

11. 22. '04

From the Library of Professor Samuel Miller in Memory of Judge Samuel Miller Breckinridge Presented by Samuel Miller Breckinridge Long to the Library of Princeton Theological Seminary

SCC
1776

Jo. ... = ...

A DEFENCE OF THE REFORMED CATHO-

LICKE of M. W. PERKINS, lately deceased, against the bastard

Counter-Catholicke of D.

Bishop, Seminary

Priest.

THE FIRST PART:

For answer to his calumniations generally framed against the same, and against the whole Religion and state of our Church, in his Epistle Dedicatory to the Kings most excellent Maicsty.

Wherin is to be scene the audaciousnesse and impudencie of these Remish bookes in their Supplications and Dedications to his Highnesse: their religion is dismasked of that antiquity which they pretend for it: the religion established in our Church by law is iustified to be no other but what was anciently receiued in the Church, and namely in the ancient Church of Rome.

By ROBERT ABBOT Doct. of Diuinitie.

August. de ciuit. Dei, lib. 2. cap. 1.

Eorum dicta contraria si toties refellere velimus, quoties obnixa fronte statuerunt non curare quid dicant dum quocunq; modo nostris disputationibus contradicant, infinitum esset.

LONDINI.

Impensis THOMÆ ADAMS.

1611

TO THE MOST PVISSANT AND

MIGHTIE MONARCH

our most dread and soue-

raigne Lord, IAMES

by the grace of

GOD

King of Great Britaine, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c.

Mongst the manifold benefits which the Diuine prouidence hath yeelded vnto vs by the happy entrance of your most sacred Maiestie to the Imperiall crown of this Realme, we can not but most specially recognise that which wee take to bee the pillar that vpholdeth all the rest. The preservation of true Religion and continuance of the preaching of the Gospell of Christ. Which albeit it be a singular and inestimable mercy of GOD, yet there is found amongst vs a Vipers brood, a male-contented Samaritanic generation which neuer ceaseeth whining & repining there at, accounting this blessing of God to vs, a great wrong to them

THE EPISTLE DEDICATORIE.

them, whilest by a cachexie and corrupt disposition of stomacke they better brooke the Onions & Gariecke of Aegypt then the Manna of heauen, the bread of Angels: and haue eares more delighted with the Mermaids notes and enchanting Musicke of the whore of Babylon, then with the Plain-song of true religiō directed by the simplicity of the word of God. Therefore as in the dayes of our late most gracious Queene, (whose memorie God hath eternized both in heauen and earth) they neuer rested working to bring this land againe vnder the slaerie & bondage of the man of Sinne: so since your Maiesties cōming to the crowne they haue beene still plotting the same, not only by attempting your Highnesse subiects, but also labouring in their Petitions and Dedicatory Epistles to draw your Maiesty one way or other to consort with them in their damnable and accursed deuices. And as Mountbanks doe set foorth base wares with magnificall and lofty words, so doe they with braue termes labour to grace a counterfeit & bastard faith, and in their supplications haue vanted to your Maiesty of a religion, & neuer rest to commend a religion, which indeed in the questioned part thereof is no other but a refined heresie, compounded of sundry ancient heresies, only clarified by school-tricks, from the more seculent & grosse parts. Amongst the rest, one Doctour Bishop a secular and seminary Priest, a man of speciall reputation among them, and chosen to be a maine stickler in the late contentions of the seculars against the Iesuits, hath taken vpon him to solicit your Maiesty in that behalfe, and hauing apprehended a speech or two deliuered from your Maiesties owne mouth in the Conference at Hampton Court, woulde make you belieue, that if you will stande to what your selfe haue deliuered, you must needs admit their Catacatholicke tradition to be the Catholicke & true faith. Whose Epistle to your Maiesty, when I had perused and examined, (the answering of the whole book being by Authority vnder your Maiesty committed vnto me) I could not but wonder that the author thour of it durst offer it, being so full of falshood and childish folly, to a Prince so learned & well able to iudge thereof; but that I considered, that one vntruth must vphold another, and hee that hath vnderaken a bad cause must vse worfe meanes for the maintaining of it. Hee chargeth the Religion established and professed by your Highnesse with heresies, impieties, blasphemies, aburdities and what not, that malice & ignorance can deuise to speake? And this is the common stile of the rest of them, who when they come to proue and exemplifie what they speake, they shewe themselves to be but Sycophants and hirclings to the Pope, for whose sake they must speake to gall and disgrace, howsoeuer there be no truth in that they speake. And if they dare thus impudently cary themselves in Print, & to your Maiestie, what dare they not say in corners to the entrapping and seducing of simple & vnlearned men? By which means many of your maiesties subiects are intangled in a misconscience of religion, and thereby withdrawne from the true conscience of their loyalty towards your Highnesse their liege and soueraigne Lord, and are made but flax and tow for the fire of their seditious practises, who haue been bold alreadie to tell your Maiestie: That if you will not yeelde them what they desire, God knowes what that forcible weapon of necessitie will drine them vnto at length: therein verifying of themselves that which S Austin said of the Donatists their predecessours: Where they cannot by slye and wily cousonage creepe like aspes, there with open professed violence they rage like lions. Some effect whereof your Maiestie hath seene in that barbarous and Scythianlike attempt lately made for the destruction of your Highnesse person and blood, and perpetuall subuersion and ouerthrow of the whole Realme. Which as it differeth from the practise of all ancient Christians and Christian Churches which vndoubtedly were of God, so it plainly declareth that that doctrine which professeth not a lawfulness onely, but a merit in such attempts, is vndoubtedly of the Deuill, and not of God. The broachers

Seet. 34. of
D. Bishops
epistle.

August. in
Psal.

THE EPISTLE DEDICATORIE.

chers of which monstrous and vnnaturall villanies, as they haue long time liued in exercise of that malice, so will still make it appeare that they are not yet discharged of the poyson of it. Whereof sith they haue giuen so great argument & assurance by abusing your Maiesties lenitie & patience towards them, when lawes might more seuerely haue proceeded against them: our prayer to God is, that your Maiestie may henceforth take these thinges so farre to heart as shalbe needefull for the safety of your royall persō, your posteritie and the Realme. As for vs true it is, that our ieaousie ouer the soules of your subiects, and greife to see them so seduced & beguiled, hath long made vs to say out of the Apostles affection, as he did of the false apostles, Would to God they were euen cut off that trouble you, being well assured that their aduantage gotten by your Maiesties patience towards them, would in the end be disadvantage to your selfe. But yet we could not but subscribe to your Maiesties most religious and Princely care, first to giue them instruction & satisfaction, to trie whether receiuing due answer to those things which to your Maiestie they haue alleadged, they would be reclaimed from that headstrong presumption which hitherto so mightily hath possessed them. Wherein if they by their intollerable treacheries haue altered your Maiesties intent of fauour vnto them, and the State conceiue iust cause with all seueritie and rigour to proceed immediately against them, the guilt lieth vpon themselues, and they must confesse that they themselues haue drawne the sword to be imbrued in their owne blood. Yet the course by your Highnesse intended hath stil most necessary vse for the discovering of the impudencie of these Petitioners, for the gaining of such as may be gained to the acknowledgement of Gods truth; and that as S. Bernard sayth, Though the hereticke arise not from his filth, yet the church may be confirmed in the faith. To a part of which businesse since it hath pleased them to whom your Maiestie hath committed the care therof to cal me the meanest of many other albeit by reason of some infirmity in mine eyes I haue not yet been able to performe the whole that was assigned vnto me, yet for the time to giue some part of satisfaction to many of your Maiesties subiects, whom it hath much moued to see the state of our Church with calumnious libels so traduced and slandered, I haue published this answer to Doct. Bishops Epistle, therein carying my selfe faithfully & vprightly, as to God and my Prince, though my ability not such as that I may thinke my selfe to haue attained to that that the matter doth require. But that which my small talent will yeeld, in all humble duetie I tender to your Maiesties most gracious and Princely fauour, hoping that your Highnesse acceptation of these endeouours shall stir vp those that are of greater gifts to yeelde greater helpes for the vpholding and further building of the Church of Christ. The Lorde preferue your most excellent Maiestie, and as hee hath hitherto done, so continue still to discouer and bring to nought the deuices and counsels of them that imagine euill against you: and as of his infinite mercy hee hath implanted in your Maiestie the knowledge & loue of his true religion, so goe forward with his good worke, to water that which hee hath planted, that it may bring foorth plentifull fruit to the publicke aduancement of the glory of God, and the priuate comfort of your owne soule at the day of Iesus Christ.

Barnard. in Cant.

THE EPISTLE DEDICATORIE.

Your Maiesties most loyall

and dutifull subiect

ROB. ABBOT.

TO THE CHRISTIAN Reader.

Et it bee no offence unto thee, good Christian Reader, that for the presēt I gine thee an answer to a Dedicatorie Epistle in stead of an answer to a whole booke. It was now in January last a full yeere since Doctōr Bishops booke was sent unto me by the most reuerend Father in God the L. Archbishop of Canturburie his Grace, my very good Lord; wih direction to use the best expedition that I could for the answer of it. It found me at that time under the Surgeans hands for a grieuous infirmity in mine eies: by meanes whereof for some good space, and indeed longer then I expected, I was hindered from ablenesse to intend in any conuenient sort to any such important worke. But taking the soonest and best opportunitie that I could, after that I had gone o-uer some good part of the booke, to furnish my selfe wih such matter as should serue for consutation of it: at length about the beginning of Iuly being desirous to bring somewhat to effect, I addressed my selfe with all instant indenuour to gine answer to his Epistle Dedicatorie to the Kings most excellent Maiestie. Which as I accounted the principall matter in the booke, so I held it my duty to use very special care for the repulsiſing of those calumnies and slanders which the Authour hath gathered and contriued into it. Which being furnished at Michaelmas, hath becue

To the Christian Reader.

bee since thought fit to be published for the time, till the rest of the worke, wherein as time hath serued I haue hitherto further proceeded may fully be performed. Now the Treatise against which M. Bishop writeth is commonly knowne, entituled, A reformed Catholicke, &c. written by one M. Perkins, since deceased, a man of very commendable qualitie and well deseruing for his great trauell and pains for the furtherance of true religion and edifying of the church. } Commentaries of Mr Perkins.

Against this booke M. Bishop so bendeth himselfe in his Dedicatorie Epistle, as that withall, he traduceeth the whole doctrine of our church, and with such motiues and reasons as a bad cause will affoorde him, playeth the parte of Symmachus the Pagan labouring vnder the name of Antiquitie to bring in Idolatrie, and to persuade his Maiestie, that that is, Catholicke religion, which indeede is nothing els but error and superstition. In the due examination whereof, weighing well the sandie and slipperie foundations whereupon he buildeth, I presume, gentle Reader, that thou wilt bee of my minde, That hee did not thinke heereby to preuaile any whit with his most excellent Maiestie, but onely used the pretense of this Dedication to credit his booke with them whom hee knew would take all that he sayd hand ouer head vpon his owne bare worde. Surely if hee had not presumed of very welwilling and friendly Readers, hee woulde neuer haue dreamed to gaine any credite by writing in this sorte. What his Epistle is, thou mayst heere see: concerning the rest as yet I will not say much: onely I aduertise thee, and doe assure thee, that if thou didst like of M. Perkins booke before, thou hast no cause by M. Bishop to dislike it now. Thou shalt see it assaulted with ignorance, with impudencie with vntruth and falshood, with grosse and palpable heresie, and that which hee commendeth to thee for the marrowe, and pith of many large volumes, thou shalt finde to bee nothing els but a fardle of baggage and rotten stuffe. For some taste whereof let mee intreate thee, to take well in woorth for the time, this answere to his Epistle: and for the rest, to haue mee excused as yet, both in respect of that weaknesse whereby I haue bene so much withholden from the following of this worke, as also for the care that I haue aswell to gine thee full satisfaction in the questions here discussed, as to stop

Symmach
Rela ad Im perat. Am-brof. epist.
lib. 5.

In his Preface to the Reader.

To the Christian Reader.

the aduersaries mouth, that hee may haue nothing further to replie. I haue propounded to my selfe the rule of Tertullian, in such busineses alwayes to be obserued: Decet veritatem totis vti viribus tuis, non vt laborantem: Truth is to vse it whole strength, and not to fare as if it had much adoe to defende it selfe.

Tertul adu
Marc. lib. 3.

I am loth therefore to come hastily into the field, and with mine owne sword onely to make an vncertaine fight, but to take conuient time to sleue such troupes and bands, as that I may not neede to doubt of the victorie, and it may appeare vnto thee that notwithstanding the crakes and brags of these Romish sycophants, yet the truth is, that they that are with vs are mo then they that are with them. In the meane time let it not trouble thee that they are still writing bookes: for their bookes are nothing els in tructh but the laying together of the rubbish of those walles which by vs haue atrcadie beene broken downe, or at the most but supports and props to stay them a while from falling, which otherwise are so battered as that they seeme vnlkely to stand long. Some menne stagger and are much moued thereat, because being in the darke and their sight not well seruing them, they thinke eury scarrow to be a man of warre: but sober and aduised iudgement wile easily conceiue that they who hitherto haue neuer beene able to keepe the field, are very vnlkely now to haue any meanes left to gaine the battell. They breake out sometimes by ambush to cut off whom they can from vs, but when they are once discovered, they are gone. And this thou shalt see, if God will, in the examining of that Pamphlet of D. Bishop: onely for that that is yet behinde giue mee for a while thy gentle patience, remembring what Origen sayth: Wounds are quick ly giuen, but cure will aske a longer tunc: albeit I presume that my infirmitie considered, I shal not be so long in giuing thee the answer as hee was in writing the booke. I haue prepared already for the

2. Kin. 6 16

Origen in Ezechiel.

Hier. ad Mi ner.

most part subtegmen & licia, both woote and warpe, as Hierome speaketh: yeelde me thy prayer to God to continue my strength, and to prosper me in his worke, and I will endeavour to the uttermost of my power speedily to yeelde thee a perfect web.

The speciall contents of this Booke.

OF the name of CATHOLICKE CHVRCH AND CATHOLICKS vsurped now by the Papist, as of old by the Donatists: and that the religion now professed in the church of ROME is not the CATHOLICKE and APOSTOLICKE faith. sect. 3.

That the Church of Rome that now is doth in very many articles of faith and religion crosse the ancient church of Rome, & maintaineth diuers heresies by the same anciently condemned. sect. 4

That we are iustified by faith only, and yet holinesse of life is necessary to saluation, sect. 5. and that imputation of righteousnesse alwayes implieth regeneration and holinesse begunne, though not perfect. sect. 17.

That our doctrine of freewill condemneth both the Manichees, & Pelagian hereticks, and is the same with the doctrine of the first church. sect 6.

That the assertion of sinne remaining after baptisme imputed by M. Bishop to Proclus the hereticke was the Catholicke doctrine of Methodius bishop of Tyrus, and is the very trueth according to the doctrine of the ancient church. sect 7. 17.

That virginity and mariage in themselves are equal, with God: that the preferment of single life is onely in the vse of it, and that the doctrine of Iovinian concerning that point was no other but what the church of Rome professed both before the time of Hierome and Iovinian, and at that very time sect. 8. 18. 24.

That our doctrine concerning fasting is iustified by the ancient church of Rome. sect. 4. 8. 18.

That prayer to saints and worshipping their relickes is contrary to the ancient religion: the later iustly reprob'd by Vigilantius, and not aouched by Hierome. sect. 9. and that without offence we give them sometimes the name of Dead men. sect. 15.

That the church at first did not pray for the dead at all, and in what meaning it was afterwards taken vp: Purgatory, vpon which the Papists build it, being altogether vnknowne. sect. 10. 16. 16.

That Traditions vnwritten as touching the substance of faith are condemned by the ancient church. sect 11.

That

THE CONTENTS.

- That the worshipping of images is heathenish and heretical by the doctrine of the ancient Church, and that the Papists thereby are Idolaters, sect. 12. 32.
- That apostasie groweth by stealth: with the noting of the original of diuers Popish heresies, sect. 13.
- Of diuers damnable & wicked positions & doctrines of the church of Rome, sect. 14. See the like as touching the Scriptures, sect. 11 and for inducement of treason against Princes, sect. 32.
- That the Church of England neither maketh God the author of sinne nor chargeth Christ in his passion with despaire or doubt, sect. 14.
- Of giuing a mans goods to the poore, that hee may giue himselfe wholly to prayer and fasting, and that the Papists haue borrowed their doctrine thereof from the Massalian hereticks, sect. 18.
- Of the impossibilitie of perfect fulfilling the Law, and the imperfection of good works, auouched out of the doctrine of the ancient Church, and of M. Bishops silly and childish collections made thereof, sect. 19. 20.
- That Constantine the Emperour was no Papist, sect. 21.
- Of the signe of the Crosse, and that the Church of England hath taken that course as touching the same, as is fittest both to iustifie Constantine and the ancient Church in the vse, and condemne the Papists in the abuse of it, sect. 22.
- How Churches were built by Constantine, and are by vs named to the honour of the Apostles, sect. 25.
- That the sacrifice of the Masse and Transubstantiation were vnknowne to Constantine and the ancient Church, sect. 27. 32.
- That Constantine was not acquainted with Popish absolution and forgiueneffe of sinnes, sect. 28.
- That Constantine exercised supreme authority and iurisdiction ouer Bishops and in causes of the Church, sect. 29.
- That Archbishopsricks, and Bishopricks, & Church-livings, were not first founded for Popery, but for the religion now established and whatsoeuer since hath bene added by Popery, is iustly imployed to the maintenance of our religion, sect. 31. 36.
- That Recufants haue no iust exception against comming to church and that iustly the law proceedeth against them according to the examples of the lawes of ancient Princes, and of the good that commeth thereof, and that the toleration of them were neither godly, nor safe, nor standing with Christian mercy, sect. 32. 33. 35. 37.
- Of M. Bishops threat to his Maiestie grounded vpon a practise of Popery quite contrary to the practise of the ancient Church, sect. 34.

A VIEWV OF M. BISHOPS EPISTLE

Dedicatory to the kings most excellent Maiesty

TO THE MOST PVISSANT, Prudent and renowmed Prince IAMES the first, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith &c.

Of gracious and dread Soneraigne. Albeit my slender skill cannot affoorde any discourse woorthy the view of your Excellency neither my deadded & daily interrupted, & persecu-ted studies, wil giue me leau to accomplish that litle, which otherwise I might undertak and perferme: Yet being emboldned both by your high Clemēcy, & Gracious fauour. euer shewed vn to al good literature especially concerning Diuinitie: & also vr-ged by mine own boundē dutie, & particular affectiō: I presume

B

to pre-

sent vnto your Highnesse this short ensuing treatise. For your exceeding clemencie, mildnesse, and rare modestie, in the most eminent estate of so mightie a Monarch: as it cannot but win vnto you great loue, in the hearts of all considerate Subiects: so on the other side doth it encourage them confidently to open their mindes, and in dutifull manner to unfold themselves vnto their so louing & affable a Soueraigne. And whereas (to the no vulgar praise of your Maiesties pietie) you haue made open & often profession of your vigilancie & care, to aduance the diuine honour of our Saviour Christ, and his most sacred Religion: Then what faithfull Christian should stagger, or feare to lay open, and deliuer publickely, that which he assureth himselfe to be very expedient, necessarie, and agreeable towards the furnishing, and setting forward of so heauenly a worke? Moreover, if I your Maiesties poore subiect, haue by studie at home, and trauaile abroad, attained vnto any small tallent of learning and knowledg: to whom is the vse and fruit thereof more due, then vnto my so gracious, and withall, so learned a Liege? Finally, for a prooofe of my sincerity, affection, and dutifull loue towards your Maiestie this may I iustly say, that in time of vncertaine fortune (when assured friends are most certainly tried) I both suffered disgrace, and hindrance for it, being stied in Print, A Scotist in faction: therein farther employing my penne in A two-fold discourse (which I hope hath beene presented to the view of your Maiestie) the one containing a defence of your Highnesse honour: the other of your title, and interest of the crowne of England. And if then my zeale and loue of truth, and obligation to your Maiestie, drew me out of the compasse of mine owne profession, to treat of law courses: I trust your benigne Grace will now licence mee, out of the same fountain: of offeruencie and like zeale vnto Gods truth, no lesse respecting your Maiesties eternall honour, and heauenly inheritance, something to say in matters of Diuinitie: hauing beene the best part of my studie for more then thirte seauen yeeres.

R. ABBOT.

Twere a thing worthy to bee knowne what was the drift of M. Bishop, and the marke whereat hee aymed in the Dedication of this his Booke to the kings Highnesse. When I looke to those goodly insinuations whereby he seemeth desirous to wind himselfe into the good opinio of his most excellent Maiestie, and consider the motives and reasons which hee pleadeth meerely for himselfe and the rest of his faction and conspiracie, me thinkes his intent should be according to his pretence, to gaine some fauour at his maiesties handes for toleration of Romish idolatrie and superstition, that without contradiction of lawes they may freely, if not exercise, yet professe and follow the same. But when on the otherside I consider his exceptions and allegations against his maiesties proceedings, and against the Gospell of Christ and his true religion embraced by his maiestie, and by lawes publickely established amongst vs, I grow to another conceit, that surely he propounded some other matter to himselfe then the obtaining of that which hee seemeth so earnestly to entreat for. For hauing to doe with a iudicious and learned Prince, who is well able, God bee thanked, rightly to censure what he writeth, without doubt if hee had made this his proiect to compass the obtaining of his request, he would haue dealt sincerely and faithfully: he would haue forborne our church all vniust and slaunderous imputations: hee would not haue sought by apparant vnruth and falshood to iustifie his bad cause: he would haue had care so to cary himselfe that his maiestie seeing nothing but true and plaine dealing might conceiue what is amisse to haue proceeded onely from simplicitie of error, not from any obstinate and wilfull malice against the truth. But hee hath taken a farre other course, and seeketh very lewdly by lies and tales to abuse the kings most excellent Maestie, by pretending antiquitie for those things which by antiquity were condemned: by fathering their owne bastards vpon the Fathers, by wresting and forcing their sayings to that which they neuer thought, yea when sometimes in the verie places which he alleadgeth they haue taught the contrarie to that that he would approoue by them: by deprauing our religion with odious consequences of heresies, impieties, blasphemies: whereof notwithstanding I make no doubt but he himselfe in his own conscience doth acquit vs. Whereby it may seeme that howsoeuer he were willing to put his request to the aduventure, yet being himself without all hope or opinion of successe in it, his speciall respect was to lengthen the expectation of his Catacatholicke followers, that they might not vtterly despaire of that with the hope whereof they haue so long deluded them: to settle them in those heresies and irreligions whereto they haue so long inured them: to continue them prest and ready to those intents and purposes whereto they thinke they may hereafter haue occasion to vse them: to prouide by these meanes with ^a Demetrius that his and his fellowes craft and occupation might be maintained which was now in ieopardy to grow vtterly to decay: and lastly to adde some grace to his booke the better to serue all these turnes while it should carry the name to be dedicated to the king: no man imagining, the case standing as it doth, that he would presume to offer it to his maestie but that doubtlesse he thought some exploit to be performed by him therein.

^a Act. 19. 25.

And that he thought so indeed, appeareth by his owne wordes in the Preface to the Reader, commending this treatise vnto him vnder these termes, that he shall find here in the marow and pith of many large volumes contracted and drawn into a narrow roome. By his owne conceit therefore he hath sent vs the strength of their strength, the choyse of their learning, the flowre of their arguments : so that this booke is as it were a Goliath out of the host of the Philistins sent to defie the host of Israell, and to require a combatant at one fight to trie the matter, presuming that in all Israell is not a man to be found that dare vndertake to answer the challenge. Wherby appeareth that it is but for fashion sake that he speaketh so modestly in the beginning of his epistle, excusing his slender skill, and complaining that his dead and dai'y interrupted & persecuted studies will not give him leaue to accomplish that litle which otherwise he might vndertake and performe. Surely he neither wanted skill nor leisure, as it seemeth, that could thus gather the marow and pith of so many large volumes. As for his studies, if he will confesse the truth, he must acknowledge that they haue beene more interrupted by their contentions with the Iesuites, then persecuted by vs : albeit great reason it is that he and his fellowes should be persecuted, if he will so terme it, by restraint of body, that abuse their libertie when they are abroad to the persecuting and destroying of other mens soules, withdrawing them from the seruice of Iesus Christ, and by their illusions and enchantments bewitching them to doate vpon Antichrist, extinguishing in them the true conscience of allegiance to their Prince, and preparing them to the execution of their seditious and traitorous designments, as hath in some part appeared to his Maiestie already, and I doubt not but some further experience will make it yet further to appeare.

Now it is well in the meane time that he acknowledgeth in his Maiestie exceeding clemencie, mildnesse, modestie louing and affable disposition, singular ornaments of a Prince and wherein is speciall token of a king whom ^b the ^b Psal 4.3. Lord hath chosen. But his threatning wordes towards the end of this epistle doe preface that heereafter they will alter this stile, and cry out, as they did in the dayes of our most noble Queene deceased, of cruelty, tyrannic, extre-mitie, of persecutions and martyrdomes, when by their disloiall and seditious courtes they shall drawe from his Maiestie greater seueritie and sharpnesse of executions then his princly nature is of it selfe inclined vnto. Then shall this acknowledgement of his bee an vpbraiding of them that they themselues haue made the rod wherewith they are scourged: that his Maicstie hath bene kinde and louing to them, but they haue bene vnkinde and cruell to themselues. But this clemencie and kindnesse, albeit it be an encouragement to good and faithfull subiects in dutifull manner to vnfold vnto his Maiestie their iust grieuances and requests, yet ought it not to embolden euill affected persons with calumnious libels to interrupt the peaceable course of his Maiesties gouernement, and to seeke according to their drunkèn humours and fancies the alteration of the state and admittance of those things, the building whereof they themselues know not how to settle vpon any sure ground And this is the thing that M. Bishop laboureth for, seeking with Elymas the forcerer ^c to peruert the straight wayes of the Lord: and whereas his Maiestie as he confesseth, hath made open and often profession of his vigilancie and care to aduance the diuine honour of our Sauscur Christ and his most sacred religion, hee would instead thereof draw him to aduance the idoll ^d Mauzzim the god of Antichrist, and to establish ^e damnable heresies by him priuily brought in, whereby his agents and factours ^f through conuentionnesse with fained wordes doe make marchandise of the soules of men, ^g speaking thinges which they ought not for filthie lucre sake. And this hee doth vnder a colour of deliuering what he assureth himselfe to be very expedient, necessary and agreeable towards the furnishing and setting forward of so heauenly a worke by his maiestie intended. But it is not inough that he assure himselfe, vnlesse hee could by good ground assure his maiestie also of that which he laboureth to perswade, which he hath not done nor indeed can do: & therefore as touching his furnishing and setting forward of this worke

^c Act. 13. 10.

^d Dan. 11. 38.

^e 2. Pet. 2. 1.
^f vers. 3.

^g Tit. 1. 11.

worke we answer him as the princes and fathers of Judah & Beniamin answered their vndermining aduersaries: ^b It is not for you but for vs to build the house v to our God You ^b Exra. 4. 3.
Samaritans, you Papists are mungrels taking vpon you to fear the Lord, and yet seruing idols also; neglecting the ordinances and commaundements of the Lord by which this house is to be builded, and doating vpon your ^k old custome, and therefore ^l having no portion nor right nor me- moriall in Ierusalem nor in this heauenly worke and seruice of Iesus Christ. Indeed it is true which he saith, that whatsoeuer talent of learning or knowl. dge hee hath attained vnto, the vse and frui thereof is due to his Maiestie; but the greater is his sinne to withdraw it from him to whom it is due, being so farre engaged to the Pope as that his Maiestie cannot presume of any true and faithfull vse thereof. As for the prooffe that he alledgeth of his sincere and dutifull affection and loue, it is altogether vsound. And to this purpose I may well demaund as did Constantinus the Em-perour the father of the great Constantine: ^m How should they be deemed faithfull vnto their prince, who are found to be perfidious and vsfaithfull towards God? It appeareth by that secret that he vttereth in this epistle towards the ende, that his loue is according to the rule of Bias, if at least it were his, ⁿ sic ama tanquam aliquando osurus: Loue so as being per- haps in time to hate. Certaine it is, whatsoeuer he pretendeth, that neither hee nor his euer meant his Maiestie any good, vnlesse they could gaine him to bee that that they would haue him to be. But what is that prooffe of his sinceritie that hee alleageth: forsooth in time of vncertaine for- tune; when, hee saith, assured friends are most certainly tried he both suffered disgrace and hindrance for his loue towards his Maiestie, being stiled in print, A Scotist in factum Where we see that a false merchant needeth no broker. How cunningly he glofeth the matter to make shew of great loue where indeed there was none at all. What was it for, his Maiesties cause that those hard fortunes, that disgrace and hinderance.

ⁱ 2. King. 17

41.

^k 1. King. 34

to 40.

^l Nehem. 2. 20.^m Euseb. de vita Const. l. 1. c. 11.ⁿ Tulli. de anti-citia.

hinderance did befall him? Nothing lesse. The Iesuites forsooth and the Secular priests, whilest ech seeke superiority ouer other, fall together by the eares. The Iesuites procure an Archpriest, one that should be at their deuotion, to be set ouer the Seculars. The Seculars refuse to yeeld him subiection and by appeale refer the matter to the Pope. For the prosecuting of this appeale M. Bishop with another of his company are sent to Rome, There by the procurement of Parsons both hee and his fellow are clapped vp in prison; and continuing there for many weekes were at length by the sentence of their Protectour banished England, and the one of them confined to Lorraine, and the other to Fraunce. This is the maine tragedy of M. Bishops misfortunes, not concerning the caule of the kings Maiestie any whit at all. Onely in the managing of these matters it came to passe according to the prouerbe, that when theeues fall out, true men come by their goods. For whilest ech part sought to provide the better for themselues heere in England for the time to come, the Iesuits for their aduancement laboured to entitle the Lady Infanta of Spaine to the succession of the crowne of England. But the Seculars presuming that if the Infanta were set vp, they must certainly goe downe, and chusing rather to aduenture themselues vpon vncertaine hope, then to giue way to vndoubted and certanie despaire, shrowded themselues ynder the acknowledgement of his Maiesties iust tittle, not for any loue to his Maiestie, but for hatred to the Iesuits, and for the preferment of themselues. For imagining that things vpon the death of Queene Elizabeth would grow troublesome and intending to make offer to his Maiestie of their helpe forsooth for the obtaining of the crowne, they thought by capitulations and conditions, his Maiestie preuailing, to make all sure for their part, thinking that the Iesuites by their traiterous practises had set a sufficient barre against themselues, and should be no let vnto them, Heereupon they fall to writing one against another another, and M. Bishop is stiled in print A Scotist insurrection and to picke a thanke with his Maiestie, writeth his troublesome discourse, one for defence of his Highnesse honour, the other of his title to the crowne of England. A worke of supererogation for his part: for his Maiestie needed no such proctours as he is neither was the wrangling of a companie of base fugitiues sufficient to question either his Maiesties honour, or his title to the crowne. And how little hold there was in these his defenses may appeare by the examples of his fellowes, Watson and Clarke, who tooke part with him in this action: and the one of them wrote as much in the kings defence as M. Bishop did, and yet when they saw vpon his Maiesties entrance that things were likely to goe otherwile then liked them immediately they fall to conspiring and plotting against him: the case was altered: they were not nowe the men that they were before. The like is M. Bishops fidelitie and loue and he himselfe afterwards plainly giueth his Maiestie to vnderstand that he may hope no otherwise of him then he hath already found in them. Yet heere he presumeth that sith his zeale and loue to his Maiestie hath heretofore drawne him without the compasse of his profession to treat of law courses: therefore his Grace will licence him out of the like zeale vnto gods truth, so say something in matters of Diuinitie. But surely if he by his law courtes defended his Maiesties cause no better then by Diuinitie hee hath defended his owne, hee might very well haue spared that labour, and left it to them that were fit to doe it if occasion had required, which indeed he was not. But this is the malepartnesse and sawcinesse of these base vassals and runnagates both Iesuites and Seculars to thrust themselues into matters that belong not to their profession or condition: they are tampering with causes of kingdomes and states: they will determine of titles and inheritances of crownes and scepters. This is their anogancie and presumption assuming vnto themselues as if they were able for all things: all their geese be swannes: not an asse amongst them but is woorthy to stand with the kings horses: not one of them I warrant you but is sufficient enough to be a Counsellour to a Prince. They are the onely high spirited men, of great conceit, of deepe reach, of noble resolution, of most speciall & secret intelligence, of braue discourse, that can tell great tales of Bombomachides Clunystaridy sarchides the great Gurgustidonian emperor: euen like Narcissus, so farre in loue with themselues that they are drowned in their owne pride. But we know them well enough: we see their foolerie and laugh at it: when they come to triall they are for the most part but emptie barrels: all this great noise prooueth in a manner nothing but meere winde. Onely we are sorie for that as the heretickes of old by ° strange deuised wordes and names stupefied and amazed ° simple and ignorant people, and by that meanes gathering to themselues great admiration, drew many to their heresies: so these seducers with bold faces and big lookes, and brauadoes of prating and cogging doe make seely soules, vnstable fooles, but specially women to admitte them and grow in loue with them, so to be caried by them blindfolded to their owne destruction. But here we are much to obserue that by law courses onely M. Bishop defended his Maiesties title to the crowne: by Diuinitie he could say nothing, for his master Bellarmine had taught him that it is but P de iure humano quod hunc aut illum habemus regem: it is but by the law of man that we haue this or that man to be our king, and therefore, as hee argueth, because the lawe of God is to be preferred before the lawe of man, he that by the law of man is to be king, vnlesse he wil be a maintainer of popish religion, a vassall & slaue to the Pope, by the law of God he must be no king. This is M. Bishops Diuinitie, and by this Diuinitie his Maiestie must haue beene ordered, if (for our iudgement) God had suffered him to fall into their hands. As touching his Diuinity otherwise which he saith hath bin the best part of his study more

° Hieron. epist.
 ad Theodoram.
 August. de her.
 res. 6.

P Bellarm. de Rom. Pontif. li.
 5 cap. 72

more then thirfe seuen yeeres, how well hee hath profited therein, wee shall see by examining the particulars of this booke.

2. W. BISHOP.

Whereinto I may conveniently enter with that golden sentence, with which your Maiestie began the Conference, holden in Iannary last, betweene certaine of your subiectes, about some controuersie in Religion: A Ioue principium: or conformable to that in holy writte, I am Alpha, and Omega, that Apoc. cap. 1. 8. is, The beginning and the end, saith our Lerd: And applying it unto Princes, I may be bold to say, that nothing is more expedient and necessary for kings, nothing more honourable, and of better assurance for their estate, then that in the very beginning of their reigne, they take especiall order, that the supreme, and most puissant Monarch of heauen and earth, be purely and uprightly serued, as well in their owne example lines, as throughout their dominions. For of Almighty God his meere bountie and great grace; they receiue and hold their Diadems and Princely Scepters: and cannot possesse and enioy them (their mightie Forces, and most prudent Counsailes notwithstanding) one day longer, then during his diuine will and pleasure. Which that wise king witnesseth, speaking in the person of Gods wisdom, Proverb. 4. Dan. 4. Per me reges regnant: By me kings doe raigne. And Nabuchodonozer sometime king of Babylon, was turned out to grasse with beasts, for seuen yeeres, and made to know and confesse, that the highest doth command ouer the kingdomes of men, and disposed of them, as pleaseth his diuine wisdom. But I need not stand upon this point, being so well knowne, and duely confessed by your Maiestie.

R. ABBOT.

Plutarch reporteth that ^{Plutarch. de} the nobles of Lacedaemon approving a speech that was deliuered by a man of ^{of Auditions.} euill behauiour, caused the same to bee vttered by another of honest life and conuersation, that it might carie the greater weight when it proceeded from a man whose doings otherwise were answerable to his wordes. M. Bishop hath here vttered a very good speech, but it foundeth not effectually from his mouth or pen: it were fit that some other man of other profession and comportment should be the writer or speaker of this matter, for he denieth to his Maiestie that supreme government in causes ecclesiasticall whereby he should take vpon him to doe that that hee perswadeth him, and being sworne to the Pope he cannot but mainteinethose lawes of his, whereby hee inhibiteth Kings and Princes to meddle with matters of religion and of the church, and reserueth the same wholly to be ordered by himselfe and his prelates, and as for princes they must receiue and practise the same according to his order. As touching the reason also that he alleadgeth why princes should take especiall order that God bee purely and vprightly serued, because of his meere bountie and grace they receiue and hold their diadems and princely scepters, the Pope denieth that they hold the same immediately from God, but are to receiue them by his mediation and approbation and no longer to holde them then they conforme themselves to his lawes: Ecce nos constituti sumus super gentes & regna, &c. Behold saith the Pope, we are set ouer nations and kingdomes, to build up and to plant, to pull up and to destroy, &c. and therefore what the wisdom of God saith as M. Bishop alleadgeth, By me kings reigne, the same the Pope blasphemously applieth to himselfe: Per me reges regnant: By me kings doe reigne. Thus the Pope would haue Princes as very beasts as Nabuchodonosor was, not to know of whom they hold their crownes and kingdomes but to thinke that all dependeth vpon him. But M. Bishop heere acknowledgeth the truth that of God they holde the same, and therefore should make it their speciall care that the same God be honoured accordingly. And heere vnawares hee iustificeth our doctrine as touching the Princes supreme

^b Dist. 96. §. imperator.

^a Bulla. Pij. 5. & de maior. & obed. cap. Vnam sanctam.

^d Prou. 8. 15.

^a Ceremon. eccle. Rom. li. 1. cap. 2.

supreme authoritie for the gouernment of our church, the effect whereof we teach to bee this, to prouide by lawes and to take especiall order that God bee purely and vp rightly serued: that idolatric and superstition bee remooued: that the word of God be truely and sincerely taught, that the Sacraments be duely administred: that the Bishops and pastours diligently performe the seruice and duety that doth appertaine vnto them, that the commandements of God be not publikely and scandalously broken. For these things we acknowledge the king to be vnder Christ the supreme gouernour of the churches within the dominions that are subiect vnto him, and this ductie M. Bishop confesseth to appertaine vnto him. And thus did the good kings of Iudah, Dauid, Ezechias, Iosias, &c. Thus haue Christian emperours and princes done: thus and no otherwise did Queene Elizabeth: and yet for the doing hereof shee was proscribed by the Pope, and so much as in him lay deprived of her crowne and scepter. But the good hand of that God whome shee serued was continually with her, and shee prospered thereby: whilest he that was the beginner of that tragedie and diuers other his successours and confederates went to hell shee raigned with victorie and glory: shee was a terrour to the nations about her: shee died in peace, was buried in honour: left her kingdome safely to be entred and enioyed by his Maiestie, and herselfe now raigneth in heauen triumphantly for euer. In the same steps his Maiestie walketh: and the same God will be his guide and defence, and we doubt not but will more and more establish the throne of his kingdome to himselfe and to his royall posteritie vntill the day of Christ, that that Samaritan generation may gnaw their tongues for anger and enuie to see the walles of Ierusalem ascending, and the temple of God builded vp and his true religion and seruice flourishing and increasing more and more.

3. W. BISHOP,

Ephes. 4.

But sithence there bee in this our most miserable age, great diuersities of Religions, and but one onely, wherewith God is truly serued and pleased, as saith the Apostle. One bodie, one Spirit, as you are called into one hope of your vocation; one Lord, one Faith, one Baptisme: My most humble suite and supplication to your high Maiestie is, that you to your eternall good, will embrace, maintaine, and set forth that onely true, Catholike, and Apostolicke faith, wherein all your most roiall progenitors liued and died: or if you cannot be wonne so soone, to alter that religion in which it hath bene your misfortune, to haue bene bred and brought up: That then in the meane season, you will not so heauily persecute the sincere professors of the other.

supposed of papists
by Gen skills psonal.

R. ABBOT.

How M. Bishop propoundeth briefly to his Maiestie the sum of his petition, the foundation whereof he layeth in a principle which wee acknowledge to be a truth, that whereas there be great diuersities of religions in the world there is but one onely wherewith God is truly serued. Hereupon hee frameth his humble suite and supplication that his maiestie will embrace, maintaine and set forth that only true, Catholicke and Apostolicke faith. But that needeth no suite nor supplication of his: for his maiestie already doth embrace, maintaine and set forth that one only true Catholicke and Apostolicke faith. For what is the Catholicke faith but the faith of the Catholicke church? And which then shall we take to be the Catholicke church? Surely the catholicke church by the very signification of the woorde is the vniuersall church so called ^a quia per totum est, because it is ouer all or through all the world, and is not tied to anie countrie, place, person or condition of men, ^b not this church

^a August. de
vni. eccles. c. 2.
Athanas.
quest 81.
^b August. in
Psal. 56.

church or that church; as S. Austin speaketh, but the church dispersed through the whole world, and not that which consisteth in men now present living, but so as that there belong to it both those that haue beene before vs and that shall be after vs to the worldes end. Whereby we see how absurdly the church of Rome taketh vnto it the name of the catholicke church, and how absurdly the Papistes take vnto them the name of Catholicke. The Catholicke church is the vniuersall church: the church of Rome is a particular church; therefore to say, the catholicke Romane church is all one as to say the vniuersall particular church. To speake by their rule, the Romane church is the head, and all other churches are members vnto it, but the catholicke church comprehendeth all: therefore to say the Romane church is the Catholicke church, is as much as to say, the head is the whole bodie. Neither doth it helpe them, that of olde particular churches were called by the name of catholicke church, it being no otherwise done but as in toto similari in a body where all the parts are of the same nature, where euery part hath the name of the whole, and no one part can challenge the same more then any other, as in the elements euery part of the fire is fire: euery part of the water: water: euery part of the earth is earth, and euery part by like reason caryeth the same name. For so euery church where true faith was taught was called to distinguish it from hereticall assemblies. The Catholicke church, and every Bishop of such church was called a Bishop of the Catholicke church, and no one church more then other assumed vnto it any prerogatiue of that title, Therefore they called the catholicke faith the faith that was received by the church throughout the whole world, and true Christians were called Catholicke, ^d ex communiōe totius orbis ^a August. by hauing communion and fellowship of faith with the church of ^{epist.} the whole world. It is therefore a meere vsurpation, where by the Papistes call the Romane church the catholicke church, and the very same that the Donatistes of old did vse.

^c Cont. epist. fundam. c. a. 4.

^o ibid.

^f ibid.
Brenic. collat.
cum Donatist.
cap. 2. die. 3.

^h Cont. Crescon.
Grammat. li. 2.
cap. 37.

ⁱ epist. 48.

^j ibid

^k Cont. epist.
fundament. c. 4.

^l Brenic. collat.
cum Donat.
die. 3. cap. 2.

^m Isa. 65, 25.

use, They held the Catholicke church to be at Cartenna in Africa, and the Papistes hold it to be at Rome in Itale. They would haue the church to be called Catholicke, not by reason of the communion and society thereof through the whole world, but ^f by reason of the perf. Etion of doctrine & sacraments, which they falsely challenged to themselves, and the same perfection the church of Rome nowe arrogateth to it selfe, and will therefore be called the Catholicke church. From Cartenna the Donatistes ordeined ^h Bishops to other countries, euen ^h to Rome it selfe: and from Rome by the Papistes order mult Bishops be authorized to all other churches. They would be taken to be ^h Catholickes for keeping communion with the church of Cartenna; and so the Papistes will be accounted Catholickes for keeping communion with the church of Rome. They held that ⁱ howsoeuer a man beleued he could not be saued vnlesse he did communicate with the church at Cartenna: and the Papistes hold that there is no saluation likewise but in communicating with the church of Rome. The Donatistes were not so absurde in the one, but the papistes are as absurd and ridiculous in the other. There was reason why Austin should be mooued with the name of ^k Catholicke when they that were called Catholickes had testimonie of their faith from the communion and society of the church throughout the whole world, and were therefore so called ^l quia communicant ecclesie toto orbe diffuse: because, saith Saint Austin, they communicate with the church spread ouer the whole world: but most sottishly is it alleadged for a motiue vnto vs, being nowe *Donatist*cally applyed to one particular church of Rome and men bearing the name of Catholickes onely for communicating with that church. Surely as the name of Iewes was of old a name of honour and the proper title of the people of God, but afterwarde by their apostasie who bare it was left for a ^m name of curse and reproch: so the name of Catholickes was an honourable name and the peculiar title of the

the true children of the church but now by their abuse who haue vniuſtly taken that name vnto themſelues, it is become a name of curſe and ſhame with the people of GOD, and the proper badge of Apoſtates and here-^{▪ Rom 2. 28.} ticks. And as the Apoſtle denieth the name of [▪] Jewes to them who yet according to the letter were ſo called be-[▪] cauſe of the circumciſion of the fleſh, and applieth [▪] the[▪] truth of the name to them who were ſo according to the ſpirit, albeit according to the letter they were not ſo named ſo the name of Catholickes indeed belongeth not to the Romiſh faction, who according to the letter take vpon them to bee ſo called, but the true meaning thereof belongeth to them, who although they ioy not in the literal name, being now become by abuſe accuſed and reprochful, yet do follow the ſame faith which they followed who firſt were called by the name of Catholickes. Let them haue the ſhell; ſo that we haue the kernell; let them vaunt themſelues of the empty letter ſo long as wee haue the true vertue and ſignification of the name, The name in his true uſe importeth them that embrace the faith of the Catholicke, that is, the vniuerſall church that hath bene from the beginning of the world, that is throughout the whol world, and ſhall be to the worldes end. Now as of this Catholicke church from the beginning to the ende there is as appeareth in the words cited by M. Biſhop, but [▪] one body, euen as one^{▪ Ephas. 4. 4.} Lord, one God and Father of all, ſo is there alſo but, [▪] one ſpi-[▪] rit, one hope, one faith, one baptiſme, one[▪] ſpirituall meat and[▪] drinke [▪] one religion. Let vs then looke vnto thoſe that haue bene before vs, and conſider Abel, Noe, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob and the reſt of the Patriarches and Fathers: let vs looke to Moſes and the Prophets and the whole generations of the righteous and faithfull of the old Teſtament and ſee what their faith was: what was their religion and ſeruite of God. Vndoubtedly we finde not a Papiſt amongſt them all: we finde no ſhadow of that which they now obtrude and thruſt vpon vs vnder the name of Catholicke tholicke religion. They did not worship idols and images they did not comming after pray to the saints that were dead before: they vied no inuocation of angels: they knew no merits nor works of supererogation: they vowed no vowes of monkerie: they neither sold nor bought pardons, nor made praiers for soules in Purgatorie: they made no pilgrimages to reliques and dead mens bones: they knew no shrift nor absolution, nor any of that rife stuffe wherein the substance of Catholicke religion is now imagined to consist. But what they did, the same doe we as they worshipped God, so, sauing ceremoniall obseruations, we also worshipp him: as they beleueed so by the same spirit of faith we alio beleuee: as they praied, so and with the same words wee also pray according to the approoued example of their life, wee also teach men to liue. Therefore not Poperie but our religion is the Catholicke religion, because it is that which the Catholicke church hath practised from the beginning of the world, and Popish religion is not so. The same faith and religion which they followed and no other our Sauour Christ at his comming further confirmed and onely stripping it of those types and shadowes, wherewith it pleased God for the time to cloth it, commended the same to his Apostles simply and nakedly to bee preached to the nations. They did so: they added nothing of their owne they preached onely the Gospell promised before by the prophets in the holy Scriptures: saying none other things then those which the prophets and Moses did say should come. The Gospell which they first preached, afterwards by the will of God, as Ireneus saith they deliuered to vs in writing to be the pillar and foundation of our faith. Thus then what Christ deliuered, the Apostles preached what the Apostles preached, they wrot: what they wrote, we receiue and beleuee, and beleueing this, as Tertullian saith, we desire to beleuee no more, because we first beleuee that there is nothing else for vs to beleuee. And therefore as Saint Austin saith, if any man, nay if an angell from heauen shall preach, ^f 2. Cor. 4. 13.

^c Tertul. de praescript. adu.
haeret.

^d Rom. 1. 2.

^e Act 26. 22.

^f Iren. lib. 3.

cap. 1.

^g Tertul. de.
praescript. adu.
haeret.

^h August. cons.
lit. Petil. l. 3.
cap. 8.

preach unto us concerning Christ, or concerning his church, or concerning any thing appertaining to our faith & life but what we haue receiued in the Scriptures of the Law and Gospell accursed be he. Our faith therefore, because it is that which the Apostles committed to writing, is the Apostolicke faith, & our church ^b ex consanguinitate doctrine, by consanguinity, & agreement of doctrine is proued to be an Apostolicke church. Of this our Apostolicke church his Maiesty is the principall member, and vnder Iesus Christ the supreme gouernour: this Apostolicke faith he embraceth, maintaineth and setteth foorth, and this is the onely true Catholicke and Apostolicke faith. As for M. Bishops religion, it cannot bee the Catholicke religion, because it is not that which the Catholicke church, that is, the faithfull of all ages haue practised: his faith is not the Apostolicke faith, because it is not that which the Apostles left in writing. They make no mention of the Pope, of his supremacie, of his pardons, of worshipping of images, inuocation of Saints, pilgrimages, and a thousand such other trumperies.

Nowe whereas hee allegeth that all his Maiesties most roiall progenitours haue liued and died in that which he calleth the Catholicke and Apostolicke faith, hee playeth the part of Symmachus the Pagan Sophister, who by the like argument woulde haue perswaded Valentinian the Emperour to restore their heathenish idolatries and abominations. ^c We are to follow our fathers, sayth he, who wish happinesse and felicitie followed their fathers. Thus men haue hardened themselues in their heresies saying, ^d Parentes mei quod fuerunt, hoc & ego. What my father and mother were before me, the same will I bee. But his Maiestie well knoweth that in matter of religion the example of parents is no bond to the children, but the triall thereof is, ^e to returne to the roote and originall of the Lords tradition, as Cyprian speaketh, not regarding what any before us hath thought fit to be done, but what Christ hath done who is before all. It is not ynknowne to his Maiestie that there should

^b Tertul. vi
supra

^c Ambros. epist.
lib. 5. in Relat.
Symmach.
^d Aug. Psal. 54

^e Cyprian. li. 2
epist. 3.

† Apoc. 17

13. 17.

8 vers. 14.

b vers. 16.

be a time when the kinges of the earth ¹ should giue their power and kingdomes to the beast until the word of God be fulfilled, and with the whoore sitting upon many waters should bend themselves to ² fight against the Lambe. Wherein if any of his progenitours or predecessours haue erred, hee leaue them to the counsell of God, but by the worde of God learneth himselfe to bee one of them that ³ shall hate the whoore and make her d. solate and naked, and shall cate her fleshe and burne her with fire. Albeit it is vtterly false which hee affirmeth that all his Maicities progenitours, kings of these Realines of England and Scotland liued and died in the Romish faith that nowe our Romish factours so much labour to set vp. Indeed he and his fellowes are woont to bee very lauish in their speeches of this matter, as if from king Lucius of Britaine and Donaldus of Scotland the lonely religion that had bene professed had bene the Romish idolatrie and superstition that now is practised by them: whereas it shall afterwarde plainly appeare, that at the comming in of Austin the Italian monke, foure hundred yeeres after the receiuing of the faith into this Iland, the Bishops and churches of Scotland ioyned with the Brittaines against those new obseruations which the same Austin brought from Rome, and would by no meanes admit thereof, and for the space of a hundred yeeres at least, refused to communicate with the English that had receiued the same. Yea and in the time of king Henry the third, twelue hundred yeeres after the incarnation of Christ, when the Popes Legate would haue entred into Scotland to visite the churches there, the king of Scots, Alexander the second, forbad him so to do, alleaging that none of his predecessors had admitted any such, neither would hee suffer it, and therefore willed him at his owne perill to forbear: so long was it before the Popes authoritie coulde gaine any acknowledgement in that kingdom, which his agents would make vs beleue hath bene in all ages vniuersally and vnquestionably received.

i. Math. Paris.

in Henric. 3.

anno 1238.

1239.

ceiued. But they care not indeede what they say or write, so that it may cary a magnificall and braue shewe to dazzell the eyes of them that are not well acquainted with their lewd and naughtie dealing.

But M. Bishop being out of doubt that hee should not preuaile in this first part of his suite, therefore addeth the second: Or if you cannot be won so soone to alter that religion in which it hath bene your misfortune to haue been bred and brought vp, that then in the meane season you will not so heauily persecute the sincere professors of the other. Where we see the presumption of a base and beggerly vassall (I forget heere that he is a Doctor of Diuinitie, I consider him as a subiect) thusto vpbraide his prince with misfortune in his breeding and bringing vp, whereas his Maiesties bringing vp by the singular prouidence and disposition of almightie God hath sorted to make him high & admirable amongst other princes, and hee hath learned thereby to be indeed a king, by casting off that yoke of bondage, whereby sundry other princes are enthralled to a beast: yea and by his bringing vpp is so well able to defend and maintaine the religion that he professeth, that M. Bishop must stand before him like a dumbe asse able to say nothing, but onely to repeate their olde cuckowes song, The church, the church; the fathers, the fathers, albeit he can make nothing good neither by church nor fathers. But his suite is that his Maiestie will leaue off so heauily to persecute them, complaining before he haue cause, and entreating his Maiestie to leaue off before he haue begun. And doth a dissenting hypocrite talke of heauie persecution onely for easie imprisonment and ammerciament of goods, when they in most barbarous and cruell sort by infinite vexations and torments, by rackes and strapadoes, by fire and sword, haue spilt and destroyed the bloud and liues of so many thousands of ours onely for the profession of the Gospell of Christ? But no otherwise doe they complaine of persecutions thendid of old the ^kDonatists and runna-

^k Pitellius De- natisia apud Genna in Catalog.

¹ August. in
Psal. 59.

^m Prou. 22. 25.

gate Circumcellions, and wee say of them as Saint Austin did of the other: They suffer persecution: sed pro fatuitate, pro vanitate: but it is for foolery: it is for vanitie. ^m Foolishnesse is bound in the heart of a childe, saith Solomon, but the rod of correction shall driue it away from him. Indeed they doe for the most part but play the children: it is but their will, or rather their wilfulnesse for which they suffer: they can giue no reason why they so doe, but what ignorance affoordeth them, they must follow the church: they will doe as their fathers and forefathers haue done. It is fit that a chilles stomacke bee subdued with a rod, and necessarie that some course be taken for the subduing and reforming of their will.

4. W. BISHOP.

Very many urgent, and forcible reasons might be produced, in fauour and defence of the Catholicke Roman Religion, wher of diuers haue bene in most learned treatises, tendered to your Maiestie alreadye. Wherefore I will onely touch three: two of them chosen out of the subiect of this book: The third selected from a sentence of your Maiesties, recorded in the foresaid Conference.

And because that argument is, as most sensible, so best assured, which proceedeth from a principle that is either euident in it selfe, or else granted, and confessed for true: My first prooffe shall bee grounded upon that your Maiesties owne resolute, & constant opinion (as it appeareth in the said conferēce) to wittle: That no church ought farther to seperate it selfe from the church of Rome, either in doctrine or ceremonie, then she hath departed from her selfe, when she was in her flourishing, and best estate. From whence I deduce this reason: The principall pillars of the church of Rome in her most flourishing estate, taught in all points of Religion, the same Doctrine, that shee now holdeth and teacheth: and in expresse termes condemneth for error and heresie, most of those Articles, which the Protestants esteeme to bee the principal parts partes of their reformed Gospell: Therefore if your Maiesty will resolutely embrace, and constantly defend that doctrine, which the Roman church maintained in her most flourishing estate: you must forsake the Protestant, and take the catholicke into your Princely protection.

R A B B O T.

You talke M. Bishop, of many vrgent and forcible reasons, but you talke as your fellowes doe like Mountebanks and iuglers; you haue much prating and manie wordes, but your reasons when they are duely examined are as light as feathers before the winde. Neyther woulde they seeme other to your owne followers, but that you bewitch them to this principle that they must reade nothing written on our part for answer of them. We see your vrgent and forcible reasons in this booke which you tell vs is the marrow and pith of many large volumes. I doubt not but by that time I haue examined the same, your owne pupills and scholers, if they reade the answer, will account you a meere seducer, a cosener and abuser of them, and will detest you accordingly. But to beginne withall, you offer three reasons to his Maiestie in your epistle for the iustifying of your Romish religion and for the impeaching of ours: two chosen out of the subiect of this booke: the third selected from a sentence of his Maiestie deliuered at the Conference. Now if these reasons proue reasonlesse, then your reason, M. Bishop, shoulde haue taught you more manners and duetie then thus to trouble his most excellent Maiestie with your reasonlesse reasons. To examine them in order, his first reason is grounded vpon a principle most iudiciouly and soundly affirmed by his Maiestie at the Conference aforesayd: That no Church ought further to separate it selfe from the church of Rome in doctrine or ceremonie, then shee hath departed fro her selfe when shee was in her flourishing and best estate, and, which is subtilly left out by M. Bishop, from Christ her lord and head, For seeing it cannot:

cannot bee denied but that the church of Rome was once found and vpright in the faith, the Apostle bearing witness that ^b their faith was published throughout the whole world, it must needs follow that what shee hath not since that time altered is still vpright and found, and therefore to bee embraced. Nowe from hence M. Bishop argueth thus that the principal pillars of the church of Rome in her most flourishing estate taught in all points of Religion the same doctrine that shee now holdeth, and in expresse termes did condemne for error and heresie the most of the articles of our religion: therefore if his Maiestie will embrace that doctrine which the Roman church maintained in her most flourishing estate he must forsake the Protestant & receiue the Catholicke into his princely protection. But soft and faire Maister Bishop, there is no hast. Your proposition yet remaineth to bee prooued, which you cannot prooue, and it is indeede grossly and absurdly false. Wee hope you will not denie, but that the Apostle Saint Paul was one principal pillar of that church, who there shed his blood for the witnessing of the faith. Hee wrot an epistle to the church of Rome at that time when the faith thereof was most renowned through the worlde. Hee wrote at large comprehending therein as Theodoret sayth ^c Omnis generis doctrinam & accuratam copiosamq; dogmatum pertrahationem: doctrine of all sortes, or all kinde of doctrine, and very exact and plentifull handling of the points thereof. Now in all that epistle what doth he lay either for you or against vs? nay what doth he not say for vs against you? Hee condemneth ^d the charging of the glorie of the incorruptible God into the similitude of the image of a corruptible man, and^e worshipping the creature instead of the Creatour. It is for vs against you: for you by your schoole trickes doubt not to teach menne by the image of a man to worship God, and by religious deuotions of prayers and offerings to worshippinge Saints and Saints images instead of God. Hee sayth, and we say the same, that ^f the righteousnesse of God is from

^b R. m. 1. 8.

^c Theodoret. p̄s̄fat. in ep̄ist. Pauli.

^d Rom. 1. 23.

^e Vers. 25.

Rom. 3. 17.

fr m faith to faith . You say otherwise that it is from faith to workes: that faith is but the entrance to workes , and that in workes the rightcoufnesse of God doth properly consist. The Apottle in expresse termes affirmeth, ² imputation of rightcoufnesse without workes, we doe the same, but you professedly dispute against it . Hee teacheth vs that ^h et rnal life is the gft of God through Iesus (hrst our Lord: but you M Bishop, tell vs that all ⁱ that are of yeares of discretion must either by their good cariage deserue eternall life, or else for their bad behauiour be disinherited. He telleth vs againe, and againe, ^k concupiscence is sinne , to lust is to sinne, and by the law it is knowne to bee : wee say ^k Rom. 6 27 the same, but you goe about to make vs beleue that it is not sinne. He saith of the ^l spirit of adoption, the same spirit beareth witnesse w thour spirit that we are the sonnes of God: but you say we haue no such witnesse whereby we should beleue that we are the sonnes of God. He saith the ^m sufferings of this time are not worthy of the glory that shall be revealed vnto vs: but you say they are worthy. He saith nothing for those points for the deniall whereof M. Bishop condemneth vs , nothing for iustification before God by workes , nothing for free will ; nothing for reliques, nothing for the merit of single life , nothing for prayer for the dead, nothing for Traditions, nothing for any of the rest. Now in this case, M. Bishop, it hadde bene fit that you should by very good reason haue satisfied his Maiesty how it shoulde bee probable or possible that the Apottle writing at large to the Church of Rome, shoulde not once mention any of those maine points wherein the religion of the church of Rome now wholly consisteth, if the church of Rome were then the same that now it is : that he should say nothing of the prerogatiue of that church, nothing of the Pope, of his pardons, of the Masse, of transubstantiation, of Moonkish vowes, of images, of pilgrimages, of prayer to Saintes , of all the rest of your baggage stufte: in a word that he should be a Papiſt, and yet should write ▪ Rhem. Test.

argum. of the epist. in generall.

nothing but what in shew at least serueth the Protestants turne: only we must be perswaded forsooth that "where any thing soundeth contrary to the Romish faith, we faile of the right sense. But vndoubtedly: M. Bishop, either Saint Paul was a Protestant, or else he dealt very negligently in your behalfe. Saint Peter was another principall pillar of that church, the founder and head thereof as you perswade vs. What would he also forget the triple crowne? would he say nothing of all those things? Not a worde. There is nothing hindereth in either of his Epistles but that he also must be taken for a Protestant. Me thinkes here you should fare as in another cause ° Robertus Licienfis did before the Pope. You should spit and cry out sic vpon Peter sic vpon Paul. Would they not thinke these trash and trinkets of ours so much woorth as to speake of them? Ah these Protestants, these heretickes, they say all for them, and nothing at all for vs. But alas. Peter and Paul had not heard of any of these things and therefore no maruell that they wrote nothing of them. They read Moyles and the prophets: they preached as Christ did according to the scriptures: the Catholicke religion that had beene from the beginning of the world they continued: betwixt the old and the new testament we see a woonderfull agreement, but concerning Popery we see nothing.

° Eras. de rat.
concion. lib. 3.

Well, M. Bishop, let vs leaue Peter and Paul for heretickes: let vs see whether those that succeeded did all teach the same doctrine that the church of Rome now teacheth. Eleutherius the Bishop of Rome being sent vnto by Lucius king of this realme for a copy of the^p Roman constitutions for the gouernement of his new conuerted church and of the Imperiall lawes for the better ordering of his common wealth about 150 yeeres after the death of Christ, for answer writeth vnto him: that having received in his kingdome the lawe and faith of Christ, and having now the old and new testament, he should by a Councell of his realme take lawes from thence to gouerne thereby: that he was the vi-

° Holinsh. de- script. of Bri-
taine cap. 7.
Annals of England by Iohn.
Stow.

car of God in his kingdomes: that the people and nations of the kingdomes of Britaine were his, euen his children: that such as were deuided he should gather them together vnto the law of Christ: his holy church to peace and concord: and should cherish, maintaine, protect, gouerne and defend them. &c. But now the religion of Rome hath altered that stile and tel- leth vs that not the king but the Pope is ^a Gods vicar upon ^a Sexi. proem. earth, his vicar generall for all kingdomes; and as for ^{in glossa.} the church, the matters and gouernement thereof belong not to the king: who if hee make any lawes concerning religion, ^r he chalengeeth to himselfe anothers right, that is, the ^r Dist. 96. se imperator. Popes: because God would not haue the worke of Christian religion to be ordered by publicke lawes or by the secular powers but by Popes and Bishops. Anacletus Bishop of Rome and after him Calixtus ordeined ^r that consecration beeing done ^r Dist. 1. Episco- all should communicate or else be excommunicated: For so, ^{pus. & 2. Per- acta.} say they, the Apostles did set downe and the holy church of Rome obserueth. But the church of Rome that now is maketh it lawfull for the priest to receiue alone: the people in the meane time stand gazing and looking on: and the sight only must suffice them. Iulius the bishop of Rome disallowed ^r intinctam Eucharistiam, the dipping of the Eu- ^r De consecrat. charist the sacrament of Christs body in the cup, because ^{dist. 2. Cum} no witnesse hereof was brought out of the Gospell, but there is ^{omne:} mentioned the commending of the bread by it selfe, and the cup by it selfe. But now by the Canon of the masse the priest must ^a dippe the third part of the consecrated host in the sacra- ^a Breuiar. Rom. ment of the bloud and then prayeth that this mixture may be ^{in Canone} healthfull to himselfe and all the receiners vnto exerlasting ^{missa.} life. Gelasius Bishop of Rome saith as we say that ^x in the ^x Gelas. cont. sacrament is celebrated an image or semblance of the body and ^{Entych. &} bloud of Christ, and that there ceaseth not to be the substance ^{Nestor.} or nature of bread and wine: But now the Romish religion maketh them heretickes that say the sacramēt is the image or semblance of the body and bloud of Christ and not the body and bloud it selfe, or will not beleue that the bread ibid.

¹ De consecr.
dist. 2. Com-
perimus.

² Concil Trident. sess. 5.
can. 2.

³ Leo ep. st. 84

⁴ Bellar. de Indulgent. l. 1. c. 2.
Rhem. Annot.
in Col. 1. 24.
Extravaq. de penitent. & rem. cap. Vii-
genius.

and wine are substantially and really turned into the same body and blood, albeit they beleue with the same Gelasius that the sacrament is a diuine thing, and that ther. by wee are made partakers of the diuine nature, euen of Christ himselfe really and substantially, but yet spiritually, with all his riches becomming ours, and being eaten of vs, not by our teeth into our bellies, but by faith into our hearts vnto euerlasting life. The same G. lusi s when he vnderstood that some ¹ receiuing onely the portion of the sacred body of Christ, did forbear the cup of his sacred blood, did forbid that superstition, and willed that either they should receive the Sacrament whole, or be kept from the whole, because the diuiding of one and the same mysterie can not come, without great sacriledge: but now the church of Rome is so farre off from acknowledging the diuiding of that mysterie to be sacriledge as that shee pretendeth to be mouued ² with iust causes and reasons (such as Christ and his Apostles and the primitiue church had neuer the witte to consider of) to administer the sacrament to the people onely in one kind, and pronounceth them accursed that say shee erreth in so dooing. Leo bi. h. of Rome speaking of the Martyrs faith, ³ that although the death of many saines hath bene precious in the Lordes sight, yet the death of no innocent person hath bene the propitiation of the world, that the righteous received crownes but gaue none, and that of the fortitude of the faithfull haue grown examples of patience, not gifts of right or iustesse: that their deaths as they were seuerall persons were seuerall to euery of themselues, and that none of them by his death paid the debt of any other man, because it is onely our Lord Iesus Christ in whom all were crucified, all dead, all buried, all raised againe from the dead: but now the church of Rome hath changed that language, and telleth vs that there are ⁴ superabounding passions and satisfactions of the saints, wherein they haue suffered more then is due for their owne finnes, and which doe serue to supplie the necessitie and want of others, and that they doe thereby pay
the

the debt of other men, that heereof is growne a treasure in the church of Rome which is to bee dispensed and disposed by the Pope, and that hence his Indulgences and pardons haue they grounded. The same Leo did not take vpon him to call generall Counsellers, but when occasion of the heresie of Eutyches so required, made request to the Emperour Theodosius that hee woulde command a Counsell, and often entreated that hee woulde appoint the same in some place of Italy, which notwithstanding the Emperour would not but commaunded it to be holden at ^d Ephesus: and Martianus after at ^e Chalcedon, and that when ^f Leo againe would haue had it deferred to a better opportunitie, as in deed the ^g affaires of the Church after that the Emperours were Christians seemed to depend vpon their will, and at their liking the greatest Counsell was assembled as Socrates witnesseth: "secundum sanctionem imperilem, per imperialem sanctionem, as the sixt synod in Trullo ⁱ often repeateth, yea and so as that the Emperour at his pleasure was president of the Counsell, as in that ^k sixt synod was Constantinus the fourth: but now the calling and presidencie and confirmation of Counsellers is defended to belong wholly to the Pope: as for Christian Emperours and princes they haue nothing to doe but to send when he calleth, and to receiue what hee confirmeth. The same Leo professed ^l his obedience to the Emperours appointment and will, to Theodosius and Martianus, and Agatho the Bishop of Rome ^m his due obedience to Constantinus the fourth, and what your Maesties clemencie hath commanded, saith he, our seruice hath obediently performed: "the emperor being honoured according to the ancient doctrine of the church as next to God & inferior to God onely: but since that time the Romish doctrine is, that looke ⁿ how much the Moone is lesse then the Sunne, so much is the Emperour inferior to the Pope, and therefore they haue written him ^o the Popes man, and made him ^p to holde his stirrop, and appointed him to hold the basin to him, and

^a Leo epist. 9
2). 24. 31.

^d Epist. 23

^e Epist. 49

^f Epist. 42. 47.

^g 4^a.

^h Socrat. hist.

eccles. lib. 5. in

proximo.

ⁱ Synod 6.

Constitutio
lit. Act. 1.

^j Action. 4. 5 6

^k ibid. Act. 1.

^l 2 3. &c. preside

eodem

Imperatore

Constantino.

^m Leo ep 16. 57

ⁿ Agath. epist.

ad Constantium

Synod 6. act. 6

^o Terzull ad

Statu. & Apo-

loget. ca. 30.

^p Decr. Greg.

de Mior. &

obedien. ca. fo-

lit. e.

^q Catalog. st.

verit. ex Rade-

uico

^r Sacro Cerem.

eccles. Rom.

^r Dist. 69. Tibi domino.

^f Clement. de appellat. cap.

Pastoralis.

^c Dist. 95. Quis dubitet.

^u Dist. 96. si imperator.

^x Dist. 28. de Syracusane.

^y Glossa. ibid.

^z Platin. de vit. Pontif. in Iona. 16.

^{*} Bellarmin. de Clericis lib. 1. cap. 19.

^a Pet. Crinit. de honest. disciplin. lib. 9. cap. 9.

^b Gregor. Moral. lib. 9. cap. 1. & 14.

to doe sundry other offices of seruice, and to make all sure the Pope hath made him to^r sweare fidelity and allegiance vnto him. There is no doubt, saith the Pope, but we haue superioritie ouer the empire; Who doubteth but that Priests are the fathers and masters of kings and princes? It is miserable madnesse for the children to goe about to subiect to them their fathers or scholers their masters. And therefore ^u Christian emperours must subiect their executions to the Ecclesiasticall prelates, and not prefer them. Pelagius the bishop of Rome, the first of that name, admitted a married man to be^x bishop of Syracusa, onely putting in caution that he should not dilapidate the church goods, and transerre the same to his wife and children, the danger whereof he signifieth was the cause of that constitution which did forbid a man hauing wife and children to be preferred to a bishopricke: otherwise a man is not repelled for wife and children, saith the glosse, because the Apostle permitteth the same: but now the church of Rome will by no meanes admit married men to be bishops or priests, not for that they would auoide the dilapidating of the church goods, (for that is a thing common with the Popes themselues to applie all ^z to satisfy the greedinesse and conetousnesse of their familiars, their brethren, their nephewes, vnder which name comonly go their bastards) but because they ascribe to mariage, as the old heretickes did ^{*} pollution and uncleannes, which can not stand with the sanctitie and holinesse of the priestly function. The Emperours of Rome Theodosius and Valens according to the doctrine of the auncient church of Rome ^a upon care of preseruing the religion of the high God, did forbid the making, grauing, or painting of the Crucifix and commanded it upon penaltie to be abolished wheresoener it was found: but now not the making onely but also the worshipping of the Crucifix with diuine honour and worship is a matter of high religion in the same Church of Rome. Gregory bishop of Rome taught ^b that all the merit of our vertue, all our righteousnesse, is but vice and unrighteousnesse righteousnesse if it be strictly examined; it needeth therefore prayer after righteousnesse, saith he, that whereas being sifted it would quai'e, it may by the onely mercy of the iudge stande for good: Yea and Bernard by the same doctrine of the church of Rome saith, that ^c mens merits are not such as that eternall life should be due vnto them of right, or that God should doe wrong if he did not giue the same; ^d they are the way to the kingdome, saith he, but not the cause of obtaining the kingdome: but now the church of Rome attributeth so great perfection of righteousnesse to good works, as that ^e they fully satisfie the law of God, and ^f woorthely deserue eternall life: yea they affirme them to be ^g so farre meritorious as God should be vni't if he rendered not heauen for the same, charging the iustice of God not in respect of his promise as the Apostle doth, but in respect of the merit & desert of works. The same Gregory affirmeth, that ^h Masse, the masse was so called for that they were to be dismissed, or sent away by the deacon that did not receiue the holy communion for that they that should not be present at the celebration of the sacrament were commanded to goe forth: therefore saith he, vnlesse at the voice of the deacon after the manner of our ancestors they that doe not communicate be willed to goe forth, the seruice which is called the Masse is not rightly performed: but now the Romish masse is thought to be rightly and duely performed albeit no man communicate but the priest, and without any dismissing of them, that do not addresse themselues to the communion, the people, as was saide before, being but onely spectators and lookers on. The same Gregory affirmed that ⁱ whosoever called himselfe or desired to be called the vniuersall bishop, was the forerunner of Antichrist, and ^k did propose to himselfe to follow him who despising the legions of Angells that were placed in society with him did endeuour to grow vpto the top of singlariety, that he might seeme to be vnder none and himselfe alone to be aboue all he calleth it a new name; a name of error, a fonde name, proud, peruerse, rash, wicked, prophane, which, saith he,

none

^c Bernard in Annunciat.
ser. 1.

^d Delib. arb. &
grat. in fine.

^e Trident Syn-
nod. sess. 6. c. 16.
^f Rhem. Annot.
in 2. Tim. 4. 8.
^g In Heb. 6. 10.

^h Citatur in orthodoxo consensu de sacr. Eucharist. ca. 2.
ⁱ ex Liturg.
Georg. Cassandri.

ⁱ Gr. g. epist.
lib. 6. c. 30.

^k Lib. 4. epist.
32. 36. 38.

none of my predecessours consented to use . by which no manne hath presumed to be called that was in truth a holy man : but soone after the time of Gregory the Bishop of Rome tooke vppon him that hatefull name , and hath since

¹ D.cret. Greg. de furo compe- tenti. cap. Licet. ^m Extrauag. de mior. & obid. cap. nam san- ctum.

continued the same , challenging the ¹ whole worlde to be his diocesse , and is growne to that height of pride as that hee doubteth not to proclaime that it ^m standeth vpon necessity of saluation for every soule to be subiect to the Bishop of Rome. Gregorie the ninth Bishop of Rome, though liuing in latter time of great corruption, yet by the auncient doctrine of the Church of Rome could say that ⁿ the not knowing of the scriptures by the testinons of truth it selfe is the occasion of errors, and therefore that it is expedient for all men to read or heare the same: but now the Romish doctrine is that it is pernicious for the people to meddle with the scriptures, that the reading and knowledge thereof is the breeding of errour and herisie, and as dogs from holy things, so the people must be seclued from the reading and vse of them . Hierome and Ruffinus by the ³ Hieron. in prolog. Galeato. & Ruffin in exposit. symb. ^p Hierony. praf. in lib. Solomonicis. Ruffin. vt supra.

² Greg. epist ad German. Archiep. Constant. apud Math. Paris. in Henrico tertio.

doctrine of the church of Rome exclude from the Canonick scriptures the same bookes that wee doe: the bookes of ^o Iudith, Tobias, Wisedome, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch, and the rest: they say plainly: Non sunt in Canone: non sunt Canonici: they are not Canonickall or in the Canon: ^p the church readeth them for instruction of manners, not to give any authority to any ecclesiasticall doctrine . but now the Church of Rome will haue them to be receiued and belceued for ⁴ Canonickall scriptures, and of equall and like authority with all the other bookes . Vigilius borne at Rome and

⁴ Concil. Trident. Sess. 4. c. 1.

⁵ Vigil. cont. Eutychen l. 4

Bishop of Trent according to the doctrine of the church of Rome that then was, affirmeth that ⁵ the body of Christ when it was vpon the earth was not in heauen, and that now because it is in heauen, it is not vpon the earth: but now the ⁶ Concil. Trid. Sess. 3. sub Iulio 3. Cap. 1.

⁶ Counsel of Trent and church of Rome woulde perswade vs that the very body of Christ though it bee in heauen yet is really and substantially here vpon the earth also, vpon the

the

the altar, and in the pyxe and in the priests belly and in the bellies of as many as are partakers of the sacrament. Tertullian being for enuy of the clergy of Rome fallen to the heresie of Montanus and thereupon oppugning the doctrine of the same church, declareth what the saide church then taught concerning fasting, of purpose to dispute against it: "They say, saith hee, that men are to fast indifferently at their discretion, not by commaundment: euerie man according to his owne times and occasions: that the Apostles did so observe, imposing no yoke of standing fastes and such as should in common be kept of all: that in Xerophaggijs, in our fastes with bread and water there is somewhat neere to heathenish superstition, performing the purifications of Apis, Isis and Cybele by the forbearing of certaine meates: whereas faith being free in Christ oweth not to the Iewish law the forbearing of any meates, being at once admitted by the Apostle into the whole shambles: the same Apostle being a detester of them that forbid to marry and commaund to abstaine from meates created of god, & therefore that we were noted in them that should in the last times depart from the faith &c. so they say that we also are reprooued with the Galatians as observers of daies and months and yeeres. They alleage also that Esay said, The Lord hath not chosen such a fast, that is, not forbearing of meates but workes of iustice, which he there setteth downe: yea and that the Lord himselfe in the gospell answereth briefly as touching all scrupulosity concerning our liuelibood, that a man is not defiled with those things that enter into his mouth, but with those things that come out of the mouth: he himselfe eating and drinking so as that they not ed him for it: Behold a glutton and a drinker of wine: that the Apostle also teacheth that meat commendeth vs not to God, neither hauing the more if we eate, nor the lesse if we eate not. It is needfull that withall my hart I beleue and loue God, and loue my neighbour as my selfe: for in these two commaundments standeth the whole law and prophets, and not in the emptinesse of my belly. See M. Bishop how like a Protestant the church of

Hierony. In Catal. scrip.
ecclesiast.

Tertull. de
iunio adu.
Psychicos.

Rome spake in those daies. Would you not thinke that Luther, or Calvin, or Beza were the authour of those wordes? How highly doe you regard these arguments from vs which the church of Rome foureteene hundred yeeres agoe vsed to the very same purpose that wee nowe doe? But the church of Rome hath learned nowe to sing another song: shee condemned the heresie of Montanus then, but now shee maintaineth it. I auouch it, M. Bishop, that concerning fasting, neither you nor all your fellowes are able to acquit the church of Rome that now is of the heresie of Montanus. The Montanistes appointed certaine and standing daies for fasting and forbearing of certaine meates: so doe the Papistes. The Montanistes did not take any creature or meate to be vn-cleane, but did only by way^z of deuotion as they pretended forbear at certaine times: and the Papists also doe the same. The Montanistes being vrged with the place of Saint Paule to Timothy, of them that commaund to abstaine from meates, answered that that place touched Marcion and Tatianus & such other who condemned the creatures as euil and vn-cleane, not them who did not reiect the creatures, but onely forbear the vse of them at somtimes: the same answer giue the Papistes. The Montanistes tooke their very fastings to be a seruice and worship of God: so doe the Papistes. The Montanistes thought that their fasting did merit at Gods hands: that it was a satisfaction for sin, an expiation of sinne: that emptinesse of belly did much auaille with God, and made God to dwell with man: the same effects doe the Papists teach of their superstitious fastes. Looke what arguments the Papistes vse for their fastings, the very same Tertullian vsed for the Montanistes. Looke what caulls and calumniationes the Papistes vse against vs of feasting in steed of fasting, of Epicurisme and pampering the belly, the same Tertullian being a Montanist vsed against the doctrine of the church of Rome that then was, whereas neither that ^z Tertul. de

ieiunio.

^y Ibid. Non ex
nstitutione,
sed ex deuotio-
ne: non ex fasti-
dio sed ex officio: non reijci-
mus sed differi-
mus.

^z Ibid. p^radamnant hereticos perpetuam absinentiam p^raceptuos ad destinanda & de-spicienda opera creatoris: quales apud Mar-cionem, apud Tatianum, non apud Paracle-tum.

^a Rhem. Anst.
in 1. Tim. 4. 3.

^b Tertul. ibid.
Dei nostri officia indic Para-clitus: In. honorem creatoris

^c Bellar. de bon oper. in part. c.
lib. 2. ca. 8.

^d Tertul. ibid.
Ratio promuendi deum ex-
piat delictum:
deo satisfaci-
t: de deo meretur.
&c.

Church then, nor we now do reiect that true fasting which the scripture teacheth, but only those opinions of fasting which the Montanistes first devised and the Papists haue receiued against the scripture: to forbear continually by way of religion such and such daies, from such and such meates with a minde therein and by their verie forbearance to do a worship to God, to satisfie for sinne, to merit and purchase the forgiuenesse thereof and to deserue eternall life.

But to the heresie of Montanus the Church of Rome hath added the practise and defence of sundry other heresies which were condemned of old by the same Church. The Collyridians were adiudged heretickes for worshipping the Virgin Mary and offering vnto her: Epiphanius calling it a wicked and blasphemous act, a deuillish worke & the doctrine of the uncleane spirit; affirming that she was not given vs to be worshipped: that because men should not to much admire, or thinke to highly of her, therefore hee spake to her in that sort in the Gospell, Woman, what haue I to doe with thee? that none of the prophets taught to worship any man therefore not a woman: that if God would not haue the Angells to be worshipped, much lesse a woman: that the sonne of God tooke flesh of the holy virgin, but not that she should therefore be worshipped: not to make her a God; not that we should offer in her name: that shee should be in honour, but yet let no man worship her, saith he: let them not say, we doe honour to the Queene of heauen. Yet the Church of Rome that nowe is worshippeth the Virgin Mary, prayeth and offereth vnto her vnder the name of the Queene of heauen, and accounteth them heretickes that will not so doe. [¶] Carpocrates and his minion Marcellina were condemned for hereticks for worshipping as other images so namely the images of Iesus Christ: yet now the papistes doe the same, and notwithstanding will be accounted Catholickes. The councill of Laodicea, approoued by the old church of Rome, did forbid ^b so pray to Angells or to worship them, and they that 1747.

^c Epiphanius. har.

78. Ansidico.

^d Idem. har. 7. 9.

collyridian

^e Iren. lib. 1.

ca. 24. August.

de heres. ad

Quadrulst.

^f Theodoret. in.

ep. Coloss. 2.

ⁱ Aug. de heres.
39.

did so were accounted heretickes, but worship and prayer to Angelles is a part of Catholicke doctrine with the church of Rome that now is. The councill of Gangra approued likewise by the old church of Rome condemned the Eustathians for heretickes for taking exception against married priests; and to that purpose set downe this Canon :

^k Concil. Gangr.
cap. 4.

^k If any man except against a priest that is married, as by occasion of his marriage that he ought not to minister, and doth therefore forbear from his oblation or celebration, accursed be he: but the latter church of Rome excepteth wholly against married priestes, and namely Gregorie the seventh^l forbade all laie men to be present at the celebrations of any such priests as were married, an example very strange, saith Mathew Paris. and very vnaduised as many thought. The

^l Matth. Paris.
in Willielmo.

Valentian heretickes and Heraclionites were condemned by the old church of Rome for vsing^m expiations and redemptions by annoynting men when they were about to die: yet thereof hath the church of Rome now framed to themselues their sacrament of extreme unction. It was heresie in the Pelagians with the old church of Rome to affirme in this life a possibilitie perfectly to fulfill the law of God, andⁿ S. Hierome as touching this poynt exprelly disputeth against them: but now it is heresie with the church of Rome to affirme and teach the same that Hierome did, as M. Bishop afterwards giueth to vnderstand.

^m Iren. l. 1. c. 18.
Epipha. her. 36.
Aug. de heres.
16.

The same Pelagians were accounted heretickes for saying that a man in this life might be ἀναμαρτυτος^o without sinne, and that by baptisme he becommeth so: but now the church of Rome teacheth the same, and M. Bishop in plaine termes telleth vs that^p there is no more sinne left in the newly baptized man, then was in Adam in the state of innocencie: to which state of baptisme they also equall a man when he is shriuen to the priest, and of him hath receiued absolution from his sinnes; I referue the Pelagians doctrines of free will and satisfaction to their due place; where God willing it shall appeare that therein also the

ⁿ Hieron adu.
Pelag. l. 1. 2. 3.
ad Cresphontem.

^o Hieron adu.
Pelag. l. 2. c. 3.
August. cont.
2. epist.
Pelag. li. 4 c. 7.
Oros. Apolog. et.
de arbit. libert.
^p Pag 32.

The same Pelagians were accounted heretickes for saying that a man in this life might be ἀναμαρτυτος^o without sinne, and that by baptisme he becommeth so: but now the church of Rome teacheth the same, and M. Bishop in plaine termes telleth vs that^p there is no more sinne left in the newly baptized man, then was in Adam in the state of innocencie: to which state of baptisme they also equall a man when he is shriuen to the priest, and of him hath receiued absolution from his sinnes; I referue the Pelagians doctrines of free will and satisfaction to their due place; where God willing it shall appeare that therein also the now church of Rome approueth those points as Catholicke and true for which the auncient church of Rome condemned them. Yea so farre is the Pelagian heresie in request with the Papiſtes, as that ^a Faustus a Bishop of ^a Bigne. Biblia Fraunce at that time a maintainer thereof, is by some ^{of} sacra. tom. 2. & them recorded for a Saint, and his booke which he hath ^{in indice au-} written in behalfe thereof is called ^{thor. alphabet.} opus insigne, a notable worke: and by other ^{edit.} some the doctrine of S. Austin ^{ibid tom 4.} gainst the Pelagians concerning predestination is oppug- ^{Ofor. de insti-} ned, which of old was acknowledged by the church of ^{tia. lib. 9.}

 Rome to be the Catholicke doctrine of the church.

I omit many other matters that might heere bee added perswading my selfe that I haue sayde enough to trouble
 M. Bishop in the proouing of that that he hath propounded, that the principall pillars of the church of Rome in her most flourishing estate, taught in all points of religion the same doctrine that she now holdeth and teacheth, &c. Only for conclusion let me ask him what bishop of Rome there was for the space of a thousand yeeres after Christ that practised or taught that concerning pardons, which is now practised and taught in the church of Rome: that the Bishop of Rome hath any authoritie to giue such libels of Pardon, or that it is in him to giue faculties and authority to others to grant the like with reseruatiō of speciall cases to himselfe? or that hee can for saying such or such prayers, or for doing this or that release a man from Purgatory for so many hundred or thousand yeeres? What bishop of Rome was there that did proclaime a Iubilee with promise that all that would come to Rome to visite the churches that yeere shoulde haue full and perfect forguienesse of all their sinnes? or that did charge the Angels as did Clement the sixt, that whosoever should die in his iour-ney thitherward, they should bring his soule into the glorie of Paradise: which of them did take vpon him the au-thoritie to be Canonizer of Saints? who euer beleued or taught as it is now received in the church of Rome, that

^c Balens in Cle- ment. 6.

* Sect. pro. am.
in glossa.
Rhem. Annot.
in Math. 10. 12.

* Bodin. de rep.
lib. 1. cap. 2.

the " bishops blessing is the forgiueneſſe of veniall ſinnes. Other innovations I will paſſe ouer to further occaſion: but concerning theſe matters in this place, I would pray M. Biſhop to let vs be ſatiſfied how the principal pillars fo the Church of Rome haue in all points taught the ſame that the church of Rome teacheth now. The truth is, that as the name of * Theſeus his ſhippe continued a long time when as it was ſo altered by putting in of new planks & boords as that it had nothing left of that that was in it when it was firſt builded by Theſeus: ſo the church of Rome ſtill continueth her name, and would be taken to be the ſame, albeit by chopping and changing ſhee is come to that paſſe, that ſhee hath in a manner nothing left of that doctrine for which ſhee was firſt called the church of Rome. But M. Biſhop taketh vpon him to proue the contrarie: let vs now examine what his proofes are.

5. W. BISHOP.

To demonſtrate vnto your Maieſtie, that we now hold in all points, the very ſame doctrine, which the moſt approved ancient Doctors and holy Fathers held and deliuered: Becauſe it is too long for an Epistle, I reſerue it to the booke it ſelfe, for the points it handleth: and will here brieſly note out of it ſome ſuch old reproofed errors, that the Proteſtants doe reuiue, receiue, and anowe, as the very ſinnewes of their Goſpell. Martin Luther the ring-leader of the new pretended reformatiō, laſeth for the ground- worke of his Religion. That man is iuſtified by onely faith: and in this he is applauded and followed of all Proteſtants: and yet as teſtifieth the moſt ſound witneſſe of antiquitie, S. Auguſtine, that onely faith is ſufficient to ſaluation, was an error ſprong up in the Apoſtles daies: againſt which the Catholicke Epistles of S. Peter, and S. Iames, and S. Iohn, were principally directed. And the author of that error was that infamous ſorcerer Simon Magus, as the bleſſed Martyr Ireneus hath recorded in his firſt booke againſt hereſies.

An. de fide &
operibus. ca. 14.

Cap. 20.

R ABBOT.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishops proofes are demonstrations at the least, and those are referred to his booke. We must thinke that he would not vnder the name of demonstrations haue tendered them to his Maiesty but that they are very forcible and strong. But if his Posteriors had had their due when time was, he would haue learned Aristotles Posteriors the better, and then we should haue had better demonstrations then hee hath sent vs. This great talke of urgent and forcible reasons and demonstrations maketh me to remember what once M. Philpot martyred in the time of Queene Marie in great heat of spirit answered to D. Chadsey: Act. and Monuments the fore God saith he, Ye are bare arsed in all your religion. So it is 12. examinat. M. Bishop amidst all your reasons and demonstrations you of M. Philpot. lie open to the whippe; it is an easie matter to scourge you: there is nothing in them but vncertainty and vntruth. But what your demonstrations are wee shall here see by the forerunners of them: for here you will note out of your booke some old reprooued errors which the Protestants doe reuine & auow as the very sinnewes of their gospell. Goe on, M. Bishop; let vs heere what it is that you haue to saie. Martin Luther the ringleader of the new pretended reformation. You mistake at the very first, M. Bishop: Christ was the ringleader; the followers were his Apostles: Luther was onely the man or rather one of the men by whom God did aduertise vs what Christ and his Apostles had said and done. Wee looked into the Gospell and into the writings of the Apostles, and wee found it to bee true which they said, & therefore did embrace it. Wee neither beleueed Luther nor any other more then we will beleuee you, M. Bishop, if yee shew vs the same authority that Luther did. It is not therefore a pretended reformation which wee haue receiued but a reformation indeed, whereby our church hath beene purged and clenfed from these idolatries, and ab-hoimwaitons.

hominations which by the vsurpation and tyranny of Antichrist had beene brought into it. But what is it wherewith M. Bishop is so offended towards Luther: forsooth he laied for the ground of his religion that man is iustified by only faith. This was Luthers heresie, and yet this was of old the doctrine of the church of Rome, that ^b a man is iustified gratis, that is, freely, for gods mercy, for nothing, and that by the grace of God through faith without the works of the law. Whereupon S. Hierome a member of the church of Rome saith that ^d the Apostle manifestly sheweth that iustice or righteousnesse consisteth not in mans merit, but in the grace of God who without the works of the law receiueth the faith of them that beleene. Or if that be not plaine enough, Ambrose will make it more plaine: ^c Freely because by faith only they are iustified by the gift of God. And againe: ^e Without labour or any obseruation we are iustified in the sight of God by only faith. And againe: ^g He that beleueth in christe, doth freely by faith onely receive forgiveness of finnes so saith Basil: ^h A man is to knowe himselfe void of true righteousnesse, & that he is iustified by only faith in Iesus Christ. So Chrysostome ⁱ He hath iustified vs: vsing no workes thereto but requiring faith only. Let these serue in steede of many places and authours that might be alleaged: for by these it may appear that in the auncient church it was taken for no error to say that a man is iustified by faith only. Yea but S. Austin the most sound witness of antiquitie testifieth that it was an error sprong up in the Apostles daies, that only faith is sufficient to saluation. But what is that to Luther or to vs? For we affirme that faith only is sufficient to iustification not that faith only sufficeth to saluation: yea Luther himselfe vpon the epistle to the Galathians hauing in the foure first chapters at large discoursed that faith only auaieth to iustification, yet vpon the fifth chapter determineth that faith only is not sufficient to saluation. Albeit to auoid ambiguity it must be vnderstoode that saluation is sometimes taken for the beginning of that benefite of God, as where

^b Rom. 3. 24.
28.

^c Rhem. Test. explication of certaine words
etc. in the end.

^d Hieron. adu.
Pelag. lib. 2.

^e Ambros. in Rom. cap. 3.

^f Cap. 4.

^g In. 1 Cor. c. 1.

^h Basil. hom. de humilit. animi.

ⁱ Chrysost. in.
Rom. hom. 7.

^k Luther in ep.
ad Galat. c. 5.

it is said of Zacheus: ¹ this day saluation is come to this house, ¹ Luc. 19. 9.
 and of the woman that washed Christes feete, ^m thy faith ^m Luc. 7. 50 hath saved thee, Sometimes it is taken for the perfection and accomplishment thereof, as where it is sayde, "Ye are kept by faith vnto saluatiō which is prepared to be shewed in the last time. Saluation the first way is all one in effect with iu-stification, and in that sense it is true that faith onely sufficeth to saluation. But vnderstande it as vsually and commonly we doe for the full accomplishment of saluation in the life to come, and then faith onely sufficeth not to sal-uation, but out of faith by the regeneration of the spirit issueth sanctification and that ^o holinesse without which. as the Apostle saith, no man shall see the Lord. The kingdome of God is an ^o vndefiled inheritance, he will not bring into it ^q fornicators, adulterers, drunkards, couctous persons, &c. ^r nothing that is filthy or vncleane shall enter there. And therefore whom God iudgeth, he calleth with a ^s holy cal- ling: he ^t powreth vpon them the cleane waters (of his spirit) that they may bee cleane, ^u hee giueth them a new heart and putteth a new spirit within them, and ^x causeth them to walke
in his statutes, and keepe his iudgements, and thus ^y maketh them meete to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saⁿtes in light. Our churches therefore vniuersally doe determine that not onely faith to iustification, but also ^a repentance from dead workes, ^b newnesse of life, ^c the putting off of the olde man and putting on the new the performance of those ^d good workes which God hath prepared for vs to walke in are neces-sarie to saluation, not as the cause or merit of saluation;
 but as a part of that worke of God whereby hee hath appointed to bring vs to that saluation which he of his owne mercy doth bestow vpon vs. Whereas therefore the aun-cient church condemned them that out of the Apostles wordes of iustification by faith without workes did gather that, ^e so long as they beleued in Christ, albeit they did euill, and liued wickedly and lewdly, yet by faith onely they might be saved: we doe the same that the aun-cient church,

ⁿ 1. Pet. 1. 5.^o Heb. 12. 24.^p 1. Pet. 1. 4.^q 1. Cor. 6. 9.^r Apoc. 21. c. 27^s 2. Tim. 1. 9.^t Ezech. 36. 25^u verse: 26.^x vers. 27.^y Col. 1. 12.^z Harmony of Confess. sect. 9.^a Heb. 6. 1.^b Rom. 6. 4^c Ephe. 4: 22:^d Ephe. 2: 10.^e August. l. 83.

quest. 76. & de

fide & opor.

cap. 14.

did, and out of the same Epistles of Peter, James and John, principally as S. Austin saith written against such, as also out of all the rest of holy Scripture wee preach against that desperate and deuillish fancie, neyther doth any part of our doctrine, truely vnderstood, giue patronage or allowance to any such men. Now therefore M. Bishop, we see as touching this first article of your proofes, that there was no fault in M. Luthers doctrine, but the default was in the weaknesse of your head, that could not rightly vnderstand the same. Albeit I will not imagine your weaknesse to be such as that you vnderstand vs not in this behalfe, but rather thinke that maliciously and wilfully you renue your old slaunders, which to your iust confusion haue bene answered and repulsed a thousand times.

W. BISHOP.

Another principall pillar of Fryer Luthers religion consisteth in deniall of free will: wherein hee iumpeth with the old rotten heretike Manes, of whom the Manicheans were named.

*Test. Socr. l. 1. hist. cap. 17. S.
Hier. pref. lib.
cont.*

R. ABBOT.

It is strange that you should vse the name of Fryer so scornefully, M. Bishop, being a bitde of the Popes hatching, your most holy father, and knowing that Luther was a frier with you onely, but with vs no Frier. But I see your stomacke towards your Frier Iesuites is not appealed, and you doe but take the occasion of Luthers name to giue them some asperision of reproch. As for the matter of your obiection, it putteth me in minde of a prety peece of folly & ignorance shewed by Frier Campian in the very same matter, who challenging our church for the denial of free will opposeth Austin against vs, and asketh how we can like of him? and why scripsit de Libero arbitrio libros tres: forsooth he wrote three bookes concerning free will. He had read the title of those bookes, but knew not the contents thereof

a. C. amp. rat. 5.

thereof, and as the foole that thinketh euery horſe that hee ſeeth to be his maſters horſe, ſo finding there the name of free will he dreamed that it was the ſame free will that his Maſter the Pope had recommended to his defence. You are euen vp and downe the ſame man: you haue heard that the Manichees denied free will and in your ignorance you imagine that that muſt needs touch vs who likewise ſtand in deniall of free will. But the reader will eaſily ſee your fooliſh malice if he vnderſtand that in the auncient church there were two ſorts of heretickes concerning this poynt of free will. The Manichees denied free will: the Pelagian heretickes affirmed it, and both were condemned by the Catholick church; The Manichees denied free will in ſinne and in the committing of euill; the Pelagians affirmed a power and ablenes of free will for the performance of righteousneſſe and doing of good. Now I pray you, M. Biſhōp, tell vs without deſſembling whether you doe not thinke that Frier Bellarmine and your ſelfe doe more neerely iumpe with the Pelagians in the affirming of free will, then Frier Luther and wee doe with the Manichees in the deniall of it. Surely in that meaning wherein the Manichees denied free will, wee affirme and teach free will, and in that meaning did Saint Auſtin write his bookes of free will purpoſely againſt the Manichees, wee deny free will onelic in that meaning wherein firſt the Pelagians and ſince the papiſts haue affirmed it, in which meaning Saint Auſten alſo notably wrot againſt it. The herſie of the Manichees was moſt wicked and blaſphemous. The beginning of it as touching this poynt was by occaſion of the queſtion, Vnde malum? whence was the originall or beginning or euill or ſinne? They helde, as the Marcionites had done before them, that there were from euerlaſting ^b two contrarie powers, the one good which they called the good God: the other euill, which was termed by them gens tenebrarum: the nation of darkneſſe. They dreamed that betwixt theſe two contrary powers there hapned a great fight, and that the good God fearing the approaching of the nation or power of darkenesse disperfed and thrust abroad the members and parts of his owne substance, and mingled the same with the substance of the power of darkenes, and that thus the parts of the good God were imprisoned by the contrary euill power, and that heereof was the creation of the world. I herefore they taught that man consisteth of these two contrary substances: that he hath a good soule which is a part of the substance of the good god, & an euill soule, which with the flesh and bodie is of the substance of the power of darkenesse, and that that good soule being a part of the good God, is holden prisoner by the euill soule, and by it forced and compelled to doe all euill. So that sinne, they sayed, came not in at first by mans will, but by condition of creation, and that it was a part of the very substance of man by that predominating part that is in him of the nation of darkenesse. And so now whatsoeuer sinne hee committeth, it is not by any free power or disposition of his owne will, but it is his very essence and substance and part of his created being. By reason whereof they taught that that which is euill in man is not capable of any alteration, neither can of euill bee made good, but the part of the good God receiuing enlargement, the rest as a feueral and distinct substance remaineth perpetually euill, and by the verie essence and being of it necessarily abideth that that is. Now of this blasphemous fancie, they made excuse for themselues, when they committed any villanie or wickednesse: Non ego peccauis sed gens tenebrarum: It is not I that haue sinned, but the nation of darkenesse: whatsoeuer sinne we are sayde to doe, it is the nation of darkenesse that doeth it. This was the Manichees deniall of free will, and can any man vnderstanding this, but woonder at the brauen face of this impudent Sophister that durst offer it to the kings most excellent Maiestie, that Luther and we in the deniall of free will, doe iumpe with the heresie of the Manichees? The truth.

^b Auguſt. bar. 46. ad Quodvult d. & in Pſal. 140

August. in
Psal. 40

truth is. M. Bishop, that a very great leape will not set you so farre from the heresie of the Pelagians, as we without a iumpe, thanks be to God, are from the heresie of the Manichees.

Against this heresie of the Manichees, the Catholicke church determined by the word of God, as wee doc, that God in the beginning created man righteous and iust in all integritie and perfection of innocencie according to ^d the image and likenes of God himselfe: that he left him in the hand of his owne countell, and in the power of his owne free will, ^e that so the image of God might the more cleerely shine in him, in that albeit hee could not by condition of nature which hee was to receiue of God, yet he might by election of will wherein he was left to himselfe be alter a tort good of himselfe, and hauing the Lordship and rule of all other things committed vnto him he might hereby first shew himselfe lord and ruler of himselfe. They shewed that man being thus left to himselfe and to his owne free will did voluntarily and by his owne free will fall away from God by harkening to the suggestions of the wily serpent, and heereby diuested himselfe of all the glory and happinesse whereto God had enstalled him in his creation. This they teach to haue beene the originall and beginning of mans sinne, whereby he destroyed his owne free will, and ^f by applying it voluntarily to that that was euill, lost the power of applying it to that that is good: so that now ^g free will being captiue to sinne anailteth to nothing but onely to euill. Therefore as by free will was the beginning of sinne, so they hold that in free will is also the continuance thereof, because man though of himselfe hee doe nothing but sinne, yet sinneth not by anie inforcement or compulsion, but of his owne accord, of his owne free and voluntary disposition, hauing so corrupted himselfe as that hee hath no will to will any thing else but that that is euill. Which corruption notwithstanding hath not so destroyed nature but that it hath left therein, ^h posse habere si-

^d Gen. 1. 26. 27.

^e Tertul. cont. Marcion. lib. 2.

^f Aug. Hypogn.

lib 3.

^g Cont. 2. epist.

Pelag. 3. ca. 8

^h Aug. de

predest. sanct.

cap 5. & cont.

Julian. Pelag.

lib 2.

dem, posse habere charitatem : a capacity of faith, a capacity of loue and all other vertue and goodnesse whereto it was first created. Which capacitie and possibility of nature whilest they declare against the Manichees, they speake indeede sometimes somewhat obscurely of free will, but as in the Catholike church where they presumed they should not be vnderstoode but according to the rule of faith thatⁱ all goodnesse is of God, and that to^k beleue and to will that that is good proceedeth only from his gift, and therefore that whatsoeuer they said concerning free wil to righteousnesse should be conceiued of^l will not free of it selfe but made free by the grace of God : whatsoeuer they said of natures possibilitie to faith and loue, yet^m to haue faith and to haue loue should bee conceiued to bee the worke of grace. And because they acknowledged the corruption of nature by originall sinne, they thought no man would vnderstande them but by this rule,ⁿ who is ablt to chaunge nature, but hee that first created nature : because they prayed to God for infidels and vnbeleeuers that they might repent and bee conuerted vnto God,^o they thought no man would conceiue but that to repent and turne to God did arise from the grace and gift of God, There were^p none yet sprung vp that did openly oppugne the grace of God, and therefore they spake the more securely, and bent themselues mainely to the conuincing of those hereticke against whome they spake. But when pelagius the hereticke arose and began to affirme and teach that man hath of himselfe and in his owne nature a free will to that that is good, that he hath in himselfe a freedome of will to consent to the Gospell and calling of God, the same church that before resisted the Manichees, resisted him also, and hauing affirmed against them that free will was the beginning of sinne, and that by free will man still committeth sinne denied against him that mans will is^q free as touching righteousness or in that that is good, vntill hee be made free by him that hath said: if the sonne shall make you free

ⁱ Iam. 1. 17.

^k Phil. 1. 29.

& 2. 13.

^l Cont. 2. epist.

Pelag. 1. 3. c. 7.

^m De prædest.

sanct. cap. 5.

ⁿ Ambr. ep. 16.

^o August. de

prædest sanct.

cap. 14.

^p ibid.

^q Cont. epist.

Pelag. 1. 3. ca. 8.

& de corrept.

& grat. cap. 1.

free, then are ye free indeed, Nowe by reason of this heresie the fathers thencefoorth began to speake more warilie, and somewhat to abbridge and correct that libertie which either they themselves or their forefathers had vsied before. Whereof we haue very notable and pregnant example in S. Austen himselfe, who before the arising of the pelagians doubted not to say, ^r By iustice we are commanded ^r De duab. ani-
and by nature we haue power to loue spirituall things. But afterwards considering of those words, hee saith, ^r It may bee ^r manich. cont. Ma- asked, why I sayde, by nature we haue power, and not rather ^r nich. ca. 13.
by grace we haue power. But the question was against the Ma- ^r Retract. lib. 1.
nichces concerning nature. And surely this doth grace labour, ^r cap. 15.
that what our nature being corrupted cannot doe, it may being healed be able to doe by him that came to seeke and to saue that that was lost. In another place he had said: All men may be- ^r De Genes. ad v.
leeue God, and turne themselves to the keeping of his comman- ^r Manich. lib. 1. dementes if they will. But afterwards he expounderh him- ^r cap. 3.
selfe, Let not the Pelagians thinke that it is spoken to their ^r Retract. lib. 1.
meaning. For it is true that all men may so doe if they will, but ^r cap. 10.
the will is prepared of the Lord, and so furnished with the gift of charitie that they may be able to that they will, which there was not spoken because it was not necessarie to that questi n that ^r Cont. Adi- was in hand. Again he saith, It is in the power of man to chāge ^r mant. cap. 26.
his will to work that that is good: but he correcteth it: sed ^r Retract. lib. 1.
ea potestas nulla est nisi a deo detur: but that power is none at ^r cap. 22.
all except it be giue of God, who by framing or preparing the wil gueth that power. Now these sayings of the fathers against the Manichees being intended to shew what eyther nature was in it selfe by creation, or being corrupted what it is capable of by grace, the papists lay hold of & thereby labour to vphold the doctrine of the pelagians that in this corrupted state of man there is remaining a free will to at-sent vnto the calling of God, which is a faculty of nature it selfe, & not the worke of the grace of God. But the rigour of the sayings of those former fathers wee must regarde to qualifie by Saint Austins example and rules, and by the
the:

the declarations of them to whome God gaue occasion by the heresie of the Pelagians further to enquire and search the verity of that point. Albeit in the handling of that question it shalbe shewed, God willing, that they themselues haue sufficiently freed themselues frō that which the Papists so much labour to hang vpon them, But as touching the testimonies of the fathers which he alleageth here they nothing hurt vs. Socrates reporteth it for the Manichees heresie to deny free will. We say it was so, and that it was Pelagius his heresie to affirme it: we disclaime them both. Hierome in his preface of his bookes against the Pelagians alleageth that it was the dotage of the Manichees to take away free will, and in the books themselues disputeth against free will in that meaning wherein wee deny it saying ² that this is mans greatest rightousnesse to thinke that whatsoeuer vertue he hath, it is not his owne but the Lords that hath giuen it: ² that all the good we do is Gods: and by occasion of the words of the Lord by the Prophet Ieremy, ^b I will plant them that they may not be rooted out & I will giue them a hart to know me: ^c If saith hee. minde and thought bee giuen of God, and the vnderstanding of the Lord grow from the roote of him that is to bee knowne, where is then that so proud vaunting of free will? As for S. Austin no man hath troden the path for vs so plainly and fully as he hath done. He condemned the Manichees: so doe wee. He condemned the Pelagians and in the Pelagians condemned the Papistes: and so doe we. He saith, and out of him the Araucane Counsell saith: ^d No man hath of his owne but onely to lye and to sinne. ^e What is a man by that that is his owne, but what he is by his owne sin? As for free will ^f it readily runneth and fl:weth to roughness, but ^g free will to loue God we lost by the greatnesse of Adams sinne, ^h who abusing his free will lost both himselfe and it also: to that now, ⁱ men labour, saith he, to finde in our will some good that is our owne which we haue not of God: but how to finde it, I know not. No more doe we. If M. Bishop can find it let him weare it: but whether he can ² Hieron. adu. Pelag. lib. 1.

² Lib. 2:

^b Ier. 24. 6. 7.

^c Hieron. ibid.

^d Aug in Ioan. tract. 5.

Consil. Arause.

2. cap. 22.

^e August. ibid.

tract. 49.

^f De prædest.

& grat. ca. 9.

^g Epist. 107.

^h Enchir. ca. 30.

ⁱ De peccat.

mer. & remiss.

l. 2. c. 18.

followeth by Methodius a large refutation thereof. Now M. Bishop though against his will acknowledgeth that the author of those words, howsoever hee mistooke him, did teach the very selfe same that M. Perkins and the church of England doth concerning sinne remaining after baptism, as indeede hee doth. It followeth therefore by M. Bishops owne acknowledgement against his will that the doctrine of the church of England by the testimonie of Methodius bishop of Tyrus, approved also by Epiphanius, is the auncient doctrine of the Catholicke church and that the doctrine of the church of Rome which M. Bishop defendeth is new, hereticall and false. Now for satisfaction of the Reader, it is to be obserued that Proclus according to the doctrine of Origen did teach that the soule had a being before the body, and being first created did sinne, and for the sinne that it did was put into the body as into a prison, and that this is to be vnderstood in that it is saide after mans fall that God made them^a garments of skinned, that is, said they, hee made them bodies. Therefore hee held that this body being the prison of the soule subiect to sinne and corruption, and seruing but for the vses of this life is not that body wherewith we shall rise againe, but that it shall be another of more diuine substance, a more excellens and spirituall body. To this^b Methodius answereth and sheweth by the Scripture that man consisted of body and soule before his fall, and that the body was compartner with the soule in sinne: that the bodie cannot be saide to be the prison of the soule for a prison is a place of restraint, but the bodie is not to the soule any restraint, but rather the instrument and helper thereof in sinne: therefore that the coates of skinned could not import the making of bodies, but did rather import the clothing of the body with mortalitie and death, and that for that cause God did cast man out of Paradise that he might die. The end whereof in part should be, that in death the euill and sinne which man had wrought in himselfe might die

^a Gen. 3. 21.

^b Eiph. 64.

die also, and vterly be abolished: for as when a tree groweth in a wall, saith he, the spreading of the roots thereof dissolueth the stones and ioyntes of the wall, but the stones being taken a sunder, and the tree being pulled out, the wall is of the same stones repaired and made new againe: euen so sinne hauing spread it rootes largely in man, by dissolution of death is also dissolued, and the body euen of the same parts is raised vp againe immortall, sinne being wholly and vterly destroied: Then follow the wordes which M. Bishop intendeth. For so long as the body liueth and untill it die, sinne must needs liue withall, inwardly hiding in vs the rootes of it, albeit outwardly by the checks of chastisements and admonitions it be bridled & refrained. Otherwise it would not fall out that after our illumination we should do vniustly if sinne were wholly and clearely taken from vs. But now after that we beleene, and are baptised, we are often found in sinnes. Wherefore certaine it is, that sinne is now holden short and laied a sleepe by faith, that it may not bring forth noisome frutes, but it is not pulled up by the rootes. And now indeed we hold back our euill thoughts and lusts as the sprouts thereof, that no bitter root springing up may infect vs, not suffering the buds that are closed up within to be opened, to come to any growth, instruction of doctrine euen as a bill hewing & cutting at the deepe springing roots. But then the very thinking of naughtines shall be done away. And to say the truth, this speech wanteth not testimonie of the Scripture: for the apostle acknowledgeth that the root of sin is not wholly taken from men, saying, I know that in me, that is, in my flesh dwelleth no good thing: for to wil is present with me, but not to do that good: For I do not the good that I would but the euill that I would not that doe I: Now if I doe that I would not, it is not I that doe it, but sinne that dwelleth in me. I delight then in the law of God as touching the inner man, but I see another law in my members rebelling against the law of my minde, and holding me captiue vnto the law of sinne which is in my members. So farre is sinne from being quite and vterly rooted out: for it is not yet quite dead but liueth &c. Thus Methodius plainly affirmeth, that sinne is not wholly taken away in baptisme: that it is kept in, and the sproutes and weedes thereof are still nipped and checked, but yet the roote still remaineth hidden within, and that it dyeth not till we die, and proueth it by the same wordes of the Apostle which wee alleadge to the same purpose. Now where were M. Bishops wits, that could thinke that these wordes were the wordes of Proclus? Surely he read the place very earely in the morning before he had his full sleepe, or late after supper when hee should haue beene in bedde, or else hee borrowed them from some of his maisters the Iesuites, who make as little conscience what they say as he doth. We must be content with such stuffe as he can yeeld vs: the broker can offer no other wares then hee himselve hath receiued of the merchant. Yet we are beholding to him, that if we had wanted testimonie of antiquitie to prooue that sinne remaineth after baptisme, as God willing he shall see hereafter we doe not, hee would doe vs the pleasure to furnish vs therewith: That is a true prooffe and without contradiction, saith Ireneus, which bringeth tokens for the testifying of it from the very aduersaries themselues. But we wil not thanke him for it, because his purpose was to abuse and deceiue his Reader, and by the name of an hereticke to traduce that which was indeed the professed doctrine of the church.

^c Iren. adu. her.
lib. 4. cap. 14.

Now he was very loth that one lie should goe heere alone without a fellow; and therefore to make vp the paire, he saith that M. Perkins in the name of the church of England affirmeth, that originall sinne remaineth still and raigneth in the regenerate, whereas M. Perkins and the church of England affirme onely the remaining, and not the raigning of sin in the regenerate, according to that that the wordes of Methodius haue before described. So M. Perkins plainly saith ^d that that very power or strength whereby sinne raigneth in man, is taken away in the regenerate, and in the page quoted by M. Bishop affirmeth nothing thing to the contrarie. Wee take for our direction the wordes of the Apostle, ^a Let not sinne raigne in your mortall body. Whereupon S. Austine saith, ^b Hee saith not, let not sinne be, but let not sinne raigne in your mortall body, so long as thou livest sinne must needs bee in thy members: let the rainging thereof yet bee taken away: doe not what it biddeth thee. Thus M. Bishop euery way confoundeth himselfe, & can finde no place where to stand sure.

^d Pag. 27.

^a Rom. 6. 12.
^b Augustin
Ioan. tract. 41

8. W. BISHOP,

Iouinian was accounted a monster by S. Augustine, for defending honest marriage to be of equall vertue, & merit with chaste Virginitie: and saith further that this heresie was so sottish and fleshy: that it could not deceiue any one learned priest but only some few simple and carnall women. Let this our English champion blusheth not to affirme that marriage is not onely equall, but better also in diuerse respects then Virginitie.

Aug. tetra. li. 2.
c. 22. & her. 82
Perkins.
Pag. 163.

The same old reprobate heretick, barked also against approved feasts and fasting daies, so do most of our Ministers at this time.

R. ABBOT.

Hitherto M. Bishop hath fought with sticke and straws, but now he beginneth to fall somewhat handsomely to his weapon. The name of Austine carieth with it some preiudice, and some men happily may be somewhat moued therewith in this matter, but yet we must consider that this note was long since giuen of him, and he by his bookes of Retractions hath confirmed it: ^a Whilest hee spake of many matters it befell him which the holy ghost saith by Salomon: In much speech a man cannot escape some fault. Again it is here to be remembred that the question is not here of S. Austins opinion, but of the Doctrine of the church of Rome. And albeit S. Austine doe say that the same church ^b of Rome did mightily resist Iouinian, yet how the matter

^a Gennad. Catal. illust. viii. or.
^b August. Re-tract. li. 2. c. 22 went we shall better Vnderstand by S. Hierome, who being then a member of the church of Rome was a principall agent in that cause. ^c Erasmus obserueth truely that Austin chargeth Iouinian with some errours whereof Hierome maketh no mention, who would not haue passed by them if Iouinian had taught them, whereby it appeareth as he collecteth, that Austin had neither read Iouinians booke nor Hieromes booke against Iouinian, but only by peoples rumours & talke had learned that that he knew concerning Iouinian, and therefore he must needs bee the lesse able to iudge or report concerning him, Moreouer it is not to be omitted that Epiphanius in his catalogue of heretickes hath not reckoned Iouinian amongst them though liuing at the same time. He maketh mention of some not as heretickes but as being ^d in or of the church, only termeth them too remisse and soft, who did perswade women to giue ouer & to reiect the accomplishing or continuing of that course of perfection, as it was called, in virginity and single life. Whereby certaine it is that this imputation of heresie was laied vpon Iouinian by the priuate opinion of some, and not by the vniuersall iudgement of the church. As for S. Austin to yeeld him his due he hath euery where spoken holily & reuerently concerning mariage, as it became him to doe of the sacred ordinance and institution of almightie God: neither doth hee by commendation of virginity breake forth into those rude and vndecent speeches thereof, as Hierome and some other haue done: and indeede as touching the very state of mariage and virginity there is little or no difference betwixt him and vs. We acknowledge the gift of virginity and continency to be an excellent gift, but yet a gift of externall preeminence with men, not a gift of internall and spirituall righteousnesse towards God: of those good gifts ^e unde facias bene, non quae te faciant bonum, whence thou maiest doe good, not which themselves doe make thee good, as S. Austin distinguisheth, or according to another distinction, of those good things ^f quibus

^c Erasm. in argument. lib. adu. Iouinian. apud Hieron.

^d Epiph. h. e. 61. Apostolic.

^e Aug. de temp. serm. 283.
^f De peccat. mer. & remiss. lib. 2. cap. 18.

bus male utitur malis, non quorum malus usus esse non potest:
which an euill man useth euilly, not whereof there can be no ill use at all. Such are the gift of prophecy, the gift of miracles, the gift of tongues and interpretations of tongues, which not by prerogatiue in hauing them, but by righte-ousnes in vsing them doe yeeld a man acceptation and reward with God. For euill men many times haue these gifts and such other like, and are no whit the better for them: they excell other men thereby and are not the nee-rer towards God. So amongst the heathens the Vestal vir-gins, consecrated to idolls, and in the Gospell the foolish & wr-gins, if we will so take it had^s the integrity of the flesh, but^s August. bo-with God it yeilded them neither fauour nor defence. If mil. 35.
 therefore the question be betwixt the married and the vn-married we briefly affirme that ceteris paribus, all other things being equall and alike, single life addeth nothing to the one with God which mariage detracteth from the other. S. Austin supposeth as the very ground of his assertion that in virginitie and single life there is greater holi-nesse and deuotion towards God by being withdrawn from the businesse and troubles of this world, that the vn-married^h doe thinke vpon him more plentifully: doe serue him^h De sanct vir- more instantly: doe please him more attentiuely. Which be- ginit. cap. 27.
 ing supposed wee will not denie but that in rewarde with Et de bono con-
 God the preferment shalbe giuen to single life. For euen ing cap. 11.
 amongst the married he that doth the greatest seruice shall haue the greatest reward, ⁱ every man his wages according to his worke. So therefore if virginitie exceed mariage in 1. Cor. 3. 8. duetie and seruice vnto God, it shall exceed also in recompence of reward: but if mariage equall virginitie in the werke of God, we doubt not but rewarde of glorie shalbe to both alike. Indeede single life in it selte yeeldeth more conuenient liberty to serue God, and therefore where it may be holily obserued is to that end iustly to bee preferred. But mariage and single life are not alwayes & to euery man the same that they are considered in themselves to be. For sometime the vnmarried careth more for the things of the worlde then the married doth : and sometimes the married careth more for the things of the Lord then doth the vnmarried. The married many times is not so much distracted by occasions of the world as is the vnmarried by wrastring and struing to preferue the integrity of the fleshe.
 be

^k Greg. Nazian.
in laud. Gorg.
Orat. 25.

^k Neither marriage nor single life, saith Nazianzene, is such by nature as can either tie vs wholly to God or the world, or wholly keepe vs from either, but it is the mind that rightly useth the same and worketh either of them to vertue. As single life is not alwaies a helpe, so is not mariage alwaies a hinderance to holinessse & deuotion towards God, as when in married estate and in the affaires of this world the heart is framed to the rule of the Apostles, ^l that they which haue mines bee as though they had none, and they which weepe as though they wept not, and they that reioyce as though they reioyced not, and they that buy as though they possessed not, and they that vse this world as though they used it not : and men being bodily employed here vpon the earth, yet cary their affections so as

^l 1. Cor 7..20

^m Phil. 3. 20.

that their ^m conuersation is in heauen. In a word we are to conceiue the same of single life and marriage as of freedome and bondage. Freedome is a more blessed and happy state, and giueth a man greater power of himselfe to bestow himselfe to the Lords vse, and therefore the Apostle saith to him that is bound, ⁿ if thou maicst be free vse it rather.

ⁿ 1 Cor. 7. 21.

^o Gal. 3. 23.

And yet the same Apottle telleth vs that ^o in Christ Iesus there is neither bond nor free: that neither freedome commendeth a man the more to God, nor bondage any whit empeacheth him, but either of them is most preferred with God as either of them is best bestowed to the glory of God. So is the freedome of single life ^p more blessed then the bondes of mariage: and yet where marriage is alike in seruice of God, it is alike accepted with God as single life. This doctrine Iouinian taught in Rome against the superstitious conceipt that was then in growing that there can bee no holinessse in mariage comparable to the ^p 1. Cor. 7. 40.

holinessse

holinesse of professed single life. He affirmed that albeit in respect of the encumbrances and troubles and cares that are incident to mariage virginie were to be preferred, (in regard whereof he himselfe also liued a single life as ¹ Augustine witnesseth) yet that virginie of it selfe is a thing meerey indifferent, and with God for it selfe hath no preferment before mariage: and by the examples of holy men and holy women mentioned in the scriptures, patriarches, prophets, priests and their wiues perswaded that mariage was as holy an estate and as pleasing vnto God as single life. He taught by the words of the Apostle that it is better ¹ to marry then to burne, better openly to enioy husband or wife then secretly by incōtinency to be distracted in minde or to giue place to Satans temptatjons, by filthy lust. His preaching tooke that effect in Rome that sundry, both men and women hauing professed virginie and continency did thereupon leaue the profession thereof and betooke themselues to mariage, as both ¹ by Hierome and Austin doth appeare. Iouinian had written some what of this and other matters, which ¹ some brethren as Hierome calleth them, sent from Rome to him being then as is seemeth in Palestina, presently Hierome with all indignation and stomacke writeth his two bookes against Iouinian, and to say as the truth is whilest he yeilded to much to his owne humor for commendation of virginie he wrote very basely and prophanely concerning mariage. Pammachius a gentleman of Rome, a friend of Hierome, a man of great learning, lighting vpon those bookes and taking view of them, conceiuing what offence and dislike they were likely to breed to their authour ¹ laboured to suppress them, that before they went any further abroad Hierome himselfe might better consider of them and amend what might seeme amisse. But it would not be: abroad they went, and raised in Rome exceeding obloquies and clamours against him, and scant any speech of any hereticke had beene more odiously taken, as may seem

¹ Aug. her. 82.

¹ 1. Cor 7. 9.

¹ Hieron. adu. Iouin. lib. 2 sub finem.

August. her. 82

& Retract. l. 2.

cap. 22.

¹ Lib 1. adu.

Iouin.

¹ Hieron. epist. poster. ad Pammach. prolib. adu. Iouinian.

by that that Hierome himselfe reporteth then was that that he wrote. Heereupon he wrote to Pammachius an ^x Apologie of those bookes to amend the matter so much as might be, and to qualifie the offence taken. In that Apologie it appeareth that some there were indeed that blamed Iouinian, but euen they also blamed him: Et me & aduersarium pariter reprehendunt: They finde fault with me, and with mine aduersarie also. And what was the occasion of all this tragedie? What was the matter for which he suiteined all this displeasure? ^y Grande piaculum: euerse sunt ecclesia: orbis audire non potest si uirginitatem diximus mundiorum esse quam nuptias: A hainous offence: it is the ouerthrow of the church: the world cannot endure to heare it, that I should say that uirginitie is of greater purity and holinesse then married estate. Behold heere, M. Bishop, the church of Rome greatly offended to heare it, and accounting it as a strange doctrine, that uirginitie should be affirmed to be a more holiestate of life then marriage is. Yea & before that time the same church of Rome in condemning the Montanist heretickes condemned this opinion also. For the Montanists did not onely reiect ^z second marriage, as Austin noteth of them, but they accounted marriage ^a wholly to be a more prophane and vnholie state then might stand with the perfection of Christian life. This Origen vpbraideth them with as saying thereby in effect, ^b Come not neere me, for I am holy, for I take no wife, but am a Nazarite of God: a man vowed and separated vnto God: which the same Origen else where calleth c an immoderate or vnreasonable puritie and cleannes. The affection of which puritie and cleannesse euen by bishops and priests was censured by the auncient Canons which in the church of Rome did goe vnder the name of the Apostles. ^d That if any bishop or priest did dismisse his wife vnder pretence of pietie or deuotion towards God, he should be excommunicate, and if he did therein persist, should be degraded. It was therefore an odious matter, and plaine heresie in the opinion of the auncient

^x Hieron. ad Pammach. Apolog. pro lib. adu. Iouinian.

^y Ibid.

^z August. de heres.

^a Tertull. exhortat. ad Castitat.

^b Origen. apud Pzaphil. in Apologia. ^c In Math. tract. 24.

^d Concil. tom. I. Can. Apostol. cap. 6.

ancient church of Rome to attribute any such prerogative and special title of holinesse to single life And it is heere to be obserued that^e Hierome in his Apologic to Pammachius seeking to excuse himselfe by examples of others who had saide the like as hee had done, alledgeth amongst others Tertullian, whereas Tertullian being then become a Montanist wrote that for which hee citeth him euen by his owne confession^f against the doctrine of the church of Rome. And verily Erasmus truely sayde, that^g in the writings of Hierome are to be foundeuen the same words that are used by Tertullian, who for the same had benee condemned for an hereticke.

^e Hieron. ad Pammach. Apolog. pro lib. adu. Iouinian.

^f Catal. eccles. Script. in Tert. ^g Eras. adu. Albert. Pigh. de virginit.

Now whereas M. Bishop saith out of Austin that Iouinians opinion was so sottish and fleshly that it could not deceiue any one learned priest but only a few simple and carnall women, he racketh the wordes of Austtin too far. He saith indeed ne ad deceptionem aliquorum sacerdotum potuit peruenire: it could not preuaile to the deceiuing of any priests, but he doth not say that it preuailed only with a few simple and carnall women, as M. Bishop saith. For that this is very vntrue and false it may appeare very manifestly by this, for that Pammachius would not haue had that regard to preferue the estimation & credit of Hierome against Iouinian onely in respect of a few simple and carnall women. Againe by Hierome himselfe it is as manifestly disprooued, who againe and againe repeateth that^h Iouinian had many disciples: that many agreed to his opinion: that many did runne after him: that gentlemen gaue him the way, that the wealthy stroke a him on the head And for a few simple and carnall women he would not haue vsed that expostulation: ^k what? was there neuer a country in the whole world that would receiue the reaching of pleasure (so hee speaketh reprochfully according to his manner) but that which the doctrine of Peter had founded upon Christ the rocke. Againe he speaketh generally to the Cittie of Rome as calling the same to repentance for this matter,^l Thou mightie city, thou city commended by the ^h Hieron. adue. Iouinian. lib. 2. sub finem.

ⁱ Tibi nobiles de uia cedunt. tibi diuites osculantur caput. ^k Ibid.

^l Ibid.

wordes of the Apostle thou maiest by repentance auoide that curse, which our Saniour threatneth thee in the Apocalypse. &c. Thus hee maketh a great cry of a small matter, but testifieth by the way that that City, that church that was commended by the voyce of the Apostle approoued the doctrine of Iouinian, and disclaimed his assertion to the contrary that virginity is of greater puritie and holinesse then married estate. Now whereas S. Austin saith that Iouinians opinion found no approbation or allowance with anie Priestes or Bishops, or as M. Bishop saith with any learned priest, it is certaine also by S. Hierome that Austin therein was deceiued, and that there were Bishops also and priettes at that time of the same minde. It is true indeede that ^m Siricius then Bishop of Rome with some few other of his owne sort, in a priuate meeting of their owne did giue sentence against Iouinian, and together with him condemned ⁿ Auxentius, Genialis, Germinator, Felix, Prontinus, Martianus, Ianuarius, Ingeniosus of the church of Rome, teaching the same that he did, as did also ^o Sarmation and Barbatianus, Monkes of the church of Millaine: so vntrue is it which M. Bishop saith, that there were none of Iouinians opinion but onely a few simple and car. all women. But that Siricius was a noueller and a man in this case partially and priuately affected, by whome it may seeme likely that Iouinian tooke occasion to teach in Rome that that hee did teach: the same Siricius being noted to be the ^p first that forbad mariage to Priests & Deacons, and ^q caused them that were married to liue as ^r they then did, separated from their wiues, directly contrary to the ^s apostolicke Canon before mentioned, & to the determination of the Nicene Councell, ^t yeelding to the iust and godly motion of Paphnutius against that vniust and vnlawfull separation. The grosse and absurd ignorance of that Siricius appeareth in that hee applieth ^u against mariage those thinges which the Scripture speaketh to commend holinesse, as if there were vnholinesse in that which

the

^m Siric. decret. epist. 2. Concil. tom. 1. & apud Ambros. ep. 80. ⁿ Ibid.

^o Amb. ep. 82.

^p Polyd. Virgil. de inuent. re- rum. lib. 5. ca. 4.

^q Chiron. Carion. in Theodos

^r Hieron. Apol. ad Pammich. prol. adu. Iouin

^s Cano. Apost. 6 Co-cil. tom. 1.

^t Socrat. hist. lib 2 cap. 8.

^u Siric. epist. decret. 1. Concil. tom. 1.

the holy Ghost calleth the undefiled bed. Against marriage he useth the wordes of the Apostle, they that are in the flesh cannot please God, as if Abraham, Isaac, Iacob and the other righteous Fathers did not please God because they were married, whereas the Apostle saith generally to all the faithful, as well married as vnmarried, Ye are not in the flesh but in the spirit, because the spirit of God dwelleth in you.

^x Heb. 13. 4.
^y Rom. 8. 8.
^z Ibid. vers. 9.

But notwithstanding that sentence of Siricius the church of Rome still continued to approoue the doctrine of Iouinian, as appeareth by those things that I haue alleaged out of Hieromes bookes against Iouinian, which were written after the denouncing of that sentence. Yea and that not onely the Laitie but the Clergie also persisted afterward in that opinion against the sentence of Siricius is manifest by Hieromes owne wordes in his Apologie:

Albeit Secular men be offended that they are put in lower degree then virgins, yet I woonder that Clergy men, Moonkes and such as professe continencie, doe not commend that which they themselues doe. They keepe themselues from their wiues that they may imitate the chastity of virgins, and will they haue it that married women are the same that virgins are:

^a Hieron. ad Pammach. Apolog. pro. lib. adu. Iouinian.

Now what will M. Bishop say to this: We haue here the Clergie, the Moonkes and such as vsed continencie in the church of Rome, receiuing it still against the opinion of their vnlearned Bishop: idem esse maritatus quod virginis: that married wiues are the same that virgins are: that betwixt marriage and virginity there is no diuerse degree or difference in the sight of God. For although by the tyranny of their bishop as it seemeth they were compelled to forgoe the company of their wiues, yet they continued still to approoue the same doctrine that formerly had bene receiued in the same church. Yea and it is plaine that there were bishops also of the same opinion that Iouinian was. For when Vigilantius soone after mainteined the same

^b Hieron. adu. Vigilant.

piscopus sui sceleris dicitur habere consortes: O abhorrible matter, hee is sayd to haue Bishops partakers with him in his wicked opinion: as hee in stomacke termeth their defence of mariage. And of those bishops he declareth that they would order none ministers or deacons, but onely such as were first married: so farre were they from M. Bishops conceit of mariage or virginitie, because they saw the filthy and abominable frutes that vowed virginitie did vsually bring foorth, whereof^c Hierome himselfe else where and before him^d Tertullian did complaine. Yea so farre were they from approouing the opinion of Hierome or of Siricius the bishop of Rome, as that directly and flatly in their practise they opposed themselues against it. And whereas Hierome to reprocue these bishops by examples of other churches, alleageth to that purpose the Churches of the East (beside thē no other but the churches of Egypt & Rome)^e Socrates who wrote his story within lesse then twentie yeeres after the death of Hierome, affirmeth of those Easterne churches which^f Epiphanius also an Easterne bishop euen in the time of Hierome of some partes thereof, acknowledgeth that the priests and bishops thereof were not forced by any law to forbear their wiues, and that many of them whilest they were bishops had children borne vnto them by their lawfull married wiues, so little regard had they of the sentence and decree of Siricius, and so little conceit of any such holinesse in virginitie aboue mariage, but that the holy calling of a bishop or priest standeth indifferently agreeing with either of them. Thus, M. Bishop, I haue wrested your weapon out of your hands, and haue charged it very strongly against your selfe, and haue made it plainly to appeare that in denying virginitie to be of any greater holinesse, vertue or merit with God then mariage, wee teach the same, that not Iouinian onely with a few simple and carnall women, but generally the church of Rome not the inferiour sort onely, but the nobles and great men, not the Laity onely but the Clergie of that church, the monkes and such as professe continencie, and the bishops

^c Hieron. ep. ad. Demetriad. & ad Eustoch.
^d Tertul. de uel. land. uirg.

^e Socrat. hist. lib. 5. ca. 21.
^f Epiph. her. 59. Catharor.

shops also of that church before, and of other churches then approoved and receiued, and that the Papistes now teaching the contrary, doe contrary the receiued doctrine of the auncient church of Rome.

But it further offendeth M. Bishop that M. Perkins doth not onely equall mariage to virginie but affirmeth that in some respects it is to bee preferred before it. But I maruell that hee should be offended thereat, seeing it is a case vsuall that the lesser good in some respects is to bee preferred before the greater. The Philosopher is to bee preferred before the husbandman, and yet if we respect the tillage of the land the husbandman is to bee preferred before the Philosopher. Gold is better then iron, yet if we respect the shooring of a horse, iron for that vse is better then gold. I therefore albeit it be graunted to M. Bishop that virginie absolutelie is better then mariage, yet nothing hindereth but that mariage in some respects may be better then virginie. The respects that M. Perkins alleageth are two. One in case of incontinency. And doth M Bishop doubt but that to them that cannot containe mariage is better then virginie, when the Apostle so plainly saith: ^b It is better to marie then to burne? The other respect is for that mariage is the seminarie of the Church and common wealth, and bringeth forth a seede of God for the enlarging of his kingdome. And is M. Bishop so mad as to make question of this: surely virginie to this respect auaileth nothing and therefore in this respect mariage must needes be better then virginie. But somewhat he must needes say: he wilbe still biting and gnawing though it be to the hurting of his owne teeth.

Now whereas he saith further of Iouinian that hee barred at approoved feasts and fasting daies: as touching the former of them it appeareth not by Hierome or Austin or any other of that time that he spake any thing at all, and therefore I passe by it as a tale. As touching the other poynt of fasting S. Austin reporteth that hee taught, ^b non ^h Her. 82:
prodesse

prodesse ieiunia et a cibis aliquibus abstinentiam, that fastes forbearing of certaine meates are things not auailable, wherein if his meaning were, as appeareth it was, to condemn set and certaine daies of standing fastes, with that superstitious fancy that it should be a matter of meritte with God those daies to forbear some certaine kindes of meate more then other, he erred nothing therein, neither did he teach any other thing then the Church of Rome, as hath bene before shewed, had long before taught against the heresie of Montanus: which heresie although it were at the first resisted by that church, yet such was the serpentine slippernes thereof through the goodly colours and faire shewes of church-order and deuotion that were set vpon it, as that afterwards it found very easy admittance and entrance, and those opinions which Tertullian as a Montanist defended against the church, and namely the church of Rome, the same were approued and receiued in the same church: so as that Hierome though he confesse that Tertullian being fallen to the heresie of Montanus wrot diuers books spectr- ally against the church, yet doubteth not s^otimes to auouch some poynts by him mainteined in those bookes; and to speake as he speaketh: yea and Austin in setting downe the heresie of the Montanists mentioneth for heresies, setting aside his Paracletus, but onely one point contained in the same bookes. But what he wrote touching fasting, it went smooth and currant, and Iouinian, Aerijs, Vigilantius, and others for speaking against the same were reiected as heritickes though they sayed nothing in that point but what the church of Rome had saied before. Now sith the ministers of our church say the same and by the same arguments that the auncient church of Rome did, as I haue before declared, it is manifest that the apostasie is not on our part but on M. Bishops, who now by the authority of the church of Rome maintaineth that which the hereticke of old maintained and defended against the church. The ministers of our church condemne not fasting

sting but superstitious fasting. We blame men ⁱ non quia ⁱ Bernard. in abstinent sed quia hereticè abstinent: not because they abstaine Cant. ser. 66.
but because they abstain with an hereticall opinion of their abstinence, as Bernard well speaketh though he apply it ill.

We obserue fasting daies as wee call them by abstinence from flesh (indeed not fasting daies but * fish daies as the * Anno 5. Eliz. law doth rather call them) not with any opinion either for cap. 5. Abridg.
 the day or for the abstinence of any holinesse therin, or ment. in ships religion towards God, but onely by way of obedience to & shipping. 13.

politicke lawes, and dutie to our prince, the law it selfe professing it selfe to be onely * politickely intended, & dis- * Ibid.
 claiming superstition to be maintained in choise of meats & denying this eating of fish, or forbearing of flesh to be the ser- uice of God, otherwise then are other politicke lawes. But other wise we teach fasting, either priuate or publicke, not tied to daies or times, but to occasions either priuate or pub-like, whereby God calleth vs thereunto, the church then vsing it owne libertie, to appoint to that end either those fish daies or any other daies, one or more, or many as occasion shall require: as when lately by reason of Gods visitation, there was a fast commanded ordinarily to be obserued through the whole land, that praier and supplication might be made the more instantly vnto God for the auerting and turning away of his fearefull hand, and as ^k Tertullian by way of obiection testifieth, that at that ^k Tertul. de time in the catholicke church the bishop vpon like occa- ieunio.

sions did solemnely call the people to a fast. And this fast consisteth in abstaining either wholly or extraordinarily, but not in abstaining from such and such meats. For when the time of repast commeth, we hold it al one towards god whether a man eate fish or flesh, because ^l euery creature of ^l 2. Tim. 4. 4.

God is good and nothing to be refused, if it be receiued with thankes giuing, ^m and nothing that entreceth into the mouth ^m Mat. 15. 11.
defileth a man. As for the popish fast we hold it senselesse and absurd, and like to the fasting of the old ⁿ Manichees. ⁿ August. de A man filleth himselfe with marmolets, and suckets, and lib. 2. cap. 13.

and preferues, and fine cakes and sugred wines, onely hee forbeareth flesh, and hee is a Catholicke, hee hath done a good and meritorious worke, hee hath kept a fast to God, and this is a satisfaction for his sinnes. A poore labouring man comming from his worke eateth a peece of fault bacon, and feedeth very barely and sparely thereof, and this man is an hereticke forsooth, he is vncleane and must for this cause be condemned to the fier. This is an hereticall deuise, destroying true faith, entangling the conscience, and hauing no shew of any warrant or testimony from the word of God. S. Austin concerning fasting telleth vs that ^o pondering the matter in his mind: hee findeth that there is precept of fasting in the writings of the Euang- lists and Apostles; but, saith he, what daies to fast, or not to fast I doe not finde it set downe by any precept of Christ or his Apostles. Therefore he sheweth that the old libertie of the church was this, to abstaine ^p more or lesse as every man either will or can: because fasting, as Marcianus told Auitus, is in a mans owne power and at his owne will. and because ^r there is nothing found written as touching it, saith Socrates, it is manifest that the Apostles left free power to every mans will and discretion in that behalfe, without necessity or feare to doe that that should be good. To bee short, the auncient church of Rome acknowledged the same, that according to the obseruation of the Apostles, ^s men are to fast at their owne discretion, according as euery mans times and occasions doe require: that the Apostles imposed no yoke of prescript and standing fasts that should in common be performed by all: that to performe a fast certorum eduliorum exceptione with exception taken to certaine meats, as the Montanists did except against flesh, and broth, and wine, saoureth very strongly of heathenish superstition. They acknowledged therefore in this point of fasting the same that we doe.

As for feast daies we doe not know that wee haue reiected any that ate certainly found to haue bene approoued in the auncient church of Rome. If the bishop of Rome

^o Aug. ep. 86.

^p Cons. Faust. Manich. l. 30. cap. 5.

^q Theod. hist. sanct. patrum. cap. 3.

^r Socrat. hist. lib. 5 cap. 21.

^s Tertul. de ieiunio.

Rome haue since superstitiously multiplied the number of them, and added new and false conceites of worship and grace, and holinesse vnto them, and haue thereby laied a yoke of vassaltrie and bondage vpon the church, we haue libertie to shake off his yoke, neither are we heerein to be charged with varying from the old church of Rome, but it is the new church of Rome it selfe that hath varied from the old. If any Ministers amongst vs doe impugne any feast dayes by publicke authority established in our church, they beare their blame, but whereas M. Bishop saith, the most of our ministers the reason is, because lippientibus oculis singularis lucerna numerosa est.

9. W. BISHOP.

Vigilantius was sharply reprocued by Saint Hierome, in a booke written against him, and hath bene euer since vnto this day, esteemed a wicked hereticke, for denying prayer to Saints and honour to be done vnto their reliques: And yet, what point of Doctrine is more currant among the Protestants, then this?

R ABBOT.

M. Bishop saith that Hierome doth sharpely reprocue Vigilantius, but saith Erasmus and very iustly, ^a hee doth so raile at him as that I cannot but wish that hee had shewed more modestie. I would he had delt by argument onely and had forborne railing speeches. Hierome himselfe elsewhere calleth Vigilantius ^b sanctissimum presbyterum, a very holy priest, and indeed in that that he wrote for ought appeareth hee wrote nothing but what might well befeeme a very religious and holy man, being offended ^c to see as hee saith, in a manner the customes of the heathens vnder pretence of religion brought into the church. One thing that Vigilantius reprocued was their custome of Vigils & night watches at the sepulchers or reliques of martyres, vnder pretence whereof

^a Eras. in arg. lib. adu. Vigil.

^b Hieron. ep. ad Paulin.

^c Apud Hieron. adu. Vigilant.

many lewd acts & villanies were done, yet Hierome maintaineth the same very stiffly. But that notwithstanding the church afterward not following the mind of Hierome but rather of Vigilantius^d abolished those vigils, & made it to appeare that Hierome had more contentiously then iudiciously written in defense of them. Yea and by Hierome himselfe it appeareth that Bishops there were that tooke part with Vigilantius, and approoved that which hee taught, whose names if they were knowne might happilie carry as great authoritie as S. Hieromes doth. But to come to the matters that M. Bishop speaketh of as touching prayer to Saints Hierome saith nothing at all. He only rea-soneth that the Saints or martyrs doe pray for vs, but saith nothing to argue that we should pray to them. Neyther did Vigilantius question that matter: for whereas hee de-maundeth, be the soules of martyrs alwaies present at their ashes, least if any come to pray, they should not heare them being absent, hee meaneth it not of any coming to pray to the martyrs themselues, but to pray to God at the places of their Reliques. For they vsed to pray to God ^e ad memorias martyru, at the memorial places of the martyrs, which was a thing by Iulian the Apostata objected to the Christians: ^f you call upon God at the sepulchers of your martyrs, who would rather haue objected praying to the martyres themselues if he could so haue done. But hence they grew in time to conceiue superstitiously that the martyrs hearing them at their relics praying to God did recommend their prayers by their intercession and make them more acceptable vnto God. But that prayer to Saints was no doctrine publickly receiued in the auncient church is hereby infallibly and ineuitably prooued, for that the auncient church though not at the first yet afterwards three or foure hundred yeeres after Christ did in their publicke liturgie and seruice pray for the Saints. Now to pray for them and to pray to them cannot possibly stand together. That they prayed for them appeareth by Epiphanius his defense thereof

^d *Erasm. in arg.
lib. adu. Vigilant.*

*Bellarm. de cultu sanct.
cap. 17.*

^e *Aug. de vnit.
eccles. ca. 16.*

^f *Cyril. cont.
Iulian. lib. 10.*

therof against Acrius, ^s for the righteous, for the fathers, ^s Epiph. her. 75
 the patriarchs, the Prophets the Apostles, Euangelistes, martyrs, confessours, Bishops, Anchorites and the whole ranke of the church. In what meaning they did it shall appeare hereafter, but thereby it is manifest that as yet there were no prayers publickely vsed to the saints. And although the fathers indeed doe in diuers places seeme to giue countenance to this superstition whilēt caried away with popular and plausible deuotions they search not how it may stand with other points of Christian faith, yet sometimes vppon occasions they so cut away the whole foundation thereof as that the rest of the building necessarily must fall after to the ground. For whereas the end of praying to Saints is to vse their mediation and intercession vnto God, they doe so challenge this office of intercessiue mediation wholly and onely vnto Christ as that the Saintes must needes be wholly excluded from any part thereof. And to this purpose S. Austin notably speaketh ^b He is the priest who being ^h August. in entred within the veile, solus ibi ex his qui carnem gustauerunt ^{Psal. 64.} interpellat pro nobis, is only he of them that haue tasted the flesh that there maketh intercession for vs. In figure whereof amongst that first people and in that first temple onely the high priest en-tred into the holy place and all the people stode without. And therefore against Parmenian the Donatist hereticke making the Bilhop a mediatur betwixt God and the people hee saith of the Apostle S. Iohn: ⁱ if he shall thus say, If any man sinne, you haue me a mediatur with the father, and ⁱ August. cont.
 make intercession and intreate for your sinnes, what good and ^{epist. Parmen-} faithfull Christian would endure him? who would locke upon ^{lib. 2. cap. 8.} him as the disciple of Christ and not rather as Antichrist himselfe? He is the onely and the true mediatur that maketh intercession for al and none for him. Neither doth Paul make him selfe a mediatur betwixt God and the people. &c For if Paul were a mediatur, then should the rest of his fellow Apostles be so also & so there should be many mediatours, and the reason of Paul himselfe should not stand good whereby he saied, There is one God and one mediatur betwixt God and man &c. which peremptory assertion of one mediatur for intercession vnto God doth vtterly ouerthrow whatsoeuer M. Bishop can alledge for defence of prayer vnto Saints. And that this was the auncient faith and religion of the church it is plaine by Origen also teaching^h that God onely is to be worshipped and that our praiers are to be tendred only to the only begotten sonne of God, that he as the high priest may bring the same to his God and our God. &c. : that Christians did make their praiers onely to God by Iesus Christ : that^l although the angels be so diuine & excellent in nature as that the scripture sometimes calleth them Gods, and they doe bring vnto vs the gifts of God, yet that we are not for all that to worship them or to doe diuine honour vnto them, but that all prayers, all supplications, and intercessions and thanksgivings are to be destined vnto God the Lord of all things, by the high priest the liuing wcrd who is God greater then all argelles : that no man should dare to offer praiers but only to the Lord God (who alone is aboundantly sufficient for all) by our sauour the son of God. Thus that first church knew no other prayers but such as we make according to the example of all the Saints and faithfull from the beginning of the world only to God by Iesus Christ. They would not pray to angels : much lesse to Saints. The Councell of Laodicea decreed^m ne precarentur angells, that men should not pray to angells : much lesse did they intend that men should pray to men. But the Papistes doe both and that for a reason and vnder a pretence which the auncient church condemned in them that alledged it, ⁿ that by angells and Saints they must make way for themselues to the fauour of God, ^o euen as by nobles and great men we procure accesse vnto the king, not considering, as Ambrose wel noteth, that as it is treason vnder the colour of seeking accesse to the king by a noble man to giue vnto the noble man the honour of the king, so it is also treason to God & much more vnder pretence of seeking fauour and accesse to God by Saints and angelles to giue

^h Origen, con.
Celsum. lib. 8.

^l Lib 5.

^m Theodoret. in Coloss. cap. 2.

ⁿ Theod. ibid.
^o Ambros. in Rom. cap I

giue vnto them the honour of God by making praier, vnto them. Yea the auncient church although they did so conceiue^p that the angels as ministring spirits and messen- ^{p Orig. cont.}
gers doe exhibite our praier vnto God by the high priest ^{Ceif. lib. 8.} Iesus Christ, and doe themselues pray for them that are committed vnto them, yet did resolue that^q in vocare an- gelos, to make prayers to the angels themselues is an iniurie ^{q Lib. 5.} vnto God, that the angels stand well affected towardes vs for doing as they doe, to worship God only, and that^r as when the body is moued, the shadow is also moued, and ^{r Lib. 8.} which way the body goeth the same way the shadow goeth, so hauing God fauorable and gracious to vs by our due and faithfull worshipping of him and calling vpon him, the angels which are but as his shadowes are likewise friendly and louing to vs, so that wee neede not seeke to gain them by any other meanes. And if they thus resolued against prayer to angelles (expresly contrarie to the do-ctine of the church of Rome) much more should wee re-solue the like against prayer to Saintes of whom wee are taught that ^s they know vs not. of whom we haue no ground to be perswaded that they haue that entercourse betwixt ^{s Esa. 63. 16.} God & vs, as the angels haue, or do any thing for vs as the angels doe: in whom because they are but onely menne, Tertullians argument concerning Christ must needes take place: ^t If Christ be onely man, why is he in our prayers call'd upon as a mediator, seeing the innocation of a man is of no ^{t Tertul. do} force to yeeld saluation? Being onely men they can be no ^{t Trinitate.} mediators for our prayers, our praying to them can bee no whit helpfull to our saluation. Vigilantius therefore in denying prayer to Saints, if he did so, brought no he-resie or new opinion into the church, but onely sought to reduce it to the true faith and integrity of the first Church.

As touching the other point concerning Reliques, Vigiliantius was iustly offended, not that the same were honoured, but that they were honoured too much, and in other sort then honour was due vnto them. The fault that he

^u Hieron. ad Riparium.

he found, was that men did worship them, and for that cause he rightly termeth them that so did ^u cinerarios & idololatræ, asbomongers and idolaters. For if worship and seruice of religion be not due to the Saints themselues, as of prayer we haue already seene, then surely it cannot be due to their offals and reliques, to ashes and rotten bones, much lesse to their shooes and shirtes, and girdles, and such other base and paltrie stuffe. And plainly it appeareth that little reckoning they make of preserving religion entire and pure, who of worship which is peculiar to God onely, doe make so common a thing as to bestow it thus indifferently not to men onely, but to mens bones, and to euery thing that by occasion hath bene vsed by them. Now this worshipping of reliques Hierome wholly disclaimeth, saying to Vigilantius: Thou madde man, who hath at any time worshipped the martyrs? who hath gone about of a man to make a God: plainly shewing that to worship the reliques of martyrs, is of men to make them Gods. Yea he saith further, ^r We doe not adore or worship the reliques of martyrs, no nor the Sunne, nor Moone, nor Angels, nor Archangles, nor Cherubim, nor Seraphim, nor any name that is named in this world or in the world to come, least we should serue the creature rather then the creatour, who is blessed for euer. So that as touching the maine point Hierome subscribeth to Vigilantius, that the reliques of martyrs are not to bee worshipped, and therefore his testimony is cleere and pregnant against the Papistes, who doe professe the worshipping of reliques, and therein as he saith, are guiltie of worshipping the creature in steede of the creatour who is God blessed for euer. Now what conscience is there in these men to alledge Hieromes contention against Vigilantius to giue a colour to their worshipping of reliques, when the words of Hierome do so flatly and expressly condemne the same? In all their bookes Hierome still is opposed against vs, when in the point for which he is alleaged, he saith no otherwise then we say, Nay he doth not onely say but by the ^r Adv. Vigil.

^r Ep. ad Ripar.

the Scripture prooueth it also. For to shew that martyrs and reliques of martyrs be not to be worshipped he bringeth the example of ² Peter, who when Cornelius fell ^{Act. 10. 25.} downe at his feete and worshipped him lifted him vp by the band, and saide vnto him, Arise, for I also am a man. If Peter were not to be worshipped much lesse are wee to worship a relique of Peter. If Peter saide to him that worshipped him Stand vp, for I am but a man, surely Peters relique if it could speake, would say to the worshipper thereof, Stand vp, for I am not a man, I am but ashes, I am but a bone, much lesse therefore worship me: thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely thou shalt serue, whom onely & no other he worshipped and serued whose relique I am, and himsele by no meanes would be worshipped. ² God teacheth vs saith Origen, that he himsele ^{Orig. cont. Cels. lib. 1.} onely is to be worshipped: other things are nothing or what soeuer they are, they are woorthy of honour onely, not of deuotion and worship, which can be yeelded to no creature but with iniury vnto God. M. Bishop indeed heere nameth onely the honour of reliques willing perhaps by a more tolerable word to qualifie the grosse and odiousnesse of the matter, ^b Bellar. de Reliquiarum: the worshipping of reliques: tumulorum & sepulchrorum adoratio: the adoring and worshipping of sepulchres and reliques. ^c Every one that worshippeth a ^{August. cont.} thing, honoureth the same, but euery one that honoureth doth serue ^{Arianor.} reliques to be worshipped, which not wee onely, but Hierome himsele flatly pronounceth to be idolatry.

Now whereas Hierome denieth that any such adoration or worship was done to reliques, as if Vigilantius had therein calumniously slandered them of whom hee spake it is manifest that Hierome was deceiued, and that Vigilantius had iust cause to say as hee did. For Gaudentius a bishop of the same time that Hierome was, is found to

^d Gaudent. in Exod. tract 4.

^e Bellar. de Re-
liq. cap. 4.

^f August. de
moribus eccles.
ib. cap. 34.

^g Hierony. adv.
Vigil.

haue reprooued some as guiltie of ^d idolatry, for that to the reliques of their dead and at their sepulchers, they made feasting sacrifices, according to the manner of the Gentiles. Which Bellarmine cannot denie, but onely qualifieth the matter, that they were but some few, ^e some few perhaps, saith he, did sacrifice to the dead. But whether they were few or more that skilleth not; certaine it is that Vigilantius had cause to speake of some that did worship to the sepulchers and reliques of the dead. And that they were not a few onely but many, Saint Austin shall be a witness against Bellarmine in behalfe of Vigilantius, ^f I know saith he, that there are many worshippers of sepulchres: that there are many that very luxuriously drinke over the dead, and making feastes to their carcases, (their reliques) doe burie themselves upon them that are buried, and repute this their surfeiting and drunkenesse for a matter of religion Hierome then was to blame so to raile at Vigilantius as if he had deuised a tale of his owne head, in reproouing some that were worshippers of the reliques of martyrs and dead men, seeing it appeareth so plainly by Gaudentius and Austin that there were many that did so. Hierome therefore acknowledging that this ought not to be done; iustifieth the speech of Vigilantius, and condemneth the papists for doing that which Vigilantius by Hieromes owne testimonie did iustly reprocue.

Another thing that Vigilantius disliked, was the setting vp of tapers and candles lighted at noone day ^g Wee see almost the custome of the gentiles, saith he, under colour of religio brought into the church that the Sunne-broad shining numbers of tapers are lighted, &c. These men doe great honour to the martyrs, to thinke that they must haue light yeilded them by patric candles, when as the lambe who is in the midd:st of the broze with all brightnesse of his maiesty doth giue them light. Which doth not seeme to be the speech of an hereticke, but rather of a faithfull Christian man, due-ly and rightly perswaded of the blessed state and portion of the Saints. The setting vp of candles lighted in the day time, Tertullian noteth to haue beene a matter of solemnitie amongst the heathens, and denieth that Christians did ^b lucernis diem infringere, by candle light goe about to ^b Tertul. Apolos ca. 35. disanull the day. Now if Ambrose thought fitte to abolish those night watches and mortuarie feastes before spoken of not onely for the auoiding of surfeiting and drunkenesse, but also ⁱ quia illa quasi parentalia superstitioni gentium essent simillima, because the same in the manner of parentall sacrifices were altogether like to the superstition of the Gentiles: might not the same reason sufficiently excuse Vigilantius for being offended to see men by their day-candle-light to set before them the custome of the heathens to be followed in the church? especially seeing the Counsell of Eliberis had before flatly decreed that men ^b should not ^b Concil. Eliber. ca. 34. by day-light set vp tapers or candles lighted in their church-yards? But the best is, that Hierome himselfe disclaimeth this also: ⁱ We, saith he, doe not tiend candles by day-light, as thou without cause accusest vs, but that by the comfort heereof we may delay the darkenesse of the night, and may watch by the light thereof, &c. Onely he addeth: if any of ignorance or simplicitie either secular men or deuout women, of whom wee may truly say, They haue the zeale of God but not according to knowledge, doe this in the honour of martyrs, what losse is that to thee? This he goeth about preposterously to excuse by the example of Mary Magdalens anointing our Sauour Christ, and by their intent of deuotion, peruerting to that purpose a sentence of the Apostle, as if hee had lett euery man in such matters to follow his owne minde, and as if it were not amisse, which as wee haue heard S. Ambrose so much disliked, to doe that to martyrs now in deuotion, which was done to Idols before time. But yet we see heere that what Hierome denieth to bee done by himselfe or others such as himselfe, what hee imputeth to ignorance and simplicitie, and confesseth to bee done by none but such as haue the zeale of God, but not according to knowledge, and seeketh rather to excuse then to defend, that now the Papists haue taken vp, and vse it as an important ceremonie of religion, to burne day-light with candles before their Saints and reliques: and yet pretend Hieroms authoritie and example for the doing of it. Surely M. Bishop we might wonder at this, but that we know a bad cause can haue no better defence, and such gamesters, as you are cannot thriue but by false play.

As for the true honour that is due to the Saints and their relicks, we refuse not to yeeld it to them. The honour that is due vnto their bodies is the ^m solemne honour of burial, as Origen termeth it, ⁿ not to leaue their reliques or dead bodies naked, or carelesly to cast them on the ground, but decently and in good order to couer or to hide the same in the bosome of their mother, the depth of the earth, and there ^o to let them alone and not to remoue their bones. Thus the patriarchs and righteous men of the olde Testament honoured their dead concerning their bodies: and although Iacob and Ioseph embracing by faith the promise of God concerning the land of Canaan and ^p desiring euen in buriall to enioy the same as the figure and pledge of the heauenly and cuerlasting rest, were according to their desire caried thither to be buried, yet where they were once buried, there they were suffered to rest. They were not first buried in one place & after remoued to another, but ^b Iacob was caried thither presently vpon his death, and Iosephs body being in the meane time ^e embaulmed and put into a chest was ^c taken with the children of Israel when they went out of Egypt and afterward ^d buried in the lot of his inheritance, and thenceforth they were no more medled with: men kept no peeces of them, they vsed no worship or deuotion towards them, they made no pilgrimages to them, they sought not for any helpe or comfort by them. And although afterwards by the ^u bones of Elizeus a great miracle was wrought by raising a dead man to life againe, yet were they not hereupon taken vp and caried.

^m Origen. cons.

Celsum. lib. 8.

ⁿ Cyril. cont Iu-
lian lib. 10.

^o 2. King. 23. 18

^p Gen. 47. 29.

^q 50. 25.

^r Gen. 50. 7.

^s Gen. 50. 25.

26.

^t Exod. 13. 19

^u Iosuah. 24. 32

^v 2. Kin. 13. 21

caried with solemnitie from one place to another, but where they were buried there they remained still . Thus in the new testament the bodie of ^x Iohn Baptist was honoured, and the body of ^y Steuen, and no otherwise. Neyther do we find any examples that make for thē who cary not the bodies of Saints from one place to another at first to bury them, but digge them vpp from the places where they are alreadie buried: nor doe remoue them to any speciall place sanctified by the promise of God as the land of Canaan was, but thinke by them to make the places more holy to which they remoue them: which Iacob and Ioseph intended not. How much lesse shall we finde' any examples to iustifie the Papistes who digge vp dead bodies, & either whole or peecemeale keepe them vnburied to be caried about and shewed, and seene, & touched, and kissed, and honored by giftes and offerings, and worshipped, and prayed vnto and resorted vnto for health and helpe with sundry other deuotions whereby they vse them rather as the idols of the heathen then as the dead bodies of holy men? The word of God taught the church of old that ^z precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints, ^z Psal. 116. 15; and yet it hath not taught any such deuotions towards them, and we are dainty to admit that for an honour of Saints and their relickes whereof wee find neyther precept nor example eyther amongst the patriarkes and prophets of the old Testament, or the Euangelists and Apostles of the new.

Now as for other monuments either of apparell or other implements that haue beene in the vse & occupation of martyrs and holy men, to keepe the same as memorials and tokens of remembrance and loue, may easely be yeilded to the satisfaction and pleasing of humane fancy, as ^a Hieron. in vita Pauli Erem. ^b Athanasius in vita Antonij. ^a Antony the eremite kept a garment of Paul the eremite his predecessor, and ^b Athanasius the like of the same Antonie. But to keepe the same by way of deuotion, and to lay them vp in houses of religion, to haue worshipped vnto them it can be accounted no other but plaine heathenisme and idolatry. But both in this kind of relickes and in the relicks of Saints bodies such haue beene the notable impostures and cosinages and villanies wherewith the deuill by the factours of the church of Rome hath abused and deluded the world, as that they haue iustly therby deserued to be holden accursed both of God and men: neyther can we account M. Bishop and his fellowes any other but a crue of most impudent and shameles men, who after so plaine discouery thereof doubt not still to perseuere in the defense of such horrible abomination. As for any further honour to Saints or Relickes beside that we haue spoken of, wee know none, but to commend their vertues, to

^c Heb. 6. 11. ^e follow their good conuersation, their faith and patience, their constancie in ^d not louing their liues vnto death for the testimony of Iesus Christ: but no more are wee to worship them then we our selues looke to be worshipped of others hereafter, or then they worshipped others that were before them. To conclude what Cyrill of old taught against the calumniations of Iulian the Apostata concerning the martyrs the same wee teach, and neither more nor lesse ^e that they are to be honoured with perpetuall prayses, but neither doe we call them Gods, neither are wee wont to worship them. The doctrine therefore that is currant amongst the Protestants is yet found to be no other but what of old was currant in the true church, and therefore the imputation of apostasie lieth not vpon vs, but vpon them, who contrary to the doctrine and practise of the auncient church worshipping Relickes, and pray vnto them. and though they say not, as

^f Bellar. de Re. liq. Sanct. ca. 2. Bellarmine excuseth the matter, ^e O holy Relickes pray for vs, (and no more doe they say to their Images, O holy Images pray for vs) yet as they worship Images so worship Relickes, and as they pray to Images, so pray to Relickes, euen as to them whose Relickes and Images they bee and in both commit that idolatry which antiquity would haue accursed to hell fire.

^c Heb. 6. 11. ^e
13. 7.
^d Apoc. 12. 11.

^e Cyril. cont.
Iulian. lib. 6.

^f Bellar. de Re.
liq. Sanct. ca. 2.

IC. W. BISHOP.

In like sort, one Aeriſius to the Arrian heresiſe, added this of his owne: That wee muſt not pray for the ſoules of our friends departed: as S. Auguſtine hath regiſtred. And doe not all Prot:ſtants embrace and earneſtly defend the ſame? Aug. ad. q. vii. h. hereſ. 53.

R. ABBOT.

I ſhoulde haue wondered, M. Biſhop, if you had omitted prayer for the dead, being the faireſt flower in the Popes garden, a maine ſupporter of his kingdome and of the third round of his triple crowne. Soone would a great part of your occupation grow to decay if yee did not hold men in this perſwaſion that the dead ſtand in neede of the prayers and deuotions of them that are alie. As for vs it ſeemeth very ſtrange to vs that if it be ſo, no mention ſhould be made thereof amongſt ſo many examples as are ſet downe in holy ſcripture of them that haue died, wiues from their husbandes, parents from their children, children from their parents, kings from their ſubiects, friendes from their friends: neuer was there any of them praied for ſince the world began. It is more ſtrange that Moſes in the law ſhould preſcribe no part of this deuotion, no prayers, no ſacrifices for the dead: and yet ſhould charge the people of God as to take nothing from the Lawe, ſo to ^a Deut. 4. 2. adde nothing to it. And though Moſes and the prophets had ſo negligently omitted it, would Chriſt and his Apoſtles be ſo forgetfull as not to vſe one word to recommend ſo neceſſary a matter to the praetiſe of the church? yea would Paul, whome the Pope for very pure loue hath made his ſword-bearer, would he purpoſely ſetting downe inſtructions concerning ^b the dead bee ſo careles as not to ^b 1. Th. ſſ. 4. 13. & c. with that they ſhould be prayed for? But as touching this Epiphanius reſolueth vs that prayer for the dead is a mat-

^c Epiph. ver. 75 ter of tradition and an ordinance of the church, and therefore freeth vs from any trespasse against any thing that Moses or the Prophets or Christ and his Apostles in the scriptures haue deliuered vnto vs. Yea but M. Bishop telleth vs out of S. Austin that Acrius was adiudged an hereticke for denying prayer for the dead. Indeed Austin so found it in Epiphanius and accordingly he hath deliuered it, but it being confessed that prayer for the dead is a tradition and ordinance of the church, there groweth a question whether a man for trespassing an ordinance of the church be to be reputed an hereticke? Nay indeed it is no question: for heresie standeth not in matter of fact but in matter of faith. The church prescribed this to be done, but the doctrine of faith had prescribed nothing to be beleued thereof. We condemne Acrius for an hereticke for that which as ^d Basil witnesseth hee taught against the faith, if at least it were the same Acrius: but wee dare not so thinke of him for denying prayer for the dead, because therein he said nothing against the faith. For the doctrine of faith is that they ^e which dye or are dead in the Lord are blessed and doe rest from their labours: that they are ^f in peace: that ^g death is aduantage vnto them, because to them to be ^h dissolued is to be with Christ, and ⁱ to remoue out of the body is to dwell with the Lord: that the angells doe attend them to carie their soules as they did the soule of Lazarus ^k into Abrahams bosome, that is to say ^l into the kingdom of heauen. If this be their state, as it is, then are our prayers of no effect vnto them: they need them not and because they neede them not, wee are not to vse them: M. Bishop himselve bearing witness that it is ^m fond and frivoulous to pray for eternall life to be giuen to them which are already in full and assured possession of it. And surely the ancient church at the first intended nothing contrary to this faith. They vsed solemnity for the faithfull deceased, but that was only commemoration and thanksgiuing to shew that they presumed of their blisse and happinesse, not

^d Basil. de spir. sanct. cap. 2.

^e Apoc. 14. 13.

^f Esay. 57. 2.

^g Phil. 1. 21.

^h vers. 23.

ⁱ 2. Cor. 5. 8.

^k Luc. 16. 22.

^l Mat. 8. 11.

^m Pag. 38

not any prayer whereby to procure them ease and deliuerance from Purgatory paines. And this appeareth most plainly by the wordes of Origen. ^{Origen. in Lib. 3.} We, saith he, doe not celebrate any birth day, because that is the entrance of sorowes and temptations: but we celebrate the day of death as being the putting away of all sorowes and the escaping of all temptations. We celebrate the day of death, because they aye not which seeme to dye. For that cause also we obserue memorialls of the Saints and deuoutly keepe remembrance of our parents and friends dying in the faith, as well reioycing at their refreshment and ease as craving for our selues a Godly consummation in faith, We celebrate it calling together deuout persons with the priests: the faithfull brethren together with the clergy, inuiting moreouer the poore and needy, feeding the orphanes and widewes that our solemnitie may be for a memoriall of rest to the soules departed whose remembrance we celebrate, & to vs may become a sweet saueur in the sight of the euerlasting God. This is a perfect description of their vsage towards the dead: they imagined nothing but rest to the soules of them that were departed in the faith, and therefore reioyced ouer them, but vsed no praier for them. And therefore they comforted men to die without feare or doubt, and with certaine expectation of rest and peace, as ^{Cyp. de Mortal.} Cyprian doth: and accordingly gaue comfort as touching the dead, that they were ^{P Tertull. de patientia.} not to be bewailed as being in miserie, but that they haue ^{q Cyp. de mortalit.} attained their desire: that we are not to put on blacke mourning garments sith they haue put on white: that they liue with God, and that we should hasten to come to them. With much more which Cyprian most notably speaketh to that purpose: but of Purgatorie or praier for the dead no intimation at all. Yea and although afterward thankesgiuing for the dead were in some part turned to praier for the dead, yet was not that praier for the dead intended for any deliuerance from Purgatorie paines, without which Popish praier for the dead hath no vse at all, but it serued partly to testifie the affection of the liuing to the dead; and partly to expresse to the liuing what hope there remaineth in death, for them that liue and die faithfull to the Lord And this plainely appeareth by him that was the author of the Ecclesiasticall Hierarchie vnder the name of Dionysius Ar. or agita, setting foorth the vsage of the church in this behalte, saith that the man dying as being now come to the last act of all his combates, is replenished with a holy reioycing, and with great cheerfullnesse entreth the way of the holy second birth, that is, the resurrection: well knowing that he shall wholly when he hath ended his life, attaine to swete and pleasant rest, and therefore beholding cleerly the way that bringeth to immortalitie, as neere at hand he praiseth the gifts of God and is filled with diuine ioy because he feareth not any change to woorse, but surely knoweth that he shall haue sure & euerlasting possession of those good things which he shall attaine vnto. Where wee are first duely to obserue with what minde the faithfull then died, who feared no change to woorse, but resolued themselues that they should goe to ioyfull and pleasant rest, and therefore neuer once dreamed of any Purgatorie, nor did bespeake any masses of Requiem, or Dirigees, or pardons, or any other such Popish meanes to be deliuered from thence. Now it followeth further, The frinds of him that is dead saith he, account him, as he is blessed, for that he hath according to his desire attained to the ende of his victorie, and with singing they giue thanks to the authour of that victorie, and further wish the like rest vnto themselues. In all this we see them as farre from any opinion of Purgatorie, as the Popes purgatorie is farre from heauen, neither would they haue wished the like rest vnto themselues if they had put the case that perhaps the dead had not better rest then Purgatorie fire. After this he sheweth that the dead was caried to the bishop or minister, that that might be done which was accustomed at the buriall of the dead. The congregation was assembled, the nouices in faith were dismissed, but such as stood excommunicate for euill life were admitted, be-

• Dionys. Arco-
pag. Eccles. hierarch. cap. 7.

cause it might happily doe them good when they should see that he that died holily was holily recommended, as being partaker with the holymen or Saints that haue beene from the beginning, and they might be taught that truly blessed is the death whereby a man dieth in Christ. Then followed the prayer, that God would forgie to him that was dead all the finnes that hee had committed by humane frailtie, and would bring him into the light and land of the liuing, into the bosome of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, into the place from whence sith all sorrow, heauinesse, and mourning. Where wee see no Popish prayer for the dead to be deliuered from Purgatory paine, nor any other meanes vsed to that purpose. And that wee may fully know that no such thing was ment, he himselfe mooueth the question, why the Bishop or the minister doth so pray, that God woulde forgie to the dead his sins, and giue him the like inheritance with them that haue followed the Lord, seeing God hath already appointed such reward to those that die to him. Where if any Purgatorie had beene beleueed, it had beene the place to answer, that indeed God had promised such rewards: but yet first a man must goe to Purgatorie fire, there to satisfie for those offences for which he hath not made full satisfaction whilest hee liued, and that this prayer was vsed to deliuer the dead from that grieuous tormenting fire. But he answereth no such matter, but that the bishop or priest thus praieth, to declare to God who is the louer of good men, that he is affected towards them in like sort: and being the interpreter of the counsell of God, to set forth to them that are present the rewards and good things which shall befall to holymen: & according to the commission of Christ: Whatsoeuer yee binde on earth shall be bound in heauen, &c. to seuer the sorts of men and as the porter to admit and let into God those that are beloued of him, and exclude and shut out wicked men: because this prayer was not common to all, but vsed only for them in respect of whom he had the promise of God that he should be heard, and therefore he prayed not for prophane or unholy men but for such as had lived iustly and holily, and had shewed themselves worthy to be prayed for. Seeing therefore God hath promised a most glorious and diuine life to them that lived heere a holy life (his kindenesse and mercifull goodnesse passing by the blottes which humane frailtie hath cast vpon them) hee prayeth that these things may accordingly come to passe, and as Gods interpreter declareth that those things which by a sacred and holy institution he heere rehearseth shall verily befall to them who in a godly life depart out of this worlde. Which declaration taken out of the expresse words of Dionysius doth make it euident and plaine that their praier for the dead serued only for a testification of the promise of God to the righteous, and to declare that the same did appertaine to the deceased, and therefore to the notice and sight of the church to inuest & inter him to the possession thereof, that as a king hauing the right and possession of his kingdome, yet by solemnitie of coronation receiue full inueltment to his throne, so the faithfull enioying in death the promised blisse and happinesse of the saints might by this solemnity and as he calleth it σεφά-ρευ στεφάνου δόσιον the giuing of the sacred crownes, receiue in the eyes of the church also a full testimonie and confirmation thereof, the bishop praying for none but for such to, whom hee knew God had promised to doe that which hee prayed for. Albeit, because he saith that in this action was managed the whole saluation of the whole man, and the signification of the resurrection from the dead, and it could not be but that they had a respect vnto the body of the departed lying before their eyes, a preparation whereof to the resurrection they shadowed by anointing it now going to the ground: most certaine it is that in their prayer they had a speciall reference thereunto that as they beleued that the soule now according to the promise of God receiued rest and blisse with God, so the whole man, both body and soule ioyntly might at the resurrection receiue the fruite and benefite of the forgiuenesse of sinnes and place with Abraham,

Abraham,

Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdome of heauen. In all which discourse so largely set downe by Dionysius, whatsoeuer he were, to declare the custome of the church at that time wherein he liued, wee find nothing but rest and peace and blisse and happinesse to the deceased for whom they praied, according to the promise of God to the righteous that in death they should bee partakers of euerlasting life: but as for Purgatory or M. Bishops prayer for the dead to be deliuered from the paines thereof, there is not so much as one syllable to import it. The like prayer for the dead Epiphanius mentioneth, For the iust, the fathers, the patriarchs, the prophets the Apostles, Euangeli-^{Epiphanius.}sts, martyrs, confessours. &c. And why? For they doubted not of all these but that they were in heauen: why then did they pray for them? Marrie euen for that cause as the church before had done, that it might thereby bee vnderstood that the faithful deceased are not perished but are stil being & liuing with the Lord. Another reason he telleth vs, ut dominum Iesum Christum ab hominum ordine separemus, &c. that we may seuer our Lord Iesus Christ from the ranke of all other men by the honour that we doe vnto him, and may yeelde him worship, considering that though a man liue a thousand times righteously, yet he is not like vnto him: importing hereby that Christ only was perfectly righteous, but for others, there was no man, howsoeuer righteous he were, but that his righteousnesse needed entreatie to God for mercy, and therefore whereas Christ was to be prayed vnto, all other were such as that they rather needed to bee prayed for: whence I inferred beefore and that by necessarie consequence, that because the auncient church did pray for the Saints, without all controuersie they did not pray vnto them. Thus were they put to shifts to deuise reasons of their praier for the dead, and yet could neuer light vpon that reason which is the only support of that praier for the dead, which M. Bishop seeketh to approue. Albert Epiphanius heerein sheweth that some alteration there was from the auncienter church, because they had now begun to pray for mercy for sinners after their death, that is for publicke and notorious sinners, which Dionysius saith the former church was not wont to doe, But with what minde or for what cause they did so, Epiphanius sheweth not, neither can it bee gathered by his wordes: for deliuerance from Purgatorie it could not bee, because Purgatorie, as the Papistes themselves confesse, was^c not receiued or beleueed in the Greeke churches, whereof Epiphanius was, nor hath beene till this day. And surely disputing purposely against Aeri^{us} in the defence of that custome of praying for the dead, nothing had been so ready to stoppe his mouth and to vphold that custome as the allegation of Purgatorie if any such thing had beene then receiued in the church. But it was onely humane affection that preuailed herein: it was thought to be a good minde to wish well to the dead, and whilest men gaue way to their own fancies in this behalfe superstition grewe more and more, and that which with Dionysius was peculiarto iust and holy men to giue them in some sort admision to heauen became common and indifferent to all and had other deuotions added vnto it with opinion to mitigate, if need so required, the very paines of hell. This Aeri^{us} spake against, and indeede spake against it with greater reason then Epiphanius hath defended it: yea the truth is, as^b Cassander confessed to Maximilian the emp^{er}our, that it, cannot bee gathered by any constant agreement of the doctrine of the church at that time what certaine vse they meant to make of their praiers and deuotions for the dead: or what was the condition and state of the soules for which they praied. The custome thereof was vsuall in the church, but men knew not what the church might intend in the doing thereof. Hereupon Dulcitius moued the question to Austin^d Whether the offering made for the dead did any good to their soules, seeing it is euident, saith he, that it is by our own deeds that we are either helped or hurt, and wee read that in hell no man can make confession to God. He knew no purgatory, he knew nothing for the dead but heaven or hell: otherwise hee had beene well enough able to answer himselfe as touching this point. Now for answer heere of S. Austin telleth him that many indeed did say as touching this point, if there were any good to bee done in this behafe after death, how much more should the soule it selfe procure ease for it selfe by it owne conf. sion of finnes there, then by any oblation that here is procured for the ease thereof. Therefore by S. Austin himselfe it appeareth that there were many that did then dispute against that vsage and custome of the church, whom hee condemneth not, hee chargeth them not with any heresie, hee goeth not about to confute their saying, nay he reciteth ther opinion no otherwise but as probable and likely to giue Dulcitius satisfaction of his demaunde. But yet finding that custome of prayers and oblations in the Church hee laboured to make the best of it, that there was no doubt but some good came to the dead thereby, but because it was said that wee shoulde all receiue according to the things that we haue done in our bodies, it was to be vnderstood that this good redounded to none but to those that had led such a life in the body as that these things might do them good. Thus because he would not haue men to preiudicate the obseruation of the church he will haue it thought that there cometh some good of these deuotions, but when hee cometh to set downe what that good is hee cannot tell certainly what to say. Either they auail to full remission, or else surely to procure a more tolerable damnation. A very doubtfull answer, & one part thereof the Papistes themselves reiect as altogether false. For^y they deny that prayer for the dead extendeth to the damned and therefore it cannot procure for them any mitigation of their damnation. As for forgiuenesse of sinnes there can be none after this life, for where there is no repentance there can be no forgiuenesse: but ^z after that we are gone from hence there is no place, sayth Cyprian, for any rep. uance, there it no

^c Alphonf. de Castro adu. her. lib. 8. tit. de Indulgentijs. Polydor. Virg. de inuent. rerum lib. 8. ca. 1. ex Rossensi.

^b Cassand. Con- suliar. cap. de iterat. Missæ.

^d August. de octo quest. Dul- citij. q. 2.

^y Bell. de Pur.
gat. li. 2. cap. 18

^z Cyprian. ad.
Demetrian.

bote.

^a Ambrose. de
bono mort. c. 2.

boote of any satisfaction : no place therefore is there left for any forgiuenesse. Therefore Ambrose saith that ^a David praied to haue his sins forgiuen him before he departed this life because, sayth he, hee that heere receiueh not forgiuenesse of sinnes, shall not be in the inherstance of the Saints : for he cannot come to eternall life, because eternall life is the forgiuenesse of sinnes, that is, is attained vnto by forgiuenesse of sins.

^b Aug. de ciuit.
Dei. li. 21. c. 27.

Yea and what sinnes they are that should be forgiuen after this life, S. Austin profesleth that ^b by al. the search that hee could vse he could neuer attaine to know. The Papists tell vs that they are onely veniall sinnes : but S. Austin saith in that place that they are such sinnes by which a man dieth in case to be cast into hell fire, because he maketh the vse of those prayers and intercessions to bee this, ut ne in ignem quisq̄ mittatur eternum, that a man may not bee cast into euerlasting fire, whereof there is no danger with the papistes for their veniall sinnes. Thus S. Austin and they agree like harpe and harrow : he neither saith as they say, nor they as he. He affirmeth that vse of prayer for the dead, to free menne from euerlasting fire or to giue them ease therein, which they vtterly denie : and they affirme that vse of prayer for the dead to deliuer men from Purgatorie fire, which he neuer knew. For of Purgatorie fire he answereth nothing, which had serued most pregnantly for the deciding of all that doubt. Indeede there was begun in that time some speech thereof, but hee plainly sheweth that he could not tell what to thinke of it. He thinketh it ^c not incredible that such a purgatorie fire may bee after this life, and it may be questioned, saith he, whether it bee so. And againe

^c De 8. quest.
Dulcit. q. 1.

^d De ciui. Dei. li
21 cap. 26.

^e De fide et oper. ca. 16.

^d I speake not against it, saith hee, because perhaps it is so. And againe in another place he leaueth it as vncertaine, ^e Whether onely in this life men suffer, or whether there follow some such temporall iudgements after this life. Now seeing he was so vncertaine and doubtfull herein, because it was indeede a matter of humane tradition and deuce, how much better & more safely shal we follow him there, where being sometimes times vntangled from the regard of customes receiued in the church, he peremptorily determineth according to the trueth of the word of God: ^f There is not any middle place for any man, saith he, that cannot be any where but with the diucll th. 1 is not with Chr. st. ^e He that is dead, either his soule ioyeth in the bosome of Abraham, or else is crauing a little water in euerlasting fire ^h Any third place we know not, nay we find in the Scripture that there is no such. ⁱ The soules of the godly being departed from the loay are in rest, but the soules of the vngodly are in punishment untill the bodies of the one reuine to euerlasting life & the bodies of the other to euerlasting death. ^k All mens soules when they are gone from the body haue their diuers places of receit: the good haue ioy, the euill haue torment. But when the resurrection shall come: both the ioy of the good shall be greater, and the torments of the euill shall be more grienous, &c. Thus S. Austin spake as wee speak, there is no ambiguitie in his words: hee maketh no more places of soules but heauen and hell, and therefore excludeth all vse of praier for the dead, which by the ^l Papists owne confession can neither adde any thing to the blisse of thē that are in heauen, nor take away any part of punishment from them that are in hel. Now by this that hath beene handled, it appeareth that in denying praier for the dead, we vary nothing at all from the faith or practise of the most auncient church: in practise we varie somewhat from the church in the time of the supposed Dionysius Areopagita, but in faith and doctrine concerning the state of death, nothing at all. What opinions thereof grew afterwardes, it is nothing to vs: there were those vses conceiued of it which the Papistes themselves, as hath beene shewed, doe now wholly deny, and indeed Popish praier for the dead is not to be found in all those times. For popish praier for the dead cannot stande but with the standing of Purgatorie: but Purgatorie by the auncient church hath no certaine standing: and therefore Popish praier for the dead for any helpe that it hath from ^f De peccat. me. rit. & remiss. lib. 1. ca. 28.

^g In epist. Ioan. tract. 10.

^h Hypogn. lib. 5.

ⁱ De Civ. Dei. lib. 13. cap. 8.

^k In Ioan. tract. 49.

^l Bellarm. de Purgat. lib. 2. cap. 18.

the auncient church must necessarilie fall, neither doth our church in the deniall of it denie any thing that hath any certaine approbation from that church.

II. W. BISHOP.

Lib. 3. Cap. 20.
Lib. 1. con.
Maximinn.

A common custome it was of the Arrians, and of other more auncient heretickes, to reiect all traditions, and to relie onely vpon the written word, as testifi:th S. Ireneus and S. Augustine. Doenot ours the same, reiecting all traditions, as mans inuention.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop in the three former diuisions hath taken it as a great preiudice to vs, that Iouinian, Vigilantius, and Aerius were condemned by the auncient church, or rather by some few of the auncient church, for some articles of doctrine which we now maintaine. But yet hee knew that his hold was not fast enough, vnlesse hee added this point of traditions, because they were condemned onely for oppugning traditions, and not for any thing which they maintained against the written worde of God. Vnlesse therefore the authoritie of Traditions bee made good, hee seeth well enough that it maketh nothing at all for him that they were condemned. Whereupon he telleth vs that the Arians and other heretickes were condemned of old for reiecting traditions, and relying onely vpon the written word. This he taketh vpon him to prooue by Ireneus and Austin, but his prooffe is such, as that if we were in any dislike of traditions before, we haue great cause now to like them woorse. But he doth as his M. Bellarmine is woont to doe: set it downe, it is no matter whether it bee right or wronge: acornes and draffe be fit enough for swine, and lies are good enough for them that are readie to belecue them. The tract of Ireneus to which he refereth vs, is very pregnant to set foorth vnto vs in the olde heretickes, the very course which the Papiſts now vse as touching touching the Scriptures. In the first chapter of that booke which is the chapter before that that M. Bishop citeth Irenus beginneth thus: ⁱ We haue not receiued the way of^a saluation by any other but by them by whom the Gospell came vnto vs, which indeed they then preached, but afterwarde by the will of God deliuered the same vnto vs in the Scriptures to be the foundation and pillar of our faith. Behold here the written Gospell commended vnto vs to be the foundation and pillar of our faith, and that this was so ordered by the will of God, that we may know it to be vtterly vntrue which the Papists teach, that Christ did not looke that the Gospell should be committed to writing, but that onely by word it should be published to all creatures: and do we not thinke that this helpeth M. Bishops tradition very much? He goeth on & sheweth that the Apostles and Euangelists were by the holy Ghost endued with perfect knowledge to doe that they did, against some which tooke vpon them to be emendatores Apostolorum, Correctours of the Apostles: that by this inspiration Matthew, Marke, Iohn and the rest wrot that which they wrote, & therefore they which did not assent to these being thus partakers of the spirit of the Lord, did despite the Lord, Christ himselfe, and the Father, which saith he, all heretikes doe. For, saith he, when they are reproued by the scriptures they fall to finding fault with the scriptures as if they were not right nor were of authority, and that they are diuersly taken, and that by them the truth cannot be found out of such as doe not know tradition: because the truth was not deliuered by writing but by word. How glad would you be, M. Bishop, if Irenus had saied any thing to touch vs so far as this toucheth you? But let vs first see the ende: for when they thus shifted off the scriptures & refused triall thereby, hee and others that dealt against them were driuen to another course, and that was to examine what the doctrine was that was deliuered from hand to hand by the Bishops and pastours of the church from the time of the Apostles, not minding any other doctrine then was contained in the scriptures, but because they refused the scriptures they would shew that the doctrine which they taught them by the scriptures was no other but what had beene the continuall tradition and deliery of the teachers of the church successiuelly from the time of the Apostles, and therefore the very truth that was first deliuered to the church. But, saith he, when we call them being indeed against tradition to that tradition which is from the Apostles which by succession of Bishops is kept and continued in the churches they will say that they themselves being wiser not only then the bishops of the church but also then the Apostles themselves, haue found out the sincere truth. Hereupon notwithstanding to giue satisfaction to them that would be satisfied in this behalfe he reckoneth the whole ranke of the Bishops of Rome vntill his time still continuing the same tradition from the Apostles, ^c For they all successiuelly, as Eusebius rehearseth out of Egesippus, taught as the law and the Prophets and the Lord had preached: Hee bringeth in also Polycarpus and alleadgeth his epistle to the Philippians, deliuering the same forme of faith, of whome Eusebius bringeth him in also giuing this witness that in all his sermons and narration hee deliuered ^d cuncta sanctis scripturis consona: all according to the scriptures. Lastly he produceth the church of Ephesus founded by Paul, and where Iohn the Apostle continued till the time of Traian the Emperour as a true witness of the tradition of the Apostles. And what, saith he, if the Apostles hadt nothing in writing, should we not follow the order of that tradition which they deliuered to them to whom they comited the churches? where to many nations of the Barbarians agree hauing no writing and yet diligently keeping the old tradition: Now what is that tradition? For here is the full poynt Beleeuing, saith he, in one God maker of heauen and earth and of all things that are therein by Iesus Christ the sonne of God: who for his exceeding great loue towards his creature was content to bee borne of a virgin, in himselfe writing man to God, who suffered vnder Pontius Pilate and rose againe and was received

^a Iren. li. 3 ca. 1^b Andrad. Or. thod. explicat. lib. 2.

^c Euseb. hist.
eccl. li. 4. ca. 21.

^d Euseb. hist.
lib. 5. cap. 18.

ceined up in glory, & with glory shal come the sauour of them that are sau'd and the iudge of them that are iudged, & shall send into eternall fire the corrupters of his truth, & the despisers of his faith, and of his comming. His faith th: y have be-leued without writing, and by reason of his auncient tradition of the Apostles th: y admit not into their minde any of the monstrous speeche.s of these b. ret: kes. &c. Pardon me I beseech thee, gentle Reader, if I be somewhat tedious in the rehearfall of these things. It is for thy satisfaction that thou maist see that Ireneus did not intend by tradition to commend any distinct part of doctrine beside the scripture, but onely appealed to tradition as a witnesse of the onely true doctrine which is cōteined in the scripture. His Apostolicall tradition, thou seest, conteineth no poynt of faith but whereof the scripture doth plentifully instruct vs, neither doth he goe about in his whole booke to auouch vnto them any other poynt but what he seeketh by the scripture to approue. Nay I pray the duely to obserue that it was the hereticke onely that alleadged vnwritten tradition beside the scripture to impeach that faith which Ireneus iustified by the scripture, and for no other cause sought to prooue it by tradition but because they refused the triall of the scripture. How canst thou then but take him for a lewde impostour that would make thee beleue that Ire-neus by tradition recommendeth a distinct part of do-ctine beside, nay indeed contrary to the scripture? The tradition that hee speaketh of is the same with S. Pauls:
 * Tradidi vobis secundum scripturas: I deliuered vnto you, my tradition was to you according to the scripture. ^{1. Cor. 15. 3. 4.} That which I receiued of the Lord, tradidi vobis, I deliuered vnto you: ^{Cap. 11. 23.} that was my tradition vnto you, and in writing expresseth the same. And to this meaning sayde Cyprian when by Stephanus the Bishop of Rome he was vrged which tradition: ² Whence is this tradition? Commeth it from the au- thorities of the Lord or of the Gospell? or from the precepts and Epistles of the Apostles. For those things that are written God himselfe

himselfe testifieth that they are to be obserued. If therefore it be commaunded in the Gospell, or be contained in the epistles or acts of the Apostles, then surely let this tradition be holily obserued. So say we to M. Bishop: let him shew vs his traditions by the scripture, and wee are ready to admit them religiously and holily to be obserued. And so farre is Ireneus from auouching any other traditions as that hee teacheth not onely that the written Gospell is the foundation and pillar of our faith, as before, but also that ^h the rule of truth is to be taken from those thinges, qua aperte & sine ambiguo ipsis dictionibus posita sunt in Scripturis: Which plainly and without ambiguitie in very words are set downe in the Scriptures: the greater is M. Bishops sinne to go about to force him to the patronage of such traditions as neither plainly nor obscurely are to be found therein. But I cannot but woonder that Master Bishop would referre vs of all other to this place of Ireneus, who in describing heere the fashion and dealing of the olde heretickes, doth so liuely trace out the path wherein the Papiests haue walked as if before hand he had prophecyed of them. For as hee saith the old heretickes did, euen so they when they were reprooued by the Scriptures, began to caull thereat, that the Scriptures were not ⁱ rightly translated, that the ^h Greeke and Hebrew copies were corrupted: yea the authoritie of the Scriptures was not such but that ^l the authoritie of the church and bishop of Rome is about them, yea and doth ^m giue authoritie Canonically vnto them: that they were not written that our ⁿ faith should bee in subiection to them, but that they should be subiect vnto it: yea one of them doubted not to say, that ^o Pauls Epistles but onely that the Doctours of the church had giuen some authoritie vnto the, were no more to be set by then Æsopes fables. They alledged that no certainty could bee gathered by the Scriptures, because they were ^p like a nose of waxe, a squire of lead that might bee turned anie way: that the Scripture is but ^q a dead and a dumbe thing, and ⁱ Greg. Martins discovery of the English translations.

^h Iren. l. 2. c. 46.

^k Rhem. Testa in the Preface to the Reader.

^l Syluest. Prieri. de potest. Papa cont.

Luther.

^m Pighij eccles. Hierar. Prefat. ad Paul. 3. & lib. 1. Cap. 2. 3. 4

ⁿ Pigh. ibid. c. 2

^o Sleidan. Comment. lib. 25.

^p Censura. Coln. Dialog. 4.

^q Pigh. apud Andræ. Orthod. explic. lib. 2.

^r Sleidan. Comment. lib. 23. exorat. Piclauij.

and there must be adioyned to it a iudge to determine of the truth: that it is vnperfect and doth not deliuer vnto vs all things that we are to beleeue and to doe, but it must be^r supplied and expounded by traditions, and if we will know the truth, we must goe to the old Councils and Fathers of the Church, and learne of them what wee must beleeue. Well, wee haue beene content to follow them: wee haue iustified our religion by the tradition of the auncient Church: we auouch no point of doctrine whereof we haue not shewed testimonie and approbation in the auncient council, and fathers and stories of that time. Why then forsooth 'wee are faine, say they, to beare with many errors in the o'd Catholike writers, but we extenuate and lessen them; we excuse & make the best of them by some deuised shift; we set a good meaning on them when they are opposed in disputations or in controuersies with our aduersaries. Many the certaine truth or assurance of all the old coun- cels and of al doctrines or definitions of faith dependeth vpon the testimony of the church that now is. For we haue not any infallible testimony that there were any such councils or that they were lawfull, or did determine this or that, but that the church which now is and cannot erre so thinketh and teacheth. For whereas some historians make mention of these councils, it can breed but humane beliefe wherein there may be falsbo:d. Thus they reduce all to their church and to themselues, and neither care for scriptures nor tradition nor councils nor fathers but as it seemeth good to their church to approoue and like them. And although in very woordes they doe not say as those heretickes did that they are wiser then the Apostles themselues, yet in deede and practise they say as much, saying those things which the apostles neuer said, and doing those things which they neuer did, and with["] Non obstante vnaying and Vndoing those things which Christ and his Apottles haue saied and done. With such men wee haue to doe, extremely impudent, shameles conscienceles, like to stubborne and wilfull theeues and malefactours

*M. Bishop.
pag. 19. Alphabet. 2.*

Index. Expurgat. in Censura Betrani.

*Bellarmin. de sacram. lib. 2.
cap. 25.*

" Concil. Con-stan. sess. 13.

malefactours who knowing themselves guiltie refuse the common triall by God and their countrey, and will no otherwise be tried but by their owne words.

M. Bishop further compareth vs for denying Traditions to the Arians playing still the part of Medius Alexanders parasite: if hee cannot accuse truly yet he will lie for life, presuming that though the wound be cured, yet there will remaine a scarre. The Arians denied² Christ to bee of one and the same nature and substance with the father and the holy Ghost. Against them by the commaundement of Constantine was assembled the councill of Nice: to which Constantine himselfe gaue this direction: ¹ The booke of the Euangelistes and Apostles and the oracles of the auncient prophets doe well instruct vs of the will of God therefore setting aside all enmy and discord let vs take out of the words inspired of God the explication of the question in hand. They accordingly by the worde of God and testimonies of the scripture prooued against the heretickes that Christ is of the same substance or essence with the father and the holy Ghost, and this they thought good to expresse briefly by that one word $\delta\mu\upsilon\varsigma\ \sigma\iota\omicron\omicron\varsigma$ or $\delta\mu\omicron\upsilon\varsigma\ \sigma\iota\omicron\omicron\varsigma$, consubstantiall, of one substance. The Arians though at that time conuincd of error yet began afterwards to spurne at the definition of the councill, and one cauill against it was that they vrged vpon men to belecue such things as were not written in the scriptures: for in all the scriptures, the word $\delta\mu\upsilon\varsigma\ \sigma\iota\omicron\omicron\varsigma$ they sayde was not to be found, and so they answered of other like wordes as occasion serued. So said Maximinus the Arian Bishop: ² we will in no case receiue words that are beside the scripture. So said Constantius the emperour being brought to be a maintainer of the Arian heresie, ³ I will haue no words used that are not written. Now what was this but meere cauillation and shifting, for though the worde $\delta\mu\upsilon\varsigma\ \sigma\iota\omicron\omicron\varsigma$ be not found in the scripture yet the matter & signification of the word is contained in the scripture, and therby is Christ prooued to be $\delta\mu\upsilon\varsigma\ \sigma\iota\omicron\omicron\varsigma$ of the same substance with ² August. haz.

49. ad Quod
vult.

¹ Theod. hist.
eccles. lib. 1. c. 4. 7.

² August. cont.
Maximi lib 1.
³ Hilar. cont.
Constant.

with the father. So Athanasius answered: ^b These wordes ^b Athanas ep. though they be not found in the scriptures yet have the same ^{quod decreta} meaning that the scriptures intende, and import the same with ^{Synodi Nicena} them whose eares are rightly affected to heare the truth. The ^{congruis verbis} same answer doth Cyrill giue, and by ^{sunt expedita.} sundrie other ex- ^{Cyrl. de Tri-} amples sheweth that wordes are rightly and truly vsed ^{nit. dial. 1.} concerning God according to the meaning of the scriptures which yet literally are not found there, as that God is incomprehensible, vnscapeable, incorporeall. &c. Therefore did Basill proteste that in intreating of the faith he would use ^{d Basill tract.} wordes that were not written, but yet not disagreeing from ^{de fide.} the meaning of the scripture, words which are not literally themselves sit downe in scriptures, but yet doe retaine the sense and understanding thereof. Now M. Bishop knew well enough that we approue all these things as rightly spoken against the Arius: that we doe not so rely vpon the written word as that we deny whatsoeuer is not in very letters and syllables expressed therein, but only such points the matter and meaning whereof cannot be iustified by the scripture. We say with Gregory Nazianzen: that many ^{e Nazianzen.} things are ^{de Sp. Sanct.} contained in the scripture which yet are not spoken there, and ^{orat. 6.} therefore by those things which we reade, as Austin saith to Maximinus, we conceiue some things that we doe not reade. Our Sauiour ^{f Matth. 22:} alleageth the scripture to prooue the resur- ^{31. 32} rection of the dead, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac the God of Iacob yet it is not there written in these wordes: the dead shall rise againe. S. Paul, ^{g Act. 17. 2. 3.} disputed by the scriptures that Iesus was Christ the Messias, and that hee was to suffer and rise againe from the dead: yet he found it not in very words set downe that Iesus was Christ &c. So M. Bishop knoweth that we professe in the godhead Trinity and Vnity, though wee doe not finde the wordes Trinity and Vnity any where in the scripture because wee finde in scripture the matter and meaninge for signification whereof these wordes haue bene receiued. So he knoweth and he is offended at it that we teach that a man before God is iustified stified by faith onely, because the scripture in effect saith so, though by the very words of faith onely it be not so expressed. So in our churches we professe Christ to be $\delta\mu\sigma\sigma\iota\omicron\varsigma$ co-substantiall of the same substance with the father and the holy ghost, & therefore do not take part with the Arians in rejecting what is not literally expressed in the scripture, because we know the intent and signification of that word is contained therein. Now therefore what should bee the cause that should moue M. Bishop to challeng vs as taking part with the Arians in that cauill; Surely I can gesse none but that being busied in the study of higher dininity he hath forgotten the ninth commaundement; Thou shalt not beare false witnesse against thy neyghbour. But we will deale frindly with him: hee shall see wee be no Arians; let him shew vs the matter and effect of his Traditions in the scriptures as the fathers did concerning $\delta\mu\sigma\sigma\iota\omicron\varsigma$, and we wil neuer contend about the words we are ready to accept and embrace the same. Though we neither finde in the scripture Masse nor Purgatory, nor Pope, yet let them shew vs in the scripture the thinges which they meane by these wordes and they shall finde vs ready to accord with them. So for the rest let them doe the like, and wee will bee Papistes as well as they. If they cannot so doe, the auncient doctrine of the church teacheth vs to beware of them. If any man, saith Austin, eyther concerning Christ or concerning his church or concerning any thing pertaining to our faith and life shall preach vnto vs any thing but what wee haue receined in the scriptures of the law and the gospell, accursed be he And why? becauseⁱ in these things saith he which are plainly set downe in the scriptures are found all things that belong to faith and behauiour of life. And^k if, saith Basil, what soeuer is not of faith be sume, and faith come by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, surely what soeuer is beside the holy scripture because it is not of faith, it is sume: so that it is^l a manifest trespassse of faith and a plaine sinne of pride: either to reiect anie thing that is contained in the scripture or bring in anie thing that lit. P. uiliani.

August. cont.
lib. 3. cap. 9.

ⁱ De doct.
Christ. l. 2. c. 9.

^k Basil. Ethic.
reg. 80.

^l Idem serm.
de fide.

that is not written therein. ^m Let him shew that it is written, ^m Tertull. adu. ^m Hermogen. ^m Chrysof. in faith Tertullian: If it be not written let him feare the woe that ^m Chrysof. in is pronounced to them that adde or take away. For ^m all things ^m Chrysof. in are cleere and plaine by the holy Scriptures, sayth Chrylo- ^m Theffal. some: Whatsoeuer things are necessarie, they are manifest. ^m Op. imperf. Et.
 Yea and since ^m heresies haue gotten place in the church, there ^m in Math. hom.
 is no trial of true Christianitie, no refuge for them that desire ^m 40.
 to know which is the true faith, but onely the Scriptures of God: no way to know which is the true church of Christ, but onely by the Scriptures. Our Lord Iesus knowing that there would be in the last dayes great confusion, doth therefore will that Christians desiring to haue assurance of true faith should sue to nothing but to the Scriptures. Otherwise if they locke to other things, they shall stumble, and fall, & perish, not knowing which is the true church, and thereby lighting vpon the abhomination of desolation, which shall stand in the holy places of the church. This is the thing M. Bishop, that you seeke for, to bring vs to destruction: to make vs bondmen to Antichrist, to winne vs to approue and honour as you doe the abomination of desolation, which hath seated it selfe in the holy places of the Church. You bring a woe and a curse vpon your selfe, according to the wordes of Austin and Tertullian, and you desire to haue vs partakers with you therein. But God forbid that wee should hearken to you therein, and therefore according to the instruction and aduite of these auncient Fathers, wee will admit nothing for matter of faith, but what may be iustified by the Scriptures, yet not reiecting any doctrine for any vnwrit-ten wordes or termes, so long as the matter and meaning thereof may be warranted by that that is written.

12. W. BISHOP.

Xenaias a barbarous Persian indeed yet in shew a counter- ^m Niceph. li. 10.
 feited Christian: is noted for one of the first among Christians, cap. 27.
 that inuoyed against the images of saints, and the worship done by true Christians unto them: as both Nicephorus and Cedrenus in compendio doe record. The reprobate Iewes indeede before him, and after euen untill this day, the miscreant Turkes (enemies of all Christianity) do dwell still in the same error: And yet is not this most vehemently auerred by our protestants, and all Calvinists: although they cannot denie but that aboue 900. yeres agoe, in the second generall Councell holden at Nice, they are by the consent of the best, and most learned of the world, for euer accursed, that doe denie reuerence and worship, to be giuen unto the Images of Saints.

R A B B O T.

In idle tales they haue bene wont to say, that howsoeuer the deuill disguise himselfe, yet hee isto bee knowne by a polt-foot. Howsoeuer it be in the appearance of the deuill, wee are sure that it is so in his instruments & agents that howsoeuer ^a they transforme themselues as if they were the ministers of righteousnesse, yet one way or other they bewray themselues by what spirit they yspeake. Surely, if there were nothing else that did discouer vnto vs that M. Bishop is a teacher of lies and falshood, yet this point that heere hee speaketh of, is sufficient fully to assure vs thereof. He setteth before vs heere to eate the very excrement & filth of Antichrist, the stunke whereof is so lothsome that it cannot but be extremely offensiuue to any man that hath any true feeling of a Chritian heart. What, would hee haue vs from the light of God to returne to that grosse and palpable Egyptian darkenesse, as that like senselesse beasts we should lie tumbling againe before dumbe idols, and worship stockes and stones, and lift vp our handes to pray to that which is the worke of the handes of another man? Farre bee it from vs euer to yeelde our hearts to so vile and hatefull abomination. With worship and dutie of religion, as ^b Lactantius and ^c Aultin teach, wee serue onely the true God. ^d The Apostle, saith the same S. Austin, forbiddeth

pag: 1107.
^a 2. Cor. 11. 15

^b Lactant. Institut. lib 1. cap. 20.

^c August. cont. 2. Epist. Pelag. lib 3. cap. 4.

^d August. cont. Faust. Manich. lib 14. cap. 11.

biddeth religious worship to be giuen to any creature, neyther can it be applied to any^c without wrong and iniury to the di-uine maiestie: ^f not to martyrs or Saints, not to the^e blef-sed virgin Marie: not^h to Angels nor Archangels, nor any name that is named in this world or in the world to come. Peter refuseth to be worshipped, saying to Cornelius,ⁱ Arise, for euen I also am a man, The Angell refuseth to bee worshipped, saying to S. Iohn,^k Doe it not, for I am thy fellow seruant: worship God. As I applied it before to reliques, so must I heere to images: what would they say if they coule speake to the worshippers thereof? Worship not vs, for wee are worle then men: wee are lesse then tellow seruants: wee are but woode and stoness: nay the ^l frogge and the mouse, and the moule and the bat and euery worme is better then we are, because they haue life and sense and we haue none, and if it be a shame to worship them, much more shame is it to worship vs that are but blockes and stumpes of trees. Therefore pray not for helpe to vs, for we are not able to helpe our selues: ^m the owles and birds light vpon vs and beray vs and we cannot driue them away: the fire consumeth vs and wee cannot withstand the heat thereof. Some men clothe and decke vs and other some robbe and spoile vs, and being sometimes ⁿ of gold and siluer our owners for their necessitie pawne vs and sell vs: or being of brasse or other mettall we are turned to posnets, and potts and pannes, and we haue no knowledge what any of them doe vnto vs. If yee will not ^o worship them that haue made vs, much lesse thinke it fitte to worship vs. And indeed a very brutish and senselesse deuotion it is for a reasonable man to ^p babble to the walles and to talke vnto dead things, and being himselfe ^q the image of God to abiect himselfe to worship the image of a man, nay the very earth that hee treadeth vnder his feete: for what are images but vile earth and dust?
 which ^r for their fashon and beautie are beholding to the workeman that made them, and therefore should themselues.

^c Origen. cont.
Celsus. lib. 1.^f Hieron. cont.
vigilant. Cyrill.^e cont. Iulianum lib. 6.^h Ambros. de Spir. sancto. lib.^k 3. cap. 12.ⁱ Hier. ad Riparium.^l Origen. cont.
Cels. lib. 3. & 8.^m Act. 10. 26.ⁿ Apoca. 22 9^o Clem. Alex.
in Protrep.^p August. in Psa.
113. cont. 2^q Bar. 6. 21. 54.^r Tertul. Apo-loges. cap. 13.^s Augustin. in Psal. 149.^t Origen. cont.
C. lib. 1. & 6.^u Clem. Alex. in Protrep.^v Lact. Institus:
lib. 2. cap. 18^w Athan. suis contra idola.^x Lact. Instit. lib^y 1 cap 2 & 4.

selues rather worship him at whose mercy they stood whether to make them troughes for the swine or saints for the church. I wote well what they are readie here to answer that they worship not the Images themselues but by the images they doe worship to the Saints. Wherein they say nothing but what the idolatrous gentiles of old sayd in defense of their idols. But as the auncient church answered those idolaters, so doe wee answer to idolatrous papists, if they beleue the Saints whom they worship to be in heauen, why doe they not lift vp their eyes thither if they will needes worshippinge them to worship them where they are: who are not to be worshipped, if they see not what men doe or heare not what they pray: and if they thinke they doe so, why doe they not directly but thus by attourney and at second hand performe their deuotions vnto them, as if they could see but by their eyes that cannot see, nor heare but by their eares that cannot heare, nor know what men do vnto them but as they lie wallowing at the feete of dumbe and senseles idolls? And if we thinke him out of his witte that standeth babling to a mans picture or image when he should and may speake to the man himselfe, why is it not thought a stupid and senselesse thing, contumelious and reprochfull vnto the Saints, to sit mumbling of prayers to stockes and blockes that are intended to them, and in honour & worship to equall, as they do, euery base and vile idol to those heauenly & blessed soules? And how do they know that their images are like to them whose names they beare, or that a ridiculous error be not committed to worship Iohn a Noke by that that is more like Iohn a Stile: or that as Praxiteles made the image of Venus by the countenance of Cratina and many other by Phryne, who both were renowned harlots or as the painter mentioned by Ludouicus Viues painted all women like to his owne wife: so the workeman haue made the image of our Lady to the shape of some minion or curtisan that he himselfe is in loue with all, and so

^f Origen. contra Celsum lib. 8.

^g Lact. institut. lib. 2. cap. 2
Arnob. contra Gentes, lib. 6.

^h Lact. vt sup.

ⁱ Arnob. cont. Gentes. lib. 6.

^k Lud. Viues de censur. veri. lib. 3.

so it come to passe that ^a seruice bee done to a harlot ^a in steede of a Saint, and this pitifull deuotion by false counterfeits be deluded? It is indeede a pitifull deuotion: for the Saints whom they profess to worship ^a know vs not, nor are acquainted with vs, and therefore the worship that is done to their images must needs determine in the images themselues. And though they knowe vs or were with vs, yet, as before hath bene shewed, we were not to performe vnto them any spirituall deuotion of religion, but to their images much lesse. And surely so farre were the first Christians from liking of the worshipping of images, as that they wholly disliked the ^b arte of image-making, and thought it not lawfull to bee practised by them. It was ^c Marcellina the strumpet of Carpocrates the hereticke, that first after the ^d Simonians brought in amongst Christians the worshipping of images, bearing men in hand, that ^e Pilate tooke the picture of Iesus when hee was vpon the earth, and shee had the counterfaites thereof, which with the images of Paul and Homer, and Pythagoras and others shee deuoutly serued. It was continued afterwards by the ^f Collyridian hereticke, and in them condemned by Epiphanius. They made images of the virgin Mary, and worshipped them, and offered to them, which he termeth a d:uils practise, and auoucheth that so to doe is to goe a whoor. ng from God. S. Austin mentioneth ^g Picturarum adoratores, worshippers of pictures: noting them for ignorant and superstitious persons and condemned by the church. In the time of Gregorie the bishop of Rome the superstitious vse thereof began to grow further, The images of Saints began to bee set vpp in the churches and to bee worshipped. Serenus the bishop of Massilia was mightily offended heereat, and causeth the images to bee broken and cast away. ^h Gregorie writeth to him that he would not haue had him to breake them, because they might serue as hee thought for some instruction and remembrance to simple people, but yet commendeth:

^a Anno. vt. sup^a Esay 63. 16^b Clem Alex. in Protept.^c Origen. contra Celsum. lib. 6^d Augustin. ad Quod vnus d.^e her. 7.^f Euseb. histor lib. 2. cap. 13.^g Iren. lib. 1^h Epiphanius her 79. Collyridian.^g Augustin. de moribus ecclesia Catholica. lib. 1. cap. 34.^h Gregor. lib. 7. Epist. 109. & lib. 9. Epist. 2.

commendeth his zeale that he would not endure that any thing should be worshipped that is made with handes, and telleth him, that hee should forbid the people the worshipping of them: that they were not to be set in churches to be worshipped because it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only thou shalt serue. Yet afterwards the Bishop of Rome letting vpp the kingdome of Antichrist with strong hand made way for this abhominable idolatry, and settled it in the church: and although the fearefull vengeance of God denounced by the Apostle for this sinne haue since eminently lighted vpon them, Godⁱ deliuering themⁱ up to vile affections, so that the stinke of their vncleane & filthy lust, their Sodomy and vnnaturall beastlinesse was growne lothsome both to God and men: yet they continue still to defend this horrible sacriledge, that the prophecy of S. Iohn may be verified in them: ^k*The remnant of men which were not killed with these plagues wherof he hath there spoken, repented not of the workes of their hands that they might not worship diuels and idols of gold and of siluer and of brasse and of stone and of wood, which neither can see nor heare nor go calling it the worshipping of deuils, as Moses did when hee sayd of the Israelites, ^lThey offered to deuils and not to God,* not according to the intention of the persons, but according to the truth of the thing ^m because deuils are prest and readie at idols and images to receiue the honours that are done vnto them vnder pretence of doing honour and worshippe to Saintes in heauen. And thus M. Bishop maketh himselfe a patron and defender of this worshipping of deuils, and vseth the best witte hee can to perswade his most excellent maiestie to bee a promoter and furtherer thereof. But his colours are false and deceitfull, neither can he so varnish his idols but that his Maiestie is able to discern that they are but base and rotten stuffe. First hee saith that Xenaias a barbarous Persian was the first that inueighed against the worshipping of Saints images: but this seemeth to be a meere deuile of the idol-mongerⁿ Tharasius

ⁱ Rom. 1. 24. 26

^k Apoc. 9. 20.

^l Deut. 32. 17

^m August. cont Fausf. Manich.
lib. 22. cap. 17

ⁿ Concil. Nien.
second. Act. 1.

in the second Nicene councell thereby to cast a prejudice against them that would reprove that idolatry for that to bad a man as Xenaias did the like. for this ^o Xenaias was an Eutychnian hereticke a very seditious, & turbulent man that opposed himselfe against the councell of Chalcedon in behalfe of Eutyches and Dioscorus, as may appeare in Euagrius by an epistle of the monkes of Palestina concerning him. But of this matter of inueighing against worshipping of images there is nothing recorded till long after by Nicephorus and Cedrenus who were to ready to entertaine any tale that might serue fore the furthering of their idolatry. And indeede there was no reason of his inueighing against worshipping of images inasmuch as it is not found that there was anie Christian church in the world wherein images, were vsed to any such ende: And if vpon occasion he had so done, he could not in those daies haue bene accounted an hereticke for it, because the whole current of the fathers of that time with full and maine streame runneth the same way: so vtterly vnttrue is it which M. Bishop saith that true christians then did worship to images of saints, neither can he bring any pregnant example thereof throughout the whole world. Another prejudice by him alleaged is, that Iewes and Turkes haue condemned and doe condemne the worshipping of images, But had Friar Bellarmine and his scholer M. Bishop so little vnderstanding, as to thinke it a good argument for the worshipping of images that Iewes and Turkes doe condemne it: We conceiue there is reason to argue another way, as our Saviour Christ did from the example of the Ninuities against the Iewes, ^p The men of Ninuie shall rise in iudgement with this generation and shall condemne it, for they repented at the preaching of Ionas, &c. Or as Austin doth from the example of the Iewes against the Arians: ^q Ecce, intelligent Iudaei quod non intelligunt Ariari: (see, the Iewes understand that which the Arians doe not understand, that Christ affirmeth himselfe to be equall to the Father. It was no reason

^o Euang. hist.
lib. 3. ca. 31.

^p Matth. 12. 41.

^q Augustin in
Ioan. tract. 17. } 2

why the Arians should not beleue that Christ was equall to the Father, because the Iewes so conceiued of the words of Christ: but it was rather an argument of their exceeding great blindnesse that in Christs wordes could not see that which the Iewes saw. In like sort we may say: Behold, Turkes and Iewes see that which these blinde Papistes cannot see. They discern by the commaundement of God that it is an abhominable thing to fall downe to an image, to worship it and pray to it, and such is the grosse darknes wherein Papists dwell, as that they take it to bee a matter of great deuotion. Therefore Turkes and Iewes shall rise in iudgement against the Papists, and shall condemne them, because they haue learned by Gods lawe to hate that idolatrie which the Papists against the plaine law of God so wilfully mainteine. And well may I say wilfully, when in all their Catechismes wilfully and of purpose they suppress the second Commaundement, whereby the people should learne to detest that abomination. Last of all M. Bishop telleth vs in behalfe of his idols, that wee cannot deny, but that aboute 900. yeeres agoe in the second general Council holden at Nice they are by the cōsent of the best and most learned of the world for euer accursed that do deny reuerence & worship to be giuē to the images of saints. But I see, M. Bishop. that you doe not know what we can doe. We both can and doe denie that they were the best or most learned of the world that pronounced that curse, vnlesse you meane the world as Christ doth when hee saith, ¹ The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light. We deny not but such a Council there was, by the procurement of Eirene, that idolatrous and wicked Empresse, but it was like the Councell of Ahab's foure hundred prophets, of whom Micheas saide vnto him, ¹ The Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets. It might well be saide of them that God ¹ had mingled amongst them the spirit of error so that they were like to drunken men; that he had giuen them the spirit.

¹ Luk. 16. 8.

¹ 1. King. 22. 23

¹ Esa. 19. 14.

^a Rom 11. 8.

Spirit.

spirit of slumber, and^x sent them strong delusions to beleue & to make lies. There is that wresting and abusing of holic^x 2. Thess. 2. 11. Scripture, such falsifying of the writings of the Fathers (such allegations of absurd and lying woonders, so manie brainicke and witlefle conclusions, as that it may well be thought, that God by iust iudgement gaue them vp to a reprobate sense, and deprived them of common vnderstanding, so farre were they from shewing themselues the best or most learned of the world, as M. Bishop would haue vs to thinke of them. Let one of them, I doubt not but M. Bishop will say the best, serue for example of all the rest, ^y Adrian the bishop of Rome for the commending of images citeth these places of Scripture: ^z In that day shall the altar of the Lord be in the middest of the land of Egypt, and a pillar by the border thereof vnto the Lord. ^a Glorie and honour are before him. Lord, ^b I haue loued the beauty of thy house, and the place where thy glory dwelleth. ^c Thy face Lord will I seeke. ^d All the rich of the people shall make their supplication before thee. No doubt he was a profound clerke that could diue so deepe into these texts as to finde images therein. But against this idoll-gracing conuenticle and conspiracie, there was gathered loone after in these Westerne parts at Franckford in Germany another counsell, summoned by the Edict of Charles the Great, wherein were a great number of Bishops of Germany, Fraunce, and Italy, who determined by the woorde of God, and testimonies of the former auncient Church against the worshipping of Images, and decreed that that Nicene Synode which hadde established the same should bee holden for no other but Pseudosynodus, a false Councell or synode: they examined all the allegations of the same Councell and shewed them to bee impertinent and false: and of the Acts thereof, because Charles the Emperour was a dealer in the matter himselfe, was a booke put forth vnder his name, Liber Caroli Magni contra synodum de imaginibus: the booke of Charles the 2^d Council at Nice justly holden to be pseudosynodus. v. p. 114

* Roger. Hone-
den. Continu. as Bed. e. part. 1.
anno. 792.

* Act. 6. Nicen.
Concil. 2.

the great against the councell that decreed for images The same Charles at the same time sent ouer into this Iland of Britaine a copy of the same Nicene councell to haue a iudgement thereof, which Albinus singularly confuted by authoritie of holy scriptures, as hauing decreed that which was accursed by the church of God, and the same answer was sent ouer in the name of the bishops and princes of this land. Yea and before that Nicene councell there was a councell holden by the Emperour Constantius Copronymus of which there is mention made in the same Nicene councell which so much detested the worshipping of images as that it decreed the abandoning of them altogether. We haue therefore two councells against M. Bishops one, and in his owne councell wee finde nothing to mooue a man well aduised to worship an image, but in the other we find sufficient instruction from the word of God to learne to detest the same. And thus wee are at length come to an end of M. Bishops heresies wherewith he thought good to charge the doctrine of our church: and hetherto we see his breath is no gun-shot: hee laboureth much and auaileth little: sheweth a great deal of malice, and a small deal of witt thus to cry out heresie heresie, and able to prooue no heresie at all, it being made apparrant that our church in the matters whereof hee speaketh doth affirme nothing for which it hath not the expresse testimony and warrant of the old church.

13. W. BISHOP

I will omit sundry other beads of the Protestants Religion, by all approoued antiquitie reprobued, and condemned that I passe not the bounds of an Epistle, and seeme ouer tedious vnto your Maiestie. Especially considering that these are sufficient, to conuince that those points (wherin the Protestants affirme the present church of Rome, to haue so farre degenerate from the auncient) are the very essentiall parts of faith, then maintain-ned

ned by the Romans: And the contrarie opinions nothing else, but wicked heresies, of old inuented, and obstinately held against the same Roman Sea, euen as they are now in our time and of old also condemned by the same church in her most flourishing and best estate. Wherefore your most excellent maiestie, being resolute in that singular good opinion (that no church ought further to depart from the church of Rome then shee is departed from her selfe in her flourishing estate) must needs recalle the church of England, from such extrauagant opinions, to ioyne with the Roman church in the foresaid articles, which shee in her best time held for parts of pure faith: And in all others also which they cannot directly prooue (in a lawfull disputation before your Maiestie) to haue bene altered by her, particularly naming the point of Doctrine: the author of the change: the time and place, where and when he liued: who followed him, who resisted him, and such other like circumstances, which all be easely shewed in enery such reuolt or inuouation, because the vigilant care of the Pastors of Christes flocke, haue bene alwaies so great, as no such things could be vnknown let slippe, or unrecorded.

Thus much for my first reason, collected from the vnruth of the Protestants religion.

R. ABBOT.

Now that we haue taken away M. Bishops premisses it is no hard matter to gesse what will become of his conclusion: He dreameth he hath conuincd much against vs, when indeed all that hee hath done, is but to conuince himselfe of ignorance & folly. We are agreed that the ancient Roman faith be maintained. It hath bene iustified that the faith which we profess is the auncient Roman faith. Now therefore his most excellent Maiestie being resolute in that singular good opinion, that no church ought further to depart from the church of Rome then shee is departed from her selfe in her flourishing estate, must needs detest poperie as a wicked Apostasie from the auncient Romane faith, and continue the church of England in the Religion already established by law according to the prescript rule of the word of God, and the example of the most auncient Romane Church. Now he would make his Maiesty beleue that there are sundry other heads of our religion wherein hee could shew that wee haue swarued from the old faith: wonder but hee would tell vs as Bristow did that we haue renewed ^a twenty five old heresies at the least and deuised at least a thousand of our owne. They are noble, ladds and will not loose the whetstone for want of tongues. But indeed M. Bishop hath spitt the worst of his poison already and by that that he hath sayed we haue cause lightly to esteeme of the rest that he can say. But the rest that hee can say I see is but little: his purpose is to put vs to the iumpe to say for our selues: for he would haue his Maiesty to ioin with the church of Rome in all other articles which we cannot directly prooue in a lawfull disputation before his Maiestie to haue beene altered by her, particularly naming the point of doctrine, the author of the change, the time and place where and when he liued, who followed him, who resisted him, and such other like circumstances. what? and must wee haue all this adoe to prooue an alteration? If the Phyisician hauing left M. Bishop well in health in the beginning of the yeere come to him in the ende and giue him to vnderstand that hee is ouertaken with the jaundice or the drop sicke, will hee not beleue him vnlesse hee can tell him when & vpon what occasion he began to change: When I see the hand of the diall remooued from one to two, shall I be so mad as to thinke it standeth still where it was, because I could not discern the stirring of it: Politicians obserue that corruptions are bred in common wealths as diseases are in bodies: they are not discerned but in their growth, and insensibly they proceede many times till it come to passe which Liuie said of the Roman state: ^b Nec vitia nostra nec remedia ferre possumus: we can neither endure

^a Brist. de-
maund. 38

^b Liuie, Dec. I.
lib. I.

our faults nor the redresse of them. It is so in commonwealths & is it not so in churches: was it so in the empire of Rome, and might it not be so in the church of Rome? O no, by no means: all circumstances bee easily shewed, saith M. Bishop, in every such revolt or innovation, because the vigilant care of the Pastors of christes flocke hath beene alwaies so great as no such things could be unknowne, let slippe or unrecorded. But how then standeth that that our Saviour christ telleth vs in the Gospell that ^c by the sleeping of the husbandman the enemy should take his opportunity to sow tares in the Lords field: How is it that in the ^d forehead of the whoore of Babylon is written, A mysterie, and that the working of Antichrist is called ^e A mysterie of iniquitie, but because ^f secretly, he shall winde his abominations into the church of christ: euen as the Apostle S. Peter saith of the false prophets that should come that priuily they shall bring in damnable hereses. S. Austin saith that ^g in his time all was full of humane presumptions with the seruile burdens whereof men were so pressed as that the Iewes estate under legall ceremonies was more tolerable then the state of christians. Now M. Bishop belike can tell that which S. Austin could not tell by whome these presumptions came into the church, what they were, the time and place when and where they began, who followed and who resisted them, because ^h the vigilant care of the pastors of christes flocke hath alwaies beene such as no such things should be unknowne, let slippe or unrecorded. Nay to come neerer to him what ⁱ might be the cause that ^k Pope Sixtus the fift and Clement the eight corrected so many thinges in the Vulgar Latin text of the Scriptures: If there were any errours therein, surely M Bishop, I trow can tell vs by whome they first came in, where and when they first began, and who found fault therewith, because the vigilant care of the pastours of christes flocke hath beene alwaies such as no such things could be unknowne, let slippe or unrecorded. What was the cause of the late reforming of their Portesses and Primers when for

^c Matth. 13. 24

^d Apoc. 17. 5.

^e 2. Thess. 2. 7

^f 2 Pet. 2. 1^o

^g παρεισδύουσι.

^h August. epist.

ⁱ 119.

^h Biblia vulgat.

ⁱ edit. Romæ anno.

^k Dom. 1590

^l 1592. 1593.

ⁱ Praefat offic.
beat. Mar. virg.
nuper reform.

^x Praefat. breui.
Rom. reformat.

very shame they would no longer continue to vse them as they had done : Was it as the Pope sayde, thatⁱ they were filled with vaine and superstitious errors, and that manie things were crept into them which were^k full of uncertaintie and much amisse? Let it appeare, M. Bishop, by whom those superstitions were brought in, where and when they first grew, who followed them, who resisted them, or else require to haue your Portesses in like sort as you had them before that still you may sing of Thomas Becket.

^l Breuiar in translat. S.
Thom. Cantuar.

^l Tu per Thoma sanguinem quem pro te impendit
Fac nos Christe scandere quò Thomas ascendit.
By the bloud of Thomas which for thee he did spend,
Make us O Christ to climbe whether Thomas did ascend, because the vigilant care of the Pastors of Christes focke hath alwayes beene such as that no such innouations could bee unknowne, let slippe, or unrecorded. Or if the care of the Pastors of the church of Rome haue not beene such but that so many such enormities of corruptions and superstitions grew into the very text of Scripture, and the Portesse and church-seruice, may wee not thinke that much more in other matters by want of care and vigilancy in the pastors, corruptions and errors might spring vp in the church and haue libertie to spreade and grow therein : Now wee doubt not but such hath beene the watchfulnesse of Satan that he hath omitted no occasions that possibly might bee taken to aduantage himselfe to get ground, and gaine to his sonne Antichrist a kingdome in the church. Who laying continuall siege to this Ierusalem the city of God hath beene woont like a politicke warriour with maine force to assault it on some one side that the strength of the cittie being gathered thither for defence he might the more securely vndermine it other-where. For thus by notorious heretickes the Carpocratians, Valentinians, Basilidians, Marcionites, Manichees, Arians, and others oppugning the great towers and fortresses of Christian

Christian faith, hee mightlie busied the fathers of the church that whilest they were forced to looke, as I may saie to the main chance and therefore were perforce the lesse heedie otherwise, hee might take his opporunity stealingly to get in first a finger, and then a thumb, and then a hand & an arme and so the rest till at length he had by his lieutenant fully seated himselfe in the temple of GOD, and brought the outward state of the church in a manner wholly in subiection to himselfe. And to this purpose he laied his foundations even in the time of the Apostles, so that they giue to vnderstand that ^m the mystery of iniquity was the working, and that ⁿ Antichrist euen then was already in the world. Then did hee labour by the false Apostles to corrupt the doctrine of iustification by faith, as appeareth by the epistle to the Galatians. Then did hee seeke to peruert men by counterfeit inessages and writings vnder the name of the Apostles. Then did a certaine priest write a fable, as before was saide, of ^p the peregrination of Paul and Tecla for the commendation of virginity, and being thereof conuicted by the Euangelist S. Iohn was deposed for his paines. But well is it noted by Egesippus that ^q so long as the Apostles liued the church continued a virgin & vncorrupt false teachers for that time lurking in secret, because they found the Apostles still ready to checke and crosse their attempts: but when the Apostles were dead and that generation was gone which had immediatly with their owne ears heard their preaching of saluation, then a conspiracy of wicked error began by the seducements of such as deliuered strange doctrine, and boldly preached a falsely-named-knowledge against the preaching of the truth, because there was none of the Apostles remaining to controulle them. Then freely did there fly abroad an infinite number of counterfeit and apocryphall writings, ^r the gospels of Taddens, of Mathias, of Peter, of Ieames, of Barrabas, of Thomas, of Andrew: the Acts of Thomas, of Andrew, of Philip: the Revelations of Paul, of Thomas, of Stephen: the booke of the natiuity of our ^m 2. Thes. 2. 7.

ⁿ 1. Iohn. 4, 3.

^o 2. Thes. 2. 2.

^p Tertul. de Baptismo.

Hierony. in Catalog. eccl.

script. Lucas.

^q Euseb. eccles. hist. lib. 3. ca. 29

^r Gelas. decren. de Apocryph.

Sanjour and of Mary and her midwife, and a great number more of such deuises. Then went deceiuers abroad to report what Andrew and Peter and Philip and the rest had saide and done, to whom Papias gaue care and was by them drawne into errour and himselfe by that meanes gaue occasion of errour to many Ecclesiasticall men that respected him for his antiquitie, and for that he was so neere to the very time of the Apostles. In like sort those bastard writings which iustly deserued to be consumed in the fire yet many times got credite with the Fathers of the Church, as with Chrysostome the peregrination of Peter, fathered vpon Clement: with Ambrose and Cyprian the table of Tecla: with Origen the gospell according to the Hebrewes the Epistle of Barnabas and sundry other: with Clemens Alexandrinus the preaching of Peter: with whole churches the Reuelation of Peter and the Iudgement of Peter, and The Pastour, so that they were read publikely therein, by meanes wher of the person which Sathan had cunningly conueied into such counterfeit bookes was receiued as wholsome food, and sundry errours and superstitious fancies of vowed virginities, of praier for the dead, of free will, of inuocation of Saints, of Antichrist, of the Assumption of Mary, and such like by little and litle got footing in the church. And here was indeede the true beginning of many doctrines of Poperie, when in such fained Scriptures many things were commended to the church, which in the true scriptures of the Apostles were not mentioned at all, which M. Bishop pleadeth to be ancient, and wee denie it not, because wee know the diuel is ancient, that was the deuiser of them. Some asperision wherof his care was to cast vpon the masters of the assemblies the Doctours and teachers of the church, and with humane respects to mist and dazle their eies, as knowing that it would little auaille him to plead the value of meane persons and notorious heretickes, and therefore seeking to grace his deuises with the credit and authoritie of greater names:

c Enseb. eccles. hist. li. 3. ca. 39
e ibid.

u Chrysof. ep. imperf. hom. 49.
x Ambros. epist. 82.

Cyprian. orat. pro martyr. & sub die passionis.

y Orig. in Mat. tract. 8 & in Leuit. hom. 10.
 & const. Cels. lib. 1.

z Clem. Alex. Stromas lib. 6.

a Sixt. Senens. bibl. Sanct. lib. 2. ex Niceph.

b Ruffin. in ex. pof. Symb.

c Eccles. 11. 11.

names : but so as that by the prouidence of almighty God there remaineth a sufficient light amongst them for the rectifying of those things wherein they swarued from that streight and euen path which the Apostles had troden out for direction vnto them . Which God willing shall be made very pregnant & cleere in the handling of those points , wherin M. Bishop hath taken vpon him in behalfe of the Romish church to oppugne the doctrine of our church . Albeit there are some things in their practise and defense whereby their shame is laied open in all the rest : whereof the first church which receiued ^d all the counsell ^d of God, yet neuer receiued any thing, nor euer gaue anie approbation at all. The worshipping of idols and images had neuer so much as any shewe of allowance from that church : It was practised as before was shewed by the Simonian heretickes, the Carpocratians, the Collyridians, and in the time of Gregorie Magnus began publickly to be affected, and was then resisted by Serenus bishop of Massilia, and condemned by Gregorie himselve, and neuer got head till after that time by the idolatrous second Nicene councell, and yet was then also withstood by a councell at Constantinople, and by ten or twelue Christian Emperours successiuelly in the East ; by Charles the Great, and the councell of Francford in the West, but in the end by the vsurpation and tyranny of Antichrist was fully established in the church : for the condemning whereof ^e Alphonfus de Castro imputeth error to the ^e ancient Father Epiphanius : so certaine is it that by him in name of the Church it was condemned at that time. Now Satan hauing had so good successe in one point of idolatrie, went presently in hand with another, and set a foote the doctrine of Transubstantiation, euen about the time of that second Nicene councell, almost eight hundred yeeres after the birth of Christ. The same was debated to and fro, till at length ^f Carolus Caluus king of Fraunce, taking knowledge of it ^g sent to Ioannes Bertram

Act. 20. 27.Alphonf. de her. lib. 8. tit.Imago.Trithem. Abb.Ioan. Bertram.de corp. & sang.Domini.

mus a priest, a man for his famous learning, to know his judgement thereof, who then wrote against it his booke De corpore & sanguine Domini: Of the body and blood of our Lord: and by strong arguments and authorities of the Fathers, impugned that new deuise: which booke the Spanish Censours would not haue to be wholly suppressed ^h because forsooth we should not say that they made away such writings of antiquitie as did make for vs, but yet to secure themselves, they haue taken out such speciall arguments as made against them, and appointed the booke to be Printed, shamefully abusing the Reader, to make him thinke hee hath that which he hath not, because the booke wanteth that that it should haue. At that time liued also Ioannes Scotus, not he that was surnamed Duns, but another, a man for his singular learning highly esteemed with the same Charles, who wrote also a treatise De Eucharistia Of the Eucharist or Sacrament of the Lords Supper, purposely against that point. The newnesse of which doctrine may heereby be conceiued, not onely for that Gelasius the bishop of Rome determined flatly against it, that ^k by the Sacraments which wee receive of the body and blood of Christ wee are made partakers of the diuine nature, and yet there ceaseth not to be the substance or nature of bread and wine: but also for that they themselves confesse that in the auncient writers there is ^l seldome mention of it, indeede none at all: and that as touching the secrets thereof of accidents without any subiect, and accidents onely nourishing and feeding without any substance, and such like, ^m Posterior at as per Sp. Sanctum adaidit: latter time added them by the instinct of the holy ghost: whereas Chrysostome telleth vs, that ⁿ if any of them that are said to haue the holy Ghost doe speake of himselfe and not out of the Gospell, hee is not to be beleued. If he read it not written, but speake of himselfe, it is manifest that he hath not the holy Ghost. Yea ^o Scotus, Cameracensis, and others doe plainly confesse that Transubstantiation cannot be enforced by the Gospell, no nor by any testimonies ^h Index Ex Purgator. in castigat. Bertrams.

ⁱ Lanfranc. de Sacram. Euchar

^k Gelas. cont. Euych. & Nestor.

^l Alfons. de Cast. lib. 8. tit. Indulg.

^m Index Ex-purg. in Casti. gat. Bertram.

ⁿ Chrysost. de Sanct. & or. and spiritu.

^o Chemnic. in Examn. Concil. Trident. de Transubst.

testimonies of the auncient church, and^r Scotus affirmeth ^{p Bellar. de Sa-} as Bellarmine himselfe confesseth, that before the Lateran ^{gram. Euchar.} Councell it was no article of faith. And it is woorthy to be ^{lib. 3. c. 23.}
 obserued also that the same Bellarmine acknowledgeth, ^{q ibi.}
that it may well be doubted whether there be any place of Scripture evidently to prooue Transubstantiation otherwise then that their church hath declared it so to be, because verie learned, and acute men, such as Scotus was, doe thinke the contrarie. It had neuer publicke approbation for a thousand yeeres after the time of Christ, nor euer full confirmation vntill the Councell of Lateran, which was two hundred yeeres more: where was plena curia, a full court for the re-ceiuing and letting vp of the idoll * Maazim, the God of * ^{Dan. 11. 38.} Antichrist, thenceforth with diuine honours to be adored & worshipped of all? Together herewith grew the notable abuse of the celebration of the Lords Supper, which many ages of the first church were neuer acquainted with:
 the sacrament ordinarily to be receiued by the Priest only,
 and when it is receiued by the people to be receiued onely in one kinde. Looke the old counceles, the fathers, the stories: see the discriptions of church-seruice in Dionysius, Iustinus Martyr, in the Liturgies true or feigned of Iames, of Basil, of Chrysostome, of Ambrose or whatsoeuer other auncient records: it is not founde euer to haue beene so ordered in any church throughout the whole Christian world. Yea some of them confesse that it is not knowne when the custome of their halte communion began: ^{r Coster. Enchi-} that it crept in first by custome by the conuience of the Bishops ^{rid. cap. 10.} and after was confirmed and established by law, so idle a fancy ^{Gregor de Vi-} is it which M. Bishop doteth vpon, that the vigilant care ^{lent. lib. de Eu-} of the pastours of Christs flocke hath alwayes been such as that ^{charist. cap. 10.} no such innovations could be vnknewe, let slippe or vrecord d Their Purgatorie fire was scant kindled foure hundred yeeres after the time of Christ, and when it was begunne, yet for many hundreds of yeeres after it was neuer taken to be the iurisdiction of the Bishop of Rome that hee shoulde haue:

haue power himselfe or should giue power to others by indulgences and pardons to deliuer soules from thence, so that they being put to giue a reason howe it should bee that the Pope should haue such a power of pardoning and there should be no vse nor example thereof for a thousand yeeres after Christ, like shameles and vnblushing harlots and hypocrites they tell vs, that ^f in former ages of the church great penance & satisfaction was enioyned and willingly sustained, and then was the lesse pardoning and fewer indulgences, because in that voluntary vse & acceptation of punishment, and great zeale and fernor of spirit euery man fulfilled his penance and few asked pardon. Now in the fall of deuotion, and lothsomnes that men commonly haue to doe great penance, though the sinnes be far greater then euer before, yet our holy mother the Church knowing with the Apostle the cogitations of satan, how he would in this delicate time driue men euer to desperation, or to forsake Christ and his church and al hope of saluation, rather then they would enter into the course of canonical discipline enioyneth small penance and seldome useth extremity with offenders, but condescending to their weaknesse pardoneth exceeding often and much not onely all enioyned penance, but also all or great parts of what temporall punishment so euer due or deserved either in this world or in the next. Ah sweet mother church, wel fare thy hart that hast gotten such a rich ^c treasure of the superfluities of the sufferings of the Virgin Mary and all the Saints, such as Peter and Paul neuer knew, nor any old father or Bishop throughout the whole world euer dreamed of: thereby to releiue thy delicate & tender babes in this latter age & to keepe them both from purgatory in the world to come, and from doing too much penance in this world. No wonder if thy obedient children make much of so kinde and pitifull a mother, Sweete mother, did I say? nay filthy and vnnaturall strumpet which poisoneth her own children, and feedeth them with ashes in stead of bread: which maketh them to trust to her Pardons for deliuerance from Purgatory fire that for want of the ^f Rhem. Annot.

in 2. Cor. 2. 11.
Alphonf. de Castro adu. heres.
lib. 8. tit. Indulgentia.

^c Bellarm. de Indulgent.
lib. 1. cap. 2.

the true pardon they may bee cast into hell fire. Shamelesse harlot wouldest thou goe about, I will not lay after foure hundred yeeres as Hierome said, but after a thousand yeeres to teach men that which they neuer knew before? wouldest thou bring forth to the world that which Peter and Paul would not deliuer or teach? For a thousand yeeres the Christian world was without these doctrines, without thy Pardons and Iubilees, without thy puppets and mamnets, thy Agnus deis, thy hallowed graines, thy hallowed beades and such other excrementall stuffe, and doest thou now tell vs in the ende of the worlde that these things are helpfull to our soules, and farther vs to the remission and forgiuenesse of sinnes? It was thirteene hundred yeeres after the birch of Christ that the yeere of Iubilee was deuised by Boniface the eighth a man vspeakeably thirsting after gold howsoeuer it were gotten:^a who tooke vpon him to grant to euery one that would come to Rome that yeere and visite the churches of Peter and Paule hee should haue most full and perfect remission of all his sinnes: alwayes presupposed that no man must appear before the Lord. emptie. And to make way to that authoritie whereby he might doe this, and the Pope alwaies what he list it was another of the same name Boniface the third that obtained of Phocas the murtherer to be the head and vniuersall Bishop of the church, whence the Canonistes did first list him vp to be vicarius dei in terris, Gods lieutenant generall vpon the earth, and perswaded him that he was not a meere man:^d he was neither God nor man but a mixt betwixt both, whereupon he hath taken vpon him superiority ouer emperours and kings & chalengeeth to himselfe authority^f to depose them, and hath required them to sweare fidelitie and allegiance to him, and released othes of fidelity and allegiance to them, that it might be lawfull for their subiects to rise in armes and to rebell against them: things so impious, so new and strange and so wholly repugnant to the conceipt and practise of the auncient church as that we may woonder at the iron foreheades.

^a Hieronym. ad Pamach. & Ocean. de error Origen.

^x Platina in Bonifac. 8.

^y Extrau. de

pænit. & remiss. ca. Ansi.

quorum.

^z De consecrat. dist. 1. cap. Omnis Christianus.

^a Platin in Bonifac. 3.

^b Sext. Proem.

in glossa.

^c Decret. Greg. de transl. episco.

ca. Quanto.

^d Clement.

Proem. in gloss.

^e Ibid de ap-

pellat. cap. pa-

storalis.

^f Sext. de Sen-

tent. & re iudi-

cata. c. Ad Apo-stolice.

^g Dist 63. Tibi.

domino.

^h Sext. vt. supra.

ⁱ Eulla Pij 5.

cont. regin. Eli.

zabech.

heades of these men, who setting their eyes full vpon the sunne take it vpon their soule that it shineth not: and when their nouelties are such as cannot be denied yet will say, as M. Bishop doth, that the church of Rome now teacheth the same in all points of religion that shee did of old in her best and most flourishing estate. What is it but the schoolemens noueltie to affirme seuen sacraments? what is but nouelty to attribute so much to the merits of Moonkes and Fryars as that they can ^k dare participium bonorum operum suorum: make other men partakers of their good works? What is it but nouelty that Hofius telleth vs^l that if a man haue the interpretation of the church of Rome of any place of scripture he hath the very worde of God, though he doe not see how it standeth with the words? What is it but noueltie to make the Bishop of Rome the oracle of the church, that his definitiue sentence should be the ending of all controuersies of faith? or if it were so taken in the primitiue church what needed that trouble of generall councils to assemble the Bishops from all partes of the world, when all might briefly bee decided by the worde of his mouth? at least why did they not give reason of their assembling themselues in that sorte when matters might haue been ended by a shorter course? Nowe since by these and sundrie other such nouelties it plainly appeareth that there is so great difference of the church of Rome that nowe is from that that was of olde, it shall not bee materiall to looke to all those circumstances that M. Bishop speaketh of to examine when or how or by whom those differences first began, neither will we betray our owne saluation by forgoing the true faith of the auncient church of Rome because men haue beene sparing to lay open their owne shame by acknowledging their innouations in the newe. As for those corruptions for which they can pretend some shew of antiquitie they haue therein also plaied their parts, and haue increased a blister to a botche, and of a light itch haue made a foule leprosie, and turned errors into heresies, and customes of obseruations into meritorious

^k Math. Paris. in Henr. 3. de Cisterciensib.
^l Hofius de ex-
presso dei ver-
bo.

meritorious workes of religion, and haue in a manner extinguished al true conscience and comfortable vse of Christian faith. And thus much concerning M. Bishops first reason, wherein he tooke vpon him to shew the vnruth of the Protestants religion, and in the examination thereof is found to leaue truth to the religion of the Protestants and to take vnruth to his owne: the Protestants religion teaching nothing but what accordeth with the faith and religion that hath beene formerly embraced in the auncient church of Rome, though wholly exploded in the new.

14. W. BISHOP,

The second shall be grounded vpon the vngodlinesse of it, where I will let passe that high point of impietie, that they make God (who is goodnesse it selfe) the author of all wicked actions done in the world: And will besides say nothing of that their blasphemie against our Saviour Iesus Christ, that hee overcome with the paines of his passion vpon the Crosse, did doubt (if not despaire) of his owne saluation: being unwilling to touch any other points, then such as are afterwards discusssed in this booke.

R. ABBOT.

The second reason was not vsed by M. Bishop with any opinion to mooue thereby his most excellent Maiesty, because hee knew that his Maiestie being a professour of the Protestant religion, and well vnderstanding what hee professeth, is able to acquit the same of all vngodlinesse, and therefore cannot but take him for a liar and slanderer that chargeth impietie there where indeed there is no such thing. But he would write it notwithstanding to continue in his Catacatholicke ^a blinde obedient as they themselves iustly terme them, a detestation of religion, whilest ^a seely soules, they belecue these lewde caities, buzzing into their eares lies and tales of impieties and blasphemies,

^a Reply to the Iesuites Apologie.

R

which

which neuer any man imagined or dreamed of. Who if they knew the impieties and blasphemies that are truly charged vpon Poperie, they would spit in the faces of these harlots, and detest those abominations which now through their delusions and of ignorance they so deuoutly doe embrace: Is it not a horrible impietie that standeth written in their law. ^b Our Lord God the Pope? To beleene that our Lord God the Pope might not so decree as hee hath decreed, should be accounted heresie. Is it not impietie that they say, that if the Pope being carelesse of the saluation of his brethren, doe draw innumerable soules with him to hell by heapes: yet no mortall man may presume to reprove his faults, &c? Is it not impious which is so often repeated by their Canonists that ^d the Pope may dispense against the Apostle, or which Bodine himselve a Papist hath obserued as a rule of theirs, that he is safe enough with God, who by the Pope is freed from the lawes of God? Are they not to bee detested as impious speeches, which before haue bene mentioned whereby they seeke to disgrace the Scriptures of God? Is it not an impious paradoxe which M. Bishop hath set downe, that in the man newly baptized there is no more sinne then was in Adam in the state of innocencie, or that which other of them haue taught, that the entering into religious orders and putting on of a monkes cowl is of the same vertue and grace that Baptisme is? What doe you thinke M. Bishop? is it not impietie and blasphemie which was broached by ^h Thomas Aquinas, one, you say, of the principall pillars of the Romish church, and by your schoolemen his followers maintained, that if a dogge or a mouse doe eat the consecrated host, it is the very body of Christ which the dogge eateth: or if it be cast into the dirt, it is the very body of Christ that lieth in the dirt: or if a spider or anie poison be cast into the consecrated cup, that the blind of Christ, as Antoninus saith, is infected therewith: or if a man cast vpon the sacrament or vnde it before digestion into the draught that it is still the body and bloud of

^b Extraus. Io-
ann. 22. Cum
inter. in glossa.
^c Dist. 40. de Papa.

^d Dist. 34. Le-
Ebor. in glossa.
25. Sunt qui-dam in glossa.
&c.
^e Bod. in De republ. lib. 1. ca. 6.

^f Pag. 32.

^g Tho. Aquin.
4. sentent. dist. 4.
Hospinian. de
Orig. Monach.
lib. 6. cap. 18. ex Henr. Kune.
^h Pag. 18.
ⁱ Thom. Aquin.
p. 3. q. 80. art.
3. ad. 3.

^k Anton. summ.
part. 3. tit. 13.
cap. 6. p. 3. de defect. Missae.

Christ:

Christ: or ¹ if a wicked man doe eat the sacrament, the body of Christ is still in his belly as long as bread is before it be digested: or that he ^m should be commended as a man of ^m great zeale that would eat the sacrament being voided or taken out of the belly of a man or a mouse, or a dogge, as one Gederanus did when a leper with filthy phlegme had cast it vp: O execrable villaines who for the maintenance of their monster of Transubstantiation haue made themselues the authors of so prodigious and accursed fancies! Doe you know these things in your owne bookes, M. Bishop, and would you goe about to obiekt impiety of doctrine to vs? But yet tell vs further, I pray: will yee not giue vs leaue to hold it for an impiety which Harding and Bellarmine in fauor of the Popes reuenuē of harlotry doe tel vs, that publicke stewes are ^a a necessary euill, and that ^o the magistrate sinneth not in appoynting a place for them? May we not take it for an impious and vngodly doctrine which you teach, that ^p it is better and lesse sinne for a man that hath vowed single life to keepe a concubine or a whore, nay many whores then to marry a wife: Is it not a singular point of impiety and sacriledge which you affirme that ^q the crucifixe is to be worshipped with the same worship that is due to the holy Trinity? Is it not a damnable doctrine which is deliuered by your schoole-man Holcot: ^r that a man may merit by an erroneous and wrong faith albeit it fal out that thereby he worship the diuell? Was it not a notable impiety and blasphemie that was deliuered by your friend Tecelius the pardoner, that his pardons were of that vertue that ^s if a man had defiled the blessed Virgin and gotten her with child he might by the payment of mony be freed thereby: Are these flowers found to haue growen in the garden of the fathers? Are you they that in all points teach the same doctrine that the church of Rome did when shee was in her best estate? ^t Yee ser-

Thom Aquin.
re supra in corp.
Antoni. re
supra.

^a Harding. Con-
fut. of the Apolog.
^o Bellarm. de Amission. grat.
& stat peccat.
lib. 2. cap. 18.
^p Cester. Enchir.
cap. 15. prepo. 9.
Sleidan. Comm.
ib. 4. Campag.
^l Cardinal. orat Pigh. Cont. 15.
de calib. sacer.
^q Andrad. Or-thod. explicat.
lib. 9.
^r Rel. Hollot.
Citatur a Laurent. Humfred.
de vita & obitu
luelli. pagine.
120.
^s Sleiden. Commen. lib. 13
^t Mat. 23. 33.
^u Act 7. 51.

antiquitie, antiquitie, when ye haue made a monster of that faith that was professed by antiquitie. But goe on, fulfill the measure of your forefathers, that yee may receiue a full measure of reuenge at the handes of that God whose truth you haue wilfully blasphemed and railed at. Now the first poynt of vngodlynesse wherewith this Elymas chargeth our religion is, that we make God the author of all wicked actions that are done in the world. But it was woonder that hee staid there, and did not vary the wordes as did his fellow Wright that foulemouthed dogge, that the protestants make God the author of sinne, the onely cause of sinne, that man synneth not: that God is worse then the deuill. A filthy swine who wallowing in the mucke and dirt of Popish ignorance hath his eies so daubed vp therewith that he seeth not his owne way. But his head is crushed and he hath no more to say; yet M. Bishop to keepe their occupation going rubbeth heere againe vpon the same place. He telleth vs that we make God the author of all wicked actions that are done in the world. But where doe ye finde that M. Bishop? shew vs the place: set downe the words: doe not bring vs your collection but our owne assertion: for you are like spiders and toades which gather venime and poyson from sweete flowers and wholsome herbes. Vndoubtedly you will incurre the brand for charging vpon vs that that you cannot prooue. Our bookes deny that that you say: in our churches and schooles we determine the contrary. We say and you will say no lesse, that God is the authour of all actions in the world: for in him we liue and moue and haue our being, and without him we liue not, we moue not, we haue no being. Yet wee say that sinne is wholly and onely of man himselfe, neither can we challeng God for any part or parcell thereof. Distinguish the accident from the subiect: the sinne of the action from the action it selfe: God in the one shall be glorified, and man shall iustly be condemned for the other. If M. Bishop lend M. Wright a lame horse, and the horse halteth as hee goeth,

Articles or forcible reasons.

Act. 17. 29.

goeth,

goeth, would he not thinke much that M. Bishop should challenge him for making his horse to halt: Hee maketh the horse to goe, and guideth him to goe this way or that: but to goe halting and lame is the fault of the horse, and not of him. Euen so God by common prouidence moueth and stirreth all men, and by a more speciall hand ordereth their way and courte that they shall goe: but the iniquitie and sinne which they bewray in the meane time, euen as halting and lamenesse is of themselves and not of him. He vseth the wickednes of man, and disposeth it to such ends & purposes as he thinketh good, and sometimes in iust iudgement taketh occasion to prouoke it, and to draw out of man that that is in him, but he is not the author of it. And is this our deuise: are wee the first that haue taught thus: doe wee speake otherwise then the aun-cient church hath spoken, or then both they and wee are by the holy Scripture directed to speake: ^a God, saith Origen, hath not wrought mans wickednesse, but being procured ^a Origen. in. Numer. hom. or wrought by himselfe, God though hee bee able so to doe, yet 23. hindereth it not, but vseth the same together with them from whom it commeth for necessarie purposes. He maketh not men wicked, but being wicked, hee by the iust and unspeakeable course of his prouidence according to their owne disposition, ordereth and disposeth of them: because ^b hee knoweth how to ^b Cont. Celsum. use to good purpose the wickednesse of such as are fallen away lib. 6. from him. To the same purpose S. Austin also notable speaketh: ^c It is in the power of euill man to sinne, but is sinning ^c August. de Predest. sanct. by their wickednesse to doe this or that it is not in their power, cap. 16. but in the power of God who separateth the darkenesse, and ordereth the same, that euen in that which they doe against the will of God, yet not any other thing but what God will may be ^d Cont. Iulian. done. ^d He doth not make the wils of men euill, but vseth the Pelag. l. 5. ca. 3. same notwithstanding as he will: ^e inclining and mouing their ^e De 2. a. & lib. arbit. ca. 2. wils that he may doe by them what he will doe by them, and un- ^f Ibid. cap. 200. justly willet nothing. ^f Thus he used Iudas to betray Christe, and the Iewes to crucify Christ: they were wicked of them-

selues, but he vsed their wickednesse to those ends, thereby to worke good to them that afterward should beleue in him. And thus for vnthankfulnesse, and wilfull contempt of his goodnesse and glory, God in fearefull iudgement vseth the wickednesse of men against themselues to their owne greater confusion, giuing them ouer to runne headlong thereby to greater sinnes, that they may receiue the greater damnation, blinding their eyes and hardning their hearts, giuing them vp to their owne imaginations, to vile affections, to a reprobate sense, sending them lying spirites and strong delusion that they may beleue lies: causing in them peruerfnesse and forwardnesse of heart, not to hearken to the truth that is spoken to them: and all this not by working any new wickednesse in them but by prouoking and ministring occasions to that wickednesse that is in them of themselues: the occasions not being euill, nay tending of themselues to good, but they being like to the sorrie grounde that turneth sweete raine to hurtfull weeds: like the corrupt stomacke that of good food groweth more sicke: like the carion that by the comfortable sun-shine stinketh the more: as to Pharao the respect of the benefite of his common-wealth, an occasion to oppresse the people of God: to Ieroboam the vnfortunate death of the Prophet by whome hee was reprooued of his idolatry, an occasion to him of continuing therein: to Sennacherib the king of Assyria his successe against idoll Gods, an occasion to blaspheme the liuing God: to wicked men commonly the patience of God & their prosperous estate an occasion to make them worse and worse: To bee short there is a dreadfull iudgement and may not be denyed when God taketh course vt crimina criminibus vindicentur, et supplicia peccatorum non tormenta sint sed incrementa vitiorum: that sinnes bee reuenged with sinnes, and the punishments of euill doers be no torments to them but additions to their euill doings: all which notwithstanding wee so teach according to the scriptures and ac- knowledge

^e Iohn. 12. 40.

^b Psal. 81. 12

ⁱ Rom. 1. 26. 28

^k 1 Kings. 22

23.

^l 2. Theff. 2. 11.

^m Aug. cont.

Iulian. li. 5. c. 3

ⁿ Exod. 1. 9. 10

^o 1. King. 13

1. 24.

Ioseph. Antiqui.

Iudaici, l 8 c 3.

^p 2. King. 19

11. 12.

^q Prou. 1. 32.

Origen. de. prin-

cip. lib. 3. cap. 1.

^r Aug. cont. ad

uers. leg. de. pro phet. li. 1 ca. 24.

knowledgement of the church as that ^c God is iustified in ^d his sayings and found cleere when he is iudged, and the roote of sinne affirmed to grow from no other but onely from the heart of man. So that this first poynt of impietie where- with M. Bishop chargeth vs is a fruite of his malice, no fault of our doctrine, and the second is the like: that our Sauiour Christ ouercome with the paines of his passion vpon the crosse did doubt (if not despaire) of his owne saluation. A great lie is as easely told as a litle, and becaule it is your custome we must beare with you. We neither say that christ was ouercome with the paines of his passion, nor that hee did either despaire or doubt of his owne saluation: Wee be- leecue that the anguish and paines which christ suffered for vs were vnspeakeable, and the vttermoſt that the fraile nature of man was capable of: whileſt he gaue not onely his body for our bodies but his soule also for our soules, and ^e de- scended euen to the depth of death, and all the terrour of that tempest that raged against vs lighted vpon him: whileſt ^f himſelfe he did beare the wrath that was conceiued against vs for sinne, euen the bitterneſſe of that wrath which arose by the transgression of the law, that he might swallow it up & make it void towards vs: so that rightly he might vse the words of the Psalme, ^g Thine indignation lieth hard vppen me and thou haſt vexed me with all thy stormes: that is as Hierome expoundeth it: ^h Thou haſt brought vpon me that wrath & storme of thy fury and indignation which thou wouldſt haue poured out vpo the nations, because I haue taken vpon me their sinnes. The burden of which wrath lay so heauiue vpon him as that it pressed him euen to the gates of hell, & his state for present feeling was as if God had ⁱ abhorred his soule: yet so as that in the midst of all that anguish hee was sup- ported with an inuincible assurance of his fathers loue, and constantly expected the ^j loſing of the sorowes of death, know- ing it to bee impossible that he should be holden ther. by: and therefore betwixt both vttered that most bitter complaint vpon the crosse: ^k My God, my God why haſt thou forsaken

Psal. 51. 4.

^c Iren. adu. har. lib. 5.^d Hilar. in

Psal. 68.

^e Athanas. de interpret. Psal.

^f In Euang. de pass. & cruce

Domini.

^g Psal 88. sus-

vt vulg. 87. Ar-

nob. in eund.

^h Psal. applich.

the whole to

Christ.

ⁱ Hieron. in

Psal. 87.

^j Psal. 88;^k Act. 1. 24.

Mat. 27. 46.

ken me: according to faith saying, My God, my God: according to present feeling, why hast thou forsaken me? This doe we teach and no otherwise, no not Caluin vpon whom you are woont lewdely to father this blasphemie of your owne, who plainly saith: Although for a moment of time the diuine power of the spirit did hide it self to giue place to the weaknesse of the flesh, yet must wee know that the temptation by feeling of sorrow and feare was such as was not against faith: when he felt himselfe as it were forsaken of God, yet he did nothing at all swerue from the trust of his goodnesse. Whereby wee may see what kinde of men you are with whome we deale, euen like the caytifes and miscreants of the basest sort of people which make it no care what they speake or how vntreuly they report: but onely to vtter the bitterness of their stomach and for the present to serue their owne turne. If the feare of God were in your hearts, you could not lye in this wilfull manner as you doe against the Lord and his truth: you would remember that that is sayd: the mouth that telleth lies, slaieth the soule. And yet though Caluin had vsed any such hard or inconuenient speech, or if either he or any other particular writer of ours doe runne into any priuate or singlar opinions what is that to vs: why should this be imputed to the church of England or the doctrine established by publicke authoritietherein, when as it teacheth or mainteineth no such thing: Or if you will thus vpbraide vs with any mans priuate fancies you must giue vs leaue by the same rule to charge this for a blasphemie vppon you, deliuered by Ferus your owne preacher at Mentz, who plainly affirmeth that Christ did take to himselfe not onely our punishment, but also desperationem nostram, our despaire: that hee tooke vpon him the punishments of sinne, feare, trembling, horreur of death and hell, despaire, death and hell it selfe, that by feare he might overcome feare, by horreur he might overcome horreur, by despaire he might overcome despaire. &c. Is this found in your owne bookes and deliuered by a preacher

^e Caluin. Insi-
t. t. lib 2. ca. 16.
num. 12

^f Wised. 1. 11.

^g Ferus in Mat.
cap. 27.

of your owne and doe you make vs the authors of it? Yet we doubt not to acquit Ferus of blasphemy because wee thinke he ment no otherwife then Calvin did ^b *Hee wraſtled with * deſpaire but yet was not overcome; in this greivous torment his faith was untouched, that though deploring himſelfe to be forſaken, yet he was confident that the helpe of God was neere at hand.* And thus much of the two firſt impieties which M Biſhop forſooth would let paſſe, when maliciously wickedly hee nameth them, and had nothing with any ſhew of truth to ſpeake further of them; now let vs ſee what he hath further to ſay as touching points afterward diſcuſſed in his booke.

^b Calvin. *Harm in Mat. 27. 46. * Not as if Chriſt had had tions of deſpaire, but that the godhead hiding it ſelfe for the time, and leaving him to that ſort of ſtate. there might ſeeme to be matter and occaſion thereof.*

I. S. W. BISHOP,

The triumphant Citizens of heauen (who enjoy the preſence of God, and happieſt life that can bee imagined) are by Proteſtants diſdainfully termed, Dead men & eſteemed neither to haue credit with God to obtaine any thing, nor any care or compaſſion on men, among whom they once lived & conuerſed ſo kindly.

R. ABBOT.

We ſpeake not diſdainefully of the Saints in heauen, but we diſdaine that the Saints in heauen are heere vpon earth not by their default, but by the fault of idolatrous and ſuperſtitious will worſhippers, conſorted and matched with the God of heauen, And if in this reſpect wee call them dead man, to abaſe them in compariſon of the liuing God, that all worſhip and ſeruiſe of religion may be yeelded onely to him, we doe them no wrong, nor any other thing then what the example of the auncient church hath warranted vs to doe. The auncient Father Epiphanius to condemne the Collyridian heretickeſ for worſhipping the virgine Marie, though in farre leſſe degree of worſhip then ſince the Papiſts haue aſcribed vnto her, citeth againſt them as out of the Apoſtle, diſcribing the apoſtaſie that ſhould

^a I. Tim. 4. 1.

^b Epiphani. her. 78. Antidicom. ^c Heres. 79. Collyridian. should be in the last time these words: ^b Ἐσονται γὰρ νεκροῖς λατρεύοντες, they shall be worshippers of dead men And where as they made images of her to worship thē, for reproofe of that absurd deuotion he saith: ^c They are dead that are worshipped: and they bring in their images to be worshipped which neuer were alive, their mind going a whooring from the one & only God, enen as a common harlot giuen to great absurditie of manifold fornication, and that hath forgone the temperancie of the lawfull marriage of one man. Now if Epiphanius might lawfully speake thus concerning the virgine Marie with out disparagement or disdain, we presume that without offence wee may speake in like sort of the residue of the Saints. Neither do we speake any otherwise then S. Austin did: ^d Non sit nobis religio cultus hominum mortuorum. Let it not be with vs a point of religion to worship dead men: for if they haue liued godly, they are not thought to seeke such honours, but would haue vs to worship him, by whose light they reioyce that we are followers of their good works. ^e We build not temples saith he, to the martyrs as if they were Gods, but make remembrances for them as dead men whose spirits liue with God. And againe as touching Christian martyrs he answereth Maximus the Pagan: ^f know thou that no Catholicke Christian doth worship any dead man, Lactantius arguing by three reasons against the idolatrie of the gentiles vseth this for one, ^g because the images which they worshiped were the images of dead men, and vnmeete it is that man being the image of God should worship the image of a man. Which if thus barely proposed it serued against the gentiles without respect to the qualitic of the men, I would haue M. Bishop to giue vs some good reason why we may not vnder the same termes without any default dispute against the idolatry of the Papistes, Wee yeeld to the Saints whatfoeuer is due vnto them; wee acknowledge them happie and blessed, and doe strue to come ^h to those spirits of iust. and perfect men: ⁱ which are clothed in white and ^k follow the Lambe whither soeuer he goeth; but yet we make no Gods of them neither may wee yeeld.

^d August. de vera relig. c. 55.

^e De ciuit. Dei. lib. 2.2. cap. 10.

^f August. ep. 44.

^g Lactant. in-stit. l. 2. ca. 18.

^h Heb. 12. 23.

ⁱ Apoc. 7. 9.

^k 14. 4.

yeeld to worship them. As for their credit with God, wee doubt not but it is such as it concerneth them to haue: but our credit with thē, as before I noted out of Origen, must be¹ to worship only that God whom only they haue worshipped: to acknowledge that only mediator whom only they haue acknowledged. Neyther doe wee need their credit to obtaine any thing of God, because Christ hath promised vs: ¹ Whatsoeuer yee aske in my name, that will I doe, that the father may be glorified, not in the Saints, but in his onely begotten Sonne. As for care and compassion of vs here vpon the earth wee doe not beleue that their blisfull peace is interrupted therewith. They may wish their owne consummation and the consociation of the whole church, but as for particularities we beleue as the scripture hath taught: ² Abraham knoweth vs not, and Israell is not acquainted with vs. In a word, all this matter of credit with God and care and compassion of men vpon earth they are idle speculations of your owne foolish deuotions, and haue no shew at all of ground from the word of God.

¹ Origin. conz. Celsam. lib. 8.

² Iohn 14. 13.

³ Esa. 63. 16.

16. W. BISHOP.

And as for the poore soules departed, who in Purgatorie fire pay deare for their former delights and pleasures: they deprive them of all humane succour, by teaching the world to beleene that there is no such matter.

R. ABBOT.

Alas poore soules that are so strongly holden in with paper walles, and so greiuously tormented with painted fire What a cruell Landlord haue they, that being but tenants at will, and nowe not in case to pay, yet cannot without a fine haue libertie to leaue their holde? What shall wee thinke of the Pope? is he not a mercilesse man, if hee bee a man, that hauing power ouer Purgatorie at his

* *Balens in Clem 6. ex
bulla eiusdem.*

owne pleasure, and hauing authority to commaund the Angels to fetch the soules out from thence, and to guide them into paradise, as * Clement the sixt did, will notwithstanding suffer them, poore soules, to lie frying and broiling there, and all because their friends will not be at cost to purchase their release and ease? Is he not a hard hearted Physician that keepeth his patients thus continually in greiuous torture, being able in a moment to assuage their paine, and to send the soules singing vp to heauen? Keepe you, M. Bishop, vnder his handes still, if you will: but as for vs we are warie men, and had rather saue our monie for something then giue it away for nothing. Indeede you say true, that we teach men, to beleue that there is no such matter: and good reason, because God himselfe hath taught vs no such, and we beleue onely what he teacheth. Wee beleue no other purgation from sinne, but onely by the ^b bloud of Iesus Christ through the ^c sanctification of the holy Ghost: and howsoeuer you glosse the matter, the affirming of your Purgatorie, cannot be without the empeachment of ^d the lambe of God that taketh away the sinne of the world. It argueth a want & weaknes in his painment, if after it wee be still left, to pay deere for our selues. You deriue your Purgatorie from the auncient prayer for the dead, but amongst sundry reasons which they gaue of their praier for the dead, Purgatory was none, as hath beene before shewed. After foure hundred yeeres, S. Austin knewe no other vse of praier for the dead, but ^e eyther to bee freed from being cast into hell, or to haue mitigation of the paines of hell. ^f Chrysostome made the same end thereof to deliuer men after they were dead from euerlasting death. And hereto agree those tales of Damascen, that ^g Falcomilla by the prayers of Tecla was deliuered out of hell: & Traian by the prayers of Gregorie. Which seeing you altogether ^h denie to be the effect of prayer for the dead, you cannot but acknowledge this for an error in the Fathers, and therefore confesse, that in this behalfe there is nothing but

^a Hib. 1. 3.
^b John 1. 7.
^c Tit. 3. 5.
^d John 1. 29.

^e *Aug. de 8
quest. Dulcit.
quest. 2. & de
ciu. Dei li. 21.
cap. 27.*
^f Chrysost. in Act. hom. 21.
^g *Renat. Law
rent. annot. in
Ter. ull. de bap.
ex Damascen.
ser. de Mortuis
oratione adiu-
uandis.*
^h *Bell. de purgat
lib. 2. c. 18.*

but vncertaintie to be found in them. And if praier for the dead must argue Purgatorie, then you must needs confesse that all the Saints, all that are dead in the faith, are in Purgatorie, because you your selues doe thus pray for all :

¹ O God of the faithfull, the maker and redeemer of all men, ^{B. eniar. se} give to the soules of all the faithfull deceased, remission of ^{cund. vsum Sa} all their sinnes, that by godly pray. rs they may obtaine the ^{rum in Vigil} pardon which they alwayes desired through Christ our Lord. ^{mortuor.}

And againe : ¹ Lord wee beseech thee let the prayer of thy ¹ humble seruantes bee helpfull to the soules of all the faith- ^{ibid.} full deceased, that thou maist both release them from all their sinnes, and make them partakers of thy redemption, wholineft. &c.

Yea and you pray for Leo whom you haue made a Confessor that by your ¹ office of attonement ¹ vpon his day a happy reward may be with him. Now if you ^{In festo sanct.} thus pray for the dead of whom notwithstanding you pre- ^{Leonis.} sume that they are free from purgatorie, how can you denie but that the church in former time without any opinion of purgatorie might notwithstanding vse their praier for the dead ? but to bee short, because I haue handled this point before, the fathers haue vsed one speciall argument to prooue the resurrection from the dead, which if it stand good then your purgatory cannot stande. For if in course of iustice it be ^m necessary that the body which hath beene partaker with the soule of all that hath beene done either ^{m Tertul. de re:} in righteousnesse or sinne, be also ^{surrect. carnis.} partaker of the reward ^{Athanas. de re:} of eyther, and heereby there be enforced necessarily a re- ^{sur. mortuor.} surrection of the body to bee ioyned with the soule to be ^{Lactant. institut.} partaker thereof, we must from the same principle of iu- ^{lib. 7. ca. 21.} stice conclude that if there were a purgatorie, it should be a well for the body as the soule, because the bodie hath bene partaker of those pleasures and delights for which you tell vs that the soules pay deare in purgatorie fire, But you denie any purgatorie for the bodie, and therefore we conclude that you cannot truely affirme any such purga- ^{o Epiphaz. in} tory for the soule, ^{Anchoraso.} ¹ Thus shall the iudgement of God bee iust.

saith Epiphanius, whilest both participate either punishment for sinne, or reward for vertue. Which iust iudgement you greatly impeach by laying vpon the soule only the punishment of those sinnes which haue beene committed by the whole man. You cannot auoide but either you must forgoe your Purgatorie, or else say that the Fathers erred in disputing this point.

17. W. BISHOP.

Concerning vs Christians yet liuing on earth, there is no lesse impietie in their opinions; For they teach that the best Christian is no better in effect, then a whited Sepulchre, being inwardly full of all wickednesse and mischeife: and onely by an outward imputation of Christs righteousness vnto them, are accepted of God for iust. To thinke that there is inkerent in the soule of Man, any such grace of God, as doth cleanse it from sinne, and make the man iust in his sight: is with them, to raze the foundation of Religion, and to make Christ, a Pseudochrist: wherein, I know not whether they bee more enuious against the good of Man, then they are iniurious, either to the inestimable value of Christs blood, as though it could not deserue any better estate for his favorites: or vnto the vertue and efficacie of the holy Ghost: as not beeing able (by likelihood) to purge mens soules from sinne, and endue them with such heauenly qualities. I omit the disgrace thereby done to the Blessed God-head it selfe, making the Holie of Holies, rather willing to couer and cloake our iniquitie, then to cure it: And contrarie to his infinite goodnesse, to loue them whom he seeth defiled with all maner of abominations.

R. ABBOT.

Whatsoeuer wee teach of others, M. Bishop, wee vndoubtedly knowe it of you that you are no other but a whited sepulchre, shewing a sweete face like a Mermaide in

in the entrance of your epistle, and bewraying a false and treacherous heart in the whole processe thereof, euen like a Harpyie beraying all that you lay hand on, and maliciously and wilfully deprauing thote things which are no otherwise but truely and rightly spoken. ^a Disperdet deus labia magniloqua & linguans dolosam. We say indeed that it is onely the obedience and righteousnes of Christ performed for vs whereby wee are to stand as righteous and iust before the iudgement. seate of God. Which is a truth so pregnant and cleere as that ^b Pighius though a heauy enemy to the Protestants religion yet could not but acknowledge it, and hath disputed it by such reasons and proofes borrowed from vs as the whole rabble of your seculars and Iesuits are not able to remooue. But we doe not by this iustification leaue aman no better then a whited sepulcher inwardly full of all wickednes & mischeife, because we affirme by the wordes of Christ that ^c repentance is the first steppe to the obtaining of it, and the faith whereby wee doe obtaine it is such as ^d whereby God doth purifie the heartes, and whereby ^e we receiue the promise of the spirit, by which wee ^f are borne againe ^g through the word of God to the ^h life of God ⁱ hauing ^k Christ lining and ^l dwelling in our hearts, who being ^m in vs, the ⁿ body is dead as touching sinne, but the ^o spirit is life for righteousnesse sake, because there being ^p a new heart and ^q a new spirit, there mu't needes be new affections, new desires, new delights, ^r a new man created according to God in ^s righteousnesse and holinesse of truth, ^t ioying in the law of God, and ^u approving that that is acceptable to the Lord, and ^v endeuouring to haue alwaies a cleere cōscience both towards god and towards men. Thus doe wee teach the people of God by the word of God: thus and no otherwise doe we describe the condition and qualitie of the iustified man This effect wee affirme to be infallibly wrought in euery man that is iustified, and where it is not there is no iustification: but yet wee say that this worke is perfect in no man so long as wee liue in this state of mortalitie and corruption.

^a Psal. 12. 3.

^b Pigh. de fide & iustificat. controu. 2.

^c Luc. 24. 47.

^d Act. 15. 9.

^e Gal. 3. 2.

^f John 3. 5.

^g 1. Pet. 1. 23

^h Ephe. 4. 18.

ⁱ Gal. 2. 20.

^k Ephe 3. 17.

^l Rom. 8. 10.

^m Ezech. 36. 26

ⁿ Ephe. 4. 24

^o Rem. 7. 22.

^p Ephe. 5. 10.

^q Act. 24. 16.

For albeit the iustified man delight in the law of god as touching the inner man, yet he hath still in ^r his members the law of sinne, ^s hanging fast on, and ^t lusting and rebelling against the law of the spirit of life, so that he hath within him ^u an army of vicious desires as Austin saith of Ambrose, continually to fight against: which are as the ^x Jebusite, who will we, will we, dwelleth within our borders, yet may be subdued though he cannot be driven out: as a raging ^y beast of stinking breath, yet tied and chained up in the uttermost passages of the soule: as a corrupt ^z roote still sprouting out weedes, but yet so nipped & checked that they cannot haue their growth. Now albeit by reason of this remainder of sinne he be greatly let and hindered ^a that hee cannot doe the thing that hee would, nor can walke so expeditely and vprightly in the way of righteousnesse as is required, yet the thing that preuaileth in him is ^b voluntas iustitie, a will and desire of righteousnesse, he ^c hungreth and thirsteth after it, the drift and purpose of his life tendeth wholly vnto it: it is greuance to him that he faileth to performe it, and maketh him to cry out, ^d Wretched man that I am who shall deliuer me from this bodie of death? And therefore although he sinne yet he sinneth not ^e maliciously, purposely, with desire and delight in sinne, but of ignorance and infirmity, ^f by occasion and by the creeping and stealing of sinne vpon him. Now we would gladly know of M. Bishop whether it bee all one to haue sinne in vs ^g suppressed, and kept short, though not quite dead, and to be inwardly full of all wickednesse and mischeife: whether to resist sinne and fight against it bee all one as to gieve it way, and willingly to harbour it. And it is to be obserued also that it is the very same which M. Bishop and we both doe hold to remaine in the regenerate man. We say it is sinne, and he saith it is not sinne, but it is one and the same thing, the concupiscence or lust of the flesh. How then doth he say that we in affirming the remaining hereof doe make as if the regenerate man were inwardly full of all wickednesse and mischeife, when hee himselfe confesseth the inward remaining

^r Rom. 7. 23.^s Heb. 12. 1.^t Gal 5. 17.^u August. cont.
Iulian lib. 2.^x Bernard. in Cant. serm. 58.^y Cyprian. de rat. circumcij.
Epiph. har. 64^a Gal. 5. 17.^b Hilar. in

Psal. 51.

^c Mat. 5. 6^d Rom. 7. 24.^e Origen. in

Psal. 36

^f Ambros. in

Ephes. 6.

Orig. in Num.

hom 20.

^g Epiph. & Bernard. vt supra.

maining of the same. A man cannot be said to be full of all wickednesse and mischief for hauing or being assaulted with the lusts thereof, but for applying and giuing his will and content vnto them. Cyprian describing the state of our life here, saith ^b We haue to fight with conetousnesse, with vnchastity, with wrathfulnesse, with ambition, with carnall vices, with the entisements of the world &c. Hereof S. Austin saith: ⁱ God forbid that wee should thinke holy Cyprian to haue bene conctous because he fought with conetousnesse, or vnchast because he fought with vnchastitie, or wrathfull because he fought against wrath, or ambitious because he had cōflict with ambition, or carnall because he had cōbate with carnall vices, or a louer of this world because he had fight with the entisements thereof. Nay therefore was he none of all these, because he strōgly resisted these evil motions comming partly from originall condition, partly from use of conuersation, not yeelding to be that which they pressed him to be. Will M. Bishop now gūe S. Austin the lye and tell him that by the hauing of these motions and lustes of sinne Cyprian was inwardlie full of all wickednes and mischief? If he will not, why doth he so charge vs who say no more of the iustified man then Austin here speaketh concerning Cyprian? But indeed it is his malice and not his witt that leadeth him to these calumnious and leude collections. As for the comparison of ^k a whited sepulcher, it is vsed by our Sauour Christ against them who did iustifie themselues before men, ^l and made great semblance of holinesse outwardly, when there was in their hearts no syncerity or truth answerable thereunto. But we doe not thus affirme the condition of a true Christian man, but do make the inward man answerable to the outward, so that there is not only a shew of righteousnesse in the face to men, but also a truth thereof ¹ in the conscience to God, euen as it is said of Zacharie and Elizabeth: ¹ Both were iust before God, walking in all the commaundements and ordinances of the Lord without reproofe to import as Austin saith ^m their commendable conuersation

^b Cyprian, de Mortalit.

ⁱ August. cont. Iulian lib. 2.

^l Mat. 23. 27.

¹ Luke. 1. 6.
^m August. de grat. Christi. cont. Pelag. & Celest. lib. 1.

cap. 48.

T

amongst

amongst men, which no man could iustly accuse or blame. Which therefore they said to haue had before God because they did not by dissimulation deceiue men therein, but what they appeared to men, the same they were knowne to be to the eyes of God. Now although there be a truth & vnfeigned simplicity in this behalfe, yet if the matter be waighed in rigour and extremity, who can free himselfe from being touched with some blemish of his corruption? ^o who can say, My hart is cleane? of whom doth it not take hold which is said: ^o All men are liers? ^p Which of vs, saith S. Hierome, doth not wash the out sides of the cup and of the platter, and hath the inner side not defiled with uncleannesse? who can auoide the likenesse of sepulchers whitened without that our Lord Iesus may not say vnto vs: Ye seeme outwardly righteous to men, but within ye are full of hypocrisie and iniquitie. Albeit we may be free from other faults, yet to haue no blot of hypocrisie is a thing found in few or none at all. Thus by the iudgement of S. Hierome M. Bishop cannot acquit himselfe from being a whitened sepulcher full of hypocrisie and iniquity, that hereafter he may not woonder at vs for teaching that there remaineth in the regenerate man a spot of infection and corruption, which as S. Austin saith, ^o only for that it is in vs, should hold vs in death and bring vs to enerlasting death: but that the guilt thereof by forgiveness of sinnes in baptisme is pardoned vnto vs.

By that that hath beene saide the answer is plaine to all the rest of M. Bishops tale. For we do not denie but that there is inherent in the soule of euerie true Christian such a grace of God as serueth to cleanse it from sinne, and to make the same iust in his sight, ^o without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. This God now beginneth by the ^o first fruites of the spirit, and in death he will accomplish by the full measure thereof. But to say that now it is so, is a Pelagian fancy, contrarie to experience, contrary to conscience, contrarie to our owne confessions to God, and contrarie to the word of God. Then shall the soule bee without spot or

^o Pro. 20. 9.

^o Rem. 3. 4.

^p Hieron. adu.

Pelag. lib. 2.

^o Aug. cont. Iulian.

Pelag. li. 6. c. 5.

^o Eph. 5. 27.

^o Rem. 8. 2.

or wrinkle, that is, iust in Gods sight, ^c when it shalbe glorious, as S. Austin speaketh of the church. The time of glory is not now, but ^a when Christ which is our life shall appear, then shall we also appeare with him in glory, and then shall the soule, euen the whole man be fully iust in the sight of God. In the meane time he is in hand with the cure and healing of vs to make vs grow to that spotlesse & unstained glorie. So that the iustified man is yet as Austin saith, ^x mandus et mundandus: cleane in part, and yet in part to be made cleane: not so cleane whilest he liueth here, but that hee must still harken to the Apostle: ^y Clenſe your selues from all defilement of the flesh and of the spirite: not so cleane but that of ^z common and originall uncleannesse or maliciousnesse, there is that yet sticking, for which Christ may say to vs as he did to his Apostle, If yee being euill, doe know to giue good gifts to your children. &c. And true it is indeede, that to affirme man now to be in himselfe iust and cleane in the sight of God, is to iustle Christ out of his place, and to take away from him that title of honour which the scripture hath giuen him to be called: ^b The Lord our righteousnesse. It is to defeat the worke of God: ^c by whome he is made vnto vs righteousnesse, not by working in vs inherent iustice, but ^d by the forgiuenesse of our sinnes. We beleue that Christ is vnto vs Iesus, a Saviour, by sauing vs immediatlie himselfe, not by giuing vs power to saue our selues or to be our owne sauours. And therefore the righteousnesse whereby we are saued is not the righteousnesse which wee by him doe for our selues, but that which he in his owne person hath wrought for vs: not but that we also by him doe worke righteousnesse according to the grace that is giuen to vs, but this righteousnesse is through our corruption and frailty too weake & base to stand before God for vs to be saued thereby. Neither are we herein enuious to the good of man, or iniurious to the inestimable value of Christs blood, because we acknowledge that the vertue of his merit and blood shedding: ^e God hath blessed vs with

^a August. de

Perfect. instit

Rat. 17.

^b Col. 3 4^x August. in

Ioan. tract. 80.

^y 2. Cor. 7. 1^z Hilar. apud

August. cont.

Iulian. Pelag.

lib. 2.

^a Mat. 7. 11^b Ierem. 33. 16.^c 1. Cor. 1. 30^d Bernard. in all manner spirituall blessings in heavenly things, and^e hath quickened us together with him, and raised us up together & made us sit together in heauenly places: yet as S. Aultin saith

Cant. ser. 22

^e Eph. 1. 3

^f Cap. 2 § 6.

^g Aug de bapt cont. Donat. lib. 5. cap. 4.

^h Cont Faust. Manich lib. 11. cap. 8.

ⁱ Gal 5. 5.

^k Mat. 5. 6

^l 2. Pet. 3. 13.

^g Nondum in re sed in spe: not yet by actuall being but by hope: ^h because in certaine and assured hope we now haue & hold that which indeed is yet to come. And thus weⁱ by the spirit waite for the hope of righteousnesse through faith: we^k hunger and thirst after righteousnesse looking to be satisfied because^l according to his promise we looke for a new heauen & a new earth wherein righteousnesse dwelleth. Christ therefore hath purchased for his fauorites a most high and happie state, but M. Bishop is too hasty if he will needes challenge that to present possession which God hath deferred to future expectation, whereof wee haue but the beginniges now for pledge and assurance of the whole hereafter fullie to bee giuen vnto vs. And thus we detract nothing from the vertue and efficacie of the holy ghost: for wee confesse that he is able to purge mens soules from sinne and to endue them with heauenly qualities: nay he is not onely able to doe it, but we affirme that he already doth it in part and will doe fully and perfectly hereafter, as before hath bene declared. But if we only respect the time present, where is that freedome from sinne and that excellencie of heauenly qualities that M. Bishop speaketh of? Is there such difference betwixt them and vs that we should neede to woonder at them for their heauenly qualities? Are there such heauenly qualities in their Popes and Cardinals who are the benchers for this pleading of the perfection of inherent iustice? In these late mortall warres betwixt the Iesuites and the Seculars I wonder on which side those heauenly qualities were found. Surely we know that the power of the holy ghost is able to worke in them heauenly qualities, but in truth we see none: and for you M. Bishop if your heauenly qualities be no better then according to the qualitie of your booke, I am sure they are starke naught. And till we see better qualities in you then wee doe

doe, we must take this matter of heauenly qualities to be but a bable for fooles to play with: an idle speculation whereto nothing at all answereth in effect. Last of all we doe no disgrace to the blessed Godhead, because wee teach no otherwise then hee hath directed vs, not that hee cloaketh our iniquitie onely and doth not cure it, but that hee so cloaketh it, for the time as that hee cureth it for euer. He cloaketh and couereth our iniquitie with the righteousness of Christ, ^m which is not a short cloake that cannot ^m Bernard. in Cartic. ser. 61. couer two, saith S. Bernard, but being a large and euertlasting righteousness, it will largely couer both thee and me. And in me it shal couer a multitude of sinnes, but in thee, O Lord what but the treasures of pietie, the riches of goodnesse. Thus S. Bernard acknowledgeth in himselfe that which M. Bishop scorneth, the cloaking of his sinnes with the righteousness of Christ. Now I hope he will not denie but that hee taketh S. Bernard to haue beene a man beloued of God, and will he say that because God did cloake or couer his sinnes that therefore he loued a man he saw defiled with al manner of abominations? But this is but the widenesse of M. Bishops mouth that cannot keepe it selfe within any due phras & compasse of speech. Let him take his answer as before by occasion of the like wordes. But the end of this couering and not imputing of sinnes is that they may not stand as a barre betwixt God and vs, but that the grace of God may haue access vnto vs, for the working of that cure which M. Bishop speaketh of. Concerning which, I answer him as S. Austin answered the Pelagians obiecing as he doth, that God is able to cure all, ⁿ Indeede God is dooing ⁿ August. de Natura & grat. cap. 27 to cure all, but he doth it at his owne descretion, & doth not receiue at the patients hand an order for his cure. He is now in hand to heale our infirmities and sicknesses, but he wil not ^o perfect the cure ^o till this mortall doe put on immortal tie, ^o and this corruptible do put on incorruption, and death be swallowed up into victorie, that with triumph wee may say, O death where is thy sting: O hell where is thy victorie: Thanks be unto God which hath giuen vs the victorie through Christ Iesus our Lord.

18. W. BISHOP

Vnto those paradoxes, impious against God, and slanderous to man, if it please your Maiestie to adde, the prophane carnallitie of some points of the Protestants Doctrine: you will (doubtlesse) in short time loath it. As for example: That it is as good and godly, by eating, to feed the body, as to chastice it by fasting. That is as holy, to fulfill the fleshly desires of it by Mariage, as by Continencie, to mortifi: them: yea that it is flat against the word of God to vowe virginity: And also contrary to his blessed will to bestow our goods on the poore, & to giue our selues wholly to praier and fasting. Al which this Ad-uocate of the English Congregation teacheth expressly.

Pag. 132.
162. 166.

Is this the purity of the Gospell: Or is it not rather the high way to Epicurisme, and to all worldly vanitie, and iniquitie.

R ABBOT.

You deale with vs, M. Bishop, euen as your forefathers the Montanists did with the auncient church of Rome, as if there were no meane betwixt superstitious fasting and continuall feasting: betwixt virginitie and carnalitie. Tertullian taking part with Montanus, and writing in behalfe of his heresie against the church of Rome, directeth it against them in this stile, Contra Pysichos: Against the carnalities. He calleth their doctrine, Fidem animaleam, a carnall doctrine of faith: multinorantia & multinubentia pronam: giuen to much feasting and often marrying. In his wordes against the Clergie of Rome then wee may heare a Papist speaking against a Protestant nowe: Thy belly is thy God, thy lunge his temple, the altar thy paunch, the cooke the priest, the fatty fume of thy meate the holy Ghost: thy sawces thy spirituall gifts, thy belching thy prophetic: thy loue boileth
in

• Tertul. de. Ieiunio aduersus Pysichos.
• Ibid.

• Ibid. sub Inem

in thy kettle, thy faith warmeth thy kitchen, thy hope lieth in thy mease. Who is holiest amongst you but hee that feasteth most, and of delicate fare is prouided best, &c. An apple is not so like an apple, or an egge so like an egge, as M. Bishop and his fellowes are to Tertullian and the Montanistes. As for our doctrine it importeth no prophane carnalitie. We teach men both in meates and in mariage to vse temperancie and sobrietie. We warne men ^d to take ^d Luk. 21. 34. heede that their heartes bee not oppressed with surfeiting and drunkenesse, least the day of christ come vpon them vnawares that ^e in eating with their hearts desire, they doe not so fill ^e Deut. 12. 20. the belly as ^f to forget God: that they ^g so eate and drinke, as ^f Cap. 6. 12. that they doe all to the glory of God. Wee say as Tertullian ^g 8. 10. elsewhere truely sayeth: ^h Sapientiam opimitas impedit, exilitas expedit: fatnesse and fulnesse is a hindrance to wise dome ^h 1. Cor. 10. 31. sparcesse is a furtherance: and as Hierome saith out of the ^h Tertul. de Anima, cap. 10. Greeke prouerb: ⁱ Pinguis venter non gignit mentem tenuem, full feeding neuer breedeth quicke vnderstanding: but as Am- ⁱ Hieron. epist ad Nepotian. brose saith, ^k spare diet helpeth to lift up the minde on high. ^k Ambros. pre- cat. secunda. We teach married men as the Apostle doth: ^l Every man ^l 1. Thess. 4. 4. to possesse his vessel in holinesse and honour, and not in the lust of concupiscence as doe the gentiles that know not God. Wee say as Ambrose saith that ^m intemperancy in mariage is a kind of adultery, and with Origen and Hierome, that ⁿ doating ^m Ambros. apud August. cont. loue is dishonest in a man euen towards his owne wife. But yet ⁿ Iulian Pelag. lib. 2. we teach not as M. Bishop would haue vs to teach. And ⁿ Origen in Psal. 38. why so? Because as did the auncient church, so doe wee ⁿ Hieron. adu. Iouinian lib 2: ° reproome those masters who cruelly and without mercy with- ^o Origen in Mat. tract. 24. out waighting mens strength doe inioyne th. m things greater then their strength: as who forbad to marrie, and force them from that that is expedient ad immoderatam munditiam, to a cleannesse or holinesse beyond measure or more then needeth. Who also teach men to abstaine from meates and other such things to which the fleshfull should not be forced: and they by the worde of their exposition doe binde heauy burdens without the will of Christ, & doe lay them vpon mens shoulders by their words, bowing them downe, and making them to fall under the burden of their heauy iniunctions because they are not able to beare the same. This is the cause why M. Bishop is offended at vs because wee condemne the proceedinges of the church of Rome in prescribing rules of counterfeit holynesse which God hath not taught and laying heauier burdens vpon men thereby then they are able to beare, and which become vnto them an occasion of sinne. Wherin to contrary vs hee saith that wee teach that it is as good and godly by eating to feed the body as to chastize it by fasting. In deed wee say that to eate and to fast in their due vse are to God equall and alike, when ^p he that eateth, eateth to the Lord, and he that eateth not, eateth not vnto the Lord, neither doe wee doubt but that the Apostles and holy seruants of God haue beene as good and godly in their eating as they haue beene in their fasting. For it is not eating or not eating that ^a commendeth vs to God for it selfe, but in their godly end and vse they are approoued, and as he offendeth that eateth when he should fast, so he offendeth also that fasteth when it is fitte to eate. There is ^r a shew of wisedome in not sparing the body, and not hauing it in honour to satisfie the flesh, as if the very emptinesse of the belly were a sacrifice to God. Which whilest some haue fondly admired they haue brought themselues to that weaknes that they haue not beene able to perfourme the duty of the places whereunto the Lord hath called them to serue him. In this case moderate feeding of the body is better and more godly then affected fasting, because being a seruant it must be kept in case to serue that a man by it maybe in case to serue the Lord. Therefore, S. Austin giueth a rule of fasting ^r as health will permit and ^s as may be without the hurting of the body. Againe there is a time when fasting is more godly then feeding, ^u when the bridegroome is taken from vs: ^v when the Lorde of hostes calleth to mourning and weeping and putting on of sackcloth, when in steed of fasting to fall to eating and drinking is a contempt of God and an iniquitie

^p Rem. 14.6.

^a 1. Cor. 8.8.

^r Col 2.23

^c Aug. ep. 109.

^e Epist. 70.

^f Mat. 9.15.

^g Esay. 22.12.

iniquitie which he voweth not to forget. There is an occasion of fasting to supply others want of necessary feeding of which it is rightly said: ^y Blessed is he that fasteth that hee may feede the poore. There is occasion of fasting to ^z beat downe the body & bring it into subiection, that it may be employed as a seruant and not serued as a master; and when this occasion requireth we say it is not so good or godly by eating to feed the body as to chastise it by fasting; & yet to this purpose we specially commend the saying of S. Hierome, 'Spare feeding & a belly still kept with hungry appetie is preferred before fasting three daies together. But in fasting three things there are which wee condemne in the church of Rome accordingly as by the auncient church they were condemned. First that fasting is made in it selfe a worship of God, and a worke of righteousness, whereas it is of the number of those things which are not ^b Iustitia ipsa, sed conditura iustitiarum, not matters of righteousness in themselves, but serving for the powdering & seasoning of the works of righteousness, and therefore is to be applied ^c to praier and meditation of gods word, and to exercise of spirituall deuotion, without which it is but a matter of hypocrisie and mockerie, and hath no acceptation in the sight of God. Secondly, that it is so religiously tied to fixed and certaine daies, whereas the true fasting is but ^d pro temporibus & causis, as times and occasions doe require, as was before deliuered out of the ancient doctrine of the church of Rome. Thirdly, that it is thought to be performed by forbearing onely flesh, when other delicates and more costly provisions are not forborne, which is such as Hierome iustly calleth ^e a superstitious fast. How in the meane time they chastise the body, the world seeth well enough, we are sure they are not of the number of them of whom S. Hierome saied for their fasting: 'They of our compaie are heavy looked, pale faced, carelessly attired, like strangers in the world: and though they say nothing in words yet by behauiour they say Alas that my pilgrimage is prolonged. When matters were

^y Origen. in Leuit. hom 10
^z 1. Cor. 9. 27.

^a Hieron ep. ad
Furiam.

^b Origen in Math. tract. 25.

^c Ambros. de Helia & ieiun.
ca. 10.

^d Tertul. de
ieiunio.

^e Hieron. ad
Neposid.

^f Hieron. ad
Iovin. lib. 2.

so hot betwixt the Iesuites and the Priestes, both sides could vse one part of Gregories wordes against the Patriarch of Constantinople, ^a Our mindes swell with pride, but neither part could vse the other: Ossa reinnys arent, our bones are drie with fasting, They are such ^b goodly masters, as Hierome speaketh of, which loue to talke of fasting, when they haue their bellies full.

Another carnalitie of doctrine wherewith he vpbraideth vs, is that we teach, That it is as holy to fulfill the fleshly desires of the body by mariage, as by continencie to mortifie them. Where the vncleane beast like other swine of his fraternitie, maketh ¹ the vndefiled bed of mariage, the fulfilling of fleshly desires, as if the precepts of ^h mortifying the lust of the flesh, and ¹ absteining from fleshly lustes, could not stand with the vse of lawfull mariage, whereas the Apostle reckoneth for lusts of the flesh ^m fornication, adultery, inordinate concupiscence: but neuer dreamed that mariage should be accounted the fulfilling of fleshly lust. Yea Tertullian albeit he had begun to speak the language of Montanus, yet could say, ^a that the very Gentiles did not account fleshly lust in mariage, bnt in disorderd and vnnaturall courses. And it appeareth by him what the auncient doctrine of the church of Rome was in this behalfe when by way of vpbraiding them he saith: ^o Moderatio libidinum pudicitia creditur: with them moderation of lust, by keeping it within the compasse of lawfull mariage is deemed chastitie, when he being further besotted with the prophetic of Montanus thought, as Bishop doth that mariage was to be reckoned a fulfilling of fleshly lust. But what the church of Rome then thought, was after condescended vnto in the first Nicene Councell, that ^p the companie of a man with his owne wife is chastitie, because as Tertullian could say when he was yet sober, ^q It is not the condition of the thing it selfe, but vnlawfull lust that defileth the companie of man and woman, & vnchastitie is not in the state but in the excesse & disorder thereof by adulterie, whooredome & com- ⁱ Greg. epist.

^h Hier. epist. ad Nepotian.

ⁱ Heb. 13. 4.

^k Rom. 8. 13.

^l 1. Pet. 2. 11.

^m Gal. 5. 19.
Col. 3. 5.

ⁿ Tertul. adu. Marcio. lib. 5.

^o Lib. de Pudicitia.

^p Socrat. hist. lib. 1. cap. 8.

^q Tertul. de anim. 4. cap. 13.

monstres. Now therefore we doubt not but that in marriage is as great holinesse, as there is in single life, and neither of them for it selfe is more acceptable to God then the other is, neither doe we otherwise conceiue heereof then was receiued by the auncient church of Rome, as hath bene before shewed. We doubt not but that the patriarches, and priests, and prophets, and the first Christians, liued more holily in marriage then doe M. Bishop and his fellowes in single life. And we cannot be perswaded that there is a speciall kinde of holy life, that was neuer commended to the people of God for the space of aboue foure thousand yeeres, nor was euer heard of vnder the name of greater puritie & sanctitie, but onely amongst superstitious heathen men. There was a time when ^{1. Ier. 16. 2.} Ieremie was willed for the time, not to take a wife, because of the great calamitie that was to befall the land of Iudah, euen as the Apostle S. Paul giueth counsell to forbear marriage when without euill it may be forborne ^{1. Cor. 7. 26.} because of any present necessuty, or for auoiding trouble in the flesh: but ^{28.} that the not taking of a wife should be a seruice to God or an acceptable holinesse with him, the church of those times neuer learned, which we suppose knew all workes of holinesse towards God. In a word single life though it selfe be not a matter of holinesse, yet where the gift of continencie is, giueth greater opportunity of holy employment, in that it voydeth a man of troubles and cares that are incident to marriage, and so according to the manner of thinges indifferent is respectiuelly to be preferred. But where the gift of continencie is not, because the restless passions of continencie by solliciting and distracting the mind doe bereaue it of that tranquillitie and peace which in any condition or state of life is necessarie to serue God, there marriage is more helpfull to the seeking and seruice of the kingdome of God: and the vndertaking of the cares and troubles thereof only for keeping peace of conscience towards God is as sweet a sacrifice to God as anie doth arise of single life. And therefore the auncient church albeit there had passed a vow of single life yet thought it fit for them ^c to marry that could not ^a or would not containe as ^x being better to receive iudgement and censures of their lightnes with men, then with secret darts of satan to be wounded every day towards God: so farre were they from that filthy Popish paradoxe which before is mentioned, that it should be better in that case to keepe a harlot then to marrie a lawfull wife, ^y Incontinencie, saith S, Austin, must be supported with honest marriage that it runne not headlong to d. mnable sinne. Now because the gift of containing is not in the power of man, therefore as touching M. Bishops third point we say indeed that it is contrarie to the word of God to vow virginity, because it is contrarie to the word of God to suffer thy mouth to cause they flesh to sinne, and rashly to utter a thing to God which thy power serueth not to performe. ^b All men cannot receive this thing, saith our Saviour, but they to whom it is given, and is it not sinne to vow to God when a man hath no warrant of the gift of God? ^c For they to whom it is not given, either haue no will to that they vow, or faile of fulfilling what they are willing to. ^d If all could be virgins, saith Hierom our Lord would not haue said, He that can receive it, let him receive it, neyther would the Apostle haue beene so fearefull to perswade it. Therefore it is found in many to begin it, but it is found in few to perseuere, and what is it but wickednesse to make all vow when so few are found to perseuere. But the best is, they vow against mariage onely, but against fornication and adultery they make no vow. They vow continencie no further but ^e as humane infirmities will permit, and therefore it fareth with them as it hath beene woont with other hereticks: ^f They reiect mariage, but yet they cease not from filthie lust. Therefore without breaking of his vow, Pope Sergius the third might keepe ^g Marozia. Earle Guido his wife, and get of her in aternal rei memoriam, another Pope Iohn the twelfth, who should neuer haue beene

Pope

^c Hieron. ep. ad Demetri. ad.

^a Cyp. l. 1. p. 11.

^x Epiph. heres. 61. Apostolic.

^y August. cont.

Julian. l. 5. c. 10.

² Eccles. 5. 5.

^a V. 1.

^b Mat. 19. 11.

^c August. de gratia & lib. arb. cap. 4.

^d Hieron. ad.

Iouinian. lib. 1.

^e Hispanian. de orig. Monacha, lib. 6. cap. 73.

^f Epiph. her. 61. rigen.

^g Bale in Serg. 3. ex Luithpr and

Pope if he had beene a priests sonne, but to bee a Popes bastard it was no let. And thus might Iohn the eleuenth mortifie the flesh with ^k keeping his nunion Theodora: & Iohn the thirteenth with his ^l two daniels Ramera and Anna: & Hildebrand ^k with Machtyldis the Countesse who forsooth was called S. Peters daughter. & Alexander the sixt ^l exceedingly addicted to women, might serue his saint Vannocia, and might bestow a Cardinalship to continue the loue of ^m Iulia Farnesia, and might make bolde with his owne daughter Lucretia. So Paule the third fauouring his vow might receiue a stab for being taken in adulterie with his kinswoman ⁿ Laura Franesia, & might poyson his daughters husband Bosius Sfortia, that hee might the more freely haue the vse of her, as he had also of Iulia his owne sister: such paines doe these holy fathers take to mortifie their fleshly desires, that it is woonder that we should not thinke that the mariage of Protestant Ministers is not for holinesse to be compared to their single life. It was without breach of vow, I warrant you, that the ^o Cardinall of Cremona the Popes Legate a latere comming heere into England to take order against priests wiues and concubines, and in a solemne assembly inueighing against them, and shewing what a hainous offence it was, to rise from beside a harlot to consecrate the body of Christ, was the same night after taken with a harlot in his owne bed. The matter was well known, saith Mathew Paris. and could not be denied Should we not thinke it was for holinesse and mortification of fleshly lustes, that the ^p Bishops of Germany were wont for money to giue priests leaue to keepe concubines, when they might by no meanes marie wiues. Was there not in their Clergie exceeding great holinesse, by vowing virginitic, when that prouiso tooke place in their lawes: ^q They say commonly that a priest is not to be deposed for simple fornication, because there are f. w found without that fault: yea and a reason giuen of that fauour, ^r Because the bodies of men are more fruite new

^h Idem in Ioanne. 11.

ⁱ Synod. Rom. apud Luitpr. lib. 6.

^k Bale in Gregor. 7.

^l Onuphr. in Alexand. 6.

apud Platin.

^m Sleiden. comment. lib. 21.

ⁿ Idem ibid.

^o Matth. Paris. in Henr. 1.

^p Sleid. comm. lib. 4. ex orat. Campesij Cardinalis.

^q Dist 81.

Maximianus

in glossa.

^r D. st. 82 Pres-

byter in glossa.

then of old they haue beene, frailtie was a cause with them to beate with fornication, which is the worke of the diuell, but by no meanes to permit mariage, which is the ordinance of God. But what their holinesse was S. Bernard was a witnesse in his time, giuing to vnderstand, that after fornications, adulteries, incests, they fell to vnnaturall and monstrous lusts, for which God destroyed Sodome and Gomorrah, forbearing the remedy of lawfull marriage, and thenceforth running headlong into all hainous filthynesse. And of the persons that were guilty hereof hee saith: They cannot be hid they are so many, nor care to bee hid they are so impudent. I may here vse Tertullians epiphonema: Hac admittit flagitia coacta & inuita virginitas: such horrible wickednesse is there in constrained and forced virginity. This is the holinesse, M. Bishop, that you recommend to his most excellent Maiestie to bee practised by his Clergie. These are the workes of your mortification, the fruites of your vowed virginity, as if you had sayd with them of old, Peccata carnis deus non curat: God careth not for these peccadilloes of the flesh: and with Plato, In such kinde of pleasure it is but a veniall sinne for a man to forswear himselfe. Fie vpon you, fie vpon you, filthie harlots, the seede of the deuill, abominable hypocrits, you are they that tell vs that there is that impuritie and pollution in the vse of mariage, in the undefiled bed, as the holy Ghost termeth it, which cannot stand with the sanctity and holynes of your priestly executions: when in the meane time the impurities and pollutions of your filthy whooredome and Sodomy are extremely lothsome both to God and men: which so prouoked God in the time of the height of Antichrist as that for iust reuenge thereof hee sent into the world that horrible disease of the French-pocks: which, as Physicians confesse, former ages had neuer had any experience of. What shall I say, for shame talke no more of continency and virginity: it is a matter for honest men to speak of honestly, as for you the world stinketh of you alreadie

¹ Bernard. de Conuers. ad
Cler. cap. 29:

^c Tert. de, ve-land. Virginib.

^u August. de.
verb. Dom. ser.
16.

^z Plato apud Cyrill. cont. In-
lian. lib. 6.

⁷ Bell. de Cleric.
cap. 19.

^z Heb. 13. 4.

* Fuchs. institus
medicane.

already, and the more ye stirre the worse it will stinke still. Another poynt for which M. Bishop questioneth our doctrine is for that we teach, as he saith, that it is contrary to the will of God to bestow our goods on the poore and to giue our selues wholly to prayer and fasting. But the thing that we teach is this, that when the keeping of our goods standeth not with the calling of God, and the performance of the seruice whereunto he appoynteth vs, then euerie faithfull Christian is to shew himselfe readie to forgoe all, father, mother, wife, children, brethren, sisters, landes, linings, and whatsoeuer else, knowing that otherwise ^y ye cannot ^{y Luc. 14. 26.} ^{33.} be the disciples of Christ. If Christ say to vs as he did to the younge man in the Gospell, ^z Goe, sell all that thou hast and giue to the poore, and come and follow me, then not to doe it is a token of an vnfaithfull heart, that setteth more by the world then by God: more by the transitorie goodes of this life, then by the euerlasting riches of Iesus Christ. Thus ^a Abraham, God so commaunding, forsooke the countrey and inheritance of his fathers, to goe to the place that the Lord should shew him. Thus ^b Barnabas sold all to follow Iesus Christ, in yeelding his helpe to the Apottles for the preaching of the Gospell through the world. Thus the first Christians, endured ^c withi^oy the ^{c Heb. 10. 34.} spoyling of their goods, rather then to forsake the testimonie of Iesus Christ. Which caues not befalling vs, wee yet perforce that commaundement of Christ in minde and affection, when in aboundance happily of riches and possessions wee haue our heartes so wained from the loue thereof, as that wee account ^d all thinges but losse for the excellent knowledge sake of Iesus Christ our Lord, ^e not setting our hearts upon them, ^f possessing them as if wee possessed them not, using them as if we used them not: that though occasion of leauing all be wanting to our will, yet our will bee not found wanting if there were occasion, But without this occasion from God voluntarily and of our owne heads to sell all and giue to the poore vnder pretence.

^a Gen. 12. 1. 4.

^b Heb. 11. 8.

^c Act. 4. 36.

^d Phil. 3. 8.

^e Psal. 62. 10.

^f 1 Cor. 7. 30.

31.

tence of giuing our selues to prayer and fasting is a worke of superstition and error, a renouncing of the stewardship which God hath committed vnto vs, a casting off of the yoke of Christ in whome we are new borne not to liue to our selues but to be ^u members one of another; and ^b by loue to serue one another: it is the verie heresie of the ⁱ Massaliās or Euchytes, who because the scripture teacheth vs ^k to pray continually and not to waxe weary, did therefore renounce the worlde, forsooth, and departed from their goods that they might attend wholly to prayer; and did pray so much indeed as saith S. Austin, as did soeme incredible to them that did heare of it. And if the duties of praier and fasting which the scripture requireth be not tied to any separate kind of life, but concerne men generally, as indeed they doe in the plaeces and callings wherein God hath placed them, surely then vnder pretence and colour of giuing our selues to praier and fasting to leaue our places and callings and to goe into corners from other men, is an absurd fancie of will-worship and hath no ground of Gods word to warrant our consciences for the doing of it. Abraham did not so when God had enriched him after his departure from his country, who notwithstanding is called ^m the father of the faithfull, in the steppes of whose faith we are to walke that ⁿ into his bosome wee may be gathered. Cornelius did not so, who without leauing his charge ^o used praier and fasting in such sort as that hee found the fauour at Gods hands to haue an angel sent with a message to him for meanes of his further instruction in the way of life. Neither in the old nor in the new testament is there one man found that hath don it, howsoeuer M. Bishop account it a matter of great holinesse and perfection: and as for vs we will not take vpon vs to be wiser in this behalfe then they whom God himselfe hath recommended vnto vs for true examples of holinesse and perfection. But now I suppose there is a secret in this matter which euery man doth not see. If M. Bishop were demaunded who be the

poore

^u Rom. 12. 5.^b Gal. 5. 13.ⁱ Epiph. her. 80
Massaliani.^k Luc. 18. 1.^l 1. Thess. 5. 17.^m August. ad Quod vult d.
*her. 57.*ⁿ Rom. 4. 11. 12.^o Luc. 16. 22.^p Act. 10. 30.

poore whom he heere meaneth, I doubt he would famble and stagger in his answer. The diuell was in it that Wat-son in his Quodlibets in great malice of the Iesuites hath discouered the knauerie of this whole matter, and so discouered it as might be a good warning to many feeble fooles to take heede how they commit themselues into the handes of these vultures and gryphes, who vnder pretence of sauing mens soules, deuour their bodily goods, and send them headlong to destruction, both of bodie and soule, Is it not a pretie Iesuiticall exercise which hee hath made knowne to the world, that men are by them drawne to sell their landes, and to put the mony into the handes of these poore fathers, that so being freed from the cares and troubles of their worldly state, they may goe lightly beyond sea, there to attend to praier, because they must begge, and to fasting because they haue naught to eate? yea and to bee dispatched, God knoweth how that they may haue no toong to complaine, that anie man hath done them harme? In the meane time these holie fathers make merry with that they haue gotten: this is Propter bonum societatis, though it be in ordine ad diabolum. Thus M. Bishop you all praie vpon other mens praierers and feast vpon other mens fasting, and whilest you liue no otherwise indeede but like theeues and naughtie packes deuouring other men to maintaine your selues like gallants, you exclaime against prophane carnalitie as in vs, that such tame fooles as will trust you being possessed with opinion thereof against vs, may take no notice of that lewde prophanesse and carnalitie that is vniuersally currant amongst you. We wote well howe vnder pretence of pouertie you haue gotten into your handes the wealth of the world to maintaine idle lozels and filthy belly-gods who know nothing but carnalitie: how the Iesuites vowing pouertie in proprietie haue in communitie gotten that riches into their handes within these threescore yeeres, that they are able thereby to doe more then many Princes can doe. Is this the holinesse of Poperie? Are those the fruites of your vowes? Wee will content our selues with that holinesse which we haue learned by the word of God, but as for your holinesse wee leaue it to your selues being knowen well enough by the fruites of it to be the inuention of the diuell.

19. W. BISHOP.

I neede not ioyne heer eunto, that they teach it to be impossible to keepe Gods Commaundements: and therefore in vaine to goe about it: And farther, that the best worke of the righteous man, is defiled with sinne. Wherefore, as good for him to leaue all undone, as to doe any.

Nay, if this position of theirs were true, it would follow necessarily, that all men were bound vnder paine of damnation, neuer to doe any good deed, so long as they liue: for that their good deed being stained with sinne cannot but deserue the hyre of sinne, which according to the Apostle is: Death euerlasting. If your Maiesties important affaires, would once permit you to consider maturely of these impieties, and many other like absurdities, wherewith the Protestants Doctrine is stuffed: I dare be bold to say, that you would speedily either commaund them, to reforme themselues, and amend their errors: or fauorably giue them their Congie.

Rom. 6.

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop performeth a worke of supererogation doing that that he saith he neede not doe. And indeed he saith truly that it is more then needeth, and were he not a man of a stupide & senseles conscience he would not haue made any mention of this point: so fully must his owne heart necessarily be possessed with the acknowledgement of the truth of that we say, but that for the loue wherewith he is bewitched to doat vpon Antichrist he laboureth wilfully fully to quench the light thereof. We doe not teach that it is impossible to keepe Gods commaundementes, but wee teach that it is in possible to keepe Gods commaundements perfectly to full righteousnesse and iustification in the sight of God: wee teach that it is impossible for vs so long as mortalitie and corruption lasteth to attaine to that description of vnspotted holinesse and righteousnes that is contained in the law. We faithfully teach men to keepe the commaundements of God. We teach with S. Iohn: ^a He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commaundements is a liar and the truth is not in him. We neuer cease to propound the wordes of Christ tying the truth of our loue to the keeping of his commaundements, ^b If yee loue me keepe my commaundements: Hee that hath my commaundements and keepeth them the same is he that toucheth mee. But to ^c the keeping of the commandements it appertaineth to say, ^d forgiue vs our trespasses, that is, our breaking of thy commaundements. It is in effect to say: ^e stand not in iudgement with vs to require of vs all that thou hast willed & commaunded: for thou shalt find vs guilty if thou enter into iudgement with vs: we haue therefore neede of thy mercie. Now it is not possible for vs so to liue but that we must so long as we liue here make this confession and praier vnto God. Therefore it is not possible for vs so long as wee liue here perfectly to keepe the commaundements of God. So long as we cannot ^f loue the Lord our God with all our heart, ^g with all our soule, ^h with all our minde, ⁱ with all our strength, so long we cannot keepe all the commaundements of God, But ^j so long as there is any carnall concupiscence or lust to be bridled & restrained we cannot loue the Lord our God with all our soule: for the flesh lusteth not without the soule albeit it be ^k said that the flesh lusteth because the soule lusteth fleshly or carnally: therefore so long as concupiscence lasteth wee cannot keepe all the commaundements. But so long as we liue here it is still true in vs, ^l the flesh lusteth against the spirit; so long therefore as we liue here wee cannot keepe

^a 1. Iohn. 2. 4.^b Ioh. 14. 15. 23^c August.^d De Tempor. ser. 49.^e Mat. 22. 37^f August. de perf. iustit. Ratio c. 17^g Gal. 5. 17.

all the commaundements of God, and so much the lesse because one of Gods commaundements also is, ^h Thou shalt not lust. ⁱ There are many scandalls of the world, sayth Hillary, which doe hinder in vs the perfect keeping of the commaundements: to say nothing of the nature of our bodies which partly by infirmity, part y by the motions or pronocations of vicious affections aze force vs yet to be imperfekt. Now I will say to M. Bishop in this matter as Hierome sayd of olde to the Pelagian hereticke defending the same that M. Bishop doth ^k Thou tellest vs that the commaundements of God are easie (possible saith M. Bishop) to be kept, and yet thou canst bring forth no man that hath kept them all, What a reason is this to say that it is possible which neuer was, and may bee done which thou art witnesse neuer any man did, and to make it a thing for enery man to do which in the patriarchs and proph. ts and Apostles thou art not able to approue? He runneth ouer many scriptures^l to shew, as he saith, that no man hath fulfilled the law and by the law all the commaundements that are contained therein, In a word he determineth thus out of the experience of men excelling one in one vertue and another in another, ^m God hath commaunded things possible, I confesse: but ech man cannot attaine to all these things albeit they be possible, not by any unablensse of created nature, that any cauil should therby be made to God: but by weakenes of our owne mind and will which cannot together and at once receiue all vertues, Thus Hierome dispatcheth vs of this question, teaching, as we doe, that God hath commaunded nothing but what is possible, but the impossibility of keeping the commaundements ariseth from vs, from our weakenes and frailcie, who although wee may excell in some one or two or some few vertues morally, yet euen in morall conuersation to men, cannot attaine to all vertues, and therefore much lesse to answer the strict examination of the iudgement of God. So that wee affirme nothing in this behalfe but what the ancient church defended against the Pelagian hereticke, and that which M. Bishop seeketh to perfwade.

^h Rom. 7. 7

ⁱ Hilar. in Psal

^l 8. lit. Gimel.

^k Hieron. epist
ad Cresiphont.

^l Adu. Pelag.
lib. 2.

^m Adu. Pelag.
lib. 1.

perswade his most excellent maiestie is nothing but what the Pelagian heretickes of olde presumed against the church : much grace to him to bee found thus directly walking in their steppes. Let S. Bernards words serue for the ending of this point : " The law-maker was not ignorant that the weight of the commaundement did exceed the strength of man, but he iudged it profitable that thereby men should be aduertised of their owne insufficiency, & indeed might know to what end of righteousnesse they might strine to the uttermost of their strength: Therefore by commaunding thinges impossible (to vs) he ment not to make vs trespassers, but to humble vs that euery mouth may be stopped and al the world may be brought in subiection to God: for receiuing the commaundement and feeling our owne defect we shall cry to heauen and God wil be mercifull to vs, and we shal know at that day that not for the works of righteousnesse which we haue done but of his owne mercy he hath saued vs. Where he doth not onely affirme the impossibility of full and perfect keeping of the lawe, but giueth reasons also why God notwithstanding held it profitable for vs that he should giue the law, and in euery point speaketh fully and exprelly the same that wee doc. Nowe if to this doctrine we apply M Bishops conclusion, we shall finde him to bee that that indeed he is. We cannot in this life perfectly fulfill the commaundements of God : therefore saith he, it is in vaine to goe about it. As if he should say : A man is not yet come to the goale : therefore it is in vaine for him to runne : the scholer cannot already write in print : therefore it is in vaine for him to learne to write : the husbandman hath not his haruest alreadie in hand : therefore it is in vaine for him to sow his seede . Perfect righteousnesse entertaineth none but whome it meeteth traouelling to come vnto it. We heere sow the seedes of it that we may haue the full growth of it otherwhere. The foundatiō is laid on earth that the consumation may be in heauen. Rightly doth S. Hierome say : " Non sunt contentenda tanquam parua sine quibus magna esse non possunt: uee ad Latam.

" Bernard. in Cant. ser. 50.

" Hieron. epist.

are not to despise those things as small without which great things cannot be. I though wee seeme here to haue learned but as it were the A B C, yet is it not in vaine, because this A B C is the introduction to the whole Booke of God.

• Better it is for a man seeking perfection to die by the way, saith Origen, then not to goe forth to seeke it at all. Againe, M. Bishop challengeth vs for teaching that the best worke of the righteous man is defiled with sinne. Wherein we teach the same that Hilarie of old taught, and was by Austin approoued according to the auncient doctrine of the church of Rome against the Pelagian heretickes, that our bodies are the matter of all vices, by reason whereof being polluted and defiled we haue nothing in vs cleane, nothing innocent. Whereunto belongeth the acknowledgement of Gregorie bishop of Rome, mentioned before, that all our righteousness is founde to be vnrightheousnesse if it be strictly and narrowly sifted. And surely seeing the case to standeth with vs, that by meanes of carnall concupiscence still possessing vs no good that wee doe can haue all our heart and all our soule to accompanie it vnto God, it must needes be that in the best worke there is a maine, and in the greatest righteousness a want of somewhat that it ought to haue if God in rigour do examine the same. And therefore as in the law of Moses the high Priest did beare the iniquitie of the holy offeringes of the children of Israel to make them acceptable before the Lord, so we must vnderstand that euen our holiest offerings and works of righteousness haue such defects and wants, such blemishes and stains of our corruption, as that they need the mediation of our high Priest Iesus Christ, to acquit the iniquity thereof, and to procure them fauour and acceptation in the sight of God. Nowe hereof M. Bishop inferreth then as good to leaue all vndone as to doe any. As if hee should say, If a man cannot but goe lame, then it is as good for him not to goe at all: if a man cannot pray, but to bee interrupted with by-thoughts, then it is as good for him not to pray

• Origen. in Exod. hom. 5.

¶ Hilar. apud
August. cont.
Iulian. Pelag.
lib. 2.

¶ Gregor. Moral.
lib. 21. c. 15

Exod. 28. 38

pray at all : if a man cannot but stutte in speaking, then it is as good for him not to speake at all. Wilelesse Sophitter, is it all one wilfully to rebell and vnperfectly to obey? is it all one to a necessaric defect, to adde a proud and voluntarie contempt? wee haue to doe with a mercifull God who in Iesus Christ accepteth our affections for actions, our beginnings for perfections, and 'if there bee first a willing minde, respecteth vs according to that that we haue, not according to that that wee haue not, euen as a louing father who ioyeth in his childe when hee seeth him willing to learne, though hee fault in the dooing of the thing that hee commaundeth, and shall we say, it is as good to leaue all good works vndone as to doe any, because we cannot but admitte some default in the doing of them? Whereby appeareth the grosse ignorance of this blinde Doctour, who in his next wordes inferreth, that if this position of ours bee true, it woulde follow necessarily that all men were bound vnder paine of damnation neuer to doe any good deede so long as they liue!. And why I pray you? For that their good deede beeing stamed with sinne cannot but deserue the hire of sinne which according to the Apostle is death euerlasting. This reason M. Bishop hath borrowed from M. Wright, Iannes from his fellow Iambres, who amongst other of his articles or forcible reasons against vs propounded this, That the Protestants are bound in consci:nce to auoide all good works, and that according to the Protestants religion all men are bound vpon paine of eternall damnation to auoide all good workes. We see malice is blinde and euery drunken fancie seemeth to it a forcible reason to oppugne and ouerthrow the truth. But howe I maruell shoulde this come to passe? Forsooth euery man is bounde vpon paine of eternall damnation to auoid all mortal sinnes: but all good works according to the Protestants religion are mortal sinnes, therefore. &c. But I maruell what M. Bishop taketh him to bee who for an ire-mole or a blacke spot affirmeth a white sheete to be a blacke hairecloth? Is the good worke.

1. Cor. 8. 12.

worke it selfe become a mortall sinne, because by an accidentall blemish it receiveth some disgrace? If hee can put difference betwixt the subiect and the accident, then hee may vnderstand that an accidentall default in the doing of a commaunded good worke taketh not away the obligation to the deede, and to refuse the doing of the good worke for auoiding of the default is for the auoiding of a trespasse to commit a treason, and from a pardonable error of humane imperfection to runne into a heauie iudgement of wilfull opposition, S. Austin saith: In fideliter misereri vitium est, peccatum est: to vse compassion without faith is sinne. The sinne ariseth not from the act of compassion but from the priuation of faith. And will M. Bishop hereof inferre that an infidell is bound vnder paine of eternall damnation not to vse compassion, and by a defect in circumstance force an obligation negatiue against the fact? To vse compassion without faith is sinne, but not to shew compassion is a far greater sinne. To shew mercy in infidelitie yeeldeth thoughtes excusing for doing a part: not to shew mercy breedeth accusing thoughts for neglecting all, and for crossing the worke of the law written in their hearts for the direction of their outwarde actions. Now therefore in the good works of the faithfull there is a staine of sinne, but in the not doing of them at all should be a double sinne: there is a guilt of damnation if God in rigour sift and examine the same, not arising from the good worke but from the staine of sinne: but to leaue the worke altogether vndone is a treble condemnation. But God in Iesus Christ remitteth the guilt, and imputeth not the staine of sinne but graciously accepteth the worke as perfect and good and accordingly rewardeth it. And therefore from an inuincible default which God hath promised to forgiue to argue the omitting of the worke which God hath commaunded to doe, is a collection so sottish and absurd as that it cannot be but that either meere ignorance or extreme malice must needs bee the authour and deuiser thereof.

^c August. cont Iulian. Pelag.
lib 4. cap. 3.

^a Rom. 2. 15.

thereof. And yet this wise man as if he had spoken some worthy matter telleth his most excellent Maiestie that if his Maiesties important affaires would permit him to consider maturely of these impieties and many other like absurdities wherewith the protestant doctrine is stiffed, he would speedily command us to reforme our selues and amend our errors. But his Maiesty in the middelt of his important affaires well aduiseeth of these matters, knowing that the preservation of true religion is a matter of greatest importance, because as the Christian emperours of old haue said, ^{x Theodos. & Valentiin. apud Cyrill. tom. 4. epist. 17.} The state of the common wealth dependeth vpon maintenance of true piety towards God. His Maiestie knoweth well enough that it is small aduantage to inioy a kingdome vpon earth, and for want of true faith towards God to bee excluded from the kingdome of heauen. He hath therefore taken resolution thereof from God himselfe, and on your part, M. Bishop, findeth nothing to moue him from that whereof he is resolved. You deuise impieties where there are none; of the auncient doctrines of the church you make absurdities because they fit not the humour & proceedings of your latter Synagogue. Your allegations are idle, your answeres are empty, your arguments wholly inconsequent, and fit it were that after your thrise seuen yeeres you should be recalled for seuen yeeres more to the study not of diuinitie onely but of Logicke also, that you may not any more interrupt his Maiesties important affaires with such loose and triuolous colleotions as here you haue presented to his view. Whereof we shall yet see further experience in that that followeth for the closing vp of this your second reason.

20. W. BISHOP,

I wil close vp this my second reason, with this Epiphoneme. That it is impossible for a Protestant, firmly cleauing to the grounds of his owne Religion, to hope for any saluation. For they doe, and needes must graunt, that no man can be saued without a liuely faith: & also that a liuely faith cannot be without charitie for otherwise it were dead: Now then to the purpose: No Protestant can haue charitie: for

 1. Epist. ca. 5. 3. as witnesseth S. Iohn. This is the charitie of GOD, that
 Rom. 13. we keepe his commaundements. But it is impossible (according to the Protestants) to keepe the commaundements: therefore also impossible to haue charitie which is the fulnesse of the lawe: and consequently impossible to haue a liuely faith, which cannot be without charitie. And so finally through want of that liuely feeling faith, whereby they should lay hold on Christs righteousnesse, to haue and apply that vnto themselves, they can haue no hope at all, of any fauour, and grace at Gods hands: Without which they must needes assure themselves of eternall damnation, in steede of their pretended certaintie of saluation.

R. ABBOT.

The Apostle saide of some, and M. Bishop is one of
 1. Tim. 1. 7. them They would be doctours of the law, and yet understand not what they speak, neither whereof they affirme, It is impossible for sooth for a Protestant firmly cleaving to the grounds of his owne religion, to hope for any saluation. And why so I pray you? for no man can be saued without a liuely faith, and a liuely faith cannot be without charitie, and no Protestant can haue charitie. No can: but what is the let thereof? Forsooth S. Iohn saith, that the charitie of God is this, that wee keepe his Commaundements, and it is impossible according to the Protestants to keepe the commaundements: therefore it is impossible to haue charitie. Now a night cap of strawe for such a braine that could reason so profoundly against the Protestants. But did your head neuer serue you to vnderstand that there are diuers degrees of charitie, and consequently diuers degrees of keeping Gods commaundements: and therefore that the denying of the highest degree thereof taketh not away the affirming of the rest?
 Did

Did you not finde in Austin that there is^b charitas maior,^b and charitas minor, greater charitie and lesser charitie incident to this life, and plenissima charitas, full and perfect charitie, not to be found in any man so long as he liueth heere, but differred till^c then when we shall see God as he is? The same Austin speaking of inherent righteoulnesse which consisteth in the keeping of Gods commaundements describeth these degrees both in the one and in the other: ^d Charity begun is righteoufnes begun: charitie encreased is righteoufnes encreased: great charitie is great righteoufnesse: perfect charitie is perfect righteoufnesse. Now perfect charitie, as before hath not his place in this life, and therefore in this life is no perfect righteoufnesse, and therefore no perfect keeping of the commaundements of God, which onely is it which the Protestants denie: but charitie there is in this life, and righteoufnesse there is, and a keeping of Gods commaundements there is, begun, encreased, waxing great, in diuers persons diuerly: and therefore by the Protestants doctrine there is no let but that a man may haue a liuely faith, and thereby assured hope of euerlasting life. For heereby indeede he laieth hold on the righteoufnesse of Christ, not to hale it to himselfe according to the phrase of this Lucian dogge, but to receiue it being offred and giuen by the promise of God: whereto becauſe eternall life is due, therefore in receiuing it, he receiueth eternall life, according to the wordes of Christe, ^e Whosoener eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternall life, and I will raise him up at the last day, not meaning that we shuld eate his flesh with our mouthes, or drinke his blood into our bellies, but ^f instructing us to become communicants of his passion, & healthfully and profitably to lay up in our minds that his flesh was crucified and wounded for vs, to the ende that all righteoufnesse being performed in his obedience for vs, the same might be reputed vnto vs for the atteinment of eternall life. And thus wee are come to the end of M. Bishops second reason, wherein as in the first we see no thing but vnlearned presumption and folly, and a great countenance set vpon a matter of nought: much audacioulnesse of words, but in waight and substance altogether nothing. Let vs now come to the examining of his third reason, where we shall finde him no changeling, but still one and the same man, or rather a shadow for a man.

^b Aug. ep. 29.^c De perfect. iustit. Rat. 8.^d De nat. & grat. cap. 70.^e Ioh. 6. 54.^f August. de. doct. Christ. lib. 3 cap. 16.

21. W. BISHOP.

Pag. 69.

To these two arguments, gathered out of the treatise following, I adde a third, coll. Eted from these your owne memorable wordes related in the aboue nam'd conference: viz, Are we now come to that passe, that we must appeach Constantine of Poperie and superstition? Which argueth that your Maiestie indgeth th. m. to haue little regard of either pietie or ciuilitie, that would adm't such a thought into their minde, as that the first Christian Emperour (our m. st renowned countryman) should be nursed and brought up in superstition, wherein your Maiestie hath great reason, for hee was most carefully instructed, and taught the Christian Religion, by such holie Confessors, whose sinceritie in faith had bene tried in the hot furnace of many strange persecutions: And he farther had the good happe to see, and heare together in the first generall Councell of Nice, many of the holiest and best learned Bishops of Christendome. Therefore it is most unlikely that so rotall a person, d. noted to Religion, and hauing so good meanes to attaine to the perfect knowledge thereof, as no man could haue better: should neuerthelesse in the purest time of it, be misledde into error, and superstition. If then, it may be prooued, that this most Christian Emperour (the glittering ornament of our noble Island) did beleene such articles of the present Roman church as the Protestants teach not to be beleened: Will not your Maiesty rather wine in faith with so peerelisse a Prince, who by the consent of all antiquitie, was for certaine right well enformed, then with these, whom (doubtlesse) most men deeme to be pitifully deceiued? Now that Constantine was of the same opinion, in matter

matter of religion, with the present church of Rome, may evidently be gathered out of this that followeth:

R. ABBOT:

We cannot, M. Bishop but giue most humble thanks to almightie God for giuing vnto vs a king of so great vnderstanding and iudgement, for deciding and determining the causes and controuersies of the Church. Whose princely wisdom in that behalfe as it appeared in that conference many wayes, so in this not least of all that his Maiestie thought fit that antiquitie should honourably be regarded, and that Popish nouelties onely being reiected things should be reduced to their primitiue vte without any needlesse departure from that path which the first church hath trodon out vnto vs. Wherein there was great cause that his Maiestie should haue a speciall respect vnto the time of Constantine the Emperour, as wherein he could not doubt but that the aire of the church was very free from that extreme infection & filth wherwith it was poysoned afterward. No maruell therefore if his Maiestie acquitted that noble Emperour from Poperie and superstition, and iust cause was there so to doe: so farre are we from dissenting from that principle which M. Bishop layeth downe, that it should be vnlikely that he should at that time be noulled vp in errour and misbeleefe. Which principle notwithstanding he driueth to an issue wholly contrary to his Maiesties intention and speech. For whereas his Maiesties purpose was to cleere Constantine of Popery, M. Bishop goeth about to appeach him thereof. But Constantine indeed was no Papist: he neuer let the triple crown vpon the Popes head, nor euer kissed the Popes foote. He did not thinke the Bishop of Rome to be superiour to himselfe, or that the Bishop of Rome might vpon occasion depose him from his regall throne, nor discharge his sworn subiects from their allegiance and duety to him, nor held his sentence to be the oracle of the church : which had he thought he would not haue called the council of Nice, but with lesse adoe would haue sent to Rome for resolution against Arius the hereticke . He did not thinke that it belonged to the bishop of Rome to call generall councilles or to direct order for their proceeding, but commaundeth the council himselfe, and prescribeth them a rule to follow, not according to the manner of the Popes councilles which proceede^a by scriptures and traditions, indeede by traditions only against scripture but^b they are the bookes of the Euangelists, and of the Apostles saith he, and the oracles of the old prophets which doe plainly, instruct vs what to conceiue concerning gods matters: therefore setting aside all enmitie and discord let vs from the words inspired of God take the explication of those things that are in question. Hee neuer sought to the Pope for pardon, he was neuer shruen to any priest, he neuer worshipped idoll nor image, neuer serued S. nor shrine, neuer knew the masse nor transubstantiation, nor halfe communion : if hee saw the religion that is now at Rome he would woonder at the change. Yet M. Bishop will needes perswade his most excellent Maiestie that Constantine was of the same opinion in matter of religion with the present church of Rome, but his arguments to proue it are such as may well make vs to pittie the simplicity of the man. He must bring better proofes then he hath brought, or else Constantine shal be still ours and none of his.

^a Concil. Trid.
sess. 4. cap. 1.
^b Theod. hist.
lib. 1. cap 7.

22. W. BISHOP.

First, he was so affectionate vnto the signe of the Crosse, that he would haue it gloriously appeare, both abroad in his banners, and at home in his pallace : and in the midst of the cytie of Rome, with this Poesie : In this signe of saluation, I haue deliuered the city. With it also hee blessed his visage.

Enseb. de vita Constant. lib. 3.
cap. 2.

R. ABBOT.

R. ABBOT.

The signe of the crosse to which Constantine was so much affectioned was indeede ^a the signe of the name of our Saviour, consisting of the two Greeke letters χ and ρ , in forme of a crosse χ , which are the two first letters of the name of Christ, and did import the same whole name, by the sight whereof in the skie Constantine was aduertised that ^b by Christ he must conquere and overcome. To which name of christ represented to Constantine his most excellent Maiestie giueth the same honour that Constantine did reposing therein the whole trust of his victorie and saferie both spirituall and corporall, and knowing that ^c no other name is giuen vnder heauen by which we must be saved but onely the name of Iesus Christ. And as for the signe of the crosse which M. Bishop intendeth, because it hath beene vsed as a monument and profession of the passion of chirst and his death for vs vpon the crosse, his Maiestie taketh that equall course that may both approoue the pietie of Constantine in the vsing of it, and yet shew his detestation of those corruptions wherwith the Papistes haue abused it. The signe of the crosse hath honourable place vpon his Maiesties imperiall crowne : it standeth publickly to bee beholden in the highest streete of his imperiall city : his Maiesties ensignes and banners weare it both by sea and land : our churches and market places commonly shew it throughout this whole land : in the celebration of baptisme it is by publicke order appoynted alwayes to be vsed. What is then the signe of the crosse to proue Constantine to bee of the same opinion in matter of religion with the present Romane church, when we vse the same signe of the crosse and yet are aduersaries to the same church? Yea but M. Bishop will say that we vse it not so far as Constantine did : for with it, saith hee, Constantine blessed his visage. Where he abuseth his Maiestie with false translation, the story.

^a Euseb. de vita
Constant. lib. 1.
cap. 25.

^b Ibid. cap. 22.

^c Act. 4. 7.

^a Euseb. de vita
Constant. lib. 3.
cap. 2.

^c Dist. 63. cap.
Quia.

^f Tertul. de Corona militis.

^g Col. 3. 17.

^h Cyril. cont.
Julian. lib. 6.

story making no mention of blessing but only that ^a hee did signe his face with the signe of the crosse. Wherein his Maieity and our whole church do forbear to doe the same that Constantine did: not as to condemne Constantine & the first church for the doing of it, but to take away all shewe of that superstition and abomination wherewith latter time, specially vnder the tyranny of Antichrist hath defilled that that Constantine did, the Papistes hauing attributed to the crosse the vertue and power of blessing, which Constantine sought for only in him whom he only remem-bred and professed by the crosse. Now ^c if our predecessours haue done some things which at that time might be without fault and afterwarde be turned to error and superstition we are taught, saith the law, by Ezechias breaking the brazen serpent that the posteritie may abolish the same without anie delay and with great authoritie. We doubt not but that the first church lawfully vsed the signe of the crosse to protest their faith in Christ crucified against the despights and re-proches of Pagans and infidels, and in that simplicity of the vse thereof we doubt not but that sometimes miraculous workes were yeilded to the faith of them by whom it was vsed. We doubt not but that blamelesly also they vsed it in priuate and ordinary behauiour, ^e lying downe and rising up, going out and comming in, at the table, at candle lighting, at putting off and on their clothes, and whatsoever they went about, but no otherwise but for a remembrance ^g whatsoever they did either in word or deede to doe all in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, giuing thanks to God euen the father by him. Wherefore when Iulian accounted the christians base and wretched men for signing their houses and their foreheads with the signe of the crosse, Cyril answered that it was his ignorance to blame them for that, because he knew not the meaning of it. ^h *For the Lorde and Sauiour of all faith he, albeit he might haue sitten still in the throne of his god head equall to God, yet humbled himselfe, taking upon him the forme of a seruant, & despising the shame he endured the crosse
 that*

that he might abolish the power of corruption: dying alone for all and raised from the dead that he might deliuer mankind from the snare of death that he might destroy the tyranny of sin which reigned in vs; that hee might abbridge the law of sin raging in the members of our bodies, and might make vs spirituall worshippers; and mortifying in vs the lust of the flesh might make them the children of God that doe beleeue in him & sanctifie them by the spirit, that so he might bereaue satan of his tyranny ouer all. All these things the signe of the crosse maketh vs to remember and willeth vs to thinke of that which the Apostle saith, One died for al that they which liue should henceforth not liue to themselues but vnto him which died for them and rose againe. Againe we vse, saith he, the signe of the crosse for a remembrance of all goodnesse and all vertue Ibid. This only was the first vse of the signe of the crosse, and so long as it kept within this compasse, there was no caule of the refusing of it, neither should we refuse it if vpon the like occasion & with the like simplicity and sobriety we might vse it as they did. But since the Harpyie of Rome hath had the handling of it, and made it a matter of magicall nchauntment, and through the currant of her prophations it hath runne into the handes of coniuers, charmers, witches to be defiled with their diuellish and damnable practises, we haue had a religious care to cleere the first church in the vsing of it; but no further to vse it our selues then it may be washen from the soile and filth of those abominations. Now therefore Constantines vsing of the signe of the crosse prooueth him not to haue beene like minded with the present church of Rome, because we also approoue Constantines vsing of the crosse and yet hate the doctrine of the present church of Rome.

23° W. BISHOP.

With fasting and other corporall affliction, he chastized his body that he might please God. Euseb. de vita Const. li. 2. c. 14.

Z

R. ABBOT.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop might euen as well haue argued out of the same chapter, Constantine praied for the saluation of his enemies, therefore he was of the same opinion in matter of religion with the present church of Rome. The words of the storie are these: Before the beginning of the battell the Emperour according to his manner in a tent apart bestowed a time free for pouring forth prayer vnto God: he called himselfe from all licentious and luxurious course of life: with fasting and afflicting of the body hee chastened himselfe that hee might finde God appeased towards him by his humble prayers, and a kinde helper vnto him, and so he might performe these things that God should put into his minde. Now what a blinde reason haue wee here, Constantine fasted and praied before hee went into the battell, therefore Constantine was of the same opinion in religion with the present church of Rome? As if he should say, The Protestants by publicke order fasted and praied at the time of the Spanish inuasion, therefore the Protestants then were Papistes. The Protestantes fasted and prayed at the time of the great plague, therefore they were of the same opinion in matter of religion with the present church of Rome. Was he disposed to dally with his prince that hee would bring in these ridiculous conclusions? But it is with him as it is with poore men, who hauing but a little must make the most of that they haue.

24. W. BISHOP,

Lib. 4. cap. 26.

He with incredible admiration, honoured professed Virgins, and made lawes in their fauour.

R. ABBOT:

True and chaste virginitic albeit in it self a thing meerly indifferent

indifferent to God-ward, yet as an excellent gift of God in the vse of it for the seruice of the ^a kingdome of heauen, and ^b to cleaue to the Lord without distraction or separation, deserueth to be admired and honoured amongst men, If therefore Constantine bringing the church out of those horrible stormes of persecutions, did finde therein many who to keepe theselues the more secure with quiet minde to serue Iesus Christ, had betaken themselues to that course of single life, hee had iust cause to yeelde them that honour and regard that did appertaine vnto them. But he neuer had any thought to approoue your cursed blasphemies, that single lite should be the merit of eternall life, a satisfaction for sinnes, a worke of supererogation for redemption of other mens sinnes: he honoured them onely for vsing the opportunitie thereof the more entirely to serue the Lord. Neither doe they want their admiration and due commendation amongst vs, who, hauing power of themselues giuen vnto them of God doe vse the same to the forbearing of marriage, that in their places and callings they may with greater libertie and securitie applie themselues to serue the Lord. As for the lawes which M. Bishop sayth Constantine made in the fauour of virgins, they are not such as that he should haue thought it worth the while for his purpose to speake thereof. For all this law-making was no more but the abolishing of an old vniust law, which did intercept the lands and possessions of such as died without children, that they shoulde not go to their kinsfolke or friendes to whom they were willing to bestow them, but should be confiscate to the commonwealth. And this law making did as much concerne married persons so dying without issue, as it did virgins, so seely a helpe hath M. Bishop heere for the fauour of his virgins. But by this lawe it appeareth that the virgins, which Constantine respected were no such as M. Bishop dreameth of: they were no cloister-nunnes: they were not sequestred into corners: they did not forgoe what they

^a Mat. 19. 12.
^b 1. Cor. 7. 35.

^c Pigh. controu.
14. de vot. mon.
nast.

Breniar. secund
vsum Sarum.
commun. vnius
virg. & martyr

possessed, they liued in their owne houses, or in the houses of their parentes and friends, and did such duties as might concerne them in the places where they were. And albeit much vncleanness then was committed vnder pretence of virginity, whilst many of curiositie and pride betooke themselues to the profession thereof, yet much was it encreased by M. Bishops virgins, whose cloisters were the very ^dlime-twiggs and ginnes of satan, not sanctuaries of God, but houses of Venus, and cursed stowes of deuilish barlots, receptacles of wanton and vchaste yong men, for the fulfilling of their filthy lustes, so that to veile a maide for a virgin was the same in a manner as to set her foorth to be a strumpet; and ^ecommon fornication was canonized to be accounted a holy state. It was by the iust iudgement of God that their dwellings did spue them out for the horrible abominations and filtheries that were found amongst them. Our church therefore not condemning what was simply done in this behalfe from the beginning, and leauing to single life the due commendation of it where it is deserued, yet considering the poisoned fruites that professed virginity in all times hath brought foorth, taketh no course to draw any vnto it, nor forceth any to continue therein, but leaueth Gods institution of marriage free for preseruing of puritie and holinesse towards God. We haue well obserued how the Apostles though hauing (^ffearefully indeed as Hierome saith) commended widowhood and single life, and hauing sayd of widdowes estate, ^gshee is at libertie to marrie with whom shee will, onely in the Lord: but shee is more blessed if shee so abide, in my iudgement: yet when by occasion heereof many had embraced widowhood, who afterwards plaid the wantons, and from the shame of their lightnesse, proceeded to the denying of the faith of Christ, to take away all occasion heereof, gaue this for a Canon: ^hI will that the younger widdowes marry and beare children and gouerne the house, and giue no occasion to the aduersary to speake euill. And therefore by

^d Catal. test. verit. ex Echerio. Clemang. de corrupt. eccle. statu Centur. Magdeburg 11. cap. 6 ex luone.

^e Hospinian. de orig. Monach. lib. 4. cap. 26.

^f Hieron. adu. Iouin. lib. 1

^g 1. Cor. 7. 39.

^h 1. Tim. 5. 14.

by his example from the abstracted speculation of the preferment of single life in prioritie of gift, we haue fallen by experience and necessitie to the approbation and practise of another rule. Nowe therefore seeing in the very point wee approoue the same that Constantine did approoue (that they are worthie of admiration and honour, who occasion fitting doe preferre single life for the opportunitie of holinesse towards God) and onely by occasion taken from experience, doe forbear in part the practise of that which he approoued, M. Bishop may as well say of vs as he may of Constantine, that we are of the same opinion in matter of religion with the present church of Rome, when indeede wee viterly detest and abhorre the same.

25. W. BISHOP.

Hee builded many Churches in honour of the Apostles, and Euseb. de vita Martyrs, and as S. Chrysofome recordeth: He that was re- Constant. lib. 3. uested in purple, went to embrace the Sepulchers of S. Peter, c. 47 & alibi.
and S. Paul, and all Princely state laide aside, stood humblie Chrysof. hom. praying vnto the Saints, that they would be intercessors for him 66 ad pop. An-vnto God, tiach.

R. ABBOT.

Wee builde churches when and where neede is in honour of the Apostles and Martyrs, and where they are already builded we retaine the names whereby they were first named to their honour, S. Maries church, S. Peters church, &c. And if he will heereby prooue that Constantine was a Papist hee may say the like of vs. The honour that wee intend to the Saintes heereby is the same that Constantine intended, ^a celebrare martyrum memori- Euseb. de vita as, to renomme the memories of the martyrs. It is the honou- Constant. lib. 3 rable remembrance of their names, not the religious cap. 47. worship of their persons, euen as S. Austin saith that ^b in August. de these memorialls there was a naming of them in their place & ciuit. Dei. lib.
 order 22. cap. 10.

order at the celebration of the sacrament but no invocation of them. M. Bishop woulde haue inuocation and worship done to the Saints in their churches, but Constantine yeelded no such seruice vnto them, and we accordingly deny the same. Nay they that ^c build temples to Angels or to any creatures in that sence, or name them by their names as there^d to pray vnto them, are accursed by the auncient church, because they yeeld thereby to the creature that seruice that belongeth to God onely, which to impute to that Christian and godly Emperour were no other but an impious & wicked llauder. Yet M. Bishop taketh vppon him to prooue by Chrysofome that Constantine did yeeld such honour and worship to S. Peter, and S. Paul, by praying vnto them. He that is reu^{sted} in purple goeth to embrace the sepulchers of S. Peter and S. Paul and all princely state laied aside standeth humbly praying vnto the Saints that they would bee intercessours vnto God for him. Where we deny not Chrysofome to be the authour of the words which he citeth, if he had truely translated them. For though the first part of the homily whence hee citeth them bee vndoubtedly counterfeite, as appeareth by the matters of story in the beginning which cannot agree to the time of Chrysofome, yet the authour of the beginning hath taken the latter and greater parte thereof out of a ^e sermon of Chrysofome otherwhere: but the wordes that hee citeth are not spoken of Constantine as hee pretendeth them to bee. Which to colour and hide that his Reader might not take knowledge of it, hee altereth the Ten^{se} wherein Chrysofome speaketh. Chrysofome sayth, He that is reu^{sted}: M. Bishop saith, hee that was, Chrysofome saith, he goeth: M. Bishop saith, hee went, Chrysofome saith, he standeth: M. Bishop saith, hee stood humbly praying, &c. which albeit the course of his speech seemeth to require, yet in as much as vnder pretēse therof he plainly altereth the meaning of Chrysofome, hee cannot bee excused of dealing falsely with his Maie^{ty} in citing him

^c Idem cont.

Maximi. Ari-

an. lib. 1. art. 11.

^d Theodoret. in

Coloss. cap. 2.

^e In 2. epist. ad
Corint. hom. 26.

in that sort. For Chrysoſtome ſpeaking in the preſent tenſe doth thereby plainly ſhew that he meaneth that which he ſayth, as indeede he doth of the Emperour that then was when he ſpake theſe words which was the Emperour Arcadius, about threeſcore yeeres after the death of Conſtantine, For ſoone after the beginning of the reigne of Arcadius, Chryſoſtome being before a prieſt of the church of Antioch, ſucceeded Nectarius in the Biſhopricke of Conſtantinople where he deliuered theſe words. Of Arcadius then Chryſoſtome ſayth that which he ſayth : of Conſtantine hee ſayth it not. But of Conſtantine it is that we enquire : for what others did after the time of Conſtantine, ſuperſtition more and more increaſing, it nothing concerneth him. Yea and howſoever Chryſoſtome there, to amplify the glory of the martyrs, which is the matter that he hath in hand, doe alleage what the Emperour de facto, did, yet his owne groundes of doctrine otherwhere are ſufficient to perſwade vs that hee himſelfe approoued not any ſuch ſuperſtitious inuocation : thereby ſhewing that in that allegation he dealt but as Oratours are wont to doe who apprehend euery thing that may probably make for the preſent turne, howſoever the ſame happily be not ſo conſonant to their owne precepts otherwiſe. For hee himſelfe teacheth that to God, to Ieſus Chriſt ^c we neede no porter, no mediator, no officer, but euen to ſay, Haue mercie vpon me, and hee will forthwith be preſent vnto vs. And for example hereof he commendeth ^b the wiſedome of the woman of Canaan, that ſhee intreated not Iames, nor made requeſt to Iohn, nor went to Peter, nor looked to the whole company of the Apoſtles, nor ſought for any mediator, but tooke repentance to bee her aduocate, and ſo went to the well fountain. He teacheth that ^b with God wee neede no interceſſours, wee haue no neede to intreate others, but though a man be alone and haue no proteſtour to ſpeake for him, but by himſelfe pray to God, he ſhalbe made partaker of his requeſt. But what opinion the ancient church had of worſhipping of ^c Chryſoſt. hom. 17. ex varijs in Math. locis.

^b Ibid

^b Hom. de proſect. Euangelij tom. 4.

of sepulchers and inuocation of Saints it hath beene before declared : it is sufficient here that wee acquit Constantine from the opinion and practise thereof. But the thing that is spoken of Constantine in the place cited is, that his sonne thought it a great honour that he might lay his fathers body in the porch or entry of S. Peter. Which speech howsoever it proceeded from Chrysostome is much different from the certaine and vndoubted story of Constantines buriall, of whom Eusebius declareth that building a sumptuous and stately church for a memoriall of the twelue Apostles hee did there also erect twelue goodly pillars, and so placed them as to haue in the middest a tombe and buriall for his owne body. This Constantine assumed to himselfe as a matter of his own disposition and agreeing to his imperiall state, and left it not as an honor of religious courtesie to be procured by his sonne. And therefore wee cannot see how Chrysostome should iustly say that his sonne thought it an honour done to his father, that hee might lay his body in S. Peters porch, vnlesse wee shoulde thinke that they did him an honour to lay him in the buriall which hee himselfe had prouided for himselfe. But let this passe as being nothing to the purpose : onely let M. Bishop remember that he hath done Constantine wrong in making Chrysostome to report of him that which indeed hee reported not, and therefore as yet we haueno prooffe that Constantine was of the same opinion in matter of religion with the present church of Rome.

¹ Euseb. de vita
Constant. lib. 4.
cap. 60.

26. W. BISHOP.

Euseb de vita
Constant. lib. 4.
cap. 60.
Ibid. cap. 71.

*He further tooke order for the burying of his own body in the middest of the Tombes of the twelue Apostles, that after his death he might be partaker of the prayers, which should be there offered in the honour of the Apostles. Neyther was he frustrated of his holy desire, for as it followeth in the 71. Chap. of the same booke, at his funerals, the people ioining with
the*

the Priests, with many teares, and great sighes, powred out praiers for the good Emperours soule,

R. ABBOT.

These twelue pillars before-named, erected by Constantine to answer the number of the twelue Apostles, wherewith for princely state he enuironed the place of his owne buriall, M. Bishop by his skill of metamorphising hath turned into the tombes of the twelue Apostles, whereas there was not any one of the Apostles buried or entombed there. Againe, he goeth about to perswade his Maiestie a matter as of Constantines intention, which was indeed no other but the historians iniudicious and presumed application, and yet as it standeth M. Bishop in no steede at all. Let him giue me leaue to censure Eusebius a little, because the ^a Canons of his owne church haue censured him much more. By Eusebius himselfe it is plaine that Constantine at the first acquainted no man with his purpose in the building of those twelue pillars: but forsooth ^b at the last it was plainly found by al men what he ment thereby. Yet Constantine did no more but onely take order that his body should be buried there, but Eusebius maketh construction what he thought thereof long before when by his owne confession he saide nothing. Constantine praied not for his ^c fathers soule at the performance of his funerals, nor wished any praiers to be made after his death for his owne soule, but hauing receiued baptism newly before his death, professed a steadfast hope that needeth no such after-praiers: ^d Now I knew that I am indeed a blessed and happy man: that God hath accounted mee woorthy of immortall life, and that I am now made partaker of the light of God. And when they that stood about him wished him longer life, he answered ^e that hee had now attained the true life, and that none but himselfe did vnderstand of what happinesse he was made partaker, and therefore that

^a *Gelas. 1. de-
cret. de Apocry.
Dist. 15. sancta Romana.*

^b *Euseb. de vita Constant. lib. 4.
cap. 59.*

^c De vita Constant. li. 2. c. 16.

^d *Ibid. lib. 4. c.
cap. 63.*

^e Ibid.

he hastened and would not delay his going to his God. Thus Constantine died outright a Protestant, he craved no prayers for his soule he dreaded no Purgatorie: hee died with full resolution of going immediately to his God. And thus Eusebius speaketh of him: About none saith he, hee was taken up to God, leauing to the ground the mortall part of himselfe but as touching the vnderstanding soule, the more diuine part being ioined to his God. But why then did the people praie for his soule? Surely not to deliuer him from purgatorie: no man did imagine him to bee broiling there: no man made question but that the soule of Constantine was in heauen. They praied onely to testifie their loue in wishing well to him to whom further they could doe nothing, euen as many amongst vs, who talking of friends departed, are woont to say, God rest his soule, Gods peace be with his soule, who yet notwithstanding deride and despise both Purgatorie and the Pope: euen as Austin praied for his mother Monica, and yet saith, I beleeue that thou O Lord hast already don that that I request, but do thou approue the freewil offerings of my mouth: euen as Ambrose praied for the emperor Theodosius, and yet saith of him *Theodosius being freed from doubtfull fight doth now enjoy the light everlasting, continuall tranquillitie & peace & for the things that he did in the body reioiceth now in the fruits of Gods reward: because he loued the Lord his God, he hath obtained the companie of the Saints euen as Charles the Great wrote to king Offa of this land to haue intercession made for Adrian the bishop of Bome being dead, not doubting, saith he, but that his soule is at rest, but yet to shew our faithfullnesse and loue to so deare a friend. It is Purgatorie that M. Bishop seeketh for in praier for the dead. If Purgatory be not in praier for the dead, it serueth not his turne. But in their praiers no Purgatorie was implied, as was before more at large declared: they serued to professe their beleeve as touching the hope of the faithfull in death, and to expresse their loue to them of whom they were vndoubtedlie*

ibid. cap. 64.

2 August. Confess. li. 9. ca. 13.

b. Ambros. de obit. Theodosii.

3 Foxe Acts and Monum. lib. 2. prope finem.

vndoubtedly perswaded, that they were already with the Lord.

27. W. BISHOP

Againe at a solenne feast which he held at the dedication of the Church built by him in Ierusalem: some of his Clergie preached and expounded the holie Scriptures: and other some with vnbloudy Sacrifice, and Mysticall consecrations, appeased the Godhead, and praised for the health of the Prince. Ibidem de vita Const. lib. 4. ca. 45.

R ABBOT.

This is as much as if M. Bishop should say, that vpon the Coronation day of his maiestie, our ministers and clergie in our solenne assemblies do preach the word of God, and administer the holy communion with thanksgiuing to God for his mercie, and by this memoriall of the passion of Christ entreating God for the forgiuenesse of our sins and continuance of his goodnesse towards vs: therefore both his Maiestie and wee all are of the same opinion in matter of religion with the present church of Rome. Let him vse the best strength hee can, yet shall he not by the words of Eusebius prooue any other thing then done vnder Constantine, but what by vs vnder his most excellent Maiestie is done at this present time. For what? because Eusebius mentioneth vnbloudy sacrifice must wee heereby conceiue to be ment the sacrifice of the masse, a true and reall sacrifice wherein the very body and bloud of christe really and substantially present is offered to God for propitiation of finnes both of quicke and dead? Eusebius was very farre from any such meaning teaching vs that ^a Christ Euseb. de. demor. strat. Euang. lib. 1. hauing offered a marvelous sacrifice & most excellent oblation for our saluation did deliuer vnto vs to offer vnto God a memoriall or remembrance thereof instead of a sacrifice. The remembrance of which sacrifice, he saith, we haue learned to performe at his table by the signes of his body and bloud. So that whereas M. Bithop would haue vs to beleue a reall sacrifice, Eusebius telleth vs only of a remembrance in steed of sacrifice: and whereas M. Bithop would haue the sacrifice performed by the very body and bloud of Christ, Eusebius telleth vs that it is performed by the signes of his body and bloud. The manner of the fathers indeede is to call the celebration of the sacrament by the name of a sacrifice because as S. Austin obserueth touching that point, ^b sacraments doe take the name of the thinges whereof they are sacraments because of the resemblance that they haue to the same thing: euen as the sacrament of Christes body is in some sort his body, and the sacrament of Christes bloud is in some sort his bloud, and though Christ suffered but once, yet because of the celebration of the sacrament it is called the day of Christes passio wherein we keepe the memoriall thereof, and though Christ in himselfe were sacrificed but once, yet in a sacrament or mystery he is euery day sacrificed for the people: not in himselfe, but in a mysterie: euen as elsewhere he saith: that ^c the flesh and bloud of Christes sacrifice was giuen in his passion in very truth, but after his ascension is celebrated by a sacrament of remembrance. And thus the fathers themselues declared their own meaning purposely and professedly, ^d we offer not another sacrifice but alwaies the same, yea rather we worke the remembrance of a sacrifice: ^e We offer him the same alwaies or rather we make a remembrance of the offering of him as if hee were now offered or sacrificed: ^f We doe not offer another sacrifice but doe performe a remembrance of that one and sauing sacrifice, that by beholding the figures or signes we may call to mind the sufferings that he undertooke for vs. And hereto serue the words of Cyprian: ^g In all our sacrifices we make mention of the Lords passion, for the passion of the Lord is the sacrifice which we offer. For if the passion of Christ be the sacrifice which we offer, our sacrifice cannot be a sacrifice now really offered, because christe now suffereth not his passion really, and therefore it is but onely a memoriall of the sacrifice

A a 2 performe

^b August. epist.
23.

^c Cont. Faust.
Manich. lib. 20.
4.21.

^d Chrysof. & Ambros. in
Heb. 10.
^e Theophyl. in
Heb. 10.
^f Theodoret. in
Heb. 8.

^g Cyprian. lib. 2.
epist. 3.

crifice of his passion, of which S. Austin truly saith, ^h for ^h August. cont. the soueraigne and onely true sacrifice the blood of Christ was shed for vs, that wee may vnderstande that the shedding of Christs blood, which was onely vpon the crosse, was the onely true sacrifice, and our sacrifice only so called for that it is the resemblance and remembrance thereof. Which is ineuitably and inuincibly deduced from a principle which Bellarmine himselve cannot but acknowledge and yeelde vnto. For ⁱ to a true and reall sacrifice there is necessarie a true and reall death or destroying of the thing sacrificed. But there is now no true and reall death or destroying of the body of christe, and therefore now there can be no true and reall sacrifice thereof. With which argument the great Iesuite is so troubled as that he staggereth like a drunken man, and indeed knoweth not what to say, neyther can M. Bishop with all his fellowes deuise a salue to helpe that fore. The Iesuite telleth vs for answeere to the matter that by consecration the body of Christ is ordeined to a true, reall, & externall alteration and destruction. By consecration then the body of Christ is ordeined and prepared to that destruction, but not yet destroyed, and therefore in consecration is no sacrifice, and how then standeth it which afterwards he saith that the Apostles did sacrifice by consecration? He telleth vs that by consecration the bodie of Christ receiueth the forme of food, and food is ordeined for eating, and consequently for alteration and destruction. But then there can be no sacrifice till it be food indeed, because till it be food there can be no alteration nor destruction. So that the sacrifice dependeth vpon that which the priest eateth, and if the priest eat not, then there is no sacrifice. And what if he doe eat and according to the cases that they put doe after his masse cast it vp againe before it receiue any alteration: is there then a sacrifice or not? For Thomas Aquinastelleth vs that ^h the bodie of Christ remaineth in the stomacke so long as the substance of bread would remaine if it were there: so that it before digestion he cast vp ⁱ Bellarm. de Missâ, lib. 1, ca:

2. & 27.

^h Thom. Aquin.
part. 3. q. 80.
art. 4. incorp.

that which he hath eaten, it is still the body of christ : and I would then know whether there haue beene a sacrifice or not ? Bellarmine telleth vs that the altering and destroying of the body of christ which must make it a sacrifice consisteth in this that it doth amittere esse sacramentale lose the sacramentall being of it. But in this case it hath not yet lost his sacramentall being : therefore as yet it cannot be affirmed to be a sacrifice. Yea and the loosing of that sacramentall being is no true and reall destroying of the body of christe : how then is there a true and reall sacrifice of the same body ? And how is this loosing of the sacramentall being thereof ? forsooth desinit esse in altari: it ceaseth to be vpon the altar. But it must haue the being of a sacrifice vpon the altar or not at all. For there it is a sacrifice where it is offered : but vpon the altar it is offered : therefore vpon the altar it must haue the condition of a sacrifice, and not by being taken from the altar. And what if it be not taken from the altar at all, shall this againe hinder the sacrifice ? Howsoeuer that be, shall we say that the ceasing of the body of christ to be vpon the altar is a true and reall destroying thereof ? When Isaac was bound and laid vpon the altar, and was then againe vnbound and taken from the altar, might it be said thereupon that he was truly and really destroyed ? He addeth further, desinit esse cibus sensibilis, it ceaseth to be sensible food. But that it ceateth not to be but in the priests belly : so that in the priests belly is the act of sacrifice, or else there is no sacrifice at all. A goodly matter that the priestes belly is become the altar where christ must be sacrificed for the forgiuenesse of the sins of quicke and dead. Let vs heare, M. Bishop, how you free your selfe from this imputation : all the Iesuites learning could not do it, let vs see what help you can yeeld him in this behalf. Now as the name of sacrifice, so the name of unbloody sacrifice hath a far other meaning with the fathers thē M Bishop gathereth therof, not being opposed to the sacrifice of christ vpon the crosse, but to the bloody sacrifices of the

Iewes in the killing of sheep and oxen and such other like, almost all things amongst them being purged with blood. And this is plain by the author of the Apostolicke constitutions vnder the name of Clemens, who making a comparison betwixt the Iewes and vs amongst other points letteth down this, ^m In stead of bloody sacrifice he hath ordained a reasonable unbloody and mysticall sacrifice, which for memoriall of the Lords death is celebrated by the signes of his body and blood, ^{m Clem. Apostol. Constitut. lib. 6. cap. 23.} exprely to the same purpose as Eusebius hath before spoken. Where albeit he apply the name unbloody sacrifice to the Lordes supper, yet how farre from the meaning of a true and reall sacrifice, let Iustinus Martyr teach vs, who saith, ^{Iustin. Mart. dial. cum Tryphon.} that praier and thanksgiuings are the only sacrifices that Christians haue receiued to offer, that by their dry & moist nourishment (that is the outward elements of bread and wine) they may be admonished of those things which God the sonne of God hath suffered for them, plainly instructing vs that in the sacrament of the body and blood of christ there is nothing else ment by the name of unbloody sacrifice but only praier and thankfull remembrance of that sacrifice which christ the sonne of God hath offered for vs. In a woorde very euident and plaine it is that by the name of unbloody sacrifice they noted the whole spirituall worship of God, which is recommended vnto vs without that carnall seruice which by blood was performed in the law. So Cyril saith that ^{Cyril Cont. Iulian. lib. 4.} God hauing cut off all bloody sacrifices hath taught vs by christ to worship him in spirit and truth, and thereby giueth vs to vnderstande that to offer the unbloody sacrifice is to worship God in spirit and truth, which he further exprelieth in another place saying ^{p lib. 10.} that wee hauing left the grosse and carnall seruice of the Iewes do vse spirituall and mentall sacrifices, offering to God for a sweet savour faith, hope, charity, iustice, continencie, obedience, gentleness, continuall prayer and other vertues. Thus Occumenius ^{Occumen. in Heb. 13. Et scilicet de demonstrat. Evangel. lib. 1.} defineth the unbloody sacrifice to consist in verses and hymnes and praieres vnto God, and Eusebius in pure and holy sta fide ad Re.

¹ *Ibid.*² *Rom. 12. 1.*³ *Cyril. de re-
gin. lib. post.*

holy workes, and confounding it so often with ¹ the reasonable seruice of God commended to vs by the Apostle S. Paul, teacheth vs that it standeth in giuing vp our bodies to be a liuing sacrifice holy and acceptable vnto God, and at large describeth it thus: We sacrifice and burne incense, one way celebrating the remembrance of that great sacrifice by the mysteries which he hath deliuered and giuing thanks for our saluation, and offering religious and deuout hymnes and prayers to God: another way consecrating our selues wholly vnto him, and dedicating our selues both in body and soule to his high priest euen the woorde Iesus Christ. Thus Cyril saith that ² Christ hath innumerable in heauen that doe offer vnto him spirituall and vnbloudy sacrifices, and we hope that M. Bishop will not hereupon gather that the Saints say Masse in heauen, but will take the same for hymnes and praises and thanksgiuings, as by Cyril himselfe it is expounded. By all which it is plaine and euident that the name of vnbloudy sacrifice in the language of the fathers foundeth nothing but what is approoued and followed in the doctrine and practise of our church.

⁴ *August. in Ioan. tract. 80.*⁵ *Theod. dial. 1.*⁶ *Theod. dial. 2.*⁷ *Chrysofom.
m. 1. Cor. hom. 7.*

As for mysticall consecration it is but that which S. Austin speaketh of concerning baptisme, ² the adding of the woorde to the outward element to make thereof a sacrament, wherby the thing that in nature is common becommeth mysticall in vse, ³ not by changing the nature thereof, but by adding grace vnto nature. And thus bread and wine by consecration or sanctification through the woord of God become mysticall signes of the body and bloud of Christe, yet ⁴ they doe not hereby depart from their nature of bread and wine, but they continue still in their former substance and figure and forme, though vnderstood to be that they are now made, mysticall signes of christes body and bloud, and therefore vsed with reuerence accordingly. For ⁵ mysteris are so called, as Chrysofom saith, because wee doe not see therein that which we beleene, but we see one thing & beleene another. The unbeleener, saith he, hearing of the water of baptisme baptisme tak, this to be meere ly water, but I doe not barely see that which I see, but I behold therein the cleansing of the soule by the holy ghost. To which purpose it is laide by the Nicene^b council^b Our baptisme must be considered not with bodily^{Concil. Nicen.} eyes but with the eyes of the minde. I thou seest water, but consi-^{append. ex Cut-} der the power of God hidden in the water. I thinke the water to be full of the sanctification of the holy ghost and of diuine fire.^c So therefore^c the sacraments which we receiue of the body^{Gelas. cont.}

 and bloud of Christ are to our faith by this mysticall conse-^{Enych. & Ne-} cration a diuine thing, & we thereby (being duely partakers therof) are made partakers of the diuine nature, and yet there ceaseth not to be the substance or nature of bread and wine.
 Wherefore neither in vnbloudy sacrifice nor in mysticall consecration hath M. Bishop found any thing to helpe him selfe, nor hath yet any good ground whereupon to affirme that Constantine was of the same opinion in matter of religion with the present church of Rome.

28. W. BISHOP.

Moreover this zealous emperour reprehended Acesius (a¹, Sozomen. lib. 1.
 Novatian hereticke) for says g, that it was not in the power of^{hist. Eccl. cap.} Priests, but of God onely to forsue sinnes,^{21.}

R. ABBOT.

If M. Bishop had but the common honesty of a man, hee would not thus seeke to delude any man, much lesse deale thus vndutifully and disloyally with his prince. Hee cannot but know if hee know the storie at all, but that in this mater of Acesius there is nothing either for him or against vs in any controuersie betwixt vs and them. In the² Theodores.
 time of Decius the emperour² there were manie that for^{heret. fabul. li.} feare and by extremitie of torment did renounce their^{3. in Nouato.} faith, and yeilded to sacrifice vnto idols. Of these there grew question afterwards, whether they were vppon their repentance to be admitted to the communion of the church or not. Nouatus defended that they were not to be any more receiued to the fellowship of the church, and added further that no man so falling could be put in hope of saluation,^b albeit he did afterwards at things pertaining to repentance and confession of the faith of Christ. Heereupon he and his followers first withdrawing themselues, were excommunicated and separated from the church. Acesius afterwards at the time of the Nicene Councell was a bishop of this faction. ^c Constantine desirous to bring all to vnitie and concord, sent for the same Acesius to be present at the Councell, and all being there ended, asked of him how he did approue those things that were agreed vpon concerning the rule of faith and obseruation of Easter. He signified his liking thereof as which had testimonie from the verie time of the Apostles. The emperour demaundeth why then he did not communicate with the church? Acesius heereupon reporteth the whole matter that befell vpon the persecution of Decius the emperour and propoundeth the obseruation of a very rigorous Canon, that they who after Baptisme did fall into that kinde of sinne which the Scriptures call the sinne vnto death, should not bee partakers of the holy mysteries, but should bee exhorted to repentance and expect the hope of forgiveness, not at the priests hands but of God, who both can and hath authoritie to forgive sins. To whom Constantine answered, Why then, Acesius set up a ladder for thy selfe, & go thou alone to heauen. Where we are first to obserue that M. Bishop misreporteth the wordes of Acesius, as if he had wholly denied to the ministerie of the church the power of remitting sinnes, whereas he denied onely the power to remit ^d illud peccati genus, that kinde of sinne, meaning thereby mortall and greuous sinne, misunderstanding to that purpose and misapplying the words of S. Iohn, ^e There is a sin vnto death, for which I say not that men should pray. In which point we altogether differ from Acesius, affirming that the church doth not forgieue

^b Euseb. hist. Eccl. lib. 6. ca. 42.

^c Socrat. hist. lib. 2 ca. 7. Sozomen. lib. 1. cap. 21.

^d Socrat. & Sozomen. vt sup.

^e 1. Iohn. 5. 16.

forgiue lesser sinnes onely, but also greater: yea with Ambrose we make greater sinnes the more speciall ſubiect of this remiſſion, becauſe ¹ greater ſins are to be ſupported with the greater ſtaies, and men in moſt hainous ſinnes do moſt hardly yeelde ſatiſfaction and comfort to themſelues. A-gaine we are to note, that the matter heere ſpoken of is not that Popiſh private abſolution which M. Biſhop heere decietfully recommendeth to his Maieſtie, a thing which neyther Conſtantine nor Aceſius euer imagined or dreamed of, as it is now practiſed in the church of Rome, but it is rather the publicke abſolution and forgiueneſſe of the church whereby men excommunicated or debarred from the communion for notorious offences, were vpon good ſatiſfactiō & aſſurance of their true repentance receiued againe to be partakers of the table of the Lord. And this appeareth plainly by the phraſes whereby they noted this forgiueneſſe, ² concedere pacem, to grant reconcilement: 3 tribuere communicationem, to yeeld publicke fellowſhip: 4 red-dere communionem, to giue them the communion againe. But it appeareth more plainly by that which S Auſtin affirmeth to haue bene ⁵ a warie and good promiſe of the auncient church very neere to the Canon which Aceſius vrged, that in notorious and great offences ⁶ repentance, and conſe-quently forgiueneſſe ſhould bee graunted but onely once, which M. Biſhop will not conceiue of their forgiuing of ſinnes, and by the church it was not denied to leaue hope of Gods forgiueneſſe, and therfore muſt needs be vnder-ſtood of church forgiueneſſe, to bee admitted to the com-munion againe. Now Aceſius wholly denied that after baptiſme any ſuch forgiueneſſe might be yeelded to noto-rious offenders: hee admitted them to be penitents, and would haue them exhorted to true repentance, and ſo left to God, but hee graunted them no reconcilement nor reſtitution to the church. What is this then to vs, who denie not but that the miniſterie of the Church hath authoritie as to binde and ſeparate; ſo to looſe

¹ Ambros. de
penitent. lib. 1.
cap. 2.

² Cypriande
lapſis.

³ Ibid

⁴ Ambros. de penitent. lib. 2
cap. 1.

⁵ Auguſt. epiſt.
54.

⁶ Socrat. hiſt.
lib. 6. cap. 29.

^m 2. Cor 2.7.10 and to receiue againe, ^m to forgiue, to comfort, ⁿ to restore them whome the sorrowe of their sinnes hath cast downe that they may not be swallowed up with ouermuch heauinesse, and that not onely in small but in great sinnes also not once onely as the auncient church did, but as Chrysostome against that auncient Canon sayd, ^o Enter if thou repent euen a thousand times. But this forgiuenesse in foro ecclesie being a part of the publick discipline of the church was not nor is in it selfe that which properly we call forgiuenesse of sinnes inwardly by it selfe to acquit the conscience to God. Albeit we denie not but that the faithfull penitent vpon conscience of his true repentance, by profession whereof he is acquitted on earth, apprehendeth in foro conscientie that by Christ hee is also acquitted in heauen, because he hath sayd, ^p what soeuer ye binde on earth, shall be bound in heauen, and what soeuer ye loose upon earth shall be loosed in heauen. But the assurance of this forgiuenesse of sinnes is gathered onely by a consequent of that which the minister doth, and consisteth not as the popish priest imagineth in the very act it selfe of ministeriall absolution. The offendour by excommunication is cut off from the body of the church, wherein only is forgiuenesse of sinnes, and out of the society whereof there is no forgiuenesse. Which cutting off notwithstanding is no other but the notification of the sentence of God whereby he stood cut off before from the first acting of his sinne. And this is to him so long as he so continueth an assurance that he standeth in the state of condemnation, because Christ hath said what soeuer ye binde on earth shall be bound in heauen, and ^q whose sinnes yee retaine they are retained, albeit it be not by their act that he is first bound in heauen, who before was bound, and should be bound in heauen though in earth hee be not bound; but their act is only the publication and testimonie thereof. But when God toucheth his heart with vnfeined repentance, the case is forthwith altered with God, neither doe wee doubt but from the first moment he is with

God freed from his sinne, and reunited to the body and fellowship of the church: yet the notification and knowledge of this releafe is to be taken from the sentence of the church by being by the absolution thereof restored againe to that communion and fellowship to which properly appertaineth the benefite of remission of finnes. Whercof if the penitent by occasion faile, yet as Ambrose sayd of Valentinian the Emperour dying without baptisme that therefore he was as if he had it, because he did desire it: so the penitents desire of forgiveness for reconciliation to the church supplieth the want thereof, because the act of the church is not the act of Gods forgiveness, but the testimonie and declaration of that which beforehand is already done with God. Which therefore is nothing with God if there bee not in the partie absolued that penitencie that should reconcile him vnto God, and though outwardly he be, yet is he not spiritually reconciled to the body of the church. And yet if afterwards hee shall vnfeignedly repent, hee hath thereby assured hope of forgiveness with God, because there standeth not against him any barre of disunion from the societie of the church, the former release taking effecte without iteration, euen as baptisme though couerfeitly taken hath effect to ingrasse into the body of the church without any rebaptising when the partie baptised shall afterwarde by true conuersion approue the same. Thus therefore spiritually to forgive finnes properly belongeth to God onely, neither doth the church therein take vnto it any societie or fellowship with him. Therfore Ambrose noteth ¹ that when Christ would pardon the sinne of the adulteresse in the Gospell hee ibid de alone. Pist. 76.

For it is not the embassadour, it is not the messenger, saith he but the Lord himselfe that hath saved his people. He abideth alone because it cannot be common to any man with Christ to forgive finnes. This is the office of Christ onely who hath taken away the finnes of the world. And this whole matter plainly appeareth by Cyprian who professedly speaking of the ab-

² Ambros. de obit. Valentin.

¹ Ambros. e-

solution and forgiueneſſe of the church by occaſion of ſome who ouer eaſily had obtained the ſame that they might not flatter themſelues that they were thereby diſcharged, wholly to ouerthrow M. Biſhops craft and occupation of forgiuing of finnes, vſeth theſe wordes: Let no man deceiue himſelfe, let no man beguile himſelfe: it is the Lord onely that can ſhew mercy: it is he onely that can pardon the finnes that are committed againſt him; who himſelfe bare our finnes, who ſorrowed for vs, whom God deliued for our finnes. Man cannot be greater then God, neither can the ſeruant by his fauour remit or pardon that which by great tref-paſſe is committed againſt the Lord, leaſt to the former fall this be added for another fault to be ignorant of that that is ſaide, Cursed is the man that truſteth in man. The Lord is to bee in-treated who onely hath receiued all iudgement of the Father.
 Thus Cyprian ſpake, then whom no man diſputed more earneſtly againſt the Nouatian & Aceſian heretickeſ: hee challengeth the power of forgiuing finnes, as it is properly vnderſtood to God onely: he yeeldeth to the Miniſterie a power to remit and forgiue, but ſo, as it remaineth to God ^{to make good that which for penitents is done by the} ^{Prieſt, or by the miniſterie of the church.} Speaking purpoſely of the abſolution giuen by the church, he woulde neuer haue ſo abſolutely diſclaimed the forgiueneſſe of finnes, if he had taken the Prieſts abſolution to bee. as the Popiſh Prieſt taketh it, an immediate and actuall forgiue-neſſe in the ſight of God. But he neuer knew M. Biſhops facultie of forgiuing finnes, a meere deluding and de-ſtroying of ſoules hee was neuer acquainted with his po-piſh ſhrift or auricular confeſſion. We approoue the ſame that he did: wee ſet no barre againſt any mans reconcile-ment to the church. We pronounce forgiueneſſe of finnes by the worde of the Goſpell generally to all that repent.
 Particularly alſo to euery man afflicted in conſcience, and truly repenting him thereof we ſay, ^{Be of good comfort:}

c Cyprian. de
 lapſis.

n ibid. ſub
 finem

* Mat. 9. 2

† Ierem. 31. 34. thy finnes are forgiuen thee: For ſo God hath promiſed, and 10^r Iesus Christ all the prophets beare witness that through his^r name all that beleue in him shall haue forgiveness of sinne. Acts 10.43.

And that in distresse of mind by occasion of any weightie matter hee may the more fully and effectually apprehend the comfort heereof, Christ hauing giuen authority for the reconcilment of sinners to the body of the church in the societie thereof to be partakers of the forgiveness of sins, because out of that societie there is no forgiveness, wee doubt not to say in the ministerie of the church, I absolue thee from all thy sins, not as merely by this our act to acquite him in heauen, but heereby to assure him that Christ acquiteth him in heauen, because hee hath promised, that what we loose on earth shall be loosed in heauen, as before was said. But otherwise or in other meaning to say as the Popish Priest saith, I absolue thee from all thy sins, we hold it a presumption of Antichrist, & no authority giuen there of by the Gospell of Iesus Christ.

29. W. BISHOP.

Finally, toward true Bishops, the lawfull Pastors of Christes Church, he caried such a reuerend respect, that being in the councill of Nice, he would not sit downe, before they had beckned vnto him so to doe. And was so far from taking upon him to be supreme iudge, in causes Ecclesiasticall: that hee openly there professed, that it did not belong to him to iudge of Bishops, but to be iudged by them

R. ABBOT.

The singular modestie and humilitie of this most noble Christian Emperour is by M. Bishop singularly abused to his wronge, and to the derogation of all other Christian princes, and is vrged against the practise of himselfe. Euseb. de vita He was of so lowly carriage, as that hee called^r euerie one Constant. lib. 36. his brother and fellow seruant, and therefore no maruell if^r cap. 23. towards towards so many graue and reuerend bishops hee demeaned himselfe in very modest wise. Hee sate not downe till the bishops beckned on him, but yet he sate in the highest place on a seate of gold: they all rose to him at his coming in, and sate not downe till he was set, and his lowly behaviour towards them did not make them forget their dutie toward him. When hee was set they bring to him their libells and articles one against another: hee for loue and quietnesse sake refuseth to meddle therewith: hee telleth them that he were fitter to be iudged by them then they by him, and so causeth all their scroles and bills to be cast into the fire, and bendeth himselfe to perswade them all to concord and peace. But therein we see the Bishops acknowledging him to be their supreme iudge, and therefore referring their quarrels and controuersies to him, and from their act should we rather argue for the supremacie of the prince, then from his modest refusal for the denying of it. But it plainly appeareth in the story that he sate as president and moderatour of that councill, receiuing euery mans opinion, helping sometimes one part, sometimes another: reconciling them when they were contemiously wrangling: gently and curteously talking to euery man, appeasing some, perswading others, praysing others till he brought them to a concord and agreement in the faith: yea and when the Bishops of Egypt afterward grewe to contention againe ^d he interposed himselfe as arbitratour of their controuersies. Yea and afterwards he by his letters is laid ^e to haue prescribed to the Bishops such thinges as belonged to the good of Gods church. And that M. Bishop may know that Constantine held himselfe the supreme iudge ouer bishops, let him heare Constantine himselfe saying concerning them: If wee haue holy Bishops, of right beleife, and men endued with humanity we shalbe glad: but if any audaciously and vnadvisedly shal grow to the commending of those pestilent heresies, his insolency shalbe repressed by the execution of Gods seruant, euen by me. Therefore he accepted of appeales when they were made

^b ibid. cap. 10.

^c ibid. ca. 13.

^d cap. 22.

^e cap. 23.

^f Theodore.
hist. lib. 1. ca. 19

^g August. epist.
162.

made to him^a from the Judgement of the bishops, and either heard matters himself or appointed those that should hear them. And so wee finde that^b Felix a bishop by the commandement of the same Emperour had his cause heard and was acquitted before his proconsull or lieutenant. And when the Donatists said that a bishop should not haue his purgation before the lieutenant, S. Austin answereth, ⁱAs ifⁱ saith he, the bishop himselfe had so taken course for himselfe, and the emperour had not command. d that the matter should be so enquired of, to whose charge (whereof he was to giue account to God) that matter d. d speciallie beleng. And to doth he send for the bishops that by his commandement were assembled in a councill at Tyrus. ^kto giue account to him of^k that they had done there, and in his hearing to shew how trulie and sincerely they had caried themselves in their iudgement. Whereby as by many other like arguments it is manifest to all men that Constantine held himselfe to haue a supremacie ouer bishops and to be iudge of their iudgements, and that M^r Bishop seeketh merely to abuse his most excellent Maiestie in alleaging the example of Constantine against him.

Aug. ep 162.

Ibid.

Ibid.

Socrat. hist.

lib. 1. ca. 22.

Sozomen. lib. 2.

ca. 27.

Ruffi. lib. 1.

hist. cap. 2.

30. W. BISHOP.

If then this right Puissant Emperour, and most sincere Christian, reuerenc'd the Sacrifice of the Masse, & belueed that there was power in Priests to remit sins, that Saints were to be praised vnto, and that prayer was to be made for the dead, and such like, as appeareth by the euident testimony, of most approved authors, that liued with him: hath your Maiesty any cause to doubt but that in matters of faith, he agreed with the present Roman church? Wherefore my hope and trust in Almighty God is, that you in your high wisdom, vpon mature and due consideration, how many old condemned errors the Protestants hold: & withall weighing that the whole frame of their Doctrine tendeth to the disgracing of God, and his Saints, to the discouragement of men, from well doing, & doth (as it were) loosen the raines unto all fleshlie libertie: will in time make a most Godly resolution, to imitate that famous Emperour Constantine. He contrarie to his former education, embraced with all his power that same Romane Religion, which we now professe: And (which is worthisie to be obserued) he feared nothing the contrarie disposition of the multitude, or greater part of his subiects, that were wholly led another way. But following the blessed example of his most v. rtuous Mother S. Helena, reposed himselfe in the powerfull assistance of the Almighty, and chased all other Religions into corners, setting up and firmly stablishing the Roman. There can be no cause alledged why your Maiesty may not do the like; if it shal please God effectually to stir up your gracious minde, and to bend your hart to undertake it: for at that time there was more likelihood of resistance, then nowe: and now much more help at hand, if any resistance should be offered.

R. A B B O T.

You are an excellent man M. Bishop, at a conclusion. If you could furnish and secure the premisses as you can enhance & amplify the conclusion wee should be terribly troubled with you. But it is truelie saide; Debile fundamentum fallit opus: a slight foundation makes a falling house: you might easily haue presumed that his Maietty is of more found and setled indgement then to be moued with such base and beggerly collections. We cannot finde in your allegations either your sacrifice of the Masse, or your Popish power to forgiue sinnes, or any other of the points which either you haue here repeated or before propounded. We heare you say it but we cannot see you proue it, that Constantine in matter of faith agreed with the present Roman church. Indeede he neuer knew the faith that is now in Rome: if he were now alieue he would spit in your faces that go about to make him partaker of your new & abhominable ble deuises. And therefore as touching his most excellent Maiestie we doubt not but that finding your forcible reasons to be friuolous & vaine follies, your petitions & supplications to be nothing else but Donatistickall importunities, he will still embrace the truth which he hath receiued and as he hath hitherto detested your impious and wicked proceedings, so he will detest them more and more, and by all meanes endeouour to keepe his people free from those damnable idolatries and superstitions whereto you labour to entrappe them. In which course his Maiestie hath great cause to assure himselfe of the ready assistance of almighty God, hauing had so good and notable experience thereof in himselfe, and beholding it so cleerely in our late renoumed Queene, whose miraculous preservation against so many bloody counsels and attempts of secret and open enemies, and namely of this viperous and serpentine generation of Iesuites and Romish priestes, may iustly giue his Maiestie encouragement to doe as shee did, stedfastly to continue in that which by the woorde of God he hath learned vndoubtedly to bee the truth of God. Your obiections of heresies and disgracing God and his Saints are cleared before. As touching good life and conuersation, we see not such fruites of your doctrine as that we can thinke you haue any cause to bragge thereof. If there were of vs any such miscreants, such monsters and diuels incarnate, as there haue been of your Popes and Cardinals, his Maiestie would not forbear to shew himselfe the seruant or officer of God, as Constantine called himselfe, to be auenged of such doings. Such Atheists, such dogges there were neuer found in any decourse of men. Machiauell the master of them could say ² that there is no where lesse piety or religion then in them that dwell neerest to Rome, and the common prouerbe importeth somewhat the ncerer the church the further from God. It is come to ^b that passe with them that the name of a christian is a word ^{Orig. Monach.} of reproch, and is vsed in the Italian tongue to note ^a lib. 6. ca. 66.

² Machiauel.
disputat. de
rep. lib. 1. ca. 12.

^b Hospin. de
Orig. Monach.

^a lib. 6. ca. 66.

blockhead or foole. You say our doctrine tendeth to fleshly liberty, but it is your doctrine of absolutions and pardons that is the very fountaine of all wickednesse and sinne. Marfilius Patavinus could say of it of old, that it was a pernicious and brainsicke doctrine, and the seducing of soules, such as all Christians should take heed of, whereby the Germanes complained, that all piety was abandon'd and extinguished with them, whence proceeded whooredomes, incests, adulteries perinuries, murders, theft, extortion, vsury and all manner euils. Matthew Paris could say of the time wherein your doctrine bare sway, He is in these times accounted a very good man that is not starke naught. As touching our selues we confesse that we are not such as we ought to be, neither doth our thankfulnesse in due sort answer Gods goodnesse towards vs, but yet we hope we are farre from being so bad as your owne stories haue reported you to be. Pardon vs, M. Bishop: we stand vpon our reputation in this behalf. We can neither heare of forren nations, nor see in the best of your catholickes among vs that there is any cause for you to take vpon you in conuersation to be preferred before vs.

^c Marfil. Patavin. defens. pacis. par. 2 ca. 26.

^d Centum gratiam. German. art. 3. apud. Illyric. in Catal. test. verit.

^e Matth. Paris. in Henr. 3

31. W. BISHOP.

Pardon me deare Soueraigne, if before I finish this argument, I seeme over-bold heere to present vnto your memorie, that all your most gracious and godly Progenitors, and all our holy Predecessors, who now (assuredly) stand before the tribunall of God: doe demaund and expect no lesse at your hands. For they found. d not Bishoprickes, Deaneries, and other spirituall livings: they builded not Colleges, and Schools, for Protestants or their fauourers. Ponder well therefore I beseech your Maiestie, whether they doe not, or may not iustly challenge of you, (to whom the administration of iustice belongeth,) to see and provide: that such Churches, Church-livings, & spirituall rewards of learning, as they erected & bequeathed to Roman men Bishops, and Priestes, be disposed, of and bestowed according to their erections, and foundation. If it shall please the Protestants to erect any new Churches, or bestow any other revenues towards their Ministers maintenance, let them haue them handy, and enioy them quietly: onely let them be content, out of their equitie: to leaue vs that which was provided for vs, and bequeathed vnto vs by our most Religious Auncestors.

R. ABBOT.

We see what it is, M Bishop that you would haue: you plead hard for Bishoprickes and Deanries, and surely you need not doubt but if you can make good that which you haue written, you shall haue what you desire. You say that all his Maiesties Godly progenitours and holy predecessours doe expect at his handes to establish the Romane religion: but howe come you to know their mind, or where haue you beene to aduise with them of that matter? Surely if they were asked their aduise for our direction, they would say as Abraham sayd, ^a They haue Moses and the prophets let them heare them. ^b They haue a sure word of the prophets & Apostles: let them looke to it as to a candle shining in a darke place, Yea but you tell vs that Bishoprickes and Deanries, and churches and church-liuings were by them erected and bequeathed to Romane Bishops and Priestes, not to Protestants and their fauourers. But you speake partially, M Bishop, and we cannot belecue you therein. By historie it appeareth plainly that ^c Austin the blacke Monke at his comming into this Iland neere fixe hundred yeres after the incarnation of Christe found here many Bishops and Priestes and very learned men farre differing from Romish Priestes, insomuch that they reiected his traditions which he brought from Rome, detested his pride, renounced his authority and would not accept him for their Archbishop as he desired to bee. There were then ^d Abbies a great number in which the flocke of christ

^a Luc. 16. 29;

^b 2. Pet. 1. 19.

^c Beda hist eccl. gent. Angl. lib. 2. cap. 2.

^d Galfrid. Monum. t. 1. lib. 8. cap. 4.

Bale. script. Britanic lib. 1.

oper. minor.

(being indeed of students in Diuinitie) was kept in good order. Amongst other there was at Bangor in Wales a church of a thousand two hundred Monkes, not Popish Monkes and idle belly-gods, but all liuing with the labour of their handes, and bestowing the time of rest from their labours in praier and meditation of the scriptures. Out of this church long before that time went ^c Pelagius the hereticke, whose doctrine of free will then not only the Britons but al Romish priests detested and abhorred, which now is stillie maintained by Romish Priestes.ouer that church at Austins comming was one Dinocchus a very learned man, who when Austin required the bishops to be subiect to his Romish authoritie, perswaded them by diuers arguments that they did not owe him any such subiection. Whereat Austin being offended, prouoked king Ethelbert against them, by whose procurement an armie of infidels was sent to slaie them, who cruellie and vnmercifully performed the slaughter, not sparing them who in their shirts came toorth to them to intreat mercy. At that time was there one ^d Daganus a bishop of Scotland that had beene brought vp in that colledge of Bangor, who also resisted the proceedings of that Romish Archbishop, and would not admit of alteration from those obseruations which from the first receiuing of religion had beene retained amongst them: Yea comming into England after the death of Austin he refused to eate with ^e Laurentius succeeding in the place of Austin and with Mellitus and Iustus, all of Austins company and condition, to signifie his detestation of those nouelties and superstitions that were brought in by them. Then it should seeme that our Bishoprickes and spirituall liuings were not first founded for Romish priestes, since a Romish priest could haue no entertainment amongst the Bishops that were here before, and by the meanes of that Romish priest so many were martyred for refusing to receiue him. Yea and a long time after the ^f Britons still refused those Romish

^c Bale vt supra.

^d Old English Chronicle cited by B. Iewel. de sens. of the Apolog. the. 5. part. in the beginning.

^e Centur. Magdeburg. 6. cap. 10. ex. Baleo.

^f Holinsh. hist. of England.

^g Beda hist. eccles. gent. Angl. lib. 2. cap. 20.

Romish nouelties, and with them ioined all the churches and bishops of Scotland, as ^k Aidanus, Finianus, Colman and many others, of whom the said ^l Aidanus was a man so renowned for his learning and pietie, as that Oswald king of Northumberland sent for him to Donwald king of Scots, and made him a bishop in his countrey, Now although Austin by that that he then brought from Rome did somewhat contaminate the faith of Christ, yet was it nothing to the filth and abhomination that afterwards was brought in: so that the name of a Romish priest is a meere equiuocation betwixt the priests that now are, and those that were then. For then did the kings of this land still retaine their supremacie in causes ecclesiasticall: they founded bishoprickes and inuested to them at their pleasure, as did ^m Edward the confessour the bishopricke of Exceter, and himselfe with his Queene inuested to it Leofricus: they made lawes for the order and government of the church as is to be seene by the lawes of ⁿ Edward, of Alfred, of Ethelstane, of Canutus and other princes before the conquest, and many lawes also made by Princes since the conquest against the vsurpations and intrusions of the Pope. Then were the Scriptures in ^p foure seuerall languages of so many seuerall nations in this Iland beside the Latine tongue common to them all, therout to search the knowledge of Gods truth. Then were they in monasteries ^q commaunded to bee exercised in the reading of the Scriptures, and euerie one was required to learne the Lordes prayer and the Creed in the English tongue. Then was the Communion ministred to the people in both kindes, so that ^r souldiours going to battle receiued it in that sort according as from the beginning was accustomed in the church. Then was Transubstantiation altogether vnknowne, and when it began to bee broched or not long after, ^s Elfricus then Archbishop of Canterburie, amongst manie Sermons which he translated out of Latin into the Saxon tongue

bee

^k Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 25.^l Bale script. Britan. cent. 1. op. minor.^m *Stowes. Annals in S. Edward.*ⁿ Foxe Acts and Monum. vol. 1. in the end
^o Reportes of Sir Edw. Cooke.^p Bed. hist. eccl. gent. Angl. lib. 1. cap. 1.^q Annals of John Stow in Ethelbald.^r Matth. Paris. in Harold. &^s Foxe Acts and Monuments ex. archiepis eccl. W. gorn & Exon.

be read publickely in the church, translated one to be read vpon Easter day, expressly contradicting that new deuise, and consequently ouerthrowing the sacrifice of the masse, Then did^c the Bishops and princes of this land condemne the second Nicene councill as idolatrous and contrary to the true faith for teaching the worshipping of images: hauiug receiued the booke of that countell sent vnto them from Charles the great, and writing to the same Charles an epistle substantially grounded out of the authoritie of holy scripture in reproofe thereof. Then were tithes and oblations giuen to married Priestes and so continued till the time of Hildebrand, who by an example new and straung and contrary to the expresse canon of the^x councill of Gangra, did remove them from dooing diuine seruice whence grew great. r scandall then euer grew by any heresie in the church. Yea and our most anncient cathedrall churches were places for married Priestes, not for Popish filthy Votaries, as by the anncient recordes of diuers of them and namely of the church of Worcester appeareth vntill this day. It was king^y Edgar that first expelled them almost a thousand yeeres after Christe, and that against the will of his nobles and commons, when they^z iustly pleaded for themselves that being the anncient poss. flours, they could not without wrong bee eicted from that they had so long holden, and therefore were by^a Alferus a Duke of the Mercians and other nobles and great men againe restored to their former places. It is plaine then that the most anncient foundations and donations were intended to vs, M. Bishop, and not to you, and therefore that we haue not therein vsurped any thing of yours, but recouered the possession of our owne. As for latter erections they haue bene of two sorts: some hauing respected in them a benefite to themselves: others aiming at the benefite of church and common wealth. Men were growen to the opinon that the building and indowing of religious houses should be the redemption of their finnes,

^c Roger Houed.
continuat. Beda part. 1 anno 792.

^a Matth. Paris.
in Will. Con
quest.
^x Concl. Gangr.
c. 4.

^y Bale. script.
Britan. Cent. 2.
in Edgare.
^z Foxe. Act.
and Monum.
ex Gulielm. de
regib lib 2.
^a Idem ex hist Iornalens.

finnes, and the purchase of their soules health. By reason whereof they became madde in giuing, and as out of his experience the diuell could say, ^b skinne for skinne, and all ^b Iob. 2. 4. that a man hath will be giue for his life, and as GOD himselfe hath recorded the humor of men to bee, ^c to giue his ^c Mich. 6. 7. first borne for his transgression, euen the fruite of his body for the sinne of his soule, to it befell here that menne burdened with their finnes and distressed in conscience, and wanting the light of the sunne of righteousnesse to giue them the light of true comfort did spare no cost, though to the wrong of their children and posterity, to light vnto themselues this wastung candle of fallie and deluding hope. Now because these foundationstended directly to the dishonour of Iesus Christ and to the empeachment of his glorious redemption, and ^d comming from the wages of a harlot did re ^d Mich. 1. 7. turne againe to harlots wages being eployed to the nourishment and practise of vncleane and filthie life, therefore the hand of God and his iudgement was vpon them and they were destroied with the destruction of Babell vtterlic to fall and neuer to rise againe. Other donations and erections there were, which although they were intangled with the superstition of those times, yet in their true and proper end were referred to the aduancement of learning for the good of church and common wealth. Some men preferred to high place finding the want of learning to bee a maim to themselues, were moued thereby to seeke the supply thereof in others. Other some without doubt were greatly offended to see the horrible decay of learning in monasteries and houses of religion which were woont to be the schooles and nurseries thereof. For after the conning in of the swarmes of locustes, that Romish vermine of ^e begging friars, all good artes and literature were ^e Hospinian. de abolished, the skie was euen darke with the foggy mistes ^e orig. Monach. of barbarous ignorance, and it came to passe that it was ^e lib. 6. ca. 28. taken vp for a common prouerbe, Monacho indoctor more vnlearned then a monke. Wherefore GOD determin-

ning the ruine and ouerthrow of that Sodome and Gomorrah raised vp the spirits of some by whom hee would prouide better for the blinding of his church. And hence arose those noble foundations of our Schooles and Vniuersities, not intended for Romish Priests but for learned men to serue the state in all occasions of employment, which by whomsoever they were builded are more trulie put to their vse by vs then they were by others that haue beene before vs; our Colledges also being brought in latter times by their abuse to meere sophistry and barbaritie, to studies of Necromancy and wicked arts: to the reading of the Master of the Sentences in steede of reading the holy scriptures, and the true vse of learning seldome to be found. Now if withall any thing hath come to vs which was directly intended to the maintenance of Romish idolatry and superstition, wee take the same as the spoile of Egypt wherewith to blind and furnish the Tabernacle of the Lord: and as you, M. Bishop, in your apostasie vsurped those donations that were first meant to vs and our religion; so giue vs leaue by the gift of our God iustly to inioie that that by the meaning of the founders was purposed to you. Which our Princes by their lawes assigning to vs haue done as Christian Emperours of old did, who in like sort ^{did} did passe to the true catholicke church the church and reuenues that were founded and giuen by Donatistes to heresie and schisme. And as the church at first did which entering vpon the temples and possessions of heathen idolaters conuerted the same to the ser- uice of the true God, neither did they thinke it a sufficient reason to relinquish the same to the maintenance of idolatry because they were at first intended to that use. And surely in these magnificall deuotions the Papistes can chal- lenge no more to themselues then of old the heathens might, who builded infinite stately temples and altars and bedecked with gold and siluer the idols and images of their Gods, and performed their idolatrous solemnities

¹ August. epist.
50.

² Arnob. adu.
gent. lib. 3.
³ Ieram. 10. 4.
Baruch. 6. 3. 9.
⁴ Tertull. de
baptismo

nities with great preparation and cost, and * offered large and continuall offerings, and endowed their priests with lands and possessions, the glory whereof made them despite the balenes as they tooke it of Christian religion, and they v^pbraided them to be ¹ Fruitle men, men that did no good, because they saw no such matters to proceed from them, Tertullian answering, ^m Plus inf:ant misericordia ^m Ibid.
nostra vicatim quam vestra religio templatim: Our mercy bestoweth more in the streetes then your religion doth in your temples. Yea and at this day they say that the Turkes cease not to bestirre themselues in building of religious houses for their Monkes and Priestes to performe such superstitions as their wicked Mahomet hath directed them, being perswaded by him that by such merits they must atteine to heauen. In all ages indeede it hath beene found *true which S. Ambrose sayth: * Ad sacrilegium perfidi* ⁿ Ambros. de largiores quam ad salutem fideles sunt: Misbeleeuers are ^{S. sancto. lib.} more full of largesse to sacriledge & idolatrie then are the faith ^{3. cap. 18.} full to those things that concerne saluation, because as men naturally doe more regard their owne children then strangers, so are they naturally more strongly possessed with humane deuises as their owne, then those things which are of God, which are so much the more strange by how much the more of natures corruption doth still remaine.
 Now therefore on the one side the largesse of Popery to the vse of their religion is no argumēt of the truth thereof, because Turkes and heathens doe the same: and on the other side as if Constantinople were brought vnder the iurisdiction of the Pope hee would not thinke it reason that those things which were consecrate to Turkish superstition shoulde therefore remaine still to the same vse: so no reason is it that those things which were first intended to Popish idolatrie amongst vs shoulde for that cause bee still continued to the maintenance thereof. Iustifie your religion to be of God, and we are readie to yeeld vnto you the mastership and rule of all. But that you cannot doe, • Iudg. 11. 24

and therefore wee say as Israel sayd of olde to the king of Ammon: ° Wouldest not thou possesse that which Chemosh thy God giueth thee to possesse? so whomsoever the Lord our God driueth out before us them will we possesse.

32. W. BISHOP.

If all these reasons, and exceeding many other which might be mustered, and produced to the same purpose, will not suffice to effect in your Maiestie, a loue and desire, to embrace that auncient Roman faith, which al your renowned Progenitors, so highly reuerenced, loued, and esteemed. Yet let me (prostrate on my knee) most humbly beseech your Highnesse, in the name of thousandes: that so farre forth they may preuaile with you, as you will not permit those rigorous lawes, framed against Recusant Catholickes, to be put in practise and executca. For howe can it seeme conformable to reason, in your Maiesties deepe wisdomes, and iudgement? that your louing Subiects should by compulsion and constraint, vnder that intollerable penaltie of losse of all their goodes, conforme themselves to such articles of Religion, that by the purest antiquitie were censured to be erroneous and execrable? And what miserie, and pittie were it, to drine them perforce, eyther to swallow downe the deadly poison of their soules, or else to endure besides the disgrace of the state, the losse of their worldly wealth and libertie? Consider and weigh with your selfe, my most gracious Liege, whether it will not bee thought ouer great seueritie, to presse men (euen against humane nature and condition,) with patience to heare their owne profession and beleefe, both vntruely slandered, and most bitterly reuiled and inueighed against: as in most Ministers sermons it is commonly. Yea to giue patient eare to them that blush not publickly, to call our blessed Saviours body in the holy SACRAMENT, an abhominable Idole: his glorious and immortall Saints, senselesse dead Men: his Vicar and Vicegerent on earth Antichrist, and euery Catholicke an Idolater. With infinite other intollerable reproches:

OUR

Our constant hope, euen yet, (though against hope) is, that your Maiestie out of your owne sweete naturall disposition, and most milde carriage in gouernment hitherto, will not only moderate, but suspend all such extremitie: And not suffer it to be extended against them, who in former doubtful times, were (in manner) the onely men, that defended and made manifest to the world, your Title and interest to the Crowne of England: and were no lesse willing to receiue you, when the time came: and as forward to haue assisted you (if neede had required) as any sort of Subiects within the land. And neuer since wittingly offended your sacred Maiestie in any thing. It may be objected that they doe not conformes themselues vnto a statute law made against their religion: Be it so. Then their Religion towards God not any contempt of their lawfull Superiour, doth commaund them from the conformitie, which is pardonable. Considering that they be no inuencers, or followers of nouelties, but onely hold on and perseuere in the faith of their forefathers. And what subiect is there among the most dutifull, that doth not often transgresse and giue offence to one statute law or other: yet for no other law, men are so hardly dealt withall, albeit they violate many of them together. Onely Catholikes are for the transgressing of one, huspeled and handled as though they were some hainous rebels, and traitors: Who (be it spoken without disparagement to others) are (by them that lue neere them) esteemed commonly, the most orderly subiects: as true of their wordes, as found in their deedes, of as great charitie and hospitalitie towards their neighbours, and compassion of the poore: briefly, of as moderate and ciuill carriage and behaviour, as most men in their countrie: So that to begger and vndoe them (as the execution of that law established, must needes do the poorer sort of them,) would be little lesse then to vndoe and destroy all good order, and Discipline in the common-weale.

R. ABBOT.

You muster often, M. Bishop, but by all your mustering ing you can not leuie a strong armie. Your souldiours are dwarfes to fight with Pygmees and not with men, and therefore no maruell if you neuer gaine the felde. You seeme strong to children and fooles, but men of vnderstanding can see that your strongest swordes are but reeds, and your best armour but like Adams fig-tree leaues. You call those rigorous lawes that are framed against recusant Catholikes, but therein you play the part of a lewde hypocrite. For are our lawes rigorous against you for mulct of goods, when your lawes proceede against vs to the shedding of our bloud? You demaund how it should seeme conformable to reason, that his Maiesties subiects should by compulsion and constraint conforme themselves to such articles of religion as by the purest antiquity were censured to be erroneous and execrable? But I demaund of you howe those his Maiesties subiects of whom you speake doe know that the articles to which they are required to conforme themselves are by the purest antiquity censured to be erroneous & execrable? Are they conuersant in the reading of antiquities? doe they peruse the writings of the fathers and the stories of the auncient church? Nothing lesse: they conceiue nothing but only as you informe them, and you gull them with your lies: with goodly wordes you seduce and beguile them: you tell them tales of the moone-shine in the mustard-pot, and to keepe them in the beleefe thereof you vse an art to frame them to this principle that they must reade nothing that is written by vs for discouery of your villanie and falsehood. You know well inough that if they vse their liberty to read our bookes, your cake will soone prooue dough, and you shall be found to be cozening and false harlots: but they are content in their seeliness to goe like fooles to the stocks, they knowe not whether, and vpon your worde to receiue that whereof they knowe nothing whether it be right or wronge. But how doth it appeare that the Articles of religion whereto they are required to conforme themselves are so censured by the

* Pro. 7. 22.

the purest antiquitie to be erroneous and execrable? We are taught that ^b the household of God are builded upon the foundations of the Apostles and prophets, (that is, ^c the newe and old testament) Iesus Christ himselfe being the head corner stone. This is the purest antiquitie, and of this antiquitie Cyprian sayth: ^d If Christ onely bee to be heard then are wee not to listen what any man before vs hath thought fite to be done, but what Christ hath done who is before all: For we are not to follow the custome of men but the truth of God. Doe you finde then that Christ by his Prophets and Apostles in the old or newe testament hath censured those articles whereto they are required to conforme themselues to be erroneous and execrable? They are required to come to the church where wee call vpon one God in the name of Iesus Christ: wee reade onely the scriptures and word of God: we administer the sacraments according to the very tenure and letter of the Gospell, and are these the things that are censured to be erroneous and execrable? Peter and Paule were the first auncient founders of the Romane church: they are a part of the purest antiquitie: shew vs, M. Bishop, what article there is in our diuine seruice that Peter and Paul haue censured to be erroneous and execrable? The antiquity that followed is not the purest antiquity, for you your selues say that you are faine ^e to beare with many errors in the auncient Catholicke writers, and yet what is there in our seruice which any one of them hath censured to be erroneous and execrable? You are they M. Bishop, that iustly deserue the rigour of the lawe who deale thus traiterously with his Maiestie and treacherously with his subiects to perswade them that those things by the purest antiquitie are censured to be erroneous and execrable which indeede are framed to the true paterne and example of the purest antiquitie in the seruice of the church. Nowe whereas you say that hereby they are driuen to swallow downe the deadly poison of their soules, I cannot better answer you then by the wordes of the Prophet, ^b Ephe. 2. 20.^c Ambros. in Eph. ca. 2.^d Cyprian. lib. 2. epist. 3.^e Index expurgat. in castigat. Bertram.

Esay 5 20.

phet, 'We unto them that call good euill and euill good. &c. It is not deadly poison which we deliuer exprelly and on-ly by the word of God, but that is deadly poyson which you haue drawne from the filthy lakes and puddles of the deuise of man. But you alleage that it is ouer great seueritie to presse men, euen against humane nature and condition with patience to heare their owne profession & beleefe both vntruely slaundered and most bitterly reuiled and inueighed against. But is that an argument for you in England which is no argument for vs in Italy and Spaine? Is it an argument for you with vs in the time of King Iames, which was no argument for vs with you in the time of Queene Marie? Was it not against humane nature and condition to presse vs to heare our profession and beleefe vntruely slandered or else to loose our liues, and is it against humane nature and condition to presse you to heare your profession and beleefe inueighed against, and for default to endure onely a penaltie of your goods? But your argument vnlesse you had better props for your profession will not serue your turne. Franticke men must not goe at libertie, because it offendeth them to bee bounde. The maladies of children must not be neglected and let alone, because it is greuous to them to endure the cure. Iustly are men to be forced to heare the discouerie of your profession, that they may vnderstand the wickednesse and abomination thereof. And whereas you say that the same is vntruely slaundered by our ministers, you say vntruely therein. For there is not one Minister amongst vs, who in his sermons doth so throughly lay foorth the villanie and wickednesse of your profession as in trueth the cause and matter thereof doth require. You giue vs instance of some of your greuances that we call our blessed Saviours body in the Sacrament an abominable Idoll: but we call not the body of Christ an abominable idoll: we call that an abominable idoll which you falsly terme the bodie of Christ, and vnder that pretence fall downe before it and worship it, and call it your

Lord

Lord and God. We say as the Apostle hath taught vs and antiquitie hath receiued that the Sacrament is in substance ^f bread, and onely ^s in name and power and after ^h a certaine ^f 1. Cor 10. 16. ^s 11. 26. ^{Euseb. hist ec-} ^{clesiast. l. 6. c. 42.} ^s Cypr. de re- ^{surrect. Christ.} ^h Aug. ep. 23. ^{imperfect. hom.} ^{11.} manner is accounted the body of Christ, ⁱ not the very body but a mysterie of his body, though such a mysterie as doth truely exhibite the body of Christ to be spiritually receiued of vs by faith in him. Now when you worship the Sacrament it selfe as being very Christ himselfe, and call the same your Lord and your God, what doe you but make a God of a peece of bread, and vnder the name of the bodie of Christ, set vp an idoll in the church: your second greuance that we call the glorious and immortal Saints dead men, is answered before. Your senselesse addition is your owne exaggeration: we vse no other termes of dead Saints then occasion requireth to challenge due honour to the immortal God. Their images indeed which you worship in their stead we iustly call senselesse blockes, and highly condemne your stupiditie and senselesnesse in doing religious duetie and seruice vnto them. Againe, you are offended that we call Christ's vicar and vicegerent on earth Antichrist. Indeede we call the Pope Antichrist, and doe affirme him therefore so to be, becaule he hath taken vpon him to be Christes vicar and vicegerent vpon earth, and heerein doth your singular impudencie and obstinacie appeare, that you will giue him that title which neuer anie prophet or Apostle, neuer any auncient Father, or Councell, or storie either in name or in nature, either in word or in meaning hath attributed vnto him. We haue heard before how Eleutherius bishop of Rome, acknowledged the title of Gods vicegerent to be the title of the prince, and therefore he condemneth you of disloialtie that will transfere the iust title of your prince to an vniustly vsurping forreine Priest. But that the Pope is Antichrist euen that great Antichrist that was forespoken of by Saint Paul and S. Iohn, I haue vndertaken to defend. The ^k booke is abroad: let you and me ioine vpon that issue: vntill you

Ec

disprooue

^k Antichristi demonstratio:
cont. fabul.
Pontific. &c.

disprooue our proofes, you must giue vs leaue still to say that the pope is Antichrist, and that you in seruing him doe make your selues vassals and slaues to the man of sin. For that matter I say content your selfe that we call a spade a spade: all the water in Tiber will not wash the pope from that blot, as afterwards also shall in some part appeere in examining the enterance of your booke. Lastlie, you are grieued that we call euerie Catholicke an idolater, and indeed we call your Catholickes idolaters, we call euerie papist an idolater, and that iustly vpon good warrant. For if ¹ consecration of images be idolatrie, what is euery papist but an idolater that consecrateth images and vseth them consecrated to worship them? What is he but an idolater that boweth to the ^m stocke of a tree, and ⁿ worshipeth the worke of his owne handes, which his owne fingers haue made, whereof it is truly saide, ^o They haue eyes and see not, eares haue they and heare not, &c. Thus the Scripture describeth idolatrie: this euery papist doth, and therefore euery papist doth that which the Scripture pronounceth to be idolatrie. And why doth this so much trouble you, M. Bishop, seeing ^p Gregorie de Valentia freely confesseth, that you all commit idolatry and therefore must necessarily be holden to be idol ters: onely by a new pardoxe he will perswade vs that all idolatrie is not forbidden by the word of God. But your shame is apparant in this matter, and lieth open to all eies that will not refuse to see. This is one of those grosse abominations wherein he that cannot or wil not take knowledg of your apostasie, sheweth himselfe either to be a very blinde or a very wilfull man, and no reason is there that you should hope that his Maiestie will suffer his subiects freely to be thus led by you to dumbe idols to doe them seruice, and by them to goe a whooring from the true God.

Yet you pleade further for fauour in that you in former doubtful times were in manner the onely men that defended and made knowne to the world his Maiesties Title & interest to the

Crowne

¹ Tertul. de Idololat.

^m Esa 44. 19.

ⁿ Cap. 2. 8.

^o Psal 115. 5. 6.

^p Greg. de Valent. lib. 2. Apolog. de idololatria. ca. 7.

^q 1. Cor. 12. 2.

Crowne of England. Which if you speake of your selfe you haue your answer before. If you extend it generally to Recufants you knowe well enough that you say vntruely. For the Recufants generally were so Iesuited as that you seculars were brought almost to leape at a crust, and greatly distressed for want of necessarie succour and reliefe. And which way the Iesuites looked it is knowne well enough, and hath beene sufficiently discovered both by you and by themselues. And therefore if the Recufant Papistes had had their will, a Iesuited Queene, not a Protestant King, must haue had the wearing of the crowne. How willing you were to receiue his Maiestie appeared by the attendance that so many of you gaue him at his coming in, riding disguised that you might not bee knowne, which to what purpose it was soone after was seene by your companions Watton and Clerke, whome only to name is sufficient for answer to these Crocodiles teares, wherewith you seeke to gaine fauour at his Maiesties hands by falsely pretending loyaltie and loue vnto him. But much more shall the remembrance of your lately intended mischeife giue full assurance to his Maiestie that there is no fidelitie, nothing but treacherie and villanie to bee found amongst you. You would, you say, haue beene as readie to haue assisted his Maiesty, if need had required, as any sort of subiects in the land. But blessed be God that his Maiesty had no neede of any of your assistance. Bellarmine hath discovered it for a principle of yours: that you ought not to tolerate a misbelee-^c Bellarm. de uing king, such as you take his Maiesty to bee, & therefore if Rom: Pontif. hee had relied vppon your assistance either hee must haue^{lib. 5. cap. 7.} daunced after your pipe or else haue leaped without the crowne. It was not his Maiesties right that you respected: it was onely the seruing of your owne turne. You say that you haue not since offended his Maiesty in any thing: but that is not true. You and your fellowes offend his Maiesty daily in the highest degree in seeking to inueigle his subiects and to draw them to the admiring and admitting of a forren iurisdiction and they offend his Maiestie in like sort in being content to be inueighled and seduced by you. It may be objected, say you, that they doe not conforme themselves, to a statute law made against their religion: but we object that they deny true seruice to God and conformity to his lawes: to which Princes are on Gods behalfe by laws and statutes to compell them. Yet heereby you qualifie their offence as pardonable for that their religion towards God, not any contempt of their lawfull superiour doth command them from the conformity, As if all Iewes, and Turkes, and Pagans and hereticke could not plead that exception for themselves as well as you. When Constantine by his edicts and statutes did set vp Christs true religion and did driue all other religions into corners as you laide before, decreeing very sharply against the sacrifices of Pagans upon paine of death, against wiltull hereticke and schismaticke upon confiscation of their goods, had it beene a sufficient defence for refractarie persons to say that their religion towards God, not any contempt of their lawfull superiour did command them from conformity to his lawes? If it were no answer then, we must likewise conceiue now that it is a contempt of their Prince that the regard of his lawes doth not draw them duely to examine the religion which they professe that they may see the filthinesse and abomination thereof and how iultly it is to be detested and abhorred. For it is their vsuall manner to vndertake that religion hand ouer head, and scarce is ther one of a thousand amongst them that is able to giue any reason why he beleeueth so rather then otherwise. Which shalbe your iust condemnation with God, M. Bishop, that doe condemne men for being blind-obedient in a cause against you, and doe teach them to bee blind obedsent to you in a cause against God. But you alleadge further for their excuse that they be no inuentors or followers of nouelties but only hold on and perseuere in the faith of their forefathers. And that could the Pagans and heathens alleadge for themselves also, that they

¹ August. ep. 50

² Aug. ep. 48.

³ Reply to the Iesuits Apology.

they were no inuentours or followers of nouelties, but that their fathers and forefathers for hundreds and thousands of yeares had continued the same superstition. So may adulterers and whooremongers, drunkards, theeves and other malefactors excuse themselues that they are not the first inuentours of those finnes, but that their fathers and forefathers were the same, and that these behauiours haue bene accustomed since the worlde began. but compulsion of lawes must driue them to come where they may be taught, that whereas without question many of them say with themselues as did the Donatistes, ^{u August. epist.} "It is true indeede 48. that you say, we cannot tell what to answer, but it is hard for vs to leaue the tradition of our fathers, they may be shaken from that heauie drowsinesse that holdeth them and may learne to giue glory vnto God and say with the Gentiles, ^{x Jer. 16. 19.} surely our fathers haue inherited lies and vanitie wherein there is no profit: and may heare God saying vnto his people: ^{y Ezech. 20. 18} Walke ye not in the ordinances of your fathers, neither obserue their manners, nor defile your selues with their Idols: I am the Lord your God: walke ye in my statutes and keepe my iudgements and doe them: and againe calling them out of Babylon, ^{z Apoc. 18. 4.} Goe out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers in her finnes and that ye receiue not of her plagues. But where you say that the things which they follow are no nouelties, you say vntruely. For your Iesus psalter and Ladies psalter which commonly you put into their hands what are they but nouelties? your Agnus detes, your hallowed beads & grails, your pardons, your dispensations, your reconciling to the bishop of Rome, your babies and puppets, and other such like witcheries & forceries what are they but nouelties? let vs see the practise of any of this trumpery in the ancient church. But indeed ther is no shadow therof: they are new deuises of Antichrist, & the baits of his spirituall fornications to inchaunt and intoxicate simple and vnstable soules. You goe forward and tell vs that amongst the most duetifull there is none but offendeth against one statute or other, yet onely

Catholickes are for the transgressing of one huspeled and handled as though they were some hainous rebelles and traitours. Ah tender chickens how you are huspeled and handled ! how would you complaine, I trow, if we practised that which God hath said vnto vs, ^a Reward her euen as shee hath rewarded you, and giue her double according to her workes, and in the cup which shee hath filled to you, fill her the double? But other lawes and statutes are looked vnto as the cause requireth and transgressours receiue due punishment according to desert: but lawes for religion as they are of higher nature and greater consequence, so should more straightly & seuerely be put in execution for challenging due honour vnto God, and for the welfare add safety of the publicke state. Where indeede the default is that lawes are not so throughly and effectually pursued against you as cause is they should be. For howsoeuer you cleere the matter with asthough they were some hainous rebels and traitours, the very truth is that in making men Papistes you make them eyther actually traitours, or if not actually because they knowe not yet the secret of your occupation, yet in Potentia proxima to bee wrought vpon for any traiterous executions. For the fundamentall points of your religion are meere treason, that the Pope is ^b Gods vicegerent vpon earth, and therefore superiour to your Prince: that it is in the ^c Popes power to depose his Maiestie and depriue him of his crowne: that he may ^d absolue his subiects from their oth of allegiance to him: that at his commaundement they are to take armes against him: that ^e Catholickes ought not to tollerate a misbeleeuing King, as they account euery one that beleeueth not with them: that ^f where their religion is in hazard, no faith or fidelitie is to be performed. Which positions of yours doe very well deserue that all seuerity of lawes should be vsed to preferue his Maiesties subiects from being infected with the venime and poyson thereof. And I doubt not but that his Maiestie doth now very well see & conceiue

^a Apoc. 18.6.

^b Decretal.
Greg. de transl.
episc. ca. Quan-
to.

^c Sext. de sen-
tent. & re iudi.
ca. cap. Ad Apostolicæ. Bul-las Pij s. con-Elizabeth re-
gin.

^d Ibid.

^e Bellarm de Rom. Pontif. li.
5. ca. 7.

^f Match. Paris.
in Henrie. 2.

conceiue that it is very necessary that by due execution thereof your wicked enterprises be more strongly crossed and hindered then hitherto they haue beene. You commend your Recusants as esteemed by them that liue neere them the most orderly subiects. What? and none so orderly as they? We see the prouerbe to be true:

Quisquis amat ranam, ranam putat esse Dianam;

Who loues the frog in filthy dike

He thinkes the frog Diana-like.

You tell vs that they are as true of their words, as found in their deeds, of as great charity and hospitality towards their neighbours, and compassion of the poore: of as moderate and civill cariage and behaviour as most men in their countrie. And indeede it is true that many of them are fitter for vs then they are for you, and we are forrie that they cannot be gotten to awake out of their sleepe and to wipe away that needles disgrace which by their owne wilfulnesse doth hang vpon them. But there are many more of them who are fitter for you then they are for vs, men that had neede to liue vnder a shriuinge and pardoning religion, being notorious for grosse and absurd sinnes, whooremongers, drunkardes, Iwearers, full of bitinge and cruelty, of falsehood and villanie, farre from any such commendation as you giue them, and yet these forsooth are they who in their ioylitie at their tables and vpon their alebenches talke of iustification by workes, and of comming to heauen by merites and crie out vpon the Protestant doctrine as opening a-way to licentious and euill life. We know them, M. Bishop, as well as you and wee know there is no cause at all to giue them any such commendation of behaviour about other sorts of men. Your conclusion is, that to begger and vndoe them (as the execution of that law established must needes doe the poorer sorte of them) would be little lesse then to vndoe & destroy all good order and discipline in the common weale. Where we see you speake for a fee and therefore stick not to speake at large. But you must vnderstand.

vnderstand that the good order and discipline of the common weale might stand well enough without them. Though they were, where their hearts are, vnder the Popes protection, yet we could haue good order and discipline in our common weale, and so much the better by how much the more it would be freed from being disturbed by them. As for begging & vndoing them, it is not the law that doth it, but they begger & vndoo themselues by their owne blind wilfulness, in that they doe not subiect themselues to the law when notwithstanding they can giue no good reason why they should be against the law. And if they were beggered and vndone as touching their bodily goods it were the better for the common-wealth and for themselues, because thereby they should be freed from such copefmatas as you are who noulle them in their disobedience to God and to their princes law? who vse your witts to craue for them immunity of mulct and paiment to the Prince that they may haue their estate free to bestow the more liberally vpon you; who like the ^e Donatistes would not haue them to loose their goods, and would haue them at liberty to loose Christ: who would haue their wils and testaments made good by the lawes of the realme, and them suffered to disanull the will and testament of Christ: who would haue protection for them to enioy what they buie, and would haue Christ to haue no protection to hold them whom he hath bought: who would haue them quietly to liue at their owne home, and in the meane time freely permitted to banish Christ. The execution of the law is iust and godly, and by what arguments ^b S. Austin defended the like of old against Pelagians and Donatists and other heretickes, by the same doe we defend it as necessary against you.

^a Aug. ep. 61.

^b *Aug. ep. 48.
50. 60. 61. &
cont. lit. Peril.
lib. 2. c. 68. 83.
cont. Iulian. Pe-
lag. lib. 3. ca. 1.*

33. W. BISHOP,

Before I make an end, I beseech your Maiestie that the old worthy saying of Cassian may be diligently examined: Cui-bonum?

bonum? For whose commoditie, to what ende and purpose must such numbers of most ciuill subiects, be so grieuously molested? What is the cause, why your peaceable & ioyfull gouernment should be so mingled with such bitter stormes of persecution? Is it to extirpish the Catholikes faith? It lieth not in mans power to suppress and destroy that, which the Almighty supporteth and mainteineth. The gates of hell shall not preuaile against the Catholicke Church, And let but those graue and wise Counsaillers (who haue managed the state in our late Queenes daies) enforme your Maiestie whether, all those terrible persecutions that then were most vehemently pursued, did any whit at all, diminish the number of Recusants: or rather did not greatly multiply and increase them, from one at the first to an hundred and moe in continuance. But it may be they intend by those penall lawes, to enrich your Maiestie, and to fill your coffers: Surely the receipts will fall out much too short, to grow to any such reckoning. And what delight to enrich your treasure, and stuffe your coffers with regretes, and out cries of the husband, wife, children, widowes, and poore infants, when as the best and most assured treasure of a king, is (by the prudent esteemed) to consist in the loue, and heartie affection of his people? Or are these penall lawes, and forfeitures ordained for rewards vnto such dependents, as for these or the like doe follow you? But the reuenues, preferments, and offices, belonging to your crowne of England, are abundantly able to content and reward them, that shall deserue well of the common-weale, without that so heauie aggriouance & hart-bleeding of others your Maiesties good subiectes. And your Maiesties high wisdom, and long experience in gouernment, can best remember you, that such men are not so mindfull of benefits received, as the daily want and miserie, will continually renew and reuine the memorie of the oppressed.

Math. 16.

R. ABBOT.

The end and purpose of the lawe, M. Bishop, is easily answered

Ff

answered out of your owne wordes. It is of ciuill subiects to make religious, that his Maiestie may haue them his not by halfes but wholly; not outwardly onely by constrained and forced obedience, but inwardly for conscience sake; which there is no hope to attaine so long as securely they rest tied in conscience to the forreine iurisdiction of the Pope, who according to the pretie embleme that he hath bene woont to set vpon his mammetries fili da mihi cortuum & sufficit, sonne giue me thy heart and it sufficeth, laboureth, rebus sic stantibus, to possesse the hart til opportunitie serue that he may gaine the whole. But you question the matter, Is it to extinguish the Catholike faith? No, no, M. Bishop: it is to extinguish your Cacolike and countercatholike fancies. Indeed it lieth not in mans power to destroy the true Catholike faith; the almightie supporteth and mainteineth it; ^a the gates of hell shall not preuaile against it. Your Pseudocatholike apostasie seemed indeed to haue gotten the masterie of it, and to haue set you vp a kingdome for euer; but when you thought for euer to haue imprisoned the Arke of God, your Dagon fell downe before it; and brake his necke: the Angell so dainly cried from heauen, the lightning of the Gospell shining round about him ^b It is fallen, it is fallen, euen Babylon the great citie. The captiuitie of the church was dissolved, the professours of Christes Gospell were multiplied from one to a thousand, and from a thousand to ten thousand, and from ten thousand to whole nations and peoples, so against all expectation, as that Iannes and Iambres and the rest of the Egyptian forcerers, haue bene forced to say in their harts ^c It is the finger of God; the Lord fighteth for Israel against vs, euen as one of the Spanish captiues could say of the battell fought by sea at their attempted inuasion, that Christ in all that battell shewed himselfe a Lutherane. By this meanes the ^d whoor of Babylon that saied see herselfe, I sit like a Queene, and am no widdow, and shall see no mourning, is become euen ^e desolate and naked

^a Matt. 16. 18.

^b Apoc. 18. 2.

^c Exod. 8. 19.
cap. 14. 25.

^d Apoc. 18. 7.

^e Cap. 17. 16.

ked in comparison of that shee was, and her desolations shall grow more and more till he that hath begun ^f to consume her with the breath of his mouth, doe abolish her utterly with the brightnesse of his comming. Flatter not your selfe M. Bishop: ^{2. Thess. 2. 8.} all they that forsake the Lord shall perish: the Lord will destroy all them that commit fornication against him ^{Psal. 73. 26.}

But you wish his Maiestie to be informed by those graue and wise Councellours who managed the state in our late Queenes daies whether all those terrible persecutions that the were most vehemently pursued did any whit at all diminish the number of recusants, or rather did not greatly multiply and increase them from one at the first to a hundred and more in continuance. O terrible persecutions and most vehemently pursued, and yet by your ^h owne confession not a man of you put to death but for cause of treason against the ^h Queene and the state. Which confession the providence of God and his hand wrought from you by a bone cast betwixt the Iesuites and you for the clearing & iustifying of the proceedings of the state, taking no course in meere case of religion but that which S. Austin acknowledgeth to be ⁱ the obseruing of christian lenity and meeknesse, not to punish recusants by death but ^{Aug. ep. 50.} by pecuniary mulct and by restraint or banishment of them by whom others were hardened in that course. We would haue thought the same to be Christian lenity and gentlenesse in the time of Queene Marie when nothing but life and bloud would giue contentment, and this wretched hypocrite hauing sold his tongue and his conscience to the Pope is not ashamed to call it terrible persecution. And yet in the execution of the law they that paid the mulct, so farre enjoyed the benefit and liberty of the state as that they thrived in the payment of it, and could finde enough besides to giue harbour and entertainment to night-working traitours that were still plotting both against the possession of the Queene that then was, and the succession of his Maiestie that now is, which no Prince without admirable patience could euer

haue endured. Many of them by wayes and wiles slippe themselves out of the collar, and paid nothing at all, and being winked at, did euen deride the remissie and fauourable proceedings of the realme, in that they could make the lawes like spiders webs to take no hold of them. Many of them vsed their libertie altogether, and found no checke or controlment of law at all. Yea and you that were in durance liued at your hearts ease: you were fat and fresh and faire, your friday-nights drinkings were better then the Sunday dinners of many better men then you are: there was too free accessie and resort to you: you could question one another for shrewd and suspicious behaviours: you could twit one another with gallantrie and brauerie of apparell: you had harts to contend one with another like tigers and beares, and yet like the filthy full-gorged friar you cry out Ecce nos quanta patimur pro Christo: see how we are persecuted for Christs sake. Ah vnthankfull caytifes that thus abuse the goodnes of Princes to the euill of their subiects, and whilest they permit safetie and quietnesse to you, doe labour night and day to procure ruine and ouerthrow to them. And yet those honourable Countsellours of whom you speake can well enforme his Maesty that that mild execution that then was, did procure much security and establishment to the state, and recalled exceeding many whom your teacherous allurements had alienated and inueighled another way. They found the humours and conditions of men to be the same that S. Austin of old noted in the Donatistes, and that their proceedings wrought the same effects which he the acknowledged concerning them. ^k Some were willing, saith he, to come to the vniity of the Catholicke church, being moued by manifest truth, and yet fearing the offence of their friends did put it off from day to day. Some were bound not by truth but by a hard knot of obdurate custome, in whom the saying of God was fulfilled: A bad seruant will not be amended with wordes: though he doe vnderstand, yet will he not obey. Many thought that part

^k Aug. ep. 48.

to be the true Church, because carelesse made them slow & sluggish to take knowledge of the Catholicke truth. Many were kept out by the false rumours and tales of lying men, who told them that we at the Lords table did use some strange dealings which we should not doe. Many thought it was no matter so that they were Christians on what side they were, and therefore continued such because they had beene so borne & no man forced them to doe otherwise. Now the terrour of lawes, in the publishing whereof princes serue the Lord, hath done this good, that some say, We were willing to this before, but thanks bee to God that he hath given vs occasion instantly to doe it, & hath cut off all occasions of delay. Others say, We knew this to bee true before, but we were holden I know not how to that where-to we haue beene long accustomed, now thanks be to God who hath broken our former bondes and hath translated vs to the bond of peace. Others say, We did not know that the truth was on this part, neither did we care to learne the same, but feare made vs regardfull to know it whilst we doubted least we should sustein losse of our goods temporall and be no whit the nearer to things eternall: Thanks be to God who by the spurre of feare hath driuen away our neglect, that in care we should seeke that which being secure we would neuer regard to know. Others say, We were by false rumours terrified and made afraide to come to church, which wee had not knowne to be false but by our comming thither, and had not come thither, unlesse we had beene compelled thereunto. Thanks be to God who by the scourg. hath taken away our feare, and hath taught vs by experience what vaine and false tales lying fame hath reported of his church. Others say, We thought it skil'd not on what part we professed the faith of christe, but thanks bee to God who hath gathered vs from schisme, and hath shewed vs that it is agreeing to one God that we should in vuity worship him. These good effects were wrought by those milde proceedinges that were vsed in the dayes of Queene Elizabeth, when things standing as they did it was maruell that any good at all should bee effected thereby. For you were still buzzing into mens eares the alteration of the state, & by your plots and devices your confederates expected it from day to day, and thereupon by your promises hoped for preferment & countenance in that new monarchie, euery man at least a calfe with a white face, if they should continue constant and stedfast on your part. This was in their heads vpon euery seuerall treason: very strongly at the Spanish inuasion: but vndoubtedly resolued of whensoever the Queenes day should come. By this traiterous baite you gained very many, and entised many to goe beyond the seas, who in hope of a golden haruest doubted not to endure some small winter stormes. But nowe that this hope, thanks be to God, is taken away, we doubt not but one seuen yeeres practise and execution of his Maiesties lawes will turne your trade a begging, and make you ¹grinne like dogges, and runne heere and there for meate, and grudge that ye be not satisfied. We doubt not but a number of them will in short time curse and detest your trecherie and villanie, who by your sinister and false tales haue frightened them from dooing that whereto readylie they would haue yeilded otherwise.

You goe forward saying that it maybe that they intend by those penall lawes to enrich his Maiestie and to fill his cofers. But you are an vnfit man to make construction of their doings, and if that were the thing that his Maiestie respected, he would take with your recusants a quicker and rounder course. But his Maiesty^m seeketh not theirs but ²them, and it is well knowne how hardly his Highnesse hath bene drawn to vse any proceeding at all against them, desirous by patience and mildenesse to win them: and finding that they abute his patience to fortifie themselves against him, both his Maiestie and his most honourable Counsell, doe beare the minde that both the godly Emperours and Princes, and their faithfull officers together with the godly Bishops and Pastours of the church, did beare in the execution of their Imperiall lawes

³Who soeuer,

¹ Psa. 59. 14.
15.

² 2. Cor. 12. 14.
August. ep. 50.

^a Whosoever by occasion of this law which the Prince serving Aug. ep 48.
Christ doth publish for the reforming of your impietic, doth conuetously desire any goods of yours, we like him not. Whosoever by occasion of this law pursueth you, not in loue to amend you, but in hatred to practise enmity against you, we like him not. There will be more contentment taken in their conformitie and due obedience, then in all the riches and treasures that can redound to his Maiestie by their contumacie and resistance. As for stuffing his Maiesties cofers with regreets and outcries of the husband, wife, children, widows and poore infant, it is an amplification of your witte, without any example: they finde meanes commonly to prouide better for themselues, then to haue any occasion to weepe for that matter. If by carefull execution they were brought to that hazard, we should finde better order with them then now we doe. Neither should they for their weeping blame the lawes, but themselues, that vpon selfewill and stomacke doe crosse the lawes. And better it is that they should weepe, then that other should be forced to weepe by them: better that they be beggered & vndone, then that by their impunity any danger should grow to the common state: good that some endure extremity that others thereby may be brought ^o to consider of the matter and fin- ding that there is no cause why they should forbear the August. ibid.
church to endure so great losse, may without difficulty returne to our church againe. In a word let them weepe for losse of goods by iust execution of law who without subiection to the law haue no reason to enioy the same. You say that the best and most assured treasury of a King doth consist in the loue and hartly affection of his people. Which indeed is true.
and therefore doth his Maiestie iustly punish them who do in themselues and labour in others also to defeate him of that treasure: this sort of his people being such as haue bestowed their loue and hartly affection otherwise then to him, neither can he presume thereof, as he well knoweth, so long as by mis-conscience of religion they stand so deeply

deeply obliged to another Lord. Who as hee hath their harts, so should haue their purses and goods also, if opportunity did serue, which therefore most iustly and rightfully should be preoccupied and intercepted to better vse. Further vry malipertly and saucily you demand, Are these penal lawes & forfeitures ordeined for rewards vnto such dependants as for these or the like doe follow you? I answer you againe that these penall lawes and forfeitures are made to the same end to which Constantine made his law as was before saide, that^p the goods of wilfull heretickes refusing to come to the vnicie of the church should be confiscate to the common Treasury, and to which^q Theodosius made a law that euery hereticall priest or bishop wheresoeuer hee were found should forfeit ^r ten pounds. I answer further by the wordes of S. Austin, that^t it is not to be enquired who haue the goods of heretickes, but who abide in the society of the faithfull. For as heretickes doe iustly loole their goods, so whosoeuer haue them by assignment of law or donation of their Prince, they iuttly haue them if they continue in the society of the church, because as he saith, the righteous do receiue the spoiles of the vngodly, & the riches of the wicked are laid vp for the iust. To be short such penalties and forfeitures together with others are returned to the Exchequer of the Prince, thence at his Maiesties good pleasure iustly to be disposed, as for other occasions and affaires of his Realme and Princely state, so when occasion requireth for rewarde to them who by loyall and dutifull seruice deserue the same. As for your other wordes of heauy aggreeuance and hart-bleeding and want and miserie, if there were occasion therof, you were to remember that which the scripture saith, ^v Affliction giueth vnderstanding, but^w ease slaieth the vnrwise and the prosperity of fooles destroyeth them. And as touching vnthankfullnes and not minding of benefits receiued, his Maiestie cannot expect the like at the hands of any as of you, whom neither conscience of oathes nor of benefits receiued can so

^p August. ep.
48.

^q epist. 50.
^r decem. libris.
auri multa.
recurr.
^t idid.

^v Esa. 28. 19.
vulg. vers.
^w Prou. 1. 32.

fast tie vnto him but that you are at any time to bee vnto by the dispensation and authority of the Pope.

34. W. BISHOP.

And when they shall see no hope of remedy, the state being now settled, and a continuall posterity like to ensue of one nature and condition: God knoweth what that forceable weapon of necessitie may constraîne and driue men vnto at length.

R. ABBOT.

In this periode M. Bishop thought to shew himselfe a politicke wise man, and contrarie to his expectation all his fellowes condemne him for a foole. They had but one speciall secret amongst them and he hath plaid the part of Tom Tell-troth to reuile it. What, M. Bishop, are you such a blabbe that ye cannot keepe your owne and your fellowes counsell; but must needs out withall? And had ye no other body to whom to discover it, if ye must needs so doe; but thus bluntly to blunder it to the king? But yet bee of good chere, man; let not this discomfort you too much; satisfie your friendes and assure them vpon our worde that we knew your minde before. We knew you were no chaungelings but what ye haue beene, the same yee continue still, treacherous, falsehearted, faithles waiting but for time and opportunitie; if power would serue, to compell his Maiestie to your order. The state now settled, you say, and a continuall posterity like to ensue of one nature and condition. O this is it that greeueth you; this is it that maketh you to gnaw your tongues for anger, and to fare like men at their wits end that know not what way to take. The vnsettlednesse of the state made you before to hope for a day. The vnsettlednesse of the state was the common trap wherein you caught men to the deuotion of the Pope. What a trouble is it now to you to crie out, O spes fallaces; O false and vaine hope? And now that there is no hope of remedy God knoweth, you say, what that forcible weapon of necessity may constraîne and drue men vnto at length. Falsc traitour, busie fugitiue, doest thou take vpon the to threaten thly Prince? What? of a preaching Priest haue we now a Herald at armes if he cannot perswade his religion, to denounce war? Is this the Catholicke religion that you commend to vs? Did Peter and Paule deale in that sort to tel princes that if they would not giue them way, God knoweth what that forcible weapon of necessity might cōstreine and drue men vnto at length? Was this the language or stile of the first church? But what do I aske you of Peter & Paule, or of the first church? God knowes they are strangers to you and you to them; you loue to talke of them, but little doe ye care to bee guided by them. The first church could say to their persecutours: “ If wee would deale with you not by secret reuenge but by open enmistic doe we want thereto either number or strength? We are forreiners to you, and yet we haue filled all places of your, your cities, islands castles, boroughs, meeting places, your, tents, tribes bands, palaces, your senate and court. What warre were wee not fit for, though unequal in power, who so willinglie yeeld our selues to be slaine, but that with vs more tolerable it is to be killed then to kill? And so S. Austine speaketh thereof that the city of Christ albeit it had troupes of mighty peoples, yet did not fight for temporall life but for the obtaining of eternall life it did resist. Their fighting for life was nothing else but for their Saviours sake to despise life. Thus they were able to rescue themselues and their religion, yet no forcible weapon of necessitie could moue them to rebell and to take armes against them by whome they were oppressed, and this was then thought to be the proper condition of the faith of Christ. Where wee are to note the singular impudencie and impiety of the traitour-father Iesuite who seing the example of the first Christians to be contrarie to their practise now, colourably mentioneth it and by meeere falschood seeketh to auidoide and shift it off: That

Christians

^a Tertul. Apo-loges. cap. 37.

^b August. de ci-
uit. Dei, lib. 2.2.
cap. 6.

^c Bellarm. de
Roman. Pont.
lib. 5. cap. 7.

Christians, saith hee of old deposed not Nero and Diocletian and Iulian the Apostata and Valens the Arian and suchlike, the cause was for that they wanted temporall power, & if they had had power they would haue done it; directly contrary to that which they themselues testifie of themselues, that they had power sufficient, but held it vnlawfull to rebell. And thus here the young Crab goeth according to the gate of the old Crab and telleth his Maiestie that if they can get strength they will perforce winne that that his Maiestie by intreatie will not yeeld, and biddeth him in effect looke for the practise of their rule, that ^d if Princes goe about so ^d idid. turne away the people from their Romish faith, by all their consents they may and ought to be deprived of their dominions. Which as hee bid him looke for then, so to shewe that hee spake no otherwise then hee and his fellowes meant, they haue since practised accordingly, plotting and deuising not to trouble themselues much, but at once and by a verie short course to blow vp and dispatch both Prince and progeny, and Nobles, & Bishops & Iudges, & Knights and Burgeses, and a whole court of Parliament, together with all offices, and suiters, and seruants to other courts. O accursed villaines, woorthie whose names should bee engrauen in brasse, that all posteritie might take notice of them and for euer abhorre to vse them, euen as the name of Iudas the traitour! nay rather woorthie to be buried in perpetuall obliuion and silence, that it may not bee noted as the infamie of this age to haue brought soorth such miscreants, such monsters, such diuels, such an vnnaturall persistence of their countrey! what tearmes should I vse to expresse the vnconceiueable wickednesse of this vipers brood? Was this the effect of your consultatiō at Doway vpon the newes of the proceedinges of his Maiesties first Parliament? What were you all so fully possessed with the diuell, as that he should preuaile to draw you to so damnable a practise, to the perpetuall ruine of your natiue countrey? Of those seuen which were specially chosen to deuise the meanes of your reuenge was there not one in whom was remaining any sparke of nature or grace to detest so barbarous and vnnaturall enterprife? And was this the course that Christians of old tooke when the edicts of Emperours were sent forth against them, to lay their heads together to deuise which way to be reuenged? They saide. Arma nostra sunt preces & lachryma: Our weapons are prayers and teares: but you haue altered their stile, and say, Our weapons are fire and gunpowder. They saide to their persecutours, One night with a little fire would serue vs largely to be reuenged, if with vs it were lawfull to requite euill with euill: but God forbid that Gods religion should bee maintained with the fire of men, or that it should grieue to suffer that wherby triall is made of it.* But you say, fire or sword, or whatsoeuer, let vs vse any meanes to bee reuenged: wee are of the Roman religion, let vs not spare any treason or villanie, or crueltie to mainteine it: O if the Protestants had vsed any such practise in Fraunce, in Spaine or any where else, what hideous noises and exclamations would these men haue raised thereupon? howe would they haue traduced our religion, and laboured to make it hatefull to all the world? howe would they haue bent their force with all extremity, vtterly to extirpate not onely the persons guiltie, but all that had carried the name of that profession? And yet forsooth they are Catholickes: they are of the onely auncient and true religion. Ah wretched miscreants, who so farre depart from all the example and practise of all antiquitie, and yet goe about to perswade men that they keepe the onely auncient steps, and teach nothing but what the Christian church of old hath taught! But their positions and practises in this behalfe doe shewe their religion to be of the deuill, and not of God. They giue all honest and ingenuous hearts occasion to detest them, and that religion that is the mother and nurse of such deuillish deuises. This hath beene their course these fortie yeeres, and albeit their plottings haue beene so miraculously loges. ca. 37.

* Terul. Apo.

miraculouſly diſcouered and preuented from time to time, as they that haue iuſt cauſe to ſay with the forcerers of Egypt * Iris the ſinger of God that worketh againſt vs: yet * Exod. 8. 19. as the deuill howſoeuer he be defeated of his purpoſes, & ſee himſelfe vnable to preuaile, yet by an infinite of malice, ſtill bendeth himſelfe againſt God: ſo theſe accuſed wretches will by no meanes ceaſe from their malicious and deſperate villanies, and doe giue the ſtate iuſt occaſion to vie all extremitie for the rooting out of ſuch ſpirituall maſters as drawe his Maiesties ſubiectſ to be partakers of ſuch deſignments. And in this malice they boile ſtill: they fare euen as the Beare that is robbed of her whelpes, they breath out threatnings and laughter both of Prince and ſubiectſ. But their threatſ wee doubt not ſhall bee as * the blaſt of a ſtorme againſt a ſtone * Eſay 28. 4. wall, & ſhall come to nought as hitherto they haue done. God will cathe theſe foxes in their owne wiles and ſmite the chaw bones of theſe raging lions and turne the miſcheiſe that they intend vpon their owne pate. O victoriouſ and triumphant Queene Elizabeth the mirrour of Princely magnanimity & courage, who waſt neuer moued therewith to tread one ſtep out of the way: whome neither the curſes of Balaam, nor the power of Balak, nor any conſpiracies and practiſes of this vipers broode, this baſtard-Catholicke generation could euer overcome to giue the leaſt way to their idolatries & abhominations! O noble king Iames the iuſt inheritour of her crowne and true ſucceſſour of her fortitude and Princely vertues, who for the obtaining of a glorious kingdome couldeſt neuer be wonne to yeelde thy ſelfe to be intangled in their ſnares, but reſting thy affiance ^e in that God who alwayes fauoureth the right, and in the loyaltie and fidelity of an ingenuouſ and noble people haſt deſpiſed the ſawning and pick thanke offers and inroachiings of thoſe land-Sirenes and troden vnder foote all dread and feare of their intended oppoſitions, to giue glory to the Lord thy God, and to keepe thy faith entire and vnspotted before him. The Lord thy God shall be with thee, and our hands with our hearts are lift vp for thee to the God of heauen that he will make good the worke that he hath begunne in thee to stablish the throne of thy kindgdom in thy hands in righteousnesse and truth: and to this ende, to blesse that noble stemme of Princely grace, and to hide the same as an arrow of choise in the quiuier of his protection that the almond-tree in the death of the stocke may still liue and flourish in the branch vntil the day of the Lord Iesus Christ. As for these murmuring and repining Esauites which long said in their heartes concerning vs, ¶ The daies of mourning for Queene Elizabeth will come shortly, and then shal we haue the killing and murdering of them, and cannot yet finde time to disgorge themselves of that malice, let them tast the bitternesse of their owne gall, let them imagine deuises and not performe them till their eyes be consumed in their heades. Let their roote bee rottennesse and their bud as dust, and let the weapon of their necessitie bee gorged in their owne bowels, whilest they intend and plot euill against the Anointed of the Lord. ^b Let thy hand, O Lord, hold him fast, and let thine arme strengthen him, that the enemy may not be able to doe him violence, and that the sonne of wickednesse may not hurt him. ⁱ Saue Lord and heare vs, O king of heauen, when we call vpon thee.

^b Gen. 27. 41.

^b Psal. 89. 22.

ⁱ Psal. 20. 9.

35. W. BISHOP.

If then there bee no greater reason of waight and moment why such dutifull and well deserving Subiects, shoulde bee so greenously afflicted for their conscience. Let others conceiue as they shall please, I will neuer suffer my selfe to be perswaded that your Maiestie wil euer permit it, before I see it done: If it be further objected, why should not your Maiestie as well punish Catholickes in your kingdomes, as Catholickes doe Protestants in some other Countries: I answere, that in all countries where multitudes

multitudes of both sorts are mixed, as it is in England: The Protestants are tolerated, as in France, Polonia, Bohemia, the Catholicke states of Germany, and Cantounes, according to that of the Gospell, Suffer both the wheat & cockle to grow Math. 13. vntill haruelt. In Spaine, and Italic, where scarce any Protestants be, the case is otherwise. But what is that to England? Where are very many Catholicke recusants, and Catholickely affected in euery degree, not only of the Temporalitie, but in the Clergie also, hardly of the highest degrees of honour to be excepted: therefore for their number and qualitie to be tolerated.

R. ABBOT.

His most excellent Maiestie may well conceiue by your very last wordes before that you are farre off from being dutiefull and well deseruing subjects, and therefore iustly taketh course to bring you, if it may be, to that that you in effect confesse, you should bee, which you can neuer be so long as misperwasion of religion doth hinder true conscience of your dutie towards him. But you know well that your petition is liable to iust exception, for that in Italic and Spaine it is thought intolerable that Protestants should bee permitted any vse or exercise of their religion, and therefore the like should be conceiued of Papistes amongst vs. To which your distinction of many or few giueth no sufficient answer. For if toleration of contrarie religions be a matter of pietie, it holdeth as well for few as for many: and if the words of our Sauour Christ Math. 13. 30 suffer both the wheat and the cockle to grow together til haruest be to be vnderstood thereof as you would make vs belecue, they must giue rule as well for small numbers as for great multitudes, and your Pope and other Princes euen by your owne rule do violate Christs commaundement in that so furiously they bend themselues against the Protestants in their dominions vtterly to extirpate and roote them out. But they doe that which they doe in debarring the protestants stants doctrine vpon a principle which indeed is true, and though misapplied by them against vs, yet iustly and rightly by his Maiestie to bee returned against you. For looke what religion is the truth, that alone and onely is to be set vp: but what is vntrue and false, that is wholly to be suppressed. It is neither charitie nor piety to giue way to idolatric and false worship, because it is the dishonor of God, and the poison of the soules of men. Nowe they thinke that theirs is the onely true religion, and therefore they determine that our religion is not to bee endured: His Maiestie assuredly knoweth that their religion is vntrue, and that the faith which is taught amongst vs, is the onely truth of God, because God himselfe hath taught the same, and by euidence of his owne wordes approoued it: and therefore rightly concludeth that your superstitious and false worships are by all meanes to bee abandoned. So Constantine did aduance one onely true religion, not your new Romish deuises but the ancient Romane faith, and as you before sayde chased all other religions into corners. Sith therefore you propound to his Maiestie to follow the example of Constantine you must be cōtent that hee set vp that onely true religion which Constantine did, the auncient Roman religion which S. Paul taught in his epistle to the Romans, and therefore chase as all other so namely your newe Romish religion into corners. And herein he followeth the steppes of those godly kings of Iudah, Dauid, Asa, Iehoshaphat, Ezechias, Iosias and the like who are specially recommended in holy scripture, who vpheld one onely true worship of God, and admitted no toleration of strange religions, insomuch that

^b 2. Chro. 15. 16 ^b Asa deposed Maachab his mother from her regencie, because shee had made her an idoll in a grone, & brake downe her idoll and stamped it vnder his feete and burnt it, vsing all meanes to shewe his detestation of such corruption. His Maiestie well knoweth how seuerely God by his law did forbid the tolerating of any were they neuer so neere or neuer so decre

decre that should ^c secretly entice or openly draw away from the true seruice of God to the false worship of strange gods. The man or woman that did it was to bee ^d stoned to death: the city that admitted any such entisements was ^e vtterlie to bee destroyed, the inhabitants and their cattell were to bee slaine with the sword, the spoile of the city to be burnt in the fire, the houses thereof to be made a heap and neuer to bee built againe, How then should his Maiesty beare with your ^f sonnes of Beliall, your seminarie priests and Iesuites that they should seduce his subiects and withdraw them to the worship of your new deuised gods, your altar-god Maozim; your crucifixe-god, your god-saints, your Capitolion god of Rome, your image gods of gold and siluer & wood and stone; which indeed you call not gods but yet make them gods by giuing vnto them the worship that belongeth onely vnto God. If by occasion of that law ^g Israel were so ielous for the setting vp of a strange altar beside the altar of the Lord, and with great indignation gathered them selues to warre against their brethren that set it vp, though pacified when they heard the true meaning of it, how should his Maiestie but euen in zeale of the honour of God and for the auoiding of his fearefull wrath prohibite a religion so wholly strange to that which God by his Prophets and Apostles in the law and in the gospell hath commaunded vs? And if no toleration bee to bee approoued of whoordome, drunkenesse, witchcraft, inchauntment, how should there be a toleration of this spirituall ^h whoordome and drunkenesse? these spirituall witchcrafts and sorceries of the whoore of Babylon to whome God hath threatned to ⁱ give the cup of the wine of the fiercenes of his wrath? As for the place which you alleadge of the cockle growing with the wheat; it hath his true vnderstanding of good and bad growing together in the kingdome of heauen, that is in the profession of true religion: it giueth no warrant to tolerate any false. Now I need not stand to dispute this matter in policy that the toleration of

^c Deut. 13. 6.^d 13.^e ver. 9. 10.^f ver. 15. 16.^g ver. 13.^h Ios. 22. 11.ⁱ 12.^h Apoc. 17. 2.ⁱ cap. 16. 19.

Popery tendeth to the empeachment of his Maiesties imperiall crowne and dignitie, it hauing beene before shewed that the fundamentall grounds thereof are meereley traitorous, and doe subiect his Maiestie to bee at the deuotion and disposition of another head. Surely in those kingdomes and countries where you, M Bishop, tell vs that Protestants are tolerated, his Maiestie seeth as in a glasse that if popery grow to sufficient strength for the managing of it selfe he must either be content to loose the crowne or yeeld to you to make shipwarcke of his faith. For howsoeuer Protestantes haue beene there tolerated because for their number they knew not how to suppress them, and in the tolerating of them they found nothing dangerous or prejudiciall but rather beneficiall to their estate, yet the Princes themselues must haue no part in this toleration nor can without resistance and rebellion of the Popish faction enioy their crowns and dignities whatsoeuer right or title they haue, vnlesse they renounce their religion if they be Protestants, and become vassals and seruants to the pope. The late example whereof in the kingdome of Fraunce may bee a sufficient caueat to his Maiestie to take order against the growth and increase of your part that by toleration of you the like danger grow not to himselfe or to any of his posteritie after him. As for your number hitherto it is not so great, thankes be to God, as that his Maiesty hath any cause to feare it, or for it to purchase vnto himselfe that certaine danger which of toleration of your popery inuitably ensueth: it is more in your account then it is in truth, & that that it is greater in tale thē in strength: and a number haue growen Recusants either vpon false hopes, or of curiosity and nouelty and because they would seeme some-bodie by being singular and different from othermen, whom the smart of a rod will easily reclaime and cause them to returne to the church againe. Whereas you alleadge your Catholickely affected in euerie degree not of the Temporalty only but also of the Clergie, hardly the highest degrees degrees of honour to be excepted, we see you are willing to grace your selfe though it be but with a lie: you would taine haue their company that detest to haue any of yours: it is but one of your accustomed presumptions, and you your selfe haue no confidence of that you say.

36. W. BISHOP.

Lastly, if there were no other cause, but the innumerable benefits which euery degree and order of men throughout England, haue, & do daily receiue from our most Catholicke Ancestors: As the constituting of so many holsons lawes: founding of so many honourable, and rich rewards of learning, as Bishopricks, Cathedrall Churches, Deaneries, Arch-deaconries, Residencies, Prebendes, and Benefices: the erecting, and building of so goodly Schooles, Colledges, and Hospitals, and endowing of them with so ample possession, which all proceeded out of the bowels of the true wisdom, pietie, & vertue of their Catholicke religion: Is not this much more then a sufficient motiue why their heires in faith, should be most benignly, and louingly dealt with; and not for the profession of the same Religion, so seuerely afflicted? Let the Protestants in those countries, where they are most molested, appeare and shew, that their predecessors in beleefe, haue beene so beneficiall vnto the publike weale: And I dare undertake, that for their Ancestors sake, they shall finde much more fauour, then we sue for. Wherefore they can haue no iust cause, to repine at your Maiesties goodnesse, if vpon men of that Religion which hath beene so beneficiall vnto your whole Realme, you take extraordinary compassion.

R. ABBOT.

This argument of yours, M. Bishop, is common to others as well as to you, and cannot aduantage you but it must by like reason aduantage them. God brought his people of Israell into the land of Canaan, and there gaue them^a great and goodly cities which they builded not: houses full of all manner of goods which they filled not: & wells digged which they digged not: vineyards and oliue trees which they planted not, and yet gaue them charge to destroy those nations and to giue no toleration of their abominations, from whose hands these benefits did redound vnto them. Christian religion hath receiued much benefit and strength from secular and prophane arts and learning, which heathen men haue polished and fitted to our vie. In respect whereof, the godly fathers of the Church^b haue much recommended the knowledge of those studies, as verie auailable to prepare a man to the seruice of the Church, which Iulian the Apostata well perceiuing, gaue foorth an edict that^c Christians should be barred from the vse of Poetrie, and Rhetoricke, and Logicke, and other arts of Philosphie: ^dfor out of our bookes said he, they borrow weapons whereby they fight against our selues. And yet it is not any sufficient reason to tolerate heathenish superstitions, because they were heathens from whome these helps of learning haue descended vnto vs. So haue Christian states receiued from the heathen Romanes their ciuill lawes, and therefore what should, M. Bishop gaine at our hands if it were confessed, that at the hands of their Auncestours we haue receiued the constitution of many wholesome lawes. But indeed they were none of your Auncestours M. Bishop, from whom we haue receiued our auncient lawes. For our auncient lawes make the Prince Gods Vicerent in this kingdome; as hath beene before sayde. Our auncient lawes and customes of this realme disanulled the enchroaching authoritie of the Bishop of Rome, for resisting of which lawes^e Thomas Becket was holden for a traitour in the time of king Henry the second, and hadde it beene by course of law was iustly for that cause put to death. I haue also before declared what difference there is betwixt the religion of old professed, vnder

^a Deu 6.10.11.

^b August. de doct. Christ. lib.

2. ca 40.

Basil. serm. ad adolefcences

&c.

Origen. in Exod. hom. 2.

^c Socrat. hist lib. 3. cap. 10.

^d Theodoret. hist. lib. 4. ca. 8.

^e Matth. Paris. in Henr. 2.

der the protection of the lawes of this Realme, and the religion that is nowe vrged by you, so that the founders of those lawes are not to be accounted of your kinde. Of Bithopricks and Archbithopricks I may answer as of lawes I haue done. For when religion first was publicly receued and established in this land in the time of king Lucius it found heere of heathen institution eight and twentie flamines and three Archflamines. The places of the flamines the king turned to so many bithopricks: the places of the Archflamines to so many Archbithopricks: the one at London translated afterward to Canterburie. the other at Yorke: the third at Caerleon in Wales, where seuen of those bithopricks with this Archbithopricke were remaining at the comming of Austin the Monke into this land, whereof mention was made before. Here were ² Temples also builded for the worship of Paynim Gods, of which he made churches for the seruice of Iesus Christ. Neither can it be doubted but that there were here schooles and places of learning and rewardes thereof, inasmuch as we finde that there were here learned men the ^b Druydes and ⁱ Ermydes for the managing of their Pagan law, which without such opportunities and encouragements could not be. To be short, very little is it that M. Bishop can alleadge of benefits deriued to vs from the professours of their now Romish religion, which the Pagans also might not alleadge to haue beene before deriued from them to the maintenance and vse of Christian faith. And if that were no reason to tolerate those impieties to which those benefites were first intended by the Pagans, then M. Bishop must first iustifie his religion to be the truth before he can iustly require any toleration of it or those commodities that were assigned to the vse thereof. But that our Bithopricks and Archbithopricks our cathedrall churches and church liuings & other benefites of learning in the first Christian vse of them had no intendment of the Romish religion that now is, but serued

^e Holinshed hist. of England.

^e ibid.

^b *Holinsh. de-script. of Bri-
taine.*
ⁱ Annal. of Iohn flow in Lucius.

indeed for the maintenance of the religion that is nowe taught by vs, I haue before sufficiently declared, and neede not here to repeate, neither would M Bishop haue heere spoken thereof againe but that it seemeth his heart was strongly possessed with some longing desire to haue some part in these preferments. Which if you haue, M. Bishop, I would wish you to reforme your opinions, to embrace that truth which you are not able to oppugne: to renounce all iurisdiction of forreine power, and to acknowledge to your Prince that soueraigntie which by the word of God, by the auncient lawes of this realme, and by examples of auncient Emperours and princes, is iustly due vnto him, and you need not doubt but that his Maiestie will graciously regard in good and conuenient sort to satisfie your desire. As for your daring to undertake that the Protestants in those countries where they are most molested shall finde more fauour then you sue for, if they can shew that their predecessours in beleefe haue bene so beneficial to the publicke weale, we hold it a feigned liberalitie fondly presumed vpon other smens curtesie, and you a very fillie man to vndertake so great a matter. The case hath bene with other countries as it hath bene with vs: howsoeuer Poperie haue since vsurped and abused all things, the auncient employment of those ecclesiasticall benefits which you speake of, was to the aduancement of that religion which was deliuered by the Scriptures, and from thence taught by the auncient pastours and fathers of the church, which partly appeareth already, and in the examining of your booke shall appeare further to be the selfe-same that the church of England now professeth and mainteineth, not that which you would vrge vpon vs by the pretended authoritie of the church of Rome.

37. W. BISHOP.

It lying then in your Maiesties free choise and election, whether

whether you will enlarge and extend your Royall fauour, vnto an infinite number of your most dutifull and affectionate Subjects, who are the most unwilling in the worlde to transgresse any one of your lawes, were they not therunto compelled by the Law of God: or else viterly to begger and vndoe, both them, and theirs. for their constant profession of the Auncient Roman faith. My confidence in the sweet prouidence of the Almighty is, that he will mercifully incline your Royall heart, to choose rather to pardon, then to punish: because the way of mercie, consorteth better with your kinde and tender nature: it is of better assurance to continue your peaceable & prosperous raign it will purchase mercie at Gods handes, according to his owne promise, Blessed be the mercifull, for they shall obtaine mercie.

R. ABBOT.

The ground of your request of fauour is but petitio principij, a begging of the point in question, or rather a wilfull presumption of the trueth of that which without question is false. You say you are compelled by the lawe of God to transgresse your Princes law, in refusing to conforme your selues to the religion commaunded thereby. But where is that law of God? Shew vs in the old or new testament any law or worde of God that may giue your Recusants any shew of reason why they should denie to come to Church. Who is there amongst them all that either can or doth alleadge out of the law of GOD anie thing to that purpose? No, no, you by your wiles are become to them the law of God: you keepe from them the ^a key of knowledge: you conceale from them the lawe of God, and fright them from meddling with the holy scriptures, and vpon the aduantage of their ignorance you entangle them with your lewde and vngodly deuises, which fallly and wickedly you entitle the law of God. It is the law of Antichrist, the law of ^b the man of sinne, the childe of perdition, that keepeth them from assembling themselves with

^a Luc. 11. 52.

^b 2 Thess. 2. 3.

with the church of God, that they may bee partakers with him of the same destruction. And so you likewise delude them as touching the profession of the auncient Romane faith, whereas in their profession there is nothing like to that faith which the Apostle hath comprised in his epistle to the Romans. Ah caytifes, ah miscreants ^c would to God yee were euen cut off that thus trouble the people of God, ^d eating them up like bread by making your commoditie of them! The mercie that should be shewed to you is the same that Elias shewed to the ^e priestes of Baal to cut you off that you may no further encrease your sin by causing the Lordes people to trespass against him. As for those that are thus seduced by you, his Maiestie doth intend vnto them the mercie of God, though not that mercy that you require, yet the mercie that Saint Iude commendeth, ^f to saue them by terror and feare pulling them by force out of the fire. It is rightly and truely noted by Saint Austin that there is ^g a crueltie sometimes in sparing, and a mercie sometimes in punishing. It is a worke of mercie which our Sauour commendeth in the Gospel: ^h Compell them to come in that my house may bee filled, ⁱ If men were dwelling in a house, saith Saint Austin, which we certainly knew would fall, and they would not beleue us when we should tell them so, but would continue in the same still were we not to be adiudged cruel and uncharitable men if hauing it in our power we should forbear to pull them out? And if being many some of them be headstrong & will needs destroy themselves, is it not mercy yet to saue some or any one of them? This is the mercy that his Maiesty performeth to your Recusants that seeing them to consort themselves with Antichrist and thereby to procure their owne destruction, he may by violence draw them from vnder the pawes of the Lion, and if not all, yet so many as to whome God shall blesse the meanes and endeauour that he shall vse for them knowing ^k that medicine is not to be neglected though some be taken with a pestilence that is incurable. And in this doing

his

^c Gal. 5. 12.^d Psal 14. 8.^e 1. King. 18. 40.^f Iud. epist. ver. 23.^g August. epist 54.^h Luc. 14. 23.ⁱ August. ep. 50^k epist. 48.

his maiestie may looke for mercie, because hee sheweth mercie according to the words of Christ, ¹ Blessed be the mercifull for they shall obtaine mercie: whereas he should be accounted mercilesse and cruell if ^m he should suffer frantike men to runne headlong and to destroy themselves. Let the medicine be sharpe, so that it may worke a cure: let the law begger many wiltull persons to the world, that some at least may thereby be enriched towards God. As for your termes of dutifull and affectionat subiects, we haue seene before that they are wordes of hypocrisie and no truth, and that men of your deuotion cannot possibly be duely affected to their Prince. And whereas you vse the words of better assurance to continue his Maiesties peaceable and prosperous raigne, the truth is, whatsoeuer you pretend, that if his maiestie be mercifull to you in that sort as you desire, he must shew himselfe cruell and mercilesse to himselfe, neither can he expect a peaceable and prosperous raigne, if once you grow to that strength, that he may receiue a checke from you. Let the adder freeze without doores: if he be harboured and warmed at the fire, he will sting him that hath entertained him, and then it will be but a matter of floure, ⁿ aluisit incendium quo nunc ardetis: yee haue fedde the fire your selfe: be content now to be burned in it.

Math. 5 7.

August. epist.

48.

Livy. Decad.

28. W. BISHOP.

Ineed not adde what a Consolation, and comfort it will be to many score thousands of your subiects, and the greatest obligation that can be deuised, to binde them to you, and yours for euer. Now what applause, and congratulation from forren Catholick countries, would follow this your famous Fact: Undoubtedly all the glorious companie of Kings & Queenes (now in heauen) of whom you are lyncally descended: and among all the rest, namely, your most sacred and deare Mother, that endured so much for her constancie in the same Catholike faith cannot but take it most kindly, if for God and their sakes, you take into your Princely protection their followers in the Roman faith, and defend them from oppression.

R. ABBOT.

No scores of thousands, M. Bishop, to whom it will be a comfort, but hundreds of thousands to whom it will be a discomfort to see harbour giuen to the vipers brood to eat out the bowels of their owne mother. And as for obligation to binde them to his Maiestie and his for euer: it is euident by the principles that haue beene before laied downe, that there is no obligation whereby his maiesty may be secure of them, nor any bond whereby they may be so tied to him, but that they are alwayes to bee readier to another to whom they are tied with a faster bond. You promise great applause and congratulation from forraigne Catholicke countries, but his maiestie findeth farre greater comfort in the cleerenesse of his owne conscience, entirelie aduancing the true seruice of God, and in the congratulations of the truly faithfull, both of his owne subiects within his Dominions, and many Princes and thousands of people in other countries: who are farre more reioycing to see his maiesties resolution and constancy in the truth, then there will be to take knowledge, as of a fauour done to them by his maiesties relenting and declining therefrom. And of your Catholicke Princes it may be there are some, who would gratulate themselues if they might attaine to that kingly soueraigntie which his maiestie by true religion doth enioy, which because they cannot, they would be glad for companies sake to see him incline to your request, in hope to haue him brought to the like seruitude and bondage as they are in. Which howsoeuer it be to you a famous fact, yet in truth is so infamous and dishonourable as that there is little cause for you to hope that his maiestie should euer yeeld to the doing of it. As for Kings and Queenes in heauen taking kindly the doing of that which you desire: his maiestie will beleue it when you shew him warrant that they haue made you the interpreter of their minde, or deliuered you any such message to doe vnto him. Which if you do not, he knoweth eth well inough that these are but idle words of your foolish Rhetoricke and far from any force to serue your turne. But whereas you make mention of his maiesties mother: if there were no other cause yet the very remembrance of her might be sufficient to make him detest you all to the pit of hell: by whose seducements and promises, and continuall practises and prouocations she was brought to that wofull and vnprincipely fall, euen as to your villany was to bee imputed the losse of the bloud of so many nobles and gentlemen that was shed in the dayes of Queene Elizabeth, of whom many (had they been free from your entrapments) had liued good subiects vntill this day. The same must we say of them who since his Highnesse coming to the crowne, and specially of late haue bene intangled in your nets to the vtter confusion and ouerthrow both of them and theirs. So that not onely his maiestie hath cause to hate you but also all they that haue had anie interest in any of that bloud, yea this whole state which by you haue bene bereaued of so many speciall members that might haue done great seruice and helpe vnto it.

39. W. BISHOP.

Thus most humblye craving pardon of your Highnesse, if I haue in any thing exceeded the limits of my bounden duty, I beseech our blessed Saniour to endue you, both with the true knowledge of his diuine verity, and with the spirit of Fortitude, to embrace and defend it constantly; or that at the least, graciously to tolerate and permit it.

Your most Excellent maiesties, most obedient, and loyall subiect, and seruant. W. B.

R. ABBOT.

Indeed M. Bishop iust cause there is that you should aske pardon of his maiestie for exceeding the limits of your bounden dutie, not for the length of your epistle but for the matter of it. If vpon aduertisement and further examinatioⁿ of that that you haue written you do not aske his Maiestie pardon and submit your selfe to his mercie, you shew your selfe to be a lewd and a naughty man. You haue written to his Maiestie that which you are not able to iustifie: or if you can iustifie it, let it appeare and I will craue pardon of his Maiestie to ioyne with you. But because you cannot, and so indeed I auouch that you cannot therefore as touching your praier I answere you with Tertullians wordes: Esto religiosus in Deum, qui visillum Imperatori propitium: You that will pray to God for his goodnesse towards your Prince, be first your selfe truely religious towards God. God regardeth none of your praiers as now you pray your Prince can expect no true praiers from you, because you haue no true affection towards him. You haue sought to delude his Maiestie with lies and falshood, to perswade him that that is the diuine verity which indeed is your heresie. You haue alleadged no one thing wherein you haue not played the cozener and either wrested it to that to which it was neuer meant, or concealed that that should serue to rectifie the meaning of it, and therefore haue not shewed your selfe his most excellent Maiesties most loyall subject as you vnderwrite your selfe. And how should his Maiestie expect to haue you loyall and true to him, whom he seeth thus vntrue and false to God. In a word you are one of them whome Saint Austin describeth who impudently resolue not to care what you say, saue how soeuer to contrarie that that we say. God open your eyes to see your owne folly and giue you an humble hart to yeeld to him.

^a Tertul. Apo-loget. cap. 34.

^b *August. de
ciu. Dei. lib. 2.
ca. 3.*

FINIS.

THE SECOND PART
OF THE DEFENCE OF THE REFORMED
CATHOLICKE.

Wherein the Religion established in our Church of England (for the points here handled) is apparently iustified by authoritie of Scripture, & testimonie of the ancient church, against the vaine caullations collected by Doctor Bishop Seminary Priest, as out of other Popish writers, o specially out of Bellarmin, & published vnder the name of The marrow and pith of many large volumes, for the oppugning thereof.

By ROBERT ABBOT Doctor of Divinitie.

Tertul. de præscript. aduer. hæret.

Hæreses de quorundam in firmitatibus habent quod valent, nihil valentes si in benè valentem fidem incurrant.

LONDINI,
Impensis Thomæ Adams.

THE SECOND PART OF THE DEFINITION OF THE ART

...the first part of the definition...
...the second part of the definition...
...the third part of the definition...
...the fourth part of the definition...
...the fifth part of the definition...
...the sixth part of the definition...
...the seventh part of the definition...
...the eighth part of the definition...
...the ninth part of the definition...
...the tenth part of the definition...

Printed by J. B. [illegible]
[illegible]

TO THE MOST HIGH AND MIGHTIE
MONARCH, MY MOST DREAD
and Soueraigne Lord, I AM B s by the grace of God King of great Britaine, France and Ireland, Defender of the faith.

OST puissant and renowned King, albeit my qualitie & gifts are of meaner sort and worth, then that I should thereupon presume thus often to sollicite your Maiesties acceptation of my foretimely and vndigested fruits : yet sith this busines was by your Maiesties appointment first commaunded, and one part thereof is already become sacred vnto you, the remainder could not in duty be recommended to any other then to the same most benigne and fosterous aspect of your Royall Grace. In the former part I haue indeuored to cleare those mists and clouds which Doct̃or Bishops maleuolent breath, out of the foggie vapours of their Romish filthie lakes, had blowne amongst vs in his Epistle Dedicatorie to your Highnesse, whereinto hee had contriued in a generality very many malicious and blind cauils, whereby hee would perswade your Maiestie, that the Religion by your

The Epistle

f Apoc. 12. 7.
g ver. 15.
h ver. 12.
i Jer. 51. 6. 11.
k Apoc. 17. 4.
l Ibid. 18. 2.
m ver. 20.

destruction. In the meane time your Maiesty hath seene and must expect yet further to see ^f the dragon and his angels fighting against Michael and his Angels, and ^g out of his mouth as it were out of a brimstone lake, casting out malice & slander as floods of water, to drowne the woman and her seed, and so much the more enraged, because he conceiueth in likelihood ^h that he hath but a short time, and that the day is at hand which the Lord hath promised which shall ⁱ bring vpon Babel the vengeance of the Lord & the vengeance of his temple. The Lord make good his word; the Lord hasten his work, that we may see it that that ^k purple harlot first founded in bloud and paricide, and hauing since by an vnquenched thirsting after bloud made her self the slaughterhouse ^l of the Saints and Martyrs of Christ, may of her owne children drinke bloud her belly ful, that ^m the heauens may reioice and the holy Apostles & Prophets, seeing the iudgement of God vpon her, casting her with violence into the sea, neuer to rise againe. And you, most noble King, in whom God hath turned the period of time which threatned alteration & danger to our state & government, to the further strength and establishment thereof, and hath lifted your throne far about the thrones of your royal Progenitors, and hath made you in a maner the ballance of the Christian world, consider that it is vndoubtedly for some great work that in his prouidence he hath so disposed it, and thereto apply those singular ornaments and endowments of the mind, wherein you excell all that haue bene before you. God hath made your Highnes able to espie and discern the conicatching deuices of those bastard Catholik seducers, & we assure our selues, that in your self & in your royal posteritie it shal be found, to the great aduancement of the faith and Kingdome of Iesus Christ. Wherein that our hope may not be frustrate, we most humbly beseech almighty God to put into your Maiesties heart not to be too secure of them who

Dedicatorie.

who account it a martyrdom to die for the murthring of Christian Princes, and in the shedding of your sacred bloud would think themselues to haue gained the one half of their desires, content perhaps by instructions for a while to temporize, and to make shew of meaning no harme, till the memory of thir late villany being somewhat ouerblowne, they may be the lesse suspected, but hauing already giuen to vnderstand what your Maiestie shall looke for at their hands if opportunity should secōd their designs. The Lord auert and turne that iudgment from vs, andⁿ bind your Maiesties soule in the bundle of life with the Lord your God, that your eyes may long behold that noble Impe of grace, the branch of our hope, together with the other branches of your royall line, growing before the Lord to the further dismay and terror of your enimies, and the greater securitie and assurance of the church of Christ. As for the seruice which according to your Maiesties commandement I haue here performed, albeit it be far from that perfection which the weight of the cause requireth, yet I doubt not but it is sufficient to shew } on whether part the truth is to be found, and to iustifie the proceedings of your Maiesty against the cauillations of wilfull men, desperatly shutting their owne eyes, that the light of the Gospel may not shine vnto them. Whatsoeuer it is, it most humbly craueth your Maiesties acceptance and royall protection and fauor, whereto with all loyall duty I recommend it and your Highnesse selfe to the protection of the most high God, whose cause it is that is defended thereby.

Your Maiesties most humble and dutifull subiect

R O B. A B B O T.

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER.

Entle Reader, thou wilt I hope impute it in some part to the condition of the time, that I giue thee this answer not altogether so well featured and shaped as thou haply wouldst desire it. Though it be a fruite that may seeme to haue bene long in growing, yet as the case standeth with me, the length of time hath but serued to bring it to his greatnesse, and therefore howsoeuer it commeth forth with defiance to the aduersaries, yet I confesse it seemeth to me not so thoroughly digested and seasoned as I would haue wished it, to content thee. In this defence of Gods truth, the things that are specially to be respected against the importunitie and aduantage of our aduersaries, are strength and expedition. I haue had care, as the matter would permit, to satife thee in both these respects; and let my care herein obtain pardon of thee, if I seem vnto thee to faile in some complements otherwise. If thou thinke this my answer needlesse because another man hath already taken paines therein, thou must remember that no mans private preuention could yeeld mee dispensation to bee free from doing that which publike authoritie required of mee. I doubt not but in the reading of either, it shall appear vnto thee what spirit it is wherewith these Romish factors are led in their opposition against vs; and that it is not truth and sauing

To the Christian Reader.

ſauing of ſoules wherto they bend themſelues, but onely the upholding of their faction; whether by truth or falſhood, by right or wrong, it ſkillesh not, ſo that that may be performed. That thou mayſt the better ſee and iudge of all, I haue inſerted the whole text of Doct̃or Biſhops booke, altogether condemning that falſhood and guile which he hath uſed towards M. Perkins, and they al vſe in their pretence and ſhew of answering our books, in that they neuer ſet downe the copie of that to which they answer. Which policy ſerueth them to blind the Reader, and to gaine libertie to themſelues to conceale and diſſemble what they liſt, to peruert, to vilifie, to falſifie, and by abſurd imputations to calumniate without being controlled. As our fidelitie and good conſcience of the cauſe which we handle, manifeſtly appeareth in that we neuer forbear to publiſh our aduerſaries bookes to the world, when we haue adioyned an answer to them; ſo their guilt and guile is manifeſt by the contrary, for that they feare to put forth our bookes with their answers, as doubting leſt the bookes being at hand ſhould bewray and ſhew the unſufficiencie of the answers. As for Maſter Perkins booke, being loth too much to increaſe the greatneſſe of the volume, I haue forborne to put it in, the rather for that the ſubſtance thereof for the moſt part may appeare by that that Maſter Biſhop hath ſet downe, and where he faulteth, I haue taken occaſion in my answer to declare, if not the words yet the ſumme and effect of it, the booke it ſelfe alſo being eaſily had by any that is deſirous more exactly to compare them. The authors conceit for the forme and maner of that work was greatly to be approued; and where as it hath had the liking of very many for the briefe and plaine deliuey of our controuerſiall grounds, they ſhall ſee now that it was not without cauſe that they caried ſo good opinion of it, in aſmuch as the malice of an enimie out of their many large volumes can find ſo little matter of waight and ſubſtance to ſay againſt it. I doubt not but it had

To the Christian Reader.

had beene well that in some places he had giuen it some better strength, but it is to be considered, that as the midwife iudgeth better of the birth then the mother that trauelleth with it, and in gaming, the stander by sometimes seeth more then he that playeth, so it is in writing of bookes, that the Reader and examiner seeth sometimes a defect, where the busied and intangled minde of the writer obserued none: and therefore of well-willers and men indifferent, it is to be expected that that which is somewhat vnperfectly deliuered in one place, be no impeachment of that which is sufficiently fenced and fortified in anoher. Thou shalt finde it (gentle Reader) to haue beene so written, as that Master Bishop is faine to vse verie shamefull and miserable shifts to giue shew of answer to it. Do thou learne hereby to loue the truth, which thus triumpheth in the aduersaries owne campe, and euen in their owne bookes insulteth ouer them, whilest either perforce they subscribe it, or shew themselves so exceedingly distressed to resist or stand against it. Take no offence whosoever thou art at the continuance of this fight, because the order must stand which God set downe in the beginning betwixt the Woman and the Serpent,^a I wil put enmitie betwixt her and thee, betwixt her seede and thy seede: and therefore there shall neuer want ^b absurd or vnreasonable men, ^c hauing their consciences seared with a hote Iron, with whom no euidence of truth shall preuaile to make them desist from oppugning the seede that is contrarie to them. The beginning of which absurditie is to be seene in wicked Cain towards his brother Abel, whom the voice of God personally speaking to him could not diuert from that malice whereby he had intended the destruction of his brother. The succession whereof we may behold in the Scribes and Pharisees, and Elders of the Iewes, whom neither the innocencie of the life of Christ, neither the authoritie of his doctrine, neither

^a Gen. 3. 15.

^b 2. Theff. 3. 2.

^c 1. Tim. 4. 2.

To the Christian Reader.

ther the glory of his miracles, nor any euidence of the hand of God working with him, could any way moue, but that they were still ca- uilling and quarelling against him, still accusing and condemning him, and neuer ceasing euen against their owne consciences to fight against him. what maruell is it then that the voice of God speaking to vs in the scriptures, and testifying what the faith and religion is that we are to yeld vnto him, doth not end the quarell and appease the fury of our aduersaries against vs, but that in a mad conceit of themselues and of their Church, they go on still to make of religion what they list, and with impudent faces labour to perswade men, that howsoeuer in plaine wordes the Scripture seeme to make for vs, yet in meaning they are against vs? And surely incredible it were, but that we see it, that men hauing vse of wit and will, should dare in that sort as they do to mocke and delude the word of God. At their pleasure they bring in their abominations into the Church, and when the Scriptures are alledged against them, they tell vs by lame distinctions which stand one legge in the scriptures, the other quite beside, that the Scriptures mean thus or thus, but in no sort touch that which is done by them, though the verie letter of the text do apparently contradict them. As if the adulterer should say, that the Scripture condemneth not his adulterie with a Christian woman, but onely that which is with Infidels and Pagans; or the drunkard should alledge that it meaneth nothing of his drunkenesse, but onely of the drunker nesse of them who haue not wherewith to maintaine their drinking. How many distinctions haue they, whereof there is no greater reason to be giuen then may be giuen of these answers? Now what heresie, what idolatrie, what damnable fancies haue there euer beene in the world, which may not finde meanes for their defence if this licentious kinde of distinctions and deuices may take place? If these mockeries be deemed intolerable in the laws of men, what impiety, what

To the Christian Reader.

what wickednesse is it thus to dally with and to mocke the word of God? But the light of the scripture doth plainly discover the vanitie of these shifts, and that is the cause why they hate and shun the scriptures as the theeves doth the gallows, and the Beare the stake. What a worke do they make, how many deuices do they vse, how readie are they to apprehend euery pretence, to discourage the people from meddling with the scriptures, and to breede in them an vncertaintie and doubt of resting their faith there? But there is no cause for thee to be moued at such bugs and scar-crowes, wherewith these malignant aduersaries seeke to fright thee out of the garden of Iesus Christ, desiring to haue thee rather to continue vpon their stinking dunghils, then to gather the sweete and delighsome flowers that yeeld the sauour of life vnto eternall life. Assure thy selfe, that the most absolute assurance of truth is in the voice of truth it selfe, and thou mayst be secure, that howsoeuer men may speake partially, and may deceiue thee, yet God who speaketh to thee in the Scriptures, which the aduersary himselfe dareth not denie, will neuer deceiue thee. They pretend great difficulties and obscurities in the holy Scriptures: but is it a reason for thee to forbear to drinke and to wash thy selfe in the shallow places of the riuers of God, because there are also gulfs and depths, the bottome whereof thou art not able to search or sound? In those things which are manifest in the Scriptures, saith Saint Austine, ^d In which are contained or found all things that belong to faith and behauiour of life, God speaketh as a familiar friend, without glosing or guile to the hart both of the learned & vnlearned; ^e not that a few, saith Hierome, but that all may vnderstand, the Scripture being ^f a riuier, saith Gregorie, wherein both the lamb may wade and the Elephant may swimme; ^g the doctrine thereof

c August. epif.
3. In ijs quæ aperta sunt tanquam fa-miliaris ami-
cus sine furoloquitur ad
cor indocto-
rum atque
doctorem.

d Idè de doct.
Christ. lib. 2.
cap. 9. In ijs
quæ aperte posita sunt in Scripturis inueniuntur illa
omnia quæ continent fi-
dem moresq;
vitiandi.

e Hieron. in Psal. 86. Non vt paucintelligerent, sed
vt omnes.

f Gregor. ad Leand. de ex-
posit. lib. Iob.
Flouius in quo agnus ambulet &

g August de vil cred ca 6. Planè ita modificata vt nemo inde haurire nõ possit quod sibi satis est, si modo ad hauriendum deuotè ac pie vt vera religio poscit accedat.

being

To the Christian Reader.

being so tempered, saith Saint Austin againe, as that there is no man but may draw from thence that that is sufficient for him, so that he come to draw with deuotion and piety, as true religion requireth he should do. When they then seeke to barre thee from the use of this heauenly light, what canst thou conceiue but that they are the agents and factors of the Prince of darknesse? The^h Sepia or Cuttle-fish, Tertullian saith, when he is in danger to be taken, casteth about him a blacke inkie matter, wherewith he darkeneth the water that the fisherman cannot see him. What is the reason why those men in that sort seeke to compassse themselues about with the blacke and dark clouds of ignorance of the scriptures, but that their own consciences tel them that their deuotions must needs be descried to be superstitious & damnable if they come to be viewed and surueyed by the light thereof? Now albeit this be the true lightⁱ which maketh all things manifest, and the onely sure foundation whereupon we can rest our faith (for what is it what the whole world saith if God say not the same?) yet against the importunity of the aduersarie, and for thy better satisfaction, thou shalt see our assertions & expositions throughly munited and fenced with the acknowledgment of the auncient Church. Wherein although we cannot but say, that by the Fathers and Bishop of those times, many things were coëcined and deliuered amisse (and are not our aduersaries forced, will they, nill they, to confesse the same?) yet God hath so provided, that his truth ex abundanti is iustified by them, and no antiquity or authoritie of humane error hath so defaced it, but that still the track thereof euen by the who sometimes haue deemed somewhat against it, is plainly to be discerned. Yea in sundry articles of our faith the whole streame of antiquitie runneth so oppositely & directly against the doctrine and practise of the Roman church that now is, as that we may wonder at their extreme impudency & wilfulnes, who against so cleare & euident testimony

^b Tertul. contra Marcion.

¹ Ephes. 5. 13.

To the Christian Reader.

doe still persist in the maintenance thereof. Which, in some part thou shalt see in the treatise here following, and shalt understand according to the occasiō here offred, that howsoever they cry with wide mouthes, The fathers, the fathers, yet their crie is greater then their strength, and that the Fathers haue not left vs vn furnished either of armour to defend our selues, or of weapons to conquer them. And the more to secure thee hereof, I haue set down the testimonies of the Fathers for the most part in their owne words, either in Latine or translated into Latine, or in the Greeke tongue sometimes where I had the copy at hand, and saw the Latine translation not fitly to expresse the Greeke. I haue had a sincere and faithfull care to deale vprightly herein, and not to trouble thee with impertinent allegations, but onely such as are pregnant and cleare to that purpose for which they are alledged. That God (by whose prouidence this seruice hath befallen vnto mee) make the same profitable both to thee and mee, and grant vs by writing and reading to encrease in the light and assurance of his truth that we may more and more see and discern the frauds of these Mountbanks and iuggling Sophisters, who by insolent ostentation of words, and casting of false and deceitfull colours, take vpon them to be able to charme the world, and by their wits to iuggle all other men beside their wits, treading vnder foote the word of God, pretending the fathers names, and betraying the faith of the fathers, subiecting all religion to their owne fancie, and saying after the manner of wicked men,^k With our tongues we will preuaile, we are they that ought to speake, who is Lord ouer vs? And thou, O mercifull Father, who onely art the refuge and dwelling place of thy poore and maligned Church,^l stablish for thy names sake the thing that thou hast wrought in vs, goe forward with the worke which thou hast so graciously begun, to dissolue the captivity of Babylon, and to free the remnant of thy Church from the yoke of the slavery and bondage

^k Psal. 12. 4.

^l Psal. 68. 18.

To the Christian Reader.

dage of Antichrist, that all stumbling blocks of Popish prophenations and idolatries being remoued, there may be a way prepared for the returne of the forlorne seede of Abraham into the society of thy people, that thenceforth we may expect and looke for the comming of thy Sonne Iesus Christ, to make an end of these euill daies, and to gather vs euerlastingly to that hope which in him thou hast set before vs. m Amen, Lord.

Come Lord Iesus, come quickly.

m Apoc. 22.
20.

The speciall Contents of this Booke.

THat the Church of Rome maketh Christ in effect no Christ, pag. 14. &c. That Rome is Babylon, and the Pope Antichrist, pag. 39. Of Free-will, Chap. 1. pag. 86. Of originall sinne after Baptisme, Chap. 2. pag. 168. Of the certaintie of Saluation, Chap. 3. pag. 255.

Of Iustification, Chap. 4. pa. 379. in which are handled these points:

1. That righteousnesse before God is imputed, not inherent. pag. 387.
2. What manner of faith it is whereby we are iustified. p. 434.
3. That faith onely doth iustifie. pag. 468.
4. How we affirme it vnpossible to keep Gods commandements. pag. 550.
5. That our good workes are not free from staine of sin. p. 573.
6. That true faith cannot be without charitie & good workes. pag. 605.

Of Merits, Chap. 5. pag. 629.

Of Satisfaction, Chap. 6. pag. 729.

Of Traditions, Chap. 7. pag. 839.

Of vowes, and namely of the Monkish vowes of chastiitic, pouertie and obedience, Chap. 8. pag. 992.

Of images, Chap. 9. pag. 1105.

T H E

THE PREFACE TO THE READER, By Doctor Bishop.

Entle Reader, I meane not heere to entertaine thee with many words: the principall cause that moued me to write, was the honour and glorie of God, in defence of his sacred verity; then the imploying of his talent bestowed vpon me: as well to fortifie the weaker sort of Catholiks in their faith as to call backe and leade others (who wander vp and downe like to lost sheepe, after their owne fancie) into the right waie.

I tooke in hand particularly the confutation of this booke, not only for that I was thereunto requested by a friend of good intelligence and iudgement, who thought it very expedient: but also because perusing of it, I found it penned more schollerlike then the Protestants vse to doe ordinarily: For first, the points in controversie are set down distinctly, & for the most part truly. Afterward in confirmation of their opinion, the chief arguments are produced frō both Scriptures, Fathers & reason: Which are not vulgar, but culled out of their Rabbins, Luther, Peter Martyr, Caluini, Kemnitius, & such like, though he name them not. Lastly, he placeth some obiections, made in fauor of the Catholik doctrine, & answereth to them as well as he could. And (which I speake to his commendation) doth performe all this very briefly & clearly. So that (to speake my opinion freely) I haue not seene any book of like quantity, published by a Protestā, to contain either more matter. or deliuered in better method. And consequently more apt to deceine the simple: especially considering, that he wishal counterfeitch to come as neere vnto the Romane Church as his tender conscience will permit him, where as indeed hee walketh as wide from it, as any other noueller of this age.

Wherefore I esteemed my spare time best imployed about the discouering ring of it, beeing (as it were) an abridgement of the principall controuersies of these times, and do endeouour after the same Scholasticall manner, without all superfluitie of words no lesse to maintaine and defend the Catholike partie, then to confute all such reasons as are by M. Perkins alledged for the contrarie.

Read this short treatise (good Christian) diligencilie, for thou shalt finde in it the marrow and pith of many large volumes, conuicted and drawne into a narrow roome. And reade it ouer as it becommeth a good Christian, with a desire to finde out, and to follow the truth, because it concerneth thy eternall saluation: and then iudge without partialitie, whether Religion hath better grounds in Gods word, more euident testimony from the purest antiquitie, and is more conformable vnto all godlinesse, good life, and upright dealing (the infallible markes of the best Religion) and speedily embrace that. Before I end this short preface, I must intreate thy patience to beare with the faults in printing, which are too many, but not so much to be blamed if it bee courteously considered, that it was printed farre from the Author with a Dutch Composer, and overseene by an vnskilfull Corrector: the greatest of them shall be amended in the end of the booke.

Before the printing of this part was finished, I heard that M Perkins was dead. I am sorie that it commeth forth too late to do him any good. Yet his worke lining to poison others, a preseruatue against it, is neuer the lesse necessary.

R. ABBOT.

IF y^e had respected the glorie of God, M. Bishop, it should haue appeared by your respect to yeeld oueraigite honor and authoritic to the word of God. God is in heauen, and wee are vpon the earth: we haue no knowledge of him, no acquaintance or dealing with him but by his word. Therein we seeke him, and find him; therein he speaketh vnto vs, and thereout we learne to speake to him. If we haue the word of God, God is present with vs; if we be without the word of God, God himselfe is absent from vs. Therefore by our honour and obedience to the word of God, it must appeare, that we truly and sincerely intend and seeke for the glorie of God. Hereby it appeareth that you, M. Bishop, in this your booke, haue not sought for the glorie of God, but rather to glorifie ^a your Lord God the Pope, as your Glosse of the Canon law most blasphemously moufly hath filed him. You haue in this worke of yours vfed all manner of vnruth and falshood, to vphold and iufifie his wicked proceedings againft the word of God. Whatfoeuer God hath taught vs, whatfoeuer Chrift and his Apoftles haue deliuered, all is nothing if your Lord God the Pope, and your mafter Bellarmines his procter generall, do fay the contrarie. Howfoeuer fimplie and plainly they fpeake, yet they meane not as they fpeake, if the Pope and Bellarmines will tell you another meaning. As for your talent, we take it to be greater in your owne opinion and the opinion of your felioves, then it is indeed. But whatfoeuer it is, you haue abused it to the wrong of him that gaue it, not to edificatiō, but to de- ftruction, not to fortifie any in the faith, but to nourifh and harden them that depend vpon you, in error and misbeleefe; not to leade any into the right way, but to intice men to crooked waies and leud ^{b Prou: 2:15:} _{c Ch: 7: 27:} paths, which go downe to the chambers of death, and the end whercof is confufion and fhame; not to withdraw men from fancies, but to draw them to other fancies, from fancies in conuerfatiō, to fancies in religion; that fo beeing fed wholly with fancies, they may perifh in the end for want of true food. And indeed men that wander in fancies, are the fubieft for your malice & trechery to worke vpon. Many that liue in the opportunitie of the knowledge of Chrift, yet neglect and defpife the fame. The light fhineth into their eies, and they regard it not: God offereth himfelfe vnto them, and they fay in their hearts, we haue no delight nor pleasure in thee. Therefore beeing empty and void of truth, they lie open to be filled with error and lies; & hauing vnthankfully withholden themfelues from God, God by iuft iudgement giueth them ouer to the hands of impoftors and deceiuers, that it may be verified which the Apoftle faith, ^{d 2: Theff: 1:10:} Because they receined not the loue of the truth that they might be faued, therefore God fhall fend them ftrong delufion that they may beleeue lies, that they may bee damned which beleeued not the truth, but tooke pleasure in vnrighteousneffe.

^a Extratrag: Io. an. 12: Cū in er in glossa: Credere dominum Deum nostrum Papam sic non potuisse statuire, et e: hereticum censere. s. r:

Your friend of good intelligence and iudgement, that thought it very expedient that you fhould take in hand the confutation of M. Perkins booke, fpake thereof haply as Caiphas did of the death of Chrift, meaning it one way which was to fall out another way. I doubt not but it wil fall out to haue been very expedient which you haue done, becaufe you giue hereby occafion of difcouering your false doctrine, & of iustifying the truth of Christ, which M. Perkins was carefull to maintaine. I doubt not but many by this occasion will take knowledge of your corrupt and trecherous dealing, your patching and shifring, your cosening and deluding of men, & will discern the weaknes and absurdity of that bad cause, which with glorious and goodly words you labour so highly to aduance.

As for your commendation of M. Perkins booke, it is but the imitation of some vaine-glorious captaines, who to grace their own victories, do set out to the vttermost the aduersaries power & prowesse, thinking their glory to be the greater, by how much the greater men shall conceiue the might and valour of them to haue bene whom they haue ouercome. You dreamed of a victorie heere, and you thought it to be much for your commendation, that your aduersary should be deemed of as great strength as any is to be found amongst vs. But we would haue you to vnderstand, that the Church of England neuer tooke M. Perkins booke to be a wariour in complete harnessse, or a challenger for the field, but onely as a captaine training his souldiers at home, where he wanteth much of that munition and defence wherewith he should endure the brunt of battell. He wrote it very scholerlike indeed, for an introduction onely to the true vnderstanding and iudgement of the controuersies betwixt vs and you, but knew well, that it wanted much that might haue bene added, to giue it full and perfect strength. You haue taken hereof some aduantage, as you conceiue, and yet how pittifully are you distressed many times both to vphold that which he obiecteth for you, and to answer that which he alledgeth for vs? Now if for the compiling of his booke he bestirred himselfe as the Bee, going into other mens gardens for the gathering of hony into his hieue, yet he made no Rabbines of them, to take any thing for hony, because it grew in the garden of such or such a man, but vsed carefull and aduised consideration of that which he wrote, esteeming the weight of his arguments & of his answers, that he might faithfully performe what he did vndertake. But far otherwise haue you dealt M. Bishop, in your marrow & pitch, as you call it, of many large volumes contracted and drawne into a narrow roome. You haue made Bellarmino specially your Rabbine, your magister noster, you take al vpon his word, if he say it, you will sweare it: if he haue once written it, you will write it againe without any further examination whether it be true or false. We are beholding to you for translating so much of him into English for their sakes that doe not vnderstand the Latin tongue. But Bellarmino mocketh and abuseth you M. Bishop, as he doth euery one that giueth him any trust. Hee was a man of corrupt and euill conscience, wholly prostituted to Antichrist, and sold to his deceits, by which means he maketh you to ly many times when you do not thinke ye lie. For which cause I would aduise you when you will write any more bookes out of Bellarmino, to make due triall of that which hee saith. It may haply doe you good, to make you detest his fraud and falshood, and to hate that profession which cannot be vpholden but by such meanes. There is cause you should so doe, who from many large volumes can gather no better marrow, no sounder pith, then that which you haue sent vs for the marrow and pith of many large volumes. Your marrow is but dust, your pith is but rottenesse: there is nothing in your booke fit to satisfie the conscience of a man desirous to bee iustructed in the truth. It will I hope sufficientlie appeare, that you haue neither grounds from the word of God, nor any approoued testimony of antiquitie, to warrant any man to embrace that which you maintaine. He that readeth your booke as it becometh a good Christian to doe, and conferreth it with M. Perkins booke and our defence thereof, to iudge without partially, I presume he will take you for a leud and naughtie man, impudent and vnshamefast, regarding onely to vphold a side, whitouth any entire regard to learne or to teach the truth. In your postscript you tell vs that you are sorie M. Perkins being dead, that your booke commeth forth too late to doe him any good. Whereby we conceiue, that you haue a good opinion of it. But wee must tell you astouching doing him good in your sense, he was not a man so weake as to bee moued with such a toy. Indeed if hee had liued, wee need not doubt but it would haue done him much good, and beene great ioy to him, to see that in the marrow and pith of many large volumes there should be so little matter of moment to be saide against that which he had written, so little and so bad, as that wee hope that your preseruatione will become your owne poison, and the bane of that which you thought to strengthen thereby.

M. BISHOPS ANSWER TO MASTER PERKINS
HIS EPISTLE DEDICATORIE.

M After Perkins in his Epistle Dedicatorie saith, It is a policy of the diuel, to think that our religion & the religiō of the present church of Rom, are al one in substance, or that they may be v-nited. Before I am to deliuer my opinion concerning this point, I had need to be informed what this Author meaneth by these words our Religion: For there beeing great diuersities of pretended Religions currant in the world, all contrary to the Church of Rome, how can I certamlie knowe whether of them he professeth? Wherefore (good sir) may it please you to declare what religion you understand when you say our Religion? Is it that which Martin Luther (a licentious Frier) first preached in Germanie? or rather that which the martiall minister Zuinglius contended with sword and shield to set up in Zwitzerland? or perhaps that which John Ca'uin by sedition wrought in: o Geneva, expelling the lawful magistrate thence, and by the aide of Beza (a dissolute turnecoate) spread into many corners of France? Or if by your Religion you meane onely to comprehend the Re:igion now practised in England, yet are you farther to shew, whether you understand that established by the State, or the other more refined (as it is thought by many) and embraced by them who are called Puritans, for of their leauen fauoureth that positiō of yours, That the article of Christs descent into hel crept into the Creed by negligence, and some other such like in this book. The principall diuisions of the new Gospell (to omit sundry subdiuisions) beeing famous, and receiued of diuers in England according to each mans fant asie, it is meet you expresse whether of them you speake of, that it may be duly considered how the Romane Religion and it agree, and what union may bee made betwene them. Now if you meane the hotchpotch and confusion of all these new Religions together, as by the opposition here vnto the Church of Rome, and by the articles following may be gathered, then I am cleare for you in this, that there can be no more concord between these two Religions then there is between light and darknes, faith and infidelity, Christ and Belial. Notwithstanding I thinke that the reason by you produced to, proue the impossibility of this union, is of no value, to wit, that they of
the

the Roman church haue razed the foundation, for though in words they honor Christ, yet in deed they turn him into a Pseudo-Christ, and an Idoll of their owne braine. A verie sufficient cause (no doubt) of eternall breach and division, if it could be verified. But how proue you, that we Romane Catholikes, who belecue Iesus Christ to bee perfect God and perfect man, and the onely Redcemer of mankind, make him a false Christ and an Idoll? or before you go about to proue it, tell me (I pray you) how this can well stand with your owne definition of a reformed Catholike in your Preface? There you affirme him to be a Catholike reformed to your liking, that holdeth the same necessary heads of Religion with the Romane Church. Now can there be any more necessary head of Religion, then to haue a right faith in Christ? can any other foundation bee laid besides Iesus Christ? If then your reformed Catholike must agree with the Romane Church in necessary heads of Religion, as you hold he must: either the Romane Church razeth not the foundation, and maketh not Christ a Pseudo-Christ as you say here. or else you teach your disciples very perniciouly, to hold the same necessary heads of religion with it. But to leaue you to the reconciliation of these places, let vs examine briefly how you confirme your paradox, that the Church of Rome maketh Christ a false Christ, which you go about to proue by foure instances: The first is, because the seruant of his seruants may change and adde to his commandements, hauing so great power that hee may open and shut heauen to whom hee list, and bind the very conscience with his owne lawes, and consequentially be partaker of the spiriuall kingdome of Christ. Here are diuers reasons huddled up in one, but all of little moment: for all these severall faculties which the Pope enioyeth, being receiued by the free gift of Christ, and to bee employed in his seruice onely, and to his honour and glorie, are so farre off from making Christ a Pseudo-Christ, that they do highly recommend his most singular bountie towards his followers, without any derogation to his owne diuine prerogatiues. The particulars shall be more particularly answered in their places hereafter. Now I say in a word, that Christs Vicar cannot change any one of Gods comandements, nor adde any contrary vnto them, but may well enact and establish some other conformable vnto them, which do bind the conscience: for that power is granted of God to euery soueraigne gouernor, as witnesseth S. Paul, saying, Let euery soule be subiect to higher powers, And thus (as it is Rom. 13. in the fift verse following) of necessity, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake. So that to attribute power vnto one that is vnder

Christ, to bind our consciences, is not to make Christ a Pseudo-Christ, but to glorify him, much acknowledging the power which it hath pleased him to give unto men. In like manner, what an absurd illation is that, from the power to open and shut heauen gates (which all, both Catholikes & Protestants confesse to haue bin giuen to S. Peter and the rest of the Apostles) to inferre, that Christ is made a Pseudo-Christ, as who should say, the master spoiled himselfe of his supream authority by appointing a steward ouer his household, or a porter at his gates: hee must bee both master and man to, belike. And thus much of the first instance.

R. ABBOT.

Wee may well thinke that M. Bishop did not well enioy his wits, that would write a booke, and not know what it is where of he writeth. He hath written a whole booke, such a one as it is, purposed against our religion, and yet will seeme here in the beginning not to know what our religion is. But hee knoweth it well enough, and although by an apish imitation of the foolerie of some of his companions, he would make it seeme of many fashions & sorts, by diuersity of names, and by termes of diuisions and subdiuisions, yet he seeth & they all see, and by the harmony of confessions of all the reformed churches it appears to their exceeding great grieffe, that there is amongst them as great vniformity and consent of Religion, as euer was to be found in their confederacie and banding of themselves against religion. Yea there are many more material differences to be found amongst them, then can be reckoned amongst vs. He that would follow M. Bishops veine, might demand of him, what they meane by the religion of the Church of Rome, whether it bee the religion of Pope John the 23. who publickly maintained that^a there is no eternall life, no resurrection, and that the soule of man perisheth with his body, as doth the soule of the brute beast: or whether it be the religion of Pope Leo the tenth, that held all the faith of Christ to be but a fable. Whether it bee the religion of the Councell of^c Constantance, maintaining the Councell to be aboue the Pope: or the religion of the Councell of Basill, decreeing the Pope to bee aboue the Councell. Whether it be the religion of them^d that hold the virgin Mary to haue beene conceiued without originall sinne, or of them that hold her to haue beene conceiued in sinne. Whether it

Constantiens.
Concil. sess. 11.
Pertinaciter dixit, assertit, dogmatizauit & construxit uiam eternam non esse, neque aliam post hanc, &c.
Ba^e de Act. Rom. Pontif. in Leo 10. Quantū nobis ac ceteris nostris profuit ista fabula de Iesu Christo.
e Sess. 4. Generali concilio quilibet cuiuscunque status vel dignitatis tenens si Patris fuerit, obedire tenetur.
d Erasmi. Epist. ad oper. Hilarij. Assensurans uirginem matrem immunes à peccato originis apud Dominum: alij hec uentus est, apud Scythas orbicodaxus.

it bee the religion of Thomas Aquinas, that holdeth ^e that a dogge or a swine eating the Sacrament doth eat the verie body of Christ or the religion of the ^f Master of the sentences, who cannot tell what the dogge eateth : or the religion of them that say, as ^g A- quinas reporteth, that so soone as the dogge or the man use toucheth the Sacrament, straightwaies the body of Christ is taken vp into heauen. Whether it bee the religion of ^h Pighius and Catharinus, who hold originall sinne to be a meere priuation : or the religion of Dominicus a Soto, who holdeth it as his fellowes do, to be a positieue corruption. Whether it bee the religion of the ⁱ Diuines of Colein, who with ^k Pighius hold, that we are iustified by the imputed righteousnesse of Christ as the Protestants, or of the rest that hold that wee are iustified by a formall inherent righteousness of our owne.
 Whether it be the religion of ^l Oforius, condemning the doctrine of
S. Austine concerning predestination: or the religion of ^m Cesar Bar- ronius, who acknowledgeth the same to be true. Whether it be the religion of ⁿ Alfunsus de Castro, affirming that the Pope may erre: or the religion of them that affirme he cannot erre. Whether it bee the religion of the Iesuits, maintaining ^o that a man who is no Christian may bee Pope, and that stewes are as lawfull at Rome as the Pope himselfe : or the religion of the Seculars, that condemne these for wicked and false positions. Whether it be the religion of ^p Dureus the Iesuite, defending that the Church may make a booke canon-icall Scripture, which from the beginning was not so: or the religion of ^q Andradius, affirming that the Church hath no such authoritie.
 I might lead him along through Bellarmines controuersies, and shew how he alledgeth two, three, foure, and sometimes more opinions amongst them of sundry points of their religion, and in euery of them I might question, whether or which we shall take to be the religion of the Church of Rome? Now if hee will answer, that men may haue priuate opinions and followers therein, which yet may not be vrged as prejudiciall to the currant and commonly receiued doctrine of the Church, in which sort their ^r Thomist, and Scotists, and Occamists haue been diuided one from another in the bosome of their Church, then let that little discrecion that hee hath serue him against another time to vnderstand, that it is no preiudice to our religion that there is in some matters some diuersity of opinions amongst vs, or that some men be exorbitant from that which is commonly

Thom. Aquin:
 p. 3. q. 80. art. 31
 ad. 3.
¹ Sent. 4. dist. 13.
² U'supra.

^h Pigh. de pec-
ca'to origin'a'i-Catharin: de lapsu
h' minis &c.
 cap. 6.
ⁱ Co'on. in Anst.
 didg.
^k Pigh. de fide & iustif.

^l Ofor. de Just.
 lib. 9:
^m Baron. Annal:
 lib. 6.
ⁿ Alfons. aduer.
heret. lib. 1. cap. 4
 & 8.
^o Declarat sa- cred. ad Clement.
 8. pag. 20.

^p Dureus contra Whitaker. li. 1.

^q Andrad. de
sen's. fides Triden:
 lib. 3

^r Alfons. de Cas-
siro aduersus heret:
 lib. 1. cap. 7.

monly amongst vs. approued for the truth. There is an vniuersalitie of doctrine with them, for which men are esteemed of their religion, in the particulars whereof notwithstanding there are many differences, for which they will not be thought to bee one of one religion and another of another. What infinite varietie of obseruation and discipline is there found amongst their Friers and Monkes, and yet they take them to bee all of one religion? There was of old a great dissension betwixt ^f Polycrates the Metropolitan of the Asian Churches, and Victor Bishop of Rome, concerning the obseruation of the feast of Easter; betwixt ^e Cyprian and Stephanus Bishop of Rome, with their Churches one each part, about the rebaptizing of them that were baptized by heretikes; betwixt ^u Chrysostome and Epiphanius first, and after betwixt ^x Hierome and Ruffinus, concerning the condemning of the works of Origen; betwixt ^y Chrysostome and many other Bishops, concerning the often restitution of penitents to the communion of the Church; betwixt ^z Hierome and Austine, concerning Peters dissimulation, and yet were they neuer taken to be of diuers religions vntill this day. And what? are we then in worse case then all these, that because there is some variance betwixt some of vs in some points of doctrine, or betwixt some others in matters of ceremony and circumstance concerning the discipline of the Church, therefore we must be sorted into so many Religions as M. Bishops idle head can deuise differences amongst vs? This is to be contemned, as a peeuish and impetinent cauill of contentious and wrangling Sophisters, bewraying more malice then learning or wit, making shew to the vnlearned of objecting somewhat against vs, when their objection maketh more against themselves then it doth against vs. Now then if M. Perkins either concerning Christs descending into hell, or some other like matters subject to variety of opinion, were otherwise minded then standeth with truth or the common iudgement of our Church, wee do not therefore account him a man of other religion, but a maintainer of our religion, and we will say of him as Austine said of Cyprian, ^a Therefore did he not see somewhat, that by him a greater matter might be seene, namelie that in difference of iudgement we are not to bee contentious, but labour with all our might to preserue the publike peace and vnitie of the Church, and with modestie and loue to carie our selues towards them that in opinion dissent from vs. A notable example whercof

^f Euseb. hist. lib. 5. cap. 22. 23.

^e Cyprian. ad Pompeium. cons. epist. Stephanus et Concl. Carthag. apud Cyprian.

^u Socrat. hist.

lib. 6. cap. 13.

^x Hieron. aduer.

Ruffin.

^y Socrat. lib. 7.

cap. 19.

^z August. epist.

19.

^a August.

whereof we see in M. Caluine, who when Luther vpon some matter of question, behaued himselfe somewhat intemperately against him and some others alike minded as he was, was wont to say, Though hee should call mee diuell, yet will I do him this honour, to acknowledge him an excellent seruant of God. As for the imputations which heere M. Bishop laicth vpon him and the rest whom hee nameth, we account them but as the barking of a curie dogge against a Lion; they are stale and threedbare cauils, and too well knowne to cause them that reproch that hee desireth. If Luther were licentious for marrying a wife, what were their Popes and Cardinals, their Bishops, and Priests, and Monks, for keeping other mens wiues, and retaining concubines and harlots of their owne? If Zuinglius went armed into the field to giue encouragement to his countriemen for their iust and necessarie defence, is he thereupon to bee taxed for a martiall minister, more then Iulius the second for a martiall Pope, who himselfe went in person against the French, and going ouer the bridge of Tiber, cast his crosse keies into the riuer, and tooke his sword in his hand, saying, Seeing Peters keies will do no good, we will try whether Pauls sword wil serue the turne? or then Philip the French Bishop in the time of king Richard the first, for a martiall Bishop, who bare armes against king Richard, and was taken in battell, in whose behalfe when the Pope wrot to the King, requesting fauour for his sonne, the King sent to him the Bishops armour with this message, Vide an tunica filij tui sit an non, See whether this bee thy sonnes coate or not? Nay it is no rare matter to finde examples of martiall Popes and martiall Cardinals and Bishops in the Church of Rome; & therefore we need say no more to M. Bishop as touching this cauill, but onlie to bid him looke at home. As for that which hee saith of Caluins expelling of the lawfull Magistrate out of Geneua, it is a verie malicious and false tale, it being verie euident, that the Bishop of Geneua whom hee meaneth, with his clergie, perceiuing the people to be minded for the abolishing of Popish superstition and receiuing of the Gospell, voluntarily fled from thence before Caluins coming to that place. Last of all, he calleth Beza a dissolute turncoat: but if a man should ask his wisdom, why he doth so, hee cannot tell. All the matter of this dissolutenes is, that being vnder twenty yeeres old, or a litle aboue, he wrote a booke of Epigrammes, in which by imitation of Catullus and Ouid, he expressed some things

more

b *Ca'uin. epi. 57.*c *Ba'cin Iul. 2.*d Matt. Paris.
in Richard. 1.

more licentiously and wantonlie then was fit. The writing thereof hee afterwards when God had called him to the knowledge of his truth ^e repented much; and when hee was requested that the same might be reprinted, denied it vterlic, and wished the remembrance thereof to bee wholly buried. In his conuersion otherwise hee was neuer to bee touched with any blemish of that lightnesse, which in those poeticall exercises hee made shew of. And is not this a great matter, that these men object so often to his disgrace? Surely if the liues of sundrie of the ancient Fathers were looked into with such eies, before they were come to Christ, there would bee found worse matters to vpbraid them with, euen by their owne confession, then this is. S. Austin when the Donatists dealt with him, as M. Bishop and his fellowes do with Beza, gaue answer to them thus: ^f Looke how much they blame my fault, so much doe I commend and praise my Physition. To which effect, I haue heard that Beza himself answered one as touching that calumination: Hic homo inuidet mihi gratiam Christi, This man enuieth me the grace of Christ. Surely, that should haue been no fault, though it had bene much greater, if hee had continued one of them. But what would they haue said, if Beza had done as Ioannes à Casa their Archbishop of Beneuentum did, who wrote an Italian poeme in commendation of Sodomie, and printed it at Venice, professing himself to be delighted with that horrible filthinesse, and that he knew no vicerie but that: or as ^h Pope Sixtus the fourth, who built a Stewes at Rome for the exercise of that vnnatural and monstrous lust? How many such filthie dogges are there found amongst the Romane Sages, who yet with them must go for sacred and holy Fathers, whilst Beza for a few verses written when hee was yet but a boy, must bee subiect to their reprochfull malice all his life, yea and after his death also? But the thing that troubleth M. Bishop indeed is, that Beza became a turn-coate, for that he cast off the liuerie of Antichrist, the badge & cognisance of the man of sinne, and betooke himselfe to the profession and seruice of Iesus Christ. VVell and happie were it for him, if he had turned his coate in the like sort, if he had put on the garment of Christ crucified; which though it might seeme base in the eies of the proud harlot of Rome, yet should make him glorious in the eies of God, and yeld him acceptation before him. Now the Articles of our Religion set downe by M. Perkins, he calleth the hotch-

^e Beza Confes.
I p^ost. Dedicat.

^f *August. contr.
lis. Petil. lib. 3:
cap. 10: Quan-
tumcumque ille accusat vitium
meum, tantum
ego laudo medi-
cum meum:*

^g *Bale. Act.
Rom. Pontif. in Iulio 3.*

^h *Ibid. in Sixt.
4. ex Orat. Henr.
Agipp. ad Iona.*

hotchpoch of all these new religions, because he well knoweth, that we on all sides agree in the maintenance of these Articles, and therefore are indeed but one religion. Whereby the Reader may easily conceiue, how idle his obiection is of diuisions and subdiuisions. But of this hotchpoch he hath tasted, and by this time it hath made his stomach very sicke, and I belecue it will cast him into a disease from which he will neuer be able to recouer againe.

Of the religion in these articles expressed, hee confesseth, that it can admit no reconcilment with the Church of Rome, but he lieth not the reason which M. Perkins alledgeth of the impossibility of this vnion. His reason is, Because they of the Romane Church haue razed the foundation, and though in words they honour Christ, yet indeed do turn him into a Pseudo Christ and an Idol of their own brain. Against this reason M. Bishop alledgeth the explication that M. Perkins maketh of his Reformed Catholike, to be any one that holds the same necessary heads of Religion with the Romane Church; whereto is added by M. Perkins, which M. Bishop omitteth: Yet so, as be pares off and reiects all errors in doctrine, whereby the same religion is corrupted. Hereupon M. Bishop asketh, Can there bee a more necessary head of Religion, then to haue a right faith in Christ? which is very clerkeley and well applied, and sheweth him to bee a man of deep insight into dark points. Surely to haue a right faith in Christ would not be vnderstood for a head of religion, but for the whole effect (in a manner) and substance of it. M. Perkins by necessary heads of religion, vaderstandeth those generalities and principles whereof there is no question betwixt the Church of Rome and vs, which for the points that hee handleth, hee hath set downe vnder the name of our consents in the beginning of every question. These he will haue his Reformed Catholique still to hold with them, but to detest the absurdities and errors, which they teach in the deduction and application of these generalities. Therefore he doth not say as touching those principles, that they raze the foundation; but the razing of the foundation consisteth in the indirect vse and applying thereof. There is a generality of doctrine to which Heretikes accord, and vnder the cloud whereof many times they couer their heresies, euen as the Pelagian Heretikes hid the poison of their heresies vnder the acknowledgement of the grace and helpe of God, but bewrayed the same notably when they were vrged to specific

specifie what they meant by the same grace. So doth the Church of Rom acknowledge the incarnation of Christ, his passion, death and resurrection, his ascension, and intercession at the right hand of God; but in assigning the vse and effect of all these things and the rest, they make Christ in a manner no Christ at all. M. Bishop therefore might easily haue seene, but that hee was willing to shew either his ignorance in not vnderstanding, or his learning in cauiling, that M. Perkins might well say without any contradiction, that the Church of Rome had razed the foundation, and yet with his Reformed Catholike still to hold those necessaric heads of religion, which still remaine in the acknowledgement and profession of the Church of Rome. Now M. Perkins giueth foure instances of their iustling of Christ out of his place. The first standeth in the popes vsurping of the spirituall kingdome of Christ, by changing his commandements, and adding to them: by taking vpon him to open and shut heauen to whom he will; by binding mens consciences with his decrees. But M. Bishop telleth vs, that Christs giuing of these faculties to the Pope, doth most highly recommend his singular bountie towards his followers, and is no derogation to himselfe. Which he telleth vs vpon his own word. But as for me, I haue read ouer the new Testament diuers times, & yet could I neuer light vpon any place where Christ hath made any mention of the Pope, or of any faculties that he would bestow vpon him. We read of Antichrist the man of sinne, that he should sit in the temple of God, and take vpon him to command as God; but wee finde not that Christ did euer appoint any man to execute any such place. Out of doubt Christ would somewhere or other haue spoken of it, if he had intended any such course. But M. Bishop taketh it to be a great glorie to Christ, to haue a Vicar here vpon earth with a triple Crowne, clothed like Dines in purple and fine linnen, & faring deliciously euerie day: bespangled with gold, and besparkled with Jewels, and caried about like an Idoll vpon the shoulders of men, hauing Emperours, and Kings, and Princes to attend him, to hold his stirrop, to powre him water, to kisse his foote, and all at his deuotion, either to set them vp, or to pul them downie; yea hauing power ouer heauen, and earth, and purgatorie, (the only spite is, that hee hath no power to keepe himselfe from hell) and that hee should make lawes, and giue dispensations against Gods lawes, and like like a Lord c^osmisrule, turne all things vpside downe. O what a goodly matter had it been, that Christ should haue made al his seruants like Popes here in the world, and all other people vassals & tributaries vnto them? what a golden world would that haue been, and how much would it haue renowned the bounty of Christ? Well, M. Bishop, we wish you to consider throughly of the matter; we cannot see in the Gospell, but that you may as well take vpon you to be a Pope as he that is Pope, & you may as stoutly alledge for your selfe, that your Popedome doth highly recommend the bounty of Christ. But it seemeth to vs, that you do too much abridge the Popes vsing of his faculties, when you mention the employing of them onely in Christs seruice, & to his honor and glorie. Let him, M. Bishop, first serue himselfe, let him enlarge S. Peters patrimonie, and aduance the glorie of his owne seate; let him proclame Iubilees and Pardons, that he may gather gold and treasure; let him claw them that claw him, & wreake his anger vpon them that resist him: as for Christ he is but a poore man, let him attend for the reuerision, a little wil serue him. This deuice of theirs is wholie to bee derided: their words are the words of shamelesse hypocrites, not blushing to auouch the boūty of Christ in an authority, which though there were from time to time after fīue or sixe hundred yeeres diuers degrees and steppes vnto it, yet in that sort, as they now defend it, was not knowne in the world for the space of eight or nine hundred yeeres after the time of Christ: which hath no warrant of the Gospell of Christ, nor sauoreth at all of the kingdom of Christ: which the ancient Fathers neuer dreamed of, and could not haue gone without most illustrious & cleere testimony & witnesse amongst thē, if euer it had been practised in their times. Let them in all antiquitie parallell the Pope, and we will neuer open mouth further to speake against them: but because they cannot so do, let them confesse themselues to be false wretches, and him to be a Pseudochrist, a false and counterfeit Christ, in truth verie Antichrist himselfe, who by hypocrisie hath intruded himselfe to sit in the place of Jesus Christ. But M. Bishop telleth vs, that their Vicar cannot change any one of Gods Commandements, nor adde any contrary vnto them. Where wee see, that the Pope apparantlie doth that which they are ashamed to defend. They well knowe that he setteth nothing at all by the lawes of God, and that whilst he

he taketh vpon him to be the expounder thereof, he maketh what meaning he list thereof, and thereby giueth himselfe liberty to doe what he list, and yet to say, he doth nothing against the law of God

It hath bene holden for a rule among them, as Bodin mentioneth,

That hee is safe enough with God, who by the Pope is freed from the lawes of God. Thus haue they told vs, and according to that they haue told vs they haue practised, that ¹the Pope above law can dispense of law by the fulnesse of his power; that ^mhee can dispense against the Apostle, against the Canons of the Apostle, and against the old Testament; that ⁿit may well be maintained that he doth dispense against the Apostle Shall we not thinke that hee changeth and thwarteth the commandement of Christ, who with a Non obstante taketh that away which Christ hath saide, Drinke ye all of this: This notwithstanding the Church doth thus and thus? Doth not he contra-rie Gods commandement, who requireth of vs to worship Idols and Images, when God hath forbidden so to doe? When God hath charged subjects to be obedient to their princes and Governours, doth he not crosse the commandement of God, who taketh vpon him to dispense with them? for oathes of allegiance, and giueth them licence to rebell? Doth not hee make the law of God of no effect, who giueth licence of marriage in those degrees of affinity and blood, in which God hath forbidden any marriage to be accounted lawfull; as was here done in England to king Henry the eight for the marriage of his brothers wife, and to Philip the late king of Spain, for the marriage of his owne sisters daughter? Many such other matters are there wherein this Vicar of Rome grossly and palpably bendeth himselfe against God, and yet these hypocrites are so impudent, as that either by expositions they will seem to defend them, or else if they can find no meanes for defence, they vtterly deny them. Thus M. Bishop will heere make vs beleecue, that the Pope maketh lawes onely conformable to Gods lawes, when as by that which he himselfe addeth, he proueth him therein presumptuously and arrogantly to put himselfe into the place of God. For to make lawes and publish doctrines to bind the conscience, belongeth onely to Christ, who in that respect is called the ⁹one Lawginer, ^vone Lord, ¹one Doctour and Master. Yet M. Bishop maketh this a thing common to euery Soueraigne gouernour, and taketh vpon him to proue it by S. Paul, saying, ¹Let euery soule

bee

^k Bodin. de republ. lib. 1. cap. 8.
Qui a pontifice
maximo de iuris legibus solutus sit, hinc apud deū immortalem satis
causum esse. Ca.
n. nic. re. 17.
I Decret. Greg.
de concess. pr. e.
bend. ca. 1. Propo-
suit. secundum plenitudinem po-
testatis de iure pos-
sumus supra ius
dispensare.

^m Ibid. in glossa.
Papa dispensat
contra Apostolicū,
et contra Canones Apostolicos, et contra verus Te-stamentum.

ⁿ 25. Sicut qui-dam in glossa. satis
potest sustineri quod papa contra Apostolicū dispen-
sat.

^o Concil. Constantens. sess. 13.

Hec non obstante.
p. 15 q. 1. Autho-
ritatem, et ibid.

Alius.

^q Iam. 4. 12:

^r Ephes. 4. 5.

^f Mar. 23. 8. 10.

^t Rom. 13. 1. 5.

be subiect to the higher powers, and that for conscience sake. But hee abuseth the words of the Apostle, which haue no intendment concerning their Vicar, but are spoken of the higher powers, that is, of the temporall and ciuill gouernours, either the King as the superior, ^{v 1. Pcc. 2. 13.} or other rulers that are sent by him, as S. Peter giueth vs to vnderstand the meaning thereof. Therefore Chrysostome expoundeth the words thus; Let every soule be subiect, ^x though thou bee an Apostle, though thou be an Euangelist, though thou be a Prophet; ^x cherby informing vs, that Apostles, Euangelists, Prophets, are of the soules that are to bee subiect, and not the higher powers to which the subiection there spoken of is required. The Apostle did not write it to chalenge thereby a subiection to S. Peter, or to himselfe, but to acknowledge a subiection due to bee performed by them and other to the ciuill power. Againe, the Apostle teacheth vs for conscience sake to be subiect to the higher powers: he teacheth vs not, that the conscience is bound as touching the things themselves wherein we are to shew our subiection to the higher powers. Lawes are sayd to bind the conscience, when they tie the conscience to the things themselves which they command, as to bee perswaded of a religious and necessarie durie and seruice therein immediately performed vnto God; the transgressing whereof to bee a sinne against God, not onely mediately by not yeelding subiection to the Lawgiuer, but immediately, in the very thing it selfe, which it hath done or left vndone. It is the prerogatiue of God onely to tie the conscience in this sort, and whosoever else taketh vpon him thus to doe, hee is an vsurper against God. And thus doth the Pope bind mens consciences; he maketh his lawes matters of religion, and of the worship of God, and will haue men beleue, that in the very doing of the things which he commandeth, they immediately please God, merit at the hands of God, make satisfaction to him for their sinnes and purchase eternall life. On the other side, that in the trespasse thereof, not onely in respect of disobedience to the higher powers, but for the very not doing of the things themselves, there is sinne against God, a breach and wound of conscience, and the guilt of euerlasting death. This is one speciall matter for which we iustly detest that Romish Idol, and do chalenge him, not onely for sitting in the Temple of God, by vsurping an outward superiority in the visible state of the Church, but also for ^{y 2. The. 2. 4:} sitting as God in the temple of God by chalenging to himselfe and possessing in such sort as hath beene sayd, the consciences of men, in which God onely ought to raigne. As for Princes and temporall gouernours, if they keepe them within their bounds, they make no lawes in that kind: for causes seeming good vnto them, they require outward conformity and obedience to their lawes for conscience sake of the authority committed vnto them of God, but they leaue the conscience free from any inward opinion or perswasion of the things themselves wherein they require to bee obeyed. Heere therefore a man is outwardly bound and seruant to the law, but inwardly hee still continueth free to God, being perswaded, that the doing or not doing of such or such a thing, in and for it selfe, maketh him to God neither the better nor the worse, and therefore the thing in it selfe being eyther way indifferent to God, he yeeldeth himselfe in the outward man vpon conscience of giuing obedience to the power seruiceable and conformable to the law. And this is that Christian liberty which the Scripture teacheth; which is not, as some men would haue it, a licentious inimmunity in outward things to doe euery man what we list, but a freedome of the heart from any seruite opinion of any thing that wee doe. The doctrine whereof Luther very excellently propounded in two paradoxes, as they seemed to them that vnderstood them not, as touching conuertation in outward things, that ² a Christian man is free from all men, a Lord and subiect to no man; And again, that a Christian man is a diligent seruant and vassall to all men, and subiect to al. Inwardly in conscience he is free & bound to nothing, but saith, ^a All things are lawfull for me. Outwardly in conuertation hee is bound to that that is expedient and serueth for edification; whereby he may yeeld obedience to gouernours, loue to neighbours, instruction to the ignorant, strengthening to the weake, comfort to the strong, good example to them that are without, auoiding all scandall whereby he should cause the liberty whereof he is inwardly perswaded, to be blasphemed and slandered. Now therefore Princes in their lawes are to be obeyed vpon conscience of their authoritie, being from God; but this hinderech not, but that the Pope is iustly accused for thrusting Christ out of his place, by requiring obedience vpon conscience of the things themselves which hee commandeth. As for the opening and shutting of heauen, wee doubt not but that the Pope,

^a Luther de libertate Christiana.

² 1 Cor. 10. 23

Pope, if he be the minister of Christ, may challenge the office and function thereof, according to the tenor of the commission wherewith Christ hath left it to his Church. But he not contented with that authority which Christ hath left indifferently to the ministry of the Church, immediatly from Christ himselfe deriued in common to the whole body of the Church, vsurpeth vnto himselfe a singularity in this behalfe, making himselfe in Christs steed the head from whence the power of binding and loosing is deriued to all the rest, and in that respect at his owne pleasure reseruing to himselfe a prerogatiue of speciall cases and causes, which are most for his aduantage, wherein no man may meddle but himselfe. It is true, that the master by appointing a steward ouer his household or a porter at his gates, doth not diuelt himselfe of his supream authority; but sith it is the peculiar honour of the Lord to giue that power, & to determine the offices and places of his seruants, surely he who being left but a steward of a house, will lift vp himselfe to be a Lieutenant generall of a Realme, and of a Porter will make himselfe a Potentate, and take vpon him to be euen as the Lord himselfe, he is to be taken for no other but a Traitor to his Lord, & therefore is by his fellow seruants to be resisted in his course. This is the Popes case. Hee had the keies of heauen committed vnto him in cōmon with his fellow seruants, to euery man for his part and portion of the Lords house: and to the great disturbance and disorder of the house, he hath challenged vnto himselfe the souerainty and Lordship of the whole. He hath made himselfe master of the Church, and all the rest seruants vnto him. By this extrauagant and exorbitant power he handleth all things as he list, and buseth the keies to shut them out of heauen, so farre as hee can, who in the behalfe of their master doe seeke to hinder his wicked and vngodly proceedings. What then shall we adiudge him, but Traitor to his Lord and master Iesus Christ, vsurping that which is proper to Christ alone? In a word, M. Bishop must vnderstand, that though the Popedome were drowned in Tiber, and Babylon were cast as a millstone into the Sea, yet Christ needeth not to be master and man too, but without the Pope, hath seruants enow to attend him in his seruice.

W. BISHOP.

Come wee now to the second: It is, that we make Christ an Idoll, for albeit we call him a Saviour, yet in vs, in that hee giues his grace to vs, that by our merits we may be our owne saviours, &c. I maruell, in whom he should be a saviour if not in vs: What, is he the Saviour of Angels or of any other creatures? I hope not, but the mischiefe is, that hee giues grace to vs, that thereby we may meru & so become our owne saviours. This is a pharse vnhheard of among Catholikes, that any man is his owne saviour, neither doth it follow of that position, that good workes are meritorious; but well that we apply vnto vs the saluation, which is in Christ Iesus, by good workes; as the Protestants auouch they do by faith onely: In which sense the Apostle S. Paul saith to his deere Disciple Timothic. For this doing thou shalt saue both thy selfe, and them that heare thee. And this doth no more diminish the glory of our Soueraigne Saviours infinite merits, then to say that we are saued by faith onely: good workes no lesse depending, if not more aduancing Christs merits, then only faith, as shall bee proued hereafter more at large in the question of merits. Now that other good mens merits may steed them, who want some of their owne, may be deduced out of an hundred places of the Scriptures, namely out of those where God saith, That for the sake of one of his true seruants, he will shew mercie to thousands, as is expressly saide in the end of the first commandement.

In like manner I answer vnto your third instance, that for Christ to haue taken away by his blessed Passion the eternall paine due vnto our sinnes, and to haue left a temporall to bee satisfied by vs, is not to make himselfe a false Christ, but a most louing, kind, and withall a most prudent Redeemer, wiping away that by himselfe, which passed our forces, and reseruing that to vs, which by the helpe of his grace, wee well may and ought to do: not onely because it were vnseemely, that the parts of the body, should be disproportionable to the head: but also because it is reasonable (as the Apostle holdeth,) that we suffer heere with Christ before we raigne with him in his kingdome. In your last instance you say, that wee make Christ our mediator of intercession to God, thinking out of your simplicity, that therein wee much magnifie him, and sing Osanna vnto him. Whereas we hold it for no small disparagement vnto his diuine dignity, to make him our Intercessor, that is, to pray him to pray for vs, who is of himselfe, right able to helpe vs in all wee can dem-

mand;

i Tim. 4.

Rom. 8.

maund; being as well God, as Man. And albeit one in thought singling out the humanity of Christ from his diuine nature and person, might make it an intercessor for vs; Yet that beeing but a Metaphysicall conceipt, so separate the nature from the person; since the Arian heresie (which held Christ to be inferior to his Father) it hath not beene practised by Catholikes, who alwaies pray our Saviour Christ to haue mercie vpon vs, neuer to pray for vs. And consequently make him no mediator of intercession, but of redemption.

R. ABBOT.

The second instance giuen by M. Perkins, to proue that the Church of Rome maketh Christ but euen as an Idol, giuing him a name without the substance and effect thereof, is this, that they call him a Saviour, and yet make him a Saviour onely in vs and by vs, not in himselfe or immediatly by himselfe. For this is all that they attribute vnto him, that he putteth vs in case and state, to saue our selues, and to become our owne Saviours. The meaning of the instance being plaine, M. Bishops question is very idle, In whom he should be a Saviour if not in vs. He should be a Saviour in himselfe, and by that that he doth himselfe, and not in vs, or by that that we doe for our selues. But to the matter, he telleth vs, that it is a phrase unheard of among Catholikes, that any man is his owne saviour. Which we confesse as touching the phrase and word, but yet by their doctrine they doe in truth make a man his owne Saviour. If they should so say in words, they well know that al Christian eares would abhorre them, and many that now admire them, would spit in their faces, and account them accursed and damnable hypocrites, who vnder pretence of doeing honour vnto Christ, do rob him of his honour, and bereaue him of the truth of that name wherein the Soueraignty of his glory doth consist: therefore they forbear the words, though that which they teach is the same in effect as if they said so. It is commonly knowne, that the effect is alwaies attributed to that which is the immediate and neerest efficient cause. We say in Philosophy, Sol & homo generant hominem, The sunne and a man doe beget a man, because by the vegetation and influence of the Sunne and heauenly powers, it is deemed that a man hath power to beget a man. Yet wee know that the Sunne or the heauen is not called the father of the child, but onely the man by whom the child is begotten. So is it therefore in the matter that we haue here in hand. M. Bishop saith, that God ^a freely bestoweth his grace vpon vs in Baptisme, but all that arrive to the yeares of discretion must by the good vse of the same grace either merit life, or for want of such fruit of it, fall into the miserable state of death. God then giueth vs whereof to doe it, but we our selues of that which God giueth must effect and deserue our owne saluation. Therefore M. Bishop againe compareth the grace of God to a ^b Farme, which the father bestoweth vpon his Soone, who of the commodities that arise of the good vsage thereof, groweth to be able to make a further purchase at his fathers hands, euen of any thing that his father will set to sale. In which case the father cannot be said to bee the purchaser, or to make the purchase for the sonne, but the Soone is the purchaser for himselfe, though by that which his father gaue him, through the well ordering of it, hee became able to make the purchase. Seeing then that Christ doth onely giue vs that whereof we our selues are to raise merits to deserue and purchase saluation, as they teach, it must needs follow by their doctrine, that Christ is made the more remote and antecedent cause, but we our selues are properly and immediately the true causes of our owne saluation. Howsoeuer therefore they vse not the phrase, yet they teach the thing it selfe, that Christ is not our Saviour properly, but we our selues by the good vsage of his gifts, are the Saviours of our selues. Which absurdity M. Bishop saw, that standing to their owne grounds, he could by no meanes auoide, and therefore is content with Pighius (as it seemeth) for a present shift, to retire into our harbour; albeit I verily thinke, he vnderstandeth not himselfe, nor can tell, what meaning to make of that he saith. The thing that followeth of the assertion of meritorious works, he saith, is this, that by good works wee apply vnto vs the saluation which is in Christ Iesus, as (saith he) the Protestants auouch they do by faith onely. But hee should here haue told vs, how his meaning is, that this saluation is in Christ. For if he meane, (as commonly he doth) that it is in Christ, because God for Christs sake giueth vs grace whereby to merit and deserue our saluation, then he dallieth altogether, and mocketh his Reader, as if he should say, It followeth not of the position of meritorious works, that wee are our owne saviours, but that wee apply vnto our selues by good works, that whereby we

^a Of merits
sec. 1.

^b Ibid. sec. 3.

are made our owne sauours. But if he meane, as the Protestants do, when they auouch, that by faith onely we apply vnto our selues the saluation which is in Christ Iesus, that is, that this saluation is entirely in the merits of Christ, deseruing and purchasing the same for vs, and that meereley and immediatly for Christs sake God bestoweth the same vpon vs; that wee do but onely stretch soorth the hand (and that by his gift also) to receiue that which freely and of his meere mercy he giueth vnto vs, then his meritorious works are come to nought, and hee bestoweth a great deale of labour in vaine for the prooffe thereof. Wee would gladly see which way hee will shift. Surely if our good workes do but apply vnto vs the saluation which is in Christ, then they canot be said to merit saluation themselves. For that that applieth, doth not worke the effect of that which it doth applie. The hand that applieth the medicine, cannot be said it selfe to worke the cure: for if it performe the effect it selfe, to what end doth it apply another thing for the same purpose? But if our workes doe merit saluation themselves, then they doe more then apply vnto vs the saluation which is in Christ Iesus, and wee must bee said according to the absurditie before mentioned, to bee thereby our owne sauours. Let the Reader well obserue, how hee stealeth away in a cloud of ambiguous words, which notwithstanding howsoeuer he expound, do worke inconuenience to himselfe. But by his owne words he giueth answer to the place which he obiekteth of Paul, saying to Timothie, that ^c so doing, hee should both saue himselfe and them that heard him; that he did not meane, that Timothy should doe that for himselfe, by vertue whereof hee should be saued, but onely that hee should apply vnto himselfe the saluation which is in Christ Iesus. Hee was to saue them that heard him, not by meriting their saluation for them, but by preaching vnto them ^d the Gospell by which they were saued. So was hee also to saue himselfe, by continuing in the same faith and doctrine of the ^d Gospell, whereby the way of saluation is set soorth vnto vs. In the same manner S. Peter exhorteth the Iewes, who were pricked in their hearts at the hearing of his preaching, ^e Saue your selues from this wicked generation: namely; by receiuing and accepting the message of saluation by Iesus Christ. Wee are said to saue our selues, as we are said to feed our selues, and to cure our selues. Wee feed our selues, not by beeing food and nourishment to our selues, but by receiuing that which is our foode. We cure our selues, not by being a medicine to our selues, but by taking and applying to vs that whereby we are cured. So we saue our selues onely by embracing Iesus Christ, by whom onely we are saued. And this wee entend, when we say, that we are saued by faith onely: namely, that faith onely is the instrument whereby we lay hold on Iesus Christ, in whose onely merits our saluation wholly and immediately doth consist. Which doctrine of faith wholly aduanceth the glory of Christ, because it referreth all entirely to him, not onely for that we confesse that faith is the gift of Christ, but also because we teach that it is not by any vertue of faith it selfe by which we are saued, but onely by the merit and power of Christ, whom we receiue by faith. How then doth M. Bishop say, that their assertion of our merits doth no more diminish the glory of the merits of Christ, then it doth that wee say, that we are saued by faith onely, when as they leaue so much for man to glory of in himselfe, his assenting to grace, and working therewith by his owne free will, and his well vsing thereof to merit and deserue saluation for himselfe; when as we say, that wee are saued meerly by the merits of Christ, and haue nothing in any sort to attribute to our selues, and they say, that wee are not saued meerly by the merits of Christ, but the merits of Christ do onely make vs able by free wil to deserue our owne saluation? But of this (as he saith) we shall haue further occasion to speake in the question of merits. Now here M. Perkins noteth it for a further absurdity of their doctrine of merits, that they doe not onely make men their owne sauours, but make one man also the sauour of another, whilest that in the want of our owne merits, we may bee partakers in the merits of the Saints. M. Bishop being a man of a wide throate to swallow, and of a strong stomacke to digest without any trouble all the filth of the Romish Church, sticketh not at the matter, but plainly affirmeth, that other good mens merits may steed them that want some of their owne; and saith, that it may be deduced out of an hundred places of Scripture; whereas of that hundred there is not so much as one that will yeeld him ground of any such deduction. For as for that which he alledgeth out of the first Commandement, that God sheweth mercy vnto thousands in them that loue him, and keepe his commandements; how he should draw mans merit from thence, where God professeth onely his mercie both to the fathers and the children, dren, no wise man can easily conceiue. It is true, that God sometimes in the Scriptures is said for one mans sake to shew mercie to another, it is neuer said, that it is for one mās merits that he shewes mercy to another, but only for his own loue & promise sake. Thus do the people of God sometimes make mentiō of ^f Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, ^g Dauid, not as to begge of God for their merits sake, but as to vrge God with his couenant and promise, that hee made vnto these, who shewed all that mercy and loue vnto their seed, ^h because he would keepe the oath which he had sworne vnto their fathers. And surely seeing it was only for his mercies sake, that he respected the fathers themselves, it is vnlikely that for the fathers merits he should respect the children. ⁱ Abraham (saith Occumenius) was not by his workes worthy of the benefits of God: hee had nothing at all, not any shew of workes, to the benefits that hee receiued of God; but was accounted worthy thereof by faith onely. The cause of all was that which Moses said; ^k He loued his fathers, therefore he chose their seede. And what, was it for their merits that he loued them? What merits had Abraham, when God called him from ^l seruing other gods, and euen at the first gaue him ^m an absolute promise of all that mercy & goodnesse that hee shewed him afterwards? It was therefore that which the same Moses also saith: ⁿ He set his loue vpon you, because he loued you: there was nothing to moue him to loue but onely loue. To which purpose he saith by the Prophet Malachy: ^o Was not Esau Iacobs brother? yet I loued Iacob & hated Esau; signifying, that there was no cause in Iacob himselfe, why God should loue him more then Esau; and yet of meere grace and fauour he vouchsafed so to do. Here is nothing then to serue M. Bishops turne, that one mans merits may steed another, because these had no merits to steed themselves, but whatsoever they were, they were of mercy, and it was onely mercie wherby God bound himselfe to shew mercy to others for their sakes. And well we may wonder, but that these are impudent and shamelesse men, that they should dare so farre to aduarce the righteousnesse of man, as to make him able, not only to merit and deserue at Gods hands for himselfe, but also for other men. Wherein their peruerfnesse and iniquity is so much the greater, for that they attribute and yeeld that to the spotted & vnperfect workes and righteousnesse of man, which they wickedly deny to the immaculate and most perfect merits and righteousnesse of the ^f Deut. 9. 27.

^c 1. Tim. 4. 16.

^d 1. Cor. 15. 2.

^e Act. 17. 9.

^g Plal. 132. 10.

^h Deu. 7. 8. & 9. 5

ⁱ Occumen. in Rō.
cap. 4. Signis illis demonstrare nis. 2.
tur per opera dig-
nū fuisse. & c.

^k Vides quod nihil omnino habeat, ne
vestigium quide
operum ad huius
modi b. nescia que
ipse à Deo accepit Inde ergo hic dig-
du habitus est?
Ex sola fide.

^l Deut. 4. 37.

^m To'uah 24. 2.

ⁿ G. n. 12. 1. 2.

^o Deut. 7. 7. 8.

^p Mal. 1. 2.

the Sonne of God. For they hold it absurd, that the righteousnesse and merits of Christ should be imputed and accounted vnto vs; & yet they blush not to say, that a man may haue merits of his owne, sufficient for himselfe, and an ouerplus beside to be reckened and imputed vnto others to supply their want. The Popes dispensation can apply the merits of one man to another, but the faith of Christ cannot apply to vs the merits of Christ. The Scripture teacheth the imputation of Christs merits, and that they deny: it denieth the imputing of other mens merits, and that they affirme against the Scripture. Which, beside that it teacheth an vn sufficiencie and imperfection in all the workes of men, and therefore bereaueth them of all power and ability of merit, doth also giue vs to vnderstand, that ^p the righteousnesse of the righteous shall bee upon himselfe, and therefore shall not be reckened to another: that ^a euerie man shall giue account of himselfe vnto God, and therefore shall haue nothing to doe with other mens accounts; that ^t euerie man shall beare his owne burthen, and therefore shall not haue his burthen borne by others: that the ^wise virgins haue no superfluitie of oyle which they may impart to them that want. ^Who hath by his death released another mans death, saith Tertullian but onely the Sonne of God? If thou be a sinner, how should the oyle of thy little candle bee sufficient both for thee and me? He spake it truly in the proposition, though he misapplied it to a wrong conclusion: and therefore Leo Bishop of Rome saith in like sort, that ⁿ the iust haue receiued crownes, they haue giuen none; and of the fortitude of the faithfull are grown examples of patience, not gifts of righteousnesse; neither hath any man by his end paid the debt of another man, seeing it is only our Lord Iesus Christ amongst the sonnes of men, in whom all haue beene crucified, dead, buried, and raised againe. Farre was hee from that blasphemous doctrine, which now preuaileth in the Church of Rome, that some men haue merits and gifts of righteousnesse, whereby to bee helpfull to other men. But yet M. Bishop telleth vs, that they that receiue this helpe must bee such as want but some of their owne. For wee must vnderstand belike, that heauen is merited by peece-meale. Some merit it quarter part, and some the one halfe, and some all, and some more then all. By which meanes it must come to passe, that some, who haue merits to keepe them from hell, and yet not enow to bring them to heauen, must hang betwixt heauen and hell, ynesse the Vicar of † Ezech. 18: 20:

† Rom. 14. 12.

† Gal. 6: 5:

† Mat 25: 9:

† Tertull de pudicat. Quis absenam mortem sua
soluit nisi solus
Dei filius? si pec-
catores, quomodo
oleum facile tue sufficere & tibi & mihi poterit?
† Leo Epist. 81.

Acceperunt
quippe iusti, non dederunt coronas;
& de fortitudine
fidelium exempla
nata sunt passen-
sive, non dona ui-
sive. &c. nec al-
terius quisquam
debitum suo sine
per soluit, cum
inter filios homi-
num vnus solus
Dominus noster
Iesus Christus
extiterit, in quo
omnes crucifixi,
&c.

Rome will doe them a fauour, out of his treasurie to endow them with the merits of some of the Saints, or some of the Saints themselves wil vnder take out of their superfluities to make vp that that is wanting vnto them. This secret the Diuines of Rhemes vttered, that ^x if wee haue not our owne merits, wee shall not bee holpen by other mens desertis at the day of iudgement: leaving it to be vnderstood, that if we haue merits of our owne, wee may then looke for the supply thereof in other mens merits. Wretched hypocrites, impostors, & deluders of ignorant men, who ^y when all hands shall faile (as Hierome saith) because no worke shall bee found worthy of the iustice of God, and no man liuing shall be iustified in the sight of God, yet make men believe, that some shall haue that superabundance of righteousness and merits, as that they shall be able to releue them that want merits of their owne. Is this the honor that they do to Christ, to thrust him out of place when we haue greatest need of him, and to make men trust to the imaginary merits of sinfull men? And what, shall not Christ be as ready then to succour vs as the Saints? or shall his merits bee found vsufficient to deliuer vs? or what should be the cause, that we should thus be put ouer one to be helped by another, rather thē by him that is the helper and Sauour of vs all? But this is the horrible apostasie and darknesse of the Romish Synagogue, which hath made no end of multiplying her fornications, wherewith shee hath bewitched men, and made them to doate vpon strange and monstrous fancies, and hidden from them the true knowledge of Iesus Christ, by which they should be saued.

^x Rhem. Testam. Annot. Mat. 25. 8.

^y Hieron. in Esai. lib 6. cap. 14. Cum dies iudicij vel dormitionis adueniet dissoluentur omnes manus, quia nullum opus dignum Dei iustitia reperietur & non iustificabitur, & c.

As touching the third instance, it shall not heere be need to say much. We affirme that they derogate frō the merit of Christs passion, and do make him but a Parti-Christ, in that they deny him to haue made a full and perfect satisfaction for our sins, & say, that he hath left vs in part to satisfie for the same. M. Bishop saith, that in the referuing of temporall satisfaction, he hath shewed himselfe a most prudent redeemer; as if his foolish braines were the measure of the wisdom of Christ, or the selfe-will concepts of carnall men were to determine the power and effect of the crosse of Christ. Christ is ^z the Lambe of God that taketh away the sinne of the world, ^z Iohn 1. 29. and if he take away our sinnes, then they remaine not by vs to be satisfied for. The forgiuenesse of our sinnes by Christ is ^a the not imputing of our sinnes; but how are they not imputed, if satisfaction thereof be required? This falsehood of theirs hee gloseth with a truth. We must be made ^b like vnto Christ, as members to the head. We must ^c suffer with Christ, that we may raigne with Christ. But what of this? We deny not, but that by suffering, when God will and as he will, we must be conformed to Christ our head: but wee deny this conformity in suffering to be any satisfaction for our sinnes. Which as it hath no shew of proote out of those words of the Apostle, so, that it cannot otherwise be prooued, shall be shewed, God willing, in the question concerning that matter.

^a 2. Cor. 5. 10.

In the third and last instance M. Perkins chargeth them, that though they be content to acknowledge Christ to be a Mediator of intercession, yet they reserue to his mother the blessed Virgin, their Queene of heauen, an authority to rule him and commaund him there. This M. Bishop thinketh to be a matter of simplicity in M. Perkins, that he should thinke it a magnifying of Christ to acknowledge Christ a Mediator of intercession, whereas they make him, as he telleth vs, no Mediator of intercession, but a redeemer. Now in this we see his honest mind, that he is loth that M. Perkins should say better of them than they deserue, and will haue vs to know that they bereaue Christ of one speciall part of his office and Priesthood, which is to make intercession for vs. The reason is, because they must haue a dignity belonging to the Saints, and therefore because they know not how to doe it otherwise, they diuide the office of Christs mediatioⁿ, & reseruing vnto Christ, though not that wholly neither, to be our Mediator of redemption, do assigne the mediators^{hip} of intercession to the Saints. And yet the Scripture expressly telleth vs, that Christ ^d sitteth at the right hand of God to make intercession for vs; that ^e hee is able perfectly to saue them that come vnto God by him, seeing hee euer liueth to make intercession for them. Thus S. Austen saith, that ^f Christ prayeth for vs, and prayeth in vs, and is prayed vnto of vs. He prayeth for vs as our Priest: he prayeth in vs as our head; he is prayed vnto of vs as our God. Yea hee saith, that ^g in heauen Christ alone of them that haue bene partakers of flesh maketh intercession for vs, insomuch that ^h if S. Iohn should haue said, If any man sinne, ye haue me for an aduocate with the father, I make intercession for your sinnes, he should haue bene holden not for a Disciple of Christ, but rather for Antichrist himselfe. Thus hee doth not onely make Christ our Mediator of intercession, but also the onely

b Rom 8. 29.
c 2. Tim. 2. 12.

d Rom 8. 24.
e Heb. 7. 25
f Aug. in Psal. 85. Orat pro nobis, et orat in nobis, et oratur a nobis: Orat pro nobis ut sacerdos noster, orat in nobis ut caput nostrum, oratur a nobis ut Deus noster.

g In Psal. 64.
Soluti ibi ex his qui carnem gustauerunt interpellat pro nobis.
h Cons. epist. Parmen. li. 2. ca. 8.
Si Ioannes ita diceret, si quis peccauerit, aduocatum me habetis apud patrem: ego ex oro pro peccatis vestris, quis est discipulus Christi & non sicut Antichristum ipsum autueretur?

only Mediator of intercession, and therefore condemneth M. Bishop of wicked sacrileg, that taketh away this part of his office from him, to bestow it vpon the Saints. But this praier and intercession Christ performeth not now by vocall words, as in the time of his humiliation here vpon the earth, neither doth hee infinitelic busie himselfe by renewing his petitions & supplications to the Father when wee call vpon him, but his intercession for vs is his ⁱ appearing in the sight of God for vs; whereby as ^k the sacrifice which hee offered vpon the crosse is no lesse effectuall now, then it was the day when water and blood issued out of his wounded side, still requiring our saluation as the reward of his obedience, euen so the voice of his intercession in the daies of his flesh, still soundeth aloud in the eares of God, and by the power thereof, both wee our selues, and all our praiers and requests are most effectually recommended to his mercy. Therefore wee do not now pray to him to pray for vs, but wee ^l aske the father in his name, as hee himselfe hath taught vs, presenting still the memory of the merit and intercession that hee hath performed for vs. And because ^m the father hath giuen him power to execute iudgement euen as hee is the sonne of man, euen ⁿ all power both in heauen and earth, and ^o hath made all things subiect vnder his feete, and sette him as head (and ruler) ouer all things, to the behoofe of his Church, therefore we do not onely pray to the Father, but wee pray to him also, euen as he is the sonne of man; wee do not onely ^p offer or present him to his Fathers eyes, but we present him also to his owne eyes, that for that intercessions sake which ^q in himselfe as man hee made to himselfe as God, hee will both God and man be mercifull vnto vs. As for M. Bishops Metaphysicall or rather Nestorian-like and hereticall conceipte of singling out the humanity of Christ from his diuinity, to make it an intercessor for vs, let him burie it in his owne braines where it was bred; but for vs we know, that to pray to Christ to be our intercessor to the father, according to that he promiseth, ^r I will pray the Father, and hee shall giue you another Comforter, doth no more require the singling or separating of the manhood from the Godhead, then do all other his workes for our reconciliation vnto God, in which the vniõ of two natures doth alwaies giue force and strength to that which is properlie acted but in one.

ⁱ Heb. 9. 24.
^k Cyprian. ser. de bapt. Christi &
manifestas.
Trinit.

^l Iohn 16. 23;

^m Iohn 5. 27.

ⁿ Mat. 28. 18.

^o Ephes. 1. 22.

^p Bernard. super.
Missus est. Homi;

3. Ipsum oculis
patris ipsum offeramus & suu.

^q August. in Psalm 34 In me-ipso humanitas &
in misero divini-
tatem interpellat.

^r Iohn 14. 16;

W. BISHOP.

And to come to your grievous complaint, that withall his Nother must be Queene of heauen, and by right of a mother command him there: Who can sufficiently maruell at their unnaturall grosse pates, who take it for a disgrace to the Sonne, to aduance his owne good Mother? or else who well in his wits, considering Christs bounty to strangers and his enemies, will not be perswaded, that on his best beloued mother, he did bestow his most speciall fauours? For hauing taken flesh of her, hauing suckt her breasts, and receiued his nurture and education of her in his tender yeeres, and being as well followed of her, as of any other, Is it possible that he should not be as good to her, as to others, vnto whom he was not at all beholding? Againe, the very place of a mother, requiring prebeminence before all seruants and subiects, of what dignity soeuer: doth not the right rule of reason lead vs to thinke, that Christ the fountaine of all wisdom, replenished the blessed virgine Marie his deere Mother with such grace as should make her fit for that place? it lying in his hands, and free choice to doe it. And therefore is shee truly termed of holy and learned Antiquity, Our Lady and Queene, exalted aboue all quires of Angels. That which you impute vnto vs farther, that she must in the right of a mother command her Sonne, is no doctrine of the Romish Church, nor said in all her seruice: wee say, Shew thy selfe to be a mother: but it is not added, by commanding thy Sonne: that is your glosse, which is accursed, because it corrupteth the text, for it followeth in that place, Sumat per te preces, &c. Present our prayers to him, that vouchsafed to be borne of thee, for vs. If any prinate person by meditation, piercing more profoundly into the mutuall loue and affection, of such a Sonne towards so worthy a Mother, doe deeme her prayers as forcible in kindnesse as if they were Commandements, and in that sense call them Commandements, according to the French phrase. Vos priers me font des commandements, that may be done without derogation to Christs supreme dignity, and with high commendation of his tender affection, vnto his reuerend and best beloued mother. Wherefore to conclude this Epistle, if there be no weightier cause then this by you heere produced, why you and your adherents do not reconcile your selues vnto the Church of Rome: you may shortly (by Gods grace) become new men. For we are so farre off, from making our Sauiour Christ a Pseudochrist, or from drawing one iote of excellency from from his soueraigne power, merits, or dignity: that wee in the very points by you put downe, do much more magnifie him then you do. For in mainsaining the authority by him imparted vnto his deputies, our spirittuall Magistrates, & of their merits and satisfaction: We first say, that these his seruants prerogatiues bee his free gifts, of meere grace bestowed on whom hee pleaseth; which is no (small praise of his great liberalitie: And withall affirme, that there is an infinite difference betweene his owne power, merits, and satisfaction, and ours: wherein his Soueraigne honour is preserued entire to himselfe without any comparison. Now you make Christs authority so base, his merits and satisfaction so meane, that if he impart any degree of them vnto his seruants, hee loseth the honour of all from himselfe. Whereupon it followeth inuincibly, if you vnfaignedly seeke Christ Iesu: his true honour, and will esteeme of his diuine gifts worthily, you must hold out no longer, but vnite your selues in these necessarie heads of Religion vnto the Catholike Church of Rome, which so highly exalcieth him, both in his owne excellencse, and in his singular gifts to his subiects.

R. ABBOT.

Heere M. Bishop telleth vs a goodly and a faire tale out of their old wiues deuotions, and sheweth himselfe more absurdlie and grossely superstitious, then were almost to be imagined in a learned man. It is strange to vs, that the Euangelists and Apostles were not acquainted with this high point of religion, or if they were acquainted with it, that none of them should haue regard to recommend it to the Church. Surelie, if they had been of the Romish religion that now is, they would neuer haue done the Virgin Mary that exceeding great wrong: but because they were not so, because their care was, that God onely should bee aduanced according to his word, therefore M. Bishop thinketh them vnnaturall grosse pates, in taking it to be a disgrace to the Sonne, to aduance his owne good Mother. As for vs, we honour the blessed Virgine so farre as God hath giuen vs warrant so to do. Wee acknowledge her a most excellent instrument of the grace of God, and most highly blessed aboue all other, in that God by her would bring him into the world, that should be a blessing to all other. But yet we say, that this was a blef-sing onelic according to the flesh, it was no spirituall and heavenly blef-

* *August. de
san. Virg. cap.
3* *Beatrix Maria
percipiend
fidem Christi,
quã concipiend
carnem Christi,
c. c. Maternã
propinquitas nihil Mariæ profuisse,
nisi Christum fel
licius corde quã
carne gestaſſet.
b* *Mat. 12. 48.
Mar. 3. 33.
c* *Luk. 8. 21.
d* *Tertul. de carne Christi. Potiores
facit alios, q̃ me
ritum prelationis
ostendit, audientia
ſcilicet verbi.
e* *Jdem a. Iuer.
Marcior. lib. 4.
Tertulius in nomi
na sanguinis in illos quos magis
proximos pro fide
iudicaret, c. c.
Non ut veriores
ſubſtituit, ſed ut
digniores.
f* *Luk. 11. 28.
g* *Tertul. de car
ne Christi. Non matris uterum,
q̃ ubera negans,
ſed ſcilicetiores de
ſignans, qui ver
bum Dei audiit.
h* *August. in Ioan. tract. 10.
Mater mea que
appellatſis ſcilicet, inde ſcilicet quia
verbum Dei
cuſtodit, non quia in illa ver
bum Caro factũ
eſt.
i* *Epiphani. her. 79.
Colyrudian. Quo
non putarent ali
qui magis eximi
am eſſe ſanctam Virginem, nuſſe
rem eam appellã
uit, velut pro phe
tans que futura eſſent in terra ſecularium ac hereſicon gratia, ut ne aliqui nimirum admirati ſanctam, in hanc hereſiu cuſque deliramenta delabantur.*

bleſſing, and becauſe ſpirituall bleſſings are greater then carnal, we hold the Virgin Mary to haue beene greater by that that ſhee had according to the ſpirit, then by the honour that was done her according to the fleſh. Therefore S. Auſtin ſaith, that a *Mary was more bleſſed by receiuing the faith of Chriſt, then by conceiuing the fleſh of Chriſt. Her neerneſſe to Chriſt in beeing his mother had nothing boot*ed her, had ſhee not more happily borne him in her heart then in her wombe. This our Sauour himſelf confirmeth in the Goſpell, when being told as hee was preaching, that his mother and brethren were deſirous to ſpeake with him, answered as with indignation, b Who is my mother, and who are my brethren? He that doth the will of my Father which is in heauen, hee is my brother and ſiſter and mother. c My mother and brethren are theſe which heare the word of God and keepe it: d He maketh theſe other of the greater worth, ſaith Tertullian, and ſheweth that the hearing of Gods word is a thing to bee preferred aboue beeing the mother and brethren of Chriſt. e Hee tranſſerret the names of kindred to them, whom hee rather iudgeth to be moſt neere vnto him, becauſe of faith, whom hee putteth in place of the other, not as more trulye his mother and his brethren, but as beeing of greater worth. So againe, when a woman amidſt the companie cried out: f Bleſſed is the wombe that bare thee, and the pappes that gaue thee ſucke, to withdraw the minds of men from carnal fancie, he answered th, Ye rather, bleſſed are they that heare the word of God and keepe it; g Not denying the wombe and pappes of his mother (ſaith Tertullian againe) but ſignifying them to bee more happy, that doe heare the word of God. This happineſſe and heauenly bounty Mary was alſo partaker of, but hee conſidereth her reſpectiue lie onelie vnder the title of the mother of Chriſt. Therefore more plainly S. Auſtin deliuereth Chriſts answer: h My mother whom ye call bleſſed, is therefore bleſſed, becauſe ſhee keepeth the word of God, not becauſe the word became fleſh in her. Epiphanius further obſerueth, that when Chriſt another time ſaith vnto his mother: Woman what haue I to do with thee? mine houre is no: yet come: He therefore i called her woman, that none might thinke too highlye of the holy Virgin; as prophecying what ſhould come to paſſe in the earth by Setts and hereſies, that none admiring her (ſaith he) ſhould fall into this hereſie and the dotages thereof: ſpeaking there as touching the heresy of the Collyridians, who set vp the image of the Virgin Mary, and thereto offered (Collyridem) a cake in the honour of her, and thereto they had their name. As touching all this blind deuotion which the Papists haue renewed to the full, hee telleth vs, that ^k it is a toy, and an old wines fable: and asketh as wee do, ^l What Scripture hath told vs anything hereof? And that we may vnderstand how leudly M. Bishop belieth antiquitie, in saying, that Antiquity rearm'd the Virgin Mary, Our Lady and Queene exalted above all quires of Angels, he reasoneth thus against that heresie: ^m Which of the Prophets hath taught, that any man is to be worshipped? much lesse a woman. And againe, ⁿ If God will not haue the Angels to be worshipped, how much more will hee not haue the daughter of Anna to be worshipped? And againe, ^o Let no man worship Mary; I say, not a woman, no not a man: this mystery belongeth vnto God, the Angels receive not any such glory. And againe, as touching the name of the Queene of heauen, he addeth, ^p Let not these women trouble the world: let them not say, wee do honour to the Queene of heauen. Wee see how sarte Epiphanius was from the concept of those superstitious fooleries, which M. Bishop here so solemnely discourseth vnto vs. We see how the Church of Rome walketh iust in the path and steppes of these heretikes, which were of old condemned by the Church. They argued, as M. Bishop here full simplie doth, from the varight rule of crooked reason: she was his best beloued mother, hee tooke flesh of her, he sucked her breasts, surelie he would bestow vpon her his speciall fauoures; hee would without doubt doe more for her, then for strangers, to whom he was not at all beholding: he would replenish her with such grace as should make her fit for that place which hee neuer gaue her. These are fantastickall presumptions of sillie doting women, and blind ignorant dotrels: they haue no fauour at all of the Spirit of God. They might vpon these grounds argue for the brethren and cosins of Christ, and conceiue, as the mother of Iames and Iohn did, that being his kinsmen, they should be more respected then others, and as they were neuer him in blood, so should be preferred in dignity & place, and therefore should ^q sit one at his right hand, & the other on his left hand in his kingdome. But the kingdome of Christ is not administred by such fancies, neither do carnall titles serue to giue preferment there. And as touching the blessed Virgin, Epiphanius further against such conceits obserueth, that

^k Ibid. Est ludibrium tota res, & anicularium fabula.

^l Quae Scriptura de hoc narrauit.

^m Quis Prophetarum praecepit hominem adorari, uel uirginem mulierem?

ⁿ Si Angelos adorari non uult, quanto magis eam que genuit est ab Anna?

^o Marianam uero adorat, non dico mulierem, imo neque uirum.

Deo debetur hoc mysterium, neque Angelus caput salem glorificationem.

^p Ne turbent orbem terrarum: ne dicant honorem uirginatae caeli.

^q Mat. 20. 21.

Christ^r permitted her not to baptize, gave her not power to blesse his disciples, did not appoint her to raigne or rule in the earth: but her only sanctification was, to be made worthy of his kingdome. It was therefore an hereticall deuce, to make her Queene of heauen: and it hath bene since one of the forgeries of Antichrist, to attribute vnto her a power and authority to command the Sonne of God. But M. Bishop telleth vs, that this is no doctrine of the Romane Church, nor found in all her seruice, yet knoweth well enough, that this was the doctrine of the Romane Church, and commonly found in all her seruice. Harlots that haue little shame, yet blush at some things: and the harlot of Rome though of an iron forehead, yet saw some things to bee so grossely blasphemous and incxcusable, as that shee could not for shame but remooue them out of the Church, when question began to be made of them. Such was that praier concerning Thomas Becket, which before I mentioned in the answer to the Epistle:

Tu per Thoma sanguinem quem pro te impendit, Fac nos Christe scandere quò Thomas ascendit.

That is:

*By the blood of Thomas which for thee he did spend,
Make vs, O Christ, to clime whither Thomas did ascende*

Which praier was found in all their portesses, though now it bee taken out. So they were wont also very solemnely to sing throughout the whole Church of Rome:

Inbe filio, faelix puerpera

Iure matris impera

Redemptori, &c.

Bid thy Sonne, O blessed Mother,

By mothers right command our Redeemer.

This Durans the Iesuit acknowledgeth ^{ex libris Ritualibus}, out of their booke of rites and ceremonies, by which their Church seruice was directed. Yea M. Bishop himselfe verie well knoweth, that the words are not to bee denied, and therefore as Durans doth, so doth hee also make a fauourable construction thereof, that the Author of that praier, deemed the Virgins praiers to her Sonne, to bee as forcible in kindnesse, as if they were commandements, & in that sense called them commandements. Thus as M. Harding vnder a colour of ^{spirituall} sporting and dalliance; so these men vnder opinion of kindnesse, doe labour to hide open blasphemie and spirituall idolatrie. They sticke Ibid. Non permisit ipsi dare benedictionem, non in terra imperare iussit, sed & solam ipsa sanctificationem esse dignam factam esse regno ipsius.

Durans contr. Whitaker. lib. 2. Ad libro. Ritualis confusio, ex quibus obsoleta quadam corradis.

Harding. Confut. of the Apolo. g. part. 2.

not to speake apparantly to the derogation of the Sonne of God, and then turne it to matter of iest, like him of whom Solomon speaketh, who ^u faining himselfe mad, casteth firebrands, arrowes and deadly tooles, and then saith, Am not I in sport? But how ill their sporting construction fitteeth with the humour of those times, let it appeare by another hymne of theirs, which will not bee so answered:

 Gaude matrona caelica; exultando magnifica Deum tuum saluarem qui te fecit singularem.
Tu ancillam Iesu Christi te vocare voluisti:
Sed ut docet lex diuina, tu ipsius es Domina.
Nam ius habet & ratio, matrem praesse filio.
Ergo ora suppliciter & praecipe sublimiter,
Ut nos in mundi vespera ad regna ducat suprema.*

That is to say:

*Be glad O matron heauenly, and with reioicing magnifie
Thy God, thy Sauior who thee hath singled out in dignity.
The handmaiden of Iesus Christ, thy selfe to call thou wast content:
But thou his Lady mistresse art, as teacheth Gods commandement.
For right and reason doth require, the mother be aboue the Sonne:
Pray therefore as a suppliant, and command as a higher one,
That in the end of this worlds daies,
He bring vs to his heauenly ioies.*

*x Histor. secundum
claram Augustens. de commemor:
Virginis Mariae.*

*y In hymn.
Ecclesiastic.*

Heere is then right and reason, and Gods commandement to aproue and iustifie, that the Virgin Mary as the Mother should haue power ouer her sonne, and authority to command him. And to no other purpose soundeth that which M. Bishop acknowledgeth, as being yet in their vse, Monstrate esse matrem; Shew thy selfe to be a mother. Hee saith it is not added, by commanding thy sonne, but hee should haue told vs how otherwise it should be meant; because wee know not, nor can conceiue in what meaning they should request her to shew her selfe to bee his mother, but onely vpon opinion of some motherly superioritie, and authoritie to command him. For as for that which he saith followeth in that place, Sumat per te preces qui pro nobis natus tulit esse tuus; Let him by thee receiue our prayers, who for vs yeelded to be thy sonne; it giueth vs no light at all to the contrarie, but that shee should shew her motherly command, by causing him to accept the prayers that are made vnto him; which he seeing, translateth the words falsly, Present our prayers vnto him, &c. And thus the common people were perswaded by them and specially women, that they had better hope and readier access to God, and more assured safetie by our Lady, then they had by the Sonne of God. And no maruell, when they lifted her vp into the seate of Christ, and inuested her in their publike seruice, with all the titles of mercy and grace that are proper vnto him. Now therefore, M. Bishop, there is cause sufficient for vs to forbear to be reconciled to the Church of Rome, which vnder pretence of magnifying Christ, hath put the Pope and the Virgin Mari, and the rest of the Saints in the place of Christ, and coloureth her Antichristian presumptions, and vsurpations vnder the feigned title of the gifts of Christ. You deuise what you list, and fill the Church with your abominations, and vse the name of Christ as a cloake to couer your filthinesse and shame. If they came naked in their owne likenesse, all men would detest them, and detest you for perswading them; therefore it is the policie of the whore of Babylon to offer the ² filthinesse of her fornications in the golden cup of the name of Christ, that the glorie of the cup may bewitch them, not to suspect any poison to be contained therein. As for vs, wee esteeme of the power, merits and satisfaction of Christ, as hee himselfe hath taught vs to esteeme; we assume no part or parcell thereof to our selues, because by the letters patents of his Gospell we haue no warrant so to doe. Because then wee vnsoughtly seeke the true honour of Iesus Christ, and cannot brooke the dishonour that is done vnto him in the Church of Rome, vnder the counterfeite termes of his diuine gifts, wee make choice to hearken to the voice of God, ² Come out of her, my people, and be not partakers of her sinnes, lest ye be partakers of her plagues.

² Apoc. 17. 4.

² Apoc. 18. 4.

M. BISHOPS ANSWER TO M. PERKINS

Preface to the Reader.

Vpon your preface to the Reader I will not stand, because it toucheth no point of controuersie: let it be declared in your next, what you meane, when you desire your reformed Catholike to hold the same necessarie heads of Religion with the Roman Church: for if the Roman Church doth erre in the matter of faith, and iustification; in the number

number and vertue of the Sacraments; in the bookes and interpretation of the word of God; if she raze the foundation, and make Christ a Pseudo-christ, and an Idol; to omit twentie other errors in substantiall points of faith, as in this your small discourse you would perswade: there will remaine verie few necessarie heads of Religion for them to agree in. And be you well assured, that you are so wide from winning Catholikes by this your worke, to a better liking of your Religion, that you haue taken the high-way, to leade them to a farre greater dislike of it; by teaching, that in so many materiall points it differeth so farre from theirs. For all Catholikes hold for most assured, that which the most ancient, learned and holy Doctor Athanasius in his Creed deliuereth in the 2. verse: Which Catholike faith vnlesse euery man obserue wholly and inulolably (not omitting, or shrinking from any one article of it) without doubt he shall perish euerlastingly. If S. Basil that reuerend and blessed Father of the Church, doth hold it the duty of euerie good Christian, rather to loose his life, then to condescend to the alteration of any one syllable in matter of faith: you may be sure that we Catholikes cannot but cary a very base conceipt of your doctrine; who go about under the ouer-worne and threed-bare cloake of reformation, to deface and corrupt the purer and greater part of Christian Religion: specially when they shall perceiue the most points of your pretended reformation, to be nothing else but old rotten condemned heresies, new scoured up and fur-bushead, and so in shew made more saleable vnto the unskilfull, as in this treatise shall be proued in euerie Chapter.

Theod. 4. his. cap.

17.

R. ABBOT

YOur demaund, M. Bishop, is already satisfied before. M. Perkins by those necessarie heads of Religion, vnderstandeth such general grounds as stand vnquestioned betwixt vs and the Romish Church, which for the matters handled hee commonly setteth downe by the name of our consents in the entring of euery question. There are some maine points of doctrine to which the Church of Rome subscribeth as well as we. The Reformed Catholike is still to hold those, though hee depart from the corruptions and abominations, to the maintenance whereof the same Church of Rome doth wickedly misapply them. As for his winning of Catholikes to the liking of our Religion, I assure my selfe that you M. Bishop your selfe, and your friend of good intelligence and iudgement, ment, were iealous and doubtfull thereof. His plaine debaring of the points in question, laying open the absurditie of Poperie, and clearing the doctrine on our part, from those lies and slanders wherewith in corners you labour to deprauce it, might seeme verie likely to drawe many to the knowledge and approbation of the truth. It should seeme, there was some sore, for that both you and your friend were so careful to apply a plaister; but your plaister by the grace of God wil make your sore a great deale worse, when men shal further see, how sincerely he hath dealt to deliuer truth out of the word of God and doctrine of the ancient Church, and what base geere you haue brought as the marrow and pith of many large volumes, for the contradicting and oppugning of it. The more and greater the points are of difference betwixt the Church of Rome and vs, the more doth it concerne your Catholikes, if they tender their owne saluation to looke into them, which if they doe, they will cease to thinke basely of our religion, and will begin to honour it, and imbrace it as the truth of God. They will see, that there is in it a true reformation indeed, a iust departure from the horrible idolatries and superstitions of the Romish Synagogue, and it shall grieue them that they haue so long dishonoured God, by holding fellowship with him who hath no true fellowship with Iesus Christ. That you thinke basely thereof, M. Bishop, we wonder not. He that doateth vpon a harlot, is wont to scorne and thinke basely of honest matrons. The Scribes and Pharisees thought basely of our Sauour Christ: no maruell if you doe the like of the Gospell of Christ, who liue and thrive by traditions as they did. As for old rotten condemned heresies, how silly a man you haue shewed your selfe in the obiection thereof, it hath appeared partly already in the answer of your Epistle, and shall appeare further, God willing, in the answer of your booke, and wee will expect hereafter, that you learne more wit, then to babble and prate of heresies, you know not your selfe what.

THE THEAME OF M. PERKINS Prologue.

And I heard another voyce from heauen say, Go out of her my people, that you be not partakers of her sinnes, and receiue not of her plagues. Reuel. 18. 3.

M. BISHOPS ANSWERE TO M.
Perkins Prologue. Sect. I.

THe learned know it to be a fault, to make that the entrie vnto our Exordium Commune. discourse, which may as properly fit him, that pleadeth against vs: but to vse that for our poeme, which in true sense hath nothing for vs, nay rather beareth strongly for our aduersarie, must needs argue great want of iudgement: Such is the sentence aboue cited out of S. Iohn by M. Perkins: for it being truly understood, is so farre off from terrifying any one from the Catholike Roman Church, as it doth vehemently exhort all to stie vnto it, by forsaking their wicked companie that are banded against it. For by the purple Harlot in that place is signified (as shall be proued presently) the Roman Empire, as then it was, the slauce of Idols, and with most bloudie slaughter persecuting Christs Saints: Those of the Church of Rome being as nearest vnto it, so most subiect to that sacrilegious butcherie. Wherefore that voyce which S. Iohn heard say, Go out of her my people, that you be not partakers of her sinnes, &c. can haue none other meaning, then that all they who desire to be Gods people, must separate themselves in faith and manners from them, who hate and persecute the Roman Church, as did then, the Heathen Emperours, and now do all Heretikes: Vnlesse they will be partakers of their sinnes, and consequently of their plagues. This shall yet appeare more plainly in the examination of the Chapter. Where I will deale friendly with my aduersarie, and aduantage him all that I can; that all being giuen him, which is any way probable; it may appeare more evidently, how little he hath to any purpose out of this place of the Apocalypse, whereof all Protestants vaunt and bragge so much both in their booke and pulpits. Well then, I will admit that in the 17. and 18. Chapters of the Reuelation by the whore of Babylon, is understood the Roman state and regiment: which in lawfull disputations, they are not able to proue: the most iudicious Doctor S. Augustine, and diuers others of the ancient fathers, with the learned troupe of latter interpreters, expounding it of the whole corps and societie of the wicked. And as for the seauen hills on the which they lay their foundation, they are not to be taken literally: the Angell of God in the very text it selfe interpreting the seuen heads of the beast, to bee aswell seuen Kings, as seuen hills. But this notwithstanding to helpe you forward, I will grant it you, because some good writers haue so taken it: and therefore omit as impertinent that which you say in prooue of it. What can you inferre hereunto? Marry: that the Roman Church is that whore of Babylon. Faire and soft good Sir, how proue you that? Thus. The whore of Babylon is a state of the Roman regiment, ergo the Roman Church is the whore of Babylon. What forme of arguing call you me this? By the like sophistication, you may proue that Romulus and Remus were the purple Harlot, which to affirme were ridiculous; or (which is impious) that the most Christian Emperours, Constantine and Theodosius, were the whore of Babylon, because these held also the state of the Roman Empire and regiment. To make short, the feeble force of this reason lieth in this: that they who hold the state, and gouerne in the same kingdome, must needs be of like affection in religion; which if it were necessarie, then did Queene Marie of blessed memorie, and her sister Elizabeth carrie the same minds towards the true Catholike faith, because they sate in the same chaire of estate, and ruled in the same kingdome. See I pray you what a shamefull cauill this is, to raise such outcries upon. A simple Logician would blush to argue in the parties so loosely: and yet they that take upon them to controule the learnedst in the world, often fall into such open fallacies. Well then, admitting the purple Harlot to signifie the Roman state, we do say that the state of Rome must be taken as it was then, when these words were spoken of it; that is, Pagan, Idolatrous, and a hot persecutor of Christians. Such it had bene a little before vnder that bloudie tyrant Nero, and then was vnder Domitian: which we confirme by the authoritie of them who expound this passage of the Roman state. The commentarie on the Apocalypse, vnder S. Ambrose name saith, The great whore sometime doth signifie Rome, specially which at that time when the Apostle wrote this, did persecute the Church of God: but otherwise, doth signifie the whole citie of the Diuell. And S. Ierome who applieth the place to Rome, affirmeth, that she had before his dayes blotted out that blasphemie written

written in her forehead, because then the state was Christiā, which before had been Heathen: so that unto the partie Pagan, and not unto the Church of God, hee ascribeth these works of the wicked Harlot: which also the very text it selfe doth conuince: for it hath, That she was drunk with the blood of the Martyrs of Iesus. Now the Church of Rome had not then by the confession of all men, drawne any blood of Christs Saints: but in testimonie of his truth, had poured out abundance of her best blood. Wherefore it is most manifest, that the harlot could not signifie the Church of Rome, so pure and free from slaughter: but the Roman Empire, which was then full gorged, with that most innocent and holy blood. Again, that whoore is expounded, To bee a citie which had kingdome, ouer the Kings of the earth. But the Church of Rome had then no kingdome ouer the earth, or any temporall dominion at all, but the Romane Emperours had such soueraigne commandement ouer manie Kings: wherefore it must be vnderstood of them, and not of the Church. Now to take kingdome not properlie for temporall souerainty, but for spirituall iurisdiction, as some shiflers do, is to fly without any warrant, from the nauiue signification of the word, unto the phantasticall and voluntarie imagination. And whereas M. Perkins saith, pag. 5. that Ecclesiasticall Rome in respect of state, princely dominion, and crueltie against the Saints, is all one with the heathenish Empire: hee both seeketh to deceiue, & is greatlie deceiued: he would deceiue, in that he doth apply words spoken of Rome, aboue. 1500. yeeres ago, unto Rome as it is at this day: and yet if that were granted him, he erreth fouly in euerie one of his particles. For first, touching princely dominion, the Romane Empire held then, all Italy, all France, all Spaine, all England, a great parte of Germanie, of Asia, and also of Africke. hauing their Proconsuls, and other principall Officers in all those Countries, drawing an hundred thousand millions in money, and many other commodities out of them: Wherefore in princely dominion, and magnificall state, it surmounted Ecclesiasticall Rome (which hath not temporall dominion ouer the one halfe of that one kingdome of Italie) more then an hundred degrees. And as for persecution, the Empire slue, and caused to be slaine, more Saints of God in one yeere, then the Church of Rome hath done, of reprobates and obstinate heretikes, in 1600. yeeres.

R. ABBOT.

WEe see that M. Bishop hath some skill in Oratory, but it seemeth he hath learned one precept about the rest of ex-tenuation or diminution, to giue semblance of making light of his aduersaries arguments, and not to be touched therewith, when notwithstanding hee is galled with them, and wounded at the heart. Of this lesson hee maketh good vse throughout his whole booke; but here in the beginning hauing his wits yet fresh, hee goeth somewhat beyond it, and will make his Reader beleue, that that text of the Apocalypse, which M. Perkins propounded for the matter of his Prologue, Goe out of her my people, &c. is so farre from making against them, as that it is an aduertisement to all men to forsake the societie and fellowship of all them that shew themselves aduersaries to the Church of Rome. The Apostle telleth vs, ^a There must be heresies, that they which are approued may be knowne. Because there must bee heresies, there must bee heretickes, men giuen vp to reprobate sense, obstinate and wilfull in their wicked fancies, euen then when they are ^b condemned in themselves. Otherwise such is the light and euidence of Scripture, in directing that admonition as a caueat against the Church of Rome, at leastwise to euerie mans eies and sight, there is that probabilitie thereof, as that a man would not beleue, but that the handling of this point should haue made M. Bishop to tremble and feare, and to surcease from going any further in the rest, specially seeing that for the safegard of his minion of Rome, hee is faine to goe so directly contrarie to the euidence that stood against him. Yet wee see how gloriously hee carieth himselfe heere in the beginning, and maketh shew of great largesse, and of giuing his aduersarie all the aduantage he can. But let him remember what Solomon saith, ^c A man that boasteih of false liberalty, is like clouds and wind without raine. His words shew more courage then wisdom, and hee giueth his aduersarie no aduantage at all, but what hee must haue whether hee will or not. The question is, whether Babylon and the whore of Babylon mentioned in the Revelation, be to bee vnderstood of Rome or not? Hee alledgeth out of Austin, and some other ancient (though not indeed so ancient) writers, and out of a learned troupe of later interpreters, as it pleaseth him to terme them, that by Babylon is vnderstood the whole corps corps and societie of the wicked. But his maister Bellarmine hauing mentioned that exposition for answer to our obiection, leaueth it, and saith, ^d It may be sayd, and in my iudgement better, that by the harlot it vnderstood Rome. So had he before sayd, that S. Iohn declareth, that the woman is the citie that sitteth upon seuen hils, that is (saith he) Rome. The very cleere light of the truth made him to conclude, that in the description of the whore of Babylon Rome must necessarily bee vnderstood; he must shift otherwise as hee might, but he saw that to denie this would bee no shift. Yea and the exposition that M. Bishop bringeth, maketh nothing to the contrarie. For although we vnderstand that Babylon do import the whole corps and societie of the wicked, yet we are also to vnderstand, that this corps and societie hath a head, from whence the name is deriued to the whole body, and therefore the notification of the body, specially being a body so confused, must needs be by the description of the head. The affirming I say of Babylon to be the whole corps and societie of the wicked, doth not exclude Rome from being meant by the whore of Babylon, because the head is necessarily implied in the whole body, and Rome is described and set forth vnto vs, as being the head of that societie. And that the head is here properly meant, is inuincibly manifest, because the speech is here of her that maketh all nations drunk with her fornications, and is therefore to be distinguished from the body of the wicked of all nations, which are made drunke by her. But for declaring of this point S. Austin in sundrie places diuideth the whole body of mankind by ^e two citiez, Babylon and Hierusalem, comprehending vnder the name of Babylon all that liue according to the flesh, and vnder the name of Hierusalem, all that liue according to the spirit. ^h The loue of the world maketh Babylon, and the citizens thereof, The loue of God maketh Hierusalem and the citizens thereof. This earthly citie being the whole corps and societie of the wicked, taketh the name of it from Babylon the great Citie of Assyria, which was for the time the principall part thereof. ⁱ In Assyria (saith S. Austin) preuailed the dominion of the wicked citie; the head thereof was Babylon, whose name, that is, Confusion, sitteth the citie of earthly kind and disposition. That Babylon wholly faouered of the flesh, affecting altogether the state and kingdome of this world, full of abhominable idolatrie, couetoulnesse, pride, crueltie, vncleane and filthie lust, persecution and

^a 1. Cor. 11. 19.^b Tit. 3. 11.^c Prou. 25. 14.

d Bellarm. de Antichrist. cap. 13. secundo dicit potest, & nunc iudicatio melius per meretricem intelligi Romanam. e Ibid. cap. 5. Explicat meretricem esse urbem magnamque sedis super septem colle. A. de Romano.

f Apoc. 14. 8. & 17. 2.

g Augustus in Psal. 26. & 61. h Idem in Psal. 64. Duas istius ciuitates in facit amoris: Hierusalem facit amor dei; Babyloniam facit amor seculi. i De ciuit. de i. li. 16 c. 17. In Assyria preualet in eis dominatus impie ciuitatis: huius caput erat Babylon illa, ciuitas terrigenae ciuitatis non est apertissimum est, sed est confusio.

hatred.

hatred towards the people of God, whom it held a long time in subiection and bondage to it selfe. Now as that Babylon being the most auncient state of earthly minded men, was the head of that companie and societie of the wicked, not because all vniuersally were outwardly subiect vnto it, but because all were ioyned inwardly in conformitie of affection with it; so Rome arose vp afterward to be another head of the same bodie, ^k as it were another Babylon in the West, as S. Austine speaketh. ^l Babylon, saith he, was as it were a first Rome, and Rome is as it were a second Babylon, and as the daughter of the former Babylon. It was Babylon then euen from the first original of it, though as did Babylon, so Rome also should in the latter states therof grow to be in higher degree of confusion then it was in the beginning. All this the holy Ghost most plainly confirmeth in the description deliuered by ^m S. Iohn. First it is to be obserued, that S. Iohn according to the example of the Prophet Daniel, doth by the tearme of ⁿ a beast import some earthly kingdome, state, and government, therefore named a beast, to signifie the same to be led wholly with beastly & carnall affection, to those things that concerne the flesh, and sauour of the flesh. Secondly, by ^o a woman, a harlot, he noteth a citie, which is the place and palace of such a state, giuent to fornications, both spiritual by idolatry, and corporal by luxuriouse, wantonnesse & filthie lust, which sitteth and hath advancement by the preheminance of that kingdome, state, and government. Thus the Angell plainly distinguisheth the woman and the beast, when he saith: ^p I will shew thee the mysterie of the woman, and of the beast that beareth her, of which S. Iohn had said before, ^q I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast. Albeit, we are so to take this distinction, as that withall we vnderstand that the same is not alwaies precisely obserued, but that the woman and the beast are vsed sometimes indifferently for the same, and either of them to signifie the whole. Now of the woman the Angell saith, ^r The woman which thou sawest, is the great citie, which raigneth ouer the kings of the earth. Againe, she is said ^s to sit upon many waters, which (saith the Angel) ^t are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. But there was no citie that raigned ouer the kings of the earth, and ouer those many nations and peoples, but onely the citie of Rome. Rome therefore is the woman that is there meant. This appeareth further by that he noteth of the situation

^k Ibid. Roma condita velut altera in Occidente Babylonis.
^l Ibid lib. 18. cap. 2. Babylonia quasi prima Roma: Ipsa Roma quasi secundae Babylonis est: & cap 22. velut prioris filia Babylonis.
^m Apoc. 13. 1. & 17. 3. & c. ⁿ Dan. 7. 3. & c.

^o Cap. 17. 1. 3.

^p Ver. 7.

^q Ver. 3.

^r Ver. 18.

^s Ver. 1.

^t Ver. 15.

Situation of this citie vpon the seuen heads of the beast, which (saith the Angel) are ^u seuen mountaines or hills, vpon which the woman sitteth. M. Bishop telleth vs, that those seuen hills are not to be taken generally; but that is a very witleffe shift. The Angell by way of exposition deliuereth, that by seuen heads are ment seuen hills, & wee must take it vpon M. Bishops word, that by seuen heads are not meant seuen hills, but somewhat else, but what, hee cannot tell himselfe. What an absurd toy is this, that the Angell so expounding it, wee should bee sent to him againe, to know what hee meaneth by seuen hills? But this toucheth them to the quicke, because the citie of Rome is famous for seuen hills, for which Tertullian calleth the people of Rome ^x the native or home-borne people of seuen hills; whereof they had their ^y septimontium, which was ^z a festiuall day in the month of December, vpon which day they performed sacrifices and deuotions vpon those seuen hills: and was so named (as Varro obserueth) ^a of those seuen hills vpon which the city stood. Seeing then there is no city in the world to which this mark of seuen hills can bee applied but onely the citie of Rome, they haue no way to excuse Rome from being the whore of Babylon here described, but onely by saying, that those hills are not properly to bee vnderstood; thereby bewraying the miserie of their cause to euery man that doth not wilfully yeeld himself to bee blinded by them. The Angell further expoundeth those ^b seuen heads to signifie seuen kings, of which five are fallen, saith he, one is, and another is not yet come: that is, saith the Rhemish Diuines, though they said it before they were aware, ^c five were before Christ, one present, and one to come. Whereby they crosse that absurd shift of theirs vsed in the place which we haue here in hand, that seuen is a mysticall number, signifying vniuersally all of that sort whereof he speaketh, and that the seuen heads, hills, or kingdoms, are all the kingdoms of the world, persecuting the Christians, beeing heads and mountaines, say they, for their height in dignity about others. For if the seuen heads bee taken in that generalitie of construction, then here is no place left for this diuision of five before Christ, one present, & one to come, because the meaning must be, all that are past, all that are present, and all that are to come. The other exposition which they bring, is as vaine and ridiculous as that. For as they reckon ^e five empires, kingdoms, or states, that were persecutors of Gods people before the time of Christ, as of Egypt, Canaan, Babylon, the Persians, and

Greeks:

^{R. Ver. 9:}

^x Tertul. Apol. cap. 35. sp̄s Quirites, y. sam vernaculam septem collium plebem conuenio.

^y Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^z Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^a Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^b Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^c Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^d Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^e Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^f Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^g Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^h Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

ⁱ Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^j Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^k Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^l Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^m Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

ⁿ Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^o Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^p Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^q Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^r Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^s Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^t Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

^u Idem de idololat. 2. Ibid in Annot. Rev. Laur. Septi.

Greeks: so they may reckon many mores as cruelly minded towards them as these were, the Philistines, the Amalekites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Ismaelites, the Edonites, the Assyrians: and because there are so many more then five, therefore they cannot accord with the summe here, where there are but five. Yea and the text plainly reiecteth this manner of account, because the seven heads here spoken of, are heads of one beast, and therefore cannot be applied to diuers states. But by one of these heads or kings, it shall appeare what all the rest are. Of the king that was in the time of Christ and of S. Iohn, there is no question but that it was the Emperour of Rome, who was in a manner the king of the world, and therefore ^g gave forth commandement a litle before the birth of Christ, that all the world should be taxed. There is no other king to be spoken of at that time, but onely this king. Seeing then that the sixt king is head of the Romane state, and all the seuen kings are heads of one and the same state, it must needs bee, that those five kings, which were before Christ, were also heads of the Romane state. Now in this sixt head, we see that the name of king is not vnderstood of them onely who haue the verie title of kings, but of such as haue the place and authority of kings, that is, the highest and supreme government of the state. And as the sixt head or king was not onely one man, but the whole succession of the Emperours, so we must vnderstand, that the other five heads or kings, were not five seuerall men, but five seuerall titles and states of the highest governours of the state. And fully so many wee find in the Romane government before the Emperours and the time of Christ; which were kings so called, Consuls, Decemviri, Tribunes, Dictators, euery of which for their times successiuelly, were the supreme Officers in the Empire and kingdome of the Romans. Seeing then that this cannot be iustified in any other state or citie, but onely in the citie of Rome, it is heereby manifest againe, that Rome must be the Babylon here intended by S. Iohn. Furthermore this beast is described also to haue ten hornes, and those ten hornes are expounded to bee ^h tenne kings, which shall grow out of the beast, that is, out of the same state or kingdome. Now there was no other state, but onely the state of the Romane Empire, whence those kings might arise, yea and S. Ierome witnesseth, that ⁱ all Ecclesiasticall Writers haue deliuered, that those ten kings shall diuide amongst them the Romane Empire. Therefore Bellar.

f Luk. 1. 2.

g Verf. 3.

h Verf. 1. 2.

i Hieron. in Da.

7. Dicamus quod omnes Scriptores ecclesiastici tradiderunt, &c.

decem futuros reges qui orbem Romanum inter se diuidant.

Bellarmino also confesseth, that ^k the tenne kings shall arise out of the Romane Empire, but shall be no Emperours of Rome, euen as the hornes grow out of the beast, but yet are not the beast. If then it be certaine, as it is most certaine, and cannot be denied, that the state of Rome is it whence those ten kings must grow, how can we make doubt, but that the State of Rome is it, which is here set foorth vnto vs vnder the name of Baby!ō? To say nothing, that there was no other state or government to which it can so rightlie bee applied, that it was drunken with the bloud of Saints, and of the Martyrs of Iesus Christ. The description fitteth so liuely and apparantlie, as that the auncient Fathers Tertullian and Hierom haue made vndoubted construction thereof concerning the citie of Rome. ^m Babylon with S. Iohn (saith Tertullian) carrieth the figure of the citie of Rome. ⁿ They thinke (saith Hierome) that the Romane Empire shall be eternal, whereupon according to the Reuelation of S. Iohn, in the forehead of the purple harlot is written a name of blasphemie, that is, Rome euerlasting. In another place speaking of his dwelling in Rome, he saith: *When I remained in Babylon, and was an inhabitant of the purple harlot, and lived after the law or fashion of the Romanes. And againe, writing to Marcella in the name of Paula and Eustochium, to perswade her to come from Rom to Bethlehem, vseth argument thereof from that which in the Reuelation is written concerning Rome: °Read (saith he) the Reuelation of S. Iohn, and behold what is there said of the purple harlot, and the blasphemie written in her forehead, of the seuen hills and many waters, and of the end of Babylon: and thereupon applieth to it the sentence heere prefixed, Goe out of her my people, saith the Lord, &c. Of which place Ludouicus Vines giueth this obseruation, that ^p Hierome writing to Marcella, thinketh that there is no other Babylon described by Iohn in the Reuelation, but only the citie of Rome. In another place also speaking namelie to the citie of Rome, he saith: ^q Our Sauiour in the Reuelation hath threatened a curse vnto thee. Thus they conceiued that all that is said of Babylon, of the purple harlot, of the name of blasphemie, of the seuen hills, of the many waters, of the curse threatned to Babylon, and the finall destruction of it, to be wholly vnderstood of the citie of Rome. We will therefore take nothing here of M. Bishops curtesie and gift, but by ^k Bellarm do Antichrist, cap. 5. Orientur quidem ex Romano imperio, sed non erunt Romani Imperatores: sicut cornua ipsa oriuntur ex bestia, sed bestia ipse non sumt. IV Cr. 6.

^m Tertull contra Iud. 105, & lib. 3. contra Marcion. Babylon apud Ioannem nostrum Romanæ urbis figuram portat. n Hieron. ad Alg. q. 11.

ⁿ Romanum imperium æternum putant. Unde in fronte purpuratæ meretricis secundum Apocalypsin Ioannis scriptum est nomen blasphemie hoc est, Roma eterna.

* Idem præfat. in lib. Didymi de Sp. sancto cum in Babylonem versaretur, & purpuratæ meretricis esset colonus, & iure Quintiana vincerem.

o Idem ad Marcellam. Lige Apocalypsin Ioannis, & quid de muliere purpurata, & scripta in eius fronte blasphemia, septem montibus, aquis multis, & Babylonem canetur exitu conuere. p Lud. Vines in August. de ciuit. Dei. lib. 18. cap. 22 Hieronymus ad Marcellam scribens xox aliam firmat describi à Ioanne in Apocalypsi Babylonem, quam urbem Romanam. q Hieron. ad. Icuin. 4. i saluator in Apocalypsi commissarius est: 2. Maleat. Hieron the very light of the text we will wrest it from him whether he will or not. Now this M. Perkins setteth downe indefinitely, that the whore of Babylon is the state or regiment of a people that are the inhabitants of Rome, and appertaine thereto: he concludeth not, ergo, the Romane Church is the whore of Babylon, but inferreth, that by other consequence afterwards; and M. Bishop shall see, God willing, that there is sufficient to be said for prooffe thereof. But whereas he saith, that of that assertion it followeth that Romulus and Remus were the purple harlot, he is much deceiued therein, because the state or regiment of a people that are the inhabitants of Rome, cannot be strained to import all people that are the inhabitants of Rome. Yet wee must let him vnderstand, that Romulus was the first founder of Babylon, and in him was the beginning of the first of those seuen heads of the beast, because he was the first king of Rome. For Rome was Babylon euen from the first originall of it, as before I noted out of Austin, and as appeareth in that it is described to haue seuen heads, and therefore must bee Babylon, not vnder one or two onely, but vnder all those heads, though wee indeed most commonly speake thereof, onely in respect of Antichrist, which is the seuenth head. So was she also from the beginning a purple harlot, being founded in blood and parricide, as S. Austin obserueth, by ^r Romulus his slaughter of his brother Remus, that he might be king alone: established by ^t rauishment of virgins & maides, allured thither vnder pretence of sports and plaies: increased by continuall slaughter and bloodshed, to that huge greatnesse which it attained vnto: though the name of purple harlot bee more specially giuen in respect of shedding the blood of the martyrs of Christ, and of the filthines of Antichrist, wherein he should go beyond all other that had gone before him. As for Constantine, Theodosius, and some other such like godly and Christian Emperours, though they were heads of her that is the whore of Babylon, yet it followeth not that they were the whore of Babylon, or the purple harlot, because it is not necessarie that simply all in that succession should bee of the same affection. For euen amidst the ranke and succession of idolatrous heathen Emperours, when M. Bishop denieth not but that Rome was Babylon, there was ^e Philip the Emperour, a godly and Christian Prince, so deuoted to religion, as that hee submitted himselfe to the censure of the Church. Yea and Valerian the Emperour in the beginning of his

^r August. de ciu. Dei lib. 5. cap. 5.
^t Tir. Liu. Dec. 1. lib. 1.

^e Euseb. hist. lib. 4. cap. 33.

his raigne was so well affected to Christian religion, as that his " Court was full of godly and devout persons, and was become a Church of God. Therefore though Constantine and Theodosius were godly princes, yet Rome might still continue Babylon, both by the remainder of those impieties that were before, and by the seedes of that defection that was to come, which soone began to bee sowed, and mightily to grow there. Whatsoever may be alledged of Rome for that time, it is easily to be vnderstood, that some small interregnum, as I may tearme it, and intermission of beastly and Babylonish corruption and confusion, could not take away the nature and name of that which it had been so long before, and was soone after to be againe. And indeed a small time it was, that Rome continued in the hands of those religious and godly Princes. Necessarie it was in respect of those things that were afterward to bee fulfilled, that Christian religion should publikely be established and aduanced there, which could not bee, but that the Emperours and Princes themselues must be Professors of Christian faith. But the chiefe seat of the Empire beeing by Constantine translated to Constantinople in the East, Rome within a while fell into the possession of other Lords. For about threescore and thirteene yeares after the death of Constantine (in which time also for some part thereof it had bene holden by Constantius and Valentinian the second Arian hetickes, by Iulian the Apostata, and Maximus the tyrant) it was wholly taken by the Gothes out of the Emperours hands, and continued as ² Bellarmino also confesseth, vnto the time of Iustinian the Emperour, which was about the space of an hundred and ouereteene yeares: yea and soone after, it was distressed and taken againe, and the Westerne Empire wholly overthrowne, the prou-idence of God by this confusion giuing way by little and little to the Bishop of Rome to take vpon him, as afterwards he did, to bee the seuenth head of the Romane state. Now then we hope M. Bishop can see, that we haue no meaning to argue in that sort, that they are of like affection in religion who gouerne the same kingdom, nay we are far from arguing in that sort, as that wee rather confesse, that they who both are properly heads of the whore of Babylon, may yet bee diuers in religion; as were the heathen Emperours that were of old, from the Popes that are now. Yet vpon his loose imagination he censureth vs, that with such fallacies wee take vpon vs to controule u Idem lib 7. c. 9.

 Tot a illius aula
 referta erat pijs, & ecclesia d. s facta.

x Bellarmino de Antichristo cap.
 5. Valent, Arca-
dian, Theod: sius
imior, & alij eo-
rum successores
vsque ad Iustinanian omnes Roma
caruerunt.

50 That Rome is Babylon, and the Pope Antichrist.

the learnedst in the world, of which whosoever they are, wee are sure that he is none, nor doe hold him a fit man to iudge who they are. But M. Bishop, let vs not contend who are the best learned. You know what we are wont to say, that the greatest Clerkes be not alwaies the wisest men. Solomon telleth you, Seest thou a man wise in his owne conceipt? there is more hope of a foole then of him. Thinke humbly of your learning, and it will haply serue you the better to learne the truth. As for our learning, thankes bee to God, it hath done you that sorrow, that you haue no cause to brag of yours, eie-ly loofers must haue their words, and hee can doe little, that cannot talke.

But now he telleth vs, that admitting the purple harlot to signifie the Romane state, yet the state of Rome must bee taken as it was then when these words were spoken of it, that is, pagan, idolatrous, and a hot persecutor of Christians. Here is all that he hath to say, and if this bee nothing, there is no remedy but Rome must be Babylon, the Pope Antichrist, and then what shall become of him? Now we deny not but that Rome was the purple harlot vnder those heathen Emperours, but we denie that in the falling of those Emperours, she should thenceforth cease to be the purple harlot. For the purple harlot described by S. Iohn, was so to be vnder seuen heads, of which by S. Iohns account, the Emperour was but the sixt. Sith then that Rome was the purple harlot vnder the Emperour, which was the sixt head, it followeth that there remained after the Emperour a seuenth head of the Romane state, vnder which Rome was to continue to be the purple harlot. That Babylon spoken of by S. Iohn, must bee possessed by a beast as head thereof, in the time of those ten kings to which the empire shall bee diuided, which shall giue their power and authoritie to the same beast. There was no such diuision of the Empire, nor any such tenne Kings in the time of those heathen Emperours. Therefore sith Rome was Babylon vnder the heathen Emperours, it must continue to be Babylon after them. Yea that Babylon must be destroyed, with that destruction which S. Iohn describeth at large in the 18. Chapter. But Rome was not so destroyed in the time of those heathen Emperours. Therefore it abideth still vnder the name of Babylon, expecting the time of that destruction. To bee short, it is without all controuersie, and D. Sanders confesseth it, that Babylon mentioned by Saint Iohn, is the seate and citie of Antichrist.

3 Prou 26.12

2 Apoc. 17.13.

a Sander. visib.
Eccles. Monarch.
lib. 8. demonstr. de Ancich. 8. Ioan-nes in Apocalypsi
dicis, Reges terre cum Babylone (que sedes & ci-uita: Antichristi
est) fornicatos esse.

christ.

christ. Because therefore that Rome is that Babylon whereof Saint John speaketh, Rome must be the seat and citie of Antichrist. Rome was not the seate and citie of Antichrist in the time of the heathen Emperours. Therefore it remained afterward so to be. It appeareth therefore how vainely these men please themselves with a shadow of an answer, that Rome was the purple harlot in the time of the heathen Emperours, inasmuch as thereof it followeth, that shee is afterwards also the purple harlot, because it is apparant, that the purple harlot must be after the time of those Emperours, and there are not two purple harlots, but onely one. That therefore which M. Bishop alleadgeth vnder the name of Ambrose, is so farre from making any thing for him, as that it maketh wholly against him, because it prooueth, that Rome was that great whore at that time, when the Apostle did write this. So doth that also of Hierome, because it sheweth, that it was Rome that had that blasphemie written in her forehead. As for that that he saith, that by the confession of Christ shee had blotted out that blasphemie, it helpeth M. Bishop nothing. Shee had taken away the imputation thereof for the time, but that eclipse of the light, or rather of the darkenesse of the beast hindred not, as before was said, but that she might returne to be the same that she was before. Yea when presently after he saith, that Christ in the Revelation had threatened a curse vnto her, and in his Epistle to Marcella hath applyed to her, that which is said of the destruction of Babylon, as we haue seene before, hee giueth vs plainly to vnderstand, that his words yeeld no exception, but that Rome might still bee Babylon, because that curse and destruction but vnder the name of Babylon, could not befall vnto her. But M. Bishop hath yet some foolish reasons to perswade vs, that these things cannot be meant of the Church of Rome. First, the purple harlot was then drunke with the blood of the Martyrs, but the Church of Rome had not then drawne blood of any. Absurd shifter, that will thus goe about to delude the ynheedie and ignorant Reader. Who would thinke him in his wits to argue thus, that the Church of Rome now cannot bee the purple harlot, because the Church of Rome that then was, had shedde no blood of any Martyr? The Church of Rome then had not that headship, wherein shee should be the purple harlot. Since was afterwards to be the purple harlot, when shee should be fallen from that hat shee was then, and should vsurpe the state and dignity of them, b Hieron adu. Ioum. lib. 2. Scripse inuisione blasphemians Christi confessions delesi.

by whom the blood of Martyrs then was spilt, which hauing gi-thence done by her head the Pope, she hath played the butcher of Gods Saints vnder him, as well as the citie of Rome did before vnder the heathen Emperour. Hereby his other exception falleth in like sort, because we speake not of the Church of Rome that then was, but of that that is growne since, by degenerating from that Church. That Church raigned not ouer the kings of the earth, neither was this latter Church of Rome to raigne ouer kings in that sort as the city of Rome then did: it is sufficient, that by raigning then ouer the kings of the earth, the place is described where the purple barlot should afterwards sit, though her kingdome were to be of another kind. For that kind of government which was the Empire, was wholly to be abolished, and those ten kings before spoken of,
were to arise out of the ruines thereof: but in the place of the Empire another kind of kingdome was to be set vp, in name whereof those tenne kings should submit themselues vnto the beasts. Some title the beast, that is, Antichrist must haue whereby to chalenge superioritie ouer those tenne kings, which, the title of Imperiall iurisdiction being extinguished, should in likely hood be the spirituall iurisdiction, which hath succeeded in the same place. Which M.
Bishop would gladly seeme to fasten vpon the first Church of Rome, but alas, that Church knew no such matter; it is a meere vsurpation long after presumed by the Pope. Now by this spirituall iurisdiction, he would not deny but that the Pope and Church of Rome hath raigned ouer the kings of the earth; onely he will not haue it to be called a kingdome, and thinketh it to be but subsisting to take it so. Yet Thomas Aquinas, who we hope hee will say was no shifter, was put to such a shift, as that he was faine to call it not a kingdome onely but an Empire. Who perceiuing it by constant agreement of all antiquitie, that in the dissolution of the Romane Empire should be the arising of Antichrist, and seeing what the case of the Empire in his time was, asked the question, How is it that the nations long since are fallen away from the Roman Empire, and yet Antichrist is not come? Where to he answereth, that the Empire is not ceased, but is changed from temporall to spirituall, and that the falling away must not be onely from the temporall Empire, but also from the spirituall. Where if he had not beene blinded with the doating loue of his mistresse, he would haue scene that Antichrist certainly had.

¶ Thom. Aquin.
in 2. Thes. c. 2.
Lect. 1. Quomodo
est hoc, quia iam
diu gentes à Romano imperio re-
cesserunt & tamē
necdum venit Antichristus?
Dicendum est,
quod nondum
cessauit, sed est commutatum de temporali in spi-
rituale: & idē
dicendum est
quod discessio à Romano imperio
debet intelligi
non solum à tem-porali sed à spirituali.

had bene come, because the certaine and infallible token of the comming of Antichrist, which was the ruine of the Romane Empire, was apparâtie fulfilled. For it was the temporall Empire that the ancient fathers spake of, they neuer were so mad as to dreame of a spiriuall empire to be diuided to ten kings. Of the temporall and ciuill state of the Empire, it was that Tertullian said,^d The decay of the Roman empire diuided to ten kings, shall be the bringing in of Antichrist. Of the fulfilling wherof Eberhard Archbishop of Iuuauia, aboute three hundred and fifty yeares ago, spake thus in an assembly of the states of Bauaria: ^e The maiestie of the people of Rome, by which the world in times past was ruled, is taken out of the earth. The Emperour is a vaine title, and onely a shadow. There are ten kings being together, who haue diuided the world, which was sometimes the Roman empire, not to gouerne but to consume it. The ten hornes, the Turkes, Greekes, Egyptians, Africans, Spaniards, French, English, Germans, Sicilians, Italians do possesse the Roman prouinces, and haue thence worne out the colonies of the Romans. A little horne is growne vp vnder these, which hath eyes, and a mouth speaking great things. Thereof Lyra also saith; ^f All kingdomes, in a manner are gone from the empire of Rome, denying to it subiection and payment of tribute; now for manie yeares hath that empire bene without an Emperour. The empire of Rome then is long ago abolished and come to nought; all Bellarmines deuices cannot set it vp againe. The Empire that now is, is but a meere title; the name without the thing, and not to bee accounted so much as the shadow of the Romane empire. Yea what it is, it is the Germane, not the Roman empire; for how should he be called Emperour of Rome, who hath nothing to do in Rome? For the Pope these many hundred yeeres hath vsurped Rome, and taken it for his owne, wholly excluding the emperour from thence. ^g The citie of Rome is ours, saith Adrian the fourth, not the Emperours: our seat is at Rome, the Emperours seat is at Aquez in Arduenna, which is a wood in France. ^h If a man looke to Rome & Italy, saith Theodoricus, it was indeed the seate of the ancient empire, but now the Emperour hath nothing thereof but a title onely. So then it is but a mockery now to call him the Roman Emperour; he shal vnder the name of an Emperour, be only one of those ten kings, to whom the Empire

^d Tertul de re-sar carna. Romani imperij ab-
scissio in decem
reges diuisa Antichristum super-
duces.

^e Auentin. An-nal lib. 7. Romani maiestas popu-
li qua olim orbis
regebat: sur, sublatâ
est de terra, &c.

^f Inuicator vana
appellatio & sola
umbra est: Reges decem partiti deexistant, qui orbem terræ, Ro-

mamon quondam imperium non ad
regendum sed ad consumendum partiti sunt De-
cem cornua,

Turce, Graeci, Aegyptij, Sij, I-Hispani, Galli, Angli Germani, Siculi, Itali, Ro-

manas prouincias possident, Roma-nosque in his excedere colonos.
Cornu paruulum
sub his succreuit
&c.

^g Lyra. in 2:
The 1. cap. 2. A Romano imperio
recesserunt quasi omnia regna; ne-
gantia ei subijce-& reddunt: tributum. Iam à multis annis im-
perium illud car-
uit imperatore:

^h Auent. Annal.
lib. 6. Apud nos
stra cum urbe Romana est, non Imperatoris. Rme nostra sed s-est, Imperatoris
est Aquis, &c:

sedes, sed nunc

^h Theodoric. à Niem. li. 2. ca. 23. Si ad Romam & Italiam respexerit, fuit illa quædam veteris Imperij Imperator nihil de ea habet quàm rursus, should be diuided. And hereby the Bishop of Rome is infallibly knowne to be Antichrist, because in the fall of the Empire he is risen vp, and in steed of the temporall maiestic, he hath set vp a spirituall empire and iurisdiction of his owne. As for temporall dominion, he needeth not to make him Antichrist, to haue any more but onely the state and territorie of Rome. The Emperor was the sixt, & Antichrist (the Empire being dissolved) must be the seuenth head of that Romane state, which the Pope hath long time been, and ⁱ Bellarmino defendeth him so to be. But to make him equall to the heathen Emperours in state and princely dominion, his spirituall iurisdiction hath been fully sufficient; in respect wherof ^k all princes of the world, as saith Blondus the Popes secretarie, did honor the Pope as the highest God; and almost all Europe did send their tributes to Rome greater, or at the least equall to the reuenues of ancient times. Yea, euen out of this realme of England there went greater reuenues to Rome, as ^l Mathew of Paris, and others haue noted, then were the reuenues of the Crowne. Therefore a very simple euaiuation doth M. Bishop vse, in saying, that by temporall dominion the Pope is a hundred degrees lesse then the Emperor was, when as he knoweth, that by his spirituall empire and kingdome, he hath benee as great, and indeed greater then euer the Emperour was. Now I would haue him to remember what his maister Bellarmino saith, that ^m Antichrist shall be the last that shall hold the Romane empire, and yet without the name of the Romane Emperour. He would not see it, but indeed he doth thereby rightly describe the Pope, who without the name of the Emperour, hath vnder another name of spirituall iurisdiction, holden the Empire in subiection to himselfe. This he should do, because the temporall dominion was to bee diuided to ten kings. This he hath done, & hath holden those kings vnder his obedience, and yet these men stop their eyes, and will not see him to be that that indeed he is. As for that which M. Bishop saith, that M. Perkins seeketh to deceiue, in that hee applieth to Rome at this day, that which was spoken of Rome 1500. yeares ago, hee is therein much deceiued himselfe, because those things which were spoken of Rome 1500. yeares ago, were spoken by way of prophecie, to discouer Rome vnto vs as it is at this day. His last exception is, that the Empire slew more saints of God in one yeare, then the Church of Rome hath done of obstinate heretikes

ⁱ Bellar. de Rom. Pontif. lib. 5. c. 9.

^k Blond inflaur: Rom. lib. 3. Omnes principes orbis terrarum pontificem ut summum deum honorant & colunt &c. Maiora uel certè paria principum temporum uestigia libus Europa penè omnis tributa Romam mittit. l Math. Paris. in Henr. 3.

^m Bellarmino. de Antichr. cap. 15. Exiit Antichristus ultimus rex qui tenebit Romanum imperium, tamen sine nomine Romani Imperatoris.

in 1600. yeeres. Where after the inanner of the persecutors vnder the old Empire, hee calleth them reprobate and obstinate heretikes, who were indeed the Saints of God. Of them the Church of Rome shew none at all, vntill by vsurpation of the Pope, shee became the seate and kingdome of Antichrist: but how she hath plated her part since, it may bee esteemed by that that Bellarmino himselfe reporteth, that by ⁿ eight thousand, which as Matthew of Paris noteth, were the Popes ^o rosse-marked souldiers, there were slaine at once in France a hundred thousand of the Albigenses, in the time of Innocentius the third. Matthew Paris againe mentioneth, that not long after, in the time of Pope Gregorie the ninth, there were slaine of the in Almaine ^p an infinite number, besides a great multitude of them destroyed in Spaine. Now these Albigenses, although they will not haue it so taken, were professors of the Gospell, euen of the same faith and religion which we now professe, of whom it were infinite to record, how many hundreds and thousands they haue slaine vnder the names of Waldenses, Leonists, Lollards, Wickleuists, Hussites, Hugonots, and such like. But of later times Paulus Vergerius, who himselfe had bin one of the Inquisition, & spake vpon good knowledge of his owne, declared that by the same verie Inquisition within the space of thirtie yeeres, there had bin martyred ^q a hundred and fifty thousand men and women, onely for the Gospels sake. The French massacres and butcheries will not bee forgotten, wherein M. Stow mentioneth, that ^r the slaughters at Vassey, Paris, Sens, Tholouse, Blois, Tours, Angiers, and other places, by credible estimation reported out of France in the yeere 1562. were to the number of a hundred thousand persons, within the space of six moneths. After which about the space of ten yeeres, followed the slaughter of Bartlemew-tide, most barbarous and cruell, wherein some thirty or fortie thousand were destroyed in Paris and other cities of France, within a verie short space, and thereupon great gratulations made at Rome, with processions, and other tokens of publike ioy. Thus they haue made no end of martyring the Saints of Christ, and haue equalled the crueltie of the heathen Empire to the vttermost: and yet this hypocrite beeing instructed by his master Bellarmino, and hauing sold himselfe to dub his lies, telleth vs, that his Romane Church, or the Pope the head thereof, hath not at all shed so much bloud, as by the heathen Empire was shed within the compasse of ⁿ Bellar. de notis eccles. cap. 18.

^o Math. Paris. in Joanne. an. 1213.

^p Jdem in Henr. 3. anno 1234.

^q Bale. de Aff. Rom. Pontif. lib. 7. in fine. ex Vergerio.

^r Stowes Annals, anno 1562. in marg.

one yeere. The bloud that they haue shed crieth for reuenge, and they shall receiue it in due time.

W. BISHOP.

Having thus proued, that the whore of Babylon, signifieth the heathen state of Rome, and not the Ecclesiasticall: let vs now heare what you say against it. Marrie, that the distinction of the Empire of Rome, and Church of Rome is foolish, and coyned of late to serue our turne: which to be farre otherwise, I prooue out of those very Authors, who doe inirepret that harlot to signifie Rome; who are neither foolish, nor of late daies: you haue heard it before out of S. Ambrose commentaries. And farther, wee gather it out of S. Hierome, in the Epistle which you cite: for behauing resembled Rome vnto Babylon, for the multitude of the wicked, which yet remained in it: pointeth out a more pure part, saying; There is indeed the holy Church, there are the triumphant monuments of the Apostles and Martyrs, there is the true confession of Christ, there is the faith praised by the Apostle, &c. Bee not there expressed two distinct parts of Rome? Againe Tertullian who liued in the second hundred yeere, under those persecuting Emperours, saith in one place, that Babylon is a figure of Rome, in respect of her proud Empire, and persecution of the Saints. And in another, that Rome was most happie for her holie Church, vnto which the Apostles with their bloud had poured forth their whole doctrine. See a plaine distinction betweene the Heathen Empire & the holy Church of Rome; which finally may bee gathered out of the expresse word of God. Where the Church in Babylon coelest, is distinguished from the rest of that citie, which was Pagan. You say (but without any author) that Babylon there doth not signifie Rome, but either a City in Egypt, or Assyria: But Eusebius lib. 2. his. cap. 14. and S. Ierome de Eccles. script. vers. Marcus, with other Authors more worthy of credit, doe expound it of Rome. And you your selues take Babylon for Rome, where you thinke that any hold may be taken against it, as in the 17. of the Revelation, but in S. Peters Epistle they will none of it, because it would prouoe too plainely, that S. peter had bene at Rome.

Lib. cont. Iud. De
prescript. cap. 16.

i. Pet. 5.

R. ABBOT.

Wee haue heere a friuolous and idle discourse, onely to giue a mocke to the vnlearned Reader. We doubt not but that there was a difference of old to bee made betwixt the prophane state of the Empire, and the state of the Christian Roman Church, and who would goe about to make any question of that matter? Nay we say further, that there is exceeding great difference betwixt the Church of Rome that then was, and the Church of Rome that now is; because the Church of Rome that now is, is become in dominion and princely state like to the Empire that then was. And in this respect is it that M. Perkins calleth that a foolish distinction, not because it putteth difference betwixt the heathen Empire and the Church that was, but because it distinguisheth to no purpose the Empire of Rome that was from the church of Rome that now is, when as the Bishops See is now turned into the Emperours court, and by pretence of spirituall iurisdiction, the beast that now is, is become the perfect ² image of the former beast. Some difference there is in that the Empire was wholly Pagan, and the Church in some sort professeth Christ, but in pompe and pride, in filthinesse, idolatrie and crueltie, the church is now the same that the Empire was. He bringeth a place of Peter needlesly to prooue his distinction, and in that place will needs haue it, that by Babylon must bee meant Rome. We are well content at his offer to take it so; but so, as that he must remember that beeing once Babylon, it should neuer finally surcease that name vntill it caried Antichrist for the seuenth head thereof, vnder whom the abominations of it shall grow to their full measure, that that heauie destruction may fall vpon it, which God hath threatned for full vengeance.

² Apoc: 13: 11
14:

W. BISHOP.

Well M. Perkins is content in fine, to allow of that distinction, of Heathenish and Ecclesiasticall Rome, which before hee esteemed so foolish: and then will proue, that not the Heathenish, but Ecclesiasticall Rome is resembled to the purple Harlot. See what confidence this man hath in his owne shuttle wit, that now wil proue this, and shortly after disproue it: but let vs giue him the bearing. In the 3. v. The holy Ghost saith ^{Cap: 18:} plainely, that she hath made all the world drunk with the wine of the wrath of her fornication, & yet addeth: that she hath committed fornication

nication

nication with the kings of the earth: But this cannot be understood of heathenish Rome, for that left all the kingdoms of the earth unto their owne religion and idolatrie: and did not labour to bring them to worship the Romane Gods, Ergo, it must be understood of Papall Rome. I answer. The Romane Empire being the head and principall promoter of all kind of Idolatrie, and maintaining, and advancing them, that most vehemently opposed themselves against the Christian religion; who with any shew of reason can deny, but they chiefe committed spirituall fornication with the kings of the earth, if not by perswading them to forsake their owne false Gods, which the Pagan Romans worship as well as they: yet by encouraging and commanding them to perseuer in that filthy Idolatry, and to resist, and oppresse the Christians where soeuer? Neither is that true, that the Romane Emperours did not labour to bring other nations to worship new Gods, when Nero and Domitian would bee worshipped as Gods, and for feare of Adrian, one Antinous his seruant, was worshipped as a God of all men: as Iustinus Martyr testifieth in his Apologie to Antonine. These words of the text then, agree very well with the Emperours, who both were Idolaters, and the chiefe patrons of Idolatrie: but can in no sort be applied to the Romane Church, which was then (as the Protestants cannot denie) a pure Virgin, and most free from all spirituall fornication.

Euseb. lib. 4. hist. cap. 8.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins admitteth the distinction, without impeachment of any thing that he hath before said. He granteth them that, whereby hee giueth them to vnderstand that they gaine nothing. The argument which hee alledgeth to proue that Rome Ecclesiasticall is here to be vnderstood, and not the heathen Rome, is verie forcible & strong. For it is true that heathen Rome did not tie other nations, when they had conquered them, to their Gods and rites of religion, but did rather entertaine the religions and Gods of other nations. Which was a thing that S. Austin derided in them, that ^a they worshipped those Gods as their maintainers and defenders, whom they themselves had overcome, and vainlie presumed they could not be conquered, hauing before conquered them by whom they should be defended. They made not themselves any rule of religion; they thought it to bee the way to gaine both gods and men, to haue a Pantheon for a receptacle of all strange gods, and to fashion themselves to the rites and ceremonies of other men. The instances that M. Bishop bringeth against this, are not to the purpose, because they are examples singular, and touch not to the perpetuall course of the Romane government. Nero and Domitian commanded themselues to be worshipped as Gods, but neither did any so before, nor did any afterwards vphold that which they commanded, neither grew any such worship vniuersally or commonly to be receiued. Adrian being grieued at the losse of his paramour Antinous, whom he had abused to filthie vnnatural lust, to do him some honor being dead whom he could not keepe alieue, named a citie in Egypt of his name Antinoupolis, and builded him there a temple, and commanded him here to be worshipped, but much further the worship of Antinous breauiled not. These examples are far from answering that which is said of the whore of Babylon, with speciall reference to the last state thereof, for the corruptions whereof she should finally be destroyed: The kings of the earth haue committed fornication with her, and the inhabitants of the earth are drunken with the wine of her fornication. ^d All nations haue drunken of the wine of the wrath of her fornications: ^e she did corrupt the earth with her fornication. But these things very apparantly agree to the Church of Rome, in which it is fully verified which S. Hierome saith of Antichrist, that he shall bring all religion vnder his owne power. The Pope hath made himselfe the master and commander of al religions; what he list to approue, must be followed; what he disliketh, must be reiected: no man must presume to contrarie that which he saith. ^g We bind them all vniuersally with a bond of a perpetuall curse (saith he) who dare to thinke or teach otherwise then the Church of Rome teacheth and obserueth of the sacrament of the bodie and bloud of Christ, or of Baptisme, or of confession, matrimonie, or other sacraments of the Church. ^h We determine that he shall be highly accursed, what soeuer king, or bishop, or potentate, shall thinke that the sentence of the decrees of the Bishops of Rome may be violated in any thing, or shall suffer the same so to be. ⁱ We denounce, that it is necessarie to saluation, for every humane creature to be subiect to the Bishop of Rome. Vnder this authoritie he hath sent abroad through the world his Iubilees, his Pardons, his dispensations, his

^a Aug: de ciuit. dei: lib. 1. cap. 3. Victos deo stan quan presidet ac defensores colere. &c. Magna vanitate presump-tum non posse vinci sub defen-soribus victis.

b Origen. contra Celsum lib. 3. c Apoc. 17. 2.
 d Cap. 18. 3.
 e Cap. 19. 2.
 f Hieron. in Dian. 7. Cunctam religionem sine subiectione potestati, imperatoris, de heres. cap. 2. d. vniuersos qui de sacramento corporis & sanguinis Domini, vel de baptismo, seu peccatorum confessione, matrimonio, vel reliquis ecclesiasticis sacramentis, aliter sentire aut docere non metuntur quam sacrosancta Romana Ecclesia predicat & obseruat, vinculo perpetui anathematis imrodamus.
 h 25. q. 1. Generali Constitutio regum seu episcoporum, vel potentium deinceps Romanorum. Poficum decretorum censuram in quoquam crediderit vel permiserit violandam. i De maior. & obed. cap. 1. nam. Subesse Romano Pontifici omni humane creature declaramus, dicimus, definimus, & pronunciamus, omnino esse de necessitate salutis.

Masses, his Monkeries, his Relickes, his Agnus Deis, his hallowed beades, his holy water, his holy oyle, and a thousand such other witchcrafts and sorceries, and hath enchanted and besotted the nations to make them doate vpon the opinion of these abominations. I need not amplifie this point, the matter is plain enough, and they themselves require this obedience to be performed to that filthy beast. As for that M. Bishop saith of heathen Rome, incouraging and commanding the nations to perseuere in their filthy idolatry, neither doth that satisfie the matter, because she could not be properly called the mother of those fornications & abominations which she found among the nations, and onely encouraged them to perseuere therein. But the Church of Rome hath either been the deuifer of her abominations, or if they haue in any part been deuised by others, yet she hath licked all those monstrous and ilfauoured bastards to their forme. The Church of Rome, I say, that now is, we apply nothing to the Church of Rome that then was, which he fondly inculcateth without cause. The mother we confesse was a chaste matron, but the daughter is growne to be a filthy harlot.

Apoc. 18. 5.

W. BISHOP.

But that it is now become idolatrous, M. Perkins doth proue by his second reason, gathered also (I warrant you, right learnedly) out of the text it selfe, where it is said: that the tenne hornes which signifie ten kings, shall hate the whore, and make her desolate and naked: which (as he saith) must be vnderstood of Popish Rome. For where as in former times, all the kings of the earth did submit themselves to the whore: now they haue begun to withdraw themselves, and to make her desolate: as the kings of Bohemia, Denmarke, Germany, England, Scotland, and other parts. In these his words is committed a most foule fault, by grosse ouersight and ignorance in the very text. What, be England, Scotland, Denmarke, (as for Bohemia, ruled by a Catholike Emperor, it must be omitted, as also many States of Germany,) be these Kingdoms your principall pillars of the new Gospell, comprehended within the number of the ten, mentioned there in S. Iohn, which hate the harlot? Yes marry. Why then they are enemies of Christ, and Satans souldiers; for in the 13. verse it is said of these, that they shall deliuer their power vnto the beast, (which signifieth either the diuell or Antichrist) and shall

Cap. 17. ver. 16.

shall fight with the Lambe, and the Lambe shall overcome them, because he is Lord of Lords, and King of Kings. Is not this doating in an high degree to infame so notoriously them, of whom he would speak most honour, and to make the speciall patrons of their new Gospel, the diuels captaines, and fiercely to wage battell against Christ Iesus. See, how ease of wrangling blindeth mens iudgements?

R. ABBOT.

The direct conclusion intended by M. Perkins is, that S. Iobus propheticie was not accomplished in heathenish Rome, whereupon it remaineth to be vnderstood of the Church of Rome. The Argument which hee vseth to that purpose is inuincible, and M. Bishop cunningly ouerslippeth it without saying any thing direct'y to it. He chargeth M. Perkins with a most foule fault, and grosse oversight and ignorance in the text, and with being blinded with heat of wrangling, when he himselfe, poore soule, knoweth not what hee saith, or if hee doe knowe, then carrieth himselfe n ost impudently therein. The case is plaine, if we doe but consider that the beast and the harlot belong both to one, as S. Iohn giueth vs to vnderstand, by describing ^a the woman to be sitting upon the beast, in respect whereof the Rhemish Diuines doe name ^b the whore, and the beast, and Antichrist all as one: So Ferius their Preacher of Mentz saith: ^c The abomination of desolation which is the kingdom of Antichrist, Iohn in the Apocalypse vnderstandeth sometimes by the beast to which the Dragon gaue power, sometimes by the woman sitting upon the beast, and making all to drinke of the wine of her fornication. S. Iohn then giueth vs to vnderstand, that ten kings should arise out of the dissolution of the Empire, as hath beene said. Of these ten kings he saith, ^d These haue one minde, and shall giue their power and authoritie to the beast. Hereupon it shall follow, that together with the beast ^e they shall fight against the Lambe, that is, against Iesus Christ. Afterward it shall come to passe, that those ten kings ^f shall hate the whore that sitteth vpon the beast, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burne her with fire. For, that it may appeare how they shall giue their power to the beast; and yet hate the whore, that is, submit themselues to Antichrists state and government, and yet hate the Babylon wherein he hath reigned, hee addeth: ^g For God hath put

4 Apoc. 17 3. 7.
b Rhem. Test.
Annotat. Apoc.
13. 1.
c Ferus in Mat.
24. Abominatio
nem desolationis
que est in ierusalem Antichristi Io-
hannes in Apoc.
17. hysti nunc quide per Bessiam cui
draco potestatem
suam dedit, nunc
per mulierem be.
iuegit. & c.
d Ver. 1. 13.
e Ver. 1. 4.
f Ver. 1. 6.
g Ver. 17.

in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to doe with one consent, for to giue their kingdome to the beast, vntill the words of God be fulfilled. So then vntill the words of God be fulfilled, and hee haue performed what in his secret iudgement he hath thereof decreed, those ten kings shall submit themselues to the whore, to the beast, that is, to Antichrist raigning in his Babylon. But when God hath finished his worke otherwise, then the kingdome of Antichrist shall bee ouerthrowne: the kings that before were subiect, shall withdraw their obedience from him; they shall hate the whore of Babylon, the citie of the beast, of Antichrist, and hauing stript her of the state and dominion whereby shee was aduanced and raigned ouer them, they shall furiously bend themselues against her, vntill they haue vterly destroyed her. These things wee see cannot belong to the dayes of the heathen Emperours, as before is said, becauie the diuision of the Empire, and these ten kings were not in those times. It remaineth therefore, that the prophecie belongeth to times afterwards succeeding. Now beeing so vnderstood, as necessarily it must bee, wee see the same in part already fulfilled in the Church of Rome, and God in his good time will fulfill the rest. The Empire hath beene diuided into many Kingdoms: those kings haue all submitted their scepters to the power and authoritie of the Bishop of Rome. Hee hath plaid the Lord and tyrant ouer them, and they haue patiently suffered him so to doe. Yet God at length hath opened some of their eyes already, and they haue learned to see the deceits of Antichrist, and to hate the same. The like mercy hee will shew to the rest in his good time, and they shall ioynly apply themselues to worke the confusion of that wicked strumpet. So then they, whom God hath already called, are not now as M. Bishop cauilleth, the enemies of Christ, and Sathans souldiers; they were so, so long as they gaue their power and kingdome to the beast: but now they are Gods armie, and the captaines of the Lords hoste, to fight his battels against the beast and the whore, vntill they haue wrought his iudgement vpon them. Weigh the text (gentle reader) and consider well how readily it yeeldeth thee that that wee say thereof: and hereby conceiue, in what a pitifull case M. Bishop was, when hee was faine to passe it ouer as hee hath done. Yet his fellowes are beholding to him, that hee laicth lustily about him with words, and seemeth to haue a good courage, howsoever if he weighed the place at all, it could could not be, but that in his owne bosome he was well priuie, that his cause was quite vndone.

W. BISHOP.

But you proceed and say, pag. 7. that we further hold, that the blood of the Saints and Martyrs was not shed in Rome, but in Hierusalem. Here is a confision of men, and matters; for we say that the blood of many Saints rehearsed in the Apoc. was shed in Rome by the tyrannicall Emperours but the martyring of those two principall witnesses, Enoch and Elias. (recorded in the eleuenth of the same) shall be at Hierusalem, as well, because the text is very plaine for it; specifying that their bodies shall lie in the streets of that great citie, where the Lord was crucified; as for that the ordinarie Interpreters of that place do so take it. But M Perkins holdeth, that the place where Christ was crucified, signifieth here not Hierusalem but Rome; because Christ was crucified here in his members: so it might as well signifie any other place of persecution, as Rome: the reason therefore being nought worth, he fortifieth it with the name of S. Hierome, but citeth in the margin a letter of two vertuous matrons, Paula and Eustochium. Good sir, if S. Hierome had meant that that Epistle should haue had his authoritie, hee would haue set it out in his owne name, which seeing hee thought not expedient, set the authoritie of it aside, and urge his reasons, if you thinke it worth your labour, and you shall be answered. In the meane season (I hope) all sober Christians, will take the place where our Saviour Christ was nailed on the crosse, to signifie rather Hierusalem, then Rome. And consequently, all that you haue alleadged out of Scripture, to prooue the whore of Babylon to figure the ecclesiasticall state of Rome, not so bee worth a rub.

Chap. 17.

Verf. 8.

Epist. 17.
Epist. 17.

R. ABBOT.

That which M. Perkins alledgeth, is according to their common fancie, that Antichrist shall haue his seat and kingdome at Hierusalem, & therefore shal there shed the blood of the Martyrs of Christ. For som of them percciuing, as M. Bishop might do, if his eyes were matches, that the prophecy of S. Iohn cannot be determined vnder the heathen Empire of Rome, doe post vs off to Hierusalem, there to find the whore of Babylon drunke with the blood of Gods Saints, and

4 Apoc. II. 3. 8.

and so vnderstand that which is said of the slaughter of ^a the two witnesses, whose bodies are said to lie in the streets of the great citie, where our Lord also was crucified. Thus because Rome is most evidently described by S. Iohn, they tel vs one while that these things are indeed to be referred to Rome, but vnder the heathen Emperours: and because there are some things that cannot possibly be applied to the time of the heathen Emperours, they another while put all ouer to Hierusalem, and will by no meanes admit of Rome, albeit it be most manifestly pointed out for the place thereof. But as touching the place of the death of those two witnesses, M. Perkins rightly saith, that it is not meant of Hierusalem, but of Rome. It is called the great citie, and what the great city importeth wee vnderstand by the mention of it afterwards, ^b the great city that reigneth over the Kings of the earth. That was Rome, and not Hierusalem, as hath bene before declared. Hierusalem was destroyed 20. yeares or more before S. Iohn saw this Reuelation, and ^c was fallen into dust for euer, as Hierome speaketh, the ruines or destructions thereof shall continue vntill the worlds ende. ^d Euen to the end of the world, saith Theodore, the consummation of her desolation shall continue without any change. The words of the Prophets are fully verified in her, ^e I will breake this city as a man breaketh a potters vessel, that cannot be made whole againe. ^f Sion shall bee plowed as a field, and Hierusalem shall be an heape, and the mountain of the house shall be as the high places of the forrest. Saue onely for three turrets, and a part of the wals on the West side, left to shew what a citie the Romanes had ouercome, it was so destroyed ^g to the very foundations, as Iosephus recordeth, and laid so flat, as that men would hardly haue thought that there had bene any habitation there. Onely Elis Adrianus the Emperour built neere vnto it another citie, which of his own name he called Elia, which since hath gone with Christians vnder the name of Hierusalem, but hath indeed neither the fashion nor situation of Hierusalem, as Arias Montanus noteth for the iustifying of that prophesy, and therefore is but wrongly and corruptly called by that name. Therefore there neither is, nor shall be any Hierusalem for Antichrist to raigne in, nor streets of Hierusalem, wherein the corpses of those two witnesses should lie. To prooue that Hierusalem is not there vnderstood, M. Perkins bringeth the testimonie of Hieroms epistle, written in the name of Paula and Eustochium, to Marcella.

^b Chap. 17. 18.
^c Hieron. in Jer. lib. 4. cap. 19. Ciuitas eorum in eternos cineres collapsa est: usque ad consummationem seculi ruina Hierusalem permansura sunt.
^d Theodore in Dan cap. 9. Usque ad finem seculi consummatio desolationis absque ulla mutatione permanet.
^e Jerem. 19. 11.
^f Mich. 3. 12.
^g Ioseph. de bello Iudaico. c. 18. & 23.
^h Arias Montanus in Mich. cap. 3. Ille que nunc Hierosolyma dicitur ab Aelio Adriano Aelia nomine constructa, neque anti quam faciem neque situm etiam retinet. Quod & obscura quaedam illius que extant vestigia & descriptio ipsa manifeste arguntur.
 &c.

Marella. M. Bishop answereth, that if Hierome had meant that that epistle should have had his authoritie, he would have set it out in his owne name. Hee could not denie but that Hierome was the author of it, and if Hierome would not have had it to carrie his authoritie, he would not surely have giuen it place amongst the rest of his epistles. But that he should keepe it still vnder their names for whom he wrote it, there was a necessarie cause, because there are some circumstances in it that are appliable to them onely, and not to him. Now Hierome though he there denie that great citie to be Hierusalem, yet doth not expound it to be Rome; but that is very manifest of it selfe, because it is ¹ the beast that shall fight against those two witnesses and kill them, and the beast, as wee haue before scene, is the Romane state and government, and Rome the citie of seuen hills, the place and seat thereof. But to the contrary M. Bishop vrgeth, that it is said to bee the city where our Lord also was crucified; and that he saith, all sober Christians will take rather to signifie Hierusalem then Rome. Thus no man must be taken to be sober that wil not erue the Popes turne. Yet wee take our selues to be sober, and because we are so, we know that the words are not to be vnderstood of that that is not, but of that that is, and therefore not of Hierusalem, which neither is nor shall be, as hath bene said, but of Rome, which is and shall bee, vntill God bring vpon it the destruction which he hath prouounced. For that wee are not properly there to vnderstand the place where Christ was crucified, beside that we conieue it by the course of the whole booke, ^k which as Hierome saith, spiritually to be vnderstood, the place it selfe plainly directeth vs hereto. The great citie, saith S. Iohn, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where our Lord also was crucified. It is spiritually alied Sodom and Egypt, and it is spiritually the place where our Lord was crucified. Now the citie where our Lord was corporally crucified being vterly perished, there is no other great citie to which we haue any reason in special manner to referre it spiritually, but onely the city of Rome. ¹ By authority of the Romane Empire, ¹ Rhem. Testam. the Rhemits rightly acknowledge, Christ himselfe was put to ^{Annot. Apoc.} death, and by the same Romish authoritie the members of Christ were put to death, both in Rome it selfe, and throughout the whole world. The members of Christ are spiritually Christ; hee reckoneth and accounteth them as himselfe. Of the members of his mysti-

m Math. 25. 40.
 n Acts 9. 4.
 o Origen. in Iereni hom. 1. 11: Per singulos marty-res Iesus condem-natur. Si cōdemnatur Christianus pro hoc 2 in-tūm quōd Christianus est, Christus est qui cons
 demnatur.
 p Phil. 1. 10.
 q 2. Cor. 1. 0.
 r Heb 12. 13.
 s Gal. 6. 17.
 t Ibid: 2. 19.

call body, he saith; ^m In as much as ye haue done it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye haue done it vnto me. ⁿ Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? ^o In euery of the martyrs Iesus is condemned. If a Christian be condemned onely for that hee is a Christian, it is Christ that is condemned. Therefore those things that are done to the faithfull for the name and faith of Christ, are termed ^p Christs suffringes, ^q the death of the Lord Iesus, ^r the reproach of Christ, ^s the markes of the Lord Iesus, & therein they are sayd ^t to be crucified with Christ. Seeing then the blood of the martyrs hath been shed so abundantly in the streetes of Rome it selfe, and by authority from Rome, the like blood hath been shed and spilt in the streetes of all other cities and places throughout the world, which because they were vnder the dominion of the citie of Rome, may well bee called the streets of Rome, therefore Rome aboue all other is the place whereof it may be truly sayd, that it is the great citie where spiritually our Lord was crucified, and in the streets whereof the Lords witnesses were slaine. And that Christ was crucified at Rome, M. Bishop must not deny, because he must not deny that which Ambrose reporteth concerning Peters being crucified at Rome. He telleth, that ^u when the Pagan infidels sought for Peter to put him to death, the faithfull requested him that for a while he should go aside, and should reserue himselfe to instruct and strengthen the people of Christ. Whereupon at night he was going out, and seeing Christ to meete him in the gate, and to be entering into the citie, he saith vnto him, Lord, whither goest thou? ^x Christ answered, I come to Rome to be crucified againe. Peter then understood, that Christ was in his seruant to be crucified againe. Therefore he went backe of his owne accord, and when the Christians demanded the matter, he gaue them this answer, and being straightwayes taken he glorified the Lord Iesus. Sith then that in the crucifying of Peter Christ was crucified, and Peter was crucified at Rome, it cannot be denied but that Christ also was crucified at Rome, and therefore that Rome is rightly called the citie where our Lord was crucified.

u Ambros. lib 3.
 epist. 32. in Orat.
 cont. Auxent.

x Respondit Christus; venio Romam iterum crucifigi. Intel-lexit ergo Petrus quod uerum Christus erat cruci-
 figidus in ser-
 uulo, &c.

y Areth. in Apo. 11. Extra.
 ditione preconiū
 Christi inuaria.
 biliter in ecclesia
 receptum est Enoch uenturum
 esse cum Elia Thebuse.

As for that that hee saith, that the two witnesses there spoken of, are Enoch and Elias, it is a meere fable, and hath no probabilitie or likelihood of truth. Some curious heads finding mention of two witnesses, must needs vse their wits to deuise to what two particular men they might apply that name. Arethas saith, ^y that it was constantly receiued that they should be Enoch and Elias. But Victorinus, who

who was farre more ancient then Aretas, telleth vs otherwise.

Many thinke (they did but thinke) that one of these witnesses is Elias, the other, either Elizeus or Moses, but they are both dead. Mary, the death of Jeremy is not found; for al our ancients haue deliuered that he other is Jeremy. Yet Hilary thinketh, that hee that shall come with Elias shall be Moses and no other. Such vncertainty is there in mens presumptions, when they will determine of that which God hath said, onely by their conceits. Very probable it is, that it is in allusion to that b that is written in the law, as our sauour saith, that he witness of two is true, God therby giuing to vnderstand, that notwithstanding the fury of the beast, and the cruelty of persecutors and tyrants, yet he will neuer want two witnesses, that is, sufficient for the iustifying of his truth. We may otherwise though to the same effect referre it to the c two oliue branches spoken of by the Prophet Zachary, which did drop oile into the lampe that was to burne and giue light before the Lord, as to signifie that God would prouide alwaies to haue some by whom he would preferue the light of the Church, and no lesse vphold it, then by the two oliue branches, that is, the kingdome and the Priesthood, he did amongst the people of the Iewes. S. Austin in his Homilies vpon the Apocalyp, if at least he were the author of them, expoundeth d the two witnesses to be the two Testaments, whom Beda also followeth therein: and that we may know the vanity of that tale of Enoch and Elias, hee saith that their conceit is wholly excluded, who thinke that those two witnesses shall be two certaine men, and that they be ascended to heauen in the cloudes before the comming of Christ. For how, saith he, should the inhabitants of the earth reioice of the death of two, when as they should die in one City? and how should they send gifts one to another, if there be but three daies, that before they can reioice of their death, they shall haue sorrow againe of their resurrection? He gathereth out of the very text it selfe, that the place cannot be meant of two particular men, because the inhabitants through the world can haue no such reioicing of two men put to death in one place, who within three daies must rise againe, and therefore necessarily we must admit another construction thereof. That is briefly this, as more at large might be shewed, if occasion so required, that the seruants of God for the word of their testimony, the doctrine of Iesus Christ, witnessed by the old and new Testament, should be murdered and slaine in the

2. Victorin. in Apoc. 11. apud Sixt. Senens. Bibl. oth. lib. 6. anno. 346. Multitudo autem ex his testibus esse Eliam, alterum aut Elizeum aut Mosē, sed utriusque meritis sum.

Jeremie autem mors non inuenitur, quia omnes veteres nostri tradiderunt illud esse Jeremiam.

a Hilary in Matt. can. 20. Mosē et Eliam duos prophetas intelligimus praesentem aduersionem Antichristi. &c.

b Iohn 8. 17: c Zach. 4. 3. 12.

d Augustin. Apoc. hom. 8. Beda in Apoc. 11.

e August. ibid. Excluditur omnis suspicio quorundam qui putant hos duos testes, duos viros esse, & aduersionem Christi. caelum in nubibus ascendisse. Quomodo autem poterunt habitantes terram de duorum necesse gaudere, cum in una ciuitate morerentur, & si uenera uicē n. it. re, si tres dies sunt, quo ante n. gaudeant de necesse conueniunt de resurrectione?

streets and cities of the Romane Empire, and their bodies dishonorably cast forth and left to the fowles and beasts, whom yet notwithstanding God after a time certainly determined, would challenge from that despite and reproch, and make their name glorious, so that they should seeme euen to rise from death to life, and as it were from hell to be raised vp to heauen; which came afterwards to passe, when God by Constantine freed his Church from the persecution of that time.

W. BISHOP.

Now let vs come to the ancient and learned men, whom you cite in fauour of your exposition. The first is S. Bernard, who saith, that they are the ministers of Christ, but they serue Antichrist. Of whom speaketh that good religious Father? forsooth of some officers of the Court of Rome. Good: who were (as he saith) the ministers of Christ, because they were lawfully called by the Pope to their places, but serued Antichrist; for that they behaued themselves corruptly in their callings. And so this maketh more against you, then for you, approving the lawfull officers of Rome, to be Christs ministers. The second place is alledged out of him yet more impertinently, your selfe confessing presently, that those words were not spoken of the Pope, but of his enemy: The reason yet there set downe, pleaseth you exceedingly: which you vouch so clearly that it seemeth to beare flat against you; for you inferre that the Pope, and all others since that time, be vsurpers, out of this reason of S. Bernard. Because forsooth, that the Antipope called Innocentius, was chosen by the King of Almaine, France, England, &c. and their whole clergy, and people. For if Innocentius were an Antichrist and vsurper, because he was elected by so many Kings and people: then belike he that had no such election, but is chosen by the Cardinals of Rome onely is true Pope. This, your words declare, but your meaning (as I take it) is quite contrary. But of this matter and manner of election, shall be treated hereafter if neede require: it sufficeth for this present that you finde no reliefe at all in S. Bernard, touching the maine point, that either the Pope, or Church of Rome is Antichrist. And all the world might maruell, if out of so sweet a Doctor, and so obedient vnto the Pope, any such poison might be sucked; specially waighing well, what hee hath written vnto one of them to whom he speaketh thus, Go to, let vs yet enquire more diligently.

diligently, who thou art, and what person thou bearest in the Church of God, during the time. Who art thou? A great Priest, the highest Bishop: thou art the Prince of Bishops, the heire of the Apostles, and in dignitie Aaron, in authoritie, Moses, in Power, Peter, thou art hee to whom the keyes were deliuered, to whom the sheepe were committed: There are indeed also other Porters of Heauen, and Pastors of flockes; but thou art so much the more glorious, as thou hast inherited a more excellent name a-ouer them: they haue their flockes allotted to them, to each man one: but to thee all were committed, as one flocke to one man: thou art not onely Pastor of the sheepe, but of all other Pastors, thou alone art the Pastor. And much more to this purpose, which being his cleere opinion of the Pope, how absurd it is, out of certaine blind places, and broken sentences of his together, that he thought the Pope of Rome to be neither sheepe, nor Pastor of Christs Church, but very Antichrist himselfe.

There is a grosse fault, also in the Canon of Pope Nicholas as hee writeth it: that the Pope was to bee created by the Cardinals, Bishops of Rome. As though there were some thirtie or fourtie Bishops of Rome at once, but of the matter of election else where.

R. ABBOT.

I confesse the places of S. Bernard doe not serue directly to that purpose to which they are brought. In naming Antichrist, hee did not intend thereby, that we should vnderstand the Pope; yet M. Bishop without cause taketh aduantage of his first words, because the Pope being Antichrist indeed, nothing hindreth, but that they who by office, and calling, and dutie, are the ministers and seruants of Christ, may in action and practise perfidiously and treacherously reeld their seruice to the Pope. Antichrist shall ^a sit in the temple of God, and therefore the officers of the temple of God shall bee subiect vnto him. That which by institution is the house of God, shall by his occupation become a den of thieues: they who by dutie are subiects, shall in following him be rebels and traitors; pastors shall become beasts; watchmen shall be blindmen, and they who haue places for oue vse, shall turne them to another. Thus S. Bernard saith of the Cleargie of Rome: ^b They are the ministers of Christ, and they

a 2. Thess: 2. 4.

b Bernard in Cant ser. 33. Misistra Christi sunt & seruunt Antichristo.

serue Antichrist: the true vse of their places is the seruice of Christ, but they abuse the same to the helping forward of the kingdome of Antichrist. He describeth at large in that place the horrible corruption of the Church of Rome. ^c A filthy contagion, saith he, is creeping through the whole bodie of the Church, by how much the more generally, so much the more desperately; and so much the more dangerously by how much the more inwardly. He sheweth how the Pastours of Churches, Deanes, Archdeacons, Bishops, Archbishops, got their places by Simonie, and abused them to luxurie and all excess. He complaineth that ^d the plague of the Church was inward and incurable, and that by filthy life, by filthy lustre, by filthy company, and by the matter that walketh in the darke, that is, by Simonie. Hee concludeth thus; ^e It remaineth, that the noone walking duet be brought forth to seduce, if there be any in Christ, yet continuing in their simplicitie. The same is Antichrist who shall counterfeit himselfe to be not onely day, but noone day, and shall be exalted above all that is called God, &c. Again, hauing vpon another occasion after wards entred into the like discourse of the strange declination of the state of the Church, he endeth in like sort; ^f It remaineth, that the man of sinne be reuealed, the sonne of perdition, &c. He saw not that the Pope was Antichrist, yet he saw that the Church was then by the government of the Pope as a horse fadled and bridled, and fully furnished for Antichrist to get vp and ride vpon. Yea and it appeareth by that that M. Perkins secondly citeth, that he did not thinke S. Peters chaire to be vncapable of Antichrist, in that hee saith: ^g The beast spoken of in the Revelation, to which is giuen a mouth speaking blasphemies, and to make warre with the Saints, possesseth the chaire of Peter, as a Lyon readie to be the prey. He spake this indeed of the Antipope, but yet it appeareth that hee saw the time then fitting for the kingdome of Antichrist, and that Antichrist might be likely to sit in Peters chaire, and therefore was not farre from seeing and deeming that the Pope was Antichrist. But what hee saw not, others had seene before that time, when ^h many in their Sermons, as Auentinus saith, did publikely denounce, that Hildebrand was Antichrist; that vnder the title of Christ, he did the businesse of Antichrist. He sitteth in Babylon, said they, in the temple of God; he is exalted above all that is worshipped, as if he were very God: he boasteth that he cannot erre: what soeuer he saith, he taketh it so to be the law of God. The same Auentinus mentioneth, that Eccl. serpit boni putida tabes per omne corpus ecclesie, & quo latius eo desperatus; & periculum quo interius. d. Inest. ma & infanabelis est plaga ecclesie, &c. A turpi vita, a turpi questu, a turpi commercio, a negotio denique perambulante in tenebris. e. Superest ut iam de medio fiat diuinitum meridianum ad scudandos si qui in Christi fidem sunt a hinc permanentes in simplicitate sua. p. p. est Antichristus qui se non solum diem sed etiam meridianum mentietur. f. In Psal. Qui habitat ser. 6. superest ut reuelatur homo peccati, &c. g. Idem epist. 125. Bestia illa de Apocalypsi cui dicitur est os loquens blasphemias & bellum gerere cum sanctis Petri sedem occupat, tanquam Leonem paratissimum ad praedam. h. Auent. Annal. lib. 5. Plerumque tum Hildebrandum pro concione Antichristum esse predicant: is uero Christi, inquit, Antichristi negotium agit. In Babylonia in templo dei sedet. Super omne id quod colitur extollitur quasi deus: sic se errare non posse gloriatur, &c. Quicquid dixerit, legem Dei putat, &c.

almost all good and plaine men, that dealt iustly, ingenuously, and simply did then deliuer in writing, that the kingdom of Antichrist was then begun, for that they saw that those things were then come to passe, which Christ our Saviour had spoken of so many yeares before. Long after that he bringeth in Eberhard the Archbishop of Iuuauia, of whom I spake before, saying, * Under the title of the highest Bishop, the garment of a shepheard, we perceiue, if we be not blind, a most cruell Wolfe. Hildebrand, saith he, a hundred and seuentie yeares agoe, did first vnder shew of religion lay the foundation of the Empire of Antichrist, &c. Those Priests of Babylon desire to raigne alone; they can indure no equall. Hee that is the seruant of seruants coueteth to be Lord of Lords, euen as though he were God. Hee speaketh great words as though he were God, euen that wicked man, whom they are wont to call Antichrist, in whose forehead a name of blasphemie is written, I am God, I cannot erre. Thus Mathew of Paris sheweth, how Robert Grosthead bishop of Lincoln in the time of King Henrie the third, being extremely afflicted and grieued, to see the desolation and confusion of the Church, by the practises of the Bishop of Rome, a little before his death called some of his Cleargie to him, and by argument and reason informed them, that the Pope was Antichrist, for that he was ^m a destroyer of soules, for that he by his ⁿ Non obstante violated and ouerturned all the constitutions of the holy Eathers; for that hee multiplied ^o mischeifes and inconueniences in the Church, &c. I omit many other that might be brought particularly acknowledging and testifying this point: but by these it may appeare, that both before the time of S. Bernard, and after, it was a thing amongst good men commonly beleued and spoken, that the Pope was Antichrist. Yea M. Perkins well obserueth, that the reason whereby S. Bernard proued Anacletus the Antipope to be Antichrist, proueth all the Popes since to haue bin Antichrists, because they haue not bene elected according to that forme whereby he then iustified Innocentius to be the true bishop of Rome, that is, with consent of the Emperour, the Princes of Christendome, and the whole Cleargie, beeing since chosen by the Cardinals onely. And this he further confirmeth by a decree of Pope. Nicholas the second, for the election of the Pope, that it shall be with the liking of the ^p Emperour, and performed by ^q the Cardinal Bishops, but with the consent of the rest of the Cleargie and Laitie: and if any man, saith he, bee set in the Apostolike seate ⁱ Ibid. Pleriq; omnes boni, aper-tè resisti, ingenui, simplices tum in prium Antichristi capisse quod ea quæ Chris-tus seruatur no-

ster tot annos antè nobis cantauit
euenisse, eo tempore cernebant,
memorie litera-
rum prodire.
^k Idem. lib. 7.
Sub Pont. maxi-
mi titulo, pasto-
rum pelle, lupini scissimum nisi
caci sumus seruimus. Hildebrandi ante annos
centum & septim aginta priuans
specie religionis Antichristi: im-
perij fundamenta iecit, &c. Flaminnes illi Babyloni-
æ soli regnare
cupiunt: ferre pa-
rem non possunt,
&c. Qui seruus seruorum est. da-
minus dominus
perinde ac si deus
foret esse cupit,
&c. Ingenia lo-quuntur quasi vere
Deus esset, &c.
^p Dist. 33. In nomine saluo sem-
per honore & re-uerentia Impera-
toris ista fiunt.
^q Electio Romani Pontificis in potestate Cardinalium Episco-porum sit: ita ut
siquis Apostolice
sedi sine premissa
concordia & cano-
nica electione corum, ac d'inde sequentium ordi-
nata religioforū, Clericorum & Laicorum consensus in thronizatus, non Papa vel Apostolicus habetur.

without the foresaid concording and canonicall election of the Cardinals, and the consent of the religious states following the Cleargie and Laity, he shall not be accounted Pope or Apostolicall, but Apostaticall, which is as much to say, as Antichristian. The Popes then being not now, nor hauing beene of long time chosen by this rule, but onely by the Colledge of Cardinals, are found to be Apostataes and Antichrists by the sentence and decree of the Pope himselfe. Hitherto M. Bishop saith not a word, though he confesse that he knew M. Perkins meaning well enough, which indeed was somewhat amisse set downe, by putting the Antipope called Innocentius for the Pope called Innocentius. He had nothing wherby to excuse the Pope from being Antichrist euen by his owne decrees, and therefore putteth the matter ouer to another place, where hee neuer meant to say any thing of it. Onely in the end he chargeth M. Perkins with a grosse fault in citing the Canon of Pope Nicholas, for saying that the Pope was to bee created by the Cardinals, bishops of Rome; as though, saith he, there were some thirtie or fortie Bishops of Rome. Belike it was darke, and his eyes did not well serue him, or else he might haue seene, that M. Perkins did not say, by the Cardinals, Bishops of Rome, as hee hath set downe, and pointed amisse, but by the Cardinall Bishops of Rome, that is, by the Cardinals of Rome which are Bishops. For they are all Cardinals of Rome, but some are Cardinall Bishops, some Cardinall Priests, some Cardinall Deacons, and according to this distinction M. Perkins named the Cardinall Bishops of Rome, the Popes Canon requiring the Cardinall Bishops to bee the Electors of the Pope. As touching that which M. Bishop citeth out of S. Bernard for his opinion of the Pope, I answer him, that we doubt not, but that S. Bernard had a very high opinion of the Popes place; but I answer him withall, that S. Bernard had a higher opinion of the Popes place, then he had of the Pope himselfe. He knew well, that though the Popes place were such in the Church of Christ, as hee describeth it to be, yet the Pope by the abusing of his place, might be very Antichrist himselfe. Hee wisheth Pope Eugenius to remember and consider, what person, what place and office, according to his conceipt, he did beare in the Church, thereby to mooue him vpon conscience thereof to the redressing of those intolerable enormities and corruptions, that were then growne in the Church and Court of Rome. For in those bookes De consideratione, he doth purposely posely bend himselfe to lay forth the deformities and abuses then preuailing: to shew how the Bishop of Rome by temperall dominion and princely pompe, did degenerate from Peter and the rest of the Apostles, and did rather succeed Constantine then him; to note the defaults and corruptions of gouernment, of iudiciall proceedings, of appeales to Rome, of the Popes dispensations, of the neglect of the punishment of offenders; to shew the neglect of the Cleargie in teaching the people, making themselues fitter for any other vse, then for that. Yea such was the horrible apostasie and iniquity raigning at that time, as that by way of complaint vnto Iesus Christ, he saith thereof with exceeding grieffe in another place, The whole company of Christian people seemeth to haue conspired against thee; from the least euen to the greatest; from the sole of the foot to the top of the head there is nothing sound: iniquitie is gone forth from the ancients, the Iudges, thy Vicars which seeme to gouerne thy people. Alas, alas, O Lord God, for they are foremost in persecuting thee, who seeme to loue supremacie, and to beare principallitie in thy Church. They haue taken possession of the tower of Sion, they haue seized vpon the munitions thereof, and thenceforth freely and by authoritie they betray the whole citie to the fire. Their wretched conuersation is the miserable subuersion of thy people, &c. The sacred decrees and orders are yeelded to opportunitie of filthy lucre: the sauing of soules is the thing last thought of. The rest also deale wickedly against Christ, and there are many Antichrists in our times. Now the due consideration of these words wee suppose may somewhat qualifie M. Bishops opinion of the words by himselfe alleadged, because hereby we plainly vnderstand, not by broken, but by perfect sentences, that whatsoeuer S. Bernard conceiued of the dignity and duty of the Popes place, yet that hee very well saw, that by euill vsage thereof the Popes in his time were become the very enemies and persecutors of Christ, euen they who (as he saith) were Christ's Vicars, and had the supremacie and principallitie in the Church of Christ. And so we find that the high Priest of the Iewes, who by Gods owne ordinance and institution was a figure of Christ, and sate in the place of Christ, yet by Apostasie and iniquitie became an Antichrist, a persecutor of Christ, and solemnly gaue sentence against Christ. In like sort therefore nothing letteth, but that the Pope may now be Antichrist, albeit his place had bin at the first appointed by Christ: but much more now, in that his place is no diuine institution, but onely humane presumption, affected by ambition, attempted by rebellion, yeelded vnto by superstition, established and possessed by tyrannie and crueltie, by villanie and treacherie: vpholden by the deuices of Sycophants and Parasites, who haue vsed all manner falshood and deceit to iniect into the mindes of men an opinion of it. S. Bernard therefore by error attributed to the Pope that which indeed is none of his: and although for the credit of the Popes authoritie, he alleadge some words out of the Gospel vsed to S. Peter, yet he bringeth no Scripture to proue, either that that which hee giueth to the Pope in that description, did euer belong to Peter, or that that which in the Gospel is spoken to Peter, belongeth to the Pope. Hee attributeth to the Pope to be prince of Bishops, and highest Bishop, directly against the decree of the African Councell, one Canon whercof is, that the Bishop of the first sea (which was Rome) should not be called prince of Bishops, or highest Bishop, or such like, but onely the Bishop of the first sea. His error therefore is apparant in this point, by the sentence of the Councell, but it is more absurd in some other words that hee vseth, howsoeuer we presume that his meaning was more tolerable then his words. For to say as he doth, that the Pope is by order Melchisedec, and by anointing Christ, what construction hee would make of his owne words we know not, and M. Bishop by omitting those words, sheweth that he was ashamed of them, but wee know that it soundeth little lesse then blasphemie against Christ.

Bernard. in conuers. d. Pauli Ser. 1. Conuerassa contra te videtur vniuersa Christianiani populi a minimo vsque ad maximum: a planta pedu, vsq. ad verticem, non est sancta vlla. Egressa est iniquitas a senioribus, Iudicibus, Vicarijs tuis qui videntur regere populum tuum, &c. Heu! heu! Domine Deus quia isti sunt in persecutione tua primi qui videntur in Ecclesia tua diligere primatum, gerere principatum Arcem Sion occupauerunt, apprehenderunt munitiones, & vniuersam deinceps liberet & possessione sine tradunt incendio ciuitatum. M: sera eorum conuersatio plebis tue miserabilis subuersio est, &c. Dati sunt sacri gradus in occasione nem turpa lucri &c. De animarum salute nouissima cogitatio est, &c. Iniqui agunt & ceteri contra Christum, multique nestra temporibus sunt: Antichristi.

*Tu es princeps Episcoporum,
summus Pontifex & Consil. Afric.
cap. 6. Vt prime sedis Episcopus
non appelletur Princeps sacerdotum, aut sum-
mus sacerdos, aut
aliquid huius-
modi, sed tantum
princeps sedis Episcopus.
u Ordine Melchi-sedec, unctioe Christus.*

W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins hauing lightly skirmished with a broken sentence or two out of one Catholike Author, flieth to a late heretike called Joachim, and quoteth Jewel for relator of it. A worshipfull testimonie of one Heretike, and that vpon the report of another: and hee the most lying Author of these daies. As for the late Poet Petrarch, his words might easily be answered, but because he quoteth no place, I will not stand to answer it. But to close vp this first combate, a sentence is set downe out of the famous Mariyr Irenæus, that Antichrist should be Latinos, a Romane. Here be as many faults as words. That learned auncient Doctor discoursing of Antichrist his proper name, out of these words of the Reuelation, the number of the beast is 666. and observing the letters of the Greeke Alphabet, (by which they do number, as we do by cyphers) saith: that among others the word Lateinos doth containe those letters which amount just to the number of 666. and consequently that Antichrists proper name perhaps might be Lateinos, but more likely it is to be Teitan, as he saith there, and lastly, that it is most uncertaine what his name shall be. See the place (gentle Reader) and learne to beware of such deceitfull merchants, as make no conscience to corrupt the best Authors: and being often warned of it, will neuer learne to amend. Irenæus leaues it most doubtfull what shall be Antichrists name: And among diuers words esteemeth Lateinos to bee the vnlikeliest. And yet M. Perkins reporteth him to say resolutely, that his name shall bee Lateinos: and then to make up the matter, turneth Lateinos, a proper name with S. Irenæus into Romane, an appellatiue, which noteth only his countrey. Fie vpon that cause, which cannot bee upholden and mainiained, but by a number of such paltry shifts.

R. ABBOT.

It followeth not that euery man who in a point of doctrine conceiueh amisse, is presently an heretike, for so many should be heretikes both of auncienter and later writers, who notwithstanding by M. Bishop himselfe are reckoned for good Catholikes. Ioachim indeed deliuered against Peter Lombard, a pernicious opinion concerning the Godhead. The councill of Laterane condemned his opinion, but because he was not wilfull in his errour, it made no heretike of him. Therefore in that councill it is noted in the margin, ^a Not Ioachim himselfe, but his booke is condemned. M. Bishop therefore is too presumptuous, to pronounce him an heretike, whom the councill did not so pronounce. M. Perkins citeth the wordes of Ioachim out of Bishop Jewels sermons, but hee is also reiected as another heretike, yea and the most lysing Author of these daies. But we would gladly haue M. Bishop to learne that point of honest ciuilitie and good manners, not to speake so rudely of them whom hee knoweth not. I dare say hee neuer read Bishop Jewel, nor doth know whether he tel truth or not; only the Magistri nostri haue told him that so he must say. And indeed it concerneth them that Bishop Jewel be taken for a lysing author, for if hee haue reported truth, then in miserable case are they. But his true & faithfull dealing wil suffici-

a Concil. Late-ran. cap. 2 in marg Non ipse Ioachim, sed eius
liber damnatur.

ently

ently iustifie it selfe to them that are carefull to learne the truth, euen to the shame and confusion of these Sycophants; who labour by impeaching the truth of others, to gaine opinion and credit to their owne lies. But for this matter, if he will not take it to be true vpon Bishop Iewe's report, I will doe him the fauour to referre him to another author, who is liable to no exception. That is Roger Houeden, who writeth that Ioachim the Abbot in a discourse before king Richard the first of our land, ^bdid say concerning Antichrist, that he was then borne in Rome, and should be set vp aloft in the Apostolike sea. Then was indeede the Bishop of Rome growne to that height of insolencie and pride, as that he openly practised rebellion against the Emperour his Lord and master. Yea such was the incredible arrogancie and impudencie of this Antichristian beast, as that soone after that speech of Ioachim, ^c*Celestinus* the third being to crowne the Emperour Henrie the sixt, tooke the Crowne betwixt his two feete, and made the Emperour to bowe downe, that with his feete he might set it vpon his head, which hauing done, with one of his feet hee strooke it off againe, to giue him to vnderstand, that it was in his power againe to bereaue him of the Crowne. As for Petrarch, I let him passe, because though freely vttering what he thought, hee called Rome Babylon, & spake many things to touch the triple crowne, yet it seemeth that for feare of displeasure he was content afterwards to make the best of that hee had said. There remaineth onely Ireneus, who setting downe diuers coniectures as touching the name of the beast, which S. Iohn saith shall containe the number 666, bringeth this for one, that ^d*λατίνος* is the name imported by that number, and that Antichrist haply shall bee knowne by that name. Against this M. Bishop hath sundrie exceptions, and all to little purpose. First he saith, that Ireneus amongst diuers words esteemeth Latinos to be the vniuersally likeliest. But whether that be true, let the Reader esteeme by Ireneus his owne words. ^e*The name Latinos*, saith hee, containing the number of sixe hundred sixtise sixe, is very likely, because the truest kingdome hath that name. For they are the Lains that now raigne, but neither will we presume of this. Ireneus himselfe saith, It is very likely: M. Bishop telleth vs, that Ireneus saith, It is the most unlikely of all other: hereby let it appeare who best deserueth the name of a lying auhor. Againe, he saith that Ireneus meaneth it to be a pro-

^b Rog. Houed.
Annal. lib. 2. anno 1190. De isto Antichristo
dicit idem Ioan.
chim quod iam
natus est in ciui-tate Romana, &
in sedo Apostoli-
ca sublimabitur.
^c Idem anno 1191.

^d λ. 30.
α. 1.
τ. 300.
ς. 5.
ι. 10.
ν. 50.
ο. 70.
ε. 200.

666.

^e Ireneus lib. 5.
Sed & λατίνος
nomen sexcentorū
sexaginta sex
numerus habens
valde uersimile
est, quoniam ue-
rissimum regnum
hoc habet vocabulum: Latini
enim sunt qui nunc regnant, sed
non in hoc nos
gloriamur.

her name, whereas wee make it an appellative. But this appeareth to be false, by the reason that is giuen by Irenaeus of the likelihood of the name. For if hee should haue that name of the kingdome and countrie where hee should raigne, as the words of Irenaeus import, then it is manifest that it should not be his proper name. Thirdlie, he alledgeth that Irenaeus maketh ^f Titus a morelikelie word. I mention not these things in the same order as hee hath set them downe, but as they yeeld themselves most conueniently to be spoken of. Now it is true that Irenaeus saith, that that name is ^b most worthy to be beleued, but that helpeth M. Bishop nothing, because that name by the Popes owne decrees ligheth fully vpon himselfe. For Titan, as Irenaeus noteth, is the name of the Sunne, and the Pope maketh himselfe ^b the Sunne, and the Emperour the Moone, and will haue vs to thinke, that so much as the Moone is lesse then the Sunne, so much is the Emperour inferiour to him. Titan is a name applied to Idols, saith Irenaeus, and what is the Pope but an Idol, caried vp and downe vpon mens shoulders like an Idol, bedecked like an Idol, publicly adored and worshipped like an Idol? Titan, saith he, is a name containing ostentation of reuenge, and who hath euer more proudly vaunted reuenge then the Pope hath done, whose stile against such as offend him vsually is this, ⁱ We decree that hee shall be utterly accursed: ^k we bind him with a bond of perpetuall curse: ^l let him know that he shall incurre the indignation of Almighty God, and of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul? yea and not onely by words, but by deedes hath made euen the earth to quake, and the Princes hereof to stagger and fall vnder the burden of his reuenge. But of this name also Irenaeus will affirme nothing, and therefore fourthly M. Bishop saith, that Irenaeus leaueth it vncertaine and doubtful what his name shall be. And so he doth indeed, but with this direction, that ^m the surest way and without danger, is to waite for the fulfilling of the Prophecie. Now the fulfilling of the prophecie hath made that cleare and certaine to vs, which some did coniecture when, and could but coniecture, being so many hundred yeeres before the fulfilling of it. The number of the name of ⁿ the beast, that is, of Antichrist, is set downe in the thirteenth chapter Afterwards in the seuenteenth chapter, many things are further added for the better vnderstanding of all that went before. Now there wee vnderstand, that Antichrist shall be ^o a king that is, as before hath

f 300.
 5.
 10.
 300.
 1.
 50.

 666.
 g Omium nomi-
 num que apud
 nos inueniuntur magis fide dig-
 num est.
 h Decre al.
 Gregor. de maio-
 rit. & ad ca.
 foli.e. Quanta
 est inter solem & lunam, tanta inter Pontifices &
 reges differentia.
 i 25.9.1. Gene-
 rali.
 k Discretal. de heres. cap. ad an-telendam.
 l Extravaug de
 offic delegat. cap.
 Sedes Apostolica, & passim.
 m. Certius & sine
 periculo est susti-
 nere adimpletio-
 nem prophetic.

n Apoc. 13. 18.

o Apoc. 17.9.10

beene said, the highest governour of state. Wee know also by experience, that a King taketh his name of the countrie, or place, or state whereof he is king. Thus are we wont to name kings, the king of England, the king of Denmarke, the French king, the Spanish king. We must therefore conceiue likewise, that Antichrist being a king, must take his name of his kingdome, of the city or countrey ouer which he raigneth. The place where Antichrist shall raigne, is set forth to be ^p the City upon seuen hills, raigning then ouer the Kings of the earth, which is vndoubtedly the City of Rome. Antichrist therefore must haue his name from the inhabitants and people of Rome ouer whom hee is to raigne, and the name that hee taketh from them, which is Latinus Latine or Romane, fully expresseth the number sixe hundred, sixty, sixe. But to giue vs yet further light, it is noted that he shall be ^q the seventh King of the Latines, and hee shall bee together with ^r the ten Kings, to which the Empire of Rome shall be diuided. The sixt king of the Latines wee haue before seene was the Emperour. So then after the fall of the Emperour, and dissolution of the Empire, the Latine king shall be the certaine and vndoubted name of Antichrist, neither are wee to make any question, but that hee is Antichrist whosoeuer is Lord and king of the Roman state. But that the Pope hath euer since beene; and therefore doth Turrian the Iesuite call the Popedome, the kingdome of the Romanes, and Nauarre the Canonist termeth the Pope regem Latinorum, the king of the Latines or Romans; and it hath beene before shewed, that hee wholly challengeth to himselfe the right and title thereof. The Pope therefore without all doubt is Antichrist; and we know him so to bee, because after the Emperour hee is become the Latine or Roman king, vnder the name of the Latine or Romane Bishop, by which hee is renoued through the whole world. And because we see that the seventh king of the Latines is not one onely man, but a succession of many, as in the other governments before, therefore wee know that it was not meant that Antichrist should be one onely man, but a succession of many in one government of the Romane state. Which is the thing wherein Irenaeus erred, being deceiued as it seemeth by the traditions of Rapias, by meanes whereof, both he himselfe, and others after him by his example more readily entertained sundry fables concerning Antichrist, the pretence whereof the Papists now abuse

f ver. 9. 18.

q verse 9. 10.
r verse 18.

f Turrian de ecclē. ordinat. ministr. lib. 1. cap. 2. Regnum Romanorum.
r Nauar. Manual. Confessar. in epist. dedicat. ad Gregor. 13.

to make men looke for another Antichrist, and not to know him whom the Scripture hath described to be.

W. BISHOP.

Thus come we at length to the end of M. Perkins proofes, and re-proofes in his prologue, where we finding little fidelitie in his allegations of the fathers, bad construction and foule oversight in the text of holy Scripture, briefly great malice, but slender force against the Church of Rome, we are to returne the words of his theame to all good Christians. Go out of her my people. Forsake the enemies of the Roman Church. And as our Ancestors did the Pagan Emperours, who drew out her most pure blond, so let vs flie in matters of faith and religion, from all heretikes that of late also spared not to shed abundance of the same most innocent blond, valesse to your greater condemnation, you had leifer be partakers of her sinnes, and receiue of her plagues. And because I purpose (God willing) not onely to confute what M. Perkins bringeth against the Catholike doctrine, but some what also in euery Chapter to fortifie and confirme it: I will here deliuer what some of the most ancient, most learned, and most holy Fathers doe teach, concerning ioyning with the Church, and Pope of Rome, from whose societie Protestants labour tooth and naile to withdraw vs. And because of this we must treat more amply in the questions of supremacie, I will vse heret their authoritie onely whom M. Perkins citeth against vs. S. Bernard is cited already, S. Irenæus Scholer of S. Policarpe, and he of S. Iohn the Euangelist, of the Church of Rome writeth thus. To this Church, Libr. 3. cap. 3. by reason of her more mightie principalitie, it is necessarie that euerie Church, that is, the faithfull on all sides, do condescend and agree; in and by which, alwaies the tradition of the Apostles hath been preferued by them that be round about her.

Saint Ierome writing to Damasus Pope of Rome, saith: I following none as chiefest but Christ, do in participation ioyne with thy blessednesse, that is, with the chaire of Peter, I knowe the Church to be builded vpon that Rocke. Whosoever doth eate the Paschal Lambe out of this house, is a profane fellow, hee that is not found within the Arke of Noe, shall when the flouds arise perish: And a little after, I know not Vitalis, I refuse Meletius, I take no notice of Paulinus: he that gathereth not with thee, scattereth; that is, he that that is not with Christ, is with Antichrist.

Marke and embrace this most learned Doctors iudgement, of ioyning with the See of Rome, in all doubtfull questions: he would not trust to his owne wit and skill, which were singular; nor thought it safe to rely upon his learned and wise neighbours: he durst not set up his rest with his owne Bishop Paulinus, who was a man of no meane marke but the Patriarke of Antioch: but made his assured stay upon the See of Rome, as upon an unmovable Rocke, with which (saith he) if we do not communicate in faith and Sacraments, we are but profane men, void of all Religion: In a word, we belong to Christ, but be of Antichrists traine. See, how flat contrarie this most holy ancient Father is to M. Perkins. M. Perkins would make us of Antichrists band, because we cleave unto the Bishop of Rome. Whereas S. Hierome holdeth all to appertaine to Antichrist, who be not fast lincd in matters of Religion, with the Pope and See of Rome. And so to conclude with this point, every true Catholike must say with S. Ambrose: I desire in all things to follow the Church of Rome. And thus much of his prologue. Afterward he taketh upon him to prescribe and shewe us how farre forth wee may ioyne with the Church of Rome, by proposing many points in controuersie betwene us and them, and in each shewing in what points wee consent together, and in what we differ. I meane by Gods grace to followe him step by step, although he haib made many a disorderly one, as well to discover his deceits, and to disprone their errors, as also to establish the Catholike doctrine, the which I will endenour to performe (by the helpe of God) with all simplicitie of language, and with as much breuitie as such a weightie matter will permis. Yet (I hope) with that perspicuity, as the meaner learned may vnderstand it, and with such substance of prooffe, both out of the holy Scriptures and ancient Fathers, as the more iudicious (to whose profit it is principally dedicated) may not contemne it.

Lib. 3. de Sacra.
cap. 9.

R. ABBOT.

What the dealing of M. Perkins and M. Bishop on each part hath been, I leaue it to the Reader to iudge by examining of both, who I doubt not will acknowledge M. Perkins fidelitie of allegations, true construction of holy Scriptures, and sufficient argument to make all men ielous of the Church of Rome. And seeing Hierom of

of old hath giuen light (as before hath been shewed) that of Rome it is said, Go out of her my people, and there can be thenceforth no other Rome, to which we may apply it, but onely the corrupted state of the Church of Rome: therefore he will take it (I presume) as a warning from God, to take heed of, and to eschue the filthy fornications, idolatries, and abominations of that vncleane strumpet, and will deride the sillinesse of those collections, whereby M. Bishop laboureth to perswade the contrarie. As for that which he saith of vs vnder the name of heretikes, that of late we spared not to shed abundance of their most innocent blood, it setteth forth the singular impudencie, and remorselesse malice of these notorious hypocrites. For whereas he talketh of abundance of blood, he well knoweth, that in five and fortie yeares of Queene Elizabeth, there was not so much blood of theirs shed by vs, as was of ours by them in five yeares of the raigne of Queene Mary. And whereas he calleth it innocent blood, they themselues, M. Bishop I meane, and his fellow Seculars, by their Proctor ^a Watson, haue cleared the State, as hauing iust cause to proceed against them that were put to death; against the Iesuites as immeditate actors of treason, against the Priests as being employed by them for the effecting thereof. It pleased God by that quarrell of theirs against the Iesuites, to make them witnesses of the innocencie of the State in the shedding of their blood: and by their owne mouth to make it knowne, that the Iesuits were still deuising & practising for the death of the Queen, and for the ruine and ouerthrow of the Realm, and that the Priests were vsed by them as instruments for the compassing and atchieuing of their traitorous designs, so that the nature of their fact could be no lesse then treason: and therefore what conscience may we thinke there is in this leud hireling, contrarie to their owne confession, to renew a complaint against the State, of shedding innocent blood, as if there had been no cause but meere Religion towards God, why they were put to death? But if that had beene the quarrell, many more would haue been in like sort to be touched, being openly knowne to be professors of that Religion, who notwithstanding as we know, saue only for a pecuniarie mulct for trespassing the law, liued at their owne libertie, and fully with vs enjoyed the benefit of the State. To let this passe, M. Bishop will now del vs somewhat out of the Fathers, to warrant our ioyning with the

a Watson Quodlibet.

Church and Pope of Rome. He hath alledged S. Bernard before, and he is answered before. Further, he bringeth Irenaus, saying: To this Church by reason of the more mightie principalitie, it is necessarie that euery Church, that is, the faithfull on all sides do agree, in which the tradition which is from the Apostles, hath been alwaies preserved of them that are about her. Which words he alledgeth, but drawes no direct conclusion from them, nor indeed can do, but by begging that which is in question betwixt vs. It was necessarie in the time of Irenaus, that euery Church should accord to the Church of Rome, because therein the tradition and true doctrine of the Apostles had been faithfully preserved: but will M. Bishop hereof simply conclude, that it is now also necessarie for euery Church to accord with the Church of Rome? It is a question now, whether she retain the doctrine and tradition of the Apostles: nay it is out of question that she doth not so, & therefore her former commendation, is no argument, that we should approue her now. Ierusalem was the citie which the Lord did chuse to place his name there. She was a faithfull citie, and so long necessarie it was, that all other cities should conforme themselves to her. But ^d of a faithfull citie she became a harlot, and departed so far from her former steps, as that she crucified the Sonne of God, and killed his Saints, and in the end it was said of her by a voyce from God, as Iosephus recordeth, Migremus hinc: Let vs depart from hence. So the Church of Rome was a Virgin, the chaste & faithful spouse of Christ, continuing stedfastly in the doctrine by which she first became the Church of Rome, & so long as she so continued, it was necessarie for all Churches to accord with her, as for her to accord with all other Churches that had done the like. But she is since become an vnclane filth, prostituted to all maner of fornications; embred & drunken with the bloud that she hath spilt, so that now the voyce of God calleth to vs in like sort concerning her, Go out of her my people. Neither hath M. Bishop any better helpe by that that he will further alledge, that Irenaus mentioneth a potent principalitie of that Church. For that potent principalitie was not intended by Irenaus for any supremacie of the Church of Rome, but imported onely an honour yeilded vnto it in respect of the imperiall state of the Citie of Rome; which we know men of inferior townes are wont to yeeld to them that are of high & honorable cities, only for the preheminece of the place.

b Fren: lib. 3. ca. 7. Ad hanc Ecclesiam propter potentiores principalitates: in necessitate est omnem conuenire Ecclesiam hoc est, eos qui sunt in his fidelis: in qua semper ab his qui sunt undique conserua. a est ea que est ab Apostolis tradis. 10.

c 2. Chron. 6. 6.

d Esa. 1. 21.

e Ioseph. de bello Iudaico. li. 7. c. 12

But if the Church of Rome had had any such potent principality as M. Bishop intendeth in respect whereof all other Churches should yeeld subiection and obedience vnto her, then would not Polycarpus the Bishop of Smyrna haue refused to yeeld to Anicetus the Bishop of Rome in matters of differēce betwixt them, as Irenaeus sheweth he did before his time: neither would Polycrates the Bishop of Ephesus and Metropolitan of the Asian Churches haue resisted Victor in the time of Irenaeus; neither would Cyprian haue contradicted Stephanus, neither would Aurelius and Austin and the rest of the Fathers in the Councell of Carthage, haue withstood the claime of the Bishop of Rome for authority to receiue appeales made from them to him: neither would those sixe hundred and thirty Bishops in the Chalcedon Councell, haue yeelded to the Patriarch of Constantinople, according to a former decree of a Councell of Constantinople, an equality of priuiledge and prerogatiue with the Bishop of Rome. The matter is very plaine. The Fathers, say they, haue yeelded priuiledges to the sea of old Rome, because that was the Imperiall City. And the hundred and sify Bishops (of the Councell of Constantinople) being moued with the same consideration haue yeelded equall priuiledges to the sacred sea of new Rome, (that is, Constantinople) rightly iudgeing, that the City which is honoured with the Empire and Senate, and enioieth equall priuiledges with olde Rome, should also in Ecclesiasticall matters be no lesse extolled and magnified then it is, being the next vnto it. Thus they acknowledge the Principallitie of the Church of Rome to be nothing else, but in respect that that City was the seat of the Empire, and therefore Constantinople, being become the seat of the Empire, and in respect thereof being called new Rome, they gaue to the Church of Constantinople equall dignity and principality with the Church of Rome, leauing to the Bishop of Rome onely precedence of name and place. The Legates of the Bishop of Rome would faine haue had it otherwise, but the whole Councell approved the decree. Now by that that hath beene said to Irenaeus, the answer is plaine to that that M. Bishop further crieth out of Hierome. The true faith and doctrine of the Godhead of Christ, was then maintained by the Church of Rome against the remainder of the infection and poyson of the Arian heretic. Heereupon Hierome writeth to Damasus Bishop of Rome, to be aduertised of the vse of some words that

f Thren. apud Euseb. hist. eccles.
 lib. 5. cap. 23.
 g Ibid. cap. 22.
 h Hieron. in Catal. Script.
Ecl. in Polycrate.
 h Cyprian. Pom.
petuum contra Epist. Stephani. i Concil. Carth. 6.
 & Athanas. cap.
 101. & c.
 k Conc. Constantinop. 1 cap. 2
 l Concil. Chalcedon. Act. 15. cap. 28.
 m Antiquae
Rome throno
 quod urbs illa
 imperaret. iure Patres privilegia tribuere. Et eade consideratione moti 150. Dei
 amantiissimi Episcopi sanctissimi
 mo vnto Rome
 throno equalia
 priuilegia tribuere, recte iudicauerunt quod urbem quam imperio & Senatus honorata sit, & equalibus cum antiquissima Romae priuilegijs
 fruatur, eius vnto
 rebus ecclesiasticis
 non secus ac illam
 extolli & magnificari, secus iam existantem.

m Hieron ad Damasum. Apud vos solos incorrupta Patrum seruat hereditas.

n Erasmus schol. iud.

o Hieron Epist. ad Euzr. Quid mihi proferi vultis? vobis urbis consuetudinem? quid paucitatem de qua ortum est supercilium in leges Ecclesie vindicias?
p Ibid. Si auctoritas queritur, orbis maior est vobis? vobis que fuerit Episcopus, siue Romae, siue Eugubij, siue Constantinopoli, siue Rhegijs, siue Alexandriae, siue Tani, eiusdem meriti est, eiusdem sacerdotij. Potentia diuitiarum, & pauperatis humilitas sublimem vel inferiorem Episcopum non facit, ceterum omnes Apostolorum successores sunt.

concerned that point. He commendeth the Church of Rome, ^m for that the inheritance of the Fathers (that is, the true faith) was preserved uncorrupt with them onely. For this cause doth he bind himselfe to the communion and fellowship of Damasus. Vpon the rocke of that faith which the church of Rome still held, he knew the Church to be built. In respect of this faith, he that went out of that house, that is, left the communion of that Church, because thereby he renounced the truth, he became prophane. In the same respect, he that gathered not with Damasus, being a maintainer of the true faith, he must needs be a scatterer. He could not be of Christ that refused them that tooke part with Christ, and therefore must bee of Antichrist. In this respect he renounced Vualis, Milesius, and Paulinus, because ⁿ they were all either knowne or suspected to be partakers of the heresie of Arius, and therefore very deceitfully doth M. Bishop alleadge, that hee would not set up his rest with his owne Bishop Paulinus, who was no meane man, but the Patriarch of Antioch: as heereby to adde a superiority to the Bishop of Rome; when as there was otherwise so apparant cause, why he should refuse so to doe. In all this therefore Hierome saith no more of the Bishop and Church of Rome, then he might haue said of any other Bishop and Church, professing true faith and Doctrine, as the Church of Rome then did: but very farre was he from teaching or intending any perpetuall necessity, that all Churches for euer should conforme themselues to the Church of Rome. And that hee neuer had any such meaning, let it appeare by himselfe, when being vrged with the example of the Church of Rome, hee answereth: ° What dost thou bring to me the custome of one City? why dost thou maintaine a paucity (or fewnesse) whence hath growne proud vsurping vpon the lawes of the Church? He had said a litle before, ^p If we demand auctority, the world is greater then the city. Where soeuer a Bishop be, whether of Rome, or of Eugubium; whether at Constantinople, or at Rhegium; whether at Alexandria, or at Tanes, he is of the same worth, and of the same office of Bishopricke. Power of wealth, or basenesse of pouerty, maketh a Bishop neither higher nor lower, but they are all successors of the Apostles. Thus he spake purposely in derogation of the Church of Rome, charging the same with proud domineering ouer the lawes of the Church: affirming the authority of the Churches through the world, to be greater then the authority of the Church of Rome: attriattributing to euery Bishop of whatsoeuer place, equalitie in office with the Bishop of Rome, because all are alike successors of the Apostles. Yea and to shew that the Church of Rome receiued no more by Peter, then other Churches did by the rest of the Apostles, he saith in another place: that the Church is built upon all the Apostles, and they all receiue the keyes of the kingdome of heauen; and the strength of the Church is equally grounded upon them. Whereby it plainly appeareth, that Hierome neuer meant to make the Church of Rome any such perpetuall Mistris and ruler of other Churches, as M. Bishop dreameth her to be. Yea but S. Ambrose further saith: I desire in all things to follow the Church of Rome. But why did M. Bishop giue ouer there, & not adde also that that followeth: I desire (saith he) in all things to follow the Church of Rome: but yet we are also men that haue vnderstanding: and therefore what is more rightly obserued elsewhere, we also iustly obserue the same. S. Ambrose being Bishop of Millaine not farre from Rome sheweth, that he yeilded a reuerend respect vnto the Church of Rome, but yet professeth, that things might be better in other places then they were at Rome, and that his Church of Millaine had vnderstanding to iudge what was fit aswell as the church of Rome, and therefore that they held not themselues tyed by any necessarie dutie to the example thereof, but would do what they thought more rightly performed in any other Church. Now then what shall we thinke of M. Bishop, who thus shamefully seeketh to blind his reader, by alledging one part of a sentence for his purpose, when the other part thereof expressly crosseth that for which he alledgeth it? And thus much concerning M. Bishops answer to M. Perkins Prologue. For the rest I will (God willing) follow him in like sort steppe by steppe, according to his owne words, in more honest and faithfull manner then he hath dealt with M. Perkins, and that in such sort I hope as that the meaner learned shall vnderstand that the learning which he would teach them is naught, and the more iudicious shall be able to iudge, that it is a very bad cause, to which the marrow and pith of many large volumes can yeeld no better defence then he hath brought.

q 7 Idem adu.
um. lib. 1. et au-
cus. super Petri
funditur Ecclesia: licet idysur-
in alio loco super omnes Apostole
fiat, & cunctis
claves regni cae-
lorum accipiunt, & ex equo super eos Ecclesie for-titududo solidatur.
r Ambros. de Sa-
cram. l. 3. cap. 1.
In omnibus cu-
pi sequi Roma-
nam Ecclesiam,
sed tamen & no-
homines sensum
habent: ideo
quod alii re-
ctius seruiatur, & nos recte cu-
sodimus.

CHAPTER. I.
OF FREE WILL.

I. W. BISSHOP,

THat I be not thought captious, but willing to admit any thing that M. Perkins hath sayd agreeable to the truth, I will let his whole text in places indifferent, passe, paring off onely superfluons words, with adding some annotations where it shall be needfull, and rest onely upon the points in controuersie. First then concerning Free will, wherewith he beginneth, thus he saith: Free will both by them and vs, is taken for a mixt power in the minde and will of man, whereby discerning what is good, and what is euill, he doth accordingly chuse or refuse the same.

Annot. If we would speake formally, it is not a mixt power in the mind and will, but is a free facultie of the mind and will onely, whereby we chuse or refuse, supposing in the understanding, a knowledge of the same before. But let this definition passe as more popular.

M. Perkins. I. Conclusion. Man must be considered in a foure-fold estate, as he was created, as he was corrupted, as he is renued, as he shall be glorified. In the first state we ascribe vnto mans will libertie of nature, in which he could will or nill either good or euill; note that this libertie proceeded not from his owne nature, but of originall Iustice, in which he was created. In the third libertie of grace, in the last libertie of glorie.

Annot. Cary this in mind, that here he granteth man in the state of grace to haue Free will.

R. ABBOT.

MAister Bishop here dealeth as iuglers are wont to do, who make shew of faire play, when they vse nothing but legerdemaine. He will not be thought captious, and yet for two whole pages here in the beginning, is nothing but captious. His letting the text of M. Perkins his booke to passe whole in places indifferent, is nothing nothing but a dismembred and mangling of the text. His paring off onely of superfluous words, is the paring off of such arguments and authorities as he knew not how to answer. His adding of annotations, the sophisticating of his reader with idle and friuolous corrections. His resting onely upon points of controuersie, the wrestling of those things to controuersie wherof there is no controuersie at all.

M. Perkins defineth Free will to be a mixt power of the minde and will of man, whereby esteeming what is good and what is euill, he doth accordingly chuse or refuse the same. A little to please himselfe hee giueth a snach at this definition of Free will, as not formall enough, onely to shew himselfe more formall then wise, the definition being more fitly exprest then that which he hath put in place of it, and he honestly is content, because it is more popular, to let it passe.

Whereas M. Perkins in his first conclusion, affirmeth in the first estate of man as he was created, a libertie of nature, M. Bishop giueth thereof this learned note: that this libertie proceeded not from mans owne nature, but from originall iustice wherein he was created, as if he should say, that the shining of the Sunne proceedeth not from the nature of the Sunne, but from the light of it; whereas the light is a part of the nature of the Sunne, as was original iustice a part of the nature of man, being the ^a image and likenesse of God, in which and according to which he was created. And to say that Free will did proceed from originall iustice, is wholly against himselfe, because it must thereof follow, that in the fall of originall iustice, must needs be implied the losse of Free will, which cannot stand without that from which it doth proceed, so that man in his fall must necessarily be sayd to haue lost his Free will. But he should rather haue sayd, that God gaue vnto man Free will, as the steward and disposer of original iustice and righteousnesse, and as ^b the ballance to turne either to or fro, the benefit that God had put into the hands and power of man.

^a Ephel. 4. 24.

^b Tertul. adu. Marcion. lib. 2. Libertas est potestas arbitrij quasi liberpens emancipatis à Deo bonis.

In the third estate of man, as he is renewed, M. Perkins affirmeth libertie of grace. Carry this in minde, saith M. Bishop, that here he granteth man in the state of grace to haue Free will. Asthough either he, or any of vs had made question thereof, who all acknowledge by the Gospell that it is the worke of Christ ^c to make vs free, ^d free from sinne, ^e free from the bondage of corruption, that in holinesse wee may bee seruants vnto God. Nay that the reader may the more

^c Iohn 8. 36.
^d Rom. 6. 18.
^e Cap. 8. 21.

f. August. de ciuit. dei. lib. 5. cap. 10. Necessè est esse ut cum volumus libero uelimus arbitrio.

g. Bernard de grat. & lib. arb. Ange'i sancti ita sunt boni ut non possint esse & mali.

h. Ibid. prout iudicatos ange'i ita sunt mali ut iam non valeant esse boni.

i. August. cont. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 2. Liberum arbitrium usque adeo in peccatore non perijt ut per illud peccent, maxime omnes qui cum delectatione peccant, & lib. 3. ca. 8. Non nisi ad peccatum ualeat.

k. Idem de peccat. mer. & rem. lib. 2. cap. 6. Ipsum liberum arbitrium ad dei gratiam hoc est ad Dei dona pertinere non ambigens, &c.

l. Cont. 2. epist. Pelag. l. 1. cap. 8. At uesti iam nisi diuinius liberatum adhiuerit non ualeat.

m. Ibid. lib. 4. ca. 8. Quid mihi obtundis liberum arbitrium, quod ad faciendam iustitiam liberum non erit, nisi ouis fuerit? Qui facit igitur oues homines ipse ad obedientiam pietatis humanas liberat uoluntates.

n. Epist. 107. Lib. 1. cap. 10. Gratia nostrum ad declinandum a malo & faciendum bonum liberat uoluntatem.

o. Ibid. si uerè uolumus defendere liberum arbitrium non oppugnemus unde sit liberum. p. Cont. . ep. Pelag. l. 4. cap. 9. Numquid liberum arbitrium negat hominibus quia Deo totum tribuit quod rectè uiuimus?

q. Ibid. si uerè uolumus defendere liberum arbitrium non oppugnemus unde sit liberum. r. Cont. . ep. Pelag. l. 4. cap. 9. Numquid liberum arbitrium negat hominibus quia Deo totum tribuit quod rectè uiuimus?

s. Ibid. si uerè uolumus defendere liberum arbitrium non oppugnemus unde sit liberum. t. Cont. . ep. Pelag. l. 4. cap. 9. Numquid liberum arbitrium negat hominibus quia Deo totum tribuit quod rectè uiuimus?

u. Ibid. si uerè uolumus defendere liberum arbitrium non oppugnemus unde sit liberum. v. Cont. . ep. Pelag. l. 4. cap. 9. Numquid liberum arbitrium negat hominibus quia Deo totum tribuit quod rectè uiuimus?

w. Ibid. si uerè uolumus defendere liberum arbitrium non oppugnemus unde sit liberum. x. Cont. . ep. Pelag. l. 4. cap. 9. Numquid liberum arbitrium negat hominibus quia Deo totum tribuit quod rectè uiuimus?

deerely conceiue the truth of this whole matter, we deny not Free will in any estate of man. For it is true which S. Austin saith, ^f that whatsoeuer we will, we will the same by Free will, because the will is not subiect to compulsion, but willet h alwaies freely, and of it owne accord, or else loofeth the nature and name of will. Which freedom of will, by original institution stood indifferent either to good or euill; yet was not to continue so, but vpon election once made to be free onely in that whereto of it selfe it should betake it selfe: free onely in euill, if it should apply it selfe to euill: free only in good, if it should make choyce to continue therein. Therefore the Angels which kept their original habitation and estate, haue their Free will by Gods election and grace stablished in goodnes, so that it is not inclineable to any thing that is euill. But the Angels which sinned and abode not in the truth, haue their Free will by it selfe, and of it selfe ^h obdured and hardened in that that is euill, so that it is not at all appliable to any thing that is good. Man therefore by sinne hath not lost Free will, for by ⁱ Free will it is that now he sinnet h, yea and can nothing but sinne. But this Free will that is thus free in sinne, hath no freedom at all, as S. Austin in sundry places expresseth, to righteousnesse, and to the seruice of God, vntill it be rectified and made free by Iesus Christ; no freedom or power at all, but what is newly and meerely ^k the grace and gift of God. Therefore hauing affirmed the freedom of the will to sinne, hee addeth that ^l to righteousnesse, but as it is made free and helped of God, it auaieth nothing. ^m What tellest thou me of Free will, saith hee, which is the doing of righteousnesse shall not be free, except thou become a sheepe of Gods? he then who of men maketh his sheepe, euen he maketh the wills of men Free to the obedience of godlinesse. ⁿ We lost free will to loue God by the greatnesse of the first sinne, saith hee, but by grace our will is made free to decline from euill and doe good. So then we doe not deny Free will to be righteousnesse, but yet we haue regard to that caution which S. Austin giueth against Pelagians and Papists, ^o if wee will defend Free will aright, not to oppugne that whence it is made free. What ^p doth a man denie Free will, saith hee, because he attributeth it wholy to God that we liue well : ^a without freedome of will we cannot liue well ; for how should a man do well without his will ?) but yet this Free will to liue well is ^r a will not free (meereley & of it selfe) but made free by the grace of God. For then is ^r the will of man free indeed, when it is free from sinne : and such a free will God gaue to man in the beginning, but he lost it by his owne default, and being lost it cannot be restored, but by him that was able first to giue it. In Christ therefore it is restored vnto vs, who by his ^r free spirit giueth ^u libertie to the captiues, and openeth the prison to them that are bound, and ^x deliuereth vs from the power of darknesse, and maketh vs ^v free men vnto him. But yet so, as that hauing received but ^a the first fruits of the spirit, by whom this freedome is wrought, according to the words of the Apostle, ^b Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is libertie, the same is yet but begun in vs, so that ^c there is partly freedome, and partly bondage, not yet, whole and pure and perfect freedome. For no further is the will freed then it is renewed ; and it is renewed as yet but in part, continuing still ^d in part in the olde state . Therefore it is so made free, as that in some part we haue cause still to complain with the Apostle, ^e I am carnall, sold vnder sinne, and to pray with the Prophet Dauid : ^f Bring my soule out of prison, that I may giue thanks vnto thy name . Hence is that heauinesse and dulnesse, that waywardnesse and vntowardnesse, that retention and holding backe, that still we find in vs in the applying of our selues to spirituall and heauenly things . And as touching that wherein we are renewed and made free, it is not sufficient to vphold vs and keepe vs in the right way, but we haue still neede of the grace of God, to be assistant and helpfull vnto vs. ^g It is not enough that God hath once giuen, sayth Hierome, except he still giue : I pray to receiue, and when I haue receiued, I pray againe. Therefore the ancient church required of Pelagius to confesse, that ^h the grace of God is giuen vs to euerie act that we do. ⁱ He preuenteth vs to make vs willing, & followeth vs when we are willing, that we do not wil in vaine. And if his hand do not hold vs and vphold vs, it commeth to passe by the burden of corruptible flesh, that we are still relapsing to our

q Reuol. lib. 1. cap. 9. Tu est, ut sine illo rectè uiuere nequeamus.
r Conf. 2. epist. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 7. Homini non libera sed Dei gratia liberatus voluntas.
s De ciuit. Dei. lib. 4. cap. 11. Ab initio uoluntati uincit esse uere liberum, cum utriusque peccatisque non seruit. Tale datum est a Deo quod miserum proprio uincio, nisi a quo datus potius reddi non potest.
t Psal. 51. 12. u Eia. 61. 1. x Col. 1. 13. y 1. Cor. 7. 22. a Rom. 8. 23. b 2. Cor. 1. 17. c August. in Joann. tract. 41. Ex parte libertatis, ex parte seruus; nondum tota, nondum pura, nondum plena libertas. d De peccat. mer. & rem. lib. 2. cap. 7. Animus quis est homo in erior nondum totus est renouatus, & in quantum nondum est renouatus, in tantum adhuc in uetustate est.
e Rom. 7. 14. f Psal. 14 2. 7. g Hieron. ad Crespianum. Non sufficit mihi quod semel donauit, nisi semper donauerit: Peto ut accipiam, & cum accepero rursus peto. h August. epist. 106. Faciat uir gratiam Dei & adiutorium etiam ad singulos actus datus. i Enchirid. cap. 32. Nolo enim preueniri ut uel; uolentem subsequatur ne frustra uelit.

Exod. 14. 11.

22.

1 Bernard. in

Cant. ser. 8. 1. Non est aliud anima nostra quam spiritus uadens & in rediens, si sibi fuerit derelicta.

selues, and still readie with the ^kIsraclits to yeeld our selues to become bond againe. ^l Our soule, saith Bernard, is no other but as a wind that passeth and returneth not againe, if it be left vnto it selfe. Now M. Bishop do you carry this in mind, thus expressed by the phrases and speeches of the ancient Church, and leaue to caluminate our doctrine, who affirme Free will as farre as they affirmed it, and deny it no otherwise but as they denied it against the Pelagian heretikes. But you will hardly leaue your wont, because you see well enough, that if you take our doctrine as we deliuer it, you can deuise nothing plausibly or colourably to speake against it.

2. W. BISHOP.

M. Per. 2. Conclusion. The matters whereabout Free will is occupied, are principally the actions of men, which be of three sorts, Naturall, Humane, Spirituall. Naturall actions are such, as are common to men and beasts, as to eate, sleepe, &c. In all which we ioyne with the Papists, and hold that man hath free will euen since the fall of Adam.

M. Per. 3. Conclusion. Humane actions are such, as are common to all men, good and bad, as to speake, to practise any kind of art, to performe any kind of ciuill dutie, to preach, to administer Sacraments, &c. And hiher we may referre the outward actions of ciuill vertues, as namely lustice, Temperance, Gentlenesse, and Liberalitie, and in these also we ioyne with the Church of Rome, and say (as experience teacheth) that men haue a naturall freedome of will, to put them, or not to put them in execution. S. Paul saith, The Gentiles that haue not the law, do the things of the law by nature, that is, by naturall strength: And he saith of him selfe, that before his conuersion touching the righteousness of the law, he was unblameable. And for this externall obedience, naturall men receiue reward in temporall things. And yet here some caueats must be remembred.

First, that in humane actions (he should say morall) mans will is weake, and his vnderstanding dimme, therupon he often failes in them. This caueat is no caueat of the Protestants, but taken out of S. Thomas of Aquines. And in all such actions with S. Augustine, (you might haue quoted the place) I vnderstand the will of man, to be onely wounded

Rom. 3. 14.

Phil. 3. 6.

Mat. 6. 5.

Ezech. 29. 19.

Summe.

1. 2. q. 109. art.

4. & 8.

ded or halfe dead.

2. That the will of man, is under the will of God, and therefore to be ordered by it: Who knowes not this?

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop giueth vs some more of his learned notes, and telleth vs, that M. Perkins for humane should haue said morall, whereas the name of morall actions doth not so properly comprehend all those which he meant to import by humane actions. Astouching the first caueat giuen to the third conclusion, that in humane actions mans will is weake, and his understanding dimme, &c. he noteth that this caueat is no caueat of the Protestants, but taken out of S. Thomas of Aquinas. He was desirous it seemeth to haue it thought, that he had looked into Thomas Aquinas, but he was willing withal to shew that he did not well vnderstand what he read there: for he that looketh into ^a the places which he quoteth, shall easily see, that there was little cause for him to say, that that is a caueat taken out of Thomas Aquinas, there being nothing directly tending to the matter of the caueat expressed by M. Perkins. But the Protestants might wel learn that caueat out of their owne experience, and if we had not obserued it of our selues, we could haue learned it of Philosophers, and Poets, and Historians, to say nothing of ecclesiasticall Writers, so that we neede not to seeke to Thomas Aquinas to borrow it from him. But what is that to the purpose, seeing we professe our selues well content legere Margaritas ex cæno, to gather Pearles euen out the dirt, and from M. Bishop himselfe to take knowledge of any thing worthy our learning, if any thing worthy our learning had bin writtē by him. M. Perkins saith, that in humane or morall actions, with Austine he vnderstandeth the will of man only wounded or halfe dead. M. Bishop saith, he should haue quoted the place: the place to which M. Perkins alludeth, I take it to be Hypognost. lib. 3. where Austine saith that man was wounded and halfe dead, ^b because his Free will had still vitall motion, but he was wounded in the ornaments of morall actions, and lost the benefite of the possibilitie of Free will, to returne vnto euertlasting life. To the other caueat, that the will of man is vnder the will of God, and therefore to be ordered by it, M. Bishop saith, Who knowes not this? As if men in deliuering precepts and rules of any kind of learning,

^a Thomas Aquinas.
12. q. 109. art. 4.
Et 8.

^b August. Hypognost. lib. 3.
Reclē dicitur est
feminitatis: habebat enim vitalem motum, id est liberum arbitrium subiectionem (moribus scilicet ornamentis) & longa possibiliter liberum arbitrium perditum ad vitam eternam quam perdidit. et non sufficit.

learning, did not set downe euen triuiall and common things, because howsoeuer they be common, yet they be necessarie to make a perfect worke, and alwaies necessarie for learneis, when the whole workes are needlesse to them that are already learned. And why might not M. Perkins bring in this caueat in a writing against the Papists, as well as Hierome did against the Pelagians: That we may know, saith he, that all things depend, not upon us, but upon the discretion and will of God, the Apostle saith, I will come vnto you speedily, if the Lord will. When he saith, I will come vnto you, he sheweth his goodwill, he declareth his desire, he promiseth his comming. But yet to speake with a caueat, he saith, if the Lord will. For if any man thinke hee knoweth any thing, he knoweth not yet as he ought to know. Yea and S. Austine also thought this point worth the noting against the same Pelagians, that ^d the wils of men not onely for spirituall and eternall life, but as they concerne the preseruing of the creature of the world, are in the power of God, so as that he causeth them to incline whither hee will, and when he will, either for benefite to some, or for punishment to other some. And hee thought it not vsfite to exemplifie this matter out of the ^e bookes of Iosuah, of the the Kings and Chronicles, how God ordereth the wils of men, for the constituting of earthly kingdomes, and maketh profitable vse and application thereof, that it should be absurd ^f to think that God frameth the wils of men for the setting of earthly kingdomes, and that men frame their owne wils for the obtaining of the kingdom of heauen. And will M. Bishop now turne off Austine and Hierome, as he doth M. Perkins, with Who knowes not this? But his notes yet are but to whet his wit: when hee is well awaked out of his sleepe, haply we shall haue some wiser stufte.

W. BISHOP.

M. P. 4. Conclusion. The third kind of actions are spirituall more neerly, and these bee twofold: good, or bad. In sinnes we ioyne with the Papist, and teach that in sinnes man hath freedome of will. Some perhaps will say, that we sinne necessarilie, because he that sinneth, cannot but sin, and that Free will and necessitie, cannot stand together. Indeed the necessitie of compulsion and Free will, cannot stand together, but there is another kind of necessity (or rather infallibilitie) which may stand with Free will: for some things may be done necessarilie, and also freely.

Annot.

^e Hieron. adu. Pelag. lib. 2. vt scimus non ex nobis, sed ex Dei cuncta pendere iudicio, veniam, inquit, &c. Qui enim dicit, veniam ad vos, ostendit se velle, non sicut cupere, promittit aduen. sed vt cau. vus hic loquatur, insert. si Dominus voluerit. Si quis enim putat se quid nosse, necdum nouit sicut nosse oportet.

^d August. de grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 20. Scriptura ostendit nos solum bonas hominum voluntates, &c. verum etiam quae conferuntur tibi creaturam ita esse in Dei potestate, ut eam quod voluerit, quando voluerit, faciat inclinari, &c.

^e Ibid. cap. 20. 21. ^f D. Pred. st. sanct. cap. 20. Cogitate quale sit, ut credamus ad constituentia regna terrena hominum voluntates operari Deum, & ad capessendum regnum caelorum homines operari voluntates suas.

Annot. The example of a close prisoner is not to the purpose, for it puts necessity in one thing, and liberty in another. The solution is, that necessarily must be taken for certainly, not that a man is at any time compelled to sinne, but his weaknesse and the craft of the diuell are such, that he is very often overreached by the diuell, and induced to sinne, but with free consent of his owne will.

R. ABBOT.

The comparison of a prison vsed by M. Perkins, is most pregnant and fit. A man walketh vp and downe in close prison, and freely moueth and stirreth himselfe; yet he hath no power to get out of prison, but for ought he can doe for himselfe is necessarily there. Euen so, man is free in sinne, and freely willeth whatsoeuer hee willeth thereto: but sinne is his prison, and hee cannot free himselfe therefrom; nay because the will it selfe is imprisoned, hee hath no will to be free, and therefore of necessity remaineth still a prisoner to sinne, till God doe change his will to make him free. But M. Bishop disliketh the comparison, because it puts necessity in one thing, and liberty in another, whereas to that purpose it was vsed, and to that purpose most fitly is applied, and therein nothing contained, but what is agreeable to the truth. For whereas he taketh vpon him to correct that terme of necessity, and will haue it to be called infallibility and certainty, he malepertly taketh vpon him to teach them that are more learned then himselfe. It is a word which S. Austen often vseth vpon thelike occasion, both against the Pelagians and Manichees. ^b Man sinned by his will, saith he, and thereupon followed a cruel necessity of hauing sinne. ^c A cruell necessity (of sinne) grew vpon our nature by the desert of the first sinne. ^d Not by creation, but by corruption of nature, there is a certaine necessity of committung sinne. ^e After that Adam sinned by free will, we were throwne headlong into a necessity (of sinne) all that haue descended of his race. And that this necessity doth well stand with liberty, S. Bernard sheweth, in calling it ^f a voluntary and mis-free necessity, wherein neither can necessity excuse the will, because it is voluntary, nor the will exclude necessity, because it is entangled with delight therein; wherein will taketh from him all matter of defence, and necessity bereaueth him of possibilitie of amendment, and in a word, the will it selfe in strange wise causeth this necessity.

b August. de perfect. iul. l. i.
Rat. 9 Quia peccauit voluntas secuta est peccantem peccatum habenti dura necessitas.

c Retract. lib. 1. cap. 1. Nature nostre dura necessitas merito procedentis iniquitatis exorta est.

d De nat. & gra. cap. 66. Ex vitijs nature non ex conditione nature est quedam peccandi necessitas.

e Con. Fortunat. disput. 2. Post quod libera ipsa voluntate peccauit, nos in necessitatem precipitari sumus s Bernard in Cantic. Ser. 81. Ipsa sibi voluntas necessitate facit, ut nec necessitas cum voluntate sit excludere valeat voluntatem, nec voluntas cum sit illicita excludere necessitatem. Fr post:

Anima sub voluntaria quadam & male libera necessitate tenetur. Et iterum post. Voluntas inexcusable & incorrigibilem necessitas facit.

necessity to it selfe. Now then because the state of sinne is such, as that there is one way necessity by the habit of corruption, and another way liberty by the free motion of the will, very rightly did M. Perkins to expresse the same, vse the example of a prison, that puts necessity in one thing, and liberty in another. And thus in righteousnesse also necessity and liberty agree, and doe not one exclude the other. For the Angels being by the grace and power of God confirmed in goodnesse, are thereby necessarily good, ^{so} and in such sort good, as that they cannot become euill, and yet they are freely and voluntarily good, because it is the will it selfe that is established in goodnesse. The same shall bee the state of eternall life to the elect and faithfull, ^h Bene viuendi & nunquam peccandi, voluntaria foelixq; necessitas: A voluntarie and happy necessitie of liuing well & neuer sinning anymore. Let M. Bishop take knowledge now of this manner of speech, and learne not to find fault when hee hath no cause. But he noteth, that wee must not vnderstand, that a man is at any time compelled to sinne: where I may answer him with his owne words before, Who knowes not this? And againe, that this is none of M. Bishops cauea; but taken out of M. Perkins. M. Perkins had told him so much before hand, & therefore what needed this note? For this necessitie groweth not of any outward force, but from inward nature, not by condition of the substance, but by accidentall corruption, which being supposed, there is a necessitie of sinne, as in the palsey a necessitie of shaking, in the hot feauer a necessitie of burning, in the broken legge a necessitie of halting, so continuing till the maladie and distemper be cured and done away. And whereas M. Bishop referreth this necessitie of sinne to the weaknesse of man, and to the craft of the diuell, hee speaketh too short in the one, and impertinently in the other. For wee are not to conceiue weaknesse onely, which may bee onelie a priuation, but a positive euill habite and contagion of sinne, whereby a man sinneth euen without any furtherance of the diuels temptations, by the onely euill disposition of himselfe. Which euill disposition, because it is also in the will it selfe, therefore in the midst of that necessitie, a man sinneth no otherwise, but as M. Bishop requireth to haue it said, with free consent of his owne will.

g Idem. de grat.
& lib arbit. sup.

h August. de perfect. iustitie

W. BISHOP.

M.P. 5. Conclusion. The second kind of spirituall actions be good, as Repentance, Faith, Obedience, &c. In which we likewise in part ioyne with the Church of Rome, and say that in the first conuersion of a sinner, mans Free will concurrith with Gods grace, as a fellow or co-worker in some sort: for in the conuersion of a sinner, three things are required: the word, Gods spirit, and mans will: for Mans will is not passive in all and euery respect, but hath an action in the first conuersion and change of the soule: when any man is conuerted, this worke of God is not done by compulsion, but he is conuerted willingly, and at the very time when he is conuerted by Gods grace, he willeth his conuersion. To this end saith S. Augustine, he which made thee without thee, will not saue thee without thee. Again, that it is certaine that our will is required in this, that we may do any thing well, (it is not onely then required in our first conuersion, if it be required to all good things which we do,) but we haue it not from our owne power, but God workes to will in vs. For looke at what time God giues grace, at the same time he giues a will to desire and will the same: as for example, when God workes faith, at the same time, he workes also upon the will, causing it to desire faith, and willingly to receiue the gift of beleeuing: God makes of the unwilling will a willing will, because no man can receiue grace viterly against his will, considering will constrained, is no will. But here we must remember, that howsoeuer in respect of time, the working of grace by Gods spirit, and the willing of it in man go together: yet in regard of order, grace is first wrought, and mans will must first of all be acted and moued by grace; and then it also acteth, willeth, and moueth it selfe. And this is the last point of consent betweene vs and the Romane Church, touching Frees will, neither may we proceed farther with them. Huberto M Perkins.

Ser. 15. de verb. Apot.

Now before I come to the supposed difference, I gather first, that he yeeldeth vnto the principall point in controuersie, that is, freedome of will, in ciuill and morrall workes in the state of corruption, and all good workes in the state of grace: for in his first conclusion distinguishing foure states of man, he affirmeth, that in the third, of man renewed or (as we speake) iustified, there is libertie of grace, that is, grace enableth mans will to do) if it please, such spirituall workes, as God requireth at his hands. Yet lest he be taken to yeeld in any thing, he doth in shew of words contradict both these points in another place: For in setting downe the difference of our opinions, he saith: that mans will in his conuersion is not actiue, but passiue, which is flat opposite vnto that which himselfe said a little before in his first conclusion; that in the conuersion of a sinner, mans will concurrerh not passiuely, but is co-worker with Gods grace.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop vnderstandeth not the principall point in controuersie, and therefore thinketh that M. Perkins yeeldeth to the principall point in controuersie, when he doth nothing lesse. It was neuer any point of controuersie, whether man in the state of corruption haue freedome of will in ciuill or morall workes: for none of vs euer hath denyed it. Neither was it euer any point of controuersie, whether man in the state of grace hath freedome of will to good workes: for there is not one of vs but alwaiës hath affirmed it, so that M. Bishop knoweth not indeede what he disputeth of. As for that libertie of grace, he expoundeth it also out of his owne blind fancie, and not out of our doctrine. For we do not meane thereby, that grace enableth mans will to do, if it please, such spiriuall workes as God requireth at his hands, but that grace worketh in the will of man to please to do such spiriuall workes as God requireth at his hands. For hee doth not hang his worke ypon the suspended if of our will, but worketh in vs to will, and ^b causeth vs to do the things that he com-

^a Phil. 2. 13.

^b Ezech. 36. 27.

August. de Prae-

desti. sancti. cap. 10

Ipse facit ut illi

faciant que pre-

cepit. Et cap. 11.

Promittit scilicet

rum se ut faciat,

que iubet ut fi-

ant.

^c August. quest.

uer. 1. q. 14.

Quis verba sup-

primit questioni

aut imperius est

aut tergiversa-

tor, qui calumnie

magis studeat,

quam doctrine.

mandeth vs to do. But M. Bishop here imagineth, that M. Perkins contradicteth in one leafe that which he yeeldeth in another. He saith one where, that mans will in his conuersion, is not actiue but passiue. But let M. Bishop learne of S. Austine, that ^c he that concealeth the words of the point in question is either an vnlearned Idiot, or a wrangling crauen, that studieth more to canill, then either to teach or learne.

The words of M. Perkins are these: The Papists say, Will hath a naturall cooperation; we deny it, and say, it hath cooperation onely by grace, being in it selfe not actiue but passiue, willing well onely as it is moued by grace, whereby it must first be acted and moued, before it can act or will. Where he very plainly affirmeth the cooperation of mans will in his conuersion, but saith truely, that it is of grace it selfe, that it doth cooperate with grace. He saith, that in it selfe it is not actiue but passiue, but though in it selfe it be onely passiue, yet he acknowledgeth that that it becommeth actiue also, by being acted or moued by grace. Now how is this contrary to that which hee saith in the fifth conclusion, that mans Free will concurreth with Gods grace, as a fellow or co-worker in some sort, and is not passiue in all and euery respect? In some sort, saith he, it is a co-worker with grace, and is not passiue in all and euery respect. How is that? Mans will must first of all be acted and moued by grace, and then it also acteth, willet, and moueth it selfe. How can M. Bishop deuise to haue a man speake more agreeably to himselfe? But he plaieeth the lewd coufener; and whereas the whole point of the controuersie lieth in these words, by it selfe, or in it selfe, he guilefully omitteth the same, and maketh M. Perkins absolutely to say, that mans will in his conuersion is not actiue, but passiue, when he saith, that in it selfe it is not actiue but passiue; declaring that by grace it is made actiue. So in the other place where it is said, that mans will is a co-worker in some sort, and is not passiue in all and euery respect, he leaueth out those termes of restraint, as if M. Perkins had made the will simply and of it selfe a co-worker with grace, and not passiue in any respect. The contradiction therefore was not in M. Perkins his words, but in M. Bishops head, or rather in his malicious and wicked heart, which blind-foldeth him to make him seeme not to see that which he seeth well enough.

5. W. BISHOP.

The like contradiction may be obserued in the other part of libertie in moral actions: for in his third conclusion he deliuereth plainly, man to haue a naturall freedome, euen since the fall of Adam, to doe, or not to doe the acts of wisdom, Iustice, Temperance &c. and proues out of S. Paul, that the Gentiles so did: yet in his first reason, he affirmeth as per- Pag. 19.
 remptorily out of the eighth of Genesis, that the whole frame of mans heart is corrupted, & all that he thinketh, deuise:h, or imagineth, is wholly euill, leauing him nonaturall strength to performe any part of morall duty. See how uncertaine the steps be of men that walke in darknes, or that would seeme to communicate with the works of darknesse. For if I mistake him not, he agreeth fully in this matter of Free will, with the Doctrine of the Catholike Church: for he putting down the point of difference, saith, that it standeth in the cause of the freedome of mans will in spirituall matters; allowing then freedome of will with vs in the state of grace, whereof he there treateth: for he seemeth to dissent from vs onely in the cause of that freedom. And as he differeth from Luther and Caluin, with other sectaries, in granting this libertie of will: so in the very cause also he accordeth with Catholikes, as appeareth by his owne words. For (saith he) Papiests say, mans will concurrerth with Gods grace by it selfe, and by it owne naturall power: we say, that mans will worketh with grace; yet not of it selfe, but by grace: either he vnderstandeth not what Catholikes say, or else accuseth them wrongfully: for we say, that mans will then onely concurrerth with Gods grace, when it is stirred and holpen first by Gods grace. So that mans will by his owne naturall action, doth concurre in euery good worke, otherwise it were no action of man: but we farther say, that this action proceedeth principally of grace, whereby the will was made able to produce such actions: for of it selfe it was vterly unable to bring forth such spirituall fruit. And this I take to be that, which M. Perkins doth meane by those his words: that the will must be first moued and acted by grace, before it can act or will. He mistooke vs, thinking that wee required some outward helpe onely to the will, to soynewith it; or rather, that grace did but as it were untie the chaines of sinne wherein our will was fettered: and then Will could of it selfe turne to God. Not understanding how Catholikes take that Parable of the man wounded in the way, between Ierusalem and Iericho, who was (not as the Papiests onely say, but as the holy Ghost saith) left halfe, and not starke dead. Now the exposition of Catholikes is not, that this wounded man, (which signifieth all mankind) had halfe his spirituall strength left him; but was robbed of all supernaturall riches, spoyled of his originall iustice, and wounded in his naturall powers of both Vnderstanding and Will, and therein left halfe dead, not beeing able of his own strength, either to know all naturall truth, or to performe all morall duty. Now touching supernaturall workes, because he lost all power to performe them, not beeing able so much as to prepare himselfe conueniently to them: he in a good sence may be likened vnto a dead man, not able to moue one finger that way of grace: and so in holy Scripture the father said of his prodigall Son, He was dead and is reuiued. Yet as the same sonne liued a naturall life, albeit in a deadly sinne: so mans will after the fall of Adam, continued somewhat free in actions conformable to the nature of man, though wounded also in them, as not being able to act many of them, yet hauing still that naturall facultie of Free will, capable of grace, and also able, beeing first both outwardly moued, and fortified inwardly

Luc. 10.

Luc. 15.

wardly by the vertue of grace, to effect and doe any worke apertaining to saluation: which is as much as M. Perkins affirmeth. And this to bee the very doctrine of the Church of Rome, is most manifestly to be seene in the Councell of Trent, where in the Session are first these words in effect, concerning the unablennesse of man to arise from sinne of himselfe. Every man must acknowledge and confesse, that by Adams fall we were made so vnclene and sinfull, that neither the Gentiles by the force of nature, nor the Iewes by the letter of Moses law, could arise out of that sinfull state. After it sheweth, how our deliuerance is wrought, and how freedome of will is recovered in speciall, and wherein it consisteth, saying: The beginning of iustification, in persons vsing reason, is taken from the grace of God, preuenting vs through Iesus Christ, that is, from his vocation, whereby without any desert of ours we are called, that wee who were by our sinnes turned away from God, may be prepared by his grace, both raising vs vp, and helping vs to returne to our owne iustification, freely yeelding our consent vnto the said grace, and working with it. So at God touching the heart of man by the light of the holy Ghost, neither doth man nothing at all, receiuing that inspiration, who might also refuse it: neither yet can he without the grace of God, by his Free will, mooue himselfe to that, which is iust in Gods sight. And that you may be assured, that this doctrine of the Councell, is no other then that which was taught three hundred yeares before, in the very middest of darkenesse, as Heretikes deeme: see what S. Thomas of Aquine one of her principal pillars, hath written of this point in his most learned Summe. 1. 2. q. 109. Art. 6. Where upon these wordes of our Saviour, Ioh. 6. No man can come to me vnlesse my Father drawe him, he concludeth it to be manifest, that man cannot so much as prepare himselfe to receiue the light of grace, but by the free and vnderserued help of God, mouing him inwardly thereunto. And this is all which M. Perkins in his pretended dissent auerret here, and goeth about to proue in his siue reasons following: the which I will omit, as beeing all for vs. And if any man desire to see more to that purpose, let him read the most learned workes of that famous Cardinall, and right reuerend Archbishop Bellarmine.

R. ABBOT.

Here is another contradiction framed vpon the anuile of M. Bishops ignorance, whilest he vnderstandeth not, that works morally good, may be spirittually euill, and whilest they are highly esteemed with men for the substance of the act, yet may be abominable with God, by the vncleannesse of the heart. Which if he had duly considered, he might well haue seene, that both these assertions may stand together, that man hath freedome of will to doo the outward acts of morall vertues, and yet that all that man deuiseeth, frameth or imagineth is wholly euill, because his morall vertues without grace are in Gods sight but so many corruptions of good works, being poisoned in the roote of vnbeliefe, and wholly diuerted from their true and proper end; so that God hath not respect to them, because in them there is no respect at all to God. This followeth afterwards more fully to be handled towards the end of this question: but in the meane time we see how simply he collecteth of this latter point, that M. Perkins leaueth a man no naturall strength to performe any part of morall duty, and as if he had very wisely handled the matter, addeth his epiphonema: So vncertaine are the steps of them that walke in darknesse; very fitly agreeing to himselfe, who neither vnderstandeth what the aduersary saith, nor what he himselfe is to say for his owne part. Whereupon it is that he conceiueth that M. Perkins fully agreeth with the Romish Church in this matter of Free will, whereas they are as farre different one from the other, as heauen is from earth. The agreement forsooth is, in that M. Perkins granteth Free will in the state of grace. But so did Luther and Caluin, and so doe we all, as farre as M. Perkins doth. The Papists say, that man hath in his owne nature a power of Free will, which being onely stirred and helped, can, and doth of it selfe adioine it selfe to grace to accept thereof, and to worke with it. This is it that we denie: we say, that freedome of the will to turne to God, and to worke with him, is no power of nature, but the worke of grace; that it is in no sort of man himselfe, but wholly and onely the gift of God: that howsoeuer God doe offer grace, yet that man hath no power in himselfe, or in his owne will to assent and yeeld vnto it, but it is God himselfe that withall worketh in him to accept thereof, that to the conuersion of a sinner, there ariseth nothing from the motion of his owne will, howsoeuer assisted and helped of God, but what God by his Spirit doth worke in it.

^aLuke 16.15.

Vpon this point onely Luther and Caluin, and wee all insist to cha-challenge all wholly vnto God. In this respect was it that Luther said, that Free will is, Res de solo titulo, a matter of name onely, and a bare title, because of man himselfe it is nothing, and by it, or in it there can nothing be attributed vnto him. For we will indeede, it is true, but God worketh in vs to will; we work, but it is God that worketh in vs to work; wee walke, but he causeth vs to walke; wee keepe his commandements, but he worketh in vs to keepe his commandements, so that nothing is ours of our selues, but all is his onely. And this M. Bishop in some shew of words heere seemeth to affirme, but indeed he wholly ouerthroweth it. He saith, that mans will then onely concurrereth with Gods grace, when it is first stirred and holpen by grace, and therefore that M. Perkins either doth not vnderstand them, or else doth wrongfully accuse them, in that hee chargeth them to say, that mans will concurrereth with Gods grace by it selfe, and by it owne naturall power. But M. Perkins vnderstood them well enough, and doth no whit wrongfully accuse them. For Andradius the expounder of the riddles of the Councell of Trent, doth plainly tell vs, that the motion of Free will, and applying of it selfe to righteousnesse, doth no more depend vpon the grace of God then the fires burning of the woode, doth depend vpon the power of God; that grace lifteth it up beeing fallen downe, and addeth strength vnto it, but that it is no lesse the efficient cause of applying it selfe to grace, then other naturall things are of all those operations whereto by force of nature they are caried. Therefore hee compareth Free will to a man made fast in the stockes, who hath a power and ableness in himselfe to go, if hee bee let goe out of the stockes, and the bonds be broken that held him before that hee could not stirre. Whereby he giueth vs to vnderstand their mind, that as the fire and other naturall things beeing by the power of God vpholden in that which naturally they are, do of themselues worke their proper and naturall effects, and as a man vnbound and let goe out of the stockes walketh and goeth, not by any new worke that is wrought in him, but by his owne former naturall power; so Free will though entangled in the delights of sinne, and bound with the bonds thereof, yet hath a naturall power wheremy it can apply it selfe to righteousnesse, if grace by breaking the bonds, and abating the strength of sinne, doe but make way for it to vse and exercise it selfe; so that grace hauing wrought what concerneth it, they leaue it to the will by it selfe, and by it owne naturall power, to adioyne

^a August. de bono perseu. cap. 13. & cont. 2. eo. Pelagi lib. 4. cap. 6.

^b Andrad orthodoxy. explicat. li. 4. Li. 1. nostri arbitrij mot. o atque ad iustitiam applicatio non magis à gratia Di. pendet, quam à diuina virtute stipis exustio.

^c Cum diuina gratia iacentem libertatem erigat

& confirmet ut resque illi addat, quibus obstat iustitie ornamenta

completis possit,

non secus quidem sui ad iustitiam applicacionis causa efficiens dicens da est, ac ea que natura constant, carum omnium operationum ad

quas nature in- pte sione feruntur.

^e Ibid. Non secus ac ligneis so'cis deuincti, qui incedendi quidem facultatem habent,

et si ingreati nullo mo lo possit ni

vincula rumpantur prius que motum repriment: et retardant.

it selfe to worketherwith. And this Bellarmino plainly testifieth, when he affirmeth, ^d that grace doth no otherwise concurre to supernaturall actions, then vniuersall causes doe to naturall, so that it doth no more in the worke of righteoufnesse, then the Sunne and heauenly powers doe in the act of generation, or the producing of other naturall effects yeelding an influence and inclination, but leauing the verie act to the will and worke of man. All which in effect M. Bishop himselfe afterwards expresseth, teaching that man after the fall of Adam, hath still a naturall facultie of Free will, which being first outwardly moued, and inwardly fortified by the verue of grace, is able to effect and do any worke appertaining to saluation; thereby giuing to vnderstand, that there is still an abilitie left in nature, howsoeuer for the present ouerwhelmed and oppressed, which being excited and stirred vp, though in it selfe it bee not sufficient to produce the effects of spirituall actions, yet hath a sufficiencie to applie it selfe to grace for the producing thereof. Which Costerus the Iesuite declareth, by the similitude of ^e a man fallen into a darke and deepe pit, whence he cannot get out by himselfe, nor hath care to get out, but sleepeth securely therein, till his friend come, who awaketh him out of his sleepe, and wiseth him to get out, and by reasons perswadeth him to be willing thereto, and so giueth him his hand, or reacheth to him a cord, which he taketh and laieeth fast hold on it, and yeeldeth his owne vitermost strength that he may be pulled out. To which purpose also he vseth another example, of a man ^f extremely faint and weake, lying with his face turned away from the fire or the Sunne, who is not able to turne himselfe to the fire or the Sunne, but if he haue one to helpe him, vseth his owne strength also for the turning of himselfe about to enioy the warmth thereof. Which comparisons doe plainelie shew, that they attribute vnto Free will a proper and seuerall worke beside that that is done by the grace of God. Whereby wee see how quilefully M. Bishop speaketh, when he saith, that the wil is made able by grace to bring forth spirituall fruit, being of it self viterly vnable thereto, because he meaneth not hereby, that grace doth worke in the will that whole ability that it hath, but that to the ability which the will naturally hath, grace offereth, and being accepted, yeeldeth only an assistance and help for the accomplishment of the worke. Which he implieth in that he saith, that the worke proceedeth principally of grace:

^a Bellarmino de grat. & lib. arb. lib. 6. ca. 15 Sicut auxiliium generale ita concurrunt cum omnibus rebus in actionibus naturalibus, ut tamen non impediatur libertatem & contingetiam, ita speciale auxiliium adiuuans ita concurrunt ad omnes actiones supernaturales ut non impediatur libertatem: quoniam eorum profusus modo auxilia ista concurrunt.

^c Coster. Enchirid. cap. 5. Sit quisquam lapsus in fossam tenebrosam ex qua neque cogit egredi nec exire solus possit, sed in ea securus obdormiat: accedat ad eum amicus quoniam hominis misertus de somno exstatum ad egressum monentibus ut assistentur. id est: illi manum vel furem porrigat & simul conuenienter adducat in lumen.

^f Ibid. Homo languidus qui ab igne vel à lumine facie auersus ipse solus non potest conuertere: sed si accedat amicus qui iuuat & languidus ipse conuertatur ad ignem vel ad lumen: tunc solus aut ignis fruetur.

grace: not wholly but principally; onely because grace first occasioneth and beginneth the same, whereas otherwise they make Free will parallel-wise, and as it were side by side concurre with grace to the effecting of that whereto it tendeth. Yet hee will not haue vs thinke, that they require some outward helpe onely to the will, to ioyne with grace, or that grace doth but as it were vntie the chaines of sinne, wherein our will is fettered, and then will canne of it selfe turne to God, when indeede hee cannot well tell what hee would haue vs thinke. Wee heare him and his fellowes talke of inward mouing, & inward fortifying, but in truth they make all this inward but onely outward, because they still denie, that grace worketh that intrinsecall act of the will, whereby it first applieth it selfe to God, and doleaueth the will of man to make vp the worke of grace, by that that meerey and naturaly is his owne. In respect whereof Costerus compareth grace^h to a staffe in a mans hand, which at his owne will hee either useth for his helpe, or throweth away, still excluding that worke of God, whereby it is wrought in the will, to will and receiue the grace of God, and not to reiect the same. The necessity of which worke herein plainly appeareth, for that man as touching spirituall lifeⁱ the life of God is wholly dead, and therefore as the dead man hath no facultie or power left, whereby to doe any thing for himselfe for recouery of life againe, but his life and the life of all his parts must wholly and newly bee put into him, so man hath nothing left in nature, whereof with any helpe whatsoeuer he canne make any vse to returne to God againe, but this life must wholie and newly bee wrought in him by the grace and power of God. Now in this point M. Bishop stuttedh and stammereth, and knoweth not how or what to say. Man, he saith, is but halfe dead, not starke dead, and by and by after hee is halfe dead in his naturall powers of understanding and will, but touching supernaturall workes, hee may in a good sense bee likened to a dead man; and yet presently saith againe, that in this state there is a naturall facultie of Free will, which is able beeing outwardly moued and inwardly fortified, to effect and doe any worke appertaining to saluation. Whereby he wholly overthroweth the comparison of a dead man, because where there is remaining an actiue power that needeth onely to bee stirred vp and strengthened, there cannot be affirmed the state of death. But the Scripture pronounceth man absolutely dead: The dead shall heare

^e Andrad. ut supra. Homini semper liberum relinquatur diuine operationi prebere impedimentum, eoque vel amplecti vel repudiare.

^h Coster. ut supra. Est hec gratia in arbitrio voluntatis ut ea uti possit, et non uti, retere et abire, res quemadmodum baculus in manu conualescentis, cuius auxilio si velit ut eum sin minus poterit eum remouere.

ⁱ Ephes. 4. 18.

^k Iolin. 5. 25.

1 Ephel. 2. 1. 5.
Col. 2. 13.
m Luc. 10. 30 i n Ambros de
pauir. lib. 1. cap.
10

o Mat. 8. 23.
p John 11. 39.
q Aug. in Ioan. tract. 49. Surrex-
it. procesit. In vivoque potentia Domini erat, non vires mortui.

r Ephel. 1. 19.
1 August cont.
Pelag & Celest.
lib. 1. cap. 37.
Gratie vocabulo
frangens multam
offensionemq;
declinans.

r Pelag. apud
Aug. ibid. lib. 1.
cap. 31. Liberi
arbitrium habere
nos dicimus quod
in omnibus bonis
operibus diuino semper adiuvatur auxilio

u Cap. 33. Liberum sic confite-
mur arbitrium
ut dicamus nos
indigere Dei
semper auxilio.
x Cap. 35. Episto-
la nostra confite-
tur nos omnino
nihil boni facere
posse sine Deo.

y Cap. 37. Inuenient nos ita ho-
minis laudare naturam ut Dei
semper gratie
ad laudem auxi-
lium.

z Cap. 2. Anathema qui sentit
vel docet gratiam
Dei quia Christus venit in hunc mundum
peccatores saluos
facere, non solum per singulas horas, aut per singula momenta, sed etiam per singulos actus nostros non esse necessariam, & qui hanc conantur auferre penas fortius erunas. a Hieron. adu. Pelag. 3. Sunt plerique nostrorum qui omnia que agimus dicant fieri presidio Dei.

the voyce of the Sonne of God, and they that heare it, shall live: ¹ *They were dead in trespasses and sinnes; not ^m halfe dead, like the man that descended from Ierusalem to Iericho (to whom S. Ambrose mote fitly resembleth man falling after Baptisme, and in the state of grace) but plainely ^o dead, like Lazarus, foure daies dead, and now stinking in his graue, in whose raising up was ^q the power of Christ, not any strength of the dead man, so as that the recovering of a man to faith and spirituall life, is by ^r the same working of the mightie power of God, which he wrought in Christ when hee raised him from the dead. Which if M. Bishop did acknowledge, according to the plaine euidence of holy Scripture, hee would not thus halt betwixt grace and Free will, but would confesse, that whatsoeuer the will doth in the worke of saluation, the same is fully and wholly wrought therein by grace. But now he doth but daily with the name of Grace, as Pelagius the heretike did, onely to hide the venime and poyson of his false doctrine, ^s to abate the hatred, and avoyd the offence that should otherwise arise against him. And no otherwise doth the Councell of Trent which he alleadgeth for his warrant, the doctrine whereof is the very same with the Pelagian heresie, being taken with these corrections and limitations wherewith Pelagius and his followers did abridge and explaine themselves. For they denied not a necessitie of the grace of God, Pelagius himselfe plainely saying, ^t Wee say that wee haue a Free will which in all good workes is alwaies assisted with the helpe of God; ^u Wee so confesse Free will, as that we say that we alwaies stand in need of the helpe of God: ^x Wee can do no good at all without God: ^y We so praise nature, as that we alwaies adde the helpe of the grace of God. And that we may see that he first trod the path for the Councell of Trent to follow, hee sticketh not to pronounce ^z Anathema to every one that thinketh or saith, that the grace of God whereby Christ came into this world to saue sinners is not necessarie, not onely every houre and every moment, but to every act of ours, and they that goe about to deme it shall be punished for ever. So doth the Pelagian heretike affirme to Hierome; ^a There be very many of ours who say, that all things that we doe, are done by the helpe of God. By this acknowledgement of grace Pelagius deluded the Bishops of the Easterne Churches, before whom he was conuented, and* by that meanes was acquitted and dismissed, as having taught nothing against the truth. For as Austin noteth, ^b When they heard him confesse the grace of God, they could imagine no other grace, but what they were wont to read in the booke of God, and preach to the people of God. Which grace by this occasion the same S. Austin in diuers and sundry places directeth to bee that ^c whereby wee are Christians and the children of God; and being predestinate are called, iustified, and glorified: ^d whereby we are iustified to be iust men: ^e which maketh the doctrine of God profitable vnto vs: ^f whereby hee doth not onely shew vs the truth, but also inspireth loue. ^g whereby we are iustified, that is, whereby the loue of God is shedde abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost which is giuen vnto vs; ^h whereby we are made good; ⁱ whereby the excellencie of heauenly glorie, is not onely promised, but also beleeued and hoped for; nor wisdom onely reuealed, but loued, and euery thing that is good is not onely aduised, but (fruitfully and effectually) perswaded. This onely grace and no other did they vnderstand to be the grace of Christ, whereby as touching the worke of our saluation, God is all in all, while it of him and by him, meere by his gift we are whatsoeuer we are towards him, so that although ^k we will, and we worke, and we walke, and we runne, yet it is God that worketh in vs, to will, and to worke, and to walke, and to runne, and in all these things we haue nothing but what wee haue of him, that there may bee no exception to the Apostles question, ^l What hast thou that thou hast not received? and if thou haue received it, why dost thou boast as if thou hadst not received it? But this grace Pelagius could by no meanes endure: he thought it absurd, that all should be ascribed to God, and therefore would needs deuise a course of grace that might giue way to the Free will of man. The contriuing of which course, if we duly consider from point to point, wee shall see, that it most fully correspondeth and accordeth to that doctrine of grace and Free will, which is now taught in the Church of Rome; onely the specialties thereof their schoole diuines haue directed them to expresse somewhat more distinctly then he hath done. And first they tell vs of grace preuenting, exciting and stirring up, whereby saith the Councell, without any desert of

^b August. epist. 95. Hu audisse verbum (hominem) Dei gratia adiuuari, &c. Catholici antistes nullam aliam Dei gratiam intelligere poterunt, nisi quam in libro Dei legere & populus Dei predicare consueverunt.

^c Ibid. Gratia qua Christiani & si ij Des sumus. Et postea: Qua predestinatus vocamur, iustificamur, glorificamur.

^d Epist. 105. Qua iustificati sumus ut homines iusti essemus.

^e Epi. 107. Agnoscimus gratiam que facit prodesse doctrinam.

^f Cor. 13. lib. 1. cap. 13. Ut non ostendat tantummodo veritatem, verum etiam inferiori charitatem.

^g Ibid. cap. 10. Qua iustificamur, id est, qua charitas Dei diffunditur in cordibus nostris, &c.

^h Con. 2. Epist. Pelag. lib. 4. cap. 6. Hec est gratia Dei boni faciens.

ⁱ Con. Pelag. &c. v. supra.

^{cap. 10.} Istam aliquando sicutur qua futurę glorie magnitudo non solum promittitur, verum etiam creditur & speratur; nec mouetur solum sapientia, verum etiam & amatur, nec facitur solum omne quod bonum est, verum etiam persuadetur. ^k De grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 16. Certum est nos velle cum volumus, sed ille facit: velle minus, &c. Certum est nos facere cum facimus, sed ille facit: ut faciamus, &c. ^l 1. Cor. 4. 7.

Of Justification. sc̄. 32.
Of Merits.

sc̄. 1. & c.

m. Coster. de lib. arbit. Hec gratia praeueniens non est illa quae in anima hominis inhabitans iustum constituit & sed impulsus tantum & motio Sp. sancti adhuc foris degens. qui stat ad ostium cordis pulsans, nondum admissus ad eum domicilium.

n. Bellarmin. de grat. & lib. arbit. lib. 6. cap. 15. Nihil est aliud nisi suscipio quae non determinat voluntatem sed inclinatur per modum proponendi obiecti.

o. Pelag. apud August. cont. Pelag. & Celest. lib. 1. cap. 10.

Operatur in vobis velle quod bonum est, velle quod sanctum est dum nos terrenis cupiditatibus deditos, multorum more animalium tantummodo praesentia diligentes futurae gloriae magnitudinem & praemiorum sollicitatione succendit, dum reuelatione sapientiae in desiderium dei stupentem suscitatur voluntatem: dum nobis suadet omne quod bonum est. p. Ibi. cap. 7. Adiuuat nos Deus per doctrinam & reuelationem suam dum cordis nostri oculos aperit, dum nobis ne praesentibus occupemur futurae demonstrat, dum diaboli pandit insidias, dum nos multiformi & ineffabili dono gratiae celestis illuminat.

ours we are called, that by his grace raising vs up, and helping vs, wee may be prepared to returne to our iustification. Where we are to note M. Bishops errour in his owne principles, who sundry times calleth the grace of first iustification* the first grace, forgetting that there is a former grace, to which he himselfe referreth their works of preparation, and here bringeth the councill describing it as precedent to iustification. But of this presenting grace Costerus the Iesuite saith, that^m it is not that that dwelleth in the soule to make a man iust, but it is onely the impulsion and motion of the holy Ghost, being yet without; and standing knocking at the doore of the heart, not being as yet let in. This he expresth by the comparison of a friend finding a man in a deepe pit, as before was said, and perswading him by diuers reasons to be willing to be pulled out. Therefore Bellarmin saith, thatⁿ it is but onely a perswading which doth not determine the will, but inclineth it in manner of a propounding obiect. This grace Pelagius describeth in this sort: ° He worketh in vs to will that that is good, to will that that is holy, whilest finding vs giuen to earthly lusts, and like brutt beasts louing onely present things (note that hee excludeth all former merits as the councill doth) he enkindleth our minds with the greatnesse of the glory to come, and with promise of reward: whilest by reuealing his wisdome, he raiseth up our astonished will to the desire and longing after God; whilest he perswadeith and exhorteith vs to all good things. And againe to the same purpose he saith: P God helpeth vs by his doctrine and reuelation, whilest he openeth the eyes of our hearts, whilest hee sheweth vs things to come, that we may not be holden with things present; whilest he laieth open vnto vs the snares of the diuell; whilest he enlighteneth vs with the manifold and vspeakable gift of his heauenly grace. Thus hitherto they agree as touching this presenting grace, both calling that by the name of grace, which the auncient Church disclaimed vnder that name, because they vnderstood grace to be meant of that onely, whereby God himselfe maketh vs to bee that that hee calleth vs to bee, and here is nothing but propounding, perswading, exhorting, stirring, enkindling, enlightening, moouing, knocking, but leauing it to vs, either to accept or reiect that that is propounded and perswaded, and * both resting the acte and effect of all vpon man himselfe, yeelding to his motion when it is at his owne discretion to doe otherwise. For M. Bishop here telleth vs out of their learning, that there is in vs a naturall facultie of Free will, to which this propounding & perswading is vsed, to which it is left so giue to these motions either admission or repulse. It is left in the power of the will, saith Bellarmino, either to consent to God calling and perswading, or not to consent vnto him. Now saith Cisterius, He that by Free will admitteth of this grace, by the helpe of it (not becing yet any spirituall renewing grace, but onely as the friend (as before was laid) reaching his hand, or giuing a coard to the man in the pit) he prepareth himselfe by beleeuing, hoping, repenting, and performing workes of pietie, to receiue the grace of iustification. So that before iustification, and without any inward or inhabitant grace of regeneration, euen by Free will receiuing onely a helpe which is without it, a man hath faith, hope, repentance, loue, by which, and for which (as M. Bishop afterwards disputeth) God is induced and moued to bestow vpon vs his iustifying grace. All this matter M. Bishop in the thirteenth Section of this question setteth downe thus: God by his grace knockes at the doore of our hearts: he doth not breake it open, or in any sort force it, but attendeth, that by our assenting to his call, we open him the gates, and when hee he with his heauenly gifts will enter in Whereby it appeareth, that with them the first inuiscible act of mans conuersion is of himselfe, and an act of his owne Free will, occasioned by God, but acted by man himselfe, because the act of grace on Gods part being compleat, there remaineth a distinct and seuerall act of the will of man for admitting of that grace of God, vpon admitting wherof followeth the endowment of the gifts of God, by which thenceforth Free will worketh according to the will of God. All this Pelagius also taught as they do, affirming a power of nature consisting in Free will, which power (becing not sufficient of it selfe) God alwaies assisteth with the helpe of the foresaid grace. By his law, by his Scriptures, which we read or heare, he worketh that we may be willing; but to consent or not consent, is so ours, as that if we will, we do so; if not, we cause that the worke of God amitteth nothing. Now then he that vseth

* Ibid. cap. 4. Nosstrum est, quia hec omnia uertere etiam in nialiam possumus: Concil. Trid. Sess. 6. cap. 5. Neque homo ipse nihil omnino agit, inspirationem illam recipiens, quippe qui illam et abijcere potest.
 q Coster. ut supr. Relicta uoluntate, a se libertas, equa fieri potest, ut uel suscipiantur influxus diuini uel repulsiua patiatur.
 r Bellar. de grat. & lib. arbit. lib. 5. cap. 29. In potestate uoluntatis relinquatur consentire uocanti et suadenti uel non consentire.
 s Coster. ib. Qui hanc gratiam admittit, eadem adiutus progreditur ulterius, ut credendo, sperando, penitendo, ad iustificationis gratiam se pareat.
 u Of Iustification. Sect. 21.
 t Pelag. apud August. contra Pelag. & Celest. lib. 1. cap. 4. Ipsam possibilitatem gratie sue adiutus semper auxilio.
 u August. Epist. 107 Per legem, seu Scripturas susus Deus operatur ut uelimus, sed eius consentire, uel non consentire, et a nostrum est ut supra cap. 32.

1 si uoluntas fiat: si autem uoluntas, nihil in nobis operationem Dei ualere faciemus. x Contr. Pelag. ut supra cap. 32.
 3. Qui currit ad Deum, et ab eo se regi cupit, id est, uoluntatem suam ex eius uoluntate suspendit, qui se adherendo ugeter uisus cum illo fit spiritus, non hoc nisi de arbitrio efficit libertate. Qua qui bene utitur, ita se totum tradit Deo in membra suam mortificat uoluntatem, ut cum Apostolo possit dicere, Vno autem, &c. ponitque cor suum in manu Dei et illud eius uoluntate. Dum esse desinat.
 his

his Free will aright, saith hee, he runneth vnto God, and desireth to be guided and directed by him, and hangeth his will vpon the will of God, to whom being ioyned by cleauning stel vnto him, he becommeth or is made one spirit with him: he so committeth himselfe wholly to God, and mortifieth all his owne will, that with the Apostle he may be able to say, Now I liue, yet not I, but Christ liueth in me: he putteth his heart into Gods hand, that God may incline it whither it shall please him. Here is Free will yeelding assent to God, and from thence (by assistance of grace which he also, as we haue heard, acknowledgeth in his meaning, which is the same with the Papists, to be necessaric alwaies, and in all things,) there follow the workes of preparation, which hee expresseth by tearmes of running vnto God, desiring to be guided by him, mortifying our owne will putting our heart into Gods hand, hanging our will vpon Gods will. Now hereupon will hee haue to ensue the iustifying grace and gift of God, which hee signifieth by becomming one spirit with God, by hauing Christ to liue in vs, by hauing God to incline our hearts whither it pleaseth him. ¶ A great helpe of grace indeed, saith Austin, that God incline our hearts whither he will; but this so great helpe as he (Pelagius) doeth, we then merit (or obtaine) when without any helpe, onely by Free will, we runne to God, desire to be guided by him, &c. That these merits going before, we may so obtain grace, that God may incline our heart whither hee will. And this is also the very selfe same dorage, that now possesseth the Church of Rome. For if M. Bishop will except, that they doe not affirme their workes of preparations to be without any helpe of grace, onely of Free will: I answer him, that no more did Pelagius, who accursed them (as hath bene said) who held not the grace of God to be necessaric to euery acte. But yet in that meaning, wherein S. Austin speaketh of the helpe of God, as whereby the thing it selfe is wrought in vs, wherein wee are said to bee helped, they say, as S. Austin chargeth Pelagius to haue said, that their preparations are without any helpe of grace, and onely of Free will, because there is for the time of this preparation no inhabitant or renewing grace, no habitual quality or gift of grace that should be the worker thereof. They onely teach, as Pelagius did, a grace though internal in respect of the man, yet to the will onely externally assistant, moouing and directing it for the doing of these things, but meerey the will it selfe is the doer of them. Which hereby also is apparant, for that if they were properly the effects of grace

¶ August. ibid.
Magnum profecto diuine gratie adiutorium, ut cor nostrum, quod voluerit Deus, ipse declinet: sed hoc tam magnum adiutorium, sicut ipse desipit. tunc meremur, cum sine ullo adiutorio non nisi de arbitrij libertate ad Dominum currimus. &c. et his precedentibus meritis sic eius consequamur gratiam, ut cor nostrum quo voluerit, ipse declinet.
¶ See after in Sc. A. 15.

they should by their doctrine bee meritorious ex condigno, whereas now they are denied so to be, and thereby are denied to be the proper effects of grace. And hence M. Bishop thinketh to haue another difference betwixt the Pelagians and them, because Pelagius affirmed merits before the grace of iustification, and they doe not so. But this will not serue his turne, because Bellarmino confesseth, as the truth is, that the Fathers in condemning Pelagius for affirming grace to be giuen in respect of merits, did vnderstand merit when any thing is done by our owne power, in respect whereof grace is giuen, though the same be not merit ex condigno. Such are their works of preparation, which are done by our owne power in that meaning as the Fathers spake, as hath bene said, because they are no proper effects of renewing grace, and are defended by them to bee the cause for which God bestoweth his grace vpon vs. They defend therefore that which was condemned in the Peligians, that the grace of God is giuen according to our merits, & that we first giue somewhat by Free will, for which grace is to be rendred for reward. They say as the Peligians did, We worke to merit, that God may worke with vs. Yea they professedly teach, that their preparations are merits, though not ex condigno, yet ex congruo, because by the rule of their schooles, it is merite, or standing with reason, that whilset a man well vseth his owne power, God according to his more excellent power doe worke more excellently. They thinke themselves well discharged, for that they put no merits before the first grace, as they call it, whereas therein they say no more then Pelagius did. He made the first grace a thing common both to the wicked and to the godly, to Pagans and Christians, to beleeuers and infidels, consisting in motions and illuminations, offered to all, and left to euery mans Free will, to accept or reiect them, euen^f so doe they. They say, that before that first grace there are no merits at all precedent: euen so said he, affirming the calling of God, whilset he findeth vs giuen to earthly lusts, and like bruis beasts louing onely present things, as his owne words haue told vs. But the first grace or preuenting grace, before which the Fathers say there are no merits in iustifying grace, is the grace whereby he maketh vs to walke, so obserue, to doe what he commandeth, whereby hee himselfe worketh the effect of that, which either by outward instruction, or inward motion and illumination he doth commend vnto vs: Before this grace they place their merits or works of preparation, thereby to

^a Bellar. de grat. & lib. arbit. lib. 5. cap. 5. Gratiam Des secundum merita nostra dari in eligunt Patres cum aliquid sit proprijs viribus ratione custus datur gratia, etiamsi non sit illud meritum de condigno.
^b August. cont. r. 2. Epist. Pelig. lib. 4. cap. 6. Priores vique dare quod libet ex libero arbitrio ut sit gratia in retributione pro premio.
^c Ibid. Nos facimus ut mereamur cum quibus faciat Deus.
^d Thom. Aquin. 1. 2. q. 114. art. 6. in Corp. Congruum est, ut dum homo bene vtitur virtute sua, Deus secundum superexcellens in virtutem excellentius operetur.
^e Aug. Epist. 106. Hec intelligitur de deo ipso gratia in actu, que Paganaeque Christianis, impijs & pijs, sicut ubi atque vniuersis communis est.
^f Bellar. de grat. & lib. arbit. lib. 2. cap. 3. Lumen gratiae omnino prius est.
^g Aug. cont. r. 2. Epist. Pelig. lib. 4. cap. 6. File facit ut ambulemus, ut obseruamus, ut faciamus. Hac est gratia bonum faciens, non haec misericordia praeciuens nos.

^b Contr. Pelag. & Celsi lib. 1. ca. 23.

¹ Enchir. cap. 32.

^k August. de na.

& grat. cap. 39.

Possibilitatem humane nature ita defendit, ut homo per Liberum arbitrium etiam sine Christi nomine saluus esse posse credatur.

¹ Andrad. Ortho.

explic. lib. 3. Sine

lege Mosis & E-uangelica nobis

per Christum data sola lege nature permittit si-

isse Deo gratia iustificatos &

saluatos: & prius

unicum Deum

religio. & venerati

sunt: in ipso

spes suas omnes

colocarunt: illi

perpetuo placere

studuerunt, ab

illo virtutum re-

munerationem

sperarunt.

^m Arist. de mun-

do. Cic. de Nat.

Dm. Nemo vir

magnus sine ali-

quo assistu divi-

no unquam fuit.

Neminem nisi

iuuante Deo, tale

fuisse creden-

dum est.

ⁿ Aug. de inat.

& grat. cap. 2.

Si per naturam

iustitia (nulle fide passionis Christi & resurrectionis

ergo Christus gra-

ui mortuus est.

^o Ibid. cap. 2.

Ecce quod est

crucem Chri. sti

enacuare, sine illa

quenquam per naturalem legem & voluntatis arbitrium iustificari posse contendere.

^p Prosp. de lib. arbit. Ostendere voluit inter boni & mali contrarias suasiones, ita omnem hominem propria discretioni esse commissum ut ei non plus à Deo praesidium quam à Diabolo sit periculi.

obtaine it, contrarie to the words of the Apostle, as S. Austin witnesseth: ^h Not of workes, lest any man should boast: and againe, If it be of grace, it is not of workes. And heerein their iniquitie is the greater, in that they borrow the termes of a distinction of ⁱ grace preuenient and subsequent from S. Austin, and apply it otherwise then he meant it, to the maintenance of an heresie, which he oppugned by it. Thus M. Bishop for his life cannot imagine a better accord, then there is betwixt Pelagius the Hereticke and their Councell of Trent, both avouching, and by fraudulent deuiCES maintaining the power of nature and Free will against the truth of the grace of God. And to assure vs that they attribute thereto as much as Pelagius did, ^k who so defended the power of nature, as that a man without the name of Christ might be saued by Free will, Andradus telleth vs, out of the secrets of that Councell, that they also hold, ¹ that heathen Philosophers, hauing no knowledg of the law or of the Gospell of Christ, were iustified and saued onely by the law of nature; that they religiously worshipped one God, put all their trust in him, hoped for reward of their vertues from him, yet all this by the grace of God he saith, which Pelagius also would say, but both teaching no other grace but what the heathens themselves confessed, that ^m neuer any man prooued great and excellent without some diuine instinct: so that Aristotle, & Tully, and such other acknowledging the same, must now bee taken for Preachers of the grace of God. Wherein we may wonder at their impudencie, that doubt not to affirme a thing so plainly absurd, and so resolued against by S. Austin in his defences against the Pelagians, concluding by imitation of the Apostles words, that ⁿ if by the law of nature there be righteousnesse without the faith of the passion and resurrection of Christ, then Christ died in vaine. And againe, that ^o to affirme, that a man may be iustified by the law of nature and Free will, is to make the crosse of Christ of no effect. But by all this wee see, that their speech of grace for conuerting of man to God, is but collusion and meere Pelagian hypocrisie, as whereby indeed they attribute no greater a worke to God in bringing man to righteousnesse, then to the diuell in bringing man to sin. Which beeing condemned in the ^p Pelagians as a horrible impietie and blasphemie, yet by Cotterus the Iesuite in his Enchiridion, is manifestly acknowledged to be their meaning, ¹ that as the diuell by temptation and suggestion toucheth our minds, and knocketh at the doore of the heart, and seeketh to moue the will to consent to sinne, which notwithstanding is at it owne libertie to admit or reiect the same, so are the influences of Gods preuenting grace, whether suddaine or more constant, which do beate and knock at the heart, but so, as it is left in the libertie of the will to accept, or refuse, euen in as plaine termes as Pelagius said, ² that to consent to God consisteth in mans Free will, and that by libertie of nature hee doth so if he will. This paines I haue taken to vnhood M. Bishop and his Councel of Trent, & to make good that that I haue before affirmed, that the Church of Rome now maintaineth the heretic of Pelagius which anciently was condemned by the Church of Rome. That which he alleadgeth out of Thomas Aquinas is of the same stampe, neither can his antiquitie of three hundred yeeres adde any grace to that which eight hundred yeares before him was vniuersally condemned by the whole Church. Whether M. Perkins his reasons doe destroy their assertion of Free will, vpon determining the state of the question in the next section it shall appeare.

q Coster. Enchirid. cap. 5 Sicut dæmon tentatione mentem nostram praua cogitatione & concupiscentie meue tangit ac pulsat afflicterq; conuertit voluntatem ut in peccatum consentiat, quæ sua libertate motiones has omnes & admittere potest & reijcere: ita sunt in nobis diuini quædam influxus aliquando quidem repêti, aliquando constanter, qui cor nostrum pulsant, reuera interim voluntati sua libertate qua fieri potest ut vel suscipiantur vel epu'sam patiantur. r Agust. Epist. 107. Consentive hominib; libero arbitrio constitutum est, &c. Libertate naturalis si vult facit, si non vult, non facit.

G. W. BISHOP.

Now the very point controuersed, concerning Free will, M. Perkins hath quite omitted, which consisteth in these two points, expressed in the Councell: First, whether we doe freely assent vnto the said grace, when it is offered vs, that is, whether it lie in our power to refuse it; And secondly, when we concurre and worke with it, whether we could if we listed refuse to worke with it. In both which points we hold the affirmative part, and most sectaries of this time the negative. Of which our Author is silent: only by the way in his fourth reason, toucheth two texts of S. Paul, which are commonly alleadged against Free will.

R. ABBOT.

This true point of the controuersie is contained in the proposition of the Pelagians, that ² to consent to the Gospel is not the gift of God. Aug. ep. 107. Vt Evangelio consentiamus est donum Dei, sed hoc nobis est à nobis, id est, ex propria voluntate, quam nobis in nostro corde non operatus est ipse. God

^b Idem de grat. Christi cont. Pelag. & Celest. lib. 1. cap. 25.
^c Idem. ibid.

Non solum Deus posse nostrum donavit atque adiuuat sed etiam velle & operari operatur in nobis.

^a De predest. sancti. cap. 20.

Cum Deus vult aliquid fieri quod non nisi voluntibus hominibus oportet fieri, inclinatur eorum corda ut hoc velint, eo scilicet inclinante, qui in nobis mirabili modo & ineffabili operatur & velle.

Et de bono persuer. cap. 23. sic in potestate habet cor nostrum &c.

^c De predest. sancti. cap. 10. per hoc ut promissa sua Deus possit implere non est in Deo sed in hominis potestate.

¹ Ibid. Filios promissit Deus Abraham qui fidei eius vestigia sequebantur.

² Prosp. de vocat. gent. lib. 1. cap. 3. Credituros promissit &c. reconciliandos promissit, obdituros perseveraturos, &c.

^b August. ibid. Non de nostris voluntatis potestate, sed de sua predestinatione promissit. Promissit enim quod ipse facturus fuerat, non quod homines; quia etsi faciunt homines bona que pertinent ad colendum Deum, ipse facit ut illi faciant que precepit, non illi faciunt ut ipse faciat quod promissit.

men illi faciunt ut ipse faciat quod promissit.

God, but that this we have of our selves, that is to say, of our owne will, which he hath not wrought for us in our hearts. For thus you have, M. Bishop, all this while affirmed, that grace having performed and done what appertaineth to it for the conversion of man, there is behind a distinct and proper act of the will, which either by consenting and yielding maketh good, or by dissenting and refusing maketh frustrate all that grace hath done. This you all inculcate and beat vpon that, that when God hath wholly done his part, it is in mans will either to make or marre; and so doe plainly teach with Pelagius, that God doth helpe ^b possibilitatem natura, our naturall power, that we may be able to consent and will, but actually to consent and will, is left still free to our owne will and choice. And thus, M. Bishop, you your selfe informe vs, when propounding the first part of the question, Whether we do freely assent vnto grace when it is offered vs, that is, whether it lie in our power to refuse it, you hold affirmatiuely, that by Free will wee assent vnto grace, having it in our power and choice to refuse the same. Whether this bee so or not is the point, and wee resolve with S. Austin, ^c that God doth not onely giue vs, and helpe vs to be able to will and to worke, but also worketh in vs to will and to worke: hee doth not so offer vs grace, as to leaue vs to assent vnto it if we will, but himselfe worketh also in vs to bee willing, and to giue our assent vnto it, who ^d so hath our hearts in his power, as that in wonderfull and unspeakeable manner hee worketh in vs to will that good that we cannot have but with our will. And whereas you say that it lieth in our power to refuse the grace of God, you thereby subiect ^e the accomplishment of the promise of the grace of God, to the power and will of man: so that if man list, it shall take place; if man list not, it shall not take place. ^f God promised children to Abraham, that should follow the steps of his faith. ^g He promised them forgiveness of sinnes, obedience, perseverance, the feare of him. He offereth grace to that purpose, where if it lie in mans power to refuse the same, then it must be in mans power whether the promise of God shall be fulfilled or not. But God did ^h not make that promise vpon the power of our will, as foreseeing what wee would doe, but vpon his owne purpose, determining what he himselfe would doe, causing men to doe what he hath commanded, not having from men to per-

forme

forme what he hath promised, because he intended such a grace, not as whereby man may attaine to righteousesse if he will, but whereby it is wrought in him to will and love the same; ^k he having in his power the wils of men more then they themselves haue. In a word, man by nature hath in him to resist and refuse the grace of God: to this his power serueth, and doth not serue to doe otherwise. But God ouerruleth this power, and worketh in him not to refuse his grace, and when God worketh in man not to refuse, it cannot be said, that to refuse is in the power of man; not that God maketh man iust against his will, but ^l he taketh away from him hardnesse of heart, whereby he did refuse, and is ^m altogether inflexible towards God, and giueth him a new heart, a heart of flesh willing to obey, whereby a man groweth to bee as aduersie to sinne, as hee was before to righteousnesse, and entreth to that state which Saint Iohn describeth, ⁿ Every one that is borne of God sinneth not, neither can he sinne, that is, serue sinne, giue himselfe altogether ouer to sinne, because hee is borne of God, which is heere the happie beginning of the euerlasting blessed state of Gods elect; ^o Non posse peccare, non posse bonum deserere, to be freed from all possibilitie of sinne, or forsaking that good that God hath yeilded vnto vs by Iesus Christ. Now hereby wee see how absurdly M. Bishop propoundeth the second part of this question, when we concurre to worke with grace, whether wee could, if wee list, refuse to worke with it. For who doubteth but if wee list, we doe refuse? but therefore the worke of grace is that wee shall not list to refuse the worke of grace, but that our list shall bee to submit our selues vnto it. ^p Where Christ praieth for Peter that his faith might not faile, will any man dare to say that it might faile if Peter list to haue it faile, that is, would not haue it to perseuere vnto the end? As if Peter could list or will in any sort otherwise then Christ had praied for him, that he might will. For who knoweth not, that Peters faith should faile if the wil of faith should faile in him, and continue, if that should continue? But because the wil is prepared by the Lord, therefore the praiser of Christ for Peter could not be in vaine, whereby hee praied that he might haue vs the faith a most free, most strong, inuincible and perseuering will. This is the worke of grace to all the faithfull: it standeth ⁱ Idem de corrept. & grat. c. 11. Secunda plus potest, qua fit etiam vs velit.

^k Ibid. c. 14. Magna habet in potestate voluntas hominum, quam ipsi suos.

^l De predest. sine. c. 8. A nullo dicitur corde respicitur: ideo quippe tribuitur vs cordis dicitur a primis affectibus.

^m De grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 14. Cor lapidem aduersus Deum omnino inflexibile est.

ⁿ 1. Ioh. 3. 9.

^o Aug. de corrept. & grat. c. 11. Prima libertas voluntatis erat posse non peccare: non ipsa multo maior erit non posse peccare, &c.

^p August. de corrept. & grat. ca. 8. An aulebis dicere etiam rogante Christo ne desiceret fides Petri, deserviam fuisse si Petrus eam diceret voluisset, hoc est, si eam vsq; in finem perseuerare voluisset? Quasi aliud Petrus velle vellet quam pro illo Christus rogasset ut velle?

Nam quis ignorat tunc fuisse peritiam fidem Petri, si ea que fides erat voluntas ipsa desierit, & per mansuram si eadem eo usq; manneret? sed quia preparatur voluntas a Domino, ideo pro illo non posset esse inanis oratio. Quando rogauit ergo ne fides eius diceret, quid aliud rogauit, nisi ut haberet in se liberrimam, fortissimam, inuictissimam, perseuerantissimam voluntatem?

not vpon their list to refuse the grace of God, for then they certainly giue it ouer, but ⁹ hee puiteth his feare into their hearts, that they shall not depart from him. Now the question being truly and rightly propounded, whether God hauing fully done his part for the conuersion of a sinner, it remaine free to his owne will, either to accept or refuse this grace: the reasons vsed by M. Perkins are very effectuall and strong to proue the contrarie, and it was M. Bishops cunning to passe by them, because he knew not any probable answer to giue vnto them. His first reason sheweth the vniuersall corruption of mans heart, ¹ the whole imagination whereof God testifieth to bee onely euill continually; so that ¹ flesh sauoureth of nothing but enmitie against God, and is not subiect to the law of God, nor indeed can be. If mans heart be onely euill and enmitie against God, then can it not be truly said, that there is in it any naturall facultie of Free will, to assent and yeeld it selfe to the grace of God. If it bee not subiect to the law of God, nor indeed can bee, shall wee say by plaine contradiction, that it hath in it wherety to assent and giue it selfe in submission vnto God? Free will requireth integritie in iudgement of vnderstanding, in election of will, in obedience of affection; but here man is vtterly disabled in all these. What faculty of iudgement hath hee to conceiue and approoue the things of God, who in all his thoughts is onely euill, and in his very wisedome is enemie vnto God? ¹ Euery man is a beast by his owne vnderstanding, his minde altogether ² darknesse and ignorance; and as he auaieth nothing that offereth light to the blind, or bringeth him into the clearest Sunne-shine, vnlesse hee can make him see; so it booteth not that God doth set his light before man, and causeth it most cleerely to shine vnto him, vnlesse hee ³ open the inward cie of the soule, and make him to vnderstand; not leaue him to vnderstand if hee will, but make him to vnderstand. To this purpose is the second reason of M. Perkins, that ⁴ the naturall man perceiueth not the things of the spirit of God; that they are foolishnesse vnto him; that hee cannot know them because they are only spirituall, that is, ² by the spirit to be discerned. If there be no free wil in spirituall things, without iudging and discerning, and vnderstanding thereof, and there bee no discerning or vnderstanding thereof, but onely by the ³ spirit and minde of Christ, surely in nature there can bee no Free will that can bee helpfull vnto vs, to the attainment of spirituall life, and the power ther-g Jerem. 32. 40.

r Gen. 6. 5.

s Rom. 8. 7.

e Jerem. 10. 14.

u Ephes. 4. 18.

x Psal. 119. 18. 27.

y 1. Cor. 2. 14.

z Vers. 10. 12.

a Vers. 16.

of serueth but to condemne for follie the counsels and instructions thereto tending, the wisdom whereof it is not able to apprehend. Let grace doe what may be done, yet nature perceiue nothing of the spirit, if the same spirit of grace worke not therein to perceiue. Now where the vnderstanding is capable, yet what peruerfenesse and crofnesse still remaineth in the will? It hood-winketh the minde, and maketh it seeme to it selfe not to see when it doth see; it shutteth the gates, and intercepteth the passages of the vnderstanding, shunning to admit any thing whereby it should be checked and interrupted in it course; it hateth and is afraid to vnderstand, that it may not be vrged to doe when it doth vnderstand. Yea where the conscience is conuicted by knowledge and vnderstanding, yet the will being entangled with it owne respects, how mightily doth it struggle and fight against God? and neuer ceaseth fighting, till God doe heale the rebellions of it, not by putting it in case to yeeld if it will, but working in it to will and to yeeld vnto him. And when will hath now begun to yeeld, what vntowardnesse doth it finde in the affections, which as a swift and mightie streame, doe euery while ouerbeare both the iudgement of the vnderstanding, and the resolution of the will, so that wee cannot doe the things that we would. The peruerfenesse whereof, if it preuaile so much with men iustified and in the state of grace, as that it causeth many bitter lamentations for ouersights thereby committed contrarie to the intendment of the will, how much more doe they like flattering Dalilaes, binde all our strength, and ouercome all the power of nature, when the will as yet hath receiued no fortification of inward grace to resist and fight against them? Seeing therefore the heart is on the one side so blinde that it cannot see, and on the other side so peruerse, as that one while it will not see, another while crofseth what soeuer it doth see, wee may well say as S. Austin doth: What good may a man doe out of a heart that is not good? but to haue our heart good, we must looke to him that saith, I will giue you a new heart, and will put into you a new spirit: so that till the heart be renewed and made good, there is no doing good, and therefore no assenting to the grace of God. The third argument of M. Perkins he omitteth with the rest, and yet lighting vpon some idle deuice afterwards, he thought good to set it downe in stead of an objection, which shall be examined in the place which he hath giuen

b Aug. de verb. Apost. serm. 13. Impia mens adit etiam ipsam intellectum, et homo aliquando nimium mente peruersa timet intelligere, ne cogatur quod intellexerit facere.

c Ose. 14. 5.

d Gal. 5. 17.

e August. contr. duas epist. Pelag. lib. 4. cap. 6. Quid potest homo facere de corde non bono? ut au em habentis cor bonum; Dabo inquit, &c.

it. The fourth reason is taken from that that the Scripture in the conversion of a sinner ascribeth all to God, and nothing at all to mans Free will, as appeareth from the termes of new birth, new creation, regeneration, &c. Whereby is argued, that as man conferreth nothing to his generation and birth; so neither doth hee to his regeneration and new birth. As man doth nothing for himselfe in his creation, so hath hee nothing whereby to stead himselfe to become a new creature. Whereto agreeth the definition of the ancient Church: wee in no wise suffer, nay according to wholesome doctrine, wee forbid, whether in our faith or in our workes, to challenge to our selves any thing as our owne. Wee haue to challenge nothing as our owne; and therefore it is not our act of Free will, but Gods worke in vs to assent to the grace of God. How then doth M. Bishop say, that this is nothing against him, who saith in effect the same that Pelagius did, It is of God that we are able to doe or speake or to thinke any thing that is good: but to doe, or to speake, or to thinke, it is our owne, because, if wee beleue him, the grace of God leaueth it to our owne Free will, either to accept or refuse, to doe or not to doe, to worke with it, or not to worke. M. Perkins fift reason is taken from the iudgement of the ancient Church; which how far it auaieth wee shall see anon: but hee that well weigheth these reasons, and the circumstances of them, as M. Perkins hath set them downe, will surely thinke, that either M. Bishop was not well awake, or his wits heere in the beginning of his booke were not yet well come to him, when he passed them ouer with this opinion, that they were all for them. But hee thought hee had a long way to goe, and was loth in the beginning to put himselfe out of breath.

7. W. BISHOP.

The first: I haue (saith hee) laboured more abundantly then all they, yet not I, but the grace of God which is in me, attributing the whole worke to grace. To which I briefly answer, that they doe corrupt the text, to make it seeme more currant for them: the Greeke hath only He sumemot, which is, with mee, not, which is in mee, so that the words in true construction make much more for vs then against vs. Saint Paul affirming the grace of God, which was working with him, to haue done these things: And so Saint Augustine, whom they pretend to follow most

f John 3. 3.
g Gal. 6. 15.
h Tit. 3. 5.

i Fulgent. ad Monimum. l. 1. Nullatenus finimus, imo salubriter prohibemus tam in nostris fide, quam in nostro opere, tanquam nostrum nobis ali-quid vindicare: k Aug. contr. Pelag. 6. Celsi. li. 1. cap 25. Quod possumus omne bonum facere dicere, cogitare, illius est qui hoc posse amavit; quod vero bene vel agimus, vel loquimur, vel cogitamus, nostrum est.

1. Cor. 15.

De grat. & lib.
arb. cap. 15.

most in this matter, expoundeth it. Yet not I, but the grace of God with mee; that is, not I alone, but the grace of God with mee. And by this, neither the grace of God alone: neither hee alone, but the grace of God with him: thus S. Augustine. The like sentence is in the booke of Wisdome. Send that (wisdome) from thy Holy heauen, that it may be with me, and labour with me. Cap. 9.

R. ABBOT.

Corruption of texts is not wont to be but for aduantage. It is no aduantage more to vs to reade ^a the grace of God which is in mee, then to reade the grace of God which is with mee. The ancient father Hierom readeth it both waies: one where, ^b the grace of God which is in me: another where, ^c the grace of God which is with mee, as betwixt which in effect there is no difference. To reade, the grace of God which is in mee, though it doe not heere literally answer the Greeke, yet hath no other meaning but what the Apostle elsewhere iustificth by the same phrase of speech; ^d Now I liue; yet not I, but Christ liueth in mee: yea and in the same place immediatly before, we haue literall example of it; ^e His grace which is in me. The words in true construction, saith M. Bishop, make much more for vs then against vs. And why so? Forsooth because S. Paul affirmeth the grace of God which was working with him, so haue done these things. But how is that for them? For if his meaning bee, that because it is said, that grace did worke with him, therefore it must bee also vnderstood, that hee did worke with grace, hee must remember that hee hath said before, ^f By the grace of God I am that I am, and therefore that it was of grace it selfe, that hee did worke with grace. As if he should haue said, I haue laboured more abundantly then they all, yet I can attribute nothing to my selfe herein; but all to grace, because it is the worke of grace in mee whatsoener I haue done, in working with grace. ^g Fearing least the worke should bee ascribed to himselfe, saith the Scholiast, hee referreth it to the grace of God. To which purpose the same Apostle elsewhere saith: ^h I haue whereof to reioice in Christ Iesus, in the things that pertaine to God: for I dare not speake of any thing which Christ hath not wrought by mee, &c. Where Photinus thus obserueth; ⁱ He sheweth that nothing is his, but all wholly is Christs. If all whole bee of Christ, then is no part to bee ascribed

a 1. Cor. 15. 10.

b Hieron. adu.
Jouinian. lib. 2:
c Idem. ad prin-
cip. explanat.
Psal. 44. & adit.
Pelag. lib. 2.

d Gal. 2. 20.

e 1. Cor. 15. 10.
in xpo est dicitur
in his ipis.

f Ibid.

g Oecumen. in 1:
Cor. cap. 15. I' er-
tus ne rectum
opus sibi attribue-
retur. gratia Dei ipsum fert
acceptum.h Rom. 15. 17.
i Photinus apud Oecumen. in Ro.
cap. 15. ostendit
quod in his erat
in suis sed totum Christi.

to the Free will of man. The Pelagians urged this place to the Corinthians with the same pretence that M. Bishop doth. Let him take the answer of Orosius as spoken to him: *Thou heedlesse presumptuous man, what dost thou looke at that he saith, with mee? Marke well that he hath first said, Not I. Bewixt, not I, and, with mee, cometh in the midd st, the grace of God, whose indeede it is both to will and to worke for the making of a good will, albeit the will bee the will of man. Wherefore he was bolde to say, with mee, because hee had said not I. So then the grace of Gods power workeith in the will of man, which hath giuen to it to will the same. Whereupon the conscience of man professeth and saith, not I, but the grace of God giueth him that hee may say, with mee. Paul then saith and may say, with mee, but it is not by any proper act of his owne Free will, but by the onelie gift and worke of grace, whereby he attaineth to say, with mee. And no otherwise would S. Austine haue spoken, if hee had not fallen into hucksters hands, who vse him onely for aduantage, and not for truth. For hauing in hand to shew, that God calling vs, and iustifying vs onely by his grace, vscth thenceforth our will and worke to accompanie his grace, in going forward with the worke of our saluation, giueth for example hereof the Apostle S. Paul, who professing that by Gods mere grace hee was all that hee was towards God, sheweth that hauing receiued this grace, it was not idle in him, but he laboured more abundantly then all the rest, but adding, yet not I, but the grace of God with mee; ¹ that is, saith Austine, not I alone, but the grace of God with mee; and therefore neither the grace of God alone, nor hee himselfe alone, but the grace of God with him. Now the next words are; But that hee was called from heauen, and by that mightie and most effectuall calling was conuerted, Gratia Dei erat sola, it was onely the grace of God. Which words M. Bishop hath fraudulentlie concealed, as being expresse against him, and clearing this whole point most manifestly on our part. Our conuersion is onelie by the grace of God, as Austine saith S. Pauls was; Free will hath no part therein. Wee say as hee saith, that the will of man beeing conuerted and renewed by grace, doth afterwards apply it selfe to worke with grace, and so there is not onelie the grace of God, nor onelie the will of man, but the grace of God accompanied with the will of man, not as by any proper worke of the will it selfe, but by the worke*

k Oros. Apolog. de arbit. libert. Quis incaute presumptor aspici. quia dixerit, mecum. Attende quia promiserit, Non ego, Quapropter in hoc dicitur uerba, Non ego, & mecum, gratia Dei media est; cuius est uerbum & uelle & perficere pro bona uoluntate etiam me uoluntate hominis. Unde & ille confisus est ut dicitur, mecum, quia dixerat, Non ego. In uoluntate ergo dominus gratia dominus uirtutis operatur. quae & hoc ipsum uelle donauit. Ita conscientia hominis proficitur ut dicitur, Non ego; gratia Dei largitur ut mecum.
¹ Aug. d. grat. & li. arbit. cap. 5. f. d. est, non solum sed gratia Dei mecum; ac per hoc: nec gratia Dei sola, nec ipse solus sed gratia Dei. ut autem de uolo uerba uerba & cum magis na & efficacissima uocamine conuertitur. ut gratia Dei erat sola, & c.

worke of grace, by which it was first conuerted. Therefore the same S. Austine elsewhere mentioning those words, By the grace of God I am that I am, saith thereupon: ^m This is the first mercie, after ^m De p. red. & grat. cap. 1. Hec est prima misericordia quam libere voluntatis opera consequuntur. Sed vs Pauli uocationem bona opera sequuntur, quid ait: Et gratia eius, &c. which doe follow the workes of Free will. But that good workes might follow after the calling of the Apostle, what doth hee say himselfe; And his grace was not in mee in vaine. There is no Free will then to righteousnesse, before a man can say, By the grace of God I am that I am. Thereby the will is made free, and thereby it worketh with grace to bring foorth the fruites of all good workes. So that Saint Austine leaueth vs this place verie strong to prooue that both our conuersion, and our working with grace, when wee are conuerted, is altogether and wholly to bee attributed vnto grace. Heereby the other place is cleared, if it were ought worth.

S. W. BISHOP.

The second text is. It is God that worketh in vs, both to will and to accomplish. Wee grant that it is God, but not hee alone without vs: for in the next wordes before, Saint Paul, saith: Worke your saluation with feare and trembling. So that God worketh principally by stirring vs up by his grace, and also helping forward our will, to accomplish the worke; but so sweetlie and conformably to our nature, that his working taketh not away, but helpeth forward our will to concurre with him. Againe, the whole may bee attributed vnto God, considering that the habits of grace infused, bee from him as sole efficient cause of them, our actions indued also with grace, beeing onely dispositions and no efficient cause of those habits: but this is an high point of schoole Diuinitie, verie true, but not easilie to bee conceined of the vnlearned. ^{Phil. 2. v. 13.}

R. ABBOT.

S. Austine in expresse termes contradicteth M. Bishop, saying, ^a ut uelimus sine nobis operatur: without vs he worketh in vs to will. And so ^b S. Bernard also saith, that the creating of vs to freedome of will, is wrought without vs. Our will is the subject wherein it is wrought, but the efficient cause thereof is onely the grace of God. This M. Bishop denieth, because the Apostle in the words immediatlie before ^a Aug. de grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 17. ^b Bernard. de grat. & lib. arbit. Certe (in libertatem uoluntatis) facta est sine nobis.

fore saith, Worke out your saluation with feare and trembling. But the Apostle when he biddeth them to worke, biddeth them to do it with feare and trembling. And why is that? The Apostle addeth the cause, saith S. Austine: for it is God that worketh in you to will and to worke, of his owne goodwill. If then God worke in thee, it is by the grace of God that thou workest well, not by thine owne power. How peruenly then doth M. Bishop deale, that when the Apostle vseth the latter words to expoundeth former, he will take the former words to crosse the latter? Men are to bee called vpon by exhortation to doe good workes, but yet they are to knowe, that the effect of exhortation, is the worke of grace. True, saith M. Bishop. it is of grace, but not of grace onely: for Free will also hath a part. But S. Austine telleth, that it is more affectie for vs to attribute all wholly to God, and not committe our selues partly to God, and partly to our selues: and true faith requireth this in the defending of one God, that whatsoeuer is his, we make it onely his: for so shall it be accounted his, if it be accounted onely his. If God do worke in vs to will, let vs acknowledge it to bee his onely, and none of ours. God worketh principally, saith M. Bishop, by stirring vs up by his grace, and also helping forward our will to accomplish the worke, but so sweetly and conformably to our nature, that his working taketh not a ray, but helpeth forward our will to concurre with him. Heere is stirring up the will, and helping forward the will, and no more but what the Pelagians confessed, as I haue shewed before: but why doth he make it so daintie, to say as the Apostle saith that God worketh in vs to will? Hee nameth grace, which is but a grace if wee will, but wee require the grace which the Apostle teacheth, whereby God worketh in vs to will. Hee saith, that God doth not take away our will. So did Pelagius say: that God doth not work holinesse in vs without our will. Wee answer, that our will is the subiect wherein God worketh, as before was said, but it is no part of the efficient cause, whereby it is wrought in vs to will. The Arausicane Councell determineth, that if any man doe maintaine, that God expecteth our will that we may bee purged from sinne, and doth not confesse, that by the infusion and operation of the holie Ghost it is also wrought in vs to bee willing to bee purged, he resisteth the Apostle, in that hee preacheth according to wholesome doctrine, that it is God which worketh in vs, both to will & to worke, of his goodwill. This M. Bishop maintaineth: he saith that God offereth grace to that purpose, but expecteth our will to make

Aug. in Psa. 65.
Subiecti causam.
Deus est enim,
&c. Si ergo Deus operator in te,
gratia Dei bene o-
peraris non viti-
bus tuis.

d De hom. personeram. cap. 6. Tutiones vniuersi. si
toti Deo datus, & non nos illi ex
parte & nobis ex
parte committimus.

e Tertul. aduers.
Hermog. Vt et as sic vnum Deum
exigit d. semel. lo-
ut sol. us sit quicquid ipsius est: ita
enim ipsius est si
fuerit solus.

f Aug. c. ntr. Pel.
& C. c. lib. 1. ca.
7. Dicimus eam sine voluntate nostra nequaquam
in nobis perficere
sanctitatem.

g Concil. Arausi-
can. 2. cap. 4. Si
quis v. a peccato
purgemur volun-
tatem nostram, Deum expectare contendit: Non autem ut etiam
purgari velimus
per sancti Spiri-
tus infusionem & operationem in nobis fieri confite-
tur, resistet Apostolo, &c.

make good that grace to our selues: he confesseth that God stirreth and helpeth forward our will, but cannot endure to say, that it is God that worketh in vs to will. He answereth yet further, that the whole may be attributed to God, because the habits of grace infused, be frō him as sole efficient of thē, our actiōs endued also with grace, being only dispositions, & no efficient cause of those habits. But herein he absurdly triesth, by altering the state of the questiō. For the controuersie is not of the efficient cause of infused grace, but of the efficient cause of our receiuing that grace. We say, that the holy Ghost worketh the same immediat'y in our will; they say, that the grace of God and the Free will of man make ^h one efficient cause of the receiuing thereof. They say, that God offereth his grace with condition if we will; but we say, that God without putting vs to condition of our wil, worketh in vs to will, and where he expresth a condition doth himselfe performe the same ^l giving what he commandeth, and ^k himselfe making vs to do what he requireth to be done. The words of the Apostle are plain for vs, and as plaine against them. Now it should seeme that their diuinitie is verie low, where it is so high a point, and not easie for the vnlearned to conceiue, that God is the onely efficient cause of all infused grace. But I take it to be but a point of M. Bishops cunning thus to speake, yet his learning will gaine but small credit thereby.

^h Andrad. Orth. explicat. lib. 4. Ex gratia & libero arbitrio una causa constituitur nostre ad iustitiam applicatiōnis.

^l Aug. Confess. l. 10. cap. 29. Da quo i iubes.

^k De predest. sanct. cap. 11. Deus facit, ut illa faciamus. Ad Ephes. 1. 2.

9. W. BISHOP.

One other obiection may be collected out of M. Perkins third reason against Free will, which is touched, as hee saith, by the holie Ghost, in these words: When we were dead in sinnes. If a man by siene become like a dead man, he cannot concurre with God, in his rising from siene.

Ans^w. Sure it is, that he cannot, before God by his grace hath quickened, & as it were, reuiued him, to which grace of God, man giues his free consent. How can that be, if hee were then dead? Marry you must remember what hath been said before: that albeit man in sinne be dead in the way of grace, yet hee liueth naturallie, and hath Free will in naturall and ciuill actiōs: which will of his being by grace fortified, & as it were lifted vp vnto a higher degree of perfection, can then concurre and worke with grace to faith, and all good workes necessarie to life euerlasting. (As for examp^e) a Crab tree stocke hath no abilitie of it selfe, to bring forth apples, & therefore may be tearmed dead in that kinde of good fruite: yet let a sience of apples be grafted into it, and it will beare apples: euen so albeit our soure corrupt nature of it selfe be unable to fructifie to life euerlasting uerlasting yet hauing receiued into it the heauenly graft of Gods grace, it is enabled to produce the sweete fruite of good workes: to which alludeth S. Iames: Receiue the ingrafted word, which can saue our soules. Againe, what more dead then the earth? & yet it being tilled and sowed, doth bring forth, and beare goodly corne: now the word and grace of God is compared by our Saviour himselfe vnto seede, and our hearts vnto the earth that receiued it: what maruel then if we otherwise dead, yet reuiued by this linely seede, do yeeld plenty of pleasing fruit?

Cap. 1.

Mat. 13.

R. ABBOT.

Ephes. 2. 1.

This obiection M. Bishop saith, hee collecteth out of M. Perkins third reason against Free will, whereas it is indeede the whole matter of that third reason. He would haue kept due order, and haue answered the rest as well as this, but that hee doubted hee should haue answered the rest as badly as he hath done this. Hee propoundeth the obiection at his owne liking, and cutteth off what hee list. If man by sinne become like a dead man, he cannot concur with God in his rising from sinne. For this the words of the Apostle are alleaged by M. Perkins, When we were dead in sinnes. M. Bishop answereth sure it is that he cannot, before God by his grace hath quickened and as it were reuiued him, to which grace of God man giueth his free consent. Which answer, who is so blind as that hee cannot see how absurdlie it crosseth it selfe? Man must giue his free consent to grace, that he may be quickened thereby; and yet man cannot consent or concur with God, before he be quickened by grace. If man cannot consent or concur with God before he be quickened, then the consent of of his owne Free will cannot bee the efficient cause of his quickening, because that that cometh after, cannot be the cause of that that necessarily goeth before, and the effect is neuer the cause of it own cause. And this is indeede the verie truth, iustified by M. Bishops owne words, against his will. But his whole discourse driueth the other way, that a man not yet quickened, must by Free will giue consent to grace, and concur with God, that hee may be quickened; because though grace be offered, yet it taketh no effect vntill our Free will doe make way for it, and doe adde it owne indeauour and helpe to the worke thereof. Which is all one as to require of a dead bodie to giue consent, and to put to it owne helpe for the restoring of it selfe to life againe. Yet hee thinketh to cleere the matter of all impossibilitie: for asking the question againe, How can that
be,

bee (namely, that man should giue his free consent to grace) if hee were then dead? he answereth, Marry you must remember what hath been said before, that albeit man in sinne be dead in the way of grace, yet hee liueth naturally, and hath Free will in naturall and ciuill actions. But what is this to the purpose, seeing that spiritually hee still continueth a dead man? Yea but this will of his beeing fortified and lifted vp to a higher degree of perfection, can then concur and worke with grace to faith & all good workes necessarie to life euerlasting. Where he doth but runne in a ring, and in other words repeateth the same answer, still sticking fast in the briers, wherein he was tangled before. For how is this will to be fortified and lifted vp to a higher degree of perfection? Hee hath told vs before, by grace, and that to grace man must giue his free consent. So then he telleth vs that Free will cannot concur and worke with grace, except by grace it be first fortified & lifted vp to a higher degree of perfection: and yet it cannot be fortified by grace, and lifted vp to a higher degree of perfection, except it first concur with grace. I may here againe iustly returne vpon him his owne words, See how uncertaine the steppes are of men that wilke in darknesse, &c. Now the Reader will obserue that the obiection is of man dead as touching Free will or righteousnesse, and he answereth of naturall Free will onely fortified and lifted vp to a higher degree of perfection. What fortifying is there of a dead man, and how should he be lifted vp to a higher degree of perfection, except hee first recouer life? Why doth hee by babling and trifling bobbe his Reader, and make shew to say something, when indeed to the purpose he saith nothing at all? The argument still standeth impregnable. Man is not onely weake and vnperfect, but dead, not halfe dead, but wholly dead in sinne, and therefore by S. Austine likened to the Skm mouites son beeing dead, whom the Prophet Elizeus raised from the dead. He must be made aline from the dead, before he can concur with grace. Which if M Bishop confesse, or because he cannot deny, therefore hee must confesse also, that as the dead man hath nothing whereby to helpe himselfe to receiue life againe, so man spiritually dead, inwardly in soule dead, hath nothing in him, no facultie or power of the soule, whereby hee can any way further the recouerie of his owne life. But to fill vp the measure of his folly, he will set forth this matter vnto vs by a comparison. A Crab. vñe stocke (forsooth) hath no ability of it selfe to bring forth apples, and therefore

^b Aug. contra du-as Epist. Peta. lib.
4. cap. 5. & de
verb. s. Apost. Ser.
11.

^c Rom. 6. 13.

^d August. de ver. b.
Domi. ver. 18.
Mortuos ex va-
cat vbi nisi intus in anima e

therefore may be tearmed dead in that kind of good fruite: yet let a fiance of apples be grafted into it, and it will beare apples: euen so (saith he) albeit our sowre corrupt nature of it selfe be unable to fructifie to life euerslastingly, yet hauing receiued into it the heauenlie graft of Gods grace, it is enabled to bring foorth the sweete fruite of good works. Similes habent labra laetucas: as his doctrine is, so must his similitudes needs bee, crabbed and crosse. Is the Crab-tree stocke dead to the bringing foorth of apples, which by it owne naturally life without alteration, continueth life, and giueth nouriture and increase to the fiances and grasses of apples, that are engrafted and implanted vpon it? which receiueth nothing at all of the grasses or fiances, but ministereth vnto them that, wherby they bring foorth fruite? Is this the condition of the grace of God in vs, that wee giue it sappe and strength in vs to bring foorth good fruite vnto God? And yet the Crab-tree stocke in the receiuing of the new grasses is meeclie and wholie passiuē, and not actiue in any sort. The engrafting thereof is altogether the worke of the gardiner or husbandman. Yea and that they bring foorth such or such fruite, they haue it not of the stocke, but altogether and onely of their owne kinde. Therefore we must likewise say, that the nature of man in the receiuing of the graft of grace, is altogether passiuē and doth nothing thereto, and when ^e the superfluitie of maliciousnesse beeing cast away and cut off, the same grace vlceth our naturall powers to the bringing foorth of the fruite of good workes, the commendation of the fruite ariseth only from the grasse; from grace it selfe and the power thereof, not by the stocke, but by it selfe, digesting and turning all to the nature and qualitie of it selfe. So that his owne comparifon doth most effectuallly serue to strengthen our part, and to ouerthrow his owne. But as he vseth it, it fauoureth very rankly of the Pelagian heresie. For Pelagius made of the power of nature, ⁱ a fertile and fruitfull roote, which out of the will of man did bring forth diuersly, and might as the dresser thereof list, either bee garnished with the flowers of vertue, or else grow wild with the thornes of vice. Wherby as S. Austine noteth, he made one and the same roote, both of good and euill workes, euen as M. Bishop doth by his Crab-tree stocke, contrarie to the truth of the Gospell, and the doctrine of the Apostle. For in the Gospell wee read of ^o a good tree, and an euill tree, and that the good tree cannot bring foorth euill fruite, nor the euill tree good fruite. ^h The good e Iam. 1. 21.

ⁱ August. contra Pelag. & Colest. li. 1. ca. 8. Habemus possibilitatem vtriusque paritatis à Deo iustitiam velut quandam, ut ita dicam, radicem fructiferam atque fecundam, quae ex voluntate hominis diuersa generat & pariat, & quae possit ad proprii cultoris arbitrium vel nitere flore virtutum, vel sentibus horreare vitiorum.

Vbi n. n. intuentis quid loquatur v. nam eandemque radicem constituit bonorum & malorum, contra Euegelicam veritatem. & c.

g Mat. 7. 17. 18. ^h Quid est bonus homo nisi voluntatis bone, hoc est, arbor radice bone? Et quid est homo malus nisi voluntatis male, hoc est, arbor radice male?

tree is a tree of a good root, and the euill tree a tree of an euill root, not both of the same root. The tree of a good root is the man of a good will: the tree of an euill root is the man of euill will, not growing both vpon the Crab-tree stocke of M. Bishops Free will. Whereby wee are giuen to vnderstand, that for the bringing foorth of good fruit, it sufficeth not to haue any thing ingrafted in vs, but we our selues must become gaffes, to bee implanted into a new stocke, and to grow vpon a new root. Wee must be engrafted into the true Vine Iesus Christ, by him to bee purged from the corruption that wee haue drawne from our old root, and to liue wholly by his spirit, that we may bring foorth fruit, not according to our own nature and kind, as other gaffes doe, but according to a new life and nature, that we receiue by being ieiued vnto him. M. Bishop is of another mind; he will haue Christ to bee ingrafted vpon the Crab-tree stocke of our Free will: hee seeth no necessitie to leaue his old root to be engrafted into Christ. As for the place of S. Iames,^k Receiue the engrafted word, &c. it availeth him nothing at all: for it doth not import in any wise, that the word of God ingrafted in our naturall Free will, doth bring foorth fruit vnto God, but onely telleth vs in what sort the word of God is to bee receiued of vs, that it may saue our soules: namely, that it must be inwardly wrought in our hearts, that it may become to vs ^l the immortall seede, whereby through faith wee are ^l begotten and borne againe, and ^m created anew in Iesus Christ, which is not done ⁿ by the will of man, that is, by Free will, but God ^p of his owne will hath begotten vs, and that so, as that though ^q Paul plant, and Apollo water, yet God onely giueth the increase, and neither he that plante, he is any thing, nor he that watereth, (which is in vaine spoken if he that is planted or watered be any thing by his owne Free will) but God onely that giueth the increase. Another comparison he vseth of the earth What more dead, saith he, then the earth? and yet it being tilled and sowne, doth bring foorth and beare goodly corne. Whereof he maketh application thus: Now the word and grace of God is compared by our Sauiour to seed, and our hearts to the earth that receiue it. What maruell then if we otherwise dead, yet reuined by this liuely seed, do yeeld plentie of pleasing fruit? Where wee see how loth he is that the Pelagians in any absurdity should goe beyond him. As before hee made one root, so heere he maketh one ground of Free will, common and indifferent to good and euill, and which is strange, maketh it as natural ⁱ Ioh. 15. 1.^k Iam. 1. 21.^l 1. Pet. 1. 23.^m Iam. 1. 18.ⁿ Ephes. 2. 10.^p Ioh. 1. 13.^q Iam. 1. 18.^r 1. Cor. 3. 6.

tirall to this ground or earth to bring forth fruit of the seed of Gods word, as it is to the tilled ground to yeeld corne of the seede that is sowne vpon it. Moreover, of grace he maketh no other matter but the seed, which is, the word of God, ^r the law and doctrine, and exhortation, euen as Pelagius did; and that by this seed of Gods word Free will is reuiued, to bring forth plentie of pleasing fruit. But our Saviour Christ in the Gospell maketh foure sorts of ground, and thereof one onely good ground, which is not good of it selfe, but made good, hauing nothing in it whereof to bring forth fruit of the seed of Gods word, ^s untill the spirit be powred vpon it from above, that of a wildernesse it may become a fruiisfull field. So that the grace of God consisteth not in the seed of the word, but importeth a spirituall and heauenly influence of the blessing of God, altering and changing the nature of the soile of mans heart, that it may bee fit to receiue the seed, and to fructifie thereby. For otherwise the Scripture teacheth vs, that mans heart is a ^t stonie heart, that his ^u forehead is brasse, and his necke an iron sinew, and that to bestow labour vpon him by the word of God, is but as to wash ^x an Ethiopian or a Leopard, to take away the blacknes and spots of them, or to ^y plow vpon the rocke, where there is no entrance neither for plow nor seed. Therefore how focuer the seed be sowne, it auaileth nothing, neither can the will of man fructifie thereby, vntill it do ^z heare and learne of the Father to come to Christ, ^a that is, vntill it receiue a gift of the Father whereby to beleue in Christ, ^b it being meant not of the very earth, saith Austin, ^b but spirituallly which is said: The Lord will yeeld his sweetnesse, and our land or earth shall giue increase, as to note, that not by any power of our Free will. but onely by his sweet and heauenly dew, ^c the raine of righteousnesse, ^d the raine of blessing, which hee raineth vpon vs, we bring forth fruit of the seed of the word of God.

10. W. BISHOP.

Hauing hitherto explicated the state of the question, and solued such objections as may be gathered out of M. Perkins against it, before I come to his solution of our arguments, I will set downe some principall places, both out of the Scriptures and ancient Fathers, in defense of our doctrine, because he proposeth but few for vs, and misapplieth them too.

First then, God saith to Caine: If thou do well, shalt thou not receiue r August. contr. Pelag. & Celest. lib. 1. cap. 7. & Epist. 107. Gratian Dei posit in lege at que doctrina.

f Esa. 3. 2. 15.

t Ezech. 36. 26.

u Esa. 48. 4.

x Jerem. 13. 23.

y Amos 6. 12.

z Job. 6. 4. 5.

a August. de Predest sanct. cap. 8.

Nil est aliud quam donum accipere à Patre quo credat in Christum.

b Idem de peccat. mer. & remis. lib. 2. cap. 17. Sciat quàm verè non de terrastria, sed spirituatiler dicitur fit, Dominus dabit, &c.

c Ose. 10. 12.

d Ezech. 34. 26.

ceiue a reward? But if thou doe euill, thy sinne will presently bee at the gates, but the appetite of it shall bee vnder thee, and thou shalt beare dominion ouer it. *Heere is plaine mention made of the power, which that euill disposed man Caine had, not to sinne, if he had list'd; which was (no doubt) by the assistance of Gods grace, and on the other side, that grace did not infallibly draw him to good, but left it to his free choice, whether he wou'd follow it or no. And because they, who seeke out all manner of starting holes, wrest these words, of ruling and bearing sway, as spoken of his brother Abel, and not of sinne: first, to see their iniquitie, marke the text, where is no mention of Abel, neither in that verse, nor in the next before; but expresse mention is made of sinne in the next words before: therefore those Pronounes (that are to be referred to the words next before) must needs in true construction be referred to sinne, and not to his brother. Besides this plaine construction of the text, S. Augustine followeth saying as it were to Cain, Hold thy selfe content, for the conuersion of it shall bee to thee, and thou shalt rule ouer it. What (saith he) ouer his brother? God forbid, that so wicked a man should rule ouer so good: Ouer what then? but he shall rule ouer sinne. See how manifestly that worthy Doctour hath presented their caull. And if:: were need, I might ioine with him that most skilfull Father in the Hebrew text, S. Hierome, * who in the person of God expoundeth it thus: Because thou hast Free will, I admonish and warne thee, that thou suffer not sinne to overcome thee, but doe thou overcome sinne.*

Lib. 15. de ciuit. Dei, cap. 7.

* In quaest. Hebraic.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins, he saith, proposed but few places for them, and misapplied them too; and therefore he will himselfe set downe some principall places, both out of the Scriptures and Fathers, in defense of their doctrine. But what ill happe had hee at first to light vpon an example, whereby as Anstyn noteth, it is so manifest, ^a that howscuer God himselfe doe speake to the sense of man, either to his outward or inward senses, yet if he doe not by inward grace rule and worke the mind, all the preaching of truth auaileth nothing, and that it is the holy Ghost that must worke inwardly, that the medicine may auile that is outwardly applied.

^a August. de ciuit. Dei. li. 15. c. 16. Spiritus sanctus operatur intrinsecus ut valeat aliquid medicinae que adhibetur extrinsecus. alioquin etiamsi Deus ipse utens creatura sibi subiecta in aliquo specie humana sensus alloquatur humanos, &c.

nec interior e gratia mentem regat atque agat, nihil prodest homini omnis predicatio veritatis. Facit hoc Deus, à vasis misericordie, et à vasa discernens, &c. Et cap. 7. Hoc ipsum cum Deus locutus esse: ad Cain quidam profuit, &c.

Which

6 Prosper. de vo-
cat. Gen. li. 1. c. 9.
Profunditas illius questionis per li-
beri arbitrij velle
& nolle non solui-
tur, quia licet inset homini bonum
nolle, tamen nisi
donatum, non ha-
bet bonum velle.
c. Aug. de unitat.
Eccles. cap. 5. Hoc predico atq; pro-
pono, ut queque
aperta & mani-
festa deligamus. &
ca. 15. Nec ita ut
ea colligant & co-
memorent: que obscure vel ambigue
vel figurate dicta
sunt, que quisque
sicut voluerit in-terpreteretur ad
sensum suum. Talia enim recte in-telligi non pos-
sunt, nisi prius
ea que aperta sim-
plicitate sunt, firma
fide recitentur.
d. Genes. 1. 16.

e. Chrys. in Genes.
hom. 18. Ne putes
licet: tuum aduer-
satus sum sacrifi-
cium ob pravam
mentem, fratrisq;
oblationem accep-
tam habuerim ob
sanam intentionem,
quod idem primatu-
te deservit, & primogeniturae digni-
tate a te auferam.
Nam licet honore
ego illi proficiamus
fuerim, acceptaque
fuerint illius do-
na, verum ante ad-
te conuerso illius,
et u ipsius domi-
naberis. Atq; post nec arum hoc per-mitto, ut primo-geniturae privile-
gijs gaudeas, il-
lunque sub tua potestate & dominione esse inteo.

Which is a worke whereby God putteth difference betwixt the vessels of mercie and the vessels of wrath; so that the question why one receiveth the grace of God and another doth not, is not answered by the unwilling or nilling of Free will, as to say, one by free will would when God offered grace, the other would not, but by Gods working that in the one which he worketh not in the other, who both haue by nature to will and refuse, but neither haue to will but by the gift of God; whereas with M. Bishop, the worke of God is the same to both, neither doth God make the difference betwixt man and man, offering himselfe alike to all, but man by Free will either receiving or refusing, maketh difference betwixt himselfe and other men, God himselfe spake to Cain, yet was he not the better for it. M. Bishop telleth vs, that the reason was in his owne Free will, whereby he had it in his owne power, at his owne list to conuert and turne to God, and that God did signifie so much by saying vnto him, that the desire of sinne should be vnder him, and he should beare dominion ouer it. Where he should haue had regard to the proofe of his doctrine, to make choice of plaine and manifest pla- ces, as S. Austins rule is, not of such as being figurative or obscure, may be expounded and taken diuersly. There are sundry expositions of this place deliuered by the ancient fathers, and therefore there is no necessitie to urge vs to take that exposition which he alledgeth.
First, Chrysostome expoundeth the place according to the true meaning thereof, that God hauing by d the same phrase of speech constituted before the superioritie of the husband ouer his wife, doth here yeeld to the first borne a superioritie and kinde of Lordship ouer the rest of his brethren, which heere he signifieth to Cain, hee would not infringe, to giue him occasion that way of offense towards his brother, howeuer hee accepted his brothers sacrifice better then his, albeit ready to accept his sacrifice also if hee offered in the like sort as his brother did. Thinke not, that because I haue refused thy sacrifice because of thy corrupt minde, and haue accepted thy brothers sacrifice because of his upright and sound heart, therefore I will deprive thee of thy superioritie, and take away from thee the honour of thy birthright. For albeit I haue honoured him, and haue nec arum hoc permitto, ut primo-geniturae privile-
gijs gaudeas, il-
lunque sub tua potestate & dominione esse inteo.
der

der thy power and rule. Against this exposition M. Bishop giueth an exception, that there is no mention of Abel, neither in that verse, nor in the verse next before; but expresse mention is made of sinne in the next words before: therefore those pronounes (that are to be referred to the next words before) must needs be referred to sinne, and not to his brother. But if his skill had serued him to consider, that the Hebrew word there for sinne is in the feminine gender, and the pronounes relatives in the masculine gender, hee would haue learned thereby to except against this exception, and rather say, that the pronounes relatives must needs be referred to his brother, and not to sinne. And so the Greeke Translators did take it, the turning of H I M shall bee to thee, &c. So doth Arias Montanus translate it, being himselfe a Papist, yet that way incomparably more faithfull then commonly Papists are, The desire of H I M shall bee to thee, that is, in thy power, and thou shalt haue rule ouer H I M. Another exception he taketh from *S. Austin*s exposition of those words, who not acquainted with the Greeke and Hebrew Text, and finding in the Latine the pronounes eius and illius indifferent to the masculine or feminine gender, not thinking it fit in such meaning as hee conceived thereof, to attribute to Cain a dominion ouer his brother Abel, construeth the place as touching sinne, and deliuereth two interpretations thereof, but no way according to *M. Bishop*s meaning, nor any way fit to serue his turne: the more leaudly doth hee deale, to make S. Austin the patron of an opinion, which as appeareth in all this discourse, he did so highly and inwardly detest. One exposition of his is in the reading of the words thus: Ad te conuersio eius sit: let the conuerting or turning of it bee to thee, and thou shalt rule ouer it: as willing him to turne his sinne vpon himselfe, to accuse himselfe thereof, to know that hee was not to attribute his sinne to any other but himselfe, and therefore not to defend it, but to repent and to aske pardon of it, and that this was the way to subdue it, and to become master of it. Thus God left him not, as hee saith, without a commandement iust and holy and good, but in him giueth example, as was before said, how the commandement auaieth nothing from the mouth of God himselfe, where hee himselfe worketh not within, but which hee commandeth. To this agreeth in effect the exposition of Ambrose, though taking the words by way of accusation, which Austin construeth by way of precept or exhortation.

f. תשובה sinne.

g. תשובה the desire of him, or his desire, and ו: ouer him.

h. ἡ ἀποστροφή αὐτου.

i. August. de ciuit. Dei, lib. 5. cap. 7. Potest ita intelligi ad te conuersio conuersionem esse debere peccati, ut nulli alij seruetur: sibi tribuere debere quod peccat, &c. Tunc enim dominatur quisque peccato, si ut sibi non defendendis presumpsit, sed puniendo subiecit, &c.

A Ambro. de Cain
 & Abel. li. 2. ca. 7.
 In te reuertitur
 crimen quod à te cepit. Non habes
 in quo necessitatē
 magis quam men-
 tem tuam arguas.
 In te retorquetur
 improbitas tua, tu
 princeps illius es:
 Bene ait, Tu princeptus es illius. Etenim impietas ma-
 gis et quaedam est
 delictorium, &c.

1 Aug. ut supra.
 Cum commo a fuer-
 erit pars ipsa car-
 nalis ad aliquid
 perperam commit-
 tendum, si acquiescatur, Apostolo
 dicenti, Ne exhi-
 beat membra,
 &c. ad mentem
 dominā & vitia
 conuertitur ut
 subdit ratio do-
 minatur.

m Prosper. de vo-
 cat. gent. li. 2. ca. 4.
 Tu es hic error est,
 tuumque peccatum.
 Quiesce, et noli in-insistentem fratrem mouere: ad te poi-
 us tua culpa reuocetur. Noli peccato-regnum in te dare,
 sed tu potius in ipsum sume dominatum. Pœni-tendo enim nec
 in maius facinus
 progredieris, & ab
 eo in quo te dolēs
 displicuisse mun-
 daberis.

n Hieron. tradit.
 Hebr. in Genes.
 Quia liberi arbi-
 trij es, moues ut
 non tibi peccato-
 rum, sed tu peccato dominetur.

The sinne, saith God, returneth vpon thee which began of thee. Thou hast not wherein to blame necessitie more then thine owne minde. Thy wickednesse is turned backe vpon thee; thou art the beginner of it. Rightly doth hee say, thou art the beginner of it; for impietie is a mother of sinnes, &c. Thus hee maketh God in those words to accuse Cain of sinne, not to attribute to Cain Free will for conuerting vnto God. The other exposition of Austin is in reading the place, Ad te conuersio eius erit, &c. The conuerting or turning thereof shall be to thee, and thou shalt rule ouer it, vnderstanding sinne to be meant of carnall concupiscence or lust, and making the construction thus, that when carnall concupiscence is moued or stirred to commit any wicked thing, if a man rest and harken to the Apostle, saying, Let not sin reign in your mortall bodjes; giue not your members weapons of vnrightheousnesse vnto sinne, then it being tamed and ouercome, is conuerted and turned to be in subiection to the minde, that reason may haue the rule and dominion ouer it. Therefore he taketh it, as if God had willed Cain to giue ouer that which by his owne wicked desire and lust he had intended, and if he did resist it, it should turne and yeeld to him, and whilest it was not suffered to worke without, it might bee the better accustomed not to stirre within. Prosper bringeth these latter expositions all into one, as if God had said to Cain, This is thy error and thy sinne; be quiet, and be not moued against thy harmlesse brother; rather let thy sinne be charged vpon thy selfe: yeeld not to it that it should reign in thee, but do thou take on thee the dominion & rule ouer it. By repenting, thou shalt not goe to any further wickednes, & thou shalt be reformed in that wherein thou shalt grieue that thou hast offended me. Thus heere is counsell and commandement to Cain, but no assertion of Free will; and by Cains going forward in his wicked course, we see that Free will auaileth nothing to true obedience, and keeping of Gods commandement. Now then that M. Bishop can finde nothing in Austin, let vs see what Hierome hath to iustifie Cains example to be the maintenance of Free will. Hierome hath indeede the words and exposition which hee allegeth: Be-cause thou hast Free will, I admonish and warne thee, that sinne do not ouer-rule thee, but that thou ouer-rule sinne. But that this neither helpeth him, nor hurteth vs, it will easily and plainly appeare, if wee consider what was accorded before betwixt him and vs. For wee denie not Free will in morall and ciuill outward actions, as hath beene beene before acknowledged by him. For in vaine were education and lawes, and exhortations, and all precepts and directions of life, if there were not left in man a power to conforme himselfe outwardly to the prescriptions thereof. God hath left in nature some outwardmost lineaments, some vnperfect shadowes and portraiture of his image, for the preserving of publike order and so-cietie amongst men, which could not stand, if men for feare or shame, or other respects, could not containe and bridle themselues from those mischiefes and villanies, whereto corruption of nature doth incline them. To this the words of Hierome are to be referred. For Cain was now contriuing and plotting the murder of his brother. There was now no law to terrifie him from the accomplishing of that which he had intended, but God himselfe taketh vp-on him to set before him the horrour of his fact, and to reclaime him from proceeding any further. If therefore we doe with Hierome referre the words here questioned, to sinne, God speaketh to Cain to this effect: Why art thou so much offended that thy brother is better accepted then thy selfe? Why art thou thus mooued with enuie towards him, and intendest mischiefe against him? If thou doest well as he doth, assure thy selfe thou shalt be accepted as well as he. But if thou doe wickedly, if thou goe forward with that horrible villanie that thou hast conceiued, know for a sūretie, that thy sinne shall lie waiting for thee at the doore, and shall neuer cease to attend and follow thee, till it haue brought vpon thee iust reuenge. Wherefore I aduise thee to giue ouer, bridle thy passion, be master thus farre of thine owne affections; let not enuie carrie thee forward to commit so monstrous and vnnaturall a fact: it is yet in thine owne power, and therefore stay thy selfe, and giue no further way to this bloody desigement, to be sorrie when it is too late. Thus much, and no more, doe Hieromes words expresse vnto vs, and wee doubt not but Cain had Free will as touching committing of this cruell act. For if some man had stood in his way with a sword drawne, to slay him if hee should attempt the killing of his brother, who doubteth but that it would haue made him hold his hands? which hee could not, if hee had not had in him power and libertie to forbear. And if M. Bishop meant no more when hee speaketh of Cains power not to sinne, if hee had listed, we would acknowledge the same with him: but he would hereby prooue a Free will

o Aug. de Spir. & lit. cap. 28. Non vsquedeo in ani-
 ma humana ima-
 go Dei detrata est,
 vt nulla in ea ve-
 rit lineamenta
 extrema remanse-
 rint.

Origen. contr. Ce-
 lum. l. 4. Impossibile vt eius imi-
 gine lineamenta
 in totum deleant-
 tur, &c:

p Chrys. in Ge-
 hom. 18. Scichet
 ab initio quod
 fratrem hic adoriturus esset, & ideo antea verbis
 reprimis.

will to good, wheretō hee saith, Cain had the assistance of Gods grace, which yet did not infallibly draw him to good, but left him to his free choice, whether he would follow it or not. For prooffe whereof there is no shew of any syllable, either in the text, or in the other testimonies which he hath alleged. For as touching grace, wee finde heere none but that which the Pelagians spake of, to counsell and aduise him, whereas the true grace inwardly worketh whatsoever outwardly is counselled or aduised. And whereas he saith, that grace doth not infallibly draw to good, it is true indeede of his Pelagian grace, which consisteth onely in the commandement; but the true grace of God doth infallibly draw to good. ¹ No man, saith our Sauour Christ, can come vnto me, & that is to say, beleene in me, except my Father which hath sent me draw him: therby importing, that all that are drawne of the Father do come vnto him, that is, do beleene in him, because ² to be drawne of the Father vnto Christ, is to receiue a gift of the Father whereby to beleene in Christ; so that ³ they which beleene not are not drawne at all. Therefore our Sauour addeth in the next words; Euery one that heareth and leaureth of the Father, that is, euerie one that the Father draweth, commeth vnto me. Now M. Bishops drawing leaureth a man at his free choice whether hee will follow or not. He saith as the Pelagians did, ⁴ If he will, he doth so; if he will not, hee doth not: or as the Donatists, ⁵ If he will, he beleueneth; if he list not, he beleueneth not: if hee will, he perseuereth; if he will not, he perseuereth not. These were the progenitors and predecessors of his faith. But the true drawing grace, finding a man ⁶ resisting, drawing backe, unwilling, persecuting the faith as Paul did, ⁷ conuerteth his will to the faith; of unwilling, it maketh him willing; of resisting, it maketh him consenting; of an oppugner of the faith, it maketh him a louer thereof. Let M. Bishop acknowledge this grace, if hee will speake of grace as the Scripture speaketh: this is the onely true grace; and this grace Cain was neuer partaker of, and therefore being left to his owne will, hee did not what hee might haue done, in giuing eare to the warning and aduice that was giuen him of God.

¹ Joh. 6. 44.
² Aug. contr. duas
 epist. Pelag. lib. 1.
 cap. 19. Venire ad
 me intelligitur
 credere in me.
³ De praedest. sanct.
 cap. 8. Nihil est
 aliud quam donū
 accipere à patre,
 quo credas in Christum.
⁴ Prosper. de va-
 cat. gent. li. 2. ca. 9.
 Qui non credunt,
 nec trahuntur ut om-
 nino.
⁵ Aug. epist. 107.
 Libertate natura-
 li si vult, facit: si
 non vult, non facit.
 Verse 45.
⁶ Idem de vnir.
 Eccles. cap. 9. Cū arbitrio liberò homo creatus est, &
 si vult, credit in Christum: si non
 vult, non credit.
⁷ Hieron. aduers.
 Pelag. lib. 3. Qui trahitur, non sponte
 currit, sed aut
 retrechans & tar-
 dus, aut iniustus
 adducitur.
⁸ Aug. contr. duas epist. Pelag. li. 1. ca. 19 Quis trahitur si
 iam volebat? Et tamen nemo vaunit nisi velit. Tra-hitur ergo miris
 modis ut velit ab
 illo qui nouit intus in ipsis hominum cordibus operari, non ut homines quod fieri non potest nolentes credant, sed ut volentes ex nolentibus fiant. Et lib. 4. cap. 9. Ex repugnantibus consentientes, ex oppugnantibus amantes.

II. W. BISHOP.

The second is taken out of this text of Deut. I call this day (saith Cap. 30. 19. Moser) heaven and earth to witness, that I haue set before you, life, and death, benediction, and malediction, therefore chuse life, that thou maist liue and thy seed. Which words were spoken in vaine, if it had not beene in their power, by the grace of God, to haue made choise of life : or if that grace would haue made them doe it infallible, without their consent.

R. ABBOT.

Moses saith, ^a I haue set before you life and death, &c. Therefore a Deut. 30. 19. chuse life that thou maist liue. These words, saith M. Bishop, were spoken in vaine, if it had not beene in their power by the grace of God, to haue made choise of life. Where hee still goeth on with his Pelagian deuce, yeelding no more to grace, but onelic adiunare possibilitatem, to help the power of man, that whereas the power of man is not sufficient, it may by grace bee made able to make choise of life, but yet so, as that still it resteth in the will, whether to make vse of this power or not. But by the true grace of God, man not onely hath power to chuse, but indeed doth chuse the way of life. And although man haue no power in himselfe whereof hee can make vse to make this choise, yet the words of God are not therefore spoken in vaine, because the word & the preaching therof is the instrument whereby God worketh in man to chuse life, whilest through the spirite it taketh effect ^b according to the purpose and grace of God. Hee saith by the ministerie of the word, chuse life, and by his grace ^c openeth the heart to attend to that which he saith, and in the meane while ^d giueth repentance, ^e giueth faith, ^f giueth the spirite of wisdom and reuelation, ^g giueth to knowe the mysteries of the kingdome of heauen, ^h giueth a new heart, ⁱ giueth the feare of God, and all things wherein consisteth the choise of life. He saith, chuse life, but so, as that hee telleth vs alio, ^k Ye haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you, as if hee should say, that it is not by our Free will, but by his chusing of vs that wee make choise of him. ^l It is of God, saith Prosper, that man maketh choise of the way of God, and ariseth from his fall; and against allelection or choise proceeding of Free will innvincibly resisteth the sen-

^b 1. Tim. 1. 9.
^c Act. 16. 14.
^d 2. Tim. 2. 25.
^e Phil. 1. 29.
^f Ephie. 1. 17.
^g Mar. 13. 11.
^h Ezech. 36. 26.
ⁱ Ierem. 32. 40.
^k Joh. 15. 16
^l Prosper. de vocatione gent. lib. 1. ca. 9. Ex Deo est ut homo vitam Deo eligat & surgat à lapsu &c. Et post. Contra omnem electionem de libero arbitrio venturam inuictissimè illa resisteret sententia dicentis Apostoli: Quis est qui resistit &c.

in Au. de prædest. sanct. cap. 5. quod nisi ab illo qui se d. seruit ab alio cui non donauit quod donauit tibi?
in Jæm. de perfect. iustit. prop. finem. Inspirat elegantis charitatem Aug. epist. 107. Vocati one illa alia atq. ue secreta sicut magis sensu ut eidem legi atque doctrine accomoder assensu.
p. Bernard. de grat. et lib. arbit. Non quod vel ipse consensus ab ipso sit, &c. facit volente, hoc est voluntati sue consentiente.
q. In Cant. ser. 57 Illius desiderium tuum creat, & quod tu eius propterea sermone admittere iude est quod ipse se inat in rare.

ence of the Apostle, saying, Who separateth thee? what hast thou that thou hast not received? M. Bishop saith, My Free will, my choice hath made difference betwixt mee and another man; because when God made offer of life to vs both alike, I by Free will made choice thereof, and hee refused. But the Apostle telleth him, no. If hee haue made choice of life, it is no worke of Free will, it is a thing received. m Of whom, saith S. Austin, but of him who hath not giuen to another that which he hath giuen vnto thee? Who, as hee also answereth the Pelagian heretike obiecting the same place, n inspireth the loue whereby we chuse. He addeth further, that vainely it should bee said, Chuse life, if grace would haue made them doe it infallible without their consent. Where wee may wonder at his absurde manner of speech. Who was euer so madde, as to say that God maketh a man to chuse life without his consent, which is the same as if hee should say, that hee should make him consent without consent, for how should chusing be without consenting? Wee deny not consent, but we say with S. Austine, It is God who by his secret calling worketh the mind of man to giue consent. We say with S. Bernard, Consent is not of man himselfe, but God maketh a man willing, that is, consenting vnto his will. q It is his desire of thee, that causeth thy desire of him, and that thou art forward to receiue his word, it commeth of his forwardnesse and hastning to enter into thee.

12. W. BISHOP.

Into these two places of the old Testament (one under the law of Nature, and the other under Moses law) let vs couple two more out of the new Testament.

The first may be those kind words of our Saviour vnto the Iewes: Ierusalem, Ierusalem, &c. how often would I haue gathered together thy children, as the henne doth her chickens vnder her wings, and thou wouldst not? Which do plainly demonstrate, that there was no want, either of Gods helpe inwardly, or of Christs perswasion outwardly, for their conuersion: and that the whole fault lay in their owne refusing, and withstanding Gods grace, as these words of Christs do plainly witness, And thou wouldst not.

R. ABBOT.

If M. Bishop were put to the framing of an argumēt from this place, place, and to bring in this conclusion, that man hath Free will to conuert and turne to God, I suppose it would trouble him verie sore. The words do rather import, that howsoeuer Christ himselfe be amongst vs and speake vnto vs, yet our Free will auaieth nothing to make vs to hearken to him, but wee still refuse and rebell, vntill God do worke it in vs to obey and to hearken to his call. And thus Moses to giue a reason why the people of Israel profited not by the sight of so manifold signes and wonders, which the Lord had done before them and for them, saith, ^a The Lord hath not giuen you an heart to perceiue, and eies to see, and eares to heare vnto this day. Christ speaketh those words out of his humane affection; hee sheweth his loue towards them as man, hee signifieth his paines and labour bestowed amongst them, and what occasion hee had to complaine, as Esay had foretold, ^b I haue laboured in vaine, I haue spent my strength in vaine & for nothing. The words do no more import Free will then all other places of Scripture, that doe declare and set forth the rebellion of mans nature against God. But yet M. Bishop telleth vs, that hereby it is signified that God vsed all means that concerned him for the sauing of them, and they by their Free will crossed his purpose heerein. The words, saith he, do plainly demonstrate that there was no want either of Gods helpe inwardly, or of Christs perswasion outwardly, for their conuersion. But they doe not demontrate so much, yea by diuers places of the Gospell wee see they are verie farre from that demonstration. For if therewanted no inward helpe for their conuersion, how was it said by our Sauour Christ, ^c Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent of the world: ^d To them it is not giuen to know the secrets of the kingdome of heauen: ^e all things are to them in parables, that they seeing may see and not discern, and they hearing may heare and not understand, least at any time they should turne, and their sinnes should bee forgiven them? How was it said by the Euangelist S. Iohn: ^f Therefore could they not beleene, because Esay saith againe: Hee hath blinded their eies and hardened their heart, that they should not see with their eies, nor understand with their heart, and should bee conuerted and I should heale them? How doth S. Paul say; ^g The election hath obtained, but the rest haue bene hardened, according as it is written, God hath giuen them the spirite of slumber, eies that they should not see, &c. These things beeing so apparant and plaine, how doth M. Bishop tell vs that there wanted no helpe of God inwardlie for their conuersion, but the want was onelic in their owne Free will? Surelie ^h where God is willing to saue, as S. Austin saith, there no will of man resisteth. For to will or to nill, is so in the power of him that willerb or nilleth, as that it neither bindereth the will of God, nor ouerruleth his power, because euen of the wils of men he maketh what hee will. ⁱ In no wise may wee thinke, saith hee, that the Almighty God would haue any thing to come to passe, and that the same doth not come to passe; who if hee doe what soeuer he will both in heauen and earth, as the truth instructeth vs, surely had no wil to do what soeuer he hath not done. If therefore God had willed the conuersion of the people of Ierusalem, and had inwardly yeelded them grace for their conuersion, it had followed infallibly that they had bene conuerted, neither should the frowardnesse of their will haue defeated the purpose of his will. ^k My counsell shall stand, saith hee, and I will doe what soeuer I will: therefore of the children of Ierusalem, whom soeuer God would gather, hee certainly did gather. His will was to gather ^l a remnant according to the election of grace. Ierusalem would not, but resisted the will of God, and hindered so much as in it lay, the gathering of this remnant of her children. ^m But though Ierusalem would not, yet God gathered whom hee would, and to them hee yeelded his infallible sauing grace, whereby he worketh to will and to do, and giueth the gifts before mentioned of repentance; faith, knowledge, and such like, without which there is no conuersion, and the giuing whereof is our conuersion vnto God. Which seeing God gaue not to Ierusalem, saue onelic to his remnant, it is absurdly said by M. Bishop that there was no want of Gods helpe inwardly for their conuersion. Their refusing and withstanding was the fruite of Free will, which howsoeuer God do otherwife offer grace, hath nothing in it selfe, whereof to doe otherwife.

^a Deut. 29:4.^b Esai. 49.4.^c Mat. 11 25.^d Cap. 13. 11.^e Mar. 4. 11. 12.^f Job. 12. 39.^g Rom 11. 7.

13. W. BISHOP.

The last testimonie is in the Reuel. where it is said in the person of God: I stand at the doore and knock, if any man shall heare my voice and open the gates, I will enter into him, and will sup with him, and he with me. Mark well the words: God by his grace, knocks at the doore of our hearts, he doth not breake it open, or in any sort force it, but attendeth, that by our assenting to his call, we open him the gates, and then so, he with his heauenly gifts will enter in: otherwi'e he leaues vs. What can be more euident in confirmation of the freedom of mans will, in working with Gods grace?

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop doth somewhat plainly shew himselfe, and assureth vs that it is not without cause that wee haue hitherto accused him of the Pelagian heresie. The grace which for fashion sake hee speaketh of, is no other but such as whereby God knocketh at the doore of our hearts, but worketh nothing in our hearts, till we first of our selues assent to let him in. He attendeth till we open him the gates, and then he with his heauenly gifts will enter in; which was the damnable error of the Pelagians, that Gods grace and gifts are bestowed upon the precedence of our will and workes. But wee haue heard before out of the Araulicane Councell, that ^a if any man say that God expecteth or attendeth our will, and doth not confesse that God worketh in vs to will, hee gainesayth the doctrine of the Apostle. Which is the same as to say, if any man say that God attendeth for our opening the gates vnto him, and doth not confesse that God himselfe openeth the gates vnto himselfe, hee is contrarie to the doctrine of the Apostle. ^b The entrance of Gods calling is wrought or procured by the grace of God himselfe; he knocketh with one hand & openeth with another, ^c breaking the gates of brasse, and smiting the barres of iron in sunder, and howloeuver mightily he knocke, we neuer heare, we neuer open till he open and make entrance for himselfe. It is hee that ^d openeth the heart, hee ^e openeth the vnderstanding, hee ^f openeth the eies, he openeth ^g the eares, hee openeth ^h the lips, hee openeth ⁱ the doore of faith; and why then doth M. Bishop say, that hee attendeth till wee open? He doth not attend our assenting to his call, but ^k by his calling which is according to his purpose, he worketh in the hart of mē, that they be are not the Gospel in vaine, but do conuert, and turne & receiue it not as the word of man, but as it is indeed the word of God. And whereas he saith, that God doth not break open the doores, it is not alwaies true. For God sometimes with great violence atlaunteth the hart, & ^l by terror & feare pulleth men out of the fire, & as with a mightie hammer bre-keth the pride, & rebellio of the wil, fighting & stirring against him, when

^a Araulicane.
 Concil. 2. cap. 4.
 Supra sect. 8.

^b Aug. cont. iulian.
 epist. Pelag. lib. 4.
 cap. 6. Aditus di-
 uine uocationis
 ipsa Dei gratia procuratur.

^c Psal. 107. 15.
 d Act. 16. 14.

^e Luk. 24. 45.
^f Plal. 119. 18.

^g Job. 33. 16.
^h Psal. 50. 15.

ⁱ Act. 14. 27.
^k Aug. de predesti-

sanct. cap. 19.

Deus operatur in cordibus hominū

et occasione illa se-

culum tum propo-

sitionem, ut in ma-

nū er audiant Eu-

angelium, sed eo

audito conuertuntur & credunt, exipientes non ut uerbum homi-

num, sed sicut est
 uerū uerbum Dei.
^l Jud. ver. 23.

in Act. 9. 4.
 Aug. contr. du-
 as Epist. Pelag. li.
 1. cap. 19. Non aut duxerit, ut il-
 lic aliquo modo intelligamus pre-
 cedere voluntate.
 Quis trahitur,
 &c. ut supra sect.
 10.
 Idem. de pre-
 dest. sanct. cap. 20.
 Ostium ergo aper-
 tum est in eis, quibus datum est, ad-
 versarij autem
 multi ex eis quibus non est datum.

when men are in the height of their insolencie madly raging against him, hee striketh them to the ground, as hee did the Apostle S. Paul, and by astonishment ouercommeth and subdueth them vnto himselfe, thus, n not leading them as vpon their precedent will, but drawing them; not to beleue against their wils which is impossible, but of unwilling to become willing. In a word, when God knocketh, the doore is opened in them onlie to whom it is giuen, but they to whom it is not giuen are still aduerse, and they neuer open: and therefore
 M. Bishop saith amisse, that God attendeth that we open him the gates, or otherwise leaueth vs. Neither doe the words alledged serue for confirmation of the freedome of mans will, telling vs onely what must be done that God may enter, but not importing, that wee doe it by any power of Free will.

14. W. BISHOP.

To these expresse places taken out of Gods word, let vs ioin the testimony of those most auncient Fathers, against whose workes the Protestants can take no exception. The first shall be that excellent learned Martyr Iustinus in his Apologie, who vnto the Emperour Antonine speaketh thus: Vnlesse man by Free will could flie from foule dishonest deedes, and follow those that be faire and good; hee were without fault, as not beeing cause of such things as were done. But wee Christians teach, that mankind by free choice, and Free will, doth both do well and sinne.

To him we will ioin that holy Bishop and valiant Martyr Irenæus, who of Free will writeth thus: Not onely in workes, but in faith also, our Lord reserued liberty and freedome of will vnto man: saying, Be it done vnto thee according to thy faith.

I will adde to that worthy company S. Cyprian, who vpon those words of our Saviour, Will you also depart? discourseth thus: Our Lord did not bitterly inueigh against them, which forsooke him, but rather vsed these gentle speeches to his Apostles, will you also goe your way: and why so? Marrie obseruing and keeping (as this holy Father declareth) that decree, by which man left vnto his libertie and put vnto his free choice, might deserue vnto himselfe, either damnation or saluation. These three most aunciens, and most skilfull in Christian religion, and so zealous of Christian truth, that they spent their

Lib. 4. cap. 73.

Ioan. 6.
Lib. 1. Epi. 3.

their blood in confirmation of it, may suffice to certifie any indifferent reader, what was the iudgement of the auncient and most pure Church, concerning this article of Free will: specially when the learnedst of our Adversaries confesse all Antiquity, (excepting onely S. Augustine) to haue beleued and taught Free will. Heare the words of one for all. Mathias Illiricus in his large, long lying historie, hauing rehearsed touching Free will, the testimonies of Iustine, Irenæus, and others, saith, In like maner Clement Patriarch of Alex. doth euery where teach Free wil, that it may appeare (say these Lutherans) not onely the Doctōrs of that age to haue bene in such darknesse, but also that it did much increase in the ages following. See the wilfull blindness of heresie. Illyricus confessing the best learned in the purest times of the Church, to haue taught Free will: yet ha' rather beleue them to haue been blindly led, by the Apostles and their best Schollers who were their Masters, then to espie and amend his owne error. These principall pillars of Christs Church were in darknesse belike as Protestants must needs say: and that proud Persian, and most wicked Heretick Manes (of whom the Manichees are named) who first denied Free will, began to broach the true light of the new Gospel.

Cent. 2. cap. 4.
col. 59.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop held it to bee the best course for him clauum clauo pellere, to drive out one nail with another, not answering the places which M. Perkins alledged out of the Fathers, but onelie crossing them with other places. Nay, hee so passed them ouer, as that frau-dulently and falsly hee would make his Reader beleue, that they made all for him. But marke I pray thee gentle Reader, when *M.
Bishop* driueth all to this, that when God hath done his worke for mans conuersion, it is left to mans free choice, whether to will the same or not, doth it make for him, or is it not against him which *M.
Perkins* citeth out of Austin, that ^a man therefore willeth, because God worketh in him to will? Surelie if man therefore will, because God worketh in him to will, then Gods worke doth not leaue man to the free choice of his owne will. When M. Bishop saith, that there is in man a naturall facultie of Free will, which being stirred up and fortified is able to do any act appertaining to saluatiō, doth the same S. Austin agree with him when he affirmeth, ^b that man lost Free will to the lose

^a Aug. de corrup.
& grat. cap. 12.

Ideo sic uolunt,
quia Deus opera-
tur ut uelim.

^b Epist. 107. Liberum arbitrium a d deligendum Deum
primum peccati graduate perdi-
dimus.

6 Bernard. de grat.
lib. arb. Totum
ex gratia.

d J. n. Martyr.
Apol. 2. Ne quis
nostra dicta sic accipiat, quasi Eati
necessitatem affe-
ramus, & que si-
unt ideo fieri,
quia predicta sūt:
explicabimus hoc
quoque, &c.
e Aug. contra du-
as Epist. Pelag. lib.
2. cap. 6. & in P. sa.
140 & de ciuit.
Dei. lib. 5. cap. 1.
f Hominem libero
arbitrio, liberaque voluntate & pec-
care & recte age-
re docemus.
g Prosper de vo-
cat. Gent. lib. 2. ca-
9. Virtus nolenti-um nulla est.
h Aug. Epi. 107.
ut supra Sect. 1.
i Idem de grat. &
lib. arbit. cap. 14.
Non defensores,
sed instatores &
precipitatores li-
beri arbitri.
k Iust. in. ut supr.
ἐν τρέπον τῆν ἀρ-
χὴν ἢ καὶ ὅτι οὐκ ἐ-πίνοιστε, ἅ αὐτοὺ
ἀρρομθε τρέπον
διὰ τὸ ἐλεῆσαι τοὺ
ἀθεομάνους τὰ
αὐτοῦ ἀρετὰ καὶ
ἀσθαρίαι καὶ σωμοσίας κατεξιοῦσθαι. τὸ μὲν
ἄρξῃν ἄρξῃν γὰρ
ἄρξῃ, ἐκ ἡμετέροι
ἂν, τὸ ἃ ἐξικολω-
θεῖται οἷς εἶλον
αὐτῶ ἀθεομάνους
διὰ αὐτοῦ εἶδο-
ρήσασθαι λογιῶν
διωξάμεσθαι, πειθεῖ
τὸ καὶ οἷς πῖσιν
αὐτῶ ἡμῶν.

loue of God by the greatnesse of Adams sinne? When hee attributeth mans conuerſion but onely principally to grace, and blameth vs for that wee attribute the whole worke to grace, doth S. Bernard agree with him, when hee saith, e that it is wholly of grace that wee are new created, healed, ſaued? By these it is easie to make application of the rest; but we may looke for good answers at his hands hereafter, who in the beginning being so directlie oppugned, would seeke thus in a cloud to steale away. But if M. Perkins were able to say nothing against him, we must think hee is able to say for himselfe exceeding much. Yet his first authority out of Iustinus Martyr, maketh nothing at all for him: for being written to an heathen Emperour, it toucheth onely morall and externall actions, in which we deny not but that God hath left some freedome and libertie to mans will, as before hath been declared. His verie^d drift there, is to condemne the wicked fancies of Astrologers and Stoike Philosophers, who did hang all vpon e destinies and constellations, and fatall necessitie, and thence sought excuse of their lewde and abominable actions. And if we will more largely extend the words, yet are they nothing for M. Bishops urine. f We Christians, saith he, do affirme, that by free choice, and Free will, mankind doth both doe well and sinne. And so much wee affirme also, that man by free choice and Free will doth well, for there g is no vertue where a man hath no will to that hee doth: but we say still against M Bishop, that this is not that Free will that he requireth: it is not a power of nature, but wholly the effect of grace: h It is the grace of God whereby mans will is made free, both to eschue euill and do good; and they that teach any other Free will, they are i not the defenders, but the puffers up and break-neckes of Free will. And no otherwise did Iustine Martyr conceiue thereof, as appeareth by these words in the same Apologie: k In like sort as God created vs when wee were not, so do wee thinke that hee vouchsafeth them of immortallitie and being with him, who willinglie make choice to do those things that are pleasing vnto him. But to haue being at the first, it was not of our selues. In like sort then to choose and follow what is pleasing to him by those reasonable powers which hee hath giuen vs, it is by his perswading and moning of vs to the faith. In which words hee plainly confelleth, that Free will to righteoufnesse is wholly the gift of grace, and no more of our selues, then it was at first to create our selues. The place of Irenæus auaileth him as little, who disputing in like like sort against them that held, that men by an immutable necessitie of created nature, are some good and some euill, proueth, that good and euill consist in election and will, and that this appeareth, ¹ by that the Apostle, and before him our Sauiour Christ, did giue counsell to doe some things, and from some other things to abstaine. Afterwards he sheweth, that not in workes onely, but also in faith our Sauiour reserved to man libertie and freedome of will, meaning that it is ² not by any compelling violence that a man either beleeueth or worketh, but ^m by condition of nature he is such as may either beleuee, or not beleuee; and when he beleueeth, it is by his will that he beleueeth, and by a power of the will that he hath to beleuee: yet so, as that we must say with S. Austine, ⁿ Sed ea potestas nulla est nisi a Deo datur; but that power is none, except it be giuen of God. We may not take Irenaeus to be so grosse, as to thinke faith to be of our owne power, which the Scripture so plainly telleth vs, is the gift of God. And as the places that he aliegeth are farre from any such purpose, ^p According to thy faith be it vnto thee: ^q All things are possible to the beleuer; so hee himselfe elswhere out of the words of the Apostle, ^r I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing; plainly affirmeth, ^s that the good which belongeth to our saluation, is not of our selues, but of God, and that the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ is our deliuerer, that is, the thing whereby we are made free. Therefore he praiech for the Heretikes, against whom he wrote, that ^t they might not continue in the pit which they had digged, but might be conuered to the Church, and that Christ might bee formed in them, and that they might know the only true God and Lord of all. Whereby it appeareth, that he did not take repentance, and faith, and conuersion to God, to be matters of our Free will and power, but the mercifull gifts of God, and therefore by praier to be begged at his hands. The place of Cyprian soundeth very harshly, but yet being taken in that sense wherein the Fathers commonly spake before the Pelagian heresie, namely, to affirme against the Manichees an act of mans will both in good and euill, so that by his will and election it is that either hee is good or euill, it importeth nothing against vs, because wee denie not the act and election of mans will, but onely teach, that this act and election of the will is nothing at all of it selfe, as touching righteoufnesse, but only what it is by being corrected and re-ctified by the grace of God. Our Sauiour faith to his Disciples, Will ¹ Iren. li. 4. ca. 72.

Si non in nobis esset facere haec, nisi non facere, quam causam habebat apostolus, et multo prius ipse Dominus consummare dare?

² Non de viuentia cogens.

^m Aug. de Praedest. sanct. cap. 5. Posse habere fidem sicut posse habere charitatem natura est hominum: habere autem fidem sicut habere charitatem gratia est fidelium. Vid. Prosp. de vocat.

ⁿ Gen. lib. 2. cap. 7.

^p Aug. Retract. lib. 1. cap. 22.

^q Ephes. 2. 8.

^r Mat. 8. 13.

^s Mar. 9. 23.

^t Rom. 7. 18.

^u Iren. lib. 3. ca. 22.

Significans quantum non à nobis sed à Deo est bonum saluum nostrum. Et iterum:

Miser ego homo, &c. Deinde infert liberatorem gratia Dei, &c.

^v Job. c. 46. Nos precamur non persequere eos in foueam quam ipsi fouerunt, sed segregari ab huiusmodi matre &c. & legitur etiam eos generari conuerso ad ecclesiam Dei, & formari Christiani in eis &c. & cognoscere eos fabricatorem huius universi situati, &c.

^u Lib. 1. ep. 3. Ser-uans legē quā ho-
mo libertati suae
reluctus, & in pro-
prio arbitrio con-
sistutus sibi: ip-
si, vel mortem ap-
petit, vel salutem.

^x Aug. contra 2.
Epist. Pelag. lib. 4.
cap. 9. & de Pre-
dest. sanct. cap. 1.
& de bono persequ.
cap. 19. &c.

^y Cyp. ad Quir.
lib. 3. cap. 5. In nullo gloriamur
quanto nostrum
nihil sit.

^z Lib. 2. Epist. 2.
Dei est, Dei est
omne quod possi-
mus: inde polle-
mus, inde tolle-
mus.

^a Cypria. in Oras.
Dominic. Admonensur infirmitatis & imbecillita-
tis nostrae, dum sic
rogemus ne quis se
insolenter extol-
lat, ne quis sibi superbē atque arro-gantē aliquid as-sumat, ne quis aut
confessionis aut
passionis gloriam
suam uicet, &c. ut dum praecedet & submissa confessio, & datur ro-tum Domino.

quicquid supplici-
ter petitur, ipsius
pietate proficitur.

^b August. de bono perseuer. cap. 67.
Nihil nobis reli-
quit, in quo tan-
quam in nostro gloriamur. Siqui-dem & ut non

discedamus à Deo non ostendit, dandum esse nisi à Deo, cum poscendum ostendit à Deo. Qui enim non infertur in tenta-tione, non discedit à Deo. Non est hoc omnino in uiribus Liberi arbitrij quales nunc sunt, fuerat in homine antequam caderet, &c. Praef casum autem hominis non nisi ad gratiam suam Deus uoluit pertinere, ut homo accederet ad eum, nosque nisi ad gratiam suam pertinere uoluit, ut homo non recederet ab eo. ^c Ibid. cap. 6. Tutiores uicimus si totum Deo da-uimus, non autem nos illi ex parte & nobis ex parte commisitimus. Quod uidit iste uenerabilis Martyr, &c.

ye also goe away? ^a He obserueth the law (saith Cyprian) whereby man lest to his libertie, and put to his owne will, (not deserueth, as M. Bishop falsely translateth, but) desireth to himselfe either death or saluation:
importing heereby, that man freely and by his owne will maketh choice to continue with Christ vnto saluation; but not affirming, that mans owne will is heerein free of it selfe, or hath of it owne, whereby to make this choice. And that he was of farre other mind then so to thinke, appeareth by his owne words, ^x often cited by Austin against the Pelagians: ^y Wee are to glorie of nothing (namely as touching righteousnesse) because therein nothing is our owne. ^z It is of God, saith he, all that we can doe: of him it is that we liue; of him it is that we haue any power. But most direct to this purpose is it which hee noteth as touching the petition of the Lords praier, Leade vs not into temptation, that wee are therby ^a put in minde of our owne frailties and weaknesse, and that for perseuering and continuing with Christ to the glorie of confessing him, and suffering for his sake, it is whollie to be ascribed vnto God, and wee are not to assume any thing proudly to our selues. Whereof S. Austin collecteth (as before) against the Pelagian heresie, that ^b Cyprian leaueth vs nothing wherein to glorie as our owne; that he sheweth, that not to depart from God, is no otherwise but giuen of God, in that he teacheth, that it is to be begged of God for hee that is not led into temptation, doth not depart from God. This, saith he, is not in the strength of Free will as now it is. It was in man before his fall, but after the fall of man God would not haue it belong saue onely to his grace, that wee come vnto him; neither would he haue it belong saue onely to his grace, that we doe not depart from him. Thus hee conceued and obserued as touching Cyprians meaning out of Cy-prians owne words, and bereaueth M. Bishop of Cyprians warrant for that, which he would father vpon him by some words ob-scurely vttered in another place. ^c Cyprian that worthy Martyr saw well enough, saith he, that we liue most in safetie, when we ascribe all to God, and do not commit our selues partly to God, and partly to our selues.
By these three therefore M. Bishop hitherto hath gained nothing, but by Cyprian, whose words seeme to make most for him, he gaineth least of all. But now hee vttereth the confession of some of our best learned, that all Antiquitie (excepting onely S. Austin) beleued and taught Free will. To this purpose he allegeth a place out of the Centuries, which he calleth a large long lying historie; marry speaking but by roate as children doe, or as the Clowne did of Aristides, who giuing his voice to the banishment of the same Aristides, and being asked of him vnknowne, ^d whether he knew him against whom ^d hee gaue his voice, answered, that hee knew him not, but it was trouble ^d unto him to beare him tearmed a iust man. For so M. Bishop knoweth not the Centuries, (alas poore man, what should hee meddle with such great bookes?) but hee hath heard that Protestants were the Authors thereof, and that is enough to warrant him to giue his voice against them. But his fellowes know, that they haue good cause to speake well of the Authors of those Centuries, because by them they haue been able to say more for themselves then euer they were before: so faithfully did those men deale in the compiling of that storie. Now they say indeed, as hee allegeth from his Author, that Clement Alexandrinus doth euerywhere teach Free will, and that not onely the Doctors of that age were in such darknesse, but also that it did much increase in the ages following. Where taking the matter to be simply, as they say, and as M. Bishop doth obiekt, what doth hee ^e gaine more by that obiection, then the Pelagians did? ^e who defended their obstinacie by antiquitie, and affirmed, that none of all the Eccllesiasticall Writers that were before, did so expound the Scriptures, as Austin did, namely, against the Free will and merits of man: and that examining the opinions of the more ancient Fathers, they were found to be in a manner all of one minde against him. But this hee tooke to be no sufficient argument, but freely professeth of his doctrine, ^f I know that no man without error could dispute against it. He excuseth the ancients that were before him; ^g that before the heresie of the Pelagians began, they had not any such neede to deale much in that question, and therefore what they thought of the grace of God, they touched but briefly and by the way, in some places of their workes, but stood more upon those things which they handled against other enemies of the Church. Yet he saith, that by their supplications and prayers it plainly appeared what grace doth, because they could not haue asked of God those things

^d Plutarch. Apophtheg.

^e Prosper. Epist. ad August. Objectionem suam uelut late defendit. A nullo unquam Eccllesiasticorum ita esse intellecta ut nunc sentiamus, affirmant.

^f August. de bono perfector. c. 18. Hoc scio, neminem contra istam Prædeterminationem, nisi errando disputare potuisse.

^g De prædest. sanc. ca. 14. Priusquam ista heresis oriretur, non habuerit necessitatem in hac difficili ad solutionem questione versari, &c. unde factum est, ut de gratia Dei quid sentirent, breuiter quibusdam scriptorum suorum locis & transiuntur attingerent, immorarentur uero in ea que aduersus alios inimicos Ecclesie disputabant, &c. frequentationibus aut orationibus simpliciter apparebat Dei gratia quid ualere. Non enim poscerentur à Deo que præcepit fieri, nisi ab illo donaretur, ut fierent.

whicb

h De homo perseuer. cap. 23. Non oraret Ecclesia, ut
daretur infideli us fides, nisi Deum
crederet, & auer-
sas & aduersas
hominum ad se
concurrere volun-
tates: nec oraret Ecclesia ut perse-
craret in fide Christi, nisi crede-ret Dominum sic
in potestate habere cor nostrum, ut
bonum quod non tenemus nisi pro-
pria voluntate,
non tamen tona-
mus, nisi ipse in nobis operetur &
welle.

i Ibi. c. 20. Di-dicimus singulas
quasque hereses inualisse Ecclesie
proprias questio-
nes: contra quas di-
ligentius defende-retur Scriptura
diuina, quam si
nulla talis necessi-tas cogeret. Quid
autem cregit loca Scripturarum,
quibus predestina-
tio commendata
est copiosius & enucliatius isto no-
stro labore distendi.
nisi quod Pelagia-
ni dicunt. & c.

k Ibid. cap. 19
l De nat. & gra.
cap. 61.

m Prosper. de lib.
arbit. Nullius authoritatibus testimo-
nium de libello
Pastoris.

n Ruffin. in expo-
sit. Symbol. apud

Cyprian. o Aug. de homo perseuer. cap. 19. Ista tales antique Doctores dicentes non esse aliquid de quo tanquam de nostro quod nobis Deus non dederit, gloriemur, nec ipsum cor nostrum & cogitationes nostras in potestate nostra esse, et totum dantes Deo, atque ab ipso nos accipere confitemes, ut permansuri conuertamur ad eum, ut id quod bonum est, nobis quoque videatur bonum, & quod uelimus illud, ut honoremus Deum, & recipiamus Christum: ut ex inde uotis efficiamur deo: i & religio, ut in ipsam Trinitatem credamus, & consitemur etiam uoce quod credimus, hec utique gratia Dei tribuitur, & c.

which he hath commanded to be done, but that they held that the doing thereof is the gift of God: ^h that the Church would not haue praied to God, as it alwaies did, to giue men repentance, faith, obedience, perseuerance, but that it belscued, that God so hath our heart in his power, as that hee worketh in vs to will the good that wee cannot haue without our will. He further obserueth, that ^l all heresies haue brought their seuerall questions into the Church, by occasion whereof, as touching those points, the truth of Scripture was the more diligently defended, and that by occasion of the Pelagian heresie, the places of Scripture concerning Predestination and grace of God, were by his labour more plentifully and plainly defended then they were before. And to conclude, out of all Antiquitie before him, he bringeth only ^k foure or siue testimonies out of Cyprian, Ambrose, and Gregorie Nazianzene, whereby to iustifie what he taught. Now by this answer of Austin to the Pelagians, M. Bishop and his fellows must receiue their answer. If it were no prejudice to him, that the Fathers before him taught otherwise then he did, it is no prejudice to vs teaching the same that hee taught. Hee professed himselfe ^l to bee free in the writings of any such men, and that it was the Scripture only to which hee was bound, without refusall to giue consent: why then doth M Bishop seeke to bind vs in a matter wherein S. Austin refused to bee bound? Prosper being vr- ged by the Pelagians with a sentence out of the booke of the Pastor, reiected it ^m as a testimonie of no authority, albeit Antiquity had ⁿ so accounted of that booke, as that they had ioined it to the booke of the new Testament, and did reade it publikely in their Churches: and doth M Bishop thinke it much, that wee reiect some few testi- monies alleged by him of farre lesse authoritie then that was? But yet Austine found in these few testimonies of the more ancient Fa- thers, sufficient to iustifie both for him and vs, ^o that we haue nothing whereof to glorie as ours, which God hath not giuen vnto vs; that our heart and thoughts are not in our owne power, but Gods: that all is to be ascribed vnto God, and that we must confesse, that we receiue all wholly of him, as touching our conuersion to God, and continuing with him: that it is wholly the gift of grace, the gift of God, which of him we haue, and not of our selues to will that that is good: to receiue Christ, to beleene in God, and by voice to confesse that which wee beleene. And surely howsoeuer those more ancient Fathers spake obscurely of Free will, and some of them questionlesse meant amisse, yet for the most part their speeches being applied, as I said before, against heathen Astrologers, and wicked heretikes, excluding mans will wholly from being any cause either of good or euill, they spake worse then they meant, and if wee will take their words with those qualifications and constructions, wherewith S. Austin cleared some speeches of his against the Manichees, as ^p before was shewed in the answer to M. Bishops ^p Sett. 6. Epistle, they shall easily be reconciled to the truth. Therefore in them also that speake most amisse, we find sometimes a right and true acknowledgement of the grace of God. Who was a greater Patron of Free will then Origen? who yet notwithstanding confesseth, ^q that our will sufficeth not for the hauing of a cleane heart, but that wee haue need of God to create the same in vs, and that therefore he that knoweth how to pray, saith, Create in mee a cleane heart, O God: that the true knowledge of God by his mercie and grace is granted onely vnto them who are predestinate to liue worthie of him whom they know: that whatsoeuer is in vs worthy our reioicing, is not our owne, but the gift of God. Yea where he affirmeth, that there is in euery soule a strength of power and freedome of will, whereby it may doe euery thing that is good; yet further to expresse his mind hee addeth, that this benefit of nature was cropped by meanes of sinne, and was turned aside to shame and lasciuiousnes; but that the same being repaired by grace, and restored by the doctrine of the word of God, doth giue that sweet saour which God the first Creator put into it, but the trespassse of sinne had taken away. Where it appeareth plainly, that in speaking of Free will, his purpose was to shew what mans will is by condition of creation, & to what it may be repaired by the grace of God, not what power it hath of itselfe in this state of corruption, to open to God when hee knocketh, or to assent to God when he calleth. And thus Clemens Alexandrinus affirming Free will against the heretikes Valentinus and Basilides, who thought that men by an essentiall state of nature were some good, some euill, some faithfull and some vnfaithfull, so as that the will of man is nothing at all either way, yet referueth due

^q Orig. contr. Cels. sum. l. 7. Nostri propositi una res est: sufficiens ad hoc, ut mundum cor habeamus, sed Deo est opus qui tale nobis creet: idcirco qui scit precari, dicit, Cor mundum, &c.

^r Ibid. Bonitate ac humanitate Dei, & diuina ipsius gratia concedi ut cognito Dei diuitaxat his qui ad hoc predestinati sunt, ut cognito Deo dignè uiuant, &c.

^s In Matt. cap. 13. Quod gloriosum dignum est, et nostrum non est, sed donum est Dei.

^t In Caus. Hom. 4. Sed quis hoc nature bonum preparationis occasione descriptum, vel ad inominam, vel ad lasciuiam fuerat inflexum, ubi per gratiam reparatur, & in doct. Trinitatis uerbi Dei restituitur, odorem reddis sine dulcō illius quom primus Conditor Deus imderat, sed peccati culpa subtraxerat.

^u Clem. Alexand. Sir. m. l. i. Oportet mentem habere sanam, &c. ad quod maxime diuina opus habemus gratia, recteque diuina, castaque & munda animi affectione, & Patris ad ipsum attractione.

^z August. de corrept. & grat. ca. 1. Liberum arbitrium & ad malum & ad bonum facientium consistens est nos habere: sed in malo faciendo inuisus, peccati autem seruus: in bono autem liber esse nullus potest, nisi fuerit liberatus ab eo qui dixit, Si vos filius &c.

^y Rom. 6. 17:

^z Iren. lib. 3. ca. 1. Euangelium nobis in Scripturis tradiderunt Apostoli eo uocatum & fundamentum fidei nostre futurum.

^a Esa. 8. 20.

^b Aug. cont. duas Epist. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 9. Excogitauerunt Manicheorum detestabili nomine imperitos quos potuerint deterrere ne aduersus eorum dogmata peruersissima aures accommodans ueritati.

place to the grace of God, saying, ^u*We haue speciall need of Gods grace, and true doctrine, and of chaste & pure affection, and of the Fathers drawing vs to himselve.* Where by affirming the Fathers drawing vs to himselve, hee plainly excludeth the voluntarie opening and assenting, and yeelding of Free will, because drawing (as before was shewed out of Austine) importeth that there is no will in vs, till God of vnwilling doe make vs willing. Let one speech of Austine serue to cleare all this matter. ^a*We must confesse (saith hee) that we haue Free will both to doe euill and to doe good.* This is the common assertion of the Authors whom M. Bishop opposeth against vs: but let vs take the words following withall, and by them expound the same assertion. For euill-doing euery man is free from righteousnesse, and the seruant of sinne, (there hee hath alreadye Free will) but in that that is good no man can be free, except hee be made free by him that saith, If the Sonne shall make you free, then are ye free indeed. If any of them thought otherwise, they erred in that they thought: neither learned they so to thinke of the Apostles, or their best scholars, as M. Bishop idely talketh, but either borrowed it of heathen Philosophers, or presumed it of themselues. And whatsoeuer they thought or meant, their manner of speaking was not Apostolike, neither learned they it by the word of God: and therefore those times were not the purest times, which had thus in phrase and speech varied from that ^y*character and forme of doctrine, whereto the Church was first deliuered.* And if M. Bishop will say, that they learned these things of the Apostles, then he must condemne Saint Austine, and the whole Catholike Church of that time in which Austine liued, for teaching otherwise then they taught: which if he will not doe, he must perforce acquit vs as well as him, and let the blame rest vpon them to whom it doth appertaine. Whom we account no further to bee Pillars of Christs Church, then they themselues continued built vpon the Gospell, which Christ hath made ^z*the pillar and forresse of our faith*: neither doubt we to say of them that they were in darknesse, where the ^a*word of the law and testimony* did not giue them light. Now for conclusion, he vpbraideth vs againe with the heresie of the Manichees, onely to shew himselve a perfect scholar of the Pelagian schoole. For so did the ^b*Pelagians* object to Austine and other Teachers of the Catholike Church, that they tooke part with the Manichees, and defended their heresie in the denying of Free will. They called them Manichees, and of themselves said, that they dealt for the Catholike faith against the prophane opinion of the Manichees, only to colour their owne heresie and enmitie against the grace of God, by falsely vpbraiding their aduersaries with another. But S. Austin answered them, The Manichees deny, that to man being made good. Free will became the beginning of euill: the Pelagians say, that man being become euill, hath a will sufficiently free for the doing of the commandment of good. The Catholike Church condemneth them both, saying to the Manichees, God made man iust; and to the Pelagians, If the Sonne shall make you free, then are you free indeed. Let M. Bishop turne the name of the Pelagians into Papiſts, and take this answer to himselfe. The Pelagians and Papiſts are not therefore to be approoued, because they condemne the heresie of the Manichees, but are therefore to be detested, because they haue set vp another heresie of their owne. Two errors (saith S. Austine) may be contrarie one to the other, and both to be detested, because they are both contrarie to the truth. So is it with the Manichees and Papiſts: and wee take the course that the ancient Church did to condemne them both. But of this matter I haue spoken sufficiently before in answering his Epistle, and therefore need not heere to stand vpon it.

15. W. BISHOP.

Here I would make an end of citing Authorsties, were it not that Caluin saith, that albeit all other ancient Writers be against him, yet Saint Augustine as he vaunth, is cleerely for him in this point: but the poore man is fouly deceiued, as well in this, as in most other matters. I wil briefly prooue, and that out of those workes which S. Augustine wrote after the Pelagian heresie was a foot: for in his others, Caluin acknowledgeth him to haue taught Free will. Of our Freedome in consenting to Gods grace, he thus defineth: To consent to Gods calling, or not to consent, lieth in a mans owne will. Again: Who doth not see euery man to come, or not to come by Free will? but this Free will may be alone, if he do not come, but it cannot be helpen, if he doe come. In another place, that we will (do well) God wil haue it to be his and ours; his, in calling vs; ours, in following him. Yea more: To Christ working in him, a man doth cooperate, that is, worketh with him, both his owne iustification, and life euerlasting. Will you beare him speake yet more formally for us? Wee haue dealt with your brethren

c Jbid. lib. 2. ca. 1 Pro Catholica fide contra Mani-
chæos sicut loquuntur profanitate confessionem Ori-entium Episco-porum videntur
exposcere, &c.

d Ibid. c. 2. Mani-chæi negant homi-
nini bono ex libe-
ro arbitrio fuisse initium mali. Pe-lagiani dicunt cri-
ani hominem ma-
lum sufficienter
habere liberum ar-
bitrium ad faci-
endum præceptum bonum. Catholici utroque redar-
guunt, &c.

e Ibid. possunt duo errores inseri se-
se contrarij, sed
ambo sunt dete-
standi, quia sunt
ambo contrarij
veritati.

2. Inst. ca. 2. q. 4.

De spir. & lit. 34.
De gra. Chr. 14.
Ad Simpli. qu. 2.
Tract. 72. in 10-
an. Epist. 47.

thren and ours, as much as we could; that they would hold out and continue in the sound Catholike faith, the which neither denieth Free will, to euill or good life, nor doth attribute so much to it, that it is worth any thing without grace. So according to this most worthy Fathers iudgement, the sound Catholike faith doth not deny Free will, as the old Manichees, and our new Gospellers doe; nor esteeme it without grace able to doe any thing toward saluation, as the Pelagians did. And to conclude, heare S. Augustines answer vnto them, who say, that hee, when hee commendeth grace, denieth Free will: Much lesse would I say, that which thou lyingly dost affirme me to say, Free will to be denied, if grace be commended; or grace to be denied, if Free will be commended.

R. ABBOT.

Caluin indeed confesseth, as the truth is, that the ^a ancient Writers, saue onely Austin, haue written so diuersly and intricate, or obscurely of Free wil, as that hardly a man can gather from them any certainty as touching that point. But yet he saith further, that ^b albeit they went too farre sometimes in extolling Free will, yet hee dareth to affirme that they aimed at this marke, to turne man altogether away from the confidence of his owne strength, and to teach him to make the repose of his strength in God onely. But whereas Caluin thinketh that Austin is cleare for him in this point, M. Bishop saith, the poore man was foulely deceived as well in this, as in most other matters. Where I cannot but smile to see how euery ignorant brabler will haue a snatch at Caluin, when he in the meane time going like a stately Lion, shaketh them off like cures, and dasheth them against the walles. If Caluin were so poore a man, alas what shal we thinke of M. Bishop? What shall we make of him but a begger outright? Yet hee taketh vpon him to proue, and that out of those workes which S. Austin wrote after the Pelagian heresie was a foot, that the same Austin taught Free will. And wee denie not, but that hee did so, and in that meaning wherein he taught it, we are ready to affirme it. Yea let him remember that Caluin professeth, that ^c if any man will vse the name of Free will without the corrupt meaning of it, hee will not game say him; onely because it cannot be retained without danger of euill vnderstanding, he wisheth it to be forb:rne, and in that respect wee for the most part doe forbearc

^a Institut. lib. 2.
cap. 2. Sect. 4.

^b Ibid. Sect. 9.

^c Ibid. Sect. 8.

forbeare it. But this Free will in true meaning, is no facultie of nature, as M. Bishop will needs haue it, but ^d it belongeth to the grace of God, to the gifts of God, not onely the beeing of it but the conuerting of it vnto God. And verie truly doth the same S. Austine argue, that ^e if we haue of God (by nature) a Free will, which may be eithergood or euill, and haue of our selues a good will (by consenting or applying it when God calleth to that that is good) then better is that that we haue of our selues, then that that we haue of God. Which because it is absurd, wee must needs acknowledge, that a good will, that is to say, Free will to faith and righteousnesse, is not of our selues, but of God onely. But M. Bishop alledgeth Austine affirming, that ^f to consent to Gods calling, or not to consent, propria voluntatis est, belongeth to mans owne will. But rather he should say, proprie voluntatis est, that is, it concerneth properly the will: the place by changing of a letter beeing vndoubtedly corrupted, S. Austins purpose there, beeing onely to note the will to be the subiect, not the cause of this consenting. To consent hee meaneth is an act of the will, which howsoeuer God worketh in the will to doe, yet the will it is that doth it, but that the will consenteth by a power of it owne, hee meaneth not: yea he himselfe plainly euicteth the contrarie in the words immediatly going before. For what is it to consent, but velle credere, to beewilling to beleene? And ^g God it is (saith hee) that worketh in vs to beewilling to beleene. Therefore it must needs bee, that God worketh in man to giue consent. Mans will consenteth, it is true: ^h sed preparatur voluntas à Domino: but the will is framed or prepared of the Lord. Faith is in the power of man: ⁱ sed nulla est potestas nisi à Deo, but there is no power but of God. It is in mans will, when God hath giuen him to will: it is in mans power, when God hath giuen him power. And more then this, howsoeuer wee read the words, S. Austine intended not. For full and certaine assurance whereof, M. Bishop should haue remembred, that S. Austine himselfe reporteth it as an error which hee had somerimes holden, ^k that to consent to the Gospell when it is preached is of our owne will, and that we haue that of our selues. From which error hee professeth he was reclaimed by those words of the Apostle: ^l What hast thou that thou hast not receiued? For if it bee of our owne will that we consent, then somewhat we haue of our selues which we haue not receiued. Hee should further haue remembred, that S. Austine noteth it as the error of the Pelagians, that ^m to consent,

^d Aug. de peccat. mer. & remis. lib. 2 cap. 6. Ipsum liberum arbitrium ad gratiam Dei, hoc est, ad dona Dei pert. nec nõ ambigo, nec solior: nisi, sed etiam ut bonum sit, hoc est, ad faciendã Domini mandata conuertatur.
^e Ibid. cap. 18. Si nobis libera quẽdam voluntas ex Deo est, que adhuc potest esse vel bona vel mala, bona verò voluntas ex nobis est, melius est id quod à nobis, quam quod ab illo est.
^f De spirit. & lit. cap. 34.
^g Ipsum velle credere Deus operatur in homine.
^h Contra duas Epist. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 18. & lib. 2. cap. 8. & de predest. sanct. cap. 5.
ⁱ De spirit. & lit. cap. 31.
^k De predest. fact. cap. 3. Ut predictum à nobis Euangelio consentire non nostrum esse, & nobis ex vobis esse arbitrabar. Quoniam meum errorem nonnulla opusculi mei satis indicant a se Episcopatum meum ser. p. a.
^l 1. Cor. 4. 7. in Epist. 107. Consentire, vel non consentire, id est nostrum est nisi velimus.

or not to consent is in our selues. and of our selues, so that if we will, we do so: or if we will not, we cause that the worke of God nought auaieth in vs. M. Bishop therefore doth amisse, to make Austin a patron of that opinion which he reformed as an error in himselfe, and condemned as an error in other men.

The second place that he alledgeth, in Austins true meaning is altogether against him. ^a Who doth not see (saith he) that euery man cometh or cometh not arbitrio voluntatis, by his will? (Let it be as M. Bishop saith, by Free will;) But this will may be alone (saith he) if hee come not; but it cannot be but helped if he do come. Where shewing that our coming or not comming to Christ is acted by our wil, he giueth to vnderstand, that our will is of it selfe free to refuse to come: but that the Free will whereby we doe come, is the gift of God, euen as our Sauour Christ teacheth vs, saying: ^a No man can come vnto mee, except it be giuen him of my Father. And therefore the same S. Austin elsewhere reasoneth with a man in this sort: ^p Thou sayest vnto mee, I am come to Christ by my Free will, I am come by mine owne wil. Why art thou proud of this? Wilt thou know that euen this also was giuen thee? Heare him that called thee: No man commeth vnto me except my Father draw him. For ^q when God will haue a man do that which is not to be done but by the will, he in an unspeakable and wonderful sort worketh in him to will. But M. Bishop perhaps groundeth vpon that that S. Austin saith, that the wil of man is helped if he do come, as importing that man doth somewhat of himselfe, but yet is not fully sufficient without helpe. Where to I answer againe, that man doth somewhat, but not of himselfe, & God helpeth man doing somewhat, but so, as that that wherein hee helpeth him is of God also, so that Gods helping of vs doth alwaies presuppose a worke of his owne in vs, which he alone and wholly doth without us. Without vs (saith Austine) he worketh in vs to will, and worketh with vs, or helpeth vs when we do will: the will is changed from euill to good, and helped when it is good. He prepareth the good will that is to be helped, and helpeth it when it is prepared. ^u Free will to righteousnesse is first made free, and then helped. Herein then standeth M. Bishops error, that hee joineeth man to God in the first framing of the will to come to God, so that for the performance hereof, as God is mans helper, so man is also Gods helper, not by that that God hath now wrought in man, but by that that man hath naturally of his owne: and there-

^a Contra Pelag. & Celsi. lib. 1. cap. 14. Quis non videat & venire quoniam & non venire arbitrio voluntatis? sed hoc arbitrium potest esse plenum si non venit, non potest autem nisi adiutus esse si venit. o Ioh. 6. 67.

^p August. Quomodo venisti? & Veni in ius, libero arbitrio: voluntate propria veni. Quid rursus? & tu nisse, quod & hoc presertim est tibi? Ipsi sum aucti vocari? Nemo venit ad me & c.

^q De Predest. sanct. cap. 20. supra Secti. 6. r De grat. & li. arbit. cap. 17. Vt velimus sine nobis operari: cum autem volumus, nobiscum cooperatur. s Ibid. cap. 20. Ex mala mutatur in bonam, & cum bona fuerit adiutur.

r Enchir. cap. 32. Hominis voluntatem bonam & preparat ad inuadendam, & adiutat preparatam.

^u Contra duas Epist. Pelag. lib. 2. cap. 8. Ad iustitiam nisi diuinitus liberat un aditumque non valet.

fore God helpeth man for his saluation, if man by his Free will help God for the sauing of himselfe: but if man withdraw his helpe, the helpe of God auaieth nothing. But the true helpe of God which S. Austine teacheth, is that whereby God himselfe worketh in vs, that whereby we are helpfull vnto him, neither doth he helpe any thing in vs, but what hee himselfe hath wrought and prepared in vs to be helped. And therefore hee maketh a distinction of two kindes of helpe. ^x Aliud est adiutorium, sine quo aliquid non fit, & aliud est adiutorium, quo aliquid fit. There is a kind of helpe, without which a thing is not done, and there is another kinde of helpe by which a thing is done. There is a helpe without which a thing is not done, but though that helpe bee had, it followeth not thereupon that the thing is done, because some other helpe is wanting, without which that helpe auaieth not. Without foode wee cannot liue, and yet though food bee had, he liueth not thereby that will die, or maketh away himselfe. Such was the helpe of God to Adam in Paradise, ¹ without which he could not continue though he would, by which he might continue if he would; but was left to his owne will, either to continue by this helpe, or by forgoiug it to fall away. Such the Papists say the helpe of God is to vs, by which we come to Christ, and continue if we will: but both for comming and for continuing it is left to our Free will, either to vse it, or refuse it: so that it is in vs whether it shall be a helpe or not. But ² the helpe of the grace of Christ is such, as whereby the thing is certainly effected, for which it is a helpe; not such as whereby wee come to Christ, or continue with him if wee will, but which maketh vs to vsull: so that it is first a meere gift of that, of which afterwards it becommeth a helpe. For example hereof Saint Austine saith, that ³ blesednesse is a helpe by which when it is giuen, a man is forthwith blessed. Thereby giuing to vnderstand, that this helpe is the giuing of the thing wherein God is said to helpe vs. So that Gods helpe for our comming to Christ, is the gift of God wherby we doe come: his helpe for our beleeuing, is his very gift whereby wee doe beleue: his ^b helpe for our perseuering and continuing with Christ, is his gift, whereby wee doe perseuere, and no other but perseuere and continue to the end. And this helpe doth Saint Austine meane in the place cited by M. Bishop. The will cannot but bee holpen, if a man come to Christ, meaning, that mans will cometh not to Christ, ^x De corrept. & grat. cap. 12.

^y Fbsd. cap. 17.
 Adiutorium per quod posset (si uellet) & sine quo non posset perseueranter bonum tenere quod uellet.
^z Fbid. Est in nobis per hanc gratiam non solum posse quod uolumus, uerum etiam uelle quod possumus.

^a Cap. 12. Beatus uero cum data fuerit continuo fit beatus: adiutorium est enim non solum sine quo non fit, uerum etiam quo fit propter quod da ut.

^b Ibid. sanctis tale adiutorium perseuerantie datur, ut eis perseuerantia ipsa donetur, non solum ut sine isto dono perseuerantes et se non possint, uerum etiam ut per hoc donum non nisi perseuerantes sint.

except God giue vnto the will to will and to come, that is, to beleeue in him. And therefore he addeth, ^c And so helped, as that hee not onely know what is to be done, but doe also that which hee knoweth: which in the Chapter before hee hath thus expressed, that ^d to them which are called of purpose, God at once giueth both to know what they should do, and to do what they know. Gods helping therefore is no other but his giuing: and by this second place M. Bishop gaineth as little as he gained by the first.

As little aduantage hath he by the third place, nay, we see therein a notable peece of fraud and falshood in concealing the former part of the words, which should cleere the latter. ^e In one sort, saith Austine, God yeeldeth to vs to will; in another sort hee performeth the thing that we will. That wee will, hee would haue it to be his and ours: his in calling; ours in following. But the thing that we will he alone performeth, that is, to be able to doe well, and for euer to liue in blisse. Where plainly he affirmeth, that it is God that doth or performeth both the one and the other; hee maketh vs to will, and hee maketh good to vs the thing that our will desireth. How then will hee haue it to bee ours that we will or are willing, but by his working it in vs to bee ours? It is the act of our will when wee do will, and so ours, but yet it is Gods, because hee worketh in vs to will. It is his in calling, ours in following; but it is his also that we follow, because he maketh vs to follow. For how do we follow when he calleth, but ^f by willing and beleeuing? And no man can beleeue, ^g except it bee giuen to him to beleeue, and ^h that there is a yeelding or assenting of the will, it is hee that giueth it, saith Austine in that verie treatise, it is he that granteth it; so that although wee will, and wee runne, and this willing and running bee ours, yet as the Apostle saith; it is neither of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy. Concerning which words, it is worth the while to obserue what Saint Austine writeth in the same discourse, whence M. Bishop taketh this obiection, and within a verie few lines after, and thought worthy to remember in diuers places of his workes. M. Bishop saith as all his fellowes, that all is not of God, but somewhat belongeth to mans Free will for his conuersion vnto God, which yet sufficeth not vnlesse it bee helped by the grace of God. But S. Austine saith,

^c Et sic aduatum
ut non solum quid
faciendum sit sci-
at, sed quod scie-
r t etiam faciat.
d Cont. Pelag. &
Celestib lib. 1. cap. 13.
Si docet eos Deus
qui secundum pro-
positum vocati
sunt simul donant & quod agant sci-
re, & quod sciunt
agere.

^e Ad Simplic. q.
2. Aliter Deus
prestat ut velle-
mus, aliter prestat
quod voluerimus:
ut velimus & si-um voluit esse &
vstrum: suum
vocando, nostrum sequendo. Quod
a. & in voluerimus
quod prestat, id
est, posse bene age-
re & semper bea-
te viuere.

^f Prosper. de vocat
geni. lib. 2. cap. 9.
sequaces fide &
voluntate.

^g Aug. car. duas
epist. Pelag. lib. 1.
cap. 19.

^h Ad Simplic. q. 2
Vt sit natus voluntatis ille tri-bit, ille largitur.

ⁱ Rom. 9. 16.

* If therefore onely it be said, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercie, because the will of man alone is not sufficience, except it be helped by the mercy of God, it may be also thus said, that it is not of God that sheweth mercy, but of man that willeth, because the mercy of God alone sufficeth not, vntlesse there be adioined the consent of the will of man. More effectually doth hee expresse it in another place. 1 If therefore it be said, It is not of him that willeth, or of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy, because it is done by both, that is, by the will of man, and by the mercy of God, as if it were said, the will of man alone sufficeth not, ift here be not also the mercy of God, then also the mercy of God sufficeth not, if there be not also the will of man: and by this meanes, if it be rightly said, It is not of him that willeth, but of God that sheweth mercy, because the will of man alone availeth not: why is it not on the contrarye rightly said, It is not of God that sheweth mercy, but of man that willeth, because the mercy of God alone availeth not? Now if no Christian man will dare to say so, it remaineth that we vnderstand it therefore said, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy, Vt totum Deo detur, that all wholly may be attributed to God, who preparerh or maketh the good will of man. What could be more notably spoken to ouerthrow all Popish assertion of mans Free will? which seeing S. Austine gaue M. Bishop occasion to note in the verie place whence hee tooke his objection, wee must needsthinke him a man of a scared conscience, that would thus wilfully bend himselfe against an apparant truth. In a word, I answer his objection out of Austine by the words of Hierome, hauing reference to the same sentence of the Apostle: To will, and to nil (according to godlinesse) is ours; but euen that that is ours, is not ours without the mercy of God.

His fourth place of Austine, is that Christ working in man, man himselfe doth cooperate, that is, worketh together with him his owne iustification and life euertlasting. An idle objection, because by that verie place, if it were discussed, it should appeare which the same S. Austine for a full answer expressly saith elswhere, that God ma-

At Simplic. q. 2: si propterea solum dictum est, Non volentis, qui a voluntas hominis sola non sufficit, ut iussu rectoris, vniuersum nisi adiuuu mir misericordie Dei, potest & hoc modo dici, Igitur non misericordie est Dei sed voluntas est hominis, quia misericordia nisi confensus voluntatis eius non sufficit nisi consentus voluntatis eius addatur. At illud manifestum est frustra nos volentis Deum misericordie illud autem nescio quemodo dicitur frustra Deum misericordie nisi vos volentis. 1 Enchirid. ca. 32. Si propterea dictum est, Non volentis, & c. quia ex viroque fit id est, ex voluntate hominis & misericordia Dei, ut sic dictum accipiatur, Non volentis, & c. anquam diceretur non sufficit sola voluntas hominis, si non sit etiam misericordia Dei, non sufficit ergo sola misericordia Dei nisi etiam voluntas hominis: ac per hoc fit rectoris dictum est, Non volentis hominis sed misericordie est Dei quia id voluntas hominis sola non implet, cur non dicitur nisi rectoris dicitur, Non misericordie est Dei sed voluntas est hominis quia id misericordia Dei sola non implet Porro si nullus Christianus dicere audebit, Non misericordie est Dei sed voluntas est hominis ne Apostolo aperte iussu conradicat, velut ait propterea rector dicitur et eligatur, Non volentis, & c. ut totum Deo detur qui hominis voluntatem bonam & preparat a iuuandam & auctori preparatam. Hieron. epist. ad Demetriad. Velle & nolle nostrum est, ipsaque qual voluntas est sine Dei misericordie nostrum non est. 2 Augustin. Ioh. 1. 12. Operante in se Christo cooperatur sibi cum eternam ac iustificationem suam. 3 In Ps. 77 Dei gratia non solum operatur remissionem peccatorum, sed etiam cooperantem sibi facit spiritum hominis in opere bonorum & rectorum.

with the spirit of man to cooperate, or worke together with him in doing of good works, so that this cooperating, or working together with God, attributeth nothing to the will of man, but what is the proper effect of the grace of God.

¶ Epist. 47. Catholica fides neque liberam arbitrii negit, sive in vitam malam sive in bonam, neque tantum ei tribuit ut sine gratia Dei valeat aiquod, sive ut ex malo convertatur in bonum, sive ut in bono perseuerantur proficiat, sive ut ad sempiternam perveniat.

¶ Retract. lib. 1. cap. 15. In quantum libera est in quantum liberata est. ¶ Con. duas epist. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 3. Et De corrept. & grat. cap. 1. Liberum in bono non esse quod liberator non liberauerit. In bono liber esse nullus potest nisi fuerit liberatus.

¶ Epist. 47. Boni ipsam bonam voluntatem per Dei gratiam consecuti sunt. Et post. Gratia intelligitur voluntates bonorum ipsas ex malis bonas facere, ipsas etiam quas fecerit custodire: & ante, Omnia que ad mores nostros pertinent quibus recte vivimus à patre nostro qui in cælis est docuit esse poscenti, ne de libero presumentes arbitrio a divina gratia decedamus.

In the fifth testimony he saith, that Austin speaketh yet more formally for them, but let him conceive of the forme as he will, wee are sure he is farre from the matter of S. Austins speech. ¶ The sound Catholike faith, saith hee, neither denieth Free will, whether to euill life or to good, neither attributeth so much to it, as that it auaileth any thing without grace, either to bee converted from euill to good, or by perseuerance to go forward in that that is good, or to attaine to the euerlasting good. Now we whom M. Bishop termeth new gospellers, but yet out of the old Gospell doe affirme, according to the true meaning of S. Austin, that there must be a Freewill either in euill or good life. For a man cannot be either good or euill against his will, and if hee be willingly that that hee is, it is by Free will, because the will is alwaies Free, and cannot but be Free in that that it willeth. But the will of man is of it selfe Free in that that is euill; to that that is good, ¶ it is so farre onely Free, as it is made Free; ¶ neither can any man in this respect bee free whome the purchaser of freedome hath not made free. Wee say therefore that the Free will of man auaileth nothing without grace, that is in S. Austins construction, auaileth nothing but by that that grace worketh in it, either for conuerting vnto God, or perseuering in that whereunto it is conuerted. And therefore as S. Austin in the epistle cited speaketh, ¶ It is by grace that good men haue obtained a good will, and grace must be understood to make the wills of men of euill good, and to preserue the same when it hath so made them; and of our Father which is in heauen wee are to begge all things wherby wee liue well, least presuming of Free will, wee fall away from the grace of God. If all things, then are we to begge of him to open, to yeeld, to assent, to receiue his grace, and therefore these things cannot be attributed to the power of our owne Free will. Now M. Bishop meerey abuseth Austin, as if he had meant, that Free will hath a power and abilitie of it owne to righteousnesse, but that this power is not sufficient, is not strong enough without grace adioyned to it, whereas S. Austins meaning is to chalenge wholly to grace, whatsoeuer the will of man doth, so that it doth nothing but what grace worketh keth in it to doe. ² Of that as touching which wee are somewhat in the faith of Christ, how much soeuer it be, we may take nothing to our selues, but we must giue the glory of all vnto God. The new gospellers therefore according to the doctrine of the auncient Gospell, detest the Manichees for denying Free will in sinne and euill; and detest also Pelagians and Papists, for attributing to Free will an ability and power of it owne, whereby to apply it selfe to righteoufnesse; which whereas M. Bishop saith the Pelagians affirmed without grace, I haue before shewed, that he saith vnto, and that the Papists doe now teach in that behalfe the verie same that the Pelagians did. To the last place the answer is ready by that that hath bene said; Free will and grace, are not the one excluded by the other, neither is the one denied in the affirming of the other, if we make the one the cause of the other, as Austine doth, and teach it to bee the worke of grace to make the will Free. But grace is denied in the preaching of Free will, if as touching saluation it be affirmed to haue any freedom which it hath not of grace, or any thing at all bee attributed vnto it which is not the effect of grace. For ^u man doth not by freedom of will attaine to grace, but by grace obtaineth freedom of will; and though it be in the will, and by the will, that we receiue grace, yet ^x in all men the will of God himselfe is the cause of the receiuing of the grace of God

¹ De ver. Apost. ser. 1. Nihil ex eo quod aliquis sumus. si tamen in eius fide aliquid sumus quantum tuncque sumus nihil nobis arrogamus, ne quod accepimus perdamus; sed in eo quo accepimus, illi gloria demus:

^u De corrupt. & grat. cap. 8. Voluntatis humanae non libertate consequitur gratiam sed gratia potius libertatem.

^x Prosper de vocat. gent. lib. 1. cap. 5. Omnibus hominibus percipiende gratiae causa voluntas Dei est.

16. W. BISHOP.

Now in few words I will passe ouer the objections which he frameth in our names: But misapplicth them.

First objection. That man can do good by nature, as giue almes, do iustice, speake the truth, &c. and therefore will them without the helpe of grace. This argument wee vse to prooue libertie of will in ciuill and morall matters, euen in the corrupted state of man, and it doth demonstrat it: and M. Perkins in his third conclusion doth graunt it. And his answer heere is farre from the purpose; for albeit (saith hee) touching the substance of the worke it bee good, yet it faileth both in the beginning, because it proceeds not from a pure heart, and a faith vnfaun- ded: and also in the end, which is not the glorie of God.

Answer. It faileth neither in the one nor other: for that almes may issue out of a true naturall compassion, which is a sufficient good fountaine to make a worke morally good: faith and grace do purge the heart, and are necessaric onely for good and meritorious workes: Again, being done to releue the poore mans necessity, God his Creator and Master, is thereby glorified. And so albeit the man thought not of God in particular: yet God being the finall end of all good, any good action of it selfe, is directed towards him, when the man putteth no other contrarie end thereunto.

R. ABBOT.

It was a caution giuen by the Pelagians, ^a that wee may not so attribute to God all the merits or good workes of holy men, as that wee ascribe to the nature of man nothing but that that is euill. This caution the Papist, not willing in any thing to swaue from the Pelagian heresie, doe very religiously obserue. For the prouing of Free will they obiect vnto vs that man can doe good by nature, as giue almes, doe iustice, &c. and therefore can will these things without the helpe of grace. M. Bishop saith they vse this argument to prooue libertie of will in ciuill and morall matiers. But therefore very lewdly do they ^b vse it against vs, and exclaime that wee by deniail of Free will, make lawes and exhortations and instructions of no effect, when as wee denie not liberty and freedome of will in morall and ciuill actions. Yet of such workes wee say, that although in morall and ciuill life they stand for good, yet spiritually and with God they are not good workes but euill, because howsoeuer there is the outward matter and substance, yet there wanteth the inward forme and life whereby they should haue the condition of good workes. Heereof M. Perkins saith, that the good thing done by a naturall man is a sinne in respect of the doer, because it failes both for his right beginning, which is a pure heart, a good conscience, and a faith vnfained, as also for his end, which is the glorie of God. But saith M. Bishop, it faileth neither in the one nor in the other, for that almes may issue out of a true naturall compassion, which is a sufficient good fountaine to make a worke morally good. Where I wonder whether he did well aduise of that he saith. For if naturall compassion be a sufficient good fountaine to make a worke morally good, then because bruit beasts haue true naturall compassion, and true naturall affections, wee must needs attribute to them vertuous and morall actions. But S. Austin was not of M.

Prosper. de lib arbit. Proclamas cauendum esse ne si a Deum omnia sanctorum merita referamus, ut nihil nisi quod malū est humane ascribamus nature.

^b Prosper. Enchirid cap. 5.

Bishops mind when he said, ^c Beleeue in him that iustifieth the vngodlie, that thy workes may be good workes. For I will not call them good workes, so long as they proceede not from a good root. Faith then, by Saint Austins iudgement, is the good root whence good workes must grow: and if they grow not from this root, they cannot be called good. And this hee learned of the Apostle, teaching vs, that ^d without faith it is impossible to please God, and that ^e whatsoeuer is not of faith, it is sinne. And therefore of naturall compassion, he saith, that ^f although in it selfe it be a good worke, yet he vseth this good worke amisse, that vseth it unbeleeuingly, and doth it amisse, that doth it unbeleeuingly. Now hee that doth any thing amisse, saith hee, sinneth therein; and therefore the good workes which unbeleeuers doe are Gods, who vseth to good purpose them that are euill: but to them that doe them they are sinnes, in that they doe good things amisse, because they doe them with an unbeleuing, that is, with a foolish and corrupt will. Wherein he accordeth with the Apostle, saying, that ^g to unbeleeuers all things are vncleane, because euen their minde and conscience is defiled. And thereto Prosper alluding, saith, that ^h in the minde of the vngodly albeit there bee found many commendable things, yet there dwelleth no vertue but all their workes are polluted and vncleane, whilest therein they are subiect to him who did first fall by apostasie from God. Therefore M. Bishops distinction of good workes and meritorious workes, is an idle and vaine presumption, there being no workes meritorious at all, nor any workes good, but onely such as are done in the faith of Christ. The other circumstance required by M. Perkins in good workes, is the end wherto they are referred. For Austin rightly saith, ⁱ that workes are not esteemed by the actions, but by the ends, so that when a man doth a thing wherein he seemeth not to sinne, if he doe it not for that end for which he should doe it, that which hee doth becommeth thereby sinne. Now the true and proper end of all good workes, and which maketh them good, is the glorie of God, of which the Apostle saith, ^k Whether ye eat or drinke, or whatsoeuer ye doe, doe all to the glory of God; and of which Prosper telleth vs, that ^l albeit a ^c Aug. in Psa. 31. Crede in eum qui iustificat impium, ut possint opera tua esse opera bona; nam nec bona illa appellauerim, quando non de ueritate bona procedunt.

^d Heb. 11. 6.

^e Rom. 1. 4. 2. 3.

^f Aug. 1. contra Iulian. li. 4. cap. 3.

^g Est misericordia ipsa pro seipsam

^h naturalis compassione opus est bonum, etiam isto ⁱ bono male utitur qui infideliter utitur, & hoc bonum male facit

^j qui infideliter facit. Qui autem male facit ali-

^k quid prodest operat. Ex quo colligitur etiam ipsa bona opera que faciunt infideles, non ipsorum esse,

^l sed illius qui bene utitur male ipsorum autem esse

^m peccata, quibus & bona male faciunt, quia ea non fidei, sed infidelitatis, loc est, fluita & noxia faciunt voluntate.

ⁿ Tit. 1. 15.

^o Prosper. de lib. arbit. Patet in imperium animas nullam habitare uirtutem, sed omnia opera contra inuicem esse a que pollutat,

^p Multa laudabilia reperuntur etiam in ingratu impiorum, que ex natura quidem procedunt; sed quoniam ab eo qui natura non uoluit, recte ferunt, uirtutes esse non possunt. i. Aug. cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 2. Non enim, nisi esse, si de finibus a uis de formis esse uirtutes. &c. Cum si aque facit homo aliquid uis peccare non uidetur, si non propter hoc facit, propter quod facere debet, peccare conuincitur. k. 1. Cor. 10. 3. l. Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^q Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^r Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^s Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^t Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^u Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^v Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^w Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^x Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^y Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^z Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{aa} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ab} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ac} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ad} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ae} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{af} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ag} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ah} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ai} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{aj} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ak} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{al} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{am} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{an} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ao} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ap} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{aq} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ar} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{as} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{at} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{au} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{av} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{aw} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ax} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{ay} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

^{az} Prosper. de uocat. G. m. lib. 1. cap. 2. Est in bono mo. plus agit, malè ad hoc uiuit, si non in gloriam Dei uiuit.

man live in good behavio^r, yet he lieth still an euill life, if he liue not to the glorie of God. But heere to belongeth the knowledge of God, which is, ^m as it were the leauenthat seasoneth the whole life of man.

And this knowledge of God must bee by the word of God, so that ⁿ they who without the word of truth doe worke or speake any thing, are as they that strue to goe without feet. And it must breede the loue of God, because ^o chastitie, and so the like, are not vertues except they be done or obserued for the loue of God. And in the loue of God consisteth the worship of God, ^p without which worship of the true God, euen that that seemeth to be vertue is sinne, and therefore it offended Austin, and he retracted it as a thing misse-spoken, that hee had said ^q that the Philosophers shined with the light of vertue, who were not endued with truspeticie or religion towards God. A part of which pietie it is in all our good workes, to haue a respect vnto him, to doe them for his sake, thereby intending to serue, and obey, and to please him, so that ^r vaine is euery action, and euery speech that hath not somewhat inwardly for God, and for the commandement of God: and ^s when vertues are referred to themselues, and desired onely for themselues, and not for some other respect (to God) they are swelling and proud, and are not to be accounted for vertues, but vices. And this respect to God must acknowledge him to bee the giuer of all our vertue and goodnesse, and that wee doe but serue him with his owne, so that ^t although to clot be a naked man, or any other such like worke, by it selfe be not a sinne, yet of such a worke not to glorie in the Lord, and not to referre it to him as the Author of it, none but a wicked man will denie it to be a sinne. Now these conditions and circumstances required to make a worke good, it may bee that a man minding to doe a seruise, may commit an offense, if he doe not first learne in what sort he should doe it. Which a man cannot learne by Free will, and by the law of nature, and therefore offendeth euen in those things wherein hee seemeth outwardly to doe well. But M. Bishop telleth vs, that in such workes God is glorified, because albeit the man thought not of God in particular, yet God being the finall end of all good, any good action of it selfe is directed towards him, when the ⁿ Clemen. Alexand. in Protrept. Qui absque ueritate operantur aliquid uel loquuntur, sunt similes ijs qui conantur ingredi absque pedibus.

^m Arnob. contr. gent. lib. 2. Cognitionis Dei fermentum quoddam est vite.

^o Idem. Str. mat. lib. 3. Nec castitas est bonum & ex virtute, nisi fiat propter dilectionem in Deum.

^p Prosper. de uocat. gent. lib. 1. cap. 3. Sine cultu ueri Dei etiam quod uirtus uideatur esse peccatum est, nec placere uolus Deo sine Deo potest.

^q Augustin. Retract. lib. 1. cap. 3. Displicet mihi quod philosophos non uera pietate praeditos dixi uirtutis luce fuisse.

^r Origen. in Numer. hom. 25. Iuuenis est omnis actus, & omnis sermo in quo non est intrinsecus aliquid pro Deo & pro mandato Dei.

^s August. de ciuit. Dei, lib. 19. cap. 25. Virtutes cum ad seipsas referuntur, nec propter aliud expetuntur, etiam tunc iniuste & superbe sunt.

^t Idem contr. Julian. Pelag. lib. 4. cap. 3. Non quia per seipsum factum quod est opere nudum peccatum est, sed de tali opere non in Dominum glorians solus impius negat esse peccatum. Et ante: Cum non ad suum autorem referuntur dona Dei, hoc ipsi mali his uentis afficiuntur iniuste.

^u Arnob. in Psal. 26. Fieri poterit ut obsequendi uoto offendam, si qualiter debeam aucte non discam.

man putteth no other contrarie end thereunto. Where we may iustly wonder, that so absurd a fancie should preuaile with him, that God should bee glorified there where hee is neither thought of nor knowne, and that actions should be directed to God, where there is nothing to direct them; that mens actions are the directors of themselves, and that though a man haue no meaning to glorifie God, yet hee doth glorifie him, so long as hee propoundeth not to himselfe a contrarie end. These are M. Bishops dreames, and vpon the credit heereof wee must belecue, that the Gentiles knowing none but idoll gods, yet did glorifie God in those workes wherein they did not put a contrary end: nay, the bruit creatures doe direct their workes of naturall compassion to the glorie of God, for their naturall compassion is a sufficient good fountaine to make their workes good, and they propound no end contrarie to the glorie of God. But S. Austin telleth vs, that it is the intent that maketh the worke good, and that it is faith that directeth the intent; and therefore where there is neither intent to glorifie God, nor faith to direct the intent thereto, there cannot bee any glorifying of God, neither can the worke that is done bee called a good worke. M. Bishop therefore doth amisse to ioine with the Pelagians, to bring in a kinde of men, which without the faith of Christ, by the law of nature can please God. This is it, saith S. Austin to them, for which the Church of Christ most highly doth detest you. I will end this point with the resolution of Origen: Every good worke, saith he, which men seeme to doe, except they doe it in the worship of God, in the acknowledgement and confession of God, it is but bootlesse and vaine. I will boldly say that they doe all in vaine, if they doe it not in faith: they doe all to no purpose, except they doe it in the acknowledgement of one God the Father, and in the confession of his onely begotten Sonne Iesus Christ, and by the enlightning of the holy Ghost. He that doth a worke of righteousness be- g a stranger from the true worship of God, and from true faith, he doth it to no good, he doth it in destruction, it profiteth him not, it helpeth him not in the day of wrath. Whereof the Apostle is witnesse, saying, What

x Aug. in Ps. 31.
Bonum opus in-
tento facit: intent ionem fides
dirigit.

y Contr. Iulian.
Pelag. lib. 4. ca. 3.
Introducens ho-
minum genus,
quod Deo placere
possit, sine fide Christi, lege nature. Hoc est

vnde vos maximè Christiani desestatur Ecclesia.

z Origen. in Iob.
lib. 1. Omne opus
bonum quod nisi
fuerint homines facere, nisi in Dei cultura, nisi in Dei agnitione atque confessione f-
cerint, sine causa faciunt & superuacua. Audem erdicam, omnia gra-
tu faciunt, si non file fecerint: sine causa agunt nisi in agnitione vnius Dei patris & in confessione filij eius Domini nostri Iesu Christi, & illius: nat ione Sp. S. nisi hoc fecerint. Omnem iustitiam qui solum a vera Dei cultura atque vera fide fecerit, gratis facit, in perditione facit, non prodest ei, non adiuvat eum in die ire, &c. Ad quod testis est Apostolus: Omne quod ex fide, &c. Quare? Qua bona fecisse videntur non quesita file, non quesita agnitione eius propter quem hoc fecerunt. A quo um accipiet merce tem? Ab eo quem non requisit, quem non agnouit, cui non credidit, quem non est confessus, non ac-ceperit: ab eo remunerat ionem, nisi iudicium, & iram, & condemnationem &c. Sic enim mihi est delectabile hominibus sine re, sic mihi est delectabile neque acceptum Deo absque fide iurans.

soeuer is not of faith is sinne. Why so? because he hath not the faith and knowledge of him for whose sake hee should doe it: For of whom shall hee receiue reward? Of him whom hee hath not sought after, whom hee knoweth not, whom he beleueneth not, nor confesseth? He shall receiue no reward of him, but iudgement, and wrath, and condemnation. For as nothing is delightfome to vs without light, so is nothing delightfome or pleasing to God without the light of faith. Onely this I will adde, that God to such actions amongst the Gentiles gaue temporall rewards for temporall respects, not to shew any approbation thereof in respect of himselfe, to whom the doers thereof had no respect, but only to entertaine the liking thereof, for the common good of mankinde, and for the maintenance of ciuill order and societie, which God would vse to such ends, and in such sort as pleased him for the benefit of his Church. And therefore euen them who most excelled in the renowme and commendation of these vertues, God sometimes gaue ouer temporally also to such ends as to the world seemed vnworthie to their former life, to shew that hee stood not in any sort bound to them for the vertues, if wee so call them, wherein they had not respected him, in that he would neither be the defender of them in this world, nor the rewarder of them in the world to come.

17. W. BISHOP.

2 Obiection. God hath commanded all to beleene and repent: therefore they haue naturall Free will, by vertue whereof, being helped by the spirit of God, they can beleene. The force of the argument consisteth in this, that God being a good Lord, will not command any man to doe that which he is no way able to doe.

Answer. M. Perkins answereth in effect (for his words bee obscure) that God commandeth that which wee bee not able to performe, but that which wee should doe. Then I hope hee will admit that hee will enable vs by his grace to doe it, or else how should wee doe it? God surely doth not binde vs by commandement to any impossible thing: hee is not tyrant, but telleth vs, that his yoke is sweeter, and his burden easie. And Saint Iohn witnesseth, that his commandements are not heauie. Hee was farre off from thinking that God would tie any man by law to doe that which hee was altogether vnable unable to performe. This in the end M. Perkins himselfe approveth.

R. ABBOT.

Where they obiekt, that God commandeth all to belecue and repent, and therefore that all haue Free will to doe that which hee commandeth, M. Perkins answereth, that the argument is not good, because God by such commandements doth not shew what men are able to doe, but what they should doe, though of themselves they cannot doe it. Which answer why M. Bishop calleth obscure, I know not, but that his head haply fell out to bee somewhat cloudie when hee came to consider of it. Yet hee replieth, then I hope that hee will admit, that he will enable vs by his grace to doe it, or else how should we doe it? We will admit, that God by his grace enableth whom hee thinketh good, to doe his commandements for the state of his life so farre as hee thinketh good, and to them onely the yoke of Christ is sweet, and his burden easie, and his commandements not grieuous, because of him^a they receive a gift whereby they become not grieuous vnto them. And to these the vse of the law and commandements doth properly belong, which God did not deliuer as expecting that any man could fulfill the same, but thereby to bring mento the knowledge of sinne, and of condemnation thereby due vnto them, that by this meanes he might moue them whom he would call, to apprehend that meanes of saluation which he had promised in Iesus Christ; who by his spirit giuen vnto them^c delights in the law of God as touching the inner man, but by the rebellion of the law of sinne, are holden backe in this life from attaining to the perfect righteousness of the law. To the rest the law is a conviction of sinne, no helpe of righteousness; whilst God^d by vnsearchable, but iust iudgement, denieth to them that grace, which to others he vouchsafeth, because^e he sheweth mercie to whom hee wil, and whom he wil he hardeneth. Albeit that man is vnable to fulfill the law, it is not any default of God, but of man himselfe, and therefore there was no cause why^f the iust God should diminish any thing of the rule of righteousness, though vnrighteous man had by sinne disabled himselfe of the performance thereof; the righteousness of God I say, required, that God should iustifie himselfe from seeming to approue any sinne by the defect of the commandement, howso-

^a Aug. de perfect. iustitia. Cui graua sunt, intelligat se nondum accepisse donum quo graua non sint.

^b Amb. in Galat. cap. 3. Lex ad hoc data est, ut peccatores reos se facerent apud Deum. Manifestatis enim peccatis suis, conclusi sunt, ut se excusare non possent, sed querebant misericordiam, &c.

^c Rom. 7. 23.

^d August. de bono persecut. cap. 14.

^e Rom. 9. 18.

^f Aug. de peccat. meriti. & remiss. li. 2. ca. 16. Neque peccatum eris si quis iustus iubeatur v: non sit. Et iterum, Quomodo non vetatur permissum si peccatum est?

euery man could not iustifie himselte from sinne by the keeping of it. But of the end of Gods giuing the law and the possibility of keeping it, there will bee occasion afterwards to entreate more largely, and therefore with this brieffe answer I referre that point to his due place.

18. W. BISHOP.

3. Obiect. If man haue no Free will to sinne or not to sinne, then no man is to be punished for his sinnes, because he sinneth by anecessitie, not to be auoided.

He answereth, that the reason is not good; for though man cannot but sinne, yet is the fault in himselfe, and therefore is to be punished. Against which, I say that this answer supposeth that which is false, to wit, that a man in sinne cannot chuse but sinne: For by the helpe of God, who desireth all sinners conuersion, and thereunto affoordeth grace sufficient, a sinner in a moment may call for grace and repent him, and so chuse whether he will sinne or no, and consequently hath Free will to sinne, or not to sinne: And that example of a bankrupt is not to purpose; for he cannot when he will satisfie his creditors, who content not themselues with his repentance, without repay of their mony, as God doth.

Now concerning the force of this argument, beare Saint Augustines opinion, De duab. animab. contr. Manich. in these words: Neither are wee heere to search obscure bookes to learne, that no man is worthie of dispraise or punishment, which doth not that which hee cannot doe: for (saith hee) doe not shepherds vpon the downes sing these things? Doe not Poets vpon the stages act them? Do not the vnlearned in their assenblyes, and the learned in their libraries, acknowledge them? Doe not masters in their schooles, and Prelats in their pulpits, and finally all mankinde thorowout the whole world, confesse and teach this, to wit, that no man is to bee punished, because hee did that which he could not chuse but doe? Should hee not then (according to S Augustines censure) bee bitted out of all honest companie of men, that denieth this so manifest a truth, confessed by all Mankind? How grosse is this heresie, that so hoodeth a man, and hardeneth him, that he be learned, yet hee blusheth not to deny roundly, that which is so euident in reason, that euen naturall sence doth teach it vnto shepherds, God of his infinite mercie, deliuer vs from this strange light aft be new Gospell.

R. ABBOT.

As touching ciuill and outward actions, wee doubt not, as before is said, but that God hath left a liberty and power to the will of man, and therefore iustly are they punished, who runne wilfully into enormous actions from which it is in them to forbear. And this addeth much to the iust condemnation of man, that euen in those things wherein he hath power to doe otherwise, yet he carieth himselfe frowardly and rebelliously against God. And yet of outward actions in some degree, Hierome rightly obserueth, ^a that a man can forbear to sin if he will at a time or in some place, or by some let of bodily weakenes, or so long as the mind is intent and heedie, but he soone findeth, that wholly not to sinne it is not possible. To speake then indefinitely of sinne, it is true that man left in the power of his owne Free will cannot chuse but sinne. For how can hee chuse but sinne, who of himselfe is nothing but sinne? Yea we know, that the corruption of sinne lieth as a punishment vpon the whole nature of man, and therefore is said to haue befallen by the iust reuenge of God, and is called ^c Pœnalis uisitas, a pœnall uisitationesse, or subiection to sinne. Now if it be as it were a prison or punishment, it is not in our choice to bee rid thereof, because a man cannot rid himselfe of a prison or punishment, which he hath drawne vpon himselfe. And therefore doth Saint Austin affirme it to bee ^d the punishment of man by condemnation, to approoue falsehood for truth, so as to erre against his will, and being vexed with the griefe of the bond of the flesh, yet not to bee able to temper himselfe from libidinous actions. Thus haue we heard him before to aouch ^e a necessitie of sinning, and this necessitie hee acknowledgeth in some part to continue still in the state of grace, ^f alleging therefore the words of the Prophet Dauid: ^g De necessitatibus meis educ me: Deliuere mee from all my necessities. And therefore vainly doth M. Bishop except, that by the helpe of God a sinner may call for grace and repent him, and chuse whether he will sinne or no. For in men conuerted, it is true that they cannot chuse but sinne; in repentant men it is still true that they cannot chuse but sinne. For the forbearing of this or that action doth not put a man in case to chuse to sinne, but though hee arise one way, yet the law of sinne holdeth him still vnder a necessitie to fall another way, vntill ^h this euill necessitie be taken away, and full

^a Hieron. contra Pelag. lib. 3. Dicitur posse hominem non peccare si uelit pro tempore, pro loco, pro imbecillitate corpora, quam diu intus est animus, &c. Quod si se paululum remisit, &c. dicit fragilitatem suam, &c. multa se non posse cognoscit.

^b Aug. de nat. & grat. cap. 34.

^c Idem. de perfect. iustit. Rat. 9.

^d De nat. & grat. cap. 67. ex lib. 3. de lib. arbit. ca. 18.

^e Apprehare falsa pro ueris ut erret inuitus, & resistenti atque inquente dolore carnalis uinculis non posse à libidinosis operibus temperare, non est natura influxu hominis, sed pœna damnati.

^f Sect. 3.

^g De nat. & grat. cap. 66.

^h Psal. 14. 18.

ⁱ August. de nat. & grat. c. 66. Operantur e gratia, &c. & mala necessitas remouebitur, & libertas plena trahitur.

i Idem. in Ioann. tract. 41. Quando plena atque perfecta libertas erit? Quando nulle in- inuicæ: Quando nouissima mi- mica destructur mors.
h Hieron. epist. ad Ctesiph. Licet a- lius non fuerit, sa- men potest esse qui esse uoluerit.
l Ibid. Quæ est ar- gumentatio ista, posse esse quod nunquam fuerit, &c. & dare cui- libet quod in Pa- triarchis, & Pro- phetis, & Apo- stolis nequeas ap- probare?
m 2. Pet. 3. 9.
n Joh. 6. 39.
o Ezech. 33. 11.
p Hebr. 6. 17.
q Psal. 147. 19.

libertie granted, which shall i then bee, when wee shall see him face to face. Or if M. Bishop will say otherwise, let him bring vs foorth the man that can chuse to sinne; the man that can doe more then euer Patriarch, or Prophet, or Apostle, or Euangelist could doe. For if they could chuse to sinne, why did they sinne? or if they did not sinne, why did they say, Forgiue vs our trespasses? If hee will needs follow the Pelagian deuce, that though no man be indeede without sinne, yet a man may be so if he will, I will answer him with Hieromes words, What a reason is this, that that maybe that neuer was, and that hee should yeeld that to I know not whom, which in the Patriarkes, and Prophets, and Apostles he cannot prooue? Repentance therefore and conuersion so altereth the course of a mans life in the maine, as that euen in the way of righteousness it still leaueth in him a necessitie of sinne. Neither doth this conuersion stand indifferent to all, as hee dreameth, nor doth God affoord to all sinners grace sufficient to bring them to repentance. He noteth for his purpose the place of Peter, that God would not haue any to perish, &c. but let him take the whole words, and they will cleere themselves, He is patient TO- VWARDS VS; not willing that any (namely of vs) should perish, but that all (of vs) should come to repentance. He speaketh of Gods elect, of them whom he hath chosen to make vp the body of his Church, of whom our Sauiour Christ saith, This is the will of the Father that hath sent mee, that of all that hee hath giuen me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day. Of these hee will haue none to perish, but doth patiently beare til he haue accomplished the number that he hath decreed for himselfe. So did God say by the Prophet, As I liue, saith the Lord, I desire not the death of a sinner, but rather that he be conuerted and liue: but he said it to the house of Israel; he said it not to the Philistims; he said it not to the Babylonians, the Ammonits, the Moabits, &c. It was not for their sakes that he sware, but willing to shew to the heires of promise the stableness of his counsell, he bound himselfe by an oath. Therefore to those peoples he gaue not the meanes of conuersion, he gaue his word vnto Iacob, his statutes and ordinances vnto Israel; he dealt not so with any other nation. How then doth M. Bishop say, that God affordeth to all sinners grace sufficient for their conuersion? Will he say that the beholding of heauen and earth, and such other naturall motiues, were sufficient to bring men to repentance? Hee may dally with vs, that in them- selves selues they were such as might sufficientlie auail to mooue men ; but what is that to the purpose , so long as to the state and condition of man they were not sufficient ? The light of the Sunne is a sufficient light , and yet it is not sufficient to make a blind man see. What were all thsoe motiues and occasions whatsoeuer they were , but euen as a good lesson to a dead man ? And what , will hee terme those meanes of conuersion by the name of grace ? Away , away with this Pelagian conceipt , and let vs acknowledge the truth as S. Austine doth ; Communis est omnibus natura , non gratia : Nature is common to all , but grace is not so. It is but ' a glassie trick of wit , as hee saith , to deuise a grace that is common to all : it maketh a faire shew , but it is soone crackt.

Aug de verb. Apost Ser. 11.
Uidet e acumen sed vitium.
Quis illicet uariat , sed frangitur ueritate.

Now M. Perkins , alledging that because it is by mans owne default that hee cannot chuse but sinne , therefore hee is notwithstanding iustlie punished , bringeth for declaration thereof the example of a bankrupt , who is not therefore freed from his debts because he is not able to pay them , but the bills against him stand in force , because the debt comes through his owne default. But M. Bishop saith , that this example is not to the purpose , because the bankrupt cannot , when he will , satisfie his creditors , who content not themselues with his repentance , without repay of their money , as God doth. How many miles to London ? a poke-full of plummes. What is this to the purpose , that God is content to remitte his debtors without satisfaction ? for so creditors also deale sometimes with bankrupts when they haue nought to pay : but is this any thing against that which M. Perkins saith , that by the example of a bankrupt , it appeareth that a man may iustly bee punished for that which now hee cannot helpe , because by his owne default hee is runne into it ? The creditor may remit all if he will , but otherwise the bills of debt are iustlie liable against him who by default and negligence is come to that passe that hee hath nothing to pay. And yet in his exception there are two absurdities implied. For it is absurd that hee saith that God doth remitte and pardon his debtors without satisfaction. There is no man reconciled to God , but by tendring a full and perfect satisfaction , which because hee hath not to do of his owne , therefore by faith hee pleaderth the paiement of his suretie Iesus Christ , ' who bare our sinnes in his body upon the tree ; that in him wee might haue redemption through his blood , euen the forgivnesse of our sinnes.

1. Pet. 2. 24.
Eph. 1. 7.

* 2. Theff. 1. 2.

† Ephē. 2. 8.

‡ Ad. 5. 31. & 11.

18.

* Aug. de pred. sct.

sanct. cap. 6. & de

bono persuer. cap.

14. Alijs prepara-

tur alijs non prepa-

ratur voluntas

à Domino. Illis

qui veritatis ex-

hortationem obedi-

entier audiunt,

ipsū donum Dei

daturū est, hoc est,

obediēter audire:

illis autem qui

non sic audiunt

non est daturū.

† Aug. de diab. u.

animab. cont.

Manich. ca. 1.

Nemo uinpera-

tione supplicio re-

dignus est qui id

non faciat quod

facere non potest.

‡ Come ista can-

tant & in monti-

bus pastores & in

theatris poete,

&c.

* Ibid. cap. 12. Pec-

cati reum teneri

quoniam quia

non fecit quod fa-

cere non potuit

summe iniquita-

tis est & infanti.

† Ibid. cap. 11.

Peccatum est vo-

lunt as retinēdis

vel consequēdis

quod iusti ia ve-

rat, est & unde li-

berum est abli-

nere.

* Retract. lib. 1.

cap. 15. Id defini-

tum est quod ian-

timum modo peccatū

est, non quod est

etiam pena pecca-

ti. Nam quando

tale est ut idem sit

& pena peccati

quantum est quod

uult uolunt as

sub dominante cupiditate, nisi forte se p̄s est ut oret auxiliū, &c.

Now ^x all men haue not faith, and therefore all men cannot pleade this satisfaction for themselves, and yet without this faith there is no repentance that can auaille to bring vs vnto God. And seeing both ^y faith and ^z repentance are the gifts of God, which ^a hee giueth to some, and to other some doth not giue, it is an other point of absurditie to subiect the gift of God to the arbitrarie will and power of man, as if man haue in him to beleue and repent when-soeuer himselfe will. But against this M. Bishop for conclusion bringeth a place of Austine against the Manichees, that ^b shepheards and poets, and learned, and vnlerned, and schoolemasters, and prelates, and all mankind confesse, that no man is worthy of dispraise or punishment, which doth not that which hee cannot doe. Nay, to helpe the man somewhat, I will adde more out of the next chapter to that which hee citeth; ^c That a man should bee holden guiltie for not doing that which hee could not do, it is a point of iniquitie and madnesse to affirme. Now what a strange matter is this, that shepheards and poets, and all sorts of men, should see reason to affirme this, and yet M. Bishop perforce should be driuen to denie it? For let vs aske him in his owne profession and doctrine what hee thinketh of children dying vnbaptized? Hee will giue vs a peremptorie answer, that questionlesse they are damned. But what haue poore infants done why they should bee damned, or how could they auoid that for which they are damned? Tell vs M. Bishop, how could they chuse to bee other then they bee, and if they cannot chuse but bee that they are, how can it stand with your rule, that they should bee condemned for beeing that which they cannot chuse but bee? Perforce he must take a fall in his owne trippie, neither can hee giue an answer as touching this point, which doth not yeeld vs a full answer against himselfe. But S. Austine himselfe cleereth this point for vs, who, vsing the words cited by M. Bishop to iustifie a definition of sinne which hee had set downe against the Manichees, that ^d sinne is a desire of retaining or obtaining that which iustice forbiddeth, and whence it is in a mans liberty to abstaine, telleth his Reader in the perusing of that place in his Retractions, that hee spake there of that ^e which is onely sinne, and is not also the punishment of sinne. For in that sinne which is also the punishment of sinne, how little is it that the will can doe against concupiscence or lust hauing dominion ouer it, and therefore by reason hereof a man cannot do that that he should doe, neither can hee but doe that that he should not doe, which yet ceaseth not to bee a sinne and subiect to punishment, because hee hath purchased this condition to himselfe, by the merit of a former sinne. For Adam had it in his power not to sinne, and yet did sinne by doing that which he ought not to doe, and was in his power and libertie not to do, and for this cause was giuen ouer as a prisoner to sinne, that thenceforth he could not doe what he ought to doe, nor could chuse but doe what hee should not doe. Therefore the same Austin asking, if that rule that he hath set downe be true, how in- fants become guiltie, and are so holden, answereth, that it is by being borne of him who did not that that was in his power to doe. In a word, man is not worthy of punishment for not doing that which hee cannot doe, except hee haue disabled himselfe for the doing of it; but if he haue disabled himselfe, as indeed he hath by the first sinne, then is he iustly punished, both for not doing that which hee once could, but now cannot doe, and for doing that which hee once could, but now cannot chuse but doe. Which being a case very euident, and sundrie times deliuered by S. Austin, in retracting the like places against the Manichees, may wee not wonder at the absurd follie of this man, who for conclusion braueth in his termes, as if he had eard the matter very cleere, when indeede like an ignorant cauiller, he himselfe vnderstandeth not what he saith? We respect not what natural sense doth teach to shepherds, but we cannot but thinke him an ill shepherd ouer the flocke of Christ, who taking vpon him to bee a Doctour of Diuinitie, is so ignorant in a principle of religion, which by the word of God euery shepherd should know. God make him wise to see his owne folly, and then hee will submit himselfe in obedience to that truth which now in his ignorance seemeth vnto him a strange light of a new Gospell.

Ibid. Cur parvuli tenentur rei? Respondetur, quia ex eius origine tenentur qui non fecit quod facere potuit, diuinitus scilicet seruare mandatum.

CHAPTER 2.

OF ORIGINAL SINNE.

I. W. BISHOP.

M. PERKINS FIRST CONCLUSION.

Pag. 18.

They say, naturall corruption after Baptisme is abolished, and so say wee: but let vs see, how farre forth it is abolished. In Originall sinne are threethings. First, the punishment, which is the first and second death: second, guiltinesse, which is the binding up of the creature vnto punishment: third, the fault, or the offending of God: vnder which I comprehend our guiltinesse in Adams first offense, as also the corruption of the heart, which is a naturall inclination and pronenesse to any thing that is euill, or against the law of God. For first we say, that after Baptisme, in the regenerate the punishment of Originall sinne is taken away: For there is no condemnation (saith the Apostle) to them that are in Christ Iesus.

Rom. 8. 1.

For the second, that is guiltinesse, we further condescend and say, that it is also taken away in them that are borne anew. For considering there is no condemnation to them, there is nothing to bind them to punishment. Yet this caueat must be remembred, namely, that the guiltinesse is remooued from the person regenerate, but not from the sinne in the person. But of this more heereafter.

Thirdly, the guilt in Adams first offense is pardoned. And touching the corruption of the heart, I auouch two things. First, that the verie power and strength, whereby it raigneth in man, is taken away in the regenerate. Secondly, that this corruption is abolished (as also the fault of euery actual sinne past) so farre forth as it is the fault and sinne of the man in whom it is. Indeed it remaines till death, and it is sinne, considered in it selfe, so long as it remaines; but it is not imputed to the person. And in that respect, is as though it were not, it being pardoned. Hitherto M. Perkins.

Annotations vpon our Consents.

First, wee say not, that the punishment of Originall sinne is in it, or any part of it, but rather a due correction, and as it were an expulsion of it: this is but a peccadillo; but there lurketh a serpent in that caveat; that the guiltinesse of Originall sinne is removed from the person regenerate, but not from the sinne in the person. The like he saith afterward of the fault, that it is a sinne still in it selfe, remaining in the man till death, but it is not imputed to him, as being pardoned. Heere be quillets of very strange doctrine: the sinne is pardoned, and yet the guiltinesse of it is not taken away. Doth not a pardon take away from the fault pardoned, all bond of punishment due vnto it, and consequently all guiltinesse belonging to it? Who can denie this, vnlesse hee know not, or care not what he say? If then Originall sinne be pardoned, the guiltinesse of it is also removed from it selfe. Againe, what Philosophie, or reason alloweth vs to say that the offender being pardoned for his offence, the offence in it selfe remaineth guiltie? as though the offense separated from the person, were a substance subiect to law, and capable of punishment. Can Originall sinne in it selfe die the first and second death, or be bound vp to them? What senselesse imaginations be these? Againe, how can the fault of Originall sinne remaine in the man renewed by Gods grace, although not imputed? Can there be two contraries in one part of the subiect at once? Cant here be light and darknesse in the understanding, vertue and vice in the will at the same instant? Can the soule be both truly conuerted to God, and as truly auerted from him at one time? Is Christ now agreed to dwell with Belial, and the holy Ghost content to inhabit a body subiect to sinne? All which must be granted, contrary to both Scripture and naturall sense, if we admit the fault and deformitie of sinne to remaine in a man renewed, and endued with Gods grace: vnlesse wee would very absurdly imagine, that the fault and guilt of sinne were not inherent and placed in their proper subiects, but were drawne thence, and penned up in some other odde corner.

Remember also, Gentle Reader, that heere M. Perkins affirmeth the power, whereby the corruption of the heart raigneth in man, is taken away in the regenerate: which is cleane contrarie vnto the first proposition of his first reason following, as shall be here prooued.

R. ABBOT.

It was not M. Perkins intent heere to set downe any exact or formal description of Originall sinne, but only so to touch it, as might serue

ferue to leade him to the point that was to bee disputed of. But out of that which he saith it ariseth, that originall sinne is a common guilt of the first sinne of man, inferring as a iust punishment, an vniuersall distortion and corruption of mens nature, and euilasting destruction both of bodie and soule. Concerning the matter therefore he propoundeth three things in Originall sinne to bee considered, the siane, the guilt, and the punishment. Where M. Bishop being like a man of glasse, afraid of being crackt where he is not touched, would for more assurance giue vs a note, and I warrant you it is a wise one. We say not, saith he, that the punishment of Originall sinne is in it, or any part of it, but rather a due correction, and as it were an expulsion of it. Where hee putteth mee in minde of a speech that I haue heard concerning an outlandish Mathematicke Reader, whose tongue hauing out-runne his wits, and making a discourse of hee knew not what, asketh his hearers at length, Intelligitisne? Doe yee vnderstand mee? they answered him, No. Profectò nihil miror, saith he, neque enim ego intelligo meipsum: Marry I doe not maruell, for neither do I vnderstand my selfe. Such a lecture doth M. Bishop heere reade, which no man else vnderstaudeth, nor he himselfe. If he had vnderstood what Originall sinne is, and that concupiscence being a part of Originall sinne, is also a punishment thereof, (corruption of nature which is one part, arising from the guilt of the first sinne, which is the other part) hee would not so vnaduisedly haue denied, that the punishment of Originall sinne is also a part thereof, especially finding S. Austin in so infinite places affirming, that concupiscence is in such sort a sinne, as that it is also a punishment of sinne; and of what sinne, but that which Adam in person committed by action, and is ours originally by propagation? But that either this punishment of Originall sinne which is the corruption of nature, or the following punishment thereof, which is the first and second death, should bee called expulsion of originall sinne, we lacke some Oedipus to resolue vs. Sure I am that M. Bishop vnderstood not what he said, nor can giue vs any answer to make it good. Such learned men haue we to doe with, which are so deepe in their points, that they know not what they say. Now hee that vitereth such riddles himselfe, might easilie pardon another man in a speech though distasting to him, yet in it selfe very easie to be vnderstood. What a stirre doth he make at that that M. Perkins saith, that in the regenerate the guiltinesse is remooued from the person, person, but not from the sinne in the person? The meaning is plaine, that the sinne is pardoned to the man regenerate, and therefore cannot make him guiltie, but yet in it selfe and in it owne nature, it continueth such, as that setting aside the pardon, it were sufficient still to make him guiltie and to condemne him, as shall bee afterwards auouched out of Austin, to euerlasting death. The pardon acquitteth the man, but yet it cannot alter the nature of the sinne: it setteth a barre against the effect, but take away the barre, & the cause is as strong as it was before. His idle and wast words, and fighting with a shadow, I let passe: if he were not a senselesse man, that that M. Perkins saith in the plaine meaning thereof, would neuer seeme to him any senselesse imagination. But he goeth further; *How can the fault of Originall sinne remaine in the man renewed by Gods grace, although not imputed? Why M. Bishop? what hindereth I pray you? Can there be two contraries, saith he, in one part of the subiect at once? And why not? What? hath not his Philosophie taught him, that contraries are incompatible onely in their extremes? Did hee neuer read, that contraries when they strue to expell one another, doe it not in a moment, but by degrees; and though one be stronger then the other, yet the weaker still hath that latitude which the stronger hath not gained? Thus are there in the regenerate man, ^a the law of sinne and the law of the mind, the former rebelling against the latter; ^b the flesh and the spirite the one contrarie to the other, as the Apostle speaketh, and that in one part of the subiect, as shall appeare. ^c Can there be light and darknesse in the vnderstanding, saith he? Why, did M. Bishop neuer read of ^c a darke day? or will he reason thereof, if it be day, it cannot bee darke; or if it be darke it cannot be day? And if hee can see that light and darknesse may meeete together in a day, can he not see that light and darknesse may also bee together in the vnderstanding? One where our Sauour Christ commendeth the light of his Disciples; ^d Blessed are your eyes, for they see: another where he condemneth their darknesse, ^e Hane ye eies and see not? By light of vnderstanding Peter saith, ^f Thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God. Blessed art thou Simon, saith Christ, for flesh and bloud hath not reuealed this vnto thee, but my Father which is in heauen. ^g The same Peter by and by also bewraieith darknesse of vnderstanding, giuing Christ occasion to say vnto him, ^h *Get thee behind mee Satan; for thou vnderstandest not the things that are of God, but the things.

^a Rom. 7. 23.

^b Gal. 5. 17.

^c Zephani. 1. 5.

^d Mat. 13. 16.

^e Mar. 8. 18.

^f Mat. 16. 16.

^g Jbid. ver. 23.

things that are of men. ^b Contraria erant adhuc in Petro: There were contraries as yet in Peter, saith Origen, truth and falshood: he spake by truth one way; hee spake by falshood another way. In a word the Apostle telleth vs, that we knowe but in part, wee prophecie but in part, wee see through a glasse darkly, or as the masters of Rhemes translate it, in a darke sort. How can that bee, but that there is still some darknesse in the vnderstanding which yet in part hath received light? Hee goeth further, Can there be vertue and vice in the will at the same instant? Yes M. Bishop, for whatsoeuer is wanting of perfect vertue, as there is not perfect vertue, there is vice remaining together with vertue. The inner man wherein is the will of man, is renewed as the Apostleth telleth vs, from day to day. S. Austin verie rightly argueth thereof, that he that is renewed from day to day, is not yet all renewed, and therefore in part he is old still. Now from what is he renewed but from vice, and whereto is hee renewed but to vertue? If then the will bee not yet wholly renewed to vertue, then vice as yet in part remaineth with vertue in the will, from whence as yet in part the will remaineth to be renewed. Therefore our will carieth vs stil contrarie waies; ^m One way wee will because we are in Christ: another way we will because we are still in the world. Therefore the Apostle calling the Corinthians Saints, yet anon after telleth them, that they are carnall and walke like men. Therefore our Sauiour saith to his Disciples one where, ⁿ Ye are cleane by the word that I haue spoken vnto you. Another where he saith:  You beeing euill do knowe to giue good gifts to your children*. Yet againe, Can the soule bee truly converted to God, saith he, and as truly auerted from him at one time? No M. Bishop: but yet in the soule converted to God, remaineth a part of that infection, wherby ^p Lots wife beeing gone out of Sodome, looked backe to the place from whence she came; so that ^q the children of God albeit they be mooued by the spirit of God, and as the children of God doe go forward towards God, yet by their owne spirit, as the children of men, through some humane motions, they fall backe to themselues, and thereby commit sinne. Therefore they of whom we cannot doubt but that they were converted vnto God, yet found somewhat in themselves, for which they saw that they had cause still to pray ^r to be conuerted. Again, Is Christ, saith he, agreed to dwell with Belial? Wee answer him, No: ^s there is no agreement betwixt Christ and Belial,

and

^b Orig. in Matth. tra. 1. 3. Contraria sibi adhuc erant in Petro, veritas & mendacium De veritate dicitur, Tu es Christus, &c. Ex mendacio dixit, Propitius tibi esto, &c. ⁱ 1. Cor. 13. 9. 12.

^k Aug. epist. 29. Id quod minus est quam debet, ex vicio est.

^l Aug. de peccat. merit. & veniss. lib. 2. ca. 7. Qui de die in diem renouatur, nondum totus est renouatus, & in quantum nondum est renouatus, in tantum adhuc in vicijs staret est.

^m Idem in Ioan. tra. 8. 12. Aliud volumus quia sumus in Christo, & aliud volumus quia sumus adhuc in hoc seculo.

ⁿ Iohn 15. 3.
^o Match. 7. 11.
^p Gen. 19. 26.

^q Aug. Enchirid. ca. 64. Sic spiritus Dei excitantur, & tanquam filij Dei proficiunt ad Deum, ut etiam Spiritu suo maxime aggravante corruptibili corpore tanquam filij hominum quibusdam motibus humanis deficiant ad seipsos, & ideo peccent.

^r Psal. 85. 4.
Lament. 5. 21.
^s 2. Cor. 6. 15.

and therefore doth Christ come to dwell in vs, that Belial may be dispossessed & driuen out. And therefore where there is (by Christ) forgiuenesse of sinnes, the diuell without doubt is expulsed out of the heart of the sinner. But yet there remaine still the venomous seedes of his planting, a neecessitie of sinne, by the aduantage whereof this tempter fighteth against vs: will we, will we, this Iobusise for the time dwelleth with in our borders: hee my bee subdued, but he cannot utterly be destroyed. Last of all, Is the holy Ghost, saith he, content to dwell in a bodie subiect to sinne? Againe we answer him, No: for sinne doth not reigne in the bodies of the faithfull, that they should be subiect vnto it, in obeying the lusts thereof. For so long as they liue, sinne must needs haue a being in them; it is tempting, it is enticing, it neuer ceaseth vrging and prouoking from day to day: but yet the kingdome therof is abolished, because the law of the spirit of life hath freed them from the law (that is, the kingdome and power) of sinne and of death. But if hee meane subiect to sinne, of the hauiug of sinne, then the Apostle telleth him, I am carnall, sold vnder sinne, a captiue vnto the law of sinne that is in my members, so that if we say we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, and there is no truth in vs. So then some of his collections wee denie, not being consequents of our doctrine, but his owne vaine and idle amplifications: the rest that are direct to the point wee affirme, as I haue declared, and whatsoeuer his naturall sence conceiueth thereof, the Scripture iustificth, that the fault and deformitie of sinne (though not in former degree) remaineth in a man renewed and endued with Gods grace. And what doth he thinke of himselfe I maruell? is he a man renewed and endued with Gods grace? What, and no fault? no deformitie of sinner remaining in him? no spot? no wrinkle? Wee wonder that a troupe of Angels commeth not from heauen to applaud him, and to conuey him as a great iewell out of the world. But had he grace to know himselfe, he would soone perceiue, that this fault of sinne is not penned up in an odde corner of him, but possesseth all his corners, and spreadeth it selfe as an infection ouer the whole man. And surely he that well considereth this booke of his, will bee of opinion, that doubtlesse there is some deformed matter in him, that could yeeld so much absurditie and vnto truth as he hath contained therein. As for his Remember, he telleth vs that wee shall meet with it againe, and therefore I will referre it to his due place.

^r Berna. in Cantic. Serm. 6. Ibi peccatum remittitur, ibi proculdubio diabolus de corde peccatoris expellitur. Et August. contr. Iulian. l. 6. ca. 8. Expressio demoniorum est remissio peccatorum, &c.

^u Aug. de nat. & grat. ca. 66. Ceramen est aduersus tentatorem de ipsa contra nos necessitate pugnantem.

^x Bern. in Cantic. Ser. 58. Velus nobis intra sinu tibus: sibi uari potest, sed non ex terminari.

^y Rom. 5. 12.

^z Aug. in Ioann. tract. 41. Quamdiu uisus necesse est esse peccatum in membris tuis.

^a Rom. 8. 2.

^b Rom. 7. 14.

^c Ver. 21.

^d 1. Joh. 1. 8.

3. W. BISHOP.

Let vs now come vnto the difference which is betweene vs. The Catholikes teach, that Originall sinne is so farre forth taken away by baptisme, that it ceaseth to bee a sinne properly: the effects of it remaining, are an imperfection and weaknesse, both in our vnderstanding and will, and a want of that perfect subordination of our inferiour appetite vnto reason, as was, and would haue beene, in Originall iustice: which make the soule apt and ready to fall into sinne, like vnto tinder, which although it be not fire of it selfe, yet is fit to take fire: yet say they, that these reliques of Originall sinne be not sinnes properly, vnlesse a man doe yeeld his consent vnto those euill motions. Master Perkins teacheth otherwise: That albeit Originall sinne be taken away in the regenerate in sundry respects, yet doth it remaine in them after Baptisme, not onely as a want and weaknesse, but as a sinne, and that properly, as may be prooued by these reasons: S. Paul saith directly, It is no more I that doe this, but sinne that dwelleth in me, that is, originall sinne. The Papists answer, That it is called there, sinne improperly, because it commeth of sinne, and is an occasion of sinne. I approue this interpretation of S. Paul, as taken out of that ancient and famous Papist S. Augustine, who saith expressly: Concupiscence, (whereof the Apostle speaketh) although it bee called sinne, yet it is not so called because it is sinne, but for that it is made by sinne: as writing is called the hand, because it is made by the hand. And in another place repeating the same, addeth: That it may also be called sinne, for that it is the cause of sin: as cold is called slothfull, because it makes a man slothfull: so that the most profound Doctour S. Augustine is stiled a formall Papist by M. Perkins, and shall be as well cursed for it by the plaine circumstances of the place: For, saith he, that S. Paul there takes sinne properly, appears by the words following, That this sinne dwelling in him, made him to doe the euill which he hated. How proues this, that sinne there must be taken properly? it rather proues, that it must be taken improperly: for if it made him do the euill which he hated, then could it not be sinne properly: for sinne is not committed, but by the consent and liking of the will. But S. Paul did not like that euill, but hated it, and thereby was so farre off from sinning, that he did a most vertuous deed in resisting and

Rom. 1. 7.

Lib. 1. contr. duas
epist. Pelag. ca. 10.Lib. 1. de nuptijs et concup. cap. 23.

ouercomming

overcomming that euill. As witnesseth Saint Augustine, saying, Reason sometimes resisteth manfully, and ruleth raging concupiscence; which being done, wee sinne not, but for that conflict are to be crowned.

Lib. 2. de Gen.
cont. Manich.
cap. 14.

The first circumstance then alleged by M. Perkins, doth rather make against him then for him.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins alleging the words of S. Paul, It is no more I that doe it, but sinne that dwelleth in me, thereby to proue that concupiscence in the regenerate still retaineth the nature of sinne, saith that the Papists answer, that it is called sinne there improperly, because it commeth of sinne, and is an occasion of sinne. M. Bishop saith, that he approoueth this interpretation, as taken out of that ancient and famous Papist Saint Austin, and addeth, that the most profound Doctor S. Austin, as by Master Perkins styled a formall Papist. But he speaketh this out of a weak head and shallow wit, that cannot vnderstand so profound a Doctor as S. Austin is. What S. Austins opinion was as touching this point, we shall examine heereafter in the ninth section, where occasion is more fully offred to speake thereof. In the meane time, that S. Austin was no Papist, is plainly shewed in the African Councell, where were assembled two hundred and seuentene Bishops of those parts, and Austin one of them, to whom Boniface the first, then Bishop of Rome, sent his Legates, desirous to haue an oare in their boat, and challenging to himselfe a supremacie ouer their Churches. But they all with one consent (let him remember that Austin was one of them) resisted this proud attempt: and whereas the Bishop of Rome alleged and shewed the Nicene Canons yeelding him that supremacie, they smelling his fraud, and perceiuing that hee had falsified and corrupted the Canons, sent as to others, so namely to the Patriarkes of Antioch, Alexandria, and Constantinople, for the certaine and vndoubted Copies thereof. Vpon the sight whereof, this peece of knauerie being discovered, they wrote backe first to Boniface, and after to Celestinus, that they would not admit any such iurisdiction; that they would end their causes within themselves; that they would allow of no appeales to the Bishop of Rome; and wished him, that hee would thenceforth forbear to trouble them

Rom. 7. 17.

African Councill
cap. 101. 105.

them any more with his Legates. Wherein they crossed a special point of Poperie, which is the maine prop of all the rest: and this act of theirs was held to be so preiudiciall to the Sea of Rome and authoritic of the Pope, as that Boniface the second affirmed, that in pride they did that which they did against the Church of Rome, by the instigation of the diuell. It appeareth then hereby, that S. Austin was no Papist, neither was hee so, as shall appeare in that point which we haue heere in hand. In the meane time, against the answer of the Papists, that sinne is improperly taken by the Apostle, when he calleth concupiscence by the name of sinne, M. Perkins alledgeth the circumstance of the place, as first that S. Paul saith, that this sinne dwelling in him, made him doe the euill which he hated. Where to proceed orderly, and to giue light to his whole disputation, it is first to be resolved what concupiscence is, and what sinne is: for very vncertainly shall we argue that concupiscence is sinne, vnlesse by definition of both we make it appeare how they accord in one. By concupiscence therefore we vnderstand the remainder of the originall corruption of nature, after baptisme, in the state of regeneration and new birth. For man by nature is wholly vncleane and sinfull, there is nothing in him but that that is euill, nothing but enmitie against God. Whence it is that Chrysostome saith, that man naturally is not onely a sinner, but also wholly sin, and hath in him all manner of euill. Now this corruption which naturally ouerfloweth and drowneth the whole man, by the spirit of regeneration is abated, and the strength thereof broken, but so, as that still there remaineth a grievous infection of it, which continually crosseth and resisteth the worke of the holy Ghost, and fighteth against the soule, by soliciting and enticing it vnto sinne. In this remnant of corruption which we call by the name of concupiscence or lust, we are to consider both the habitus, which is the confirmed euill qualitie, and also the immediate actions, and affections, and motions thereof. For beside the euill motion, as S. Austin saith, there is within an euill, from whence this motion doth arise. And this euill continueth when there is no act or motion thereof; as when a man is asleepe, and the mind & thought no way stirreth, yet the inward corrupt qualitie sticketh still, euen as a man is truly said to be timorous & fearfull, when yet for the present time he feareth nothing. Now the question heere is of both these, both the sticking euill qualitie, and the first and immediate

c Bonifac. 2. epist. ad Eulali. Concil. tom 2. Aurelius Carthaginensis Ecclesie olim Episcopus cum collegis suis infligante Diabolo superbire, temporibus predecessionum nostrorum Bonifacij atque Celestini contra Romanam Ecclesiam cepit.

d Rom. 8. 7.

e Chrysost. op. imperfect. in Matth. hom. 37. Omnis homo naturaliter non solum peccator est, sed etiam totum peccatum. Idem habet ex varijs in Mass. locis homil. 23.

f Ibid. op. imperfect. homil. 24. Homo omnia mala habet in se.

g 1. Pet. 2. 11.

h Aug. contr. Inl. Pelag. lib. 6. ca. 8. Præter istum motum inest homini malum, unde surgit hic motus.

i Ibid. Sicut inest timiditas homini timido etiam quando non timet.

mediate motions and stirrings thereof, before they be apprehended and consented vnto by the will. For many times euill cogitations and thoughts arise in the heart, which yet a man checketh, and for which he is grieued at himselfe, and reprocueth himselfe, and by no meanes will yeeld way vnto them. Of these therefore, together with the fountaine whence they spring, the controuersie is, whether they doe properly vndergoe the name of sinne. Now what sinne is, the Apostle Saint Iohn briefly instructeth vs, saying, that sinne is the transgression of the law. His word is anomia, which signifieth all privation or defect, whereby wee come short of that that is commanded or required by the Law. To which purpose the Apostle Saint Paul telleth vs, that by the law is the knowledge of sinne, and that he had not knowne sinne but by the law. For how is sinne knowne by the law, but by that wee vnderstand it to bee sinne, whatsoeuer declineth or swarueth from the law? euen as the Apostle for example addeth, that he had not knowne lust to bee sinne, except the law had said, Thou shalt not lust, presuming it as granted, that it is sinne whatsoeuer is forbidden by the law. And this the Apostle Saint Iohn further confirmeth, in that he saith, that all vnrigh- teousnesse is sinne. For what is vnrigh- teousnesse, but the transgres- sion of the law, which is the rule of righ- teousnesse? If then all vnrigh- teousnesse be sinne, and all transgression of the law be vnrigh- teousnesse, then all transgression of the law is sinne. The heathen Orator Tullie could say, that peccare, to sinne, is as a man would say, to goe with- out, or beyond the bounds or lines. Wee are listd and bounded by the law of God: it draweth vs lines, within the compasse whereof we are to keepe our selues. What is it then to sinne with vs, but to breake the bounds prescribed vnto vs, and to goe beside that which we are directed by the law? Therefore saith Origen, This is the nature of sinne, if any thing be done, which the law forbiddeh to be done. Oecumenius out of the ancient Commentaries of the Fathers saith to the like purpose, that sinne and transgression of the law doe agree together, and that rightly Saint Iohn did make them both one. So Gregorie Bishop of Rome calling transgression of the law by the name of iniquitie, as the vulgar Latine translateh it, saith, that betwixt sin and iniquity, that is, betwixt sin and the transgression of the law, S. Iohn doth witnessse that there is no difference. In like sort Bede saith, that all that swarueh from the rule of righ- teousnes is sin. Casari- um the brother of Gregory Nazianzene telleth vs, that hec taketh

1. Ioh. 3. 4.

1 Rom. 3. 20.

Cap. 7. 7.

1. Ioh. 5. 1. 4.

Tit. Paradox. 3.

Est peccare tan- quam transire lineas.

Orig. in Ro. c. 7.

Peccati natura hec est, si fiat quod lex fieri vetat.

Oecum. in 1. Io- an. ca. 3. Conueni- unt in se, & circa idem sunt.

Ritè discipulus Domini vringue in idem commu- tauit.

Greg. Moral. lib. 11. cap. 21. Inse- peccatum & in- quitatem nihil di- stare perhibet Io- annes, qui ait, peccatum est in- quitas.

Bede in 1. Ioann. 3. Omne quod ab equitatis ratione discrepat, in pec- catis numeratur.

Casar. dialog. 3. apud Nazianzen.

Peccatum mihi esse videtur omnis alicuius virtu- em respiciens con- natus & resp. g- nantia.

it, that sinne is all assay of resistance, and all repugnancie against vertue. Saint Austine saith, that ^u therefore a thing is sinne, because it ought not to be done, and that ^x to doe any thing amisse, is to sinne. Againe hee defineth ^y sinne to be euery thing that is said, or done, or coveted against the euerlasting law of God. Yea Thomas Aquinas saith, that ^z to sinne is nothing else but to transgresse the commandements of God. In a word, the curse of God belongeth to nothing saue to sinne onely. But the curse of God belongeth to euery swaruing from the law of God: for ^a cursed is hee that continueth not in all things that are written in the booke of the Law to doe them. Therefore euery swaruing from the lawe of God is properly and truely reckoned to be sinne. And surely this is a truth so apparant and eident, as that we may wonder, not at the blindness, (for vndoubtedly they see it well enough) but at the extreame peruersenesse and impudencie of the Papiſts, that so stiffely stand in the deniall thereof. Now then the question being whether concupiscence or lust in it selfe be sinne in the regenerate man, the resolution is very readie and plaine, and the answer manifestly apparant, that because euery diuerting or swaruing from the lawe is sinne, therefore concupiscence must necessarily be sinne, in as much as it is a declining from the lawe, saying: Thou shalt not lust. And therefore doth the Apostle say, that he knew lust to be sinne, (as before was noted) because the law said, Thou shalt not lust. Hee calleth and termeth it sinne againe and againe, so as that wee may wonder, that he should call it sinne, sinne, and yet his meaning should be, that it is not sinne. For as Tertullian saith: ^b A cuius habitum quid diuertit, pariter & a vocatuius recedit: Looke from the being and nature whereof a thing departeth, it departeth also from the name and calling thereof. If therefore concupiscence had lost the nature of sinne, it should consequently also bee deprived of the name. But now whereas M. Perkins alledged the words of the Apostle, that sinne dwelling in him, made him to doe the euill which hee hateth, M. Bishop telleth vs, that contrary to M. Perkins purpose and intention, those words doe proue, that sinne must bee there taken improperly. And how so I pray you? For (saith he) if it made him to doe the euill which he hated, then could it not be sinne properly; for sinne is not committed but by the consent and liking of the will. Where by AEquiocation of termes, hee meereiy abuseth his Reader. For the committing of sinns

^u Aug de nat. & grat. cap. 14. Jileo est peccatum quia non debet fieri.

^x Contra Iulian. lib. 2. cap. 3. Quis male facit aliquid profecto peccat.

^y August. cont. Faust. Manich.

lib. 2. cap. 27. Peccatum est factum, vel delictum, vel concupitum, aliquid contra legem eternam.

^z Thom. Aquin.

1. 2. q. 109. art. 4.

in corp. Nihil est aliud peccare quam transgredi divina mandata.

^a Gal. 3. 10.

^b Tertul. aduers. Hermogen.

sinne is properly vnderstood of the externall act and accomplishment thereof, and this indeed cannot bee without the consent and liking of the will. But the doing euill of which the Apostle speaketh, is no externall act, but onely the internall motion of concu- piscence. For we may not vnderstand the Apostles words of doing the euill wh. ch he hated, and doing that which hee would not, as if hee had said, he would haue bene chaste, and yet was an adulterer; or would haue bene mercifull, and yet was cruell: or would haue bene godly, and yet was vngodly, or such like. but his meaning is, Volo non concupis- cere, & concupisco: My will and desire is to haue no act, no motion of concupiscence, and yet I haue so. I would not haue so much as any cogitation, any affection, any thought, any inclination or passion of desire tending to euill, and yet I cannot preuaile to be without them. Now therefore M. Bishop did amisse to breede ambiguity by chaunging of the tearmes, and to put vpon the A-postle a suspicion of other meaning then indeed he had. But if his meaning be as it should bee, that no euill can bee done, which may truely bee called a sinne, without the consent and liking of the will, hee saith vntruely, and doth therein but walke in the steppes of the Pelagian Heretikes. Saint Austine answered them, and we answered him, that it is sinne, when either therq is not charity, which ought to bee, or it is lesse then it ought to be, whether it may bee a-uoyded by the will, or cannot be auoyded: that is to say, whether it bee with the will or against the will. And whereas hee had defined sinne against the Manicheesto bee the desire of retaining or obtai- ning that which iustice forbiddeth, and whence it is in mans liberty to forbear, as if there were no sinne but what the will by it owne liberty doth approue and yeeld vnto, he sheweth that he there defined, that which is onely sinne, and is not also the punishment of sinne.
So hauing affirmed that in no sort it is sinne which is not voluntary he giueth the same restraint againe, that that sinne onely must there bee vnderford, which is onely sinne, and is not also the punishment of sin: as thereby it giuing to vnderstand, that that sinne which is the punishment of sinne, as is concupiscence or lust, is rightly and truly so called, though it haue not the consent and approbation of the will. It was voluntary onely by the will of him, by whom sinne was first committed, and from him it is become originall and bere minis mala voluntate contractum, factum est quod: modo hereditarium.

ditary onto vs. M. Bishops exception therefore is nothing worth, neither doth it let, but that concupiscence being a part of originall sinne, is properly called sinne in the regenerate, though it bee without the consent and liking of the will. He saith, that because the Apostle hated it, therefore it is no sin: but we say, that therefore the Apostle hated it, because it is sin. For the Apostle hated it according to God, neither would he hate any thing but what God hateth. And God hateth nothing in man but sin: that therefore which the Apostle hated in himselfe was sin: yea what is it to do euill, but to sinne? The name of euill we know, is vsed of annoyances and inconueniencies, of crosses & grieuances, but the doing of euill is neuer affirmed but of sin. Now to lust, the Apostle telleth vs, is to do euill. To lust therefore is to sinne. And because the act and motion of lusting is sinne, therefore the habit of concupiscence or lust is a habit of sinne also, because the action alwaies hath his nature and denomination from the habit and qualitie from whence it doth proceed. Yet M. Bishop saith, that the Apostle therein was so farre from sinning, as that he did a most vertuous deed, in resisting and ouercomming that euill. But the Scripture calleth the resisting of that euill, ¹ the fighting against sinne, and will M. Bishop say, that because we fight against it, therefore it is not sin? See what accord here is. The Scripture saith, that it is sinne against which we fight. M. Bishop saith, that we doe a vertuous deed in fighting against it, and therefore it is no sin. As for the place of S. Austin, it helpeth him nothing at all. Reason sometimes manfully bridleth and restraineth concupiscence, being moued or stirred: which when it doth, non labimur in peccatum, wee fall not into sinne. Which is not a rule in the regenerate only, but also in the vnregenerate, so that heathen Moralists for the auoiding of sins, haue deliuered it for a precept: ^m Ratio praeit, appetitus obtemperet: Let reason rule, and let lust obey. Yea that moralime which S. Austin profecuteth in the place alleged, comparing pleasure or temptation to the tempting serpent, concupiscence to Eue the woman, and reason to Adam the man, was borrowed from the allegories of ^a Philo the Jew, who would thereby shew, that concupiscence should bee kept in from being tempted, and though by temptation it were seduced, yet that reason should subdue it, that it might not runne to any further euill, as it desireth to doe. Now when this is done by an vnregenerate man, and either a Jew or a heathen man bridle his passions and affections, that thereby hee fall not into sinne,

will

¹ Heb. 12. 4.^m Tul. Offio. 12.^a Philo. Iud. Allegor. leg. 1. 1. & 2.

will M. Bishop conclude hereof, that those passions and affections which he bridleth are no sinne? Hee will not deny the same to be sinne in the vnregenerate man, and yet S. Austines words so farrefoorth do indifferently concerne both. He vnderstandeth sinne morally onely, and as it is reputed with men, who account no sinne at all, but either in the performance of the act, or in the resolution and purpose of the will. We fall not into sinne, that is, into any morall or actuall sinne, into any outward sinne, euen in the like sort as S. James saith, that concupiscence when it hath conceived, bringeth forth sin, when yet he did not meane, but that concupiscence also it selfe is sinne, as shall afterwards appeare.

3. W. BISHOP.

Now to the second. O wretched man that I am who shall deliuer me from this body of death? Here is no mention of sinne: how this may be drawne to his purpose, shall be examined in his argument where he repeateth it: so that there is not one poore circumstance of the text which he can find, to proue S. Paule to take sin there properly. Now I will proue by diuers, that he speakes of sinne improperly.

First by the former part of the same sentence. It is not I that do it, all sinne is done and committed properly by the person in whom it is: but this was not done by S. Paul: ergo.

Secondly out of those words: I know there is not in mee, that is in my flesh, any good: And after: I see another law in my members, resisting the law of my mind. Thus sinne properly taken is seated in the soule: but that was seated in the flesh, ergo it was no sinne properly.

The third and last is taken out of the first words of the next Chapter: There is now therefore no condemnation to them that are in Christ Iesus, that walke not according to the flesh, &c. Whence I thus argue: there is no condemnation to them, that haue that sinne dwelling in them, if they walke not according vnto the fleshly desires of it: therefore it is no sinne properly: For the wages of sinne is death, that is, eternal damnation.

R. ABBOT.

Now to the second, saith he, and when hee hath done, saith nothing of it, but putteth it ouer to the handling of the argument, and therefore fore there will we also examine his examination. But though he shift off the one circumstance with ignorance, and the other with saying nothing, yet as if he had very effectually done what he pretendeth, he inferreth, that not one poore circumstance of the text could be found to proue, that S. Paule tooke sinne there properly, marry hee will bring vs diuers, to proue that he taketh sin improperly. Wel then, let vs see what these diuers proofes be: wee doubt they are like his answers; the one very bad and the other starke naught. First hee will proue it by the former part of the sentence, It is not I that doe it. Al sinne (saith he) is committed properly by the person in whom it is: but this was not done by S. Paule, ergo. But we deny his minor proposition, and it is a together absurd and senselesse. How should concupiscence doe any thing in S. Paule, which is not done by S. Paule? Can the accident of the person be an efficient cause of any thing by it selfe without the person? The accident is but the instrument of the person, and wha: the accident doth, the person doth it by the accident.

And therefore accordingly S. Paule saith, ^a I am carnall sold vnder sinne: I do that I would not: the law of my members leadeth me captiue to the law of sinne: I in my flesh serue the law of sinne: ^b euē I my selfe in my mind serue the law of God, and in my flesh the law of sinne.

^b August. de verb. Apost. Ser. 5. Adhuc concupisco, & utique etiam in ipsa parte ego sum.

Non enim ego alius in mente et alius in carne. Sed quid igitur ipse ego? Quia ego in me et ego in carne: ex utroque unus homo. Igitur ipse ego, ego ipse mente seruo &c.

^c Ibid. Mens regit caro regit: ut & magis sum ego in ea quo rego, quā in eo in quo regor.

This S. Austine well obserued: ^b Euē in that part that lusteth, it is I also: for here is not one I in the mind, and another in the flesh. Why doth he say, I my selfe, but because it is I in the mind, and I in the flesh, euē one man of both these. Therefore I my selfe, euē I my selfe in mind serue the law of God but in my flesh the law of sinne. But yet though being but one and the same person, he diuideth him'selfe as it were into two parts, being in part renewed, and in part yet continuing olde. And hereupon he saith, It is not I that doe it; that is, not I according to that that is renewed in me: and yet I according to that whereby I am still carnall and sold vnder sin: not I according to the inner man, wherein I delight in the law of God, and yet I according to the flesh whereby I am still captiue to the law of sinne: of which flesh I say not I, because I account my selfe that that I iny to bee, and which I shall euer be, not that which though it be my selfe, yet is that I would not bee, and which I labour not to bee, and therefore stroue to destroy and put off, as being without it to liue for euer. ^c I may rather say, I, in that wherein I rule, then in that wherein I am ouerruled; therefore I say, it is not I that doe it, and yet it is I in both. M. Bishop therefore therefore by his first circumstance proueth iust nothing, and euen as litle proueth he by the second. Which he taketh out of those words,^d I know that in me, that is, in my flesh dwelleth no good thing:

^d ver. 18.

and after, I see another law in my members resisting the law of my mind.

Here of he argueth thus: Sinne properly taken is seated in the soule, but that was seated in the flesh, ergo it was not sinne properly. Which is the same as if a man would argue thus, that the true Pope hath his consistorie chaire in Rome, but the Pope that now is hath his consistorie in the Laterance Church, therefore he that now is, is not the true Pope. For what is flesh as the Apostle speaketh thereof, but a part of the soule; the soule it selfe, so farre as yet in part it is not regenerate? What, is M Bishop so absurd, as to thinke concupiscence to be seated in the flesh, as the flesh is diuided against the soule? Nay, the soule it selfe hauing cast off the yoke of obedience to God, and betrayed it selfe to the temptations of the diuill for the gratifying and pleasing of the flesh, is become a seruant to that that should haue bene a seruant vnto it, and being abiected to sensuall, and carnall, and earthly desires, is wholly called by the name of flesh, to whose seruice it doth addict it selfe. Thus saith Origen, that^e the soule being become of more grosse disposition, by yielding it selfe to the passions of the bodie, is said to be become flesh, and taketh the name of that on which it bestoweth it most desire. And againe:^t Animas nostras incarnauimus: We haue turned our soules into flesh. So saith Austine, that^b the Scripture called man himselfe, that is, the nature of man by the name of flesh: and called those the workes of the flesh, which yet are the proper vices of the mind, and belong not to that wh. ch we properly call the flesh. And so doth God himselfe say of man wholly, that^h he is flesh, and our Sauiour in the Gospell opposing flesh to the spirit,ⁱ That which is borne of the flesh, is flesh; and that that is borne of the spirit, is spirit, giueth to vnderstand, that all goeth vnder the name of flesh, that is not borne againe and renewed by the spirit.

Now therefore as touching concupiscence, Saint Austine telleth vs that^k it is said that the flesh lusteth, because that the soule lusteth according to the flesh. Yea Cyprian doubted not to say, that he held it to be vnproperly said, that the flesh lusteth against the spirit, because it is

^e Origen de princip. lib. 3. cap. 4. Anima cum carnis sensus fuerit eff:cta ex eo quod corporis passionibus se subdat, &c. caro dicitur eff:cta. & inde nomen trahit, in quo plus studij vel propoliti gerit.

^f Idem in Psal. 38. hom. 2.

^g August. de ciuitatib. Dei. lib. 14. cap. 2. Sape ipsi hominem, id est naturam hominis carnem intucipat. Et post: In operibus carnis inuenimus illa quibus animi vitia significantur & voluptate carnis aliena.

^h Genes. 6. 3. i Ioh. 3. 5. k Aug. de perf. Iustit. Ret. 17 & contr. Iulian. lib. 5. cap. 5. Quia carnaliter anima concupiscit.

^l Cyprianus Prolog. de cardinal. Christi operibus. Quod caro aduers. spiritum & spiritum aduers. carnem contendere dicitur & repugnare impropriè dictum arbitror, quia solus nomen huius est quod secum rixatur, &c. Et post

^m Præ: Corpore sic videtur anima, sicut Faber mulco vel incude in qua format omnium turpitudinum idola, & fabrica ut quælibet quar: in cunquo voluptatum simulachra. Non est caro cicitatrix peccati, nec inuentrix malitiae, nec cogitatus format, nec dispositio agendi, sed officina est spiritus, quia in ea & per eam quæcumque assilauit, peragitur, & consummatur.

the soule onely that is at strife with it selfe. For the flesh is no director of sinne, no deuiser of wickednesse: it frameth not the thought, nor disposeth what shall be done, but is as the shop or workhouse of the soule, which in it and by it performeth whatsoeuer it desireth: vsing the body as the Smith doth his hammer or anuile, framing thereupon the idols of uncleannesse and pleasure. Seeing therefore, as here it is plaine, concupiscence is seated in the soule, which for the corruption thereof is called by the name of flesh, so that the Apostle by flesh in himself meaneth nothing but the soule according to the remainder of original infection, which still did sticke fast vnto him, M. Bishop by his second circumstance proueth nothing but that concupiscence is truly & properly affirmed to be sin. Which had bene very readily tohaue bene perceiued by any man, if he had framed his argument as he should haue done: Sinne properly taken is seated in the soule; but concupiscence is not seated in the soule: for this euery man would haue presently seene to be absurd. But he to blind his Reader chose rather to say, Concupiscence is seated in the flesh, whereas notwithstanding the flesh as it is the seate of concupiscence cannot haue any reasonable vnderstanding but of the soule. But now the third circumstance I trow will do the deed. That he taketh out of the first verse of the eighth Chapter. Now there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Iesus, that walke not after the flesh. Whence, saith he, I argue thus: There is no condēnation to them that haue sinne dwelling in them, if they walk not according to the fleshly desires of it, therefore it is no sinne properly: for the wages of sinne is death, that is eternall damnation. As if he should say, God for Christs sake doth not impute this sinne, therefore it is no sinne. God to them that are in Christ doth pardon this sinne, ergo, it is not properly sinne. And so he might likewise argue of Daniels adulterie, Peters denying & abiuring of his maister, Pauls persecuting of the Church that none of these were properly sins, because to the being in Christ, there is no condēmatiō for any of these things. Such drunken sophistrie are we troubled with, and drawne by the importunity of ignorant buzzards to spend time in the refuting of such arguments as rather deserue to be chastened with a whip, then to be graced with an answer. The matter is plaine to the that are willing to vnderstand. There is no condēnation to them that are in Christ Iesus; it is true: and yet who is there of them that are in Christ Iesus, but confesseth vnto God, that there is that in him for which hee might iustly bee condemned? To them that are in Christ, for Christs sake it is forgien and pardoned: it is not imputed vnto them: but it is still such, as if it were imputed, it should be sufficient to condemne them to euerlasting death. Therefore the Apostle saith of concupiscence, not for his consenting to it, which he disclaimeth, but for the hauing of it dwelling in him, that ^m it slue him, that (n) by the commandement it wrought death in him. that by it he had ^o a body of death. How so, but that knowing that the wages of sinne is death, hee knew himselfe thereby in case of death, if God should deale with him for it as in extremicie, and yet in iustice he might do. Therefore doth S. Austin say, that euen in the regenerate ^p concupiscence is such and so great an euill as that only because it is in them, it should hold them in death, and draw them to euerlasting death, but that the bond of the guilt thereof is loosed in Baptisme by the forgiuenesse of all our sinnes. It is therefore such in it selfe to which death is due, but yet to them that are in Christ it proueth not vnto death, because it is forgien vnto them for Christs sake. Thus wee haue seene an end of M. Bishops circumstances, and nothing yet to proue, but that concupiscence by the Apostle is properly called sinne. And to proue that it is so, because he saith there is not one poore circumstance to^o that purpose, I would haue him to examine these. First, that by the law the Apostle saith, hee knew concupiscence to bee sinne. For it is sin properly whatsoeuer by the law is conuicted to be sinne. Secondly, that it wrought death vnto him: and nothing but sinne could make him to find his selfe thereby in case of death. Thirdly that he saith, sinne, that it might appeare sinne, wrought death in mee, thereby affirming, that by working death it did appeare to be that indeed which in name it is called, as Occumenius expresth those words, ^q that all in all it might be made manifest to be that that it is. Fourthly hee saith, that ^r this sin was exceedingly a sinner by the cōmandemē: for so the words are according to the originall, and so saith Irenaeus, by allusion to that place, that ^s the law did testifie of sinne that it was a sinner. Now sinne is not a person it selfe, that it should bee said to bee a sinner, but hereby is signified what man is by this sinne, namely of concupiscence; and that is, exceedingly a sinner. But a man cannot be a sinner, but by that that is properly sinne: therefore concupiscence making a man a sinner by the first motions thereof, euen without consent,

^m Rom. 7. 11.
ⁿ Verf. 13.
^o Verf. 24.

^p August. cont. Lulian. lib. 6. cap. 5 Tale ac tam magnum malum tantum quia inest quomodo non teneret in morte & pertraheret in ultimam mortem, nisi & vinculum eius in ea quae est in Baptismo peccatorum: omnium remissione solueretur.

^q Occumen. in Rom. cap. 7. ut quod est totum in toto fiat manifestum.

^r Καθ' ἑαυτοῦ ἀμαρτωλός.

^s Iren. lib. 3. cap. 20. Lex testificans de peccato quosdam peccator est.

consent, is properly a sinne. And thus much for circumstances of the place.

4. W. BISHOP.

Now to M. Perkins Argument in forme as hee proposeth it. That which was once sinne properly, and still remaining in man, maketh him to sinne, and intangleth him in the punishment of sinne, and makes him miserable, that is sinne properly : But Originall sinne doth all these. Ergo.

The Maior, which (as the learned know) should consist of three words, containes foure severall points, and which is worst of all, not one of them true.

To the first; that which remaineth in man after Baptisme, commonly called Concupiscence, was neuer a sinne properly: but onely the materiall part of sinne, the formall and principall part of it, consisting in the deprivation of Originall iustice, and a voluntary auersion from the law of God, the which is cured by the Grace of God, giuen to the baptized, and so that which was principall in Originall sinne, doth not remaine in the regenerate: neither doth that which remaineth, make the person to sinne, (which was the second point,) unlesse he willingly consent vnto it, as hath bene proued heretofore: it allureth and intiseth him to sinne, but hath not power to constraine him to it, as M. Perkins also himselfe before confessed. Now to the thurd, and intangleth him in the punishment of sinne: how doth Originall sinne intangle the regenerate in the punishment of sinne if all the guiltinesse of it bee remoued from his person, as you taught before, in our Consent? Mendacem memorem esse oportet: Either confesse that the guilt of Originall sinne is not taken away from the regenerate, or else you may vsay this, that it intangleth him in the punishment of sinne. Now to the last clause, that the reliques of Originall sinne make a man miserable, a man may be called wretched and miserable, in that he is in disgrace with God, and so subiect to his heauie displeasure: & that which maketh him miserable in this sence, is sinne: but S. Paul taketh not the word so here, but for an unhappy man exposed to the danger of sinne, and to all the miseries of this world, from which we should haue bene exempted, had it not bene for Originall sinne, after which sort he useth the same word. If in this life onely we were hoping in Christ, we were more miserable then all men: not that the good Christians were farthest out of Gods fauour, and more sinfull then other men: but that they had fewest worldly comforts, and the greatest crosses. And thus much in confutation of that formal argument.

R. ABBOT.

M Perkins his proposition consisteth of foure points. M. Bishop saith, that of these foure points there is not one true. Which if it be so, it was M. Perkins good hap to light vpon such an aduersarie, as of foure seuerall points, all as hee saith vnttrue, is not able to disprooue one. The first point is, that Concupiscence was once properly sinne, which M. Perkins presumed as agreed and granted, because the question betwixt vs and them, is of Concupiscence after baptisme, as if in the vnbaptised there were no question but that concupiscence is sinne. But M. Bishop here altereth the state of the question, telling vs that Concupiscence was neuer properly sinne, and thereby shewing that hee doth but colorably alledge and incerely abuse S. Austin, who before Baptisme in no sense denieth but that Concupiscence is truly sinne, and continually affirmeth it to be so. And thus he maketh the Apottle wholly to dally in naming sinne. sinne, where there is no sinne indeed, neither after Baptisme, nor before. But that which hath beene sayd both of the nature of sinne, and of the circumstances of the Apottles text, to prooue that concupiscence after baptisme is sinne, doth much more proue, that the same is sinne before Baptisme, and it shall yet further appeare, if God will, in that that followeth. In the meane time here we are to obserue, how M. Bishop falsely charging M. Perkins with foure vnttruths in his argument, in declaring the first of those foure, doth himselve deliuer foure vnttruths indeed. Concupiscence, saith he, was neuer properly sinne, but onely the materiall part of sinne: the formall and principall part of it consisting in the deprivation of Originall iustice, ano a voluntary auersion from the law of God. Where first hee erreteth, in that he maketh Originall iustice to consist onely in the integritie of the will, and the forme of sinne to stand onely in the auersion of the will from God, by the losse of the same Originall iustice, whereas Originall iustice was in truth the integritie of all the parts of man, not tubiecting the flesh to the mind, and the mind to God, but the whole man to God; the image whereof is set forth vnto vs in the comman-

commandement, ^a Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, with all thy soule, with all thy thought and strength. The forme of sinne therefore is not onely in the auersion of the will, but in the auersion of any part, or power, or facultie of the soule: if in any of these there bee a declining from the law of God, it is the sinne of man. Now because (b) so long as there is any matter of concupiscence to bee yet bridled and restrained, God cannot be loved with all the soule (for how can God haue all the soule, so long as concupiscence hath any part?) therefore in the remainder of any matter of concupiscence, there is sinne; because ^c it is sinne when either there is not love at all, or it is lesse then it should be, and it is lesse then it should be, when it is not with all the soule. Therefore doth S. Austin define sinne to be ^d hominis inordinatio atque perversitas: a disordered and perverted condition of man. Of man he saith, not only of the will of man, and therefore if in man there bee any disordered, or mis-conditioned affection, the same is sinne. But concupiscence which is a rebellion of the law that is in the members, against the law of the mind, is a disorder in man, and therefore necessarily must be holden to be truly sinne. A second error he committeth, in that making concupiscence onely the materiall part of sinne, hee appropriateth it to the inferiour, sensuall and brutish parts and faculties of the nature of man, and to the resistance thereof against the superiour and more excellent powers of the will, and reason, and vnderstanding, whereas concupiscence truly vnderstood importeth the vniuersall habite of auersion from God, and a corruption spread ouer the whole man, and defiling him in all parts and powers both of body and soule. And therefore doth the Apostle expound the conuersation in or according to the lusts or concupiscences of the flesh, to be ^e the fulfilling of the will of the flesh and of the minde, which hee could not doe, but that concupiscence signifieth also the prauitie and corruption of the mind, such as the Apostle S. Peter also maketh it the fountaine of all ^f the corruption that rageth in the world. And thus amongst the works of the flesh, which are the fruits and effects, and as it were the streame of that fountaine of corruption, are reckoned those things which haue their proper seate and being in the highest parts of the soule, as are ^g idolatry, heresie, witchcraft, enuie, hatred, pride, which being acts of concupiscence and sinfull lust, yet are so farre ^h from being tied to ^a Mat. 12. 10.

Luk. 10. 27.

^b August. de perfect. iustit. Rat. 17. Cum est aliquid concupiscencie carnalis quod vel continedo fruetur non omnimodo ex tota anima diligitur Deus.
^c Ibid. Rat. 15.
^d Ad Simplic. quest. 2. Est peccatum hominis inordinatio atque perversitas; id est a praeiustiore conditore auersio et ad condita inferiora conuersio.

^e Ephes. 2. 3.

^f 2 Pet. 1. 4.

^g Gal. 5. 30. 21.
^h August. de ciuit. Dei lib. 14. cap. 2.
ⁱ 3.

the

the inferiour parts of the soule, which haue their occupation properly in the flesh, as that some of them, and that specially pride and enuie, are noted to bee the finnes of the Diuell, who hath no communion or societie with the flesh, and therefore in the name and nature of concupiscences, are meerey the vices and corruptions of the minde. Yea S. Austin acknowledgeth, that ^l concupiscence is nothing else but the will of man corrupted and seruing sinne, and that the temptation of concupiscence is nothing else but ^k the temptation of a mans owne euill will. So saith S. Bernard, ^l It is in my will that I continue to doe against the law of God, for mine owne will is the law in my members rebelling against the law of God; mine owne will is found contrary to my selfe. Whereby it appeareth, that concupiscence which is that rebelling law of sinne, is a deprauation of the will also, and not to be restrained to the brutish and sensuall affections of the inferiour part. Nay Hierome noteth, that it signifieth ^m all the passions or perturbations of the soule, whereby wee ioy or sorrow, feare or desire, which are holden to be ⁿ the originals and beginnings of all finnes and vices, which although Poets and Philosophers haue taken to arise of the flesh, yet ^o Christian faith, saith Austin, teacheth otherwise, that we are not to attribute these vices of euil life altogether to the flesh, that is, to the sensuall part, lest that of all the finnes thereof wee acquit the diuell, because hee is without flesh. Another error of his is, that hee maketh the priuation of Originall iustice, and auersion of the will to be the principall matter of Originall sinne. For the principall matter in Originall sinne, is the ^p guilt of Adams sinne, ^q in whom wee all haue sinned, and in him haue all receiued the sentence of damnation. For that must bee accounted the principall, which is the cause of all the rest; and it is the guilt of the first sinne, that is the cause of whatsoever further sinne originally cleaueth to vs, which together with death it selfe is the punishment of that first sinne. His fourth error is as touching the cure of Originall sinne, which hee maketh to be such, as if Originall iustice were wholly restored, and all auersion of the will from God wholly taken away. Which is so palpably false, as that wee may wonder that hee had so little feeling of conscience, as that for shame hee would write it to the world. For if there bee that ⁱ Idem. Retracl. lib. 1. c. 15. Ipsa cupiditas nihil aliud est quam voluntas, sed viosa, peccat'q' seruens.

^k De bono persever. ca. 6. Qui in temptatione sine male voluntatu non infertur, in nullam prorsus infertur. Nulquis enim tantatur à concupiscencia sua, &c.

^l Bernar. in Cant. Serm. 81. Voluntate persisto agere contra legem.

Nam mea voluntas ipsa est lex in membris meis, legi diuine recalcitrans. Mihi ipsi mea ipsius voluntas contraria inuenitur.

^m Hier. ad. Algas. quest. 8. Nos per concupiscenciam omnes perturbaciones anime significatas putamus, quibus mœremus, & gasdemus, inuenimus & concupiscimus.

ⁿ Aug. de Civit. Dei, lib. 14. cap. 3. Originis omnium peccatorum atque uitiorum.

^o Ibid. Non omnia vitia inique vitia tribuenda sunt carni, non ab his omnibus progremus diabolum qui non habet carnem. P 1 Retracl. lib. 1. cap. 15. Peccatum eos dicimus ex Adam originis trahere, id est eius reatu implicatos, & ob hoc pane obnoxios deceneri. q Bernard. in aduent. Dom. serm. 1. In Adam omnes peccauimus, & in illo sententiam damnationis accepimus omnes.

cure that he speaketh of in the Baptized, how is it that there is so little effect or token thereof? How is it that after Baptisme there remaineth so great crookednesse & peruersenesse of nature, which we find commonly to bee no lesse then from the beginning men haue complained of? How is it that it is rsorare and hard a matter to be trained to goodnes; so easie & ready a matter to become naught? that to the one we attaine with much difficulty, albeit we vse all the good helps thereto that may be vsed; the other is so familiar to vs, as that without any teacher, without any example to instruct vs, wee can learne it of our selues? Why doth he viter these absurd paradoxes so contrarie to the common sense and experience of all men? It is true that in Baptisme there is a medicine applied for the curing of this Originall maladie, which medicine taketh effect according to the purpose of the grace of God. It doth not by and by worke in all; it worketh in some sooner, in some later, as he thinketh good to giue it effect, by whom it was first applied. Sometimes after many yeares he maketh the same workefull by his effectuall calling, which from infancy hath lien as it were fruitlesse, as if it neuer had bene done. But when it doth worke, it worketh not all at once; it worketh but by degrees; it hath still somewhat ^f to renew from day to day, and neuer effecteth a full and perfect cure so long as we liue heere. This followeth afterward to bee prooued at large, and therefore I will but briefly propound it in this place. Now all these fancies hath M. Bishop vitered in answering the first point of M. Perkins his argument. Let vs now come to the second point. M. Perkins saith, that concupiscence maketh a man to sinne, M. Bishop saith, it doth not make a man to sinne unlesse hee consent vnto it. But the Apostle telleth vs that concupiscence doth make a man to doe euill: and it hath bene shewed that that euill is sin, euen before there be giuen any consent vnto it. This euill consisteth in euil motions and thoughts, which arise in vs whether we will or not, neither ^u are our harts and thoughts in our owne power for the auoiding thereof, but that euen vnawares they ouercast the mind, and throw it downe to the earth whilest it is tending towards heauen, & that runneth in the fancy which we make speciall labour to putt out. Ye a oftentimes they grow to that absurditie and wickednesse, as that we could not beleue but vpon our owne experience, that there were in vs so corrupt a spring, as to yeeld so loathsome and filthy streames; which make r Cypriande Cardinal, Christi operib. in Prologo. Ommino rarum est & difficile fieri bonum: facile & prouum est esse malum. & hac sine magistro sine exemplo doctrina statim à pubescentibus annis imbutur & docemur.

f 2. Cor. 4. 16.

r Epiphan. her. 64 Origen. Obrepimus circa cor nostrum etiam non volentibus nobis, &c. u Ambr. de suza seculi. lib. 3. ca. 1. Non in potestate nostra est cor nostrum & nostre cogitationes que in prouasio offuse mentem animumque confundunt atque alio trahunt quam tu propuleris, &c. Ipso in tempore quo eleuare mentem paramus, insertis in anibus cogitationibus ad terrena plerumque deijcitur. Et paulo prius: ut quod studeas vitare, hoc cogites animoque voluas.

make the true faithfull man ashamed of himselfe, and to condemne himselfe in the sight of God, howsoeuer nothing thereof appeare to the eyes of men. But with M. Bishop these things are nothing; he will neuer cry God mercie for any such, because he hath therein done him no trespass; yea the Trent Councell telleth vs, that herein is x nothing that God hateth, nothing that hindereth vs from x Concil. Trident. Sess. 5. In venia nihil odit Deus; nihil eos ab ingressu caeli commutat. entring into heauen. Which seeing God requireth all the thought to be bestowed in his loue, and thereby denounceth it to be a sinne to haue any of our thoughts wandring away from him, these men would neuer thus affirme and teach, but that y a spirit of y slumber hath closed their eyes, that they see not that truth, against which they haue resolved to bend themselues. The third point of M. Perkins argument is, that concupiscence intangleth a man in the punishment of sinne. This M. Bishop saith, is contrarie to that that he had sayd before, that the guilt of Originall sinne is taken away in the regenerate. But here is no contrarietie, because in the continuall rebellion of concupiscence, a mans conscience seeth punishment, thereby due vnto him if God should require the same, but yet by faith comforteth himselfe, that it is remitted vnto him for Christs sake. And that which M. Perkins spake, he spake it out of the Apostles words, who of concupiscence saith, that z it wrought death z Rom. 7. 13. in him, that is, made him in himselfe guiltie of death, and thus intangled him in the punishment of sinne, although in Christ he saw deliuerance, because a there is no condemnation to them that are in a Cap. 8. 1. Christ Iesus. Let M. Bishop therefore discharge M. Perkins of the lie, and take the whetstone to himselfe, as being farre more iustly due vnto him. The last point of the argument is, that concupiscence maketh a man miserable, taken out of the words of the Apostle, b Wretched man, or miserable man that I am, who shall deliuer me from b Rom. 7. 24. the bodie of this death. or from this body of death? M. Bishop here-to answereth, that miserable is vnderstood two maner of waies, either by being in disgrace with God, or by reason of the danger of sinne, and the miseries of this world. But of the danger of sinne the Apostle acquitteth him selfe. c The Lord will deliuer me from c 1. Tim. 4. 18. every euill worke, and will preserue me vnto his heauenly kingdome, and d neither things present, nor things to come shall separate us from d Rom. 8. 39. the loue of God. As for the miseries of this world, they are here drawne in by head and shoulders, there being here no shew of any matter matter that should mooue the Apostle thus to complaine in respect thereof. But the thing is plaine, that he calleth himselfe miserable, as S. Austin plainely teacheth, by reason of an inward euill qualitie whereby the will being good, could not auail to doe the good that hee would. He calleth himselfe miserable, by reason of that from which he desired to be deliuered, which is the body of death. Now the body of death is that which before he hath called the bodie of sinne, and elsewhere the body of the sinnes of the flesh. By the body of sinne is vnderstood concupiscence, which is as a body consisting of many members and parts, which are the diuers lusts of diuers sinnes, and thereby is a body of sinnes, euen consisting of all maner of sinnes. For wee may not heere vnderstand the body properly, as of the bodie which dieth, as if the Apostle had desired a dissolution and end of life, because every one that dieth is not thereby deliuered from the body of death. For the death of the body separateth (the wicked) from the body, when yet the vices and sins thereby gathered do sticke fast, so which iust punishment remaineth due. Therefore when he praieith to be deliuered from this body of death, De vitijs corporis dicit, he meaneth it of the vitious affections of the body. By concupiscence is it that this our body of death is so called. So Oecumenius saith, that the Apostle desireth to be deliuered from the concupiscences which are in the bodie, and which are death vnto vs, and do cause a spirittuall death. It is a bodie of death, saith Origen, wherein sinne dwelleth which is the cause of death. Ambrose saith, that the Apostle calleth his body a body of death, because we all are borne vnder sinne, and our very beginning is in trespasse, acknowledging as touching the corruption of sin, that what it was in the beginning, the same in part it continueth still. Epiphanius, or rather Methodius saith, that the Apostle heere meaneth sinne dwelling by concupiscence in the body, from the bad imaginations & thoughts whereof he wisheth to bee deliuered, accounting the same death and destruction it selfe. Bernard saith, that it was the law of sinne, euen concupiscence standing as a wall betwixt God and him, that made him cry out, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? In concupiscence then standeth this body of death; and because by this body of death it is that the Apostle calleth himselfe miserable, it is concupiscence that e Aug. contr. Italian. lib. 6. cap. 7. Nonne concedis hominem miserum quicumque ille fuerit aduersus talem clamasse quia: em, velle adiacet mihi, &c. (qua voluntas bona aut non ibi sit, aut valere nihil possit.)

f Rom. 6. 6.

g Col. 2. 11.

h Aug. de perfect. iustis. Rat. 17. De corpore mortis huius non omnis liberatur qui finit hanc vitam.

i De nat. & grat. cap. 55. De corpore mortis corporis separatur, sed contra illa ex illo vitia cohererent, quibus iusta pena debetur.

k Ibid.

l De Temp. ser. 45. Per concupiscenciam dictum est hoc nostrum mortis corpus.

m Oecumen. in Ro. cap. 7. Ex corporalibus aetionibus spiritualium mortem inducentibus: a concupiscencijs que in corpore sunt, quaeque mors nobis sunt:

n Orig. ibid. Corpus mortis appellatur in quo habitat peccatum quod mortis est causa.

o Ambros. apud Aug. cont. Italian. li. 2. Omnes homines sub peccato nascimur, quorum ipse ortus in vitio est, &c. Ideo Pauli caro corpus mortis erat, &c. P Method. apud Epiphani. her. 64. Non corpus hoc mortem sed peccatum inhabitans per concupiscenciam in corpore dicit, &c. q Bernard. in Cant. serm. 56. Ipse est carnis concupiscencia, &c. Hoc sane uno interiecto pariete non longe peregrinabatur a Domino. Unde & optabat, clamans, Quis me liberabit, &c.

maketh him miserable, which therefore S. Austin calleth miserā legem, the miserable law of sin, not as being it selfe capable of misery, but per metonymiam, because it maketh vs miserable, or because we are miserable by it. Thus therefore the Apostle acknowledgeth himselfe miserable in himselfe, not as holding himselfe to be in disgrace with God, but as finding in himselfe that for which he deserueth so to be, & should be, but that God in Christ is mercifull vnto him, not to impute the same. And what is it but a misery, to haue as it were a filthy carion tied fast to him, still breathing out noysome stinke? to be continually troubled with an importunat enemy, giuing him no rest, and wearying his soul from day to day? nay, to cary about with him euē an army of diuers and sundry lusts, drawing one this way, and another that way, fighting against him on the right hand, and on the left, bereauing him of his ioy, whilest in most earnest meditations they carry him away whether he will or not from that wherein his delight is. If outward crosses do make a man miserable, much more this inward distraction & affliction, which gallerth the strings of the hart, & vexeth the very spirit and soule, more then the bitterness of death it selfe. If M. Bishop knew this affliction, hee would think there were cause enough therein to make him crie out, Miserable man that I am, &c. But his benumbed heart feeleth it not, and therefore he speaketh of these matters but as a Philosopher in the schooles, without any conscience or sense of that hee saith, and to a formall argument, as he calleth it, giueth these mis-shapen and deformed answers.

1. August. de Temp. porc. ser. 45.

1 Idem. cont. Julian. Pelag. lib. 2. Exercitium quoddam uariarum cupiditatum in rase met ipsum debellat.

5. W. BISHOP.

Now to the second. Infants baptized, die the bodily death before they come to the yeeres of discretion: but there is not in them any other cause of death, besides Originall sinne, for they haue no actual sion, and death is the wages of sinne, as the Apostle saith, death entred into the world by sinne.

*Rom. 5. x
Rom. 5.*

Ans. The cause of the death of such Innocents, is either the distemperature of their bodies, or externall violence: and God who freely bestowed their liues vpon them, may whē it pleaseth him as freely take their liues from them, especially when he meanes to recompence them with the happy exchange of life euerlasting. True it is, that if our first parents had not sinned, no man should haue died, but haue bene both long preserved in Paradise, by the fruit of the wood of life, and finally translated withour death into the Kingdome of heauen: and therefore is it sayd most truly of S. Paul, Death entred into the world by sinne. But the other place, The wages of sinne is death, is fouly abused, for the Apostle there by death understandeth eternall damnation, as appeareth by the opposition of it to life everlasting: and by sinne there meaneth not Originall, but actuall sinne, such as the Romans commued in their infidelity, the wages whereof, if they had not repented them, had bene hell fire: now to infer that Innocents are punished with corporall death for Originall sin remaining in them, because that eternall death is the due hire of actuall sinne, is either to shew great want of iudgement, or else very strangely to peruert the words of holy Scripture. Let this also not be forgottē, that he himselfe acknowledged in our Consent: that the punishment of Originall sinne was taken away in Baptisme from the regenerate: how then doth he here say, that he doth die the death for it?

R. ABBOT.

The example of infants dying after Baptisme before they come to yeares of discretion, is rightly alledged to proue that sinne remaineth after Baptisme, because where there is no sin there can be no death. To this M. Bishop sendeth vs a most pitiful and miserable answer, that the cause of the death of infants is not sin, but either the distemperature of their bodies or externall violence. Thus hee would maintaine a priuiledge to infants against the words of S. Iohn,^a If we say we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues; that they may say, we say we haue no sinne, and we doe not therein deceiue our selues: and though we die, yet it is not by reason of sin that we die, but either by the distemperature of our bodies, or externall violence. But if M. Perkins had sayd as he might haue sayd, Infants after Baptisme are subiect to distemperature of body, and externall violence, and death following, all which are the proper effects of sinne; therefore they are not without sinne, in what a wofull case had M. Bishop bene, and how had he bene put to his shifts to deuise an answer? Surely S. Austin saith, that b we suffer not any thing in this life, but by reason of that death which we deserued by the first sinne. And so saith Origen verie rightly, that c death and aliother frailtie in the flesh was brought vpon vs by the condition or state of sin. Therefore distemperature, & weaknesse, and sicknes, and suffering of externall violence, are no lesse arguments of sinne then death itselfe, and how then doth hee make these

Rom. 5.
Rom. 6.

a 1. Ioh. 1. 8.

b August. in Ps.
37. Non aliquid
patimur in ista
uita nisi ex illa
morte quā merui-
mus primo peccato
c Origen. in Leuit
hom. 1. Nobis hominibus vel mors
vel reliqua omnis
fragilitas in carne
ex peccati conditi-
one superdicta
asit.

these the causes of death without sinne, when they are no otherwise the causes of death but by reason of sinne? But hee addeth further, that God who freely bestowed their lives on them, may when it pleaseth him as freely take their lives from them. But yet if there be no sin, and if it be as the Trent Councell saith, that there is nothing in them that God hateth, nothing that hindreth them from entring into heauen, why then doth God without cause take away their life, and not rather without death receiue them vnto himselfe? why doth he not immediatly ^{d 1. Cor. 5. 4.} cloth them upon that mortality may bee swallowed vp of life?

This is a myltery to M. Bishop, & he cannot tel what to say thereof. But the dying of baptized infants, sheweth that there is still in the a corruption of flesh and blood, by which the sentence of the Apostle taketh hold of them, ^{e 1. Cor. 15. 50.} ° flesh and blood cannot inherite the kingdome of God, neither shall corruption inherite incorruption. The cause of their death is the putting off of this corruptiõ, the dissolution & full mortification of the body of sin, that this slough being cast off, and mortalitie changed into immortality, & corruption into incorruption, they may be fit for the inheritance of the kingdome of God. Thus Epiphanius bringeth in Methodius disputing against Proclus the Origenist, that ^f God as the true Physitian hath appointed death for a medicinable purgation for the utter rooting out and putting away of sinne, that we may be made faultlesse and innocent; and that as a goodly golden image sightly and seemely in all parts, if it be broken and defaced by any meanes, must be new cast and framed againe for the taking away of the blemishes and disgraces of it, euen so man, the image of God, being maimed and disgraced by sinne, for the putting away of those disgraces, and the repairing of his ruines and decayes, must by death be dissolved in to the earth, thence to be raised vp againe perfect and without default.

Now if M. Bishop will not learne it of vs, yet let him learne it of these ancient Fathers, that sin is the cause of death, euen in them to whom notwithstanding it is forgiven & pardoned for Christs sake. But he goeth further, True it is that if our first parents had not sinned, no man should haue died, but both haue bene long preserved in Paradise by the fruit of the wood of life: and finally translated without death into the kingdome of heauen. But since they haue sinned, what? Marry it is most truely said by S. Paul, Death entred into the world by sinne. Well then, if it entred by sin into the world, doth it continue in the world by any other thing then by which it first entred? Nay, as it

f Epiphanius. her. 64
ex Methodio. In auxiliariis medi-
camentis modum ab auxiliatore no-stro & verè medico Deo ad era-
dicacionem pecca-
ti ac deletionem
assumpta est mors
&c. ¶ Instar medi-
camentarie pur-
gationis mortem Deus lendimentis
quo sic omnium culpabilis & in-noxii immundum
&c. videtur ve-
lut si quis summus
opifici statuum
pulchram ex auro
aut a'ia materia
à se constructam
maxime consuet
mutat am repentè conficitur à pessimi quolens hominis, &c.

entred by sinne, so sinne is the onely cause of the continuing of it, and without sinne there is no death: in the failing of the cause must needs be a surceasing of the effect. Now to shew that death is the proper effect of sin, M. Perkins alledgeth the words of the Apostle, The wages of sinne is death. But M. Bishop saith, that this place is foully abused by him. And why so? Forsooth the Apostle here by death meaneth eternall damnation. And what then? Doth he therefore not meane bodily death also? Surely the Apostle alludeth to that that God said to our Father Adam in the beginning: In the day that thou shalt eat of that forbidden tree, thou shalt die the death, thereby threatening vnto him both the first and second death. And in that meaning hath the Apostle spoken of death in the chapter going before, that by sinne came death, &c. Therefore M. Bishops great maister Thomas Aquinas telleth him, that when the Apostle immediately before saith, the end of those things is death, he meneth by death ^h both temporall and eternall death. An other exception is, that sinne is here taken onely for Actuall sinne; which is a fiction meerly absurd and vaine. For it is a proposition vniuersall concerning all sinne, and so vsed vniuersally by al writers: and if it be true of Actuall sinne, that the wages of sinne is death, much more is it true of Originall sinne, which is the filthy and corrupt fountaine whence all actuall sins do spring. And that we may know that M. Bishop himselfe is of no other mind, he himselfe hath vsed it in the section next saue one before this, concerning Originall sinne, arguing that if Originall sinne were properly sinne in the regenerate, then it should cause death vnto them, because the wages of sinne is death. Whereby it appeareth, that he speaketh but at all aduenture, and to serue the present turn, without any conscience or regard of that he speaketh, whether it be true or false. He hath bene brought vp in Bellarmines schoole, and of him hath learned to care no further, but onely to say somewhat, though it be starke naught. Now for conclusion of this point he saith, Let not this be forgotten, that hee himselfe acknowledged in our Consent, that the punishment of Original sinne is taken away in Baptisme from the regenerate. True, & what then? How then, saith he, doth he say here, that he doth die the death for it? But he saith not so, neither is it so: for if hee should die the death for Originall sinne, hee should die also the eternall death, which notwithstanding by Christ is taken away. This death.

3 Gen 2.17.

h Tho. Aquin. in Rom. cap. 6. Peccata de se natura sunt inducere mortem temporalem & eternam. Et in marg. sine peccati mors tam temporalis quam eterna.

death therefore to the regenerate is not in the nature of a punishment, but rather of a medicine, as hath beene already said, for the viter dissolving, and mortifying, and destroying of the bodie of sinne, that onely righteousnesse may liue in them. It followeth as a wages of sinne according to the words of the Apostle in it owne nature due vnto it, though now payed for other end then it was before.

G. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins third reason: That which lusteth against the spirit, & by lusting tempteth, and in tempting intiseth and draweth the hart to sinne, is for nature sinne it selfe: but concupiscence in the regenerate is such: Ergo.

Ans^w. The first proposition is not true: for not euery thing that intiseth vs to sinne, is sinne: or else the Apple that allured Eue to sinne, had bene by nature sinne: and euery thing in this world one way or another tempteth vs to sinne: according vnto that of S. Iohn: All that is in the world, is the Concupiscence of the flesh, and the Concupiscence of the eyes, and Pride of life: So that it is very grosse to say that euery thing which allureth to sinne, is sinne it selfe, and as wide is it from all morall wisdom to affirme, that the first motions of our passions bee sins. For euen the very heathen Philosophers could distinguish betweene sudden passions of the mind and vices: teaching that passions may be bridled by the understanding, and brought by due ordering of them into the ring of reason, and so made vertues rather then vices. And that same text which M. Perkins bringeth to perswade these temptations to bee sinnes, proues the quite contrary. God tempteth no man; but euery man is tempted when he is drawne away by his owne concupiscence, and is allured: after when concupiscence hath conceiued, it bringeth forth sinne: Marke the words well. First, Concupiscence tempteth, and allureth by some euill motion, but that is no sinne, untill afterward it do conceiue, that is, obtaine some liking of our will, in giuing eare to it, and not expelling it so speedily as we ought to do the suggestion of such an enemy. the which that most deepe Doctor S. Augulline sifieth ou very profoundly in these words: When the Apostle S. James saith, euery man is tempted, being drawne away and allured by his Concupiscence, and afterward Concupiscence when it hath conceiued, bringeth forth sin: Truly in these words, the thing brought forth is

1. Epi. 2.

Jacob. 1.

Lib. 6. in. Jul. cap. 5.

distinguished, from that which bringeth it forth. The dam is concupiscence, the sole is sinne. But concupiscence doth not bring sin forth, vnlesse it conceiue, (so then it is not sinne of it selfe) and it conceiueth not, vnlesse it draw vs, that is, vnlesse it obtaine the consent of our will, to commit euill. The like expofition of the same place, and the difference betweene the pleasure tempting, that runneth before, and the sin which followeth after, vnlesse we resist manfully, may be seene in S. Cyril, so that by the iudgement of the most learned ancient fathers, that text of S. Iames cited by M. Perkins, to proue concupiscence to be sin, disproueth it very soundly: to that reason of his, Such as the Fruit is such is the Tree: I answere, that not concupiscence, but the will of man is the Tree: which bringeth forth, either good or bad fruit, according vnto the disposition of it: concupiscence is onely an intiser vnto bad.

Lib. 4. in Ioh. 2. 15.
cap. 15.

R. ABBOT.

Against M. Perkins first proposition, M. Bishop saith, that not euery thing that enticeth vs to sinne is sinne. But therein he saith vntruely, if he meane as he should do, of that that is in man himselfe. It is generally true that there is nothing that tempteth or enticeth to sinne, which hath not it selfe the nature of sinne, either as the subiect or as the thing it selfe, so that concupiscence because it cannot be said to be the subiect, must necessarily be holden to be sin it selfe. His exceptions to the contrary are very fond. First, that then the apple that allured Eue to sinne had bene by nature sinne: and secondly, that euery thing in the world one way or another tempteth vs to sinne. But where hath he euer read, that the apple, if it were an apple, temptedor inticed Eue? Did the apple any thing more then it did before, or was it any other then it was before? Surely there was no change in the apple, but the change was in her selfe, and therefore as it did not tempt her before, so neither could it bee said to tempt her in that temptation. And what is this, but to make God the tempter, who was the maker of the apple, contrary to the words of S. Iames, that God tempteth no man to euill? Which wee must likewise say of all other things in the world, if it be true that M. Bishop saith, that they tempt vs to sinne. For though God himselfe immediately do not tempt vs, yet if the creatures of the world do tempt vs, the accusation redoundeth to him, because in the creatures there is nothing but his worke. They are fair and beautiful, they are pleasant to sight and α Jam. 1. 13.

and vse, but do they therefore tempt to sin? Did the Sun tempt the heathen idolaters to worship it? Did Thamar tempt Amnon to filthines, or Susanna the wicked elders? Nay, as S. Iames telleth vs, it is our own sinfull lust that tempteth vs to abuse the good creatures of God, which theſelues tēpt vs not, but rather as S. Paul teacheth vs, ^d they growe and trauaile in pain, because they are subiect to our vanity, and therefore ^e wait when the sons of God shalbe reuealed, that they may be deliuered from the bondage of our corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sonnes of God. But he alledgeth to his purpose the words of S. Iohn: All that is in the world is the concupiscence of the flesh, and the concupiscence of the eies and pride of life. Where if we consider the Apostles words as they lie, we shall see how iustly it may be returned to himselfe, which a little before he said of M. Perkins, that either he sheweth great want of iudgement, or else verie strangelic peruerteth the words of holy Scripture. The thing that he hath to prooue, is that euerie thing in this world tempteth vs to sin. The words of S. Iohn are, ^e All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eies, the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world. He speaketh of the things of the world, which are of the Father, because they are his creatures: S. Iohn speaketh of the things of the world, which are not of the Father. He speaketh of the world, which is the creature and frame of heauen and earth, & all things therein: S. Iohn speaketh ^h not of the world in that meaning, but of the world of mākind corrupted & defiled with sinne, according to which the vnregenerate are called ⁱ the children of this world, and as our Sauour Christ saith, that ^k the world hated him because he testified of it, that the workes thereof are euill. And doth he not then, thinke you, bring vs a good prooffe, th at euerie thing in the world tempteth vs to sinne? The meaning of S. Iohn is plaine, that in the world, that is to say, in the men of this world, there is nothing but corruption, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eies, the pride of life, and the following of all these, all which are not of the Father, nor haue accord with him, but are of men themselues, & perish together with themselues. What is this then but profanely and lewdly to abuse the word of God, thus to cite it to prooue a fallhood, when it hath not so much as any shew of that for which it is cited? If it be grosse to say, that whatsoeuer allureth to sinne is sinne, I am sure it is much more grosse, that he hath said for the disprouing of it. He addeth further, that it is as wide from all morall wisdom to affirme

b 2 Sam. 13. 2.

c Dan. 13. 8.

d Rom. 8. 22.

e Ver. 20.

f Ver. 19. 21.

g Ioh. 2. 16.

h Aug. cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 13.

i Nouimus Ioannē non mundum istū, id est, cœlum & terram & omnia que in eo subsistant, ut sunt reprehendisse cum diceret, Omnia que in mundo sunt, &c.

k Luk. 16. 8.

l Joh. 7. 7.

that the first motions of our passions be sins. But wee iudge not of these things by morall wisdom, which is the wisdom of this world, because ¹ the world by it owne wisdom knoweth not God in the wisdom of God; wee esteeme heereof, as God by the foolishnesse of the Apostles preaching hath taught vs to beleue. And out of their preaching we haue learned to say as S. Austine did, that ^m lust it selfe by it selfe is verily iustly accused or blamed in the very motions of it, wherein it is resisted that it exceede not, and that ⁿ howsoeuer in this conflict of the spirite against the flesh we get the better, yet if in the verie motions & affections of our thought, we say that we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, and there is no rub in vs. But saith he, heathen Philosophers could distinguish betweene sudden passions of the mind and vices. But what is it to vs what heathen Philosophers haue distinguished, seeing Christian Philosophers haue taught vs to call these passions, ^o vices, inward vices, viciousnesse, vicious affections, vicious concupiscences, or lusts? Let M. Bishop follow Philosophers if he please; as for vs we say in these questions of Diuinity, as Tertullian said, that ^p Philosophie is but a sawcie interpreter of Gods nature and disposition, & that Philosophers are ^q the Patriarches of heretikes. Wee take our instructions out of Solomons porch, not out of the porch of Zeno; from Hierusalem, not from Athens; and there we haue learned to call it sinne whatsoeuer swarweth from the law of God, as before hath bene declared. Yea but M. Bishop will proue out of that verie text which M. Perkins alleageth, that concupiscence is not sinne. ^r Every man, saith S. Iames, is tempted when hee is drawne away by his owne concupiscence, and is allured: afterward concupiscence when it hath conceived, bringeth forth sinne. Marke well the words, saith hee. First concupiscence tempteth and allureth by some euill motion, but that is no sinne, vntill afterward it do conceiue. But how doth hee proue that by any argument out of S. Iames his words? What, is it not sin because S. Iames doth not expressly call it sin? VVhy then neither shall the consent be sin, because S. Iames expresseth the consent first, and afterwards interreth the bringing forth of sinne. But though S. Iames doe not call it expressly sinne, yet S. Paul doth. For what S. Iames speaketh of concupiscence, stirring vpp euill motions, and thereby tempting and entising, the verie same S. Paul expresseth in these words, ^s Sinne wrought in mee all manner of concupiscence. Which is the same as if hee should haue said, that concupiscence which is the habite of sin, did stir vp in him

1. Cor. 1. 21.

^m Aug. cont. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 2. Ipse per se ipsam libidinē rectissimè omnino suis ipsi motibus accusatur quibus ne excedat obstititur.

ⁿ Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 5. Quam uulget in isto conflictu superiores sinus, &c. tamē ipsi certe uoluntate cogitationis motibus & affectibus si diximus quia peccatum non habemus, &c.

^o See alter Sect. 9.

^p Tertul. de prescript. adu heret. philosophia temeraria interpres diuine nature & dispositionis.

^q Idem. cont. Hermogen. Hereticorum patriarche philosophi.

^r Iam. 1. 4.

^s Rom. 7. 8.

all maner of euill motions and affections to tempt him thereby. The same Apostle saith, ¹ Let not sinne raigne in your mortall bodies, that yee should obey it in the lusts thereof, calling it by the name of sin, ^{Cap. 6. 12.} where it raigneth not, nor is obeyed in the lusts of it. Hee distinctly noteth sinne, and the lusts of it, and the obeying, that is, consenting to those lusts, and so plainly sheweth, that in the roote, and from the beginning it is sinne. Thus the faithfull elsewhere are warned to take heede not to be hardened ² by the seducing (or deceitfulnesse) ^{Heb. 2. 13.} of sinne, where it is also plaine, that it is sinne which seducth and enticeth, euen as the Apostle saith, ³ Sinne seduced mee (or deceiued mee) ^{Rom. 7. 11:} and thereby slue mee, giuing to vnderstand, that the seducings and ⁴ enticings, that is, the first motions of concupiscence, are so farre sin, ^{Aug. contra Iulian lib. 6. ca. 5. Profectò in his ueris partus à pariente distinguitur. Partus est concupiscencia, partus peccatum. Sed concupiscencia non parit nisi conceperit: Nec concepit nisi illerit, hoc est, ad malum perpetrandum obmuerit uolens assensit.} as that thereby hee felt himselfe in himselfe to bee but a dead man. Thus the Apostle S. Paul thwarteth all that M. Bishop gathereth out of S. James his words: but yet the most deepe Doctor S. Austine ⁵ sifteth out the matter very profoundly for him. And indeede he sifteth well, but leaueth to M. Bishop nothing but the very branne. y In these words (saith hee) the birth is distinguished from that that bringeth forth. That that bringeth forth is concupiscence, the birth is sinne. But concupiscence bringeth not forth except it conceiue. So then, (saith M. Bishop) it is not sinne of it selfe. But we deny his argument: for a mother bringeth forth a woman, and yet shee her selfe is a woman also. A woman bringeth not forth a woman, except she first conceiue, and yet shee is a woman before shee doe conceiue, and sinne bringeth not forth sinne, except by consent it first conceiue, and yet it is sinne before conception. There is nothing in Saint Austins words, but it indeth well with that that before hath beene said, that concupiscence beeing the habite of sinne, doth by gaining the consent of the will, bring forth actuall and outward sinnes, which is the true meaning of that place of James. And that he did not otherwise conceiue, but that concupiscence is sinne, M. Bishop might very well haue seene, if he had but read the words a few lines before the place which he citeth, where speaking of the same beeing in vs, hee saith, ² It should not onely be in vs, but also greatly hurt vs, but that the guilt thereof is acquitted by the forginnesse of our sinnes. Wee would haue M. Bishop tell vs, how it should hurt vs if it bee not sinne: for wee suppose that there is nothing in man that can hurt him, but onely sinne, especially the hurt beeing such, as S. Austine anon after spea- ³ ibid. Non tantum in se, certum & grauius obesse: nisi reatus qui non obstruxerat per reuersionem peccatorum soluitur.

keth of, ^a to draw vs, onelie by beeing in vs, to euerlasting death. The place of Cyril affirmeth the being of lust ^b ante peccandi actum, before the actuall sinne, but hath nothing for M. Bishops turne to prooue, that lust also is not sinne, nay in the words immediatly following, he proueth that it is sinne, affirming, that ^c by circumcision wee should learne, that we shall not be cleane, vnlesse we cast out of our mind all filthy lust. For if lust it selfe do make vs vnclane, it must needes be sinne, because nothing can make a man vnclane but onelie sinne. That which M. Perkins addeth to illustrate this point, Such as the fruit is, such is the tree, was verie fitly spoken to the matter in hand. For the fruite hath it whole nature and qualitiè from the tree, neither is it any thing, but what it is by that that it receiueth from thence. If therefore the actions of concupiscence be sinne, concupiscence which is the tree, must needes haue the nature and condition of sinne. But M. Bishop answereth, that not concupiscence, but the will of man is the tree. Which is all one as if hee should haue said, that not the will of man, but the will of man is the tree. For it hath beene before shewed, that concupiscence is nothing else, but the corrupted will of man, which doth not bring foorth euer euill or good indifferentlie, but is of it selfe an enticer only vnto bad, vntill God do create it anew, and by his owne hand doe worke in it to will that that is good. In a word, the holy Scripture as on the one side it calleth the motions of concupiscence, ^d the lusts of the flesh, so it calleth also the effects and deeds of those lusts, the works of the flesh; thereby shewing, that concupiscence signified by the name of ^e flesh, and importing the corruption of the whole mind and will of man, is rightlie said to be the tree or euill roote whence all euill workes, & all wickednesse do spring.

7. W. BISHOP.

But S. Augustine saith, that concupiscence is sinne, because in it there is disobedience against the rule of the mind, &c. I answer, that S. Augustine in more then twenty places of his workes teacheth expressly, that concupiscence is no sinne, if sin be taken properly: wherefore when hee once calleth it sinne, he taketh sinne largely as it comprehendeth, not onely all sinne, but also all motions and enticements to sinne: in which sence concupiscence may bee termed sinne: but it is so called very seldome of S. Augustine, but more commonly an euill, as in the same worke is to be seene euidently, where he saith: That grace in Baptisme doth

Lib. 5. contr.
Iulian. cap. 3.

Lib. 6. cap. 5.

^a Quantum quia
est, pertraheret
et vltimam mor-
talia.
^b Cyrilus Iorn.
lib. 4. cap. 51. Per-ueni cupiditas ante peccandi actum
insidat.
^c Hoc enigmate perdiscimus
nullo nos pasto
mundos vngquam
futuros nisi omni turpem ex animo
cupiditatem ejci-
amus.

d 1. Pet. 2. 11.

e Gal. 5. 9.

doth renew a man perfectly, so farrefoorth as it appertaineth to the deliuerance of him from all manner of sinne; but not so, as it freeth him from all euill: so that concupiscence remaining after baptisme, is no manner of sinne, in S. Augustines iudgment: but may be called euill, because it prouoketh vs to euill. To this place of A. Augustine, I will ioine that oher like, which M. Perkins quoteth in his fourth rea- Tract. 11. in Ioan.
son: where he saith, that sinne dwelleth alwaies in our members. The same answer serueth, that sin there is taken improperly: as appeareth by that he seates it in our members: for according vnto S. Augustine and all the learned, the subiect of sin being properly taken is not in any part of the body, but in the will and soule, and in the same passage he signifieth plainly, that in baptisme all sinnes and iniquitie is taken away, and that there is left in the regenerate, onely an infirmity or weaknesse.

R. ABBOT.

That place of Austin doth very pregnantly shew, that concupiscence is truly and properly called sinne, and giueth a reason thereof out of the true nature of sinne, which before hath bin declared. As 2 Aug. 1. contr. In ian. lib. 5. ca. 3. Sic non excitas cordis & peccatū est quō iā Deum non creditur, & pœna peccati quæ cor superbiū digna animaduersione puniuntur, & causa peccati, cōm malū alicuius cecitatis errore committitur: ita concupiscētia carnis alicuius quam bonus concupiscit spiritus, & peccatum est quia inest illi inobediētia contra dominū iā mem'ū, & pœna peccati est, quia cellū est meritū inobediētiæ: & causa peccati est defēssione conscientis vel contagione nascēti.
blindnesse of heart (saith he) is both a sinne whereby man beleueth not, and the punishment of sinne, wherewith the pride of the heart is iustly reuenged; and the cause of sinne whilest any euill is committed by the error of the hart so blinded: so the concupiscence of the flesh, against which the good spirit desireth, is both sinne, because there is in it a disobedience against the rule of the mind, and the punishment of sinne, because it was rendered to the desert of him that obeyed not, and the cause of sinne either by the default of him that consenteth vnto it, or by infecting of him that is borne of it. Concupiscence then is sinne, as blindnesse of heart is sinne. But blindnes of heart is properly sinne, therefore concupiscence is to also. Rebellion against the law of the mind, whereby is meant the law of God, is properly sinne, as before is shewed. But concupiscence is a habit of Rebellion against the law of God: it is therefore properly to be accounted sinne. And whereas Austin when hee denieth concupiscence to bee sinne, saith it is therefore called sinne, because it is the punishment of sinne, and the cause of sinne, heere he affirmeth that it is not only the punishment of sinne, and the cause of sinne, but other- wise also sinne, and therefore properly and truly sinne. But M. B. Baptelleth vs, saith, that Austin in more then twentie places of his workes teacheth expressly, that concupiscence is no sinne, if sinne be taken properly.

perly. Yet S. Austine in those twentie places saith nothing of sinne properly or vnproperly taken, and indeede taketh sinne vnproperly, when he denieth concupiscence to bee sinne, as anon shall appeare. He saith further, that when Austine calleth concupiscence sinne, hee taketh sinne largely, as it comprehendeth not onely all sinne, but also all motions and enticements to sinne, and so it may be tearmed sinne. And this large taking of sinne, we say is the proper taking of it, and thereby concupiscence is properly called sinne. But the motions and enticements to sinne, being the same with concupiscence, we see what a proper secret he hath heere deliuered, that concupiscence may bee tearmed sinne, as sinne is taken largely, so as to comprehend concupiscence. A learned note. But because the reason that he hath before deliuered is starke naught, hee should haue giuen vs heere a better reason, why the name of sinne is not properly to bee vnderstood, when concupiscence is called sinne. He telleth vs, that with Austin it is more commonly called an euill, and indeede it is true, that verie often hee so calleth it, but yet such an euill, as maketh a man euill, so that by reason thereof, ^a though a man be a Prophet, a Patriarch, an Apostle, yet (saith Hierome) it is said vnto them by our Saviour, If yee be- ing euill do knowe to giue good gifts to your children, &c. Now there is nothing that maketh a man euill, but that which is properlie sinne.

^a Hieron. aduer. Pelag. lib. 3. Quā- si aliquis, quam- uis Propheta, quā- uis Apostolus, dicitur esse à Do- mino Salvatore: Si uo: cum sitis mali &c.

Concupiscence therefore is properlie a sin. But of this shall be spoken more at large anon. Onely heere it is to bee obserued, how M. Bishop vnderstandeth it to bee an euill, because it prouoketh vs to euill. So hee will haue it no otherwise called an euill, then it is called sinne. It is sinne, because it prouoketh to sinne; and so euill, because it prouoketh to euill, and so indeede properlie shall be neither sinne nor euill, whereas S. Austine acquitting it in some meaning from the name of sinne, leaueth it simplie and absolutelie in the name and nature of euill, as shall appeare. To this place hee bringeth ano her testimony of Austine, which M. Perkins alleageth in the fourth reason, and giueth to it a verie vnproper answer. ^b So long as thou liuest (saith Austine) of necessary sinne must bee in thy members: sinne is there al so taken vnproperly, saith M. Bishop. And yet S. Austine deduceth that assertion from the words of S. Iohn: ^c If we say wee haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, and the truth is not in vs, allcaging the one, and concluding the other by occasiō of the words of our Saviour Christ,

^b August. in Io- an. Tract. 41. Quamdiu uisus necesse est esse pec- ca tum in membris tuis.

^c 1. Ioh. 1. 8.

^d Joh. 8. 34.

^d He that committeth sin is the seruant of sinne, and the seruant abideth not in the house for ever. For hereupon he asketh the question, what hope then haue wee, who are not without sinne? and answereth at large, that sinne, though according to the words of S. Iohn we cannot be without it so long as we liue licere, yet shall not hurt vs if wee do not by suffering it to raigne, make our selues seruants vnto it, because hee onely that committeth sinne by course and practise of euill conuersation, is the seruant of sinne, that is to say, of inward corruption. Now therefore if we will follow M. Bishops construction, wee must vnderstand S. Iohn also of sinne vnproperly taken, and affirme contrarie to the auncient receiued Maxime of Christian faith, that if sinne be properly taken, it may be truly said of some men, that they are without sinne, because hee saith it is not true of sinne properly taken, that so long as a man liueth, it must needes be in him, as S. Austine speaketh. Now hee will proue, that sin is there vnproperly taken, because S. Austine placeth it in the members: For according to S. Austine and all the learned, the subiect of sinne properly taken, is not in any part of the body, but in the will and soule. Where wee may iustly smile at his ridiculous and childish ignorance. Why, M. Bishop is concupiscence any other wise in the members of the bodie, but onely by the soule? Iulian the Pelagian was not so grosse, but that hee knew, that the flesh is said to lust, because the soule lusteth according to the flesh, which S. Austine confirmeth and saith, that it is the soule it selfe, which by it owne motions which it hath according to the spirit, is contrarie to other motions of it owne, which it hath according to the flesh: and by it owne motions which it hath according to the flesh, is contrarie to other motions of it owne, which it hath according to the spirit, and that therefore the flesh is said to lust contrary to the spirit, and the spirit contrarie to the flesh. Who knoweth not this, saith he to Iulian, which thou like a great Doctor so often tellest vs? And what, doth not M. Bishop knowe it, that will bee taken for so great a Doctor in the Church of Rome? Let me tell him once againe, that the soule is the proper and immediate subiect of concupiscence, that to lust is an act of a nature endued with life and sense, which the body is not of it selfe, but onely by the soule: and therefore that that exception of his maketh nothing to the contrarie, but that S. Austine by sinne in the members, doth vnderstand that that is properlie and truly called sinne, to say nothing of that I haue before declared, that by concupiscence is also vnderstood the will it selfe, thral and subiect vnto e Aug. contra Iulian. lib. 6. ca. 5. Quia carnaliter anima concupiscit. Ibid. Motibus suis anima quos habet secundum spiritum aduersatur alijs motibus suis quos habet secundum carnem, aduersatur alijs motibus suis quos habet secundum carnem, aduersatur alijs motibus suis quos habet secundum spiritum, &c.

fin. For conclusion of this point hee addeth, that S. Austine in the same passage signifieth plainly, that in baptisme all sinne and iniquity is taken away, and that there is left in the regenerate onely an infirmitie and weaknesse. But it is his singular impudencie to alledge S. Austine so directly contrary to his whole drift and purpose in that place, which is, as before was said, to shew, that sinne is in vs whilett wee liue, onely that it may not hurt vs we must haue care that wee make not our selues the seruants of it. Whereas hee saith, that iniquitie is taken away, hee meaneth it of the guilt thereof, which ceaseth in the regenerate by the forgiuenesse of their sinnes, but otherewise hee himselfe affirmeth and approueth Ambrose affirming the same, that it is an iniquity in vs, that the flesh lusteth against the spirit, albeit it be not suffered to ouercome. He saith, that the iniquitie beeing taken away, there remaineth an infirmitie, but not taking infirmitie in that sense as M. Bishop doth, for a meere weaknesse: but for that that hee himselfe elsewhere expoundeth it, when hee saith, that ignorance and infirmitie are the vices which do hinder the will, that it moueth not to doe good, or to abstaine from euill; which hee calleth elsewhere the penalties of euerie soule of man. Whereby it appeareth, that by infirmitie hee meaneth that vitioussnesse and corruption of mans nature, which ensued of the first sinne, whereby it is disabled to the doing of good and forbearing of euill, which in part is cured in regeneration, but yet in part hee saith is remaining still. Thus M. Bishop wee see, maketh the best inist he can with words, because in matter hee can light vpon nothing to serue his turne.

8. W. BISHOP.

Aug. Epist. 25.

M. Perkins 4 reason is taken from the record of the ancient Church: Charitie in some is more, in some lesse, in some none, the highest degree of all which cannot bee increased, is in none, as long as a man liues vpon earth: & as long as it may be increased, that which is lesse then it should be, is in fault: by which fault it is, that there is no iust man vpon earth, that doth good and sinneth not, &c. For which also though we profite neuer so much, it is necessarie for vs to say, Forgiue vs our debts, thoug all our worst deedes and thoughts be alreadie forgiuen in Baptisme. Answer. That heere is neuer a word touching concupiscence, or to prooue Original sinne to remaine after Baptisme, which is in question: but onely that the best men for want of perfect charity, do often sinne venially, which we graunt.

R. ABBOT.

S. Austin saith, that a perfect charity which can now no further be increased, is in no man so long as he liueth here. And so long as it may be increased, saith he, surely that that it is lesse then it should be. Ex vit10 Est, us by reason of some vice, corruption, default. M. Bishop answereth, that here is neuer a word of concupiscence, or so prone Originall sinne to remaine after Baptisme. But if he had meant honestly, he should haue told vs what is meant by that vitium, call it vice or blemish, or staine, or corruption, or default, or all these. If it bee not vnderstood of concupiscence and the continuing blot and staine of Originall sinne, he should haue told vs what we are otherwise to vnderstand by it. But he could deuise nothing else whereof to vnderstand it, and therefore is content with a very homely and beggarly shift to passe it ouer, that forsooth there is nothing said of concupiscence, when yet that that is said cannot bee meant of any thing elie. And that it is so meant, S. Austin himselfe plainly confirmeth vnto vs by the like sentence in another place. ^b If in Abel (saith he) there were wherein the loue of God might and ought to be increased, that that was too lustie, ex vitio erat, was by reason of some vice or corruption. And this he sheweth to be the same that the Apostle speaketh of when he saith, Let not sinne raigne in your mortall bodies, &c. This sinne he tearmeth vitium, and saith: ^c By this vice or corruption the eye is cast whither it ought not to be, and if it go forward and preuaile, adultery is committed. Againe he addeth, Hoc peccatum, id est, hunc vitiosa affectionis appetitum, qui magna ex parte frenarunt &c. This sinne, that is to say, this lust of vitious affection, they who haue for the most part bridled haue deserued to be called iust. And thus very often he calleth concupiscence a vice, and the motions thereof vices, as before was said. Now in the place cited, S. Austin addeth, as touching the effect of this vice: ^d By reason of which vice there is not a iust man upon earth, that doth good and sinneth not. By reason of which vice, no man liuing shall be iustified or found iust in the sight of God. By reason of which vice, if we say wee haue no sinne, wee deceiue our selues &c. Which two latter clauses M. Bishop very treacherously and falsly

August. Epist.
29. Plurissima
charitas que iam
non possit augeri,
quamdiu hic homo
vixit, est in mem-
bris: quamdiu autē
augeri potest, pro-
fecto illud quod
minus est quam
debet, ex vitio est.

b De na. & gra.
cap. 38. Si in Abel in isto charitas Dei adhuc erat, quo posset & de-
beret augeri,
quicquid minus e-
rat, ex vitio erat.
c Ex hoc vitio
mittitur et di-
mittitur oculus
quo non oportet.

d Epist. 29. Ex quo v. vitio non est
iustus super terram, &c. Ex quo vitio non iustifi-cabitur. &c.

hath left out: because he saw them wholly contrary to all that hee saith. For if by reason of this vice of concupiscence, wee cannot say that we haue no sinne, then it must needs follow that concupiscence is truly sin. If by reason of this vice, no man liuing shall bee found iust in the sight of God, thē this vice, that is to say, concupiscence, is sin, because nothing hindreth a man from being iust in the sight of God but onely sinne. And this taketh away the other part of his answer, th^e S. Austine onely saith, that the best men for want of perfect charity doe often sinne venially. For by their doctrine, veniall sins hinder not a man from being iust in the sight of God, whereas the vice of which S. Austin speaketh, is such as hindereth iustice, so that by reason thereof no man liuing shall be found iust in the sight of God. M. Perkins therefore rightly alledged this place, to proue that concupiscence is sinne, and M. Bishop in answering it, sheweth himselfe a man of wretched and euil conscience, who being so shut in with the truth, as that he knew not which way to resist, yet wold rather by falshood and collusion shift it off, then renounce the errors, to the maintenance whereof he hath wickedly sold himselfe.

D. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins hauing thus strongly (as you see) fortified his position with that one sentence of S. Augustine (which hath also nothing for his purpose) in steede of all antiquitie: confesseth ingenuously, that S. Augustine in sundry places denieth concupiscence to be sinne: but expounds him to meane, that it is not sinne in that person, but in it selfe: which is already confuted: for sinne that is an accident, and so properly inherent in his subiect, cannot be at all, if it be not in some person and the sinne of the same person. But if the Protestant Reader desire to bee well assured of S. Augustines opinion in this point: let him see what their Patriarch John Caluin saith of it: where thus he writeth: Neither is it needfull to labour much in searching out what the old Writers thought of this point, when one Augustine may serue the turn: who with great diligence hath faithfully collected together all their sentences. Let the readers therefore take out of him, if they desire to haue any certainty of the iudgement of antiquity. Hitherto somewhat honestlie: What followeth? Moreouer betweene him and vs, there is this difference: that hee truly dares not call the disease of concupiscence a sinne, but to expresse it, is content to vse the word of infirmity, then loe doth he say, that it is made sinne, when the act of our consent doth ioyne with it. But we hold that very thing to be sinne, where-with a man is in any sort tickled. Obserue first, good Reader, that S. Augustines opinion with him carrieth the credit of all antiquity. Which is the cause that I cite him more often against th:m. Secondly, that he is fluty on our side: teaching concupiscence not to be sinne, vnlesse we do consent vnto it. Lastly learn to mislike the blind boldnesse of such Masters: who hauing so highly commended S. Augustines iudgement in this very matter, and aduised all men to follow it, doth notwithstanding flie from it himselte: presuming that some would be so shallow-witted as not to espie him, or else content to relie more vpon his onely credit, then vpon the authority of all the auncient Fathers. For a tast of whose consent with S. Augustine in this question, I will heere put the sentences of some few, that I neede not here after retorne to rehearse them.

S. Chrysostome saith, Passions be not sinnes of themselues, but the vnbridled excelsse of them doth make sins. And that I may for example sake touch one of them: Concupiscence is not a sinne; but when passing measure it breakes his bounds, then loe it is adultery; not in regard of concupiscence, but in respect of the excessiue and vnlawfull riot of it. Honil. 11. in epi. 2. ad Rom.

S. Bernard (whom M. Perkins often citeth against vs, and therefore may sometimes be alledged for vs) hath these words: Sin is at the dore, but if thou doe not open it, it will not enter in: lust tickleth at the heart: but vnlesse thou willingly yeeld vnto it, it shall doe thee no hurt: withhold thy consent, and it preuaileth not. Serm. de sex. tribul.

*S. Aug. and S. Cirill, haue bene cited already, S. Hier. and S. Greg. shall be hereafter: who with the confession of Calvin, may serue sufficiently to proue, that approued antiquity is wholly for vs. And if any desire to know the founder of our aduersaries Doctrines in this point, let him read the 64. heresie recorded by that ancient and holy Bishop Epiphanius: where he registreth one Proclus an old rotten sectary so haue taught, that sinnes are not taken away in Baptisme, but are onely couered, which is as much to say, as sinne remaineth still in the person regenerate, but is not imputed to him. Which is iust M. Perkins, and our Protestants position.*

R. ABBOT.

If M. Perkins had no better fortified his positions, then M. Bishop doth his answers, he should with vs haue bin holden for too weake a man to meddle in controuersies of diuinity. But as Tertullian said, that it is no where more easie thriving thē in the camp of rebels, where to be only, is to be in pay, so may we say, that it is no where more easie writing then amongst hereticks and rebels against the truth, where to write onely is sufficient to commend a man; it is no matter how or what hee write. Such a writer is M. Bishop: a bad one, God knowes: but we can look for no better of him then the matter will afford him. He saith, that M. Perkins had but one sentence of S. Austine for the maintenance of his position, and that nothing for his purpose: but M. Perkins hath alledged more then he hath answered, and it seemeth, that that one sentence was to the purpose, which he could no otherwise shift off, but by leud dissembling and concealing of that; wherein S. Austine with maine streame doth runne against him. Againe he telleth vs, that M. Perkins confesseth ingenuously, that S. Augustine in sundry places denieth concupiscence to be sin, and we confesse as much, and expound S. Austines meaning as he doth, that it is not sinne to the person, not that in it selfe it is not sinne. But this, he saith, is already confuted; and we say that his imagined confutation is already reconfuted. But he giueth vs a reason why it cannot be so. For sinne that is an accident, and so properly inherent in his subiect, cannot be at all, if it be not in some person, & the sin of the same person. And we answer him by S. Austine, that it is sinne in the person, and the sinne of the person by inherent quality and disposition, but it is not the sinne of the person by account of guilt and imputation. For the approouing whereof M. Perkins alledged two places out of Austine, which M. Bishop honestly passeth ouer, as if hee had not seene them, but they will meete with him againe anon. In the meane time he bringeth vs in our Patriark, as he calleth him, John Calvin, referring his Readers to S. Austin, to know by him the iudgement of antiquity, concerning this matter of concupiscence. Where I answered him, that we honour Caluin indeede as a singular instrument of God, for the restoring of the light of his truth, and ouerthrowing of the throne of the purple whoore of Rome, but we make him no patriark, wee follow him no further then he approoueth vnto vs, that he is a follower of Christ: wee tie not our selues to him, but vse our liberty to dissent from him, and to censure him where hee hath gone awry. But M. Bishop and his fellowes haue their Patriark indeede, to whom they binde themselves a Tertul. de pre- script. Nisquam facilius proficitur

quam in castris
rebellium, ubi ipsi esse illis promereri
est.

selues, Antichrist the man of sinne, the enimie of Christ, whose dirt they must bee content to eate, and to brooke all the filth of his abominations, and ^a though hee leade them to hell, yet no man may dare say unto him, Sir why doe yee so? Well, Calvin saith, that Austine hath diligently gathered the iudgement of antiquitie, and what then? forsooth hee saith further thus: that ^b betweene Austine and vs there may seeme to bee this difference, that he dares not call the disease of concupiscence by the name of sinne; but we hold it to bee a sinne that a man is tickled with any lust or desire against the law of God. Whereupon M. Bishop giueth his Reader these obseruations; first that S. Austines opinion carrieth with Calvin the credite of all antiquity, which is the cause, saith hee, that I cite him more often against them; which indeede hee hath full clerkly and profoundly done, so as that I presume, I may assure the Reader that hee hath scarcely euer read ouer one booke of his. Secondly, saith he, that he is flatly on our side: but therein hee reckoneth before his host; for Calvin saith to the contrarie, that ^c Austine differeth not so much from our doctrine, as in shew hee seemeth to doe, and that hee varieth but little from our opinion. Lastly, saith hee, learne to mislike the blinde boldnesse of such masters. But if Calvin were blind, alas for poore M. Bishop, what can he see? and yet though hee can see but little, hee is as bold as blind bayard, and doubteth not to vilifie him, to whom he might verie well be a scholler yet many yeeres. Calvin iustlie commendeth Austines iudgement, and aduiseeth all men to follow it, and in substance flieth not from it himselfe, though in termes hee somewhat differ. Neither did hee presume vpon shallow wits not to bee espied, knowing well that the whole rabble of the court of Antichrist, would vse their deepest wits for the sifting of that hee should write, but in the conscience of integritie and faithfulness, he despised all their barkings and malicious furie, and with the inuincible sheeld of truth beareth off all the poisoned darts of their reproches. Hee neuer taught men to rely vpon his authoritie, but by authority of the word of God and testimonie of the auncient Church, he laboured to establish the faith of Christ, yet making men witnesses onely, not authours or dictators of the truth, and therefore not doubting to censure them, where they swarue from the authoritie of the word of truth. But now because M. Bishop will perswade vs, that S. Austine is wholly on their part, let vs somewhat more at large examine his opinion

^a Dist. 40. ff. Papa.

^b Calvin. Institutio. li. 3. ca. 3. Sect. 10.

^c Ibid. sect. 12.

and iudgement in this behalfe. Which although it may bee sufficiently perceiued by those things that haue beene scatteringlie alledged already, yet fully to remoue this cauill, let vs here lay together what shall be found necessaie for the clearing thereof. And first, we are to obserue, that sinne is considered two manner of waies; one way as it is opposed to righteousnesse; another way as it is opposed to forgiuenesse of sins.^o Sinne properly taken, as euerie mans vnder-standing giueth him, is opposite to righteousnesse, and so whatsoeuer is contrarie to righteousnesse, is sinne. Thus haue we before described the nature of sinne, and according to this description concupis- cence in the regenerate, being^d contrary to righteousnesse is sinne, neither euer came it into S. Austines heart to thinke otherwise. But he considereth sinne in the proper effect of sinne, as it maketh guilty, so that whatsoeuer is forgiuen is no sinne, because forgiuenesse taketh away the guilt of sinne. So long as the guilt remaineth, though the thing bee past and gone, wherof or whereby the man is guilty, yet he vnderstandeth the sinne to remaine still. If the guilt bee taken away, though the thing still continue the same, by which the man became guilty, yet hee taketh it not to bee in the nature of sinne, because the nature of sinne is to mak guilty. The occasion of which construction was giuen him by the Pelagian herctickes, the predecessours of the Papists, who when hee taught against them Origin-all sinne, and the remainder of that blot of naturall corruption in the regenerate, as we doe, tooke occasion to cauill against him, that hee^e said, that baptisme did not giue remission of all sinnes, neither did take away faults, but onely haue them, so as that the rootes were still sticking, from whence other sinnes should grow againe. S. Austine the better to clear this matter to popular vnderstanding, affirmeth, that baptisme doth take away all sinne, because that albeit concupis- cence of the flesh were still remaining, yet it did not remaine in the nature of sinne, because the guilt thereof in baptisme was remit-red. ^f It is forgiuen, saith hee, not so as that it is not, but so as that it is not imputed for sinne. ^g In the regenerate, when they receiue for- giueneesse of all their sinnes, the guilts of this concupiscentie, though

d Rom. 7. 23.

Gal. 5. 17.

e Auguſt. cont.

diu. epist. Pelag.

lib. 1. cap. 3. Dicitur

inquit. baptiſma

non de re omnem

indulgentiam pec-

catorum nec au-

ferre crimina ſed

radere, ut omnium

peccatorum rad. ces

in mala carne te-

nearunt, quaſi ra-

forum in capite capillorum, unde

creſcant iterum

reſecanda peccata

f De nupt. et con-

cupiſc. lib. 1. ca. 25.

Dimittitur non ut non ſit, ſed ut

in peccatum non

imputetur.

g Ibid. cap. 26. In eis qui regenerantur

in Chriſto, cum

remiſſionem acci-

piunt proſus om-

nium peccatorum

vniuſque neceſſe eſt,

ut reatus etiam

liuius licet manen-

tis adhuc concu-

piſcentie remitta-

tur, ut in peccatis

non imputetur.

Nam ſicut eorum

peccatorum, que

manere non poſſit

quoniam cum ſunt

preterita, reatus

tamen manet, et

miſi remittatur in

eternum in meli-

ficillius concupiſcentie quando remittitur reatus auferitur. Hoc eſt enim non habere peccatum, non eſſe reum peccati. Nam ſi quiſquam verbi gratia feterit adulterium etiam ſi nunquam deinceps faciat reus eſt adulteri donec reatu. iſtius indulgentia remittatur. Habet ergo peccatum, quamuis illud quod aduſit iam non ſit, niſi cum tempore quo factum eſt preterit, &c. Manent ergo peccata, niſi remittantur. Sed quomodo manent ſi preterita ſunt, quia preterierunt actu, manent reatu? Sic itaque fieri e conſtario pot eſt ut etiam illud maneat actu pretereat reatu.

it selfe still continue, is remitted, so as that it is not imputed for sinne. For as of those sins which cannot continue, because when they are done they are past, yet the guilt still abideth, and except it be pardoned, shall abide for ever: so the guilt of concupiscence when it is pardoned, is taken away, though it selfe abide. For not to have sinne is all one as to say, not to be guilty of sinne. He that hath committed adultery, though he doe it no more, is still guilty till he be pardoned. Therefore he hath his sinne still, though that which he hath committed now is not in being, being past with the time wherein it was done. Such sinnes therefore remaine except they be forgiven. But how doe they remaine being now past, but because they are past as touching their act, all being, but remaine still as touching the guilt? Even so, saith he, it may well be, that concupiscence of the flesh remaineth still as touching the act, all being, but yet as touching the guilt is past and gone. He calleth this concupiscence ^h a damnable pollution & uncleannes, wherewith the nature of man is defiled, and for which it is condemned. And he saith thereof, that ⁱ not the euill it selfe, but the guilt that is gathered thereof, is taken away in baptisme; that this sinne is ^r dead, as touching the guilt wherein it held vs: that ^l the guilt thereof which we haue drawne by generation, is pardoned by regeneration, & therefore now it is not sinne. Thus when Iulian objected to him, that if concupiscence were euill, then the baptised should be without it, he answered, that ^m the baptised is voided of all sinne, not of all euill. Which saith he, is more plainely spoken thus, He is voided of the guilt of all euill, not of all that is euill, affirming the guilt onely to be taken away, but that the euill that before made him guilty, remaineth still. Therefore he saith, that ⁿ concupiscence is not called sinne, in such manner as sinne maketh guiltie, because the guilt thereof is released in the Sacrament of regeneration. The places are infinite, wherein hee speaketh to the same effect, that ^o the law of sinne, the bond of the guilt thereof being loosed, continueth still: that ^p the law of concupiscence is still abiding, but the guilt there is released: that ^q God healeth the corruption of man, from the guilt forthwith, but from the infirmity by little and little: that ^r the law of sin is remitted and pardoned in baptisme, but not ended: that ^s the vices of concupiscence are cured by the grace of Christ, that they hold vs not in guilt, but that they remaine for vs to fight with and conquer, and last of all, to bee perfectly healed:

h Ibid. cap. 23.
 Propter damnabile
 vitium, quo vitia-
 ta est natura hu-
 mana damnatur.
 i Contra Iulian.
 Pelag. lib. 2. Est in homine aliquid
 mali, quod non ip-
 sum sed reatus qui ex illo contractus
 fuerat, auferitur in Baptismo.
 k Ibid. Mortuum
 est in eo reatus quo
 nos tenebat.
 l Contra duas E-
 pistolae Pelag. lib.
 1. cap. 13. Reatus
 eius generati one trahitur, regenera-
 tione dimissus est:
 & ideo iam non
 est peccatum.
 m Contr. Iulian.
 lib. 6. cap. 5. Bap-tismus caret om-
 ni peccato, non omni malo: quod ple-
 nius et a dicitur,
 caret reatu omni
 malorum, non omnibus malis.
 n Ibid. lib. 2. Non eodem modo ap-
 pellatur peccatum quod facit reus, &
 prius: Cuius ma-
 nentis reatus in sacrosancte remis-
 sio est.
 o De peccat. mer.
 & remiss. lib. 1.
 cap. 39. Ipsa lex peccati soluitur a suis vinculis ome-
 net. &c.
 p Ibid. lib. 2. cap.
 28. Manente ipsa
 lege concupiscen-
 tia reatus in sol-
 uitur.
 q Contr. Iulian. lib.
 2. Sicut ut in a reus statim ab

infirmate paulatim. & Ibid. Remittitur in Baptismo lex peccati, non sine re. Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 5. Vitia ista curantur, prius ut reatus non teneant, deinde ut constituti non vincant: postremo ut omni ex parte sanata nulla omnino remaneat.

not to be at all, still beating vpon this, that there is still remaining the same thing that was before, the law of sin before, the law of sin still: euill before, euill still: a vice or corruption before, a vice and corruption still, onely the guilt taken away, and thereby onely denied to be sin. Now in this we contend not with Austin, nor Austin with vs:

we shall easily accord with him, that concupiscence in the regenerate is not sinne, as sinne importeth and impliceth guilt, because the guilt thereof is remitted and pardoned. But setting aside the respect of guilt, and considering sinne as it is opposite to righteousnes, doth he in that respect acquit concupiscence from the condition of sinne? No verily: for he acknowledgeth, that though it be not called sinne in that sort, as that it maketh guilty, yet it is called sinne, for that by rebelling it laboureth to draw vs into guilt. And when Iulian the Pelagian tooke hold of that that he saith, that concupiscence and rebellion of the flesh, was iustly laid as a punishment vpon the disobedience of man, and hereupon a gued that then it was no euill, but rather a thing to be commended, as Gods seruant for reuenge vpon him that had deserued it, to refute his colligation, answereth, that it is not onely the punishment of sinne, or the cause of sinne, but also very sinne it selfe, because there is in it a rebellion against the law of the mind, and therefore that vainly he inferred, that concupiscence because it was a punishment was to be commended. Where to say that S. Austin taketh sin vnpopely, as M. Bishop doth, is to make him to speak very absurdly if we consider the occasion whereupon he speaketh. But to shew, that concupiscence though in respect of guilt it be not sin, yet otherwise it is truly so, he calleth it in the regenerate a pardoned sin, a sin conquered & destroyed; a sin forgiven, couered, not imputed: and out of S. Ambrose a dead sin, becau'e (saith he) it is dead as touching the guilt wherein it held vs, & being dead yet rebelleth vntil by accomplishment of burial it be healed. So then as touching guilt it is conquered, destroyed dead, and it is not sin, but by rebellion it liueth; & therein it is truly sin. And therefore doth he paint it out euen in the regenerate, with such names and termes, as do plainly conuict it to be sinne. He calleth it a vice, lust of vicious affection, vicious concupiscence, viciousnes or corruption, and what doth vitiate, defile, corrupt the soule, but onely sinne? He calleth it a disease, a diseased affection of the flesh, a pestilence, a wound and contagious filth, and what other

2 Contr. Iulian. lib. 2. Non eade^m modo appellatur peccati quo facit rem. sed quod sit reatus vni^{us} hominis facti^{us}, & quod rebellando nos irabere nititur ad reatum.
 u Contr. Iulian. lib. 5. cap. 3. sup. sect. 7.
 x De pecca. mer. & rem. lib. 2. cap. 8. Peccata remissa superati^{us} peremptum.
 y De nupt. & concup. lib. 1. ca. 33. Peccatum illud quod remissum & tatum est, & non imputatur. Et lib. 2. cap. 34.
 z Contr. Iulian. li. 2. Quia mortui estis eo reati quo nos tenebat, & de nec sepulture perfectione sanentur, rebentur & martium.
 a De nat. & grat. cap. 38. Vni^{us} est, & in se affectus apparet.
 b De nupt. & concup. lib. 1. cap. 31. Vitiata concupiscencia.
 c Epist. 54. Ab omni viti^oitate.
 d De nupt. & concup. lib. 1. cap. 9. In hoc morbo. Et cap. 2. Vbi est morbidus carnis affectus. Ab ea peste morlogu^o sanata e De Temp. Ser. 145 Vni^{us} tabe. Et. contr. Iul. lib. 6. cap. 7. Quodam operante contagio, id est, concupiscencie affectu.

disease, or pestilence, or wound & contagiō of man is there Spiritually but only sin? He calleth this law of sin a filthy law, a miserable law, not for that it hath a being by it selfe to be filthy and miserable; but because we by it are in our selues filthy and miserable, which nothing can cause but onely sinne. He calleth it an euill, euill concupiscence, an euill quality, an affection of euill quality, and what euill quality is there of the soule, what Spirituall euill, but onely sin? Hee calleth the first motions and affections thereof inward vices, vice borne and bred in vs, vices from the guilt whereof we are freed, foolish and hurtfull desires, viciois desires, euill and filthy desires, vnlawfull concupiscences, and how do these termes agree to them if they be no sinne? He calleth it a distrustfull disobedience, and saith that it is an iniquity that the flesh lusteth against the spirit, though the guilt thereof be acquitted and all disobedience and iniquitie is sinne. Hee saith, that there is euill in an euill desire, though a man consent not to it for euill And whereas there are two sorts of euils, malia peccatoria & vltoria euils of sin and euils of punishment and reuenge, that wee may know that in naming concupiscence euill, he meaneth an euill of sinne: he citeth the words of Hilarie, that though the Apostles were cleansed and sanctified by the word of faith, yet our Saviour teacheth that there was not wanting in them euilnesse, stinnesse by the condition of our common originall, in that he saith, If you being euill do know to giue good gifts vnto your children. Where very evidently we are taught, that of Originall sinne there remaineth still in the regenerate such an euill, as whereby they are still euill: so that though they be freed by participation of the grace of God, yet they be still euill by reason of the vices of human infirmity till all be healed à vitiōitate, from corruption, &c. Now though sometimes the name of euill be otherwise vsed then of sinne yet neuer is a man called euill by any euill, but that that is sin. Crosses and afflictions are euils, but by these euils, or for these euils, no man is called euill. But concupiscence is such an euill, as whereby a man is euill, and for which the regenerate man is still truly called euill: and therefore is a sinfull euill; an euill that is truly and properly a sinne. Therefore Saint Austine maketh it an euill in the same kind and

f De Temp. lib. 1.
Legem factam, legem miseram.
g Contr. Iulian. lib. 6. cap. 5. non est malus? quia neget esse malum? E. ibid. cap. 7.
Qualitas mala. De nup. & concup. iust. l. 1. ca. 25.
Affectio male qualitatis. h Contr. Iulian. lib. 2. Cuius bellie merito in vltoria. Aduersus in-generateda vicia bellum gerunt. Pius a quorum reatu absoluta sinne. Desideria stulta & noxia. i De nup. & concup. lib. 1. ca. 25. viciose desideria. Et cap. 27. Dilectia mala & carpitia. k In lo. n. Tr. 41. Filicitate concupiscencie in carne tua. l De ciuit. Dei lib. 1. cap. 25. Illa concupiscencialis inobedientia, que in moribundis membris habitat. m Contr. Iulian. lib. 2. & lib. 6. cap. 8. sup. sect. 7. n Rom. 5. 19. o 1. Joh. 1. 17. p Contr. Iulian. lib. 4. cap. 2. Desiderii mali malum est, est in se non consentit ur. q Tertul. cont. Marcion. lib. 2. r Contr. Iulian.

lib. 2. ex Hilar. in Psal. 118 Samech Ipsi Apostoli verbi licet fidei iam emundatis atque sanctificatis, non desse tamen malitiam per conditionem communis nobis originis docuit, dicens. Si vos cum sitis mali, &c. l Epi. 54. Ipse Dominus euos dicit bonos propter participatōnem gratie diuine, eodem etiam malos dicit propter vitiā infirmitatis humane, donec totum quo consistitis ab omni vitiōitate sanctorum transeat in eam vitam, ubi nihil omnino peccabitur.

1. Contra Iulian. lib. 6. ca. 5. Quis ita infans & demens, qui cum peccata mala esse sciat, ut neget esse in animo concupiscentiam peccatorem, etiam si aduersus eam concupiscentie spiritus peccata conceperit ac parere non sinatur?
 Tale porro ac tam argutum malum, tam iniquum est, ut si quomodo non mereretur in morte, & periret in ultimarum mortem, nisi & eius vitium in illa que fit in baptismo peccatorum omnium remissione selueretur?
 2. Contra Iulian. lib. 2. ex Hilari. in Psal. 118. Gmel.
 Nos in hoc terreni & morticini corporis habitaculo mundos esse non posse.
 3. Ibid. ex homil. quaenam de lib. sancti Iob. Memores & conscij illi ipsa corporis vitiorum omnia esse materiam, pro qua polluti & sordidi nihil in nobis mundum, nihil innocens obinemus.
 4. Ibid. pugnandi necessitas contra malum, non substantiam, sed substantiæ vitium.
 5. Contra Iulian. Epist. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 11. Apostolos discimus à prauarum libidinum consensione liberos
 6. et c. a Iu. Ioan. tract. 41. Faciebat vs concupiscentia non consentire. Vide Bernard. in Cantic. Ser. 56. b De nat & grãd. ap. 36. Omnes sancti si interrogari possent una voce clamassent, si dixerimus quia peccatum non habemus, &c.

nature, as sinne is euill when he saith, Who is so madde, as that confessing sinnes to be euill, he will deny the concupiscentie of sinnes to be euill, albeit by reason of the spirit lusting against it, it be not suffered to conuenie and bring foorth sinnes? And to take away all exception, and at once to strike the matter dead, he addeth that it is such and so great an euill, as that onely for being in vs, it should hold vs in death, & draw vs to euerlasting death, but that the bond thereof is loosed in baptisme by the forgiuenesse of all our sinnes; euen as he had said a little before, that it should not only be in the faithfull, but also greuously hurt them, but that the guilt thereof which had bound vs, is loosed by the forgiuenesse of our sinnes. Which onely words might suffice to declare vnto vs S. Austines mind, that he neuer thought, but that concupiscentie is sinne. in that meaning, wherein we here dispute of sinne. For if it be such an euill, as that saue onely that the guilt thereof is pardoned it should greatly hurt vs, and so hurt vs, as that it should draw vs vnto euerlasting death, it cannot be denied to be truly sinne, because nothing could bring vs to euerlasting death, but onely sinne. And yet more fully to shew this, and to prooue against Iulian the blot and stain of Original sinne remaining after baptisme, he alledgeth further out of Hilary, *that we cannot be cleane in the tabernacle of this earthly and carion body; that our bodies are the matter of all vices, by reason whereof being polluted and defiled, we have nothing in vs innocent, nothing cleare, nor as to condemne the substance of the bodie, but vitium substantiæ, the vitious quality of the substance, and to signifie that therewith we still continue in part stained and defiled, so long as we continue vpon the earth. Now there is nothing whereby we are unclean polluted, defiled, but onely sinne. Seeing therefore by the remainder of Original sinne, that is, by concupiscentie we continue after baptisme unclean polluted & defiled, it followeth necessarily, that concupiscentie after baptisme is properly and truly sinne. And if concupiscentie be not sinne without consent, then by S. Austines judgement the Apostles must be said to liue without sinne. For he affirmeth of them, that they were free from any consent to euill Insts, meaning it after they had received that great measure of the holie Ghost. And so much he affirmeth particularly of the Apostle Paul But to affirme that the Apostles were free from sinne, is contrary to the doctrine of S. Austine. Concupiscentie therefore by S. Austines* iudgement must necessarily bee sinne. And hereto agree also the iudgements of the rest of the Fathers. Cyprian calleth it in the regenerate ^c a corruption, the furnace of Babylon, a domesticall euill, of which they will be ashamed, who desire with pure heart to see the king in his beaucie: a raging beast of stinking breath, to bee tied vp with iron chaines in the furthest passages of the soule. Hee saith againe of the ^d holy Prophets and Priests, that they wanted neither Originall nor personall sinne, and thereby confesseth that in holy men Originall sinne continueth still. Ambrose calleth concupiscence euen in the regenerate; ^e a defilement of nature, iniquitie, the worker of default and trespasse, the seed plot of sinnes, an euill roote, an affection of errorr Bernard in the like sort, calleth it ^f a contamination, a blot, a contagion, a pestilent poyson, a man fold pestilence, the cherishment of all nauogbtinesse, a furnace strongly burning with the affections of ambition, auarice, enuie, wilfulnesse, lewdnesse, and all vices. Hee againe inaketh it euen by it selfe, ^g a wall, which so long as it is in vs excludeth and shutteth vs out from God; as of Paul for example he saith, that this one wall hindred his soule from the sight and embracing of his beloued Sauiour. By all which the Reader may esteeme, what consciences they had in the Council of Trent, that set it downe to the world as an article to be beleued, that concupiscence is ^h not a thing that God hateth, that it is not a thing that hindreth from entering into heauen. These speeches cannot bee thus applied to anie thing but sinne. We haue no cause to be ashamed of any thing before God but onely sinne. God cannot but hate all spirituall corruption, all filthinesse, all iniquitie, all contagion and vncleannesse of the soule, and seeing concupiscence is a wall that shutteth vs out from God, it must needs be sinne, because nothing can diuide vs from God but onely sinne. Now therefore as touching the two places which M. Bishop citeth in the second section, where in S. Austine denieth concupiscence to be sinne, the answer is plaine by Austine himselfe: ⁱ Quia remissa est in remissione peccatorum, non iam regeneratis in peccatum repugnat: because it is forgiven to them for sinne. It is sinne in it owne nature, but because the guilt thereof is pardoned, therefore and in that respect onely it is not accounted sinne.

ser. 56. Pauli anime ab aspectu & complexu dilecti vnus tantum modo paries obstitit, videlicet lex peccati. Ipsa est carnis concupiscencia, & c. paries primus concupiscencia: secundus: consensus, & c. h. Council. Trident. Sess. 5. In renatu nihil quod adus Deus, nihil ab ingressu caeli remouetur. ⁱ De nups. & Concupis. lib. 2. cap. 34.

c. Cypri. de rat. circumcis. Huius con' agio corrup' solus; Baly' omic' formax, domesticum malum, de quo erubescunt quicunque mundo corde regem in decore suo videre desiderant: infamius bestia corrupti ambel' ut, catenis ferretis in v'itius anime recessibus alliganda. d. Idem. de reuun. et ten' at. Christi.

Nec origini nec personali caruere delicto. c. Ambros. de Apo. David. ca. u. Deplo'auit in se David iniquitatem a nature. Et ibid. ca. p. 13. Iniquitas operatrix culpe & delicti: radix & seminum peccatorum, mala radix affectus erroris.

f. Bern de sex tribulat. Quod in homine purum ab hac macula, immo ab hoc contagio potius inueniri; Tribulatio dum resistitur contaminatio non concupiscencia repugnat. De corde exit pestiferu' virus. Huic multisarie resistere. Fomes totius nequicie. Fernax ambitionis, & c. omnium deniq; vitiorum affectibus vehementer accensa.

g. Bernard. in Cant.

And hereby the answer is plaine to that other cauill which they borrow also from S. Austin, that ^k for concupiscence or the desires and motions thereof, we do not say forgie vs our trespasses so long as we giue no consent vnto them. For the reason that S. Austin giueth of that assertion, is ^l because the guilt thereof is already taken away in Baptisme: because the same are already forgiven and pardoned in Baptisme, thereby insinuating, that concupiscence and the motions thereof in themselves are such, as for which we should say, forgie vs our trespasses, but that therefore we doe not say so, because we beleue that they are already pardoned and forgiven vnto vs. Now it is one thing to say, that wee aske not forgiveness thereof, because it is forgiven already; another thing to say, as M. Bishop and his fellows do, that it is such in it selfe as needeth no forgiveness. Whereby it plainely appeareth, that they wholly abuse Saint Austin, and wrest him to surre other purpose and meaning then was intended by him. And yet this is a thing whereof he himselfe also made some doubt. He propoundeth it as his owne priuate opinion. ^m So farre as I can perceiue, saith he, it is so. It seemeth to mee so ⁿ Nisi fallor: if I be not deceiued, it is so, and dareth not, as he saith, ^o reprehend them, who did affirme that iust men might in this life be so free without sinne, as to be free from consent to any desires of sinne, who, because they should haue nothing else for which to say forgie vs our trespasses, must needs say so for the very first motions and lusts thereof. And surely we dare not altogether assent to Austin in this behalfe, because we cannot conceiue, but that the acts and motions of concupiscence being new from day to day, must be accounted new trespasses from day to day, and therefore from day to day giue vs occasion to say, forgie vs our trespasses. Yet doth he aduantage the Papists no whit at all, because by his very question hereof it appeareth, that he doubted not, but that euill concupiscences are in themselves such, as for which we should say, forgie vs our trespasses, when propounding whether for euill concupiscences we pray so vnto God, hee maketh the ground of his question this, because in Baptisme they are already pardoned. And thus I hope I haue by this time made it appeare to M. Bishop, that S. Austin in this point was no Papist, and that though in the signification of a word he differ from vs, yet in the very matter resolved the same that we do, and that both he and the rest of the k Epist. 200. Si nulli eorum adhiberemus assensum non esset unde diceremus patris nostro qui in celis est. Dimite nobis &c.

l Con. 2. epist. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 13. Nec propter ipsius cuius iam reatus lauacro regenerationis absque scriptis est dicunt in ordine Baptizati, Dimitte nobis, &c. Et cont. lit. Petal. lib. 2. ca. 103. Neque de his peccatis hoc petimus que nobis in Baptismo iam dimissa sunt.

m In Psal. 118. conc. 3. Quantum quidem ego sapere possum. n De perfect. iusti prope finem. Quod nisi fallor non esset opus dicere.

o Non audeo reprehendere, quamquam nec defendere ualeam.

Fathers of the Church plainly agree with vs, that concupiscence in the regenerate hath the proper nature and condition of sinne. But yet he will not yeeld, because he hath yet somewhat further to alledge out of the Fathers for the prooffe of that he saith. And first he alledgeth Chryostome, saying, Passions bee not sinnes of themselves, but the unbridled excesse of them doth make sinnes. For example, Concupiscence is not a sinne, but when passing measure it breakes his bounds, then to it is adulterie; not in respect of concupiscence, but in respect of the excesse and unlawfull riot of it. But heere he playeth the iugler againe, and by equiuocation meerly abuseth his reader. For Chryostome speaketh of passions as they are naturall, and by God implanted in man in his creation, and common to all men; and not of passions as they are the remainder of Originall sinne in the regenerate. There were passions in Christ, anger, sorrow feare, and such like, yet in Christ there was no sinne. And thus doth Chryostome speak of concupiscence (which for distinction sake should rather be translated desire) as it is a naturall affection, not as it is a humane corruption: as it is Gods creature, not as it is mans default: as it is unus aliquis affectuum, some one of the affections, not in that sort as we question it, as it is the common disorder of them all. The distinction of concupiscence, which Tertullian useth, serueth fitly in this place, that there is concupiscence reasonable and unreasonable. Reasonable he calleth that which is naturall, which from the beginning was wrought in the soule by God the reasonable author and maker thereof. Unreasonable he saith, is that which befell by the instinct of the Serpent and thenceforth grew into the soule, and became in a sort naturall: not of that nature which is of God, but of that which the diuell hath brought in Concupiscence as it importeth the naturall act of desiring, he rightly affirmeth to haue bene in Christ, and that in vs of it selfe it is no sinne. And thus is Chryostome to be vnderstood when he saith, that affections are not sinne of themselves, but that it is the unbridled disorder thereof that causeth sinne. Thus as hee saith, concupiscence referred to the naturall desire of the male to the female, is of it selfe no sinne, because it is the worke of the God of nature. But our question heere is of that concupiscence or the remainder of that concupiscence which grew by the instinct of the serpent, whereby all our desires are by another nature growne disordered and euill, which disorder we say in part continueth stil in the p Chrysost. Ro. hom. 13. Illi affectus peccatum haudquaquam erant, sed illorum inmodica ratio est. frenata hoc efficiebat. Verbi gratia ut unus aliquem affectum illorum per ralemus; Concupiscencia peccatum quidem non est: cum ea modum non seruet. &c. ita res ea in adulterio non erumpit, non ab ipsa iudem concupiscencia sed ab illius immo- dica cupiditate.

q Ibid.

r Tertullian in de Anima. cap. 6.

Rationale quod anime a primordio est ingentum a rationali videlicet auctore. Irrationale e posterius intelligendum est, ut quod acciderit ex serpentis instinctu a que exinde inobuersa in anima ad instar iam naturalitatis &c. non ex ea natura que a Deo est, sed ex illa quod diabolus induxit.

&c. Non semper ex irrationali cõfenda sunt in genitum & concupiscencia iusum, &c.

regenerate, and is not by M. Bishop as yet freed from being sinne. The place of S. Bernard answereth it selfe: 'Sinne is at the door, but unlesse thou open it shall not enter in. If sinne bee at the doore, why doth M Bishop denie it to be sinne? What he saith first, sinne is at the doore, he repeateth againe in these words, lust tickleth at the heart. If lust tickling at the heart bee sinne at the doore, how doth hee conclude by this place, that lust is no sinne? He saith, that M. Perkins often citeth S. Bernard against them, and therefore he may bee sometimes alledged for them: but if he doe alledge him no better then here he hath done, his labour shall bee better saued then so idly bestowed. But he doth not onely cite him impertinently, but also very lewdly. For in that very sermon is it wherein Bernard so describeth concupiscence, as before was said, calling it a defilement, a contagion, a blot, a pestilent poyson, &c. and saying thereof, What can there be found in man cleane from this blot, free from this contagion? thereby plainly conuincing that it is sin, because, as hath bin before said, nothing defileth, blotteth, infecteth the soule but onely sinne. S. Austin & S. Cyril, he saith haue bin cited already, & I hope he hath had a full answer to those citations. As for Hierome and Gregorie, when we heare what it is that he will oppose out of them, he shall haue our further answer; but neither they nor Caluins confession do proue at all that approoued antiquity is wholly for them, as hee fondly presumeth without cause. But now fortooth to hit the naile on the head, If any, saith he, desire to know the founder of our aduersaries doctrine in this point, let him read the 64. heresie recorded by that ancient and holy Bishop Epiphanius. And what shall he read there? Forsooth, hee registreth one Proclus an old rotten sectarie, to haue taught, that sinnes are not taken away in Baptisme, but are onely couered; which is as much to say, as sinne remaineth still in the person regenerate, but is not imputed to him; which, saith he, is iust M. Perkins and our Protestants position. Now, he that had stood by him when he read this matter in Epiphanius, might very well haue said to him, Animus est in patinis: your mind is on your mustard-pot: ye reade ye know not what. For that which he alledgeth of Proclus was not deliuered by Proclus, but by Epiphanius is recorded out of a speech of Methodius a Catholike and godly Bishop against Proclus. Yet this hee thought a fit matter wherwith to delude his liege and soueraigne Lord, hauing before mentioned it in his Epistle dedicatorie to the kings

I Bernard, ser. de sex tribulat. Peccatum in foribus est: nisi apertus aperis, non intrabit: appetitus in corde prius, sed sub te est: nisi sponte cesseris, non nocet.

kings most excellent Maestie, in the answer whereof I have set downe the words of Methodius at large, and the heretical fancie of Proclus against which they were directed. Now because the words to which he alludeth, are the words of Methodius, and approued by Epiphanius, let it be remembred, that Methodius and Epiphanius two ancient and holy Bishops haue taught, that sinne is not taken away in Baptisme, but is onely conered, that is, that sinne remaineth still in the person regenerate, but is not imputed vnto him, and so as M. Bishop himselfe confesseth, haue taught iust the same that M. Perkins and the Protestants do now teach.

10. W. BISHOP.

Now let vs come vnto the arguments, which the Church of Rome (as M. Perkins speaks) alledgeeth to proue Concupiscence in the regenerate, not to be sinne properly.

1. Obiect. In Baptisme men receiue perfect and absolute remission of sinne: Which being pardoned, is taken quite away, and therefore after Baptisme, ceaseth to be sinne: M. Perkins answereth, that it is abolished in regard of imputation, that is, is not imputed to the person, but remaines in him still. This answer is sufficiently (I hope) confuted in the Annotations vpon our consent: in confirmation of our Argument, I will adde some texts of holy Scripture: First, He that is washed, needeth not but to wash his feete, John 13. for he is wholly cleane. Take with this, the exposition of Saint Gregorie the great, our Apostle; He cannot (saith he) be called wholly cleane in whom any part or parcell of finnes remaineth: But let no man resist the voyce of truth, who saith, hee that is washed (in Baptisme) is wholly cleane: therefore there is not one dramme of the contagion of sinne left in him, whome the cleanser himselfe, doth professe to be wholly cleane. The very same doth the most learned Doctor S. Ierome affirme: saying: How are we iustified and sanctified, if any sin be left, remaining in vs? Again, if holy Dauid say, Thou shalt wash me, and I shall be whiter then snow: how can the blacknesse of hell still remaine in his soule? briefly it cannot bee but a notorious wrong vnto the precious blood of our Saviour, to hold, that it is not as well able to purge and purifie vs from sinne, as Adams transgression was of force to infect vs. Yea the Apostle teacheth vs directly, that wee recover more Epist ad Occant.
Psal. 50.

by Christs grace, then we lost through Adams fault, in these words: But not as the offence, so also the gift, for if by the offence of one, many died; so much more the grace of God, and the gift in the grace of one man Iesus Christ hath abounded vpon many. If then wee through Christ, receiue more abundance of grace then wee lost by Adam, there is no more sinne left in the newly baptized man then was in Adam in the state of innocency, albeit other defects, and infirmities doe remaine in vs, for our greater humiliation and probation, yet all filth of sinne is cleane scourd out of our soules, by the pure grace of God powred abundantly into it in Baptisme: and so our first Argument stands insoluble.

Now to the second.

R. ABBOT.

This argument as it was long ago vrged by the Pelagians, so in them long ago hath receiued a full answer. It was rightly sayd by S. Austin to them: Whosoeuer doth derogate or detract from Baptisme that which now we receiue by it, corrupteth Christian faith: but he that euen now attributeth to it that, which by it indeede but yet hereafter we are to receiue, cutteth off Christian hope. Wee confesse that Baptisme doth seale vnto vs the full remission and forgiuenesse of all our sinnes: that thereby we are ingrafted into Christ, to become members of his body, and to be made partakers of his spirit, that by the sanctification of the same spirit sinne may be destroyed and decayed in vs from day to day, that the corruption of the old man being wholly put off in death, perfect righteousnesse may thenceforth take place for euer at the resurrection of the dead. But this doth not satisfie M. Bishop: he will haue it, that Originall sinne is not onely forgiuen in Baptisme, but also quite taken away; and therefore reiecteth M. Perkins answer, that it is abolished as touching imputation, but that otherwise it remaineth still. Yet the answer fully accordeth with S. Austin, that not it selfe, but the guilt of it is taken away in Baptisme: that it remaineth as touching the actual being, but is taken away as touching the guilt. Now his confutation heereof must needs bee a very poore one, that thus directly crosseth S. Austins assertion, and hath no further warrant but his owne bare word. We haue examined that before, but here in confirmation of his

^a August. cont. 2.
epist. Pelag. li. 3.
ca. 2. Quisquis
baptismati dero-
gat quod modò
per illud accipi-
mus, corrumpit fidem:
quisquis autem
tam nunc et tri-
buit quod quidem
per ipsum sed iamò
postea accipiuri
sumus amputat
spem.

^b Cont. Iulian.
lib. 2. Malum quod
non ipsum sed rea-
tus eius auferitur
à baptismo.
^c Ibid. lib. 6. ca. 8.
Manet actus, pre-terijt reatus.

his argument he will adde some texts of holy Scripture And first he alledgeth the words of Christ, ^d He that is washed, needeth not but to wash his feet, but is wholly cleane. Where wee may wonder, that the mans wits should so much faile him, thus to cite a place directly against himselfe. For Peter, to whome Christ there speaketh, had bene baptized before, and yet hee needed to be washed still, inso-much that our Sauour saith to him, ^e If I wash thee not, thou shalt e ^e Ver. 8. haue no part in mee. Therefore the vncleanness of sinne was not wholly taken away in Baptisme, but remained in part still to be taken away. Nay, in the very place it selfe the exception is plaine. For it namely specifieth, that he that is washed hath still neede to washe his feete; and that he is not in such sort wholly cleane, but that his feete are still vncleane. And what are these feete, but the corrupt affections and lusts of sinne, whereby wee still cleaue to the earth, and haue a remainder of fleshly and earthly conuersation? Of these the Apostle saith, ^f Mortifie your members which are upon the earth, fornication, vncleanness, wantonnesse, euill desire, conuou-snesse. ^g Thus did the Apostle speake to baptized men, saith Austin. How then doth the baptized man mortifie fornication, which now hee commiteth not, but by fighting against the desires thereof, and not consenting to them, which are not yet wanting, though daily they be diminished. Now if by reason of these earthly teete, these corrupt desires being a part of originall infection, wee haue still neede to be washed, it followeth, that by reason of these desires wee are still vncleane, euen by the hauing of them, though wee giue no consent vnto them. Now Ambrose expressly expoundeth this place of a remainder of Originall sinne, from which still after Baptisme wee remaine to be cleansed. ^h Peter was cleane, saith he, but yet he was still to haue his feete washed. For he had still the sinne that commeth by succession from the first man, whom the serpent beguiled and perswaded him to error. Therefore his feete are washed, that those hereditarie sinnes may be taken away: For our owne sinnes done by our selues are released in Baptisme. Where speaking of men baptized in elder yeares, as Peter was, he plainelie signifieth, that what sinnes they haue by their owne action, they are in Baptisme wholly abolished, but that Originall sinne, as touching the matter and corruption of it, is still dwelling in vs, and that we haue still neede to be washed and cleansed therefrom. And this S. Austin giueth to vnderstand, d Ioh. 13. 10.

e Ver. 8.

f Col. 3. 5.

g Aug. cont. Iulian.

lib. 6. cap. 5.

Iam baptizatus

dicebat Aposto-

lus, Mortificate,

Ecce. Quomodo

ergo mortificat

baptizatus forni-

cationem quam

non iam perpetrat

nisi cum desideria

eius quibus non

consentit expug-

nat, que in bene-

facientibus et om-

nino non forni-

cantibus nec con-

sensione nec opere

etsi non desunt ta-

men quotidiè in-

ueniunt?

h Amb. de de ijs

qui in nauis

myl. ca. 6. Miu-

dus erat: Petrus,

sed plantam lauce-

re deb: bat.

Hab: bat enim

primo hominis de

successione pecca-

tionis quando cum

supplantauit ser-

pens & persuasit

errorum.

who.

who writing vpon those speeches of Christ, asketh the question, ^lWho is there in this life so cleane, as that he is not more and more to be cleansed or made cleane? and so affirmeth that the faithfull are here, mundi & mundandi: cleane, but yet so as that in part they remaine still to be cleansed, accordingly as the Apottle exhorteth the faithfull, ^kLet vs cleanse our selues from all filthinesse of the flesh and of the spirit, and grow vp to full holinesse in the feare of God. But heere M. Bishop alledgeth Gregorie, affirming by those words of Christ, that he that is washed hath not any thing remaining of his sinne, &c. Which words Gregorie indeed hath, but altogether to other purpose then M. Bishop citeth them, disputing in that place against some who held ^lpeccata in Baptismo superficte tenuis dimitti, that sinnes in Baptisme are but superficially pardoned. Against them hee alledgeth the words of Christ here spoken, and inferieth, ^mSi igitur peccata in Baptismo fuditus minime dimittuntur, &c. If then sins be not altogether forgiven in Baptisme, how then is hee wholly cleane that is washed? For he cannot be said to be wholly cleane, to whom any thing is remaining of his sinne. And to that meaning he saith, that there is nothing remaining to him of the contagion of his sinne, comparing the guilt of sinne to a contagion or infection, where with the person is still touched after that the fact is past and gone, vntill by forgiveness it be taken away. Now let these words be referred to the drift whereto they were written (which being expressed in the next words before, M. Bishop hath very guilefully concealed) and they haue nothing in them contrary to our assertion. For we deny not, but that sins are fully and wholly pardoned to the regenerate: wee deny not, but that the guilt thereof is quite taken away, and therefore by Gregories testimonie M. Bishop auaieth nothing. The very like doth Ambrose say, ⁿSinne can haue no portion in a man whom forgiveness of sinnes hath swallowed up, who yet plainly affirmeth the remaining of Originall sinne it selfe after the pardon thereof, as before is said. Now we may not thinke that Gregorie was so simple, as that hee saw not in the words of Christ, that hee that is sayd to bee wholly cleane, hath an exception set downe as touching his feete, and therefore could not intend any further, but that hee is wholly cleane, as touching the guilt, yet partly still vncleane by remainder of corruption. To Gregorie he addeth Hierome, but the words which he alledgeth are a meere forgerie. Hee hath borrowed them from

i Aug in Joan. tract. 80. Quis est in hac vita sic mundus ut non sit magis magis mundandus?

k. 1. Cor. 7. 1.

l Gregor. lib. 9. epist. 39. Siqui sunt qui dicunt peccata in Baptismo superficte tenuis dimitti, quid est hac predicacione infidelis? m Si igitur peccata in Baptismo fuditus minime dimittuntur, quomodo is qui totus est, mundus est totus? Totus enim mundus dici non potest cui de peccato aliquid remansit. Sed nemo resistit voci veritatis que ait, Qui totus est, &c. Nihil ergo ei de peccati sui contagione remanet, que totum fatetur mundum ipse qui redemit. n Ambros. in Pf. 118. Ser. 18. Culpa in eo habere non potest portum, nem quem absorberit remissio peccatorum.

Bellarmino of trust, and Bellarmino hath deceiued him, as hee will do any man that putteth any trust in him. Hierome in the ° epistle cited by him, speaketh somewhat of Baptisme, in behalfe of one who had had two wiues, one before he was baptizd another after, and was thereupon questioned whether he might be Bishop or not, because the Apostle saith, that a Bishop should be the husband of one wife. He disputeth at large, that if Baptisme take away sins, much more it should take away the imputation of that that is no sin, but neither hath the words which M. Bishop alledgeth, nor any other that can serue M. Bishops turn. It is further alledged that Dauid saith, Thou shalt wash me and I shal be whiter then snow: how then, saith he, can the blacknesse of hell remaine in his soule? But let me aske him, if Originall sinne be taken quite away in the regenerate, how then cometh it to passe, that Dauid hauing receiued the effect of Baptisme in the Sacrament of Circumcision, and now a long time continued in the state of grace, doth yet complaine of Originall sinne, and doth mention it as the fountain of those enormous sins, which in that Psalm he bewaileth and bemoneth vnto God? Behold, saith he, I was born in iniquitie, and in sinne bath my mother concerned me. Why doth he thus^r confesse, as Ambrose saith, the filth bosh of speciall, & also of common, that is to say, Originall sinnes, if there were now no Originall sin in him to be confessed? And as for that which M. Bishop vrgeth, the same Ambrose telleth vs therof, that he is made whiter then snow, to whom the fault is pardoned, who yet assi meth the continuing of Originall sinne in him that is pardoned, as we haue seene before. He was therefore whiter then snow, as touching imputation and guilt, when the fault was pardoned, according to the saying of Austin, that all the commandements of God are reputed as done, when that is pardoned that is not done. But yet whē he had heard it deliuered vnto him by the Prophet Nathan, that the Lord had taken away his sinne, he prayed notwithstanding, Create in me a cleane heart; renew in me a right spirit, wash me and I shal be whiter then snow, thereby acknowledging an vncleannesse in himselfe, from which he had still neede to be renewed and washed; from which when he should be washed he should be whiter then snow, but from which no man is so fully washed in this life, but that he hath need still to pray to be washed and clenfed more and more. For what is it by washing to be made whiter then snow, but to be made without spots, or wrinkle, o *Ad Oceanum.*p *Psal. 51. 7.*q *ver. 5.*r Ambros. Apolog. Dauid. ca. 12.

Peccatorum specialium atque communium coluuiis conficitur.

s *Ibid. Supra nireem dealbatur cui culpa dimittitur.*t *Aug. Restrict. li. 1. c. 19. Omnia mandata facta deputantur, quando quia non si igitur citur. ur. Sam. 1. 3. x *Psal. 51. 7. 10.y Eph. 5. 27.

z Aug. de nupt & concupis. lib. 1.
cap. 34. *Et exi-
bit eam sibi non
in isto seculo sed
in futuro, non hi-
bentem maculam.
&c.*

a Basili. In Esa. cap.
1. *Nec usque adeo
sufficiens per se est regenerationis la-
uacrum ut totum
promoueat ad al-
borem nitidum aut
lancem, sed & opera
requiritur: nec
perfunctoria aut
qualicunque dili-
gentia est opus ad
hoc ut lauacrum
quidem sit effici-
uum puritatis & expurgationis a sordibus, &c. Et quemadmodum
in tineturis quod
reperitur vicibus ac multo cum la-
bore instansum
est, insturam ex-
citit pressus inherescens, &c.*
Ad eundem se ha-
bet modum anima
sanis peccatorum suppurata, & in habitudine consti-tuta malitie. Ista
enim mali assue-
tudo vix ac mul-
to negotio potest
elui, &c.

6 Eph. 1. 3.
c Aug. de correp& grat. cap. 11.
d Eph. 2. 6.
e Aug. de bap-
t. lib. 1. cap. 4.
f Tertul. de resurrect. carnis. Contemplatio est spei
in hoc spatio per fidem, non presen-
tatio, nec possessio
sed expectatio.
g Rom. 8. 24.

or any such thing? But to bee made without spot or wrinckel,^z befallerth to no man in this life as S. Austin well obserueth. Therefore no man in this life becommeth whiter then snow, by being free from all inter-nall blot of vncleannesse and sinne. And therefore to take away from M. Bishop all matter of cauill, Basit plainly saith, that^a the wa-shing of Baptisme sufficeth not to bring a man to the whitenes of snow, but that there needeth also great labour and diligence, and that as to make a perfect and abiding colour, there needeth often dipping & much paines, so is it also in the soule corrupted with the filth of sinne, & beeing in a habite of euill, that hardly and with much ado it can bee washed and cleansed from it. But saith M. Bishop, it is a notorious wrong to the pre-cious blood of our Sauour Christ, to hold, that it is not as well able to purge and purisie vs from sinne, as Adams transgression was of force to infect vs. And what doth he say therein more then we also say? We acknowledge as much, and not onely so, but we saie further as hee saith, that, we recouer more by Christs grace, then we haue lost by Adams fault, according to the words of the Apostle which he citeth to that purpse. What inferreth he now hereof? If then, saith he, we through Christ receiue more abundance of grace then we lost by Adam, there is no more sin left in the newly baptized man, then was in Adam in the state of innocency. But this conclusion followeth not. For although wee recouer more in Christ then we lost in Adam, yet wee do not pre-sently receiue the same. God hath^b blessed vs in Christ with all man-ner spirituall blessings in heauenly things, but wee haue not as yet the fruition thereof. Christ hath recouered for vs immortality and in-corrption, yet mortality and corruption hitherto continue still. The grace of Christ doth not onely yeeld vs the state which Adam had Posse non peccare, to haue power not to sinne, but also a higher per-fection^c non posse peccare, to bee without possibility of sinne, and yet who seeth not, that we haue not attained to this perfection? God hath^d raised vs. up together with Christ, and made vs sit together in heauenly places: ^e Nondum in se in spe, not yet indeede but in hope, saith S. Austin. Thus haue wee receiued more in Christ, then wee haue lost in Adam, not yet actually and indeede, but in assurance of hope. ^f Our state heere, saith Terullian, is a contemplation of hope through faith, not a presenting of things to vs: it is not possession but ex-pectation. And this the Apostle confirmeth, saying, that^g we walke by faith and not by sight; that wee are saued in hope, but hope which is seene is no hope; that^h wee waite for the adoption, euen the redemption of our bodies, the redemption of possession, as it is rightly called, to the praise of his glory. How is it that hauing already receiued adoption, wee yet looke for the adoption; that be already redeemed, we yet looke for a redemption; that being regenerate in Christ, we yet expect a regeneratiō, but because the fruit & effect & substance of our adoption, redemption, regeneration, the adoption, redemption, regeneration of possession remaineth yet vnperformed vnto vs? We receiue now ^h a first fruits, and some small beginnings, as for a tast, so for a pledge & assurance of the rest, but ^l in comparison of that that shall be at the resurrection, the life that now is, is but euen dung, as S. Austin saith. Therefore M. Bishop stretcheth the present effect of Baptisme too farre, when hee saith, that in the man newly baptized, there is no more sinne left then was in Adam in the state of innocency. This is no Catholique doctrine; it is meere heresie, it is but the dreame of the Pelagians. So they said, that ^m men in Baptisme are perfectly renewed, and ⁿ that they cannot be called the sonnes of God vnesse they be made altogether without sinne. And this by M. Bishops doctrine, is not onely gained by the Sacrament of Baptisme, but also renewed euery while by their Sacrament of penance. M. Bishops absolution, if we beleue him, will set a man for the present as free from sinne as Adam was in the state of innocency. Fic vpon these lewd paradoxes: why do they delude simple soules with these hereticall positions, which they themselues in their own consciences must necessarily condemne? We haue heard before, how Basil condemneth this assertion of perfect puritie attained in Baptisme. In the like sort doth Hilary teach, that ^o wee may not thinke that there is restored in the Sacrament of Baptisme, that perfect innocencie and puritie that is worthy of heauenly life, but that there is remaining after the water of Baptisme the cleansing of perfect puritie, which by the grieuance of death shall purge vs from the blot and society of that carion wherewith wee are now blended. Thus Epphanius alledgeth out of Methodius against Proclus that ^p sinne by enlightning grace is not taken quite away, for then men should not sinne after Baptisme; it is therefore holden in and quieted (in the Baptized) by faith but is not yet pulled up by the roots. But most notably of all other doth S. Austin determine this point against the plagian heresie.

h Verſ. 13.
 i Eph. 1. 14.
 iic ἀπολυτρωσις
 τῆς περιποιήσεως.

k Rom. 8. 23.
 l Aug. de Tempore. Ser. 49. In comparatione resurrectionis steruus est tota vita quam gerimus.

m Cont. duas epist. Pelag. lib. 4. cap. 7. Dicunt Baptisma perfectè homines inuonari.

n Epist. 106. Filios Dei non posse uocari nisi omnino absque peccato sumant effecti.

o Hilary in Psa. 118 Gmel: Si quis exiitmet sibi in Sacramento Baptismi perfectam illam innocentiam & celestis uite dignam reditiam paritatem, Ioanuem Baptistam dixisse recolat, Ego quidem, &c. Est ergo quantum licet existimare perfectè illius emanatio puritatis etiam post Baptismi aquas reposita que nos per meritis inuirtiam à labe morticinis & societate purgabit, &c.

p Epist. lxxi. 64. Alioqui post illuminationem non coningeret nos iniusta facere, ut ipse peccato peritus successit à nobis ablato, &c. Quare constat conuerſi quidem ac sepius per fidem nunc peccatum, ut ne fructus peccatorum producat; non autem radicem tollit.

tikes, affirming still that in Baptisme there is nothing perfectly yeelded vnto vs but onely the forgiveness of sinnes. ⁹ Our renewing, saith hee, beginneth at the remission of sinnes, and so farre as a man mindeth the things of the spirit, so far he is renewed, but the rest is done in hope for the time till it may be done indeed. And albeit there be in Baptisme a totall and full forgiveness of sins, yet if in the mind it selfe which is the inner man, there were in Baptisme a perfect newnesse, the Apostle would not say, Though our outward man be corrupted, yet our inward man is renewed from day to day. For he that is renewed from day to day, is not yet wholly renewed, and so farre as hee is not yet renewed, so farre is he yet in his olde estate. Therefore the Apostle exhorteth the faithfull baptized to put off the old man, &c. which they should not bee warned to doe, if in Baptisme it were perfectly done already. Againe he saith, that ^r a man by spirituall regeneration is wholly in hope, but indeed is yet but in part renewed, and proposeth it for a thing, ^r specially to be regarded and remembered, that onely forgiveness of sinnes is full and perfect in Baptisme, and that the quality of man is not forthwith wholly changed, but that the spirituall first fruits in them that go well forward by newnesse encreasing from day to day, doe turne or change to the same that which is old according to the flesh, untill there bee renewing of the whole. Now how doth this stand with that which M. Bishop affirmeth, that not onely the guilt of sinne is taken away by forgiveness, but also the whole blot and deformity thereof is quite abolished in Baptisme, and full and perfect righteousness atchieved therein? If onely forgiveness of sinnes be full and perfect in Baptisme, then there cannot bee sayd to be a full and perfect abolishing of sinne it selfe. It is false therefore which hee saith, that in the man newly baptized there is left no sinne, no more sinne then was in Adam in the state of innocencie. To which purpose hee addeth further, that albeit other defects and infirmities doe remaine in vs, for our greater humiliation and probation, yet all filth of sinne is cleane scourged out of our soules, by the pure grace of God poured abundantly into it in Baptisme. Which now how farre it is from truth, it appeareth by that that hath bene already sayd. I

q. August. de peccat. m. r. & rem. lib. 1. cap. 7. Remissio incipit a remissione omnium peccatorum. Et in quantum quisque spiritualia sapit qui iam factus est in tantum renouatur. cetera uero in se facta sunt donec etiam in re fiat, &c. In Baptismo quantum uis tota & plena sit remissio peccatorum, tamen si in ipso anno qui est homo interior perfecta in Baptismo nouitas fieret non diceret Apostolus, Et si exterior, &c. Professo enim qui de die in diem renouatur nondum totus est renouatus, & in quantum nondum est renouatus in tantum adhuc in uetustate est, &c. Et hoc ut faciat iam baptizatos fideles; ad horatur, quod adhuc momentis non essent, si hoc in Baptismo iam perfectum factum esset.

r Ibid. cap. 10. Homo totus in se iam & iam in re ex parte in regeneratione spiritualis renouatus.

s Ibid. cap. 27. Il-

ud precipue attendere ac meminisse debemus tantum modo peccatorum omnium plenam perfectamque remissionem Baptismo fieri homini. us uero ipsius qualitatem non totam continuo mutari, sed spirituales primitias in bene proficentibus de die in diem nouitate crescentibus commutare in se quod carnaliter uetus est donec totum renouetur.

will here adde only the words of Hilary, who saith, We haue us now a matter mingled with vs, which is subiect to the law of sinne and death and that in the house of this mortall and weake flesh, we gather a blot of corruption by the society hereof, and vntill the body bee glorified into the nature of the spirit, there cannot bee in vs the nature of true life; that this world is not the land of the lining, but that wee are heere still to bee cleansed by reason of being blended with the carion (of concupiscence) and that this was the thing figured in the law, where a man was vnclene for touching any dead body. Surely if in this life wee remaine still in case to be cleansed, if there be still a blot of corruption by reason of concupiscence still cleauing fast vnto vs, and it can be no other wise till the body bee glorified into the nature of the spirit, then it is vtterly false, as indeed it is, to say that in Baptisme all filth of sinne is cleane scoured out of our soules. But wheteas all men find by experience both in theselues and others, that there is a wonderfull prauity and corruption of nature still continuing, whereby wee are all forward to that that is euill, and altogether backward and vntoward to goodnesse, to prevent the obiection hereof, M. Bishop acknowledgeth a remainder of somewhat, but hee qualifieth the opinion thereof with fauourable and gentle termes. He saith, that defects and infirmitie remaine in vs, marry, in no case must wee thinke them to bee finnes. But these defects and infirmitie are such, as for which it is true of vs which Saint Austin saith, Re sumus adhuc filij irae, spe non sumus. By reall state and being we are still the children of wrath; it is in hope as touching which we are not so. How are we yet the children of wrath, but by hauing in vs the matter of that wrath wherewith wee were all borne, which what is it but onely sinne? These defects then and infirmitie, what are they properly and in truth but onely sinne? But M. Bishop in vsing these termes alludeth to S. Austin, who oftentimes so calleth concupiscence and the lusts and motions thereof; which if he did in the same meaning as S. Austin doth, there should bee no matter of great questiō betwixt him & vs. For S. Austin calleth concupiscence vitium, a defect, not as vnderstanding thereby as the English word importeth, a meer priuation and want of somewhat that should be, but a positieue euill quality that ought not to be, a vicious & corrupt condition of man, (such a defect, if we wil so call it) let vs call it a corruption, as he himself expoundeth it) as by reason wherof the same S.

Hilary. in Psal.
vii. 8. Gime! Habemus etiam nunc admixtam nobis materiam que mortis legi atque peccati obnoxia est. Et in huius caduce carnis infirmitate; dominatio corruptionis labē ex eiu consortio mutuat, ac nisi glorificatio in vitam spiritus corpore vite vere in nobis non potest esse natura. &c.
Scit hanc munditiam sciem religionem non esse virtutum: scit nos adhuc secundum prafigurationem legis emundandos esse. Nunc enim admiscetur mortificatio & in lege cuiusque mortuus conuersetur, immundus est, &c.

u Augustin
Psal. 37.

x In Psal. 10:
Ira enim quae omnes nati sumus, ira de propagine inquiratis, de massa peccati.

v De lib. arbit. lib.
3. cap. 14. Fru nomen maxime
filis esse corrup.
tio:
z Epist. 19. Sa.
pra. Sect. 8.

a De civit. Dei. li. 12. cap. 3. b Con. Jul. li. 2.
 c De perfect. iust. Rat. 17. sup. sec. 4. d Cōt. Jul. li. 4. c. 2.
 In quantum inest nocet: nisi non ad pendendi de sorte sanctorum, tamen ad suscipiendam spiritualem delectationē sanctorū vocantur, illa de qua dicit Apostolus. Cor. 13. c. 6.
 e De perfect. iust. Rat. 15. Supra d. c. 3.
 f De nupt. & cō. cap. l. c. 23.
 g Ibid. Propter quod dicitur, propter hoc & diabolus diabolo subingatur.
 h Con. Jul. li. 2. Quis mortuum est in eo reatus quo nos tenet. at. i. Ibid.

Austin saith, that no man living shall be found righteous in the sight of God, as we have seene before. It is vitium, such a defect, as where. by a the nature of man is vitiated and corrupted, and so farre as it is corrupted is euill, and there is nothing that maketh an euill man, but onely sinne. It is b defectus à iustitia, a defection or swaruing from righteousness, hindring, that wee loue not God with all our soule, d diminishing that spirituall delight that we ought to haue in the law of God, and e it is sinne when there is not that loue in vs that ought to bee, or the same is lesse then it ought to be. But it is not onely after Baptisme that S. Austin giueth to concupiscence this name of vitium, a defect, or rather a vice or vicious qualitie: hee calleth it from the beginning f vitium quo vitata est natura humana: a vice or vicious qualitie wherewith the nature of man is vitiated and defiled. Now before Baptisme there is no doubt but S. Austin by vice importeth sinne, because for it he saith, & the nature of man is condemned, and is under the power of the diuell, and the thing being still the same, how should it after Baptisme bee no sinne? A be: after Baptisme he calleth it h vitium mortuum, a vice or vicious quality that is now dead, because, saith he, it is dead as touching the guilt wherewith it held vs, but otherwise it liueth still. Hee calleth the lusts thereof i vitia à quorum reati absoluti sumus: vices from the guilt whereof we are released, importing still, that saue the guilt they are still the same that they were before. Therefore albeit hee forbear the name of sinne after Baptisme, in respect that they haue not the effect of sinne to make guilty before God, because they are already pardoned, yet he cannot bee supposed otherwise to exclude them from the nature and name of sinne. They did make guilty before, and should make guilty still, but that they are pardoned, which cannot agree but to sinne onely. And this did Pighius a friend of M. Bishops see very well, k that it is impossible, that the nature of sinne, and the nature of concupiscence abiding still the same, that concupiscence before Baptisme should be sinne, and after Baptisme should bee no sinne. Now as both before Baptisme and after Baptisme it is called by S. Austin a defect, so is it also called, infirmus, as, an infirmitie, languor, a faintnesse or weakenesse, not growing of a bare priuation, as I said before, but of a vicious constitution, a corrupt and euill habite, which therefore he compareth to a l corrupt and noysome distemper of the body, wherby diseases are propagated k Pigh. de peccato Orig. cont. 1. Ut vna eademq; materia e. equitatis & iustitiae regula, id e. aliqui in se manentis nunc proxi, primo verèq; peccatiua si: vna non sit fieri prorsus non potest. 1 Aug. de nupt. & concupisc. l. 2. c. 34. Sicut malus corpore valens, id e. Et cōt. Jul. li. 5. c. 7. Quodam operite contagio, id est, concupiscen. e. afficitur, sicut de parentibus moribilibus morbida soboles procreantur.

pagated in generation from the parents to the children. The Apostle expresseth the whole corruption of mans nature by the name of infirmity or weaknesse, when he saith, ^m When wee were yet infirme or weak, Christ died for vs. Whereas S. Austin witnesseth the Apostle, by ^a infirmie or weak, meaneth the same as he doth when hee saith immediately, ungodly sinners, enemies vnto God. Infirmities therefore implieth and importeth sinne, ungodlinesse, enmity against God. Thus doth Austin say, that ^o infirmity seemeth a light matter, but yet sometimes it is such as that it is called impiety. And thus doth he call the penall disease of Original sinne, ^p an infirmity, as before was sayd. This is ^q languor quo bene viuendi virtus perijt, the fainting weaknesse whereby wee lost the power of liuing well, otherwise by him termed, r vulnus quod vulnerat ipsam vitam quarectè viuebatur; a wound that woundeth that life whereby man should liue aright. This infirmity S. Austin acknowledgeth euery where to continue still. ^s It is not, he saith, wholly consumed in Baptisme: t of it and for it wee haue still cause to cry, Haue mercy vpon me, for I am weak; u with it we are still to wastle and strue so long as we here liue, which being the same that it was before, x contrary to the spirit of God, y rebelling against the Law of God, though the guilt thereof bee pardoned, must needs in it selfe be sinne, as it was before. And thus much of M. Bishops insoluble argument, containing nothing in it against vs, which the ancient Church doth not wholly disauow.

m Rom 5.6.
n Ang. epist. 59.
Hos dixit infirmos quos impio: quos infirmos, eos peccatores. &c. o De Trinit. lib. 3 cap. 10. Leue aliquid videtur infirmitas, sed aliquando talis est ut impietas nominetur.
p De peccat. mer. & remiss. lib. 2. cap. 17.
q De nupt. & concupisc. lib. 2. ca. 34 r Ibid.
s De peccat. mer. & remiss. l. 2. cap. 7. Non ex qua hora quisquam baptizatur omnia vetus infirmitas eius absumitur.
t Cont. 2. epist. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 3.
v Pronos hoc dicens miserere mei Domine quoniam infirmus sum.
u Ibid. Hec infirmitas cum qua usque ad corporis mortem defectu & profectu aeternante contendimus. x Galathians 5. 17.

II. W. BISHOP.

2. Obiect. Euery sinne is voluntary, and not committed without the consent of man: but this concupiscence whereof we talke, hath no consent of man: but riseth against his will: therefore is no sinne. M. Perkins answereth: That such actions, as are vsed of one man towards another, must be voluntary, but sinne towards God may be committed without our consent. For euery want of conformitie vnto the law, euen in our body, although against our will, be sinnes in the Court of conscience. Reply: Full little knowes this man what belongeth to the Court of conscience: the secret fault is indeed be examined, but nothing is taken for sinne by any one learned in that facultie, which is done without a mans free consent: all of them holding with S. Augustine: That sinne is so voluntary an euill, that it cannot be sinne, which is not voluntarie: And to say with M. Perkins that any want of conformitie to reason in our body is sinne, is so absurd, that a man might (if that were true) bee damned for a dreame, how well soeuer disposed he went to sleepe: if he chance to dreame of uncleannesse, whereupon doth ensue any euill motion in his flesh. This paradoxe of sinning without a mans consent, is so contrary vnto both naturall and supernaturall reason, that S. Augustine auerreth, Neither any of the small number of the learned, nor of the multitude of the vnlearned to hold, that a man can sinne without his consent. What vnlearned learned men then are start up in our miserable age, that make no bones to denie this, and greater matters too?

R. ABBOT.

To the obiection heere propounded, M. Perkins hath giuen a double answer. To the one M. Bishop replieth, making choice of that that his wit would best serue him to play vpon: but to the other, which is the same that S. Austin vsed against the same obiection of the Pelagian heretikes, he vseth not a word. Let vs aske M. Bishop him selfe, What, is there not sinne in infants before they be baptized? He will tell vs that there is. But then wee vrge him with their owne rule, Euery sinne is voluntary; but that that is in infants vn baptized is not voluntary, because they haue no act of will, therefore that that is in infants vn baptized is no sinne. Will he not here say as M. Perkins doth, according to S. Austines doctrine, which indeed is true, that the sinne that is in infants is a voluntary by the will of him that first sinned, but not by the will of them to whom it is originall: that it is now ^b naturall to man, but yet the beginning of it was by the will of man? Which answer when hee hath giuen vs, let him take it backe againe to himselfe, that the sinne of concupiscence is voluntarie by the will of him by whom it first came, not by our will: and that if he meane that to bee voluntary which is by the act of a mans owne will, his rule is true onely in actuall finnes, and not in sinne Originall whereof we dispute. But of this point I haue answered sufficiently before in the question of ^c Free will, and need no further hereto stand vpon: only I wish she

Lib. 3. de lib. arb.
cap. 17.

Lib. de vera Re-
lig. cap. 14.

2. Aug. Retract.
lib. 1. cap. 13. S. n.
pra. Sect. 2.
b De ciuit. Dei.
li. 12. ca. 3. Quod
vitiū consuetu-
dine nimis epro-
gressu roboratum naturaliter inole-
uit, à voluntate
sumpsit exordium

c Sect. 18.

the Reader to obserue, how M. Bishop hath here foisted in, that sin is not committed without mans consent, whereof M. Perkins mentioned nothing. And therefore as Austine said to Iulian, objecting how should sinne be ascribed to that person, which hath neither will nor power to sinne, so do I answer to this scholar of Iulian, that ^d it is one thing to speake of committing sinnes of a mans own: another thing to speake of the contagion that commeth by anothers sinne. Our speech is heere of a sinne, that without any consent or act of ours, is deriued vnto vs by contagion from our father Adam, which though it bee ours without any consent of ours, and against our wils doth tempt vs and entice vs, yet we confesse cannot be perpetrated and committed, but by the consent and liking of the will. M. Bishop if hee had meant honestly, should haue accordingly propounded the objection, as M. Perkins did, that the answer might be seene to be direct and plaine, as indeed it is. But hee thought that was not for his turn: he knoweth that by truth and simplicity he cannot thrue with bad wares, and therefore must vse shuffling and shifting for the uttering of them. But let vs now see what his reply is to M. Perkins answer to that objection. M. Perkins saith, that the proposition, that every sin is voluntary is a poluicke rule pertaining to the courts of men, and doth not hold in the court of conscience, which God holdeth in mens hearts, in which every want of conformity to the law, is made a sinne. To this M. Bishop answereth full wisely: Little knows this man, what belongeth to the court of conscience: there secret faultis indeed be examined, but nothing is taken for sin by any one learned in that facultie, which is done without a mans free consent. Where when M. Perkins hath spoken of a court of conscience kept by God, he answereth, of a court of conscience kept by men, and those, as we must vnderstand him, his owne fellowes, and so to the purpose answereth nothing. In Gods court of conscience, ^e euill thoughts defile a man: what they do in their courts of conscience, it skilleth not. In Gods court of conscience, ^f to lust is to sin, because the law hath said, Thou shalt not lust: it is a signe that they haue no conscience, that keepe a court of conscience to iudge against that that God hath iudged, that to lust is no sinne. In Gods court of conscience, ^g all vnrighteousnesse is sinne, and therefore all transgression of the law, because it is vnrighteousnesse, is sinne: if their court of conscience determine otherwise, it must abide the censure of his court, and receiue check and charm from thence.

d Cont. Iulian. li 6 ca. 4. Aliud est perpetratio priorum, aliud alienorum contagio delictorum.

e Mar. 15. 19.

f Rom. 7. 7.

g 1. Iohn 5. 17.

Deut. 6. 3.

In Gods court of conscience is required^h all the heart, and all the mind, and all the soule, and all the strength, and the true informed conscience for not giuing all, resteth conuicted of sinne: what court of conscience doe they keepe, that giue bur a part in steed of all, and yet haue a conscience to say, that they sinne not therein? What court of conscience do they keepe, that frame Gods commandements to their conscience, and not their conscience to Gods commandements? whose conscience is like the bed of Procrustes the giant; whatsoeuer God saith, that is too short for it, they haue a racke to stretch it longer: whatsoeuer God saith, that is too long for it, they haue an axeto cut it shorter. M. Bishop did amisse, in steed of a court of conscience kept by God, to tell vs of a court of conscience kept by them. But if we will speake of a court of conscience for resolving cases of conscience, we may well esteeme by that that we see, that M. Perkins did much better know what belongeth to the court of conscience then M. Bishop doth. As for those learned in that facultie, of whom he speaketh, all whelps of the same foxe, what they thinke it is nothing to vs, but more learned then they are do know, as hath bene shewed, that sinne may be without consent of the will, nay against the will of him in whom it is sinne. For euill motions and thoughts arise in the regenerate man against his will, and it hath bene sufficiently proued, that such euill motions and thoughts are sinne: and who is there that hath a feeling conscience, that doth not condemne himselfe in the arising thereof, and aske God forgiveness, that his mind hath bene ouertaken and caried away into such thoughts, howsoeuer he haue preuented the consent and liking of them? But saith M. Bishop, to say with M. Perkins that any want of conformity to reason in our body, is sin, is so absurd, that a man might if that were true, be damned for a dreame, how well soeuer hee went to sleepe, if he chance to dreame of vncleanness, whereupon doth ensue any euill motion in his flesh. Where he hath turned conformitie to Gods law, into conformity to reason: and maketh M. Perkins to talke of conformity in the body, who mentioneth nothing of the body, onely that he may make way thereby to a dreaming answere of an vncleane dreame. Which dreames notwithstanding are a very strong argument, of a pollution and vncleanness of nature yet habitually remaining, and a very proper effect thereof, which it is Gods mercy not to impute vnto vs, for ⁱif the most high should impuse the same, saith

i August. cont.
 Fulian. lib. 4. ca.
 2. Cum sopitos deludunt omnia sensus n: scio quomodo etiam caste anime in turpes labuntur assensus: que si imputaret Altissimus, quis videret castus?

saith S. Austine, who should live chaste? M. Bishop maketh nothing hereof, but S. Austine saith, that such dreams are breach of chastity, and therein sinne if God should impute the same. And therefore hee saith, that when ^k concupiscence thus in sleepe stealeth a consent, when chaste soules hereby fall into consent of filthinesse, they mourne & grieue thereat when they are awake. He teacheth his hearers ^l not to to think much to aske God mercy for it, when concupiscence so snareth them to do that to them when they are asleepe, which it cannot doe when they are awake. And this he himselfe becometh to God concerning himselfe, ^m not only the delights, but also the consent and act that he admitteth in his sleep, calling those lasciuious motions a sicknesse of the soule, & saying that the soule therein committeth a filthinesse of corruption, and lamenting that in this kinde of euill he continued vnperfect still. Wherby it appeareth, that whatsoeuer M. Bishop deeme of these dreaming fancies & consents, yet that they are indeed a sinfull corruption and vncleannesse of the soule, such as God abhorreth, albeit to the faithfull he imputeth them not. And this haply God would haue to be considered in that, that by the law he was vncleane, from whom by such fancies ⁿ the seed of generation had issued by night, the outward vncleannesse seruing to aduertise of that that is within. And to the clearing of his whole point, that sin may be where the will consenteth not, we may very probably make application of sundry other pollutions that are noted in the law of Moses, arising of those things which were either natural or casuall, without any procurement thereof by the will. Which Gregory plainly approueth, when speaking of the womans monethly^o diseate, for which by the law shee was vncleane, he saith thereof, that ^o it is no sin, because it commeth naturally, but yet because nature it selfe is so corrupted, as that without any furtherance of the will it is seene to be polluted, of sinne came that infirmity, wherein the nature of man may take knowledge, in what case it is become by the iudgement of God, whilst man that sinned by his will, doth now beare the guilt of sin by that that he is against his will, euen by ^p the delight (of concupiscence) which he beareth in him against his will, as hee expresseth it afterward. Let M. Bishop therefore learne, that there is a pollution and vncleannesse which is not voluntary to him that is thereby vncleane, but lieth as a punishment vpon the nature k Ibid. Sequendo ab eis uis uel in somnis iuratur a conscientiam, cum euigilauerint genere committit et inter genitum dicere.

Quomodo impleta est anima mea illi nisi nibus?
l De Temp. ser. 45. Aliquando ista concupiscencia sic insidiatur sensibus ut faciat dormientibus quod non potest uigilantibus: pudet hic innoxari, sed ne pigeat in deum precari in Confess. ib. 10. cap. 10. In somnis occurrant mihi rationum imaginem non solum ut sine ad delectationem, sed etiam ut utique ad conscientiam factumque sinallamur &c.

Potens est manus tua sanare omnes languores anime mee, &c. Perpetrat istas corruptelarium turpitudines, &c. Lugens in eo quod incontinentia sui &c. n Leuit. 15. 16. o Gregor. apud Bedam hist. eccles. gent. Arg. l. b. 1. cap. 27. Resp. 10. Mensurus conscientibus mulieribus non aliqua culpa est uide licet quia non uultus accidit, sed tamen.

quasi natura ipse ita uisitata est, ut etiam sine uoluntate

r. etis in lio uideatur esse polluta, ex culpa uenit vitium in quo seipsa qualis per iudicium facta sit humani uisita cognoscit, ut homo qui cum pami sponte perpetrans reatum culpa porce immittit. p. l. b. Resp. 1. in fine Capitulo ex delectatione quam portas immittit.

of man for that sinne, that voluntarily was committed in the beginning by man. Which serueth him for answer to those two places of Austin which he alledgeth, two as he citeth them, but indeed but one, and that in the booke and chapter which hee quoteth last; for in the other place Austine hath no such words. He saith indeed, that ^q sinne is so voluntary an euill, as that in no wise it is sin if it be not voluntary, and this is so manifest, as that neither the smal number of the learned, nor the multitude of the vnllearned do dissent therefrom. But as he saith so, so he himselfe telleth vs in what meaning hee saith it, which M. Bishops learning should not haue bene ignorant of. ^r It must be vnderstood of that sinne, saith he, which is onely sinne, not which is also the punishment of sin; that is to say, of Actuall, not of Originall sinne. But it is Originall sinne whereof we here dispute, and therefore by S. Austines owne interpretation, those words make nothing against vs: albeit Originall sinne also was voluntary by the will of the first man, as before was said. Now therefore the vnllearned learned men of whom he speaketh, are learned enough, to see that he wanted not onely learning, but discretion also thus to vrge against vs a laying of Austine against the Manichees, which the same Austine to salue it against the Pelagians, hath expounded in our behalte directly against him.

12. W. BISHOP.

The third reason for the Catholikes is this: Where the forme of any thing is taken away, there the thing it selfe ceaseth: but in baptisme, the forme of Originall sinne is taken away, ergo M. Perkins shifteh in assigning a wrong forme: affirming vs to say, that the forme of Originall sinne is the guiltinesse of it: which we hold to be neither the forme, nor matter of it, but as it were the proper passion following it. See S. Thomas: who delu:reth for the forme of Originall sinne, the priuation of Originall iustice, which iustice made the will subiect to God.

The deordination then of the will, Mistres and commander of all other points in man, made by the priuation of originall iustice, is the forme of Originall sinne: and the deordination of all other parts of man, (which by a common name is called concupiscence, as that learned Doctor noteth,) is but the materiall part of that sinne, so that the will of the regenerate being by grace through Christ rectified, and set again in good order

^q August. de vera relig. cap. 14. supra sect. 2.

^r Retraſt. lib. 1. cap. 13.

1. 2. q. 2. art. 3.

der towards the law of God, the form of Originall sinne, which consisteth in deordination of it, is taken quite away by baptisme, and so consequently the sinne it selfe, which cannot be without his proper forme, as the argument doth conuince.

R. ABBOT.

Of the first proposition of the argument there is no question, because the essentiall forme giueth to euery thing to be that that it is. The question then is, wherein consisteth the forme of sinne; what it is that giueth to it properly the nature & name of sin. M. Bishop saith, that M. Perkins misseeth in assigning a wrong forme: yet he assigneth in their behalfe the same forme that S. Austine doth, and inasmuch as they make S. Austine the ground of their opinion, there is great reason, that they should vnderstand sinne in the same manner as S. Austine doth. But heerein appeareth their singular falshood, and they shew plainly, that they alledge him but only for a color, knowing that if they take sin in the same meaning as he doth, their opinion cannot stand. Why do they bring vs Austin to proue for the, that concupiscence is no sinne; when in one meaning it is that he denieth it, and they deny it in another? S. Austine, as before I haue shewed, placeth the nature of sinne in the effect of it, which is, to make a man guilty. When it doth not so; he vnderstandeth it not to be sinne, opposing sinne not to righteousnesse, as we vnderstand it in this question, but to remission and forgiuenesse of sinnes. He saith, that ^a to be guilty of sinne, is to haue sinne; not to be guilty of sinne, is to haue no sinne. ^b The baptized is without all sinne, but not without all euill, that is, saith he, he is without the guilt of all euill, not without the euill it selfe. And thus much in infinite places he giueth to vnderstand. So farre therefore as sinne implieth guilt, he denieth concupiscence in the regenerate, to whom it is forgiuen, to bee any longer sinne because they are not thereby holden guilty, and in this we gainsay him not, because it is but as if he should say, that though in it selfe it be sinne, yet to the faithfull it is as it were no sinne, because it is not imputed for sinne, whereto willingly wee accord. But the question is, whether in it owne nature it bee not such, as that it should make guiltie, saue onely that it is pardoned, and that

^a August. de nupt et concup. lib. 1.
cap 26. supra.
sect. 9.
^b Cont. Iulian. li.
6. ca. 5. supra.
sect. 9.

did S. Austine neuer deny, as before hath beene prooued: he confesseth it to be ^c such an euill, as should draw vs vnto euerlasting death, onely for being in vs, but that the guilt thereof is remitted. Now this cannot be affirmed of any thing but that that is properly and truly sinne, and therefore it cannot be doubted, but that S. Austine did take concupiscence to be sinne, according to the true and proper vnderstanding of the name of sinne. This true and proper nature of sinne, is before shewed to consist in a defect, obliquity or swauing from the law of God. For the law of God is the true image and description, and perfect rule of righteousness, and euery declining from the rule of righteousness is vnrighthousnesse, and ^d all vnrighthousnesse is sinne; therefore euery declining from the law of God, is sinne. And this is so true, as that ^e Pighius in his time a maine pillar of the church of Rome, doth fully approue it, and maintaineth it with all his might, that it is a true and perfect definition of sinne, which S. Iohn hath set downe, that sinne is the transgression of the law. Now because the law requireth not onely outward actions, but also the inward fixed disposition and quality of righteousness; not onely works of charity, but also the inward habite of charity; whence all such works are to proceed, it followeth, that if there bee a contrary quality or habite, the same is sinne, because it is a declining from the law. Seeing therefore concupiscence not onely in the first acts & motions of it, but euen habitually is ^f defectus à iustitia, a defecting or declining from righteousness, as S. Austine calleth it; seeing it is a very habituall ^g enmity and rebellion against the law of God, all M. Bishops learning cannot auoid it, but that it must necessarily be concluded to be sinne. But yet to giue some shew of auoiding it, he sendeth vs to Thomas Aquinas, to learne of him now in the end of the world another forme and definition of sinne, which is, the deordination of the will; so that howsoeuer other faculties and powers be distorted and corrupted, yet must we thinke there is no sinne so long as there is an integrity and right disposition of the wil. Which position is absurdly false, because the loue of God requireth ^h all the heart, all the mind, all the soule, all the thought and strength. ⁱ It endureth not that any streame should bee drawne from it, by the deriuing whereof it should any way bee diminished. But the will of man is not the whole man, and therefore albeit there bee supposed a rectitude and integrity of the will, yet is not sinne hereby excluded, if there

^c Ibid ut supra.

^d 1. Iohn 5. 17.
^e Pigh. de peccat. origin. cont. 1. Propria veraque peccati rationem Johannes explicat; peccatum est iniquitas, &c. id est, obliquatio à rectitudine que nobis lege prescribitur aut legis transgressio.

^f August. cont. Iulian. lib. 2.

^g Rom. 7. 23. et 3. 7.

^h Deut. 6. 5.

Luc. 10. 27.

ⁱ August. de doctr. Christi. lib. 1 ca. 22.

Niellum a se ritulum duci extra patitur, cuius deriuatione minuat.

tur.

be a defect or failing in any other part. Yet that beeing graunted to M. Bishop, he is no whit the neerer to his purpose hereby. For if the deordination of the will be sinne, then concupiscence is sinne, because concupiscence is the deordination of the will. For it hath bene before declared, that ^k concupiscence is nothing else but the will of man corrupted and serving sinne, and therefore the remainder of concupiscence in the regenerate, is nothing else but a remainder of the corruption of the will, and according to that remainder, a serving of the law of sinne. Whereas then he affirmeth, that in baptism the deordination of the will is taken quite away, it appeareth hereby that he is wholly deceiued, because so long as concupiscence remaineth, so long still there remaineth in part a deordination of the will. And indeed that rectifying of the will which he affirmeth, is but an Idea, a meere fantastickall speculation, contrary to the common sight and experience of all men. The defendour thereof sheweth a will naughtily resolu'd against conscience and truth. All men find, all men see and feele in themselves and others a great distortion; a crookednes, a crookednes and vntowardlinesse of will. And if there be that cure and healing of the will of which he speaketh, what hindereth that there is not perfect righteousness? For ^l there should be perfect righteousness, saith S. Austine, if there were so great will as sufficeth for so great a matter. And that the will is lesse hereto then it ought to be, ^m ex vitio est, it is by reason of ⁿ a corruption, an imperfection whereby there is somewhat wanting to the perfection of it. And if there be still a corruption, and a want of perfection in the will, then the will is not yet fully rectified; and because the will is not yet fully rectified, sinne remaineth still, for sinne saith M. Bishop, is the deordination of the will. But it is further to be obserued, that to the perfect rectifying of the will, belong cleare light of vnderstanding, and perfect delight of loue. For ^o therefore haue men no will to that that is iust, either because they know it not to be iust, or because they delight not in it. For so much the more earnestly do we will any thing, by how much the more certainly we know how good it is, and more earnestly are delighted therein. Therefore ignorance and infirmities (the one in the vnderstanding, and the other in the will it selfe, being the two penalties of enery soule of man) are defaults or corruptions hindring the will both in the doing of that that is good, and eschewing of that that is euill. So long then as these defaults of ignorance and infirmity

^k Retraht. lib. 1. cap. 15. Ipsa cupiditas nihil est aliud quam voluntas vitiosa peccatoque seruient.
^l De spur. et. lit. cap. 3. Fieret (per secula iustitia) si tanta adhiberetur voluntas quantum sufficit dare rei.
^m Epist. 29.

ⁿ De lib. arbit. lib. 3 ca. 14. Vitij nomen maxime solent esse corruptio.
^o Quod perfectioni nature, deesse perspexerit, illocas vitium.
^p De peccat. meritis. emiss. lib. 2. cap. 17. Nolunt homines facere quod iustum est siue quia latet aut infirmis: siue quia non delectat.
Tanto enim quodque volentibus volumus quantum certis quam bonum sit volumus, eoque delectamur ardentius. Ignorantia igitur & infirmitas vitia sunt que impediunt voluntatem ne moueat. ut ad faciendum opus bonum vel ab opere malo abstinendam.
^q De nat. et grat. cap. 67. Parat. is omni anime. ignorantia & infirmitas.

do remaine so long there cannot be a perfect rectifying of the will. But ignorance and infirmity are not taken away in baptisme. Therefore baptisme doth not wholly take away the deordination of the will. Of the former of these, it is manifest which S. Ambrose saith, All the Saints are in a shadow so long as they are in the body: they do not see perfectly, but know in part onely. He learned it of the Apostle saying We know in part, we prophecy in part; we see through a glasse darkely. And if it might be so said of the Apostles, how much more is it to be vnderstood of the common condition and state of men? We cannot but acknowledge much blindness, much error, much imperfection of knowledge, and therefore resolve that the vnderstanding cannot giue due information to the will. And so long as we are thus weak in knowledge, all other things must needs be vnperfect in vs, because we cannot loue beyond that we know, nor delight beyond our loue. Therefore our loue is vnperfect, our desire is vnperfect, our delight is vnperfect, and yet not onely because our knowledge is vnperfect, but also because we haue yet receiued not the perfection, but the first fruits onely of the spirit, by whom all these things are effected in vs. For this cause S. Augustine euery where acknowledgeth, that this default of infirmity continueth still in the regenerate, and that there is not perfect newnesse in the mind and inner man, as we haue seene before; by reason whereof the will is distracted and diuided in it selfe, and by one motion of it selfe fighteth against another, whilest we will one way, because we be in Christ, & will another way, because as yet we are in this world. Now sith there is not by baptisme perfection of knowledge to direct the will, and the will it selfe by corruption yet remaining is infirme and weak to the loue and delight of the law of God, it cannot be but absurdly said which M. Bishop saith, that the will in baptisme is fully rectified and set in order againe towards the law of God. Or if the meaning be, that it is rectified and set in order, but yet not fully and perfectly, then he saith as we say, that the deordination of the will continueth yet still in part, and because sinne consisteth in the deordination of the will, therefore sinne by baptisme is not altogether and wholly done away. Thus we see him very hardly bested, that making choise himselfe, yet he cannot find one corner where he can in safety throwd himselfe.

*g Ambrosius Psal. 118. ser. 3.
Omnes sancti in umbra sunt quandiu sunt in corpore non per-fecte vident sed
ex parte cognos-
cunt.
1. Cor. 13. 9.*

f Rom. 8. 23.

*r Augustin. in Ioh: tract. 81. supra
lect. 1.*

13. W. BISHOP.

4. Obiect. Lastly saith M. Perkins for our disgrace, they alledge that we in our Doctrine teach, that Originall sinne after baptisme, is only clipped or pared like the haire of a manshead, whose roots remaine in the flesh, growing and increasing after they bee cut as before. His answer is, that they teach in the very first instant of the conuersion of a sinner, sinne to receiue his deadly wound in the root, neuer after to be recovered. Conferre this last answer with his former doctrine (good Reader) and thou maiest learne what credit is to be giuen to such Masters, no more constant then the wind. Heere sinne is deadly wounded in the root, there it remaineth still with all the guiltinesse of it, although not imputed, there it still maketh the man to sinne, intangleth him in the punishment of sinne and maketh him miserable: All this he comprehended before in this first reason, and yet blusheth not here to conclude, that he holdeth it at the first: Neither clipped nor pared, but pulled vp by the roots: Indeed they doe him a fauour, who say that he holdeth sinne to be clipped, and as it were razed, for albeit haire razed grow out againe, yet is there none for a season: but this Originall sinne of his is alwaies in his regenerate, in vigour to corrupt all his works, and to make them deadly finnes. But let this suffice for this matter.

R. ABBOT.

This obiection they haue borrowed of the Pelagian heretikes, who altogether denying Originall sinne, and acknowledging onlie sins actuall by voluntary imitation and custome, defended that those being pardoned and forgiuen in baptisme, a man was made fully and perfectly without sinne. When therefore the Catholike Bishoppes and Pastours of the Church, did teach that after baptisme there was concupiscence still remaining, whence did grow euill motions and lusts, tempting and entiting to sinne and wickednesse, they heereupon fell to cauilling in this sort, that sinnes a August. cont. duas epist. Pelag. lib. 1. cap. 13. supra sect. 9. ben were not wholly remited, and that Baptisme did not take away finnes, but onely rare them and shauie them so, as that the rootes did Fill stroke, whence other finnes should grow againe in like sort to bee cut off. Now, this Saint Anstine denieth, and teacheth that

R.

baptisme

b Dicimus baptis-
ma dare omnium
indulgentiam pec-
catorum & auferre crimina non radere, ut omnium
peccatorum radices
in mala carne te-
neantur.

c Sed de ista carnis concupiscentia sai-
li eos credo vel sa-
lere, cum qua ne-
cesse est ut etiam baptizatus et hoc si diligentissime
proficit et spiritu
dei agitur pia me-te constet.

d Ambros. Apo-
log. David cap. 13.

e Ang. de verb.
Dom. serm. 12^o.

f Idem de verb.
Apost. ser. 6. Hoc peccati nomine ap-
pellas unde oritur
cuncta peccata
id est, ex carnis concupiscentia.

baptisme giuech to the regenerate ^b remission and release of all sins, and doth not pare off fautes (crimina, fautes of behaviour & conuersation) but doth wholly take them away, because of actuall finnes, which onely and no other they acknowledged, there remaineth nothing when the same are forgiuen and pardoned. But as touching concupiscentia, saith hee, I hold that they are deceued and do deceiue others, with which the regenerate hath still to fight, albeit he haue well profited, and be guided by the spirit of God. Yet this he saith, is no sinne to him, that is, it is not imputed for sinne, because the guilt thereof drawn by generation, is remitted and forgiuen by regeneration. Now this concupiscentia, as S. Ambrose saith, is ^d mala radix, an euill roote; ^e radix omnium malorum, the roote of all euils, saith Austine, euen as charity is the roote of all goodnesse: ^f from which roote of concupiscentia he saith againe, that all finnes do spring and grow. Thus S. Austine confesseth, that albeit there be remission of finnes in baptisme, and nothing remaining of any actuall finnes, yet the roote of Originall sinne continueth still, which being the same that it was before, must needs be sinne as it was before, albeit in respect that the guilt thereof is released, hee forbeareth to call it by the name of sinne. But of this roote M. Perkins further saith and that rightly, that though it bee in substance the same that it was before; yet in extent and power and strength, it is not the same. It holdeth not the whole man captiue as before; the yoke thereof is broken: the kingdome of it is dissolved; it is as an enemy conquered and disarmed, not hauing the ^g members at commandement, to be the weapons of vnrightheousnesse vnto sinne, as before it had. In the first instant of the conuersion of a sinner, saith he, sinne receiveth his deadly wound in the roote, neuer afterward to be recovered. Now here M. Bishop though he know not well what to say, yet to shew both his wit and his honesty, would not forbear to say somewhat. He wisheth the Reader to conferre this last answer of M. Perkins with his former doctrine, bearing him in hand, that he shall find him no more constant then the wind. And why so? Forsooth he saith here, that sinne is deadly wounded in the roote, & hath said before, that sinne remaineth still with all the guiltinesse of it, though not imputed. But what contradiction is there betwixt these two, that sinne is deadly wounded, and yet remaineth still? What hindereth, but that that which is deadly wounded, may truly be said to remaine still? S. Austine so speaketh: ^h It is dead as touching the guilt where-

g Rom. 6. 13.

h August. cont.
Iu' an. lib. 2. sup. 14.
sect. 9.

where.

wherewith it held vs, and vntill it be healed by perfect burial, it still rebelleth being dead. Yea but M. Perkins saith, it remaineth still with all the guiltinesse of it, although not imputed. But I answer him, that he abuseth M. Perkins, who for this matter stopped this wranglers mouth in the answer last before, and he dissembleth it as though he saw it not. The guilt of sin he saith remaineth potentially, not actually, that is, it remaineth such as that in it owne nature it is sufficient to make a man guilty, but yet it doth not so, because the guilt thereof is remitted and pardoned, which S. Austine manifestly proueth, as I haue said before. He doth not say then, that it remaineth with all the guiltinesse of it, though not imputed, because it cannot bee said to remaine with all the guiltinesse of it, but it must also be said to be imputed. Therefore in this whole disputation he confesseth with S. Austine as touching actual guilt, that Originall sinne is wholly and fully dead to the regenerate, but yet remaineth still to rebel though it be dead. And yet as touching rebellion, it hath also receiued a deadly wound, because it hath not now the same power to rebell, as it had before to raigne, and if sometimes it do gather power againe, yet doth it neuer totally or finally recouer the kingdome that it had, or preuaile vtterly to separate the faithfull from the loue of Christ, as naturally it doth, but by the first stroke and wound that it receiued by the grace of Christ, becommeth in the end euery way and altogether dead, and is vtterly abolished, neuer to be againe. He further alleageth, that M. Perkins first saith, that concupiscence maketh a man to sinne, intangleth him in the punishment of sin, and maketh him miserable; and yet here blusseth not to conclude, that hee holdeth it at the first neither clipped nor pared, but pulled vp by the rootes. But where doth he find this conclusion in M. Perkins words? Surely the paper whereon hee wrote this, would haue blushed if it had had a forehead, for very shame, to cary the report of so manifest a lie. But let the paper doe what it will, M. Bishop blusseth not; for if he had been a man of a blushing face, he had wanted the name of being the writer of this booke. What, M. Bishop, is it all one to bee deadly wounded in the root, and to bee pulled vp by the roots? M. Perkins saith not any where that concupiscence or sinne is pulled vp by the roots, but as a man hauing receiued a deadly wound, yet liueth afterwards for the time, and stirreth and moueth, euen so concupiscence though it receiue a deadly wound, wheteof in the end it dieth, yet liueth, and strugleth, and rebelleth for the time, stirring vp many noisome and euill motions and lusts, from the consent whereof no man can say that he is altogether free, and therein maketh a man to sinne, and intangleth him in the punishment of sinne, and maketh him miserable, in such sort as before hath beene declared. I may heere turne M. Bishops words vpon himselfe, Learn here, gentle Reader, what credit is to be giuen to such Masters as he is. To such Masters did I say? nay to such remorselesse beasts, who make no scruple or conscience to lie, to falsifie, to depraue those things against which otherwise they can haue nothing to except. As for that which he glanceth at in the end, that concupiscence defileth all the workes of the regenerate, so that though they be in themselues good workes, yet they are stained with that, which though it be not imputed, yet is in it selfe mortall and deadly sinne, it hath beene in part already declared and prooued in theⁱ answer to his Epistle Dedicatory, and shall be more fully handled in his due place in the question of iustification, where he professedly disputeth of that matter.

i Sect. 19.

CHAPTER 3.
OF THE CERTAINTIE OF SALVATION.

I. W. BISHOP.

M. PERKINS FIRST CONCLVSION.

WEE hold and beleue, that a man in this life, may be certain of saluation: and the same doth the Church of Rome teach. Pag. 37.

M. P. 2. Conclu. We hold, that a man is to put certaine affiance in Gods mercy in Christ for the saluation of his soule: and the same holdeth the aforesaid Romane Church.

M. P. 3. Conclu. We hold, that with assurance of saluation in our hearts is ioyned doubting, and there is no man so assured of his saluation, but he at sometime doubteth thereof, especially in the time of temptation: & in this the Papists agree with vs. Not so Sir.

M. P. 4. Conclu. They go further and say, that a man may be certaine of the Saluation of men, and of the Church, by Catholike faith: and so say we.

M. P. 5. Conclu. They hold, that a man by faith may be assured of his owne saluation, through extraordinary reuelation; In this sence onely the first conclusion is true.

M. P. 6. Conclu. The sixt, and second bee all one: that we may be assured of our Saluation, in regard of God that promiseth it: though in regard of our selues, & our own indisposition we cannot.

THE DISSENT.

1. WEE hold, that a man may be certaine of his saluation in his owne conscience even in this life, and that by an ordinary and speciall faith. They hold, that a man is Certaine of his Saluation, only by hope, both hold a certainty, wee by faith, they by hope.

2. We say our certainty is infallible: they, that it is onely probable.

3 Our confidence in Gods mercy in Christ, commeth frō certaine and ordinary faith, theirs from hope: False. Thus much of the difference, now let vs come to thereasons, to and fro.

R. ABBOT.

In this first diuision M. Bishop giueth vs only some brieue notes which need not to be stood vpon. In the third conclusion hee denieth their agreement with vs, but if he vnderstand it as M. Perkins doth of ordinary assurance, he had no cause to deny it. For seeing in the first conclusion of dissent, he graunteth Certainty or assurance by hope, and requireth therewith doubting, yea affirmeth still that it cannot be without doubting, what reason had he to denie the conclusion, beeing indifferently propounded of assurance afterwards more particularly to be distinguished, but that hee well knew not what he was to say? But in that conclusion, he should haue taken knowledge what manner of Certainty or assurance of Salvation it is that we teach, not such as whereby a man is meereley secure, and made absolutely out of doubt, but such as many times is assaulted and shaken with many difficulties, and feares, and doubts, which oft do intricate and perplexe the soule of the righteous and faithful man. Which notwithstanding arise not of the nature and condition of faith, as if it ought so to be, but of the frailty and corruption of our euill nature, by reason whereof faith is not such as it ought to be. For the true and proper worke of faith, is to giue to the beleeuer a stedfast and vnmouceable assurance of the loue of God, that he may fully enjoy the comfort thereof without interruption or let; and whatsoeuer is aduerse and contrary to this assurance and comfort, is to be accounted the enemy of faith. Therefore it is not the office of faith to cherish and maintaine such feares and doubts, but to resist them, to fight against them, and so much as is possible to expell them and driue them out. But yet by reason of the strength of our naturall corruption and the weakenesse of our faith, we attaine not to this, and how much the weaker our faith is, so much are we the further from it. So that the case standeth betwixt faith and doubting, as it doth betwixt righteousness and sinne. For there is true righteousness in the faithfull, and sometimes it mightily preuaileth, and the conscience euen gratulateth lateth it selfe, and reioiceth in the vse and practise thereof. But anon it beginneth to find defect, the temptations of sinne iustle it aside, the man stumbleth & falleth, and the light whereby he shined before as a starre in the firmament, becommeth eclipsed and darkned, and he seemeth to himselfe not to be the man that he was before. Neither doth this seldome fall out, but euen daily is there a vicissitude and change by turnes, euery day bringing his griefes of infirmity and weaknesse, and sometimes giuing occasion of great lamentation and mourning, by great and grieuous trespassse against God and men. But God that ^a commandeth the light to shine out of darknesse, and can of a poyson make a preseruatiue, turneth these infirmities to their good, making them by experience of sinne, to loue righteousness the more, and to become more wise and wary against temptation, and in rising to take the better heede not to fal againe. Euen in like sort the case standeth with the assurance of faith, wherein is a comfortable testimony of the loue of God towards vs which we receiue as ^b Elias did his meate from the hands of the Angell, securing our selues to goe in the strength thereof vnto the mount of God, and that ^c thereby we shall be kept through the power of God vnto that salvation, which is prepared to be shewed in the last time. But yet in the course thereof there is much variety and change by reason that wee apprehend not this assurance directly and immediatly as a principle, but by consequence and collection as a conclusion, so that being subiect to alteration in the apprehending of the premisses, there must necessarily be an alteration in the apprehending of the conclusion. Our cies are not alwaies alike intent to the word of God; wee doe not alwaies alike conceiue the promises of God, nay temptation sometimes hideth them out of our sight. The effects of grace doe not alwaies appeare the same, yea sometimes they seeme to be quite ouerwhelmed with contrarie effects. Morcouer in nature it selfe is a voluntary shrinking and relinquishing of the comfort of faith, through the seedes of vnbeliefe that originally are sowne in vs, so that the ground of our owne hearts is euery while casting vp objections and questions, as mire and dirt, to trouble ^d the spring of the waters of life, that they runne not so pure and cleare as otherwise they should doe. By all which occasions it commeth to passe, that the daies of faith are as the daies of the yeere, some faire, some foule; one while a sunne-

^a 2. Cor. 4. 7.^b 1. King. 19. 7. 3.^c 1. Pet. 1. 5.^d Iob. 7. 38.

shine sommer, another while a long and tedious winter, sometimes no more but a storme and away; one while cast down as it were to hell, another while seeming to bee as it were in the courts of heauen, where is assured standing and no falling; sometimes labouring and strugling, some other times triumphantly reioycing; but in all perplexities and distractions conceiuing still what it hath felt, and striving to attaine to the same againe. And as a child affrighted runneth to the father, looking for defence and helpe of him, euen so in the middest of all feares and temptations, faith is still running vnto God, stil importuning of him, calling vpō him, expostulating with him, casting it selfe still vpon him, depēding vpon his aid, and expecting of him that things become otherwise then presentlie they are, and seldome going so far, but that it seeth a glimse at least of light in darkenesse, of hope in despaire, of comfort in distresse, of life in death, of heauen in hell, or if it lose the sight thereof, yet recouereth it soone againe. Of all which wee see pregnant example in the distresses and temptations of the Saints, which for our instruction and comfort, are recommended vnto vs in the word of God. And this God doth, to the intent that being in some sort for the time put off from him, wee may take the faster hold when we returne againe; that the tast of his loue may be the sweeter, and our ioy thereof the greater, when out of these floods of temptations we arriue vnto it; that affliction may bring foorth patience, and patience experience, and experience hope neuer to bee ashamed, whilest by this meanes the loue of God as touching the assurance therof towards vs, is more and more fixed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost which is giuen vnto vs. This haue I set downe the more largely, good Christian Reader, for thy sake, that thou maiest vnderstand hereby what manner of certaintie and assurance it is that we defend; that thou maiest know that it is the property of true faith to giue this assurance, and that our assurance is the greater, by how much our faith is greater, and the weaknesse of our assurance the weakenesse of our faith; that so thou maiest see what it is whereunto thou art to strue, reioicing in that that thou hast attained vnto already, and for that that is behind praying as the Apostles did, Lord increase our faith; not being discōforted at the feeling of thine imperfection, because it is the cōmon frailty of Gods children, and faith that it may be strong, must haue time and occasion to grow, and

e Rom. 5. 3.

f Luc. 6. 75.

and haply seemeth weake to thee when it is strong to God; but alwaies resoluing, that those sparkels of true light which God hath kindled in thee shall neuer be quenched, and thy little graine of faith, euen ^b little as a graine of mustard seed, shall yet be strong enough to cast all mountaines into the sea that shall rise vp to diuide betwixt God and thee. As for M. Bishop, it is no maruell if being an enemy of faith, he be vnacquainted with the secret of faith, the ioy of the faithfull being ^h as a garden inclosed, and a spring and fountaine shut & sealed up to be private to themselves; ⁱ a gracious raine, which God hath put apart for the refreshing of his owne inheritance. What maruell is it if hee know not that ^k newname which no man knoweth but he that receiveth it, because the ^l world knoweth not nor receiveth that COMFORTER the spirit of truth, by which it is written, yet grudgeth at the sheepe of Christ, that they should feed in pastures which they know not, or should bee said to know that which they cannot conceiue or vnderstand. And this is the cause that he talketh so rudely and absurdly of the hope of saluation in all this discourse, ouerthrowing the whole doctrine of the Gospell, crossing the whole vse of faith and of the word of God, and speaking no otherwise of this question then a Philosopher, or Jew, or Pharisee would do, as heereafter we shall see. In the meane time to go forward with his briefe notes, he telleth vs in the fift conclusion of consent, that only in the sence there exprest, the first conclusion is true, that is, that onely by extraordinary reuelation a man may be certaine of his saluation, which being the maine point of the controuersie, I referre to the proesse of this discourse. At the sixt conclusion he noteth, that the sixt and second are all one, but the tautology was in his head, not in M. Perkins writing. For the second conclusion serueth to note the efficient and materiall causes of saluation, whereupon our assurance resteth, which is the mercy of God in Christ; but the sixt serueth to note the manner of our apprehending thereof. To the third conclusion of dissent, he noteth that it is false, namely that our confidence in Christ commeth from certaine and ordinary faith. But we say that it is true, and now he ad must ioine vpon that issue.

g Mat. 17. 20
Mar. 11. 13.

h Cant. 4. 13.
Bernard. Epist.
107. Est fons signatus cui alienus non communicat;
solius tunc qui in mentibus Deum tation oritur, &c.
i Psal. 68. 9.
k Reuel. 2. 17.
l Iohn 14. 17.

2. W. BISHOP.

Here M. Perkins contrary to his custome giueth the first place to our reasons, which he calleth objections, and endeauoureth to supplant them: and afterwards planteth his owne. About the order I will not contend, seeing he acknowledgeth in the beginning that he obserueth none, but set downe things as they came into his head. Otherwise hee would haue handled Iustification before Saluation. But following his method, let vs come to the matter.

The first Argument for the Catholike party is this.

I. Obiect. Where is no word of God, there is no faith, for these two are Relatiues. But there is no word of God: saying, Cornelius beleeue thou, Peter beleeue thou that thou shalt be saued: therefore there is no such ordinary faith, for a man to beleeue his owne particular saluation.

M. Perkins answer.

Although there bee no word of God to assure vs of our particular saluation: yet is there an other thing as good, which counteruailles the word of God, to wit, the Minister of God applying the generall promises of saluation vnto this and that man. Which when hee doth, the man must beleeue the Minister, as hee would beleeue Christ himselfe, and so assure himselfe by faith of his saluation.

Reply. Good Sir seeing euery man is a liar, and may both deceiue, and be deceiued, and the Minister telling may erre, how doth either the Minister know, that the man to whom he speaketh is of the number of the elect; or the man be certaine that the Minister mistaketh not, when hee assur eth him of his Saluation? To affirme as you do, that the minister is to be beleeued as well as if it were Christ himselfe, is plaine blasphemy: equalling a blind and lying creature vnto the wisdom and truth of God. If you could shew out of Gods word, that euery minister hath such a commission from Christ, then had you answered the argument directly, which required but one warrant of Gods word: but to say that the assurance of an ordinary ministers word counteruailles Gods word, I cannot see what it wanteth of making a pelting minister Gods mate. On the other side, to auerre that the minister knowes who is predestinate (as it must be granted, he doth if you will not haue him to lie when hee saith to Peter, thou art one of the elect,) is to make him of Gods priuy Councell, cell, without any warrant for it in Gods word: Yea S. Paul not obscurely signifying the contrarie in these words, The sure foundation of God standeth, hauing this seale: our Lord knoweth who bee his, and none else, except he reueale it vnto the. 2. Tim. 2. 19. M. Perkins then flieth from the assurance of the Minister, and leaues him to speake at randon, as the blind man casts his club; & attributeth all his assurance vnto the partie himselfe, who hearing in Gods word, Seeke ye my face, in his heart answereth: Lord I wil seek thy face: And then hearing God say, Thou art my people, saith again: The Lord is my God. And then lo without al doubt he hath assurance of his Saluatiō. Would ye not think that this were rather some seely old womans dreame, then a discourse of a learned Man? How know you honest man, that those words of God spoken by the Prophet 2000. yeares past to the people of Israell, are directed to you? Mine owne heart, good Syr, tels mee so. How dare you build, upon the persuasion of your own hart any such assurance? When Jerem. 17. as in holy writ it is recorded: Wicked is the heart of man, and who shall know it? Are you ignorant, how Saül before he was Saint Paul, being an Israelite, to whom those words appertained, perswading himselfe to be very assured of his faith, was notwithstanding foully deceiued, and why may not you farre more unskilfull then he, bee in like manner abused? Moreouer suppose that this motion cometh of the holy Ghost, and that he truely saith, The Lord is God, how long knoweth hee that he shall be able to say so truely? When our Sauionr Christ Iesus assureth vs that many be called, but few of them are chosen to life euerlasting; how knoweth he then assuredly, that he being once called, is of the predestinate? M. Perkins saith, that hee who beleueth, knoweth that he beleueth: Be it so; if he beleue aright, and medle no further then with those things, which bee comprehended within the bounds of faith: But that the Certainty of Salvation is to be believed, is not to be begged but proued, being the maine question: he saith further, that he who truely repenteth, knoweth that hee repenteth: hee knoweth indeed by many probable coniectures, but not by certaintie of faith: as witnesseth that holy person: If God come to me, (as hee doth to all re- Iob. 9. pentant sinners, I shall not see him, and if he depart away from me, I shall not vnderstand it: Which is sufficient to make him thankfull, yea if he receiued no grace at all, yet were he much beholding vnto God, who offered him his grace, and would haue freely bestowed it vpon him, if it had not beene through his owne default. And thus our first Argument stands in his full strength and vertue, that no man can assure himselfe by faith of his Salvation, because there is no word of God that warranteth him so to do.

R. ABBOT.

He was beholding to M. Perkins, that their reasons being no better then they be, he did vouchsafe here to giue them the first place. By the first of these reasons, they labour to defeate vs of all profitable vse of the word of God, denying vs libertie to beleue anything particularly of our selues, because the word of God doth no where speake namely and particularly to any of vs. M. Perkins rightly answereth, that God hath appointed the ministerie and preaching of his word, for the particular application thereof, whilest thereby it is layed to the hart and conscience of euery particular man, so as that by the word of Christ deliuered out of the Gospell by the minister, Christ himselfe in effect saith, Cornelius beleue thou, and thou shalt be saued, Peter beleue thou, and thou shalt be saued. M. Bishop somewhat deformeth the answer by his butcherly and slouinly handling of it, as his manner is, but thogh in more words, it is to the same meaning that I haue mentioned. Now M. Perkins intended not in that answer, that the minister speaketh to euery man particularly one by one, but that speaking to the assembly, he laboureth to make euery man conceiue of that that is spoken as particularly spoken to himselfe. For the word of God being as a Proclamation in writing common to all, the minister is as the voyce of the crier, to giue notice to that congregation, that the matter of the Proclamation concerneth them and euery of them, saying in effect. ^a To you is the word of this Salvation sent. ^b Vnto you hath God raised up his sonne Iesus, and hath sent him to blesse you, in turning euery one of you from your iniquities. ^c Now then wee are Ambassadors for Christ; as though God did beseech you through vs, we pray you in Christs steed that ye be reconciled to God. ^d Amend your liues euery one of you, &c. Therefore as euery man conceiueth the proclamation, according to the matter of it, no lesse to concerne him, then as if it had bene spoken in paticular to him alone, so doth the minister leaue euerie man alike interested in the message of Salvation; what he saith to all men, he saith to euerie him.

^a Act. 13. 26.

^b Cap. 3. 26.

^c 2. Cor. 5. 20.

^d 1. Act. 2. 28.

man; what to penitents, to euery penitent ; what to beleeuers, to euery beleeuer ; what to sinners, to euery sinner. Therefore sometimes he speaketh in the singular number as to one, that it may be knowne that he speaketh to any or euery one. ^e Awake thou that sleepest, and stand up from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee light. ^e Eph. 5. 14.

^f If thou shalt confesse with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, and beleeue in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be safe, ^f Rom. 10. 9.

euery thou, or thou, or thou, or whosoever it be amongst you. Thus God gaue his Law to all Israel, speaking to all, as if he had spoken namely and particularly to euery one, ^g Thou shalt haue none other gods: Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any graven image: Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord in vaine, &c. ^g Exod. 20. 3.

euery man was therein to conceiue that hee himselfe was spoken to. Thus the message both of life and death, both of Saluation and damnation is deliuered, that thereby euery man particularly may take knowledge of his owne estate. Therefore a man duely hearing the word of God, and receiuing it not as the word of the minister, ^h not as the word of man, but as it is indeed the word of God, ^h 1. The 2. 3.

and accordingly beleuing it as from God, from that which he beleeueth generally, frameth a conclusion to be beleeued priuately as touching himselfe : The Minister saith, ⁱ Except ye repent, ye shall perish. ⁱ Luc. 13. 3.

This he beleeueth, and therefore beleeueth as touching himselfe, Except I repent, I shall perish. The Minister saith ^k Repent and beleeue the Gospell, ^k & ^l ye shall be saued. ^l Mar. 1. 15. & 16. 15. 16.

This he beleeueth, and therefore also beleeueth of himselfe, If I repent and beleeue the Gospell I shall be saued. Now the Minister sometimes hath occasion to speake to some one man alone, and then hee himselfe out of the generall deduceth a particular to that one man, as Paul doth to the iayler, ¹ Beleeue thou in the Lord Iesus and thou shalt be saued. ¹ Act. 16. 31.

For by what authority Paul spake this to the iayler, by the same authority doth the Minister in the like case speake the same to any other man. For Christ said nothing namely as touching the iayler, that if hee did beleeue he should be saued, but onely said, ^m whosoever beleeueth shall be saued. ^m Iohn 3. 15.

Thence the Apostle inferreth : Beleeue thou and thou shalt be saued, because whosoever beleeueth shall be saued. Vpon the same warrant therefore the Minister saith to any man vpon the like occasion, Beleeue thou and thou shalt be saued. This, whether spoken publikely or priuately the conscience of the hearer apprehendeth, this

this hee beleueth, and therein beleueth not the minister, but the word of Christ, and because hee beleueth in Iesus Christ, and by the word of Christ beleueth that whosoever beleueth in him shall be saued, therefore hee beleueth concerning himselfe that he shall be saued. Thus much is implied though not expressed in M. Perkins answer. Now let vs heare what M. Bishop saith to the contrarie, and there wee shall heare not one wise word.

Good Sir, saith hee, seeing euerie man is a lier (as M. Bishop namely for example) and may both deceiue and bee deceiued, and the minister telling may erre, how doth hee know that the man to whom hee speaketh is of the number of the elect? I answer him: Good Sir, M. Perkins no where telleth you that the minister taketh vpon him to knowe that the man to whom hee speaketh is of the number of the elect, but doth onely assure him, that if hee beleue in Christ hee shall be saued; and therein the minister knoweth, and the man to whom he speaketh knoweth that he mistaketh not, when vnder this condition he assureth him of saluation, because he assureth him not vpon any deceiueable word or warrant of his owne, but vpon the vndeceiueable word and warrant of Christ, that whosoever beleueth in him shall not be confounded. He goeth on: To affirme as you doe, that the Minister is to bee beleued as well as if it were Christ himselfe, is plaine blasphemy. I answer him againe, To talke as you doe, you knowe not what, is the part of a bragging Sophister, not of a learned diuine. For M. Perkins doth not affirme that the minister is to bee beleued as well as Christ himselfe, but that the word of the Gospell preached by the minister, is to bee beleued as if Christ himselfe did here personally speake, because it is the word of Christ himselfe, who when hee saith, whosoever beleueth shall be saued, doth therein say, Cornelius, beleue and thou shalt be saued; Peter beleue and thou shalt be saued; or if he meane not so, cannot truly say, whosoever beleueth shall be saued. And for this hee hath the warrant of Gods word, and commission from Christ, because being for Christ a minister of the Gospell, his office is to preach the Gospell, and it is the word of the Gospell, that whosoever beleueth in Christ shall haue euerlasting life. Therefore this is not to say, that the ministers word counteruailes Gods word, or to make euerie pelting minister Gods mate, as the paltry shaueling prateth, but it is to challenge assent and credit to the word of God, to the Gospell

* Rom. 9. 33.

of Christ, vpon which onely and not vpon the minister, the faithfull beleueer doth rely himselfe. But to quit M. Bishop with a question we will ask him, Good Sir, may Iohn a Stile beleuee that you haue authority from Christ to giue him absolution of all his sinnes? You will vndoubtedly tell him, Yes, that he must so in any case. But Iohn a Stile asketh againe, I pray Sir, where doth Christ speake of you or of me? For I do not find in the Gospell that euer Christ made mention of either of vs. M. Bishop will tell him, that Christ said to the Apostles, & to all priests their successors, Whose soeuer o John 20.23. sinnes ye remit, they are remitted, and because hee is a Priest, therefore this authority belongeth to him. So then because Christ hath sayd to all Priests, whose sinnes ye remit they are remitted, though he sayd it to farre other purpose then M. Bishop practiseth it, therefore Iohn a Stile must beleuee that M. Bishop hath authority from Christ to absolue him from all his sinnes. Now will not M. Bishop be so fauourable to vs, as that from a generall we may inferre a particular, as well as he? Surely if when Christ said, Whose sinnes ye remit they are remitted, hee spake in effect of M. Bishop and Iohn a Stile, we see no reason why we should not be permitted the like construction, that when Christ saith, Whosoever beleueeth in me shall not perish but haue euerlasting life, he saith, and by the minister may be reported to say in effect to this man or that man, Beleuee thou in the Lord Iesus and thou shalt haue eternall life. This matter need not so many words, but that we haue to do with impudent wranglers, who being blinded with malice are as farre from commo discretion as they are from truth. Whereupon it is that in the next words hee cauilleth againe, as if M. Perkins had said that the minister knowes who is predestinate, or did say to Peter, for example, Thou art one of the elect, whereas hee hath not a letter or syllable to giue any shew hereof, but onely expresseth a conditionall assurance by the word of the Gospell to this man, or that man, or whomsoeuer, that if he repent and beleuee the Gospell, he shall be saued, the minister not taking vpon him to know that any man truly repenteth or beleueeth, which God onely can know, but leauing the man to apprehend the promise vpon conscience of his owne repentance and faith in Christ. Therefore all this idle talke of M. Bishops is but for want of matter, as his alledging of the words of the Apostle, to proue that whereof there is no question made, that that the Lord onely knoweth who are his, and none else but only as it is reuealed from him. He goeth on and telleth vs, that M. Perkins flieth from the assurance of the minister, and leaues him to speak at random as the blind man casts his club. But M. Perkins flieth from nothing that he had before sayd, but still leaueth the word of Christ onely preached by the minister in Christs name, to be the onely assurance for the faithfull to build vpon. Neither doth the minister speak at random, but certainly and definitely he affirmeth, by the same word to him that repenteth and beleueth, that he shall be saued, though he know not who it is that shall repent or beleue and so be saued; and therefore in that respect, if M. Bishop will needs haue it so, speaks at random euen as the blind man casts his club, not knowing whom he shall strike; as the fisherman casts his net, not knowing what fish he shall catch; no otherwise then the Apostles did, at whose preaching some beleued, other some blasphemed and beleued not, according to that which S. Austin saith, ^p Many heare the word of truth; some of them beleue it, some contradict and speake against it. So therefore the minister as touching the effect of preaching, speaketh vncertainly, not knowing where the seed shall grow, but yet certainly deliuering, that wheresoeuer it shall bring forth the fruit of faith, it shall also bring forth eternal life. Which assurance hee giueth by the word of Christ, and the faith of the hearer thence apprehendeth, and thereof concludeth assurance to himselfe. Thus doth M. Perkins referre the assurance to the ministry of the word, and thus to the party, and no otherwise after then hee had done before. But to distinguish true assurance of the heart from carnall presumption and floating fancies swimming in the head, he noteth it to be accompanied with the spirit of grace and of prayer, or rather to issue therefrom, by which the heart is seasoned and conformed to the voice of God, as that his word doth still rebound from it by ioyfull acceptance and affectionate desire, and prayer, and purpose, and promise of that that is vitered thereby. So that when God saith, ^q Seeke ye my face, the faithfull soule answereth to God, Thy face Lord will I seeke. When God saith, ^r Thou art my people, it soundeth from it backe againe, Thou art the Lord my God. When Christ saith, ^s If thou beleue, all things are possible to him that beleueth, it answereth, Lord I beleue, helpe my unbeleefe. When God requireth to ^t doe his will,

^p August. de pre. doct. sanct. cap. 6.

^q Psal. 27. 8.

^r Zach. 13. 9.

^s Mar. 9. 23.

^t Psal. 40. 7. 8.

it saith to him, Lo I come o my God, I am content to do it, yea thy law is within my heart. This is the fruit and effect of that ^u spirit of adoption, which ^{u Rom. 8. 16.} ^{x 1. Joh. 3. 6.} giueth witnesse to our spirit, that we are the Sonnes of God, and ^z beareth record that God hath giuen vnto vs eternal life. Which we doe not wonder, that to M. Bishop it seemeth rather an old womans dreame, then a discourse of a learned man, because ^y the things of God seem but babling and foolishnesse to prophane and carnall men. And out of that prophaneesse issueth that speech of his that followeth, How know you, honest man, that those words of God spoken by the Prophet 2000. yeares past to the people of Israel are directed to you, &c. Where many an honest and faithful soule is ready to answer him, Good Sir, because ^z whatsoeuer things were written before-time, were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scripture, might haue hope, and because I find that the Scripture it self doth apply to euery of Gods faithfull people, that that was said to Isaiah, ^a I will not faile thee nor forsake thee, and teacheth thereupon euery faithfull soule to say as Dauid did, ^b The Lord is on my side, I will not feare what man can doe vnto me, therefore I ^c hauing obtained mercy to be faithful, doe in like sort take to my selfe whatsoeuer God hath any where spoken for the comfort of his elect, & the rather because I know that God ^d being one Father of all, carieth without respect of persons, the like regard to al his children. Neither is it mine own hart that giueth me this assurãce; for mine owne heart could minister no such comfort vnto me, but being cast downe with the acknowledgement of mine own misery, God gaue me a heart to hearkẽ to the voice of Christ, deliuered by the minister out of the Gospel, ^e Come vnto me all ye that labor & are heauy laden and I will refresh you, and I found in him indeed that refreshing and ioy ^f that no man shall take from me. And though I be a sinner, yet that dismaieeth me not, for ^g Christ came into the world to saue sinners, repentant sinners, of which by the grace of Christ I am one. And though Paul were deceiued when, he builded himselfe vpon himself, yet when he built vpon Christ, as I do, he was not deceiued. And whereas you aske me, Sir, whether I know how long I shall say so, I must tell you that my assured trust & confidence is, that God will neuer forsake the worke which he hath begun, because he hath said, that ^h he that beleueth in Christ, shall neuer be confounded or asbamed, that is ⁱ his hope shall not be deceiued, and Christ hath taught me that ⁱ his sheepe which beare his voice, of which I am one, shall neuer perish, but that he will giue vnto them eternall life. And howsoeuer I know that the wickednesse & corruption of mine owne heart is such, that being left vnto my self, I should soone fall away frõ God, yet I looke vnto that promise

Jer. 32. 40 mise that God hath made to all his faithfull seruants, I will put my feare into their hearts, that they shall not depart from me, resting my selfe not only
Phil. 3. 12. in this, that I haue apprehended Christ, but much more in that that he hath apprehended me; not only in this, that I know God, but much more in this,
Gal. 4. 9. that I am knowne of God. Neither doth it touch mee that you say, that many are called but few are chosen, for many are called which come not indeed though they seeme to come, and thereby shew that they are not chosen, but there is a calling, whereby God so calleth, as that he maketh a man to beleue, of which Christ saith, Every one that heareth & learneth of the Father commeth vnto me, & of which S. Paul saith: Whom he hath predestinate, he hath called, and whom he hath calleth, he hath iustified and glorified. Of which inward and effectual calling, he hath made me partaker, opening the eares of my soule to hearken vnto him, & subduing the affections of my heart to the obedience of his will. And becaue the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, therefore I rest vndoubted, that if I liue, I shall liue vnto the Lord, and if I die I shall die vnto the Lord, & whether I liue or die, I am the Lords; neither shall any thing separate me from the loue of God, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. Thus many an honest faithful christian would answer M. Bishop. & stop his mouth as the poore Ruffin. hist. lib. 1. cap. 3. simple man did the mouth of the proud Philosopher in the Councell of Nice, that he could not tell for his life what to reply against him. But let vs aske him in the behalfe of this honest man, whereas hee saith afterwards, that he beleueth that he shall haue life euerlasting, if he fulfill that which Christ taught the yong man in the Gospel, to wit, if he keep all Gods commandements, how he knoweth that those words of Christ spoken to the yong man so many hundred yeares past, are directed vnto him, or that ther is any such cōdition made with him, that if he keep the commandements he shall enter into life. Looke by what rule he shall answer vs that that condition belongeth to him; hat if he keep the cōndements he shall enter into life, by the same rule doth the honest man take vpon him to beleue, that because he beleueth in Christ he shall haue euerlasting life. By the same rule doth he hearken to all the promises of God as pertaining to him. By the same rule doth he interest himselfe in all the gracious & louely speeches, wherwith God from time to time hath cōforted his people, & therefore as occasion serueth he putteth himself into the person & condition of the saints & faithfull that formerly haue bin, into their ioies & sorows, & hopes, & feares, & prayers, & complaints, taking vnto himselfe those answers and assurances that God hath at any time giuen vnto them, resolving of all the rest that which in one case the

Apostle exēplifieth of that that was written of the iustificatiō of Abrahā,² that those things were not writē for thē only but for vs alson which beleeue as they haue done, that we may be assured that God will be the same God to vs as he hath bin to thē. As for certainty of perseuerāce & testimony of predestinatiō & election, more followeth to be said hereafter. But here he confessieth, that he that beleeneth knoweth that he beleeueth; wherof we infer, that then he knoweth and beleeueth that he hath eternall life, because ¹ they that beleeue in the name of the Son of God, are to know that they haue eternal life: which is not to be excepted from being within the bounds of faith, because S. Iohn hath so deliuered by the word of faith, & therefore that: he certainty of saluatiō is to be beleeued, is not begged but proued, & shal yet further be proued if God wil. M. P. saith, that he that truly repēteth, knoweth that he repēteth. M. B. answereth, that he knoweth it indeed by many probable coniectures, but not by certainty of faith, as if we made our repētance & faith the matters of our faith to beleeue that we beleeue, or to beleeue that we repēt, i. likely talking he knoweth not what. Our faith & repētāce are not matters of faith, but matters of cōscience & feeling, which in our affections we discern & know; & finding the same in our selues, do beleeue the word of God, that he that repēteth & beleeneth in the Son of God hath euerlasting life. As for that which he saith, that a mā knoweth his repētance no otherwise but by probable cōiectures, it is a ridiculous deuce. He that repēteth knoweth further thē by cōiecture the woūd of his own hart, & the grieuance that he hath towards himself, by the cōsciēce of his owne sin. Surely if he himself had euer truly repēted, he wold make it no questiō whether he that repēteth doth know himself to repēt or not, but hicher-to he hath bin vnacquainted, what either repētāce or faith do mean; God giue him the true knowledge thereof before it be too late. But to proue that a mā knoweth not his own repētāce but by probable cōiectures, he brings a piace of Iob most absurdly & impertinētly: If god come to me I shal not see him, & if he depart frō me I shal not vnderstād it: which words of Iob rightly trāslated,² Whē he goeth by me I see him not, & whē he passeth by I perceiue him not, do serue to set forth to vs the vnsearchableness of the waies & works of God, which we are not able to cōprehēd euē in those things which are by vs & before vs, & wherin he seems most neerly to approach vnto vs. But let vs takē the words as he reads thē, & I pray thee gētle Reader to obserue in what sort he vseth thē. The thing that he wold proue, is that a mā knoweth not his own repētāce but by probable cōiectures: & how is proued?

Because we see not nor vnderstand Gods cōing to vs or departing frō vs. Wherupō he inferreth, which is sufficient to make a man thākful: yea though he receiued no grace, yet were hee beholding to God who offered him his grace, & wold haue freely bestowed it on him, if it had not bin through his owne default. Now what is that that is sufficient to make the man thākful? that he knoweth not his own repētaſe? that he neither seeth nor vnderſtādeth Gods cōing to him nor departing frō him? If gods visitatiō be not perceiued nor vnderſtood, what thāks can there be or conuictiō of vnthākfulnes? Doth a man thank God & not know for what, or whether there be any thing or not to thāk him for? how doth he know any default in this case, or cā say that God offered him any grace, or that he wold freely haue bestowed the same vpō him? Out of doubt his wits were a woolgathering whē he wrot this, or else his hād outrā his head; yet haply he thought it good enough for them to whō he ment it, who muſt think of their ghōstly father that he speaks most lernedly wñ they vnderſtād him least. But let me answer him to the place, that indeed we se not God, nor perceiue him cōing to vs, or departing frō vs, but yet we feel him working in vs, & as Ber. noteth by the alteratiō that we find in our selues, take occasiō to say a Bernard.

b Cypr. Prolog de cardinalibus Christi operibus. Quo modo fulgur nubes disfrangit & repentina conuulsio non tam illuminat quam hebetat oculum, ita aliquando nescio quo motu tangens & tangi te sentis, etiam tamen qui te tangit non intueris. Dicuntur tibi quaedam verba arcana in rufecus que effere non sufficiunt, ut dubitare non possis, quia iuxta te est in id intra te qui te sollicitat, nec tamen sic uti est se tibi videndum concedit.

c Hieron. in Job. cap. 9. Dicit quod venientis Dei presentia sit quando homini innoescit & quando occulitur quasi abentis absentia indicatur.

d Mar. 1. 15.

e Ioh. 3. 15. 16.

a Haec est mutatio dextera excelsi: This chāge cometh of the right hād of the most high: Of this visitatiō Cypriā speaks most fitly for our purpose
b As the lightning breket the clouds, & the suddē shining therof doth not so much enlightē as dul the eie, so sōtimes thou art touched with I know not what motiō, & feelest thy self to be touched, & yet seeſt not him that toucheth thee. There are inwardly spokē to thee certaine secret words, which thou art not able to utter; so as that thou cāst not doubt but that he is neer thee, ye eñe within thee which doth sollicit thee, & yet doth not yeeld thee to see him as he is. Which words plainly shew, that though a mā see not God either cōing or departing, yet he certainly knoweth & perceiueh in himselfe the work of God. Therefore of the very words which M. B. cites Hier. saith; that the presēce of God cōing to a man, is whē he becōmeth known to him, & his hiding of himself is termed the absence of him as going away; in neither of which we are able sufficiētly to cōceiue or cōprehēd him. Wherby we may see with how great discretiō this place was broght to proue that gods work in mās repētaſe, is not certainly known to him. Now therefore the word of God is warrāt to a faithfultmā to assure himself of his saluatiō. For it bidderh him to d beleene the Gospel; & the gospel is, that whosoener beleeueth in Ch. shal haue euerlasting life: he is therefore to beleue, that whosoener beleueth in Christ shal haue euerlasting life. He is therefore to beleue of himselfe, that because hee beleueth in Christ hee shall haue euerlasting life. Or if hee doe not beleuee of himselfe, beleueing in Christ that he shall haue euerlasting life, he beleueth not the Gospell, that whosoener beleueth in Christ shall haue euerlasting life. And thus the strength of M. Bishops argument is verie feeble, neither is it onely vaine in it selfe, but hee hath dealt as absurdly in the handling of it.

3. W. BISHOP.

The second is. It is no article of the Creed, that a man must beleuee his owne Salvation, and therefore no man is bound therunto.

M. Perkins answereth. That euerie article of the Creed contains this particular faith of our owne Salvation, namely three: First (saieth hee) to beleuee in God, is to beleuee that God is our God, and to put our trust in him for our Salvation.

Answer. I admit all this, and adds more (that M. Perkins bee no longer ignorant of the Catholike knowledge of the Creed) that wee must also loue him with all our heart and strength: thus wee understand it more fully then hee: Yet finde not out that thirteenth article, Thou must beleuee thine owne particular Salvation. For albeit, I beleuee and trust in God, yet not being sure of my loue towards him, I am not assured of Salvation, for as S. Iohn testifieth, Hee that loueth not, abideth in death.

1. Iohn. 3:

So I answer to the second article named by M. Perkins, that is, I beleuee that God of his infinite mercy, through the merits of Christs passion, doth pardon all those, who being heartilie sorie for their sinnes, do humble confesse them, and fullie purpose to leade a new life: that I my selfe am such a one, I do verily hope, because I haue as farre forth as I could, to my knowledge performed those things which God requires of mee, but because I am but a fraile creature, and may perhaps not haue done all that so well as I ought, or am not so well assured of that, which by Gods helpe I haue done, I cannot beleuee it, for in matter of faith (as you shall heare shortly) there can be no feare or doubt.

The like answer is giuen to the article of life euerlasting. I beleuee that I shall haue life euerlasting, if I fulfil that which our Saviour taught the young man, demanding what hee must doe to haue life euerlasting: to witte, if I keepe all Gods commandements, but because I am not assured that I shall doe so (yea the Protestants (though falsly) assure vs, that no man by any helpe of Gods grace can so doe,) I remaine in feare.

But (saith M. Perkins) the diuell may so beleene the articles of the Creed, unlessse we do apply those articles to our selues. First, I say the diuell knowes to be true all that we do beleene, and therefore are said by S. Iames to beleene, but they want a necessarie condition of faith, that is a godly and deuout submission of their vnderstanding vnto the obedience of faith, and so haue no faith to speake properly. Againe, they trust not in God for Salvation, nor in deauour not any manner of way to obtaine Salvation, as Christians doe, and so there is great difference betwene their beleeve in the articles of the Creed, and ours.

R. ABBOT.

To this argument M. Perkins iustlie saith, that the pillars of the Church of Rome doe not vnderstand the Creed, who hauing corrupted all points of Christian faith, must needs frame the articles of the Creed to the same corruption. Whether they were the Apostles or other after them, that layed together this brieve of faith, they intended not therein a narration of common historie, but a profession of priuat hope. And that may appeare by the phrase wherein they haue expressed this beleeve; I BELIEVE IN GOD THE FATHER; I BELIEVE IN IESVS CHRIST; I BELIEVE IN THE HOLY GHOST. For well doth M. Perkins note, that to say, I beleene in God, is all one, as to say, I beleene that God is my God, and I haue an assured confidence and trust in him to be saued by his mercie. M. Bishop mentioneth the answer in superficiall and generall termes, that to beleue in God is to beleue that God is our God, and to put our trust in him for our Salvation, and in this sort admitteth it, but to that purpose as M. Perkins spake it, hee will by no meanes admit it, because so to admit it, should be to grant the point in question. He can bee content that we in common beleue God to be our God by right of soueraignty and authority, but he will not endure that any man shall say as M. Perkins intended, I beleue that God is my God, by affection of loue. He will like well enough that wee put our trust in him for our Salvation, so as to looke to be saued by him if wee bee saued, and haply to carry some probable opinion that we shall bee saued, but in no case will suffer vs to conceiue so of our selues, as to say with the Apostle, God hath not appointed vs to wrath, but to ob- taining

taines Saluation by the meanes of Iesur: as M. Perkins meant. To beleue that God is our God, is to beleue that he is our life, our peace, our strength, our deliuerance and Saluation; not only that he is these things in himselfe, but that he is indeed the same to vs, assuredly perswading our selues, that because God is ours, therefore what soeuer is his is ours, that is, for vs and for our vse, his mercie, his power, his prouidence, to watch ouer vs, and to preserue and keepe vs to himselfe both in life and death. This did God import when by his new couenant he bound himselfe to his heires of promise, saying, ^b I will be their God, and they shall be my people, whereupon they shall bee imboldned to say, ^c Lo this is our God, we haue waited for him, and he will saue vs; we will reioyce and bee ioyfull in his saluation. And thus doth S. Austin teach vs to make ^d God our God, to make him, our possession, as he speaketh, and therefore without doubting to say vnto God, Thou art my God, because hee saith to our soule, I am thy saluation. And indeed no man can with a true heart say vnto God, Thou art my God, whose soule doth not with inward comfort heare God saying vnto him by his word, I am thy saluation. Seeing therefore that M. Bishop cannot deny, but that to say, I beleue in God, is as much as to say, I beleue that God is my God, he must grant, that for a man to professe to beleue in God, is to professe the assured beleefe of his owne saluation. The first degree of faith is credere Deum, to beleue that God is. 1. The second degree is credere Deo, to beleue God, that is, to beleue that his words and promises are true. But credere in deum, 2. to beleue in God, addeth further to trust in God according to that word and promise, and to beleue the same, not onely generally and indefinitely, but particularly and to his owne vse, firmly resolving that God will do to him according to that that he hath promised, and therefore to his repentance and faith, according to his promise will giue euerlasting life. Thus Eusebius Emisenus distinguishing those phrases rightly, saith, that no man is approved to haue beleued in God, but hee that hath deuoutly trusted in him, which is that that the Prophet Dauid nameth, to put trust in his mercie, whereby we stedfastly expect at his hands, and of his meere goodnesse, to receiue all things for our safety and Saluation. But M. Bishop making shew to admit that which M. Per-

^b Jerem. 31. 33.
^c Esa. 25. 9.

^d August. in Psa.
32. conc. 2. An te-
meri dicimus sa-ciendo nobis Deum possessione et c. Deat anima secura dicit,
Deus meus est tu,
qui dicit anime
nostrae salus tue
ego sum, &c.

^e Euseb. Emis. sen.
de sym. hom. 2.

kins saith, addeth more that he might not be ignorant of the Catho-like knowledge of the Creede, that we must also loue God with all our heart and strength, and thus saith that they vnderstand it more fully then we do. Where we may obserue what a wise construction he maketh for himselfe. For he telleth vs by and by that he is not sure whether he loue God or not, and afterward againe that charitie is seated in the darke corner of the will, and a man cannot be sure that it is in himselfe. So then because to belecue in God, is to loue God with all his heart and strength, and M. Bishop doth not know whether he loue God or not, it must needs follow that for ought he knoweth, he doth but lie so often as he saith, I beleue in God. This doth he gaine by his vnderstanding this point more fully then we do. But we respect not here any largenesse or fulnesse, but rather proprietic of vnderstanding. It is true in deed that Saint Austin sometimes declareth beleueing in God by the loue of God, and other such signes and tokens thereof, not as properly to define what it is to beleue in God, but rather to shew who they are that truely doe beleue in GOD, that men may not flatter themselues with opinion of beleueing, when indeed they doe not beleue. Thus doth hee say, that ^f to beleue in God is to cleaue vnto God, to worke well with him, working that that is good in vs; that ^g be that beleueth in Christ both hopeth in Christ and lo-ueth Christ; that ^h to beleue in Christ, is in beleueing to affect, in be-leueing to loue Christ. But it is one thing to describe a thing by adioyned properties and effects, another thing to define it out of the nature and propriety of it selfe. Wee doubt not but that faith and loue are alwaies conioined, and true beleefe in God doth alwaies infallibly bring forth the loue of God, but yet as diuers members of the body necessarily concurring for the perfecting of the whole, haue euery one their seuerall office, the eye to see, the eare to heare, &c. so these vertues of the soule, namely faith and loue, though they alwaies meeete and neuer are diuided, yet in office and act are distinct each from other, neither is to beleue the same as to loue, nor to loue the same as to beleue. For wee do not make the question that Christ asked the man that had bene blind, ⁱ *Beleuest thou in the Sonne of God; to be the same with that that he demaunded of Peter, ^k *Louest thou mee? Now therefore to beleue in God, is in it selfe to haue a full

^f Augusti in Psal.
^{77.} Adhaerere ad bene coopetandum bona operanti Deo.
^g De verb. dom.
^{ser. 61.} *Ille credit in Christu qui ex-sperat in Christu
ut diligit Christu.*
^h In Ioan. tract.
^{29.} *Quid est cre-
dere in eum?
Credendo amare,
credendo diligere,
&c.*

ⁱ John. 9. 35.

^k Cap. 21. 15.

full assurance and assured trust in him that he will saue vs, and accordingly the summe of that that I professe to beleeu in the Creed is that God is my God and father by the mediation of Jesus Christ, through the sanctification of the holy Ghost, whereby hee hath made me a member of his Catholike Church, which is the communion and society of his Saints, to which, and all the members whereof, and so namely to me, he will giue remission and forgiveness of finnes, and a happy resurrection of the body, to be partaker with the soule of euerlasting life. And that this is a matter of be-David saying, I beleeu to see the goodnesse of the Lord in the land of the liuing. Which what is it else but to say, I beleeu mine owne Saluatiō. And let him learn of Fulgentius, that it was not proper to Dauid only to say so; for the iust liuing by faith, saith he, boldly saith, I beleeu to see the goodnes of the Lord in the land of the liuing. Let S. Austin also teach him this matter of belee: God hath promised thee, O man, that thou shalt liue for euer. Dost thou not beleue it? Beleue it, beleue it; for that that he hath already done for thee, is a greater matter then that that he had promised. To the same effect Cyprian speaketh, God hath promised vnto thee when thou departest out of this world, immortality and eternity, and doest thou doubt thereof? This were not to know God: this is to offend Christ the maister of beleeuers with the sinne of vnbeleefe? this is for a man being in the house of faith to be without faith. So that by Cyprians iudgement to haue faith, is for a man to beleue his owne Saluation, and not to beleue his owne Saluation, is to bee without faith. But Saint Bernard handleth this point most pregnantly of all other. It is necessarīe for the to beleue, that thou canst not haue forgiveness of finnes but by the mercie of God, and that by no works thou canst obtaine eternall life, vnlesse it also be giuen thee. But these things are not sufficient, nay they are to bee accounted but the beginning and as it were the foundation of faith. Therefore if thou beleuest that thy finnes cannot bee put away, but by him to whom onely thou hast

IPsal. 27. 13.
 m Fulgent. ad
 Monach. lib. 3. l. ultu ex fide vinctus
 fiducialiter dicat,
 Credo v dere bona Domini, &c.
 n August. in Psa. 148. Quia
 tibi promise De-
 us o homo mortuus? Quia victurus es in eternum:
 Non credis? Crede crede: Plus est
 in quod fecit quā
 quod promise.
 o Cyprian. de n. or-talis. Deus tibi de hoc mundo rece-
 denti immortalit-
 atem pollicetur
 atque eternitatē, & tu dubitas? hoc est Deum omnino
 non nosse; hoc est Christū credentū
 magistrum peccato-
 rum incredulitatē
 offendere; hoc est
 in ecclesia consti-tuta fidem in
 dono fides non ha-
 bere.
 p Bernard. in Annuaciat. ser. 1.
 Necessē est primo
 omnium credere
 quod remissionem

peccatorum habere non possit nisi per indulgentiam Dei, &c. postremo quod eternam vitam nullū potes operibus promereri nisi gratis detur & illa, &c. Verum hæc non omnino sufficiunt: sed magis inuitum quoddam & velut fundamentum fidei sunt habenda. Ideoque si credis peccata tua non posse deleri nisi ab eo cui soli peccasti bene facis; sed adde adhuc vti & hoc credas quia per ipsum tibi peccata donantur. Hoc est testimonium quod perhibet in corde nostro Spi. sanctū dicens, Dimissa sunt tibi peccata tua. Sic enim arbitrat̄ur Apostolus gratiā iustificari hominem per fidem. Sic & de vita æterna habere necessē est testimonium spiritus quod ad eam suscipiuntur munere pertinetur.

sinned

finned thou doest well, but add here: to beleene, THAT BY HIS THY SINNES ARE FORGIVEN THEE. This is the testimony that the holy Ghost giueth in our heart, saying, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee: for thus doth the Apostle define, that a man is freely iustified by faith. So also as touching eternall life, it is needfull that thou haue the testimony or witnesse of the spirit, THAT THOU SHALT COME VNTO IT BY THE GIFT OF GOD. Heere then it is plaine, that without any thirteenth article of the Creed, the faith whereby the Apostle saith a man is iustified, is such a faith as wherby I beleeu mine owne Salvation; wherby I beleeu that my sinnes are forgiven me, and that I shall attaine by the very gift of God vnto euerlasting life. But saith M. Bishop, I beleue and trust in God; Yet not being sure of my loue towards him, I am not assured of Salvation.
 Where hee plainly sheweth, that hee hath no loue towards God, because where loue is, it cannot but be certainly felt and known, and if he loued God, hee could not but assure himselfe thereof. Now therfore it is no maruell, that hee hath no assurance of saluation, when there wanteth in him the certaine and infallible effect of that faith whereby he should be assured of Salvation. For true faith is the fountaine of our loue towards God, whilest beleeuing God to bee such and so mercifull vnto vs, it swalloweth vp our affections, and draweth our loue and deuotion vnto him. Which is not vnfelt in vs, but by the feeling thereof in our selues, we gather a further confirmation and assurance to our selues, that we are beloved of God.
 Both which S Bernard well declareth, saying of the faithfull man:
 ¶ A vile worme and worthy to be hated euerlastingly, yet assureth himselfe that he is beloved, because he feeleth himselfe to loue; nay because he first feeleth himselfe to be beloved, therefore he is ashamed not to loue againe. So againe he saith that the loue of God breedeth in the soule loue towards God, and by feeling it selfe to loue, it is also out of doubt that it selfe is beloved. Now what a miserable case is M. Bishop in, that neither is sure of his loue towards God, nor dare assure himselfe of Gods loue towards him? If he had not a senselesse and dead heart, he could not but much grieue and lament at his owne estate.
 And yet forsooth he telleth vs, that he doth beleue and trust in God;
 but therein he lieth vnto God. For he doth not beleue in God, that doth not place the confidence of his felicity in God only; which he doth not place in God onely, but partly in God and partly in himselfe.

Hee

q Bernard. epist.
 107. Permissi vilissimus & odio dignissimus senti-
 pterno, tamen
 confidit amari,
 quia sentit amare;
 vno quia se amari
 presentit non re-
 damare confundi-
 tur.
 r Idem in Cant.
 ser. 69. Amor Dei amorem ani-
 me parit. &c.
 Ex eo quod se di-
 ligere sentit etiã
 diligi non ambigit
 s Cyprian. de duplici marty. Non credit in deũ qui non in eo solo col-
 locat totius felici-tatis suae fiducia-
 m.

Hee doth not trust in God, that doth not rely wholly vpon Gods mercy, and thereby looke for that at his hands for which hee trusteth in him, so as to account himselfe deceiued by him if he faile thereof, which neuer hath befallen to any, nor shall befall that doth put his trust in God. M. Bishop diuideth this trust betwixt God and himselfe, and so trusteth in God, as that he maketh that for which he professeth to trust in God, to hang chiefly vpon himselfe, and therefore no maruell if he haue no assurance of Salvation, because he incurreth rather the curse denounced by the Prophet, ¹ Cursed is the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arme. For what doth he else when he leaueth the whole work of God, as wee haue heard before, to be confirmed and made good by his own free will? Now as touching that other article of beleeuing in Christ, to haue by his merits remission of finnes, S. Austin teacheth vs, that ^u to beleeu in Christ is to be united vnto Christ, to be made one with him, to be incorporated, so be members of his body. He expoundeth it to be all one with that which Christ saith in the Gospell, of ^x eating his flesh & drinking his blood, which whosoever doth, ^y dwelleth in Christ and Christ in him, he hath eternall life, and Christ will raise him vp at the last day. Thus the Gospell of Christ instructeth vs, and hee that beleueth in Christ, because he beleueth the Gospell, must beleue that he is a member of Christ, one with Christ and Christ with him; that he dwelleth in Christ, and Christ in him, that Christ hath giuen vnto him eternall life, and will raise him vp at the last day; being assured, that as a head wil not suffer a member of it owne body to perish, which it hath in his power to preserue; so Christ hauing made him a member of his body, and hauing power to saue him, will not suffer him to perish, but as a faithfull Mediatour will performe that charge, which ^z the will of the heauenly father hath laid vpon him, that of all that he hath giuen him he should loose nothing, but should raise it vp at the last day. Now M. Bishop saith, that he beleueth that God for the merits of Christs passion, doth forgieue them that are heartily sorie for their finnes, and humbly confesse them, with a full purpose of a new life. And this he hopeth that he hath done, but he cannot assure himself that he hath done it, or that he hath done it so well as he ought to do, and therefore cannot beleue the forgouenesse of his finnes. Where we see, that the merits of Christs passion is not sufficient in his opinion, to purchase for him the forgouenesse of finnes, but it must further

¹ Ierem. 17. 5.

^u August. in Ioan.

tract. 29. & de

verb. dom. ser. 61.

Credendo in carn

ire & membrus

eius incorporari.

& c. Quoquo modo unetur in eum &

membrum in cor

pore eius efficitur.

^x Idem in Ioan.

tract. 26. Credere

in Christum, hoc

est manducare pa

nera & sicut.

^y Iohn. 6. 53. 56.

^z Iohn. 6. 39.

there hang vpon the sufficiency and perfection of his owne repentance. It is not enough that he trulie repent, vnlesse he repent so well as hee ought to do, that his repentance may deserue the pardon that he seeketh for. But we for our parts know and confesse, that our repentance, our faith, our righteousnesse, are neuer such as they ought to bee: we are short and vnperfect in the sorrow for our sinnes; our purposes of newe life and amendement of our defaults, proue oftentimes like the morning dew that is quickly dried vp. And therefore it is not the value and woorth of our repentance that we rest vpon to meritt pardon and forgiuenesse, but wee require a sinceritie and truth thereof, faithfully to craue the same, beeing but as the paine and grieue which maketh to seek the medicine whereby it is eased; as the hunger and thirst which maketh to craue the foode whereby it is releued; as the feeling of beggerie and want, which maketh to seeke the treasure and riches by which it is supplied. Which supplie and releefe spiritually we find in this, that we are iustified freely by the grace of God, through the redemption that is in Christ Iesus, whom God hath set forth to be an atonement for vs (not by the merit of our repentance) but by faith in his blood. ^c Freely, for god a mercy, for nothing, as the Rhemists expound the word gratis, willing to shew a little truth in giuing the right signification of the word, but craftilie suppressing the same truth, and plainly contradicting it by a colourable glosse deuised against the text of the Apostle, and against the signification of the word, which force of truth hath wrested from themselves. ^d Freely, saith Ambrose, because hauing no works, nor yeelding any requit all euen of the gift of God, we are iustified by faith onely. ^e Freely, saith Chrysostome, because he vselh heereto no workes of ours, but requireth faith onely. And he requireth faith onely, onely as a hand whereby wee receiue, not as a worke whereby wee deserue this forgiuenesse of our sinnes, that so the true penitent may firmly expect it in Christ onely by beleeuing, not hang in suspence of it by beeing in doubt of vn-sufficiency in repenting; God hauing therefore appointed it to be ^f by faith that it may bee of grace, that the promise (thereof) may bee sure (not in it selfe, not with God; who doubteth but in that respect it is sure enough? but) to all the seede, that is, to euerie one that beleueeth; the promise beeing that through the name of Christ, euerie one that beleueth in him shall haue forgiuenesse of sinnes. Which faith, though it bee yet but weak and little

^a Ofc. 6. 4

^b Rom 3. 24.

^c Rhem. Testam.
Explicat. of certain words: in the end.

^d Ambros. in Rom.
ca. 3. Gratis quia nihil operantes, neque vicem reddentes sola fide iustificati sunt dono Dei.

^e Chrys. in Rom.
boox. 7. Nullis ad hoc usus operibus sed fidem tantum exigens.

^f Rom. 4. 16.

^g Act. 10. 43.

little, and sometimes interrupted with feares and doubts, yet God accepteth it and cherisheth it, that by more experience it may grow to more strength, neither is it true which M. Bishop saith, that in matter of faith there is no feare or doubt, as anon after shall appeare. In the meane time he further addeth as touching the article of Eternall life, that he beleueth he shall haue it, if he shall keepe all Gods commandements, but because he is not assured that he shall so do, he remaineth in feare. And very iustly may he be in feare that looketh for eternall life vpon no other condition then he doth. The Apostle indeed doth plainly debarre him from all hope and expectation thereof, when he saith^h So many as are of the workes of the law, are under the curse, for it is written, Cursed is euery one that continueth not in all things that are written in the booke of the law to doe them. Where he plainly taketh it for graunted, that no man continueth in all things that are written in the law, that is, that no man keepeth all Gods commandements, and therefore concludeth, that he that for eternall life dependeth vpon keeping all Gods commandements, cannot auoid the curse. Yea, but Christ saith to the young man in the Gospel, ⁱ If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements. It is true; but Christ saith it to induce the young man to the knowledge of himselfe, and very ill is it applied to seduce men from the true acknowledgement of the faith of Christ. The young man asketh what he might do to inherit eternall life? Our Sauour Christ referreth him to the law, as ^k the Schoolemaster to traine him vnto Christ, that finding it ^l a thing impossible for the law to giue him life, and therefore casting off all vaine confidence of the righteousness thereof, hee might bee fitted to embrace ^m the faith of that name, in which onely life and Salvation is offered vnto vs. Which it plainly appeareth this young man conceiued not, by reason of a presumption that he had by misunderstanding the law, that he had obserued the law. The vaine opinion wherof to discouer, our Sauour biddeth him to sell all & giue to the poore, promising him treasure in heaven, and willing him in the meane time to come and follow him, that it might appeare how far he was frō that loue of God & his neighbour which the law required, in whose heart the loue of riches bare so great a sway, as that he could not be content at Gods cōmandement vpo promise of heavenly treasure, to bestow the same to the necessity of his neighbour. Now if he had rightly esteemed of,

himselfe

h Gal. 3. 10.

i Mat. 19. 17.

k Gal 3. 25.

l Rom. 8. 3.

Gal. 3. 21.

m Acts. 4. 12.

himselfe how farre he was from being answerable to the righteousness of the law, he would haue profited by the words of Christ, and haue taken occasion thereby to come to Christ for the obtaining of eternall life, the true meanes whereof he directeth when he saith, This is life eternall, to know mee the onely true God, and Iesus Christ whom thou hast sent. Which knowledge of Christ seeing this man had not, without which M. Bishop himselfe I hope will say there is no eternall life, surely euen by his owne grounds it must be absurd, to say that Christ by these words did simply intend to direct him a way for the obtaining of eternall life. And if he will say, that he was indeed first to beleue, and then by faith to keepe the commandements, thereby to enter into life, the Apostle taketh exception against that, when citing the words of the Prophet, The iust shall liue by faith, he inferreth, Now the law is not of faith, but saith, Hee that doth these things shall liue in them. For if the law saying, He that doth these things, shall liue in them, do not accord with the faith of Christ, then it is not for them to professe the faith of Christ, in the doing of these things, that is, in the keeping of the commandements to expect the obtaining of eternall life. Yea, the grace of the Gospell is made void if it bring Christ to the law, saith Tertullian, which he learned of the Apostle, saying, Ye are voided of Christ, ye are fallen from grace that will be iustified by the law. Therefore he saith: If they which bee of the law be heires, then faith is made void, and the promise is made of none effect: If the inheritance bee by the law, it is no longer by promise. But God hath giuen it by promise, and therefore faith beleeueth that God hath giuen vnto vs eternall life, and this life is (not in our keeping the commandements but) in his sonne, and in him only we are to expect it, that from the beginning to the end wee may still confesse, that eternal life is the gift of God through Iesus Christ our Lord. The commandements of God therefore are now laid before vs, not as the condition for obtaining of eternall life, but as the way to walke in vnto eternall life, assured vnto vs by the free promise and gift of God. And of this promise and gift of God the keeping of Gods commandements is a part, who hath said, I will put my law in their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; I will put my spirit into them, and will cause them to walke in my statutes, and to keep my iudgements and doe them. Whereto agree the words of the Apostle, We are his workmanship, created in Christ Iesus vnto good works, which God hath

John 17. 3.

Gal. 3. 11.

p Tertull. de pre-scrip. Euangeli-gratia Euangelica si ad legem Chri-
stum redigit.
q Gal. 5. 4.
r Rom. 4. 14.
s Gal. 3. 18.

John 5. 10. 11

Rom. 6. 23.

x Jerem. 31. 33.
y Ezech. 36. 27.

z Ephe. 2. 10.

hath prepared for vs to walke in. Which workmanship when by the grace of God it is begun in vs, albeit by reason of many imperfections it be not such, as that by the vertue thereof we may expect eternall life, yet our faith receiueth further confirmation and assurance thereby, that hee that hath wrought this beginning of life, will goe forward therewith to the end, and hauing made vs partakers of one part of his promise, will make vs also partakers of the other, taking these first fruits of sanctification, as an earnest and pledge from him of the performance of the whole. Therefore albeit wee well know, that we do not keep the cōmandements of God as we ought to doe, yet wee doe not for that cause stand in doubt of eternall life, but finding our hearts truly affected towards God, ^a hungring and thirsting after righteousnesse, vnfaignedly hating sinne, and groning vnder the burden of it, ^b hangmg so fast on, we comfort our selues, that God hath made the light of his Saluatiō to shine vnto vs, resolving according to his promise, that this Sunne rising though it bee not yet fully cleere, and may haply sometimes be ouercast with clouds, yet shall neuer haue any night, but that excepting our godly indeauours, pardoning our defects and wants, forgiuing vs all our sinnes, hee will ^c perfect the good worke which hee hath so graciously begun in vs, so that the true faithfull soule may alwaies boldly say, ^d Thy loving kindnesse and mercy, shall follow me all the daies of my life, & I shall dwell in the house of the Lord for euer. Now because M. Bishop laiceth no other but a rotten foundation, no maruell if hee build no other but a tottering and shaking house; because hee looketh to haue life grow out of his keeping of the commandements, which is as a reed continually shaken with the wind, no maruell if hee denie to himselfe any stedfast assurance and trust of attaining thereunto. But yet it is a fallhood of his to charge the Protestants with affirming, that no man by any helpe of Gods grace can keep Gods commandements. The Protestants onely say, that God giueth vs not that fulnesse of grace whilest heere we liue, as that we can fully and perfectly keepe the commandements of God so as to bee justified thereby, but they deny not, but that all the faithfull according to the degrees and measure of grace receiued, doe in a measure keepe Gods commandements, and as grace is increased, so they increate in the keeping of the commandements, and that this grace shall yet further renew and sanctifie them, in such sort, as that in the end corruption & sin being being wholly abolished for euer; they shall be fullie conformed to that image of righteousnesse that God hath described in the lawe. But of this heereafter. In the meantime wee see by that that M. Bishop hath told vs of faith, that the Church of Rome indeed teacheth no other faith but the same that diuels haue. Which being objected by M. Perkins, hee laboureth to cleare, but saith nothing to serue the turne, but by ouerthrowing that which he buildeth otherwhere. He saith, that the diuels knowe all to be true which wee beleue, but yet do want a necessarie condition of faith, which is a godly & deuout submission of their vnderstanding to the obedience of faith, and so haue no faith to speake properly. But if godly and deuout submission of the vnderstanding to the obedience of faith, be a necessarie condition of faith, as hee telleth vs heere, so as that which is called faith without this is not properly so called, how then standeth it which elsewhere he determineth, that faith trulie and properly so called, may be without charity and good works? For what godlinesse, what denotion, what submission or obedience can there be where charitie is not? Godlinesse, denotion, submission, obedience, what are they but good workes? If then faith properly so called, cannot bee without these, then it is true which wee say, that true faith can neuer bee without charity and good workes. But that hee denieth in the other place, and with common consent they all denie it. Therefore he must denie that which heere he himselfe saith, that godly and deuout submission of the vnderstanding to the obedience of faith, is a necessary condition of faith properly so called, and so, as yet there is no exception but that their faith is the same with the diuels faith. But taking this which he saith, which indeed is true, though he by no meanes must stand to it, that godly and deuout submission, &c. is a necessary condition of true faith, yet because it is but a condition adioined, and not the verie nature of faith it selfe, surely vnlesse hee describe faith in other sort then hee doth, hee answereth yet nothing as touching the very act of faith, but that the faith of diuels is all one with their faith. His other exception is, that the diuels trust not in God for Salvation, nor indeaunour any manner of way to obtaine it as Christians do. Which is euen as vaine as the former was, because hee answereth nothing to put difference as touching faith it selfe, he himselfe still denying that trust in God for a mans owne Salvation, is any part of faith. But he should haue answered directly to the point, what there is in the very nature of faith it selfe, whereby their faith is to bee distinguished from the faith of diuels, whereof he is not able to giue vs any certaine answer. And to be short, all that hee hath here said is but framed for a shew, to serue for present shift, because hee dareth not deny but that there hath bin and are many desperate rakehels (yea of their Popes and Cardinals there haue not wanted such) in whom there is no godly or deuout submission of understanding to the obedience of faith, no trust in God for Salvation, no indeanour to obtaine it, who yet haue had their Catholike faith, to belecue that Christ hath died, and risen againe, and that by his blood there is forgiuenesse of sinnes, though not for them, yet for them that repent: so that in that which he saith hitherto, there is nothing at all whereby to put difference betwixt their faith & the diuels faith, and hereafter we shall see, that he is able to say no more then here he hath said.

^a Mat. 5. 6.^b Heb. 1. 2. 1.^c Phil. 1. 6.^d Psal. 23. 6.

4. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins in his first exception graunts: That commonly men do not beleue their Salvation, as infallibly as they doe the articles of the faith (yet saith he) some speciall men do. pag. 54.

Whereof I inferre by his owne confession, that our particular Salvation is not to be beleued by faith, for what soeuer we beleue by faith, is as infallible as the word of God, which assureth vs of it. Then if the common sort of the faithfull do not beleue their Salvation, to be as infallible as the articles of our Creed, yea as Gods owne word, they are not by faith assured of it. Now that some speciall good men, either by reuelation from God, or by long exercise of a virtuous life, haue a great Certaintie of their Salvation, we willingly confesse: but that Certaintie doth rather belong to a well grounded hope, then to an ordinarie faith.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins rightly saith, that the Scriptures in this matter of faith & assurance, do direct vs the duty of faith, what it ought to do, and what we are to pray and labour for, though we do not all and alwaies attaine vnto it. Secondly, that though commonly men do not with the like assurance beleue their owne Salvation, as they do the doctrine of faith expressed in the articles of the Creed, yet that some speciall men do so, as did Abraham, and the Prophets, and Apostles, and martyrs of God in all ages, who without doubting laied downe their liues for the testimony of God, and for the name of Christ, assuring themselues to receiue a better resurrection. And so we make no question, but that by the same spirit that certified them, many faithfull also now do receiue the like certificate of eternall blisse, and are thereby ready if occasion serue to doe the same that they haue done. Now because he saith that commonly men do not so infallibly belecue theirowne saluation, though some speciall men do, hereof, saith M. Bishop, I inferre by his owne confession, that our particular Saluation is not to be beleued by faith. But of his confession followeth no such illation. For he cannot conclude, that therefore our own Saluation is not infallibly to be beleued by faith because men do not comonly so belecue it, but rather that it is so to be beleued by faith, because some speciall men do belecue it so, for that in those speciall men is example to the rest, what they ought to strue vnto. But saith M. Bishop. Whatsoeuer we belecue by faith, is as infallible as the word of God that assureth vs of it. And we grant that it is as infallible in it selfe, but not alwaies so in our apprehension & feeling. And if he will say that it is alwaies as infallible to vs and our vnderstanding and conscience, he speaketh very falsely and absurdly: for there are diuers degrees of faith, ^a little faith, ^b great faith; ^c full assurance of faith, euen as a weake eie and a strong eie. And as a weake eie seeth but weakly and vnperfectly, and a strong eie seeth strongly and more fully discerneth the thing seene, so a little faith belecueth faintly, though truly, greater faith belecueth more stedfastly; full assurance of faith ^d belecueth vnder hope euen against hope. The disciples of Christ said vnto him, ^e We beleue & know that thou art Christ the Sonne of the liuing God. Which in it selfe was infallibly true, and yet they did not so infallibly apprehend it, but that this faith was soone shaken: and because they did not yet infallibly belecue it, our Sauour telleth them, that therefore he forewarned them of his death & resurrection, that ^f when it was come to passe they might beleue, namely as S. Austine saith, ^g that he was Christ the Sonne of the liuing God. Which, as he addeth, they should not beleue not with a new faith, but with a faith increased, which was quailed in his death, but repaired in his resurrection. For they were not without this faith before, that he was the Sonne of God, but when it came to passe which he

^a Mat. 8. 26.
^b Cap. 15. 28.
^c Rom. 4. 21.
^d Ibid. ver. 18.
^e Iohn 6. 69.
^f Ibid. ca. 14. 29.
^g August. in Ioan. tract. 79. Quo vis-so illud fuerant credituri quod ip-
 se esset Christus fi-
 lius Dei viuis, &c.
 Creditur autem
 hoc no fide noua
 sed aucta, aut certe cu mortuus esset
 desecta, cum resurrexisset resecta.
 Neque enim eum Dei filium non & ante credebant, sed
 cum in illo factu
 est quod ante pre-dixit, fides illa que
 tunc quando s'lis
 loquebatur fuit
 parua & cum mo-
 veretur pond iam
 nulla & reuixit & creuit.

foretold, that faith which when he spake vnto them was little and small, and when he died in a manner none, both renewed and increased. It was faith that made^b Peter vpon Christs word to step into the sea to go to Christ vpon the waters, beleuing that he should be safe; but yet he beleued it not infallibly, & the faintnesse of his faith made him begin to sink, so that being vehemently afraid, hee cried out vnto Christ for help, saying Master, saue me. Therefore our sauior faith to him,ⁱ O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? In which sort; when another time the disciples were afraid, by reason of a tempest vpon the sea, & awaked him being asleepe, saying vnto him, & Master saue vs we perish, he answered them, Why are ye feareful, ô ye of little faith? in both these places shewing that little faith, such as now the faith of the Apostles themselves was, doth not make a man so infallibly to beleue, as that he is therby wholly voided of feare and doubt; yet sheweth it selfe to be true faith, in that the same feare & doubt maketh him alwaies to run to Christ, as expecting succour & strength in him. Such is the faith wherby the common sort of faithful men do beleue their own particular Saluation, truely and effectually to the comfort of their soules, yet not so fully and infallibly, as to be altogether freed from feare and doubt. For it is to be obserued, which was intimated before, that matters of faith concerning our own Saluation, doe consist partly in principles deliuered by the word of God, & partly in conclusions thence deriued to our selues. Now albeit faith sometimes do wauer and stagger, as touching the very principles themselves and immediate words of God, yet because the truth & certaintie thereof is more easily and better conceiued, they are for the most part more familiarly & readily beleued. But the conclusions, because of themselves they are vnknown and haue their light onely from the principles, are not so firmly apprehended as the principles themselves, whilst doubts haply may be cast, least there be any error committed in the application and vse thereof. It is a principle deliuered for assurance of Saluation;ⁱ Beleeue in the Lord Iesus Christ and thou shalt be saued. Heereupon the faithful man inferreth to himself, I beleue in the Lord Iesus Christ, therefore I shall bee saued. In this either confusely or expressly inferred, he comforteth himself, & reioiceth in God, & in hope hereof cheerefully serueth God, calleth vpon his name, & in patience expecteth the reuealing of his Saluation. And yet sometimes it falleth

^b Mat. 14. 28.

Verf. 31.

^k Cap. 8. a 5.ⁱ Acts 16. 7.

out that he questioneth his faith, and not seeing such effect thereof as he supposeth there ought to be, maketh doubt least haply he be deceiued, and though the principle be true by which he first beleueed, yet is ielous least he haue misapplied it to himselfe. Thus somtimes by other temptations true faith is assaulted and greatly shaken, so that he that greatly reioyced in the Saluation of the Lord, by hasty cogitations is ouer taken and brought to say as Dauid in that case did, ^m I am cast out of the sight of thine eies. This was the manner of the Apostles faith at first, and this manner of faith and assurance do we teach, and do teach men to pray with the Apostles, ⁿ Lord increase our faith, that from weaknesse of faith and slender assurance, we may grow to strength of faith and full assurance, as the Apostles did. In the meane while therefore it is false and contrary to the word of God which M. Bishop saith that the faithfull haue not by faith assurance of Saluation, vnlesse they beleuee it to be as infallible as the word of God it selfe. Now for conclusion he confesseth, that some either by reuelation from God, or by long exercise of virtuous life, haue a great Certaintie of Saluation, but that, he saith, doth rather belong to a well grounded hope, then to an ordinarie faith. But we answered him, that there is no well grounded hope, but that which is grounded vpon ordinarie faith and beleefe of that that is hoped for. For hope is the proper effect of ordinary faith, and nothing else, as we shall see heerafter, but a patient expectation of that that we beleuee shal be, and if we do not beleuee that it shal be, we cannot be said to hope for it in that sense wherein the scripture teacheth hope. Of ordinarie faith it is that the Apostle saith: Being iustified by faith, we haue peace towards God through Iesus Christ our Lord, by whom we haue accesse through faith vnto this grace wherein we stand and reioyce under the hope of the glorie of God, thereby shewing, that to reioyce under the hope of the glory of God, is the effect of an ordinarie faith, whereby wee are assured of peace with God. Of ordinary faith S. Iohn speaketh where hee saith, ^p These things haue I written vnto you that beleuee in the name of the Sonne of God, that ye may know that ye haue eternall life. By ordinary faith therefore the faithfull are (not vncertainly to hope, but assuredly) to know, that they haue eternall life. But it is heere to bee obserued, that Maister Bishop affirmeth not onelie of that Certaintie that is gotten by long exercise of vertuous life, but also of that that

m Psal. 31. 27.

n Luk. 17. 5.

o Rom. 5. 1.

consequenter
 p 1. Iohn 5. 13.

as by revelation from God, that it rather belongeth to hope then to ordinarie faith, writing he wist not what himselfe, because if he be asked the question, he will not deny, but that whatsoeuer God hath reuealed is to be beleued by ordinarie faith, because he saith afterwards that it is the Catholike faith, that is, ordinarie faith to beleeue all that to be true which God hath reuealed. Howsoeuer the reuelation be extraordinary, as we knowe he intendeth it, yet it is ordinarie faith by which a man beleueeth such extraordinary reuelation, so as that neither that assurance that is had by this extraordinary reuelation, is altogether free from feares and doubts, shaking sometimes the confidence of that which a man hath receiued immediately from the oracle of Gods owne mouth, or by speciall messengers directed from God for certificate in that behalfe. Which is to be seene in the examples of Abraham, and Isaac, and Dauid and others, to whom God had giuen speciall promise of his protection and fauour, and yet vpon occasions they haue bewraied great infirmitie in the apprehension thereof. And if this befall to faith in those things that are extraordinarily reuealed, much more we may assure our selues that it befallerh there, where we haue no other but ordinarie reuelation by the written word of God. Therefore on euerie side M Bishops assertion is false, that there can be no assurance by faith of our owne Salvation, valesse wee beleue it with the like infallible Certainty, as we do the truth of the word of God.

5. W. BISHOP.

The third reason for the Catholikes, is, that wee are bidden to pray daily for the remission of our sinnes. But that were needlesse, if wee were before assured, both of pardon and Salvation.

Mat. 5.

M. Perkins answereth, First, that we pray daily for the remission of new sinnes committed that day. Be it so What needs that, if we were before assured of pardon? Marric (saith he) because our assurance was but weak and small, our prayer is to increase our assurance. Good Sir, do you not see how you overthrow your selfe? If your assurance be but weak and small, it is not the assurance of faith, which is as great, and as strong, as the truth of God.

Wee giue God thanks for those gifts which wee haue receiued at his bountifull hands, & desire him to increase, or continue them if they may be lost. But to pray to God to giue vs those things wee are assured of by faith, is as fond and frivolous, as to pray him to make Christ our Lord to be his sonne, or that there may be life everlasting to his Saints in heauen, of which they are in full and assured possession. And so these three Arguments by M perkins propounded here for vs, are very substantiall and sufficient, to assure euery good Christian, that he may well hope for Salvation doing his dutie, but may not without great presumption, assure him by faith of it.

R. ABBOT.

The comfort of the faithfull mans prair, is the same assurance that David had, ^a When I call upon the Lord, hee will heare mee, it being a promise of God to his people, ^b Call upon me, and I will heare thee: in which sort our Saviour Christ giueth vs encouragement to pray, saying, ^c Whatsoener ye aske in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Sonne. Therefore S. Iohn saith, ^d This is the assurance that we haue of him, that whatsoener we aske according to his will he heareth vs, and if we know that he heareth vs, we know that we haue the petitions that wee aske of him. Being therefore bidden to pray for the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and hauing the promise of God, ^e I will be mercifull vnto them, and their sinnes and iniquities will I remember no more, we beleue and by faith stand assured, that when we do pray to haue our sinnes forgiuen vs, God heareth vs and giueth vs pardon and forgiuenesse thereof. We doe not then reach at randon the assurance of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, but in such tenure and forme as we are directed by the word of God, according to which S. Austine saith of himselfe, ^f By the grace of God I am freed, I know, that I enter not into temptation, and that I am heard saying with my fellowes, Forgiue vs our trespasses. ^g For this therefore, that is, ^h for forgiuenesse of sinnes, shall euery one that is godly, saith David, make his prair vnto thee in a time when thou maist be found, so being assured that in the great water floods they shall not come nigh him. Our faith then assureth vs not of forgiuenesse of sinnes without prair, but that God forgiueth vs when we pray; so that his obiection being framed to our doctrine aright, is as if he should say, Seeing faith assureth vs of forgiuenesse of sinnes when we craue it of him by prayer, what need wee pray? Which was one of Wrights drunken reason; whereby hee would haue laied an absurditie vpon our Church, being himselfe an absurd-

^a Psal. 4. 3.
^b 50. 15.

^c Iohn 14. 13.
^d I. Iohn 5. 14.

^e Ierem. 31. 34.

^f August. con. Iulian. Pelag. lib. 6. ca 5. Qua gratia liberor, ut scio, ne intremint in oratione, & c. atque ut exaudiat cum confortibus meis, dicens, Dimittite nobis, & c.
^g Psal. 12. 6.
^h August. 1. in Psal. 31. Pro hac: pro ipsa venia peccatorum.

blind.

blind-asinus, and not vnderstanding what wee say. But to make the matter more plaine, it is to bee noted, that in three respects we continue daily to aske of God forgiveness of sinnes, of which M. Perkins hath noted two. First, as S. Austine saith, because we daily commit offence, wee haue neede daily to crave pardon. But what needs that saith M. Bishop, if wee were before assured of pardon? I haue answered him, that our assurance before hand and alwaies is, that our prayer obtaineth it at Gods hands. Therefore wee pray, and by faith doe rest assured, that vndoubtedly we haue that for which wee pray. Secondly, we pray for forgiveness, not for that we haue no assurance thereof, but for that wee desire greater assurance and more comfortable feeling of it, that as forgiveness with God is full and perfect, so the same may accordingly bee sealed in our hearts. Our faith being weake giueth but weake assurance, and therefore wee begge of God that our hearts may be enlarged, that the testimony of the spirit may more freely sound vnto vs, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee. Now here saith M. Bishop: Good Sir, do you not see how you overthrow your selfe? And why so? Forsooth if your assurance be but weake & small, it is not the assurance of faith, which is as great and strong as the truth of God. But good Sir, we haue already shewed you, that therein you tell vs a senselesse and vnlkely tale. The truth of God is alwaies alike, not subiect to alteration, neuer increased or diminished; but our faith is greater and lesse, sometimes hath a full and sometimes a wane, and to vs the truth of God is according to our faith, and according to our apprehension and feeling of it. Wherein we are variable and diuers, euen after the manner of Peters faith, of whom S. Austine saith: Peter was the paterne of vs all; sometimes he beleuech, sometimes he wauerech; one while he confesseth Christ to be immortal, an other while he is afraid lest Christ should die. The poore distressed man saith in the Gospel, Lord I beleene, helpe my unbeliefe. He saith, I beleene; therefore there is faith, saith Austine: helpe my unbeliefe, saith hee; therefore there is not yet full and perfect faith. If there be true faith, and yet with faith a remainder of unbeliefe, then the assurance of faith cannot be said to be as great and strong as the truth of God; yea the vntooth heereof is so palpable and grosse, and contrary to the common experience of all beleeuers, as that we may iustly marvel at the wilfull absurditie of this man in the assertion of it.

1 August. de vera & fals. panni. ca. 5. Quia quodidiana est offensus oportet ut sit quod amantiam remissio

1 Bernard. in Annunciat. ser. 1. super. x. fell. 3.

1 August. de ver. Dom. ser. 13.

Illam videte Petrum qui tunc erat: figura vestra, modo fides, modo timor; modo animam suam conficitur modo sume: ne moriatur.

m Mar. 9.

1 August. de verb. Dom. ser. 36 Credens quis, ergo est fides. Sed ad iura incredulitas non est plena fides.

The third reason of our praying continually for forgiveness of sinnes, is for the obtaining of the fruit & effect thereof. For so long as we ^o walk by faith and not by sight, we still pray for the sight of that as touching which we haue now but the comfort of faith & hope. We beleue that we are redeemed both in body and soule, yet still we p sigh in our selues, waiting for the adoption euen the redemption of our bodies. ^q Ioy that thou art redeemed, saith Austinē, but not yet in reall effect; in hope, or as touching hope, be without all doubt. If thou shalt not now groane in hope, thou shalt not attaine to the reall effect. Thus then by prayer we sigh and groane for our redemption, who yet by faith beleue that already we are redeemed. So therefore albeit we beleene that God hath forgiven vs our sinnes, yet still wee pray for forgiveness of sinnes, that that may appeare to vs which we now beleue. The Prophet David giueth vs to vnderstand, that forgiveness of sinnes is blisse and happiness, and therefore a freedom from all misery and sorrow. We still liue in misery and sorrow, and seeme wholly strangers to all title of blissefull state. Therefore being still in case as if our sinnes were not forgiven vs, we still pray for forgiveness of sinnes, that as we haue heard so we may see, and by effects may discern and enjoy the same forgiveness. But here M. Bishop telleth vs, that to pray to God to giue vs those things we are assured of by faith, is as fond and frivolous, as to pray him to make Christ our Lord to be his Sonne, or that there may bee life everlasting to his Saints in heauen, of which they are in full and assured possession. Which is so fond and frivolous a speech, as that well wee may perswade our selues that it neuer came from any wise man. For matters of faith are of diuers sorts. Some already fully acted and done, and those we onely beleue, we doe not pray for them, as the creation of the world, the birth, and death, and resurrection of Christ, and other such like. Other some are beleued, as designed and pronounced by God, but not yet fully acted and effected to vs, which we so beleue, as that still we pray for them till they bee effected, prayer being nothing else but the streame or riuier of faith, & an issue of the desire of that which ioyfully we beleue. A notable example whereof we see in David, who when God had sent Nathan to him, to certifie him that he would stablish the kingdom for euer in his house & posterity, albeit he beleued & ioyfully accepted the tidings hereof, yet forbearth not therefore to pray that it might be so o 1. Cor. 5. 7.

^c Now

p Rom. 8. 13.

q August. in Plal. 37. G. uide te redemptum, sed
nondum re: spe
securus esto. Etc-nim si non gem-
ueris in spe, non peruenies ad rem.

r Plal. 32. 1.

of faith. 1.

2.

s August. de verb.
Dom. ser. 26.
Ostendit fidem
fontem esse orati-
onis, nec posseire riuum ubi caput
aque sicatur.

Now therefore, saith he, confirm for ever the word that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant and his house, and do as thou hast said. For thou O Lord of hosts hast revealed unto thy servant, saying, I will build thee an house; therefore hath thy servant bene bold to pray this prayer unto thee. Therefore now let it please thee to blesse the house of thy servant, that it may continue for ever before thee; for thou O Lord God hast spoken it. Where wee plainly see him praying vnto God, that that might bee, whereof hee was assured by faith, vpon the promise of God that so it should bee, and not onely so, but did therefore pray, because God had revealed vnto him that it should be so. And doe wee not thinke that David beleued the word spoken to him from God by the same Prophet, when hee had admonished him of his grieuous trespasse, and he repented, The Lord hath taken away thy sinne; and yet after wards hee praiceth, Haue mercy vpon me, O God, after thy great goodnesse, according to the multitude of thy mercies doe away mine offences. Our Saviour Christ beleued that his sheepe shall neuer perish, and therefore that the Father would keepe them, and none should take them out of his hands, and yet hee praiceth, Holy Father keepe them in thy name, euen them whom thou hast giuen mee. Hee was assured by faith that God would deliuer him from death, that hee would not leaue his soule in hell, nor suffer his holy one to see corruption; yet in the daies of his flesh did offer up supplications with strong crying and teares to him that was able to saue him from death, and was also heard in that which hee feared. Hee was assured by faith that God would glorifie him; yet hee praiceth, Now glorifie me O Father with thine owne selfe. The Apostle S. Paul was assured by faith, that the Lord would deliuer him from euery euill worke, and preserue him vnto his heauenly kingdome; yet hee ceased not to pray, Leade vs not into temptacion, but deliuer vs from euill. Wee beleue by faith, and are assured that Christs kingdome shall come; yet we dailie pray, Let thy kingdome come. Thus therefore albeit by faith in the promise of God, wee now rest assured of the remission of sinnes, yet because it is not yet revealed, wee stil pray, Forgiue vs our trespasses, that wee may enioy by reality and possession, what wee beleue wee already haue in Gods affection. Now albeit those three arguments hitherto bee idle and vaine conceits, yet for conclusion he commendeth them for substantiall and sufficient, to assure euerie good Christian that hee well may hope for Salvation

doing

doing his dutie, but may not without great presumption assure him of it by faith. But it hath beene already shewed, that doing of auncie can yeeld vs neither faith nor hope truly so called, becaue wee come so short of the doing of it. Therefore Hierome rightly saith, that if wee consider our owne merits, wee must needs despaire. But God would haue the promise to be sure, not according to our merits, but according to his mercie. Hee would haue it to depend vpon his promise and his oath, that by two immutable things wherein it was impossible that God should lie, wee might haue strong consolation, which can be but very weake, yea none at all, so long as wee hang it vpon any other thing. It is therefore a wicked presumption to hope for Salvation by vertue of our owne doings, but the presumption that groweth of faith, is a commendable presumption. It is a good presumption, saith Ambrose, to presume, not vpon thine owne worke, but vpon the grace of Christ. Such a presumption S. Austine teacheth. Whatsoeuer there is about thee, or in thee to presume of, cast it from thee, and let God be thy whole presumption, or presume wholly vpon God. Namely in that sort as S. Ambrose teacheth by occasion of Davids words, Receiue mee according to thy word. It were a matter of intollerable presumption, saith he, to say to God, Receiue me, but that hee addeth the promise of God; as if hee should say, Thou hast caused vs to presume, we challenge thee vpon thine owne bond. This is the presumption of true faith, whereby wee withdraw our eies from our selues, and cast them wholly vpon God, assuredly beleeuing that wee shall receiue, becaue wee beleuee in him that promiseth. Therefore Gregorie saith, By presuming of grace and life, the righteous sing of that iudgement which all the vnrigheteous are afraid of. Let M. Bishop then learne, that there is a godly presumption of Salvation and eternall life, which becaue it cannot arise of any sufficiency of our workes, must necessarilie bee grounded vpon faith alone. Wherein notwithstanding faith receiueth comfort and strength by the good fruits and effects of grace, in the feare and loue of God; in faithfull care and conscience of duty towards God and men, becaue albeit of themselves they cannot be presumed of, yet being fruits of faith, euen in their beginnings & imperfections, are tokens of Gods secret election, foretokens of future happinesse, so that o Hieron. in Esa. l. 17. cap. 64. Si consideremus merita nostra desperandum est.

Aug. in Psal. 88. Non secundum merita nostra, sed secundum illius misericordiam firmata est promissio.

o Heb. 6. 13.

o Ambros. de Sacrament. li. 5. ca. 4. Presume non de operatione tua, sed de Christi gratia, & c. Bonus presumpo Aug. in Psal. 85. Quicquid est circate vel in te vnde possis presumere, abijce à te, & tota presumptione tua Deus sit.

o Psal. 119. 116.

o Ambr. in Ps. 118. Ser. 15. Intolerande presumptioni vide: eum Deo dicere, suscipe me, nisi promissum eius adiungeres, hoc est, ut auderemus ipse scisci, in ote chirographo conuenimus.

o Greg. Magn. in Exec. hom. 22. Per presumptionem gratie & vite cantant iusti iudicium quod iniusti omnes perimescunt.

o Bern. de grat. & lib. arbi. Occulta predestinatio vis indicia, sunt eius felicitatis presagia.

that a man *called to God by feare, and framed to righteousness by love, o Idem epist. 107.
Voca' ius quisque
per timorem, iustificatus
per amorem, pre-
sumit se quoque
esse de numero
beatorum. presumeth that he is of the number of them that shall be blessed. M. Bishop is not acquainted with true faith, and protesteth that he knoweth not whether he haue any feare or loue of God, and therefore no maruell that he is a stranger to this presumption, and doe take that to be an vnlawfull presumption, which indeed is nothing but true faith.

G. W. BISHOP.

To these I will adde two or three others, which M. Perkins afterwards seeks to salve by his exceptions, as he termes them. To his first exception I haue answered before. The second I will put last for orders sake, and answer to the third first, which is :

The Catholikes say, we are indeed to beleue our Salvation on Gods part, who is desirous of all mens Salvation, very rich in mercie, and able to saue vs, but our feare riseth in regard of our selues, because the promises of remission of sins depend vpon our true repentance: Vnlesse you do penance ye shall all perish. And the promise of Salvation, is made vpon condition of keeping Gods commandements. If thou wilt enter into life keepe the Commandements. Againe, No man shall be crowned, except he combat lawfully. Now we not knowing whether we shall well performe these things required by God at our hands, haue iust cause to feare lest God doe not on his part, performe that which he promisseth vpon such conditions. To this M. Perkins answereth, That for faith and true repentance, euery man that hath them knoweth well that he hath them. To which I reply, that for faith being rightly taken, it may be knowne of the party that hath it, because it is a light of the understanding, and so being like a lampe, may bee easily seene: but true repentance requires besides faith, both hope and charitie, which are seated in the darke corners of the will, and cannot by faith be seene in themselves, but are knowne by their effects: which being also uncertaine, doe make but coniectures and a probable opinion, so that place of S. Paul may be omitted where hee saith: Proue your selues whether you be in faith or no. 1. Cor. 13. Because we accord that it may be tried by us, whether we haue faith or no: although I know well, that Saint Pauls words carry a farre difference. But let that passe as impertinent. 1. Cor. 2. 12. To the other. That we haue receiued the the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things which are giuen of God. What things these are which the spirit reuealeth to vs, S. Paul teacheth in the same place, That which the eye hath not scene nor care hath heard, &c. God hath prepared for them, that loue him: but to vs God hath reuealed by his spirit: All this is true: but who they be that shall attaine to that blessed Banquet by God so prepared, God onely knoweth, and by his spirit reuealeth it to very few. And will you learne out of S. Ierome that ancient Doctor the cause why: Therefore (saieth he) it is put ambiguous and left vncertaine, that while men are doubtfull of their Saluation, they may doe penance more manfully, and so may moue God to take compassion on them.

In 3. capit. Ion.

R. ABBOT.

The condition of repentance is required, not as whereby wee worke our Saluation, but whereby we seeke it, and that not by the keeping of the commandements, wherein we all faile, but in Christ alone by faith in him, whence followeth a measure of keeping Gods Commandements, and of striving lawfully vnto him, not as any proper cause of Saluation, but as parts and tokens and preparations of and to that Saluation which wee receiue and haue by Christ alone. Now heere M. Perkins bringeth in the Popish Doctors, affirming that wee cannot be assured that wee haue true faith and repentance, because wee may lie in secret finnes, and so want that which we suppose our selues to haue. M. Perkins answereth, that hee that doth truly repent and beleue, knoweth that hee doth so. To this M. Bishop replieth, that faith being rightly taken, may be knowne of the party that hath it, but true repentance cannot. But how must we conceiue of faith when it is rightly taken? Forsooth hee telleth vs that it is a light of vnderstanding, and so being like a lampe may be easily scene. But true faith is not only a matter of vnderstanding, but a mixt action of the vnderstanding and will, and consisteth not onely in knowing, but in seeking, and desiring, and embracing the thing that wee vnderstand. Therefore Oecumenius obserueth, that the faith recommended by S. Paul beside steadfast assent, importeth a further matter proceeding out of the affection. So wee saw before that Bernard maketh it to be such as whereby a man beleue a Oecumen. in epist. Iac. cap. 2.

Consecrationem ex
affectu proceden-
tem cum firma
assensu nomine fi-
dei vocamus.

ueth that his finnes are forgiuen him. Which M. Bishop might haue learned also of Ferus one of their owne Prophets, though a more faithfull Prophet then commonly theirs are, who saith, that b to beleue is to trust that God for Christ sake wil not impute our finnes. ^a Ferus #
 But that we may see the spirit of giddinesse wherewith this man is carried vp and downe, he himselve but a little before hath told vs, that godly and deuout submission of the vnderstanding to be obedience of faith, is a necessary condition of faith properly so called Faith then is not only a light of vnderstanding, but implieth godlinesse, deuotion, and submitting of the vnderstanding to the obedience of faith, which because it cannot bee without repentance, hope and charitie, it necessarily followeth, that if a man knoweth that hee hath faith, he knoweth also that he hath godlinesse, deuotion, obedience, repentance, hope, charity, and so M. Bishops reply euen by himselve is vtterly ouerthrowne. And to this purpose S. Austin telleth vs, that a man cannot beleue in Christ without hope and loue, and S. Bernard, that the separation of charitie is the death of faith, and Origen, that hope cleaueth inseparably vnto faith. Then if a man know that he hath faith, he cannot bee ignorant that he hath also hope and charity, without which there is no true faith. It is therefore a meere fiction of M. Bishop, that a man may know that he hath faith, but he cannot know that hee hath true repentance, because repentance requireth hope and charity, which forsooth are seated in the darke corners of the will, and cannot certainly be discerned. What a fond toy is this, that a man hopeth, and knoweth not that he hopeth: that he repenteth, and knoweth not that he repenteth: that he loueth, and knoweth not that he loueth? Surely where these things are, they are knowne: and if they be not known, it is because they are not. For the spirit of man knoweth the things that are in man; hee discerneth what is in himselve, though not alwayes the measure and quantity thereof. Otherwise how deth S. Iohn say: By this wee know that wee are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren? How shall we know that we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren, if we cannot know that we loue the brethren? ^b Let a man looke into his heart, and see if he haue charitie, and then let him say, I am borne of God, saith S. Austin, but to what end, if a man cannot see and know whether he haue charitie or not? The same S. Austin saith;

b Ferus in Mat.

cap. 27. Credere

est considerare D. i.

per Crisostom

per at a non im-

putaturum.

c. August. de verb.

Don. ser. 61. Quis

fidei habet sine

spe & dilectione,

Christum esse credit, non in Christi

credit.

d Bernard in Ca.

serm. 24. Mors fi-

dei separati est

charitatis.

c Origen in Ro. ca.

4. Scienis fides si

inseparabiliter

colerere.

h. August. in Iohn

epistol. 5. At-tendit in certu-

det si habeat cha-

ritatem, & hunc

dicat natu suu

ex Deo.

f 1. Cor. 2. 11.

g 1. Ioh. 3. 14.

i De ver. Apost. ser. 6. Si quis spiritum Christi non habet, non se fallat hic non est eius. Et adiuuante ipsius misericordia, spiritum Christi habemus, ex ipsa dilectione iustitiae, integre fide, catholica fide, spiritum Dei nobis inesse agnoscamus.
2. Cor. 13. 5.

saith: If a man haue not the spirit of Christ, let him not deceiue himselfe, he is none of Christs. Behold, saith he, by the helpe of Gods mercie we haue the spirit of Christ. By the loue of righteousnesse and true faith, the Catholike faith, we know that there is in vs the spirit of God. How shall we know by the loue of righteousnesse that the spirit of God is in vs, if we cannot know that there is in vs the loue of righteousnes? But to infringe that idle deuize, M. Perkins alledgeth the words of S Paul, Proue your selues whether you are in the faith. For to what end is this spoken, if we cannot know whether we are in the faith or not? But M. Bishop saith, that they accord that it may be tried whether a man haue faith or not, importing therefore that the place is nothing against them. But he may not so auoid it; for the being in the faith whereof the Apostle speaketh, signifieth more then hee intendeth thereby. Which appeareth plainly by the words which the Apostle addeth: Know ye not that Christ is in you, except ye bee reprobates? thereby shewing that to proue a mans selfe whether hee bee in the faith, is to proue whether Christ bee in him, because the faith of which hee speaketh is that lively faith, whereby Christ dwelleth in our hearts. And if Christ be in you, saith the same Apostle, the body is dead as touching sinne, but the spirit is life for righteousnesse sake, which cannot bee without repentance, hope, charity, and such other vertues wherewith the spirit of Christ endueth them in whom Christ doth dwell. Hee therefore that knoweth himselfe to be in the faith, as the Apostle meaneth it, knoweth Christ to bee in himselfe; hee knoweth himselfe to bee dead to sinne, and aliuie to righteousnesse, and that he is not without repentance, hope, chaitie, and other vertues wrought in him by the spirit of Christ. As for that other meaning of the place which M. Bishop speaketh of, if hee had set it downe, I doubt not but we should haue taken him at dietherin, as well as we do in all the rest. To the other place of the same Apostle, that we haue receiued, not the spirit of this world, but the spirit which is in God, that we may know the things that are giuen vnto vs of God, he answereth, that the Apostle meaneth it of those things whereof he there speaketh, The things which neither eye hath seene, nor eare hath heard, &c. God hath prepared for them that loue him, &c. but who shall attaine to that blessed banquet, saith he, by God so prepared God onely knoweth, and reuealeth it by his spirit to very

i Bernard. in octa. uaz Pasch. ser. 1.
Ea commendatur fides per quam Christus in cordibus nostris habetur.
m Rom. 8. 10.

1. Cor. 12.

very few. Which answer of his giueth him no euasion at all. For if we do vnderstand the words concerning the ioyes of heauen, and that blessed banquet of which hee speaketh, the Apostles words must support, that we know the same to be giuen vnto vs. For how shall we be said to know the things that are giuen vnto vs of God, if we do not know that they are giuen vnto vs? Neither may we conceiue it as he doth, to know that such things are prepared for the faithfull and righteous; for that the diuels themselves also know. Balaam a wicked castaway knew so much when he said, ⁿ Let my soule die the death of the righteous, and let my latter end be like vnto his. Saul knew so much, when ^o he prophesied, as the ^p Iewes say, of the world to come, of the rewards of the iust, and punishments of the vniust. We haue therefore received the spirit of God, that wee may know not onely that such things are prepared of God, but that we may know that God hath giuen the same vnto vs. But the Apostle there meaneth not onely the ioyes and blisse of heauen, but all the gifts of God, whereby the same are wrought and effected vnto vs. The originall of all which gifts is the giuing of Christ vnto vs, whereof the Prophet speaketh, ^a Vnto vs a child is borne, and vnto vs a sonne is giuen, in whom all the promises of God are yea, and are in him Amen, for his sake first made, and in him performed; whom the Father giuing to vs and for vs, ¹ hath together with him giuen vs all things, the gift of the spirit, the gift of repentance, the gift of faith, the gift of righteousnesse, the gift of loue, the gift of suffering for Christ, the gift of all things pertaining to life and godlinesse, the gift of eternall life. All these things Oecumenius compiseth when he expoundeth the things which eye hath not seene, &c. to bee ^d Christ and the Salvation which is wrought by his incarnation, euen as Chrysostr doth vnderstand the same of ^e the surprising of the world by the foolishnes of preaching (as the world accounteth it) of the conuersion of the Genites, of the reconciliation of God to men, and the great benefits that should come thereby, euen as the Apostle saith, ¹ all manner spiritual blessings in heauely things. In a word we are to vnderstand in the Apostles words, ² the vnsearchable riches of Christ preached vnto the Gentils, a mystery which from the beginning of the world was hid in God, & not opened to the sons of men, etc had not seene it, neither had mans hart conceiued it nay; to the very ^h Angels, principallities and powers, it was not known, so that when it was done, ⁱ they did euen desire and n Numb 23.10.

o 1.Sam.10.10.
p Hieron. tradit
Hebraic. in lib.
Regum. Prophe-tisse eum sibi Ju-
dæi dicunt de fu-
turo seculo, de Gog & Magog, &
de premijs iustori& pœnâ impioru.
q Ela. 9.6.
r 2. Cor. 1.30.
s Rom. 8.32.
t 1. Joha 4.13.
u Act. 5.31.
x. Eph. 2.8.
y Rom. 5 17.
z 2. Tim. 1.7.
a Phil. 1.27.
b 2. Pet. 1.3.
c Rom. 6.23.
d Oecumeniu.
1. Cor. a 2 Quæ
preparauit Deus
&c. Christum vide licet & salutem
quæ per incarna-
tionem facta est.
e Chry. in Cor. 1.
bon. 7. Quoniam
per eam quæ vide-
tur esse stultitia predicatio orbem terre superar-
bit, & gentes allcientur, et Dei ad-
hominis erit: recõcalato & intramobili accedent bona.
f Eph. 1.3.
g Cap 3. 5. 8 9.
h Verse 10.
i 1. Pet. 1.12.

delight

delight to looke into it. The accomplishment of which riches is the glorie & ioy of heauen, which yet we know not nor can conceiue, as the Apostle S. Iohn saith, Now are wee the sonnes of God, but yet we knowe not what we shall be, we know not the glory and happinesse that he hath prepared for vs; for we are now dead, and our life is hidden with Christ in God, but when Christ which is our life shall appeare, then shall we also appeare with him in glory; for we know that when hee shall appeare wee shall be like vnto him, for wee shall see him as he is. In the mean time the Apostle saith, that by the spirit we know the things that are (alreadie) giuen vs of God, not by speculation onely of vnderstanding, but by practicke, and experimentall, and effectuall knowledge, whereby we are made partakers of the diuine nature, and renewed to the image of him who first created vs. These things therefore we know in our selues, when wee know the things that are giuen vs of God, and consequently doe know our faith, repentance, hope, loue, in which consisteth that newnesse and communion with God. As for the blisse and glory of heauen, though yet we know it not, yet we know that God hath giuen vnto vs the interest and title of it already, and by faith doe stand assured through the spirit, that he will in due time giue vs the full sight and fruition of it. Which indeed none can know but they that haue it reuealed vnto them from God, but God reuealeth it by the spirit in his word to all those that doe beleue in him. As for the place of Ierome which M. Bishop alledgeth to the contrary, it sheweth his wretched vnfaithfulnesse, but maketh nothing against vs. Ionas had preached destruction to Niniue within fortie daies. The King of Niniue calleth his people to repentance, to sackcloth and ashes, to fasting and mourning, and crying mightily vnto God; for who knoweth, saith he, if God will turne and repent and turne away from his fierce wrath? thereby signifying, that albeit God had by peremptorie sentence threatned their destruction, yet by repentance and earnest intreaty they might happily find mercy. Hereupon Hierome saith, That that is said, Who knoweth if God will turne, is therefore set downe vncertaine and doubtfull, that whilest men are doubtfull of their safetie, they may the more earnestly repent, and the rather moue God to take mercie on them. Now what a reason is this, that because God threatning destruction to wicked and vngodly men, leaueth it in doubt whether he will spare them, that they may the more earnestly k 1. Iohn. 3. 2.

1 Col. 3. 3. 4.

m 1. Per. 1. 3. 4.

n Col. 3. 10.

o Ionas 3. 9.

p Hieron in Ion.
cap. 3. Illud quod
dicitur, Quis scit,
& c. ideo ambigui
ponitur & incertum,
ut dum homines
dubij sunt de salute
fortius agant
penitentiam & magis
ad misericordiam prouocent Deum.

earnestly repent and call for mercy, therefore the faithfull and godly man whome God hath deliuerd from euerlasting destruction, and called to the hope of euerlasting life, should stand in doubt of that Salvation that God hath promised vnto him? The very place and occasion of the speech might haue made M. Bishop to forbear to vse the same to that purpose that hee hath done; but that he is still like his master Bellarmino; so that it carrie some shew, it neuer skilleth whether it be right or wrong.

7. W. BISHOP.

Another reason of this uncertaintie, yeeldeth Saint Augustine in these wordes: In this place of temptation, such is our infirmite, that assurednes might engender pride. To this agreeth S. Gregorie, saying: If we know our selues to haue grace, we are proud. So that to strike downe the pride of our hearts, and to humble us, and to make vs trauaile more carefully in the workes of mortification, God doth not ordinarily assure men at the first of their owne Salvation: but to cheere vp their hearts on the other side, doth put them in great hope of it, like to a discreet and good Lord, who will not at the first entrance into his seruice, infeofe his seruant in the fee simple of those lands, which after upon his good deserts he meaneth to bestow on him. This is a nother kinde of Doctrine, then that which M. Perkins in his last supply deliuered, to wit: That if wee regard our owne indisposition, wee must despaire, because wee bee not worthy of his mercy. Not so good Sir: Because wee know that hee bestoweth mercy upon the unworthy, at the first iustification of a sinner, but will not admit into the Kingdome of heauen any unworthy, but giues men grace while they liue to worke, that they are made worthy of his heauenly Kingdome, according to that: They shall walke with me in whites, because they are worthy, but of this more fully in the chapter of Merits.

De cor & gra. cap. 13.

Lib. 9. moral. ca. 17

Apo. 3. 4

R. ABBOT.

The place of Austine is true, as touching immediate and perfect assurance, such as is free from all assault and impeachment of doubt and feare. For this is a place of temptation and weaknesse, as he truly saith, by reason whereof as wee neuer attaine to a perfection of righteousness against sinne, so wee neuer attaine to a perfection of assurance against doubting. But yet as wee haue a measure of true righteousness against sinne, wherein we doubt not but God accepteth vs, so haue wee also a measure of true and comfortable assurance against all feare and doubt, whereby our hearts doe rest perswaded, that God for euer will preferue vs. Thus God as a wise and carefull father both giueth comfort to his children, and yet prouideth to keepe them within their bounds, that tasting the ioy of his Salvation, and finding it thenceforth bitter and greuous vnto themselues to bee distracted by perplexities and feares from the quiet enjoying thereof, they may the more carefully endeavour to cleaue fast vnto him, and beware of doing any thing that should interrupt their ioyfull peace. He knoweth how ready we are by the corruption of our nature to abuse the comforts and assurances that he giueth vnto vs, and therefore so ordereth the same, as that sometimes out of our nature, sometimes by other afflictions they are nipped and sneaped, that they growe not proud and ranke to the decaying and destroying of themselues. And as sometimes by his admirable wisdom he maketh sin the whetstone of righteousness, so by affliction & trouble of mind, by distrusts and fearefull doubts, he whetteth and sharpeneth our faith and assurance, which by fighting increaseth, and the longer it wrastleth the stronger it waxeth whilest ^a faith (specially when it is assaulted) powreth forth praier, and powring forth of praier obtaineth further strength of faith. And as a man in danger of drowning catcheth for hold to saue himselfe, so whilest the comfort of life maketh offer to goe from vs, we take the better hold thereof, and it becommeth so much the more precious and deare vnto vs. But as wee doe not approue sinne, for that it is vsed sometimes for a helpe of righteousness, so no more doe wee commend doubting, for that it is vsed for the increase of faith, but as against the one so against the other wee fight and labour to abandon it wholly from vs, that wee may say, ^b Who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednesse, &c? Nay in all these things wee are more then conquerers through him that loued vs. For I am perswaded that neither life, nor death, nor things present, nor things to come, nor any creature shall bee able to separate vs from the loue of

God.

^a August. de verb. Dom. ser. 36. Fides fundit orationem, suspiratio impetrat fidei firmitatem.

^b Rom. 8. 35.

God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. Thus therefore we so take the words of Augustin, as that we leaue place for that which elswhere he saith, that God saith to the soule of the faithfull, I am thy Salvation, whereupon it is boldly to say to him, Thou art my God, which, saith he, is no rashnes or presumption, but affection of desire and sweetnesse of hope. For that voice of God whereby hee saith to our soule, as Dauid for himselfe prayeth, I am thy Slauation, what is it else but the spirit that giueth witness to our spirit that wee are the sonnes of God? The words of Gregorie if there bee any such, for in the place by him cited they are not, may import, how ready our corruption is to misconuert the graces and gifts of God, but to deny to the faithfull man the knowledge of Gods grace in himselfe, is to bereaue him of all stedfast hope, and to quench in him all true conscience of thankfulness towards God, because he cannot hope, that knoweth nothing whereupon to hope, nor hartily giue thanks that knoweth not whether hee haue cause to giue thanks or not. And how doth S. Iohn say, By this we know that we are in him and he in vs, because he hath giuen vs of his spirit, if we do not know that he hath giuen vs of his spirit? and how should wee not know that wee haue receiued grace, if we know that we haue receiued the spirit of grace? But of this matter sufficient hath bene spoken in the former section, Now whereas M. Bishop saith that God doth not ordinarily assure men at the first of their owne Salvation, if he meane that God doth not at the first offer any such assurance, hee saith vtruly. For God speaketh by the same word in the beginning and in the end, and therefore both in the beginning and in the end, giueth the same assurance, although our faith being perhaps weake, doth not by and by so fully & firmly lay hold thereof. Therefore whereas he compareth God to a master who wil not at the first entrance into his seruice in feoffe his seruants to the fee simple of those lands which after vpon his good deserts he meaneth to bestow vpon him, he doth wrong to the maiesty of God, thus to limit his bounty to the prouident and wary courtes of men, occasioned, partly by their ignorāce, & vncertainty of other mens future condition, & partly by their impotency and vnableness to preuent & help that, that haply may proue amiss. For mā knoweth not what the behavior of his seruants hereafter wil be, whereas he intēdeth his gift no otherwise to him but vpon his good behavior, neither is it in his power to better it, if he become of worse quality

c Augustin. in Psalm.
32. Non est ista temeritas: affectus est desiderij; dulcedo spes. Dicit anima, omnino securā dicat, Deus meus es tu, qui dicit anima, salus tua ego sum.

d Pla. 35. 3.
e Rom. 8. 16.

f 1. Iohn. 4. 13.

then he expected: but God from the beginning knoweth our mould and making, and that there is no good qualitie to be expected of vs, but what the power of his owne hand graciously worketh in vs, and therefore his promise is what he will doe for vs, not what he would haue vs to do for our selues, and as he freely giueth vs the inheritance, so taketh vpon himselfe ^{to} make vs meete to be partakers of his inheritance. To which purpose S. Austin notably speaketh, wholly ouerthrowing M. Bishops comparillon; ^h God promised to men fellowship with God, immortality to vs beeing mortal, iustification to vs beeing sinners, glorification to vs being abiects and castaways. Whatsoeuer hee promised, hee promised to vs being unworthy, that it might not bee promised as a wages or reward for works, but beeing grace by name, might be gratis and freely giuen, because to liue iustly, so farre as man can liue iustly, is not a matter importing mans merit but the benefit and gift of God. Let M. Bishop therefore learne hereby, that God doth not rest vpon our good behaiour to infeofe vs to the fee simple of the land of the liuing, but that good behaiour it selfe is a part of that blessing whereto by his free promise he hath infeofed vs. The originall of which infeofement consisteth in the grace of Gods election, the liuerie and seisin in the grace of his adoption, wherein he hath made vs his children and ⁱ heires as touching hope of euerlasting life, which therefore we expect by title of inheritance, not by purchase of merit, hauing receiued for ^k earnest and pledge thereof the spirit of Christ, sanctifying and preparing vs thereunto. Which sanctification notwithstanding he so measureth out vnto vs whilest wee liue here, as that he leaueth vs nothing whereof to glory in our selues: but when we measure our selues to his iudgement, we see still that there is that corruption remaining in vs for which he might take occasion iustly to condemne vs, that therefore ⁱ wee may know at that day, as Saint Bernard saith, that, not for the workes of righteousness which we haue done, but of his owne mercie he hath saued vs. Rightly therefore doth M. Perkins say, that in regard of our selues and our owne indisposition wee haue to despaire of our Salvation, euen to the very death, as beeing unworthy thereof. But saith M. Bishop, Not so good Syr, because we know that he bestoweth mercy vpon the unworthy in the first iustification of a sinner. But what is that to giue vs hope, to say that God in Baptisme sheweth mercie to vs though

Col. 1. 12.

h August. in Ps.
109. Promisit hominibus diuinita-
tem, mortalibus
immortalitatem,
peccatoribus iusti-
ficationem, abiectis
glorificationem.
Quicquid promisit
indignis promisit,
ut non quasi operi-
bus merces pro-mitteretur sed
gratia à suo nomi-
ne gratis daretur;
quia hoc ipsum
iuste vivere inquatum homo po-
test iuste vivere
non meritis
humani sed bene-
ficij diuini est.

ⁱ Tit. 3. 7.

^k Ephes. 1. 14.

l Bernard in Cass
serm. 50. Ut sciamus in die illa
quia non ex operi-
bus iustitie, &c.

though vnworthy, if it bee true which hee addeth, that hee will not admit into the kingdome of heauen any vnworthy; when as after Baptisme we are all so farre from being worthy thereof? Nay saith hee, God giues men grace while they liue to worke that they are made worthy of his heauenly kingdome. But where is that man that hath receiued so great grace, as that he may be thought to be made worthy of the heauenly kingdome? Iohn Baptist saith of Christ, ^m I am not worthy to loose the latchet of his shoe; and who is hee then of whome it may bee said, that hee is worthy to raigne with Christ in his kingdome of glorie? The Centurion of whome Christ gaue testimony, that hee found not so great faith, no not in Israel, yet confesseth of himselfe, I am not worthie that thou shouldest enter vnder my rooffe; who is he then of whome we may be perswaded that he is worthie to enter vnder the rooffe of heauen? ¶ No man sheweth such conuersation of life, saith Chrysostome, as that hee is worthy of the heauenly kingdome, but this is wholly the gift of God. How then shall we belecue M. Bishop, that any man so worketh, as that thereby hee is made worthy of the heauenly kingdome? As for the place which hee citeth out of the Reuelation, it is at large to be handled, as is this whole point concerning worthinesse, in the question of Merits, and therefore thither I referre the Reader for the explication thereof.

^m Mar. 1. 7.

ⁿ Mar. 8. 10.

^o Ver. 8.

^p Chrysost. in Col. hom. 2. Nemo talem vitæ conuersationem ostendit ut regno dignus esse possit, sed hoc totum est donum Dei.

S. W. BISHOP.

The fift reason for our opinion is taken out of M. Perkins second exception, to wit; howsoeuer a man may bee assured for his present state, yet no man is certaine of his perseuerance to the end. ¶ And therefore, although we might be assured of our Iustification, yet can we not be certaine of our Salvation. For hee onely that perseuereth to the end, shall bee saued. M. Perkins answer is, that praier doth assure vs to perseuer to the end: for God bids vs pray, that wee fall not into temptation, and promiseth an issue fourth: So then the assurance depends upon praier, and not upon our former faith. What then if wee doe not pray so as wee should? may not the enemy then, not onely wound, but kill vs to? it cannot bee denied: and therein, as in diuerse other workes of pietie, many haue beene too too slacke, as the pitifull fall of thousands haue taught vs. Oh saith M. Perkins, it cannot bee, that hee which was once a member of Christ, can euer after bee wholly cut off. O shamelesse assertion, and contrarie to many plaine texts, and examples of holie Scriptures: Doth not our Sauiour say in expresse words, That euerie branch in me not bearing fruit, he wil take it away? And againe, If any abide not in me, he shall be cast forth as the branch, & shall wither, and bee cast into the fire: which doth demonstrate, that some which were members of Christ, be wholly cut off, and that for euer. Are we not by faith made members of Christ by our aduersaries owne confession? and doth not our blessed Sauiour say, expounding the parable of the sower, That the seed which fell vpon the rocke, doth signifie them, who with ioy receiue the word, and these (saith hee) haue no roote, but for a time they belecue, and in time of temptation reuolt? Doth not S. Paul in expresse termes say, That some hauing faith and good conscience, expelling good conscience; haue made shipwrack of their faith? of whom were by name, Hymenæus and Alexander. The like, That in the last daies, some should reuolt from the faith: Againe, That some for couetousnesse sake, had erred from the faith. And for example amongst other, take Saul the first king of Israel, who was at his election (as the holie Ghost witnesseth) so good a man, that ther was no better then hee in all Israel, and yet became reprobate, as is in Scripture signified. The like is probable of Solomon, and in the newe Testament of Iudas the traitor, & Simon Magus whom S. Luke saith, that he also himselfe beleued, and after became an Arch-heretike, and so died: the like almost may be verified of all Arch-heretikes, who before they fell, were of the faithfull.

¹. Cor. 10.

R. ABBOT.

This argument were somewhat worth, if God hauing made vs partakers of his grace did thenceforth leaue vs to our selues and to our owne keeping, for then there were not onely casualtie but certaintie of our falling away from him. But looke by what our faith assureth vs of present standing, by the same and as farre it secureth vs against future falling, the assurance of faith beeing that ^a neither things present nor THINGS TO COME shall separate vs from the loue of God, which is in Christ our Lord. It looketh vpon God as a carefull father, who himselfe ^b teacheth all his children that they may bee sure to learne; as a good shepheard that ^c so gathereth his flocke

Ioh. 15.

Luc. 8.

1. Tim. 1. 19.

3. Tim. 4.

1. Tim. 6.

1. Reg. 19.

1. Reg. 15. & 16.

Act. 8.

^a Rom. 8. 38.^b Esa. 54. 13.

Ierem. 31. 33.

^c Ier. 23. 3 4.

flocke as that none of them shall be lacking : as a good husbandman, d Esa. 27. 3.
 that so fenceth ^d his vineyard and keepeth it night and day, that none e Mat. 16. 18.
 assaile or hurt it; as a ^e rocke strong and sure, so that the gates of hell f 1. r. 32. 40.
 shall not preuaile against the Church of the faithfull, that are founded g. 1. ubi c. 23. 37.
 and built vpon it. It looketh vnto Gods promise, ^f I will put my h Iohn. 17. 11. 20.
 feare into their hearts that they shall not depart from mee, whereby it i Pet. 1. 5. expecteth perpetuall and assured establishment from him alone. It k August. de looketh vnto the mediation of Christ, who hath not prayed for l bono persever.
 Peter only, that ^b his faith might not faile, but ^h for all that beleue in cap. 7. supra. Of him; Holy Father keepe them in thy name: whereupon the Apostle free will Sect. 14 Peter telleth vs, that ⁱ wee are kept by the power of God through faith l Idem ad artic.
 vnto Salvation. Hee that keepeth vs by faith, must necessarily bee sibi falsis impos. vnderstood to preferue and keepe our faith, not by any power of art. 12. Nec que ours, but by his owne onely power, ^k who since the fall of man will illuminatus obce-not haue it to belong to any thing but his onely grace, that either we come cat. nec que adifi-vnto him or do not afterwards depart from him. In a word, faith seeth cauis destruit, nec in the word of God that the worke of grace is irreuocable, and que plantauit ue-standeth fast and inuiolate for euer; ⁿ neither doth God blind them uellit. Sine pam-whom he hath enlightened, nor destroy what he hath builded, nor plucke tenia enim sunt vp what he hath planted, because the gifts and calling of God are dona & uocatio without repentance, ^m that is, they are firmly established to bee without any Dei.
 change, so that ⁿ whom he hath called and iustified, them he glorifieth, m De predest.
 because ^o he calleth and iustifieth none but whom hee hath predestinated sanc. ca. 16. ad off.
 vnto glorie; and therefore it followeth, that hee giueth them perse- sine mutatione sta-uerance for the attainement of the said glorie. ^p The Father, faith bulster fixa sunt.
 Ambrose, that was the giuer cannot reuoke his gifts, nor put away him n Rom. 8. 30.
 from the grace of his fatherly affection, whom he hath entertained and o August. de pre-received by adoption. ^q For such is the grace of God, saith Chrysostome, digit. sancti. ca. 17.
 it hath no end, it neuer determineth, but still proceedeth to greater bene- Non alios sed quos fits. Which is not wont to be so in the gifts of men: for a man hauing ip- predestinatus; iptained an office, an honor or principality, hath no perpetuity therein, sos & uocauit; & c but is soone bereft of it. For albeit the hand of man do not take it away, p Ambrosi. de Ju-yet death will, which speedily shall ouertake him. But the good gifts which cob. & uir. beat. li.
 God giueth are not so, as from which neither man, nor time, nor any power 1. cap. 6. Num Deus pater ipse qui con-sua uoluntate, et quos adoptione
 suscepit eos ad pa-
 tris affectus gra-
 tiam elegit.
 q Chrys. in Rom.
 hom. 9. Tuis ipsa Dei gratia si uicem
 nullam habet, ter-
 minum non nouit,
 sed & ad maiora
 semper progreditur
 a que progreditur
 Id quod non ita in hominibus uide-
 mus; uosbi gratia,
 affectus est quis magistratum, gloriam, principatum: tamen in eo perpetuus non manet, sed confestim ab eo e currit.
 Nam ut honorem illum humana manus non recipiat, certe superueniens mors omnino e rapta est. At que diuina largi-tur haudquaquam talia sunt à quibus uidelicet: non homo, non tempus, non uicem aduersarum rerum, non ipse diabolus, non mors intrinsecus, deurbare non poterit, quam uel mortis cum sumus, tum demum sumus ea passus sumus, at que adeo quis progrediamur magis, eo maioribus affectis sumus.

affectus est quis magistratum, gloriam, principatum: tamen in eo perpetuus non manet, sed confestim ab eo e currit.
 Nam ut honorem illum humana manus non recipiat, certe superueniens mors omnino e rapta est. At que diuina largi-tur haudquaquam talia sunt à quibus uidelicet: non homo, non tempus, non uicem aduersarum rerum, non ipse diabolus, non mors intrinsecus, deurbare non poterit, quam uel mortis cum sumus, tum demum sumus ea passus sumus, at que adeo quis progrediamur magis, eo maioribus affectis sumus.

of aduersities, nor the diuell, nor death approaching can remoue vs, yea when we are dead, we do more assuredly possesse the same. In a word^r it is impossible, saith Origen, that that which God quickneth should bee slaine, either by himselfe or any other. It is true then that hee (onely) that perseuereth to the end (shall bee saved, but it is true also that God giueth perseuerance vnto Saluation to all them to whom he hath giuen the true faith of Saluation, ^r such a gift of perseuerance, as not onely without which they cannot perseuere, but by which they doe no other but perseuere, or by which they doe certainly perseuere, so as that their faith doth neuer finally faile, neither shall their end find it but continuing in them. As touching this point M. Perkins answered very effectually, that wee pray that God would not suffer vs to bee wholly ouercome of the diuell in any temptation, when we say, Leade vs not into temptation, and that to this petition we haue a promise answerable, that God with temptation will giue an issue, and therefore that the diuell howsoeuer he wound the faithfull, yet shall neuer bee able vnterly to ouercome them. Whereto M. Bishop very idly replieth according to his maner, by a falthic of diuision, that then the assurance dependeth vpon prayer, and not vpon our former faith. But let him take the same answer in effect againe, that the assurance still dependeth vpon faith, which^r faith is the fountaine of prayer, which prayer beggeth of God as Christ hath commanded, Lead vs not into temptation, which to whomsoeuer it is graunted, ^u he by the gift of God perseuereth in that sanctification which by the gift of God he hath receiued, because no man faileth of perseuerance but by beeing led into: temptation: and concerning temptation the Apostles words import the promise of God to all the faithfull, ^x God is faithfull, who will not suffer you to bee tempted aboue your strength, but together with the temptation will giue the issue, that ye may be able to bear it. Whercupon S. Ambrose saith most notably to the purpose wee haue in hand, ^y Therefore doth the Apostle say, that God is faithfull and will not suffer them to be tempted aboue their strength, because he hath promised to giue the kingdome of heauen to them that loue him, and must needs giue the same because hee is faithfull. For that cause therefore he will be present to them being in trouble for his sake, and will not suffer so much to be laid upon them as is not to be suffered, but either will cause the temptation to cease, or if it be long, will giue strength to endure it: otherwise he shall not giue that which he promised, because the party suffering shall be overcome, being a man subiect to infirmity, and so shall not bee to receiue the promise. But because God is faithfull which hath promised, he helpeth him, that he may fulfill his promise, and no more is permitted to be laid upon him, then it is knowne to God that he is able to beare, so that he is not suffered to be tempted the fourth day that is knowne not to be able to be endure beyond the third day. So then by this fathers iudgement, the Apostle in those words giueth to vnderstand, that God hauing promised to the faithfull the kingdome of heauen, doth so provide, as that he may performe vnto them his promise, which he should not performe, if either their own lightnes or any aduerse power should preuaile to make them vncapable thereof, and therefore he suffereth them not by any temptation to be taken away from him, but giueth them constancy and perseuerance whereby they wade out of the floods thereof, that they neuer bee drowned in them. This is the promise of God, and this promise faith apprehendeth, and accordingly praieth and beleueth according to the promise, that it shall obtaine that which it praieth for, and therefore shall not by any temptation be vtterly ouerthrowne. But what then, saith M. Bishop, if we pray not so as we ought? may not the enemy then not onely wound but also kill vs? We answer, Yes indeed M. Bishop, he would so, and both faith & praiere, and al would faile, if God were not the keeper and maintainer thereof. But it hath bene before said, that faith is the fountaine of praiere, and therefore God in the keeping of our faith, continueth our praiere, because the streame cannot faile, so long as the fountaine faileth not. Praiere is the breath of faith, which neuer ceaseth to breath, so long as it is aliue. Prayers are the beames of faith; if the light of faith be not quenched, it certainly sendeth forth his beams of praiere.² Christ therefore hauing praied for his, that their faith may not faile, it shall neuer faile finally in any of them. And therefore they shall neuer vtterly giue ouer to pray vnto him, that it may be fulfilled to thē which is promised, everyone that calleth vpon the name of the Lord, shall be saved. And surely God wanteth not meanes whereby to preserue and continue both the one & the other, not onely by instruction & aduertisement of the word & sacraments, but also by correction and discipline of crosses

² August. de conu. rept. & grat. ca.

12. Pro his interpellante Christo ne deficiat fides eorum sine dubio non desinet usque in finē.
a Rom. 10. 13.

crosses and afflictions, and many greivances of temptations, by which as occasion serueth, he fretteth off the rust, & bloweth away the ashes of carnal security; by occasion whereof as children affrighted or greiued, runne to their father for succor, so are we moued to go by praier vnto God, according to the saying of the Prophet Esay: b Lord in affliction they haue visited thee, they haue powred forth a praier when thy chastisement was vpon them. Albeit therefore of our selues we easily grow slack both in praier, and in all other works of piety & godlinesse, yet God prouideth to the contrary, to keepe the fire of his spirit continually burning in our hearts, c opening our eares by his corrections, to cause vs to cease from our (euill) enterprises, and to heale our pride, and to keepe back our soule frō the pit: which is the same that the Apostle saith: d When we are iudged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we may not be condemned w^{it}h the world. And whereas M. Bishop alledgeth, that thousands pitifully fall away, we answer him, that they which finally fall, did neuer truly stand, though they seemed to stand, nor euer did truly beleue, though they seemed to beleue, but euen of their fals doth God also make vse, to make those that are truly his to stand the faster, striking thereby a dread & feare into their hearts, wherby they abhorre to think of that befalling in thēselues, which hath befallen in the other, that they may the more instantly call vpon him, and embrace the meanes whereby they should firmly apprehend & take hold of him. We say the same that M. Perkins doth, that it cannot be that he that is once indeed a member of Christ, can ener after be wholly cut off. But this disliketh M. Bishop much, so that he exclaimeth, O shamelesse assertion! Where we may more iustly cry out of him, O shamelesse man, that maketh Christ lesse affectionate & kind to the spirituall members of his mysticall body, then he himself is to the earthly members of his own naturall body. M. Bishop wil not suffer any member of his body to putrifie & rot away, if he can saue it; and wil he make vs beleue, that Christ suffereth his mēbers to rot away frō him? Shal we think that Christ doth lesse respect a faithfull soul, thē any of vs doth respect a finger or a toe? e Can Christ comdemn thee, saith Ambrose to the true beleeuing man, whom he himselfe hath redeemed frō earth, and whose life he knoweth to be the reward of his own death? Wil he not say, What profit is there in my bloud, if I comdemn him whō I haue saued? He is faithful & wil not deny himself; he wil not vndo that which he hath done, nor blot out his owne name, or suffer it to be blotted out, which he hath

b Esā 26.16.

c Job.33.16.17.

d 1. Cor. 11.32.

e Ambros. de Lacob. & vit. beat. l. 1. ca. 6. Poteris ergo ille te damare quē redemit a morte, pro quo se obtulit, cuius vitam mortuus sine mercedem esse cognoscit? Nōne dicit, Quae utilitas in sanguine meo, si damno quē ipse saluauit?

written by his spirit, in the hart of euery one that beleeueth. He will not dismember himselfe, or receiue a maime in that ^f body which (generally in the whole, & respectiue in euery part) is the fulnes of him ^f Eph. 1. 23. that filleth all in all. Seeing therefore euery true beleeuer is truly a member of this body, & helpeth to make vp this fulnesse of Christ, it cannot be that Christ should suffer any true beleuer to perish but quickeneth & cherisheth euery such member with his spirit of life, & healeth the wounds and sicknesses therof, that it may neuer die. But of this point further in the section next (sue one, here it shall suffice to examine those texts & examples of holy Scriptures, which he saith are contrary to that that M. Perkins here affirmeth. Which if they be many and plaine, as he saith, we may thinke him a very silly man, that of those many could make no better choice then he hath done. The first place is that of our Sauour Christ, ^e Euery branch in me not bearing ^e Joh. 15. 2. fruit, he will take away. Wherein the Reader may easily see, that he doth but only abuse the simplicitie and ignorance of such as cannot espie his fraud. He telleth vs of taking away the branches that beare no fruit, wherasthe matter in question is of the perseuerance of those branches that do bring forth fruit. We doubt not but the branches which beare no fruit shalbe taken away, but we speake of branches, which as touching present state do bring forth fruit, & of the our Sauour addeth, ^h Euery brāch that beareth fruit, the father purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit. The branch thē that beareth fruit shal perseuer, & shall neuer be cut off, because the Father purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit. But M. Bishop will vrge that Christ saith, Euery branch in me; therby to signifie, that euē those branches which do not beate fruit are in Christ, and yet are cut off & taken away. But there is no necessitie of any such construction: the words are rather to be taken as we read thē, Euery branch that beareth not fruit in me. For euery man is compared to a branch, & naturally we are al brāches of a wild vine, as we grow frō the corrupted stocke of Adam, & bring forth none but sowre & vsauourie fruit, so that to bring forth good fruit we had need to be transplanted & remoued from the stocke of Adam, to be ingrafted into Christ. And this may the words of Christ impote, that the Father taketh & destroieth euery branch that stil cōtinueth to bring forth fruit in Adā, and is not implanted into Christ to bring forth fruit in him. Which construction if we follow, as it carieth most prebability, then here is nothing said of any to be cut off that is a branch in Christ the true vine, but of branches taken and cast away that are not in him. But yet granting him that reading of the words which he desireth, yet he is no whit the nearer to his purpose thereby. For men are diuersly vnderstood to be in Christ; some by semblance & shew, other some in deed and truth: some by outward calling & profession only; other some by graçe and inward regeneration: some according to the flesh, and in the eie of the Church, other some according to the spirit and power of Christ, and in the eie of God. The Church is the floore wherein is both corne and chaffe; the field wherein groweth both wheat & tares; the net that catcheth al sorts of fishes both good & bad; the pasture where feed both sheepe and goates: the banquet house that entertaineth al guests that com both clothed & vn-clothed, al yet comming vnder the name of friends; al saying, Lord, Lord; al professing themselues to take part with Christ, ⁱ al children by communion of Sacraments, whereby there is in them a shew of godlinesse, but many thornes by malignity of behauiour, whereby they deny the power thereof: all sheepe in outward complement & complement to the Church, but ^k many wolues in sheepes clothing, lying in wait to make a spoile. Now we are to distinguish them that truly are in Christ, from them that are not so. Of them that truly are in Christ & in present state of iustification, our speech here is, that they can neuer wholly be cut off; the rest we know are cut off from that which they seemed to haue, but indeed had not: which if they had had indeed as they seemed to haue, ^m they should haue had more giuen, that they might haue abundance, and not be cut off from that they had. It is therefore nothing against vs, which M. Bishop alleadgeth, that fruitlesse branches, which in deede are not in Christ, though they will seeme to be, are cut off from seeming any longer to be that which in truth they neuer were. Every one that truly is a branch in Christ, bringeth forth triut in him, & every branch that bringeth forth fruit, the Father purgeth that it may bring forth more fruit. Every one therfore that is truly a branch in Christ, as every true beleuer is, shall continue a branch in him for euer, that it may be verified which the Prophet saith, ⁿ Such as be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God. They shall still bring forth euen in age and shall be fat and flourishing. By this the answer is plaine to the other place; If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and shall wither

and i Augusti. de unit. eccles. cap. 13. Vnde appellat spinas nisi propter malignitatem morum? Et eandem vade filis nisi propter communionem sacramentorum? Et cap. 12. Propter sacramentum que cum sanctis communiter habeat in eis est quedam forma pietatis cuius virtutem ne-ganr.

k De bapt. cont. Donatist. lib. 6. c. 1. Characterem dominicum multo et lupi et lupus interfingunt qui videtur quidem in eis esse, veritatem ad illam ouem que est iam ex multis una est non pertinere morum suorum fructibus consuevit.

l Luk. 8. 18.

m Mat. 13. 12

n Plal. 92. 13.

and be cast into the fire. For thereby is imported what befalleth to them, who carying semblance to be in Christ, beare no fruit in him, who because they are not truly that which they seeme to bee, therefore abide not in that which they seeme, and either by death or by other occasion become corporally separated from the Church, to which they before (but onely) seemed to bee coupled. It is true then that if a man abide not in Christ, though for the time he seeme to be in Christ, he is cast forth and perisheth: but it followeth not therefore, that any man that faithfully beleueth in Christ, and therefore truly is in Christ, doth not abide in him. Nay our Sauiour himself teacheth vs the contrary when he saith: He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood abideth in me and I in him. For what is it to eat the flesh of Christ and to drinke his blood, but to beleue in Christ; to be partakers of his passion, and with comfort and vse to lay up in our minds that his flesh was crucified and wounded for vs? Euery one then that truly beleueth in Christ, eateth his flesh & drinketh his blood and therefore abideth in Christ, and Christ in him. No man therefore that truly beleueth in Christ, is euer cut off or cast forth to wither or to be throwne into the fire. Now to an indifferent Reader I might alledge, and it easily appeareth by the vse of that terme of adiding, that by adiding in Christ, is meant our very being in Christ, which is therefore so expressed, because no man is in Christ truly and indeed, but the same abideth in him for euer. So that the meaning of Christs words shall bee, If any man be not truly ingrafted into me as the true vine, to grow vpon mee, and to bring forth fruit by me, he is cast forth as a dead and vnprofitable branch, and shal come to nought. But it booteth not to alledge this to a wrangler, who whatsoeuer appeare othewhere, will not heere vnderstand it otherwise then to serue his owne turne. Against him therefore the other solution is plaine, that whosoever beleueth in Christ, the same abideth in him, and therefore shall neuer be cut off, so that yet he is farre enough from any demonstration, to proue any who are truly members of Christ, are wholly and for euer cut off from him. Let vs see whether the rest will afford him any better demonstration. Are we not by faith, saith he, made members of Christ by our aduersaries own confession? Yes M. Bishop, but yet not by euery kind of faith; for S. James saith, The diuels beleene, and yet they are not thereby the members of Christ. We are made the members of Christ only by

o. August. epist. 59 Separantur multi ab ecclesia, sed cum moriuntur, qui ta-
men cum uiuunt
per sacramentis comunionem uni-
tatisque Catholice videntur ecclesie copulati.

p. Iohn 6. 56.

q. August. in Iohn
tract. 25. 26.

r. De doct. Christ.
lib: 2. cap. 16. Figu-ra est praeiens passioni Domini esse communican-
dum, & suauiter
arque uoluer re-
codendum in memoria quod caro
eius pro nobis crucifixa & vulnera-
sa sit.

1 Tim 2. 19.

by true and liuely faith, whereby Christ dwelleth in our hearts, of which it is that the Apostle saith, ^c Ye are all the Children of God by faith in Christ Iesus You will not say M. Bishop, that by euery faith a mā is spiritually made a mēber of Christ, because you say that there is faith without charity, and you dare not say that without charity a man may be a member of Christ. Which being so, how vainly doth he alledge, that ^u our Sauour faith in the parable of the sower concerning them that receiue the word in stonie ground, that with ioy they receiue the word, but haue no root, and for a time beleue, and in time of temptation reuolt? For though it be said that they beleue, yet it followeth not that they beleue with that faith whereby they should become the members of Christ. For Herod in that sort beleued the word preached by John Baptist, ^x whom he reuerenced as a iust and holy man, & heard him gladly, and did many things accordingly, and yet hee was not therefore a member of Christ. By conuiction of conscience men oft times receiue the word, and cannot but beleue & acknowledge the trueth thereof when yet they embrace it not with affection of loue, and therefore haue not that ^y faith which worketh by loue, which onely is true faith. And how can he perswade vs that true members of Christ are by Christ himselfe compared to the stonie ground? Wee are perswaded that onely the good ground are the true members of Christ; as for the rest they are ^z as bad humors in the body as S. Austin saith, but members they are not. And how should there be true faith in them of whom Christ saith; They haue no root? Can true faith grow where there is no root for it to grow vpon? Nay S. Austine telleth vs, that faith it selfe is ^a the root whence all good fruit doth grow, and how can they be said to haue true faith, of whom it is truly said, that they haue no root? To be short, these are said to beleue (but) for a time, but of them that truly beleue, it is said, ^b Whosoener beleueth in him shall not be confounded, and therefore their faith shall neuer faile. The next place is lewdly falsified by him, alledging that some hauing faith and a good conscience, expelling good conscience, haue made shipwracke of their faith, whereas S. Paul saith not, that they had faith and a good conscience, but instructeth Timothie for the fighting of a good fight, ^e to haue faith and a good conscience, which (good conscience) some, saith he, reiecting haue made shipwrack concerning the faith, of whom are Hymeneus and Alexander. Where by faith as Oecumenius obserueth, he meaneth

c Gal. 3.26.

u Mat. 13.20.1

x Mar. 6.20.

y Gal. 5.6.

z Augustin. in Ioan. tract. 3. Infr. scē 7.
10.a J dem. in Psal. 31 Laudo fructum
boni operis, sed in fide agnosco radicem.

b Rom. 9.33.

e 1. Tim. 1.19.

a faith and beliefe concerning doctrine, and understandeth conscience as touching conuersation; which conscience of good life, saith he, they reiecting, made shipwracke of faith. For when a man liueth wickedly, he maketh shipwracke concerning faith. For men, that they may not be troubled with the terrour of things to come, labour to perswade their owne minds, that those things are lies which with vs are spoken concerning the resurrection and iudgement to come. S. Pauls words then import that they had professed the faith, that is, the doctrine of faith, the doctrine which in Christianity we beleue and professe, but they held not ^e the mysterie of faith in a pure conscience, they liued lewdly and wickedly in the profession of the faith; their consciences were fraught with the guilt of following their owne vngodly lusts; and therefore they renouced the faith, the doctrine of God, that they might not thereby find any crosse or checke in their damnable and wicked courses. What is this to that true faith, whereby we beleue in Christ to iustification and righteoufnesse; whereby we repose the trust and confidence of our Saluation in him, and do truely call vpon the name of the Lord? That they had not this faith it is plaine, because S. Paul saith plainely, that they reiected a good conscience; for a ^f good conscience is alwaies an inseparable companion of an vnfained faith. The greater is the impudency of this brabler, who saith as out of the Apostle, that they had a good conscience, whereas the words of the Apostle are directly contrary to that hee saith. The other two places are of the same sort, ^g some in the last daies shall reuolt from the faith, and ^h some for conetonsnesse, haue erred from the faith, meaning by faith the doctrine of the Church, as where it is said, ⁱ some of the Priests were obedient to the faith; and againe, ^k He preacheth the faith which before hee destroyed, and againe, ^l Rebuke them sharply that they may be found in the faith, and therefore in the former of those two places, he opposeth to faith ^m the doctrines of diuels, that so faith may be known to signifie the doctrine which is of God. That reuolt then is frō the faith of publik preaching which wicked men make shew to receiue onely by hypocriticall & fained faith; not frō faith of priuate conscience wher by onely true belecuers make vse of the faith of publique preaching, to their own comfort & Saluation, which is therefore called the faith of Gods elect, because it is found in none but only the elect. Thus therefore his places to reue not his purpofse, let vs see now the examples which he allegeth.

d Oecumen. in 1. Tim. 1. Eadem dicitur que est circa dogmata; conscientiam vero que circa conuersationem est. Quam inquit conscientiam que est de re. Et uisendo repellentes nonnulli? Vbi enim quis reprobi uisus est: am circa fidem uas fragilis facis Siquidem ne serore futurorum cruciatur, suo animo persuadere nititur mendacia esse quecumque apud nos de resurrectione ac iudicio dicuntur.

^e 1. Tim. 3. p.

1. Tim. 4. 3.

^g 1. Tim. 1. 5.
 ^h Cap. 6. 10.

i A& 6. 7.

^k Gal. 1. 22.

^l Tit. 1. 13.

^m 1. Tim. 4. 1.

• Tit. 1. 1.

First he bringeth Saul, who he saith at his election was so good a man as that there was no better then he in Israel, & yet became a reprobate. But his translation is false; for by the very circumstance of the place it is manifest, that the holy Ghost there describeth the goodnesse of Sauls person, not the goodnesse of his condition. Our translation readeth according to the truth of the text, that ^e he was a goodly yong man and a faire, so that among the children of Israel there was none goodlier then he: from the shouldders upward he was higher then any of the people. Which last words doe plainly shew whereto the rest are to be referred. So Pagnine translateth it, and sheweth that the Hebrew writers do so take it, neither doth there appeare any thing whereby we may conceiue spiritually any goodnesse in him at all, being from the first, crosse and thwart to the commandement of the Lord. The second example is of Salomon, of whom he saith, that it is probable that he also was a reprobate. But that is not probable; nay, it is altogether vnprobable, that so notable a figure of Christ, ^pwhom the Lord loued, and in token thereof gaue him a name ^q Iedidiab, that is, beloued of the Lord; of whom in figure of Christ he said, ^r I will be his father and he shall my Sonne, whom it appeareth in the Canticles, he acquainted so inwardly with the riches and secrets of his grace, that he, I say, should after be vtterly reprobate and cast away. For although God suffered him very grieuouly to fal, that by the distraction of that kingdome thereby occasioned, it might appeare that the kingdome promised was not accomplished in him, yet it is more then probable by that that we read in his book of Ecclesiastes, or the Preacher, that he wrot that booke as a monument and token of his conuersion and repentance, wherein he tooke vpon him the person of a ^f Preacher, for redresse of that which he had offended in the person of a King. Further, he citeth to his purpose the examples of Iudas the traitor and Simon Magus, of whom Saint Luke saith, that hee beleened. Where wee may wonder at at his notable impudency, or rather impiety, that he maketh Iudas and Simon Magus once members of Iesus Christ. Of Iudas our Sauiour Christ saith, when he was at the best, that ^t he was a diuel, and S. Iohn out of the experience of his whole conuersation, that ^u hee was a sheefe, thereby shewing that it neuer was with any true heart that he followed Christ, but onely to make a commodity to himselfe. Of Simon Magus, S. Luke saith indeed, that ^x hee beleened, but so

* 1.Sam.9.2.

P 2.Sam.19.24.

q Verf.25.

r 2.Chri.22.10.

f Ecclef.1.12.

t Joh.6.70.

u Cap.12.6.

x Act.8.13.

so as that Peter perceiueth amidst his beleeuing, that y his heart was Ver. 21. 13.
not right in the sight of God, that he was in the gall of bitternesse, and in the bond of iniquity, whereby it appeareth, that his beleeuing was no more but ^z a bare assenting, as Oecumenius calleth it, to the do- z Oecumen. in ctrine of faith, and not that true and effectuall beleeuing whereof epist. Jacob. cap.
we speake. Such members of Christ doth he make, doing wrong z Et de simplici to Iesus Christ, onely to hide his owne shame, that hee might not assensu filium de*be thought to maintaine a wrong. The like he affirmeth of all Arch- corre so. emus. beretikes, that first they were of the faithfull, expressely contrary to that which S. Iohn saith, ^a They went out from vs, but THEY VVERE 1. Iohn 1. 19.
NOT OF VS: for if they had bene OF VS, they would haue continued with vs. Which being so plainly affirmed by the Apostle, we may maruell that M. Bishop should say the contrary, but that he hath harnessed his face & his consciēce, that it may be no blush nor scruple to him, to auouch one lie for the vpholding of another. What his exception is to that place of Iohn, we shall see in the next section but *one, where he hath taken vpon him the answer of it.

9. W. BISHOP.

But what need we further prooffe of this matter, seeing that this is co-sengerman, if not the very same, with one of that infamous heretike Io-uinians erroneous articles, condemned and registred by S. Heirome, and Heres. 82 lib. 2.
S. Augustine, who held, that iust men after Baptisme could not sinne, and cont. Iouin.
if they did sinne, they were indeed washed with water, but neuer receiued the spirit of grace: his ground was, that he which had once receiued the spirit of grace, could not sin after, which is iust M. Perkins proposition:
so that to uphold an error, he falleth into an old condemned heresie.
And which is yet more absurd, in the next confirmation, he letteth slip at once a brace of other heresies, these be his words: And if by sinne one were wholly seuered from Christ for a time, in his recouery he is to be baptized the second time. Where you haue first rebaptizing, which is the principall error of the Anabaptists, and with all the heresie of the Nouatians, who held, that if any in persecution denyed Christ after bap-tisme. there was no remedy left in Gods church for their recouery, but must be left to God: so saith M. Perkins, for that of rebaptizing, bee seemes to bring in ex absurdo: so that the common saying is verified in him, (one absurditie being graunted, a thousand follow after.)

But doth he know no other meanes then Baptisme to recouer one cut off from Christ? bath he forgotten that corrupted sentence of the Prophet wherewith they begin their Common praiere? What houte soeuer a sinner doth repent him of his sinne, &c With them repentance, and with vs the Sacrament of Penance, serue a man at any time of his life to be reconciled to Christ.

R. ABBOT.

We may here take knowledge of the absurd folly of this prater, who hauing before chalenged M. Perkins for affirming that sinne is alwaies in the regenerate corrupting alhis works, goeth about here to lay vpon him an imputation of maintaining, that the regenerate cannot sinne. Surely both these cannot stand together, and if M. Perkins hold the one, he must needs be a stranger to the other. But thus hee bableth without feare or wit, neuer regarding how one part of his speech hath coherence with the other. As touching Iouinian, if he simply taught that which Hierome and Austine affirme, that the regenerate cannot sinne, he erred greatly therein, and we ioine with Austine and Hierome in the condemning of that opinion. But if they did misunderstand his opinion, and that he held onely this, as in likelihood he did, that the regenerate cannot finally and vtterly fall away by sinne, or sinne that sinne which is vnto death, and onely meant as S. Iohn doth, Whosoeuer is borne of God sinneth not, neither can he sinne, because he is borne of God, he erred no whit at all, nor affirmed any thing therein, but what Hierome and Austine haue affirmed as well as he: and M. Bishop knew well enough, that it is this onely that M. Perkins deliuered: not that the regenerate cannot, or do not sinne, whose fals wee confesse to be very many, and to themselves very grieuous from day to day, but that the regenerate doth not so sinne, as vtterly to bee cut off from Christ; that the faithfull man doth neuer finally or wholly fall away from the grace of God. To which purpose S. Bernard saith: The Lord knoweth who are his, and the purpose of God abideth vnmoueable. Although Dauid be branded with the brand of horrible sinnes, although Mary Magdalen be fraught with seuen deuils, although Peter the chiefe of the Apostles, be drowned in the depth of denying his maister Christ, yet there is none that can take them (or plucke them)

a 1 Iohn 3.9.

b Bernard. de
tripl. coherent.
vincul. &c. Nostit Dominus qui sunt
eius, & propositū Dei manet immo-bile. Et si horren-dorum criminum
notā Dauid inu-
ritur, et si Maria Magdalene septē
demonijs cumu-
latur, et si princeps Apostolorum in profundum mega-
rionis submergi-
tur, non est tamē qui de manu Dei
pōssi eruetur.

them out of the hands of God: not that it is incident to the faithfull, to walke in malicious and wilfull sinne, but when by occasion or temptation he falleth, the Lord ^{c Luc. 22.61.} looketh vpon him as he did vpon Peter, that hee may repent; the ^{d Psal. 37.24.} Lord putteth vnder his hand, and listeth him vp againe. Wee see therefore how little trust is to bee giuen to him, who sticketh not to deliuer so manifest and apparant vntruth. Hee is like the carriers horse, that brooketh not to goe out of his accustomed way: we had had no book of him, if he had bene tyed to speake nothing but what is true. Now M. Perkins for assertion of the perseuerance of the faithfull, addeth further, that if a man be a member of Christ, he cannot be wholly cut off, not so much as for a time, much lesse for euer. For if he could wholly be cut off for the time, then at his returne hee ought to be baptized againe, which beeing absurd to affirme, it followeth that a man cannot wholly be cut off. In which confirmation M. Bishop saith, that hee hath let slip a brace of other heresies. VVhere we may conceiue, that he was mightily a-dreamed of heresies the night before hee wrote this, and they ranne so thicke in his head, that he imagined euery man that he met with, to be an hereticke. Surely M. Bishop, if he haue let slip a brace of heresies, he hath let them slip out of your collars, and therefore you must take them to your selues; for his they are not. You say by and by after, that he bringeth in that of rebaptizing ex absurdo, and if he bring it in as an absurdity, then it is not likely that it should slip from him. Full wisely therefore do you say, that the common saying is verified in him, one absurditie graunted, a thousand follow after, when the absurditie graunted is yours and not his, that a man is wholly cut off from Christ, hauing been a member of his body, whereuppon hee inferreth, that there should then be a necessity of rebaptizing, as a consequence of your absurdity, not as an assertion of his owne. A man would scant thinke you well in your wits, to handle a matter so crossely and vntowardly as you do. As touching the matter, albeit litterally it bee true, that a man being wholly cut off from Christ, must necessarily be baptized to enter him againe, yet in that sense, wherein we here speak of cutting off from Christ, namely concerning spirituall and inward grace, I confesse ingenuously that there is no necessity of that consequence which Maister Perkins inferreth thereupon. If a man be wholly cut off from Christ, hee hath no interest in Christ, nor Christ in him ; the bond of baptisme is dissolued, neither doth there stand any relation thereby betwixt Christ and him. For if there stand any tiall or bond betwixt Christ and him, then is hee not wholly cut off. Supposing then a man after baptisme to bee wholly cut off, which cannot bee till finall impenitencie haue for euer diuided him from the body of the Church, but this yet being supposed, there should be a necessitie of baptizing him againe, to giue him admission into the societie of Christs Church. For that this cannot be done by M. Bishops sacrament of penance, hee himselfe must needs confesse, because their sacrament of penance is as they call it, secunda tabula post naufragium; and he that is so wholly cut off, wanteth the first, without which the second hath no place. Or if he doe not want the first, if he doe not want the title of baptisme, then he is not wholly cut off, which is the thing to bee supposed. The Church of Rome holdeth, that baptisme leaueth in the soule, indelebilem characterem, a character or print that can neuer bee disprinsed. But suppose the same to bee defaced and disprinted, and then I suppose that Master Bishop will grant, that there is a necessitie to be baptized againe. It cannot be, saith hee, and so say we, that it cannot be, that a man baptized should wholly bee cut off from Christ, but that by outward calling Christ and his Church hath interest in him during life, so as that by true repentance, without any further baptisme, he is restored againe; yet vpon supposall it followeth which wee haue said. Now if Master Perkins spake vpon this supposall, it should so follow indeede, but the drift of the matter in hand necessarily draweth vs to another vnderstanding. For when wee say that the regenerate man is neuer wholly cut off from Christ, wee meane it as touching inward and spirituall grace, that it neuer so defecteth, but that there is still a seede thereof remaining, that shall grow againe. Yet if we suppose it to be true, which the Papists say, that inward grace of regeneration may be vtterly extermined for the time, I do not conceiue that it should thereof follow, that another baptisme should be needfull for being restored againe. For by the mark of Christ first set vpon him, Christ shall still stand entituled to him, & it shall be his sin in the mean time, that he applieth not himselfe to him, whose by right he ceaseth not to bee. And if a man in hypocrisie receiue baptisme, so as that hee becom-becommeth not thereby at all the member of Christ, yea and thenceforth for the time runne into Paganisme or heresie, we will not hold that if he be afterwards truly conuerted, hee should neede for the making of him a member of Christ, to be secondly baptized, but that baptisme before receiued, now commeth to vse and effect, and yeeldeth that spirituall fruit which it did import before. So therefore though it be supposed that the grace of Christ in any man be vtterly razed and defaced, yet shall it not follow, that hee shall be baptized a second time, but baptisme before receiued shall returne to the same vse that it had before, not by the counterfet Sacrament of penance deuised by men, but by true and faithfull repentance directed by God, whereof not by a corrupted sentence, as this cauller obiecteth, but by a true expressing of the Prophets meaning, we say in the beginning of our common praier, ¹ At what time ² soeuer a sinner doth repent him of his sinne from the bottome of his heart, ³ I wil put al his wickednesse out of my remembrance, saith the Lord. As for the Sacrament of penance, it is a bastard salve of a false Surgeon: it closeth wounds; and healeth none, but leaueth them to fester and corrupt vnto euerlasting death. There is in it a speciall policie of Satan, to hold men in opinion of forgiuenesse of sinnes where it is not, that they may neglect to seeke it where indeed it is. To come to an end of this matter, whether way M. Perkins meant this cutting off from Christ wholly, I will not precisely say; but whether way soeuer he meant it, it auaieth M. Bishop nothing at all, if haply he did erre in inferring a necessitie on their part, to maintaine an heresie or heresies of others, by maintaining a peruerse opinion of their owne. From which heresies (of Anabaptists and Nouatians) he well knew that we are farre enough; onely he would name them, that wee might vnderstand that hee had heard somewhat thereof.

10. W. BISHOP.

But we must answer vnto that of S. Iohn: They went out from vs, ^{1. Ioh. 2.} but they were not of vs; for if they had been of vs, they would haue continued with vs. I answer: If they went out from vs, they were before with vs, which confirmeth our assertion, that men may depart from their faith and Christs profession: but such men were not indeede of the number of the elect, of which Saint Iohn was, for then either they would have continued with them in the Christian faith, or else by hearty repentance would have returned unto it backe againe, which is Saint Augustines owne exposition. And these bee the Arguments for the Catholikes, which M. Perkins through his confused order toucheth here and there. To which I will adde, one taken out of the words of S. Paul: But thou by faith dost stand, be not too highly wise, but feare, if God hath not spared the naturall boughes, least perhaps he will not spare thee neither. And againe: : Worke your Salvation, with feare and trembling. There bee aboue an hundred such texts in holy writ, wherein the Holy Ghost exhorteth vs to stand in feare of our Salvation, out of which I thus frame my argument.

No man must stand in feare of that, of which he is by faith assured, But the faithfull must stand in feare of their Salvation. Ergo they be not assured of it by faith.

The Minor or second proposition is plainely proued by these places cited before: the Maior is manifest: there is no feare in faith, he that feareth, whether the thing be assured or no, cannot giue a certaine assent thereunto: Dubius in fide infidelis est. Put the case in another article to make it more eident: He that feareth, whether there be a God or no, do we esteeme that he beleeueth in God? So he that feareth whether Iesus Christ be God, is he a Christian? hath he a true faith? You must needs answer, no. So he that feareth whether he shall be saued or no, can haue no faith of his Salvation.

R. ABBOT.

The place of S. Iohn doth fully ouerthrow that which M. Bishop laboureth to build, inuincibly prouing, that reuolters and renegates wholly falling away from Christ, were neuer of the faithfull, though for the time outwardly they held profession with them. For if they had beene of vs, saith hec, they would haue continued with vs, therein implying this rule, that they that once are of the faithfull, do certainly continue with them, so as that they neuer wholly and finally depart from them. For as falling starres were neuer starres indeed, though they seemed to be starres, so apostataes and backsliders were neuer faithfull indeed, though they seemed so to be.

De bono per se.
cap. 8.

Rom. II 20.

Phil. 2. 12.

be. But heere Maister Bishop answereth, If they went out from vs, they were before with vs. Bee it so, but yet as the gloffe saith, ^a by tale and account, not by woorth; by participation of sacraments, not by fellowship of loue. This place then proueth, that men may depart from the profession of the faith of Christ, but it confirmeth not his assertion, that the faith of any doth euer faile, that is truly faithfull in the profession of the faith of Christ. And therefore it is but one of his iuglers tricks, to make his Reader beleue that the place confirmeth his assertion, when in truth it doth directly contradict it. If those reuolters had had true faith, Saint Iohn would not haue said, They were not of vs; for he is of the faithfull, whoso-euer is indued with true faith. But, saith hee, S. Iohns meaning is, that such were not of the number of the elect, and this is S. Austines exposition. And we acknowledge S. Austines exposition to be true: ^b They were not of them, because they were not called according to purpose, because they were not elect in Christ before the foundations of the world: because they had not obtained any lot (or portion) in him, because they were not predestinate, according to the purpose of him who worketh all things. But because they were not such, therefore they were neuer truly faithfull. For if they were not called by purpose, then did they neuer truly beleue, because ^c by that calling it is that a man doth beleue. Now, ^d by his calling God calleth no other but whom he hath predestinate: therefore onely the predestinate doe beleue. And no other doth God iustifie, but whom he hath called with that calling, therefore onely the elect are partakers of iustification; and if onely the elect be iustified, then all that are iustified do certainly perseuer, because the elect do neuer fall away. Now if backsliding reprobates were neuer partakers of iustification, then were they neuer of the body of the faithfull, howsoeuer in outward appearance they seemed to be. And this the same S. Austine verie notably confirmeth, when hee saith of reprobates; ^e None of these doth God bring to spirituall and healtfull repentance, whereby man in Christ is reconciled vnto God, whether he yeeld them patience for longer or shorter time. And as he excludeth them from true repentance

^a Thom. Aqu. in 1. Joan. ca. 2. ex glossa. Erant de ecclesia, numero non merito sacramentorum perceptione, non charitatis communiōe.

^b August. de bono persec. ca. 8.

Non erant ex cetero, quia non erant secundum priuspositum uocati: non erant in Christo electi ante constitutionem mundi: non erant in eo sorte consecuti: non erant predestinati secundum propositum eius qui uniuersa operatur.

^c Idem de pred. sanct. cap. 16. Quia uocatione fit ciuens.

^d Ihu. cap. 17. Quos predestinauit ipse & uocauit illa scilicet uocatione secundum propositum. Non ergo alios sed quos predestinauit ipse & uocauit: nec alios sed ista uocauit, ipse & iustificauit, nec alios sed quos predestinauit, uocauit.

nit, iustificauit, ipse & glorificauit, &c.

^e Cont. Iulian. Pelag. lib. 5. cap. 3. Istorum neminem ad lucis ad patientiam salutem & spiritualem qua homo in Christo reconciliatur Deo, sine illis ampliore patientiam (quam electis) sine non impari p. abeat.

Cont. aduersar.
leg. & prophet. lib.
2. ca. 11. Qui non omnium sicut iste
ait, sed eorum quos ante prescius & predestinavit de-
lecta dimittit.
g Origen. cont.
Cels. lib. 7. Con-ceditur cognitio Dei
duntaxat: his quia
ad hoc predesti-
nati sunt ut cog-nito Deo dignè
uiuant.

So doth he also from forguennesse of finnes, saying, that God forgiveth the finnes, not of all, but of them whom before hee foreknew and predestinated. Origen yet goeth further, and saith, that the knowledge of God (meaning the true and effectuall knowledge of God) is granted onely vnto them, who are hereto predestinate, that knowing God they may liue worthy of him. Now if reprobates neuer haue any true knowledge of God, if they be secluded from repentance, faith, iustification, & forguennesse of finnes, then these things are proper onely to the elect, which do certainly perseuer; and our assertion is true, that where there is true repentance, faith, iustification, knowledge of God, there infallibly followeth perseuerance to the end. Saint Iohn therefore when hee saith, They were not of vs, as he meaneth that they were not of the elect; so he meaneth that they neuer were of the number of true beleeuers, neuer true members of Christ, or of the spirituali body of the Church, which if they had beene, hee concludeth for vs, that they should haue so continued, and not in that sort haue vtterly fallen away.

In August. de cor-
rept. & grat. ca. 9.
Filij Dei propter
susceptam vel tē-
poraliter gratiam
dicuntur a nobis,
nec sunt tamen Dei.

i Ibi. Cum filij Dei dicunt. Non erant ex nobis,
&c. quid aliud di-
cūt, nisi non erant
filij, etiam quando
erant in professio-
ne & nomine filio-
rum?

k Iohn 1. 13.

Therefore doth Saint Austin expound the words of them, who for grace temporally received, are of vs called the children of God, but yet are not so to God, affirming plainly, that with God they are not children, though wee call them so, because they seeme no other to our sight. And to the same purpose he addeth soone after: They were not of vs, what meaneth it, but they were not children of God when they went under the profession and name of children? Now if they were neuer children of God, then were they neuer truly regenerate; for by being borne of God, they must needs haue beene the children of God. Neither euer had they true faith: for so many as beleeued in him, he gaue a dignitie (or prerogative) so be the sonnes of God. Therefore when he saith of such, that they were in goodnesse, they were in the faith, it must be vnderstood as touching outward profession, and to the iudgement of the Church, and by assent and approbation of iudgment and vnderstanding, but neuer by integritie & soundnesse of affection, or true regeneration of the heart. Which may appeare by the exposition that he maketh thereof vpon that epistle of S. Iohn, where speaking of those apostataes he saith: So are they in the body of Christ as euill humors in our body. No members then, no parts of the body, but as euill humors in the body, of which some are more kind & lesse offēsiue, other altogether vnkind and

l August. in 2a
Ioan. ir. act. 3. Sic sunt in corpore
Christi quomodo
humores mali;
quando euomun-
tur tunc releuan-
tur corpus.

and hurtfull, euen as of these temporizers in the Church, some come neerer to the true faithfull, other some are wholly wicked and dissembling hypocrites, but of them all it is true,^m Temptation pro-

ueth that they are not of vs. When temptation befallt to them, euen as it were by occasion of a wind, they flie out, because they were not corne.

They might seeme to be corne: but indeede they were but chaffe: they had a semblance, but they had not the realtie of the state of children. M. Bishops exposition therefore auaieth nothing, but that it still standeth true which we affirme, that true faith as it assureth of present state, so doth assure also of future perseuerance, to the end that God may performe to euery beleeuer that which he hath promised, that he shall not perish but haue euertlasting life. But because he cannot preuaile by answering, he will make futher trial what he can do by arguing, taking for ground the words of S. Paul, first to the Romans, ^a Thou standest by faith, be not high minded but feare: secondly to the Philippians, ^o Worke your Salvation with feare and trembling. And to make the better shew he saith, that there are aboue a hundred such texts in holy writ, wherein the holy Ghost exhorteth vs to stand in feare of Salvation. But if they be such texts as these which he hath here alledged, they are admonitions against carnall presumption, and no discouragements to true faith to stand assured of Salvation. The Scripture speaketh diuersly of feare, and he doth but dally vpon that equiuocation. There is a doubting and distracting feare, which God forbiddeth, as being the enemy of all spirituall comfort and assurance of faith: and there is an awfull and regarding feare, which God commendeth as the vndiuided companion of true faith. As we vnderstand feare to be opposit to faith, we heare God appointing his ministers to call his people from it. ^p Say unto the fearefull, Be you strong, feare not, behould your God commeth with vengeance, he will come & saue you. ^q Feare not, for I am with thee; be not afraid, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee and helpe thee, and sustaine thee with the right hand of my iustice. And againe, ^r Feare not, for I haue redeemed thee; I haue called thee by name, thou art mine. When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee, that they do not ouersw thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle vpon thee. ^s Feare not,

for thou shalt not be ashamed, neither shalt thou be confounded. ^t In righteousnesse shalt thou be established, and be farre from feare, for it shall

^m *Ibid. Tentatio
probat quia non sunt ex nobis.*

^o *Quando illius ve-ratio uenit: ue-
lut occasione uen-
it uolant foras
quia grana non e-rant.*

ⁿ Rom. 11. 20.

^o Phil. 2. 12.

^p Esa. 35. 4.

^q Cap. 41. 10.

^r Cap. 43. 1.

^s Cap. 54. 4.

^t Vcrf. 14.

u Verse 17.

shall not come nere thee. ^u This is the heritage of the Lords seruants, whose righteousnesse is of me, saith the Lord. These gracious and comfortable speeches the Lord vseth to the faithfull, that vnder him they may rest in full assurance of safety, without all feare or doubt, because he promiseth to preuent all those occasions whence any feare or doubt should rise. Whereupon it is that Zacharie saith, that ^x he hath deliuered vs out of the hands of our enemies to serue him without feare, and Christ is said to haue died ^y that hee might deliuer them who for feare of death were all their life time subiect to bondage. And the Apostle S. Paul accordingly saith, ^z that wee haue not receiued the spirit of bondage to feare any more, but the ^a spirit of adoption to cry Abba, Father: that God hath not giuen vs the spirit of feare, but of power, and of loue, and of a sound mind. There is no greater bondage then feare of death, which representeth to a man nothing but ghastlinesse and horreur, when hee is vncertaine therein what shall become of him. Therefore Christ hath deliuered his from this bondage of feare, and that they may rest stablished in the assurance x Luke. 1. 74.

y Heb. 2. 15.

z Rom. 8. 15.

a 2. T. m. 1. 7.

b Luke 12. 32.

of Saluation, saith vnto them, ^b Feare not little flocke; for it is yours Fathers pleasure to giue you the kingdome. The Church of Rome biddeth Christs flocke to stand in feare of their owne Saluation; but Christ the maister of the flocke saith, Feare not little flocke; it is the fathers pleasure to giue you the kingdome. Thus when he saith to his disciples, ^c Why are ye fearefull, O ye of little faith, and to Peter, ^d O thou of little faith, wherefore didest thou doubt? hee sheweth that faith importeth an assured beleefe of a mans owne safetie, and forbiddeth feare and doubt, as contrarie thereunto. Now therefore when the Scripture commendeth feare, it importeth not any such feare as should in the faithfull shake the assurance of Saluation;

c Mat. 8. 26.

d Cap. 14. 31.

^e { nay the faithfull man because he findeth in himselfe that feare, doth thereby gather the grater assurance to himselfe. It is with euerie faithfull man as it was with Job, ^e the punishment of God is fearefull vnto him; hee dreadeth the iudgements and threatnings which God hath denounced against pride and vnthankfulnesse, against rebellion and contempt of God, knowing assuredly that the same shall be performed, and that God will make it appeare that hee hath not spoken in vaine. Therefore hee aborreth the courses of the wicked, and walketh not in their waies, but labouring in righteousnes, standeth fully resolved, that God wil saue him from that e Job. 31. 23.

destru-

destruction that hee hath provided for them. Neither doth hee dread the sentence of God onely in respect of eternall destruction, but also in respect of temporall plagues and iudgements, where-with he chastneth his owne children, when they behaue themselves wantonly and vnderisfully towards him. In the inflicting whereof God hath regard to make them by the smart therof much more to dread his eternal wrath, that they may cease and shunne the waies whereby they should bee in danger to incurre the same. Now in this sense doth the Apostle in the first place recommend fear to the Churches of the Gentiles, and specially to the Church of Rome, that whereas God had reiected the Jewes, because of their reiecting the word of God, and they now by faith did stand, 1 Aas 13.46. that is, by obedience to the faith and preaching of the Gospell, had receiued the calling and state of the people of God, & his Church, they should learne by the example of the Jewes to be wise and warie for themselves, trembling at the fearefull wrath that was befallen vpon them, and therefore not flattering themselves in the opinion of their outward calling as the other before had done, but labouring to do those things which might bee correspondent to the grace and mercy which GOD had vouchsafed vnto them. Which if they did neglect, God would take away his kingdome 8 Mat. 21.43. from them, as he did from the Jewes, and they should lose that glorie wherein now they tooke vpon them to reioyce. To the verie same purpose doth he admonish the Corinthians, that the Israclites had the same calling, & in effect the same Sacraments that we haue, and yet when they behaued themselves vnthankfully & wickedly, God did not forbear to punish them, whereof he had made record in holy Scriptures for example vnto vs; and heereupon concludeth, Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall. h 1. Cor. 10.12. Whereby he giueth to vnderstand, that outward standing and professing of the faith, without inward grace and feare of God issuing into a godly life and conuersation, is not standing indeed; but seeming to stand, and therefore that hee that glorieth therein, if he be afraid to fall, must lay a better foundation for himselfe to stand vpon. These aduertisements true faith heareth, and apprehendeth the same to make vse thereof; it is afraid to fall, and therefore shunneth that security and reioycing in outward state wherein they, that applaud themselves without correspondencie of inward ward affection and godly conuersation doe meereley delude themselves. Whereby it commeth to passe, that in the publicke desolations of Churches for the contempt of dutie towards God, yet whosoeuer hath beleueed the word of God, and feared his iudgement, though lapped in the folds of outward calamities, yet is saved from that damnation which hee was fearefull by contempt to runne into. To be short, as a man vpon the top of a high tower is afraid to fall, and trembleth to thinke thereof, when notwithstanding being enuironed with the battlements, he is without danger of falling, and not afraid that hee shall fall: so the true beleueer trembleth with the horrour of the conceit of falling away from

God, knowing the end of them to be most vnhappy that so doe, when yet hee reposeth assured trust in God, that being compassed about with his protection, and dwelling vnder his defense, he himselfe shall be preserved for euer. Vnder whose defense that wee may dwell, there is another feare necessary, whereby we are drawn away from presuming of our own strength, that we may be strong in the Lord (onely) and in the power of his might. And of this feare are we to vnderstand the latter place cited by M. Bishop: Worke your Salvation in feare and trembling. In feare and trembling, that is, in humilitie, in due acknowledgement of your owne frailtie, in fearing to bee left to your owne selues, in depending wholly vpon God; For, saith hee, it is God that worketh in you both to will and to doe: the adding of which reason plainly sheweth, that feare and trembling is to be taken in that meaning as

I haue expressed. And in that sort S. Austin doth expound it: Therefore doth S. Paul say with feare and trembling, lest attributing to themselves that they worke well, they should bee proud of their good workes, as if they were their owne: therefore as if one had asked him, why doest thou say, with feare and trembling, he giveth reason of those words, saying, For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to doe. In sundry^m other places doth hee expound those words to the same effect. So doth Prosper also say, that the Apostle by those words^d doth admonish vs against the danger of that pride, whereby a man of a good worke reioiceth in himselfe rather then in the Lord. Here is nothing then that the faithfull should stand in feare of their owne saluation, but onely that they should feare to commit themselves to themselves, in working to the accomplishment of the sal-uation

i Ephes. 6. 10.

Phil. 2. 12.

1 Aug. de grat.

& lib. arbit. c. 9.

Ideo cum timore

& tremore ne sibi

tribuendo quod

boni operantur

de bonis tanquam

suis extollantur

operibus. Tanquam

ergo interrogat

Apostolus, & di-

ceretur ei, Quare

dixisti cum timore

& tremore,

horum verborum

rationem reddidit,

dicens, Deus

est enim, &c.

^m De nat. & grat.

ca. 27. De corrept.

& grat. cap. 9. in

Psal. 65. & 118.

concl. 31.

^m Prosper. apud

Ambros. ep. 84.

Vigilant tentato-

rum insidias, ut

vbi proficis deuotio,

subrepat elatio,

& ut homo de

bono opere in se

potius quam in Domino glorietur.

Sed sollicitudo

nos Apostolus

contra hoc periculum

mones dicentis,

Cum timore

& tremore, &c.

uation to which God hath called them, and should remember, that all is to be expected of Gods mercie, whence only it is that either we will or do any thing that is good. Which fear is so farre from giuing vs cause to doubt of Salvation, as that it much rather serueth to strengthen the assurance thereof, whilest it maketh vs to rest onely vpon God, and not vpon our selues, knowing that our Salvation dependeth not vpon any thing which we can do for our selues, but vpon him ^o who hath wrought (and so will worke) all ^o our workes for vs, and will not leaue that vnperfect which he hath begun. And when sometimes we forget this fear, and incline to trust in our selues, and say with David, ^p I shall neuer be removed, he ^p leaueth vs to the triall of our owne strength, so as that wanting his support, wee fall and runne into enormous offense, thereby to bee the better instructed how little safetie wee haue in our owne defense, and therefore how necessarie it is for vs to depend whollie vpon his grace. Thus the Apostle Peter presuming too much of himselfe, and being left thereupon to himselfe, fell euen to the denying and abiuring of his master Christ, that hee in himselfe and wee in him might learne, that ^q by his owne might shall no man bee ¹ strong, and that euill would our state bee, if our safety did not rest onely and altogether in the Lord. Thus therefore in both places cited by M. Bishop, and in many other we read of fear; to fear the iudgements and threatnings of God, which the faithfull alwaies doth, because faith beleueth them; to fear to trust in our selues, which euerie faithfull man also doth, because faith it selfe importeth trust in God: but we no where reade any thing whereof to gather that which hee affirmeth, that the faithfull ought to stand in fear of their owne Salvation. Now therefore his argument is easily answered; for the minor proposition, which he saith is plainly prooued by the places cited, is meereley false, and hath no prooffe at all, either by those places or any other. And how absurdly doth he abuse his Reader, that whereas the proposition by him to bee prooued is not expressed in the places alledged, hee notwithstanding skippeth ouer with meere quoting of them, without shewing how the matter to be proued is to be inferred thereof. But such pretie shifts doe best become the cause that he hath in hand. About the maior proposition, whereof there is lesse question, hee bestoweth a little paines to little purpose: No man must stand in feare of; bat of which by faith
he

he is assured. Which we grant, as it importeth a dutie, that no man ought to haue any feare of that which he is taught to beleue, but we deny that which he saith for the prosecutiō or explication thereof. For it is false, that there is no feare in faith, that is, that there is no faith where there is feare, or feare where there is faith. For, whē our Sauior Christ vpbraideth his disciples with fearefulnes & doubting and yet attributeth vnto them little faith, as before is alledged, hee plainly sheweth, that little faith is subiect to feare and doubt, and yet ceaseth not thereupon to be faith. He saith that hee that feareth cannot giue certaine assent. We answer him, that our assent is according to the measure of our faith; little faith yeeldeth but weake assent, but yet it is a true assent, whereby wee embrace that where-to we assent. The truth of which faith and assent hereby appeareth euen in feare, because feare causeth it to fall to prayer, which what is it else, but as it were the casting forth of the armes of faith, to catch hold of him in whom it beleueth, as expecting succour and helpe of him? for how shall they call upon him in whom they haue not beleued? Thus the faith of the disciples appeared in the places euen now cited, when their feare made them to go vnto Christ and say to him, Master, saue vs, which they would not haue said, but that they beleued to haue safety and deliuerance by him. Whereas therefore M. Bishop alledgeth the old sayd saw, Dubius in fide infidelis est; he that is doubtfull in the faith, is an infidell or unbeleuer, we tell him that it is true in him that wholly and absolutely doubteth. But there is a difference to be made betwixt him that absolutely doubteth, and him that weakly assenteth, and in assent is only interrupted with some feare or doubt. For which interruption I trow M. Bishop will not say, that the disciples of Christ were faithlesse, when Christ himselfe expressly acknowledgeth their faith. And thus, by reason the seeds of all impiety lie still hidden in the corruption of our nature, it commeth to passe, that faith sometimes is assaulted with doubts, euen in the maine and principall articles of our beleefe, and out of our owne sinfull condition we question vpon occasion the godhead, the power, the wisdome, the prouidence; the iustice and mercy of almighty God, when yet our faith doth not wholly relinquish the assent thereof. Which though in generality it more seldome come to passe, yet in application of our generall faith to particular occasions, we many times goe halting halting and lame, and stagger somewhat at that whereof our faith should giue vs full assurance by the word of God. Thus did ^t Sarah cast doubt of Gods promise as touching the hauing of a child, who yet is said ^u through faith to haue receiued strength to conceive when she was past age, because shee iudged him faithfull that had promised. Thus did ^x Moses call in question the power of God, as touching prouiding flesh for the people of Israel when he promised ^z so to do. So ^y Dauid and ^z Habacuk staggered as touching the prouidence God, and his care of iust and righteous men. So I shewed before how the disciples vpon the death of Christ were in aammering concerning the godhead of Christ, and the hope of redemption by him which before they had imbraced. Yet we do not thinke, that such doubts and ammerings did in these men wholly extinguish the light of true faith. In like sort therefore we also resolue, that the faith whereby we belecue our owne Salvation, is not by and by ouerthrowne, because sometimes the assurance thereof is shaken and interrupted with casting of feares and doubts. And thus the argument which hee added for supplie of those which M. Perkins brought, is found to be of as little, indeed lesse worth then all the rest, and it well appeareth that M. Perkins was better able to speake for M. Bishop, then M. Bishop is able to speake for himselfe.

II. W. BISHOP.

To these inuincible reasons grounded vpon Gods word, let vs ioine some plaine testimonies, taken as well out of the holy Scripture, as out of the ancient Fathers. First, what can be more manifest to warrant vs, that the faithfull haue not assurance infallible of their Salvation, then these words of the holy Ghost: There be iust (and therefore faithfull) and wise men, and their works be in the hand of God, and neuertheless a mā doth not know whether he be worthy of hatred or loue, but all things are kept vncertaine for the time to come. Where is then the Protestants certaintie? And because one heretike cauillesh against the Latine translation saying, that a word or two of it may be otherwise turned, heare how S. Ierome, who was most cunning in the Hebrew text, doth vnderstand it. The sence is (saith he) I haue found the works of the iust men, to be in the hand of God, and yet themselves not to know, whether they be loued of God or no.

Commentum
hanc locum.

R. ABBOT.

To his former invisible reasons, we shall haue now some further testimonies adioyning, that make as little for him as his reasons haue done. And first he alledgeth a place of Saloman, A man doth not know whether he be worthie of hatred or loue, but all things are kept vncertaine for the time to come. But he knew well that the translation of this place might iustly be excepted against, which indeed is very false. He saith that one heretike cauilleth against it; but neither is hee one onely, nor an heretike, neither doth hee cauill, but iustly reiecteth it by warrant of the originall text, so as that M. Bishopps owne friends doe translate the words farre otherwise then he alledgeth them. The Hebrew word for word according to the Septuagint translated by Hierome, is thus; ^a Also loue, also hatred, a man knoweth not all in the face of them. The obscurity of which words hath caused men very diuersly to conceiue of the true meaning thereof. One construction is made by Olympiodorus, that ^b he that yet saoureth the things of man, and hath not sincerely giuen himselfe to God, knoweth not what things are worthie to be loued, and what to be hated. Another exposition hee alledgeth taken from the translation of Symmachus; ^c A man knoweth not whether upon some change he shall find him louing or kind whom he now hateth, or shall haue cause to be afraid of him whom hee now loueth. With least mutation or change we translate the words thus, A man knoweth not loue or hatred (that is, who is loued or hated) by all that is before them, and then the meaning is plaine; that by outward things, by the things that are before our face, a man knoweth not whether he be beloved or hated of God; wherof the reason followeth, because all things come alike to all, and there is the same condition (outwardly) to the iust and to the wicked &c. And to this effect the translation of Symmachus tendeth, though Olympiodorus gathered otherwise thereof. ^d Moreover a man knoweth not loue or hatred, but all things are vncertaine before them, because the like things befall to all, both to iust and vniust. Which translation as Hierome approueth, so he confirmeth also the meaning of it, saying, ^e Whereas he saith that there is the same condition to all, he meaneth it of affliction or death, and that therefore men know not the loue of God or his hatred towards them.

And

^a Eccles. 9. 1. Et quidem charitate non est cognoscens homo omnia in facie eorum. Hieron.
^b Olympiod. in Eccles. ca. 9. Qui adhuc sapit que hominis sunt neque plane Deo se irradidit, nescit discernere o iudicio que dilectione sui digna que odiosa.
^c Ibid. Nescit homo si quem nunc maxime odit, mutatis vicibus amicum & beneficium sit experturus, cuius ratione an timendum sibi quandoque sit ab eo quem nunc amare persequitur.
^d Symmach. apud Hieron. in Eccles. cap. 9. Insuper neque amicitias nec ne inimicitias scis homo, sed omnia coram eis incerta, propterea quod omnibus eveniunt similia iusto & iniusto.
^e Hieron. ibid. Quod autem ait, Evenit est unus omnibus iusto & impio sine angustiis sui mortis significat eventum, & idcirco nec charitate Dei eos inesse nec odium.

And thus indeed true it is as M. Bishop citeth out of Hierome, that a man cannot esteeme by any outward state whether he beloued or hated of God; for neither doe the righteous onely prosper, neither are the wicked only crossed and afflicted, but the wicked flourish many times more gloriously then the iust, & the hand of God often lieth heauier vpon the iust then vpon the wicked & vngodly, and both are subiect to death, both are laied in the graue, without any appeatance or shew of difference betwixt the one & the other. But this maketh nothing against vs; for although by the eye the beleuer cannot discern the loue of God towards himselfe, yet that hindereth not but that by faith he apprehendeth and embraceth the same. And thus S. Bernard excepteth against that place, being so translated as M. Bishop readeth it. Being sure of Gods ableness to saue vs, how do we to be assured of his will thereto? for who knoweth whether he be worthis of loue or hatred? who hath knowne the mind of the Lord, or hath bene his counsellor? But here faith must helpe vs; here Gods truth must be our succour, that that which lieth hidden concerning vs in the heart of God our father, may by his spirit be reuealed vnto vs, and his spirit by the testimonie thereof may perswade our spirit that we are the children of God, and that by calling and iustifying vs freely by faith. Thus though we take the place translated as M. Bishop alledgeth it, yet by S. Bernards iudgement it auaieth him nothing, because albeit otherwise we cannot know whether wee be beloued or hated of God, yet by faith & by the spirit of God, that secret is reuealed vnto vs, that we are the children of God and beloued of him. Onely that we take that worthinesse of the loue of God, to be meant of Gods acceptation and vouchsafing to thinke vs worthis, because otherwise the place so translated soundeth a manifest vntruth and contrary to the Scripture. For if we speake simply of worthinesse, who doth not know himselfe worthy of hatred; what faithfull man doth not say as Daniel said, 8. To thee O Lord belongeth righteousness, but vnto vs (reckoning himselfe for one) belongeth confusion of face. Dauid saith, h Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, O Lord, for in thy sight no man liuing shall be iustified. i If thou straitly marke what is done amisse, who shall bee able to stand? It is false then to say that a man knoweth not whether he be worthie of loue or hatred, for hee knoweth or should know himselfe worthie to be hated, but yet by faith a man beleueth himselfe in 8 Bernard in dedie eccles. 17. 5. Sed de possibilibus te iam certi de voluntate quid aequus? Quis scit si est dignus amore an odio? Quis nouit sensum Domini, aut quis consiliarius eius fuit? Hic iam pland fidem nobis subuenire necesse est, hic oportet succurrere ueritatem ut quod de nobis latet in corde patris nobis per ipsius spiritum reueletur & spiritus eius testificans persuadeat spiritui nostro quod si uis uisus.

8 Dan. 9. 7.

8 Psal. 143. 2:

i 130. 3.

k Bernard. epist.
107. Supra sect. 3

Christ to be beloued, though he know, that in himselfe hee worthily deserueth to be hated. And so S. Bernard againe saith of the faithfull, A vile worme worthy of euerlasting hatred, yet is confidently perswaded that he is beloued, because he feeleth himselfe to loue. Thus S. Bernard both waies contraieth M. Bishop, affirming that the faithfull man knoweth himselfe worthy to be hated, and yet by faith confidently presumeth that he is beloued of God. As yet therefore we haue no prooffe that the faithfull man ought to stand in feare of his owne saluation.

12. W. BISHOP.

1. Cor. 4.

Another plaine testimony is taken out of S. Paul, where hee sheweth that it is not in vs to iudge of our owne iustice, but we must leaue to God the iudgement of it, these be the words: I am not guilty in conscience of any thing, but I am not iustified herein, but he that iudgeth me is our Lord, therefore iudge not before the time vntill our Lord do come, who also wil lighten the hidden things of darknes and will manifest the counsell of the heart, and then the praise shal be to euery man of God. So that before Gods iudgement by S. Pauls testimony, men may not assure themselues of their owne iustice, much lesse of their Saluation, how innocent soeuer they find themselues in their owne consciences. See vpon this place S. Ambrose, S. Basil, Theodoret on this place, who all agree, that men may haue secret faults, which God onely seeth, and therefore they must liue in feare, and alwaies pray to bee deliuered from them. For the rest, let S. Augustines testimony (whom our aduersaries acknowledge to be the most diligent and faithfull register of all antiquitie) be sufficient. This most iudicious, and holy Father thus defineth this matter: As long as we liue here, we our selues cannot iudge of our selues, I doe not say what we shall be to morrow, but what we are to day. And yet more directly: Albeit holy men are certaine of the reward of their perseuerance: yet of their owne perseuerance, they are found vncertaine. For what man can know that he shall perseuer, and hold on in the action & increase of iustice vntill the end, vnles, by some reuelation he be assured of it from him, who of his iust, but secret iudgement doth not inform all men of this matter, but deceiueth none: So no iust man is assured of his Saluation by his ordinary faith: by extraordinary reuelation, Serm. 5. in Psal.

118. De constitut.
moras. cap. 2.

De verb. Domini.
serm. 35.
De ciuit. Dei lib. 3.
11. cap. 12.

some

Some men may be assured, the rest are not. Which is iust the Catholicks sentence. And because S Bernard is by our aduersaries cited for them in this point, take his testimony in as precise termes as any Catholicke at this time speaketh, Thus he writeth: Who can say, I am one of the elect, I am one of the predestinate to life, I am one of the number of the children? Who (I say) can thus say, the Scripture crying out against him: A man knoweth not, whether he bee worthy of loue or hatred? Therefore we haue no certainty, but the confidence of hope doth comfort vs, that wee bee not vexed at all with the perplexity of this doubt. The word of God (according to S. Bernard) crieth out against all them, that certainly assure themselves of their Salvation: whereon then doe they build their faith that belieue it?

Serm. 1. de Sep-
tuag.

Ecclesi. 9.

R. ABBOT.

The summe of his argument in this place is, that we are vncertaine of our owne righteousnesse, and therefore can haue no certainty of our owne Salvation. To proue the vncertainty of our righteousnesse, he alledgeth the words of the Apostle, I am not guilty to my selfe in any thing, yet am I not therein iustified. Where it is worth the noting, that whereas the Apostle saith by expresse negatiue, I am not iustified thereby, he maketh as if the Apostle had meant I cannot tel whether I be iustified or not. It may be I am iust, it may be I am not iust. If I be, my iustice shall merit heauen: If I be not, I know not what may haply become of me. But the Apostle neuer made any such doubt; he well knew, that the clearenesse of his conscience was not it that could yeeld him iustification before God. He knew it to be true which S. Austin saith, that according to the most entire rule of Gods truth; no man liuing shall bee found iust in the sight of God, and therefore professeth that hee accounteth all things but losse for the excellent knowledge of Christ Iesus our Lord, for whom saith he, I haue counted all things losse, and doe iudge them to be dung, that I might winne Christ, and might bee found in him, not hauing mine owne righteousnesse, which is by the law, but the righteousnesse which is by the faith of Christ, euen the righteousnes which is of God by faith. Here is then a renouncing of his own righteousnesse, and an acknowledgement of iustification and righteousnes onely by faith in Christ. A notable fruit of which faith it was so to walk, as

a Cor. 4. 4.
Of this place
see further the fourth Section of the next question, concerning Iustification.b August. de peccat mer. & remiss.
lib. 2. cap. 19.
Quantum ad integritatem regu-
lam veritatis eius
pertinet, non instificabitur, &c.
c Phil. 3. 8.

¶ That he could say, I am not guilty to my selfe in any thing, in which sort he speaketh else where, ^d This is our reioycing, euen the testimo- ny of our conscience, that in simplicitie and godly purenesse, not by carnal wisdom, but by the grace of God, we haue had our conuersation in the world. Of which testimony of conscience S. Iohn saith, ^e If our hearts condemne vs not (but that we are of the truth) then haue we boldnesse towards God, and shal. before him assure our hearts. Whereby we are taught, that to walk with a good conscience in the faith of Christ, ministreth great boldnes and assurance towards God, and therefore that the Apostle in the place cited protesteth the innocency of his conscience, was far from professing to stand in doubt of his own Salvation, yea, and were not M. Bishop a man of an iron face, he would not attribute to the Apostle any such doubt. For the true vnderstanding of the place we are to obserue, as appeareth by the processe of this Epistle, that there were diuisions and part-takings amongst the Corinthians, some magnifying one of their teachers, and some another, and they willingly accepting the applause and praises of their followers, and each thinking highly of himselfe aboue the rest. Now the Apostle vnder his owne name, and the names of Apollo and Cephas, instructeth those teachers against this vain affectation of human applause: he wisheth thē to be content to be reckoned each with other the Ministers of Christ, & therein to haue a care to deale faithfully towards him whose stewards they are, endeauouring to their vttermost to please the Lord, not thinking the better of themselves for that men magnifie them aboue others, becaus men know thē not, nor can duly esteem of thē. Nay how should other iudge of vs; when we cannot sufficiently iudge of our selues, who in our greatest innocency as seemeth vs, yet cannot iustifie our selues to God, & when to our selues we are guilty of nothing, yet with him are found guilty many waies; because he seeth in vs that that we see not in our selues; & espieth iniquities and defaults where we by our sight can descry none, so that to his sight haply they are found superiours to vs, whom we think to be our inferiours: & they are approued for the better, whō mē's iudgements take to be the worse, & therefore reiecting the vain glorious cōmendatiōs of partially affected mē, we are to refer our selues who-ly to the iudgment of the Lord. And thus are those words expounded by those very authōrs whō M. Bishop citeth, not that mē may haue se-

secret faults, which perhaps may hinder their being iust, but that the best haue secret faults at least, by reason whereof in themselves they are not iust. Thus Ambrose taketh it; The Apostle was not to himselfe guilty of default, but because he was a man, he confessed himselfe a sinner, knowing that Iesus onely is the true light who did no sinne, neither was there guile found in his mouth, and that he onely is found iust, who was indeed free from falling. The words of Theodore are not so plaine, but Basil evidently maketh the Apostle to say; I offend in many things which I know not, as it is writtē, who knoweth how oft he offendeth? For although we sinne many wayes, yet we do not know (or we are not ware) of many of our sinnes. The Apostles words then import not a doubt, but an absolute deniall of his being iust, euen by the testimonie of M. Bishop owne records. And this shall further appeare in the next question, vpon further examination of the same words. M. Bishop therefore must change his antecedent proposition, and not say, We are vncertaine of our owne iustice or righteousnesse, but rather, Wee are certaine and sure, that in our selues we are not iust. And if hereof he will conclude, that we must therefore doubt of our owne Salvation, wee must tell him that his argument holdeth not. Indeed if our salvation were to stand vpon our owne righteousnesse, wee were not onely to doubt, but wholly to despaire of our owne Salvation; because by inherent iustice, as shall be shewed, no man shall bee iustified in Gods sight. Euen in our greatest perfection, when wee looke vnto our selues and our owne righteousnesse, we are subiect to that amased distraction which the Apostle describeth, euen to say, Who shall ascend into heauen? as if Christ were not ascended to make way for vs: and Who shall descend into the deepe? as if Christ had not died to deliuer vs from thence: we can neuer satisfie our selues, how either to escape the one, or to attaine the other. Therefore we according to the promise of the Gospell, rest the assurance of Salvation vpon faith in Christ, fully beleeuing that his merit is our righteoussnesse, and that by the verue thereof we are accepted vnto eternall life. Which sith M. Bishop knew well enough, it was but an idie vagarie of his, to alledge this so impertinently for an argument against vs. Now as touching the testimonies that he further alledgeth, the first of them is nothing to the matter in hand, to say nothing that hee quoteth it from a place where it is not found, and where it is found

¶ Ambrosius in
2. Paral. 1. 8. ser. 5.
Delicti et in seculis sibi non. rat. sed
quia homo erat
peccatore se fate-
batur, sciens unū
esse Iesum tantum verum qui pecca-
rum non facit, &c.
ipsum solum ius-
tificari qui vobis
alius esset &
lapsus.

¶ Basil. in Con-
stit. in myst. cap. 1.
Hoc est, multa
peccata que nos incolligo; unde &
Propheta dixit: Delicta qui incolligo? &c. I. r-ces multa pecca-
ta. plura tamen
delictorum no-firum unū pro-
mus.

h Rom. 10. 9

is not Austins, though it be in an homily amongst his. The Author of chole words speaketh to the same purpose as the Apostle did, to dissuade from taking delight in the praises and commendations of men, because they cannot know what commendation should be due vnto vs. Yea saith he, So long as we liue here, we our selues cannot iudge of our selues, I say not what we shall be to morrow, but what we are to day: how much lesse then should we be moued with other mens iudgements then with our owne conscience, which giueth testimony vnto vs? for our conscience should be our glory. We are not then vpon other mens opinions of vs to swell in opinion of our selues; we do not for the present sufficiently conceiue our owne imperfections and defaults, which with God may detract from vs much of that which men attribute vnto vs; we know not whether God may suffer vs to fall, as he doth many times his dearest children, to staine that commendation and vaine glory that we take too great pleasure in: but all this hindereth nothing but that faith is assured by the word of God, that God will neuer suffer it so to faile, or vs so to fall, as to fall vtterly away from him. The other place of Austin speaketh indefinitely of all, who * to our sight liue iustly and godly, with hope of future immortality, who though they be (all) sure that there is a reward of perseuerance, yet are not (all) sure to perseuere, because all are not indeed the same that to our sight they seeme to be. Onely they are assured thereof, as he saith, whom God assureth by reuelation from him; who doth reueale it by faith, through the spirit in our vocation and iustification, as we haue heard before out of S. Bernards words. The same S. Austin saith to his hearers, If there be in you faith, which worketh by loue, euen now ye belong to them that are predestinated, called, iustified Now sith the faithful by S. Austins iudgement do belong to them that are predestinated, called, iustified, it followeth by S. Austins iudgement, that they are to be assured that they belong to them that shal be glorified, and therefore shal certainly perseuer, because whom God hath predestinated, called, iustified, them he hath glorified, as the Apostle saith. And therefore doth S. Austin will the faithfull man to beleuee that he shall liue for euer, as before was shewed, and if he must beleuee to liue for euer, he must beleuee also to perseuer; not doubting thereof, because what Christ saith in the Gospell to one, belongeth to euery one, According to thy faith, so be it vnto thee. Such is then the certainty and assurance that we teach, not as commonly

i August. homil.

35. *Quamdiu
viximus hic, de nobis nisi nos ipsi
iudicare non pos-
sumus, non dico
quod eras erimus
sed quod hodie si-
mus. Quanto minus debemus mou-
eri iudicij alie-
nus quam de con-
scientia nostra
que nobis perhibet
testimonium?*

*Nam gloria nostra
debet esse conscien-
tia nostra.*

k Aug. de ciuit.

Dei lib. 11. cap.

12. *Quos vide-
mus iuste ac pie-
cum spe future
immortalitatis
hanc vitam ducere, &c. Licet de sua perseuerantie primo certi sunt
de ipsa tamen
perseuerantia sua reperiuntur incerti, &c.*

l Quis sciat, &c.

*n si aliqua reuelatione ab illo fiat
certus qui de hac
re iusto la. entiq;
iudicio non omnes
instruit sed neminem fallit.*

m De ver. Apof.

*ser. 16. Fides que per dilectionem operatur si est in vobis, iam pertinet
ad predestina-
tionem, vocatos, iustificatos.*

n Rom. 8. 30.

o August. in

Psal. 148. Supra

Seet. 3.

p Mat. 9. 29.

monly we vnderstand certainty and assurance by sense or by reason, by euidence and plaine appearance, wherby directly and immediately we know the thing wherof we are assured (this certainty and assurance S. Austin denieth, and so do we) but an assurance of faith, wherby by signes & arguments we beleue by the word and promise of God, that so it shall be, & rest assured that so it shall be, because we do beleue. And this is ordinary faith, wherby God ordinarily in some measure reuealeth the secret of his election to the faithfull Neither is there any necessity to restraine S. Austines words to extraordinary reuelation, as M. Bishop doth. That former certainty S. Bernard also denieth in the words alleged by M. Bishop, but we haue before seene how he aoucheeth the certainty of faith against the words cited in the place here alleged, A man knoweth not whether he be worthy of loue or of hatred. No man by any apprehension or light of flesh and blood can say, I am one of the elect, I am one of the predestinate: no man by iudgement of reason or humane knowledge can conceiue it, but yet as he saith in the very place here cited, there are certain manifest signes & tokens of saluation, such as that it is without all doubt that he is of the number of the elect, in whom those tokens do remain. Of which signes he speaketh thus in another place: How should God leaue his elect without testimony (of their election?) or what comforts might there be vnto them wauing carelessly betwixt hope and feare, if they did not find the fauour to haue some testimonie therof? The Lord knoweth who are his, he only knoweth whom he hath chosen from the beginning: but what man knoweth if he be worthy of loue or hatred? But if, as certaine it is, that certainty be denied vnto vs (in such sort as before was said) how much the more delightfull shall they be, if wee can find any tokens of this election? For what rest can our soules haue, so long as it hath yet no testimonie of it owne predestination? Therefore it is a word to be beleued, and worthie by all meanes to be receiued, whereby the witnessse and testimonie of our saluation is commended vnto vs. Thus hee denieth that absolute certaintie that before I mentioned, but denieth not that certaintie of faith which is gathered from such signes and tokens as by the word of God are deliuered vnto vs, which he giueth to vnderstand is such as whereby we are kept from that wauning and waucering betwixt hope and feare, which M. Bishop requirerth to take place in euery faithfull man. And this certainty is

*¶ Bernard. in
sermone. ser. 1.
Data sunt signa
quedam & uerba
cuius m. n. i. s. a. felicis ut inuoluntaritate sit cum esse
de numero electo-
rum in quo ca-
signa permanse-
rim.*

*¶ Id. in id. oblatio.
Pasche. ser. 2.*

*Quomodo sine te-
stimonio nos electos
suos dicit Deus?
an certe quodam
an esse poterat
conferretio in ter-
spira & metum
sollicitudine anxia
fluctuantibus. si
nulum omnino e-
le. li. m. su. et estis-
monium h. b. ore
mereret? Nonit
Dominus qui sunt
eius, & solum ipse
scit quos elegit
a p. n. p. o. Quis
uero scit hominum
se esse dignos amo-
re uel alio?*

*¶ Quod si uerum
est certitud. no-
bis omne nega-
tur, nunguid non
tando delict. abili-
ora erunt si cui
sunt electionis
huius signa possi-
mus inuenire?*

*¶ Quam enim requiem habere po-
t. est spiritus s. o-
s. r. diu. prede-
stinatio: i. o. u. s. i. s. i.
nullum ad huc te-
stimonium reue-
re?*

*¶ s. l. e. i. p. n. d. e. sermo & omni
accep. i. o. e. d. n. s.
quo saluati estis
nonis enim ex-
dantur.*

*¶ Quomodo sine testimonio nos electos
suos dicit Deus?
an certe quodam
an esse poterat
conferretio in ter-
spira & metum
sollicitudine anxia
fluctuantibus. si
nulum omnino e-
le. li. m. su. et estis-
monium h. b. ore
mereret? Nonit
Dominus qui sunt
eius, & solum ipse
scit quos elegit
a p. n. p. o. Quis
uero scit hominum
se esse dignos amo-
re uel alio?*

*¶ Quod si uerum
est certitud. no-
bis omne nega-
tur, nunguid non
tando delict. abili-
ora erunt si cui
sunt electionis
huius signa possi-
mus inuenire?*

*¶ Quam enim re-
quiem habere po-
t. est spiritus s. o-
s. r. diu. prede-
stinatio: i. o. u. s. i. s. i.
nullum ad huc te-
stimonium reue-
re?*

Idem de Euang. s. p. panem. ser. 3. Tria sunt que sic roborant & confirmant cor nostrum, ut nulla uis gentium merito rum, nulla consideratio proprie uilitatis, nulla aestimatio celestis beatitudinis ab altitudine spei deicere possit in casum iterum. Tria considero in quibus: oia spes mea consistit, charitatem adoptionis, ueritatem promissionis, potestatem redditiuum. Marmureo iam quantum uoluerit insipientis cogitatio mea, dicens, Quis enim es tu, aut quanta est illa gloria, quibusue meritis hanc obtinere speras? Et ego fiducialiter respondo, scio cui credidi, & certus sum quia in charitate nimia adoptauit me, quia uerax in promissione, quia potens in exhibitione, &c.

such as that Bernard himself thus expresseth it in himselfe: There are three things which do so strengthen and stablish my heart, as that no want of merits, no consideration of mine owne vilenesse, no estimation of the heauenly blisse, can cast me downe from the height of my hope, being fast rooted therein; I consider three things, I say, in which my hope wholly consisteth: the loue of God in adopting mee, the truth of his promise, and his power to performe the same. Let my foolish thought now repine and murmure us much as it will, saying, Who art thou, and how great is that glorie, and by what merits dost thou hope to obtaine the same? And I will boldly answer, I know whom I haue beleued, and I am certaine or sure, because hee hath adopted mee in great loue, because he is true in his promise, because hee is of power to make good the same. Thus Saint Bernard expressly affirmeth a certainty of faith, and speaketh so like a Protestant, as that if he were now aliue, hee should at Rome be condemned for an hereticke as well as wee. Hee was not of the mind that M. Bishop saith, that the word of God crieth out against them that by faith take assurance of their saluation, but only denieth that there is any assurance of saluation to be taken from our owne immediate and absolute knowledge and apprehension thereof, which we also confesse as well as he.

7. W. BISHOP.

If it may be permitted to ioin some moderne opinions with ancient, badde men with good, I could prooue by the testimony of euery principall sect of this time, that all other sectaries were deceiued in this their perswasion of their saluation. For both Lutherans, Calvinists, and Anabaptists (to omit the rest) do hold euery one of themselues assured of their saluation, and yet each sect holdeth euery one not of his owne band assured of damnation: so that by the sentence of the Lutherans, all Calvinists, and Anabaptists, are miserably deceiued when they assure themselves of their saluation: In like maner, if the Anabaptists be true censurers, both Lutherans, and Calvinists, and all other, not of their heresy, erre fouly, when they beare themselves in hand that they shall be saued. Certaine it is therefore by the consent of all the world, that very many who assure themselves of saluation, are indeed assured of damnation.

R. ABBOT.

A fooles bolt is soone shot. Bad men, saith he, with good: but of all those bad men are there any so bad as he & his fellow Seculars haue described the Iesuites to be, and the Iesuites them? Let vs turn the argument then vpon themselves: The Secular Priests hope for saluation, yet the Iesuites hold them for proud men, contentious, irregular, scandalous, and in a word for schismatikes, and therefore in case of damnation. So the Iesuites hope for saluation; yet the Seculars, though being brought in case to leap at a crust, they now dissemble it, hold them for very villaines, the notable impostors and coliners of the world, for very rakghels and diuels incarnate, for heretikes, and what not? Thus M. Bishop hath been conceited; thus hath Watson in his Quodlibets discovered them, and thereby to be assuredly in state of damnation also. Their grounds therefore on both sides are false, whereby they conceiue any hope of saluation. Yea, & in the body of their vnity amongst their Popes, their Cardinals, their Bishops, and the rest, there are many who vpon false grounds do hope for Saluation. Is it an argument therefore that they haue no true grounds, wherupon to build the hope thereof? The Turks hope for saluation by their superstitions, the Iewes hope for saluation by their traditions, and both take the Papists to be damned; and wil M. Bishop take this to be any impeachment of their hope? So therefore although Papists & Anabaptists, and such other absurd heretikes do think the faithfull to be in state of damnation, yet this nothing hindreth, but that the faithfull themselves, vpon the grounds that God hath laid before them, should stand assured of saluation. As for that which he saith of Lutherans and Caluinists, it is but the casting of his gall, the bitternes wherof remaineth only to himselfe. We ioy not in any such titles, nor loue to diuide our selues as Popish Monkes and Friars do, by the names of men. And in that difference of opinions that is betwixt them that are so called, there is none that is soberly minded, that doth preiudicate the others hope towards God, but rather by vnic of faith in the maine, learneth of the Apostle to say, ^{Phil. 3. 15.} If any bee asberwise minded (then he ought) God will euen reueale the same vnto him. There may be difference of opinions betwixt good men, as it fell fell out of old betwixt Cyprian and Stephanus Bishop of Rome, betwixt Hierome and Austine, betwixt Chrystome and Epiphanius, and sundry others, yea and the same may grow to some egernelle and anger whilest each maintaineth his owne conceit. But S. Austines rule ought to be remembered: b There may be brauls, as there have been sometimes betwixt brethren, betwixt Saints and holy men, as betwixt Barnabas and Paul, but not to breake concord of heart, not to destroy charity and love. Which rule so long as we retaine, and doe follow the truth in love, as the Apostle exhorteth, God doth pardon our error, and will in his good time bring our darknes into light, that in the end^d wee may all meet together in the unitie of faith and knowledge of the sonne of God, to be^e of one mind and of one iudgement, which we all ought to strieve vnto. This mind Cyprian bare in his priuate opinion of rebaptizing, saying to them that were assembled in counsell with him,^f Let vs every man deliuer what we thinke of this matter, iudging no man, nor seuering any man from the right of our communion for being minded otherwise. With this mind Austine said to Hierome,^g If it may be that wee may search or reason betwixt vs any matter, whereby without bitteresse of discord our hearts may be fed, let vs so doe. But if I cannot say what I thinke is to bee amended in thy writings, or thou in mine, without suspicion of enuie, and breach of friendship, let vs giue over these matters, and fauour our owne life and saluation. Let knowledge which puffeth vp haue the lesse, that there may be no offense to lone which edifieth. They who in the profession of one true religion, doe prosecute their differences with other minde, doe bewray their owne corruption, and breake that unitie of the spirit, that should be preferred by the bond of peace. Seeing therefore we beare this mind in some difference of opinions, it is nothing else but M. Bishops malice to inferre thereof, that we each to other denie the hope or assurance of saluation. But his conclusion of al this babblement is a wise one, Certaine it is therefore that very many who assure themselues of saluation, are indeed assured of damnation. For what is it to the question, if any by carnal security dreaming of saluation, haue in the end failed of that, which rashly and without ground they haue presumed of? we doubt not but many presumptuous hypocrits & heretiks come to noughr, who for the time by vain opinion haue flattered themselues in the false hope of that which they neuer imbraced by true faith: but the

b Augustin in Psal. 33. Non possunt nisi exister-
re rixae aliqua
quomodo inter
fratres & inter
sanctos exierunt inter Barnabam
& Paulum, sed
non iure occide-
runt concordiam,
non que in erro-
merent charitate.
c Ephes. 4. 15.
d Vers. 13.
e 1. Cor. 1. 10.

f Cyprian in con-
cil. Carthag. De
hac ipsa re quid
singuli sentiamus proferamus, ne-
minem iudican-
tes nec a iure communionis aliquem
si diuersum senserit
amouentes.
g August. Epist.
15. Si fieri potest ut inter nos que-
ramus & destera-
mus aliquid quo sine auariidine
discordie orde-
mistra pascantur, stat. Si autem non possum dicere
quid mihi emen-
dandum videatur
in scriptis tuis,
nec tu meis sine
suspensione inuidie
aut lesione amicitie, quiescamus ab his & nosire vire saluatiq; par-camus. Minus
certe assequitur
illa que instat,
dum non offendetur
illi que edificat.

h Ephes. 4. 3.

fall of them in whom there neuer was any true faith, no whit impeacheth the assurance of them, who truly and vnfaignedly do beleue.

14. W. BISHOP.

With the testimonies of the ancient Doctors for vs, I pray thee gentle Pag. 57.
 Reader, conferre those which M. Perkins in his sixth reason alleadgeth against vs. First, S. Augustine in these words. Of an euill seruant, thou De verb. Domini art made a good child: therefore presume not of thine owne doing, serm. 28.
 but of the grace of Christ. It is no arrogancy, but faith to acknowledge, what thou hast receiued, it is not pride, but deuotion. What word is here of Certainty of Salvation? but that it belongeth to a faith-full man, to confesse himselfe much bound to God, for calling of him to be his. Which euery Christian must do, hoping himselfe so to be, and being most certaine, that if he be not in state of grace, it is tong of himselfe, & no want on Gods part. The second place hath not so much as any shew of words for him, thus he speaketh: Let no man aske another man, but returne to his owne heart, and if he finde Charity there, he hath security for his passage, from life to death Tract. 5 in. Epist.
What need was there to seeke 1022.
charity in his heart, for security of his Salvation, if his faith assured him thereof, therefore this text maketh flat against him.

R. ABBOT.

The words of Austine, or rather of Ambrose (for he indeed is the author of them) are these, O man, thou didst not dare to lift thine eyes to heauen; thou didst cast them to the earth, and upon the sudden thou receiuedst the grace of Christ: all thy sinnes are forguen thee. Of an euill seruant thou art made a good sonne. Presume therefore not of thine owne working, but of the grace of Christ. For by grace ye are saved faith the Apostle. Here therefore is no arrogancy, but faith to speake of that which thou hast receiued, is not pride, but deuotion. To which words Matter Bishop answereth, What word is here of Certainty of Sal-nation, when as expressly against his assertion it is affirmed, that the faithfull regenerate in Christ, doth presume, that his sinnes are forguen him, that hee hath receiued the grace of Christ, that hee is made the child of God, and that this is no arrogancie, no pride, no vnlawfull presumption, but a matter of faith, a matter of deuotion and a good presumption, as he calleth it afterwards. Now all these scilicet ait. Non ergo hic arrogantiæ est sed fides, predicare quod accepit non est superbi sed deuotio.

things

things he comprehendeth vnder the name of Saluation, citing to that purpose the words of the Apostles, By grace ye are saved. For how doth the Apostle say, By grace yee are saved, as of a thing done already, but for that we are made partakers of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, haue receiued the grace of Christ, and are become the children of God? Therefore in presuming of these things, as Ambrose willethe the faithfull to do, we consequently presume, and stand assured of our owne Saluation, because in these things our Saluation is begun, as appeareth by the words of Christ concerning Zachew:

^b Luc. 19.9.

^b This day saluation is come to this house, because this man is become the sonne of Abraham. And whereas M. Bishop saith, we may not presume hereof, because we know not our owne works or righteousnesse, S. Ambrose telleth vs, that this is not to be presumed of our own works, but of the grace of Christ, the true calling whereof is such, as maketh vs that whereunto we are called, because we are thereby call:d, not at the eare only, but inwardly, and in the heart. Therefore them that are thus truly called, S. Ambrose willethe not coldly to hope, according to the manner of M. Bishops hope, where feare is as strong as hope, but faithfully and deuoutly to presume that they are in the state of grace; not with doubting to thinke, that if they bee not so, it is long of themselues, but to resolute that without themselues they are so, indeed, onely by the grace of God. We may well thinke that it was a frosty morning, that made M. Bishop to make so cold construction of so effectuall and plaine words. But in the next place cited out of Austine, he goeth beyond himselfe. Let vs take the whole words as he hath them, vpon these words of S. Iohn; ^c By this we know that we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren. Hereupon saith he, ^d What doe we know? that we are translated from death to life. Whereby doe we know it? Because we loue the brethren. Let no man aske of another man; let him returne to his owne heart: if he finde there loue to the brethren, let him be without doubt that he is passed from death to life. He is now on the right hand. Let him not regard that his glory is now hid; when the Lord shall come, then his glory shall appeare. For he is aliuie, but yet as in the winter; the root is aliuie, but the branches are in a manner dry. Within is the pith that liueth, within are the leaues, within are the fruits, but they looke for a summer. Therefore we know, that we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren. Where we see both by the

^c 1. Ioh. 3. 14.
^d Augustin
Joan. tra. 7. 5
Quid nos scimus?
Quia transuimus de morte ad uitam. unde scimus? Quia diligimus fratres.
Nemo interroget hominem: redat unusquisque ad cor suum. Si ibi inuenerit charitatem fratrum securus sit, quia transiit de morte ad uitam.
Iam in dextra est. Non attendit quia modo gloria eius occulta est: cum uenerit Dominus tunc apparet gloria eius.
Uiget enim sed adhuc in hyeme: rugit radix sed quasi aridi sunt rami.
Janus est medulla que uiget: inuis sunt folia arborum, inuis fructus, sed alitem expectant. Ergo nos scimus, &c.

text it selfe, and by the exposition of this auncient Father, that by loue towards them that are our brethrē in the faith of Iesus Christ we are to take knowledge and assurance of our being translated from death to life, that is, of our own saluation, & that so as to be without doubt thereof, & yet this wrangler doubteth not to say, This place hath not so much as any shew of words for him. The point in question is affirmed, not in ambiguous and doubtfull words, but euidently and apparantly, and yet hee goeth away with, This place hath not so much as any shew of words for him, nay, this text maketh but against him. But why so, I pray you? What need was there, saith he, to seeke charity in his heart for securitie of his Saluation, if his faith assured him thereof? But why doth he not answer to the point? Doth not S. Austin teach the faithfull an assurance of Saluation, be it by faith, be it by charity, let not that here be the question? Is there to the faithfull by S. Austines iudgement, any assurance of Saluation? He could not tell how directly to deny it, & yet with a Romish and impudent face passeth it ouer, as if there were no such thing. The onely shift that he insinuateth, is this, that this assurāce spoken of by S. Austine, is by charity, and not by faith. But what then, is there assurance by charity? No such matter; for hee hath told vs before, that charity is seated in the darke corners of the wil, and we cannot tell whether we haue it or not: And so whereas the Apostle, and by him S. Austine say, that we know that we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren, hee contrariwise saith: We cannot know that we are translated from death to life, because we cannot know that we loue the brethren, in both points absolutely contradicting both the one and the other. But to his foolish question I answer him, that the affirming of the assurance of faith, is no deniall of the means & helps from which it gathereth and increaseth this assurance. Faith giueth assurance of Saluation by the word of God; not onely by apprehending the promises of life & Saluation, but also by obseruing such marks & tokens as the word of God setteth down, to describethē to whom this saluation doth appertain, which whē a man findeth in himself, his faith thereby giueth him the cōfort of saluation, because it beleueth that which the word of God hath deliuered, concerning them in whō those signs & marks are found, Therefore it doth not onely look to that which Christ saith, that whosoever beleueth shall haue euerlasting

e Sect. 6.

f Ioh. 3. 16.

life,

g Iohn 8.47.

life, but because Christ also saith, He that is of God, heareth Gods word, therefore the faithful man delighting in the word of God, beleeueth concerning himself, that he is of God. Because the Apostle saith, Every one that calleth vpon the name of the Lord shall be saued, therefore the faithful man vnfaignedly calling vpon the name of the Lord, beleeueth of himself that he shalbe saued. And so whereas S. Iohn saith, that we know that we are translated frō death to life, because we loue the brethren, it is our faith wherby we take this knowledge, that we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren; for how should we know it, but that our faith, beleeueth that which the word of God hath taught vs in that behalfe? How idly then doth he argue, that we need not seeke for charity for assurance of Salvation, if we be assured thereof by faith, when charity it selfe is appointed for a helpe of that assurance which wee haue by faith; whē from charity it is in some part that faith by the word of God, conceiueth a reason of that assurance? But by his answers to these places, the Reader may esteeme of his wilfulnesse in al the rest. How miserable is the case of those men, who being so fast bound with the bonds of truth, as that they know not which way to stirre, yet haue no heart, nor conscience, to giue assent to that which they are no way able to resist?

15. W. BISHOP.

Sup. 3. cap. Mat.

The next Author he citeth is S. Hylarie, in these words: The Kingdom of heauen which our Lord professed to be in himself, his will is that it be hoped for, without any doubtfulness of vncertain will (at all, is an addition) otherwise there is no iustification by faith, if faith it selfe be made doubtfull. First, he saith, but as wee say, that the Kingdome of heauen is to be hoped for, without any doubtfulness; for we professe Certainty of hope, and deny onely Certainty of faith, as M. Perkins confesseth before. And as for faith, we say with him also, it is not doubtfull but very certain. What maketh this to the purpose, that a man must beleeue his own Salvation, when S. Hilary speakeith there of faith of the resurrection of the dead. His last Author is S. Bernard: Who is the iust man, but he that being loued of God, loues him againe? which comes not to passe but by the spirit, reuealing by faith the eternall promise of God, of his Salvation to come, which

Epist. 107.

reuelation is nothing else, but the infusion of spirituall grace, by which the deeds of the flesh are mortified, the man is prepared to the kingdome of heauen, together receiuing in one spirit, that whereby he may presume, that he is loued and loues againe. Note that he saith the reuelation of the spirit, to be nothing else but the infusion of spirituall graces, and comfort, whereby a man hath some feeling of Gods goodnesse towards him, by which (he saith) he may presume, but not beleeue certainly, that he is loued of God. But let S. Bernard in the same place interpret him self, there he speaketh thus, as I cited once before: It is giuen to men to tast before hand, somewhat of the blisse to come, &c. Of the which knowledge of our selues now in part perceiued, a man doth in the meane season glory in hope, but not yet in security. His opinion then is expressly, that for all the reuelations of the spirit made by faith vnto vs, we are not assured for Certainty of our Salvation, but feele great ioy, through the hope wee haue beere after to receiue it.

R. ABBOT.

The words of Hilarie are very plaine, that without doubting we are to hope for the kingdome of heauen, and that it is the will of Christ that we do so. Whereof he addeth a reason, Otherwise there is no iustification by faith, if faith it self become doubtful, which if we will accommodate to that that goeth before, it must import thus much, that we cannot by our faith be iustified, to the obtaining of the kingdome of heauen, if we do not vndoubtedly beleeue to obtaine the same. M. Bishop answereth first, that Hilarie saith but as they say. No doth? Why, do they say that without doubting we must hope for the kingdome of heauen? He saith yea, but forgetting the prouerb, that a liar must beare a braine. For in the lease before he hath set it downe for a principle, confirmed as he saith, by aboue an hundred texts of holy writ, that the faithfull must stand in feare of their owne Salvation. There cannot bee certaine and vndoubted hope, where there is a necessity of feate. If a man must stand in feare; then can he not hope without doubt. Thus he knoweth not what he saith, nor what to say; We must feare, and we must not feare; we must doubt, and we must not doubt: there is Certaintie, and there is no Certaintie. Whereas he saith that M. Perkins confesseth, that they profess:

a Hilar. in Mat. cap. 5 Regnum celorum vult Dominus sine aliqua incerte voluntatis ambiguitate sperari: alioquin iustificatio ex fide nulla est si fides ipsa sit ambigua.

b Sec. 10.

professe certaintie of hope, he speaketh to that purpose somewhat, but so as that he confesseth that certaintie to be as they affirme it, onely probable and coniecturall, and not that which is here spoken of, which is without doubting. These words therefore are directly contrarie to that which they say, because here it is sayd that wee must without doubt hope for the kingdome of heauen, whereas they say, we must neuer so hope for it but that we must feare and stand in doubt. Whereas he maketh a difference betwixt certaintie of hope, and certaintie of faith, it is nothing to this place. For when Hilarie for reason of that he saith, that we must hope without doubting, bringeth in, that faith if it be doubtfull doth not iustifie, he plainly sheweth that he confoundeth faith and hope, and taketh them here both for the same, and importeth that we are to beleue to be made partakers of the kingdome of heauen, which is the same as to beleue our owne Salvation. But saith M. Bishop, Hilarie there speaketh of the faith of the resurrection of the dead. Verie lewdly and vnhonestly: for there is not a word there spoken of the resurrection of the dead, but onely to shew how Christ confirmeth his to the vndoubted confidence and hope of those good things which are to come, and shall continue for euer. And that he may yet further vnderstand that Hilarie by hope meaneth otherwise then they doe, he saith in another place; that the accomplishing of our blisse requireth a hope that is without feare or doubt. We have thereto neede of the confidence of a firme and constant opinion, and an vchangeable minde, because to be confident is more then to hope. We are therefore to be confident therein, least the wrath of God waxing hot, do suddenly destroy vs from the right way. For he is faithfull who saith, He that beleueth in me, shall not be indged, but shall passe from death to life. By which words it appeareth manifestly, that the true hope is not, as M. Bishop taketh it, a probable and likely conceit ioyned with vncertaintie and feare, but a confident hope, a settled and constant hope, beleueing stedfastly without feare or doubt to receiue that life and blisse that Christ hath promised. At the next place of Bernard hee againe very wilfully shutteth his eies, and refuseth to see that which hee cannot chuse but see. What can be more directly spoken to the matter in hand, then that the spirit by faith revealeth to a man the eternal purpose of God concerning his owne salvation to come? Why doth he deny to c Confirmare nos

in spem bonorum aeternorum (silaciam futurorum)
laborat.

d In Psal. 2. in fine. Non trepidat
spem neque ambiquam perfectio be-atitudinis exigit.

Confidentia ad id
opus firme opinionis scilicet & in-demutabili volun-
tate; quia plus sit confidere quam sperare. Confiden-
dum ergo est ne
nos a via iusta
exardescens breui
ira Dei deperdat.

Fidelis enim est
qui ait. Qui credit in me, &c.

e Bernard. epist.
107. Reuelante
spiritu per fidem hominem aeternum Dei propositum
sper salute sua futuro.

a man to beleue his owne Saluation, when the Spirit by faith reuealeth to him the purpose of God, that he shall be saued? Here is no ambiguitie of words, here is an expresse affirming of the point in question, that the spirit by faith reuealeth to a man the euerlasting purpose of God concerning his owne Saluation. What haue wee now for answer hereof? Note, saith he: that he saith the reuelation of the spirit, to be nothing else but the infusion of spirituall grace. But what is that to the purpose what this reuelation is? Why doth he not answer to the point, that the spirit of God by faith reuealeth vnto a man the purpose of God concerning his owne Saluation? Let that reuelation be howsoeuer, it is sufficient for vs that God by his spirit reuealeth to a man that, whence he hath to beleue his owne Saluation. Now Bernard indeed declareth this^r reuelation to bee nothing else but the infusion of spirituall grace, by which whilest the deeds of the flesh are mortified, a man is prepared to the kingdom which flesh and blood inherite not, receiuing together in one spirit, both whereby hee may presume that he is loued, and doth also loue againe. But this impeacheth nothing that we say, nay it serueth wholly to strengthen our assertion. For how doth faith by the infusion of spirituall grace, apprehend the purpose of God concerning our Saluation, but in that it beleueth by the word of God, that they to whom such and such graces are giuen, are the children of God, and shall be saued; that they who are called and iustified, shall also bee glorified? And thus S. Bernard at large declareth in that Epistle, that at the rising of the sunne of righteousnesse (in our iustification) the secret that was hidden from the beginning, concerning them that are predestinate and shall bee blessed, beginneth to appeare out of the depth of eternity, whilest a man called by the feare of God, and made iust by loue, presumeth that he is one of the number of the blessed, knowing that whom hee hath iustified them hee hath also glorified: that^h a man is to take for the declarer of that secret the spirit iustifying him, and thereby testifying to his spirit, that he is the child of God; thatⁱ in his iustification he is to take knowledge of the counsell of God, and that therein he beginneth to know euen as hee is knowre, there being giuen to him to perceiue somewhat before hand of his future blisse, accordingly as hee hath lien hid frō euerlasting

f Que sancte en-
latio non est aliud
quā infusio gra-
tie spiritūali, per quam dñm facta
carnis mortificā-
tur, homo ad reg-
num preparatur
quod caro & san-
guis non possent, simul accipiens in vno spiritu &
vnde se presumat
amatum, & vnde
redamet ne gratis
amatus sit.

g Sic ad ortum solis iusticie sacri-
mentum abscondi-
tum a seculis depredestinatis &
beatificandis emergere quodam-
modo incipit ex
abyssu eternitatis,
dñm quisq; vo-
catus per timorē, iustificatus per amorem, presumit
se quoque esse de
numero beatorū,
scilicet nimirum
quis quis iustifi-
catus est. &
magnificatur.
h Hæc homo
huius ætatis in-dicem sperare un-
nulli. hanc enim cog-
it ipse testificatur in spiritus tuo quod

filius Dei & ipse sit. Agnosce consilium Dei in iustificatione tua. i. Id quisq; accipit in iustificatione sua et incipit & ipse cognoscere sicut & cognitus est, cum videlicet datur & ipse presentive a quo datur sua ipsius futura beatitudine, quemadmodum ab æterno latuit in predestinatione, plenius apparuit in beatificante.

in God by whom he was predestinate, and shall more fully appear in the same God, when he shall make him blessed. This is the revealing that Saint Bernard speaketh of by infusion of spirituall grace: this we approue and confirme, and hereof before I noted, that faith to strengthen it selfe in the assurance of Salvation, looketh to those fruits and effects of faith and of the grace of God, which are set downe as signes and markes of them to whom the promises of Salvation do belong. But now M. Bishop cuerturneth all that Bernard speaketh in this behalfe; for whereas he seateth downe the feare of God, repentance, charitie, praier, purpose of new life, as the things whereby that reuelation, is performed vnto vs, he denieth that there can be any such reuelation, because repentance, the feare of God, charitie and such like are seated in the darke corners of the will, and a man knoweth not whether he haue the same or not. A man, he saith, may hope that he is in the state of grace, and must thinke that if he be not so, it is long of himselfe, but he cannot know that he is so. Thus S. Bernard teacheth, that God of his great goodnesse bringeth the heart of man into his wonderfull light; but M. Bishop keepeth him in horrible darknesse, where a man awake and in his right wits, can conceiue nothing but dread and feare. Therefore it is but for a shift that here he maketh Bernard to say, that by infusion of grace a man hath some feeling of Gods goodnesse towards him; for how can he haue any feeling of Gods goodnesse towards him by infusion of grace, when he cannot know that he hath any infused grace? Albert Bernard doth not say only, that a man hath some feeling of Gods goodnesse towards him, but that to the iustified man, it is giuen to haue a fore-feeling of his owne blisse. Therefore he so presumeth that he is beloued of God, as that he certainly beleueth it. For a man is certainlie to beleue what the spirit of God reuealeth. But the spirit reuealeth to the iustified man the purpose of God concerning his owne Salvation. He is therefore certainlie to beleue, that he is beloued of God and shall be saued. And so S. Bernard saith that he acknowledgeth himselfe to be the child of grace, that he hath the triall and prooffe of the fatherly affection of Gods goodnesse towards him; that he perceiueth, & confidently resolueth that he is beloued of God that he presumeth himselfe to be of the number of the blessed. And what is it to presume but to take for certaine, and certainlie to beleue that that is true whereof we doe presume? But saith M. Bishop: Let S. Bernard interpret

*h. Agnoscat se merito quidem
non iam in esse
gracie filium,
quippe qui patrem
nam erga se diuini
boni atque ex-
peritur affectum,
et c. se confiteri a-
more, presentem
amorem, et c. presu-
mit se esse de nu-
mero beatorum.*

interpret himselfe in the same place. Be it so; but I will translate for him, vnlesse he could translate more faithfully then he doth.¹ It is giuen to the iustified man, saith Bernard, to haue some fore-feeling of his own blisse to come. And what? wil M. Bishop deny him to belicue that which S. Bernard saith he doth in part already feele? Yea, but it followeth:^m Of which knowledge of himselfe now already perceiued in part, he for the time reioyceth in hope, but not yet in security. And what of this? Marry, saith he, his opinion then is, that for all the reuelations of the spirit made by faith vnto vs, we are not assured for our Salvation, but feele great ioy through the hope we haue hereafter to receiue it. But he hath a very wrong opinion of Bernards opinion. What? because a man reioiceth not in security for the present, doth it follow that he hath no assured Certainty of Salvation to come? And what? is there not assured Certainty to be conceiued of that that is reuealed by the spirit of God? Surelyⁿ the spirit is truth, & we are fully to assure our selues of that that is reuealed thereby, as before was said: And if there be no assurance, what glorying or reioycing can there be? He saith, that we feele great ioy through the hope we haue hereafter to receiue it. But what ioy can there be of that, of which as he saith we must continually stand in feare? If there be no assurance, there can be no ioying or glorying; if there be ioying & glorying, it must arise from Certainty and assurance. S. Bernard in y phrase of reioycing, or glorying in hope, alludeth to the words of the Apostle,^o We reioyce or glory vnder the hope of the glory of God. Vpon which words Chrysostome obserueth, that by the word glorying, the Apostle declareth what mind he is to beare that hath tied his faith to God. For he must haue a full persuasion, saith he, not only of the things that are already giuen, but also of the things to come, as if they were already giuen. For a man gloryeth or reioiceth of those things which he hath in hand. Because therefore the hope of the things to come, is as sure and certaine as the things already giuen, the Apostle saith, wee alike reioyce thereof. So then Saint Bernard by the same phrase teacheth the iustified man as touching Certainty of expectation to glorie in hope of the blisse to come, as if the same were already giuen vnto him. Therefore he saith of him in the same epistle:^q Hee glorieth in the hope of the glory of the sonnes of God, which now euen neere at hand with open face he beholdeth, leaping for ioy at this new light and saying,

^l Datur ipsi presentire aiquid de sua ipsius futura beatitudine.

^m De qua tamen iam percepta sumus: ex parte notitia, interim qui lens glorie: ut in spe, non tunc inueni in secus: a. e.

ⁿ 1. John 5. 6.

^o Rom. 5. 2.
^p Chrysost. in Rom. hom. 9.
 Gloriamur est, ut intelligas quili animo praeditum cum esse oportet, qui silent suam Dio obstrinet. Neq; enim illa solam plures persuasimem factam esse oportet de iis que dicitur sim, sed de futuris tanquam iam datur. Gloriat ut enim quis super iis que iam in manu habe. Quoniam: quia reu futurum in spe sic si magis atque euolens: ut iam uala u, quod inquit & super illis gloriamur.

^q Ep. R. 107. post med. Quoniam: quia reu futurum in spe glorie: ut inueni in secus: a. e.

rum Dei quam iam nimirum e uicino reuelata facie exultans non in lumine speculatur, & dicit

The light of thy countenance is sealed upon vs, O Lord, thou hast put gladnesse in my heart. Now therefore whereas he saith he glorieth in hope, but not yet in security, wee must not thinke that by denying securitie he ouerthroweth reioycing in hope, but signifieth that much conflict remaineth for the attainment of that, which notwithstanding certainly & vndoubtedly he hopeth for He denieth him so to reioyce, as if there were no further dangers to be feared, no further opposition to be expected, no further temptations to be endured, no further enemies to be resisted, and importeth that there is much fighting and wrastring, much care and sorrow, many perplexities and troubles yet to be forecast and looked for. We may not then be secure, as if there were nothing any more to trouble vs, but we may be secure, and without doubt of an happy issue & deliuerance from all troubles, and this is the hope that wee reioyce in. Therefore S. Austin saith, as before was cited: Loy that thou art redeemed, but yet not in reall effect: as touching hope be secure (be without feare.) So againe: If a man haue in his heart loue towards the brethren, let him be secure (let him be without doubt) that hee is passed from death to life. And thus doth Cyprian describe the condition of faithfull Christians, There is with vs strength of hope and steadfastnesse of faith, and amidst the ruines of the decaying world a courageous mind, and constant vertue, and patience, alwaies ioyfull, and a soule alwaies secure (or without doubt) of God to be our God. To be short, how farre Saint Bernard was from denying the securitie of particular faith and hope, appeareth by that that before hath beene said in the twelfth section, whereby it is plaine that it was not his purpose here to require that necessity that M. Bishop doth, of doubt & feare.

16. W. BISHOP.

This passage of testimonies being dispatched, let vs now come unto the five other reasons, which M. Perkins produceth in defense of their opinion.

The first reason is, That in faith there are two things, the one is an infallible assurance of those things which we beleue: This we grāt and here hence prone (as you heard before) that there can bee no faith of our particular Salvation, because we bee not so fully assured of that, but that we must stand in feare of losing it, according to that, Hold that which thou hast, lest perhaps another receiue thy crown. But the second

r. August. in Psal. 37. Spe securus esto.
s. Idem. in epist.
Io. in tract. 3. supra
Sect. 14.
e. Cyprian. cont.
Deme. r. P.iget
apud nos spei robur & firmitas fidei & inter ipsas seculi habent is ruinas erecta mens, & immobilis
virtus & nunquam
nisi leta patientia & de Deo suo
semper anima se-
cua.

second point of faith, p^roves all out of question. For (saith M. Perkins) it doth assure vs of remission of our sinnes, and of life cuerlasting in particular. Prove that Sir, and we need no more. It is proued out of S. Iohn: As many as receiued him, he gaue them power to be made the sonnes of God, namely, to them that belecue in his name. This text commeth much too short: he gaue them power to be the sonnes, that is, gaue them such grace, that they were able, and might if they would, be sons of God, but did not assure them of that neither: much lesse that they should so continue vnto their lines end. I omit his vsanory discourse of eating, and beleueing Christ, and applying vnto vs his benefits, (which he might be ashamed to make vnto vs, that admit no part of it to be true) I confesse that therein faith hath his part, if it be ioyned with charity, and frequentation of the Sacraments. This is it which S. Paul teacheth, That not by the works of Moses law, but by faith in Christ Iesus we receiue the promises of the Spirit, & shall haue hereafter the performance, if we obserue those things which Christ hath commanded vs. But what is this to Certainty of Salvation? But (saith he) it is the property of faith, to apply Christ vnto vs, & proues it out of S. Augustine, Beleeue, and thou hast eaten: Again, Send vp thy faith, and thou maiest hold Christ in heauen: &c. To which, and such like authorities, I answer, that we finde Christ, we hold Christ, we see Christ, by faith, beleueing him to be the sonne of God, and redeemer of the world, and Iudge of the quicke and the dead: and we understand, and digest all the mysteries of his holy word. But where is it once said, in any of these sentences, that we are assured of our Salvation? we beleuee all these points and many more: but we shall be neuer the neerer our Salvation, vntil we obserue Gods cōmandements: The seruant which knowes his Masters will, and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes. Then you are my friends (saith our Saviour) when you shall do the things which I command you: which we being vncertaine to performe, assure not our selues of his friendship, but when to our knowledge we go as neere it as we can, and demand pardon of our wants, we liue in good hope of it.

Iohn 1.

Gal. 3.

Tract. 15. in Iohn.

Luk. 12. Iohn. 15.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins affirmeth, that the nature of true faith standeth not only in an vnfallible, but also in a particular assurance of remission of sins & life cuerlasting. Vnfallible assurāce M. Bishop acknowledgeth, but thence will conclude against particular assurance of our own Salvation, because, saith he, we be not so fully assured of that, but that we must stand in feare of losing it. This he saith he hath proued before, but his prooffe thereof is already disproued: onely heere for supply hee bringeth the words of Christ to the Church of Philadelphia; ^a Hold that which thou hast, lest another receiue thy crowne. Which supply of his, is euen according to the maner of his former prooffe: he nameth a place, and so leaueth it; be it right or wrong, what is that to him? If yee aske him how he inferreth that that he would proue hereby, you must pardon him, he cannot tel. It is very doubtfull what may here be imported by the crowne: whether the Angel, that is, the Bishop of the Church of Philadelphia bee particularly warned to take heed of forgoing or losing any of them whom he should account, as S. Paul speaketh, ^b his ioy and crowne of reioycing at the comming of Iesus Christ: or whether the same Church be generally admonished to take heed of losing the crowne of the publike calling and grace of God. For so God to signifie the establishing of his kingdome of grace amongst the Iewes, amongst other words saith: ^c I set a beauiifull crowne vpon thy head. To which honour done vnto them, when they yeilded not correspondance of dutifull obedience and thankfulness to God, our Saviour Christ foretold them, that ^d the kingdome of God (which was their crowne) should be taken from them, and giuen to a nation that should bring forth the fruit thereof. The like we take to bee the importment of the crowne in this place; and that the Church of Philadelphia is admonished to take heed, lest by relapsing from her goodnesse and vertue, she should lose the honour of the condition, and state of a Church which God had called her vnto: euen as the Church of Ephesus is before threatned; ^e I will come against thee shortly, and will remoue thy candlesticke out of his place, except thou repent: the candlesticke in the one place being meant of the same, which by the crowne is intended in the other. But if Master Bishop will needs vnderstand the crowne to be meant of Salvation and life eternall, we answer him, that this crowne being proper to Gods elect, cannot be lost by them to whom it is assigned; yet so as that withall we say, that God in his wisdom hath appointed a meanes, whereby hee will preferue them that they may not lose the crowne. To this end he vseth many exhortations and admonitions, many ter-

^a Reuel. 3. 11.^b Phil. 4. 1.
1. Thes. 2. 19.^c Ezech. 16. 12.^d Matth. 21. 43.^e Reuel. 2. 5.

rours and feares, many corrections and chastisements, whereby hee hedgeth and compasseth them in, that whereas by relinquishing their faith and obedience, they should indeede runne into hauock and ruine of themselues, they may hereby be wrought to perseuere and continue therein, to the obtaining of the crowne. Thus his Master^r Bellarmino confesseth, that this place hath his vse in respect of them who notwithstanding by Gods predetermination are holden that they cannot lose the crowne. If then we doe so vnderstand the crowne, yet the place auaieth M. Bishop nothing: but being so taken, how one man should haue the crowne and by his losing it, another should receiue it in place of him, all his wit and learning is not able to resolue vs. This place therefore maketh nothing against the particular assurance of faith, but for prooffe therof M. Perkins hath brought that that is very pregnant and cleare. First, hee allegeth the words of Saint Iohn: As many as receiued him, to them he gaue power to be the sonnes of God, euen to them that beleene in his name. Where he argueth, that to receiue Christ, and to beleene in Christ, doe both import the same thing, because the one of them is put for the exposition of the other. Now to receiue, is to take in particular to a mans selfe, to applie to himselfe, to apprehend or lay hold of, for conueying a thing to himselfe. Because therefore to beleene in Christ is to receiue Christ, it followeth, that to beleene in Christ is to take Christ, to apprehend him, and lay hold of him with all his benefits, for conueying & applying of him particularly to a mans selfe; to beleene particularly for himselfe, to make vse of Christ, according to that the Scripture describeth him, to himselfe. True faith therefore according to the measure of it, assureth infallibly, not in the general only by principle, but in particular also by conclusion & application to it selfe. This being the collection that we make from this place, and plainly noted by M. Perkins, M. Bishop to it answereth nothing, either his eies dazeling that he could not see, or his wits failing that he knew not what to say. But to delude the Reader, he will say somewhat to the place, though he say nothing to the purpose; yet that which he doth say, he saith out of the schoole of Pelagius the heretike, and not out of the doctrine of Iesus Christ. He gaue them power; that is, saith he, he gaue them such grace, that they were able, and might if they would be the sons of God.

^r Bellarm. de
gra. & lib. arbit.
lib. 2. cap. 13. Remota si non perse-ueraret. &c. amittere coronam
suam, sed hac ad-
monitione prier-
rius &c. sine di-
bit fortissimè re-
nebit quod habet, & comoditandè perueniet ad co-
ronam quã non habet.

⁸ Iohn 1. 12.

But what? Did he giue them to be able onely, and did he not giue them to will also to be the sonnes of God? Did hee leaue them to their own will, either to be or not to be the sons of God? Of them to whom he gaue this power, he saith, that ^h they are borne, not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God, who not of our will, but ⁱ of his owne will begat vs by the word of truth, that wee should be as the first fruits of his creatures; and will M. Bishop goe about to perswade vs, that it is at our own will that we are begotten and borne againe? The power here spoken of, should rather be translated a prerogative then a power, and therefore Cyril expresseth it by the terme of ^h a supernaturall dignitie, and affirmeth, that therby is meant ⁱ the adoption and grace of God, which is not such as Master Bishop speaketh of, whereby it is onely giuen vnto vs ^m to be able if we wil, but also to wil, not only wherby we may be, but wherby we are the sonnes of God, as before hath been declared in the question of Free will. And whereas he addeth: He did not assure them of that neither, much lesse that they should so continue vnto their lines end; he should vnderstand, that by ⁿ the true grace of God that comfort is ministred vnto the faithfull, to say as Saint Iohn directeth them; ^o Behold what loue the Father hath giuen vnto vs, ^{*} that wee are called, and are the sonnes of God: Euen now are we the sonnes of God, and we know that when he shall appeare, we shall be like vnto him; thereby teaching the effect of faith, both to giue assurance of present state, and of perseuerance also to future glorie. But all this Master Bishop hangeth vpon the will of man, hauing learned of his father Pelagius, to ascribe to God ^p the power whereby wee are able to be or maybe, but to our selues the willing and acting of our adoption, whereby we are indeed the sonnes of God. But of this thus briefly, as being beside the matter here in hand, and the question of Free will being debated at large before. To shew somewhat further that point of particular assurance; Master Perkins addeth, that Christ setteth forth himselfe, as the bread of life and water of life, and commendeth vnto vs the eating of his bodie, and the drinking of his blood, and maketh this eating and drinking the same as to beleue in him. Hence he inferreth a proportion betwixt eating and beleueing, that as he that eateth receiueth and taketh to himselfe the meat that he eateth, & digesteth the same to the nourishment of euery part, euen so he that beleueeth doth by his faith

^b Ioh. 1. 13.

ⁱ Iam. 1. 18.

^h Cyril. in Ioan.
lib. 1. cap. 13. Ascendimus ad supernaturalem dignitatem per Christum.

1 Cap. 14.
m August. de corrept. & erat.
cap. 11. Est in nobis per hanc gratiam non solum posse quod volumus, verum etiam velle quod possumus.

ⁿ 1. Pet. 5. 12.

^o 1. Ioh. 3. 1.

^{*} Et filij Dei nominemur & simus. Vulgat.

^p August. cont. Pelag. & Celest.

lib. 1. ca. 3. Possibilitatem (qua potest homo esse iustus) datam conficitur a creature nature: voluntatem & electionem nostram esse asserit.

as the hand, and mouth, and stomach of the soule, receiue & take vnto him Iesus Christ with all his benefits, to become particularlie his strength, and comfort, and nourishment vnto euerlasting life. Now all this speech of eating, and beleeuing, and applying vnto vs the benefits of Christ, M. Bishop saith hee omitteth as an vnfauouried discourse; but the reason is because pearles are vnfauorie to swine, and grosse Capernaïtes know no eating of Christ but by the mouth, nor receiuing of him but into the bellie. But most ridiculous is that which hee addeth, Hee might be ashamed to make (this discourse) vnto vs that admit no part of it to bee true. For so might I briefly reiect his whole booke with the same words, that he might be ashamed to write the same to vs that admit no part of it to be true. Hee should vnderstand, that M. Perkins had in hand to write that that is the truth, and not that that they would admit to be true, who are sworne to Antichrist to maintaine his vntruthes. And seeing hee hath so pregnantly shewed thereby the nature of true and liuely faith, not by any inuention of his owne, but out of the very words of Christ, M. Bishop might himselfe bee iustly ashamed to answer it so childishly and simply as he hath done. I confesse, saith he, that faith hath his part therein. But Saint Austine attributeth to faith not onely a part therein, but to be the thing it selfe, euen the eating and drinking of the bodie and blood of Christ. [¶] To beleeue in Christ, saith hee, is soeate the bread of life: he that beleeueth, eateth. Why doth hee refuse to speake as Saint Austine speaketh, but that like a carnall Anthropophagus hee referreth it to the mouth and to the bellie to eat the flesh of Christ, and so drinke his blood, not listening to that that M. Perkins had alledged vnto him out of the same Austine, Why preparest thou thy teeth and thy bellie? beleeue and thou hast eaten. But faith, he saith, hath his part therein, if it be ioined with charitie and frequentation of the Sacraments. Which if of his is very idle to vs, who hold no true faith but that which worketh by charitie, and seeketh after the Sacraiments, as being the seales of the righteousnesse of faith, the very proper vse whereof is to giue particular assurance to the faithfull of the mercy God towards them in Iesus Christ. For as in humane contracts and gifts somewhat commonly is deliuered by earnest or seale for confir-

¶ Aug. in Joan. tract. 26. Credere in Christū hoc est manducare panem vitium.

¶ Ibid. tract. 25.

¶ Gal. 5. 6.

¶ Rom. 4. 11.

confir-

confirming and sure-making of the maine, so hath God thought good in his couenants & promises of grace, to appoint his Sacraments particularly to be vsed and applied to euery man, that euerie beleeuer knowing Christ by the same Sacraments to bee figured and offered vnto vs, may take knowledge by the deliuerie thereof, that Christ is his to eternal life by faith in his name; it being in effect said vnto him thereby; Thou beleueest the promises of God in Christ concerning grace and forgiuenesse of sins vnto everlasting life: take this for seale and assurance, that by thy faith in Christ the whole benefit thereof appertaineth vnto thee. Therefore Christ saith very effectually, Take, eat, this is my body: Drinke ye, this is my blood, as by the Sacrament deliuering himselfe vnto vs, and in himselfe the whole fruit and benefit of that that he hath done for vs. Why doth he deliuer these seales of the righteousnes of faith particularly vnto me, but that he would haue me know, that the promises of righteousnes are therby through my faith sealed particularly vnto me? Thus therefore faith ioined with frequentation of the Sacraments, doth so much the more effectually minister vnto vs this comfort of particular assurance towards God. Al this is vnsauoury to M. Bishop; but let vs leave him to his acornes and draffe, and let him leave this feeding to them who therein haue learned to taste how gracious the Lord is. Now to shew that the vse of faith is to receiue, M. Perkins allegeth the word of Saint Paul, that through faith we receiue the promise of the spirit, importing thereby that faith is as it were the hand, into which, being holden forth vnto God, he giueth the spirit which he hath promised: that faith apprehendeth and embraceth the promise of God concerning this gift of his spirit, and that thereby we become partakers thereof. To this also M. Bishop answereth nothing, onely he will seeme to allege the words, and wholly peruerteth them. For whereas the Apostle maketh the spirit the thing promised, hee citeth the place, as if the spirit were named as the promiser. And whereas the Apostle speaketh as of a thing^y already performed to them to whom he wrote, hee citeth it as of a thing surely to be performed, & that with a condition, if we obserue those things which Christ hath commanded, whereas the spirit is promised, not if we obserue, but to cause vs to keepe his statutes and obserue his iudgements and do them. Yet hereupon he demandeth, What is this to

^a 1 Pet. 2.3.

^z Gal. 3.14.

^y Ibid. vers. 2.

^z Ezech. 36.27.

the Certainty of Salvation? I answer, that it is so strong to prooue the Certainty of Salvation, as that against it he could finde nothing more safe for himselfe, then to say nothing to it. For if to beleue in Christ, be to receiue Christ, and so to receiue him, as that thereby we eate the flesh of Christ; and drinke his blood, the beleuer hath this for a certainty deliuered vnto him by Christ himselfe, that he hath eternall life, and that Christ will raise him vp at the last day. For whosoever eateth my flesh, taith Christ, and drinketh my blood, hath eternall life, and I will raise him vp at the last day. The beleuer therefore by his faith conceiueth a particular certainty and assurance of his owne Salvation, and is thereby ^a to know that hee hath eternall life. Now to shew the effect of faith, M. Perkins bringeth sundry places of Austin, Ambrose, Chrysostome, Tertullian, Bernard, that by faith we touch Christ, we lay hold of him, we finde him, we see him, we eate him, we digest him. Whereto M. Bishop answereth full wisely, we finde Christ, we hold Christ, we see Christ by faith, beleeuing him to be the sonne of God, and redeemer of the world, and Iudge of quicke and dead, thereby making this finding, and seeing, and holding, and digesting of Christ by faith, to bee no other thing but what is incident to the diuell, because all these things the diuell beleueth, and knoweth as well as he. But to see the giddinesse of his head. reeling and staggering he knoweth not whither, he saith, we finde Christ, we hold him, and see him, we eate him, wee digest him by beleeuing thus and thus, when hee hath plainly giuen vs before to vnderstand, that for all his beleeuing, hee cannot tell whether he haue any thing to doe with Christ, whether hee haue receiued the grace of Christ, whether hee haue any true repentance, hope, charitie, and such like, without which, Christ is neither holden, nor had at all. But such darknesse is fit for them who leaue the waies of God, and make choice to tread the Labyrinthes and maze-rounds of their owne brain-sicke imaginations. To his question where it is once said in any of these sentences, that we are assured of our Salvation: I answer him, that it followeth of that for prooffe whereof these sentences were alleaged. For if the office of true faith be not onely generally to beleue, but also particularly to apply that which it beleueth, as hath been shewed, and all those speeches alledged doe import, then it followeth that according to the measure of it, it yeeldeth a particular assurance of Salvation

^a Ioh. 6. 54.

^b I: Iohn 5. 13.

uation to euery one that doth beleue. We beleue, saith he, these points and many more, but yee we shall bee neuer the neerer our Saluation, vlesse we obserue Gods commandements. But if we beleue as the Scripture teacheth vs to beleue, wee are thereby the neerer our Saluation, though we doe not obserue Gods commandements, in that sort, and to that end as he intendeth. For therefore doe we beleue in Christ, therefore doe we seeke him, take hold of him, eate him, drinke him, digest him, that in him wee may finde the comfort of Saluation, which otherwise we cannot find for want of the keeping of Gods commandements. Therefore saith the Apostle, ^c Euen we haue beleued in Christ, that we might be iustified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law, (not by our keeping of Gods commandements) because that by the works of the law, no flesh shall be iustified. And in this respect we are not uncertaine of performing Gods commandements, as M. Bishop speaketh, but very certaine, that we neuer doe or can performe them, hauing continually cause to demand pardon of our wants, and therefore neuer finding any assured trust of Saluation, so long as wee ground it here-upon. But although wee deny any such keeping of Gods commandements, as may serue for the purchase of our iustification and Saluation, yet wee acknowledge a keeping thereof as a fruit of our iustification, and a part of the worke of our saluation, because ^d we are Gods workemanship created in Christ Iesus vnto good works, which he hath prepared for vs to walke in. And this keeping of Gods commandements our Sauour hath recommended vnto vs, as M. Bishop alledgeth: and of it S. Iohn saith, ^e He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandements, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But this keeping of Gods commandements, cannot bee seuered from the finding, and receiuing, and holding, and eating, and digesting of Christ, becaue no man receiueh or eateth Christ by faith, but who liueh by him, and in whom he liueh, that he may say, ^f Not I now, but Christ liueh in me, and that I now liue in the flesh, I liue by the faith of the Sonne of God, who hath loued me and giuen himselfe for me. Very idly therefore in this behalfe doth M. Bishop tell vs, that by the one we are neuer awhit the neerer without the other, when the one can no where be without the cōpany of the other. Now of this keeping of Gods commandements, and perseuerance therein, true faith, as before hath beene shewed, resteth assured, because because God hath so promised, and so farre are wee from being doubtfull of Saluation by any doubt thereof, as that we rather gather hence greater strength of assurance, by that wee perceiue the beginning of that good worke of God in vs, whereby he fitteth & prepareth his vnto euerlasting life.

17. W. BISHOP.

The second reason is, Whatsoeuer the holy Ghost testifieth vnto vs, that certainly by faith we must belieue: but the holy Ghost doth particularly testifie vnto vs our Saluation: ergo. The first proposition is true. The second is proued thus: S. Paul saith, the spirit of God beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. The Papists to elude this reason alledge, that it doth indeed witness our adoption, by some comfortable feeling of Gods fauour toward vs, which may often be mistaken, whereof the Apostle warneth vs when he saith, beleeue not euery spirit, but trie the spirits, whether they be of God or no. But (saith M. Perkins) by their leaue, the testimony of the spirit, is more then a bare feeling of Gods grace. For it is called the pledge and earnest of Gods spirit in our hearts. And therefore it takes away all doubting, as in a bargaine, the earnest giuen puts all out of question. I answer first out of the place it selfe, that there followeth a condition on our parts to be performed, which M. Perkins thought wisdom to conceale. For S. Paul saith that the spirit witnesseth with our spirit, that we are the sonnes of God, and coheires of Christ, with this condition, If yet we suffer with him, that we may be glorified with him. So that the testimonie is not absolute, but conditionall, and then if we faile in performance of the condition, God stands free of his promise, and will take his earnest back againe. And so to haue receiued the earnest of it, will nothing auail vs, much lesse, assure vs of Saluation.

This is the direct answer to that place although the other bee verie good, that the testimony of the spirit, is but an inward comfort and joy, which breedeth great hope of Saluation, but bringeth not assurance thereof. This M. Perkins would refute, by the authoritie of S. Bernard; in the place before cited, see the place, and my answer there.

Rom. 8.

1. 1oh. 4.

1. Cor. 1.

Epist. 107.

R. A B O T.

To shew that the holy Ghost doth particularly testifie our adoption and Salvation, and therefore that we are by faith to beleeue the same, M. Perkins alledgeth the words of the Apostle, We have received the spirit of adoption whereby wee crye, Abba, Father. The same spirit beareth witnes with our spirit that we are the sonnes of God. Which words so expresse and plaine, might be sufficient to stoppe the mouthes of these bragging sophisters, but that they measure the portion of Gods children by their owne carnall sense and conceit, and being destitute of true faith, and of the spirit of God, are no more fit to iudge hereof, then blind men are to iudge of colours. It is apparent that the faithfull have a testimony of the holy Ghost, bearing witnes with their spirit that they are the sonnes of God. Let him wrest and wrie this testimony, while he will, it will not serue the turne, vnlesse hee make it such, as whereby the spirit beareth witnesse with our spirit that wee are the sonnes of God. Hee saith that it is a good answer of theirs which M. Perkins mentioneth, that the testimonie of the spirit is but an inward comfort and ioy which breedeth great hope of Salvation, but bringeth not assurance thereof. But this is no good answer, because it is not answerable to the words of the Apostle, who speaketh of such a witnes of the spirit, as whereby it is witnessed vnto vs, that wee are the sonnes of God. Let him remember what S. Austin sayeth: b where the matter is manifest we are not to adde our meaning to the sense of holy Scripture: For this comes not of humane ignorance but of froward and wilfull presumption. Here is a plain assertion of a witnes giuen to our faith, that we are the sonnes of God. Now his comfort and ioy is but a matter of perhaps, a matter of very vncertaine and doubtfull hope, wherein he confesseth it may bee he mistaketh, and indeed hath no cause but to thinke that hee doth mistake; which notwithstanding it be had, hee thinketh it a presumption for a man to perswade himselfe, that he hath therby any certaine witnes that hee is the child of God. But c the spirit that beareth witnes, as Saint Iohn saith, is truth, being d the spirit of truth, and therefore being sent for e a Comforter, surely in comforting hee telleth or testifieth nothing but the truth. If then the Spirit

^a Rom. 8, 15, 16.

^b August. cont. In i. l. 5. cap. 2. Ubi manifesta res est scripture diuine sensui nō sū sensum addere non debemus: non enim hoc sit humana ignorantia sed pr:sumptione peruersa.

^c 1. Joh. 5. 6.^d Joh. 14. 17.^e Verbe 16.

spirit of God beare witness to vs that wee are the sonnes of God, we know that it is true, and we are sure that indeede wee are the sonnes of God. Now this witness of the spirit, albeit by some it be taken to consist in the fruites of sanctification, as by Ambrose ^f in leading a life fitting to the name of the sonnes of God, whereby through the spirit the fathers marke is seene in vs: and by Origen, in ^g doing all things (towards God) not for feare, but for love of him as a father, and by Bernard, ^h in that God raising vs from dead workes doth giue vs the workes of life; in that he calleth vs by feare, and frameth vs to righteousnesse by love, yet most properly is declared by the Apostle himselfe to stand in the true spirituall inuocation and calling vpon the name of God, whereby vpon all occasions as children to a father, we make our recourse vnto him. (i) Because ye are sonnes, God hath sent forth the spirit of his sonne into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. When therefore God doth send forth his spirit into our hearts, crying, and making vs to crye, Abba, Father, the same is a witness to our spirit that wee are the sonnes of God, because for no other reason doth God send forth this spirit into our hearts, but because wee are sonnes. When God giveth vnto vs this light and feeling that he is our Father, there followeth necessarily a certificate that we are his children, because these as relatives mutually depend one vpon another. And this is a certificate and testimonie that cannot be counterfeited, and wherein there is no errour. For neither the spirit of man himselfe nor any other spirit can giue him that spirituall eye of the inner man whereby to looke vpon God as a Father; that sincere, and single and pure affection, and inuocation wherewith the faithful soule tendereth it selfe vnto God, but onely the spirit of God himselfe. It is no way incident vnto vs to haue in heart and conscience that familiar and louely accessie vnto the throne of grace, ^k but vpon conscience of the spirit dwelling in vs, as Saint Hierome speaketh. Wee know there is otherwise a formall course of praying, and wee doubt not but M. Bishop daily mumbleth a ta ke and ordinarie thereof, as Iewes and Heretikes are wont to do, but that is rather saying of prayers then praying indeed: true and faithful prayer, and the crying of the heart vnto God, Abba, Father is a further matter, and a thing peculiar onely to the sonnes

f Ambros. in Rom. cap. 8. Dignam v. tambuic cori exuberant, & hoc est testimonium filiorum. si in eu per spiritum videtur signa paternum.

g Origen. ibid. confirmat spiritum nostrum quod inquit filij Dei cum iam nihil inest timori, id est, nihil propter amorem patris peccatum gerimus sed propter cuncta persequimur.

h Bernard. epist. 107. Sic reuera sic cuius filij spiritus testimonium perhibet spiritui nostro quod filij Dei sumus, & non cum suscitans ex operibus mortali largitur opera vna, &c. vocatus per timorem, &c. supra Set. 15.

i Gal. 4. 1.

k Hieron. in Gal. cap. 4. Nunquam audetimus dicere Patrem, &c. nisi de conscientia spiritus habitantem in nobis.

of God, and this¹ spirit of prayer a true witness vnto them, that they are the sonnes of God. But M. Bishop to take away the force of this prooffe, answereth further out of the place it selfe, that there followeth a condition on our part to be performed, If yet we suffer with him, that we may be glorified with him. Which words the Apostle indeed vseth in the next verse, but vpon other occasion, and to other end, then as to impeach or question that testimony of the spirit, which by an entire and absolute assertion hee hath here expressed. For hauing affirmed that the spirit testifieth with our spirit that we are the sonnes of God, he inferreth, If we be sonnes, then are we also heires, euen heires of God, and ioynt-heires or fellow heires with Christ. Now how this fellowship with Christ is performed, hee declareth by adding those words; if yet we suffer with him, that we also may be glorified with him. Thus are wee ioynt-heires with Christ, saith he, if we attaine to our inheritance the same way that he did, being first partakers with him in sufferings, as wee shal afterwards be in glorie. M. Bishop therefore doth amisse to tie those words as a condition to the former words, which naturally serue for explication of the latter. But admitting the speech to be conditionall, it doth nothing preiudicate the assurance of the faithfull, because thereby God instructeth them which way hee himselfe will bring them to himselfe, not what hee will leaue them at vncertaintie to doe for their comming vnto him. He expresseth a condition, the performance whereof faith expecteth from himselfe, because^m of him it is giuen vnto vs for Christs sake, not onely to beleeue in him, but also to suffer for his sakeⁿ being strengthened with all might through his glorious power, to all patience and long suffering with ioyfulnessse. To this end, as^o the sufferings of Christ abound in them, so he causeth their consolations to a bound through Christ, and their^p hope is stedfast in his behalfe, because they know that as they are partakers of the sufferings, so they shall be also of the consolation, that the greouance of the one may be the more easily borne by meanes of the ioy and sweernesse of the other. In a word, faith resteth vpon that that is written,^q He hath sayd, I will not faile thee, nor forsake thee: therefore we may boldly say The Lord is on my side, I will not feare what man can do vnto me. He hath predestinated vs to be made like vnto the image of his sonne, and therefore^r hauing recci-

¹ Zechar. 12. 10.
Tiemel.

^m Phil. 1. 29.
ⁿ Col. 1. 11.

^o 2. Cor. 1. 5.

^p Ver. 7.

^q Heb. 13. 5.
^r Rom. 8. 29.
^s Bernard. epist.
107. Habes spiritum huius arcani indicem.

received the spirit to reueale vnto vs, as Saint Bernard saith, this secret of his predestination, we stand assured that accordingly he will accomplish in vs the image of his Sonne, that together with him we may beare the crosse, and together with him also we may weare the crowne, and therefore will so order all things, as that there shall be nothing to come that shall separate vs from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. Now the spirit as he is the reuealer of the secret, so is he the earnest of the effect of Gods predestination, by the gift whereof God giueth vnto vs the certaine assurance of all the rest that remaineth to be giuen. It is the pledge of the inheritance promised, and as a hand-writing (or bond for assurance) of everlasting Salvation, not vpon vncertaintie, if we do thus or thus, but framing vs to bee and to doe whatsoeuer belongeth to the attainment thereof, making vs the temple and house of God; being the worker of holinesse in vs, that he may bring our bodies to eternitie, and to the immortalitie of the resurrection, whilest in himselfe he accustometh them to be tempered with heauenly vertue, and to be accompanied with the diuine eternitie of the holy ghost. Therefore God doth neuer take this earnest backe againe, because it is so the earnest of our inheritance vntill the redemption of possession as that it is an earnest also that in the meane time God stablisheth vs in Christ, and that hee hath created vs euen for this thing, namely to clothe vs with immortality and eternall life. To be short, God in giuing earnest for assurance of the end doth thereby vndertake against all lets and impediments that should hinder the atchieuing of that that is earnested thereby, and therefore as Chrysostome saith, the things present which thou hast attained already, do assure vnto thee those things that are yet to come. As for the words alledged out of Saint John, that wee beleuee not every spirit, but trie the spirit whether they be of God or not, as if wee were willed to bee distrustfull of the reuelation and testimonie of the spirit that wee are the sonnes of God, least by any false spirit wee be abused and deluded, they are verie absurdly wrested and forced to that purpose, beeing very apparently a caueat against false prophets speaking out of their owne spirite, and yet pretending the spirit of Christ, as is verie plaine by the reason added in the next

Rom. 9. 38.

¶ Titul. de Tri-
nit. Hic est pignus promissæ heredi-
tatis & quasi chi-
rographum quod-
dam eterne salutis
cui nos Deus facit
templum & no. eius efficiat domus
inhabita' & corpo-
ribus nostris datus & factus esse effe-
ctus, quod agens
in nobis ad aeterni-
tatem & ad resur-
rectionem immor-talitatis corpora
nostra producat
dum illa in se afficiat cum ce-
lesti virtute mis-
cers. & eius spiri-
tus sancti diuina
attributione firmari.
x. h. 1. 13.
y. 2. Cor. 1. 21. 22.
z. Can. 5. 5.
a. Chrysostom. Rom.
hom. 9. Præsentia & que iam affe-
ctus et de futu-
ris tuis fidei. cas.
b. 1. John 4. 1.

wordes, For many false Prophets are gone abroad into the world. And yet if we admit them as meant of this testimonie of the spirit, they are so farre from seruing their turne, as that they make altogether againtt them. For if in that behalfe wee bee willed to trie the spirits whether they bee of God or not, then it followeth that there is a way whereby to trie the same. And if there bee a meanes whereby to trie whether the spirit that testifieth vnto vs that wee are the sonnes of God, bee of God or not, then there is a meanes for vs to bee assured that wee are the sonnes of God. For if by triall wee finde that the spirit that so testifieth is of God, then because the same spirit is true, we cannot make question but that we are indeed the sonnes of God. So therefore we resolve of that testimony whereof the Apostle speaketh, whereby the spirit beareth witnesse with our spirit that we are the sonnes of God. Bee it that some men by false opinions and imaginations of carnall security doe heerein deceiue themselves, yet as it is no reason for a King to doubt whether he be a King, for that franticke and melancholik persons are falsly so perswaded of themselves; and as a goldsmith doth not therefore doubt whether gold bee gold; for that some vnskilfull man taketh copper in steed of gold; so no reason is it that they who haue receiued the vndoubted testimonie of the spirit, shining vnto them out of the true light of the word of God, should therefore cal in question the truth therof, because many me are mocked with false presumptions, which they themselves haue builded out of their owne braines. The testimonie of the spirit is certainly knowne and felt where soeuer it is found, neither can any spirit worke in any mans heart any liuely counterfeit thereof, as before was sayd. Therefore it standeth firme and sure againtt all M. Bishops exceptions, that there is a testimonie of the spirit, whereby according to the measure of our faith we stand assured that wee are the sonnes of God.

18. W. BISHOP.

The third reason is, That which we must pray for by Gods commandment, that we must beleue: but euery man must pray for Salvation; therefore we must beleue that we shall haue Salvation. The proposition hee confirmeth thus: In euery petition must bee two things: one a desire of the thing we aske; another a particular faith to obtaine it, which is proued by Christs words: Whatsoeuer you shall request when you pray, beleue that you shall haue it, and it shall be done. Mar. 11.

This Argument is so proper for their purpose, that we returne it vpon their owne heads: We must pray for Salvation, therefore we are not yet assured of it: For who in his wits, praieeth God to giue him that, whereof he is assured already? And a godly act of faith it is, in that praier to beleue that God will giue that, which he is assured of before hand: such foolish petitions cannot please God, and therefore after their doctrine it is to be denied, that any faithfull man may pray for his Salvation, but rather thanke the Lord for it. But to answer directly, he who praieeth, must beleue he shall obtaine that which he praieeth for, if he obserue all the due circumstances of praier, which be many, but to this purpose, two are required necessarily: the one that he who praieeth be the true seruant of God, which first excludeth all those that erre in faith, touched in these words, What you of the faithfull shall desire when you pray, shall be giuen you: The other is, when we request matters of such moment, that we perseuer in praier, and continue our sute day by day, of these sutes of eternall Salvation, wee must take these words of our Saviour to be spoken: We must alwaies pray, and neuer be weary: and then no doubt, but wee shall in the end receiue it. But because we are in doubt, whether we shall obserue those necessarie circumstances of praier or no, therefore wee cannot be so well assured to obtaine our sute, although wee be on Gods part most assured, that hee is most bountifull, and readier to giue, then wee are to aske Luce 18.

But saith Master Perkins, S. Iohn noteth out this particular faith, calling it, Our assurance, that God will giue vnto vs, whatsoeuer we aske according to his will. But where finde we that it is Gods will, to assure euery man at the first entrance into his seruice, of eternall 1. Iohn 5.

Saluation? Is it not sufficient to make him an assured promise of it, upon his faithfull service and good behauiour towards him?

R. ABBOT.

The argument is very pregnant and cleere. Christ hath taught vs to beleeue that we shall haue that that we pray for. We are to pray for forgiveness of sinnes, and eternall life. Wee are therefore to beleeue that we shall haue forgiveness of sinnes, and euerlasting life. Nay saith M Bishop, we must pray for our Saluation, therefore we are not yet assured of it. He forbore to answer strictly by the very termes of the argument, because therein his notable impudencie and wilfull contradiction to the words of Christ had very notably appeared. For then he must haue answered thus, Wee must pray for our Saluation; therefore we must not beleeue that wee shall haue Saluation, directly against the words of Christ, instructing vs to beleeue that wee shall haue that that we pray for. But to take that which hee doth say, I answer him againe, that our praying for Saluation, is an argument that wee are not yet assured of it by possession; but it hindereth not but that wee are assured thereof in hope. Wee are not assured of it as a thing in present, but yet wee are assured of it as a thing to come. As for his conceipt, that wee are not to pray for any thing that wee haue assurance to obtaine, the folly and blinde ignorance therein bewraied, is sufficiently discovered before in the fifth Section. Wee beleeue the promise of God as touching our Saluation, not doubting but that hee will make vs partakers thereof, according to his promise, to those that doe beleeue in him, but as yet wee enioy not this Saluation. Hee leadeth vs on in the hope and desire of it, and by our praier wee vtter our desire, still resolving that hee will effect it, but yet still begging and crauing till hee doe effect it. So then wee thanke God that hee hath called vs to this hope, and we reioyce therein; but still wee begge the accomplishment of that that hee hath taught vs to hope for. But to leaue this as handled before, hee will further giue vs, as hee saith, a direct answer, and that is, that hee that praieeth must beleeue hee shall obtaine that which hee praieeth for, if hee obserue all the due circumstances of praier. But wee answer him, that it is not for the perfection

Mar. 11. 7.

fection of our prayers, that God accepteth vs but for the true affection of our hearts. We many times faile in the due circumstances of prayer, and much faintnesse and weaknesse wee shew therein, when yet we belecue that God mercifully respecteth vs therein by the intercession of Iesus Christ. Now of these circumstances he setteth downe two as necessarily required, the one that he that praicth be the true seruant of God: the other that hee perseuere in prayer. And what of these? Marry saith he, because we are in doubt whether we shall obserue those necessary circumstances of prayer or no, therefore we cannot be so well assured to obtaine our suit. Behold he is in doubt whether he be the true seruant of God, or nor, and we may therein see the blindnesse wherein Popery holderth men, not discerning the misery of their owne estate. He knoweth no faith but what is incident to diuels and damned men: he cannot tell whether he haue any true hope towards God, any loue, any true repentance, whether he be the true seruant of God, whether God heare or regard his prayer, but walketh altogether in the darke, and knoweth not whither he goeth. But true faith yeeldeth a man whereof to say, ^b Behold, O Lord, for I am thy seruant: ^c I am thy seruant, O giue me vnderstanding, that I may keepe thy commandements. ^d Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, &c. As for perseuerance in prayer, faith expecteth it also of him that ^e prepareth the heart, and ^f poureth vpon vs the spirit of grace and of prayer, ^g which maketh request for vs (that is, ^h maketh vs to make request for our selues, and inspireth into vs the affection of prayer) with sighes and groanes that cannot be expressed. If the faithfull man in these things depended vpon himselfe, hee should haue iust cause to feare and doubt his owne perseuerance; but hee saith with the Apostle, I know whom I haue beleued, and I am sure that he is able to keepe that which I haue committed vnto him against that day, euen my selfe, my faith, my hope, my prayer, my soule, my life, knowing my selfe to be a very vn safe keeper of my selfe. Yea hee praicth also for perseuerance: and because hee is willed to beleue that he shall haue that that he praicth for, therefore hee beleueth that he shall perseuere, and the word of Christ assureth him that he shall so doe, because he saith; ^k Belueue that yee shall haue it, and it shall be done vnto you To which purpose Saint Bernard well saith; ^l In the benedictions of God, looke how farre thou treadest the foote of thy faith, so

^b P sal. 116. 16.
^c 119. vci. 125.

^d 143. vci. 12.
^e P sal. 10. 17.

^f Zach 12. 10.
^g Rom. 8. 26.
^h August. epist. 105. Quia interpellare non facit, & nobis interpellant & gemendi inspirat effectum.
ⁱ 1. Tim. 1. 12.

^k Mar 11. 24:
^l Bernard in Cant ser. 32. In bonis Domini quod tu fides in pben per exercit, catonm p p hieba.

^m Cyprian. lib. 2. ep. 6. Dat credentibus tantum quantum se credit capere qui sumit.

farre thou shalt possesse. For as Cyprian saith, ^m God giueth to them that beleene, so much as he that receiveth beleueth himselfe to receiue.

Hee doth therefore vndoubtedly perseuere in faith and prayer, who praying for persuerance, beleueth that he shall receiue the same. And this is further confirmed by the words of Saint Iohn :

^a 1. Ioh. 5. 14. 15.

^u This is the assurance that we haue in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will he heareth vs, and if we know that he heareth vs, what soeuer we aske, we know that we haue the petitions that we haue desired of him. To which M. Bishop answereth : But where doe we find that it is Gods will, to assure euery man at the first entrance into his seruice of eternall Salvation ? Where the limitation that he vseth at the first entrance into his seruice before also deliuered, is but an idle trick of his vagaring wit. For the question is not of assurance at the first entrance into Gods seruice, but whether first or last there be any assurance at all. For he denieth whether in the entrance or in the continuance that God by faith doth giue any man assurance of his own Salvation. Or if that be not his meaning, but that though not at the first entrance, yet afterwards God doth by faith giue that assurance, let him tell vs, and we shall be glad that he hath so faire forth forsaken the doctrine of his Romth mistresse. But because that is his meaning, he must acknowledge his absurd folly, in making a shew of exception in words, where hee intended none. As for vs, wee say indeed, that God euen at the very first entrance into his seruice, offereth vs this assurance. For euen at the very first entrance he saith, as he did to theaylor, ^o Beleeue in the Lord Iesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved : and from the beginning our faith as it is greater or lesse, so either strongly or weakely apprehendeth and imbraceth this assurance. And in this assurance wee labour and endeouour to grow, and to goe on ^p from faith to faith, from ^q strength to strength, till wee learne to stand as it were vpon the battlements of heauen, and to set the world at defiance, saying, ^r Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect ? Who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ, &c. But that answer of his is otherwise also a ridiculous and vaine shift. Where doe we finde that it is Gods will to assure euery man of eternall Salvation ? Marry speaking of them that beleue, euen in the very place alledged, M. Bishop, if you dissemble it not. By other places wee are taught to pray for forgiveness of sinnes, for Salvation, for eternall life, and

^o Acts 16. 31.

^p Rom. 1. 17.

^q Psal. 84. 7.

^r Rom. 8. 33.

you deny not but that wee are thus to pray according to the will of God. By this place we haue assurance, and are taught to know that we haue the petitions that we desire of him; and therefore that according to our prayer, we haue forgiveness of sinnes, we haue Salvation and euerlasting life. Speake strictly to the point Master Bishop, let vs haue no shifting of words. We haue assurance to know, that we haue what we aske of him according to his will. It is according to his will that we aske of him forgiveness of sinnes and eternall life. We haue therefore assurance, and are to know, that wee haue forgiveness of sinnes and life eternall. Master Bishop is dumbe, and to this hath nothing more to say; but goeth forward to aske the question, Is it not sufficient to make him an assured promise of it vpon his faithfull seruice and good behauiour towards him? I answered him, No, it is not sufficient: For God made that promise by the former couenant, He that doth these things, shall liue in them, and it auailed not; for they continued not in my couenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. Therefore God made another couenant and promise, not like the former, not conditionall vpon faithfull seruice and good behauiour, but absolute and without exception, the performance whereof should depend wholly and only vpon his mercy; so that he would not expect as of vs, but did vndertake to giue vs and to worke in vs, whatsoeuer faithfull seruice and good behauiour should be necessary thereunto. Therefore he saith, I will put my lawes in their minds, and in their hearts will I write them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people; they shall all know me; for I will be mercifull vnto their vnrigh- teousnesse, and I will remember their sinnes and their iniquities no more. So that although comparing the one part of the worke of our Salvation with another, the latter is vsually tied to a condition of the former, and God accordingly proceed in the execution thereof, yet if we entirely consider the whole, it issueth absolutely out of the purpose and promise of God, who intending the end, disposeth and worketh himselfe whatsoeuer belongeth to the accomplishment and attainment of the end. Inasmuch therefore as true faith expecteth all of God, and on Gods part M. Bishop confesseth we are most assured, it must follow that by true faith we stand assured of Salvation, because God is neuer wanting to doe that that appertaineth vnto him.

¹ Gal. 3.12.
² Heb. 8.9.

³ Ver. 10.

19. W. BISHOP.

The fourth reason is, Whatsoever God commandeth, that a man must and can performe. But God commandeth vs to beleue our Salvation: ergo, we must beleue it.

The proposition is true, yet commonly denied by all Protestants, for God commands vs to keepe his commandements; and they hold that to be impossible: but to the assumption: That God commands vs to beleue our Salvation is proued (saith M. Perkins) by these words: Repent and beleue the Gospell: Spectatum admissi, ritum teneatis amici: Where is it written in that Gospell, beleue your owne particular Salvation? shew vs once but one cleere text for it, and wee will beleue it. I doe beleue in Christ, and hope to be saued, through his mercy and merits, but know well, that vnlesse I keepe his words, I am by him likened to a foole; that built his house vpon the sands. Hee commands me to watch and pray, lest I fall into temptation: and elsewhere warneth me to prepare oyle to keep my lampe burning against his comming, or else I am most certaine to be shu out with the foolish Virgins. An hundred such admonitions finde we in holy Scriptures, to shake vs out of this security of our Salvation, and to make vs vigilant to preuent all temptations of the enemy, and diligent to traie our selues in godly exercises of all vertue.

Mat. 71

Mat. 26.

Mat. 25.

R. ABBOT.

The proposition, saith he, is true, and yet as he propoundeth and vnderstandeth it, it is not true, nor was euer intended by M. Perkins to be true, and iustly is it denied by all Protestants, that wee can performe whatsoever God commandeth, as in the next question God willing shall appeare in the handling of that point. But the proposition as M. Perkins expresth it is, Whatsoever wee are commanded in the Gospell, that we must and can performe. The reason whereof hee taketh from a distinction of the commandements of the law and the Gospell, because the Gospell is the ministry of spirit & life, giuing vs to do whatsoever it doth command, which the law doth not. Now M. Bishop confoundeth Law and Gospell, and maketh the proposition generall and without exception, tion, being still desirous to shew himselfe like himselfe. But that God in the Gospel commandeth vs to beleue the remission of our finnes, and life everlasting, Master Perkins sheweth by the words of Christ; Repent and beleue the Gospell, being the brieft summe of the ministry and preaching of Christ, and the same in effect, as if hee had said, Repent you of your finnes, and beleue the tidings that God hath sent vnto ycu, of the forgiveness thereof by Iesus Christ, through faith in his name. For the declaring of which point, hee sheweth, that to beleue the Gospell, is not onely generally to beleue, that Christ is a Sauiour, and that the promises made in him are true, for then the diuels may bee said to beleue the Gospell, and we suppose that Master Bishop hath more wit and grace, then to say that Christ in saying, Beleue the Gospell, did commend nothing to vs, but what the diuels may doe, and therefore that the repentant is hereby willed particularly to beleue for himselfe, to haue the forgiveness of his finnes by the blood of Iesus Christ. Which declaration being very effectuell to the point, this Hickscorner because hee knew not what to answer to it, passeth ouer with Spectatum admissi? &c. and Where is it written in that Gospell, beleue your owne particular Salvation? shew vs once, saith he, but one cleere text for it, and we will beleue it: euen as the Iewes said of Christ, Let him come downe from the crosse, and wee will beleue in him.^a Though hee had come downe from the crosse, yet would they not haue beleued in him, because they had seene him doe greater works then that, and yet they did not beleue; and euen so Master Bishop, whatsoeuer is shewed him, remaineth still b like the deafe adder, that stoppeth his eares, refusing to heare the voice of the charmer, charme he neuer so wisely. But tell vs M. Bishop in what sense it is, that the repentant man is willed to beleue the Gospell? Do not make the beleuing of the Gospell, a thing incident to the diuell, because we shall then hold you a partaker with the diuell. This you would haue told vs, and not onely haue recited the place, but spoken to that that was inferred vpon it, had you not resolved to play the part of a lewd sycophant, and sought to carry the matter with bare words. The Gospell is c the glad tidings of great ioy, that vnto vs a Sauiour is borne; d vnto vs a child is borne, vnto vs a sonne is giuen: e that is, vnto vs that do beleue. To beleue the Gospell, is to beleue this, and how doe I beleue, vnto vs, if I bede lib. 3. cap. 4.

^a Mat. 27. 42.^b Psal. 58. 4.^c Iuk. 2. 10. 11.^d Esay 9. 6.^e Ambros. de f.

Propheti dicit,

Nobis, hoc est,

credentibus, non incredulis.

leue

leeue not vnto me? Therefore by beleeuing the Gospell, I beleue that Christ is borne and giuen a Sauour vnto me, ^fto saue me being one of his people ^gfrom my sinnes, and from the wrath to come. The Gospell is, that ^hthrough the name of Christ euery one that beleueth in him shall haue forgiuenes of sinnes; i euery one that beleueth in him, shall not perish, but haue euerlasting life. If I beleue the Gospell, I beleue this, and therefore because I beleue in Christ, I beleue that I shall haue forgiuenesse of sinnes, that I shall not perish, but haue euerlasting life. If I beleue in Christ, and yet beleue not this, that I haue euerlasting life, I beleue not the Gospell, because the Gospell saith, ^kHe that beleueth in him, hath euerlasting life. ^lHe that beleueth not God, saith S. Iohn, hath made him a liar, because he beleueth not the record that God witnessed of his Sonne, and this is the record, that God hath giuen vnto vs eternall life, and this life is in his Sonne. Vnto vs, saith he, namely vnto vs that beleue in the name of the Sonne of God; as afterwards he expoundeth it. If then I beleue in the name of the Sonne of God, and do not beleue that God hath giuen vnto me eternall life, I make God a liar, in not beleeuing the record that God hath witnessed of his Son. Therefore he addeth, ^mThese things haue I written vnto you, that beleue in the name of the Sonne of God, that ye may know that ye haue eternall life. Where is now this pelting Sophister, that asketh vs where it is written in the Gospell, ⁿto beleue our owne particular Salvation? It is written there, where it is written to them that beleue, ^oto know that they haue eternall life. But saith he, I beleue in Christ, and hope to be saued through his mercy and merits. But take heed you lie not, M. Bishop, take heed you lie not vnto God. You haue told vs before, that ^pto beleue in God, is to loue God with all your heart, and that you are not assured of your loue towards him. How then can you dare to say, that you beleue in God? You haue told vs that ^qhope and charity are seated in the darke corners of the will, and that you haue but a coniecture and probable opinion thereof in your selfe, and why then do you here tell vs an vncertaine tale of you know not what, that you hope to be saued through the mercy and merits of Christ? Again, whereas you say that you hope to be saued through the mercy and merits of Christ, you therein againe dissemble with Christ, because notwithstanding the mercy and merits of Christ, you hang your Salvation vpon that that you are to merit, and doe for

^f Mat. 1. 21.

^g 1. Thesl. 1. 10.

^h Acts 10. 43.

ⁱ Iohn 3. 15.

^k Ibid ver. 36.

^l 1. Iohn 5. 10.

^m Ver. 13.

ⁿ Sect. 3.

^o Sect. 5.

for your selfe, and make your owne Freewill the finisher and perfecter of that that by Christ is only but begun. You will haue the mercy and merits of Christ to serue to make you able to saue your selfe; and if you doe so, you will thanke your selfe, but you will haue nothing further to thanke Christ for. And so whereas you would auoid to be like unto the foole, you shew your selfe a foole outright, building so, as that you know not whether you build or not; you know not whether you haue any foundation, to build vpon, or any matter to build with; you know not if you haue builded any thing, whether the same be likely to stand or fall, and what is this else but to be a foole? As for vs, we know that we must keepe his words, that he commandeth vs to watch and pray, to prepare our selfe to keepe our lamps burning, and such like; but these admonitions serue not to shake our faith, but rather instruct and sharpen it. They doe not propound conditions for vs to performe to make vp the worke of God in vs, but aduertisements and instructions what those lawes are, whereof God hath said, ^p I will put my lawes in their hearts, ^q and cause them to keepe my statutes, faith being hereby moued to begge of God, ^r to giue what he commandeth, and assured that he will to the end performe what he hath promised: and seeing in his visitations and corrections, his fatherly providence and care to effect the same, whilest thereby he awaketh vs out of our security, and causeth vs to make vse of the admonitions of holy Scripture, to fight against the diuell and sinne, and to exercise our selues in all godlinesse and vertue.

^p Jer. 31. 33.
^q Ezech. 36. 27.
^r August. de
 spir. & lit. ca. 13.
 Lege operum actis
 Deus, fac quod
 iubeo: lege fidei
 de: ut Deo, Da
 quod iubet. J. eo
 ex: m iubet lex et admo: nea: quid
 faciat: fides..

20. W. BISHOP.

The first and last reason is this, The Papists teach assurance of hope, Rom. 5. euen hence it followeth, that he may be infallibly assured, for the property of a true and liuely hope, is neuer to make a man ashamed. Answer. Hope indeed of heauen, makes a man most couragiously beare our all stormes of persecution, and not be ashamed of Christs Crosse, but to profess his faith most boldly before the bloody tyrants of the world, our hearts being by charity fortified and made invincible. And this is that which the Apostle teacheth in that place: and saith before,

Vcl. 2

before that the faithfull glory in the hope of the sonnes of God, and doe not vaunt themselves of the Certainty of their Salvation. This Certainty of hope, is great in those that haue long liued virtuously, specially when they haue also endured manifold losses, much disgrace, great wrongs and iniuries for Christs sake for he that cannot faile of his word, hath promised to requite all such with an hundred fold. But what is this to the Certainty of faith, which the Protestants will haue euery man to be endued with at his first entrance into the seruice of God: when as S. Paul insinuateth, that godly men partakers of the holy Ghost, yea after they haue tasted the good word of God & the power of the world to come, that is, haue receiued besides faith, great fauours of Gods spirit, and felt as it were the ioyes of heauen, haue after all this so fallen from God, that there was small hope of their recovery?

Heb. 6.

R. ABBOT.

This last reason taken from the doctrine of the Papists concerning hope, I doe not hold to haue been fitly applied against them. For with them, as there is not that faith, so neither is there that hope which the Scripture teacheth, neither can they bee said to teach assurance of hope, who professedly deliuer, that a man must alwaies stand in feare and doubt of that that hee should hope for, and that he hath no more but onely a probable opinion of any thing in himselfe, whereof to conceiue hope. Therefore the Councell of Trent saith, that ^a as no man may doubt of the mercy of God, and of the merit of Christ, so euery man whilest he considereth his owne infirmitie and undisposednesse, hath to stand in feare of his owne being in grace. So Andradius affirmeth, that their ^b hope is alwaies ioined and coupled with feare and doubt: not onely meaning that it is so, but also that it ought so to be, accordingly as Master Bishop hath before deliuered, though vncruily, ^c that there are about an hundred texts in holy writ, whereby to proue, that the faithfull must stand in feare of their owne Salvation. The Certainty of hope therefore that Master Bishop nameth, by occasion that it was named to him, is nothing elle indeed but meere vncertainty, it being a thing senselesse to reckon a Certainty, where a man is bound to stand in feare. So that their hope is but a conceit of selfe-seeing probability, whereby they

^a Concil. Trident. Sess. 6 cap. 9 Si- cut nemo plus de Dei misericordia, &c. dubitare debet, sic quilibet dum seipsum suamq; propriam infirmitatem & indispositionem respicit, de sua gratia formidare ac timere potest.
^b Andr. Or. thod. explicat. lib. 6. sub finem. Firmitas est spes ut semper cum metu & dubitatione consistat sic & consolata.
^c Sect. 10.

they imagine that haply it may be well with them, but yet doubt lest it be otherwise; in no other sort then vulgarly men talke of hope, where they haue but small ground for that they hope. But the hope which the Scripture speaketh of is another matter, importing a patient and constant expectation of that that wee beleue we shall receiue. Faith beleueth the promises of God concerning forgiveness of sinnes, concerning our blisse and happiness to come. It beleueth that God vndoubtedly will make good whatsoeuer he hath promised, but as yet wee see not the effect and performance thereof. Hope therefore expecteth and waiteth, looking for the Lord to reueale his righteousness, and to make the truth of his word and promise fully to appeare, and in this expectation is content with patience to beare the crosse, and to endure the afflictions and troubles that are incident to the faith and profession of the name of Christ. Thus saith Chrysostome, that ^d what faith getteth in beleeuing, that hope presumeth of in enduring and suffering. This hope therefore is not vncertaine and doubtfull, but by the direction of faith, fully resoluech of the accomplishment of that that it hopeth for. It is not, as Hilarie well noteth, ^e a presuming of things vncertaine, but an expectation of things knowne vncouers. For that cause is it that Saint Paul saith, that ^f hope maketh not ashamed. Which Master Bishop not vnderstanding, expoundeth as if the Apostle had said, that it maketh a man not to be ashamed of the crosse of Christ; but Saint Paul respected a further matter, to signifie the infallible assurance and Certainty of hope, that it neuer putteth a man to shame, it neuer giueth him occasion to bee ashamed, as hauing hoped for that whereof in the end he is deceived. ^g He is ashamed, saith Austine, that faileth of his hope. Who is put to shame but he that saith, I haue not found that that I hoped for? ^h They that hope, saith Theodoret, and are deceived of their hope, doe blush and are ashamed thereof. Therefore saith Saint Austine, ⁱ We are certaine of our hope: for our hope is not vncertaine, that we should doubt thereof. Yea, so are we certaine thereof, as that Saint Paul saith, ^k We reioyce vnder the hope of the glory of God, as being no lesse assured thereof, then if we were already in possession of it, as ^l before I shewed, that Chrysostome expoundeth that place farre otherwise then here Master

^d Chrysost. brom. de file. spe. c. clxxxvii. Quicquid fides credendo acquirit, hoc spes suscipiendo presumit.

^e Hilar. in Psal. 64. Spem oportet non ex inani esse presumptam, ne magis sit incertorum presumptio quam expectatio cognis orum.

^f Rom. 5. 5.

^g August. in Psal. 36. conc. 3. Confunditur quem fallit spes: qui dicit, quod sperabam non inueni.

^h Theodo. in Rom. cap. 5.

ⁱ August. in Psal. 37. Certi sumus de spe: non est enim incerta spes nostra, ut de illa dubitemus.

^k Rom. 5. 2.

^l See 1. 19. 2. Chrysost. in Rom. loc. 9.

^m Heb. 3. 6.

^a Cap. 10. 22.

^o Rom. 4. 18.

^p 1. Pet. 1. 25.

^q Ephes. 3. 20.

^r Cap. 1. 20.

^f Cap. 2. 5.

^c Phil. 1. 6.

^u Bernard. in Cant ser. 68. Non est quod iam
queras quibus
meritis speremus
bona, presertim
cum audis apud prophetam, Non
propter vos, &c.
^v Ezech. 36. 22.

Bishop doth. Which ^m confidence and reioycing of hope, groweth from that which the holy Ghost termeth ⁿ πληροφορία πίστεως, full assurance of faith, whereby setting aside the respect of our owne impeachmentments of our selues, wee belecue with Abraham ^o vnder hope, euen against hope, resting vpon his promise who hath taken vpon him to be ^p the shepheard and Bishop of our soules, and ^q is able to doe exceeding abundantly aboue all that we aske or thinke, according to the power that worketh in vs. Whereby as he hath already wrought in vs thelike great worke as ^r he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, in that he hath ^r raised vs up, being dead in trespasses and sinnes, vnto the life of God, so we rest ^r perswaded, that hauing begun this good worke in vs, he will performe it good untill the day of Iesus Christ. ^u Neither is it for anymanto aske, saith Bernard, vpon what meritis we hope for this good, seeing we heare by the Prophet, ^x Not for your sakes, but for mine owne sake will I doe it, saith the Lord. Now Master Bishop admitting after his fashion, an vncertaine Certainty of hope, demandeth, What is this to the Certainty of faith, which the Protestants will haue euery man to be endued with, at his first entrance into the seruice of God? Where againe we see how pretily Master Bishop can busie himselfe with a feiter: These termes of first entrance into the seruice of God, are but the playing of his braine; hee would faine seeme to say something thereby, when indeed he saith nothing: For not onely at first entrance, but in the whole continuance of the seruice of God, hee leaueth a man as a ship in a storme, and hanging betwixt heauen and hell, howsoeuer not doubting, but that God for his part holdeth him fast to draw him to heauen, yet still affrighted lest himselfe should loose his hold, and fall into hell, nay not knowing whether he haue any hold of God, or God of him, because hee cannot certainly know whether he haue any hope, or charitie, or repentance, or praier, which being seated in the darke corners of the will, cannot otherwise then probably be discerned. But as touching his question, what is Certainty of hope to Certainty of faith? I answer him, that being truly vnderstood, it maketh much to the prouing of it. For hope goeth not beyond faith, because as I haue said, hope is but the patient waiting for that, which faith beleueth we shall haue. What faith doth not assure vs we shall haue, we cannot by hope expect and looke for. There can therefore be no Certaintie of hope, but it must presuppose a Certaintie of faith, assuring vs of obtaining what we must hope for. But saith Maister Bishop, Saint Paul insinuateth, that godly men partakers of the holie Ghost, and hauing tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, yet after all this haue fallen away from God. But I answer him, that he saith more of them then Saint Paul did, for he calleth them not godly men, though haply for the time they seemed to be so. Men may be partakers of the temporarie gifts of the holie Ghost, and may tast of the good word of God, and of the powers of the world to come, as Judas did while he was yet an Apostle, of whom notwithstanding in the middest of these gifts our Sauiour saith, that he was a diuell. The like is to be said of them who shall say at that day, Lord haue not we prophesied in thy name, and in thy name cast out diuels, and done many miracles? who yet in the meane while, as our Sauiour signifieth, haue bene workers of iniquitie. And what lesse can we say of Balaam, who in the spirit saw so much concerning the state and hope of the people of God, as made him enamoured thereon, and to cry out, Let my soule die the death of the righteous, and let my last end, belike vnto his; b he seeth no iniquitie in Iacob, neither doth he see any transgression in Israel; c how godly are thy tents, O Iacob, and thy habitations, O Israel; who notwithstanding bewrayed himselfe to haue a wicked heart, bewitched with couetousnesse, willing for mony to haue cursed the people whom the Lord directed him to blesse. Men may haue great gifts, and much reuelation and knowledge of the way of truth, and be touched farre with the conceipt of that they know, who yet are voide of true faith and regeneration of the heart, and therefore in the end because d they haue no roote, doe certainly fall and slide away. Whose fall, because they neuer truly stood, though they seemed so to doe, is not to impeach or weaken the assurance of them to whom God hath giuen by true faith to stand indeede. As for that which Maister Bishop saith of such, that they haue receiued faith, and great fauours of the spirit &c. it is but his owne commentarie, and wee accordingly regard it. Hee affirmeth of their faith, that which the Apostle affirmeth not, and though they receiued some fauours of the spirit, yet they neuer found the fauour

^y John 6. 70.
^z Mat. h. 7. 22.

^a Numb. 23. 10.
^b Ver. 21.

^c Cap. 14. 5.

^d Mat. 13. 21.

e Ephes. 1. 14.

f Cap. 4. 30.]

g Rom. 11. 29.

to receiue him as ^e an earnest vnto them of the heauenly inheritance, or by him to be ^f sealed vnto the day of redemption, which if they had, they should neuer being once sealed haue bene vnsealed againe, because in this respect ^g the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, and neuer subiect to any change.

CHAP.

CHAPTER 4.
OF IUSTIFICATION.

I. W. BISHOP.

Because M. Perkins sets not downe well the Catholikes opinion, I will helpe him out, both with the preparation and Iustification it selfe, and that taken out of the Councell of Trent. Where the very words concerning preparation are these: Men are prepared and disposed to this iustice, when being stirred vp, & helped by Gods grace, they conceiuing faith by hearing, are freely moued towards God beleeuing those things to bee true, which God doth reueale and promise, namely, that he of his grace doth iustifie a sinner through the redemption that is in Christ Iesus. And when knowledging themselves to bee sinners, through the feare of Gods iudgements, they turne themselves to consider the mercie of God, are lifted vp into hope, trusting that God will be merciful vnto them for Christs sake: and beginning to loue him as the fountaine of all iustice, are thereby moued with hatred and detestation of all sins. Finally, they determine to receiue baptisme, to begin a new life, and to keep all Christs commandements. Self. 6. c. 6.

After this disposition, or preparation, followeth iustification, and for that euery thing is best known by the causes of it all the causes of Iustification are deliuered by the councell in the next chapter, which briefly are these. The finall cause of the Iustification of a sinner, is the glory of God, the glory of Christ, and mans owne Iustification: the efficient is God: the meritorious, Christ Iesus Passions: the instrumental is the Sacrament of Baptisme: the onely .formall cause, is inherent iustice, that is, Faith, Hope, and Charity, with the other gifts of the Holy Ghost, powred into a mans soule at that instant of Iustification. Of the iustification by faith, and the second iustification shall be spoken in their places.

So that we agree in this point, that iustification commeth of the free grace of God through his infinit mercies. and the merits of our Sauiours Passion, and that all sinnes, when a man is iustified, be pardoned him.

The point of difference is this: that the Protestants hold, that Christs Passion and obedience impued vnto vs, becommeth our righteousnesse

(for the words of iustice and iustification, they seldome vse,) and not any righteousnesse, which is in our selues. The Catholikes affirme, that those vertues powred into our soules (speaking of the formal cause of Iustification) is our iustice, & that through that, a man is iustified in Gods sight, & accepted to life euerlasting. Although as you haue seene before, we hold that God of his meere mercy through the merits of Christ Iesus our Sauior, hath freely bestowed that iustice on vs. Note that M Perkins comes too short in his second rule, when he attributeth the merits of Christ's sufferings to obedience; whereas obedience if it had bene without charitie, would haue merited nothing at Gods hands.

ABBOT.

The doctrine of the councell of Trent concerning preparation to Iustification, is the very heresie of the Pelagians, as may appeare by that that before hath bene said therof in the question of a Free will. Out of the free will of man only stirred vp and helped by grace; b not any intrinsecal or infused, but only outwardly assisting grace, which is no more but what Pelagius himselfe acknowledged, they deriue faith, hope, loue, repentance, the feare of God, the haired of sinne, and purpose of new life, whereby he prepareth and disposeth himselfe to receiue in his iustification another faith, hope, charitie, and other gifts of the holy Ghost, then to be powred into his soule. Whereby though they will not seeme so to do, yet in deed they run into the affirming of that, which if Pelagius had not denied & condemned, he had bene condemned himselfe, gratiam Dei secundum merit a nostra dari, that the grace of God is bestowed upon vs according to our merit. In which sort Bellarmaine saith that faith iustifieth by way of merit, that faith in it manner doth merit forgiveness of sinnes, applying thereto some speeches of Austine, which to that purpose were neuer meant. In setting downe the causes of Iustification out of the Councell, he committeth an absurd error, in saying that the small cause of the Iustification of a sinner, is mans owne Iustification, as if it selfe could be the small cause of it selfe, whereas the council nameth in steed thereof eternall life. Whereas he saith, that they agree with vs in this point, that iustification commeth of the free grace of God, through his infinit mercies, and the merits of our Sauiour's Passion, he doth but sophisticate and mocke his Reader. For if Iustification be a Sect. 5.

† Coster. Enchirid. cap 5. Hec gratia impulsus tantum & non in spiritu aliter foris degenerati: liberum arbitrium auxilio Deo nequum in habet in se sed momentis & adiuuantis se preparat ad iustificationem.
 † August. epist. 105.
 † Bellarmin. de Iustificatione lib 1. ca. 17
 Fides iustificat per modum dispositio. & non in merito remissionem peccatorum suo quodam modo

of the free grace of God, then it is not of works, according to that of the Apollle, ° If it be of grace, it is not of workes, otherwise grace is no grace. But he afterwards professedly disputeth, that his works of preparation are the very cause of Iustification. It were odious to refuse the name of the free grace of God, and therefore formally he nameth it; but by the procelle of this discourse it will appeare, that he meaneth nothing lesse then to make it free. That our Iustification and righteousnesse before God, standeth not in any inward vertues and graces powred into our soules, but in the imputation of Christs obedience and righteousnesse made ours by faith, shall be proued vnto him, God willing, by better arguments then he shall be able to disprouue. But that we are not to expect much of him for disprouing, hee himselfe here sheweth vs by a silly note, in which he telleth vs, that M. Perkins comes too short in his second rule, when he attributeth the meritis of Christs sufferings to obedience; whereas obedience, saith he, if it had been without charity, would haue merited nothing at Gods hand. Wherein what doth hee but giue checke to the Apostle, in that he saith; † By the obedience of one shall many be made righteous? For to him he might likewise † Rom. 5. 19. say, that he comes too short in attributing to Christs obedience, that many by it are made righteous; whereas by his obedience, if it had beene without charity, many could not haue beene made righteous. But the mans simple ignorance appeareth in this diuiding of obedience from charitie, whereas charity is the very mother of obedience, neither is there any true obedience, but what issueth therefrom. And therefore M. Perkins well noted, though Master Bishops narrow eies beheld it not, that Christ in his obedience shewed his exceeding loue both to his Father and vs. But wee must be content to beare with many such idle and bootlesse notes.

2. W. BISHOP.

And whereas M Perkins doth say, that therein wee raze the foundation, that is, as he interpreteth it in his preface, we make Christ a Pseudochrist, we auerre, that herein we do much more magnifie Christ, then they doe: for they take Christs meritis to be some one, that they doe but euen serue the turne so deface sinne, and make men worthy of the eyes of heauen? Nay it doth not serue the turne, but onely that God doth not impute sinne unto vs. We contrariwise do so highly esteeme of our Sauiours inestimable merits, that we hold them wel able to purchase at Gods hands, a farre inferior iustice, and such merits as most all men are capable of and to them do giue such force and value, that they make a man iust before God and worthy of the kingdome of heaues, as shall be proued. Againe, they doe great iniurie to Gods goodnesse, wisdom, and iustice in their iustification for they teach that inward iustice, or sanctification, is not necessarie to Iustification; Yea, their Ring-leader Luther saith That the iustified can by no sins whatsoeuer (except hee refuse to belecue) lose their saluation. Wherein, first they make their righteous man like (as our Sauiour speaketh) to sculchers whitened on the out side with an imputed iustice, but within, full of iniquity and disorder. Then the wisdom of God must either not discover this masse of iniquity, or his goodnes abide it, or his iustice either wipe it away, or punish it: But (say they) he seeth it well enough, but couereth it with the mantle of Christs righteousness. Why, can any thing be hid from his sight? it is madnesse to thinke it. And why doth he not for Christs sake deface it, and wipe it cleane away, and adorne with his grace that soule whom he for his Sonnes sake loueth, and make it worthy of his loue and kingdome? What, is it because Christ hath not deserued it? So to say, were to derogate from the infinite value of his merits. Or is it for that God cannot make such iustice in a pure man, as may be worthie of his loue and his kingdome? And this were to denie Gods power in a matter that can be done, as we confesse that such vertue was in our first father Adam, in state of innocencie. And M. Perkins seems to grant, That man in this life at his last gaspe may haue such righteousness. If then we had no other reason for vs, but that our iustification doth more exalt the power and goodnes of God, more magnifie the value of Christs merits, and bringeth greater dignity vnto men: our doctrine were much better to be liked then our aduersaries, who cannot allege one expresse sentence, either out of holy Scriptures, or ancient Fathers, teaching the imputation of Christs righteousness vnto vs, to bee our iustification, as shall be scene in the reasons following, and doe much abase both Christs merits, and Gods power, wisdom, and goodnesse. Now to their reasons.

Pat. 77.

R. ABBOT.

It is truly said by Master Perkins, that the Church of Rome in teaching Iustification by workes, doth raze the very foundation of

of Christian faith, and maketh Christ but a counterfeit and false Christ, because as saith the Apostle, ^a If righteousnesse be by the law, then Christ died in vaine. Therefore peremptorily he denounceth, ^{a Gal. 2. 21.} Ye are abolished from Christ; ye are fallen from grace whosocuer are iustified by the law. Yet M. Bishop tel'eth vs, that they do therein much more magnifie Christ then we do. But I answer him, that they do truly magnifie Christ, who yeeld him that honour to say or teach nothing of him but what he hath reuealed and taught of himselfe. They do not magnifie Christ, who measure and describe him by the foolish presumptions of their owne shallow and short wits. As for vs, we do not make the effect of Christs merits to serue onely that fiine is not imputed vnto vs, as this sycophant cauilleth, but affirmē the same to be such, as that for his sake, and ^c in him God blesseth vs with all manner of spirituall blessings in hea- c Ephes. 1. 3. uenly things, and that ^d he is made vnto vs of God wisdom, right- d 1 Cor. 1. 30. eousnesse, sanctification and redemption, that is, all in all, that he that reioyceth may reioice (onely) in the Lord. But of his magnifying Christs merits, we may rightly say as Saint Austin vpon occasion said to the Donatists, ^e They are the words of men, extolling e Aug. con. 1. 1. Per il. lib. 2. ca. 84. the glorie of man under the name of Christ, to the abasing of the glorie of Christ himselfe. Christ forsooth hath purchased for them iustice and merits of such force and value, as that they make them iust before God, and worthy of the kingdome of heauen. These are gallants that thinke scorne to receiue the reward of heauen as a poore man doth an almes, but will needs haue whereof to say I am iust, I haue iustly and worthily deserued heauen. Foolish hypocrit, that affirmeth that of the merits of Christ, which neither he nor any of his can shew to be performed in himselfe, nay which his owne conscience controleth by experience of himselfe. The word of God teacheth vs no such iustice or merit: they themselues finde it not in themselues; their Iesuits and Priests, to say nothing of the rest, which are the teachers hereof, are men in the eyes of the world notorious for treacherie, for villanie, for cosinage, for vncleane and filthy life, and so one by another discovered to be; yea and of their followers a great number that prate of their mérits, are knowne for extortioners, whoremongers, drunkards, swearers, prophane and vile persons, and yet must wee needs beleue that they are endued with such iustice and merits? Nay, we rather beleue that the iust iudgment of God is vpon them, to deliuer them vp to sinne, who thus wilfully yeeld themselues to such palpable illusions of the man of sinne. But by this meanes Christ with them after baptisme is no otherwise a Sauour, but because he giueth such iustice as whereby it is in their power by free will to saue themselues, and by their merits to purchase and deserue heauen. This is it Maister Bishop, for which wee iustly detest you, as wicked peruerterers of the Gospell of Christ, and subuerterers of true faith. Thus in seeming to set vp Christs merits, you pull them downe, and set vp your selues in steede of Christ. But the Gospell teacheth vs to acknowledge Christ immediately and wholly our righteousnes and saluation, ^f in whom and not in our selues, wee are made the righteousnesse of God, that is, iust in the sight of God, in that his obedience and righteousnesse performed and wrought in our name, and for our behoofe, is imputed vnto vs ^e by faith in his blood. But so, as that this saluation to which he entitleth vs by faith in him, consisteth not onely in the remission of finnes, or in the not imputing thereof, but also in ^h destroying the body of sinne, and restoring in vs the image of God, ⁱ in righteousnesse and holinesse of truth, he hauing giuen himselfe ^k to purge vs to be a peculiar people vnto himselfe, and ^l to make vnto himselfe a glorious Church, not hauing spot or wrinkle or any such thing. And all this Christ will effect vnto vs, but he will do it according to his owne will, not according to Popish fancie. All this is now in fieri, non in facto esse, it is begun and in doing, but it is not yet finished and done: it shall bee fully perfected at the resurrection of the dead. In the meane time he bringeth vs not to perfect righteousnesse in our selues nor giueth vnto vs a full immunity from sinne, that he may take away from vs all occasion of reioycing in our selues, that as Saint Augustine noteth, ^m whilst no man liuing is found iust in the sight of God, we may allwaies owe thankes giuing vnto his mercie, and by humilitie may be healed from swelling pride, and ⁿ that we may know, as Saint Bernard saith, at that day, that not for the works of righteousnes which we haue done, but of his owne mercie hee hath saued vs. Now therefore we doe no wrong to Gods goodnesse, wisdome, iustice, in our iustification, as Maister Bishop fondly chargeth vs, because we teach

f 2. Cor. 5. 21.

g Rom. 3. 25.

h Cap. 6. 6.

i Eph. 4. 21.

k Tit. 2. 14.

l Eph. 5. 27.

m Aug. de peccat.

merit. & remiss.

lib. 7. cap. 13. U-dum non iustifi-ca'tur in conspectucius viuens, actio-num gratiaru sem-per indulgentiaipsius debeamus,& sic ob illa pri-uoriam id est, atimore superbiaesancta humilitateseruamur.

n Bernard. in

Can. ser. 50. U-sciam. in die il-la qua non ex o-peribus iusticiequod seruimus nos,sed pro misericor-dia sua saluos nosfecit.

iustifica-

iustification in the same sort as God himselfe hath taught it vs, inferring sanctification as an immediate and necessarie effect, but not containing it as an essentiall part. Wee hold sanctification to be necessary to iustification in this sense, that the one cannot be without the other, and that no man is iustified by the righteousness of Christ, who is not also sanctified by the spirit of Christ; but we denie sanctification to be necessarie to iustification in Master Bishops meaning, as to be any cause or matter of it. As for the place of Luther wretchedly falsified by him, the true purpose of it onely is to shew the worke of Gods grace to be irrevocable in them vpon whom hee hath set the marke of his election, and hath iustified them by faith in Christ, to whom as Saint Austine saith, euē their very sinnes doe worke for good, and thereof is made as it were a triacle and preservative against sinne; so that, as Bernard saith, though Dauid bee branded with the blot of horrible sinis, and Peter bee drowned in a depth of denying his Master, yet there is none that can take them out of the hand of God, who because hee will preserue them, therefore preserue their faith, and continueth in them his spirit of sanctification, and though by occasion they fall, yet they neuer so fall, but that his seed remaineth in them, and his hand is vnder to lift them vp againe. Now because wee affirme the inward sanctifying of the heart to be alwaies an infallible consequent of iustification, there is no place for that obiection of his, that we make the righteous man like to sepulchers, whited without with an imputed Iustice, but within full of iniquitie and disorder. The imputation of righteousness both outwardly and inwardly is our iustification before God, and by sanctification the iustified man both outwardly and inwardly becommeth other in qualitie then he was before, so that although sinne in part be still remaining to lust and rebell, yet it is brought into subiection that it raigneth not, and being checked and resisted that it may not bring forth fruit, a man is not by it reputed full of iniquity and disorder. But of this sufficient hath bene said before, by occasion of the same cauill in his epistle to the King. Here as he giueth further occasion, we tell him, that that remainder of sin in the regenerate, is covered with the mantle of the righteousness of Christ, and so S. Austine, as we haue seene before, calleth it peccatum relictum, ^o Aug. Soliloq. ca. 28. Quibus omnia cooperantur in bonum, etiam peccata ipsa.

^p Bernard. de triplici coher. clarior. vincul. & gl'usim. Of Certaintie of Salvation. Sect. 9.

^q 1. Joh. 3. 9.
^r Psal. 37. 24.

^s Sect. 179

^t Aug. de inipe. & concup. lib. 2. cap. 34.

sinne covered or hidden. But saith hee, it is madnesse to thinke that any thing can bee hid from the sight of God. Wee answer him, that God seeth it well enough with the eye of his knowledge, but by reason of that couerture wil not see it with the eye of his iudgement: he seeth it with a discerning, but seeth it not with a reueing eye, euen as it is said, He seeth no iniquity in Iacob nor beholdeth transgression in Israel. But hee demandeth, Why doth hee not deface it and wipe it away, and adorne the soule with grace? &c. Hee hath his answer before: I will heere quit him onely with Saint Austines words, God is in hand to heale all, but hee doth it at his owne discretion, and receiveth not of the sicke man an order for his cure. Againe he asketh, Hath not Christ deserued it? We tell him, yes; Christ hath deserued it, and for his merits sake it shall be done, but we must expect the time that God hath appointed for the doing of it. Christ hath deserued for vs to bee wholly freed from mortality, corruption, and death, as before was said, but mortality, corruption and death yet continue still. When mortality, corruption and death shall bee abolished, then shall sinne also wholly and for euer be taken away. Last of all hee demandeth, Is it because God cannot make such iustice in a pure man? I answer him out of Tertulian, If wee will so abruptly in our presumptions conceiue opinion, wee may faine what we list of God, as if he had done it, because he could doe it. Hee could haue made man with wings to flie, but yet hee hath not done it. You should prooue plainely out of the Scriptures that he would so doe. As for worthinesse, it is but a matter of conceit and fancie. No creature can contend vpon worth with the Creator. If Adams worth were such as hee speaketh of, he had bene worthie to bee preferred, and hee may as saucilie dispute with God, that he did him wrong in suffering him to fall. As for that which hee alledgeth as out of Master Perkins, that man in this life at his last gaspe may haue such righteousnesse, it is a deuice of his owne, neither doth Master Perkins say any thing that should yeeld him any such construction. For conclusion, hee telleth vs, that their doctrine is better to bee liked then ours, if for no other reason, yet for that it doth more exalt the power and goodnesse of God, more magnifie the value of Christs merits, and bringeth greater dignitie vnto men. Where the vaine man seeth not, that by the one part of his speech hee crosseth the other. The thing whereto ▪ Augustin 1. Pf. 31. Nolu aduertere. Tecta quare? ut non uiderentur. Quid erat De: uidere peccata nisi iure peccati?

▪ Numb. 23. 21. Y Aug. d. nat. & grat. cap. 27. Hoc agit Deus ut sanet omnia. s. d. a. et iudicio suo, nec ordinem sanandi accipit ab aegro. o.

▪ Tertulian aduers. Praxeam. Si tam abrupte in presump: ionibus nostris hac sententia utamur. quid dicit de Deo confingere poterimus, quasi fecerit quia facere potuerit. Potuit Deus pennis hominem ad uolantum instruxisse; non tamen quia potuit strum efficit. &c. Probare aperte debetis ex Scripturis.

the true doctrine of the Gospell tendeth, is intirely the honor and glorie of God, but their doctrine forsooth serueth to bring dignity vnto men. But in that it bringeth dignitie vnto men, it detracteth from the glorie of God, whose light is most cleerely seene in our daiknesse, ^a his power in our weaknesse, his goodnesse in shewing mercie to vs that are euill, his ^b righteousnesse in the confession of our shame; the worth of Christs merits in the true acknowledgement of our vnworthinesse and want of merits. God hath appointed vs to be ^c for the praise of the glorie of his grace, and therefore so disposeth, ^d that no flesh shall reioice in his presence, and ^e that he only may be exalted at that day. Therefore ^f when the iust King shall sit upon his throne, who shall glorie that he hath a cleane heart, or reioice that hee is free from sinne? Our plea then must not bee merit and worth, but only ^g to finde mercy with the Lord. But the thing that they seeke for, as M. Bishop telleth vs, is the dignity of man, as indeed it is. They labour to set vp their owne righteousnesse against the righteousnesse of God. They extoll their owne merit, their owne worth. The merit of Christ only yeeldeth matter of grace to their Free will to worke vpon, and thereby they worke for themselves, they merit for themselves, they saue themselves; but in seeking this glory to themselves, they purchase their owne shame. What we can allege for imputation of Christs righteousnesse vnto vs to bee our Iustification, will appeare in that that followeth.

^a 2. Cor. 12. 9.
^b Dan. 9. 7.
^c Ephes. 1. 6.
^d 1. Cor. 1. 29.
^e Ecl. 1. 11.
^f Aug. epist. 29.
*Cum rex iustus
 sederit in throno qui glorietur
 se castum habere
 cor? &c.*
^g 1. Tim. 1. 18.

3. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins first reason is this, That which must be our Righteousnesse before God, must satisfie the iustice of the Law which saith, Do these things and thou shalt liue: but there is nothing that can satisfie that iustice of the law, but the righteousnesse and obedience of Christ. Ergo.

This reason is not worth a rush, for when hee requireth that our iustice must satisfie the iustice of the Law, I demand what Law hee meaneth? If Moses Law, of which those words, Doe this, and thou shalt liue, are spoken; then I answer with the Apostle, That you are euacuated, or abolished from Christ, that are iustified in the law: that is, he is a Iew and no Christian, that would haue Christian iustice answerable to Moses law.

Gal. 5.
 Gal. 5.
 Gal. 5.

If M. Perkins would only that men iustificed, must bee able to fulfill Christs law, I then grant, that they so be, by the helpe of Gods grace, which will neuer faile them, before they faile of their duties. But saith M. Perkins: That iustice of man is vnperfect, and cannot satisfie the iustice which God requires in his law, and proues it out of Esay, who saith, All our righteousnesse is as a menstruous, or defiled cloth. I answer, that the holy Prophet speaketh those words in the person of the wicked, and therefore are madly applied vnto the righteous. That hee speaketh of the wicked of that nation and of that time, appeareth plainly by the text it selfe. For hee saith before, But loe thou hast beene angrie, for wee haue offended, and haue beene euer in sinne. And after: There is no man that calleth vpon thy name, and standeth vp to take hold by thee. And although the words bee generall, and seemes to the vnskilfull to comprehend himselfe also, yet that is but the manner of Preachers, and specially of such as become Intercessors for others, who vse to speake in the persons of them, for whom they sue: for if he had reckoned himselfe in that number, hee had said, when he said, There is none that call vpon thy name, when as hee immediately calleth vpon him in most vehement sort for mercie; all which the best learned among them marking, confesse that this sentence cannot bee alleged aganst the verine of good workes. Hence gather, how dexterously M. Perkins handleth holy Scripture. That which the Prophet spake of some euill men, of one place, and at one time, that he applicth vnto all good men, for all times, and all places.

R. ABBOT.

This reason, saith M. Bishop, is not worth a rush, but I am sure that his answer is not worth a rush, as wherein wee may see the absurd blindness of these men who take vpon them to be the only masters of the world. That, saith M. Perkins, which must bee our righteousnesse before God, must satisfie the iustice of the Law, which saith, Doe these things and thou shalt liue, inferring heereof, that because no righteousnesse of ours doth answer the iustice or righteousnesse commanded in the Law, therefore no righteousnesse of ours, but only the imputed righteousnesse of Christ is our iustification before God. For answer to this M. Bishop demandeth

Isay 64.

Luther and Caluin on this place.

mandeth what law he meaneth, whether Moses law or Christs law? But we make to him a counter-demaund, What he meaneth by Moses law, and what by Christs law? He should more plainly haue declared his distinction if he would haue made an answer of it; but that that we conceiue of it is. that by Moses law he meant: the ceremonies of the law, by Christs law the morall law of the commandments commonly so called. But had hee so little vnderstanding of the law, as to thinke that of the ceremoniall law it was said, Do this and thou shalt liue? Surely the ceremonies of the law were but ^a a handwritting against vs, because they were an acknowledgment of uncleannesse, and sinne, and trespasse against that law that saith, Do this and thou shalt liue; and because an acknowledgement of sinne, therefore a conuiction of guilt of death incurred thereby, and yet could yeeld no remedy against death, being afterwards ^b disanulled because of the weaknesse and unprofitablenesse thereof; so farre should wee bee from thinking that of the ceremoniall law it should be sayd, Do this and thou shalt liue. The yong man demandeth of Christ, What good thing shall I do that I may haue eternall life? Now look of what law our Sauior answereth him, as M. Bishop hath cited before, ^d If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandments, of the selfe same law doth he answer another to the same question, vpon recital of a brieft of the commandments, This do and thou shalt liue, namely of the morall law, to which it hath refer-rence^e where it is first spoken, as appeareth by that that followeth for declaration of it. Of which also it is rehearsed by ^g Ezechiel the Prophet, and is by the Apostle Saint Paul further alledged to shew the difference betwixt ^h the Righteousnesse of the law and the Righteousnesse of faith. Moses, saith he, thus describeth the Righteousnesse of the Law, that the man which doth these things shall liue thereby. ⁱ The law is not of faith: but hee that doth these things, shall liue in them. Of which law hee saith; ^k By the law commeth the knowledge of sinne: that it saith, ^l Thou shalt not lust; that hee consenteth to it that it is good, that hee delighteth in it as touching the inner man; that the ^m summe thereof is; Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe, all which doe vndeniably point out vnto vs the morall law, as both ⁿ Saint Austine and ^o Saint Hierome out of the same and such like places haue expressly affirmed.

P. Gal. 3. 10.

q Ver. 11. & cap.
2. 16.

r Cap. 5. 4.

I Esa. 64. 6.

c Ver. 10.

Of the same law therefore he saith, ^PSo manie as are of the workes of the law are under the curse, for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the booke of the law to do them. And because no man continueth in all, hee concludeth hereof, ^qthat by the law no man is iustified in the sight of God; that by the workes of the law no flesh shall be iustified. Now of the selfe same law doth he say that which M. Bishop hath cited for the cutting of his owne throat, ^r*Ye are abolished from Christ whosoever are iustified by the law*, thereby teaching vs to resolute, that Justification by Christ, and Iustification by the workes of the law, cannot possibly concurre in one. Now whereas the Apostle for auouching Iustification only by faith in Christ, taketh it for a ground, that no man fulfilleth the Righteousnesse of the law, M. Bishop that he may be wholly thwart and crosse vnto him, affirmeth, that by the helpe of Gods grace men are made able to fulfill the law to bee iustified thereby. Against which assertion, to prooue that the Righteousnesse of the regenerate and faithfull is not such as that it can answer the iustice and Righteousnesse required in the law, M. Perkins alledgeth the common confession of all endited by the Prophet Esay: ^c*All our righteousnesse is a menstruous or defiled cloth*. For if the righteousnesse commaunded by the law bee most exact and perfect, and no righteousnesse is performed by vs but what by our weakenes and corruption is blemished and stained, then can no righteousnesse of ours satisfie the commandement of the law. But M. Bishop answereth, that the Prophet speaketh these words in the person of the wicked of that nation and that time, and therefore that they are madly applied vnto the righteous. Where a man would wonder that he should be so mad as to imagine that prayer to be vttered in the person of wicked men, or that wicked men should make mention of any their Righteousnesse vnto God. And as for the time, it fitteth not the age wherein the Prophet himselfe liued, but was prophetically written in respect of a time long after succeeding. Hee foresaw in the spirit the desolation of Ierusalem, and the temple, and that whole land, and thereupon putteth himselfe into the person of the faithfull, and maketh himselfe as one of them that should liue at that time. This is very apparent by the Prophets words ^c*Thine holy Cities lie wast, Sion is a wilderness, and Ierusalem a desert; The house of our Sanctuary and of our glory, where* our fathers praised thee, is burnt up with fire, and all our pleasant things are wasted. This praier then was to serue for a direction to the faithfull that then should be, to make their mone vnto God, and to intreat mercie at his hands. And very answerable to this propheticall praier is the praier of the Prophet Daniel, made presently at that time. For whereas M. Bishop, to prooue that the Prophet speaketh in the person of the wicked, allegeth those words ^a Lo thou hast been angry, for we haue offended and haue euer beene in sinne, the Prophet Daniel likewise saith, ^b We haue sinned, and haue committed iniquity and done wickedly; ^c O Lord righteousnesse belongeth vnto thee, and vnto vs open shame: ^d We haue not obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, to walke in his waies. &c. And whereas he allegeth the other words, ^e There is no man that calleth vpon thy name, and standeth vp to take hold of thee, the Prophet Daniel in like sort saith: ^f We haue not made our praier before the Lord our God. Both of them say, We haue offended, We haue sinned, We haue not prayed, as shewing plainly that they so spake of other men as that they implied themselves also. Nay saith M. Bishop, that is but the manner of Preachers, and specially of such as become Intercessours for others, who vse to speake in the persons of them for whom they sue. Where he maketh the holy Prophets and seruants of God as very hypocrites to God as hee himselfe is, as if they tooke vpon them to accuse themselves to God when they intended nothing lesse. But to driue him out of this hole, the Prophet Daniel saith of himselfe, that in that praier ^g hee confessed his owne finnes, and the finnes of his people, and why should Daniel the Prophet be said to confesse his owne finnes, and not the Prophet Esay, or those iust and faithfull in whose person Esay spake? Nay both the one and the other spake out of the true affection of the faithfull at all times, who alwaies finde in themselves defects and defaults, wherby they find iust cause in confession of finnes to ioine themselves with other men, euen as the Prophet Esay elsewhere doth: ^h Woe is mee: I am a man of polluted lippes, and I dwell in the midst of a people of polluted lippes. But saith M. Bishop, if hee had reckoned himselfe in that number, he had lied in saying, There is none that calleth vpon thy name, because he immediately calleth vpon him in most vehement sort. As if they in whose name the Prophet speaketh,

^a Esa. 64. 5.

^b Dan. 9. 5.

^c Ver. 7.

^d Ver. 10.

^e Esa. 64. 7.

^f Dan. 9. 13.

^g Dan. 9. 20.

^h Esa. 6. 5.

speake, might not without a lie by words of the present time deplore the vniuersall neglect of calling vpon God, which had bene amongst them, as Daniel acknowledgeth, and for the most part continued still, though God had stirred vp some of their hearts now to make supplication vnto him: or as if they that did pray might not find in themselves that faintnesse and want of heart and spirit, as might cause them in this behalfe to accuse themselves vnto God. Wee cannot doubt but that there were many faithfull and godly amongst the Iewes in that time of their desolation, yet in those faithfull and godly there was that default to be found, as that God said of them, ^c There is none to guide her among all the sonnes that shee hath brought forth; there is none that taketh her by the hand of all the sonnes that shee hath brought vp. In a word, the Prophet in saying, There is no man that calleth vpon thee, might note a publike contempt of calling vpon God, without exception against himselfe, as where he saith, ^e No man calleth for iustice, no man contendeth for truth, and such like, and yet could not say, Wee haue sinned, wee haue all bene as an uncleane thing, without intendment of himselfe. Last of all, hee allegeth that the best learned among vs (quoting Luther and Caluin on this place) doe confesse that this sentence cannot be alledged against the vertue of good workes. What Luther saith vpon the place, I know not, not hauing the booke at hand, but ^b otherwhere hee doth allege it against the vertue of good workes. Caluin giueth his opinion, that it doth not so properly serue to that purpose, but his reason is of lesse waight, then that it should take from vs a prooffe in the very words so cleere and pregnant as this is. But if Luther and Caluin on our side doe denie it, let him take ^h Pighius and ⁱ Ferus of his owne side confessing and acknowledging that this place doth make against the vertue of good workes, both of them alleging it for an argument against the perfection thereof. Or if they beare no sway with him, let him heare them whose authoritie hee may not well disclaime. Origen saying thus, ^k Who will glorie concerning his Righteousnesse, seeing hee beareth God saying by the Prophet, All your Righteousnesse is as a clóth of a menstruous woman: Hierome thus, ^l By thy mercie wee shall bee saued,

^c Esa. 51. 18.

^e Esa. 59. 4.

^g Assert. artic. 31

^h Pighi conrou.
de fide & iustifi-
ca.

ⁱ Ferus in Ma.
cap. 70.

^k Orig. in Rom.
cap. 3. Quis vel
super iustitia sua gloriabitur cum sualet Deum per Prophetam dicen-tem, quic omnis
iustitia vestra sicut
annus mul-
eris mensis nate.

^l Hieron. in Esa.
cap. 64. Quicquid
videtur habere
iusticie panno mensis nate mul-
eris comparatur.

4 W. BISHOP.

1. Cor. 4.

But he will amend it in the next, where he proues out of Saint Paul, that a cleare conscience (which is a great part of inherent iustice,) can nothing helpe to our iustification: I am priue to nothing in my selfe, and yet I am not iustified thereby. Here is a verie pretie peece of cofnage. What doth the Apostle say that he was not iustified by his cleere conscience? nothing lesse: but that albeit he saw nothing in himselfe to hinder his Iustification, yet God who hath sharper eye-sight, might espie some iniquitie in him, and therefore durst not the Apostle affirme himselfe to be iustified, as if he should say, if there hee no other fault in me: in Gods sight, then I can find by mine owne insight, I am iustified, because I am guiltie of nothing, and so the place proueth rather the uncertaine knowledge of our Iustification, as I haue before shewed.

Pag. 18.

But M. Perkins addeth, that we must remember, that we shall come to iudgement, where rigour of iustice shall be shewed. We know it well, but when there is no condemnation to those that by Baptisme be purged from Originall sinne, as he confesseth himselfe: the Apostle to teach in our consents, about Originall sinne, what then needeth any iustified man greatly feare the rigorous sentence of a iust Iudge? And Saint Paul saith himselfe in the person of the iust: That hee had runne a good race &c. and therefore, there was a crowne of iustice laid vp for him, by that iust Iudge, and not onely to him, but all them that loue Christs comming. And concerning both, Inherent Iustice and the ability of it, so fulfill the law, and what law, heare this one sentence of S. Augustine.

Serm. 18. de verb. Apost.

Hee that beleueth in him, he hath not that iustice which is of the law, albeit the law be good, but he shall fulfill the law, not by iustice which hee hath of himselfe, but which is giuen of God, for charitie is the fulfilling of the law, and from him is this charity powred into our hearts, not certainly by our selues, but by the holy Ghost which is giuen vs.

R. ABBOT.

There is none so ready to call harlot as is the harlot, none so ready readier to obiect cosinage to another as he that is the cosiner himselfe. I pray thee, gentle Reader, whether wilt thou rather thinke to be the cosiner, him that saith that the Apostle, laying, I am not thereby iustified, doth meane as he saith, I am not thereby iustified, or him that wil make thee beleue that the Apostle thereby meane, I cannot tell whether I be iustified or no. Indeed cosiners commonly vse colours, and labour for craftie and cleanly conceiuance, but M. Bishop is none of those that make daintie of the matter; he sticketh not in euery mans sight to cut the purse: that which in euery mans eies is expressly denied, he maketh no bones at all to turne into a matter of question and doubt. The place hath bene sufficiently handled in the former question, ^a Of the Certaintie of saluation; here I will onely set downe what Gregorie Bilshop of Rome conceiued of this place. ^b Of times, saith hee, our very Righteousnesse being brought to the examination of the Righteousnesse of God is vnrightrousnesse, and it is loathsome in the seueritie of the Iudge, which in the opinion of the worker shineth bright. Whereupon Saint Paul when hee said, I am guilty to my selfe in nothing, by and by added, but I am not iustified thereby: who forthwith insinuating the cause why hee was not iustified, saith, But hee that iudgeth me is the Lord. ^c As if hee should say, Therefore doe I denie my selfe to be iustified by my being guiltie of nothing, because I know my selfe to be more neerely sifted by him that iudgeth mee, ^d Because euen our perfection is not without fault, vnlesse the se- uere Iudge doe with mercie weigh it in the strict ballance of his exa- mination. Againe hee saith of the same place: ^e Beholding the strictnesse of Gods iustice, wee are iustly afraid of those very workes, which we thought we did with strength. For our Righteousnesse being brought to the internal rule, if it find seuerie iudgement, by many creekes of wryings and turnings offenderh against the most inward (or perfect) Righteousnesse. Whence the Apostle Paul seeing himselfe to haue the bones (that is, euen the strength) of vertues, and yet these bones of his did tremble at strict examination, saith, I am guilty to my selfe in nothing, yet am I not thereby iustified. ^f As if hee should say, I remem- ber I haue done the things that bee right, but yet I presume not of any merit, because our life is brought to the censure of him before whom the very bones of our strength are troubled. Thus by the iudge-

a Secl. 12.
 b Greg. Mora. lib. 5. cap. 8. Super ipse iusti sa nos, ra ad examen diuine iustitie deducta multitas est, p foras in distri- one iudicij quod in asmat ioue fulget operantia.
 c Asi dicat: Idcirco in eo quod nihil mihi consci- sum iustificat me abnegat, quia ab eo qui me iudi- cat examinatus me subicius scio.
 d Quia & ipsa nostra p. strictio cu pa non caret, nisi hanc suerna iudex in subre- lance. examinatus in seculo diu de- p. ferat.
 e Ibid. cap. 23.
 Distinctionem di- uine iustitie con- temple uires etiam de istis opib. u- re peritissimum que nos for. sa e- gisse put. banu. Dicitur namque ad internam regulam nostram relictum si distinctionem iudicij inuenit, nullu terit uerum su- rum iudicij in ra- tionam recte uer- nem impugit. f A. si dicere, Re. f. esse me re. lo. a tamen de merito uer- presume; quia ad

eius examen uita nostra ducitur sub quo ustra fortitudinis & ossa turbantur.

ment of him whose iudgement M. Bishop by no meanes may refuse. S. Paul plainely denieth himselfe to bee iustified, because though he knew nothing by himselfe, yet he had to do with him, who in his very best workes, much more in many secret sinnes, could find sufficient to condemne him. And this is the true meaning of those words, that howsoever a man, if it be so, know nothing by himself, yet the Lord hath matter enough against euery man, that he may be iustified in that which he hath said, ^g that no man living shall be iustified in his sight. But yet the same Apostle who here saith of himself, I know nothing by myself, namely as touching any vnfaithfulnesse in the stewardship that God had committed vnto him, which was the matter spoken of, yet in other respect found cause to say of himselfe, ^h I am carnall; sold vnder sinne; ⁱ I do not the good which I would, but the euill which I would not, that doe I. ^k I see another law in my members, rebelling against the law of my mind, and leading me captiue to the law of sinne that is in my members. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death! So that heere is a further fault committed by M. Bishop, in that he vrgeth the words of the Apostle as simply and generally true, which were meant onely respectiuelly, as if he had absolutely said that he knew nothing at all against himselfe, when he meant it as touching any default in his seruice and charge that Christ had imposed vpon him. Now M. Perkins to take away the opinion of our owne Righteousnesse, and to shew that wee haue no other but the Righteousnesse of Christ to rest safelie vpon, allegeth, as Gregory doth, the rigour and seuerity of Gods iudgment, which admitteth of nothing but what is exact and perfect, according to the rule of iustice prescribed vnto vs. Where M. Bishop sheweth himselfe a very stupid and senselesse man, not moued with the ^l terrors of the Lord, and the dread of that iudgement which the very Angels tremble at. We know it well, saith he. Yea doe? but what is then your refuge & defense? Marry, seeing there is no condemnation to them that by Baptisme be purged from Originall sinne, as, saith he, M. Perkins himselfe confesseth the Apostle to teach, what then needeth any iustified man greatly feare the rigorous sentence of a iust Iudge? Wherein hee notably abuseth M. Perkins for the hiding of his owne shame. For neither the Apostle, nor M. Perkins doe teach, that by Baptisme we are purged from Originall sinne, but

g Psal. 143. 2.

h Rom. 7. 14.
i Ver. 19.

k Ver. 23.

l 2. Cor. 5. 11.

but onely that in baptisme it is remitted and pardoned, so that though it continue still in vs, yet the faithfull are not thereby holden guilty before God. So then by forgiveness of finnes through the imputation of Christs merits and obedience, it is that there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ, it is not for that there is nothing in them for which otherwise they might iustly be condemned. Surely they that rightly know themselves, do know that in themselves there is that still being, for which God might iustly cast them away, if he should iudge the in themselves, but their comfort & hope is that for Christs sake it is not imputed vnto them, that they shall stand before Gods iudgement seate in the veile of his innocency and most perfect Righteousnesse, and in him shall haue eternal life adiu'dged vnto them. But with M. Bishop the case is farre otherwise. There is no condemnation, because there is nothing worthy of condemnation, all iustice, all innocencie, no impurity or vncleannesse, no more sinne then was in Adam in the state of innocency, as he hath^m before spoken in the question of Originall sinne. May wee not maruell that an hypocrite should thus securely flatter himselfe, being occasioned to bethinke himselfe of that dreadfull and fearefull day? We are purged from Originall sinne, saith he: what needes then any iustified man greatly to feare the rigorous sentence of a iust iudge? But farre otherwise thought Saint Austine when hee sayd, as wee heard before, When the iust king shall sit upon his throne, who shall glorie that he hath a cleane heart, or that hee is free from sinne? What hope then is there, saith he, unlesse mercie bee exalted above iudgement? And what? in the rest of his life hath the iustified man no cause greatly to feare the rigorous sentence of a iust iudge? no sinne, no trespass, for the rigorous sentence of a iust iudge to take any hold of? Wee haue seene before, that our best workes will not endure severity of iudgement, how shall wee then quile by reason of our finnes? S. Austine saith very well, Whoso liueth here, how soeuer iustly hee liue, wo vnto him if God enter into iudgement with him. And fully answerable hereunto is that which Gregorie saith, Not the very elect how soeuer they excell in iustice, shall be able to approue themselves innocent if they bee narrowly sifted in iudgement. But most effectual to the purpose is that of Hierome, When the day of iudgement or of death shall come, all bands shall be dissolved, because there shall no work be found in selfe. 10.

n. August. epist.
29. Cum rex iustus sed in throno quis gloriabitur se castum habere cor. aut quis gloriabitur se esse immunem a peccato? Que igitur spes est nisi superexultet misericordia iudicium?
o Aug. in Psal. 42. Quicumque hic vivit quantum vult esse vivat velle si cum deo in iudicium iratur Deus.
p Greg. Moral. li. 8. c. 21. Que nullo iustus tolleat. nunquam sibi ad iudicium velle elevis sufficiens si distribuit iudicio requirantur.
q Hieron. in li. 1. c. 1. Quam aie iudicet et demeritis advenit. dicitur enim omne iudicium rationis admodum. Dicitur et peccata etc.
o Omne quod in cor. sua in iudicium velle etc. et peccata sua.

worthie of the iustice of God, neither shall any man liuing bee iustified in his sight. Whereupon the Prophet saith, O Lord, if thou markest iniquities, who shall endure it? every heart and soule of man shall faint and feare by reason of the conscience of his owne sinne. And will M. Bishop notwithstanding say, what needeth any iustified man greatly feare the rigorous sentence of a iust iudge? The best is, that he leaue no man to make vse of that which he sayeth, because he will giue no man leaue to assure himselfe that he is iustified. Yea to make his matter good, hee alledged that Saint Paul saith, that he had runne a good race, &c. and therefore there was a crowne of iustice layed vp for him by that iust iudge, &c. Of which place we would gladly haue knowne how he maketh application to his purpose. The Apostle maketh mention of a crowne of iustice layed vp for him, and to be rendered vnto him by a iust iudge, but he doth not say that he needeth not to feare the rigorous sentence of a iust iudge. God is a iust iudge as well when he iudgeth by lawes of mercie, as when he iudgeth by lawes of extremitie; as well in the law of faith, as in the law of workes; but the rigorous sentence of this iust iudge is onely when he iudgeth by the law of workes. By the law of faith God forgieue and pardoneth, he considereth with fauour, and ^tif there be a willing mind it is accepted according to that a man hath, not according to that that he hath not, and all this he doth as a iust iudge, because by law he doth whatsoeuer he doth. But in the rigor of the law which is the law of workes, he remitteth nothing but requireth all to ^tthe vitermost farthing; nothing please but what is exact, and perfect, and fully answerable to the rule. S. Paul then expected that God as a iust iudge would yeild vnto him the crowne, not by the law of workes, but by the law of faith, wherein God ^u crowneth in mercy and louing kindnesse, because this crown is a crowne of iustice, ^x not of Pauls owne iustice, saith S. Bernard, but of the iustice of God For it is iust with God to pay that he oweth, and he oweth that which he hath promised. And this is the iustice, saith he, vpon which the Apostle presumeth, euen the promise of God. Now verie much doth M. Bishop mistake, to thinke that God rendereth by the rigorous sentence of a iust iudge, that which as a iust Iudge hee rendereth by promise according to the law of faith. In a word it toucheth the Apostle Paul, which Saint Austine sayeth vnto God: y If thou wilt deale as a rigorous iudge, and not as a mercifull

^r Rom. 3. 27.

f 2. Cor. 8. 12.

t Mat. 5. 26.

u Psal. 103. 4.

x Bernard. de

grat. & lib. arbit.

sub finem. Coron. x

iustitie Dei

non sic. Iu-

stum est quippe

ut reddat quod

debet: debet au-

tem quod pol-

licitus est. Et hic est iustitia de

qua presumit A-postolus, promissio

Dei.

y Austine. in Psal.

129. Si nobiscum

fueris iudex a-

g re volueris, non

in. misericors pater,

quis stabit ante

faciem tuam?

mercifull Father, who shall stand in thy presence? The place of Austin by him cited maketh nothing at all against vs, nor helpeth him at all. He would thereby proue Inherent iustice, and we deny it not; only we say, that in this life we are farre from the perfection of it. In this life we are ² travellers to it, not dwellers in it, nor possessors of it. as Saint Austin speaketh in the same Sermon, misquoted by M. Bishops, the eighteenth for the fifteenth. ³ I thinke it is all one, for a man to say, I am iust, saith he, as to say, I am no sinner; and who is there living that can so say? Therefore aduisedly he saith, implebit legem, he shall fulfill the law, not, he doth fulfill. He now fulfilleth it in part, but shall perfectly fulfill it when charity shall bee perfect, which is the fulfilling of the law, which shall bee in no man so long as hee liueth here. Therefore in another place hee bringeth in the Apostle himselfe, saying, ⁴ My weaknesse fulfilleth not the law, but yet my will commendeth the law, referring it to the commandement, Thou shalt not lust. This is the state of our Righteousnesse here, rather a desire to fulfill the law, then any perfect attainment of our desire. And thus M. Bishops answer to the first argument is indeed not worth a rush.

2. Augu^s de verb. Apost. ser.
 15. Uxi^o ei, non habitato, es, non possesiner.
 2. Ibid. ser. 16.
Puto hoc esse dicere, Iustus sum, quod est peccator non sum.
 b Rom. 1. 3. 10.
 c Aug. epist. 29:
Plenissima charitas quamuis hic homo uiuat est in nemine.
 d Ide^m de verb. i Apost. ser. 5. Non implet legem in firmatus mea sed laudas legem uoluntas mea.

5. W. BISHOP.

Now to the second argument. Hee which knew no sinne, was made sinne for vs, that we might be made the Righteousnesse of God, which is in him: Hence M. Perkins reasoneth thus: As Christ was made sinne for vs, so we are made the Righteousnesse of God in him: but Christ was made sinne by imputation of our sinnes, he being most holy: Therefore a sinner is made righteous, in that Christs Righteousnesse is imputed vnto him. I denie both propositions; the former, because it hath a comparison in the manner of our Iustification, with the sinne which Christ was made for vs: for in the text of the Apostle there is no signification of a similitude that Christ was so made sinne, as we are made iust. That is then M. Perkins vaine glosse, without any likelihood in the text. The other proposition is also false, for Christ was not made sinne by imputation, for sinne in that place is taken figuratiuely, and signifieth according to the exposition of ancient Fathers, An host or Sacrifice for sinne: which Christ was truly made; his body being sacrificed on the Crosse for the discharge

2. Cor. 5.

400 Righteousnesse before God is imputed, not inherent.
charge of sinne, and not by imputation.

How these words of the Apostle, Iustice of God, are to bee understood, (see S. Augustine. One place I will cite for all: The iustice of God (saith he) through the faith of Christ Iesus, that is by faith where- with we beleue in Christ : for as that faith is called Christs, not by which Christ beleuees, so that iustice is called Gods, not where- by God is iust : both of them, faith and iustice, be ours, but there- fore they are termed Gods, and Christs, because through their liberalitie they are giuen to vs. Which interpretation may be confir- med out of that place of S. Chrysostome, which M. Perkins citeth say- ing, It is called Gods Iustice, because it is not of workes, but of his free gift. So that it is not that which is in God himselfe, but such as he bestoweth vpon vs; and that iustice of it selfe is pure, and wanteth no verue to worke that for which it is giuen, to wit, to make a man righ- eous. S. Anselme a right veruious and learned Catholike Arch-bishop of ours shall be answered when the place is quoted.

R. ABBOT.

The words of the Apostle are plaine ; yet M. Bishop denieth that there is any signification of a similitude that Christ was so made sinne as wee are made iust. M. Perkins, to approue that there is a similitude, alleged the exposition of Anselmus : Hee was made sinne that wee might bee made Righteousnesse, not our owne but Gods, not in our selues but in him, as hee was made sinne, not his owne but ours, not in himselfe but in vs. M. Bishop answereth, that Anselme shall be answered when the place is quoted. He was loth of his labour to search for it, being lett vnquoted by M. Perkins, because he saw that all his wit could not deuise what to say against it. But when he will answer, he must not answer Anselme only, but Austinallo, from whom Anselme borrowed that exposition, as he vsed to doe very much. He then was made sinne, saith Austin, that wee might be made Righteousnesse, not our owne but Gods, nor in our selues but in him, euen as he by the similitude of sinfull flesh wherein hee was crucified, did shew fourth sinne, not his owne sinne but ours, not being in him, but in vs. In which words we see it plainly affirmed, which M. Bishop denieth, that the Apostle in those words did inrend a comparison betwixt Christs being made sinne, and our being made Righteousnesse, that as Christ not being a sinner, yet was reputed as a sinner

Tract. 24 in Joh. 1. 20. ad Honorat. cap. 30. Item in T'sal. 30. Conc. 1. De Spirit. & lit. c. 9.

a. Anselm. in 2. Cor. cap. 5. Ille peccatum ut nos iustitia, non nostra, sed Dei, non in nobis sed in illo; sicut ille peccatum non suum, sed nostrum, nec in se, sed in nobis.
b. August. Enchirid. c. p. 41. Ipse ergo peccatum ut nos iustitia, non nostra, sed Dei, non in nobis sed in ipso, sicut ipse peccatum non suum sed nostrum, nec in se sed in nobis, constitutum similitudine carnis p. carnis in qua crucifixus erat demonstrat.

finer for our sakes, and for the sinne that is in vs, so we not being in our selues iust and righteous, yet are reputed iust and righteous for his sake, and for the Righteousnesse that is in him. To this purpose the exposition of Hierome was also brought in, and the place quoted. Hee omitted to answer to Anselme, because the place was not quoted: but why did he ouerpasse the other place cited directly to the point, but because he intendeth nothing but treacherie and falshood, and wilfully shutteth his eies against apparent truth? The words of Hierome are as cleere as the Sunne:

Christ being offered for our sinnes, tooke the name of sinne, that we might be made the Righteousnesse of God in him, not ours, nor in vs. c Hierou in 2. Cor. cap. 5. Christiis pro peccatis nostris oblatu peccati nomen accepit, ut nos efficiemur iusti: a Deo in ipso, non nostris, nec in nobis.

Where it is euident, that the Righteousnesse whereby we are iustified before God, is not any Righteousnesse that is in vs, but it is the Righteousnesse of Christ imputed vnto vs, euen as our sinne was imputed vnto him. Now then it should seeme that it was not M. Perkins his vaine glasse to make this comparison, but it was some likelihood thereof in the text, that made all these to conceiue thereof as M. Perkins did. As touching the other proposition, But Christ was made sinne by imputation of our sinnes, hee saith that it also is false, and denieth that Christ was made sinne by imputation. But how then, if not by imputation? Forsooth by being made a sacrifice for sinne. But how was he made a sacrifice for sinne, if not by hauing sinne imputed vnto him? The ancient writers well obserued in the description of the sacrifices of Moses law, that the sacrifice for sinne was sometimes called by the name of sinne. As where Moses saith,^d He shall lay his hand upon the head of the sinne, that is, of the sinne offering; and he shall slay the sinne, that is, the sacrifice for sinne. Now because they found the name of sinne to bee thus giuen to the sacrifice for sinne, therefore where it is said of Christ that he was made sinne for vs, they tooke the meaning to bee this, that he was made a sacrifice for sinne. Which being admitted, helpeth M. Bishop nothing, because there is yet question to be made, why the sacrifice for sinne should it selfe bee called by the name of sinne? Surely it could bee for no other cause, but because the sinne of the man for whom it was offered, was imputed to the dumbe beast in figure of Christ, and it was to die as if it had committed the sin. Therefore the man that had sinned was appointed ^e so lay his hand upon the head of his offering, as it were there to ^d Leuit. 4. 29.

^e Leuit. 1. 4.

Theod. in Leuit.
 iust. Qui r-
 nam offerbat,
 in ponebat super
 caput eius manus,
 tanquam suas ip-
 su operationes ip-
 pro quibus hostiam
 offerbat.
 * Leuit. 16. 21.
 g Origen. in Le-
 uit. lib. 1. Peccata
 generis humani
 in se sunt super corpus suum.
 h Ela. 53. 6.
 i 1. Pet. 2. 24.
 k Hieron. in Psal.
 87. Fram & pro-
 cellam sinuorum tu-
 quas in genibus
 effusus eras super me inuixisti,
 qui peccata eorum
 suscepit.
 l August. in Psal.
 22. Delicta nostra
 sua delicta fecit,
 et iustitiam sua
 nostram iustitiam
 faceret.
 m Elias Cretens.
 in Gregor. Nazanzen. Orat. 5.
 n Chrysost. in 2.
 Cor. hom. 11.
 o Ibid. Iustum
 fecit peccatorem
 ut peccatores fa-
 ceret iustos.

lay his sinne. So saith Theodoret,ⁱ He that brought the sacrifice layed his hands vpon the head thereof, as to lay vpon it his owne workes for which he offered the sacrifice. Thus doth God himselfe expresse the meaning of that ceremonie: * Aron shall put his hands vpon the head of the goat: and confesse ouer him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their trespasses in all their sins putting them vpon the head of the goate: so the goat shall beare vpon him all their iniquities. Sith Christ then was made a sacrifice for sinne, it followeh that the sinne of them for whom he was sacrificed, was layed vpon him, and imputed to him. Therefore Origen to apply that figure saith, that^b Christ layed the sinnes of mankind vpon his owne bodie.
 And thus the Scripture teacheth vs: ^b All we like sheepe haue gone astray, &c. and the Lord hath layed vpon him the iniquities of vs all.
ⁱ He hath borne our sinnes in his body vpon the tree. Thus Hierome bringeth in our Saviour Christ, saying, ^k Thou hast brought vpon me that wrath and storme of thy furie, which thou wast to powre forth vpon the nations, because I haue taken vpon mee their sinnes. How are our sinnes layed vpon Christ, how did he beare them, how hath he taken them vpon him, but by hauing the same imputed vnto him? Therefore Saint Austin saith: ^l Hee made our sinnes his sinnes, that hee might make his Righteousnesse our Righteousnesse.
God made him sinne, that is, saith Elias Cretensis, ^m He suffered him to die as a sinner because of our sinne. But Chrysostome goeth yet further, not onely ⁿ he made him sinne, that is, hee suffered him to be condemned as a sinner, but also ^o he made the iust a sinner, saith he, ⁱ that he might make sinners iust. All which speeches can no otherwise be made good, but by granting the imputation of our sinnes to be layed vpon Iesus Christ, especially the last, which seemeth verie hardely spoken, but yet the Fathers doubt not thus to speake to signifie this imputation, as shall appeare further hereafter in the eleuenth Section. Now as touching that which he citeth out of Saint Austine, to declare what Saint Paul meaneth by the iustice or righteousnesse of God, there is nothing in that exposition that maketh against vs. For we also say, that the iustice of God is meant, not that whereby God himselfe is iust, but whereby hee iustificth vs. For Christ needed not for himselfe to be made vnder the law, so to performe the Righteousnesse thereof for his owne Iustification before God, being otherwise

wife simply and absolutely iust; but what hee did, hee did it for our sakes, that we therby through faith in him should be iustified in Gods sight. And this iustice or righteousnes we acknowledge to bee giuen vnto vs by Gods free liberalitie and bountie, euen as Christ himselfe is giuen vnto vs, and therefore are we said therein, to receiue the abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousnesse. Which cannot be vnderstood of inherent iustice, because we doe not yet receiue the abundance of that gift, but only the first fruits, it being such, as that S. Austine saith thereof, so long as wee liue here, that 'it rather consisteth in forgiveness of sins, then in perfection of vertues. Which being so, albeit his exposition contain nothing material againt vs, yet we hold the same not so properly applied to the thing which he there expoundeth. For we doe not thinke that the iustice or righteousnes of God is so called only for that it is the gift of God, but because thereby we are iustified, thereby we are iust and righteous in the sight of God. Which because we are not by inherent iustice, as S. Austine euery where confesseth, it followeth that the righteousnes of God must be vnderstood of another kind of righteounesse, which is that whereof the Apostle instructeth vs, whereby 'the Lord imputeth righteousnesse without works, according to the words of Dauid: 'Blessed is the man whose unrighteousnesse is forgiven, and whose sinne is covered Blessed is he to whom the Lord imputeth no sinne. Therefore the Greeke Scholiast expounding the righteousnes of God to be that that is giuen of God, further sheweth what that gift is: "The iustice or righteousnesse of God is iustification and release, or deliuerance from sinnes, from which the law could not deliuer vs. And so Chrysostome, though he say as M. Bishop citeth, that iustification is of grace, that is, of Gods free gift, yet with all faith, that 'the righteousnes of God is so called, because it is not of workes, inasmuch as it is necessary that there be no spot found. Where he presupposeth that there cannot be found any righteounities of workes, but such as is spotted and defiled, and therefore importeth that the righteousnesse of God, which must bee without spot, can by no meanes be vnderstood of the righteounesse of workes. Neither doth it helpe M. Bishop any whit, that inherent righteousnes is pure of it selfe, as it is the gift of God, because though it bee pure of it selfe, and in the worke of God, yet it is soiled in the puddles of our corruption, and receiueth a blemish by our crooked & vntoward vising

p Rom. 5. 17.

q Cap. 8. 23.

r Aug. de c. i. De i. lib. 19. ca. 7. Si iustitia non habita est in hac vita, ut iustitiam remissione peccatorum corles quam perfectionem intuemur.

f Rom. 4 6.

i Psal. 32. 1.

ii Decumen. in Rom. ca. 3. iustitia Dei est iustificatio & absolutio seu liberatio à peccatis à quibus non potuit lex liberare x Chrysost. in 2. Cor. hom. 11. Dei est ista iustitia quando non ex operibus, quanto necessarium est ut in nullam mercedem inueniatur.

vſing of it, and is neither giuen to that end, nor is ſufficient to yeeld vs iuſtification in the light of God. Hitherto therefore the argument ſtandeth good: As Chriſt was made ſinne, ſo wee are made righteousneſſe. Chriſt was made ſinne by imputation of our ſinne. We are therefore made righteous by the imputation of his righteousneſſe.

6. W. BISHOP.

Rom. 5.

M. Perkins third reaſon. As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhal many be made righteous. Marke here a compariſon between the firſt and ſecond Adam. Hence I reaſon thus: As by the diſobedience of Adam men were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of Chriſt are they made righteous: but men are made ſinners by imputation of Adams ſinne vnto them, and not onely by propagation of naturall corruption: Ergo, by imputation of Chriſts iuſtice wee are made righteous.

Answer. *The compariſon I allow, becauſe it is the Apoſtles, and deny that men are made ſinners by imputation of Adams fault; and ſay, that euery one deſcended of Adam by natural propagation hath his own perſonall iniquity ſticking in them, which is commonly called Originall ſin, and an high point of Pelagianſme is it, to denie it. For albeit we did not taſte of the forbidden fruit in proper perſon, yet receive we the nature of man, polluted with that infection really, & not by imputation. And ſo the compariſon ſerues not at all M. Perkins turn, but beareth very ſtrongly againſt him, it being thus framed: As by Adams diſobedience many were made ſinners, euen ſo by Chriſts obedience many ſhal be iuſtified: This is his Maior. Now to the Minor. But by Adams diſobedience they were made ſinners, by drawing from him euery one his owne proper inherent iniquity, in like maner we are iuſtified by Chriſt, not by imputation of his iuſtice, but by our inherent iuſtice, which is powred into our ſoules, when we are in Baptiſme borne anew in him. See what penurie of poore arguments they haue, that to make ſome ſhew of ſtore, are forced to propound ſuch as make manifeſtly againſt them.*

R. ABBOT.

This argument Maſter Bishop could no way auoid, but by ſhewing ing himselfe either impudently wilfull, or absurdly ignorant: and surely if his knowldege be no better then he here expresth, he hath ill bettowed those thrice seven yeers that he hath before spoken of, in the studie of Diuinitie, and were best to set himselfe to schoole againe. The case is very cleere, that if wee be sinners by the imputation of Adams sinne, then are we also righteous by the imputation of the righteousnesse of Christ. Therefore he denieth that we are made sinners by the imputation of Adams sinne. Yea, but M. Bishop, you should then haue told vs how it is true, that the Apostle saith, that by Adams disobedience wee are made sinners. For how should we be sinners by his disobedience, but for that his disobedience is imputed vnto vs? Bellarmino saith, and he therein saith truly, that Adams sinne is imputed to all his posteritie, as if all had committed the same. Hee allegeth to that purpose Saint Bernard, saying, that Adams sinne is our sinne, and by the iust, though secret, iudgement of God, is imputed vnto vs. Hee saith againe in another place, that Adams sinne is communicated vnto vs by imputation; that it is imputed to all that are borne of Adam, and calleth it the imputation of Adams disobedience. If Adam then by disobedience were holden a sinner, and his disobedience is imputed vnto vs, as if we our selues had disobeied, it must needs follow, that by the imputation of the same disobedience, we also are sinners as well as he. Therefore doth the Apostle say, that in him, that is, in Adam, all haue sinned. If in Adam all haue sinned, then in Adam all are sinners, in Adam all are guiltie of sinne. To which purpose Saint Bernard saith, In Adam wee haue all sinned, and in him wee haue all receiued the sentence of damnation. So Saint Austine also saith, that the debt (or trespasse) of our first parents, did binde all their posteritie after them. Adam then bare the person of all mankind, either standing to stand for all, or falling to fall for all, being to beget children according to his owne image, either wherein hee should continue if he did continue, or whereto hee should fall if he did fall. Therefore when he sinned, we all being in his loines, as Bellarmino saith, sinned in him and by him, and his sin by imputation lieth vpon vs al. But saith M. Bishop, every one descended of Adam by natural propagation, hath his own personal iniquity sticking in him, which is commonly called Original sinne. In which words he somewhat toucheth the reputation of his scholarship, in that he hath not learned

a Rom. 5. 19.
 b Bellarm. de Amissis grat. & sicut peccati lib. 4. cap. 10 Peccatum Adams ita posteris omnibus imputatur, ac si omnes idem peccatum patraissent.
 c Bernard Domin. prima post Epiphani. ser. 1. Nostra est culpa & nobis iust. Dei iudicio imputabatur licet occulto.
 d Bellar. ibid. lib. 5. cap. 17. Communicatur per imputationem. Omnis enim imputatur qui ex Adam nascitur.
 e Rom. 5. 12.
 f Bernard. de auent. Dom. ser. 1. In Adam omnes peccauimus. & vni eorum eum denuo. omni acceptus omni.
 g Aug. de Trin. lib. 1. cap. 12.
 Peris iam prioribus debet omnibus posteris ob. gente. h ibid. et supra.

to put difference betwixt personall and Originall sin, which writers commonly distinguish one from another. For personall sinne is that which groweth from the person whose sinne it is, and is taken to be that which we call actuell sinne; but originall sinne, is that, which being actuell and personall to the first man, is deriued by propagation, and thereby becommeth naturall to all the rest. Thus Cyprian mentioneth them as diuers, when speaking of the Patriarches and Prophets, and other iust and holy men, he saith ⁱ they neither wanted originall nor personall sinne. So Bellarmino, M. Bishop good Master, seuereth them, in saying, that ^k Originall sinne is no lesse truly and properly sinne then personall, and that Adams sin in him is called actuell and personall, but in vs originall. It is wonder that so great a man as M. Bishop should be ignorant in this point. But now what will he make of this originall sinne? Marry, saith he, we receiue the nature of man polluted with that infection really, and not by imputation. Indeed we receiue the nature of man polluted with infection, but doth your learning serue you no better, but to make infection the whole matter of originall sinne? You should know, that originall sinne containeth ^l reatum & maculam, first a guilt of actuell transgression, and consequently a blot of infection. For of this infection or pollution of nature S. Austin in infinite places doth rightly obserue, that it is ^m so a sinne, as that it is also a punishment of sinne. Now a punishment presupposeth a guilt of that sinne whereof it is a punishment. For ⁿ it is no iustice, as Austine saith, that the punishment should passe without the sinne. Seeing therefore the punishment of the sinne of Adam is lying vpon vs, it must necessarily follow, that there is lying vpon vs an imputation of the sinne. And so the same S. Austin saith, that we are holden enwrapped in the guilt thereof, and thereby are holden subiect to the punishment. M. Bishop the we hope wil learn hēceforth to see that it ariseth of imputation, that we receiue the nature of man polluted really with infection. But by this meanes he is now become in a pitifull case, hauing no way left to auoid the argument, but that it standeth firme and sure, that as from Adam we are first sinners by imputation, and consequently sinfull by corruption, so from Christ we are first iustified by imputation, & consequently renewed to inherent iustice by sanctification. In moment of time both these concur together, but in order of nature there is first righteousnesse by imputation, and thereby is way made to inward regeneration

i Cyprian. de ieiunio & ientat. Christi. Nec originalis nec personali carere delicto.
 k Bellarmino. ut supra. Originale peccatum non minus uerū & propriū peccatum est quam personale.
 In Adamo actuale & personale, in nobis originale dicitur.

l Bellarmino. de Anus. grat. & statu peccati. lib. 4. cap. 10.
 m August. Retract. lib. 1. ca. 15.
 n Peccatum sale ut idem sit & pena peccati.
 o Idem cont. Iulian. lib. 2. Non erat iustum sine crimine transire scripturam.
 p Idem. Retract. lib. 1. cap. 15. Dicitur eos reate eius implere or & ob hoc pauē obnoxios detineri.

ration. At this argument they are all faine to hoodwinke themselves, because they cannot truly describe the state of originall sinne according to their owne grounds, but they giue it way inevitably to proceede against them. They will haue it, as M. Bishop here telleth vs out of P. Bellarmine, that the Apostles meaning is, that we are made sinners by inherent corruption. But we tell them, and they can by no meanes auoid it, that the condition of being sinners by inherent corruption, because it is a punishment of sinne, must presuppose vs to be formerly sinners otherwise, and that is onely by imputation. As therefore we are first sinners by imputation from Adam, so are we first iustified by imputation from Christ, regeneration to inherent righteousness following of the imputation of the righteousness of Christ, euen as inherent corruption followeth of the imputation of Adams sinne, as before was said. And hereof S. Bernard speaketh most notably: Why should not righteousness be of another seeing guilt is of another? It is another that maketh me a sinner, it is another that iustificieth from sinne: the one in his seede, the other in his blond. Is there sinne in the seede of a sinner, and is there not righteousness in the blond of Christ? But thou wilt say, If there be a righteousness of any ones, what is that to thee? Be it so: but then let the fault also be whose it is, what is that to me? Shall the righteousness of the righteous be upon himselfe, and shall not the wickednesse of the wicked be upon himselfe? It is not meete that the sonne should beare the iniquity of the Father, and be denied to be partaker of the righteousness of his brother. In which words we see that most clearly he affirmeth, both the imputation of Adams sinne to condemnation, and the imputation of the righteousness of Christ accordingly to iustification. I will conclude this point with the words of Chrysostome: If a Iew shall say vnto thee (put case he had said, If a Papist shall say vnto thee) How is all the world saved it being onely Christ that hath done righteously, thou maist answer him, How was the whole world condemned, when it was onely Adam that obeyed not? The matter of our condemnation then is in the one, & the matter of our saluation in the other, corruption of nature being consequently drawne by generation from the one, as a part of our condemnation; and sanctification to holinesse consequently deiued by faith and regeneration from the other, as a part of our saluation. And now he may well see that our arguments be not poore,

p. D. Bern. de grat. o. lib. ab. l. i. c. 1. 1.
 q. Bernard. epist. 190. Cur in aliud de iustitia cum aliud de reatu? Alius qui peccatorem constituit, alius qui iustificat a peccato: alter in semine, aliter in sanguine. An peccatum in semine peccatoris & non iustitia in Christi sanguine, inquit, si cuius est quid ad te? Ego sed si etiam culpa cuius est, quid ad me? An iustitia iusti super eum erit, & impietas impij non erit super eum? Non conuenit filium portare iniquitatem patris & fratrem fieri exortem iustitiae.
 r. Chrysost. in Rom. hom. 10. Si tibi Iudaeus dixerit, Quo pacto uno riute agente Christo uniuersum orbem saluum: si illius est, possit illi respondere, Quo pacto uno non obediente Adam uniuersus orbis condemnatus est?

408 Righteousnesse before God is imputed, not inherent.

nor make against our selues, as he pretendeth, but his answers are such penurious and poor shifts, as that now they are once discouered, we expect from him no further maintaining of them.

7. W. BISHOP.

*Lib. 2. de. Justif.
cap. 7.*

His fourth reason. The Papists make Christs obedience their satisfaction, but satisfaction is equall to iustice, therefore they must make it as well their iustice as satisfaction. For the Maior he citeth Bellarmine. I haue read the Chapter, and find no such words. further I say, there is a great difference betweene satisfaction from mortall sinnes, and iustification: for satisfaction cannot be done by vs; for the guilt of mortall sinne is infinite, being against an infinit Maiestie, and so no creature can make full satisfaction for it: wherefore the infinite valour of Christs satisfaction is necessarily required, who hauing taken away the guilt of eternall punishment, due to sinnes, leaueth vs his grace to satisfie for the temporall paine of it, as shall be in his due place declared more at large.

Again, a man must needes haue his sinnes pardoned, and grace giuen him, before he can make any kinde of due satisfaction, for he must be in the state of grace before he can satisfie, wherefore he must neede: stie to the benefit of Christs satisfaction: There is nothing like in iustification; for first to make a man iust in Gods sight, requires no infinit perfection, but such as a meer mā is very wel capable of, as al must needes confesse of Adam in the state of innocencie, and of all the blessed Soules in heauen who be iust in Gods sight. Neither is it necessarie to be infinit, for to be worthy of the ioyes of heauen, which be not infinite as they are enioyed of men or Angels, either of whom haue al things there in number, weight, and measure. Briefly, it is a most easie thing for one man to pay the debts of another, but one man cannot bestowe his wisdom or iustice on another, and not credible, that God (whose iudgement is according to truth) will repute a man for iust, who is full of iniquitie: no more then a simple man will take a Black moore for white, although he see him cloathed in a white sme of apparell.

I. W. BISHOP.

In true and right vnderstanding, satisfaction is fully equivalent to iustification, and that that is our satisfaction, is also our iustification before before God. For declaration whereof, it is to bee obserued, that sinne consisteth partly in commission, partly in omission: partly in doing that that we ought not to doe, partly in not doing that that we ought to doe. Satisfaction then for sinne must serue to acquit both the one & the other: it must take away what we haue done, and supply what we haue not done, or else it cannot bee called a satisfaction. Therefore as on the one side in the euill that we haue done, we are reputed as if it neuer had beene done; so on the other side, in the good that we haue not done, we are reputed as if al had beene done. Accordingly S. Austine saith, that all the Commandments of God are reputed to be done, when that is pardoned that is not done. Our satisfaction therefore is our iustification with God, because thereby we are reputed as if we had performed all the righteousness of God. And so doth Bernard make them both one, when saying, There is the righteousness of another assigned to him, who wanted of his owne, he addeth to expresse the same, the satisfaction of one is imputed vnto all, euen as hee alone hath borne the sins of all. But more clearly is it euicted by the words of the Apostle, who, where Dauid pronounceth the man blessed, to whom the Lord forgueth his sinnes, saith, that he describeth there the blessednesse of that man to whom the Lord imputeth righteousness without works; giuing thereby to vnderstand, that forgiuenesse of sinnes is the imputation of righteousness without works. If therefore in satisfaction there bee forguenesse of sinnes, then is there also iustification, that is, the imputation of righteousness without workes. Now then sith Bellarmino confesseth, that the merit and obedience of Christ is our satisfaction, he must acknowledge it also to be our iustification, that is, the thing whereby, and for which we are reputed iust in the sight of God, because thereby we are reputed, as hauing perfectly fulfilled all the commandments of God. I haue read the chapter in Bellarmine, saith M. Bishop, and find no such words. But he was drowie belike when he read it; let him read it better when he is well awake, and then he shall finde that Bellarmino saith, that in true meaning it may be said, that the merits of Christ are imputed vnto vs, for that they are given vnto vs of God, and wee may offer the same to Gods the Father for our sinnes, in respect that Christ hath taken vpon him the burden of satisfying for our sinnes. Where what doth hee but acknowledge that Christ according to the burden taken vpon

a Aug. Retract. lib. 1. ca. 19. Omnia merita sua. Ela deputantur, quando quicquid non sit ignoscitur.

b Bernard. epist. 197. Assignata est ei aliena iustitia quae currit sua. c Satisfactio unius omnibus imputatur, &c.

d Psal. 32. 1. c Rom. 4. 6.

f Bellarm. de Justis sub 2. ap. 7. Si solum collent nobis iustitias Christi merita, quia nosi loventur. Et potest esse de partibus offerre per se in nostris. et in Christi iustitias super se non sunt. et pro parte iustitias. magis de partibus. et in nostris. et in Christi iustitias.

vpon him, hath in his merits made satisfaction for our finnes? but in his folly like M. Bishop, because he vnderstandeth not himselfe, will not haue them imputed for our righteousnesse before God. His differences betwixt saluation & iustification are impertinent, because that iustification which he speaketh of, is not our iustification before God, as shal appeare. Briefly therefore to touch what he saith, the guilt, saith he, of mortall sinne is infinite, being against an infinite maiestie. But therefore the guilt of all sinne is infinite, neither is there any sinne but what is mortall, because all sinne is against an infinite maiestie. Therefore to all sinne the infinite valour of Christ's satisfaction is required, which because it is infinite, is absurdly by M. Bishop restrained to the taking away only of the guilt of eternall punishment; for that that is infinite admitteth no restraint. Wherefore that which he addeth of our satisfaction for temporal paines, is a meere fable; neither without nor in the state of grace can we make satisfaction to God for any sinne. Iustification hee saith requires no infinite perfection, and it is true indeed as he meaneth it, but the true iustification requireth an infinite perfection and worth, to purchase vnto sinners forgiveness of sins, attonement with God, regeneration of grace, and euerlasting life, which none could doe but onely the sonne of God. And whereas hee saith, that there is not any infinite perfection necessary to be worthy of the ioies of heauen, he wonderfully deceiueth himselfe vpon a false ground. There is no infinite perfection necessarie to come to the enjoying or possessing of the ioies of heauen, but there is an infinite perfection necessarily required to be worthy thereof, because that that is finite can haue no proportion and worth to that that is infinite, and therefore the finite perfection of man cannot be worthy of the infinite ioies of heauen. But saith M. Bishop, the ioies of heauen are not infinite, as they are enioied of men or of Angels, either of whom haue all things there in number, weight, and measure. Wherein hee againe mistaketh much, because the ioies of heauen as touching time and continuance, are infinite, and come within no bounds or compasse of number or measure, in which sort the damned beare the infinite wrath of God, according to the guilt of sin, being not thereof capable in any other sort. Which being so, it would be knowne of M. Bishop or some of his, how it should come to passe, that the perfections of men in the state of grace, should should be of sufficient worth to purchase the infinite ioyes of heauen, and the satisfactions of men in the state of grace, should not be of the like sufficient worth to purchase deliuerance from the infinite paines of hell. But in this we shall hereafter haue occasion further to appose him. Here he goeth on and telleth vs, that it is a most easie thing for one man to pay the debt of another, and we willingly admit it to be true. But then what wee were in debt vnto God for want of wisdome and iustice, what hindereth but that Christ our surety might pay the same? If he pay for vs what we want for our selues, then his payment acquitteth vs of all imputation of our want. And surely though a man bestow not his wisdome or iustice vpon another, yet nothing is thereto let, but that what one man by wisdome or iustice doth for another, the same should stand good for him for whō it is done. But we would gladly know of M. Bishop, if his holy harlot mother haue instructed him so far, how it should stand with reason, that they by the Popes indulgences, should be made partakers of the merits and good works one of another, and that it should be against reason, that we by the ordinance of God should be partakers of the merits & righteousnesse of Iesus Christ. The Abbats of the Cistercian Friers being gratified in a request by the King of France, are said by Matthew Paris. ^g to haue granted vnto him the speciall participation of their good works. The Friars here in England made men beleue, that they ^h gaue them participation of all the masses, praiers, fastings, watchings, preachings, abstinences, indulgences, labours, and all good works that were done by the brethren of their order here in England. With what face doe these wretches deny, that to the righteousnesse and merit of the Sonne of God, which thus blasphemously and lewdly they attribute to the blinde deuotions, and imagined righteousnesse of sinfull and wicked men? Yea, but saith M. Bishop, it is not credible that God whose iudgement is according to truth, will repute a man for iust who is full of iniquity, no more then a simple mā wil take a Black-moore for white. although he see him in a white suit of apparell. And indeed it is not credible, that God wil repute him to be inherently iust, whō he hath taught to acknowledge himselfe a sinner, but credibly it is & true, that God doth accept as iust for Christs sake, & by forgiveness of sins impute righteousness vnto him, whō he seeth in himself to be vnrighteous. Althas are iustified by Christ, saith Austin, are iust, not in thē selues, but in him

g M. Paris. in Henrico 3. anno 1244. Speciale suorum bonorum operum et participationem concesserunt.

h Out of the copie of a pardon granted by the Carmelite Friars in London anno 1517.

i August. in Ioan. 1. 1. Omnes qui per Christum iustificati sunt, non in se sed in illo. Si in se interrogat, Adam suus in deo iustificatus, Christus part.

⁂ Bernard in Cant.
ser. 6. 1. Et in me quidem aperit (lu-stria tua) multi-tudinem peccato-
rum, in te autem
quid nisi pietatis
thesauri, inulti-
as bonitas?

1 Cant. 1. 4.
⁂ Theod. in Cant.
Ego sum Achio-
pissus.

⁂ Ambros. de his qui inuit. myser.
cap. 7. Nigra per fragilitatem con-
ditionis humane,
decora per grati-
am: nigra quia ex
peccato eribus, de-cora fidei sacra-
mentis.

⁂ Iustus in Cant.
num. 8. Nigra
confessione pecca-
torum: oris uolosa
gratia sacramen-
tibus.

⁂ Bernard. in Cant.
ser. 25. Potest sponsa cum pulchritudine uisus com-
positiouis uen-
non carere nigre-dimis, sed sine in loco peregrinationis sue. Alioquin erit cum eam sibi
in patria exhibe-
bit non glorie
gloriosam, non ha-
bitum maculam
aut rugam, aut
aiquid inuisimolis. Et uerò
nunc si diceret
quia nigredini-
non haberes, sup-
sams duceret. &c.

⁂ Cant. 1. 7.
1 Cap. 4. 1.

⁂ Ezech. 16. 14.

⁂ Bernard. in Cant.
ser. 38. Ego te di-
ca pulchram, sed
me. r mulieret,
⁂ def. ex parte.

If a man asks of them in themselves, they are Adam: if in him, they are Christs. It should not then seeme so strange to M. Bishop, that men, though being vniust in themselves, yet by faith should be reputed iust & righteous in Christ. And surely S. Bernard plainly saith, ⁂ Thy righteousness covereth in me a multitude of sins, but in thee O Lord, what but the treasures of pietie, the riches of goodnesse? Thus he is content to acknowledge himselfe a blacke-moore, blacke in himselfe, but clothed with the white sure of Iesus Christ. So doth the Church the spouse of Christ say of her selfe, 1 I am blacke, O daughters of Ierusalem, but comely, that is, saith Theodoret, ⁂ I am a Blacke-moore, not only for that she hath been, but also for that she still in part is: ⁂ blacke (saith Ambrose) ⁂ by frailtie of humane condition, comely by grace, blacke because she is of sinners, comely by the sacrament of faith: ⁂ blacke (saith Iustus) ⁂ by confession of sinnes, comely by the grace of the sacrament. This is the beauty of the Church for the time, not her being without sinne, but remission and forgiveness of sinnes, testified by the sacraments of Christ, being pledges of the redemption that she hath obtained in him. And her of Bernard well saith, that P in the place of her pilgrimage, with the comeliness of her feature, she wanteth not her mole or spot of blacknesse. It shall bee otherwise in her country (saith hee) when the bridegroom of glory shall make her to himselfe a glorious Church, not hauing spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. But now if she should say she hath no blacknesse, she should deceiue her selfe, and there were no truth in her. And yet we see, that euen now the bridegroom speaking to her, saith, ⁂ O thou fairest among women: 1 Behold thou art faire my loue, behold thou art faire. She is 1 faire by his beauty which he hath set vpon her, but remaineth yet still a Blacke-moore, by that that she hath remaining of her selfe. Therefore he saith, O thou fairest, but yet addeth, amongst women. S. Bernard telleth the meaning, 2 I call thee faire, but amongst women, that is, in part or partly faire, thereby giuing againe to vnderstand, that partly she continueth a Blacke-moore still. And what? doth M. Bishop thinke it amisse to confesse so much of himselfe? doth he take it in skorn to be likened to a Blacke-moore? Let him be well assured, that if he thinke scorn to confesse himselfe a Blacke-moore, he shall neuer be any of them that shall be clothed in white. Nay, because being a Blacke-moore, and very blacke, he setteth nought by the white garment of Iesus Christ; let him know that his shame and nakednesse lieth open, and his filthinesse continueth lothsome & hateful in the sight of God. As for his exaggeration, I omit it, because it is but the running ouer of his vncleane mouth, which ceaseth not to cry, full of iniquitie, full of iniquisie, of him whom Christ hath begun to purge from iniquitie, and framed in conuersation to depart from iniquity, as we professe of euery on that is iustified by faith in him.

I. W. BISHOP.

M Perkins last reason is taken from the consent of the ancient Church, and yet citeth, (sparing one two lines) nothing out of any ancient writer, nor out of any other, but out of only S. Bernard, who lived 1000. yeeres after. Christ. so that he signifieth that there is little reliefe to be had in antiquity. Which Caluin declareth more plainly, for he commonly setting light by all other in this question, referreth also S. Augustine, saying: Yea not the sentence of Augustine himselfe is to be receiued in this matter, who attributeth our sanctification to grace, wherewith we are regenerate in newnesse of life by the spirit. And Kemnitius, in the first part of his examination of the Council of Trene saith, We contend not how the Fathers take iustification. And a little after: I am not ignorant that they spake otherwise then we do of it. Therefore M. Perkins had reason to conient himselfe with some few broken sentences of latter writers. But was S. Bernard (trow you) in this one point a Protestant? Nothing lesse. His words be these: The iustice of another is assigned vnto man, who wanted his owne: man was indebted, and man made payment, &c. But better let his own reason there cited, serue for exposition of his former words: which is this: For why may not iustice be from another, as well as guiltinesse is from another? Now guiltinesse from Adam, is not by imputation, but euery one contractts his owne, by taking flesh from him; euen so iustice is from Christ powred in so euery man that is borne againe of water and the holy Ghost. In the second place he saith, That mans iustice is the mercifulnesse of God: that is, by Gods free grace and mercy it is bestowed vpon vs. With S. Bernard in the third place we acknowledge, that we haue no iustice of our own, that is from our selues, but from the goodnes of God, through the merits of our blessed Saniours passion: reade his first sermon vpon these words of the Prophet Isay: Vidi Dominū, &c.

Lib. 3. Inslit. cap. 11. num. 15.

Epist. 109.

Ser. 1. Super 1/4sam.

There you shall see him speake plainly of inherent iustice, and how it is a distinct thing from the iustice of Christ. Another broken peece of a sentence, there is cited out of S. Augustine : Christ made his iustice our iustice. That is, by his iustice he hath merited iustice for vs, as he expounded himselfe. What is this, the iustice of God, and the iustice of man? The iustice of God is here called that, not whereby God is iust, but that which God giueth to man, that man may be iust through God.

In Psal 12.

Tract. 27. in Ioan.

R. ABBOT.

*S. Bernard may be sufficient to testifie vnto vs, the doctrine and consent of the antient Church, vnlesse M. Bishop can charge him to haue departed therefrom; which because he dares not doe, lest haply he should make an heretike of him, whom his holy Father hath made a Saint, hee must needs yeeld, that antiquity hath acknowledged the imputation of the righteousnesse of Christ, because S. Bernard hauing so learned of antiquity, hath giuen expresse testimony and witness of it. Yea, but Master Bishop telleth vs, that Calvin plainly declareth, that for this there is little reliefe to be had in antiquity, who commonly setting light by all the rest, in this question reiecteth also Saine Austine. Now hee citeth certaine words of Calvin very lewdly falsified, and wrested from the purpose to which they were spoken. The thing that Calvin there speaketh of, is the signification of the name of grace. Hee taxeth the Master of the sentences for his misconstruction of it, who, he saith, though taking vpon him to follow Austine, yet varied from him, both obscuring and corrupting him. But the schoolemen that came after, he condemneth much more, for that they neuer gaue ouer, till they were growne in a maner to Pelagianisme. Hereupon he addeth, *And indeed the sentence of Austine, or at leastwise his manner of speaking, is not in all respects to be receiued. For although he doe notably bereaue man of all commendation of righteousnes, and do ascribe it wholly to the grace of God, yet he referreth grace to sanctification, whereby through the spirit we are borne againe to newnesse of life. Compare these words, gentle Reader with those that M. Bishop hath cited, & consider whether thou maiest dare hereafter to trust him vpon his word. Calvin noteth Austine, only for some vnproper vnderstanding, or vsing of the name of grace, as meaning thereby the grace of sancti.

^a Calu. Instit. lib. 3. cap. 11. sect. 15. Ac ne Augustini quidem sententia vel salutem loquendi ratio per omnia recipienda est. Tamen si enim egregie hominē omni iustitie laude spoliēt ac totam Dei gratie transactionem ad sanctificationem referret, quia in vite nominatam per spiritum regeneramur.

sanctification, whereas the scripture by grace meaneth the free mercy of God, accepting vs freely in Christ by the forgiveness of our sins, and this M. Bishop citeth, as if Calvin had affirmed, that Austines opinion had ben wholly against him, as touching justification by the righteousness of Christ. In like sort he abuseth Chemicus, whose words in the former place are these, ^b We contend not against the Fathers, albeit they commonly take the word (justifying) for that renewing whereby the works of righteousness are wrought in vs, whereas according to the Scripture, they rightly and conveniently deliuer the doctrine, how and for what a man is reconciled vnto God, receiveth remission of sins, and adoption, and is accepted vnto euerslasting life. In the other place he saith, ^c I am not ignorant that the Fathers do often use the word (iusticie) in this signification, (namely to make inherently iust) but the question is of the propriety of tongues. He confesseth that the Fathers sometimes do somewhat differ from vs, as touching the signification of the word, but rightly & truly affirmeth, that as touching the matter & point of doctrine they teach the same that we do. Surely if betwixt the Papists and vs there were no greater difference, then onely about the meaning of a word, we would not loose our time nor spend our labour friuolously and idly to contend against them. But they abuse the Fathers mistaking of a word to the ouerthrowing of the doctrine approoued by the Fathers. And yet the Fathers when they place iustification in the forgiveness of sinnes, as many times they doe, and teach that by the righteousness that is in vs being defectiue and vnperfect, ^d no man liuing shall be iustified in the sight of God, as they alledge out of the Psalme, they doe neither in matter of doctrine, nor meaning of the word depart from that that is maintained by vs. S. Austine saith; Iust it is that the debtors (or trespassers) whom the diuell held, should be let goe free, beleeuing in him whom hee slew without debt (or trespassse.) This is it that we are said to be iustified in the blood of Christ. ^e Wee are iustified in his blood, in that we are freed from all sinnes; and freed from all sins, for that the Son of God who had no sin was slaine for vs. So Theodoret giuing the mening of the words of the Apostle, we are iustified freely, &c. maketh it to be this, ^f Bringing faith onely, we obtaine the forgiveness of our sins. Origen maketh these words, Thy sins are forgiven

^b Chemic. Exam. Concl. Trident. de iustific. Patribus licet verbum (iustificare) accipiant pro renouatione qua efficiuntur in nobis per sparsum opera iustitie, non mouemus licet, ubi iuxta scripturam recte & commodè tradunt d. Erima quomodo et quare personis Deo recõ- estletur &c.
^c Patro: quidem verbum iustificare in hac significatione (sape vsurpata non ignoro, sed de proprietas e linguarum questio est.

^d Psal. 143. 2.

^e Aug. de Trin. lib. 3. cap. 14. V-trique iustit est vt debitores quos tenebat libera duos intãtur, credentes
in eum quem sine
vllodeli occidit:
hoc est quod iustifi-
cari dicimur in sanguine Christi.
^f Ibid. cap. 16. Iu-stificatio plane in eo quod à peccatis
omnibus liberati:
liberati autem à peccatis omnibus

quoniam pro nobis est Dei filius qui nullum habebat occisus.
missio: in peccatorum consequimur.

^g Theodoret. in Rom. cap. 3. Sola fide allata re-thee,^h the pronouncing of the iustificatiō of the woman, who with her teares washed the feet of Christ. S. Bernard saith, that our being iustificied freely by faith, which the Apostle speaketh of, consisteth in beleewing that our sinnes are forgiven vs. But most fitly to the purpose he saith in another place,^k Where there is reconciliation, there is forgiveness of sinnes, and what is that but iustification? Now according to this construction of iustification, they are wont to deliuer, that mans iustice or righteousnesse, is to hope or put trust in him in whom is forgiveness of sinnes; that our righteousnesse in this life is rather forgiveness of sinnes, then perfection of vertues; that the onely hope of all the godly growing under this burdē of corruptible flesh in the infirmity of this life, is this, that we haue an aduocate with the Father Iesus Christ the iust, and he is the propitiation for our sinnes, as S. Austine speaketh: that when we are iust when wee confesse our selues sinners, and our righteousnesse consisteth not of our merit, but of the mercie of God, as Hierome saith: that we are not to reioyce that wee are iust, but that we are redeemed; not that we are without sinne, but that our sinnes are forgiven vs; not in the good that we haue done, or that any other man hath done for vs, but that Christ is our aduocate with the Father, that the blood of Christ was shed for vs, as Ambrose saith; that Christ is our righteousnesse in the forgiveness of our sinnes, and that Gods forgiveness (or pardon) is mans righteousnesse, as S. Bernard saith. Now what do we teach otherwise then all these haue taught, when we say, that we are reputed iust by the forgiveness of our sinnes, and that this is our iustification in the sight of God? For what are we but iust in the sight of God, when there is taken from vs the imputation of all sinne? Surely to be iust is the same as not to be a sinner; and in the way of faith they to whom their sinnes are not imputed, are accounted not sinners. Therefore it followeth that they are accounted iust. Yea as was before alledged, all the commandements of God are reputed to be done, when that which is not done is pardoned. But hee who is reputed to haue done all the commandements of God, is reputed iust. He therefore to whom God pardo-

h Origen, ad Rom. cap. 3.

i Bernard in Annunciat. ser. 1.

Creue quia per ipsum tibi peccata donatur. Sic enim arbitratur Apostolus gratia iustificari hominē per fidem.

k Idem epist. 190. Pro reconciliatio, ibi remissio peccatorum, quod ipsa nisi iustificatio?

l August. in Psal. 33. iste est modus humane iusticie, ut ut a maioribus quam unlibet proficiat, quia sine defecto esse non potest in hoc non delinquit, dum sperat in eum in quo est remissio delictorum.

Idē de ciu. Dei lib. 19. cap. 27. ut supra secti. 5.

m Idem in cont. 2. epist. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 5. Omnium propterea, &c. Spes unius est quod aduocatum habemus &c.

n Hieron. adu. Pelag. lib. 1. Iustus sumus quando non peccatore: faciemur & iustitia nostra non ex proprio merito sed ex Dei constanti misericordia.

o Ambrosius de Jacob. &c. Non gloriabor quia iustus sum, sed gloriabor quia redemptus sum. Gloriabor non quia uacuis peccati sum, sed qui mihi remissa sunt peccata. Non gloriabor quia profus au: quia profus mihi quisquam, sed quia pro me aduocatus a patre Christus est. sed quia pro me Christi sanguinis effusus est.

p Bernard. in Cant. ser. 22. Iusticia in absolutione peccatorum. q Ibid. ser. 2. Hominis iusticia indugentia Dei. r August. de uerb. Ap. st. ser. 16. Puto hoc esse dicere, Iustus sum, quod est, Peccator non sum. s Idem in Psal. 118. conc. 3. Iusticia pro non peccatis habentur quibus peccata non imputantur. t Idem Retract. lib. 1. cap. 19. ut supra secti. 7.

neth, that which he hath not done is reputed iust. ^u In the way of faith if any thing be committed by stepping out of the way, for the waies sake it is not imputed, and a man is taken as if he had not done it. Yea, ^x all that God hath determined not to impute, is all one as if it had neuer bin. Now he that is taken as if he had neuer done amisse, is reputed iust. Whosoeuer therefore is in the way of faith, is reputed iust. And thus much is included in the sayings of the Fathers, wheresoeuer they teach forgiveness of sinnes, who therby to expresse our justification learned of the Apostle himselfe, who saith, that we are justified through the redemption that is in Christ, and expoundeth that redemption by ^z forgiveness of sinnes, and in the not imputing of sinne, vnderstandeth ^z the imputing of righteousness with our works, as before was said. Now forgiveness of sinnes is veilded vnto vs by vertue of the merit & righteousness which Christ hath wrought for vs, who ^b was given for vs, and ^c gave himselfe for vs; who was ^d made under the law to redeeme vs, and therefore is ^e iust or righteous for vs; who ^f shed his blood for vs, ^g died for vs, ^h rose againe for vs, and whatsoeuer he hath done, hath done for vs. And if for vs the Son of God haue ⁱ fulfilled all righteousness and obedience to his Father, who had no need to vndergo any such seruice for himselfe, should it not be strange that the same should not bee reckoned and imputed vnto vs? Very iustly it is accounted ours, whatsoeuer he hath done for vs, no lesse then if we our selues had performed the same for our selues. And this is the imputation of Christs righteousness which wee maintaine, by which our sinnes are couered and hidden, that is, pardoned & forguen, and we are consequently reputed iust, even by the iustice or righteousness of Christ, because in the righteousness of Christ is the forgiveness of our sins. But why do they reiect imputation of righteousness, which, as we haue seene before, the spirit of God so expressly recommendeth vnto vs, and by the very phrase importeth that wee are not righteous in our selues? Surely it were ^k no matter of grace (or fauor) as Origen well noteth, that to a iust or righteous man his righteousness should be reputed for righteousness. But it is a matter of fauour and grace that God reputeth vs iust. It must therefore of necessity be by other meanes then by the righteousness that is in vs, which can be no other but the imputation of the righteousness of Christ, that it may be verified of him which is written, ^l This is the name wherby ^u Idem in Psal. 118 con. 7. Significat a. de iusticie committitur propter uiam non imputatur. Et languens non fuerit operatus acceptus.

^x Bern in Cant. 23. Omne quod malis ipse non imputare decreuerit sic est quasi non fuerit.
^y Rom. 3. 24.
^z Ephes. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14.
^a Rom. 4. 6. 7. 8.
^b Rom. 8. 3. 32.
^c Tit. 2. 1. 4.
^d Gal. 4. 5.
^e Bern in Cant. ser. 70. Iustus probantibus.
^f Luk. 22. 10.
^g 1. Thess. 5. 10.
^h Act. 3. 26.
ⁱ Matt. 3. 15.

^k Origen in Rom. cap. 4. Quod uidebitur gratiae iusto reputari iustitiam ad. iustitiam?

^l 1. Cor. 12. 6.

they shall call him, The Lord our righteousnesse. Thus saith Ambrose, Christ is righteousnesse, and of that that is his, he hath giuen vnto vs to haue fellowship with him: hee hath indeed clothed vs with the couer of his fleece, & bringeth vs into the house of euerlasting saluation.

And hereof he intimareth a comparison, which Pighius himselte could not but approue, that as Iacob receiued the blessing and inheritance in the garments and apparell of Esau his elder brother, to whom the same did properly belong, so we receiue the blessing of God, and are accepted to eternall life in the garment of the righteousnes of Christ by faith in him, whilest thereby we obtaine the forgiuenes of our sinnes. Isaac smelled the saour of Iacobs gar- ments, (namely which Rebecca his mother had put vpon him of his brother Esau.) Haply, saith he, it importeth this, that wee are not iustified by works, but by faith, because the infirmity of flesh is a hindrance to works, but the brightnesse of faith ouersadoweth the errour of our workes, as which obtaineth the forgiuenesse of our sinnes. This ouersadowing is our safety; this hiding & couering of our errors and imperfections, which disgrace and blemish all our righteous-nesse and workes, and what haue wee to couer and hide the same, but onely the fleece of the merit of Iesus Christ? And this point Saint Bernard, as he was most abundant in spirituall meditation, so hath most cleerely and diuinely set forth vnto vs, and saue that we know with whom we haue to deale, we should hold it almost incredible, that there should be that impudencie in any man, as with so wretched and beggerly answers, to goe about to shift off so plaine and manifest proofes. There is the righteousnesse of another, saith Saint Bernard, assigned vnto him that wanted of his owne.
 The righteousnesse then that is assigned vnto vs, is anothers, and not our owne. Yea, but let his owne reason, saith Master Bishop, serue for exposition of his former words. Be it so, and what is that reason? Forsooth this, saith hee, For why may not iustice bee from another, as well as guiltinesse is from another? Indeed Saint Bernard vseth these words; but how are they fitted to Master Bishops turne, when as it is expressly said, aliunde iustitia, aliunde reatus, righteousnesse is elswhence or of another; guilt is elswhence or of another? For if it be of anothers iustice that a man is iust, and of a-nothers guilt that he is guilty, then is there imputed righteousnes and imputed guilt. Nay, saith he, guiltinesse is not from Adam by m Ambros. in Ps.

 118. for. 18. Ipse
 iustitia est & no-
 bis de suo dedit sui
 habere consortium
 n Idem de Aduers.
 l. 6. 2. cap. 8. verè
 nos tegmine vel-
 leris sui vestiuit
 & in domum in-trodudit eterne
 salutis.

o Pigh. controuer.
 De fide & iusti-ficat. one.

p Ambros. de
Iacob, & c. li. 2.
 cap. 2. Oderatus
 est odorem vestimenti orum. For-tasse illud est
 quia non operibus
 iustificamur, sed
 fide: quoniam
 carnalis infirmi-
 tas as operibus im-
 pedimento est;
 fides autem clari-
 & is factorum ob-
 umbrat errorem
 que meretur ve-
 niam delictorum.

q Bernard. epist.
 190. ut supra,
 Sect. 9.

r Ibid.

imputation, but every one contracts his owne by taking flesh from him.

Babbling sophister, if every one contract guilt from Adam by taking flesh from him, tell vs what it is whereof every one is guilty? Is it not of Adams sinne, in whom all haue sinned? To be borne in sinne is the punishment of sin, and there can bee no punishment but by former guilt, and there can bee no former guilt but of the sinne of Adam. It remaineth therefore that our first guilt is by the imputation of Adams sinne, and consequently that our Iustification is by the imputation of the Righteousnesse of Christ, as on both sides hath been already more largely handled in the sixt Section. I say nothing here more, but what Austin saith as touching infants new borne, They haue committed nothing in the branch, but in the root they are perished and lost. To the second place cited by M. Perkins, he hath somewhat to answer by means of M. Perkins disadvantage to himselfe: It sufficeth mee for all Righteousnesse, only to haue him mercifull unto mee to whom onely I haue sinned. But what is the mercy here intended by S. Bernard? That appeareth by the other words, Gods pardon is mans Righteousnesse. The mercie of God then that sufficeth for all Righteousnesse is in the forgiveness and pardon of our sins. But M. Perkins translating the words, mans righteousnesse is the mercifulnesse of God, gaue M. Bishop an advantage to say, as if Bernard had spoken of Inherent righteousnesse, that by Gods free grace and mercy it is bestowed upon vs. But S. Bernard doth not say that mans Inherent righteousnesse by the gift of God, but Gods forgiveness of mans sinnes, is the righteousnesse of man in the sight of God: and if the place had been rightly translated, he had been further put to his shifts for answer to it. In the third place hee was quite grauelled, and knew not which way to get out, and therefore mentioneth nothing of it, lest the Reader should plainly discern him to be a liar. But I will do him the fauour to set it downe once againe. I will sing of the mercies of the Lord for ever, saith Bernard Shall I sing of mine owne Righteousnesse? Lord, I will remember (or will make mention of) thy Righteousnesse only: for that is mine also. For thou art made unto me Righteousnesse of God. Am I to stand in feare lest one (Righteousnesse) be not sufficient for vs; both? It is not a short cloake, such as cannot couer two. This Righteousnesse being large and euerlasting, shall largely couer both thee and me. And

Rom 5.13:
 t Aug. de verb. Dom. ser. 30. In rano nisi a illic commiseris, sed in radice perierit. u Bern. in Cant. ser. 23. Sufficit mihi ad omnem iustitiam solum habere propitium illum cui solus peccavi.
 x Ibid. Non peccare Dei iustitia est; bonum iustitia indulgentia Dei.
 y Bern. in Cant. ser. 61. Ego quique in serico dicit Domini in eternum canabo Nunquid iustitias meas? Domine memorabor iustitie tue solum. Ipsa est enim & mea, nempe factus es tu mihi iustitia a Deo. Nunquid verendum ne non una ambobus sufficit? Non est pallium breue quod secundum prophetam non possit operire duos. Et se pariter et me operiet: largitur erga & eterna iustitia. Et in me quidem operiet multos iudicium peccatorum; in te erit nisi peccatus i beato, diuitias boni; atq.

*in me verily it couereth a multitude of sinnes, but in thee what but the treasures of pietie, the riches of goodnesse? Now what doth Saint Bernard heere intend? Marrie saith M. Bishop, that we haue no iustice of our owne, that is, from our selues, but from the goodnesse of God, through the merits of Christs passion. Yea but what is that iustice that he meaneth, that we haue from the goodnesse of God? Forsooth he telleth vs, that it is Inherent iustice, and that Saint Bernard speakeith thereof elsewhere, as a distinct thing from the iustice of Christ. What, and is that all that S. Bernard here saith? Giue ouer, M. Bishop, giue ouer for shame; striue no longer against your cōscience: your owne heart told you here, that you played the part of a leaud and wilfull man. The Righteousnesse here spoken of, is but one, and onely one: it is a Righteousnesse sufficient both for Christ and vs; it couereth both Christ and vs; it couereth in vs a multitude of sinnes, and in him the riches of mercy, and is this meant of Inherent righteousnesse? Is our inherent righteousnesse sufficient both for Christ and vs? doth it couer both Christ and vs? But why doe I thus debate with a man altogether void of conscience and shame? S. Bernard expressely testifieth the one Righteousnes of Christ, which onely we are to make mention of, as being sufficient both for him and vs, couering in vs a multitude of sins, so as that by it we are accepted for iust in the sight of God. But to make his matter seeme the better, hee referreth the Reader to the first Sermon of Bernard vpon the words of Esay, Vidi Dominum, there to see somewhat of Inherent iustice, whereas in that Sermon he hath nothing at al to that purpose, so that I should haue thought it mistaken, but that the margin and the text haue cited it both alike. And that it may appeare that he doth but gull and abuse his Reader, it is in the fifth of those very Sermons that S. Bernard hath affirmed, that ² our Righteousnesse, if we haue any, is not pure, and is by the Prophet compared to a defiled cloth, as before was shewed: whence it followeth ineuitably, that our Inherent righteousnes is not that whereby we stand as iust in the sight of God. The sentence of Austine was not cited broken, but whole: ² He hath made our sinnes his sins, that he might make his righteousnesse our righteousnesse. M. Bishops honesty appeareth as it is wont to doe, in leauing out that part of the sentence which should giue light to the rest; otherwise Saint Austins meaning would be plaine, that as Christ hath made our sinnes his, so*

² Bern. de verb.
Esa. ser. 5. V's sup-
pra 67. 3.

² Aug. in. Psa. 22.
Delicta nostra sua
delicta fecit, ut ius-titiam suam nostram iustitiam fa-
ceret.

he hath made his Righteousnesse ours, which is onely by imputation. As for his exposition it is altogether absurd, becaule Christ by meriting Inherent iustice or righteousnesse for vs, hath not made his Righteousnesse ours, which is the thing that S. Austin affirmeth, but hath giuen vs, a Righteousnesse of our owne. The exposition of the iustice of God which he citeth out of Austin, is wholly impertinent, becaule the Righteousnesse of Christ, of which he saith that Christ made his Righteousnesse our Righteousnesse, is the Righteousnesse which Christ wrought for vs in his owne person, not that which God worketh in vs for his sake. The sinne was wrought by vs, the Righteousnesse by him: he tooke to him our sinne, and imparted his Righteousnesse vnto vs. And this Righteousnesse imputed vnto vs, is truly sayd to be that which God giueth to man, that man may be iust through God, so that therein S. Austin howsoeuer saith nothing that is contrarie to our defence.

9. W. BISHOP.

Now let vs come to the reasons of Catholikes, which M. Perkins calling the objections, proposeth for them, to proue, that the iustice which God bestoweth vpon vs, is Inherent, and not imputed.

OF INHERENT IUSTICE.

First object. As one man cannot bee made wise, valiant, or continent by the wisdom, valour, or continency of another, so one man cannot be made iust, by the iustice of another. M. Perkins answereth, That one mans iustice cannot bee made anothers, no more then life or health, but Christs iustice may, who by couenant of grace is made euery mans owne, with all his gifts.

Reply. This answer salueth not the difficulty any whit at all, for Christs wisdom, power, and other gifts are not imputed vnto vs, as it is eident. Why then is his iustice more then the rest? wee confesse that in a good sense all Christs gifts are ours, that is, they were all employed to purchase our redemption, and we do daily offer them to God, that he will for his Sonnes sake more and more wash vs from our sinnes,
and

and bestow his graces more plentifull vpon vs : thus are all Christs riches ours, so long as we keep our selues members of his mystical body, but this is nothing to the point which the argument touched, how one man may formally be made iust by the iustice of another, rather then wise by the wisdom of another.

R. ABBOT.

a Sect. 6.

We haue^a before heard it confessed by Bellarmino, that the sin of Adam is imputed to all his posterity, as if euery man had committed the same himselfe, neither can they truly describe the state of Originall sinne out of the doctrine of their owne schooles, but they must confesse so much. Now let them resolute vs, how one man may be reputed to haue sinned in the sinne of another, and we will resolute them how we may be reputed to haue wrought all Righteousnesse in the Righteousnesse of Christ. Surely as Adam did beare the person of all mankind, and ^b*we all were that one man*, as S. Austin saith, and therefore what he did was as done by all and euery one, so did Christ beare the person of all the elect and faithfull, and was accounted as them all in one, ^c*not one that made the forfeiture, and another that made the satisfaction, because one Christ is both the head and the body*, and therefore what hee did, likewise was as done by all and euery one. M. Perkins therefore rightly said that Christ being made ours by the couenant of grace, wee one with him, and he with vs, albeit the Righteousnesse inherent in him cannot be inherent in vs, that we thereby should be inherently iust, yet by imputation the same is deriued vnto vs, and we thereby and for his sake are accepted, as if wee were inherently iust in most perfect and high degree. But saith M. Bishop, the wisdom and power of Christ, and his other gifts are not imputed vnto vs: why then his iustice more then the rest? I answer him, that that onely is imputed vnto vs which by the couenant of grace is to be imputed, which onely hath reason of imputation. Although Christ be wholly ours, that is, for vs and for our vse vnto Saluation, yet by imputation he is ours onely, in that which by way of humiliation and obedience he hath vndertaken and performed for vs. That, I say, is imputed vnto vs of Christ, which Christ is meeely and onely for vs; what he is absolutely of himselfe, it is not imputed vnto vs, albeit beit his infinite wisdom and power, and prudence, and whatsoever hee is of himselfe, haue concurred to the doing of that that should be imputed vnto vs, and doe concurre to the effecting and maintaining of those benefits, which of that imputation are to arise vnto vs. But the wisdom and power of Christ, as they are in his humane nature a part of the image of God, and of that righteousness whereby man should be wise to know, and able to doe what concerneth him towards God, are impured vnto vs as a part of his Righteousnesse, and thereby he acquitteth our ignorances and errors, our weakneses and frailties, that the same stand not against vs in the sight of God. And thus one may be reputed wise by the wisdom of another, and iust by the iustice of another, because where any thing is in nature of duty and debt, it is at the discretion of him to whom it is due, to accept one mans performance thereof for discharge of the other. Yea, but saith M. Bishop, this is nothing to the argument, how one man may be formally iust by the iustice of another. And I answered him, that their obiection is a formall foolery, grounded vpon a witlesse supposall of that which no man is so witlesse as to imagine. Wee say that a man may be formally iust two manner of waies. A man is one way formally iust in qualitie, another way formally iust in law. Formally iust in qualitie, is he in whom is found the perfect inward forme and qualitie of iustice and Righteousnesse without spot or staine; and thus it were absurd indeed, to say that a man may be formally iust by the iustice of another, because the inherent quality of one subiect, cannot become the inherent quality of another. But in course of law and iudgement, the forme of iustice is, not to be subiect to crime or accusation, and he is formally iust, against whom no action or accusation is liable by law. Now it is true indeed that euery one that is formally iust in qualitie, is also formally iust in law; but yet a man may be formally iust in law, who by inherent forme and qualitie is not iust. For in this sort a man becommeth iust by pardon and forgiuenesse, because pardon being obtained, the law proceedeth no further, and all imputation of the offence in law, is taken away as if it had neuer been committed. And this is the state of our iustice and Righteousnesse in the sight of God, that through the imputation of the merit and satisfaction of Iesus Christ our sinnes are forgiuen vs, and thereby no accusation is liable against vs, either as hauing done

^b August. de peccat. mer. & remiss. lib. 3. cap. 7. Adhuc omnes ille unus fuerunt.

^c Bernard. epist. 190. Non alter qui sefecit alter qui satisfacit, quia caput & corpus unum est Christus.

d Rom. 8. 33.

done what we ought not to doe, or not done what we ought to do, according to the words of the Apostle, Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? if we respect inherent qualitie, there is inough to charge him with, but by forgiuennesse of sinnes the same becometh as if it had neuer been. In a word therefore, we are not formally iust in quality, if God iudge vs thereby, being stained and defiled in all the Righteousnesse that we haue; but we are formally iust in law, by the imputation of the Righteousnesse of Christ, for that thereby a satisfaction is interposed, and our sinnes are remitted and pardoned, so that there is no let but that God mercifully for his sake accepteth vs vnto euerlasting life.

IO. W. BISHOP.

2. Obiection. If we bee righteous, or iust by the Righteousnesse of Christ imputed vnto vs, then is euery iust man as righteous as Christ himselfe, hauing the same iustice his, which is Christs, but that is too too absurd, Ergo: M. Perkins answer. Christs Righteousnesse is not applied vnto vs in the same measure as it is in Christ, in him it is infinite, but of it so much is applied to this or that man, as will serue for his iustification. And to helpe this answer forward, I wil adde his marginall note, euen as any starre partakes the whole light of the Sunne, with the rest so farre forth as the light makes it to shine.

Reply. That which is applied of Christs iustice, to this or that man, is either infinite, and then the man is as iust as Christ: for there can be no greater then infinite in the same kind. Or it is not infinit, but is a certaine measure as he seemeth to grant, and then it is no part of Christs infinite iustice, for all the parts of an infinite thing are infinite, according vnto true Philosophie. It remaineth then that a certaine limited portion of iustice is deriued out of Christs infinit iustice, and powred into this or that man, as in his owne example, The light of euery starre is receiued from the Sunne beames: yet is not the light in the starre, the same which is in the Sunne, for one accident cannot be in two subiects so farre distant, neither is it of like vertue to lighten the skies, as it is euident: but is a farre dimmer light, somewhat like vnto that of the Sunne from whence it came. Euen so in our iustification from the Sonne of iustice Christ Iesus, certaine beames of particular iustice are conneced

conueied into this or that mans soule, whereby it is both lightned by faith, and inflamed by charity: but there is exceeding difference between their two iustices, more then there is betweene the light of the Sunne, and the light of a starre; which S. Augustine in expresse tearmes deliuereth, saying: How much difference there is betweene the light that doth lighten, and that which is lightened, that is, the Sun and the starre light, so much difference is there betwene the iustice that doth iustifie, and that iustice which is made by that iustification: to wit, betweene the iustice of Christ, and that which is in every good Christian.

Lib. 22. conf.
cap. 15.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishops learning might here haue informed him, but that his will outranne his wit, that the righteousnesse of Christ, as he is man, is not infinite, because it is the Righteousnesse of a finite creature, which is not capeable of that that is infinite. True Diuinity distinguisheth the things of the manhood, from the things of the godhead, the one finite, the other infinite; thereby to vphold the integritie of two natures in the one person of Iesus Christ. Yea, and the righteousnesse of the manhood of Christ, as I conceiue, may two waies be considered, either absolutely as in himselfe, or respectiue as for vs. The absolute Righteousnesse of Christ, though it be finite, yet is next to that that is infinite, being aboute all the righteousnesse of men and Angels, in that the^a spirit^a was giuen him without measure, and therefore his perfections were the vtermost that a creature in any sort can be capeable of. But the respectiue or dispensatiue Righteousnesse of Christ, is that whereby he is^b iust for men, as S. Bernard speaketh; the righteousnesse which he performed for vs in fulfilling the law, ^c being made under the law to redeeme vs. According to this Righteousnesse therefore it is true, that by the imputation of the Righteousnesse of Christ, we are as righteous as Christ, not absolutely, but as Christ was for vs in fulfilling the law. The infinite value and force of which Righteousnesse in Christ, arose not from any infinitenesse of it selfe, being but the righteousnesse of the law, which is but the description of that image of God to which man was first created, and ought to be in man, but it arose from the infinitenesse of the person

^a Iohn 3. 34.

^b Bernard. in Cont. ser. 70. li-
tus pro homi-
nibus.

^c Gal. 4. 4.

person of him by whom it was performed, being both God and man, and thereby is of that large extent to iustifie all, and to purchase euerlasting life to all that doe beleeu in him. Rightly therefore doth M. Perkins say, that the righteousnesse of Christ is not applied to euery particular man according to the infinite value of it selfe, because that infinitenesse proceeded not of the nature of it selfe, but according to that measure whereby it appertaineth to vs, which is described in the law. Neither is his comparison of the Sunne and the starres further to be strained, but onely to shew that euery thing that receiueth from another, receiueth according to the stint and measure of it selfe: he neuer meant that the righteousnesse of Christ which is imputed vnto vs, is deriued to vs to be actually inherent in vs, as the light of the Sunne is deriued from it to be actually inherent in the starres. Yet we deny not, but that the beams of inherent Righteousnesse are deriued vnto vs by regeneration and new birth through the spirit of Iesus Christ, but that is not the Righteousnesse here spoken of, and M. Bishop might take occasion out of his owne words to call it a dimme light, as indeed it is more dim and darke then that by it wee can finde the way to God and euerlasting life.

II. W. BISHOP.

The third reason for the Catholike party. If men be made truly and really iust by Christs iustice, imputed vnto them, in like manner Christ should be made really vniust, by the iniquitie and sinnes of men imputed vnto him. For there is no reason to the contrary, but one may as well be made vniust by imputation, as iust; especially considering that euill is made more easily, and more waies then good. M. Perkins answer is, that we may say Christ was a sinner truly, not because he had sinne in him, but because our sinnes were laid on his shoulders. That reason is naught, for he is not truly a sinner, that paie the debt of sinnes, which an innocent and most iust person may performe: but hee that either hath sinne truly in him, or is so by imputation stricken, that the sinnes are made his owne really, and he in all-cases to bee dealt wihall, as if he sinned himselfe: as they hold that one iustified by imputation of Christs iustice, is really in Gods sight iust, and is both loued in this life, and shall be rewarded in the next, as if he were truly iust indeed: But to auouch our Sauiour Christ to bee so a sinner, is to say that he was aueried from God, the slauē of the diuell, and sonne of perdition, which is plaine blasphemie. That sentence out of the Prophet, He was counted with sinners, is expounded by the Euangelists, that hee was so taken indeed, but by a wicked Iudge, and a reprobate people. And therefore if you allow of their sentence, range your selfe with them, as one of their number. S. Chrysostome by him produced, confirmeth the same, saying, that God permitted him to be condemned as a sinner, not that hee was one truly Christ I know is called sinne by S. Paul, but by a figure, signifying that he was a sacrifice for sinne as hath bene before declared. The same blessed Apostle when he speaketh properly, affirmeth in plaine termes, that Christ was tempted like vnto vs, in all things excepting sinne. 162. 53.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkinsyeeldeth, that as we are called righteous by the Righteousnesse of Christ, so Christ might be called a sinner by our finnes, not by hauing the blemish and corruption thereof, but onely the guilt and imputation, euen as hee becommeth truly a debtor that vndertaketh anothers debt. M. Bishop saith, that an innocent and most iust person may pay the debt of sinne, and such a one do we acknowledge the Sonne of God to bee, who yet being iust and innocent, might by M. Bishops owne confession, bee termed (being rightly vnderstood) a sinner, because he saith that he may be called truly a sinner, who is so by imputation strooken, as that the finnes are made his owne really, and he in all cases to bee dealt with as if he had sinned himselfe. For thus was the case with Christ, who really though not inherētly, took vpon him our finnes, by vnder-taking really as in our person the guilt thereof, and therefore being dealt with as if hee himselfe had committed the same. Therefore doth Hierome apply these words to Christ, ^a Thou hast brought vpon mee that wrath and storme of thy furie which thou wast to poure out vpon the nations, because I haue taken vpon mee their sins. So Hilarie saith that ^b all the terror of the tempest that raged against vs, lighted (or lay) vpon him. Therefore in right meaning to say that Christ was made a sinner in the bearing of our finnes, is not to affirme that Christ was aueried from God, the slauē of the diuell,

^a Hieron in Psal.
87. Et supra
167. 5.

^b Hilar. in Psal.
68. Omnis in eius terror desessente
in nos tempesta-
tu incubat.

and sonne of perdition, as M. Bishop ignorantly collecteth, because these are consequents onely of inherent corruption and sinne, whereby a man is borne in sinne, according to the depraved image of him of whom hee is borne, and not euery one to whom sinne is imputed, but whoformer committeth sinne is of the diuell. Therefore the Fathers in that sense that here is spoken of, haue not forborne to terme Christ a sinner, in respect as hee tooke vpon him the imputation of our sinnes. So saith Oecumenius. Christ was greatly a sinner, as who did take vpon him the sinnes of the whole world, and make them proper to himselfe. For that Christ was a sinner heare the Apostle, He made him sinne for vs, &c. Vpon which words of the Apostle Chrysostome also saith, not only as M. Bishop citeth, that God permitted him to be condemned as a sinner, but also as M. Perkins alledgeth, though M. Bishop vnhonestly dissembleth it, He made the iust a sinner, that he might make sinners iust. In like sort Hierome as in one place he saith, that Christ accounteth our sinnes his sinnes, so in another place he affirmeth, that Christ did professe himselfe a sinner, in that he bare our sinnes. So saith also Saint Austin, Christ after a sort sinned in thy infirmity: hee mentioned thy sinnes out of his owne mouth, and called them his sinnes. All this the Prophet Esay confirmeth when he saith, He was counted with the transgressors, which was not onely by a wicked iudge and a reprobate people, as M. Bishop mentioneth, but in that God made him sinne, God counted him with sinners, and therefore layed vpon him the curse of sinners, in that he was hanged on a tree, for the curse of God is vpon him that is hanged. Therefore the Prophet in the same place saith, that the Lord did lay vpon him our iniquities; the Lord would breake him & make him subiect to infirmities, that we may vnderstand that God did not onely leaue him to the hands of men, but himselfe counted him with sinners, by the bearing of our sinnes, and therefore dealt with him himselfe accordingly, so that he had cause to cry out, Thine indignation lieth hard vpon me; and thou hast vexed me with all thy stormes; Lord why abhorrest thou my soule, and hidest thy face from me? Thy wrathfull displeasure goeth ouer me, and the feare of thee hath vndone mee. Yet as touching the person of Christ in himselfe, we acknowledge it as farre as M. Bishop, that he was excepted from sinne, that hee was holy, harmelesse, undefiled, separated from sinners: and because to apply a 1. I. h. 3. 8.

d Oecumenius in Heb cap. 9. Et nim Chr. Ius ve hemer peccator
erat, ut qui totius mundi peccata as sumpterat sibi que
propria peccata,
&c.

Quod enim Chr.
Ius peccator fuer
m audi, Eum qui peccatum, &c.

e Chrysost. ut su pra lect. 5.
f Hier. in Psal. 21
Peccata nostra sua
reputat.

g Idem in Psal.
37. Peccatorem se
profiteor qui pec
cata nostra portauit.

h August. in Psal.
37. Tanquam peccato
re tua Christus. Mod enim peccata tua
tanquam ex ore
suo dicebat &c. et dicebat sua.

i Eia. 5. 1. 2.

k Gal. 3. 13.

l Act. 5. 10.

m Luc. 21. 27.

n Eia. 53. 6. 10.

o Psal. 84. 6.

p Applied to

Chr. by Atha
nat. D. interpret.

q Plal. by Arnob.

r and Hierome in

Plal. 87.

s o Ver. 14.

t p Ver. 16.

u q H. b. 4. 15.

v r Cap. 7. 26.

vnto Christ the name of a sinner in what sort soeuer is subiect to misundersanding and offense, we wholly forbear the same, and as though a man by taking vpon him another mans debt, be become a debtor, yet we call him not a debtor, but a surety, and doe name what befalleth him to befall him by suretyship, and not by debt, so doe we content our selues to say with safetic, that Christ did bear our sinnes, and suffered for our sinnes, or with the Apostle, was made sinne for vs, but the name of sinner wee doe not giue vnto him.

12. W. BISHOP.

4. Obiect. If a man be righteous onely by imputation, he may together be full of iniquity: whereupon it must needs follow, that God doth take for iust and good, him that is both vniust and wicked: but that is absurd, when Gods iudgement is according to truth. Here M. Perkins yeeldeth, That when God doth impute Christs iustice vnto any man, he doth together sanctifie the partie, giuing Originall sinne a deadly wound. And yet elsewhere he said, That Originall sinne, which remained after iustification in the partie, did beare such sway, that it infected all the workes of the said partie, and made him miserable, &c. But it is good hearing of amendment, if he will abide in it. Let vs goe on.

Of Originall
sinne. Pag. 31.

R. ABBOT.

It had beene strange if M. Bishop could haue set downe this argument without full of iniquitie; for it had not otherwise sufficiently filled his mouth. But we deny, that if a man be righteous only by imputation (speaking as wee doe of perfect righteousnesse in the sight of God) it must follow, that he is stil full of iniquitie as before, because iustification in the sight of God by the imputation of Christs merits, is alwaies accompanied with the sanctification of the holy Ghost, whereby the inward qualitie of the man, though not wholly, yet in part, is altered and changed, and is thenceforth

^a Aug de peccat
mer. & remis. lib. 2.
cap. 27. Homi-
nis qualitate
non totam conser-
uauit mutari, &c.

further to be renewed from day to day. In part, I say, because together with this sanctification there is still a remainder of originall corruption, by the touch and staine whereof the holinesse and newnesse that is wrought in vs is defiled, and standeth in need of mercie and fauour to accept it; which made Gregory the Bishop of Rome to say, b All the righteousnesse of man is prooued to be vnrigh- teousnesse if it be strictly iudged: therefore a man needeth prayer after Righteousnesse, that that which being sified might quail, by the onely mercie of the Iudge may stand for good. For although it be true that Originall sinne haue receiued a deadly wound, yet it followeth not thereof, that it is straightwaies wholly dead. It is dead indeed, c as touching the guilt o' it, as Austine saith, but it is not yet dead as touching corruption and infection, and therefore doth indeed infect the workes of the regenerate, and by lusting and rebelling giueth him occasion to cry out with the Apostle, d Miserable man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? This M Perkins vniformely teacheth: he doth not here amend what hee had said before, because in the former place there was nothing to amend, and therefore it was but M. Bishops dreame, that made him imagine a contradiction there where all things well agree and stand together.

23. W. BISHOP.

5. Obiect. Our fifth reason is inuerted by M. Perkins, but may be rightly framed thus: Christ restored vs that Iustice which wee lost by Adams fall: But by him we lost inherent iustice: Ergo, By him wee are restored to Inherent iustice. The Maior is gathered out of Saint Paul, who affirmeth, that wee receiue more by Christ then wee lost by Adam: and is Saint Irenæus, and Saint Augustines most expresse doctrine, who say, How are wee said to bee renewed, if we receiue not againe which the first man lost, &c Immortalitie of the body we receiue not, but we receiue iustice, from the which he fell through sinne.

b Greg. Mor. al. lib.
9. cap. 11. Omnis
humana iustitia
iniustitia esse con-
uincitur si distri-ctè iudicetur. Pre-ce ergo pesti iusti-
tians indige, ut
que succumbere
discussa poterat,
sola iud. & pietate
conualescat.
c Aug. cont. Iul-
an. lib. 2. Mor uii est in eo reatu quo
nos tenebat. &c.
d Rom. 7. 24.

Rom. 5.

Lib. 3. cap. 20. lib.
6. de gen. 24. 26.
 25.

R. ABBOT.

This objection proueth nothing that we deny, being vnderstood according to the meaning of Austin and Irenaeus, whom he alledgeth. Christ came to restore to vs that which we lost in Adam. But in Adam wee lost inherent iustice. Therefore Christ came to restore the same. We affirme the same, and say that what Christ came to doe, he beginneth to doe, and to bring to effect in euery man that is iustified, but in no man doth he perfect it so long as we continue in this life, and therefore inherent iustice is not such in any man here, as that thereby he can be found iust in the sight of God. Now therefore whereas M. Bishop saith, that Christ restored vs that iustice which we lost by Adams fall, if hee meane it as the Apostle doth when he saith, that ^a God hath quickened vs together with Christ, and hath raised vs up together, and hath made vs sit together in the heauenly places in Christ Iesus, that is, ^b not yet really, but in hope, as S. Austin speaketh, we admit the proposition to be true, and it is nothing against vs. But if his meaning be, that Christ hath really and already in possession restored vnto vs what we lost in Adam, the proposition is absurdly false, and all this discourse tendeth to prouethe contrary.

^a Ephes. 2. 6.

^b August de bapt. cont. Donat. tit. lib 1. cap. 4. Non diu iure sed in spe.

14. W. BISHOP.

The sixth and last reason for Catholikes is, The iustice of the faithfull is eternall, dureth after this life, and is crowned in heauen; but Christs imputed iustice ceaseth in the end of this life. Ergo.

M. Perkins answereth. First, that imputed Righteousnesse continueth with vs for euer, and that in heauen we shall haue no other. Secondly, that perhaps in the end of this life, inward Righteousnesse shall be perfect, and then without perhaps it shall be most perfect in heauen. So that one part of this answer ouerthroweth the other. Wherefore I need not stand upon it, but will proceed to fortifie our parte, with some authorities, taken both forth of the holy Scriptures, and ancient Fathers. The first place I take out of these words of Saint Paul:

1. Cor. 6.

And these things certes, were you, (Drunkards, Couctous, Fornicators, &c.) But you are Washed, you are Sanctified, you are

*S. Chryso. A. mbr.
& Theophilac. in hunc locum.*

Iustified in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, and in the Spirit of our Lord: Here Iustification by the best interpreters iudgement is defined, to consist in those actions of washing vs from our sinnes, and of infusion of Gods holy gifts by the holy Ghost, in the name and for the sake of Christ Iesus.

Tit. 3.

The like description of our Iustification is in S. Paul. Of his mercy he hath saued vs by the lauer of regeneration, and renewing of the holy Ghost, whom hee hath powred into vs abundantly, through Iesus Christ our Sauior, that being iustified by his grace, we may be heires in hope (and not in certainty of faith) of life euerlasting. Where the Apostle inferring that being iustified by his grace, declareth that in the words before he had described the same Iustification, to consist in our new birth of Baptisme, and the renewing of our soules, by the infusion of his heavenly gifts, which God of his mercie did bestow upon vs for his Son Christs sake. Many other places I omit for breuity sake, and will be content to cite fewe Fathers, because the best learned of our aduersaries doe confesse that they be all against them, as I haue shewed before.

*De peccat. merit.
& r. m. (cap. 15.
Epist. 85. lib. 17.
de Trinit. cap. 7.
Lib. 6. de Trinit.*

First, Saint Augustine saith, That this iustice of ours, (which they call righteousnesse) is the grace of Christ, regenerating vs by the holy Ghost; and is a beauty of our inward man. It is the renewing of the reasonable part of our soule. And twenty other such like, whereby he manifestly declareth our iustice to be inhered, and not the imputed iustice of Christ. Let him suffice for the Latine fathers. and Saint Cyril for the Greeks, who of our Iustification writeth thus. The spirit is a heate, who as soone as he hath powred charity into vs, and hath with the fire of it, inflamed our minds, we haue euen then obtained iustice.

R. ABBOT.

a Eccles. 19. 14:

^a There is a subtiltie that is fine, saith Ecclesiasticus, but it is unrighteous, and there is that wresteth the open and manifest law. M. Bishop is none of thole that deale finely, that will cogge by arte, and will lie, and yet not seeme to lie: what he doth he will doe outright, and will lie so as that euerie man may see him to be a liar, that he may not be taken for other then indeed he is. Tell vs M. Bishop, where is it that M. Perkins saith, that in heauen we shall haue no other but imputed iustice or Righteousnesse? where doth he make any shew or semblance of saying so? Eie, M. Bishop, fie for shame; leaue this lying and belying of men, a good cause needeth no such meanes for the vpholding of it; they that in apparent vntruth see you thus wilfull and shamelesse, cannot but take you for a cosiner in all the rest. M. Perkins saith, that imputed Righteousnesse continueth for euer, but doth he say that in heauen there shall be no other, who plainely saith, that sanctification shall be perfect in the world to come? Wee shall for euer enjoy eternall life, by vertue of that whereby we are first admitted vnto it, because thereby wee are admitted to it to enjoy it thereby for euer. But hee who by his meric purchased for vs eternall life, purchased for vs also to bee made meete for the enjoying of it, and therefore shall then make vs vnto himselfe b a glorious Church, no: hauing spot or wrinkle or any such thing, but c God shall be all in all. Whereas hee maketh M. Perkins to say, that perhaps inward Righteousnesse shall be perfect in the end of this life, he againe abuteth him: for he asketh the question onely as a supposition, what if it bee so, but maketh no perhaps that it is so; denying that if it were so we could bee iustified thereby. The rest of this section as touching the maine drift of it is altogether impertinent, tending to proue Inherent iustice, which wee denie not, but onely the perfection thereof in this life. But whereas hee seeke h to make good, that our iustification consisteth therein, hee commeth much too short, and one of his proofs directly proueth the contrary. For when the Apostie saith, d You are washed, you are sanctified, you are iustified, vndoubtedly he meant not by iustification and sanctification to import one and the same thing. But there is no question, but that by sanctification is ment inherent iustice. Therefore inherent iustice cannot bee vnderstood in iustification. And this is apparent by those very authors whom hee himselfe citeth for exposition of the place, as namely Chrysostome, saying, e He washed vs; and what, did he so onely? Nay, but hee also sanctified vs; and not this onely, but also he iustified vs: very plainely putting difference betwixt iustification and sanctification, and expounding iustification in the next words to be this, liberari à peccatis, to bee deliuered from sinnes. So doth Theophylact also expressly referre iustification to forgiveness of sinnes: f When he had first washed you, and by iustification had pardoned you, forthwith also hee be-

b Ephc. 5. 27.
c 1. Cor. 15. 28.

d 1. Cor. 6. 11.
e Chrys. in 1. Cor. cap. 6. hom. 16.
Ab. iust. nos: mund. quid? stir hoc solun? Minimi, sed sanctificauit. neque hoc etiam, sed iustificauit. At qui liberari à peccatis magnum munus est, mundati em se eorum innumeris implentur bonis.
f Theop. in 1. Cor. ch. 6. Non sic sanctificauit. Quis peccato? iustificauit inquit. Cum enim prius vos abluisset & in ista condonasse, mox & sanctificationem contulit.

flowed sanctification. Occumenius likewise seuereth them as Chrysostome doth: He hath not onely washed you, but also sanctified you; and not that only, but also iustified you. He citeth Ambrose also, but Ambrose saith not one word, to import that Iustification should be construed of inherent iustice. In baprisme all sinnes being done away, the beleuer is washed, is iustified in the name of the Lord, and by the spirit of our God is adopted to be a sonne of God. Now we may see what credit is to be giuen to this gamester, who shewing his cardes in packe, telleth vs he hath wonne the game, when he hath nothing at all to helpe for the winning of it. As for the other place to Titus, That being iustified by his grace, &c. there is no argument to proue the contrary, but that the Apostle may comprehend the whole worke of sauing vs, which he before mentioneth, vnder the name of Iustification, as the maine point whereupon dependeth all the rest. But more properly we may take it in the third place, as in the former text to the Corinthians, distinguished from the sanctification and renewing of the holy Ghost, and expressing the other speciall effect of the washing of the new birth, consisting in the forgiveness of our sinnes. The places of Austin and Cyrl being spoken of inherent iustice begunne in this life, not denied by vs, say nothing against vs. How trecherously and falsly he dealeth in saying, that the best learned of our side doe confesse, that the Fathers be all against vs, hath been shewed before, and it shall appeare God willing throughout this whole booke, that there is no cause for them so to say.

15. W. BISHOP.

The second difference about the maner of Iustification.

WE all agree in generall, that faith concurrerh to our Iustification, but differ in three points. First, how faith is to be taken. Secondly, how it worketh in our iustification. Thirdly, whether it alone doth iustifie.

Concerning the first point, Catholikes hold a iustifying faith to be that Christian faith, by which we beleene the articles of our Creed, and all other things reuealed by God. The Protestants auerre it to be a particular faith, whereby they apply to themselves the promises of righteousness, and of life euerlasting by Christ. This to be the true iustifying faith, Master Perkins saith he hath proued already: hee should haue

What manner of faith it is whereby we are iustified. 435

haue done well, so haue noted the place, for I know not where to seeke it: but he will here adde a reason or rwaime.

1 Reason. The faith whereby we liue, is the faith whereby we are iustified: but the faith whereby we liue, is a particular faith, whereby we apply Christ to our selues, as Paul saith, I liue, that is spiritu- Cal. 2. 20.
ally, by the faith of the Sonne of God, which faith he sheweth to be a particular faith in Christ, in the words following, Who hath loued me, and giuen himselfe for me particularly.

Answer. The Maior I admit, and deny the Minor: and say, that the prooffe is not to purpose. For in the Minor he speaketh of faith, whereby we apply Christs merits unto our selues, making them ours, in the prooffe Saint Paul saith onely, that Christ died for him in particular. He makes no mentio of his apprehending of Christs iustice, and making of it his own, which are very distinct things. All Catholikes beleene with Saint Paul, that Christ died, as for all men in generall, so for every man in particular, yea and that his loue was so exceeding great towards mankind, that he would willingly haue bestowed his life, for the redemption of one only man. But hereupon it doth not follow, that every man may lay hands upon Christs righteousnesse, and apply it to himselfe (or else Turkes, lewes, Heretikes, and euill Catholikes, might make very bold with him) but must first doe these things which he requires at their hands, to be made partakers of his inestimable merits: as to repent them heartily of their sinnes, to beleene and hope in him, to be baptized, and to haue a full purpose to obserue all his commandements. Which M. Per- Pag. 154
kins also confesseth that all men haue not only promised, but also vowed in baptisme. Now because we are not assured that we shall performe all this, therefore wee may not so presumptuously apply unto our selues, Christs righteousnesse, and life enerlasting, although wee beleene that he died for every one of vs in particular. That which followeth, M. Perkins, hath no colour of probability: that, Saint Paul in this manner of belife, that is, in applying to himselfe Christs merits, was an example unto all that are saued. See the places, good Reader, and learne to be- 1. Tim 1. 16.
ware the bold unskilfulnesse of sectaries. For there is not a word sou- Phil 3 15.
ding that way, but onely how he hauing received mercy, was made an example of patience.

R. ABBOT.

That the effect of true faith is particularly to apply, hath beene handled before in the question of the Certainty of Saluatiō: but yet the place so requiring, M. Perkins though fit heere to set downe some few reasons for further prooffe thereof. The first whereof is grounded vpon the words of S. Paul:^a I liue by the faith of the Son of God, who hath loued mee, and giuen himselfe for mee. M. Bishops exception is, that S. Paul speaketh not of faith, whereby we apply Christ's merits or iustice vnto our selues making them ours, but saith onely that Christ died for him in particular. But what? is not the death of Christ a part, yea and a principall part of the merit of Christ? With vs it is so, and M. Bishop we suppose when he is well aduised, conceiueth no otherwise. If then the Apostle speake of faith, apprehending and applying vnto vs particularly the death of Christ, he speaketh of faith, apprehending and applying vnto vs particularly the merit of Christ. And all parts of the merit of Christ, are parts also with vs of the righteousnesse of Christ. As his obedience in being baptized for vs was his^c righteousnesse, so his^d obedience in dying for vs, was his righteousnesse also. Therefore faith applying vnto vs particularly the death of Christ, applieth vnto vs particularly the righteousnesse of Christ. Now M. Bishop telleth vs, that all Catholikes beleene with S. Paul, that Christ died as for all mē in general, so for euery man in particular of his exceeding great loue towardes mankind. But tel vs further M. Bishop, was that all that S. Paul meant, that Christ loued him as he loued all men; he died for him as he died for all men? Was this S. Paul's faith, Christ loued me as he loued Iudas the traitour; he died for me as he died for Simon Magus? It is written concerning Esaus,^e I haue hated Esau, and in him a patterne of all reprobates is set forth vnto vs; and might Esaus say as well as Paul, Christ hath loued me, and giuen himselfe for me? Indeed as S. Austin saith, as touching the greatnesse and sufficiency of the price, & one cōmon cause or condition of mankind, the blood of Christ is the redemption of the whole world; but yet as he further addeth, there is a propriety of this redemption on their part from whom the Prince of this world is cast forth, and who are not now vessels of the diuell but members of Christ, neither did he bestow his death vpon mankind, that they also that were not to be regenerated, should belong to his redemption. Christ in his death

^a Gal. 2. 20.^b Ambrosius, in *Pf.*118. ser. 3. Baptizatus pro nobis.^c Mat. 3. 15.^d Phil. 2. 8.^e Rom. 9. 13.^f August. ad artic.

sibi falso im-

positi ar. 1. Quod

ad magnitudinem

et pertinet ad pretij

et quod ad vnam

pertinet causam

generis humani,

sanguis Christi

redemptio est toti-

us mundi. & c.

Redemptionis

proprietas haud

dubie potest illos

esse de quibus prin-

cip. lusus mundi

missus est foras. e.

2. non in membra

diaboli, sed in sa-

luta Christi. Cuius

meriti non imperfa

est humano generi

ut ad redemptionem

eius etiam qui

regenerandi non e-

rant: potius est,

& c.

death intended a price of such extent in value and worth, as should be of power and ablenesse to saue ail, and therefore should be offered indifferently to all; but yet in loue he paid this price only for them, to whom of loue he entended fruit and benefit thereby, in loue he gaue his^s soule or life a redemption for many, he shed his blood for many, ^h not for all, saith Hierome, but for many, that is, for them that should be willing to beleene, who are, ⁱ so many as are ordained vnto eternall life. If he had loued Iudas, he would haue loued him to the end, because ^h whom he loued, he loued to the end. If hee had loued vniuersally al, he would haue praied for al, but now there is a world of men, of whom he saith, ^l I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast giuen me^m out of the world; that we may know that there is ⁿ a world which God loueth, euen ^o the world which Christ hath gained by his blood, which is, ^p the Church of God, the same Church being reckoned ^q a speciall kind of vniuersality, as it were a whole world redeemed or deliuered out of the whole world; and that there is a world of which Christ saith, ^r I am not of the world, and I pray not for the world, which therefore he cannot be vnderstood to loue: and according to this difference, the Church of Smyrna writeth that ^t Christ suffered for the saluation of the whole world of them that are to be saued. Properly therefore to speake of the intendment of Chrills death, he died not generally for all, but onely for them that were to be saued thereby. Therefore S. Austine hauing mentioned the words of the Apostle, ^u Who spared not his owne Sonne, but gaue him for vs al, asketh the question, ^v But which vs? Euen vs, saith he, whom he hath foreknowne, predestinated, iustified, glorified, of whom it followeth, Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? So S. Ambrose, ^y Though Christ died for all, yet specially he suffered for vs, because he suffered for his Church. For the elect then Christ hath died in peculiar and speciall wise, to giue vnto them the benefit that should arise of his death: for them only he hath giuen himself in loue, with purpose to make them partakers of his loue. And in this meaning it is, that the Apostle saith, Christ hath loued me, and giuen himselfe for me, which because it is the voice of faith, it followeth that by faith we haue particular application of Chrills loue towards our selues, and doe beleene, that hauing giuen himselfe for vs, and being giuen vnto vs, he is wholly ours; the merit and righteousnesse that he hath performed in giuing himselfe to liue and to die

g Mat 10. 29.
 & 26 23.
 h Hieronim Mar.
 21. Non dixit pro omnibus, sed pro
 multis, in est, pro
 his qui crede et ro-
 luntur.
 i Act. 13. 48.
 k Ioh. 13. 1.
 l Cap. 17. 9.
 m Veif 6
 n Cap. 3. 16.
 o August. in 1.
 l an tract. 1.
 p Propt. ut lo per atorum lo. us
 mundi quem suo sanguine compa-
 rat. 1.
 q Act 10. 28.
 r Presp. de voc.
 Gen lib. 1. cap 3.
 Populu Dei spe-
 cialiu quadi cense ut vniuersitat.
 ut de toto mundo
 totus mundus liberatus. & de omnibus hominibus
 omnes homines xi-
 dentur assumpti.
 r Ioh. 8. 23.
 t Cap. 17. 9.
 u Euseb. hist. eccl.
 lib. 4. cap. 15.
 Pro: o: us suan-
 dorum mundi
 saute passio est.
 u R. m. 23.
 x Aug. in Ioh. n.
 trac. 45. Sed quibus nocet? Pro: fi-
 tis. pred. iustis. et iustificatis, glorifi-
 catis. de quibus
 sequitur, Quis ac-
 cuset eos?
 y Ambro. in Luc.
 c. 7. Est qui pro
 pro: uisus pro:
 fut est. pro: uis
 amon ipe aiter
 p. in ista omnia pro:
 Eccl. 1. 2. 2. 2. 2.
 67.

for vs, is ours, to the forgiuenesse of our sins and euerlasting life. Now then euery true beleeuing man hath by the Gospell this boldnesse ministred vnto him, to make application to himselfe of the death of Christ, & the benefit therof; and yet it followeth not that Turkes, Iewes, heretikes, leaud Catholikes may make bold with Christ in that behalfe, because they haue not faith whereby to conceiue this boldnesse; and wee cannot but wonder, that so drunken a conclusion should proceed from him that carrieth the name and reputation of a learned man. They must first, saith he, doe those things which he requireth at their hands, to be made partakers of his inestimable merits, as to repent heartily of their sins, to beleeu and hope in him. First, saith he, they must doe these things, but hauing so done, may they then apply vnto themselues the merit & righteousness of Christ? If so, then he saith nothing against vs, who teach no faith to saluation, but according to the rule of Christ; ² Repent and beleue the Gospell; no remission of sins, but according to the like rule, that ² repentance and remission of sins are preached in the name of Christ; and againe, ^b Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Iesus Christ for the remission of sins. We say with Austine, ^c No man runneth to the forgiuenesse of sinnes, but hee that is displeasing to himselfe: and againe, ^d No man entreth into the bodie of the Church, except he be first slaine; he dieth as touching that hee was, that hee may bee that that hee was not. Now if hauing done these things, he may not yet apply vnto himselfe the righteousness and merit of Christ, then M. Bishop doth but trifle and mock his Reader, in saying, first he must doe these things. And yet how doth he say that a man thus doing, is made partaker of Christs inestimable merits, if he may not apply the same vnto himselfe? Mary, saith he, we are not assured that we shall performe all this; herfore we may not so presumptuously apply vnto our selues Christs righteousness. But what if we know that we haue done all this, may we then applic vnto our selues Christs righteousness? His meaning is, that we may not, because, as we haue heard, he denieth wholly the imputation of the righteoutnes of Christ; & therefore doth but spend his wit in affigning the cause why we may not apply the same, to be because we are not assured of doing the things mentioned by him. But if he be not assured of his repentance, faith, hope, &c. no maruel if he faile of all other assurance towards God; yet let him not bee like the dogge

^a Mar. i. 15.

^a Luke 24. 47.

^b Acts 2. 38.

^c August. in Psal. 41. Nemo currit ad remissionem peccatorum nisi qui displicet sibi

^d Idem in Psal. 133. In ecclesie corpus nemo intrat nisi prius occisus: moritur quod fuit ut sit quod non fuit.

dogge in the manger: if he can make no vse of Christ himselfe, let him not be snarling and biting at them that doe. As for the places alleged by M. Perkins, to shew that Paul is vnto vs an example of beleeuing, the former of them is plaine: ° Brethren be followers of mee, and looke on them that walke so as ye haue vs for an ensample. If in the faith and doctrine of Christ wee be to follow Paul, then by our faith we are to belecue of our selues as he beleued of himselfe, and what he wrote in that behalfe, we are to take it as written for our learning, not as a matter particular and peculiar to himselfe. The other place is most notable, where Paul first propoundeth it as ° a true saying, and worthy by all meanes to be receiued, that Iesus Christ came into the world to saue sinners. He addeth, Of whom I am chiefe, that is, of which sinners whom Christ would saue I was a chiefe, I was the formost man, ° not in time but in badnesse, as S. Austine expoundeth it. Notwithstanding for this cause I was receiued to mercie, saith he, that Iesus Christ should shew on mee being the chiefe, all long suffering, to the ensample of them that should in time to come beleue in him vnto eternall life. Now how doth the place import, that Paul should be an ensample to them that beleue in Christ, but that all that beleue in Christ, may learne in him not to be dismayed at the greatnesse and grieuousnesse of their sinnes, whereof they haue seene the like in him, but with him to receiue that true saying, that Christ came into the world to saue sinners, and therefore resolue that hee would saue them as hee had saued him, that they should not feare to say euen as he could say, Christ hath loued me, and giuen himselfe for me. h Hee confesseth himselfe such a sinner, saith Austine, as that therefore no sinner may despaire of himselfe, because Paul obtained pardon. It was not therefore the vnskilfulnesse of a sectarie, but true diuinitie that made M. Perkins to make that vse and application of the Apostles words, but it was M. Bishops absurditie, to say that the place importeth onely, that Paul was made an example of patience, without expressing how or what patience he meaneth, there being no patience there spoken of, but the patience of Christ, bearing with men long in great and fearefull sinnes, and yet at length of his owne mercy calling them to be partakers of his saluation.

Phil. 3. 17.

1. Tim. 1. 15.

Aug. in Psal. 70. Primus non tempo. sed max. ligni: a. e.

h Aug. de Temp. ser. 49. Talem se peccatorem confitetur fuisse, et omnis peccator propterea de se non despret, quia Paulus meruit sperare. 8

16. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins 2. Reason. That which we must aske of God in praier, that we must beleue shall be giuen vs : but in praier wee must aske the merits of Christs righteousnesse to our selues. Ergo.
Answer. Of the Maior much hath been said before: here I admit it, all due circumstances of praier being obserued, & deny that we must pray, that our Sauiour Christ Iesus merits may be made ours in particular, for that were greatly to abase them : but good Christians pray, that through the infinite value of those his merits, our sins may be forgiven, and a iustice proportionable vnto our capacitie, may be rowred into our soules, whereby we may lead a vertuous life, and make a blessed end. But it is goodly to behold, how M Perkins proueth th. it wee must pray, that Christs righteousnesse may be made our particular iustice, because, saith he, We are taught in the Pater noster, to pray in this manner : Forgiue vs our debts, & to this we must say Amen, which is as much to say, as our petition is granted. I thinke the poore mans wits were gone a pilgrimage when he wrote thus. Good Sir, cannot our sinnes or debts be forgiven, without we apply Christs righteousnesse to vs in particular? We say yes. Do not then so simply beg that which is in question, nor take that for giuen, which will neuer be granted. But a word with you by the way Your righteous man must ouer-skip that petition of the Pater-noster (forgiue vs our debts) for he is well assured, that his debts be alreadie pardoned. For at the very first instant that he had faik hee had Christs righteousnesse applied to him, and thereby assurance both of the pardon of sins, and of life everlasting. Wherefore he cannot without infidelitie, distrust of his former iustification, or pray for remission of his debts : but following the famous example of that formall Pharisee, in lieu of demanding pardon, may well say, O God I giue thee thanks, that I am not as the rest of men, extortioners, vniust, aduouterers, as also these Papists : fearing the remission of my sins, or the certaintie of my saluation, but am well assured thereof, and of Christs owne righteousnes too, and so forth. But to go on with M. Perkins discourse. Here we must note, that the Church of Rome cutteth off one principall duty of faith ; for in faith (saith M. Perkins) are two things: first, knowledge reuealed in the word, rouching the means of saluation : secondly, an applying of things knowne vnto our selues,
 which

which some call assiance: the first they acknowledge. So then by M. Perkins owne confession, Catholikes haue true knowledge of the means of saluation; (then he and his fellowes are miserable.) The second which is the substance and principall they deny.

Answer. Catholikes teach men also to haue a firme hope, & a great confidence of obtaining saluation, through the mercy of God, & merits of Christs Passion, so they performe their duty towards God, and their neighbor, or else die with true repēiance. But for a man at his first conuersion, to assure himselfe by faith of Christs righteousnesse, and lifeauerlasting without condition of doing those things he ought to do, that we Catholikes affirme to be, not any gift of faith, but the haynous crime of presumption, which is a sinne against the holy Ghost, not pardonable, neither in this life, nor in the world to come.

See S. Th. 2. 2. q.
1. art. 1.

R. ABBOT.

The Major proposition he graunteth, yet with this limitation, all due circumstances of praier being obserued But his circumstances as he intendeth them, are but a Labyrinth to intricate and perplexe the consciences of men, and to bereaue them of all ioy and comfort of their praiers. We beleue that ^a God is nigh vnto all them that call vpon him in truth. Wee know that many are the weakenesses and imperfections of our praiers, many our distractions in that deuotion, but yet we beleue that God respecting the truth, and not the measure of our hearts, pardoneth the same for Christs sake, who is our high Priest, ^b to beare the iniquity of our holy offerings, to make them acceptable before the Lord. To the Minor proposition he answereth, that we must not pray that Christs merits may bee made ours in particular, for that were greatly to abase them. As though the Prophet Dauid did abase God in making him his in particular saying, ^c The Lord is my rocke and my fortresse, my God and my strength, my shield, the borne of my saluation, and my refuge, with infinite other speeches of the like sort. As though Thomas did abase our Saviour Christ in calling him, ^d My Lord and my God We do no iniurie to God to make him ours in particular, because he hath said, as to Abraham, so to euery one of the seede of Abraham, ^e I will be thy God. We do no iniurie to men, because wee do not thereby make him our peculiar, but leaue him the same to others, that hee is to vs as curry

a Psal. 145. 18.

b Exod 28. 38.

c Psal. 18. 2.

d Iohn 20. 28.

e Gen. 17. 7.

f. Aug. in Psal. 32
 conc. 2. Ipse sit hereditus nostris,
 possessio nostra.
 An forte temere
 dicimus faciendo nobis Deū posses-sionem cum sit Dominus, cum sit Creator? Non est
 ista temeritas; af-
 fectus est desiderij & dulcedo spei.
 Dicit anima, om-
 nino securā dicit;
 Deus meus es tu,
 qui dicit anime
 nostre, salus tua
 ego sum. Non fa-ciet iniuriā cum hoc dixerit, immo
 faciet si non dixe-
 rit.
 g Bernard in Cāt.
 ser. 69. Anima Deum videns
 haud secus videt
 quā si sola vide-
 atur a Deo.
 h Chrysoſt in Ge-
 ne. hom. 34. Pec-
 care hoc est amori
 ut ex cōmuni-
 bus propria faciat.
 i Ib. d. Proprietate a morem in eius id quod factum est
 omnibus mihi pro-
 priam facio.
 k Aug. l. de vi-
 sit. infirm. lib. 2.
 cap. 2. Tuus est
 et tu. unius loquor
 ad meum Iesum
 quā ad aliquem
 sanctorum spiri-
 tum Dei.
 l Bern. in Cant.
 ser. 61. Nisi quōd
 no erat de mem-
 bris Christi nec
 prius in nobis ad cō-
 de Christi merito
 et sic presens
 ver, suum dederat
 quod illius esse,
 tanquā rem capi-
 su in membris.
 m Ibid. Ego fideiter quod ex me mihi deest usque in po mihi ex visceribus Domini, quoniam misericordia effluunt.

every man enioieth the light of the Sunne to his owne vse, without impeachment thereof to the vse of any other man. ^f Let God, saith Austine, be our possession, our inheritance. What do we unadvisedly in making God a possession to our selves, he being our Lord & Creator? It is no rashness or unadvisedness; it is affection of desire, it is sweetness of hope. Let the soule boldly say, Thou art my God, to him that saith to our soule, I am thy saluation. It shall do no wrong in saying so; nay it shall do wrong in not saying so. And thus S. Bernard saith, that ^b the soule that looketh upon God, doth no otherwise looke upon him, then as if it selfe only were looked upon of God. For ^h this is the property of loue, as Chry- sostom saith, to make proper to a mans selfe that that is commō; which he speakerh by occasiō of the Apostles words hādled in the former section, Christ hath loued me, &c, where hee saith, that the Apostle ⁱ upō his loue to Christ, doth make proper to himselfe that that was done for all. Accordingly S. Austine saith, ^k I speake more safely & more sweetly to my Iesus then to any of the holy Spirits or Angels of God. Now do all these speeches tend to the abasing of God, and of his Sonne Iesus Christ? Did S. Austine, or whosoever was the Author of those words, abase Christ in naming him my Iesus? If not, what abasing then is it of the merits of Christ, that we should make them particularly ours? But to shew him his folly, S. Bernard saith that ^l but that Cain was not of the members of Christ, nor had any thing to do with the merit of Christ, to presume the same to be his, he wold haue called that his that was Christs, as the member doth that that is the heads, plainly giuing to vnderstand, that the faithfull man being a member of Christ, doth cal that his that is Christs, & pre sumeth the merit of Christ to be particularly his. And therefore he saith in the next words, ^m Whatsoeuer is wanting vnto me of my selfe, I boldly take it vnto me out of the bowels of the Lord Iesus, because they runne out with mercy. What should let then but that we may pray that the merits of Christ may be made particularly ours, and accepted as particularly a satisfactiō for vs to the forgiveness of our finnes? Nay, saith M. Bishop, good Christians pray that through the infinit value of Christs merits our finnes may be forgiven vs, &c. But I pray, M. Bishop, how do you thinke your finnes particularly forgiven, but by the patticular application of his merits, his passion, death, and resurrection, and his sitting at the right hand of God, to make ino tercession for vs? Can a medicine worke without being applied particularly to him in whom it is to work? How do you pray that a justice proportionable to your capacity, as you very nicely and gingerly describe it, may be giuen particularly to you for Christs sake, that is, as we take it, in regard of that that Christ hath done, as generally for others, so particularly for you, but that you take it, that Christ hath done the same particularly for you, as wel as for other particulars? And but that your wits outrunne you, and leaue you to say you know not what, what is this but to apply the merits of Christ particularly to your selfe? Otherwise it may be said vnto you, what haue you to doe particularly with Christ, that for his sake you aske any thing particularly for your selfe? Surely wee cannot aske any thing of God for Christs sake, but by supposing a particular relation betwixt Christ and vs, depending vpon that that he hath done and merited for vs. But Maister Perkins to shew that in our praier, we aske the merit of Christs righteousnesse to our selues, alledgerh the petition of the Lords praier, Forgiue vs our trespasses. For what is forgiuenesse of sinnes, but a thing merited by the righteousnesse & obedience of Christ? Our Sauour saith in the Gospel, that his blood is shed for the forgiuenesse of sinnes. When then wee n Mat. 16. 28. begge forgiuenesse of sinnes, what do we but begge to our selues the fruit of the bloodshedding of Iesus Christ? The righteousnesse of Christ containeth the whole obedience that Christ performed to his Father, both in liuing & dying, to be the satisfaction for our sinnes. And if there be no forgiuenesse of sinnes, but onely by his satisfaction for vs, what do we when we craue forgiuenesse of sinnes, but craue the application of Christs righteousnesse vnto vs, that it may bee accepted for our satisfaction to the forgiuenesse of our sinnes? Now to our praier M. Perkins noteth, that we adde Amen, as a word of confirmation vnto vs, that God heareth our petition, and graunteth the same according to the promise that hee hath made vnto vs. Which hee saide not onely of himselfe, but alledged to that purpose the saying of Austine, affirming, that Amen o Auguſt. de Temp. ser. 182. in these petitions signifieth, that that which is craved of the Lord, is undoubtedly graunted, if wee stedfastly hold fast the covenant of our last condition or creation, which is our faith in Christ Iesus. Amien in his petitionibus significat indubitanter a Domino conferri quod petitur, si vltima conditionis pactum firmiter teneatur.

writing of these things, neither would he haue conceiued that he had begged the thing in question, but rather proued it, vlesse hee will say, that there can bee forgiuennesse of sinnes without the satisfaction and merit of Christ, which what is it to vs, but by being particularly applied vnto vs, and accepted to our vse? As for our righteous man, as he calleth him, he hath no warrant to omit to pray for the forgiuennesse of his sinnes, because he is no otherwise taught to beleue it, but as he praieth for it. But in praying for it, he hath assurance from Christ to beleue the obtaining of it, who saith, What soeuer ye desire when ye pray, beleue that ye shall haue it, and it shall be done vnto you. Of this sufficient hath bene said before in the question of the Certaintie of Saluation, and I list not here to follow him in an idle and impertinent vagarie. Onely I maruell that his head should goe so farre awry, as to apply to vs the example of the Pharisee, being so farre different from vs. For the Pharisee was outright a Papist, auouching inherent iustice, and presuming thereof in himselfe, although by the gift of God euen as the Papists doe. Nay, Maister Bishops righteous man goeth beyond the Pharisee, saying, I thanke thee, O God, that I am iust before thee, cleane and whiter then snow, no more sinne left in me then was in Adam in the state of innocency, and therefore worthy of thy kingdome and of the ioyes of heauen, not needing greatly to feare the rigorous sentence of a iust iudge; and if I do not certainly know it, yet I hope that I am so; and not like these Protestants, whose righteous man is like vnto sepulchers whited on the outside with an imputed iustice, but within full of iniquity and disorder. Let him heere take knowledge of his descriptiõ of their righteous man out of his own words, & thereby know himselfe to be some degrees abouethe absurdity of the Pharisee. But the righteous man whom we teach, is such, as the auncient Fathers many times describe out of the words of Solomon, as they did reade them: The iust man in the beginning of his speech, is an accuser of himselfe. When hee cometh into the presence of God, he beginneth his speech with acknowledging his owne vnworthinesse & sinne. His righteousness he knoweth to be such, as leaueth him still to say with David, Enter not into iudgment with thy seruãt, O Lord; for in thy sight no mā liuing shal be found righteous. He falleth seuen times a day, and daily praieth for forgiuennesse, and so continueth till God manifest the effect of his praier, being well

p Mar. 1. 24.

q Sect. 5. & 18.

r Cha. 2. sect. 10.

f Cha. 4. sect. 2.

t Ibid. sect. 4.

u Cha. 3. sect. 3.

& 14

x Cha. 4. sect. 2.

y Prou. 18. 17.

Fustus in principio sermonis accusator est sui. Hieron. cont. Pel. lib. 1.

z Psal. 143. 2.

a Prou. 24. 16.

Uu' 24.

well assured in the meane time vpon the promise of God, that God heareth him, and will make it appeare that he hath not praied in vain. But to let this go, M. Bishop taketh it for an aduantage to him, that M. Perkins cōfesseth, that the Church of Rome acknowledgeth a knowledge reuealed in the word touching the meanes of saluation. But what doth it aduantage him, that the Church of Rome hath that which the diuels haue? They know that the means of saluation is by Christ crucified, dying, rising again from the dead, by faith, by the sacramēts, but they haue not the vse of this knowledge, wherein consisteth the life therof. No more hath the Church of Rome, which professing generally the meanes of saluation to bee in the crosse, & death, & resurrection of Christ, in faith, and in the sacraments, doth in the special vse & application therof, wholly overthrow all, frustrateth the crosse, & death, & resurrection of Christ, peruerteth the faith, corrupteth the sacraments, blendeth & mingleteth the Gospel with her own traditions, deuileth other meanes of saluation, & wickedly maketh the people to trust therein. Now if it follow that we erre miserably, as he saith, because they do thus know the means of saluation reuealed in the word, it must follow that they also erre miserably, because all other heretiks know the means of saluation in that sort as wel as they. And indeed they do erre miserably, who go from the word, as touching the vse and effect of that means of saluation which they learn from thence, and cōrrary to the word, tie the same to other supplemēts, which they theselues haue borrowed of human deuce. Now the firme hope and great cōfidence, wherof he answereth to the 2. point mentioned by M. Perkins, is a meere collusion. He maketh it firme on Gods behalf, but on our side most infirm & vncertain, because by his rules a man cānot tell whether he haue any true repentance, or faith, or hope, or charity, or any thing else wherupon his hope should stād, which he stil hāgeth vpon mans worthines & disposition of himself, & leaueth it in the power & choice of his own free wil. But true faith beleeueth ^b the promise of God to be firme and sure, not vpon our merits, but vpon his own mercy, & accordingly embraceth the same, not with an vncertain cōditiō if we do this or that, but with full assurance that God^c according to his promise wil keep vs in his feare, to do that which we ought to do, & when by frailty we fall, will in mercy looke vpon vs as he did vpon ^d Peter, & wil cause vs to rise

^b Aug. in P^{sa}.
88. Non secundum
merita nostra, sed
secundum misericordiam firmiter est promissum
^c Ierem. 32. 40.
^d Luk. 22. 61.

e 1. Ioh. 5. 11.
 f Ambrosi. de sa-
 cram. lib. 5. cap. 4.
 Presume non de
 operatione tua, sed de Christi gratia. Bona presumpcio.
 g August. de
 verb. Dom. ser. 7.
 Gratia mea ple-
 nis es, quia nō de virtute tua, sed
 de gratia mea
 presumpstisti.
 h Hieron. in Mat.
 ca. 12. Qui manifeste intelligens opera Dei, cum ac virtute negare
 non possit, eadem
 stimulat inui-
 dia calumniatur, & Christum, Dei-que verbum, &
 opera Sp. sancti
 dicet esse Beelze-
 bub: isti non di-
 mittentur neque in presenti seculo,
 nec in futuro.

againc. And this hope and assurance God offereth vnto vs, euen from our first conuersion for Christs sake, and thenceforth we accordingly expect euclasting life, not for our owne sakes, but in Christ, by vertue of his righteoufnes, obedience, and merit, and of the purchase that he hath made in our behalfe. Neither is this any vnlawful presumption, but a good presumption, as S. Ambrose spea- keth, and that because, as S. Austine saith, wee presume not vpon our owne vertue or power, but vpon the grace of God. As for his charging of vs in respect heereof with sinne against the holy Ghost, it is but a scape of his ignorance, who as it seemeth, vnderstandeth not what is meant thereby. What his schoolemen haue written therof, it is nothing to vs, but let him learne by Hierome how to vnderstand it out of the text it selfe. He, saith hee, who vnderstanding mani- festly the workes of God, when he cannot gaine say as touching the power, doth yet of enuie calumniate the same, and affirmeth Christ, and the word of God, and the workes of the holy Ghost to be of the diuell, to him it shall not be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. This is a dreadfull sinne, and let M. Bishop take heede, the light of God so cleerely shining as that it cannot but dazle his eies, that he doe not intangle himselfe in the guilt thereof, by wilfull opo- sition against the truth.

17. W. BISHOP.

Master Perkins third reason is drawne from the consent of the an- cient Church, of which for fashion sake to make some shew, hee often speaketh, but can seldome finde any one sentence in them that fits his purpose, as you may see in this sentence of Saint Augustine, cited by him. Augustine saith, I demand now, doest thou belecue in Christ, O sinner? thou saiest, I belecue: what, beleueest thou that all thy sinnes may freely be pardoned by him? thou hast that which thou beleueest. See, here is neither applying of Christs righteoufnes vnto vs by faith, nor so much as beleueing our sins to be pardoned through him, but that they may be pardoned by him. So there is not one word for M. Perkins. But S. Bernard saith plainly, that we must beleue that our sins are pardoned vs. But he addeth not by the imputed righteoufnes of Christ. Againc, he addeth conditions on our party, which M. Perkins craftily consealeth. For Saint Bernard grameth, that we may beleue

De verbis Domini. ser. 7.

What manner of faith it is whereby we are justified. 447

our finnes to be forgiven, if the truth of our conversion meete with the mercy of God preventing us, for in the same place he hath these words: So therefore shall his mercy dwell in our earth, that is the grace of God in our soules, if mercy and truth meet together, if iustice and peace embrace and kisse each other. Which is as S. Bernard there expoundeth it, if we stirred up by the grace of God, do truly bewaile our sins and confesse them, and afterward follow holinesse of life and peace. All which M Perkins did wisely cut off, because it dashed cleane the vaine glosse of the former words.

His last authority is out of S. Cyprian, who exhorteth men, passing out of this life, not to doubt of Gods promises, but to beleue that we shall come to Christ with ioyfull security.

Answer, S. Cyprian encourageth good Christians dying to haue a full confidence in the promises of Christ, and so do all Catholikes, and bid thē be secure too on that side, that Christ will neuer faile of his word & promise, but say that the cause of feare lies on our owne infirmities: And yet bids them not to doubt, as though they were as likely to bee condemned as saued, but animates them, and puts them in the good way of hope, by twenty kinds of reason.

R. ABBOT.

The drift of Saint Austine in the place alledged, is to shew, that we are ^a to presume of God onely, not of our selues, and to attribute all that we are (towards him) wholly to his grace. If thou presume of thine owne worke, then is it a wages paid, not a grace giuen vnto thee. But if it be grace, then it is freely giuen. Hereupō follow the words alledged: b I demaund now, O sinner, dost thou beleue Christ? Thou saiest, I beleue. What dost thou beleue? That all thy finnes may be pardoned freely by him? By which words he would import, that the sinner is to beleue, that in Christ onely there is enough to yeeld him forgiveness of finnes, and therefore that hee is to presume onely vpon him. Which if he do, Saint Austine telleth him, Thou hast that which thou beleuest, and addeth, O grace freely giuen. Now M. Bishop should here haue told vs, what it is that S. Austine telleth the beleuing sinner that he hath: what that grace is that he saith is here freely giuen vnto him. For if it be forgiveness of sins, as indeed it is, then the words import, that the sinner beleuing in Christ for the

^a Aug. de verb. Dom. ser. 7. Elegit de me presumetes, non de se
^b Totū gratiæ solum per reputa. Si de tuo opere presumis ergo merces tibi reiditur, non gratia condonatur. Si autē gratia est, gratis datur.
^c Interrogauit, Credo, o peccator, Christe? Dico, Credo Quā credi? Gratia uanueris peccata tibi propter ipsum potē remitti? Hic loquitur quid credis? O gratia gratis datur.

forgiuenesse of finnes, and relying wholly vpon him, alluredly hath that for which he beleeueth, and therefore is not to doubt thereof. And herein he alludeth to that in the Gospell, where Christ asketh the blind men; Beleue ye that I am able to doe this, to draw frō the, whether they did attribute so much to him, as to expect so great a benefit from him. When therefore they answered, Yea, Lord, be touched their eies, saying; According to your faith so be it vmo you. So with S. Austine the word may serueth to challenge a sufficiency to Iesus Christ, and to exclude other meanes of forgiuenesse of finnes, not to question the beleefe of the forgiuenesse thereof, which hee so resolutely affirmeth to him that beleueth, and can be no otherwise but by the applying of the righteousnesse, the merit, the satisfaction of Christ, because we cannot beleue it but onely thereby. The place of Bernard is very impudētly shifted off. First, by altering the question, which is not here, by what wee beleue our sins to be forgiuen, but whether it be the property of a iustifying faith, to beleue particularly the forgiuenes of a mans own finnes. Now S. Bernard saith, that d for a man to beleue that he cannot haue forgiuenesse of finnes, but by Gods pardon, is but the beginning & foundation of faith. Therefore, saith he, if thou beleue that thy finnes cannot be done away but by him to whom onely thou hast sinned, thou doest well; e but go further yet, to beleue that by him thy sins are forgiuen thee. This is, saith he, the testimony that the hly Ghost giueth in our heart, saying, Thy finnes are forgiuen thee. For thus doth the Apostle suppose that a man is iustified freely by faith. Of imputed righteousnesse enough hath bene said before: the point here is of particular faith, whether a mā beleue his owne finnes to be forgiuen him. S. Bernard saith yea, and saith it so plainly, as that M Bishop could not tell for his life what directly to answer to it. But forsooth S. Bernard addeth conditions on our party, saith he, which M Petkins craftily concealeth, and here he bringeth words following a mile after, where S. Bernard hath broken off the point formerly in hand, which was to set forth the condition of a true iustifying & sauing faith. And what I pray are the conditions that he addeth? Forsooth truth of conuersion, bewailing of our finnes and confessing them, and afterwards following holines and peace. Where we see a glosing scophant, which will make the simple Reader beleue, that he giueth an answer when indeede he giueth none. For when we teach the beleefe of the forgiuenesse

c Mat. 9. 28.

d Bernard in Annunciat. ser. 3. In-tium quoddam &
velut fundamen-
tum fidei.

e Sed adde adhuc
ut & hoc credas
quia per ipsum ti-
bi peccata donatur Hoc est testimo-
nium quod perhi-
bet in corde nostro
Sp. sanctus, dicens Dimittuntur tibi peccata tua. Sic enim arbitratur Apostolus gratis
iustificari hominē
per fidem.

of sinnes, do we teach a man vnconuerted to belecue the same? The penitent sinner confessing and bewailing his sinnes to God, and carefull as hauing felt the sting of sinne, thenceforth to auoid the same is the proper and onely true subiect of this dilputation of iustification by faith. We denie that faith hath place in any other man, and therefore denie that any other can haue the true beleefe of the forgiuenesse of his sinnes. Of the conuerted man then, of him that truely repenteth and forsaketh his sinnes, S. Bernard saith, and we say, that the faith whereby he is iustified, is a faith whereby he particularly beleeueth the forgiuenesse of his owne sinnes. What is M. Bishop now but a wrangling Sophister, that thus in a mist of idle discourse, seeketh to steale away, wherein deede he is so fast holden that he cannot vntie himselfe? In like sort he dealeth with the other place of Cyprian, who encouraging faithfull Christians against the terrour and feare of death, saith; God hath promised immortality vnto thee, when thou departest out of this world, and dost thou wauer and doubt thereof? This is not to know God, this is by the sinne of unbeliefe, to offend Christ the maister of beleeuers; this is for a man being in the Church, to be without faith in the house of faith. The words are manifest. Hee propoundeth the promise of God particularly: requireth the same accordingly to be beleued; not to beleue it so, he affirmeth is to be without faith in the house of faith. God promiseth to thee, and dost thou doubt? this is not to haue faith. Cyprian then teacheth such a confidence in the promises of Christ, as is to bee without all wauering or doubt. Yea saith M. Bishop, we are secure on Christes side, that he will neuer faile of his word and promise, but the cause of feare lies vpon our owne infirmities. Thus he is like the mother that strangleth her child so soone as she hath brought it forth. He setteth vp confidence with one hand, and throweth it downe with another; nay, he setteth it vp with one hand, and throweth it downe with both. What is it to vs, that Christ is true of his word, if we may not beleue that his word doth appertaine to vs? what confidence can it yeeld, that Christ faileth not of his promise, so long as wee must feare lest our infirmities disable vs of hauing any part therein? And would Cyprian talke so idly, to bid men not wauer or doubt, when they might answer they had cause to feare and doubt, by reason of their owne infirmities? Would he bid men not doubt to go out of the world, because of Cyprian. de Mortal. Deus tibi de hoc mundo recidens immortalitatem pollicetur. & tu dubitas & fluctuas? Hoc est. De hominibus non posse: hoc est. Christum credentium magistrum peccato incredulitatis offendere: hoc est. in ecclesia consistit: ut uisum fides in domo fides non habere.

the promise of God, when their owne infirmities might be a sufficient cause to make them feare their departure out of this world? But Cyprian knew well that wee can haue nothing but feare from our selues, and therefore teacheth vs to build our selues wholly vpon the promise of God, that howsoeuer our owne infirmities do offer vs occasion of distrust, yet resting vpon the truth of God, we beleue with Abraham^s under hope against hope, that God will performe what he hath spoken, for his owne sake, as he saith by the Prophet, ^h*Not for your sakes, but for my holy names sake I will doe it, saith the Lord.* Yea, but wee bidde them not doubt, saith Master Bishop, as if they were as likely to be condemned as saued. But how so, when they see and know in themselues that for which they may be condemned, and cannot know any thing whereupon they may rest the hope of saluation? For you say, Master Bishop, that a man cannot tell whether hee haue repentance, hope, charitie, praier, whether he be iustified, and in the state of grace or not, and therefore how should he but thinke himselfe more likely to bee condemned then otherwise? You say you animate them, and put them in the good way of hope, by twenty kinds of reasons. But how can you put them in hope when you teach them to feare? That one reason whereby you impose feare, carrieth more sway in the conscience, then all those twenty kindes of reasons, whereby you persuade hope. And when you teach that a man cannot tell whether he haue any hope or not, what can there rest but horrour and despaire, at leastwise anguish, perplexitie, trembling and feare, saue only in consciences that are benumbed and astonished, and haue no feeling of themselues? In a word, in death there can bee no hope, but setting aside the respect of our selues, to depend vpon the promise of God, and to say with Hilary out of the Psalme, Our hope is in the mercy of God for ever and euer.

g Rom. 4. 18.

h Ezech. 36. 22.

h Hilary in Psal.
31. Spes nostra
in misericordia
Domini in seculum
& in seculum
seculi.

18. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins hauing thus confirmed his owne partie, why doth he not after his manner confute those reasons which the Catholikes alleage in fauour of their assertion? Was it because they are not wont to produce any in this matter? Nothing lesse: It was then belike, because he knew not how to answer them. I will out of their store take that one principall

What manner of faith it is whereby we are iustified. 45-1 pass one, of the testimonie of holy Scripture, and by that alone sufficiently prooue, that the faith required to Iustification, is that Catho'ike faith, whereby we beleene all that to be true, which by God is revealed, and not any other particular beleeuing Christs Righteousnesse to be ours. How can this be better knowne, then if we see, weigh, and consider well, what kinde of faith that was which all they had, who are said in Scriptures to be iustified by their faith.

S. Paul saith of Noe, That he was instituted heire of the iustice, which is, by faith. What faith had hee? That by Christs Righteousnesse he was assured of Saluacion? No such matter, but beleened, that God according to his word and iustice, would drowne the world, and made an Arke to save himselfe and his familie, as God commanded him. Heb. 11.7.

Abraham the Father of beleeuers, and the paterne and example of iustice by faith, as the Apostle disputeth to the Romans: What faith he was iustified by, let S. Paul declare, who of him and his faith hath these words: Hee contrarie to hope beleueth in hope, that hee might be made the Father of many Nations, according to that which was said vnto him; So shall thy seede bee as the starres of heauen, and the sands of the sea: and he was not weakned in faith, neither did he consider his owne bodie, now quite dead, whereas hee was almost an hundred yeeres old; nor the dead Matrice of Sara, in the promise of God he staggered not by distrust, but was strengthened in faith, giuing glory to God, most fully knowing, that whatsoeuer hee promised, he was able also to doe, therefore was it reputed to him: to iustice. Loe, because he glorified God in beleeuing, that old and barren persons might haue children if God said the word, and that whatsoeuer God promised, he was able to performe, hee was iustified. The Centurions faith was very pleasing vnto our Saviour, who said in commendation of it, That he had not found so great faith in Israel. What faith was that? Marrie, that hee could with a word cure his seruant absent: Say the word only (quoth he) and my seruant shall be healed. Rom. cap. 4.

S. Peters faith so much magnified by the ancient Fathers, and highly rewarded by our Saviour, was it any other, Then that our Saviour was Christ, the Sonne of the liuing God? And briefly let S. John that great Secretarie of the holy Ghost, tell vs what faith is the small end of the whole Gospell. These things (saith hee) are written that Math. 8.

that

that you may belecue that Iesus is Christ the Sonne of God, and that beleeuing you may haue life in his name With the Euangelist the Apostle S. Paul accordeth very well, saying, This is the word of faith which wee preach, for if thou confesse with thy mouth our Lord Iesus Christ, and shalt belecue in thy heart that God raised him from death, thou shalt be saued. And in another place: I make knowne vnto you the Gospell, which I haue preached, and by which you shall be saued, vnlesse perhaps you haue beleueed in vaine. What was that Gospell? I haue deliuered vnto you that which I haue receiued, that Christ died for our sinnes, according to the Scriptures, was buried, and rose againe the third day, &c. So by the verdue of S. Paul, the beleefe of the articles of the Creed, is that iustifying faith, by which you must be saued. And neither in Saint Paul, nor any other place of holy Scriptures, is it once taught, that a particular faith, whereby we apply Christs Righteousnesse to our selues, and assure our selues of our saluation, is eueher a iustifying, or any Christian mans faith, but the very naturall act of that vgly Monster, presumption: which being laid as the very corner stone of the Protestants irreligion, what morall and modest conuersation, what humility and deuotion can they build vpon it?

R. ABBOT.

What the reason was why M. Perkins here propounded no objections of the Papists, M. Bishop might haue conceiued, because hee had ^a before noted and confuted the best that are alledged by them. If he had not so done, yet it should not be likely that hee had therefore omitted them, because hee knew not how to answer them, because this which M. Bishop bringeth for their principall reason, is but a very weake and simple reason. The thing that he would proue therby, is, that iustifying faith is that Catholike faith, as he calleth it, whereby we beleuee all that to be true which God hath reuealed. Hee abuseth the name of Catholike faith, whereby hath been wont to be imported the true and sound doctrine of the Catholike Church, comprised in bookes, taught in Pulpits and schooles, professed by the mouth, which a man may preach to others, and himselve bee void of iustifying faith. Thus Vigilius faith, hauing discoursed of some points of doctrine, ^b This is the Catholike

Rom. 10.

I. Cor. 15.

a Chap. 3. Of the Certainty of saluation.

b Vigil. cont.
Euseb. lib. 1.
Hec est fides &
pr. fessio Catholi-
ca, quam Apo-
sto's tradiderunt, Martyres roborau-
erunt, & fideles
tricusque custodierunt.

Catholike faith and profession which the Apostles deliuered, the Martyrs haue confirmed and the faithfull keepe vntill this day. Iustifying faith is the priuate act of the heart and conscience of the man that is iustified, which though it be grounded and built vpon it, yet cannot but absurdly bee termed the Catholike faith. But M. Bishop perhaps by Catholike faith meaneth that iustifying faith, whereby he and his fellow Catholikes must hope to bee iustified. By which meanes he hath matched the diuel with himselfe and his Catholikes, and hath made him a Catholike. For if it bee the only faith of a Catholike to belecue all that to bee true which God hath reuealed, what hindereth the diuell to bee a Catholike, seeing he beleeueth, and to his greefe well knoweth, that all is true that is reuealed by God? This is that which we rightly call historicall faith, the obiekt whereof is the word of God in generall, and it is no more but credere Deo, to beleue God in that which hee speaketh, which is incident to diuels and damned men. This historicall faith is presupposed and included in iustifying faith, but the proper obiekt of iustifying faith is God in Christ, reconciling the world vnto himselfe; or the promise of Gods mercy to vs in Christ Iesus, whereby we doe not only beleue the promise in generall to be true, but do trust in God, and expect good at his hands, according to that promise for Christs sake. This faith therefore is called the faith of Christ, that is whereby wee beleue in Christ, and is further exprest to be faith in his name, faith in his blood. Of which S. Austin saith; The faith of Christ is to beleue in him that iustifieth the vngodly; to beleue in the Mediator, without whose meanes we are not reconciled vnto God; to beleue in the Saviour, which came to seeke and to saue that which is lost; to beleue in him that saith, without me ye can do nothing. This is the faith whereby wee are saued, and whereby all the faithfull haue been saued from the beginning of the world. To which purpose S. Austin againe saith. The same faith saued the righteous of old that now saueh vs, that is, the faith of the man Iesus Christ the Mediator betwixt God & men, the faith of his blood, the faith of his crosse, the faith of his death and resurrection. Thus by faith Abel in his lambe beheld; the lambe of God that taketh away the sinnes of the world, and thereby his sacrifice was accepted, and in that respect is Christ called the lambe that was slaine from the beginning of the world. But here M. Bishop

c 2. Cor. 5. 19.
d Rom. 7. 21.
Phil. 3. 9.
e Ad 3. 16.
f Rom. 3. 25.
g Aug. in Ioan. tract. 15 Fides Christi est credere in eum qui iustificat impium: credere in meliore rem sine quo interpositio non reconciliatur Deo: credere in saluato rem qui venit querere a que saluare. &c. h Aug. de nat. & grat. cap. 44. Ea fides iustos sanauit antiquus que sanat et nos id est, med a: ore Dei & hominum bonum Iesu Christi, fides sequens eius, fides in eu eius fides mentis & resurrectionis eius. i 1. Ioh. 1. 29.
k Apoc. 13. 8.

1 Heb. 11. 7.

vndertaketh to tell vs, and therefore let vs heare of him according to the depth of his diuinity, what kind of faith that was which all they had who are said in Scriptures to be iustified by their faith. And first he beginneth with Noe, of whom it is sayd, that he was made heire of the righteousnesse which is by faith. But what faith was that? Hee beleeued, saith hee, that God according to his word and iustice would drowne the world, and made an Arke to saue himselfe and his familie, as God commanded him. And what? in the drowning of the world and making of an arke to saue himselfe, did Noe consider nothing but the drowning of the world and the making of an arke to saue himselfe? S. Austin calleth the Arke, ^m the Sacrament of the Arke, and in a sacrament or mysteric did the faith of Noe see no more but onely what his eyes did see? ^a In sacraments, as Chrysostome saith, we do not see that which we beleene, but we see one thing and beleene another. Noe then in the Arke did beleene that which he did not see, which what it was, S. Peter giueth vs to vnderstand, when he maketh our baptisme the thing that ^o answereth the type and figure of the Arke, which, saith he, saueth vs by the resurrection of Iesus Christ. The Arke then was to him a figure and seale of the same, whereof Baptisme is a figure and seale to vs; ^p a seale of the righteousnesse of faith, of ^q the righteousnesse of God by the faith of Iesus Christ, to all and upon all that doe beleene. His deliuerance temporally was a figure of that spirituall saluation, which both he and we haue by the washing away and forgiuenesse of our finnes, by the blood, and death, and resurrection of Iesus Christ, and in the beleefe hereof was it that he was made heire of the righteousnesse of faith. In the second place Abraham is brought forth, whose faith M. Bishop constructeth to be no more but this, that he beleeued that old and barren persons might haue children if God sayd the word, and that whatsoever God promised he was able to performe. Where if he had looked into the Apostles words with the eyes of a doctor of diuinity, hee would haue found the seed there spoken of to be Christ, as the same Apostle elsewhere expoundeth it, Christ in person as the head, and all the faithfull gathered as members into one bodie with him, ^r the head and the bodie making one whole Christ, as S. Austin speaketh. God promised vnto Abraham a seed, wherein ^s all the nations of the earth should bee blessed. Herein God would make him ^t the heire of the world, and ^u a father of many nations,

m Aug. cont.

Fault. Manich. lib.
19. cap. 12. Sacra-mentum arce. e in qua Noe domus
a di. suo liberata
est.

n Chrysost. in 1.
Cor. hom. 7. Mysterium appellatur
quoniam non id quod credimus inuenimus, sed quod
alibi videmus, alibi
credimus.

o 1. Pet. 3. 21.

p Rom. 4. 11.

q Cap. 3. 22.

r Gal. 3. 16.

s Aug. in Psal.
53. Totus Christus
caput & corpus, & post. Christus est totum corpus Christi.

t Genes. 15. 2.

u Rom. 4. 13.

x Ver. 16. 17.

sions, not to that seed only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, that we may know that a spirituall seed is heere to be vnderstood, which should become the children of Abraham, by walking in the steps of the faith of our father Abraham, and so should be made partakers of the blessing with him. The performance of all this promise of blessing to Abraham and all the nations of the earth, stood vpon his hauing of a son, which God had promised vnto him. The barrenesse of Sara, and the old age both of Abraham and her, might seeme to deny al hope of hauing a son: but yet Abraham rested secure in the affiance of the power of God, not doubting but that God was able, and would giue him a son of whom Christ should come, to bee vnto him that blessing that God had promised. This was the thing that Abrahams faith respected, and to which the Apostle referreth it, speaking of a promise that was to be sure, not to Abraham only, but to all the seede both of beleeuing Iewes and Gentiles; who are also called heires of the promise, to the performance whereof, to shew vnto them the stablenesse of his counsell, God bound himselfe by an oath, that by two immutable things, wherein it was vnpossible that God should lie, (his promise and his oath) we might haue strong consolation, which haue our refuge to hold fast the hope that is set before vs. Of what? that old and barren persons may haue children if God say the word? O base and abie& conceit of so diuine and heavenly a matter! Nay but of the blessing, which as the Apostle noteth before, God did sweare vnto Abraham, and vnto that seede which hee would multiplie vnto him, by faith to bee blessed together with him. Thirdly, he allegeth the faith of the Centurion, of which our Sauiour testifieth, that he had not found so great faith in Israel. And what was that faith? Marris, saith hee, that he could with a word cure his seruant absent. Say the word only, quoth he, & my seruant shall be healed. But did he onely beleue that by saying the word Christ could cure his seruant? Surely he beleued somewhat else that made him to beleue that: he beleued somewhat else that made him to say, Lord I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter vnder my rooffe. He would not thus haue said with so great faith and humilitie, saith S. Austin, but that he did already beare Christ in his heart. Wee doubt not but he had conceiued of Christ that he was the Son of God, the Sauiour of the world, and with this faith came vnto him.

^y Ver. 12.

^z Ver. 16.

^a Heb. 6. 17.

^b Mat. 8. 10.

^c Aug. de verb. Dom. ser. 6. Nequa hec doceret cum tant a fide & humilitate nisi iam illum quem timebat intrare domū suam, corde gesta- rit.

The

The profession of his faith is here mentioned according to the present occasion. It followeth not, that because the act of faith is no further expressed here, therefore there was nothing further in his faith for his justification towards God. Yea we hope M. Bishop will not say, that he could be justified without beleeuing the remission of sinnes by the bloud of Iesus Christ, which yet is not expressed here; and therefore what doth he but absurdly and childishly to bring vs this example to shew what is meant by justifying faith? In the other places as touching beleeuing that ° Iesus is Christ the Sonne of God, the question is, what is meant by beleeuing that Iesus is Christ. If no more but an act of vnderstanding barely to assent vnto it, then the diuels professe as much, ° O Iesus of Nazaret, I know thee who thou art; euen the holy one of God. But that we may not make that beleefe a matter common to the diuell, wee must vnderstand it to be a compounded action, not of the vnderstanding onely, but of the heart, of the will and affections, as appeareth by the third place which to this purpose he citeth; ° If thou confessest with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, and beleeuest with thy hart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; for with the heart man beleueth vnto righteousnesse, &c. So to the Eunuch desiring to be baptized, Philip saith, ° If thou beleeuest with all thine heart, thou maiest. I beleue, saith hee, that Iesus Christ is the Sonne of God. Beleefe therefore in these speeches, importeth such a beleefe, as whereby Christ is to our heart that which we beleue him to be; whereby we beleue to our owne vse and comfort, that which we beleue. It is such a faith as desireth, seeketh, embraceth, holdeth, ioyeth in that which it beleueth, because therein it seeth and apprehendeth peace; whereby we so beleue that Iesus is Christ, as that according to that we beleue him to be, we beleue in him, and put our trust and confidence in him. This is implied in the words that Iesus is Christ, that is, the promised Messias and Saviour, in whom is promised vnto vs, and in whom we looke to finde blessing, peace, immortality and euerlasting life. Notably to this purpose Saint Austin saith; ° This is to beleue in Christ, euen to loue Christ, not as the diuels beleued and loued not, and therefore albeit they beleued yet said, What haue we to doe with thee, thou Sonne of God? But let vs so beleue, as that we beleue in him losing him, and let vs not say, What haue we to doe with thee, but rather let vs say, We belong

d Mat. 16. 16.
Iohn 20. 31.

c Mar. 1. 24.

f Rom. 10. 9.
g Act. 8. 37.
h Aug. in Psal.
130. Hoc est credere in Christum diligere Christum, non quomodo demones credebant, sed non diligebant Christum, & ideo quararis crederet, dicebant, Quid nobis & tibi est, fili Dei? Nos autem sic credamus ut in ipsum credamus, diligentes eum & non dicamus, Quid nobis & tibi est, sed potius dicamus, Ad te peruenimus, & redemisti nos. Omnes qui sic credunt tanquam lapides sunt viuis de quibus templum Dei edificatum est, & tanquam ligna impunita a quibus arca illa composita est que in diluuium mergi non potuit.

belong to thee, thou hast redeemed vs. All that thou beleue, are as lively stones of which the temple of God is builded, and as those neuer putrifying planks, and timber, whereof the Arke was compacted that could not be drowned in the flood. Such a faith must M. Bishop confesse to be ment in the places by him alledged, that with Austin he may make a difference betwixt the faith of true Christians and the faith of diuels. By this the answer is plaine in the last place, which mentioneth only the subiect and matter of the Gospell, but of the manner of beleeuing expresseth nothing. Only in that it is said that Christ died for our sinnes, there is implied a particular application of that which by the Gospell we beleue, as where the same Apostle saith; He was deliuered (to death) for our sinnes, and rose againe for our iustification, which we cannot bee said truly to beleue, vnlesse we beleue our selues to be redeemed and iustified from our sinnes by the death and resurrection of Iesus Christ. Now then wee deny not, but that the beleete expressed in the articles of the Creed, is that iustifying faith by which we must be saued, yet not according to that historicall meaning which M. Bishop maketh of them, but according to that true meaning of beleeuing in God, which the Scripture teacheth, whereby a man can truly say, I beleene in God, which M. Bishop cannot tell whether he can say or not, and therefore we are sure that hee cannot say. But though he cannot say it, yet let him not repine at vs that can; and if he list not to haue any part in that faith, whereby hee should apply to himselfe the righteousnesse and merit of Christ, to the assurance of the forgiuenesse of sinnes and euerlasting life, let him leaue it vnto vs, and wee will ioy therein, and make it indeed the corner stone of our religion, because thereby Iesus Christ is our foundation and corner stone, of whom we presume all things towards God, who can presume nothing of our selues. But at his conclusion of this point I could not but smile, where mentioning this faith layed as the corner stone of our religion (which the sycophant, as the Popes parrot to speake what he teacheth him, termeth irreligion) he inferreth, this being so what morall or modest conuersation, what humility and deuotion can they build upon it? It made me call to minde the morall and modest conuersation of their Popes, the humility and deuotion of the most of their Cardinals and Bishops, the sweet and cleanly life of their Votaries, both religious and secular, and by them to consider what what good fruits M. Bishops faith hath brought forth amongst them. It made mee remember a storie that I haue heard out of Boccace of a conuerted Iew, of whom hee that conuerted him would by no meanes heare that he should goe to Rome, fearing that the sight of the behauiour that he should see there, would make him renounce Christianity againe. It made mee thinke of the nobles of the Sultan of Babylon, who seeing enormous behauiours so to abound at Rome, refused to become Christians, saying, ^k How can water both sweet and salt flow out of one fountaine? Where Christians are bound to draw at the fountaine of Iustice, there they find a poysoned brooke. It made me call to mind the good vsage and behauiour of the Spaniards in the west Indies, where by their extreme villanies and cruelties they haue made the name of Christian religion to stink amongst those poor and vnbeleeuing soules. It made me consider the humility, and deuotion, and great vertue that the Iesuites and Seculars bewrayed the one of the other, in the late contentions that were amongst them. It put me in mind of the morall & modest conuersation of Weston the Iesuite and his fellowes, in hunting the diuell in Sara Williams, and many pretty trickes about that matter. Surely M. Bishop if the faith and religion which we professe, did bring forth such ugly monsters as your Popes haue bene, or did nourish such execrable villanies & filtheries as are practised amongst you, we might iustly grow suspicious of it. But thanks bee to God, that though our fruits be not such as they ought to be, yet the face and state of our Church and common welth is such, as that we may boldly tell you, that it is not for a harlot to compare with an honest matrone, not for you to make comparison betwixt vs and you.

19. W. BISHOP.

The second difference in the manner of iustification, is about the formal act of faith, which M. Perkins handleth as it were by the way, cuttedly. I will be as short as he, the matter not being great. The Catholikes teach, as you haue heard out of the Councell of Trent, in the beginning of this question, that many acts of faith, seare, hope, and charity doe go before our iustification, preparing our soule to receiue into it from God through Christ that great grace.

M.Per-

^k Mat. Paris in Henrico. 2. Quia
Romae tot scatur-
runt enormita-
tes dicebāt: Quo-
modo ex vno fonte
aqua dulcis et salsa poterit ema-
nare? Vbi Christiani fonte iustitiae
haurire tenentur, inueniunt laticem toxicatum.

M. Perkins Doctour like resolues otherwise, That faith is an instrument, created by God in the heart of man, at his conuersion, whereby he apprehendeth and receiueth Christs righteousnesse, for his iustification.

This ioyly description is set downe without any other probation, then his owne authoritie that deliuered it: and so, let it passe as already sufficientely confuted. And if there needed any other disprooffe of it, I might gather one more out of his owne explication of it, where he saith, that the couenant of grace is communicated vnto vs, by the word of God, and by the Sacraments. For if faith created in our hearts, be the onely sufficient supernaturall instrument, to apprehend that couenant of grace, then there needs no Sacraments for that purpose, and consequently I would faine know by the way, how little infants, that cannot for want of iudgment and discretion haue any such act of faith, as to lay hold on Christ his iustice, are iustified? Must we without any warrant in Gods word contrarie to all experience beleue that they haue this act of faith, before they come to any understanding?

R. ABBOT.

By those acts of faith, feare, hope, charitie going before iustification, the Councell of Trent doth expressly consort it selfe with Pelagius the heretike. This faith, feare, hope, charitie, we must know not to be the effects or workes of any infused grace, which before iustification is none, but they are the proper acts of mans free will, onely assisted by some externall or outward grace, as they by collusion call it, which as I haue shewed before in the question of Free will, Pelagius the heretike affirmed and graunted as well as they. But hereby they directly crosse the rule of S. Austin, that good workes follow in a man being iustified, but they go not before iustification. He saith they do not go before, they say they do go before, onely they are not properly meritorious. Meritorious they are also in some sort, but not properly meritorious ex condigno, as the new faith, hope, and charitie are in the iustified man. Let the Reader well obserue, that there is one faith, hope and charitie before iustification; another faith, hope and charitie infused when a man is iustified. But of that wee shall heare more anon. Heare the speciall matter is as touching M. Perkins his description of faith to be an instrument supernaturall.

a Sect. 5.

b August. de fide & oper. cap. 14. Sequuntur iustificationum non procedunt iustificationum.
c Bellarmin. de iustific. lib. 1 ca. 17. Prius sua quodam modo in se ut remissione peccatorum.

pernatural created by God in the heart of man at his conversion whereby he apprehendeth and receiveth Christs righteousnesse for his iustification. This M. Bishop saith, is set downe without anie prooffe, and is alreadye sufficiently confuted: but where? Surely we haue seene much for prooffe on M. Perkins side, but M. Bishops confutation yet we haue not seene. Yea where M. Perkins did notably demonstrate this act of faith out of the Gospell, M. Bishop passed it ouer without anie further answer but onely to say, He might be asbamed to use this discourse to vs, who admit no part of it to be true, in which sort he might easily answer any thing that he list not to admit for truth. But what is it that he would haue to be proued? For that faith is an instrument to apprehend & receiue, it is plaine, because it is the hand which we stretch to heaven to take hold of Christ and to hold him sitting there; it is the mouth whereby we eat and drinke Christ; because to beleene is to eat: it is the stomach whereby we digest him, for he is to be digested by faith; it is the foot whereby we enter possession of the benefits of Christ, and possesse so farre as we stretch the same: it is the vessell whereinto God putteth the oyle of his mercy. & By faith, saith Austin, we receiue Christ: it is by faith, saith Ambrose, that we touch Christ; and looke how much faith we bring to receiue, saith Cypryan, so much we draw of the abundant grace of God. This being plaine, the question then must be of the thing that is to be receiued. Now the thing to be receiued, is the thing whereby we are to be iustified. The thing whereby we are to be iustified is the obedience of Christ, for by the obedience of one, saith the Apostle, shall many be made righteous; and what is the obedience of Christ, but the righteousnesse of Christ? The righteousnesse of Christ then is the thing to be apprehended and receiued for our iustification. And how should we be made the righteousnes of God in him, but by apprehending & receiuing a righteousnesse which is in him? He is called the Lord our righteousnesse, not who maketh vs righteous only, but who himselfe is our righteousnes, and how should he be our righteousnes, but by his righteousnesse? Therefore in apprehending and receiuing Christ by faith, we apprehend & receiue the righteousnesse of Christ to be our iustification before God. But I need not stand vpon this; for seeing through this whole Chapter we shall proue, that we receiue no gift of inherent righteousnesse, whereby we can be iustified in the sight of God, it followeth, as is also proued, that the right-

d Ebap. 3. sect. 16

e Aug. in Ioan. tract. 50. Quomodo in uerbo absentem? quomodo in celum manū mittam, ut ibi sedentem teneam? fidem mitte & tenuisti.

f Ibid. tract. 25. Qui credit manducat.

g Tertul. de resur. car. fide digierend.

h Bernard. in Cant. ser. 22 In lous Domini quatenus fiducie pedem perrexeris eatenus possidibis.

i Idem in Anunc. ser. 3. Dominus o'cum misericordie nisi in uase fiducie non ponit.

k Aug. de verb. Dom. ser. 33. Fide illum accipimus.

l Ambros. in Psal. 43. Fides talis est quo tangitur Christus.

m Cypryan. lib. 2. epist. 2. Quam uera fidei capitis afferimus, tantum gratie inundantis haurimus.

n Rom. 5. 15. o 2 Cor. 5. 21.

p Ierem. 23. 6.

righteousnesse which wee receiue by faith for iustification, is the merit and obedience of Christ imputed vnto vs. Now M. Bishop telleth vs, that he can gather a disproofe of all this out of M. Perkins owne explication. For, saith he, if faith created in our hearts, be the onely sufficient supernaturall instrument to apprehend: the couenant of grace, then there needes no Sacraments for that purpose. But such disproofes will make men thinke that hee is runne not out of his learning only, but also out of his wits. If he will apply that answer to M. Perkins, it must bee thus, If faith bee the onely instrument whereby wee apprehend Christ, what neede wee any Sacraments to offer him vnto vs? And why did he not as well say, what neede there any word of God to that purpose? for his disproofe standeth as good in the one as in the other. But M. Perkins setteth both downe, as meanes on Gods part to offer Christ vnto vs, not as instruments or meanes on our part to apprehend and lay hold of Christ, and notably obserueth, how the giuing of bread and wine to the feuerall communicants in the Lords Supper, is a pledge and signe of Gods particular giuing of Christs body and bloud with all his merits, to euerie of them by faith in him. Yea, saith M. Bishop, but how then are infants iustified, who cannot haue any such act of faith? I answer him, that infants dying, are iustified and saued meere by vertue of the couenant and promise of God, to which they are entitled by the calling and faith of their parents, and in right whereof they are baptized and entred into the body of the Church, God hauing said, I will be thy God and the God of thy seede. For where the offer of the couenant hath no place, there the meanes of acceptance cannot be required, but by meere and absolute gift righteousnesse and life are giuen, and in the Sacrament sealed vnto them, who according to the purpose of the grace of God, are by inward regeneration made the seede of the faithfull, according to the intendment and meaning of the couenant. Yet nothing hindereth, but that we may conceiue, that God calling infants fro hence, doth in their passage by the power of his Spirit, giue them light of vnderstanding, and knowledge, and faith of Christ, as an entrance to that light and life which after by Christ and with him they enioy for euer. Who when hee will, maketh babes and sucklings to praise him, and euen in young children sometimes in our sight, sheweth the admirable fruit of his grace in their death, far beyond

q Gen. 17. 7

that their yeeres are capeable of. As for infants baptizd and continuing to elder yeeres, they are not alwaies iustified in being baptizd, but God calleth them, some sooner, some latter; some at one hour, some at another, according to his good will and pleasure, and when the medicine long before applied, beginneth to worke the effect that doth appertaine vnto it.

20. W. BISHOP.

But to returne vnto the sound doctrine of our Catholike faith, M. Perkins finds fault with it, one that wee teach faith to go before iustification, whereas by the word of God (saith he) at the verie instant, when any man beleeueth first, hee is then both iustified and sanctified. What word of God so teacheth? Marrie this: He that beleueth, eateth and drinketh the body and bloud of Christ, and is already passed from death to life. I answer, that our Saviour in that text speaketh not of beleewing, but of eating his body in the blessed Sacrament, which who so receiveth worthily, obtaineth thereby life euerlasting, as Christ saith expressly in that place. And so this prooffe is vaine.

Ioh. 6. 54.

Now will I prooue out of the holy Scriptures, that faith goeth before iustification, first by that of S. Paul: Whosoeuer calleth on the name of our Lord shall bee saued, but how shall they call vpon him, in whom they do not beleue, how shall they beleue without a preacher, &c. Where there is this order set downe to arrive vnto iustification. First, to heare the preacher, then to beleue, aftermard to call vpon God for mercie, and finally mercie is granted and giuen in iustification: so that praier goeth betweene faith and iustification. This Saint Augustine obserued, when he said: Faith is giuen first, by which we obtaine the rest. And againe: By the law is knowledge of sinne, by faith wee obtaine grace, and by grace our soule is cured. If wee list to see the practise of this recorded in holy writ, read the second of the Acts, and there you shall find, how that the people hauing heard S. Peters Sermon, were striken to the hearts, and beleued, yet were they not straight way iustified, but asked of the Apostles what they must doe, who willed them to do penance, and to be baptizd in the name of Iesus, in remission of their sinnes, and then lo, they were iustified, so that penance and baptisme went betweene their faith, and their iustification.

*De predest. sanc.
cap. 7.
De spirit. & lit.
cap. 30.*

In like maner Queene Candaces Eunuch, hauing heard S. Philip, announcing vnto him Christ, beleued that IESVS CHRIST was the Sonne

Sonne

Sonne of God (no talke in those dayes of applying vnto himselfe Christs righteousnes,) yet was he not iustified, before descending out of his chariot he was baptized. And three daies passed betweene S. Pauls conuersion and his iustification, as doth evidently appeare by the history of his conuersion. Act. 8.
Act. 9.

The second fault he findeth with our faith, is that we take it to be nothing else, but an illumination of the mind stirring up the will, which being so moued and helped by grace, causeth in the heart many good spirituall motions. But this (saies M. Perkins) is as much to say, that dead men onely helped, can prepare themselves to their resurrection. Not so good Sir, but that men spirituallly dead, bee quickned by Gods spirit, may haue many good motions, for as our spirit giueth life vnto our bodies: so the spirit of God by his grace animateth, & giueth life vnto our soules. But of this it hath bene once before spoken at large, in the question of Free will.

R ABBOT.

We are so to affirme the effect of iustifying faith, as may make good what the Scripture hath deliuered concerning it. Which because the Church of Rome doth not, in making faith precedent in time to iustification and grace, M. Perkins iustly findeth fault therewith. Our Sauour saith, ^a He that heareth my word and beleeueth in him that sent me, hath euerlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death to life. Our passing frō death to life, is our iustification. If euery one that beleeueth bee passed from death to life, then euery one that beleeueth is iustified: or if there be any that beleeueth, & yet is not iustified, then it is not true of euery one that beleeueth, that he is passed from death to life. To this place M. Perkins alluded though he quoted it not, but M. Bishop thought it safest for him to say nothing of it. To the other place his answer is a simple shift. He that beleeueth eateth and drinketh the body and bloud of Christ. I answer, saith M. Bishop, that our Sauour in that text speaketh not of beleeuing, but of eating his bodie in the blessed Sacrament. But wee answer him againe, that if Christ speake of eating in the sacrament, then it must follow, that whoso-euer is not partaker of the sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ is excluded from life, because our Sauour expressly saith, ^b Except ye eat the flesh of the sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, yee

^a Ioh. 5. 24.
^b Ioh. 6. 53.

have no life in you. But so to say is absurd and false, as in the example of the crucified these and many other, is apparant and plaine. Againe the Sacrament was not instituted long after, and will M. Bishop exclude any faithfull, that after this time died, before that institution from that eating of the flesh of Christ and drinking of his blood, which Christ heere recommendeth for the hauing of eternall life? S. Austin saith, that c in baptisme we are made partakers of the body and blood of Christ, so that though one die before he come to the Sacrament of the Bread and the Cup, yet is he not deprived of the participation and benefit of that Sacrament, seeing he hath found that already which that Sacrament signifieth. The Apostle testifieth, that the fathers of the old Testament did d all eate the same spirituall meate, and did all drinke the same spirituall drinke, not the same one with another, as the c Rhemists for a shift expound it, but e the same that we do. For g I find not, saith S. Austin, how I should understand, The same, but the same that we eat. Therefore they also did eate the flesh of Christ and drinke his blood. But their eating and drinking was not the participation of the Sacrament. Therefore Christ by eating his flesh and drinking his blood, doth not import any thing tied to the participation of the Sacrament. Yea the whole course of that text giueth vs plainely to vnderstand, that Christ by eating his flesh and drinking his blood, meaneth the same as by beleeuing in him. Therefore doth S. Austin by the one expound the other. h Beleeue and thou hast eaten; he exhorteth vs to beleeue in him; for to beleeue in him, that is to eate the bread of life; he that beleeueth, eateth. And so saith hee of the fathers eating and drinking, that this i spirituall meate and drinke was receiued by faith, and not by the body. Now if beleeffe in Christ bee imported by eating and drinking the flesh and blood of Christ, then M. Perkins prooffe was not vaine, but M. Bishop hath shewed himselfe a vaine man, to giue so vaine an answer without any prooffe therof at all. Without doubt k whosoever eateth the flesh of Christ and drinketh his blood, hath eternall life. But no man hath eternall life, but he that is iustified and sanctified. Whosoever therefore eateth and drinketh the flesh & blood of Christ is iustified & sanctified. But our beleeuing in Christ is our eating of his flesh and drinking of his blood. So loone therefore as we beleeue in Christ, we are iustified & sanctified, that it may be true which the Apostle saith, that l the righteousnesse

c Beda in 1. Cor.
10. ex August.
ser. ad infant. es.

d 1. Cor. 10. 3. 4.

e Rhem. Annot.
1. Cor. 10.
f Ang. in Jo. in.
tract. 26. spiritua-
lem eandem
quam nos.
g Idem de vilit.
pœnit. c. 1. Eun-dem non inuenio
quomodo intelligā
nisi eundem quem manducamus &
nos.

h Aug. in Ioan. tract. 25. Crede & manducasti. Ibid.
tract. 26. Hortans ut credamus in
eum. Credere enim
in eum, hoc est māducare panem vi-
uum. Qui credit
manducat.
i Idem de vilit.
pœnit. Fide capie-
batur, non corpore
hæretabatur.
k Ioh. 6. 54.

l Rom. 3. 22.

nesse of God by the faith of Iesus Christ, is to all and vpon all that do beleue, which cannot be said, if any beleue vpon whom there yet is not the Righteousnesse of God to iustifie him before God. The proofes that hee allegeth to the contrarie, are very simple and slender. First hee allegeth the words of S. Paul, ^m Who soeuer shall ^m Rom. 10. 13. call vpon the name of the Lord, shall be saued, but how shall they call vpon him in whom they haue not beleued? &c. Where of iustification we heare not a word, nor is any thing purposely meant thereof. For the words which the Apostle citeth out of the Prophet Ioel, touch not the order of iustification, but import a promise to them that are iustified by faith in Christ, and accordingly doe call vpon the name of the Lord, that in the calamities and confusion of the world God will preserue them to bee partakers of euerlasting saluation. Now wee grant that by order of nature there is a precedence of faith to iustification, but we denie all prioritie in respect of time. And whereas M. Bishop auoucheth, that praier goeth betwixt faith and iustification, beside that it is not proued by the Apostles words, it is very vntrue and false. For there can bee no true praier without ⁿ the spirit of grace and of praier, without ^o the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father. ⁿ 7. ach. 12. 10. ^{vulgar.} The spirit of adoption and ^o grace is the spirit of sanctification. ^o Rom. 8. 15. ^{Gal. 4. 6.} It followeth then that wee pray not but by being first sanctified, and because sanctification is consequent to iustification, it must follow also, that iustification goeth before praier, so that in praying for the forgiuenesse of sins, it commeth to passe with vs which the Prophet saith, ^p Before they ^p Esa. 65. 24. call I will answer them. Let M. Bishop order the matter how he will, yet this must alwaies stand good, that faith in the first instant of the being of it, gaspeth vnto God by praier, as the thirstie land, and together therewith receiueth blessing of God. God tieth not himselfe to M. Bishops order, but where he giueth faith, in the gift thereof he beginneth with it the whole effect and fruit of faith. As there is no flame without light, but in the beginning of the flame there is iointly a beginning of light, and yet in nature the flame is before the light; so is there no faith without iustification and sanctification, and in the first act of faith iointly we are iustified and sanctified, albeit in order of nature faith is precedent to thē both. Thus are the speeches vnderstood that he allegeth out of Austin, and thus they are true, & make nothing at all to serue for the purpose pose to which he allegeth them. No more doe those other examples that he bringeth of the baptisme of the people conuerted by Peters sermon, of the Eunuch and the Apostle Paul. He proueth thereby, that there was some time betwixt their beleeuing and their being baptized; but proueth not that there was any time betwixt their beleeuing & their being iustified. For he must vnderstand, that we do not tie the iustification of a man to the act or instant of his baptisme, and of all these doe affirme, that they receiued the sacrament of baptisme as Abraham did the sacrament of circumcision. After iustification, ^a he receiued the signe of circumcision, as the seale of the righteousnesse of faith which he had when hee was uncircumcised. Euen so did these receiue the signe of baptisme as the seale of forgiveness of finnes, and of the righteousnesse of faith, which they had embraced and receiued before they were baptized. We reade of Cornelius and his companie, that ^t the holy Ghost came on them, they receiued the holy Ghost when they were yet vn baptized, and doth M. Bishop doubt but that they were iustified? Constantine the Emperour was not baptized ^f till neere his death, and shal we say that til then he was neuer iustified? Valentinian was ^e not baptized at all, and yet Ambrose doubted not of his iustification. Very idly therefore and impertinently doth M. Bishop bring these examples, and gaineth nothing thereby to his cause. I omit his penance in stead of repentance only, as a toy that he is in loue withall. It is the plaine doctrine of their schooles, ^u that no penance is to be iniointed vnto men in baptisme, or that are to be baptized for any finnes whatsoeuer, because that should bee a wrong to the passion and death of Christ, as if it were not sufficient for full satisfaction for the finnes of the baptized. Seeing therefore S. Peter in the place alleged, expressly directeth his speech to them that were to be baptized, M. Bishop and his fellowes would forbear there to translate doing of penance, but that, poore men, they are afraid they shall bee all vndone, vnlesse they make the Scripture say somewhat by right or by wrong for doing of penance. Whether in those daies there were talke of applying Christs righteousnesse, appeareth I hope sufficiently in this discourse. The other fault which M. Perkins here findeth with the Romish doctrine, is, that they make faith nothing else but an illumination of the mind, stirring up the will, which being so moued and helped by grace, causeth in the heart many

^a Rom. 5. 11.

^t Act. 10. 44. 47.

^f Euseb. de vita
Constant. lib. 4.

^e Ambros. de obi-
tu Valentin.

^u Tho. Aqu. p. 3.
q. 68. ar. 3. in corp.
Ei qui baptizatur
pro quibuscunque
peccatis, non est al-
liqua satisfactio iniungenda: hoc enim esset iniuri-
am facere passioni
et morti Christi,
quasi ipsa non es-
set sufficiens ad
plenariam satis-
factionem pro
peccatis baptiza-
torum.

What manner of faith it is whereby we are iustified. 467

good spirituall motions. M. Bishop putteth in (by grace) onely to delude the Reader, because hee vnderstandeth heereby no other grace, but the same that Pelagius did, as before hath been said. But hereof M. Perkins rightly said, that it is as much as if they should say, that a dead man onely helped, can prepare himselfe to his resurrection. Not so good Sir, saith M. Bishop, but that mens spirituallly dead, being quickened by Gods spirit, may haue many good motions. I answer, you say true, good Sir, when a man is quickened by Gods spirit: but can a man be quickned before he be quickned? We suppose that the iustifying of a man is the quickning of him, and not we only, but you also, in the five and twentieth section following, doe hold that our iustification is the translating of vs from death to life. Before iustification then wee are not quickened, nor receiue any infused or inhabitant grace of the spirit of life, wherein spirituall life consisteth. Therefore to auouch many good spirituall motions before iustification, is to auouch grace without grace, life without life, the spirit without the spirit, and a quickening of vs before we are quickened. Which because it cannot be, it is true that M. Perkins saith, that by your doctrine you make a dead man prepare himselfe to his resurrection. What you haue said in the question of Free will, I hope hath his answer sufficiently in that place.

21. W. BISHOP.

The third difference, saith M. Perkins, concerning faith, is this. Page 84.

The Papists say, that man is iustified by faith, yet not by faith alone, but also by other vertues, as the feare of God, hope, loue, &c. The reasons which are brought to maintain their opinion, are of no moment. Well, let vs heare some of them, that the indifferent Reader may iudge, whether they bee of any moment or no.

FIRST REASON.

Many finnes are forgien her, because shee hath loued much: Luke 7.47.
whence they gather, that the woman there spoken of, had pardon of her sins, & was iustified by loue. Answer. In this text, loue is not made made an impulsive cause, to moue God to pardon her sinnes, but only a signe, to shew that God had already pardoned them.

Reply. Obserue first, that Catholikes do not teach, that she was pardoned for loue alone, for they vse not (as Protestants do) when they find one cause of iustification, to exclude all, or any of the rest: but considering that in sundry places of holy writ, iustification is ascribed vnto many severall vertues, affirme, that not faub alone, but diuers other diuine qualities concurre vnto iustification, and as mention here made of loue, excludeth not faith, hope, repentance, and such like: so in other places, where faith is only spoken of, there hope, charitie, and the rest must not also be excluded. This sinner had assured beleefe in Christs power to remit sins, and great hope in his mercy, that he would forgine them: great sorrow and detestation of her sinne also she had, that in such an assembly did so humbly prostrate her selfe at Christs feet, to wash them with her teares, and to wipe them with the haire of her head. And as shee had true repentance of her former life, so no doubt but shee had also a firme purpose to leade a new life. So that in her conversion, all those vertues met together, which we hold to concurre to iustification, and among the rest, the preheminnence worthily is giuen to loue, as to the principall disposition. Shee loued our Sauour as the fountaine of all mercies, and goodness; and therefore accounted her precious ointment; best bestowed on him; yea, and the humblest seruice, and most affectionate shee could offer him, to be all too little, and nothing answerable to the inward burning charitie which shee bare him. Which noble affection of hers, towards her diuine Redeemer, no question, was most acceptable vnto him, as by his owne word is most manifest: for he said, That many sinnes were forgiven her, because shee loued much. But M. Perkins saith, that her loue was no cause that moued Christ to pardon her, but only a signe of pardon giuen before: which is so contrary to the text, that a man not past all shame, would blush once to affirme it. First Christ saith expresly, that it was the cause of the pardon: Because shee had loued much. Secondly, that her loue went before, is as plainely declared, both by mention of the time past, Because shee hath loued; and by the euidence of her fact of washing, wiping, and anointing his feete: for the which saith our Sauour, then already performed, Many sinnes are forgiven her. So that here can be no impediment of beleeuing the Catholike doctrine, so clearly deliuered by the holy Ghost, vnlesse one will be so blindly led by our new Masters, that he will beleene no words of Christ, be they neuer so plane, plaine, otherwise then it please the Ministers to expound them. And this much of the first of those reasons, which M. Perkins said were of no moment.

R. ABBOT.

I wished thee, gentle Reader, before to obserue that which here plainly thou seest, that by the Romish doctrine there is one faith, hope, charity before iustification, which must prepare a man in iustification to receiue, and is the cause for which in iustification he doth receiue another; a faith, which is the cause why God endueth him with faith; a hope, which is the cause for which God endueth him with hope; a charity, which is the cause for which God bestoweth vpon him the gift of charity. A strange doctrine, and the same for which Pelagius was of old condemned, ^a that vpon our ^{a August. ep. 1. 16} merits the grace of God is bestowed vpon vs. M. Bishop will say that they make no merits of these; yet he himselfe knoweth that their schooles do make them meritis ex congruo, though not ex condigno, merits which are of force to moue God, and which it is conuenient that God should respect, though they do not fully deserue grace. And this merit ^b Bellarmino himselfe affirmeth, as before was said. But let vs know why they account them not properly ^{b Bellarm. de iust. lib. 1. cap. 17. Fidei suo quodam modo meretur remissionem peccatorum iustificat per modum dispositionis ac meriti.} merits. The reason indeed is, because they say they are not the effects of any infused grace; for they make them intrinsically the acts onely of mans free will, though adioyning the shew of a counterfeit grace, which doth as it were put a hand vnder the arme to helpe lift it vp for the acting thereof. Yet M. Bishop at randon not knowing what he saith, calleth the diuine qualities, contrary to the doctrine of his owne schooles. For it faith, hope, and charity before iustification be diuine qualities, and essentially the works of grace, there can nothing hinder, but that they should bee as properly meritorious as those infused graces, wherein they affirme iustification to consist. But now he must vnderstand, that the Fathers did not take merit so strictly, as that they giue him way to shift off from himselfe the assertion of Pelagius. They vnderstood it so largely, as that ^c if a man can but plead a iust excuse for his delinere ^{c August. epist. 175. Si excusatio iusta est quisquis ea vitatur non gratis sed merito liberatur.} he that vseth it is not delinere by grace but by merit; if there be but ^d a good will before grace, then grace is not grace, but is giuen vpon merit. ^{d Cons. 2. epist. Pro merito videlicet voluntatis bene: ac sic gratia non sit gratis sed sit ibid. & c. gratiam Dei secundum meritum a natura.} And if he wil say, that they affirme not any good will before grace, e Cha. 1. sect. 5.

f Bellarm. de grat.
 & li. arbi.
 lib. 6 cap. 5. Gra-tiam secundum
 merita nostra da-
 ri intelligunt pa-
 tres, cum aliquid
 sit proprijs viribus (etiamsi non sit meritum de condigno) ratione cu-
 jus datur gratia.

g Luk. 7. 47.

h August. hom. 23
 O Pharisee, ideo
 parum diligis
 quia parum tibi
 dimitti suspicaris
 non quia parum
 dimittitur, sed
 quia parum putas
 esse quod dimittitur.

let him remember, that Pelagius affirmed such a preuenting grace as they do, but S. Austine professeth to know no grace, but iustifying grace, as hath bene shewed^e before, so that if before iustifying grace, there be any good will or good worke, then the grace of God is not freely giuen, but by merit, according to the doctrine of Pelagius. Yea, Bellarmino himselfe confesseth, that the^f Fathers do understand the grace of God to be giuen by merits, when any thing is done by our owne strength, in respect whereof grace is giuen, though the same be not any merit de condigno, of condignity or worth. Such are the faith, hope, and charity, that they teach before iustification, which therefore as I haue said, are denied to be merits de condigno, because they proceede from our owne strength. Yea, say they, but not without the helpe of God. But so Pelagius also said, as wee haue shewed in the place before quoted in the question of Free wil, and therefore in that they say nothing to free themselves from saying that which the Fathers condemned in Pelagius, that according to our merits the grace of God is bestowed upon vs. And this M. Bishop will proue by the example of the woman, who in the Pharisees house washed the feete of Christ, of whom our Sauour saith;^g Many sinnes are forgien her, because she hath loued much. She was iustified therefore, saith he, because of her loue. M. Perkins answereth, that that because importeth not any impulsue cause of the forgiveness of her sinnes, but onely a signe thereof, as if Christ had said, It is a token that much hath been forgien her, because shee loueth much. But M. Bishop like to bad disposed persons, who face the matter most boldly, where their cause is worst, saith, that this is so contrary to the text, that a man not past all shame, would blush once to affirme it. The text of it owne accord yeeldeth this construction & no other. The creditour forgiveth to one five hundred talents, to the other fifty: whether of them will loue him more? Hee, saith the Pharisee, to whom hee forgauē most. Heere is loue expressly set downe, as a thankfulness following after, in respect of a forgiveness gone before. Christ then in effect inferreth thus, Thou hast giuen me smal tokens of thy loue, since my entring into thy house, but thus and thus hath she shewed her loue. What is the cause?^h O thou Pharisee, therefore thou louest little, because thou thinkest that little is forgien thee: not because it is little, but because thou thinkest it to be but little. But this woman knoweth that much hath bene forgiuen

giuen her, therefore shee loueth much. And this exposition is apparentlie confirmed by the words which Christ addeth, To whom a little is forgiven, he doth loue a little: which if we will fit to the words going before, Many sinnes are forgiven her, because shee hath loued much, we must make the meaning of these former words to be this; But shee loueth much; it is a signe therefore that much hath bene forgiven her. In this meaning Ambrose maketh this woman a figure of the Church of the Gentiles, ⁱ to which there was more forgiven, because she was indebted more, but being mindfull of this grace, hath paid so much the more (in loue) by how much the greater mercy she had obtained. And to the same sense doth he expound it, ^k writing vpon the place, euen as Basil also doth, when alluding to that place, he saith: ^l To him that oweth more, more is forgiven, that he may loue the more. So doth Hierome take it, saying, ^m Of two debtors, to whom more is forgiven, he loueth more; thereupon our Sauour saith, Many sins are forgiven her, because shee hath loued much; which cannot hang together, if loue bee taken for an effect of forgiveness in the one speech, and a cause thereof in the other. But now wee expect, that Master Bishop so peremptorily reiecting that exposition, should giue vs some greater reason of the denying of it. First, saith he, Christ saith expressly that it was the cause of the pardon, because she had loued much. But his learning should teach him, that the word because doth not alwaies note an antecedent cause, but somerimes a succeeding effect or signe. As where our Sauour Christ saith of the diuell, ⁿ he abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him; he did not meane to say, that the cause of his not abiding in the truth, was because now there is no truth in him, but that hereby as by an effect & signe, it appeareth that he abode not in the truth. So where he saith; I haue called you friends, because all things that I haue heard of the Father I haue made knowne vnto you; hee maketh this imparting of all things to them not a cause, but a token of accounting them his friends. Which being euident and plainc, M. Bishops first reason hindereth nothing, but that Christs words may well be vnderstood, that he nameth the womans loue only as a signe & token of many sinnes to bee forgiven vnto her. And to take it otherwise as he doth, ouerthroweth the rule that is deliuered by S. Augustine: ^p Good works begin from the time that wee are iustified, wee are not iustified for any good workes that goe before. His second reason is i Ambro. de Tolia cap. 2. Plus remission est ecclesie quia plus debebat; sed & ipsa plus soluit, &c. Memor gratie eo plura soluit, quo plus meruisse.

k In Luc. cap. 7. Basil. exhort ad basism. Plus debens plus remittitur et velen. entius amitt.

m Hieron. adu. Iovin lib. 3. De duobus debitoribus cui plus dimittitur plus amat. Unde & saluator ait, &c.

n Ioh. 8. 44.

o Jbid. cap. 13. v. 15
ὁ πᾶσι τοῖς
&c.

p Aug. epist. 130. cap. 30. Ex bonis operibus qui iusti fuerunt, non quae per se efficiunt iustitiam.

lesse worth, and he sheweth therein either his ignorance or his negligence. For whereas he arguerh out of the Tenses, that her loue is express'd by the time past, she hath loued much, and her forgiveness by the time present, Many sinnes are forgiven her, importing that the former cannot be the signe, and therefore must needes be the cause of that that followeth, if hee had bene so carefull as to looke into the Greeke text, he should haue founde that her forgiveness of sinnes is exprest also by the time past, by the Atticke preterperfect tence ἀποκατα; Many sinnes haue bene forgiven her, because she hath loued much; albeit it should not haue noted necessarily a present act, but a continuation of the benefit, if it had bene expressed in the present tence. The exposition therefore alledged, beeing direct, and arising simply out of the text it selfe, what reason hath M. Bishop to force another, which plainly thwarteth that which Christ after saith, Thy faith hath saued thee? To conclude, let him take for his reproofe, that which Origen saith; For no worke of the law (and therefore not for her loue) but for faith onely doth Christ say to the woman, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee, and againe, Thy faith hath saued thee: and let him learne to condemne his own presumption, in that he taketh vpon him so rashly to define, that which hee is not able, by reason to make good. As for the Ministers, they are verie simple men, if they cannot better approoue their expositions and doctrines then he hath done.

In Origen ad Rom. cap. 3. Ex nullo legis opere sed pro sola fide ait ad eam: Remittuntur.

22. W. BISHOP.

Gal. 5. 6.

• 2. Reason. Neither Circumcision, nor prepuce, auaieth any thing, but faith that worketh by charity. Hence Catholikes gather, that when the Apostle attributeth iustification to faith, hee meanes not faith alone, but as it is ioyned with charity, and other like vertues, as are requisite to prepare the soule of man, to receiue that complete grace of iustification. M. Perkins answereth, that they are ioyned together: But it is faith alone that apprehendeth Christs righteousness, and maketh it ours. It vseth charity as an instrument to performe the duties of the first and second table, but it hath no part with faith in the matter of our iustification.

Reply. That is hath the chiefest part, and that faith is rather the instrument and handmaid of charity; my prooffe shall be out of the very

instrumēt to receiue. But yet faith receiuing all of God, vseth charity, as the means to make return of it selfe to God againe, & by charity, as a working hād performeth all the duties cōmanded of God, to the honor and glory of God. This therefore the Apostle intendeth in the place alledged, that faith hauing alone iustified vs by receiuing the gift of righteousness, which is by the merit of Iesus Christ, doth not stay there, but goeth forth by charity, to serue God, to serue one another, and to shew our selues thankfull vnto God. And wonder it were, that the Apostle hauing before professedly disputed the matter of iustification, & referring the same wholly to faith, should here crosse all that he hath before said, and tell vs, that not onely faith, but loue also must concurre to make vp our iustification before God. Marke it well, gentle reader, that where the Apostle purposely speaketh of the meanes of iustification, M. Bishop can finde nothing to proue, that we are iustified by loue, nothing pleaded but onely faith; but heere where the Apostle describeth only the condition of the faith by which we are iustified, here he will finde somewhat whereby to plead against the Apostles former doctrine, yea, and will proue, that loue hath not onely a part, but the chiefest part in our iustification, and that faith is rather the instrument or handmaid of charity. How much is he beholding to his Maister Bellarmin, that hath taught him such a trick, and furnished him with a deuce, which neuer any Father Greeke or Latine, neuer any translatour could light vpon, till his admirable wit had found it out? We may well think that such a head could not but deserue a Cardinals hat. Forsooth the text proueth, that life and motion is given to faith by charity. But how so? ^a Marry the Greeke word, εργασίαν being passive, doth plainly shew, that faith is moued, led, and guided by charity. But what? must we, M. Bishop, vpon Bellarmines word and yours take this, without any further authority or warrant so to do? Indeede it is true, that the Greeke word sometimes is taken passiue, but by the Apostle is more often vsed in the actiue signification, and in this place was neuer before by any Father Greeke or Latine taken otherwise. Yea, the spite is, that the vulgar Latine interpreter to whom they are tied by the Councell of Trent, crosseth this deuce, for he readeth as we doe, Fides qua per charitatem operatur, faith which worketh by loue. But there is a trick to salue that too; for saith Bellarmin, ^b the word (opera- operatur must be taken passiuely, not actiuely. Now what block-heads were the Diuines of Rhemes, that could not see so much, or would omit so materiall a prooffe against the heretikes? for they haue translated as wee do, faith which worketh by loue. But they were bashfull; they thought Bellarmino could carie out the matter with his name and countenance, but it would be condemned for a great fault in them. Better it is for some man to steale a horse, then for another to looke ouer the hedge. They knew well, that euerie childe would crie out vpon them for leud men, if they had translated operatur passiuely, in as much as neither their owne interpreter in any other place, nor any other Latine author hath euer vsed it in that sort. Againe, they saw that a very grosse and palpable absurdity would thereupon haue ensued, which on their owne part cannot be denied. For if they had translated, faith which is wrought by loue, then it would haue followed, that loue by which faith is wrought, must needs be before faith, whereas they all acknowledge that faith hath the first being, according to that which M. Bishop a little before alledged out of Austin, faith is giuen first, by which we obtaine the rest. Which beeing a principle in diuinitie, and accorded on both sides, they could not tell how to make good, if they should haue said that faith is wrought by loue. Now M. Bishop, though for the rest he would aduenture vpon his Maisters credit, yet durst not follow him so farre, as to translate operatur passiuely, but onely beatech about the bush, and telleth vs; that the Greeke sheweth, that faith is moned, led, and guided by charity. Wherein he doth wrong to the Rhemists his country-men, to whom for countries sake he should haue done that honour, to stand to their translation. Yea, and he abuseth his Reader, in that he doth not directly translate the place; which if he had done, he durst not translate it, to giue that meaning that now he maketh of it. Which meaning of his cannot in any sort be true, because it is faith which first heareth, & beleueth, and receiueth the words of God, & thereby prescribeth vnto charity the way that it is to go, and the duty that it is to performe, without which what is charity, but a wild & a wandering affection, easily swaruing and caried away from the due respect and loue of God? so that by faith it is that charity pleaseth God, and ^d without faith it is vnpossible to please God. Now seeing with God we cannot thinke, that the greater is accepted for the ^d lesse.

^a Bellarmin. de iustific. lib. 2. cap. 4.

^b Illustrat. operatur) passive) accipiendum est, non a. line.

c Sect. 10.
August. de praedest. sanct. ca. 7.

lesse, but rather the lesse for the greater, not the mistresse (so to speake) for the handmaides sake, but rather the handmaid for the mistresse sake, we must needs make faith not the handmaid, as M. Bishop doth, but the mistresse, because by faith it is that charity is acceptable vnto God. But he telleth vs, that S. James doth demonstrate charity to be the life, and as it were the soule of faith, when he saith, Euen as the body is dead without the soule. so is faith without charity. But he wrongeth his Reader, in citing thus faillly the words of S. James. For S. James saith not, so is faith without charity; but so is faith without workes. Now charity cannot be without workes, but if there might not be workes without charity, S. Paul would not haue said, Though I feede the poore with all my goods, and though I giue my body to be burned and haue not loue, it profiteth me nothing. Charity is inwardly the affection of the heart, seene onely to God: but workes are outwardly visible and apparent to man, and therefore there is a difference to be made betwixt charity and workes, which wholly ouerthroweth all that M. Bishop here goeth about to proue. For the faith whereof wee heere dispute, is inward in the heart, because with^e the heart man beleueth vnto righteousnesse. But that which is without, cannot be the life or soule of that which is within, nay it selfe hath from within all the life that it hath, and if it receiue not life from within, it is altogether dead. Workes therefore being outward, and issuing from within, if they be true, can by no meanes be said to be the life of faith that is within. But that which S. James saith, he saith it of workes. He saith nothing therefore, to proue that charity is the life and soule of faith. But how then, will he say, doth Saint James make workes, as it were the life and soule of faith? Very well, according to that meaning of faith which he there intendeth. For he speaketh of faith, as it is outwardly professed to men. Thou sayest thou hast faith; shew me thy faith: I will shew thee my faith. Now in this respect, workes are rightly said to be the life of faith; not charity, but workes, because charity cannot be discerned by the eies of men, but workes of behauiour and conuersation are discerned. Yea, there may be a profession of the faith and workes thereunto correspondent outwardly, when yet there is neither faith nor charity within. Yet where it is so, men outwardly to men and to the Church, go for no other but liuing members of the Church, vntill such time as the winde of

e 1. Cor. 13. 3.

e Rom. 10. 10.

e 1. Jam. 2. 14. 18.

temptation bloweth them away, and discouereth them to haue been but chaffe, when in semblance they seemed to be good corn. But where there is outward profession of faith, and there is not conuersion therunto agreeing, a man is accounted but a dead branch fitte to bee cut off; his profession wanteth that that should giue it life and grace; he is euerie mans by-word and reproch, his hypocrisie is detested of all men, and therefore is much more lethesome vnto God. In a word, S. Paul speaketh of faith in one meaning, as it is inward in the heart to God: S. Iames speaketh of faith in another meaning, as it is outward in the face to men. If we vnderstand it according to Saint Paul, it is faith that giueth life to all the rest, as afterwards shall further appeare. If we vnderstand it according to Saint Iames, workes are the life of faith, and giue it name and being, because a man is not accounted faithfull for his words, vnlesse there be also workes agreeable to his words. Now therefore Master Bishops comparison, whereby hee would make charitie as the life and soule, and faith as the body, cannot bee made good out of this place, nay indeede it cannot bee made good at all. For that which must bee as the life and soule, must bee the internall and essentiall forme of the thing. But ^h charitie is to faith a forme only extrinsec. all and outward, not an inward forme, faith Bellarmine, not giuing it his being, but only his mouing, actiuitie, and working. Charitie therefore cannot bee called the life and soule of faith. Now because it is but an outward and accidentall forme, the mouing and working that it giueth vnto faith, is but outward and accidentall. For the proper and naturall act and motion of a thing, cannot proceed from an accidentall forme. Faith therefore hath it own inward & essentiall forme, whereby it hath life & being within it selfe, & whence proceedeth a motiō & working that is proper to it selfe. And thus doth the Apostle set it down distinctly, as a vertue absolute in it self, whē he saith, Now abide these three, faith, hope, and loue. Where to say that faith is as the body, & loue as the soule, is to make the Apostle to speake absurdly, as if a man for two should reckon a body & a soule. According to this distinctiō doth the scripture still set forth faith in the nature of faith, to be the instrument of our iustificatiō before God, euen according to that life & soule that is, that proper & essentiall forme, whereby it hath the being of faith, which yet in iustifying vs, receiueth charity as an accidentall forme

^h Bellarm. de iustificat. lib. 2. cap. 4.
 l'oma fides extrinsec. a, non intrinsec. & que dicit illi non est sic sed ut moueatur; scilicet res actiua & operans.

ii. Cor. 13. 13.

to be vnto it an instrument for moouing and stirring abroad, in the performance of all duties recommended vnto vs both to God and men. Thus Bellarmino perforce wresteth from M. Bishop, yea and from himselfe also, this assertion of faith, being likened to the body, & charity to the soule. Yet M. Bishop once againe will assay to prouoc it by S. Paul, making charity a more excellent gift then faith, reckoning faith, hope, and charity, & concluding, the greatest of these is charity. But this testimonie auaieth him nothing at all; for it followeth not, that because the eie is a more excellent member then the eare, therefore the eie is as the life and soule to the eare, or the eare the instrument of the eie. No more doth it follow, that because charitie is a more excellent gift then faith, therefore it should bee the forme and life of faith, or faith the instrument of charitie. It followeth not, that because the eie is more excellent then the eare, therefore for the vse of hearing, it should be more excellent then the eare. No more doth it follow, that because charitie is more excellent then faith, therefore for the vse of justification it must excell faith. Faith and charitie respectiuely haue the preferment each of other. If we respect latitude of vse, charitie is more excellent then faith, as which is extended euery way to God, to Angels, to men, and by which all the gifts of God which he bestoweth vpon vs, are made profitable to other men, so as that ke vnprofitably he hath all, saith Austin, who wanteth that one whereby hee should vse all.¹ No gift, saith Chrysostome, is perfect or conuenient without charitie. What soeuer grace or gift a man hath obtained, being destitute of charity, it will not stand; because what soeuer God imparteth or giueth, either is perfected by charity, or without charitie, it commeth to no effect or vse. But if we consider a man priuately in himselfe, and for his owne vse, faith is more excellent then charity, as wherein originally standeth our cōmunion and fellowship with God; ^m by which Christ dwelleth in our hearts; into which as a hand God putteth al the riches of his grace for our saluation; and by which whatsoeuer else is in vs, is commended vnto God. We haue nothing in vs pure, nothing cleane, nothing but what is corrupted & defiled, but faith salueth all, healeth all, setteth Christ betwixt God and vs, that for his sake hee may bee mercifull vnto vs. Againe, if we respect latitude of time & cōtinuance, charity is to be preferred before faith. For faith is but for a time, and when

the

¹ Aug. de verb. Dom. ser. 18. uersa inutiliter habet, qui unum illud quo uniuersis utatur non habet.
Chrysost. hom. de fide, spe & charit. Nulium charisma sine charitate perfectum est; nullum donum sine charitate aptum. Qui quid enim charismatus aut doni quisque meruerit, de seruum charitate non stabit. Omnia enim que Sp. sanctus det, notis aut imperitis aut donat aut charitate perfectiuntur, aut sine charitate efficiunt nullum sortitur.
^m Ephes. 3. 17.

the promise of God, which is the matter or subiect of it, shall be fully accomplished, the vse of it shall cease. But charity and loue abideth for euer, and shall continue betwixt God and vs an euerlasting bond. Therefore Origen saith, ⁿ Onely loue it is that neuer faileth therefore it is more excellent then prophecie, then faith, then knowledge, then martyrdom. Only charity is eternal, saith Chrysostom, because with God it is in the saints: for that cause it is the greater. The same reason S. Austine also giueth, ^p because, saith he, when a man is come to things eternall, these two (faith and hope) failing, charity shall remaine more increased, and better assured. In few words to resolute M. Bishop in this behalfe, we say that ^q the end is more excellent, then those things which pertaine to the end: The end of our faith & iustificatiō is charity, that is, the full restoring of vs to the image of God the very summe and effect whereof is loue. Absolutely therefore to speake it is true, that loue is greater & more excellent thē faith. But when we speake of the meanes of iustification & attainment of that saluation, wherto perfect charity and righteousnesse doth belong, then faith must be preferred as the greater and more excellent, faith onely beareth sway therein, and this slender & weak charity which here we haue, is of no effect or moment therunto. To saue a man, I say, faith is the greater; in man being saued charity is the greater. Till faith haue finished our saluation, loue must yeeld to faith; When faith hath fully saued vs, it shall haue an end, but loue which simply is the greater, shall abide for euer. Now as touching the place of Austine, he speaketh there of faith according to vulgar vnderstanding, in like sort as S. James doth. He speaketh of a faith that may be without charity, which true faith cannot be. ^r Godly faith, saith the same Austine, will not be without hope and charity. For ^s if a man haue faith without hope and loue, saith he, he beleeueth Christ to be, but he beleeueth not in Christ. But that onely is the true iustifying faith, wherby a man beleueth in Christ, which taketh not his life and force of loue, but incorporating vs into Christ, receiueth of him ^t the spirit of loue, and by Christ giueth life and force to all the fruits and workes thereof. Faith then as it is professed to men, may be without charity, but being without charity, it profiteth nothing, nor can stand vs in any steed with God: but true faith is neuer diuided from charity, nor can bee, and therefore of it Saint Austine speaketh not. That which he would

ⁿ Origen. in numer. hom. 14. Solo charitas mansurura excidit; ideo super prophetiam, super fide, super scientia super ipso etiam martyrium charitas habenda est.

^o Chrysost. hom. de fide, spe & charit. Solo charitas eterna est, quia cum Deo in san. Et est: ideo maior est.

^p August. de doct. Christ. lib. 1. ca. 39. Quia cum quisque ad eterna peruenit, disubue illis decedentibus charitas auctior & certior permanet.

^q Aristot. Topic.

^r August. epist. 85. Pia fides sine spe & charitate esse non vult.

^s Idem de verb. Dom. ser. 61. Si fidem habet sine spe & dilectione, Christum esse credit, non in Christum credit.

^t 2. Tim. 1. 7.

seeme to inferre, is without any premisses, and apparantly false by the very words heere questioned. For if faith worketh by loue, then faith is the worker, that is, the mouer and commauder, and loue the instrument by which it worketh, and as absurd it must needs be, to say, that charity or loue is the commauder, and faith the instrument, as to say, the axe is the commauder of the Carpenter that heweth with it, or the Carpenter the instrument of the axe. For conclusion of this section, Maister Bishop wil giue vs a reason to proue, that in the worke of iustification charity hath the chiefest place. First he asketh full wisely, whether that worke of iustification by faith, be done for the loue of God, and to his owne honour or no? Iustification is the worke of God, who is the iustifier of him that is of the faith of Iesus. His question is this, whether God doe iustifie vs for the loue of God? But I answer him, that the finall end of our iustification, is the honour and glory of God; who hath predestinated vs to be adopted through Iesus Christ vnto himselfe, to the praise of the glory of his grace. And what of that? Marry then hath charity the principall part therein, saith he, for the directing of all to the honour and glory of God, is the proper office and action of charity. But therein hee deceiueth himselfe, for the Apostle hath expressed it as the very proper office and act of faith, To giue glory vnto God; & therefore Moses and Aaron at the waters of Itrise, are said not to haue sanctified the Lord, that is to say, not to haue giuen him glory, because they beleeued him not. For not to beleeuue God, is to make him a liar, which is the reproch and dishonour of God; but to beleeuue God, is to ascribe vnto him, truth, and power, and wisdom, and iustice, and mercie, and whatsoeuer else belongeth vnto him. Therefore Arnobius saith, that to do well belongeth to the glory of man, but to beleeuue well, conserueth the glory of God. By works, saith Chrysostome, we obey God, but faith enertaineth a haecete opinion concerning God, and glorifieth, and admireth him much more then the shewing forth of workes. Workes commend the doer, but faith commendeth God onely, and what it is, it is wholly his. For it reioyceth in this, that it conceiueth of him great things, which do redound to his glory. And whereas our Sauour in the Gospell teacheth vs, that our good workes do glorifie God, saying, Let your lights so shine before men, that they may see your good workes, and glorifie your father which is in heauen, he saith, that it is of faith that our good workes do glorifie

God.

u Rom. 3. 26.

x Ephe. 1. 5. 6.
y Rom. 4. 20.
z Num. 20. 12.
a 1. I. In 5. 10.
b Arnob. in P'sal.
129. Bene facere
ad gloriam homi-
nis, bene credere ad
gloriam Dei perti-
net.
c Chrysoft. ad
Rom. hom. 8. Qui mandata illius
implet obedit ei:
hic autē (qui ere-
dit) conuenienter
de ea opinionem
accipit, eumque glorificat atque
admiratur nullo
magis quam operū demonstratio. Illa ergo gloria eius
est qui rectē factū
aliquid prastite-
rit. hec autem
Deum ipsum glo-
rificat ac quoniam
est tota ipsius est.
Gloriatur enim ob
hoc quod magna quedam de eo ce-
cipiat que ad glo-
riam eius redundant.

God.^d behold, saith he, it appeareth that this commeth of faith. M. Bishops argument therefore maketh against himselfe, and proueth that we are iustified rather by faith then by charity, because it is faith principally that yeeldeth honour vnto God. The last place alleaged out of Austin, is nothing against vs; for although we defend that a man is iustified by faith alone, yet wee say that both faith, hope, and charity must concurre, to accomplish the perfection of a Christian man, whereof anon we shall see further.

d Ibid. Ecce hoc fidei esse apparuit.

23. W. BISHOP.

The third of these trifling reasons, is perversly propounded by M. Perkins thus. Faith is neuer alone, therefore it doth not iustifie alone: That this argument is fondly framed, appeareth plainly, in that that Catholiks do not deny, but affirme, that faith may be without charity, as it is in all sinful Catholiks, we then forme the reason thus. If faith alone be the whole cause of iustification, then if both hope and charity were removed from faith (at least by thought, and in conceipt,) faith would neuertheless iustifie. But faith considered without hope and charity, will not iustifie: ergo, it is not the whole cause of iustification. The first proposition cannot be denied of them, who know the nature and propriety of causes, for the entire and total cause of any thing, being (as the Philosophers say) in act the effect must needs follow, & very sense teacheth the simple, that if any thing be set to worke, and if it doe not act that which it is set too, then there wanted some thing requisite. And consequently that was not the whole cause of that worke.

Now to the second proposition. But their imagined faith cannot apply to themselves *Christ*s righteousnesse, without the presence of hope and charity. For else he might be iustified without any hope of heauen, and without any loue towards God, and estimation of his honor, which are things most absurd in themselves: but yet very well fitting the Protestants iustification, which is nothing else but the plaine vice of presumption, as hath bene before declared: Yet to avoid this inconuenience which is so great, M. Perkins granteth, that both hope and charity must needs be present at the iustification, but doe nothing in it, but faith doth al, as the head is present to the eie, when it seeth, yet it is the eie alone that seeth. Here is a worthy peece of Philosophy, that the eie alone doth see, whereas in truth it is but the instrument of seeing, the soule being the principal cause of sight, as it is of al other actions of life, sense, & reason: and it is not to purpose here, where we require the presence of the whole cause, and not onely of the instrument all cause. And to returne your similitude vpon your selfe, as the eie cannot see without the head, because it receiveth influence from it, before it can see, so cannot faith iustifie without charity, because it necessarily receiveth spirit of life from it, before it can do any thing acceptable in Gods sight.

R. ABBOT.

He may indeede very iustly call them trifling reasons, if at least trifles may carry the name of reasons. As for this reason it is not peruersely propounded by Maister Perkins, but in such sort, as some of Maister Bishops part haue propounded it vpon supposal of our assertion, that faith can neuer be alone. But as he propoundeth it himselfe, the termes of his argument being declared, the answer will be plaine, and he shall be found a Sophister onely, and no sound disputer. It is therefore to be vnderstood, that remouing or separating of things one from the other, is either reall in the subiect, or mentall in the vnderstanding. Reall separation of faith and charity we wholly denie, so as that true faith can no where bee found, but it hath charity infallibly conioyned with it. Separation mentall in vnderstanding and consideration, is either negatiue or prinatiue. Negatiue, when in the vnderstanding there is an affirming of one, and denying of another, and the one is considered as to be without the other: which vnderstanding in things that cannot be really & indeed separated in the subiect, is false vnderstanding, and not to be admitted. Separation prinatiue in vnderstanding is, whē of things that cannot be separated indeed, yet a man vnderstandeth the one, and omitteth to vnderstand the other: considereth the one, and considereth not the other. Thus though light and heate cannot be separated in the fire, yet a man may consider the light, and not consider the heate: though in the reasonable soule, vnderstanding, reason, memory, and will, and in the sensitiue part the faculties of seeing, hearing, smelling, &c. cannot be remoued or separated one from the other, yet a mā may cōceiue, or mind one of these, without hauing consideration of the rest. Now if M. Bishop by negatiue separation, do remoue hope & charity frō faith, so as that his mening is, that if faith alone do iustifie, thē thogh there be neither hope nor charity yet faith will neuerthelesse iustifie, his maior proposition is false. For though it be true, that the totall cause of any thing being in act, the effect must needs follow, yet from the total cause can we not separate those things, together with which it hath in nature his existence and being, and without which it cannot be in act for the producing of the effect, though they conferre nothing thereto; because that is to denie the being of it, and the destroying of the cause. But if his meaning be, that if faith alone do iustifie, then though we consider not hope & charitie as concurring therewith, yet it selfe doth iustifie, we graunt his maior proposition for true, but his minor is not true. We say, that faith considered without hope and charity (that is, hope and charity not considered with it) doth iustifie. Then saith he, a man may be iustified without any hope of heauen, and without any loue towards God, or estimation of his honour. True say I, if his meaning be, that the hope of heauen, or loue of God, and estimation of his honour be excepted only prinatuely, and onely not considered with faith as causes of iustification. But if his meaning bee, as it is, that a man then is iustified without hauing any hope of heauen, or loue towards God, or estimation of his honour, hee plaieith the part onely of a brabler, inferring a reall separation of those things in the subiect, which the argument supposeth onely respectiuey separated in the vnderstanding. Here is then no presumption in the Protestants iustification, but M. Bishop is much to be condemned of presumption, that hauing left his head at Rome, and broken his braines in contending against the Iesuites, he would notwithstanding take vpon him to be a writer, and do it so vainely and idly as he hath done. According to that that hath bene said, M. Perkins answereth, that though faith be neuer subsisting without hope and loue and other graces of God, yet in regard of the act of iustification, it is alone without them all, euen as the eye in regard of substance and being is neuer alone, yet in respect of seeing it is alones for it is the eye onely that doth see. Here is (saith M. Bishop) a worzhie peece of Philosophy, that the eye alone doth see. Why I pray, what is the default? Marry the eye is but the instrument of seeing, saith hee, the soule being the principall cause of sight, as it is of all other actions of life, sense and reason. But did not your sense and reason serue you to vnderstand that M. Perkins meant accordingly, that the eye alone doth see, that is, that the eye alone of all the members & parts, is the instrument instrument of seeing, and proportionably that faith alone of all the vertues and graces of the soule, is the instrument of iustification? As the soule then seeth only by the eie, so the soule spiritually receiueth iustification by faith alone. If his head had stood the right way, he might very easily haue conceiued that M. Perkins in saying that the eie alone doth see, did not meane to exclude the soule that seeth by the eie, but only all other parts of the body from being conformed with the eie in the soules imploiment and seruice for that vse. And that that M. Perkins saith therein, is directly to the purpose, because the question is not here of the whole cause of iustification, but onely of the instrumental cause. Of the efficient & final cause of iustification there is no questiō, which is, God in Iesus Christ, for our saluation and the glory of his name. The materiall cause we say and haue proued to be the merite and obedience of Christ. The formall cause is Gods imputation, apprehēded and receiued by vs. The instrument of this apprehension we say is fath alone, which is the very point here disputed of. But here he will returne the similitude vpon vs; the eie cannot see without the head, because it receiueth influence from the head before it can see. Be it so: no more can faith iustifie without Christ, Without God, whose ordinance & gift it is, of whom it hath it force and power, being by him as peculiarly appointed to iustifie, as the eie is to see. The eie is a natural instrument, receiuing his influence frō the head wherof it is naturally a member and part: but faith is an instrument supernatural; not any naturall part or power and faculty of the soule, but the instinēt and worke of God, and therefore receiueth all the force and influence that it hath, from the spirit of Iesus Christ. But he maketh other application hereof. So cannot faith iustifie without charity, because it necessarily receiueth spirit of life frō it, before it can do any thing acceptable in Gods sight. So then charity is the head, and faith the eie, and we must needs take it so, because M. Bishop hath told vs that it is so. But if it be so, then it should be as strange a matter to see faith without charity, as it is to see an eie without an head; as strange that charity being extinguished and gone, there should remaine a faith whereby to beleeue; as that the head being dead, there should remaine an eie whereby to see. But that that giueth influence and life to an other thing, must needs haue a priority to that that receiueth it. charity hath no priority to faith, but charity it selfe is obtained by faith. For ^a faith is the beginning to bee ioyned vnto God. ^b Faith is first giuen, by which the rest is obtained; ^c which being first giuen vnrquested, at the request thereof all other benefis or good things doe ensue and follow. ^d Faith is the roote and foundation of good works; from which unlesse they grow, they are not to be called good; ^e euen that root of righteousness wherby the Lord imputeth righteousness without works, which receiuing the dew or shoure sticketh in the ground that thence the branches may spring which bring forth the fruits of good works. Faith is ^f the nest wherin we are to lay our works, that we may hatch them vnto God. Faith is ^g the mother of a good will, and iust and righteous conuersation. Our faith in Christ is ^h Christ in vs, and ⁱ that heauenly Sun is either impaired or increased vnto me, saith Ambrose, according to my faith. In a word, S. Austin telleth vs, that ^k faith is the soule of our soule, & what is that to say, but the life of all our life? It is faith then, and not charity, that giueth influence to al the rest, euen to charity it selfe; as faith increaseth, so other graces are increased; as faith decreaseth, so other graces decrease: the life of faith is our life: the strength of faith is our strength: if our faith be weake, there is nothing else wherby we can be strong. Therefore M. Bishop goeth much awry (yet no otherwise then hee is wont to do) in assigning to charity to giue the spirit of life and influence to faith, when as it is by faith that we ^m receiue the spirit which is the author of al spiritual life and grace, & on which all our state dependeth towards God.

24 W. BISHOP.

The fourth reason, if faith alone do iustifie, then faith alone wil saue, but it wil not saue, ergo. M. Perkins first denieth the proposition, & saith That it may iustifie, and yet not saue: because more is required to saluation then to iustification, which is false: for put the case that an innocent babe die shortly after his baptisme wherin he was iustified, shal he not be saued for want of any thing? I hope you will say yes: euen so any man that is iustified, if he depart in that state, no man makes doubt of his saluation, therefore this first hist was very friuolous. Which M Per. perceiuing flies to a second, that for faith alone we shall also be saued, & that good works shal not be regarded at the day of our iudgement. Then must those words of the holy Ghost so often repeated in the Scriptures, be razed out of the text. God at that time wil render vnto euery man according to his works. But of this more amply in the question of merits.

a Eccles. 15. 11.
b Aug. de pred. s. sanct. cap. 7. Fides prima datur, ex qua impendentur cetera.
c Prop. de voc. gen. lib. 1 cap. 6. Cum fides data fuerit non petunt istius iam petitionibus bona cetera consequuntur.
d Aug. in Psal. 31. Laudo superedificationem boni operi: sed agnosco fidei fundamentum: sicut radicem. Nec vobis illa (opera) propter lacrimam quadammodo de radice bona procedant.
e Origen. in Ro. cap. 4. Fides tanquam radix omnino suscepto heret: in anime solo vbi surgant rami qui fructus operum ferant: nulla scilicet radix iustitiae qua Deus accepto fert iustitiam sine operibus.
f Aug. in Psal. 83. Fides nidus est pilulorum: uorum: in hoc nido operare operatus.
g Prop. de voc. gen. li. c. 8. Fides bene uoluntatis est: iuste actione est genitrix.
h Aug. in Ps. 120. Christus in corde vestro fides est.
i Ambr. in Luc. li. c. 21. M. hi soli ille celestium neque fide uel meritis uel augetur.
k Aug. in Joan. tract. 49. Unde mer. in anima? Quia fides non est. Ergo anima non anima fides est. I. Cyprian. ad Quirinum. lib. 3. cap. 43. Tantū possumus: quantum credimus. n. Galat. 3. 14.

R. ABBOT.

^a Tertul. de pœnit.
Horum bonorum
unus est titulus sa-lus hominis crimi-
num pœnitentiam abolitione præ-
missa.

Tertullian rightly saith,^a the saluation of man is the one title of all the benefites of God, forgiuenesse of sinnes being put in the first place. If saluation be the whole, and iustification but a part, then more is required to saluation then to iustification, because more is required to the whole then to a part. Vnder saluation we comprehend both iustification and sanctification in this world, & life and blisse eternall in the world to come. The first act of our saluation is our iustification; but God hauing by iustification reconciled vs vnto him, goeth forward by sanctification ^b to make vs meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light. To iustification belongeth onely faith; to sanctification all other vertues and graces, wherein consisteth that ^c holinesse without which no man shall see the Lord. His exception as touching infants dying after baptisme, is very idle. They are not onely iustified by forgiuenesse of sinnes, but also sanctified by the spirit of grace; neither is there any man iustified to the title of eternall life, but the same is together also sanctified to the possession thereof, and therefore hath more to saluation then onely iustification. But as touching the very point, his minor proposition is false. We say, that we are saued also by faith onely, according to that that before J alledged out of Origen, that ^d for faith only Christ said to the woman, Thy faith hath saued thee. Hath saued thee, faith he, as a thing already done, according to the vsuall phrase of the Scripture in that behalf. For so it is said of Zaccheus, ^e This day saluation is come to this house. So saith the Apostle, ^f He hath saued vs, and called vs with a holy calling; ^g of his owne mercy he hath saued vs. The reason whereof is, because in iustification, as I haue said, our saluation is begun, and in that wee are iustified wee are saued, Christ therein being giuen vs, and in him the interest and title of eternall life thenceforth by that right onely to be continued and performed vnto vs. Being then iustified by faith alone, wee are saued by faith alone, the gift of sanctification to holinesse and good works being necessarily cōsequent, nor as by vertue wherof we are to be saued, whom the Scripture pronounceth to be already saued, but as the processe of Gods worke, for accomplishment of that saluation, whereto in iustification we are begotten, and in way of inheritāce intituled by faith alone. We are saued by faith alone, faith

M. Perkins

^b Col. 1. 12.

^c Heb. 12. 14.

^d Origen in Ro.
cap. 3. sup. scilicet. 21.

^e Luke 19. 9.

^f 2. Tim. 1. 9.

^g Tit. 3. 5.

M. Perkins, because faith alone is the instrument whereby we apprehend Christ, who onely is our saluation. Where obserue, gentle Reader, what M. Bishop maketh of that speech, that for faith alone we are saued, and that good works shall not be regarded at the day of our iudgement. Os impudens. Where doth M. Perkins say, that good works shall not be regarded at the day of our iudgement? What? a Doctor of diuinitie to lie? wilfully to lie? What is this but meere varlettric, to abuse his Reader, not beeing carefull haply to looke into M. Perkins booke, but taking it vpon his word. But if thou haue M. Perkins booke, I pray thee to looke to the obiections and answers set downe in the end of this question of Iustification, which M. Bishop hath vnHonestly left out; and there in the answer to the sixt Obiection, thou shalt find these words, In equitie the last iudgement is to proceed by works, because they are the fittest means to make triall of euery mans cause, and serue fitly to declare whom God hath iustified in this life. By which words thou maicst esteeme how little faith or credite is to bee yeilded to this wretched man, who doubteth not heere with manifest falshood, to affirme that M. Perkins faith, that good works shall not bee regarded at the daie of our iudgement. And by the same words the solution is plaine to the words which he alledgeth; for God shall render to the faithfull ^b according to their works, because good workes are the proper markes whereby God will take knowledge of them that are iustified and saued onely by faith in Christ. For whom God hath iustified and saued, vpon them he fetch the seale and marke of his Spirit, working in them another nature, and ⁱ creating them in Christ Iesus vnto good works, whereby he will thenceforth know them to belong to him, and thereby at that day will put difference betwixt them and other men. So that to speak of saluation in that sort as we commonly vnderstand it, for the finall blisse and saluation that we expect in heauen, faith alone in it selfe is not sufficient to saluation, because though we bee interested to it onely by faith, yet somewhat else is required to prepare vs and fit vs to bee partakers thereof. And to speak of saluation in grosse, faith alone excudeth not sanctification and good workes, but includeth them, as a part of that saluation whereof we are made partakers by faith alone, so that rightly are we said to bee saued by faith alone, because nothing else doth giue vs any title, and it selfe alone doth giue vnto vs all other things.

^b Matt. 16. 27.

ⁱ Ephes. 1. 10.

things that are necessaric to saluation.

25. W. BISHOP.

5. Reason. There bee many other vertues, vnto which iustification and saluation are ascribed in Gods word: therefore faith alone sufficeth not. The Antecedent is prooued, first of feare it is said: He that is without feare, cannot be iustified. We are saued by hope. Vnlesse you do penance, you shall all in like sort perish. We are translated from death to life, (that is iustified) because we loue the brethren. Againe of Baptisme: Vnlesse you bee borne againe of water and the holy Ghost, you cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen. Lastly we must haue a resolute purpose to amend our euill lines: For we are buried together with Christ by baptisme into death, that as Christ is risen from the dead, &c. so we may also walke in newnesse of life. To all these and many such like places of holy Scripture, it pleased M. Perkins to make answer in that one: You are saued by hope: to wit, that Pauls meaning is only, that we haue not as yet saluation in possession, but must waite patiently for it, vntill the time of our full deliuerance; this is all. Now whether that patient expectation, which is not hope, but issueth out of hope, of eternall saluation, or hope it selfe bee any cause of saluation, he saith neither yea nor nay, & leaues you to thinke as it seemeth best vnto your selfe. S. Paul then affirming it to bee a cause of saluation, it is best to beleue him: and so neither to exclude hope or charitie, or any of the foresaid vertues from the worke of iustification, hauing so good warrant as the word of God, for the confirmation of it.

Ecclesia. 1.

Rom. 8.

Lu. 13.

1. Ioh. 3.

Rom. 6.

Rom. 8.

R. ABBOT.

Iustification before God is no where in all the Scripture ascribed to any other vertue saue onely faith: the promise of saluation is sometimes adioined to other vertues, as fruits & marks of them whom God hath saued, but neuer as causes thereof, as in the question of merits shall appeare. We may well thinke that M. Bishop was heere shrewdly put to his shifts, that in all the Scripture could find no plainer proofes to serue his turne. M. Perkins propounded but one place for them; hee thought himselfe to lay on loades, and yet cannot bring vs any thing whereby it is said that wee are iustified, but onely faith. His first place is taken out of an Apocryphall Scrip-

Scripture, and yet such as it is, it saith nothing for him. First his translation is false; for the words as their owne Arias Montanus translate them, are these, ^a A man giuen to much anger cannot bee iustified; that is, cannot bee acquitted of doing amisse, cannot be cleared of committing offence, because as S. James saith, ^b the wrath of man doth not accomplish the right consesse of God, euen in like sort as the same Ecclesiasticus after saith, ^c he that sweareth vainely shall not be iustified: and againe, ^d a vittualler shall not bee iustified of sinne. For so is the Scripture wont continually to vse the word of iustifying for acquitting, cleating, discharging, holding or pronouncing guiltlesse and innocent, approuing, allowing, acknowledging for iust, and such like, as where it is said, ^e which iustifie the wicked for reward; ^f shall I iustifie the false ballance? he willing to iustifie himselfe &c. Secondly therefore if the words be taken as he translateth them, he that is without feare cannot be iustified, he is as farre off from his purpose. For the words import to the same effect, that he that is without feare shall not be found innocent, he shall not be found free from great sinne, because the want of feare maketh a man bold to runne into all sinne: but a verie senslesse man is he that would go about hereby to proue, that a man is iustified by feare. Againe he bringeth the words of Christ, ^h Unlesse ye repent (doe penance, saith he, according to their foolerie) ye shall all likewise perish. And what of this? Ergo forsooth a man must bee iustified by doing of penance. Yea? and is doing of penance a matter of iustification now? But Ambrose sayeth, that the Apostle calleth them the blessed, of whom God hath decreed, that without labour, or any obseruation they are iustified with God onely by faith: there being required of them no labour of penance but onely to beleue. Why then doth Master B. shop tell vs, that we are iustified by doing of penance? Our Sauiour spake nothing there in their behalfe, and verie absurdly doe they applie that that was meant of inward conversion and repentance, to outward and ceremoniall obseruation of doing penance. As for repentance, it setteth foorth the subiect capable of iustification by faith, but is it selfe ouely an acknowledgment of sinne, no healing of our wound. The feeling of paine and sicknesse, causeth a man to seeke for remedie, but it is no remedie it selfe. Hunger and thirst maketh a man to desire and seeke for foode, but a man is not sed by being hungrie.

a Eccles. 1. 27.
 b S. Iacobus 1. 2.
 c Eccl. 2. 17.
 d Eccl. 2. 17.
 e Eccl. 2. 17.
 f Eccl. 2. 17.
 g Eccl. 2. 17.
 h Eccl. 2. 17.

e Eccl. 5. 23.
 f Mich. 6. 11.
 g Luk. 10. 29.

h Luk. 13. 3.

i Ambros. in Ro.
 cap. 4. Deo: dicit
 de quibus hoc fauisset Deus, ut
 sine labore et a-liqua obseruatio-
 ne sola fide iustifi-
 ficentur apud
 Deum. In patib.
 10. Nihil ab his requisitum a peni-
 tentia et operibus
 tantum in con-
 ditione.

By repentance we know our selues, we feele our sicknesse, we hunger and thirst after grace, but the hand which we stretch foorth to receiue it, is faith onely, without which repentance is nothing but darknesse and despaire. As for vs, we hold it a very mad conclusion to say Except ye repent ye shall perish, therefore we are iustified by repentance: We rather see by repentance, that we haue nothing in our selues whereby to be iustified, and therefore learne to relie wholly vpon Christ, that we may be iustified by faith in him. The next place that he allegeth is a most notable falsification. We are translated, saith he, from death to life, because we loue the brethren; Whereas the words of S. Iohn are; ⁱ We know that we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren, making our loue of the brethren a signe whereby we know that we are translated frō death to life, not the cause for which we are translated frō death to life. And in this sort doth S. Austin expōūd it; ⁱ We know. What do we know? That we haue passed from death to life. Whereby do we know it? Because we loue the brethren. Which is very plaine; also by comparing the tēses in which the Apostle expresth the one & the other. For he nameth our translating from death to life in the^mpreterperfect tense, as a thing before done, but our loue towards the brethren in theⁿpresent tense, as a thing which now we do. We know that we haue passed, or God hath translated vs from death to life, because we loue the brethren. But our louing the brethren now cannot be the cause of that that God hath done before. It is therefore a token onely whereby we are to know what God hath done. And to take it as M. Bishops doth, is the doctrine of Pelagius, that the grace of God is giuen vnto vs according to our meritis, as before is shewed. The next place is of Baptisme, as he saith, ⁰ Except a man be borne againe of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God. But we can hardly yeeld that this place is precisely to be vnderstood of baptisme; because it is not true, that except a man be baptized, he shall not enter into the kingdome of God, but it is infallibly true which Christ saith, that except a man be borne againe of water and of the holy ghost, he shall not enter into the kingdome of God. Verie wel is it obserued by Bernard, that our Sauiour saith, ⁱ He that beleeneth and is baptized, shall be saned; but doth not say, he that is not baptized, but onely, he that beleeneth not shall be damned. The thiefe was not baptized vpon the crosse, but yet Christ saith, ⁱ Joh. 3. 14.

ⁱ Aug. in epist. 1
Ioan. tract. 5.

Nos scimus.
Quid nos scimus? Quia tristissimus de morte ad vitam. Unde scimus? Quia diligimus fratres. Ἐν ὄν μεταβέβηκαμεν ἐκ τοῦ θανάτου, &c. ἡμεῖς ἀπομνησθῆμεν.

⁰ Joh. 3. 5.

p Bernard. Epist. 77. Videne forsē ob hoc saluati erim diceres. Qui crediderit & baptizatus fuerit, saluus erit, caute & vigilant er nō repeterit. Qui vero baptizatus non fuerit, sed tantum, qui verō, inquit, non crediderit condemnabitur.

This day shalt thou bee with me in paradise. Valentinian the Emperour was not baptuzed, and yet Ambrose saith, because he desired it, he receiued it. S. Arstin acknowledgeth as touching them that are of elder yeares and do belecue, that baptisme is inuisibly fulfilled in them, when not any contempt of religion, but a point of necessity excludeth the mysterie of it. Which dispensation we cannot conceiue what warrant hee had to giue to elder yeares that should not make the same good to infants also, when the faith of the parents by which they are interested to baptisme, craueth the same for them, & only by preuention inuincible they are deprived of their desire, it being deemed a thing belonging to the mercifulnes of God, that grace should yeeld, that the faith of others should be available for the so whom yeares yet do not yeeld to beleue themselues. But hereby it appeareth, that that speech of Christ is not simply to bee vnderstood of baptisme, because then baptisme should bee simply necessary to saluation both in old and yong. Yet admitting it to be meant of baptisme, we say his argument is very vaine; and to say, baptisme is necessarie so saluation, therefore we are not iustified by faith alone, is all one as if he should say, It is necessary to saluation to bee iustified by faith alone, therefore we are not iustified by faith alone. For baptisme, as I said before, is the seale of the righteousnesse of faith, wherein God setteth before vs, and by which he giueth and sealeth and assureth vnto vs the washing away of our sins, and the accepting of vs for iust and righteous by the merit and bloudshedding of Iesus Christ onely by faith in him. It is not then the washing away of the filth of the flesh, that is, the outward ceremony, for which baptisme is necessary to saluation, but the spirituall grace, which is iustification by faith alone. This God offereth in baptisme, and wee by faith receiue the same, but wee shall do amisse to put baptisme it selfe in place of that that is offered thereby. Wee eat the meate out of the dishes and vessels wherein it is set before vs, but it is absurd thereupon to say, that we are fed by the dishes also, and not onely by the meate. It is Christ onely who in the word and Sacraments is set forth vnto vs to be our righteousnesse, and by faith onely, we therein receiue him to be our righteousnesse and euerlasting life; but absurd it is heereupon to say, that the Sacraments themselves are things wherein our righteousnesse doth consist. Now therefore except a man in baptisme be borne againe, becoming a member of Christ

q Luk 23.43.
r Amb. de obit.
Faler in. Cerid
quia poposent ac-
cepit.
f Aug. de bap-
t. cont. Donat. lib. 4.
cap. 22. Tunc im-
pletur inuisibilit-
cum mysteriū bap-
tismi non contem-
ptu religionis sed
articulu necessi-
tatis excludit.
r Berna d. epist.
77. Dignum est et ad Dei spectat
benignitatem, ut
quibus fidem et asdenegat propriam,
gratia prodesset
concedat alienam.

u Rom. 4. 11.

x 1. Pet. 3. 21.

and the child of God through forgiveness of sinnes onely by faith in him, by vertue thereof receiving the spirit of adoption, & being thereby quickned to newnesse of life to walke therein, hee cannot as Christ saith, enter into the kingdome of God. And hereby it appeareth, that his other place as touching walking in newnesse of life is impertinently alledged, the words importing no more then what we teach, that newnesse of life is alwaies and necessarily a consequent fruite of justification, though neuer any precedent cause thereof. But the place of greatest moment for their part, was that that M. Perkins propounded for his obiectiō. We are saued by hope. As touching this place M. Bishop saith, that M. Perkins saith neither yea nor nay, but leaues the reader to thinke as it seemeth best vnto himselfe, whether hope be any cause of saluatiō, and yet M. Perkins words are plainely these, We are not saued by hope because it is any cause of our saluatiō. The meaning of S. Paul as he declareth is this, We are saued by hope; that is, we haue our saluation in hope, but not yet in act: we enioy it in expectation, but not yet in possession. In which sort he saith in another place, that being iustified by the grace of God wee are made heires as touching hope of eternall life. We haue not yet the fruition of eternal life, but yet in hope we are inheritors thereof. And hence did S. Austin take the ground of that exception which many times he vseth by distinction of that that we are in hope, and that that we are indeed or in reall being. Whereof hee speaketh directly to declare the meaning of these words of the Apostle, we haue now the first fruits of the spirit, whence we are (reipsa) indeed the sonnes of God, but for the rest, as (spe) in hope wee are saued, as in hope we are renewed, so are wee also the sonnes of God: but because (reipsa) indeed we are not yet saued, therefore we are not yet fully renewed: we are not yet the sonnes of God, but the children of this world. Again he saith, a A man wholly in hope, and partly also in act or indeed is renewed in spirituall regeneration. Of the Church being without spot or wrinkle; b Then shall that be performed indeed, to which now by profiting we walke in hope. Thus of Gods raising us vp together with Christ, and setting us together with him in heavenly places, c He hath not yet done it really, but in hope. d Really we are yet the children of wrath, saith he, but in hope we are not so. e Reioyce that in body thou art redeemed, not yet indeed, or in reall effect, but in hope we are out of doubt: By al which it is plaine, that the Apostle named not hope as a cause of the saluation.

¶ Tit. 3. 7.

2. Aug. de pec. mer. & remis. l. 2.

c. 8. Primitias spe

nunchabamus

unde iam filij Dei re

ipsa facti sumus:

in ceteris vero spe

ficit salus, sicut

innouati, ita & filij

Dei: re autem

ipsa quia nondum

salui, ita nondum

plene innouati,

nondum etiam filij

Dei sed filij seculi

a Ibid. cap. 10. Homo totus in spe

iam, et iam in re

ex parte regenerati-

one spirituali

renouatus.

b Epist. 57. Tunc

perficitur in re,

quod nunc proficere

do ambulatur in spe.

c De bapt. cont.

Donat. lib. 1. c. 4.

Nondum in re

scia in spe.

d In Psal. 37. Re-

sumus adhuc filij

ira. spe non sumus

c Ibid. Gaude te

redemptum corpo-

re, sed nondum re-

spe securus esto.

uation that we hope for, but only to signifie the not hauing as yet really of the thing whereof the hope we haue embraced. And it hath no sense, that hope should be made a cause of the thing hoped for, because the very name of hope importeth some former ground or cause from whence we conceiue our hope, & by vertue whereof we expect that which we hope for, and doe not therefore hope to obtaine it, because we hope. Thus M. Bishop hath neither S. Paul nor any other testimony of Scripture, whereby to giue warrant, that either hope or any other vertue, hath any part in the worke of iustification, but only faith. As touching the nature of hope ^a before hath bene spoken, and it hath bene shewed, that as ^a Cap. 3. sect. 20. the Scripture vnderstandeth it, it is nothing else but a patient and constant expectation of that which we by faith in the promise of God doe assuredly belecue shall come vnto vs.

• 26. W. BISHOP.

To these authorities & reasons, taken out of the holy Scripture, let vs ioin here some testimonies out of the ancient Church reseruing the rest vnto that place, wherein Master Perkins citeth some for him, the most ancient and most valiant Martyr Saint Ignatius, of our iustifications writeth thus: The beginning of life is faith, but the end of it is cha-^{Epist. ad Philip.} ric, but both vnited and ioined together, do make the man of God perfect.

Clement Patriarsh of Alexandria saith: Faith goeth before, but ^{Lib. 2. Sc. om.} fear doth build, and charity bringeth to perfection.

Saint Iohn Chriostome Patriarch of Constantinople, hath these ^{Hom. 70. in Mat} words: Least the faithful shold trust that by faith alone they might be saued he disputeth of the punishment of euill men, and so doth he both exhort the Infidels to faith and the faithfull to liue well.

S. Augustine crieth out as it were to our Protestants, & saith, Heare ^{Lib. 3. Hypogouf.} o foolish heretik, and enemy to the true faith. Good works, which (that they may be done, are by grace prepared, and not of the merits of free will) we condemne not: because by them, or such like, men of God haue bene iustified, are iustified and shall be iustified. And, Now let vs see that which is to be shaken out of the hearts of ^{De fide & opor;} the faithfull: Least by euill security they lose their saluation, if they ^{cap. 14.} shall thinke faith alone to be sufficient to obtaine it.

Now the doctrine which M. Perkins teacheth is cleane contrarie.

For (saith he) A sinner is iustified by faith alone, that is, nothing that man can doe by nature or grace, concurrereth thereto as any kind of cause but faith alone. Farther he saith, that faith it selfe is no principall, but rather an instrumentall cause, whereby we apprehend and apply Christ & his righteousnesse for our iustification. So that in fine we haue, that faith so much by them magnified & called the onely and whole cause of our iustification, is in the end become no true cause at all, but a bare condition, without which we cannot be iustified. If it be an instrumentall cause, let him then declare what is the principall cause, whose instrument faith is? and chuse whether he had leither to haue charity, or the soule of man without any helpe of grace.

Conditio sine qua non.

R. ABBOT.

Of his five proofs there is but only one that maketh any mention of iustification by works. The two first were surely put in but only to fill vp a roome; for there is not so much as any shew of any thing against vs. For although we defend, that a man is iustified by faith only, yet do we not make faith onely the full perfection of a iustified man. In the naturall body the heart onely is the seate and fountaine of life, and yet a man consisteth not only of a heart, nor is a perfect man by hauing a heart, but many other members and parts are required, some for substance, some for ornament, which make vp the perfection of a man; whereof if any be wanting, it is an imperfection, so that ^a if but one ey-brow be shauen, as S. Austine saith, though in a maner nothing be taken from the body, yet it causeth a great blemish vnto it. Euen so is it in the iustified man; faith onely is the seate and fountaine of spiritual life, because as the quickning faculty & power of the liuing soule dwelleth in the heart, so Christ who is our life dwelleth in our faith, or in our hearts by faith; but yet we consist not spiritually of faith onely, but many other vertues and graces are required to make vp the perfection of a Christian man, to which as to the other members from the heart, so from faith life is imparted and communicated, that in them wee may be aliue to God. Thus then Ignatius saith not purposely of iustification, but by occasion of commending faith and loue, that b faith is the beginning of life, &c. Which maketh for vs altogether against him. For if faith be the beginning of life, then by faith we first first liue. By faith therefore we are iustified; for to be iustified, as M. Bishop confessed in the former section, is to be translated from death. Now as naturall birth draweth not only guilt but also corruption; as hath bene before shewed, so faith wherein is our new birth, giueth not onely forgiuenesse of sinnes to iustification, but also sanctification to holinesse and newnesse of life, the summe whereof is charitie, because charitie is the epitome and brieft of the whole law, and herein further is accomplished our perfection towards God; so as that faith and lone united and ioyned together, do make perfect the man of God. The place of Clemens Alexandrinus is the same, and needeth no further answer. With Chrystostome wee say, that faith alone sufficeth not absolutely, though faith alone suffice to iustification. Charitie and good workes are necessarie to the perfection of a iustified man, but he is not by them made a iustified man. Therefore the same Chrystostome saith of Abraham, That a man that is without workes should be saued by faith, it should be no strange matter, but that he that hath made himselfe renowned by his good workes should yet not be iustified thereby but by faith, this is wonderfull, and doth greatly set forth the power of faith. S. Austin, in the place by him alleged, if it were S. Austin, auoucheth good workes to iustifie them that are iustified, that is, to approue them iust; but condemneth the auouching of any workes whereby to obtaine iustification, and purposely in that place d sputeth against it. d By workes no flesh shall be iustified in the sight of God, because the righteousnesse of God by his preventing mercy, through the faith of Iesus Christ, is apparent upon all that do beleene. I therefore the Apostle saith, we are iustified freely by the grace of God. Put not thine owne workes before it, nor glorie thereof, because by workes no flesh shall be iustified before him. if no workes go before iustification, then M Bishops cause, as too weake, must go to the wals, because then we cannot be said to be iustified by workes; for being iustified before, we cannot be sayd properly to be iustified by workes that follow after, and if neither by works before nor after, then not at all. It followeth therefore, that when S. Austine saith in that place, that men of God are iustified by good workes, he must needs meane as Thomas Aquinas saith S. Iames doth, quantum ad manifestationem iustitia, by way of manifesting and declaring that a man is iustified, so as that contrarie to M. Bishops assertion, they are only signes and tokens of a iustified man, not any

^a Aug. de ciuit. Dei lib. 11. ca. 22. Si unum radatur supercilium, quam propemodum nihil corpori & quam multum detrahatur pulchritudini?

^b Ignat. Epist. ad Ephes. for which M. Bisirop following his Master Bellarmine, misquoth, Ep. ad Philippenses.

c Chrysad Rom.
hom 8 Fide saluari cum qui opera non habet, nihil fortasse fuerit insolentia. cetero verò qui rectè factus se conspicuus in fecerit, non ex ipsis sed ex fide iustum fieri, hoc scilicet admirabile est & quod maxime fidei potentiam manifestat.

d Agust. Hypo-
pognost. lib. 3. Ex operibus no iustificabitur omnis caro coram illo quia iustitia Dei præsentu misericordie per fidem Iesus apparuit super omnes qui crederunt. Idèd & subintendem inquit, iustificati grati per gratiã Dei. Neli ei præponere opera propter, a n ex eis iustificare, quia ex operibus non etc.
e Thom. Aquin.
Gal. cap. 3. lect. 4.

causes of iustification. Therefore S. Austin saith againe anon after, Iustification hath bene giuen, is giuen, and shall be giuen to them that beleue, by the faith of Iesus Christ. Now that which he saith in the words cited by M. Bishop, he saith it not as to the Protestant, but to the Pelagian heretike the brother of the Papist, for affirming good workes of mans free will before the iustifying grace of God, for which the iustifying grace of God is bestowed vpon him. Which opinion S. Austin hauing confuted, bringeth in the heretike objecting thus, Thou wilt say, Dost thou then condōne the good workes of free will, in that thou saiest that right consnesse is not due by workes? If so, why then doth the Apostle command vs to abound in good workes? To which he answereth: Hearken thou foolish heretike and enemy of the true faith. We condemne not the good workes of free will, which that they may be done, are prepared by the preuenting of grace vpon no merite of free will, and the same preuenting grace causing, directing & effecting that they do abound in free will, because by such men of God haue bin, are, & shall bee iustified in Christ. But by diuine authority wee condemne the workes of free will which are put before grace, and are extolled for vs by these as it were merites to be iustified in Christ. Where verie plainly by the name of the workes of free will, hee excludeth all workes before the grace of iustification, from being any causes thereof, & only in men of God, who are first iustified that they may be men of God; affirmeth a iustification by works in that sense as S. Iames speaketh thereof, which, as I haue said, is nothing else but a declaration and testimonie of their being formerly iustified by the faith of Iesus Christ. In what sense he speaketh of free will, it hath bene shewed before in the question of that matter, and that hee acknowledgeth no free will to righteousness, but onely that that wee doe, which is made free by the grace of God. To the last place of S. Austine we willingly subscribe, condemning them who thinke that onely faith is sufficient to obtaine saluation, and do neglect to liue well, and by good workes to keepe the way of God; which last words seruing plainely to open S. Austins meaning, M. Bishop very honestly hath left out. We teach no such faith as S. Austin there speaketh of. We teach onely such a faith as iustificieth it selfe alone, but is neuer found alone in the iustified man, neuer but accompanied with holinesse and care of godly life, and therefore condemne those as spirits of Satan, which teach a faith sufficient to obtaine saluation without any regard of

*S. August. super Iustificat. 20. per
d. in Iesu Christi
act. est, datur da-
bitur credentibus.*

*g. libel. Ergo inq̄-
e damnas of orz
liberi arbitrij bona quia dicitur in sufficiam ex operibus
non debent? &c.
h. Auli heretice
stulte & inimice fides veritate. Opera liberi arbitrij bona que ut fiant preparantur per gracie preuentum
nullo libero arbitrij merito et ipsa fide
cientie gubernante & perficiuntur ut abundant in libero
arbitrio non dam-
natus, quia ex his homines Dei iusti-
ficantur & iustificantur & iustifi-cabantur in Chri-
sto. Dominamus vero aut orita e diuina opera liberi
arbitrij que gra-
tie preponuntur, & ex his tanquam
meritis in Christo
iustificari extol-
lantur.
i. De fide & oper
cap. 1. a. Si ad eam (fide) em) iobin n.
dam sufficere solā
fide n putauerint;
bonū autem vitē
re & bonis operibus vitam Dei tenere neglexerint.*

living well. The summe of our doctrine S. Austin himselfe setteth downe in the very same Chapter, that good workes ^h follow a man being iustified, but are not precedent to iustification. Now therefore in all these speeches there is hitherto nothing to crosse that which M. Perkins hath affirmed, that nothing that man can doe either by nature or grace concurrerth to the act of iustification as any cause, but faith alone. Of works of nature there is lesse questiō, but of works of grace, of workes of beleeuers the Apostle specially determinerth the question, that we are not iustified thereby, as shall appeare. M. Perkins further saith, that faith is but the instrumentall cause of iustification, as whereby we apprehend Christ to be our righteousnesse, and neuer doth any of vs make faith the onely and whole cause of iustification in any other sense. We make not the verie act of faith any part of our righteousnesse, but only the merit and obedience of Christ, apprehended and receiued by faith. But by this meanes M. Bishop saith, that faith is become no true cause at all, but a bare conditiō without which we cannot be iustified. But that is but his shallow and idle conceipt; for the necessarie instrument, especially the liuely instrument, is amongst the nūber of true causes, not being causa sine qua non, a cause without which the thing is not done, but a cause whereby it is done. Causa sine qua non is termed causa stolidi & otiosa, a foolish & idle cause, because it is only present in the action, & doth nothing therein. It is not so with faith, but as the eie is an actiue instrument for seeing, and the ear for hearing, &c. so is faith also for iustifying; and M. Bishops head was scant wise, to make a principal instrument a foolish and idle cause. But hee asketh then, whose instrument faith is? and maketh his diuision, that either it must be charity, or the soule of man without any help of grace. We answer him, that it is the instrument of the soule wrought therein by grace, being ^l the gift of God, and ^m the first gift, as before we haue heard out of Austin, whereby we obtaine the rest, and therefore whereby we obtaine charity also, so that his diuision goerh lame, and neither is faith the instrument of charity, nor yet of the soule without grace, but of the soule therein & thereby endued with the grace of God.

^l Ephes. 2. 8.
^m Aug. de prede. 8.
 sanct. cap. 7.

W. BISHOP.

But to come to his reasons. The first is taken out of these words: As Moses lift vp the serpent in the desert, so must the sonne of man bee lift vp, that whosoever beleueth in him, shall not perish, but haue life euerlasting. True, if he liue accordingly, and as his faith teacheth him: but what is this to iustification by onely faith? Marrie M. Perkins drawes it in after this fashion. As nothing was required of them who were stung by serpents, but that they should looke vpon the brazen serpent: so nothing is required of a sinner, to deliuer him from sinne, but that he cast his eyes of faith vpon Christs righteousness, and apply that to himselfe in particular. But this application of the similitude is onely mans foolish inuention, without any ground in the text. Similitudes be not in all points alike, neither must bee stretched beyond the verie point wherein the similitude lieth, which in this matter is, that like as the Israelites in the wildernesse stung with serpents, were cured by looking vpon the brazen serpent: so men infected with sin, haue no other remedy, then to embrace the faith of Christ Iesus: All this we confesse, but to say that nothing else is necessary, that is quite besides the text, & as easily reiected by vs as it is by him obruded without any authority or probability.

R. ABBOT.

Similitudes M. Bishop saith, must not be stretched beyond the verie point wherein the similitude lieth, but Christ himselfe heere directeth vs to conceiue wherein the similitude lieth. Christ himselfe expresseth, that in their looking vpon the Serpent was figured our beleeuing in him. What shall we then conceiue, but as they only by looking were cured of the sting, so we only by beleeuing are cured of sinne. So S. Austin saith; ^a As they that beheld that Serpent, were healed of the sting of the Serpents, so they who by faith behold the death of Christ, are healed of the sting of sin. And againe, A Serpent is looked vnto that a Serpent may not preuaile, & a death is looked vnto that death may not preuaile. In like sort doth Chrysostome expresse the similitude: ^b There by bodily eyes men receiued the health of the body; beere by spirituall eyes they obtaine forgiveness of all their sinnes. So saith Cyril, ^c He is shewed (hereby) to be the giver of eternall saluation to them that by true faith do looke vnto him. ^d He teacheth (sayth Theophylact) that sith the Iewes beholding the image of the brazen Serpent did escape death, much more we looking vnto him crucified and beleeuing, shall escape the death of the scoule. Thus they simply tooke the words of Christ, and made the cure to consist as on the one side

^a Aug. in Joan. tract. 12. Quomodo qui intubantur serpentem illi sanabantur a morsibus serpentum. sic qui inuentur fide mortem Christi sanatur a morsibus peccatorum. Attenditur mors ut nihil valeat mors.

^b Chrys. in Joan. hom. 26. Filii corporis oculis spectantes corpus salutem: hic incorporeis peccatorum omnium remissionem consecuti sunt.

^c Cyril. in Ioan. li. 2. cap. 20. Respicentibus in eum fide sincera eterna salutis largitor ostenditur. ^d Theophyl. in Ioan. cap. 3. Multo magis ad crucifixum respicientes & credentes anima mortem effugituros.

in looking, so on the other side in beleeuing. M. Bishop saith, that the meaning is, that men infected with sinne, haue no other remedy then to imbrace the faith of Christ Iesus. Wel then: if no other remedy, then that is the onely remedy. If that be the onely remedy, then for remedy there is nothing necessarie, but only that. And if any thing else be necessarie, then the cure is not performed by that, nor to be ascribed vnto it; for a cure cannot be said to be done by one thing, when that doth not cure without another. But as there to looking, so heere the cure is ascribed to beleeuing. It is therefore to be ascribed to nothing but faith onely. As for that which hee further requireth by his corrections & exceptions, it is but a part of the cure which is performed by faith onely. For whatsoeuer is necessary in vs to eternall life, followeth of true and liuely faith, and is ministred vnto vs in Christ Iesus, when by faith wee haue imbraced him.

 Our hearts are purified by faith; † by faith we receiue the promise of the spirit; and ‡ the law of the spirit of life which is in Christ Iesus deliuereth vs from the law of sinne and of death,* that it may neither preuaile against vs to condemnation, nor any further reigne ouer vs in conuersation, which being the gift of God, is not to be alledged to impeach the free bestowing of the grace of God.

e Act. 15. 9.

f Gal. 3. 14.

g Rom. 8. 2.

28. W. BISHOP.

His 2. reason is collected of exclusiue speeches (as he speaketh) used in Scriptures. As wee are iustified freely, not of the law, not by the law, not of works, not of our selues, not of the works of the law, but by faith: all boasting excluded: only beleue. These distinctions, whereby workes and the law, are excluded in the worke of iustification, include them much: that faith alone doth iustifie.

Gal. 2. 16.

Luk. 8. 50.

It doth not so: for these exclusiue speeches do not exclude feare, hope, and charity, more then they exclude faith it selfe. Which may be called a work of the law, as well as any other vertue, being as much required by the law as any other. But S. Pauls meaning in those places is, to exclude all such workes, as either Iew or Gentile did, or could bragge of, as done of themselves, and so thought that by them, they deserved to bee made Christians. For he truly saith, that all were concluded in sinne, and needed the grace of God, which they were to receiue of his free mercy, through the merits of Christ, and not of any desert of their owne; And that to obtaine this grace through Christ, it was not needfull, nay rather hurtfull to obserue the ceremonies of Moyses law, as Circumcision, the obseruation of any of their feasts, or fasts, nor any such like worke of the law, which the Iewes reputed so necessary. Againe, that all morall workes of the Gentiles could not deserue this grace, which workes not proceeding from charity, were nothing worth in Gods sight. And so all workes, both of Iew and Gentile, are excluded from being any meritorious cause of iustification, & consequently, all their boasting of their owne forces, their first iustification being freely bestowed upon them. Yet all this notwithstanding, a certaine vertuous disposition is required in the Iew and Gentile, whereby his soule is prepared to receiue that great grace of iustification: that say we, is faith, feare, hope, loue, and repentance, that (say the Protestants) is faith onlie. Wherefore say wee, as the excluding of workes, and boasting exclude not faith, no more do they exclude the rest, faith being as well our worke, and a worke of the law as any of the rest, and all the rest being of grace, as well as faith, and as far from boasting of, as faith is selfe. Now that out of S. Luke, beleue onely, is nothing to the purpose. For hee was bid beleue the raising of his daughter to life, and not that Christs righteousnesse was his: and faith alone may be a sufficient disposition to obtaine a myracle, but not to obtaine iustification, of which the question onely is.

Consider now good Reader, whether of our interpretations agree better with the circumstance of the text, and the iudgement of the ancient Fathers. The texts see thou in the Testament. Take for a tast, of the Fathers iudgement, S. Augustines exposition of those places of S. Paul of one of the chiefest of which, thus he speaketh: Men not vnderstanding that which the Apostle saith, We esteeme a man to be iustified without the law, thought him to say that faith sufficed a man although he liued euill, and had no good workes: which God forbid, that the vessell of election should thinke. And againe.

Therefore the Apottle saith, that a man is iustified by faith, and not of workes, because faith is first giuen, and by it the rest (which are properly called workes, and in which we liue instly) are by petition obtained.

By which it is manifest, that S. Paul excluding the workes of the law, and the workes done by our owne onelie forces, doth not meane to exclude good workes, which proceede from the helpe of Gods grace.

R. ABBOT.

R. ABBOT.

If iustification be affirmed of faith, & denied to all other things, it should seeme likely that the meaning of the Scripture is, that by faith onely we are iustified. M. Bishop answereth, that those exclusive speeches of the law, and works of the law, do no more exclude feare, hope, charity, then they exclude faith it selfe, because it is a worke of the law as well as any other vertue. But yet the Apostle teacheth vs, that the promise is ^a therefore of faith, that it may be of grace, and, b if it be of grace, it is not of workes, and therefore expressly severeth faith from ^a workes, as elsewhere he maketh a distinction betwixt ^c the law of workes, and the law of faith, so that M. Bishop in confounding faith with the workes of the law, speaketh flatly contrary to the Apostle. For the faith of Christ, though it be accidentally reduced to the law, yet is not originally intended in the law, because Christ who is the object of our faith, is in order of nature consequent to the law. For life is first propounded in the law; which when it cannot be obtained there, Christ is consequently giuen and offered vnto vs, that we may haue life in him. But we further tell him as before, that we attribute not our iustification to faith for it selfe, or as it is an act or worke, as if it were any part of our iustice or righteousness, but as the heart giueth life to the body, not by the substance of it selfe, which is but flesh as the rest of the body is, but by the vitall and quickning power of the soule that is seated therein; & as the hand feedeth the body, not as being it selfe the foode of the body, but by receiuing and ministring vnto it the meat wherewith it is sustained, euen so faith iustificeth and giueth life, by receiuing Christ to be our righteousness and life, in him ^d receiuing forgiveness of sinnes, and d inheriance amongst them that are sanctified vnto eternal life. But M. Bishop telleth vs, that the Apostles meaning in those places is, to exclude all such works as either Jew or Gentile did or could bragge of, as done of themselves, & so thought that by the they had deserved to be made Christians. A goodly toy. For sooth after they had bene Christians a long time, they began to dispute & reason the matter, whether it were for the works that before they had don, that they were made christiā? whether they had deserved by their works to be made Christians, ^e when they had their conuersation in the lusts of the flesh, in fulfilling the wil of the flesh, & of the mind, walking according to the course of this world and

a Ro. m. 4. 16.
b Cap. 11. 6.
c Cap. 3. 27.

d Act 26. 18.

e Eph. 2. 3.

and after the Prince that ruleth in the aire, the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience, as the Apostle describeth the condition both of Iewes and Gentils, before they were partakers of the grace of Christ. Were the Christians then of so slender vnderstanding as that they should make question of their deserts in that estate? Was that the thing so much laboured by the false Apostles, to perswade men that for their former deserts they were become Christians; and had the Apostle so much businesse to weane them, and withhold them from the conceit and opinion of such deserts? What should a man spend time and labour to refute so ridiculous, so senselesse and absurd deuices? Who would thinke that M. Bishop, a Doctor of Diuinitie by title, should be so simple a man, as that his Master Bellarmino could gull him, and gudgeon him with so vain a tale? The matter is plaine. After that men had accepted the faith of Christ, and were become ^f*brethren and disciples*, there came vnto them the false Apostles, and preached vnto them, ^g*Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved*. They sought to perswade men, that to the faith of Christ they must adde the obseruation of Moses law. Heere was no question, whether by any deserts they were become Christians, but being now Christians, what it was wherein they should repose themselves for iustificatiō and saluation. The Galathians were amongst others intangled by those false Apostles, and hauing before ^h*receiued the Gospel*, ⁱ*hauing bene baptized into Christ*, ^k*hauing receiued the spirit*, yea and ^l*hauing suffered many things for the Gospell*, yet were brought to the adioining of circumcision and the law to the faith of Iesus Christ, to be iustified thereby. This the Apostle inueyeth against, and reducing the state of the question from the ceremonies of the law to the whole law, determineth not concerning the Popish first iustification, but concerning iustification wholly, concerning men beleeuing already, and in the state of grace, that they must be ^m*iustified by faith, and not by the workes of the law*, yea without the workes of the law; yea, and saith, ⁿ*we haue beleeued in Christ, that we might be iustified by the faith of Christ, and not by the workes of the law*. The Papist saith, we beleeu in Christ, that we may be iustified by the workes of the law; but the Apostle saith, we beleued in Christ, that we might be iustified by the faith of Iesus Christ, and not by the workes of the law; & giueth a reason, why we that beleue in Christ

f Act. 15. 1. 10.

g Ver. 2.

h Gal. 1. 9.
i Cap. 4. 27.
k Cap. 3. 2.
l Ibid. Ver. 4.

m Ro 3. 20. 28.
Gal. 3. 11.

n Gal. 2. 16.

cannot be iustified by the works of the law, ^o because by the works of the law, no flesh shall be iustified. And whereas the Papist againe saith that by Christ and by his grace we are enabled to fulfill the law to be iustified therby, the Apostle peremptorily denounceth, ^p Ye are abolished from Christ; ye are fallen from grace whosoever are iustified by the law. And that we may vnderstand what law he meaneth, S. Hierome hauing mentioned those words, that by the workes of the law, no flesh shall be iustified, saith thereof, ^q Which that thou maicst not thinke to be spoken onely of the law of Moses (that is, the ceremoni- all law) but of all the Commandements which are contained vnder the one name of the law, the same Apostle writeth, saying, I consent to the law (or delight in the law) of God, as touching the inner man. But of that before in the third section. Hereby then it appeareth that being members of Christ, and baptized into him, our iustification still consisteth not in works, but onely in the faith of Iesus Christ. But M. Bishop by a new qualification, telleth vs, that all works both of Iew and Gentile, are excluded from being any meritorious cause of iustification. Not then from being any cause, but only from being any meritorious cause. For he hath before told vs, that that vertuous disposition of which he here speaketh, is the cause of iustification. But if they be causes, how then is it true that he saith here, that the first iustification is freely bestowed? For ^r freely, as the Rhemists tel vs, is as much to say, as for nothing; and if it be bestowed for this vertuous dispositions sake, then it is not bestowed for nothing, but for hope, for charity, &c. Thus they turne and wind this way and that way, and can find nothing whereupon to stand. Saint Austine giueth it for a rule, that ^s the grace of God shall not be grace in any sort, except it be free in euery respect. And how is it free in euery respect, if our works of preparatiō or disposition be properly the causes for which it is bestowed vpon vs? and what is it but a mockery, to say that the Apostle so often absolutely determining against iustification by works, should meane notwithstanding that workes are the very causes of iustification, only that they are not meritorious causes? Yet we haue heard, how Bellarmino maketh them ^t quodam modo, in some sort meritorious also, and that their Schooles haue commonly receiued them so to be, so that in this respect also, they do but dally with the Apostle. But tell vs M. Bishop, are those vertuous dispositions of yours the workes of grace, or onely of free will?

o Ibid.

p Cap. 5. 4.

q Hieron. ad Cresiphon. Quod ne de lege Moysi tantum dictum putet, & non de omnibus mandatis que vno legis nomine continentur; idem Apostolus scribit, thicens, consentio legi, &c.

r Sect. 21.

s Rhem. Testam. ex. licitation of words in the end. Gratii.

t August. con'r. Pelag. & Celesti. l. 2. cap. 24. Non enim gratia Dei gratis erit illo modo nisi fuerit gratuita omnimodo.

u De iustificat. lib. 2. cap. 17.

If they be of grace, as you commonly soist in the name of grace in speaking of them, what hindereth thē from being meritorious, seeing it is grace you say that addeth merit vnto works? If they be of free will, then all works of our own forces bee not excluded from iullification, which before you say the Apostle intendeth. If he say that freewill is helped by grace, let him tell vs, what hee meaneth therein by grace, and we shall find him a meere Pelagian heretike, as before is said. He goeth on further, and saith, that as the exc'nding of works and boasting excludeth not faith, no more doth it exclude the rest. How so? MARRY faith is as well our worke, and a worke of the law as any of the rest. But that is false as we haue already seene; and again, faith with vs doth not iustifie as a work, as both faith, hope and charity doe with them, but only as the instrument of our iustification to be apprehended and applied thereby. All the rest, saith he, are of grace as well as faith. But being before iustification, how should they be of grace, seeing before iustification ther is no infused grace? and why are they not meritorious, as hath bin said? Againe, he saith, that the rest are as farre from boasting of as faith. But therein he flatly contradicteth the Apostle, who affirmeth, that boasting is not excluded by the law of works, but by the law of faith. And the thing is plaine; for he hath somewhat to boast of, who doth any thing, for which the grace of God is bestowed vpon him, but in faith there is nothing to boast of, because the act of faith is, to belecue that God doth al through Christ onely for his mercies sake; it is it selfe wholly the gift of God and attributeth nothing to it selfe or to vs, but all wholly vnto God. But M. Bishop cannot be said to exclude boasting, in as much as he must confesse, as hath been before said, that his works of preparation are intrinsically the works onely of free will, and doth make the free will of man in all the worke of iustification concurrent with the grace of God, yea so far as that man hath to glory, that by his free will the grace of God taketh his due effect, it being in his power either to accept, or refuse the same. Whereas he excepteth against the place of Luke, onely belecue, as nothing to the purpose, he sheweth that he hath not learned rightly to conceiuetherof. Let S. Austin teach him, that al the miracles which Christ did corporally, do serue for our instruction, that we may receiue of him that that shall not passe away, nor go from vs in the end: that by these temporal things which were seen, he y Luk. 8. 50.

 z Aug. de verb.
 Dom. ser. 18. Nouerimus omnia miracula que
 corporaliter fecit
 ualere ad admo-
 nitionem nostram
 ut percipiamus
 ab eo quod non est
 transitorium neq;
 i sine. eb. xxi. um:
 e. post. Per ista temporalia que uidebantur edi-
 ficati: si filiam ad
 illa que non uide-
 bantur.

edified

edified and buildd faith to the things which were not seen. Christ therefore yeelding here to faith only a miracle for the recouery of bodily life, doth instruct vs, that to faith onely he also yeeldeth the work of his power, for the raising of vs vp to the spirituall life of grace. The man indeed was bid, as M. Bishop saith, to beleue the raising of his daughter to life, but therein he was bid also to beleue, that it is Christ by whom we are spirituallly raised vp from death to life, in being reconciled vnto God by the not imputing of our sinnes, through the righteousnesse and merit of the same Iesus Christ imputed vnto vs. He saith, that faith might be sufficient to obtaine a miracle, but I answer him, that that miracle was a benefit importing a further benefit, and all the benefits of Christ are obtained in like sort, so that our Sauour Christ still referring them that seeke vnto him to faith, for the obtaining of bodily health, doth also referre vs to faith, for the obtaining of soules health. Now how his interpretation heere deliuered agreeth with the text of Scripture, the Reader I hope can well consider by that that hath bene said. As for the places of Austin, if his sight had not failed him, I suppose he would not haue alledged them, the one of them being nothing at all against vs, and the other directly against himselfe. We say, a God forbid that the Apostle should thinke, that faith sufficeth a man although he liue euill, and haue no good workes. Nay, wee say further, God forbid that hee should thinke that there is any true faith in them that liue euill, and haue no good workes. Wee haue often enough said, that a true iustifying faith is neuer separated from godly life, and that faith that is without good workes, is onelie called faith with men, but indeede and with God it is not so. In the other place Saint Austine bringeth in the Apostle, saying, b that a man is iustified by faith, and not of workes. But how accordeth this with that that Maister Bishop saith, that a man is iustified by his workes, as well as by his faith? By faith and not by workes, saith Saint Austine out of the Apostle; both by faith & workes, saith M. Bishop out of his owne braines. S. Austine giueth the reason, c Because faith is first giue by which the rest are obtained, which are properly called workes, in which a mā liueth righteously. Wherby he importeth that faith is first giuen, that thereby we may be iustified, & thence follow good workes, in which we liue well: according to his rules before deliuered: d They follow a mā being iustified, they go not a Aug. de grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 30.

b De predest. scilicet. cap. 7.

c Ibid. Quia in se prima datur ex qua impetuntur cetera qua propria opera nuncupantur in quibus iuste uiuunt.

d De fide et operibus. cap. 14. Sequitur iustificatio non procedunt iustificandum.

before

e. Roiss. 20 ep.
30. huc huc me pi-
uit bon: o: era
ex quo iustifica-
mur: ne qua p: e-cefferunt: iustifi-catur.

before to iustification: when they begin when we are iustified, we are not iustified for them going before. Then plainly it appeareth by S. Austines iudgement, that iustification is the beginning of good workes; and if iustification be the beginning of good workes, then by no meanes can it be said, that good workes are any cause of iustification. Hee excludeth not then good workes, which proceed from Gods grace, as M. Bishop saith, but hee denieth that there are any good workes before iustification, because hee knoweth no grace but iustifying grace, & therefore directly crosseth M. Bishops assertion of good workes before iustification, which are the causes for which we are iustified.

29. W. BISHOP.

Maister Perkins third argument. Very reason may teach vs thus much: that no gift in man is apt as a spirituall hand, to receiue and apply Christ and his righteousnes vnto a sinner, sauing faith: loue, hope feare, repentance, haue their seuerall vses, but none of them serue for this end of apprehending, but faith onely.

Answer. Mans reason is but a blinde mistris in matters of faith, and hee that hath no better an instructor in such high mysteries, must needs know little. But what if that also faile you in this point? then euery man cannot but see how naked you are of all kind of probability. I say then that reason rather teacheth the contrary. For in common sense, no man apprehendeth and entreth into the possession of any thing, by beleeuing that he hath it. For if a man should beleeu that he is rich, of honour, wise, or vertuous: doth hee thereby become presently such a one? nothing lesse. His faith and perswasion is no fit instrument to apply and draw these things to himselfe, as all the world sees. How then doth reason teach me, that by beleeuing Christs righteousnesse to be mine owne, I lay hand on it, and make it mine? Againe Christs righteousnesse (according to their owne opinion) is not receiued into vs at all, but is ours onely by Gods imputation: what neede we then faith, as a spirituall hand to receiue? If they say (as M. Perkins doth) that faith is as it were a condition required in vs, which when God seeth in vs, he presently imputeth Christs righteousnesse to vs, and maketh it ours, then will I be bold to say, that any other vertue is as proper as faith, to haue Christ applied vnto vs: there being no other aptnesse requisite in the condition selfe, selfe, but onely the will and ordinance of God: then euery thing that is shall please him to appoint, is alike apt: and so M. Perkins had smal reason so say, that faith was the onely apt instrument to apply to vs Christs righteousnesse.

Moreover, true diuine reason teacheth me, that both hope & charity, do much more apply vnto Christians all Christs merus, and make them ours, the faith: For what faith assureth me of in generall, that hope applieth vnto me in particular: by faith I beleene Christ to be the Sauerour of all mankind: by hope I trust to be made partaker of that saluation in him. But charity doth yet giue me a greater confidence of saluation: for by the rule of true charity, as I dedicate and imploy my life, labours, and all that I haue to the seruice of God, so all that God hath is made mine, so farre forth as it can be made mine, according vnto that sacred law of friendship, Amicorum omnia sunt communia. And therefore in true reason, nether by faith, nor any other verities, wee take such hold on Christs merits, nor haue such interest in his inestimable treasures, as by charity: which S. Augustine vnderstood well, when he made it the modell, and measure of iustification: saying, That Charity beginning, was iustice beginning: Charity encreased, was iustice encreased: great Charity, was great Iustice: and perfect Charity, was perfect Iustice.

De iust. & gra.
cap. vii.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins alledgeth, that very reason may teach vs, that faith onely iustificeth, because there is no gift in man that hath the property of apprehending and receiuing, but faith onely. To this M. Bishop answereth, that mans reason is a blind mistresse in matters of faith. Wherein he saith truly, and indeede is the cause why he himselte writeth so blindly as he doth, and measureth high mysteries by carnall and base conceipts. And surely it seemeth that his reason was very blinde, who gaue so blinda reason against that which Maister Perkins saith, being spoken not out of the reason of man, but as the reason of a faithfull man, may esteeme by direction of the word of God. No man entreteth into the possession of any thing, saith hee, by beleeuing that he hath it; for if a man beleene that he is rich, doth hee thereby become rich? I answer him, no: but though a man by beleeuing himselte to be rich, doe not become rich, yet if to a poore begger a great man say, If thou wilt take my word, and referre thy selfe to me, and depend vpon my fauour and good will, I will make thee rich; doth he not by giuing credit to his word commit himselfe to him, entertaine his fauour, accept his offer, and become owner of that that is promised vnto him? What is it whereby we accept of promise, but onely believe? Now all that our question is of, consisteth of promise, & in all the benefits of God we are ^a the children of promise, ^b beues by promise, ^c heires of promise, expecting all things by the gracious promise of God; ^d by promise is be partakers of the diuine nature, ^e the blessing by promise, ^f the spirit by promise, ^g the inheritance by promise, ^h life eternall by promise, ⁱ by promise a new heauen & a new earth, where in righteousnesse dwelleth, all which ^k promises in Christ are, yea and in him Amen, for his sake first made, and for his sake to be performed also. Now seeing God hath taught vs, that ^l by faith we obtaine the promises, that ^m we receiue the promise of the spirit through faith; that ⁿ the promise (of blessing is giuen by the faith of Iesus Christ to them that belecue, that ^o as we beleue, so shall it be vnto vs, that ^p whatsoeuer we desire when we pray; if we beleue that we shall haue it, it shall bee accordingly vnto vs, why is it strange to M. Bishop, that in beleueing according to the word and promise of God, to bee partakers of those things which he hath promised, we should bee said to become partakers thereof? In those mad presumptions fondly alledged by him, there is no beleueing, because there is no ground whereupon to beleecue, but when God promiseth, and seeth the effect of his promise to the beleueing of it, not to beleue that in the beleueing of it wee are parakers of that which we beleue, is to make God a liar, and to frustrate that which he hath promised. Sith then God hath promised Christ vnto vs, to be ^q our righteousnes, and that ^r by the faith of Iesus Christ, that is, by beleueing him to be that vnto vs which God hath promised, surely in beleueing him to bee our righteousnesse he is our righteousnesse, and ^s wee are made the righteousnesse of God in him. And this is indeede not by receiuing Christs righteousnesse really into vs, but by hauing righteousnesse imputed vnto vs for his sake. For we receiue the righteousnesse of Christ euen as we receiue himselfe, who so becommeth ours, as that ^t wee abide in him and he in vs; ^u we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones, we are really and truly by the power of his spirit, one with him and he with vs, and yet he is not personally & bodily brought vnto

a Gal. 4. 28.
 b Cap. 3. 29.
 c Heb. 6. 17.
 d 2. Pet. 1. 4.
 e Gal. 3. 14. 16.
 f Ephe. 1. 13.
 g Gal. 3. 18.
 h Tit. 1. 2.
 i 2. Pet. 3. 13.
 k 2. Cor. 1. 20.

l Heb. 11. 33.
 m Gal. 3. 14.
 n Ibid. ver. 22.

o Mat. 8. 13.
 p Mar. 11. 24.

q Jerem. 23. 6.
 r Rom. 3. 22.

s 2. Cor. 5. 21.

t Iohn 6. 56.

u Eph. 5. 30.

