marina, Umbilicus marinus.

COTYLEDONS, Κοτυληδων, 'a cavity.' Acetabula uterina. The lobes which, by their union, form the placenta.

COTYLOID, Cotyloïdes, Cotyloïdeus, Cotyloïdes, from κοτυλή, 'a drinking cup,' and ειδος, 'form.' Resembling the ancient κοτυλή. The name of a hemispherical cavity, situate in the os innominatum, which receives the head of the os femoris. Fossa cotyloïdea, Sinus Coxe, Acetabulum, Pyxis.

The COTYLOID LIGAMENT, Ligamentum Cotyloïdeum, (F.) Ligament cotyloïdien, is a very thick, fibro-cartilaginous ring, surrounding the cotyloid cavity, the depth of which it increases.

COU, Collum.

COUCH GRASS, Triticum repens.

COUCHE ou COUCHES (F.) from coucher, 'to lie down.' This word is used, 1. For parturition, (q. v.) accouchement or delivery (puerperium, parturi'tio;) hence une couche heureuse, 'A happy delivery;' une fausse couche, 'a premature delivery;' and, 2. For the time during which a female remains in bed on account of delivery,—Tempus Puerperii, the childbed state. The Lochia have been termed Suites de couches. It also means a bed or thalamus (q. v.)

COUCHER, Decubitus.

COUCHES DES NERFS ETHMOÏDAUX; Corpora striata—c. des Nerfs oculaires, Thalami nervorum opticoïrum—c. des Nerfs optiques, Thalami nervorum opticoïrum—c. Optiques, Thalami nervorum opticoïrum.

COUCHING. Sec Cataract.

COUCINEA COCCINEA, Cacocucia coccinea.

COUDE, Elbow.

COUDE-PIED, Instep.

COUDÉE, Cubitus.

COUDRIER, Corylus avellana.

COUENNE (F.) Cutis suilla. A term given to various parts of the human skin, which are prominent, hard, brownish, and often covered with rough hairs, so as to form patches not very unlike the skin of the hog. It is a malformation, occurring during intra-uterine existence and remaining for life. See Nævus, also, Corium Phlogisticum.

COUENNE INFLAMMATOIRE, Corium phlogisticum—c. Pleurétique, Corium phlogisticum.

COUGH, Tussis.

COULER, To strain.

COULEUVRE, Coluber berus.

COULEUVRÉE, Bryonia alba.

COULISSE (F.) 'A groove, a gutter.' Anatomists designate, by this name, every deep groove or channel in a bone, in which a tendon plays;—such as the Coulisse Bicpitale or Bicpitale Groove of the Humerus.

COULISSE BICIPITALE, Bicpitale groove—c. Humérale, Bicpitale groove.

COULOIR, Colatorium.

COUM, Colchicum autumnale.

COUNTER-EXTENSION, Contra-extension, Anti'asis, (F.) Contre-extension, from [contra-exten'dere, 'to extend in a contrary direction.' It consists in retaining firmly and immovably the upper part of a limb, whilst extension is practised on the lower, in cases of fracture or luxation.

COUNTER-INDICATION, Contra-Indicatio, Antendei'is. An indication contrary to another, (F.) Contre-indication. Any circumstance, which acts as an obstacle to the employment of such therapeutical means as seem to be indicated by other circumstances.

COUNTER-IRRITATION, Contra-irritatio. An irritation, excited in a part of the body, with the view of relieving one existing in another part. The remedies used for this purpose are called Counter-irritants, and form a most valuable class of remedial agents. See Derivation and Revulsion.

COUP, Blow—c. de Feu, Wound, gunshot—c. de Sang, Apoplexy.

COUP DE MAÎTRE ou TOUR DE MAÎTRE (F.) A masterly stroke or performance. A mode of introducing the sound or catheter into the bladder, which consists in first passing it with its convexity towards the abdomen of the patient, and afterwards giving it a half turn towards the right groin, when its extremity has reached the root of the penis under the symphysis pubis. There is no advantage in this mode of introduction.

COUP DE SANG (F.) A common term, used by some physicians in France, to designate the loss of sensation and motion, which result from hemorrhage in the brain, or from simple congestion in the vessels of that organ. See Apoplexy. Some authors have comprehended, under the same denomination, different hemorrhages, which occur in the cellular texture of the face, lungs, skin, &c.

COUP DE SOLEIL (F.) Siriasis, Sciriasis, Siriasis Ægyptiaca, Ictus solis, Ictus solaris, Insolation;—a stroke of the sun. Egyptian Star-stroke or Sunstroke. Any affection produced by the action of the sun on some region of the body;—head, hands, arms, &c.

A very common effect of exposing the naked head to the sun is inflammation of the brain or its meninges, which Sauvages calls Curus ab Insolatione.

COUPE-BRIDE, Kiotome.

COUPEROSE, Gutta rosea.

COUPURE, Cut, Wound, incised.

COURANTE, Diarrhœa.

COURAP. A distemper, very common in India, in which there is a perpetual itching of the surface, and eruption. It is of an herpetic character, and appears chiefly on the axilla, groins, breast, and face.

COURBARIL. See Animic.

COUREATURE (F.) Acer'ba lassitu'do. Violent lassitude, fatigue. An indisposition, characterized by a sensation, as if the limbs were bruised; general feeling of debility, extreme lassitude; and, sometimes, slight fever. It appears immediately after severe exercise, but sometimes not till the next day. Rest removes it.

COURBURE, Curvature.

COURGE, Cucurbita pepo.

COURMI or CURMI, κουρμι, ζουρμι. A fermented liquor, made from barley. A kind of ale or beer.—Dioscorides.

COURONDI, Couron'do. An evergreen tree of India, the juice of which, mixed with warm whey, is said to cure the dysentery.—Ray.

COURONNE CILIAIRE, Godronné, canal—c. du Dent, Crown of a tooth—c. du Gland, Crown of the Glans—c. du Trépan, Crown of the Trepan—c. de Vénus, Crown of Venus.

COURONNE RAYONNANTE (F.) A term given by Reil to the fan-shaped terminations of the crura cerebri in the brain.

COURONNEMENT (F.) Coro'na. A vulgar expression, sometimes used to designate the circular ring, which the os uteri forms around the head of the child at a certain period of accouchement:—the head seeming to be surrounded, as it were, by a crown. The head is then said to be au couronnement.

COUROU-MOELLI. An Indian tree, the bark of which is said to be anti-venomous.

COURSE, Running.

COURSES, Menses.

COURT, Short.

COUSIN, Culex.

COUSSINET, Pad.

COUTEAU, Knife—c. à Amputation, Knife, amputation—c. à Cataracte, Knife, cataract—c. Courbe, Knife, crooked—c. à Crochet, Knife, crotchet—c. Désarticulatur, Knife, double-edged—c. Droit, Knife, amputation—c. de Feu, Cultellaire—c. Interosséux, Knife, double-edged—c. Lenticulaire, Knife, lenticular—c. Lithotome, Knife, lithotomy—c. en Serpette, Knife, en serpette—c. Symphysien, see Symphyseotomy—c. à Deux tranchans, Knife, double-edged.

COUTOU'BEA ALBA, Es'acum spic'dum, Pic'rimum spic'dum. A plant of Guiana, which is very bitter, and is considered, in the country, to be emmenagogue, anthelmintic, and anti-dyspeptic.

COUTURES PAR LA PETITE VÉROLE. See Cicatrix.

COUVERCLE. See Crucible.

COUVRECHEF (F.) Cucul'tus, Fascia'tio cuculla'ta. A bandage, applied to the head for retaining certain dressings, &c. in situ. The French surgeons distinguish two kinds. 1. The Grand Couvrecchef ou Scrviette en carré (Cucul'tus major.) which is formed of a napkin or large square compress: and, 2. The Petit Couvrecchef ou Mouchoir en triangle (Cucul'tus minor.) formed of a napkin or other square compress, folded from one angle to the other diagonally opposite to it.

COUVRECHEF. See Bandage, Galen's.

COVOLAM, Cratava Marmelos. The bark of this tree is tonic: the unripe fruit is astringent; but, when ripe, is delicious.

COWBANE, Cicuta aquatica.

COWBERRY, Vaccinium vitis idæa.

COWHAGE, Dolichos pruriens.

COWITCH, Dolichos pruriens.

COWPOX, Vaccina—c. Inoculation, Vaccination.

COWSLIP, Primula veris—c. Jerusalem, Pulmonaria.

COWWEED, Chærophyllum sylvestre.

COWPER'S GLANDS, Ac'cessory glands, (F.) Glandes accessoires, G. de Cowper, Prostates inférieures ou petites prostates. Two small ovoid groups of mucous, reddish follicles, situate behind the bulb of the urethra, before the prostate; the excretory ducts of which open into the bulbous portion of the urethra.

They are also called Glan'dule antepros'tatae, and G. pros'tatae infriores.

COXA, Haunch.

COXÆLUVIUM, Bath, hip.

COXAGRA, Neuralgia femoro-poplitea.

COXENDIX, Haunch.

COXAI'GIA, Osp'hyal'gia. A word of hybrid origin, from coxa, 'hip,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the hip. A sign of rheumatic or other inflammation, or of some disease about the hip-joint. See Neuralgia femoro-poplitea.

COXA'RUM or COXEN'DICUS or COXA'RIVUS (Morbus.) Hip disca'sc. A scrofulous and spontaneous luxation and disease of the os femoris is generally understood by this term.

COXEN'DIX. This word has been used synonymously with ischium. The haunch (q. v.) Anatomists, too, have called the ilia, Ossa Coxendicis.

COXO-FEMORAL, Cozo-femora'lis. Be longing to the coxal bone or ilium, and to the os femoris. Il'io-fem'oral has the same signification.

The COXO-FEMORAL or IL'IO-FEMORAL ARTICULATION, (F.) Articulation de la Hanche, is the Hip-joint. The head of the femur and articular cavity are covered by a diarthrodial cartilage and synovial capsule; and by a very strong capsular or articular ligament attached to the circumference of the cotyloid cavity, and to the neck of the femur. There is, also, a round or interarticular ligament, passing from the inferior notch of the cotyloid cavity to the rough depression at the top of the caput femoris; and a cotyloid ligament,—a sort of thick, cartilaginous ring, situate on the edge of the cotyloid cavity, and converting the inferior notch into a foramen. These are the great means of union in this extensive articulation.

CRAB, As'tacus furial'ilis, Cancer, Gam'marus, Cam'marnus. (F.) Crabbe, Écrevisse, Escrevice. A shell-fish much used as an article of diet. Like other shell-fish it is apt to disagree, and excite urticaria, &c.

CRABE, Crabsaws.

CRABLOUSE; a species of Pedic'ulus, P. Pubis, which infests the pudendum and axilla. (F.) Morpion. It is easily destroyed by the white precipitate of mercury, or by mercurial ointment.

CRABS' EYES, Cancrorum chelæ.

CRABS' STONES, Cancrorum chelæ.

CRABYAWS. (F.) Crabe. A name, in the West Indies, for a kind of ulcer on the soles of the feet, with edges so hard, that they are difficult to cut.

CRACHAT, Sputum.

CRACHEMENT, Excretion—c. de Pus,

Vomica, Phthisis pulmonalis—c. de Sung, Hæmoptysis.

CRACKLING OF LEATHER, see Craquement de cuir.

CRADLE, Arculus, Solen, (F.) Arceau ou Archet. A semicircle of thin wood, or strips of wood, used for preventing the contact of the bed-clothes in wounds, &c. An ordinance of the Grand Duke of Tuscany forbade mothers and nurses to sleep with a child near them, unless it was placed under a solid cradle of this kind, in order that no accident might arise from overlaying.

CRÆPALĒ, from κραπαλη, Crap'ula, 'drunkenness, surfeit.' A derangement of the functions of the brain, &c., produced by wine or any other fermented liquor.—Galen.

CRÆIE, Creta.

CRAMA, κραμα, from κραω, 'I mix.' A mixture of any kind. Dilute wine.

CRAMBĪON, from κραμβη, 'cabbage.' A decoction of cabbage.—Hippocr.

CRAMP, from (G.) k r a m p f e n, 'to contract,' Crampus, Entasia systern'ma, Tetanus dolorif'icus. A sudden, involuntary, and highly painful contraction of a muscle or muscles. It is most frequently experienced in the lower extremities, and is a common symptom of certain affections;—as of Colica Pictonum and Cholera Morbus. Friction and compression of the limb, by means of a ligament applied round it above the muscles affected, will usually remove the spasm.

CRAMP OF THE STOMACH, (F.) Crampc de l'Estomac. A sudden, violent, and most painful affection of the stomach, with sense of constriction in the epigastrium. It seems to be the effect of the spasmodic contraction of the muscular coat of the stomach, and requires the use of the most powerful stimulants and antispasmodics, of which opium is the best.

CRAMPE DE L'ESTOMAC, Cramp of the stomach.

CRANBERRY, Vaccinium oxycoccos.

CRANE, Cranium—c. Humain, Cranium humanum.

CRANE'S BILL, Geranium—c. Stinking, Geranium Robertianum.

CRANIOL'OGY or CRANIOS'COPY, Cranio'logia, Phrenol'ogy, Craniosco'pia, C. Gallia'na, Encephaloscopia, Doctri'na Gallia'na.

Words, introduced, since Gall, into medical language. The two first terms are respectively derived from κρανιον, 'cranium,' λογος, 'a discourse,' and σκοπειν, 'to examine.' They signify the description, or, simply, the examination of the different parts of the external surface of the cranium, in order to deduce from thence a knowledge of the different intellectual and moral dispositions. Strictly speaking, it is by Cranioscopy that we acquire a knowledge of Craniology or of Organology or Cranology, as it has, also, been termed. These words are generally, however, used in the same sense. The cranium being exactly moulded to the brain, there are as many prominences on the bone as there are projections at the surface of the brain. According to Gall, each projection, which he calls an organ, is the seat of a particular intellectual or moral faculty, and all persons endowed with the same faculty, have, at the same part of the brain, a prominence, which is indicated, externally, by a bump or projection in the bony case.

The System of Gall is made to comprise 27 prominences, which answer to 27 faculties. The following Table exhibits these supposed organs and their seat.

CEREBRAL ORGANS, AND THEIR SEAT, ACCORDING TO GALL.

- |   |   |   |
|---|---|---|
| 1. Instinct of generation, of reproduction; amativeness. Instinct of propagation; venereal instinct.(German.) Zeugungstrieb, Fortpflanzungstrieb, Geschlechtstrieb. | } | Seated in the cerebellum. It is manifested at the surface of the cranium by two round protuberances, one on each side of the nape of the neck.                                   |
| 2. Love of progeny; philoprogenitiveness.(G.) Jungenliebe, Kinderliebe.   | } | Indicated at the external occipital protuberance.  |
| 3. Attachment; friendship.(G.) Freundschaftsinn.  | } | About the middle of the posterior margin of the parietal bone; anterior to the last.   |
| 4. Instinct of defending self and property; love of strife and combat; combativeness; courage.(G.) Muth, Raufsin, Zanksinn.   | } | Seated a little above the ears; in front of the last, and towards the mastoid angle of the parietal bone.  |
| 5. Carnivorous instinct; inclination to murder; destructiveness; cruelty.(G.) Wurgsinn, Mordsinn.   | } | Greatly developed in all the carnivorous animals; forms a prominence at the posterior and superior part of the squamous surface of the temporal bone, above the mastoid process. |
| 6. Cunning; fincse; address; secretiveness.(G.) List, Schlauehit, Klugheit.   | } | Above the meatus auditorius externus, upon the sphenoidal angle of the parietal bones.   |

7. Desire of property; provident insinnet; cupidity; inclination to robbery; acquisitiveness.
(G.) Eigenthumssinn, Hang zu Stehlen, Einsammlungssinn, Diebsinn.
8. Pride; haughtiness; love of authority; elevation.
(G.) Stolz, Hochmuth, Hohen-sinn, Herrschsucht.
9. Vanity; ambition; love of glory.
(G.) Eitelkeit, Ruhmsucht, Ehrgeiz.
10. Circumspection; foresight.
(G.) Behutsamkeit, Vorsicht, Vorsichtigkeit.
11. Memory of things; memory of facts; sense of things; educability; perfectibility; docility.
(G.) Sachgedächtniss, Erziehungs-fähigkeit, Sach-sinn.
12. Sense of locality; sense of the relation of space; memory of places.
(G.) Ortsinn, Raumsinn.
13. Memory of persons; sense of persons.
(G.) Personensinn.
14. Sense of words; sense of names; verbal memory.
(G.) Wordgedächtniss, Namen-sinn.
15. Sense of spoken language; talent of philology; study of languages.
(G.) Sprachforschungssinn, Wortsinn, Sprach-sinn.
16. Sense of the relations of colour; talent of painting.
(G.) Farb-sinn.
17. Sense of the relations of tones; musical talent.
(G.) Tonsinn.
18. Sense of the relations of numbers; mathematics.
(G.) Zahlensinn.
19. Sense of mechanics; sense of construction; talent of architecture; industry.
(G.) Kunstsinn, Bausinn.
20. Comparative sagacity.
(G.) Vergleichender Scharf-sinn.
21. Metaphysical penetration; depth of mind.
(G.) Metaphysischer Tief-sinn.
22. Wit.
(G.) Witz.
23. Poetical talent.
(G.) Dichtergeist.
24. Goodness; benevolence; mildness; compassion; sensibility; moral sense; conscience; bonhomie.
(G.) Gutmüthigkeit, Mitleiden, moralischer Sinn, Gewissen.
25. Imitation; mimicry.
(G.) Nachahmungssinn.
- Anterior to that of cunning, of which it seems to be a prolongation, and above that of mechanics, with which it contributes to widen the cranium, by the projection which they form at the side of the frontal bone.
- Behind the top of the head, at the extremity of the sagittal suture, and on the parietal bones.
- Situate at the side of the last, near the posterior internal angle of the parietal bones.
- Corresponds to the parietal protuberances.
- Situate at the root of the nose, between the two eyebrows, and a little above them.
- Answers to the frontal sinuses, and is indicated externally by two prominences at the inner edge of the eyebrows, near the root of the nose, and outside of the organ of memory of things.
- At the inner angle of the orbit.
- Situate at the posterior part of the base of the two anterior lobes of the brain, on the frontal part of the bottom of the orbit, so as to make the eye prominent.
- Also at the top of the orbit, between the preceding and that of the knowledge of colour.
- The middle part of the eyebrows; encroaching a little on the forehead.
- A little above and to one side of the last; above the outer third of the orbitar arch.
- On the outside of the organ of the sense of the relations of colour, and below the last.
- A round protuberance at the lateral base of the frontal bone, towards the temple, and behind the organs of music and numbers.
- At the middle and anterior part of the frontal bone, above that of the memory of things.
- In part, confounded with the preceding. Indicated, at the outer side of this last, by two protuberances, which give to the forehead a peculiar hemispherical shape.
- At the lateral and outer part of the last; and giving greater width to the frontal prominences.
- On the outer side of the last; divided into two halves by the coronal suture.
- Indicated by an oblong prominence above the organ of comparative sagacity; almost at the frontal suture.
- At the outer side of the last

26. God and religion; theosophy. } At the top of the frontal bone and at the superior angles of the parietal bones.
 (G.) Theosophisches Sinn.
 27. Firmness; constancy; perseverance; obstinacy. } The top of the head; at the anterior and most elevated part of the parietal bones.
 (G.) Stetigkeit, Fester Sinn.

The first nineteen of these, according to Gall, are common to man and animals; the remaining eight, man possesses exclusively. They are, consequently, the attributes of humanity.

ORGANS ACCORDING TO SPURZHEIM.

A fundamental principle with the Cranio-ologists or Phrenologists, is,—that the brain does not act as a single organ, but that it consists of a plurality of organs: but if we admit this, it is probable that the assignment of the seat of different faculties is premature.

CRANIOSCOPY, Craniology.

CRANIUM, Cranium, Calvaria, Scaphion, Conchus, Calva; the skull; from κρανος, 'a helmet,' or from κρανον, 'head.' (F.) Crane. The collection of bones, which form the case for lodging the brain and its membranes, as well as their vessels, and some of the nerves. These bones are eight in number—the frontal, occipital, two parietal, two temporal, the sphenoid, and ethmoid. Besides these, there might be considered, as belonging to the cranium, the cornua sphenoidalia, the bones of the ear, and the ossa wormiana.

Dr. Prichard has characterized the primitive forms of the skull according to the width of the Bregma, or space between the parietal bones: 1. The Stenobregmate, (στενος, 'narrow,') or Ethiopian variety. 2. The Mesobregmate, (μεσος, 'middle,') or Caucasian variety; and 3. The Platybregmate, (πλατυς, 'broad,') or Mongolian variety.

CRANIUM HUMANUM, Human Cranium, (F.) Crane humain. This was anciently much used in prescriptions, and was considered anti-epileptic, alexipharmic, antiloimic, &c.

CRANOMANCY, from κρανον, 'the head,' and μαντια, 'divination,' (F.) Cranomancie. The art of divining—from the inspection of the head or cranium,—the moral dispositions and inclinations of individuals.

CRANSON, Cochlearia officinalis.

CRANSSAC, MINERAL WATERS OF. C. is a village in the department of Aveyron, six leagues from Rhodéz, which possesses acidulous chalybeate springs, that have been known for a long time.

CRANTER, from κρανειν, 'to finish,' 'render perfect.' The Dens Supercilice has been so called.

CRAPULA, Cræpale.

CRAQUEMENT DE CUIR, (F.) 'Crackling of leather.' A sound like the crackling of new leather, sometimes heard on examining the heart with the stethoscope. It has been supposed to be symptomatic of pericarditis.

CRASIS; from κραννυμι, 'I mix.' A mixture of the constituents of a fluid; as the crasis of the blood, of the humours, &c. The word has, also, been employed in a more extensive signification, as synonymous with Constitution, Temperament, (q. v.) &c.

CRASPEDON, Staphylœdema.

CRASSAMENTUM, from crassus, 'thick.' The thick part or deposit of any fluid. It is particularly applied to the clot of the blood.

CRASSAMENTUM SANGUINIS, See Blood.

CRASSE, (F.) Dirt or impurity. A sort of layer or enduit, which covers the skin, where cleanliness is not attended to; and which is, sometimes, the result of the cutaneous exhalation; at others, of extraneous matter, adhering to the surface of the body.

CRASSE/NA. A term by which Paracelsus designated the saline, putrescent, and corrosive principles, which, he thought, gave rise to ulcers and tumours of different kinds.

CRASSULA, Sedum telephium.

CRATÆGUS ARIA, Mespilus, Aria seu Sorbus, White Beam Tree, (F.) Alisier blanc; Alouche, Alouchier. The fruit, which is of the size of a small pear, is slightly astringent, and somewhat agreeable to the taste. It has been employed in diarrhœa.

CRATÆVA MARMELOS, Covolam.

CRATEVÆSIUM, Sisymbrium nasturtium.

CRATOS, Force.

CRaute, MINERAL WATERS OF. C. is a village five leagues from Autun, in France, where are mineral springs, containing hydro-sulphate of magnesia, muriate of soda, muriate of lime, sulphate of lime, and carbonate of magnesia.

CRAYON NOIR, Graphites.

CRAZINESS, Insanity.

CREA, Shin.

CREAM, Crémor, (F.) Crème. A thick, unctuous matter, of a yellowish white colour, and sweet, agreeable taste, which rises to the surface of milk, if kept at rest. It is composed of butter, serum, and caseum.

Crème is a name given in France to bouillies prepared with farina of different kinds; as the Cream of Rice, Crème de Riz, C. d'orge (C. of Barley,) &c.

CREAM, COLD, Ceratum Galeni—c. of Tar tar, Potassæ supertartras.

CREASOTE, Creasote, Creasotum, Kreasote, Creasoton; from κρεας, 'fleshy,' and αιωρος, 'a preserver.' A substance discovered a few years ago by Reichenbach. It is obtained from Tar, by distillation, and appears to be the active antiseptic and medicinal agent in tar-water and crude pyrologneous acid. It is a colourless transparent fluid, of a penetrating and disagreeable odour. Its taste is bitter. S. g. 1.037. It coagulates albumen, whence its hæmostatic power. It is a most powerful antiseptic.

It has been largely administered in hemorrhages both internally and externally. As an external application, it has been used in burns, ulcers, especially those of a sloughing character, chronic cutaneous affections, and has been applied to tapeworm when protruded, &c.

Internally, it has been administered in phthisis, vomiting, diabetes mellitus, nervous diseases, chronic glands, &c.

The dose internally is one or two drops. Externally, it is sometimes applied pure, at others diluted, and commonly with water, (℞ss to ℥vj;) or in the form of ointment, (gtt. xv to ℥j of cerate.)

CREATOPHAGUS, Carnivorous.

CREMASON, Pyrosis.

CREMASTER, Suspendiæulum, Elevator Testiculæ, Musculus Testis, M. Testicularis. That which suspends; from κρεμαω, 'I suspend.' The Greeks designated, by this term, the spermatic chord, or all the parts by which the testicle is, as it were, suspended; but, since Vesalius, it has received its present limited meaning. The Cremaster is a very thin, muscular fascia—sometimes hardly perceptible—which detaches itself from the internal oblique muscle; passes through the abdominal ring, and vanishes around the tunica vaginalis; serving to draw up the testicle, and to move it slightly. It has been, also, called Tunica Erythroïdes and Suspensorium Testis.

CREME, Cream—c. de Soufre, Sulphur præcipitatum—c. de Tartre, Potassæ supertartras.

CREMER. The common name for a disease frequent in Hungary, which is produced by excess in eating and drinking.—Chomel.

CREMNOI, plural of κρημνος, 'a steep bank.' The lips of an ulcer. The Labia Pudendi, (q. v.)—Hippocrates, Foësius. Hence:

CREMNONCUS, from κρημνος, 'the labia pudendi,' and ογκος, 'a tumour.' A swelling of the labia pudendi.

CREMOR, Cream—c. Tartari, Potassæ supertartras—c. Urinæ, see Urine.

CRENA, Crenatura, Denticulus, (F.) Crénélure. In the plural, the small teeth or projections in the bones of the cranium, by means of which an accurate junction is formed at the sutures.

Crénélure has also been used, in Surgery, for the gutter or groove in certain instruments, which is generally intended to secure the passage of cutting instruments; the groove, for example, of a director.

CRENATURA, Crena.

CRÉNELURE, Crena.

CREOPHAGUS, Carnivorous.

CREPANELLA, Plumbago Europæa.

CREPATIO, Crepatura. The action of bursting any seed by ebullition.—Coque ad crepaturam, 'Boil till it bursts.'

CREPATURA, Hernia.

CREPIDINES PALPEBRARUM. See Tarsus.

CREPITATION, Crepitus, from crepita're, 'to make a noise.' Crackling. Crepitation or crepitus, (F.) Cluquitis, has been used, in Surgery, to designate the noise occasioned by the friction of fractured bones, when the surgeon moves them in certain directions. When it cannot be heard at a distance, it may be detected by the immediate application of the ear, or by the use of the stethoscope.

Crepitus or crackling is, likewise, met with in cases of gangrene, when air is effused into the cellular membrane—provided the part be carefully examined with the fingers. The same term is used for the cracking of the joints in health or disease.

Crepitus, φυσα, φυση, Physa, Physe, ποδη, Porde, Flatus, also means a discharge of wind per anum. See Fart.

By RALE CREPITANT SEC, LAENNEC means the crepitant rattle, heard, during respiration, in severe pneumonia and in œdema of the lung; so termed, on account of the analogy between the sound and that occasioned by pressing a healthy lung, between the fingers.

The RALE CREPITANT SEC à GROSSES BULLES, 'dry crackling noise with formation of large bubbles,' is heard in pulmonary emphysema, when the distention becomes greater and greater, and is followed by rupture of the vesicles. The air forcing itself a passage in the interlobular cellular tissue gives rise to this Rôle during inspiration.

CREPITUS, Crepitation, Fart—c. Lupi, Lycopodon.

CRESCENTIA, Growth.

CRESCENTIA CUJETE, Cujete, Narrow-leaved Calabash Tree. The pulp of the fruit of this West India plant is acidulous. It is used in diarrhœa and headache; and, in syrup, for diseases of the chest.

CRESCENTILE, Waxing kernels.

CRESERA. See Cribration.

CRESPINUS, Oxycantha Galeni.

CRESS, GARDEN, Lepidium sativum—c. Indian, Tropæolum majus—c. Penny, Thlaspi—c. Swines', Cochlearia coronopus—c. Water, Sisymbrium nasturtium.

CRÉSSES, DOCK, Lapsana—c. Sciatica, Lepidium Iberis.

CRESSI, Sisymbrium nasturtium.

CRESSON, ALÉNOIS, Lepidium sativum—c. Élégant, Cardamine pratensis—c. de Fontaine, Sisymbrium nasturtium—c. des Indes, Tropæolum majus—c. des Jardins, Lepidium sativum—c. du Mexique, Tropæolum majus—c. de Para, Spilanthus oleraceus—c. des Prés, Cardamine pratensis.

CRETA, Carbonas calcis, Carbonas calcæreus, Glisomargo, Melia Terra, Chalk, Carbonate of Lime, (F.) Craie.

CRETA PRÆPARATA, Carbonas Calcis præparatus, Testa præparata, Prepared Chalk. Used, externally, as an absorbent; internally, as an antacid. Dose, gr. x to ℥j or more.

CRÊTE, Crista—c. de Coq, Crista galli—c. de l'Ethmoïde, Crista galli—c. Uréthrale, Gallinaginis caput—c. Uréthrale, Caput Gallinaginis.

CRÉTIN. One affected with cretinism. The word is said to come from Chrétien, Chris- tian, because the Crétin, being in a state of idiocy, is incapable of committing any sin. See Cagot.

CRETINISM or CRETINAGE, Cyrtosis Cretinis'mus, Cretinis'mus. An epidemic affection in the low, deep, narrow situations of the Valais; in the valley of Aost, Maurienne, a part of Switzerland, the Pyrenees, Tyrol, &c. It is a state of idiocy, commonly accompanied by an enormous goitre, and is often hereditary. The unfortunate Crétin is little better than the animals around him. He rarely attains an advanced age. Like idiocy, cretinism has been divided into complete and incomplete.

CREUSET, Crucible.

CREUX DE L'ESTOMAC, Fossette du cœur.

CREUZOT, MINERAL WATERS OF. C. is a mountain to the northeast of Mount Cenis. Near it is a saline chalybeate spring.

CREVASSE, (F.) Rima, from crever, 'to break or crack.' A Crack, a Cleft. The words crevasse, gerçure, fissure, and rhagade are often used synonymously for small longitudinal cracks or chaps of a more or less painful character. Sometimes, crevasse is employed to designate the solutions of continuity or ruptures, which supervene in distended parts, in the urinary passages, uterus, &c.; it is then synonymous with rupture.

CRÏ, Cry.

CRIBLÉ, (F.) Cribra'tus, from cribrum, 'a sieve.' Having holes like a sieve. Lamæ criblée, Crib'riform plate, is the horizontal lamina of the ethmoid bone—so called because it is perforated like a sieve. Through the perforations the olfactory nerves pass.

The term La'nina Cribro'sa of Albinus is a circular spot, perforated with small holes, seen when the optic nerve is regarded from the inside, after removing the retina and choroid. From these holes the medullary matter may be expressed.

CRIBRA. See Cribration.

CRIBRATION, Cribra'tio, Sifting, Coscinis'mus. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in separating the finest parts of drugs from the coarser. Sieves are used for this purpose. These were formerly called Cribra; Coscinoi, κοσκίνοι. A sieve, for separating the bran from meal, was termed Cresera, χηρσερα, Aleurot'esis, Cribrum Pollinari'um.

CRIBRIFORM, Cribrifor'me, from cribrum, 'a sieve,' and forma, 'form.' The ethmoid bone was formerly so called:—Os cribrifor'me.

CRIBRUM POLLINARIUM. See Cribration.

CRICO-ARYTENOID. Cri'coarytenoïdæ'us. Relating to the cricoid and arytenoid cartilages.

CRICO-ARYTENOID MUSCLE, Crico-arytenoïdæ'us latera'lis, Crico-lateri-arytenoïdien. A muscle which proceeds from the lateral part of the superior edge of the cricoid cartilage to the outer and anterior part of the base of the arytenoid cartilage. It carries the arytenoid cartilage outwards and forwards.

CRICO-ARYTENOID, POSTERIOR; Crico-arytenoïdæ'us post'icus, Crico-crêti-arithénôïdien, Dilatateur postérieur du Larynx. A small, triangular muscle, seated at the back part of the larynx. It extends from the prominent line, at the middle of the posterior surface of the cricoid cartilage, to the outer and posterior part of the base of the arytenoid cartilage.

The CRICO-ARYTENOIDÆUS SUPERIOR, of Winslow, forms part of the Arytenoïdæ'us of modern anatomists.

CRICO-CRÊTI-ARYTHÉNOÏDIEN, Crico-arytenoid, posterior—c. Latéro-arytenoïdien, Crico-arytenoid—c. pharyngis.

CRICO-PHARYNGEAL, Crico-pharyngæus. Belonging to the cricoid cartilage and pharynx. The CRICO-PHARYNGÆUS muscle of Winslow is a fleshy bundle, which forms part of the Constrictor Pharyngis inferior, (q. v.) He calls the other part Thyro-pharyngæus, and proposes to call the whole Thyro-crico-pharyngæus.

CRICO-THYROÏDEAN, Crico-Thyroid. Belonging to the cricoid and thyroid cartilages.

The CRICO-THYROID MEMBRANE is of a fibrous nature; and extends from the upper edge of the cricoid cartilage to the inferior edge of the thyroid.

The CRICO-THYROID MUSCLE, Crico-Thyroidæ'us, Dilatateur antérieur du larynx, is a small, fleshy bundle, of a triangular shape, at the anterior and inferior part of the larynx. It extends from the outer surface of the cricoid cartilage to the lateral parts of the inferior margin of the thyroid cartilage; and its use is, to approximate, anteriorly, the corresponding margins of the cricoid and thyroid cartilages; and thus to stretch the ligaments of the glottis, which it contracts by separating the thyroid cartilage from the arytenoid.

CRICO-THYRO-PHARYNGIEN, Constrictor pharyngis.

CRICOËIDES, Annular.

CRICOÏD, Cricoidens, Cricoïdes, Annularis, Cymbala'ris, Cartilago innominata, from κρικός, 'a ring,' and εἶδος, 'form.' Having the form of a ring, (F.) Cartilago anonyma. A name given to one of the cartilages of the larynx, which is situate at its lower part, between the thyroid and first ring of the trachea. It is much higher behind than before.

CRICOS, Ring.

CRIMNOËDES, Crimnoïdes, from χημνον, 'coarse meal,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' Resembling meal.

URÏNA CRIMNOËDES. Urine that deposits a sediment like meal.

CRIMNON, Farina.

CRINA'LE, from crinis, 'hair.' An instrument, formerly used to compress, in cases of fistula lachrymalis. It has its name from the circumstance of its having at one end a small cushion stuffed with hair.—Scultetus.

CRINA'TUM. A species of fumigation, used by Paulus of Ægina. The roots of lilies entered into the process; hence its name, from χρῖνον, 'the lily.'

CRINES, Hair.

CRINIS, Capillus.

CRINOMYRON, from χρῖνον, 'the lily,' and μυρον, 'ointment.' Unguentum liliacæum, U. Ægyptium album, U. Susinum. An ointment, composed of lilies and some aromatic plants.—Gorræus.

CRINON, Lilium candidum.

CRIOMYX'OS, χηρμυξός. One, who has much mucus flowing from his nasal fossæ, like a ram: from κρίος, 'a ram,' and μύτος, 'inucus.'

CRISIS, Diacrisis, Judgment; from κρίνω, 'I judge.' This word has been used in various acceptations. Some mean by crisis of a disease, when it augments or diminishes considerably, becomes transformed into another, or ceases entirely. Some have used the word to signify only the favourable changes, which supervene in disease; others, for the change going on in the acme or violence of the disease. Others, again, have given this name only to a rapid and favourable change; joined to some copious evacuation or eruption; whilst others have applied the term to the symptoms, that accompany such change, and not to the change itself;—thus including, under the same denomination, the critical phenomena and the crisis.

CRISPATION, Crispatu'ra, from crispā're, 'to wrinkle.' A contraction, or spasmodic constriction, which supervenes in certain parts, either spontaneously or by the influence of some morbid cause or therapeutical agent. The capillary vessels of a wound are, by the French, termed crispés; when, immediately after an operation, the blood does not flow from them. The skin is said to be crispée, when contracted, and the bulbs of the hair become more prominent. Crispation of the nerves is a slight convulsive motion of external or internal parts, much less than that which occurs in convulsion.

CRISTA. A crest, (F.) Crête. A name given to several bony projections.

CRISTA GALLI; two Latin words, signifying the comb of a cock, (F.) Crête de l'ethmoïde, C. de Coq. A flat, triangular process, rising above the cribriform plate of the ethmoid bone, and resembling a cock's comb. It gives attachment to the anterior part of the falx cerebri.

The CRISTA OF THE ILIUM is the superior margin of the ilium:—the Crista of the Tibia, the anterior edge; the skin. Winslow calls the nymphæ, Crista of the Clitoris; and Chaus sier, the verumontanum, Crista Urethralis.

The word CRÊTES, (F.) Crista, is used, in France, for fimbriated excrescences, which form at the anus, and near the genital organs; and are commonly owing to the syphilitic virus.

CRÊTES DE COQ are syphilitic excrescences, resembling, in form, the crest of the cock.

CRISTA URETHRALIS, Gallinaginis caput—c. Interna, Frontal spine.

CRISTALLIN, Crystalline.

CRISTALLINE, Mesembryanthemum crystallinum.

CRITHE, Hordeolum, Hordeum, Penis.

CRITHIDION, Hordeolum.

CRITHMUM MARITIMUM, Crithmum, Samphire, (F.) Passé-pierre, Perce-pierre, Fenouil marin, Bacile. Family, Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. A plant which grows on the sea-coasts, has a spicy, aromatic flavour, and is used, pickled, as a condiment.

The Cauponga of Brazil is a kind of Crithmum.

CRITICAL, Criticus. Belonging to a crisis.

CRITICAL DAYS, Dies critici, D. judicatorii,

D. Decretorii, D. Principes, D. Radicales, (F.) Jours critiques, are those on which a crisis, it was imagined, would be likely to happen. According to Hippocrates and Galen, the greatest number of fevers terminate, favourably, on the 7th day, and many on the 14th;—these two days being the most propitious. Next to these come, in order of efficiency, the 9th, 11th, 20th or 21st, 17th, 5th, 4th, 3d, 18th, 27th, and 28th. The sixth day was called by Galen, the Tyrant, τυραννος, because the crises, that happened then, were generally unfavourable. After this, the most unfavourable were the 8th, 10th, 12th, 16th, and 19th. The 13th was a sort of neutral day, the crises, which happened on it, being neither favourable nor unfavourable.

Days were, also, divided into Intercalary, in which the crises happened less frequently, and were less complete than on the critical or indicatory;—and into vacant and non-decretory, in which a crisis hardly ever occurred.

According to this division, they were enumerated as follows.

|                             |   |
|-----------------------------|---|
| Critical days ,      | 7th, 14th, 20th, 27th, 34th,40th, 60th, &c. |
| Indicatory days ,    | 4th, 11th, 17th, 24th, &c.                      |
| Intercalary days ,   | 3d, 5th, 6th, 9th, &c.                          |
| Non-decretory days , | 2d, 8th, 10th, 12th, 13th,&c.               |

Fortunate crises were considered to be indicated by favourable signs appearing three days before.

CROCHET, Crotchet.

CROCIDISMUS, Carphologia.

CROCIDIXIS, Carphologia.

CROCINUM, from κροκος, 'saffron.' Made with saffron; coloured with saffron.

CROCO'DES, from κροκος, 'saffron,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' Certain trochs into which saffron entered as an ingredient.—Paulus of Ægina.

CROCODY'LEA, Stercus Lacer'ta. The excrements of the crocodile, which the Arabists extolled as a remedy for cutaneous diseases, and which was long used as a cosmetic.

CROCODILUM, Echinops.

CROCOMA'GA, from κροκος, 'saffron,' and μαγνα, 'a kneaded or squeezed mass.' A kind of troch, composed of saffron and spices.—Galen, Dioscorides, Paulus of Ægina, Scribonius Largus.

CROCUS, C. sativus, C. Austriacus, Medic'na Tristit'ie, Panac'la vegetal'is, Zoffran, An'ima Pulv'num, C. Orient'alis, Saffron, Orcer, Irideæ. (F.) Safran. The stigmata are the parts used in medicine. They are brought from the East. The odour is aromatic, and the taste aromatic, pungent, and bitter:—the colour deep orange red. Its virtues are yielded to alcohol, wine, vinegar, and water. Its operation has been considered stimulant, exhilarating, and diaphoretic. It is not much used.

There is a Cake Saffron sometimes met with. It consists of one part of saffron and nine of marigold, made into a cake with oil; and pressed.

CROCUS, COLCOTHAR—c. Antimonii, Oxydum stibii sulphuratum—c. Germanicus, Carthamus tinctorius—c. Indicus, Curcuma longa—c. Martis astringens, Colcothar—c. Martis aperiens, Ferri subcarbonas—c. Martis vitriolatus, Colcothar—c. Metallorum, Oxydum stibii sulphuratum—c. Saracenicus, Carthamus tinctorius.

CROISÉ (F.) Crossed. An epithet given to paralysis, when it attacks the arm of one side, and the leg of another.

CROISSANCE, Growth.

CROISSANCES, Waxing kernels.

CROISSANTS, Waxing kernels.

CROMMYON, Allium cepa.

CROMMYOXYREG'MIA, from ρομμυον, 'an onion,' οξυς, 'acid,' and ογγυμι, 'to break out.' Sour, fetid eructations, exhaling a smell similar to that of onions.

CROPALE, Nerium antidysentericum.

CROSSE DE L'AORTE, Arch of the aorta.

CROSSES PALMAIRES, Palmar arches.

CROSSWORD, Eupatorium perfoliatum.

CROTALOPHORUS, Crotalus horridus.

CROTALUS HORRIDUS, Crotalophorus.

The Rattlesnake, Cobra de Capello, (F.) Crotale. A venomous reptile of North America. Its poison is virulent. It is so called from the rattle in its tail. (Κροταλον, 'a rattle,' 'a small bell.')

CROTAPHÉ or CROTA'PHIUM, from ροταφος, 'temple.' Cephalalgia Pulsatilis. Cephalæa Pulsatilis, Sphyngocephalus. A pulsatory pain, chiefly in the temples, with drumming in the ears.

CROTAPHITES, Temporal muscle.

CROTAPHUS, Temple, Temporal bone.

CROTCHET, Hamus. A small hook or crook. (F.) Crochet. An obstetrical instrument, whose name indicates its shape; and which is used in the extraction of the fœtus, when it becomes necessary to destroy it to expedite delivery. Crotchets are differently formed; some are sharp, others blunt; some contained in a sheath, others naked.

CROTON BENZOE, Benjamin.

CROTON CASCARILLA, Cortex Eleutheria, Croton Eleutheria, Thus Judæorum, Chacarilla cortex, Cascarilla, Eluteria, Gasearilla. Order, Euphorbiacæ. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Monadelphia. (F.) Quinquina aromatica, Cascarille. The bark of the Croton Cascarilla of the Bahamas, Cortex Thuris, has a slightly aromatic odour, and bitterish, aromatic taste. The smoke has the odour of musk. The active parts are an essential oil and bitter extractive. They are completely extracted by proof spirit. It is tonic and stomachic. Dose, gr. xv to ʒss or more in powder.

CROTON ELECTHERIA, Croton cascarilla—c. Oil, Croton tiglium.

CROTON RACEMOSUM, Beendl. A small Malabar tree, whose aromatic root, boiled in oil of sesame, is employed, by the Orientals, as a liniment in headache and rheumatism.

CROTON TIGLIUM, Cudcl-Avanacu. A Ceylonese plant, every part of which is endowed with medicinal power. The root is a drastic cathartic: the wood, (Lignum Para'næ,) Paravana wood, and the seeds, have like virtues. The seeds have been long known under the names, Grana Molucæa, Tili Grana, and Grana Tiglii. From these seeds the Croton Oil, O'leum Tiglii is expressed. It is of a pale, brownish-yellow colour, and hot, biting taste; and is a most powerful drastic cathartic. Dose, from half a drop to three drops, made into pills with crumb of bread. It is also applied externally as a rubefacient, 3 or 5 drops being rubbed on the part; or one part of the oil and three parts of olive oil may be added together, and a little of this be rubbed on.

CROTONĒ, ροτρων. A fungus, which grows on trees. By extension, applied to a fungous tumour developed on the periosteum.

CROUP, Cynanche trachealis—c. Cerebral spasmodic, Carpo-pedal spasm.

CROUPION (F.) Uropygium, the Rump. The region of the coccyx. The crupper.

CROÛTE, Crusta—c. de Lait, Porrigo larvalis—c. Laituse, Porrigo larvalis.

CROÛTEUX, Crustacé.

CROWN, Cor'na, Steph'anē. In Anatomy, this name is given to parts of a circular form, which surmount other portions of the same body. Thus, the Crown of a Tooth, Cor'na Dentis, (F.) Couronne du Dent, is the portion of the tooth which projects above the gum.

CROWN OF THE GLANS, Cor'na glandis, (F.) Couronne du gland, is the round, almost circular, ring, which circumscribes the base of the glans.

THE CROWN OF THE TREPAN, Modiolus, (F.) Couronne de Trépan, is a species of saw, in form of a crown, or rather of a portion of a cylinder, having grooves on its external surface; and teeth at its lower extremity: the other being fitted to the handle of the trepan.

CROWN OF VENUS, Cor'na Ven'ris, Gutta Rosa'cea Syphilitica, (F.) Couronne de Vénus. Red, rosy pustules, dry or moist, on the face; and particularly on the forehead and temples, owing to constitutional syphilis.

CROWFOOT, BULBOUS-ROOTED, Ranunculus bulbosus—c. Marsh, Ranunculus scleratus—c. Meadow, Ranunculus acris—c. Water, smaller, Ranunculus Flammula.

CROWSBEAK-LIKE PROCESS, Coracoid process.

CRUCIAL, Crucial'is. Having the shape of a cross.

A CRUCIAL INCISION, (F.) Incision cruciale. An incision, made in the form of a cross. Often employed for exposing the cranium, for the purpose of applying the trepan.

CRUCIAL LIGAMENTS, (F.) Ligaments croisés, L. cruceiformes. Two strong ligaments within the knee-joint. The anterior passes obliquely from a depression anterior to the spine of the tibia to the posterior and inner part of the external condyle of the femur:—the other, the posterior, extends from the posterior part of the spine of the tibia to the anterior and outer part of the internal condyle.

CRUCIBLE, Crucibulum, Cati'nus fusorius, Tigilium, Albot, Cementerium. (F.) Creuset. A vessel of earth, silver, platina, gold, black-lead, &c., for receiving substances, which have to be exposed to a strong heat. It is sometimes covered with a top or lid, (F.) Couvercle.

CRUCIFORM, Cruciformis, Cross-shaped. A name given to the ligaments, which close the articulations of the phalanges; and likewise to the crucial ligaments.

CRUDITY, Cru'ditas, from crudus, 'crude,' 'unprepared.' Rawness, crudeness. This word has received several acceptations. 1. It expresses the quality of certain aliments, which have not experienced the action of fire. 2. The condition of matters in the digestive tube, which have not undergone the digestive changes: and, 3. In the language of the Humorists, it means the condition of the morbid matter in a sick individual, when it has not yet been prepared or concocted by the action of the organs.

The word is used in the plural, Crudities, synonymously with crude matters. It is applied to those, when contained in the stomach and intestines.

CRUENTA EXPUITIO, Hæmoptysis.

CRUOR. The signification of this word is very vague. It has been used to designate blood (q. v.) in general, venous blood, extravasated or coagulated blood, and the colouring matter.

CRUOR SANGUINIS, see Blood.

CRUORINE, Hæmatine.

CRUPPER, Croupion.

CRUPSIA, Metamorphopsia.

CRURA. The plural of Crus, 'a leg.' (F.) Cuisse. Applied to some parts of the body, from their resemblance to a leg or root; as the Crura cerebri, Crura cerebelli, &c.

CRURA ANTERIORA MEDULLÆ OBLONGATÆ, Peduncles of the brain—c. Medullæ oblongatæ, Corpora restiformia—c. Medullæ oblongatæ, Thalami nervorum optico-rum—c. Posteriora medullæ oblongatæ, Peduncles of the cerebellum.

CRURÆUS, Cruralis.

CRURAL, Cruralis, from crus, 'the thigh and the lower limb.' What belongs to the thigh or lower limb.

CRURAL OF INGUINAL ARCH, (F.) Arcade crurale, A. inguinale (Ch.),—POUPART'S Ligament, L. of Fallopius. This arch is formed by the internal portion of the inferior edge of the aponeurosis of the obliquus externus muscle, which is attached, at one end, to the pubis; at the other, to the anterior and superior spinous process of the ilium. At its posterior and inner part, the aponeurosis, forming the arch, sends off a falciform reflection, which is attached along the crest of the pubis, and is known under the name of GIMBERNAT'S Ligament. Beneath this arch, the vessels, nerves, and muscles make their exit from the pelvis to the thigh.

CRURAL OF FEMORAL CANAL or RING. M. Jules Cloquet has described this canal with minuteness; and given it the name Anneau crural, Anneau femoral. It is nearly an inch long, is triangular, more spacious above than below, and shorter and broader in the female than in the male. Its upper orifice is bounded, anteriorly, by the crural arch, posteriorly, by the crista of the pubis, on the outer side by the psoas and iliacus muscles, covered by the iliac aponeurosis, and, at the inner, by GIMBERNAT'S ligament. This orifice is covered by the peritoneum, and, according to M. Cloquet, is closed by a more or less resisting septum, which he has named, Septum crurale. In its course, the crural canal has its anterior paries formed by the superficial expansion of the fascia lata; the posterior by the pectineus, covered by the deep-seated expansion of the fascia; and more externally by the psoas and iliacus muscles, covered by an expansion of the fascia iliaca. Its inferior orifice is formed by the foramen of the fascia lata, which gives passage to the vena saphæna. It is at the upper orifice of this canal, that Femoral or Crural Hernia, the Hernia inguinale of Chaussier, occurs; which would be more common, were it not for the fibrous cellular septum there situate.

THE CRURAL or FEMORAL ARTERY, (F.) Artère crurale, A. Pelvi-erurale,—(Ch.), is the continuation of the external iliac. It extends from the crural arch to the aperture in the triceps, or to the ham. Chaussier applies the name Artère crurale to the trunk, which extends from the primitive or common iliac to the tibial arteries; embracing, of course, the external iliac, femoral, and popliteal.

THE FEMORAL or CRURAL VEIN has the same arrangement as the artery. It receives only one great branch, the saphæna.

THE CRURAL NERVE proceeds from the lumbar plexus, and is situate at the outer side of the psoas muscle and crural artery. After it has passed under the crural arch, it divides into cutaneous and muscular branches. One of the branches, which is larger than the rest, is called the Saphæna nerve. It gives off filaments to the integuments of the knee, to the inner part of the leg, and to the dorsal surface of the foot. The remainder of the branches of the crural are distributed to the anterior and inner part of the thigh.

ACCESSORY OF THE CRURAL NERVE, is a term given to the 4th and 5th pairs of lumbar nerves.

THE CRURAL PLEXUS of Chaussier is the union of the anterior branches of the four last pairs of lumbar nerves, and the four first sacral;—forming the lumbar and sacral plexuses of most anatomists.

CRURAL, Triceps cruris.

CRURÆUS or CRURÆUS. A part of the Triceps crural of the French, or of the Trifémoro-rotulien of Chaussier. The Cruralis is situate at the anterior, outer, and inner part of the thigh. It arises, fleshy, from between the two trochanters, adheres firmly to most of the fore part of the os femoris; and is inserted, tendinous, into the upper part of the patella, behind the rectus. Its use is to assist the vasti and rectus in the extension of the leg. Under Muscle Triceps Crural, the French describe the cruralis and the two vasti. Some small muscular slips, sometimes found under the cruræus muscle, and inserted into the capsular ligament of the knee-joint, have been called Sub-eruræi.

CRURIS RADIUS, Fibula.

CRUS, Leg, Thigh.

CRUST, Eschar.

CRUSTA. A crust or scab, (F.) Croûte. An assemblage of small flakes, formed by the drying up of a fluid secreted by the skin.

The lining membrane of the stomach and intestines has been called Crusta villosa.

CRUSTA ADAMANTINA DENTIUM, Enamel of the teeth.

CRUSTA GENU EQUINÆ, Sweat, or Knee Scab, Mock or Encircled Hoof Knees, Hangers, Devil Claws, Night Eyes, Horse Crust. This morbid secretion from the horse has been advised in cases of epilepsy. It is used in the form of powder, (gr. ij to gr. xx;) and of tincture.

CRUSTA INFLAMMATOARIA, Corium phlogisticum—c. Lactea, Porrigo larvalis—c. Membranacea, Peristroma—c. Petrosa, see Tooth—c. Phlogistica, Corium phlogisticum—c. Pleuretica, Corium phlogisticum—c. Pruriginosa, Gutta rosea—c. Serpiginosa, Gutta rosea—c. Vermicularis, Peristroma—c. Villosa linguæ, see Tongue.

CRUSTACÉ, (F.) Alibert has substituted this word, in his Nosology, for croûteux, 'crusty.' Having crusts or scabs; as Dartre crustacée.

CRUSTULA. A small shell or scab. An ecchymosis of the conjunctiva.

CRUSTUMINA'TUM. A rob, prepared from the Pyra Crustumina or Crustumerna (so called from Crustumium, a town in Italy, where they grew,) boiled with honey or in rain-water.—Aëtius.

CRUX CERVI. An ancient appellation for the bone in the heart of the stag. It was once considered useful in diseases of the heart.

CRY, Clamour, (F.) Cri. The sound of the unarticulated voice. The native voice, which the idiot and deaf possess equally with the man of genius and hearing. The cry of the newborn child has been called Vagitus, (F.) Vagissement. We say, "A cry of joy, of pleasure, of pain," &c., according to the expression, which it may convey to the hearer.

CRYMÓDES, from κρυμος, 'cold.' A continued fever, in which the internal parts feel hot, and the external cold; and which was attributed to an erysipelatos inflammation of the lungs—Aëtius, Gorræus.

CRYMODIN'IA, from κρυμος, 'cold,' and οδυνη, 'pain.' Chronic rheumatism, and all its modifications—Baumes.

CRYMÓSIS, from κρυμος, 'cold.' Diseases caused by the action of cold.—Baumes.

CRYP'SOR'CHIS, from κρυπτω, 'I conceal,' and ορχις, 'a testicle,' Cryptor'chis, Testicondus. One in whom the testes have not descended into the scrotum. The state is called Cryptorchidismus, Parorchidium.

CRYPTA, from κρυπτος, 'concealed.' Folliculose gland. Lacuna, Folliculus, (F.) Crypte, Follicule. A crypt or follicle is a small, roundish, hollow body, situate in the substance of the skin or mucous membranes, and constantly pouring the fluid, which it secretes, on their surfaces.

The use of the cryptal or follicular secretion, is to keep the parts, on which it is poured, supple and moist, and to preserve them from the action of irritating bodies, with which they have to come in contact.

The little rounded appearances at the ends of the small arteries, in the cortical substance of the kidney, are also called Cryptæ.

CRYPTÉ, Crypta.

CRYPTOCEPHALUS, from κρυπτος, 'concealed,' and κεφαλη, 'head.' A monster whose head is excessively small, and does not appear externally.—G. St. Hilaire.

CRYPTOPY'IC, Cryptophyicus, from κρυπτω, 'I conceal,' and πυον, 'pus.' A state of disease, kept up by an occult abscess.

CRYPTOPHYICUS, Cryptopyic.

CRYPTORCHIS, Crypsochis.

CRYPTS, SYNOVIAL, Bursæ mucosæ.

CRYSTAL, MINERAL, Potassæ nitras fusus sulphatis paucillo mixtus.

CRYSTALLI. Vesicles, filled with a watery fluid. They are also called crystal'linæ. Probably the pemphigus of modern writers.

CRYSTALLI LUNÆ, Argenti nitras.

CRYSTALLIN, Crystalline.

CRYSTALLINE, Crystal'linus. Having the appearance of crystal.

The CRYSTALLINE, Cryst'alline humour C. Lens, Cryst'alline body, Cryst'allinus, Lens crystal'lina, Lens crystalloides vel Corpus crystal'linum, C. Discoïdes, C. Crystalloïdes, C. Phacoïdes, Humor crystal'linus, H. glaci'lis, Gemma Oculi, (F.) Crystallin ou Crystallin, Humeur crystal'line, Corps crystal'lin, Lentille crystal'line. A lenticular, transparent body, situate between the vitreous and aqueous humours of the eye, at the union of the anterior third with the two posterior thirds of this organ. It is composed of a soft, exterior substance; and an interior, forming a solid nucleus, in which a number of elliptical layers are perceptible. It is contained in a capsule, called Tunica aranea vel crystal'lina, and receives, at its posterior surface, a small branch of the central artery of the retina, which is always readily distinguishable in the fœtus, prior to the 7th month of utero-gestation.

The use of the crystalline is to refract the rays of light, and to serve as an achromatic glass: for which its laminæ or layers, composed of substances of different refractive powers, admirably adapt it.

CRYSTALLINA, from κρυσταλλος, 'crystal.' A vesicle or phlyctæna, filled with serum, and appearing on the prepuce or in the vicinity of the anus, surrounded by a reddish extravasated aureola. It may be syphilitic or not. See Crystalli.

CRYSTALLION, Plantago psyllium.

CRYSTALLOID, Crystalloïdes, from κρυσταλλος, 'crystal,' and ειδος, 'form,' 'resemblance.' Resembling crystal or the crystalline. The capsule or membrane of the crystalline, also, the crystalline itself.

CRÝSTALLUS MINERALIS, Potassæ nitras fusus sulphatis paucillo mixtus.

CRÝTHE, Hordeolum.

CTEDON, Fibre.

CTEIS, Phæus.

CTESIPHON'TIS MALAG'MA. A plaster, employed and described by Celsus.

CUBAL SINI, Piper cubeba.

CUBE' PEPPER, Piper cubeba.

CUBIFORMIS, Cuboid.

CUBIT, Ulna—c. Top of the, Olecranon.

CUBITAL, Cubital'is. Connected with, or relating to the cubitus, or to the inner and posterior part of the forearm.

The CUBITAL ARTERY, Ar'teria cubital'is, A. ulna'ris, arises from the humeral a little below the bend of the elbow; proceeds along the anterior and inner part of the forearm; passes anterior to the ligamentum annulare of the carpus, and goes to form, in the palm of the hand, the superficial palmar arch. Besides the numerous muscular branches, which it gives off in its course, it sends, posteriorly, the common trunk of the interosseous arteries, and internally, the two cubital recurrents, anterior and posterior,—articular branches, which anastomose on the inside of the elbow with the divisions of the humeral artery.

The DEEP-SEATED CUBITAL VEINS and the recurrent cubital veins accompany the corresponding arteries.

The SUPERFICIAL CUBITAL VEINS belong to the basilic. Chaussier calls them cutaneous cubital.

The CUBITAL MUSCLES are two in number. 1. The Cubitalis anterior, C. internus, Flexor carpi ulnaris, Ulnaris internus, Epitrochleo-cubito-carpicus, Cubito-carpicus—(Ch.), is a long muscle, situate at the interior and inner part of the forearm. It arises from the inner condyle of the os humeri, at the inner side of the olecranon, and from the posterior edge of the ulna, and is inserted, by a tendon, into the os pisiforme. Its use is to bend the hand on the forearm, by directing it slightly inwards. 2. The Cubitalis posterior or exter'nis, Extensor Carpi ulnaris, Ulnaris exter'nis, Cubitus exter'nis, Cubitosus-metacarpicus—(Ch.), is situate at the posterior part of the forearm. It arises from the external condyle of the os humeri, and is inserted into the superior extremity of the fifth bone of the metacarpus. Its use is to extend the hand, inclining it a little inwards.

The CUBITAL NERVE, Ulnar nerve, Cubito-digitalis—(Ch.), is furnished by the two or three last nerves of the brachial plexus, and is distributed to the inner and anterior side of the forearm; to the inner part of the palm and of the back of the hand, and to the two or three last fingers.

CUBITALE (OS), Cuneiform bone.

CUBITALIS RIOLANI. See Anconeus.

CUBITEUS EXTERNUS. See Cubital muscles.

CUBITO-CARPIEN, see Cubital muscles—c. Cutané (nerf), Cutaneous nerve—c. Phalangien commun, Flexor profundus perforans—c. Rudi-sus-metacarpicus du pouce, Abductor longus pollicis—c. Radial, Pronator radii quadratus.

CUBITO-SUPRA-PALMARIS. Belonging to the cubitus and to the supra-palmar or dorsal surface of the hand. Chaussier gives this name: 1. To a small artery, which is given off by the cubital or ulnar, a little above the wrist. 2. To a vein, which accompanies this artery.

CUBITO-SUS-MÉTACARPIEN, see Cubital muscles—c. Sus-metacarpicus du pouce, Abductor longus pollicis—c. Sus-phalangien de l'index, Extensor proprius indicis—c. Sus-phalangien du pouce, E. longus pollicis—c. Sus-phalangien du pouce, E. pollicis brevis.

CUBITUS, κῦβιτον, Cybiton. The Elbow, (q. v.) Also, one of the bones of the forearm. See Ulna, and Forearm.

CUBITUS, (F.) Coudée; the ancient name of a measure 18 inches long.

CUBOID, Cuboïdes, Cubiformis, Cyboïdes, Cyrtoides, Grandino'sum Os, Tes'sura, Tesseræ os, Os rorium, from κῦβος, 'a cube,' and εἶδος, 'form.' Having the form of a cube. This name was given, by Galen, to one of the bones of the tarsus, and is still retained. It is situate at the anterior and outer part of the tarsus; and is articulated, behind, with the calcaneum; before, with the two last metatarsal bones, and within, with the third os cuneiforme, and sometimes with the scaphoides. Its inferior surface has an oblique groove for the tendon of the peroneus longus.

CUCKOW FLOWER, Cardamine pratensis.

CUCKOWBREAD, Oxalis acetosella.

CUCKOW PINT, Arum maculatum.

CUCU'BALUS BEHEN, Echen officinà'rum.

This plant was once considered alexipharmic and cordial. It is the Spalling Poppy.

CUCULA'TUM MAJUS. A barbarous term, used by Ruland for brandy and spirit of wine.

CUCULLARIS, Trapezius.

CUCULLATA, Sanicula.

CUCULLUS, Couvre-chef, Cucupha, Infundibulum of the cochlea.

CUCULUS, Coccyx.

CUCUMBER, Cucumis sativus—c. Squirting or wild, Momordica elaterium—c. Tree, Magnolia acuminata.

CUCUMER, Cucumis sativus.

CUCUMIS AGRESTIS, Momordica elaterium—c. Asininus, Momordica elaterium.

CUCUMIS COLOCYN'THIS. The official name of the Colocynth or Bitter Apple. Colocynthis, Coloquin'tida, Bitter Gourd, Bitter Cucumber, (F.) Coloquinte. Family, Cucurbitaceæ. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Monadelphia. A Turkey and Cape of Good Hope plant. The spongy part or medulla of the fruit, Colocynthis Pulpa, Cucumeris Colocynthis Pulpa, has a bitter, nauseous, and acrimonious taste; and is a strong cathartic, acting chiefly on the upper part of the intestines. It is scarcely ever used, except in combination.

CUCUMIS MELO. The systematic name of the Melon Plant, Melo, Common Melon. (F.) Melon. The fruit is an agreeable article of diet, but not very digestible, unless when ripe. The seeds possess mucilaginous properties.

CUCUMIS SATIVUS. The systematic name of the Cucumber plant, Cucumis, Angourion, Citroolus, Cucumber, (F.) Concombre ordinaire. The cucumber is used, when young, as a pickle, when it is called a Gherkin. (F.) Cornichon. It is not a fruit easy of digestion. The seeds are mucilaginous.

CUCUMIS SYLVESTRIS, Momordica elaterium.

CUCUPHA, Cucullus, Pileus, Succulus cephalicus. A sort of coif or cap, with a double bottom, between which is enclosed a mixture of aromatic powders, having cotton for an excipient. It was formerly used as a powerful cephalic.

CUCURBITA, Cupping glass.

CUCURBITA CITRULLUS. The systematic name of the Water-melon plant. Citrullus, Anguria, Tetranguria, Sicilian Citrill, Watermelon. Family, Cucurbitaceæ; Sex. Syst. Monœcia Monadelphia. (F.) Melon d'eau, Pastèque. The juice of this fruit is very abundant, whence its name. The Water-Melon is extremely refreshing and agreeable, when made cool, and is eaten like the common melon. It is very much used in the United States.

CUCURBITA PEPO. The systematic name of the Common Pompion. Cucurbita. The seeds of this plant, as well as those of the Cucurbita lagenaria or Bottle-gourd, contain a large proportion of oil, capable of forming emulsions: but they are not used.

Both the fruit of the Cucurbita lagenaria,

(F.) Calebasses,) and that of the Cucurbita Pepo, (F.) Potiron, Courge,) are caten.

CUCURBITAIN, Cucurbitinus.

CUCURBITINUS, (F.) Cucurbitain. This name was formerly given to the Tœnia solium, because composed of rings which resemble the seeds of the gourd, cucurbita.

The ancients believed that the rings, which are sometimes discharged, were so many separate worms.—See Tœnia.

CUCURBITULA, Cupping-glass.

CUCURBITULÆ CRUENTÆ, Cupping with the scarificator—c. cum Ferro, Cupping with the scarificator—c. Siccæ, Cupping, dry.

CUILLERÉE, Cochleare.

CUIR, Corium.

CUISSART. See Cornu aminonis.

CUISSE, Thigh, Crus—c. postérieure du cercelet, Corpus restiforme.

CUISSON. (F.) A smarting, burning pain.

CUIVRE, Cuprum—c. et Ammoniaque sulfatée de, Cuprum ammoniatum—c. Limailles de, see Cuprum—c. Sous-acétate de, Cupri subacetat—c. Sulfate de, Cupri sulphas.

CUIVREUX. (F.) Copper-coloured. Teint cuivrez; a copper-coloured complexion, such as is observed in cancerous affections. Syphilitic ulcers of the throat, &c. are often copper-coloured.

CUJETE, Crescentia cujete.

CULBIC'IO. A Latin word, employed by old writers, as synonymous with ardor urinæ and gonorrhœa.

CULBUTE. (F.) A movement, which the fetus has been supposed to execute, at the end of the 7th month of utero-gestation; and by means of which, it was presumed, the head presented towards the orifice of the uterus: a change of situation, which is impracticable in ordinary circumstances.

CULEUS; a measure, containing 20 barrels or 40 urns, equal to 180 gallons.—Pliny, Goræus.

CULEX, (F.) Cousin. A genus of insects, unhappily too well known in almost every part of the world, on account of their bites, which give rise to painful, local inflammation. The gnats and mosquitoes belong to this genus.

CULI FLOS, Cardamine pratensis.

CULINARY ART. Cookery, Res culinaria, Res coquaria, Ars culinaria, A. coquinaria, Magceirice, μαγειρικη. The art of preparing meats for the table. In judging of the dietetic properties of various kinds of aliment, the culinary process to which they have been subjected will always have to be considered. Many of the writers on the culinary art have been physicians.

CULLITLAWAN, Laurus culilawan.

CUTELLAIRE, (F.) from Cutellus, a 'little knife.' Le couteur cutellaire, known also under the name Couteau de feu, Fire-knife, is used for what the French term the Couteur transcurrente. (See Cauterization.) It is shaped like a small hatchet.

CUTELLUS, Culter, Knife—c. Anceps, Knife, double-edged—c. Uncus, Knife, crotch.

CULTER, Cutellus, from colo, 'I cultivate.' A coulter, a knife, (q. v.) scalpel, (q. v.) machæra, machæron, machæris. Also, the third lobe of the liver, so called, from some fancied resemblance.—Theophilus Protospatarius.

CULTER CURVUS, Knife, crooked—c. Falcatus, Knife, crooked—c. Lenticularis, Knife, lenticular—c. Rectus, Knife, amputation.

CULTRIVOROUS, Cultrivorus, from culter, 'a knife,' and vorare, 'to devour.' Individuals, who have seemed to swallow knives with impunity, have been so called;—Knife-Eaters.

CULUS, Anus.

CUMAMUS, Piper cubeba.

CUMIN, Cuminum cyminum—c. des Près, Carum.

CUMINUM CYMINUM. The systematic name of the Cumin plant. Cuminum, Carnabadium. Family, Umbellifera. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. (F.) Cumin, Anis aigre. The seeds of the Cumin, which is a native of Egypt, have a warm, bitterish, disagreeable taste. Water extracts their odour, and spirit takes up both odour and taste. They are not used, except in a plaster, which bears their name.

When drunk in wine, the ancients believed they produced paleness; hence, Horace called the Cumin, esanguis; and Juvenal, pallens.—Dioscorides, Pliny.

CUMINUM NIGRUM, Nigella—c. Pratense, Carum.

CUMMIN, Cuminum cyminum.

CUMULUS, 'a heap or pile.' A rounded prominence, in the centre of the proligerous disc, in which there is a small opaque cavity, that contains the ovum.

CUNEA'LIS SUTU'RA. The suture, formed between the great and little alæ of the sphenoid bone and the os frontis.—Blasius.

CUNÉEN, (F.) Cuneanus. Relating to the cuneiform bones.

ARTICULATIONS CUNÉENNES;—the joints between the cuneiform bones, as well as between them and other parts,

LIGAMENTS CUNÉENS; the ligaments which hold the cuneiform bones together.

CUNEIFORM, Cuneiformis, Sphenoides, from cu'neus, 'a wedge,' and forma, 'shape.' Wedge-shaped. This name has been given to several bones. 1. To the sphenoid. 2. To a bone of the carpus, situate between the os lunare and os orbiculare. It is, also, called Os Pyramidalè, Os Triquetrum, and Os Cubitalè. 3. To the basilar process of the occipital bone: and 4. To three of the bones of the tarsus, which are distinguished, according to situation, reckoning from within outwards, into first, second, and third, or internal, middle, and external; and according to size, reckoning in the same order, into great, small, and middle-sized. The posterior surface of these bones is united to the anterior face of the scaphoides; the anterior surface with the corresponding metatarsal bones; and, in addition, the external surface of the third is articulated, behind, with the cuboidea. They are also called Chalehoidea or Calcœidea ossiculæ.

CUNEO-CUBOID, Cuneco-cubœides. Belonging to the cuneiform bones and cuboidea.

The CUNEO-CUBOID ARTICULATION is formed by the third cuneiform bone and cuboidea. It is furnished with a synovial capsule, and two cucoo-cuboid ligaments,—a dorsal and a plantar.

CUNEO-SCAPHOID. Cuneo-scaphoideus. Belonging to the cuneiform bones and scaphoid.

The CUNEO-SCAPHOID ARTICULATION, is formed by the posterior surfaces of the three ossa cuneiformia, and the anterior surface of the scaphoid. It is furnished with a synovial capsule and ligaments; some of which are dorsal, others plantar.

CUNILA, Satureia capitata—c. Bubula, Origanum—c. Muscula, Inula dysenterica—c. Sativa, Satureia hortensis.

CUNILAGO, Inula dysenterica.

CUNNUS, Vulva.

CUP, Scutella, Catillus, Patella, Excipula, (F.) Palette, Poëlette, Poëlette, Vase à saigner. A small vessel, of a determinate size, for receiving the blood during venæsection. It generally contains about four ounces. A bleeding of two cups is, consequently, one of eight ounces.

CUPIDO, Appetite.

CUPOLA. See Infundibulum of the cochlea.

CUPPING. A species of blood-letting, performed by a scarificator and glass, called a cupping-glass; Cucurbitula, Cucurbita, iszva, Sicua, (F.) Ventouse. The lancets are placed in such a manner, in the scarificator, that, when it is applied upon the affected part, the whole are, by means of a spring, pushed suddenly into it. After scarification, the cupping-glass, which has been previously exhausted by heat, or by an exhausting syringe, is applied. The pressure of the air within the glass being thus diminished, the necessary quantity of blood may be drawn. See Bdellometer.

Dry cupping, Cucurbitula sicca, is the application of the glasses, without previous scarification, (F.) Ventouses sèches. It is used to prevent the activity of absorption from any wounded part; occasionally, to excite suppuration in indolent abscesses; and to remove the pus when an abscess is opened. Cupping, taken without any epithet, means the abstraction of blood by means of the scarificator and cups. (F.) Ventouses scarifiées, (L.) Cucurbitula cruentæ, C. cum Ferro. The verb 'to cup,' signifies to draw blood by cupping.

CUPRES'SUS SEMPERVIRENS. The systematic name of the Cupres'sus, Cyparis'sus, Cypress, (F.) Cyprés. The berries, leaves, and wood, have been considered astringent and useful in intermittents. The whole plant abounds with a bitter, aromatic, and terebinthinate fluid.

CUPRI ET AMMONIÆ SULPHAS, Cuprum ammoniatum—c. Diacetas, E. Subacetas—c. Rubigo, Cupri subacetas.

CUPRI SUBACETAS, C. Diacetatas, Æru'go, Ver'digris, Hispanicum viridē, Prasinum viridē, Cupri Rubi'go, Crystals of Venus, Viridē Æris, Æruca, Calcithos. Subacetate of Copper, (F.) Sous-acétate de Cuivre, Vert-de-gris, Cristaux de Venus, Verdet. This, as usually met with, is in masses, difficult to break; not deliquescent; foliaceous; of a fine bluish-green colour, and salt taste. It is tonic, emetic, escharotic, and detergent; but scarcely ever employed internally. Chiefly used in detergent ointments. Dose, as a tonic, under  $\frac{1}{2}$  gr.: emetic, from gr. j to gr. ij.

Powdered verdigris appears to be the active ingredient in Smellome's Eye-Salve, which may be imitated by rubbing half a drachm of finely powdered verdigris with a little oil, and then mixing it with an ounce of yellow balsicon.

An ointment composed of one drachm of finely powdered verdigris, with an ounce of lard or spermaceti ointment, is used in psoriasis, tetter, &c.

CUPRI SULPHAS, Vitriolum Cupri, Vitriolum Ver'cris, V. Cyprium, V. Cyprium, V. Cæruleum, V. Romanum, Cuprum Vitriolatum, Lapis Cæruleus, Sulphate of Copper, Blue Stone, Blue Vitriol, Roman Vitriol, Mortooth, (F.) Sulfate de Cuivre, is in rhomboidal, rich blue, semitransparent, efflorescing crystals. The taste is harsh, styptic, and corrosive. It is soluble in four parts of water at 60°, and is tonic, emetic, astringent, and escharotic. As a tonic, it has been used in epilepsy, intermittents, &c.

Dose, as a tonic, gr.  $\frac{1}{4}$  to gr. ij in pill; as an emetic, gr. ij to x in water. A very weak solution is sometimes used in ophthalmia and in gleet; and it forms the basis of BATFS's Aqua camphorata which has been recommended in the purulent ophthalmia of children, diluted with sixteen parts of water.

CUPRI SULPHAS AMMONIACALIS, Cuprum ammoniatum—c. Vitriolum, Cupri sulphas.

CUPRUM, Chalcos, Æs, Venus of the Alchymists: Copper, Cyprium, (F.) Cuivre. Its odour is peculiar and sensible when rubbed; taste disagreeable and metallic; colour red-yellow. S. g. 7.87: ductile, very malleable: less hard than iron: easily oxidized. In its metallic state, it exerts no action on the system. When swallowed, it undergoes no deleterious change. Copper cannot be dissolved whilst tin is in the mixture, and hence the utility of tinning copper vessels. Copper culinary vessels are harmless under ordinary cleanliness, provided the substances be not suffered to remain in them till cold. The salts of copper are very deleterious.

THE FILINGS OF COPPER, Cupri Limatura, (F.) Limailles de Cuivre, have been used in hydrophobia. It has been remarked, under Cuprum, that they are inert.

CUPRUM AMMONIATUM, C. Ammoniacale, C. Ammoniacum, C. Ammoniac-sulphuricum, Ammoniated Copper, Ammoniacal Sulphate of Copper, Ammoniated Cupri, Sal anti-epilepticus of WEISSMAN, Sulfas Cupri ammoniacalis, S. ammoniacæ cupratūs, Sub-sulfas Ammonio-cupricus, Sulfas Cupri et Ammoniacæ, Deuto-Sulfas Cupri et Ammoniacæ, (F.) Sulfate de cuivre et d'ammoniaque. A crystalline powder, of a rich violet colour, and hot, styptic taste. By exposure to air, it becomes partly converted into carbonate of copper. It is tonic and astringent; and has been chiefly employed in epilepsy, and other obstinate spasmodic diseases. Dose, gr.  $\frac{1}{4}$  gradually increased to gr. iv, in pill.

CUPRUM VITRIOLATUM, Cupri sulphas.

CUPULAIRE, (F.) Cupularis; from cupula, 'a small cup.'

The CUPULAR CAUTERY, Cautère cupulaire, is an iron in the shape of a cupula, formerly used to cauterize the skin of the cranium in certain diseases, as epilepsy, chronic headache, &c.

CURA, CURATIO. Attention to, or treatment or cure of, a disease. R. Keuchen defines Cura, 'medicine,' and Curator, 'the physician.' Curatio, also, sometimes means purification; as, Adepsuilla curata.—Scribonius Largus.

CURA AVENA'CEA. A decoction of oats and succory roots, in which a little nitre and sugar are dissolved. Used as a refrigerant.

CURA MEDANA, Transfusion.

CURABLE, Sanabilis, Acestor, Iusimos, (F.) Guérissable. That which is susceptible of cure. An epithet applied to both patients and diseases.

CURARE. A very energetic, vegetable poison, employed by the South American Indians to poison their arrows. It is obtained from the bark of a species of convolvulus, called Vejuco de Maracure.

CURATIO, (F.) Cura'tio, Mede'ta, Sanat'io, Ac'esis, Althex'is, Althax'is, Therape'ia, Iasis, &c. The aggregate of means employed for the cure of a disease. See Therapeutics.

CURATIVE, San'ative. Relating to the cure of a disease. Curative Indications are those which point out the treatment to be employed. Curative Treatment, that employed in the cure of the disease, in opposition to preservative or prophylactic treatment. We say, also, Curative Process, Curative Means, &c.

CURATOR INFIRMORUM, Infirmer.

CURCUMA LONGA, Cur'cuma, Borri, Bor'riborri, Bober'ri, (Hindusthan.) Crocus Indicus, Terra Merita, Cannacorus radice crocea, Family, Amomæ. Ser. Syst. Monandria Monogynia. Muye'la, Kua Kaha, Turmeric, (F.) Racine de Safran, Safran des Indes, Souchet des Indes. Turmeric root is brought from the East Indies; but is possessed of very little, if any, medicinal efficacy. It is one of the ingredients in the Curry powder.

CURDS, Curds of Milk, (F.) Caillotte, Lait caillé. Milk, decomposed by some agent.

CURE; from cura, 'care.' Cura'tio felix, Sanat'io, Sanitas, (F.) Guérison. A restoration to health; also, a remedy. A restorative.

CUREDENT, Denticulipium.

CURE-LANGUE, (F.) Lingua scap'pium. A Tongue-scaper. An instrument of ivory, tortoise-shell, &c., shaped like a knife or rasp, for removing the mucous coating, which covers the tongue after sleep, &c.

CURE-OREILLE, Earpick.

CURETTE, Scoop.

CURMI, Courmi.

CURRANT, BLACK, Ribes nigrum—c. Red, Ribes rubrum.

CURRENTS. See Vitis Corinthiaca.

CURRY OR CURRIE POWDER. A condiment, formed of various spices; and eaten with rice, particularly in India. The following is one of the forms for its preparation. Sem. coriand, ℥xviii, pip. nigr. ℥ij, cuyen, ℥j, rud. curcuma, sem. cumini, aa ℥ij, sem. fœnugr. ℥iv: mix.

CURSUMA HÆMORRHODALIS HERBA, Ranunculus ficaria.

CURSUS, Running—c. Matricis, Leucorrhœa.

CURVAMEN, Curvature.

CURVATIO, Campsis.

CURVATOR COCCY'GIS. Sömmering gives this name to a small bundle of fleshy fibres, which descends from the middle of the coccyx, uniting on each side with the ischio-coccygei muscles. It is a part of those muscles.

CURVATURE, Curvat'ra, Curcu'men, from curvus, 'crooked,' Cyrtoma, (F.) Courbure. The condition of a line or surface, which approximates more or less to the form of an arc; as the curvatures of the spine, duodenum, stomach, &c. Accidental curvatures of bones are the effect of rickets, or Mollities ossium. The Greeks called the curvature of the spine, υβος, ακολιος, or λοσθος, according as the deviation was backwards, laterally, or forwards.

CURVED LINES, (F.) Courbes Lignes. Two crooked lines or projections on the posterior surface of the occipital bone. They are distinguished into superior and inferior. Some lines on the os innominatum are also so called.

CUSCUTA EPITHYMIUM. The systematic name of the Dodder of Thyme. Epithy'mum Cuscuta. It is a parasitical plant, possessed of a strong, disagreeable smell; and a pungent taste, very durable in the mouth. It was once used as a cathartic in melancholia.

The CUSCUTA EUROPEA, was conceived to possess similar properties.

CUSPARIA FEBRIFUGA, Bonplan'dia trifoliata, Angustura, Galip'ea febrifuga, Order, Rutaceæ. The South American tree, which furnishes the Cusparia or Angustura Bark, (F.) Angusture vraie, Quinquina faux de Virginic. Its odour is peculiar; taste intensely bitter, and slightly aromatic; pieces thin; externally, gray and wrinkled; internally, yellowish-fawn; fracture, short and resinous. It yields its virtues to water and proof spirit. It is tonic, stimulant, and aromatic. Dose, gr. v. to xx or more in powder.

CUSPIS. A spear. This name has been given to the glans penis, (q. v.)—Rolink. It meant, also, a kind of bandage.

CUSTODIA VIRGINITATIS, Hymen.

CUT, from (F.) couteur, 'a knife,' or from West Gothic kota, 'to cut;' or from κοττω, 'I cut.' Cas'ra, Tomē, Incis'io, Vulnus simplex, Tres vulnus simplex, Coup'e, (F.) Coupure. A common expression for the division or solution of continuity, made by a sharp instrument.

CUTAM'BULUS, from cutis, 'skin,' and ambulo, 'I walk.' Walking in the skin. An epithet given to certain parasitical animals, which creep under the skin; such as the Guinea-worm; and to certain pains felt between the skin and flesh, as it were.

CUTANEO-SOURCILIER, Corrugator supercilli.

CUTANEOUS, Cuta'neus, from cutis, 'the skin.' Belonging to the skin.

The CUTANEOUS or CUTANEAL NERVES, so called, are two in number, and belong to the upper extremity. They are cut off from the brachial plexus. The internus cutaneous, Cubito-cutané, (Ch.) descends along the inner part of the arm, and divides, above the elbow, into two branches; the outermost of which follows the outer edge of the biceps, and spreads over the anterior and inner part of the forearm; and the innermost accompanies the basilic vein; passing to the corresponding side of the hand and little finger. The external cutaneous, Rudio-cutané, (Ch.) Musculo-Cutaneus, Perforans CASSERI, passes outwards, perforates the coraco-brachialis; descends along the anterior and outer part of the arm; passes as far as the middle of the fold of the elbow, under the median cephalic; and descends along the anterior and outer edge of the forearm. At some distance above the wrist, it divides into two branches; an outer, which is distributed on the back of the hand, the thumb, and index finger; and an inner, which descends on the muscles of the thumb, into the palm of the hand, and divides into fine filaments, which may be traced to the fingers.

Chaussier calls the cephalic and basilic veins the Radial and Cubital Cutaneous.

The NERVUS CUTANEUS MINOR, of Wrisberg, also takes its origin from the axillary plexus, but is more particularly connected with the ulnar nerve. It soon separates from the ulnar nerve, running afterwards between it and the inner side of the arm. A little below the axilla it divides into two branches, which are distributed to the arm.

CUTANEUS EXHALATION AND ABSORPTION, are those which take place from the skin.

CUTANEUS DISEASES, Eruptions, Epiphyf-mata, are the numerous affections of a morbid character, to which the skin is liable.

CUTCH, Catechu.

CUTI, Catechu.

CUTICULA, Epidermis.

CUTIO, Oniscus.

CUTIS, Pellis, Corium, Dermis, Deris, Anthrope, Anthro'pen, Skin, (F.) Peau. A dense, resisting membrane, of a flexible and extensible nature, which forms the general envelope of the body; and is continuous with the mucous membranes, through the different natural apertures. It is formed of three distinct layers—the epidermis, rete mucosum, and corium. Some anatomists, however, separate it into several others. Its outer surface is covered by a number of small eminences, called papillæ, which are generally regarded as eminently nervous and vascular.

The skin is our medium of communication with external bodies. It protects the subjacent parts; is the seat of touch, and, through it, are exhaled the watery parts of the blood, which are not needed in the nutrition of the body.

The state of the skin, as regards heat and dryness, affords us useful information in our pathological investigations. Its colour, too, requires attention: the paleness of disease is as characteristic as the rosy complexion of health. The colour of the skin varies according to the age, sex, &c. As a general principle, it is finer in the female and child than in the male and adult. In old age it becomes light-coloured, thin, and dry. It likewise varies according to the races, &c.

CUTIS ANSERINA, Horrida cutis—c. Carnosa, Carnosus panniculus—c. Extima, Epidermis—c. Lingux, see Tongue—c. Suilla, Couennæ—c. Summa, Epidermis—c. Ultima, Epidermis.

CUTITIS, Erysipelatous inflammation.

CUTTING ON THE GRIPE. See Lithotomy.

CUTTLE FISH, Sepia.

CUTBUTH. The Arabian physicians have given the name to a species of melancholy, accompanied with so much agitation, that the patients cannot remain tranquil for the space of an hour.

CUURDO CANELLIA, Laurus cinnamomum.

CYANOP'ATHY, Cyanopath'ia, Cyano'sis, Morbus cæruleus, Cærule'sis neonato'rum, from κωρος, 'blue,' and παθος, 'affection,' (F.) Maladie bleue, Ictère bleu. A disease, in which the whole of the surface of the body is coloured blue. It is always symptomatic, and commonly depends on a direct communication between the cavities of the right and left side of the heart. Such communication does not, however, always occasion the blue disease, but it is generally thought that the disease never exists without this state of parts; or without some obstacle to the circulation in the right side of the heart.

CYANOSIS, Cyanopathy.

CYANUS, Centauria cyanus.

CYANUS ÆGYPTIACUS, Nymphaea nelumbo.

CYANURETUM FERRO-ZINCICUM, Zinci Ferro-hydrocyanas.

CYANUS SEG'ETUM, Bluebottle, (F.) Bluet des Moissons, Barbeau, Aubifoin, Casse-Lunettes. The flowers of this European plant, when distilled with water, have been used in ophthalmia.

CYAR, κωας, 'The eye of a needle,' 'a small hole.' The Meatus audit'rius internus. See Auditory Canal, (internal.)

CYATHIS'CUS, κωθισκος, diminutive of κωθος, 'a bowl.' The concave part of a sound, made like a small spoon, as in the case of the earpick.

CY'ATHUS, κωθος, 'a bowl.' A measure, both of the liquid and dry kind, equal to about an ounce and a half, or to the 10th part of a pint. According to Pliny and Galen, about 10 drachms.

CYATHUS CEREBRI, Infundibulum of the brain.

CYBE, Head.

CYBITON, Cubitus.

CYBOIDES, Cuboid.

CYCEON, κωκων, from κωκω, 'I mix together.' The ancient name of a medicine of the consistence of pap, composed of wine, water, honey, flour, barley meal, and cheese.—Hippocr.

CYCLAMEN EUROPÆUM, Arthan'ta, (q. v.) A. cyclamen, Cyclaminus, Cysson'themon, Cyssophyll'on, Panis porci'nus, Cas'amum, Chyl'ine, 'sow-bread.' Fam. Primulacæ. Sez. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. (F.) Pain de Pourceau. The fresh root is said to be acrid, bitter, drastic, and anthelmintic. Dose, ℥j. For external use, see Arthanita.

CYCLE, Cyclus, from κυκλος, 'a circle.' A period or revolution of a certain number of years. The Methodists gave this name to an aggregate of curative means, continued during a certain number of days. Nine was the usual number.

CYCLIS'MOS. A troch, Trochis'cos, (q. v.) The name was also given to a circular kind of rasp; as well as Cyclidiscus. They have the same etymon as cycle.

CYCLOCEPHALUS, from κυκλος, 'a circle,' and κεφαλή, 'head.' A monster, whose eyes are in contact, or united in one.

CYCLOPHORIA, from κυκλος, 'a circle,' and φερω, 'I bear.' The circulation (q. v.) of the blood or other fluids.

CYCLOPIA. Same etymon as Cyclops. State of a monster that has both eyes united into one. Called, also, Monopsia and Rhinencephalia.

CYCLOPS, κυκλωψ, from κυκλος, 'an orb or circle,' and ωψ, 'an eye.' Monop'ulus, Monops, Monophthal'mus, Monom'atos, Enioe'ulus, Uno'e'ulus. A monster having but one eye, and that placed in the middle of the forehead, like the fabulous Cyclops.

CYCLOTOME, Cyclot'omus, from κυκλος, 'a circle,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' An instrument, composed of a ring of gold and a cutting blade, by means of which the ball of the eye can be fixed, whilst the cornea is cut. It was invented by a surgeon of Bordeaux, named Guérin, for extracting the cataract. It is not used.

CYCLUS, Circulus.

CYDONIA'TUM, Cydo'natum, Diacydoni'tes. A composition of the Cydonia mala or quinces, with the addition of spices.—Paulus of Ægina.

CYDONIUM MALUM. See Pyrus cydonia.

CYE'MA, κυμα, from κυω, 'I conceive.' Conception. Likewise the product of conception. See Embryo and Fœtus.

CYESIOLOGY, Cyesiology'ia, from κυρις, 'pregnancy,' and λογος, 'a description.' The doctrine of Gestation.

CYESIS, Conception, Fecundation, Pregnancy.

CYLICH'NĒ, Cylich'nis. A pill-box or earthenware pot, or small cup; from κυλιξ, 'a cup.'—Galen, Foësius.

CYLINDRI, see Villosus membranes—C. Membranacea renum, see Calx.

CYLINDROID, Cylindroides from κυλινδρος, 'cylinder,' and ειδος, 'form.' Having the form of a cylinder. Chaussier calls the Cornu Ammonis.—Protuberance cylindroïde.

CYLINDROIDES, Teres.

CYLLO'SIS, κυλλωσις. 'Lameness, mutilation, or vicious conformation.'—Hippocrates. Galen. See Kyllosis.

CYMATO'DES, Undo'sus, from κυμα, 'a wave,' and ειδος, 'resemblance.' The vacillating, undulatory character of the pulse in weak individuals.

CYMBALARIS, Cricoid.

CYNANCHE, Angi'na, from κυν, 'a dog,' and αγω, 'I suffocate,' (?) Sore Throat, Paracynanchē, Paristh'nia, Synanchē, Prunella, Squinan'thia, Empres'na Paristh'm'itis, Cauma Paristh'm'itis, Isth'm'itis, Paristh'm'itis, 'Dog choak.' Inflammation of the supradiaphragmatic portion of the alimentary canal, and of the lining membrane of the upper part of the air-passages. (F.) Angine, Esquinancie, Mal de Gorge, Synancie, Squinancie, Kwancie. It comprises the following chief varieties.

CYNANCHE EPIDEMICA, Cynanche maligna—c. Faucium, C. tonsillar'is—c. Gangrænosa, Cynanche maligna—c. Laryngea, Laryngitis.

CYNANCHE MALIC'NA, C. gangræno'sa, Angi' na ulcerosa, Febris epidem'ica cum Angi'nâ, Empres'ma Paristh'm'itis Maligna, Tonsill'drum gangræ'na, Cynanchē epidem'ica, C. pur'puro-parotidæa, Cynanchē ulcerosa, Epidem'ica gutturis lues, Pes'tilens fav'cium affectus, Pædun'chonē, (?) Ulcus sp'iacum, Garrotillo, Carbunculus auginosus, C. Uleusculo'sa, Angina epidem'ica, A. gangræno'sa, A. malig'na, Putrid, Ulcerosus Sore Throat. (F.) Angine gangrænecuse, A. Maligne. It is characterized by crimson redness of the mucous membrane of the fauces and tonsils; ulcerations, covered with mucus, and spreading, sloughs, of an ash or whitish hue; the accompanying fever typhus. It is often epidemic, and generally contagious; and is frequently found accompanying scarlet fever, giving rise to the variety, Scarlatina maligna.

The general treatment is the same as in typhus; and stimulant antiseptic gargles must be used, consisting, for example, of the decoction of bark and muriatic acid.

CYNANCHE MAXILLARIS, c. parotidæa—c. Purpuro-parotidæa, Cynanche maligna.

CYNANCHE PAROTIDÆ'A, Empres'ma Parotit'is, Parotitis, Cynanchē Parotides, Angina Maxilla'ris, Gissa, Angina externa, Angi'naparotidæ'a exte'na, Parot'is epidem'ica, P. contagio'sa, P. spu'ria, Parot'is sero'so glutinē tu'mens, Cynanchē maxilla'ris, Inflammat'io parotidum, Inflammat'io parotidum, Catar'rhus Bellinsula'ris, Branks (Scotch.) Mumps, (F.) Oreillons. The characteristic symptoms are:—a painful tumour of the parotid gland, not of the suppurative kind; and frequently extending to the maxillary gland. It is very conspicuous externally, and is often accompanied with swelling of the testes in the male, and of the mammæ in the female; the testes being sometimes absorbed afterwards. It is epidemic, and apparently contagious. The treatment is very simple; the adoption merely of the antiphlogistic plan, under which it usually soon disappears. When inflammation of the mammæ or testes supervenes, it must be treated as if idiopathic.

CYNANCHE PHARYNGEA, Empres'ma Paristh'm'itis Pharyngea, Isth'm'itis, Pharyngit'is, Parasynanchē, Angina, inflammator'ia, Sp. iv.—(Boerhaave.) (F.) Angine Pharyngée, Catar'rhé pharyngien.

This disease can hardly be said to differ, in pathology or treatment, from the Cynanche tonsillar'is. The same may be remarked of the Cynanchē Œsophagea, Œsophagit'is.

CYNANCHE PRUNELLA, c. tonsillar'is.

CYNANCHE TONSILLA'RI'S, Empres'ma Paristh'm'itis Tonsilla'ris, Synanchē, Cynanchē fav'cium, Amygdali'tis, Tonsillit'is, Cynanchē Prunell'ia, Dysph'gia inflammato'ria, Antiaditis, Angina inflammato'ria, Common Squinancy, Squinsy or Quinsy, (F.) Amygdalite, Angine tonsillaire, Esquinancie, Squinancie, Catarrhé guttural, Angine gutturale. The characteristic symptoms of this affection are, swelling and florid redness of the mucous membrane of the fauces, and especially of the tonsils; painful and impeded deglutition, accompanied with inflammatory fever. It is generally ascribed to cold, and is one of the most common affections of cold and temperate climates. It usually goes off by resolution, but frequently ends in suppuration.

Common sore throat is an affection of no consequence. It requires merely rest, and the observance of the antiphlogistic regimen. When more violent—in addition to this;—purgatives, inhalation of the steam of warm water, acid, or emollient gargles; rubefacients externally, or sinapisms or blisters. When suppuration must inevitably occur, the continued use of the inhaler must be advised, and an opening be made into the abscess as soon as it shall have formed. If the patient is likely to be suffocated by the tumefaction, bronchotomy may be necessary.

CYNANCHE STRIDULA, C. trachealis.

CYNANCHE TRACHEALIS; the Cynanchē laryngēa of some. Suffocatio stridula, Angina perniciosa, Asthma Infantum, Cynanche stridula, Catarhus suffocatus Barbaden'sis, Angina polyposa sive membranaea sive pulposa, Empresma Bronchitis, Angina inflammatoria, A. suffocatoria, A. exsudatoria, Orthopnea cynanchica, Paden'chonē, (?) A. Trachealis, Morbus Strangulatorius, Trachitis, Tracheitis, Tracheitis, Diphtheritis trachealis, Expectoratio Solida, Caema Bronchitis, Angina canina, Croup, Hives, Chalk, Stuffing, Rising of the lights. A disease characterized by sonorous and suffocative breathing; harsh voice; cough, ringing or like the barking of a dog; fever, highly inflammatory. It is apt to be speedily attended with the formation of a false membrane, which lines the trachea beneath the glottis and occasions violent dyspnoea and suffocation, but is sometimes expectorated. The dyspnoea, as in all other affections of the air-passages, has evident exacerbations. It differs in its character in different situations; being infinitely more inflammatory in some places than in others, and hence the success obtained by different modes of treatment. It chiefly affects children, and is apt to recur, but the subsequent attacks are usually less and less severe.

As a general principle, it requires the most active treatment; bleeding from the arm or neck, so as to induce paleness; leeches applied to the neck, &c., according to the age,—the warm bath, blisters to the neck or chest, and purgatives. Formidable as the disease may be, if this plan be followed early, it will generally be successful. Many specifics have been recommended for it, but the search has been idle and fruitless.

CYNANCHE TRACHEALIS SPASMODICA, Asthma acutum—c. Ulcerosa, Cynanche Maligna.

CYNANCHICA. Medicines used in cases of quinsy were formerly so called.

CYNANCHUM. Same etymon. A genus of plants, of which the following are used in medicine.

CYNANCHUM VOMITORIUM, Ipecacuanha of the Isle of France. As its name imports, this plant resembles the ipecacuanha in properties. It is emetic, in the dose of from 12 to 24 grains in powder.

CYNANCHUM MONSPELIACUM, Scantmony of Montpellier. The plant furnishes a blackish kind of gum resin, which is purgative, and but little used.

CYNANTHEMIS, Anthemis cotula.

CYNANTHROPICIA, from κυνων, 'dog,' and ανθρωπος, 'a man.' A variety of melancholia, in which the patient believes himself changed into a dog; and imitates the voice and habits of that animal.

CYNARA or CINARA SCOLYMUS. The systematic name of the Artichoke, Alceolalum, Articoalus, Artiscoelus lavis, Costus nigra, Carduus Satiivus non spinosus, Cinara hortensis, Scolymus sativus, Carduus sativus, Carduus domesticus capitē majorē, Carduus altilis, (F.) Artichaut. Family, Carduaceæ. Sex. Syst. Syngenesia Polygamia æqualis. Indigenous in the southern parts of Europe; much used as an agreeable article of diet. The juice of the leaves, mixed with white wine, has been given in dropsies.

CYNICUS, from κυνων, 'a dog.' Cynic. Relating to, or resembling, a dog. Cynic spasm is a convulsive contraction of the muscles of one side of the face—dragging the eye, cheek, mouth, nose, &c. to one side. See Canine.

CYNOCOPRUS, Album græcum.

CYNOCRAMBE, Mercurialis perennis.

CYNOCTONON, Aconitum.

CYNOCYTISUS, Rosa canina.

CYNODEC'TOS, from κυνων, 'a dog,' and δελειν, 'I bite.' One, who has been bitten by a dog.—Dioscorides.

CYNOIDENTES, Canine teeth.

CYNODESMION, Frenum penis.

CYNOGLOS'SUM, from κυνων, 'a dog,' and γλωσσα, 'a tongue.' Cynoglossum officinale, Lingua canina, Hound's tongue, Caballation, (F.) Langue de Chien. Family, Boraginæ. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Monogynia. It is aromatic and mucilaginous, and has been supposed to be possessed of narcotic properties.

CYNOLOPHOI, Spinous processes of the vertebrae.

CYNOLYSSA, Hydrophobia.

CYNOMOIA, Plantago psyllium.

CYNOMORIUM COCCINEUM, from κυνων, 'a dog,' and μωριον, 'the penis.' (F.) Champignon de Malte. Improperly called Fungus Meliten'sis or the Fungus of Malta, as it is not a fungus. The powder has been given as an astringent in hemorrhage, dysentery, &c.

CYNOREXIA, Boulinia.

CYNORRHODON, Rosa canina.

CYNOSBATUS, Rosa canina.

CYNOSORCHIS, Orchis mascula.

CYNOSPASTUM, Rosa canina.

CYON, κυνων. This word sometimes signifies the frenum of the prepuce; at others, the penis.

CYOPHORIA, Pregnancy.

CYPARISSUS, Cupressus sempervirens.

CYPERUS ANTIQUORUM, Lawsonia inermis.

CYPERUS LONGUS, from κυπερος, 'a round vessel,' which its roots have been said to resemble. Galungale, (F.) Souchet odorant. It possesses aromatic and bitter properties, but is not used. See, also, Dorstenia Contrayerva.

CYPERUS ODORUS, Dorstenia contrayerva—c. Peruanus, Dorstenia contrayerva.

CYPERUS ROTUNDUS; the Round Cyperus, (F.) Souchet rond. It is a more gratefully aromatic bitter than the C. Longus.

CYPHOMA, Cyphos, Cyphosis, Cyrtoma, Cyrtosis, Opisthorhphosis, from κυφος, 'gibbous.' Gibbosity of the spine. See Vertebral Column, &c. Cyrtosis forms a genus in the order Dysthet'ica and class Hæmat'ica of Good, and is defined: 'head bulky, especially anteriorly; stature short and incurvated; flesh flabby, tabid, and wrinkled.' It includes Cretinism and Rickets.

CYPHOSIS, Gibbositatis. See Hump.

CYPRESS, Cupressus sempervirens.

CYPRESS, Cupressus sempervirens—c. Tree, Liriodendron.

CYP'RINUM O'LEUM, Oil of Cypress; prepared of olive oil, cypress flowers, calamus, myrrh, cardamom, inula, bitumen of Judæa, &c. It was formerly employed in certain diseases of the uterus, pleurisy, &c., and was regarded to be both stimulant and emollient.

CYPRIMUM, Cuprum.

CYPSELE, Cerumen.

CYRCEON, Anus.

CYRTOIDES, Cuboid.

CYRTOMA, Curvature, Cyphoma.

CYRTONOSOS, Rachitis.

CYR'TOSIS, Cyphoma—c. Cretinismus, Cretinism—c. Rachia, Rachitis.

CYSSANTHEMON, Cyclamen.

CYSSAROS, Anus, Rectum.

CYSSOPHYLLON, Cyclamen.

CYSSO'TIS, from κυσος, 'the anus.' Inflammation of the lower part of the rectum: Proctitis, (q. v.): tenesmus.

CYST, Kyst.

CYSTAL'GIA, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the bladder.

CYSTAUCHENOTOMIA, Cystotrachelotomia, from κυστις, 'a bladder,' αυρη, 'the neck,' and τομη, 'incision.' An incision into the neck of the bladder.

CYSTENCEPH'ALUS, from κυστις, 'bladder,' and κεφαλη, 'head.' A monster having a head with a vesicular brain.—G. St. Hilaire.

CYSTEOL'ITHOS, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and λιθος, 'a stone.' Stone in the bladder. Also, a medicine, employed to dissolve or break stone.

CYSTERETHIS'MUS, Vesicæ Irritabilitas, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and ερεθισμος, 'I irritate.' Irritability of the bladder.

CYSTHEPAT'ICUS, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and ηπαρ, 'the liver.' Belonging to the gall-bladder and liver. This name was given, formerly, to imaginary excretory ducts for the bile, which were supposed to pass directly from the liver to the gall-bladder.

CYSTHEPATOLITH'IASIS, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' ηπαρ, 'the liver,' and λιθιασις, 'pain, caused by a calculus.' It has been proposed to call thus, the symptoms caused by the presence of biliary calculi. See Calculi, biliary.

CYSTHITIS, Kysthitis.

CYSTHOS, Anus.

CYSTIC, Cysticus, from κυστις, 'a bladder.' Belonging to the gall-bladder.

CYSTIC BILE. Bile contained in the gall-bladder.

ARTERIA CYS'TICA; the Cystic Artery is given off from the right branch of the hepatic, and divides into two branches, which proceed to the gall-bladder. It is accompanied by two cystic veins, which open into the vena porta abdominalis.

CYSTIC CALCULI. Calculi formed in the gall-bladder.

CYSTIC DUCT, Ductus cysticus, Meatus cysticus, the duct proceeding from the gall-bladder, which, by its union with the hepatic, forms the ductus communis choledochus.

CYSTIC OXIDE CALCULI, see Calculi.

CYSTIC SARCO'MA, of AB'ERNETHY, Emphy'ma Sarcoma cellul'osum. Tumour, cellulose or cystose; cells oval, currant-sized or grape-sized, containing serous fluid; sometimes caseous. Found in the thyroid gland (forming bronchocele,) testis, ovarium, &c.

CYS'TICA, Cystic Remedies. Such medicines as were formerly believed proper for combating diseases of the bladder.

CYSTICER'CUS, from κυστις, 'a bladder,' and κερκος, 'a tail.' A genus of Entozoa of the Family of the Hydatids, distinguished by the caudal vesicle in which the cylindrical or slightly depressed body of the animal terminates. The Cysticercus cellulosa has been often found in the cellular membrane.

CYSTINURIA, Urine, Cystinic.

CYSTINX, Vesicula.

CYSTIPHLOGIA, Cystitis.

CYSTIRRHA'GIA, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and ρηγνυω, 'I break forth.' Hemorrhage from the bladder. (F.) Hémorrhagie de la Vessie. By some used synonymously with Cystirrhæa.

CYSTIRRHE'IA, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and ρεω, 'I flow.' Paru'ria Stillati'via Mucosa, Blennu'ria, Blennorrh'æa urinari's, B. vesic'æ, Cysto-blennorrh'æa, Cystorrh'æa, Urina mucosa, Cystocatar'rhus, Dysu'ria Mucosa, Pyu'ria Mucosa, P. vis'cida, P. ser'osa, Morbus cysto-phlegmat'icus, Catar'rhus vesic'æ, (F.) Flux muqueux de la vessie. Catarrhe vésical. A copious discharge of mucus from the bladder, passing out with the urine, and generally attended with dysuria. It is commonly dependent upon an inflammatory or subinflammatory condition of the lining membrane. The treatment must be regulated by the cause. If it be not produced by an extraneous body: the antiphlogistic plan,—the exhibition of warm diluents, and keeping the surface in a perspirable state, by wearing flannel. Some of the turpentine may, at times, be given with advantage; and astringent or other appropriate injections be thrown into the bladder.

CYSTIS, Urinary bladder—c. Choledochus, Gall-bladder—c. Fellea, Gall-bladder—c. Serosa, Hygroma.

CYSTI'TIS, from κυστις, 'the bladder.' Inflammatio Vesic'æ, Cystiphlog'ia, Cystophlog'ia, Inflammation of the bladder. (F.) Inflammation de la vessie; characterized by pain and swelling in the hypogastric region; discharge of urine painful or obstructed, and tenesmus. It may affect one or all of the membranes; but commonly it is confined to the mucous coat. In the chronic condition, it appears in the form of cystirrhæa. It must be treated upon the same energetic principles, that are required in other cases of internal inflammation. V. S. general and local, the warm bath, and warm fomentations, warm, soothing enemata, diluents, &c. Cantharides must be avoided, even in the way of blisters, unless with precautions, as the disease is often occasioned by them.

CYSTITIS FELLEA, Cholecystitis.

CYSTITOME, Cysti'omus, Kibis'titome, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' An instrument, invented by Lafaye, for dividing the anterior part of the capsule of the crystalline in the operation of extracting the cataract. It was formed like the Pharyngotome.

CYSTO-BLENNORRHEA, Cystirrhœa.

CYSTO-BU'ONOCE/LE, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' βουβων, 'the groin,' and κηλη, 'a tumour.' Hernia of the bladder through the abdominal ring.

CYSTO-CATARRHUS, Cystirrhœa.

CYSTOCE/LE, Cystocœlia, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and κηλη, 'a tumour.' Hernia of the bladder. (F.) Hernie de la Vessie. It is not common. It occurs, most frequently, at the abdominal ring, less so at the crural arch, perinæum, vagina, and foramen thyroideum. It may exist alone, or be accompanied by a sac, containing some abdominal viscus. The tumour is soft and fluctuating; disappears on pressure, and increases in size, when the urine is retained. It must be reduced and kept in position by a truss. The Vaginal cystocœle is kept in place by a pessary.

BIL'ARY Cys'tocele, is an imaginary hernia of the gall-bladder.

CYSTODYN'IA, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and οδυνη, 'pain.' Pain of the bladder; particularly rheumatic pain.

CYSTO-LITHIASIS. Calculi, vesical.

CYSTO-LITHIC, Cystolithicus, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and λιθος, 'a stone.' Relating to stone in the bladder.

CYSTO-MEROCE/LE, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' μερος, 'the thigh,' and κηλη, 'hernia.' Femoral hernia, formed by the bladder's protruding beneath the crural arch.

CYSTON/CUS, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and ογκος, 'a tumour.' Swelling of the bladder.

CYSTO-PHLEGMAT'IC, Cystophlegmat'icus, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and φλεγμα, 'mucus, phlegm.' Belonging to the vesical mucus. Morbus cystophlegmaticus, Cystirrhœa.

CYSTOPHLOGIA, Cystitis.

CYSTOPLASTIC, Cystoplasticus: from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and πλασσω, 'I form.' An epithet for operations for the cure of fistulous openings into the bladder; sometimes restricted to the cure by translation of skin from a neighbouring part.

CYSTOPLEG'IC, Cystopleg'icus. Belonging to paralysis of the bladder; from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and πλησσω, 'I strike.'

CYSTOPLEX'IA, same etymon. Paralysis of the bladder.

CYSTOPTO'SIS, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and πιπτειν, 'to fall.' Relaxation of the inner membrane of the bladder, which projects into the canal of the urethra.

CYSTOPYIC, Cystopyicus, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and πυον, 'pus.' Relating to suppuration of the bladder.

CYSTRORRHEA, Cystirrhœa.

CYSTOSOMATOM'IA, Cystosomatotom'ia, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' σωμα, 'body,' and τομη, 'incision.' An incision into the body of the bladder.

CYSTOSPAS'TIC, Cystospasticus, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and σπασω, 'I contract.' Relating to spasm of the bladder, and particularly of its sphincter.

CYSTOTHROMBOID, Cystothromboïdes, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and θρομβος, 'a clot.' Relating to the presence of clots in the bladder.

CYSTOTOME, Cystotomus, from κυστις, 'the bladder,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' An instrument, intended for cutting the bladder. Instruments of this kind have been more frequently, although very improperly, called Lithotomes.

CYSTOTOM'IA, same etymon. Incision of the bladder, Sectio vesicæ lis. Cystotomia means cutting into the bladder for any purpose. (F.) Incision de la vessie. Commonly, it is applied to the puncturing of the bladder, for the purpose of removing the urine; whilst Lithotomy has been employed for the incisions, made with the view of extracting calculi from the bladder. See Lithotomy.

CYSTOTRACHELOTOMIA, Cystauchentomia.

CYTINUS, Cytinus Hypocist'us, Hypocistus, A small, parasitical plant, which grows in the South of France and in Greece, on the roots of the woody cistus. The juice of its fruit is acid, and very astringent. It is extracted by expression, and converted into an extract, which was called Succus Hypocist'is, and was formerly much used in hemorrhages, diarrhœa, &c.

CYTISIN'IA, Cytisine. An immediate vegetable principle, discovered by Chevalier and Lassaigne, in the seeds of the Cytisus Laburnum or Bean-Trefoil tree. Family, Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. Cytisine has analogous properties to emetine. In the dose of one or two grains, it produces vomiting and purging; and, in a stronger dose, acts as an acrid poison. The seeds of the Cytisus Laburnum, (F.) Aubours, have been long known to produce vomiting and purging.

CYTISMA HERPES, Herpes.

CYTISO-GENISTA, Spartium scoparium.

CYTISUS LABURNUM. See Cytisine.

CYTT'IS, Scytil'tis, Dermat'itis, Dermi'tis, from κυτος, 'the skin,' and ιτις, 'denoting inflammation.' Inflammation of the skin.

CYTOBLAST, from κυτος, 'cell,' and βλαστος, 'germ,' Germ'inal cell, Nu'cleus. A primary cell, from which all animal and vegetable bodies are presumed to be formed.—Schwann and Scheiden.

CYTOBLASTOMA; same etymon. Inter-cellular substance. The gum or mucus, in the vegetable, and probably the liquor sanguinis after transudation from the vessels, in the animal, in a state fully prepared for the formation of the tissues.—Schwann and Schleiden.

CYTTAROS, Glands.

D.

The figure of the Greek Δ, according to Galen, was the sign for the quartan fever.

DABACH, Viscum album.

DACNE'RON, δακνηρον, from δακνειν, 'to bite.' An ancient name for a 'collyrium,' composed of oxide of copper, pepper, cadmia, myrrh, saffron, gum arabic, and opium.

DACRY, Δακρυον, δακρυ, δακρυον, 'a tear.' Hence:

DACRYADENAL'GIA, Dacryoadenal'gia, from δακρυω, 'I weep,' αδην, 'a gland,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Disease or pain in the lachrymal gland.

DACRYADENITIS, Dacryoadenit'is; from δακρυω, 'I weep,' αδην, 'a gland,' and itis. Inflammation of the lachrymal gland.

DACRYDION, Convolvulus scammonia.

DACRYGELO'SIS, from δακρυω, 'I weep,' and γελαω, 'I laugh.' A kind of insanity, in which the patient weeps and laughs at the same time.

DACRYNOMA, Epiphora.

DACRYOADENAL'GIA, Dacryadenalgia.

DACRYOADENITIS, Dacryadenitis.

DACRYOBLENNORRHOEA, from δακρυω, 'I weep,' βλεννα, 'mucus,' and ρεια, 'I flow.' Discharge of tears mixed with mucus.

DACRYOCYSTAL'GIA, from δακρυω, 'I weep,' κυστις, 'a sac,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Disease or pain in the lachrymal sac.

DACRYOCYSTITIS, from δακρυον, 'a tear,' and κυστις, 'bladder.' Inflammation of the lachrymal sac.

DACRYO'DES, δακρυωδης, lachrymosus, from δακρυω, 'I weep.' A sanious ulcer, a weeping sore.

DACRYO'MA. Same etymon. The effusion of tears, occasioned by an occlusion of the puncta lachrymalia.—Vogel.

DACRYON, Tear.

DACRYOPCE'US, from δακρυω, 'I weep,' and ποιω, 'I make.' A substance, which excites the secretion of tears, as the onion, horse-radish, garlic, &c.

DACRYO'PS, from δακρυω, 'I weep,' and ωπη, 'the eye.' A tumefaction of the lachrymal passages.

DACTYLE'THIRA, DACTYL'THRA, δακτυληθρα, δακτυλιθρα, from δακτυλος, 'a finger.' A name given by the ancients to different topical applications, having the form of a finger; and proper for being introduced into the throat to excite vomiting.

DACTYLETUS, Hermodactylus.

DACTYL'ION, Dactylium, from δακτυλος, 'a finger.' The union of the fingers with each other. This affection is generally congenital. But it may be owing to burns, ulcerations, inflammation of the fingers, &c.

DACTYLIOS, from δακτυλος, 'a finger,' a troch or lozenge, when shaped like a finger.

DACTYLITIS, Paronychia.

DACTYLIUS, from δακτυλιος, απι'ulus, 'a ring.' The Dactylus aculeatus is a worm of a light colour, annulated, cylindrical, but tapering slightly towards both extremities; from two-fifths to four-fifths long, which has been found in the urine.

DACTYLODOCHME, Dochme.

DACTYLOS, δακτυλος, Dig'itus, (q. v.) 'a finger.' The smallest measure of the Greeks, the sixth part of a foot.

DACTYLOTHE'KE, δακτυλοθηκη, from δακτυλος, 'a finger,' and θηκη, 'a case or sheath.' An instrument for keeping the fingers extended, when wounded.—Ambrose Pare.

DACTYLUS, Date.

DÆDA'LEA SUAVEOLENS, Boletus Salicis. (F.) Bolet odorant. A champignon, which grows on the trunks of old willows. It has a smell of anise, which is penetrating and agreeable: and has been recommended in phthisis pulmonalis in the dose of a scruple four times a day.

DÆDALEA SUAVEOLENS, Boletus suaveolens.

DÆDALUS, Hydrargyrum.

DÆDION, Bougie.

DÆMONOMANIA, Demonomania.

DÆS, Tædæ.

DAFFODIL, Narcissus pseudonarcissus.

DAISY, COMMON, Bellis—d. ox-eye, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum.

DALBY'S CARMINATIVE. A celebrated empirical remedy, much used as a carminative for children. The following is a form for its preparation: (Magnesia alb. ℞ij, ol. menthae piper. gtt. j, ol. nuc. moschat. gtt. iij, ol. anisi, gtt. ij, tinct. castor. gtt. xxx, tinct. asafœt. gtt. xv, tinct. opii, gtt. v, sp. pulgii, gtt. xv, tinct. cardam. c. gtt. xxx, aquæ menthae pip. ℥ij. M.) A Committee of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy recommend the following form.—(Aquæ Ox. Sacchar. alb. ℥xxxij, Carbon. Potass. ℥ss, Carb. Mag. ℥xij, Tinct. Opii f. ℥vj, Ol. menth. piper. Ol. Carui, Ol. Anethi Fœnicul. aa f. ℞ij. M.)

DAMSON, Prunum Damascenum—d. Tree, Prunus domestica.

DANCING, Saltatio, (F.) Danse. A kind of exercise and amusement, composed of a succession of motions, gestures, and attitudes, executed by measured steps to the sound of the voice or musical instrument. It is a healthy exercise.

DANDELION, Leontodon taraxacum.

DANDRIF, Pityriasis.

DANDY, Dengue.

DANEVERT, MINERAL WATERS OF.

A spring, a league and a half from Upsal, in Sweden. The waters contain carbonic acid, holding in solution carbonate of iron, sulphate of iron, sulphate of soda and lime, muriate of soda, and silica. It is frequently employed in medicine.

DANEWORT, Sambucus ebulus.

DANGA, Dengue.

DANICH; an Arabic word, signifying the weight of 8 grains.

DANSE, Dancing—d. de St. Guy, Chorea—d. de St. Will, Chorea.

DAPHNE, Laurus.

DAPHNE ALPINA, Chamaelæa, Chamaelæa,

Widow-wail. Family, Thymelææ, Sex. Syst. Octandria Monogynia. A sort of dwarf-olive. An acrid, volatile, alkaline principle has been separated from the bark of this plant by M. Vauquelin, to which he has given the name Daphnine. The plants of this genus owe their vesicating property to this principle.

DAPHNÉ BOISGENTIL, Daphne mezereum—d. Flax-leaved, Daphne gnidium—d. Garou. Daphne gnidium.

DAPHNE GNIDIUM, Thymela'a, Cne'oron, Spurge Flax, Flax-leaved Daphné. The plant which furnishes the Garou bark. (F.) Daphné Garou, Sain-bois. It is chiefly used, when used at all, for exciting irritation on the skin. The Grana Gnid'ia, (see Cnid'ia grana) are acrid poisons like all the plants of this genus, when taken in quantity. According to others, the garou bark and grana gnidia are obtained from the daphne laurcola.

DAPHNE LAUREOLA. The systematic name of the Spurge Laurel, Laurcola. The bark of this plant has similar properties to the last.

DAPHNE MEZE'REUM, the systematic name of the Mez'reon, Mez'reum, Spurge olive. (F.) Daphné Boisgentil. The bark of the mezereon possesses analogous properties to the other varieties of Daphne. It is considered stimulant and diaphoretic; and, in large doses, is emetic. It has been employed in syphilitic cases, but its efficacy is doubtful. Soaked in vinegar, like the other varieties of Daphne, it has been employed to irritate the skin, and especially for keeping open issues.

DAPHNELA'ON, O'leum Lauri'num, from δαφνη, 'the laurel or bay tree,' and ελαιον, 'oil.' Oil of Bay.

DAPHNINE. See Daphne Alpina.

DARSEN, Laurus cinnamomum.

DARSIN, Laurus cinnamomum.

DARSIS, from δερσις, 'I excoriate,' 'I skin.' The Greek physicians seem to have used this word to designate the anatomical preparation, which consists in removing the skin for exposing the organs covered by it.

DARTA, Impetigo.

DARTOS. Same derivation; Membra'na carno'sa, Tu'nica musculo'ris, T. rubicun'da scroti, Marsu'pium musculo'sum; from δαρτος, 'skinned.' A name, given to the second covering of the testicle, which the ancient anatomists conceived to be muscular, but which is merely cellular. Its external surface is towards the scrotum; the internal, towards the tunica vaginalis. Frederick Lobstein and Breschet consider, that it proceeds from an expansion of the cellular cord, known by the name, Gubernaculum Testis.

DARTRE, Herpes—d. Crustacée, Ecthyma—d. Furfuracée arrondie, Lepra vulgaris—d. Phlycténôide, Herpes phlycténoides—d. Pustuleuse mentagra, Sycosis—d. Rougeante, Herpes exedens—d. Squameuse lichénôide, Psoriasis—d. Impetigo.

DARTREUX (F.) Herpetic. Participating in the characters of Dartre or Herpes. Also, one affected with dartre. Dartre has been used, at one time or other, for almost every disease of the skin.—See Herpes.

DASY'MA, from δαυος, 'rough,' 'hairy.'

A disease of the eye—the same as Trachoma, but less in degree.—Ætius, Gorræus.

DASY'TES. Same etymon. Roughness, particularly of the tongue and voice.

DATE, Pal'nula, Dactylus, Balanos Phæ'nico's, the fruit of the Phoenix Dactylif'era. (F.) Datte. The unripe date is astringent. When ripe it resembles the fig. The juice of the tree is refrigerant.

DATE PLUM, INDIAN, Diospyrus lotus.

DATTE, Date.

DATU'RA, Daturine.

DATURA STRAMO'NIUM, Stramo'nium, Barycoc'olon, Sola'nium mani'acum, Stramo'nium spino'sum, Solanum fat'idum, Stramo'nium majus album, Thorn Apple. James-town Weed. Jimston Weed. (F.) Stramoine, Pomme épineuse. The herbaceous part of the plant and the seeds are the parts used in medicine. They are narcotic and poisonous;—are given internally as narcotics and antispasmodics, and applied externally as sedatives, in the form of fomentation. The seeds are smoked like tobacco, in asthma. The dose of the powder, is gr. j to gr. viii.

DATURINE, Daturi'na, Datu'ria, Datu'rium. The active principle of the Datura Stramonium, separated by Brandes, a German chemist. It has not been rendered available in medicine.

DATURIUM, Daturine.

DAUCYTES VINUM. Wine, of which the Daucus or Wild Carrot was an ingredient. The seeds were steeped in must. It was formerly used in coughs, convulsions, hypochondriasis, diseases of the uterus, &c.

DAUCUS CARO'TA. The systematic name of the Carrot Plant—Daucus, Daucus sylvestris, Pastinaca sylvestris tenuifolia officinarum, Ad'ron. Order, Umbelliferae, (F.) Carotte. The root and seed have been used in medicine. The root is sweet and mucilaginous; and the seeds have an aromatic odour, and moderately warm, pungent taste. The root has been used, as an emollient, to fetid and ill-conditioned sores. The seeds have been regarded as stomachic, carminative, and diuretic. But they have little efficacy. The seeds of the wild plant are, by some, preferred to those of the garden.

DAUCUS CANDIANUS, Athamanta cretensis—d. Creticus, Athamanta cretensis—d. Cyanopus, Pinpinella magna—d. Sepirinus, Scandix cerefolium—d. Sylvestris, D. carota.

DAUPHINELLE, Delphinium staphisagria.

DAVIER, Dentagra.

DAX, MINERAL WATERS OF. Dax is a city, two leagues from Bordeaux, where there are four springs, that are almost purely thermal: containing only a very small quantity of muriate and sulphate of lime. Temperature 158° Fahrenheit.

DAY-SIGHT, Hemeralopia—d. Vision, Hemeralopia.

DAZZLING, Calig'atio, (F.) Éblouissement. A momentary disturbance of sight, occasioned either by the sudden impression of too powerful a light, or by some internal cause; as plethora.

DEAF-DUMBNESS, Mutitas surdorum.

DEAFNESS, from Anglo-Saxon deaf. Sur'

ditas, Copho'sis, Dysecoia, Dyseca organ'ica, Barycoia, Hardness of hearing, Hypocophosis, Subsur'ditas, (F.) Surdité, Dareté de l'ouie. Considerable diminution or total loss of hearing. It may be the effect of acute or chronic inflammation of the internal ear, paralysis of the auditory nerve or its pulpy extremity, or of some mechanical obstruction to the sonorous rays. In most cases, however, the cause of the deafness is not appreciable, and the treatment has to be purely empirical. Syringing the ear, dropping in slightly stimulating oils; fumigations, &c., are the most likely means to afford relief.

DEAFNESS, TAYLOR'S REMEDY FOR. See Alium.

DEAMBULATIO, Walking.

DEARTICULATIO, Diarthrosis.

DEASCIATIO, Apocseparnismus.

DEATH, Apobiosis, Lethum, Letum, Mors, Death, θάνατος, (F.) Mort. Definitive cessation of all the functions, the aggregate of which constitute life. Real Death, Apothand'sia, is distinguished from asphyxia or apparent death:—the latter being merely a suspension of those same functions. But it is often difficult to judge of such suspension, and the only certain sign of real death is the commencement of putrefaction. At times, therefore, great caution is requisite to avoid mistakes. Death is commonly preceded by some distressing symptoms, which depend on lesion of respiration, circulation, or of the cerebral function, and which constitute the agony. That which occurs suddenly, and without any, or with few, precursory signs, is called sudden death. It is ordinarily caused by disease of the heart; apoplexy; the rupture of an aneurism, or by some other organic affection. Death is natural, when it occurs as the result of disease: violent, when produced by some forcible agency.

All sudden deaths must begin by the interruption of circulation, of the action of the brain, or of respiration. One of these functions stops first; and the others terminate successively;—the series of phenomena ceasing nearly as follows.

DEATH BEGINNING IN THE HEART.

1. Impulse received by the brain.
2. Action of the brain.
3. Action of the voluntary muscles.
4. Action of the mixed muscles.
5. The mechanical phenomena of respiration.
6. The chymical phenomena of respiration.
7. The phenomena of nutrition.

DEATH BEGINNING IN THE BRAIN.

1. Interruption of the brain's action.
2. That of voluntary and mixed muscles.
3. Mechanical phenomena of respiration.
4. Chymical phenomena of respiration.
5. Cessation of heart's action.
6. Cessation of general circulation.
7. Functions of nutrition.

DEATH BEGINNING IN THE LUNGS.

1. When the Mechanical Phenomena are interrupted, as in Suffocation.

1. Mechanical phenomena.
2. Chymical phenomena.

3. Action of the brain.
4. Extinction of animal life.
5. Cessation of the general circulation.
6. Of the functions of nutrition.

II. When the Chymical Phenomena are interrupted.

1. Interruption of chymical phenomena.
2. Action of the heart.
3. Action of the brain.
4. Sensation, locomotion, voice, and mechanical phenomena of respiration.
5. Functions of nutrition, generally.

DEATH, APPARENT, Asphyxia.

DEATH, BLACK. The plague of the 14th century was so called, which is supposed to have proved fatal in Europe to 25,000,000 of people.—Hecker.

DEBILITANTS, Debilitant'ia, from debilitare, 'to weaken.' Remedies exhibited for the purpose of reducing excitement. Antiphlogistics are, hence, debilitants.

DEBILITAS ERETHISICA, see Irritable—d. Nervosa, Neurasthenia—d. Nervosa, see Irritable.

DEBILITY, Debilitas, Asthen'ia. Weakness, (F.) Faiblesse. A condition, which may be induced by a number of causes. It must not be confounded with fatigue, which is temporary, whilst debility is generally more permanent.

Debility may be real, or it may be apparent; and, in the management of disease, it is important to attend to this. At the commencement of fever, for example, there is often a degree of apparent debility, which prevents the use of appropriate means, and is the cause of much evil. Excitement is more dangerous than debility.

DÉBOITEMENT, Luxation.

DÉBORDEMENT (F.) from déborder, 'to overflow.' A popular term for one or more sudden and copious evacuations from the bowels. It is chiefly applied to bilious evacuations of this kind—Débordement de Bile.

DÉBRIDEMENT (F.) Franco'rum solutio, from (F.) débrider, 'to unbridle.' The removal of filaments, &c. in a wound or abscess, which prevent the discharge of pus. In a more general acceptance, it means the cutting of a soft, membranous or aponeurotic part, which interferes with the exercise of any organ whatever: thus, in paraphimosis, débridement of the prepuce is practised to put an end to the inflammation of the glans: in strangulated hernia, débridement of the abdominal ring is had recourse to, to remove the stricture of the intestine, &c.

DEC'AGRAMME, from deka, 'ten,' and γραμμα, 'a gramme.' The weight of ten grammes, 154.44 grains Troy.

DECAM'YRON, from deka, 'ten,' and μυρον, 'ointment.' An ancient cataplasm, composed of malabathrum, mustich, euphorbium, spikenard, styraz calamita, carbonate of lime, common pepper, unguentum nardi, opobalsamum, and wax.

DECANTA'TION, Decantatio, Defusio, Elutriatio, Metangisimos, Catachysis. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in pouring off, gently, by inclining the vessel, any fluid, which has left a deposit.

DECARBONIZATION, Hæmatisis.

DECESSIO, Eepiesma.

DÉCHARNÉ, Demusculusus.

DÉCHAUSSEMENT (F.) The state, in which the gums have fallen away from the teeth, as in those affected by mercury, in old persons, &c. Also, the operation of lancing the gums. See Gum Lancet.

DÉCHAUSSOIR, Gum lancet.

DÉCHIREMENT, Laceration.

DÉCHIRURE, Wound, lacerated.

DECID'UA MEMBRANA, Decid'ua. The outermost membrane of the fœtus in utero. Chaussier calls it Epicho'ri'on: by others, it has been called membra'na cadu'ca Hunté'ri, m. flocculen'ta, m. cellulô'sa, m. sinuô'sa, m. comu'nis, m. præexistans, Decidua externa, Tu'nica exterior ovi, T. cadu'ca, T. crassa, membra'na cribro'sa, membra'na ovi mater'na, m. mucô'sa, Decidua spongio'sa, Epione, Perione, membra'na u'teri inter'na evol'u'ta, nidamentum, anhis'tous membrane, Cho'ri'on spongio'sum, C. tomento'sum, fungô'sum, reticulat'um, &c. Tu'nica filamentô'sa, Shaggy Chorion, Spongy Chorion, &c. Great diversity has prevailed, regarding this membrane and its reflected portion. It has been conceived by some that it exists before the germ arrives in the uterus,—as it has been met with in tubal and ovarian pregnancies; and that it is occasioned by a new action, assumed by the uterine vessels at the moment of conception. Chaussier, Lobstein, Gardien, Velpeau and others consider the decidua to be a sac, completely lining the uterus, and without apertures, and that when the ovum descends through the tube, it pushes the decidua before it, and becomes enveloped in it, except in the part destined to form the placenta. That portion of the membrane, which covers the ovum, forms the Membra'na decid'ua reflex'a, according to them;—the part lining the uterus being the Decidua U'teri. Towards the end of the fourth month, the decidua reflexa disappears. The very existence of a Tunica decidua reflexa has, however, been denied. This membrane has received various names. Dr. Granville, regarding it as the external membrane of the ovum, has termed it Cortex ovi, (q. v.) It has also been termed Involucrum membrana'ecum, membra'na retifor'mis cho'rii, membra'na filamentô'sa, m. adventitiu and m. crassa, ovuline and Decidua protrusa.

The decidua becomes thinner and thinner, until the end of gestation. Its use seems to be, to fix the ovum to the uterus, and to fulfil some important purposes in the nutrition of the fœtus. To the membrane which is situate between the placenta and the uterus, according to Bojanus, and which he considers to be produced at a later period than the decidua vera, he gives the name membra'na decid'ua serotina.

DECIDUA PROTRUSA, Decidua reflexa.

DEC'IGRAMME, Decigram'ma, from dec'i-mus, 'the tenth part,' and γραμμα, 'gramme.' The tenth part of the gramme in weight: equal to a little less than two grains, French; 1.544 Troy.

DECIMANA FEBRIS, from decem, 'ten.' An intermittent, whose paroxysms return every 10th day or every 9 days. It is supposititious.

DECLAMATION, Declamatio. The art of depicting the sentiments, by inflections of the voice, accompanied with gestures, which render the meaning of the speaker more evident, and infuse into the minds of the auditors the emotions with which he is impressed.

Declamation may become the cause of disease: the modification, produced in the pulmonary circulation,—accompanied with the great excitement, sometimes experienced,—is the cause of many morbid affections: particularly of pneumonia, hæmoptysis, and apoplexy. In moderation, it gives a healthy excitement to the frame.

DÉCLIN, Decline.

DECLINE, Declinatio, Inclinatio, Decrementum, Remissio, Paracmè, (F.) Déclin. That period of a disorder or paroxysm, at which the symptoms begin to abate in violence. We speak, also, of the decline of life, or of the powers. See Phtlisis and Tabes. (F.) Déclin de l'age, L'age de déclin, when the physical and moral faculties lose a little of their activity and energy.

DÉCLIVE (F.) Declivis, from de, 'from,' and clivus, 'declivity.' Inclining downwards. This epithet is applied to the most depending part of a tumour or abscess.

DECOCTION, Decoctio, from decoquere, 'to boil.' Epsé'sis, Aphepsis. The operation of boiling certain ingredients in a fluid, for the purpose of extracting the parts soluble at that temperature.

Decoction, likewise, means the product of this operation, to which the terms Decoctum, Zema, Aphepsé'ma, Ap'ozem, and Epsé'ma, have been applied according to ancient custom, in order to avoid any confusion between the operation and its product;—as preparatio is used for the act of preparing; preparatum, for the thing prepared.

DECOCTION OF ALOES COMPOUND, Decoctum aloes compositum—d. of Bark, Decoctum cinchonæ—d. of Barley, Decoctum hordei—d. of Barley, compound, Decoctum hordei compositum—d. Bitter, Decoctum amarum—d. of Cabbage tree bark, Decoctum geoffræ inermis—d. of Cassia, Decoctum cassiæ—d. of Chamomile, Decoctum anthemidis nobilis—d. of Cinchona, Decoctum cinchonæ—d. of Cinchona, compound laxative, Decoctum kinæ kinæ compositum et laxans—d. of Colomba, compound, Decoctum Colombæ compositum—d. of Elm bark, Decoctum ulmi—d. of Foxglove, Decoctum digitalis—d. de Gayac Composée, &c., Decoctum de Guyaco compositum—d. of Guaiacum, compound, Decoctum Guaiaci compositum—d. of Guaiacum, compound purgative, Decoctum de Guyaco compositum—d. of Harts-horn, burnt, Mistura cornu usti—d. of Hellebore, white, Decoctum veratri—d. of Liverwort, Decoctum lichenis—d. of Marshmallows, Decoctum althææ—d. de Mauve composé, Decoctum malvæ compositum—d. of Oak bark, Decoctum quercus—d. d'Orge, Decoctum hordei—d. d'Orge composé, Decoctum hordei compositum—d. of Poppy, Decoctum papaveris—d. of Quince seeds, Decoctum cydoniæ—d. de Quinquina composée et laxative, Decoctum kinæ kinæ compositum et laxans—d. de Sarsaparille composée, Decoctum sarsaparillæ com- positum—d. of Sarsaparilla, Decoctum sarsaparillæ—d. of Sarsaparilla, compound, Decoctum sarsaparillæ compositum—d. of Sarsaparilla, false, Decoctum Araliæ nudicaulis—d. of Squill, Decoctum scillæ—d. of the Woods, Decoctum Guaiaci compositum—d. of Woody nightshade, Decoctum dulcamaræ.

DECOCTUM, Decoction—d. Album, Mistura cornu usti.

DECOCTUM AL'ŒS COMPOS'ITUM, Balsam of Life, Compound Decoction of Aloes. (Ext. glyc.  $\mathfrak{z}iv$ , potass. subcarb.  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ , aloes spicat. ext.: myrrhæ contrit.: croci stigmat. aa  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , aquæ lbj. Boil to  $\mathfrak{z}xij$ : strain, and add tinct. card. c.  $\mathfrak{z}iv$ . Pharm. L.) The gum and extractive are dissolved in this preparation. The alkali is added to take up a little of the resin. The tincture prevents it from spoiling. It is gently cathartic. Dose,  $\mathfrak{z}ss$  to  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ .

DECOCTUM ALTHÆÆ, D. Althææ officinalis; Decoction of Marsh-mallows, (F.) Décoction de Guimauve. (Rad. althææ sic.  $\mathfrak{z}iv$ , uvar passar  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ , aquæ lbvj. Boil to lbv. Pour off the clear liquor. Pharm. E.) It is used as a demulcent.

DECOCTUM AMARUM; Bitter Decoction. (Rad. gent.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , aquæ lbjss. Boil for a quarter of an hour; add species amaræ  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ . Infuse for two hours and filter, without expressing. Pharm. P.) It is tonic. Dose,  $\mathfrak{z}ss$  to  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ .

DECOCTUM ANTHEMIDIS NOBILIS, D. Chamæmeli; Decoction of Chamomile. (Flor. anthemid, nobil.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , scm. carui  $\mathfrak{z}iv$ , aquæ lbv. Boil for fifteen minutes, and strain. Pharm. E.) It contains bitter extractive and essential oil, dissolved in water. It is used, occasionally, as a vehicle for tonic powders, pills, &c., and in fomentations and gylsters; but for the last purpose, warm water is equally efficacious. The Dublin College has a compound decoction.

DECOCTUM ARA'LIÆ NUDICAULIS; Decoction of False Sarsaparilla. (Araliæ nudicaul,  $\mathfrak{z}vj$ , aquæ lbviij. Digest for four hours, and then boil to four pints; press out and strain the decoction. Pharm. U. S.) It is used as a stomachic, but it is an unnecessary and laborious preparation.

DECOCTUM CAS'SIÆ; Decoction of Cassia. (Cassia pulp.  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ , aquæ lbj. Boil for a few minutes, filter without expression, and add syrup. violar.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , or manne pur.  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ . Pharm. P.) It is a laxative, in the dose of  $\mathfrak{z}vj$ .

DECOCTUM CHAMÆMELI, Decoction Anthemidis nobilis.

DECOCTUM CINCHO'NÆ, Decoction Cinchona lancifolia, D. Cor'ticis Cinchonæ; Decoction of Cinchona, D. of Bark. Decoction Kinæ Kinæ. (Cinchon. lancifol. cort. contus.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , aquæ lbj. Boil for ten minutes, in a slightly covered vessel, and strain while hot. Pharm. L.) It contains cinchonine and resinous extractive, dissolved in water. Long coction oxygenates and precipitates the extractive. It can be given where the powder does not sit easy, &c. Dose,  $\mathfrak{z}j$  to  $\mathfrak{z}iv$ .

DECOCTUM COMMUNE PRO CLYSTERE, D. malvæ compositum—d. Cornu cervini, Mistura cornu usti.

DECOCTUM KINÆ KINÆ COMPOS'ITUM ET LAXANS, Décoction de quinquina composée et laxative; Compound laxative decoction of Cinchona. (Cort. cinchon.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , aquæ lbij. Boil for a quarter of an hour, remove it from the fire; then infuse in it for half an hour, fol. sennæ, sodæ sulph. aa  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ ; add syrup. de sennâ  $\mathfrak{z}j$ .) Its title indicates its properties.

DECOCTUM COLOM'BÆ COMPOS'ITUM; Compound Decoction of Colomba. (Colomb. contus. quassia, aa  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ , cort. aurant.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , pulp. rhej.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , potassæ carbonat.  $\mathfrak{z}ss$ , aquæ  $\mathfrak{z}xx$ . Boil to a pint, and add tinct. lavand.  $\mathfrak{z}ss$ . Pharm. U. S.) Given as a tonic, but not worthy of an official station.

DECOCTUM CYDO'NIÆ, Mucilago Sem'inis Cydoniæ Mali, M. Scm'inum Cydonio'rum; Decoction or Mucilage of Quince Seeds. (Cydoniæ scm.  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ , aquæ lbj. Boil for ten minutes over a gentle fire, and strain. Pharm. L.) It is merely a solution of mucilage in water, and is used as a demulcent.

DECOCTUM DAPHNES MEZE'REI, Decoction Meze'rei; Decoction of Mezezeon. (Cort. rad. daphn. mezezei,  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ , rad. glycyrrh. cont.  $\mathfrak{z}ss$ , aquæ lbij. Boil over a gentle fire to lbij, and strain.) The acrimony of the mezezeon and the saccharine mucilage of the liquorice root are imparted to the water. It is somewhat stimulant, and has been used in secondary syphilis; but is devoid of power. Dose,  $\mathfrak{z}ij$  to  $\mathfrak{z}vj$ .

DECOCTUM DIAPHORETICUM, D. Guaiaci compositum—d. pro Enemate, D. malvæ compositum.

DECOCTUM DIGITA'LIS, Decoction of Foxglove. (Fol. digit. sic.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , aquæ q. s. ut colentur  $\mathfrak{z}viij$ . Let the liquor begin to boil over a slow fire, and then remove it. Digest for fifteen minutes, and strain. Pharm. D.) It possesses the properties of the plant. Dose,  $\mathfrak{z}ij$  to  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ .

DECOCTUM DULCAMARÆ; Decoction of Woody Nightshade. (Dulcamaræ caul. concis.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , aquæ lbiss. Boil to lbj, and strain. L.) This decoction has been considered diuretic and diaphoretic, and has been administered extensively in skin diseases. It is probably devoid of efficacy.

DECOCTUM PRO FOMENTO, D. papaveris.

DECOCTUM GEOFFRÆÆ INERMIS; Decoction of Cabbage-Tree Bark. (Cort. geoffr. inermis in pulp.  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , aquæ lbj. Boil over a slow fire to a pint, and strain. Pharm. E.) It is possessed of anthelmintic, purgative, and narcotic properties, and has been chiefly used for the first of these purposes. Dose, to children,  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ —to adults,  $\mathfrak{z}ss$  to  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ .

DECOCTUM GUA'IACI COMPOS'ITUM, D. Guaiaci officinalis compositum, Decoction Ligno'rum, D. de Guay'co compositum, D. sudorificum, D. diaphoreticum; Compound Decoction of Guaiacum, Decoction of the Woods. (Lign. guaiac. rasur.  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ , fruct. sicc. vitis vinifer  $\mathfrak{z}ij$ , rad. lauri sassafr. concis., rad. glycyrrh. aa  $\mathfrak{z}j$ , aquæ lbx. Boil the guaiacum and raisins over a slow fire to lbv; adding the roots towards the end, then strain. Pharm. E.) It is possessed of stimulant properties, and has been given in syphilitic, cutaneous, and rheumatic affections. The resin of the guaiacum is, however, insoluble in water, so that the Guaiac wood in it cannot be supposed to possess much, if any, effect. The Parisian Codex has a gative; Compound purgative Decoction of Guaiacum. (Lign. guaiac. rasp., rad. sarsap. āā ʒj potass. carbonat. gr. xxv. Macerate for twelve hours, agitating occasionally, in water lbiv, until there remain lbij. Then infuse in it fol. senna ʒij, rhez. ʒj, lign. sassaf., glycyrrh. rad. āā ʒij, sem. coriand. ʒj. Strain gently, suffer it to settle, and pour off the clear supernatant liquor.) The title sufficiently indicates the properties of the composition.

DECOCTUM HELLEBORI ALBI, D. veratri—d. Kinæ kinæ, D. Cinchonæ.

DECOCTUM HORDEI, Decoction Hordei Distichi, Ptisana Hippocratica, Tipsisaria or Tipsisaria, Aqua Hordeata, Barley Water, Decoction of Barley. (F.) Décoction d'Orge, Tisane Commune. (Hord. semin. ʒij, aquæ lbivss. Wash the barley well, boil for a few minutes in water lbss: strain this, and throw it away, and add the remainder, boiling. Boil to lbij, and strain. Pharm. L.) It is nutritive and demulcent, and is chiefly used as a common drink, and in gylsters.

DECOCTUM HORDEI COMPOSITUM, Decoction pectorale, Ptisana communis; Compound Decoction of Barley. (F.) Décoction d'Orge composée. (Decoct. hord. lbij, carica fruct. concis. ʒij, glycyrrh. rad. concis. ct contus. ʒss, uvarum pass. demptis acinis ʒij, aquæ lbj. Boil to lbij, and strain. Pharm. L.) It has similar properties to the last.

DECOCTUM LICHENIS, Decoction Lichenis Islandici; Decoction of Lichwort. (Lichen ʒj, aquæ lbss. Boil to a pint, and strain. Pharm. L.) It consists of bitter extractive and fecula, dissolved in water, and its operation is tonic and demulcent. Dose, ʒj to ʒiv. It is also nutrient, but hardly worthy of the rank of an official preparation.

DECOCTUM LIGNORUM, D. Guaiaci compositum.

DECOCTUM MALVÆ COMPOSITUM, Decoction pro enemate, Decoction commune pro clystere; Compound Decoction of Mallow. (F.) Décoction de Mauve composée. (Malvæ exsic. ʒj, anemid. flor. exsic. ʒss, aquæ lbj. Boil for fifteen minutes, and strain.) It consists of bitter extractive, and mucilage in water, and is chiefly used for clysters and fomentations. It is unworthy a place in the pharmacopœia.

DECOCTUM MEZEREI, D. daphnis mezerei—d. Pectorale, D. hordei compositum.

DECOCTUM PAPAV'ERIS, Decoction pro Fomento, Fetus communis; Decoction of Poppy. (Papav. somnif. capsul. concis. ʒiv, aquæ lbiv. Boil for fifteen minutes, and strain. Pharm. L.) It contains the narcotic principle of the poppy, and mucilage in water: is anodyne and emollient, and employed as such in fomentation, in painful swellings, ulcers, &c.

DECOCTUM POLYGALÆ SENEGÆ, D. senegæ.

DECOCTUM QUERCUS, D. Quercus Roboris; Decoction of Oak Bark. (Quercus cort. ʒj, aquæ lbij. Boil to a pint, and strain. Pharm. L.) It is astringent, and used as such, in injections, in leucorrhœa, uterine hemorrhage, &c., as well as in the form of fomentation to unhealthy ulcers.

DECOCTUM SARSAPARILLÆ, D. Smilacis Sarsaparillæ; Decoction of Sarsaparilla. (Sarsaparill. rad. concis. ʒiv, aq. fervent. lbiv. Macerate for four hours, near the fire, in a lightly covered vessel: then bruise the root; macerate again for two hours; then boil to ʒij, and strain. Pharm. L.) It contains bitter extractive, and mucilage in water; is demulcent, and has been used, although it is doubtful with what efficacy, in the sequela of syphilis. Dose, ʒiv to lbss.

DECOCTUM SARSAPARILLÆ COMPOSITUM; Compound Decoction of Sarsaparilla. (F.) Décoction de Salsapareille Composée. (Decoct. sarsap. fercent. lbiv, sassofras rad. concis.; guaiac. lign. ros.; glycyrrh. rad. cont. āā ʒj, mezerei rad. ʒij. Boil fifteen minutes, and strain. Pharm. L.) This is considered to be possessed of analogous properties with the celebrated Lisbon Diet-Drink, Decoction Lusitanicum, which it resembles in composition.

DECOCTUM SCILLÆ; Decoction of Squill. (Scilla ʒij, juniper ʒiv, senega snake-root ʒij, water lbiv. Boil till one half the liquor is consumed; strain, and add spirit of nitrous ether ʒiv. Pharm. A.) Dose, ʒss.

DECOCTUM SENEGÆ, D. Polygalæ senegæ; Decoction of Senega. (Rad. seneg. ʒi aquæ lbij. Boil to lbj, and strain. Pharm. L.) It is reputed to be diuretic, purgative, and stimulant, and has been given in dropsy, rheumatism, &c.

DECOCTUM SMILACIS SARSAPARILLÆ, D. sarsaparillæ—d. Sudorificum, D. Guaiaci compositum.

DECOCTUM ULMI, D. Ulmi Campes'tris; Decoction of Elm Bark. (Ulm cort. recent. cont. ʒiv, aquæ lbiv. Boil to lbij, and strain. Pharm. L.) It is reputed to be diuretic; and has been used in lepra and herpes; but, probably, has no efficacy. Dose, ʒiv to lbss.

DECOCTUM VERA'TRI, Decoction Hellebori albi; Decoction of White Hellebore. (Vcratri rad. cont. ʒj, aquæ lbij, spir. rect. ʒij. Boil the watery decoction to lbj; and when it is cold, add the spirit. Pharm. L.) It is stimulant, acrid, and cathartic; but is used only externally. It is a useful wash in tinea capitis, psora, &c. Should it excite intense pain on being applied, it must be diluted.

DÉCOLLEMENT, (F.) De glutinatio, Reglutinatio. The state of an organ that is separated from the surrounding parts, owing to destruction of the cellular membrane which united them; the skin is decollée; i. e., separated from the subjacent parts, by a burn, subcutaneous abscess, &c.

DECOLLEMENT DU PLACENTA is the separation or detachment of the whole, or a part, of the placenta from the inner surface of the uterus. Décollement, from de, 'from,' and collum, 'the neck,' obtruncatio, also means the separation of the head of the fœtus from the trunk, the latter remaining in the uterus.

DECOLORATION, Decoloratio, Discoloratio, from de, 'from,' and colore, 'to colour.' Loss of the natural colour.

DÉCOMPOSÉE, (F.) from de, 'from,' and compon'erc, 'to compose.' Decomposed, Dissolutus. An epithet, applied to the face, when extensively changed in its expression and colour; as in the moribund.

DECORTICATION, from de, 'from,' and cortex, 'bark.' An operation, which consists in separating the bark from roots, stalks, &c.

DECOST'IS, Aplexuros, from de, priv., and costa, 'a rib.' One who has no ribs.

DECREMENTUM, Decline.

DECREPITUDE, Decrepitudo, Ætas decrepita, Ultima senectus, from decrep'itus, 'very old.' The last period of old age, and of human life; which ordinarily occurs about the eightieth year. It may, however, be accelerated or protracted. Its character consists in the progressive series of phenomena, which announce the approaching extinction of life.

DECU'BITUS, from decumb'ere, 'to lie down.' Lying down. Assuming the horizontal posture. (F.) Coucher. Horâ decubitûs, 'at bed time.' The French say—Decubitus horizontal, sur le dos, sur le côté, for, lying in the horizontal posture, on the back or side.

DECURTATUS, μειωρος, or μειουρίζων. 'shortened, curtailed,' 'running to a point.' When applied to the pulse, it signifies a progressive diminution in the strength of the arterial pulsations, which, at last, cease. If the pulsations return and gradually acquire all their strength, it is called Pulsus decurtatus recip'rocus.—Galen.

DECUSSA'TION, Decussatio, Chiasmos, Incruciatio, from decut'io, 'I divide.' Union in the shape of an X or cross. Anatomists use this term chiefly in the case of the nerves,—as for the decussation of the optic nerves, which cross each other within the cranium.

DECUSSO'RIMUM, from decut'io, 'I depress.' An instrument used, by the ancients, for depressing the dura mater, and facilitating the exit of substances, effused on or under that membrane. It is described by Scultetus, Paré, &c. See Meningophylax.

DÉDAIGNEUR, Rectus superior oculi.

DEDOLA'TION, from dedola're, 'to cut and hew with an axe.' This word has been used by surgeons, to express the action, by which a cutting instrument divides, obliquely, any part of the body, and produces a wound with loss of substance. It is commonly on the head, that wounds by dedolation are observed. When there was a complete separation of a portion of the bone of the cranium, the ancients called it Aposceparnis'mos.

DEERBERRY, Gaultheria.

DÉFAILLANCE, Syncope.

DEFECATION, Defecatio, from de and feces, 'excrements.' The act, by which the excrement is extruded from the body. Cacatio, Excretio alvi, E. alvina, E. fecum alvinarum, Dejectio alvi, Scissio, Expulsio vel Ejectio fecum. The feces generally accumulate in the colon, being prevented by the annulus at the top of the rectum from descending freely into that intestine. In producing evacuations in obstinate constipation, it is well, therefore, by means of a long tube, to throw the injection up into the colon, as suggested by Dr. O'Beirne.

In Pharmacy, defecation means the separation of any substance from a liquid in which it may be suspended. See Clarification.

DEFECTIO ANIMI, Syncope.

DEFENSIVUM, from defen'dere, 'to defend.'

A preservative or defence. The old surgeons gave this name to different local applications, made to diseased parts, for the purpose of guarding them from the impression of extraneous bodies, and particularly from the contact of air. DEFERENS, from def'ero, 'I bear away,' 'I transport.'

The VAS DEFERENS or ductus deferens, (F.) Conduit spermaticque, Conduit déférent, is the excretory canal of the sperm, which arises from the epididymis, describes numerous convolutions, and with the vessels and nerves of the testicle concurs in the formation of the spermatic chord, enters the abdominal ring and terminates in the ejaculatory duct.

DEFLECTENS, Derivative.

DEFLECTIO, Derivation.

DÉFLORATION, Stuprum.

DEFLORA'TION, Defloratio, Devirginatio, from deflorescere, 'to shed its flowers.' The act of depriving a female of her virginity. Inspection of the parts is the chief criterion of defloration having been forcibly accomplished; yet inquiry must be made, whether the injury may not have been caused by another body than the male organ. Recent defloration is infinitely more easy of detection than where some time has elapsed.

DEFLUXIO, Catarrh, Diarrhœa.

DEFLUX'ION, Defluxio, Defluxus, Catar'rhysis, Catar'rhus. A falling down of humours from a superior to an inferior part. It is sometimes used synonymously with inflammation.

DEFLUXUS DYSENTERICUS, Dysentery.

DEFORMA'TION, Deformatio, Cacomor'phia, Deform'itas, Disfigura'tion, Deformity. (F.) Difformité. Morbid alteration in the form of some part of the body, as of the head, pelvis, spine, &c. A deformity may be natural or accidental.

DEFRU'TUM, Vin cuit, from defruta're, 'to boil new wine.' Grape must, boiled down to one half and used as a sweetmeat.—Plin. Columell. Isidor. See Rob.

DEFUSIO, Decantation.

DÉGÉNÉRESCENCE, Degeneration.

DEGENERATION, ροθειςτις, ροθεια, No'thesis, Nothia, from deg'ener, 'unlike one's ancestors,' Degen'cracy. A change for the worse in the intimate composition of the solids or fluids of the body. In Pathological Anatomy, degeneration means the change, which occurs in the structure of an organ, when transformed into a matter, essentially morbid; as a cancerous, or tubercular, degeneration.

Dégénérescence is, by the French pathologists, employed synonymously with Degeneration.

DEGLUTINATIO, Decollement.

DEGLUTITIO DIFFIC'ILIS, Dysphagia —d. Impedita, Dysphagia—d. Læsa, Dysphagia.

DEGLUTI'ON, Deglutit'io, Catap'osis, from degluti're, 'to swallow.' The act, by which substances are passed from the mouth into the stomach, through the pharynx and œsophagus. It is one of a complicated character, and requires the aid of a considerable number of muscles; the first steps being voluntary, the remainder executed under spinal and involuntary nervous influence.

DEGMOS, δηγμος, Morsus;—a bite in general, from δανω, 'I bite.' A gnawing sensation about the upper orifice of the stomach, which was once attributed to acrimony of the liquids, contained in that viscus.

DÉGORGEMENT, Disgorgement.

DÉGOUT, Disgust.

DEGREÉ, from degré, originally from gradus. Galen used this expression to indicate the qualities of certain drugs. Both he and his school admitted cold, warm, moist, and dry medicines, and four different degrees of each of those qualities. Thus Apium was warm in the first degree, Agrimony in the second, Roche Alum in the third, and Garlic in the fourth. Bedegar was cold in the first, the flower of the Pomegranate in the second, the Sempervivum in the third, Opium in the fourth, &c. The French use the term degré to indicate, 1. The intensity of an affection: as a burn of the first, second, third degree, &c. 2. The particular stage of an incurable disease, as the third degree of phthisis, cancer of the stomach, &c.

DEGUSTATION, Degustatio, from gustare, 'to taste.' Gustation. The appreciation of sapid qualities by the gustatory organs.

DEICTICOS, Index.

DEJECTIO ALVI, Defecation—d. Alvina, Excrement.

DEJECTION, Dejectio, Subductio, Hypogoge, Hypochore'sis. The expulsion of the fæces. Also, a faecal discharge:—generally, however, with alvine prefixed,—as an alvine Dejection, Dejectio alvina, Ejectio, Egestio.

DELETERIOUS, Perniciosus, from δηλεω, 'I injure.' That which produces destructive disorder in the exercise and harmony of the functions.

DEJECTORIUM REMEDIUM, Cathartic.

DELACHRYMATIO, Epiphora.

DELACHRYMATIVUS, Apodacryticus.

DELAPSIO, Prolapsus.

DELAPSUS PALPEBRÆ, Blepharoptosis.

DELATIO, Indication.

DÉLAYANTS, Diluentia.

DELETERIUM, Poison.

DELIGATIO, Ligature, see Bandage.

DELIGATION, Deligatio, Epidei'sis, Deligatura, Vulnerum deligatio, Fasciarum Applicatio, Plagarum Vincitura, Fasciatio, from de and ligo, 'I tie.' The deligation of wounds formerly embraced the application of apparatus, dressings, &c.—the denomination Deligatio Plagarum being synonymous with Medicus Vulnerarius, and in derivation, with the Wundarzt, 'wound physician,' or surgeon, of the Germans. Deligation is hardly ever used now as an English word. In France, it is confined to the regular and methodical application of bandages.

DÉLIQUESCENT, from de and liquescere, 'to melt,' 'to dissolve.' Any salt, which becomes liquid by attracting moisture from the air.

The deliquescent salts require to be kept in bottles, well stopped. The muriate of lime, the acetate of potassa and subcarbonate of potassa are examples of such salts. The ancient chemists expressed the condition of a body, which had become liquid in this manner, by the word Deliquium.

DELIQUIUM ANIMI, Syncope.

DELIRANS, Delirious.

DÉLIRANT, Delirious.

DÉLIRE, Delirium.

DELIRIA, Insanity.

DELIRIOUS, Delirans, Excerebratus, Allochoos, aliénus, raving, (F.) Délirant. One who is in a state of delirium. That which is attended by delirium.

The French use the term Fièvre pernicieuse délirante for a febrile intermittent, in which delirium is the predominant symptom.

DELIRIUM, from de, 'from,' and lira, 'a ridge between two furrows;' Paraopē, Phrenitis, Phledonia, Desipentia, Paraphrosyne, Emotio, Leros, ληρος. Straying from the rules of reason, wandering of the mind; Paranaa, Alloph'asis, (F.) Délire, Égarément d'esprit, &c. Transport. Hippocrates used the word μανια, mania, for the delirium sine febre, and the Greek words given above for the delirium cum febre. In different authors, also, we find the words, Paraph'ora, Paraph'otes, Paraphrene'sis, Paraphren'ia, Phren'esis, Phrenetiasis, &c., for different kinds of delirium. Delirium is usually symptomatic.

DELIRIUM EBRIOSITATIS, D. tremens—d. Furiosum, Mania—d. Maniacum, Mania—d. Potatorum, D. tremens.

DELIRIUM TREMENS, Ma'nia à Potu, Cenoma'nia, Ma'nia e temulentia, D. potatorum, D. ebriositatis, Erethis'mus ebriosorum, Encephalopathie crapuleuse. A state of delirium and agitation, peculiar to those addicted to spirituous liquors, with great sleeplessness. It is preceded by indisposition, lassitude, watchfulness, headache, and anorexia, the delirium and tremors most commonly recurring in paroxysms. It is caused by the habitual and imtemperate use of ardent spirits or opium: or rather by abandoning those excitants after prolonged use. The treatment is various. Many have regarded stimulants with large doses of opium to induce rest to be indispensable. It is certain, however, that the expectant system will often, if not generally, be successful, and it is probable, a cure effected in this manner will be more permanent than when produced by excitants.

DÉLITESCENCE. See Repercussion.

DÉLIVRANCE, (F.) An expression, which, in common language, signifies the action of delivering, liberatio, but, in the practice of obstetrics, means the extrusion of the secundines, either spontaneously or by the efforts of art. This completion of delivery—partus secundarius, secundinarum expulsio vel extractio, is produced by the same laws as the expulsion of the fœtus. Sometimes, the after-birth follows the child immediately; at others, it is retained; and requires manual interference to remove it. The following are the chief cases in which this becomes necessary. 1. Intimate adhesion between the placenta and parietes of the uterus. 2. Spasmodic contraction of the orifice of the uterus. 3. Hour-glass contraction. 4. Torpor or hemorrhage after the expulsion of the child, and,—5. Insertion of the placenta at the orifice of the uterus.

DELIVERY, FALSE, False water.

DÉLIVRE, Secundines.

DELPHINIUM, Lusatia.

DELPHINIUM CONSOLIDA, Calcitrap'pa, Consolida Regalis, branching Larkspur. Family, Ranunculacæ. Scz. Syst. Polyandria

Trigynia. (F.) Pied d'alouette des champs. It has been employed as a vermifuge. The flowers have been used in ophthalmia, and the seeds have the same property as those of the Stavesacre.

DELPHINIUM STAPHISAGRIA. The systematic name of the Stavesacre, Staphisagria, Phtheirotomum, Phtheirium, Staphis, Pedicularia, (F.) Staphisaigre, Herbe aux Poux, Dauphinnelle. The seeds have a disagreeable smell; a nauseous, bitterish, hot taste; and are cathartic, emetic, and vermifuge; owing, however, to the violence of their operation, they are seldom given internally, and are chiefly used in powder, mixed with hair powder to destroy lice.

The active principle of this plant has been separated, and received the name Delphinine. It is extremely acrid, and has been recently used, like the veratrine, in tic douloureux, paralysis and rheumatism. It is used in the form of ointment, or in solution in alcohol, (gr. x to xxx, or more, to ℥j.) applied externally.

DELPHYS, Uterus, Vulva.

DELTA, Vulva.

DELTIFORMIS, Deltoid.

DELTOID, Deltoides, Deltoides, Deltiformis, from the Greek capital letter Δ, δέλτα, and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' Sous-acromion-clavi-huméral of Dumas; sus-acromion-huméral of Chaussier. A triangular muscle, forming the fleshy part of the shoulder, and covering the shoulder-joint. It extends from the outer third of the clavicle, from the acromion and spine of the scapula, to near the middle and outer part of the os humeri, where it is inserted by means of a strong tendon. This muscle raises the arm directly upwards, when the shoulder is fixed, and carries it anteriorly or posteriorly, according to the direction of the fibres, which are thrown into action. If the arm is rendered immovable, the deltoid acts inversely and depresses the shoulder.

DEM EL MUCA. A name given by Prosper Alpinus to a cerebral disease, which, he says, is proper to Egypt. He considers it to be inflammation of the brain; but others describe it as a pernicious intermittent.

DÉMANGEAISON, Itching.

DEMANUS, Acheir.

DÉMENCE, Dementia.

DEMEN'TIA, Amentia, Fatuitas, (q. v.) Ana'a, Parana'a, from de, 'from,' or 'out of,' and mens, 'mind,' or 'reason.' (F.) Démence, Bêtise. In common parlance, and even in legal language, this word is synonymous with insanity. Physicians, however, have applied it to those cases of unsound mind, which are characterized by a total loss of the faculty of thought, or by such an imbecility of intellect, that the ideas are extremely incoherent; there being at the same time, a total loss of the power of reasoning. Mania and melancholia are apt to end in this, if possible, more deplorable state. Dotage is the Dementia of the aged—Mo'ria demens lere'ma, Lere'ma, Ani'litas.

DEMI, Semi—d. Bain, Semicupium—d. Epineux, Semi-spinalis colli—d. Epineux du dos, Semi-spinalis dorsi—d. Gantelet, Gantclet—d. Interosseux du pouce, Flexor brevis polli-cis manus—d. Lunaire, Semi-lunar—d. Membraneux, Semi-membranosus—d. Orbicularis, Orbicularis oris—d. Tendineux, Semi-tendinosus.

DEMISSOR, Catheter.

DEMONOMANIA, Dæmonom'nia, from δαίμων, 'demon,' a spirit of good or evil, and μανία, 'madness.' Religious Insanity. A variety of madness, in which the person conceives himself possessed of devils, and is in continual dread of malignant spirits, the pains of hell, &c.

DEMONSTRATOR, from demonstra're, 'to show,' 'exhibit.' One who exhibits.

DEMONSTRATOR OF ANATOMY, one who exhibits the parts of the human body. A teacher of practical anatomy.

DEMOTIVUS LAPSUS, Repent'na mors, from demove're, 'to move off,' 'remove,' and lapsus, 'a fall.' Sudden death.

DEMULCENTS, Demulcent'ia, Involvent'ia, Obrvolentia, from demulcere, 'to soothe,' 'to assuage.' (F.) Adouissant. Medicines, supposed to be capable of correcting certain acrid conditions imagined to exist in the humours. Substances of a mucilaginous or saccharine nature belong to this class. Demulcents may act directly on the parts with which they come in contact; but in other cases, as in catarrh, their effect is produced by contiguous sympathy;—the top of the larynx being soothed by them first, and indirectly the inflamed portion of the air-passages. In diseases of the urinary organs, they have no advantage over simple diluents.—See Diluents and Emollients. The following are the chief Demulcents:—

|                        |                    |
|------------------------|--------------------|
| Acaciæ Gummi,          | Hordeum,           |
| Althææ Folia et Radix, | Lichen,            |
| Amygdalæ,              | Linum,             |
| Amylum,                | Olivæ Oleum,       |
| Avenæ Farina,          | Sassafras Medulla, |
| Cera,                  | Sesamum,           |
| Cetaceum,              | Sevum,             |
| Cydoniæ Semina,        | Tragacantha,       |
| Fucus Crispus,         | Ulmus.             |
| Glycyrrhiza,           |                    |

DEMUSCULATUS, (F.) Décharné. Emaciated, devoid of flesh.

DENARIUS; a Roman coin, equal in value to about 10 cents, or 8 pence English. It was marked with the letter X, to signify 10 asses. Also, the 7th part of the Roman ounce.

DENDROLIBANUS, Rosmarinus.

DENGUE, Dingee, Danga, Dandy, Bouquet and Bucket Fever. A disease, which appeared, in the years 1827 and 1828, in the West Indies, and in the Southern States of North America. It was extremely violent in its symptoms, but not often fatal. It usually commenced with great languor, chilliness, and pain in the tendons about the smaller joints. To these symptoms succeeded burning heat and redness of the skin, pains in the muscles of the limbs or in the forehead, with vomiting or nausea. The fever continued for one, two, or three days, and usually terminated by copious perspiration. In different places, it put on different appearances; but seems in all to have been a singular variety of rheumatic fever. The usual antiphlogistic treatment was adopted, and successfully.

DENIACH, MINERAL WATERS OF. D. is a village in Swabia, at the entrance of the Black Forest. The waters contain carbonic acid, carbonate of iron, carbonate of lime, sulphate of magnesia, and subcarbonate of soda.

DENIGRATIO, from denigrare, 'to become black.' The act of becoming black, as in cases of sphaelus, sugillation, &c.

DENS, Tooth—d. Leonis, Leontodon taraxacum—d. Sapientiae, see Dentition—d. Sophroreticus, see Dentition.

DENT, Tooth—d. de Sagesse, see Dentition.

DENTAGRA, Denticeps, Dentarpaga, Dentiducum, Dentalis forfex, Forfex dentaria, Odontagra, odontag'gon, from dens, 'a tooth,' and αγχα, 'a seizure.' (F.) Davies. A tooth-forceps.

DENTAL, Dentalis, Dentarius, from dens, 'a tooth.' That which concerns the teeth.

The DENTAL ARTERIES are those arteries, which nourish the teeth. They proceed from several sources. The teeth of the upper jaw, e. g., receive their arteries from the infraorbital and superior alveolar,—themselves branches of the internal maxillary. The teeth of the lower jaw receive their branches from the inferior dental or inferior maxillary, which is given off by the internal maxillary and runs through the dental canal, issuing at the mental foramen, after having given numerous ramifications to the teeth and jaw.

The DENTAL ARCHES, (F.) Arcades dentaires are the arches, formed by the range of alveoli in each jaw.

DENTAL CAVITY, (F.) Cavité dentaire, a cavity in the interior of the teeth, in which is situate the dental pulp.

DENTAL CANALS, (F.) Conduits dentaires, Maxillary canals. The bony canals, through which the vessels and nerves pass to the interior of the teeth.

DENTAL CARTILAGE, Cartilage dentalis. The cartilaginous elevation, divided by slight fissures, on the biting margins of the gums in infants, prior to dentition. It is a substitute for the teeth.

DENTAL FOLLICLE, (F.) Follicule dentaire. A membranous follicle, formed of a double lamina, in which the teeth are contained before they issue from the alveoli, and which, consequently, aids in the formation of the alveolar periosteum, and of the membrane that envelops the pulp of the teeth. The dental follicles are lodged in the substance of the jaws.

DENTAL GANGRENE, Caries Dentium, Odontalg'ia cariosa, Neerosis Dentium. Gangrene or caries of the teeth. See Caries.

DENTAL NERVES. (F.) Nerfs dentaires. Nerves which pass to the teeth. Those of the upper incisors and canine are furnished by the infra-orbital nerve, a branch of the superior maxillary; and those of the molares by the trunk of the same nerve. The teeth of the lower jaw receive their nerves from the inferior maxillary, which, as well as the superior maxillary, arises from the 5th pair.

DENTAL PULP. (F.) Pulpe dentaire. A pul-taceous substance, of a reddish-gray colour, very soft and sensible, which fills the cavity of the teeth. It is well supplied with capillary vessels.

The DENTAL VEINS have a similar distribution with the arteries.

DENTAL SURGEON, Dentist.

DENTALIS, Odontoid—d. Forfex, Dentagra.

DENTALIUM, from dens, 'a tooth,' the dog-like tooth shell. A genus of shells in the shape of a tooth. They formerly entered into several pharmaceutical preparations, but were useless ingredients; consisting—like shells in general—of carbonate of lime and gelatine.

DENTARIA, Anthemis Pyrethrum, Plumbago Europæa.

DENTARIUS, Dentist.

DENTARPAGA, Dentagra.

DENTELEARIA, Plumbago Europæa.

DENTELÉANTÉRIEUR, PETIT, Pectoralis minor—d. Grand, Serratus magnus—d. Postérieur et inférieur, petit, Serratus posticus inferior—d. Supérieur, petit, Serratus posticus superior.

DENTES ANGULARES, Canine teeth—d. Canini, Canine teeth—d. Columellares—Canine teeth—d. Ctenes, Incisive teeth—d. Cuspidati, Canine teeth—d. Dichasteres, Incisive teeth—d. Gelasini, Incisive teeth—d. Incisores, Incisive teeth—d. Lactei, see Dentition—d. Lanarii, Canine teeth—d. Molares, Molar teeth—d. Mordentes, Canine teeth—d. Oculares, Canine teeth—d. Primores, Incisive teeth—d. Rasorii, Incisive teeth—d. Scrotini, see Dentition—d. Tomici, Incisive teeth.

DENTICEPS, Dentagra.

DENTICULATUM, (Ligamentum), diminutive of dens, 'a tooth.' A slender cord, situate between the anterior and posterior fasciculi of the spinal nerves, and between the tunica arachnoidea and pia mater. It is attached to the dura mater, where that membrane issues from the cranium, and accompanies the spinal marrow to its inferior extremity. It sends off, from its outer edge, about 20 slender processes, in the form of denticuli, each of which is fixed by minute fibres to the dura mater in the interstices of the fasciculi.

DENTICULUS, Crena.

DENTIDUCUM, Dentagra.

DENTIER, (F.) from dens, 'a tooth,' Denture. A set or row of teeth, mounted on metal or ivory, to be adjusted to the alveolar margin. Dentiers are simple or double. To the latter, the name Râteliers is given, i. e. to the full set.

DENTIFORM, Dentiformis, from dens, 'a tooth,' and forma, 'form.' Resembling a tooth in shape.

DENTIFORMIS, Odontoid.

DENTIFRICE, Dentifricium, Tooth powder, Odontorin'ma, Odontosmeg'ma, from dens, 'a tooth,' and fried're, 'to rub'; a name, given to different powders and pastes proper for cleansing the enamel of the teeth, and removing the tartar which covers them. Powdered bark, and charcoal, united to any acidulous salt—as cream of tartar—form one of the most common dentifrices.

The ELECTUAIRE OU OPIAT DENTIFRICE, of the Codex, consists of coral ꝑiv, cuttlefish bones and cinnamon aa ꝑij, cochineal ꝑss, honey ꝑx, alum gr. iv or v.

Charcoal, finely powdered and mixed with chalk, forms as good a dentifrice as any.

DENTISCALPIUM, from dens, 'a tooth,' and scal'perc, 'to scrape,' odontoglyphum. This word has been applied to the instrument used for scaling the teeth; to the tooth-pick, (F.) Cure-dent; and to the gum lancet, (q. v.)—the déchaussoir of the French.

DENTIST, Denta'rins, Dental Surgeon, Surgeon-Dentist. One, who devotes himself to the study of the diseases of the teeth, and their treatment.

DENTISTRY, Dental Surgery, Odontotech'ny. The art of the dentist.

DENTIATION, Denti'tio, Odontophy'ia, Teething, Odont'asis, from denti're, 'to breed teeth.' The exit of the teeth from the alveoli and gums; or rather the phenomena which characterize the different periods of their existence. The germs of the first teeth, dentés lactei or milk teeth, (F.) dentés de lait, are visible in the fœtus about the end of the second month; and they begin to be ossified from the end of the third to that of the sixth month. At birth, the corona of the incisors is formed, but that of the canine is not completed; and the tubercles of the molares are not yet all united. Gradually, the fang becomes developed; and at about 6 or 8 months begins, what is commonly called, the first dentition, Odont'ia dentitio'nis lactantium. The two middle incisors of the lower jaw commonly appear first; and, some time afterwards, those of the upper jaw; afterwards, the two lateral incisors of the lower jaw; and then, those of the upper; followed by the four anterior molares; the canine or eye-teeth, at first, those of the lower, and afterwards, those of the upper jaw next appear; and, subsequently and successively, the 4 first molares—2 above and 2 below, 1 on each side. The whole number of the primary, temporary, deciduous, shedding, or milk-teeth, (dentés tempora'rii.) (F.) Dentés de lait, is now 20.

The second dentition or shedding of the teeth, odont'ia dentitio'nis puerilis, begins about the age of 6 or 7. The germs or membranous follicles of these second teeth—to the number of 32—as well as the rudiments of the teeth themselves, are visible, even in the fœtus, with the exception of those of the small molares, which do not appear till after birth. They are contained in alveoli of the same shape as those of the first dentition. Their ossification commences at from 3, to 6 months after birth, in the incisors and first molares; at 8 or nine months in the canine; about three years, in the molares; 3½ in the second great molares, and about 10 years in the last. As the alveolus of a new tooth becomes gradually augmented, the septum between it and that of the corresponding milk tooth is absorbed, and disappears. The root of the milk tooth is likewise absorbed; its corona becomes loose and falls out, and all the first teeth are gradually replaced by the permanent teeth, Dentés serot'ini. This second dentition becomes necessary in consequence of the increased size of the jaws. The new teeth have neither the same direction nor the same shape as the old; and they are more numerous; amounting, till the age of 25 (sooner or later,) to 28. About this period, a small molaris appears at the extremity of each jaw, which is called the Dens sapientie or wisdom tooth, Dens serot'inus, Dens saphioret'icus, (F.) Arrière dent, Dent de sagesse, making the whole number of permanent teeth 32. During the period of dentition, i. e. of the first dentition, the infant is especially liable to disease. The irritation, produced by the pressure of the tooth on the superincumbent gum, sometimes occasioning pyrexia, convulsions, diarrhœa, &c., which symptoms are often strikingly relieved by a free division of the distended gum. This disordered condition is called teething, Odont'ia dentitio'nis, Odont'asis, Odontal'gia dentitio'nis, Odaxi'smus.

DENTIUM CORTEX, Enamel of the teeth—d. Dolor, Odontalgia—d. Nitor, Enamel of the teeth—d. Scaptura, (Lancing the gums,) see Gum lancet.

DENTOIDEUS, Odontoid.

DENTS BICUSPIDÉES, Bicuspid teeth—d. Col des, Collum dentium—d. Conoides, Canine teeth—d. de Lait, see Dentition—d. Mâchelières, Molar teeth—d. Molaires, Molar teeth—d. Multicuspidées, Molar teeth, great—d. Œillères—Canine teeth.

DENTURE, Dentier.

DENUDAT'ION, Denuda'tio, Gymno'sis, from denuda're, 'to lay bare.' Condition of a part, deprived of its natural coverings, whether by wounds, gangrene, or abscess. It is particularly applied to the bones, when deprived of their periosteum.

DEOB'STRUENT, Deob'struens, Dephrac'ticum, Deoppilans, Deoppilativum, from de and obstru'ere, 'to obstruct.' (F.) Désobstruant, Désobstruetif, Désoopilatif, Désoopilant. Medicines, given with the view of removing any obstruction. The word corresponds to aperient, in its general, not in its particular sense. It is now almost abandoned, and, when used, conveys by no means definite ideas.

DEOPPILATIVUM, Deobstruent.

DEPAUPERATUS, Im impoverished.

DEPERDITIO, Abortion.

DEPHRACTICUM, Deobstruent.

DÉPILATIF, Depilatory.

DEPILATIO, Alopecia—d. Capitis, Calvities.

DEPILAT'ION, Depila'tio, Dropacis'mus, Made'sis, Mudi'sis, Psi'lo'sis, from de and pilus, 'hair.' Loss of hair, either spontaneously or by art.

DEPIL'ATORY, Depilato'rium, Dropax, Psi'lo'thron, Etillot'icus, Epilato'rium. (F.) Dépilatoire, Dépilatif. Any thing, which causes the loss of the hair. Depilatories are, usually, caustic applications, in which quicklime or some other alkaline substance, sulphuret of iron, &c., enters.

COLLEY'S DEPILATORY seems to consist of quicklime and a portion of sulphuret of potass. A pitch plaster is sometimes used as a depilatory. It, of course, pulls the hair out by the roots.

DEPLETION, Deple'tio, from depleo, 'I unload.' The act of unloading the vessels, by blood-letting, and the different evacuants. Also, inordinate evacuation.

DEPLUMATIO, Ptilo'sis, from deplumis, 'without feathers.' A disease of the eyelids, in which they are swollen, and the eyelashes fall out. See Madarosis.

DEPOSIT, Feculence.

DÉPOT, Abscess, Sediment—d. Laitouse sur la Cuisse, Phlegmatia dolens.

DEPREHENSIO, Diagnosis, Epilepsy.

DEPRAVATION, Depravatio, from pravus, 'bad,' perversion, corruption;—as depravation of the taste, &c.

DEPRESSIO, Depressio, from deprimere, 'to depress;' Esphlasis. In Anatomy, it means an excavation, hollow, or fossa. In Surgery, it is applied to a fracture of the cranium, in which the portions of fractured bone are forced inwards; (F.) Subgrondation, Entablement; called, also, Campsis Depressionis, Thlasis Depressio. Depression also means Couching.—See Cataract.

DÉPRESSED, Meningophylax.

DEPRESSOR, (F.) Abaisseur. Same etymon. Several muscles have been so termed, because they depress the parts on which they act.

DEPRESSOR ALÆ NASI, D. labii superioris alaque nasi, Incisivus medius, Myrtiformis, Depressor Labii superioris proprius, Constrictores alarum nasi ac depressores labii superioris—Mazillo-atræoli-nasal.—part of the labialis (Ch.) (F.) Abaisseur de l'aile du nez. It arises from the superior maxillary bone immediately above the junction of the gums with the two incisor and canine teeth; and passes upwards to be inserted into the upper lip and root of the ala nasi, which it pulls downwards.

DEPRESSOR ANGULI ORIS, Triangularis, Depressor labiorum communis, Depressor labiorum.—Sousmaxillo-labial, Maxillo-labial (Ch.) (F.) Abaisseur de l'angle des lèvres ou Muscle Triangulaire. A muscle, situate at the lower part of the face. Its form is triangular. It arises from the outer, oblique line on the lower jaw bone, and terminates in a point at the commissure of the lips, which it pulls downwards.

DEPRESSOR LABII INFERIORIS; Quadratus, Quadratus menti, Depressor labii inferioris proprius.—Mentonier-labial, Mento-labial, (Ch.) (F.) Carré du Menton, Houppé du Menton, Abaisseur de la lèvre inférieure. A small, thin, and quadrilateral muscle, which arises from the external oblique line of the lower jaw, and ascends to the lower lip, where it becomes confounded with the orbicularis oris. It pulls the lower lip downwards and outwards.

DEPRESSOR LABII SUPERIORIS PROPRIUS, D. Alæ nasi—d. Labiorum communis, D. Anguli oris—d. Oculi, Rectus inferior oculi.

DEPRESSOR PALPEBRÆ INFERIORIS. A fleshy bundle, which forms part of the palpebralis muscle. Heister describes it separately, but it is not admitted now.

DEPRESSORIUM, Meningophylax.

DEPRIMENS AURICULÆ, Retrahens auris—d. Maxillæ biverter, Digastricus—d. Oculi, Rectus inferior oculi.

DEPURANTIA, from depurare, 'to purify.' (F.) Dépuratifs. Medicines were formerly so called, which were supposed to possess the property of removing, from the mass of blood or humours, those principles, which disturbed their purity; and of directing them towards some one of the natural emunctories. The juices of what were called antiscorbutic herbs, sulphur, and many other medicines were ranked under this class.

DÉPURATIFS, Depurantia.

DEPURATION. Same etymon. Catharis'mos, Mundatio. In Pathology, depuration has been used for the process by which nature purifies the animal economy, either by the agency of some eruptive disease, or some spontaneous evacuation, or by the assistance of medicine. See Clarification.

DEPURATORY, Same etymon. Depuratorio. That which causes depuration, as the urinary and cutaneous depurations. Applied, also, to diseases, which have been considered capable of modifying the constitution advantageously, by acting on the composition of the fluids—such as certain eruptions, intermittents, &c. The word is, also, appropriated to medicines and diet, by which the same effect is sought to be induced.

DERANGEMENT, Insanity.

DERBIA, Impetigo.

DERENCEPHALUS, from δεειν, 'the neck,' and κεφαλη, 'head.' A monster whose head with the brain is in the neck.—G. St. Hilaire.

DERIS, Cutis.

DÉRIVATIF, Derivative.

DERIVATION, Derivatio, Deflectio, Parochetæ'sis, Revulsion. When a 'centre of fluxion' is established in a part, for the purpose of abstracting the excited vital manifestations from some other, a derivation is operated.

The term DERIVATION has likewise been applied to the suction power of the heart,—an important agency in the circulation of the blood.

DÉRIVATIVE, Deflectens, from derivare, 'to drain off.' Antispas'tic, Revellent, Revulsize. Same etymon. (F.) Dérivatif. A remedy, which by producing a modified action in some organ or texture derives from the morbid condition of some other organ or texture. Revelents are amongst the most important of remedies: they include, indeed, every physical and moral agent, which is capable of modifying the function of innervation, and therefore almost every article of the materia medica.

The following is a list of the chief local Derivatives.

DERMA, Cutis.

DERMATAGRA, Pellagra.

DERMATITIS, Cytitis, Erysipelatous inflammation.

DERMATOID, Dermatoïdes, from δερμα, 'the skin,' and ειδος, 'form.' That which is similar to the skin. This name is given to different tissues, which resemble the skin. The dura mater has been so called by some.

DERMATOLOGY, Dermotology, from δερμα, 'the skin,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A discourse or treatise of the skin.

DERMATOLYLUS, Callosity.

DERMITIS, Cytitis.

DERMOGRAPHY, Dermographia, from δερμα, 'the skin,' and γραφω, 'I describe.' An anatomical description of the skin.

DERMOID, Dermoides, Dermoïdes, from δερμα, 'the skin,' and ειδος, 'form.' Resembling, in consistence, texture, and configuration, the skin:—as dermoid texture, applied to mucous membranes, &c.

DERMOLOGY, Dermatology.

DERMOTOMY, Dermotomia; from δερμα, 'the skin,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' The part of anatomy, which treats of the structure of the skin.

DERTRON, δεστρον. This word, which is used by Hippocrates, signified, according to some, the omentum or peritoneum; but according to others, the small intestine. See Epiploon.

DESCENTE, Hernia—d. de la Matrice, Procidencia uteri.

DÉSARTICULATION, (F.) from de, and articulus, 'a joint.' Disjointing. A word used to express the part of the operation, in amputation at an articulation, which consists in dividing the ligaments, and separating the articular surfaces. The word has, also, been used for that kind of anatomical preparation, the object of which is, to separate the different bones of the skeleton, and especially those of the head.

DESCALORINÈSES. A name, given by Baumes to diseases, which are characterized by diminished heat: from de, 'from,' and calor, 'heat.'

DÉSENFLURE, Détumescence.

DESICCATIO, Draining.

DESICCATION, Drying.

DESICCATI'VA, Siccantia, Exsiccati'va, from desicca're, 'to dry up.' (F.) Dessiccatifs. Remedies, which, when applied externally, dry up the humours or moisture from a wound.

DESIPIENTIA, Delirium.

DESMA, Des'mē, Desmos, δεσμα, δεσμαη, δεσμος, a bandage, a ligament, (q. v.) Hence:

DESMEDION, Fasciculus.

DESMOCHAUNOSIS, from δεσμος, 'ligament,' and χαυνωσις, 'relaxation.' Relaxation of an articular ligament.

DESMOGRAPHY, Desmographia, from δεσμος, 'a ligament,' and γραφη, 'a description.' An anatomical description of the ligaments.

DESMOID TISSUE, Ligamentous Tissue, Textus desmōsus. This tissue is very generally diffused over the human body; has a very close connexion with the cellular tissue, and is continuous with it, in divers places. It constitutes the ligaments, aponeuroses, &c.

DESMOL'OGY, Desmolog'ia, from δεσμος, 'a ligament,' and λογος, 'a discourse,' 'treatise.' That part of anatomy, which describes the ligaments.

DESMOPHLOGY, Desmophlog'ia; from δεσμος, 'a ligament,' and φλογος, 'inflamed.' Inflammation of the ligaments.

DESMORRHEX'IS, from δεσμος, 'a ligament,' and ρηξις, 'rupture.' Rupture of an articular ligament.

DESMOS, Ligament.

DESMOT'OMY, Desmotomia; from δεσμος, 'a ligament,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' The part of anatomy, which teaches the mode of dissecting the ligaments.

DÉSOSTRUANT, Deobstruent.

DÉSOSTRUCTIF, Deobstruent.

DÉSOPILATIF, Deobstruent.

DÉSORGANISATION, Disorganization.

DÉSOXYGENÈSES. M. Baumes includes under this title, an order of diseases, which lie considers dependent upon a diminution in the quantity of the oxygen necessary for the animal economy.

DESPOTAT. (F.) Milites despotati. Inferior soldiers, formerly charged with the office of removing the wounded from the field of battle: perhaps from despotator, 'one who bears away.' The class of Despotats was introduced by Leo VI., at the commencement of the 9th century.

DESPUMA'TION, Despumatio, Apaphris'mos, Epaphris'mos, from despuma're, 'to skim,' 'to remove the froth.' The separation of the froth and other impurities, which rise, by the action of fire, to the surface of any fluid.

DÉSQUAMATION, Desquamatio Cutis, Eclepisis, Aposyr'ma, from desquama're, 'to scale off.' Exfoliation, (q. v.) or separation of the epidermis, in the form of scales, of a greater or less size. This affection is a common consequence of exanthematous diseases.

DESQUAMATORIUS, Exfoliative.

DESSÉCHEMENT, Atrophy, Draining.

DESSICATIFS, Desiccativa.

DESTILLATIO, Coryza.

DESUDA'TIO, Ephidro'sis, Sudam'ina, Hidro'a. Desudation means a profuse and inordinate sweating; but, most commonly, the term is applied to an eruption of small pimples, similar to millet seed, which appears chiefly on children, and is owing to want of cleanliness.

DETENTIA, Catalepsy.

DETERGENS, Abstergent.

DETER'GENTS, from deter'gere, 'to cleanse.' Detergen'tia, Abstergen'tia, Smed'tica, Emundant'ia, Mundificati'va, Rhypp'tica, (F.) Detersifs, Mondificatifs. Medicines, which possess the power to deterge or cleanse wounds, ulcers, &c. They belong to the class of stimulants, or to that of emollients.

DÉTERSIFS, Detergents.

DÉTORSE, Sprain.

DETRITUS, from deter'ere, 'to bruise or wear out.' The inorganic residuum, occupying the place of the organic texture of parts which have undergone disorganization.

DÉTROIT ABDOMINAL, Pelvis (brim)—d. Inférieur, Pelvis (outlet)—d. Périnéal, Pelvis (outlet)—d. Supérieur, Pelvis (brim).

DÉTRONCATION, Detruncatio.

DETRUNCATION, Detruncatio, (F.) Détroncation. Separation of the trunk from the head of the fœtus, the latter remaining in the uterus.

DETRUSOR URINÆ, from detru dere, 'to thrust out.' The muscular coat of the urinary bladder was formerly so called. It was, also, named, Constrictor Vesicæ Urinariæ.

DÉTUMESCENCE, (F.) Detumescencia, from detu'mere, 'to cease to swell.' A diminution of swelling. This word has nearly the same signification as the French word Désenflement. The latter, is, however, more particularly applied to the diminution of œdema or anasarca: the other, to the resolution of a tumour, properly so called.

DEUNX. The ancient name of a weight of 11 ounces, supposing the pound to consist of 12.

DEURENS (FEBRIS), Causus.

DEUTERA, Secundines.

DEUTERIA, from δευτερος, 'the second.' Vogel has used this term for the symptoms produced by retention of the secundines. The word was also applied, by the Greeks, to a second or inferior wine.

DEUTEROPATHIA, Morbus secundarius, from δευτερος, 'the second,' and παθος, 'disease.' A secondary disease. One produced by another, and of which it is only, in some measure, symptomatic, or the sympathetic effect.

DEUTO, δευτερος, 'second.' A prefix denoting two or double, as deutozide, having two degrees of oxidation.

DEVELOPEMENT, from (F.) developper, 'to unfold.' In Physiology, it means growth or increase; and in Pathology, its signification is similar. By development of the pulse, e. g. is understood an increase in its strength and fullness.

DEVIA'TION, Devia'tio, from de, 'from,' and via, 'the way.' Out of the way. By this word is meant—a vicious curvature of the spine or other bones;—faulty direction of the teeth or other part:—the passage of blood, bile, urine, milk, &c. into vessels not natural to them, &c.

DEVIL IN A BUSH, Nigella.

DEVIL'S DUNG, Asafœtida.

DEVIRGINATIO, Defloration, Stuprum.

DÉVOIEMENT, Diarrhœa.

DEWBERRY, AMERICAN, see Rubus cœsius—d. Plant, Rubus cœsius.

DEWCLAWS, Crusta genu equinæ.

DEXOCARDIA; from δεξιος, 'right;' and καρδια, 'the heart.' A case in which the heart is found to beat on the right side. It is met with in pleurisy and pneumothorax.

DEXTANS. A weight of 10 ounces, supposing the pound to consist of 12.

Dextrine, from Dexter, 'right-handed.' So called, from its refracting the rays, in the polarization of light, more to the right hand than any substance known. A substance obtained by the continued action of diluted sulphuric acid upon starch at the boiling point. It is used in the treatment of fractures, by the immovable apparatus. The bandages are soaked in a solution of the dextrine—previously moistened thoroughly with tincture of camphor, to prevent it from leaking when the water is added—in water. The solution should be of the consistence of molasses.

DI, δι, δισ, 'bis, twice, double.' Hence, Dierotus, Digastrius, &c.

DIA, δια, in composition, 'through, asunder, out of, separated.' When prefixed to any therapeutical agent, it meant, in ancient pharmacy, a preparation into which that agent entered.

DIABEBOS, Astragalus, Malleolus.

DIABETES, from δια, 'through,' and βαίω, 'I pass.' Urinæ profusivum, Siphon urinæ. Urorrhagia, Phthisuria, Polyuria, Hydrops al matulam, H. Matellæ, Melituria, Dipsacos, Diurhæa in Urinâ, (F.) Flux d'Urine. A disease, characterized by great augmentation and manifest alteration in the secretion of urine; with excessive thirst, and progressive emaciation. Cullen has described two species:—Diabetes insipidus and D. Mellitus, (F.) Diabète faux ou insipide, et Diabète; the former being, simply, a superabundant discharge of limpid urine, of its usual, urinary taste: the latter:—the D. Mellitus, called, also, Paruria Mellita, Diabetes Anglicus, Apoceno'sis Diabetes Mellitus,—falls under the definition given above.

The quantity of urine, discharged in the 24 hours, is sometimes excessive, amounting to 30 pints and upwards: and each pint containing sometimes 2½ oz. of saccharine matter. The saccharine matter replaces the urea; which is not found in the urine of those labouring under diabetes. Where the disease is situate is not clear. The whole system of nutrition, however, seems to be morbidly implicated. A part of the urine must be formed at the expense of the system, as the egesta frequently far exceed the solid and liquid ingesta. On dissection, no morbid appearance is met with, sufficient to enable us to fix on the seat of this distressing affection.

All the remedies, that have been tried, have usually been found insufficient in the D. Mellitus. The D. insipidus, Hyperuræsis aquosa, which occurs in hysterical habits, and has, hence, been called D. hystericus, is of comparatively trifling moment. Exclusive diet, and attention to the state of the cutaneous transpiration, which have sometimes produced good effects in D. Mellitus, have most commonly failed.

DIABETES LACTEA, Chyluria.

DIABOTANUM, from δια and βοτανη, 'an herb.' A medicine, prepared with herbs.—Galen.

DIABROSIS, Erosion, Corrosion.

DIABROTICUS, from δια, 'through,' and βρωσκα, 'I eat or corrode.' A substance, capable of causing erosion of the part to which it is applied. It ordinarily means a medicine, whose activity places it between escharotics and caustics. See Corrosive.

DIACARYON, from δια and καρυον, 'a nut.' Rob nucum. The rob of nuts or of walnuts.

DIACASSIA CUM MANNA, Confectio cassiæ.

DIACATHOLICON, Diacatholicon, from δια and καθολικος, 'universal.' The name of a purge, so called from its general usefulness. It was an electuary, and composed of the pulp of cassia, tamarinds, leaves of senna, root of poly-pody, flowers of the violet, rhubarb root, aniseed, sugar, liquorice, and fennel.

DIACAU'SIS, from διακαωω, 'I burn.' Excessive heat. Overheating.

DIACAUSTIC. Same etymon. Dicaustiticus. That which is caustic by refraction; as a double convex lens, which has been sometimes used for cauterizing an ulcer by directing the sun's rays upon it.

DIACELTATÉSSON PARACELSI, Pulvis Cornachini.

DIACHALASIS, from διαχαλαειν, 'to be open or relaxed.' Hippocrates uses this word for fracture of the bones of the skull; or for relaxation and separation at the sutures, in consequence of a wound of the head.—Hippocrates.

DIACHALCITEOS, from δια and χαλκίτις, 'chalcitis or colcothar.' A plaster, whose composition is the same as that of the diapalma, except that, in place of the sulphate of zinc, a mixture of oil and colcothar is substituted.

DIACHEIRIS'MOS, Tractatio manud'ria; from δια and χειρ, 'the hand.' The preparation, administration, and dispensing of medicines.—Hippocr.

DIACHORE'MA, Diachore'sis, from διαχωρεω, 'I separate from.' Every kind of excreted matter and excretion; but more particularly the fæces and alvine excretion.—Foesius, Gorræus. See Excrement.

DIACHORESIS, Excretion.

DIACHRISIS, Inunction.

DIACHRISTA, from δια and χρῖω, 'I anoint.' Medicines, applied as abstergents to the velum palati, the palate itself, the tongue, &c. Probably gargles. Paulus of Ægina.

DIACH'YLON or DIACH'YLUM, from δια and χυλος, 'juice;' i. e. composed of juices. The plaster of this name was formerly made of certain juices. The term is now confined to the EMPLASTRUM PLUMBI or Lead Plaster.

DIACHYLON CUM GUMMI, Emplastrum gummosum—d. Gommé, Emplastrum cum gumminresinis—d. Gum, Emplastrum gummosum—d. Magnum cum gummi, Emplastrum galbani comp.—d. Simplex, Emplastrum plumbi—d. White, Emplastrum plumbi—d. Yellow, Emplastrum, gummosum.

DIACHY'TICA, from δια and χυω, 'I pour out.' Medicines, which discuss tumours.

DIACINE'MA, from δια and κινειω, 'I move.' A slight dislocation.—Celsus, Galen. A subluxation.

DIACLYSMA, Gargarism.

DIACOCYME'LON, Diaprunum.

DIACODION, Syrupus papaveris

DIACODIUM, Confectio ex Capitibus Papaveris; from δια and κωδία, 'a poppyhead.' (F.) Diacode. The ancients had various forms for preparing it. The Syrup of Poppies—Syrupus Papaveris—is now substituted for it.

DIACOPE, Abscission, Dissection, Intersection.

DIACOPE, En'copē, from δια and κοπτειν, 'to cut.' A cut, incision, fissure, or longitudinal fracture. When used, since Galen, it generally signifies an oblique incision, made in the cranium by a sharp instrument, without the piece being removed. It is not now employed.

DIACOPRÆ'GIA, from δια, κοπρος, 'excrement,' αιξ, αιγος, 'a goat.' A name given, in Blancard's Lexicon, to a medicine, composed of goat's dung, which the ancients praised in diseases of the spleen, parotids, &c.

DIACRISIS; from δια, and κρινω, 'I separate.' A class of diseases characterized by alterations of secretion.—Gendrin.

DIACYDONITES, Cydoniatum.

DIADÉ'MA, Fascia cap'itis, Redimic'ulum, from διαδεω, 'I surround.' A sort of bandage; advised in headache, in which relaxation of the sutures was apprehended.—Forestus.

DIADERMIATRIA, from δια, δερμα, 'the skin,' and ιατρία, 'healing.' Treatment by the skin, as by the endermic and iatralaptic methods.

DIADEX'IS, Diad'ochē, Metatopto'sis, from διαδεχομαι, 'I transfer,' 'I succeed to.' A transformation of a disease into another differing from the former, both in its nature and seat.

DIADOCHÉ, Diadexis.

DIAD'OSIS, from διαδιδωμι, 'to distribute.' In some authors, it means the distribution of nutritive matter over the whole body; in other words, nutrition; whilst, in others, it is synonymous with the remission or cessation of a disease.

DIÆ'RESIS, from διαιρειω, 'I divide,' 'I separate.' A division (q. v.) or solution of continuity. A surgical operation, which consists in dividing any part of the body.

DIÆRETICUS, Caustic.

DIÆTA, Diet.

DIÆTE'MA. It has the same signification as Diet with most authors. Galen gives it a more extensive meaning; comprising, under it, what constitutes Hygiene.

DIAGNOS'IS, Dignō'tio, Diagnostice, Dēprehen'sio, from δια and γινωσκω, 'I know.' Discrimination, (F.) Diagnose, Diagnostique. That part of Medicine whose object is the discrimination of disease—the knowledge of the pathognomonic signs of each. It is one of the most important branches of general Pathology.

DIAGNOS'TIC, Discreti'vus, Diagnosticus; same etymon. A symptom which is characteristic of a disease.

DIAGRYDIUM, Convolvulus scammonia.

DIAGRYDIUM CYDONIA'TUM, from diagrydium, 'scammony,' and cydonium, 'quince.' A pharmaceutical preparation, obtained by inspissating and drying, by means of heat, two parts of scammony and one of quince juice. It was formerly used as an energetic purgative.

DIAGRYDIUM GLYCYRRHIZA'TUM. An analogous preparation, containing extract of liquorice in place of quince juice.

DIAGRYDIUM SULPHURA'TUM. Scammony, which has been exposed to the vapour of burning sulphur. These diagrydia are not now used.

DIALEIMA, Apyrexia.

DIALEIP'SIS, Intermision.

DIALEIP'YRA, Intermittent fever.

DIALEP'SIS, Interceptio, Diar'ochē, from διαλαμβατω, 'I intercept.'—Hippocrates em-plays this word for the interstices, or intervals, left between the turns of a bandage.

DIALYSIS, Dissolutio, from δια and λυσις, 'Solution.' A dissolution (q. v.) or loss of strength. Weakness of the limbs. Also, a solution of continuity.

DIAMANT, Diamond.

DIAMASTEMA, Masticatory.

DIAMBRÆ SPECIES. A name given, by the ancients, to powders, one of which bore the name—Species diambræ sine odora'tis; the other, that of—Species diambræ cum odora'tis. The former was composed of cinnamon, angelica root, cloves, mace, nutmeg, galanga, cardamom, and numerous other substances; the latter, besides, had amberggris and musk. These powders were used as tonics, in cases of debility of the stomach, and in certain nervous affections.

DIAMNES, Enuresis.

DIAMOND, Ad'amas, from α privative, and δαμω, 'I conquer,' (F.) Diamant. Invincible; so called from its hardness. It is the most precious of all stones, and was formerly conceived to possess extraordinary cordial virtues.

DIAMORUM, Rob ex moris, from δια and μορον, 'a mulberry.' An ancient syrup, prepared with honey and mulberry juice. It was employed as a gargle in sore throat.—Galen.

DIAMOTOSIS, from μοτος, 'charpie,' 'lint.' The introduction of lint into an ulcer or wound.

DIANANCAS/MOS, Diananeas/mus, from δια and αναγκάζω, 'I force.' Coaptation, reduction of a fractured or luxated limb.

DIANCEMA, Imagination.

DIANTHUS CARYOPHYLLUS, from Δις, 'Jove,' (?) ανθος, 'flower,' and caryophyllum, 'the clove.' Clove Pink. Also called caryophyllum rubrum, Turica, Turica hortensis, T. rubra, Caryophyllum hortensis, Clove July flower, Gilliflower. Order, Caryophyllæ, (F.) Eillet giroflée. The flowers were once much used; but are now only employed in syrup, as a useful and pleasant vehicle for other medicines.

DIAPALMA, Phanicium Emplas'trum. A plaster composed of equal parts of litharge, olive oil, azunge, water, a certain quantity of sulphate of zinc dissolved in water, and white wax. It is classed amongst the topical, desiccative, emollient, resolvent, detersive, and cicatrizing medicines. Mixed with a quarter of its weight of olive oil, it acquires the consistence of an ointment, and forms the Cerate of Diapalma.

DIAPASMA, from διαπασσειν, 'to sprinkle.' A medicine reduced to powder, and sprinkled over the body, or some part of it.

DIAPADESIS, Transuda'tio, Persuda'tio, from διαπιδεω, 'I leap through.' Exhalation of blood, in the form of dew, at the surface of the skin, or of any membrane. Sweating of blood. (F.) Sueur de Sang. Hæmorrhæ'gia per diapade'sin, Hæmatopede'sis, Hæmidro'sis.

DIAPENSIA CORTUSA, Sanicula.

DIAPENTES or DIAPENTE, from δια and πεντη, 'five.' A medicine composed of five ingredients. See Diatsaron.

DIAPHENICON, Diaphenix, Medicamen'tum ex Pal'mulis, from δια and φαινιξ, 'a date.' A drastic electuary, of which the date was the chief ingredient.

DIAPHORESIS, from διαφορω, 'I dissipate.' A greater degree of perspiration than natural, but less than in sweating. Every kind of cutaneous evacuation.

DIAPHORETIC. Same etymon; Diapno'icus, Diaphoret'icus. Medicines which excite diaphoresis. They are very uncertain as a class.

The following is a list of the chief reputed Diaphoretics:

|                                     |                  |                                |
|-------------------------------------|------------------|--------------------------------|
| Ammoniac                            | Acetatis Liquor. | Ipecacuanha.                   |
| Carbonas.                           |                  | Mezereum.                      |
| Antimonialis pulvis.                |                  | Opium—and its active principle |
| Antimonii et Potassæ Tartras.       |                  | Morphia.                       |
| Antimonii Sulphuretum præcipitatum. |                  | Sarsaparilla.                  |
| Asclepias tuberosa.                 |                  | Sassafras.                     |
| Camphora.                           |                  | Serpentaria.                   |
| Contra'yerva.                       |                  | Spiritus Ætheris Nitrici.      |
| Dulcamara.                          |                  | Sulphur.                       |
| Eupatorium perfoliatum.             |                  | Xanthoxylum.                   |
| Guaia'ci Lignum.                    |                  | Caloric.                       |
| Guaicum.                            |                  | Exercise, (active.)            |
|                                     |                  | Friction.                      |

The epithet Diaphoretic has also been given by some to continued fever, accompanied with constant perspiration

DIAPHORETIC, MINERAL, Antimonium diaphoreticum.

DIAPHORETICUM JOVIALE. See Antihæctic.

DIAPHRAGM, Diaphrag'ma, διαφραγμα, Discretorium, Phrenes, Septum transversum, Discrimen Thoracis et Ventris, Disseptum, Cinctus, Diazoma, Disseptum, Præcordia; the Midriff, Succingens membra'na vel Musculus; from δια, 'between,' and φρασσω, 'I close.' A large, azygous muscle; stretched transversely between the thoracic and abdominal cavities, which it separates from each other; tendinous in the centre; thin, almost circular, and unequally convex, upwards. It is fleshy at its circumference, which is attached to the cartilage ensiformis, to the six last ribs, to the aponeurosis stretched from the last rib to the transverse process of the first lumbar vertebra; and, lastly, to the bodies of the three or four first lumbar vertebræ. When it contracts, its fibres become straight, the chest is enlarged, and the abdomen diminished. It is then an inspiratory muscle. It may, also, diminish the capacity of the chest; and be an expiratory muscle. This muscle plays an important part in sighing, yawning, coughing, sneezing, laughing, sobbing, crying, hiccoughing, singing, vomiting, the excretion of the feces and urine, the expulsion of the fœtus, &c.

DIAPHRAGMA CEREBRI, Tentorium—d. Narium, Septum narium—d. Ventriculorum lateraliu cerebri, Septum lucidum.

DIAPHRAGMAL'GIA, from διαφραγμα, the 'diaphragm,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the diaphragm.

DIAPHRAGMATIC, Diaphragmaticus. Belonging to the diaphragm. A name given to several vessels and nerves.

DIAPHRAGMATIC OF PHRENIC ARTERIES.—These are distinguished into superior and inferior. The former, called, also, supradiaphragmatic, are two in number, one on each side. They arise from the internal mammary, and descend along the phrenic nerve, to be distributed on the upper surface of the diaphragm.

The latter, or infradiaphragmatic, are also two in number. They arise from the upper part of the abdominal aorta or from the celiac artery, and divide into two principal branches, which are distributed on the lower surface of the diaphragm and in its substance.

The superior diaphragmatic veins follow the same course as the arteries, and empty themselves—the right, into the vena cava superior; the left, into the corresponding subclavian vein. The two inferior diaphragmatic veins open into the vena cava inferior.

The DIAPHRAGMATIC OR PHRENIC NERVES are two in number; one on the left side, the other on the right. They arise from the second and third nerves of the cervical plexus, about the middle of the neck. They receive two or three filaments from the brachial plexus, after which they descend into the chest at the sides of the pericardium, and are distributed on the diaphragm.

The DIAPHRAGMATIC PLEXUSES are two in number; one right, and the other left. They arise from the upper part of the solar plexus, by a small number of branches, which are distributed to the diaphragm, following exactly the branches of the inferior diaphragmatic arteries.

DIAPHRAGMATIC HERNIA, Phrenic Hernia, Diaphragmatocele. The abdominal viscera are occasionally protruded through the diaphragm, either through some of the natural apertures in the muscle or through deficiencies, or wounds, or lacerations in it.

The DIAPHRAGMATIC RING, (F.) Anneau diaphragmatique of Chaussier, is a name given to the irregularly quadrilateral aperture, by which the vena cava inferior passes through the diaphragm.

DIAPHRAGMATITIS, Diaphragmitis.

DIAPHRAGMITIS, from διαφραγμα, 'the diaphragm,' Diaphragmatitis, Inflammatio septi transversi, Paraphrenitis, Empresna Pleuritis Diaphragmatica, Paraphrensis Diaphragmatica, Inflammatio of the Diaphragm. The terms, Paraphrenitis and Paraphrensis have been obtained from the Peripatetic Philosophy, which supposed the seat of the σφην or soul to be the præcordia. The essential symptoms of diaphragmitis are:—painful constriction around the præcordia, with small, quick, laborious breathing. It is a rare disease.

DIAPHTHORA, from δια and φθειρειν, 'to corrupt.' Corruption (q. v.) in general; more especially corruption of the fœtus in utero.—Hippocr. Also, corruption of the blood in the stomach.—Galen. See Abortion.

DIAPHYLACTIC, Prophylactic.

DIAPHYSIS, from διαφυσω, 'I rise between.' Interstitium, Discriminatio; an interstice, interval, division. Any thing that separates two bodies. Also, the middle part or body of a long bone, Corpus Ossis. One of the ligaments of the knee.—Hippocrates, Paré.

DIAPHA. Some lexicographers use this word synonymously with DIAPYESIS, or SUPPURATION; others have employed it, in opposition to MYOPIA.

DIAPLASIS, Conformation.

DIAPNOE, Perspiration.

DIAPNOGENOUS APPARATUS. See Perspiration.

DIAPNOICUS, Diaphoretic.

DIAPOREMA. Anxiety, jactitation; from δωπορειω, 'I doubt.'

DIAPRUNUM, Diacoccyne Lon. A purgative electuary, of which the pulps of prunes and rhubarb form the base. By adding to the diaprunum simplex a 24th part of powdered scammony, the Diaprunum resolutivum or compositum is formed. It is more active than the former.

DIAPYEMA, Empyema, Suppuration.

DIAPYESIS, Suppuration—d. Oculi, Hyppopyon.

DIAPYETICA, Dyapye' mata, from διαπυημα, διαπυησις, 'suppuration.' Medicines, which promote suppuration.

DIAPYETICUS, Suppurative.

DIARÆMIA, (F.) Diarémie, from δια, 'through,' ρεω, 'I flow,' and αιμα, 'blood.' A pathological condition, said to be common in sheep, in which the globules of the blood are diminished in quantity; the blood itself thinner, and transuding through the coats of the vessels into the cavities.—Delafore.

DIARÆMIE, Diaræmia.

DIARIA, Ephemera.

DIAROCHÆ, Dialepsis.

DIARRHAGE, Fracture.

DIARRHŒA, from δια, 'through,' and ρεω, 'I flow.' Alvi proflu'vium, A. fluxus aquo'sus, Ventris proflu'vium, Cæliorrhœa, Cæcatoria, Coprorrhœa, Catar'hus intestinal'is, Alvi fluxus, Deflux'io, Lax, Looseness, (F.) Diarrhée, Dévoicement, Catar'he intestinal, Flux de Ventre, Courante. A disease, characterized by frequent, liquid, alvine evacuations, and which is generally owing to inflammation or irritation of the mucous membrane of the intestines. It is commonly caused by errors in regimen, the use of food noxious by its quality or quantity, &c. It may be acute or chronic. Many varieties have been made by some Nosologists—e. g. mucous, bilious, serous; dependent upon the matters evacuated.

Diarrhœa requires different treatment, according to its nature. If caused, as it often is, by improper matters in the intestinal canal, these must be evacuated; and the astringent plan of treatment must not be adopted, unless the discharges seem kept up by irritability of the intestines, or unless they are colliquative. The indiscriminate use of astringents is to be deprecated.

A very fatal diarrhœa prevails amongst the native inhabitants of India, to which Mr. Tytler has given the name Diarrhœa hecticæ, because, like hectic fever, it seems to obtain habitual possession of the constitution, to operate upon it with scarcely any perceptible intermission, and, in general, to defy the most powerful remedies.

DIARRHŒA ADIPOSA, Grasfondure—d. cum Apepsiâ, Lientery—d. Carnosa, Dysentery—d. Chylosa, Celiac flux—d. Chymosa, Celiac flux—d. Cruenta, Hæmatochezia—d. Dyspeptica, Lientery—d. Hepatica, Hepatirrhœa—d. Ingestorum, Lientery—d. Lienteria, Lientery—d. in Urinâ, Diabetes.

DIARTHRODIAL, Diarthrodial'is. Relating to diarthroses or movable articulations, as dialarthrodial articulation. Dialarthrodial carti- lage or incrusting cartilage is the cartilage which invests the articular extremity of a bone.

DIARTHRO'SIS, from διαρθρωσις, 'I articulate.' Dearticulatio, Proarthrosis, Aparthrosis, Abarticulatio, Coarticulatio. (F.) Emboiture. A movable articulation. One which permits the bones to move freely on each other in every direction, as in the case of the shoulder-joint.

DIASATYRION, from δια, and σατυριον, 'the orclis mas'cula.' An electuary, of which this plant formed the base. (?)—Myrepsus. The ancients attributed to it the faculty of exciting the organs of generation.

DIASCINCI ANTIDOTUS, Mithridate.

DIASCORDIUM, from δια and σκορδιον, 'the water germander.' An electuary, so called because this plant enters into its composition. The Parisian Codex has a formula for its preparation, under the title, Electuarium opiatum astrigenens vel diascordium. (R. fol. scord. ℥ iss, rosar. rubr., bistort. rad., gentiana, tormentilla, scm. berber. āā ℥ ss. zingib., piper. long. āā ℥ ij, cassia lignea, cinnamon, dictamn. cretens., styrac. calamit., galban., gum. acacia āā ℥ ss. bol. oriental. præpar. ℥ ij. extract. vinos opii ℥ ij, mcl. rosat. præp. lb ij, vin. hispan. lb ss: fiat electuarium.) In place of the styrac calamita, the balsam of tolu or benjamin may be used. The opium is, in this preparation, in the proportion of 1 to 181. The diascordium is employed in diarrhœa and dysentery, as a tonic, stomachic, and astringent. The common dose is from a scruple to a drachm and a half. See Pulvis cretæ compositus.

DIASOSTIC, P'rophylactic.

DIASPASIS, Divulsio.

DIASPERMATON. The ancient name of two cataplasms, composed of seeds.—Galen, Paulus.

DIASPHYXIS, Pulse.

DIASASEMIE, Diastasæmia.

DIAS'TASIS, 'separation,' Diastéma, Dissidentia, 'distance.' A separation of bones from each other, and particularly of the bones of the cranium; of the radius from the ulna, and the fibula from the tibia. The ancients used this word to designate the three dimensions of the body,—length, breadth, and thickness; for the interval separating the patient from the physician; the swelling of varicose veins; the time at which some change occurred in disease, &c.

DIASTEMA, Diastasis, Interstice.

DIAS'TOLE, from διαστέλλω, 'I dilate,' 'I open.' Dilatation of the heart and arteries, when the blood enters their cavities. It is the opposite movement to systole, in which the heart and arteries contract to send forth the blood. Diastole and systole are, consequently, successive movements. Diastole occurs simultaneously in the two ventricles. The almost inappreciable time, which elapses between the diastole and systole has been called perisystole, and that which succeeds to the diastole, peridiastole. When we speak of the contraction or systole of the heart, as well as its diastole or dilatation, we mean that of the ventricles. This dilatation is active.

DIASTOMO'TRIS, from διασπασσω, 'I dilate.' Dilating instruments, such as the different kinds of specula for the mouth, anus, vagina, &c.

DIASTREMMA, Distortion, Perversion, Sprain.

DIASTROPHE, Distortion, Perversion, Sprain.

DIAS'TASÆMIA, (F.) Diastasémie, from διασπασις, 'separation,' and αἷμα 'blood.' A pathological condition, characterized by a separation of the elements of the blood globules;—the fibrine and albumen separating also from the coloring matter, whilst the fibrine attaches itself to the valves of the heart. Delafour.

DIAT'ASIS, Disten'sio, from διατεινω, 'I distend.' Tension (q. v.) The reduction of a fracture, by extension and counter-extension.

DIATES'SARON, from δια and τεσσαρες, 'four.' An electuary, into the composition of which entered four medicines; viz. the roots of gentian and aristolochia rotunda, and bay berries, each ℥ ij, honey lb ij. The whole was incorporated with extract of juniper. The diapentes is nothing more than this electuary, mixed with two ounces of teary shavings. The diatessaron is tonic, and it was formerly employed in cases of stings and bites of venomous animals. It was regarded as emmenagogue, alexiterial, and alexipharmic.

DIATH'ESIS, from διατιθημι, 'I dispose.' Disposition, constitution, affection of the body: predisposition to certain diseases rather than to others. The principal diatheses, mentioned by authors, are, the cancerous, scrfulous, scorbatic, rhumatic, gouty, and calculus.

DIATHESIS NERVOŒA, Nervous diathesis—d. Sthenica, Sthenia.

DIATRAGACANTHUS. A powder, composed of gum tragacanth. ℥ ij, gum arabic ℥ j and ℥ ij, starch ℥ ss, liquorice ℥ ij, as much of the seed of the melon and white poppy; seeds of the water-melon, cucumber, and gourd, and sugar candy ℥ ij. It was used as a demulcent.

DIATR'UM or DIATR'UM, from δια and τρεις, 'three.' A medicine, composed of three ingredients. There were formerly two kinds. The first was called Diatrium Piperis species, and was formed of black and long pepper, aniseed, thyme, and ginger. It was highly stimulating. The second species was known under the name, Diatrium Santalorum pulvis, or Powder of the three Sanders. They were considered diaphoretic.

DIATRIT'ARI. The Methodists were so called, who pretended to cure all diseases by subjecting the patients for three days to a rigid diet.

DIATRITOS. Diet of three days. The means used by the Methodists to cure disease.

DIAZOMA, Diaphragm.

DIAZOS'TER, from διαζωωμι, 'I surround.' The twelfth vertebra of the back, because it corresponds to the girdle, ζαστηρ.

DICEPHALON, Bicephalum.

DICERAS RUDE. See Worms.

DICAL'CON. A weight, equal to a third part of an obolus.

DICHROMOS, Verbena officinalis.

DICLIDOSTO'SIS, from διχλις, 'a double

'door,' and οστωις, 'ossification.' Ossification of valves—as of the heart.

DICHOPHYIA, from διχα, 'double,' and φω, 'I grow.' A disease of the hairs, in which they split and grow forked.

DIC'ROTUS, Bisferiens, from δισ, 'twice,' and ροουω, 'I strike.' An epithet, given to the pulse, when it seems to beat twice as fast as usual. It is synonymous with the term, rebounding pulse,—the artery rebounding after striking, so as to convey the sensation of a double pulsation. It has been considered, and with truth, to frequently foretell hemorrhage. In bad cases of typhus, it certainly announces such a tendency.

DICTAMNE, Dictamnus albus—d. de Crète, Origanum dictamnus.

DICTAMNUS ALBUS, from Dictamnus, a town in Crete. White Fraxinella or Bastard Dil'tany, Fraxinella, (F.) Dictame, Fraxinelle. The fresh root has been considered nervine, anthelmintic, and emmenagogue. It is not used.

DICTAMNUS CRETICUS, Origanum dictamnus.

DICTYITIS, Inflammatio Retinæ, from δικτυον, 'a net,' the retina, and ιτις, denoting inflammation. Inflammation of the Retina.

DICTYON, Rete.

DIDYMAL'GIA, from διδυμοι, 'the testicles,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the testicles.

DIDYMOS, Gemellus.

DIDYMUS, Testicle.

DIECBOL'ION, from δεια and εκβαλλω, 'I cast out,' διεκβολιον. A name given, by the ancients, to a remedy, which they believed capable of producing abortion.

DIERENBACH, MINERAL WATERS OF. D. is a city in Bavaria, two leagues from which is a sulphurous spring.

DIES, Hēmera, ἡμερα. A Day. The day is, properly, the period during which the solar light illumines our horizon: but commonly, also, we designate by the word day, the period of 24 hours, or Nycthemeron, which is frequently divided into four parts—morning, mid-day, evening, and midnight. In antiquity, great importance was attached to the observation of days in disease. The Medical day is usually reckoned at 24 hours; universally, in estimating the duration of a disease. In parts of the United States, it comprises only the time when the sun is above the horizon, as regards the administration of medicine. If a medicine be ordered to be taken four times a day, it is understood to mean during the 12 hours of day. (F.) Jour.

DIES CONTEMPLANTES, Indicating days—d. Critici, Critical days—d. Decretori, Critical days—d. Indicatorii, Indicating days—d. Indices, Indicating days—d. Judicatorii, Critical days—d. Principes, Critical days—d. Radicales, Critical days.

DIET, Dia'ta, Ratio victus. Originally, this word signified nearly the same thing as Hygiene and Regimen, i. e. Diet was the employment of every thing, necessary for the preservation of health and life. At the present day, it signifies a particular kind of food, and, at times, a privation of food and drink: abstinence. To put any one upon diet, (F.) Metre, quelqu'un à la diète, means to deprive him of his usual nourishment:—milk diet, means a diet of milk, &c.

See Aliment, Dietetics, Hygiene, and Regimen.

DIET, HOSPITAL. Every well regulated hospital has certain dietetic regulations. The following Table of Dietary shows the particular regimen selected for the sick, in certain hospitals.

DIET DRINK. A decoction or potion, variously composed, and used in considerable quantity, for the purpose of purifying the blood. The Decoctum Lusitanicum or Lisbon Diet-drink, is one of the most celebrated. See Decoctum Sarsaparillæ Compositum.

DIETETICS, DIETETICE, DIETETICA, Medic'na Dietet'ica; same etymon, (F.) Diététique. A branch of medicine, comprising the rules to be followed for preventing, relieving, or curing diseases by diet. Dietetics is diet administered according to principle. It is an important part of Hygiène, (which see.) A well regulated system of diet has great power in checking disease, and likewise in preventing it. A proper knowledge of dietetics is, indeed, as important as that of the Materia Medica, strictly so called.

Dietetics is used, also, synonymously with Hygiène.

DIÉTÉTIQUE, Dietetics.

DIETETISTS, Dietetista. Physicians who apply only the rules of dietetics to their treatment of disease.

DIEU-LE-FILT, MINERAL WATERS OF. The waters of Dieu-le-filt, in France, are chalybeate, and much sought after.

DIEURYSMUS, Dilatation.

DIEX'ODOS, from δια and εξοδος, 'an exit or way out.' D'iodos. Any opening, by which an excretion takes place.

DIFFICULTAS INTESTINORUM, Dysentery.

DIFFLATIO, Perspiration.

DIFFORMITÉ, Deformation.

DIFFUSIBLE, (stimulants) from diffusus, 'spread abroad.' Those stimulating medicines, which augment the action of the vascular and nervous systems in an acute but transitory manner.

DIGAS'TRICUS, from δεις, 'twice,' and γαστήρ, 'a belly:' Biven'ter, B. Maxillæ, Dep'rimum, Maxillæ Biven'ter, Bigaster, Mastoido-hyogénien, Mastoido-génien—(Ch.) (F.) Digastrique, Abaisseur de la machoire inférieure.

The name, Digastricus, was formerly given to several muscles. It is now restricted to one of the muscles of the superior hyoid region. The digastricus is thick and fleshy at its extremities; thin and tendinous at its middle. It is attached to the mastoid groove of the temporal bone, and to a fossette at the side of the symphysis menti. Its tendon passes through an aponeurotic ring, which is attached to the os hyoides.

The use of the digastricus is, to depress the lower jaw, or to raise the os hyoides, and to carry it forwards or backwards, as in deglutition. The strong double-bellied muscle, which forms the gizzard of birds, is also called Digastri-cus.

DIGASTRICUS CRANII, Occipito-frontalis.

DIGASTRIQUE, Digastricus.

DIGERENTIA, Digestives.

DIGESTIBLE, Concoctus habilis. Capable of being digested. All food is not equally digestible, and some of the most nourishing is the least so:—the fat of meat, for example. Certain substances again are entirely rebellious. The following table exhibits the time required for the stomachal digestion of different alimentary substances, in a well-known case, which fell under the care of Dr. Beaumont. The table is taken from the Author's Elements of Hygiène, Philadelphia, 1835, p. 505.

The most digestible substances are taken as the standard, which has been arbitrarily fixed at 1,000; and accordingly, aponeurosis, the first article in the table, requiring 3 hours, whilst pigs' feet soused, rice, &c., require but one, its digestibility, compared with that of these aliments, is as 333 to 1000; and so of the others.

It need scarcely be said, that all these tabular results apply, in strictness, to the individual concerned only; yet they afford useful comparative views, which, with exceptions depending upon individual peculiarities, may be regarded as approximations, applicable to mankind in general.

* Pigs' feet soused, rice, and tripe soused, being the most digestible articles in the table, are estimated at 1000. † In the case of oils, and other substances of similar nature, which undergo little digestion in the stomach, the time merely indicates the period that elapses before they are sent on into the duodenum.

DIGESTIO DEPRAVATA, Dyspepsia—d. difficilis, Dyspepsia—d. læsa, Dyspepsia.

DIGESTION, Digestio, from digerere, 'to dissolve.' Coc'tio, Pep'sis, πεψις. Digestion is a function, exclusively belonging to the animal kingdom, by means of which alimentary substances, when introduced into the digestive canal, undergo different alterations. The object of this is to convert them into two parts; the one, a reparatory juice, destined to renew the perpetual waste occurring in the economy: the other, deprived of its nutritious properties, to be rejected from the body. This function is composed of a series of organic actions, differing according to the particular organization of the animal. In man they are eight in number, viz. 1. Prehension of food. 2. Mastication. 3. Insalivation. 4. Deglutition. 5. Action of the stomach. 6. Action of the small intestine. 7. Action of the large intestine. 8. Expulsion of the fæces.

DIGESTION is also a pharmaceutical operation, which consists in the solution of certain solid substances in water, alcohol, or other menstruum, at a slightly elevated temperature; for example, in a sand-bath, or by leaving them exposed for some time to the sun.

DIGESTIVE TUBE, Canal, alimentary.

DIGESTIVES, Digestiva, Digerentia; same etymon. (F.) Digestifs. A term given, by Surgeons, to those substances, which, when applied to a wound or ulcer, promote suppuration; such as the Ceratum resinae, warm cataplasms, fomentations, &c.

Dr. Paris uses the term Digestive Texture, for the particular organic condition of substances, which affects their digestibility.

DIGITAL, Digitalis; from dig'itus, 'a finger;' having the shape of a finger; digitated, or belonging to the fingers.

The Appendix vermiformis cæci is sometimes called, DIGITAL APPENDIX.

The DIGITAL ARTERIES, VEINS, and NERVES are those distributed to the fingers.

DIGITAL IMPRESSIONS are the slight impressions observable on the inner surface of the bones of the cranium, which correspond to the cerebral convolutions.

DIGITAL BLANC, Clavaria—d. Cavity, Cornu descendens ventriculi lateralis—d. Humain, Clavaria.

DIGITALINE. See Digitalis.

DIGITALIS, from dig'itus, 'a finger;' because its flower represents a finger. The Digitalis purpurea, Fox-glove, Baccharis, Bacchar, Baccar. (?) Family, Scrophularinæ. Sex. Syst. Didynamia Angiosperma. (F.) Digitale, Gants de notre dame. The leaves of this plant, which are indigenous in Great Britain, are powerfully sedative, (diminishing the velocity of the pulse,) diuretic, and sorbafacient. In overdoses, D. causes vomiting, purging, dimness of sight, vertigo, delirium, hiccough, convulsions, and death.—all the symptoms, in short, which characterize the Acro-narcotic class of poisons. Its active principle has been called Dig'italine.

The Digitalis has been administered in inflammatory diseases, phthisis, active hemorrhage, dropsy, &c.; and although it is a powerful remedy, it has not been as much employed, as it probably would have been in particular cases, owing to the overstrained eulogiums, which many have passed upon it in almost all diseases.

The dose is from one to three grains, in the form of pill, which may be repeated every six or eight hours.

DIGITALIS MINIMA, Gratiola officinalis.

DIGITATION, Dig'itatio, Productio dentata, Inser'tio denticulata, I. dig'itata, from dig'itus, 'a finger.' A division, in the form of a finger. Several muscles, as the serrati, exhibit digitations, similar to those which the fingers form, when held separate.

DIGITTIUM, from dig'itus, 'a finger.' Desiccation or atrophy of the fingers.—Linnæus. Sauvages calls the same affection, Paronychia Dig'ituum.

DIGITORUM TENSOR, Extensor brevis digitorum pedis.

DIGITUS, Dactylos, a Finger, (F.) Doigt. A name, given to the prolongations, which form the extremity of the hand. There are five on each hand: the first, or the thumb, Anticheir, Pollex, Manus parva majori adjutrix, Dig'itus primus, D. magnus, Promanos, (F.) Pouce; the second, the index or indicator, λιγανος, Lichanos; the third, the me'dius, μεσος, (F.) Doigt du milieu, middle finger or long finger; the fourth, the ring finger, annularis, παρμεσος, Paramesos, (F.) Annulaire; and the little finger, Ot'ites, ωττης, Dig'itus auricularis, (F.) Auriculaire, petit doigt. All of these have three phalanges, except the first, which has only two.

DIGITUS ANNULARIS, Annular finger—d. Indicatorius, Index.

DIGITUS PEDIS. A Toe. (F.) Orteil. The toes are five in number, and distinguished numerically, reckoning from within to without. The first is, also, called great toe, (F.) gros orteil; the fifth, the little toe, petit orteil. They have nearly the same organization as the fingers.

DIGNOTIO, Diagnosis.

DIHYSTERIA, Dime'tra; from δι, 'double,' and υστερη, 'uterus.' The state in which there is a double uterus.

DILACERATIO, Laceration.

DILATANTS, Dilating agents.

DILATATEUR, Dilator—d. Antérieur du larynx, Crico-thyroid muscle—d. Postérieur du larynx, Crico-arytenoid, posterior.

DILATATION, Dilata'tio, from dilato're, 'to enlarge;' Eury's'mus, Aneurys'mus, Dicury's'mus. Augmentation of the bulk of a body, occasioned by a separation of some of its molecules. Caloric has the property of dilating all bodies. In Surgery, it means the accidental or preternatural augmentation of a canal or opening; as in aneurisms, varices, &c., or the process of enlarging any aperture or canal, where such may have been contracted.—this surgical acceptance has received, also, the name Diop'trismos.

DILATATOIRE, Dilator.

DILATING AGENTS, Dilatan'tia, (F.) Dilatants. Certain substances used in surgery, either to keep parts separate, which have a tendency to unite—as after opening an abscess, to prevent the edges of the incision from uniting; or to increase and dilate openings or canals, either when natural, or formed accidentally or artificially. These agents differ from each other: the chief are,—prepared sponge tents, gentian root, bougies, sounds, drick peas for issues, &c.

DILATOR, Dilato'rium, (F.) Dilatateur, ou Dilatatoire. A muscle, whose office it is to dilate certain parts; such as the inspiratory muscles, which dilate the chest.

DILATOR, Dilatato'rium, Spec'ulum, Diop'tra, Diop'tron, (F.) Dilatateur. An instrument, used for dilating a wound, excretory canal, or other natural or artificial opening. There are several instruments of this kind, each taking its name from the part to which it is applied; as the Speculum Oris, S. Nasi, S. Uteri, &c.

DILATOR, ARNOTT'S. A modification of the old dilators for strictures of the urethra. It consists of a tube of oiled silk; lined with the thin gut of some small animal to make it air tight: and fixed on the extremity of a small canula, by which it is distended with air or water, from a bag or syringe at the outer-end, whilst a stop-cock or valve serves to keep the air or water in, when received. As soon as the bag is passed within the stricture or strictures, as much air is to be injected into it as the patient can easily bear. The instrument is not much used. See Arnott on Strictures, Lond. 1819.

DILATORES ALARUM NASI, Compressor naris.

DILL, Anethum graveolens.

DILUENTIA, from diluo, 'I wash away.'

(F.) Délayants. Medicines, which have been conceived proper for augmenting the fluidity of the blood and other animal liquids. All aqueous drinks are diluents. They are administered, with great advantage, in various diseases. In fever, water, which is the most familiar diluent, may be freely allowed; the only precaution being to give it hot in the cold stage, cold in the hot, and tepid in the sweating. In diseases, where it is considered necessary to abstract blood largely, diluents should not be given too freely. The abstraction of blood occasions activity of absorption, and the mass is speedily restored. In cases of inflammation of the mammæ, in nurses, it is also obvious, that diluents should not be freely allowed, as they increase the secretion of milk, and add to the irritation. When demulcents are exhibited in cases of urinary disease, they act simply as diluents, for their mucilaginous portion is digested in the stomach and small intestine: the watery portion alone being separated by the kidney.

DIMETRA, Dihysteria.

DINANT, MINERAL WATERS OF. D. is a small town, six leagues from St. Malo, in France, where are mineral waters, containing carbonate of iron, muriate of soda, &c. They are much esteemed.

DINGEE, Dengue.

DIN'ICA, from δινειω, 'I turn round.' Medicines, which relieve vertigo.

DINOS, Vertigo.

DINUS SCOTOMA, Scotodynia—d. Vertigo, Vertigo.

DIQBOLON, Scruple.

DIQCRES, Pastil.

DIQDOS, Diexodos.

DIQCESIS, Dispensation.

DIONCO'SIS, from δια and ογκος, 'a tumour.' The Methodists applied this name to a sort of tumefaction or plethora, occurring either directly from too great a quantity of fluid circulating in the system, or owing to the retention of substances, which ought to be excreted. It is the antithesis to sympto'sis. See Intumescence.

DIOPHTHALMUS, Binoculus.

DIOPTRISMOS, Dilatation.

DIOPTRON, Dilator, Speculum.

DIORTHO'SIS, from διορθειω, 'I make straight.' The reduction of a fractured or luxated limb.

DIOSCOREA. See Yam.

DIOS'MA CRENA'TA, Baros'ma crenat'a, Agathos'ma crenatum, Buchu Leaves, Buckho. A South African plant, the powder of whose leaves is used by the Hottentots to perfume their bodies. It has been employed in chronic affections of the bladder and urinary organs in general. It has also been given in cholera.

DIOS'PYROS LOTUS, Faba Græca. The Indian Date Plum. (F.) Plaqueminier d'Europe. This tree grows in some of the southern parts of Europe. Its fruit is very astringent, and has been recommended in dysentery and hemorrhages.

DIOS'PYROS VIRGINIA'NA, Dios'pyros, Ph. U. S. Lotus Virginia'na, Persimmon. A common tree in the middle parts of the United States. The fruit, which is only eatable after frost (when it is tolerable) is, sometimes, made into cakes with bran. These, being dried in an oven, are kept to make beer. When bruised in water, fermentation takes place. The unripe fruit is distressingly acerb and astringent. The inner bark of the tree is extremely bitter; and may be used where bitters are indicated.

DIOTA or DYOTA. A wooden cup, lined with a composition of resin, cinnamon, cloves, and ginger, to give more flavour to beer. It was, formerly, much used in the North of Europe.

DIPH'RYGES. The oxide of copper, more or less pure. The ancients reckoned three kinds of diphryges, which they used as astringents.

DIPHTHERITIS, Angina pellicularis.

DIPHTHERY'TIS TRACHEA'LIS, Cynanche trachealis.

DIPLASIASMUS, Duplication.

DIP'LOË, from διπλω, 'I double,' διπλω, Diplo'sis, Meditul'ium, Medium Calvaria Discrimen. The cellular structure, which separates the two tables of the skull from each other. The ancients applied the term, also, to the proper coat of the uterus (?) Rolfink, in Castelli.

The Diploë has the same use as the cellular structure of bones in general. See Cancelli.

DIPLOLEPSIS GALLÆ TINCTORIÆ.

See Quercus cerris.

DIPLO'MA. A letter or writing conferring some privilege. Usually applied to the document, certifying that a person has obtained the title of Doctor. It was so called because formerly written on waxed tables, folded together. Diploma is also used in pharmacy for sand-bath.

DIPLO'PIA, from διπλος, 'double,' and οπτοιαι, 'I see.' Visus Duplicatus, Ditto'pia, Dittop'sia, Anphamphoterodiopsia, Amphodiplopia, Double Vision. (F.) Bévue. An affection of the sight, in which two distinct sensations are produced by the same object, which consequently seems double. Sometimes more than two are seen; but still the disease is termed Diplo'pia and Suffusio Multiplicans.

This affection arises from some derangement in the visual axes; in consequence of which, the images are not impressed on corresponding parts of the retina of each eye.

DIPLOSIS, Diploë, Duplication.

DIPLOSO'MA; from διπλος, 'double,' and σωμα, body. The Diplosoma crenatus, is an imperfectly described entozoon, which has been passed from the urinary bladder. It varies in length from four to six or eight inches, and is thinnest at the middle, where it is bent at an acute angle upon itself, so that the two halves hang nearly parallel, and give to it an appearance as if two worms had been tied together by their heads. It has been confounded with the Spiroptera hominis, (q. v.)

DIPNOOS, from δισ, and πνοη, 'breath.' Having two vent holes. Bispir'rus. An epithet, applied to wounds, which pass through any part, and admit the air at both ends.—Galen.

DIPSA, Thirst.

DIPSACOS, Diabetes.

DIP'SACUS SYLVESTRIS, Cultivated Teasel, (F.) Cardere. The roots of the European plant are diuretic and sudorific. The water, which collects at the base of the leaves, has been recommended as an eye-water.

The DIP'SACUS FULLO'NUM, Herba Cardui vcnris; (F.) Cardere cultioé, Chardon à foulon, Chardon a bonnetier, has had similar properties ascribed to it. Both have been also regarded as stomachic.

DIPSETICOS, from  $\delta\psi\alpha$ , 'thirst.' A remedy, believed to be capable of exciting thirst. See Alterative.

DIPSO'SIS. Morbid thirst; same etymon. The desire, for drinking, excessive or impaired. A genus in the class Callicæ, order Enterica, of Good.

DIPSO'SIS AVENS, Polydipsia—d. Expers, Adipsia.

DIPYRE'NON, from  $\delta\upsilon\epsilon$ , 'twice,' and  $\pi\upsilon\sigma\eta\gamma$ , 'a kernel.' A specillum or probe with two buttons.

DIPYRITES, Biscuit.

DIPYROS, Biscuit.

DIRECTOR, Itincra'rium, from dirig'ere, 'to direct.' A Conductor, (q. v.) A grooved sound for guiding a knife, in dividing any part. (F.) Sonde Cannêlée.

DIRECTOR PENIS, Ischio-cavernosus.

DISCEPTUM, Diaphragm.

DISCHARGE', Écroûe, Fluxus, Proflu'vium. (F.) Écoulement. In Pathology, an increased discharge from any part, that naturally secretes a fluid.

DISCREET', Discretus, Intertinctus, Separated, (F.) Discret. This epithet is given to certain exanthemata, in which the spots or pustules are separated from each other. It is opposed to confluent.

DISCRE'TA PURGA'TIO. The purgation or expulsion of some particular matter.

DISCRET, Discreet.

DISCRETIVUS, Diagnostic.

DISCRETORIUM, Diaphragm.

DISCRI'MEN, Separation, Division. A bandage, used in bleeding from the frontal vein; so called, because, in passing along the sagittal suture, it divides the head into two equal parts.

DISCRIMEN CALVARIÆ MEDIUM, Diploë—d. Narium, Septum N.

DISCRIMEN NASI; a bandage, in the form of the letter X, intended to support the nose, in transverse wounds of the organ.

DISCRI'MEN THORACIS ET VENTRIS, Diaphragm.

DISCUSSIFS, Discutients.

DISCUSSIVA, Discutients.

DISCUSSIO, Resolution.

DISCUSSORIA, Discutients.

DISCUTIENTS, Discutientia, Resolventia, Discuss'ra, Discussoria, from discute're, 'to dissolve,' 'dissipate.' (F.) Discussifs. Substances, which possess the power of repelling or resolving tumours.

DISEASE', from old French désaise, dis and ease: Morbus, Nosus, Nosé'na, Pathos, Pathé'ma, Ægritudo, Arrhos'tia, αρωστια, Arrhosté'ma, αρωστιαμα, Arrhosté'nia. (F.) Maladie. An opposite state to that of health, which consists in a change, either in the position and structure of parts, or in the exercise of one or more of their functions.

DISEASE, ENGLISH, Rachitis—d. Extrinsic, External disease—d. Pretended, Feigned disease—d. Simulated, Feigned disease—d. Surgical, External disease.

DISECOIA, Baryecoia.

DISFIGURATION, Deformation.

DISGORGE'MENT, (F.) Dégorgement, from de and gorge, 'the throat.' An opposite condition to that of Engorgement. The discharge or abstraction of a certain quantity of fluid, which had previously collected in a part; as Disgorgement of bile. It also means, particularly, a vomit.

DISGUST', from de and gusta're, 'to taste.' Cibi fastidium, Aposi'tia, Abominatio, Sicchosia, Loathing. An aversion for food. (F.) Dégout. Disgust is not the same as Anorexia. The latter is only a want of appetite; the former consists in real repugnance for food.

DISINFEC'TION, from dis and infec't. The act of destroying miasmata, with which the air, clothing, &c., may be infected. Various means have been proposed for this purpose. Those, most commonly employed, are:—chlorine, sulphurous acid and muratic acid gases, vapours of vinegar, nitrous acid; and, what is, perhaps, the most manageable of any, and the most efficacious,—the chloride of lime, or any of the chlorides of the alkalies. It is probable, that a true chemical action occurs between these agents and the miasmata; whence results a compound, which is harmless.

The NITROUS FUMIGATION, Alexiterium Nitricum, Fumigatio Smithiana, may be formed by placing nitrate of potass  $\zeta\text{iv}$ , and sulphuric acid  $\zeta\text{ij}$ , and a saucer on hot sand.

The CHLORINE or OXYMURIAT'IC FUMIGATION, Solutio alexiteria Gaubiana, Fumigatio antiloinica Gaubii, Alexiterium chloricum, Fumigatio Guytoniensis, is made by adding common salt  $\zeta\text{ij}$ , to black oxide of manganese  $\zeta\text{j}$ , sulphuric acid  $\zeta\text{j}$ , and water  $\zeta\text{ij}$ . This may be carried through an apartment, or be shut up in it.

DISJUNCTI MORBI. Disjoined diseases. Fernelius has thus denominated diseases, which occupy different organs, and are not produced by each other.

DISLOCATION, Luxation.

DISORGANIZATION, Organum destructio, (F.) Désorganisation. A complete morbid change in the structure of an organ; or even total destruction of its texture. In sphacelus and sloughy ulcers we have examples of this change.

DISPENSARE, Dispensary, Dispensatory.

DISPENSARY, Dispensarium, from dispensare, 'to distribute.' The shop or place, in which medicines are prepared. Also, an institution in which the poor are furnished with advice and necessary medicines. (F.) Dispensaire. This word is also used by the French synonymously with Dispensatory.

DISPENSATION, Dispensatio, Diact'sis. The composition and distribution of medicines, according to prescription. In France, it is more commonly applied to the weighing, measuring, and arranging the articles, which have to enter into a formula, prior to combining them.

DISPENSATOR, Apothecary.

DISPENSATORY, Dispensatorium; same etymon. Antidotarium, (F.) Dispensaire. A book, which treats of the composition of medicines. A Dispensatory differs from a Pharmacopœia, in containing the physical and medical history of the various substances, whilst the Pharmacopœia is restricted to the mode of preparing them, &c. The Pharmacopœia, too, is published under the authority of, and by, the members of a college or association: whilst a dispensatory contains the whole of the Pharmacopœia or Pharmacopœias, with additions by the author, under whose authority, alone, it usually appears. The Pharmacopœia, in other words, is official; the Dispensatory, generally, privatæ. Formerly, the words were used indiscriminately. See Formulary and Pharmacopœia.

DISPOSITION, Dispositio. A particular condition of the body, which renders it susceptible of altering, suddenly, to a state of health or disease;—of improving, or becoming changed for the worse. The disposition to phthisis pulmonalis is sometimes so strong, owing to original conformation, that the disease will make its appearance, notwithstanding every care. See Diathesis.

DISPUTATIO, Thesis.

DISRUPTIO, from disrum'pere, 'to break off.' A puncture, which interests the deep-seated parts.

DISSECTION, Dissectio, from dissca're, 'to cut open;' διακοπή, Dia'kope, Practical Anatomy, Necrotomy. An operation, by which the different parts of the dead body are exposed, for the purpose of studying their arrangement and structure. Dissection has received various names, according to the organ concerned;—as Osteotomy, Syndesmotomy, Myotomy, Angiotomy, Neurotomy, Desmotomy, &c.

DISSECTOR, Prosector, Protomus, same etymon. (F.) Prosecteur. A practical Anatomist. One who prepares the parts for the Anatomical Lecture.

DISSEPIMENTUM NARIUM, Septum narium.

DISSEPTUM, Diaphragm.

DISSERTATION, INAUGURAL, Thesis.

DISSIDENTIA, Diastasis.

DISSOLUTION, Dissolutio, Dial'ysis, from dissol'vere, 'to loosen,' 'to melt.' This word is in frequent use, in the writings of the Humorists. It is employed, particularly, in speaking of the blood;—to designate, not its entire decomposition or putrefaction,—but a diminution in its consistence.

DISSOLUTION, Solution.

DISSOLVANTS, Dissolventia.

DISSOLVENTIA, Solvents, (F.) Dissolvants. Medicines believed to be capable of dissolving swellings, concretions, &c.

DISTENSIO, Diastasis, Tension, Tetanus, (q. v.)

DISTENTIO NERVORUM, Convulsion.

DISTICHIASIS, Distich'ia, Districhiasis, from δις, 'double,' and στιχος, 'a row.' An increased number of eyelashes; some turned towards the eye, and irritating the organ; whilst others preserve their natural direction.—Galen, Paulus of Ægina. See Entropion.

DISTILLATIO UTERI, Leucorrhœa.

DISTILLATION, Stalag'mos, from distilla're, 'to drop, little by little.' Catastalagmos. An operation, by which—by the aid of heat and in close vessels—the volatile are separated from the fixed parts of bodies, with the view of collecting the former, when condensed, in appropriate receivers. The ancients distinguished distillation per latus, per ascensum, and per descensum, according to the direction, which the volatilized matters were made to take.

DISTOMA HEPATICUM, from δις, and στομα, 'mouth.' Fasciola hepatica, Plan'ria latius'cula, Fasciola huma'na, F. lanceola'ta, the Gourd-worm or Fluke. (F.) Douvè. An obovate, flat worm, an inch in length, and nearly an inch broad; sometimes found in the gall-bladder of man, whence it occasionally passes into the intestinal canal. It is one of the most common varieties of worms, infesting the livers of the sheep, goat, ox, stag, fallow-deer, horse, ass, hog, hare, &c. The treatment is like that required for other worms.

DISTORSIO, Sprain, Strabismus—d. Oris, Risus Sardonicus.

DISTORTION, Distor'sio, from distorque're, 'to wrest aside.' Diastren'ma, Dias'trophè, Ligy's'ma, (F.) Distorsion. Usually applied to the preternatural curvature of a bone; as distortion of the spine, limbs, &c. It signifies, also, a convulsive state of the muscles of the eye, constituting squinting or strabismus.

DISTORTOR ORIS, Zygomat'icus major.
DISTRIBUTORIA LACTEA THORACICA, Thoracic duct.

DISTRICHIASIS, Distichiasis.

DISTRIX, from δις, 'double,' and τριξ, 'the hair.' Trichio'sis distrix, Fissu'ra capill'orum. Hairs of the scalp, weak, slender, and splitting at their extremities.

DITRACHYCRERAS, from δις, 'two,' τραχυς, 'rough,' and κερας, 'horn.' A genus of intestinal worms. The Ditrachy'eras rudis, called, also, Bicorne rude. This Entozoon was first observed in the evacuations of a female by M. Sulzer of Strasburg. It is of a fawn colour, from 3 to 5 lines in length, with an oval head, flattened and terminating in a point posteriorly; contained in a membranous sac, and furnished, anteriorly, with a bifurcated, rugous horn. Laennec considers it a vesicular worm or hydatid. See Worms.

DITTANDER, Lepidium sativum.

DITTANY BASTARD, Dictamnus albus—d. of Crete, Origanum dictamnus.

DITTOPIA, Diplopia.

DITTOPSIA, Diplopia.

DIURESIS, from δια, 'through or by,' and ουρεω, 'I pass the urine.' An abundant excretion of urine.

DIURETIC, Diureticus, same etymon; Ureticus. A medicine, which has the property of increasing the secretion of urine.

Diuretics act by producing a discharge of the watery and other parts of the blood; and, by such discharge, indirectly promote absorption over the whole system. Hence, they are employed in dropsy.

The following are the chief Diuretics:

|              |                 |
|--------------|-----------------|
| Cantharis,   | Potassæ Acetas, |

Digitalis,
Diosma Crenata,
Juniperus,

Oleum Terebinthinæ.
Potassæ Nitras,
— Supertartas,
Scilla,
Sodæ Sales,
Spiritus Ætheris Nitrici.

DIURETICA, Arnica montana.

DIVARICATIO, Ectropion.

DIVERSORIUM CHYLI, Receptaculum chyli.

DIVERTICULA SPIRITUUM ANIMALIUM, Ganglions, nervous.

DIVERTICULUM. 'A turning;' from divertere, 'to turn aside.' An organ, which is capable of receiving an unusual quantity of blood, when the circulation is obstructed or modified elsewhere, is said to act as a diverticulum. Also, a malformation or diseased appearance of a part, in which it goes out of its regular course. It is sometimes applied to such a condition of the alimentary canal. Also, a hole to get out at. A by-passage. See Ectrope.

DIVERTICULUM NUC'KII is the opening through which the round ligaments of the uterus pass.—L'arr.

DIVERTICULUM PHARYNGIS, Pharyngocele.

DIVIDING, Div'idens. That which divides or separates.

DIVIDING BANDAGE, Fascia div'idens, (F.) Bandage divisif, is a bandage, employed for the purpose of keeping parts separated from each other. It is used particularly to prevent improper union; as in cases of burns of the neck or other parts.

DIVISION, Divis'io, Div'esis. The accidental separation of parts, naturally united; in other words, a wound or solution of continuity. Most frequently, however, it means an operation, which consists in cutting certain parts, with the view of fulfilling some therapeutical indication.

DIVUL'SIO URINÆ, from divel'ere, 'to pull asunder.' Cloudiness of urine.—See ENÆOREMA.

DIVUL'SIO, Dias'pasis, has, also, been used in Surgery, to express the rupture or laceration of organs by external violence.

DIZZINESS, Vertigo.

DOCCIONE, MINERAL WATERS OF. This spring is at Lucca, in Italy. It is a thermal saline.

DOCH'ME, δοχημῆ. A measure of the Greeks, equal to about four fingers' breadth. Dactylo-doch'mē.

DOCIMA'SIA, Docimas'ticē, from δοκιμαζω, 'I try or prove the quality of any thing.'

DOCIMA'SIA PULM'ONUM, Lung proof, Respiration proof. Different proofs, to which the organs of respiration, of a new-born child, are subjected, for the purpose of detecting whether it has or has not respired after birth; in other words, whether it was born alive or dead. These consist, chiefly; 1. In testing them with water, for the purpose of seeing whether the lungs are specifically heavier or lighter than that fluid. This is called the Docimasia Pulmonum hydrostatica. If lighter, it would be some evidence that the fœtus had respired: 2. In comparing the weight of the lungs with that of the whole body; the weight of lungs in which respiration has taken place being nearly twice as great.—

This is the Docimasia Pulmonum Statica, or Ploucquet's Test: and, 3. By measuring the circumference of the thorax and lungs; and comparing their dimensions with those of an infant, which has not respired. This is Daniel's Test. These tests, singly, afford only probable evidence; but, when united, the deductions may be more conclusive.

DOCIMA'SIA MEDICAMENTO'RUM ET VENO'NRUM means the testing of medicines and poisons.

DOCK, BLOODY, Rumex sanguineus—d. Cresses, Lapsana—d. Sour, Rumex acetosa—d. Water, Rumex hydrolapathum—d. Wild, sharp-pointed, Rumex acutus.

DOCNA SURA, MINERAL WATERS OF. This spring is in the Krapach mountains. The water contains sulphate of soda, carbonate and muriate of soda, carbonate of lime, silica, and iron.

DOCTOR, Medicus, from doctus, 'learned;' 'un homme qui devrait être docte.' A Physician. Frequently applied to any one who practises medicine; although properly confined to him who has received his degree of Doctor of Medicine.

DOCTRINA GALLIANA, Craniology.

DOCTRINE, MEDICAL, Doctri'na Med'ica. The principles or positions of any medical sect or master. Medicine has been too full of doctrines. One of the first was that of Herodicus of Selivraa, who recommended gymnastic exercises in disease. The chief founders of doctrines have been Hippocrates, Serapion of Alexandria, Philinus of Cos, Herophilus, Asclepiades, Themison of Laodicea, Thessalus of Tralles, Soranus of Ephesus, Leonides of Alexandria, Athenæus of Attalia, Archigenes of Apamæa, Agathinus of Sparta, Galenus, Paracelsus, John Baptist van Helmont, Sylvius de le Boe, Keill, Hamberger, Pitcarne, H. Boerhaave, J. E. Stahl, Frederick Hoffmann, George Baglivi, Cullen, Darwin, John Brown, Beddoes, Girtanner, Reil, Rush, Rasori and Broussais.

DOCTRINE, PHYSIOLOGICAL, Broussaism.

DODDER OF THYME, Cuscuta epithy-mum.

DODECADACTYLITIS, Duodenitis.

DODECADACTYLON, Duodenum.

DODECAPHARMACUM, from δωδεκα, 'twelve,' and φαρμακον, 'a medicine.' An ancient name given to all medicines which consisted of twelve ingredients. See Apostolorum unguentum.

DODECATH'EOON, from δωδεκα, 'twelve,' and τιθημι, 'I put.' An antidote, consisting of twelve simple substances.—Paulus of Ægina.

DODECATH'EOON, Sanicula—d. Plinii Pinguicula Vulgaris.

DODONÆA, Myrica gale.

DODRANS, Spithama.

DOGCHOAK, Cynanche.

DOGS' BANE, Apocynum androsæmifolium.

DOGDAYS, (F.) Jours Caniculaires. During these days, comprised between the 24th of July and the 23d of August, the temperature of the air in Europe is generally high and oppressive. They have received this name from the dogstar, Canicula, Σειρῖος, Sirius—a very brilliant star in the constellation of the great dog, which rises and sets, at this time, with the sun. It was formerly believed to be a period particularly unpropitious to health; that it was dangerous to purge during it; and other phantasies were indulged.

DOGMATIC, from the Greek δογμα, from δοκεω, 'I think.' Dogmaticus. The name of an ancient medical sect; so called, because its members endeavoured, by reasoning, to discover the essence of diseases and their occult causes; whilst the Empirics, their rivals, confined themselves strictly to experience; i. e., to the observation of facts. The union of the two modes of investigation makes the rational physician. These sectarians are likewise called Dogmatists, and their doctrine Dogmatism. The founders of this sect were Hippocrates, Thessalus, Draco, and Polybus; and the most celebrated of its supporters were Diocles of Carysta, Praxagoras of Cos, Chrysippus of Soli, Herophilus, Erasistratus, &c.

DOGS' GRASS, Triticum repens.

DOGS' STONES, Orchis mascula.

DOGSTAR, Canicula.

DOGWOOD, Cornus Florida—d. Jamaica, Piscidia erythrina—d. Round-leaved, Cornus circinata—d. Swamp, Cornus sericea.

DOIGT, Digitus—d. Auriculaire, Auricular finger—d. Milieu, see Digitus—d. Petit, see Digitus.

DOLABRA, Ascia, Doloire.

DOLICHOS, from δολιχος, 'long.' A genus of plants of the leguminous family. It includes a number of species, generally indigenous in India or America. The Dolichos Lablab, or Lablab, is found in Egypt. (Prospero Alpini.) Its fruit is eaten there, like the Haricot with us. The Dolichos Sinen'sis is eaten in China, and is stored up as a provision for long voyages. The Dolichos Tuberosus, (F.) Pois patate, of Martinique, has tuberos roots of the size of both fists, and has the consistence and taste of the turnip. The Dolichos Bubbus, of the West Indies, resembles the turnip;—and from the Dolichos Soja, the Japanese prepare the well known sauce Soy, which they term Sooja. The most important, in medicine, is the DOLICHOS PRURIENS, ADSICHOS, STIZOLOBIUM, Cowhage, Covitch, Adsaria Pala. Order, Leguminosæ. (F.) Pois à gratter. The stiff hairs of the Dolichos Pods, called Dolichi Pubes, D. pruriens pubes, Dolichi Setæ Leguminum, Lanugo Siliquæ hirsuta, are the parts used in medicine. They excite an intolerable, prurient sensation when applied to the skin; but do not irritate the mucous membrane over which they pass, when administered internally. The Dolichos is a mechanical anthelmintic, and is useful in the ascarides lumbricoides, and oxyures vermiculares. Dose, gr. v to x of the Pubes, in molasses.

DOLOIRE, (F.) Ascia, Dolabra, 'a carpenter's axe.' A Bandage en doloire is one in which the turns are so placed, that each one covers two-thirds of that which is immediately beneath it. It has received the name Doloire from its representing the obliquity of the edge of the instrument, whose name it bears. See Bandage.

DOLOR, Pain—d. Crucians faciei, Neuralgia, facial—d. Dentium a stridore, Hæmodia—d. Faciei, Neuralgia, facial—d. Ischiadicus nervosus, Neuralgia femoro-poplitea—d. Nephreticus, Nephralgia—d. Rheumaticus et Arthriticus, Rheumatism.

DOLORES AD PARTUM, Pains, labour—d. Parturientis, Pains, labour—d. Post partum, Pains, after—d. Puerperarum, Pains, after.

DOMESTIC, Domesticus, from domus, 'a house.' This term has been given, as well as Popular Medicine, to treatises, written for the purpose of enabling those who are not of the profession to treat the diseases, which may occur in their families, without the necessity of calling in the physician. The term, likewise, signifies—Medicine, when thus practised. It is probable, that such works have been attended with more mischievous than advantageous results.

DOMINARUM AQUA. A medicine described by Myrepsus, which he considered emmenagogue.

DOMPTE-VENIN, Asclepias vincetoxicum.

DONDO, Albino.

DONESIS, Agitation.

DORADILLA, Asplenium ceterach.

DOREA, Hemeralops.

DORMITIO, Sleep.

DORONIC, Doronicon pardalianches.

DORONICUM GERMANICUM, Arnica montana.

DORONICUM PARDALIAN'CHES, D. Romd'num, Roman Leopard's Bane, (F.) Doronic, Mort aux Panthères. The root of this plant resembles the Arnica Montana, in its properties.

DORSAL, Dorsalis; from dorsum, 'the back,' Notieus. Relating to the back of the body, or of one of its parts; as the Dorsal vertebrae, nerves, &c.; Dorsal artery of the tongue, penis, &c.; Dorsal region of the foot, hand, &c.; Dorsal Consumption, &c.

DORSAL, LONG, Longissimus dorsi.

DORSO-COSTAL, Serratus posticus superior—d. Lombo-costal, Serratus posticus inferior—d. Lombo-sacro-lumèral, Latissimus dorsi—d. Sus-acromien, Trapezius—d. Trachelon-occipital, Complexus.

DORSTENIA BRAZILIENSIS, Caa-apia.

DORSTENIA CONTRAYERVA, Contrayerva, Drak'na, Cyperus longus, odorus, peruvianus, Bezoar'dica Radix, Dorstenia Houstonii, Lisbon Contrayerva, (F.) Racine de Charcis, R. de Dracke, Racine des Philippines. Family, Urticeæ. Scz. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia. A plant of South America, whose root is aromatic, bitter and astringent. It has been given as a tonic, stimulant and sudorific. Dose, gr. xij to ʒss.

DORSUM, Notos, Noton. The back. Metaphrænon, Tergum, (F.) Dos. The posterior part of the trunk, extending from the inferior and posterior region of the neck as far as the loins. The back of the foot, Dorsum pedis, is the upper part of that organ, opposite the sole: the back of the hand, Dorsum manus, the part opposed to the palm. In the same sense, we say Dorsum penis, Dorsum nasi, for the upper part of those organs.

Dorsum, Vertebral column.

DORYCIMUM, Costus creticus.

DOS, Dorsum.

DOSE, Dosis, Probius. The quantity of any substance which ought to form part of a compound medicine, or ought to be exhibited singly, to produce a desired effect. Many circumstances influence the doses of medicine. Women require smaller doses, as a general principle, than men. Habit has a great effect, as well as climate, age, idiosyncrasy; all these, and other circumstances, must be taken into account; and every general rule, on the subject, will be found to have numerous exceptions. Some of the mechanical physicians laid it down as a rule, that the doses of medicines must always be as the squares of the constitution! A matter not easy of calculation. (See Appendix to Cockburn on Fluxes.)

The following Tables will exhibit an approximation to the proper doses (according to age) of most substances.

TABLE OF DOSES ACCORDING TO AGE.

|        |                      |         |             |
|--------|----------------------|---------|-------------|
| Age 24 | Let the full dose be | 1       | 1 drachm.   |
| 18     | will require         | 2/3 ds. | 2 scruples. |
| 14     | - - - -              | half.   | 1/2 drachm. |
| 7      | - - - -              | 1-3d.   | 1 scruple.  |
| 4      | - - - -              | - - - - | 15 grains.  |
| 3      | - - - -              | - - - - | 10 grains.  |
| 2      | - - - -              | - - - - | 8 grains.   |
| 1      | - - - -              | - - - - | 5 grains.   |

The table of doses, recommended by Dr. Thomas Young, according to age, differs in some respects from the above. Either affords a sufficient general approximation. His rule is, that

For children, under twelve years of age, the doses of most medicines must be diminished in the proportion of the age to the age increased by twelve:

$$\text{thus, at two years, to 1-7th; i. e., } 1-7 = \frac{2}{2+12}$$

At twenty-one the full dose being given.

DOSIS; Dosc.

DOTAGE, Dementia.

DOTHIEU, Forunculus.

DOTHINENTERITIS, from δοθινος, 'a pustule,' and ερεγορ, 'intestine.' (F.) Dothinenterie, Dothinenterie, Follicular Gastroenteritis. An inflammation of the glands or follicles of Peyer and Brunner, which Bretonneau considers to be the essence of a large class of fevers: particularly of those of the typhoid character. See Typhus.

DOTTRINA MEDICA ITALIANA, Contro-stimulus, (doctrine of.)

DOUBLE-HEARING, Paracus duplicata, P. imperfecta. The action of the one ear in accord with that of the other: sounds heard doubly, and in different tones or keys.

DOUCE-AMÈRE, Solanum dulcamara.

DOUCHE, (F.) In Italian doccia; modern Latin, ducia. Cataractismus. This term is applied to the shock of a column of fluid, of a determinate nature and temperature, let fall upon the body. Pumping is a variety of the Douche. In using this kind of bath, the fluid is directed upon the part on which we are desirous of acting. The douches descendantes are those in which the fluid falls from a height—the douches ascendantes, those administered in diseases of the uterus—douches horizontales, where the fluid is impelled horizontally, &c. They may be cold or warm, according to circumstances. The apparatus consists of a reservoir of water having a pipe or plug, by means of which the water can be directed as the practitioner may desire.

The Douche communicates a considerable and peculiar shock to the nervous system; and is one of the most successful means for taming the furious maniac. It is, also, useful in chronic rheumatism, stiff joints, &c.

Douches of air are, also, occasionally used, as in cases of obstruction of the Eustachian tube by mucus. The Douches are sent from an air-press—of which Deleau and Kramer have invented one each—through a catheter introduced through the nose into the tube.

DOULEUR, Pain—d. de Côté, Pleurodynia—d. des Dents, Odontalgia—d. Pulsative, see Throbbing.

DOULEURS, Pains, labour—d. Conquassantes, see Conquassant.

DOUVE, Distoma hepaticum—d. Petite, Ranunculus flammula.

DRACHION, Pugillus.

DRACHM, Drachma, Dram, (F.) Gros. The ancient name of a piece of money, weighing the eighth part of an ounce. At the present day it is used for this weight.

DRACO MITIGATUS, Hydrargyri submuriat—d. Sylvestris, Achillea ptarmica.

DRACOCEPHALUM CANARIENSE, D. Moldavicum, Melissa Turcica, Turkey Balsam, Canary Balsam, Balm of Gil'eud Tree, Alpi'ni Balsamum, (F.) Mélisse de Moldavie. It is a Turkish and Siberian plant, and has an aromatic taste, joined with an agreeable flavour. It has been used as a tonic.

DRACONTHÈMA. See Calamus rotang.

DRACONTIUM, Dracunculus.

DRACONTIUM FETIDUM, Dracontium, Ictodes fetidas, Symplocarpus fetidas, Pothos fetida, Skunk Cabbage. Nat. Ord. Aroideæ. Sez. Syst. Tetrandra Monogynia. This indigenous plant, as some of its names import, is extremely fetid. The property, on which its medical virtues are dependent, resides in a volatile principle, which is impaired by long keeping, especially in powder. Dose, ten to twenty grains. It resembles asafœtida and other fetid gums in its properties; in other words, belongs to the class of reputed antispasmodics.

DRACUNCULUS, Dracontium, Vena Medica Arabum, Gordius Medicinensis, Vermiculus Capillaris, Dracunculus Gordius, Filaria Medicinensis, Malis dracunculus, Malis Gordii, Muscular Hairworm, Bichios, Bicho. The Guinea Worm, (F.) Dragonneau, Ver de Guinée. A genus of worms, frequently met with in Indian and African climes. They are characterized by a filiform body, and are smooth and nearly of equal thickness throughout. The Guinea worm, when small, insinuates itself through the cutaneous pores, and penetrates into the cellular membrane and between the muscles; especially between those of the lower limbs, where it occasions a tumour like a boil, which subsequently suppurates, and the head of the worm appears and emerges gradually. The head must then be seized, and the worm be cautiously rolled round a small cylinder of linen or other substance. Care must be taken not to break it, as great pain and obstinate suppuration might be the consequence.

Considerable obscurity rests on this subject. Some even deny that the cases of Dracunculus, on record, are really those of worms.

DRACUNCULUS POLYPHYLLUS, Arum dracunculu:—d. Pratensis, Achillea ptarmica.

DRAGÉES, (F.) Almonds or dried preserves, covered with white sugar. Sugar plums.

DRAGEES DE KEYSER; a pharmaceutical preparation, formerly much celebrated in syphilis. It was composed of acetate of mercury, mannua, starch, mucilage, and gum tragacanth.

DRAGMIS, Pugillus.

DRAGON, (F.) Dragon. Some authors have given this name to opaque spots on the cornea, and to cataract.

DRAGON'S BLOOD. See Calamus rotang.

DRAGON ROOT, Arum triphyllum.

DRAGONNEAU, Dracunculus.

DRAINING, Desiccatio, (F.) Desséchement.

The act of drawing off the water from marshes, for the purpose of destroying the unhealthy emanations, which proceed from them. It is a well known fact, that from marshes arise certain emanations or miasmata, with the nature of which we are, however, totally unacquainted; but which are the fertile source of intermittents and other diseases.

Draining the soil and converting it into arable land changes its character, and the malaria ceases to be given off. It has frequently, however, happened, that although, in such situations, intermittents have been got rid of, consumption has taken their place.

DRAKENA, Dorstenia contrayerva.

DRAPEAU (F.) Veilillum, from drap, 'cloth.' A bandage, used in wounds, &c. of the nose, to keep the dressings in situ. It is composed of a small triangular compress, having two openings at its inferior part, corresponding to those of the nostrils. It is fixed by means of a bandage, passing from its superior angle over the head; and another passing round the head, under the orbits, so as to join the first at the nape of the neck. Also, Pterygion (q. v.)

DRAP-FANON. See Fanon.

DRASTIC, Drasticus, Cenotic, from δραω, 'I operate strongly.' Active (q. v.) An epithet, given to purgatives, which operate powerfully; as elaterium, oil of croton, &c.

DRAUGHT, Haustus—d. Black, see Infusum sennæ compositum.

DRAX, Pugillus.

DREAM, Somnium—d. Waking, Hallucination.

DRECHE, Malt.

DREGS, Feculencia.

DREPANOIDES, Falciform.

DRESS, Vestitus.

DRESSER, from (F.) dresser, 'to put right.'

An hospital assistant, whose office it is, to dress wounds, ulcers, &c. He corresponds in function to the Elève externe of the French hospitals.

DRESSING, Cura, Curatio. (F.) Pansement. The methodical application of any remedy or apparatus to a diseased part. Also, the remedy or apparatus itself.

DRIMYPHA'GIA, from δριμύς, 'acid,' 'aromatic,' and φαγω, 'I eat.' An aromatic and exciting diet.

DRINK, from Sax. þrencan, Potus, (F.) Boisson. Every liquid, introduced into the alimentary canal for the purpose of repairing the loss of the fluid parts of the body. The necessity for its use is indicated by the sensation of thirst. Fluid, taken during a meal, aids in the digestion of the food. Some drinks are exciting and tonic, as the different varieties of beer, wine, and spirit, which we use at table. In a therapeutical point of view, drinks are used to appease the thirst which prevails in febrile affections, or to act as diluents in those and other cases.

DROPWORT, Spiræa filipendula.

DROSERÀ ROTUNDIFOLIÀ. The systematic name of the Sundew. Ros solis. Drosiobot'anon, Drosium, Rorella, (F.) Rosolis. This plant has a bitter, acrid, and caustic taste. It has been used as a rubefacient, and to destroy warts and corns. It has, also, been regarded as a pectoral.

DROSIOBOTANON, Drosera rotundifolia.

DROSIMUM, Drosera rotundifolium.

DROSOMELI, Fraxinus ornus.

DRUG, Medicamentum, (F.) Drogué. A name ordinarily applied to simple medicines, but by extension, to every substance employed in the cure of disease. Ménage derives it from droga; and this from the Persian droa, 'odour,' because many drugs have a strong odour. It is from the Teutonic trocken, Sax. brizan, 'to dry.'

DRUGGIST, DRUGGER, DRUGSTER. Same etymon. Pharmacopola, Materialista, (F.) Droguiste. One who sells drugs.

DRUM OF THE EAR, Tympanum.

DRUNKENNESS, Temulentia.

DRYING. Desiccation, Siccatio, Xerantis, Desiccatio, Exsiccatio; same etymon as Drug. Evaporation or removal of the superfluous humidity in a body.

DESICCATION OF PLANTS. Those, which are very succulent, should be dried quickly. They must be spread upon lattice work, covered from the light, and exposed to the heat of the sun or to that of a stove, not exceeding 110° Fahrenheit. The drying of less succulent plants can be effected at a lower temperature. Flowers must be dried very carefully, excluding the light. Seeds are dried in a place, where there is a free current of air. Pulpy fruits may be exposed to a gentle heat in a stove, which may be gradually elevated. Roots may also be dried in the stove: the tuberous require to be cut in slices.

DUELECH, Dulech.

DUELLA. The ancient name of a weight, which was equivalent to eight scruples.

DUG, Nipple.

DULCAMARA, Solanum dulcamara.

DULCEDO AMORIS, Clitoris.

DULECH or DU'ELECH. A term employed by Paracelsus and Van Helmont, to designate a pretended tartarized substance, which forms in the human body, and produces acute pain, accompanied with great danger.

DUMBNESS, Mutitas.

DUNG, Fimus—d. Cow's, Fimus vaccæ—d. Goose, Fimus anseris—d. Stone-horse, Fimus equinus.

DUODENITIS, Dodecadactylitis. A hybrid term, from duodenum, and itis, denoting inflammation. Inflammation of the Duodenum, characterized by white tongue; bitter taste; anorexia; fulness and tenderness in the region of the duodenum; and often yellowness of skin: along with the ordinary signs of febrile irritation.

DUODENUM, Ventriculus succenturiatus, Ec'physis seu Appendix seu Procc'sus Vetriculi, Portonarium, Dodecadactylon, from δώδεκα, 'twelve,' and δακτύλος, 'a finger.' The duodenum is the first part of the intestinal canal, commencing at the pyloric orifice of the stomach, and terminating in the jejunum. Its length is about 12 fingers' breadth, and as it is only partially covered by the peritoneum, it is susceptible of considerable dilatation: hence its name Ventriculus succenturiatus. In the duodenum, chylification takes place by the admix-ture of the biliary and pancreatic fluids with the chyme.

DUO-STERNAL. Béclard thus names the second osseous portion of the sternum, which corresponds to the second intercostal space.

DUPLICATION, Duplicatio, Duplic'itas, Diplasias'mus, Diplo'sis. A species of malformation characterized by the parts concerned being doubled.—Meckel.

DUPPLICATION, Duplicatu'ra, Reflect'ion, from duplex, 'double,' 'two-fold.' The folding or reflection of a membrane upon itself; as Duplicature or reflection of the pleura, peritoneum. &c.

DUPON'DIUM. A weight of four drachms.—Galen.

DUR, Hard.

DURA MATER, Crassa meninx, dura meninx, Meninx exte'rior, Meninx selera, pach'e'a of Galen, Dura membra'na ce'e'brum ambiens, Cuticula'ris membra'na, M. dermatodes, Méninge,—(Ch.) It has been called dura, because of its great resistance; and, mater, because it was believed to give rise to every membrane of the body. (F.) Dure mère. Dure-Taye (Paré.) It is a fibrous, semitransparent membrane, of a pearly-white colour, thick, and very resisting; lines the cavity of the cranium, and contains the spinal marrow; protects the brain and marrow; and, by its various expansions—the falx cerebri, tentorium, &c.—supports the different parts of the cerebral mass. The largest artery of the dura mater is the A. meningea' a me'dia.

DURA MATER, LATERAL PROCESSES OF THE, Tentorium.

DURE MÈRE, Dura mater.

DURE TAYE, Dura mater.

DURETÉ D'OREILLE, Barycoicia—d. de l'Ouie, Deafness.

DURILLON, Callosity.

DURUS, Hard.

DWARF, Nanus.

DYCTOÏDES, Reticular.

DYNAMETER, Dynamometer.

DYNAM'IC. Same etymon. That which relates to the vital forces.

DYNAMIS, Force.

DYNAMOM'ETER, Myodynamiom'eter, Myodynamom'eter, from δυναμις, 'force,' 'vital power,' and μετρον, 'measure.' An instrument, contrived by M. Regnier, for measuring the comparative muscular strength of man and animals. It consists of a spring, which, when pressed upon, causes a needle to move upon a portion of a circle, furnished with a scale of kilogrammes and one of myriagrammes. To measure the strength of the hands, the two branches of the spring are firmly grasped, and brought as near together as the force can carry them. This effort makes the needle traverse, and indicates, on the scale of kilogrammes, the strength of the experimenter's hands. A man, 25 or 30 years of age, exerts a force commonly equal to 50 kilogrammes or 100 pounds.

The strength of the loins of a man, about 30 years of age, as indicated by this instrument, is usually about 13 myriagrammes, or 265 pounds, which shows the weight he is capable of raising.

From experiments made by Peron, in his voyage, on 12 individuals of Van Dieman's Land, 17 of New Holland, 56 of the Island of Timor, 17 Frenchmen belonging to the expedition, and 14 Englishmen in the colony of New South Wales, he found their comparative strength, indicated by the dynamometer, to be as follows;

TABLE.

| NATIVES OF           | STRENGTH    |       |               |        |
|----------------------|-------------|-------|---------------|--------|
|                      | of the arm. |       | of the loins. |        |
|                      | Kilog.      | lbs.  | Myri.         | lbs.   |
| 1. Van Dieman's Land | 50.6        | 101.2 |               |        |
| 2. New Holland       | 50.8        | 101.6 | 10.2          | 208.08 |
| 3. Timor             | 58.7        | 117.4 | 11.6          | 238.64 |
| 4. France            | 69.2        | 138.4 | 15.2          | 310.08 |
| 5. England           | 71.4        | 142.4 | 15.2          | 332.52 |

DYNAMOMETER OF DYNAMETER, MEDICINAL. An instrument, invented by Dr. Paris, for the purpose of showing the quantity of active matter contained in a given weight or measure of any official compound, with the dose of any preparation, which will be equivalent, in strength, to a given quantity of any other of the same class. The instrument is more ingenious than useful.

DYOTA, Diota.

DYS, δυσ, in composition, 'difficult, faulty;' sometimes privative; mostly answering to the particles dis, in, mis, or un. Hence:

DYSESTHESIA, from δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and αισθησις, 'I feel.' Obscure, diminished, or even abolished sensation.

DYSESTHESIA AUDITORIA, Cophosis—d. Gustatoria, Ageusia—d. Interna, Amnesia—d. Olfactoria, Anosmia.

DYSESTHESIA VISUALIS, Paropsis. Sense of sight vitiated or lost.

DYSANAGO'GOS, from δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and αναγω, 'I bring up.' That which is expectorated with difficulty. An epithet given, by the Greek writers, to the sputa, when expectorated with difficulty on account of their viscidty.

DYSANARRHOPHESIS, Dysanarrhoph'ia; from δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and αναρροησις, 'absorption.' Diminished absorption from morbid causes.

DYSCATABROSIS, Dysphagia.

DYSCATAPOSIS, Dysphagia.

DYSCRASIA SCROFULOSA, Scrofula—d. Tuberculosa, see Tubercle.

DYSCATAPO'TIA, from δυσ, and καταπινω, 'I drink.' Difficulty of swallowing liquids. This term is recommended by Dr. Mead as a substitute for hydrophobia, which means dread of liquids. The dread seems to be partly caused by the difficulty of deglutition.

DYSCHRŒ'A, from δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and χρῶα or χρῶα, 'colour.' Sickly or unhealthy colour of the skin. Used synonymously with the macula (q. v.) of Willan.

DYSCINESIA, from δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and κινῶ, 'I move.' Difficulty or utter incapability of moving.—Galen.

is, to put the patient on a diet easy of digestion; to combat the causes, where such are apparent; and, by proper remedies and regimen, to strengthen the system in every practicable manner. A great error exists in regarding it as always a disease of debility. It is often connected with an inflammatory or sub-inflammatory condition of the mucous lining of the stomach, and of course a very different plan of treatment is required in the two cases.

DYSPEPSIA CHLOROSIS, Chlorosis—d. Hypochondriasis, Hypochondriasis—d. Pyrosis, Pyrosis.

DYSPEPSODYNIA, Cardialgia.

DYSPERMA'SIA, Dyspermatismus, from δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and σπερμα, 'sperm.' Difficulty, sometimes incapacity of voiding the sperm.

DYSPHA'GIA, Dyscatbro'sis, Dyscatap'o-sis, Deglutitio difficilis, D. lē'sa, D. impedita, from δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and φαγω, 'I eat.' Difficulty of deglutition. Dysphagia is almost always symptomatic; either of inflammation or of other disease of the organs of deglutition, or of incomplete obstruction of the œsophagus, by some obstacle within it, or by a neighbouring tumour. At times, it is produced by spasm or paralysis of the œsophagus. The prognosis and treatment vary according to the cause.

DYSPHAGIA GLOBOSA, Angone—d. Hysterica, Angone—d. Inflammatoria, Cynanche tonsillarum—d. Linguosa, Paraglossa—d. Ranula, Ranula—d. Uvulosa, Staphylœdema.

DYSPHON'IA, from δυσ, and φωνη, 'the voice.' Difficulty of producing and articulating sounds; voice imperfect or depraved. Aphonia (of some.)

DYSPHONIA IMMULATA NASALIS, Rhinophonia—d. Immodulata palatina, Asaphia.

DYSPHOR'IA, Inquietudo, Astasia, Dissatisfaction, Restlessness, Suffering; from δυσ, and φειω, 'I bear.'

DYSPHONIA ANXIETAS, Anxiety—d. Nervosa, Fidgets—d. Simplex, Fidgets.

DYSPNE'A, from δυσ and πνέω, 'I breathe,' Pseudo-asthma, Anhelation, short breath, Brachypnœa, Difficulty of breathing, (F.) Courte haleine. Dyspnœa may be idiopathic or symptomatic; the latter accompanies almost all thoracic diseases. Urgent Dyspnœa has been called amphipnœma, αμφιπνευμα.—Hippocr.

DYSPNÆA CONVULSIVA, Asthma—d. Hydrothoracica, Hydrothorax—d. Physothoracica, Pneumothorax—d. Pinguedinoso, Pursiness—d. Pneumatica, Pneumothorax—d. Pyothoracica, Empyema.

DYSTHAN'ATOS, from δυσ and θανατος, 'death.' That which causes a slow and painful death. One who experiences this kind of death.—Hippocr.—Galen.

DYSTHERAPEUTOS, Difficiliter curabilis; from δυσ and θεραπεια, medical treatment. That which is difficult of cure.

DYSTHE'SIA. Bad humour. Impatience in disease; from δυσ, 'badly,' and τιθημαι, 'I am situate.'—Erotian.

DYSTHETICA, Cachexies, same etymon. A morbid condition of the blood or blood-vessels; alone or connected with a morbid state of other fluids, producing a diseased habit. The 4th order in the class Hæmatica of Good, including Plethora, Hæmorrhagia, &c.

DYSTHYM'IA, from δυσ and θυμος, 'mind.' Depression, Despondency. A bad sign in acute diseases.

DYSTO'CIA, from δυσ, and τοκος, 'accouchement.' A laborious accouchement, Parodynia, morbid labour, difficult labour. Partus difficilis. See Laborious.

DYSTOCIA ABORTIVA, Abortion—d. Dyscyesis, Pregnancy, morbid—d. Dyscyesis extrauterina, see Pregnancy, preternatural.

DYSTŒCHIASIS, Hispid'itas, from δυσ, 'bad,' and στοιχος, 'order.' Irregular position of the eye-lashes.—Forestus.

DYSUR'IA, Ur'inae difficilis excretio, from δυσ, 'with difficulty,' and ουρον, 'urine.' Strangury (q. v.) (of some.) Difficulty of passing the urine. In this affection the urine is voided with pain, and a sensation of heat in some part of the urethra. Dysuria is the first degree of retention of urine. It differs from strangury in which the urine can only be passed in drops and with great straining.

DYSURIA CALCULOSA, Calculi, vesical—d. Irritata, Calculi, vesical—d. mucosa, Cystirrhœa.

E.

EAGLE-STONE, Ætites.

EAR, Auris, Ous, ovc, Saxon, earc, (F.) Orcille. The organ of audition. It is composed of a series of more or less irregular cavities, in which the sonorous rays are successively received and reflected, until they agitate the nerves which are destined to convey the impression to the brain. The ear is contained partly in the substance of the temporal bones; and a part projects externally, behind the joint of the lower jaw. It may be divided into three portions;—the outer or external ear, formed by the auricle and meatus auditorius; the middle ear, comprising the cavity of the tympanum and its dependencies; and the internal ear, comprehending the three semicircular canals, the cochlea and the vestibule; which, together, constitute the osseous labyrinth. Within the cavity of this labyrinth are contained membranes having nearly the shape of the vestibule and semicircular canals, but not extending into the cochlea. These membranes form the membranous labyrinth. Between the osseous and the membranous labyrinth is situate the liquor of Cotunnus, and within the membranous labyrinth, is a fluid termed by De Blainville, vitrine auditivæ, from its supposed analogy to the vitreous humour of the eye. The form of the membranous vestibule is not an exact imitation of the osseous cavity, being composed of two distinct sacs, which open into each other,—the one termed the Sacculus vestibuli; the other the Sacculus, (q. v.) Each sac contains in its interior a small mass of white calcareous matter resembling powdered chalk, which seems to be suspended in the fluid of the sacs by means of a number of nervous filaments proceeding from the auditory nerve. These are the otoconies and otolithes of Breschet.

The auditory nerve is distributed to the cavities of the internal ear.

EAR, FLAP, Proptoma auricularum.

EAR-PICK, Otogyllis, Cochlear auriculæ rē, (F.) Curc-ovelle, Aurisculpium. A species of small scoop, used for extracting hardened cerumen from the meatus auditorius externus; or to remove foreign bodies from the ear. If carelessly used, it is apt to excite inflammation of the tube.

EAR-TRUMPET, Tubus acusticus, Acusticum Cornu, (F.) Cornet acoustique. An instrument for collecting sound and increasing its intensity, used by those who are hard of hearing. It is, commonly, a kind of cone, formed of silver, tin, or elastic gum, the base of which is turned towards the person who is speaking, and the apex towards the entrance of the meatus auditorius externus.

EBEAUPIN, MINERAL WATERS OF. An acidulous chalybeate, in the department of Loire Inférieure, near Nantes.

ÉBLOUISSEMENT, Dazzling.

EBRIECA'SUM. A term employed by Paracelsus to denote a disturbance of the reason, similar to what occurs in drunkenness.

EBRIETAS, Temulentia.

EBULLITION, Ebullitio, Æstudtio, Ana'esis, Causis, from ebullire, 'to bubble up.' Boiling. (F.) Bouillonnement. The motion of a liquid, by which it gives off bubbles of vapour, by heat or fermentation. The boiling point of liquids varies, according to the pressure to which they are subjected. For the point of ebullition of different substances, see Heat.

EBULLITION is used in France, in a vague manner, for every kind of transient eruption of the skin, occurring without fever or with a slight febrile attack.

EBULUS, Sambucus ebulus.

EBUR, Ivory.

EC, (before a vowel Ex.) εχ, εξ, 'out of, from, of.' Hence, Ecchymoma, Eclectic, &c.

ÉCAILLE, Scale.

ÉCAILLES D'HUITRES, Ostræa testis.

ÉCAILLEUX, Squamous.

ECBESOMENON, Eventus.

ECBOLICUS, Abortive.

ECBOLIUM ELATERIUM, Momordica elaterium.

ECBRAS'MATA, from εχθαζο, 'I boil up.' Ecchym'ata. Hippocrates uses this word for certain burning eruptions.

ECCATHARTICUS, Cathartic.

ECCHYLOMA, Extract.

ECCHYMATA, Ecchiasmata.

ECCHYMOMA, Ecchymo'sis, Pelidno'ma, Pelid'ma, from εχ, 'out of,' and χυμος, 'juice,' 'humour.' Effusio, Ersuccatio. A livid, black, or yellow spot, produced by blood effused into the cellular tissue from a contusion. Spontaneous effusions, occurring as the result of disease or after death, are called sugillations. It is important, at times, in a medico-legal point of view, to distinguish between ecchymosis, produced during life, and sugillation, occurring after death.

ECCHYMOMA ARTERIOSUM, see Aneurism—e. Hyponychon, Hyponychon—e. Lymphatica, Phlegmatia dolens—e. Melasma, Melasma, ECCLISIS, Luxation.

EC'COPE, from εκ and κοπιειν, 'to cut.' The act of cutting out; also, a perpendicular division of the cranium, by a cutting instrument. See Entaille.

EC'COPEUS. Same etymon. A knife or instrument for cutting. An ancient instrument—the raspatory—used in trepanning.

EC'COPTIC, Eccoptoticus, Ectoprot'ic, from εκ, 'out of,' and κοπιος, 'excrement.' Mild purgatives or laxatives, whose operation is confined to simply clearing out the intestinal canal.

EC'CORTHATICUS, from εκ, 'out of,' and κορθαιω, 'I collect.' An ancient epithet for remedies to which was attributed the property of evacuating collections of humours.

EC'CRINOL'OGY, Eccrinol'gia, from εκρινω, 'I separate,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' A treatise on the secretions.

EC'CRISIS, from εκ and κρινω, 'I separate.' Excretio. The excretion or egestion, either of an excrementitious, or morbid matter, by any of the outlets.

EC'CRITICA, from εκκρινω, 'I secrete.' Diseases of the excrement function. The 6th class in Good's Nosology.

ECCYE'SIS, Pregnancy, preternatural—e. Abdominal, Pregnancy, abdominal—e. Ovaria, Pregnancy, ovarial—e. Tubalis, Pregnancy, tubal.

EC'DORA, from εκ, and δεινω, 'I flay.' Anad'ora, Excoria'tio. Excoriation in general, but more especially of the urethra.

ÉCHALOTTE, Eschalotte, Allium Ascalon'icum, Cepa Ascalonica. The shallot'. A species of allium, employed in culinary preparations.

ÉCHANCRURE, (F.) Emargina'tio, emarginatu'ra. A French word, employed by anatomists to designate depressions and notches (q. v.) of various shapes, observed on the surface or edges of bones.

The ÉCHANCRURE NASALE belongs to the os frontis, and is articulated with the bones of the nose.

The ÉCHANCRURE ETHMOIDALE is on the same bone, which it unites with the ethmoid bone. See Ethmoid.

ÉCHANCRURE NASALE, Nasal Notch.

The ÉCHANCRURE PAROTIDIENNE is a triangular space, comprised between the parotidian edge of the inferior maxillary bone and the mastoid process, so called because it lodges the parotid gland.

ÉCHARDE, Splinter.

ÉCHARPE GRANDE, et É MOYEN; see Sling—e. de J. L. Petit, see Sling—e. Petite, see Sling.

ÉCHAUBOULURES, (F.) Sudam'ina, hidro'a. A word whose meaning is not fixed. It is applied to any eruption on the surface of the body, accompanied with pricking and other uneasy sensations.

ÉCHAUFFANTS, Calefacients.

ÉCHAUFFEMENT, (F.) Calefactio, Excalefactio, from échouffer, calefacere, 'to make warm.' Augmentation of heat in the animal economy; the symptoms of which are a more than ordinary sensation of heat, disposition to perspiration, great thirst, general indisposition, flushed countenance, &c.

It goes off by the use of antiphlogistics and abstinence. In the vulgar language, it is often used synonymously with constipation, (q. v.) and sometimes for simple gonorrhœa, (q. v.) and for chafing, (q. v.)

ECHECOL'LON, from εχω, 'I have,' and κολλα, 'glue.' Echecollum. Any topical, glutinous remedy.—Gorræus, Galen.

ECHELLES DU LIMACON, Scala of the cochlea.

ECHENEIS, Remora Hildani.

ECHETROSIS, Bryonia alba.

ECHINE, Vertebral column.

ECHINOCOCCUS HOMINIS, see Worms—e. Humanus, Hydatid.

ECHINOGLOSSUM, Ophioglossum vulgatum.

ECHINOPHTHALMIA, from εχινοσ, 'a hedgehog,' and οφθαλμια, 'inflammation of the eye.' Ophthalmia of the eyelids in which the cilia project like the quills of the hedgehog.

ECHINOPS, from εχινοσ, 'hedgehog,' and οψ, 'the appearance.' Crocodil'ion, Acanth'zuca, Scabio'sa carduifo'tia, Sphæroceph'ala elatior, Echinopus, Echi'nops Sphæroceph'alus. The globe thistle. The root and seeds are reputed to be moderately diuretic.

ECHINOPUS, Echinops.

ECHINUS SCANDENS, Allamanda.

ECHOS, Tinnitus Aurium.

ECLACTIS'MA, Eclamp'sis, Eclamp'sia, Epilamp'sis, Effulgescen'tia, from εκλακτιζω, 'I kick.' Epilepsy is often accompanied with flashings of light; and hence Hippocrates has used the two last words for epilepsy. They have all been applied to the convulsions of children.

ÉCLAIRE, Chelidonium majus—e. Petite, Ranunculus ficaria.

ECLAMP'SIA, Convulsion—e. Typhodes, Raphania.

E'CLEC'TIC (PHYSICIANS), Ecl'ctici, Med'ici, from εκλεγω, 'I choose.' A sect of physicians, who professed to choose, from other sects, all the opinions which appeared to them best founded. Agathinus, of Sparta, master of Archigenes of Apamæa, in Syria, was its reputed founder; and Archigenes, and Aretæus, its greatest ornaments.

Every judicious physician must be an eclectic.

ECLEC'TOS, Eclig'ma, Elig'ma, Elix'is, Lambit'rum, Linctus, Linctud'rium, from εκλεχω, 'I lick.' (F.) Looch, (q. v.) A medicine, of a thick, syrupy consistence, chiefly used to allay cough; and consisting of pectoral remedies. It was formerly sucked from the end of a liquorice stick, made into a kind of pencil; hence its name Linctus, from lingere, 'to lick.' Although the linctus is usually exhibited in thoracic affections, it may have tonic virtues combined with it.

ECLEGMALBUM, Looch album—e. Gummoso—cleosum, Looch album.

E'CLEI'P'ISIS, Exfoliation.

E'CLEP'ISIS, Desquamation.

E'CLEPISITREPANON, Exfoliative trepan.

ECLIGMA, Ecl'ctos.

ÉCLISSE, Splint.

EC'LYSIS, Exsolutio, from  $\epsilon\kappa\lambda\upsilon\sigma\omega$ , 'I loosen.' Resolution, prostration of strength, faintness.

ECMYZESIS, Exsuctio.

ÉCOLE, School.

ECON'OMY, Œconomia, from  $\omicron\iota\kappa\iota\alpha$ , 'a house,' 'family,' and  $\nu\epsilon\mu\omega$ , 'I rule.' By the term animal economy is understood, the aggregate of the laws, which govern the organism of animals. The word economy is, also, used for the aggregate of parts, which constitute man or animals.

ÉCORCE, Cortex—é Cariocostine, Canella alba—é de Saint Lucie, Cinchonæ Caribææ cortex—é de Winter, see Wintera aromatica—é. Fausse de Winter, Canella alba.

ÉCORCHURES, Chafing, Excoriation.

ÉCOULEMENT, Discharge, Gonorrhœa—é. blanc, Leucorrhœa.

ECPHLYSIS, Vesicula—e. Herpes, Herpes—e. Herpes circinatus, Herpes circinatus—e. Herpes exedens, Herpes exedens—e. Herpes miliaris, Herpes phlyctænodes—e. Herpes zoster, Herpes zoster—e. Pompholyx, Pompholyx.

ECPHRAX'IS, from  $\epsilon\kappa\phi\rho\alpha\sigma\sigma\omega$ , 'I remove obstruction.' The action of deobstruent remedies.

ECPHRONIA, Insanity—e. Melancholia, Melancholy.

ECPHYAS, Appendix vermiformis cæci.

ECPHYMA, Excrescence, Tumour—e. Callosus, Callosity—e. Caruncula, Caruncle—e. Clavus, Corn—e. Œdematicum, Phlegmatia dolens—e. Physconia, Physconia—e. Verruca, Verruca.

ECPHYSE'SIS, from  $\epsilon\kappa\phi\upsilon\sigma\sigma\omega$ , 'I breathe through,' Exsufflatio. A quick and forced expulsion of air from the lungs.

ECPHYSIS VENTRICŪLI, Duodenum.

ECPHIES'MA, from  $\epsilon\kappa\pi\iota\epsilon\zeta\omega$ , 'I compress.' Ejfractura, Impaction, Deces'sio. A fracture of the cranium, with depression of the fragments and compression of the brain.

ECPHIES'MOS, Expressio, (q. v.) Ex'itus, Ecpies'mon, same etymon. Celsus uses these words to signify the forcing of the eye from the orbital cavity, with apparent but not real augmentation of the organ. See Exophthalmia.

ECPLERO'MA, from  $\epsilon\kappa$ , and  $\pi\lambda\epsilon\rho\omega$ , 'I fill,' a cushion, a pad. Hippocrates means, by this term, a small pad or ball of leather or other substance intended to fill the hollow of the armpit; used probably in reducing luxations of the shoulder.

ECPLEXIS, Stupor.

ECPNEUMATOSIS, Expiration.

ECPNEUSIS, Expiration.

ECPNOE, Expiration.

ECPTO'MA, Ecpto'sis, Excidentia, from  $\epsilon\kappa\pi\tau\iota\omega$ , 'I fall out.' This word has been used in various senses. 1. Synonymously with luxation. 2. For the separation of gangrenous parts. 3. For the expulsion of the secundines. 4. For the prolapsus of the womb: and 5. For intestinal or omental hernia, &c.

ECPOTOSIS, Luxation.

ECPYCTICA, Incrassantia.

ECPYEMA, Abscess, Suppuration.

ECPYESIS, Abscess, Pustule—e. Impetigo, Impetigo—e. Porrigo, Porrigo—e. Porrigo crustacea, Porrigo larvalis—e. Porrigo favosa, Por-rigo favosa—e. Porrigo furfuracea, Porrigo furfurans—e. Porrigo galeata, Porrigo scutulata—e. Porrigo lupinosa, Porrigo lupinosa—e. Scabies, Psora.

ECPYETICUS, Suppurative.

ECPYISCONTUS, Suppurative.

ÉCREVISSE, Crab.

ECREX'IS, Ruptura, from  $\epsilon\kappa\rho\eta\eta\upsilon\mu\iota$ , 'to break.' Rupture, laceration.

ECRHYTH'MOS, from  $\epsilon\kappa$  and  $\rho\upsilon\theta\mu\omega\varsigma$ , 'rhythm.' A term applied to the pulse, particularly, when irregular.—Galen.

ECROE, Discharge.

ÉCROUELLES, Scrofula.

ECRYSIS, from  $\epsilon\kappa\upsilon\epsilon\omega$ , 'I run from.' A discharge.

ECSARCO'MA, from  $\epsilon\kappa$  and  $\sigma\alpha\rho\zeta$ , 'flesh.' A fleshy excrescence of various kinds. See Fungosity and Sarcoma.

EC'STASIS, from  $\epsilon\zeta\iota\sigma\tau\alpha\mu\iota$ , 'I am beside myself.' An ec'stasy or trance, Curus ec'stasis, Cat'ochus, Ec'tasis, Catulep'sia spu'ria. (F.) Extase. A state in which certain ideas so completely absorb the mind, that the external sensations are suspended, the voluntary movements arrested, and even the vital action retarded. In catalepsy, there is in addition complete suspension of the intellectual faculties. This last condition is in general described as trance. See, also, Luxation.

ECTASIA, Aneurism—e. Venarum, Varix.

EC'TASIS, 'extension,' (q. v.) 'expansion.'

EC'TASIS IRIDIS, is the extension or expansion of the iris, which occasions diminution of the pupil.

ECTEXIS, Colliquation.

ECTHLIM'MA, Exulcera'tio, from  $\epsilon\kappa\theta\lambda\iota\beta\omega$ , 'I express,' 'I bruise.' Attrition (q. v.) Chafings or excoriations, produced by external violence.—Hippocr.

ECTHLIPSIS, Expression.

ECTHY'MA, from  $\epsilon\kappa\theta\upsilon\omega$ , 'I break out.' (F.) Dartre crustacée. A cutaneous eruption, characterized by large round pustules always distinct and seated upon an indurated and highly inflamed base. In the course of a day or two the pustules generally break, and olive-brown incrustations are formed, which adhere firmly to the skin. These separate in about a fortnight. The disease requires the antiphlogistic treatment. Under the Ecthymata, Vogel has designated certain hard, unequal tumours, which appear transitorily on the skin. See Efflorescence and Pustule.

ECTILLOTICUS, Depilatory.

ECTILMOS, Evulsion.

ECTOME, Castration, Entaille, Excision.

ECTOMIUS, Castratus.

ECTONION, Helleborus niger.

ECTOPIA, Ectopisis, Ectopismus, from  $\epsilon\kappa\tau\omicron\pi\omega\varsigma$ , 'out of place,' morbid displacement of parts. See Luxation.

ECTOPIA ANI, Proctocœle—c. Herniosa, Hernia.

ECTOPOCYSTICUS, from  $\epsilon\kappa\tau\omicron\pi\omega\varsigma$ , 'out of place,' and  $\kappa\upsilon\sigma\tau\iota\varsigma$ , 'bladder.' Diseases, dependent upon displacement of the bladder.

ECTOPROTIC, Eecoprotic.

ECTRIM'MA, from  $\epsilon\kappa\tau\omicron\iota\beta\omega$ , 'I rub off.' Ulceration of the skin; and, particularly, that which arises from the pressure of the bed on different parts of the body, after a protracted confinement.—Hippocr.

ECTROMA, Abortion.

ECTROMELES: from εκτρομοσις, 'abortion,' and μελος, 'a limb.' A genus of monsters, in which the limbs are nearly or altogether deficient as in the ordinary cetacea.—J. G. St. Hilaire.

ECTROPE, Divertic'ulam, from εκτροπω, 'I turn off,' 'divert.' Any duct by which peccant or morbid matter was supposed to be drawn off.—Hippocr.

ECTROPI'ON, same etymon, Ectropium, Ecer'sio pal'pebra, Blepharopto'sis Ectropium, Blepharoto'sis, Pal'pebra infe'rior extro'sum flexa, Divertic'atio, (F.) E'raill'ement des Paup'ieres, Revers'ement des Paup'ieres. Eversion of the eyelids, so that they do not completely cover the globe of the eye. It happens more commonly to the lower than to the upper eyelid. It may be owing to the retraction of the skin, after the cure of an ulcer, wound, or burn of the eyelid; or it may depend on tumefaction or relaxation of the conjunctiva. In the majority of cases, removal of a portion of the conjunctiva will operate a cure; but there are many which defy the efforts of art. The ancients called Ectropion of the upper eyelid, lagophthalmia.

ECTROSIS, Abortion.

ECTROSOS, Abortion.

ECTROTIC, Ectrot'icus, Abortive, (q. v.) an epithet applied to methods for preventing the development or causing the abortion of any disease—as of chancres by the use of caustic; small pox pustules, by the use of mercurial ointment, &c.

ECTYLOTICUS, Catheretic.

ECUMEUX, Frothy.

ECZEMA, from εκζεω, 'I boil out.' Ecze'sma, Pustula ardens. Heat eruption. An eruption of small vesicles on various parts of the skin, usually set close or crowded together; with little or no inflammation around their bases and unattended by fever.

ECZEMA MERCURIALE, Ec'zema rabram, Eryth'e'ma mercu'ria'le, Hydrargy'ria, Hydrargy'ros'is, Hydrargy'riasis, Morbus mercu'ria'lis, Mercu'rial lepra. A variety of eczema, arising from the irritation of mercury. The treatment is chiefly palliative, consisting in ablu-tion with mucilaginous infusions or decoctions; mild dressings, where the cuticle has exfoliated; avoiding all irritation; keeping the bowels open; with the use of the sulphuric acid and cinchona. The Ec'zema Impetigino'des, Gall or Grocer's Itch, is produced by the irritation of sugar.

ECZEMA RUBRUM, Eczema mercuriale.

ECZESIS, Effervescens.

ECZESMA, Eczema, Lichen tropicus.

EDENTE, Edentulus.

EDENTULUS, Ανοδος, ανοδος, Carens den'tibus, (F.) Edenté. One without teeth. This defect can only be remedied by artificial means.

EDERA, Hedera helix.

EDULCORATION, Glycan'sis, Edalcora'tio, from edulcora're, 'to sweeten,' 'to render mild.' An operation, the object of which is to deprive a substance of its acrid and disagreeable taste, or at least to disguise it. Also, the addition of a saccharine substance to a medicine, whose taste it is desirable to modify agreeably.

EDULIS, Comestible.

EFFERENT, Effferens, from efffero, 'I carry,' 'transport.' Vasa efferen'tia are those lymphatics, which issue from the lymphatic glands to convey their lymph to the thoracic duct; so called to distinguish them from those which pass to those glands, and which have been termed vasa deferent'ia. See Efferentia.

EFFERESCENCE, Effferescen'tia ζεοσις, εκζεοσις, Ze'sis, Ec'zesis, from effferes'cere, 'to grow hot.' That agitation, which is produced by the escape of gas through a liquid, independently of the heat of the mixture; such as, e. g. results from the mixture of the acetic acid and carbonate of potassa.

In Pathology it has a similar signification. It expresses, in the language of the Humorists, a sort of ebullition in the fluids of the living body; produced either by elevation of temperature or by the reaction on each other of the principles contained in the fluids in circulation.

EFFETUS, Impoverished.

EFFICACIOUS, Eff'icax from eff'ice, 'to accomplish.' That which produces a great effect, as an efficacious remedy.

Medic'na eff'icax, La m'edecine eff'icace, is a term sometimes applied to surgery.

EFFILA, Ephelides.

EFFLORATIO, Exanthem.

EFFLORESCENCE, Eff'lor'a'tio, Efflorescen'tia, from efflores'cere, 'to blow as a flower.' Stribil'go, Ethy'ma, εκθυμα. The conversion of a solid substance into a pulverulent state by exposure to the air. In salts this is generally owing to the loss of a part of their water of crystallization.

In Pathology, efflorescence has the same meaning as exanthema; and, in the nosology of Sauvages, the name is given to that order of diseases. Sometimes, it is confined to the cutaneous blush, the exanthé'sis of Good.

EFFLORESCENTIA, Exanthem.

EFFLORESCENTIAE, Éléveures.

EFFLUVIUM, Emanation—e. Latrinarium, Mitte.

EFFLUVIUM PALUSTRE, Miasm, (Marsh.)

EFFORT, Nisus, Donatus, Peira, πειρα. A muscular contraction of greater or less strength, the object of which is, either to resist an external force, or to accomplish a function, which has become naturally laborious; such are, the act of pushing away or of drawing a body towards us, and the more or less painful efforts used by the mother to cause the expulsion of the fœtus. In France, the word effort is often used synonymously with hernia; and signifies likewise, the painful twitches of muscles, occasioned by over-exertion, or by the rupture of some of their fleshy fibres. Sauvages calls Efforts des reins, Lumbago à nisù, the pain in the loins occasioned by bearing too heavy a burden.

EFFORT, Hernia—e. des Reius, see Effort.

EFFRACTURA, Ecpiesma.

EFFRACTURA CRANII, Enthla'sis Cra'nii. Fracture of the cranium, with depression.—Paré.

EFFUSION, Effu'sio, from effundere, 'to pour out.' (F.) Epanchement, (Infiltration is the term generally employed for effusion into the cellular membrane.) The pouring out of blood or of any other fluid into the cellular membrane, or into the cavities of the body. The effusion of serum or of coagulable lymph, e. g. is a common result of inflammation of serous membranes.

ÉGAREMENT D'ESPRIT, Delirium, Insanity.

EGESTAS, Want.

EGESTIO, Dejection, Excretion.

EGG-PLANT, Solanum melongena—e. White of, Albumen ovi.

EGLANTIER DE CHIEN, Rosa canina—e. Savage, Rosa canina.

EGOBRONCHOPHONY. See Egophony.

EGOPHONY, Egophonia, from αις, 'a goat,' and φωνη, 'voice.' Goat's Voice, Bleating Voice, Pectoriloque chérotante. Laënnec has designated, by this name, the kind of resonance of the voice through the stethoscope, when we examine the chest of one labouring under moderate effusion into one of the pleuræ. The voice, which strikes the ear through the cylinder, is more sharp and harsh than usual, and tremulous and broken like that of the goat. The patient himself is called Égophone. Bouillaud affirms that the "bronchial and bleating voice" (Égobronchophonie) is the principal symptom of pleuropneumonia.

EGREGOR'SIS, from εγρεγορεω, 'I watch.' Vigilia. A watchfulness. A morbid want of sleep.—Galen.

EGRESSUS VENTRICULI, Pylorus.

EIDOS, ειδος, 'form, resemblance.' The ε is often changed into ω, at the termination of a word. Thus, Hamatoïdes or Hamatodes.

EILAMIDES, Meninges.

EILE'MA, from ειλεος, ileus, 'a convulsion.' Vogel has given this name to a fixed pain, occupying some portion of the intestinal canal, which the patient compares to the sensation that would be produced by a nail driven into the part.

EILEON, Ileon.

EILEUS, Ileus.

EILOID, (Tumour), Eiloïdes, from ειλον, 'I roll,' and ειδος, 'resemblance.' A morbid growth of the cutis, coiled or folded.—J. C. Warren.

EISBOLE, Attack, Injection.

EISPNOE, Inspiration.

EJACULATION, Gonobolia, Gonobolis'mus, Ejaculatio Seminis. The emission of sperm. The act, by which that fluid is darted out through the urethra.

EJACULA'TOR. Same etymon. Ejaculans, from jaculare, 'to dart,' 'to lance.' See Transversus Perinæi.

The EJACULATORY DUCTS or CANALS, (F.) Conduits ou Canaux éjaculateurs, are formed by the union of the vasa deferentia with the ducts of the vesiculæ seminales. They open at the lateral and anterior parts of the verumontanum, and convey into the urethra the sperm which is discharged from the vesiculæ, as well as that which comes directly from the testicle by the vas deferens.

EJACULATOR SEMINIS, Accelerator urinæ.

EJECTIO, Excretion—e. Fæcum, Defecation.

EJECTION, Ejectio from ejicere, 'to throw out or eject.' The excretion of the fæces, urine, sputa, &c.

EL NISPERO, Achras sapota.

ELABORATION, Elaboratio; from laborare, 'to work.' This word is used, by physiologists to signify the various changes, which substances, susceptible of assimilation, undergo through the action of living organs, before they are capable of serving for nutrition. The food is said to be elaborated in the stomach during the formation of chyme; the chyme is elaborated in the small intestine before it is chy'le, &c.

ELÆ, Olea Europæa.

ELÆAGNUS CORDO, Myrica gale.

ELÆOCARPUS COPALIFERA, Copal.

ELÆOM'ELI, from ελαιον, 'oil,' and μελι, 'honey.' Dioscorides means, by this, an oil thicker than honey, and of a sweet taste, which flows from the trunk of a tree in Syria. It is acrid and purgative; and sometimes occasions serious symptoms, according to that author.—Gorræus.

ELÆON, Oil.

ELÆOPH'ANES, from ελαιον, 'oil,' and φαινομαι, 'I appear.' That which has the appearance of oil; as Urina clæoph'ancs.

ELÆ'O-SAC'CHARUM, from ελαιον, 'oil,' and σακχαο, 'sugar.' O'leo-Sac'charum, Balsamo-Sac'charum. A medicine, composed of essential oil and sugar. It was made by pouring upon an ounce of sugar, reduced to an impalpable powder,  $\zeta\text{ss}$  or  $\zeta\text{j}$  of an essential oil; the mixture being triturated until the two substances were perfectly united.—Rolfink.

ELAIS GUINEENSIS, see Cocos butyracea—e. Occidentalis, see Cocos butyracea.

ÉLAN, Cervus alces.

ÉLANC'EMENT. See Lancinating.

ELAPHOBOS'CURUM, Pastinaca sativa.

ELAPSUS, Luxation.

ELAS'MA, from ελαυω, 'I drive up.' A Clyster Pipe.—Linden.

ÉLASTES, Elasticity.

ELASTIC'ITY, Elastic'itas, Elater, Elastes, Elates, Vis elastica, Tone, Tonic'ity, Contractilité de Tissu, Contractilité par défaut d'extension, from ελαυω, 'I impel.' The property by which certain bodies return to their proper size and shape where these have been modified by pressure or otherwise. It is possessed by the dead as well as living solid.

ELATE, Pinus picea—e. Theleia, Pinus rubra.

ELATER, Elasticity.

ELATERINE. See Momordica elaterium.

ELATERIUM, Extractum elaterii, Momordica elaterium.

ELATES, Elasticity.

ELATIN. See Momordica elaterium.

ELATINE, Antirrhinum elatine.

ELBOW, Cu'bitus, Ancon, Pechys, Ulna, (q. v.) (F.) Coude. This word, abstractedly, means the angle formed by the union of two straight bodies. It is particularly applied to the articulation of the arm with the forearm, and especially to the projection formed by the olecranon process at the posterior part of the joint.

ELCOMA, Ulcer.

ELCO'SIS or HELCO'SIS, Elco'ma or Hcl-co'ma, from 'έλκος, 'an ulcer.' Ulceration, in general. An ulcer, (q. v.) A deep ulceration of the cornea, in consequence of a blow or of violent inflammation.—Galen, Paré.

Sauvages applies the term to a state of the body, in which there are numerous ulcerations, of an obstinate character, complicated with caries, putrescency, low fever, &c.

ELCUSTER, Embryulcus.

ELDER, Sambucus—e. Dwarf, Sambucus ebulus.

ELE CAMPANE, Inula helenium.

ELECTARIUM E CASSIÂ, Confectio cassiæ.

ELECTRICITAS ANIMALIS, Galvanism—e. Galvanica, Galvanism—e. Metallica, Galvanism.

ELECTRICITY, Electric'itas, from ηλεκτρον, 'amber,'—the substance in which it was first noticed. Electricity is, used medically, as an excitant. It has been occasionally employed with success in paralysis, rheumatism, accidental deafness, amaurosis, amenorrhœa, &c., but it is uncertain, and not much used; and the cases are by no means clear in which it could be of service. It may be communicated by means of the electric bath—Bain électrique, as it has been called; which consists in placing the patient upon an isolated stool, and connecting him with the prime conductor, of which he thus becomes a part. The fluid may be communicated by points, sparks, or by shocks, according to the required intensity.

To ELECTRIFY, from electric and fiō, 'I make.' (F.) Electrifer. To produce the electrical condition in a body, or to render it susceptible of producing electrical phenomena. It is often used to signify the act of communicating the electric fluid to man.

ÉLECTRISER, to electrify.

ELECTRODES, from ηλεκτρον, 'amber,' and ειδος, 'resemblance.' An epithet for evacuations, which shine like amber.—Hippocr., Foësius.

ELECTROPUNCTURE, Electropuncturation, Galvanopuncture. The operation of inserting two or more wires, and then connecting them to the poles of the Galvanic apparatus.

ELECTRUM, Succinum.

ELECTUAIRE DENTIFRICE, Dentifrice.

ELECTUARIUM, Electuarium, an Electuary, from eligere, 'to make choice.' (F.) Electuaire. A pharmaceutical composition of a soft consistence, somewhat thicker than honey, and formed of powders, pulps, extracts, syrup, honey, &c. In the London and American Pharmacopœias, electuaries are called Confections, which see.

ELECTUARIUM DE ALOE, Opiatum mesentericum—e. Aperiens, Confectio sennæ—e. Aromaticum, Confectio aromatica—e. Cassia, Confectio cassiæ—e. Cassiæ, Confectio Cassiæ—e. Cassiæ fistulæ, Confectio cassiæ—e. Cassiæ sennæ, Confectio sennæ—e. Cassia tamarindatum seu lenitivum, Confectio cassiæ—e. Catholicum commune, Confectio sennæ—e. Cinchonæ, Opiatum febrifugum—e. de Croco emendatum, Confectio hyacinthi—e. Diaprunum,

Confectio sennæ—e. Eccoproticum, Confectio sennæ—e. de Kinâ kinâ, Opiatum febrifugum—e. Laxativum, Confectio cassiæ—e. Lenitivum, Confectio sennæ—e. Opiatum, Confectio opii—e. Scammonii, Confectio scammonia—e. Scammonio, Confectio scammonia—e. Sennæ, Confectio sennæ—e. Sennæ compositum, Confectio sennæ—e. Sennæ cum pulpis, Confectio sennæ—e. Thebaicum, Confectio opii.

ELELISPHACOS, Salvia.

ELEMENT, Elementum, Principium, P. primitivum, Stoicheion. A simple, ultimate constituent or principle in the human body, which forms the basis of a fibre or tissue. Also, a constituent of a compound organ. The inorganic elements are simple principles. An organic element, proximate principle or compound of organization, results from the union of certain inorganic elements. Oxygen, hydrogen, carbon and azote are inorganic elements; fibrine, albumen, osmazome, &c., organic elements.

ELEMENTS, ORGANIC, Principles, immediate.

ELEMENTUM ACIDIFICUM, Oxygen.

ELEOSELINUM, Apium petroselinum.

ELEPHANTIASIS. Elephantia, Elephantiasmus, El'ephas, Laz'ari morbus vel malum, Pharic'us morbus, Phymat'osis Elephantiasis, from ελεφας, 'an elephant.' Various affections have been described under this name by adding an epithet. It is ordinarily and generically applied to a condition, in which the skin is thick, livid, rugous, tuberculate, and insensible to feeling.

In the E. ARABICA, Maludie glandulaire, Ludricie, Tyriasis, τυριασις, El'ephas, Elephantiasis, Ε. Ινδικα, Elephantia Arabum, Lepra Arabum, (of some.) The tubercles are chiefly on the face and joints. There is loss of hair, except on the scalp; voice, hoarse and nasal; and the disease is said to be contagious and hereditary. It most frequently attacks the feet; and gives the lower extremity a fancied resemblance to the leg of the elephant, whence its name. The seat of the disease seems to be in the lymphatic vessels and glands, and in the subcutaneous cellular tissue: the inflammatory condition of which is accompanied with general morbid symptoms. Medicine has little or no effect on this loathsome complaint. See Lepra.

The E. OF THE GREEKS, E. Græcorum, is probably the same disease as Lepra, which see.

The ELEPHANTIASIS OF CAYENNE, Mal rouge de Cayenne, seems to be a variety of Lepra, characterized by red and yellow spots, occupying the forehead, ears, hands, loins, &c., afterwards extending and becoming scaly, with deformity of the parts where they are seated, particularly of the face; and ultimately producing cracks, ulcers, caries, and sometimes death.

The ELEPHANTIASIS OF JAVA is likewise a variety of lepra, characterized by large, white tumours on the toes and fingers, resembling scrofulous tumefactions. These tumours ulcerate, and the ulcerations spread from the extremities towards the trunk, destroying even the bones. Amputation can alone arrest its progress. The disease is often accompanied by alopecia, and by an eruption of red spots.

The ELEPHANTIASIS OF INDIA is characterized by red, livid, or yellowish spots, slightly prominent, to which succeed indolent tumours, formed in the cellular texture. At a more advanced period the phalanges swell, and become ulcerated; the bones of the nose carious, the lips thickened, and emaciation gradually carries off the patient. It belongs, likewise, to lepra.

ELEPHANTIASIS ITALICA, Pellagra.

The BARBADOS LEG, Glandular disease of Barbadoes, is the Elephantiasis of many writers, Buc'nemia. It is characterized by the leg being enormously tumid and misshapen: skin thickened, livid, and rugose: often scaly; scrotum, arms, or other parts sometimes participating in the affection. The Bucnemia Tropica or Cochin leg is an affection of this kind.

ELEPHANTINUM EMLAS'TRUM, ελεφαντινον. An ancient plaster, composed of 30 parts of cerass, 45 of wax, oil liss, water libj.—Castelli. Oribasius and Celsus both mention a plaster of this name, but by no means similar in composition.

ELEPHAS, Elephantiasis, Ivory.

ELETTARIA CARDAMOMUM, Amomum cardaniomum.

ELEUTERIA, Croton cascarrilla.

ÉLEVATEUR, Elevator—é. Commun de l'aile du nez et de la lèvre supérieure, Levator labii superioris alæque nasi—é. de l'Œil, Rectus superior oculi—é. de la Paupière supérieure, Levator palpebræ superioris.

ELEVATOR, from elcva're, 'to lift up.' (F.) Élévateur. A muscle, whose function it is to raise the part into which it is inserted.—See Levator.

ELEVATOR, Elevato'rium, Vectis elevato'rius. A name given to different surgical instruments, employed for raising portions of bone, which have been depressed, or for raising and detaching the portion of bone, separated by the crown of the trepan.

The COMMON ELEVATOR is a mere lever; the end of which is somewhat bent and made rough, in order that it may less readily slip away from the portion of bone which is to be raised. The instrument is used, by forming a fulcrum for it, either on the hand which holds it, or upon the fingers of the other hand; or by making a fixed point for it on the edge of the opening made with the trephine.

The TRIFLOID ELEVATOR, Vectis triploïdes, was so called from its consisting of three branches, uniting above in one common trunk. The latter part was traversed by a long screw, having below a kind of hook, and above a handle for turning it. By turning the screw the hook was drawn up, and the bone thus elevated.

The ELEVATOR OF PETIT consists of a lever mounted on a handle, and straight throughout its whole length, except at its very end, which is slightly curved, in order that it may be more conveniently put under the portion of bone, intended to be elevated. The lever is pierced at various distances from its but-end with several holes, intended for the reception of a movable screw-peg, fixed on the top of a kind of bridge. This part of the instrument consists of an arch, the ends of which are long, and covered with small pads, and on its centre is the screw-peg already mentioned. By means of these holes the arm of the lever can be lengthened at pleasure.

The ELEVATOR OF LOUIS differed from the last only in the circumstance of the screw-peg being united to the bridge by a kind of pivot instead of hinge, so that greater extent of motion is permitted.

The simple lever is the only one now used, owing to the want of facility and advantages in the use of the others.

ÉLÈVE INTERNE, House surgeon.

ÉLÉVURES, (F.) Efflorescentiæ. A generic name, including all the exanthemata, in which there is tumefaction of the tissue of the skin. See Exanthena.

ELIASTER, Ipech.

ELICHRYSUM, Solidago virgaurea—e. Montanum, Antennaria dioica.

ELICOIDES, Capreolaris.

ELIGMA, Eclectos.

ELIQUATIO, Colliquation.

ELIXATIO, Epsésis, εψησις, from elix'us, 'boiled,' 'sodden.' This word has been used synonymously with Decoction. The act of boiling.

ELIX'IR, Isir, Ixir, Quelles, Alex'ir. The etymology of this word is not clear. Lemery derives it from 'ελιξω, 'I extract;' and also from αἰξω, 'I aid.' Others believe it to be from Arabic, al-ecsir, or al-eksir, 'chymistry.' An elixir is a medicine, composed of various substances held in solution in alcohol. The name has been used, however, for preparations, which contain no spirit of wine.

ELIXIR AC'IDUM HALLERI, seu DIPPE'LII, Elixir Antipodag'ricum, E. Antinephreticum, E. Sulphurico-ac'idum, Gutta ac'idæ tonicæ, Aqua Rabe'lii, Liquor ac'idus Halleri, Mistura sulphurico-ac'idæ, Ether sulphuricus ac'idus, Ac'idum sulphuricum alcoholisatum, A. vitriol'icum vinosum, Alcohol Sulphuricatum, A. Sulphuricum, is a mixture of concentrated sulphuric acid and alcohol:—in the Eau de Rabelle, of one part of the former to three of the latter. It is employed as an astringent in hemorrhages, &c.

ELIXIR ALOES, Tinctura aloes composita—e. Anthelminticum Succorum, Tinctura jalapii composita.

ELIXIR ANTI-ASTHMAT'IC, OF BOERHAAVE. This elixir is composed of alcohol, aniseed, camphor, orris, asarabacca root, calamus aromaticus, liquorice, and elecanpane. It is given in asthma, in the dose of 20 or 30 drops.

ELIXIR ANTIHYPOCHONDIACUM, Tinctura cinchonæ amara—e. Antinephreticum, E. acidum Halleri—e. Antipodag'ricum, E. acidum Halleri—e. Aperitivum, Tinctura aloes composita.

ELIXIR ANTI-SCROFULOUS, OF PEYRILHE; composed of weak alcohol, subcarbonate of potass, and gentian root. It is administered in scrofula.

ELIXIR CARMINATIVE, of Sylvius, Tinctura carminativa Sylvii—e. Daffy's, Tinctura sennæ comp.—e. Danorum, E. pectorale regis Daniæ—e. Fetidum, Tinctura castorei composita—e. of Garus, Tinctura de croco composita—e. Guaiaci volatilis, Tinctura Guaiaci ammoniata—e. ELIXIRIUM ANTISEPTICUM DOCTORIS CHAUSSIER, Tinctura cinchonæ ætherea composita.

ELIXIS, Eclectos.

ELIXIVIATION, Lixiviation.

ELK, Cervus aloes.

ELLEBORASTER, Helleborus fœtidus.

ELLEBORISMUS, Helleborismus.

ELLEBORUM ALBUM, Veratrum album.

ELLYCHNŌTOS, from ἐλλυνον, 'the wick of a lamp.' A sort of tent, used by the ancient surgeons, so called, because it was shaped like a wick, or because it was made of a similar material.

ELM, COMMON, Ulmus—e. Red, Ulmus

Americana—e. Rough-leaved, Ulmus Americana—e. Slippery, Ulmus Americana.

ELMINTHO-CORTON, Corallina Corsicana.

ELO'DES, Marshy. Febris Elodes, Helodes Marsh fever, Helop'yra, Helopyretos, from ἔλος, 'a marsh,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' Also, a kind of fever, characterized by great moisture, or sweating.

ELOME, Orpiment.

ELONGA'TIO, Parathroma, from elongare, 'to lengthen,' 'extend.' An incomplete luxation, in which the ligaments of an articulation are stretched and the limb lengthened, without total luxation. The word has, also, been used by the extension required in the reduction of fractures and luxations.

ELUTRIATIO, Decantation.

ELUVIES, from eluo, 'I wash out.' An inordinate discharge of any fluid, and also the fluid itself. In the works of some authors it is particularly applied to the mucus which flows from the vagina in cases of Leucorrhœa.

ELUXATION, Luxation.

ELYTRITIS, Colposis, Leucorrhœa.

ELYTROBLENNORRHŒA, Leucorrhœa (vaginal.)

ELYTROCE'LE, from ἐλυτρον, 'an envelope,' and κηλη, 'a tumour.' Vogel has given this name to vaginal hernia. Colpocèle.

ELYTROITIS, Colposis.

ELYTRON, from ἐλυω, 'I involve.' A sheath. The vagina. The membranes which envelop the spinal marrow are called elytra.

ELYTRONCUS, Elytrophyl'ma, from ἐλυτρον, 'a vagina or sheath,' and ογκος, a 'tumour.' A swelling of the vagina.

ELYTROPHY'MA, Elytroncus.

ELYTROPTO'SIS, from ἐλυτρον, 'a sheath,' and πτωσις, 'fall.' Callisen gives this name to inversion of the vagina. Also, Prolapsus vaginae, (q. v.)

ELYTRORRHAPHY, Elytrorrhaph'ia; Colporrhaphy, Kolporrhaphy; from ἐλυτρον, 'the vagina,' and ραφη, 'a suture.' The operation of closing the vagina by suture in cases of procecidia uteri.

EM and EN, εν, 'in, into, within.' Also, 'excess;'—frequently used in this last sense by Dr. Good. A common prefix, generally answering to the prefixes im and in, in English. In composition, before β, π, φ, ψ, and μ, the ν is changed into μ; before γ, ζ, ξ, and χ, into γ; before λ, into ζ, and before ρ generally into ρ.

EMACIA'TION, Emaciat'io, from emaciare, 'to grow lean.' Extenuat'io, Mæcis, Macrit'udo, Macror, Mærores, Skelet'ia, Leptysm'us, Pinguet'inis diminutio. (F.) Amaigrissement, Mai-greur. That condition of the body, or of a part of the body, in which it grows lean. The state of one who is lean. Leanness; Isch'notes.

EMAIL DES DENTS, Enamel of the teeth.

EMANA'TION, Emanatio, Ejflu'vium, from emanare, 'to issue or flow from.' The term is applied to bodies, which proceed or draw their origin from other bodies; such as the light which emanates from the sun; the miasmata, which arise from the putrid decomposition of animal or vegetable substances, &c. See Miasm.

EMANSIO MENSUUM. This term has been applied to amenorrhœa (q. v.) or obstruction of the menses before they have been established. Some have used it for the retention which occurs even after they have been established. The former is the general acceptance.

EMARGINATIO, Échancrure, Notch.

EMARGINATURA, Échancrare, Notch.

EMASCULATION; Emasculatio, from emasculare, 'to render impotent.' The act of removing or destroying the generative organs of a male animal.

EMASCULATUS, Castratus, Eunuch.

EMBALMING, Balsamatio, Smyrnis'mos, Cedea, Pollinctura, Conditura Cadaverum, from Balsamum, Balsum (F.) Embaumement, Inbalsumation. An operation, which consists in impregnating the dead body with substances capable of preventing it from becoming putrid, and thus putting it in a condition to be preserved.

EMBAMMA, from εμβαλλω, 'I immerse in.' A medicated pickle or sauce.—Gorræus.

EMBARRAS, Emphraxis.

EMBARRAS GASTRIQUE, (F.) Gastric disorder or impediment. Colluvies gastrica. Irritation of the stomach, in which there is loss of appetite, bitterness and clamminess of mouth, white and yellow tongue, feeling of oppression in the epigastrium, and sometimes pain in that region, with nausea and bilious or bitter vomiting; this state being accompanied with headache, lassitude, and pain in the back and limbs.

EMBARRAS GASTRO-INTESTINAL. Gastro-intestinal disorder. Slight gastro-enteritis, according to the Broussaist, in which the symptoms of the embarras gastrique and E. intestinal are united.

EMBIARRAS INTESTINAL, Intestinal disorder. The principal characters assigned to this are:—tension of the abdomen, colic, borborygmi, discharge of flatus per anum, constipation or diarrhœa, &c.

EMBARRURE, Engisoma.

EMBAUMENT, Embalming.

EMBOITEMENT. (F.) 'Encasing,' from em, 'in,' and boîte, 'a box.' Enadelphina.

This term has been applied to that theory of generation, which considers that the germs are encased in each other in the ovary of the female, in such sort that they are developed in succession after impregnation. It is the theory of encasing of germs, or of monstrosity by inclusion.

EMBOITURE, Diarthrosis.

EMBOLE, from εμβάλλω, 'I put in place.' Reduction of a luxated bone. Repositio.

EMBOLIMOS, Intercalary.

EMBOLUM CEREBRI, Infundibulum of the brain.

EMBONPOINT. (F.) In good point or plight. Bona corporis habitudo. The state of the animal body when in full health. Excessive embonpoint constitutes corpulence and obesity, and may become a morbid condition.

EMBORISMA, Aneurism.

EMBROCATION GUESTONIAN. See Oleum Terebinthinæ rectificatum.

EMBROCA'TION, Embrocatio, Embreg'ma, Embroche, Impluviam, from εμβραχω, 'I sprinkle.' A fluid application to be rubbed on any part of the body. It is often used synonymously with liniment. Originally, it was employed in the sense of Fomentation.

EMBROCHIE, Embrocation.

EMBRYEMA, Embrocation!

EMBRYO, Embryon, from ερ, 'in,' and βρῖος, 'I grow.' Cyēna. The fecundated germ, at the early stages of its development in utero. At a certain period of its increase, the name fetus is given to it, but at what period is not determined. Generally, the embryo state is considered to extend to the period of quickening.

EMBRYOCTONY. Fœtus Trucidatio, from εμβρυον, 'the embryo,' and κτονος, 'destruction.' The act of destroying a fœtus in utero, when insurmountable obstacles—as certain deformities of the pelvis—oppose delivery.

EMBRYOGRAPHY, Embryogr'aphia, from εμβρυον, 'the embryo,' and γραφη, 'a description.' The part of anatomy, which describes the embryo.

EMBRYOTHLASTA, Embryothlastes, Embryothlastum, from εμβρυον, 'the embryo,' and θλαω, 'I break.' An instrument for dividing the fœtus piecemeal, in order to effect delivery.

EMBRYOTHLASTES, Embryotome, same etymon. A crotchet or other instrument used, in certain cases of laborious parturition, to break the bones of the fœtus, for the purpose of extracting them with greater facility.—Hippocr., Galen.

EMBRYOTOME, Embryothlastes.

EMBRYOTOMY, Embryotomia, from εμβρυον, 'an embryo,' and τεμνειν, 'to cut.' A division of the fœtus into fragments, to extract it by piecemeal, when the narrowness of the pelvis or other faulty conformation opposes delivery.

EMBRYULCIA, Embryasterulcia, from εμβρυον, 'embryo, fœtus,' and ελκω, 'I extract,' 'I draw.' A surgical operation, by which the fœtus is extracted by means of appropriate instruments, when a faulty conformation or other circumstances prevent delivery by the natural efforts.

EMBRYULCUS, Elcuster, ελκυστηρ, same etymon. An iron hook or crotchet, described by Fabricius ab Acquapendente, which was used to extract the fœtus in some cases of laborious labour.

EMBRYUSTERULCIA, Embryulcia.

EMENDANS, Corrigent.

EMERAUDE, Smaragdus.

EMESIA, Vomituration.

EMESIS, Vomiting.

EMETIA, Emetine.

EMETIC, Emeticum, Vomitivum. Every substance capable of producing vomiting. (F.) Émétique. [This term is also restricted by the French to tartarized antimony—the emetica, as it were, par excellence.] Vomitif. The tartarized antimony, emetine, ipœcacuanha, and salphate of zinc are the chief emetics.

Emetics are valuable agents in disease. They may either act primarily on the stomach, or secondarily on other parts of the system:—the sympathy between the stomach and other parts of the body being very extensive, and an important object of study.

The following are the chief emetics :

|  |  |
|--|--|
| Antimonii et PotassæTartaras,Cupri Acetas,Sulphas,Emetina,Gillenii,Hydragryi Sulphas Flavus, | Ipecacuanha,Lobelia,Sanguinaria,Scilla,Sisapiis,Zinci Sulphas. |
|--|--|

EMETIC TARTAR, Antimonium tartarizatum—e. Weed, Lobelia inflata.

EMÉTINE, Emeti'na, Emetia, from  $\epsilon\mu\epsilon\omega$ , 'I vomit.' Vomitine. A vegetable alkali, discovered by M. Pelletier in ipecacuanha, and to which ipecacuanha owes its emetic power. It is obtained from different ipecacuanhas, but chiefly from the psychotria emetica, callicocca ipecacuanha, and viola emetica. It is in transparent scales, of a reddish-brown colour, almost inodorous, of a bitter, slightly acrid taste; is unchangeable in the air, soluble in water and alcohol, and insoluble in ether.

Three grains of impure emetine and one grain of pure are equal to 18 of ipecacuanha. See Ipecacuanha.

ÉMÉTIQUE, Antimonium tartarizatum, Emetic.

EMETO-CATHARTIC, Emeto-cathar'ticus, from  $\epsilon\mu\epsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$ , 'vomiting,' and  $\kappa\alpha\theta\alpha\rho\tau\iota\kappa\omicron\varsigma$ , 'a purgative.' A remedy, which at the same time excites vomiting and purging.

EMETOL'OGY, Emetolo'gia, from  $\epsilon\mu\epsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$ , 'vomiting,' and  $\lambda\omicron\gamma\omicron\varsigma$ , 'a discourse.' A treatise on vomiting and on emetics.

EMINENCE, Eminen'tia, Protuberant'ia, Ex'ochē, Exanthe'ma. A projection at the surface of a healthy or diseased organ.

EMINENCE PORTE ANTERIEURE, Lobulus anonymus—e. Porte postérieure, Lobulus Spigelii—e. Sus-pubienne, Mons veneris.

EMINENCES BIGEMINÉES, Quadrigenina corpora—e. Latérales, Corpora olivaria—e. Pyramidales, Corpora pyramidalia—e. Vermiformes du cercelet, Vermiformes processus.

EMINENTIA ANNULARIS, Pons varolii e. Pyramidalis Tympani, Pyramid.

EMINENTIÆ CANDICANTES, Mamillary tubercles—e. Lenticulares, Corpora striata—e. Magnæ cerebri, Thalami nervorum opticorum—e. Olivares, Corpora olivaria—e. Pyramidalia, Corpora pyramidalia—e. Quadrigeninæ, Q. tubercula.

ÉMISSAIRE, Emunctory.

EMISSARIA SANTORINI. A name given to some small veins, which communicate with the sinuses of the dura mater, by apertures in the cranium. Such are the parietal, posterior condyloid, mastoid veins, &c.

EMISS'ION, Emissio, from emit'tere, 'to send out,' 'drive out.' The act by which any matter whatever is thrown from the body. Thus, we say Emission of urine, Emission of semen, &c.

EMMENAGOGUES, Emmeniagoga, from  $\epsilon\mu\mu\eta\nu\alpha$ , 'the menses,' and  $\alpha\gamma\omega$ , 'I drive,' or 'expel.' Men'agogues. A name given to medicines, believed to have the power of favouring the discharge of the menses. It is doubtful whether there is any substance, which possesses this power directly. According to different conditions of the system, the most opposite remedies may act as emmenagogues. The black hellebore, savin, madder, polygala senega, and ergot, (secale cornutum) are reputed to be specific emmenagogues.

The following list comprises the chief of them:—

|  |  |
|--|--|
| Cunila Pulegioides,Helleborus Niger,Mentha Pulegium,Rosmarinus,Ruba, | Sabina,Secale Cornutum,Senega,Tanacetum. |
|--|--|

EMMENAGOLO'GIA, from  $\epsilon\mu\mu\eta\nu\alpha\gamma\omicron\gamma\alpha$ , and  $\lambda\omicron\gamma\omicron\varsigma$ , 'a discourse.' A treatise of emmenagogues.

EMMENIA, Menses.

EMMENIAGOGA, Emmenagogues.

EMMENOLO'GIA, from  $\epsilon\mu\mu\eta\nu\alpha$ , 'menses,' and  $\lambda\omicron\gamma\omicron\varsigma$ , 'a discourse.' A treatise on Menstruation.

EMMYXIUM ARTICULARE, Hydrarthrus.

EMOLLIENTS, Emollien'tia, Malthæ'tica, Relaxan'tia, Epiceras'tica, Malactica, from emol'lire, 'to soften.' Substances, which relax and soften parts that are inflamed, or too tense. They are used both internally and externally; the former, however, consisting of mucilaginous substances, being generally reckoned as demulcents; the latter or proper emollients consisting of oils, cataplasms, fomentations, &c. Oleaginous bodies, rubbed on a part, act by diminishing its cohesion. Fomentations, in cases of internal inflammation, act probably through contiguous sympathy.

The following are the chief emollients:—

|  |   |
|--|---|
| Adeps,Amygdalæ Oleum,Avenæ Farina,Cera,Cetaceum, | Linum,Olivæ Oleum,Sesamum,Triticæ Farina,Ulmus. |
|--|---|

ÉMONCTOIRE, Emunctory.

EMOTIO, Delirium, Luxation.

EMPASMA, Catapasma.

EMPATHE'MA, Ma'nia a pathē matē, Manic sans délire, ungovernable passion, from  $\epsilon\mu$  or  $\epsilon\nu$ , 'in,' and  $\pi\alpha\theta\omicron\varsigma$ , 'suffering.'—Good.

EMPEIRIA, Experience.

EMPETRUM, Herniaria glabra.

EMPHLYSIS, from  $\epsilon\mu$  or  $\epsilon\iota$ , 'in,' and  $\phi\lambda\upsilon\sigma\iota\varsigma$ , 'a vesicular tumour or eruption.' Ich'orous Exan'them. An eruption of vesicular pimples, filled progressively with an acrid and colourless, or nearly colourless, fluid; terminating in scurf or laminated scabs. A genus in the order Exanthematica, class Hæmatica of Good.

EMPHLYSIS APHTHA, Aphthæ—e. Erysipelas, Erysipelas—e. Miliaria, Miliary fever—e. Vaccina inserta, Vaccina—e. Varicella, Varicella.

EMPHRACTICA, Physconia.

EMPHRACTICUS, from  $\epsilon\mu\phi\rho\alpha\tau\tau\omega$ , 'I close,' 'I obstruct.' Emphas'ticus,  $\epsilon\mu\phi\lambda\alpha\sigma\tau\iota\kappa\omicron\varsigma$ , Emplatomenos. Any substance, which closes the pores.

EMPHRAG'MA, same etymon. Obturatorum, Impedimentum. Any thing that obstructs. Hippocrates uses this term to designate the obstacle to delivery on the part of the fœtus, when the presentation is preternatural.

EMPHRAG'MA LACHRYMALE, Fistula lachrymalis—e. Salivare, Ranula.

EMPIRAXIS, Obstru'tio, Obtur'dtio, Op'pilatio. Same etymon. 'Obstruction.' An Embarras or repletion of canals or cavities by any substance, which is either morbid from quantity or quality.

EMPHYMA, Tumour—e. Encystis, Encystis—e. Encystis atheroma, Atheroma—e. Encystis ganglion, Ganglion, Testudo—e. Encystis meliceris, Meliceris—e. Encystis steatoma, Steatoma—e. Exostosis ossea, Exostosis—e. Exostosis periosteae, Node—e. Sarcoma, Sarcoma—e. Sarcoma adiposum, Adipose sarcoma—e. Sarcoma cellulosum, Cystic sarcoma—e. Sarcoma mammarum, Mammary sarcoma—e. Sarcoma pancreaticum, Pancreatic sarcoma—e. Sarcoma scirrhosum, Scirrhous sarcoma—e. Sarcoma tuberculosum, Tuberculate sarcoma—e. Sarcoma vasculosum, Sarcoma vascular.

EMPHYSEMA, Inflatio, Empneumatosis, Sarcites flatuosus, Emphyse'na cellula're, Emphyse'ma pneumaticum, Physon'cus, Tumor flatulentus, from εμφυσω, 'I inflate.' Pneumatosis's, Inflation, Wind-dropsy. This term is commonly applied to any white, crepitant, shining, elastic, indolent tumour, caused by the introduction of air into the cellular texture. Injuries of the larynx, trachea, or lungs; fractures of the ribs or wounds penetrating the chest are the most frequent causes of this affection, which is owing to the air escaping from the air-passages and insinuating itself into the cellular texture surrounding the wound. There are some cases of emphysema, which are owing to internal causes; and hence a division has been made into the accidental and symptomatic, and the spontaneous and idiopathic.

EMPHYSEMA ABDOMINIS, Tympanites.

EMPHYSEMA OF THE LUNGS. E. Pulmonum. A considerable pressure or contusion of the chest, or any violent concussion of the lung, may produce a laceration in that viscus, without injury being done to the parietes of the thorax, and may give place to the infiltration of air into the cellular texture. Laënnec has described another species of emphysema of the lungs, consisting in excessive dilatation of the air-cells, some of which become as large as hempseed, ultimately break, and give rise to irregular vesicles at the surface of the lung, some of which are as large as a hazel nut. Physical Signs. The thorax externally, generally or locally, appears unnaturally convex and prominent. The intercostal spaces are widened, but depressed. The inspiratory efforts are increased. The sound on percussion is morbidly clear, but not tympanitic. On auscultation the inspiratory murmur is feeble or suppressed. The expiration, which is more frequently audible, is prolonged, laborious and wheezing.

INTERLOBULAR EMPHYSEMA. There are no certain physical signs which can distinguish this from the vesicular.

EMPHYSEMA PECTORIS, Pneumothorax—e. Tympanites, Tympanites—e. Uteri, Hystero-physis, Physonetra.

EMPIRIC, εμπειριος, Empiricus, from εμπειρια, 'experience.' One who follows only experience. A sect of physicians, who rejected all theory and took for their guide experience alone. It was opposed to the dogmatic sect. The Empiric sect prevailed till near the time of Galen. Amongst its most eminent members, after Philinus and Serapion, were Apollonius, Glaucias, Bacchius of Tanagra, and Zeuxis,—both disciples of Herophilus,—Heraclides of Tarentum, Cleophantus, master of Asclepiades, Menodotus of Nicomedia, and Theudas of Laodicea. They occupied themselves, chiefly, with discovering the properties of drugs, and did important service, in this manner, to medicine.

At the present day, the word Empiric is only taken in a bad sense, being employed in nearly the same signification, as charlatan, (q. v.) or quack.

EMPIRICE, Empiricism.

EMPIRICISM; same etymon. Empirica Ars, Empiricē, εμπειρικη. (F.) Empirisme. Medicine, founded on experience. It generally, at the present day, signifies quackery.

EMPIRISME, Empiricism.

EMPLASTICUS, Emphracticus.

EMPLASTRUM, from the Greek εμπλαστρον, 'I spread upon.' (F.) Emplâtre. A solid and tenacious compound, adhesive at the ordinary heat of the human body. Some of the plasters owe their consistence to wax and resin; and others to the chemical union, which takes place between the semivitreous oxide of lead and oil. Most of them become too consistent by age. When such is the case, they may be re-melted by a gentle heat, and oil be added to them.

EMPLASTRUM ADHÆSIVUM, Emplastrum resinæ—e. Adhæsivum Woodstockii, see Sparadrupum adhæsivum—e. Alexandri, Alexandrine—e. de Althæâ, Unguentum de Althæâ.

EMPLASTRUM AMMONIACI, Ammoniacum Plaster, (Ammoniac. pur. ʒ v, acidi aceticī ʒ ss. After dissolving the ammoniacum, the plaster is formed by evaporating the mixture in an iron vessel in a water bath, constantly stirring. Ph. L.) It is used as a discutient plaster.

EMPLASTRUM AMMONIACI CUM HYDRARGYRO, Ammoniacum plaster with mercury (Ammoniaci, pur. ʒ ij, hydrarg. pur. ʒ ij, olei sulph. ʒ j. Rub the mercury with the oil until the globules disappear, then add the ammoniac, previously melted, and mix. Ph. L.)

EMPLASTRUM ANDRÆE DE CRUCE, E. de pice et resinis glutinans—e. Anglicum, see Sparadrupum adhæsivum.

EMPLASTRUM AROMATICUM, Aromatic plaster. (Thuris. ʒ ij, cere flavæ ʒ ss, pulv. cort. Cinnam. ʒ vj, ol. ess. piment., ol. ess. Limon. aa ʒ ij. Melt the frankincense and wax together and strain; then add, as it cools, the cinnamon, previously rubbed with the oils, and form a plaster. Ph. Dubl.) Used as a stimulating plaster.

EMPLASTRUM ASAFÆTIDÆ, Asafetida plaster. E. antihystericum, (Empl. oxid. plumb. semivitr., gum. resin. Ferula assafæt. sing. partes duas, G. resin. bubonis galban., Cere flavæ aa ʒ i part. Ph. Ed.) Used as an antispasmodic and anodyne plaster.

EMPLASTRUM ATTRAHENS, E. cere.

EMPLASTRUM CALEFA'CIENS, Calefacient plaster, Warm plaster. (F.) Emplâtre échauffant. (Emplastr. cantharid. p. i. Picis burgund. p. vii. Melt together and form into a plaster. Ph. Dubl.) It is rubefacient and stimulant.

EMPLASTRUM CERÆ, E. simplex, Wax plaster, E. attrahens. (Cera flavæ, Semi præp. aa lbij, resina flavæ lbj.) Melt them together and strain. (Ph. L.) It has been considered drawing. It is stimulating.

EMPLASTRUM CICUTÆ, E. de cicuta, E. conii maculati, Unguentum solidum de cicuta. Hemlock plaster. (F.) Emplâtre de Ciguë. (Resina abiet. 960 p. Cera flav. 640 p. Picis albæ, 448 p. Ol. cicuta per decoct præparat. 123 p. Fol. cicut. recent. 2000 p.) Melt the resins, wax and oil; add the cicuta leaves, and boil; strain and add, after having dissolved it in vinegar of squills and cicuta juice, gum ammoniac, 500 p. (Ph. Par.) It is used as a discutient, especially to scirrhous tumours.

EMPLASTRUM CITRINUM, Unguentum de althæâ—e. Commune, E. plumbi—e. Commune cum resina, E. resinae—e. Conii, E. cicute.

EMPLASTRUM CUMINI, Cumin plaster. (Cumin. semin., cavii sem., lauri bacc. sing. ʒij, picis arida lbij, cera flavæ ʒij.) Melt the pitch and wax together, then add the other ingredients. (Ph. L.) It is used as a warm, discutient plaster.

EMPLASTRUM DIACHYLON, E. plumbi—e. Divinum Nicolai, see Magnet—e. Emolliens, Unguentum de althæâ—e. Ferri rubri, E. oxidi ferri rubri—e. Flavam, Unguentum de althæâ—e. ad Fongiculos, Ceratum Galeni.

EMPLASTRUM GAL'BANI, Galbanum plaster, (Empl. litharg. lbij, gum. galban. lbss, cera flavæ ʒiv.) Melt the galbanum before adding the plaster and wax, then melt all together. (Ph. D.) A stimulant and discutient.

EMPLASTRUM GALBANI COMPOSITUM, E. lithargyri compositum, Diachylon magnum cum gummi, Compound galbanum plaster. (Galb. gum. resin. pur. ʒ viij, emp. plumbi. lbij, tereb. vulg. ʒx, abietis resin. contus. ʒij.) Melt the galbanum and turpentine together, then mix in the resin, and afterwards the plaster, previously melted. (Ph. L.) It is stimulant and discutient.

EMPLASTRUM GLUTINOSUM, see Sparadrapum adhæsivum—e. cum Guminatibus, E. gummosum.

EMPLASTRUM GUMMOSUM, Gum plaster, Emplastrum lithargyri cum gummi, E. cum guminatibus, E. c. gummis resinosis, E. Oxidi Plumbi semivitreum gummosum, Yellow diachylon, Gum diachylon, Diachylon cum gummi. (Emp. oxid. plumbi semivitr. p. viii, g. resin. ammoniac, g. resin. babon. galbani, Cera flavæ, aa, p. i. Ph. E.) Properties and uses like the last.

EMPLASTRUM E GUMMIS RESINOSIS, E. gummosum.

EMPLASTRUM CUM GUMMI RESINIS, Emplâtre de gomme résine, Diachylon gommé, Plaster of gum resins. (Emplastr. simpl. p. 1600, cera flavæ, p. 96, picis albæ, p. 96, terebint. p. 96.) Melt by a gentle heat, and add gum ammoniac, p. 32, bdellium 32, galban. 32, and sagapenum, p. 32. Dissolve in a sufficient quantity of alcohol, evaporate to the consistence of honey, and mix carefully all together. (Ph. P.) A discutient.

EMPLASTRUM HYDRARGYRI, Mercurial plaster, Emplastr. lithargyri cum hydrargyro. (Hydrarg. purif. pond. ʒij, ol. sulphurat. ʒj, emplastr. plumbi lbj.) Rub the mercury with the oil until the globules disappear, then add the plaster. (Ph. L.) It is stimulant, resolvent and discutient. Applied as a discutient to venereal and other tumours.

EMPLASTRUM HYDRARGYRI COMPOSITUM, E. de hydrargyro compositum, E. de Vigo cum mercurio emendatum, Compound plaster of mercury. (Empl. simpl. p. 1250, cera flavæ, p. 64, resina, p. 64.) Melt, and before it congeals, add pulv. g. ammoniac, p. 20, bdellium, p. 20, oliban, p. 20, myrrh, p. 20, saffron, p. 12. Mix carefully. Take of mercury, p. 380, pure turpentine, p. 64, liquid and pure storax, p. 192. Triturate in an iron mortar till the globules disappear. Now melt all together, and before congealing add essential oil of lavender, p. 8. (Pharm. P.) The same properties as the last.

EMPLASTRUM ICHTHYOCOLLE TELE INDUC-TUM, see Sparadrapum adhesivum—e. Irritans, E. lyttæ—e. Lithargyri, E. plumbi—e. Lithargyri compositum, E. galbani compositum—e. Lithargyri cum gummi, E. gummosum—e. Lithargyri cum hydrargyro, E. hydrargyri—e. Lithargyri cum resina, E. resinae—e. Lithargyricum cum resina pini, E. resinae.

EMPLASTRUM LYTTÆ, E. cantharidis, E. cantharidis vesicatorii, Plaster of the Spanish or blistering fly, E. meloës vesicatorii, E. vesicatorium, E. c. cantharidibus vesipasticum solidius et tenacius hærens, E. irritans, E. rubefians. (Cantharides in powder, lbj. Emp. cera bliss. Adipis præp. lbj.) Melt the plaster and lard together, and as the mixture becomes thick on cooling, sprinkle in the flies, and mix. (Pharm. L.) This is the common blistering plaster. Too much heat must not be used in its preparation. It requires to remain on 10 or 12 hours before its full effect is induced, and acts sufficiently well, provided even a piece of thin gauze or tissue paper be placed between it and the skin, whilst absorption of the flies is thus prevented.

EMPLASTRUM LYTTÆ, Blister.

EMPLASTRUM LYTTÆ COMPOSITUM, E. cantharidis vesicatorii compositum, E. meloës vesicatorii compositum, Compound plaster of cantharides or Spanish flies. (Resin. liq. pini laricis, p. 18, resina concret. pini abietis. meloës resicat. aa p. 12, cera flavæ, p. 4, subact. eupri, p. ij, semin. sinapis alb., fruct. pip. nigr. aa p. j.) Melt the pitch and wax, then add the turpentine, and as these cool, sprinkle in the other substances in the form of powder, so as to make a plaster. (Ph. E.) The same properties as the last, but more energetic and speedy in its action.

EMPLASTRUM MELOES VESICATORII, E. lyttæ—e. Meloes vesicatorii comp., E. lyttæ comp.—e. Mucilaginosum, Unguentum de althæâ—e. Nigrum, of Augsburg, see Magnet.

EMPLASTRUM NORIMBERGEN'SE, E. ex oxido plumbi rubro camphoratum, Emplâtre de Nuremberg, Nuremberg plaster. (Oxid. plumb. rubr. p. 300, ol. olive. p. 600, aqua, q. s.) Boil until the oxide is dissolved, and almost to dryness. Remove the vessel from the fire and add, yellow wax, p. 500. Put the vessel again on the fire, and after the wax is melted, add, before it congeals, camphor, p. 24, mix. (Ph. P.) It is considered a desiccative, and has been employed in gangrene.

EMPLASTRUM OXIDI FERRI RUBRI, E. Ferri rubri, E. Rob'orans, Plaster of red oxide of iron,

Strengthening plaster. (Empl. oxid. plumb. semivitr. p. xxiv, resinæ pin. p. vi, cera flavæ, olei olcæ Europ. sing. p. iij, oxid. ferri rubr. p. viij. Rub the red oxide of iron with the oil, and add the other ingredients melted. Ph. E.) It is employed as a strengthening plaster.

EMPLASTRUM OPII, Opium plaster. (Opii duri contus. ℞ss, abict. resin. cont. ℞iij, emplastr. plumbi ℔j. The plaster and resin being melted together, add the opium. Ph. L.) It is employed as an anodyne, and to give support.

EMPLASTRUM PHENICEUM, Diapalmæ—e. ex Oxido plumbi rubro compositum, E. Norimbergense.

EMPLASTRUM PICIS COMPOSITUM, E. picis burgundicæ, E. cephalicum, Cephalic plaster, Compound pitch plaster. (Picis arid. ℔ij, abictis resinæ ℔ij, resinæ flavæ, cera flavæ aa ℞iv, myrist. ol. ℞j. To the pitch, resin, and wax, melted together, add the other matters and mix. Ph. L.) It is stimulant and rubefacient. Sometimes used in headache (applied to the temples.)

EMPLASTRUM EX OXIDO PLUMBI SEMIVITREO, E. plumbi—e. Oxidi plumbi semivitreum, E. plumbi—e. Oxidi plumbi semivitreum gummosum, E. gummosum.

EMPLASTRUM DE PICE ET RESINIS GLUTINANS, E. Andree de Cruce, Emplâtre d'André de la Croix, E. collant de poix et de résines. Adhesive plaster of pitch and resins. (Picis albæ, p. 128, resin. clemi p. 32, terebinth. pur. p. 16, ol. laur. p. 16. Melt with a gentle heat, and pass through linen. Ph. P.) Used in contusions and fractures as a support.

EMPLASTRUM PLUMBI, E. lithargyri, E. cumulæ, E. diachylon, E. oxid. plumbi semivitreum. E. ex oxid. plumbi semivitreo, Diachylon simplex, White Diachylon Lead plaster, Diachylon plaster. (Plumbi oxid. semivitr. in pulv. ℔v, olci oliv. congium, aquæ ℔ij. Boil together over a slow fire, stirring constantly until the oil and oxide of lead cohere. Ph. L.)

EMPLASTRUM POLYCHRESTUM, E. resinæ.

EMPLASTRUM RESINÆ, E. adhesivum, E. lithargyri cum resinâ, E. resinosum, Resin plaster, Adhesive or sticking plaster. Emplastrum commu'ne cum resinâ, E. Polychrestum, E. lithargyricum cum resinâ pini. (Resin flav. ℔ss, cmp. plumb. ℔iij. Melt the plaster, with a gentle heat, add the resin, and mix. Ph. L.) Employed in wounds and ulcers.

EMPLASTRUM SAPONIS, E. saponaceum, Soap plaster. (Saponis duri concis. ℔ss, emplastr. plumb. ℔iij. Mix the soap with the melted plaster, and boil to a proper consistence. Ph. L.) It is a mild discutient. Applied to tumours, corns, &c.

EMPLASTRUM SIMPLEX, E. ceræ—e. Spermaticeæ, Ceratum cetaceæ.

EMPLASTRUM THURIS, Frankincense plaster. (Emp. lithargyri, ℔ij, thuris, ℔ss, oxid. ferri rubr. ℞iij. Ph. Dubl.) Use:—the same as the plaster of red oxide of iron.

EMPLASTRUM VESICATORIUM, Blister, E. lyttæ—e. de Vigo cum mercurio emendatum, E. hydragyri compositum.

EMPLÂTRE, Emplastrum—e. d'André de la Croix, Emplastrum de pice et resinis glutinans

—e. de Cigue, Emplastrum cicutæ—e. Collant de poix et de résines, Emplastrum de pice et resinis glutinans—e. de Gomme resinæ, Emplastrum cum gummi resinis—e. de Nuremberg, Emplastrum Norimbergense.

EMPLATTOMENOS, Emphracticus.

EMPNEUMATOSIS, Emphysema, Inspiration.

EMPOISONNEMENT, Poisoning.

EMPORIUM, εμποριον, 'a market or depot.' The brain was so called, of old, because there all the mental affairs are transacted.

EMPORIUM SPIRITUUM, Sensorium.

EMPREINTE, Impression.

EMPRESMA from εμφορῶω, 'I burn internally.' Phlegmatica membranosæ et parenchymatosæ, Phlegmaticæ, Febres continue inflammatoricæ, Inflammatio interna, Caulma, Internâ inflammatio, a genus in the class hæmatica, order phlogotica of Good.

EMPRION, from εμ and πριον, 'a saw,' 'serrated.' Galen has given this name to the pulse, when the sensation produced by the artery under the fingers, is analogous to that which would be caused by the unequal teeth of a saw.

EMPROSTHOTONOS, Emprosthotonia, Entasia tetanus anticus, Tetanus anticus, from εμπροσθεν, 'forwards,' and τεινω, 'I stretch,' 'I extend.' A variety of tetanus, in which the body is drawn forwards by the permanent contraction of the muscles.

EMPSYCHOSIS, from εμψυχωω, 'I animate,' 'I vivify.' A word formerly used for the act of animating, or the union of the soul with the body.

EMPTOE, Hæmoptysis.

EMPTOICA PASSIO, Hæmoptysis.

EMPTOSIS, Imbibition.

EMPTYISIS, Hæmoptysis.

EMPYE, Empyema.

EMPYEMA, Empyësis; Empyëz, from εμ, 'in,' and πυω, 'pus.' Apostëma empyema. A collection of blood or pus and conventionally of other fluid, in some cavity of the body, and particularly in that of the pleura. Empyema is one of the terminations of inflammation of the pleura, and is called, also, Pyothorax verus, Pleurorrhœa purulenta, Diaplyëma, Empyësis pectoris, Pyösis pectoris, Hydrothorax purulentus, Dyspnoea pyothoracica, Pneumonia suppuratoria, Abscessus pectoris, A. Thoracis, A. Pulmonum.

The operation for empyema properly means the making of an opening into the thorax, for the purpose of giving issue to the matter collected in the cavity of the pleura, although it has been used for the operation required for the evacuation of any fluid from the chest, or synonymously with Paracentesis thoracis.

EMPHYESIS. Same etymon. Suppuration. An eruption of phlegmonous pimples, gradually filling with a purulent fluid, and terminating in thick scabs, frequently leaving pits or scabs. Pustulous Exanthem. A genus in the order Exanthematica, class Hæmatica of Good. See Empyema.

EMPHYESIS OCULI, Hypopyon—e. Pectoris, Empyema—e. Variola, Variola.

EMPHYOCELE, from εμ, 'in,' πυον, 'pus,' and κηλη, 'tumour,' 'hernia.' A tumour, formed by an accumulation of pus in the scrotum. Different diseases have been described under this name, such as suppuration of the testicle, empyema of the tunica vaginalis, accumulation of pus in the cavity of a hernial sac, abscesses of different kinds formed in the cellular texture of the scrotum, &c.

EMPHYOMPHALUS, from εμ, 'in,' πυον, 'pus,' and ομφαλος, 'the navel.' This word has been used to designate a suppurating tumour at the umbilicus; or, at times, umbilical hernia, the sac of which is filled with blood.

EMPYOS, Purulent.

EMPYREUMA, from εμπυρευω, 'I kindle.' The burnt smell and acrid taste, which volatile products—gaseous and liquid—contract, when animal or vegetable substances are decomposed with a strong heat. The cause of this smell is seated in an oil, called empyreumatic, which does not exist in the substance subjected to the operation, but is the result of its decomposition. If the empyreuma occurs when the organic substance is placed in a still with a liquid, it is owing to the solid matter touching the bottom of the vessel to which the fire is applied.

EMPYROS, Febricitans, from πυρ, 'fire or fever.' One who has fever.—Hippocr.

EMS, MINERAL WATERS OF. Celebrated springs on the river Lahn, duchy of Nassau. They are thermal (from 70° to 118° Fahr.) and carbonated salines; and are much used in gastric and intestinal affections, &c.

EMULGENT, Emulgens, from emulgere, 'to milk out,' 'to draw out.' A name given to the renal artery and vein, because the ancients imagined they milked, as it were, the urine through the kidneys.

EMULSIO GUAIACINA, Mistura guaiaci—e. Leniens, Looch ex ovo—e. Oleosa, Looch ex ovo—e. Simplex, E. amygdala—e. Antihysterica, Mistura asafetida—e. Arabica, Emulsio acaciæ Arabicæ.

EMULSION, Emulsio; same etymon. A pharmaceutical preparation, of a milky-white opaque appearance, which is composed of a fixed oil, divided and held in suspension in water by means of mucilage.

Emulsions have been divided into the true and oily, and into the false or not oily; the latter being composed of resinous substances, balsams, or camphor, rubbed up with dilute alcohol, mucilage, or yolk of egg.

EMULSIO AMYGDALÆ, Lac amygdala, Emulsio simplex, Amygdala'tum, Mistura amygdala, Emulsio sive Lac Amygdala'rum. Almond Emulsion, Almond Milk, (F.) Lait d'amandes. (Confect. amygdal. ʒj, aqua distill. ℥j. Ph. L.) It is used as a diluent and demulcent.

EMULSIO ACACIÆ ARABICÆ, Emulsio Arabica; Gum Arabic Emulsion. (Nuclcor. amygd. comm. ʒj, aqua ℥ijss, mucilag. acac. ʒij, sacch. ʒiv. While beating the decorticated almonds with the sugar and water, add the mucilage. Ph. E.) Used in the same cases as the last.

EMULSIO CAMPHORÆ, E. Camphor'da, Mistura Camphoræ; Camphor Emulsion. (Camphoræ ʒj, amygd. com. decortic., sacch. pur., aa ʒiv, aqua ʒvj. Ph. E.) A convenient form for giving camphor.

EMULSIO OLEI AMYGDALA'RUM; Emulsion of Oil of Almonds. (Ol. amygd. ʒj, gum acac. pulv. ʒij, syrup. ʒj, aqua distill. ʒiv. Mix.) A good pectoral or cough mixture.

EMULSIO OLEI RICINI; Castor Oil Emulsion. (Ol. ricini ʒss, vitelli ovi q. s., aqua distillat. ʒj.) An aperient draught.

EMULSIO OLEI TEREBIN'THINE; Emulsion of Oil of Turpentine. (Ol. tereb. rect. ʒij, sacch. alb. ʒss, vitelli ovi j, emuls. amygd. vel aqua distillat. ʒvj. Mix.) In rheumatic and nephritic affections. Dose, ʒiiss.

EMULSIO PURGANS CUM JALAPÆ RESINA; Purg-ing Emulsion with Resin of Jalap. (Jalapæ resin. gr. xij, sacch. alb. ʒij. Triturate for some time, and add gradually half the yolk of an egg: continue to triturate, adding by degrees emuls. simpl. ʒv, aq. flor. aurant. ʒij. Ph. P.)

EMULSIO PURGANS CUM SCAMMONIO; Purg-ing Emulsion with Scammony. It is prepared like the preceding, substituting only scammony for the jalap.

EMULSION, ALMOND, Emulsio amygdalæ—e. Camphor, Emulsio camphoræ—e. Castor oil, Emulsio olei ricini—e. Gum Arabic, Emulsio acaciæ Arabicæ—e. Huileuse, Looch ex ovo—e. of Oil of almonds, Emulsio olei amygdalarum—e. of Oil of turpentine, Emulsio olei terebinthine—e. Purg-ing with resin of jalap, Emulsio purgans cum jalapæ resina—e. Purg-ing with scammony, Emulsio purgans cum scammonio.

EMULSIVE, Emulsivus, same etymon. An epithet given to seeds whence oil may be extracted by expression; such as almonds, apricots, peaches, hemp, rape, melons, gourds; those of the nut kind and cucurbitaceous and cruciferous plants in general.

EMUNCTORY, Emunctorium, from emungere, 'to drain off,' 'to cleanse.' Emissarium, (F.) Émonctoire, Émissaire. Any organ, whose office it is to give issue to matters, which ought to be excreted. The ancients believed that some organs were more particularly destined to serve as emunctories to others. The nasal fossæ, for example, they believed to be the emunctories of the brain.

EMUNDANTIA, Detergents.

ENADELPHIA, Emboitement.

ENÆMON, Styptic.

ENÆOREMA, from εμ, 'in,' and αιωρεω, 'I lift up,' 'that which hangs or floats in.' The Neph'elæ, Nubes, Sublimamentum, Suspensum, Neb'cula or cloud, which is suspended in the urine, as it cools.

ENAMEL OF THE TEETH, Dentium Nitro, Cortex, Cortex stri'da, Substantia vitrea, Crusta Dentium adamantina. The substance which covers the coronæ of the teeth, and which has, also, been called the vitreous substance, Substance vitrée ou émaillée, (F.) Émail des Dents. The enamel is of a milky-white colour, and sufficiently hard to strike fire with steel. Its surface is very smooth and polished, and it forms a thicker layer towards the part where the teeth come in contact, and becomes thinner towards the cervix. The fibres of the enamel are perpendicular to the surface of the teeth, on which they seem, as it were, planted. This gives them a velvety appearance, when examined by the microscope. The enamel has no blood-vessels, and is not renewed when removed. It is formed of phosphate of lime, and a very small portion of animal matter.

ENANTHE'MA, same etymon as the next. A name recently given to certain eruptions of the mucous membrane, as exanthema is to certain eruptions of the skin.

ENANTHESIS, from εν, 'in,' and ανθωω, 'I flourish.' Rash exanthemata. Eruption of red, level or nearly level patches, variously figured: irregularly diffused: often confluent: and terminating in cuticular exfoliations. A genus in the order Exanthematica, class Hæmatica of Cullen, and including scarlet fever, measles, &c.

ENANTHESIS ROSALIA, Scarlatina—e. Urticaria, Urticaria.

ENANTIOPATHIC, Palliative.

ENARTHRO'SIS, Inarticulatio, Ball and Socket-joint, from εν, 'in,' and ανθρωωσις, 'an articulation.' A kind of diarthrodial articulation, in which the head of a bone is received into the cavity of another, and can be moved in all directions. The joint of the os femoris with the os innominatum, is one of this character.

ENAU'SMA, Fomites.

ENCANTHIS, from εν, 'in,' and κανθωωσις, 'the angle of the eye.' A tumour, formed by an increase in size, or a degeneration of the caruncula lachrymalis.

The ENCANTHIS BENIG'NA, or simple excrescence of the caruncula, commonly yields to astringent collyria.

The ENCANTHIS MALIG'NA has often a cancerous character, and requires extirpation before it has attained any considerable size.

ENCARPOS, Pregnant.

ENCASING, Emboîtement.

ENCATALEPSIS, Catalepsy.

ENCATHISMA, Semicupium.

ENCAU'MA, from εν, 'in,' and καιω, 'I burn.' Epicau'ma, Epicau'sis, Encau'sis. A tumour produced by a burn. A Burn. Also, an ulcer of the transparent cornea, occasioning the loss of the humours.—Aëtius, Gorræus.

ENCAUSIS, Burn, Encauma, Moxibustion.

ENCAUSSE, MINERAL WATERS OF. E. is a village in the department of the Haute-Garonne, which possesses several saline, acidulous springs.

ENCAVURE, Argemia.

ENCEINTE, Pregnant.

ENCENS, Juniperus lycia.

ENCEPHALALGIA, Cephalalgia—e. Hydropticæ, Hydrocephalus internus.

ENCEPHALIC, Encephalicus, from εν, 'in,' and κεφαλη, 'the head.' That which is situate in the head. A name given to several parts which relate to the encephalon, as the encephalic membranes, vessels, &c.

ENCEPHALITIS. Same etymon. This term has been used, by some Nosologists, synonymously with Cephalitis and Phrenitis, (q. v.) By others, it has been appropriated to inflammation of the brain, in contradistinction to that of the membranes.

ENCEPHALOC'ELÉ, from εγκεφαλον, 'the brain,' and κυλη, 'a tumour.' Hernia Cerebri, Fungus Cerebri, Hernia of the Brain. This may be a congenital or accidental affection. In the former case, it is dependent upon tardy ossification of the fontanelles or some faulty conformation. In the latter, it is owing to some considerable loss of substance in the parietes of the cranium, produced by fractures, wounds with a cutting instrument, caries, the application of the trephine, &c.

In slight congenital encephalocèle, gentle pressure may be exerted upon the protruded portion. When the disease is of considerable extent, it is fatal. In the accidental encephalocèle, sinular means must be used for confining the tumour, and preserving it from the action of external bodies.

ENCEPH'ALOID, Encephaloïdes, from εγκεφαλον, 'the head,' and ειδος, 'resemblance.' Laennec has given the term Enceph'aloïd or Cerebriform matter to one of the morbid substances, commonly formed by scirrhus or cancerous tumours. It is either encysted, in irregular masses without cysts, or infiltrated into the texture of the diseased organ. This name was given to it in consequence of its resemblance, when fully developed, to the medullary substance of the brain. It is also called Fungus medullaris, F. cancerosus medullaris, Sarco'ma medullare, spongoid inflammation, Fungus cereb'ralis, Cancer cereb'rifor'me, Cancer mollis, Tela accidentalis medullaris.

ENCEPHALOMALACIA, Mollities cerebri.

ENCEPH'ALON, Encephalum, properly Enceph'ilos, εγκεφαλος; from εν, 'in,' and κεφαλη, 'the head.' That which is situate in the head. This name has generally been given to the brain, cerebellum, and mesocephalon. At times, it includes likewise the medulla spinalis, when it is also called the Cerebro-spinal axis.

ENCEPHALOPATHIE CRAPULEUSE, Delirium tremens.

ENCEPHALOSCOPIA, Craniology.

ENCEPHALOSISMUS, Concussion of the brain.

ENCEROSIS, Inceration.

ENCHERAXIS, Scarification.

ENCHEIRE'SIS, Encheiria, from εν, and χειρ, 'the hand.' Galen uses this term as a part of the title to one of his works, which treats of dissection. It means the manual treatment of any subject.

ENCHIFRÈNEMENT, Coryza.

ENCHORIOS; Endemic.

ENCHRISTON, Liment.

ENCHYLOSIS, Extraction.

ENCHYMA, Infusum, Plethora.

ENCHYMO'MA, Enchymosis, from εν and χυω, 'I pour.' By the ancients, this word was used to designate the sudden effusion of blood into the cutaneous vessels which arises from joy, anger, or shame; in the last instance constituting blushing. It differs from ecchymosis in there being, in the latter, extravasation of blood into the cellular texture, and its being produced by an external cause; a contusion, for example.—Hippocrates.

ENCHYSIS, Infusion.

ENCLAVEE, Wedged.

ENCLAVEMENT. See Wedged.

ENCLUME, Incus.

ENCLYDAS'TICOS, intus fluctuans, from εγκλυδαζομαι, 'to float in.' Applied to liquids, e. g. to serum, pus, &c., contained in any cavity.

ENCLYSMA, Clyster.

ENCE'PLIA, from εν, 'in,' and κοιλια, 'the belly.' The abdominal viscera. The entrails, (q. v.)

ENCELIALGIA INFLAMMATORIA, Encelitis.

ENCELI'TIS, Encelitis, Encelialgia inflammation, Inflammatio abdominalis, from εγκοιλια, the abdominal contents, and itis, inflammation. Inflammation of any of the abdominal viscera.

ENCOPE, Diacope, Incision.

ENCRANION, Cerebellum.

ENCRANIS, Cerebellum.

ENCRE, Atramentum.

ENCYESIS, Fecundation, Pregnancy.

ENCYMON, Pregnancy.

ENCYMOSIA, Fecundation, Pregnancy.

ENCYSTED, Cystide obductus. Enclosed in a kyst or cyst; from εν, 'in,' and κυστις, 'bladder.' (F.) Encysté. An epithet given to certain tumours, or solid or fluid collections enclosed in a particular envelope or cyst. They are movable, and often elastic to the touch.

ENCYST'IS. Tumor tunica'tus, T. cysticus, Empy'ma encyst'is, same etymon. Lupia. An encysted tumour.

ENDEICTICOS, Indicant.

ENDEIXIS, Indication.

ENDEMIC, Endem'ical, Regionalis morbus, Endemicus, from εν, 'in,' and δημος, 'the people.' Enchórios, Vernaculus morbus, Endemia. A disease is said to be endemic when it arises from some peculiarity in a situation or locality. Thus, ague is endemic in marshy countries; gôitre at the base of lofty mountains, &c. Some authors use the term in the same sense as epidemic.

We have no accurate knowledge of the emanations or other circumstances, which give occasion to endemic affections. We seem to know that some emanation from marshy lands does produce intermitt; but we are ignorant of the nature of such emanation.

ENDERMIC, Enderm'icus, from εν, 'in,' and δερμα, 'the skin.' An epithet given to the method of treating diseases by placing the therapeutic agent in contact with the skin, especially after the cuticle has been removed. Morphine, strychnine, &c., are often administered in this way.

EN'DESIS, from εν, 'in,' and δεω, 'I bind.' A ligature, bandage, connexion. Hippocrates has so termed the ankle-joint.

ENDIVE, Cichorium endivia—e. Wild, Cichorium intybus.

ENDIVIA, Cichorium endivia

ENDOCARDITIS, from Endocardium, the lining membrane of the heart, and itis, inflammation. Inflammation of the lining membrane of the heart.

In this disease, the heart's action is visibly increased, and very manifest to the touch; the hand is strongly repelled, and, at moments, is sensible of a trembling vibratory motion. Percussion gives a dull sound over a surface of several inches, owing, according to Bouillaud, to the inflammatory turgescence of the heart, and the engorged state of its cavities.

On auscultation, a bruit de soufflet is generally heard, masking one or both sounds of the heart; the ear is sensible of a metallic ringing with each systole of the ventricle. The pulsations are rapid as well as strong, and, with few exceptions, irregular, unequal and intermittent.

The pulse, by the way, does not always indicate the force or number of the heart's contractions.

ENDOCARDIUM, from ενδορ, 'within,' and καρδια, 'the heart.' The membrane that lines the interior of the heart.

ENDOLYMPH, Vitrine auditivæ.

ENDOSIS, Remission.

ENDOSMÔ'SE, Imbibition, (q. v.) from ενδορ, 'within,' and ωσμος, 'impulse.' A term used by Dutrochet, to express the action by which fluids pass through organic membranes.

This is done by the porosity of the tissue, in the same manner as it is effected through inorganic substances as through fissured glass. The rapidity with which it is accomplished, varies according to the nature of the penetrating body, and the penetrability of the tissue.

ENDUIT, (F.) from induire, 'to put upon,' 'to put on.' A coat; a fur. This term is often applied to a layer of greater or less thickness, which covers the surface of certain organs, and particularly the tongue and interior of the mouth. The enduit is designated variously, according to its appearance,—enduit bilieux, jaune, blanc, &c.—a bilious, yellow, white coat or fur, &c. It is at times owing to the evaporation of the watery portions of a secretion; at others, to a morbid condition of the secretion; generally, to both causes combined.

ENDUIT CHOROIDIEN. See Choroid.

ENDURCISSEMENT. Induration—c. du Tissu cellulaire, Induration of the cellular tissue.

ENEHEMA, Tinnitus aurium.

ENECIA CAUMA, Synocha.

EN'EMA, from εισιμι, 'to inject.' An Injection, Clyster, (q. v.) (F.) Clystère, Lavement. A well known form of conveying medicine into the body, under certain morbid circumstances. See Clyster.

ENEMA ANOD'YNUM, Enema Opii; Anodyne Clyster, starch and Opium Clyster. (Gelat. amyli lbss, inet. opii gr<sup>ss</sup> 40 vel 60.) Exhibited in cases of severe diarrhœa or dysentery.

ENEMA COMMUNE; Common Clyster, Domes'tic Clyster. (Water gruel or molasses and water lbss or lbj; add a little oil or lard, and a spoonful of common salt.) Given as a cathartic enema; and, without the common salt, as an emollient.

ENEMA CATHAR'TICUM; Purging Clyster.

(Manua ζῖ, decoct. chamam. comp. ζx, olei oliv. ζj, sulph. magnes. ζss. Ph. D.)

ENEMA FERUIDUM, Fætid Clyster; Mistu'ra asafatidæ pro clysmate, Clysmata tonicum et antispasmodicum seu citans et sedens, (F.) Laxantia antispasmodique. (The last with the addition of ζῖj of the tincture of asafatida. Ph. D.) Given as an antispasmodic and anodyne.

ENEMA NICOTIANÆ; Tobacco Clyster. This generally consists of from half a pint to a pint of the Infusum Tabaci. It is employed in cases of strangulated hernia; but occasionally acts as a fatal poison when given in this way. The smoke of tobacco is sometimes thrown up the rectum to produce the same medicinal effects as the infusion.

ENEMA OPII E. anodynum.

ENEMA TEREBINTHINÆ; Turpentine Clyster.

(Ol. tereb. ζij, gruel lbss, one yolk of egg. Incorporate the turpentine with the yolk, then add the gruel.) To be administered in cases of ascarides. (oxyures.)

ENEPIDERMIC, Enepidermicus, from εἰ, 'in,' ἐπι, 'upon,' and δερμα, 'the skin.' An epithet given to the method of treating diseases, which consists in the application of medicines; as plasters, blisters, &c., to the skin.

ENEREISIS, Compression.

ENERGIA, Action, Force.

ENERGY, Energia, from ενεργεω, 'I act.' Action. Acting power. Also, vigor: as the 'muscular energy,' the 'brain acts with energy.'

ENERVATION, Enervatio, from ε, 'out of,' and nervi, 'strength.' The act of weakening—the state of being weakened. See Debility.

ENFANCE, Infancy.

ENFANT, Infans.

ENFLURE, Swelling—e. des Jambes de des cuisses de la femme accouchée, Phlegmatia dolens.

ENFONCEMENT SCAPHOIDE, Scaphoides fossa.

ENGASTERION, Laboratory.

ENGASTRIMYTHOS, Englotogastor, Gastril'quist, Eur'ycles, Eurycyl'tus, from εἰ, 'in,' and γαστήρ, 'the belly,' and μυθεωμαι, 'I discourse.' A Ventri'loquist. (F.) Ventri'loque. Individuals have been so denominated, who have possessed the art of modifying their natural voice, so that it seemed to come from a greater or less distance, and from different directions. It was formerly believed that such persons spoke from their belly; hence their name. It is an imitative art, and is called Ventri'loquism.

ENGELURE, Chilblain.

ENGHIEN, OR MONTMORENCY, MINERAL WATERS OF. A hydrosulphurous water, four leagues from Paris, near Montmorency, which is possessed of some celebrity.

ENGISO'MA, Engizo'ma, from εγγιζω, 'I approximate.' (F.) Embarrure. A species of fracture of the skull, in which a splinter passes beneath the sound portion of the bone, and compresses the brain.—Galen. Also, a kind of instrument used in fractures of the clavicle.

ENGLISH DISEASE, Rachitis.

ENGLOTTOGASTOR, Engastrimythos.

ENGOMPHOSIS, Gomphosis.

ENGORGEMENT, from εν, 'in,' and gorge,

'the throat.' An obstruction occurring in the vessels of a part, and giving rise to augmentation of volume. A congestion, (q. v.)

ENGOUEMENT, (F.) Obstructio, Iner'tia, from angere, 'to choke.' Accumulation, in a hollow organ, of the matters secreted by it or carried to it. There is said to be Engouement des bronches, when the mucus accumulates there; and Engouement des intestins, when the matters, which ought to pass through them, are detained; as in a case of strangulated hernia. Engouement des poulmons, E. of the lungs, in Pathological Anatomy, signifies that state of the lungs, in which a mixture of air and thin fluid escapes from them when cut into.

ENGOURDISSEMENT, Toipor.

ENGRENURE, Suture.

ENKYSTÉ, Encysted.

ENKYTEMENT, Chatonnement.

ENNEAPHARMACOS, from εννεα, 'nine,' and φαρμακον, 'a medicine.' A medicine, composed of nine simple ingredients. A pessary, so formed.—Galen, Paulus. An Antid'otus Heracleidis, described by Galen, and some plasters by Aëtius and Celsus are, likewise, termed Enneapharmacia.—Gorræus.

ENORMON, ενορμων, from εν, 'in,' and ορμων, 'I rouse,' 'excite.' A word used by Hippocrates in the same sense as vital principle is by modern physiologists.

ENOSIS, Insertion.

ENRHYTHMOS, from εν and ρυθμος, 'number.' Having rhythm. An epithet, applied to the pulse when its pulsations occur with some degree of order. It is opposed to Aryth'mos. It differs from Eurhythmos, which signifies 'regular.'

ENROUEMENT, Raucedo.

ENS. A being. Paracelsus meant, by this term, the power exerted by certain beings on our body. He speaks of the Ens Dei, the Ens Astro'rum, the Ens naturale, the Ens virtutis, Ens morbo'rum, Ens de potentibus spiritibus, &c. These absurd denominations suggested to some of the ancient Chymists a name for certain chemical preparations. The muriate of ammonia and iron was called Ens martis; the muriate of ammonia and copper, Ens veneris; and Ens primum was, with the Alchemists, the name of a tincture, which they considered possessed of the power of transmitting metals.

ENS MARTIS, Ferrum ammoniatum—e. Veneris Boylei, Ferrum ammoniatum.

ENSIFORM, Ensiformis, from ensis, 'a sword,' and forma, 'form.' Sword-like.

The ENSIFORM APOPH'YSES or PROC'ESSES, are the lesser alæ of the sphenoid bone.

The ENSIFORM APPEN'DIX or CAR'TILAGE is the xiphoid appendix of the sternum, &c. See Xiphoid.

ENSIFORMIS, Xiphoid.

ENSI-STERNAL. Relating to the ensiform process of the sternum. Bèclard gave this name to the last osseous portion of the sternum. He also called it l'os ultimi-sternal. See Ultimo-sternal.

ENSOMATOSIS, Incorporation.

ENSTALAX'IS, Instillatio, Instillation, (q. v.) The act of pouring by drops.

ENTABLEMENT, Depression.

ENTAILLE (F.), from εν, 'in,' and tailer,

'to cut.' Excisio, Ectopē, Ectomē. A deep wound, made by a sharp instrument obliquely. Entailles and Taillades are, also, used to designate deep sacrifices, made for the purpose of producing a speedy dégorgement of any tumefied part; such, e. g., as are made in the tongue in certain cases of glossitis.

ENTASIA, Tonic spasm—e. Articularis, Contractura—e. Loxia, Torticollis—e. Priapismus, Priapismus—e. Systemma, Cramp—e. Tetanus, Tetanus—e. Tetanus anticus, Emprosthotonos—e. Trismus, Trismus.

ENTATICOS, Intensivus, from εντεινω, 'I make tense.' A medicine, which excites the venereal appetite.

ENTELIPATHIA, Nymphomania.

ENTENDEMENT, Intellect.

ENTERADENES, from εντερον, 'an intestine,' and αδην, 'a gland.' The mucous glands of the intestines. See Peyeri Glandulæ.

ENTERADENOGRAPHY, Enteradenographia, from εντερον, 'intestine,' αδην, 'gland,' and γραφη, 'a description.' A description of the intestinal glands.

ENTERADENOLOGY, from εντερον, 'intestine,' αδην, 'gland,' and λογος, 'a treatise.' That part of Anatomy, which treats of the intestinal glands.

ENTERALGIA, from εντερον, 'intestine,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the intestines. Colic (q. v.)

ENTERALGIA ACUTA, Enteritis—e. Inflammatoria, Enteritis.

ENTERANGIEMPHRAXIS, from εντερον, 'intestine,' αγχω, 'I strangle,' and εμφρασσω, 'I obstruct.' Obstruction of the intestines by strangulation or otherwise.—Ploucquet.

ENTERELE'SIA. Pain, caused by invagination or strangulation of the intestines.—Albert.

ENTEREMPHRAXIS, Infractus Intestinorum; from εντερον, 'intestine,' and εμφραξις, 'obstruction.' Accumulation of feces in the intestines.

ENTERENCHYTA, from εντερον, 'an intestine,' εν, 'in,' and χεω, 'I pour.' Any surgical instrument for administering injections.—Sculetus.

ENTERICA, from εντερον, 'an intestine.' Diseases affecting the alimentary canal. Order I, Class I, (Caliaca.) of Good.

ENTÉRITE FOLLICULEUSE. See Typhus.

ENTERITIS, from εντερον, 'an intestine.' Inflammation of the intestines. Empresma Enteritis, Intestino'rum inflammatio, Chordapsus, Causa Enteritis, Enterophlogia, Colica acuta, Enteralgia acuta, E. inflammatoria, Febris intestino'rum, F. iliaca inflammatoria, Enteropy'ia. The essential symptoms of this disease are:—violent abdominal pain increased on pressure; with vomiting and inflammatory fever.

Enteritis may affect both the peritoneal and the mucous coat of the intestines; and, in violent cases, all the coats may be implicated. The structure of the mucous and peritoneal coats is different, so are their functions in health and disease. The inflammation of the serous coat, Sero-enteritis, resembles that of the cellular membrane: the inflammation of the mucous coat that of the skin. The former is usually, therefore, of a more active character. Inflammation of the mucous coat, Esoenteritis, Endoenteritis, is generally attended with diarrhœa, and its pathology is identical with that of Dysentery, which see. Inflammation of the peritoneal coat is, on the other hand, generally attended with constipation.

Enteritis of the peritoneal coat, for such is the meaning of the word in the abstract, requires the most active treatment. Copious bleeding followed up by a large dose of opium, and if the symptoms are not decidedly ameliorated, repeating the bleeding and opium, warm fomentations, and blisters are the chief agents to be relied upon. Purgatives ought not to be exhibited until the inflammation and spasm are abated by the use of the bleeding and opium. When the physician is called early, this plan will usually succeed. Sometimes, Enteritis passes into a chronic state, requiring much careful management.

Broussais considers inflammation of the mucous coat of the stomach and intestines as the proximate cause of the phenomena of fever.

ENTERITIS EPIPLOITIS, Epiploitis—e. Mesenterica, Mesenteritis.

ENTEROCE'LE, Hernia intestinalis, from εντερον, 'an intestine,' and κηλη, 'a hernia,' 'tumour.' Abdominal herniæ are so called, which contain only a portion of the intestine.

ENTEROCYSTOCE'LE, from εντερον, 'an intestine,' κυστις, 'a bladder,' and κηλη, 'a tumour.' Hernia formed by the bladder and a portion of intestine.

ENTERO-EPILOCE'LE, from εντερον, 'intestine,' επιπλοον, 'the omentum,' and κηλη, 'tumour.' Hernia, formed by intestine and omentum.

ENTERO-EPILOM'PHALUS, from εντερον, 'intestine,' επιπλοον, 'the omentum,' and ομφαλος, 'the umbilicus.' Umbilical hernia, containing intestine and omentum. Almost all umbilical herniæ are of this kind.

ENTEROGRAPHY, Enterographia, from εντερον, 'intestine,' and γραφη, 'description.' The part of anatomy, which describes the intestines.

ENTERO-HYDROCE'LE, from εντερον, 'intestine,' υδωρ, 'water,' and κηλη, 'tumour.' Intestinal hernia complicated with hydrocele.

ENTERO-HYDROM'PHALUS, from εντερον, 'intestine,' υδωρ, 'water,' and ομφαλος, 'the navel.' Umbilical hernia, in which the sac contains, along with a portion of intestine, a quantity of serum.

ENTERO-ISCHIOCE'LE, from εντερον, 'intestine,' ισχιον, 'ischium,' and κηλη, 'tumour.' Ischialic hernia, formed of intestine.

ENTEROLITHUS, Calculi of the stomach and intestines—e. Bezoardus, Bezoar—e. Scybalum, Scybala.

ENTEROLOGY, Enterologia, from εντερον, 'intestine,' and λογος, 'a discourse.' The part of anatomy, which treats of the intestines.

ENTERO-MEROCE'LE, from εντερον, 'intestine,' μηρος, 'the thigh,' and κηλη, 'tumour.' Crural hernia, formed of intestine.

ENTERO-MESENTERIC, Febris entero-mesenterica. Messrs. Petit and Serres have given this name to a species of adynamic fever or typhus, in which the intestines are ulcerated, with enlargement of the corresponding mesenteric glands.

ENTEROMPHALUS, from εντερον, 'intestine,' and ομφαλος, 'umbilicus.' Umbilical hernia, formed of intestine.

ENTERON, Intestine.

ENTEROPATHY, Enteropathia; from εντερον, 'intestine,' and παθος, 'disease.' Disease of the intestines in general.

ENTEROPERISTOLĒ, from εντερον, 'intestine,' and περιστέλλω, 'I conceal,' 'I envelop.' Constriction or obstruction of the intestines from a cause, which acts either within the abdomen or without it, as in strangulated hernia.

ENTEROPHLOGIA, Enteritis.

ENTEROPYRIA, Enteritis.

ENTERORAPHIA or ENTERORAPHĒ, from εντερον, 'intestine,' and ραφη, 'a suture.' Suture of the intestines, for the relief of injuries done to them.

ENTERORRHAGIA SIMPLEX, Hæmatochezia.

ENTEROSARCOCELE, from εντερον, 'intestine,' σαρξ, 'flesh,' and κίλη, 'a tumour.' Intestinal hernia, complicated with fleshy excrescence, or rather sarcocele.

ENTEROSCHEOCELE, from εντερον, 'an intestine,' σχρον, 'the scrotum,' and κίλη, 'tumour.' Scrotal hernia consisting of intestine.

ENTEROSES, from εντερον, 'an intestine.'

A class of diseases, comprehending all those that are seated in the intestines.—Alibert.

ENTEROTOME, Enterotomus, from εντερον, 'intestine,' and τεμνω, 'I cut.' A name given by J. Cloquet to an instrument for promptly opening the intestinal canal through its whole extent. It consists of a pair of scissors, one blade of which is much longer than the other and rounded at its extremity. This is passed into the intestine.

ENTEROTOMIA, same etymon. In anatomy, it signifies dissection of the intestines. In surgery, it means an operation, little used, which consists in opening the intestine, in order to evacuate the fecal matters accumulated in it, e. g. in certain cases of hernia, accompanied with contraction of the intestinal canal; in operations for an artificial anus, performed on the new-born, where the rectum is imperforate or not existing, &c.

ENTEROZOA, Worms

ENTHELMINTHES, Worms.

ENTH'LASIS, Epsilon, from ελαω, 'I break.' A fracture of the cranium with comminution, in which the bone is depressed or has lost its level.

ENTHLASIS CRANII, Effractura cranii.

ENTONIA, Tension, Tonic spasm.

ENTONNOIR, Calix, Infundibulum—c. du Ventricule Moyen du Cerveau, Infundibulum of the Brain.

ENTORSE, Sprain.

ENTOZAIRES, Worms.

ENTOZOA, Worms.

ENTOZARIA, Worms.

ENTRAILLES, Entrails.

EN'TRAILS, Splanchna, Encalia, Viscera, from enteralia, a word of bad Latin, coming from εντερον, 'intestine.' It is used for the viscera enclosed in the splanchnic cavities, and especially for those in the abdomen. Bowels, Guts. (F.) Entrailles, Viscères.

ENTRICHOMA, from εν, in, and τριχωμα, 'hair.' The tarsal cartilage and the edge of the eyelids, in which the cilia are implanted.

ENTROPION, Inversio palpebrarum, Capilli'tium, Trichiasis, Introsusceptio entropium, Blepharosis, Blepharoptosis entropium, Trichia, Trichosis, from εν, 'in,' and τροπω, 'I turn.' A name given to the inversion or turning inwards of the eyelids, so that the eyelashes are directed towards the globe of the eye; irritate and inflame it, and give rise to the affection called Trichiasis.

The contact of the hair with the surface of the eye occasions considerable irritation of the conjunctiva, which is soon followed by chemosis, ulceration of the eye and other symptoms, such as fever, watchfulness, &c.

If the disease be entropion, as above defined, that is, dependent upon the inversion of the eyelids, it must be remedied,—either by dispersing the œdema or swelling of the eyelids, or by cutting out a portion of the skin. When the disease is dependent upon a vicious direction of the cilia, they must be plucked out and the bulbs cauterised.

ENTYPOSIS. See Glene.

ENUCLEATION, Enucleatio, from enucleare, 'to take out a kernel.' This term has been proposed for the operation of removing tumours, &c., without cutting into them.—Percy.

The word is used, in Pharmacy, for the operation of shelling or removing the kernels of the almond or of any nut.

ENULA CAMPANA, Inula Helenium.

ENULON, from εν, 'in,' and ουλον, 'the gum.' The inner part of the gums. The external part was called ουλον, and that between the teeth ακρω—Pollux.

ENURESIS, from ενουρεω, 'I void the urine in bed.' Puru'ria incontinentis, Incontinentia urinæ, Excretio Urinæ involuntaria, Mictio involuntaria, M. inopportuna, Urcra'sia, Urosia, Perirrhæa, Strangu'ria (Galien), Hyperuresis, Dianures, Involuntary discharge of the urine, Incontinence of urine. This affection is most common in advanced life. It may depend on too great irritability of the bladder, or on distention, or injury of the fibres about its neck, paralysis of the organ, the presence of an irregularly shaped calculus, impacted in the urethra near its commencement; rupture of the bladder and urethra; renal disease; or on pressure exerted on the bladder by the distended womb or by some tumour. It often occurs after difficult labour, but generally yields, in the course of a week or ten days; the catheter being introduced twice a day in the mean time.

The treatment must of course vary according to the cause; and when the affection, on which it is dependent, cannot be removed, the discharge of urine may be prevented by exerting a degree of compression on the urethra, by means of appropriate instruments; or a urinal may be employed to receive the urine as it passes off.

ENVIE, Malacia, Nævus—c. de vomir, Nausea.

ENYPNION, Soinnium.

ENYSTRON, Abomasus.

EP, EPH, EPI, επ, εφ, επι, 'upon, above;' in composition, generally means, 'augmentation, addition, increase, reciprocal action, repetition.'

Hence :
EPACMAS'TICOS, from επι and ακμαστω, 'I increase.' An epithet applied to fevers, Febres epacmas'tica, whose symptoms go on augmenting in violence, from the commencement to the termination. Such fevers are, also, called Epanadidontes.

EPAGOGIUM, Prepuce.

EPANADIPLOSIS, Anadiplosis.

EPANALEPSIS, Anadiplosis.

EPANASTASIS, Pustule.

EPANCHEMENT, Effusion.

EPANETUS HECTICA, Hectic fever.

EPAPHÆRESIS, from επαφαιρειν, 'I take away.' Repetita sublatio, vel evacuatio. A repeated abstraction or evacuation. It was formerly used synonymously with repeated blood-letting; Phlebotomia iterata.—Galen.

EPAPHRISMOS, Despumation.

EPARMA, Tumour.

EPARSIS, Tumour.

ÉPAULE, Humerus.

EPENCRANIS, Cerebellum.

ÉPERON, Hippocampus minor—c. des Artères, Spur.

ÉPERVIER, Accipiter.

ÉPERVIÈRE DES MURAILLES, Hieracium murorum.

EPHEBÆ'ON, from επι, 'upon,' and βη, 'pubes.' The parts of generation: also, the region of the pubes, as well as the hair upon the pubes. It was likewise a part of the ancient gymnasium in which the rhetoricians, philosophers, &c., disputed.

EPHEBEUM, Mons veneris.

EPHEBOSYNE, Puberty.

EPHEBOTES, Puberty.

EPHE'BIA, Ephēbia, Pubertas. Same etymon. The age of puberty, (q. v.)

EPHE'BUS. One who has attained the age of puberty.

EPHEDRANA, Nates.

EPHEL' CIS, from επι, 'upon,' and ἔλκος, 'an ulcer.' The crust of an ulcer.

ÉPHELIDE SCORBUTIQUE, Chloasma.

EPHELIDES, from επι, 'upon,' and ἥλιος, 'the sun.' Epichro'sis, Mac'ula solaris, Ephelis lentig'ula, Lentig'ula, Lentig'o, Ephelis Lentigo, Ephelis à sole, Nigredo à solē, Spilo'sis ephelis, Æstates, Effl'a, Freckles, Sunburn. (F.) Taches de roussure, Hale. This term includes, not only the yellow lentiginēs, which appear on persons of fair skin, and the larger brown patches, which also arise from exposure to the direct rays of the sun; but also those large dusky patches which are very similar in appearance but occur on other parts of the surface, that are constantly covered. See Chloasma. They do not extend farther than the skin. Many cosmetics have been recommended for their removal. Simple spirituous lotions or weak mineral acids, applied a few times in the day, are as effectual as any other means.

EPHELIS LENTIGO, Ephelides—e. à Sole, Ephelides.

EPHEMERA, Di'aria, from επι, 'during,' and ἡμερα, 'a day.' That which continues a day. This epithet is given to diseases, and particularly to fevers, which last only a day. Febris di'aria, Ephemeropy'ra, Febris simplex, F. Ephem'era. The term prolonged ephem'era is sometimes used for fevers, which cease after two or three days' duration.

EPHEMERA ANGLICA PESTILENS, Sudor anglicus—e. Maligna, Sudor anglicus—e. Sudatoria, Sudor anglicus.

EPHEMEROPYRA, Ephemera.

EPHEMERUS, Quotidian.

EPHIALTES HYPOCHONDRIACA, Incubus vigilantium—e. Nocturnus, Incubus—e. Vigilantium, Incubus vigilantium.

EPHIDRO'SIS, from επι, 'upon,' and ἰδρως, 'I sweat.' A copious sweat. Ephidrosis profusa, E. spontanea, E. idiopath'ica sudor, Hydrope'de'sis, Exsudatio, Exudatio, Hyper'ephidrosis, Sudatio, (F.) Flux de Sueur. An excessive sweating, inducing debility and emaciation. A colligative sweat. Such copious perspirations are generally owing to debility of the exhalants, and require the use of tonics, especially of the mineral acids, opium, &c.

EPHIDROSIS, Desudatio—e. Cruentum, Sudor cruentus.

EPHIPPIUM, Pituitaria fossa, Sella turcica.

EPHODOS, from επι, 'upon,' and ὁδος, 'a way,' 'a road or avenue to a place.' Hippocrates uses this word in three senses: 1. For the vessels or canals, which give passage to the excrements of the body. 2. For a periodical attack or accession of fever; and 3. For the approach of similar or dissimilar things which may be useful or hurtful to the body.—Castelli.

ÉPI, Spica.

EPIALOS, Epialos, A name, given by the ancients to fever, when the hot stage was mingled with irregular chills.

EPIALTES, Incubus.

EPIAN, Frambæsia.

EPIBLEMA, Catablema.

EPIBOLE, Incubus.

EPICANTHIS, Canthus.

EPICANTHUS, from επι, 'upon,' and καιθος, 'the angle of the eye.' A defect of formation, in which a fold of skin passes from the root of the nose over the inner canthus of the eye.

EPICARPIUM, Pericarpium, from επι, 'upon,' and καρπος, 'the wrist.' Applications made to the wrist or to the region of the pulse were so called. These were plasters, ointments, febrifuge cataplasms, &c.

EPICAUMA, Encauma.

EPICAUSIS, Encauma.

EPICERASTICA, Emollients.

EPICHOLOS, Biliuus.

EPICHORION, Decidua.

EPICHRISIS, Inunctio.

EPICHRO'SIS, Spil'sis, from επι, and χρωμα, 'colour.' Simple discoloration of the surface.—Good. Ephelides, (q. v.)

EPICHYSIS, Affusio.

EPICEMASIS, from επιζοιμασσαι, 'I sleep.' Decubitus ad dormien'dum, et Dormitio. The position of sleeping, as well as sleeping itself.

EPICOLIC, from επι, 'upon,' and κολος, 'the colon.' The epicolic regions, regio'nes epicol' teæ, are those parts of the abdomen, which correspond to the colon.

EPICOLLESIS, Agglutination.

EPICONDYLE, Epicondylus; from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\kappa\omicron\upsilon\delta\acute{\alpha}\lambda\omicron\varsigma$ , 'a condyle.' A name given, by Chaussier, to an eminence at the outer part of the inferior extremity of the os humeri; so called, because it is seated above the condyle. The epicondyle gives attachment to the outer lateral ligament of the elbow joint, and to a very strong tendon to which several of the muscles of the posterior part of the forearm are attached.

EPICONDYLO-CUBITALIS, see Anconeus—e. Radial, Supinator radii brevis—e. Sus-metacarpian, See Radialis—e. Sus-phalangættien commun, Extensor digitorum communis—e. Sus-phalangættien du petit doigt, Extensor proprius minimi digiti.

EPICOPHOSIS, Cophosis.

EPICRANIUM, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\chi\rho\alpha\tau\iota\omicron\nu\omicron\rho$ , 'the cranium.' A name given to different parts seated on the cranium. The skin, aponeurosis between the occipital and frontal muscles, and the whole of the scalp have been so called. Portal includes under this name the occipitofrontalis muscle, pyramidalis nasi, and superior and anterior auricular muscles.

EPICRANIUS, Occipito-frontalis.

EPICRASIS, Contempertio, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota\kappa\rho\alpha\tau\eta\nu\iota$ , 'I temper.' A term used by the Humourists for an amelioration of the humours. They called Cure by Epiërasis, per epiërasin, a mode of treatment by imagined alternatives, which they supposed to be possessed of the power of gradually correcting the vitiated humours.

EPICROUSIS, Percussion.

EPICYEMA, Fœtus, Superfœtation.

EPICYESIS, Superfœtation.

EPICYSTOTOMIA. See Lithotomy.

EPIDEISIS, Deligation.

EPIDEMY, Epidem'ic, Epidem'ia, Epidem'ios, Epidem'os, Pancæ'nos, Pandem'ios, Morb'us publicus, Morb'us popularis, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\delta\eta\mu\omicron\varsigma$ , 'the people.' A disease, which attacks, at the same time, a number of individuals, and which is depending upon some particular constitutio aeris, or condition of the atmosphere, with which we are utterly ignorant. It differs from endemic, the latter being owing to locality; but it is obvious, that should a particular epidemic constitution of the air exist along with a favourable endemic condition, these combined influences may act in the causation of several of those serious and fatal complaints, which at times visit a district and are never afterwards met with, or at least not until after the lapse of a considerable period.

EPIDENDRUM VANILLA. See Vanilla.

EPIDERMIS, Epider'rhis, Hypodermis or Hypodermis, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\delta\epsilon\rho\mu\alpha\varsigma$ , 'the skin.' This word, with some, means the nymphæ; with others, the clitoris; with others, again, the prepuce of the clitoris.

EPIDERMIS, Epidermion, Cutic'ula, C. ext'ima, C. extr'ima, Cutis ext'ima, C. summa, C. ultima, Pellis summa, Pell'ic'ula summa, P. sup'erior, Lan'tina prima cutis, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\delta\epsilon\rho\mu\alpha\varsigma$ , 'the true skin.' Scarf-skin, cuticle. (F.) Surpeau, Cuticule. A transparent, dry, thin membrane; devoid of nerves and vessels, which covers all the surface of the body, except the parts that correspond to the nails. It appears to consist of minute scales, placed one above the other. Chaussier considers it to be formed and reproduced by an excretory action of the true skin; to act like a dry varnish, which prevents the immediate contact of bodies with the nervous papille, and consequently to deaden tactile impressions, which, without its intervention, might be painful. The Epider'mic, Epider'meous, or Epider'moid (as Bichat called it) System is a portion of general anatomy and comprises three parts. 1. External Epidermis. 2. Epidermis spread over the mucous membranes. 3. The Nails and Hair.

EPIDERMIS LINGUÆ. See Tongue.

EPIDERRIIS, Epideris.

EPIDESIS, see Bandage—e. Hæmostasia, Ligature.

EPIDESMOS, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\delta\epsilon\omega$ , 'I bind.' A Fascia, (q. v.) bandage, (q. v.) or ligature, by which dressings are secured.—Hippocr.

EPIDIDYMIIS, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\delta\iota\delta\upsilon\mu\omicron\varsigma$ , 'a testicle.' Epididymus, Paras'tata, Testic'ulus accessorius, Caput testis, Corpus varicosum seu varicifor'me testis, Corps variqueux ou variciforme, Supergeminalis: that which is placed upon the testicle. A small, oblong, vermiform, grayish body lying along the superior margin of the testicle. The Epididymis is a canal, formed by the union of all the seminiferous vessels, folded several times upon themselves, after having traversed the Corpus Highmorianum. Its lower portion or tail, Cauda vel globus minor, is curved upwards, and is continuous with the vas deferens; the opposite extremity is called the head, globus major. The length of this canal, folded as it is upon itself and describing numerous curvatures, is, according to Monro, 32 feet.

EPIDIDYMITIS, BLENNORHAGIC, Hernia humoralis.

EPID'OSIS, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\delta\iota\delta\omega\iota$ , 'to give.' Augmentation, increase. A word applied to the natural increase of the body or to the increase of a disease.

EPID'ROMĒ, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota\delta\omicron\upsilon\epsilon\omega$ , 'I run upon.' An afflux or congestion of humours.—Galen.

EPIGASTRAL'GIA, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota\gamma\alpha\sigma\tau\eta\rho\iota\omicron\nu$ , 'the epigastrium,' and  $\alpha\lambda\gamma\omicron\varsigma$ , 'pain.' Pain at the epigastrium.

EPIGASTRIC, Epigas'tricus, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\gamma\alpha\sigma\tau\eta\rho$ , 'the stomach.' This name has been given to several parts.

The EPIGASTRIC REGION, Regio epigas'trica, R. cardiaca, R. stomachica, R. stomæchalis, is the superior region of the abdomen, comprised between the false ribs on each side, and extending from the lower surface of the diaphragm to two fingers' breadth above the umbilicus. It is divided into three parts, one middle, the epigas'trium,—and two lateral, the hypochondria.

EPIGASTRIC ARTERY, Art'ria epigas'trica, A. sus-pubienne, (Ch.) It arises from the external iliac, on a level with the crural arch; sometimes, by a trunk proper to it, at others by a trunk common to it and the Obturator artery. It ascends upwards and inwards, behind the spermatic cord, follows the outer edge of the rectus abdominis muscle, and anastomoses, towards the umbilicus, with the internal mammary. The epigastric artery anastomoses, also, with the obturator, spermatic, lumbar, and intercostal vessels.

The epigastric vein follows nearly the same course.

EPIGASTRIUM. Same etymon. The belly, the epigastric region.

EPIGASTROCELE, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,'  $\gammaαστρογασ$ , 'the stomach,' and  $\kappa\iota\lambda\eta$ , 'a tumour.' Hernia, formed by the stomach, Gastrocele. This name has been given more especially to hernias, which occur towards the upper part of the linea alba or in the epigastric region, whether formed or not by the stomach.

EPIGENEMA, Epigenesis.

EPIGENESIS, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\gammaενεσις$ , 'generation.' A theory of conception according to which the new being is created entirely anew; and receives at once from each parent the materials necessary for its formation.

Epigenesis as well as Epigenema, is, also, applied to any symptom occurring during a disease, without changing its nature. An accessory symptom. Epiginomenos, Supcrveniens, has a similar acceptation.

EPIGINOMENOS, Epigenesis.

EPIGLOTTIC, Epiglotticus, same etymon. Relating to the epiglottis.

EPIGLOTTIC GLAND, Priglot'is, Caro glandulosa. A collection of small, glandular granula, situate in the adipose, cellular texture at the base of the anterior surface of the epiglottis, in a triangular space, bounded anteriorly by the thyro-hyoid membrane and thyroid cartilage. It pours out an unctuous and mucous fluid, which lubricates the epiglottis, keeps it supple and movable, and prevents the larynx from being irritated by the constant passage of the air, in the act of respiration.

EPIGLOTTITIS, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\lambda\omega\tauτις$ , 'the glottis.' Epiglottic cartilage, Lig'ula. A fibro-cartilage, situate at the upper part of the larynx, behind the base of the tongue. Its form is oval; texture elastic; thickness greater below than above, and greater in the middle than at the sides. By its smaller extremity, which is the lower, it is attached to the thyroid cartilage; its two surfaces are covered by the mucous membrane of the pharynx and larynx. The special use of the epiglottis would seem to be to cover the glottis accurately at the moment of deglutition, and, thus, to assist in opposing the passage of alimentary substances into the air tubes.

EPIGLOTTITIS, Ang'ina epiglottidea. Inflammation of the epiglottis.

EPIGLOTTUM. An instrument, mentioned by Paracelsus, for raising the eyelids. It resembled the epiglottis in shape.

EPIGLOTTIS, from  $\epsilon\pi\iota$ , 'upon,' and  $\lambda\omega\upsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$ , 'the buttocks.' The superior region of the nates.—Gorræus.

EPIGONATIS, Patella.

EPIGONION, Fœtus.

EPIGONON, Superfœtation.

EPIGOUNIS, Patella.

EPIPARATORIUM, Depilatory.

EPILEMPISIS, Epilepsy.

EPILENTIA, Epilepsy.

EPILEPSIA ALGETICA, see Algos—c. Uterina, Lorind matricis—e. Nocturna, Incubus.

EPILEPSY,  $\epsilon\pi\eta\nu\omicron\sigma\sigma$ ,  $\alpha\epsilon\lambda\eta\gamma\alpha\iota\alpha$   $\nu\omicron\sigma\sigma\sigma$ , Epilep'sia, Epilep'sis, Epilemp'sis, Epilēnt'ia, Syspa'sia Epilep'sia, Catalēnt'ia, Morbus com'utialis, M. cadu'cus. M. Hercules, Heraclēus morbus, M. saeer, M. puer'ilis, Deprehensio, Clonus epilep'sia, Hieran'osus, Prchen'sio, Morbus magnus, M. major, M. interlunius M. diu'nus, M. demō'nus, M. son'ticus, M. Selen'aeus, M. lunaticus, M. mens'al's, M. deif'icus, M. sceles'tus, M. vitriola'tus, M. viridellus, M. Sancti Valenti'ni, Analepsia, Cataposis, The falling sickness, (F.) Mal eadic, Mal divin, Mal Saint-Jean, Mal de Terre, Haut-mal. The word is derived from  $\epsilon\pi\iota\lambda\alpha\mu\beta\alpha\omega$ , 'I seize upon.' It is a disease of the brain, which may either be idiopathic or symptomatic, spontaneous or accidental, and which occurs in paroxysms, with uncertain intervals between. These paroxysms are characterized by loss of sensation and convulsive motions of the muscles. Frequently, the fit attacks suddenly; at other times, it is preceded by indisposition, vertigo, and stupor. At times, before the loss of consciousness occurs, a sensation of a cold vapour is felt, hence called aura epileptica. This appears to rise in some part of the body and proceed towards the head; and as soon as it has reached the brain the patient falls down. The ordinary duration of a fit is from 5 to 20 minutes. Sometimes it goes off in a few seconds; at others, it is protracted for hours. In all cases, there is loss of sensation, sudden falling down, distortion of the eyes and face; countenance of a red, purple or violet colour; grinding of the teeth; foaming at the mouth; convulsions of the limbs; difficult respiration, generally stertorous; and sometimes involuntary discharge of fœces and urine. After the fit, the patient retains not the least recollection of what has passed, but remains, for some time, affected with head-ache, stupor, and lassitude.

The disease is in the brain, and is generally organic; but it may be functional and symptomatic of irritation in other parts, as in the stomach, bowels, &c. The prognosis, as to ultimate recovery, is unfavourable. It does not, however, frequently destroy life, but is apt to lead to mental imbecility. Dissection has not thrown light on its pathology.

In the treatment, the cause must be sought after, and if possible removed. In the paroxysm, but little can be done; but as the tongue is liable to be injured by the teeth, the jaws may be kept open by putting a cork or piece of wood between them. If the fit has been brought on by indigestible food, the stomach must be cleared. It is between the paroxysms that the great effort must be made. Generally, there is considerable irritability and debility about the brain, and hence tonics have been found the best remedies. Of these, perhaps the most powerful, in epilepsy, is the argenti nitras, given regularly and continued for months, if necessary. Preparations, of iron, copper, and zinc have, also, been used, and the general class of vegetable tonics and antispasmodics. Counterirritants may be employed, if necessary, along with this course, as blisters, inoza, &c.

Unfortunately, in many cases, these means are found insufficient, and all that can be done is to palliate, removing carefully all exciting causes; such as the use of spirituous liquors, strong emotions, violent exercise, &c., and regulating the diet.

EPILEPTIC, Epilepticus; same etymon. One attacked with epilepsy. Any thing relating to epilepsy; as an epileptic individual, an epileptic symptom. Some authors, also, speak of epileptic remedies.

EPIMANES, a name given to a maniac when in a paroxysm.

EPIMELE'TAI, a name by which the ancient Persians called the curers of wounds, who followed their armies; from επιμελειμαι, 'I take care of.'

EPIMOR'IOS, 'unequal,' from επι and μοριω, 'I divide.' An epithet applied to the pulse when unequal.—Galen.

EPINARD, Spinacia.—é. Sauvage, Chenopodium bonus Henricus.

ÉPINE, Spine.—é. du Dos, Vertebral column.—é. Gutturale, Nasal spine, inferior and posterior.—é. Sphénoïdale, Sphenoidal spine.—é. Vinette, Oxycanthe Galeni.

EPINÉPH'ELOS, Nubilosus. Presenting a cloud. Applied to the urine.—Hippocr.

ÉPINEUX, Spinous.—é. du Dos, grand, Spinalis Dorsi major, see Interspinales Dorsi et lumborum.—é. du Dos, petit, see Interspinales dorsi et lumborum.

ÉPINGLE, Pin.

EPINOTION, Scapula.

EPIONE, Decidua.

EPINYC'TIDES, from επι, 'upon,' and νύξ, 'the night.' Eruptions, which appear on the skin in the night, and disappear in the day. Pustula livens et noctibus inquit'ans.—Pliny.

EPIPAROXYSMUS. A paroxysm, super-added to an ordinary paroxysm.

EPIPASTON, Catapasma.

EPIPEPHYCOS, Conjunctiva.

EPIPE'CHU, επιπυχυ, from επι, 'upon,' and πηχυς, 'the elbow.' The upper part of the elbow.—Gorræus.

EPIPHANI'A, from επι, 'upon,' and φαινω, 'I exhibit.' The external appearance of the body.—Castelli.

EPIPHENOM'ENON, Post apparens; same etymon. Any kind of adventitious symptom, which occurs during the progress of an affection; and which is not as intimately connected with the existence of the disease as the symptoms—properly so called.

EPIPH'LEBOS, from επι, 'upon,' and φλεψς, 'a vein.' An epithet given to those whose veins are very apparent.—Hippocr., Aretæus.

EPIPHLOGIS'MA, from επι, 'upon,' and φλογιζω, 'I inflame.' Violent inflammation or burning heat in any part.—Hippocr.

EPIPH'ORA, Dacryno'ma, Lachryma'tio, Delachryma'tio, Ilachryma'tio, Oculus lachrymans, from επιφερω, 'I carry to.' Weeping, (F.) Larmoïement. The watery eye;—an involuntary and constant flow of tears upon the cheek. It is almost always symptomatic of some disease of the lachrymal passages, and occurs when the tears cannot pass into the ductus ad nasum. Occasionally, it is owing to the tears being secreted in too great quantity; as in certain cases of ophthalmia. The treatment must of course be directed to the removal of the cause.

EPIPHORA, Ophthalmia—e. Ptyalismus, Salivation.

EPIPHYMATA, Cutaneous diseases.

EPIPH'YSIS, Additamentum, (q. v.) from επι, 'upon,' and φω, 'I arise.' Any portion of a bone, separated from the body of the bone by a cartilage, which becomes converted into bone by age. The epiphysis of the fœtus becomes the apophysis of the adult.

EPIPHYSIS CRURIS LONGIORIS INCUDIS, Os orbiculare.

EPIPLASM, from επι, 'upon,' and πλάσσω, 'I spread.' A cataplasm. Galen uses it especially for an application of wheaten flour, boiled in hydræcum, and applied to wounds.

EPIPLEGIA, Hemiplegia.

EPIPLERO'SIS, from επι, 'augmentative,' and πληρωσις, 'repletion.' Excessive repletion, distention.

EPIPLOCE'LE, from επιπλοον, 'omentum,' and κηλη, 'tumour.' Epiplotic hernia, Zirbd'lis hernia, Omental hernia, (F.) Hernie de l'épiploon. Omental hernia is recognised—but at times with difficulty—by a soft, unequal, pasty tumour, in which no gurgling sound is heard, on pressing or reducing it. It is less dangerous than hernia of the intestines.

EPIPLO-ENTEROCE'LE, from επιπλοον, 'the omentum,' ετερον, 'intestine,' and κηλη, 'tumour.' Hernia, formed by the epiploon and a portion of the intestines. It is more commonly called Entero-epiplocele.

EPIP'LOIC, Epiploticus. Relating to the epiploon.

EPIPLOIC ARTERIES; Arteriæ Epiploticæ. The arterial branches, which are distributed to the epiploon, and which are given off by the gastro-epiploicæ.

EPIPLOIC APPEN'DAGES; Appendic'ula epiploticæ, A. pinguedino'sæ, Fimb'ria carno'sæ coli. Prolongations of the peritoneum beyond the surface of the large intestine, which are analogous, in texture and arrangement, to the epiploon.

EPIPLO-ISCHIOCE'LE, from επιπλοον, 'the epiploon,' ισχιοη, 'the ischium,' and κηλη, 'a tumour.' Hernia, formed by the epiploon through the ischiatic notch.

EPIPLOI'TIS, from επιπλοον, 'the omentum,' and itis, denoting inflammation. Inflammation of the omentum. Omenti'tis, Empresma periton'itis oment'alis, Omenti inflammatio, Enter'itis epipl'oit'is, Oment'is's. A case of partial peritonitis.

EPIPLOMEROCE'LE, from επιπλοον, 'the omentum,' μηρος, 'the thigh,' and κηλη, 'a tumour.' Femoral hernia, formed by the epiploon.

EPIPLOM'PHALON, Epiploom'phalon, Hernia umbilic'alis, from επιπλοον, 'the omentum,' and ομφαλος, 'the navel.' Umbilical hernia, formed by the epiploon.

EPIPLOM'PHRASIS, from επιπλοον, 'the epiploon,' and εμφρασσω, 'I obstruct.' Induration of the epiploon.

EPIPLOOCOMIS'TES, from επιπλοον, 'the epiploon,' and κοιζω, 'I carry.' One who has the omentum morbidly large. Also, one labouring under epiplocele.

EPIPLOON, from επι, 'above,' and πλεω,

'I swim or float.' Omentum, Rete; Retidulum; The Caul; Dertron. A prolongation of the peritoneum, which floats above a portion of the intestines; and is formed of two membranous layers, with vessels and fatty bands distributed through it. Anatomists have described several epiploons.

The GASTRO-HEPATIC EPIPLOON OF LESSER EPIPLOON, OF OMENTUM, Omentum hepato-gastricum or Omentum minus, Membrana macilenti-ior, is a duplicature of the peritoneum, which extends transversely from the right side of the cardia to the corresponding extremity of the fissure of the liver, and downwards from this fissure to the lesser curvature of the stomach, the pylorus and duodenum. Below it, is the foramen or hiatus of WINSLOW; and between its laminae are lodged the biliary and hepatic vessels. It contains but little fat. If air be blown in at the foramen of Winslow, the cavity of the omentum will be rendered perceptible.

The GASTRO-COLIC OF GREAT EPIPLOON OR OMENTUM, Omentum gastro-colicum, Omentum majus, consists of an extensive duplicature, which is free and floating on the folds of the intestines. It is quadrilateral, and longer on the left side than on the right:—its base being fixed, anteriorly, to the great curvature of the stomach; and, posteriorly, to the arch of the colon. It is formed of two laminae, each consisting of two others. In this epiploon a number of vessels are distributed, and there is much fat.

The COLIC EPIPLOON OF OMENTUM, O. colicum, Third Epiploon or Omentum, is a duplicature of the peritoneum, situate along the ascending portion of the colon, as far as its junction with the transverse portion. It is behind the great epiploon; and fills up the angle, formed by the junction of the ascending with the transverse colon. Its two laminae are separated by colic arteries and veins.

The GASTRO-SPLENIC EPIPLOON OF OMENTUM, O. Gastro-splenicum. A reflection of the peritoneum, which passes between the concave surface of the spleen and the stomach, from the cardiac orifice to near its great curvature, and which lodges the vasa brevia and splenic vessels between its laminae.

The uses of the omentum are but little known. The chief one seems to be, to retain the viscera in situ, and to give passage to vessels.

EPILOSARCOMPHALUS, from επιπλοον, 'the epiploon,' σαρξ, 'flesh,' and ομφαλος, 'the navel.' Umbilical hernia, formed of indurated omentum.

EPIPLASCHEOCELE, from επιπλοον, 'the epiploon,' σχισις, 'the scrotum,' and κλινη, 'tumour.' Scrotal hernia, formed by a displacement of the epiploon.

EPIPOROMA, from επιποροον, 'I harden.' A topaceous concretion, which forms in the joints. The callus of fracture.

EPIRRIHOE, from επι, 'upon,' and ρεω, 'I flow.' Afflux or congestion of humours.—Hip-poor.

EPI-SARCIDIUM, Anasarca.

EPI-SCHESIS. Retention; from επισχειν, 'I restrain.' A suppression of excretions.

EPI-SCHIION, Abdomen, Pubes.

EPISEION, Pubis os, Vulva, Labium Pudendi, Tressoria.

EPISEMASIA, from επισημαινω, 'I afford some sign.' Semasia. It has been used synonymously with sign, and also with the invasion of an attack of fever. See Annotatio.

EPISEIOCELE. See Hernia vulvar.

EPISEION, Episeion.

EPISEIONC'US, from επισειον, episeion (modern) 'the labium pudendi,' and ογκος, 'a tumour.' Tumor labio'rum. A swelling or tumour of the labia pudendi.

EPISEIORAPHY, Episiorraph'ia, from επισειον (modern), 'the labia pudendi,' 'the vulva,' and ραφη, 'suture.' An operation practised in cases of prolapsus uteri, which consists in paring the opposing surfaces of the labia pudendi, bringing them together and uniting them by suture, so as to diminish the outlet of the vulva.

EPISPA'DIAS, from επι, 'above,' and σπαιω, 'I divide.' The opposite to Hypospadias. Epispadias consists in a preternatural opening of the urethra, at the upper part of the penis.

EPISPASTICS, Epispastica, Helictica, from επισπαιω, 'I draw out.' An epithet, for every medicinal substance, which, when applied to the skin, excites pain, heat, and more or less redness, followed by separation of the epidermis, which is raised up by effused serum. Cantharides and mustard are epispasties. See Blister and Derivative.

EPISPASTICUM, Blister.

EPISPHÆRIA, from επι, 'upon,' and σφαιρα, 'a sphere.' Some physiologists have applied this expression to the different convolutions and sinuosities, presented by the external surface of the brain.

EPISPHERION, Convolution.

EPISPHAGISMOS, Signature.

EPISTASIS, Insidentia (q. v.) from επι, 'upon,' and σταω, 'I rest.' A substance, which swims at the surface of urine. It is opposed to the hypostasis or sediment. Epistasis has also been employed synonymously with suppression.

EPISTAXIS, from επι, 'upon,' and σταω, 'I flow, drop by drop.' Hæmorrh'gia activa udrium, Epistax'is junio'rum, Epistax'is arterio'sa, Hæmorrh'in'ia, Choanor'ra'gia, Rhinor'ra'gia, Hemorrhage from the pituitary membrane, Bleeding at the nose, (F.) Hæmorrhagie nasale, Saignement du nez. This is one of the most common varieties of hemorrhage; the organization of the Schneiderian membrane being favourable to it, as the blood-vessels are but slightly supported. It does not generally flow from both nostrils, and is very apt to recur.

Puberty is the period, at which it is most common. Its exciting causes are:—any thing that will excite local congestions, such as running, coughing, blowing the nose, &c., provided there is a predisposition to it. A common cause of epistaxis requires but little treatment, especially if in a young person. Light diet and a dose or two of the sulphate of magnesia will be sufficient. In more severe attacks, cold and astringent washes of alum, sulphate of zinc, weak sulphuric acid, or creosote may be used, and the nostrils be plugged anteriorly, but if the bleeding goes on posteriorly, the posterior nares must be plugged likewise:—the patient being kept with the head raised. To prevent the recurrence, strict diet must be inculcated.

EPISTER'NAL, Episternal'lis; from επι, 'upon,' and στερνον, 'the sternum.' An epithet applied to two bones, which form part of the sternum, and are situate upon its superior and lateral part. In the young subject, they are attached to the sternum by a synovial membrane, and a fibrous capsula. They have somewhat the appearance of the pisiform bones, but are of a greater size.

EPISTHOT'ONOS, from επισθεν, 'forwards,' and τεινω, 'I extend.' A spasm of the muscles, drawing the body forwards. The word επισθωτονος is more commonly employed.

EPISTROPHEUS, Axis,

EPISYNANCHE, Episyngang'na. A Greek word, used by a modern writer for spasm of the pharynx, by which deglutition is prevented, and the solid and liquid food driven back towards the mouth or nasal fosse.

EPISYNTHETIC, Episyntheticus, from επισυντιθημι, 'to collect, accumulate.' The name of a medical sect, whose object it was to reconcile the principles of the Methodists with those of the Empirics and Dogmatists. Leonides of Alexandria seems to have been one of the first partisans of this sect; of which we know little.

EPIVASIS, from επι, and τεινω, 'to extend.' The period of violence of a fever, attack or paroxysm. Sometimes it is used in the same sense as epistasis, for 'suppression.'

EPITHELIUM, Epithelis, from επι, 'upon,' and θηλη, 'a nipple.' The thin layer of epidermis, which covers parts deprived of derma, properly so called,—as the nipple, mucous membranes, lips, &c.

EPITHEM, Epithema, from επι, 'upon,' and τιθημι, 'I put.' This term is applied to every topical application, which cannot be classed either under ointments or plasters. Three sorts of epithems have been usually distinguished,—the liquid, dry, and soft, which comprise fomentations, bags filled with dry substances, and cataplasms.

EPITHESIS, from επι, 'upon,' and τιθημι, 'I place.' The rectification of crooked limbs by means of instruments.

EPITROCH'LEA, from επι, 'upon,' and τροχαλια, 'a pulley.' That which is situate above a pulley. Chaussier gives this name to the unequal, round protuberance, situate on the inside of the inferior extremity of the humerus above its articular trochlea. It is the part usually called the inner condyle or lesser condyle of the humerus. From it originate several muscles of the forearm, to which it has given part of their names, according to the system of Chaussier.

EPITROCHLO-CARPI-PALMAIRE, Palmaris longus—e. Cubito-carpium, see Cubital muscles—e. Metacarpium, Palmaris magnus—e. Phalangium commune, Flexor sublimis perforatus—e. Radialis, Pronator radii teres.

EPIZOOTIA, Epizooty, from επι, 'upon,' and ζωον, 'an animal.'—A disease, which reigns amongst animals. It corresponds, in the veterinary art, to Epidemy, in Medicine.

EP'OCHE. Doubt, suspension of judgment—Suspensa sententia. Sometimes employed in the same sense as epischesis or suppression.

EPOCHETUSIS, Derivation.

EPODE, Incantation.

EPO'MIS, Su'perhumera'le, from επι, 'upon,' and ομοος, 'the shoulder.' The upper part of the shoulder.—Hippocr., Galen.

EPOMPHALION, from επι, 'upon,' and ομφαλος, 'the navel.' A medicine, which, when placed upon the umbilicus, moves the belly.—Paulus of Aegina.

E'PONGE, Spongia—e. d' Eglantier, Bedegar.

E'POQUES, Menses.

E'PREINTES, Tenesmus.

EPSEMA, Decoction.

EPSESIS, Decoction, Elixatio.

EPSOM, MINERAL WATERS OF. Epsom is a town in Surrey, about 15 miles from London. The water is a simple saline;—consisting chiefly of sulphate of magnesia, which has consequently received the name of Epsom Salts, though no longer prepared from the Epsom water.

E'PUISEMENT, Exhaustion.

EPULIS, from επι, 'upon,' and ουλον, 'the gum.' Odon'tia excrescens, Sarc'oma epulis, Excresc'ntia gingiv'ca. An excrescence on the gum, sometimes ending in cancer.

EPULOSIS, Cicatrization.

EPULOTICA, Cicatrisan'tia.

EQUAL, E'qualis. An epithet, applied particularly to the pulse and to respiration. The pulse and respiration are equal, when the pulsations and inspirations, which succeed each other, are alike in every respect.

EQUILIB'RIMUM, from aquus, 'equal,' and libra're, 'to weigh.' In Medicine, this word is sometimes used to designate that state of organs, fluids, and forces, which constitutes health.

EQUINIA, from Equinus, 'belonging to a horse,' The Glanders. (F.) Morve. A dangerous contagious disorder, accompanied by a pustular eruption, which arises from inoculation with certain diseased fluids generated in the horse. Two forms are met with,—the E. mitis, contracted from horses affected with grease, and E glandulosa, a dangerous and commonly fatal disease communicated to man, either in the acute or chronic form, from the glandered horse.

The veterinary surgeons make two varieties of the disease in the horse—glanders and farcy glanders, (F.) Morve farcinuse:—the former affecting the pituitary membrane and occasioning a profuse discharge from the nostrils, with pustular eruptions or small tumours, which soon suppurate and ulcerate, being attended by symptoms of malignant fever and by gangrene of various parts:—the latter being the sanie disease, but appearing in the shape of small tumours about the legs, lips, face, neck, &c. of the horse; sometimes very painful, suppurating and degenerating into foul ulcers. They are often seen together.

The mild cases require little treatment, but rest; the more severe generally resist all remedies.

EQUISSETUM ARVENSE, &c., see Hippuris vulgaris—c. Minus, Hippuris vulgaris.

EQUITATION, Equita'tio, Hippe'a, Hippa'sia, Hippeu'sis, from equus, 'a horse.' Horseback exercise. A kind of exercise, advisable in many diseases, although improper in others—in uterine affections, for instance. It has been much recommended in phthisis pulmonalis. It is less fatiguing than walking, and consequently more available in disease. But to prevent disease, where exercise is required, the latter is preferable.

EQUIVOCAL, Æquivocus, from æquus, 'equal,' and vox, 'voice.' Those symptoms are occasionally so denominated, which belong to several diseases. Generation is said to be 'equivocal,' when it is, or seems to be, spontaneous.

EQUUS, Hippos, Nictatio. A perpetual motion of nictation, which some individuals have naturally, and others from disease.

ÉRABLE, Acer saccharinum.

ERADICATION, Eradicatio, from e, 'from,' and radix, 'a root.' The act of rooting out, or completely removing a disease.

ERADICATIVE, Eradicans; same etymon. Any thing possessed of the power of completely rooting out a disease.

ÉRILLEMENT DES PAUPIÈRES, Ectropion.

EREBINTHUS, Acer arietinum.

ERECTILE TISSUE, from erigere, 'to erect,' 'to become erect.' A tissue, whose principal character is:—to be susceptible of dilatation, i. e. of turgescence and increase of size. It is formed of a collection of arteries and veins, intermixed with nervous filaments; which form, by their numerous anastomoses, a spongy substance, whose areolæ communicate with each other. This tissue exists in the corpora cavernosa of the penis and clitoris, at the lower and inner surface of the vagina, in the spongy part of the urethra, the lips, nipples, iris, &c. Sometimes it is developed accidentally, and constitutes a kind of organic transformation.

ERECTIION, Erectio; same etymon. The state of a part, in which, from having been soft, it becomes stiff, hard, and swollen by the accumulation of blood in the areolæ of its tissue.

ERECTOR CLITORIDIS, Ischio-cavernosus—e. Penis, Ischio-cavernosus.

EREMIA, Acinesia.

ERETHISM, Erethismus, Erethisia, from ἐρεθίζω, 'I irritate.' Irritation. Augmentation of the vital phenomena in any organ or tissue. Orgasm. Under this name, Mr. Pearson has described a state of the constitution, produced by mercury acting upon it as a poison. He calls it Mercurial Erethismus. It is characterized by great depression of strength; anxiety about the præcordia; irregular action of the heart; frequent sighing; tremors; small, quick, sometimes intermitting, pulse; occasional vomiting; pale, contracted countenance, and sense of coldness: but the tongue is seldom furred, nor are the vital and natural functions much disturbed. In this state any sudden exertion may prove fatal.

ERETHISMA, Rubefacient.

ERETHISMUS, Irritation—e. Ebriosorum, Delirium tremens—e. Hydrophobia, Hydrophobia—e. Oneirodynia, Incubus—e. Oneirodynia, Paroniria—e. Simplex, Fidgets.

ERÆGMOS, Eruetation

ERÆXIS, Eruetation, Flatulence.

ERGASMA, Myrrha.

ERGASTERION SPIRITUS, Pulmo.

ERGOT, (F.) (pronounced Ergo.) 'A spur.'

The Scal'te cornutum, Clavis scall'ims, Calcar, Scall'is mater, Scall'te luxurians, Ustilago, Clavis silig'inis, Spurred or Horned Rye. The Spur; Ergot, Hornscd. (F.) Seigle ergolée, Blé cornu. The ergot is generally considered to be the result of a disease in rye, occurring most frequently when a hot summer succeeds a rainy spring. Decandolle, however, regards it as a parasitic fungus, and calls it Sclerotium clavus; whilst Leveille esteems it to be a fungus giving a coating to the diseased grain: the medical virtues residing in the coating. This parasitic fungus, he calls Sphacelia segetum. It is found projecting from among the leaves of the spike or ear; and is a long, crooked excrescence, resembling the spur of a cock; pointed at its extremities; of a dark-brown colour externally, and white within.

This substance has been long used in Germany to act on the uterus, as its names Mutterkorn and Gebärpolver (womb-grain, pulvis parturicus) testify. About 30 years ago, it was recommended in this country by Dr. John Stearns, of Saratoga County, New York, for accelerating parturition; and since that period, numerous testimonials have been offered in its favour. Half a drachm of the powder is gently boiled in half a pint of water, and one third part given, every 20 minutes, until proper pains begin. Dr. Hooker, of New Haven, recommends the clear watery infusion; others advise the powder. It is obvious, that in many cases the natural efforts would return in the period which would necessarily elapse in the administration of the ergot, so that several of the cases at least, of reputed efficacy, may not have been dependent upon the assigned agent.

The ergot also possesses—it is affirmed—narcotic virtues, which have rendered it useful in hemorrhage.

The ergot is admitted into the secondary list of the Pharmacopœia of the United States.

Bread, made of spurred rye, has been attended with the effects described under Ergotism.

ERGOT, Hippocampus minor.

ERGOTISM, Ergot or Mildev Mortification.

An affection, produced by the use of the spurred rye. At times, the symptoms are limited to vertigo, spasms, convulsions. See Convulsio Cerealis. Most commonly, there is torpor and numbness of the hands and feet, which waste away; lose sensation and the power of motion, and separate from the body by dry gangrene. This is called—Ergotisme gangréneux, Necrosis ustilaginæ, Gangrène des Solonois, Convulsio Solonicensis, Gangræna ustilaginæ.

ERGOTISME CONVULSIVE, Convulsio cerealis.

ERICA VULGARIS, Calluna vulgaris. Common Heath. (F.) Bruyère vulgaire. This has been regarded as diuretic and diaphoretic.

ERIGERON PHILADELPHICUM, Scabious, Skevisch, Philadelphia Flea-Bean. (F.) Vergrette de Philadelphie. The plant has been used in decoction or infusion for gouty and gravelly complaints, and it is said to operate powerfully as a diuretic and sudorific.

The ERIGERON CANADENSE, Canada Flea-bean, is considered to be allied in properties to the above.

ERIGERUM, Senccio.

ÉRIGNE, Hook.

ÉRINE, Hook.

ERIX, εριξ. This word signifies, in Galen, the upper part of the liver.

ERODENS, Caustic.

ERIDIUM MOSCHATUM, Geranium moschatum.

EROMANIA, Erotomania.

EROS, Love.

EROSIA, Corrosion.

EROSION, Erosio, Diabrosis, Anabrosis, from erōdere, 'to eat away.' The action of a corrosive substance, or the gradual destruction of a part by a substance of that kind. It is often employed in the same sense as ulceration, spontaneous erosion.

EROTIC, Eroticus, from ερωξ, 'love.' That which is produced by love;—as Erotic melancholy, E. delirium, &c.

EROTICOMANIA, Erotomania.

EROTION, Melissa.

EROTOMANIA, Eromadnia, from ερωξ, 'love,' and mania, 'mania.' A species of mental alienation, caused by love. Erotic melancholy is Love melancholy. Some authors write it Erotico-madnia. Also, Nymphomania, (q. v.)

ERPES, Herpes.

ERRABUNDUS, Planetas.

ERRATIC, Erraticus, Atactos, Atypus; from errare, 'to err.' Wandering, irregular. That which disappears and recurs at irregular intervals. The name is given to intermittents, which observe no type. Most commonly, it is applied to pains or to any diseased manifestation, which is not fixed; but moves from one part to another, as in gout, rheumatism, &c.

ERREUR DE LIEU, Error loci.

ERRHINE, Errhinum or Erthinum, Sternutatorium, Sternutatory, Pleurnicium, Apoplegmatisans per nares, from ερ, 'into,' and ριρ, 'the nose.' A remedy, whose action is exerted on the Schneiderian membrane; exciting sneezing and increased discharge. Errhines have been chiefly used as local stimulants in head affections. The chief are: Asari Folia, Euphorbia gummi resini, Hydrargyri sulphas flavus, Tabacum, and Veratium album.

ERRHINUM, Sternutatory.

ERRHYISIS, from ερ, 'in,' and ρησι, 'I flow.' With some,—a draining of blood. A trifling hemorrhage.

ERROR LOCI, Apoplansis. (F.) Erreur de Lieu. A term, frequently used by Boerhaave to express deviation of fluids, when they enter vessels not destined for them. Boerhaave admitted several orders of capillary vessels; the diameters of which went on decreasing. The largest received red blood: those which came next received only white: others only lymph; whilst the last of all were destined for yet more subtle fluids—for a kind of vapour. When the red globules entered vessels destined for the white, or the white those intended for the thinner fluids, there was, according to the theory of Boerhaave, an error loci:—the proximate cause of inflammation and other mischiefs. See Aber-ration.

ERUCA, Brassica eruca, Sinapis.

ERUCTATION, Ructatio, Ereugmos, Er-yygē, Ereuctatio, Ructus, Ereuxis, Ruft (N. of England,) from eructare, 'to belch.' Belching. (F.) Rot, Rapport. A sonorous emission, by the mouth, of flatus proceeding from the stomach.

ERUGATORIA, Tetanothra.

ÉRUGINEUX, Æruginous.

ERUPTION, Eruptio, from erum'pere, 'to issue with violence,' 'to break out.' This word has several meanings. 1. The sudden and copious evacuation of any fluid from a canal or cavity;—of serum, blood, pus, &c., for example. 2. The breaking out of an exanthem: and, 3. The exanthem itself, whether simply in the form of a rash or of pustules, vesicles, &c.—See Cutaneous Diseases.

ERUPTION, VIOLET, Ionthus.

ERUPTIVE, Eruptivus. That which is accompanied by an eruption. Thus small-pox, measles, scarlet fever, miliaria, &c. are eruptive fevers. The term eruptive disease is nearly synonymous with cutaneous disease.

ERVA DE SANCTA MARIA, Arum dracuncululus.

ERVUM ERVILIA, Or'obus. (F.) Lentille Ers, ou Orobe. In times of scarcity, the seeds have been made into bread, but it is said not to be wholesome. The meal was once much used in poultices: it was formerly called Orobion, οροβιον.

ERVUM LENS, Lens, Phacos, the Lentil. (F.) Lentille. The seeds are eaten in many places like peas: they are flatulent and difficult of digestion.

ERYGE, Eructation.

ERYNGIUM AQUATICUM, Water Eryngo, Button Snake Root. Nat. Order, Umbelliferæ. This root is nearly allied to the contrayerva of the shops, and acts more especially as a sudorific. It is a secondary article in the Pharm. U. S.

ERYNGIUM MARITIMUM. The Sea Holly or Eryngo, Ætherea Herba. (F.) Panicaut Maritime. The eryngo root has a slightly aromatic odour, and sweetish and warm taste. It is considered to be diuretic and expectorant, but its powers are so weak, that it is scarcely ever used.

The ERYNGIUM CAMPESTRE, (F.) Panicaut, Centum Capita, Lyrin'gium, Aster inquinatus, Capitulum Martis, Acus Venæris, Chardon-Roland, is sometimes used for the E. maritimum.

ERYNGO, SEA, Eryngium maritimum—c. Water, Eryngium aquaticum.

ERYSIMUM, Erysinum officinale, Chama'plion, the Hedge-mustard. (F.) Velar, Tortelle, Herbe aux chantres. This was, formerly, much used for its expectorant and diuretic qualities. The seeds greatly resemble mustard.

ERYSIMUM ALLIARIA, Alliaria.

The ERYSIMUM BARBAREA, Barba'rea, (F.) Herbe de Sainte Barbe, has been ranked amongst the antiscorbutic plants. See Alliaria.

ERYSIP'ELAS, from ερυσι, 'I draw in,' and πηλαξ, 'near.' Febris erysipelato'sa, Febris erysipelato'ca, Emphlysis Erisip'elas, St. Anthony's fire, Ignis sancti Antonii, Hieropyrus, Icteri' tia rubra, Ignis sacer, Rose, Rubea icteri' tia, Vicinitrad'ha, Vicinitractus, Brumus, (F.) Erysipèle, Feu St. Antoine, Feu sacré, Mal Saint-Antoine. A disease, so called because it generally extends, gradually, to the neighbouring parts. Superficial inflammation of the skin, with general fever, tension and swelling of the part; pain and heat more or less acrid and redness by no means circumscribed; disappearing when pressed upon by the finger, but returning as soon as the pressure is removed. Frequently, small vesicles appear upon the inflamed part, which dry up and fall off, under the form of branny scales. Erysipelas is, generally, an acute affection; its medium duration being from 10 to 14 days.

Erysipelas yields, commonly, to general refrigerant remedies. Topical applications are rarely serviceable. At times, when the disease approaches the phlegmonous character, copious bleeding and other evacuations may be required, as in many cases of erysipelas of the face; but this is not commonly necessary. In particular cases, indeed, the general action seems deficient, and it becomes necessary to give tonics.

ERYSIPELAS PERIODICA NERVOSA CHRONICA, Pellagra—e. Phlyctenoides, Herpes zoster—e. Zoster, Herpes zoster.

ERYSIPEL'ATOUS, Erysipelat'ous, belonging to erysipelas; as an erysipelatous affection. Erysipelatous inflammation, Cuti'tis, Dermati'tis, is the character of inflammation, which distinguishes erysipelas, Erythéma erysipelat'osum.

ÉRYSIPELE, Erysipelas—é. Pustuleux, Herpes zoster.

ERYSOS, Erythema.

ERYTHE'MA, Erythraios, Erythos, Erythros, ερυθραϊος, ερυθρος, ερυθρος, 'red, rose-coloured; from ερυθρος, 'red.' Erythre'ma. This name is, sometimes, given to erysipelas, especially when of a local character. It is, also, applied to the morbid redness on the cheeks of the hectic; and on the skin covering bubo, phlegmon, &c. It forms the 6th genus of the 3d order, Eranthemata, of Bateman's classification of cutaneous diseases; and is defined, "a nearly continuous redness of some portion of the skin, attended with disorder of the constitution, but not contagious."

ERYTHEMA AMBUSTIO, Burn—e. Anthrax, Anthrax—e. a Frigore, Chilblain—e. Gangænosum, Anthrax—e. Intertrigo, Chafing—e. Mercuriale, Eczema mercuriale—e. Pernio, Chilblain.

ERYTHOS, Erythema.

ERYTHRÆA CENTAURIUM, Chironia centaarium—e. Chilensis, Canchalagua, Chironia chilensis.

ERYTHREMA, Erythema.

ERYTHRODANUM, Rubia.

ERYTHROID VESICLE, Vesicula Erythroidea. A vesicle of the fœtus described by Pockels and others. It is pyriform, and much longer than, although of the same breadth as, the umbilical vesicle. Velpeau, Weber, and others doubt its being a physiological condition.

ERYTHRONIUM AMERICANUM. Common Erythronium. This plant is possessed of emetic properties, but is rarely, if ever, used.

It is a secondary article in the Pharmacopœia of the U. S.

ERYTHROS, Erythema.

ES'APHÈ, from εσάφαω, 'I touch with the fingers.' (F.) Le Toucher. The introduction of a finger or fingers into the vagina, for the purpose of examining the condition of the uterus. It is employed to verify the existence or non-existence of pregnancy and its different stages; to detect certain affections or faults of conformation in the genital organs and pelvis; and, during the process of accouchement, to examine into the progress of labour, &c.

ESCA, Aliment.

ESCARA, Eschar.

ESCARGOT, Limax.

ESCHALOTTE, Échalotte.

ESCHAR, Eschara, Escara, a slough, a crust or scab. The crust or disorganized portion, arising from the mortification of a part, and which is distinguishable from the living parts by its colour, consistence, and other physical properties. The inflammation, which it excites in the contiguous parts, gives occasion to a secretion of pus between the living and dead parts, which ultimately completely separates the latter.

ESCHARA, Vulva.

ESCHAROTICS, Escharot'ica, from εσχαο, 'eschar.' Any substance, which, when applied upon a living part, gives rise to an eschar, such as caustic potass: the concentrated mineral acids, &c.

ESCHELLOHE, MINERAL WATERS OF.

This water rises at the foot of a mountain near the convent of Etal in Bavaria. It is a sulfurosaline.

ESCORZONERA, Scorzonera.

ESCREVISSE, Crab.

ES'CULENT, Esculentus, from εσκα, 'food,' (F.) Comestible. Such plants or such parts of plants or animals as may be eaten for food.

ESO, εσω, 'within.' A prefix which signifies an affection of an internal part; as Esôenteritis, inflammation of the inner membrane of the intestines:—Esogastri'tis; inflammation of the inner membrane of the stomach, &c.

ESO'CHÈ, εσωχη. A tumour within the anus.

ESPACES INTERCOSTAUX. See Costa.

ESPÈCE, Powder, compound.

ESPÈCES VULNÈRAIRES, Falltranck.

ES'PHLISIS, from φλω, 'I break, bruise,' &c. A fracture of the skull by comminution, the fragments being depressed. See Depression, and Enthlasis.

ESPRIT, Spirit—e. d'Ammoniaque, Spiritus ammoniæ—e. d'Anis, Spiritus anisi—e. de Camphre, Spiritus camphoræ—e. de Cannelle, Spiritus cinnamomi—e. de Carri, Spiritus carui—e. de Genièvre composé, Spiritus juniperi compositus—e. de Lavande, Spiritus lavandulæ—e. de Lavande composé, Spiritus lavandulæ compositus—e. de Menthe poivrée, Spiritus menthæ piperitæ—e. de Muscade, Spiritus myristicæ—e. de Poulit, Spiritus pelegii—e. de Raifort composé, Spiritus armoracini compositus—e. de Romarin, Spiritus rosmarini—e. de Vin delayé, Spiritus tenuior—e. de Vin rectifié, Spiritus rectificatus.

ESPRITS ANIMAUX, Nervous fluid.

ESQUILLE, Splinter.

ESQUINANÇIE, Cynanche, Cynanche tonsillaris.

ESQUINE, Smilax China.

ESSENCE, Essentia. By some used synonymously with volatile oil; by others, with simple tincture. The oil of pepper-mint is the oil, obtained by distillation; the essence, the oil diluted with spirit.

ESSENCE OF COLTSFOOT, see Tinctura benzoini composita—e. of Musk, Tinctura moschii.

ESSENCES, Olea volatilia.

Corticis Peruviani antiseptica Huxhami, Tinctura cinchonæ comp.—e. Corticis Peruviani composita, Tinctura cinchonæ amara.

ESSENTIAL, Essentia'lis. The word essential has been applied to the immediate or active principles of vegetables, which were believed to be endowed with the properties of the plants, from which they were extracted. Essential oil was so called because it was regarded as the only immediate principle which was essential. This expression is retained. Essential salts are true salts or extracts, which exist, ready formed, in vegetables; and which are obtained by distillation, incineration, or some other process.

An essential disease is synonymous with idiopathic disease; that is, one not depending on any other;—not symptomatic.

ESSERA, ESSERE, SORA, or SAIRE, Sare, Morbus porcinus, Rosa saltans, Urtica'ria porcellana, (F.) Anpoules, Porcelaine. A species of cutaneous eruption, consisting of small, reddish tubercles over the whole body, accompanied by a troublesome itching. It seems to be a variety of lichen or urticaria. See Lichen tropicus.

ESSIEU, Axis.

ESSOUFLEMENT, Anhelatio.

ESTHEMA, Vestitus.

ESTHESIS, Vestitus.

ESTHIOM'ENUS, Estiom'enus, Ex'edens. That which devours or eats away. Certain ulcers and eruptions are so called.

ESTIVAL, Estivus, happening in summer, belonging to summer. This epithet is given to summer diseases, so called, because they reign at that season and appear to depend on the influence exerted by it on the economy. In the United States, the term summer disease or complaint, means disorder of the bowels, as diarrhæa, cholera morbus, &c.

ESTOMAC, Stomach.

ESULA MAJOR, Euphorbia palustris—e. Minor, Euphorbia cyparissias.

ESURIÈS, Hunger.

ESURIGO, Hunger.

ESURITIO, Hunger.

ESYCHIA, Acinesia.

ÉTAGE, Stage.

ÉTAIN, Tin—é. de Gluac, Bismuth—é. Gris, Bismuth.

ÉTERNEMENT, Sneezing.

ETESTICULATIO, Castration.

ETHER, Æther—e. Acetic, see Æther—e. Chloric, Æther chloricus—e. Hydrochloric, see Æther—e. Hydrocyanic, Æther hydrocyanicus—e. Muriatic, see Æther—e. Nitric, see Æther—e. Nitrous, see Æther—e. Phosphoric, see Æther—e. Rectified Æther sulphuricus—e. Sulphuric Æther, Sulphuricus.

ÉTHÉREAL, Æthereal.

ÉTHÉREÉ, Æthereal.

ÉTHÉREOUS, Æthereal.

ETHMOID. The ethmoid bone, Os ethmoidæum, Os multifor'me, Os spongiosum, Os spongiosum, Os cribrosum, Os cribroforme, Os foraminulentum, Os coliforme; from  $\eta\theta\mu\omicron\varsigma$ , 'a sieve,' and  $\epsilon\iota\delta\omicron\varsigma$ , 'form.' (F.) Os Cribreux. One of the 8 bones, which compose the cranium; so called, because its upper plate is pierced by a considerable number of holes. The ethmoid bone is situate at the anterior, inferior, and middle part of the base of the cranium. It seems to be composed of a multitude of thin, fragile, semi-transparent laminae, which form more or less spacious cells, called the Ethmoidal labyrinth or cells, distinguished into anterior and posterior. These communicate with the nose, and are lined by a prolongation of the pituitary membrane.

The ethmoid bone is constituted of compact tissue, and is surrounded by the Ethmoid suture. It is articulated with the frontal and sphenoidal bones, the cornua sphenoidalia, the superior maxillary bones, the palate bones, the ossa turbinate inferiora, the comer, the proper bones of the nose, and the lacrimal bones.

ETHMOID'AL, Ethmoida'lis, Belonging to the ethmoid bone; as, Ethmoidal cells, E. suture, &c. The Ethmoidal apoph'ysis or process is the advanced part of the sphenoid bone, which articulates with the ethmoid. The ethmoidal arteries are two in number, the anterior of which arises from the ophthalmic artery. The origin of the other varies. The Échancrure ethmoidale of the os frontis receives the ethmoid bone. The Ethmoidal veins correspond to the arteries of the same name.

ETHMOSYNE, Habit.

ETHOS, Habit.

ETHUSE MEUM, Æthusa meum.

ETIOLA'TION, (F.) Étiolémnt. That state of plants, which occurs in consequence of privation of light, when they become pale and watery. In pathology, it is sometimes used to denote the paleness produced in those persons, who have been kept long without light; or a similar paleness, the result of chronic disease.

ÉTIOLEMENT, Etiolation.

ETIOLOGY, Ætiologia.

ÉTISIE, Hectisis.

ÉTOILE, Stella.

ÉTONNÉ, Stunned.

ÉTOUFFEMENT, Suffocation.

ÉTOURDISSEMENT, Vertigo.

ÉTRANGLEMENT, Strangulation.

ÉTRIER, Stapes.

ETRON, Abdomen, Hypogastrium,

ETRONCUS, from ἡτρον, 'the lower belly,' and ογκος, 'a tumour.' A tumour of the lower belly.

ÉTUVE, Stove—é. Humide, Bath, vapour.

ÉTUVER, to Foment.

EU, eu, 'good, proper,' when prefixed to words. Hence:

EUÆMIA, from eu, 'well,' and αἷμα, 'blood.' Good condition of the blood.—Fernelius.

EUÆSTHÉTOS. One whose senses are in full vigour, from eu, 'well,' and αἰσθάνομαι, 'I feel.'

EUANTHEMON, Anthemis nobilis.

EUCALYPTUS RESINIFERA. See Kino

EUCHYMIA, from eu, 'well,' and χυμος, 'juice.' A good state of the humours.

EUCRASIA, from eu, 'well,' and κρασις, 'temperament,' (q. v.) A good temperament.

EUDIAPNEUSIA, from εὐδιαπνευστος, 'one who breathes well.' Easy respiration.

EUELCE, from eu, 'well,' and ἔλκος, 'an ulcer,' ἐυέλκες. One whose ulcers are readily healed.

EUEMES, Euemetos, from eu, 'well,' and εμεω, 'I vomit.' That which readily excites vomiting. One who vomites with facility.

EUETHES, Benign.

EUEXIA, from eu, 'well,' and ἔξις, 'constitution.' A good constitution.

EUFRAISE, Euphrasia officinalis.

EUGENIA CARYOPHYLLATA. Garrophyllus, Caryophyllus aromatiens. The Indian tree which affords the clove. Order, Myrtaceæ. The Clove or Caryophyllus, C. aromatiens, is the unexpanded bud, (F.) Gérofle, Gérole, Gyrophle. Its odour is strong, aromatic, and peculiar; taste, pungent and acrid. Like all substances, whose virtue depends upon essential oil, it is stimulant and carminative. It is generally used as a corrigent to other remedies, and in cases where substances containing the essential oils are demanded. The oil, (F.) Huile de Gérofle, has the properties of the cloves.

EUGION, Hymen.

EUNUCH, Eunuchus, from εὐνη, 'the bed,' and ἔχω, 'I keep.' Castratus, Excastratus, Evradus, Emasculatus, Spado, Exsectus, Extesticulatus, Extomus, Senivir, Semimasculatus. One, whose organs of generation have been removed or so altered, that he is rendered incapable of reproducing his species, or of exercising the act of venery. Eunuchs were common with the ancient Romans. In Italy, this horrible mutilation still takes place to improve the voice: and, in the East, Eunuchs have the sarcillance of the seraglios.

EUNUCHISMUS, Castration.

EUNUCHIUM MECONIS, Lettuce.

EUNUCHUS, Castratus.

EUODES, Benevolentia.

EUONYMUS, Quassia simarouba.

EUPATHIA, Euphoria, from eu, 'well,' and παθος, 'suffering.' A disposition for being affected by pain easily. Also, a good state of health.

EUPATOIRE D'AVICENNE, Eupatorium cannabinum.

EUPATORIUM, Agrimony.

EUPATORIUM CANNABINUM, Eupatorium,

E. Arabicum, Hemp agrimony, Eupatorium of Avicenna, Herb of Saint Cuneconde, Trifolium cervinum, Origani aquaticum, (F.) Eupatoire d'Avicenne. Family, Synantheræ; Sex. Syst. Syngenesia equalis. The juice of this plant proves violently emetic and purgative, if taken in sufficient quantity. It has been considered diuretic, cathartic, and emetic.

EUPATORIUM, Mesues, Achillea ageratum.

THE EUPATORIUM PERFOLIATUM, Boneset, Thoroughwort, Thoroughstem, Thoroughwart, Vegetable antimony, Crosswort, Agucweed, Feverwort, Indian sage, is a plant which grows in low, wet meadows throughout the United States. It is considered to be stimulating, tonic, emetic, purgative, diuretic, and sudorific. Dose, gr. xv of the powder, as a gentle purgative.

EUPATORIUM, PURPLE-STALKED, E. purpureum. THE EUPATORIUM PURPUREUM, Mohawk tassel, Purple-stalked Eupatorium, Trumpet weed, is used in similar cases, as well as the EUPATORIUM TEUCRIFOLIUM, Wild horehound, or Germander-leaved horehound.

EUPEPSIA, from eu, 'well,' and πεπτω, 'I digest.' A good digestion. The antithesis to dyspepsia.

EUPHLOGIA, from eu, 'well,' and φλεγω, 'I burn.' Mild inflammation. Variola, (q. v.) EUPHONY, Euphonia, from eu, 'well,' and φωνη, 'voice.' An agreeable or regular voice.

EUPHORBIA CYPRES, E. cyparissias—edes Marais, E. palustris—e. vomitire, E. ipeacuanha.

EUPHORBIA CAPITATA, Cacicia. Ord. Euphorbiaceæ. A Brazilian plant, which is strongly astringent, and not poisonous. It is considered to be one of the best remedies for the bites of serpents. It is, also, called Colabrina Lusitunica.

THE EUPHORBIA COROLLATA, or Large flowering spurge, Milkweed, Snacks' milk, Ipeacuanha, Indian Physic, has similar properties to the last. The dose of the root is the same.

EUPHORBIA CYPARISSIAS, Esula minor, Tithymalus Cyparissias. The Cypress spurge, (F.) Euphorbe cypres. This, like most of the spurges, is very acrimonious. Amongst the rustics, it was formerly called, poor man's rhubarb, and was, consequently, a laxative. It is not used.

EUPHORBIA HYPERICIFOLIA. A native of the United States. It is astringent and tonic. Used in infusion— $\frac{ss}$  to lbj of boiling water. Dose, a tablespoonful.

EUPHORBIA IPEACUANHA, Ipeacuanha spurge, (F.) Euphorbe vomitire. This species of spurge is common in the southern and middle parts of the United States. The root is a powerful emetic, in the dose of from five to fifteen grains; twenty grains act as a cathartic likewise. In large doses, it acts as a narcotico-acrid.

EUPHORBIA LATHYRIS. The systematic name of the plant which affords the lesser catapulta seeds. Catapulta minor, Caper spurge, Lathyrus, Gar'den spurge, Tithymalus latifolius. The seeds possess cathartic properties, and an expressed oil of the seeds has been given as a cathartic in the dose of six to twelve drops.

EUPHORBIA OFFICINARUM. The systematic name of the plant which affords the Euphorbium, Euphorbia gummi resinata, in greatest abundance. The euphorbium is an inodorous gum-resin, in yellow tears, which have the appearance of being worm-eaten. It enters into the composition of some plasters, and has been used as an errhine.

EUPHORBIA PALUSTRIS. The greater spurge. Esula major, Tithym'alus, Marsh spurge, (F.) Euphorbe des marais. The juice is given, in Russia, as a common purge. It is used, too, as an irritant in tinea, warts, &c.

EUPHORBIA PARALIAS, Tithym'alus paralias, Sea spurge. This is violently cathartic and irritating; and is seldom used.

☞ All the spurges are vesicant and rube-facient, when applied externally.

EUPHORIA, Eupathia.

EUPHRAGIA, Euphrasia officinalis.

EUPHIRASIA OFFICINALIS, Ocularia, Euphrasia, Ophthalmica, Eyebright, (F.) Eufraise, Cusse-Lunette. It has been recommended in diseases of the eye, but is unworthy of notice.

EUPNŒA, from eu, 'well,' and πνέω, 'I respire.' Freedom or facility of respiration.

EURHYTHMIA, from eu, 'well,' and ῥυθμος, 'rhythm.' Regularity of the pulse.

EURIBALI, Juribali.

EUROS, εὐρος, 'mould, putrefaction,' Mucor, Caries. (q. v.) Corruption of the humours.

EURYCHORIA, Sinus.

EURYCLES, Engastrimythos.

EURYCLITUS, Engastrimythos.

EURYSMUS, Dilatation.

EUSARCOS, from eu, 'well,' and σαρξ, 'flesh.' One who is fleshy, robust.

EUSEMIA, from eu, 'well,' and σημειον, 'a sign.' A collection of good signs.

EUSTA'CHIAN TUBE, Tuba Eustachiana, Meatus cæcus, Tuba Aristotelica, Ductus auris palatini, Iter a Palato ad Aures, Trompe ou Conduit d'Eustache, Conduit guttural de l'oreille—(Ch.) This tube was so called from its discoverer, Eustachius. It is partly bony and partly cartilaginous; extending from the cavity of the tympanum to the upper part of the pharynx. Its length is about two inches; the bony portion, which belongs to the temporal bone, is about 3/4ths of an inch long. It is lined, internally, by a prolongation of the lining membrane of the pharynx. Its nerves are furnished by the palatine branches of the ganglion of Meckel, and its vessels proceed from those of the pharynx and velum pendulum.

The use of the tube seems to be, to permit the renewal of air in the cavity of the tympanum.

EUSTA'CHIAN VALVE, Valve of Eustachius, Valvule d'Eustachi ou d'Eustache. A membranous, semilunar fold, which corresponds to the opening of the vena cava inferior into the right auricle of the heart.

EUSTHENIA, Vigor, Eruberantia, from eu, 'well,' and σθερος, 'strength.' Flourishing, exuberant health.—Hippocr.

EUTAXIA, from eu, 'well,' and τάσσω, 'I arrange,' Euthesia. A well ordered constitution, in which every part has its proper relation.

EUTHIANA'SIA, from eu, 'well,' and θανατος, 'death.' An easy death.

EUTHESIA, Eutaxia.

EUTHYENTERON, Rectum.

EUTHYMIA, Animi tranquillitas, from eu, 'well,' and θυμος, 'mind.' Tranquillity of mind. A good state of the mental faculties.

EUTROPHIA, from eu, 'well,' and τροφή, 'nourishment.' A good state of nutrition.

EVACUANTS, Evacuantia, from e and vacuare, 'to empty,' (F.) Evacuants. Medicines are so called, which occasion a discharge by some emunctory; such as purgatives, emetics, &c.

EVACUATIFS, Evacuants.

EVACUATIO, Excretion.

EVACUATION, Same etymon. The discharge of any matter whatever, by the natural passages or by an artificial opening.

EVANOUISSEMENT, Syncope.

EVAPORATION, Evaporatio, Vaporatio, Evahatio. Transformation of a liquid into vapour, in order to obtain the fixed matters contained in it, dry and separate from the liquid. When the vapour is received in a proper vessel and condensed, the process is called Distillation, (which see.) Evaporation produces cold, and this is one of the processes by which the body is cooled, through the evaporation of the perspiratory fluid.

ÉVAUX, MINERAL WATERS OF. E. is situate in Auvergne, in France. The waters are hydrosulfurous, and thermal.

EVENTRATION, Eventratio, Hypogastrixis, from e, 'out of,' and venter, 'the belly.' A tumour, formed by a general relaxation of the parietes of the abdomen, and containing a great part of the abdominal viscera. Also, ventral hernia, or that, which occurs in any other way, than through the natural openings of the abdominal parietes. Lastly, any very extensive wound of the abdominal parietes, with issue of the greater part of the intestines.

EVENTUS, Apobainon, Apobesontion, Eebesontion, Terminatio morbi. The event or issue of a disease, either favourable or unfavourable.

EVERRICULUM, Specillum. A sort of sound or scoop, used for extracting sand or fragments of stone or clots of blood from the bladder, after or during the operation of lithotomy.

EVERSIO PALPEBRÆ, Ectropion.

ÉVIGILATION. See Sleep.

EVIL, KING'S, Scrofula.

EVIRATIO, Castration.

EVIRATUS, Eunuch.

EVOLUTION, SPONTANEOUS. A term, applied, by Dr. Denman, to what he considered to be a spontaneous turning of the fœtus in utero, in an arm presentation, in consequence of powerful uterine contractions forcing out the breech and feet, whilst the arm recedes. It is now usually considered to be a doubling of the fœtus, so that the arm changes its position but little, whilst the breech is forcibly expelled before the upper extremity;—the case becoming similar to a breech presentation.

EVOMITIO, Vomiting.

EVULSION, Aulsion, Evulsio, from evellere, 'to pluck out,' Apotilmos, Eetilmos, Tilmos. The action of plucking out; forcible extraction. (F.) Arrachement. This word is oftener used by the French, than by the English surgeons, for the act of extracting certain parts, the presence of which is injurious,—as the teeth, &c.

EXACERBATIO, Paroxysm.

EXACERBATION, Exacerbatio, Exasperatio, Exerescens, from exacerba're, 'to provoke,' (F.) Rédoublement. An increase in the symptoms of a disorder. Often used synonymously with paroxysm. (q. v.)

EXACUM SPICATUM, Coutoubea alba.

EXAMATOSIS, Hæmatisis.

EXÆMOS, Exanguious.

EXÆRESIS, Extraction.

EXALMA, from εξ, 'out of,' and αλλομαι, 'I leap.' Exalsis. Hippocrates calls thus the displacement of the vertebrae.

EXALTATION OF THE VITAL FORCES, Exaltatio virium. This word has been used, by modern pathologists, to designate a morbid increase in the action of organs, and partly that which occurs in an inflamed organ. Some use exaltation of the vital forces, and inflammation synonymously.

EXAMBLÖMA, Abortion.

EXAMBLOSIS, Abortion.

EXANASTOMOSIS, Anastomosis.

EXANASTROPHE, Convalescence.

EXANGIA, from εξαγγιζω, 'I evacuate from a vessel.' Exangeia. An enlargement or rupture of a blood-vessel, without external opening. A genus, in the order Dysthetica, class Hæmatica of Good. It comprises aneurism and varix.

EXANGIA ANEURISMA, Aneurism.

EXANGUIOUS, Exangios, Ersangnis, from ex, 'out of,' and sanguis, 'blood.' One who seems bloodless; as a female, who has suffered largely from uterine hemorrhage.

EXANIA, Proctocele.

EXANIMATION, Exanimatio, from ex, 'out of,' and anima, 'the spirit.' This word has two acceptations. Sometimes, it means real death, corresponding with the Greek θανατος, mors. At others, it signifies, apparent death, corresponding with the Greek απυρξια, επιπυρξια, εκλισις, An'imi deliquium.

EXANTHEM, Exanthema, Anthem eruptivum, Epanthem, Efflorescentia, Exanthisima, Effloratio, from εξανθησω, 'I flourish.' A rash. (F.) Éte'cures. Under this term is comprehended, by some, every kind of eruption, of which the skin is the seat. Others comprehend by it those eruptions, that are accompanied with fever, Febres exanthematicæ: including, under the head of the Major Exanthemata, those which attack a person but once in his life, and which are communicated by specific contagion; and, under the minor exanthemata, those, which are not marked by these characteristics. Small-pox, measles, cow-pox, &c., belong to the major:—Chicken-pox, herpes, lichen, &c., to the minor.

EXANTHEM, CARUNCULAR, Anthracia—e. Ichorous, Emphyysis—e. Pustulous, Empycesis—e. Rash, Enanthesis.

EXANTHEMA, Eminence—e. Miliaria, fever—e. Pestis, Plague—e. Serosum, Pemphigus—e. Strophulus, Strophulus—e. Vaccina, Vaccina—e. Varicella, Varicella.

EXANTHÈME INTESTINALE. See Typhus.

EXANTHEMATICA. Same etymon.

Eruptive fevers. Cutaneous eruptions, essentially accompanied with fever;—the third order in the class Hæmatica of Good.

EXANTHESIS, see Efflorescence—e. Roseola, Roseola—e. Rubecula, Rubecula.

EXANTHISMA, Exanthem.

EXANTHROPIA, Misanthropia.

EXARAGMA, from εξαρασσω, 'I tear away,' 'I break.' Collision, violent fracture or friction.

EXARCHIATER. Chief of the archiatri; or chief of physicians, a title like that of Comes Archiatrorum, given to the chief physician of an emperor or king.

EXARMA, from εξαιρομαι, 'I am raised.' A prominent tumour.

EXAR'SIO. A burning heat.

EXARTEMA, Amuletum.

EXARTHREMA, Luxation, Sprain.

EXARTHROMA, Luxation.

EXARTHROSIS, Luxatio, Sprain.

EXARTICULATIO, Luxatio.

EXARYSIS, Exhaustion.

EXASPIRATIO, Exacerbation.

EXCECARIA AGALLOCHA, Agallochium.

EXCALEFACTIO, Échauffement.

EXCARNA'TION, Excarnatio, from ex, and caro, 'flesh.' A mode of making anatomical preparations, which consists in separating injected vessels from the parts in which they are situate. This is done by means of corrosion by an acid or by putrefaction.

EXCASTRATIO, Castration, Eunuch.

EXCATHISMA, Bath, half, Semicupium.

EXCEREBRATUS, Delirious.

EXCIDENTIA, Eeptomata.

EXCIP'IENT, Excipiens, from excipere, 'to receive.' (F.) Intermède. A substance, which, in a medicinal prescription, gives form and consistence to it and serves as a vehicule or medium for the exhibition of the other ingredients.

EXCIPULA, Cup.

EXCISIO, Entaille.

EXCISION, Excisio, from excidere, 'to cut off;' εκτομη, Éctomè. A surgical operation, by which parts of a small size are removed with a cutting instrument.

EXCITABIL'ITY, Excitabilitas. Irritability (q. v.) The faculty, possessed by living beings, of being sensible to the action of excitants. The doctrine of excitability forms an important part of the Brunonian system.

EXCITANT, Stimulant.

EXCITATION or EXCITEMENT. Same etymon., from excitare, 'to excite,' Excitatio. Act of exciting or state of an organ or organs excited. Excitement is, sometimes, used synonymously with arterial action. The effect of the exciting powers acting on the excitability, according to Brown, constitutes excitement. Cullen used the term to express the restoration of the energy and action of the brain, which had been interrupted by sleep or some debilitating cause,—a state opposite to that of collapse.

EXCITO-MOTORY. An epithet applied by Dr. Marshall Hall to those nerves which are true spinal, and are concerned in certain reflex functions. See Nerves.

EXCORIATIO, Ecdora.

EXCORIATION, Excoriatio, Excoriat'ura,

Am'yche, from ex, and corium, 'skin.' (F.) Ecorchure. A slight wound, which removes only the skin.

EXCORIATURA, Excoriation.

EXCREATION, Excreatio, Rascatio, from scrare, 'to spit.' Act of spitting. (F.) Crachement. See Exspuitio.

EXCREMENT, Excrementum, Excretum, Excretio, Peritto'ma, Diachor'ma, Aph'odos, Apocho'reon, Apoc'risis, Ardas, Ardalos, from excernere, 'to separate,' 'cleanse.' Every thing, which is evacuated from the body of an animal as superfluous, by the natural emunctories: such as the fecal matters, the urine, perspiration, nasal mucus, &c. Generally, however, the term is restricted to the fecal evacuations;—the Purgamenta, Hedra, Sedes, Feces (q. v.), Stercus, Cacæ, Spat'ile (especially when liquid,) Dejectio ulvina, Onera alvi, Sordes ventris, Catarrhexis, Copros, Scor.

EXCREMENTITIAL, Excrementi'tious, Excrementi'tius. (F.) Excrémenteux, Excrémentitieux. That which is similar to excrement, and forms part of it. Excrementitial humours or parts are those destined to be evacuated, as incapable of administering to the nutrition of the body.

EXCREMENTO-RECREMENTITIAL, Excremento-recrementitious. Animal fluids, intended to be partly absorbed and partly rejected.

EXCRESCENCE, Excrecentia, Ecphy'ma, Phymat'osis, Hypersarc'osis, Sarcophy'ia, Caro excrecens, from excrecere, 'to grow outwards.' (F.) Excroissance. A tumour, which forms at the surface of organs, and especially on the skin, mucous membranes, or ulcerated surfaces. Excrecences differ in size, shape, cause, &c., and each requires its own treatment. Warts, condylomata, polypi, hemorrhoids belong to this head.

EXCRESCENTIA, Exacerbation, Protuberance, Tumour—e. Carnosa, Sarcoma.—e. Gingivæ, Epulis.

EXCRETIO, Eccrisis, Excrement—e. Alvina, Defecation—e. Fæcum alvinarum, Defecation—e. Urinæ involuntaria, Enuresis.

EXCRETION, Excretio, Evacuatio, Ejectio, Expulsio, Eges'tio, Diachor'sis, from excernere, 'to separate.' The separation or throwing off of those matters from the body of an animal, which are supposed to be useless, as the urine, perspiration, and fæces.

EXCRETORY, Excretorius; same etymon. An Excretory vessel or duct is one, which transmits the fluid secreted by a gland, either externally or into the reservoirs in which it has to be deposited. The existence of an excretory duct is a distinctive character of the glands properly so called.

EXCRETORY ORGAN, means any one charged with the office of excreting: thus the skin is said to be an excretory organ, because through it the perspiration takes place.

EXCRETUM, Excrement.

EXCROISSANCE, Excrecence.

EXCUTIA VENTRICULI, Stomach Brush. An instrument, composed of iron or brass wire, at one of the extremities of which is a pencil of bristles. Some ancient authors proposed this to extract foreign bodies from the œsophagus, as well as to cleanse the stomach of viscid and tenacious matters adhering to it.

EXECHEBRONCHUS, Bronchocele.

EXECHEGLUTI, Exischioi.

EXELCOSIS. See Ulceration.

EXELCYS'MOS, ἐξελκυσμος, from ἐξ, 'from,' and ἐλκυω, 'I draw.' Extraction. Also the act of breaking out into ulcers.

EXELCYSMUS, Extraction.

EXENTERIS'MUS, Exenter'osis, ἐξεντερισμος, ἐξεντεριστις; from ἐξ, 'out of,' and εντερον, 'an intestine.' The operation of disemboweling or eviscerating.

EXERAM'Ō, from ἐξέρω, 'I throw out.' Any thing cast out. Vomiting; or the matter vomited.—Hippocr.

EXERCISE, Exercitatio, Exercitium, Asc'esis, Gymnasion, from exerce're, 'to work.' Every motion of the body, arising from the contraction of muscles subjected to the will. Also, the action of any organ whatever. Exercise may be active or passive. The passive are referred to, under the head of Gestation. The chief active exercises are:—walking, running, dancing, hunting, fencing, playing at ball, cricket, racket, quoits, swimming, declamation, singing, &c.

Exercise is an important prophylactic, particularly in those disposed to be plethoric. It improves the digestion: augments the secretions; and, when used in moderation, gives strength to the body; but when carried to excess, produces debility and disease.

EXE'RESIS, from ἐξ, 'out of,' and αἴρω, 'I take away.' A surgical operation, which consists in drawing, extracting, or removing, from the human body, every thing that is useless, noxious, or extraneous. It is a generic term, which includes extraction, evulsion, evacuation, excision, ablation, amputation, &c.

EXERRHO'SIS, from ἐξ, 'out of,' and ῥέω, 'I flow.' The discharge, which takes place by insensible perspiration.

EXFOLIATION, Exfoliatio, Desquamatio, Eclep'isis, from ex and folium, 'a leaf.' By this is meant the separation of the dead portions of a bone, tendon, aponeurosis, or cartilage, under the form of lamellæ or small scales. Exfoliation is accomplished by the instinctive action of the parts, and its object is to detach the dead portion from those subjacent, and which are still alive. For this purpose, the latter throw out fleshy granulations; and a more or less abundant suppuration occurs, which tends to separate the exfoliated part,—now become an extraneous body. The ancients distinguished exfoliation into sensible and insensible, according as the dead portions of bone were detached in fragments of greater or less size, or in very thin pieces, and in an almost insensible manner. When the dead part embraces all or almost all the substance of a bone, it takes the name Sequestrum.

EXFOLIATIVE, Exfoliati'vus, Desquamato'rius. That which takes away by leaves or scales. The term has been applied to certain medicines, which were regarded as proper to hasten exfoliation, such as alcohol, oil of turpentine, tincture of myrrh, &c.

The EXFOLIATIVE TREPAN, Eclep'isitrepan.

anum, is an ancient raspatory, or instrument for scraping exfoliating portions of bone.

EXHALAISON, Exhalation.

EXHALANT, Exh'alent, Exh'alans, from exhal'are, 'to exhale,' 'throw out.'

The EXHALANT VESSELS are very minute, and arise from the arterial capillary system. They are situate in every tissue of the body, and on the surfaces of the mucous and serous membranes and skin; on which each pours its particular fluid. Bichat distinguished three sets. 1. The external, terminating on the mucous and external dermoid system, where they pour the matter of perspiration. 2. The internal, comprising those of the cellular and medullary tissues, and of synovial surfaces: and, 3. The nutritive exhalants, which vary in each organ where they are found; and preside over the phenomena of composition and increase of every part of the body. The exhalants are the antagonists of the absorbents. They are imaginary vessels, inasmuch as they cannot be detected.

EXHALATIO, Evaporation.

EXHALATION, Exhalatio; same etymon. Anathymiasis, (F.) Exhalaison. A function, by virtue of which certain fluids, obtained from the blood, are spread, in the form of dew, in the areolæ of the different textures, or at the surface of membranes: either for the sake of being thrown out of the body, or to serve for certain purposes. The sweat is a liquid, excrementitious exhalation; the serous fluid of the pleura a liquid, recrementitious exhalation.

Exhalation is, also, applied to that which exhales from any body whatever, organic or inorganic, dead or living.

EXHALATION, PULMONARY. See Perspiration.

EXHAUSTION, Exar'ysis, Vires exhaustæ, from exauri're, 'to draw out.' (F.) Épuisement. Loss of strength, occasioned by excessive evacuations, great fatigue or privation of food, or by disease.

EXHUMATION, Exhumatio, from ex and humus, 'the ground.' The disinterment of a corpse. The circumstances, which render this necessary, are:—1. Judicial investigations, relative to the body of the person inhumed. 2. The removal of a body from one cemetery to another: and, 3. The evacuation of cinerities or sepulchral vaults. The operation is attended with much unpleasant smell and annoyance, and requires the use of disinfecting agents, of which the most powerful is the chloride of lime. See Disinfection. The putrid effluvia from animal substances are not, however, found to excite endemic disease.

EXISCHIOS, from  $\epsilon\zeta$ , 'out of,' and  $\iota\sigma\chi\iota\omega\varsigma$ , 'the ischium.' A luxation of the os femoris. All those with large nates, and prominent hips, were called Exischioti and Ezecheglutii.

EXITURA. According to some, any abscess, which discharges. Paracelsus calls thus every kind of putrid excrement.

EXOCHAS, Exochæ, from  $\epsilon\zeta\omega$ , 'without,' and  $\epsilon\chi\omega$ , 'I have.' A soft tumour without the anus: outward piles.

EXOCHE, Eminence.

EXOCYS'TĒ, Exocys'tis, from  $\epsilon\zeta$ , 'out of,' and  $\kappa\upsilon\sigma\iota\varsigma$ , 'the bladder.' A prolapsus of the bladder into the urethra. Also called Prolap- sus vesicæ, Ædopto'sis vesicæ. (F.) Reversement de la vessie.

EXOCYS'TE NOELIA'NA; when the inner membrane of the bladder is protruded. So called from M. Noel, who first accurately described it.

EXOCYS'TE SOLINGENIA'NA; when the neck of the bladder is protruded. Called after M. Solingen, who first accurately described it.

EXCEDESIS, Swelling.

EXOGOGE, Extraction.

EXOINE or EXOENE, from ex, 'out of,' and idoneus, 'fit,' or rather from exonerare, 'to exonerate.' In France, a certificate of excuse, exemption, or dispensation, given to those summoned to appear before a court of justice, and who are unable to do so.

EXOLCE, Extraction.

EXOMETRA, Prolapsus uteri.

EXOMOIOSIS, Assimilation.

EXOMPHALOCELE, Exomphalus.

EXOMPHALUS, Exumbilicatio, Exom'phaloc'itè, Om'phaloc'itè, Hernia umbilic'alis, Hernie ombilicale, (F.) H. du nombril, Umbilical Hernia, from  $\epsilon\zeta$ , 'out of,' and  $\omicron\mu\phi\alpha\lambda\omicron\varsigma$ , 'the navel.' Hernia, occurring at the navel. This affection happens more frequently in infants, and takes place by the umbilical ring itself. In adults, it occurs more commonly in females than in males; and, when it does so, the sac passes in the vicinity of the umbilicus. The organs, found in this kind of hernia, are, particularly,—the epiploon, the jejunum, the arch of the colon, and sometimes the stomach. The tumour is, in general, round, and presents all the characters of hernia. It is, commonly, readily reducible, and not subject to strangulation. It must be reduced, and retained by an elastic bandage, made in the form of a girdle, and furnished with a pad at its middle part. When strangulated, the stricture may be divided upwards and towards the left side.

EXOMPHALUS AQUOSUS, Hæmophthalmum.

EXONCO'MA, from  $\epsilon\zeta$  and  $\omicron\gamma\gamma\omicron\varsigma$ , 'a tumour.' A large, prominent tumour. Used, by Galen, for protuberance of the vertebræ after luxation.

EXONCOSIS LINGUÆ, Glossoncus.

EXONEIROSIS, Pollution.

EXONEURISM, Magnetism, animal.

EXOPHTHAL'MIA, Pto'sis Bulbi Oculi, Exorbitis'mus, Ophthalmoc'itè, Ophthalmopto'sis, Oculi totius prominent'ia, from  $\epsilon\zeta$ , 'out of,' and  $\omicron\phi\theta\alpha\lambda\mu\omicron\varsigma$ , 'eye.' (F.) Procidence de l'œil. A protrusion of the eye from its orbit, occasioned by an abscess or tumour in the cellular texture of the orbit; by exostosis of the parietes of the orbit, &c.

In Exophthalmia, the eye is pressed forwards; the eyelids are raised and separated, so that they can no longer cover the eye, and defend it from the action of extraneous bodies; it becomes inflamed, and the sight is disturbed or destroyed. The treatment of course depends upon the cause.

EXORBITISMUS, Exophthalmia.

EXORMIA, Papula—e. Lichen, Lichen—e. Strophulus, Strophulus.

EXOSMO'SE, Exosmosis, Transudation, from  $\epsilon\zeta$ , 'out of,' and  $\omega\sigma\mu\omicron\varsigma$ , 'impulse.' The opposite to Endosmose: the act by which substances transude from within to without an animal or other membrane.

EXOSSATIO, Exostosis.

EXOSTEMA CARIBÆA, Cinchona caribæa cortex.

EXOSTO'SIS, Hyperosto'sis, Emphy'ma Exosto'sis ostea, Exossa'tio, Ossis eminentia, from ἐξ, 'out of,' and ὀστέον, 'a bone.' An osseous tumour, which forms at the surface of bones, or in their cavities. Various kinds have been enumerated. The Ivory Exosto'sis, Exostose eburnée;—that which has the appearance and consistence of ivory. Laminar Exosto'sis, E. Laminée;—that which is formed of laminae in superposition or of distinct filaments. The Spongy Exosto'sis is that, whose structure is analogous to the spongy tissue of bones.

Exostoses are sometimes distinguished into the true, which seem to be a projection of the osseous substance, and which have the same organization and hardness as that substance; and the false, or osteo-sarcoma. Exostosis may depend on syphilis, scrofula, rickets, gout, &c. In such cases, it is important to get rid of the primary disease.

Those exostoses which occur within bones, have, by some, been called Enostoses.

Exostosis, Spina ventosa—e. Steatomatodes, Osteosteatomia.

EXOTIC, Exo'ticus, from ἐξω, 'without.' That which comes from abroad. Plants or drugs which are procured from abroad, are so called. It is opposed to indigenous.

EXOTICADENIA, from Exotic, and ἀδένω, 'I dislike.' Aversion for exotic drugs.

EXOTICHEMATOSIS, Transfusion.

EXOTICOMANIA. The opposite to the preceding. Fondness for exotic remedies.

EXPAN'SION, Expansio, from expandere, 'to spread out.' A prolongation, or spreading out, presented by certain organs. Thus, we say an aponeurotic expansion, &c.

EXPECTANT, Expectans, from expectare, 'to wait.' That which waits:—as Expectant Medicine,—La Médecine expectante. See Expectation.

EXPECTA'TION, Expectatio; same etymon. The word expectation has, in Medicine, been applied to that method, which consists in observing the progress of diseases, and removing deranging influences, without prescribing active medicines, unless such shall be imperiously required. It consists, in fact, in leaving the disease, almost wholly, to the efforts of nature; and has been termed the art of curing diseases by expectation or waiting.—Ars sanandi cum expectatione.

EXPECTORANT, Expectorans, Anacatharticus, from ex, 'out of,' and pectus, 'the breast.' A medicine, capable of facilitating or provoking expectoration. There is probably no such thing as a direct expectorant. They all act through the system, or by impressions made on parts at a distance, which, through the medium of general, continuous, or contiguous sympathy, excite the secretory vessels of the air-passages into action.

The following are the chief reputed expectorants:

|             |              |
|-------------|--------------|
| Ammoniacum, | Ipecacuanha, |
| Asafœtida,  | Myroxylon,   |
| Gabanum,    | Myrrha,      |

|                         |             |
|-------------------------|-------------|
| Inhalations,            | Scilla,     |
| (of Iodine, Stramonium, | Senega,     |
| Tar, Burning Wool,      | Totutanium. |
| Tobacco, &c.),          |             |

EXPECTORATIO SANGUINIS, Hæmoptysis—e. Solida, Cynanche trachealis.

EXPECTORATION, Expectoratio, Bezhu'mida, Anap'tysis, Anacathar'sis, Anabexis, same etymon. The act of expelling from the chest matters or secretions there collected or existing. It is, likewise, used for the expectorated matter.

EXPELLENS, Expulsive.

EXPERIENCE, Experientia, Peira, Empe'ria, from experiri, 'to practise.' A knowledge of things acquired by practice. In Medicine, this knowledge can be obtained both by the practitioner's own experience, and by that obtained from tradition and from books. To profit by experience requires a mind capable of appreciating the proper relations between cause and effect; and hence it happens, that false experience, Experientia fallax, is extremely common; and that a man had better, in many instances, trust to that which he has learned from others, than to his own fallacious observation.

The union of accurate observation by the physician with that handed down by medical writers constitutes perfect experience, so far as it is attainable in any individual case.

EXPERIENCE. Experiment.

EXPERIMENT, Experimentum; same etymon. (F.) Expérience. A trial, made on the bodies of men or animals, for the purpose of detecting the effect of a remedy, or of becoming better acquainted with their structure, functions, or peculiarities. In a more general sense, it means any trial instituted with the intent of becoming better acquainted with any thing.

By experiments on living animals, we have obtained much valuable information in the various departments of Medicine; but particularly in Physiology and Toxicology.

EXPERT (F.) Expertus. Skilful, or of good experience. A physician, charged with the duty of making a report upon any case of legal medicine.

EXPIRATION, Ec'pnoe, Ecpneumato'sis, Ecpneusis, from expirare, 'to breathe out.' The act of expelling, from the chest, the air received in during inspiration.

EXPIRATORY, Expiratio'ni inser'viens. The expiratory muscles are all those which contribute to diminish the cavity of the chest, for the purpose of expelling the air contained in the lungs, or of producing expiration. These muscles are, chiefly, the intercostals, triangularis sterni, quadratus lumborum, serratus posticus inferior, the oblique and recti muscles of the abdomen, the sacro-lumbalis, &c.

EXPLORATION, Exploratio, from explorare, 'to search into.' The act of observing and attentively examining or investigating every thing connected with a case of disease. The word is chiefly used, in this sense, by the French practitioners.

EXPLORATORIUM, Sound.

EXPRESSION, Expres'sio, Ecpiesmos, Ecthlipsis, from ex, 'out of,' and pre'mere, 'to press.' The act of compressing a substance.

for the purpose of separating from it the fluids, which it contains. Also, the manner in which impressions, made upon us, are depicted; especially in the traits of the countenance.

SWEAT OF EXPRESSION, or Sueur d'expression, is a term given to the passive perspiration, observable in very debilitated individuals.

EXPULSIO, Excretion—e. Fæcum, Defecation.

EXPULSIVE, Expellens, Expulsorius, from expellere, 'to drive away.' An expulsive bandage, (F.) Bandage expulsif, is one constructed with the view of compressing a part, from which we are desirous of expelling pus, serum, &c.

Certain medicines were, formerly, called expulsives, which were believed to have the power of driving the humours towards the skin;—as diaphoretics and sudorifics.

EXSANGUIS, Exanguinus.

EXSARCOMA, Sarcoma.

EXSECTIO VIRILIIUM, Castration.

EXSECTUS, Castratus, Eunuch.

EXSICCATIO, Drying.

EXSICCATIVA, Desiccativa.

EXSOLUTIO, Eclysis.

EXPULSION, Expul'tio, Spu'tio, Sputatio, Ptyma, Anachrem'sis, Apochrem'sis, Ptysis, from ex, 'out of,' and spuo, 'I spit.' Rejection of the matters accumulated in the pharynx and larynx; spitting.

EXSTROPHIA, from ἐξ, 'out of,' and στροφῆ, 'turning.' Extrover'sio, Extrover'sion. A term, used by M. Chaussier for certain displacements of organs, and especially of the urinary bladder.

EXSTROPHIA OF THE BLADDER, (F.) Renversement de Vessie, is a faulty conformation, in which the organ opens above the pubes; so that in the hypogastric region there is a red, mucous surface, formed by the inner coat of the bladder; and on which two prominences are distinguishable, corresponding to the openings of the ureters.

EXSUCCATIO, Echymoma.

EXSUCTIO, Suctio, Ecmyze'sis, from ex, 'out of,' and succus, 'a juice.' The action of sucking.

EXSUDATIO, Ephemerosis.

EXSUFFLATIO, Ephyphesis.

EXTASIS, Ecstasis.

EXTEMPORANEOUS, Extempora'neus. Extempora'lis. Those prescriptions are called 'extemporaneous,' or magistral (q. v.), which are made on the spot, and composed according to the prescription of the physician.

EXTENSEUR COMMUN DES DOIGTS, Extensor digitorum communis—e. Commun des orteils, Extensor communis digitorum pedis—e. Court du pouce, Extensor pollicis brevis—e. Long du pouce, Extensor longus pollicis—e. Petit des orteils, Extensor brevis digitorum pedis—e. Propre du petit doigt, Extensor proprius minimi digiti—e. Propre de l'Index, Extensor proprius indicis.

EXTENSIBILITY, Extensibilitas. A property, possessed by certain bodies, of being capable of extension or elongation.

EXTENSIO, Tetanus.

EXTENSION, Extensio, Tasis, Ec'tasis, Catal'asis, Anat'asis, from exten'dere, 'to stretch out.' It is, in Surgery, an operation, by which we pull strongly, either with the hands alone, or by straps, a fractured or luxated limb, to restore it to its natural position. It is the opposite of Counter-extension.

EXTENSOR. Same etymon. (F.) Extenseur. A muscle, whose office it is to extend certain parts.

EXTENSOR BREVIS DIGITORUM PEDIS, Ped'icus, Calcaneo-phalanginicus communis of DUMAS; Muscle pédicux, Muscle petit extenseur des orteils, Calcaneo-sus-phalangeticus communis—(Ch.), Carré du pied; Short Extensor of the Toes. A muscle, situate on the dorsal region of the foot. It arises from the external surface of the calcaneum, and at the anterior edge of a ligament, which unites that bone to the astragalus. Anteriorly, each of its divisions terminates by a small tendon, which is fixed, successively, at the superior part of the posterior extremity of the first phalanx of the great toe, and to the second and last phalanges of the three next toes. Its use is to extend the four first toes, and to direct them a little outwards.

EXTENSOR CARPI RADIALIS BREVIS, see Radialis—e. Carpi radialis longus, see Radialis—e. Carpi ulnaris, see Cubital muscles.

EXTENSOR DIGITORUM COMMUNIS, Extensor digitorum communis manus, cum extensore proprio auricularis, Digitorum Tensor; Epicondylo-sus-phalangeticus communis—(Ch.)—Common Extensor of the Fingers. (F.) Extenseur commun des Doigts. A long, flattened muscle; simple above, and divided into four portions inferiorly. It is situate at the posterior part of the forearm; arises from the external tuberosity of the humerus; from the aponeurosis of the forearm, and from the aponeurotic septa situate between it and the neighbouring muscles, and is inserted at the posterior surface of the second and third phalanges of the four last fingers. The muscle extends the phalanges of the four last fingers upon each other, and upon the metacarpal bone. It can, also, extend the hand on the forearm.

EXTENSOR DIGITORUM LONGUS, E. communis digitorum pedis—e. Longus digitorum pedis, E. communis digitorum pedis—e. Proprius hallucis, E. proprius pollicis pedis—e. Indicis, E. proprius indicis—e. Internodii ossis pollicis, E. longus pollicis—e. Primi internodii, Abductor longus pollicis.

EXTENSOR PROPRIUS MINIMI DIGITI Epicondylo-sus-phalangeticus du petit doigt,—(Ch.), (F) Extenseur propre du petit doigt. Situate on the inside of the Extensor communis digitorum. It arises from the external condyle of the os humeri and the aponeurotic septa seated between it, the extensor communis digitorum, and the extensor carpi ulnaris; and is inserted into the two last phalanges of the little finger. Its use is to extend the little finger, and even the hand upon the forearm.

EXTENSOR POLLICIS BREVIS, Extensor minor pollicis manus, E. primi internodii, E. pollicis primus, E. secun'di internodii (DOUGLAS), E. secun'di internodii ossis pollicis; Cubito-sus-phalangicus du pouce,—(Ch.), (F.) Court extenseur du pouce. Seated at the posterior and inferior part of the forearm. It is thin, long, and broader at its middle than at the extremities. It arises from the posterior surface of the ulna and the interosseous ligament, and is inserted behind the superior extremity of the first phalanx of the thumb. It extends the thumb, and aids in supination.

EXTENSOR LONGUS POL' LICIS; Extensor major pollicis manus, Extensor secundi internodii, Extensor pollicis secundus, Extensor tertii internodii (DOUGLAS), Extensor internodii ossis pollicis, Cubito-sus-phalangeticum du pouce.—(Ch.,) (F.) Muscle long extenseur du pouce. This muscle is long, flat, and fusiform; and is seated at the posterior part of the forearm. It arises from the posterior surface of the ulna and the interosseous ligament, and is inserted at the posterior part of the superior extremity of the first phalanx of the thumb. It extends the last phalanx of the thumb upon the first.

EXTENSOR PROPRIUS INDICIS; E. proprius primi digiti manus, E. Indicis, Indicator, Extensor secundi internodii indicis proprius, Cubito-sus-phalangeticum de l'Index.—(Ch.,) (F.) Extenseur propre de l'Index. This muscle is long and thin; broader in the middle than at the extremities; and is situated at the posterior part of the forearm. It arises from the posterior surface of the ulna, and is inserted at the posterior part of the upper extremity of the second and third phalanx of the index finger. It extends the three phalanges of the index finger; and has, besides, the same uses as the other extensors of the fingers.

EXTENSOR PROPRIUS POL' LICIS PEDIS; E. proprius Hallucis, E. longus (DOUGLAS), E. Pollicis longus, Péronéo-sus-phalangicum du pouce, Péronéo-sus-phalangeticum du pouce.—(Ch.,) This muscle is situated at the anterior part of the leg. It is fleshy, broad, flat, above; small and tendinous below. It arises from the anterior part of the middle third of the fibula; and is inserted into the posterior part of the superior extremity of the last phalanx of the great toe. It extends the last phalanx of the great toe upon the first; and the first upon the first metacarpal bone.

EXTENSOR COMMUNIS DIGITORUM PEDIS, E. Longus Digitorum Pedis, E. Digitorum longus, Péronéo-tibi-sus-phalangeticum commun, Cnemodactylæus, Péronéo-sus-phalangeticum commun. (F.) Extenseur commun des Orteils. This muscle is, also, situated at the anterior part of the leg. It is long, thin, flattened, simple, and fleshy above, and divided into four tendons below. It arises from the outer tuberosity of the tibia and the anterior surface of the fibula, and is inserted into the superior part of the posterior extremity of the second and third phalanges of the four last toes. It extends the three phalanges of these toes.

EXTENSOR PRIMI INTERNODII, E. pollicis brevis—e. Secundi internodii, E. pollicis brevis, Extensor longus pollicis—e. Secundi internodii indicis proprius, E. proprius indicis—e. Tertii internodii, E. longus pollicis—e. Tertii internodii indicis, Prior annularis—e. Tertii internodii minimi digiti, Abductor minimi digiti—e. Ossis metacarpi pollicis manus, Abductor longus pollicis—e. Pollicis longus, E. proprius pollicis pedis—e. Pollicis secundus, E. Longus pollicis—e. Minor pollicis manus, E. pollicis brevis—e. Primus pollicis, Abductor longus pollicis.

EXTENSOR TARSII MAGNUS; E. Tarsi suralis. A name given, by some anatomists, to the gastrocnemius and soleus combined.

EXTENSOR TARSII MINOR, Plantar muscle.

EXTENUATIO, Emaciation.

EXTERNAL DISEASES, Extrin'sic Diseases, Morbi extrin'seci, Surgical Diseases, (F.) Maladies externes. Those diseases which occupy the surface of the body, and which form the object of Surgical Pathology, requiring, generally, external means or surgical operations.

EXTERNUS AURIS, Laxator tympani—e. Mallei, Laxator tympani.

EXTESTICULATUS, Castratus, Eunuch.

EXTINCTIO VOCIS, Extinction de voix, (F.) The French use this term for cases in which the voice is not wholly suppressed, but produces only feeble sounds. Incomplete aphonia.

EXTINCTION OF MERCURY, Extinctio Mercurii vel Hydrargyri. Trituration of mercury with lard or other substance, until the metallic globules disappear. The mercury is then so divided, that it forms a black powder, generally considered to be a protoxide of mercury, but, perhaps, erroneously.

EXTIRPATIO, Extirp'atio, Ablatio, Aphæresis, from extirpa're, 'to root out.' The complete removal or destruction of any part, either by cutting instruments or the action of caustics. Thus, we speak of the extirpation of a cancer, polypus, encysted tumour, &c.

EXTOMIUS, Eunuch.

EXTRAPELVIO-PUBI-TROCHANTÉRIEN, Obturator externus.

EXTRACT, Extractum—e. of Bark, Extractum cinchonæ—e. of Bark, resinosum, Extractum cinchonæ resinosum—e. of Broom tops,—Extractum cacuminum genistæ—e. of Chamomile, E. anthemidis—e. of Dandelion, Extractum taraxaci—e. of Henlock, Extractum cicutæ—e. of Henbane, Extractum hyoscyami—e. of Hops, Extractum humuli—e. of Lettuce, Extractum lactucæ—e. of Liquorice, Extractum glycyrrhizæ—e. of Logwood, Extractum hæmatoxyli—e. of Meat, saponaceum, Osmazome—e. of Oak Bark, Extractum corticis quercus—e. of White Poppy, Extractum papaveris—e. of Rhubarb, Extractum rhei—e. of Rue, Extractum rutæ—e. of Savine, Extractum foliorum sabinæ—e. of Wormwood, Extractum cacuminum absinthii.

EXTRACTION, Extractio, Exar'esis, Exog'ge, Exolcè, Exelcys'mus, Enchylo'sis, from extru'here, 'to draw out.' The act of removing an extraneous substance from any part of the body. Thus, a splinter is said to be extracted. It is, also, applied to the removal of certain parts. The cataract is said to be extracted: a tooth is extracted, when carious, &c.

EXTRACTIVE. Same etymon. A peculiar, immediate principle, which has been admitted in extracts. Thus, bitter extractive is the immediate principle of bitter vegetables, &c.

EXTRACTUM, Extractum, from extrahere, 'to draw out,' 'separate;' Opos, οπος, Chylisma, Ecchylo'ma, (F.) Extrait. An extract is prepared by evaporating vegetable solutions, till a tenacious mass is obtained. When prepared on an infusion or decoction, it is called a wotery; from a tincture, a spirituous extract. Both kinds contain all the principles of the vegetable, soluble in the menstrua with which they are prepared; but the volatile parts are dissipated, and some of the fixed parts are decomposed; the proper extractive is oxygenized, and the virtues of the vegetable substance consequently altered or destroyed. Extracts are hard or soft; the consistence of the soft being such as to retain the pilular form without the addition of a powder. A patent was taken out some years ago by a Mr. Barry, of London, for preparing them in vacuo; and, as the temperature is much lower than in the ordinary method, the virtues of the plant are less altered, and the extracts are generally green. Extracts are also prepared by Displacement or Percolation. (q v.)

Extracts have, likewise, received different names according to their predominant principle. The Gummy or mucous, or mucilaginous, are those which are mainly composed of gum or mucilage. Gum tragacanth may be considered a pure gummy extract. Gelatinous extracts are those composed especially of gelatine. Resinous extracts, those of a resinous character; extracto-resinous, those composed of extractive or colouring matter and resin. Gum-resinous, those containing gum and resin; and saponaceous or saponaceous saline, those containing a notable quantity of saline substances and a resinous matter, so combined with mucous and other soluble substances, that it cannot be separated.

EXTRACTUM CACUMINUM ABSINTHII, Extract of wormwood, (A decoction, defecated and evaporated.) The flavour is dissipated along with the essential oil. It is a bitter tonic. Dose, gr. x to ℥j in pill.

EXTRACTUM ACONITI, Extract of aconite. Succus spissatus aconiti napelli, (from the inspissated juice without defecation.) It is esteemed to be narcotic and diuretic; and has been given in the cases referred to under aconitum. Dose, gr. j, gradually increasing it.

EXTRACTUM ALOES PURIFICATUM, Purified extract of aloes. (The gummy part extracted by boiling water, defecated and inspissated.) Dose, gr. v. to gr. xv.

EXTRACTUM ANTHEMIDIS, E. anthemidis nobilis, E. chamæmeli, E. florum chamæmeli, Extract of Chamomile. The volatile oil is dissipated in this preparation. It is a pure, grateful bitter, and is tonic and stomachic. Dose, gr. x to gr. xx in pills.

EXTRACTUM ASPARAGI, see Asparagus.

EXTRACTUM BELLADONNÆ, Succus spissatus atropæ belladonnæ, Extract of Belladonna, (an expressed juice, inspissated.) Properties, same as those of the plant. Dose, gr.  $\frac{1}{4}$ , gradually increased to gr. v. Dilates the pupil when applied to the eye.

EXTRACTUM CATHOLICUM, Extrait Catholique. This epithet is given to pills composed of aloes, black hellebore, and eolocynth, resin of jalap, and scammony. See, also, Extractum colocyntidis compositum.

EXTRACTUM CASCARILLÆ RESINOSUM, Resinous extract of cascarilla, (Cort. cascarillæ in pulv. crass. ℥j Sp. vini rect. ℥iv. Digest for four days; then decant and strain; boil the residuum in ten pints of water to two; filter and evaporate the decoction, and distil the tincture in a retort, till both are thickened; then mix and evaporate to a pilular consistence.) Dose<sup>r</sup> gr. x to gr. xx in pills.

EXTRACTUM CATHARTICUM, E. Colocyntidis compositum—e. Catechu, Catechu—e. Chamæmeli, E. Anthemidis—c. Cicuta, E. Conii.

EXTRACTUM CINCHONÆ, Extract of Cinchona, E. Corticis Peruviani, E. Cinchona Molle, E. of Bark. (A decoction evaporated.) The active principles are similar to those of the bark in substance; but it is not so effectual—owing to the chymical change induced in the drug, during the boiling. When reduced, by drying, to a state fit for being powdered, it is called the Hard Extract of Bark, Extractum Corticis Peruviani durum, E. Cinchona durum. Dose, gr. x to ℥ss.

EXTRACTUM CINCHONÆ RESINOSUM, E. Cinchona lancifolia, E. Cinchona rubra resinosa, Resinous Extract of Bark, E. Cinchona Resinae. The aqueo-spirituous extract contains both the extractive and resin of the bark. Dose, gr. x. to xxx.

EXTRACTUM COLOCYNTHIDIS, Extract of Colocyynth. A cathartic, in the dose of from gr. v to ℥ss.

EXTRACTUM COLOCYNTHIDIS COMPOSITUM, Extractum Catharticum, E. Catholicum, E. Quercetani. Compound Extract of Colocyynth (Colocyynth. pulp. concis. ʒvj. Aloes spicat. ext. contrit. ʒiiss. Scammon. Gum-Resin cont. ʒss. Cardamom. scm. contrit. ʒj. Sp. Vin. ten. ℥bj.) Macerate the pulp in the spirit, at a gentle heat, for four days; strain; add the aloes and scammony; then distil off the spirit and mix in the cardamom seeds. Lond. Ph. It is a powerful cathartic and is used in obstinate visceral obstructions, &c. Dose, gr. vj to ℥ss.

EXTRACTUM CONII, E. Cicuta, Succus cicuta spissatus, Extract of Hemlock, Succus spissatus conii maculati. (Expressed juice, inspissated, without defecation.) Employed in the same cases as the Conium. Dose, gr. iij to ℥j.

EXTRACTUM CONVULVULI JALAPÆ, E. jalapæ—e. Corticis Peruviani, E. Cinchona—e. Cinchona.

EXTRACTUM ELATERII, Elaterium, Extract of Elaterium. (The fecula of the expressed juice.) It is violently cathartic, hydragogue and sometimes emetic. Dose, gr. ss. every hour till it operates.

EXTRACTUM CACUMINUM GENISTÆ, Extract of Broom Tops. Diuretic and stomachic. Dose, ℥ss to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM GENTIANÆ, Ext. Gentiana lactea, Ext. Radicis Gentianæ, Extract of Gentian. (The evaporated decoction.) Properties like the Gentian. Dose, gr. x to ℥ss.

EXTRACTUM GLYCYRRHIZÆ; Extract of Licquorice. (The evaporated decoction.) It is demulcent. Dose, ad libitum.

Refined Licquorice, which is sold in the form of cylinders, is made by gently evaporating a solution of the pure extract of licquorice with half its weight of Gum Arabic, rolling the mass and cutting it into lengths, and then polishing, by rolling them together in a box.

EXTRACTUM HÆMATOXYLI, E. Hamatoxyli Campechiani, E. Scobis Hamatoxyli, Extract of Logwood. (The evaporated decoction.) It is astringent. Dose, gr. x to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM RADICIS HELLEBORI NIGRI, Ext. of Black Hellebore root, E. Hellebori nigri. (The evaporated decoction.) In large doses, this is cathartic; in smaller, diuretic, resolvent (?) and emmenagogue (?). Dose, as a cathartic, gr. x to ℥j; as an emmenagogue, &c. gr. iij to gr. x.

EXTRACTUM HUMULI, Extract of hops, (the evaporated decoction.) It is tonic, anodyne (?), diuretic (?). Dose, gr. v to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM HYOSCYAMI, Extract of Henbane, Succus spissatus Hyoscyami nigri, Saec. Spiss. Hyoscyami. (The expressed juice, inspissated without defecation. Its virtues are narcotic. Dose, gr. v to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM JALAPÆ, E. Convolvuli Jalapæ, E. Jalapii, Extract of Jalap, E. Jalapi. (A spirituous tincture, distilled; and an aqueous decoction evaporated; the residua being mixed together: kept both soft and hard.) It is cathartic and hydragogue. Dose, gr. x to ℥j.

EXTRACTUM JALAPÆ RESINOSUM, Resinous Extract of Jalap. This is cathartic.

EXTRACTUM LACTUÆ, Extract of Lettuce, Succus spissatus Lactacæ sativæ. (Leaves of fresh lettuce ℔j; beat them in a stone mortar, sprinkling them with water; then express the juice and evaporate, without allowing it to subside, until it acquires a proper degree of consistence.) It is said to be narcotic and diaphoretic. Dose, gr. iij to gr. x.

An extract is, sometimes, made from the juice of the wild lettuce, Lactuca virosa, which is regarded as diuretic.

EXTRACTUM NUCIS VOMICÆ SPIRITUOSUM, See Strychnos nux vomica.

EXTRACTUM OPII, E. Opii aquosum, E. Thebicum, Extract of Opium, E. Opii gammosum, Laudanum opiatum sem simplex, Opium colatum seu deparatum. (A watery solution defecated and evaporated.) Dose, gr. ss. to gr. v.

EXTRACTUM PAPAVERIS, E. Papaveris somniferi, E. Papaveris albi, Extract of white poppy. (The decoction evaporated.) It possesses nearly the same virtues as opium, but is weaker. Dose, gr. ij to ℥j.

EXTRACTUM PANCHYMOGOSUM, A drastic medicine, composed of colocynt, bruised with its seeds; senna bruised; black hellebore root, Agaric, Scammony in powder, Extract of Aloes and powder of Diarrhodon.

EXTRACTUM PULGANS, see Hedera helix—e. Quercetani, E. Colocynthidis compositum.

EXTRACTUM CORTICIS QUERCUS, Extract of oak bark. (The decoction, evaporated.) It is astringent and tonic.

EXTRACTUM RHEI, Extract of Rhabarb. Uses, like those of the powdered root. Dose, gr. x to ʒss.

EXTRACTUM RUDII, Extract of RADIUS, (F.)

Extrait de Radium. Pills, made of Colocynth, agaric, scammony, Roots of black hellebore and jalap, socotrine aloes, cinnamon, mace, cloves, and alcohol.

EXTRACTUM RUTÆ GRAVEOLENTIS, E. foliorum Rutæ, Extract of Rue, Extractum Rutæ. (A decoction evaporated.) Tonic, stomachic. The volatile oil being dissipated in the boiling; this is not a good preparation. Dose, gr. x to ℥j.

EXTRACTUM FOLIORUM SABINÆ, Extract of Savine. (A decoction evaporated.) Tonic. The same remarks may be made on this preparation as on the last. Dose, gr. x to ʒss.

EXTRACTUM SARSAPARILLÆ, Extract of Sarsaparilla. (A strained decoction, evaporated.) Virtues the same as those of the powdered root. Dose, gr. x to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM SATURNI, Goulard's, Liquor plumbi subacetatis—e. Scobis hæmatoxyli, E. hæmatoxyli.

EXTRACTUM STRAMONII, Extract of Stramonium. (Seeds of stramonium, ℔j, boiling water, one gallon. Mucerate for four hours in a vessel slightly covered, near the fire; then take them out and braise them in a stone mortar and return them again to the fluid when they are bruised. Boil the liquor down to 4 pints, and strain while it is hot. Finally, evaporate to a proper thickness. Ph. L.) Used as a narcotic in asthma and other spasmodic affections. Dose, gr. ij to gr. x.

EXTRACTUM TARAXACI, Ext. Herba et Radicis Taraxaci, Extract of Dandelion. (A strained decoction evaporated.) It has been considered deobstruent, laxative, and diuretic. Dose, gr. x to ʒj.

EXTRACTUM THEBAICUM, E. Opii.

EXTRACTUM VALERIANÆ, Extract of Valerian. (An expressed decoction, evaporated.) The virtues of the valerian being dependent upon its essential oil, this is an objectionable preparation. Dose, gr. x to ʒj.

There are some other extracts in the American and other Pharmacopœias, but they are prepared in the ordinary mode and possess merely the virtues of the plants. They are, besides, generally of an unimportant character.

EXTRAIT, Extract—e. Alcoholic de noix vomique, see Strychnos nux vomica—e. des Fruits, Rob.

EXTRAÑEOUS BODY, Corpus extraneum, C. cæterum, C. aliènum, (F.) Corps étranger. Any solid, liquid, or gaseous substance, inanimate or animate, proceeding from without or formed in the body; and which constitutes no part of the body, but occupies in the substance of the textures or some of the cavities, a place foreign to it.

Extraneous bodies may be grouped as in the following table:

|                   |   |  |
|-------------------|---|--|
| INANIMATE BODIES. | <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Proceeding from without.</li> <li>2. Formed in the body.</li> </ol> | <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>These are numberless. They may be introduced by the natural ways or by accidental openings.</li> <li>Calculi.</li> <li>Effusion of blood, pus, urine, or air, into parts not naturally containing them.</li> <li>Cysts, &amp;c. of every kind developed in the different organs.</li> </ol> |
|                   |   |  |

EXTRAVASATION, Extravasatio, from extra, 'out of,' and vasa, 'vessels.' Escape of fluids from the vessels containing them, and infiltration or effusion of those fluids into the surrounding textures.

EXTREMITY, Extremitas; the end or termination of a thing. The limbs have been so called,—as the upper and lower extremities. It has been, also, used to express the last moments of life; as when we say, a patient is in 'extremity,' (F.) le malade est à l'extrémité, à toute extrémité. See Membrum.

EXTRINSIC, Extrin'secus. That which comes from without. This term has been used for muscles, which surround certain organs and attach them to the neighbouring parts; in order to distinguish them from other muscles, which enter into the intimate composition of these organs, and which have been named intrinsic. Thus, there are extrinsic and intrinsic muscles of the tongue, ear, &c.

EXTROVERSI, Exstrophia.

EXTUBERANTIA, Protuberance.

EXTUBERATIO, Protuberance.

EXTUMEFACTIO, Swelling.

EXTUS'SIO, from ex and tussis, 'a cough.' 'I cough with expectation.'

EXU'BER, from ex, 'out of,' 'devoid of, and u'bera, 'the breasts;' Apogalactos, 'a child, which has been weaned.'

EXULCERATIO, Ecthlimma, Ulceration.

EXUMBLICATIO, Exomphalos.

EXUSTIO, Cauterization.

EYE, Teuton. Auge, ἄλλος, Oculus, Ops, Omma, Ophthalm'os, Illos, Op'tilos, (Doric.) (F.) Eil. The eye is the immediate organ of vision. It is seated in the orbit, whilst its dependencies, called, by Haller, Tulam'ina Oculi, occupy the circumference of the cavity, and are composed of the eyebrows, the eyelids, cilia, glands of Meibomius, &c. The Bell, Globe, or Bulb of the Eye, is covered anteriorly by the tunica conjunctiva; is moved by six muscles, four straight and two oblique, and is constituted of membranes, as the sclerotic, cornea, choroid, Tunica Jacobi, retina, iris, hyaloid, and in the fœtus, the membrana pupillaris;—and of fluids, called Humours or Media,—the aqueous, crystalline, and vitreous. The vessels of the eye proceed from the ophthalmic artery. The nerves, except the optic, are chiefly furnished from the ophthalmic ganglion. The following are the dimensions, &c. of the organ, on the authorities of Petit, Young, Gordon, and Brewster:

|   |     |        |              |
|---|-----|--------|--------------|
| Length of the antero-posterior diameter of the eye,   | -   | -      | 0.91         |
| Vertical chord of the cornea,   | -   | -      | 0.45         |
| versed sine of the cornea,  | -   | -      | 0.11         |
| Horizontal chord of the cornea,   | -   | -      | 0.47         |
| Size of pupil seen through the cornea,  | -   | -      | 0.27 to 0.13 |
| Size of pupil diminished by magnifying power of cornea to,                                  | -   | -      | 0.25 to 0.13 |
| Radius of the anterior surface of the crystalline,  | -   | -      | 0.30         |

| Principal focal distance of lens,   | -   | -      | 1.73         |
| Distance of the centre of the optic nerve from the foramen centrale , of Sömmerring, | -   | -      | 0.11         |
| Distance of the iris from the cornea,   | -   | -      | 0.10         |
| Distance of the iris from the anterior surface of the crystalline,                          | -   | -      | 0.02         |
| Field of vision above a horizontal line,  | 50° | } 120° |              |
| Field of vision below a horizontal line,  | 70° |        |              |
| Field of vision in a horizontal plane,  | -   | 150°   |              |
| Diameter of the crystalline in a woman above fifty years of age,                            | -   | -      | 0.378        |
| Diameter of the cornea,   | -   | -      | 0.400        |
| Thickness of the crystalline,   | -   | -      | 0.172        |
| Thickness of the cornea,  | -   | -      | 0.042        |

EYEBRIGHT, Euphrasia officinalis.

EYE GLASS, Scaphium oculare—e. Gum of the, Chassie—e. Lashes, Cilia—e. Salve, Singleton's, Unguentum hydrargyri nitrico-oxydi; Eye-salve, Smellome's, see Cupri sabacetis—e. Sight of the Pupil.

EYESTONE. The shelly opercula of small turbinidæ. Used at Guernsey to get things out of the eyes. Being put into the inner corner of the eye, under the eyelid, it will work its way out at the outward corner, and bring out any strange substance with it.—Gray.

EYE OF TYPHON, Scilla—e. Water, common, Liquor zinci sulphatis cum camphorâ—e. Water, blue, Liquor cupri ammoniati—e. Watery, Epi-phora.

F.

FABA ÆGYPTIACA, Nymphæa nelumbo—f. Cathartica, Jatropha curcas—f. Crasssa, Sedum telephium—f. Febrifuga, Ignatia amara—f. Græca, Diospyros lotus—f. Indica, Ignatia amara—f. Pechurim, Tetranthera pechurim—f. Purgatrix, Ricinus communis—f. Sancti Ignatii, Ignatia amara—f. Suilla, Hyoscyamus.

FABAGELLE, Zygophyllum fagabo.

FABARIA CRASSULA, Sedum telephium.

FACE, Facies, Vultus, Prosôpon. The face is the anterior part of the head. It is formed of 13 bones, viz. the two superior maxillary, the two malar, the two ossa nasi, the two ossa unguis, the vomere, the two ossa spongiosa inferiora, the two palate bones, and the inferior maxillary, without including the frontal portion of the os frontis, and the 32 teeth, which may be considered to form part of it. Its numerous muscles are chiefly destined for the organs of sight, hearing, taste, and smell. Its arteries proceed from the external carotid; its veins end in the jugular, and its nerves draw their origin immediately from the brain.

The face experiences alterations in disease, which it is important to attend to. It is yellow in jaundice, pale and puffy in dropsy; and its expression is very different according to the seat of irritation, so that, in infants, by an attention to medical physiognomy, we can often detect the seat of the disease.

Hippocrates has well depicted the change, which it experiences in one exhausted by long sickness, by great evacuations, excessive hunger, watchfulness, &c., threatening dissolution. Hence this state has been called the Facies Hippocratica, or Facies Cadaver'iea, F. Tortu'alis. In this, the nose is pinched; the eyes are sunk; the temples hollow; the ears cold, and retracted; the skin of the forehead tense, and dry; the complexion livid; the lips pendent, relaxed, and cold, &c.

The term Face (F.) is likewise given to one of the aspects of an organ; thus, we say, the superior face of the stomach.

FACE, INJECTÉE, see Vultuex—f. Vultuense, see Vultuex.

FACETTE. (F.) Diminutive of face. A small face: a small, circumscribed portion of the surface of a bone, as the articular facette of a bone.

FACIES, Face—f. Cadaverica, see Face—f. Concava pedis, Sole—f. Hippocratica, see Face—f. Inferior pedis, Sole—f. Tortualis, see Face.

FACIAL, Facialis; belonging to, or connected with, the face.

The FACIAL ARTERY, Labial artery, Angular artery, or external maxillary, A. palato-labial—(Ch.); is a branch of the external carotid, which rises beneath the digastric, and is distributed to almost every part of the face. It furnishes the inferior palatal, submental, superior labial, inferior labial, and dorsalis nasi.

FACIAL NERVE, Portio dura of the 7th pair, Ramus durior septimæ conjugatiouis, Symphatheticus minor, Respiratory nerve of the face, Par septimum sive faciale, Communicans faciei nervus. This nerve arises from the inferior and lateral part of the tuber annulare, in the groove which separates it from the medulla oblongata; external to the corpora olivaria, and by the side of the auditory nerve. It issues from the cranium by the meatus auditorius internus; enters the aqueduct of Fallopius, receives a branch of the vidian nerve, sends off filaments to the internal muscles of the malleus and stapes; furnishes that called Corda Tympani; makes its exit at the foramen stylo-mastoideum, and divides into two branches—the temporo-facial, and cervico-facial.

The FACIAL VEIN, Palato-labial—(Ch.) arises between the skin and frontalis muscle, and bears the name V. Frontalis; (F.) Veine frontale ou V. préparée. It then descends vertically, towards the greater angle of the eye, where it is called Angularis; and afterwards descends, obliquely, on the face, to open into the internal jugular, after having received branches, which correspond with those of the facial artery. It is only in the latter part of its course that it is called Facial Vein. Chaussier calls the external carotid artery, Facial Artery.

FACIENT, (faciens), 'making,' from facio, 'I make.' A suffix, as in Calefacient, Rubefacient, &c. ('Warm making,' 'red making.')

FACTICE, Factitious.

FACTITIOUS, Fartitius, (F.) Factice. That which is made by art, in opposition to what is natural or found already existing in nature. Thus, we say, factitious mineral waters, for artificial mineral waters.

FACULTY, Facultas, Power, Virtue. The power of executing any function or act. The collection of the intellectual faculties constitutes the understanding. We say, also, vital faculties for vital properties, &c.

FÆCES. Plural of Fæx; Chersæ, 'the dregs of any thing,' Feculence, (q. v.) 'The alvine evacuations are so called; (F.) Garde-robés: the excrements: Fæcal matter. See Excrement.

FÆCOSITAS, Feculence.

FÆCULA, Fecula.

FÆCULENTIA, Feculence.

FÆCUNDATIO, Fecundatio.

FÆCUNDITAS, Fecundity.

FÆX, Feculence.

FAGARA OCTAN'DRA, from figus, 'the beech,' which it resembles. The systematic name of the plant, which affords Tucamahaca, a resinous substance, that exudes from the tree. Tucamahaca, which has a fragrant, delightful smell, was formerly in high estimation, as an ingredient in warm, stimulating plasters, and was given internally like the balsams generally. The East India Tucamahac, Balsamum Viride, O'leanu Ma'rie, Balsamum Calaba, Balsamum naviæ, Baume vert, is yielded by the Calophyllum inophyllum.

The FAGARA PIPERITA, (F.) Fagarier poixré; a native of Japan, possesses the qualities of pepper, and is used, as such, by the Japanese. It is, also, employed as a rubefacient cataplasm.

FAGARIER POIVRÉ, Fagara octandra.

FAGOPYRUM, Polygonum fagopyrum.

FAGUS CASTANEA. The systematic name of the Chestnut Tree. Castanea, C. vulgaris, Castanea vesca, Lo'pina, Mota, Glans Jovis THEOPHRASTI, Jupiter's Acorn, Sardinian Acorn; the Common Chestnut, (F.) Chataignier commun. Family, Amentaceæ. Sex. Syst. Monœcia Polyandria. The Chestnut, Castanea nux, (F.) Chataigne, is farinaceous and nutritious, but not easy of digestion.

FAGUS CASTANEA PUMILA. The Chin'capin, Castanea Pumila, (F.) Chataignier nain. The nut of this American tree is eaten like the chestnut. The bark has been used in intermittents.

FAGUS SYLVATICA. The systematic name of the Beech, Fagus, Oryza, Balan'da, Valanida; the Beech Tree, (F.) Hêtre. The Beech-nut or Beech-mast, (F.) Faine, affords an oil, by expression, which is of a palatable character, and is eaten in some places instead of butter. It has been supposed to be a good vernifuge, but it is no better than any mild oil.

FAIBLESSE, Debility.

FAIM, Hunger—f. Canine, Boulimia—f. de Loup, Fames lupina.

FAINE. See Fagus sylvatica.

FAINTING-FIT, Syncope.

FAIRBURN, MINERAL WATERS OF. The mineral waters at this place, which is in the county of Ross, in Scotland, are sulphureous, and frequented.

FAISCEAU PETIT, Fasciculus.

FALCADINA, Scherlievo.

FALCIFORM, Falifor'nis, Drepanoides, from falx, 'a scythe,' and formu, 'shape.' Having the shape of a scythe. This term has been applied to different parts. See Falx and Sinus.

The FALCIFORM EXPANSION OF THE FASCIA LATA is the scythe-shaped reflection of the fascia lata, which forms, outwards and upwards, the opening for the vena saphæna, and is attached to the crural arch by its superior extremity, forming the anterior paries of the canal of the same name.

FALLTRANCK or FALTRANCK, (G.) literally, a drink against falls. A vulnerary. It is a mixture of several aromatic and slightly astringent plants, which grow chiefly in the Swiss Alps, and hence the name—Vulnéraire Suisse—given to such dried plants, cut into fragments. They are called, also, Espèces Vulnéraires and Thé Suisse

The infusion of the Falltranck is aromatic, and slightly agreeable, but of no use in the cases for which it has been particularly recommended.

FAISA VIA, False passage.

FALSE, Falsus, Spurious, Bastard, Nathus, Pseudo, (F.) Faux. This epithet has been frequently added to peripneumony, pleurisy, &c., to designate a disease similar to these, but less severe. Most commonly, a severe catarrh or pleurodynia has received the name. See Peripneumonia Notha.

FALSE PASSAGE, Falsa Via, (F.) Fausse Route. An accidental passage, made in surgical operations, and particularly in introducing the catheter. The catheter is sometimes passed through into the rectum.

We say, also, False Rihs, False Ribubarb, &c.

FALSE WATERS, Hydrallante, Falsc Deliv'ery. Water, which sometimes collects between the amnion and chorion, and is commonly discharged before the birth of the child.

FALSIFICATION, Adulteratio, from falsus, 'false,' and facere, 'to make.' A fraudulent imitation or alteration of an aliment or medicine by different admixtures. It is synonymous with adulteration and sophistication.

TABLE OF COMMON FALSIFICATIONS OF SOME OF THE MOST USEFUL DRUGS, &c.

| MEDICINES.             | ADULTERATIONS.  | MODE OF DETECTION.   |
|------------------------|---|--|
| ACACIÆ GUMMI.          | Gum Senegal.Sulphuric Acid.                                   | G. S. is clammy and tenacious. The A. G. is perfectly soluble in water, and its solution limpid. Acetate of barytes causes a white precipitate.  |
| ACETUM DESTILLATUM.    | Nitric Acid.Copper.Lead.                           | By evaporating it, the residuum deliquesces, when thrown on burning charcoal. Supersaturate with ammonia—a blue colour is produced. Sulphuretted hydrogen causes a dark precipitate.   |
| ACIDUM HYDROCHLORICUM. | Sulphuric Acid.  | Deposites by evaporation the salts it may contain; precipitates with solution of hydrochlorate of baryta if it contains sulphuric acid.  |
| — NITRICUM.            | Muriatic and Sulphuric Acid.   | The presence of chlorine is indicated by a precipitate with nitrate of silver: that of sulphuric acid by the same result with hydrochlorate of baryta.   |
| ACIDUM SULPHURICUM.    | Muriatic and Nitric Acids.   | The presence of muriatic and nitric acid is indicated by the smell, when the acid is strongly heated.  |
| — CITRICUM.            | Tartaric and Oxalic Acids.   | The presence is indicated by forming a granular sediment in a concentrated solution of a neutral salt of potassa.  |
| ÆTHER RECTIFICATUS.    | Too dilute.Sulphuric Acid.Alcohol.                 | Its S. G. detects this. By acetate of barytes. Precipitate white. With phosphorus a milky instead of limpid solution is formed.  |
| AQUA AMMONIÆ.          | Carbonic Acid.   | A precipitation occurs on adding a solution of muriate of lime.  |
| AMMONIÆ CARBONAS.      | - - - - -   | It should be capable of complete volatilization by heat.   |
| AMMONIACUM.            | - - - - -   | The Gutta Ammoniaca are white, clear, and dry. The lump Ammoniacum , lapis Ammoniaci , is often adulterated with common resin.  |
| ANTIMONII SULPHURETUM. | Lead.Arsenic.Manganese and Iron.Copper. | It ought to be entirely volatilized by a red heat. Imparts a foliated texture, and is not vaporizable. A smell of garlic is emitted when thrown on live coals, &c. Are not vaporizable. The solution assumes a blue colour, when supersaturated with ammonia. It may be suspected when the salt deliquesces.                     |
| ARGENTI NITRAS.        | Nitrate of Potassa.  | The adulteration with nitrate of potassa is easily recognised by the fracture of a stick, which is radiated when pure and granular if adulterated; or by precipitating a solution of the salts with a sufficient quantity of muriatic acid, and evaporating the clear liquor: the nitrate of potassa or other salts will remain. |
| ARSENICUM ALBUM.       | Chalk, Sulphate of Lime, Sulphate of Barytes.                            | Not volatilizable by heat.   |
| BALSAMUM PERUVIANUM.   | A mixture of Resin and some Volatile Oil, with Benzoin.                  | Not easily detected.   |
| CALUMBA.               | - - - - -   | The true is distinguishable from the false Calumba by adding to an infusion of the root, a few drops of solution of sulph. iron, which gives to the infusion of the false Calumba, a greenish black colour; but produces no change in the other.   |
| CAPSICUM.              | Muriate of Soda.   | This disposes it to deliquesce.  |
| CAYENNE Pepper.        | Red Lead.  | Digest in acetic acid, and add a solution of sulphuret of ammonia—a dark-coloured precipitate will be produced.  |

| MEDICINES.   | ADULTERATIONS.   | MODE OF DETECTION.   |
|--|--|--|
| CASTOREUM.Castor.                                     | A mixture of dried blood, gum ammoniac, and a little real castor, stuffed into the scrotum of a goat.    | Smell and taste will generally detect the fraud.   |
| CERA FLAVA.Yellow Wax.                                | Earth or Peasemeal.  | May be suspected when the cake is brittle and colour grayish.  |
| CERA ALBA.White Wax.                                  | Resin.   | Put it in cold alcohol, which will dissolve the resin, without acting on the wax.  |
| CINCHONA.Bark.  | Tallow.  | Is known by the greater softness and unctuousity and its smell when melted. Turmeric is generally added in this case to obviate the paleness.  |
| COCCUS.Cochineal.                                     | White Lead. - - -Tallow. - - -This is variously adulterated.                                     | Melt the wax, the oxide will subside.  |
| COPAIBA.Balsam of Copaiva.                            | Pieces of dough formed in moulds, and coloured with cochineal.   | The cake has not its ordinary translucency.  |
| CROCUS.Saffron.                                       | Od. - - - -  | Can only be detected by practice, and examining into the quantity of quinine or cinchonine it contains.  |
| CUBEBA.Cubebs.  | Fibres of smoked Beef.Petals of the Calendula of scinalis , and Carthamus Tinctorius . | Throw it into water, the adulteration will appear.   |

| MAGNESIA.  | Lime. - - - -  | Add to the tincture a few drops of spirit of nitre, and dilute with water; the guaiacum is precipitated—the adulteration floats in the white stræ.   |
| MAGNESIE SUB-CARBONAS.Carbonate of Magnesia.          | Sulphuret of Lime. -   | Digest in acetic acid; add sulphuret of ammonia, which will produce a dark-coloured precipitate. It should be totally volatilized by heat.   |
| MANNA.   | Chalk. - - - -   | A precipitation will be produced by the carbonate of potass, from a solution made by boiling the suspected sample with a small portion of muriate of ammonia in distilled water; or, the presence of deuto-chloride of mercury is indicated, by warming gently a small quantity of calomel in alcohol, filtering and adding to the clear liquor some lime water, by which a reddish yellow precipitate is afforded. When calomel is rubbed with a fixed alkali it ought to become intensely black, and not exhibit any orange hue. |
| MORPHIA ET EJUS SALES.Morphine and its Salts.         | Gypsum. - - - -  | Digest in acetic acid, and add sulphuret of ammonia—a black precipitate will be produced.  |

|  |  | The tests of its purity are—that it is perfectly soluble in ether. Heated on a piece of glass or porcelain, it sublimes without residuum.  |
|  |  | B. root is of a paler colour and less compact texture, and does not easily burn at the flame of a candle.  |
|  |  | Detected by the solution in dilute sulphuric acid, affording a precipitate with oxalate of ammonia.  |
|  |  | Gives off, when moistened, the smell of sulphuretted hydrogen.   |
|  |  | Detected by adding dilute sulphuric acid to the suspected substance, when, if chalk be present, there will be a white insoluble precipitate.   |
|  |  | Boil in distilled water, and test the solution by a barytic and oxalic reagent.  |
|  |  | A fictitious article, consisting of honey or sugar mixed with scammony, is sometimes sold for it; but the colour, weight, transparency, and taste detect it.   |
|  |  | Morphia and its salts, when placed in contact with nitric acid, are coloured red; with per salts of iron, blue.  |
|  |  | They are perfectly soluble in warm alcohol, and acidulated warm water. When morphine is mixed with narcotine, the adulteration is ascertained by mixing them with sulphuric ether, which dissolves the narcotine, without sensibly affecting the morphine.   |
|  |  | The bag must not appear to have been opened.   |
|  |  | This may be suspected, if it emits a fetid smoke when inflamed.  |
|  |  | Discovered by its melting and running, before it inflames.   |
|  |  | Rub with water. The metallic particles will subside.   |

FALTRANCK, Faltranck.

FALX. Anatomists have given this name to several membranous reflections having the shape of a falx or scythe.

1. The FALX CEREBRI, (F.) Faux de cerveau, Septum Cerebri, Falx major, Vertical superior longitudinal process, Mediastinum cerebri, Repli longitudinal de la méninge, (Ch.) Processus falciiformis dura matris. The greatest process of the dura mater. It extends from the fore to the hind part of the skull, on the median line; is broad behind and narrow before, and is lodged in the groove, which separates the hemispheres from each other—the interlobar fissure. At its superior part is seated the longitudinal sinus, (superior), and at its lower, corresponding to the edge of the scythe, the inferior longitudinal sinus. Its anterior extremity is attached to the crista galli; its posterior is continuous with the tentorium cerebelli, and contains the straight sinus.

2. FALX CEREBELLI, (F.) Faux du cervelet, Falx minor, Septum Cerebelli, Septum median du cervelet, (Ch.) Processus falciiformis Cerebelli, Septum parvum occipitale, is a triangular process of the dura mater opposite the internal occipital protuberance. Its base is attached to the middle of the tentorium, and its top or apex bifurcates, to proceed to the sides of the foramen magnum. Its convex surface is towards the cranium, and its concave in the fissure or groove, which separates the two lobes of the cerebellum.

3. The GREAT FALX OF THE PERITONEUM, Falx Peritonæi maxima, (F.) Grande faux du péritoine, Faux de la Veine Ombilicale, Falx of the umbilical vein, is a reflection of the peritoneum, which ascends from the umbilicus to the anterior and inferior surface of the liver.

The LESSER FALCES OF THE PERITONEUM, Falces Peritonæi minime, (F.) Petites faux du péritoine, are the lateral ligaments of the liver and the reflections, which the peritoneum forms, raised up by the umbilical arteries.

FALX MAJOR, Falx cerebri—f. Minor, Falx cerebelli—f. of the Umbilical Vein, Falx, great, of the Peritoneum.

FAMELICA FEBRIS, from fames, 'hunger.' Fever accompanied with insatiable hunger.—Sylvius.

FAMES, Hunger—f. Bovina, Boulimia—f. Canina, Boulimia.

FAMES LUPINA, Lycorex'is, λυκορέξις, Faim de Loup. Authors have described, under this name, a kind of Bulimia, (q. v.) or depravation of the digestive function, in which the patient eats voraciously, and passes his food, almost immediately afterwards, per anum.

FAMIGERATIS'SIMUM EMPLASTRUM, from fama, 'fame,' and gero, 'I wear.' A plaster, extolled in ague, and made of aromatic, irritating substances. It was applied to the wrist.

FANCY MARK, Nævus.

FANG, Radix.

FANON, (F.) from (G.) Fahne, 'a banner,' 'ensign,' 'standard.' Ferula, Lectulus, Thorulus stramineus. A splint of a particular shape, employed in fractures of the thigh and leg to keep the bones in contact.

The Fanons were divided into true and false. The true consists of a cylinder of straw, strongly surrounded with a cord or riband, in the centre of which a stick is usually placed to ensure its solidity. The false consists of a thick piece of linen, made flat, like a compress, and folded at the extremities. It was placed between the fractured limb and the true fanon. The Drap-fanon is a large piece of common cloth placed beneath the fractured limb, and in which the fanons or lateral splints are rolled.

FANTOM or PHANTOM, from φαντασμα, 'a spectre.' (F.) Phantom, Fantome, Mannequin. This word has two acceptations. It means the spectres and images, which the imagination presents to the sick, when asleep or awake; and, also, the figure on which surgeons practise the application of bandages, or the accoucheur the manual part of midwifery.

FARCTURA, FARTURA, from farcire, 'to stuff.' The operation of introducing medicinal substances into the cavities of animals, or of fruits, which have been previously emptied.

FARCY GLANDERS, See Equinia.

FARD, Paint,

FARFARA, Tussilago—f. Bechium, Tussilago.

FARFARELLA, Tussilago.

FARINA, Alphiton, Crimmon, Al'eton, Alcu'ron, Ale'ma, from far, 'corn,' of which it is made. Meal or flour. The powder, obtained by grinding the seeds of the gramineous, leguminous, and cucurbitaceous plants in particular. It is highly nutritious, and is much used, dietetically as well as medicinally.

FARINA AMYGDALARUM. See Amygdala.

FARINA TRITICI, wheaten flour; F. Secal'is, Rye flour or meal; F. Hordei, Barley meal; F. Avenacea, Oat meal, &c.

FARINÆ RESOLVENTES, (F.) Farines résolutives. This name was formerly given to a mixture of the farina of four different plants; the lupine, lupinus albus, the Errum Errilia, the Vicia faba and the Barley, Hordeum distichum. They were recommended to form cataplasms.

FARINACEOUS, Farina'ceus, Farin'us, Mealy, Having the appearance or nature of farina. A term given to all articles of food, which contain farina. The term Farinacea includes all those substances, called cerealia, legumina, &c., which contain farina, and are employed as nutriment. In Pathology, the epithet farinaceous, (F.) farineux, is applied to certain eruptions, in which the epidermis exfoliates in small particles similar to farina.

FARINARIUM, Alica.

FARINÆ RESOLUTIVES, Farinæ resolutives.

FARINOSUS, Farinaceous.

FART, Sax. fartc, from Teut. fahren, 'to go.'—fart, 'a voyage' (G.) Furz, (L.) bdellus, Crepitus (q. v.), (F.) Pet. A sonorous or other discharge of wind from behind. A low word, but of respectable parentage.

FARTURA, Fartura.

FAS'CIA, from fascis, 'a bundle.' Ligatio, Ligatu'ra, Alligatu'ra, Anades'mus, Vin'cula, Sparganon, Epidemas, a bandage, (q. v.), fillet, roller, ligature, (q. v.) The aponeurotic expansions of muscles, which bind parts together are, likewise, so termed:—Aponeurosis, Perimysium.

FASCIA APONEUROTICA FEMORIS, Fascia lata aponeurosis—f. Capitalis, Bonnet d'Hippocrate—f. Capitis, Diadema—f. Digitalis, Gantlet—f. Diphthalmica, Binoculus—f. Dividens, Dividing bandage.

FASCIA ILIACA, Il'iac aponeurosis. An aponeurosis, which proceeds from the tendon of the psoas minor, or which arises from the anterior surface of the psoas magnus, when the former muscle does not exist. It is attached, externally, to the inner edge of the crest of the ilium; below, and anteriorly—on one side, to the crural arch, sending an expansion to the fascia transversalis; and on the other, continuous with the deep-seated lamina of the fascia lata, which forms the posterior paries of the crural canal. Within and behind, the fascia iliaca is attached to the brim of the pelvis and is continuous with the aponeurosis, which M. Jules Cloquet has called Pelvician. The iliac aponeurosis covers the iliac and psoas muscles, which it separates from the peritoneum.

FASCIA INGUINALIS, Spica.

FASCIA LATA. A name given by anatomists to an aponeurosis, and to a muscle.

The FASCIA LATA APONEUROSIS, Fascia aponeurotica fem'oris, Crural or Fem'oral Aponeurosis, is the most extensive in the body, and envelops all the muscles of the thigh. Above, it is attached to the outer edge of the ilia; before, it arises from the crural arch by two distinct laminae, separated by the femoral vessels and becoming confounded a little below the part where the great vena saphæna opens into the crural vein. Of these two laminae, the one is more anterior and thicker than the other, and may be considered as a prolongation of the aponeurosis of the external oblique. It is intimately united to Poupart's ligament. The other, which is thinner, is behind, and deeper seated; and, after its union with the former, proceeds to be inserted into the pubis. Inferiorly, the fascia lata becomes confounded with the tendon of the triceps, and is attached to the external tuberosity of the tibia. The use of the fascia lata is, like that of other aponeuroses, to strengthen the action of the muscles, &c.

The MUSCLE FASCIA LATA, Tensor vaginæ fem'oris, Fascia'lis, Membrano'sus, Ilio-aponeurosi-femoral, Musculus aponeurosis vel fascia late, Ilio-aponeuroti-femoral—(Ch.) Tenseur de l'aponévrose femorale. A muscle, situate at the upper and outer part of the thigh. It arises, above, from the outer part of the anterior and superior spine of the ilium; and is inserted, below, between the two laminae of the fascia lata, which it stretches and raises when it contracts.

FASCIA SCULTETI, Bandage of separate strips—f. Semicircularis, Tænia semicircularis—f. Spiralis, Ascia—f. Stellata, Stella.

FASCIA SUPERFICIALIS, Superficial aponeurosis of the abdomen and thigh. (F.) Aponévrose superficielle de l'abdomen et de la cuisse. A very thin aponeurosis, which covers the muscles and aponeuroses of the abdomen; passes before the crural arch, to which it adheres with some degree of force; sends a membranous sheath, which surrounds the spermatic chord; and is continuous with the dartos, which it assists in forming. The fascia superficialis presents, beneath the crural arch, very distinct fibres, whose direction is parallel to the fold of the thigh. It is applied over the fascia lata aponeurosis, and is attached, internally, to the ascending ramus of the ischium, near the root of the corpus cavernosum. Before the descent of the testicle from the abdomen, the fascia superficialis is very manifestly continuous with the Gubernaculum testis.

FASCIA TFORMIS, T. bandage—f. Tortilis, Tourniquet.

FASCIA TRANSVERSALIS, an aponeurosis, which separates the transversalis muscle from the peritoneum in the inguinal region. It arises about the posterior edge of the crural arch, where it seems to be continuous with the aponeurosis of the greater oblique muscle. Above, it is lost in the cellular tissue at the internal surface of the transversalis abdominis.

Within, it is continuous with the outer edge of the tendon of the rectus muscle and Gimbernat's ligament; below, it is continuous with the aponeurosis of the greater oblique and receives an expansion from the Fascia Iliaca. Towards its middle and a little above the crural arch, the fascia transversalis has the wide orifice of a canal, which is occupied, in the female, by the round ligament of the uterus; and in man, furnishes an expansion, that serves as a sheath to the spermatic vessels.

FASCIÆ, Swathing clothes.

FASCIALIS, Fascia lata muscle, Sartorius.

FASCIARUM APPLICATIO, Deligation.

FASCIATIO, Deligation, see Bandage—f. Cucullata. Couvrechef.

FASCICULI TERETES CORDIS, Columnæ carneæ.

FASCICULUS, from fascis, 'a bundle,' Desme'dion, 'a small bundle.' In Anatomy, it is employed in this sense; as a fasciculus of fibres. (F.) Petit Faisceau, Trousseau. In Pharmacy, it means manipulus, Cheiroplethes, χειροπληθής, 'a handful.'—Musa Brassavolus, says,—as much as can be held in two fingers.

FASCICULUS CUNEATUS, Reinforcement, fasciculus of—f. of Reinforcement, Reinforcement, F. of.

FASCINUM, Penis.

FASCIOLA, Bandlette—f. Cinerea, Tuberculum cinereum—f. Hepatica, Distoma hepaticum—f. Humana, Distoma hepaticum—f. Lan- ceolata, Distoma hepaticum.

FASELUS, Phascelus vulgaris.

FASTIDIUM CIBI, Disgust.

FASTIGIUM, Acme.

FASTING, from Sax. fætan, Limo'sis ex- perts protracta, Anorc'ia mirabilis, In'dia, Je- jū'nium. Loss or want of appetite, without any other apparent affection of the stomach; so that the system can sustain almost total abstinence for a long time without faintness. Some wonderful cases of this kind are on record. See Abstinence.

FAT, Pinguedo—f. Mackaw, see Cocos buty- racea.

FATTY, Adipo'sus, Sax. fæt; past participle of fædan, to feed,—adipous. Relating to fat. The cellular system has been called fatty or adipous; from an opinion that, in its areolæ, the fat is deposited. The cellular membrane, however, merely lodges, between its lamellæ and filaments, the vesicles in which the fat is contained.

FATTY OF ADIPOUS VESICLES, Sac'culi adi- po'si. This name is given to small bursæ or membranous vesicles, which inclose the fat and are found situate in the areolæ of the cellular tissue. These vesicles vary much in size. Generally, they are round and globular; and, in certain subjects, receive vessels which are very apparent. They form so many small sacs, without apertures, in the interior of which are filaments, arranged like septa. In fatty sub- jects, the adipous vesicles are very perceptible, being attached to the cellular tissue and neigh- bouring parts by a vascular pedicle. Raspail affirms that there is the most striking analogy between the nature of the adipous granules and that of the amylaceous grains.

ADIPOUS OR FATTY LIC'AMENT. This name has been given to a reflection of the synovial membrane of the knee joint, which passes from the ligamentum patellæ towards the cavity that separates the condyles of the femur.

FATTY OR ADIPOUS MEMBRANE, or adipous tissuc. The subcutaneous cellular tissue, or that containing the fatty or adipous vesicles, (q. v.)

FATTY OR ADIPOUS VESSELS. The vessels connected with the fat. Some anatomists have called Adipous canals, (F.) Conduits adipoux, the vessels to which they attribute the secre- tion of fat.

FATUITAS, Mor'o'sis, Stulti'tia, Stupor mentis, Amen'tia; from fatuus, 'foolish.' Mental imbecility. Idiotism, (q. v.) Dementia, (q. v.)

FAUCES, Pharynx, Throat.

FAUNORUM LUDIBRIA. The sports of the Fauni. Some authors have called thus the incubus; others, epilepsy.

FAUSSE COUCHE, (F.) Vanum partu'ri- um. Some authors have used this term for the expulsion of different bodies constituting false conceptions; such as moles, hydatids, clots of blood, &c. The greater part of accoucheurs use the term synonymously with abortion.

FAUSSE POSITION, (F.) False position. The French use this term, in vulgar language, to indicate that torpor, and tingling, and loss of power over the motion of a part, produced by too strong contraction or painful compres- sion.

FAUSSE ROUTE, False passage.

FAUSTINI PASTILLI. Faustinus's Loz- enges. These were once celebrated. They were composed of burnt paper, quick-lime, oxide of arsenic, sandarach, lentils, &c.

FAUX, False—f. de Cerveau, Falx cerebri—f. du Cervelet, Falx cerebelli—f. Grande du péri- toine, Falx great of the peritoneum—f. Petite du péritoine, Falx lesser of the peritoneum—f. de la Veine ombilicale, Falx great of the perito- neum.

FAVEUX, Favosus.

FAVIFORMIS, Favosus.

FAVOSUS. Similar to a honey-comb, Favi- form'is, Favosus, from favus, Ce'rion, 'a honey- comb,' (F.) Favex. An epithet given to a species of porrigo. Cerion, Favus, means also a state of ulceration, resembling a honey-comb.

FAVUS, Porrigo favosa, see Favosus.

FEATHERFEW, Matricaria.

FEBRICITANS, Febriens, Empyros. One attacked with fever, from febriticare, 'to have a fever.'

FEBRICULA. Diminutive of febris, fever. A term employed to express a slight degree of fever.

FEBRIENS, Febriticans, Feverish.

FEBRICOSUS, Feverish.

FEBRIFUGE, Lcxi-pyret'icus, Pyret'icus, Alexi-pyret'icus, Anti-febri'lis, Anti-pyret'ic, Febrif- ugus, from febris, 'a fever,' and fugere, 'to drive away.' A medicine which possesses the property of abating or driving away fever.

FEBRILE, febri'lis. Relating to fever, as febri'le movement, febri'le pulse, &c.

FEBRIS, Fever—f. Acnestica, Synocha—f. Acuta, Synocha—f. Adeno-meningea, Fever, adeno-meningeal—f. Adeno-nervosa, Plague—

FÉCONDATION, Fecundation.

FÉCONDITÉ, Fecundity.

FEC'ULA or FÆC'ULA, diminutive of fax, 'lie.' An immediate principle of vegetables, composed of hydrogen, oxygen, and carbon. It exists in several plants, and has different names, according to that which furnishes it. When extracted from wheat or barley it is called starch, Amylum, (q. v.) When from the Cycas circinalis, Sago;—from the Orchis morio, Salep. We say, also, Fecula of the Potato, Bryony, Arum, Manioe, &c.

GREEN FECULA. This name is given to a green, solid matter of variable character, which is believed to be resinous, and which renders turbid several kinds of juices, extracted from vegetables. It is, also, called Chlorophylle.

FEC'ULA AMYLACEA, Amylum—f. Marantæ, Arrow root—f. Tapioka, see Jatropha manihot.

FEC'ULENCE, Fæculen'tia, Fæcos'itas, Fæx, Fæces, Lee, Deposit, Dregs. In Pharmacy, feculent, albuminous, or other substances, which are deposited from turbid fluids, are so termed.

FECULENT, Feculentus, Trygodes, 'Foul, dreggy, excrementitious;' as a feculent fluid, feculent evacuations, &c.

FECUNDA'TION, Fecunda'tio, Impregnation, Impregna'tio, Cye'sis, Encye'sis, Encymosia, (F.) Fecundation. The act by which, in organized beings, the germ, contained in the generative organs of the female, receives from the male organs that which is necessary for its development.

FECUN'DITY, Fecun'ditas, (F.) Fecundité. The faculty of reproduction, possessed by organized bodies.

It has been estimated that, throughout a country, taking one marriage with another, not more than 4 children are the result; and in towns only 35 children to 10 marriages.

FEIGNED DISEASES, Simulated diseases, Pretend'ed diseases, (F.) Maladies Dissimulées, M. simulées, M. Feintes, M. supposées. The tricks employed, by impostors, to induce a belief, that they are attacked with diseases when they are not.

These are generally assumed by beggars to obtain alms; by criminals, to escape punishment; and by soldiers, to be exempt from duty.

The following Table exhibits the chief feigned diseases, with the means of detection.

A TABLE OF FEIGNED, PRETENDED, SIMULATED, OR EXCITED DISEASES OR DISQUALIFICATIONS.

| DISEASES, &c.                         | HOW FEIGNED.   | HOW DETECTED.  |
|---------------------------------------|--|--|
| 1. ABORTION.                          | By staining the clothes and body with borrowed blood.  | By constant and minute attention.  |
| 2. ABSTINENCE.                        |  |  |
| 3. AMAUROTIC BLINDNESS.               | By applying the extract of belladonna or the datura stramonium to the eye.   | Amaurosis is characterized by dilated pupil. Where these substances have been applied, the effects will go off in ten days or a fortnight.   |
| 4. APOPLEXY.                          | By falling down as if deprived of sensation and consciousness.   | By powerful stimulants; an electric shock; application of hot water, sternutatories, actual cautery, &c.   |
| 5. CACHEXIA, ANEMIA AND DEBILITY.     | Using substances to make the face appear pale and livid. Indulging freely in wine, and privation of sleep prior to examination.  | By examining if the pulse be strong, and the skin hot, and whether there be loss of appetite or of strength, or swelling of the limbs.   |
| 6. EXCRETION OF CALCULI.              | Putting sand, pebbles, &c. into the urine.   | By the aid of chymistry. We are acquainted with the chymical composition of urinary calculi.   |
| 7. CANCEROUS ULCER.                   | By gluing on a portion of a spleen with the smooth side to the skin, leaving on the outside the appearance of an ulcerated surface.  | By noticing whether there be signs of cachexia, and by attentive examination of the part.  |
| 8. CATALEPSY.                         | By seeming to be suddenly motionless, the joints remaining flexible and external objects making no impression.   | By powerful stimulants as recommended under apoplexy. Letting fall a drop of boiling water on the back. Proposing to use the actual cautery and seeing whether the pulse rise.                         |
| 9. CHOREA.                            | By assuming the convulsive motions of a part which characterize chorea.  | By examining the patient whilst he may imagine himself unobserved, and seeing whether the convulsive motions go on then.   |
| 10. CONTRACTION OF JOINTS IN GENERAL. | - - - - -  | Mode of discrimination sometimes so obscure as to deceive the most practised and attentive.  |
| 11. CONTRACTION OF THE FINGERS.       | - - - - -  | Introduce a cord between the fingers and the palm of the hand, and gradually apply weights so as to expand the fingers. Confine him so that he cannot obtain his food without using his clenched hand. |
| 12. CONVULSIONS.                      | - - - - -  | When feigned, they do not present the rigidity of muscles or the rapidity or action which characterize the real. The mode of detection must be the same as in epilepsy.                                |
| 13. OPAQUE CORNEA.                    | Produced by the application of a strong acid, by acrid powders, as quicklime, &c.Some articles of diet will bring on urticaria or nettle rash , in particular individuals, as shell-fish, bitter almonds, &c. By acrids, acids, or any irritants applied to the surface. An ointment of tartarized antimony causes a painful pustular eruption. See Porrigo , in this list. | The existence of the opacity can be detected by attentive observation.   |
| 14. CUTANEOUS DISEASES.               | Some persons possess the power of suspending or moderating the action of the heart   | By careful examination on the part of practitioner and nurse.  |
| 15. DEATH.                            | - - - - -  | If suspected, the plan, recommended under Apoplexy, will be found most efficacious.  |
| 16. DEAF-DUMBNESS.                    | - - - - -  | The really deaf and dumb acquire an expression of countenance and gestures which it is difficult to assume.  |

| DISEASES, &c.                            | HOW FEIGNED.  | HOW DETECTED.   |
|--|---|---|
| 17. DEAFNESS.                            | It may be assumed or excited by putting a pea in the ear, or by inserting irritants, so as to induce inflammation and temporary loss of function.   | Make a noise when not expected, and see if the countenance varies or pulse rises. Put to sleep by opium, and then fire a pistol close to the ear, when he may be thrown off his guard. Examine the ear to see if any trick has been played there.   |
| 18. DEBILITY, SEE CACHEXIA.              |   |   |
| 19. DEFORMITY.                           | - - - - -   | Examine the part and its articulation, naked, and compare it with the opposite.   |
| 20. DELIVERY.                            | After enlargement produced artificially, a subsidence of the tumefaction; the parts being moistened by borrowed blood and the child of another substituted as the female's own.   | Can only be positively detected by examination, par vagina . Soon after delivery, the vagina will be relaxed and the lochial discharge be flowing—in greater abundance the shorter the time, that may have elapsed since delivery.   |
| 21. DIARRHŒA.                            | Said to have been caused by a mixture of vinegar and burnt cork. (?) May be occasioned by the use of any of the purgative roots, &c.  | When diarrhœa is feigned by the lower bowels, inspect the linen; if clean, the bowels are probably not much out of order. Let every individual have a close stool of his own; and inspect the evacuations, taking care that one suffering under the disease does not lend his evacuations to another. |
| 22. DROPSY.                              | May be feigned, like pregnancy, by wearing pads. The anasarous condition of the lower limbs has been caused by applying a ligature round them. By inflating the cellular membrane of the abdomen.                         | Can be detected by attentive examination. There will be a want of that leucopneumatic habit, which accompanies and characterizes dropsy.  |
| 23. DYSENTERY.                           | May be feigned like diarrhœa, by adding a little blood to the evacuations, or by introducing a soap or some more irritating suppository.  | Same rules as under Diarrhœa.   |
| 24. EPILEPSY.                            | The foaming of the mouth has been produced by keeping a piece of soap in it.  | Sensation in E. is totally abolished. If any remain, disease probably feigned. Incontractility of pupil, which occurs in epilepsy, cannot be feigned. Same means to be used as in feigned apoplexy.   |
| 25. FEVER.                               | By various stimulants, as wine, brandy, pepper; swallowing a small quantity of tobacco, or introducing it into the anus. Flour or chalk used to whiten the tongue. Redness of skin, caused by friction with a hard brush. | The deceit is generally developed by a day or two's examination. Where flour or chalk has been used to whiten the tongue, the line of demarcation, between the whitened part and the clean, healthy margin of the tongue, is too well marked to escape observation.                                   |
| 26. FISTULA IN ANO.                      | By making an incision near the verge of the anus and introducing into it an acrid tent, such as the root of white heliobora , &c.  | By careful examination.   |
| 27. FRACTURES.                           | Generally nothing, here, but the man's own testimony. He complains of pain in the part; if fracture of the skull be feigned, he states, perhaps, that he becomes deranged on tasting liquor.                              | By attentive examination.   |
| 28. HÆMATEMESIS.                         | By drinking the blood of some animal or using some coloured liquid and then throwing it up.   | By cutting off the supply of the fluid, and careful examination.  |
| 29. HÆMOPTYSIS.                          | By secreting bullock's blood for the purpose of colouring the saliva; making small incisions in the mouth; using hole armeniac or paint of vermilion.   | Blood from the lungs is frothy and light-coloured. Mouth and fauces must be carefully inspected, and the individual be observed.  |
| 30. HÆMORRHOIDS.                         | By introducing bladders of rats or of small fish partly into the rectum. The linen has also been stained with borrowed blood.   | The means are obvious.  |
| 31. HEART, DISEASES OF, SEE PALPITATION. |   |   |
| 32. HEPATITIS.                           |   | Unless the person be a well educated impostor, acute inflammation of the liver will be detected by the absence of marks of strong inflammatory action. Chronic liver disease is, frequently, not characterized by well marked symptoms, and hence, when assumed, is difficult of detection.    |
| 33. HERNIA.                              | In the same manner as hydrocele. By inflation.  | The detection is easy.  |
| 34. HYDROCELE.                           | By puncturing the skin of the scrotum, and inflating the cellular membrane.   | Do.   |
| 35. HYDROCEPHALUS.                       | By opening the integuments of the head, near the vertex, e. g. and blowing in air.  | Do.   |

| DISEASES, &C.                            | HOW FEIGNED.  | HOW DETECTED.  |
|--|---|--|
| 36. HYSTERIA.                            | - - - - -   | Does not easily resist the application of strong sternutatories to the nostrils. Attentive examination necessary.  |
| 37. INSANITY.                            | - - - - -   | The expression of countenance cannot easily be feigned. Nor can the affection be kept up so long as in real mental alienation. The individual cannot do so long without food, sleep, &c.           |
| 38. JAUNDICE.                            | By colouring the skin with an infusion of turmeric or tincture of rhubarb. Clay-coloured stools produced by taking daily a small quantity of muriatic acid. High-coloured urine by rhubarb taken inter-nally.                           | The eyes cannot be coloured, although smoke has been used for this purpose. The skin must be washed to remove the colouring matter, if any exist, and the supply of acid and rhubarb be prevented. |
| 39. LAMENESS.                            | By keeping the limb in a contracted state, and resisting any efforts to move it.  | By two persons taking hold of the individual and moving rapidly along with him; and when they are tired, having relays. The impostor will generally give in.                                       |
| 40. MENSTRUATION,                        | By staining the clothes and body with borrowed blood.   | By cutting off the supply.   |
| 41. MYOPIA.Short-sightedness. | - - - - -   | Present an open book, and apply the leaves close to the nose. If it cannot be read distinctly, when thus placed, or when glasses, proper for short-sightedness are used, the disease is feigned.   |
| 42. OPHTHALMIA.                          | Excited by a variety of acrid and corrosive substances applied to the eye; as lime, &c.A portion of black muslin, spread over the cornea. The eyelashes are sometimes extracted, and caustic applied to excite disease in the palpebræ.           | When ophthalmia is thus excited, its progress is, ordinarily, very rapid, arriving at its height within a few hours.   |
| 43. OZENA.                               | By impregnating a piece of sponge with some offensive juices or oils, mixed with decayed cheese, and putting the imbued sponge into the nostrils.   |  |
| 44. PALPITATION.                         | White hellebore, given in the dose of 10 or 12 grains, and repeated, will occasion general indisposition, and undue action of the heart.  | Cut off the supply.  |
| 45. PAINS.                               | - - - - -   | The detection is here often difficult. The non-existence of pain cannot be proved, and great pain may be present without any appearance externally.  |
| 46. SHAKING PALSY.                       | - - - - -   | The imposition is more frequently detected by inconsistencies and contradictions in the patient's history of the case, than in any other manner.   |
| 47. PARALYSIS.                           | - - - - -   | May be suspected, if the person be in an ordinary state of vigour. Try violent remedies and means, recommended under Chorea.   |
| 48. PHTHISIS PULMONALIS.                 | Individuals with long necks and contracted shoulders have simulated phthisis, by covering the chest with blisters, cicatrices of issues, &c.; and by taking drugs, which cause paleness.  | Violent remedies are here required. Cold affusion, actual cautery, electric shocks, &c.  |
| 49. POLYPUS NASI.                        | By introducing the testicle of a young cock or the kidney of a rabbit into the nostril, and retaining it there by means of a sponge, fastened to it.  | By attentive examination of the symptoms.  |
| 50. PORRIGO.Scalped Head.     | By applying nitric acid to the head, after protecting the face with fatty substances; but the chronic state is imitated by the use of depilatories of different kinds applied sometimes in patches, so as to resemble the Porri-go decalvans . | By the absence of the areola; the presence of a pad; and, if necessary, by examination per vaginam .  |
| 51. PREGNANCY.                           | By wearing pads, and assuming the long-ing after particular articles of diet, &c.   | By the absence of the areola; the presence of a pad; and, if necessary, by examination per vaginam .  |
| 52. PROLAPSUS ANI.                       | By a portion of the intestine of the ox, in which a sponge, filled with a mixture of blood and milk is placed.  |  |
| 53. PROLAPSUS UTERI.                     | By a similar fraud.   |  |
| 54. PULSE, WEAKNESS OR DEFECT OF.        | By ligatures applied to the corresponding arm.  | By examining whether the arteries of the two arms beat alike; and if a ligature be placed on the arm.  |
| 55. CHRONIC RHEUMATISM.See PAIN.     |   |  |

| DISEASES, &c.                 | HOW FEIGNED.   | HOW DETECTED.   |
|-------------------------------|--|---|
| 56. SCROFULA.                 | By exciting ulcers below the angles of the jaw.  | By examining the general habit and observing, whether the ulcerations be glandular, and the discharge of a scrofulous character.  |
| 57. SCURVY.                   | By covering the teeth with wax, and then applying acrid, corrosive substances to the gums.   | By examining the general habit; whether debilitated, cachectic, and possessing the usual general signs of scorbutus. Simulators of this defect generally state, that it is connate, or ascribe it to a fit of apoplexy or severe fever. Where the organs of speech were perfect, and the moral evidence of the previous existence of the infirmity was not satisfactory, the French authorities used to confine the soldiers, and not supply them with food, until they called for it without stammering. |
| 58. STAMMERING.               | - - - - -  | - - - - -   |
| 59. STRICTURE OF THE URETHRA. | - - - - -  | By passing the bougie.  |
| 60. SWELLING OF THE LEGS.     | By ligatures round the thighs.   | Examine the limbs uncovered.  |
| 61. SYNCOPE.                  | Ligatures are sometimes used to prevent the pulse being felt. By applying lotions to the face to make it pale.   | By using sternutatories. By the absence of some of the symptoms of syncope. Examine the naked arms. Wash the face.  |
| 62. TYMPANY.                  | Persons have possessed the power of swallowing air, so as to distend the stomach, and simulate tympany.  | - - - - -   |
| 63. ULCER OF THE EAR.         | By introducing a tent, imbued with blistering plaster, into the ear, and repeating the application, until the tube becomes ulcerated, and a discharge of puriform matter is established. The fetid smell is imitated, by dropping into the ear a mixture of empyreumatic oil, asafetida and old cheese. Also, by introducing a little honey into the meatus. | By careful examination.   |
| 64. ULCERS OF THE LEGS, &c.   | By corrosives, or irritants. Sometimes by abrasion, by rubbing sand on the shin-bone. At others, they are pretended, by gluing on a piece of spleen or the skin of a frog.   | Artificial ulcers have, usually, a more distinct margin, and are more readily healed than others; the latter being generally indicative of an impaired constitution.  |
| 65. BLOODY URINE.             | The fruit of the Indian Fig ( Cactus opuntia ) colours the urine as red as blood. Cantharides will cause it. Blood may also be procured and mixed with the urine.   | By making the patient pass his urine in the presence of the physician, and examining the vessel before and after. By cutting off the supply of any substance, which could cause the appearance.   |
| 66. INCONTINENCE OF URINE.    | - - - - -  | Difficult, at times, of detection. Give the person a full dose of opium, and introduce the catheter, when he is asleep. If there be urine, the incontinence is feigned.   |
| 67. VARICOSE VEINS.           | By a ligature, placed tightly round the limb. They may be excited in this manner, or aggravated if already existing.   | By examining the limb.  |

FEL, Bile—f. Anguilla, see Bile—f. Bovis, see Bile—f. Naturæ, Aloes—f. Tauri, see Bile f. Ursi, see Bile—f. Vitri, see Vitrum.

FELLIS OBSTRUCTIO, Icterus—f. Superfusio, Icterus—f. Suffusio, Icterus.

FELON, Paronychia.

FÉLURE DE GLASER, Fissure, glenoid.

FELWORT, Gentiana lutea.

FEMALE, (F.) Femelle, Fem'ina, Gynē. In animals, the one that engenders and bears the young. It is, also, used adjectively;—as, the Female sex, &c.

FEMELLE, Female.

FEMEN, Thigh.

FEMINA, Female.

FEMME EN COUCHE, Puerpera.

FEMORAL, Femora'lis. Belonging or relating to the thigh; as Femoral artery, Femoral hernia, &c., from femur, 'the thigh bone.'

FEMORALIS, Triceps cruris.

FEMORO-CALCANIEN PETIT, Plantar muscle—f. Popliteal, great, Sciatic nerve, great—f. Popliti-tibial, Popliteus muscle.

FEMORO-TIBIAL, Femoro-tibia'lis. Belonging to the femur and tibia. The Femoro-tibial articulation is the knee-joint.

FEMUR, Meros, Os fem'oris. The thigh Bone. (F.) L'os de la Cuisse. The strongest and longest of all the bones of the body, extending from the pelvis to the tibia, and forming the solid part of the thigh. The femur is cylindrical, slightly curved anteriorly, unsymmetrical and oblique downwards and inwards. The body of the bone is prismatic, and has, behind, a prominent ridge:—the Linea aspera.

The femur ossifies from five points:—one on each process of the pelvic extremity; one in the body of the bone; and two on the condyles.

It is articulated with the pelvis, tibia, and patella. See Thigh.

FEMUR COL DU, Collum femoris—f. Moven-tium sextimus, Iliacus internus—f. Moven-tium sextus, Psoas magnus.

FENESTRA. A Window. (F.) Fenêtre. Anatomists have given this name to two apertures, situate on the inner paries of the cavity of the tympanum. The one of these is the Fenestra oculis, F. vestibuldris. It is oval-shaped; situate at the base of the stapes, and corresponds with the cavity of the vestibule. The other is the Fenestra rotunda or F. Cochleardris. It is closed by a fine, transparent membrane, called Membrana Tympani secundaria, and corresponds to the inner scala of the cochlea.

FENESTRA OCULI, Pupil.

FENESTRAL, Fenestralus, from fenestra, 'a window.' (F.) Fenêtré et Fenêtré. Bandages, compresses, or plasters with small perforations or openings, are so called. The openings prevent the detention of the discharge.

FENESTRATUS, Fenestral.

FENESTRÉ, Fenestral.

FENÊTRE, Fenestra.

FENÊTRÉ, Fenestral.

FENUGREC, Trigonella fœnum.

FER, Ferrum—f. Chaud, Pyrosis—f. Hydrate de tritozide de, Étites—f. Iodure de, see Iodine f. Lactate de, Ferri Lactas—f. Limaille de, Ferri limatura.

FERINE, Ferinus; 'savage, brutal;' The-riodes. A term, applied to any malignant or noxious disease. In France, it is used only when joined to Toux; Toux férine, a dry, obstinate, and painful cough.

FERMENT, Fermentum, Zymë, Zymōna, Leven, (F.) Lévain. The iatrochymists applied this name to imaginary substances, to which they attributed the power of producing diseases, by exciting a fermentation in the humours.

FERMENTATION, Fermentatio, Zymōsis, Æstuatō, Causis, Brasmos. An intestine movement, occurring spontaneously in a liquid; whence result certain substances, that did not previously exist in it.

The chemical physicians attributed all diseases to an imaginary fermentation of the humours.

FERMENTATION, PUTREFACTIVE, Putrefactio.

FERMENTUM CEREVISIÆ, Yest.

FERN, FEMALE, Pteris aquilina—f. Male, Polypodium filix mas.

FERNAMBUCO WOOD, Cæsalpinia sapan.

FERRAMEN'TUM, Siderion, Instrumen'tum

fer'rum. Any surgical instrument, made of iron. By the vulgar, in France, the word ferrements means the instruments used in difficult labours.

FERRARIA, Scrophularia aquatica.

FERREIN, CANAL OF, Ductus Ferrcini. A triangular channel, which Ferrein supposed to result from the approximation of the free edges of the eyelids applied to the globe of the eye; and which he considered adapted for directing the tears towards the puncta lachrymalia, during sleep. The canal is, probably, imaginary.

The same name is, likewise, given to the cortical canals,—the first portions of the uriferous ducts, whilst still in the cortical substance of the kidney.

FERREIN, PYRAMID OF, Pyramidis Ferreini. Each of the papillæ of the kidney, according to Ferrein, consists of, at least, 700 subordinate cones or pyramids. To these last the name, 'pyramids of Ferrein' has been given.

FERRI ET AMMONIÆ MURIAS, Ferrum ammoniatum—f. Borussias, Prussiiā blue—f. Carbonas, F. subcarbonas—f. Carbonatum, Graphites—f. Carburetum, Graphites—f. Cyanuretum, Prussian blue—f. Deutocarbonas fuscus, F. subcarbonas—f. Deutoxydum nigrum, Æthiops martial—f. Ferrocyanas, Prussian blue—f. Hydrocyanas, Prussian blue—f. Hypercarburetum, Graphites—f. Iodidum, see Iodine.

FERRI LIMATU'RA PURIFICA'TA, Purified Iron Filings:—purified by means of the magnet, for internal use. The filings are, also, called Ferri Scobs, F. Ramen'tu et Pila, Martis Limatu'ra, Spec'ulum Indicum, Ferri in pulverem resolutio, (F.) Limaille de Fer. They are considered to possess the general properties of iron:—the iron becoming oxidized.

FERRI OXYDUM FUSCUM, F. subcarbonas.

FERRI LACTAS, Lactate of Iron, Lactate of Protoxide of Iron, (F.) Lactate de Fer. Prepared by digesting in a sand bath, at a low temperature, lactic acid diluted with iron filings. It is employed in the same cases as the precipitated subcarbonate of iron, and especially in chlorosis. Twelve grains of the lactate may be given in the 24 hours, in the form of lozenges.

FERRI OXYDUM NIGRUM, Oxydum ferri nigrum—f. Oxidum rubrum, Colcothar—f. Pila, F. limatura—f. et Potassæ tartaras, Ferrum tartarizatum.

FERRI PROTOCARBONAS, Protocarbonate of Iron. The protocarbonate of iron, thrown down from a solution of the sulphate of iron by the carbonate of soda readily attracts oxygen and becomes converted into the sesquioxide. To prevent this, it may be associated with honey and sugar, and the mixture be reduced by evaporation to a pilular consistence. The mass constitutes the Ferruginous Pills—Pilules ferrugineuses, of Vallet—Vallet's Pills.)

The protocarbonate is given in the same diseases as the lactate of iron. Ten or fifteen grains in the course of the twenty-four hours.

FERRI PROTOSULPHAS VIRIDIS, F. sulphas—f. Prussias, Prussian blue—f. Ranienta, F. limatura—f. Rubigo, F. subcarbonas—f. Scobs, F.

limatura—f. Sesquioxidum, F. subcarbonas præcipitatus.

FERRI SUBCARBONAS, F. Carb'bonas, F. præcipitatum, Chalybis Rubi'go præparata, Ferri Rubigo. (This last term, as well as Ferri'go, is applied to the subcarbonate or rust, formed by the action of moist air on metallic iron.) A protoxide of iron, oxidized by the decomposition of water; the carbonic acid being attracted from the air. Dose, gr. v to ʒss.

The Ferri Subcarbonas is precipitated from sulphate of iron by subcarbonate of soda. (Pharm. L.) It is, also, called Ferri sesquioxidum, Oxidum ferri fuscum, Deuto-car'bonas Ferri fuscus, Crocus martis ap'eriens. (F.) Saf-ran de Mars ap'érutif.

FERRI SULPHAS, Sal Martis, Vitriolum Martis, Vitriolum Ferri, Ferrum Vitriolatum, Sulphas vel Protosulphas Ferri vir'idis, Calcedi'num, Cal'cator, Cal'cotar, Chalcan'thum, Calcite'a, Atramentum sutorium, Vit'riol, Vitriolum viride, An'ima Hep'atis, Sulphate of Iron, Green Vitriol, Copperas. This salt is inodorous, and of a strong styptic taste. The crystals are light-green, transparent, rhomboidal; and soluble in two parts of water. It is tonic and anthelmintic. Dose, gr. j to vj and more.

FERRI SULPHAS CALCINATUM, Colcothar—f. Tartarum, Ferrum tartarizatum—f. Tritoxydum, Colcothar.

FERRICUS HYDRAS, Ferrum oxydum hydratum.

FERRUGINEUS, Chalybeate.

FERRUGINOSUS, Chalybeate.

FERRUM, Mars, Sid'ros, σιδήρος, Iron. (F.) Fer. A metal of a bluish-gray colour; fibrous texture; brilliant and fine-grained fracture. Specific gravity 7.600 to 7.800: hard, ductile, malleable, and magnetic.

The medicinal virtues of iron are tonic; producing fetid eructations, when it takes effect, owing to its meeting with acid in the stomach, which oxidizes it, and causes the evolution of hydrogen gas. When given in the metallic state, the filings are chiefly used; but the oxides and salts are most commonly employed.

FERRUM AMMONIATUM, Muri'as Ammoniac et Ferri, Flores martiales, Flores salis ammoniaci martiales, Ens Martis, Ens Ven'eri's Boylei, Sal Martis muriaticum sublimatum, Sal ammoniacum martiale, Ammonium muriaticum martiatum seu martiale, Aroph Paracel'si, Calendula mineralis, Ferrum ammoniacale, Ammoniated Iron. (F.) Muriate d'ammoniaque et de fer. A submuriate of ammonia with red muriate of iron. Dose, gr. iij to gr. xv.

FERRUM AMMONIACALE, F. ammoniatum—f. Borussicum, Prussian blue—f. Cyanogenatum, Prussian blue—f. Hæmatites, Hæmatites.

FERRUM OXYDATUM HYDRATUM, Hydras Fer'ricus, Hydro-oxide of Iron, Hydrated Oxide of Iron, Hydrated peroxide of Iron, Hydrated Tritoxide of Iron. It may be prepared by taking a solution of sulphate of iron increasing its dose of oxygen by heating it with nitric acid, and precipitating the oxide by adding pure ammonia in excess, washing the precipitate.

It has been brought forward, of late, as an antidote to arsenic; and many cases of its efficacy have been published.

From 10 to 20 parts of the hydrated oxide would seem to be more than sufficient to convert 1 part of arsenious acid into the basic salt of iron.

FERRUM OXYDULATUM HYDROCYANICUM, Prussian blue—f. Potabile, F. tartarizatum—f. Præcipitatum, Ferri subcarbonas.

FERRUM TARTARIZATUM, Tartaras Potas'sæ et Ferri, Tartarum Ferri, Tartarus chalybeatus, Mars solubilis, Tartaras Kal'icofer'ricus, Chalybis tartarizatus, Tartarus martialis, Tartaras Potas'sæ ferruginosus, Ferrum potabile, Globus martialis, (F.) Boule de Mars, Boule de Nancy, B. de Molsheim, B. d'Acier, Globuli Tartari martiales seu martiales soluti, seu martiatii, seu tart'ratiss ferri et lixiv'ie, Boli Martis, Pyri martiales, Tartarized Iron, Tartarate of Potass and Iron, (Feri ij), potass. supertart. lbij, aque lbj. Rub them together, and expose to the air, in a flat glass vessel, for 8 days: then dry, and reduce to a fine powder. Add a pint of water to the powder, and put it aside for 8 days: dry and pulverize.) It is one of the mildest of the salts of iron, and not unpalatable. Dose, gr. x to ʒss.

The TINCTURA MARTIS APERITIVA, Tincture of Ludwig; Alcohol cum sulphatè Ferri tartarizatus; Tinctura Martis Glauberi, is essentially, an aqueous solution of this salt; which is, also, called Eau de Boule, and is used in contusions.

HELVIETIUS'S STYPTIC was composed of the filings of iron and tartar, mixed to a proper consistence with French brandy. It was called in England Eaton's Styptic; but this is now formed of Sulphate of Iron.

FERRUM VITRIOLATUM, Ferri sulphas—f. Vitriolum ustum, Colcothar—f. Zooticum, Prussian blue.

FERULA, Fanon, Palette, Splint—f. Africana, Bubon galbanum—f. Asafœtida, see Asafœtida—f. Persica, see Sagapenum.

FEVER, Feb'ris, from fercor, 'heat,' or from feb'rno, 'I purify.' Py'r, Py're'tos, πυρε'tος, (F.) Fièvre. One of the most frequent and dangerous affections, to which the body is liable.

A person has an attack of fever, when he is affected with rigours, followed by increased heat of skin, quick pulse, languor, and lassitude. Rigours, increased heat and frequency of pulse have each been assumed as the essential character of fever. It is not characterized, however, by any one, but depends upon the coexistence of many symptoms.

Fevers have been usually divided into idio-

pathic or essential, and into symptomatic. The idiopathic arise without any obvious local cause. The symptomatic are dependent upon local irritation.

Idiopathic fevers may be divided into three classes: 1. Those attended with distinct paroxysms:—intermittents. 2. Remittent and continued fevers: and, 3. Fevers, complicated with eruptions, or the exanthematous.

These divisions admit of great variety, owing to climate, season, soil, age, &c.

All ages and climates are liable to fever; and its exciting causes are very numerous. These causes may be common; as irritations in the intestines; external injuries, stimulants, &c.; or they may be specific; as miasmata, contagion, &c.

The greatest diversity has prevailed regarding the theory of fever. Its primary seat has been placed in the brain, mucous membrane of the stomach and intestines, skin, nerves, blood-vessels, liver, vena cava, pancreas, &c.

It would seem, however, that although, in fever, the whole of the functions are morbidly impressed, the arguments in favour of the impression being first made on the nervous system and the capillary system of vessels are the strongest. The exciting cause of fever, whatever it may be, produces an irregular action of the capillary system, which is soon conveyed to the rest of the system, owing to the extensive sympathy which exists between every part of the body; and it is probable, that all those local inflammations and congestions are the consequence, rather than the cause, of this disordered condition of the system.

Many phenomena of fever are influenced by that periodicity, which we notice in the execution of several of the functions of the body. The types of intermittents are strong evidences of such an influence.

In the treatment of fever, it is important, 1. To bear in mind its tendency, particularly in the case of the exanthemata, to run a definite course, and terminate in restoration to health. 2. The disposition to local determinations or hyperæmiæ:—the most frequent cause of the fatal terminations of fever; a circumstance requiring the vigilant attention of the physician. 3. That the symptoms must be attentively studied, in order to deduce, as far as possible, from them, the indications of cure.

Lastly. Attention must be paid to the prevalent epidemic. There are particular seasons, in which fevers are very malignant; and others, in which they are as mild; circumstances which necessarily have an effect upon the treatment.

FEVER, ADE'NO-MENINGE'AL, Febris adeno-meningea, Febris mcsenterica (BAGLIVI), Morbus mucosus, Febris mucosa; Pituitous Fever, Catarrhal Fever, Continued Lymphatic Fever, Phlegmopyra, Phlegmatopyra, Gastro-Bronchitis. Fever, accompanied with considerable mucous secretion; especially from the digestive tube.

FEVER, ANOM'ALOUS, Febris anomala, F. erratic, F. irregularis, F. vaga. A fever, whose progress and type are irregular.

FEVER, APHON'IC, Febris aphonica. A variety of intermittent, in which the voice is lost during the paroxysm.

FEVER, APOPLECTIC, Febris apoplectica, Comatose Fever, Febris comatodes, F. Lethartica, F. soporosa. An intermittent or continued fever, attended with apoplectic symptoms.

FEVER, ARTIFI'CIAL, Febris artificialis, Febris arte promota. Fever, produced designedly by the internal or external use of stimulants.

FEVER, ASTHEN'IC, Febris asthenica. Fever, accompanied with debility. It may include every variety of fever under certain circumstances, but is generally appropriated to typhus.

FEVER, ASTHMAT'IC, Febris asthmatica. A pernicious intermittent, accompanied with symptoms of asthma.

FEVER, ATAXO-ADYNAM'IC; Febris ataxo-odynamiaca. Fever, characterized by symptoms of ataxia and adynamia.

FEVER, BARCELONA, Fever, yellow—f. Bastard, Illegitimate fever.

FEVER, BILIOUS, Febris biliosa, F. polycholica, Synochus biliosus, F. asodes, F. choleric, F. gastrica, F. hepatica. The common remittent fever of summer and autumn; generally supposed to be owing to, or connected with, derangement of the biliary system.

FEVER, BILIOUS REMITTING, YELLOW, Fever, yellow—f. Bladdery, Pemphigus—f. Bouquet, Dengue—f. Brain, F. cerebral, Phrenitis—f. Bucket, Dengue—f. Bulam, Fever, yellow—f. Camp, Typhus gravior.

FEVER, CARDIAL'GIC, Febris cardialgica. A variety of pernicious intermittent, accompanied with violent cardialgia, during the paroxysm.

FEVER, CARDITIC. Intermittent fever, accompanied with pain at the heart.

FEVER, CATARRHAL, F. adeno-meningeal.

FEVER, CEPHALAL'GIC, Febris cephalalgica. A pernicious intermittent, accompanied with intense pain of the head. Also, intermittent cephalalgia.

FEVER, CEREBRAL, Brain fever. Fever, generally of an ataxic character, in which the brain is considerably affected.

FEVER, CHILDBED, Fever, puerperal, Puerperal fever.

FEVER, CHOL'ERIC, Febris choleric. A variety of pernicious intermittent, accompanied with symptoms of cholera morbus.

FEVER, CHRONIC, Febris chronica. Some authors apply this name to protracted fevers; others, to hectic fever.

FEVER, COLLIQ'UATIVE, Febris tabida, Febris colliquatva. Fever, characterized by rapid emaciation, copious evacuations, and rapid prostration of strength.

FEVER, COMATOSE, F. apoplectic—f. Continent, see Continent—f. Continued, common, Synochus.

FEVER, CONVULSIVE, Febris convulsiva. A pernicious intermittent, accompanied by convulsions.

FEVER, DELIR'IOUS, Febris cum delirio, (F.) Fièvre délirante. A pernicious intermittent, characterized by delirium in the paroxysms.

FEVER, DEP'URATORY, Febris depuratoria. A fever, to which was attributed the property of purifying the blood; or which indicated, that such a pretended depuration had occurred.

FEVER, DIAPHORET'IC, Febris diaphoret'ica, Febris sudat'ria. A pernicious intermittent, with excessive sweating during the fit.

FEVER, DIGESTIVE. The chilliness, followed by increased heat and quickness of pulse, which frequently accompanies digestion.

FEVER, DOUBLE, (F.) Fièvre double ou doublée. An intermittent, which has two paroxysms in a given time, instead of one.

FEVER, DOUBLE-QUARTAN. A fever, whose paroxysms occur two days in succession, and fall the third day: the first paroxysm resembling the 4th; and the second the 5th.

FEVER, DOUBLE-QUOTID'IAN. An intermittent, whose paroxysms return twice every day at corresponding hours.

FEVER, DOUBLE-TERTIAN. An intermittent, whose paroxysms return every day; the first corresponding with the 3d, the second with the 4th, and so on.

FEVER, DUODEC'IMANE, Febris duodecimana. A supposititious intermittent, whose paroxysms recur on the 12th day or every 11 days.

FEVER, EPILEP'TIC, Febris epilep'tica. A variety of pernicious intermittent, accompanied with attacks of epilepsy.

FEVER, EROT'IC, Febris erot'ica, (F.) Fièvre d'amour. A chronic fever, occasioned by unpropitious love.

FEVER, ERRAT'IC, Febris errat'ica. An intermittent, the recurrence of whose paroxysms is irregular.

FEVER, ERUPTIVE, Exanthematica.

FEVER, GANGRENOUS, Febris gangren'os des. Fever, accompanied by gangrene of various parts, and especially of the limbs and genitals. Sénac describes an intermittent of this kind.

FEVER, GASTRALGIC. An intermittent accompanied with acute burning tearing pain at the stomach.

FEVER, GASTRIC, Febris gas'trica, Stomach'ic fever, Syn'ochus Bilio'sa. A name, given by some to the bilious fever, which has appeared to them to be dependent on an affection of the stomach. Menin'go-gastric fever; Harvest fever, (F.) Fièvre de la Moisson.

FEVER, GASTRO-ADYNAM'IC, Febris gastro-ady'nam'ica. A fever, in which the symptoms of bilious fever are joined with those of adynamic fever.

FEVER, GASTRO-ANGIOTEN'IC. A fever, in which the symptoms of the bilious are united with those of the inflammatory fever.

FEVER, GASTRO-ATAXIC. A fever, in which the symptoms of bilious fever are united with those of ataxic fever.

FEVER, GIBALTAR, Fever, yellow—f. Harvest, F. Gastric.

FEVER, HAY, Catarr'hus astiv'us, Summer Catarrh, Hay Asthma. A catarrh to which certain persons are subject in summer, and which has been ascribed in England to the effluvia of hay, but this is not probable. It is a catarrh with sneezing, headache, weeping, snuffling and cough, with, at times, fever and general discomfort. It is not uncommon in this country. It disappears spontaneously: to recur on subsequent years about the same period.

FEVER, HEBDOM'ADAL. A supposititious fever, whose paroxysms return weekly, and on the same day.

FEVER, HÆMOP'TOIC, Febris hæmoptoica. A variety of masked intermittent, in which periodical hæmoptysis is the chief symptom.

FEVER, HECTIC, see Consumption.

FEVER, HEPATIC or HEPATAL'GIC. A pernicious intermittent, with violent pain in the right hypochondrium.

FEVER, HOSPITAL, Typhus gravior.

FEVER, HUN'GARY, Febris Hungar'ica, Morbus Ungar'icus, Cephalon'osus, (F.) Fièvre Hongroise ou de Hongrie. An endemic typhus, common amongst the soldiers in barracks, in Hungary.

FEVER, HU'MORAL, Febris humoral'is. Fever, in which an alteration or deterioration of the humours is suspected.

FEVER, HYDROPHOB'IC, Febris hydrophob'ica. Pernicious intermittent with dread of liquids.

FEVER, HYSTER'IC, Febris hyster'ica. Hysteria, accompanied by fever. Hysteria, occurring with each paroxysm of an intermittent.

FEVER, ICTER'IC, Febris icter'ica. Fever, accompanied by jaundice. Some intermittents exhibit this complication at each paroxysm.

FEVER, INFLAMMATORY, Synocha.

FEVER, INSID'IOUS. Fever, which, at first, seems devoid of danger, but subsequently becomes of a more or less malignant character.

FEVER, JAIL, Typhus gravior.

FEVER, LO'CHIAL, Febris lochialis. That acceleration of the circulation which sometimes occurs during the discharge of the lochia.

FEVER, LYMPHATIC, CONTINUED, F. adeno-meningeal.

FEVER, MALIGNANT, Febris malign'a. Fever, which makes its approaches insidiously, and subsequently becomes formidable. Any fever which exhibits a very dangerous aspect.

FEVER, MALIGNANT, Typhus gravior—f. Malignant, pestilential, Fever, yellow—f. Marsh, Elodes, (febris.)

FEVER, MASKED, Febris larv'ata, (F.) Fièvre larvée. An anomalous intermittent, the paroxysms of which have not the regular stages.

FEVER, MENINGO-GASTRIC, F. gastric—f. Mixed, Synochus.

FEVER, MESENTER'IC, Febris mesenter'ica. A name given, by Baglivi, to a species of fever, which appears to have belonged either to the mucous or bilious.

FEVER, MILK, Febris lac'tea, (F.) Fièvre de lait ou lacteuse, F. lactée; Galactop'yria. The fever, which precedes or accompanies the secretion of milk in women recently delivered. It comes on, generally, about the third day after delivery; and is characterized by quick pulse; increased heat; redness of face; diminution or temporary suppression of the lochial discharge; tumefaction and tension of the breasts. It commonly terminates in twenty-four hours, and often with profuse perspiration. It requires the use of antiphlogistics, with dry diet.

FEVER, NEPHRIT'IC, Febris nephret'ica. Intermittent fever, accompanied with nephritic pain during the paroxysm.

FEVER, NERVOUS, Febris nerv'osa, Febris lenta nerv'osa. A variety of Typhus; the Typhus mitior (q. v.) of Cullen. By many, however, it is esteemed a distinct disease. See Typhoid Fever.

FEVER, NON'ANE, Febris nona'na. A supposititious fever, whose paroxysms recur every ninth day, or every eight days.

FEVER, OC'TANE, Febris octa'na. An intermittent, whose paroxysms recur every eighth day.

FEVER, PERIOD'ICAL, Febris period'ica. An intermittent or remittent fever.

FEVER, PERNI'CIOUS, Febris pernicio'sa. Intermittent fever, when attended with great danger, and which destroys the majority of those affected by it in the first four or five paroxysms; sometimes in the very first.

FEVER PESTILENT'IAL, Febris pestilent'ialis. The Plague. Also a severe case of typhus. The yellow fever and sweating sickness have, likewise, been thus designated.

FEVER PITUITOUS, F. adeno-meningeal.

FEVER, PLEURITIC; an intermittent, accompanied with inflammation of the pleura.

FEVER, PNEUMONIC; an intermittent, accompanied with inflammation of the lungs.

FEVER, PUERPERAL, Febris puerperal'is, Childbed fever. This name has been given to several acute diseases, supervening after delivery. It means, generally, a malignant variety of peritonitis, which runs its course very rapidly, and passes into a typhoid condition, unless met, at the very onset, by the most active depleting measures. By the generality of practitioners, it is esteemed to be eminently contagious; some, however, deny that it is so. See Peritonitis and Puerperal Fever.

FEVER, PU'RULENT, Febris purulenta. Fever, which accompanies suppuration.

FEVER, PUTRID, Typhus gravior.

FEVER, QUINTAN, Febris quinta'na. A fever, whose paroxysms return every fifth day. It rarely, if ever, occurs.

FEVER, QUOTIDIAN, Febris quotidiana. A fever, whose paroxysms recur daily.

FEVER, REGULAR, Febris regular'is. An intermittent, whose paroxysms follow a determinate type. It is opposed to atypic. Sometimes opposed to anomalous.

FEVER, RHEUMATIC, Rheumatism, acute—f. Root, Triosteum perfoliatum.

FEVER, SCORBUTIC, Febris scorbut'ica. The febrile movement, which sometimes accompanies scorbutus or scurvy.

FEVER, SECONDARY. A febrile condition, which recurs in certain affections after having ceased; such as the secondary fever, which comes on at the time of the suppuration of the variolous pustules, or after the eruption of scarlatina, &c., has disappeared.

FEVER, SEPTAN, Febris septa'na. An intermittent, whose paroxysms recur every six days, and consequently on the seventh.

FEVER, SEXTAN, Febris sexta'na. A fever, which recurs every five days, and consequently on the sixth.

FEVER, SIMPLE, Febris simplex. Simple fever, is that which has no predominant character—bilious, inflammatory, or nervous; and which is unaccompanied by any local determination, hyperemia, or complication. It may be continued, remittent, or intermittent.

FEVER, SIMPLE, CONTINUED. This is the most favourable case of continued fever, and has a tendency to wear itself out, provided only the lædencia be avoided. The prognosis is consequently favourable, and the treatment simple; consisting in perfect repose of body and mind, abstinence, and relieving the thirst by cold acidulated drinks.

FEVER, SINGUL'TOUS, Febris singulto'sa. Fever, accompanied with singultus or hiccough.

FEVER, SPOTTED, Typhus gravior.

FEVER, STERCORAL, Febris stercora'lis. Fever, produced by an accumulation of feces in the intestines.

FEVER, STOMACHIC, Gastric Fever.

FEVER, SUBINTRANT, Febris subin'trans. An intermittent, in which one paroxysm is scarcely finished before the other begins.

FEVER, SYNCOPAL, Febris syncopa'lis, F. minuta. A variety of pernicious intermittent, in which there is, in every paroxysm, one or more faintings.

FEVER, SYPHILITIC, Febris syphilit'ica. Fever, accompanying syphilis, or supposed to be owing to a syphilitic taint.

FEVER, TERTIAN, Febris tertia'na. A fever, whose paroxysms return on the third day, and consequently every two days.

FEVER, TRAGIC, Febris trag'ica. A low fever, in which the patient declaims like an actor during the delirium.

FEVER, TRAUMATIC, Febris traumati'ca. The fever, which supervenes on wounds or great surgical operations.

FEVER, VERMINOUS, Febris Vermino'sa, Helmintho'pyra, worm fever. Fever, produced by the presence of worms in the digestive tube, or accompanied by their expulsion.

FEVER, VERNAL, Febris vernal'is. An intermittent or other fever occurring in the spring. Vernal intermittents were formerly considered salubrious.

"An ague in the spring
Is physic for a king."

FEVER, VESICULAR, Pemphigus.

FEVER, WALCHEREN, Gall-sickness. The remittents and intermittents to which the British troops were exposed, who were attached to the expedition to Walcheren, in 1809.

FEVER WORM, Verminous F.

FEVER, YELLOW, Febris flava, Typhus ictero'des, F. continua putrida ictero'des Carolinien'sis, Elo'des ictero'des, Febris maligna bilio'sa America, Oehropyra, Syn'ochus ictero'des, Fièvre matclote, Febris maligna flava In'dia Occident'alis, Endemial Causus of the West Indies, Causus trop'icus endem'icus, Bilious remitting yellow fever, Malignant pestilential fever,—Fièvre jaune d'Amérique, Fièvre gastro-adynamique, Typhus miasmaticque ataxique putride jaune, Vomito prieto, Vomito negro, Mal de Siam, Fièvre de la Barbade, Black vomit, Febris tozica, Febris tropica, Typhus d'Amérique, Bulam Fever, Gibraltar Fever, Barcelona Fever. A very acute and dangerous, febrile affection; so called, because complicated, in its second stage, with jaundice, and accompanied by vomiting of black matter. Sauvages, Cullen, and others regard it as a variety of typhus; and Pinel as a species of gastro-adynamic, or bilious putrid fever. It occurs, endemically, only within the tropics; but it has been met with epidemically in the temperate regions. Broussais regards the disease as gastro-enteritis, exasperated by atmospheric heat; so that it runs through its stages with much greater rapidity than the gastro-enteritis of our climates. The yellow colour of the skin, according to him, is owing to the inflammation of the small intestine,—and especially of the duodenum,—augmenting the secretion of the liver, and at the same time preventing its discharge into the duodenum.

The pathology of this affection, as well as its origin, is still unsettled. The treatment must generally be of the most active nature at the onset; consisting in bleeding largely, and exhibiting mercury so as to excite a new action if possible;—the other symptoms being combated according to general principles. It must vary, however, according to the epidemic.

FEVERFEW, Matricaria.

FEVERISH, Febricus, Febricosus, (F.) Fiévreux. That which causes fever, as feverish food, feverish diathesis, &c. Also, the state of one labouring under fever.

FEVERWORT, Eupatorium perfoliatum.

FIBER, Castor fiber.

FIBRA SANGUINIS, Fibrine.

FIBRE, Fibra, Is, κρυβον, Ctedon, Filum, Filamentum. An organic filament, of a solid consistence, and more or less extensible, which enters into the composition of every animal and vegetable texture. The simple or elementary fibre of the ancients, from a particular assemblage and arrangement of which every texture of the body was conceived to be constituted, seems entirely ideal.

The moderns usually admit, with Haller and Blumenbach, three elementary fibres or tissues.

1. The cellular or laminated, formed chiefly of thin plates, of a whitish colour and extensible, and which seems to consist of concrete gelatine.
2. The nervous, pulpy, or medullary, formed of a soft substance, contained in a cellular sheath, and consisting of albumen united to a fatty matter.
3. The muscular, composed of round filaments, of a grayish or reddish colour, and formed of fibrine.

Chaussier has added to these the albugineous fibre, but it seems to differ from the cellular fibre only in the greater condensation of the molecules.

A very small fibre is called a Fibril, Fibrilla.

FIBRE, ALBUGINEOUS. See Albuginea.

FIBRIL. See Fibre.

FIBRINE, Fibri'na, Fibra sanguinis, Matière fibro'sa, Lympha plastica. An immediate animal principle—solid, white, and inodorous; insipid; heavier than water; without action on the vegetable blues: elastic, when moist; hard and brittle when dry. It enters into the composition of the chyle and the blood, and forms the chief part of the muscles of red-blooded animals. Fibrine is very nutritious. In certain diseased actions, Fibrine or Coagulable lymph, gluten, is separated from the blood, and is found in considerable quantity on the surfaces of membranes, and in the cavities of the body. The name, Coagulable lymph, has also been given to that part of the serum, which coagulates when heated, and is of an albuminous nature.

FIBRINOUS, Fibrino'sus. That which is composed of fibrine, or has the appearance of fibrine.

FIBRO-CARTILAGE, Fibro-cartilago. An organic tissue, partaking of the nature of the fibrous tissue, and of that of cartilage. It is dense, resisting, elastic, firm, supple, and flexible.

Fibro-cartilages are distinguished into,—
1. Membraniform, or those which serve as moulds to certain parts, as the alæ nasi and eyelids.
2. Vaginiform or those which form sheaths for the sliding of tendons.
3. Interarticular, those, which are met with in the movable articulations.
4. Uniting Fibro-cartilages, (F.) Fibro-cartilages d'union, which form a junction between two bones, as at the symphysis pubis. Fibro-cartilages are, sometimes, formed adventitiously, as the result of a morbid process in different organs.

FIBRO-CARTILAGES, TARSAL. See Tarsus.

FIBRO-MUCOUS, Fibro-mucosus. Fibrous membranes, intimately united with other membranes of a mucous nature, as the pituitary membrane, the membrane of the urethra.—Bichat.

FIBRO-SEROUS, Fibro-serosus. Possessing the nature of fibrous and serous membranes. Membranes, composed of a fibrous, and a serous sheet, intimately united:—as the Dura Mater, Pericardium, Tunica albuginea testis, &c.—Bichat.

FIBROUS, Fibro'sus. Composed of fibres. Certain membranes, as the dura mater, periosteum, ligamentous capsules of the joints, &c. are fibrous. The fibrous system of Bichat includes the system of organs, formed by the albugineous fibre of Chaussier. It comprises, particularly, the periosteum and perichondrium; the articular capsules and ligaments; the tendons; the dura mater, pericardium, tunica sclerotica, tunica albuginea testis, outer membrane of the spleen, &c.

FIBROUS MEMBRANES, see Membranes, fibrous.

FIBULA, Cruris radius, Canna minor, Os péroné, Foc'ile minus, Sura, Arun'do minor, Fistula Cruris, Tibia minima, 'a clasp.' The splinter bone of the leg. (F.) Péroné. The long, small bone, situate at the outer part of the leg. The superior or tibial extremity of the fibula is rounded and forms the caput or head. It is articulated with the tibia. Its inferior or tarsal extremity is broader than the superior. It is articulated with the tibia and astragalus, and forms the malcotus externus or outer ankle by means of its coronoid process. The body of the bone has three faces, having more or less prominent edges. It is separated from the tibia by the interosseous space; and is developed by three points of ossification; one at the body, and one at each extremity. It prevents the foot from turning outwards.

FIC, Fiens.

FICAIRE, Ranunculus ficaria.

FICARIA, Scrophularia aquatica—f. Ranunculoides, Ranunculus ficaria.

FICATIO, Ficus.

FICOSA EMINENTIA, Ficus.

FICUS, Sycosis, Sycoma, Ficat'io, Fico'sus Tumor, Fico'su eminentia, Marisca, (F.) Fic. A fleshy excrescence, often soft and reddish, sometimes hard and scirrhous, hanging by a peduncle, or formed like a fig; occurring on the eyelids, chin, tongue, anus, or organs of generation. The fici, seated on the last mentioned parts, are generally of a syphilitic character.

FICUS CARICA. The systematic name of the fig tree. (F.) Figurier. Carica, Ficus, Ficus vulgaris, Ficus communis, Sycæ, συκιά, (F.) Figue. The fig is a pleasant fruit when ripe; as well as when dried in the state in which it is found in the shops. It is used, at times, in place of a cataplasm; especially in gum boils.

FICUS INDIE GRANA, Coccus cacti—f. Indica, Musa paradisiaca. See Caoutchouc.

FIDGETS. Of doubtful etymology. Dysphoria simplex, D. nervosa, Erethismus simplex, Titubatio, (F.) Frétillement. General restlessness and troublesome uneasiness of the nerves and muscles; with increased sensibility; and inability of fixing the attention, accompanied with a perpetual desire of changing the position. See Agacement des Nerfs.

FIDICINALES, Lumbricales manus.

FIEL, Bile.

FIG, INDIAN, Cactus opuntia.

FIGUE, Ficus carica.

FIGUIER, Ficus carica—f. d'Inde, Cactus opuntia.

FIGURATIO, Imagination.

FIGURÉ, (F.) An epithet for a compressive bandage, applied over the head after bleeding from the frontal vein. It has also been called bandage royal.

FIGWORT, Scrophularia nodosa—f. Water, greater, Scrophularia aquatica.

FILAMENT, Filamentum, from filum, 'a thread.' This word is used synonymously with fibril; thus, we say, a nervous or cellular filament. Also, the glairy, thread-like substance, which forms in the urine, in some diseases, and which depends on a particular secretion from the mucous membrane of the urinary passages.

FILAMENTUM, Fibre, Frænum.

FILARIA HOMINIS BRONCHIALIS, see Worms—f. Medinensis, Dracunculus—f. Oculi, see Worms.

FILELLUM, Frænum.

FILET DE LA LANGUE, Frænum—f. de la Verge, Frænum penis—f. Opération du, see Frænum.

FILICULA, Polypodium filix mas.

FILIFORM, Filiformis, from filum, 'a thread,' and forma, 'form;' having the shape of a thread; as the filiform papillæ of the tongue. See Papillæ.

FILIPENDULA, Spiræa filipendula.

FILIUS ANTE PATREM, Tussilago.

FILIX FEMINEA, Pteris aquilina—f. Florida, Osmunda regalis—f. Mas, Polypodium filix mas—f. Nymphæa, Pteris aquilina.

FILLE, Girl.

FILLET, Fascia.

FILTRATION, Filtra'tio, Percola'tio. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in passing a fluid through a filter or strainer, for the purpose of clarifying it. In ancient physiology, it meant the action by which the different humours of the body are separated from the mass of blood.

FILTRUM. A filter. Any porous material; such as sand, some kinds of freestone, powdered charcoal, pounded glass, flannel, unized paper, &c, through which a fluid is passed for the purpose of separating it from the matters suspended in it.

FILUM, Fibre.

FIMBRIA, Parar'ma. A band; a fringe; as the fimbriæ or fimbriated extremities of the Fallopian Tubes.

FIMBRIÆ CARNOSÆ COLI, Epiptic appendages.

FIMUS, Stercus, Dung.

The FIMUS EQUINUS, Stercus equi non eustrati, Stone-horse dung, was once thought antipeptic.

FIMUS VACCÆ or Cow-dung, was employed as a cataplasm, especially in gout.

STERCUS ANSERIS or Goose-dung, was applied as a poultice to the fect in malignant fever. See Chenocoprus.

FINCKLE, Anethum.

FINGER, Digitus—f. Ring, Annular finger.

FINIS ASPERÆ ARTERIÆ, Larynx.

FIOLE, Phiala.

FIRE, ST. ANTHONY'S, Erysipelas.

FISHSKIN, Ichthyosis.

FISSICULATIO, from fissicula're, 'to cut off,' 'open,' 'make incisions.' An old word for an opening made with a scalpel.

FISSURA CAPILLORUM, Distrix—f. Contrajacens, Contra-fissura—f. Pilaris, Trichismus.

FISSURE, fissu'ra, from fin'dere, 'to cleave;' a long and narrow cleft or opening in a bone—Rhage, ραγή, Ceasma, κασμα. (F.) Fissure, Fente. See Rhagades.

FISSURE, CAPILLARY, see Pilatio—f. of Glaserius—f. Glenoid.

The CENTRAL FISSURE is the aggregate of the cavities or ventricles of the brain. Meckel considers this but one cavity, in the form of a cross, which he calls thus:

The GLENOID FISSURE, or Fissure of Glaserius, (F.) Fissure ou Scissure de Glaser, Fente glenoïdale ou Fêlure de Glaser, divides the glenoid cavity of the temporal bone into two parts, and gives passage to the corda tympani, &c.

FISSURA VEL FOSSA MAGNA SYLVII. A deep, narrow sulcus, which ascends obliquely backwards from the temporal ala of the sphenoid bone to near the middle of the parietal bone; and which parts the anterior and middle lobes of the cerebrum on each side.

FISSURE ORBITAR, INFERIOR, Spheno-maxillary fissure—f. Orbitar, superior, Sphenoidal Fissure—f. of Sylvius, Ventricle, fifth.

FISSURE. Same etymon. 1. A fracture in which the bone is cracked, not separated, as in fracture,—Catagma fissura. 2. A narrow, long, and superficial solution of continuity, around the external openings of the mucous membranes. A sort of chap, observed on the hands particularly on the callous hands, of workmen, in certain mechanical employments. 3. Small, chapped ulcerations, sometimes noticed in young children, owing to the contact of the feces and urine with the fine, delicate skin of the thighs, nates, and genital organs. 4. Clefts, of a more or less deep nature, occurring on the genital organs, in the vicinity of the anus, in those labouring under syphilis. These are usually called rhagades. (q. v.)

FISTULA, Syrix. A solution of continuity, of greater or less depth, and sinuosity; the opening of which is narrow, and the disease kept up by an altered texture of parts, so that it is not disposed to heal.

A fistula is incomplete or blind, when it has but one opening; and complete when there are two, the one opening into an internal cavity, the other, externally. It is lined, in its whole course, by a membrane, which seems analogous to mucous membranes.

Incomplete fistula may be internal or external. The former are those, which open internally; the latter, those which open externally.

External incomplete fistulae are kept up by caries or necrosis of bones, by extraneous bodies in any of the living textures, or by purulent cavities, the walls of which have not become united. Internal incomplete fistulae, generally, become soon complete; since the discharge, which escapes from them into the cavities, where they open, has a constant tendency to make its way outwardly, and soon occasions ulceration of the integuments. Fistulae have received different names, according to the discharge, which they afford, and the organs in which they are seated,—as lachrymal, biliary, salivary, synovial, urinary.

The great object of treatment, in fistulous sores, is to bring on an altered condition of the parietes of the canal; by astringent or stimulating injections, caustics, the knife, pressure, &c. Those which are dependent on diseased bone, cartilage, tendon, &c. do not heal until after the exfoliation of the diseased part. Fis- tulae of excretory ducts are produced, either by an injury of the duct itself, or by the retention and accumulation of the fluids to which they have to give passage. Thus, Fistula lachrymalis, Empyagma lachrymalè, Hydrops sacci lachrymalis, Dropsy of the lachrymal sac, Muco-cèle of the lachrymal sac, commonly proceeds from the obliteration of the nasal duct, or from atony of the lachrymal sac; which circumstances prevent the tears from passing into the nostrils.

Fistula in ano, Archosyrinx, generally occurs from some mechanical pressure or impediment. The principal indication, in the treatment of these fistulae of the excretory canals, being,—to put a stop to the constant discharge of the secretions, &c. through the preternatural channel, the fistulous passage is at times laid open, and a communication established with the natural excretory canal; at others, strong pressure is employed to procure its obliteration.

FISTULA BELLENANA, Uriniferous tube—f. Cibalis, Oesophagus—f. Cruris, Fibula—f. Duræ matris, Sinus of the dura mater—f. Lachrymalis, see Fistula—f. Nervorum, Neurilema—f. Sacra, Medulla spinalis, Vertebral column—f. Spiritalis, Trachea—f. Urinaria, Urethra—f. Ureterum rennæ, see Calix—f. Ventriculi, Oesophagus.

FISTULE STERCORAIRES. See Stercoraceous.

FIXED, Fixus. A body not capable of being volatilized by fire is said to be fixed. Thus, we say fixed oils, in contradistinction to volatile oils.

FIXEN, MINERAL WATERS OF. This spring is four leagues from Waldsassen, in Bavaria. It contains carbonic acid, holding in solution carbonates of lime and magnesia, muriates of lime and magnesia, carbonate of soda and silica. In Bavaria, it replaces the Seltzer water.

FIXI DENTES. The teeth of the second dentition.

FLABELLATION, Flabella'tio, from flabella're, to agitate the air. An operation, recommended by Ambrose Paré, which consists in keeping fractured limbs cool, as well as the dressings surrounding them, by the renewal of the air around them, either by the use of a fan, or the repeated change of position of the parts affected.

FLABELLUM ET VENTILABRUM CORDIS, Pulmo.

FLACCIDITY, Flaccid'itas, from flac'idus, 'flabby,' 'soft.' Softness of a part, so as to offer little resistance on pressure.

FLAG, BLUE, Iris versicolor.

FLAMBE, Iris Germanica—f. Bâtard, Iris pseudacorus.

FLAMMA, Fleam.

FLAMME, Fleam.

FLAMMETTE, Fleam.

FLAMMULA, Fleam—f. Jovis, Clematis recta.

FLANCS, Flanks.

FLANKS, Hia, La'gones, Lap'ara, Ceneo'nes, (F.) Flancus, Les Iles. The regions of the body, which extend on the sides, from the inferior margin of the chest to the crista illi.

FLATUARIUS, Alchymist.

FLATULENCE, Flatulentia, Flatus, Flatuosity, Clydon, Physa, Polyphysia, Wind, Limosis Flatus, Ereulis, Bombus. (F.) Ventosité. Emission of wind by the mouth or anus; or accumulation of wind in the digestive tube.

FLATULENTUS, Windy.

FLATUOSITY, Flatulence.

FLATUS, Crepitation, Flatulence—f. Furiosus, Ambulo-flatulentus.

FLAVEDO CORTICUM CITRI. See Citrus medica.

FLAVUS, Yellow.

FLAX, COMMON, Linum usitatissimum—f. Purging, Linum catharticum—f. Seed, see Linum usitatissimum—f. Toad, Antirrhinum linaria.

FLEABANE, GREAT, Conyza squarrosa—f. Bean, Canada, Erigeron Canadense—f. Bean, Philadelphia, Erigeron Philadelphicum—f. Wort, Plantago psyllium.

FLEAM, Flamma, Flam'mula, Schust'eron, Fosso'rium, Phlebot'omus. A surgical instrument, used for the operation of phlebotomy. (F.) Flamme, Flammette. It consists of a small metallic box, containing a spear-pointed cutting instrument, which, by means of a spring, can be forced into the vein. It is much used in Germany and some other European countries; and is not unfrequently employed in America; but is scarcely ever seen in France or Great Britain.

FLÉCHISSEUR, Flexor—f. Court commun des orteils—f. Flexor brevis digitorum pedis—f. Court du petit doigt, Flexor parvus minimi digiti—f. Court du petit orteil, Flexor brevis minimi digiti pedis—f. Profond des doigts, Flexor profundus perforans—f. Sublimé des doigts, Flexor sublimis perforatus—f. Superficiel des doigts, Flexor sublimis perforatus—f. Court du gros orteil, Flexor brevis pollicis pedis—f. Grand commun des orteils, Flexor Longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans—f. Long commun des orteils, Flexor longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans—f. Long du gros orteil, Flexor longus pollicis pedis—f. Court du pouce, Flexor brevis pollicis manus.

FLECTENS PAR LUMBORUM, Quadratus lumborum.

FLEGMEN, Flemen.

FLEMEN, Flegmen. A tumour about the ankles. Also, chaps of the feet and hands.

FLERECIN, Gout.

FLESH, Caro, Sarr, σαρξ, (F.) Chair. Every soft part of an animal is so named; but more particularly the muscles, which are called muscular flesh.

FLESH, PROUD, Fungosity.

FLEURS, Flowers, Menses—f. Blanches, Leucorrhœa—f. de Muscade, Mace—f. de Soufre, Sulphur sublimatum.

FLEXIBILITY, A physical property of the tissues, which varies greatly according to the structure. The tendons exhibit this property in a marked manner.

FLEXIO, Campsis.

FLEXION, Flex'io, καμψή, Campē, from flex'tere, 'to bend.' The state of being bent. The action of a flexor muscle.

FLEXOR. Same etymon. (F.) Fléchisseur. A muscle, whose office it is to bend certain parts.

FLEXOR BREVIS DIGITORUM PEDIS PERFORATUS, F. Sublimis, Flexor brevis, Flexor digitorum brevis sive perforatus pedis, Perforatus seu flexor secun'di internodii digitorum pedis, Calcaneo-sous-phalangectien commun.—Calcaneo-sous-phalangien commun.—(Ch.) (F.) Muscle court fléchisseur commun des orteils. A muscle, placed at the middle part of the sole of the foot. It is narrower and thicker behind than before, where it is divided into four portions. It arises from the posterior part of the inferior surface of the os calcis, and is inserted at the inferior surface of the second phalanx of the four last toes. It bends the second phalanges of the toes on the first, and the first on the metatarsal bones; in this manner augmenting the concavity of the vault of the foot.

FLEXOR BREVIS MINIMI DIGITI, F. parvus minimi digiti.

FLEXOR BREVIS MINIMI DIGITI PEDIS. Parathenar minor, (F.) Court fléchisseur du petit orteil, Tarso-sous-phalangien du petit orteil—(Ch.) A muscle, situate at the anterior and outer part of the sole of the foot. It arises from the posterior extremity of the fifth metatarsal bone, and is inserted into the posterior part of the first phalanx of the little toe, which it bends.

FLEXOR BREVIS POL'LICIS MANUS, Flexor secun'di internodii, Thenar; Flexor primi et secun'di ossis pol'licis—Court fléchisseur du pouce—Carpophalangien du pouce,—(Ch.) Demi-interosseux du pouce. A muscle, situate at the outer part of the palm of the hand. It is divided into two portions by the tendon of the Flexor longus pollicis. It arises from the os magnum, the anterior annular ligament of the carpus and the third metacarpal bone; and is inserted into the superior part of the first phalanx of the thumb, and into the two ossa sesamoidea at the articulation of the first phalanx with the first metacarpal bone. Its use is to bend the first phalanx of the thumb on the first metacarpal bone; and the latter upon the trapezium.

FLEXOR BREVIS POL'LICIS PEDIS. Flexor brevis, Flexor hallucis vel brevis pol'licis, Tarso-phalangien du pouce, Court fléchisseur du gros orteil, Tarso-sous-phalangectien du premier orteil,—(Ch.) It is situate at the anterior and inner part of the sole of the foot; is thin and narrow behind, thick and divided into two portions before. It arises from the inferior part of the os calcis and the two last cuneiform bones, and is inserted at the inferior part of the base of the first phalanx of the great toe, and into the two sesamoid bones of the corresponding metatarsophalangien articulation. It bends the first phalanx of the great toe on the first metacarpal bone.

FLEXOR CARPI RADIALIS, Palmaris magnus—f. Carpi ulnaris, see Cubital (muscles)—f. Hallucis, F. brevis pollicis pedis—f. Hallucis longus, F. longus pollicis pedis.

FLEXOR LONGUS DIGITORUM PEDIS PROFUNDUS PERFORANS, Perforans seu Flexor profundus, Perodactyleus, Flexor digitorum longus sive Perforans pedis, Perforans seu Flexor tertii internodii digitorum pedis; Tibio-phalangectien,—(Ch.) Grand ou long fléchisseur commun des orteils. A muscle, situate at the posterior and deep-seated part of the leg. It is broader at its middle than extremities, the inferior of which is divided into four portions. It arises from the posterior surface of the tibia; and its tendons are attached to the posterior part of the lower surface of the three phalanges of the four last toes. It bends the three phalanges on each other, and the toes on the metatarsus, and extends the foot on the leg.

The ACCESSORIUS FLEXORIS LONGI DIGITORUM PEDIS, Caro quadra Sylvii, Caro accessoria, Plantaris verus; Accessoire du long fléchisseur commun des orteils, Carrée, is a small muscle of the sole of the foot, which passes obliquely from the os calcis to the outer edge of the flexor longus, whose force it augments, and corrects its obliquity.

FLEXOR LONGUS POLLICIS MANUS, Flexor longus pollicis, Flexor tertii internodii, Flexor tertii internodii sive longis sinus pollicis; Radio-phalangien du pouce,—(Ch.) Situate at the anterior and profound part of the forearm. It arises from the upper three-quarters of the anterior surface of the radius and interosseous ligament, and is inserted, by a tendon, into the anterior surface of the last phalanx of the thumb. It bends the second phalanx of the thumb on the first; the first on the corresponding metacarpal bone, and this upon the radius. It can, also, bend the hand on the forearm.

FLEXOR LONGUS POLLICIS PEDIS, Flexor hallucis vel Pollicis longus, Péronéo-phalangien du gros orteil, Long fléchisseur du gros orteil, Péronéo-sous-phalangien du pouce,—(Ch.) It is situate at the posterior and profound part of the leg. It arises from the posterior surface of the fibula and the interosseous ligament, and is inserted, by means of a long tendon, into the inferior part of the first phalanx of the great toe. It bends the third phalanx on the first: and this upon the corresponding metatarsal bone. It augments the concavity of the sole of the foot, and extends the foot on the leg.

FLEXOR PARVUS MINIMI DIGITI, Abductor minimi digiti, Hypoth'endar Riola'ni, Flexor brevis minimi digiti manus, Hypoth'endar minimi digiti, Carpo-phalangien du petit doigt—(Ch.) Court fléchisseur du petit doigt. It arises from the anterior annular ligament of the carpus and the process of the os unciforme, and is inserted at the inner side of the superior extremity of the first phalanx of the little finger. It bends the first phalanx of the little finger.

FLEXOR PERFORANS, F. profundus perforans—f. Perforatus, F. sublimis perforatus—f. Primi internodii, Opponens pollicis—f. Primi internodii digitorum manus, Lumbricales manus—f. Primi et secundi ossis pollicis, F. brevis pollicis manus.

FLEXOR PROFUNDUS PERFORANS, F. Profundus, F. Perforans, F. Perforans vulgo profundus, Flexor tertii internodii digitorum manus vel Perforans manus; Cubito-phalangien commun—(Ch.) Fléchisseur profond des doigts. A thick, flat, long muscle, seated beneath the Flexor sublimis perforatus. Its upper extremity is simple, and arises from the anterior surface of the ulna and from the interosseous ligament. Its inferior extremity terminates by four tendons which, after having passed through the slits in the sublimis, are inserted into the anterior surface of the last phalanges of the four fingers. It bends the third phalanges on the second; and, in other respects, has the same uses as the following.

FLEXOR SECUNDI INTERNODII DIGITORUM PEDIS, F. brevis digitorum pedis—f. Tertii internodii, F. longus pollicis manus—f. Tertii internodii digitorum manus, F. profundus perforans—f. Tertii internodii digitorum pedis, F. longus digitorum pedis profundus perforans—f. Ossis metacarpi pollicis, Opponens pollicis—f. Perforatus pedis, F. brevis digitorum pedis—f. Sublimis, F. brevis digitorum pedis.

FLEXOR SUBLIMIS PERFORATUS, F. Perforatus, Fléchisseur sublime ou superficial des doigts, Epitrochlo-phalangien commun,—(Ch.) It is a thick, flat muscle, seated at the anterior part of the forearm. Its upper extremity, which is simple, arises from the internal condyle of the os humeri;—from the coronoid process of the ulna, and from the anterior edge of the radius. Its lower extremity divides into four tendons, which slide under the anterior annular ligament of the carpus, and are inserted into the second phalanges of the four last fingers, after having been slit to allow the tendons of the flexor profundus to pass through them. This muscle bends the second phalanges on the first; these on the carpal bones, and the hand on the forearm.

FLIXWEED, Sisymbrium sophia.

FLOUR, POTATO. See Solanum tuberosum.

FLOWER DE LUCE, Iris Germanica.

FLOWERS, Flores, (F.) Flours. The ancient chymists gave this name to different solid and volatile substances, obtained by sublimation. The term is not yet entirely banished from chymical and medical language, as Flowers of Benjamin, Flowers of Sulphur, &c.

The FOUR CORDIAL FLOWERS, Quat'our flores cordial'es were, formerly, borage, bugloss, roses, and violets.

The FOUR CARMINATIVE FLOWERS, Quat'our flores carminati'vi, were camomile, dill, feverfew, and melilot.

FLOWERS, Menses.

FLUCTUATION, Fluctuatio, from fructus, 'a wave.' Undulatio, (F.) Ondulation. The undulation of a fluid, collected in any natural or artificial cavity, which is felt by pressure or by percussion, properly practised. In ascites, the fluctuation is felt by one of the hands being applied to one side of the abdomen, whilst the other side is struck with the other hand. In abscesses, fluctuation is perceived by pressing on the tumour, with one or two fingers alternately, on opposite points.

FLUELLEN, Antirrhinum elatine.

FLUELLIN, Veronica.

FLUEURS, Menses.

FLUID, Flu'idus, from fluere, 'to flow.' The human body is chiefly composed of fluids. If a subject, weighing 120 pounds, be thoroughly dried in an oven, the remains will be found not to weigh more than 12 or 13 pounds: so that the proportion of fluids to liquids in the body is about 9 or 10 to 1.

TABLE OF THE FLUIDS OF THE HUMAN BODY.

- 1. Blood.
- 2. Lymph.

3. Exhaled or Perspiratory Fluids.

4. Follicular Fluids.

5. Glandular Fluids.

Cutaneous transpiration;—transpiration of the mucous, serous, and synovial membranes; of the cellular membrane; of the adipous cells; of the medullary membrane; of the interior of the thyroid gland; the thymus; supra-renal capsules; eye; ear; vertebral canal, &c.

Sebaceous humour of the skin; cerumen; gum of the eye; mucus of the mucous glands and follicles; that of the tonsils, of the glands of the cardia, the environs of the anus, of the prostate, &c.

Tears; saliva; pancreatic fluid; bile; urine; of the glands of Cowper; sperm; milk; fluid of the testes and mammæ of the newborn child.

FLUIDUM NERVEUM, Nervous fluid.

FLUKE, Distoma hepaticum.

FLUMEN DYSENTERICUM, Dysentery.

FLUOR ALBUS INTESTINORUM, Cœliac flux—f. Albus malignus, Gonorrhœa impura—f. Muliebris, Leucorrhœa—f. Muliebris non Gallicus, Leucorrhœa.

FLUX, Fluxus, Profusivum, from fluere, 'to flow.' A discharge. Rhysis. In Nosology, it comprises a series of affections, the principal symptom of which is the discharge of a fluid. Generally, it is employed for dysentery, (q. v.)

FLUX, BILIOUS, Fluxus biliosus. A discharge of bile, either by vomiting or by stool, or by both, as in cholera.

FLUX, BLOODY, Dysentery—*f. de Bouche, Salivation—f. Dysentérique, Dysentery—f. Hépatique, Hepatirrhœa—f. Muqueux, Catarrh—f. Muqueux de l'estomac, Gastrorrhœa—f. Muqueux de la vessie, Cystirrhœa—f. FLUXIO ALBA, Leucorrhœa—f. Arthritica, Gout.

FLUXION, Fluxio, Affluxus. A flow of blood or other humour towards any organ with greater force than natural. A determination. Thus we say, in those disposed to apoplexy, there is a fluxion or determination of blood to the head.

FLUXION CATARRHALE, Catarrh—f. Sur les dents, Odontalgia.

FLUXION DE POITRINE, (F). By this name, the French often understand the acute pulmonary catarrh or pleurisy, but most commonly peripneumony.

FŒNUGREEK, Trigonella fœnum.

FŒNUM CAMELŒRUM, Juncus odoratus—f. Græcum, Trigonella fœnum.

FŒTAB'ULUM. An encysted abscess.—Marcus Aurelius Severinus.

FŒTAL, Fætalis. Relating to the fœtus. A name, given to parts connected with the fœtus. Thus we say—the fætal surface of the placenta, in contradistinction to the uterine or maternal surface.

FŒTAL HEAD. The diameters of this at the full period, are as follow:—1. The Biparietal or transverse, extending from one parietal protuberance to the other, and measuring 3½ inches. 2. The Temporal, from one temple to another, 3 inches. 3. The Occipito-mental, from the occiput to the chin; the greatest of all, 5 inches. 4. The Occipito-frontal or antero-posterior, 4¼ or 4½ inches. 5. The Cervico-bregmatic, from the nape of the neck to the centre of the anterior fontanelle. 6. The Fronto-mental, from the forehead to the chin, about 3½ inches. 7. The Trachelo-bregmatic, from the front of the neck to the anterior fontanelle, 3½ inches. 8. The Vertical diameter, from the vertex to the base of the cranium.

The FŒTAL CIRCULATION differs from that of the adult in several respects. Commencing with the placenta, the fœtal blood is sent from the placenta, where it probably undergoes some change analogous to what occurs in the lungs in extra-uterine existence, by the umbilical vein as far as the liver, where a part of it is poured into the vena porta; the other proceeds into the vena cava inferior; the latter, having received the suprahepatic veins, pours its blood into the right auricle. From the right auricle, a part of the blood is sent into the right ventricle; the rest passes directly through into the left auricle, by the foramen ovale. When the right ventricle contracts, the blood is sent into the pulmonary artery; but as the function of respiration is not going on, no more blood passes to the lungs than is necessary for their nutrition: the remainder goes directly through the ductus arteriosus into the aorta. The blood, received by the left auricle from the lungs, as well as that which passed through the foramen ovale, is transmitted into the left ventricle; by the contraction of which it is sent into the aorta; and by means of the umbilical arteries, which arise from the hypogastric, it is returned by the umbilical arteries to the placenta.

FŒTATION, Pregnancy.

FŒTICIDE, *Fœticid'ium; from fœtus, and cœdere, 'to kill.' Criminal abortion.

FŒTOR ORIS, Breath, offensive.

FŒTUS, Fetus, ζυῖμα, Cyē ma, Epicycē ma, Epigo'nion, from feo, 'I bring forth.' The unborn child. By ζυῖμα, Hippocrates meant the fecundated, but still imperfect, germ. It corresponded with the term embryo, as now used; whilst εμβρυον, 'embryo,' signified the fœtus at a more advanced stage of utero-gestation.

The majority of Anatomists apply to the germ the name embryo, which it retains until the third month of gestation, and with some until the period of quickening; whilst fœtus is applied to it in its latter stages. The terms are, however, often used indiscriminately.

When the ovule has been fecundated in the ovarium, and remained there for some days, it descends into the uterus, with which it becomes more or less connected by means of the placenta. When first seen, the fœtus has the form of a gelatinous flake, which some have compared to an ant, a grain of barley, a worm curved upon itself, &c. The fœtal increment is very rapid in the first, third, fourth, and sixth months of its formation; and at the end of nine months, it has attained its full dimensions.

Generally, there is but one fœtus in utero; sometimes, there are two; rarely three.

The fœtus presents considerable difference in its shape, weight, length, situation in the womb, proportion of its various parts to each other, arrangement and texture of its organs, state of its functions at different periods of gestation, &c. All these differences are important in an obstetrical and medico-legal point of view.

The following table exhibits the length and weight of the fœtus at different periods of gestation, on the authority of different observers. Their discordance is striking. It is proper to remark, that the Paris pound—Poids de Marc—of 16 ounces, contain 9216 Paris grains, whilst the avoirdupois contains only 8532.5 Paris grains, and that the Paris inch is 1.065977 English inch.

FOLLIC'ULI GRAAFIA'NI, *Ovula Graafiana, Follicles or Vesicles of de Graaf. Small spherical vesicles, from 15 to 20 in number, in each ovary, which are filled with an albuminous fluid. They exist in the fœtus. The ovum—ovule of some—is contained in them.

FOLLICULI ROTUNDI ET OBLONGI CERVICIS UTERI, Nabothi glandulæ—f. Sanguinis, Globules of the blood.

FOLLICULOSE GLAND, Crypta.

FOLLICULUS FELLIS, Gall-bladder.

FOMENTATION, Fomentatio, Fotus, Pyria, Thermas'na, Æone'sis, Perfusio, Asper'sio, *Fomentum, from fovere, 'to bathe.' A sort of partial bathing, by the application of hot cloths, which have been previously dipped in hot water or in some medicated decoction. They act, chiefly, by virtue of their warmth and moisture, except in the case of the narcotic fomentations, where some additional effect is obtained.

A dry fomentation is a warm, dry application to a part;—as a hot brick, wrapped in flannel;—a bag, half filled with camomile flowers made hot, &c.

FOMENTATION HERBS, *Herbæ pro foû. The herbs, ordinarily sold under this title by the English apothecary, are—southernwood, tops of sea wormwood, camomile flowers, each two parts: bay leaves, one part. ℞iijss of these to ℥vj of water.

TO FOMENT, Fovere, (F.) Étuver, *Bassiner. To apply a fomentation to a part.

FOMENTUM, Fomentation.

FOMES MORBI. The focus or seat of any disease. (F.) Foyer. Fomes mali.

FOMES VENTRICULI, Hypochondriasis.

FOMITES, from *fomes, 'fuel, any thing which retains heat.' Enaus'na, Zopyron, εναυσμα, ζωπυρον. A term, applied to substances which are supposed to retain contagious effluvia; as woollen goods, feathers, cotton, &c.

FONCTION, Function.

FOND, Fundus.

FONDANT, Solvent.

FONGOSITÉ, Fungosity.

FONGUS, Fungus.

FONS, Fontanella—f. Pulsans, Fontanella—f. Pulsatilis, Fontanella—f. Salutaris, Water, mineral.

FONSANGE, MINERAL WATERS OF. Fonsange is situate near Nismes in France. The water is sulphuretted.

FONTANA, CANAL OF. A canal, of a triangular shape, at the inner side of the ciliary circle; partly formed by the groove at the inner edges of the cornea and sclerotic.

FONTANEL'LA. A fontanel, diminutive of fons, 'a fountain.' Fons pulsatilis, Fons pulsans, Vertex palpitans, Fons, Bregma, Fonticulus, (q. v.) Lacuna, Mould. The opening of the head. A name, given to spaces occupied by a cartilaginous membrane, in the fœtus and new-born child; and situate at the union of the angles of the bones of the cranium.

There are six fontanelles. 1. The great or sincipital or anterior, situate at the junction of the sagittal and coronal sutures. 2. The small or bregmatic or posterior, situate at the part where the posterior and superior angles of the parietal bones unite with the upper part of the os occipitis. 3. The two sphenoidal, in the temporal fossæ; and, 4. The two mastoid, or of Casserius, at the union of the parietal, occipital, and temporal bones.

FONTES SULPHUREI CALIDI, Waters, mineral, sulphureous.

FONTICULE À POIS. See Fonticulus.

FONTICULUS, Fontanel'la, (F.) Fonticule, Cautére. A small ulcer produced by art, either by the aid of caustics or of cutting instruments; the discharge from which is kept up with a view of fulfilling certain therapeutical indications. The Pea issue, (F.) Fonticule à pois, is kept up by means of a pea placed in it. This pea, (F.) Pois à cautère, is sometimes formed of wax; at others, the young, blasted fruit of the orange is employed. The common dried garden pea answers every purpose. The seton is also an issue.

FOOL'S STONES, MALE, Orchis mascula.

FOOT, Pes—f. Flat, see Kylosis—f. Grifon's, Gryphus pes.

FORAMEN, Trama, from foro, 'I pierce.' Aulos, (F.) Trou. Any cavity, pierced through and through. Also, the orifice of a canal.

FORCE, from fortis, 'strong.' Vis, Potentialia, Energia, Dynamis, Cratos. Any power, which produces an action. Those powers, which are inherent to organization, are called vital forces. We say, also, organic forces, and muscular forces, to designate that of the organs in general, or of the muscles in particular. To the latter the word Dynamis, δυναμις corresponds; and the absence of this force is termed adynamia. The vital forces have to be studied carefully by the pathologist. The doctrine of diseases is greatly dependent on their augmentation or diminution; freedom or oppression, &c.

FORCE OF NUTRITION, Plastic force—f. of Assimilation, Plastic force.

FORCE-REAL, MINERAL WATERS OF. The name of a mountain, situate four leagues from Perpignan in France. The water is chalybeate.

FORCEPS, quasi, fer'riceps, from ferrum, 'iron,' and capio, 'I take.' Pincers, Labis, λαβίς, Volscl'la. An instrument for removing bodies, which it would be inconvenient or impracticable to seize with the fingers. (F.) Pinces, Pinctes.

There are various kinds of forceps.—1. The ordinary kind, contained in every dressing-case, for removing the lint, &c. from wounds or ulcers. (F.) Pinces à anneaux. 2. The Dissecting or Ligature or Arterial Forceps, (F.) Pinces a dissection, P. a ligature, to lay hold of delicate parts. 3. Polypus Forceps, Tooth Forceps, Forceps of Museux, for laying hold of the tonsils or other parts to be removed. The Bullet Forceps, Strombulcus, (F.) Tire-ball, &c. The Lithotomy Forceps, Lithot'abon, Tenacl'ula, Volscl'la, which resemble the Craniotomy Forceps, (F.) Tenettes.

Also, an instrument used by obstetrical practitioners to embrace the head, and bring it through the pelvis. It consists of two branches, blades or levers; one of which, in the case of the short forceps, is passed over the ear of the child, and the other opposite to the former, so that the blades may lock. When the head is securely included between the blades, the operation of extraction can be commenced. See Parturition.

FOREARM, Pars inferior brachii, Cubitus, (F.) Avant bras. The part of the upper extremity, comprised between the arm and the hand. It is composed of two bones—radius and ulna—and 20 muscles.

FOREHEAD, Front.

FORENSIC MEDICINE, Medicine, legal.

FORESKIN, Prepuce.

FORFEX, Scissors—f. Dentaria, Dentagra.

FORGES, MINERAL WATERS OF. F. is situate four leagues from Gournay, in the department of Seine Inférieure, France. There are three springs, which are acidulous chalybeates. They are called Royale, Reinette, and Cardinal, in honour of Louis XIII. Queen Anne of Austria, and Cardinal Richelieu, who used them.

FORMICA, Myrmex, μυρμηξ, the ant or pismire, (F.) Fourmi. It contains an acid juice and gross oil, which were formerly extolled as aphrodisiacs. The chrysalides of the animal are said to be diuretic and carminative; and have been used in dropsy. 2. Also, the name of a black wart with a broad base and cleft surface; so called because the pain, attending it, resembles the biting of an ant, μυρμηκία, myrmecia.—Forestus. 3. A varicose tumour on the anus and glans penis. 4. Also, any military herpes.

FORMICA AMBULATORIA, Herpes circinatus—f. Corrosive, Herpes exedens.

FORMICANT, Myrmecizon, Formicans, from formica, 'an ant.' (F.) Fourmillant. An epithet, given to the pulse when extremely small, scarcely perceptible, unequal, and communicating a sensation like that of the motion of an ant through a thin texture.

FORMICATION, Formicatio, Myrmeciasmos, Myrmeciasis. Same etymon. (F.) Fourmillement. A pain, compared with that, which would be caused by a number of ants creeping on a part.

FORMULA, from forma, 'a form,' (F.) Formule, Ordonnance. The receipt for the formation of a compound medicine; a prescription.

FORMULARY, Formularium, Codex medicamentarius. A collection of medical formulæ or receipts.

FORMULE, Prescription.

FORNIX, Cam'era. Fornix trilateralis, Psalis, Testudo, Arcus medullaris, Trigone cérébral—(Ch.), (F.) Voute à trois piliers, Triangle Médullaire. A medullary body, observed in the brain, below the corpus callosum and above the middle ventricle, on the median line. This body, which is curved upon itself, terminates anteriorly by a prolongation, which constitutes its anterior pillar or crus, (F.) Pilier antérieur, and posteriorly by two similar prolongations, called posterior pillars or crura. See Archicolum, and Vault.

FORPEX, Scissors.

FORTIFIANT, Corroborant, Tonic.

FORTRAITURE, Hysteralgia.

FOSSA, from fodio, 'I dig,' Scamma. A cavity of greater or less depth, the entrance to which is always larger than the base. The fossæ of bones have been called simple, when they belong to one bone only, as the parietal fossa; and compound, (F.) Fosses composées, when several concur in their formation, as the orbital fossa, temporal fossa, &c.

FOSSA AMYNTÆ. A kind of bandage, used in fractures of the nose; so called by Galen from Amyntas of Rhodes, its inventor. It consisted of a long band, applied round the head, the turns of which crossed at the root of the nose.

FOSSA CEREBELLI, (F.) Fosse cérébelleuse. The inferior occipital fossa, which lodges the corresponding portion of the cerebellum.

FOSSÆ CEREBRALES, Cerebral fossæ. Fossæ or excavations at the base of the cranium. They are nine in number; three occupy the median line, and three are placed at each side. They are distinguished into anterior, middle, and posterior.

FOSSÆ CORONALES. The coronal or frontal fossæ. Depressions on the orbital plates of the frontal or coronal bone, which support the anterior lobes of the brain.

FOSSA CORONOIDEA, Coronoid fossa, a cavity before the inferior extremity of the humerus, in which the coronoid process of the ulna is engaged during flexion of the forearm.

FOSSA COTYLOIDEA, see Cotyloid.

FOSSA ETHMOIDALIS, Ethmoid fossa. A shallow gutter on the upper surface of the cribriform plate of the ethmoid bone, on which is lodged the expanded portion of the olfactory nerve.

FOSSA GUTTURALIS, Guttural fossa. The depression, which forms the guttural region of the base of the cranium, between the Foramen magnum and posterior nares.

FOSSA MAGNA MULIEBRIS, Vulva.

FOSSÆ OCCIPITALES, Occipital fossæ. These are four in number; the superior or cerebral, and the inferior or cerebellous. They are separated by a groove, which lodges the lateral sinus.

FOSSA PALATINA, Palate—f. Pituitaria, Sella turcica—f. Scaphoides, Navicularis fossa—f. Supra-sphenoidalis, Pituitaria fossa—f. of Sylvius, Ventricle, fifth—f. Magna Sylvii, Fissura Sylvii—f. Umbilicalis, see Liver.

FOSSÆ BASILAIRES, Basilar fossæ—f. Sub-epineuse, Infra-spinata fossa—f. Sus-epineuse, Fossa supra-spinata.

FOSSÆ CONDYLOIDIENNES, Condyloidea foramina.

FOSSÆ NASALES, OVERTURES POSTÉRIEURES DES, Nares posterior.

FOSSA POPLITEA, Popliteal fossa. The hollow of the ham or the popliteal region.

FOSETTE (F.), Diminutive of fossa. Scrobiculus, Bothrium. Several depressions are so called. A dimpled chin, Fossette du menton, consists in a slight depression, which certain persons have on the chin. 2. A dimple of the cheek. (F.) Fossette des joues, a depression, which occurs on the cheeks of certain persons when they laugh. (F.) Fossette du cœur, Scrobiculus cordis, Anticardion, Præcordium. The depression observed on a level with the xiphoid cartilage at the anterior and inferior part of the chest. It is, also, called pit of the stomach, (F.) Creux de l'estomac.

FOSETTE ANGULAIRE DU QUATRIÈME VENTRICULE, Calamus scriptorius—f. du Cœur, Scrobiculus cordis.

FOSETTE, Fos'sula, Anulus, Bothrium, is a small ulcer of the transparent cornea, the centre of which is deep.

FOSSORIUM, Fleam.

FOSSULA, Argema, Fossette.

FOTUS, Fomentation—f. Communis, Decoctum papaveris.

FOUGÈRE FEMELLE, Pteris aquilina—f. Grande, Pteris aquilina.

FOULURE, Sprain.

FOURCHE (F.), from fouché, 'cleft,' from furca, 'a fork.' Apostéma Phalan'gum. A French provincial term, for small abscesses, which form on the fingers and hands of working people. Also, an instrument, invented by M. J. L. Petit for compressing the ranine artery, in cases of hemorrhage from that vessel.

FOURCHETTE, Furcilla, a little fork, Furcula. A surgical instrument used for raising and supporting the tongue, during the operation of dividing the frenum.

Fourchette, in Anatomy, is, 1. The posterior commissure of the labia majora, called also, Frænum and Furcula. 2. The cartilago ensiformis; so called from its being sometimes cleft like a fork.

FOURMI, Formica.

FOURMILLANT, Formicant.

FOURMILLEMENT, Fornication.

FOVEA, from fodio, 'I dig.' Bothros. A slight depression; the puendum muliebre; see Vulva. Also, the fossa navicularis. A vapour bath for the lower extremities.

FOVEA AXILLARIS, Axilla—f. Lacrymalis, Lachrymal fossa.

FOXGLOVE, Digitalis.

FOYER, Fomes morbi.

RACTURE, Fractura, from fran'gere, 'to break,' 'bruise,' Catag'ma, Catag'ma Fractura, Cataxis, Clasis, Clasma, Agme, Diar'rhage. A solution of continuity in a bone. A simple fracture is, when the bone only is divided. A compound fracture is a division of the bone with a wound of the integuments communicating with the bone;—the bone, indeed, generally protruding. In a comminuted fracture, Alphit'odon, αλφιτηδον, Carye'don Catag'ma, καρυηδον καταγμα, the bone is broken into several pieces: and in a complicated F. there is, in addition to the injury done to the bone, a lesion of some considerable vessel, nervous trunk, &c. Fractures are also termed transverse, oblique, &c., according to their direction.

The treatment of fractures consists, in general, in reducing the fragments when displaced; maintaining them when reduced; preventing the symptoms, which may be likely to arise; and combating them when they occur. The reduction of fractures must be operated by extension, counter-extension, and coaptation. (See these words.)

The parts are kept in apposition by position, rest, and an appropriate apparatus. The position must vary according to the kind of fracture. Commonly, the fractured limb, is placed on a horizontal or slightly inclined plane, in a state of extension; or rather in a middle state between extension and flexion, according to the case.

RACTURE EN RAVE, Raphanedon.

RACTURES PAR RESONNANCE. See Contraffisura.

FRÆNA MORGAGNII, F. of the valve of Bauhin.

FRÆNULUM, Frænum, Bride—f. Clitoridis, Frænum clitoridis—f. Novum, Tænia semicircularis.

FRÆNUM, Frænulum, Frenum, Filic'tum, Filamentum. A bridle, a small bridle. A name given to several membranous folds, which bridle and retain certain organs.

FRÆNUM GLANDIS, F. penis.

The FRÆNUM or FRÆNULUM LINGUÆ, (F.) Filet de la langue, is a triangular reflection, formed by the mucous membrane of the mouth, and situate between the inferior paries of that cavity and the inferior surface of the tongue. When the frænum extends as far as the extremity of the tongue, it cramps its movements, interferes with sucking, &c. This inconvenience is remedied by carefully snipping it with a pair of scissors. The French call this, l'opération du filet.

The FRÆNUM PENIS, F. Præputii, F. Glandis, Cynodes'mion, (F.) Filet ou Frein de la verge, is a membranous reflection which fixes the prepuce to the lower part of the glans. When too short, it prevents the prepuce from sliding over the glans.

FRÆNUM LABIORUM, (F.) Frein des lèvres. There are two of these: one for the upper, the other for the lower lip. They unite these parts to the maxillary bones, and are formed by the mucous membrane of the mouth.

FRÆNUM or FRÆNULUM CLITORIDIS. A slight duplicature, formed by the union of the internal portions of the upper extremity of the nymphæ.

FRÆNUM PRÆPUTII, F. Penis.

FRÆNA OF THE VALVE OF BAUHIN. A name given by Morgagni to the projecting lines formed by the junction of the extremities of the two lips of the ileo-cæcal valve. They are also called Fræna and Retinacula Morgagnii.

FRAGARIA, from frago, 'I smell sweetly.' The Strawberry, Fragaria vesca, Chama'bato, (F.) Fraisier. The fruit is agreeable and wholesome, and the roots have been used as tonic and slightly diuretic. The fruit is the Fragum, ζουφορον, of the ancients. (F.) Fraise.

FRAGILE VITREUM, Fragilitas osium.

FRAGILITAS OSIUM, Osteopsathyrosis, Brittleness of the bones. Friability of the bones, Paros'tia frag'ilis, Fragile vitreum. Pathologists have given this name to the extreme facility with which bones break in certain diseases of the osseous texture. It is owing to a deficiency of the animal matter.

FRAGMENT, Fragmentum, Fragmen, Ramen'tum. The French use this term for the two portions of a fractured bone; thus, they speak of the superior and inferior fragment.

FRAGMENTS, PRECIOUS. A name formerly given, in Pharmacy, to the garnet, hyacinth, emerald, sapphire and topaz. The Arabs falsely attributed to them cordial and alexiterial properties.

FRAGON, Ruscus.

FRAGUM. See Fragaria.

FRAISE. See Fragaria.

FRAISIER, Fragaria.

FRAMBŒSIA, from Franboise, (F.) A raspberry, Syphilitis Indica, Anthro'cia rubula, Thymio'sis, Lucis Indica, Variola Amboinen'sis, Lepra fungifera. The yacoe, Epian, Pian. A disease of the Antilles and of Africa; characterized by tumours, of a contagious character, which resemble strawberries, raspberries, or champignons; ulcerate and are accompanied with emaciation.

The Pian, for so the Indians call it, differs somewhat in America and Africa.

The Pian of Guinea, Frambœsia Guineen'sis, Anthro'cia Rubula Guineen'sis, is common amongst the negroes, especially in childhood and youth. It begins by small spots, which appear on different parts, and especially on the organs of generation and around the anus; these spots disappear, and are transformed into an eschar, to which an excrescence succeeds, that grows slowly, and has the shape above described.

The Pian of America, Frambø'sia America'na, Anthrācia Ru'bula America'na, occurs under similar circumstances, and seems to be transmitted by copulation. The tumours have a similar form, and are greater in proportion to their paucity. In some cases they are mixed with ulcers.

The treatment is nearly the same in the two varieties. The tumours will yield to mercurial friction, when small. When large, they must be destroyed by caustic. In both cases, mercury must be given to prevent a recurrence.

FRAMBOISE, Rubus idæus.

FRANCOLIN, Attagen.

FRANGES SYNOVIALES, Synovial glands,

FRANGULA ALNUS, Rhamnus frangula.

FRANKINCENSE, COMMON, see Pinus abies—f. True, Juniperus lycia.

FRASERA CAROLINIENSIS, see Calumba—f. Walteri, see Calumba.

FRATERINITAS, Adelphixia.

FRATRATIO, Adelphixia.

FRAXINELLA, WHITE, Dictamnus albus.

FRAXINUS EXCELSIOR. The systematic name of the Ash tree, Fraxinus, Ornus seu Fraxinus sylvæstris, Bumel'ia seu Macedon'ica Fraxinus, Bumelia. Ord. Oleineæ. (F.)

Frêne. The fresh bark has a moderately strong, bitterish taste. It has been said to possess resolvent and diuretic qualities, and has been given in intermittents. The seeds, called Birds' tongues, Lingvæ avis, Ornithoglos'sæ, have been exhibited as diuretics, in the dose of a drachm. Its sap has been extolled against deafness.

FRAXINUS MACEDONICA, F. excelsior.

FRAXINUS ORNUS. The systematic name of the tree whence manna flows. Fraxinus Melia. This substance is also called Manna Calabri'na, Ros Calabri'nus, Aerom'eli, Drosom'eli, Drysom'eli, Mel ær'ium. In Sicily, not only the Fraxinus Ornus, but also the rotundifolia and excelsior are regularly cultivated for the purpose of procuring manna, which is their condensed juice. Manna is inodorous, sweetish, with a very slight degree of bitterness; in friable flakes, of a whitish or pale yellow colour; opaque, and soluble in water and alcohol. It is a laxative, and is used as a purgative for children, who take it readily on account of its sweetness. More generally, it is employed as an adjunct to other purgatives. Dose,  $\zeta$ ss to  $\zeta$ ij. Its immediate principle is called Mannite. This has been recommended by Magendie as a substitute for manna. Dose,  $\zeta$ ij for children.

FRAXINUS ROTUNDFOLIA, F. ornus.

FRAYEUR NOCTURNE, Panophobia.

FRECKLES, Ephelides.

FREIN DES LÈVRES, Frænum labiorum—f. de la Verge, Frænum penis.

FREINWÄLDE, MINERAL WATERS OF. These springs are in Brandenburg, twelve leagues from Berlin. They contain muriate of soda, sulphate of magnesia, muriate of magnesia, sulphate of lime, carbonates of lime and magnesia, iron, &c., and are used in asthenic diseases.

FRÉMISSEMENT, Shuddering.

FRÉMISSEMENT CATAIRE, (F.) 'Cat's

purr.' Laënnec has given this name to the agitation, which is sensible to the hand, when applied on the præcordial region, and which he considers a sign of ossification or other contraction of the auriculo-ventricular openings. This name was chosen by him from the analogy of the sound to the purring of a cat.

FRÉMITUS, Bruissement, Shuddering.

FRENA, Alveolus.

FRÈNE, Fraxinus excelsior—f. Épineux, Xanthoxylum clava Herculis.

FRENUM, Frænum.

FRET, Herpes.

FRÉTILLEMENT, Fidgets.

FRICATIO, Friction.

FRICATORIUM, Liniment.

FRICE, FRICUM, FRICO'NIUM. Any medicine which the ancients employed under the form of friction. They distinguished the Fricè siccum and F. Mollè.—Gaubius.

FRICONIUM, Frice.

FRICTA, Colophonia.

FRICION, Frictio, Fricatio, Anat'ribè, Anat'rip'sis, Trypsis, from fricare, 'to rub.' The action of rubbing a part of the surface of the body with more or less force, with the hands, a brush, flannel, &c., constituting Xerotrib'ia, Fricatio sicca, or dry friction, or with ointments, liniments, tinctures, &c., constituting moist friction. It is a useful means for exciting the activity of the vital properties of the skin.

FRICTUM, Liniment.

FRICUM, Frice.

FRIGIDARIUM, Bath, cold.

FRIGIDITY, Frigid'itas, from frig'idum, 'cold.' A sensation of cold. Also, impotence, and sterility. Frigidity of the stomach is a state of debility of that organ, imputed to excessive venery,—the Anorexia exhaustorum of Sauvages.

FRIGORIFIC, from frigus, 'cold,' and facio, 'I make.' That which has the power of producing cold.

The best FRIGORIFIC MIXTURES are the following. Their effects are owing to the rapid absorption of heat when solids pass into the liquid state.

FRIGORIFIC MIXTURES WITH SNOW.

FRIGUS, Cold.

FRIGUS TENUE, see Rigor.

FRISSON, Rigor.

FRISSONNEMENT, Horripilation.

FROG TONGUE, Ranula.

FROID, Cold—f. Glaciel, Ice-cold.

FROLEMENT, (F) 'Grazing or touching lightly.'

FROLEMENT PERICARDIQUE. Rustling noise of the pericardium. A sound resembling that produced by the crumpling of a piece of parchment or of thick silken stuff, accompanying the systole and diastole of the heart. It indicates roughness of the pericardium induced by disease.

FROMAGE, Cheese.

FROMENT, Triticum.

FRONCEMENT, Corrugation.

FRONCLE, Furunculus.

FRONDE, Funda.

FRONT, Frons, Μέτωπον, Forehead, Β. occ.

That part of the visage, which extends from one temple to the other, and is comprised, in a vertical direction, between the roots of the hair and the superciliary ridges.

FRONTAL, Frontalis. Relating or belonging to the front. This name has been given to several parts. Winslow, Sömmerring, and others, call the anterior part of the occipito-frontalis—the frontal muscle or frontalis: Musculus Frontis Cutem movens substar'ia Par (Vesalius.)

The FRONTAL BONE, Os frontis, Os coronal'e, Os interecundum, Μέτωπον. Os puppis, Os Rat'ionis. A double bone in the fœtus, single in the adult, situate at the base of the cranium, and at the superior part of the face. It forms the vault of the orbits; lodges the ethmoid bone in a notch at its middle part; and is articulated, besides, with the sphenoid, parietal, and nasal bones, the ossa unguis, superior maxillary, and malar bones.

The FRONTAL ARTERY, A. supra-orbitalis, is given off by the ophthalmic, which is itself a branch of the internal carotid. It makes its exit from the skull at the upper part of the base of the orbit, and ascends the forehead between the bone and the orbicularis palpebrarum; dividing into three or four branches, which are distributed to the neighbouring muscles.

The FRONTAL FURROW extends upwards from the frontal spine, and becomes gradually larger in its course, to lodge the upper part of the superior longitudinal sinus, and to give attachment to the falx cerebri.

The FRONTAL NERVE, Palpébro-frontal,—(Ch.) is the greatest of the three branches of the ophthalmic nerve,—the first division of the 5th pair. It proceeds along the superior paries of the orbit, and divides into two branches:—the one, internal, which makes its exit from the orbital fossa, passing beneath the pulley of the oblique muscle:—the other, external, issuing from the same cavity, by the foramen orbitarium superius.

The FRONTAL SINUS, Frontales Sinus, Sinus Superciliares, S. pituitarii frontis, Cæcæ frontis, are two deep cavities in the substance of the frontal bone, separated from each other by a medium septum, and opening, below, into the anterior cells of the ethmoid bone.

The FRONTAL SPINE, Crista interna, is situate in the middle of the upper part of the bone, and is formed by the coalescence of the inner tables for the attachment of the falx cerebri.

Surgeons have given the name FRONTALIS, to a bandage or topical application to the forehead. Such have, also been called προμετωπιδια and ανακόλληματα.

FRONTALIS ET OCCIPITALIS, Occipitofrontalis—f. Verus, Corrugator supercilii.

FRONTO-ETHMOID FORAMEN, Cæcum foramen—f. nasal, Pyramidalis nasi—f. Sournicilii, Corrugator supercilii.

FROTHY, Spumosus, (F.) Spumæus, Écumæus, Moussæus. An epithet given to the fæces or sputa, when mixed with air.

FRUCTUS HORÆI, Fruit (summer.)

FRUGIVOROUS, Frugivorus, from fruges, 'fruits,' and voros, 'leat.' One that eats fruits.

FRUIT, Fructus, from frui, 'to enjoy.' Carpus. In a medical sense, it may be defined to be;—that part of a plant, which is taken as food. The effects of fruits on the body, in a medical as well as a dietetical point of view, are various. They may be distinguished into classes: for, whilst the Cerealia, for example, afford fruits, which are highly nutritious, the Summer Fruits (Fructus Horæi), which include strawberries, cherries, currants, mulberries, raspberries, figs, grapes, &c., are refrigerant and grateful, but afford little nourishment.

FRUMENTUM, Triticum.

FRUSTRATOIRE (F.) Any liquor, taken a short time after eating, for the purpose of assisting digestion, when difficult. Sugared water, eau sucrée, or water with the addition of a little brandy, or some aromatic substance, is commonly used for this purpose.

FRUTEX BACCIFER BRAZILIENSIS, Caa-ghiuyoo—f. Indicus spinosus, Cara schulli.

FUCUS, F. vesiculosus, Paint—f. Bladder, F. vesiculosus.

FUCUS CRISPUS, Lichen Carrageen, Chondrus crispus, Spharococcus crispus, Ulva crispa, Chondrus polymorphus, Irish moss, Carrageen or Corrigeen moss, (F.) Mousse d'Islande, M. perlée. This Fucus of the Natural Family Alga, is found on the coasts of England, Ireland, Western France, Spain, and Portugal, and as far as the Tropics. It is also a native of the United States. In Ireland, it is used by the poor as an article of diet.

As met with in America, it is of a light yellow colour, and resembles plates of horn, crisped and translucent.

An agreeable jelly is obtained from it by boiling in water or milk; which forms a good article of diet in consumptive cases. Its properties are indeed exactly like those of the Iceland Moss.

FUCUS HELMINTHO-CORTON, Corallina Corsicana.

FUCUS VESICULOSUS, Quercus Mari'na, Fucus, Bladder Fucus, Sea Oak, Sea Wrack, Yellow Bladder Wrack, (F.) Varec vésiculeux, Chêne marin. It has been said to be a useful assistant to sea-water, in the cure of disorders of the glands. When the wrack, in fruit, is dried, cleaned, exposed to a red heat in a crucible with a perforated lid, and is reduced to powder, it forms the Æthiops vegetabilis—the Pulvis Quercus Marinae—of the Dublin Pharmacopœia, which is used, like the burnt sponge, in bronchocele and other scrofulous swellings. Its efficacy depends on the iodine it contains. Dose, gr. x to ℥ij, mixed in molasses or honey. See Soda.

FUGA DÆMONUM, Hypericum perforatum.

FUGA'CIOUS, Fugax, from fugere, 'to fly.' An epithet given to certain symptoms, which appear and disappear almost immediately afterwards; as a fugacious redness, &c.

FUGAX, Fugacious.

FUGE, from fugo, 'I expel,' 'an expeller.' A common suffix. Hence Febri-fuge, Vermi-fuge, &c.

FU'GILĒ. This term has several acceptations. It means, 1. The cerumen (q. v.) of the ear. 2. The nebulous suspension in, or the deposition from, the urine. 3. An abscess near the ear.—Ruland and Johnson. 4. Abscess in general.—Forestus.

FULGUR, Astrape.

FULIG'INOUS, Fuliginosus, from fuligo, 'soot.' Lignyo'des. Having the colour of soot. An epithet given to certain parts, as the lips, teeth, or tongue, when they assume a brownish colour, or rather are covered with a coat of that colour.

FUL'GO, Soot, (F.) Suie, &c. Wood soot, Fuligo Ligni, consists of a volatile alkaline salt, empyreumatic oil, fixed alkali, &c. A tincture, Tinctura Fuliginis, prepared from it, has been recommended as a powerful antispasmodic in hysterical cases. (Fulig. lign. ℥ij, potass. subcarb. ℥ss, ammon. muriat. ℥j, aqua fluviat. ℔ij. Digest for three days.) This tincture bears the name Soot drops and Pit drops. An ointment of soot has been used in various cutaneous diseases.

FULIGO ALBA PHILOSOPHORUM, Ammonia murias.

FULNESS, Repletio, Plen'itudo, Pletho'ra (q. v.) Also, a feeling of weight or disten-tion in the stomach or other part of the system.

FUMA'RIA, Fuma'ria officinalis, Fumus terra, Capnos, Herba melancholic'Fuga, Fu'nitory Common Fu'nitory, Fumiter'ra, Sola'men Scabiosorum, (F.) Fumeterre. The leaves are extremely succulent, and have a bitter, somewhat saline, taste. The infusion of the dried leaves and the expressed juice of the fresh plant have been extolled for their property of clearing the skin of many disorders of the leprosy kind.

FUMA'RIA BULBO'SA, Aristolochi'a fabacea, Coryd'alis bulbosus, Capno'chis. The root of this plant was formerly given as an emmenagogue and anthelmintic. (F.) Fumeterre bulbeuse.

FUMETERRE, Fumaria.

FUMIGATIO ANTILOIMICA GAUBII, see Disinfection—f. Guytoniensis, see Disinfection—f. Smythiana, see Disinfection.

FUMIG'ATION, Fumigatio, from fumus, 'smoke.' Suff'itus, Suffimen'tum, Apocapnis'mus, Thymid'ma, Capnis'mos, Hypocapnis'mos, Anathym'asis. An operation, the object of which is to fill a circumscribed space with a gas or vapour; with the intention either of purifying the air, of perfuming it, or of charging it with a substance proper for acting upon a part of the surface of the human body. Hence, fumigations have been distinguished into aqueous, aromatic, sulphureous, mercurial, disinfecting, Guytonian, &c.

Benzoin generally constitutes the chief ingredient in the Fumigating Pastilles, to which any variety of odorous substances may be added. The following is one formula:

℞. Benzoin. ℥j, cascarille ℥ss, myrrh ℥j, ol. nuc. moschat., ol. caryoph. aa gt. x, potassa nitrat. ℥ss, carbon. lign. ℥vj, mucil. gum trag. (q. s.)

FUMITERRA, Fumaria.

FUMITORY, Fumaria.

FUMUS ALBUS, Hydrargyrum—f. Citri-nus, Sulphur—f. Terra, Fumaria.

FUNCTION, Functio, (F.) Function, from fungor, 'I act,' 'perform.' The action of an organ or system of organs. Any act, necessary for accomplishing a vital phenomenon. A function is an action, which fulfils a special office in the animal economy, and which has, as its instrument, an organ or apparatus of organs. Thus, respiration is a function. Its object is,—the conversion of venous into arterial blood, and its instrument is the lungs. The ancient physiologists divided the functions into vital, animal, and natural. They called vital functions those which are essential to life, as innervation, circulation, and respiration; animal functions, those which belong to the encephalon; viz: the functions of the intellect, the affections of the mind, and the voluntary motions; and natural functions, those relating to assimilation, such as the actions of the abdominal viscera, of the absorbent and exhalant vessels, &c. Bichat divided the functions into those, which relate to the preservation of the species. The former he subdivided into animal and organic. The animal functions are those of the intellect, sensation, locomotion, and voice. The organic functions include digestion, respiration, circulation, exhalation, absorption, the secretions, and nutrition. The functions whose object is the preservation of the species, are all those that relate to generation;—such as conception, gestation, accouchement, &c.

Each of these admits of numerous subdivisions, in a complete course of Physiology;—for so the doctrine of the functions is called.

FUNDA, Sphen'donē. (F.) Fronde. A bandage, composed of a fillet or long compress, cleft at its extremities to within about two inches of its middle. It is used in diseases of the nose and chin, and especially in cases of fracture of the lower jaw. In such case it has, also, been called Mentonnière, because placed beneath the chin. (F.) Menton, 'the chin.'

FUNDAMENT, FALLING DOWN OF THE, Proctocele.

FUNDAMENTAL. Some anatomists have called the sacrum Os Fundamenta'le, because it seems to serve as a base to the vertebral column. The sphenoid bone has, likewise, been so denominated, from its being situate at the base of the cranium.

FUNDUS, (F.) Fond. The base of any organ, which ends in a neck, or has an external aperture; as the Fundus vesicæ, F. uteri, &c.

FUNES CORDIS, Columnæ carneæ—f. Semicirculares, Semicircular canals.

FUNGUS, Fungo'ides, from fungus, 'a mushroom,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' That which has the shape of a fungus, or which grows in some measure like a mushroom.

FUNGOSITY, Fungo'sitas, Caro luxurians, C. fungo'sa, Escarco'ma, Proud Flech, Hyper-sarcosis, (F.) Fongosité. The quality of that which is fungous;—fungous excrescence. The fungosities, which arise in wounds or ulcers, are easily repressed by gentle compression, dry lint, the sulphas cupri, or other gentle caustics. At times, the more powerful are necessary, and, sometimes, excision is required.

FUNGUS, Myces, (F.) Fongus, Champignon. The mushroom order of plants; class Cryptogamia, in the Linnæan system. In Pathology, the word is commonly used synonymously with fungosity. M. Breschet has proposed to reserve the latter name for the vegetations, which arise on denuded surfaces, and to apply the term fungus to the tumours, which form in the substance of the textures, without any external ulceration. Fici, and warts, e. g. would be fungi of the skin.

FUNGUS ALBUS SALIGNEUS, Boletus suaveolens—f. Articuli, Spina ventosa—f. Bleeding, Hæmatodes, fungus—f. Cancrosus hæmatodes, Hæmatodes F—f. Cancrosus medullaris, see Encephaloid—f. Cerebralis, see Encephaloid—f. Cerebri, Encephalocle—f. Cynosbati, Bedeguar—f. Igniarius, Boletus igniarius—f. Laricis, Boletus laricis—f. of Malta, Cynomorion coccineum—f. Medullaris, see Encephaloid—f. Melitenis, Cynomorion coccineum—f. Petræus marinus, Umbilicus marinus—f. Quercinus, Boletus igniarius—f. Rosarum, Bedeguar—f. Salicis, Boletus suaveolens—f. Sambucinus, Peziza auricula.

FUNICULUS, Cord—f. Spermaticus, Spermatic chord—f. Tympani, Chorda tympani.

FUNICULUS UMBILICALIS, Funis umbilicalis, Umbilical cord, Navel string, from Funis, 'a cord.' (F.) Cordon ombilicale. A cord-like substance, which extends from the placenta to the umbilicus of the fœtus. It is composed of the chorion, amnion, an albuminous secretion called the Jelly of the Cord, cellular substance, an umbilical vein, and two umbilical arteries. The former conveys the blood from the placenta to the fœtus—the latter return it. The usual length is from 16 to 22 inches.

FUNICULUS VARICOSUS, Cirsocele.

FUNIS, Cord, Laqueus—f. Hippocratis, Achillis tendo—f. Umbilicalis, Funiculus umbilicalis.

FUR, Enduit.

FURCELLA INFERIOR, Xiphoid cartilage.

FURCHMUHL, MINERAL WATERS OF. These Bavarian springs contain carbonic acid, sulphuretted hydrogen, carbonates of lime and soda; muriates of lime and magnesia; oxides of iron and magnesia, &c.

FURCILLA, Fouchette.

FURCULA, Clavice, Fouchette.

FUREUR UTÉRINE, Nymphomania.

FURFUR, Bran, Pityron, Ach'yron, Cantabru'no, (F.) Son. The skin of the grain of the cerealia, when bruised and separated from the farina. The decoction is sometimes employed as an emollient.

FURFURA, Scarf.

FURFURACEOUS, from furfur, 'bran.' Scurfy, Canic'ccus, Pityrinus. Resembling bran. A name given to eruptions, in which the epidermis is detached in small scales resembling bran. Also, a bran-like sediment observed at times in the urine.

FURFURATIO, Porriro.

FURIA INFERNALIS, A kind of vermiform insect, scarcely two lines long, and common in Sweden, which flies about and stings both man and animals, exciting the most excruciating torture.

FURUNCLE, Furunculus.

FUROR BREVIS, Rage—f. Uterinus, Nymphomania.

FURUNCULUS, from furia're, 'to make mad.' Ch'adus, Ch'oli, Doll'ien, Furunculus suppuratorius, F. Verus, F. benignus, Abscessus nucleatus. A Furuncle, a Boil, a Bile, (F.) Furuncle, Froncle, Clou. A small phlegmon, which appears under the form of a conical, hard, circumscribed tumour, having its seat in the dermoid texture. At the end of an uncertain period, it becomes pointed, white or yellow, and gives exit to pus mixed with blood. When it breaks, a small, grayish, fibrous mass sometimes appears, which consists of dead cellular tissue. This is called the Core, Ventriculus Furuncululi, (F.) Bourbillon. The abscess does not heal until after its separation.

The indications of treatment are,—to discuss by the application of leeches and warm fomentations;—or, if this cannot be done, to encourage suppuration by warm, emollient cataplasms. When suppuration is entirely established, the part may be opened or suffered to break, according to circumstances.

FURUNCULUS GANGRÆNOSUS, Anthrax—f. Malignus, Anthrax—f. Ventriculus, see Furunculus.

FUSÉE PURULENTE, (F.) The long and sinuous route, which pus takes, in certain cases, in making its way to the surface. These Fusées almost always form beneath the skin, between the muscles, or along aponeuroses, bones, tendons, &c.

G.

THE Greek G, Γ, with the ancient Greek physicians, signified an ounce.—Rhod. ad Scribonium.

GABALLA, Cabal.

GABEL'LA or GLABEL'LA. The space between the eyebrows, which is devoid of hair in the majority of persons.

GABIR'EA, γαβίρεα. A fatty kind of myrrh, mentioned by Dioscorides.

GAGEL, Myrica gale.

GAGUE-S'ANG, Caquac-sung.

GAHET, Cagot.

GALAC, Guaiacum.

GAILLET ACCROCHANT, Galium aparine—g. Crochant, Galium aparine—g. Jaune, Galium verum—g. Vrai, Galium verum.

GAINE, Vagina or sheath—g. de l'Apoiphyse styloide, Vaginal process of the temporal bone—g. de laicine porte, Vagina or sheath of the vena porta.

GALA, γαλα, genitive γαλακτιος, milk, (q. v.) Hence:—

GALACT'IA, Galactirrhœa, from γαλα, 'milk.' Lactis redundantia, Galactacra'sia. A redundant flow of milk, either in a female who is suckling, or in one who is not. It may occur without being provoked by sucking. When to a great extent, it sometimes causes wasting; Tabe lactea, T. nutritum. Good uses Galact'ia, in his Nosology, for 'morbid flow or deficiency of milk.'

GALACTACRASIA, Galactia.

GALACTIRRHŒA, Galactia.

GALACTO'DES, from γαλα, 'milk,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' In Hippocrates, the term signifies milkwarin, and likewise a milky colour, as of the excrements, &c.

GALACTOPH'AGOUS, Galactoph'agus, Lactiv'orus, sometimes used substantively; from γαλα, 'milk,' and φάγω, 'I eat.' That which feeds on milk. A name given to certain people, with whom milk appears to constitute the chief nourishment.

GALACTOPHORA, Galactopoitica.

GALACTOPH'OROUS, Lactiferous, (q. v.) from γαλα, 'milk,' and φέρω, 'I carry.' That which carries milk.

GALACTOPH'OROUS or LACTIF'EROUS DUCTS are those, which convey the milk, secreted by the mammary gland, towards the nipple, where their external orifices are situate. The Luctals have also been so called.

GALACTOPH'ORUS. Some accoucheurs have given this name to an instrument, intended to facilitate sucking, when the faulty conformation of the nipple prevents the child from laying hold of it.

GALACTOPLA'NIA, from γαλα, 'milk;' and πλανη, 'wandering.' Extravasation of milk into the cellular membrane.

GALACTOPOIESIS, Galactosis.

GALACTOPOIET'ICA, Galactoph'ora; from γαλα, 'milk,' and ποιέω, 'I make.' Substances, to which has been attributed the property of favouring the secretion of milk and augmenting its quantity.

GALACTOPO'SIA, from γαλα, 'milk,' and ποσις, 'drink.' Treatment of a disease by means of milk.

GALACTOP'OTES, Galactop'otus, Lactipotor. Same etymon. A drinker of milk. One subjected to a milk diet.

GALACTOPYRA, Fever, milk.

GALACTO'SIS, Galactopoië'sis, from γαλακτοομαι, 'I am changed into milk,' and from γαλα, 'milk,' and ποιέω, 'I make.' The secretion or formation of milk.

GALACTURIA, Chyluria.

GALANGA, Maranta G.

GALANGAL, Maranta galanga.

GAL'INGALE, Cyperus longus.

GALARIPS, Allamanda.

GALAXIA, Thoracic duct.

GALBANUM, LONG-LEAVED, Bubon galbanum.

GAL'BULUS, from galbus, 'yellow.' A kind of congenital jaundice, in which the yellow colour continues through life. It is rather a defect in colour than a disease.—Vogel.

GALE, Myrica gale—g. Odorant, Myrica gale—g. Sweet, Myrica gale.

GALE, Psora—g. Caninc, Psoriasis—g. Militaire, Psoriasis—g. Sèche, Psoriasis.

GA'LEA. A helmet, from γαλη, 'a cat;' of the skin of which it was formerly made. A name given to the amuios, (q. v.) and also, to the bandage of Galen, (q. v.) In Pathology, it indicates a headache affecting the whole head. See, also, Caul.

GALEA APONEURO'TICA CAP'ITIS, Gal'lea tendinea Santorini, membra'na epicra'nia. The tendinous expansion, which unites the frontal and occipital portions of the occipito-frontalis muscle.

GALEANTHROPY, Galeanthro'pia, from γαλη, 'a cat,' and ανθρωπος, 'a man.' A variety of melancholy in which the patient believes himself changed into a cat. An affection similar to the lycanthropy and cynanthropy.

GALE'GA OFFICINA'LIS, Galega, Ruta capra'ria, Goat's rue, (F.) Ruc de chèvre, Faux Indigo. It is slightly aromatic and was once used as a sudorific and alexiterial, in malignant fevers, &c.

The GALEGA VIRGINIA'NA or Virgin'ia goat's rue or cat gut, is used in some parts of the United States as an anthelmintic. The decoction of the roots is given.

GALEN'IC or GALEN'ICAL, Galen'icus, from Galenus. That which relates to the doctrine of Galen or to Galenism.

Used, substantively, for drugs that are not chymical.

GALENIC MEDICINE, Galenism.

GA'LENISM, Galen'ic med'icine. The doctrine of Galen.

GALENIST. A follower of the doctrines of Galen.

GALEOB'DOLON, Galeopsis.

GALEOP'DOLON, Galeopsis.

GALEOPSIS, Lamium album.

GALEOP'SIS, Galeob'dolon, Galeop'dolon, Lad'mium rubrum, Urti'ca iners magna fatididis'sima, Stachys fat'ida, Hedge nettle, (F.) Ortie morte des bois.

This plant was formerly reckoned a vulnerary and anodyne.

GALEOP'SIS GRANDIF'ORA, G. Ochroleuca, G. Segetum, Herba Sideritidis. This plant is regarded, in Germany, as a bitter resolvent. It is the basis, also, of a celebrated nostrum, the Blankenheimer Tea, called, likewise, Lieber's pectoral and phthisical herbs (Liebersche Brust oder Auszehrungs-Krauter), which has enjoyed great repute in pectoral complaints.

The tops of the plant are given in decoction, (℥j) boiled in a pint of water for a quarter of an hour.) This quantity to be taken in the day.

The Galeop'sis Versicolor, and the G. Villosa, are possessed of the same virtues.

GALEOPSIS OCHROLEUCHA, G. grandiflora—G. Segetum, G. grandiflora.

GA'LIA. An ancient composition, in which galls were an ingredient; the Galia pura. There was, also, a Galia aromati'ca, moschata vel muscata, which consisted of a mixture of several perfumes, such as musk.

GALIP'ÆA FEBRIFUGA, Cusparia febrifuga.

GALIPOT. See Pinus sylvestris.

GALLUM, G. verum.

GALIUM ALBUM, G. mollugo.

GALIUM APARIN'Æ, Aparin'æ, Lappa, Philanthropus, Ampelocarp'pus, Omphalocar'pus, Ixus, Asphari'nē, Asper'ula, Goose-grass. Cleaver's bees, Cleavers, Goose-share, Hayriff. Family, Rubiaceæ. Sex. Syst. Tetrandria Monogynia. (F.) Gaillet acrochant, G. crochant, Gratteron.

The expressed juice has been given as an aperient diuretic in incipient dropsies; also, in cancer.

GALIUM LUTEUM, G. verum.

GALIUM MOLLU'GO, Galium album, Greater ladies' bed-straw. Alys'sum Plin'ii, (F.) Caille-lait blanc. The herb and flowers have been used, medicinally, in epilepsy.

GA'LIUM VERUM, Gal'tium, G. luteum, Ladies' bed-straw, Cheese rennet, (F.) Gaillet jaune, G. vrai, Vrai Caillelait. The tops were used in the cure of epilepsy. The leaves and flowers possess the property of curdling milk.

GALL, Bile, Glass, see Vitrum and Eczema Impetiginodes—g. Nut, see Quercus cerris—g. of the Ox, see Bile—g. Sickness, Fever, Walcheren.

GALL-BLADDER, Vesic'ula fellis, Chol'ecyst, Follic'ulus fellis, Cystis fell'ea, Vesi'ca fell'ea, Vesic'ula bilis, Vesi'ca biliaria, Follic'ulus felleus, Cystis choled'ochus, (F.) Vésicule du fiel ou Vésicule biliare, Réservoir de la bile. A membranous, pyriform reservoir, lodged in a superficial depression at the inferior surface of the right lobe of the liver. It receives, by the hepatic and cystic ducts, a portion of the bile secreted by the liver, when the stomach is empty, which becomes in it more acrid, bitter, and thicker. It receives an artery called the cystic. Its veins empty into the vena porta. Its nerves come from the hepatic plexus, and its lymphatic vessels join those of the liver.

GALLSTONES, Calculi, biliary.

GALLA MAXIMA ORBICULATA. See Quercus cerris.

GALLÆ QUERCUS, see Quercus cerris—g. Turcica, see Quercus cerris.

GALLI GALLINACEI CAPUT, Gallinaginis caput.

GALLINAG'INIS CAPUT, Galli gallinæ cci Caput, Vernontanum, Crista urthra'lis, Crête uréthrale,—(Ch.) from Gallinago, 'a woodcock.' An oblong, rounded, projection, formed by the mucous membrane in the spongy portion of the urethra, at the sides of which the ejaculatory ducts open.

GALLIPOT. Perhaps from gala, 'finery.' (?) A pot painted and glazed or merely glazed, and commonly used for medicines.

GALLITRICHUM, Salvia sclarea.

GALLS, see Quercus cerris—g. Nut, see Quercus cerris—g. Turkey, see Quercus cerris.

GALREDA, Gelatine.

GALVANISM, Galvanis'mus, Electric'itas animalis, E. Galvan'ica vel metal'lica, Irritamentum metallo'rum vel metal'licum. A series of phenomena, consisting in sensible movements, executed by animal parts, which are still endowed with a remnant of irritability, when placed in connexion with two metallic plates of different nature, between which a communication is established by direct contact or by means of a metallic wire. Galvanism has been employed medicinally in the same cases as electricity, and especially in neuralgic affections. It is often applied in the form of plates. In asthma, for example, a small blister, the size of a dollar, may be placed on the neck over the course of the phrenic and pneumogastric nerves, and another on the side in the region of the diaphragm. One metal is placed mediately or immediately over the vesicated surface on the neck, and another over that in the side. They are then connected by means of a wire.

The new nervous impression, in this way induced, is often signally beneficial.

GALVANOPUNCTURE, Electropuncture.

GAMBOGIA, Cambogia.

GAMMARUS, Crab.

GAMMATA FERRAMEN'TA, Cauteries, having the shape of the Greek letter Γ; which were used for cauterizing hernias.

GAMMAUT. The Italians, according to Scultetus, gave this name to a kind of crooked bistouri, used for opening abscesses.

GAMPELE, Gena.

GANGLIA CEREBRI POSTICA, Thalami nervorum opticorum—g. Nervorum, Ganglions, nervous.

GANG'LIFORM or GANG'LIOFORM, Gangliformis. Having the shape of a ganglion. A name generally given to a knot-like enlargement, in the course of a nerve.

GANGLION, γαγγλιον, 'a knot.' A name, given to organs differing considerably from each other in size, colour, texture, functions, &c. They are divided into Glandiform, Lymphatic, and nervous.

1. GLANDIFORM GANGLIONS, called by Béchard, Sanguineous ganglions, are organs of whose functions we are in general, ignorant; and which have the appearance of glands. They are formed of agglomerated globules, pervaded by blood-vessels; surrounded by cellular membrane and contain a milky or yellowish fluid. To this class belong the thymus, thyroid, and supra-renal glands.

2. LYMPHATIC GANGLIONS. See Conglobate.

3. NERVOUS GANGLIONS, Ganglia seu Nodi seu Noduli Nervorum, Ganglion'es, Tumores seu plexus ganglioformes, Plexus glandiformes, Tubercula nodosa Nervorum, Dicotriculu Spirituum animalium. Enlargements or knots in the course of a nerve. They belong, in general, to the system of the great sympathetic. One, however, exists on the posterior root of every spinal nerve, and one of the cerebral,—the 5th. Bichat regarded them as so many small brains, or centres of nervous action, independent of the encephalon, and intended exclusively for organic life. Being formed by the union of the cerebral and spinal nerves, they may send out the influence of both these nervous centres, to the parts to which the nerves proceeding from them are distributed. We know not, however, their precise uses, although it is probable, that they may be connected with the nutrition of the part, on which the nerves proceeding from them are dispersed.

GANGLION ABDOMINALE, G. semilunare—g. of Andersch, Petrosal ganglion—g. Auricular, Oticum G.—g. Cerebral inférieur, grand, Thalami nervorum opticorum—g. of the Cerebrum, posterior, Thalami nervorum opticorum—g. du Cervelet, Corpus dentatum.

GANGLION OF GASSERIUS A semicircular knot on the 5th pair of nerves, before its division into three branches.

GANGLION LENTICULAR, G. Ophthalmic—g. Lymphatic, Conglobate gland—g. Maxillo-tympanique, Oticum G.—g. of Meckel, Sphenopalatine G.—g. Orbital, G. ophthalmic—g. Oticum, Oticum G.—g. Sanguineous, G. glandiform—g. Solare, G. semilunare—g. Sphenoidal, Sphenopalatine ganglion—g. Splanchnicum, G. semilunare—g. Supérieur du cerveau (grand), Corpora striata—g. Surrénal, G. semilunare—g. Transversum, G. semilunare—g. de Vieussens, Cœliac plexus.

GANGLION. Same etymon. Emphyéma encystis ganglion. A globular, hard, indolent tumour, without change in the colour of the skin; of a size varying from that of a pea, to that of an egg, and always situate on the course of a tendon. The tumour is formed of a viscid, albuminous fluid, contained in a cyst of greater or less thickness. The cyst is sometimes loose; but in the majority of cases it communicates, by a narrow foot stalk, with the sheath of a tendon, or even with the synovial capsule of a neighbouring articulation. The causes are generally unknown. The treatment consists in compression, percussion, the use of discutients, extirpation, or incision.

GANGLIONES GANGLIOFORMES, Ganglions nervous.

GANGLION'IC, Ganglion'icus. Nerves, in the course of which ganglions are met with; as the greater part of the branches of the great sympathetic or trisplanchnic, the posterior roots of the spinal nerves, &c.

GANGLIONIC NERVE, Trisplanchnic G.

GANGRENA ALOPECIA, Alopecia—g. Caries, Caries—g. Nosocomiorum, Hospital gangrene—g. Oris, Cancer aquaticus—g. Ossis, Spina ventosa—g. Ossium, Caries—g. Sphacelus, Sphacelus—g. Ustilaginea, Ergotism.

GANGRENE, Gangræ'na, Cancræ'na, γαγγραινα. Privation of life or partial death of an organ. Authors have generally distinguished mortification into two stages; naming the first incipient, or gangrene. It is attended with a sudden diminution of feeling in the part affected: livid discoloration; detachment of the cuticle, under which a turbid fluid is effused; with crepitation, owing to the disengagement of air into the cellular texture.

When the part has become quite black, and incapable of all feeling, circulation, and life, it constitutes the second stage, or mortification, and is called sphacelus. Gangrene, however, is frequently used synonymously with mortification,—local asphyxia being the term employed for that condition, in which the parts are in a state of suspended animation, and, consequently, susceptible of resuscitation.

When the part is filled with fluid entering into putrefaction, the affection is called humid gangrene; on the other hand, when it is dry and shrivelled, it constitutes dry gangrene. To this class belongs the gangræna senilis or spontaneous gangrene of old people, which rarely admits of cure.

Whatever may be the kind of gangrene, it may be caused by violent inflammation, contusion, a burn, congelation, the ligature of a large arterial trunk, or by some internal cause inappreciable to us.

The treatment, both of external and internal gangrene, varies according to the causes which produced it. Gangrene from excessive inflammation is obviated by antiphlogistics; and that from intense cold by cautiously restoring the circulation by cold frictions, &c. When the gangrene has become developed, the separation of the eschars must be encouraged by emollient applications, if there be considerable reaction; or by tonics and stimulants if the reaction be insufficient.

GANGRENE D'HÔPITAL, Hospital gangrene—g. des Solonois, Ergotism.

GANTELET, (F.) Chirothé'ca, Fascia digitalis; from (F.) gant, a glove. A sort of bandage, which envelops the hand and fingers, like a glove. It is made with a long roller, about an inch broad; and is applied so that the fingers are covered to their tips, when it is called Gantelet entier ou complet. The Demi-gantelet includes only the hand and base of the fingers. Both bandages are used in fractures and luxations of the fingers, burns of the hand, &c. See Chirotheca.

GANTS DES DAMES, Condom—g. de Notre Dame, Digitalis.

GAPING, Yawning.

GARAMATITES, Sandastros.

GARANÇE, Rubia.

GARCINIA MANGOSTA'NA. The systematic name of the Mangos'tan or Mangos'tan tree. Mangostano. It grows in great abundance in Java and the Molucca islands. The fruit, which is about the size of an orange, is delicious, and is eaten in almost every disorder. The dried bark is used medicinally in dysenteries and tenesmus; and a strong decoction has been much esteemed in ulcerated sore throat.

GARDE-MALADE, Nurse.

GARDEROBE, Artemisia abrotanum.

GARDEROBES, Fœces.

GARDOUCHES, Vesiculæ seminales.

GARETUM, Poples.

GAR'GALĒ, Gar'galos, Gargalis'mos, Titilatio, Irritatio, Pruritus. Titillation, irritation, itching.

GARGALISMOS, Gargale.

GARGALOS, Gargale.

GARGAREON, Uvula.

GAR'GARISM, Gargaris'mus, Gargaris'ma, Anagargalic'ta, Gargaris'mum, Collutorium, Diachly'ma, Anagargaris'ton, Anaonchylis'mos, from γαργαρίζω, 'I wash the mouth.' Any liquid medicine, intended to be retained in the mouth, for a certain time, and to be thrown in contact with the uvula, velum, pendulum, tonsils, &c. For this purpose, the liquid is agitated by the air issuing from the larynx, the head being thrown back. Gargles are employed in cyanche tonsillar and other diseases of the fauces, and are made of stimulants, sedatives, astringents, refrigerants, &c. according to circumstances.

The term collutorium or collutorium oris, is generally restricted to a wash for the mouth.

GARGOUILLEMENT, Borborygmus, Gurgling. See Râle muqueux.

GARLIC, Allium.

GAROSMUM, Chenopodium vulvaria.

GAROU BARK, Dapline gnidium.

GARRETUM, Poples.

GARROPHYLLUS, Eugenia caryophyllata.

GARROT, (F.) from garrotter. 'to tie fast.'

A small cylinder of wood, used for tightening the circular band, by which the arteries of a limb are compressed, for the purpose of suspending the flow of blood in cases of hemorrhage, aneurism, amputation, &c.

GARROTILLO, Cyanche maligna.

GARRULITAS, Loquacity.

GARUM, γαρύρον. The ancient Romans gave this name to a kind of pickle made by collecting the liquor which flowed from salted and half putrefied fish. It was used as a condiment—The Geoponics, Humelberg on Apicius, Martial, &c.

GAS AMMONIACAL, Ammonia—G. Animal sanguinis, G. sanguinis—g. Azoticum, Azote—g. Azoticum oxygenatum, Nitrogen, gaseous oxide of—g. Hepaticum, Hydrogen, sulphuretted—g. Hydrogenium sulphuretum, Hydrogen, sulphuretted—g. Intoxicating, Nitrogen, gaseous oxide of—g.—Laughing, Nitrogen, gaseous oxide of—g. of the Lungs, Gas, pulmonary—g. Nitrous, dephlogisticated, Nitrogen, gaseous oxide of—g. Oxygenated muriatic acid, Chlorine—g. Oxymuriatic acid, Chlorine—g. Fulstræ, Miasm, marsh—g. Paradise, Nitrogen, gaseous oxide of—g. Sulphuris, Sulphurous acid.

GASCARILLA, Croton cascarrilla.

GASTEIN, MINERAL WATERS OF. G. is in Bavaria. The waters are saline. Temp. 106° to 117° Fahr.

GASTER, γαστήρ. The abdomen, (q. v.) Also, the stomach, (q. v.) in particular; Hence:

GASTERANAX. A name given by Dolæus to a hypothetical vital principle, corresponding to the Archeus of Van Helmont, the seat of which he placed in the lower belly. See Bithnimalca.

GASTERANGIEMPHRAX'IS. Obstruction of the pylorus, from γαστήρ, 'stomach,' εγχε, 'I strangle,' and εμποδισθαι, 'I obstruct.'—Vogel.

GASTRALGIA, Cardialgia.

GASTRIC, Gastricus, from γαστήρ, 'the stomach.' Belonging or relating to the stomach.

The GASTRIC ARTERIES are three in number. Arteria gastro-epiploica dextra, gastro-epiploica sinistra, and A. coronaria ventriculi.

The GASTRIC VEINS follow the same distribution as the arteries, and open into the Vena porta abdominalis.

GASTRIC NERVES. The two cords by which the pneumogastric nerves terminate and which descend on the two surfaces of the stomach; as well as the filaments of the great sympathetic, which accompany the gastric vessels.

GASTRIC PLEXUS, Plexus coronarius ventriculi. A nervous net-work, formed by the solar plexus. It accompanies the Arteria coronaria ventriculi, and passes along the lesser curvature of the stomach, to which it gives branches.

GASTRIC JUICE, Succus gastricus, (F.) Suc Gastrique, Gastric Acid. A fluid, secreted from the mucous membrane of the stomach. As met with, it is a mixture of the fluids secreted by that organ with those of the supra-diaphragmatic portion of the alimentary canal. Owing to such admixture, the most contrary properties have been assigned to it. That such a fluid is secreted, which concurs powerfully in digestion, is evident from many considerations, and has been positively proved by the author and numerous others. It is always found to contain muriatic and acetic acids.

The gastric fluid, in cases of sudden death, sometimes corrodes and perforates the stomach; giving rise to interesting questions in medical jurisprudence.

GASTRICISM, Gastricis'mus, from γαστήρ, 'the stomach.' A name, by which is designated the medical theory, that refers all, or almost all, diseases to an accumulation of saburra in the digestive passages.

GASTRILLOQUIST, Engastrimythos.

GASTRINUM, Potash.

GASTRITIS, Ventriculi inflammatio, Causa gastritis, Inflammatio gastritis, Cardialgia inflammatoria, Febris stomachica inflammatoria, Inflammatio ventriculi, Inflammation of the stomach, Empres'ma gastritis, (F.) Gastrite, Catarrhe gastrique. A disease, characterized by pyrexia; great anxiety; heat and pain in the epigastrium, increased by taking any thing into the stomach; vomiting and hiccup. Gastritis may either be seated in the peritoneal or mucous coat. It is most frequently in the latter (Esogastritis.) being excited directly by acid ingesta. It requires the most active treatment;—bleeding, blistering, fomentations, diluents, &c.

A less degree of inflammation of the mucous coat of the stomach is considered to be present in almost all fevers.

GASTRO-ARTHRITIS, Gout—g. Bronchitis, Fever, adeno-meningeal—g. Entérite intense, Synocha—g. Entérite, with nervous affection of the brain, see Typhus—g. Enteritis, follicular, Dothineritis, see Typhus.

GASTROBOSIS, from γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and βωσις, 'the act of gnawing.' Perforation of the stomach.—Alibert.

GASTROCE'LE, from γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and κηλή, 'a tumour.' Hernia of the Stomach, Hernia ventriculi, (F.) Hernie de l'Estomac. Hernia, formed by the stomach through the upper part of the linea alba;—a disease, the existence of which has been doubted by many. See Epigastrocele.

GASTROCNEMII, from γαστήρ, 'the belly,' and πυγή, 'the leg.' The name of the two fleshy masses, which occupy the posterior and superficial part of the leg; (F.) Gastrocnemius, Jumeaux de la jambe, Gemelli, Bifémoro-calcaneæ—(Ch.); the two constituting the Gastrocnemius externus of English anatomists. These muscles are distinguished into internal and external, which are distinct above, but united at their inferior extremity. They are long, flat, and thick, and arise—the former, from the posterior part of the outer condyle of the femur; the latter, from the posterior part of the inner condyle of the same bone. The aponeurosis, which unites these muscles below, joins with that of the solaris, and forns, with it, a large tendon, which, under the name Tendo Achillis, is inserted at the posterior part of the calcaneum. These muscles extend the foot on the leg, and the leg on the foot. They can, also, bend the leg and the thigh reciprocally on each other. For the Gastrocnemius internus, see Soleus.

GASTRODYNIA, Cardialgia.

GASTRODYNIA FLATULENTA, Colica flatulenta
GASTROENTERITIS, from γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and έντερον, 'an intestine.' Inflammation of the stomach and small intestine. According to Broussais, the essential fevers of authors are gastro-enteritis, simple, or complicated.

GASTRO-EPIPLOIC, Gastro-epiploicus, from γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and επιπλόον, 'the epiploon.' That which relates to the stomach and epiploon.

The GASTRO-EPIPLOIC ARTERIES or Gastric inferior are two in number, and distinguished into right and left. The right, also called Gastro-hepatic, Gastrica inferior dextra, Gastro-epiploica dextra, is furnished by the hepatic artery. It descends behind the pylorus, and passes from right to left, along the great curvature of the stomach. It gives branches to the pancreas, duodenum, stomach, omentum majus, and terminates by anastomosing with the Gastro-epiploica sinistra, Gastrica sinistra, Gastrica inferior sinistra. This—the left—arises from the splenic artery. It is of considerable magnitude, and passes from left to right, along the great curvature of the stomach, distributing its branches more particularly to the stomach and omentum majus. It terminates, by joining the right gastro-epiploic.

The GASTRO-EPIPLOIC VEINS are distinguished, like the arteries, into right and left. They empty themselves;—the former, into the superior mesenteric: the latter, into the splenic vein.

GASTRO-EPIPLOIC GANGLIONS are the lymphatic ganglions or glands, situate towards the great curvature of the stomach, between the two anterior laminae of the omentum majus.

GASTRO-HEPATIC, Gastro-hepaticus or Hepato-gastricus; from γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and ήπαρ, 'the liver.' Relating to the stomach and liver. This name has been given to several organs. See Epiploon, Gastro-epiploic, &c.

GASTRO-HYSTEROTOMY, Cæsarean section.

GASTRO-MALAX'IA, Gastro-malacia, from γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and μαλασσω, 'I soften.' Softening of the stomach.

GASTRO-PHRENIC, Gastro-phrenicus, from γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and φρενες, 'the diaphragm.' Belonging to the stomach and diaphragm.

The GASTRO-PHRENIC LIGAMENT is a reflection of the peritoneum, which descends from the inferior surface of the diaphragm to the cardia.

GASTROGRAPHY, Gastroraphia, Sutura abdominalis, from γαστήρ, 'the belly,' and ραφή, 'a suture.' The suture, used for uniting wounds penetrating the abdomen, when they are too extensive or too unequal to be kept in contact by position, adhesive plaster, or appropriate bandages. The interrupted and quilled sutures are those chiefly employed.

GASTRORRHAGIA, Hæmatemesis.

GASTRORRHŒA, from γαστήρ, 'the stomach,' and ρεω, 'I flow.' (F.) Flux muqueux de l'estomac, Catarrhe stomacal. A morbid condition of the stomach, which consists in the secretion of an excessive quantity of mucus from the lining membrane of the stomach.

GASTRO'SIS. A generic name for diseases, which are seated in the stomach.—Alibert.

GASTROT'OMY, from γαστήρ, 'the belly,' and τομή, 'incision.' Several different operations have been so called. 1. The Cæsarean Section, which see. 2. An incision, made into the abdomen for the purpose of removing some internal strangulation or volvulus; or to reduce hernia, Laparotomy: and, 3. The opening made into the stomach, to remove a foreign body, which has passed into it through the œsophagus.

GÂTEAU FÉBRILE, Ague cake.

GÂTILIER, Vitex.

GAULTHERIA, Mountain Tea, Partridge Berry, Berried Tea, Grouseberry, and Deerberry. An American plant, which is one of the principal articles of the Materia Medica of some Indian tribes. The infusion is stimulant and anodyne, and is said to have been used, with advantage, in asthma.

GAUQUAVA, Smilax China.

GAYAC, Guaiacum.

GAZ, or GAS, Air. Van Helmont first designated by this name,—the etymology of which is unknown,—the carbonic acid developed in the vinous fermentation. After wards, the term was appropriated to every permanently elastic fluid; that is, which preserves its aëriform state at all temperatures: and, ultimately, it was extended to all aëriform bodies;—which were divided into permanent and non-permanent gazes. The latter are generally termed vapours:—they return to the liquid state, when a portion of their caloric is abstracted.

The permanent gazes, or Gazes properly so called, are numerous, and may be divided into four sections with regard to their effects on the animal economy.

- |                                  |   |
|----------------------------------|---|
| 1. Irrespirable gazes.           | } Carbonic acid, ammoniacal gaz, muriatic acid gaz, deutoxide of azote, nitrous acid gaz, and chlorine. |
| 2. Negatively deleterious gazes. |   |
| 3. Positively deleterious gazes. |   |
- Hydrogen, azote.
Oxygen, protoxide of azote, carburetted hydrogen, carbonic oxide, sulphuretted hydrogen, and arsenuretted hydrogen.

It is proper to remark, that the term respirable has been very differently employed by different writers. Sometimes it has meant, the power of supporting life, when applied to the blood in the lungs. At others, all gazes have been esteemed irrespirable, which are incapable of being introduced into the lungs by voluntary efforts,—without any relation to their power of maintaining vitality; and this is perhaps the best sense.

The gazes were, at one time, employed in Medicine, under great expectations,—especially by the enthusiast Beddoes; but they are now scarcely ever had recourse to. They differ, considerably, in their effects on the animal economy. Some, as oxygen, are exciting; others, as nitrogen, depressing;—whilst others, again, as the Protoxide of azote or laughing gaz, produce the most singular effects.

GAZ, PULMONARY, Gaz of the Lungs. A name given to the expired air; which contains,—besides common air, an increase of carbonic acid, water, and some animal matter.

GAZ SANGUINIS, Gaz animale sanguinis, Halitus sanguinis, Aura sanguinis. The halitus or vapour, given off by freshly drawn blood.

GAZELLE, Antelope.

GEBAERPULVER, Ergot.

GEISMAR, MINERAL WATERS OF. The mineral waters of Geismar, in Bavaria, are acidulous chalybeates.

GELAPPIUM, Convolvulus jalapa.

GELASMUS, Rhus Sardonicus.

GELATINE, Gelat'na, Galreda, from gelu, 'gelly or jelly.' An immediate animal principle. It is semitransparent, insipid, inodorous, insoluble in cold water, very soluble in hot, which it thickens, and transforms into gelly on cooling. Gelatine is a very nutritious substance; and, when dissolved in a considerable quantity of water, forms an emollient fluid, much used in therapeutics, but not the most easy of digestion.

GELATINE OF WHARTON, Gelat'na Whartonia'na, Jelly of the Cord. A soft, dense, fluid, gelatinous substance, which envelops the umbilical cord, and is conceived to be inservient to the nutrition of the fœtus.

GELATIO, Congelation.

GELÉE, Gelly.

GELLY or JELLY, Jus gela'tum, Gelu, Jus coagulatum, (F.) Gelée. A substance of a soft consistence, tremulous, and transparent, which is obtained, by an appropriate treatment, from animal and vegetable matters: hence the distinction into animal and vegetable jelly. The former is merely a concentrated solution of gelatine, left to cool.

Vegetable Jelly is found in the juice of the currant, mulberry, and of almost all acid fruits, when ripe. It is of itself colourless, but almost always retains a little colouring matter of the fruit which has furnished it. It has an agreeable taste; is scarcely soluble in cold water, but boiling water dissolves it readily; the gelly is, however, almost all deposited on cooling. If this aqueous solution be boiled for a long time, it becomes analogous to mucilage, and loses the property of being gelled on cooling.

GELOS, Rhus.

GELSEMI'NUM NITIDUM, Yellow Jessamine. The flowers, root, &c., of this shrub are narcotic, and the effluvia from the former are said sometimes to induce stupor.

GELU, Gelly.

GEMELLI, Gastrocnemii, Ischio-trochanterianus.

GEMEL'LUS, Gem'inus, Did'yinos, διδυμος, 'a twin.' (F.) JumEAU, Jumelle, Besson, Bessonne. One of two children, born at the same accouchement.

GEMELLUS MUSCULUS, Cowper applies this name to the long portion of the triceps brachialis united to the inner portion.

GEMINI, Ischio-trochanterianus, Testicles.

GEMINUM CENTRUM SEMICIRCULARE, Tænia semicircularis.

GEMINUS, Gemellus.

GEMMA, Granulation, Tasc—g. Oculi, Crystalline.

GEMUR'SA, a Corn; also, a name given by the ancients to a disease, seated between the toes;—the nature of which is unknown to us.

GEN, Gen'esis, γενεσις, 'generation,' from γειραω, 'I make.' Hence Hydrogen, Osteogeny, &c.

GENA, The Cheek, Genys, γενυς, Pareia, Gamphe'le, Gnathos, Mala. (F.) Joue. The cheeks form the lateral parts of the mouth. Externally, they have no precise limits: they are continuous, above, with the lower eyelid: below, they descend as far as the base of the jaw: before, they terminate at the alæ nasi, and at the commissures of the lips; and behind, at the ear. Their thickness varies, according to the degree of fatness of the individual. They are formed of three layers;—one dermoid, another muscular, and the third mucous.

GENCIVES, Gingivæ.

GENIAS, Lanu'go prima. The downy hairs, which first cover the cheek. Also, a bandage which passes under the chin.

GENEION, Beard, Mentum.

GENÉRALE, Influenza.

GENERATION, Genera'tio, Gen'esis, from γινωαι, 'I arise.' Under this name, physiologists comprehend the aggregate of functions, which concur, in organized beings, towards the production of their kind. The act of generation means the union of the sexes. See Coition.

The writers of antiquity believed, that all organized bodies are produced either by what is termed univocal or regular generation, (Homogen'esis, generatio homogenea, propagatio), and which applies to the upper classes of animals and vegetables or by equivocal or spontaneous generation, (Heterogen'esis, generatio heterogenea, æquivoca, primitiva, primigena, originaria, spontanea), which they considered applicable to the very lowest classes only, as the mushroom, the worm, the frog, &c.

There are still many distinguished naturalists who consider that beings, low in the scale of animality, are produced in the latter way.

As to the mode in which regular generation is accomplished, there have been many views. According to the doctrine of Hippocrates, and of the ancient philosophers, the ovaries of the female furnish a prolific fluid, similar to that of the male; and the fœtus results from the mixture of the two seeds in copulation. Steno and others conceived, that the ovaries contain ova, which are not developed until vivified by the male sperm. Bonnet and Spallanzani believed in the pre-existence of germs, created since the origin of the world, but encased in each other, and becoming developed in succession; whence it would follow, that the ovary of the first female must have contained the germs of all subsequent generations; and that the number of these germs must go on always diminishing, until ultimately extinct. This was the system of the evolution of germs. According to Leucnhoek, the ovaries do not contain eggs, but vesicles destined to receive animalcules; which, in his view, live in the sperm. Thousands of these animalcules are thrown into the uterus during copulation, and the most expeditious and vigorous reaches the ovary, after having scattered and destroyed its competitors. Buffon—admitting the hypothesis of the two seeds—supposed that they were formed of molecules proceeding from every part of the body of each parent; and that, by a kind of respective affinity, those which were furnished by the head, the trunk, or the extremities of the male parent, could only unite with those proceeding from the same parts of the female. Before him, Maupertuis, admitting, with many of the ancient philosophers, the system of Epigenesis, and adopting, as regarded the composition of the sperm, a theory analogous to that of Buffon, had supposed, that the molecules, capable of being organized, were attracted towards a centre; that the nose attracts the two eyes; the body, the arms; the arms, the hands, &c., nearly as the particles of a salt, dissolved in a liquid, arrange themselves in regular crystals around the same nucleus.

All these and various other systems have been successively proposed and rejected, and the mystery of generation remains impenetrable. There are, in all organized bodies, three chief modes of reproduction. 1. The Viviparous. 2. The Oviparous; and, 3. Generation by shoots, called Geminiparous. The last is the most simple kind of generation, as it is nothing more than an extension of the immediate life of the maternal stalk in the new individual.

All the acts, comprising the function of generation, may be referred to five great heads. 1. Copulation. 2. Conception or fecundation. 3. Gestation or Pregnancy. 4. Delivery or Accouchement: and, 5. Lactation.

GENERATION, ORGANS OF, FEMALE. See Vulva. GENEROUS, Generosus. A name given to wines, which contain a great quantity of alcohol.

GENESIS, Generation, Gen.

GENET, Spartium scoparium.

GENETHLIACUS, from γενεθλιος, 'natal,' 'pertaining to nativity.' A name, given by the ancients to certain astrologers, who, from the state of the heavens at the time of the birth of an individual, predicted his future character and the events of his life.

GENETICA, from γενεσις, 'origin,' 'rise.' Diseases of the sexual functions: the 5th class in Good's Nosology.

GENETICOS, Genital.

GENEVA, Gin—g. Hollands, see Spirit.

GENÉVRIER, Juniperus communis.

GENI, Genial.

GENIAN, Genianus, from γενειον, 'the chin.' The Genian apophysis or Process, (F.) Apophyse Génienne ou gèni, is situate at the posterior part of the symphysis menti, and is formed of four small tubercles.

GÉNIE, Genius. The Fr. sometimes apply this term to diseases, nearly synonymously with nature; as Génie inflammatoire, G. bilieux, G. adynamique. Some use it in the same sense as type; as Génie intermittent. The unwonted predominance of any mental faculty is also so called.

GENIEN, Genial.

GENIÈVRE, Juniperus communis (the berry.)

GENIO-GLOSSUS, Genio-hyoglossus, from γενειον, 'the chin,' and γλωσσα, 'the tongue.' Mesoglossus, Nomus lingua musculus. The name of a flat, triangular muscle, which extends from the genian apophysis to the inferior surface of the os hyoides and tongue, which it carries forward.

GENIO-HYOIDEUS, from γενειον, 'the chin,' and υοειδης, 'the os hyoides.' A muscle, which arises from the genian apophysis, and is inserted at the anterior part of the body of the os hyoides. Its use is to raise the os hyoides, and carry it forwards. It may, also, contribute to depress the lower jaw in contracting towards the os hyoides.

GENIO-PHARYNGEUS, from γενειον, 'the chin,' and φαρυγγίς, 'the pharynx.' A name given, by some anatomists, to a bundle of fibres, which passes from the lower jaw to the sides of the pharynx, and forms part of the constrictor pharyngis superior.

GENIPI ALBUM, Artemisia rupestris—g. Blanc. Artemisia rupestris.

GENISTA, Spartium scoparium—g. Canariensis, see Rhodium lignum—g. Tinctoria, Spartium scoparium.

GENI'TA SPINO'SA IN'DICA, Bahel Schulli. An Oriental tree, a decoction of the roots of which is diuretic. The leaves, boiled in vinegar, have the same effect.—Ray.

GENITAL, Genitalis, Geneticos, from γενναί, 'to be born.' That which belongs to generation.

The GENITAL ORGANS, Sexual Organs, Pudenda, Natura'lia, Edæa, M'æa, M'æza, M'æsa, M'æron, Genital parts, Noble parts, Natural parts, Private parts, Privities, Privy parts, Privy Members, the Parts, Partes genitales, Partes generatid'ni inservientes, Genitalia, Organa generatid'ni inservientia. (F.) Organes genitaur, Parties gënitales, P. montenses, P. gënitoires, P. nobles, P. scævuelles, P. naturelles, les Parties. These parts are inservient to the reproduction of the species, and are very different in the male and female. In man, they are numerous: some secreting the sperm, as the testicles and their appendages: others retaining it, as the vesiculæ seminales; and another for carrying it into the organs of the female,—the penis. In the female, the parts of generation form an apparatus, perhaps more complicated than that of the male. Some are inservient to copulation, as the vulva, vagina, &c.; others to conception and the preservation of the product for a determinate time;—as the uterus and its appendages; whilst others concur in the alimentation of the infant after birth, as the mammæ.

GENETALE, Sperm.

GENITALIA, Genital organs.

GENITUR'A, from γεννη, or γορος, 'sperm,' 'seed,' 'race.' That which is fecundated or engendered in the maternal womb. This word has been used synonymously with embryo, fatus, and infant. Also, the sperm; (q. v.) and the penis. See GONE.

GENNETICON'OSI, from γεννητικός, 'genital,' and νόσος, 'disease.' Diseases of the genitals.

GENOS, Sex.

GENOU, Genu.

GENRE, Genus.

GENTIA, Gentianina.

GENTIAN, BLUE, Gentiana catesbæi—g. White, Laserpitium latifolium—g. Yellow, Gentiana lutea.

GENTIANA, G. lutea—g. Alba, Laserpitium latifolium—g. Cachenlaguen, Chironia chilensis—g. Centaurium, Chironia centaurium.

GENTIANA CATESBÆI; Blæ Gentian, U. S. It is a pure and simple bitter, and the root may be used wherever that of the Gentiana lutea is proper.

GENTIANA CHIRAY'TA, Henricæa Pharmacæa, Swer'tia Chiray'ta. A native of India, which has been much employed in that country, in dyspepsia, and as an antiperiodic in intermittents. It is preferred, by some, to sarsaparilla, where the latter is considered to be indicated,—as after large quantities of mercury have been taken, or where profuse salivation has been induced. It has also been advised in atonic leucorrhæa. It yields its virtues to alcohol and water.

GENTIANA LUTEA. The systematic name of the officinal gentian: Gentiana major, G. vel'erum, Gentiana rubra, Yellow Gentian, Felwort, Gentiana, Ord. Gentianeæ, (F.) Gentiane jaune. This is a plant common in the mountains of Europe. The root is almost inodorous, extremely bitter, and yields its virtues to ether, alcohol, and water. It is tonic and stomachic; and in large doses, aperient. Dose, gr. x. to ʒij. It is most frequently, however, used in infusion or tincture.

GENTIANA MAJOR, G. lutea.

GENTIANA PERUVIANA, Chironia chilensis—g. Rubra, G. lutea—g. Veterum, G. lutea.

GENTIANE JAUNE, Gentiana lutea.

GENTIANINA, Gentianine, Gentianin, Gentia. An alkali, obtained from gentian, and which is its active principle. It is intensely bitter. Dose, gr. j to iv.

GENTILIUS, Hereditary.

GENU, Gony, γονυ, (F.) Genou. The articulation of the leg with the thigh;—the Femorotibial joint. It is the most complicated in the body. It is formed by the inferior extremity of the femur, the superior extremity of the tibia, and the rotula. The articular surfaces of the bones are covered by layers of cartilage—more or less thick—and by the synovial membrane of the articulation.

The soft parts of this joint are,—the ligamentum patelle, two lateral ligaments, distinguished by the names internal and external: a posterior ligament; two crucial ligaments;—the one anterior, and the other posterior: two interarticular fibro-cartilages; some albugineous fibres, which form an imperfect capsule, &c. The knee receives its arteries from the femoral and popliteal. They bear the name articular. Its veins have the same distribution as the arteries, and discharge their blood into the saphena and crural veins. Its nerves are furnished by the sciatic, popliteal, and crural. The joint is protected by the tendons and muscles which surround it.

The French use the term Articulation en genou for the joints, in which the head of one bone is received into a bony cavity, where it rolls and moves in all directions.

GENUGRA, Gonagra.

GENUINUS, Legitimate.

GENUS, (F.) Genre. A collection or group of species, analogous to each other; and which can be united by common characters. When a species cannot be referred to a known genus, it constitutes a distinct one.

GENYANTRAL'GIA, from γενειον, 'the chin,' αντρον, 'the antrum,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the antrum of Highmore.

GENYANTRUM, Antrum of Highmore.

GENYS, γενυς, 'the jaw,' also the chin. Hence:

GENYS, Gena.

GEOFFRÆA INERMIS, Geoffra'a, Geoffroy'a, Cabbage Tree, Cabbage-Bark Tree, Andira inermis. Nat. Ord. Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Diadelphia Decandria. Geoffraea Jamaicæ'sis, Worm-Bark Tree. The odour of the bark is very unpleasant. It is anthelmintic and cathartic. Dose, of the powder, ʒj to ʒij.

The GEOFFRÆA SURINAMEN'SIS, Andira Surinamensis, has similar properties.

Hutteneschmidt has separated their active principles, to which he has given the names Jamaïcine and Surinamine. They are alkaline.

GEOFFROYA, Geoffraea inermis—g. Jamaïcensis, G. inermis.

GEOGRAPHY, MEDICAL, Geographia Medica. The description of the surface of the globe as regards the influence of situation on the health, vital functions, and diseases of its inhabitants—vegetable and animal; but principally on those of man.

GERANIS, from γέρανος, 'a crane,' which it resembled. A bandage, used by the ancients in cases of fractured clavicle. Some authors attribute it to Hippocrates; others, to Perigenes.

GERANIUM, γέρανιον; same etymon. The Crane's Bill.

GERANIUM ROBERTIANUM: Stinking Crane's Bill, Herb Robert. (F.) Herbe à Robert, Bec de Grue Robertin. This plant was, at one time, used as an antispasmodic and slight stimulant; as well as for an external application in various painful sores and inflammations.

GERANIUM MOSCHATUM; Erodium Moschatum, (F.) Bec de grue musqué. A European plant, esteemed to be excitant and diaphoretic.

Most of the species of geranium have been used as astringents. In some of the north-western parts of the United States, the root of the Geranium maculatum is called Racine à Becquet, after a person of that name. It is highly extolled by the Western Indians as an antisyphilitic.

GERANIUM MACULATUM, G. moschatum.

GERAS, Senectus.

GERM, Germen, Blastéma. The rudiment of a new being, not yet developed, or which is still adherent to the mother.

GERMANDER COMMON, Teucrium chamædrys—g. Creeping, Teucrium chamædrys—g. Marum, Teucrium marum—g. Small, Teucrium chamædrys—g. Water, Teucrium scordium.

GERMANDRÉE AQUATIQUE, Teucrium scordium—g. Muritime, Teucrium marum—g. Officinale, Teucrium chamædrys—g. Scordine, Teucrium scordium.

GERME FAUX, Conception, false.

GERMEN, Germ—g. Falsum, Mole—g. Sperium, Conception, false.

GERMINAL CELL, see Cytoblast.

GERMINAL MEMBRANE AND VESICLE. See Molecule.

GERMS, DISSEMINATION OF, Panspermia.

GEROCOMIA, Geroconi'icē, Gerontocom'icē, from γέρων, 'an aged person,' and ζουειν, 'to take care of.' The part of Medicine, whose object is the preservation of the health of the aged:—the hygiene of old people.

GEROCOMICE, Gerocomia.

GEROCOMIUM, Gerontocomi'um, same etymon. An hospital for the aged.

GEROFLE. See Eugenia caryophyllata.

GEROFLÉE JAUNE, Cheiranthus cheiri.

GERONTOCOMICE, Gerocomia.

GERONTOCOMIUM, Gerocominium.

GERONTOTOXON, Gerotoxon.

GERONTOXON, Gerotoxon.

GEROTOX'ON, Gerontox'on, Gerontotox'on, Macula cor'nea arcua'ta, Arcus seni'tis; from γέρων, 'an old person,' and τόξον, 'a bow.' A bow-shaped opacity at the under margin of the cornea, common to old people.

GERSA, Plumbi subcarbonas—g. Serpentinae, see Arun maculatum.

GESTA, 'things done,' from γέρ'erc, 'to do,'

'carry.' A Latin term, introduced by Hallé into medical language, to designate, among the objects which belong to hygiene, the functions which consist in the voluntary movements of muscles and organs. In the class of Gesta are found, sleep, the waking state, movements or locomotion and rest.

GESTATION, Gestatio, Phora, φορα, from gesta're, 'to carry.' The time, during which a female who has conceived, carries the embryo in her uterus. See Pregnancy. Gestation, likewise, signifies the bearing or carrying of an individual; a kind of exercise, easier than that in which he moves by virtue of his own powers. Thus, we speak of gestation on horseback, in a carriage, &c.

GESTICULATION, Gesticulatio. The act of making many gestures; a symptom in disease, which always indicates very vivid sensations. It is met with in numerous affections.

GEUM PALUSTRE, G. rivale.

GEUM RIVALE, G. palustrē, Water acens, (F.) Bénoite aquatique, B. des Ruisscaux. Family, Rosacæ. Ser. Syst. icosandria Polygynia. The root of this plant is astringent. It has been much extolled in the cure of intermittents, diarrhæas, hemorrhages, &c.

GEUM URBA'NUM, Caryophyll'ita, Caryophyll'us vulgar'is, Sauamunda, Lagophthalmus, Caryophyll'ita, Jananua'da, Common Acens, Herb Bennet, Herba benedicta, (F.) Bénoite. The root of this plant has a smell, not unlike that of cloves. Taste bitterish, austere; virtues yielded to water and alcohol. It has been used in intermittents, dysentery, chronic diarrhæa, debility, &c. Dose, ʒss to ʒj of the powder.

GEUSION'OSI, from γεωσις, 'taste,' and οσος, 'disease,' Geosion'si. Diseases of the organ or sense of taste.

GEUSIS, Taste.

GEUTHMOS, Taste.

GEZIR. See Pastinaca opoponax.

GEZIT, Cagot.

GEZITAIN, Cagot.

GHERKIN. See Cucumis sativus.

GHITTA JEMOCO, Cambogia.

GIALAP'PA, Convolvulus jalapa.

GIBBA, Hump.

GIBBEROSITAS, Gibbositas.

GIBBOSITAS, Gibberos'itas, Cypho'sis, from (F.) Gibbeux, (L.) Gibbus, something arched or vaulted, prominent, Gibbos'ity, Gib'bousness. Curvature of the spine, Hybo'mia. A symptom, which occurs in different diseases; particularly in rickets and caries of the vertebræ. See Hump.

GIBBOUSNESS, Gibbositas.

GIBBUS, Hump.

GIBLETS. According to Minshew, from Goblet, Goblet; but, according to Junius, from (F.) Gibier, 'game.' The word seems to be the old (F.) Gibelez, Gibélet, &c. i. e. Gibier, (L.) Cibarium, food, (F.) Abattis. It means, generally, the parts which are cut off from a goose before it is roasted. Also, the extremities of fowls, such as the head, wings, feet; to which are sometimes added, the liver, gizzard, &c.

Soup made from these, is moderately nutritious.

GIDDINESS, Vertigo.

GIGARUS SERPENTARIA, Arum draconculum.

GILARUM, Thymus serpyllum.

GILEAD, BALM OF. See Anyris opobalsanum.

GILET DE FORCE, Waistcoat, strait.

GILL, Glecoma hederacea.

GILL-GO-BY-GROUND, Glecoma hederacea.

GILLA THEOPHRASTI, Zinci sulphas—g. Vitrioli, Zinci sulphas.

GILLE'NIA TRIFOLIA'TA, Spiræa trifoliata, common Gille'nia, Indian Physic, Braumont root. Nat. Ord. Rosaceæ. Sex. Syst. Icosandria Pentagynia. The root of this shrub, which grows plentifully in the United States, is a safe and efficacious emetic, in the dose of about 30 grains. It resembles, in its properties, the ipecacuanha.

GILLIFLOWER, Dianthus Caryophyllus.

GIM'BERNAT'S LIGAMENT. A fibrous, triangular, expansion, which is detached from the posterior and inner part of the crural arch, and is inserted into the crest of the pubis. This ligament forms the inner part of the superior aperture of the crural canal. It is one of the most frequent causes of strangulation in crural hernia.

GIN, Hollands, Geneva. This spirit, which is distilled from corn and juniper berries, or from some substitute for them, is largely used in Great Britain; and is extremely detrimental, to the lower classes particularly. It possesses the properties of other spirituous liquors; but is, in popular medicine, more used than other varieties, in cases of colic or intestinal pain of any kind. See Spirit.

GINGEMBRE, Amomum zingiber.

GINGER, Amomum zingiber—g. Beer powder, see Amomum zingiber—g. Jamaica, concentrated essence of, see Amomum zingiber—g. Preserved, see Amomum zingiber—g. Wild, Asarum Canadense.

GINGIBRA'CHIUM. A name given to the scurvy, because the gums and arms are chiefly affected by it; from gingivæ, 'the gums,' and brachium, 'the arm.' It has, also, been called Gingipedium, because the lower limbs are in many cases the seat of scorbutic spots.

GINGIBRACHIUM, Porphyræ nautica.

GINGIPEDIUM, see Gingibrachium, Porphyræ nautica.

GINGIVÆ, from gig'nere, 'to beget,' because the teeth are, as it were, begotten in them. (?) The Gums, ὄντα, Uta, Carni'cula (F.) Gumætes. The portion of the mucous membrane of the mouth, which covers the maxillary bones to the level of the alveolar arches. The gums are formed of a red tissue; more or less solid, and of a fibro-mucous nature, which adheres strongly to the necks of the teeth, and transmits, between their roots and the alveoli, a very thin expansion; the alveolo-dental periosteum. The gums fix the teeth and contribute greatly to their solidity. In the aged, after the loss of the teeth, they become fibrous and very solid, and are inservient to mastication.

GINGLYMOID, Ginglymoideus, from γίγλυμος, 'a ginglymus,' and εἶδος, 'resemblance.' Resembling a ginglymus or hinge. An epithet applied to joints, which resemble a hinge, as a ginglymoid joint.

GIN'GLYMUS, Cardinamen'tum, Cardo, 'a hinge.' (F.) Charnière. (F.) Articulation en charnière. A species of diarthrodial articulation, which only admits of motion in two directions, like a hinge,—as the knee-joint or elbow-joint.

GINSENG, Panax quinquefolium.

GIRARD-ROUSSIN, Asarum.

GIRL. This seems, formerly, to have been an appellation, common to both sexes. From the Su. Goth. Karl, 'a man,' many etymologists deduce the word. It means a young female, (L.) Filia, from gίλειν, 'to love,' Virgo. (F.) Fille.

GIROFLE. See Eugenia caryophyllata.

GISSA, Cynanthe parotidæa.

GIZZARD, Ventriculus callosus.

GLABELLA, Gabella, Mesophryon.

GLABRITIES, Calvities.

GLACE, Ice.

GLACIALE, Mesembryanthemum crystallinum.

GLACIES, Ice.

GLADIOLUS, Maclærion—g. Cæruleus, Iris Germanica.

GLADIOLUS COMMUNIS, G. vulgaris, Victoria'lis rotunda, Cornflag, Victoria'lis feminea. (F.) Gloyal. The root of this plant has been considered aphrodisiac. Applied in cataplasm, it has been extolled against scrofulous tumours.

GLADIOLUS LUTEUS, Iris pseudacorus—g. Vulgaris, G. communis.

GLAMA, Lippitudo, Chassie.

GLAND, Glan'dula, from glans, (q. v.) 'an acorn,' Aden. The ancient anatomists gave this name to a number of organs, of a texture generally soft, and a shape more or less globular, but differing greatly in their nature and functions. They applied it, for instance, 1. To those organs, which separate from the blood any fluid whatever. When such organs were composed of several lobules, united by common vessels, they received the name conglomerate glands, as the parotid, pancreas, &c. 2. To the reddish and spongy, knot-like bodies, which are met with in the course of the lymphatics. These they called conglobate glands. See Ganglion, (lymphatic;) and 3dly and lastly, to various other organs, whose intimate texture and functions are still unknown, as the Pineal gland, Pituitary gland, Glands of Papehioni, Thyroid gland, Thymus gland, Supra-renal glands, &c.

Chaussier restricts the word gland to those softish, granular, lobated organs, composed of vessels, nerves, and a particular texture, of which there are but 8 kinds in the human body, viz. the lacrimal, salivary, and mammary—the testicles—the ovaries—the liver, pancreas, and kidneys. These are all destined to draw from the blood the molecules necessary for the formation of new fluids; and to convey these fluids externally, by means of one or more excretory ducts. Several glands, besides their excretory ducts, have especial reservoirs, in which the fluids, secreted by them, collect, remain for a greater or less space of time, and undergo slight modifications before being evacuated;—such are, the gall-bladder for the liver, the urinary bladder for the kidneys, &c. Each gland has an organization peculiar to it, but we know not the intimate nature of the glandular texture.—Malpighi believed that the vessels terminate in small, solid masses, to which he gave the name—glandular grains. In these, he considered, the excretory ducts originate. Ruysch thought that the glands are entirely vascular, and that the excretory ducts are immediately continuous with the vasa afferentia, &c. The best view, perhaps, is, that the exhaling or secreting vessel is distributed on the animal membrane, that forms the blind extremity of the excretory duct, and that the secretion is effected through it.

The term glande (F.) is sometimes appropriated to the tumour, formed by inflammation or engorgement of a lymphatic ganglion.

GLAND, Glans—g. Globate, Conglobate gland—g. Prostate, Prostate—g. Salivary, abdominal, Pancreas.

GLANDAGE, Adenophyma.

GLANDE, Gland—g. Thyroide, see Thyroid gland.

GLANDERS, Equinia—g. Farcy, see Equinia.

GLANDES BRONCHIQVES, Bronchial glands—g. Conglobées, Conglobate glands—g. de Croissance, Waxing kernels—g. de Meibomius, Meibomian, glands of.

GLANDIFORM CORPUSCLE, Acinus—g. Ganglion, see Ganglion.

GLANDULAIRE, Glandular.

GLANDULAR, Glandularis, Glandulosus, (F.) Glandulaire, Glanduleux, having the appearance, form, or texture of glands; as a glandular body, a glandular texture, &c.

GLANDULEUX, Glandular.

GLANDULO'SO-CARNEUS. Ruysch gives this epithet to fleshy excrescences, which he found in the bladder.

GLANDULOSUS, Glandular.

GLANS. Bul'anus, Cyrtaros, Cuspis. (F.) Gland. The extremity of the penis and of the clitoris. The glans penis is of a conical, slightly flattened shape. It is continuous with the urethra, which opens at its apex; and is circumscribed by a projecting edge called the Corona glandis. It is covered by a thin mucous membrane; is furnished, at its base, with sebaceous follicles, called glandulæ odoriferae Tysoni, the secretion from which is termed Smegmæ preputii; and can, almost always, be covered by the reflection of the skin, called the prepuce. Lastly, it is formed of a spongy texture, susceptible of being thrown into erection.

The GLANS CLITORIDIS is smaller. It is imperforate, and likewise covered with a sort of prepuce, formed by the mucous membrane of the vulva.

GLANS JOVIS THEOPHRASTI, Fagus castanea—g. Ulnæ, Olecranon—g. Unguentaria, Guilandina moringa.

GLASS, Vitrum.

GLAUBER'S SALTS, Soda, sulphate of.

GLAUCEO, Glaucoma.

GLAUCO'MA, from γλαυκος, 'sea-green.' Glauco'sis, Glauco'do, Cataracta glauca, Oculus cæsius, Cæ'sius, Phthirma glauco'ma, Parop'sis glauco'sis, Apoglauco'sis. Amongst the older pathologists, this word was used synonymously with cataract. It is now ordinarily applied to opacity of the vitreous humour or of the tunica hyaloidea; which manifests itself by a grayish or greenish spot, apparent through the pupil. The diagnosis is generally difficult; and it is almost always incurable.

GLAUcoma Woulhoussi, Cataract.

GLAUcosis, Glaucoma.

GLAYEUL, Gladiolus vulgaris—g. Puant, Iris fetidissima.

GLECHON, Mentha pulegium.

GLECHONITES. Wine, impregnated with the Glechon, γληχων, mentha pulegium or pennyroyal.

GLECO'MA HEDERA'CEA, Heder'ula, Chamaecle'ma, Calamin'ta humil'ior, Chamaecis'sus, Hedera terre'stris, Ground ivy, Gill, Gill-go-by ground. (F.) Lierre terrestre, Terrette.

This plant has a strong smell, and a bitterish, somewhat aromatic, taste. It has been considered expectorant and tonic.

GLEET. See Gonorrhœa.

GLE'NE. γληνη, 'the pupil of the eye.' Gl'e'noid or Glenoid'al, Glenoid'al'is. Glenoid'es, Glenodes, from γληνη, 'the pupil,' and ειδος, 'resemblance.' (F.) Glénoïde or Glénoïdale. Any shallow, articular cavity, which receives the head of a bone; such as, 1. The glenoid cavity or fossa of the scapula. Fossa glenoïdea, Omo-co'lyzē, Entypo'sis, is situate at the anterior angle of the scapula; and is articulated with the head of the humerus. 2. The glenoid cavity or fossa of the temporal bone. It is seated between the two roots of the zygomatic process, and receives the condyle of the lower jaw.

GLENoid, Glene.

The GLENoid LIg'AMENT, (F.) Ligament

Glen'oidien is a fibro-cartilaginous ring or bour-relet, which seems formed by the expansion of the tendon of the long head of the biceps brachialis, and surrounds the glenoid cavity of the scapula, the depth of which it increases.

GLÉNOIDÆLE, Glene.

GLISCHRASMA, Glischrotes, from γλισχροαινω, 'I become glutinous.' Lentor, viscosity, —Hippocrates.

GLISCHROCH'OSLOS, from γλισχροος, 'viscid,' and χολη, 'bile.' Excrements, which are glutinous and bilious.

GLISCHROTES, Glischrasma.

GLISOMARGO, Creta.

GLOBE, Bandage (head.)

GLOBULAIRE PURGATIVE, Globularia alypum.

GLOBULARIA AL'YPUM, Globularia, Montpellier Turbith. (F.) Globulaire purgative, Turbith blanc. The leaves of this plant are bitter; and have been used in intermittents and in constipation. See Alypon.

GLOB'ULE, Globulus, Spha'ron: a small globe.

The GLOBULES OF THE BLOOD. (F.) Globules du sang; Globuli, Vesiculæ seu Folliculi sanguinis, are small, spherical bodies, which are particularly observable, when the transparent parts of cold-blooded animals are examined by the aid of the microscope. They were first seen by Malpighi, and are met with in the blood of all animals.

The globules of blood are circular in the mammalia, and elliptical in birds and cold-blooded animals. They are, also, flat in all animals, and composed of a central nucleus enclosed in a membranous sac.

GLOBULE D'ARANTIUS, see Sigmoid valves—g. du Sang. Globule of the blood.

GLOBULI ARTERIARUM TERMINI, see Acinus—g. Sanguinis. globules of the blood—g. Tartari martialis, Ferrum tartarizatum—g. Tartratis ferri et lixivie, Ferrum tartarizatum.

GLOBULINE, Hæmatine.

GLOBULUS STAPEDIS OSSIS, Os oroticulare.

GLOBUS HYSTERICUS, Nodus hystericus. A sensation, experienced by hysterical persons, as if a round body was rising from the abdomen towards the larynx, and producing a sense of suffocation.

GLOBUS HYSTERICUS, Angone—g. Martialis, Ferrum tartarizatum.

GLOBUS UTERINIUS. A term applied by acconcheurs to the round tumour, formed by the uterus in the lower part of the abdomen, immediately after delivery.

GLOMERATE, Conglomerate.

GLOSSA, Glotta, γλωσσα, γλωττα, 'the tongue.' (q. v.) Hence:

GLOSSAGRA, Glossalgia.

GLOSSAI'GIA, Glossagra, from γλωσσα, 'the tongue,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the tongue.

GLOSSANTHRAX, from γλωσσα, 'the tongue,' and ανθραξ, 'a carbuncle.' Carbuncle of the tongue. A disease more common in cattle than man.

GLOSSIANUS, Lingual muscle.

GLOSSITIS, from γλωσσα, 'the tongue.' Glossitis inflammatorius, Angina linguaria, Inflammation of the tongue. When confined to the mucous membrane, it is of slight importance. That which affects the whole of the tongue is a serious disease, and requires the vigorous use of antiphlogistics. It is rare.

GLOSSOCAT'OCUS, from γλωσσα, 'the tongue,' and κατεχω, 'I arrest.' Lingua Detentor, Speculum Oris, (F.) Abaisseur de la langue. An instrument, the invention of which is attributed to Paulus of Ægina, and which was employed to depress the tongue, in order to examine diseases of the fauces. It was composed of two branches; one of which had, at its extremity, a plate for depressing the tongue; whilst the other, shaped like a horse-shoe, was applied under the chin. The finger, or the handle of a spoon, or a spatula, is now alone used in similar cases.

GLOSSOCE'LE, from γλωσσα, 'the tongue,' and κίλη, 'hernia,' 'tumour.' Hernia of the Tongue. Projection of the tongue from the mouth. It depends, generally, on an inflammatory swelling of the organ. At times, however, a chronic glossocæle, or sort of œdematous engorgement is met with; which proceeds to a great length; and deforms the dental arches, the lips, &c.

The inflammatory glossocæle must be combated by antiphlogistics. In the œdematous kind, such as is sometimes caused by excessive salivation, the infiltrated fluid may be pressed back by the hand of the practitioner, to get the tongue behind the teeth; and it may be kept there by a piece of gauze tied over the mouth.

The chronic, elongated kind sometimes requires amputation of a portion of the organ.

GLOSSOCOMA, Glossospasmus.

GLOSSOCOMON, Glossocomum, Glossocomi'on, from γλωσσα, 'the tongue,' and κομειν, 'to guard.' The ancients gave this name to a small case for holding the tongues of their wind-instruments. By extension, it was applied to the box or cradle, in which fractured limbs were kept. We find, in the ancient writers, a Glossocomon of Hippocrates, of Nymphodorus, Galen, &c.

GLOSSO-EPIGLOTTICUS. That which belongs to the tongue and epiglottis. Some anatomists have so denominated certain fleshy fibres, which pass from the base of the tongue towards the epiglottis. These muscles are more evident in some of the mammalia than in man; and their use seems to be,—to raise the epiglottis, and to remove it farther from the glottis.

Santorini, who described them after Eustachius, calls them Retractores Epiglottidis.

GLOSSOGRAPHY, Glossographia, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\gamma\rho\alpha\phi\eta$ , 'a description.' An anatomical description of the tongue.

GLOSSOHYAL. A name given, by Geoffroy-Saint-Hilaire, to the posterior cornua of the os hyoides.

GLOSSOLOGY, Glossologia, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\lambda\omicron\gamma\omicron\varsigma$ , 'a treatise,' 'a discourse.' A treatise of the tongue.

GLOSSOLYSIS, Glossoplegia, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\lambda\upsilon\sigma\iota\varsigma$ , 'solution.' Paralysis of the tongue.

GLOSSOMANTIA, Prognosis ex lingua, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\mu\alpha\upsilon\tau\epsilon\iota\alpha$ , 'divination.' Prognosis from the state of the tongue.

GLOSSONCUS, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\omicron\gamma\kappa\omicron\varsigma$ , 'tumour.' Exoncosis lingua. Swelling of the tongue.

GLOSSONCUS INFLAMMATORIUS, Glossitis.

GLOSSOPALATINUS, Glosso-staphylinus—g. Pharyngeal, Pharyngo-glossal.

GLOSSOPHARYNGEUS, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\varphi\alpha\rho\upsilon\gamma\gamma\eta$ , 'the pharynx.' Belonging to the tongue and the pharynx. Some anatomists thus designate certain fleshy bundles, which arise from the lateral parts of the base of the tongue, and are inserted into the parietes of the pharynx. They form part of the constrictor pharyngis superior. (q. v.)

GLOSSOPLEGIA, Glossoylisis.

GLOSSOSCOPIA, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\sigma\kappa\omicron\tau\epsilon\omega$ , 'I view.' Inspection of the tongue as an index of disease.

GLOSSOSPASMUS, Glossocoma, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\sigma\tau\alpha\sigma\mu\omicron\varsigma$ , 'spasm.' Cramp or spasm of the tongue.

GLOSSO-STAPHYLINUS, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\sigma\tau\alpha\upsilon\lambda\eta$ , 'the uvula.' Glossopalatinus, Constrictor Isthmi Faucium. A small, thin, narrow, and long muscle, which arises from the base of the tongue, and is inserted at the inferior and lateral part of the velum palati, in the anterior pillar of which it is situate. Its use is to contract the isthmus faucium, by depressing the velum palati, and raising the base of the tongue.

GLOSSOTOMY, Glossotomia, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\sigma\sigma\alpha$ , 'the tongue,' and  $\tau\epsilon\mu\epsilon\upsilon\iota\eta$ , 'to cut.' Dissection of the tongue. Amputation of the tongue.

GLOTTA, Glossa, Tongue.

GLOTTIS, Ligula. A small oblong aperture, situate at the upper part of the larynx. This aperture is comprised between the chordæ vocales. It is narrow, anteriorly; wider, posteriorly; and is capable of being modified by muscular contraction, as may be required by the voice. It is by the chordæ vocales, that voice is produced. The glottis is nearly an inch long in the adult male:—less in the female and child.

Glottis is, by some, used synonymously with ventricle of the larynx: with others, it includes the whole of the larynx.

GLOTTIS, LIPS OF THE, Thyreo-arytenoid Ligaments.

GLOUGLOU DUNE BOUTEILLE, Gurgling.

GLOUTERON, Arctium Lappa—g. Petit, Xanthium.

GLOUTIUS, Gluteal—g. Maximus et extimus, Glutæus maximus—g. Secundus et medius, Glutæus medius—g. Tertius et intimus, Glutæus minimus.

GLOWWORM, Cicindela.

GLUANT, Glutinous.

GLUE, FISH, Ichthyocollo.

GLUEBONE, Osteocollo.

GLUTÆUS MAGNUS, G. major—g. Major, G. maximus—g. Minor, G. minimus.

GLUTÆAL, Gloutius, Glutæus, from  $\gamma\lambda\omega\tau\omicron\varsigma$ , 'the nates or buttocks.' (F.) Fessier. That which belongs, or relates to the nates. This name has been given to many parts, which compose the nates.

THE GLUTÆAL ARTERY, or Posterior Iliac Artery, (F.) Artère fessière, is one of the largest branches of the hypogastric. It makes its exit from the pelvis at the upper part of the superior sciatic foramen; gains the posterior part of the pelvis, and divides into two branches;—the one superficial, the other deep-seated. The last subdivides into three secondary branches, whose ramifications are distributed particularly to the Glutæi, Longissimus Dorsi, Sacro-lumbalis, &c. and anastomose with the sciatic and internal circumflex arteries.

THE GLUTÆAL VEIN, (F.) Veine fessière, follows the same march as the artery of the same name.

THE GLUTÆAL NERVE, (F.) Nerf fessier, is a large branch, furnished by the 5th pair of lumbar nerves. It is chiefly distributed to the glutæi muscles.

GLUTÆUS MAXIMUS, Glutæus major, Maximus et extimus gloutius, G. magnus, Ilio-sacro-fémoral; Sacro-fémoral, (Ch.) (F.) Muscle grand fessier. This muscle is situate at the posterior part of the pelvis, and at the upper and posterior part of the thigh. It is large, thick, and quadrilateral; and is attached, above, to the posterior part of the crista ilii, to the part of the ilium comprised between the crista and the upper curved line, to the posterior surface of the sacrum, coccyx, and great sacro-sciatic ligament; and below, it terminates, by a broad aponeurosis, which is inserted into the rugged surface, that descends from the trochanter major to the linea aspera of the femur. This muscle extends the thigh on the pelvis, and rotates the thigh outwards. It is powerfully concerned in station and progression.

GLUTÆUS MEDIUS, Gloutius secundus et medius, Ilio-trochantèrien; Grand Ilio-trochantèrien, (Ch.) (F.) Moyen Fessier. This muscle is situate, in part, beneath the preceding; it is broad, very thick, radiated, and triangular; attached, above, to the crista ilii, and to the part of the outer surface of that bone comprised between the three anterior fourths of its crista, its upper curved line, and its lower; and, below, it ends by a tendon, inserted at the upper edge of the great trochanter. It is an abductor of the thigh; but can turn the thigh outwards or inwards, according as its posterior or inferior fibres are thrown separately into contraction.

GLUTÆUS MINIMUS, Glutæus minor, Ilio-ischii-trochantèrien, Tertius et Intimus Gloutius (F.) Petit Fessier;—Petit Ilio-trochantèrien (Ch.) This muscle, which is situate beneath the preceding, is flat, triangular, and with radiated fibres. It is attached, above, to the external surface of the os ilium, from the inferior curved line to the acetabulum; and, below, is inserted into the anterior part of the great trochanter. It has the same uses as the preceding.

GLUTEN, Glutinum, Lentor, 'Paste.' An immediate principle of vegetables. It is soft, of a grayish white, viscid consistence, and very elastic. Exposed to the air, it becomes hard, brown, and fragile; and, in moist air, putrefies. Water and alcohol do not dissolve it. It is soluble in vegetable, and in weak mineral acids, at a high temperature. The Farinæ, in which it is found, are those preferred for the preparation of bread; on account of the property it has of making the paste rise.

GLUTEN ARTICULORUM, Synovia.

GLUTIA. See Quadrigenina corpora.

GLUTINANS, Agglutinant.

GLUTINATIF, Agglutinant.

GLUTINATIO, Agglutination.

GLUTINEUX, Glutinous.

GLUTINOUS, Glutinosus, Colloides, from gluten, 'paste, glue.' (F.) Glutineux, Glucnt. An epithet given to substances taken from the animal or vegetable kingdom, and endowed with unusual viscosity. The decoctions of marsh-mallows, and figs, and the jelly of harts-horn, are said to be glutinous.

GLUTINUM, Gluten.

GLUTOI, Nates.

GLUTTONY, from glutio, 'I swallow.' Limo'sis Hullo'rum, (F.) Gourmandise. Excessive appetite, owing to habitual indulgence.

GLYCANSIS, Edulcoration.

GLYCAS'MA, from γλυκός, 'sweet.' A sweet wine, prepared from must.—Linden.

GLYCERATON, Glycyrrhiza.

GLYCIPICROS, Solanum dulcamara.

GLYCIDIDE, Pæonia.

GLYCYPHYTON, Glycyrrhiza.

GLYCYRRHIZA, from γλυκός, 'sweet,' and ρίζα, 'a root.' Glycyrrhiza Glabra, Liquoritia, Seyth'ica (Rad'x.) Glyceraton, Glycyph'yton, Liquorice, Adip'sus, Alcu'cas, Alimos, (F.) Réglisse. Order, Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Dial'phia Decandria. The root of this southern European plant is inodorous; has a sweet taste: is mucilaginous; and leaves, when unpeeled, a degree of bitterness in the mouth. It is used as a demulcent, and chiefly in catarrh. The extract, made from it and sold in the shops, is known under the name Spanish Liquorice or Liquorice Juice. (F.) Jus de Réglisse.

The PECTORAL BALSAM OF LIQVORICE,—a quack preparation—is said by Dr. Paris, to consist chiefly of Paregoric Elixir, strongly impregnated with Oil of Aniseed.

GLYSTER HERBS, Herbæ pro Enem'ate. The herbs, ordinarily sold by the English apothecary under this title, are:—mallow leaves, one part; chamomile flowers, one part ( $\frac{3}{4}$  iss to lbj of water.)

GNAPHALIUM DIOICUM, Antennaria dioica.

GNATHOS, from γρῶν, 'I scrape, rub.' The cheek, the upper jaw. Also, the part of the jaws in which the teeth are fixed.—Hippocr., Foësius. See Bucca, and Gena.

GNESIOS legitimate.

GNOSIS, γνῶσις, 'knowledge.' A common suffix, as in Diagnosis, Prognosis, &c.

GOACONAX. See Tolulera balsamum.

GOATS' BEARD, COMMON, Tragopogon.

GOATS' THORN, Astragalus verus.

GOBELET ÉMÉTIQUE, Goblet, emetic.

GOBLET, EMETIC, Poculum emet'icum, Calix vomit'oria, (F.) Goblet émetique. A vessel, made by pouring melted antimony into a mould. By putting wine into this, and allowing it to stand some time, it acquires the property of producing vomiting. This kind of emetic has been long rejected; as the practitioner could never be certain of the dose he exhibited.

GODFREY'S CORDIAL. A celebrated nostrum, for which Dr. Paris has given the following formula. Infuse  $\frac{3}{4}$ ix of sussafras and of the seeds of carracay, coriander, and onise, of each  $\frac{3}{4}$ j, in six pints of water. Simmer the mixture until reduced to lbiv; then add lbvj of trenele, and boil the whole for a few minutes. When cold, add  $\frac{3}{4}$ ij of tincture of opium.

The following form is recommended by a committee of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy. Tinct. Opii, O iss; Syrupi Nigri, O xvj; Alcoholis, O ij, ſiquæ, O xxvj, Carbonatis Potassæ,  $\frac{3}{4}$ ijss, Œlei Sussafras, f.  $\frac{3}{4}$ iv, M.

It is anodyne.

GODRONNÉ (CANAL.) Condlis Petiti'anus, Couronne ciliaire, Canal de Petit, Canal godronné, Bullula canal of Petit. Petit gave this name (from (F.) godron, 'a plait or fold,') to the semicircular canal, formed by the tunica hyaloidea around the edge of the crystalline; because it appears, as it were, plaited or festooned.

GOGGLE-EYE, Strabismus.

GOÏTRE, Bronchocele.

GOLD, Aurum, Chrysos, (F.) Or. A solid, yellow, very brilliant, hard, very ductile, malleable, tenacious, and heavy metal; found in nature, either in its native state, or combined with a little silver, copper, or iron. S. G. 19.25.

The MURIATE OF GOLD, Chloride of Gold, Auri Chlor'idum, ſ Murias, ſ Chloruretum, ſ Muriticum, ſ Chlor'atum, ſ Oxydul'atum murial'icum, ſ Sol'atum, (F.) Chlorure d'or, Muriate d'or, has been admitted into the Pharmacopœia of the United States, and into that of Paris, &c. The formulae, however, differ. That of the United States is a muriate with two bases; and is prepared, according to the form of Dr. Christen, by dissolving the gold in a mixture of nitric and muriatic acids, and adding muriate of soda to the residuum after evaporation; then redissolving and evaporating slowly to dryness. The Parisian formula for the Muriate d'or, Murias seu Chloruretum Auri, consists in simply dissolving the gold in the acids, and evaporating to dryness. It has been recommended as an antisyphilitic in old, rebellious, venereal affections, exostoses, and in venereal, scrofulous, or cancerous glandular enlargements. Dose gr. 1-8th to gr. ss, rubbed on the tongue or gums. Internally, one-sixteenth of a grain in pill.

Various other preparations, as the Cyanide, (Auri Cyan'idum, ſ Cyanuretum;) the metallic gold in a state of division (Aurum met'al- licum, Pulvis Auri) obtained by amalgamating gold with mercury and driving the latter off by heat, and in the form of filings (Aurum linatum); the Chloride of Gold and Soda (Aurum muriaticum natronatum, A. muriaticum, A. chloratum natronatum, Chloratum Auricum Chloro'te natrii, Marias Auri co-natricum, Chloruretum auri et natrii, Hydrochlorate muriate of Gold and Soda, (F.) Hydrochlorate on Moriate d'or); the Nitromuriate of Gold, (Aurum Nitro-muriaticum, A. Nitromurias) and the Oxide of Gold (Auri Oxidum, Aurum Oxidatum) have been employed in the like affections and with similar results.

GOLD-BEATERS' SKIN. The intestina recta of the ox, which have been beaten quite smooth, for the manufacture of gold leaf. Used as a defensive dressing for slight cuts, &c.

GOLD, CHLORIDE OF, G. muriate of—g. Cyanide of, see Gold—g. Nitro-muriate of, see Gold—g. Oxide of, see Gold—g. and Sodium, chloride of oxide of, see Gold—g. and Soda, hydrochlorate of, see Gold—g. and Soda, muriate of, see Gold.

GOLD LEAF, Aurum foliatum, Aurum in libellis. Used to gild pills, and to plug carious teeth.

GOLD THREAD, Coptis.

GOLDEN ROD, Solidaga virgaurea.

GOLDWASSER. See Spirit

GOLUNCHA, Menispermum cordifolium.

GOMPHIASIS, Gomphias'mus, Agomphi'asis, γομφιασις, γομφιασμος, from γομφος, 'a nail.' A disease of the teeth, and particularly of the molars: looseness of the teeth in their sockets. Pain in the teeth.

GOMPHIASMUS, Gomphiasis.

GOMPHIOI, Molar teeth.

GOMPHOMA, Gomphosis.

GOMPHOS, Clavus.

GOMPHOSIS, Cardinamen'tum, Clava'tio, Gomph'oma, Coagmentatio, Includatio, γομφωσις, from γομφος, 'a nail.' Engomph'osis, εγγομφωσις. An immovable articulation, in which one bone is received into another, like a nail or peg into its hole. Gomphosis is only met with in the articulations of the teeth with the alveoli. It is, also, called Articulation par implantation.

GONACRASIA, Spermatorrhœa.

GONACRATIA, Spermatorrhœa.

GONAGRA, from γονυ, 'the knee,' and αγρα, 'a prey.' That which attacks the knees. Gout in the knees. Paracelsus calls it Gonagra.

GONAL'GIA, from γονυ, 'the knee,' and αλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the Knees. Gonyal'gia. This is almost always produced by gout. It may, however, depend on some other disease, either of the knee or of another part;—particularly of the hip-joint.

GONDOLE OCULAIRE, Scaphium oculare.

GONÉ, Gonos, Genit'ra. The semen; (hence, gonorrhœa)—the uterus.—Hippocr.

GONFLEMENT, Swelling.

GONGRONA, Bronchocele.

GONGYLION, Pilula.

GONOBOLIA, Ejaculation, spermatic.

GONOCELE, Spermatocele.

GONOIDES, from γονι, 'the seed,' and ειδος, 'appearance.' Genit'ra sim'ilis. Similar to sperm. Spermatic or Spermatoïd. A term appropriated to any substance, which resembles sperm

GONORRHŒA. Erroneously called from γονι, 'the sperm,' and ρεω, 'I flow,' because the older writers believed it to be a flux of semen. Blennorrhœ'gia, Blennorrhœ'a, Blennorrhœ'ia, Phalorrhœ'a, Medorrhœ'a, Catar'hus Gonorrhœ'a, C. ure'thræ, Urethrit'is, Blennorrhœ'a urethral'is, Catar'hus urethral'is, (F.) Ecoulement. An inflammatory discharge of mucus from the membrane of the urethra in both sexes; and from that of the prepuce in man, and the vagina in woman. It may be excited spontaneously, or by irritants applied directly to the membrane; but is, usually, produced by impure connexion.

Two great varieties have been generally reckoned:—

1. The GONORRHŒA PURA VEL BENIG'NA. That which does not follow an impure connexion; (F.) Échauffement; the Blennorrhagia benigna:—and

2. The GONORRHŒA IMPURA, maligna, contagio'sa, syphilit'ica, et virulenta; Fluor albus malignus, Fluxus venereus, Blennorrhœ'a ho'des, Clap, (F.) Chuide pisse. That which is the result of impure commerce. The French, also, distinguish the Chande'pisse sèche, or that, unaccompanied with discharge; and the Chuide'pisse cordée, Gonorrhœa cordata, or that accompanied with chordee, and which, of course, occurs only in the male.

The Gonorrhœa Virulenta; the kind, which will most frequently engage the attention of the practitioner, is characterized by mucous discharge from the urethra or vagina, intermixed with specific matter, and accompanied by burning pain on micturition. It is decidedly infectious. It is, however, a distinct disease from syphilis, and never produces it. Its duration is various, but the inflammatory symptoms usually subside in four or five weeks; leaving generally behind more or less of the gonorrhœa mucosa or gleet.

Gonorrhœa virulenta—indeed gonorrhœa of every kind, attended with any inflammatory symptoms—is best treated by the antiphlogistic regimen; avoiding every kind of irritation, and keeping the body cool by small doses of salts; and the urine diluted by the mildest fluids. After the inflammatory symptoms have subsided, cubebs, or the balsam of copaiba, exhibited in the dose of a teaspoonful, three times a day, will be found effectual; indeed, during the existence of the inflammatory symptoms, it often affords decided relief. Injections are rarely required.

Sometimes, gonorrhœa affects the glans; when it is called Gonorrhœa Spuria, G. Balani, Balanoblennorrhœa, Balanorrhœa, Balanius, Blennorrhœ'gia spuria vel notha, (F.) Blennorrhagie du gland, Gmorrhée batarde, Fuisse Blennorrhagie. It requires only cleanliness and cooling lotions.

Some other varieties of gonorrhœa have been enumerated, but they are of little moment.

The GONORRHŒA LAXORUM, G. libidino'sa, Spermorrhœa atonica, consists of a pellucid discharge from the urethra, whilst awake, without erection of the penis, but with venereal thoughts:—and

The GONORRHŒA DORMIENTIUM, G. Onicrog'onos, is that seminal discharge, which occurs during sleep, and is occasioned by libidinous dreams.

In consequence of repeated attacks of gonorrhœa, or of the debility induced by a single attack, it not unfrequently happens, as already remarked, that a constant, small discharge occurs, or remains behind, after all danger of infection is removed. The great difference between it and gonorrhœa is, that it is uninfected. The discharge consists of globular particles, contained in a slimy mucus, and generally devoid of that yellow colour, which characterizes the discharge of gonorrhœa virulenta. It is unattended with pain, scalding, &c. To this state the names Gleet, Gonorrhœa mucosa, Blenorrhœa chronica, Blenorrhœa, &c. have been given. It is commonly a disease of some duration, and demands the use of the copaiba, astringent injections: and, if obstinate, the introduction of the bougie.

GORGET, CUTTING, see Goiget and Lithotomy.

Goiget, from (F.) gorge, 'the throat.' Canada's, Ductor canaliculatus. (F.) Goiget. An instrument representing a long gutter, in the shape of a throat, and which is especially employed in the operations of lithotomy and fistula in ano.

The LITHOTOMY GORGET, (F.) Goiget Lithotome, Cutting Goiget, is the one used in the operation for the stone, for the purpose of dividing the prostate and the neck of the bladder, so as to enable the surgeon to introduce the forceps, and extract the stone. At the end of this goiget is a crest or beak, which fits the groove of the staff, and admits of the goiget being passed along it into the bladder.

Besides cutting, there are also blunt goigets, intended to be introduced into the wound—their concavity serving as a guide for the forceps into the bladder.

The chief modifications in the goiget have been made by Andouillet, Bell, Blicke, Bromfield, Cline, Desault, Foubert, Hawkins, Larrey, Lefevre, Michaelis, Thomas, &c.

The GORGET FOR FISTULA IN ANO consists of a semi-cylindrical, wooden staff; four inches long, without including the handle, and furnished with a wide groove. This is introduced into the rectum to prevent the point of the bistoury from injuring the intestine, when the internal orifice of the fistula is deeply situated and it is desirable to perform the operation by incision. This instrument, invented by Marchettis, has been modified by Percy, Runge, &c.

Desault invented an instrument for conducting the wire by the anus, in the operation for fistula by ligature. He called it Gorgéret à repoussoir.

GORGONEI FONTES, Fountains, described by Libavius, as containing water, which possessed a petrifying property; probably, water holding in solution super-carbonate of lime.

GOSIER, Pharynx, Throat.

GOSSUM, Bronchocele.

GOSSYP'IUM, Gossypium Herba'ceum; Gossip'ion Xylon, Bombax, Cotton. (F.) Coton. Family, Malvaceæ. Sex. Syst. Monadelphia Polyandria. GOUT, Arthritis, Morbus articula'ris, Gutta, Arthro'sia Podagra, Podalgia, Podagra, Arthritis verus, Arthritis Podagra, Podagra Arthritis, Flux'io arthritis, Feb'ris arthritis. Flecccin, Gastro-arthritis, Misopt'chos, (F.) Goutte. The gout was formerly regarded as a catarrh, and received its name from the (F.) goutte, (L.) gutta, 'a drop;' because it was believed to be produced by a liquid, which distilled, goutte à goutte, 'drop by drop,' on the diseased part. This name, which seems to have been first used about the year 1270, has been admitted into the different languages of Europe.

Gout is an inflammation of the fibrous and ligamentous parts of the joints. It almost always attacks, first, the great toe; whence it passes to the other smaller joints, after having produced, or been attended with, various sympathetic effects, particularly in the digestive organs; after this, it may attack the greater articulations. It is an affection which is extremely fugitive, and variable in its recurrence. It may be acquired or hereditary. In the former case, it rarely appears before the age of thirty-five; in the latter, it is frequently observed earlier. It is often difficult to distinguish it from rheumatism. A combination is, indeed, supposed to exist sometimes; hence called Rheumatic gout. During the paroxysm or fit, a burning, lancinating pain is experienced in the affected joint, attended with tumefaction, tension, and redness. One or more joints may be attacked, either at the same time or in succession; and, in either case, the attack terminates by resolution in a few days. This is the Arthritis acuta, inflammatoria vel regularis, Regular gout, Arthrod'sia podagra regularis, Goutte régulière chaude.

At other times, pains in the joints exist, of more or less acute character; the swelling being without redness. These pains persist, augment, and diminish irregularly, without exhibiting intermission, and, consequently, without having distinct paroxysms. The disease is then called atonic, or asthenic, imperfect or irregular gout, Chronic G., Arthritis atonica vel asthenica, Arthrod'sia Podagra larvata. It is, also, commonly called in France Goutte froide, Goutte blanche. It may appear primarily, or succeed attacks of regular gout.

The gout does not always confine itself to the joints. It may attack the internal organs; when it is called Arthritis aberrans, erratica, Podagra aberrans, Vagant, Wandering, misplaced, or anomalous gout, (F.) Goutte vague.

Retrograde gout, Arthritis retrograda, Podagra retrograda, Arthrod'sia Podagra complicata, Recedent, misplaced gout, (F.) Goutte remontée, G. malplacée, G. rentrée, is when it leaves the joints suddenly and attacks some internal organ, as the stomach, intestines, lungs, brain, &c.

Gout is also called, according to the part it may affect, Podagra, Gonagra, Chiragra, &c. Gout may be acute or chronic, and may give rise to concretions, which are chiefly composed of urate of soda. See Calculus, (Arthritic.) It may, also, give occasion to nodosities, when it is called Arthritis nodosa, (F.) Goutte nouée.

The treatment of gout is of the antiphlogistic kind, and the local disorder should be but little interfered with. The colchicum seems to have great power over the disease. It forms the basis of the Eau médicinale d'Husson; a celebrated French gout remedy. The bowels must be kept regular by rhubarb and magnesia; and a recurrence of the disease be prevented by abstemious habits.

GOUTTIÈRE, (F.) Colliv'ia. A groove in a bone; like that used for carrying off rain. Some of these cavities are intended to facilitate the sliding of tendons, such as the Gouttière

Bicipitale or Bicipital groove. Others, as the Gouttière sagittale or Sagittal groove, lodge blood-vessels and especially veins. Others, again, are merely intended for the support of certain organs; as the Gouttière basilaire or Basillary fossa (q. v.) which supports the medulla oblongata.

GOUTTIÈRE BICIPITALE, Bicipital groove—g. Laerymale, Lachrymal groove—g. Sacré, Sacral groove.

GOUTY RHEUMATISM. See Rheumatism, acute.

GOVERNAIL DU TESTICULE, Gubernaculum testis.

GOWN, RED, Strophulus.

GRAC'ILIS, Rectus interior femoris sive Grac'ilis interior, Sous-pubio-ercti tibial, Sous-pubio-pré-tibial (Ch.) Droit ou grêle interne de la cuisse. This muscle is situate at the inside of the thigh. It is thin and very long; and arises from the descending ramus of the pubis, to be inserted at the inner and inferior part of the tuberosity of the tibia. It bends the leg and causes abduction of the thigh. See Grêle.

GRACILIS, ANTERIOR, Rectus femoris.

GRAIN, Granium; the 60th part of a Troy, and the 72d part of a Poids de Marc drachm.

GRAINE D'ÉCARLATE, Coccus cacti—g. Muse, Hibiscus abelmoschus—de Turquie, Zea mays—g. d'Aspic, see Phalaris Canariensis—g. de Paradis, Amomum grana paradisi—g. de Perroquet, Carthamus tinctorius (seed)

GRASSE, Pinguedo—g. de Mouton, Sevum g. d'Oie, Adeps aserina—g. Oxygénée, Unguentum acidi nitrosi—g. de Porc, Adeps præparata.

GRAMEN ÆGYPTIACUM, G. crucis cyprioidis—g. Caninum, Triticum repens.

GRAMEN CRUCIS CYPRIOÏDIS, Gramen Ægyptiacum, Ægyptian Cock's foot grass. The roots and plants possess the virtues of the Triticum repens and have been recommended in the earlier stages of dropsy. They were, formerly, considered to possess many other properties.

GRAMEN DIOSCORIDIS, Triticum repens—g. Major, Sarsaparilla Germanica—g. Orientalis, Juncus odoratus—g. Repens, Triticum repens—g. Rubrum, Sarsaparilla Germanica.

GRAMIA, CHASSIE, Lippitudo.

GRAMMĒ, γρᾶμμα, an ancient weight, equivalent to the 24th part of an ounce, or to 24 grains, or a scruple, avoirdupois. At the present day, the gramme is equal in weight to a cubed centimeter of water; or to 18 grains, poids de marc—15.444 grains, troy.

GRAMME, Iris, Linc.

GRANA, Hemicrania—g. Molucca, Croton tiglium—g. Moschi, Hibiscus abelmoschus—g. Orientis, see Menispermum cocculus—g. Tilii, Croton tiglium.

GRANADILLA, APPLE-SHAPED, Passiflora maliformis.

GRANATRISTUM, Anthrax.

GRANATUM, Punica granatum.

GRAND DORSAL, Latissimus dorsi.

GRANDEB'ALĒ. The hair, which grows in the arm pits.

GRANDO, Chalaza.

GRANTRISTUM, Anthrax.

GRANULATION, Granulatio, from gra-

num, 'a grain.' Gemma, (F.) Bourgeon, B. charnu. Granulations are the reddish, conical, flesh-like shoots, which form at the surface of suppurating wounds and ulcers. They are the product of inflammatory excitement, and may be produced in indolent ulcers, by exciting the parts by proper stimulants. They form the basis of the cicatrix.

GRANULATION is, likewise, a name, given by the modern French physicians, to an organic lesion, consisting in the formation of small, round, firm, shining, semi-transparent tumours, of the size and shape of millet seed or of a pea; which are met with in the lungs particularly, and in considerable quantity; or often without materially interfering with their functions.

GRANULATIONS CÉRÉBRALES, Glandulæ Pacchioni.

GRAN'ULE, Gran'ulum; diminutive of granum; 'a grain.' A small grain; a small compact particle SEM'INAL GRAN'ULES, Gran'ula Sem'inis. Minute, rounded, granulated bodies, observable in the semen, which are, in all cases, much less numerous than the spermatozoa. See Sperm.

GRAPE. See Vitis vinifera.

GRAPES, DRIED, Uvæ passæ.

GRAPHIOIDES, Styloid.

GRAPHIS'CUS, Graphis'cus Di'oclis. An instrument invented by Diocles for extracting darts. It is described by Celsus.

GRAPHITES, Plumbago, Supercarburetum Ferri, Carburetum Ferri, Ferri Carbondatum, F. Supercarburetum, Carbo mineralis, Carburet of iron, Black lead, Wud, (F) Crayon noir, Plombagine. This substance has been esteemed slightly astringent and desiccative. It has been advised by Weinhold in the cure of herpes.

GRAS DES CADAVRES, Adipocire—de Jumbe, Sura—des Cimetières, Adipocire.

GRAS-FONDURE, (F.) Diarrhœa adiposa, literally malten grease. A species of diarrhœa, referred to by older writers; accompanied with great emaciation, and in which the evacuations contain fat-like matter. According to Sauvages, the Gras-fondure differs from colliquative diarrhœa in not being attended with hectic fever.

GRASS, Asparagus—g. Canary, cultivated, Phalaris Canariensis—g. Couch, Triticum repens—g. Dogs', Triticum repens—g. Egyptian cock's foot, Gramen crucis cyperoides—g. Goat's, Scorzonera—g. Knot, Polygonum aviculare—g. Vipers', Scorzonera.

GRASSEYEMENT, (F.) Sonus blasus, Rotacis'mus, from (F.) gras, 'thick,' 'speaking thick.' According to Sauvages, a vicious pronunciation of the letter r. They who speak thick, like the inhabitants of Newcastle, in England, or of Havre, in France, have difficulty in pronouncing the r, and they frequently substitute for it the letter l; but this does not properly constitute Grasseyement. It consists in this: that, in words in which the letter r is joined to another consonant, a sort of hurring or guttural rolling is heard, nearly like that produced by gargling. See Rotacism.

GRATELLE, Psoriasis.

GRATIA DEI, Gratiolæ officinalis.

GRATIOLA CENTAURIOIDES, G. officinalis.

GRATIOLA OFFICINALIS, Digitalis minima, Gratia dei, Gratiola Centaurioides, Hedge hyssop, Herb of Grace. It is a native of the South of Europe, (F.) herbe au pauvre homme. The plant is inodorous; taste strong, bitter, nauseous. It is possessed of anthelminthic, purgative, emetic, and diuretic properties. Dose, ten grains.

GRATTERON, Galium aparine.

GRATTOIR, Raspatorium.

GRAVATIF, Heavy.

GRAVE, Serious.

GRAVEDO, Catarrh, Coryza—g. Neonatorum, Snuffles.

GRAVEL, Lithia renalis ardensa, Lithiasis nephritica, L. renalis, (F) Gravelle. A disease occasioned by small concretions, similar to sand or gravel, (F.) Gravier, which form in the kidneys, pass along the ureters to the bladder, and are expelled with the urine. These concretions, which are commonly composed of uric acid and an animal matter, are deposited at the bottom of the vessel, immediately after the excretion of the urine; and, by their hardness and resistance under the finger, differ considerably from the ordinary sediment of that liquid. A vegetable diet and alkaline drinks are the best prophylactics. See Calculi, Urinary.

GRAVELLEUX, Calculus.

GRAVELLE, Chalaza, Gravel.

GRAVIDITAS, Pregnancy—g. Interstitialis, Pregnancy, interstitial—g. Molaris, Mole—g. Spuria, Pregnancy, false—g. Tubaria, Salpingocystis—g. in Uteri substantiâ, Pregnancy, interstitial.

GRAVIER, Gravel.

GRAVIMETER, Areometer.

GRAVIS, Heavy.

GRAVITY SPECIFIC, Grav'itas specificâ, (F.) Pesanteur spécifique. The relation between the weight of a body and its bulk; thus, supposing four bodies to be of the same size, but which weigh, one four, another three, another two, and the fourth one; the specific gravity of the first will be four times greater than that of the last. The specific gravities of different bodies are, therefore, as the weights, bulk for bulk. For solids and liquids, water is taken as the unit; atmospheric air for the gases. Thus, water is 1,000; mercury at the common temperature, 13 58. Whence, we conclude mercury is between thirteen and fourteen times heavier than water.

GREASE, BARROW'S, Adeps suilla—g. Goose, Adeps anserina—g. Molten, Gras-fondure.

GREEN SICKNESS, Chlorosis.

GRÈLE (F.), Grac'ilis, long and thin. This epithet is given by the French to various parts, as the APOPHYSE GRELE DU MARTEAU, the slender apophysis or process of the malleus, a long process, situate at the anterior part of the neck of the malleus, which passes out by the fissure of Glaserius. It is also called the Apoph'ysis of Rau, although it was already known to Fabricius ab Acquapendente and to Cæcilius Folius.

GRÈLE, Chalaza—g. Interne de la cuisse, Gracilis.

GREMIL OFFICINALE, Lithospermum officinale.

GRENADE, Influenza.

GRENADIER, Punica granatum.

GRENIERS, Vesiculae seminales.

GRENOUILLE, Rana esculenta.

GRENOUILLETTE, Ranula.

GRESSURA, Petroleum.

GRESSUS, Walking.

GREVEURE, Hernia.

GRIELUM, Apium petroselinum, Smyrniolum asiatrum.

GRINCEMENT DES DENTS, Stridor dentium.

GRINDERS, Molar teeth.

GRIPES, Tormina.

GRIPPE (F), from gripper, 'to gripe,' 'catch hold of,' a vulgar name for several catarrhal diseases, which have reigned epidemically; as the Influenza, (q. v.), which see.

GRIPPE, Pinched.

GROAN. See Suspirium.

GROATS, Germ. Grutze. Grutum. Oatmeal, (Yorkshire) Oats, hulled but unground, (Lancashire.) Hulled oats, half ground. Oats that have the hulls taken off: Grits.

A decoction of these is administered as a diluent and demulcent.

GROMWELL, Lithospermum officinale.

GROOVE, Furrow, Sulcus. (F.) Rainure. Icelandic, grafa. Sax. Ʒapan, to dig. A channel or gutter, in a bone or surgical instrument. See Coulisse.

GROOVED. Same etymon. Sulcatus, Striatus, Canaliculatus, (F.) Cannelé ou Cannelé. Having a small channel or gutter.

GROS, Drachm.

GROSELLIER NOIR, Ribes nigrum—g. Rouge, Ribes rubrum.

GROSSESSE, Pregnancy—g. Abdominale, Pregnancy, abdominal—g. Afatale, Pregnancy, afetal—g. Bigeminale, Pregnancy, bigeminal—g. Complexe, Pregnancy, complex—g. Composite, Pregnancy, compound—g. Fausse ou apparente, Pregnancy, false—g. Fatale, Pregnancy, fetal—g. Gazo-hystérique, Pregnancy, gazo-hysterical—g. Utéro-ovarienne, Pregnancy, utero-ovarian—g. Utéro-tubaire, Pregnancy, utero-tubal.

GROSSULARIA NON SPINOSA, Ribes nigrum.

GROUILLEMENT D'ENTRAILLES, Borborygmus.

GROUNDNUT, Pignut.

GROUNDPIÑE, Teucrium chamæpitys—g. French, Teucrium iva.

GROUNDSEL, Senecio.

GROUSEBERRY, Gaultheria.

GROWTH, from Dutch groeyen, Crescentia, (F) Croissance. The development of the body: particularly in the direction of its height. Also, any adventitious tissue: thus, we speak of a morbid growth or formation.

GRUMUS, Coagulum.

GRUTUM. 'Groats.' Grutum Milium, Milium. A hard, white tubercle of the skin, resembling, in size and appearance, a millet-seed. It is confined to the face. See, also, Groats.

GRYPHIUS PES. The Griffon's foot, (F.) Pied de Griffon. An instrument of which Ambrose Paré speaks; and which was used for extracting moles from the uterus.

GRYP'SIS, from γυφίω, 'I incurvate.' Incurvatio. Crookedness or incurvation of the nails; Un'guium adunca'tio.

GUACO. The name of a plant, described by Humboldt and Bonpland under the name Milkania Guaco, which grows in the valleys of Madalena, Rio-Cauca, &c. of South America. The negroes use the juice against the bites of poisonous reptiles;—both in the way of prevention and cure. It has been, of late, brought forward as a remedy in cholera.

GUAIACINÉ. See Guaiaic.

GUAIACUM, G. officinale; G. Americana-num, Lignum vitæ, L. sanctum, L. benedictum, Palus sanctus, Lignum Indicum, Hagioz'ylum, (F.) Guyac, Guaic; Gomme Guaic. The resin and wood are both used in medicine. Their odour is slightly fragrant; taste warm and bitter, of the resin more so than of the wood. The resin is concrete, brittle; colour, externally, greenish; internally, grayish. Water dissolves about one-tenth; alcohol 95 parts. It is soluble, also, in liquor potassæ 15 parts, liquor ammonia 38 parts. The powder is whitish, but changes to green in the air. The base of the guaiacum is a peculiar resin, called Guaiaicine.

The guaiacum is stimulant and diaphoretic; and, in large doses, purgative. It is administered in chronic rheumatism, gout, cutaneous diseases, and the sequelæ of syphilis. Dose, of resin, gr. v to xx:—to purge, gr. xx to xl.

GUARD (for a bed), Allée.

GUARERBA ORBA, Moinordica elaterium.

GUAVA APPLE, Psidium pomiferum.

GUERNAC'ULUM TESTIS, Ligamentum suspensorium Testis, (F.) Gouvernail du testicule. A triangular, fibro-cellular cord; which, in the fœtus, arises from the ramus of the ischium and the skin of the scrotum, and proceeds to the posterior part of the testicle, before this organ issues from the abdomen. It is a continuation of the fascia superficialis, and, by contracting to occasion the descent of the testicle, it lengthens the fibres of the lesser oblique muscle; so as to produce the cremaster, and is itself expanded to constitute the dartos.

GUÈPE, Wasp.

GUÉRISON, Cure.

GUÉRISABLE, Curable.

GUI, Viscum album.

GUILANDINA MORINGA. A plant, which affords the Ben nut, and the Lignum nephriticum. It is also called Moringa Oleifera, M. Zeylanica. Ben, Glans unguenta'ria, Ben Nux, Balanus Myrc'psica, the Oily Acorn or Ben Nut is a West India nut which furnishes an oil, Oleum Balan'num, that does not become rancid by age, and is hence used by perfumers. It is purgative.

The wood of the Guilandina is called Lignum Nephriticum, and has been used, in decoction, in affections of the urinary organs.

GUIMAUVE, Althæa—g. Vcloutée, Hibiscus abelmoschus.

GULA, Cesophagus. Pharynx.

GULÉ PRINCIPUM, Pharynx.

GULLET, Cesophagus.

GUM ANIME, Anime—g. Arabic, Acaciæ gummi—g. Dragon, Tragacantha—g. Elastic, Caoutchouc—g. Hemlock, see Pinus Canadensis—g. Indigenous, Gummi nostras—g. Juniper, Sandarac.

GUM-LANCELET, Dentiscalpium, Odontoglyphon, (F.) Déchaussoir. An instrument for separating the gum from the cervix of the tooth, prior to extraction. It is formed much like a fleam.

The operation itself is called Lancing the gums, Den'tium scalptura (F.) Déchaussement.

GUM ORENBURG, See Pinus larix—g. Red, Strophulus—g. Resin, Gummi resina—g. Sandarach, Sandarac—g. Seneca, Acaciæ gummi—g. Senega, Acaciæ gummi—g. Sweet, Liquidambar styraciflua—g. Tragacanth, Tragacanth—g. White, Strophulus—g. Yellow, Icterus infantum.

GUMBOIL, Parulis.

GUMMA. An elastic tumour, formed in the periosteum; occupying particularly the cranium and sternum, and produced by the syphilitic virus, when it has been long in the constitution. It is so called, because, when opened, it contains a matter like gum.

GUMMI, Gommi, زوميت, (F.) Gomme. An immediate principle of vegetables. It is a solid, uncrystallizable, inodorous substance, of a mawkish taste, unchangeable in the air, insoluble in alcohol, but soluble in water, with which it forms a mucilage. It is obtained from various species of the  Mimosa and  Prunus; and consequently there are many varieties of gum. They are used in medicine as demulcents, emollients, and relaxants, particularly in catarrh, intestinal irritations. &c.; and in Pharmacy, they are employed in the formation of emulsions, pills, &c.

GUMMI ACACIÆ ARABICÆ, Acaciæ gummi—g. Acanthinum, Acaciæ gummi—g. Adstringens Fothergilli, Kino—g. Ammoniacum, Ammoniac—g. Anime, Anime—g. Arabicum, Acaciæ gummi—g. Astragali Tragacanthæ, Tragacantha—g. Bogia, Cambogia—g. Brelisis, Caranna—g. Gamandra, Cambogia—g. Gambiense, Kino—g. de Goa, Cambogia—g. Gutta, Cambogia—g. Hederæ, see Hedera helix—g. de Jemu, Cambogia—g. Juniperi, Sandarac—g. Laccæ, Lacea—g. Ladanuni, see Cistus creticus—g. Lamac, Acaciæ gummi—g. Leucum, Acaciæ gummi.

GUMMI-NOSTRAS, (F.) Gomme du Pays; Indig'neous Gum. These generic names are given to several species of gum, which flow spontaneously from certain European fruit trees,—such as the almond, cherry, peach, apricot, &c. The indigenous gums have nearly the same properties as gum arabic, but they are inferior to it.

GUMMI-PANACIS, see Pastinaca opoponax—g. ad Podagram, Cambogia.

GUMMI-RESINA, Gum-Resin. A milky juice, obtained by making incisions into the branches, stalks, and roots of certain vegetables. Gumresins are compounds of resin, gum, essential oil, and different other vegetable matters. They are solid, opaque, brittle, of a strong odour, acid taste, variable colour, and are heavier than water. Water dissolves a part of them, and alcohol another: hence proof spirit is the proper menstruum.

The generality of the gum-resins are powerful stimulants to the whole or to parts of the Economy.

The chief are asafetida, gum ammoniac, cuphorbium, galbanum, camboge, myrrh, olibanum, opoponax, scammony, aloes, &c.

GUMMI-RUBRUM ADSTRINGENS GAMBIENSE, Kino—g. Serapionis, Acaciæ gummi—g. Thebaicum, Acaciæ gummi—g. Tragacantha, Tragacantha.

GUMS, Gingivæ.

GURGITELLO, MINERAL WATERS OF. A thermal spring in the Isle of Ischia. Temp. at its source, 176° Fah. It contains carbonic acid, carbonates of lime, magnesia, iron and soda, sulphates of lime and soda, muriate of soda and silica.

GURGLING. 'Gushing with noise,' as water from a bottle. (F.) Gargouillement. The rhonchus or râle, heard on auscultation when there is a cavity in the lungs containing pus. It is the 'cavernous rattling,' Râle caverneux. If the cavern be large, this râle will nearly resemble the gurgling of a bottle (glouglou d'une bouteille;) if on the contrary, the cavern be small, it will not differ from the râle muqueux, (q. v.)

GURGULIO, Penis, Uvula.

GUSTATION, Degustation, Taste.

GUSTUS, Taste.

GUT, Intestine—g. Blind, Cæcum.

GUTS, SLIPPERINESS OF THE, Lientery.

GUTTA, Apoplexy, Cambogia, Gout—g. Gamandra, Cambogia—g. Gamba, Cambogia—g. Opaca, Cataract.

GUTTA. A Drop, Stalagma, Alun'sel, Stilla, (F.) Goutte. A quantity of liquid, generally valued, in Pharmacy, at the weight of a grain. It is clear, however, that the weight must vary according to the nature of the liquid:—a drop of ether, e. g., cannot weigh as much as one of sulphuric acid. The form of the mouth of the phial likewise alters the size of the drop. These and other circumstances have induced the London College to institute the minim, which is the sixtieth part of a fluid drachm. See Minimum.

GUTTA ROSACEA SYPHILITICA, Crown of Venus.

GUTTA ROSEA, Gutta Rosa'cca, Ionthus corymbifer, Crusta serpiginosa, C. pruriginosa. Acnè rosa'cca, Bacchia, Batiga, Carbon'cled Face, Rosy Drop, Welsk. (F.) Couperose, Goutte Rose, Bourgeons. An eruption of small, suppurating tubercles, with shining redness, and an irregular granular appearance of the skin of the part of the face which is affected. The redness commonly appears first at the end of the nose, and then spreads on both sides. It is often produced by hard drinking. Its cure must be attempted by regular regimen, and cooling means internally; weak spirituous or saturnine lotions externally. The affection is usually very obstinate.

GUTTA SERENA, Amaurosis.

GUTTÆ ABBATIS ROUSSEAU, Laudanum abbatiss Rousseau—g. Ammoniæ, see Ammoniac gum—g. Acidæ tonicæ, Elixir acidum Halleri—g. Nervinæ, Alcohol sulfurico-æthereus ferri.

GUTTÆ NIGRÆ. Common Black Drop. (Opii  $\frac{3}{4}$  viij. accti distillat lb ij. Infuse.) It is milder than the tincture of opium.—Gray.

The celebrated Black Drop, Lancaster or Quaker's Black Drop, is made as follows:—take half a pound of opium, sliced; three pints of good verjuice (juice of the wild crab) and one and a half ounce of nutmegs, and half an ounce of saffron. Boil to a proper thickness, and add a quarter of a pound of sugar, and two spoonfuls of yeast. Set the whole in a warm place, near the fire, for six or eight weeks; then place it in the open air until it becomes a syrup. Lastly, decant, filter, and bottle it up, adding a little sugar to each bottle. One drop is equal to three of laudanum: and it is nearly devoid of all the unpleasant exciting effects of the latter.

GUTTUR. The throat, (q. v.); the larynx; the trachea.

GUTTUR TUMIDUM, Bronchocele.

GUTTURAL, Gutturialis, from guttur, 'the throat.' Relating or belonging to the throat.

The Superior Thyroideal Artery is sometimes called Guttural Artery.

A Guttural Cough is one occasioned by irritation of the larynx or trachea.

A Guttural Sound is one pronounced, as it were, in the throat.

GUTTURNA,  $\Delta$  rytenoid cartilages.

GYMNASION, Exercise.

GYMNASIUM, from γυμνος, 'naked.' Palæstra. An establishment, amongst the ancients, intended for bodily exercises, as wrestling, running, &c.

GYMNAST, Gymnastes, Gymnasta; same etymon. The manager of a gymnasium. One, whose profession it is to prevent or cure diseases by gymnastics.

GYMNAS'TICS, Gymnastica, Somacetics: same etymon. That part of Hygienic Medicine, which treats of bodily exercises. It is called Medical Gymnastics. The ancients had, also, Athletic Gymnastics, and Military Gymnastics. Herodius of Selivra first proposed gymnastics for the cure of disease.

GYMNOSIS, Denudation.

GYNÆCEUM, Antimonium, Vulva.

GYNÆCEIA, Gynæci'a, from γυνή, 'a woman.' The catamenia;—also, the lochia.—Hippocr. Galen, Pœsius.

GYNÆCIA, Gynecia, Menses.

GYNÆCOLO'GIA, from γυνή, 'a woman,' and λογος, 'a description.' The doctrine of the nature, diseases, &c. of women.

GYNÆCOMA'NIA, from γυνή, 'woman,' μανια, 'mania,' 'rage.' That species of insanity, which arises from love for women. Some have used the word synonymously with nymphomania, (q. v.)

GYNÆCOMAS'TUS, from γυνή, 'woman,' and μαστός, 'a breast.' A man, whose breasts are as large as those of a woman.—Galen, Ingrassias.

A considerable enlargement of the breasts of a female was, formerly, called Gynæcomast-ton.

GYNÆCOMYS'TAX, from γυνή, 'woman,' and μυσταξ, 'the beard.' The hair on the pubes of women.—Rolfink.

GYNANDRUS, Gynanthropus.

GYNANTHRO'PUS, Gynandrus. A hermaphrodite, who belongs more to the male than to the female sex.

GYNATRE'SIA, from γυνή, 'a woman,' and αθητος, 'imperfurate.' Closure or imperforation of the external parts of generation of the female.

GYNE, Female.

GYNIDA, Hermaphrodite.

GYRI CEREBRI, Anfractuosities (cerebral.)

GYROPHLE. See Eugenia caryophyllata.

GYRUS, Anfractuosity, Convolution.

H.

HAB-EL-KALIMBAT, Pistacia terebinthus.

HABE'NA. A Bridle, Tel'amon. A bandage for uniting the lips of wounds; which, in many instances, replaced the suture.—Galen.

HABIL'LA DE CARTHAGE'NA, Bejuco, Carthagèna Bean. (F.) Fève de Carthagène. A kind of bean of South America, famed as an effectual antidote for the poison of all serpents, if a small quantity be eaten immediately.

HABIT, Habitudo, Assuetudo, Mos, Usus, Consuetudo, Ethos, 'εθις. Hæsis, Ethmos'ynè. (F.) Habitude, Accountumance. Habit is the aptitude for repeating certain acts:—or, a facility, which results from the frequent repetition of the same acts. It is, according to vulgar expression, 'a second nature.' Habit may predispose to certain diseases, or it may protect us against them. It ought not to be lost sight of, in attending to the progress of disease, or its treatment.

HABIT OF BODY, Constitutio, Hab'itus, Hab'itus Corporis, Catas'tasis, Hæsis, 'εθις. (F.) Habitude extérieure, Habitude du corps. The aggregate of the physical qualities of the human body.

HABITUDE, Habit—h. du Corps, Habit of body—h. Extérieure, Habit of body.

HABITUDO, Habit.

HABITUS, Habit of body—h. Corporis, Habit of body.

HÆMA, 'αιμα, 'αιματος, 'blood.' (q. v.) Hence:

HÆMACHROINE, Hæmateine.

HÆMADON'OSOS, from 'αιμα, 'blood,' and νοσος, 'a disease,' Hematangion'osis. Disease of the blood-vessels.

HÆMADOSTOSIS, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and σπίσις, 'a bony tumour.' Ossification of the blood-vessels.

HÆMAGOGUM, Pæonia.

HÆMAGO'GUS, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and αγο, 'I drive off.' A medicine, which promotes the menstrual and hemorrhoidal discharges.

HÆMALOPIA, Hæmalops, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and οψ, 'the eye.' An effusion of blood into the eye.—Galen. A blood-shot eye.

HÆMALOPS, Hæmophthalmia.

HÆMAPHO'BUS, Hæmophobus, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and φοβος, 'dread.' One, who has a dread of blood:—who cannot look at it without fainting.

HÆMĀPORIA, Hæmatoporia, Oligæmia. from αἷμα 'blood,' and πορος, 'poor.' Paucity of blood. See Anæmia.

HÆMASTATICA, Hæmatostatica.

HÆMASTATICE, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and ιστημι, 'I remain,' 'reside.' A science, which treats of the strength of the blood-vessels. Hymastatics.

HÆMATANGIONOSIS, Hæmadonosos.

HÆMATEM'ESIS, from αἷμα 'blood,' and εμεο, 'I vomit.' Vomitus cruentus: Hæmorrhægia hæmatem'csis, Vomitus sanguinis, Gastrorrhægia, Esophagorrhægia, Vomiting of Blood. (F.) Vomissement de sang. Hæmatemesis is generally preceded by a feeling of oppression; weight; and dull or pungent pain in the epigastric, and in the hypochondriac regions; by anxiety, and, occasionally, by syncope. Blood is then passed by vomiting, and sometimes, also, by stool: the blood being generally of a grumous aspect.

Hæmatemesis may be active or passive; acute or chronic. The blood effused proceeds, almost always, from a sanguineous exhalation at the surface of the mucous membrane of the stomach. It is often observed in females, whose menstrual secretion is irregularly performed. It is not of much danger, except when connected with diseases of some of the solid viscera of the abdomen.

On dissection of those who have died from protracted hæmatemesis,—for the acute kind is comparatively devoid of danger,—the mucous membrane of the stomach is found red and inflamed, or black, and the vessels considerably dilated. Complete abstinence from food; rest; the horizontal posture; bleeding, if the hemorrhage be active; cold, acidulous drinks, &c., constitute the usual treatment.

HÆMATERA, Hepatirrhæa.

HÆMATHORAX, Hæmatothorax.

HÆMATICA, from αἷμα, 'blood.' Diseases of the sanguineous function:—the third class in the Nosology of Good.

HÆMATIDROSIS, Sudor cruentus.

HÆMATINE, Hematine, Hematosine, Zöohematine, Hemachroïne, Cruorine, Rubrine, Globuline, from αἷμα, 'blood.' The colouring principle of the blood. It resides in distinct particles or globules of the blood, and, in the opinion of the best observers, in the envelope of the globules.

HÆMATITES, from αἷμα, 'blood,' so called from its colour or from its fancied powers of stopping blood. Lapis Hematites. A beautiful ore of iron, called, also, Bloodstone, Ochrea rubra, Oxydum ferricum crystallizatum nativum, Ferrum Hæmatites. When finely levigated, and freed from the grosser parts, by frequent washings with water, it has been long recommended in hemorrhage, fluxes, uterine obstructions, &c., in doses of from one scruple to three or four.

HÆMATOCATHARTICA, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and καθαρσις, 'purification or purgation.' Remedies for purifying the blood.

HÆMATOCE'LE, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and κύλη, 'tumour.' A tumour formed by blood. By some, this term has been applied to a tumour formed by blood effused into the cellular texture of the serotum. Others have used it for tumours arising from the effusion of blood into the tunica vaginalis:—hæmatocele, according to them, differing from hydrocele only in the character of the effusion.—Heister. Others, again, have applied it to effusions of blood into the interior of the tunica albuginea itself.—Richter. The first is the usual acceptance. It is, most commonly, caused by wounds or contusions; and requires the use of antiphlogistics, discutients, &c. Sometimes it is necessary to evacuate the effused blood.

HÆMATOCHE'ZIA, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and χεῖν, 'I go to stool.' Catarrhexis vera, Enterorrhægia simplex, Diarrhæa cruenta. Discharge of blood by stool.

HÆMATOCHYSIS, Hæmorrhagia.

HÆMATO'DES or HÆMATOY'DES, Sanguineus from αἷμα, 'blood,' and εἶδος, 'appearance.' That which contains blood, or has the colour of blood.

FUNGUS HÆMATODES, Fungus canerosus hæmatodes, Melan fungus carcinomaes, Tumor fungosus sanguineus, Spongoid inflammation, Pulpy or Medullary Sarcoma, Carcinoma hæmatodes, Carcinoma spongiosum, Bleeding Fungus, Soft Cancer, (F.) Carcinome sanglante Hématoncie fungoïde. An extremely alarming, carcinomatous affection, which was first described, with accuracy, by Mr. John Burns of Glasgow.

It consists in the development of cancerous tumours, in which the inflammation is accompanied with violent heat and pain, and with fungous and bleeding excrescences.

Even when the diseased part is extirpated, at a very early period,—and this is the only wise plan that can be adopted,—recovery rarely follows: other organs being generally implicated at the same time. Fungus hæmatodes was the term first applied to the disease by Mr. Hey of Leeds. Mr. J. Burns called it Spongoid inflammation, from the spongy, elastic feel, which peculiarly characterizes it, and continues even after ulceration has taken place. The disease has, most frequently, been met with in the eyeball, the upper and lower extremities, testicle and mamma: but it occurs in the uterus, ovary, liver, spleen, brain, lungs, thyroid gland, and in the hip and shoulder-joints.

Some French surgeons designate, by this name, those tumours which were formerly termed anormales, cavernæuses, variqueuses, called Érectiles by Dupuytren, Hématoncies by Alibert, Telangiectasia by Gräfe.

HÆMATOGRA'PHIA, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and γρᾶφι, 'a description.' A description of the blood.

HÆMATOLOG'IA, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and λόγος, 'a discourse.' That part of medicine which treats of the blood.

HÆMATOMA, Thrombus (q. v.) a bloody tumour, especially of the scalp of the new-born.

HÆMATOMA OCULI, Hæmophthalmia.

HÆMATOMPHALOC'E/LE, Hæmatomphalam, from αἷμα, 'blood,' ομφαλός, 'the navel,' and κίλη, 'a tumour.' Umbilical hernia, the sac of which encloses a bloody serum; or which has, at its surface, a number of varicose veins: constituting the Varicophalus.

HÆMATOMPHALUM, Hæmatomphalocle.

HÆMATON'CUS. (F.) Hæmatonic, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and ογκος, 'a tumour.' Alibert has given this name to the Nævi mater'ni or varicose tumours. He admits three varieties:—the H. fungoides, H. framboiséc, and H. tubéreuse.

HÆMATOPEDESIS. See Diapedesis.

HÆMATOPHLEBES'TASIS. Sudden suppression of a hemorrhage;—from στασις αἱματός φλεβών, 'suppression of the blood of the veins.'—Galen.

HÆMATOPHO'BIA, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and φόβος, 'dread.' Dread or horror at the sight of blood, producing syncope, &c.

HÆMATOPOIESIS, Hæmatosis.

HÆMATOPORIA, Hæmaporia.

HÆMATOPS, (F.) Hæmatopisie. M. Capuron, of Paris, has applied the term Hæmatopisie utérine, from analogy with Hydropisie utérine, to a collection of blood, which sometimes takes place in the uterus, when, owing to faulty conformation, the exit of the menstrual flux is prevented.

HÆMATOSINE, Hæmatine.

HÆMATOSIS, Examatosis, Hæmatopoesis, Decarboxiz'ation, Amospheriz'ation, Sanguificatio, from αἷμα, 'blood.' The transformation of the venous blood and chyle into arterial blood by respiration. Called, also, Aëration, Arterializ'ation of the blood. Formation of blood in general.

HÆMATOSTAT'ICA, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and στασις, 'statics.' Ischæmia, Hæmastatica, Hæmostat'ics. The doctrine of the motor of the blood in living bodies. Also, remedies for stopping blood.

HÆMATOS'TEON, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and στήν, 'a bone.' Effusion of blood into the bones or joints.

HÆMATOTHIO'RAX, Hæmathorax, Hæmoptysis interua, Pleurorcha'a sanguinea, Pneumorrh'gia interna, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and θώραξ, 'the chest.' Extravasation of blood into the chest.

HÆMATOXYLON CAMPECHIA'NUM. Acacia Zeylon'ica, Logwood. The part of the tree, used in medicine, is the wood, Hæmatoxyli Lignum, Lignum Campeche'se, L. Campechi'num, L. Cumpes'd'nam, L. Indicum, L. Suppan, L. Brasili'um rubrum, L. cæruleum, (F.) Bois de Campêche. Family, Leguminosæ. Sex. Syst. Decandria Monogynia. Logwood is almost inodorous; of a sweetish, subastringent taste; and deep red colour. Its virtues are extracted both by water and alcohol. It is astringent and tonic, and is used in the protracted stage of diarrhæa and dysentery.

HÆMATURESIS, Hæmaturia.

HÆMATU'RIA, Hæmatur'esis, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and οὐρῶν, 'I make urine.' Voiding of blood by urine. Hæmorrh'gia hæmat'ria, Mictio cruen'ta, Hæmoar'esis, M. Sanguin'ea, Mictus cruen'tas, (F.) Pissment de sang. Hemorrhage from the mucous membrane of the urinary passages. Like other hemorrhages, it may be active or passive. It may proceed from the kidneys, bladder, or urethra. The essential symptoms are:—blood evacuated by the urethra; preceded by pain in the region of the bladder or kidneys, and accompanied by faintness. Whencesoever it proceeds, hæmaturia always takes place by exhalation. Rupture of vessels is by no means common in the mucous membranes. Active hæmaturia requires general or local blood-letting; diluent and cooling drinks; absolute rest, and the horizontal posture. The chronic kind is more troublesome. It requires acidulated or aluminous drinks; chalybeates and tonics in general. When hæmaturia is excessive, cold injections may be thrown into the rectum or into the vagina of women, and topical applications be made to the perinæum.

HÆMEXIS, Blood-letting.

HÆMIDROSIS. See Diapedesis.

HÆMITIS, from αἷμα, 'blood.' Inflammation of the blood. The alteration of the blood, which occurs in inflammatory diseases.—Piorry.

HÆMO-ARTHRITIS, Rheumatism, (acute.)

HÆMOCERCH'NOS. This term has received two acceptations, owing to the different senses in which κερχνος is employed; signifying, sometimes, hissing; at others, dry. Consequently, the Hellenists have translated the compound word, at times, by spitting of blood, with hissing in the throat; at others, by evacuation of dry matters.

HÆMO'DIA, Hæbeto'do Dentiam, from αἰμωδω, 'I stupefy.' Pain of the teeth,—and more especially Agacement, (q. v.) or the setting on edge of those bodies by acid or acerb substances. It is also called Odon'tia Stapo'ris, Odon't'gia hæmo'dia, Dolor dentium à strido're, Toothache, Capitel'is.

HÆMOPHTHAL'MIA, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and οφθαλμος, 'eye.' Effusion of blood in the eye. When the extravasation is external, it is called H. exte'rna, Hyposphag'ma and Hæmatops exte'rus; when internal, Hæmophthal'mia interna; Hydrophthal'mus cruen'tus, Hypochysis hæmato'des, Hæmato'ma Oculi, and Hæmatops interous.

HÆMOP'TOE, Hæmoptysis.

HÆMOP'TOSIS, Hæmoptysis.

HÆMOP'TYSIS, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and πτυω, 'I spit.' Spitting of blood.—Hæmorrh'gia Hæmopt'ysis, Emp'toë, Emp'tica pas'sio, Hæmopt'ysmus, Hæmopt'osis, Spatum sang'uinis, Cruen'ta expul'tio, Hæmorrh'gia pulmonis, Pas'sio hæmopt'ica, Reçç'tio sang'uinis è pulmonibus, Expectora'tio sang'uinis, Hæmorrh'gia Bron'chica, Pneumorrh'gia Emp'tysis, Hæmopt'oe, Spatum cruen'tam, (F.) Crachement de sang. Hemorrhage from the mucous membrane of the lungs; characterized by the expectoration of more or less florid and frothy blood. It is generally preceded by cough; dyspnœa; sense of heat in the chest, &c.

It is important to discriminate between hæ moptysis, produced by some accidental cause acting irregularly or periodically on the lungs; and that which is, as it were, constitutional, and dependent on some organic affection of the lungs, or some faulty conformation of the chest. These two varieties differ as much in their prognosis and method of treatment, as in their causes. Constitutional hæmoptysis is a serious disease, almost always announcing phthisis pulmonalis. The accidental variety is chiefly dangerous by frequent recurrence, or too great loss of blood.

The general causes of hæmoptysis are the same as those of other kinds of hemorrhage. It has, besides, particular causes; such as too great exercise of the lungs;—loud speaking, playing on wind instruments, breathing acrid vapours, &c. It usually occurs between puberty and the age of 35.

A sudden and terrific kind of Hæmoptysis is sometimes met with; consisting in a great afflux of blood into the lungs. This has been called Pulmonary Apoplexy, (F.) Apoplex pulmonaire.

Physical signs. Percussion may not always aid us, but generally a circumscribed dullness will be perceived. The inspiratory murmur, on auscultation, is feeble or absent, locally; and is replaced by bronchial respiration and bronchophony. A fine liquid crepitus is detected around the affected part; and in the larger tubes, near the spine, a liquid bubbling rhonchus is usually heard.

The value of these signs is determined by the nature of the expectoration.

The treatment of hæmoptysis must be like that of internal hemorrhage in general.

HÆMOPTYISIS INTERNA, Hæmatothorax—h. Phthisis, Phthisis pulmonalis.

HÆMOPTYSMUS, Hæmoptysis.

HÆMORRHAGIA from αἷμα, 'blood,' and εἰσέρχεται, 'I break forth.' Sanguinis profusivum copiosum, Sanguifluxus, Hæmatoclysis, Hæmorrhæa, Hæmorrhæa, Profusio Sanguinis, Hæmorrhage, Loss of blood, (F.) Hæmorrhagie ou Hémorrhagie, Perte de sang. Any discharge of blood from vessels destined to contain it; with or without rupture of their coats. Hemorrhages may be spontaneous or traumatic; the first belong to the domain of medicine, the latter to that of surgery. They may, also, be internal or external; general—as in scurvy, or local.

The hemorrhages by exhalation; those which chiefly interest the physician may be classed, with Pinel, as follows:

- |  |   |                     |
|--|---|---------------------|
| 1. Hemorrhage of the Mucous Membranes. | { | Epistaxis.          |
|  |   | Hæmoptysis.         |
|  |   | Hæmatemesis.        |
|  |   | Hæmorrhoids.        |
|  |   | Hæmaturia.          |
| 2. Hemorrhage of the Tissues.          | { | Uterine Hemorrhage. |
|  |   | Cutaneous.          |
|  |   | Cellular.           |
|  |   | Serous.             |
|  |   | Synovial.           |

Hemorrhages have generally been distinguished into active and passive: in other words, into those dependent upon augmentation of the organic actions, and those dependent upon debility. According to Broussais, no spontaneous hemorrhage is passive; all are active,—that is, produced by increased action and excess of irritation of the blood-vessels. They may occur with debility, but not from debility. He calls those only passive hemorrhages, which are owing to an external lesion of the vessels. Hemorrhages have been, by some, divided into constitutional, or those depending on original conformation:—accidental, or those produced by some adventitious cause; supplementary, or those which succeed others; symptomatic, critical, &c.

ACTIVE HEMORRHAGE, Hæmorrhægia activa, H. arteriosa, Cæca hæmorrhægicum, Angeliorrhagia, occurs chiefly in the young and plethoric. Good living; the use of fermented liquors; excessive exercise, or too sedentary a life, may perhaps be ranked as predisposing causes. They are commonly preceded by heaviness and pulsation in the part,—owing to the afflux of blood and consequent hyperæmia,—and by coldness of the extremities. The blood, evacuated, is generally of a florid red. In such active hemorrhages, the great indications of treatment will be, to diminish plethora, where it exists, and to lessen the heart's action. Bleeding, purgatives, and cold, will be the chief agents.

PASSIVE HEMORRHAGE, Hæmorrhægia passiva, H. Venosa, Profusio, P. hæmorrhægica, occurs in those of a weak constitution; or who have been debilitated by protracted disease, poor diet, long watching, excessive evacuations, &c.

The direct causes may be:—previous active hemorrhage; scorbutus, or any thing capable of inducing atony or asthenic hyperæmia of the small vessels. These hemorrhages are not preceded by excitement or by any signs of local determination. They are usually accompanied by paleness of the countenance; feeble pulse; fainting, &c. The indications of treatment will be:—to restore the action of the small vessels and the general tone of the system; hence the utility of styptics and cold externally; and of tonics and astringents, creasote, mineral acids, &c., internally.

Hemorrhage also occurs from mechanical hyperæmia, as when hæmoptysis is produced by tubercles in the lungs; hæmatemesis by disease of some of the solid viscera of the abdomen, &c.

In traumatic hemorrhages, or those which are the consequence of wounds of arterial or venous trunks, the blood is of a florid red colour, and issues by jets and impulses, if it proceed from an artery; whilst it is of a deeper red, issues slowly and by a continuous jet, if from a vein. If the capillary vessels are alone divided, the blood is merely effused at the surface of the wound.

Of the means used for arresting these traumatic hemorrhages, some act mechanically, as absorbents, ligature, and compression; others chymically, as fire, caustics, creasote, astringents, &c.

HÆMORRHAGIA ACTIVA NARIUM, Epistaxis—h. Bronchica, Hæmoptysis—h. Cerebri, Apoplexy—h. per Diapedesin, Diapedesis—h. Hæmatemesis, Hæmatemesis—h. Hæmaturia, Hæmaturia—h. Hæmoptysis, Hæmoptysis—h. HÆMORRHINIA, Epistaxis.

HÆMORRHŒYA, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and ῥέω, 'I flow.' Hæmorrhag'ia, (q. v.) Loss of blood. Some writers have proposed to restrict this name to passive hæmorrhages.

HÆMORRHŒA PETECHIALIS, Purpura hæmorrhagica—h. Uterina, Metrorrhagia.

HÆMORRHŒDAL or HEMORRHŒDAL, Hæmorrhœidalis, Hæmorrhœideus. Relating to hæmorrhoids; as hæmorrhœidal flux, hæmorrhœidal tumours, &c.

HEMORRHŒDAL VESSELS, Vasa scdalia, are those vessels which are distributed to the rectum—the seat of hæmorrhoids.

The HEMORRHŒDAL ARTERIES have been distinguished into superior, middle, and inferior. 1. The first is the termination of the inferior mesenteric artery, which assumes the name superior hæmorrhœidal, when it reaches the upper and posterior part of the rectum. 2. The middle hæmorrhœidal is furnished by the hypogastric or internal pudic. It ramifies on the inferior and anterior part of the rectum. 3. The inferior hæmorrhœidal arteries are branches of the internal pudic, furnished to the inferior part of the rectum and to the muscles of the anus.

The HEMORRHŒDAL VEINS follow the same distribution, and generally empty themselves into the lesser mesenteric. Some of them assist in the formation of the hypogastric vein.

HEMORRHŒDAL NERVES. These emanate from the sciatic and hypogastric plexuses; and cover the rectum with their numerous filaments.

HÆMOR'RHOÏS, Æmor'rhoïs, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and ῥέω, 'I flow.' Æmor'rhoïs, Proctica Maris'ca, Maris'ca, Proctal'gia Hæmorrhœidalis, Piles. The essential symptoms of this affection are:—Livid and painful tubercles or excrescences, (Hæmorrhœidal Tumours), usually attended with a discharge of mucus or blood, (Hæmorrhœidal flux.) The most common causes of piles are: a sedentary life, accumulation of fæces in the rectum; violent efforts at stool; pregnancy, &c. The precursory symptoms are:—Pains in the loins; stinging of the lower limbs; and uneasiness in the abdomen and rectum. To these follow one or more round, smooth, renitent, painful, pulsating, and erectile tumours, around the margin of the anus, or within the anus; some pouring out blood occasionally. After having remained, for some time, tense, and painful, they gradually shrink and disappear. The chief symptoms, occasioned by hæmorrhœidal tumours, when much inflamed, are: constant pain, liable, however, to exacerbations, obliging the patient to preserve the horizontal posture, and to become augmented by the least pressure, or by the passage of the fæces.

Hæmorrhoids have generally been distinguished into—H. Fluents, Proctica Maris'ca cruenta, Bleeding or Open Piles; and into H. nonfluents, Proctica Maris'ca cæca, Hæmorrhoides cæca, Shut or blind piles. They have, also, been divided into internal or occult, and external, according to their situation; and into accidental or constitutional.

HEMORRHŒDAL TUMOURS are extremely troublesome, by their disposition to frequent recurrence; and they are apt to induce fistula. Otherwise, they are devoid of danger.

When anatomically examined, they are found not to consist in a varicose dilatation of the veins of the rectum; but to be formed of a very close, spongy, texture; similar to that which surrounds the orifice of the vagina; and to be erectile, like it. They are surrounded by a delicate membrane, and have no internal cavity.

The treatment, in mild cases of hæmorrhœidal tumours, is simple. Rest; the horizontal posture; the use of mild laxatives, as sulphur, castor oil, and emollient glysters, will be sufficient.

If they are much inflamed, leeches may be applied; and warm cataplasms or cold lotions, according to circumstances, be prescribed, with abstinence; and cooling drinks. Afterwards, an ointment, composed of powdered galls and opium, will afford relief. It is in the relaxed kind, that such ointment, and the internal use of Ward's Paste, can alone be expected to afford much benefit.

If, after repeated attacks, the tumours remain hard and painful, and threaten fistula, they may be removed.

These remarks apply to hæmorrhœidal tumours.

By HEMORRHŒDAL FLUX, Fluxus hæmorrhœidalis, Proctorrha'gia, is meant the hæmorrhage, which takes place from the rectum, owing to hæmorrhoids. It is a common affection. The quantity of blood discharged is various; at times, it is very trifling; at others, sufficient to induce great debility, and even death. It is announced and accompanied by the same symptoms, as precede and attend hæmorrhœidal tumours. Like other hæmorrhages, it may be active or passive; accidental or constitutional. The prognosis is rarely unfavourable. The affection may, almost always, be relieved by properly adapted means. These resemble such as are necessary in hæmorrhages in general. Perfect quietude,—mental and corporeal,—light diet, cooling drinks; bleeding, if the symptoms indicate it; astringents, (if the disease be protracted and passive,) such as the Tinctura Ferri Murialis; aspersions of cold water on the anus; astringent injections; plugging and compression. Such will be the principal remedial agents.

When the hæmorrhage has become habitual or is vicarious, some caution may be required in checking it; and, if inconvenience arise from a sudden suppression, its return may be solicited by the semicupium, sitting over warm water; aloetic purgatives, glysters, irritating suppositories, &c.; or leeches may be applied to the anus.

Some authors have described a species of LEUCORRHŒA ANA'LIS; or whitish discharge from the anus, which often attends ordinary hæmorrhoids. This they have called, Proctica maris'ca mucosa, Hæmor'rhoïs alba, Hæmor'rhœ'gia mucosa, Leucor'rhoïs, &c. It requires no special mention.

HÆMORRHŒIS AB EXANIÂ, Proctocle—h. Procdens, Proctocle.

HÆMORRHOSCOPIA, Hæmorrhœiscop'ia,

Hæmalica, from αἷμα, 'blood,' ρεω, 'I flow,' and σκοπεω, 'I view.' The art of forming a judgment of the state of the system from blood drawn.

HÆMOSTA'SIA, Hæmostasis, Epid'esis, from αἷμα, 'blood,' and στασις, 'stagnation.' Stagnation of blood. This name has, also, been given to any operation, the object of which is to arrest the flow of blood.

HÆMOSTATICS, Hæmostatica.

HÆMOURESIS, Hæmaturia.

HÆVEA GUIANENSIS. See Caoutchouc.

HAGARD, Haggard.

HAGENIA ABYSSINICA. An Abyssinian tree, which the natives plant round their habitations, as an ornament. The infusion of its flowers mixed with beer is employed by them as an anthelmintic. It is called, there, Cusso.

HAGGARD, (F.) Hagard. The French use the term, Air Hagard, Eil hagard, 'Haggard air,' 'Haggard eye,' for a physiognomy, in which there is at once, an expression of madness and terror.

HAGIOSPERMUM, Artemisia Santonica.

HAGIOXYLUM, Guaiacum.

HAIL, Chalaza.

HAIR, Sax. hær, Crines, Pilus, Thrix, (F.) Pool. A conical, corneous substance; issuing to a greater or less distance from the skin, to the tissue of which it adheres, by a bulb seated in the cellular membrane,—where alone, it is sensible. The hair receives various names in different parts—as Beard, Cilia, Eyebrows, Hair of the head (Cupilli), &c., (q. v.)

HAIR, FALLING OFF OF THE, Alopecia—h. Matted, Plica—h. Plaited, Plica.

HAIR-WORM, Seta equina—h. Muscular, Drauculus.

HAL, Salt.

HALCHEMIA. The alchymists so called the art of fusing salts; from αλς, 'salt,' and χεω, 'I pour out.'—Libavius.

HALCYON, Alyon.

HALCYONIUM ROTUNDUM, Pila marina.

HALE, Ephelides.

HALEINE, Breath—h. Courte, Dyspnœa.

HALELEON, Halcla'um, from αλς, 'salt,' and ελαιον, 'oil.' Oleum Sali mixtum. A mixture of oil and salt, for removing swellings of the joints.—Galen.

HALÉTÉRATION, Alteration.

HALICA, Alica.

HALICACALUM, Physalis.

HALICES, Pandiculation.

HALINA'TRUM. A name, given by the ancients to subcarbonate of soda, containing a little subcarbonate of ammonia, which is found ready formed on the plaster of damp walls, in places inhabited by man or animals; from αλς, 'salt,' and natrum or natron.

HALINITRUM, Potassæ nitræs.

HALIT'UOUS, Halituo'sus, from hal'itus, 'vapour,' (F.) Halitucuz. The skin is said to be halitucuse, when covered with a gentle moisture. The vapour, exhaled in all the cavities of the body, so long as the blood is warm, is called Hal'itus. The odorous vapour, exhaled by the blood itself whilst warm, is called Halitus Sanguinis.

HALITUS, Breath—h. Sanguinis, Gaz sanguinis.

HALLUCINATIO HYPOCHONDRIASIS, Hypocondriasis—h. Vertigo, Vertigo.

HALLUCINATION, Hallucina'tio, Allu'sia, Illu'sion, Allucina'tio, Parorasis, Waking dream, Phan'tasm, Ido'lum, from allucinari, 'to err;' 'to be deceived.' A morbid error in one or more of the senses. Perception of objects, which do not in fact exert any impression on the senses. Hallucination, almost always, if not always, depends on disorder of the brain, but is not an index of insanity, unless the patient believes in the existence of the subjects of the hallucination.

HALME, Muria.

HALMYRO'DES, Salsugino'sus, from αλμυρος, 'a salt liquor.' An epithet given to any affection, in which the heat feels acrid under the finger of the physician.—Hippocrates.

HALO SIGNA'TUS. The impression made by the ciliary processes on the anterior surface of the vitreous humour. So called from its consisting of a circle of indentations.—Sir C. Bell. Called by Haller, Striæ retinæ subjectæ ligamento ciliari.

HALOGENE, Chlorine.

HALOIDUM OXYGENATUM, Potassæ Murias hyperoxygenatus.

HALS, αλς, 'salt;' (q. v.) hence Halogene, Haloid, &c.

HALYSIS MEMBRANACEA, Bothriocephalus latus—h. Solium, Tænia solium.

HAM, Poples.

HAMAME'LIS VIRGINIA'NA. The witch hazel. The bark of this tree, which is a native of the United States, is somewhat bitter and sensibly astringent; but it has not been much used. A cataplasn of the inner rind of the bark is said to have been found efficacious in painful inflammations of the eyes.

HAMMA, Nodus, 'a tie.' A knot, used for retaining bandages on any part—Hippocr.

HAMPSTEAD, MINERAL WATERS OF. These waters, situate in the neighbourhood of London, are a good chalybeate.

HAM'ULUS. Diminutive of hamus, 'a hook.' A hook or crook: Ancistrum. Also, any hook-like process; as the hamulus of the pterygoid process.

HANCHÉ, Haunch.

HAND, Manus.

HANGERS, Crusta genu equinæ.

HANNEBANE, Hyoseyamus.

HAPHĒ, αφη, 'feeling, touch,' (q. v.) Hence: HAPHON'OSI, Haphon'osi; from αφη, 'the touch.' Morbi tactûs. Diseases of the sense of touch.

HAPLOTOMIA, Simplex sc'dtio, from απλος, 'simple,' and τομη, 'incision.' A simple incision.

HAPSIS, Touch.

HARD, (G.) hart, Durus, Scleros, (F.) Dur. That, which offers much resistance. In Anatomy, the hard parts are those which compose the osseous basis of the body: in other words, the skeleton. See Pulse, hard.

HARDESIA, Hibernicus lapis.

HARE-LIP. Lagochi'tus, Lagosto'ma, La'lipis, Lepori'tum, Olopho'nia Labii Lobata,

Lepori'na labia, Lepori'num rostrum, (F.) Bec de Lièvre. A fissure or perpendicular division of one or both lips. It has been so called, in consequence of the upper lip of the hare being thus divided.

The hare-lip is generally congenital; at other times it is accidental, or produced by a wound, the edges of which have not been brought into contact, and have healed separately. It is simple, when there is but one division; double, when there are two; and complicated, when there is, at the same time, a division or cleft of the superior maxillary bone and of the palate; or projection of the teeth into the separation of the lip.

In the Hare-lip Operation, there are two indications to be fulfilled. First, To pare, with the knife or scissors, the edges of the cleft, and, afterwards, to preserve them in contact; in order to cause adhesion. This last object is accomplished by means of pins, passed through the edges of the division; in other words, by the twisted suture. The projecting teeth must, of course, be previously removed. If there be separation of the palate, it will become less and less after the union of the lip, or the operation of staphyloraphy may be performed upon it.

HARE'S EAR, Bupleurum rotundifolium.

HARE'S EYE, Lagophthalmia.

HÆRGNE, Heinia—h. Anærysmale, Cirsiomphalus.

HÆRICOT, Phaseolus vulgaris—h. Grand de Perou, Jatropha curcas.

HARMONY, Harmónia, Harmos, from αρω, 'I adjust.' Anatomists have called—Suture by Harmony, or simply Harmony, False or superficial suture,—an immovable articulation, in which the depressions and eminences, presented by the bony surfaces, are but slightly marked; so that it might be presumed, that the junction of the bones took place by simple apposition of their surfaces. An instance of harmony occurs in the union of the superior maxillary bones with each other.

HARMOS, Harmony.

HARROGATE, MINERAL WATERS OF. The villages of High and Low Harrogate are situate in the centre of the county of York, England, and near Knaresborough. Here are four valuable sulphureous springs, and one chalybeate. For the former, Harrogate is celebrated and frequented.

ARTIFICIAL HARROGATE WATER may be formed of common salt ℥v, water ℔ij, impregnated with the gas from sulphuret of potass and sulphuric acid. aa ℥iv.

HARTFELL, MINERAL WATERS OF. This mineral water is near Moffat, in Scotland. It is a chalybeate, and is much used.

HARTSHORN, Cervus, Cornu cervi, Liquor cornu cervi—h. Red, Spiritus lavandulæ compositus—h. and Oil, Linimentum ammoniæ carbonatæ.

HARTS TONGUE, Asplenium scolopendrium.

HARTWORT OF MARSEILLES, Seseli tortuosum.

HASTA, Penis.

HASTESELLA, Splint.

HASTULA REGIS, Asphodelus ramosus.

HAUNCH, Coxa, Coxen'dix, of the Latins; αγγυ, or ισχιον, of the Greeks, Ancha, Ischion, Hip. Cossa, (F.) Hanche. The region of the trunk, which is formed by the lateral parts of the pelvis and the hip joint, including the soft parts. In women, on account of the greater width of the pelvis, the haunches are more marked and prominent than in men.

HAUSTUS. A Draught. A liquid medicine, which can be taken at a draught.

HAUSTUS NIGER. See Infusum sennæ compositum.

HAUT MAL, Epilepsy.

HAWKNUT, Bunium bulbocastanum.

HAWTHORN, WHITE, Mespilus oxyacantha.

HAY-ASTHMA, Fever, Hay.

HAY, CAMEL'S, Juncus odoratus.

HAYRIF, Galium aparine.

HAZEL CROTTLES, Lichen pulmonarius—h. Nut tree, Corylus avellana—h. Witch, Hamamelis Virginiana.

HEAD, Sax. hearos, hearð, heaved; the past participle of hearpan, 'to heave up.' Caput, Cephalæ, κεφαλή, κίβη, Cybê, (F.) Tête. The head forms the upper extremity of the body, and tops the skeleton. It consists of the cranium and face. The first, which comprises all the superior and posterior part, has the encephalon in its cavity: the latter forms only the anterior part; and serves as the receptacle for the greater part of the organs of the senses.

HEAD, WATER IN THE, Hydrocephalus—h. Ache, Cephalæa, Cephalalgia—h. Ache, sick, Cephalæa spasmodica.

HEADY, same etymology. (F.) Capiteux. That which inebriates readily. An epithet, applied to wines, which possess this quality.

HEALTH, Sanitas.

HEARING, HARDNESS OF, Deafness—h. Perverse, Paracusis perversa.

HEART, Sax. hearot, Germ. Herz, Cor, Cear, Cer, Cardia, καρ, καρδία, (F.) Cœur. An azygous muscle, of an irregularly pyramidal shape; situate obliquely and a little to the left side, in the chest;—resting on the diaphragm by one of its surfaces:—suspended by its base from the great vessels; free and movable in the rest of its extent, and surrounded by the pericardium. The right side of the body of the heart is thin and sharp, and is called Margo acutus: the left side is thick and round, and termed Margo obtusus. It is hollow within, and contains four cavities; two of which, with thinner and less fleshy walls receive the blood from the lungs and the rest of the body, and pour it into two others, with thick and very fleshy parietes, which send it to the lungs and to every part of the body. Of these cavities, the former are called auricles, the latter ventricles. The right auricle and right ventricle form the Pulmonie or right or anterior heart, (F.) Cœur du poumon, C. du sang noir, C. droit, C. antérieur: and the left auricle and ventricle the systemic, corporeal, left, or aortic heart, (F.) Cœur du corps, C. gauche, C. aortique ou C. rouge. In the adult, these are totally distinct from each other, being separated by a partition;—the septum Cordis. Into the right auricle, the venæ cavæ,—superior and inferior,— and the coronary vein, open;—the pulmonary artery arises from the right ventricle;—the four pulmonary veins open into the left auricle, and the aorta arises from the left ventricle.

The mean weight of the heart, in the adult, from the twenty fifth to the sixtieth year, is, according to Boulland, from eight to nine ounces. The dimensions, according to Lobstein and Boulland, are as follows:—Length, from base to apex, five inches six lines; breadth, at the base, three inches; thickness of the walls of the left ventricle, seven lines; at a finger's breadth above the apex, four lines; thickness of the walls of the right ventricle, two and a quarter lines; at the apex, half a line; thickness of right auricle one line; of the left auricle, half a line.

The heart is covered, externally, by a very thin membranous reflection from the pericardium. The muscular structure of which it is constituted is much thicker in the parietes of the ventricles than in that of the auricles. Its cavities are lined by a very delicate membrane, the endocardium, which is continuous with the inner membrane of the arteries, as regards the left cavities; and with that of the veins, as regards the right. Its arteries—the coronary—arise from the commencement of the aorta. Its nerves proceed, chiefly, from the pneumogastric and the cervical ganglions of the great sympathetic.

The heart is the great agent in the circulation. By its contraction, the blood is sent over every part of the body. The heart's action does not seem to be directly owing to nervous influence, received from the brain or spinal marrow or from both. The circulation may, indeed, be kept up, for some time, if both brain and spinal marrow be destroyed.

When the ear is applied to the chest, a dull, lengthened sound is heard, which is synchronous with the arterial pulse. This is instantly succeeded by a sharp, quick sound, like that of the valve of a bellows or the lapping of a d g, and this is followed by a period of repose.

The first sound appears to be produced by the contraction of the ventricles; the second by the reflux of the blood against the semilunar valves. These are what we call the Sounds of the Heart.

The Beating or Impulse of the heart against the parietes of the chest is mainly caused, perhaps, by the expansive force of the heart, which tends to project it forwards. It is uncertain, however, whether the impulsion is produced by the dilatation or the contraction of the ventricles.

The heart is subject to different organic diseases; the chief of which are aneurism, contraction of the apertures, and rupture of its parietes.

HEART, HYPERTROPHY OF THE. Supernutrition of the muscular parietes of the heart, which are thicker than usual; the cavities being generally diminished. The physical signs which indicate it are the following. In cases of long standing, the præcordial region is generally prominent; the pulsations of the heart are visible over a greater extent than natural; and a marked vibration is communicated to the hand when placed on the cardiac region.

The dull sound on percussion is more extensive than natural; and on auscultation there is a permanent increase of the force and extent of the heart's action; there is no increase, however, of frequency, and the rhythm is regular.

The pulse is generally strong, full, and hard.

HEART, HYPERTROPHY WITH DILATATION OF THE. In this affection, the pulsations can be seen and felt over a larger space, and the apex is more to the left and lower down than the natural. The impulse is less steady, but at times more violent than what accompanies simple hypertrophy. Percussion gives more distinct evidence of enlargement, the sound being more extensively dull. On auscultation, the impulse is often violent but irregular; in extreme cases it produces the sensation of a large mass of flesh rolling or revolving beneath the ear. The pulse is strong, full and vibratory. The shock of the heart's action is often transmitted to the whole person, and to the bed on which he is lying.

HEART, DILATATION OF THE. See Aneurism.

HEART'S EASE. Viola tricolor.

HEARTBURN. Ardor ventriculi. Cardialgia.

HEARTWORT. Laserpitium album.

HEAT, past participle of Sax. hætan, 'to make warm.' Calor. Therme. θερμότης. (F.) Chaleur. The material cause, which produces the sensation,—or the particular sensation itself produced by a body of an elevated temperature, on our organs, especially on the organs of touch. Modern chymists have given the name Caloric to the principle, whatever may be its nature, which is the cause of heat. When we touch a body of a temperature superior to our own, a portion of caloric passes from the body to the hand, and produces the sensation of heat. If, on the contrary, we touch a body of a temperature inferior to our own, we communicate a portion of our caloric to it, and experience the sensation of cold.

Our own sensations are but imperfect indexes of temperature. Two men meeting at the middle of a mountain,—the one ascending, the other descending,—will experience different sensations. The one ascending, passes from a warmer to a colder atmosphere;—the one descending, from a colder to a warmer.

The chief instrument for measuring heat used in Medicine, is the thermometer. Of this there are three kinds;—that of Fahrenheit, that of Réaumur, and that of Celsius or the Centigrade.

The following Table exhibits the correspondence of these different thermometric scales.

The human body can bear a high degree of heat diffused in the atmosphere. There are cases, on record, where air of 400° and upwards of Fahrenheit's scale, has been breathed with impunity for a short time. It can likewise withstand very severe cold. In the expedition of Capt. Back to the Arctic regions, the thermometer was as low as—70° of Fahr.

Excessive heat disposes the body to gastric and intestinal diseases, and particularly to inflammation and enlargement of the liver; hence, the frequency of such affections within the torrid zone.

Heat is often used therapeutically: the actual cautery, at a white heat, disorganizes the parts to which it is applied: a lesser degree occasions violent inflammation. Heat higher than that of the human body, is excitant; of a lower degree, sedative. Excessive cold acts as a powerful sedative—inducing sleep, the tendency to which, after long exposure, becomes irresistible. See Cold.

Many of the topical applications—as cataplasms—act wholly by virtue of their warmth and moisture.

In Pathology;—Internal heat, (F.) Chaleur interne, is a sensation of heat felt by the patient, but not sensible to the touch. External heat, (F.) Chaleur extérieure, that which can be felt by others. Heat, Ardor, is called moist, (F.) haliteuse, when accompanied with moisture, like that felt after bathing, dry; (F.) sèche, when the skin has not its ordinary suppleness. It is called acid and pungent, (F.) âcre et mordicante, when it conveys a disagreeable tingling to the fingers. The French employ the terms nervous heat and erratic heat, Chaleur nerveuse and Chaleur erratique, for that which comes by flushes, alternating with chills, and which moves rapidly from one part to another. M. Double has used the term septic heat, (F.) Chaleur septique, for that which produces a piquant sensation on the hand, similar to that of the acid heat, but milder and more uniform, and which is accompanied with feebleness and frequency of pulse, &c.

HEAT, ACRID, see Acid—h. Prickly, Lichen tropicus.

HEATH, COMMON, Erica vulgaris.

HEAVINESS, Somnolency.

HEAVY, Gravis, (F.) Gravatif, from Sax. hepan, 'to heave,' an epithet given to any pain, which consists in a sensation of weight or heaviness, or is accompanied by such sensation.

HEBDOMADARIA, Octanea.

HEBE, ἡβη. This word has been employed to designate, 1. The hair which grows on the pubes. 2. The pubic region, and 3. puberty. (q. v.)

HEBETUDO DENTIIUM, Hæmodia—h. Visus, Amblyopia, Caligo.

HEBREWS, MEDICINE OF THE. Medicine seems to have been at a very low ebb with the ancient Hebrews. Of anatomy they knew nothing. Their physiology was imperfect and filled with superstitions, and their therapeutics unsatisfactory. Hygiene appears to have been most attended to: of the other departments of medicine we cannot judge of their knowledge.

HECTEUS, ἑκτεῖς. A Greek measure, containing about 72 chopines or pints.

HECTIC FEVER, Febris hectica, Hecticopyra, Hecticopyretos, Sytecopyra, Syteclicopyra, Febris marasmodes, Fièvre Hectique, F. Ectique, Febris tabida, Leucopyria, Epanctus hectica, Febris lenta, F. amphinerina hectica, Febris amatoria, Chlorosis amatoria, from ἑξῆς, 'habit of body;' because in this disease, every part of the body is emaciated; or perhaps from ἐξέρω, 'I consume,' 'I am exhausted.' The name of a slow, continued, or remittent fever, which generally accompanies the end of organic affections, and which has been esteemed idiopathic, although it is probably always symptomatic. It is the fever of irritability and debility; and is characterized by progressive emaciation; frequent pulse; hot skin; especially of the palms of the hands and soles of the feet; and, towards the end, colliquative sweats and diarrhœa.

Being symptomatic, it can only be removed by getting rid of the original affection. This is generally difficult and almost hopeless in the disease, which it most commonly accompanies.—consumption.

HECTICA PHTHISIS, Ph. pulmonalis.

HECTICOPYRA, Hectic fever.

HECTICOPYRETOS, Hectic fever.

HECTISIS, (F.) Étisie. Same etymon. The state of those who have hectic fever.

HECTOGRAMME, Hectogramma, from ἑκατο, 'a hundred,' and γραμμα, a measure of 100 grammes, i. e. 3 ounces, 1 drachm, and 44 grains, Troy.

HECTOLITRE. A measure, containing 100 litres or 26.42 wine pints.

HERERA ARBOREA, H. Helix.

HERERA HELIX, Hedera arborescens, Bacchica, Cissos, κισσός, Cittos, κίττος, Ed'era, Corymbetra, Corymbos. The ivy. (F.) Lierre. The taste of ivy leaves is bitter, styptic, and nauseous. They are not used in medicine. According to Haller, they were recommended in Germany against the atrophy of children; and the common people of England sometimes apply them to running sores and to keep issues open.

The berries were supposed, by the ancients, to have an emetic and purgative quality; and a watery extract was made from them, called by Quercetanus—Extractum purgans. From the stalk of the tree a resinous juice exudes in warm climates, called—Gummi Hederae, Gomme de lierre, Resine de lierre. It is possessed of tonic and astringent properties, but is not used.

HERERA TERRESTRIS, Glechoma hederacea.

HERERULA, Glechoma hederacea.

HEDISARUM ALKAGI, Agul.

HEDRA, ἑδρα, ἑδρη, 'a vestige.' A fracture of the bones of the cranium, in which the trace of the fracturing instrument is still perceptible. It was, also, used, by the ancients, for the anus, (q. v.) excrement, (q. v.) and for the bottom of an abscess.

HEDYSMA, Condiment.

HELICODES, Ulcerous.

HELICOMA, Ulcer.

HEL'COS, from ἑλκος, 'an ulcer,' (q. v.) Hence:

HELICOSIS, Elcosis.

HELUTICA, Epispastics.

HELICYDRION, Helcydrion, ἡλικυδριον: Ulcus culum, a small ulcer.—Galen, Paulus, Foësius.

HELICYS'TER, from ἡλικο, 'I draw.' An iron hook or crotchet for extracting the fœtus. See Crotchet.

HELIENIUM, Inula helenium.

HELICINE, from Helix, 'the tendril of the vine.'

The HELICINE ARTERIES of the penis, as described by Müller, are short vessels given off from the larger branches as well as from the finest twigs of the artery of the organ; most of these come off at a right angle, and project into the cavity of the spongy substance, either terminating abruptly or swelling out into a club-like process without again subdividing. Almost all these vessels are bent like a horn, so that the end describes half a circle or somewhat more. They have a great resemblance to the tendrils of the vine, whence their name. A minute examination of them, either with the lens or the microscope, shows that, although they at all times project into the venous cavities of the corpora cavernosa, they are not entirely naked, but are covered with a delicate membrane, which, under the microscope, appears granular.

HELICIS MAJOR. A muscle of the ear, which originates from the anterior, acute part of the helix, upon which it ascends and is inserted into the helix. It pulls the part into which it is inserted a little downwards and forwards.

HELICIS MINOR. This muscle originates from the under and fore part of the helix, and is inserted into the helix, near the fissure in the cartilage, opposite the concha. Its use is to contract the fissure.

HELICOTREMA, from ἡλιξ, 'helix, cochlea,' and τρομα, 'a foramen.' The hole by which the two scales of the cochlea communicate at the apex.

HELIKIA, Age.

HELIOSIS, Insolation.

HELIOTROPE, Heliotropium Europæum.

HELIOTROPION, Cichorium intybus.

HELIOTROPIMUM EUROPÆUM, Verrucaria. The Heliotrope. (F.) Tournesol, Herbe aux verrues. This plant is considered to possess aperient properties; and to be capable of destroying cutaneous excrescences; hence one of its names.

HELIX, ἡλιξ, Capreolus, from ἐλεειν, 'to envelop,' 'surround.' The fold is thus called, which forms the outer circumference or ring of the external ear.

HELIX, Limax.

HELIX POMATIA. A large kind of snail, transported from the South of Europe to England by Sir Kenelm Digby, for his lady, when in a decline. It was considered highly restorative.

HELLEBORASTER, Helleborus fetidus.

HELLEBORE, AMERICAN, Veratrum viride—h. Black, Helleborus niger—h. Blanc, Veratrum album—h. Noir, Helleborus niger—h. Stinking, Helleborus fetidus—h. Swamp, Veratrum viride—h. White, Veratrum album.

HELLEBORISMUS OR ELLEBORISMUS.

The method of treating diseases, amongst the ancients, by hellebore. This comprised not only the choice, preparation, and administration of the medicine, but, likewise, the knowledge and employment of preliminary precautions and remedies, proper for aiding its action, and preventing the pernicious effects which it might occasion.

HELLEBORUS ALBUS, Veratrum album.

HELLEBORUS FETIDUS, Helleborus fetidus, Elleboraster, Stinking Hellebore or Bear's Foot. (F.) Hellebore ou Ellebore fétide, Pied de Griffon. The leaves of this plant are said to be antihelmintic. The smell of the fresh plant is extremely fetid, and the taste bitter and acrid. It usually acts as a cathartic.

HELLEBORUS NIGER, Melampodium, Ectomon, ἡκτομον, Black Hellebore, Christmas Rose. (F.) Hellebore noir. The root of this European plant has a disagreeable odour, and bitter, acrid taste. It is possessed of cathartic properties, and has been recommended as an emmenagogue. It has been given in mania, melancholia, dropsy, suppressed menses, &c. Dose, gr. x to ℥j, as a cathartic.

HELMINTHAGOGUES, Helminthagoğa, Helminthics, from ἑλμις, 'a worm,' and ἀγο, 'I expel.' Remedies, used against intestinal worms;—Antheminthics, Verminifuges.

HELMINTHI, Worms.

HELMINTHIA, Helminthiasis—h. Alvi, Worms.

HELMINTHIA ERRATICA. Worms, introduced by accident and without finding a proper habitation in the stomach or intestines; producing spasmodic colic, with severe tormina, and occasionally vomiting or dejections of blood: the 12th genus of the order Enterica, class Calicea, of Good.

HELMINTHIA PODICIS, Worms.

HELMINTHIASIS, from ἑλμις, 'a worm.' A generic name for diseases caused by the presence of intestinal worms. It is, also, called Helminthio, Vermintio, Vermittio, Morbus verminosus, Status verminosus, Saburra verminosus, Scoleciasis, Parasitismus intestinalis, Worms, Invermication. See Worms.

HELMINTHICS, Helminthagogues.

HELMINTHO-CORTON, Corallina Corsicana.

HELMINTHOLOGY, Helminthologia, from ἑλμις, 'a worm,' and λογος, 'a description.' A treatise on worms.

HELMINTHOPYRA, Helminthopyretos, from ἑλμις, 'a worm,' and πυρ, 'a fever.' Fever occasioned by worms. See Fever, verminous.

HELMINTHOPYRETOS, Helminthopyra.

HELOSIS, Helotis; from ἑλω, 'I turn.' Inversion of the eyelids, and convulsions of the muscles of the eye.

HEMERA, ἡμερα, 'a day.' Hence:

HEMERALOPIA, from ἡμερα, 'the day,' and οπτοια, 'I see.' Dysopia Tenebrarum, Paropsis Noctifuga, Visus diurnus, Nyctalopia, (of some), Amblyopia crepuscularis, Cacitas crepuscularis, Tacies diurna, Day-sight, Day vision, Hen blindness. (F.) Une diurne, Aveuglement de Nuit. A disease, in which the eyes enjoy the faculty of seeing, whilst the sun is above the horizon; but are incapable of seeing by the aid of artificial light. Its causes are not evident. The eye, when carefully examined, presents no alteration, either in its membranes or humours.

HEMERALOPS, Dorca. One labouring under hemeralopia.

HELMINTHUS GORDII, Seta equina.

HELODES, Elodes.

HELOPYRA, Elodes (febris)

HELOPYRETOS, Elodes (febris.)

HELOS, Clavus, Marsh,

HELOTIS, Helosis, Pica.

HELIXINE, Parietaria.

HEMACHROINE, Hæmatine.

HEMATINE, Hæmatine.

HEMATOXYLIE, Hæmatococcus, see Hæmatodes Fungus—h. Fungoides, Hæmatodes fungus

HÉMATOPISIE, Hæmatops.

HÉMATOSINE, Hæmatine.

HEMERA, Dies

HEMERALOPIA. See Nyctalopia.

HEMEROPATHIA, from ἡμέρα, 'a day,' and πάθος, 'an affection.' A disease, which continues only a day; or, which is only observed during the day.

HEMI, ἡμι, ἡμισ, 'half,' 'semi.' Hence:

HEMICÉPHALUS, from ἡμι, 'half,' and κεφαλή, 'head.' One who has half a head.

HEMICRANIA, ἡμικρανία, Crana, Hemipal-gia, ἡμιπέγνια, Heterocrania, Monopalgia, Cephalæa Hemicranæa, Megrim, from ἡμισ, 'half,' and κράνιον, 'cranium.' (F.) Migræne. Pain, confined to one half the head. It is almost always of an intermittent character;—at times, continuing only as long as the sun is above the horizon; and hence sometimes called Sun pain,—and is cured by cinchona, arsenic, and the remedies adapted for intermittents

HEMICRANIA IDIOPATHICA, Neuralgia facial.

HEMIECTON, HEMIECTEON, Semisectum. A vessel, capable of containing 36 chopines or pints, and in which fumigations were made in diseases of the uterus and vagina.—Hippocr HEMICE'ION, from ἡμισ and μοῖρα, 'a part.' 'One half.'—Fœsius. Also, half a drachm.—Erotian.

HEMINA, a Greek measure, answering to the Catyle, κοτύλη, i. e. one half the sextarius, or about half a pint, English.

HEMIOBO'LION, or HEMIOB'OLON. Half the obolus. A weight of about five grains. Gorræus.

HEMIO'LION. A weight of 12 drachms, or oz. 1½—Galen. See Sescuncia.

HEMIOPIA, Hemioptis, Vision dimidiatus. Μαρμαρὴ ὑγῆ Ἰππιδάτης, from ἡμισ, 'one half,' and ὀπτομαι, 'I see.' Depraved vision, in which the person sees only one half of an object.

HEMIOPSIS, Hemipopia.

HEMIPAGIA, Hemicrania.

HEMIPEGIA, Hemicrania.

HEMIPLE'GIA, Hemiplexia, Paralysis Hemiplegia, Ἐπιπλέγνια, from ἡμισ, 'one half,' and πλέγω, or πλάττω, 'I strike.' Paralysis of one side of the body. See Paralysis. One, so paled, is said to be hemipleg'ic, semi-sideratus.

HEMIPLE'XIA, Hemiplegia.

HEMISPHERE, Hemisphærium; from ἡμισφαῖον, 'one half,' and σφαῖρα, 'a sphere.' One half of a sphere or of a body having a spheroidal shape. The hem.spheres of the brain are the upper spheroidal portions of the brain, separated from each other by the falx cerebri.

HEMITRITÆ'A, Semi-tertiana, Ficere demiterte, Febriis sesquialtera. (F) Semi-terce. A semi-tertian fever, so called because it seems to possess both the characters of the tertian and quotidian intermittent.—Galen, Spigelius.

HEMIUN'GION, Semancia Half an ounce,

HEMLOCK, Conium maculatum—h. Bastard, Cherophyllum sylvestre—h. Common, Conium maculatum—h. Dropwort, Ceananthe—h. Water, fine-leaved. Phellandrium aquaticum—h. Water, Cicuta aquatica.

HEMLOCK GUM, see Pinus Canadensis.

HEMLOCK, SPRUCE, Pinus Canadensis.

HEMORRHAGE, Hæmorrhagia—h. From the bladder, Cystirrhagia—h. From the pituitary membrane, Epistaxis—h. Uterine, Metrorrhagia.

HEMORRHAGIE BUCCALE, Stomatorrhagia—h. de la Mntre, Metrorrhagia—h. Nasale, Epistaxis—h. de la Vessie, Cystirrhagia.

HEMORRHIOIDES AVEUGLES, Cæcæ hæmorrhoides.

HEMP, INDIAN, Apocynum cannabinum, Banque.

HEMP'SEED. See Cannabia sativa,

HEN BLINDNESS, Hemeralopia.

HENBANE, Hyoscyamus.

HEN'WE, Lawsonia inermis.

HENRICEA PHARMACEARCHA, Gentiana Chirayita

HENRICUS RUBENS, Colcothar.

HEPAR, ἥπαρ, genitive, ἥπατος, 'liver,' (q v.) The ancient name for the liver of sulphur, Hepar sulphuris; which is sometimes a compound of sulphur and potassium; at others, of sulphur and potassa. See Potassæ Sulphuretum

HEPAR ANTIMONIA'TUM is a compound of a sulphuret of antimony and an alkali. See Oxydum Stibii Sulphuretum.

HEPAR MARTIA'LE, a compound of sulphuret of potass and an oxide of iron.

HEPAR SANGUINIS, see Blood—h. Sulphuris salinum, Potassæ sulphuretum—h. Sulphuris volatile, Ammonia sulphuretum—h. uterinum, Placenta.

HEPATAL'GIA, from ἥπαρ, 'liver,' and ἀλγος, 'pain.' Pain in the liver.

HEPATALGIA P'ITIANA, Turgescencia vesiculæ felleæ—h. Phlegmonoides, Hepatitis.

HEPATAPOSTE'MA, from ἥπαρ, 'the liver,' and ἀποστήμα, 'an abscess.' Abscess of the liver HEPATARIUS, Hepaticus.

HEPATEMPHRAX'IS, from ἥπαρ, 'liver,' and εμψρασσω, 'I obstruct.' Hepatic obstruction—Phœquet.

HEPATE'ROS, Hepaticus, Jecordrius. A variety of diarrhæa. Fluxus hepaticus.—Gorræus.

HEPAT'IC, Hepaticus, Hepaticus, Jecordrius. From ἥπαρ, 'the liver.' Belonging or relating to the liver.

HEPATIC AR'TERY, Arteria Hepatica, one of the three branches given off by the celiac. It passes towards the inferior surface of the liver; where it divides into two branches, a right and left, which proceed towards the corresponding parts of that organ. The right branch gives off the cystic artery. Before dividing, the hepatic artery sends off two considerable branches, the A. pylorica and A. Gastro-epiploica dextra.

The HEPATIC VEINS or Supra hepatic veins do not follow the course of the arteries of the same name. They arise in the substance of the liver; converge towards the posterior margin of that viscus and open into the vena cava inferior. They convey away the blood carried to the liver by the hepatic artery and vena porta.

The HEPATIC DUCT. (F) Canal hépatique, Ductus hepaticus, is about three fingers breadth in length, and of the size of a quill. It is formed by the union of all the biliary ducts, and joins the cystic duct at a very acute angle, to form the ductus choledochus. Its function is to convey the bile from the liver towards the duodenum.

The HEPATIC PLEXUS, Plexus hepaticus, consists of nervous filaments, sent by the cœliac plexus to the liver, which accompany the hepatic artery.

HEPATICA. A name formerly given to medicines, which were believed capable of removing diseases of the liver.

HEPATICA, Anemone hepatica—h. Fontana, Marchantia polymorpha—h. Nobilis, Anemone hepatica—h. Stellata, Asperula odorata.

HEPATICA TRILOBA, Trifolium aureum, Licorwort. (F) Hépatique des jardins. This plant is a gentle astringent, but not possessed of much virtue.

HEPATICUS, Hepateros—h. Flos, Anemone hepatica.

HÉPATIQUE ÉTOILÉE, Asperula odorata—h. des Fontaines, Marchantia polymorpha—h. des Jardins, Hepatica triloba.

HEPATIRRHŒA, Fluxus hepaticus, Dysenteria hepatica, Diarrhœa hepatica, Hepatorrhœgia, Hæmorrhœa, Ainatura. (F) Flux hépatique, from ἥπαρ, 'the liver,' and ῥέω, 'I flow.' A species of diarrhœa in which the excreted matters seem to come from the liver; or are much mixed with bile, &c.

HEPATIS EMUNCTORIA, Inguen—h. Suspensorium, Ligament, suspensory, of the liver.

HEPATITIS, Empres'ma hepatis, Inflammatio hepatis, I. Jecino'ris, Febris hepatica inflammatoria, Hepatalgie phlegmouides, Inflammation of the liver. (F) Hépatite, Inflammation du foie, Picce (Prov. ncial). It may be seated either in the peritoneal covering or in the substance of the liver or in both; and may be acute or chronic. The peculiar symptoms are;—pain in the right hypochondrium, shooting to the back and right shoulder, and increased on pressure; difficulty of lying on the left side; sometimes jaundice and cough, and synocha.

Its termination is generally by resolution: in tropical climates it often runs on to suppuration; the abscess breaking either externally, or forming a communication with the intestines or chest, or breaking into the cavity of the abdomen. The causes are those of inflammation in general. Heat predisposes to it; hence its greater frequency in hot climates. On dissection of those who have died from it, the liver has been found hard and enlarged: colour of a deep purple; or the membranes have been more or less vascular; or adhesions, or tubercles, or hydatids, or abscesses, or biliary calculi have been met with. The treatment must be bold. Bleeding, general and local, fomentations, blisters, purgatives, and the antiphlogistic regimen. In hot climates especially, a new action must be excited by mercury as early as possible.

CHRONIC HEPATITIS or Chronic liver disease, is not as common as is believed. It may be suspected from the existence of the symptoms above mentioned, but in a minor degree; with enlargement and constant dull pain in the region of the liver; sallow countenance; high-coloured urine; clay-coloured feces, &c.

The great object of treatment is, to excite a new action by mercury and counter-irritants, and to keep the liver free by cathartics.

HEPATIZATION, Hepatisatio, from ἥπαρ, 'the liver.' Conversion into a liver-like substance. Splenization. Applied to the lungs when gorged with lungs or plastic matters, so that they are no longer pervious to the air. In such state they are said to be hepatized.

HEPATOCELE, from ἥπαρ, 'the liver,' and κύλη, 'a tumour.' Hevnia of the Liver. The liver has never been found entirely out of the abdominal cavity. Increase of its bulk or injuries of the parietes of the abdomen have been the sole cause of the protrusions, which have been occasionally met with, especially in infants, in whom the upper part of the linea alba is very weak, and indeed scarcely seems to exist. Sauvages has distinguished two species of hepatocœle:—the ventral (in the linea alba,) and the umbilical or hepatomphalum.

HEPATO-COLICUM. A ligament of the liver, described by Haller, as passing from the gall-bladder and contiguous sinus portarum, across the duodenum to the colon. Another, termed Hepato-renal, descends from the root of the liver to the kidney. They are both peritoneal.

HEPATO GASTRIC, Gastro-hepatic.

HEPATOGRAPHY, Hepatographia; from ἥπαρ, 'the liver,' and γραφη, 'a description.' The part of Anatomy which describes the liver.

HEPATOLOGŸ, Hepatology; from ἥπαρ, 'the liver,' and λογος, 'a discourse,' 'treatise.' A treatise on the liver.

HEPATONCUS, from ἥπαρ, 'the liver,' and γκυς, 'a tumour.' Tumor of the liver.

HEPATO-PAREC'TAMA, from ἥπαρ, 'the liver,' and παρεκταμα, 'considerable extension.' Augmentation of the liver.

HEPATORRHŒA, Hepatirrhœa.

HEPATOROMY, from ἥπαρ, 'the liver,' and τομή, 'I cut.' Dissection of the liver.

HEPIALOS, Epialos.

HEPS. See Rosa canina.

HEP'TAPHAR'MACUM, from ἑπτα, 'seven,' and φάρμακον, 'a remedy.' A medicine, composed of seven substances; cerusse, litharge, pitch, wax, colophony, frankincense, and bullock's fat. It was regarded as laxative, supplicative, and healing.

HERACLEUM GUMMIFERUM. See Ammoniac gum.

HERACLE'UM SPONDYL'UM, Branca ursi'na

Germanica, Spondylium, Con Parsnep, All-heal, (F.) Berec, Branc-ursine bâturde, Fausse Acanthe. Family, Umbelliferae. Sex. Syst. Pentandria Digynia. The root of this plant has a strong, rank smell; and a pungent, almost caustic taste. It has been given as a tonic, stomatic, and carminative; both in powder and in decoction. The Russians, Lithuanians, and Peles obtain from its seeds and leaves, by fermentation, a very intoxicating spirituous liquor, which they call Parst.

The HERACLEUM LANA'TUM of Masturwort, is in the secondary list of the Pharmacopœia of the United States.

HERB, Herba.

THE FIVE EMOLLIENT HERBS, Quinque herbe emollientes, were, anciently;—beet, mallow, marsh-mallow, French mercury, and violet.

THE FIVE CAPILLARY HERBS, Quinque herbe capillares, were hart's tongue, black, white, and golden maiden-hair, and spleenwort.

HERB OF GRACE, Gratiola officinalis—h. Mastich, common, Thymus mastichina—h. Mastich, Syrian, Teucrium marum—h. Robert, Geranium Robertianum—h. of Saint Cune-gonde, Eupatorium Cannabinum—h. Sophia, Sisymbrium sophia—h. Trinity, Anemone Hepatica.

HERBÆ PRO ENEMATË, Glycer herbs—h. pro fotû, Fomentation herbs.

HERBALIST, Herborist.

HERBARIUS, Herborist.

HERBE AUX CHANTRES, Erysimum—h. aux Charpentiers, Justitia pectoralis—h. aux Chats, Nepeta, Teucrium marum—h. au Cog, Tanacetum balsamita—h. aux Cuillers, Cochlearia officinalis—h. aux Escrouelles, Scrophularia nodosa—h. aux Eeus, Lysimachia nummularia—h. à l'Éternuer, Achillea ptarmica—h. aux Gueux, Clematis vitalba—h. à la Houette, Asclepias Syriaca—h. aux Mamelles, Lapsana—h. aux Monches, Conyza squarrosa—h. au Pauvre homme, Gratiola officinalis—h. aux Perles, Lithospermum officinale—h. à la Poudre de Chypre, Hibiscus abelmoschus—h. aux Poux, Delphinium staphisagria—h. aux Pucès commune, Plantago psyllium—h. à Robert, Geranium Robertianum—h. de Sainte Barbe, Erysimum barbarum—h. de Saint Étienne, Cirsium luteum—h. de Saint Jean, Artemisia vulgaris—h. de Saint Roch, Inula dysenterica—h. aux Sorciers, Cirsium luteum—h. aux Verrues, Heliotropium Europæum.

HERBIV'OROUS, Herbiv'orus, from herba,

'grass,' and oro, 'I eat.' An epithet applied to animals which feed on herbs.

HER'BORIST, Herbarius. One who deals in useful plants. A Her'balist or Herbarist.

HERBORIZATION, Herbarum inquisitio.

An excursion, made with the view of collecting plants. Such excursions are directed by the Apothecaries' Company of London, for the use of their apprentices, &c.

HERCULES ALL'HEAL, Pastinaca opopanax.

HEREDITARY, Hereditarius, Gentilium, Syn'phytos, Syn'genes. An epithet given to diseases, communicated from progenitors. Such diseases may exist at birth; or they may supervene at a more or less advanced period of existence.

HERMAPHRODITE, Hermaphroditus, Hermaphroditism; from 'Egus, 'Mercurius, and Aphroditu, 'Venus. Appertaining to Mercury and Venus. Union of the two sexes in the same individual.

HERMAPHRODITE. Same etymon. Hermaphroditus, Gyn'da, Androgynus. One, who possesses the attributes of male and female: who unites in himself the two sexes. A term, applied to an animal or plant which is, at the same time, both male and female. True hermaphrodites are met with only in the lower degrees of the animal scale, amongst the zoophytes, molluscæ, or gasteropodes. The individuals of the human species, regarded as hermaphrodites, owe this appearance to a vicious conformation of the genital organs; a kind of monstrosity, which renders them unfit for generation, although an attentive examination may exhibit the true sex. Hermaphrodites have, likewise, been described, who, instead of uniting the attributes of both sexes, cannot be considered male or female. These have been called neutral hermaphrodites.

HERMETICA DOCTRINA, (F.) Hermétique. The doctrine of Hermes, a celebrated Egyptian philosopher, who is considered the father of Alchemy. That part of chymistry, whose object was the pretended transmutation of the metals.

HERMODAC'TYLUS, Dactylus, Animum articulatum, from 'Egus, 'Mercurius, and δακτυλος, 'a finger; or rather from Hermus, a river in Asia, upon whose banks it grows, and δακτυλος, 'a date; or from 'Egus, 'Mercurius, and δακτυλος, 'a date.' (F.) Hermodactyle, Hermodacte ou Hermodate. The root of the Hermodactyl was formerly used as a cathartic. By some it is supposed to be identical with the Iris tuberosa. The best testimony seems to be in favour of its being a variety of the colchicum,—the Colechicum Illyricum.

HERMODATE, Hermodactylus.

HERNIA, Ramez, Ruptura, Crepatu'ra, Ectopia herniosa, Celê, κλη, Rupture. (F.) Hargne, Descente, Effort, Greveure, Rompeure. Any tumour, formed by the displacement of a viscus or a portion of a viscus, which has escaped from its natural cavity by some aperture and projects externally. Herniæ have been divided into,—

1. Hernia of the Brain.—Encephalocœle.
2. " Thorax.—Pneumocœle.
3. " Abdomen.

ABDOMINAL HERNIÆ are remarkable for their frequency, variety, and the danger attending them. They are produced by the protrusion of the viscera, contained in the abdomen, through the natural or accidental apertures in the parietes of that cavity. The organs, which form them most frequently, are the intestines and the epiploon.

These herniæ have been divided, according to the aperture by which they escape, into :

1. Inguinal Hernia or Supra-Pubian. These issue by the inguinal canal; they are called Bubonocœlæ, when small; and Scrotal Hernia or Oscheocœlæ in man, when they descend into the scrotum;—Vulvar Hernia or Puden'dal or Labial Hernia, Episioœlæ in women, when they extend to the labia majora.

2. Crural or Femoral Hernia, Me'rocœlæ, when they issue by the crural canal.

3. Infra-Pubian Hernia, (F) Hernies sous-pubiennes, where the viscera escape through the opening, which gives passage to the infra-pubian vessels.

4. Ischiatic Hernia; when they take place through the sacio-sciatic notch.

5. Umbilical Hernia, Exomphalos, Omphalocœlæ; which occurs at the umbilicus or near it.

6. Epigastric Hernia;—occurring through the linea alba, above the umbilicus.

7. Hypogastric or Infra-umbilical Hernia, Cœliocœlæ, Hypogastrocœlæ,—which occurs through the linea alba, below the umbilicus.

8. Perineal Hernia; Mesoscelocœlæ,—which takes place through the levator ani, and appears at the perineum.

9. Vag'inal Hernia;—through the parietes of the vagina.

10. Diaphragmatic Hernia: which passes through the diaphragm.

Herniæ are likewise distinguished,—according to the viscera forming them,—into Enterocœlæ, Epiploœlæ, Entero-epiploœlæ, Gastrocœlæ, Cystocœlæ, Hepatoœlæ, Splenoœlæ, &c.

The CONGENITAL HERNIA, Hernia congenita, is a protrusion of some of the contents of the abdomen into the Tunica vaginalis testis, owing to a want of adhesion between its sides, after the descent of the testicle.

When a hernia can be restored to its natural cavity, by the aid of pressure, &c., properly applied, it is said to be reducible. It is, on the contrary, irreducible, when adhesion, bulk, &c. oppose its return. When the aperture, which has given passage to the hernia, occasions more or less constriction on the protruded portion, the hernia is said to be incarcerated or strangulated: and, if the constriction be not removed, constipation, hicough, vomiting, and all the signs of violent inflammation, followed by gangrene, supervene, with alteration of the features, small pulse, cold extremities, and death.

The therapeutical indications are,—

1. As regards reducible hernia;—to replace the viscera in the abdomen by the taxis; and to retain them there by the use of a truss, which, if properly adapted, may effect a radical cure.

2. As regards irreducible hernia;—to support the tumour by an appropriate suspensory bandage.

3. As regards strangulated hernia;—to have recourse to the taxis; blood letting; warm bath; tobacco glysters; ice to the tumour; and, if these should not succeed, to perform an operation, which consists in dividing the coverings of the hernia, and cutting the aponeurotic ring, which causes the strangulation;—reducing the displaced viscera, unless their diseased condition should require them to be retained without;—dressing the wound appropriately, restoring the course of the fæces by means of gentle glysters;—preventing or combating inflammation of the abdominal viscera;—conducting the wound to cicatrization, by appropriate means; and afterwards supporting the cicatrix by a bandage.

HERNIA ANEURISMAL, Cirsonphalus—h. Arteriarius, see Aneurism—h. of the Bladder, Cystocœle—h. Bronchialis, Bronchoœle—h. Carnosæ, Sarcoœle—h. of the Cerebellum, Parencephalocœle—h. Cerebri, Encephalocœle—h. Cornæ, Ceratocœle—h. Crural, Meroœle—h. Epiploicæ, Epiploœle—h. Femoral, Meroœle—h. Gutturis, Bronchoœle—h. Inguinalis, Bubonocœle—h. Intestinalis, Enterocœle—h. Ischiatica, Ischioœle—h. of the Liver, Hepatoœle—h. Omental, Epiploœle—h. Parorchido-enterica, Parorchido-enterocœle—h. Pharyngis, Pharyngocœle—h. Pneumicæ, Diaphragmatic hernia—h. of the Pleura, Pleuroœle—h. Puden'dal, Puden'dal hernia—h. Sacci lacrymalis, Lachrymal hernia—h. Scrotalis, Scrotocœle—h. Seminalis scroti, Spermatoœle—h. of the Stomach, Gastroœle—h. Supra-pubian, H. inguinal—h. of the Tongue, Glossocœle—h. Umbilicalis, Epiplophalon, Exomphalos—h. Varicose, Cirsoœle—h. Varicosa, Varicoœle—h. Venarum, Varix—h. Veneris, Hernia humoralis—h. Ventosa, Physocœle—h. Ventriculi, Gastroœle—h. Zirbalis, Epiploœle.

HERNIA HUMORALIS, Empres'ma Orchitis, Orchitis, Inflammatio testium, Inflammation of the Testicle, Swelled Testicle, Hernia veneris, Orchioœlæ, Orchidocœlæ, Orchidoncus. Swelling and inflammation of the testicle is a common symptom of gonorrhœa; but it may arise from external injuries, or from other causes. It is a disease, which cannot be mistaken, and the treatment must obviously be strongly antiphlogistic, supporting the testicle during the treatment, and for some time afterwards; methodical compression has also been found useful. The disease is not generally of a serious character, going off as suddenly as it comes on. As it affects the epididymis more especially, when supervening on gonorrhœa or blennorrhœa, it is sometimes termed blennorrhagic ep'ididymitis.

HERNIAIRE, Hernial, Herniaria glabra.

HERNIAL, Herniarius. (F.) Herniaire. Belonging to, or concerning, hernias;—as Hernial Bandage, Hernial Sac, &c.

The (F) Herniæ is applied to a part enveloped in a hernial sac; Hernieux means one affected with hernia; and Chirurgien herniaire, one who devotes himself to the treatment of hernia.

HERNIARIA GLABRA, M. nigra, Empetrum:—Rupture Wort. (F.) Herniaire, Turquette, Herniole. This plant, which, as its name imports, was formerly considered efficacious in the cure of hernia, seems destitute of all virtues.

HERNIE CHARNUE, Sarcocoele—h. de l'Epiploon, Epiplocele—h. de l'Estomac, Gastrocele—h. Inguinale, Bubonocoele—h. du Nombrii, Exomphalos—h. Umbilicalc, Exomphalos—h. de la Vessie, Cystocoele.

HERNIE, Hernial.

HERNIEUX, Hernial.

HERNIOLE, Herniaria glabra.

HERNIOTOMY, Herniotomia, from hernia and τενω, 'I cut.' The operation for hernia.

HERPES, Erpes, from ερω, 'I creep; because it creeps and spreads above the skin. Ecpthlysis Herpes, Cytis'ma Herpes, Tetter, Fret, (F.) Dartre. A vesicular disease, which, in most of its forms, passes through a regular course of increase, maturation, decline, and termination in about 10 or 14 days. The vesicles arise in distinct, but irregular clusters, which commonly appear in quick succession, and near together, on an inflamed base; generally attended with heat, pain, and considerable constitutional disorder. The term, like all others which refer to cutaneous diseases, has not been accurately defined. The ancients had three varieties; the miliaris, κεγχριος; vesicular, φλυκτανοειδης, and eroding, εοθιμιστος. Bateinan has the following varieties.

1. HERPES PHLYCTENODES, Herpes miliaris, Ecpthlysis Herpes Miliaris, (F.) Dartre phlyctenoidc, in which the vesicles are millet-sized; pellucid; clusters commencing on an uncertain part of the body, and being progressively strewed over the rest of the surface; succeeded by fresh crops.

2. HERPES ZOSTER, Zoster, Zona ignea, Ignis Persicus, Cinzilla, Sacer ignis, Ecpthlysis Herpes zoster, Herpes perisœlis, Erysipelas zoster, Erysipelas phlyctenoides, Zona, (F.) Ceinture, C. dartreuse, Feu Persique, Erysipèle pustuleux, Shingles: in which the vesicles are pearl-sized; the clusters spreading round the body, like a girdle: at times confluent, and occasionally preceded by constitutional irritation.

3. HERPES CIRCINATUS, Formica ambulato'ria, An'nulus repens, Herpes Serpigo, Serpigo, Ecpthlysis Herpes Circinatus, Ringworm, consisting of vesicles with a reddish base, uniting in rings: the area of the rings slightly discoloured; often followed by fresh crops.

4. HERPES LABIALIS.—5. HERPES PRÆPUTIALIS,—appearing, respectively, on the lips and prepuce:—and

6. HERPES IRIS, Iris, Rainbow-worm,—occurring in small circular patches, each of which is composed of concentric rings of different colour.

To these may be added the

HERPES EXEDENS, Ecpthlysis Herpes exedens, Herpes esthiom'enus, H. depus'enus, Agria, H. estiom'enus, Lupus vorax, Formica corrosiva, Popula fera, Ulcerative Ringworm, Nirles, H. ferus, (F.) Dartre rongante, in which the vesicles are hard; clusters thronged; fluid dense, yellow or reddish, hot, acrid, corroding the subjacent skin, and spreading in serpentine trails.

All the varieties demand simply an antiphlogistic treatment, when attended with febrile irritation. The herpes circinatus, alone, requires the use of astringent applications, which have the power of repressing the eruption.

HERPES DEPASCENS, H. exedens—h. Esthiomenus, H. exedens—h. Esthiomenus, H. exedens—h. Ferus, H. exedens—h. Miliaris, H. phlyctenoides—h. Periscelis, H. zoster—h. Serpigo, H. circinatus.

HERPETIC, Herpeticus, (F.) Dartreux. Possessing the nature of herpes.

HERPETON, Herpeticon, from ερω, 'to creep.' A creeping eruption or ulcer.—Hippocr.

HERPYLOS, Thymus serpyllum.

HESPERIS ALLIARIA, Alliaria.
