GUY FAUX:

ON THE PROBABLE EFFECTS OF THE GUNPOWDER
TREASON IN THIS COUNTRY IF THE CONSPIRATORS HAD ACCOMPLISHED THEIR OBJECT.

A VERY ingenious and subtle writer, whom there is good reason for suspecting to be an Ex-Jesuit, not unknown at Douay some five-and-twenty years since, (he will not obtrude himself at M——th again in a hurry,) about a twelvemonth back set himself to prove the character of the Powder Plot conspirators to have been that of heroic self-devotedness and true Christian martyrdom. Under the mask of Protestant candour he actually gained admission for his treatise into a London weekly paper, not particularly distinguished for its zeal towards either religion. But, admitting Catholic principles, his arguments are shrewd and incontrovertible. He says—

Guy Faux was a fanatic, but he was no hypocrite. He ranks among good haters. He was cruel, bloody-minded, reckless of all considerations but those of an infuriated and bigoted faith; but he was a true son of the Catholic Church, a martyr and a confessor, for all that. He who can prevail upon himself to devote his life for a cause, however we may condemn his opinions or abhor his actions, vouches at least for the honesty of his principles and the disinterestedness of his motives. He may be guilty of the worst practices, but he is capable of the greatest. He is no longer a slave, but free. The contempt of death is the beginning of virtue. The hero of the Gunpowder Plot was, if you will, a fool, a madman, an assassin; call him what names you please; still he was neither knave nor coward. He did not propose to blow up the Parliament and come off, scot-free, himself; he showed that he valued his own life no more than theirs in such a cause—where the integrity of the Catholic faith and the salvation of perhaps millions of souls was at stake. He did not call it a murder, but a sacrifice which he was about to achieve: he was armed with the Holy Spirit and with fire: he was the Church's chosen servant and her blessed martyr. He comforted himself as "the best of cut-throats." How many wretches are there that would have undertaken to do what he intended for a sum of money, if they could have got off with impunity! How few are there who would have put themselves in Guy Faux's situation to save the universe! Yet in the latter case we affect to be thrown into greater consternation than at the most unredeemed acts of villainy, as if the absolute disinterestedness of the motive doubled the horror of the deed! The cowardice and selfishness of mankind are in fact shocked at the consequences to themselves, (if such examples are held up for imitation,) and they make a fearful outcry against the violation of every principle of morality, lest they too should be called on for any such tremendous sacrifices, lest they in their turn should have to go on the forlorn hope of extra-official duty. Charity begins at home, is a maxim that prevails as well in the courts of conscience as in those of prudence. We would be thought to shudder at the consequences of crime to others, while we tremble for them to ourselves. We talk of the dark and cowardly assassin; and this is well, when an individual shrinks from the face of an enemy, and purchases his own safety by striking a blow in the dark: but how the charge of cowardly can be applied to the public assassin, who, in the very act of destroying another, lays down his life as the pledge and forfeit of his sincerity and boldness, I am at a loss to devise. There may be barbarous prejudice, rooted hatred, unprincipled treachery, in such an act; but he who resolves to take all the danger and odium upon himself, can no more be branded with cowardice than Regulus devoting himself for his country, or Codrus leaping into the fiery gulf. A wily Father Inquisitor, coolly and with plenary authority condemning hundreds of helpless, unoffending victims, to the flames or to the horrors of a living tomb, while he himself would not suffer a hair of his head to be hurt, is to me a character without any qualifying trait in it. Again: the Spanish conqueror and hero, the favourite of his monarch, who enticed thirty thousand poor Mexicans into a large open building, under promise of strict faith and cordial good-will, and then set fire to it, making sport of the cries and agonies of these deluded creatures, is an instance of uniting the most hardened cruelty with the most heartless selfishness. His plea was keeping no faith with heretics: this was Guy Faux's too; but I am sure at least that the latter kept faith with himself: he was in earnest in his professions. His was not gay, wanton, unfeeling depravity; he did not murder in sport; it was serious work that he had taken in hand. To see this arch-bigot, this heart-whole traitor, this pale miner in the infernal regions, skulking in his retreat with his cloak and dark lantern, moving cautiously about among his barrels of gunpowder loaded with death, but not yet ripe for destruction, regardless of the lives of others, and more than indifferent to his own, presents a picture of the strange infatuation of the human understanding, but not of the depravity of the human will, without an equal. There were thousands of pious Papists privy to and ready to applaud the deed when done: there was no one but our old fifth-of-November friend, who still flutters in rags and straw on the occasion, that had the courage to attempt it. In him stern duty and unshaken faith prevailed over natural frailty.

It is impossible, upon Catholic principles, not to admit the force of this reasoning; we can only not help smiling (with the writer) at the simplicity of the gulled editor, swallowing the dregs of Loyola for the very quintessence of sublimated reason in England at the commencement of the nineteenth century. We will just, as a contrast, show what we Protestants (who are a party concerned) thought upon the same subject, at a period rather nearer to the heroic project in question.

The Gunpowder Treason was the subject which called forth the earliest specimen which is left us of the pulpit eloquence of Jeremy Taylor. When he preached the Sermon on that anniversary, which is printed at the end of the folio edition of his Sermons, he was a young man just commencing his ministry, under the auspices of Archbishop Laud. From the learning, and maturest oratory, which it manifests, one should rather have conjectured it to have proceeded from the same person after he was ripened by time into a Bishop and Father of the Church.—“And, really, these Romano-barbari could never pretend to any precedent for an act so barbarous as theirs. Adramelech, indeed, killed a king, but he spared the people; Haman would have killed the people, but spared the king; but that both king and people, princes and judges, branch and root, should die at once, (as if Caligula’s wish were actuated, and all England upon one head,) was never known till now, that all the malice of the world met in this as in a centre. The Sicilian even-song, the matins of St. Bartholomew, known for the pitiless and damned massacres, were but κάπνοῦ σκίας ὄναρ, the dream of the shadow of smoke, if compared with this great fire. In tam occupato sæcula fabulas vulgares nequitia non invenit. This was a busy age; Herostratus must have invented a more sublimed malice than the burning of one temple, or not have been so much as spoke of since the discovery of the powder treason. But I must make more haste, I shall not else climb the sublimity of this impiety. Nero was sometimes the populare odium, was popularly hated, and deserved it too, for he slew his master, and his wife, and all his family, once or twice over,—opened his mother’s womb,—fired the city, laughed at it, slandered the Christians for it; but yet all these were but principia malorum, the very first rudiments of evil. Add, then, to these, Herod's master-piece at Ramah, as it was deciphered by the tears and sad threnes of the matrons in an universal mourning for the loss of their pretty infants; yet this of Herod will prove but an infant wickedness, and that of Nero the evil but of one city. I would willingly have found out an example, but see I cannot; should I put into the scale the extract of all the old tyrants famous in antique stories,— should I take for true story the highest cruelty as it was fancied by the most hieroglyphical Egyptian, this alone would weigh them down, as if the Alps were put in scale against the dust of a balance. For had this accursed treason prospered, we should have had the whole kingdom mourn for the inestimable loss of its chiefest glory, its life, its present joy, and all its very hopes for the future. For such was their destined malice, that they would not only have inflicted so cruel a blow, but have made it incurable, by cutting off our supplies of joy, the whole succession of the Line Royal. Not only the vine itself, but all the gemmae, and the tender olive branches, should either have been bent to their intentions, and made to grow crooked, or else been broken.

Bistonii stabulum regis, Busiridis aras,
Antiphatæ mensas, et Taurica regna Thoantis;—

“And now, after such a sublimity of malice, I will not instance in the sacrilegious ruin of the neighbouring temples, which needs must have perished in the flame,—nor in the disturbing the ashes of our intombed kings, devouring their dead ruins like sepulchral dogs,—these are but minutes, in respect of the ruin prepared for the living temples :—

Stragem sed istam non tulit
Christus cadentum Principum
Impune, ne forsàn sui
Patris periret fabrica.
Ergo quæ poterit lingua retexere
Laudes, Christe, tuas, qui domitum struis
Infidum populum cum Duce perfido!"

IN such strains of eloquent indignation did Jeremy Taylor's young oratory inveigh against that stupendous attempt, which he truly says had no parallel in ancient or modern times. A century and a half of European crimes has elapsed since he made the assertion, and his position remains in its strength. He wrote near the time in which the nefarious project had like to have been completed. Men's minds still were shuddering from the recentness of the escape. It must have been within his memory, or have been sounded in his ears so young by his parents, that he would seem, in his maturer years, to have remembered it. No wonder then that he describes it in words that burn. But to us, to whom the tradition has come slowly down, and has had time to cool, the story of Guido Vaux, sounds rather like a tale, a fable, and an invention, than true history. It supposes such gigantic audacity of daring, combined with such more than infantile stupidity in the motive,—such a combination of the fiend and the monkey,—that credulity is almost swallowed up in contemplating the singularity of the attempt. It has accordingly, in some degree, shared the fate of fiction. It is familiarized to us in a kind of serio-ludicrous way, like the story of Guy of Warwick, or Valentine and Orson. The way which we take to perpetuate the memory of this deliverance is well adapted to keep up this fabular notion. Boys go about the streets annually with a beggarly scarecrow dressed up, which is to be burnt, indeed, at night, with holy zeal; but, meantime, they beg a penny for poor Guy: this periodical petition, which we have heard from our infancy,—combined with the dress and appearance of the effigy, so well calculated to move compassion,—has the effect of quite removing from our fancy the horrid circumstances of the story which is thus commemorated; and in poor Guy vainly should we try to recognize any of the features of that tremendous madman in iniquity, Guido Vaux, with his horrid crew of accomplices, that sought to emulate earthquakes and bursting volcanoes in their more than mortal mischief.

Indeed, the whole ceremony of burning Guy Faux, or the Pope, as he is indifferently called, is a sort of Treason Travestie, and admirably adapted to lower our feelings upon this memorable subject. The printers of the little duodecimo Prayer Book, printed by T. Baskett,¹ in 1749, which has the effigy of his sacred Majesty George II. piously prefixed, have illustrated the service (a very fine one in itself) which is appointed for the Anniversary of this Day, with a print, which it is not very easy to describe, but the contents appear to be these:—The scene is a room,

¹ The same, I presume, upon whom the clergyman in the song of the Vicar and Moses, not without judgment, passes this memorable censure—

Here, Moses, the King:—
 'Tis a scandalous thing
 That this Baskett should print for the Crown.

I conjecture, in the king's palace. Two persons—one of whom I take to be James himself, from his wearing his hat while the other stands bareheaded—are intently surveying a sort of speculum, or magic mirror, which stands upon a pedestal in the midst of the room, in which a little figure of Guy Faux with his dark lantern approaching the door of the Parliament House is made discernible by the light proceeding from a great eye which shines in from the topmost corner of the apartment, by which eye the pious artist no doubt meant to designate Providence. On the other side of the mirror, is a figure doing something, which puzzled me when a child, and continues to puzzle me now. The best I can make of it is, that it is a conspirator busy laying the train ; but then, why is he represented in the king's chamber?—Conjecture upon so fantastical a design is vain, and I only notice the print as being one of the earliest graphic representations which woke my childhood into wonder, and doubtless combined with the mummery before mentioned, to take off the edge of that horror which the naked historical mention of Guido's conspiracy could not have failed of exciting.

Now that so many years are past since that abominable machination was happily frustrated, it will not, I hope, be considered a profane sporting with the subject, if we take no very serious survey of the consequences that would have flowed from this plot if it had had a successful issue. The first thing that strikes us, in a selfish point of view, is the material change which it must have produced in the course of the nobility. All the ancient peerage being extinguished, as it was intended, at one blow, the Red-Book must have been closed for ever, or a new race of peers must have been created to supply the deficiency; as the first part of this dilemma is a deal too shocking to think of, what a fund of mouth-watering reflections does this give rise to in the breast of us plebeians of A.D. 1823. Why you or I, reader, might have been Duke of ——, or Earl of ——: I particularise no titles, to avoid the least suspicion of intention to usurp the dignities of the two noblemen whom I have in my eye:—but a feeling more dignified than envy sometimes excites a sigh, when I think how the posterity of Guido's Legion of Honour (among whom you or I might have been) might have rolled down "dulcified," as Burke expresses it, "by an exposure to the influence of heaven in a long flow of generations, from the hard, acidulous, metallic tincture of the spring."¹ What new orders of merit, think you, this English Napoleon would have chosen? Knights of the Barrel, or Lords of the Tub, Grand Almoners of the Cellar, or Ministers of Explosion. We should have given the Train couchant, and the Fire rampant in our arms; we should have quartered the dozen white matches in our coats;—the Shallows would have been nothing to us.

Turning away from these mortifying reflections, let us contemplate its effects upon the other house, for they were all to have gone together,—King, Lords, Commons——

To assist our imagination, let us take leave to suppose—and we do it in the harmless wantonness of fancy—to suppose that the tremendous explosion had taken place in our days;—we better know what a House of Commons is in our days, and can better estimate our loss;—let us imagine, then, to ourselves, the United Members sitting in full conclave above—Faux just ready with his train and matches below; in his hand a “reed tipt with fire”—he applies the fatal engine——

To assist our notions still further, let us suppose some lucky dog of a reporter, who had escaped by miracle upon some plank of St. Stephen’s benches, and came plump upon the roof of the adjacent Abbey, from whence descending, at some neighbouring coffee-house, first wiping his clothes and calling for a glass of lemonade, he sits down and reports what he had heard and seen (quorum pars magna fuit) for the Morning Post or the Courier,—we can scarcely imagine him describing the event in any other words but some such as these:—

“A Motion was put and carried, That this House do adjourn: That the Speaker do quit the Chair. The House ROSE amid clamours for Order.”

In some such way the event might most technically have been conveyed to the public. But a poetical mind, not content with this dry method of narration, cannot help pursuing the effects of this tremendous blowing up, this adjournment in the air sine die. It sees the benches mount,—the Chair first, and then the benches, and first the Treasury Bench, hurried up in this nitrous explosion; the Members, as it were, pairing off; Whigs and Tories taking their friendly apotheosis together, (as they did their sandwiches below in Bellamy’s room). Fancy, in her flight, keeps pace with the aspiring legislators, she sees the awful seat of order mounting till it becomes finally fixed a constellation, next to Cassiopeia’s chair,—the wig of him that sat in it taking its place near Berenice's curls. St. Peter, at Heaven's wicket,—no, not St. Peter,—St. Stephen, with open arms, receives his own——

While Fancy beholds these celestial appropriations, Reason, no less pleased, discerns the mighty benefit which so complete a renovation must produce below. Let the most determined foe to corruption, the most thorough-paced redresser of abuses, try to conceive a more absolute purification of the House than this was calculated to produce;—why, Pride's Purge was nothing to it;—the whole borough-mongering system would have been got rid of, fairly exploded;—with it, the senseless distinctions of party must have disappeared; faction must have vanished; corruption have expired in air. From Hundred, Tything, and Wapentake, some new Alfred would have convened, in all its purity, the primitive Wittenagemot,—fixed upon a basis of property or population, permanent as the poles——

From this dream of universal restitution, Reason and Fancy with difficulty awake to view the real state of things. But, blessed be Heaven, St. Stephen's walls are yet standing, all her seats firmly secured; nay, some have doubted (since the Septennial Act) whether gunpowder itself, or any thing short of a Committee above stairs, would be able to shake any one member from his seat;—that great and final improvement to the Abbey, which is all that seems wanting,—the removing Westminster Hall and its appendages, and letting in the view of the Thames,—must not be expected in our days. Dismissing, therefore, all such speculations as mere tales of a tub, it is the duty of every honest Englishman to endeavour, by means less wholesome than Guido's, to ameliorate, without extinguishing, Parliaments; to hold the lantern to the dark places of corruption; to apply the match to the rotten parts of the system only; and to wrap himself up, not in the muffling mantle of conspiracy, but in the warm, honest cloak of integrity and patriotic intention.

BIOGRAPHICAL MEMOIR OF MR. LISTON.

THE subject of our memoir is lineally descended from Johan de L'Estonne, (see "Doomsday Book," where he is so written,) who came in with the Conqueror, and had lands awarded him at Lupton Magna, in Kent. His particular merits or services, Fabian, whose authority I chiefly follow, has forgotten, or perhaps thought it immaterial, to specify. Fuller thinks that he was standard-bearer to Hugo de Agmondesham, a powerful Norman baron, who was slain by the hand of Harold himself at the fatal battle of Hastings. Be this as it may, we find a family of that name flourishing some centuries later in that county. John Delliston, knight, was high sheriff for Kent, according to Fabian, quinto Henrici sexti: and we trace the lineal branch flourishing downwards,—the orthography varying, according to the unsettled usage of the times, from Delleston to Leston or Liston, between which it seems to have alternated, till, in the latter end of the reign of James I., it finally settled into the determinate and pleasing dissyllabic arrangement which it still retains. Aminadab Liston, the eldest male representative of the family of that day, was of the strictest order of Puritans. Mr. Foss, of Pall Mall, has obligingly communicated to me an undoubted tract of his, which bears the initials only, A. L., and is entitled, "The Grinning Glass, or Actor's Mirrour; where in the vituperative Visnomy of Vicious Players for the Scene is as virtuously reflected back upon their mimetic Monstrosities as it has viciously (hitherto) vitiated with its vile Vanities her Votarists." A strange title, but bearing the impress of those absurdities with which the title-pages of that pamphlet-spawning age abounded. The work bears date 1617. It preceded the "Histriomastix" by fifteen years; and, as it went before it in time, so it comes not far short of it in virulence. It is amusing to find an ancestor of Liston's thus bespattering the players at the commencement of the seventeenth century:—

"Thinketh He" (the actor), "with his costive countenances, to wry a sorrowing soul out of her anguish, or by defacing the divine denotement of destinate dignity (daignely described in the face humane and no other) to reinstamp the Paradise-plotted similitude with a novel and naughty approximation (not in the first intention) to those abhorred and ugly God-forbidden correspondences, with flouting Apes' jeering gibberings, and Babion babbling-like, to hoot out of countenance all modest measure, as if our sins were not sufficing to stoop our backs without He wresting and crooking his members to mistimed mirth (rather malice) in deformed fashion, leering when he should learn, prating for praying, goggling his eyes, (better upturned for grace,) whereas in Paradise (if we can go thus high for His profession) that devilish Serpent appeareth his undoubted Predecessor, first induing a mask like some roguish roistering Roscius (I spit at them all) to beguile with Stage shows the gaping Woman, whose Sex hath still chiefly upheld these Mysteries, and are voiced to be the chief Stage-haunters, where, as I am told, the custom is commonly to mumble (between acts) apples, not ambiguously derived from that pernicious Pippin (worse in effect than the Apples of Discord), whereas sometimes the hissing sounds of displeasure, as I hear, do lively reintonate that snake taking-leave, and diabolical goings off, in Paradise."

The Puritanic effervescence of the early Presbyterians appears to have abated with time, and the opinions of the more immediate ancestors of our subject to have subsided at length into a strain of moderate Calvinism. Still a tincture of the old leaven was to be expected among the posterity of A. L.

Our hero was an only son of Habakkuk Liston, settled as an Anabaptist minister upon the patrimonial soil of his ancestors. A regular certificate appears, thus entered in the Church book at Lupton Magna: "Johannes, filius Habakkuk et Rebeccæ Liston, Dissidentium, natus quinto Decembri, 1780, baptizatus sexto Februarii sequentis; Sponsoribus J. et W. Woollaston, unâ cum Maria Merryweather." The singularity of an Anabaptist minister conforming to the child-rites of the Church would have tempted me to doubt the authenticity of this entry, had I not been obliged with the actual sight of it by the favour of Mr. Minns, the intelligent and worthy parish clerk of Lupton. Possibly some expectation in point of worldly advantages from some of the sponsors might have induced this unseemly deviation, as it must have appeared, from the practice and principles of that generally rigid sect. The term Dissentientium was possibly intended by the orthodox clergyman as a slur upon the supposed inconsistency. What, or of what nature, the expectations we have hinted at may have been, we have now no means of ascertaining. Of the Woollastons no trace is now discoverable in the village. The name of Merryweather occurs over the front of a grocer's shop at the western extremity of Lupton.

Of the infant Liston we find no events recorded before his fourth year, in which a severe attack of the measles bid fair to have robbed the rising generation of a fund of innocent entertainment. He had it of the confluent kind, as it is called; and the child's life was for a week or two despaired of. His recovery he always attributes (under Heaven) to the humane interference of one Dr. Wilhelm Richter, a German empiric, who, in this extremity, prescribed a copious diet of sauer-kraut, which the child was observed to reach at with avidity, when other food repelled him; and from this change of diet his restoration was rapid and complete. We have often heard him name the circumstance with gratitude; and it is not altogether surprising that a relish for this kind of aliment, so abhorrent and harsh to common English palates, has accompanied him through life. When any of Mr. Liston's intimates invite him to supper, he never

At the age of nine, we find our subject under the tuition of the Rev. Mr. Goodenough, (his father's health not permitting him probably to instruct him himself,) by whom he was inducted into a competent portion of Latin and Greek, with some mathematics, till the death of Mr. Goodenough, in his own seventieth, and Master Liston's eleventh year, put a stop for the present to his classical progress.

We have heard our hero, with emotions which do his heart honour, describe the awful circumstances attending the decease of this worthy old gentleman. It seems they had been walking out together, master and pupil, in a fine sunset, to the distance of three-quarters of a mile west of Lupton, when a sudden curiosity took Mr. Goodenough, to look down upon a chasm, where a shaft had been lately sunk in a mining speculation, (then projecting, but abandoned soon after, as not answering the promised success, by Sir Ralph Shepperton, knight, and member for the county). The old clergyman, leaning over, either with incaution or sudden giddiness, (probably a mixture of both,) suddenly lost his footing, and, to use Mr. Liston's phrase, disappeared, and was doubtless broken into a thousand pieces. The sound of his head, &c., dashing successively upon the projecting masses of the chasm, had such an effect upon the child, that a serious sickness ensued; and, even for many years after his recovery, he was not once seen so much as to smile.

The joint death of both his parents, which happened not many months after this disastrous accident, and was probably (one or both of them) accelerated by it, threw our youth upon the protection of his maternal great-aunt, Mrs. Sittingbourn. Of this aunt we have never heard him speak but with expressions amounting almost to reverence. To the influence of her early counsels and manners, he has always attributed the firmness with which, in maturer years, thrown upon a way of life commonly not the best adapted to gravity and self-retirement, he has been able to maintain a serious character, untinged with the levities incident to his profession. Ann Sittingbourn (we have seen her portrait by Hudson) was stately, stiff, tall, with a cast of features strikingly resembling the subject of this memoir. Her estate in Kent was spacious and well wooded: the house one of those venerable old mansions which are so impressive in childhood, and so hardly forgotten in succeeding years. In the venerable solitudes of Charnwood, among thick shades of the oak and beech, (this last his favourite tree,) the young Liston cultivated those contemplative habits which have never entirely deserted him in after-years. Here he was commonly in the Summer months to be met with, with a book in his hand,—not a play-book,—meditating. Boyle's "Reflections" was at one time the darling volume; which, in its turn, was superseded by Young's "Night Thoughts," which has continued its hold upon him through life. He carries it always about with him; and it is no uncommon thing for him to be seen, in the refreshing intervals of his occupation, leaning against a side-scene, in a sort of Herbert-of-Cherbury posture, turning over a pocket-edition of his favourite author.

But the solitudes of Charnwood were not destined always to obscure the path of our young hero. The premature death of Mrs. Sittingbourn, at the age of seventy, occasioned by the incautious burning of a pot of charcoal in her sleeping chamber, left him in his nineteenth year nearly without resources. That the stage at all should have presented itself as an eligible scope for his talents, and, in particular, that he should have chosen a line so foreign to what appears to have been his turn of mind, may require some explanation.

At Charnwood, then, we behold him thoughtful, grave, ascetic. From his cradle averse to flesh-meats and strong drink; abstemious even beyond the genius of the place, and almost in spite of the remonstrances of his great-aunt, who, though strict, was not rigid,—water was his habitual drink, and his food little beyond the mast and beech-nuts of his favourite groves. It is a medical fact, that this kind of diet, however favourable to the contemplative powers of the primitive hermits, &c., is but ill adapted to the less robust minds and bodies of a later generation. Hypochondria almost constantly ensues. It was so in the case of the young Liston. He was subject to sights, and had visions. Those arid beech-nuts, distilled by a complexion naturally adust, mounted into an occiput already prepared to kindle by long seclusion and the fervour of strict Calvinistic notions. In the glooms of Charnwood he was assailed by illusions similar in kind to those which are related of the famous Anthony of Padua. Wild antic faces would ever and anon protrude themselves upon his sensorium. Whether he shut his eyes, or kept them open, the same illusions operated. The darker and more profound were his cogitations, the droller and more whimsical became the apparitions. They buzzed about him thick as flies, flapping at him, flouting him, hooting in his ear, yet with such comic appendages, that what at first was his bane became at length his solace; and he desired no better society than that of his merry phantasmata. We shall presently find in what way this remarkable phenomenon influenced his future destiny.

On the death of Mrs. Sittingbourn we find him received into the family of Mr. Willoughby, an eminent Turkey merchant, resident in Birchin Lane, London. We lose a little while here the chain of his history,—by what inducements this gentleman was determined to make him an inmate of his house. Probably he had had some personal kindness for Mrs. Sittingbourn formerly; but, however it was, the young man was here treated more like a son than a clerk, though he was nominally but the latter. Different avocations, the change of scene, with that alternation of business and recreation which in its greatest perfection is to be had only in London, appear to have weaned him in a short time from the hypochondriacal affections which had beset him at Charnwood.

In the three years which followed his removal to Birchin Lane, we find him making more than one voyage to the Levant, as chief factor for Mr. Willoughby at the Porte. We could easily fill our biography with the pleasant passages which we have heard him relate as having happened to him at Constantinople; such as his having been taken up on suspicion of a design of entering the seraglio, &c.: but, with the deepest conviction of this gentleman's own veracity, we think that some of the stories are of that whimsical, and others of that romantic nature, which, however diverting, would be out of place in a narrative of this kind, which aims not only at strict truth, but at avoiding the very appearance of the contrary.

We will now bring him over the seas again, and suppose him in the counting-house in Birchin Lane, his protector satisfied with the returns of his factorage, and all going on so smoothly, that we may expect to find Mr. Liston at last an opulent merchant upon 'Change, as it is called. But see the turns of destiny! Upon a Summer excursion into Norfolk in the year 1801, the accidental sight of pretty Sally Parker, as she was called, (then in the Norwich company,) diverted his inclinations at once from commerce; and he became, in the language of commonplace biography, stage-struck. Happy for the lovers of mirth was it that our hero took this turn; he might else have been to this hour that unentertaining character, a plodding London merchant.

We accordingly find him shortly after making his début, as it is called, upon the Norwich boards, in the season of that year, being then in the twenty-second year of his age. Having a natural bent to tragedy, he chose the part of Pyrrhus, in the "Distressed Mother," to Sally Parker's Hermione. We find him afterwards as Barnwell, Altamont, Chamont, &c.; but, as if Nature had destined him to the sock, an unavoidable infirmity absolutely discapacitated him for tragedy. His person, at this latter period of which I have been speaking, was graceful, and even commanding; his countenance set to gravity: he had the power of arresting the attention of an audience at first sight almost beyond any other tragic actor. But he could not hold it. To understand this obstacle, we must go back a few years to those appalling reveries at Charnwood. Those illusions, which had vanished before the dissipation of a less recluse life and more free society, now in his solitary tragic studies, and amid the intense calls upon feeling incident to tragic acting, came back upon him with tenfold vividness. In the midst of some most pathetic passage (the parting of Jaffier with his dying friend, for instance) he would suddenly be surprised with a fit of violent horse-laughter. While the spectators were all sobbing before him with emotion, suddenly one of those grotesque faces would peep out upon him, and he could not resist the impulse. A timely excuse once or twice served his purpose; but no audiences could be expected to bear repeatedly this violation of the continuity of feeling. He describes them (the illusions) as so many demons haunting him, and paralyzing every effort. Even now, I am told, he cannot recite the famous soliloquy in "Hamlet," even in private, without immoderate bursts of laughter. However, what he had not force of reason sufficient to overcome he had good sense enough to turn into emolument, and determined to make a commodity of his distemper. He prudently exchanged the buskin for the sock, and the illusions instantly ceased; or, if they occurred for a short season, by their very co-operation added a zest to his comic vein,—some of his most catching faces being (as he expresses it) little more than transcripts and copies of those extraordinary phantasmata.

We have now drawn out our hero's existence to the period when he was about to meet, for the first time, the sympathies of a London audience. The particulars of his success since have been too much before our eyes to render a circumstantial detail of them expedient. I shall only mention, that Mr. Willoughby, his resentments having had time to subside, is at present one of the fastest friends of his old renegado factor; and that Mr. Liston's hopes of Miss Parker vanishing along with his unsuccessful suit to Melpomene, in the Autumn of 1811 he married his present lady, by whom he has been blessed with one son, Philip, and two daughters, Ann and Angustina.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF MR. MUNDEN

IN A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

HARK'EE, Mr. Editor! A word in your ear. They tell me you are going to put me in print—in print, Sir,—to publish my life. What is my life to you, Sir? What is it to you whether I ever lived at all? My life is a very good life, Sir? I am insured at the Pelican, Sir? I am threescore years and six—six; mark me, Sir: but I can play Polonius, which, I believe, few of your corre—correspondents can do, Sir. I suspect tricks, Sir: I smell a rat; I do, I do. You would cog the die upon us; you would, you would, Sir. But I will forestall you, Sir. You would be deriving me from William the Conqueror, with a murrain to you. It is no such thing, Sir. The town shall know better, Sir. They begin to smoke your flams, Sir. Mr. Liston may be born where he pleases, Sir: but I will not be born at Lup—Lupton Magna, for any body's pleasure, Sir. My son and I have looked over the great map of Kent together, and we can find no such place as you would palm upon us, Sir; palm upon us, I say. Neither Magna nor Parva, as my son says, and he knows Latin, Sir; Latin. If you write my life true, Sir, you must set down, that I, Joseph Munden, comedian, came into the world upon Allhallows' Day, Anno Domini 1759—1759; no sooner nor later, Sir; and I saw the first light—the first light, remember, Sir, at Stoke Pogis—Stoke Pogis, comitatu Bucks, and not at Lup—Lup Magna, which I believe to be no better than moonshine—moonshine; do you mark me, Sir? I wonder you can put such flim flams upon us, Sir; I do, I do. It does not become you, Sir; I say it—I say it. And my father was an honest tradesman, Sir: he dealt in malt and hops, Sir, and was a Corporation man, Sir, and of the Church of England, Sir, and no Presbyterian; nor Ana—Anabaptist, Sir, however you may be disposed to make honest people believe to the contrary, Sir. Your bams are found out, Sir. The town will be your stale puts no longer, Sir; and you must not send us jolly fellows, Sir—we that are comedians, Sir,—you must not send us into groves and Charn—Charnwoods, a moping, Sir. Neither Charns, nor charnel houses, Sir. It is not our constitutions, Sir. I tell it you—I tell it you. I was a droll dog from my cradle. I came into the world tittering, and the midwife tittered, and the gossips spilt their caudle with tittering. And when I was brought to the font, the parson could not christen me for tittering. So I was never more than half baptized. And when I was little Joey I made 'em all titter;—there was not a melancholy face to be seen in Pogis. Pure nature, Sir. I was born a comedian. Old Screwup, the undertaker, could tell you, Sir, if he were living. Why, I was obliged to be locked up every time there was to be a funeral at Pogis. I was—I was, Sir. I used to grimace at the mutes, as he called it, and put 'em out with my mops and mows, till they couldn't stand at a door for me. And when I was locked up, with nothing but a cat in my company, I followed my bent with trying to make her laugh, and sometimes she would, and sometimes she would not. And my schoolmaster could make nothing of me: I had only to thrust my tongue in my cheek—in my cheek, Sir, and the rod dropped from his fingers: and so my education was limited, Sir. And I grew up a young fellow, and it was thought convenient to enter me upon some course of life that should make me serious; but it wouldn't do, Sir. And I was articled to a drysalter. My father gave forty pounds premium with me, Sir. I can show the indent—dent—dentures, Sir. But I was born to be a comedian, Sir; so I ran away, and listed with the players, Sir; and I topt my parts at Amersham and Gerrard's Cross, and played my own father to his face, in his own town of Pogis, in the part of Gripe, when I was not full seventeen years of age, and he did not know me again, but he knew me afterwards; and then he laughed, and I laughed, and, what is better, the drysalter laughed, and gave me up my articles for the joke's sake: so that I came into court afterwards with clean hands—with clean hands—do you see, Sir?

[Here the manuscript becomes illegible for two or three sheets onwards, which we presume to be occasioned by the absence of Mr. Munden, jun., who clearly transcribed it for the press thus far. The rest (with the exception of the concluding paragraph, which seemingly is resumed in the first handwriting) appears to contain a confused account of some lawsuit, in which the elder Munden was engaged; with a circumstantial history of the proceedings on a case of Breach of Promise of Marriage, made to or by (we cannot pick out which) Jemima Munden, spinster, probably the comedian's cousin, for it does not appear he had any sister; with a few dates, rather better preserved, of this great actor's engagements—as "Cheltenham (spelt Cheltnam) 1776;" "Bath, 1779;" "London, 1789;" together with stage anecdotes of Messrs. Edwin, Wilson, Lee Lewis, &c., over which we have strained our eyes to no purpose, in the hope of presenting something amusing to the public. Towards the end the manuscript brightens up a little, as we have said, and concludes in the following manner.]

——— stood before them for six-and-thirty years, [we suspect that Mr. Munden is here speaking of his final leave-taking of the stage,] and to be dismissed at last. But I was heart-whole, heart-whole to the last, Sir. What though a few drops did course themselves down the old veteran's cheeks; who could help it, Sir? I was a giant that night, Sir; and could have played fifty parts, each as arduous as Dozy. My faculties were never better, Sir. But I was to be laid upon the shelf. It did nor suit the public to laugh with their old servant any longer, Sir. [Here some moisture has blotted a sentence or two.] But I can play Polonius still, Sir; I can, I can.

Your servant, Sir,
JOSEPH MUNDEN.

UNITARIAN PROTESTS:

IN A LETTER TO A FRIEND OF THAT PERSUASION
NEWLY MARRIED.

DEAR M——, Though none of your acquaintance can with greater sincerity congratulate you upon this happy conjuncture than myself, one of the oldest of them, it was with pain I found you, after the ceremony, depositing in the vestry-room what is called a Protest. I thought you superior to this little sophistry. What, after submitting to the service of the Church of England—after consenting to receive a boon from her, in the person of your amiable consort—was it consistent with sense, or common good manners, to turn round upon her, and flatly taunt her with false worship? This language is a little of the strongest in your books and from your pulpits, though there it may well enough be excused from religious zeal and the native warmth of nonconformity. But at the altar, the Church of England altar, adopting her forms and complying with her requisitions to the letter, to be consistent, together with the practice, I fear you must drop the language of dissent. You are no longer sturdy Non Cons; you are there Occasional Conformists. You submit to accept the privileges communicated by a form of words, exceptionable, and perhaps justly, in your view; but, so submitting, you have no right to quarrel with the ritual which you have just condescended to owe an obligation to. They do not force you into their churches. You come voluntarily, knowing the terms. You marry in the name of the Trinity. There is no evading this by pretending that you take the formula with your own interpretation, (and so long as you can do this, where is the necessity of Protesting?) for the meaning of a vow is to be settled by the sense of the imposer, not by any forced construction of the taker: else might all vows, and oaths too, be eluded with impunity. You marry then essentially as Trinitarians; and the altar no sooner satisfied, than, (hey presto!) with the celerity of a juggler, you shift habits, and proceed pure Unitarians again in the vestry. You cheat the Church out of a wife, and go home smiling in your sleeves that you have so cunningly despoiled the Egyptians. In plain English, the Church has married you in the name of so and so, assuming that you took the words in her sense; but you outwitted her: you assented to them in your sense only, and took from her what, upon a right understanding, she would have declined giving you.

This is the fair construction to be put upon all Unitarian marriages as at present contracted; and so long as you Unitarians could salve your consciences with the equivoque, I do not see why the Established Church should have troubled herself at all about the matter. But the Protesters necessarily see further. They have some glimmerings of the deception ; they apprehend a flaw somewhere ; they would fain be honest, and yet they must marry notwithstanding ; for honesty's sake, they are fain to dehonestate themselves a little. Let me try the very words of your own Protest, to see what confessions we can pick out of them.

“ As Unitarians therefore we (you and your newly espoused bride) most solemnly protest against the service (which yourselves have just demanded) because we are thereby called upon, not only tacitly to acquiesce, but to profess a belief in a doctrine which is a dogma, as we believe, totally unfounded.” But do you profess that belief during the ceremony ; or are you only called upon for the profession but do not make it ? If the latter, then you fall in with the rest of your more consistent brethren, who waive the Protest ; if the former,—then, I fear, your Protest cannot save you.

Hard and grievous it is, that in any case an institution so broad and general as the union of man and wife should be so cramped and straitened by the hands of an imposing hierarchy, that to plight troth to a lovely woman a man must be necessitated to compromise his truth and faith to Heaven ; but so it must be, so long as you chuse to marry by the forms of the Church over which that hierarchy presides.

Therefore, say you, “ we Protest.” O poor and much-fallen word “ Protest ! ” It was not so that the first heroic reformers protested. They departed out of Babylon once for good and all ; they came not back for an occasional contact with her altars ; a dallying, and then a protesting against dalliance ; they stood not shuffling in the porch, with a Popish foot within, and its lame Lutheran fellow without, halting betwixt. These were the true Protestants. You are Protesters.

Besides the inconsistency of this proceeding, I must think it a piece of impertinence—unseasonable at least, and out of place—to obtrude these papers upon the officiating clergyman, to offer to a public functionary an instrument which by the tenor of his function he is not obliged to accept, but, rather, he is called upon to reject. Is it done in his clerical capacity? he has no power of redressing the grievance. It is to take the benefit of his ministry and then insult him. If in his capacity of fellow Christian only, what are your scruples to him, so long as you yourselves are able to get over them, and do get over them by the very fact of coming to require his services? The thing you call a Protest might with just as good a reason be presented to the churchwarden for the time being, to the parish clerk, or the pew opener.

The Parliament alone can redress your grievance, if any. Yet I see not how with any grace your people can petition for relief, so long as, by the very fact of your coming to Church to be married, they do bonâ fide and strictly relieve themselves. The Upper House, in particular, is not unused to these same things called Protests, among themselves. But how would this honourable body stare to find a noble Lord conceding a measure, and in the next breath, by a solemn Protest disowning it! A Protest is a reason given for non-compliance, not a subterfuge for an equivocal occasional compliance. It was reasonable in the primitive Christians to avert from their persons, by whatever lawful means, the compulsory eating of meats which had been offered unto idols. I dare say the Roman Prefects and Exarchats had plenty of petitioning in their days. But what would a Festus, or Agrippa, have replied to a petition to that effect, presented to him by some evasive Laodicean, with the very meat between his teeth, which he had been chewing voluntarily rather than abide the penalty? Relief for tender consciences means nothing, where the conscience has previously relieved itself; that is, has complied with the injunctions which it seeks preposterously to be rid of. Relief for conscience there is properly none, but what by better information makes an act appear innocent and lawful, with which the previous conscience was not satisfied to comply. All else is but relief from penalties, from scandal incurred by a complying practice, where the conscience itself is not fully satisfied.

But, say you, we have hard measure ! The Quakers are indulged with the liberty denied to us. They are ; and dearly have they earned it. You have come in (as a sect at least) in the cool of the evening ; at the eleventh hour. The Quaker character was hardened in the fires of persecution in the seventeenth century ; not quite to the stake and faggot, but little short of that, they grew up and thrived against noisome prisons, cruel beatings, whippings, stockings. They have since endured a century or two of scoffs, contempts ; they have been a bye-word, and a nay-word ; they have stood unmoved ; and the consequence of long conscientious resistance on one part is invariably, in the end, remission on the other. The legislature, that denied you the tolerance, which I do not know that at that time you even asked, gave them the liberty which, without granting, they would have assumed. No penalties could have driven them into the Churches.

This is the consequence of entire measures. Had the early Quakers consented to take oaths, leaving a Protest with the clerk of the court against them in the same breath with which they had taken them, do you in your conscience think that they would have been indulged at this day in their exclusive privilege of Affirming? Let your people go on for a century or so, marrying in your own fashion, and I will warrant them before the end of it the legislature will be willing to concede to them more than they at present demand.

Either the institution of marriage depends not for its validity upon hypocritical compliances with the ritual of an alien Church, (and then I do not see why you cannot marry among yourselves, as the Quakers, without their indulgence, would have been doing to this day,) or it does depend upon such ritual compliance, and then in your Protests you offend against a divine ordinance. I have read in the Essex Street Liturgy a form for the celebration of marriage. Why is this become a dead letter? O it has never been legalised!—that is to say, in the law's eye it is no marriage. But do you take upon you to say, in the view of the Gospel it would be none? Would your own people at least look upon a couple so paired, to be none? But the case of dowries, alimonies, inheritances, &c., which depend for their validity upon the ceremonial of the Church by law established—are these nothing? That our children are not legally Filii Nullius—is this nothing? I answer, nothing; to the preservation of a good conscience, nothing; to a consistent Christianity, less than nothing. Sad worldly thorns they are indeed, and stumbling blocks, well worthy to be set out of the way by a legislature calling itself Christian ; but not likely to be removed in a hurry by any shrewd legislators, who perceive that the petitioning complainants have not so much as bruised a shin in the resistance ; but, prudently declining the briars and the prickles, nestle quietly down in the smooth two-sided velvet of a Protesting Occasional Conformity.—I am, dear sir,

With much respect, yours, &c.,

ELIA.

LETTER TO AN OLD GENTLEMAN

WHOSE EDUCATION HAS BEEN NEGLECTED.

MY DEAR SIR,—The question which you have done me the honour to propose to me, through the medium of our common friend Mr. Grierson, I shall endeavour to answer with as much exactness as a limited observation and experience can warrant.

You ask—or rather, Mr. Grierson in his own interesting language asks for you—“Whether a person at the age of sixty-three, with no more proficiency than a tolerable knowledge of most of the characters of the English alphabet at first sight amounts to, by dint of persevering application, and good masters, —a docile and ingenuous disposition on the part of the pupil always pre-supposed—may hope to arrive, within a presumable number of years, at that degree of attainments, which shall entitle the possessor to the character, which you are on so many accounts justly desirous of acquiring, of a learned man.”

This is fairly and candidly stated—only I could wish that on one point you had been a little more explicit. In the mean time, I will take it for granted, that by a “knowledge of the alphabetic characters,” you confine your meaning to the single powers only, as you are silent on the subject of the diphthongs and harder combinations.

Why truly, Sir, when I consider the vast circle of sciences—it is not here worth while to trouble you with the distinction between learning and science—which a man must be understood to have made the tour of in these days, before the world will be willing to concede to him the title which you aspire to, I am almost disposed to reply to your inquiry by a direct answer in the negative.

However, where all cannot be compassed, a great deal that is truly valuable may be accomplished. I am unwilling to throw out any remarks that should have a tendency to damp a hopeful genius: but I must not in fairness conceal from you that you have much to do. The consciousness of difficulty is sometimes a spur to exertion. Rome—or rather, my dear Sir, to borrow an illustration from a place, as yet more familiar to you—Rumford—Rumford—was not built in a day.

Your mind as yet, give me leave to tell you, is in the state of a sheet of white paper. We must not blot or blur it over too hastily. Or, to use an opposite simile, it is like a piece of parchment all be-scrawled and be-scribbled over with characters of no sense or import, which we must carefully erase and remove, before we can make way for the authentic characters or impresses, which are to be substituted in their stead by the corrective hand of science.

Your mind, my dear Sir, again resembles that same parchment, which we will suppose a little hardened by time and disuse. We may apply the characters, but are we sure that the ink will sink ?

You are in the condition of a traveller, that has all his journey to begin. And again, you are worse off than the traveller which I have supposed—for you have already lost your way.

You have much to learn, which you have never been taught ; and more, I fear, to unlearn, which you have been taught erroneously. You have hitherto, I dare say, imagined, that the sun moves round the earth. When you shall have mastered the true solar system, you will have quite a different theory upon that point, I assure you. I mention but this instance. Your own experience, as knowledge advances, will furnish you with many parallels.

I can scarcely approve of the intention, which Mr. Grierson informs me you had contemplated, of entering yourself at a common seminary, and working your way up from the lower to the higher forms with the children. I see more to admire in the modesty, than in the expediency, of such a resolution. I own I cannot reconcile myself to the spectacle of a gentleman at your time of life seated, as must be your case at first, below a Tyro of four or five—for at that early age the rudiments of education usually commence in this country. I doubt whether more might not be lost in the point of fitness, than would be gained in the advantages which you propose to yourself by this scheme.

You say, you stand in need of emulation ; that this incitement is nowhere to be had but at a public school ; that you should be more sensible of your progress by comparing it with the daily progress of those around you. But have you considered the nature of emulation, and how it is sustained at those tender years, which you would have to come in competition with? I am afraid you are dreaming of academic prizes and distinctions. Alas! in the university, for which you are preparing, the highest medal would be a silver penny, and you must graduate in nuts and oranges.

I know that Peter, the great Czar—or Emperor—of Muscovy, submitted himself to the discipline of a dock-yard at Deptford, that he might learn, and convey it to his countrymen, the noble art of ship-building. You are old enough to remember him, or at least the talk about him. I call to mind also other great princes, who, to instruct themselves in the theory and practice of war, and set an example of subordination to their subjects, have condescended to enrol themselves as private soldiers; and, passing through the successive ranks of corporal, quartermaster, and the rest, have served their way up to the station, at which most princes are willing enough to set out—of General and Commander-in-Chief over their own forces. But—besides that there is oftentimes great sham and pretence in their show of mock humility—the competition which they stooped to was with their co-evals, however inferior to them in birth. Between ages so very disparate, as those which you contemplate, I fear there can no salutary emulation subsist.

Again, in the other alternative, could you submit to the ordinary reproofs and discipline of a day-school? Could you bear to be corrected for your faults? Or how would it look to see you put to stand, as must be the case sometimes, in a corner?

I am afraid that the idea of a public school in your circumstances must be given up.

But is it impossible, my dear Sir, to find some person of your own age—if of the other sex, the more agreeable perhaps—whose information, like your own, has rather lagged behind their years, who should be willing to set out from the same point with yourself, to undergo the same tasks—thus at once inciting and sweetening each other's labours in a sort of friendly rivalry? Such a one, I think, it would not be difficult to find in some of the western parts of this island—about Dartmoor for instance.

Or what if, from your own estate—that estate which, unexpectedly acquired so late in life, has inspired into you this generous thirst after knowledge, you were to select some elderly peasant, that might best be spared from the land, to come and begin his education with you, that you might till, as it were, your minds together—one, whose heavier progress might invite, without a fear of discouraging your emulation? We might then see—starting from an equal post—the difference of the clownish and the gentle blood.

A private education then, or such a one as I have been describing, being determined on, we must in the next place look for a preceptor; for it will be some time before either of you, left to yourselves, will be able to assist the other to any great purpose in his studies.

And now, my dear Sir, if in describing such a tutor as I have imagined for you, I use a style a little above the familiar one in which I have hitherto chosen to address you, the nature of the subject must be my apology. Difficile est de scientiis inscienter loqui; which is as much as to say that "in treating of scientific matters it is difficult to avoid the use of scientific terms." But I shall endeavour to be as plain as possible. I am not going to present you with the ideal of a pedagogue, as it may exist in my fancy, or has possibly been realized in the persons of Buchanan and Busby. Something less than perfection will serve our turn. The scheme which I propose in this first or introductory letter, has reference to the first four or five years of your education only; and in enumerating the qualifications of him that should undertake the direction of your studies, I shall rather point out the minimum, or least, that I shall require of him, than trouble you in the search of attainments neither common nor necessary to our immediate purpose.

He should be a man of deep and extensive knowledge. So much at least is indispensable. Something older than yourself, I could wish him, because years add reverence.

To his age and great learning, he should be blest with a temper and a patience, willing to accommodate itself to the imperfections of the slowest and meanest capacities. Such a one in former days Mr. Hartlib appears to have been, and such in our days I take Mr. Grierson to be; but our friend, you know, unhappily has other engagements. I do not demand a consummate grammarian; but he must be a thorough master of vernacular orthography, with an insight into the accentualities and punctualities of modern Saxon, or English. He must be competently instructed (or how shall he instruct you?) in the tetralogy, or first four rules, upon which not only arithmetic, but geometry, and the pure mathematics themselves, are grounded. I do not require that he should have measured the globe with Cook, or Ortelius, but it is desirable that he should have a general knowledge (I do not mean a very nice or pedantic one) of the great division of the earth into four parts, so as to teach you readily to name the quarters. He must have a genius capable in some degree of soaring to the upper element, to deduce from thence the not much dissimilar computation of the cardinal points, or hinges, upon which those invisible phenomena, which naturalists agree to term winds, do perpetually shift and turn. He must instruct you, in imitation of the old Orphic fragments, (the mention of which has possibly escaped you,) in numeric and harmonious responses, to deliver the number of solar revolutions, within which each of the twelve periods, into which the Annus Vulgaris, or common year, is divided, doth usually complete and terminate itself. The intercalaries, and other subtle problems, he will do well to omit, till riper years, and course of study, shall have rendered you more capable thereof. He must be capable of embracing all history, so as from the countless myriads of individual men, who have peopled this globe of earth—for it is a globe—by comparison of their respective births, lives, deaths, fortunes, conduct, prowess, &c., to pronounce, and teach you to pronounce, dogmatically and catechetically, who was the richest, who was the strongest, who was the wisest, who was the meekest man, that ever lived; to the facilitation of which solution, you will readily conceive, a smattering of biography would in no inconsiderable degree conduce. Leaving the dialects of men, (in one of which I shall take leave to suppose you by this time at least superfi-ally instituted,) you will learn to ascend with him to the contemplation of the unarticulated language, which was before the written tongue; and, with the aid of the elder Phrygian or Æsopic key, to interpret the sounds by which the animal tribes communicate their minds—evolving moral instruction with delight from the dialogue of cocks, dogs, and foxes. Or marrying theology with verse, from whose mixture a beautiful and healthy offspring may be expected, in your own native accents (but purified) you will keep time together to the profound harpings of the more modern or Wattsian hymnics.

Thus far I have ventured to conduct you to a “hill-side, whence you may discern the right path of a virtuous and noble education; laborious indeed at the first ascent, but else so smooth, so green, so full of goodly prospects and melodious sounds on every side, that the harp of Orpheus was not more charming.”¹

With best respects to Mr. Grierson, when you see him,

I remain, dear Sir, your obedient servant,

ELIA.

THE LAST PEACH.

I AM the miserablest man living. Give me counsel, dear Editor. I was bred up in the strictest principles of honesty, and have passed my life in punctual adherence to them. Integrity might be said to be ingrained in our family. Yet I live in constant fear of one day coming to the gallows.

Till the latter end of last Autumn I never experienced these feelings of self-mistrust, which ever since have embittered my existence. From the apprehension of that unfortunate man,² whose story began to make so great an impression upon the public about that time, I date my horrors. I never can get it out of my head that I shall some time or other commit a forgery, or do some equally vile thing. To make matters worse, I am in a banking-house. I sit surrounded with a cluster of bank notes. These were formerly no more to me than meat to a butcher's dog. They are now as toads and aspics. I feel all day like one situated amidst gins and pitfalls. Sovereigns, which I once took such pleasure in counting out, and scraping up with my little tin shovel, (at which I was the most expert in the banking-house,) now scald my hands. When I go to sign my name, I set down that of another person, or write my own in a counterfeit character. I am beset with temptations without motive. I want no more wealth than I possess. A more contented being than myself, as to money matters, exists not. What should I fear?

When a child, I was once let loose, by favour of a nobleman's gardener, into his lordship's magnificent fruit garden, with full leave to pull the currants and the gooseberries; only, I was interdicted from touching the wall fruit. Indeed at that season (it was the end of Autumn) there was little left. Only on the south wall (can I forget the hot feel of the brick-work?) lingered the one last peach. Now, peaches are a fruit which I always had, and still have, an almost utter aversion to. There is something to my palate singularly harsh and repulsive in the flavour of them. I know not by what demon of contradiction inspired, but I was haunted with an irresistible desire to pluck it. Tear myself as often as I would from the spot, I found myself still recurring to it, till maddening with desire, (desire I cannot call it, with wilfulness rather,—without appetite,—against appetite, I may call it,) in an evil hour I reached out my hand, and plucked it. Some few raindrops just then fell; the sky (from a bright day) became overcast; and I was a type of our first parents, after the eating of that fatal fruit. I felt myself naked and ashamed, stripped of my virtue, spiritless. The downy fruit, whose sight rather than savour had tempted me, dropped from my hand, never to be tasted. All the commentators in the world cannot persuade me but that the Hebrew word, in the second chapter of Genesis, translated "apple," should be rendered "peach." Only this way can I reconcile that mysterious story.

Just such a child at thirty am I among the cash and valuables, longing to pluck, without an idea of enjoyment further. I cannot reason myself out of these fears; I dare not laugh at them. I was tenderly and lovingly brought up. What then? Who that in life's entrance has seen the babe F——, from the lap stretching out his little fond mouth to catch the maternal kiss, could have predicted, or as much as imagined, that life's very different exit? The sight of my own fingers torments me; they seem so admirably constructed for pilfering. Then the jugular vein which I have in common —; in an emphatic sense may I say with David, I am "fearfully made." All my mirth is poisoned by these unhappy suggestions. If, to dissipate reflection, I hum a tune, it changes to the "Lamentations of a Sinner." My very dreams are tainted. I awake with a shocking feeling of my hand in some pocket.

Advise me, dear Editor, on this painful heart-malady. Tell me, do you feel any thing allied to it in yourself? Do you never feel an itching as it were,—a dactylomania,—or am I alone? You have my honest confession. My next may appear from Bow Street.

SUSPENSURUS.

REFLECTIONS IN THE PILLORY.

[ABOUT the year 18—, one R—d, a respectable London merchant, (since dead,) stood in the pillory for some alleged fraud upon the Revenue. Among his papers were found the following “Reflections,” which we have obtained by favour of our friend Elia, who knew him well, and had heard him describe the train of his feelings upon that trying occasion almost in the words of the MS. Elia speaks of him as a man (with the exception of the peccadillo aforesaid) of singular integrity in all his private dealings, possessing great suavity of manner, with a certain turn for humour. As our object is to present human nature under every possible circumstance, we do not think that we shall sully our pages by inserting it.—Editor of the London Magazine.]

Scene—Opposite the Royal Exchange.

Time—Twelve to One, Noon.

KETCH, my good fellow, you have a neat hand. Prithee, adjust this new collar to my neck gingerly. I am not used to these wooden cravats. There,—softly, softly! That seems the exact point between ornament and strangulation. A thought looser on this side. Now it will do. And have a care in turning me, that I present my aspect due vertically. I now face the orient. In a quarter of an hour I shift southward, (do you mind?) and so on till I face the east again, travelling with the sun. No half points, I beseech you,—N.N. by W. or any such elaborate niceties. They become the shipman's card, but not this mystery. Now leave me a little to my own reflections.

Bless us, what a company is assembled in honour of me! How grand I stand here! I never before felt so sensibly the effect of solitude in a crowd. I muse in solemn silence upon that vast miscellaneous rabble in the pit there. From my private box I contemplate with mingled pity and wonder the gaping curiosity of those underlings. There are my White-chapel supporters. Rosemary Lane has emptied herself of the very flower of her citizens to grace my show. Duke's Place sits desolate. What is there in my face that strangers should come so far from the east to gaze upon it? [Here an egg narrowly misses him.] That offering was well meant, but not so cleanly executed. By the tricklings, it should not be either myrrh or frankincense. Spare your presents, my friends; I am noways mercenary. I desire no missive tokens of your approbation. I am past those valentines. Bestow these coffins of untimely chickens upon mouths that water for them. Comfort your addle spouses with them at home, and stop the mouths of your brawling brats with such Olla Podridas: they have need of them. [A brick is le fly]. Discase not, I pray you, nor dismantle your rent and ragged tenements, to furnish me with architectural decorations, which I can excuse. This fragment might have stopped a flaw against snow comes.

[A coal flies.] Cinders are dear, gentlemen. This nubbling might have helped the pot boil, when your dirty cuttings from the shambles at three ha'pence a pound shall stand at a cold simmer. Now, south about, Ketch! I would enjoy Australian popularity.

What my friends from over the water! Old benchers—flies of a day—ephemeral Romans—welcome! Doth the sight of me draw souls from limbo? can it dispeople purgatory?—Ha!

What am I, or what was my father's house, that I should thus be set up a spectacle to gentlemen and others? Why are all faces, like Persians at the sunrise, bent singly on mine alone? It was wont to be esteemed an ordinary visnomy, a quotidian merely. Doubtless, these assembled myriads discern some traits of nobleness, gentility, breeding, which hitherto have escaped the common observation,—some intimations, as it were, of wisdom, valour, piety, and so forth. My sight dazzles; and if I am not deceived by the too familiar pressure of this strange neckcloth that envelopes it, my countenance gives out lambent glories. For some painter now to take me in the lucky point of expression!—the posture so convenient,—the head never shifting, but standing quiescent in a sort of natural frame. But these artizans require a westerly aspect. Ketch, turn me!

Something of St. James's air in these my new friends. How my prospects shift, and brighten! Now if Sir Thomas Lawrence be anywhere in that group, his fortune is made for ever. I think I see some one taking out a crayon. I will compose my whole face to a smile, which yet shall not so predominate but that gravity and gaiety shall contend as it were,—(you understand me?) I will work up my thoughts to some mild rapture—a gentle enthusiasm, which the artist may transfer in a manner warm to the canvass. I will inwardly apostrophize my tabernacle.

Delectable mansion, hail! House, not made of every wood! Lodging, that pays no rent; airy and commodious; which, owing no window tax, art yet all casement, out of which men have such pleasure in peering and overlooking, that they will sometimes stand an hour together to enjoy thy prospects! Cell, recluse from the vulgar! Quiet retirement from the great Babel, yet affording sufficient glimpses into it! Pulpit, that instructs without note or sermon-book, into which the preacher is inducted without tenth or first fruit! Throne, unshared and single, that disdainest a Brentford competitor! Honour without co-rival! Or hearest thou rather, magnificent theatre in which the spectator comes to see and to be seen? From thy giddy heights I look down upon the common herd, who stand with eyes upturned as if a winged messenger hovered over them; and mouths open as if they expected manna. I feel, I feel the true Episcopal yearnings. Behold in me, my flock, your true overseer! What though I cannot lay hands, because my own are laid, yet I can mutter benedictions. True otium cum dignitate! Proud Pisgah eminence! Pinnacle sublime! O Pillory, 'tis thee I sing! Thou younger brother to the gallows, without his rough and Esau palms; that with ineffable contempt surveyest beneath thee the grovelling stocks, which claims presumptuously to be of thy great race. Let that low wood know, that thou art far higher born! Let that domicile for groundling rogues and base earth-kissing varlets envy thy preferment, not seldom fated to be the wanton baiting-house, the temporary retreat of poet and of patriot. Shades of Bastwick and of Prynne hover over thee! Defoe is there, and more greatly daring Shebbeare: from their (little more elevated) stations they look down with recognitions. Ketch, turn me!

I now veer to the north. Open your widest gates, thou proud Exchange of London, that I may look in as proudly! Gresham's wonder, hail! I stand upon a level with all your kings. They, and I, from equal heights, with equal superciliousness, o'er-look the plodding money-hunting tribe below; who, busied in their sordid speculations, scarce elevate their eyes to notice your ancient, or my recent, grandeur. The second Charles smiles on me from three pedestals!¹ He closed the Exchequer; I cheated the Excise. Equal our darings, equal be our lot.

Are those the quarters? 'tis their fatal chime. That the ever-winged hours would but stand still! But I must descend, descend from this dream of greatness. Stay, stay, a little while, importunate hour-hand! A moment or two, and I shall walk on foot with the undistinguished many. The clock speaks one. I return to common life. Ketch, let me out!

¹ A statue of Charles II. by the elder Cibber, adorns the front of the Exchange. He stands also on high, in the train of his crowned ancestors, in his proper order, within that building. But the merchants of London, in a superfoetation of loyalty, have, within a few years, caused to be erected another effigy of him on the ground in the centre of the interior. We do not hear that a fourth is in contemplation.—Editor of the London Magazine.

A VISION OF HORNS.

My thoughts had been engaged last evening in solving the problem, why in all times and places the horn has been agreed upon as the symbol, or honourable badge, of married men. Moses's horn, the horn of Ammon, of Amalthea, and a cornucopia of legends besides, came to my recollection, but afforded no satisfactory solution, or rather involved the question in deeper obscurity. Tired with the fruitless chase of inexplicit analogies, I fell asleep, and dreamed in this fashion:—

I thought certain scales or films fell from my eyes, which had hitherto hindered these little tokens from being visible. I was somewhere in the Cornhill (as it might be termed) of some Utopia. Busy citizens jostled each other, as they may do in our streets, with care (the care of making a penny) written upon their foreheads; and something else, which is rather.

imagined than distinctly imaged, upon the brows of my own friends and fellow-townsmen.

In my first surprise I supposed myself gotten into some forest,—Arden, to be sure, or Sherwood; but the dresses and deportment, all civic, forbade me to continue in that delusion. Then a scriptural thought crossed me, (especially as there were nearly as many Jews and Christians among them,) whether it might not be the Children of Israel going up to besiege Jericho. I was undeceived of both errors by the sight of many faces which were familiar to me. I found myself strangely (as it will happen in dreams) at one and the same time in an unknown country, with known companions. I met old friends, not with new faces, but with their old faces oddly adorned in front, with each man a certain corneous excrescence. Dick Mitis, the little cheesemonger in St. *'s Passage, was the first that saluted me, with his hat off, (you know Dick's way to a customer,) and, I not being aware of him, he thrust a strange beam into my left eye, which pained and grieved me exceedingly; but, instead of apology, he only grinned and fleered in my face, as much as to say, "It is the custom of the country," and passed on.

I had scarce time to send a civil message to his lady, whom I have always admired as a pattern of a wife,—and do indeed take Dick and her to be a model of conjugal agreement and harmony,—when I felt an ugly smart in my neck, as if something had gored it behind; and turning round, it was my old friend and neighbour, Dulcet, the confectioner, who, meaning to be pleasant, had thrust his protuberance right into my nape, and seemed proud of his power of offending.

Now I was assailed right and left, till in my own defence I was obliged to walk sideling and wary, and look about me, as you guard your eyes in London streets; for the horns thickened, and came at me like the ends of umbrellas poking in one's face.

I soon found that these towns-folk were the civillest best-mannered people in the world, and that if they had offended at all, it was entirely owing to their blindness. They do not know what dangerous weapons they protrude in front, and will stick their best friends in the eye with provoking complacency. Yet the best of it is, they can see the beams on their neighbours' foreheads, if they are as small as motes, but their own beams they can in nowise discern.

There was little Mitis, that I told you I just encountered. He has simply (I speak of him at home in his own shop) the smoothest forehead in his own conceit. He will stand you a quarter of an hour together, contemplating the serenity of it in the glass, before he begins to shave himself in a morning; yet you saw what a desperate gash he gave me.

Desiring to be better informed of the ways of this extraordinary people, I applied myself to a fellow of some assurance, who (it appeared) acted as a sort of interpreter to strangers; he was dressed in a military uniform, and strongly resembled Colonel ———, of the Guards. And "Pray, sir," said I, "have all the inhabitants of your city these troublesome excrescences? I beg pardon; I see you have none. You perhaps are single." "Truly, sir," he replied with a smile, "for the most part we have, but not all alike. There are some, like Dick, that sport but one tumescence. Their ladies have been tolerably faithful,— have confined themselves to a single aberration or so; these we call Unicorns. Dick, you must know, is my Unicorn. [He spoke this with an air of invincible assurance.] Then we have Bicornes, Tricornes, and so on up to Millecorns. [Here methought I crossed and blessed myself in my dream.] Some again we have,—there goes one: you see how happy the rogue looks,—how he walks smiling and perking up his face, as if he thought himself the only man. He is not married yet; but on Monday next he leads to the altar the accomplished widow Dacres, relict of our late sheriff.”

“I see, sir,” said I, “and observe that he is happily free from the national goitre (let me call it) which distinguishes most of your countrymen.”

“Look a little more narrowly,” said my conductor.

I put on my spectacles; and, observing the man a little more diligently, above his forehead I could mark a thousand little twinkling shadows dancing the horn-pipe; little hornlets, with rudiments of horn, of a soft and pappy consistence, (for I handled some of them,) but which, like coral out of water, my guide informed me would infallibly stiffen and grow rigid within a week or two from the expiration of his bachelorhood.

Then I saw some horns strangely growing out behind; and my interpreter explained these to be married men whose wives had conducted themselves with infinite propriety since the period of their marriage, but were thought to have antedated their good men's titles, by certain liberties they had indulged themselves in, prior to the ceremony. This kind of gentry wore their horns backwards, as has been said, in the fashion of the old pig-tails; and as there was nothing obtrusive or ostentatious in them, nobody took any notice of it.

Some had pretty little budding antlers, like the first essays of a young faun. These, he told me, had wives, whose affairs were in a hopeful way, but not quite brought to a conclusion.

Others had nothing to show: only by certain red angry marks and swellings in their foreheads, which itched the more they kept rubbing and chafing them, it was to be hoped that something was brewing.

I took notice that every one jeered at the rest, only none took notice of the sea-captains; yet these were as well provided with their tokens as the best among them. This kind of people, it seems, taking their wives upon so contingent tenures, their lot was considered as nothing but natural: so they wore their marks without impeachment, as they might carry their cockades; and nobody respected them a whit the less for it.

I observed, that the more sprouts grew out of a man's head, the less weight they seemed to carry with them; whereas a single token would now and then appear to give the wearer some uneasiness. This shows that use is a great thing.

Some had their adornings gilt, which needs no explanation; while others, like musicians, went sounding theirs before them,—a sort of music which I thought might very well have been spared.

It was pleasant to see some of the citizens encounter between themselves; how they smiled in their sleeves at the shock they received from their neighbour, and none seemed conscious of the shock which their neighbour experienced in return.

Some had great corneous stumps, seemingly torn off and bleeding. These, the interpreter warned me, were husbands who had retaliated upon their wives, and the badge was in equity divided between them.

While I stood discerning of these things, a slight tweak on my cheek unawares, which brought tears into my eyes, introduced to me my friend Placid, between whose lady and a certain male cousin some idle flirtations I remember to have heard talked of; but that was all. He saw he had somehow hurt me, and asked my pardon with that round unconscious face of his, and looked so tristful and contrite for his no-offence, that I was ashamed for the man's penitence. Yet I protest it was but a scratch. It was the least little hornet of a horn that could be framed. "Shame on the man," I secretly exclaimed, "who could thrust so much as the value of a hair into a brow so unsuspecting and inoffensive! What, then, must they have to answer for, who plant great, monstrous, timber-like, projecting antlers upon the heads of those whom they call their friends, when a puncture of this atomical tenuity made my eyes to water at this rate! All the pincers at Surgeons' Hall cannot pull out for Placid that little hair."

I was curious to know what became of these frontal excrescences when the husbands died; and my guide informed me that the chemists in their country made a considerable profit by them, extracting from them certain subtile essences; and then I remembered that nothing was so efficacious in my own for restoring swooning matrons and wives troubled with the vapours as a strong sniff or two at the composition, appropriately called hartshorn,—far beyond sal volatile.

Then also I began to understand why a man, who is the jest of the company, is said to be the butt;

as much as to say, such a one butteth with the horn.

I inquired if by no operation these wens were ever extracted; and was told that there was indeed an order of dentists, whom they call canonists in their language, who undertook to restore the forehead to its pristine smoothness; but that ordinarily it was not done without much cost and trouble; and when they succeeded in plucking out the offending part it left a painful void, which could not be filled up; and that many patients who had submitted to the excision were eager to marry again, to supply with a good second antler the baldness and deformed gap left by the extraction of the former, as men losing their natural hair substitute for it a less-becoming periwig.

Some horns I observed beautifully taper, smooth, and (as it were) flowering. These I understand were the portions brought by handsome women to their spouses; and I pitied the rough, homely, unsightly deformities on the brows of others, who had been deceived by plain and ordinary partners. Yet the latter I observed to be by far the most common; the solution of which I leave to the natural philosopher.

One tribe of married men I particularly admired at, who, instead of horns, wore, engrafted on their forehead, a sort of horn-book. "This," quoth my guide, "is the greatest mystery in our country, and well worth an explanation. You must know that all infidelity is not of the senses. We have as well intellectual, as material, wittols. These, whom you see decorated with the Order of the Book, are triflers, who encourage about their wives' presence the society of your men of genius, (their good friends, as they call them,)—literary disputants, who ten to one out-talk the poor husband, and commit upon the understanding of the woman a violence and estrangement in the end, little less painful than the coarser sort of alienation. Whip me these knaves—[my conductor here expressed himself with a becoming warmth]—whip me them, I say, who, with no excuse from the passions, in cold blood seduce the minds rather than the persons of their friends' wives; who, for the tickling pleasure of hearing themselves prate, dehonestate the intellects of married women, dishonouring the husband in what should be his most sensible part. If I must be—[here he used a plain word] let it be by some honest sinner like myself, and not by one of these gad-flies, these debauchers of the understanding, these flattery-buzzers." He was going on at this rate, and I was getting insensibly pleased with my friend's manner, (I had been a little shy of him at first,) when the dream suddenly left me, vanishing—as Virgil speaks—through the gate of Horn.

ELIA.

ON THE AMBIGUITIES ARISING FROM PROPER NAMES.

How oddly it happens that the same sound shall suggest to the minds of two persons hearing it ideas the most opposite! I was conversing, a few years since, with a young friend upon the subject of poetry, and particularly that species of it which is known by the name of the epithalamium. I ventured to assert that the most perfect specimen of it in our language was the "Epithalamium" of Spenser upon his own marriage.

My young gentleman, who has a smattering of taste, and would not willingly be thought ignorant of any thing remotely connected with the belles lettres, expressed a degree of surprise, mixed with mortification, that he should never have heard of this poem; Spenser being an author with whose writings he thought himself peculiarly conversant.

I offered to show him the poem in the fine folio copy of the poet's works which I have at home. He seemed pleased with the offer, though the mention of the folio seemed again to puzzle him. But, presently after, assuming a grave look, he compassionately muttered to himself, "Poor Spencer!"

There was something in the tone with which he spoke these words that struck me not a little. It was more like the accent with which a man bemoans some recent calamity that has happened to a friend, than that tone of sober grief with which we lament the sorrows of a person, however excellent and however grievous his afflictions may have been, who has been dead more than two centuries. I had the curiosity to inquire into the reasons of so uncommon an ejaculation. My young gentleman, with a more solemn tone of pathos than before, repeated, "Poor Spencer!" and added, "He has lost his wife!"

My astonishment at this assertion rose to such a height, that I began to think the brain of my young friend must be cracked, or some unaccountable revery had gotten possession of it. But, upon further explanation, it appeared that the word "Spenser"—which to you or me, reader, in a conversation upon poetry too, would naturally have called up the idea of an old poet in a ruff, one Edmund Spenser, that flourished in the days of Queen Elizabeth, and wrote a poem called "The Fairy Queen," with "The Shepherd's Calendar," and many more verses besides—did, in the mind of my young friend, excite a very different and quite modern idea; namely, that of the Honourable William Spencer, one of the living ornaments, if I am not misinformed, of this present poetical era, A.D. 1811.

ON THE CUSTOM OF HISSING AT THE THEATRES;

WITH SOME ACCOUNT OF A CLUB OF DAMNED AUTHORS.

MR. REFLECTOR,—I am one of those persons whom the world has thought proper to designate by the title of Damned Authors. In that memorable season of dramatic failures, 1806-7,—in which no fewer, I think, than two tragedies, four comedies, one opera, and three farces, suffered at Drury Lane Theatre,—I was found guilty of constructing an afterpiece, and was damned.

Against the decision of the public in such instances there can be no appeal. The clerk of Chatham might as well have protested against the decision of Cade and his followers, who were then the public. Like him, I was condemned because I could write.

Not but it did appear to some of us that the measures of the popular tribunal at that period savoured a little of harshness and of the summum jus. The public mouth was early in the season fleshed upon the "Vindictive Man," and some pieces of that nature; and it retained, through the remainder of it, a relish of blood. As Doctor Johnson would have said, "Sir, there was a habit of sibilation in the house."

Still less am I disposed to inquire into the reason of the comparative lenity, on the other hand, with which some pieces were treated, which, to indifferent judges, seemed at least as much deserving of condemnation as some of those which met with it. I am willing to put a favourable construction upon the votes that were given against us; I believe that there was no bribery or designed partiality in the case: only "our nonsense did not happen to suit their nonsense;" that was all.

But against the manner in which the public, on these occasions, think fit to deliver their disapprobation, I must and ever will protest.

Sir, imagine (but you have been present at the damning of a piece; those who never had that felicity I beg them to imagine) a vast theatre, like that which Drury Lane was before it was a heap of dust and ashes, (I insult not over its fallen greatness; let it recover itself when it can for me, let it lift up its towering head once more, and take in poor authors to write for it; hic cæstus artemque repono,)—a theatre like that, filled with all sorts of disgusting sounds,—shrieks, groans, hisses, but chiefly the last, like the noise of many waters, or that which Don Quixote heard from the fulling-mills, or that wilder combination of devilish sounds which St. Anthony listened to in the wilderness.

Oh Mr. Reflector, is it not a pity that the sweet human voice, which was given man to speak with, to sing with, to whisper tones of love in, to express compliance, to convey a favour, or to grant a suit,—that voice, which in a Siddons or a Braham rouses us, in a siren Catalani charms and captivates us,—that the musical, expressive human voice should be converted into a rival of the noises of silly geese, and irrational, venomous snakes?

I never shall forget the sounds on my night. I never before that time fully felt the reception which the Author of All Ill, in the “Paradise Lost,” meets with from the critics in the pit, at the final close of his “Tragedy upon the Human Race,”—though that, alas! met with too much success:—

“ From innumerable tongues
A dismal universal biss, the sound
Of public scorn. Dreadful was the din
Of bissing through the hall, thick swarming now
With complicated monsters, head and tail,
Scorpion and Asp, and Amphisbæna dire,
Cerastes horned, Hydras, and Elops drear,
And Dipsas.”

For hall substitute theatre, and you have the very image of what takes place at what is called the dâmnation of a piece,—and properly so called; for here you see its origin plainly, whence the custom was derived, and what the first piece was that so suffered. After this, none can doubt the propriety of the appellation.

But, sir, as to the justice of bestowing such appalling, heart-withering denunciations of the popular obloquy upon the venial mistake of a poor author, who thought to please us in the act of filling his pockets, (for the sum of his demerits amounts to no more than that,) it does, I own, seem to me a species of retributive justice far too severe for the offence. A culprit in the pillory (bate the eggs) meets with no severer exprobration.

Indeed I have often wondered that some modest critic has not proposed that there should be a wooden machine to that effect erected in some convenient part of the proscenium, which an unsuccessful author should be required to mount, and stand his hour, exposed to the apples and oranges of the pit. This amende honorable would well suit with the meanness of some authors, who, in their prologues, fairly prostrate their skulls to the audience, and seem to invite a pelting.

Or why should they not have their pens publicly broke over their heads, as the swords of recreant knights in old times were, and an oath administered to them that they should never write again?

Seriously, Messieurs the Public, this cutragious way which you have got of expressing your displeasure is too much for the occasion. When I was deafening under the effects of it, I could not help asking what crime of great moral turpitude I had committed: for every man about me seemed to feel the offence as personal to himself; as something which public interest and private feelings alike called upon him, in the strongest possible manner, to stigmatize with infamy.

The Romans, it is well known to you, Mr. Reflector, took a gentler method of marking their disapprobation of an author's work. They were a humane and equitable nation. They left the furca and the patibulum, the axe and the rods, to great offenders: for these minor and (if I may so term them) extra-moral offences, the bent thumb was considered as a sufficient sign of disapprobation,—vertere pollicem; as the pressed thumb, premere pollicem, was a mark of approving.

And really there seems to have been a sort of fitness in this method, a correspondency of sign in the punishment to the offence; or, as the action of writing is performed by bending the thumb forward, the retroversion or bending back of that joint did not unaptly point to the opposite of that action; implying that it was the will of the audience that the author should write no more: a much more significant as well as more humane way of expressing that desire than our custom of hissing, which is altogether senseless and indefensible. Nor do we find that the Roman audiences deprived themselves, by this lenity, of any tittle of that supremacy which audiences in all ages have thought themselves bound to maintain over such as have been candidates for their applause. On the contrary, by this method they seem to have had the author, as we should express it, completely under finger and thumb.

The provocations to which a dramatic genius is exposed from the public are so much the more vexatious as they are removed from any possibility of retaliation, the hope of which sweetens most other injuries ; for the public never writes itself. Not but something very like it took place at the time of the O. P. differences. The placards which were nightly exhibited, were, properly speaking, the composition of the public. The public wrote them, the public applauded them ; and precious morceaux of wit and eloquence they were,—except some few, of a better quality, which it is well known were furnished by professed dramatic writers. After this specimen of what the public can do for itself, it should be a little slow in condemning what others do for it.

As the degrees of malignancy vary in people according as they have more or less of the Old Serpent (the father of hisses) in their composition, I have sometimes amused myself with analyzing this many-headed hydra, which calls itself the public, into the component parts of which it is “complicated, head and tail,” and seeing how many varieties of the snake kind it can afford.

First, there is the Common English Snake. This is that part of the auditory who are always the majority at damnations ; but who, having no critical venom in themselves to sting them on, stay till they hear others hiss, and then join in for company.

The Blind Worm is a species very nearly allied to the foregoing. Some naturalists have doubted whether they are not the same.

The Rattlesnake.—These are your obstreperous talking critics,—the impertinent guides of the pit,—who will not give a plain man leave to enjoy an evening’s entertainment ; but, with their frothy jargon and incessant finding of faults, either drown his pleasure quite, or force him, in his own defence, to join in their clamorous censure. The hiss always originates with these. When this creature springs his rattle, you would think, from the noise it makes, there was something in it; but you have only to examine the instrument from which the noise proceeds, and you will find it typical of a critic's tongue,—a shallow membrane, empty, voluble, and seated in the most contemptible part of the creature's body.

The Whipsnake.—This is he that lashes the poor author the next day in the newspapers.

The deaf Adder, or Surda Echidna of Linnæus.—Under this head may be classed all that portion of the spectators (for audience they properly are not) who, not finding the first act of a piece answer to their preconceived notions of what a first act should be, like Obstinate, in John Bunyan, positively thrust their fingers in their ears, that they may not hear a word of what is coming, though perhaps the very next act may be composed in a style as different as possible, and be written quite to their own tastes. These adders refuse to hear the voice of the charmer, because the tuning of his instrument gave them offence.

I should weary you, and myself too, if I were to go through all the classes of the serpent kind. Two qualities are common to them all. They are creatures of remarkably cold digestions, and chiefly haunt pits and low grounds.

I proceed with more pleasure to give you an account of a club to which I have the honour to belong. There are fourteen of us, who are all authors that have been once in our lives what is called darned. We meet on the anniversaries of our respective nights, and make ourselves merry at the expense of the public.

The chief tenets which distinguish our society, and which every man among us is bound to hold for gospel, are—

That the public, or mob, in all ages, have been a set of blind, deaf, obstinate, senseless, illiterate savages. That no man of genius, in his senses, would be ambitious of pleasing such a capricious, ungrateful rabble. That the only legitimate end of writing for them is to pick their pockets; and, that failing, we are at full liberty to vilify and abuse them as much as ever we think fit.

That authors, by their affected pretences to humility, which they made use of as a cloak to insinuate their writings into the callous senses of the multitude, obtuse to every thing but the grossest flattery, have by degrees made that great beast their master; as we may act submission to children till we are obliged to practise it in earnest. That authors are and ought to be considered the masters and preceptors of the public, and not vice versâ. That it was so in the days of Orpheus, Linus, and Musæus; and would be so again, if it were not that writers prove traitors to themselves. That, in particular, in the days of the first of those three great authors just mentioned, audiences appear to have been perfect models of what audiences should be; for though, along with the trees and the rocks and the wild creatures which he drew after him to listen to his strains, some serpents doubtless came to hear his music, it does not appear that any one among them ever lifted up a dissentient voice. They knew what was due to authors in those days. Now every stock and stone turns into a serpent, and has a voice.

That the terms “courteous reader” and “candid auditors," as having given rise to a false notion in those to whom they were applied, as if they conferred upon them some right, which they cannot have, of exercising their judgments, ought to be utterly banished and exploded.

These are our distinguishing tenets. To keep up the memory of the cause in which we suffered, as the ancients sacrificed a goat, a supposed unhealthy animal, to Æsculapius, on our feast-nights we cut up a goose, an animal typical of the popular voice, to the deities of Candour and Patient Hearing. A zealous member of the society once proposed that we should revive the obsolete luxury of viper-broth; but, the stomachs of some of the company rising at the proposition, we lost the benefit of that highly salutary and antidotal dish.

The privilege of admission to our club is strictly limited to such as have been fairly damned. A piece that has met with ever so little applause, that has but languished its night or two, and then gone out, will never entitle its author to a seat among us. An exception to our usual readiness in conferring this privilege is in the case of a writer, who, having been once condemned, writes again, and becomes candidate for a second martyrdom. Simple damnation we hold to be a merit; but to be twice damned we adjudge infamous. Such a one we utterly reject, and black-ball without a hearing:—

"The common damned shun his society."

Hoping that your publication of our regulations may be a means of inviting some more members into our society, I conclude this long letter.

I am, Sir, yours,

SEMEL-DAMNATUS.

ELIA TO HIS CORRESPONDENTS.

A CORRESPONDENT, who writes himself Peter Ball, or Bell,—for his handwriting is as ragged as his manners,—admonishes me of the old saying, that some people (under a courteous periphrasis, I slur his less ceremonious epithet) had need have good memories. In my “Old Benchers of the Inner Temple,” I have delivered myself, and truly, a templar born. Bell clamours upon this, and thinketh that he hath caught a fox. It seems that in a former paper, retorting upon a weekly scribbler who had called my good identity in question, (see Postscript to my “Chapter on Ears,”) I profess myself a native of some spot near Cavendish Square, deducing my remoter origin from Italy. But who does not see, except this tinkling cymbal, that, in that idle fiction of Genoese ancestry, I was answering a fool according to his folly,—that Elia there expresseth himself ironically as to an approved slanderer, who hath no right to the truth, and can be no fit recipient of it? Such a one it is usual to leave to his delusions; or, leading him from error still to contradictory error, to plunge him (as we say) deeper in the mire, and give him line till he suspend himself. No understanding reader could be imposed upon by such obvious rodomontade to suspect me for an alien, or believe me other than English.

To a second correspondent, who signs himself "A Wiltshire Man," who claims me for a countryman upon the strength of an equivocal phrase in my "Christ's Hospital," a more mannerly reply is due. Passing over the Genoese fable, which Bell makes such a ring about, he nicely detects a more subtle discrepancy, which Bell was too obtuse to strike upon. Referring to the passage, I must confess, that the term "native town," applied to Calne, prima facie seems to bear out the construction which my friendly correspondent is willing to put upon it. The context too, I am afraid, a little favours it. But where the words of an author, taken literally, compared with some other passage in his writings, admitted to be authentic, involve a palpable contradiction, it hath been the custom of the ingenuous commentator to smoothe the difficulty by the supposition that in the one case an allegorical or tropical sense was chiefly intended. So, by the word "native," I may be supposed to mean a town where I might have been born, or where it might be desirable that I should have been born, as being situated in wholesome air, upon a dry, chalky soil, in which I delight; or a town with the inhabitants of which I passed some weeks, a Summer or two ago, so agreeably, that they and it became in a manner native to me. Without some such latitude of interpretation in the present case, I see not how we can avoid falling into so gross an error in physics as to conceive that a gentleman may be born in two places, from which all modern and ancient testimony is alike abhorrent. Bacchus cometh the nearest to it, whom

I remember Ovid to have honoured with the epithet "twice born."¹ But, not to mention that he is so called (we conceive) in reference to the places whence rather than the places where he was delivered,—for, by either birth, he may probably be challenged for a Theban,—in a strict way of speaking, he was a filius femoris by no means in the same sense as he had been before a filius alvi; for that latter was but a secondary and tralatitious way of being born, and he but a denizen of the second house of his geniture. Thus much by way of explanation was thought due to the courteous "Wiltshire Man."

To "Indagator," "Investigator," "Incertus," and the rest of the pack, that are so importunate about the true localities of his birth,—as if, forsooth, Elia were presently about to be passed to his parish,—to all such churchwarden critics he answereth, that, any explanation here given notwithstanding, he hath not so fixed his nativity (like a rusty vane) to one dull spot, but that, if he seeth occasion, or the argument shall demand it, he will be born again, in future papers, in whatever place, and at whatever period, shall seem good unto him.

"Modò me Thebis, modò Athenis."

Eripitur, patrioque tener (si credere dignum)
Insuitur femori. . . .
Tutaque bis geniti sunt incunabula Bacchi."

Metamorph., lib. iii.

LETTER OF ELIA TO R— S—, ESQ.—
(THE TOMBS IN THE ABBEY.)

SIR,—You have done me an unfriendly office, without perhaps much considering what you were doing. You have given an ill name to my poor lucubrations. In a recent paper on Infidelity, you usher in a conditional commendation of them with an exception; which, preceding the encomium, and taking up nearly the same space with it, must impress your readers with the notion, that the objectional parts in them are at least equal in quantity to the pardonable. The censure is in fact the criticism; the praise—a concession merely. Exceptions usually follow, to qualify praise or blame. But there stands your reproof, in the very front of your notice, in ugly characters, like some bugbear, to frighten all good Christians from purchasing. Through you I become an object of suspicion to preceptors of youth, and fathers of families. “A book which wants only a sounder religious feeling, to be as delightful as it is original.” With no further explanation, what must your readers conjecture, but that my little volume is some vehicle for heresy or infidelity? The quotation which you honour me by subjoining, oddly enough, is of a character which bespeaks a temperament in the writer the very reverse of that your reproof goes to insinuate. Had you been taxing me with superstition, the passage would have been pertinent to the censure. Was it worth your while to go so far out of your way to affront the feelings of an old friend, and commit yourself by an irrelevant quotation, for the pleasure of reflecting upon a poor child, an exile at Genoa?

I am at a loss what particular essay you had in view (if my poor ramblings amount to that appellation) when you were in such a hurry to thrust in your objection, like bad news, foremost.—Perhaps the paper on “Saying Graces” was the obnoxious feature. I have endeavoured there to rescue a voluntary duty—good in place, but never, as I remember, literally commanded—from the charge of an undecent formality. Rightly taken, sir, that paper was not against graces, but want of grace; not against the ceremony, but the carelessness and slovenliness so often observed in the performance of it.

Or was it that on the “New Year”—in which I have described the feelings of the merely natural man, on a consideration of the amazing change, which is supposable to take place on our removal from this fleshly scene? If men would honestly confess their misgivings (which few men will) there are times when the strongest Christian of us, I believe, has reeled under questions of such staggering obscurity. I do not accuse you of this weakness. There are some who tremblingly reach out shaking hands to the guidance of Faith—others who stoutly venture into the dark (their Human Confidence their leader, whom they mistake for Faith); and, investing themselves beforehand with cherubic wings, as they fancy, find their new robes as familiar, and fitting to the supposed growth and stature in godliness, as the coat they left off yesterday—some whose hope totters upon crutches—others who stalk into futurity upon stilts.

The contemplation of a Spiritual World,—which, without the addition of a misgiving conscience, is enough to shake some natures to their foundation—is smoothly got over by others, who shall float over the black billows in their little boat of No-Distrust, as unconcernedly as over a summer sea. The difference is chiefly constitutional.

One man shall love his friends and his friends' faces; and, under the uncertainty of conversing with them again, in the same manner and familiar circumstances of sight, speech, &c., as upon earth—in a moment of no irreverent weakness—for a dream-while—no more—would be almost content, for a reward of a life of virtue (if he could ascribe such acceptance to his lame performances), to take up his portion with those he loved, and was made to love, in this good world, which he knows—which was created so lovely, beyond his deservings. Another, embracing a more exalted vision—so that he might receive indefinite additaments of power, knowledge, beauty, glory, &c.—is ready to forgo the recognition of humbler individualities of earth, and the old familiar faces. The shapings of our heavens are the modifications of our constitutions; and Mr. Feeble Mind, or Mr. Great Heart, is born in every one of us.

Some (and such have been accounted the safest divines) have shrunk from pronouncing upon the final state of any man; nor dare they pronounce the case of Judas to be desperate. Others (with stronger optics), as plainly as with the eye of flesh, shall behold a given king in bliss, and a given chamberlain in torment; even to the eternizing of a cast of the eye in the latter, his own self-mocked and good-humouredly-borne deformity on earth, but supposed to aggravate the uncouth and hideous expression of his pangs in the other place. That one man can presume so far, and that another would with shuddering disclaim confidences, is, I believe, an effect of the nerves purely.

If, in either of these papers, or elsewhere, I have been betrayed into some levities—not affronting the sanctuary, but glancing perhaps at some of the outskirts and extreme edges, the debateable land between the holy and profane regions—(for the admixture of man's inventions, twisting themselves with the name of religion itself has artfully made it difficult to touch even the alloy, without, in some men's estimation, soiling the fine gold)—if I have sported within the purlieux of serious matter—it was, I dare say, a humour—be not startled, sir,—which I have unwittingly derived from yourself. You have all your life been making a jest of the devil. Not of the scriptural meaning of that dark essence—personal or allegorical; for the nature is nowhere plainly delivered. I acquit you of intentional irreverence. But indeed you have made wonderfully free with, and been mighty pleasant upon, the popular idea and attributes of him. A Noble Lord, your brother Visionary, has scarcely taken greater liberties with the material keys, and merely Catholic notion of St. Peter. You have flattered him in prose; you have chanted him in goodly odes. You have been his Jester; volunteer Laureate, and self-elected Court Poet to Beelzebub.

You have never ridiculed, I believe, what you thought to be religion, but you are always girding at what some pious, but perhaps mistaken folks, think to be so. For this reason, I am sorry to hear that you are engaged upon a life of George Fox. I know you will fall into the error of intermixing some comic stuff with your seriousness. The Quakers tremble at the subject in your hands. The Methodists are as shy of you, upon account of their founder. But, above all, our Popish brethren are most in your debt. The errors of that Church have proved a fruitful source to your scoffing vein. Their Legend has been a Golden one to you. And here your friends, sir, have noticed a notable inconsistency. To the imposing rites, the solemn penances, devout austerities of that communion; the affecting though erring piety of their hermits; the silence and solitude of the Chartreux—their crossings, their holy waters—their Virgin, and their saints—to these, they say, you have been indebted for the best feelings, and the richest imagery, of your epic poetry. You have drawn copious drafts upon Loretto. We thought at one time you were going post to Rome—but that in the facetious commentaries, which it is your custom to append so plentifully, and (some say) injudiciously, to your loftiest performances in this kind, you spurn the uplifted toe, which you but just now seemed to court; leave his holiness in the lurch; and show him a fair pair of Protestant heels under your Romish vestment. When we think you already at the wicket, suddenly a violent cross wind blows you transverse—

“Ten thousand leagues awry——

—————Then might we see

Cowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers, tost

And flutter'd into rags; then reliques, beads,

Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,

The sport of winds.”

You pick up pence by showing the hallowed bones, shrine, and crucifix; and you take money a second time by exposing the trick of them afterwards. You carry your verse to Castle Angelo for sale in a morning; and, swifter than a pedlar can transmute his pack, you are at Canterbury with your prose ware before night.

Sir, is it that I dislike you in this merry vein? The very reverse. No countenance becomes an intelligent jest better than your own. It is your grave aspect, when you look awful upon your poor friends, which I would deprecate.

In more than one place, if I mistake not, you have been pleased to compliment me at the expense of my companions. I cannot accept your compliment at such a price. The upbraiding a man's poverty naturally makes him look about him to see whether he be so poor indeed as he is presumed to be. You have put me upon counting my riches. Really, sir, I did not know I was so wealthy in the article of friendships. There is ——, and ——, whom you never heard of, but exemplary characters both, and excellent church-goers; and Norris, mine and my father's friend for nearly half a century; and the enthusiast for Wordsworth's poetry, ——, a little tainted with Socinianism it is to be feared, but constant in his attachments, and a capital critic; and ——, a sturdy old Athanasian, so that sets all to rights again; and Wainwright, the light, and warm-as-light-hearted, Janus of the London; and the translator of Dante, still a curate, modest and amiable C.; and Allen C., the large-hearted Scot; and P——r, candid and affectionate as his own poetry; and A——p, Coleridge's friend; and G——n, his more than friend; and Coleridge himself, the same to me still, as in those old evenings, when we used to sit and speculate (do you remember them, sir?) at our old Salutation tavern, upon Pantisocracy and golden days to come on earth; and W——th

(why, sir, I might drop my rent-roll here, such goodly farms and manors have I reckoned up already. In what possession has not this last name alone estated me?—but I will go on)—and Monkhouse, the noble minded kinsman, by wedlock, of W——th; and H. C. R., unwearied in the offices of a friend; and Clarkson, almost above the narrowness of that relation, yet condescending not seldom heretofore from the labours of his world-embracing charity to bless my humble roof; and the gall-less and single-minded Dyer; and the high-minded associate of Cook, the veteran Colonel, with his lusty heart still sending cartels of defiance to old Time; and, not least, W. A., the last and steadiest left to me of that little knot of whist-players, that used to assemble weekly, for so many years, at the Queen's Gate (you remember them, sir?) and called Admiral Burney friend.

I will come to the point at once. I believe you will not make many exceptions to my associates so far. But I have purposely omitted some intimacies, which I do not yet repent of having contracted, with two gentlemen diametrically opposed to yourself in principles. You will understand me to allude to the authors of "Rimini" and of the "Table Talk." And first of the former.

It is an error more particularly incident to persons of the correctest principles and habits, to seclude themselves from the rest of mankind, as from another species, and form into knots and clubs. The best people herding thus exclusively are in danger of contracting a narrowness. Heat and cold, dryness and moisture, in the natural world do not fly asunder, to split the globe into sectarian parts and separations; but mingling, as they best may, correct the malignity of any single predominance. The analogy holds, I suppose, in the moral world. If all the good people were to ship themselves off to Terra Incognita, what, in humanity's name, is to become of the refuse? If the persons, whom I have chiefly in view, have not pushed matters to this extremity yet, they carry them as far as they can go. Instead of mixing with the infidel and the freethinker—in the room of opening a negotiation, to try at least to find out at which gate the error entered—they huddle close together, in a weak fear of infection, like that pusillanimous underling in Spenser—

“ This is the wandering wood, this Error's den ;
 A monster vile, whom God and man does hate :
 Therefore, I rede, beware.” Fly, fly, quoth then
 The fearful Dwarf.

And, if they be writers in orthodox journals, addressing themselves only to the irritable passions of the unbeliever, they proceed in a safe system of strengthening the strong hands, and confirming the valiant knees; of converting the already converted, and proselyting their own party. I am the more convinced of this from a passage in the very treatise which occasioned this letter. It is where, having recommended to the doubter the writings of Michaelis and Lardner, you ride triumphantly over the necks of all infidels, sceptics, and dissenters, from this time to the world's end, upon the wheels of two unanswerable deductions. I do not hold it meet to set down, in a miscellaneous compilation like this, such religious words as you have thought fit to introduce into the pages of a petulant literary journal. I therefore beg leave to substitute numerals, and refer to the Quarterly Review (for January) for filling of them up. “ Here,” say you “ as in the history of 7, if these books are authentic, the events which they relate must be true ; if they were written by 8, 9 is 10 and 11." Your first deduction, if it means honesty, rests upon two identical propositions ; though I suspect an unfairness in one of the terms, which this would not be quite the proper place for explicating. At all events, you have no cause to triumph ; you have not been proving the premises, but refer for satisfaction therein to very long and laborious works, which may well employ the sceptic a twelvemonth or two to digest, before he can possibly be ripe for your conclusion. When he has satisfied himself about the premises, he will concede to you the inference, I dare say, most readily. But your latter deduction, viz., that because 8 has written a book concerning 9, therefore 10 and 11 was certainly his meaning, is one of the most extraordinary conclusions per saltum that I have had the good fortune to meet with. As far as 10 is verbally asserted in the writings, all sects must agree with you ; but you cannot be ignorant of the many various ways in which the doctrine of the * * * * has been understood, from a low figurative expression (with the Unitarians) up to the most mysterious actuality ; in which highest sense alone you and your church take it. And for 11, that there is no other possible conclusion—to hazard this in the face of so many thousands of Arians and Socinians, &c., who have drawn so opposite a one, is such a piece of theological hardihood, as, I think, warrants me in concluding that, when you sit down to pen theology, you do not at all consider your opponents, but have in your eye, merely and exclusively, readers of the same way of thinking with yourself, and therefore have no occasion to trouble yourself with the quality of the logic to which you treat them.

Neither can I think, if you had had the welfare of the poor child—over whose hopeless condition you whine so lamentably (and I must think) unseasonably seriously at heart, that you could have taken the step of sticking him up by name—T. H., is as good as naming him—to perpetuate an outrage upon the parental feelings, as long as the Quarterly Review shall last. Was it necessary to specify an individual case, and give to Christian compassion the appearance of a personal attack? Is this the way to conciliate unbelievers, or not rather to widen the breach irreparably?

I own I could never think so considerably of myself as to decline the society of an agreeable or worthy man upon difference of opinion only. The impediments and the facilitations to a sound belief are various and inscrutable as the heart of man. Some believe upon weak principles; others cannot feel the efficacy of the strongest. One of the most candid, most upright, and single-meaning men I ever knew, was the late Thomas Holcroft. I believe he never said one thing, and meant another, in his life; and, as near as I can guess, he never acted otherwise than with the most scrupulous attention to conscience. Ought we to wish the character false, for the sake of a hollow compliment to Christianity?

Accident introduced me to the acquaintance of Mr. L. H.—and the experience of his many friendly qualities confirmed a friendship between us. You who have been misrepresented yourself, I should hope, have not lent an idle ear to the calumnies which have been spread abroad respecting this gentleman. I was admitted to his household for some years, and do most solemnly aver that I believe him to be in his domestic relations as correct as any man. He chose an ill-judged subject for a poem, the peccant humours of which have been visited on him tenfold by the artful use, which his adversaries have made, of an equivocal term. The subject itself was started by Dante, but better because brieflier treated of. But the crime of the lovers, in the Italian and the English poet, with its aggravated enormity of circumstance, is not of a kind (as the critics of the latter well knew) with those conjunctions, for which Nature herself has provided no excuse, because no temptation. It has nothing in common with the black horrors, sung by Ford and Massinger. The familiarizing of it in the tale and fable may be for that reason incidentally more contagious. In spite of Rimini, I must look upon its author as a man of taste and a poet. He is better than so; he is one of the most cordial-minded men I ever knew, and matchless as a fireside companion. I mean not to affront or wound your feelings when I say that in his more genial moods he has often reminded me of you. There is the same air of mild dogmatism—the same condescending to a boyish sportiveness—in both your conversations. His handwriting is so much the same with your own, that I have opened more than one letter of his, hoping, nay, not doubting, but it was from you, and have been disappointed (he will bear with my saying so) at the discovery of my error. L. H. is unfortunate in holding some loose and not very definite speculations (for at times I think he hardly knows whither his premises would carry him) on marriage—the tenets, I conceive, of the “Political Justice” carried a little farther. For anything I could discover in his practice, they have reference, like those, to some future possible condition of society, and not to the present times. But neither for these obliquities of thinking (upon which my own conclusions are as distant as the poles asunder)—nor for his political asperities and petulancies, which are wearing out with the heats and vanities of youth—did I select him for a friend; but for qualities which fitted him for that relation. I do not know whether I flatter myself with being the occasion, but certain it is, that, touched with some misgivings for sundry harsh things which he had written aforetime against our friend C., before he left this country he sought a reconciliation with that gentleman (himself being his own introducer), and found it.

L. H., is now in Italy; on his departure to which land, with much regret I took my leave of him and his little family—seven of them, sir, with their mother—and as kind a set of little people (T. H. and all), as affectionate children as ever blessed a parent. Had you seen them, sir, I think you could not have looked upon them as so many little Jonases—but rather as pledges of the vessel's safety, that was to bear such a freight of love.

I wish you would read Mr. H.'s lines to that same T. H. "six years old, during a sickness:"—

"Sleep breaks at last from out thee,
My little patient boy——"

(they are to be found on the 47th page of "Foliage")—and ask yourself how far they are out of the spirit of Christianity. I have a letter from Italy, received but the other day, into which L. H. has put as much heart, and as many friendly yearnings after old associates, and native country, as, I think, paper can well hold. It would do you no hurt to give that the perusal also.

From the other gentleman I neither expect nor desire (as he is well assured) any such concessions as L. H. made to C. What hath soured him, and made him to suspect his friends of infidelity towards him, when there was no such matter, I know not. I stood well with him for fifteen years (the proudest of my life), and have ever spoken my full mind of him to some, to whom his panegyric must naturally be least tasteful. I never in thought swerved from him, I never betrayed him, I never slackened in my admiration of him; I was the same to him (neither better nor worse), though he could not see it, as in the days when he thought fit to trust me. At this instant he may be preparing for me some compliment, above my deserts, as he has sprinkled many such among his admirable books, for which I rest his debtor; or, for anything I know, or can guess to the contrary, he may be about to read a lecture on my weaknesses. He is welcome to them (as he was to my humble hearth), if they can divert a spleen, or ventilate a fit of sullenness. I wish he would not quarrel with the world at the rate he does; but the reconciliation must be effected by himself, and I despair of living to see that day. But protesting against much that he has written, and some things which he chooses to do; judging him by his conversation which I enjoyed so long, and relished so deeply; or by his books, in those places where no clouding passion intervenes—I should belie my own conscience, if I said less, than that I think W. H. to be, in his natural and healthy state, one of the wisest and finest spirits breathing. So far from being ashamed of that intimacy, which was betwixt us, it is my boast that I was able for so many years to have preserved it entire; and I think I shall go to my grave without finding or expecting to find, such another companion. But I forget my manners—you will pardon me, sir—I return to the correspondence.

Sir, you were pleased (you know where) to invite me to a compliance with the wholesome forms and doctrines of the Church of England. I take your advice with as much kindness as it was meant. But I must think the invitation rather more kind than seasonable. I am a Dissenter. The last sect, with which you can remember me to have made common profession, were the Unitarians. You would think it not very pertinent, if (fearing that all was not well with you) I were gravely to invite you (for a remedy) to attend with me a course of Mr. Belsham's Lectures at Hackney. Perhaps I have scruples to some of your forms and doctrines. But if I come, am I secure of civil treatment? The last time I was in any of your places of worship was on Easter Sunday last. I had the satisfaction of listening to a very sensible sermon of an argumentative turn, delivered with great propriety by one of your bishops. The place was Westminster Abbey. As such religion as I have, has always acted on me more by way of sentiment than argumentative process, I was not unwilling, after sermon ended, by no unbecoming transition, to pass over to some serious feelings, impossible to be disconnected from the sight of those old tombs, &c. But, by whose order I know not, I was debarred that privilege even for so short a space as a few minutes; and turned, like a dog, or some profane person, out into the common street; with feelings, which I could not help, but not very congenial to the day or discourse. I do not know that I shall ever venture myself again into one of your churches.

[In place of the foregoing, which was omitted from the Last Essays of Elia, the opening paragraph of the paper, when reshaped as an essay, ran as follows]:—

Though in some points of doctrine, and perhaps of discipline, I am diffident of lending a perfect assent to that church which you have so worthily historified, yet may the ill time never come to me, when with a chilled heart, or a portion of irreverent sentiment, I shall enter her beautiful and time-hallowed edifices. Judge then of my mortification when, after attending the choral anthems of last Wednesday at Westminster, and being desirous of renewing my acquaintance, after lapsed years, with the tombs and antiquities there, I found myself excluded; turned out like a dog, or some profane person, into the common street, with feelings not very congenial to the place, or to the solemn service which I had been listening to. It was a jar after that music.

You had your education at Westminster; and doubtless among those dim aisles and cloisters, you must have gathered much of that devotional feeling in those young years, on which your purest mind feeds still—and may it feed! The antiquarian spirit, strong in you, and gracefully blending ever with the religious, may have been sown in you among those wrecks of splendid mortality. You owe it to the place of your education; you owe it to your learned fondness for the architecture of your ancestors; you owe it to the venerableness of your ecclesiastical establishment, which is daily lessened and called in question through these practices—to speak aloud your sense of them; never to desist raising your voice against them, till they be totally done away with and abolished; till the doors of Westminster Abbey be no longer closed against the decent, though low-in-purse enthusiast, or blameless devotee, who must commit an injury against his family economy, if he would be indulged with a bare admission within its walls. You owe it to the decencies, which you wish to see maintained in its impressive services, that our Cathedral be no longer an object of inspection to the poor at those times only, in which they must rob from their attendance on the worship every minute which they can bestow upon the fabric. In vain the public prints have taken up this subject, in vain such poor nameless writers as myself express their indignation. A word from you, sir—a hint in your Journal—would be sufficient to fling open the doors of the Beautiful Temple again, as we can remember them when we were boys. At that time of life, what would the imaginative faculty (such as it is) in both of us, have suffered, if the entrance to so much reflection had been obstructed by the demand of so much silver!—If we had scraped it up to gain an occasional admission (as we certainly should have done) would the sight of those old tombs have been as impressive to us (while we had been weighing anxiously prudence against sentiment) as when the gates stood open, as those of the adjacent Park; when we could walk in at any time, as the mood brought us, for a shorter or longer time, as that lasted? Is the being shown over a place the same as silently for ourselves detecting the genius of it? In no part of our beloved Abbey now can a person find entrance

(out of service time) under the sum of two shillings. The rich and the great will smile at the anticlimax, presumed to lie in those two short words. But you can tell them, sir, how much quiet worth, how much capacity for enlarged feeling, how much taste and genius, may coexist, especially in youth, with a purse incompetent to this demand. A respected friend of ours, during his late visit to the metropolis, presented himself for admission to Saint Paul's. At the same time a decently clothed man, with as decent a wife, and child, were bargaining for the same indulgence. The price was only two-pence each person. The poor but decent man hesitated, desirous to go in; but there were three of them, and he turned away reluctantly. Perhaps he wished to have seen the tomb of Nelson. Perhaps the Interior of the Cathedral was his object. But in the state of his finances, even sixpence might reasonably seem too much. Tell the Aristocracy of the country (no man can do it more impressively); instruct them of what value these insignificant pieces of money, these minims to their sight, may be to their humbler brethren. Shame these Sellers out of the Temple. Stifle not the suggestions of your better nature with the pretext, that an indiscriminate admission would expose the Tombs to violation. Remember your boy-days. Did you ever see or hear of a mob in the Abbey, while it was free to all? Did the rabble come there, or trouble their heads about such speculations? It is all that you can do to drive them into your churches; they do not voluntarily offer themselves. They have, alas! no passion for antiquities; for tomb of king or prelate, sage or poet. If they had, they would be no longer the rabble.

For forty years that I have known the Fabric, the only well-attested charge of violation adduced, has been—a ridiculous dismemberment committed upon the effigy of that amiable spy Major Andre. And is it for this—the wanton mischief of some school-boy, fired perhaps with raw notions of Transatlantic Freedom—or the remote possibility of such a mischief occurring again, so easily to be prevented by stationing a constable within the walls, if the vergers are incompetent to the duty—is it upon such wretched pretences, that the people of England are made to pay a new Peter's Pence, so long abrogated; or must content themselves with contemplating the ragged Exterior of their Cathedral? The mischief was done about the time that you were a scholar there. Do you know anything about the unfortunate relic? Can you help us in this emergency to find the nose? or can you give Chantrey a notion (from memory) of its pristine life and vigour? I am willing for peace's sake to subscribe my guinea towards the restoration of the lamented feature.

I am, Sir, your humble Servant,

F. I. A.

THE GOOD CLERK, A CHARACTER;

WITH SOME ACCOUNT OF "THE COMPLETE ENGLISH
TRADESMAN." ¹

THE GOOD CLERK.—He writeth a fair and switt hand, and is competently versed in the first four rules of arithmetic, in the Rule of Three, (which is sometimes called the Golden Rule,) and in Practice. We mention these things that we may leave no room for cavillers to say that any thing essential hath been omitted in our definition; else, to speak the truth, these are but ordinary accomplishments, and such as every understrapper at a desk is commonly furnished with. The character we treat of soareth higher.

He is clean and neat in his person, not from a vain-glorious desire of setting himself forth to advantage in the eyes of the other sex, with which vanity too many of our young sparks now-a-days are infected; but to do credit, as we say, to the office. For this reason, he evermore taketh care that his desk or his books receive no soil; the which things he is commonly as solicitous to have fair and unblemished as the owner of a fine horse is to have him appear in good keep.

He riseth early in the morning; not because early rising conduceth to health, (though he doth not altogether despise that consideration,) but chiefly to the intent that he may be first at the desk. There is his post, there he delighteth to be, unless when his meals or necessity calleth him away : which time he alway esteemeth as lost, and maketh as short as possible.

He is temperate in eating and drinking, that he may preserve a clear head and steady hand for his master's service. He is also partly induced to this observation of the rules of temperance by his respect for religion and the laws of his country ; which things, it may once for all be noted, do add special assistances to his actions, but do not and cannot furnish the main spring or motive thereto. His first ambition, as appeareth all along, is to be a good clerk ; his next, a good Christian, a good patriot, &c.

Correspondent to this, he keepeth himself honest, not for fear of the laws, but because he hath observed how unseemly an article it maketh in the day-book or ledger when a sum is set down lost or missing ; it being his pride to make these books to agree and to tally, the one side with the other, with a sort of architectural symmetry and correspondence.

He marrieth, or marrieth not, as best suiteth with his employer's views. Some merchants do the rather desire to have married men in their counting-houses, because they think the married state a pledge for their servants' integrity, and an incitement to them to be industrious ; and it was an observation of a late Lord Mayor of London, that the sons of clerks do generally prove clerks themselves, and that merchants encouraging persons in their employ to marry, and to have families, was the best method of securing a breed of sober, industrious young men attached to the mercantile interest. Be this as it may, such a character as we have been describing will wait till the pleasure of his employer is known on this point; and regulateth his desires by the custom of the house or firm to which he belongeth.

He avoideth profane oaths and jesting, as so much time lost from his employ. What spare time he hath for conversation, which, in a counting-house such as we have been supposing, can be but small, he spendeth in putting seasonable questions to such of his fellows (and sometimes respectfully to the master himself) who can give him information respecting the price and quality of goods, the state of exchange, or the latest improvements in book-keeping; thus making the motion of his lips, as well as of his fingers, subservient to his master's interest. Not that he refuseth a brisk saying, or a cheerful sally of wit, when it comes unforced, is free of offence, and hath a convenient brevity. For this reason, he hath commonly some such phrase as this in his mouth:—

“ To blot your book.”

Or,

“ Red ink for ornament, black for use:
“ The best of things are open to abuse.”

So upon the eve of any great holy-day, of which he keepeth one or two at least every year, he will merrily say, in the hearing of a confidential friend, but to none other,—

“ All work and no play
“ Makes Jack a dull boy.”

Or,

“ A bow always bent must crack at last.”

But then this must always be understood to be spoken confidentially, and, as we say, under the rose.

Lastly, his dress is plain, without singularity; with no other ornament than the quill, which is the badge of his function, stuck behind the dexter ear, and this rather for convenience of having it at hand, when he hath been called away from his desk, and expecteth to resume his seat there again shortly, than from any delight which he taketh in foppery or ostentation. The colour of his clothes is generally noted to be black rather than brown, brown rather than blue or green. His whole deportment is staid, modest, and civil. His motto is "Regularity."

This character was sketched in an interval of business, to divert some of the melancholy hours of a counting-house. It is so little a creature of fancy, that it is scarce any thing more than a recollection of some of those frugal and economical maxims, which, about the beginning of the last century, (England's meanest period,) were endeavoured to be inculcated and instilled into the breasts of the London Apprentices¹ by a class of instructors who might not inaptly be termed "The Masters of Mear. Morals." The astonishing narrowness and illiberality of the lessons contained in some of those books is inconceivable by those whose studies have not led them that way, and would almost induce one to subscribe to the hard censure which Drayton has passed upon the mercantile spirit:—

"The gripple merchant, born to be the curse

"Of this brave Isle."

I have now lying before me that curious book by Daniel Defoe, "The Complete English Tradesman." The pompous detail, the studied analysis of every little mean art, every sneaking address, every trick and subterfuge, short of larceny, that is necessary to the tradesman's occupation, with the hundreds of anecdotes, dialogues (in Defoe's liveliest manner) interspersed, all tending to the same amiable purpose, namely, the sacrificing of every honest emotion of the soul to what he calls the main chance,—if you read it in an ironical sense, and as a piece of covered satire,—make it one of the most amusing books which Defoe ever writ, as much so as any of his best novels. It is difficult to say what his intention was in writing it. It is almost impossible to suppose him in earnest. Yet such is the bent of the book to narrow and to degrade the heart, that if such maxims were as catching and infectious as those of a licentious cast, which happily is not the case, had I been living at that time, I certainly should have recommended to the Grand Jury of Middlesex, who presented “The Fable of the Bees,” to have presented this book of Defoe's in preference, as of a far more vile and debasing tendency. I will give one specimen of his advice to the young tradesman on the government of his temper: “The retail tradesman in especial, and even every tradesman in his station, must furnish himself with a competent stock of patience. I mean that sort of patience which is needful to bear with all sorts of impertinence, and the most provoking curiosity that it is impossible to imagine the buyers, even the worst of them, are, or can be, guilty of. A tradesman behind his counter must have no flesh and blood about him, no passions, no resentment; he must never be angry, no, not so much as seem to be so, if a customer tumbles him five hundred pounds' worth of goods, and scarce bids money for any thing; nay, though they really come to his shop with no intent to buy, as many do, only to see what is to be sold, and though he knows they cannot be better pleased than they are at some other shop where they intend to buy, 'tis all one; the tradesman must take it; he must place it to the account of his calling, that 'tis his business to be ill used, and resent nothing; and so must answer as obligingly to those that give him an hour or two's trouble, and buy nothing, as he does to those, who, in half the time, lay out ten or twenty pounds. The case is plain; and if some do give him trouble, and do not buy, others make amends, and do buy; and as for the trouble, 'tis the business of the shop."

Here follows a most admirable story of a mercer, who by his indefatigable meanness, and more than Socratic patience under affronts, overcame and reconciled a lady, who upon the report of another lady that he had behaved saucily to some third lady, had determined to shun his shop, but, by the over-persuasions of a fourth lady, was induced to go to it; which she does, declaring beforehand that she will buy nothing, but give him all the trouble she can. Her attack and his defence, her insolence and his persevering patience, are described in colours worthy of a Mandeville; but it is too long to recite. "The short inference from this long discourse," says he, "is this,—that here you see, and I could give you many examples like this, how and in what manner a shop-keeper is to behave himself in the way of his business; what impertinences, what taunts, flouts, and ridiculous things, he must bear in his trade; and must not show the least return, or the least signal of disgust: he must have no passions, no fire in his temper; he must be all soft and smooth; nay, if his real temper be naturally fiery and hot, he must show none of it in his shop; he must be a perfect complete hypocrite if he will be a complete tradesman.¹ It is true, natural tempers are not to be always counterfeited: the man cannot easily be a lamb in his shop, and a lion in himself; but, let it be easy or hard, it must be done, and is done. There are men who have by custom and usage brought themselves to it, that nothing could be meeker and milder than they when behind the counter, and yet nothing be more furious and raging in every other part of life: nay, the provocations they have met with in their shops have so irritated their rage, that they would go up stairs from their shop, and fall into frenzies, and a kind of madness, and beat their heads against the wall, and perhaps mischief themselves, if not prevented, till the violence of it had gotten vent, and the passions abate and cool. I heard once of a shopkeeper that behaved himself thus to such an extreme, that, when he was provoked by the impertinence of the customers beyond what his temper could bear, he would go up stairs and beat his wife, kick his children about like dogs, and be as furious for two or three minutes as a man chained down in Bedlam; and again, when that heat was over, would sit down, and cry faster than the children he had abused; and, after the fit, he would go down into the shop again, and be as humble, courteous, and as calm, as any man whatever; so absolute a government of his passions had he in the shop, and so little out of it: in the shop, a soulless animal that would resent nothing; and in the family, a madman: in the shop, meek like a lamb; but in the family outrageous, like a Lybian lion. The sum of the matter is—It is necessary for a tradesman to subject himself, by all the ways possible, to his business; his customers are to be his idols: so far as he may worship idols by allowance, he is to bow down to them, and worship them; at least, he is not in any way to displease them, or show any disgust or distaste, whatsoever they may say or do. The bottom of all is, that he is intending to get money by them; and it is not for him that gets money to offer the least inconvenience to them by whom he gets it: he is to consider, that, as Solomon says, “the borrower is servant to the lender;” so the seller is servant to the buyer. What he says on the head of “Pleasures and Recreations” is not less amusing: “The tradesman’s pleasure should be in his business; his companions should be his books; (he means his ledger, waste-book, &c.) and, if he has a family, he makes his excursions up stairs, and no further. None of my cautions aim at restraining a tradesman from diverting himself, as we call it, with his fire-side, or keeping company with his wife and children.” Liberal allowance! nay, almost licentious and criminal indulgence! But it is time to dismiss this Philosopher of Meanness. More of this stuff would illiberalize the pages of the “Reflector.” Was the man in earnest, when he could bring such powers of description, and all the charms of natural eloquence, in commendation of the meanest, vilest, wretchedest degradations of the human character? Or did he not rather laugh in his sleeve at the doctrines which he inculcated; and, retorting upon the grave citizens of London their own arts, palm upon them a sample of disguised satire under the name of wholesome instruction?

CONTRIBUTIONS TO HONE'S
"EVERY DAY BOOK."

I.—CAPTAIN STARKEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "EVERY DAY BOOK."

DEAR SIR,—I read your account of this unfortunate being, and his forlorn piece of self-history,¹ with that smile of half-interest which the annals of insignificance excite, till I came to where he says, "I was bound apprentice to Mr. William Bird, an eminent writer, and teacher of languages and mathematics," &c.; when I started as one does in the recognition of an old acquaintance in a supposed stranger. This, then, was that Starkey of whom I have heard my sister relate so many pleasant anecdotes; and whom, never having seen, I yet seem almost to remember. For nearly fifty years she had lost all sight of him; and behold the gentle usher of her youth grown into an aged beggar, dubbed with an opprobrious title to which he had no pretensions,—an object and a May-game! To what base purposes may we not return! What may not have been the meek creature's sufferings, what his wanderings, before he finally settled down in the comparative comfort of an old hospitaller of the almonry of Newcastle! And is poor Starkey dead?

I was a scholar of that "eminent writer" that he speaks of; but Starkey had quitted the school about a year before I came to it. Still the odour of his merits had left a fragrancy upon the recollection of the elder pupils. The schoolroom stands where it did, looking into a discoloured, dingy garden in the passage leading from Fetter Lane into Bartlett's Buildings. It is still a school, though the main prop, alas! has fallen so ingloriously, and bears a Latin inscription over the entrance in the lane, which was unknown in our humbler times. Heaven knows what "languages" were taught in it then! I am sure that neither my sister nor myself brought any out of it but a little of our native English. By "mathematics," reader, must be understood "ciphering." It was, in fact, an humble day-school, at which reading and writing were taught to us boys in the morning; and the same slender erudition was communicated to the girls, our sisters, &c., in the evening. Now, Starkey presided, under Bird, over both establishments. In my time, Mr. Cook, now or lately a respectable singer and performer at Drury Lane Theatre, and nephew to Mr. Bird, had succeeded to him. I well remember Bird. He was a squat, corpulent, middle-sized man, with something of the gentleman about him, and that peculiar mild tone—especially while he was inflicting punishment—which is so much more terrible to children than the angriest looks and gestures. Whippings were not frequent; but, when they took place, the correction was performed in a private room adjoining, where we could only hear the complaints, but saw nothing. This heightened the decorum and the solemnity. But the ordinary chastisement was the bastinado, a stroke or two on the palm with that almost obsolete weapon now,—the ferule. A ferule was a sort of flat ruler, widened, at the inflicting end, into a shape resembling a pear,—but nothing like so sweet,—with a delectable hole in the middle to raise blisters, like a cupping-glass. I have an intense recollection of that disused instrument of torture, and the malignancy, in proportion to the apparent mildness, with which its strokes were applied. The idea of a rod is accompanied with something ludicrous; but by no process can I look back upon this blister-raiser with any thing but unmingled horror. To make him look more formidable,—if a pedagogue had need of these heightenings,—Bird wore one of those flowered Indian gowns formerly in use with school-masters, the strange figures upon which we used to interpret into hieroglyphics of pain and suffering. But, boyish fears apart, Bird, I believe, was, in the main, a humane and judicious master.

Oh, how I remember our legs wedged into those uncomfortable sloping desks, where we sat elbowing each other; and the injunctions to attain a free hand, unattainable in that position; the first copy I wrote after, with its moral lesson, “Art improves Nature;” the still earlier pot-hooks and the hangers, some traces of which I fear may yet be apparent in this manuscript; the truant looks side-long to the garden, which seemed a mockery of our imprisonment; the prize for best spelling which had almost turned my head, and which, to this day, I cannot reflect upon without a vanity, which I ought to be ashamed of;

our little leaden inkstands, not separately subsisting, but sunk into the desks; the bright, punctually-washed morning fingers, darkening gradually with another and another ink-spot! What a world of little associated circumstances, pains, and pleasures, mingling their quotas of pleasure, arise at the reading of those few simple words,—“ Mr. William Bird, an eminent writer, and teacher of languages and mathematics in Fetter Lane, Holborn!”

Poor Starkey, when young, had that peculiar stamp of old-fashionedness in his face which makes it impossible for a beholder to predicate any particular age in the object. You can scarce make a guess between seventeen and seven and thirty. This antique cast always seems to promise ill-luck and penury. Yet it seems he was not always the abject thing he came to. My sister, who well remembers him, can hardly forgive Mr. Thomas Ranson for making an etching so unlike her idea of him when he was a youthful teacher at Mr. Bird's school. Old age and poverty—a life-long poverty, she thinks—could at no time have so effaced the marks of native gentility which were once so visible in a face otherwise strikingly ugly, thin, and care-worn. From her recollections of him, she thinks that he would have wanted bread before he would have begged or borrowed a half-penny. “ If any of the girls,” she says, “ who were my school-fellows, should be reading, through their aged spectacles, tidings, from the dead, of their youthful friend Starkey, they will feel a pang, as I do, at having teased his gentle spirit.” They were big girls, it seems, too old to attend his instructions with the silence necessary; and, however old age and a long state of beggary seem to have reduced his writing faculties to a state of imbecility, in those days his language occasionally rose to the bold and figurative: for, when he was in despair to stop their chattering, his ordinary phrase was, "Ladies, if you will not hold your peace, not all the powers in heaven can make you." Once he was missing for a day or two: he had run away. A little, old, unhappy-looking man brought him back,—it was his father,—and he did no business in the school that day, but sat moping in a corner, with his hands before his face; and the girls, his tormentors, in pity for his case, for the rest of that day forbore to annoy him. "I had been there but a few months," adds she, "when Starkey, who was the chief instructor of us girls, communicated to us a profound secret,—that the tragedy of 'Cato' was shortly to be acted by the elder boys, and that we were to be invited to the representation." That Starkey lent a helping hand in fashioning the actors, she remembers; and, but for his unfortunate person, he might have had some distinguished part in the scene to enact. As it was, he had the arduous task of prompter assigned to him; and his feeble voice was heard clear and distinct, repeating the text during the whole performance. She describes her recollection of the cast of characters, even now, with a relish. Martia, by the handsome Edgar Hickman, who afterwards went to Africa, and of whom she never afterwards heard tidings; Lucia, by Master Walker, whose sister was her particular friend; Cato, by John Hunter, a masterly declaimer, but a plain boy, and shorter by the head than his two sons in the scene, &c. In conclusion, Starkey appears to have been one of those mild spirits, which, not originally deficient in understanding, are crushed by penury into dejection and feebleness. He might have proved a useful adjunct, if not an ornament, to society, if Fortune had taken him into a very little fostering; but, wanting that, he became a captain,—a by-word,—and lived and died a broken bulrush.

2.—IN RE SQUIRRELS.

WHAT is gone with the cages with the climbing squirrel, and bells to them, which were formerly the indispensable appendage to the outside of a tinman's shop, and were, in fact, the only live signs? One, we believe, still hangs out on Holborn; but they are fast vanishing with the good old modes of our ancestors. They seem to have been superseded by that still more ingenious refinement of modern humanity,—the tread-mill; in which human squirrels still perform a similar round of ceaseless, impro-gressive clambering, which must be nuts to them.

We almost doubt the fact of the teeth of this creature being so purely orange-coloured as Mr. Urban's correspondent gives out. One of our old poets—and they were pretty sharp observers of Nature—describes them as brown. But perhaps the naturalist referred to meant “of the colour of a Maltese orange,"¹ which is rather more obfuscated than your fruit of Seville or St. Michael's, and may help to reconcile the difference. We cannot speak from observation; but we remember at school getting our fingers into the orangery of one of these little gentry, (not having a due caution of the traps set there,) and the result proved sourer than lemons. The author of the "Task" somewhere speaks of their anger as being "insignificantly fierce;" but we found the demonstration of it on this occasion quite as significant as we desired, and have not been disposed since to look any of these "gift horses" in the mouth. Maiden aunts keep these "small deer" as they do parrots, to bite people's fingers, on purpose to give them good advice "not to adventure so near the cage another time." As for their "six quavers divided into three quayers and a dotted crotchet," I suppose they may go into Jeremy Bentham's next budget of fallacies, along with the "melodious and proportionable kinde of musicke" recorded, in your last number, of an highly gifted animal.

Clorin--

"Grapes whose lustly blood
Is the learned poet's good,— Sweeter yet did never crown
The head of Bacchus; nuts more brown
'Tban the squirrels' teeth that cracks them."

3.—THE ASS.

MR. COLLIER, in his "Poetical Decameron," (Third Conversation,) notices a tract printed in 1595, with the author's initials only, A. B., entitled "The Noblesse of the Asse; a work rare, learned, and excellent." He has selected the following pretty passage from it: "He (the ass) refuseth no burden: he goes whither he is sent, without any contradiction. He lifts not his foote against any one; he bytes not; he is no fugitive, nor malicious affected. He doth all things in good sort, and to his liking that hath cause to employ him. If strokes be given him he cares not for them; and, as our modern poet singeth,—

'Thou wouldst (perhaps) he should become thy foe,
'And to that end dost beat him many times:
'He cares not for himselfe, much less thy blow.'

Certainly Nature, foreseeing the cruel usage which this useful servant to man should receive at man's hand, did prudently in furnishing him with a tegument impervious to ordinary stripes. The malice of a child or a weak hand can make feeble impressions on him. His back offers no mark to a puny foeman. To a common whip or switch his hide presents an absolute insensibility. You might as well pretend to scourge a schoolboy with a tough pair of leather breeches on. His jerkin is well fortified; and therefore the costermongers, "between the years 1790 and 1800," did more politicly than piously in lifting up a part of his upper garment. I well remember that beastly and bloody custom. I have often longed to see one of those refiners in discipline himself at the cart's tail, with just such a convenient spot laid bare to the tender mercies of the whipster. But, since Nature has resumed her rights, it is to be hoped that this patient creature does not suffer to extremities; and that, to the savages who still belabour his poor carcass with their blows, (considering the sort of anvil they are laid upon,) he might, in some sort, if he could speak, exclaim with the philosopher, "Lay on: you beat but upon the case of Anaxarchus."

Contemplating this natural safe-guard, this fortified exterior, it is with pain I view the sleek, foppish, combed, and curried person of this animal as he is dis-naturalized at watering-places, &c., where they affect to make a palfrey of him. Fie on all such sophistications! It will never do, master groom. Something of his honest, shaggy exterior will still peep up in spite of you,—his good, rough, native, pine-apple coating. You cannot "refine a scorpion into a fish, though you rinse it and scour it with ever so cleanly cookery."¹

The modern poet quoted by A. B. proceeds to celebrate a virtue for which no one to this day had been aware that the ass was remarkable :—

“One other gift this beast hath as his owne,
 Wherewith the rest could not be furnishèd ;
 On man himself the same was not bestowne :
 To wit, on him is ne'er engenderèd
 The hateful vermine that doth teare the skin,
 And to the bode [body] doth make his passage in.”

And truly, when one thinks on the suit of impenetrable armour with which Nature (like Vulcan to another Achilles) has provided him, these subtle enemies to our repose would have shown some dexterity in getting into his quarters. As the bogs of Ireland by tradition expel toads and reptiles, he may well defy these small deer in his fastnesses. It seems the latter had not arrived at the exquisite policy adopted by the human vermin “between 1790 and 1800.”

But the most singular and delightful gift of the ass, according to the writer of this pamphlet, is his voice, the “goodly, sweet, and continual brayings” of which, “whereof they forme a melodious and proportionable kinde of musicke,” seem to have affected him with no ordinary pleasure. “Nor thinke I,” he adds, “that any of our immoderate musitians can deny but that their song is full of exceeding pleasure to be heard ; because therein is to be discerned both concord, discord, singing in the meane, the beginning to sing in large compasse, then following into rise and fall, the halfe-note, whole note, musicke of five voices, firme singing by four voices, three together, or one voice and a halfe. Then their variable con-trarieties amongst them, when one delivers forth a long tenor or a short, the pausing for time, breathing in measure, breaking the minim or very least moment of time. Last of all, to heare the musicke of five or six voices changed to so many of asses is amongst them to heare a song of world without end."

There is no accounting for ears, or for that laudable enthusiasm with which an author is tempted to invest a favourite subject with the most incompatible perfections: I should otherwise, for my own taste, have been inclined rather to have given a place to these extraordinary musicians at that banquet of nothing-less-than-sweet-sounds, imagined by old Jeremy Collier, (Essays, 1698, part ii. on Music,) where, after describing the inspiriting effects of martial music in a battle, he hazards an ingenious conjecture, whether a sort of anti-music might not be invented, which should have quite the contrary effect of "sinking the spirits, shaking the nerves, curdling the blood, and inspiring despair and cowardice and consternation. 'Tis probable," he says, "the roaring of lions, the warbling of cats and screech-owls, together with a mixture of the howling of dogs, judiciously imitated and compounded, might go a great way in this invention." The dose, we confess, is pretty potent, and skilfully enough prepared. But what shall we say to the Ass of Silenus, who, if we may trust to classic lore, by his own proper sounds, without thanks to cat or screech-owl, dismayed and put to rout a whole army of giants? Here was anti-music with a vengeance; a whole Pan-dis-Harmonicon in a single lungs of leather.

But I keep you trifling too long on this asinine subject. I have already passed the Pons Asinorum, and will desist, remembering the old pedantic pun of Jem Boyer, my schoolmaster:—

4.—THE MONTHS.

RUMMAGING, yesterday, over the contents of an old stall at a half book, half old-iron shop, in an alley leading from Wardour Street to Soho Square, I lit upon a ragged duodecimo which had been the strange delight of my infancy, and which I had lost sight of for more than forty years,—the “Queen-like Closet, or Rich Cabinet;” written by Hannah Woolly, and printed for R. C. and T. S., 1681; being an abstract of receipts in cookery, confectionery, cosmetics, needlework, morality, and all such branches of what were then considered as female accomplishments. The price demanded was sixpence, which the owner (a little squab duodecimo of a character himself) enforced with the assurance that his “own mother should not have it for a farthing less.” On my demurring at this extraordinary assertion, the dirty little vender re-enforced his assertion with a sort of oath, which seemed more than the occasion demanded: "And now," said he, "I have put my soul to it." Pressed by so solemn an asseveration, I could no longer resist a demand which seemed to set me, however unworthy, upon a level with his dearest relations; and, depositing a tester, I bore away the tattered prize in triumph. I remembered a gorgeous description of the twelve months of the year, which I thought would be a fine substitute for those poetical descriptions of them which your "Every Day Book" had nearly exhausted out of Spenser. "This will be a treat," thought I, "for friend Hone." To memory they seemed no less fantastic and splendid than the other. But what are the mistakes of childhood! On reviewing them, they turned out to be only a set of commonplace receipts for working the seasons, months, heathen gods, goddesses, &c., in samplers! Yet, as an instance of the homely occupations of our great-grandmothers, they may be amusing to some readers. "I have seen," says the notable Hannah Woolly, "such ridiculous things done in work, as it is an abomination to any artist to behold. As for example: You may find, in some pieces, Abraham and Sarah, and many other persons of old time, clothed as they go now-a-days, and truly sometimes worse; for they most resemble the pictures on ballads. Let all ingenious women have regard, that when they work any image, to represent it aright. First, let it be drawn well, and then observe the directions which are given by knowing men. I do assure you I never durst work any Scripture story without informing myself from the ground of it; nor any other story, or single person, without informing myself both of the visage and habit; as followeth:—

“If you work Jupiter, the imperial feigned God, he must have long, black, curled hair, a purple garment trimmed with gold, and sitting upon a golden throne, with bright yellow clouds about him.”

THE TWELVE MONTHS OF THE YEAR.

March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce aspect; a helmet upon his head, and leaning on a spade; and a basket of garden seeds in his left hand, and in his right hand the sign of Aries; and winged.

April. A young man in green, with a garland of myrtle and hawthorn-buds; winged; in one hand primroses and violets, in the other the sign Taurus.

May. With a sweet and lovely countenance; clad in a robe of white and green, embroidered with several flowers; upon his head a garland of all manner of roses; on the one hand a nightingale, in the other a lute. His sign must be Gemini.

June. In a mantle of dark grass-green; upon his head a garland of bents, kings-cups, and maiden-hair; in his left hand an angle, with a box of cantharides; in his right, the sign Cancer; and upon his arms a basket of seasonable fruits.

July. In a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries; with his face and bosom sun-burnt; on his head a wreath of centaury and wild thyme; a scythe on his shoulder, and a bottle at his girdle, carrying the sign Leo.

August. A young man of fierce and choleric aspect, in a flame-coloured garment; upon his head a garland of wheat and rye; upon his arm a basket of all manner of ripe fruits; at his belt a sickle: his sign Virgo.

September. A merry and cheerful countenance, in a purple robe; upon his head a wreath of red and white grapes; in his left hand a handful of oats; withal carrying a horn of plenty, full of all manner of ripe fruits; in his right hand the sign Libra.

October. In a garment of yellow and carnation; upon his head a garland of oak-leaves with acorns; in his right hand the sign Scorpio; in his left hand a basket of medlars, services, and chestnuts, and any other fruits then in season.

November. In a garment of changeable green and black; upon his head a garland of olives, with the fruit in his left hand: bunches of parsnips and turnips in his right: his sign Sagittarius.

December. A horrid and fearful aspect, clad in Irish rags, or coarse frieze girt unto him; upon his head three or four night-caps, and over them a Turkish turban; his nose red, his mouth and beard clogged with icicles; at his back a bundle of holly, ivy, or mistletoe; holding in furred mittens the sign of Capricornus.

January. Clad all in white, as the earth looks with the snow, blowing his nails; in his left arm a billet; the sign Aquarius standing by his side.

February. Clothed in a dark sky-colour, carrying in his right hand the sign Pisces.

The following receipt, "To dress up a chimney very fine for the summer time, as I have done many, and they have been liked very well," may not be unprofitable to the housewives of this century:—

"First, take a pack-thread, and fasten it even to the inner part of the chimney, so high as that you can see no higher as you walk up and down the house. You must drive in several nails to hold up all your work. Then get good store of old green moss from trees, and melt an equal proportion of beeswax and rosin together; and, while it is hot, dip the wrong ends of the moss in it, and presently clap it upon your pack-thread, and press it down hard with your hand. You must make haste, else it will cool before you can fasten it, and then it will fall down. Do so all around where the packthread goes; and the next row you must join to that, so that it may seem all in one: thus do till you have finished it down to the bottom. Then take some other kind of moss, of a whitish colour and stiff, and of several sorts or kinds, and place that upon the other, here and there carelessly, and in some places put a good deal, and some a little; then any kind of fine snail-shells, in which the snails are dead, and little toad-stools, which are very old, and look like velvet, or any other thing that was old and pretty: place it here and there as your fancy serves, and fasten all with wax and rosin. Then, for the hearth of your chimney, you may lay some orpan-sprigs in order all over, and it will grow as it lies; and, according to the season, get what flowers you can, and stick in as if they grew, and a few sprigs of sweet-brier; the flowers you must renew every week; but the moss will last all the Summer, till it will be time to make a fire; and the orpan will last near two months. A chimney thus done doth grace a room exceedingly."

One phrase in the above should particularly recommend it to such of your female readers as, in the nice language of the day, have done growing some time,—"little toad-stools, &c., and any thing that is old and pretty." Was ever antiquity so smoothed over? The culinary recipes have nothing remarkable in them, except the costliness of them. Every thing (to the meanest meats) is sopped in claret, steeped in claret, basted with claret, as if claret were as cheap as ditchwater. I remember Bacon recommends opening a turf or two in your garden-walks, and pouring into each a bottle of claret, to recreate the sense of smelling, being no less grateful than beneficial. We hope the Chancellor of the Exchequer will attend to this in his next reduction of French wines, that we may once more water our gardens with right Bourdeaux. The medical recipes are as whimsical as they are cruel. Our ancestors were not at all effeminate on this head. Modern sentimentalists would shrink at a cock plucked and bruised in a mortar alive to make a cullis, or a live mole baked in an oven (be sure it be alive) to make a powder for consumption. But the whimsicalest of all are the directions to servants; (for this little book is a compendium of all duties;) the footman is seriously admonished not to stand lolling against his master's chair while he waits at table; for "to lean on a chair when they wait is a particular favour shown to any superior servant, as the chief gentleman, or the waiting woman when she rises from the table." Also he must not "hold the plates before his mouth to be defiled with his breath, nor touch them on the right [inner] side." Surely Swift must have seen this little treatise.

Hannah concludes with the following address, by which the self-estimate which she formed of her usefulness may be calculated:—

"Ladies, I hope you're pleas'd and so shall I
 If what I've writ, you may be gainers by;
 If not; it is your fault, it is not mine,
 Your benefit in this I do design.

Much labour and much time it hath me cost,
 Therefore, I beg, let none of it be lost.
 The money you shall pay for this my book,
 You'll not repent of, when in it you look.
 No more at present to you I shall say,
 But wish you all the happiness I may.
 "H. W."

5.—SIR JEFFERY DUNSTAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "EVERY DAY BOOK."

To your account of Sir Jeffery Dunstan, in columns 829-30, (where, by an unfortunate erratum, the effigies of two Sir Jefferys appear, when the uppermost figure is clearly meant for Sir Harry Dimsdale,) you may add that the writer of this has frequently met him in his latter days, about 1790 or 1791, returning in an evening, after his long day's itineracy, to his domicile,—a wretched shed in the most beggarly purlieu of Bethnal Green, a little on this side the Mile End Turnpike. The lower figure in that leaf most correctly describes his then appearance, except that no graphic art can convey an idea of the general squalor of it, and of his bag (his constant concomitant) in particular. Whether it contained "old wigs" at that time, I know not; but it seemed a nitter repository for bones snatched out of kennels than for any part of a gentleman's dress, even at second-hand.

The ex-member for Garrat was a melancholy instance of a great man whose popularity is worn out.

He still carried his sack ; but it seemed a part of his identity rather than an implement of his profession ; a badge of past grandeur : could any thing have divested him of that, he would have shown a “ poor forked animal ” indeed. My life upon it, it contained no curls at the time I speak of. The most decayed and spiritless remnants of what was once a peruke would have scorned the filthy case ; would absolutely have “ burst its cerements.” No : it was empty, or brought home bones, or a few cinders possibly. A strong odour of burnt bones, I remember, blended with the scent of horse-flesh seething into dog’s meat, and, only relieved a little by the breathings of a few brick-kilns, made up the atmosphere of the delicate suburban spot which this great man had chosen for the last scene of his earthly vanities. The cry of “ old wigs ” had ceased with the possession of any such fripperies : his sack might have contained not unaptly a little mould to scatter upon that grave to which he was now advancing ; but it told of vacancy and desolation. His quips were silent too, and his brain was empty as his sack : he slank along, and seemed to decline popular observation. If a few boys followed him, it seemed rather from habit than any expectation of fun.

“ Alas ! how changed from him,
The life of humour, and the soul of whim,
Gallant and gay on Garrat’s hustings proud ! ”

But it is thus that the world rewards its favourites in decay. What faults he had, I know not. I have heard something of a peccadillo or so. But some little deviation from the precise line of rectitude might have been winked at in so tortuous and stigmatic a frame. Poor Sir Jeffery ! it were well if some M.P.'s in earnest have passed their Parliamentary existence with no more offences against integrity than could be laid to thy charge! A fair dismissal was thy due, not so unkind a degradation; some little snug retreat, with a bit of green before thine eyes, and not a burial alive in the fetid beggaries of Bethnal. Thou wouldst have ended thy days in a manner more appropriate to thy pristine dignity, installed in munificent mockery, (as in mock honours you had lived,)—a poor knight of Windsor!

Every distinct place of public speaking demands an oratory peculiar to itself. The forensic fails within the walls of St. Stephen. Sir Jeffery was a living instance of this; for, in the flower of his popularity, an attempt was made to bring him out upon the stage (at which of the winter theatres I forget, but I well remember the anecdote) in the part of Doctor Last. The announcement drew a crowded house; but, notwithstanding infinite tutoring,—by Foote or Garrick, I forget which,—when the curtain drew up, the heart of Sir Jeffery failed, and he faltered on, and made nothing of his part, till the hisses of the house at last, in very kindness, dismissed him from the boards. Great as his parliamentary eloquence had shown itself, brilliantly as his off-hand sallies had sparkled on a hustings, they here totally failed him. Perhaps he had an aversion to borrowed wit, and, like my Lord Foppington, disdained to entertain himself (or others) with the forced products of another man's brain. Your man of quality is more diverted with the natural sprouts of his own.

6.—THE HUMBLE PETITION OF AN UNFORTUNATE DAY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I am a poor wronged Day. I appeal to you as the general patron of the family of the Days. The candour with which you attended to the expostulations of a poor relative of ours—a sort of cousin thrice removed—encourages me to hope that you will listen to the complaint of a Day of rather more consequence. I am the Day, Sir, upon which it pleased the course of Nature that your Gracious Sovereign should be born. As such, before his accession, I was always observed and honoured. But since that happy event, in which naturally none had a greater interest than myself, flaw has been discovered in my title. My lustre has been eclipsed, and—to use the words of one of your own poets—

“I fade into the light of common Day!”

It seems that about that time an Impostor crept into Court, who has the effrontery to usurp my honours, and to style herself the King's Birthday, upon some shallow pretence, that, being St. George's Day, she must needs be King-George's Day also. All Saints' Day we have heard of, and All Souls' Day, we are willing to admit; but does it follow that this foolish

Twenty-third of April must be All Georges' Day, and enjoy a monopoly of the whole name, from George of Cappadocia to George of Leyden, and from George-a-Green down to George Dyer.

It looks a little oddly that I was discarded not long after the discussions of a set of men and measures, with whom I have nothing in common. I hope no whisperer has insinuated into the ears of Royalty, as if I were anything whiggishly inclined, which, in my heart I abhor, all these kinds of Revolutions, by which I am sure to be the greatest sufferer.

I wonder my shameless rival can have the face to let the Tower and Park guns proclaim so many big thundering fibs as they do upon her Anniversary—making your Sovereign to be older than he really is by an hundred and odd days, which is no great compliment, one would think. Consider if this precedent for ante-dating of Births should become general, what confusion it must make in the Parish Registers; what crowds of young heirs we should have coming of age before they are one-and-twenty, with numberless similar grievances. If these chops and changes are suffered, we shall have Lord Mayor's Day eating her custard unauthentically in May, and Guy Faux preposterously blazing twice over in the Dog Days.

I humbly submit that it is not within the prerogatives of Royalty itself, to be born twice over. We have read of the supposititious, births of princes, but where are the evidences of this first birth? Why are not the nurses in attendance, the midwife, &c., produced?—the silly story has not so much as a warming-pan to support it.

My legal advisers, to comfort me, tell me that I have the right on my side; I am the true Birth Day, and the other Day is only kept. But what consolation is this to me, as long as this naughty-kept-creature keeps me out of my dues and privileges?

Pray take my unfortunate case into your consideration, and see that I am restored to my lawful Rejoicings, Firings, Bon-Firings, Illuminations, &c.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray.

TWELFTH DAY OF AUGUST.

7.--REMARKABLE CORRESPONDENT.

SIR,—I am the youngest of Three hundred and sixty-six brethren—there are no fewer of us—who have the honour, in the words of the good old song, to call the Sun our Dad. You have done the rest of our family the favour of bestowing an especial compliment upon each member of it individually—I mean as far as you have gone: for it will take you some time before you can make your bow all round—and I have no reason to think it is your intention to neglect any of us but poor Me. Some you have hung round with flowers; others you have made fine with martyrs' palms and saintly garlands. The most insignificant of us you have sent away pleased with some fitting apologue or pertinent story. What have I done that you dismiss me without mark or attribute? What though I make my public appearance seldomer than the rest of my brethren? I thought that angels' visits had been accounted the more precious for their very rarity. Reserve was always looked upon as dignified. I am seen but once for four times that my brethren obtrude themselves; making their presence cheap and contemptible in comparison with the state which I keep.

Am I not a Day (when I do come) to all purposes, as much as any of them. Decompose me, anatomise me; you will find that I am constituted like the rest. Divide me into twenty-four, and you will find that I cut up into as many goodly hours (or main limbs) as the rest. I too have my arteries and pulses, which are the minutes and the seconds.

It is hard to be disfamilied thus, like Cinderella in her rags and ashes, while her sisters flaunted it about in cherry-coloured ribbons and favours. My brethren, forsooth, are to be dubbed; one Saint Day; another Pope Day; a third Bishop Day; the least of them is Squire Day, or Mr. Day, while I am—plain Day. Our house, Sir, is a very ancient one, and the least of us is too proud to put up with an indignity. What though I am but a younger brother in some sense—for the youngest of my brethren is by some thousand years my senior—yet I bid fair to inherit as long as any of them, while I have the Calendar to show; which, you must understand, is our Title Deeds.

Not content with slurring me over with a bare and naked acknowledgment of my occasional visitation in prose, you have done your best to deprive me of my verse honours. In column 310 of your Book, you quote an antique scroll, leaving out the last couplet, as if on purpose to affront me. “Thirty days hath September”—so you transcribe very faithfully for four lines, and most invidiously suppress the exceptive clause:—

“Except in Leap Year, that’s the time
When February’s days hath twenty and——.”

I need not set down the rhyme which should follow; I dare say you know it very well, though you were pleased to leave it out. These indignities demand reparation. While you have time it will be well for you to make the amende honorable. Ransack your stories, learned Sir, I pray of you, for some attribute, biographical, anecdotal, or floral, to invest me with. Did nobody die, or nobody flourish—was nobody born—upon any of my periodical visits to this globe? Does the world stand still as often as I vouchsafe to appear? Am I a blank in the Almanac? Alms for oblivion? If you don't find a flower at least to grace me with (a Forget-Me-Not would cheer me in my present obscurity), I shall prove the worst day to you you ever saw in your life: and your work, instead of the title it now vaunts, must be content (every fourth year at least) to go by the lame appellation of, The Every-Day-but-one-Book.

Yours, as you treat me,

TWENTY-NINTH OF FEBRUARY.

8.—MRS. GILPIN RIDING TO EDMONTON.

Then Mrs. Gilpin sweetly said
 Unto her children three,
 "I'll clamber o'er this stile so high,
 And you'll climb after me."
 But having climbed unto the top,
 She could no further go:
 But sate to every passer by
 A spectacle and show:

Who said "Your spouse and you this day
Will show your horsemanship;
And if you stay till he comes back,
Your horse will need no whip."

THE sketch here engraved (probably from the poet's friend, Romney,) was found with the above three stanzas in the handwriting of Cowper, among the papers of the late Mrs. Unwin. It is to be regretted that no more was found of this little Episode, as it evidently was intended to be, in the "Diverting History of Johnny Gilpin." It is to be supposed that Mrs. Gilpin, in the interval between dinner and tea, finding the time to hang upon her hands, during her husband's involuntary excursion, rambled out with the children into the fields at the back of the Bell (as what could be more natural?); and at one of these high awkward stiles, for which Edmonton is so proverbially famed, the embarrassment represented, so mystifying to a substantial City madam, might have happened; a predicament which leaves her in a state which is the very Antipodes to that of her too-locomotive husband. In fact, she rides a restive horse. Now I talk of Edmonton stiles, I must speak a little about those of Enfield, its next neighbour, which are so ingeniously contrived—every rising bar to the top becoming more protuberant than the one under it—that it is impossible for any Christian climber to get over without bruising his (or her) shins as many times as there are bars. These inhospitable invitations to a flayed skin, are planted so thickly too, and are so troublesomely importunate at every little paddock here, that this, with more propriety than Thebes of old, might be entitled Hecatompolis: the Town of the Hundred Gates or Stiles.

A SOJOURNER AT ENFIELD.

9.—THE BEADLE.

CHRISTMAS has been among us so lately, that we need not apologise for introducing a character who at this season of the year comes forth in renovated honours, and may aptly be termed one of her ever blues. It is the

BEADLE OF ST. ———'S

No personal application, reader, we entreat of you ; it is not this or that good man, but the Universal Parish Beadle, not peculiar to either of the Farringdons, or limited to St. Giles in the Fields, or him of Cripplegate, such as he is, within any one of the wards within the bills—the same form shall find him in all. “How Christmas and consolatory he looks! How redolent of good cheer is he! He is a Cornu-Copia—an abundance. What pudding-sleeves! what a collar, red, and like a beef-steak, is his! He is a walking refreshment! he looks like a whole parish: full, important, but untaxed. The children of charity gaze at him with a modest smile. The straggling boys look on him with confidence. They do not pocket their marbles. They do not fly from the familiar gutter. This is a red-letter day, and the cane is reserved for to-morrow. For the verbal description of him we are indebted to an agreeable writer in the London Magazine for December, 1822; his corporal lineaments we have borrowed from a Caricature (if we may give it so low a name) just published in¹ which this figure is the very gem and jewel, in a grouping of characters of all sorts and denominations, brought together with infinite skill and fun to illustrate the many shapes of cant in this canting age. A piece of satire without illnature—of character rather than of caricature, too broad and comprehensive to admit of particular and invidious application.

“ Nought but a blank remains, a dead void space,

“ A step of life that promised such a race.”—DRYDEN.

NAPOLEON has now sent us back from the grave sufficient echoes of his living renown: the twilight of posthumous fame has lingered long enough over the spot where the sun of his glory set; and his name must at length repose in the silence, if not in the darkness, of night. In this busy and evanescent scene, other spirits of the age are rapidly snatched away, claiming our undivided sympathies and regrets, until in turn they yield to some newer and more absorbing grief. Another name is now added to the list of the mighty departed,—a name whose influence upon the hopes and fears, the fates and fortunes, of our countrymen, has rivalled, and perhaps eclipsed, that of the defunct “child and champion of Jacobinism,” while it is associated with all the sanctions of legitimate government, all the sacred authorities of social order and our most holy religion. We speak of one, indeed, under whose warrant heavy and incessant contributions were imposed upon our fellow-citizens, but who exacted nothing without the signet and sign-manual of most devout Chancellors of the Exchequer. Not to dally longer with the sympathies of our readers, we think it right to premonish them that we are composing an epicedium upon no less distinguished a personage than the Lottery, whose last breath, after many penultimate puffs, has been sobbed forth by sorrowing contractors, as if the world itself were about to be converted into a blank. There is a fashion of eulogy, as well as of vituperation; and, though the Lottery stood for some time in the latter predicament, we hesitate not to assert that multis ille bonis febilis occidit. Never have we joined in the senseless clamour which condemned the only tax whereto we became voluntary contributors,—the only resource which gave the stimulus without the danger or infatuation of gambling; the only alembic which in these plodding days sublimized our imaginations, and filled them with more delicious dreams than ever flitted athwart the sensorium of Alnaschar.

Never can the writer forget, when, as a child, he was hoisted upon a servant's shoulder in Guildhall, and looked down upon the installed and solemn pomp of the then drawing Lottery. The two awful cabinets of iron, upon whose massive and mysterious portals the royal initials were gorgeously emblazoned, as if, after having deposited the unfulfilled prophecies within, the king himself had turned the lock, and still retained the key in his pocket; the blue-coat boy, with his naked arm, first converting the invisible wheel, and then diving into the dark recess for a ticket; the grave and reverend faces of the commissioners eyeing the announced number; the scribes below calmly committing it to their huge books ; the anxious countenances of the surrounding populace ; while the giant figures of God and Magog, like presiding deities, looked down with a grim silence upon the whole proceeding,—constituted altogether a scene, which, combined with the sudden wealth supposed to be lavished from those inscrutable wheels, was well calculated to impress the imagination of a boy with reverence and amazement. Jupiter, seated between the two fatal urns of good and evil, the blind goddess with her cornucopia, the Parcæ wielding the distaff, the thread of life, and the abhorred shears, seemed but dim and shadowy abstractions of mythology, when I had gazed upon an assemblage exercising, as I dreamt, a not less eventful power, and all presented to me in palpable and living operation. Reason and experience, ever at their old spiteful work of catching and destroying the bubbles which youth delighted to follow, have indeed dissipated much of this illusion : but my mind so far retained the influence of that early impression, that I have ever since continued to deposit my humble offerings at its shrine, whenever the ministers of the Lottery went forth with type and trumpet to announce its periodical dispensations ; and though nothing has been doled out to me from its undiscerning coffers but blanks, or those more vexatious tantalisers of the spirit, denominated small prizes, yet do I hold myself largely indebted to this most generous diffuser of universal happiness. Ingrates that we are ! are we to be thankful for no benefits that are not palpable to sense, to recognize no favours that are not of marketable value, to acknowledge no wealth unless it can be counted with the five fingers ? If we admit the mind to be the sole depository of genuine joy, where is the bosom that has not been elevated into a temporary Elysium by the magic of the Lottery? Which of us has not converted his ticket, or even his sixteenth share of one, into a nest-egg of Hope, upon which he has sate brooding in the secret roosting-places of his heart, and hatched it into a thousand fantastical apparitions?

What a startling revelation of the passions if all the aspirations engendered by the Lottery could be made manifest! Many an impecuniary epicure has gloated over his locked-up warrant for future wealth, as a means of realizing the dream of his namesake in the "Alchemist":—

“My meat shall all come in in Indian shells,— Dishes of agate set in gold, and studded
 With emeralds, sapphires, hyacinths, and rubies;
 The tongues of carps, dormice, and camel's heels,
 Boiled i' the spirit of Sol, and dissolved in pearl,
 (Apicius' diet 'gainst the epilepsy.)
 And I will eat these broths with spoons of amber,
 Headed with diamant and carbuncle.
 My footboy shall eat pheasants, calvered salmons,
 Knots, godwits, lampreys: I myself will have
 The beards of barbels served, instead of salads;
 Oiled mushrooms, and the swelling unctuous paps
 Of a fat pregnant sow, newly cut off.
 Dress'd with an exquisite and poignant sauce,
 For which I'll say unto my cook, 'There's gold:
 Go forth, and be a knight.'”

Many a doting lover has kissed the scrap of paper whose promissory shower of gold was to give up to him his otherwise unattainable Danaë; Nimrods have transformed the same narrow symbol into a saddle, by which they have been enabled to bestride the backs of peerless hunters ; while nymphs have metamorphosed its Protean form into—

“ Rings, gauds, conceits, Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats,” and all the braveries of dress, to say nothing of the obsequious husband, the two-footmaned carriage, and the opera-box. By the simple charm of this numbered and printed rag, gamesters have, for a time at least, recovered their losses ; spendthrifts have cleared off mortgages from their estates ; the imprisoned debtor has leapt over his lofty boundary of circumscription and restraint, and revelled in all the joys of liberty and fortune ; the cottage walls have swelled out into more goodly proportion than those of Baucis and Philemon ; poverty has tasted the luxuries of competence ; labour has lolled at ease in a perpetual arm-chair of idleness ; sickness has been bribed into banishment ; life has been invested with new charms ; and death deprived of its former terrors. Nor have the affections been less gratified than the wants, appetites, and ambitions of mankind. By the conjurations of the same potent spell, kindred have lavished anticipated benefits upon one another, and charity upon all. Let it be termed a delusion,—a fool’s paradise is better than the wise man’s Tartarus ; be it branded as an ignis-fatuus,—it was at least a benevolent one, which, instead of beguiling its followers into swamps, caverns, and pitfalls, allured them on with all the blandishments of enchantment to a garden of Eden,—an ever-blooming Elysium of delight. True, the pleasures it bestowed were evanescent : but which of our joys are permanent ? And who so inexperienced as not to know that anticipation is always of higher relish than reality, which strikes a balance both in our sufferings and enjoyments? "The fear of ill exceeds the ill we fear;" and fruition, in the same proportion, invariably falls short of hope. "Men are but children of a larger growth," who may amuse themselves for a long time in gazing at the reflection of the moon in the water; but if they jump in to grasp it, they may grope for ever, and only get the farther from their object. He is the wisest who keeps feeding upon the future, and refrains as long as possible from undeceiving himself by converting his pleasant speculations into disagreeable certainties.

The true mental epicure always purchased his ticket early, and postponed inquiry into its fate to the last possible moment, during the whole of which intervening period he had an imaginary twenty thousand locked up in his desk; and was not this well worth all the money? Who would scruple to give twenty pounds interest for even the ideal enjoyment of as many thousands during two or three months? Crede quod habes, et habes; and the usufruct of such a capital is surely not dear at such a price. Some years ago, a gentleman in passing along Cheapside saw the figures 1,069, of which number he was the sole proprietor, flaming on the window of a lottery office as a capital prize. Somewhat flurried by this discovery, not less welcome than unexpected, he resolved to walk round St. Paul's that he might consider in what way to communicate the happy tidings to his wife and family; but, upon repassing the shop, he observed that the number was altered to 10,069, and, upon inquiry, had the mortification to learn that his ticket was a blank, and had only been stuck up in the window by a mistake of the clerk. This effectually calmed his agitation ; but he always speaks of himself as having once possessed twenty thousand pounds, and maintains that his ten-minutes' walk round St. Paul's was worth ten times the purchase-money of the ticket. A prize thus obtained, has, moreover, this special advantage,—it is beyond the reach of fate ; it cannot be squandered ; bankruptcy cannot lay siege to it ; friends cannot pull it down, nor enemies blow it up ; it bears a charmed life, and none of women born can break its integrity, even by the dissipation of a single fraction. Show me the property in these perilous times that is equally compact and impregnable. We can no longer become enriched for a quarter of an hour ; we can no longer succeed in such splendid failures : all our chances of making such a miss have vanished with the last of the Lotteries.

Life will now become a flat, prosaic routine of matter of fact ; and sleep itself, erst so prolific of numerical configurations and mysterious stimulants to lottery adventure, will be disfurnished of its figures and figments. People will cease to harp upon the one lucky number suggested in a dream, and which forms the exception, while they are scrupulously silent upon the ten thousand falsified dreams which constitute the rule. Morpheus will stifle Cocker with a handful of poppies, and our pillows will be no longer haunted by the book of numbers.

And who, too, shall maintain the art and mystery of puffing, in all its pristine glory, when the lottery professors shall have abandoned its cultivation ? They were the first, as they will assuredly be the last, who fully developed the resources of that ingenious art ; who cajoled and decoyed the most suspicious and wary reader into a perusal of their advertisements by devices of endless variety and cunning; who baited their lurking schemes with midnight murders, ghost-stories, crim-cons, bon-mots, balloons, dreadful catastrophes, and every diversity of joy and sorrow, to catch newspaper-gudgeons. Ought not such talents to be encouraged? Verily the abolitionists have much to answer for!

And now, having established the felicity of all those who gained imaginary prizes, let us proceed to show that the equally numerous class who were presented with real blanks have not less reason to consider themselves happy. Most of us have cause to be thankful for that which is bestowed; but we have all, probably, reason to be still more grateful for that which is withheld, and more especially for our being denied the sudden possession of riches. In the Litany, indeed, we call upon the Lord to deliver us "in all time of our wealth;" but how few of us are sincere in deprecating such a calamity! Massinger's Luke, and Ben Jonson's Sir Epicure Mammon, and Pope's Sir Balaam, and our own daily observation, might convince us that the Devil "now tempts by making rich, not making poor." We may read in the "Guardian" a circumstantial account of a man who was utterly ruined by gaining a capital prize. We may recollect what Dr. Johnson said to Garrick, when the latter was making a display of his wealth at Hampton Court,—“Ah, David, David! these are the things that make a death-bed terrible.” We may recall the Scripture declaration, as to the difficulty a rich man finds in entering into the kingdom of Heaven; and, combining all these denunciations against opulence, let us heartily congratulate one another upon our lucky escape from the calamity of a twenty or thirty thousand pound prize ! The fox in the fable, who accused the unattainable grapes of sourness, was more of a philosopher than we are generally willing to allow. He was an adept in that species of moral alchemy which turns every thing to gold, and converts disappointment itself into a ground of resignation and content. Such we have shown to be the great lesson inculcated by the Lottery, when rightly contemplated ; and, if we might parody M. de Chateaubriand's jingling expression,—“le Roi est mort : vive le Roi !”—we should be tempted to exclaim, “The Lottery is no more : long live the Lottery !”

REMINISCENCES OF JUKE JUDKINS, ESQ., OF BIRMINGHAM.

I AM the only son of a considerable brazier in Birmingham, who, dying in 1803, left me successor to the business, with no other encumbrance than a sort of rent-charge, which I am enjoined to pay out it, of ninety-three pounds sterling per annum, to his widow, my mother; and which the improving state of the concern, I bless God, has hitherto enabled me to discharge with punctuality. (I say I am enjoined to pay the said sum, but not strictly obligated: that is to say, as the will is worded; I believe the law would relieve me from the payment of it; but the wishes of a dying parent should in some sort have the effect of law.) So that, though the annual profits of my business, on an average of the last three or four years, would appear to an indifferent observer, who should inspect my shop-books, to amount to the sum of one thousand three hundred and three pounds, odd shillings, the real proceeds in that time have fallen short of that sum to the amount of the aforesaid payment of ninety-three pounds sterling annually.

I was always my father's favourite. He took a delight, to the very last, in recounting the little sagacious tricks and innocent artifices of my childhood. One manifestation thereof I never heard him repeat without tears of joy trickling down his cheeks. It seems, that when I quitted the parental roof, (Aug. 27, 1788,) being then six years and not quite a month old, to proceed to the Free School at Warwick, where my father was a sort of trustee, my mother—as mothers are usually provident on these occasions—had stuffed the pockets of the coach, which was to convey me and six more children of my own growth that were going to be entered along with me at the same seminary, with a prodigious quantity of gingerbread, which I remember my father said was more than was needed; and so indeed it was; for, if I had been to eat it all myself, it would have got stale and mouldy before it had been half spent. The consideration whereof set me upon my contrivances how I might secure to myself as much of the gingerbread as would keep good for the next two or three days, and yet none of the rest in manner be wasted. I had a little pair of pocket-compasses, which I usually carried about me for the purpose of making draughts and measurements, at which I was always very ingenious, of the various engines and mechanical inventions in which such a town as Birmingham abounded. By the means of these, and a small penknife which my father had given me, I cut out the one-half of the cake, calculating that the remainder would reasonably serve my turn; and subdividing it into many little slices, which were curious to see for the neatness and niceness of their proportion, I sold it out in so many pennyworths to my young companions as served us all the way to Warwick, which is a distance of some twenty miles from this town: and very merry, I assure you, we made ourselves with it, feasting all the way. By this honest stratagem, I put double the prime cost of the gingerbread into my purse, and secured as much as I thought would keep good and moist for my next two or three days' eating. When I told this to my parents on their first visit to me at Warwick, my father (good man) patted me on the cheek, and stroked my head, and seemed as if he could never make enough of me; but my mother unaccountably burst into tears, and said "it was a very niggardly action," or some such expression, and that "she would rather it would please God to take me"—meaning (God help me!) that I should die—"than that she should live to see me grow up a mean man:" which shows the difference of parent from parent, and how some mothers are more harsh and intolerant to their children than some fathers; when we might expect quite the contrary. My father, however, loaded me with presents from that time, which made me the envy of my schoolfellows. As I felt this growing disposition in them, I naturally sought to avert it by all the means in my power; and from that time I used to eat my little packages of fruit, and other nice things, in a corner, so privately that I was never found out. Once, I remember, I had a huge apple sent me, of that sort which they call cats'-heads. I concealed this all day under my pillow; and at night, but not before I had ascertained that my bedfellow was sound asleep,—which I did by pinching him rather smartly two or three times, which he seemed to perceive no more than a dead person, though once or twice he made a motion as he would turn, which frightened me,—I say, when I had made all sure, I fell to work upon my apple; and, though it was as big as an ordinary man's two fists, I made shift to get through it before it was time to get up. And a more delicious feast I never made; thinking all night what a good parent I had (I mean my father) to send me so many nice things, when the poor lad that lay by me had no parent or friend in the world to send him any thing nice: and, thinking of his desolate condition, I munched and munched as silently as I could, that I might not set him a-longing if he overheard me. And yet, for all this considerateness and attention to other people's feelings, I was never much a favourite with my schoolfellows; which I have often wondered at, seeing that I never defrauded any one of them of the value of a halfpenny, or told stories of them to their master, as some little lying boys would do, but was ready to do any of them all the services in my power that were consistent with my own well-doing. I think nobody can be expected to go further than that. But I am detaining my reader too long in recording my juvenile days. It is time I should go forward to a season when it became natural that I should have some thoughts of marrying, and, as they say, settling in the world. Nevertheless, my reflections on what I may call the boyish period of my life may have their use to some readers. It is pleasant to trace the man in the boy; to observe shoots of generosity in those young years; and to watch the progress of liberal sentiments, and what I may call a genteel way of thinking, which is discernible in some children at a very early age, and usually lays the foundation of all that is praiseworthy in the manly character afterwards.

With the warmest inclinations towards that way of life, and a serious conviction of its superior advantages over a single one, it has been the strange infelicity of my lot never to have entered into the respectable estate of matrimony. Yet I was once very near it. I courted a young woman in my twenty-seventh year; for so early I began to feel symptoms of the tender passion! She was well to do in the world, as they call it; but yet not such a fortune, as, all things considered, perhaps I might have pretended to. It was not my own choice altogether; but my mother very strongly pressed me to it. She was always putting it to me, that "I had comings-in sufficient,—that I need not stand upon a portion;" though the young woman, to do her justice, had considerable expectations, which yet did not quite come up to my mark, as I told you before. She had this saying always in her mouth, that "I had money enough; that it was time I enlarged my housekeeping, and to show a spirit befitting my circumstances." In short, what with her importunities, and my own desires in part co-operating,—for, as I said, I was not yet quite twenty-seven,—a time when the youthful feelings may be pardoned, if they show a little impetuosity—I resolved, I say, upon all these considerations, to set about the business of courting in right earnest. I was a young man then; and having a spice of romance in my character, (as the reader has doubtless observed long ago,) such as that sex is apt to be taken with, I had reason in no long time to think my addresses were any thing but disagreeable. Certainly the happiest part of a young man's life is the time when he is going-a-courting. All the generous impulses are then awake, and he feels a double existence in participating his hopes and wishes with another being. Return yet again for a brief moment, ye visionary views,—transient enchantments ! ye moonlight rambles with Cleora in the Silent Walk at Vauxhall, (N.B.—About a mile from Birmingham, and resembling the gardens of that name near London, only that the price of admission is lower,) when the nightingale had suspended her notes in June to listen to our loving discourses, while the moon was overhead, (for we generally used to take our tea at Cleora's mother's before we set out, not so much to save expenses as to avoid the publicity of a repast in the gardens,—coming in much about the time of half-price, as they call it,)—ye soft intercommunions of soul, when, exchanging mutual vows, we prattled of coming felicities ;—the loving disputes we had under those trees, when this house (planning our future settlement) was rejected, because, though cheap, it was dull ; and the other house was given up, because, though agreeably situated, it was too high-rented ;—one was too much in the heart of the town, another was too far from business. These minutiae will seem impertinent to the aged and the prudent. I write them only to the young. Young lovers, and passionate as being young, (such were Cleora and I then,) alone can understand me. After some weeks wasted, as I may now call it, in this sort of amorous colloquy, we at length fixed upon the house in the High Street, No. 203, just vacated by the death of Mr. Hutton, of this town, for our future residence. I had all the time lived in lodgings, (only renting a shop for business,) to be near my mother,—near, I say ; not in the same house ; for that would have been to introduce confusion into our housekeeping, which it was desirable to keep separate. Oh the loving wrangles, the endearing differences, I had with Cleora, before we could quite make up our minds to the house that was to receive us!—I pretending, for argument's sake, the rent was too high, and she insisting that the taxes were moderate in proportion; and love at last reconciling us in the same choice. I think at that time, moderately speaking, she might have had any thing out of me for asking. I do not, nor shall ever, regret that my character at that time was marked with a tinge of prodigality. Age comes fast enough upon us, and, in its good time, will prune away all that is inconvenient in these excesses. Perhaps it is right that it should do so. Matters, as I said, were ripening to a conclusion between us, only the house was yet not absolutely taken,—some necessary arrangements, which the ardour of my youthful impetuosity could hardly brook at that time, (love and youth will be precipitate,)—some preliminary arrangements, I say, with the landlord, respecting fixtures,—very necessary things to be considered in a young man about to settle in the world, though not very accordant with the impatient state of my then passions,—some obstacles about the valuation of the fixtures,—had hitherto precluded (and I shall always think providentially) my final closes with his offer; when one of those accidents, which, unimportant in themselves, often arise to give a turn to the most serious intentions of our life, intervened, and put an end at once to my projects of wifing and of house-keeping.

I was never much given to theatrical entertainments; that is, at no time of my life was I ever what they call a regular play-goer: but on some occasion of a benefit-night, which was expected to be very productive, and indeed turned out so, Cleora expressing a desire to be present, I could do no less than offer, as I did very willingly, to squire her and her mother to the pit. At that time it was not customary in our town for tradesfolk, except some of the very topping ones, to sit, as they now do, in the boxes. At the time appointed I waited upon the ladies, who had brought with them a young man, a distant relation, whom it seems they had invited to be of the party. This a little disconcerted me, as I had about me barely silver enough to pay for our three selves at the door, and did not at first know that their relation had proposed paying for himself. However, to do the young man justice, he not only paid for himself, but for the old lady besides ; leaving me only to pay for two, as it were. In our passage to the theatre, the notice of Cleora was attracted to some orange wenches that stood about the doors wending their commodities. She was leaning on my arm ; and I could feel her every now and then giving me a nudge, as it is called, which I afterwards discovered were hints that I should buy some oranges. It seems, it is a custom at Birmingham, and perhaps in other places, when a gentleman treats ladies to the play,—especially when a full night is expected, and that the house will be inconveniently warm,—to provide them with this kind of fruit, oranges being esteemed for their cooling property. But how could I guess at that, never having treated ladies to a play before, and being, as I said, quite a novice at this kind of entertainments ? At last she spoke plain out, and begged that I would buy some of “those oranges,” pointing to a particular barrow. But when I came to examine the fruit I did not think the quality of it was answerable to the price. In this way I handled several baskets of them; but something in them all displeased me. Some had thin rinds, and some were plainly over-ripe, which is as great a fault as not being ripe enough; and I could not (what they call) make a bargain. While I stood haggling with the women, secretly determining to put off my purchase till I should get within the theatre, where I expected we should have better choice, the young man, the cousin, (who, it seems, had left us without my missing him,) came running to us with his pockets stuffed out with oranges, inside and out, as they say. It seems, not liking the look of the barrow-fruit any more than myself, he had slipped away to an eminent fruiterer's, about three doors distant, which I never had the sense to think of, and had laid out a matter of two shillings in some of the best St. Michael's, I think, I ever tasted. What a little hinge, as I said before, the most important affairs in life may turn upon! The mere inadvertence to the fact that there was an eminent fruiterer's within three doors of us, though we had just passed it without the thought once occurring to me, which he had taken advantage of, lost me the affection of my Cleora. From that time she visibly cooled towards me; and her partiality was as visibly transferred to this cousin. I was long unable to account for this change in her behaviour; when one day, accidentally discoursing of oranges to my mother, alone, she let drop a sort of reproach to me, as if I had offended Cleora by my nearness, as she called it that evening. Even now, when Cleora has been wedded some years to that same officious relation, as I may call him, I can hardly be persuaded that such a trifle could have been the motive to her inconstancy; for could she suppose that I would sacrifice my dearest hopes in her to the paltry sum of two shillings, when I was going to treat her to the play, and her mother too, (an expense of more than four times that amount,) if the young man had not interfered to pay for the latter, as I mentioned? But the caprices of the sex are past finding out: and I begin to think my mother was in the right; for doubtless women know women better than we can pretend to know them.

A POPULAR FALLACY,

THAT A DEFORMED PERSON IS A LORD.

AFTER a careful perusal of the most approved works that treat of nobility, and of its origin in these realms in particular, we are left very much in the dark as to the original patent in which this branch of it is recognised. Neither Camden in his "Etymologie and Original of Barons," nor Dugdale in his "Baronage of England," nor Selden (a more exact and laborious inquirer than either) in his "Titles of Honour," affords a glimpse of satisfaction upon the subject. There is an heraldic term, indeed, which seems to imply gentility, and the right to coat-armour, (but nothing further,) in persons thus qualified. But the sinister bend is more probably interpreted by the best writers on this science, of some irregularity of birth than of bodily conformation. Nobility is either hereditary or by creation, commonly called patent. Of the former kind, the title in question cannot be, seeing that the notion of it is limited to a personal distinction which does not necessarily follow in the blood. Honours of this nature, as Mr. Anstey very well observes, descend, moreover, in a right line. It must be by patent, then, if any thing. But who can show it? How comes it to be dormant? Under what king's reign is it patented? Among the grounds of nobility cited by the learned Mr. Ashmole, after "Services in the Field or in the Council Chamber," he judiciously sets down "Honours conferred by the sovereign out of mere benevolence, or as favouring one subject rather than another for some likeness or conformity observed (or but supposed) in him to the royal nature," and instances the graces showered upon Charles Brandon, who, "in his goodly person being thought not a little to favour the port and bearing of the king's own majesty, was by that sovereign, King Henry the Eighth, for some or one of these respects, highly promoted and preferred." Here, if anywhere, we thought we had discovered a clue to our researches. But after a painful investigation of the rolls and records under the reign of Richard the Third, or "Richard Crouchback," as he is more usually designated in the chronicles,—from a traditionary stoop or gibbosity in that part,—we do not find that that monarch conferred any such lordships as are here pretended, upon any subject or subjects, on a simple plea of "conformity" in that respect to the "royal nature." The posture of affairs, in those tumultuous times preceding the battle of Bosworth, possibly left him at no leisure to attend to such niceties. Further than his reign we have not extended our inquiries, the kings of England who preceded or followed him being generally described by historians to have been of straight and clean limbs, the "natural derivative," says Daniel,¹ "of high blood, if not its primitive recommendation to such ennoblement, as denoting strength and martial prowess,—the qualities set most by in that fighting age." Another motive, which inclines us to scruple the validity of this claim, is the remarkable fact, that none of the persons in whom the right is supposed to be vested do ever insist upon it themselves. There is no instance of any of them "suing his patent," as the law-books call it; much less of his having actually stepped up into his proper seat, as, so qualified, we might expect that some of them would have had the spirit to do, in the House of Lords. On the contrary, it seems to be a distinction thrust upon them. "Their title of 'lord,'" says one of their own body, speaking of the common people, "I never much valued, and now I entirely despise; and yet they will force it upon me as an honour which they have a right to bestow, and which I have none to refuse."² Upon a dispassionate review of the subject, we are disposed to believe that there is no right to the peerage incident to mere bodily configuration ; that the title in dispute is merely honorary, and depending upon the breath of the common people, which in these realms is so far from the power of conferring nobility, that the ablest constitutionalists have agreed in nothing more unanimously than in the maxim, that " the king is the sole fountain of honour."

ON
THE RELIGION OF ACTORS.

THE world has hitherto so little troubled its head with the points of doctrine held by a community which contributes in other ways so largely to its amusement, that, before the late mischance of a celebrated tragic actor, it scarce condescended to look into the practice of any individual player, much less to inquire into the hidden and abscondite springs of his actions. Indeed it is with some violence to the imagination that we conceive of an actor as belonging to the relations of private life, so closely do we identify these persons in our mind with the characters which they assume upon the stage. How oddly does it sound, when we are told that the late Miss Pope, for instance,—that is to say, in our notion of her, Mrs. Candor,—was a good daughter, an affectionate sister, and exemplary in all the parts of domestic life! With still greater difficulty can we carry our notions to church, and conceive of Liston kneeling upon a hassock, or Munden uttering a pious ejaculation, “making mouths at the invisible event.” But the times are fast improving; and if the process of sanctity begun under the happy auspices of the present licenser go on to its completion, it will be as necessary for a comedian to give an account of his faith as of his conduct. Fawcett must study the five points; and Dicky Suett, if he were alive, would have had to rub up his catechism. Already the effects of it begin to appear. A celebrated performer has thought fit to oblige the world with a confession of his faith,—or Br——’s “Religio Dramatici.” This gentleman, in his laudable attempt to shift from his person the obloquy of Judaism, with the forwardness of a new convert, in trying to prove too much, has, in the opinion of many, proved too little. A simple declaration of his Christianity was sufficient; but, strange to say, his apology has not a word about it. We are left to gather it from some expressions which imply that he is a Protestant; but we did not wish to inquire into the niceties of his orthodoxy. To his friends of the old persuasion the distinction was impertinent; for what cares Rabbi Ben Kimchi for the differences which have split our novelty? To the great body of Christians that hold the Pope’s supremacy—that is to say, to the major part of the Christian world—his religion will appear as much to seek as ever. But perhaps he conceived that all Christians are Protestants, as children and the common people call all that are not animals, Christians. The mistake was not very considerable in so young a proselyte, or he might think the general (as logicians speak) involved in the particular. All Protestants are Christians; but I am a Protestant; ergo, &c.: as if a marmoset, contending to be a man, overleaping that term as too generic and vulgar, should at once roundly proclaim himself to be a gentleman. The argument would be, as we say, ex abundantia. From whichever cause this excessus in terminis proceeded, we can do no less than congratulate the general state of Christendom upon the accession of so extraordinary a convert. Who was the happy instrument of the conversion, we are yet to learn: it comes nearest to the attempt of the late pious Dr. Watts to Christianize the Psalms of the Old Testament. Something of the old Hebrew raciness is lost in the transfusion; but much of its asperity is softened and pared down in the adaptation.

The appearance of so singular a treatise at this conjuncture has set us upon an inquiry into the present state of religion upon the stage generally. By the favour of the churchwardens of St. Martin's in the Fields, and St. Paul's, Covent Garden, who have very readily, and with great kindness, assisted our pursuit, we are enabled to lay before the public the following particulars. Strictly speaking, neither of the two great bodies is collectively a religious institution. We had expected to have found a chaplain among them, as at St. Stephen's and other Court establishments; and were the more surprised at the omission, as the last Mr. Bengough at the one house, and Mr. Powell at the other, from a gravity of speech and demeanour, and the habit of wearing black at their first appearances in the beginning of fifth or the conclusion of fourth acts, so eminently pointed out their qualifications for such office. These corporations, then, being not properly congregational, we must seek the solution of our question in the tastes, attainments, accidental breeding, and education of the individual members of them. As we were prepared to expect, a majority at both houses adhere to the religion of the Church Established,—only that at one of them a pretty strong leaven of Catholicism is suspected; which, considering the notorious education of the manager at a foreign seminary, is not so much to be wondered at. Some have gone so far as to report that Mr. T—y, in particular, belongs to an order lately restored on the Continent. We can contradict this; that gentleman is a member of the Kirk of Scotland; and his name is to be found, much to his honour, in the list of seceders from the congregation of Mr. Fletcher. While the generality, as we have said, are content to jog on in the safe trammels of national orthodoxy, symptoms of a sectarian spirit have broken out in quarters where we should least have looked for it. Some of the ladies at both houses are deep in controverted points. Miss F—e, we are credibly informed, is a Sub- and Madame V— a Supra-Lapsarian. Mr. Pope is the last of the exploded sect of the Ranters. Mr. Sinclair has joined the Shakers. Mr. Grimaldi, sen., after being long a Jumper, has lately fallen into some whimsical theories respecting the fall of man; which he understands, not of an allegorical, but a real tumble, by which the whole body of humanity became, as it were, lame to the performance of good works. Pride he will have to be nothing but a stiff neck; irresolution, the nerves shaken; an inclination to sinister paths, crookedness of the joints; spiritual deadness, a paralysis; want of charity, a contraction in the fingers; despising of government, a broken head; the plaster, a sermon; the lint to bind it up, the text; the probers, the preachers; a pair of crutches, the old and new law; a bandage, religious obligation: a fanciful mode of illustration, derived from the accidents and habits of his past calling spiritualized, rather than from any accurate acquaintance with the Hebrew text, in which report speaks him but a raw scholar. Mr. Elliston, from all that we can learn, has his religion yet to choose; though some think him a Muggletonian.

CHARLES LAMB, born in the Inner Temple, 10th February, 1775; educated in Christ's Hospital; afterwards a clerk in the Accountants' Office, East-India House; pensioned off from that service, 1825, after thirty-three years' service; is now a gentleman at large; can remember few specialties in his life worth noting, except that he once caught a swallow flying (teste suâ manu). Below the middle stature; cast of face slightly Jewish, with no Judaic tinge in his complexional religion; stammers abominably, and is therefore more apt to discharge his occasional conversation in a quaint aphorism, or a poor quibble, than in set and edifying speeches; has consequently been libelled as a person always aiming at wit; which, as he told a dull fellow that charged him with it, is at least as good as aiming at dulness. A small eater, but not drinker; confesses a partiality for the production of the juniper-berry; was a fierce smoker of tobacco, but may be resembled to a volcano burnt out, emitting only now and then a casual puff. Has been guilty of obtruding upon the public a tale, in prose, called "Rosamund Gray;" a dramatic sketch, named "John Woodvil;" a "Farewell Ode to Tobacco," with sundry other poems, and light prose matter, collected in two slight crown octavos, and pompously christened his works, though in fact they were his recreations; and his true works may be found on the shelves of Leadenhall Street, filling some hundred folios. He is also the true Elia, whose Essays are extant in a little volume, published a year or two since, and rather better known from that name without a meaning than from any thing he has done, or can hope to do, in his own. He was also the first to draw the public attention to the old English dramatists, in a work called "Specimens of English Dramatic Writers who lived about the Time of Shakespeare," published about fifteen years since. In short, all his merits and demerits to set forth would take to the end of Mr. Upcott's book, and then not be told truly.

He died 18 , much lamented.

Witness his hand,

CHARLES LAMB.

THE DEATH OF MUNDEN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ATHENÆUM."

"DEAR SIR,—Your communication to me of the death of Munden made we weep. Now, Sir, I am not of the melting mood. But, in these serious times, the loss of half the world's fun is no trivial deprivation. It was my loss (or gain shall I call it) in the early time of my play-going, to have missed all Munden's acting. There was only he and Lewis at Covent Garden, while Drury Lane was exuberant with Parsons, Dodd, &c., such a comic company as, I suppose, the stage never showed. Thence, in the evening of my life I had Munden all to myself, more mellowed, richer perhaps, than ever. I cannot say what his change of faces produced in me. It was not acting. He was not one of my 'old actors.' It might be better. His power was extravagant. I saw him one evening in three drunken characters. Three farces were played. One part was Dosey—I forget the rest; but they were so discriminated that a stranger might have seen them all, and not have dreamed that he was seeing the same actor. I am jealous for the actors who pleased my youth. He was not a Parsons or a Dodd, but he was more wonderful. He seemed as if he could do any thing. He was not an actor, but something better, if you please. Shall I instance Old Foresight, in "Love for Love," in which Parsons was at once the old man, the astrologer, &c. Munden dropped the old man, the doater—which makes the character—but he substituted for it a moon-struck character, a perfect abstraction from this earth, that looked as if he had newly come down from the planets. Now, that is not what I call acting. It might be better. He was imaginative; he could impress upon an audience an idea—the low one, perhaps, of a leg of mutton and turnips; but such was the grandeur and singleness of his expressions, that that single expression would convey to all his auditory a notion of all the pleasures they had all received from all the legs of mutton and turnips they had ever eaten in their lives. Now this is not acting, nor do I set down Munden amongst my old actors. He was only a wonderful man, exerting his vivid impressions through the agency of the stage. In one only thing did I see him act—that is, support a character; it was in a wretched farce, called “Johnny Gilpin,” for Downton’s benefit, in which he did a Cockney. The thing ran but one night; but when I say that Liston’s Lubin Log was nothing to it, I say little: it was transcendent. And here let me say of actors, envious actors, that of Munden, Liston was used to speak, almost with the enthusiasm due to the dead, in terms of such allowed superiority to every actor on the stage, and this at a time when Munden was gone by in the world’s estimation, that it convinced me that artists (in which term I include poets, painters, &c.,) are not so envious as the world think. I have little time, and therefore enclose a criticism on Munden’s Old Dosey and his general acting, by a friend.

“Mr. Munden appears to us to be the most classical of actors. He is that in high farce which Kemble was in high tragedy. The lines of these great artists are, it must be admitted, sufficiently distinct; but the same elements are in both,—the same directness of purpose, the same singleness of aim, the same concentration of power, the same iron-casing of inflexible manner, the same statue-like precision of gesture, movement, and attitude. The hero of farce is as little affected with impulses from without, as the retired Prince of Tragedians. There is something solid, sterling, almost adamant, in the building up of his most grotesque characters. When he fixes his wonder-working face in any of its most amazing varieties, it looks as if the picture were carved out from a rock by Nature in a sportive vein, and might last for ever. It is like what we can imagine a mask of the old Grecian Comedy to have been, only that it lives, and breathes, and changes. His most fantastical gestures are the grand ideal of farce. He seems as though he belonged to the earliest and the state-liest age of Comedy, when instead of superficial foibles and the airy varieties of fashion, she had the grand asperities of man to work on, when her grotesque images had something romantic about them, and when humour and parody were themselves heroic. His expressions of feeling and bursts of enthusiasm are among the most genuine which we have ever felt. They seem to come up from a depth of emotion in the heart, and burst through the sturdy casing of manner with a strength which seems increased tenfold by its real and hearty obstacle. The workings of his spirit seem to expand his frame, till we can scarcely believe that by measure it is small: for the space which he fills in the imagination is so real, that we almost mistake it for that of corporeal dimensions. His Old Dosey, in the excellent farce of "Past Ten o'Clock," is his grandest effort of this kind, and we know of nothing finer. He seems to have a "heart of oak" indeed. His description of a sea-fight is the most noble and triumphant piece of enthusiasm which we remember. It is as if the spirits of a whole crew of nameless heroes "were swelling in his bosom." We never felt so ardent and proud a sympathy with the valour of England as when we heard it. May health long be his, thus to do our hearts good; for we never saw any actor whose merits have the least resemblance to his, even in species; and when his genius is withdrawn from the stage, we shall not have left even a term by which we can fitly describe it."

TABLE TALK.

BY THE LATE ELIA.

No. I.

THE greatest pleasure I know, is to do a good action by stealth, and to have it found out by accident.

'Tis unpleasant to meet a beggar. It is painful to deny him; and if you relieve him, it is so much out of your pocket.

Men marry for fortune, and sometimes to please their fancy; but, much oftener than is suspected, they consider what the world will say of it; how such a woman in their friends' eyes will look at the head of a table. Hence we see so many insipid beauties made wives of, that could not have struck the particular fancy of any man, that had any fancy at all. These I call furniture wives; as men buy furniture pictures, because they suit this or that niche in their dining parlours.

Your universally cried-up beauties are the very last choice which a man of taste would make. What pleases all, cannot have that individual charm which makes this or that countenance engaging to you, and to you only, perhaps you know not why. What gained the fair Gunnings titled husbands, who, after all, turned out very sorry wives? Popular repute.

It is a sore trial when a daughter shall marry against her father's approbation. A little hard-heartedness, and aversion to a reconciliation, is almost pardonable. After all, Will Dockwray's way is perhaps the wisest. His best-loved daughter made a most imprudent match; in fact, eloped with the last man in the world that her father would have wished her to marry. All the world said that he would never speak to her again. For months she durst not write to him, much less come near him. But, in a casual rencounter, he met her in the streets of Ware;—Ware, that will long remember the mild virtues of William Dockwray, Esq. What said the parent to his disobedient child, whose knees faltered under her at the sight of him? "Ha, Sukey, is it you?" with that benevolent aspect, with which he paced the streets of Ware, venerated as an angel, "come and dine with us on Sunday;" then turning away, and again turning back, as if he had forgotten something, he added, "and Sukey, do you hear, bring your husband with you." This was all the reproof she ever heard from him. Need it be added, that the match turned out better for Susan than the world expected?

"We read the Paradise Lost as a task," says Dr. Johnson. Nay, rather as a celestial recreation, of which the dullard mind is not at all hours alike recipient. "Nobody ever wished it longer;"—nor the moon rounder, he might have added. Why, 'tis the perfectness and completeness of it, which makes us imagine that not a line could be added to it, or diminished from it, with advantage. Would we have a cubit added to the stature of the Medicean Venus? Do we wish her taller?

No: II.

Lear. Who are you?

Mine eyes are none o' the best. I'll tell you straight.
Are you not Kent?

Kent. The same; your servant Kent.

Where is your servant Caius?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;
He'd strike, and quickly too: he's dead and rotten.

Kent. No, my good Lord; I am the very man—

Lear. I'll see that straight—

Kent. That, from your first of difference and decay,
Have follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. You are welcome hither.

Albany. He knows not what he says; and vain it is That we present us to him.

Edgar. Look up, my Lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost. O, let him pass! He hates him,
That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.

So ends "King Lear," the most stupendous of the Shakspearian dramas; and Kent, the noblest feature of the conceptions of his divine mind. This is the magnanimity of authorship, when a writer, having a topic presented to him, fruitful of beauties for common minds, waives his privilege, and trusts to the judicious few for understanding the reason of his abstinence. What a pudder would a common dramatist have raised here of a reconciliation scene, a perfect recognition, between the assumed Caius and his master!—to the suffusing of many fair eyes, and the moistening of cambric handkerchiefs. The old dying king partially catching at the truth, and immediately lapsing into obliviousness, with the high-minded carelessness of the other to have his services appreciated, as one that — served not for gain,

Or follow'd out of form,

are among the most judicious, not to say heart-touching, strokes in Shakspeare.

Allied to this magnanimity it is, where the pith and point of an argument, the amplification of which might compromise the modesty of the speaker, is delivered briefly, and, as it were, parenthetically; as in those few but pregnant words, in which the man in the old 'Nut-brown Maid' rather intimates than reveals his unsuspected high birth to the woman:—

Now understand, to Westmorland,
Which is my heritage,
I will you bring, and with a ring,
By way of marriage,
I will you take, and Lady make.

Turn we to the version of it, ten times diluted, of dear Mat. Prior—in his own way unequalled, and a poet now-a-days too much neglected—"In me," quoth Henry, addressing the astounded Emma—with a flourish and an attitude, as we may conceive:—

In me behold the potent Edgar's heir,
 Illustrious Earl! him terrible in war,
 Let Loire confess.

And with a deal of skimble-skamble stuff, as Hotspur would term it, more, presents the Lady with a full and true enumeration of his Papa's rent-roll in the fat soil by Deva.

But of all parentheses, (not to quit the topic too suddenly,) commend me to that most significant one, at the commencement of the old popular ballad of Fair Rosamund:—

When good King Henry ruled this land,
 The second of that name,

Now mark—

(Besides the Queen) he dearly loved
 A fair and comely dame.

There is great virtue in this besides.

Amidst the complaints of the wide spread of infidelity among us, it is consolatory that a sect is sprung up in the heart of the metropolis, and is daily on the increase, of teachers of that healing doctrine which Pope upheld, and against which Voltaire directed his envenomed wit. We mean those practical preachers of optimism, or the belief that Whatever is is best—the Cads of Omnibuses; who, from their little back pulpits—not once in three or four hours, as those Proclaimers of “God and his prophet” in Mussulman countries; but every minute, at the entry or exit of a brief passenger, are heard, in an almost prophetic tone, to exclaim—(Wisdom crying out, as it were, in the streets,)—ALL'S RIGHT.

No. III.

ADVICE is not so commonly thrown away as is imagined. We seek it in difficulties. But, in common speech, we are apt to confound with it admonition; as when a friend reminds one that drink is prejudicial to the health, &c. We do not care to be told of that which we know better than the good man that admonishes. M—— sent to his friend L——, who is no water-drinker, a twopenny tract ‘Against the Use of Fermented Liquors.’ L—— acknowledged the obligation, as far as to twopence. Penotier’s advice was the safest after all:

“I advised him——”

But I must tell you. The dear, good-meaning, no-thinking creature, had been dumb-founding a company of us with a detail of inextricable difficulties, in which the circumstances of an acquaintance of his were involved. No clue of light offered itself. He grew more and more misty as he proceeded. We pitied his friend, and thought,

God help the man so wrapt in error’s endless maze:

when, suddenly brightening up his placid countenance, like one that had found out a riddle, and looked to have the solution admired, “At last,” said he, “I advised him——”

Here he paused, and here we were again interminably thrown back. By no possible guess could any of us aim at the drift of the meaning he was about to be delivered of. “I advised him,” he repeated, “to have some advice upon the subject.” A general approbation followed; and it was unanimously agreed, that, under all the circumstances of the case, no sounder or more judicious counsel could have been given.

A laxity pervades the popular use of words. Parson W—— is not quite so continent as Diana, yet prettily dissembleth his frailty. Is Parson W—— therefore a hypocrite? I think not. Where the concealment of a vice is less pernicious than the bare-faced publication of it would be, no additional delinquency is incurred in the secrecy. Parson W—— is simply an immoral clergyman. But if Parson W—— were to be for ever haranguing on the opposite virtue—choosing for his perpetual text, in preference to all other pulpit topics, the remarkable resistance recorded in the 39th of Exodus—dwelling, moreover, and dilating upon it—then Parson W—— might be reasonably suspected of hypocrisy. But Parson W—— rarely diverteth into such line of argument, or toucheth it briefly. His ordinary topics are fetched from “obedience to the Powers that be”—“submission to the civil magistrate in all commands that are not absolutely unlawful;” on which he can delight to expatiate with equal fervour and sincerity. Again, to despise a person is properly to look down upon him with none, or the least possible emotion. But when Clementina, who has lately lost her lover, with bosom heaving, eyes flashing, and her whole frame in agitation, pronounces with a peculiar emphasis, that she “despises the fellow,” depend upon it that he is not quite so despicable in her eyes as she would have us imagine.—One more instance:—If we must naturalize that portentous phrase, a truism, it were well that we limited the use of it. Every commonplace or trite observation is not a truism. For example: A good name helps a man on in the world.

This is nothing but a simple truth, however hackneyed. It has a distinct subject and predicate. But when the thing predicated is involved in the term of the subject, and so necessarily involved that by no possible conception they can be separated, then it becomes a truism; as to say, A good name is a proof of a man's estimation in the world. We seem to be saying something when we say nothing. I was describing to F—— some knavish tricks of a mutual friend of ours. "If he did so and so," was the reply, "he cannot be an honest man." Here was a genuine truism—truth upon truth—inference and proposition identical; or rather a dictionary definition usurping the place of an inference.

No. IV.

THE vices of some men are magnificent. Compare the amours of Henry the Eighth and Charles the Second. The Stuart had mistresses—the Tudor kept wives.

We are ashamed at sight of a monkey—somehow as we are shy of poor relations.

C—— imagined a Caledonian compartment in Hades, where there should be fire without sulphur.

Absurd images are sometimes irresistible. I will mention two. An elephant in a coach-office gravely coming to have his trunk booked;—a mermaid over a fish-kettle cooking her own tail.

It is praise of Shakspeare, with reference to the play-writers, his contemporaries, that he has so few revolting characters. Yet he has one that is singularly mean and disagreeable—the King in Hamlet. Neither has he characters of insignificance, unless the phantom that stalks over the stage as Julius Cæsar, in the play of that name, may be accounted one. Neither has he envious characters, excepting the short part of Don John, in "Much Ado about Nothing." Neither has he unentertaining characters, if we except Parolles, and the little that there is of the Clown, in "All's Well that Ends Well."

It would settle the dispute, as to whether Shakspeare intended Othello for a jealous character, to consider how differently we are affected towards him, and for Leontes in the "Winter's Tale." Leontes is that character. Othello's fault was simply credulity.

Is it possible that Shakspeare should never have read Homer, in Chapman's version at least? If he had read it, could he mean to travesty it in the parts of those big boobies, Ajax and Achilles? Ulysses, Nestor, and Agamemnon, are true to their parts in the Iliad: they are gentlemen at least. Thersites, though unamusing, is fairly deducible from it. Troilus and Cressida are a fine graft upon it. But those two big bulks—

It is a desideratum in works that treat de re culinariâ, that we have no rationale of sauces, or theory of mixed flavours; as to show why cabbage is reprehensible with roast beef, laudable with bacon; why the haunch of mutton seeks the alliance of currant jelly, the shoulder civilly declineth it; why a loin of veal, (a pretty problem,) being itself unctuous, seeketh the adventitious lubricity of melted butter; and why the same part in pork, not more oleaginous, abhorreth it; why the French bean sympathises with the flesh of deer; why salt fish points to parsnip, brawn makes a dead set at mustard; why cats prefer valerian to hearts-ease, old ladies vice versâ,—though this is rather travelling out of the road of the dietetics, and may be thought a question more curious than relevant;—why salmon (a strong sapor per se) fortifieth its condition with the mighty lobster sauce, whose embraces are fatal to the delicateser relish of the turbot; why oysters in death rise up against the contamination of brown sugar, while they are posthumously amorous of vinegar; why the sour mango and the sweet jam, by turns, court and are accepted by the compliable mutton hash—she not yet decidedly declaring for either. We are as yet but in the empirical stage of cookery. We feed ignorantly, and want to be able to give a reason of the relish that is in us; so that if Nature should furnish us with a new meat, or be prodigally pleased to restore the phoenix, upon a given flavour, we might be able to pronounce instantly, on philosophical principles, what the sauce to it should be—what the curious adjuncts.

THOUGHTS ON PRESENTS OF GAME, &c.

“WE love to have our friend in the country sitting thus at our table by proxy; to apprehend his presence (though a hundred miles may be between us) by a turkey, whose goodly aspect reflects to us his ‘plump corpusculum;’ to taste him in grouse or woodcock; to feel him gliding down in the toast peculiar to the latter; to concorporate him in a slice of Canterbury brawn. This is indeed to have him within ourselves; to know him intimately; such participation is methinks unitive, as the old theologians phrase it.”—Last Essays of Elia.

“ Elia presents his acknowledgments to his ‘Correspondent Unknown,’ for a basket of prodigiously fine game. He takes for granted that so amiable a character must be a reader of the Athenæum, else he had meditated a notice in the Times. Now if this friend had consulted the Delphic oracle for a present suited to the palate of Elia, he could not have hit upon a morsel so acceptable. The birds he is barely thankful for; pheasants are poor fowls disguised in fine feathers; but a hare roasted hard and brown, with gravy and melted butter!—Old Mr. Chambers, the sensible clergyman in Warwickshire, whose son’s acquaintance has made many hours happy in the life of Elia, used to allow a pound of Epping to every hare. Perhaps that was over-doing it. But, in spite of the note of Philomel, who, like some fine poets, that think no scorn to adopt plagiarisms from an humble brother, reiterates every Spring her cuckoo cry of ‘Jug, Jug, Jug,’ Elia pronounces that a hare, to be truly palated, must be roasted. Juggling sophisticates her. In our way it eats so ‘crips,’ as Mrs. Minikin says. Time was, when Elia was not arrived at his taste, that he preferred to all luxuries a roasted pig. But he disclaims all such green-sickness appetites in future, though he hath to acknowledge the receipt of many a delicacy in that kind from correspondents—good, but mistaken men—in consequence of their erroneous supposition that he had carried up into mature life the prepossessions of childhood. From the worthy Vicar of Enfield he acknowledges a tithe contribution of extraordinary sapor. The ancients must have loved hares; else why adopt the word lepores (obviously from lepus) but for some subtle analogy between the delicate flavour of the latter and the finer relishes of wit in what we most poorly translate pleasantries. The fine madnesses of the poet are the very decoction of his diet. Thence is he hare-brained. Harum-scarum is a libellous unfounded phrase, of modern usage. 'Tis true the hare is the most circumspect of animals, sleeping with her eye open. Her ears, ever erect, keep them in that wholesome exercise which conduces them to form the very tit-bit of the admirers of this noble animal. Noble will I call her, in spite of her detractors, who from occasional demonstrations of the principle of self-preservation, (common to all animals,) infer in her a defect of heroism. Half a hundred horsemen, with thrice the number of dogs, scour the country in pursuit of puss across three counties; and because the well-flavoured beast, weighing the odds, is willing to evade the hue and cry, (with her delicate ears shrinking perchance from discord,) comes the grave naturalist, Linnæus perchance, or Buffon, and gravely sets down the hare as a timid animal. Why Achilles, or Bully Dawson, would have declined the preposterous combat.

“ In fact, how light of digestion we feel after a hare! How tender its processes after swallowing! What chyle it promotes! How ethereal! as if its living celerity were a type of its nimble coursing through the animal juices. The notice might be longer. It is intended less as a Natural History of the Hare than a cursory thanks to the country ‘ good Unknown.’ The hare has many friends, but none sincerer than

PETER'S NET.

"ALL IS FISH THAT COMES TO MY NET."

No. 1.—RECOLLECTIONS OF A LATE ROYAL ACADEMICIAN.

WHAT Apelles was to the Grecian Alexander, the same to the Russian was the late G— D— None but Apelles might attempt the lineaments of the world's conqueror; none but our Academician could have done justice to the lines of the Czar and his courtiers. There they hang, the labour of ten plodding years, in an endless gallery, erected for the nonce, in the heart of Imperial Petersburgh—eternal monuments of barbarian taste submitting to half-civilized cunning—four hundred fierce Half-Lengths, all male, and all military; like the pit in a French theatre, or the characters in "Timon" as it was last acted, with never a woman among them. Chaste sitters to Vandyke, models of grace and womanhood, and thou, Dame Venetia Digby, fairest among thy fair compeers at Windsor, hide your pure pale cheeks, and cool English beauties, before this suffocating horde of Scythian riflers, this male chaos! Your cold oaken frames shall wane before the gorgeous gildings,

With Tartar faces thronged, and horrent uniforms.

One emperor contended for the monopoly of the ancient; two were competitors at once for the pencil of the modern Apelles. The Russian carried it against the Haytian by a single length. And if fate, as it was at one time nearly arranged, had wafted D. to the shores of Hayti, with the same complacency in his art with which he persisted in daubing in, day after day, his frozen Muscovites, he would have sate down for life to smutch in upon canvass the faces of blubber-lipped sultanas, or the whole male retinue of the dingy court of Christophe; for in truth a choice of subjects was the least of D.'s care. A Goddess from Cnidus, or from the Caffre coast, was equal to him; Lot, or Lot's wife; the charming widow H., or her late husband.

My acquaintance with D. was in the outset of his art, when the graving tools, rather than the pencil, administered to his humble wants. Those implements, as is well known, are not the most favourable to the cultivation of that virtue which is esteemed next to godliness. He might "wash his hands in innocency," and so metaphorically "approach an altar;" but his material puds were any thing but fit to be carried to church. By an ingrained economy in soap—if it was not for pictorial effect rather—he would wash (on Sundays) the inner oval, or portrait, as it may be termed, of his countenance, leaving the unwashed temples to form a natural black frame round a picture in which a dead white was the predominant colour. This, with the addition of green spectacles, made necessary by the impairment which his graving labours by day and night (for he was ordinarily at them for sixteen hours out of the twenty-four) had brought upon his visual faculties, gave him a singular appearance when he took the air abroad; in so much, that I have seen a crowd of young men and boys following him along Oxford Street with admiration, not without shouts ; even as the Youth of Rome, we read in Vasari, followed the steps of Raphael with acclamations for his genius, and for his beauty, when he proceeded from his work-shop to chat with Cardinals and Popes at the Vatican.

The family of D. were not at this time in affluent circumstances. His father, a clever artist, had out-lived the style of art, in which he excelled most of his contemporaries. He, with the father of the celebrated Morland, worked for the shop of Carington and Bowles, which exists still for the poorer sort of caricatures, on the North side of St. Paul's Church Yard. They did clever things in colours. At an inn in Reading a screen is still preserved, full of their labours ; but the separate portions of either artist are now undistinguishable. I remember a Mother teaching her Child to read ; (B. Barton has a copy of it ;) a Laundress washing ; a Young Quaker, a beautiful subject. But the flower of their forgotten productions hangs still at a public-house on the left hand, as thou arrivest, Reader, from the now Highgate archway, at the foot of the descent where Crouch End begins, on thy road to green Hornsey. Turn in, and look at it, for the sight is well worth a cup of excusatory cyder. In the parlour to the right you will find it—an antiquated subject—a Damsel sitting at her breakfast table in a gown of the flowered chintz of our grandmothers, with a tea-service before her of the same pattern. The effect is most delicate. Why have these harmonies—these agrémens—no place in the works of modern art ?

With such niceties in his calling D. did not much trouble his head. but, after an ineffectual experiment to reconcile his eye-sight with his occupation, boldly quitted it, and dashed into the beaten road of common-place portraiture in oil. The Hopners and the Lawrences were his Vandykes and his Velasquezes ; and if he could make any thing like them, he insured himself immortality. With such guides he struggled on through laborious nights and days, till he reached the eminence he aimed at—of mediocrity. Having gained that summit, he sate down contented. If the features were but cognoscible, no matter whether the flesh resembled flesh or oil-skin. For the thousand tints—the grains—which in the life diversify the nose, the chin, the cheek—which a Reynolds can but coarsely counterfeit—he cared nothing at all about them. He left such scrupulosities to opticians and anatomists. If the features were but there, the character of course could not be far off. A lucky hit which he made in painting the dress of a very dressy lady—Mrs. W—e—, whose handsome countenance also and tall elegance of shape were too palpable entirely to escape under any masque of oil, with which even D. could overlay them—brought to him at once, an influx of sitters, which almost rivalled the importunate calls upon Sir Thomas. A portrait he did soon after, of the Princess Charlotte, clenched his fame. He proceeded Academician. At that memorable conjuncture of time it pleased the Allied Sovereigns to visit England.

I called upon D. to congratulate him upon a crisis so doubly eventful. His pleasant housekeeper seemed embarrassed ; owned that her master was alone. But could he be spoken with ? With some importunity I prevailed upon her to usher me up into his painting-room. It was in Newman Street. At his easel stood D., with an immense spread of canvass before him, and by his side a live Goose. I inquired into this extraordinary combination. Under the rose he informed me that he had undertaken to paint a transparency for Vauxhall, against an expected visit of the Allied Sovereigns to that place. I smiled at an engagement so derogatory to his new-born honours ; but a contempt of small gains was never one of D.'s foibles. My eyes beheld crude forms of warriors, kings, rising under his brush upon this interminable stretch of cloth. The Wolga, the Don, and the Nieper were there, or their representative River Gods ; and Father Thames clubbed urns with the Vistula. Glory with her dazzling Eagle was not absent, nor Fame, nor Victory. The shade of Rubens might have evoked the mighty allegories. But what was the Goose? He was evidently sitting for a something.

D. at last informed me, that having fixed upon a group of rivers, he could not introduce the Royal Thames without his swans ; that he had inquired the price of a live swan, and it being more than he was prepared to give for it, he had bargained with the poulterer for the next thing to it ; adding significantly, that it would do to roast, after it had served its turn to paint swans by. Reader, this is a true story.

So entirely devoid of imagination, or any feeling for his high art, was this Painter, that for the few historical pictures he attempted, any sitter might sit for any character. He took once for a subject The Infant Hercules. Did he chuse for a model some robust antique? No. He did not even pilfer from Sir Joshua, who was nearer to his own size. But from a show he hired to sit to him a child in years indeed, (though no Infant,) but in fact a precocious Man, or human portent, that was disgustingly exhibiting at that period; a thing to be strangled. From this he formed his Infant Hercules. In a scriptural flight he next attempted a Samson in the lap of Delilah. A Delilah of some sort was procurable for love or money, but who should stand for the Jewish Hercules? He hired a tolerably stout porter, with a thickish head of hair, curling in yellowish locks, but lithe—much like a wig. And these were the robust strengths of Samson!

I once was witness to a family scene in his painting closet, which I had entered rather abruptly, and but for his encouragement, should as hastily have retreated. He stood with displeased looks eyeing a female relative—whom I had known under happier auspices—that was kneeling at his feet with a baby in her arms, with her eyes uplifted and suppliant. Though I could have previously sworn to the virtue of Miss ——, yet casual slips have been known. There are such things as families disgraced, where least you would have expected it. The child might be ——; I had heard of no wedding—I was the last person to pry into family secrets—when D. relieved my uneasy cogitations by explaining, that the innocent, good-humoured creature before me, (such as she ever was, and is now that she is married,) with a baby borrowed from the public-house, was acting Andromache to his Ulysses, for the purpose of transferring upon canvass a tender situation from the Troades of Seneca.

On a subsequent occasion I knocked at D.'s door. I had chanced to have been in a dreamy humour previously. I am not one that often poetizes, but I had been musing (coxcombically enough in the heart of Newman Street, Oxford Road,) upon Pindus and the Aonian Maids. The Lover of Daphne was in my mind—when, answering to my summons, the door opened, and there stood before me, laurel-crowned, the god himself, unshorn Apollo. I was beginning to mutter apologies to the Celestial Presence—when on the thumb of the right hand of the Delian (his left held the harp) I spied a pallet, such as painters carry, which immediately reconciled me to the whimsical transformation of my old acquaintance—with his own face, certainly any other than Grecianesque—into a temporary image of the oracle-giver of Delphos. To have impersonated the Ithacan was little; he had been just sitting for a god.—It would be no incurious inquiry to ascertain what the minimum of the faculty of imagination, ever supposed essential to painters along with poets, is, that, in these days of complaints of want of patronage towards the fine arts, suffices to dub a man a R——l A———n.

Not only had D. no imagination to guide him in the treatment of such subjects, but he had no relish for high art in the productions of the great masters. He turned away from them as from something foreign and irrelative to him and his calling. He knew he had neither part nor portion in them. Cozen him into the Stafford or the Angerstein Gallery, he involuntarily turned away from the Baths of Diana—the Four Ages of Guercino—the Lazarus of Piombo—to some petty piece of modern art that had been inconsistently thrust into the collection through favour. On that he would dwell and pore, blind as the dead to the delicacies that surrounded him. There he might learn something. There he might pilfer a little. There was no grappling with Titian or Angelo.

The narrowness of his domestic habits to the very last, was the consequence of his hard bringing up, and unexpected emergence into opulence. While rolling up to the ears in Russian rubles, a penny was still in his eyes the same important thing, which it had with some reason seemed to be, when a few shillings were his daily earnings. When he visited England a short time before his death, he reminded an artist of a commission which he had executed for him in Russia, the package of which was "still unpaid." At this time he was not unreasonably supposed to have realized a sum little short of half a million sterling. What became of it was never known; what gulf, or what Arctic vorago, sucked it in, his acquaintance in those parts have better means of guessing than his countrymen. It is certain that few of the latter were any thing the better for it.

It was before he expatriated himself, but subsequently to his acquisition of pictorial honours in this country, that he brought home two of his brother Academicians to dine with him. He had given no orders extraordinary to his housekeeper. He trusted, as he always did, to her providing. She was a shrewd lass, and knew, as we say, a bit of her master's mind.

It had happened that on the day before, D. passing near Clare Market by one of those open shambles where tripe and cow-heel are exposed for sale, his eye was arrested by the sight of some tempting flesh rolled up. It is a part of the intestines of some animal, which my olfactory sensibilities never permitted me to stay long enough to inquire the name of. D. marked the curious involutions of the unacquainted luxury; the harmony of its colours—a sable vert—pleased his eye; and, warmed with the prospect of a new flavour, for a few farthings he bore it off in triumph to his housekeeper. It so happened that his day's dinner was provided, so the cooking of the novelty was for that time necessarily suspended.

Next day came. The hour of dinner approached. His visitors, with no very romantic anticipations, expected a plain meal at least; they were prepared for no new dainties; when, to the astonishment of them, and almost of D. himself, the purchase of the preceding day was served up piping hot—the cook declaring, that she did not know well what it was, for “her master always marketed.” His guests were not so happy in their ignorance. They kept dogs.

I will do D. the justice to say, that on such occasions he took what happened in the best humour possible. He had no false modesty; though I have generally observed that persons who are quite deficient in that mauvais honte, are seldom over-troubled with the quality itself, of which it is the counterfeit.

By what arts, with his pretensions, D. contrived to wriggle himself into a seat in the Academy, I am not acquainted enough with the intrigues of that body (more involved than those of an Italian conclave) to pronounce. It is certain, that neither for love to him, nor out of any respect to his talents, did they elect him. Individually he was obnoxious to them all. I have heard that, in his passion for attaining this object, he went so far as to go down upon his knees to some of the members, whom he thought least favourable, and beg their suffrage with many tears.

But death, which extends the measure of a man's stature to appearance; and wealth, which men worship in life and death, which makes giants of punies, and embalms insignificance; called around the exequies of this pigmy Painter the rank, the riches, the fashion of the world. By Academic hands his pall was borne; by the carriages of nobles of the land, and of ambassadors from foreign Powers, his bier was followed; and St. Paul's (O worthy casket for the shrine of such a Zeuxis!) now holds ALL THAT WAS MORTAL OF G. D.

CHARLES LAMB.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

THERE is a Saturday night—I speak not to the admirers of Burns—erotically or theologically considered; HIS of the “Cotter's” may be a very charming picture, granting it to be but half true. Nor speak I now of the Saturday Night at Sea, which Dibdin hath dressed up with a gusto more poignant to the mere nautical palate of un-Calvinized South Britons. Nor that it is marketing night with the pretty tripping servant-maids all over London, who with judicious and economic eye, select the white and well-blown fillet, that the blue-aproned contunder of the calf can safely recommend as “prime veal,” and which they are to be sure not to over-brown on the morrow. Nor speak I of the hard-handed Artisan, who on this night receives the pittance which is to furnish the neat Sabbatical dinner—not always reserved with Judaical rigour for that laudable purpose, but broken in upon, perchance, by inviting pot of ale, satisfactory to the present orifice. These are alleviatory, care-consoling. But the Hebdomadal Finale which I contemplate hath neither comfort nor alleviation in it; I pronounce it, from memory, altogether punitive, and to be abhorred. It is—Saturday Night to the School-boy.

Cleanliness, says some sage man, is next to Godliness. It may be; but how it came to sit so very near, is the marvel. Methinks some of the more human virtues might have put in for a place before it. Justice—Humanity—Temperance—are positive qualities; the courtesies and little civil offices of life, had I been Master of the Ceremonies to that Court, should have sate above the salt in preference to a mere negation. I confess there is something wonderfully refreshing, in warm countries, in the act of ablution. Those Mahometan washings—how cool to the imagination! but in all these superstitions, the action itself, if not the duty, is voluntary. But to be washed perforce; to have a detestable flannel rag soaked in hot water, and redolent of the very coarsest coarse soap, ingrained with hard beads for torment, thrust into your mouth, eyes, nostrils—positively Burking you, under pretence of cleansing—substituting soap for dirt, the worst dirt of the two—making your poor red eyes smart all night, that they might look out brighter on the Sabbath morn,) for their clearness was the effect of pain more than cleanliness,) could this be true religion?

The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel. I am always disposed to add, so are those of Grandmothers. Mine—the Print has made her look rather too young—had never-failing pretexts of tormenting children for their good. I was a chit then; and I well remember when a fly had got into a corner of my eye, and I was complaining of it to her, the old lady deliberately pounded two ounces or more of the finest loaf sugar that could be got, and making me hold open the eye as wide as I could, (all innocent of her purpose,) she blew from delicate white paper, with a full breath, the whole saccharine contents into the part afflicted, saying, “There,—now the fly is out!” ’Twas most true: a legion of blue-bottles, with the prince of flies at their head, must have dislodged with the torrent and deluge of tears which followed. I kept my own counsel, and my fly in my eye when I had got one, in future, without troubling her dulcet applications for the remedy. Then her medicine case was a perfect magazine of tortures for infants. She seemed to have no notion of the comparatively tender drenches which young internals require: her potions were any thing but milk for babes. Then her sewing up of a cut finger, pricking a whit-loe before it was ripe, because she could not see well, with the aggravation of the pitying tone she did it in!

But of all her nostrums, (rest her soul!) nothing came up to the Saturday Night’s flannel, that rude fragment of a Witney blanket, (Wales spins none so coarse), thrust into the corners of a weak child’s eye with soap that might have absterged an Ethiop, whitened the hands of Duncan’s She-murderer, and scoured away Original Sin itself. A faint image of my penance you see in the Print—but the Artist has sunk the flannel—the Age, I suppose, is too nice to bear it: and he has faintly shadowed the expostulatory suspension of the razor-strap in the hand of my Grandfather, when my pains and clamours had waxed intolerable. Peace to the Shades of them both! And if their well-meaning souls had need of cleansing when they quitted earth, may the process of it have been milder than that of my old Purgatorial Saturday Night's path to the Sabbatical rest of the morrow!

NEPOS.

ORIGINAL LETTER OF JAMES THOMSON.

THE following very interesting letter has been recovered from oblivion, or at least from neglect, by our friend Elia, and the public will no doubt thank him for the deed. It is without date or superscription in the manuscript, which (as our contributor declares) was in so "fragmentitious" a state as to perplex his transcribing faculties in the extreme. The poet's love of nature is quite evident from one part of it; and the "poetical pressure of his affairs" from another. Whether regarded as elucidating the former or the latter, it is a document not a little calculated to excite the attention of the curious as well as the critical. We could ourselves write an essay-full of conjectures from the ground it affords both with respect to the author's poems and his pride. But we must take another opportunity, or leave it to his next biographer.

DEAR SIR,—I would chide you for the slackness of your correspondence; but having blamed you wrongeously (sic in MS.) last time, I shall say nothing till I hear from you, which, I hope, will be soon.

There's a little business I would communicate to you before I come to the most entertaining part of our correspondence.

I'm going (hard task) to complain, and beg your assistance. When I came up here I brought very little money with me; expecting some more upon the selling of Widehope, which was to have been sold that day my mother was buried. Now it is unsold yet, but will be disposed of as soon as can be conveniently done; though indeed it is perplexed with some difficulties. I was a long time living here at my own charges, and you know how expensive that is; this, together with the furnishing of myself with clothes, linen, one thing and another, to fit me for any business of this nature here, necessarily obliged me to contract some debts. Being a stranger, it is a wonder how I got any credit; but I cannot expect it will be long sustained, unless I immediately clear it. Even now, I believe it is at a crisis—my friends have no money to send me till the land is sold; and my creditors will not wait till then. You know what the consequence would be. Now the assistance I would beg of you, and which I know, if in your power, you will not refuse me, is a letter of credit on some merchant, banker, or such like person in London, for the matter of twelve pounds, till I get money upon the selling of the land, which I am at last certain of, if you could either give it me yourself or procure it ; though you owe it not to my merit, yet you owe it to your own nature, which I know so well as to say no more upon the subject ; only allow me to add, that when I first fell upon such a project (the only thing I have for it in my present circumstances), knowing the selfish inhuman temper of the generality of the world, you were the first person that offered to my thoughts, as one to whom I had the confidence to make such an address.

Now I imagine you are seized with a fine romantic kind of melancholy on the fading of the year—now I figure you wandering, philosophical and pensive, amidst brown withered groves ; while the leaves rustle under your feet, the sun gives a farewell parting gleam, and the birds

Stir the faint note, and but attempt to sing.

Then again, when the heavens wear a gloomy aspect, the winds whistle and the waters spout, I see you in the well-known cleugh, beneath the solemn arch of tall, thick, embowering trees, listening to the amusing lull of the many steep, moss-grown cascades ; while deep, divine contemplation, the genius of the place, prompts each swelling, awful thought. I am sure you would not resign your place in that scene at an easy rate,—none ever enjoyed it to the height you do, and you are worthy of it. There I walk in spirit and disport in its beloved gloom. This country I am in is not very interesting—no variety but that of woods, and these we have in abundance. But where is the living stream ? the airy mountain ? or the hanging rock ? with twenty other things that elegantly please the lover of nature. Nature delights me in every form. I am just now painting her in her most luxurious dress; for my own amusement, describing winter as it presents itself. After my first proposal of the subject—

I sing of winter and his gelid reign;
 Nor let a rhyming insect of the spring
 Deem it a barren theme, to me 'tis full
 Of manly charms; to me who court the shade,
 Whom the gay seasons suit not, and who shun
 The glare of summer. Welcome, kindred gloom!
 Drear awful wintry horrors, welcome all! &c.

After this introduction, I say, which insists for a few lines further, I prosecute the purport of the following one:—

Nor can I, O departing Summer! choose
 But consecrate one pitying line to you;
 Sing your last temper'd days and sunny balm
 That cheer the spirits and serene the soul.

The terrible floods, and high winds, that usually happen about this time of the year, and have already happened here (I wish you have not felt them too dreadfully); the first produced the enclosed lines; the last are not completed. Mr. Rickleton's poem on Winter, which I still have, first put the design into my head—in it are some masterly strokes that awakened me—being only a present amusement it is ten to one but I drop it whenever another fancy comes across. I believe it had been much more for your entertainment if in this letter I had cited other people instead of myself—but I must refer that till another time. If you have not seen it already, I have just now in my hands an original of Sir Alexander Brands (the crazed Scots knight of the woful countenance), you would relish. I believe it might make Mis^t John catch hold of his knees, which I take in him to be a degree of mirth only inferior to fall back again with an elastic spring. It is very [here a word is waggishly obliterated] printed in the Evening Post; so perhaps you have seen these panegyrics of our declining bard; one on the Princess's birthday; the other on his Majesty's, in [obliterated] cantos: they are written in the spirit of a complicated craziness. I was lately in London a night, and in the old playhouse saw a comedy acted, "Love makes a Man; or, the Fop's Fortune," where I beheld Miller and Cibber shine to my infinite entertainment. In and about London this month of September, near a hundred people have died by accident and suicide. There was one blacksmith tired of the hammer, who hung himself, and left written behind him this concise epitaph—

I, Joe Pope,
Lived without hope,
And died with a rope,

or else some epigrammatic Muse has belied him.

Mr. Muir has ample fund for politics in the present posture of affairs, as you will find by the public news. I should be glad to know that great minister's frame just now. Keep it to yourself—you may whisper it too in Mis John's ear. Far otherwise is his lately mysterious brother, Mr. Tait, employed. Started a superannuated fortune and just now upon the full scent. It is comical enough to see him amongst the rubbish of his controversial divinity and politics, furbishing up his antient rusty gallantry.

Yours sincerely,

J. T.

Remember me to all friends, Mr. Rickle, Mis John, Br. John, &c.

CRITICISM ON A FRIEND'S MS.

“ BESIDES the words ‘riant’ and ‘Euphrosyne,’ the sentence is senseless. ‘A sweet sadness’ capable of inspiring ‘a more grave joy—than what?—than demonstrations of mirth? Odd if it had not been. I had once a wry aunt, which may make me dislike the phrase.

“ ‘Pleasurable :’—no word is good that is awkward to spell. (Query.) Welcome or Joyous.

“ ‘Steady self-possession rather than undaunted courage,’ &c. The two things are not opposed enough. You mean, rather than rash fire of valour in action.”

“ ‘Looking like a heifer,’ I fear won’t do in prose. (Qy.) ‘Like to some spotless heifer,’—or, ‘that you might have compared her to some spotless heifer,’ &c.—or, ‘Like to some sacrificial heifer of old.’ I should prefer, ‘garlanded with flowers as for a sacrifice’—and cut the cow altogether.”

“ Say ‘Like the muttering of some strange spell,’—omitting the demon,—they are subject to spells, they don’t use them.”

“ ‘Feud’ here (and before and after) is wrong. Say old malice, or difference. Feud is of clans. It might be applied to family quarrels, but is quite improper to individual fallings out.”

“ ‘Apathetic.’ Vile word.’

“ ‘Mechanically,’ faugh!—insensibly—involuntarily—in-anything-ly—but mechanically.”

“ ‘Surprised and almost vexed while it troubled her.’ (awkward.) Better, ‘in a way that while it deeply troubled her, could not but surprise and vex her to think it should be a source of trouble at all.’”

“ Decidedly, Dorigen should simply propose to him to remove the rocks as ugly or dangerous, not as affecting her with fears for her husband. The idea of her husband should be excluded from a promise which is meant to be frank upon impossible conditions. ‘She cannot promise in one breath infidelity to him, and make the conditions a good to him. Her reason for hating the rocks is good, but not to be expressed here.’”

“ Insert after ‘to whatever consequences it might lead,’—‘Neither had Arviragus been disposed to interpose a husband’s authority to prevent the execution of this rash vow, was he unmindful of that older and more solemn vow which, in the young days of their marriage, he had imposed upon himself, in no instance to control the settled purpose or determination of his wedded wife;—so that by the chains of a double contract he seemed bound to abide by her decision in this instance, whatever it might be.’”

APPEAL FOR GODWIN.

THERE are a few circumstances belonging to the case which are not sufficiently adverted to in the above letter. Mr. Godwin's opponent declares himself determined to act against him with the last degree of hostility. The law gives him the power the first week in November to seize upon Mr. Godwin's property, furniture, books, &c., &c., together with all his present sources of income for the support of himself and family. Mr. Godwin has, at this time, made considerable progress in a work of great research, and requiring all the powers of his mind; to the completion of which he had looked for future pecuniary advantage. His mind is at this moment so entirely occupied in this work that he feels within himself the firmness and resolution that no prospect of evil or calamity shall draw him off from it, or suspend his labours. But the calamity itself, if permitted to arrive, will produce the physical impossibility for him to proceed. His books and the materials of his work, as well as his present sources of income, will be taken from him. Those materials have been the collection of years; and it would require a long time to replace them, if they could ever be replaced. The favour of an early answer is particularly requested, that the extent of the funds supplied may as soon as possible be ascertained, particularly as any aid, however kindly intended, will, after the lapse of a very few weeks, become useless to the purpose in view.

RITSON VERSUS JOHN SCOTT THE QUAKER.

Critics I read on other men,
And Hypers upon them again.—Prior.

I HAVE in my possession Scott's "Critical Essays on some of the Poems of several English Poets,"—a handsome octavo, bought at the sale of Ritson's books; and enriched (or deformed, as some would think it) with MS. annotations in the handwriting of that redoubted Censor. I shall transcribe a few, which seem most characteristic of both the writers—Scott, feeble, but amiable—Ritson, coarse, caustic, clever; and, I am to suppose, not amiable. But they have proved some amusement to me; and, I hope, will produce some to the reader, this rainy season, which really damps a gentleman's wings for any original flight, and obliges him to ransack his shelves, and miscellaneous reading, to furnish an occasional or make-shift paper. If the sky clears up, and the sun dances this Easter, (as they say he is wont to do,) the town may be troubled with something more in his own way the ensuing month from its poor servant to command. ELIA.

DYER'S RUINS OF ROME.

————— The pilgrim oft
 At dead of night 'mid his oraison hears
 Aghast the voice of time-disparting towers,
 Tumbling all precipitate down-dash'd,
 Rattling around, loud thund'ring to the moon ;
 While murmurs soothe each awful interval
 Of ever-falling waters.

Scott.

There is a very bold transposition in this passage. A superficial reader, not attending to the sense of the epithet ever, might be ready to suppose that the intervals intended were those between the falling of the waters, instead of those between the falling of the towers.

Ritson.

A beauty, as in Thomson's Winter—

————— Cheerless towns, far distant, never blest,
 Save when its annual course the caravan
 Bends to the golden coast of rich Cathay,
 With news of human kind.¹

¹ May I have leave to notice an instance of the same agreeable discontinuity in my friend Lloyd's admirable poem on Christmas?

————— Where the broad-bosom'd hills,
 Swept with perpetual clouds, of Scotland rise,
 Me fate compels to tarry.

A superficial person—Mr. Scott, for instance,—would be apt to connect the last clause in this period with the line foregoing—“bends to the coast of Cathay with news,” &c. But has a reader nothing to do but to sit passive, while the connection is to glide into his ears like oil?

DENHAM'S COOPER'S HILL.

The stream is so transparent, pure, and clear,
That, had the self-enamour'd youth gazed here,
So fatally deceived he had not been,
While he the bottom, not his face had seen.

Scott.

The last two lines have more music than Denham's can possibly boast.

Ritson.

May I have leave to conjecture, that in the very last line of all, the word “the” has erroneously crept in? I am persuaded that the poet wrote “his.” To my mind, at least, this reading, in a surprising degree, heightens the idea of the extreme clearness and transparency of the stream, where a man might see more than his face (as it were) in it.

COLLINS'S ORIENTAL ECLOGUES.

Scott.

The second of these little pieces, called Hassan, or the Camel Driver, is of superior character. This poem contradicts history in one principal instance; the merchants of the east travel in numerous caravans, but Hassan is introduced travelling alone in the desert. But this circumstance detracts little from our author's merit; adherence to historical fact is seldom required in poetry.

Ritson.

It is always, where the poet unnecessarily transports you to the ends of the world. If he must plague you with exotic scenery, you have a right to exact strict local imagery and costume. Why must I learn Arabic, to read nothing after all but Gay's Fables in another language?

Scott.

Abra is introduced in a grove, wreathing a flowery chaplet for her hair. Shakspeare himself could not have devised a more natural and pleasing incident than that of the monarch's attention being attracted by her song:

Great Abbas chanced that fated morn to stray,
By love conducted from the chase away.
Among the vocal vales he heard her song—

Ritson.

Ch—t?

O stay thee, Agib, for my feet deny,
No longer friendly to my life, to fly—

Scott.

From the pen of Cowley such an observation as Secander's, that "his feet were no longer friendly to his life," might have been expected; but Collins rarely committed such violations of simplicity.

Ritson.

Pen of Cowley! impudent goose-quill, how darest thou guess what Cowley would have written?

GRAY'S CHURCH-YARD ELEGY.

Save where the beetle wheels—

Scott.

The beetle was introduced into poetry by Shakspeare * * *. Shakspeare has made the most of his description ; indeed far too much, considering the occasion :

————— to black Hecate's summons

The shard-born beetle with his drowsy hum

Hath rung night's yawning peal.

The imagination must be indeed fertile which could produce this ill-placed exuberance of imagery. The poet, when composing this passage, must have had in his mind all the remote ideas of Hecate, a heathen Goddess, of a beetle, of night, of a peal of bells, and of that action of the muscles, commonly called a gape or yawn.

Ritson.

Numbscull ! that would limit an infinite head by the square contents of thy own numbscull.

Scott.

The great merit of a poet is not, like Cowley, Donne, and Denham, to say what no man but himself has thought, but what every man besides himself has thought, but no man expressed ; or, at least, expressed so well.

Ritson.

In other words, all that is poetry, which Mr. Scott has thought, as well as the poet ; but that cannot be poetry, which was not obvious to Mr. Scott, as well as to Cowley, Donne, and Denham.

Scott.

Mr. Mason observes of the language in this part, [the Epitaph,] that it has a Doric delicacy. It has, indeed, what I should rather term a happy rusticity.

Ritson.

Come, see
Rural felicity.

GOLDSMITH'S DESERTED VILLAGE.

No busy steps the grass-grown footway tread.
But all the bloomy flush of life is fled—
All but yon widow'd solitary thing,
That feebly bends beside the plashy spring;
She, wretched matron, forced, in age, for bread,
To strip the brook with mantling cresses spread.

Scott.

Our author's language, in this place, is very defective in correctness. After mentioning the general privation of the "bloomy flush of life," the exceptionary "all but" includes, as a part of that "bloomy flush," an aged decrepit matron; that is to say, in plain prose, "the bloomy flush of life is all fled but one old woman."

Ritson.

Yet Milton could write :

Far from all resort of mirth,
Save the cricket on the hearth,
Or the bell-man's drowsy charm—

and I dare say he was right. O never let a Quaker, or a woman, try their hand at being witty, any more than a Tom Brown affect to speak by the spirit !

Scott.

Aaron Hill, who, although in general a bombastic writer, produced some pieces of merit, particularly the Caveat, an allegorical satire on Pope.

Ritson.

Say rather his verses on John Dennis, beginning "Adieu, unsocial excellence!" which are implicitly a finer satire on Pope than twenty Caveats. All that Pope could or did say against Dennis, is there condensed; and what he should have said, and did not, for him, is there too.

THOMSON'S SEASONS.

Address to the Angler to spare the young Fish.

If yet too young, and easily deceived,
 A worthless prey scarce bends your pliant rod,
 Him, piteous of his youth, and the short space
 He has enjoy'd the vital light of heaven,
 Soft disengage, and back into the stream
 The speckled infant throw.—

Scott.

The praise bestowed on a preceding passage cannot be justly given to this. There is in it an attempt at dignity above the occasion. Pathos seems to have been intended, but affectation only is produced.

Ritson.

It is not affectation, but it is the mock heroic of pathos, introduced purposely and wisely to attract the reader to a proposal, which from the unimportance of the subject—a poor little fish—might else have escaped his attention—as children learn, or may learn, humanity to animals from the mock romantic “Perambulations of a Mouse.”

HAYMAKING.

—Infant hands

Trail the long rake ; or, with the fragrant load
O'er-charged, amid the kind oppression roll.

Scott.

“Kind oppression” is a phrase of that sort which one scarcely knows whether to blame or praise: it consists of two words, directly opposite in their signification; and yet, perhaps, no phrase whatever could have better conveyed the idea of an easy uninjurious weight—

Ritson.

—and yet he does not know whether to blame or praise it!

SHEEP-SHEARING.

—By many a dog

Compell'd——

* * * * *

The clamour much of men, and boys, and dogs—

* * * * *

Scott.

The mention of dogs twice was superfluous; might have been easily avoided.—

Ritson.

Very true—by mentioning them only once.

Scott.

Nature is rich in a variety of minute but striking circumstances; some of which engage the attention of one observer, and some that of another.

Ritson.

This lover of truth never uttered a truer speech. Give me a lie with a spirit in it.

Air, earth, and ocean, smile immense.—

Scott.

The bombastic “immense smile of air,” &c., better omitted.

Ritson.

Quite Miltonic—“enormous bliss”—and both, I presume, alike caviare to the Quaker.

He comes! he comes! in every breeze the power
Of philosophic melancholy comes!
His near approach, the sudden-starting tear,
The glowing cheek, the mild dejected air,
The softened feature, and the beating heart,
Pierced deep with many a virtuous pang, declare.

Scott.

This fine picture is greatly injured by a few words. The power should have been said to come “upon the breeze;” not “in every breeze;” an expression which indicates a multiplicity of approaches. If he came “in every breeze,” he must have been always coming—

Ritson.

—and so he was.

————— The branching Oronoque
 Rolls a brown deluge, and the native drives
 To dwell aloft on life-sufficing trees,
 At once his dome, his robe, his food, and arms.
 Swell'd by a thousand streams, impetuous hurl'd
 From all the roaring Andes, huge descends
 The mighty Orellana. Scarce the muse
Dares stretch her wing o'er this enormous mass
 Of rushing water: scarce she dares attempt
 The sea-like Plata; to whose dread expanse,
 Continuous depth, and wond'rous length of course,
 Our floods are rills. With unabated force
 In silent dignity they sweep along,
 And traverse realms unknown, and blooming wilds,
 And fruitful deserts, worlds of solitude,
 Where the sun smiles, and seasons teem, in vain.
 Unseen and unenjoy'd. Forsaking these,
 O'er peopled plains they fair-diffusive flow,
 And many a nation feed, and circle safe
 In their fair bosom many a happy isle,
 The seat of blameless Pan, yet undisturb'd
 By Christian crimes and Europe's cruel sons.
 Thus pouring on, they proudly seek the deep,
 Whose vanquish'd tide, recoiling from the shock,
 Yields to this liquid weight of half the globe,
 And Ocean trembles for his green domain.

Scott.

Poets not unfrequently aim at aggrandising their subject by avowing their inability to describe it. This is a puerile and inadequate expedient. Thomson has here, perhaps inadvertently, descended to this feeble art of exaggeration.

Ritson.

A magnificent passage, in spite of Duns Scotus! The poet says not a word about his "inability to describe," nor seems to be thinking about his readers at all. He is confessing his own feelings, awe-struck with the contemplation of such o'erwhelming objects; in the same spirit with which he designates the den of the "green serpent" in another place—

—Which ev'n imagination fears to tread—

—A dazzling deluge reigns, and all
From pole to pole is undistinguis'd blaze—

Scott.

From pole to pole, strictly speaking, is improper. The poet meant, "from one part of the horizon to the other."

Ritson.

From his pole to thy pole was a more downward declension than "from the centre thrice," &c.

Obe! jam satis.

FRAGMENTS.

THE different way in which the same story may be told by different persons was never more strikingly illustrated than by the manner in which the celebrated Jeremy Collier has described the effects of Timotheus's music upon Alexander, in the second part of his Essays. We all know how Dryden has treated the subject. Let us now hear his great contemporary and antagonist: "Timotheus, a Grecian," says Collier, "was so great a master, that he could make a man storm and swagger like a tempest; and then, by altering the notes and the time, he could take him down again, and sweeten his humour in a trice. One time, when Alexander was at dinner, the man played him a Phrygian air. The Prince immediately rises, snatches up his lance, and puts himself into a posture of fighting; and the retreat was no sooner sounded by the change of the harmony than his arms were grounded and his fire extinct; and he sat down as orderly as if he had come from one of Aristotle's lectures. I warrant you, Demosthenes would have been flourishing about such business a long hour, and may be not have done it neither. But Timotheus had a nearer cut to the soul: he could neck a passion at a stroke, and lay it asleep. Pythagoras once met with a parcel of drunken fellows, who were likely to be troublesome enough. He presently orders music to play grave, and chops into a Dorian. Upon this they all threw away their garlands, and were as sober and as shame-faced as one would wish." It is evident that Dryden in his inspired Ode, and Collier in all this pudder of prose, meant the same thing. But what a work does the latter make with his "necking a passion at a stroke," "making a man storm and swagger like a tempest," and then "taking him down, and sweeting his humour in a trice!" What in Dryden is "softly sweet in Lydian measures," Collier calls "chopping into a Dorian." This Collier was the same, who, in his Biographical Dictionary, says of Shakspeare, that "though his genius generally was jocular, and inclining to festivity, yet he could when he pleased be as serious as any body."

Oh the comfort of sitting down heartily to an old folio, and thinking surely that the next hour or two will be your own!—and the misery of being defeated by the useless call of somebody, who is come to tell you that he has just come from hearing Mr. Irving! What is that to you? Let him go home, and digest what the good man has said. You are at your chapel, in your oratory.

Our ancestors, the noble old Puritans of Cromwell's day, could distinguish between a day of religious rest and a day of recreation; and while they exacted a vigorous abstinence from all amusements (even to the walking out of nursery-maids with their charges in the fields) upon the Sabbath, in lieu of the superstitious observance of the saints' days, which they abrogated, they humanely gave to the apprentices and poorer sort of people every alternate Thursday for a day of entire sport and recreation;—a strain of piety and policy to be commended above the profane mockery of the Stuarts and their "Book of Sports."

Samuel Johnson, whom, to distinguish from the doctor, we may call the Whig, was a very remarkable writer. He may be compared to his contemporary, Dr. Fox, whom he resembled in many points. He is another instance of King William's discrimination, which was so superior to that of any of his ministers. Johnson was one of the most formidable of the advocates for the Exclusion Bill; and he suffered by whipping and imprisonment under James accordingly. Like Asgill, he argues with great apparent candour and clearness till he gets his opponent within reach; and then comes a blow as from a sledge-hammer. I do not know where I could put my hand on a book containing so much sense and constitutional doctrine as this thin folio of Johnson's Works; and what party in this country would read so severe a lecture in it as our modern Whigs? A close reasoner and a good writer in general may be known by his pertinent use of connections. Read any page of Johnson, you cannot alter one conjunction without spoiling the sense; it is a linked chain throughout. In your modern books, for the most part, the sentences in a page have the same connection with each other that marbles have in a bag : they touch without adhering.

We are too apt to indemnify ourselves for some characteristic excellence we are kind enough to concede to a great author by denying him every thing else. Thus Donne and Cowley, by happening to possess more wit, and faculty of illustration, than other men, are supposed to have been incapable of nature or feeling: they are usually opposed to such writers as Shenstone and Parnell; whereas, in the very thickest of their conceits,—in the bewildering mazes of tropes and figures,—a warmth of soul and generous feeling shines through; the “sum” of which, “forty thousand” of those natural poets, as they are called, “with all their quantity,” could not make up.

I have in my possession a curious volume of Latin verses, which I believe to be unique. It is entitled, Alexandri Fultoni Scoti Epigrammatorum libri quinque. It purports to be printed at Perth, and bears date 1769. By the appellation which the author gives himself in the preface, hypodidasculus, I suppose him to have been an usher at some school. It is no uncommon thing now-a-days for persons concerned in academies to affect a literary reputation in the way of their trade. The “master of a seminary for a limited number of pupils at Islington” lately put forth an edition of that scarce tract, “The Elegy in a Country Churchyard,” (to use his own words,) with notes and head-lines! But to our author: These epigrams of Alexander Fulton, Scotchman, have little remarkable in them besides extreme dulness and insipidity ; but there is one, which, by its being marshalled in the front of the volume, seems to have been the darling of its parent, and for its exquisite flatness, and the surprising strokes of an anachronism with which it is pointed, deserves to be rescued from oblivion. It is addressed, like many of the others, to a fair one :—

AD MARIULAM SUAM AUTOR.

“ Moverunt bella olim Helenæ decor atque venustas
 Europen inter frugiferamque Asiam.
 Tam bona, quam tu, tam prudens, sin illa fuisset,
 Ad lites issent Africa et America !”

Which, in humble imitation of mine author's peculiar poverty of style, I have ventured thus to render into English :—

THE AUTHOR TO HIS MOGGY.

“ For Love's illustrious cause, and Helen's charms,
 All Europe and all Asia rushed to arms.
 Had she with these thy polish'd sense combined,
 All Afric and America had join'd !”

The happy idea of an American war undertaken in the cause of beauty ought certainly to recommend the author's memory to the countrymen of Maddison and Jefferson ; and the bold anticipation of the discovery of that continent in the time of the Trojan War is a flight beyond the Sybil's books.

CRITICISMS.

I.—OLYMPIC THEATRE.

THIS theatre, fitted up with new and tasteful decorations, opened on Monday with a burletta founded upon a pleasant extravagance recorded of Wilmot, the "mad Lord" of Rochester. The house, in its renovated condition, is just what playhouses should be, and once were, from its size admirably adapted for seeing and hearing, and only perhaps rather too well lit up. Light is a good thing, but to preserve the eyes is still better. Elliston and Mrs. Edwin personated a reigning wit and beauty of the Court of Charles the Second to the life. But the charm of the evening to us, we confess, was the acting of Mrs. T. Gould (late Miss Burrell) in the burlesque Don Giovanni, which followed. This admirable piece of foolery takes up our hero just where the Legitimate drama leaves him, on the "burning marl." We are presented with a fair map of Tartarus, the triple-headed cur, the Furies, Tormentors, and the Don, prostrate, thunder-smitten. But there is an elasticity in the original make of this strange man, as Richardson would have called him. He is not of those who change with the change of climate. He brings with him to his new habitation ardours as glowing and constant as which he finds there. No sooner is he recovered from his first surprise, then he falls to his old trade, is caught "ogling Proserpine," and coquets with two she-devils at once, till he makes the house too hot to hold him; and Pluto (in whom a wise jealousy seems to produce the effects of kindness) turns him neck and heels out of his dominions,—much to the satisfaction of Giovanni, who, stealing a boat from Charon, and a pair of light heels from Mercury, or (as he familiarly terms him) Murky, sets off with flying colours, conveying to the world above the souls of three damsels, just eloped from Styx, to comfort his tender and new-born spiritualities on the journey. Arrived upon earth (with a new body, we are to suppose, but his old habits,) he lights apropos upon a tavern in London, at the door of which three merry weavers, widowers, are trolling a catch in triumph over their deceased spouses—

They lie in yonder churchyard
At rest—and so are we.

Their departed partners prove to be the identical lady ghosts who have accompanied the Don in his flight, whom he now delivers up in perfect health and good plight, not a jot the worse for their journey, to the infinite surprise and consternation, ill-dissembled, of their ill-fated, twice-yoked mates. The gallantries of the Don in his second state of probation, his meeting with Leporello, with Donna Anna, and a countless host of injured virgins besides, doing penance in the humble occupation of apple-women, fish-wives, and sausage-fryers, in the purlieus of Billingsgate and Covent Garden, down to the period of his complete reformation, and being made an honest man of, by marrying into a sober English citizen's family, although infinitely pleasant in the exhibition, would be somewhat tedious in the recital; but something must be said of his representative.

We have seen Mrs. Jordan in male characters, and more ladies besides than we would wish to recollect—but never any that so completely answered the purpose for the mock Giovanni. This part, as it is played at the Great House in the Haymarket, (shade of Mozart, and ye living admirers of Ambrogetti, pardon the barbarity) had always something repulsive and distasteful to us. We cannot sympathise with Leporello's brutal display of the list, and were shocked (not strait-laced moralists either) with the applauses, with the endurance we ought rather to say, which fashion and beauty bestowed upon that disgusting insult to feminine unhappiness. The Leporello of the Olympic Theatre is not of the most refined order; but we can bear with an English blackguard better than with the hard Italian. But Giovanni—free, fine, frank-spirited, single-hearted creature, turning all the mischief into fun as harmless as toys or children's make-believe, what praise can we repay to you, adequate to the pleasure which you have given us? We had better be silent, for you have no names, and our mention may be thought fantastical. You have taken out the sting from the evil thing, but by what magic we know not; for there are actresses of greater mark and attributes than you. With you and your Giovanni our spirits will hold communion whenever sorrow or suffering shall be our lot. We have seen you triumph over the infernal powers; and pain, and Erebus, and the powers of darkness are henceforth “Shapes of a dream.”

2.--MISS KELLY AT BATH.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO THE EDITOR OF THE "EXAMINER," FROM AN OLD CORRESPONDENT IN LONDON.

Dear G——,—I was thinking yesterday of our old play-going days, of your and my partiality to Mrs. Jordan, of our disputes as to the relative merits of Dodd and Parsons, and whether Smith or Jack Palmer were the most of a gentleman. The occasion of my falling into this train of thinking, was my learning from the newspapers that Miss Kelly is paying the Bath Theatre a visit (your own theatre, I am sorry to find, is shut up, either from parsimonious feelings, or through the influence of —— principles).¹ This lady has long ranked among the most considerable of our London performers. If there are one or two of greater name, I must impute it to the circumstance that she has never burst upon the town at once in the maturity of her powers, which is a great advantage to debutantes who have passed their probationary years in Provincial Theatres. We do not hear them tuning their instruments. But she has been winning her patient way from the humblest degradations to the eminence which she has now attained, on the selfsame boards which supported her first in the slender pretensions of chorus singer. I very much wish you would go and see her. You will not see Mrs. Jordan, but something else; something on the whole very little, if at all, inferior to that lady in her best days. I cannot hope that you will think so, I do not even wish that you should. Our longest remembrances are the most sacred, and I shall revere the prejudice that shall prevent you from thinking quite so favourably of her as I do. I do not well know how to draw a parallel between their distinct manners of acting. I seem to recognise the same pleasantness and nature in both. But Mrs. Jordan's was the carelessness of a child; her childlike spirit shook off the load of years from her spectators; she seemed one whom care could not come near; a privileged being sent to teach mankind what he most wants—joyousness. Hence, if we had more unmixed pleasure from her performances, we had perhaps less sympathy with them than with those of her successor. This latter lady's is the joy of a freed spirit escaping from care, as a bird that had been limed; her smiles, if I may use the expression, seemed saved out of the fire, relics which a good spirit had snatched up as most portable: her discontents are visitors and not inmates: she can lay them by altogether, and when she does so, I am not sure that she is not greatest. She is in truth no ordinary tragedian. Her Yarico is the most intense piece of acting which I ever witnessed, the most heart-rending spectacle. To see her leaning upon that wretched reed, her lover—the very exhibition of whose character would be a moral offence, but for her clinging and noble credulity—to see her lean upon that flint, and by the strong workings of passion, imagine it a god, is one of the most afflicting lessons of the yearnings of the human heart, and its mistakes, that was ever read upon a stage. The whole performance is everywhere African, fervid, glowing. Nor is this anything more than the wonderful force of imagination in this performer; for turn but the scene, and you shall have her come forward in some kindly home-drawn character of an English rustic, a Phœbe, or a Dinah Cropley where you would swear that her thoughts had never strayed beyond the precincts of the dairy or the farm, or her mind known less tranquil passions than she might have learned among the flock, her out-of-door companions. See her again in parts of pure fun, such as the Housemaid in the Merry Mourners, where the suspension of the broom in her hand, which she has been delightfully twirling, on unexpectedly encountering her sweetheart in the character of her fellow-servant, is quite equal to Mrs. Jordan's cordial inebriation in Nell. I do not know whether I am not speaking it to her honour, that she does not succeed in what are called fine lady parts. Our friend C—— once observed that no man of genius ever figured as a gentleman. Neither did any woman gifted with Mrs. Jordan's or Miss Kelly's sensibilities ever take upon herself to shine as a fine lady; the very essence of this character consisting in the entire repression of all genius and all feeling. To sustain a part of this kind to the life, a performer must be haunted by a perpetual self-reference, she must be always thinking of herself, and how she looks, and how she deports herself in the eyes of the spectators; whereas the delight of actresses of true feeling and their chief power, is to elude the personal notice of an audience, to escape into their parts and hide themselves under the hood of their assumed character. Their most self-possession is in fact a self-forgetfulness; an oblivion alike of self and spectators. For this reason your most approved epilogue-speakers have been always ladies who have possessed least of this self-forgetting quality; and I think I have seen the amiable actress in question suffering some embarrassment, when she has had an address of the sort to deliver; when she found the modest veil of personation, which had half hid her from the audience, suddenly withdrawn, and herself brought without any such gratifying intervention before the public.

I would apologise for the length of this letter, if I did not remember the lively interest you used to take in theatrical performers.

I am, &c. &c.

3.—“THE JOVIAL CREW.”

THE Jovial Crew, or the Merry Beggars, has been revived here [at the English Opera] after an interval, as the bills tell us, of seven years. Can it be so long (it seems but yesterday) since we saw poor Lovegrove in Justice Clack? His childish treble still pipes in our ears; “Whip 'em, whip 'em, whip 'em.” Dowton was the representative of the Justice the other night, and shook our ribs most incontinently. He was in “excellent foolery,” and our lungs crowed chanticleer. Yet it appears to us that there was a still higher strain of fatuity in his predecessor—that his eyes distilled a richer dotage. Perhaps, after all, it was an error of the memory. Defunct merit comes out upon us strangely.

Easy natural Wrench was the Springlove; too comfortable a personage perhaps to personify Springlove, in whom the voice of the bird awakens a restless instinct of roaming that had slept during the winter. Miss Stevenson certainly leaves us nothing to regret for the absence of the lady, however agreeable, who formerly performed the part of Meriel. Miss Stevenson is a fine open-countenanced lass, with glorious girlish manners. But the Princess of Mumpers, and Lady Paramount of beggarly counterfeit accents, was she that played Rachel. Her gabbling lachrymose petitions; her tones, such as we have heard by the side of old woods, when an irresistible face has come peeping on one on a sudden; with her full black locks, and a voice—how shall we describe it?—a voice that was by nature meant to convey nothing but truth and goodness, but warped by circumstance into an assurance that she is telling us a lie—that catching twitch of the thievish irreprovable finger—those ballad-singers' notes, so vulgar, yet so unvulgar—that assurance so like impudence and yet so many countless leagues removed from it—her jeers, which we had rather stand, than be caressed with other ladies' compliments, a summer's day long—her face, with a wild out-of-doors grace upon it—

Altogether, a brace of more romantic she-beggars it was never our fortune to meet in this supplicatory world. The youngest might have sat for "pretty Bessy," whose father was an Earl, and whose legend still adorns the front of mine hostess's doors at Bethnal Green; and the other could be no less than the "Beggar Maid" whom "King Cophetua wooed." "What a lass that were," said a stranger who sate beside us, speaking of Miss Kelly in Rachel, "to go a-gypsying through the world with." We confess we longed to drop a tester in her lap, she begged so masterly.

By-the-way, this is the true Beggar's Opera. The other should have been called the Mirror for Highwaymen. We wonder the Societies for the Suppression of Mendicity (and other good things) do not club for the putting down of this infamous protest in favour of air, and clear liberty, and honest license, and blameless assertion of man's original blest charter of blue skies, and vagrancy, and nothing-to-do.

By one of those perversions which actuate poor mortals in the place of motives (to persuade us into the notion that we are free agents, we presume), we had never till the other evening seen Dowton [at the English Opera] in Dr. Cantwell. By a pious fraud of Mr. Arnold's, who by a process as simple as some of those by which Mathews metamorphoses his person, has converted the play into an opera,—a conversion, by-the-way, for which we are deeply indebted to him,—we have been favoured with this rich novelty at our favourite theatre. It seems a little unreasonable to come lagging in with a posthumous testimony to the merits of a performance of which the town has long rung, but we cannot help remarking in Mr. Dowton's acting, the subtle gradations of the hypocrisy; the length to which it runs in proportion as the recipient is capable of taking it in ; the gross palpable way in which he administers the dose in wholesale to old Lady Lambert, that rich fanatic ; the somewhat more guarded manner in which he retails it out, only so much a time as he can bear, to the somewhat less bitten fool her son ; and the almost absence of it before the younger members of the family, when nobody else is by ; how the cloven foot peeps out a little and a little more, till the diabolical nature is stung out at last into full manifestation of its horrid self. What a grand insolence in the tone which he assumes, when he commands Sir John to quit his house ; and then the tortures and agonies when he is finally baffled ! It is in these last perhaps that he is greatest, and we should be doing injustice not to compare this part of the performance with, and in some respects to give it the preference above, the acting of Mr. Kean, in a situation nearly analagous, at the conclusion of the City Madam. Cantwell reveals his pangs with quite as much force, and without the assistance of those contortions which transform the detected Luke into the similitude of a mad tiger, or a foaming demon. Downton plays it neither like beast nor demon, but simply as it should be, a bold bad man pushed to extremity. Humanity is never once overstepped. Has it ever been noticed, the exquisite modulation with which he drawls out the word "Charles," when he calls his secretary, so humble, so seraphic, so resigned. The most diabolical of her sex that we ever knew accented her honey devil words in just such a hymn-like smoothness. The spirit of Whitfield seems hovering in the air, to suck the blessed tones so much like his own upon earth : Lady Huntingdon claps her neat white wings, and gives it out again in heaven to the sainted ones, in approbation.

Miss Kelly is not quite at home in Charlotte; she is too good for such parts. Her cue is to be natural; she cannot put on the modes of artificial life, and play the coquette as it is expected to be played. There is a frankness in her tones which defeats her purposes; we could not help wondering why her lover (Mr. Pearman) looked so rueful; we forgot that she was acting airs and graces, as she seemed to forget it herself, turning them into a playfulness which could breed no doubt for a moment which way her inclinations ran. She is in truth not framed to tease or torment even in jest, but to utter a hearty Yes or No, to yield or refuse assent with a noble sincerity. We have not the pleasure of being acquainted with her, but we have been told that she carries the same cordial manners into private life. We have heard, too, of some virtues which she is in the practice of; but they are of a description which repay themselves, and with them neither we nor the public have anything to do.

One word about Wrench who played the Colonel:— Was this man never unhappy? It seems as if care never came near him, as if the black ox could never tread upon his foot; we want something calamitous to befall him, to bring him down to us. It is a shame he should be suffered to go about with his well-looking happy face and tones insulting us thin race of irritable and irritable-making critics.

5.—NEW PIECES AT THE LYCEUM.

A PLOT has broke out at this theatre. Some quarrel has been breeding between the male and female performers, and the women have determined to set up for themselves. Seven of them, Belles without Beaux they call themselves, have undertaken to get up a piece without any assistance from the men, and in our opinion have established their point most successfully. There is Miss Carew with her silvery tones, and Miss Stevenson with her delicious mixture of the school-girl and the waiting-maid, and Miss Kelly, sure to be first in any mischief, and Mrs. Chatterly, with some of the best acting we have ever witnessed, and Miss Love, worthy of the name, and Mrs. Grove that rhymes to her, and Mrs. Richardson who might in charity have been allowed somewhat a larger portion of the dialogue. The effect was enchanting. We mean for once. We do not want to encourage these Amazonian vanities. Once or twice we longed to have Wrench bustling among them. A lady who sate near us was observed to gape for want of variety. To us it was delicate quintessence, an apple-pie made all of quinces. We remember poor Holcroft's last comedy, which positively died from the opposite excess; it was choked up with men, and perished from a redundancy of male population. It had nine principal men characters in it, and but one woman, and she of no very ambiguous character. Mrs. Harlow, to do the part justice, chose to play it in scarlet.

We did not know Mrs. Chatterly's merits before; she plays, with downright sterling good acting, a prude who is to be convinced out of her prudery by Miss Kelly's (we did not catch her stage name) assumption of the dress and character of a brother of seventeen, who makes the prettiest unalarming platonic approaches; and in the shyest mark of moral battery, no one step of which you can detect, or say this is decidedly going too far, vanquishes at last the ice of her scruples, brings her into an infinite scrape, and then with her own infinite good humour sets all to right, and brings her safe out of it again with an explanation. Mrs. Chatterly's embarrassments were masterly. Miss Stevenson her maid's start at surprising a youth in her mistress's closet at midnight, was quite as good. Miss Kelly we do not care to say anything about, because we have been accused of flattering her. The truth is, this lady puts so much intelligence and good sense into every part which she plays, that there is no expressing an honest sense of her merits, without incurring a suspicion of that sort. But what have we to gain by praising Miss Kelly?

Altogether, this little feminine republic, this provoking experiment, went off most smoothly. What a nice world it would be, we sometimes think, all women! but then we are afraid, we slip in a fallacy unawares into the hypothesis; we somehow edge in the idea of ourselves as spectators or something among them.

We saw Wilkinson after it in Walk for a Wager. What a picture of forlorn hope! of abject orphan destitution! he seems to have no friends in the world but his legs, and he plies them accordingly. He goes walking on like a perpetual motion. His continual ambulatory presence performs the part of a Greek chorus. He is the walking gentleman of the piece; a peripatetic that would make a stoic laugh. He made us cry. His Muffincap in Amateurs and Actors is just such another piece of acting. We have seen charity boys, both of St. Clement's and Farringdon Without, looking just as old, ground down out of all semblance of youth, by abject and hopeless neglect—you cannot guess their age between fifteen and fifty. If Mr. Peake is the author of these pieces, he has no reason to be piqued at their reception.

We must apologise for an oversight in our last week's article. The allusion made to Mr. Kean's acting of Luke in the City Madam was totally inapplicable to the part and to the play. We were thinking of his performance of the concluding scenes of The New Way to Pay Old Debts. We confounded one of Massinger's strange heroes with the other. It was Sir Giles Overreach we meant; nor are we sure that our remark was just, even with this explanation. When we consider the intense tone in which Mr. Kean thinks it proper (and he is quite as likely to be in the right as his blundering critic) to pitch the temperament of that monstrous character from the beginning, it follows but logically and naturally, that where the wild uncontrollable man comes to be baffled of his purpose, his passion should assume a frenzied manner, which it was altogether absurd to expect should be the same with the manner of the cautious and self-restraining Cantwell, even when he breaks loose from all bonds in the agony of his final exposure. We never felt more strongly the good sense of the saying—comparisons are odious. They betray us not seldom into bitter errors of judgment; and sometimes, as in the present instance, into absolute matter-of-fact blunders. But we have recanted.

I.—FALSTAFF'S LETTERS.

“Original Letters, &c., of Sir John Falstaff and his Friends; now first made public by a Gentleman, a descendant of Dame Quickly, from genuine MSS. which have been in the possession of the Quickly Family near four hundred years.” London, Robinsons, 1796.

A COPY of this work sold at the Roxburgh Sale, for five guineas. We have both before and since that time picked it up at stalls for eighteen pence. Reader, if you shall ever light upon a copy in the same way, we counsel you to buy it. We are deceived if there be not in it much of the true Shakspearean stuff. We present you with a few of the Letters, which may speak for themselves:—

FALSTAFF TO THE PRINCE.

“ I PR'YTHEE, Hal, lend me thy 'kerchief. An thy unkindness have not started more salt gouts down my poor old cheek, than my good rapier hath of blood from foemen's gashes in five and thirty years' service, then am I a very senseless mummy. I squander away in drinkings monies belonging to the soldiery! I do deny it—they have had part—the surplus is gone in charity—accuse the parish officers—make them restore—the whoreson warders do now put on the cloak of supplication at the church doors, intercepting gentlemen for charity, forsooth!—'Tis a robbery, a villainous robbery ! to come upon a gentleman reeking with piety, God's book in his hand, brimfull of sacraments ! Thou knowest, Hal, as I am but man, I dare in some sort leer at the plate and pass, but as I have the body and blood of Christ within me, could I do it ? An I did not make an oblation of a matter of ten pound after the battle of Shrewsbury, in humble gratitude for thy safety, Hal, then am I the veriest transgressor denounced in God's code. But I'll see them damned ere I'll be charitable again. Let 'em coin the plate—let them coin the holy chalice."

THE SAME TO THE SAME.

"HA ! ha ! ha ! And dost thou think I would not offer up ten pound for thee ? yea, a hundred more—but take heed of displeasing in thy sacrifice. Cain did bring a kid, yea, a firstling upon the altar, and the blaze ascended not. Abel did gather simple herbs, penny-royal, Hal, and mustard, a fourpenny matter, and the odour was grateful. I had ten pound for the holy offertory—mine ancient Pistol doth know it—but the angel did arrest my hand. Could I go beyond the word?—the angel which did stretch forth his finger, lest the good patriarch should slay his son.—That Ned Poins hath more colours than a jay, more abuse than a taught pie, and for wit—the cuckow's dam may be Fool of the Court to him. I lie down at Shrewsbury out of base fear ! I melt into roods, acres, and poles ! I tell thee what, Hal, there's not a subject in the land hath half my temperance of valour. Did I not see thee combating the man-queller, Hotspur : yea, in peril of subduement ? Was it for me to lose my sweet Hal without a thrust, having my rapier, my habergion, my good self about me? I did lie down in the hope of sherking him in the rib—four drummers and a fifer did help me to the ground:—didst thou not mark how I did leer upon thee from beneath my buckler? That Poinz hath more scurrility than is in an whole flock of disquieted geese.

“For the rebels I did conceal, thou should'st give me laud. I did think thou wert already encompassed with more enemies than the resources of men could prevent overwhelming thee: yea, that thou wert the dove on the waters of Ararat, and didst lack a resting-place. Was it for me to heap to thy manifold disquiets? Was it for me to fret thee with the advice of more enemies than thou didst already know of? I could not take their lives, and therefore did I take their monies. I did fine them, lest they should scape, Hal, thou dost understand me, without chastisement; yea, I fined them for a punishment. They did make oath on the point of my sword to be true men:—and the rogues forswore themselves, and joined the Welchman, let them look to it—'tis no 'peachment of my virtue.”

AGAIN.

“OH! I am setting on a nest of the most unfledged cuckows that ever brooded under the wing of a hawk. Thou must know, Hal, I had note of a good hale recruit or two in this neighbourhood. In other shape came I not; look to it, Master Shallow, that in other shape I depart not. But I know thou art ever all desire to be admitted a Fellow Commoner in a jest. Robert Shallow, Esq., judgeth the hamlet of Cotswold. Doth not the name of judge horribly chill thee? With Aaron's rod in his hand he hath the white beard of Moses on his chin. In good sooth his perpetual countenance is not unlike what thou wouldst conceit of the momentary one of the lunatic Jew, when he tumbled God's tables from the mount. He hath a quick busy gait—more of his upright Judge (perpendicular as a pikeman's weapon, Hal) anon. I would dispatch with these Bardolph; but the knave's hands—(I cry thee mercy) his mouth is full in preventing desertion among my recruits. An every liver among them haven't stood me in three and forty shilling, then am I a naughty escheator. I tell thee what, Hal, I'd fight against my conscience for never a Prince in Christendom but thee.—Oh! this is a most damnable cause, and the rogues know it—they'll drink nothing but sack of three and twopence a gallon; and I enlist me none but tall puissant fellows that would quaff me up Fleet-ditch, were it filled with sack—picked men, Hal—such as will shake my Lord of York's mitre. I pray thee, sweet lad, make speed—thou shalt see glorious deeds."

How say you, reader, do not these inventions smack of Eastcheap? Are they not nimble, forgetive, evasive? Is not the humour of them elaborate, cogitabund, fanciful? Carry they not the true image and superscription of the father which begat them? Are they not steeped all over in character—subtle, profound, unctuous? Is not here the very effigies of the Knight? Could a counterfeit Jack Falstaff come by these conceits? Or are you, reader, one who delights to drench his mirth in tears? You are, or peradventure have been, a lover; a "dismissed bachelor," perchance, one that is lass-lorn. Come, then, and weep over the dying bed of such a one as thyself. Weep with us the death of poor Abraham Slender.

DAVY TO SHALLOW.

"MASTER ABRAM is dead, gone, your Worship, dead! Master Abram! Oh! good your Worship, a's gone. A' never throve, since a' came from Windsor—'twas his death. I called him rebel, your Worship, but a' was all subject—a' was subject to any babe, as much as a King—a' turned, like as it were the latter end of a lover's lute—a' was all peace and resignation—a' took delight in nothing but his Book of Songs and Sonnets—a' would go to the Stroud side under the large beech tree, and sing, 'till 'twas quite pity of our lives to mark him; for his chin grew as long as a muscle. Oh! a' sung his soul and body quite away—a' was lank as any greyhound, and had such a scent! I hid his love-songs among your Worship's law-books: for I thought, if a' could not get at them, it might be to his quiet; but a' snuffed them out in a moment. Good, your Worship, have the wise woman of Brentford secured—Master Abram may have been conjured—Peter Simple says, a' never looked up after a' sent for the wise woman. Marry, a' was always given to look down afore his elders; a' might do it, a' was given to it—your Worship knows it; but then 'twas peak and pert with him, marry, in the turn of his heel. A' died, your Worship, just about one, at the crow of the cock. I thought how it was with him; for a' talked as quick, ay, marry, as glib as your Worship; and a' smiled, and looked at his own nose, and called 'Sweet Ann Page.' I asked him if a' would eat—so a' bade us commend him to his cousin Robert (a' never called your Worship so before), and bade us get hot meat, for a' would not say 'nay' to Ann again. But a' never lived to touch it—a' began all in a moment to sing 'Lovers all, a Madrigall.' 'Twas the only song Master Abram ever learnt out of book, and clean by heart, your Worship—and so a' sung and smiled, and looked askew at his own nose, and sung, and sung on, till his breath waxed shorter, and shorter, and shorter, and a' fell into a struggle and died. Alice Shortcake craves she may make his shroud.

Should these specimens fail to rouse your curiosity to see the whole, it may be to your loss, gentle reader, but it will give small pain to the spirit of him that wrote this little book: my fine-tempered friend, J. W.—for not in authorship, or the spirit of authorship, but from the fulness of a young soul, newly kindling at the Shakspearean flame, and bursting to be delivered of a rich exuberance of conceits,—I had almost said kindred with those of the full Shakspearean genius itself—were these letters dictated. We remember when the inspiration came upon him; when the plays of Henry the Fourth were first put into his hands. We think at our recommendation he read them, rather late in life, though still he was but a youth. He may have forgotten, but we cannot, the pleasant evenings which ensued at the Boar's Head (as we called our tavern, though in reality the sign was not that, nor the street Eastcheap; for that honoured place of resort has long since passed away), when over our pottle of sherris he would talk you nothing but pure Falstaff the long evenings through. Like his, the wit of J. W. was deep, recondite, imaginative, full of goodly figures and fancies. Those evenings have long since passed away, and nothing comparable to them has come in their stead, or can come. "We have heard the chimes at midnight."

2.—NUGÆ CANORÆ. —POEMS BY CHARLES LLOYD.

THE reader who shall take up these poems in the mere expectation of deriving amusement for an idle hour, will have been grievously misled by the title. Nugæ they certainly are not, but full of weight; earnest, passionate communings of the spirit with itself. He that reads them must come to them in a serious mood; he should be one that has descended into his own bosom; that has probed his own nature even to shivering; that has indulged the deepest yearnings of affection, and has had them strangely flung back upon him; that has built to himself a fortress of conscious weakness; that has cleaved to the rock of his early religion, and through hope in it hath walked upon the uneasy waters.

We should be sorry to convey a false notion. Mr. Lloyd's religion has little of pretence or sanctimoniousness about it; it is worn as an armour of self-defence, not as a weapon of outward annoyance: the believing may be drawn by it, and the unbelieving need not to be deterred. The Religionist of Nature may find some things to venerate in its mild Christianity, when he shall discover in a volume, generally hostile to new experiments in philosophy and morals, some of its tenderest pages dedicated to the virtues of Mary Wolstonecraft Godwin.

Mr. Lloyd's poetry has not much in it that is narrative or dramatic. It is richer in natural description, but the imagery is for the most part embodied with, and made subservient to the sentiment, as in many of the sonnets, &c. His genius is metaphysical and profound, his verses are made up of deep feeling, accompanied with the perpetual running commentary of his own deeper self-reflection. His affections seem to run kindest in domestic channels; and there are some strains commemorative of a dead relative, which, while they do honour to the heart of the writer, are of too sacred a nature, we think, almost to have been committed to print at all; much less would they bear exposure among the miscellaneous matter indispensable to a public journal. We prefer, therefore, giving an extract from the fine blank verse poem entitled Christmas. It is richly imbued with the meditative, introspective cast of mind so peculiar to this author.

FIRST FRUITS OF AUSTRALIAN POETRY.

Sydney, New South Wales. Printed for Private Distribution.

BY BARRON FIELD.

I first adventure ; follow me who list ;
And be the second Austral harmonist.

WHOEVER thou art that hast transplanted the British wood-notes to the far-off forests which the Kangaroo haunts—whether thou art some involuntary exile that solaces his sad estrangement with recurrence to his native notes, with more wisdom than those captive Hebrews of old refused to sing their Sion songs in a strange land—or whether, as we rather suspect, thou art that valued friend of ours, who, in thy young time of life, together with thy faithful bride, thy newly “wedded flower,” didst, in obedience to the stern voice of duty, quit thy friends, thy family, thy pleasing avocations, the Muses with which thou wert as deeply smitten as any, we believe, in our age and country, to go and administer tedious justice in inauspicious unliterary THIEFLAND,¹ we reclaim thee for our own, and gladly would transport thee back to thy native “fields,” and studies congenial to thy habits.

We know a merry captain, and co-navigator with Cook, who prides himself upon having planted the first pun in Otaheite. It was in their own language, and the islanders first looked at him, then stared at one another, and all at once burst out into a genial laugh. It was a stranger, and as a stranger they gave it welcome. Many a quibble of their own growth, we doubt not, has since sprung from that well-timed exotic. Where puns flourish, there must be no inconsiderable advance in civilization. The same good results we are willing to augur from this dawn of refinement at Sydney. They were beginning to have something like a theatrical establishment there, which we are sorry to hear has been suppressed; for we are of opinion with those who think that a taste for such kind of entertainments is one remove at least from profligacy, and that Shakspeare and Gay may be as safe teachers of morality as the ordinary treatises which assume to instil that science. We have seen one of their play-bills (while the thing was permitted to last), and were affected by it in no ordinary degree, particularly in the omission of the titles of honour, which in this country are condescendingly conceded to the players. In their Dramatis Personæ, Jobson was played by Smith; Lady Loverule, Jones; Nell, Wilkinson; gentlemen and lady performers alike curtailed of their fair proportions. With a little patronage, we prophesy, that in a very few years the histrionic establishment of Sydney would have risen in respectability; and the humble performers would, by tacit leave, or open permission, have been allowed to use the same encouraging affixes to their names, which dignify their prouder brethren and sisters in the mother country. What a moral advancement, what a lift in the scale, to a Braham or a Stephens of New South Wales, to write themselves Mr. and Miss! The King here has it not in his power to do so much for a commoner, no, not though he dub him a Duke.

The "First Fruits," consist of two poems. The first celebrates the plant epacris grandiflora; but we are no botanists, and perhaps there is too much matter mixed up in it from the Midsummer Night's Dream to please some readers. The thefts are indeed so open and palpable, that we almost recur to our first surmise, that the author must be some unfortunate wight, sent on his travels for plagiarisms of a more serious complexion. But the old matter and the new blend kindly together; and must, we hope, have proved right acceptable to more than one

—————Among the fair
Of that young land of Shakspeare's tongue.

We select for our readers the second poem; and are mistaken if it does not relish of the graceful hyperboles of our elder writers. We can conceive it to have been written by Andrew Marvell, supposing him to have been banished to Botany Bay, as he did, we believe, once meditate a voluntary exile to Bermuda. See his fine poem, "Where the remote Bermudas ride."

REVIEW OF WORDSWORTH'S "EXCURSION."

THE volume before us, as we learn from the Preface, is "a detached portion of an unfinished poem, containing views of man, nature, and society;" to be called the Recluse, as having for its principal subject the "sensations and opinions of a poet living in retirement;" and to be preceded by a "record in verse of the origin and progress of the author's own powers, with reference to the fitness which they may be supposed to have conferred for the task." To the completion of this plan we look forward with a confidence which the execution of the finished part is well calculated to inspire. Meanwhile, in what is before us there is an ample matter for entertainment: for the "Excursion" is not a branch (as might have been suspected) prematurely plucked from the parent tree to gratify an overhasty appetite for applause; but is, in itself, a complete and legitimate production.

It opens with the meeting of the poet with an aged man whom he had known from his schooldays; in plain words, a Scottish pedlar; a man who, though of low origin, had received good learning and impressions of the strictest piety from his stepfather, a minister and village schoolmaster. Among the hills of Athol, the child is described to have become familiar with the appearances of nature in his occupation as a feeder of sheep; and from her silent influences to have derived a character, meditative, tender, and poetical. With an imagination and feelings thus nourished—his intellect not unaided by books, but those, few, and chiefly of a religious cast—the necessity of seeking a maintenance in riper years, had induced him to make choice of a profession, the appellation for which has been gradually declining into contempt, but which formerly designated a class of men, who, journeying in country places, when roads presented less facilities for travelling, and the intercourse between towns and villages was unfrequent and hazardous, became a sort of link of neighbourhood to distant habitations; resembling, in some small measure, in the effects of their periodical returns, the caravan which Thompson so feelingly describes as blessing the cheerless Siberian in its annual visitation, with “news of human kind.”

In the solitude incident to this rambling life, power had been given him to keep alive that devotedness to nature which he had imbibed in his childhood, together with the opportunity of gaining such notices of persons and things from his intercourse with society, as qualified him to become a “teacher of moral wisdom.” With this man, then, in a hale old age, released from the burthen of his occupation, yet retaining much of its active habits, the poet meets, and is by him introduced to a second character—a sceptic—one who had been partially roused from an overwhelming desolation, brought upon him by the loss of wife and children, by the powerful incitement of hope which the French Revolution in its commencement put forth, but who, disgusted with the failure of all its promises, had fallen back into a laxity of faith and conduct which induced at length a total despondence as to the dignity and final destination of his species. In the language of the poet, he ———broke faith with those whom he had laid

In earth's dark chambers.

Yet he describes himself as subject to compunctious visitations from that silent quarter. The conversations with this person, in which the Wanderer asserts the consolatory side of the question against the darker views of human life maintained by his friend, and finally calls to his assistance the experience of a village priest, the third, or rather fourth interlocutor, (for the poet himself is one), form the groundwork of the "Excursion."

It will be seen by this sketch that the poem is of a didactic nature, and not a fable or story; yet it is not wanting in stories of the most interesting kind,—such as the lovers of Cowper and Goldsmith will recognize as something familiar and congenial to them. We might instance the Ruined Cottage, and the Solitary's own story, in the first half of the work; and the second half, as being almost a continued cluster of narration. But the prevailing charm of the poem is, perhaps, that conversational as it is in its plan, the dialogue throughout is carried on in the very heart of the most romantic scenery which the poet's native hills could supply; and which, by the perpetual references made to it either in the way of illustration or for variety and pleasurable description's sake, is brought before us as we read. We breathe in the fresh air, as we do while reading Walton's Complete Angler; only the country about us is as much bolder than Walton's, as the thoughts and speculations, which form the matter of the poem, exceed the trifling pastime and low-pitched conversation of his humble fishermen. We give the description of the "two huge peaks," which from some other vale peered into that in which the Solitary is entertaining the poet and his companion. "Those," says their host,

—————if here you dwelt, would be
Your prized companions, &c.—p. 84.

To a mind constituted like that of Mr. Wordsworth, the stream, the torrent, and the stirring leaf—seem not merely to suggest associations of deity, but to be a kind of speaking communication with it. He walks through common forests, as through some Dodona or enchanted wood; and every casual bird that flits upon the boughs, like that miraculous one¹ in Tasso, but in language more piercing than any articulate sounds, reveals to him far higher love-lays. In his poetry nothing in nature is dead. Motion is synonymous with life. "Beside yon spring," says the Wanderer, speaking of a deserted well, from which, in former times, a poor woman, who died heart-broken, had been used to dispense refreshment to the thirsty traveller, —————beside yon spring I stood, &c.—p. 27.

To such a mind, we say—call it strength or weakness

¹ With parti-coloured plumes, and purple bill,
A wondrous bird among the rest there flew,
'That in plain speech sung love-lays loud and shrill;
Her leden was like human language true;
So much she talk'd, and with such wit and skill,
That strange it seemèd how much good she knew.

Fairfax's Translation.

—if weakness, assuredly a fortunate one—the visible and audible things of creation present, not dim symbols, or curious emblems, which they have done at all times to those who have been gifted with the poetical faculty; but revelations and quick insights into the life within us, the pledge of immortality:—

—————the whispering air
Sends inspiration from her shadowy heights,
And blind recesses of the cavern'd rocks;
The little rills, and waters numberless,
Inaudible by daylight.

“I have seen,” the poet says, and the illustration is a happy one:

—————I have seen
A curious child, applying to his ear
The convolutions of a smooth-lipp'd shell, &c.—p. 191.

Sometimes this harmony is imaged to us by an echo; and in one instance, it is with such transcendent beauty set forth by a shadow and its corresponding substance, that it would be a sin to cheat our readers at once of so happy an illustration of the poet's system, and so fair a proof of his descriptive powers.

Thus having reach'd a bridge that over-arch'd, &c.—p. 407

Combinations, it is confessed, “like those reflected in that quiet pool,” cannot be lasting: it is enough for the purpose of the poet, if they are felt. They are at least his system; and his readers, if they reject them for their creed, may receive them merely as poetry. In him, faith, in friendly alliance and conjunction with the religion of his country, appears to have grown up, fostered by meditation and lonely communications with Nature—an internal principle of lofty consciousness, which stamps upon his opinions and sentiments (we were almost going to say) the character of an expanded and generous Quakerism.

From such a creed we should expect unusual results: and, when applied to the purposes of consolation, more touching considerations than from the mouth of common teachers. The finest speculation of this sort perhaps in the poem before us, is the notion of the thoughts which may sustain the spirit, while they crush the frame of the sufferer, who from loss of objects of love by death, is commonly supposed to pine away under a broken heart.

———If there be, whose tender frames have droop'd, &c.—p. 148.

With the same modifying and incorporating power, he tells us,—

Within the soul a faculty abides, etc.—p. 188.

This is high poetry; though (as we have ventured to lay the basis of the author's sentiments in a sort of liberal Quakerism) from some parts of it, others may, with more plausibility, object to the appearance of a kind of natural Methodism: we could have wished therefore that the tale of Margaret had been postponed, till the reader had been strengthened by some previous acquaintance with the author's theory, and not placed in the front of the poem, with a kind of ominous aspect, beautifully tender as it is. It is a tale of a cottage, and its female tenant, gradually decaying together, while she expected the return of one whom poverty and not unkindness had driven from her arms. We trust ourselves only with the conclusion—

From their first separation, nine long years, &c.—p. 146.

The fourth book, entitled "Despondency Corrected," we consider as the most valuable portion of the poem. For moral grandeur; for wide scope of thought and a long train of lofty imagery; for tender personal appeals; and a versification which we feel we ought to notice, but feel it also so involved in the poetry, that we can hardly mention it as a distinct excellence; it stands without competition among our didactic and descriptive verse. The general tendency of the argument (which we might almost affirm to be the leading moral of the poem) is to abate the pride of the calculating understanding, and to reinstate the imagination and the affections in those seats from which modern philosophy has laboured but too successfully to expel them.

"Life's autumn past," says the grey-haired Wanderer,

————— I stand on winter's verge, &c.—p. 168.

In the same spirit, those illusions of the imaginative faculty to which the peasantry in solitary districts are peculiarly subject, are represented as the kindly ministers of conscience:

————— with whose service charged
They come and go, appear and disappear;
Diverting evil purposes, remorse
Awakening, chastening an intemperate grief,
Or pride of heart abating.

Reverting to the more distant ages of the world, the operation of that same faculty in producing the several fictions of Chaldean, Persian, and Grecian idolatry, is described with such seductive power, that the Solitary, in good earnest, seems alarmed at the tendency of his own argument. Notwithstanding his fears, however, there is one thought so uncommonly fine, relative to the spirituality which lay hid beneath the gross material forms of Greek worship, in metal or stone, that we cannot resist the allurements of transcribing it—

———Triumphant o'er this pompous show, &c.—p. 174.

In discourse like this the first day passes away. The second (for this almost dramatic poem takes up the action of two summer days) is varied by the introduction of the village priest; to whom the Wanderer resigns the office of chief speaker, which had been yielded to his age and experience on the first. The conference is begun at the gate of the churchyard; and after some natural speculations concerning death and immortality—and the custom of funereal and sepulchral observances, as deduced from a feeling of immortality—certain doubts are proposed respecting the quantity of moral worth existing in the world, and in that mountainous district in particular. In the resolution of these doubts, the priest enters upon a most affecting and singular strain of narration, derived from the graves around him. Pointing to hillock after hillock, he gives short histories of their tenants, disclosing their humble virtues, and touching with tender hand upon their frailties.

Nothing can be conceived finer than the manner of introducing these tales. With heaven above his head, and the mouldering turf at his feet—standing betwixt life and death—he seems to maintain that spiritual relation which he bore to his living flock, in its undiminished strength, even with their ashes; and to be in his proper cure, or diocese, among the dead.

We might extract powerful instances of pathos from these tales—the story of Ellen in particular—but their force is in combination, and in the circumstances under which they are introduced. The traditionary anecdote of the Jacobite and Hanoverian, as less liable to suffer by transplanting, and as affording an instance of that finer species of humour, that thoughtful playfulness in which the author more nearly perhaps than in any other quality resembles Cowper, we shall lay at least a part of it before our readers. It is the story of a whig who, having wasted a large estate in election contests, retired “beneath a borrowed name” to a small town among these northern mountains, when a Caledonian laird, a follower of the house of Stuart, who had fled his country after the overthrow at Culloden, returning with the return of lenient times, had also fixed his residence.

————— Here, then, they met,
Those doughty champions; flaming Jacobite, &c.—p. 270-73.

The causes which have prevented the poetry of Mr. Wordsworth from attaining its full share of popularity are to be found in the boldness and originality of his genius. The times are past when a poet could securely follow the direction of his own mind into whatever tracts it might lead. A writer, who would be popular, must timidly coast the shore of prescribed sentiment and sympathy. He must have just as much more of the imaginative faculty than his readers, as will serve to keep their apprehensions from stagnating, but not so much as to alarm their jealousy. He must not think or feel too deeply.

If he has had the fortune to be bred in the midst of the most magnificent objects of creation, he must not have given away his heart to them; or if he have, he must conceal his love, or not carry his expressions of it beyond that point of rapture, which the occasional tourist thinks it not overstepping decorum to betray, or the limit which that gentlemanly spy upon Nature, the picturesque traveller, has vouchsafed to countenance. He must do this, or be content to be thought an enthusiast.

If from living among simple mountaineers, from a daily intercourse with them, not upon the footing of a patron, but in the character of an equal, he has detected, or imagines that he has detected, through the cloudy medium of their unlettered discourse, thoughts and apprehensions not vulgar; traits of patience and constancy, love unwearied, and heroic endurance, not unfit (as he may judge) to be made the subject of verse, he will be deemed a man of perverted genius by the philanthropist who, conceiving of the peasantry of his country only as objects of a pecuniary sympathy, starts at finding them elevated to a level of humanity with himself, having their own loves, enmities, cravings, aspirations, &c., as much beyond his faculty to believe, as his beneficence to supply.

If from a familiar observation of the ways of children, and much more from a retrospect of his own mind when a child, he has gathered more reverential notions of that state than fall to the lot of ordinary observers, and, escaping from the dissonant wranglings of men, has tuned his lyre, though but for occasional harmonies, to the milder utterance of that soft age,—his verses shall be censured as infantile by critics who confound poetry “having children for its subject” with poetry that is “childish,” and who, having themselves perhaps never been children, never having possessed the tenderness and docility of that age, know not what the soul of a child is—how apprehensive! how imaginative! how religious!

We have touched upon some of the causes which we conceive to have been unfriendly to the author's former poems. We think they do not apply in the same force to the one before us. There is in it more of uniform elevation, a wider scope of subject, less of manner, and it contains none of those starts and imperfect shapings which in some of this author's smaller pieces offended the weak, and gave scandal to the perverse. It must indeed be approached with seriousness. It has in it much of that quality which "draws the devout, deterring the profane." Those who hate the Paradise Lost will not love this poem. The steps of the great master are discernible in it; not in direct imitation or injurious parody, but in the following of the spirit, in free homage and generous subjection.

One objection it is impossible not to foresee. It will be asked, why put such eloquent discourse in the mouth of a pedlar? It might be answered that Mr. Wordsworth's plan required a character in humble life to be the organ of his philosophy. It was in harmony with the system and scenery of his poem. We read Piers Plowman's Creed, and the lowness of the teacher seems to add a simple dignity to the doctrine. Besides, the poet has bestowed an unusual share of education upon him. Is it too much to suppose that the author, at some early period of his life, may himself have known such a person, a man endowed with sentiments above his situation, another Burns; and that the dignified strains which he has attributed to the Wanderer may be no more than recollections of his conversation, heightened only by the amplification natural to poetry, or the lustre which imagination flings back upon the objects and companions of our youth? After all, if there should be found readers willing to admire the poem, who yet feel scandalized at a name, we would advise them, wherever it occurs, to substitute silently the word Palmer, or Pilgrim, or any less offensive designation, which shall connect the notion of sobriety in heart and manners with the experience and privileges which a wayfaring life confers.

ON THE SECONDARY NOVELS OF DEFOE.

It has happened not seldom that one work of some author has so transcendently surpassed in execution the rest of his compositions, that the world has agreed to pass a sentence of dismissal upon the latter, and to consign them to total neglect and oblivion. It has done wisely in this not to suffer the contemplation of excellences of a lower standard to abate or stand in the way of the pleasure it has agreed to receive from the Master Piece.

Again it has happened, that from no inferior merit of execution in the rest, but from superior good fortune in the choice of its subject, some single work shall have been suffered to eclipse, and cast into the shade, the deserts of its less fortunate brethren. This has been done with more or less injustice in the case of the popular allegory of Bunyan, in which the beautiful and scriptural image of a Pilgrim or wayfarer, (we are all such upon earth,) addressing itself intelligibly and feelingly to the bosoms of all, has silenced, and made almost to be forgotten, the more awful and scarcely less tender beauties of the "Holy War made by Shaddai upon Diabolus," of the same Author; a Romance less happy in its subject, but surely well worthy of a secondary immortality.

But in no instance has this excluding partiality been exerted with more unfairness than against what may be termed the Secondary Novels or Romances of Defoe.

While all ages and descriptions of people hang delighted over the "Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," and shall continue to do so, we trust, while the world lasts, how few comparatively will bear to be told that there exist other Fictitious Narratives by the same writer,—four of them at least of no inferior interest, except what results from a less felicitous choice of situation. "Roxana," "Singleton," "Moll Flanders," "Colonel Jack," are all genuine offspring of the same father. They bear the veritable impress of Defoe. An unpractised Midwife that would not swear to the nose, lip, forehead, and eye of every one of them! They are, in their way, as full of incident, and some of them every bit as romantic; only they want the Uninhabited Island, and the charm that has bewitched the world, of the striking solitary situation.

But are there no solitudes out of the cave and the desert? Or cannot the heart in the midst of crowds feel frightfully alone? Singleton on the world of waters, prowling about with pirates less merciful than the creatures of any howling wilderness,—is he not alone, with the faces of men about him, but without a guide that can conduct him through the mists of educational and habitual ignorance, or a fellow-heart that can interpret to him the new-born yearnings and aspirations of an unpractised penitence? Or when the Boy Colonel Jack, in the loneliness of the heart, (the worst solitude,) goes to hide his ill-purchased treasure in the hollow tree by night, and miraculously loses, and miraculously finds it again,—whom hath he there to sympathise with him? or of what sort are his associates?

The Narrative manner of Defoe has a naturalness about it beyond that of any other Novel or Romance writer. His Fictions have all the air of true stories. It is impossible to believe, while you are reading them, that a real person is not narrating to you everywhere nothing but what really happened to himself. To this the extreme homeliness of their style mainly contributes. We use the word in its best and heartiest sense,—that which comes home to the reader. The Narrators everywhere are chosen from low life, or have had their origin in it. Therefore they tell their own tales, (Mr. Coleridge has anticipated us in this remark,) as persons in their degree are observed to do, with infinite repetition, and an over-acted exactness, lest the hearer should not have minded, or have forgotten, some things that had been told before. Hence the emphatic sentences marked in the good old (but deserted) Italic type; and hence too the frequent interposition of the reminding old colloquial parenthesis, "I say," "mind," and the like, when the Story Teller repeats what, to a practised reader, might appear to have been sufficiently insisted upon before. Which made an ingenious critic observe, that his Works in this kind were excellent reading for the kitchen. And in truth the Heroes and Heroines of Defoe can never again hope to be popular with a much higher class of readers than that of the Servant Maid or the Sailor. Crusoe keeps its rank only by tough prescription. Singleton, the Pirate; Colonel Jack, the Thief; Moll Flanders, both Thief and Harlot; Roxana, Harlot and something worse,— would be startling ingredients in the bill of fare of modern literary delicacies. But, then, what Pirates, what Thieves, and what Harlots, is the Thief, the Harlot, and the Pirate of Defoe? We would not hesitate to say, that in no other Work of Fiction, where the lives of such Characters are described, is guilt and delinquency made less seductive, or the suffering made more closely to follow the commission, or the penitence more earnest or more bleeding, or the intervening flashes of religious visitation upon the rude and uninstructed soul more meltingly and fearfully painted. They in this come near to the tenderness of Bunyan; while the livelier pictures and incidents in them, as in Hogarth or in Fielding, tend to diminish that fastidiousness to the concerns and pursuits of common life which an unrestrained passion for the ideal and the sentimental is in danger of producing.

THE REYNOLDS GALLERY.

THE Reynolds Gallery has, upon the whole, disappointed me. Some of the portraits are interesting. They are faces of characters whom we (middle-aged gentlemen) were born a little too late to remember, but about whom we have heard our fathers tell stories till we almost fancy to have seen them. There is a charm in the portrait of a Rodney or a Keppel, which even a picture of Nelson must want for me. I should turn away after a slight inspection from the best likeness that could be made of Mrs. Anne Clarke; but Kitty Fishier is a considerable personage. Then the dresses of some of the women so exactly remind us of modes which we can just recall; of the forms under which the venerable relationship of aunt or mother first presented themselves to our young eyes; the aprons, the coifs, the lappets, the hoods. Mercy on us! what a load of head-ornaments seem to have conspired to bury a pretty face in the picture of Mrs. Long, yet could not! Beauty must have some "charmed life" to have been able to surmount the conspiracy of fashion in those days to destroy it.

The portraits which least pleased me were those of boys, as infant Bacchuses, Jupiters, &c. But the artist is not to be blamed for the disguise. No doubt the parents wished to see their children deified in their lifetime. It was but putting a thunderbolt (instead of a squib) into young master's hands; and a whey-faced chit was transformed into the infant ruler of Olympus,—him who was afterward to shake heaven and earth with his black brow. Another good boy pleased his grandmamma with saying his prayers so well, and the blameless dotage of the good old woman imagined in him an adequate representative of the infancy of the awful Prophet Samuel. But the great historical compositions, where the artist was at liberty to paint from his own idea,—the Beaufort and the Ugolino: why, then, I must confess, pleading the liberty of table-talk for my presumption, that they have not left any very elevating impressions on my mind. Pardon a ludicrous comparison. I know, madam, you admire them both; but placed opposite to each other as they are at the gallery, as if to set the one work in competition with the other, they did remind me of the famous contention for the prize of deformity, mentioned in the 173rd number of the "Spectator." The one stares, and the other grins; but is there common dignity in their countenances? Does any thing of the history of their life gone by peep through the ruins of the mind in the face, like the unconquerable grandeur that surmounts the distortions of the Laocoön? The figures which stand by the bed of Beaufort are indeed happy representations of the plain unmannered old nobility of the English historical plays of Shakspeare; but, for any thing else, give me leave to recommend those macarons.

After leaving the Reynolds Gallery, (where, upon the whole, I received a good deal of pleasure,) and feeling that I had quite had my fill of paintings, I stumbled upon a picture in Piccadilly, (No. 22, I think,) which purports to be a portrait of Francis the First by Leonardo da Vinci. Heavens, what a difference! It is but a portrait, as most of those I had been seeing; but, placed by them, it would kill them, swallow them up as Moses's rod the other rods.¹ Where did these old painters get their models? I see no such figures, not in my dreams, as this Francis, in the character, or rather with the attributes, of John the Baptist. A more than martial majesty in the brow and upon the eyelid; an arm muscular, beautifully formed; the long, graceful, massy fingers compressing, yet so as not to hurt, a lamb more lovely, more sweetly shrinking, than we can conceive that milk-white one which followed Una; the picture altogether looking as if it were eternal,—combining the truth of flesh with a promise of permanence like marble.

Leonardo, from the one or two specimens we have of him in England, must have been a stupendous genius. I scarce can think he has had his full fame,—he who could paint that wonderful personification of the Logos, or third person of the Trinity, grasping a globe, late in the possession of Mr. Troward, of Pall Mall, where the hand was, by the boldest license, twice as big as the truth of drawing warranted; yet the effect, to every one that saw it, by some magic of genius was confessed to be not monstrous, but miraculous and silencing. It could not be gainsaid.

LETTERS TO EDITOR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TABLE BOOK."

Dear Sir,—Somebody has fairly played a hoax on you (I suspect that pleasant rogue M-x-n) in sending the sonnet in my name, inserted in your last Number. True it is that I must own to the verses being mine, but not written on the occasion there pretended; for I have not yet had the pleasure of seeing the lady in the part of Emmeline, and I have understood that the force of her acting in it is rather in the expression of new-born sight than of the previous want of it. The lines were really written upon her performance in the Blind Boy, and appeared in the Morning Chronicle some years back. I suppose our facetious friend thought that they would serve again, like an old coat new turned.

Yours, (and his nevertheless,)

C. LAMB.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TABLE BOOK."

Sir,—A correspondent in your last Number rather hastily asserts that there is no other authority than Davenport's tragedy for the poisoning of Matilda by King John. It oddly enough happens, that in the same Number appears an extract from a play of Heywood's, of an older date, in two parts; in which play the fact of such poisoning, as well as her identity with Maid Marian, are equally established. Michael Drayton also hath a legend, confirmatory (as far as poetical authority can go) of the violent manner of her death. But neither he nor Davenport confounds her with Robin's mistress. Besides the named authorities, old Fuller (I think) somewhere relates, as matter of chronicle history, that, old Fitzwalter (he is called Fitzwater both in Heywood and in Davenport) being banished after his daughter's murder (some years subsequently) King John, at a tournament in France, being delighted with the valiant bearing of a combatant in the lists, and inquiring his name, was told that it was his old faithful servant, Fitzwalter, who desired nothing more heartily than to be reconciled to his liege; and an affecting reconciliation followed. In the common collection called "Robin Hood's Garland" (I have not seen Ritson's), no mention is made, if I remember, of the nobility of Marian. Is she not the daughter of plain Squire Gamwell of Old Gamwell Hall. Sorry that I cannot gratify the curiosity of your "disembodied spirit" (who, as such, is, methinks, sufficiently "veiled" from our notice) with more authentic testimonies, I rest,

Your humble abstracter,

C. L.

POEMS.

DEDICATION

TO

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE.

MY DEAR COLERIDGE,—You will smile to see the slender labours of your friend designated by the title of Works: but such was the wish of the gentlemen who have kindly undertaken the trouble of collecting them, and from their judgment could be no appeal.

It would be a kind of disloyalty to offer any one but yourself a volume containing the early pieces, which were first published among your poems, and were fairly derivatives from you and them. My friend Lloyd and myself came into our first battle (authorship is a sort of warfare) under cover of the greater Ajax. How this association, which shall always be a dear and proud recollection to me, came to be broken,—who snapped the threefold cord,—whether yourself (but I know that was not the case) grew ashamed of your former companions,—or whether (which is by much the more probable) some ungracious bookseller was author of the separation,—I cannot tell;—but wanting the support of your friendly elm (I speak for myself), my vine has, since that time, put forth few or no fruits; the sap (if ever it had any) has become, in a manner, dried up and extinct: and you will find your old associate, in his second volume, dwindled into prose and criticism.

Am I right in assuming this as the cause? or is it that, as years come upon us (except with some more healthy-happy spirits), life itself loses much of its poetry for us? we transcribe but what we read in the great volume of Nature; and, as the characters grow dim, we turn off, and look another way. You yourself write no Christabels, nor Ancient Mariners, now.

Some of the Sonnets, which shall be carelessly turned over by the general reader, may happily awaken in you remembrances, which I should be sorry should be ever totally extinct—the memory—

Of summer days and of delightful years—

even so far back as to those old suppers at our old  Inn,—when life was fresh, and topics exhaustless,—and you first kindled in me, if not the power, yet the love of poetry, and beauty, and kindness—

What words have I heard
Spoke at the Mermaid!

The world has given you many a shrewd nip and gird since that time, but either my eyes are grown dimmer, or my old friend is the same, who stood before me three-and-twenty years ago—his hair a little confessing the hand of time, but still shrouding the same capacious brain,—his heart not altered, scarcely where it “alteration finds.”

One piece, Coleridge, I have ventured to publish in its original form, though I have heard you complain of a certain over-imitation of the antique in the style. If I could see any way of getting rid of the objection, without re-writing it entirely, I would make some sacrifices. But when I wrote John Woodvil, I never proposed to myself any distinct deviation from common English. I had been newly initiated in the writings of our elder dramatists ; Beaumont and Fletcher, and Massinger, were then a first love ; and from what I was so freshly conversant in, what wonder if my language imperceptibly took a tinge ? The very time, which I had chosen for my story, that which immediately followed the Restoration, seemed to require, in an English play, that the English should be of rather an older cast, than that of the precise year in which it happened to be written. I wish it had not some faults, which I can less vindicate than the language.

I remain, my dear Coleridge,

Yours. with unabated esteem,

CHARLES LAMB.

THE WIFE'S TRIAL ;

THE INTRUDING WIDOW.

A DRAMATIC POEM.

MRS. FRAMPTON, A Widow.

SCENE.—At Mr. Selby's House, or in the grounds adjacent.

SCENE—A Library.

MR. SELBY. KATHERINE.

Selby. Do not too far mistake me, gentlest wife ;
I meant to chide your virtues, not yourself,
And those too with allowance. I have not
Been blest by thy fair side with five white years
Of smooth and even wedlock, now to touch
With any strain of harshness on a string
Hath yielded me such music. 'Twas the quality
Of a too grateful nature in my Katherine,
That to the lame performance of some vows,
And common courtesies of man to wife,
Attributing too much, hath sometimes seem'd
To esteem as favours, what in that blest union
Are but reciprocal and trivial dues,
As fairly yours as mine : 'twas this I thought
Gently to reprehend.

Kath. In friendship's barter
 The riches we exchange should hold some level,
 And corresponding worth. Jewels for toys
 Demand some thanks thrown in. You took me, sir,
 To that blest haven of my peace, your bosom,
 An orphan founder'd in the world's black storm.
 Poor, you have made me rich ; from lonely maiden,
 Your cherish'd and your full-accompanied wife.

Selby. But to divert the subject : Kate too fond,
 I would not wrest your meanings ; else that word
 Accompanied, and full-accompanied too,
 Might raise a doubt in some men, that their wives
 Haply did think their company too long ;
 And over-company, we know by proof,
 Is worse than no attendance.

Kath. I must guess,
 You speak this of the Widow—

Selby. 'Twas a bolt
 At random shot ; but if it hit, believe me,
 I am most sorry to have wounded you Through a friend's side. I know not how we have swerved

From our first talk. I was to caution you
 Against this fault of a too grateful nature :
 Which, for some girlish obligations past,
 In that relenting season of the heart,
 When slightest favours pass for benefits
 Of endless binding, would entail upon you
 An iron slavery of obsequious duty
 To the proud will of an imperious woman.

Kath. The favours are not slight to her I owe.

Selby. Slight or not slight, the tribute she exacts Cancels all dues— [A voice within.
 even now I hear her call you

In such a tone, as lordliest mistresses
 Expect a slave's attendance. Prithee, Kate,
 Let her expect a brace of minutes or so.
 Say you are busy. Use her by degrees
 To some less hard exactions.

Kath. I conjure you,
 Detain me not. I will return—

Selby. Sweet wife,
 Use thy own pleasure— [Exit KATHERINE.
 but it troubles me.

A visit of three days, as was pretended,
 Spun to ten tedious weeks, and no hint given
 When she will go! I would this buxom Widow
 Were a thought handsomer! I'd fairly try
 My Katherine's constancy; make desperate love
 In seeming earnest; and raise up such broils,
 That she, not I, should be the first to warn
 The insidious guest depart.

Re-enter KATHERINE.

So soon return'd!

What was our Widow's will?

Kath. A trifle, sir.

Selby. Some toilet service—to adjust her head,
 Or help to stick a pin in the right place—

Kath. Indeed 'twas none of these.

Selby. Or new vamp up
 The tarnish'd cloak she came in. I have seen her
 Demand such service from thee, as her maid,
 Twice told to do it, would blush angry-red,
 And pack her few clothes up. Poor fool! fond slave!

And yet my dearest Kate!—This day at least
 (It is our wedding day) we spend in freedom,

And will forget our Widow.—Philip, our coach—
 Why weeps my wife? You know, I promised you
 An airing o'er the pleasant Hampshire downs
 To the blest cottage on the green hill side,
 Where first I told my love. I wonder much
 If the crimson parlour hath exchanged its hue
 For colours not so welcome. Faded though it be,
 It will not show less lovely than the tinge
 Of this faint red, contending with the pale,
 Where once the full-flush'd health gave to this cheek
 An apt resemblance to the fruit's warm side,
 That bears my Katherine's name.—

Our carriage, Philip.

Enter a Servant.

Now, Robin, what make you here?

Servant. May it please you,
 The coachman has driven out with Mrs. Frampton.

Selby. He had no orders—

Servant. None, sir, that I know of,
 But from the lady, who expects some letter
 At the next Post Town.

Selby. Go, Robin. [Exit Servant.
 How is this?

Kath. I came to tell you so, but fear'd your anger—

Selby. It was ill done though of this Mistress
 Frampton,
 This forward Widow. But a ride's poor loss
 Imports not much. In to your chamber, love,
 Where you with music may beguile the hour,
 While I am tossing over dusty tomes,
 Till our most reasonable friend returns.

Kath. I am all obedience. [Exit KATHERINE.

Selby. Too obedient, Kate,

And to too many masters. I can hardly
 On such a day as this refrain to speak
 My sense of this injurious friend, this pest,
 This household evil, this close-clinging fiend,
 In rough terms to my wife. 'Death, my own servants
 Controll'd above me ! orders countermanded !
 What next ? [Servant enters and announces the Sister.

Enter Lucy.

Sister ! I know you are come to welcome
 This day's return. 'Twas well done.

Lucy. You seem ruffled.
 In years gone by this day was used to be
 The smoothest of the year. Your honey turn'd
 So soon to gall ?

Selby. Gall'd am I, and with cause,
 And rid to death, yet cannot get a riddance,
 Nay, scarce a ride, by this proud Widow's leave.

Lucy. Something you wrote me of a Mistress
 Frampton.

Selby. She came at first a meek admitted guest,
 Pretending a short stay ; her whole deportment
 Seem'd as of one obliged. A slender trunk,
 The wardrobe of her scant and ancient clothing,
 Bespoke no more. But in few days her dress,
 Her looks, were proudly changed. And now she flaunts it

In jewels stolen or borrow'd from my wife ;
 Who owes her some strange service, of what nature
 I must be kept in ignorance. Katherine's meek
 And gentle spirit cowers beneath her eye,
 As spell-bound by some witch.

Lucy. Some mystery hangs on it.

How bears she in her carriage towards yourself ?

Selby. As one who fears, and yet not greatly cares
For my displeasure. Sometimes I have thought,
A secret glance would tell me she could love,
If I but gave encouragement. Before me
She keeps some moderation ; but is never Closeted with my wife, but in the end
I find my Katherine in briny tears.
From the small chamber where she first was lodged,
The gradual fiend by specious wriggling arts
Has now ensconced herself in the best part
Of this large mansion ; calls the left wing her own ;
Commands my servants, equipage.—I hear
Her hated tread. What makes she back so soon ?

Enter MRS. FRAMPTON.

Mrs. F. O, I am jolter'd, bruised, and shook to death,
With your vile Wiltshire roads. The villain Philip Chose, on my conscience, the perversest tracks,
And stoniest hard lanes in all the county,
'Till I was fain get out, and so walk back,
My errand unperform'd at Andover.

Lucy. And I shall love the knave for ever after.

[Aside.

Mrs. F. A friend with you !

Selby. My eldest sister, Lucy,
Come to congratulate this returning morn.—
Sister, my wife's friend, Mistress Frampton.

Mrs. F.

Pray

Be seated, for your brother's sake, you are welcome.
I had thought this day to have spent in homely fashion

With the good couple, to whose hospitality

I stand so far indebted. But your coming
Makes it a feast.

Lucy. She does the honours naturally—
[Aside.

Selby. As if she were the mistress of the house—
[Aside.

Mrs. F. I love to be at home with loving friends.
To stand on ceremony with obligations,
Is to restrain the obliger. That old coach, though,
Of yours jumbles one strangely.

Selby. I shall order
An equipage soon, more easy to you, madam—

Lucy. To drive her and her pride to Lucifer,
I hope he means. [Aside.

Mrs. F. I must go trim myself; this humbled garb

Would shame a wedding feast. I have your leave
For a short absence?—and your Katherine—

Selby. You'll find her in her closet—

Mrs. F. Fare you well, then.
[Exit.

Selby. How like you her assurance?

Lucy. Even so well,
That if this Widow were my guest, not yours,
She should have coach enough, and scope to ride.
My merry groom should in a trice convey her
To Sarum Plain, and set her down at Stonehenge,
To pick her path through those antiques at leisure;
She should take sample of our Wiltshire flints.
O, be not lightly jealous! nor surmise,
That to a wanton bold-faced thing like this
Your modest shrinking Katherine could impart
Secrets of any worth, especially Secrets that touch'd your peace. If there be aught

My life upon't 'tis but some girlish story
 Of a First Love ; which even the boldest wife
 Might modestly deny to a husband's ear,
 Much more your timid and too sensitive Katherine.

Selby. I think it is no more ; and will dismiss
 My further fears, if ever I have had such.

Lucy. Shall we go walk ? I'd see your gardens, brother ;
 And how the new trees thrive, I recommended.
 Your Katherine is engaged now—

Selby.

I'll attend you.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE—Servants' Hall.

HOUSEKEEPER, PHILIP, and others, laughing.

Housekeeper. Our Lady's guest, since her short ride, seems ruffled,
 And somewhat in disorder. Philip, Philip,
 I do suspect some roguery. Your mad tricks
 Will some day cost you a good place, I warrant.

Philip. Good Mistress Jane, our serious housekeeper,
 And sage Duenna to the maids and scullions,
 We must have leave to laugh ; our brains are younger,
 And undisturb'd with care of keys and pantries.
 We are wild things.

Butler.

Good Philip, tell us all.

All. Ay, as you live, tell, tell—

Philip. Mad fellows, you shall have it.
 The Widow's bell rang lustily and loud—

Butler. I think that no one can mistake her ringing.

Waiting-maid. Our Lady's ring is soft sweet music to it,
More of entreaty hath it than command.

Philip. I lose my story, if you interrupt me thus.
The bell, I say, rang fiercely ; and a voice
More shrill than bell, call'd out for " Coachman Philip ! "

I straight obey'd, as 'tis my name and office.
" Drive me," quoth she, " to the next market town,
Where I have hope of letters." I made haste ;
Put to the horses, saw her safely coach'd,
And drove her—

Waiting-maid. By the straight high road to Andover,

I guess—

Philip. Pray, warrant things within your knowledge,
Good Mistress Abigail ; look to your dressings,
And leave the skill in horses to the coachman.

Butler. He'll have his humour ; best not interrupt him.

Philip. 'Tis market day, thought I ; and the poor beasts,

Meeting such droves of cattle and of people,
May take a fright ; so down the lane I trundled,
Where Goodman Dobson's crazy mare was founder'd,
And where the flints were biggest, and ruts widest,
By ups and downs, and such bone-cracking motions
We flounder'd on a furlong, till my madam,
In policy, to save the few joints left her,
Betook her to her feet, and there we parted.

All. Ha ! ha ! ha !

Butler. Hang her, 'tis pity such as she should ride.

Waiting-maid. I think she is a witch ; I have tired myself out
With sticking pins in her pillow ; still she 'scapes them—

Butler. And I with helping her to mum for claret,
But never yet could cheat her dainty palate.

Housekeeper. Well, well, she is the guest of our good Mistress,
And so should be respected. Though I think
Our Master cares not for her company,
He would ill brook we should express so much
By rude discourtesies, and short attendance,
Being but servants. (A Bell rings furiously.)

'Tis her bell speaks now ;
Good, good, bestir yourselves : who knows who's wanted ?

Butler. But 'twas a merry trick of Philip coachman. [Exeunt.

SCENE.—Mrs. Selby's Chamber.

MRS. FRAMPTON, KATHERINE, working.

Mrs. F. I am thinking, child, how contrary our fates
Have traced our lots through life.—Another needle,
This works untowardly.—An heiress born
To splendid prospects, at our common school
I was as one above you all, not of you ;
Had my distinct prerogatives : my freedoms,
Denied to you. Pray listen—

Kath. I must hear
What you are pleased to speak—how my heart sinks here ! [Aside.

Mrs. F. My chamber to myself, my separate maid,
My coach, and so forth.—Not that needle, simple one,

With the great staring eye fit for a Cyclops !
 Mine-own are not so blinded with their griefs,
 But I could make a shift to thread a smaller.
 A cable or a camel might go through this,
 And never strain for the passage.

Kath. I will fit you.—
 Intolerable tyranny! [Aside.]

Mrs. F. Quick, quick;
 You were not once so slack.—As I was saying,
 Not a young thing among ye but observed me
 Above the mistress. Who but I was sought to
 In all your dangers, all your little difficulties,
 Your girlish scrapes? I was the scape-goat still,
 To fetch you off; kept all your secrets, some,
 Perhaps, since then—

Kath. No more of that, for mercy,
 If you'd not have me, sinking at your feet,
 Cleave the cold earth for comfort. [Kneels.]

Mrs. F. This to me?
 This posture to your friend had better suited
 The orphan Katherine in her humble school-days
 To the then rich heiress, than the wife of Selby,
 Of wealthy Mr. Selby,
 To the poor widow Frampton, sunk as she is.
 Come, come,
 'Twas something, or 'twas nothing that I said;
 I did not mean to fright you, sweetest bed-fellow!
 You once were so, but Selby now engrosses you.
 I'll make him give you up a night or so;
 In faith I will: that we may lie, and talk
 Old tricks of school-days over.

Kath. Hear me, madam—

Mrs. F. Not by that name. Your friend—

Kath. My truest friend,
And saviour of my honour !

Mrs. F. This sounds better ;
You still shall find me such.

Kath. That you have graced
Our poor house with your presence hitherto,
Has been my greatest comfort, the sole solace
Of my forlorn and hardly guess'd estate.
You have been pleased
To accept some trivial hospitalities,
In part of payment of a long arrear
I owe to you, no less than for my life.

Mrs. F. You speak my services too large.

Kath. Nay, less ;
For what an abject thing were life to me
Without your silence on my dreadful secret !
And I would wish the league we have renewed
Might be perpetual—

Mrs. F. Have a care, fine madam !

[Aside.

Kath. That one house still might hold us. But my husband
Has shown himself of late—

Mrs. F. How, Mistress Selby !

Kath. Not, not impatient. You misconstrue him,
He honours, and he loves, nay, he must love
The friend of his wife's youth. But there are moods
In which—

Mrs. F. I understand you ;—in which husbands
And wives that love, may wish to be alone,
To nurse the tender fits of new-born dalliance,
After a five years' wedlock.

Kath. Was that well
Or charitably put ? Do these pale cheeks

Proclaim a wanton blood?—this wasting form
 Seem a fit theatre for Levity
 To play his love-tricks on, and act such follies,
 As even in affection's first bland Moon
 Have less of grace than pardon in best wedlocks?
 I was about to say, that there are times
 When the most frank and sociable man
 May surfeit on most loved society,
 Preferring loneness rather—

Mrs. F. To my company—

Kath. Ay, yours, or mine, or any one's, Nay, take
 Not this unto yourself. Even in the newness
 Of our first married loves 'twas sometimes so.
 For solitude, I have heard my Selby say,
 Is to the mind as rest to the corporal functions;
 And he would call it oft, the day's soft sleep.

Mrs. F. What is your drift? and whereto tends this speech,
 Rhetorically labour'd?

Kath. That you would
 Abstain but from our house a month, a week;
 Or make request but for a single day.

Mrs. F. A month, a week, a day! A single hour
 Is every week, and month, and the long year,
 And all the years to come! My footing here,
 Slipt once, recovers never. From the state
 Of gilded roofs, attendance, luxuries,
 Parks, gardens, sauntering walks, or wholesome rides,
 To the bare cottage on the withering moor,
 Where I myself am servant to myself,
 Or only waited on by blackest thoughts—
 I sink, if this be so. No; here I sit.

Kath. Then I am lost for ever!

[Sinks at her feet—curtain drops.]

SCENE.—An Apartment contiguous to the last.

SELBY, as if listening.

Selby. The sounds have died away. What am I changed to?

What do I here, list'ning like to an abject,
Or heartless wittol, that must hear no good,
If he hear aught? "This shall to the ear of your husband."

It was the Widow's word. I guess'd some mystery,
And the solution with a vengeance comes.
What can my wife have left untold to me,
That must be told by proxy? I begin
To call in doubt the course of her life past
Under my very eyes. She hath not been good,
Not virtuous, not discreet; she hath not outrun
My wishes still with prompt and meek observance.
Perhaps she is not fair, sweet-voiced; her eyes
Not like the dove's; all this as well may be,
As that she should entreature up a secret
In the peculiar closet of her breast,
And grudge it to my ear. It is my right
To claim the halves in any truth she owns,
As much as in the babe I have by her;
Upon whose face henceforth I fear to look,
Lest I should fancy in its innocent brow
Some strange shame written.

Enter Lucy.

Sister, an anxious word with you.
From out the chamber, where my wife but now
Held talk with her encroaching friend, I heard
(Not of set purpose heark'ning, but by chance)
A voice of chiding, answer'd by a tone
Of replication, such as the meek dove

Makes, when the kite has clutch'd her. The high Widow
Was loud and stormy. I distinctly heard
One threat pronounced—"Your husband shall know all."

I am no listener, sister; and I hold
A secret, got by such unmanly shift,
The pitiful'st of thefts; but what mine ear,
I not intending it, receives perforce,
I count my lawful prize. Some subtle meaning
Lurks in this fiend's behaviour; which, by force
Or fraud, I must make mine.

Lucy. The gentlest means
Are still the wisest. What if you should press
Your wife to a disclosure?

Selby. I have tried
All gentler means; thrown out low hints, which, though
Merely suggestions, still have never fail'd
To blanch her cheek with fears. Roughlier to insist,
Would be to kill, where I but meant to heal.

Lucy. Your own description gave that Widow out
As one not much precise, nor over-coy
And nice to listen to a suit of love.
What if you feign'd a courtship, putting on,
(To work the secret from her easy faith,)
For honest ends, a most dishonest seeming?

Selby. I see your drift, and partly meet your counsel.
But must it not in me appear prodigious,
To say the least, unnatural, and suspicious,
To move hot love, where I have shown cool scorn,
And undissembled looks of blank aversion?

Lucy. Vain woman is the dupe of her own charms,

And easily credits the resistless power,
That in besieging beauty lies, to cast down
The slight-built fortress of a casual hate.

Selby. I am resolved—

Lucy. Success attend your wooing!

Selby. And I'll about it roundly, my wise sister.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE.—The Library.

MR. SELBY. MRS. FRAMPTON.

Selby. A fortunate encounter, Mistress Frampton.
My purpose was, if you could spare so much
From your sweet leisure, a few words in private.

Mrs. F. What mean his alter'd tones?—these looks to me,
Whose glances yet he has repell'd with coolness?
Is the wind changed? I'll veer about with it,
And meet him in all fashions. [Aside.

All my leisure,
Feebly bestow'd upon my kind friends here,
Would not express a tithe of the obligations
I every hour incur.

Selby. No more of that.
I know not why, my wife hath lost of late
Much of her cheerful spirits.

Mrs. F. It was my topic
To-day; and every day, and all day long,
I still am chiding with her. "Child," I said,
And said it pretty roundly—it may be
I was too peremptory—we elder school-fellows,
Presuming on the advantage of a year
Or two, which, in that tender time, seem'd much,
In after years, much like to elder sisters,
Are prone to keep the authoritative style,
When time has made the difference most ridiculous—

Selby. The observation's shrewd.

Mrs. F. "Child," I was saying,
 "If some wives had obtain'd a lot like yours,"
 And then perhaps I sigh'd, "they would not sit
 In corners moping, like to sullen moppets
 That want their will, but dry their eyes, and look
 Their cheerful husbands in the face," perhaps
 I said, their Selbys, "with proportion'd looks
 Of honest joy."

Selby. You do suspect no jealousy?

Mrs. F. What is his import? Whereto tends his speech? [Aside.
 Of whom, of what, should she be jealous, sir.—

Selby. I do not know, but women have their fancies;

And underneath a cold indifference,
 Or show of some distaste, husbands have mask'd
 A growing fondness for a female friend,
 Which the wife's eye was sharp enough to see,
 Before the friend had wit to find it out.
 You do not quit us soon?

Mrs. F. 'Tis as I find;
 Your Katherine profits by my lessons, sir.—
 Means this man honest? Is there no deceit? [Aside.

Selby. She cannot choose.—Well, well, I have been thinking,
 And if the matter were to do again—

Mrs. F. What matter, sir?

Selby. This idle bond of wedlock;
 These sour-sweet briars, fetters of harsh silk;
 I might have made, I do not say a better,
 But a more fit choice in a wife.

Mrs. F. The parch'd ground,
 In hottest Julys, drinks not in the showers

More greedily than I his words ! [Aside.

Selby. My humour

Is to be frank and jovial ; and that man
Affects me best, who most reflects me in My most free temper.

Mrs. F. Were you free to choose,
As jestingly I'll put the supposition,
Without a thought reflecting on your Katherine,
What sort of Woman would you make your choice ?

Selby. I like your humour and will meet your jest.
She should be one about my Katherine's age ;
But not so old, by some ten years, in gravity,
One that would meet my mirth, sometimes outrun it ;
No muling, pining moppet, as you said,
Nor moping maid that I must still be teaching
The freedoms of a wife all her life after :
But one that, having worn the chain before,
(And worn it lightly, as report gave out,)
Enfranchised from it by her poor fool's death,
Took it not so to heart that I need dread
To die myself, for fear a second time
To wet a widow's eye.

Mrs. F. Some widows, sir,
Hearing you talk so wildly, would be apt
To put strange misconstruction on your words,
As aiming at a Turkish liberty,
Where the free husband hath his several mates,
His Penseroso, his Allegro wife,
To suit his sober or his frolic fit.

Selby. How judge you of that latitude ?

Mrs. F. As one,
To European customs bred, must judge. Had I
Been born a native of the liberal East,
I might have thought as they do. Yet I knew

A married man that took a second wife,
 And (the man's circumstances duly weigh'd,
 With all their bearings) the considerate world
 Nor much approved, nor much condemn'd the deed.

Selby. You move my wonder strangely. Pray, proceed.

Mrs. F. An eye of wanton liking he had placed Upon a Widow, who liked him again,
 But stood on terms of honourable love,
 And scrupled wronging his most virtuous wife—
 When to their ears a lucky rumour ran,
 That this demure and saintly-seeming wife
 Had a first husband living ; with the which
 Being question'd, she but faintly could deny.
 “ A priest indeed there was ; some words had pass'd,
 But scarce amounting to a marriage rite.
 Her friend was absent ; she supposed him dead ;
 And, seven years parted, both were free to choose.”

Selby. What did the indignant husband? Did he not

With violent handlings stigmatise the cheek
 Of the deceiving wife, who had entail'd
 Shame on their innocent babe ?

Mrs. F. He neither tore
 His wife's locks nor his own ; but wisely weighing
 His own offence with hers in equal poise,
 And woman's weakness 'gainst the strength of man,
 Came to a calm and witty compromise.
 He coolly took his gay-faced widow home,
 Made her his second wife ; and still the first
 Lost few or none of her prerogatives.
 The servants call'd her mistress still ; she kept
 The keys, and had the total ordering
 Of the house affairs ; and, some slight toys excepted,
 Was all a moderate wife would wish to be.

Selby. A tale full of dramatic incident !—
And if a man should put it in a play,
How should he name the parties ?

Mrs. F. The man's name
Through time I have forgot—the widow's too ;—
But his first wife's first name, her maiden one,
Was not unlike to that your Katherine bore,
Before she took the honour'd style of Selby.

Selby. A dangerous meaning in your riddle lurks.
One knot is yet unsolved ; that told, this strange
And most mysterious drama ends. The name
Of that first husband—

Enter Lucy.

Mrs. F. Sir, your pardon—
The allegory fits your private ear.
Some half hour hence, in the garden's secret walk,
We shall have leisure. [Exit.

Selby. Sister, whence come you ?

Lucy. From your poor Katherine's chamber, where she droops
In sad presageful thoughts, and sighs, and weeps,
And seems to pray by turns. At times she looks
As she would pour her secret in my bosom—
Then starts, as I have seen her, at the mention
Of some immodest act. At her request
I left her on her knees.

Selby. The fittest posture ;
For great has been her fault to Heaven and me.
She married me with a first husband living,
Or not known not to be so, which, in the judgment
Of any but indifferent honesty,
Must be esteem'd the same. The shallow widow
Caught by my art, under a riddling veil

Too thin to hide her meaning, hath confess'd ail.
 Your coming in broke off the conference,
 When she was ripe to tell the fatal name,
 That seals my wedded doom.

Lucy. Was she so forward
 To pour her hateful meanings in your ear
 At the first hint ?

Selby. Her newly flatter'd hopes
 Array'd themselves at first in forms of doubt ;
 And with a female caution she stood off
 Awhile, to read the meaning of my suit,
 Which with such honest seeming I enforced,
 That her cold scruples soon gave way ; and now
 She rests prepared, as mistress, or as wife.
 To seize the place of her betrayèd friend--
 My much offending, but more suffering, Katherine.

Lucy. Into what labyrinth of fearful shapes
 My simple project has conducted you—
 Were but my wit as skilful to invent
 A clue to lead you forth !—I call to mind
 A letter, which your wife received from the Cape,
 Soon after you were married, with some circum- stances
 Of mystery too.

Selby. I well remember it.
 That letter did confirm the truth (she said)
 Of a friend's death, which she had long fear'd true,
 But knew not for a fact. A youth of promise
 She gave him out—a hot adventurous spirit—
 That had set sail in quest of golden dreams,
 And cities in the heart of Central Afric ;
 But named no names, nor did I care to press
 My question further, in the passionate grief
 She show'd at the receipt. Might this be he ?

Lucy. Tears were not all. When that first shower was past,
 With clasp'd hands she raised her eyes to Heav'n,
 As if in thankfulness for some escape,
 Or strange deliverance, in the news implied,
 Which sweeten'd that sad news.

Selby. Something of that I noted also—

Lucy. In her closet once,
 Seeking some other trifle, I espied
 A ring, in mournful characters deciphering
 The death of " Robert Halford, aged two
 And twenty." Brother, I am not given
 To the confident use of wagers, which I hold
 Unseemly in a woman's argument ;
 But I am strangely tempted now to risk
 A thousand pounds out of my patrimony,
 (And let my future husband look to it,
 If it be lost,) that this immodest Widow
 Shall name the name that tallies with that ring.

Selby. That wager lost, I should be rich indeed—
 Rich in my rescued Kate—rich in my honour,
 Which now was bankrupt. Sister, I accept
 Your merry wager, with an aching heart
 For very fear of winning. 'Tis the hour
 That I should meet my Widow in the walk,
 The south side of the garden. On some pretence
 Lure forth my Wife that way, that she may witness
 Our seeming courtship. Keep us still in sight, Yourselves unseen ; and by some sign I'll give,
 (A finger held up, or a kerchief waved,)
 You'll know your wager won—then break upon us,
 As if by chance.

Lucy. I apprehend your meaning—

Kath. I could endure all this, thinking my husband

Meant it in sport—

Mrs. F. But if in downright earnest
(Putting myself out of the question here)

Your Selby, as I partly do suspect,

Own'd a divided heart—

Kath. My own would break—

Mrs. F. Why, what a blind and witless fool it is,
That will not see its gains, its infinite gains—

Kath. Gain in a loss.

Or mirth in utter desolation !

Mrs. F. He doating on a face—suppose it mine,
Or any other's tolerably fair—

What need you care about a senseless secret ?

Kath. Perplex'd and fearful woman ! I in part Fathom your dangerous meaning. You have broke
The worse than iron band, fretting the soul,
By which you held me captive. Whether my husband

Is what you gave him out, or your fool'd fancy
But dreams he is so, either way I am free.

Mrs. F. It talks it bravely, blazons out its shame ;
A very heroine while on its knees ;
Rowe's Penitent, an absolute Calista ?

Kath. Not to thy wretched self these tears are falling ;

But to my husband, and offended Heaven,
Some drops are due—and then I sleep in peace,
Relieved from frightful dreams, my dreams though sad. [Exit.

Mrs. F. I have gone too far. Who knows but in this mood
She may forestall my story, win on Selby

By a frank confession?—and the time draws on
 For our appointed meeting. The game's desperate,
 For which I play. A moment's difference
 May make it hers or mine. I fly to meet him.
[Exit.

SCENE.—A garden.

MR. SELBY. MRS. FRAMPTON.

Selby. I am not so ill a guesser, Mrs. Frampton,
 Not to conjecture, that some passages
 In your unfinish'd story, rightly interpreted,
 Glanced at my bosom's peace ;

You knew my wife ?

Mrs. F. Even from her earliest school days—
 What of that ?

Or how is she concerned in my fine riddles.
 Framed for the hour's amusement !

Selby. By my hopes

Of my new interest conceived in you,
 And by the honest passion of my heart,
 Which not obliquely I to you did hint :
 Come from the clouds of misty allegory,
 And in plain language let me hear the worst.
 Stand I disgraced, or no ?

Mrs. F. Then by my hopes

Of my new interest conceived in you,
 And by the kindling passion in my breast,
 Which through my riddles you had almost read,
 Adjured so strongly, I will tell you all.
 In her school years, then bordering on fifteen,
 Or haply not much past, she loved a youth—

Selby. My most ingenuous Widow—

Mrs. F. Met him oft

By stealth, where I still of the party was—

Selby. Prime confidante to all the school, I warrant,

And general go-between— [Aside.

Mrs. F. One morn he came
In breathless haste. “The ship was under sail,
Or in few hours would be, that must convey
Him and his destinies to barbarous shores,
Where, should he perish by inglorious hands,
It would be consolation in his death
To have call'd his Katherine his.”

Selby. Thus far the story
Tallies with what I hoped. [Aside.

Mrs. F. Wavering between
The doubt of doing wrong, and losing him ;
And my dissuasions not o'er hotly urged,
Whom he had flatter'd with the bride-maid's part :—

Selby. I owe my subtle Widow, then, for this.

[Aside.

Mrs. F. Briefly we went to church. The ceremony
Scarcely was huddled over, and the ring
Yet cold upon her finger, when they parted—
He to his ship ; and we to school got back,
Scarce miss'd, before the dinner-bell could ring.

Selby. And from that hour—

Mrs. F. Nor sight, nor news of him,
For aught that I could hear, she e'er obtain'd.

Selby. Like to a man that hovers in suspense
Over a letter just received, on which
The black seal hath impress'd its ominous token,
Whether to open it or no, so I
Suspended stand, whether to press my fate
Further, or check ill curiosity
That tempts me to more loss.—The name, the name
Of this fine youth ?

Mrs. F. What boots it, if 'twere told ?

Selby. Now, by our loves,
And by my hopes of happier wedlocks, some day
To be accomplish'd, give me his name !

Mrs. F. 'Tis no such serious matter. It was—Huntingdon.

Selby. How have three little syllables pluck'd from me
A world of countless hopes !—

[Aside.

Evasive Widow

Mrs. F. How, sir !—I like not this. [Aside.

Selby. No, no, I meant

Nothing but good to thee. That other woman,
How shall I call her but evasive, false,
And treacherous ?—by the trust I place in thee,
Tell me, and tell me truly, was the name
As you pronounced it ?

Mrs. F. Huntingdon—the name,
Which his paternal grandfather assumed,
Together with the estates of a remote
Kinsman : but our high-spirited youth—

Selby. Yes—

Mrs. F. Disdaining

For sordid pelf to truck the family honours,
At risk of the lost estates, resumed the old style
And answer'd only to the name of—

Selby. What—

Mrs. F. Of Halford—

Selby. A Huntingdon to Halford changed so soon !
Why, then I see, a witch hath her good spells,
As well as bad, and can by a backward charm
Unruffle the foul storm she has just been raising.

[Aside. He makes the signal.

My frank, fair-spoken Widow, let this kiss,

Which yet aspires no higher, speak my thanks,
Till I can think on greater.

Enter LUCY and KATHERINE.

Mrs. F. Interrupted !

Selby. My sister here ! and see, where with her comes

My serpent gliding in an angel's form,
To taint the new-born Eden of our joys.
Why should we fear them ? We'll not stir a foot,
Nor coy it for their pleasures. [He courts the Widow.

Lucy (to Katherine). This your free,
And sweet ingenuous confession, binds me
For ever to you ; and it shall go hard,
But it shall fetch you back your husband's heart,
That now seems blindly straying ; or at worst,
In me you have still a sister.—Some wives, brother,
Would think it strange to catch their husbands thus Alone with a trim widow ; but your Katherine
Is arm'd, I think, with patience.

Kath. I am fortified
With knowledge of self-faults to endure worse wrongs,
If they be wrongs, than he can lay upon me ;
Even to look on, and see him sue in earnest,
As now I think he does it but in seeming,
To that ill woman.

Selby. Good words, gentle Kate,
And not a thought irreverent of our Widow.
Why 'twere unmannerly at any time,
But most uncourteous on our wedding day,
When we should show most hospitable.—Some wine !

[Wine is brought.

I am for sports. And now I do remember,
The old Egyptians at their banquets placed
A charnel sight of dead men's skulls before them,

With images of cold mortality,
 To temper their fierce joys when they grew rampant.
 I like the custom well: and ere we crown
 With freer mirth the day, I shall propose,
 In calmest recollection of our spirits,
 We drink the solemn 'Memory of the Dead'—

Mrs. F. Or the supposed dead— [Aside to him.]

Selby. Pledge me, good, wife— [She fills.]
 Nay, higher, yet, till the brimm'd cup swell o'er.

Kath. I catch the awful import of your words:
 And, though I could accuse you of unkindness,
 Yet as your lawful and obedient wife,
 While that name last (as I perceive it fading, Nor I much longer may have leave to use it)
 I calmly take the office you impose;
 And on my knees, imploring their forgiveness,
 Whom I in heaven or earth may have offended,
 Exempt from starting tears, and woman's weakness,
 I pledge you, sir—the Memory of the Dead!

[She drinks kneeling.]

Selby. 'Tis gently and discreetly said, and like
 My former loving Kate.

Mrs. F. Does he relent? [Aside.]

Selby. That ceremony past, we give the day
 To unabated sport. And, in requital
 Of certain stories and quaint allegories,
 Which my rare Widow hath been telling to me
 To raise my morning mirth, if she will lend
 Her patient hearing, I will here recite
 A Parable; and, the more to suit her taste,
 The scene is laid in the East.

Mrs. F. I long to hear it.
 Some tale, to fit his wife. [Aside.]

Kath. Now, comes my TRIAL.

Lucy. 'The hour of your deliverance is at hand,
If I presage right. Bear up, gentlest sister.

Selby. "The Sultan Haroun"—Stay—O now I have it—

"The Caliph Haroun in his orchards had
A fruit-tree, bearing such delicious fruits,
That he reserved them for his proper gust ;
And through the Palace it was Death proclaim'd
To any one that should purloin the same."

Mrs. F. A heavy penance for so light a fault —

Selby. Pray you, be silent, else you put me out.
"A crafty page, that for advantage watch'd,
Detected in the act a brother page,
Of his own years, that was his bosom friend ;
And thenceforth he became that other's lord,
And like a tyrant he demean'd himself,
Laid forced exactions on his fellow's purse ;
And when that poor means fail'd, held o'er his head
Threats of impending death in hideous forms ;
Till the small culprit on his nightly couch
Dream'd of strange pains, and felt his body writhe
In tortuous pangs around the impaling stake."

Mrs. F. I like not this beginning—

Selby. Pray you, attend.

"The Secret, like a night-hag, rid his sleeps,
And took the youthful pleasures from his days,
And chased the youthful smoothness from his brow,
That from a rose-cheek'd boy he waned and waned
To a pale skeleton of what he was ;
And would have died but for one lucky chance."

Kath. Oh !

Mrs. F. Your wife—she faints—some cordial—smell to this.

Selby. Stand off. My sister best will do that office.

Mrs F. Are all his tempting speeches come to this? [Aside.]

Selby. What ail'd my wife?

Kath. A warning faintness, sir,
Seized on my spirits, when you came to where
You said "a lucky chance." I am better now:
Please you go on.

Selby. The sequel shall be brief.

Kath. But brief or long, I feel my fate hangs on it. [Aside.]

Selby. "One morn the Caliph, in a covert hid
Close by an arbour where the two boys talk'd,
(As oft, we read, that Eastern sovereigns
Would play the eaves-dropper, to learn the truth,
Imperfectly received from mouths of slaves,
O'erheard their dialogue; and heard enough
To judge aright the cause, and know his cue.
The following day a Cadi was despatch'd
To summon both before the judgment-seat;
The lickerish culprit, almost dead with fear,
And the informing friend, who readily,
Fired with fair promises of large reward,
And Caliph's love, the hateful truth disclosed."

Mrs. F. What did the Caliph do to the offending boy,
That had so grossly err'd?

Selby. His sceptred hand
He forth in token of forgiveness stretch'd,
And clapp'd his cheeks, and courted him with gifts,
And he became once more his favourite page.

Mrs. F. But for that other—

Selby. He dismiss'd him straight,
From dreams of grandeur, and of Caliph's love,
To the bare cottage on the withering moor,
Where friends, turn'd fiends, and hollow confidants,

And widows, hide, who in a husband's ear
 Pour baneful truths, but tell not all the truth ;
 And told him not that Robin Halford died
 Some moons before his marriage-bells were rung.
 Too near dishonour hast thou trod, dear wife,
 And on a dangerous cast our fates were set ;
 But Heav'n, that will'd our wedlock to be blest,
 Hath interposed to save it gracious too.
 Your penance is—to dress your cheek in smiles,
 And to be once again my merry Kate.—
 Sister, your hand.

Your wager won makes me a happy man,
 Though poorer, Heav'n knows, by a thousand pounds.
 The sky clears up after a dubious day.
 Widow, your hand. I read a penitence
 In this dejected brow ; and in this shame
 Your fault is buried. You shall in with us.
 And, if it please you, taste our nuptial fare :
 For, till this moment, I can joyful say,
 Was never truly Selby's Wedding Day.

THE WITCH.

A DRAMATIC SKETCH OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

CHARACTERS.

OLD SERVANT in the Family of SIR FRANCIS FAIRFORD. STRANGER.

Servant. ONE summer night Sir Francis, as it chanced,
Was pacing to and fro in the avenue
That westward fronts our house,
Among those aged oaks, said to have been planted
Three hundred years ago,
By a neighb'ring prior of the Fairford name.
Being o'ertask'd in thought, he heeded not
The importunate suit of one who stood by the gate,
And begg'd an alms.
Some say he shoved her rudely from the gate
With angry chiding; but I can never think
(Our master's nature hath a sweetness in it)
That he could use a woman, an old woman,
With such discourtesy; but he refused her—
And better had he met a lion in his path
Than that old woman that night;
For she was one who practised the black arts,
And served the devil, being since burnt for witchcraft.

She look'd at him as one that meant to blast him,
 And with a frightful noise,
 ('Twas partly like a woman's voice,
 And partly like the hissing of a snake,)
 She nothing said but this (Sir Francis told the words):—

A mischief, mischief, mischief,
 And a nine-times killing curse,
 By day and by night, to the caitiff wight,
 Who shakes the poor like snakes from his door,
 And shuts up the womb of his purse.

And still she cried—

A mischief,
 And a nine-fold withering curse:
 For that shall come to thee that will undo thee,
 Both all that thou fearest and worse.

So saying, she departed,
 Leaving Sir Francis like a man, beneath
 Whose feet a scaffolding was suddenly falling ;
 So he described it.

Stranger. A terrible curse ! What follow'd ?

Servant. Nothing immediate, but some two months after,

Young Philip Fairford suddenly fell sick,
 And none could tell what ail'd him ; for he lay,
 And pined, and pined, till all his hair fell off,
 And he, that was full-flesh'd, became as thin
 As a two-months' babe that has been starved in the nursing.

And sure I think

He bore his death-wound like a little child ;
 With such rare sweetness of dumb melancholy
 He strove to clothe his agony in smiles,
 Which he would force up in his poor pale cheeks,

Like ill-time guests that had no proper dwelling
there ;

And when they ask'd him his complaint, he laid
His hand upon his heart to show the place,
Where Susan came to him a-nights, he said,
And prick'd him with a pin.—

And thereupon Sir Francis call'd to mind
The beggar-witch that stood by the gateway
And begg'd an alms.

Stranger. But, did the witch confess ?

Servant. All this and more at her death.

Stranger. I do not love to credit tales of magic.
Heaven's music, which is Order, seems unstrung,
And this brave world
(The mystery of God) unbeautified, Disorder'd, marr'd where such strange things are acted.

SONNETS.

I.

TO MISS KELLY.

You are not, Kelly, of the common strain,
That stoop their pride and female honour down
To please that many-headed beast, the Town,
And vend their lavish smiles and tricks for gain.
By fortune thrown amid the actors' train,
You keep your native dignity of thought;
The plaudits that attend you come unsought,
As tributes due unto your natural vein.
Your tears have passion in them, and a grace
Of genuine freshness, which our hearts avow;
Your smiles are winds whose ways we cannot trace
That vanish and return we know not how—
And please the better from a pensive face,
A thoughtful eye, and a reflecting brow.

II.

ON THE SIGHT OF SWANS IN KENSINGTON GARDEN.

QUEEN-BIRD that sittest on thy shining nest,
And thy young cygnets without sorrow hatchest,
And thou, thou other royal bird, that watchest
Lest the white mother wandering feet molest :
Shrined are your offspring in a crystal cradle,
Brighter than Helen's ere she yet had burst
Her shelly prison. They shall be born at first Strong, active, graceful, perfect, swan-like, able
To tread the land or waters with security.
Unlike poor human births, conceived in sin,
In grief brought forth, both outwardly and in Confessing weakness, error, and impurity.
Did heavenly creatures own succession's line,
The births of heaven, like to yours, would shine.

III.

WAS it some sweet device of Faery
That mock'd my steps with many a lonely glade,
And fancied wanderings with a fair-hair'd maid ?
Have these things been ? or what rare witchery,
Impregning with delights the charmèd air,
Enlighted up the semblance of a smile
In those fine eyes ? methought they spake the while Soft soothing things, which might enforce despair
To drop the murdering knife, and let go by

His foul resolve. And does the lonely glade
 Still court the footsteps of the fair-hair'd maid ?
 Still in her locks the gales of Summer sigh ?
 While I forlorn do wander, reckless where,
 And 'mid my wanderings meet no Anna there.

IV.

METHINKS how dainty sweet it were, reclined
 Beneath the vast outstretching branches high
 Of some old wood, in careless sort to lie,
 Nor of the busier scenes we left behind
 Aught envying. And, O Anna ! mild-eyed maid !
 Beloved ! I were well content to play
 With thy free tresses all a Summer's day,
 Losing the time beneath the greenwood shade.
 Or we might sit and tell some tender tale
 Of faithful vows repaid by cruel scorn,
 A tale of true love, or of friend forgot ;
 And I would teach thee, lady, how to rail
 In gentle sort, on those who practise not
 Or love or pity, though of woman born.

V.

WHEN last I roved these winding wood-walks green,
 Green winding walks, and shady pathways sweet,
 Oft-times would Anna seek the silent scene,
 Shrouding her beauties in the lone retreat.

No more I hear her footsteps in the shade .
 Her image only in these pleasant ways
 Meets me self-wandering, where in happier days
 I held free converse with the fair-hair'd maid.
 I pass'd the little cottage which she loved,
 The cottage which did once my all contain ;
 It spake of days which ne'er must come again, .
 Spake to my heart, and much my heart was moved.
 " Now fair befall thee, gentle maid ! " said I,
 And from the cottage turn'd me with a sigh.

VI.

THE FAMILY NAME.

WHAT reason first imposed thee, gentle name,
 Name that my father bore, and his sire's sire,
 Without reproach ? we trace our stream no higher ;
 And I, a childless man, may end the same.
 Perchance some shepherd on Lincolnian plains,
 In manners guileless as his own sweet flocks,
 Received thee first amid the merry mocks
 And arch allusions of his fellow swains.
 Perchance from Salem's holier fields return'd,
 With glory gotten on the heads abhorr'd
 Of faithless Saracens, some martial lord
 Took His meek title, in whose zeal he burn'd.
 Whate'er the fount whence thy beginnings came,
 No deed of mine shall shame thee, gentle name.

VII.

IF from my lips some angry accents fell,
 Peevish complaint, or harsh reproof unkind,
 'Twas but the error of a sickly mind
 And troubled thoughts, clouding the purer well.
 And waters clear, of Reason ; and for me
 Let this my verse the poor atonement be—
 My verse, which thou to praise wert ever inclined Too highly, and with a partial eye to see
 No blemish. Thou to me didst ever show
 Kindest affection ; and would oft-times lend
 An ear to the desponding love-sick lay,
 Weeping my sorrows with me, who repay
 But ill the mighty debt of love I owe,
 Mary, to thee, my sister and my friend.

VIII.

A TIMID grace sits trembling in her eye,
 As loth to meet the rudeness of men's sight,
 Yet shedding a delicious lunar light,
 That steeps in kind oblivious ecstasy
 The care-crazed mind, like some still melody :
 Speaking most plain the thoughts which do possess
 Her gentle sprite ; peace, and meek quietness,
 And innocent loves, and maiden purity :
 A look whereof might heal the cruel smart
 Of changèd friends, or Fortune's wrongs unkind :
 Might to sweet deeds of mercy move the heart
 Of him who hates his brethren of mankind.
 Turn'd are those lights from me, who fondly yet
 Past joys, vain loves, and buried hopes regret.

IX.

TO JOHN LAMB, ESQ., OF THE SOUTH-SEA HOUSE.

JOHN, you were figuring in the gay career
 Of blooming manhood with a young man's joy,
 When I was yet a little peevish boy—
 Though time has made the difference disappear
 Betwixt our ages, which then seem'd so great—
 And still by rightful custom you retain
 Much of the old authoritative strain,
 And keep the elder brother up in state.
 O you do well in this ! 'Tis man's worst deed
 To let the "things that have been" run to waste,
 And in the unmeaning present sink the past :
 In whose dim glass even now I faintly read
 Old buried forms, and faces long ago,
 Which you, and I, and one more, only know.

X.

O I could laugh to hear the midnight wind,
 That, rushing on its way with careless sweep,
 Scatters the ocean waves ! And I could weep
 Like to a child. For now to my raised mind
 On wings of winds comes wild-eyed Phantasy.
 And her rude visions give severe delight.
 O wingèd bark ! how swift along the night
 Pass'd thy proud keel ! nor shall I let go by Lightly of that drear hour the memory,

When wet and chilly on thy deck I stood,
 Unbonneted, and gazed upon the flood,
 Even till it seem'd a pleasant thing to die,—
 To be resolv'd into th' elemental wave.
 Or take my portion with the winds that rave.

XI.

WE were two pretty babes, the youngest she,
 The youngest, and the loveliest far, I ween,
 And INNOCENCE her name. The time has been,
 We two did love each other's company;
 Time was, we two have wept to have been apart.
 But when by show of seeming good beguiled,
 I left the garb and manners of a child,
 And my first love for man's society,
 Defiling with the world my virgin heart—
 My loved companion dropp'd a tear, and fled,
 And hid in deepest shades her awful head.
 Beloved, who shall tell me where thou art—
 In what delicious Eden to be found—
 That I may seek thee the wide world around!

XII.

HARMONY IN UNLIKENESS.

By Enfield lanes, and Winchmore's verdant hill,
 Two lovely damsels cheer my lonely walk:
 The fair Maria, as a vestal, still;
 And Emma brown, exuberant in talk.

With soft and Lady speech the first applies
 The mild correctives that to grace belong
 To her redundant friend, who her defies
 With jest, and mad discourse, and bursts of song.
 O differing Pair, yet sweetly thus agreeing,
 What music from your happy discord rises,
 While your companion hearing each, and seeing.
 Nor this, nor that, but both together, prizes ;
 This lesson teaching, which our souls may strike,
 That harmonies may be in things unlike !

XIII.

WRITTEN AT CAMBRIDGE.

I WAS not train'd in Academic bowers,
 And to those learned streams I nothing owe
 Which copious from those twin fair founts do flow ;
 Mine have been any thing but studious hours.
 Yet can I fancy, wandering 'mid thy towers,
 Myself a nursling, Granta, of thy lap ;
 My brow seems tightening with the Doctor's cap,
 And I walk gowned ; feel unusual powers.
 Strange forms of logic clothe my admiring speech,
 Old Ramus' ghost is busy at my brain ;
 And my skull teems with notions infinite.
 Be still, ye reeds of Camus, while I teach Truths, which transcend the searching Schoolmen's vein,
 And half had stagger'd that stout Stagirite !

XIV.

TO A CELEBRATED FEMALE PERFORMER
IN THE "BLIND BOY."

RARE artist ! who with half thy tools, or none,
 Canst execute with ease thy curious art,
 And press thy powerful'st meanings on the heart,
 Unaided by the eye, expression's throne !
 While each blind sense, intelligential grown
 Beyond its sphere, performs the effect of sight :
 Those orbs alone, wanting their proper might,
 All motionless and silent seem to moan
 The unseemly negligence of Nature's hand,
 That left them so forlorn. What praise is thine,
 O mistress of the passions, artist fine,
 Who dost our souls against our sense command,
 Plucking the horror from a sightless face,
 Lending to blank deformity a grace !

XV.

WORK.

WHO first invented work, and bound the free
 And hoiyday-rejoicing spirit down
 To the ever-haunting importunity
 Of business in the green fields, and the town--
 To plough, loom, anvil, spade—and (oh most sad !)
 To that dry drudgery at the desk's dead wood ?
 Who but the Being unblest, alien from good,
 Sabbathless Satan ! he who his unglad

Task ever plies 'mid rotatory burnings,
 That round and round incalculably reel—
 For wrath divine hath made him like a wheel—
 In that red realm from which are no returnings :
 Where toiling and turmoiling ever and aye
 He, and his thoughts, keep pensive working-day.

 XVI.

LEISURE.

THEY talk of Time, and of Time's galling yoke,
 That like a mill-stone on man's mind doth press,
 Which only works and business can redress :
 Of divine Leisure such foul lies are spoke,
 Wounding her fair gifts with calumnious stroke.
 But might I, fed with silent meditation,
 Assoiled live from that fiend Occupation,
Improbus Labor, which my spirit hath broke,
 I'd drink of Time's rich cup, and never surfeit ;—
 Fling in more days than went to make the gem
 That crown'd the white top of Methusalem :
 Yea on my weak neck take, and never forfeit.
 Like Atlas bearing up the dainty sky,
 The heav'n-sweet burthen of eternity.

DEUS NOBIS HÆC OTIA FECIT.

XVII.

TO SAMUEL ROGERS, ESQ.

ROGERS, of all the men that I have known
 But slightly, who have died, your Brother's loss
 Touch'd me most sensibly. There came across
 My mind an image of the cordial tone
 Of your fraternal meetings, where a guest
 I more than once have sat: and grieve to think,
 That of that threefold cord one precious link
 By Death's rude hand is sever'd from the rest.
 Of our old gentry he appear'd a stem—
 A Magistrate who, while the evil-doer
 He kept in terror, could respect the Poor,
 And not for every trifle harass them,
 As some, divine and laic, too oft do.
 This man's a private loss, and public too.

XVIII.

THE GIPSY'S MALISON.

“ Suck, baby, suck ! mother's love grows by giving ;
 Drain the sweet founts that only thrive by wasting ;
 Black manhood comes, when riotous guilty living
 Hands thee the cup that shall be death in tasting.

Kiss, baby, kiss ! mother's lips shine by kisses ;
 Choke the warm breath that else would fall in blessings ;
 Black manhood comes, when turbulent guilty blisses
 Tend thee the kiss that poisons 'mid caressings.

Hang, baby, nang ! mother's love loves such forces,
 Strain the fond neck that bends still to thy clinging ;
 Black manhood comes, when violent lawless courses
 Leave thee a spectacle in rude air swinging."

So sang a wither'd Beldam energetical,
 And bann'd the ungiving door with lips prophetical.

XIX.

TO MARTIN CHARLES BURNEY.

(A DEDICATION.)

FORGIVE me, BURNEY, if to thee these late
 And hasty products of a critic pen,
 Thyself no common judge of books and men,
 In feeling of thy worth I dedicate.
 My verse was offer'd to an older friend :
 The humbler prose has fallen to thy share :
 Nor could I miss the occasion to declare,
 What spoken in thy presence must offend.
 That, set aside some few caprices wild,
 Those humorous clouds, that flit o'er brightest days,
 In all my threadings of this worldly maze,
 (And I have watch'd thee almost from a child,)
 Free from self-seeking, envy, low design,
 I have not found a whiter soul than thine.

XX.

TO MRS. SIDDONS.

As when a child on some long Winter's night
 Affrighted, clinging to its grandame's knees,
 With eager wondering and perturb'd delight
 Listens strange tales of fearful dark decrees
 Mutter'd to wretch by necromantic spell;
 Or of those hags, who, at the witching time
 Of murky midnight, ride the air sublime,
 And mingle foul embrace with fiends of hell,
 Cold horror drinks its blood! anon the tear
 More gentle starts, to hear the beldame tell
 Of pretty babes that lov'd each other dear,
 Murder'd by cruel Uncle's mandate fell:
 Ev'n such the shiv'ring joys thy tones impart,
 Ev'n so thou Siddons meltest my sad heart.

XXI.

TO MARY LAMB.

FRIEND of my earliest years and childish days,
 My joys, my sorrows, thou with me hast shared,
 Companion dear; and we alike have fared
 (Poor pilgrims we) through life's unequal ways.
 It were unwisely done, should we refuse
 To cheer our path, as featly as we may,
 Our lonely path to cheer, as travellers use,
 With merry song, quaint tale, or roundelay;
 And we will sometimes talk past troubles o'er,
 Of mercies shown, and all our sickness healed,
 And in his judgments God remembering love.
 And we will learn to praise God evermore,
 For those "glad tidings of great joy" revealed
 By that sooth Messenger sent from above.

M^{rs} Siddons, after Downman

BLANK VERSE.

CHILDHOOD.

IN my poor mind it is most sweet to muse
Upon the days gone by ; to act in thought
Past seasons o'er, and be again a child ;
To sit in fancy on the turf-clad slope,
Down which the child would roll ; to pluck gay flowers,
Make posies in the sun, which the child's hand
(Childhood offended soon, soon reconciled,)
Would throw away, and straight take up again,
Then fling them to the winds, and o'er the lawn
Bound with so playful and so light a foot,
That the press'd daisy scarce declined her head.

THE GRANDAME.

ON the green hill top
Hard by the house of prayer, a modest roof,
And not distinguish'd from its neighbour-barn,
Save by a slender-tapering length of spire,
The Grandame sleeps. A plain stone barely tells

The name and date to the chance passenger.
 For lowly born was she, and long had eat,
 Well-earn'd, the bread of service: hers was else
 A mountain spirit, one that entertain'd
 Scorn of base action, deed dishonourable,
 Or aught unseemly. I remember well
 Her reverend image; I remember, too,
 With what a zeal she served her master's house;
 And how the prattling tongue of garrulous age
 Delighted to recount the oft-told tale
 Or anecdote domestic. Wise she was,
 And wondrous skill'd in genealogies,
 And could in apt and voluble terms discourse
 Of births, of titles, and alliances;
 Of marriages, and intermarriages;
 Relationship remote, or near of kin;
 Of friends offended, family disgraced—
 Maiden high-born, but wayward, disobeying
 Parental strict injunction, and regardless
 Of unmix'd blood, and ancestry remote,
 Stooping to wed with one of low degree.
 But these are not thy praises; and I wrong
 Thy honour'd memory, recording chiefly
 Things light or trivial. Better 'twere to tell
 How with a nobler zeal, and warmer love,
 She served her heavenly Master. I have seen
 That reverend form bent down with age and pain,
 And rankling malady. Yet not for this Ceased she to praise her Maker, or withdraw
 Her trust in him, her faith, an humble hope—
 So meekly had she learn'd to bear her cross—
 For she had studied patience in the school
 Of Christ; much comfort she had thence derived,
 And was a follower of the NAZARENE.

THE SABBATH BELLS.

THE cheerful Sabbath bells, wherever heard,
 Strike pleasant on the sense, most like the voice
 Of one, who from the far-off hills proclaims
 Tidings of good to Zion : chiefly when
 Their piercing tones fall sudden on the ear
 Of the contemplant, solitary man,
 Whom thoughts abstruse or high have chanced to lure
 Forth from the walks of men, revolving oft,
 And oft again, hard matter, which eludes
 And baffles his pursuit : thought-sick and tired
 Of controversy, where no end appears,
 No clue to his research, the lonely man
 Half wishes for society again.
 Him, thus engaged, the Sabbath bells salute
Sudden ! his heart awakes, his ears drink in
 The cheering music ; his relenting soul
 Yearns after all the joys of social life,
 And softens with the love of human kind.

FANCY EMPLOYED ON DIVINE SUBJECTS.

THE truant Fancy was a wanderer ever,
 A lone enthusiast maid. She loves to walk
 In the bright visions of empyreal light,
 By the green pastures, and the fragrant meads,
 Where the perpetual flowers of Eden blow ;

By crystal streams, and by the living waters,
 Along whose margin grows the wondrous tree
 Whose leaves shall heal the nations ; underneath
 Whose holy shade a refuge shall be found
 From pain and want, and all the ills that wait
 On mortal life, from sin and death for ever.

COMPOSED AT MIDNIGHT.

FROM broken visions of perturbèd rest
 I wake, and start, and fear to sleep again.
 How total a privation of all sounds,
 Sights, and familiar objects, man, bird, beast,
 Herb, tree, or flower, and prodigal light of heaven !
 'Twere some relief to catch the drowsy cry
 Of the mechanic watchman, or the noise
 Of revel reeling home from midnight cups.
 Those are the moanings of the dying man,
 Who lies in the upper chamber ; restless moans,
 And interrupted only by a cough
 Consumptive, torturing the wasted lungs.
 So in the bitterness of death he lies,
 And waits in anguish for the morning's light.
 What can that do for him, or what restore ?
 Short taste, faint sense, affecting notices,
 And little images of pleasures past,
 Of health, and active life—health not yet slain,
 Nor the other grace of life, a good name, sold
 For sin's black wages. On his tedious bed

He writhes, and turns him from the accusing light,
 And finds no comfort in the sun, but says
 "When night comes I shall get a little rest."
 Some few groans more, death comes, and there an end.

'Tis darkness and conjecture all beyond ;
 Weak Nature fears, though Charity must hope,
 And Fancy, most licentious on such themes
 Where decent reverence well had kept her mute,
 Hath o'er-stock'd hell with devils, and brought down
 By her enormous fablings and mad lies,
 Discredit on the Gospel's serious truths
 And salutary fears. The man of parts,
 Poet, or prose declaimer, on his couch
 Lolling, like one indifferent, fabricates
 A heaven of gold, where he, and such as he,
 Their heads encompassèd with crowns, their heels
 With fine wings garlanded, shall tread the stars
 Beneath their feet, heaven's pavement, far removed
 From damnèd spirits, and the torturing cries
 Of men, his brethren, fashion'd of the earth,
 As he was, nourish'd with the self-same bread,
 Belike his kindred or companions once—
 Through everlasting ages now divorced,
 In chains and savage torments to repent
 Short years of folly on earth. Their groans unheard
 In heav'n, the saint nor pity feels, nor care,
 For those thus sentenced—pity might disturb
 The delicate sense and most divine repose
 Of spirits angelical. Blessed be God,
 The measure of his judgments is not fix'd
 By man's erroneous standard. He discerns
 No such inordinate difference and vast Betwixt the sinner and the saint, to doom

Such disproportion'd fates. Compared with him,
No man on earth is holy call'd: they best
Stand in his sight approved, who at his feet
Their little crowns of virtue cast, and yield
To him of his own works the praise, his due.

ON HIS MOTHER.

THOU should'st have longer lived, and to the grave
Have peacefully gone down in full old age:
Thy children would have tended thy grey hairs.
We might have sat, as we have often done,
By our fireside and talked whole nights away,
Old times, old friends, and old events recalling,
With many a circumstance of trivial note,
To memory dear, and of importance grown.
How shall we tell them in a stranger's ear!

A wayward son, oft-times I was to thee;
And yet in all our little bickerings,
Domestic jars, there was I know not what,
Of tender feeling, that were ill exchanged
For this world's chilling friendships, and their smiles
Familiar whom the heart calls stranger still.
A heavy lot hath he, most wretched man,
Who lives the last of all his family;

He looks around him, and his eye discerns
 The face of the stranger ; and his heart is sick.
 Man of the world, what canst thou do for him ?
 Wealth is a burden which he could not bear,
 Mirth a strange crime, the which he dares not act,
 And generous wines no cordial to his soul.
 For wounds like his, Christ is the only cure.
 Go, preach thou to him of a world to come,
 Where friends shall meet and know each other's face :
 Say less than this, and say it to the winds.

WRITTEN ON THE DAY OF MY AUNT'S FUNERAL.

(FEBRUARY, 1797.)

THOU too art dead, . . . ! very kind
 Hast thou been to me in my childish days,
 Thou best good creature. I have not forgot
 How thou didst love thy Charles, when he was yet
 A prating school-boy : I have not forgot
 The busy joy on that important day,
 When, child-like, the poor wanderer was content
 To leave the bosom of parental love,
 His childhood's play-place, and his early home,
 For the rude fosterings of a stranger's hand,
 Hard uncouth tasks, and school-boy's scanty fare.
 How did thine eye peruse him round and round,
 And hardly knew him in his yellow coats,
 Red leathern belt, and gown of russet blue !
 Farewell, good aunt !
 Go thou, and occupy the same grave-bed
 Where the dead mother lies.

Oh my dear mother, oh thou dear dead saint !
 Where's now that placid face, where oft hath sat
 A mother's smile, to think her son should thrive
 In this bad world, when she was dead and gone :
 And where a tear hath sat (take shame, O son !)
 When that same child 'has proved himself unkind.
 One parent yet is left—a wretched thing,
 A sad survivor of his buried wife,
 A palsy-smitten, childish, old, old man,
 A semblance most forlorn of what he was,
 A merry cheerful man. A merrier man,
 A man more apt to frame matter for mirth,
 Mad jokes, and antics for a Christmas eve ;
 Making life social, and the laggard time
 To move on nimbly, never yet did cheer
 The little circle of domestic friends.

WRITTEN A TWELVEMONTH AFTER THE EVENTS.

(SEPTEMBER, 1797.)

(“ Friday next, Coleridge, is the day on which my Mother died.”)

ALAS ! how am I changed ! Where be the tears,
 The sobs, and forced suspensions of the breath,
 And all the dull desertions of the heart,
 With which I hung o'er my dead mother's corse ?
 Where be the blest subsidings of the storm,
 Within the sweet resignedness of hope
 Drawn heavenward, and strength of filial love,
 In which I bow'd me to my Father's will ?

My God, and my Redeemer ! keep not thou
 My soul in brute and sensual thanklessness
 Seal'd up ; oblivious ever of that dear grace
 And health restored to my long-loved friend, Long-loved, and worthy known. Thou didst not leave

Her soul in death ! O leave not now, my Lord,
 Thy servants in far worse, in spiritual death !
 And darkness blacker than those feared shadows
 Of the valley all must tread. Lend us thy balsams,
 Thou dear Physician of the sin-sick soul,
 And heal our cleansed bosoms of the wounds
 With which the world has pierced us thro' and thro'.
 Give us new flesh, new birth. Elect of heaven
 May we become ; in thine election sure
 Contain'd, and to one purpose stedfast drawn,
 Our soul's salvation !

Thou, and I, dear friend,

With filial recognition sweet, shall know
 One day the face of our dear mother in heaven ;
 And her remember'd looks of love shall greet
 With answering looks of love ; her placid smiles
 Meet with a smile as placid, and her hand
 With drops of fondness wet, nor fear repulse.
 Be witness for me, Lord, I do not ask
 Those days of vanity to return again,
 (Nor fitting me to ask, nor thee to give).
 Vain loves and wand'rings with a fair-haired maid
 (Child of the dust as I am) who so long
 My foolish heart steeped in idolatry,
 And creature loves. Forgive it, O my Maker !
 If in a mood of grief I sin almost
 In sometimes brooding on the days long past,
 And from the grave of time wishing them back,

Days of a mother's fondness to her child,
Her little one.

O where be now those sports,
And infant play-games? where the joyous troops
Of children, and the haunts I do so love?
O my companions, O ye lovèd names
Of friend or playmate dear; gone are ye now;
Gone diverse ways; to honour and credit some,
And some, I fear, to ignominy and shame!
I only am left, with unavailing grief,
To mourn one parent dead, and see one live
Of all life's joys bereft and desolate:
Am left with a few friends, and one, above
The rest found faithful in a length of years,
Contented as I may, to bear me on
To the not unpeaceful evening of a day
Made black by morning storms!

WRITTEN ON CHRISTMAS DAY, 1797.

I AM a widow'd thing, now thou art gone;
Now thou art gone, my own familiar friend,
Companion, sister, help-mate, counsellor!
Alas! that honour'd mind, whose sweet reproof
And meekest wisdom in times past have smooth'd
The unfilial harshness of my foolish speech,
And made me loving to my parents old,
(Why is this so, ah, God! why is this so?)
That honour'd mind become a fearful blank,
Her senses lock'd up, and herself kept out

From human sight or converse, while so many
 Of the foolish sort are left to roam at large,
 Doing all acts of folly, and sin, and shame?
 Thy paths are mystery!

Yet I will not think,
 Sweet friend, but we shall one day meet, and live
 In quietness, and die so fearing God.
 Or if not, and these false suggestions be
 A fit of the weak nature, loth to part
 With what it loved so long, and held so dear;
 If thou art to be taken, and I left
 (More sinning, yet unpunish'd save in thee),
 It is the will of God, and we are clay
 In the potter's hands; and, at the worst, are made
 From absolute nothing, vessels of disgrace,
 Till, his most righteous purpose wrought in us,
 Our purified spirits find their perfect rest.

AFTER A VISIT TO LLOYD.

A STRANGER, and alone, I pass those scenes
 We past so late together; and my heart
 Felt something like desertion, as I look'd
 Around me, and the pleasant voice of friend
 Was absent, and the cordial look was there
 No more to smile on me. I thought on Lloyd—
 All he had been to me! And now I go
 Again to mingle with a world impure;
 With men who make a mock of holy things,
 Mistaken, and on man's best hope think scorn.
 The world does much to warp the heart of man;
 And I may sometimes join its idiot laugh:

Of this I now complain not. Deal with me,
 Omniscient Father, as Thou judgest best,
 And in Thy season, soften Thou my heart.
 I pray not for myself: I pray for him
 Whose soul is sore perplexed. Shine Thou on him,
 Father of lights! and in the difficult paths
 Make plain his way before him: his own thoughts
 May he not think—his own ends not pursue—
 So shall he best perform Thy will on earth.
 Greatest and Best, Thy will be ever ours!

TO THE POET COWPER, 1796.

COWPER, I thank my God that thou art heal'd!
 Thine was the sorest malady of all:
 And I am sad to think that it should light
 Upon the worthy head! But thou art heal'd,
 And thou art still, we trust, the destined man,
 Born to reanimate the lyre, whose chords
 Have slumber'd, and have idle lain so long;
 To the immortal sounding of whose strings
 Did Milton frame the stately-pacèd verse;
 Among whose verses with light finger playing,
 Our elder bard, Spenser, a gentle name,
 The lady Muses' dearest darling child,
 Elicited the deffest tunes yet heard
 In hall or bower, taking the delicate ear
 Of Sidney and his peerless Maiden Queen.

Thou, then, take up the mighty epic strain,
Cowper, of England's Bards, the wisest and the best.

LIVING WITHOUT GOD IN THE WORLD.

MYSTERY of God! thou brave and beauteous world,
Made fair with light and shade and stars, and flowers,
Made fearful and august with woods and rocks ;
Jagg'd precipice, black mountain, sea in storms,
Sun, over all, that no co-rival owns,
But thro' Heaven's pavement rides as in despite
Or mockery of the littleness of man !
I see a mighty arm, by man unseen,
Resistless, not to be controll'd, that guides,
In solitude of unshared energies,
All these thy ceaseless miracles, O world !
Arm of the world, I view thee, and I muse
On man, who, trusting in his mortal strength,
Leans on a shadowy staff, a staff of dreams.
We consecrate our total hopes and fears
To idols, flesh and blood, our love (heaven's due),
Our praise and admiration ; praise bestow'd
By man on man, and acts of worship done
To a kindred nature, certes do reflect
Some portion of the glory and rays oblique
Upon the politic worshipper,—so man
Extracts a pride from his humility.
Some braver spirits of the modern stamp
Affect a God-head nearer : these talk loud
Of mind, and independent intellect,
Of energies omnipotent in man ;
And man of his own fate artificer ;
Yea of his own life lord, and of the days
Of his abode on earth, when time shall be.
That life immortal shall become an art.

Or Death, by chymic practices deceived,
Forego the scent, which for six thousand years
Like a good hound he has followed, or at length
More manners learning, and a decent sense
And reverence of a philosophic world,
Relent, and leave to prey on carcasses.
But these are fancies of a few : the rest,
Atheists, or Deists only in the name,
By word or deed deny a God. They eat
Their daily bread, and draw the breath of heaven
Without or thought or thanks : heaven's roof to them
Is but a painted ceiling hung with lamps,
No more, that lights them to their purposes.
They wander " loose about," they nothing see,
Themselves except, and creatures like themselves,
Short-lived, short-sighted, impotent to save.
So on their dissolute spirits, soon or late,
Destruction cometh, " like an armèd man,"
Or like a dream of murder in the night,
Withering their mortal faculties, and breaking
The bones of all their pride.

ALBUM VERSES.

DEDICATION.

TO THE PUBLISHER.

DEAR MOXON,—I do not know to whom a Dedication of these Trifles is more properly due than to yourself. You suggested the printing of them. You were desirous of exhibiting a specimen of the manner in which Publications, intrusted to your future care, would appear. With more propriety, perhaps, the “Christmas,” or some other of your own simple, unpretending Compositions, might have served this purpose. But I forget—you have bid a long adieu to the Muses. I had on my hands sundry Copies of Verses written for Albums—

Those books kept by modern young Ladies for show,
Of which their plain Grandmothers nothing did know—

or otherwise floating about in Periodicals; which you have chosen in this manner to embody. I feel little interest in their publication. They are simply—Advertisement Verses.

It is not for me, nor you, to allude in public to the kindness of our honoured Friend, under whose auspices you are become a Publisher. May that fine-minded Veteran in Verse enjoy life long enough to see his patronage justified! I venture to predict that your habits of industry, and your cheerful spirit, will carry you through the world.

I am, Dear Moxon, your Friend and sincere Well-Wisher,

CHARLES LAMB.

Enfield, 1st June, 1839.

ALBUM VERSES.

IN THE AUTOGRAPH OF MRS. SERGEANT W——.

HAD I a power, Lady, to my will,
 You should not want Hand Writings. I would fill
 Your leaves with Autographs—resplendent names
 Of Knights and Squires of old, and courtly Dames, Kings, Emperors, Popes. Next under these should stand
 The hands of famous Lawyers—a grave band—
 Who in their Courts of Law or Equity
 Have best upheld Freedom and Property.
 These should moot cases in your book, and vie
 To show their reading and their Sergeantry.
 But I have none of these; nor can I send
 The notes by Bullen to her Tyrant penn'd
 In her authentic hand; nor in soft hours
 Lines writ by Rosamund in Clifford's bowers.
 The lack of curious Signature I moan,
 And want the courage to subscribe my own.

TO DORA W——.

ON BEING ASKED BY HER FATHER TO WRITE IN HER ALBUM.

AN Album is a Banquet : from the store,
In his intelligential Orchard growing,
Your Sire might heap your board to overflowing :
One shaking of the Tree—'twould ask no more
To set a salad forth, more rich than that
Which Evelyn in his princely cookery fancied :
Or that more rare, by Eve's neat hands enhanced,
Where, a pleased guest, the Angelic Virtue sat.
But like the all-grasping Founder of the Feast,
Whom Nathan to the sinning king did tax,
From his less wealthy neighbours he exacts ;
Spares his own flocks, and takes the poor man's beast.
Obedient to his bidding, lo, I am,
A zealous, meek, contributory LAMB.

IN THE ALBUM OF A CLERGYMAN'S LADY.

AN Album is a Garden, not for show Planted, but use ; where wholesome herbs should grow ;
A Cabinet of curious porcelain, where

No fancy enters, but what's rich or rare ;
 A Chapel, where mere ornamental things
 Are pure as crowns of saints, or angels' wings ;
 A List of living friends ; a holier Room
 For names of some since mouldering in the tomb,
 Whose blooming memories life's cold laws survive ;
 And, dead elsewhere, they here yet speak and live.
 Such, and so tender, should an Album be ;
 And, Lady, such I wish this book to thee.

IN THE ALBUM OF EDITH S—.

IN Christian world MARY the garland wears.
 REBECCA sweetens on a Hebrew's ear ;
 Quakers for pure PRISCILLA are more clear ;
 And the light Gaul by amorous NINON swears.
 Among the lesser lights how LUCY shines !
 What air of fragrance ROSAMOND throws round !
 How like a hymn doth sweet CECILIA sound !
 Of MARTHAS, and of ABIGAILS, few lines
 Have bragg'd in verse. Of coarsest household stuff
 Should homely JOAN be fashion'd. But can
 You BARBARA resist, or MARIAN ?
 And is not CLARE for love excuse enough ?
 Yet, by my faith in numbers, I profess,
 These all, than Saxon EDITH, please me less.

IN THE ALBUM OF ROTH A Q—.

A PASSING glance was all I caught of thee,
 In my own Enfield haunts at random roving.

Old friends of ours were with thee, faces loving ;
 Time short : and salutations cursory,
 Though deep, and hearty. The familiar Name
 Of you, yet unfamiliar, raised in me
 Thoughts—what the daughter of that Man should be,
 Who call'd our Wordsworth friend. My thoughts did frame

A growing Maiden, who, from day to day
 Advancing still in stature and in grace,
 Would all her lonely Father's griefs efface,
 And his paternal cares with usury pay.
 I still retain the phantom, as I can ;
 And call the gentle image—Quillinan.

IN THE ALBUM OF CATHERINE ORKNEY.

CANADIA ! boast no more the toils
 Of hunters for the furry spoils ;
 Your whitest ermines are but foils
 To brighter Catherine Orkney.

That such a flower should ever burst
 From climes with rigorous Winter curst !—
 We bless you, that so kindly nurst
 This flower, this Catherine Orkney.

We envy not your proud display
 Of lake—wood—vast Niagara ;
 Your greatest pride we've borne away.
 How spared you Catherine Orkney ?

That Wolfe on Heights of Abraham fell,
 To your reproach no more we tell :
 Canadia, you repaid us well
 With rearing Catherine Orkney.

O Britain, guard with tenderest care,
 The charge allotted to your share :
 You've scarce a native maid so fair,
 So good, as Catherine Orkney.

IN THE ALBUM OF LUCY BARTON

LITTLE Book, surnamed of white,
 Clean as yet, and fair to sight,
 Keep thy attribution right.

Never disproportion'd scrawl,
 Ugly blot, that's worse than all,
 On thy maiden clearness fall !

In each letter, here design'd,
 Let the reader emblem'd find
 Neatness of the owner's mind.

Gilded margins count a sin :
 Let thy leaves attraction win
 By the golden rules within ;

Sayings fetch'd from sages old,
 Laws which Holy Writ unfold,
 Worthy to be grav'd in gold ;

Lighter fancies not excluding ;
 Blameless wit, with nothing rude in,
 Sometimes mildly interluding

Amid strains of graver measure :
 Virtue's self hath oft her pleasure
 In sweet Muses' groves of leisure.

Riddles dark, perplexing sense ;
 Darker meanings of offence ;
 What but shades—be banish'd hence!

Whitest thoughts in whitest dress,
 Candid meanings, best express
 Mind of quiet Quakeress.

IN THE ALBUM OF MRS. JANE TOWERS

LADY UNKNOWN, who crav'st from me Unknown
 The trifle of a verse these leaves to grace,
 How shall I find fit matter ? with what face
 Address a face that ne'er to me was shown ?
 Thy looks, tones, gesture, manners, and what not,
 Conjecturing, I wander in the dark.
 I know thee only Sister to Charles Clarke !
 But at that name my cold Muse waxes hot,
 And swears that thou art such a one as he,
 Warm, laughter-loving, with a touch of madness,
 Wild, glee-provoking, pouring oil of gladness
 From frank heart without guile. And if thou be
 The pure reverse of this, and I mistake—
 Demure one, I will like thee for his sake.

IN THE ALBUM OF MISS ———.

I.

SUCH goodness in your face doth shine,
 With modest look, without design,
 That I despair, poor pen of mine
 Can e'er express it.

To give it words I feebly try ;
 My spirits fail me to supply
 Befitting language for't, and i
 Can only bless it !

II.

But stop, rash verse ! and don't abuse
 A bashful Maiden's ear with news
 Of her own virtues. She'll refuse
 Praise sung so loudly.

Of that same goodness you admire,
 The best part is, she doesn't aspire
 'To praise—nor of herself desire
 To think too proudly.

IN MY OWN ALBUM.

FRESH clad from heaven in robes of white,
 A young probationer of light,
 Thou wert, my soul, an album bright,
 A spotless leaf ; but thought, and care,
 And friend and foe, in foul or fair,
 Have "written strange defeatures" there :

And Time with heaviest hand of all,
 Like that fierce writing on the wall,
 Hath stamp'd sad dates—he can't recall;

And Error gilding worst designs—
 Like speckled snake that strays and shines—
 Betrays his path by crooked lines;

And Vice hath left his ugly blot;
 And good resolves, a moment hot,
 Fairly began—but finish'd not;

And fruitless, late Remorse doth trace—
 Like Hebrew lore a backward pace—
 Her irrecoverable race.

Disjointed numbers, sense unknit,
 Huge reams of folly, shreds of wit,
 Compose the mingled mass of it.

My scalded eyes no longer brook
 Upon this ink-blurr'd thing to look:
 Go, shut the leaves, and clasp the book!

FOR THE ALBUM OF MISS ———, FRENCH
 TEACHER AT MRS. GISBORN'S SCHOOL, ENFIELD.

IMPLORED for verse, I send you what I can;
 But you are so exact a French-woman,
 As I am told, Jemima, that I fear
 To wound with English your Parisian ear,

And think I do your curious volume wrong,
 With lines not written in the Frenchman's tongue.
 Had I a knowledge equal to my will,
 With airy chansons I your leaves would fill;
 With fables that should emulate the vein
 Of sprightly Gresset or of La Fontaine;
 Or scènes comiques that should approach the air
 Of your favourite, renownèd Molière.
 But at my suit the Muse of France looks sour,
 And strikes me dumb! Yet what is in my power
 To testify respect for you, I pray
 Take in plain English,—our rough Enfield way.

LINES

WRITTEN IN A COPY OF "JOHN WOODVIL," 1802.

What is an Album?

September 7, 1830.

'Tis a book kept by modern young ladies for show,
 Of which their plain grandmothers nothing did know;
 A medley of scraps, half verse and half prose,
 And some things not very like either—God knows.
 The first, soft effusions of beaux and of belles,
 Of future Lord Byrons, and sweet L. E. L.'s;
 Where wise folk and simple both equally join,
 And you write your nonsense that I may write mine;
 Stick in a fine landscape to make a display—
 A flowerpiece, a foreground, all tinted so gay,
 That Nature herself, could she see them, would strike
 With envy, to think that she ne'er did the like.

And since some Lavaters, with head-pieces comical,
Have agreed to pronounce people's heads physiog-
nomical,

Be sure that you stuff it with autographs plenty,
All penn'd in a fashion so stiff and so dainty,
They no more resemble folk's ordinary writing
Than lines penn'd with pains do extempore writing,
Or our every-day countenance, (pardon the structure,)

The faces we make when we sit for our picture.
Then have you, Madelina, an Album complete,
Which may you live to finish, and I live to see it!

C. LAMB.

TO M. L.— F—.

(Expecting to see her again after a long interval.)

How many wasting, many wasted years,
Have run their round, since I beheld your face!
In Memory's dim eye it yet appears
Crown'd, as it then seem'd, with a cheerful grace,
Young prattling maiden, on the Thames' fair side,
Enlivening pleasant Sunbury with your smiles.
Time may have changed you: coy reserve, or pride,
To sullen looks reduced those mirthful wiles.

I will not 'bate one inch on that clear brow,
 But take of Time a rigorous account
 When next I see you ; and Maria now
 Must be the thing she was. To what amount
 These verses else ?—All hollow and untrue—
 This was not writ, these lines not meant, for You.

FOR THE "TABLE BOOK."

LAURA, too partial to her friends' enditing,
 Requires from each a pattern of their writing.
 A weightier trifle Laura might command ;
 For who to Laura would refuse his—hand ?

IN THE ALBUM OF A VERY YOUNG LADY.

Joy to unknown Josepha who, I hear,
 Of all good gifts, to Music most is given ;
 Science divine, which through the enraptured ear
 Enchants the soul, and lifts it nearer Heaven.
 Parental smiles approvingly attend
 Her pliant conduct of the trembling keys,
 And listening strangers their glad suffrage lend.
 Most musical is Nature. Birds—and bees
 At their sweet labour—sing. The moaning winds
 Rehearse a lesson to attentive minds.
 In louder tones " Deep unto deep doth call :"
 And there is music in the waterfall.

IN THE ALBUM OF MISS DAUBENY.

SOME poets by poetic law
Have beauties praised they never saw ;
And sung of Kittys and of Nancys,
Whose charms but lived in their own fancies.
So I, to keep my Muse a-going,
That willingly would still be doing,
A Canzonet or two must try
In praise of—pretty Daubeny.

But whether she indeed be comely,
Or only very good and homely,
Of my own eyes I cannot say ;
I trust to Emma Isola.
But sure I think her voice is tuneful,
As smoothest birds that sing in June full ;
For else would strangely disagree
The flowing name of—Daubeny.

I hear that she a Book hath got—
As what young damsel now hath net,
In which they scribble favourite fancies,
Copied from poems or romances ?
And prettiest draughts, of her design,
About the curious Album shine ;
And therefore she shall have for me
The style of—tasteful Daubeny

Thus far I have taken on believing ;
 But well I know without deceiving,
 That in her heart she keeps alive still Old school-day likings, which survive still
 In spite of absence—worldly coldness—
 And thereon can my Muse take boldness
 To crown her other praises three
 With praise of—friendly Daubeny.

TO EMMA ISOLA.

EXTERNAL gifts of fortune or of face,
 Maiden, in truth, thou hast not much to show ;
 Much fairer damsels have I known, and know,
 And richer may be found in every place.
 In thy mind seek thy beauty and thy wealth.
 Sincereness lodgeth there, the soul's best health.
 O guard that treasure above gold or pearl,
 Laid up secure from moths and worldly stealth—
 And take my benison, plain-hearted girl.

ON BEING ASKED TO WRITE IN MISS
 WESTWOOD'S ALBUM.

My feeble muse, that fain her best would Write, at command of Frances Westwood,
 But feel her wits not in their best mood,
 Fell lately on some idle fancies.

As she's much given to romances,
About this self-same style of Frances :
Which seems to be a name in common
Attributed to man or woman.

She thence contrived this flattering moral,
With which she hopes no soul will quarrel,
That She whom this Twin Title decks,
Combines what's good in either sex :
Unites—how very rare the case is—
Masculine sense to female graces ;
And quitting not her proper rank,
Is both in one—Fanny and Frank.

CHARLES LAMB, 12th Oct, 1827.

ACROSTICS.

I.

TO CAROLINE MARIA APPLEBEE.

CAROLINE glides smooth in verse,
And is easy to rehearse ;
Runs just like some crystal river
O'er its pebbly bed for ever.
Lines as harsh and quaint as mine
In their close at least will shine,
Nor from sweetness can decline,
Ending but with Caroline.

Maria asks a statelier pace—
“ Ave Maria, full of grace !”
Romish rites before me rise,
Image-worship, sacrifice,
And well-meant but mistaken pieties.

Apple with Bee doth rougher run.
Paradise was lost by one ;
Peace of mind would we regain,
Let us, like the other, strain
Every harmless faculty,
Bee-like at work in our degree,
Ever some sweet task designing,
Extracting still, and still refining.

II.

TO CECILIA CATHERINE LAWTON.

CHORAL service, solemn chanting,
 Echoing round cathedrals holy—
 Can aught else on earth be wanting
 In heaven's bliss to plunge us wholly?
 Let us great Cecilia honour
 In the praise we give unto them,
 And the merit be upon her.

Cold the heart that would undo them,
 And the solemn organ banish
 That this sainted Maid invented.
 Holy thoughts too quickly vanish,
 Ere the expression can be vented.
 Raise the song to Catherine,
 In her torments most divine!
 Ne'er by Christians be forgot—
 Envied be—this Martyr's lot.

Lawton, who these names combinest,
 Aim to emulate their praises;
 Women were they, yet divinest
 Truths they taught; and story raises
 O'er their mouldering bones a Tomb,
 Not to die till Day of Doom.

III.

TO A LADY WHO DESIRED ME TO WRITE
HER EPITAPH.

GRACE JCANNA here doth lie :
 Reader, wonder not that I
 Ante-date her hour of rest.
 Can I thwart her wish exprest,
 Even unseemly though the laugh
 Jestng with an Epitaph ?
 On her bones the turf lie lightly,
 And her rise again be brightly !
 No dark stain be found upon her—
 No, there will not, on mine honour—
 Answer that at least I can.

Would that I, thrice happy man,
 In as spotless garb might rise,
 Light as she will climb the skies,
 Leaving the dull earth behind,
 In a car more swift than wind.
 All her errors, all her failings,
 (Many they were not) and ailings,
 Sleep secure from Envy's railings.

IV.

TO HER YOUNGEST DAUGHTER.

LEAST Daughter, but not least beloved, of Grace !
 O frown not on a stranger, who from place
 Unknown and distant these few lines hath penn'd.
 I but report what thy Instructress Friend
 So oft hath told us of thy gentle heart.
 A pupil most affectionate thou art,

Careful to learn what elder years impart.
Louisa—Clare—by which name shall I call thee ?
 A prettier pair of names sure ne'er was found,
 Resembling thy own sweetness in sweet sound.
 Ever calm sleep and innocence befall thee !

V.

TO M. L.

Must I write with pen unwilling,
 And describe those graces killing,
 Rightly, which I never saw ?
 Yes : it is the Album's law.

Let me, then, invention strain,
 On your excelling grace to feign :
 Cold is fiction. I believe it,
 Kindly as I did receive it—
 Even as I. F.'s tongue did weave it.

VI.

TO S. L.

Shall I praise a face unseen,
 And extol a fancied mien,
 Rave on visionary charm,
 And from shadows take alarm !
 Hatred hates without a cause.

Love may love without applause,
 Or, without a reason given,
 Charmèd be with unknown heaven.
 Keep the secret, though unmock'd,
 Ever in your bosom Lock'd.

VII.

TO MRS. F. ON HER RETURN FROM GIBRALTAR.

JANE, you are welcome from the barren Rock,
And Calpe's sounding shores. Oh do not mock,
Now you have rais'd, our greetings ; nor again
Ever revisit that dry nook of Spain.

Friends have you here, and friendships to command,
In merry England. Love this hearty land.
Ease, comfort, competence—of these possess'd,
Let prodigal adventurers seek the rest :
Dear England is as you,—a "Field the Lord hath blest."

VIII.

TO E. F.

ESTHER, holy name and sweet,
Smoothly runs on even feet,
To the mild Acrostic bending ;
Hebrew recollections blending.
Ever keep that Queen in view—
Royal namesake—bold and true !

Firm she stood in evil times,
In the face of Haman's crimes.
Ev'n as She, do Thou possess
Loftiest virtue in the dress
(Dear F.) of native loveliness.

COMMENDATORY VERSES.

TO J. S. KNOWLES, ESQ.

ON HIS TRAGEDY OF VIRGINIUS.

TWELVE years ago I knew thee, Knowles, and then
Esteemed you a perfect specimen
Of those fine spirits warm-soul'd Ireland sends,
To teach us colder English how a friend's Quick pulse should beat. I knew you brave, and plain,
Strong-sensed, rough-witted, above fear or gain ;
But nothing further had the gift to espy.
Sudden you re-appear. With wonder I

Hear my old friend (turn'd Shakspeare) read a scene

Only to his inferior in the clean

Passes of pathos : with such fence-like art—

Ere we can see the steel, 'tis in our heart.

Almost without the aid language affords,

Your piece seems wrought. That huffing medium, words,

(Which in the modern Tamburlaines quite sway

Our shamed souls from their bias) in your play

We scarce attend to. Hastier passion draws

Our tears on credit : and we find the cause

Some two hours after, spelling o'er again

Those strange few words at ease, that wrought the pain.

Proceed, old friend ; and, as the year returns,

Still snatch some new old story from the urns

Of long-dead virtue. We, that knew before

Your worth, may admire, we cannot love you more.

TO THE AUTHOR OF POEMS,

PUBLISHED UNDER THE NAME OF BARRY CORNWALL.

LET hate, or grosser heats, their foulness mask

Under the vizer of a borrow'd name ;

Let things eschew the light deserving blame :

No cause hast thou to blush for thy sweet task.

"Marcian Colonna" is a dainty book;
 And thy "Sicilian Tale" may boldly pass;
 Thy "Dream" 'bove all, in which, as in a glass,
 On the great world's antique glories we may look.
 No longer then, as "lowly substitute,
 Factor, or PROCTER, for another's gains,"
 Suffer the admiring world to be deceived;
 Lest thou thyself, by self of fame bereaved,
 Lament too late the lost prize of thy pains,
 And heavenly tunes piped through an alien flute.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "EVERY-DAY BOOK."

I LIKE you, and your book, ingenuous Hone!
 In whose capacious all-embracing leaves
 The very marrow of tradition's shown;
 And all that history—much that fiction—weaves.

By every sort of taste your work is graced.
 Vast stores of modern anecdote we find,
 With good old story quaintly interlaced—
 The theme as various as the reader's mind.

Rome's lie-fraught legends you so truly paint—
 Yet kindly,—that the half-turn'd Catholic
 Scarcely forbears to smile at his own saint.
 And cannot curse the candid heretic.

Rags, relics, witches, ghosts, fiends, crowd your page ;
 Our fathers' mummeries we well-pleas'd behold,
 And, proudly conscious of a purer age,
 Forgive some fopperies in the times of old.

Verse-honouring Phœbus, Father of bright Days,
 Must needs bestow on you both good and many,
 Who, building trophies of his Children's praise,
 Run their rich Zodiac through, not missing any.

Dan Phœbus loves your book—trust me, friend
 Hone—
 The title only errs, he bids me say :
 For while such art, wit, reading, there are shown,
 He swears, 'tis not a work of every day.

TO T. STOTHARD, ESQ.

ON HIS ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE POEMS OF MR. ROGERS.

CONSUMMATE Artist, whose undying name
 With classic Rogers shall go down to fame,
 Be this thy crowning work ! In my young days
 How often have I, with a child's fond gaze,
 Pored on the pictur'd wonders thou hadst done :
 Clarissa mournful, and prim Grandison !
 All Fielding's, Smollett's heroes, rose to view ;
 I saw, and I believed the phantoms true.

But, above all, that most romantic tale
 Did o'er my raw credulity prevail,
 Where Glums and Gawries wear mysterious things,
 That serve at once for jackets and for wings.
 Age, that enfeebles other men's designs,
 But heightens thine, and thy free draught refines.
 In several ways distinct you make us feel—
Graceful as Raphael, as Watteau genteel.
 Your lights and shades, as Titianesque, we praise ;
 And warmly wish you Titian's length of days.

TO MY FRIEND THE INDICATOR.

YOUR easy Essays indicate a flow,
 Dear friend, of brain which we may elsewhere seek ;
 And to their pages I and hundreds owe,
 That Wednesday is the sweetest of the week.
 Such observation, wit, and sense, are shown,
 We think the days of Bickerstaff return'd ;
 And that a portion of that oil you own,
 In his undying midnight lamp which burn'd.
 I would not lightly bruise old Priscian's head
 Or wrong the rules of grammar understood ;
 But, with the leave of Priscian be it said,
 The Indicative is your Potential Mood,
 Wit, poet, prose-man, party-man, translator—
 H[unt], your best title yet is Indicator.

TRANSLATIONS.

FROM THE LATIN OF VINCENT BOURNE.

I.

THE BALLAD SINGERS.

WHERE seven fair Streets to one tall Column¹ draw,
Two Nymphs have ta'en their stand, in hats of straw ;
Their yellower necks huge beads of amber grace,
And by their trade they're of the Sirens' race :
With cloak loose-pinn'd on each, that has been red,
But, long with dust and dirt discoloured,
Belies its hue ; in mud behind, before,
From heel to middle leg becrusted o'er.
One a small infant at the breast does bear ;
And one in her right hand her tuneful ware,
Which she would vend. Their station scarce is taken,
When youths and maids flock round. His stall forsaken,

Forth comes a Son of Crispin, leathern-capt,
Prepared to buy a ballad, if one apt
To move his fancy offers. Crispin's sons
Have, from uncounted time, with ale and buns,
Cherish'd the gift of Song, which sorrow quells;
And, working single in their low-rooft cells,
Oft cheat the tedium of a Winter's night
With anthems warbled in the Muses' spight.—
Who now hath caught the alarm? the Servant Maid
Hath heard a buzz at distance; and, afraid
To miss a note, with elbows red comes out.
Leaving his forge to cool, Pyracmon stout
Thrusts in his unwash'd visage. He stands by,
Who the hard trade of Porterage does ply
With stooping shoulders. What cares he? he sees
The assembled ring, nor heeds his tottering knees,
But pricks his ears up with the hopes of song.
So, while the Bard of Rhodope his wrong
Bewail'd to Proserpine on Thracian strings,
The tasks of Gloomy Orcus lost their stings,
And stone-vest Sysiphus forgets his load.
Hither and thither from the sevenfold road
Some cart or waggon crosses, which divides
The close-wedged audience; but as when the tides
To ploughing ships give way, the ship being past,
They re-unite, so these unite as fast.
The older Songstress hitherto hath spent
Her elocution in the argument
Of their great Song in prose; to wit, the woes
Which Maiden true to faithless Sailor owes—
Ah! "Wandering He!"—which now in loftier verse
Pathetic they alternately rehearse.
All gaping wait the event. This Critic opes
His right ear to the strain. The other hopes

To catch it better with his left. Long trade
 It were to tell, how the deluded Maid
 A victim fell. And now right greedily
 All hands are stretching forth the songs to buy,
 That are so tragical ; which She, and She,
 Deals out, and sings the while ; nor can there be
 A breast so obdurate here, that will hold back
 His contribution from the gentle rack
 Of Music's pleasing torture. Irus' self,
 The staff-propt Beggar, his thin gotten pelf
 Brings out from pouch, where squalid farthings rest,
 And boldly claims his ballad with the best.
 An old Dame only lingers. To her purse
 The penny sticks. At length, with harmless curse,
 "Give me," she cries. "I'll paste it on my wall,
 While the wall lasts, to show what ills befall
 Fond hearts, seduced from Innocency's way ;
 How Maidens fall, and Mariners betray."

 II.

TO DAVID COOK,

OF THE PARISH OF ST. MARGARET'S, WESTMINSTER, WATCHMAN.

FOR much good-natured verse received from thee,
 A loving verse take in return from me.
 "Good morrow to my masters," is your cry ;
 And to our David "twice as good," say I.

Not Peter's monitor, shrill Chanticleer,
Crows the approach of dawn in notes more clear,
Or tells the hours more faithfully. While night
Fills half the world with shadows of affright,
You with your lantern, partner of your round,
Traverse the paths of Margaret's hallow'd bound.
The tales of ghosts which old wives' ears drink up,
The drunkard reeling home from tavern cup,
Nor prowling robber, your firm soul appal ;
Arm'd with thy faithful staff, thou slight'st them all.
But if the market gard'ner chance to pass,
Bringing to town his fruit, or early grass,
The gentle salesman you with candour greet,
And with reit'rated " good mornings " meet.
Announcing your approach by formal bell,
Of nightly weather you the changes tell ;
Whether the Moon shines, or her head doth steep
In rain-portending clouds. When mortals sleep
In downy rest, you brave the snows and sleet
Of Winter ; and in alley, or in street,
Relieve your midnight progress with a verse.
What though fastidious Phœbus frown averse
On your didactic strain—indulgent Night
With caution hath seal'd up both ears of Spite,
And critics sleep while you in staves do sound
The praise of long-dead Saints, whose Days abound
In wintry months ; but Crispin chief proclaim :
Who stirs not at that Prince of Cobblers' name ?
Profuse in loyalty some couplets shine,
And wish long days to all the Brunswick line !
To youths and virgins they chaste lessons read ;
Teach wives and husbands how their lives to lead ;
Maids to be cleanly, footmen free from vice ;
How Death at last all ranks doth equalize ;

And, in conclusion, pray good years befall,
 With store of wealth, your "worthy masters all."
 For this and other tokens of good will,
 On boxing-day may store of shillings fill
 Your Christmas purse; no householder give less,
 When at each door your blameless suit you press;
 And what you wish to us (it is but reason)
 Receive in turn—the compliments o' th' season!

ON A SEPULCHRAL STATUE OF AN INFANT SLEEPING.

BEAUTIFUL Infant, who dost keep
 Thy posture here, and sleep'st a marble sleep,
 May the repose unbroken be,
 Which the fine Artist's hand hath lent to thee,
 While thou enjoy'st along with it
 That which no art, or craft, could ever hit,
 Or counterfeit to mortal sense,
 The heaven-infusèd sleep of Innocence!

EPITAPH ON A DOG.

POOR Irus' faithful wolf-dog here I lie,
 That wont to tend my old blind master's steps,

His guide and guard ; nor, while my service lasted,
Had he occasion for that staff, with which
He now goes picking out his path in fear
Over the highways and crossings, but would plant
Safe in the conduct of my friendly string,
A firm foot forward still, till he had reach'd
His poor seat on some stone, nigh where the tide
Of passers-by in thickest confluence flow'd :
To whom with loud and passionate laments
From morn to eve his dark estate he wail'd.
Nor wail'd to all in vain : some here and there,
The well-disposed and good, their pennies gave.
I meantime at his feet obsequious slept ;
Not all-asleep in sleep, but heart and ear
Prick'd up at his least motion, to receive
At his kind hand my customary crumbs,
And common portion in his feast of scraps ;
Or when night warn'd us homeward, tired and spent

With our long day and tedious beggary.
These were my manners, this my way of life,
Till age and slow disease me overtook,
And sever'd from my sightless master's side.
But lest the grace of so good deeds should die,
Through tract of years in mute oblivion lost,
This slender tomb of turf hath Irus rear'd,
Cheap monument of no ungrudging hand,
And with short verse inscribed it, to attest,
In long and lasting union to attest,
The virtues of the Beggar and his Dog.

THE RIVAL BELLS.

A TUNEFUL challenge rings from either side
 Of Thames' fair banks. Thy twice six Bells, St.
 Bride,
 Peal swift and shrill ; to which more slow reply
 The deep-toned eight of Mary Overy.
 Such harmony from the contention flows,
 That the divided ear no preference knows ;
 Betwixt them both disparting Music's State,
 While one exceeds in number, one in weight,

NEWTON'S PRINCIPIA.

GREAT Newton's self, to whom the world's in debt,
 Owed to School Mistress sage his Alphabet ;
 But quickly wiser than his Teacher grown,
 Discover'd properties to her unknown ;
 Of A plus B, or minus, learn'd the use,
 Known Quantities from unknown to educe ;
 And made—no doubt to that old dame's surprise—
 The Christ-Cross-Row his Ladder to the skies.
 Yet, whatsoever Geometricians say,
 Her Lessons were his true PRINCIPIA !

'THE HOUSEKEEPER.

THE frugal snail, with fore-cast of repose,
 Carries his house with him, where'er he goes ;
 Peeps out—and if there comes a shower of rain,
 Retreats to his small domicile amain.
 Touch but a tip of him, a horn—'tis well—
 He curls up in his sanctuary shell.
 He's his own landlord, his own tenant ; stay
 Long as he will, he dreads no Quarter Day.
 Himself he boards and lodges ; both invites,
 And feasts, himself ; sleeps with himself o' nights.
 He spares the upholsterer trouble to procure
 Chattels ; himself is his own furniture,
 And his sole riches. Wheresoe'er he roam —
 Knock when you will—he's sure to be at home.

ON A DEAF AND DUMB ARTIST.¹

AND hath thy blameless life become
 A prey to the devouring tomb ?
 A more mute silence hast thou known,
 A deafness deeper than thine own,

¹ Benjamin Ferrers—Died A.D. 1732.

While Time was? and no friendly Muse,
 That mark'd thy life, and knows thy dues,
 Repair with quickening verse the breach,
 And write thee into light and speech?
 The Power, that made the Tongue, restrain'd
 Thy lips from lies, and speeches feign'd;
 Who made the Hearing, without wrong
 Did rescue thine from Siren's song.
 He let thee see the ways of men,
 Which thou with pencil, not with pen,
 Careful Beholder, down didst note,
 And all their motley actions quote,
 Thyself unstain'd the while. From look
 Or gesture reading, more than book,
 In letter'd pride thou took'st no part,
 Contented with the Silent Art,
 Thyself as silent. Might I be
 As speechless, deaf, and good, as He i

THE FEMALE ORATORS.

NIGH London's famous Bridge, a Gate more famed Stands, or once stood, from old Belinus named,
 So judg'd Antiquity; and therein wrongs
 A name, allusive strictly to two Tongues.
 Her School hard by the Goddess Rhetoric opes,
 And gratis deals to Oyster-wives her Tropes.
 With Nereid green, green Nereid disputes,
 Replies, rejoins, confutes, and still confutes.

One her coarse sense by metaphors expounds,
 And one in literalities abounds ;
 In mood and figure these keep up the din :
 Words multiply, and every word tells in.
 Her hundred throats here bawling Slander strains ;
 And unclothed Venus to her tongue gives reins
 In terms, which Demosthenic force outgo,
 And baldest jests of foul-mouth'd Cicero.
 Right in the midst great Atè keeps her stand,
 And from her sovereign station taints the land.
 Hence Pulpits rail ; grave Senates learn to jar ;
 Quacks scold ; and Billingsgate infects the Bar.

EXISTENCE, CONSIDERED IN ITSELF NO BLESSING.¹

FROM THE LATIN OF PALINGENIUS.

The poet, after a seeming approval of suicide from a consideration of the cares and crimes of life, finally rejecting it, discusses the negative importance of existence, contemplated in itself, without reference to good or evil.

OF these sad truths consideration had,
 Thou shalt not fear to quit this world so mad,
 So wicked : but the tenet rather hold
 Of wise Calanus and his followers old,

Who with their own wills their own freedom wrought,
 And by self-slaughter their dismissal sought
 From this dark den of crime, this horrid lair
 Of men, that savager than monsters are ;
 And scorning longer in this tangled mesh
 Of ills, to wait on perishable flesh,
 Did with their desperate hands anticipate
 The too, too slow relief of lingering fate.
 And if religion did not stay thine hand,
 And God, and Plato's wise behests withstand,
 I would in like case counsel thee to throw
 This senseless burden off, of cares below.
 Not wine, as wine, men choose, but as it came
 From such or such a vintage: 'tis the same
 With life, which simply must be understood
 A blank negation, if it be not good.
 But if 'tis wretched all,—as men decline
 And loathe the sour lees of corrupted wine,—
 'Tis so to be contemned. Merely TO BE
 Is not a boon to seek, or ill to flee ;
 Seeing that every vilest little thing
 Has it in common,—from a gnat's small wing,
 A creeping worm, down to the moveless stone,
 And crumbling bark from trees. Unless TO BE.
 And TO BE BLEST, be one, I do not see
 In bare existence, as existence, aught
 That's worthy to be loved or to be sought.

THE PARTING SPEECH OF THE CELESTIAL MESSENGER TO THE POET.

FROM THE LATIN OF PALINGENIUS, IN THE ZODIACUS VITÆ.

BUT now time warns (my mission at an end)
That to Jove's starry court I re-ascend ;
From whose high battlements I take delight
To scan your earth, diminished to the sight,
Pendant and round, and, as an apple, small,
Self-propt, self-balanced, and secure from fall
By her own weight ; and how with liquid robe
Blue Ocean girdles round her tiny globe,
While lesser Nereus, gliding like a snake,
Betwixt her lands his flexile course doth take,
Shrunk to a rivulet ; and how the Po,
The mighty Ganges, Tanais, Ister, show
No bigger than a ditch which rains have swell'd.
Old Nilus' seven proud mouths I late beheld,
And mock'd the watery puddles. Hosts steel-clad
Ofttimes I thence beheld ; and how the sad
Peoples are punish'd by the fault of kings,
Which from the purple fiend Ambition springs.
Forgetful of mortality, they live
In hot strife for possessions fugitive,
At which the angels grieve. Sometimes I trace
Of fountains, rivers, seas, the change of place ;
By ever-shifting course, and Time's unrest,
The vale exalted, and the mount deprest

To an inglorious valley ; ploughshares going
 Where tall trees reared their tops, and fresh trees growing
 In antique postures ; cities lose their site :
 Old things wax new. Oh what a rare delight
 To him, who, from this vantage, can survey
 At once stern Afric and soft Asia,
 With Europe's cultured plains, and, in their turns,
 Their scattered tribes !—those whom the hot Crab
 burns,
 The tawny Ethiops ; Orient Indians ;
 Getulians ; ever-wandering Scythians ;
 Swift Tartan hordes ; Cilicians rapacious,
 And Parthians with black-bended bow pugnacious ;
 Sabeans incense bring ; men of Thrace ;
 Italian, Spaniard, Gaul ; and that rough race
 Of Britons, rigid as their native colds ;
 With all the rest the circling sun beholds.
 But clouds and elemental mists deny
 These visions blest to any fleshly eye.

HERCULES PACIFICATUS.

A TALE FROM SUIDAS.

In days of yore, ere early Greece
 Had dream'd of patrols or police,
 A crew of rake-hells in terrorem
 Spread wide, and carried all before 'em,

Rifled the poultry, and the women,
 And held that all things were in common :
 Till Jove's great Son the nuisance saw,
 And did abate it by Club Law.
 Yet not so clean he made his work,
 But here and there a rogue would lurk
 In caves and rocky fastnesses,
 And shunn'd the strength of Hercules.

Of these, more desperate than others,
 A pair of ragamuffin brothers
 In secret ambuscade join'd forces,
 To carry on unlawful courses.
 These Robbers' names, enough to shake us,
 Were, Strymon one, the other Cacus.
 And, more the neighbourhood to both,
 A wicked dam they had for mother,
 Who knew their craft, but not forbid it,
 And whatsoe'er they nymm'd, she hid it ;
 Received them with delight and wonder,
 When they brought home some 'special plunder ;
 Call'd them her darlings, and her white boys,
 Her ducks, her dildings—all was right boys—
 " Only," she said, " my lads, have care
 Ye fall not into BLACK BACK's snare ;
 For, if he catch, he'll maul your corpus,
 And clapper-claw you to some purpose."
 She was in truth a kind of witch,
 Had grown by fortune-telling rich ;
 To spells and conjurings did tackle her,
 And read folks' dooms by light oracular :
 In which she saw as clear as daylight,
 What mischief on her bairns would a light ;

Therefore she had a special loathing
For all that own'd that sable clothing.

Who can 'scape fate, when we're decreed to 't ?
The graceless brethren paid small heed to 't.
A brace they were of sturdy fellows,
As we may say, that fear'd no colours,
And sneer'd with modern infidelity
At the old gipsy's fond credulity.
It proved all true tho', as she mumbled—
For on a day the varlets stumbled
On a green spot—sit linguæ fides—
'Tis Suidas tells it—where Alcides
Secure, as fearing no ill neighbour,
Lay fast asleep after a “ Labour.”
His trusty oaken plane was near—
The prowling rogues look round, and leer,
And each his wicked wits 'gan rub,
How to bear off the famous Club ;
Thinking that they, sans price or hire, wou'd
Carry 't strait home, and chop for fire wood.
'Twould serve their old dame half a Winter—
You stare ! but 'faith it was no splinter ;
I would not for much money 'spy
Such beam in any neighbour's eye,
The villains these exploits not dull in,
Incontinently fell a pulling.
They found it heavy—no slight matter—
But tugg'd, and tugg'd, till the clatter
'Woke Hercules, who in a trice
Whipt up the knaves, and with a splice,
He kept on purpose—which before
Had served for giants many a score—

To end of Club tied each rogue's head fast ;
 Strapping feet too, to keep them steadfast :
 And pickaback them carries townwards,
 Behind his brawny back head-downwards ;
 (So foolish calf—for rhyme I bless X—
 Comes volens volens out of Essex ;)
 Thinking to brain them with his dextra,
 Or string them up upon the next tree.
 That Club—so equal fates condemn—
 They thought to catch, has now catch'd them.

Now Hercules, we may suppose,
 Was no great dandy in his clothes ;
 Was seldom, save on Sundays, seen
 In calimanco, or nankeen ;
 On anniversaries would try on
 A jerkin spick-span new from lion ;
 Went bare for the most part, to be cool,
 And save the time of his Groom of the Stole ;
 Besides, the smoke he had been in
 In Stygian gulf, had dyed his skin
 To a natural sable—a right hell-fit—
 That seem'd to careless eyes black velvet.

The brethren from their station scurvy,
 Where they hung dangling topsy turvy,
 With horror view the black costume,
 And each presumes his hour is come !
 Then softly to themselves 'gan mutter
 The warning words their dame did utter ;
 Yet not so softly, but with ease
 Were overheard by Hercules.
 Quoth Cacus, "This is he she spoke of,
 Which we so often made a joke of."

“ I see,” said th’ other ; “ thank our sin for ’t,
’Tis Black Back sure enough : we’re in for ’t.”
His godship, who, for all his brag
Of roughness, was at heart a wag,
At his new name was tickled finely,
And fell a laughing most divinely.
Quoth he, “ I’ll tell this jest in heaven ;
The musty rogues shall be forgiven ;”
So in a twinkling did uncase them,
On mother earth once more to place them.
The varlets, glad to be unhamper’d,
Made each a ieg, then fairly scamper’d.

MISCELLANEOUS POEMS.

HESTER.

WHEN maidens such as Hester die,
Their place ye may not well supply,
Though ye among a thousand try,
 With vain endeavour.

A month or more hath she been dead,
Yet cannot I by force be led
To think upon the wormy bed,
 And her together.

A springy motion in her gait,
A rising step, did indicate
Of pride and joy no common rate,
 That flush'd her spirit.

I know not by what name beside
I shall call it :—if 'twas not pride,
It was a joy to that allied,
 She did inherit.

Her parents held the Quaker rule,
Which doth the human feeling cool,
But she was train'd in Nature's school,
 Nature had blest her.

A waking eye, a prying mind,
A heart that stirs, is hard to bind,
A hawk's keen sight ye cannot blind,
 Ye could not Hester.

My sprightly neighbour! gone before
 To that unknown and silent shore,
 Shall we not meet, as heretofore,
 Some Summer morning,

When from thy cheerful eyes a ray
 Hath struck a bliss upon the day,
 A bliss that would not go away,
 A sweet fore-warning?

THE THREE FRIENDS.

THREE young maids in friendship met;
 Mary, Martha, Margaret.
 Margaret was tall and fair,
 Martha shorter by a hair;
 If the first excell'd in feature,
 'Th' other's grace and ease were greater;
 Mary, though to rival loth,
 In their best gifts equall'd both.
 They a due proportion kept:
 Martha mourn'd if Margaret wept;
 Margaret joy'd when any good
 She of Martha understood;
 And in sympathy for either
 Mary was outdone by neither.
 Thus far, for a happy space,
 All three ran an equal race,
 A most constant friendship proving,
 Equally beloved and loving;

All their wishes, joys, the same ;
Sisters only not in name.

Fortune upon each one smiled,
As upon a fav'rite child ;
Well to do and well to see
Were the parents of all three ;
Till on Martha's father crosses
Brought a flood of worldly losses,
And his fortunes rich and great
Changed at once to low estate ;
Under which o'erwhelming blow
Martha's mother was laid low ;
She a hapless orphan left,
Of maternal care bereft,
Trouble following trouble fast,
Lay in a sick bed at last.

In the depth of her affliction
Martha now receiv'd conviction,
That a true and faithful friend
Can the surest comfort lend.
Night and day, with friendship tried,
Ever constant by her side
Was her gentle Mary found,
With a love that knew no bound ;
And the solace she imparted
Saved her dying broken-hearted.

In this scene of earthly things
Not one good unmixèd springs.
That which had to Martha proved
A sweet consolation, moved Different feelings of regret
In the mind of Margaret.

She, whose love was not less dear,
Nor affection less sincere
To her friend, was, by occasion
Of more distant habitation,
Fewer visits forced to pay her ;
When no other cause did stay her ;
And her Mary living nearer,
Margaret began to fear her.
Lest her visits day by day
Martha's heart should steal away.
'That whole heart she ill could spare her,
Where till now she'd been a sharer.
From this cause with grief she pined,
'Till at length her health declined.
All her cheerful spirits flew,
Fast as Martha's gather'd new ;
And her sickness waxèd sore,
Just when Martha felt no more.

Mary, who had quick suspicion
Of her alter'd friend's condition,
Seeing Martha's convalescence
Less demanded now her presence,
With a goodness, built on reason,
Changed her measures with the season
Turn'd her steps from Martha's door,
Went where she was wanted more ;
All her care and thoughts were set
Now to tend on Margaret.
Mary living 'twixt the two,
From her home could oft'ner go,
Either of her friends to see,
Than they could together be.

Truth explain'd is to suspicion
Evermore the best physician.
Soon her visits had the effect ;
All that Margaret did suspect,
From her fancy vanish'd clean :
She was soon what she had been,
And the colour she did lack
To her faded cheek came back.
Wounds which love had made her feel,
Love alone had power to heal.

Martha, who the frequent visit
Now had lost, and sore did miss it,
With impatience wax'd cross,
Counted Margaret's gain her loss :
All that Mary did confer
On her friend, thought due to her.
In her girlish bosom rise
Little foolish jealousies,
Which into such rancour wrought,
She one day for Margaret sought ;
Finding her by chance alone,
She began, with reasons shown,
To insinuate a fear
Whether Mary was sincere ;
Wish'd that Margaret would take heed
Whence her actions did proceed.
For herself, she'd long been minded
Not with outsides to be blinded ;
All that pity and compassion,
She believed was affectation :
In her heart she doubted whether
Mary cared a pin for either.

She could keep whole weeks at distance,
 And not know of their existence,
 While all things remain'd the same :
 But when some misfortune came,
 Then she made a great parade
 Of her sympathy and aid,—
 Not that she did really grieve,
 It was only make-believe,
 And she cared for nothing, so
 She might her fine feelings show,
 And get credit, on her part,
 For a soft and tender heart.

With such speeches, smoothly made,
 She found methods to persuade Margaret (who being sore
 From the doubts she'd felt before,
 Was preparèd for mistrust)
 To believe her reasons just ;
 Quite destroy'd that comfort glad,
 Which in Mary late she had ;
 Made her, in experience' spite,
 Think her friend a hypocrite,
 And resolve, with cruel scoff,
 To renounce and cast her off.

See how good turns are rewarded !
 She of both is now discarded,
 Who to both had been so late
 Their support in low estate,
 All their comfort, and their stay—
 Now of both is cast away.
 But the league her presence cherish'd,
 Losing its best prop, soon perish'd ;

She, that was a link to either,
 To keep them and it together,
 Being gone, the two (no wonder)
 That were left, soon fell asunder :—
 Some civilities were kept,
 But the heart of friendship slept ;
 Love with hollow forms was fed,
 But the life of love lay dead :—
 A cold intercourse they held,
 After Mary was expell'd.

Two long years did intervene
 Since they'd either of them seen.
 Or, by letter, any word
 Of their old companion heard,—
 When, upon a day once walking,
 Of indifferent matters talking,
 They a female figure met ;
 Martha said to Margaret,
 “ That young maid in face does carry
 A resemblance strong of Mary.”
 Margaret, at nearer sight,
 Own'd her observation right ;
 But they did not far proceed
 Ere they knew 'twas she indeed.
 She—but, ah ! how changed they view her
 From that person which they knew her !
 Her fine face disease had scarr'd,
 And its matchless beauty marr'd :—
 But enough was left to trace
 Mary's sweetness—Mary's grace.
 When her eye did first behold them,
 How they blush'd !—but when she told them

How on a sick bed she lay
Months, while they had kept away,
And had no inquiries made
If she were alive or dead ;—
How, for want of a true friend,
She was brought near to her end,
And was like so to have died,
With no friend at her bed-side ;—
How the constant irritation,
Caused by fruitless expectation
Of their coming, had extended
The illness, when she might have mended, —
Then, O then, how did reflection
Come on them with recollection !
All that she had done for them,
How it did their fault condemn !

But sweet Mary, still the same,
Kindly eased them of their shame ;
Spoke to them with accents bland,
Took them friendly by the hand ;
Bound them both with promise fast,
Not to speak of troubles past :
Made them on the spot declare
A new league of friendship there ;
Which, without a word of strife,
Lasted thenceforth long as life.
Martha now and Margaret
Strove who most should pay the debt
Which they owed her, nor did vary
Ever after from their Marv.

TO A RIVER IN WHICH A CHILD WAS DROWNED.

SMILING river, smiling river,
On thy bosom sun-beams play ;
Though they're fleeting, and retreating,
Thou hast more deceit than they :

In thy channel, in thy channel,
Chok'd with ooze and grav'llly stones,
Deep immersed, and unheard,
Lies young Edward's corse ; his bones

Ever whitening, ever whitening,
As thy waves against them dash ;
What thy torrent, in the current,
Swallow'd, now it helps to wash.

As if senseless, as if senseless
Things had feeling in this case ;
What so blindly, and unkindly,
It destroy'd, it now does grace.

THE OLD FAMILIAR FACES.

I HAVE had playmates, I have had companions,
In my days of childhood, in my joyful school-days,
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I have been laughing, I have been carousing,
Drinking late, sitting late, with my bosom cronies,
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I loved a love once,¹ fairest among women ;
Closed are her doors on me, I must not see her—
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I have a friend, a kinder friend has no man ;
Like an ingrate, I left my friend abruptly ;
Left him, to muse on the old familiar faces.

Ghost-like I paced round the haunts of my childhood.
Earth seem'd a desert I was bound to traverse,
Seeking to find the old familiar faces.

Friend of my bosom, thou more than a brother,
Why wert not thou born in my father's dwelling ?
So might we talk of the old familiar faces---

How some they have died, and some they have left me,
And some are taken from me ; all are departed ;
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

A VISION OF REPENTANCE.

I SAW a famous fountain, in my dream
 Where shady path-ways to a valley led :
 A weeping willow lay upon that stream,
 And all around the fountain brink were spread
 Wide-branching trees, with dark green leaf rich clad,
 Forming a doubtful twilight—desolate and sad.

The place was such, that whoso enter'd in,
 Disrobèd was of every earthly thought
 And straight became as one that knew not sin,
 Or to the world's first innocence was brought ;
 Ensem'd it now, he stood on holy ground,
 In sweet and tender melancholy wrapt around.

A most strange calm stole o'er my soothèd sprite ;
 Long time I stood, and longer had I staid,
 When lo ! I saw, saw by the sweet moon-light,
 Which came in silence o'er that silent shade,
 Where, near the fountain, SOMETHING like DESPAIR
 Made, of that weeping willow, garlands for her hair.

And eke with painful fingers she inwove
 Many an uncouth stem of savage thorn—
 “ The willow garland, that was for her love,
 And these her bleeding temples would adorn.”
 With sighs her heart nigh burst, salt tears fast fell,
 As mournfully she bended o'er that sacred well.

To whom when I address myself to speak,
 She lifted up her eyes, and nothing said ;
 The delicate red came mantling o'er her cheek,
 And, gath'ring up her loose attire, she fled
 To the dark covert of that woody shade,
 And in her goings seem'd a timid gentle maid.

Revolving in my mind what this should mean,
 And why that lovely lady plainèd so ;
 Perplexed in thought at that mysterious scene,
 And doubting if 'twere best to stay or go,
 I cast mine eyes in wistful gaze around,
 When from the shades came slow a small and plaintive sound.

“ PSYCHE am I, who love to dwell
 In these brown shades, this woody dell,
 Where never busy mortal came,
 Till now, to pry upon my shame.

At thy feet what thou dost see
 The waters of repentance be,
 Which, night and day, I must augment
 With tears, like a true penitent,

If haply so my day of grace
 Be not yet past; and this lone place,
 O'er shadowy, dark, excludeth hence
 All thoughts but grief and penitence.”

“ *Why dost thou weep, thou gentle maid !
 And wherefore in this barren shade
 Thy hidden thoughts with sorrow feed ?
 Can thing so fair repentance need ?*”

“ O I have done a deed of shame,
 And tainted is my virgin fame,
 And stain'd the beauteous maiden white
 In which my bridal robes were dight.”

*“ And who the promised spouse ? declare :
 And what those bridal garments were.”*

“ Severe and saintly righteousness
 Composed the clear white bridal dress ;
 JESUS, the Son of Heaven's high King,
 Bought with his blood the marriage ring.

A wretched sinful creature, I
 Deem'd lightly of that sacred tie,
 Gave to a treacherous WORLD my heart,
 And play'd the foolish wanton's part.
 Soon to these murky shades I came,
 To hide from the sun's light my shame.
 And still I haunt this woody dell,
 And bathe me in that healing well,
 Whose waters clear have influence
 From sin's foul stains the soul to cleanse ;
 And, night and day, I them augment,
 With tears, like a true penitent,
 Until, due expiation made,
 And fit atonement fully paid,
 The Lord and Bridegroom me present,
 Where in sweet strains of high consent
 God's throne before, the Seraphim
 Shall chant the ecstatic marriage hymn.”

“ Now Christ restore thee soon ”—I said,
 And thenceforth all my dream was fled.

HELEN.¹

BY MARY LAMB.

High-born Helen, round your dwelling
 These twenty years I've passed in vain :
 Haughty beauty, thy lover's duty
 Hath been to glory in his pain.

High-born Helen, proudly telling
 Stories of thy cold disdain :
 I starve, I die, now you comply,
 And I no longer can complain.

These twenty years I've lived on tears,
 Dwelling for ever on a frown ;
 On sighs I've fed, your scorn my bread ;
 I perish now you kind have grown.

Can I who loved my beloved
 But for the scorn "was in her eye,"
 Could I be moved for my beloved,
 When she "returns me sigh for sigh ?

In stately pride, by my bed-side
 High-born Helen's portrait's hung ;
 Deaf to my praise, my mournful lays
 Are nightly to the portrait sung.

To that I weep, nor ever sleep,
 Complaining all night long to her—
 Helen, grown old, no longer cold,
 Said, "You to all men I prefer."

¹ This piece, with the others signed "M. L." was specially included by Lamb among his collected pieces. Her name is not actually attached to them in the body of the work, but in the table of contents attention is drawn to them: "Those in italics are by the author's sister." As he wished that her work should be considered as part of his, the pieces have been retained here.—F.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN A MOTHER AND CHILD.

CHILD.

“O LADY, lay your costly robes aside,
No longer may you glory in your pride.”

MOTHER.

Wherefore to-day art singing in mine ear
Sad songs were made so long ago, my dear?
This day I am to be a bride, you know,
Why sing sad songs, were made so long ago?

CHILD.

O mother, lay your costly robes aside,
For you may never be another's bride.
That line I learn'd not in the old sad song.

MOTHER.

I pray thee, pretty one, now hold thy tongue,
Play with the bride-maids; and be glad, my boy,
For thou shalt be a second father's joy.

CHILD.

One father fondled me upon his knee.
One father is enough, alone, for me.

QUEEN ORIANA'S DREAM.

ON a bank with roses shaded,
Whose sweet scent the violets aided,
Violets whose breath alone
Yields but feeble smell or none,

(Sweeter bed Jove ne'er reposed on,
 When his eyes Olympus closed on,) While o'er head six slaves did hold
 Canopy of cloth o' gold,
 And two more did music keep,
 Which might Juno lull to sleep,
 Oriana, who was queen
 To the mighty Tamerlane,
 That was lord of all the land
 Between Thrace and Samarchand,
 While the noon-tide fervour beam'd,
 Mused herself to sleep, and dream'd.

Thus far in magnificent strain,
 A young poet soothed his vein,
 But he had nor prose nor numbers
 To express a princess' slumbers.—
 Youthful Richard had strange fancies,
 Was deep versed in old romances,
 And could talk whole hours upon
 The Great Cham and Prester John,—
 Tell the field in which the Sophi
 From the Tartar won a trophy—
 What he read with such delight of,
 Thought he could as eas'ly write of—
 But his over-young invention
 Kept not pace with brave intention.
 Twenty suns did rise and set,
 And he could no further get ;
 But unable to proceed,
 Made a virtue out of need,
 And, his labours wiselier deem'd of,
 Did omit what the queen dream'd of.

A BALLAD.

NOTING THE DIFFERENCE OF RICH AND POOR, IN THE WAYS OF A RICH NOBLE'S PALACE AND A POOR WORKHOUSE.

To the tune of the "Old and Young Courtier."

In a costly palace Youth goes clad in gold ;
In a wretched workhouse Age's limbs are cold :
There they sit, the old men by a shivering fire,
Still close and closer cowering, warmth is their desire.

In a costly palace, when the brave gallants dine,
They have store of good venison, with old canary wine,
With singing and music to heighten the cheer ;
Coarse bits, with grudging, are the pauper's best fare.

In a costly palace Youth is still carest
By a train of attendants which laugh at my young
Lord's jest ;
In a wretched workhouse the contrary prevails :
Does Age begin to prattle?—no man heark'neth to his tales.

In a costly palace if the child with a pin
Do but chance to prick a finger, straight the doctor is call'd in ;
In a wretched workhouse men are left to perish
For want of proper cordials, which their old age might cherish.

In a costly palace Youth enjoys his lust ;
 In a wretched workhouse Age, in corners thrust,
 Thinks upon the former days, when he was well
 to do,
 Had children to stand by him, both friends and kinsmen too.

In a costly palace Youth his temples hides
 With a new-devised peruke that reaches to his sides ;
 In a wretched workhouse Age's crown is bare,
 With a few thin locks just to fence out the cold air.

In peace, as in war, 'tis our young gallants pride,
 To walk, each one 'i the streets, with a rapier by his side,
 That none to do them injury may have pretence.
 Wretched Age, in poverty, must brook offence.

HYPOCHONDRIACUS.

By myself walking
 To myself talking,
 When as I ruminatè
 On my untoward fate,
 Scarcely seem I
 Alone sufficiently,
 Black thoughts continually
 Crowding my privacy ;
 They come unbidden,
 Like foes at a wedding,

Thrusting their faces
 In better guests' places,
 Peevish and malecontent,
 Clownish, impertinent,
 Dashing the merriment;
 So in like fashions
 Dim cogitations
 Follow and haunt me,
 Striving to daunt me.
 In my heart festering,
 In my ears whispering,
 "Thy friends are treacherous,
 Thy foes are dangerous,
 Thy dreams ominous."

Fierce Anthropophagi,
 Spectra, Diaboli,
 What scared St. Anthony,
 Hobgoblins, Lemures,
 Dreams of Antipodes,
 Night-riding Incubi
 Troubling the fantasy,
 All dire illusions
 Causing confusions;
 Figments heretical,
 Scruples fantastical,
 Doubts diabolical;
 Abaddon vexeth me,
 Mahu perplexeth me,
 Lucifer teareth me —

Jesu! Maria! liberate nos ab his diris tentationibus Inimici.

A FAREWELL TO TOBACCO.

MAY the Babylonish curse
 Straight confound my stammering verse,
 If I can a passage see
 In this word-perplexity,
 Or a fit expression find,
 Or a language to my mind,
 (Still the phrase is wide or scant)
 To take leave of thee, GREAT PLANT !
 Or in any terms relate
 Half my love, or half my hate :
 For I hate yet love thee so,
 That, whichever thing I show,
 The plain truth will seem to be
 A constrain'd hyperbole,
 And the passion to proceed
 More from a mistress than a weed.

Sooty retainer to the vine,
 Bacchus' black servant, negro fine ;
 Sorcerer, that mak'st us dote upon
 Thy begrimed complexion,
 And, for thy pernicious sake,
 More and greater oaths to break
 Than reclaimèd lovers take
 'Gainst women : thou thy siege dost lay
 Much too in the female way,
 While thou suck'st the lab'ring breath
 Faster than kisses or than death.

Thou in such a cloud dost bind us,
 That our worst foes cannot find us,

And ill fortune, that would thwart us,
Shoots at rovers, shooting at us ;
While each man, through thy height'ning steam,
Does like a smoking Etna seem,
And all about us does express
(Fancy and wit in richest dress)
A Sicilian fruitfulness.

Thou through such a mist dost show us,
That our best friends do not know us,
And, for those allowèd features,
Due to reasonable creatures,
Liken'st us to fell Chimeras
Monsters that, who see us, fear us ;
Worse than Cerberus or Geryon,
Or, who first loved a cloud, Ixion.

Bacchus we know, and we allow
His tipsy rites. But what art thou,
That but by reflex canst show
What his deity can do,
As the false Egyptian spell
Aped the true Hebrew miracle ?
Some few vapours thou may'st raise,
The weak brain may serve to amaze,
But to the reins and nobler heart
Canst nor life nor heat impart.

Brother of Bacchus, later born,
The old world was sure forlorn
Wanting thee, that aidest more
The god's victories than before
All his panthers, and the brawls
Of his piping Bacchanals.

These, as stale, we disallow,
 Or judge of thee meant : only thou
 His true Indian conquest art ;
 And, for ivy round his dart,
 The reformèd god now weaves
 A finer thyrsus of thy leaves.

Scent to match thy rich perfume
 Chemic art did ne'er presume
 Through her quaint alembic strain,
 None so sov'reign to the brain.
 Nature, that did in thee excel,
 Framed again no second smell.
 Roses, violets, but toys
 For the smaller sort of boys,
 Or for greener damsels meant ;
 Thou art the only manly scent.

Stinking'st of the stinking kind,
 Filth of the mouth and fog of the mind,
 Africa, that brags her foison,
 Breeds no such prodigious poison,
 Henbane, nightshade, both together,
 Hemlock, aconite——

Nay, rather,
 Plant divine, of rarest virtue ;
 Blisters on the tongue would hurt you.
 'Twas but in a sort I blamed thee ;
 None e'er prosper'd who defamed thee ;
 Irony all, and feign'd abuse,
 Such as perplex'd lovers use,
 At a need, when, in despair
 To paint forth their fairest fair,

Or in part but to express
 That exceeding comeliness
 Which their fancies doth so strike,
 They borrow language of dislike ;
 And, instead of Dearest Miss,
 Jewel, Honey, Sweetheart, Bliss,
 And those forms of old admiring,
 Call her Cockatrice and Siren,
 Basilisk, and all that's evil,
 Witch, Hyena, Mermaid, Devil,
 Ethiop, Wench, and Blackamoor,
 Monkey, Ape, and twenty more ;
 Friendly Trait'ress, loving Foe,—
 Not that she is truly so,
 But no other way they know
 A contentment to express,
 Borders so upon excess,
 That they do not rightly wot
 Whether it be pain or not.

Or, as men, constrain'd to part
 With what's nearest to their heart,
 While their sorrow's at the height,
 Lose discrimination quite,
 And their hasty wrath let fall,
 To appease their frantic gall,
 On the darling thing whatever
 Whence they feel it death to sever,
 Though it be, as they, perforce,
 Guiltless of the sad divorce.

For I must (nor let it grieve thee, Friendliest of plants, that I must) leave thee.
 For thy sake, TOBACCO, I
 Would do any thing but die,

And but seek to extend my days
 Long enough to sing thy praise.
 But, as she, who once hath been
 A king's consort, is a queen
 Ever after, nor will bate
 Any tittle of her state,
 Though a widow, or divorced,
 So I, from thy converse forced,
 The old name and style retain,
 A right Katherine of Spain ;
 And a seat, too, 'mongst the joye
 Of the blest Tobacco Boys ;
 Where, though I, by sour physician,
 Am debarr'd the full fruition
 Of thy favours, I may catch
 Some collateral sweets, and snatch
 Sidelong odours, that give life
 Like glances from a neighbour's wife ;
 And still live in the by-places
 And the suburbs of thy graces ;
 And in thy borders take delight,
 An unconquer'd Canaanite.

TO T. L. H-----.

A CHILD.

MODEL of thy parent dear,
 Serious infant worth a fear
 In thy unfaltering visage well
 Picturing forth the son of TEIL.

When on his forehead, firm and good,
 Motionless mark, the apple stood,
 Guileless traitor, rebel mild,
 Convict unconscious, culprit child !
 Gates that close with iron roar
 Have been to thee thy nursery door ;
 Chains that chink in cheerless cells
 Have been thy rattles and thy bells ;
 Walls contrived for giant sin
 Have hemm'd thy faultless weakness in ;
 Near thy sinless bed black Guilt
 Her discordant house hath built,
 And fill'd it with her monstrous brood—
 Sights, by thee not understood—
 Sights of fear, and of distress,
 That pass a harmless infant's guess !

But the clouds, that overcast
 Thy young morning, may not last :
 Soon shall arrive the rescuing hour
 That yields thee up to Nature's power :
 Nature, that so late doth greet thee,
 Shall in o'erflowing measure meet thee.
 She shall recompense with cost
 For every lesson thou hast lost.
 Then wandering up thy sire's loved hill,¹
 Thou shalt take thy airy fill
 Of health and pastime. *Birds shall sing
 For thy delight each May morning.*
 Mid new-yea'n'd lambkins thou shalt play
 Hardly less a lamb than they.

¹ Hampstead.

Then thy prison's lengthen'd bound
 Shall be the horizon skirting round :
 And while thou fillest thy lap with flowers,
 To make amends for wintry hours,
 The breeze, the sunshine, and the place,
 Shall from thy tender brow efface
 Each vestige of untimely care,
 That sour restraint had graven there ;
 And on thy every look impress
 A more excelling childishness.

So shall be thy days beguiled,
 THORNTON HUNT, my favourite child.

BALLAD.

FROM THE GERMAN.

THE clouds are blackening, the storms threatening,
 And ever the forest maketh a moan ;
 Billows are breaking, the damsel's heart aching,
 Thus by herself she singeth alone,
 Weeping right plenteously.

“ The world is empty, the heart is dead surely,
 In this world plainly all seemeth amiss ;
 To thy breast, holy one, take now thy little one,
 I have had earnest of all earth's bliss,
 Living right lovingly.”

DAVID IN THE CAVE OF ADULLAM.

DAVID and his three captains bold
Kept ambush once within a hold.
It was in Adullam's cave,
Nigh which no water they could have,
Nor spring, nor running brook was near
To quench the thirst that parch'd them there.
Then David, king of Israël,
Straight bethought him of a well,
Which stood beside the city gate,
At Bethlem; where, before his state
Of kingly dignity, he had
Oft drunk his fill, a shepherd lad;
But now his fierce Philistine foe
Encamp'd before it he does know.
Yet ne'er the less, with heat opprest,
Those three bold captains he address,
And wish'd that one to him would bring
Some water from his native spring.
His valiant captains instantly
To execute his will did fly.
The mighty Three the ranks broke through
Of armèd foes, and water drew
For David, their beloved king,
At his own sweet native spring.
Back through their armèd foes they haste,
With the hard-earn'd treasure graced.
But when the good king David found
What they had done, he on the ground

The water pour'd ; " Because," said he:
" That it was at the jeopardy
Of your three lives this thing ye did :
That I should drink it, God forbid !"

SALOME.

ONCE on a charger there was laid,
And brought before a royal maid,
As price of attitude and grace,
A guiltless head, a holy face.

It was on Herod's natal day,
Who o'er Judæa's land held sway.
He married his own brother's wife,
Wicked Herodias. She the life
Of John the Baptist long had sought,
Because he openly had taught
That she a life unlawful led,
Having her husband's brother wed.

This was he, that saintly John,
Who in the wilderness alone
Abiding, did for clothing wear
A garment made of camel's hair ;
Honey and locusts were his food,
And he was most, severely good.
He preachèd penitence and tears,
And waking first the sinner's fears,
Prepared a path, made smooth a way,
For his diviner Master's day.

Herod kept in princely state
His birth-day. On his throne he sate,
After the feast, beholding her
Who danced with grace peculiar ;
Fair Salome, who did excel
All in that land for dancing well.
The feastful monarch's heart was fired,
And whatsoe'er thing she desired,
Though half his kingdom it should be,
He in his pleasure swore that he
Would give the graceful Salome.
The damsel was Herodias' daughter :
She to the queen hastes, and besought her
To teach her what great gift to name.
Instructed by Herodias, came
The damsel back : to Herod said,
" Give me John the Baptist's head ;
And in a charger let it be Hither straightway brought to me."
Herod her suit would fain deny,
But for his oath's sake must comply.

When painters would by art express
Beauty in unloveliness,
Thee, Herodias' daughter, thee,
They fittest subject take to be.
They give thy form and features grace ;
But ever in thy beauteous face
They show a steadfast cruel gaze,
An eye unpitying ; and amaze
In all beholders deep they mark,
That thou betrayest not one spark
Of feeling for the ruthless deed,
That did thy praiseful dance succeed.

For on the head they make you look,
As if a sullen joy you took,
A cruel triumph, wicked pride,
That for your sport a saint had died.

LINES

SUGGESTED BY A PICTURE OF TWO FEMALES BY LIONARDO DA VINCI.

THE lady Blanch, regardless of all her lover's fears,
To the Urs'line convent hastens, and long the Abbess hears :

“O Blanch, my child, repent ye of the courtly life ye lead.”

Blanch look'd on a rose-bud and little seem'd to heed.

She look'd on the rose-bud, she look'd round, and thought

On all her heart had whisper'd, and all the Nun had taught.

“I am worshipp'd by lovers, and brightly shines my fame,

“All Christendom resoundeth the noble Blanch's name.

“Nor shall I quickly wither like the rose-bud from the tree,

“My queen-like graces shining when my beauty's gone from me.

"But when the sculptured marble is raised o'er my head,
 "And the matchless Blanch lies lifeless among the noble dead,
 "This saintly lady Abbess hath made me justly fear,
 "It nothing will avail me that I were worshipping'd here."

 LINES

ON THE SAME PICTURE BEING REMOVED TO MAKE PLACE FOR A PORTRAIT OF A LADY BY TITIAN.

WHO art thou, fair one, who usurp'st the place
 Of Blanch, the lady of the matchless grace?
 Come, fair and pretty, tell to me,
 Who, in thy life-time, thou might'st be.
 Thou pretty art and fair,
 But with the lady Blanch thou never must compare.
 No need for Blanch her history to tell;
 Whoever saw her face, they there did read it well.
 But when I look on thee, I only know
 There lived a pretty maid some hundred years ago.

 LINES

ON THE CELEBRATED PICTURE BY LIONARDO DA VINCI, CALLED THE VIRGIN OF THE ROCKS.

WHILE young John runs to greet
 The greater Infant's feet.

The Mother standing by, with trembling passion
Of devout admiration,
Beholds the engaging mystic play, and pretty adoration ;
Nor knows as yet the full event
Of those so low beginnings,
From whence we date our winnings,
But wonders at the intent
Of those new rites, and what that strange child-worship meant.
But at her side
An angel doth abide,
With such a perfect joy
As no dim doubts alloy,
An intuition,
A glory, an amenity,
Passing the dark condition
Of blind humanity,
As if he surely knew
All the blest wonder should ensue,
Or he had lately left the upper sphere,
And had read all the sovran schemes and divine riddles there.

ON THE SAME.

MATERNAL lady with the virgin grace,
Heaven-born thy Jesus seemeth sure,
And thou a virgin pure.
Lady most perfect, when thy sinless face
Men look upon, they wish to be
A Catholic, Madonna fair, to worship thee.

PINDARIC ODE TO THE TREAD-MILL.

I.

INSPIRE my spirit, Spirit of De Foe,
 That sang the pillory,
 In loftier strains to show
 A more sublime Machine
 Than that, where thou wert seen,
 With neck out-stretcht and shoulders ill awry,
 Courting coarse plaudits from vile crowds below- -
 A most unseemly show !

II.

In such a place
 Who could expose thy face,
 Historiographer of deathless Crusoe !
 That paint'st the strife
 And all the naked ills of savage life,
 Far above Rousseau ?
 Rather myself had stood
 In that ignoble wood,
 Bare to the mob, on holyday or high day.
 If nought else could atone
 For waggish libel,
 I swear on Bible,
 I would have spared him for thy sake alone,
 Man Friday !

III.

Our ancestors' were sour days,
 Great Master of Romance !
 A milder doom had fallen to thy chance
 In our days :

Thy sole assignment
 Some solitary confinement,
 (Not worth thy care a carrot,)
 Where in world-hidden cell
 Thou thy own Crusoe might have acted well,
 Only without the parrot ;
 By sure experience taught to know,
 Whether the qualms thou mak'st him feel were truly such or no.

IV.

But stay ! methinks in statelier measure—
 A more companionable pleasure—
 I see thy steps the mighty Tread-Mill trace,
 (The subject of my song,
 Delay'd however long,)
 And some of thine own race,
 To keep thee company, thou bring'st with thee along.
 There with thee go,
 Link'd in like sentence,
 With regulated pace and footing slow,
 Each old acquaintance,
 Rogue—harlot—thief—that live to future ages ;
 Through many a labour'd tome,
 Rankly embalm'd in thy too natural pages.
 Faith, friend De Foe, thou art quite at home !
 Not one of thy great offspring thou dost lack,
 From pirate Singleton to pilfering Jack.
 Here Flandrian Moll her brazen incest brags :
 Vice-stript Roxana, penitent in rags,
 There points to Amy, treading equal chimes,
 The faithful handmaid to her faithless crimes.

V.

Incompetent my song to raise
 To its just height thy praise,
 Great Mill!
 That by thy motion proper,
 (No thanks to wind, or sail, or working rill,
 Grinding that stubborn corn, the Human will,
 Turn'st out men's consciences,
 That were begrimed before, as clean and sweet
 As flour from purest wheat,
 Into thy hopper.
 All reformation short of thee but nonsense is.
 Or human, or divine.

VI.

Compared with thee,
 What are the labours of that Jumping Sect,
 Which feeble laws connive at rather than respect!
 Thou dost not bump,
 Or jump,
 But walk men into virtue; betwixt crime
 And slow repentance giving breathing time,
 And leisure to be good;
 Instructing with discretion demireps
 How to direct their steps.

VII.

Thou best Philosopher made out of wood!
 Not that which framed the tub,
 Where sate the Cynic cub,
 With nothing in his bosom sympathetic;
 But from those groves derived, I deem,
 Where Plato nursed his dream

Of immortality ;
 Seeing that clearly
 Thy system all is merely Peripatetic.
 Thou to thy pupils dost such lessons give
 Of how to live
 With temperance, sobriety, morality,
 (A new art,)
 That from thy school, by force of virtuous deeds
 Each Tyro now proceeds
 A " Walking Stewart !"

GOING OR GONE.

I.

FINE merry franiions,
 Wanton companions,
 My days are ev'n banyans
 With thinking upon ye !
 How Death, that last stinger,
 Finis-writer, end-bringer,
 Has laid his chill-finger,
 Or is laying on ye.

II.

There's rich Kitty Wheatley,
 With footing it featly
 That took me completely,
 She sleeps in the Kirk House ;

And poor Polly Perkin,
 Whose Dad was still firking
 The jolly ale firkin,
 She's gone to the Work-house ;

III.

Fine Gard'ner, Ben Carter
 (In ten counties no smarter)
 Has ta'en his departure
 For Proserpine's orchards :
 And Lily, postilion,
 With cheeks of vermilion,
 Is one of a million
 That fill up the church-yards ;

IV.

And, lusty as Dido,
 Fat Clemitson's widow
 Flits now a small shadow
 By Stygian hid ford ;
 And good Master Clapton
 Has thirty years napt on,
 The ground he last hapt on,
 Intomb'd by fair Widford ;

V.

And gallant Tom Dockwra,
 Of Nature's finest crockery,
 Now but thin air and mockery,
 Lurks by Avernus,
 Whose honest grasp of hand
 Still, while his life did stand,
 At friend's or foe's command,
 Almost did burn us.

VI.

Roger de Coverley
 Not more good man than he ;
 Yet has he equally
 Push'd for Cocytus,
 With drivelling Worrall,
 And wicked old Dorrell,
 'Gainst whom I've a quarrel,
 Whose end might affright us !—

VII.

Kindly hearts have I known ;
 Kindly hearts, they are flown ;
 Here and there if but one
 Linger yet uneffaced,
 Imbecile tottering elves,
 Soon to be wreck'd on shelves,
 These scarce are half themselves,
 With age and care crazed.

VIII.

But this day Fanny Hutton
 Her last dress has put on ;
 'Ter fine lessons forgotten,
 She died, as the dunce died :
 And prim Betsy Chambers,
 Decay'd in her members,
 No longer remembers
 Things, as she once did :

IX.

And prudent Miss Wither
 Not in jest now doth wither,
 And soon must go—whither
 Nor I well, nor you know ;

And flaunting Miss Waller,
That soon must befall her,
 Whence none can recall her,
 Though proud once as Juno!

ANGEL HELP.¹

THIS rare tablet doth include
 Poverty with Sanctitude.
 Past midnight this poor maid hath spun,
 And yet the work is not half-done,
 Which must supply from earnings scant
 A feeble bed-rid parent's want.
 Her sleep-charged eyes exemption ask,
 And Holy hands take up the task ;
 Unseen the rock and spindle ply,
 And do her earthly drudgery.
 Sleep, saintly poor one ! sleep, sleep on ;
 And, waking, find thy labours done.
 Perchance she knows it by her dreams ;
 Her eye hath caught the golden gleams,
 Angelic presence testifying,
 That round her everywhere are flying ;

¹ Suggested by a drawing in the possession of Charles Aders, Esq., in which is represented the legend of a poor female Saint ; who, having spun past midnight, to maintain a bed-rid mother, has fallen asleep from fatigue, and Angels are finishing her work. In another part of the chamber an angel is tending a lily, the emblem of purity.

Ostents from which she may presume,
 That much of heaven is in the room.
 Skirting her own bright hair they run,
 And to the sunny add more sun :
 Now on that aged face they fix,
 Streaming from the Crucifix ;
 The flesh-clogg'd spirit disabusing,
 Death-disarming sleeps infusing,
 Prelibations, foretastes high,
 And equal thoughts to live or die.
 Gardener bright from Eden's bower,
 Tend with care that lily flower ;
 To its leaves and root infuse
 Heaven's sunshine, Heaven's dews.
 'Tis a type, and 'tis a pledge,
 Of a crowning privilege.
 Careful as that lily flower,
 This Maid must keep her precious dower ;
 Live a sainted Maid, or die
 Martyr to virginity.

ON AN INFANT DYING AS SOON AS BORN.

I SAW where in the shroud did lurk
 A curious frame of Nature's work.
 A flow'ret crushed in the bud,
 A nameless piece of Babyhood,
 Was in her cradle-coffin lying ;
 Extinct, with scarce the sense of dying

So soon to exchange the imprisoning womb
For darker closets of the tomb!
She did but ope an eye, and put
A clear beam forth, then straight up shut
For the long dark: ne'er more to see
Through glasses of mortality.
Riddle of destiny, who can show
What thy short visit meant, or know
What thy errand here below?
Shall we say, that Nature blind
Check'd her hand, and changed her mind,
Just when she had exactly wrought
A finish'd pattern without fault?
Could she flag, or could she tire,
Or lack'd she the Promethean fire
(With her nine moons' long workings sicken'd)
That should thy little limbs have quicken'd?
Limbs so firm, they seem'd to assure
Life of health and days mature:
Woman's self in miniature!
Limbs so fair, they might supply
(Themselves now but cold imagery)
The sculptor to make Beauty by.
Or did the stern-eyed Fate descry,
That babe, or mother, one must die;
So in mercy left the stock,
And cut the branch; to save the shock
Of young years widow'd; and the pain
When Single State comes back again
To the lone man, who, 'reft of wife,
Thenceforward drags a maimed life?
The economy of Heaven is dark;
And wisest clerks have miss'd the mark.

Why Human Buds, like this, should fall,
More brief than fly ephemeral,
That has his day ; while shrivell'd crones
Stiffen with age to stocks and stones ;
And crabbed use the conscience sears
In sinners of an hundred years.
Mother's prattle, mother's kiss,
Baby fond, thou ne'er wilt miss.
Rites, which custom does impose,
Silver bells and baby clothes ;
Coral redder than those lips,
Which pale death did late eclipse ;
Music framed for infants' glee,
Whistle never tuned for thee ;
Though thou want'st not, thou shalt have them,
Loving hearts were they which gave them.
Let not one be missing ; nurse
See them laid upon the hearse
Of infant slain by doom perverse.
Why should kings and nobles have
Pictured trophies to their grave,
And we, churls, to thee deny
Thy pretty toys with thee to lie,
A more harmless vanity !

THE CHRISTENING.

ARRAY'D—a half-angelic sight—
In vests of pure Baptismal white,
The Mother to the Font doth bring
The little helpless, nameless thing,

With hushes soft and mild caressing,
 At once to get—a name and blessing.
 Close by the babe the Priest doth stand,
 The Cleansing Water at his hand,
 Which must assoil the soul within
 From every stain of Adam's sin.
 'The Infant eyes the mystic scenes,
 Nor knows what all this wonder means ;
 And now he smiles, as if to say
 " I am a Christian made this day ;"
 Now frightened clings to Nurse's hold,
 Shrinking from the water cold,
 Whose virtues, rightly understood,
 Are, as Bethesda's waters, good.
 Strange words — The World, The Flesh, The Devil—
 Poor Babe, what can it know of Evil ?
 But we must silently adore
 Mysterious truths, and not explore.
 Enough for him, in after-times,
 When he shall read these artless rhymes,
 If, looking back upon this day
 With quiet conscience, he can say—
 " I have in part redeem'd the pledge
 Of my Baptismal privilege ;
 And more and more will strive to flee
 All which my Sponsors kind did then renounce for me."

THE YOUNG CATECHIST.¹

WHILE this tawny Ethiop prayeth,
Painter, who is she that stayeth
By, with skin of whitest lustre,
Sunny locks, a shining cluster,
Saint-like seeming to direct him
To the Power that must protect him?
Is she of the Heaven-born Three,
Meek Hope, strong Faith, sweet Charity?
Or some Cherub?—

They you mention
Far transcend my weak invention.
'Tis a simple Christian child,
Missionary young and mild,
From her stock of Scriptural knowledge,
Bible-taught without a college,
Which by reading she could gather
Teaches him to say OUR FATHER
To the common Parent, who Colour not respects, nor hue.
White and black in Him have part,
Who looks not to the skin, but heart.

TO A YOUNG FRIEND,

ON HER TWENTY-FIRST BIRTHDAY.

CROWN me a cheerful goblet, while I pray
A blessing on thy years, young Isola ;
Young, but no more a child. How swift have flown
To me thy girlish times, a woman grown
Beneath my heedless eyes ! in vain I rack
My fancy to believe the almanack,
That speaks thee Twenty-One. Thou shouldst have still

Remain'd a child, and at thy sovereign will Gambol'd about our house, as in times past.
Ungrateful Emma, to grow up so fast,
Hastening to leave thy friends !—for which intent
Fond Runagate, be this thy punishment :
After some thirty years, spent in such bliss
As this earth can afford, where still we miss
Something of joy entire, may'st thou grow old
As we whom thou hast left ! That wish was cold.
O far more aged and wrinkled, till folks say,
Looking upon thee reverend in decay,
“ This Dame, for length of days, and virtues rare,
With her respected Grandsire may compare.”
Grandchild of that respected Isola,
Thou shouldst have had about thee on this day
Kind looks of Parents, to congratulate
Their Pride grown up to woman's grave estate.

But they have died, and left thee, to advance
 Thy fortunes how thou may'st, and owe to chance
 The friends which Nature grudged, and thou wilt find,

Or make such, Emma, if I am not blind
 To thee and thy deservings. That last strain
 Had too much sorrow in it. Fill again
 Another cheerful goblet, while I say
 "Health, and twice health. to our lost Isola!"

TO THE SAME.

EXTERNAL gifts of fortune or of face
 Maiden, in truth, thou hast not much to show ;
 Much fairer damsels have I known, and know,
 And richer may be found in every place.
 In thy mind seek thy beauty and thy wealth.
 Sincereness lodgeth there, the soul's best health.
 O guard that treasure above gold or pearl,
 Laid up secure from moths and worldly stealth—
 And take my benison, plain-hearted girl.

SHE IS GOING.

For their eldest Sister's hair
 Martha does a wreath prepare
 Of bridal rose, ornate and gay
 To-morrow is the wedding day.
 She is going.

Mary, youngest of the three,
 Laughing idler, full of glee,
 Arm in arm does fondly chain her,
 Thinking (poor trifer!) to detain her;
 But she's going.

Vex not, maidens, nor regret
 Thus to part with Margaret.
 Charms like yours can never stay
 Long within doors; and one day
 You'll be going.

TO A FRIEND ON HIS MARRIAGE.

[1833.]

WHAT makes a happy wedlock? What has fate
 Not given to thee in thy well-chosen mate?
 Good sense—good humour;—these are trivial things,
 Dear M—— that each trite encomiast sings.
 But she hath these, and more: a mind exempt,
 From every low-bred passion, where contempt,
 Nor envy, nor detraction, ever found
 A harbour yet; an understanding sound;
 Just views of right and wrong; perception full
 Of the deform'd, and of the beautiful,
 In life and manners; wit above her sex,
 Which, as a gem, her sprightly converse decks;
 Exuberant fancies, prodigal of mirth,
 To gladden woodland walk, or winter hearth;
 A noble nature, conqueror in the strife
 Of conflict with a hard discouraging life,
 Strengthening the veins of virtue, past the power
 Of those whose days have been one silken hour,

Spoil'd fortune's pamper'd offspring; a keen sense
 Alike of benefit, and of offence,
 With reconcilment quick, that instant springs
 From the charged heart with nimble angel wings;
 While grateful feelings, like a signet sign'd
 By a strong hand, seem burn'd into her mind.
 If these, dear friend, a dowry can confer
 Richer than land, thou hast them all in her;
 And beauty, which some hold the chiefest boon,
 Is in thy bargain for a make-weight thrown.

[In a leaf of a quarto edition of the "Lives of the Saints, written in Spanish by the learned and reverend father, Alfonso Villegas, Divine, of the Order of St. Dominick, set forth in English by John Heigham, Anno 1630," bought at a Catholic book-shop in Duke Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, I found, carefully inserted, a painted flower, seemingly coeval with the book itself; and did not, for some time, discover that it opened in the middle, and was the cover to a very humble draught of a St. Anne, with the Virgin and Child; doubtless the performance of some poor but pious Catholic, whose meditations it assisted.]

O LIFT with reverent hand that tarnish'd flower,
 That shrines beneath her modest canopy
 Memorials dear to Romish piety;
 Dim specks, rude shapes, of Saints! in fervent hour
 The work perchance of some meek devotee,
 Who, poor in worldly treasures to set forth
 The sanctities she worshipp'd to their worth,
 In this imperfect tracery might see
 Hints, that all Heaven did to her sense reveal.
 Cheap gifts best fit poor givers. We are told
 That in their way approved the offerer's zeal.
 True love shows costliest, where the means are scant;
 And, in their reckoning, they abound, who want.

THE TOMB OF DOUGLAS.

(SEE THE TRAGEDY OF THAT NAME.)

WHEN her son, her Douglas, died,
To the steep rock's fearful side
Fast the frantic mother hied—

O'er her blooming warrior dead
Many a tear did Scotland shed,
And shrieks of long and loud lament
From her Grampian hills she sent.

Like one awakening from a trance
She met the shock of Lochlin's¹ lance ;
On her rude invader foe
Return'd an hundredfold the blow,
Drove the taunting spoiler home ;
Mournful thence she took her way
To do observance at the tomb
Where the son of Douglas lay

Round about the tomb did go
In solemn state and order slow,
Silent pace, and black attire,
Earl or Knight, or good Esquire :
Whoe'er by deeds of valour done
In battle had high honours won ;
Whoe'er in their pure veins could trace
The blood of Douglas' noble race.

¹ Denmark.

With them the flower of minstrels came,
And to their cunning harps did frame
In doleful numbers piercing rhymes,
Such strains as in the older times
Had soothed the spirit of Fingal,
Echoing thro' his father's hall.

“ Scottish maidens, drop a tear
O'er the beauteous Hero's bier !
Brave youth, and comely 'bove compare,
All golden shone his burnish'd hair ;
Valour and smiling courtesy
Play'd in the sunbeams of his eye.
Closed are those eyes that shone so fair,
And stain'd with blood his yellow hair.
Scottish maidens, drop a tear
O'er the beauteous Hero's bier !

“ Not a tear, I charge you, shed
For the false Glenalvon dead ;
Unpitied let Glenalvon lie,
Foul stain to arms and chivalry !

“ Behind his back the traitor came,
And Douglas died without his fame.
Young light of Scotland early spent,
Thy country thee shall long lament,
And oft to after-times shall tell,
In Hope's sweet prime my Hero tell.”

TO CHARLES LLOYD,

AN UNEXPECTED VISITOR.

ALONE, obscure, without a friend,
A cheerless, solitary thing,
Why seeks my Lloyd the stranger out?
What offering can the stranger bring

Of social scenes, home-bred delights,
That him in aught compensate may
For Stowey's pleasant winter nights,
For loves and friendships far away?

In brief oblivion to forego
Friends such as thine, so justly dear,
And be awhile with me content
To stay, a kindly loiterer, here.

For this a gleam of random joy
Hath flush'd my unaccustomed cheek :
And, with an o'ercharged bursting heart,
I feel the thanks I cannot speak.

O ! sweet are all the Muses' lays,
And sweet the charm of matin bird---
'Twas long since these estrangèd ears
The sweeter voice of friend had heard.

The voice hath spoke : the pleasant sounds
 In memory's ear in after-time
 Shall live, to sometimes rouse a tear,
 And sometimes prompt an honest rhyme.

For when the transient charm is fled,
 And when the little week is o'er,
 To cheerless, friendless solitude
 When I return, as heretofore.

Long, long, within my aching heart,
 The grateful sense shall cherish'd be ;
 I'll think less meanly of myself,
 That Lloyd will sometimes think on me.

THE SELF-ENCHANTED.

I HAD a sense in dreams of a beauty rare,
 Whom Fate had spell-bound, and rooted there,
 Stooping, like some enchanted theme,
 Over the marge of that crystal stream,
 Where the blooming Greek, to Echo blind,
 With Self-love fond, had to waters pined,
 Ages had waked, and ages slept,
 And that bending posture still she kept :
 For her eyes she may not turn away,
 Till a fairer object shall pass that way,
 Till an image more beauteous this world can show,
 Than her own which she sees in the mirror below.
 Pore on, fair Creature ! for ever pore :
 Nor dream to be disenchanted more :
 For vain is expectance, and wish in vain,
 'Till a new Narcissus can come again.

TO LOUISA M——.
WHOM I USED TO CALL "MONKEY."

LOUISA, serious grown and mild,
I knew you once a romping child,
Obstreperous much, and very wild.
Then you would clamber up my knees,
And strive with every art to tease,
When every art of yours could please.
Those things would scarce be proper now.
But they are gone, I know not how,
And woman's written on your brow.
Time draws his finger o'er the scene ;
But I can not forget between
The thing to me you once have been ;
Each sportive sally, wild escape,—
The scoff, the banter, and the jape,—
And antics of my gamesome Ape.

EPITAPH UPON A YOUNG LADY,
WHO LIVED NEGLECTED AND DIED OBSCURE.

UNDER this cold marble stone
Lie the sad remains of one
Who, when alive, by few or none
Was lov'd, as lov'd she might have been
If she prosp'rous days had seen,
Or had thriving been, I ween.
Only this cold funereal stone,
'Tells she was belov'd by one,
Who on the marble carves his moan.

TO BERNARD BARTON.

WITH A COLOURED PRINT.¹

WHEN last you left your Woodbridge pretty,
 To stare at sights, and see the City,
 If I your meaning understood,
 You wish'd a Picture, cheap, but good ;
 The colouring ? decent ; clear, not muddy ;
 To suit a Poet's quiet study,
 Where Books and Prints for delectation
 Hang, rather than vain ostentation.
 The subject ? what I pleased, if comely ;
 But something scriptural and homely :
 A sober Piece, not gay or wanton,
 For winter fire-sides to descant on ;
 The theme so scrupulously handled,
 A Quaker might look on unscandal'd ;
 Such as might satisfy Ann Knight,
 And classic Mitford just not fright.
 Just such a one I've found, and send it
 If liked, I give—if not, but lend it
 The moral ? nothing can be sounder.
 The fable ? 'tis its own expounder—
 A Mother talking to her Chit,
 Some good book, and explaining it.
 He, silly urchin, tired of lesson,
 His learning lays no mighty stress on

¹ From the venerable and ancient Manufactory of Carrington Bowles ; some of my readers may recognise it.

But seems to hear not what he hears ;
 Thrusting his fingers in his ears,
 Like Obstinate, that perverse funny one,
 In honest parable of Bunyan.
 His working Sister, more sedate,
 Listens ; but in a kind of state,
 The painter meant for steadiness,
 But has a tinge of sullenness ;
 And, at first sight, she seems to brook
 As ill her needle, as he his book.
 This is the picture. For the Frame—
 'Tis not ill-suited to the same ;
 Oak-carved, not gilt, for fear of falling ;
 Old fashion'd ; plain, yet not appalling ;
 And sober, as the Owner's Calling.

FRAGMENT.

I saw him in the day of Worcester fight,
 Whither he came at twice seven years,
 Under the discipline of Lord Falkland,
 (His uncle by the mother's side.
 Who gave his youthful politics a bent
 Quite from the principles of his father's house :)
 There did I see this valiant Lamb of Mars,
 This sprig of honour, this unbearded John,
 This veteran in green years, this sprout, this Woodvil,
 (With dreadless ease guiding a fire-hot steed,
 Which seemed to scorn the manage of a boy,)
 Prick forth with such a mirth into the field,

To mingle rivalship and acts of war
 Even with the sinewy masters of the art,—
 You would have thought the work of blood had been
 A play-game merely, and the rabid Mars
 Had put his harmful hostile nature off,
 To instruct raw youths in images of war,
 And practice of the unedg'd player's foils.
 The rough fanatic and blood-practised soldiery,
 Seeing such hope and virtue in the boy,
 Disclos'd their ranks to let him pass unhurt,
 Checking their swords' uncivil injuries,
 As loth to mar that curious workmanship
 Of Valour's beauty portrayed in his face

TO CLARA N——.

THE gods have made me most unmusical,
 With feelings that respond not to the call
 Of stringed harp, or voice,—obtuse and mute
 To hautboy, sackbut, dulcimer, and flute;
 King David's lyre, that made the madness flee
 From Saul, had been but a jew's-harp to me:
 Theorbos, violins, French horns, guitars,
 Leave in my wounded ears inflicted scars.
 I hate those trills, and shakes, and sounds that float
 Upon the captive air; I know no note,
 Nor ever shall, whatever folks may say,
 Of the strange mysteries of Sol and Fa.
 I sit at oratorios like a fish,
 Incapable of sound, and only wish
 The thing was over. Yet do I admire,
 O tuneful daughter of a tuneful sire,

Thy painful labours in a science, which
 To your deserts I pray may make you rich
 As much as you are loved, and add a grace
 To the most musical Novello race.
 Women lead men by the nose, some cynics say
 You draw them by the ear,—a delicates way.

C. LAMB.

TO MARGARET W——.

MARGARET,—in happy hour
 Christen'd from that humble flower
 Which we a daisy call,—
 May thy pretty namesake be
 In all things a type of thee,
 And image thee in all !

Like it you show a modest face,
 An unpretending native grace.
 The tulip, and the pink,
 The china and the damask rose,
 And every flaunting flower that blows,
 In the comparing shrink.

Of lowly fields you think no scorn,
 Yet gayest gardens would adorn,
 And grace wherever set.
 Home-seated in your lonely bower,
 Or wedded—a transplanted flower—
 I bless you, Margaret !

CHARLES LAMB.

IN TABULAM EXIMII PICTORIS R. B. HAYDONI IN QUA
SOLYMEU ADVENIENTE DOMINO PALMAS IN VIA PROSTERNENTES MIRA ARTE DEPINGUNTUR.

QUID vult iste equitatus? et quid velit iste virorum
Palmifora ingens turba et vox tremebunda Hosanna?
Hosanna Christo semper, semperque canamus.
Palma fuit senior Pictor celeberrimus olim;
Sed palmam cedat, modo si foret ille superstes
Palma Haydone tibi: tu palmas omnibus aufers.
Palma negata macrum, donataque reddit opimum
Si simul incipiat cum fama increscere corpus
Tu cito pinguesces, fies et amicule, obesus.
Affectant lauros pictores atque poetæ,
Sin laurum invideant (sed quis tibi) laurigerentes
Pro lauro palma viridanti tempora ligas.

Carolagnulus.

TRANSLATION OF THE ABOVE.

WHAT rider's that? and who those myriads bringing Him on his way, with palms, Hosanna singing?
Hosanna to Christ! Heaven, Earth shall still be ringing.

IN days of old Old Palma won renown:
But Palma's self must yield the painter's crown,
Haydon, to thee: Thy palms put every other down.

If Flaccus' sentence with the truth agree,
That palms awarded make men plump to be,
Friend Horace, Haydon soon shall match in bulk with thee.

Painters with poets for the laurel vie ;
 But should the laureate band thy claims deny,
 Wear thou thine own green palm, Haydon, triumphantly.

TO C. ADERS, ESQ.,

ON HIS COLLECTION OF PAINTINGS BY THE OLD GERMAN MASTERS.

FRIENDLIEST of men, Aders, I never come
 Within the precincts of this sacred room,
 But I am struck with a religious fear,
 Which says, " Let no profane eye enter here."
 With imagery from Heaven the walls are clothed,
 Making the things of time seem vile and loathed.
 Spare saints, whose bodies seem sustained by love,
 With martyrs old in meek procession move.

Here kneels a weeping Magdalen, less bright
 To human sense for her blurr'd cheeks ; in sight
 Of eyes new-touch'd by Heaven, more winning fair
 Than when her beauty was her only care.
 A hermit here strange mysteries doth unlock
 In desert sole, his knees worn by the rock.
 There angel harps are sounding, while below
 Palm-bearing virgins in white order go.

Madonnas, varied with so chaste design,
While all are different, each seems genuine,
And hers the only Jesus : hard outline
And rigid form, by Durer's hand subdued
To matchless grace and sacro-sanctitude,—
Durer, who makes thy slighted Germany
Vie with the praise of paint-proud Italy.

Whoever interest here, no more presume
To name a parlour or a drawing-room :
But, bending lowly to each holy story,
Make this thy chapel and thine oratory.

PROLOGUES, &c.

I.—PROLOGUE TO “ANTONIO.”

“Ladies, ye’ve seen how Guzman’s consort died,
Poor victim of a Spanish brother’s pride,
When Spanish honour through the world was blown,
And Spanish beauty for the best was known.¹
In that romantic, unenlightened time,
*A breach of promise*² was a sort of crime—
Which of you handsome English ladies here,
But deem the penance bloody and severe?
A whimsical old Saragossa³ fashion,
That a dead father’s dying inclination
Should live to thwart a living daughter’s passion⁴
Unjustly on the sex *we*⁵ men exclaim,
Rail at *your*⁶ vices, and commit the same;—
Man is a promise-breaker from the womb,
And goes a promise-breaker to the tomb—
What need we instance here the lover’s vow,
The sick Man’s purpose, or the great man’s bow?⁷
The truth by few examples best is shown—
Instead of many which are better known,
Take poor Jack Incident, that’s dead and gone.

² “For which the heroine died.”

³ In Spain!!

⁴ Two neat lines.

⁵ Or you.

⁶ Or our, as they have altered it.

⁷ Antithesis!!—C. L.

Jack, of dramatic genius justly vain,
 Purchased a renter's share at Drury Lane ;
 A prudent man in every other matter,
 Known at his club-room for an honest hatter ;
 Humane and courteous, led a civil life,
 And has been seldom known to beat his wife ;
 But Jack is now grown quite another man,
 Frequents the green-room, knows the plot and plan.

Of each new piece,
 And has been seen to talk with Sheridan !
 In at the play-house just at six he pops,
 And never quits it till the curtain drops,
 Is never absent on the author's night,
 Knows actresses and actors too——by sight ;
 So humble, that with Suett he'll confer,
 Or take a pipe with plain Jack Bannister ;
 Nay, with an author has been known so free,
 He once suggested a catastrophe—
 In short, John dabbled till his head was turn'd :
 His wife remonstrated, his neighbours mourned,
 His customers were dropping off apace,
 And Jack's affairs began to wear a piteous face.

One night his wife began a curtain lecture :
 ' My dearest Johnny, husband, spouse, protector,
 Take pity on your helpless babes and me,
 Save us from ruin, you from bankruptcy—
 Look to your business, leave these cursed plays,
 And try again your old industrious ways.'

Jack, who was always scar'd at the Gazette,
 And had some bits of skull uninjured yet,
 Promis'd amendment, vow'd his wife spake reason,
 ' He would not see another play that season.'

Three stubborn fortnights Jack his promise kept,
 Was late and early in his shop, eat, slept,

And walk'd and talk'd, like ordinary men ;
 No wit, but John the hatter once again—
 Visits his club : when lo ! one fatal night
 His wife with horror view'd the well-known sight—
 John's hat, wig, snuff-box—well she knew his tricks—
 And Jack decamping at the hour of six.
 Just at the counter's edge a playbill lay,
 Announcing that ' Pizarro ' was the play—
 ' O Johnny, Johnny, this is your old doing.'
 Quoth Jack, ' Why what the devil storm's a-brewing ?
 About a harmless play why all this fright ?
 I'll go and see it, if it's but for spite—
 Zounds, woman ! Nelson's¹ to be there to night.'

II.—PROLOGUE TO COLERIDGE'S TRAGEDY OF REMORSE.

THERE are, I am told, who sharply criticize
 Our modern theatres' unwieldy size.
 We players shall scarce plead guilty to that charge,
 Who think a house can never be too large :
 Grieved when a rant, that's worth a nation's ear,
 Shakes some prescribed Lyceum's petty sphere ;
 And pleased to mark the grin from space to space
 Spread epidemic o'er a town's broad face.

¹ "A good clap-trap. Nelson has exhibited two or three times at both theatres—and advertised himself."—C. L.

O might old Betterton or Booth return
To view our structures from their silent urn,
Could Quin come stalking from Elysian glades,
Or Garrick get a day-rule from the shades,
Where now, perhaps, in mirth which spirits approve,
He imitates the ways of men above,
And apes the actions of our upper coast,
As in his days of flesh he play'd the ghost :
How might they bless our ampler scope to please,
And hate their own old shrunk-up audiences.
Their houses yet were palaces to those
Which Ben and Fletcher for their triumphs chose.
Shakspeare, who wish'd a kingdom for a stage,
Like giant pent in disproportion'd cage,
Mourn'd his contracted strengths and crippled rage.
He who could tame his vast ambition down
To please some scatter'd gleanings of a town,
And if some hundred auditors supplied
Their meagre meed of claps, was satisfied,
How had he felt, when that dread curse of Lear's
Had burst tremendous on a thousand ears,
While deep-struck wonder from applauding bands
Returned the tribute of as many hands !
Rude were his guests ; he never made his bow
To such an audience as salutes us now.
He lack'd the balm of labour, female praise.
Few ladies in his time frequented plays,
Or came to see a youth with awkward art
And shrill sharp pipe burlesque the woman's part.
The very use, since so essential grown,
Of painted scenes, was to his stage unknown.
The air-blest castle, round whose wholesome crest,
The martlet, guest of summer, chose her nest—
The forest walks of Arden's fair domain,

Where Jaques fed his solitary vein,—
 No pencil's aid as yet had dared supply,
 Seen only by the intellectual eye.
 Those scenic helps, denied to Shakspeare's page,
 Our Author owes to a more liberal age.
 Nor pomp nor circumstance are wanting here ;
 'Tis for himself alone that he must fear.
 Yet shall remembrance cherish the just pride,
 That (be the laurel granted or denied)
 He first essay'd in this distinguish'd fane
 Severer muses and a tragic strain.

III.—EPILOGUE TO "THE WIFE."

WRITTEN BY CHARLES LAMB. SPOKEN BY MISS ELLEN TREE.

WHEN first our Bard his simple will express'd,
 That I should in his Heroine's robes be dress'd,
 My fears were with my vanity at strife,
 How I could act that untried part—a "Wife."
 But Fancy to the Grison hills me drew,
 Where Mariana like a wild flower grew,
 Nursing her garden kindred ; so far I
 Liked her condition, willing to comply
 With that sweet single life ; when, with a cranch,
 Down came that thundering, crashing, avalanche,
 Startling my mountain project ! "Take this spade,"
 Said Fancy then ; "dig low, adventurous Maid,

For hidden wealth." I did ; and, Ladies, lo !
 Was e'er romantic female's fortune so,
 To dig a life-warm Lover from the—snow? }

A wife and Princess see me next, beset
 With subtle toils, in an Italian net ;
 While knavish Courtiers, stung with rage or fear,
 Distill'd lip-poison in a husband's ear.
 I ponder'd on the boiling Southern vein ;
 Racks, cords, stilettos, rush'd upon my brain !
 By poor, good, weak Antonio, too disown'd—
 I dream'd each night, I should be Desdemona'd :
 And, being in Mantua, thought upon the shop,
 Whence fair Verona's youth his breath did stop :
 And what if Leonardo, in full scorn,
 Some lean Apothecary should suborn
 To take my hated life ? A " tortoise " hung Before my eyes, and in my ears scaled " Alligators " } rung.

But my Othello, to his vows more zealous—
 Twenty Iagos could not make him jealous !

New raised to reputation, and to life.
 At your commands behold me, without strife,
 Well-pleased, and ready to repeat—the " Wife." }

SATIRICAL AND HUMOROUS
PIECES.

SATIRICAL AND HUMOROUS
PIECES.

TO SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH.

THOUGH thou'rt like Judas, an apostate black,
In the resemblance one thing thou dost lack :
When he had gotten his ill-purchased pelf,
He went away, and wisely hanged himself.
This thou may'st do at last ; yet much I doubt,
If thou hast any bowels to gush out !

WRITTEN IN A COPY OF "CÆLEBS."

If ever I marry a wife,
I'd marry a landlord's daughter ;
For then I may sit in the bar
And drink cold brandy and water.

CUIQUE SUUM.

ADSCISCIT sibi divitias et opes alienas

Fur, rapiens, spolians, quod mihi, quodque tibi, Proprium erat, temnens hæc verba, meumque,
tuumque ;

Omne suum est : tandem cuique suum tribuit,
Dat vesti collum ; restes, vah ! carnifici dat ;
Se se Diabolo, sic bene ; Cuique suum.

THE TRIUMPH OF THE WHALE.

Io ! Pæan ! Io ! sing,
To the finny people's king.
Not a mightier whale than this
In the vast Atlantic is,
Not a fatter fish than he
Flounders round the Polar sea.
See his blubber !—at his gills
What a world of drink he swills !
From his trunk, as from a spout,
Which next moment he pours out.

Such his person.—Next declare,
Muse, who his companions are :—

Every fish of generous kind
 Scuds aside, or slinks behind :
 But about his presence keep
 All the monsters of the deep ;
 Mermaids, with their tails, and singing,
 His delighted fancy stinging ;
 Crooked dolphins, they surround him ;
 Dog-like seals, they fawn around him ;
 Following hard, the progress mark
 Of the intolerant salt-sea shark.
 For his solace and relief,
 Flat-fish are his courtiers chief ;
 Last, and lowest in his train,
 Ink-fish (libellers of the main)
 Their black liquor shed in spite :
 (Such on earth the things that write.)
 In his stomach, some do say,
 No good thing can ever stay :
 Had it been the fortune of it
 To have swallow'd that old prophet,
 Three days there he'd not have dwell'd,
 But in one have been expell'd.
 Hapless mariners are they,
 Who beguiled (as seamen say)
 Deeming him some rock or island,
 Footing sure, safe spot, and dry land,
 Anchor in his scaly rind—
 Soon the difference they find ;
 Sudden plumb, he sinks beneath them,—
 Does to ruthless seas bequeathe them !
 Name or title what has he ?
 Is he Regent of the Sea ?
 From this difficulty free us,
 Buffon, Banks, or sage Linnæus.

With his wondrous attributes
 Say what appellation suits ?
 By his bulk, and by his size,
 By his oily qualities,
 This (or else my eyesight fails),
 This should be the Prince of Whales.

R. ET R.

TO WILLIAM AYRTON, ESQ.

My dear friend,
 Before I end,
 Have you any
 More orders for Don Giovanni.
 To give Him that doth live
 Your faithful Zany ?

Without raillery,
 I mean Gallery
 Ones :

For I am a person that shuns
 All ostentation
 And being at the top of the fashion ;
 And seldom go to operas
 But in formâ pauperis !

I go to the play
 In a very economical sort of a way,
 Rather to see
 Than be seen ;

Though I'm no ill sight
 Neither,
 By candle-light
 And in some kinds of weather.
 You might pit me
 For height
 Against Kean ;
 But in a grand tragic scene
 I'm nothing :
 It would create a kind of loathing
 To see me act Hamlet ;
 There'd be many a damn let Fly
 At my presumption,
 If I should try,
 Being a fellow of no gumption.

By the way, tell me candidly how you relish
 This, which they call
 The lapidary style ?
 Opinions vary.
 The late Mr. Mellish
 Could never abide it ;
 He thought it vile,
 And coxcombical.
 My friend the poet laureat,
 Who is a great lawyer at Any thing comical,
 Was the first who tried it ;
 But Mellish could never abide it ;
 But it signifies very little what Mellish said,
 Because he is dead.

 For who can confute
 A body that's mute ?

Or who would fight
 With a senseless sprite ?
 Or think of troubling
 An impenetrable old goblin,
 That's dead and gone,
 And stiff as stone,
To convince him with arguments pro and con,
 As if some live logician,
 Bred up at Merton?—
 Or Mr. Hazlitt, the metaphysician?—
 Hey, Mr. Ayrton !
 With all your rare tone.

For tell me how should an apparition
 List to your call,
 Though you talk'd for ever,
 Ever so clever :
 When his ear itself,
By which he must hear, or not hear at all,
 Is laid on the shelf ?
 Or put the case
 (For more grace),
 It were a female spectre—
 How could you expect her
 To take much gust
 In long speeches,
 With her tongue as dry as dust,
 In a sandy place,
 Where no peaches,
 Nor lemons, nor limes, nor oranges hang,
 To drop on the drought of an arid harangue,
 Or quench,
 With their sweet drench,
The fiery pangs which the worms inflict,

With their endless nibblings,
 Like quibblings,
 Which the corpse may dislike, but can ne'er contradict?
 Hey, Mr. Ayrton!
 With all your rare tone.

I am,

THE THREE GRAVES.

CLOSE by the ever-burning brimstone beds
 Where Bedloe, Oates, and Judas hide their heads,
 I saw great Satan like a Sexton stand
 With his intolerable spade in hand
 Digging three graves. Of coffin shape they were,
 For those who coffinless must enter there
 With unblest rites. The shrouds were of that cloth
 Which Clotho weaveth in her blackest wrath:
 The dismal tinct oppress'd the eye that dwelt
 Upon it long, like darkness to be felt.
 The pillows to these baleful beds were toads,
 Large, living, livid, melancholy toads.

Whose softness shock'd. Worms of all monstrous size
 Crawl'd round ; and one, upcoil'd, which never dies.
 A doleful bell, inculcating despair,
 Was always ringing in the heavy air ;
 And all about the detestable pit
 Strange headless ghosts, and quarter'd forms did flit ;
 Rivers of blood from dripping traitors spilt,
 By treachery slung from poverty to guilt.
 I ask'd the fiend for whom those rites were meant ?
 " These graves," quoth he, " when life's brief oil is spent,
 When the dark night comes, and they're sinking bedwards,
 I mean for Castles, Oliver, and Edwards."

THE GODLIKE.

IN one great man we view, with odds,
 A parallel to all the gods.
 Great Jove, that shook Heav'n with his brow
 Could never match his princely bow.
 In him a Bacchus we behold ;
 Like Bacchus too he ne'er grows old.
 Like Phœbus next, a flaming lover ;
 And then he's Mercury all over.
 A Vulcan for domestic strife,
 He lamely lives without his wife.
 And sure, unless our wits be dull,
 Minerva-like, when moon was full,
 He issued from paternal scull.

 See G——e at length prepare—
 He's setting out for Hanover—
 We've often wish'd him there.

SONNET TO MATTHEW WOOD, ESQ.,

ALDERMAN AND M.P.

HOLD on thy course uncheck'd, heroic Wood !
 Regardless what the player's son may prate,
 Saint Stephens' fool, the Zany of Debate—
 Who nothing generous ever understood.
 London's twice Prætor ! scorn the fool-born jest—
 The stage's scum, the refuse of the players—
 Stale topics against Magistrates and Mayors—
 City and Country both thy worth attest.
 Bid him leave off his shallow Eton wit,
 More fit to sooth the superficial ear
 Of drunken Pitt, and that pickpocket Peer,
 When at their sottish orgies they did sit,
 Hatching mad counsels from inflated vein,
 Till England, and the nations, reeled with pain.

SONG FOR THE C—————N.

TUNE:—"Roy's wife of Aldivalloch."

Roi's wife of Brunswick Oëls !
 Roi's wife of Brunswick Oëls !
 Wot you how she came to him,
 While he supinely dreamt of no ills ?
 Vow ! but she is a canty Queen,
 And well can she scare each royal orgie.—
 To us she ever must be dear,
 Though she's for ever cut by Georgie.—
Roi's wife, &c. De capo.

LINES.

SUGGESTED BY A SIGHT OF WALTHAM CROSS.

POINT still the spots, to hallow'd wedlock dear,
 Where rested on its solemn way the bier,
 That bore the bones of Edward's Elinor
 To mix with Royal dust at Westminster.—
 Far different rites did thee to dust consign,
 Duke Brunswick's daughter, princely Caroline.
 A hurried funeral, and a banish'd grave,
 High-minded wife ! were all that thou couldst have.
 Grieve not, great ghost, nor count in death thy losses ;
 Thou in thy life-time had'st thy share of crosses.

SAINT CRISPIN TO MR. GIFFORD.

ALL unadvised and in an evil hour,
 Lured by aspiring thoughts, my son, you daft
 The lowly labours of the "Gentle Craft"
 For lowly toils, which blood and spirits sour.
 All things, dear pledge, are not in all men's power;
 The wiser sort of shrub affects the ground;
 The sweet contents of mind is oftener found
 In cobbler's parlour than in critic's bower.
 The sorest work is what doth cross the grain;
 And better to this hour you had been plying
 The obsequious awl, with well-wax'd finger flying,
 Than ceaseless thus to till a thankless vein:
 Still teasing muses, which are still denying
 Making a stretching-leather of your brain.

St. Crispin's Eve.

NONSENSE VERSES.

LAZY-BONES, lazy-bones, wake up, and peep!
 The cat's in the cupboard, your mother's asleep.
 There you sit snoring, forgetting her ills;
 Who is to give her her Bolus and Pills?
 Twenty fine Angels must come into town,
 All for to help you to make your new gown:
 Dainty AERIAL Spinsters, and Singers;
 Aren't you ashamed to employ such white fingers?
 Delicate hands, unaccustom'd to reels,
 To set 'em a working a poor body's wheels?

Why they came down is to me all a riddle,
 And left HALLELUJAH broke off in the middle :
 Jove's Court, and the Presence angelical, cut—
 To eke out the work of a lazy young slut.
 Angel-duck, Angel-duck, winged, and silly,
 Pouring a watering-pot over a lily,
 Gardener gratuitous, careless of pelf,
 Leave her to water her lily herself,
 Or to neglect it to death if she chuse it :
 Remember the loss is her own, if she lose it.

TO THE EDITOR.

MR. EDITOR,—The riddling lines which I send you, were written upon a young lady, who from her diverting sportiveness in childhood, was named by her friends THE APE. When the verses were written L. M. had outgrown the title—but not the memory of it—being in her teens, and consequently past child-tricks. They are an endeavour to express that perplexity which one feels at any alteration, even supposed for the better, in a beloved object ; with a little oblique grudging at TIME, who cannot bestow new graces without taking away some portion of the older ones, which we can ill miss.

* * * *

THE APE.

AN Ape is but a trivial beast,
Men count it light and vain ;
But I would let them have their thoughts,
To have my Ape again.
To love a beast in any sort,
Is no great sign of grace ;
But I have loved a flouting Ape's
'Bove any lady's face.
I have known the power of two fair eyes,
In smile or else in glance,
And how (for I a lover was)
They make the spirits dance ;
But I would give two hundred smiles,
Of them that fairest be,
For one look of my staring Ape
That used to stare on me.
This beast, this Ape, it had a face—
If face it might be styl'd—
Sometimes it was a staring Ape,
Sometimes a beauteous child.
A Negro flat—a Pagod squat,
Cast in a Chinese mould—
And then it was a cherub's face,
Made of the beaten gold !
But TIME, that's meddling, meddling still,
And always altering things—
And what's already at the best
To alteration brings,

That turns the sweetest buds to flow'rs,
 And drops and changes toys,
 That breaks up dreams and parts old friends,
 And still commutes our joys—
 Has changed away my Ape at last,
 And in its place conveyed,
 Thinking therewith to cheat my sight,
 A fresh and blooming maid !
 And fair to sight is she—and still
 Each day doth sightlier grow,
 Upon the ruins of the Ape,
 My ancient playfellow !
 The tale of Sphinx, and Theban jests
 I true in me perceive ;
 I suffer riddles ; death from dark
 Ænigmas I receive.
 Whilst a hid being I pursue,
 That lurks in a new shape,
 My darling in herself I miss,
 And, in my ape, THE APE.

“ ONE DIP.”

MUCH speech obscures the sense ; the soul of wit
 Is brevity : our tale one proof of it.
 Poor Balbulus, a stammering invalid,
 Consults the doctors, and by them is bid
 To try sea-bathing, with this special heed,
 “ One dip was all his malady did need ;

More than that one his certain death would be."
 Now who so nervous or so shook as he,
 For Balbulus had never dipped before.
 Two well-known dippers at the Broadstairs' shore,
 Stout sturdy churls have stript him to the skin ;
 And naked, cold, and shivering plunge him in.
 Soon he emerges with scarce breath to say,
 " I'm to be dip-dip-dipt——." " We know it," they Reply. Expostulation seemed in vain,
 And over ears they souse him in again ;
 And up again he rises ; his words trip,
 And falter as before. Still " dip-dip-dip "—
 And in again he goes with furious plunge,
 Once more to rise ; when with a desperate lunge
 At length he bolts these words out, "only once!"
 The villains crave his pardon. Had the dunce
 But aimed at these bare words the rogues had found him ;
 But striving to be prolix, they have drowned him.

SATAN IN SEARCH OF A WIFE.

WITH THE WHOLE PROCESS OF HIS COURTSHIP AND MARRIAGE, AND WHO DANCED AT THE WEDDING.

BY AN EYE WITNESS.

DEDICATION.—To delicate bosoms, that have sighed over the Loves of the Angels, this Poem is with tenderest regard consecrated. It can be no offence to you, dear Ladies, that the author has endeavoured to extend the dominion of your darling passion; to show Love triumphant in places, to which his advent has been never yet suspected. If our Cecilia drew an Angel down, another may have leave to attract a Spirit upwards; which, I am sure, was the most desperate adventure of the two. Wonder not at the inferior condition of the agent; for, if King Cophetua wooed a Beggar Maid, a greater king need not scorn to confess the attractions of a fair Tailor's daughter. The more disproportionate the rank, the more signal is the glory of your sex. Like that of Hecate, a triple empire is now confessed your own. Nor Heaven, nor Earth, nor deepest tracts of Erebus, as Milton hath it, have power to resist your sway. I congratulate your last victory. You have fairly made an Honest Man of the Old One; and, if your conquest is late, the success must be salutary. The new Benedict has employment enough on his hands to desist from dabbling with the affairs of poor mortals; he may fairly leave human nature to herself; and we may sleep for one while at least secure from the attacks of this hitherto restless Old Bachelor. It remains to be seen whether the world will be much benefited by the change in his condition.

PART THE FIRST.

I.

THE Devil was sick and queasy of late,
And his sleep and his appetite fail'd him ;
His ears they hung down, and his tail it was clapp'd
Between his poor hoofs, like a dog that's been rapp'd—
None knew what the devil ail'd him.

II.

He tumbled and toss'd on his mattress o' nights,
That was fit for a fiend's disportal ;
For 'twas made of the finest of thistles and thorn,
Which Alecto herself had gather'd in scorn
Of the best down beds that are mortal.

III.

His giantly chest in earthquakes heaved,
With groanings corresponding :
And mincing and few were the words he spoke,
While a sigh, like some delicate whirlwind, broke
From a heart that seem'd desponding.

IV.

Now the Devil an Old Wife had for his Dam,
I think none e'er was older :
Her years—old Parr's were nothing to them ;
And a chicken to her was Methusalem,
You'd say, could you behold her.

V.

She remember'd Chaos a little child,
 Strumming upon hand organs ;
 At the birth of Old Night a gossip she sat,
 The ancientest there, and was godmother at
 The christening of the Gorgons.

VI.

Her bones peep'd through a rhinoceros' skin,
 Like a mummy's through its cerement ;
 But she had a mother's heart, and guess'd
 What pinch'd her son ; whom she thus address'd
 In terms that bespoke endearment :—

VII.

“ What ails my Nicky, my Darling Imp,
 My Lucifer bright, my Beelze ?
 My Pig, my Pug-with-a-curly-tail,
 You are not well. Can a mother fail
 To see that which all Hell see !”

V.II.

“ O Mother dear, I am dying, I fear ;
 Prepare the yew, and the willow,
 And the cypress black : for I get no ease
 By day or by night for the cursed fleas,
 That skip about my pillow.”

IX.

“ Your pillow is clean, and your pillow-beer.
 For I wash'd 'em in Styx last night, son,
 And your blankets both, and dried them upon
 The brimstony banks of Acheron—
 It is not the fleas that bite, son.”

X.

“ O I perish of cold these bitter sharp nights,
 The damp like an ague ferrets ;
 The ice and the frost hath shot into the bone ;
 And I care not greatly to sleep alone
 O’ nights—for the fear of Spirits.”

XI.

“ The weather is warm, my own sweet boy,
 And the nights are close and stifling ;
 And for fearing of Spirits, you cowardly Elf—
 Have you quite forgot you’re a Spirit yourself ?
 Come, come, I see you are trifling.

XII.

I wish my Nicky is not in love ”——
 “ O mother, you have nick’t it ”——
 And he turn’d his head aside with a blush—
 Not red hot pokers, or crimson plush,
 Could half so deep have prick’d it.

XIII.

“ These twenty thousand good years or more,”
 Quoth he, “ on this burning shingle
 I have led a lonesome Bachelor’s life,
 Nor known the comfort of babe or wife—
 ’Tis a long time to live single.”

XIV.

Quoth she, “ If a wife is all you want,
 I shall quickly dance at your wedding.
 I am dry nurse, you know, to the Female Ghosts ”——
 And she call’d up her charge, and they came in hosts
 To do the old Beldam’s bidding :

XV.

All who in their lives had been servants of sin—
 Adulteress, Wench, Virago—
 And Murd'resses old that had pointed the knife
 Against a husband's or father's life,
 Each one a She Iago.

XVI.

First Jezebel came—no need of paint,
 Or dressing, to make her charming ;
 For the blood of the old prophetic race
 Had heighten'd the natural flush of her face
 To a pitch 'bove rouge or carmine.

XVII.

Semiramis there low tender'd herself,
 With all Babel for a dowry :
 With Helen, the flower and the bane of Greece—
 And bloody Medea next offer'd her fleece,
 That was of Hell the Houri.

XVIII.

Clytemnestra, with Joan of Naples, put in ;
 Cleopatra, by Antony quicken'd ;
 Jocasta, that married where she should not,
 Came hand in hand with the Daughters of Lot ;
 'Till the Devil was fairly sicken'd.

XIX.

For the Devil himself, a dev'l as he is,
 Disapproves unequal matches.
 "O Mother," he cried, "despatch them hence !
 No Spirit—I speak it without offence—
 Shall have me in her hatches."

XX.

With a wave of her wand they all were gone!
 And now came out the slaughter:
 " 'Tis none of these that can serve my turn;
 For a wife of flesh and blood I burn—
 I'm in love with a Tailor's Daughter.

XXI.

'Tis she must heal the wounds that she made,
 'Tis she must be my physician.
 O parent mild, stand not my foe"—
 For his mother had whisper'd something low
 About " matching beneath his condition."--

XXII.

" And then we must get paternal consent,
 Or an unblest match may vex ye"—
 " Her father is dead: I fetch'd him away,
 In the midst of his goose, last Michaelmas Day—
 He died of an apoplexy.

XXIII.

His daughter is fair, and an only heir—
 With her I long to tether—
 He has left her his hell, and all that he had;
 The estates are contiguous, and I shall be mad,
 'Till we lay our two Hells together."

XXIV.

" But how do you know the fair maid's mind?"—
 Quoth he, " Her loss was but recent;
 And I could not speak my mind you know,
 Just when I was fetching her father below—
 It would have been hardly decent.

XXV.

But a leer from her eye, where Cupids lie,
 Of love gave proof apparent ;
 And, from something she dropp'd, I shrewdly ween'd,
 In her heart she judged, that a living Fiend
 Was better than a dead Parent.

XXVI.

But the time is short ; and suitors may come,
 While I stand here reporting ;
 Then make your son a bit of a Beau,
 And give me your blessing, before I go
 To the other world a courting."

XXVII.

" But what will you do with your horns, my son ?
 And that tail—fair maids will mock it"—
 " My tail I will dock—and as for the horn,
 Like husbands above I think no scorn
 To carry it in my pocket."

XXVIII.

" But what will you do with your feet, my son ?"
 " Here are stockings fairly woven :
 My hoofs I will hide in silken hose ;
 And cinnamon-sweet are my pettitoes—
 Because, you know, they are cloven."

XXIX.

" Then take a blessing, my darling son,"
 Quoth she, and kiss'd him civil—
 Then his neckcloth she tied ; and when he was drest
 From top to toe in his Sunday's best,
 He appear'd a comely devil.

XXX.

So his leave he took:—but how he fared
 In his courtship—barring failures—
 In a Second Part you shall read it soon,
 In a bran new song, to be sung to the tune
 Of the “ Devil among the Tailors.”

THE SECOND PART:

CONTAINING

THE COURTSHIP, AND THE WEDDING.

I.

Who is She that by night from her balcony looks
 On a garden, where cabbage is springing?
 'Tis the Tailor's fair Lass, that we told of above;
 She muses by moonlight on her True Love;
 So sharp is Cupid's stinging.

II.

She has caught a glimpse of the Prince of the Air
 In his Luciferian splendour,
 And away with coyness and maiden reserve!—
 For none but the Devil her turn will serve,
 Her sorrows else will end her.

III.

She saw when he fetch'd her father away,
 And the sight no whit did shake her;
 For the Devil may sure with his own make free--
 And "it saves besides," quoth merrily she,
 "The expense of an Undertaker—

IV.

Then come, my Satan, my darling Sin,
 Return to my arms, my Hell Beau;
 My Prince of Darkness, my crow-black Dove"—
 And she scarce had spoke, when her own True Love
 Was kneeling at her elbow!

V.

But she wist not at first that this was He,
 That had raised such a boiling passion:
 For his old costume he had laid aside,
 And was come to court a mortal bride
 In a coat-and-waistcoat fashion.

VI.

She miss'd his large horns, and she miss'd his fair tail,
 That had hung so retrospective;
 And his raven plumes, and some other marks
 Regarding his feet, that had left their sparks
 In a mind but too susceptible:

VII.

And she held it scorn that a mortal born
 Should the Prince of Spirits rival,
 To clamber at midnight her garden fence—
 For she knew not else by what pretence
 To account for his arrival.

VIII.

“What thief art thou,” quoth she, “in the dark
 That stumblest here presumptuous?
 Some Irish Adventurer I take you to be—
 A Foreigner, from your garb I see,
 Which besides is not over-sumptuous.”

IX.

Then Satan, awhile dissembling his rank,
 A piece of amorous fun tries:
 Quoth he, “I’m a Netherlander born;
 Fair Virgin, receive not my suit with scorn;
 I’m a Prince in the Low Countries—

X.

Though I travel incog. From the Land of Fog
 And Mist I am come to proffer
 My crown and my sceptre to lay at your feet;
 It is not every day in the week you may meet,
 Fair Maid, with a Prince’s offer.”

XI.

“Your crown and your sceptre I like full well,
 They tempt a poor maiden’s pride, Sir;
 But your lands and possessions—excuse if I’m rude—
 Are too far in a Northerly latitude
 For me to become your Bride, Sir.

XII.

In that aguish clime I should catch my death,
 Being but a raw new comer”—
 Quoth he, “We have plenty of fuel stout;
 And the fires, which I kindle, never go out
 In Winter, nor yet in Summer.

XIII.

I am Prince of Hell, and Lord Paramount
 Over Monarchs there abiding.
 My Groom of the Stables is Nimrod old ;
 And Nebuchadnezzar my stirrups must hold,
 When I go out a riding.

XIV.

To spare your blushes, and maiden fears,
 I resorted to these inventions—
 But, Imposture, begone ; and avaunt, Disguise !”—
 And the Devil began to swell and rise
 To his own diabolic dimensions.

XV.

Twin horns from his forehead shot up to the moon,
 Like a branching stag in Arden ;
 Dusk wings through his shoulders with eagle's strength
 Push'd out ; and his train lay floundering in length
 An acre beyond the garden.—

XVI.

To tender hearts I have framed my lay—
 Judge ye, all love-sick Maidens,
 When the virgin saw in the soft moonlight,
 In his proper proportions, her own true knight,
 If she needed long persuadings.

XVII.

Yet a maidenly modesty kept her back,
 As her sex's art had taught her :
 For “the biggest Fortunes,” quoth she, “in the land—
 Are not worthy”—then blush'd—“of your Highness's hand—
 Much less a poor Tailor's daughter.

XVIII.

There's the two Miss Crockfords are single still,
 For whom great suitors hunger;
 And their Father's hell is much larger than mine"—
 Quoth the Devil, "I've no such ambitious design,
 For their Dad is an old Fishmonger;

XIX.

And I cannot endure the smell of fish—
 I have taken an anti-bias
 To their livers, especially since the day
 That the Angel smoked my cousin away
 From the chaste spouse of Tobias.

XX.

Had my amorous kinsman much longer staid,
 The perfume would have seal'd his obit;
 For he had a nicer nose than the wench,
 Who cared not a pin for the smother and stench,
 In the arms of the Son of Tobit."

XXI.

"I have read it," quoth she, "in Apocryphal Writ"—
 And the Devil stoop'd down, and kiss'd her;
 Not Jove himself, when he courted in flame,
 On Semele's lips, the love-scorch'd Dame,
 Impress'd such a burning blister.

XXII.

The fire through her bones and her vitals shot—
 "O, I yield, my winsome marrow—
 I am thine for life"—and black thunders roll'd—
 And she sank in his arms through the garden mould,
 With the speed of a red-hot arrow.

XXIII.

Merrily, merrily, ring the bells
From each Pandemonian steeple ;
For the Devil hath gotten his beautiful Bride,
And a Wedding Dinner he will provide,
To feast all kinds of people.

XXIV.

Fat bulls of Bashan are roasted whole,
Of the breed that ran at David ;
With the flesh of goats, on the sinister side,
That shall stand apart, when the world is tried ;
Fit meat for souls unsaved !

XXV.

The fowl from the spit were the Harpies' brood,
Which the bard sang near Cremona,
With a garnish of bats in their leathern wings imp't ;
And the fish was—two delicate slices crimp't,
Of the whale that swallow'd Jonah.

XXVI.

Then the goblets were crown'd, and a health went round
To the Bride, in a wine like scarlet ;
No earthly vintage so deeply paints,
For 'twas dash'd with a tinge from the blood of the Saints
By the Babylonian Harlot.

XXVII.

No Hebe fair stood Cup Bearer there,
The guests were their own skinkers ;
But Bishop Judas first blest the can,
Who is of all Hell Metropolitan,
And kiss'd it to all the drinkers.

XXVIII.

The feast being ended, to dancing they went,
To a music that did produce a
Most dissonant sound, while a hellish glee
Was sung in parts by the Furies Three ;
And the Devil took out Medusa.

XXIX.

But the best of the sport was to hear his old Dam,
Set up her shrill forlorn pipe—
How the wither'd Beldam hobbled about,
And put the rest of the company out—
For she needs must try a horn-pipe.

XXX.

But the heat, and the press, and the noise, and the din,
Were so great, that, howe'er unwilling,
Our Reporter no longer was able to stay,
But came in his own defence away,
And left the Bride quadrilling.

ADDITIONAL PIECES.

SONNET.

THE Lord of Life shakes off his drowsied,
And 'gins to sprinkle on the earth below
Those rays that from his shaken locks do flow ;
Meantime, by truant love of rambling led,
I turn my back on thy detested walls,
Proud city! and thy sons, I leave behind,
A sordid, selfish, money-getting kind ;
Brute things who shut their ears when Freedom calls.
I pass not thee so lightly, well known spire,
That minded me of many a pleasure gone,
Of merrier days of love and Islington ;
Kindling afresh the pleasures of past desire,
And I shall muse on that slow journeying on
To the green plains of pleasant Hertfordshire.

1795.

A BIRTHDAY THOUGHT.

CAN I, all-gracious Providence,
Can I deserve Thy care ?
Ah no ! I've not the least pretence
To bounties which I share.

Have I not been defended still
 From dangers and from death ;
 Been safe preserved from every ill
 E'er since Thou gavest me breath ?

I live once more to see the day
 That brought me first to light ;
 Oh, teach my willing heart the way
 To take Thy mercies right.

Tho' dazzling splendour, pomp, and show
 My fortune has denied ;
 Yet more than grandeur can bestow
 Content hath well supplied.

I envy no one's birth or fame,
 Their titles, train, or dress :
 Nor has my pride e'er stretch'd its aim
 Beyond what I possess.

I ask and wish not to appear
 More beauteous, rich, or gay :
 Lord, make me wiser every year,
 And better every day.

TO SARA AND HER SAMUEL.

Was it so hard a thing ?—I did but ask
 A fleeting holiday. One little week,
 Or haply two, had bounded my request.

What if the jaded steer, who all day long
Had borne the heat and labour of the plough,
When evening came, and her sweet cooling hour,
Should seek to trespass on a neighbour copse,
Where greener herbage waved, or clearer streams
Invited him to slake his burning thirst ?
That man were crabbed, who should say him nay ;
That man were churlish, who should drive him thence !

A blessing light upon your heads, ye good,
Ye hospitable pair ! I may not come
To catch on Clifden's heights the summer gale ;
I may not come a pilgrim to the vales
Of Avon, lucid stream, to taste the waves
Which Shakspeare drank, our British Helicon :
Or with mine eye intent on Redcliffe towers,
To muse in tears on that mysterious youth,
Cruelly slighted, who to London walls,
In evil hour, shaped his disastrous course.
With better hopes, I trust from Avon's vales,
Another " minstrel " cometh ! Youth endear'd,
God and good angels guide thee on thy road,
And gentler fortunes wait the friends I love.

NOTES.

GUY FAUX.

A paper which illustrates the curiously fantastic manner in which Lamb occasionally dealt with his pieces. It originally appeared in the Reflector so early as the year 1811, but without the first three paragraphs. Another paper on the same subject having appeared in 1821, Lamb fitted his essay with this bantering introduction, so as to impart an apropos air; then, waiting for two years more, reissued it in The London Magazine, with this title, "On the Probable Effects of the Gunpowder Treason in this Country if the Conspirators had accomplished their object."

"A very ingenious and subtile writer."—W. Hazlitt.

"A London weekly paper."—The Examiner, under date of Nov. 12, 1821.

"From the learning and maturest oratory which it manifests," stood originally: "From the amazing research of learning and powers of maturest oratory."

After the words, "ripened by time into a Bishop and Father of the Church," came the passage: "The conclusion of his discourse is so pertinent to my subject, that I must beg your patience while I transcribe it. He has been drawing a parallel between the fire which Faux and his accomplices meditated, and that which James and John were willing to have called down from heaven upon the heads of the Samaritans who would not receive our Saviour into their house."

"This periodical petition . . . has the effect."—Originally, "have the effect."

After "Berenice's curls" came this lively passage: "All, in their degrees, glittering somewhere. Sussex misses her member on earth (J— F—, Esq.), but is consoled to view him, on a starry night, siding the Great Bear. Cambridge beholds hers (Sir V— G —) next Scorpio. The gentle Castlereagh curdles in the Milky-way."

Hazlitt wrote, on the appearance of this jocose attack, that he believed that Lamb "never heartily forgave a certain writer who took the subject of Guy Fawkes out of his hands."

All the papers that follow, to p. 86, appeared in the London Magazine.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF MR. MUNDEN.

A paper in the London Magazine of 1824, on Munden's Farewell, has been attributed to Lamb in the life of the actor, and even been included in his works. But, though professedly in his style, the touches seem coarse, and the whole lacks the delicacy and airiness of the master. Hazlitt and Hunt both imitated Lamb's style; and I believe the paper to have been written by the former, having that "rollicking" strain which he sometimes adopted. It is, however, offered here to the reader's judgment:—

"The regular playgoers ought to put on mourning, for the king of broad comedy is dead to the drama!—Alas!—Munden is no more!—give sorrow vent. He may yet walk the town, pace the pavement in a seeming existence—eat, drink, and nod to his friends in all the affectation of life—but Munden,—the Munden!—Munden, who with the bunch of countenances, the bouquet of faces, is gone for ever from the lamps, and, as far as comedy is concerned, is as dead as Garrick! When an actor retires (we will put the suicide as mildly as possible) how many worthy persons perish with him!—With Munden,—Sir Peter Teazle must experience a shock—Sir Robert Bramble gives up the ghost—Crack ceases to breathe. Without Munden what becomes of Dozey? Where shall we seek Jemmy Jumps? Nipperkin and a thousand of such admirable fooleries fall to nothing, and the departure therefore of such an actor as Munden is a dramatic calamity. On the night that this inestimable humorist took farewell of the public, he also took his benefit:—a benefit in which the public assuredly did not participate. The play was Coleman's Poor Gentleman, with Tom Dibdin's farce of Past Ten o'Clock. Reader, we all know Munden in Sir Robert Bramble, and Old Tobacco complexioned Dozey;—we all have seen the old hearty baronet in his light sky-blue coat and genteel cocked hat; and we have seen the weather-beaten old pensioner, Dear

Old Dozey, tacking about the stage in that intense blue sea livery—drunk as heart could wish, and right valorous in memory. On this night Munden seemed like the Gladiator ‘to rally life’s whole energies to die,’ and as we were present at this great display of his powers, and as this will be the last opportunity that will ever be afforded us to speak of this admirable performer, we shall ‘consecrate,’ as Old John Buncle says, ‘a paragraph to him.’

“The house was full,—full!—pshaw! that’s an empty word!—The house was stuffed, crammed with people—crammed from the swing door of the pit to the back seat in the banished one sbilling. A quart of audience may be said (vintner-like, may it be said) to have been squeezed into a pint of theatre. Every hearty play-going Londoner, who remembered Munden years ago, mustered up his courage and his money for this benefit—and middle-aged people were therefore by no means scarce. The comedy chosen for the occasion is one that travels a long way without a guard;—it is not until the third or fourth act, we think, that Sir Robert Bramble appears on the stage. When he entered, his reception was earnest,—noisy,—outrageous,—waving of hats and handkerchiefs,—deafening shouts,—clamorous beating of sticks,—all the various ways in which the heart is accustomed to manifest its joy were had recourse to on this occasion. Mrs. Bamfield worked away with a sixpenny fan till she scudded only under bare poles. Mr. Whittington wore out the ferule of a new nine-and-six-penny umbrella. Gratitude did great damage on the joyful occasion.

“The old performer, the veteran, as he appropriately called himself in the farewell speech, was plainly overcome; he pressed his hands together. he planted one solidly on his breast, he bowed, he sidled, he cried! When the noise subsided (which it invariably does at last) the comedy proceeded, and Munden gave an admirable picture of the rich, eccentric, charitable old bachelor baronet, who goes about with Humphrey Dobbin at his heels and philanthropy in his heart. How crustily and yet how kindly he takes Humphrey’s contradictions! How readily he puts himself into an attitude for arguing! How tenderly he gives a loose to his heart on the apprehension of Frederick’s duel. In truth he played Sir Robert in his very ripest manner, and it was impossible not to feel in the very midst of pleasure regret that Munden should then be before us for the last time.

“In the farce he became richer and richer; Old Dozey is a plant from Greenwich. The bronzed face—and neck to match—the long curtain of a coat—the straggling white hair—the propensity, the de-terminated attachment to grog,—are all from Greenwich. Munden, as Dozey, seems never to have been out of action, sun, and drink. He looks (alas, he looked) fireproof. His face and throat were dried like a raisin, and his legs walked under the rum-and-water with all the indecision which that inestimable beverage usually inspires. It is truly tacking, not walking. He steers at a table, and the tide of grog now and then bears him off the point. On this night, he seemed to us to be doomed to fall in action, and we therefore looked at him, as some of the Victory's crew are said to have gazed upon Nelson, with a consciousness that his ardour and his uniform were worn for the last time. In the scene where Dozey describes a sea fight, the actor never was greater, and he seemed the personification of an old seventy-four! His coat hung like a flag at his poop! His phiz was not a whit less highly coloured than one of those lustrous visages which generally superintend the head of a ship! There was something cumbrous, indecisive, and awful in his veerings! Once afloat, it appeared impossible for him to come to his moorings; once at anchor, it did not seem an easy thing to get him under weigh!

“The time, however, came for the fall of the curtain, and for the fall of Munden! The farce of the night was finished. The farce of the long forty years’ play was over! He stepped forward, not as Dozey, but as Munden, and we heard him address us from the stage for the last time. He trusted, unwisely we think, to written paper. He read of ‘heart-felt recollections,’ and ‘indelible impressions.’ He stammered, and he pressed his heart,—and put on his spectacles,—and blundered his written gratitudes,—and wiped his eyes, and bowed—and stood,—and at last staggered away for ever! The plan of his farewell was bad, but the long life of excellence which really made his farewell pathetic, overcame all defects, and the people and Joe Munden parted like lovers! Well! Farewell to the Rich Old Heart! May thy retirement be as full of repose, as thy public life was full of excellence! We must all have our farewell benefits in our turn.”

ELIA TO HIS CORRESPONDENTS.

The misapprehension as to Elia’s birthplace arose from his writing in the character of Coleridge, when describing Christ’s Hospital. (Vol. III. p. 148.)

ON THE AMBIGUITY ARISING FROM PROPER NAMES.

Compare Vol. II., p. 83.

LETTER TO ROBERT SOUTHEY, ESQ.

As already shown, the chief portion of this letter was suppressed. The allusions are thus explained:—"The amiable C.," Carey; "A Han C.," Cunningham; "P—r," Procter; "A—p," Allsop; "G—n," Gilman; "W—b," Wordsworth; "H. C. R.," H. C. Robinson; "the veteran Colonel," Philips; "W. A.," Alsager; "C.," Coleridge.

"The doctrine of the * * *," &c.—There were seven stars; so the "Trinity" is intended.

"A ridiculous dismemberment."—It would appear that it was no the "amiable spy," André, that was thus treated, but the effigy of Washington, whose head had to be renewed three times within fifty years.

CAPTAIN STARKEY.

The passage from Fetter Lane to Bartlett's Buildings is still use but the houses have been nearly all rebuilt.

THE HUMBLE PETITION OF AN UNFOR- TUNATE DAY.

For this, and the three following papers, I am indebted to Mr. Frederick Locker. As Lamb's contributions to Hone's periodical were assumed to be signed with his name, it was supposed that any papers not thus distinguished were not likely to be of his composition. Mr. Locker, however, possesses the MS. of these essays in Lamb's writing, which had been returned from the press, and are thus readily identified. He has also been kind enough to give me the verses entitled "One Dip," as well as some letters written to Hone.

REMINISCENCES OF JUKE JUDKINS.

Unworthy of Lamb, as it no doubt seemed to himself, since it is left incomplete.

THE RELIGION OF ACTORS.

"Br—," Braham, the singer; "T—y," Terry, Sir Walter Scott's friend; "Miss F—e," Miss Foote; "Madame V—," Vestris.

THE DEATH OF MUNDEN.

The comedian died Feb. 6th, 1832. The friend whose criticism Lamb introduces was Talfourd. It appeared in the Champion; but the author, when inserting it in the "Life," modestly suppressed a little panegyric of Lamb's: "by a gentleman who attends less to these things than formerly, but whose criticism I think masterly."

TABLE TALK.

Published in the Athenæum after his death.

Barron Field also describes Lamb delivering the criticism on "The Nut-brown Maid" at a supper party. (See Vol. I. 217.)

THOUGHTS ON PRESENTS OF GAME.

From the Athenæum.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A LATE ROYAL ACADEMICIAN.

"G— D—," George Dawe. Some of the strokes in this piece are in Lamb's happiest broadly humorous manner.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

From an Annual called "The Gem" (1830). A piece written to illustrate one of the engraved plates representing a Grandmother.

ORIGINAL LETTER OF JAMES THOMSON.

From the tone of the introduction, as well as the character of the letter itself—from the little touch of "wrongeously" spelling—one might have been fairly warranted in setting it down as one of Lamb's favourite mystifications. I find, however, that Mr. Jerdan (Autobiography, Vol. I. p. 222) gives the letter as from an old newspaper of the last century, and as being genuine.

CRITICISM ON A FRIEND'S MS.

A collection of stories by Mr. Patmore.

APPEAL FOR GODWIN.

The fragment here given was added by Lamb to the public appeal for subscriptions. It is among Mr. Forster's papers. (See Vol. I., p. 244 n.)

THEATRICAL CRITICISMS.

Furnished to The Examiner. The letter from Bath on Miss Kelly has hitherto escaped notice.

REVIEWS, &c.

Southey states, in one of his letters, that Lamb was part author, with White, of the "Falstaff Letters" here reviewed. It seems more likely that a portion of the preface was his, especially as there is an allusion to the favourite subject of the "pig." The circumstances connected with the review of Wordsworth's Poems are set out in Vol. I. It appeared in the Quarterly Review, in the number for Oct. 1814. That of Defoe was furnished to Wilson's "Memoirs of Defoe," and "The Reynolds Gallery," to The Examiner.

POEMS.

The "Dedication to Coleridge" was of the Poems contained in the "Works," two small volumes published in 1818. Many of the Sonnets appeared in the Monthly Magazine, but were recast by Coleridge and by himself. As regards Nos. III. and IV., these changes were considerable. Originally it stood "overshadowing" instead of "outstretching;" instead of "all a summer's day," "the long summer days;" and for "losing," "cheating." In place of the last six lines, Coleridge furnished some of his own:

" But, ah! sweet scenes of fancied bliss, adieu!
On roseleaf beds, amid yon faery bowers," &c.

Lamb's indecision about even a single word is curious. Thus in the first line of No. III., Coleridge was for "Faery land," Lamb for "Faery;" but, after many doubts, adopted his friend's view. But in the next edition he went back to his first choice. Its original shape was:

" Was it some sweet device of Faery land
That mock'd my steps with many a lonely glade,
And fancied wand'rings with a fair-haired maid?
Have these things been? Or did the wizard wand
Of Merlin wave, impregning vacant air,
And kindle up the vision of a smile
In those blue eyes, that seemed to speak the while,
Such tender things, as might enforce despair
To drop the murdering knife, and let go by
His fell resolve? Ah me! the lonely glade
Still courts the footsteps of the fair-haired maid!
Among whose lock the west winds love to sigh:
But I, forlorn, do wander reckless where,
And, 'mid my wandering, find no ANNA there."

He objected to "the wizard wand of Merlin wave" as likely to suggest a burlesque association with a wizard of that name in Oxford Street. So, in Sonnet X., he altered "Ev'n as" to "Like as;" "rapt" to "raised." The line "And the rude visions give severe delight," stood originally, "And the dread visicns give a rude delight." While the last three lines, which were Coleridge's, ran:

" And almost wish'd it were no crime to die!
How Reason reel'd! what gloomy transports rose!
Till the rude dashing rock'd them to repoe."

In the edition of 1797 he substituted asterisks for the last two lines. See Charles Lamb, his friends, etc., 1866, by the Editor of the present Edition.

HARMONY IN UNLIKENESS (p. 294). On his sister and Miss Isola. "A CELEBRATED FEMALE REFORMER" (p. 296): Miss Kelly. "ON HIS MOTHER" (p. 306), "who lives the last of all the family." It will be interesting, in this place, to give the list of Lamb's brothers and sisters, which was supplied to Mr. C. Kent by Dr. Vaughan, the Master of the Temple, and which appeared too late for insertion in the first volume of this Edition. Talfourd, it will be recollected, states that there were only three children.

- (1.) ELIZABETH, born 9th January, baptized 30th January, 1762.
- (2.) JOHN, born 5th June, baptized 26th June, by the Rev. Mr. Dobey, 1763.
- (3.) MARY ANNE, born 3rd December, baptized 30th December, by the Rev. Mr. Humphreys, 1764.
- (4.) SAMUEL (the date of whose birth is unrecorded), baptized 13th December, 1765.
- (5.) ELIZABETH (the first-born Elizabeth being obviously dead), born 30th August, baptized 3rd September, 1768.
- (6.) EDWARD, born 3rd September, baptized 21st September, 1770.

LAMB. { CHARLES, the son of JOHN LAMB and ELIZABETH his wife, of Old Crown Office Row, in the Inner Temple, was born 10th February, 1775, and baptized 10th March following by the Rev. Mr. Jeffs.

The above is a true copy of the entry in the Register of Baptisms in the Temple Church.

(Signed) C. J. VAUGHAN, D.D.,
Master of the Temple.

THE GRANDAME.—In a letter to Coleridge (Vol. I., p. 384), he complains, with some feeling, of some one having altered "thy praises," and "thy honoured memory," to "her praise," "her honoured memory."

TO THE POET COWPER (p. 312).—From the Monthly Magazine.

ALBUM VERSES.—"Mr. Serjeant W——." Wilde. Lamb is said to have written election squibs for Serjeant Wilde. Dora W——. Westwood. "Edith S——" Southey. "Rotba Q——" Quillinan. "Hester" (p. 357), Hester Savory, the young Quakeress. "THE THREE FRIENDS," a domestic episode, clearly referring to his sister and her friends. This, with the two pieces that follow, "Queen Oriana's Dream," and "a Birthday Thought," were some of Lamb's contributions to the "Poetry for Children." "The Old Familiar Faces."

There was an opening stanza to these pathetic lines which he, for obvious reasons, later suppressed.—See Vol. I., p. 28.

The "friend" was no doubt Coleridge, and the allusion is to the difference, described in Vol. I., p. 37. This is shown by the date of the verses (published in the "Blank Verse), 1798. Some later editions commence the last stanza with "For," but "How" is Lamb's own reading. "A VISION OF REPENTANCE." "Psyche am I," originally a note here: "The soul." A BALLAD. From the "curious fragments in imitation of Barton." Originally the first two lines were entitled "The Argument," and the rest was introduced "EVINCED THUS":—The whole concluded with: "THE CONSEQUENCE.

"Wanton Youth is oft-times haughty swelling found,
When Age for very shame goes stooping to the ground,

THE CONCLUSION.—Dura Paupertas." This and the "Fine Merry Franions," have an almost savage bitterness. HYPOCHONDRIACUS. Also from the "Curious Fragments," having a second title: "A Conceit of Diabolical Possession." The third line began, "while" instead of "when;" and the Latin ejaculation at the close ran, "Jesu! Maria! libera nos ab his tentationibus, orat, implorat, R. B. Peccator." A FAREWELL TO TOBACCO. From "The Reflector." Leigh Hunt lamented the suppression of his favourite couplet:

"Still the phrase is wide an acre,
To take leave of thee Tobacco!"

"There was a royal disdain of the rhyme in it," he says.

BALLAD.—Thekla's song in "Wallenstein," and adopted by Coleridge for his Translation.

"GOING OR GONE."—From Hone's "Everyday Book." There were some verses with some singular family allusions, which Lamb afterwards suppressed.

Had he mended in right time,
He need not in night time
(That black hour and fright time),
Till sexton interred him—
Have groaned in his coffin,
While demons stood scoffing—
You'd ha' heard him a coughing—
My own father¹ heard him.²

¹ Who sat up with him.

² I have this from parental tradition.

Could gain so importune,
 With occasion unfortune,
 Of a poor fortune
 That should have been ours,
 In soul he should venture
 To pierce the dim centre,
 Where will-forgers enter,
 Amid the dark powers.

THE CHRISTENING.—“Written,” says Mr. W. C. Hazlitt, “to celebrate the christening of the child of Mr. and Mrs. May, on March 25th, 1829.” Mrs. May had been Miss Gisburne, and had kept a young ladies’ school. “SHE IS GOING.” The same three ladies described in the “three friends.”

PROLOGUES, &c., p. 417.—The footnotes are Lamb’s own comments on his production.

“TO SIR J. MACKINTOSH” (p. 425).—This “squib” caused the extinction of the Albion newspaper. See Vol. IV., p. 86.

“THE THREE GRAVES.”—Originally headed, “Written during the time, now happily forgotten, of the spy system.”

Most of these epigrams appeared in the Champion, and were thus signed, “R. et R.” What this stands for it is hard to divine, unless for “Romulus et Remus.” “THE APE,” “Louisa” Martin. See also p. 409. TO SARA AND HER SAMUEL, addressed to Coleridge and his wife.

The collection of Letters, Essays, Plays, and Verses, now presented to the Reader, may be taken to form an almost complete collection of Lamb’s Works. There still, however, remain a few compositions, which the Editor has been unable to trace. Mr. Crabb Robinson speaks of a Fairy Tale, entitled “Prince Doris,” which Lamb showed to him. There was also an article on Keats’ Poems, which “appeared in some London Paper”; while the Editor of the “Poetical Recreations of the Champion” “regrets, that by mere oversight, or rather mistake, several of the pointed Epigrams of ‘R. et R.’ have been omitted.” Lamb also alludes to some contributions to the “Literary Pocket Book.”
