vnto vs. Faith seeketh Christ, and findeth him, and holdeth him in the virgins wombe, in the manger, in the garden, vpon the crosse, in the graue, in his resurrection & ascension vnto heauen, and in his now sitting at the right hand of God to make intercession for vs. Euery where faith embraceth him, and in euery of these seeth him to be ours, as hauing vnderaken and atchiued all these things for our sakes. Euen so the righteousnesse & merit of Christ is spiritually, but really ours within and without, in spirit, & soule and body, to cleanse and sanctifie vs vnto God. But, saith he, if it be ours by Gods imputation, what need we then faith, as a spirituall hand to receive it? A foolish and idle question; as if he should say, If I giue food to a hungry man, what need hath he either of a hand to take it, or a mouth to eat it? He himselfe saw that the answer is ready, euen the same that Ambrose deliuereth ^x God hath so decreed: it is thus appointed of God; God requireth faith, to which he will impute the righteousnesse of Christ. Where we may wonder at the absurd boldnes of this blind haiaird, who telleth vs hereupon, that he will be bold to say, that any other vertue is as proper as faith, to bring Christ applied vnto vs. What M. Bishop, will you be bold to say, that any other vertue is as proper to apply Christ vnto vs, as that which God himselfe hath appointed for that vse? Is not the will and ordinance of God sufficient to restrain your presumption & bouldnes, & to shut your mouth from rüning ouer in this sort? He saith, that there is no other aptnesse requisite in the condition it self. but only the will and ordinance of God But shal we be so impious, as to thinke that the wil & ordināce of God without cause appointeth one cōdition whē as wel it might appoint another, or appointeth any thing to be don which is not more fitly don that way that he appointeth, then any other way? The apostle telleth vs, ^y Therefore it is by faith, that it may be of grace, importing that faith is appointed as the fittest meanes, wherby to set forth the grace of God again. he addeth for another reason, ^z That the promise might be sure to all the seed. For no otherwise can we rest assured of the promise of God, but as it is of grace, who in our works can find nothing wherupō to assure our selues. By faith therefore we beleue it to be of grace, that with cōfortable assurāce we may firmly expect the blessing which God hath promised vnto vs. Another reasō with S. Paul, why faith is specially appointed, is ^a to exclude boasting. So saith Ambrose; ^b God hath made choice x Ambrosius in Rom. ca. 3. 6. Sic decretum a Deo hoc sanxit Deus. Et in 1. Cor. cap. 1. Hoc constituitur est, &c.

y Rom. 4. 16.

z Ibid. a Cap. 3. 27. b Ambrosius in Gal. 43. Maluit Deus ut salus hominis sine operibus quam operibus quereatur. neque gloriaretur in suis factis.

that saluation should be gotten rather by faith then by works, that no man should glory in his owne doings. It is therefore for the speciall aptnesse of faith, that God hath appointed it to be the instrument for applying vnto vs the whole benefit of Christ. Yet M. Bishop telleth vs, that true diuine reason teacheth him, that both hope and charity doe much more apply Christs merits vnto vs then faith doth. But it is indeed a dreaming and vnreasonable fancy, and not any true diuine reason that hath taught him so. For whereas he saith, the hope applich in particular what faith beleueth in general, it hath been before shewed, that the office of true faith is to make this particular application. And indeed there can be no true hope in any man, where there is not first a faith to apply the benefit of Christ particularly to himselfe. For though I beleue that Iesus is a Sauiour, yet what ground haue I thereby to hope for Saluation, vnlesse I beleue that he hath saued me; that he hath loued me and giuen himselfe for me? Surely vnlesse I beleue for my selfe, I cannot hope for any thing for my selfe, saue onely at vncertaine aduventure, and without ground. Now M. Bishops hope being no other, how can he be said therby to apply that to himselfe, whereof hee is still to stand in feare whether it bee his or not? But to come neerer to the point, the question here is of applying the merits of Christs vnto vs. Now the merit of Christ is that that Christ hath already done for vs. But hope respecteth that onely that is futurely to be done. Hope therefore can in no sort be the instrument to apply vnto vs the merit of Christ. Neither can charity serue vs for that vse, because I cannot presume of that that is anothers, vpon any conscience of my loue towards him, but vpon confidence onely of his loue towards me. Howsoeuer I seeme to imploy my self to the seruice of God, yet it giueth me nothing whereof to presume with him, vnlesse I beleue that of his loue hee doth accept my seruice, and will reward the same. Bee it as Master Bishop saith, that all things are common amongst friends, but before we can build thereupon, wee must haue it resolued vnto vs, that God taketh vs for his friends, which can bee no otherwise but by faith onely, God hauing set forth Christ to bee an attonement (to make vs friends with God) through faith in his blood. Faith then must first apply vnto vs the merite of the blood of Christ, before there can bee any friendshippe betwix

e Gal. 2.20.

d Rom. 3.25.

betwixt God and vs. And although being now in friendship with Christ, our loue may giue vs encouragement & comfort, to make vse to our selues of that that is his, yet it is not by our loue, that we take it to make vse therof. For the act of loue is don only extramittendo, by issue and passage from vs to Christ, and therefore it must be somwhat else whereby we receiue and apply from Christ to vs. To be short, wee wonder what application M. Bishop can make by charity, who plainly professeth that he cannot tell whether he loue God or God loue him; who saith that hope and charity are seated in the darke corners of the will, and a man hath but onely coniectures, and a probable opinion of the being thereof in himselfe. What shall he then make bold of in name of friendship with Christ, who knoweth not whether he be a friend to Christ, or Christ to him? As for the saying of Austine, why he alledgeth it I know not; vnlesse it be that he were onely desirous to say somewhat out of Austine. S. Austine noeth, that inherent iustice consisteth in charity, which is the summe of the law, which is the rule of iustice. According therefore to the measure of our charity greater or lesse, so is the measure of our righteousness. We say the same, but what is this to shew that charity is the fittest instrument to apply vnto vs the merit of Christ? But that he may not dreame of iustification before God, by any perfection of charity here, let him remember what Saint Austine hath laid thereof, that perfect charity is in no man so long as he liueth here; that the lesnesse thereof so that it ought to be, is by reason of a default or corruption in vs, by reason whereof, no man liuing shall be iustified in the sight of God.

e Chap. 3. Se 3. 6. & 11.

f Aug. epist. 29. Supra. cap. 2. sect. 3.

30 W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins fourth reason is taken from the iudgment of the auncient Church: They are blessed, to whom without any labour or worke done, iniquities are remitted. So no workes or repentance is required of them, but onely that they beleue. To these and such likewords, I answer.

Ambrosius Rom.

First, that it is very uncertaine, whether these Commentaries be Saint Ambroses.

Secondly, that that Author excludeth not repentance, but onely the workes of Moses law, which the Iewes held to be necessary: as circumcision, and suchlike, see the place, and confer with it that which he hath written in the same worke, upon the fourth to the Hebrewes, where he hath these words: Faith is a great thing, and without it, it is not possible to be saved, but faith alone doth not suffice: but it is necessary, that faith worke by charity, and conuerse worke by of God.

M. Perkins next authority is gathered out of S. Austine. There is one propitiation for all sinners, to beleue in Christ. True, but where is it, that we neede nothing else, but to beleue?

3. Hefichius saith; Grace which is of mercy, is apprehended by faith alone, & not of workes: that is, we do not merit by our works done before grace, any thing at Gods hand, but of his mercy receiue both faith and iustification.

4. Bernard hath: Whosoever thirsteth after righteousness, let him beleue in thee: that being iustified by faith alone, he may haue peace with God.

Answer. By faith alone, he excludeth all other meanes, that either Iew or Gentile required, but not charity, which his very words include:
for how can we abhorre sinne, and thirst after iustice, without charity?
and in the same worke he declareth plainly, that he comprehendeth abrayes charity, when he speakes of a iustifying faith: saying, A right faith doth not make a man righteous, if it worke not by charity.
And againe: Neither works without faith, nor faith without works is sufficient to make the soule righteous.

5. Chrysostome, they said, he who rested on faith alone, was accursed: but Paul sheweth, that he is blessed who rested on faith alone. Answer. He speakes of the Iewes who held Christians accursed, because resting on the faith in Christ, would not obserue with all Moses law: the Apostle contrariwise denounceth them accursed, who would ioyne the ceremonies of Moses law with christian religion, and so faith alone there excludeth onely the old law, not the workes of charity: so he mangleth pittifully a sentence of S. Basils saying: Let man acknowledge himselfe to want true iustice, and that he is iustified only by faith in Christ: If a man know himself iustified by faith in Christ, how can he acknowledge that he wants true iustice? His words truly repeated are these: Let man acknowledge that he is vnworthie of true iustice: and that his iustification comes not of his desert, bu: of the meere mercy of God through Christ. So that by faith alone

De verb. Ap.
ser. 40.

Leuit. li. i. ca. 2.

Sup. Car. ser. 22.

Sam. 24.

Gal 3.

Gal 5.

De Humil.

Saint Basil treating of humility, excludes all merit of our owne, but no necessarie good disposition, as you may see in his Sermon de Fide, where he proues by many texts of holy Scripture, that charity is as necessarie as faith.

M. Perkins last testimony is out of Origen: Who proues (as M. Perkins said) that only beleeuing without workes iustificieth, by the example of the Theefe on the Crosse, of whose good works there is no mention. Rom. 3.

Answer. Origen excludeth no good disposition in vs to iustification, but faith, that a man may be saued, without doing outwardly any good workes, if hee want time and place: as the Theefe did, who presently vpon his conuersion was put to death, which is good Catholike doctrine: but that you may perceiue how necessarie the good dispositions before mentioned, be to iustificatiō, you shall find if you consider wel all circumstances, not one of them to haue been wanting in that good Theefes conuersion. First, that he stood in feare of Gods iust iudgement, appears by these his words, to his fellow, Doeft thou not feare God, &c. He had hope to be saued by Christ, out of which he saide: O Lord remember me, when thou comest into thy Kingdome: By both which speeches is shewed also his faith both in God, that he is the gouernor and iust iudge of the world, and in Christ, that he was the Redemer of mankind. His repentance and confession of his fault, is laid down in this: And we truly suffer worthily: His charity towards God & his neighbor, in reprehending his fellows blasphemie, in defending Christs innocencie: and in the midst of his greatest disgraces, and raging enemies, to confesse him to be King of the world to come: out of all which we may gather also, that hee had a full purpose to amend his life, and to haue taken such order for his recoverie, as it should please Christ his Sauiour to appoint. So that he lacked not any one of those dispositions, which the Catholike Church requires to iustification. Now that, that great Doctor Origen meant not to exclude any of these good qualities, out of the company of faith, is apparant, by that which he hath written on the next Chapter: where he saith: That faith cannot bee imputed to iustice, to such as Rom 4. beleue in Christ, vnlesse they do withall put off the old man: and a little before more plainly saying: I thinke that faith is the first beginning of saluation, hope is proceeding in the building, but the top and perfection of the whole worke is charitie.

and, non operibus sed fide &c. non operibus sed fide &c. non operibus sed fide &c.
 R. ABBOT.

To set downe the places alledged out of Ambrose, is sufficient to discover the bad and euill conscience of M. Bishop in the answering of them; and to shew what a one hee is indeede in all the rest of his answers. First, ^a they are iustified free lie, saith he, because working nothing, nor making any requitall, they are iustified by faith alone through the gift of God. The second is this; ^b They are blessed to whom without any labour or worke their iniquities are forgiven and sinnes covered, no worke of penitencie being required of them, but onely to beleue. Thirdly, he saith, ^c this is appointed of God, that he that beleueth in Christ, shall be saued without workes freely, by faith alone, receiuing forgiveness of sinnes. I pray thee now gentle Reader to marke well his answer to these allegations: First, he saith, that it is very uncertaine whether these Commentaries be Ambroses. It is true indeede; that some make question of the Prefaces that are inserted to the severall Epistles, but of the Commentaries themselves, saue onely vpon the epistle to the Hebrewes, I knowe no man that doubteth. Their ^d Sixtus Senensis reckoneth them for the workes of Ambrose for their part, and our ^e Centuristes for our part, and on both sides they are alwaies cited in his name. There is no doubt but they are the workes of a verie auncient writer, if they were not his, and therefore that can make little to acquit Master Bishop of crossing the ancient Church, vnlesse hee canne giue vs a better answer. But that we shall haue, namelie, that that Ambour excludeth not repentance, but onely the workes of Moses lawe, which the Iewes held to bee necessarie, as circumcision and such like. Short and sweete: this hee hath told vs, and if wee will fare better, wee must take the paines to goe further. But let him remember that the point in question is of being iustified by faith alone, which Saint Ambrose there directly and fully affirmeth, by faith onely, by faith onely, it is required onely to beleue. Now though the ceremoniall workes of Moses lawe be excluded from iustification, yet if we be iustified by any other workes, wee are not iustified by faith onely or alone. He excludeth not repentance, saith he; but let vs request him to turne vs these words into English: Nulla ab his requisita pœnitentie opera nisi tantùm ut credant. We take it to be this, there being required of thẽ no labour or worke of penitency or repentance, but onely to beleue.

^a Amb. of. in Ro. cap. 3. Iustificati sunt gratis quia nihil operantur neque vicem reddunt. res sola fide iustificati sunt: dono Dei.

^b Idem. cap. 4. Manifestè beatè sunt quibus sine labore vel opere aliquo remittuntur iniquitates & peccata reguntur, nulla ab his requisita pœnitentie opera nisi tantùm ut credant.

^c Idem. in 1. Cor. cap. 1. Hoc constitutum est à Deo ut qui credit in Christum saluus sit sine opere, sola fide gratis accipiens remissionem peccatorum.

^d Sixtus Senensis. biblioth. sanct. l. 4. e Centur. Magdeburg. lib. 4. cap. 10.

beleene. He meaneth indeed by penitēcy, that which publikely was don, & for which men were called pœnitentes, penitents, as after ward appeareth, but by excluding such works of penitency, it appeareth that it was not his meaning to exclude only circumcision & such other ceremonies of Moses law, and therefore that M. Bishops answer is a verie absurd and broken shift. Marke the wordes gentle Reder Working nothing, nor making any requitall, without any labour or worke, no worke of penitency required, without workes, and freely, and by faith alone, all sounding that a mans workes do not iustifie him, but his prompt faith, as the same S. Ambrose speaketh in another place. As for the words which he bringeth to crosse the other, they are no way contrarie to vs. We say as he saith, that faith alone sufficeth not, & yet we say as hee also saith, that faith sufficeth to iustification. For it is one thing to say what sufficeth to iustification, another thing to say what sufficeth to the perfection of a Christian and iustified man. The place alledged out of Austine inferreth our assertion, though it expresse it not. If it bee our propitiation, that is, our iustification, to beleue in Christ, then onely to beleue in Christ doth iustifie. If not, then it cannot be said to be our iustification to beleue in Christ. For where the effect belongeth to many causes alike, there it cannot be singularly attributed to any one. His answer to the words of Hesy chius is impertinent; for Hesy chius beside that hee saith, that grace is not merited because it is of mercy, telleth vs also what it is whereby the same is apprehended, and that he saith is faith alone. ⁵ Grace which is of mercie is apprehended by faith alone and not of workes. If grace be not apprehended by workes as Hesy chius saith, why doth M. Bishop tell vs that it is apprehended by workes? If it be apprehended by faith alone, why doth hee tell vs that it is not apprehended by faith alone? Be it that our workes before grace doe not merit our iustification, yet if by workes we be iustified as well as by faith, then it is not true which this Father saith, that the grace of iustification is apprehended by faith, and not by workes. The words of Saint Bernard are plainly spoken of the imputed righteousness of Iesus Christ, by occasion of the Apostles words, that Christ is ^h made unto vs of God wisdom, righteousness, sanctification & redemption. ⁱ Righteousness, saith he, by forgiveness of sinnes, & for prosecuting thereof faith of Christ, ^k so sweete a sauour of thy righteousness is every where spread abroad, as t'hou art not only

f. Ambrosii in Psal. 43. Non facta sunt unquamque iustitia, sed fides prompta.

g. Hesy chus in Leuit. lib. 4. cap. 14. Gratia & compassio ne prebatur, & si ac comprehenditur sola, non ex operibus.

h. 1. Cor. 1. 30. i. Bernard in Cant. ser. 22. Iustitia in absolute peccatione totum.

k. Iustitie tue gratia spergitur, et non solum istius sed & ipsa dicaris iustitia, et iustitia iustificans. Tam va idus denique es ad iustificandum, quam nullus ad ignoscendum. Quamobrem quisque pro peccatis compunctus esset et fide iustitiam credit in te qui iustificis impium, et solum iustificat per fidem per eum habet ad Deum.

called

called righteous, but also righteousnesse it selfe, and a iustifying righteousnesse. As strong thou art to iustifie, as thou art ready to forgive. Whosoever therefore being pricked with his sinnes hungreth and thirsteth after righteousnesse, let him beleue in thee who iustificiest the ungodly, and being iustified by faith only he shall haue peace with God. M. Bishop telleth vs, that S. Bernard by faith alone excluded all other means that either lew or Genile required, but not charitie. Vaine man, what had S. Bernard heere to doe either with Iewes or Geniles? He spake to Christian and faithfull brethren, to whom he had no occasion to giue any caueat either against Jewes or Gentiles, but instructeth them what to do being pricked and greued with sinne, euen to hunger and thirst after righteousnesse, not meaning by righteousnesse inherent righteousnesse, as M. Bishop doth, but that righteousnes which consisteth as he had before expounded it, in the forgivenesse of sins. Therefore he teacheth to beleue in Christ, who is our righteousnesse, ¹ a righteousnesse, as hee speaketh againe, that forgiveth sinnes; the forme of which righteousnesse hee expresseth thus; ^m Remember not the offences of my youth and my ignorances, and I am righteous or iust. Thus S. Bernard saith, that a man is iustified by faith alone, and shall we be so mad as to thinke, that in saying a man is iustified by faith alone, his meaning was as M. Bishop affirmeth, that a man is iustified by faith and charitie, that is to say, not iustified by faith alone? And did S. Bernard think that a man hath charitie before he haue charitie? For seeing as M. Bishop telleth vs, the gift of charity is infused and powred into vs in iustification, surely to say that by charitie a man is iustified, is to say, that by charitie the gift of charitie is powred into him. Which if it be absurd, then let him be content that S. Bernard's meaning be, as indeed it is, that a man is iustified by faith alone, & let him take charitie for a gift of the iustified, & not for any fore-running cause of iustification. Now that the righteousnes there spoken of is not meant of inherent righteousnesse it is very plain, in that S. Bernard in the words following createth severally therof vnder the name of sanctificatiō. His counter-places are impertinent. What S. Bernard therein saith, we say:

A mans beleuing aright, except it worke by loue, doth not set him right or straight; and againe, Neither faith without workes, nor workes without faith, doe suffice to the rectitude or straightnesse of the minde. True it is, as I haue often said, that to the full rectifying and perfecting

Iustitia donans delicta sub finem.

*in Delicta intenu-
tus meae & igno-
rantias meae ne
me memora & ius-
tus sum.*

*in In Cant. ser. 24.
Non facit hom. nō rectum fides etiam
recta que non ope-
ratur ex dilectione
O Nec fides sine
operibus nec opera sine fide iustificunt ad animi rectitudi-nem.*

them doth he teach to acknowledge themselves to be iustified by faith alone. But whosoever they had bene, how crossely doth M. Bishops bad disposition carry him to Basil words? Basil saith: Let a man acknowledge himselfe destitute of true righteousnesse, and to be iustified onely by faith in Christ. M. Bishop saith, a man is not destitute of true righteousnesse, but hath vertuous good dispositions and preparations, by which he is to be iustified, and not by faith alone. But no maruell that they crosse others, who are so tangled with the truth, as that they know not how to speake, but to crosse themselves, still blowing both hot and cold; freely, and yet for workes; for nothing, and yet for something; no merit, and yet in some sort merit; of meere mercie, and yet somewhat to moue God beside his mercie. But to giue some colour to that that he saith, he telleth vs, that Basil in his Sermon de Fide proueth by many texts of Scripture, that charity is as necessarie as faith. Be it so, yet he doth not say, that we are iustified by charity. We say, as he there saith, that Love is the badge & cognizance of Christian men; much commended vnto vs by our Sauior, as a marke whereby he will haue vs to be knowne to be his disciples. We say further, that it is as necessarie as faith, to the full perfection of a Christian man, and yet we say it hath nothing to do in the act of iustification. To his question as touching the words alledged, If a man know himselfe iustified by faith in Christ, how can he acknowledge, that he wants true iustice? I answer him, that a man acknowledgeth himselfe to want in himselfe true inherent iustice, confessing himselfe to be sinfull and corrupt, when yet he wanteth not that iustice or righteousnesse of which S. Paule saith: To him that worketh not (that is, who hath no confidence by workes) but beleueth in him that iustificieth the vngodly, his faith is reputed for righteousnesse; and so as Basil saith, he is iustified by faith alone, the loue of the Father, and the righteousnesse of Christ the Sonne conering the multitude of his finnes: so that they are as if they had neuer bin, and he as if he had offended nothing, as before hath bene declared. *Origen*s testimony which is the last of al, declareth plainly the same that *Basil*s doth, that the iustification of faith alone is sufficient. (so that a man onely beleuening is iustified, though there haue bene no good worke performed by him. For example hereof he alledged the thiefe on the crosse, to whom for faith alone Christ said, This day shalt thou be with me in paradise. A. Bishop answereth againe, that Origen excludes no good

1 Basilus de fide Charakter et insignis Christiano-
rum.

1 Rom. 4. 5.
2 Occumen. in
Rom. 4. Et quereb
oper. bñs saluatiō
non habet.
3 Bern in Cant.
ser. 23. Charitas
pateris ipsius coeperit multitudine
in peccatorum.
Et ser. 61. Iusti-fia in me ope-
rati multitudine peccatorum.
4 Orig. in Rom.
cap. 2. Dicit si sufficiere filius fidei iu-stificatiōem, ita ut credens tan-
tummodo quis iustificetur etiamsi nulla ad eo operis
sua sit expectum.
5 Pro. 14. fide aut
et 1. 19. Amō dino 11. 3. &c.

good disposition in vs to iustification. A strange matter, that these Fathers should haue so little discretion still to be vrging faith alone, faith alone, and yet should meane to leaue a place to M. Bishops good dispositions, whereby faith alone is ouerthrowne. But he addeth out of his master Bellarmino, that faith is opposed to outward works, so that Origen's meaning is, that a man may be saued without doing outwardly any good works, if he want time and place. And what are those outward works? Forsooth Bellarmino nameth to fast, and to giue almes. Absurd Friar, as if there were no outward good works to be done, but only fasting and giuing of almes. M. Bishop here vnder the name of dispositiōs, setteth forth vnto vs many good works of the chiefe in that thort time of his being vpo the crosse, the feare of God, hope, faith, repentance, confession of finnes, loue towards God and his neighbour, in reprehending his fellowes blasphemy, and defending Christs innocency, and yet of him Origen affirmeth the same that Chrysostome did before of Abraham, that not for any works, but he was iustified by faith alone. Christ did not enquire concerning him, faith he, what he had wrought before, nor did looke what work he performed when he had beleued: but being to goe into Paradise, to kee him to accompany him, being iustified onely by his confession, that is, by his faith which he vttered & shewed by his confession of Christ. The other example there alleadged by Origen, maketh the matter as plaine, which is of the woman in the Gospel, that washed Christs feet with her teares, and wiped them with the haire of her head, whose good works M. Bishop hath noted also ^b before: to whom notwithstanding ^c not for any work of the law, but for faith onely, saith Origen, Iesus said, thy finnes are forgiven thee: and againe, Thy faith hath saued thee. Yea but Origen saith, ^d that faith cannot be imputed to iustice, to such as beleue in Christ, vnlesse they doe with all put off the old man. And we say no lesse, that iustification cannot be separated from sanctification; but where the one is, there is the other also: and yet it is distinctly to be considered what belongeth to the one and what belongeth to the other. He correcteth the opinion of them, who thinke profession of faith to be faith, and thereupon saith as we do, that to such their faith, because indeed it is no true faith, cannot be reputed for righteousnesse. Therefore of faith he said before: Do not thinke, that he that hath such a faith, as whereby being iustified, he hath to reioice with God, can together therewith haue

^a Super hoc non requisit: Dominus quid prius natus esset, nec expectauit quid operis cum credidisset, expressit, sed sicut confessione iustificationem comitem sibi Por. iustum ingressurus assumptis.

^b Sect. 21.
^c Origen. ibid.
Ex multis legis operibus, sed pro sola fide.

^d Idem in c. 4.
^e Ibid. Ne putet quod si quis habeat talem fidem ex qua iustificatus habet gloriam aput Deum, possit sine eum ex habere & inuisti. am. si enim quis credit quod Iesus est Christus ex quo natus est, & qui natus est ex Deo non peccat, manifestum est, quia qui credit Iesu Christo non peccat: quod si peccat, certum est quia non credit ei, &c. Certum est enim qui vero credit, opus fidei & in iustis operibus & in bonitate.

unrighteousnesse. For if he that beleueth that Iesus is Christ, be borne of God; and he that is borne of God sinneth not, it is manifest, that hee that beleueth in Iesus Christ, sinneth not; and if he doe sinne, (that is, giue himselfe to sinne) it is certaine that he beleueth not. Certaine it is, that he that truly beleueth, doth worke the worke of faith and righteousness, and of all goodnesse. Thus he saith as we do, that true faith cannot be separed from godly life: so that a man cannot haue fellowship with Christ by iustification, who by sanctification also hath not fellowship with him. But the roote of all is faith, by which alone we are iustified, and so the barre of sinne is taken away, that diuided before betwixt God and vs, that so the sanctifying spirit of God may haue accessse vnto vs, to worke in vs the good worke of God, and so to prepare vs to that inheritance, to the hope wherof he hath called vs. As for the other place that he citeth, it is the same in effect with that of Ignatius before alleaged and containeth nothing but what we also teach, as hath beene declared there.

E self. 26.

31 W. BISHOP.

The third Difference of Iustification, is how farre forth good works are required thereto.

Master Perkins saith, That after the doctrine of the Church of Rome, there be two kinds of Iustification: the first, when of a sinner one is made iust: the which is of the meere mercy of God through Christ, without any merit of man, onely some certaine good deuotions of the soule, (as the acts of Faith, Feate, Hope, Charity, Repentance,) go before to prepare (as it were) the waie, and to make it more fit to receiue that high grace of iustification.

The second Iustification is, when a iust man by the exercise of vertues is made more iust: as a child new borne, doth by nouiture grow day by day bigger: of this increase of grace, Catholiks hold good works to be the meritorious cause.

M Perkins first granteth that good works do please God, and haue a temporall reward.

2. That they are necessary to saluation, not as the cause thereof, but either as markes in a way to direct vs towards saluation: or as fruits and

Page 91.

and signes of righteousness, to declare one to be iust before men: al which he shufflith in, rather to delude our arguments thē for that they esteeme much of good works, which they hold to bee no better then deadly finnes.

The maine difference then betweene vs consisteth in this: whether good works be the true cause indeed of the increase of our righteousness, which we call the second iustification: or whether they bee onely fruits, signes or markes of it.

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop, it seemeth, did not well like that M. Perkins should do the Church of Rome that wrong, to make her better then indeed she is: for whereas he had said, that they exclude all workes from the first iustification, and confesse it to bee wholly of grace, M. Bishop reformeth his error by adding, that certaine good deuotions of the soule, (as the acts of faith, feare, hope, charity, repentance,) go before to prepare the way to iustification, all which it hath bene his drift hitherto to proue to be properly and truly the causes thereof. Now as touching the point in hand, M. Perkins obserueth three things accorded vnto by vs, in the recirall whereof M. Bishop vseth his wonted guise of deceit and fraud. First, we graunt, that good works do please God, and are approued of him, and therefore haue reward: which we intend both temporall and eternall, but he mentioneth it as if we affirmed no other, but onely temporall reward. Secondly, we say that they are necessarie to saluatiō, not as causes either conseruant, adiuuant, or procreant, but either as consequent fruits of that faith which is necessary to saluation, or as marks in a way, or rather the way it selfe leading to saluation. Thirdly we say, that the righteous man is in some sort iustified by workes, as S. Iames saith that Abraham was iustified by workes, that is declared and made manifest to be iust. And this he acknowledgeth to be in some sort also before God, for that it pleaseth God by our workes to take the sight and knowledge of our faith; albeit we forbear so to speak, both for auoiding confusion in this disputation of iustification properly vnderstood in the sight of God, and also for that the same phrase in the Apostles writing of that point, sounds another way. This last M. Bishop here cōcealeth, fearing lest it

it should preuent him of some of his cauels, but that which he doth alledge, he saith is (huffed in rather to delude their arguments, then that we esteeme much of good workes, which (he saith) wee hold to bee no better then deadly finnes. Thus the glosing sycophant still playeth his part, still peruerting somtimes our saying, sometimes our meaning. Where hee cannot oppugne that which we teach, he will make his Reader beleue, that we meane not as we say. We see no such difference betwixt them and vs, betwixt their liues and ours, but that we may well be thought to esteeme good workes, as much as they do. We would be ashamed to be such as their stories haue described their Popes, and Cardinals, and Bishops, nay, as M. Bishop and his fellowes haue described the Iesuites to be. Whereas he saith, that we account good workes no better then deadly finnes, he very impudently falsifieth that which wee say. VVe affirme the good workes of the faithfull to be glorious and acceptable in Gods sight for Christs sake, being done in his name, and offered vpon the altar of faith in him. The imperfection thereof is accidentall, and taketh not away the nature of a good worke, but onely maketh it an vnperfect good worke: which imperfection notwithstanding were sufficient to cause the work to be reiected, if in rigor and extremity God should weigh the same; which hee doth not, but mercifully pardoneth it for Christs sake. Seeing then the blemish set aside, we acknowledge it to remaine intirely a good worke, being the work of the grace of God, to be accepted and rewarded of God, with what conscience doth this brabler say, that of good workes wee make no better then deadly finnes? As touching the question propounded by him, it consisteth of two parts: the one, of the increase of righteousnesse: the other, of the cause of that increase. VVe say, that the righteousnesse wherby we are to be iustified before God, admitteth no increase, because it must bee perfect righteousnesse: for perfect righteousnesse consisteth in indiuisibll, if any thing be taken from it, it is not perfect: and if it be not perfect, it cannot iustifie before God. Now by M. Bishop it appeareth, that the inherent righteousnes which they say is infused into a man in his first iustification, is vnperfect, because it remaineth afterwards to be increased. Of the same inherent iustice wee also make no question, but that there is an encrease thereof to bee expected and laboured for, and that we are therein to thriue and grow from day to day : but hence

hence we argue, that it is not that that can make a man iust in the sight of God: for the defect that is thereof, is not by a meere priuation, but by admixtion of the contrarie: ^a ex vitio est, it is by reason of some corruption, as S. Austin saith. Yea, ^b there is sinne, as hee again saith, when charity (that is inherent iustice) is lesse then it ought to be. But where sinne is, a man cannot bee said to bee iust in the sight of God. Therefore by the Popish imagined first iustification, a man cannot be iustified in the sight of God: no, nor by their second iustification, because it neuer groweth to that, but that it is still capable of increase. It remaineth therefore, that we are iust in the sight of God only by the righteousnes of Christ, which is without increase, being fully absolute and perfect according to the pre-script forme of the law, the same being vnder taken for our sakes, and performed in our name. But whereas we acknowledge the increase of inherent righteousnesse, there groweth a question of the cause of this increase. The Romish doctrine is, that the grace of God is like vnto a staffe put into a mans hand to stay him, and that it is left to his free will either to vse this staffe to keepe him vp, or to leaue it and so to fall. Free will then (say they) vsing well the grace that it hath receiued, deserueth thereby an increase of iustice and righteousnesse. Thus they stil hang all vpon the merit and free wil of man: they thinke scorne to haue any thing of gift, but one way or other will deserue all. But the doctrine of truth teacheth vs to conceiue all to be of grace, both the first gift of sanctification, and all the succeeding increase thereof. For although it bee true, that God to the thankfull receiuing and vsing of his gifts, doth adde greater measure thereof, according to that of our Sauior: ^c To him that hath shall be giuen, that is, saith S. Austin, ^e To them that vse well that which they haue receiued, yet that which is added, is but ^g grace for grace, and ^h the rendring of one gift to another gift, God himselfe giuing himselfe occasion by one gift, of the bestowing of another. As he giueth faith, and to faith giueth that for which we belecue; as he giueth vs to pray, and to our prayer giueth that for which we pray: so in all the rest he giueth grace, and giueth to vse well the grace that he hath giuen; and to the well vsing thereof giueth also further measure and increase of grace, that both in the gift and in the increase all praise and glory may redound to him. The meanes in vs whereby this increase is wrought vnto vs, is our faith; which,

^a August. Epist. 39.

^b Idem. de pers. iustit. Peccati sum est cum non est charitas quae esse debet, vel minor est quam debet.

^c Coester. Enchi. cap. 5. Est haec gratia in arbitrio voluntatis, quoniam admodum baculus in manu consultantis. cunctis auxiliis velis videri: sin minus poterit eam remouere.

^e Mat. 25. 29.

^f Aug. de iust. Christi. lib. 1. ca. 1. Dabitur habentibus, id est, cum benigne datur videntibus eo quod accipiunt.

^g Ioh. 1. 16.

^h Fulgent. ad Monim. lib. 1. Dona sua donis suis reddis.

i. Ambros. in Luc.
ca. 1. 11. 10. Mibi fide mea Solus ille
caelestis, vel inuisi-bilis, vel augeur.

as it first receiveth the spirit, so receiveth also the increase of it, whillest by the growth thereof we grow more into Christ, and thereby are more and more partakers of his life. That heavenly Sunne, saith Ambrose, is increased or diminished vnto me according to my faith. Now the to determine the point wherupon we are heere to insist, it is not, whether inherent righteousness may be increased, for that we denie not; nor whether good works be meritorious causes of the increase of it, for that belongeth properly to the questiō of merits: but the question is, whether in the increase of righteousness, which they tearme second iustification, we grow to any such perfection, as that thereby we may be found perfectly iust in the sight of God, by ver-tue and force thereof to be accepted vnto everlasting life.

32. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins pretends to proue, that they are no cause of the increase of our iustice: and yet frames not one argument directly to that purpose, but repeates those objections, and proposeth them now at large, whi hwe made before against the first iustificatiō: the which although impertinent to this place, yet I will solue them first, and then set downe our owne.

We conclude that a man is iustified by faith, without the works of the law.

Answer. *The Apostle there speaketh of the iustification of a sinner:
for he saith before, that he hath proued, both Iew and Greeke, to bee vnder sinne; and that all haue sinned, and need the glory of God: wherefore this place appertaines not vnto the second iustification, and excludes only eüher works of the law, as not necessary vnto the first iustification of a sinner: against the Iewes who thought and taught them to be necessary, or else against the Gentils any work of ours, from being any meritorious cause of that first iustification: for we acknowledge very willingly (as you haue heard often before) that euery sinner is iustified freely of the mee-grace of God, through the merit of Christ onely, and without any merit of the sinner him, selfe: and yet is not a sinner (being of years of discretiō) meerly passive in that his iustificatiō, as M. Perkins very absurdly saith for in their owne opinion he must beleue (which is an action) and in ours not only beleue, but also Hope, Loue, and Repent: and this kind of iusti-fication excludeth all boasting in our soule, as well as theirs. For as they must grant, that they may not brag of their faith, although it be an act* of

of: heirs so necessarily required at their iustification, that without it they could not be iustified: euen so let them think of the rest of those good preparations, which we hold to be necessary, that wee cannot truly boast of them, as though they came of our selues: but we confesse all these good inspirations, as all other good, to descend from the bounteous liberality of the father of lights: and for the yeelding of our consent to them, we can no more vaunt, then of consenting vnto faith: all which is no more, then if a man be mired in a lake and unable of himselfe to get out, would bee content that another of his goodnesse should helpe him out of it. Yet obserue by the way, that S. Paul forbiddeth not all glorying or boasting: Rom. 5. 2. Cor. 10. For he glorieth in the hope of glory of the Son of God, and in his tribulations. Again: He defineth that we may glory in measure, and that he might glory in his power, and that he was constrained 2. Cor. 12. to glory in his visions and reuelations. So that a good Christian may glory in our Lord and in his heauenly gifts, so as to be in measure & due season, acknowledging them from whence they come. But to boast and say, that either God needed vs, or that our good parts were cause that God Eph. 1. called vs first to his seruice, is both false and viterly unlawfull.

So that by grace ye are sau'd through faith, and that not of our selues, it is the gift of God, not of works lest any man should boast himself, is nothing against our doctrine of iustification, but too too ignorantly or maliciously cited against it: and not also with S. Augustin, that faith is there mentioned, to exclude all merits of our works, which went before and might seeme to the simple to haue beene some cause, why God bestowed his first grace vpon vs: but no virtuous dispositions requisite for the better preparation to the same grace: and therefore very fondly doth M. Perkins inferre, that in that sentence S. Paul speaketh of works of grace, because in the text following he mentioned good works. Whereas the Apostle putteth an euident distinction betweene those two kinde of works, signifying the first, to be of our selues: the second, to proceede from vs as Gods workmanship, created in Christ Iesus, and the first, he calleth Works simply: the second, Good works, prepared of God for vs to walke in after our first iustification. What grosse ignorance then was it, to take these two so distinct manner of works for the same, and to ground himselfe so boldly vpon it?

R. ABBOT.

The question intended by M. Perkins is expressly propounded, how L 1 2
 farre

farre fourth good works are required by iustification : namely before God, which he determineth thus, that they are required, not as causes for which we are iustified, either in the beginning of grace, or in the proceeding thereof, but onely as effects and fruits of iustification. Which although it be implied in that that before hath been said, of being iustified by faith alone, yet neither as touching first nor second iustification, is directly handled by M. Perkins, but onely in this place. Here therefore he disputeth wholly as touching iustification before God, that good works concurre not as any causes thereof, and bringeth his arguments directly to that point. First the Apostle saith, ^a We conclude that a man is iustified by faith without the works of the law. M. Bishop excepteth against this place, as meant of the first iustification of a sinner, not appertaining to the second iustification. But we find but one iustification spoken of by S. Paul, both beginning and continuing in faith : for being still sinners, so long as here we liue it must needs be, that that which the Apostle saith of the iustification of a sinner must still appertaine vnto vs, & therefore that both firstly and lastly we are iustified by faith without the works of the law. And if there were any second iustification, that whit the Apostle saith must necessarily be taken to belong to it. For hee writeth these things to the Romans, to the Galathians, which long before had beleued and beene baptized, and yet now still informeth them, that their iustification is by faith without the works of the law : stil he saith, ^b If righteousnesse be by the law, Christ died in vaine : yea he proueth by the Prophets words, not that the sinner onely, but ^c the iust shall liue by faith, as Hierome mentioning out of the vulgar Latin translation of the Psalmes, these words : ^d He will saue them for nothing, addeth, ^e No doubt but he meaneth the iust, who are not saued by their owne merit, but by the mercy of God. But it is further to be noted, that he bringeth in Abraham for an example of this iustification, euen then when he had long been the seruant of God, and shewed singular deuotion & obedience vnto him. He bringeth for another example the Prophet Dauid, a man according to Gods own heart, who from his childhood had been called of God, yet now still acknowledging his blessednes to consist in the ^f Lords imparting of righteousnesse without works. It is euident therefore that M. Bishops exception is vn sufficient, & that not only at a mans first entrāce into the state of grce, which he calleth the first iustificatiō, but

^a Rom. 3. 28.

^b Gal. 2. 21.

^c Cap. 3. 11.
^d Psal. 55. 7.
 vulg. lat. Pro ni-
 hi o saluos faciet
 eos.

^e Hieron. aduer.
 Pelag. lib. 2.
 Haud iustum quoniam iustus qui non proprio meri-
 to, sed dei saluan-
 tur clementia.
^f Rom. 4. 6.

but afterwards also a man is iustified by faith without the works of the law, and therefore works can be no meritorious cause of any second iustification. His acknowledgement, that a sinner is iustified freely of the meere grace of God, through the merit of Christ only, without any merit of the sinner himselfe, is a meere collusion and mockery. For if a man be iustified by workes, then it is not by meere grace. He saith ^{85:7. 21.} before of the woman that washed the feet of Christ, that her loue and other vertuous dispositions were causes why she was iustified, and determineth still, that hope, feare, repentance, charity, concur as causes thereof. Yea but (saith hee) they are no meritorious causes; there is the merit of Christ only, and no merit of the sinner himselfe. So then iustification is by workes, but not by merits. But we see the Apostle resolueth against workes, of merits he saith nothing: hee speaketh of that that is, not of that that cannot be; workes there may be, but merit there can be none, as is afterwards to be declared. See then the madnesse of these men: the Apostle saith, ^{b Gal 2. 16. Ephel 2. 9.} Not by worker; yes, say they, it is by workes, but it is not by merits: the Apostle saith, ^{i Rom. 11. 6.} If it be of grace, it is not of workes, yes, say they, it is both by grace and by workes, but it is not by merits. Thus impudently they confront the Apostle, and seeke to tye vpon him a flat contradictiō to that he saith. They will seem to vphold grace, by excluding merit, when as the Apostle testifieth, they plainly ouerthrow it by affirming workes, because (as hath bene before alledged out of Austin) grace is not grace in any respect, except it be free in euery respect. Yea neither do they wholly exclude merit, but affirme the same ^{k in k Bellar. de iust. lib. 7. cap. 17.} in some sort, euen in their first iustificatiō, as I haue before diuers times obserued out of Bellarmino. Thus they play fast and loose, and wold faine say, but cannot well tell what to say. With Pelagius they are ashamed to omit the grace of God, and yet they so teach it, as that they make it of no effect. Now because our iustification is meerly by the gift of God, therefore M. Perkins saith, that the sinner in his iustification is meere passive, meaning, that we do nothing at all, wherein consisteth any part of our righteousness with God. M. Bishop saith, that this is absurd, because a man must beleue, and to beleue is an action. But it is absurd onely to an absurd and ignorant man, who vnderstandeth not what he readeth. To beleue is an action, but he hath had occasion enough to know and vnderstand if ignorance had not blinded him, that wee place no part of righteousnesse in the very act of faith, but in the thing receiued thereby. Christ onely is our righteousnesse, and him we receiue by faith. God iustificeth, we are iustified. God imputeth righteousnesse, to vs it is imputed: God then is the agent, we the subiect whereon he worketh, patients, receiuers, and no way workers of that which is our righteousnesse before God. And to this his vnderstanding should leade him in that iustification which they maintaine. For although they say that by faith, hope, charity, repentance, which are actions, they obtaine iustification, yet the very habite of iustice is with them a thing meereley infused of God, & not the act of man himselfe. Therefore as touching the very habit of iustice a man must be onely passiue, not actiue, in the same sense as M. Perkins speaketh, onely a receiuer, and not at all a worker thereof. But now hee telleth vs, that the iustification which they so teach, wrought and procured by hope, feare, loue, &c. excludeth all boasting as well as ours. But that cannot be: for the Apostle telleth vs, that boasting or reioycing is not excluded by the law of works, but by the law of faith. So long as any thing is attributed to our workes in this behalfe, wee haue somewhat to gloiy in, as that by our workes, and for our workes sake we haue obtained that which we haue. The Apostle saith, that if Abraham were iustified by workes, hee had whereof to glorie or reioyce; and therefore it is not true, that iustification being attributed to workes, we haue nothing wherof to reioyce or boast our selues. Neither doth M. Bishops explanation help the matter at all, that we cannot boast of those preparations, as though they came of our selues: because we see the Pharisee in the Gospell to glorie of that, which notwithstanding he confesseth to be the gift of God: O God I thanke thee, saith he, that I am not as other men are. But by his words of these good inspirations descending from the father of lights he doth but abuse his Reader, dealing only colourably, as Pelagius the hereticke was wont to doe. For they make God the occasion only, and not the true cause of them. They make him externally an assistant to them, but the internall producing and proper originall of them, is of the Free will of man, which is the cause why they affirm these workes that go before iustificatiō not to be meritorious, as they say those are that follow after. For if they made them essentially the workes of grace, they could haue no colour to attribute merit to the one, and to deny it to the other. Yea M. Bishop himself

1 Rom. 3. 27.

2 Rom. 4. 2.

8 Luc. 18. 11.
August. in Psal.
31. Cum dicebat
gratias tibi, satebatur ab illo se accepisse quod
hab. bat. Hieron.
adiu. r. Pelag. li. 3.
Ille gratias agit
Deo quia ipsius misericordia non
fit sicut ceteri ho-mines &c.

apparently excludeth them from being the works of grace, in that presently after he calleth the grace of iustification, the first grace, as being ignorant of the language of their own schooles, whereas these works are said to goe before, to prepare vs for the receiuing of iustifying grace. In these works of preparatiō therefore there is apparently some what attributed to man, whereof he hath to glory in himselfe : for that howsoeuer being helped of God, yet hee doth somewhat himselfe, for which God bestoweth vpon him the gift of iustification. Yea M. Bishop plainly ascribeth to him somewhat whereof to reioice, in that he ascribeth it to him to cōsent to the grace of God. Yea but a man, saith he, can no more vaunt of consent to these works, then of consent to faith: true, and therefore if either way hee haue any thing of himselfe, he hath somewhat whereof to boast. M. Bishop therefore buildeth vp his own glory in both, so acknowledg- ing the grace of God both in faith and works, as that al is nothing, but by the free wil of man. Now we on the other side, together with the auncient Church, suffer not, nay, we viterly forbid, that either in our faith, or in our worke, we challenge to our selues any thing as our owne. But in the iustification of faith boasting or reioicing is excluded, not onely for that faith and all consent of faith is wholly the gift of God, but also for that to faith nothing at all is ascribed for it selfe, but onely to Christ who is receiued thereby, and is it selfe a meere acknowledgment, that we haue all that we haue of the so- ueraigne bountie and mercy of God, only for his owne sake, & not for any thing that is in vs. Now therefore we hence argue against M. Bishops iustification, that that is the only true doctrin of iustificati- on, by which mans boasting or reioicing is excluded. By the do- ctrine of iustification by workes, mans boasting is not excluded. Therefore the doctrin of iustification by works, is not the true do- ctrine of iustification. As for his comparison of a man mired in a lake, and content that another should helpe him out, it saoureth verie strongly of the stinke of the Pelagians, leauing in a man both will and power for the helping of himselfe; whereas the Scripture affir- ming vs to be P d: ad in tres passēs and sinnes, bereaueth vs altogether

o Fulgen. ad Mo-
sum. lib. 1. Nul-
ten u sumus, im-
mo saluiter pro-libemus tam in nostra fide quōm
in nostro opere
sanquam n. sumus nobis aliquid vendere.

p Ephe. 2.11.

paines to deserue well, as M. Bishop saith, at his hands whose seruuant he is, and by couenant to merit heauen. Hereto hee worketh partly by grace, as he saith, and partly by free will, and therefore hauing merited and deserued, he hath somewhat in respect of himselfe wherein to glory and reioice : whereas the course that God taketh is, [¶] that we may know at that day, as S. Bernard saith, that not for the workes of righteousnesse which wee haue done, but of his owne mercy he hath saued vs. For this cause albeit hee could haue perfected vs at once, and euen at the first haue reformed vs to full and vnspotted righteousnesse to serue him accordingly, yet hath hee thought good to leaue vs groning vnder a burthen of sin, and vnder many infirmities and imperfections in the seruice that we doe vnto him, that the sight of our foule feet may still pull down our Peackstaile, and we may alwaies fully know, that we are to giue all the honour and glory of our saluation to God alone. But M.
Bishop telleth vs, that all glorying and boasting is not forbidden, and we acknowledge the same, for else the Apostle wold not haue said, [¶] He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. Our glorying or reioicing mult be with the acknowledgement of his goodnesse, & to the magnifying of him, & not of our selues. He that exalteth himselfe as the Pharisee did, in that which he confesseth to be the gift of God, reioiceth against God. But M. Bishop offendeth both waies : he attributeth not all vnto God, but somewhat at least to the free wil of man. Againe, it is not entirely the glory of God that he respecteth, but the bringing of dignity vnto men, as he hath before exprest. Therefore albeit he wil not haue a man boast and say, that his good parts were the cause that God called him first to his seruice, yet he maketh no exception, but that a man may boast of the good workes that he hath performed in seruing him, and may glory that his good parts therein are the cause why God adiudgeth heauen vnto him as iustly deserued, which is that against which the Scripture wholly driueth, teaching vs to confesse that which Austin doth, that [¶] not for performance of merits, but in mercy and louing kindnesse the soule of man is crowned : and to say with Hilary [¶] That wee are what we were not ; that we shall be, what wee are not, it hath no other cause at all, but onely the mercy of God. Againe, hee will not haue vs boast and say, that God needed vs for our selues, but wee must needes say with Tertullian : [¶] There is none but needeth him, of whose ¶ Bernard Cant.

Ser. 50. Vt sciamus in die illa,
quia non ex operi-
bis iustitie que
fecimus nos, sed
pro misericordia sua saluos nos
fecit.

¶ 1. Cor. 1. 31.

¶ 3. Pet. 2.
 ¶ Aug. Hypog. lib.
 3. Intellige, in miseratione et miseratione et
in factione meri-torum animam coronari.
 ¶ Hilary. in Psal.
 135. Quod su-
mus qui non sui-
mus, quod erimus
quod non sumus,
causam aliam non habet nisi misericordie Dei.
 ¶ Tertul. aduer.
Hermog. Nemo
non eget eo de causis vestris.

whose he vseth anything. Their doctrine of free will maketh God to stand in neede of vs, because by it God bringeth not the worke of our saluation to passe, but at our will. It is in the power of our free will, either to helpe it or hinder it, either by admitting or rejecting the grace of God. For the performance therefore of his purpose and promise, God must stand in need of our will, to consent to his worke, or else it succeedeth not. For the auoiding of which absurdity, we must confesse, that God vseth nothing in vs, for the effecting of our saluation, but what he himself graciously worketh in vs. Our consenting, our beleeuing, our willing, our working, all is of God, and nothing is there therein that we can call ours. Now therefore it is plaine, that M. Perkins did not ignorantly and maliciously, as this ignorant wrangler speaketh, but iudiciously and truly apply against them the place to the Ephesians, By grace ye are saued through faith; not of your selues, it is the gift of God; not of workes, least any man should boast. Where the Apostle ascribing all to grace through faith in Christ, taketh exception generally against workes, and giueth to vnderstand, that they are effects, not causes of saluation, because God hauing first by faith put vs in the state of saluation, doth consequently create vs anew in Christ Iesus, vnto good works. M. Bishops exception is, that the Apostle there excludeth onely the workes that bee of our selues, before wee bee iustified. But that his exception is very vaine, appeareth plainly by that the Apostle for reason of that that he saith, Not of workes, least any man should boast, addeth in the next words, For wee are his workmanship created in Christ Iesus vnto good works, which God hath prepared for vs to walke in. Where one way to vnderstand workes in the one sentence which is to be proued, and another way to vnderstand good workes in the other sentence which is the prooffe, is to make the Apostle to vtter as reasonlesse reasons as M. Bishops idle head is wont to doe. For what sense were it to say, wee are not saued by workes that are of our selues before we be iustified, because wee are Gods creation and workmanship in the good workes that wee doe after our iustification? But the Appostles meaning is very euident, we are not saued by any good workes that we doe; for our good workes are none of ours, but they are his workmanship in vs, by whom we are saued, who hauing by his calling entitled vs to saluation, hath prepared good workes as the way for vs to walke in, to the same saluasaluation. It was not then M. Perkins ignorance, to take two distinct manner of workes for the same, but M. Bishops absurd shifting, to make a distinction of workes there where the sequell of the text plainly conuinceth, that there is no difference at all. But wee would gladly know of him, to which manner of workes he referreth his ueruons dispositions? To the latter hee cannot, because, they proceede from vs as Gods workmanship created in Christ Iesus, which we are not till we bee iustified, and they are for vs to walke in after our iustification. If to the former, then we see they are by the Apostle excluded from iustification. So in neither place doth he say any thing of them, and because he knew them not, he hath wholly left them out. He was vndoubtedly to blame to conceiue so little vertue in Master Bishops veruons dispositions, as not to think them worth the speaking of. But it is woorth the noting, to what fashion hee by his deuce hath hewed the words of the Apostle: Not by workes, least any man should boast; that is, not by workes that are of our selues, but yet by ueruons good dispositions and workes of preparation, which are partly of God, and partly of our selues; and yet, as I haue before said, thy make the essentiall production of these workes of preparation, to bee onely of our selues, because as yet there is ² no infused or inhabitant grace, whence they should proceede; and therefore out of their owne grounds it must follow, that the same workes of preparation are heere excluded by the Apostle. But see the singular impudency of this man, who maketh S. Austin a witness of his ueruons dispositions, who hath not in the place alleaged by him, so much as any semblance or shew for prooff thereof. Note with S. Austin, saith he, that faith excludeth al merits of our workes, but no veruons dispositions for preparation to grace. Lewd Sophister, where is that note found in S. Austin? In what words is it set downe? What? still lie, and nothing but lie? S. Austine forsooth maketh the Apostle to exclude all merits of our workes which went before, and might seeme to the simple to haue bene some cause why God bestowed his first grace vpon vs, but not all workes; for there are workes of preparation, which Doctor Bishop, no simple man I warrant you, defendeth to be the cause why God bestoweth vpon vs his first grace. Will he make S. Austine the author of so absurd and impious a gloss? S. Austine vnder the name of merits wholly excludeth workes, vnderstanding by merits any thing going

*z. Cofter. Enchirid.
cap. 5. Hominis
liberum arbitriū auxilio Dei nec-
essario in habitū sed mouetur et ad usum in se preparat ad iusti-ficationem, non solum patiendo sed operando & & zendo.*

going before iustification that should bee vnto God a motiue or cause to bestow his grace vpon vs, as I haue shewed^a before. Therefore he doth nor direct the words of S. Paul onely against merits, but simply against works, that he affirmeth b a man to be iustified without workes precedent or going before; that he teacheth that not for any good worke past, a man attaineth to the iustification of faith; that a man is not iustified by workes that go before faith, meaning by faith not a faith which is before iustification, but the faith in which our iustification is begun, as appeareth very plainly by that that he saith in another place, c If we haue no righteousnes, we haue no faith; but if we haue faith, we haue also some part of righteousnesse already. And thus perpetually he excludeth all workes going before iustification, from being any causes thereof, and still maketh iustification the beginning of all good works, so as that d without the grace of God (which with him is no other but the grace e whereby we are iustified) wee can in no sort thinke or do anything according vnto God. Of M. Bishops vertuous dispositions before iustification, hee neuer speaketh word, nor euer giueth intimation of any such, nay he condemneth the Pelagians for affirming the same, as wee haue seene in the question of f Free will.

a Sec. 21.
 b August. li. 83.
 quist 76. Et nemo
 meriti u priorum bonorum operum arbitretur se ad
 donum iustifica-
 tionis peruenisse.
 dicit posse homi-
 nis sine operibus praeuentibus iu-
 stificari per fide:
 dicit de operibus
 quae fidem praece-dunt.
 c Idem de verb.
 Apost. ser. 16. Si
 iusticia nihil ha-
 bemus nec fidem habemus. Si fidem habemus iam aliquid habemus iustitiae.
 d Idem epist. 46.
 Sine illa cogitare aliquid vel agere secundum Deum
 vlla ratione omni-
 no non possumus.
 f Sec. 5.

c Epist. 105. Nullam gratiam commendat Apostolus, quia iustifica: i sumus ut homines iusti essemus.

33. W. BISHOP.

Now to his second reason. If you be circumcised, you are bound to the whole law. Hence thus he argueth: If a man will be iustified by workes, hee is bound to fulfill the whole law, according to the rigour of it. That is Paules ground: But no man can fulfill the law, according vnto the rigour of it: ergo. No man can be iustified by workes. He that can apply the text prefixed vnto any part of the argument, Erit mihi magnus Apollo: Saint Paul onely saith in these words: That if you be circumcised, yee are bound to keepe the whole law of Moses. Maister Perkins, That if a man will be iustified by workes, hee must fulfill the rigour of the law: Which are as iust as Germanes lips, as they say: But M. Perkins sayes, that it is Saint Pauls ground: but he is much deceived, for the Apostles ground is this: That circumcision is as it were a profession of Iudaisme, and therefore he that would be circumcized, did make himselfe subject vnto the whole law of the lawes. Of the possibilities of fulfilling she

Gal 5.

the law, because M. Perkins toucheth so often that string, shal bee treated in a distinct question, as soone as I haue dispatched this.

R. ABBOT.

a Gal. 5.3.

b Ver. 2.

c August. cont.
Faust. Man. lib. 19
cap. 17. Certa per-nicios si in huius-
modi legis operi-
bus putarēt suam
spem salutemque conseruare.

d Ver. 4.

e Cap. 3. 10.

The force of the sentence alledged, that ^a he that is circumcised is bound to keepe the whole law, dependeth vpon the verse going before, and that that followeth after. He saith before, ^b If ye bee circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing, by one particular giuing to vnderstand what was to be conceiued of the rest, that ^c it was certaine destruction for them to thinke, that their hope and saluation was contained in such workes of the law, because thereby they were secludded from hauing any benefit in Christ. Which as he hath namely spoken of circumcision, as being a speciall matter then spoken of, so he saith it in the verse after of the whole law; ^d Ye are abolished from Christ, whosoever are iustified by the law, ye are fallen from grace. If then in any part of the law a man seeke to be iustified, he is thereby voided of the grace of Christ. Being abandoned from Christ and his grace, he hath no meanes of iustification and saluation, but by the law. He cannot be iustified by the law, but by perfect obseruing of it, because it is said, ^e Cursed is euery man that continueth not in all things that are written in the booke of the law to doe them. What then is said of circumcision, belongeth to all the workes of the law. He that seeketh to be iustified by the workes of the law, he is bound fully and perfectly to obserue the same, and if he be any where a trespasser, he cannot be iustified by the law. And rightly doth M. Perkins say, that this is the ground of that which the Apostle saith of circumcision, as he shall well perceiue, that obserueth how through the whole Epistle hee disputeth generally against iustification by the law, to disprooue the doctrine of the false Apostles, vrging for iustification circumcision and other ceremonies of the law. Therefore in the words alledged, this argument is implied; He that wil be iustified by the law, is bound to fulfil the whole law: He that seeketh to be iustified by circumcision, seeketh to be iustified by the law: hee is therefore bound to the perfect obseruation of the whole law. As for that which M. Bishop saith, that circumcision is as it were a profession of Iudaisme, it is a very idle and fleecelisse answer. For what is Iudaisme, but a profession of iustification

by

by the law, the Jewes ^f seeking righteousness not by faith, but as it were ^f Rom 9. 12. by the works of the Law. Circumcision therefore is a profession of iustification by the law; against which the Apostles ground is, as hath beene said, that he that professeth to be iustified by the law, doth tie himselfe to obserue it without any breach, being by the law guilty of death, if he be found to transgresse in any sort. Now that there is no ablenesse in vs to fulfill the law, so as to be iustified thereby, it shall appeare God willing, in the place where Master Bishop promisseth to treate thereof.

34. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins third argument. Election to saluation is of grace without works: wherefore the iustification of a sinner is of grace alone without works: because election is the cause of iustification.

Answer. That election is of grace without works, done of our owne simple forces, or without the works of Moses Law: but not without pro-uision of good works issuing out of faith, and the helpe of Gods grace, as shall be handled more largely in the question of merits.

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop, to answer the argument, auoucheth a plaine point of Pelagianisme, that Gods selection is vpon foresight of our good works, directly contrary to that which the Apostle defineth in the example of Iacoby,^a Before the children were borne, and when they had done neither good nor euill, that the purpose of God according to election, might stand not by works, but by him that calleth, it was said, the elder shall serue the yonger, as it is written, I haue loued Iacob, and haue hated Esau.^b Where, saith S. Austine, if the Apostle would that either the good works of the one, or the euill workes of the other that were to come should be understood, he would not haue said, Not of works, but woul haue said, for the workes that were to come, and so would haue put the matter out of question. ^c The Pelagians said, as he obserueth, that of them being not yet borne, God therefore hated the one, and loued

^a Rom. 9. 11.
^b August. Enchi- cap. 98. Quam re-sifutura opera vel
bona huius vel mala illius que Deus vniq; presciebat vellet in-telligi. nequaquam discreti, non ex operibus, sed discreti
ex futuris operi-
bus, eoque modo istam solueris questionem. &c.
^c Idem epist. 130.
præcul. lib. 1. Quis

Ideo, inquit Pelagiani, nondum natorum alium olerat, alium diligebat, quia futura eorum opera istam accusatum sensum Apostolo esse iuste non miretur?

the other, because hee did foresee their works to come. Who would not wonder, saith hee, that this witty conceit should be wanting to the Apostle? But his resolution euery where is, that Gods election is the cause of our good works, not the foresight of our good works the cause why God elected vs. To that purpose he alleadgeth the words of the Apostle, ^d He hath chosen vs in him before the foundations of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame before him throughout lone; ^e not saith he, because we would be, but that we should be; not because he foreknew that we would be so, but that we might bee so by his election of grace. The like hee obserueth of the same Apostles words concerning himselfe, ^f I haue obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful, not for that the Lord did foresee that he would be faithful, but by his mercy made him so to be. It were too long to alleage all that might be alleadged out of Austine as touching this point, but Master Bishop hauing very nicely touched it, deferreth the rest to the question of merits, where he saith nothing directly to it. It seemeth he was ielous of the matter, and therefore was loth to wade too farre, least it should too plainly appeare, that Pelagius and he are both fallen into one pit.

35. W. BISHOP.

The fourth argument. A man must be fully iustified, before hee can doe a good worke: and therefore good works cannot goe before iustification. True, not before the first iustification of a sinner. But good Sir, you hauing made in the beginning of this last Article, a distinction betweene the first and second iustification; and hauing before discussed the first, and the second now remaining, and expecting you, why did you not say one word of it, the matter being ample and well worthe the handling? Albeit you will not willingly confesse any second iustification as you say: yet had it beene your part at least to haue disproued such arguments, as wee bring to proue a second iustification: Yee acknowledge that there be degrees of sanctification; but these degrees must be made downeward of euill, worser and worst: for if all our sanctification and best works be like vnso defiled cloues, and no better then deadly sinnes as you hold, else-where, let any wise man iudge what degrees of goodnesse can be lodged in it. Againe, how absurd is that position, that there is but one iustification, whereby they take fast hold on Christs righ-

d Ephes. i. 4.
e De predest. sancti. cap. 8. Non quia futuri eramus sed ut essemus. Et cap. 19. Non quia iustos tales nos esse presciuit, sed ut essemus tales per ipsam electionem gratie. &c. f 1. Cor. 7. 25.
Aug. epist. 105.

eousnesse, which can neuer after bee either loosed or increased. Why then do you with your brother Iouinian maintaine, that all men are equally righteous? If it so be, let him that desireth to see you well confessed, read S. Hierome, S. Ambrose, S. Augustine, S. Gregory. At least we must needs uphold, that a man is as iust and righteous at his first conversion, as at his death how godly a life soeuer he leaue: against which I will put downe these reasons following.

Lib. 2. con. Iouin.

Epist. 81.

Epist. 57.

Hom. 15 in

Ezech.

R. ABBOT.

If there can bee no good works before the first iustification of a sinner, what shall we thinke of M. Bishops vertuous dispositions and works of preparation? What are they vertuous, and yet are they not good? Nay, he hath called them ^a before good qualities, good dispositions, good preparations, and what were they good then, and now are they not good? Tell vs, M. Bishop, your mind: are your works of preparation good works, or are they not good? If they be not good, then you haue spokē vntruly before in calling them good. If they be good, then it is vntruth that you say heere, that no good works go before the first iustification of a sinner. Either in the one or in the other you must needs confesse, that you haue said amisse. Now here he quarrelleth with Maister Perkins, as if he had said nothing to the matter in hand, which is as hee saith of the second iustification, whereas Maister Perkins, though noting their distinction of first and second iustification, yet hath in hand wholly to exclude works from iustification, whence it must follow, that they haue no place in any second iustification. And the argument heere propounded, directly ouerthroweth his second iustification, though hee would not see so much. For if a man can doe no perfect good works till he be fully iustified, the can he do no perfect good works till the second iustification be fulfilled. For a man is not fully and perfectly iustified, till hee haue attained to full and perfect iustice. Iustice is not full and perfect, so long as any thing remaineth to be added vnto it. There is still something to be added in their second iustification, till it come to his full terme. Therefore till then a man is not fully iustified. Now the iustice that is not perfect, if it be respected in it selfe, cannot bee pleasing vnto God. It can therefore bring forth no good works to merit at Gods hands.

a Sect 30. & 32.

There

There can therefore be no good workes, whereby a man should merit their second iustification. M. Bishop after his manner briefly reciteth the argument, & hauing so done, very scholerlike answereth to the conclusion, graunting it in one sort, when the premises inferre it in another, and yet braueth and faceth, as if the matter were wholly cleare for him. Iustification, as M. Perkins saith, wee make but one, but yet wee make degrees of sanctification, not euill, worse and worst, as this cauiller fondly dreameth, but good, and better & best, according to the measure of Gods spirit bestowed vpon vs, but yet so, as that to the good, & better, and best that is in this life, there cleaueth a blemish and staine, which would cause the worke to be condemned, but that it is graciously accepted, and the imperfection thereof mercifully pardoned for Christs sake, as shall appear in the handling of that matter. He calleth the affirming of one iustification perfect at first, and not after to be lost, an absurd positio; but it is not absurd, but to absurd men, to whom the truth it selfe is absurd. There is in the sight of God but one iustification onely by faith in Christ, vnder the couerture whereof wee stand thenceforth acceptable vnto God, both in our persons, and in our workes of obedience vnto euerlasting life. In that sense as to present vs iust before God, there is no other iustification. That that is further, is but declaratiua, a iustification so called, whereby we are iustified and declared to be iustified men. The true iustification properly so called, cannot be lost, because ² whom God iustificeth he also glorifieth, nor increased, because the righteousness of Christ is alwaies vniforme and alike. By this righteousness being the same to all, all are equally righteous, but by the different grace of sanctification in inherent righteousness, some are more righteous & some lesse: and if Iouinian maintained the contrary, hee erred, and therefore those Fathers whom M. Bishop citeth, doe not course vs at all, but say the same that we do, & we that they, neither is it any other but his grosse ignorance, so absurdly to mistake one thing for another. We say, that there is equality of righteousness in one respect, and he bringeth the Fathers affirming against Iouinian what we confesse, that there is difference of righteousness in another respect. According to that former righteousness by imputation of the merit and obedience of Christ, a man is as righteous the first day of his conuersion, as he is in the end of his life, howsoeuer as touching sanctification and inherent righteoufnesse, he grow much, and therein be renewed from day to day.

36. W. BISHOP.

First, that of the Revelations: Let him that is iust be yet iustified: or as your text hath it: He that is righteous, let him be more righteous: and that of, feare not to be iustified euen vntill death: do con-^{Cap. 9.} ^{Eccle. 1. 9.} sence, that there are more iustificatiōs then one, and that a man may increase in iustification and righteoufnes vntill death. Which is confirmed where it is said: That the path of a iust man proceedeth, as the light ^{Pro. 4.} doth vntill it be perfect day: which is degrees more and more. and S. Paule teacheth the same, where he saith to men that giue almes plentifully: That God will multiply their seed, and augment the increases of the fruites of their iustice. Further, S. James doth most effectually ^{2. Cor. 9.} prone this increase of righteoufnes, and the second iustification, in these words: Abraham our father, was he not iustified by workes, offering Isaac his son vpon the altar. That he speaketh of the second iustification is euident: for Abraham was iustified before Isaac was borne, as it is most manifest by the Scripture it selfe: and by that heretocall act, of not sparing his onely and intirely beloued Sonne, his iustice was much augmented. And the Apostle himselfe seemeth to haue fore-^{Cap. 1.} seene all our aduersaries cauillation, and to haue so long before preuented them. First, that common shift of theirs (that this work was a signe, or the fruite onely of his faith, and no companion of it, in the matter of iustification) is formally confuted: for the holy Ghost speaking distinctly of both his faith and worke, and ioyning them both in this act of iustification, attributeth the better part of it vnto his worke, thus: Seekest thou that faith did worke with his workes; and by the workes the faith was consummate and made perfect. Which he doth after fitly declare by a similitude, comparing faith to the body, and good works to the soule: which giue life and lustre to faith, otherwise faith is of little valne and estimation with God. Which S. Paule also teacheth at large, among other speeches including this: That if he should haue al faith, and wanted charitie. he were nothing. And comparing faith and charitie to-^{1. Cor. 13.} gether, defineth expressly, that charitie is the greater vertue, which charitie is the fountaine of all good workes. And so by this preferring these works of charity before faith, he doth stop the other starting hole of the

Gen. 22.

Protestants, that Abraham for sooth was iustified before God, by onely faith. but was declared iust before men by his workes: For if God esteeme more of charity, then of our faith, a man is more iustified before God by charity, than by faith. Againe, in the very place where this noble fact is recorded, to shew how acceptable it was to God himselfe, it is said in the persone of God: Now I know that thou louest me: and to conuince all obstinate cauiling, is it not said that his faith did in this very fact cooperate with his workes, and that the worke made his faith perfect: which coniunction of both of them together, doth demonstrate that he speaketh of his iustification before God: adding also; That he was therefore called the friend of God: which could not haue bene, if thereby he had bene onely declared iust before man: and this doth S. Augustine reconcile the two places of the Apostles, S. Paul and S. James, which seeme contrary. S. Paul saying that a man is iustified by faith without workes, and S. James, that a man is iustified by workes and not by faith onely. That S. Paul speaketh of workes which go before faith, such as we of our owne forces, without the helpe of grace are able to do: and such he saith not to deserue our final iustification. But S. James disputeth of workes, which follow faith, and issue out of our soules, now garnished with grace, and such he holdeth vs to be iustified by, that is, made more and more iust: See the place. He saith directly, that we are iustified, and that this iustice doth in crease, whiles it doth proceede and profit.

Lib. 83. Quest.
 a. 76.
 Ser. 16. de verb.
 Apost.

R. ABBOT.

The exhortation of S. Iohn is, that he that hath walked in righteousness and innocencie, and thereby approoued his profession of the faith of Christ, should still continue his course, and go forward to iustifie and approue himselfe to the consciences of all men, by the same vertuous and godly life. The words haue their reference to outward conuersation, & iustification is to be vnderstood of the same that S. James speaketh of, & that is before men, and in example of outward life. To inward holinesse and purity the other part of the sentence is to be referred, He that is holy, let him be sanctified still, that is, let him adde to his sanctification, let him be more and more renewed, let him still be putting off the old man, and putting on the new; let him still cleanse himselfe from all defilement of the flesh and of the spirit, and finish (or perfect) his sanctification in the feare of God.

a Eph. 4. 22. 24.
 b 2. Cor. 7. 1.

S. Iohn

S. Iohn wold not by both those speeches import one thing, & therefore seeing the latter without doubt importeth inward righteousnesse, the other must needs be applied to outward works. As for that of Ecclesiasticus it is nothing to vs, who admit no canonically authoritic of that booke; yet it proueth nothing for M. Bishop nor against vs, the words truly translated being these: ^c deserre not till death to be iustified; that is, put not off till death to repent & to seek forgiuenesse of thy sinnes, according to that which in the former verse he hath said; ^d Humble thy self before thou be sicke, & whilest thou maiest yet siene, shew thy conuersion. Here is nothing at all to proue two iustifications in that sense that we here speak of, as whereby a man being first iust, becōmeth more iust before the iudgement seat of God. Increase and growth of inherent righteousnesse wee acknowledge & require in all faithfull Christians, & his paines is idly bestowed in the proof therof. We know what our Sauiour saith, ^e Eueris one that beareth fruit in me the Father purgeth, that he may bring forth more fruit; what S. Peter exhorteth, ^f to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ. We teach men to say with S. Paul: ^g Not as though I had already attained or were already perfect, but one thing I do: I forget that which is behind, & endeavour my selfe to that which is before, & follow hard toward the marke, &c. We teach with S. Bernard; ^h In the way of life not to go forward, is to go backward, and againe; not to increase is to decrease; where a man beginneth not to care to be better, there he giveth ouer being good at all. Hee neede not therefore to proue this matter vnto vs, who teach it much more faithfully & carefully then they do. The place of Iames proueth no other iustification but what we confesse, that is, an approving & declaring of his faith and iustification. His works are a testimonie that the Scripture hath truly and rightlie said of him, ⁱ Abraham beleued God, & it was imputed vnto him for righteousness. Now M. Bishop shold haue told vs in what other meaning it can be taken, that S. Iames saith, that in his works the Scripture was fulfilled, that saith, Abraham beleued God, and it was imputed vnto him for righteousness. For if his workes were but the fulfilling of that Scripture, how absurdlie doth Master Bishop goe about to prooue in his workes an augmentation of that which by that Scripture is imported formerly to be done? If his workes were but the fulfilling of that that was said of his iustification before, how doth hee

^c Eccles. 18. 21.^d Ver. 20.^e Ioh. 15. 21.
^f 2. Pet. 3. 18.^g Phil. 3. 12.^h Bernard in P^ro-
u. ser. 3. In uia
uite non progredi
est regredi.ⁱ Epist. 123. N^o ille proficere est desicere.^k Epist. 91. N^o i incipis uolle fieri
uolens, ubi est uiam desinis esse bonu.
^l Iam. 2. 23.

thereby seeke to proue a second iustification? Now the former testimonie of his iustification is to be considered, which was long after Gods first calling of him, ^m when he had shewed his singular faith and obedience vnto God, in going out of his own country at the word of God, when he had long called vpon the name of the Lord, built many altars vnto him, done him much seruice: when he had long travelled from place to place vnder his protection. For after all this, yet was he not iustified by his works, but onely of his ⁿ belceuing the Lord, it is testified, that it was imputed vnto him for righteousness. We would haue M. Bishop to tell vs, whether Abraham before the time that this testimony was giuen him, were a iustified man or not? he cannot denie it, because Abraham had done many good works: & he hath before said, that there can be no good workes before the first iustification. If he were iustified before, then it appeareth, that to a man already iustified, not his workes, but his faith is counted for righteousness; and because it cannot be thought that by one meanes he was iustified before, and by another now, it must needs be, that as before to be iustified, so now still beeing iustified, his faith is counted to him for righteousness, according as it is written. ^o The iust shall liue by faith. Now if after he were iustified; he did continue still to be iustified by faith, then to speake properly as we do of iustification in the sight of God, there is one onely iustification whereby a mans ^p faith is imputed to him for righteousness, as the Apostle speaketh. It must needs therefore follow that S. Iames speaketh of iustification in some other meaning then the Apostle S. Paul doth: what that meaning is let him learne, not of vs, but of the ancient Church: ^q Had Abraham no workes? (saith Photinus) God forbid. Verily he had workes, so as that if hee had beene brought in iudgement with the men with whom hee liued, hee had easily beene iustified, and preferred before them: but that by his workes hee should bee iustified before God, as worthe of the dignity, kindnesse, and gift that was yielded vnto him, he would neuer haue attained to it, but he had it by faith onely. Heereby, saith he, the resolution is manifest, how Saint Paul saith, that Abraham was iustified by faith, and Saint Iames, that he was iustified by workes. Heere is a plaine distinction and difference deliuered, that Saint Paul saith, that by faith only a man is iustified before God: but thae it is before men, & with men that S. Iames meaneth a man is iustified by workes. And this

m Gen. 12. & seq.

n Gen. 15. 6.

o Hab. 2. 4.

p Rom. 4. 5.

q Pho. apud

Oecumen. in Rom.

cap. 4. Non habuit

Abraham opera

et absi. Opera

siquidem habuit,

ut si cum homini-

bus qui simul cum

eo, versabantur siisset in iudicio

constitutus faceret

iustificatus fuisset,

illisque an eposi-

tus: verum ut

coram Deo ex suis

operibus iustifica-

retur tanquam

dignus & equalis

sepe prebens digni-

tatis cum ea que

inde precebat

beneficentia & di-

no, nequaquam fu-

isset illam affectu-

rus. Unde ergo his

dignus est habitus

ex sola fide, &c.

Solutio patet ex his quomodo hic qui-dem (Paulus) ex

fide est iustificatus

fuit: Abraham,

dignus autem la-

retibus ex operibus.

distinction is very plainly intimated by S. Paul, when he saith, † If Abraham were iustified by workes, he had to reioice, but not with God. He denieth not but Abraham was iustified by workes, and that he had wherein to glory, and to stand vpon his iustification, but yet not with God. Hee might do it in respect of men, but with God hee could not do it. So saith Origen vpon those words, hauing first put difference betwixt iustification by faith scene onely to God, and iustification by workes which may be approoued of men: † If Abraham were iustified by workes, he hath the glory which commeth by workes, but not that which is with God. And this distinction is apparant also by S. Austine, who speaking as touching inherient iustice and righteousnesse of workes, saith, † So long as we liue in this life, no mā is iustified; but in the sight of God. Not without cause was it that Dauid added, In thy sight: For it may be that a man may be iustified in the sight of men; but let him speake as touching Gods sight, and no man liuing shall be iustified in thy sight. Where lieth S. Austine as touching iustification by workes, denieth that any man in this life is iustified in the sight of God, it must necessarily follow that that iustification which is by workes, must not be vnderstood in the sight of God, but onely in the sight of men. Now then to speake of iustification before men, as S. James doth, it is true that both faith and workes do concurre and ioine in the act of iustification. The faith that inwardly in the heart iustificieth to God, and is outwardly professed with the mouth to men, is not sufficient to approoue a man outwardly to men, and to the Church of God, to the sight and conscience whereof, euery faithfull man is bound to acquit and cleare himselfe, vnlesse it bee accompanied and adorned with vertuous and vpright conuersation. In this respect therefore it may be said, that the better part in some sort is attributed to workes, that faith is made perfect by workes; that faith is as the body and good workes as the soule, and that faith without workes is dead, euen as the body is dead without the soule. Men specially haue an eie to workes, and thereto attribute more then to words. Hee is taken for a halting and halfe Christian, that maketh shew of faith, and liueth not accordingly. Men account him as a carion, a dead carkasse, loathsome, & detestable; he is euery mans byword, as I said before, & his name continually carrieth reproach with it. Hereby it appeareth also, that faith though haply it be in the heart, yet is here re-

† Origen. in Rom. ca. 4. Abraham si ex operibus iustificatus est. habet quidem gloriam ex operibus uenturam sed non illam que apud Deū est. † Aug. de Temp. ser. 49. Quamuis uiuatur in hęc uita nemo iustificatus est, sed in conspectu Dei. Non frustra a d. d. d. In conspectu tuorum nisi quia potest esse iustificatus in conspectu hominum. Refert in conspectu Dei: Non iustificabitur in conspectu tuo omnino uiuenti.

pected onely as it is professed to men. For it cannot bee that the worke of the hand should giue life to the faith of the heart, but rather receiueth life from it. Yea, M. Bishop himselfe telleth vs, that charity within is the life of faith within, and therefore works which are without cannot be said to be the life of faith, but as faith it selfe also is without. There may be works whereby a man outwardly may u iustifie himselfe to men, as the Pharisees did, which yet are dead works, because there is neither faith nor charity to giue them life from the heart. Now S. Iames must so be vnderstood, as that not charity which is habitually & inuisibly within, but works which are outward and apparent, must be the life of faith. He speaketh therefore of faith, as it is outwardly professed, which hath it life, and grace; and honour amongst men by the outward fruits of good works correspondent to it selfe. Very guilefully therefore doth M. Bishop turne his speech from works whereof S. Iames speaketh, to charity, there being here so different a consideration to be had of the one and of the other; yea, he himselfe naming charity the fountaine of good workes, and thereby importing that charity as the fountaine differeth from the good workes that issue therefrom. The place that he alledgeth to the Corinthians, x Though I haue all faith, &c. is nothing to this purpose, because wee speake here of a faith that is common to all the faithfull, but the Apostle there speaketh of a faith that is peculiar onely to some, wherof he hath said in the chapter going before, y To one is giuen the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge, to another is giuen faith, meaning the faith whereby miracles are wrought, as he himselfe addeth, Though I haue all faith, so that I could remooue mountaines, &c. His purpose is to teach men not to bee proud of speciall gifts of the spirit, but to respect the end and vse thereof, which is performed by loue, without which they are onely idle shewes. As touching the comparison of faith and charity, there hath bene enough said² before. For our present state faith hath the preferment, and all in all hangeth vpon our faith, which is the heart and life of whatsoeuer else is in vs towards God. It is faith that giueth God his glory, that acknowledgeth him to be that that hee is; that so setteth him before vs, as to draw all our affections vnto him, our loue, our feare, our hope, our delight, our selues wholly both body and soule. The promises of God in speciall manner are made to them u Luk. 16. 15.

x 1. Cor. 13. 2.

y Cap. 12. 9. 10.

z Sect. 21.

them that beleue and trust in him. Therefore that God esteemeth more of our charity then of our faith, is not the Apostles assertion, but M. Bishops fond collection, and that which the whole course of Scripture doth gainesay. But supposing it to be so, the consequence that M. Bishop draweth therefrom is very ridiculous: If God esteem more of charity then of our faith, a man is more iustified by charity, then by faith. As if he should say, A man esteemeth more of his eyes then of his eares, therefore he heareth better with his eyes then with his eares. A thing may simply and absolutely be preferred before another, and yet the other in some respect & vse may be preferred before it. Thus may it very well be said as touching this comparison of faith with charity as before is said. Further he alleageth, that God to shew how acceptable Abrahams fact was to him, saith, Now I know that thou louest me. The true text is, Now I know that thou fearest me: but thus M. Bishop shuffeth and shifteth the best he can, to gaine somewhat to charity against faith; but this is nothing to his purpose how soeuer. It pleaseth God who knoweth the heart & whatsoeuer is within vs, yet to take vpon him the knowledge of our loue, faith, feare, &c. by the fruits thereof. Hereby he will try vs, he will approue vs, and giue testimony & witness vnto vs, and so shall he do at the last day. But what will Bishop inferre hereof? If that that hee would proue be that that hee saith, that it was acceptable vnto God, wee will easily grant him so much, and so send him backe againe as wise as he came. If he would proue heereby that Abraham was iustified before God by his works, let him consider his argument well, God tooke knowledge of Abrahams fearing him by his works; therefore Abraham was iustified by works in the sight of God. But if we follow the construction that S. Austin often maketh of those words, this collectiō wil appeare much more absurd. God, as he saith, knoweth all things before they come to passe. It was not now that God first knew that Abraham feared him. Therefore as the spirit is said, pray and groane, because he maketh vs to pray and groane, so he saith, that God is said to know when as hee maketh vs to know. Now I know then is as much as if he had said, Now I haue made thee to know, or I haue made it to be knowne that thou fearest me. M. Bishops argument then come to this, God made Abraham to know by his worke in offering his sonne Isaac, that he was one indeed that feared God; therefore Abraham was iustified by his works

2 Gen 22. 12.

b. August. cont.
Maximus. lib. 3.

ca. 19.

c. Genere dicitur
spiritus qui nos
genere facit, sicut
dixit Deus, Nunc
cognouit, quomodo
cognoscere hominē
fecit.d. *Ibid. lib. 1.*Nunc cognouit ad est, nunc cognoscere se fecit.e. de Genes. ad
lit. lib. 1. cap. 9. feci ut cognosceret. &c.

in the sight of God. But he will now conuince all obstinate cauilling, and to that end saith, that it is said, that Abrahams faith in this fact did cooperate with his works, and that the worke made his faith perfect. And what of that? This coniuention of them both together, doth demonstrate that he speaketh of his iustification before God. This is as he said before, ust as Germanes lips, nine mi. e asunder. He ioineith faith and works together, therefore hee speaketh of iustification before God. The argument much better serueth vs; If he had spoken of iustification before God, as S. Paul doth, hee would haue spoken of faith only as he doth: but because he ioineith faith and works together, it plainly appeareth, that he speaketh not of the same iustification, whereof S. Paul speaketh, and therefore must be vnderstood of iustification before men. Well, his friends are beholding to him for his good wil, but he is able to stand them in little steede. Yet to helpe the matter, it is added, saith he, and he was called the friend of God. But why did hee not alleadgethe whole text, Abraham beleeued in God, and it was impused to him for righteousness, and he was called the friend of God, and so conclude thereof, therefore he was iustified by his works in the sight of God? He might as well inferre it of the one as of the other; and if the one part of the sentence be against his purpose, what sense was there in him to seeke for it in the other? The meaning is euident and plaine, that it appeared by Abrahams obedience and works, that it was not without cause said of him, Abraham beleeued God, and it was impused to him for righteousness, and that he was called the friend of God. The tree is knowne by his fruits, and Abraham by his fruites is iustified, and proued to be a good tree. Now it is not hereby onely declared, that he was iust before man, as this wrangler cauilleth, but it is heereby declared vnto men, that he truely beleued, and by his faith was iustified before God. To bee short, in the text there is not so much as one word, or peece of word, whereby Master Bishop can make it good, that Saint Iames speaketh of iustification in the sight of God. But because the text will not, Saint Austine is brought to proue it, who speaketh neuer a word to that effect. M. Bishop very lewdly falsifieth his words, and maketh him to say that which hee doth not say, nor euer meant to say. Hee speaketh the idle dreames of his owne head, and propoundeth them to his Reader vnder Saint Austines name.

The very words of Austin are these: ^f The sentences of the two Apostles Paul and James are not contrarie one to the other, when the one saith, that a man is iustified by faith without works, and the other saith, that faith without workes is vaine, because the one speaketh of workes that goe before faith, the other of workes which follow faith Here is no mention of first or second iustification, not so much as the name of iustification by workes, much lesse any expounding of the meaning of it; not a syllable in all that Chapter, whence he should deriue that meaning of iustification, which he setteth downe for Austins, to be made more and more iust. Nay, I remember not in my reading, that Austin any where in any meaning affirmeth iustification by workes, but onely in his Hypognosticon, the words where of are before hand, led: which worke though we commonly cite vnder Austins name, yet there is no man much conuersant in Austin, but will easily conceiue by the phrase and stile, that it is none of his, to say nothing, that in his Retractions he maketh no mention of it. The words that here he speaketh out of S. James are, that faith is vaine without workes, hereby willing it to be vnderstood, that though faith do iustifie without any workes going before, yet where it iustifieth, it hath alwaies good workes thenceforth accompanying it, and that that faith which is not thus accompanied with good workes, is not ^e that healthfull or sauing faith which the Gospell commendeth, nor doth iustifie him in whom it is: ^h For he that is iustified by faith, faith he, cannot but thenceforth worke righteously, though he attaine to iustification without hauing wrought any thing righteously before. The intent that S. James had in alleading the example of Abraham, he noteth to be this, ⁱ to shew that good workes ensued or followed his faith. The drift of his speech is against them, who ^k so tooke it to be said (by faith without workes) as that they thought, that when once they had beleeued in Christ, albeit they wrought euill, and liued wickedly and leudly, yet they might be saued by faith. The error of these men he reformeth thus: ^l It is not so to be vnderstood, (that a man is iustified by faith without workes) as that hauing receiued the faith, if he liue, we should call him iust, although he liue amisse. By which phrase of receiuing the faith it appeareth, that there is onely that faith heere meant which consisteth in outward profession & receiuing of baptisme, which is farre from that faith to which the holy Scripture attributeth iustification and saluation. In all which speech S. Austine saith nothing.

f August. lib. 83. quest. 76. Non sunt ibi contraria dionum Apostolorum sententia Pauli & Iacobi, cum dicit vnus iustificari hominem per fidem absque operibus; & alius dicit inueniri per fidem sine operibus, quia sic dicit de operibus que fidem precedunt, hic de his que fidem sequuntur.
g August. de file & oper. cap. 14. Saluti illa placet Euingelica.
h Lib. 83. quest. 76. supra. Nam iustificatus per fidem non potest, nisi iuste deinceps operari, quamuis nihil antea operatus iuste ad iustificationem peruenit.
i Fidem eius bona opera consecuta esse demonstrat.
k Qui fide acceperunt deum (per fidem sine operibus) ut putarent, cum semel in Christum credidissent, etiamsi male operarentur & flagitiosae ac facinorose vixerent saluos se esse posse per fidem.
l Non ita intelligendum est ut accepta fide si vixerit, dicamus unum iustum etiamsi malus vixerit.

nothing against vs, nothing which we auouch not as well as he, but onely that vnder the name of iustification, he containeth not only forgiueneſſe of ſins, wherein iustification properly conſiſteth, but that alſo which we diſtinctly call ſanctification, conſiſting in the inward renewing of vs to holineſſe and righteousnes, which the Scripture plainly diſtinguiſheth as we doe. In the other place alleadged, he notably oppugneth that which M. Biſhop would faine maintaine. He toucheth three things appertaining to our ſaluation, which towards it, we haue already attained; Predeſtination, vocation, iustification. Of this laſt he ſaith, ^m What is meant by being iuſtified? Dare we ſay that we haue this third thing already? And is there any man that dares ſay, I am iuſt? for I thinke it to be all one to ſay, I am iuſt, as to ſay, I am no ſinner. If thou be bold ſo to ſay, S. Iohn meeteth with thee ſaying, If we ſay we haue no ſinne, wee deceiue our ſelues, &c. what then? haue we nothing of righteouſneſſe, or haue we? But yet we haue not all. Let vs then ſeek after this: for if we haue ſome part, and ſome part wee haue not, let that increaſe which we haue, and that ſhall be implied which wee haue not. He plainly confeſſeth that by that iultification which he ſpeaketh of, we haue but ſome what of inherent righteousneſſe, and that we haue ſtill ſome what of ſinne, and therefore that we are not as yet ſo iuſt by that iultification, as that thereby we may ſtand for iuſt in the ſight of God, becauſe we can not ſtand for iuſt in his ſight before whom perforce we muſt confeſſe our ſelues to be ſinners. But M. Biſhop teacheth farre otherwiſe, as wee haue ſene before, that a man by baptiſme is made as voide of ſinne as Adam was in the ſtate of innocency, and therefore hath no need greatly to feare the rigorous ſentence of a iuſt iudge. Now of that righteousneſſe that we haue S. Auſtin ſaith, that it is to grow and increaſe, that wee ⁿ are to be thankfull for that we haue, that that may be added which we haue not, &c. We teach in the like ſort, but yet withall we teach as he doth, that it neuer ſofarre increaſeth in this life, but that it leaueth vs ſtill to confeſſe our ſelues ſinners, and therefore that it neuer bringeth vs to that, as that we can thereby be iuſtified in the ſight of God. This is the point. Increaſe of inward and inherent righteousneſſe we ſay there ought to be, and is: no man doubteth, no man maketh queſtion of it; but wee denie that wee merit any iuſtification by our workes, or grow by our owne righteousneſſe, to be reputed iuſt before the iudgement ſeat of God, neither doth m Aug. de. ver.

Apoſt. Ser. 16.
Quid eſt iuſtifica-
ra? Audemus dicere, iam hoc tertium habere nos? Et erit quiſquam noſtrum
qui audeat dicere,
Iuſtus ſum? Puto
enim hoc eſſe, Iu-
ſtus ſum, quod eſt,
Peccator non ſum.
Si audeat hoc dicere,
occurrit tibi loar-
ni: ſi dixerimus, &c. Quid ergo?
Nihil habemus de
iſtius, an habere-
mus? ſed non to-tum habemus. Hoc ergo queramus,
&c.

n Ibid Grati ſi-mus ex eo quod
habemus, ut ad-
ditur quod nos
habemus.

Saint Austine euer affirme the same.

37. W. BISHOP.

Nothing then is more certain and cleare, then that our iustification may daily bee augmented: and it seemeth to me, that this also bee granted in their opinion. For they holding faith to bee the onely instrument of iustification canot deny, but that there are many degrees of faith, it is so plainly taught in the word: O ye of little faith! And then a little after, I haue not found so great faith in Israel: and, O Lord increase our faith, and many such like, where many different degrees of faith are mentioned. How then can the iustification which depends vpo that faith not be correspondent vnto that diuersitie of faith, but allone? Againe, Master Perkins deliuereth plainly, That men at the first are not so well assured of their saluation, as they are afterward: if then in the certainty of their saluation, which is the prime effect of their iustification, they put degrees, they must perforce allow them in the iustification it selfe. And thus much of this question. The obiections which M. Perkins makes for vs in this Article, do belong either to the question of merits or of the possibilitie of fulfilling the law, or to the perfection of our iustice: and therefore I remit them to those places: and wil handle the two latter points, before I come to that of merits.

Mat. 8.
Luc. 19.

Page 54.

Page 101.

R. ABBOT.

That inherent righteousnesse may bee increased wee confesse, but wee deny that our iustification before God consisteth therein, but onely in the merit and obedience of Christ, which needeth no increase, because it is fully absolute and perfect in euery respect in it selfe. But Master Bishop according to his ignorance, telleth vs that there must needs bee diuers degrees of iustification in our meaning, because there are diuers degrees of faith, and diuers degrees of assurance of saluation. But wee answer him, that that necessary followeth not, because although the instrument whereby wee receiue, is in some stronger, and in some weaker, yet the thing receiued is one and the same to both. The price of redemption in the shedding of the bloud of Christ, is one and alike to all and euery faithfull man, but yet it is not alike apprehended by euery one. There is perfect righteousness required of vs, and the same is yeelded vnto vs in Christ. There may be a difference in vs, but Christ cannot be diuided, neither is there in him any difference from himselfe. Where he goeth, he goeth whole; and therefore what he is to the strong, the same is hee to the faint and feeble soule. There is greater assurance and lesse assurance, but the matter wherof each doth take assurance, is the whole mercy of God in Christ.

38 W. BISHOP.

Whether it be possible for a man in grace, to fulfill Gods law.

M After Perkins argueth, that it is vnpossible: first, for that Paule tooke it for his ground, that the law could not bee fulfilled. Admit it were so. I then would answer, that he ment, that a man helped onely with the knowledge of the lawe, cannot fulfill the law: but by the ayde of Gods grace, he might be able to do it. Which I gather out of S. Paule, where he saith, that that which was vnpossible to the lawe, is made by the grace of Christ possible.

2 Obiect. The liues and works of most righteous men, are imperfect and stained with sinne; ergo quid? Of this there shall bee a severall Article.

3 Obiect. Our knowledge is imperfect, and therefore our faith, repentance, and sanctification is answerable. I would to God all our workes were answerable to our knowledge, then would they bee much more perfect then they are. but this argument is also impertinent, and doth rather proue it possible to fulfill the law, because it is possible to know all the law. Then if our workes be answerable to our knowledge, we may also fulfill it.

4 Obiect. A man regenerate, is partly flesh, and partly spirit, and therefore his best workes are partly from the flesh. Not so, if we mortifie the deedes of the flesh by the spirit, as the Apostle exhorteth.

R. ABBOT.

The denial of the possibility of keeping Gods commandement, or of fulfilling the law is not absolutely meant. God forbid, that we should say, that God hath commanded any thing vnpossible to be

hee done. Wee belecue that Adam was created in state to fulfill all the righteousnesse of the law. We belecue that Christ in our nature hath fulfilled the same for vs, and that we by Christ in the end shal fullie be restored to the perfection thereof. In the meane time also we keep the commandements of God, and frame our liues according to the line and rule thereof, and heerein we labour and trauell to grow and increase from day to daie: but we attaine not to perfection heere; that which we do is more in will then in work; more in desire then in deede. In the midst of our righteousnesse we condemne our selues of sin; we carry our vncleannesse in our hands, and thereby do yeeld confession thereof to the Lord: if we will say that we fulfill the law, our owne mouth shall condemne vs, who accordingly as we are taught do daily aske forgiuenes for our transgressions of the law. There is no man so long as hee liueth, but must confesse, that hee is too weake to the bearing of that burthen, and commeth much short euery maner of way of that that is required by the law. And this S. Paul took indeede for the ground of his whole disputation against iustification by the law. For rightly hee saith: If there had bene a law giuen which could haue giuen life, then righteousnes should haue been by the law. He taketh it for granted, that the law could not giue life, not be cause it was defective in it selfe, but because by our defect we were not capeable of the life that was offered thereby; euen as the Sunne cannot giue light to the blind, not for any want that is in it, but because the blind hath not meanes to make benefit and vse of the light that most cleerely shineth from the Sunne. Which reason the Apostle more plainly declareth otherwhere, when he saith, that it was impossible for the law (namely, to iustifie and saue vs) because it was weakened by the flesh. Whereby hee signifieth, that the default resteth vpon our weaknesse and the corruption of our sinfull flesh, whereby wee are vnable in any sort to attaine to that righteousnesse, and perfect integritie and innocencie that the law requireth of vs. Now if flesh doe hinder the law from being able to iustifie vs, then so long as flesh continueth, there must needs be still a weaknesse of the law in that behalfe. But so long as here we liue there is still the flesh lusting against the spirit, and rebelling against the law of the mind. Wee can neuer therefore whilest wee liue attaine to the fulfilling of the lawe to bee iustified thereby. This remainder of flesh doth argue, that wee haue yet re-ceiued

Gal. 3. 21.

b Rom. 8. 3.

c Gal. 5 17.
d Rom. 7. 23.

e Gal. 3. 10.

ceiued the grace of God, but onlie in part. It hath begun to heale vs, but a great part of our disease and weaknesse continueth still. We are therefore as yet but in part only enabled thereby to fulfill the law, and if we keepe it but in part, we keepe it not so as to bee iustified by the law, because by the sentence of the law, cursed is euerie man that continueth not in all things that are written therein. This meaning the Apostle plainly deliuereth, neither doth M. Bishop gather any other meaning from him, but by the corrupting of his words; alleadging him, as if he had said: That that was impossible to the law, is made by the grace of Christ possible. But why doth he put in that vnder the Apostles name, which the Apostle doth not say? he neither saith, nor meant to say, that to fulfill the law, is made possible by the grace of Christ, but rather that in Christ, that iustification is supplied vnto vs, which it is vnpossible should be yeilded vnto vs by the law. And how could hee gather that meaning from him, when he could not but knowe, that notwithstanding the grace of Christ, he affi. meth still in part a remainder of that impediment by which it was vnpossible before to fulfill the law. But of this text there will be further occasion to speake in the three and fortieth section. The second reason alleadged by M. Perkins against the opinion of fulfilling of the law, is that the lines and warkes of the most righteous men are vnperfect and stained with sinne. M. Bishop verie quipperly demandeth, Ergo quid? he knew the ergo well inough, Ergo no man can fulfill the law. For if the most righteous faile in that behalfe, when it followeth, that generally all are excluded from that power. If all must confesse themselves to be vnperfect, if all must acknowledge themselves to be sinners, then all must confesse, as I said before, that they faile of the performance of the law. The connexion would haue been considered here, but M. Bishop pretily passeth it ouer vnder pretence of a severall article, for the handling of the proposition: what he saith of that we shall see anon M. Perkins third reason is taken from the imperfection of our knowledge: for it cannot be but our faith, our loue, our repentance, our sanctificatiō must be vnperfect, so long as we haue but vnperfect knowledge to direct vs in all these things. M. Bishops answer to this consisteth of two parts: the one whereof is an acknowledgement against himselfe, the other, an assertion of apparent and manifest vnruth. I would to God (saith hee) our workes were answerable to our knowledge, ledge, then would they be much more perfect then they be. He confesseth then, that our workes are not perfect, according to that that we do know; and if they be vnperfect to that knowledge that we haue, and our knowledge come farre short of that concerneth vs by the lawe, then must our workes be very farre from perfection, and we farre from being truly said to fulfill the law. But M. Bishop according to his skill denieth in the second part of his answer, that our knowledge is vnperfect, expressly contrarie to that which the Apostle saith: We know in part, we prophesie in part, we see through a glasse darkely. We find it and know it, that there are many ignorances and errors in the best. We all (saith S. Anstine) offend in many things, whilest we thinke that that which we do either please to God, or doth not displease him, when as afterward's we learne, that it is not pleasing vnto him, and do repent thereof. He that knoweth thee, (saith he in another place) loueth thee more then himselfe, and leaueith himselfe to come vnto thee, that he may reioyce in thee. Hence is it, Lord, that I loue thee not so much as I ought to do, because I do not fully know thee: becau'e I know thee but a litle I loue thee but a litle, and therefore do but a litle reioyce in thee. There is no man in this life that knoweth himselfe, but knoweth well that he hath cause to pray still with the prophet Dani, Teach me thy statutes, teach me O Lord the way of thy statutes: give me understanding that I may learne thy commandements. grant me understanding, that I may know thy testimonies. If so great a Prophet were still to be thought, were still to learne, were still begging of God the vnderstanding and knowledge of his commandements; how vaine a man is M. Bishop to make it so possible a matter for a man being yet couered in part with the vaile of flesh, to attaine to the full and perfect knowledge of the law. Of this argument he saith, that it is impertinent; but giueth no reason why he so saith. Saint Austine against the assertion of perfection in this lifeⁿ produceth imperfection of knowledge as an impediment thereof: and Hierome saith, that no man in this holy can haue all verities, because we know but in part, and prophesie but in part; and if imperfection of knowledge do hinder veritie, and the perfect fulfilling of the law, how doth he make it an argument impertinent to say, Our knowledge is yet vnperfect, therefore we are yet vnperfect to the fulfilling of the law. But we must pardon his vnperfect knowledge, which if it had bin according to his will,

1. Cor. 13. 9. 12
 g. Aug. de
 11. r. & 12. ca. 36.
 In multis offendimus omnes, in partibus Deo quoniam diligimus plene vel non diligimus quod facimus, & postea Cum de reuerentia: quid non placeat parum modo deprimitur v'ignosca.
 h. 7. de soliloq. cap. 1. Qui spiritus cognoscit te, amare te p'is, n' se, relinquit se & venit ad te, & gaudeat de te.
 Hinc est Domine quod non tantum diligo quantum debet, quia non plene cognosco te. Quia parum cognosco, parum deigo. & qui a parum te diligit, parum te amat.
 i. Phil. 11. 9. 12.
 k. Ver. 33.
 l. Ver. 73.
 m. Ver. 127.
 n. Aug. de
 spir. & lit. cap. 36.
 o. Hier. ad Pe. a. lib. 1. Nullus sanctorum in ista terra perfectus est: etiam illi qui se habere volunt, quoniam esse peccata cognoscunt, &c.

will, vndoubtedly we should haue seene some more skill in his answers then now we do. M. Perkins fourth and last reason is taken from that that before hath bin said, that the regenerate man in this life is still partly flesh, and not wholly spirituall, and therefore his best workes saue partly of the flesh. Not so, saith M. Bishop, if we mortifie the deedes of the flesh by the spirit. But I answer him, Yes euen so, because though by the spirit we mortifie the deedes of the flesh; yea we do not thereby put off the flesh, nor so subdue it, but that it lusteth against the spirit, so as that we cannot do the things that we would, and therefore cannot fulfill the law. Now if we attaine not to that that we would, our will also being yet vnperfect, so that we will not so perfectly as we should, how farre must we needes thinke our selues to be from that integritie and vprightnesse, which we should performe according to the perfect rule of righteousnesse that is laid before vs in the law? But of this further when we come to the point as touching the perfection, and purity of our workes.

Gal. 5. 17.

39. W. BISHOP.

But these trifling arguments belong rather vnto the next question: I will helpe M. Perkins to some better, that the matter may be more thoroughly examined. Why go ye about to put a yoke vpon the Disciples necks, which neither we, nor our Fathers were able to beare? these words were spoken of the law of Moyses, therefore we were not able to fulfill it.

A& 1. 15.

I answer first, that that law could not be fulfilled by the onely helpe of the same law, without the further ayde of Gods grace.

Secondly, that it was so burdnesome, and cumberous, by reason of the multitude of their sacrifices, sacraments, and ceremonies, that it could hardly be kept with the helpe of ordinary grace: and in that sence, it is sayd to be such a yoke, as we were not able to beare. Because things very hard to be done, are now and then called impossible. Now that Iosue, Dauid, Iosias, Zachary, Elizabeth, and many others, did fulfill all the law, is recorded in holy Scripture: wherefore it is most manifest, that it might be kept.

Ios. 1. 11
4. Reg. 14.
A& 13.
4. Reg. 23.
Luk. 1.

R. ABBOT.

A more trifler then M. Bishop I thinke is seldome to be found. If

M.

M. Perkins arguments were as trifling as hee hath giuen them answers, he might haue done well to haue spared his labor bestowed in the writing of that booke. Before hee haue giuen any one good answer to the reasons onely by the way alledged by M. Perkins, he taketh vpon him to bring other of his owne indeed out of our books, that he may shew himselfe as wise in answering the one, as hee hath done already in the other. Wee are wont to alledge the words of S. Peter, that ^a the law was a yoke which (saith he) neither we nor our Fathers were able to beare. Whence euen by the very words it must needs follow, that we are not able to fulfill the law. M. Bishops answer is, that that law could not be fulfilled by the onely helpe of the same law, without further ayde of Gods grace. As though they had not the grace of God, who notwithstanding complained of the law, as of a yoke too heauy for them to beare euen in that state of grace. Therefore we will say to M. Bishop, as Orosius did to the Pelagian hereticke: ^b *Samuel, Elias, Elizeus, Esay, Ieremy, Daniel, Zachary, all those holy ones either Iudges or Kings, or Prophets were vndoubtedly our Fathers, and Peter affirmeth, that none of the Fathers, no nor themselves, that is, the Apostles being Iewes, could beare the burthen of the lawe, but were saued by the faith of Christ according to the helpe of grace. What, had not all these holy Fathers thinkest thou the helpe of God? Having then the helpe of the grace of God, yet they still acknowledged the law to be a heauier-burthen, then that they were able to stand vnder the waight therof. To this purpose he vrgeth the hereticke with that which is written in the law: ^c Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, &c. ^d Answer, saith he, not to me but to God not with thy voice, but with thy conscience, whether thou so loue God with all thy heart, as that thou neuer admit any thought therem, that may be conceiued to be without the feare and loue of God: whether thou so follow him with all thy soule, as that hauing once vnder taken the crosse, thou be neuer caried for the time to fall into any delight or contentment of pleasure, &c. Where as hee sheweth how far it is beyond our power to keepe our selues within the lists & bounds of this commandemen: so he taketh away M. Bishops second exception, that the law was thus called a yoke, &c. in respect of the sacrifices, sacraments, and ceremonies by the multitude, whereof hee saith, that it was so burdensome and comberous, as that it could hardly be kept by the helpe of ordinary grace. For if the law bee there vnder*

^a Acts 15.10.

^b Oros. Apo' eg. de arbit. libert. Samuel, Elias, &c. Patres sine dubio nostri sunt: & neminem Patrum Petrus affirmat, sed neque semel ipso's cui essent Iudei onus legis ferre pctu sse, sed fide Christi secundum spem gratie fuisse saluatos. An forsè secundū te omnes ipsi sancti Patres Dei adiutorium non habebant?

^c Deut. 6.7.
^d Oris. ibid. Respōdē, non mihi sed Deo; non voce sed conscientia, si ita ex toto corde Deū ai ligis, ut nullam anquam in eo cogitationem que absque timore & dilectiōe Dei intelligi possit admittas: ita in totā animā sequeris, ut suscepta semel cruce in nullam penitentiā oblectationem habita ad tepus recundari succedat &c.

stood, which saith, Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God, &c. as Orosius declareth, then it is false which M. Bishop saith, that that speech is to be referred to the ceremonies of the law. But the reader is well to obserue the manner of his speech: It could hardly be kept. It could then or might be kept, though hardly be kept. No question then but some did keepe it if it might be kept. But the yoke of which S. Peter speaketh, is such as none was able to beare. It is not then to be vnderstood of the ceremonies of the law. And indeed there is no doubt, but that the ceremoniall law, by ordinary grace of God, as touching the outward practise thereof, might exactly be performed. The multitude of those obseruations is equalled in the Romish Church, and yet they haue nimble fellows that can attaine to all. But out of M. Bishops words we will argue a minori ad maius; if the law of ceremonies were so heauy a yoke, which consisted only in outward obseruations, how much heauier is that that giueth law to the whole man, to all his thoughts, and words, and deedes, taking exception against any thing either inwardly or outwardly, whereby we step aside from the rule thereof? And yet hee as a man void offense & conscience, saith of the ceremonies, that they could very hardly be obserued: but of the rest of the commandements, that they are very possible & easie to be kept, as we shall see anon. In the meane time to proue it, he bringeth exāple of diuers, who he saith did fulfill all the law: but hee is preuented and bereaued of those examples by Cyprian, who saith of all those excellent men & Priests, and Prophets before Christ, that being conceived and borne in sinnes, they were neither without originall nor personall fault, and there was found in them all either ignorance or vn-sufficiency, by which going astray they sinned and stood in need of the mercy of God, by which being instructed and restored, they gaue thanks to God, and confessed that much was wanting unto them to perfection of righteousness, and trusting in God presumed not to attribute any soundnes to themselves. As touching them all, we must answer the same that S. Austine answered the Pelagian hereticks: By the testimonies of the Scripture which we beleene as touching their commendations, we beleue this also that no man liuing shall be found iust in the sight of God, and that therefore hee is requested not to enter into iudgement with his seruants.

Cyprian. de Ieiun. & cent. Christi. Fuerat & ante Christum viri insignes, Prophetæ, Sacerdotes, sed in peccatis concepti & nati, nec originali nec personali carere delicto, & inuenta est in omnibus vel ignorantia vel insufficientia, in quibus erronei peccauerat & egesserunt misericordia Dei, per quam edocti & restituti gratias egerunt Deo, & ad plenam utilitatem iustitiae multum sibi deesse confessi sunt, & sperantes in Deo nullam sibi soluti ad attributa re presertim seruati.
S. Aust. de peccat. & remiss. lib. 2. cap. 18. Scripturam testimonij quibus de illorum laudibus credimus, hoc etiam credimus, non iustificari in conspectu Dei omnem viuentem, & ideoregari ut inret in iudicium cum seruis suis,

Whereby what we meane when we request it, the same S. Austine sheweth: ^b Stand not with me in iudgement, by exacting of me all that thou hast commanded, and all that thou hast charged vs. For thou shalt find me guilty if thou enter into iudgement with me. This S. Austine maketh the common confession of all the seruants of God, that they do not fulfill al, and M. Bishop saith of them whom he nameth, that they did fulfill all. The Pelagians alledged amongst others, Zacharie and Elizabeth, as M. Bishop doth, because it is laid of the:

^b Both were iust before God, and walked in all the commandements & ordinances of the Lord without reproofe. S. Austine answereth them, ⁱ It is spoken as seemeth to me, as touching a commendable & prayse-worthy conuersation amongst men, whch no man could iustly call into quarrell of accusation or crime, which therefore they are said to haue had before God, because they therein did not deceiue men by any dissimulation, but as they appeared to men, so they were knowne to the eyes of God. Therefore he maketh of that which was said of them, no more but that which the Apostle saith of himself, ^k As touching the righteousness of the law I was unrebukable, when as yet he was not called to the grace of Christ. ^l What comendable thing is spoken of the, saith he, which is not comprehended in that which the Apostle professed of him: else when as yet he had not beleened in Christ, that according to the righteousness that is in the law, he was without reproofe. ^m In being said in the Scripture to be without crime or reproof, saith Orosius, is not imported a testimonie of perfection, but an example of conuer'ation.

It is manifest therefore, that that which is written concerning them, is not to be drawne to the auouching of that fulfilling of the lawe which M. Bishop here defendeth for iustification before God. Yea, and it is further to be noted, that Zachary was a Priest, and the Priests manner was, ⁿ first to offer sacrifice for his owne finnes, & then for the peoples. Zachary therefore offered sacrifice for his owne sins. But ^o sinne is the transgression of the law: if Zachary then were a transgressor of the lawe, it is false that Master Bishop saith, that he fulfilled the whole law. Still therefore it standeth good against all subuerters of truth, as touching the morall law, that in respect of iustificatio it is a yoke which neither Iosue, nor Dauid, nor Iosias, nor

g Id. de Tern. 5. r. 42. Ne res m. cum in iust. exigendo à ne omnia que precepisti et omnia que iustifisti. Nā me inuenies reū, si in iudicium intraueris mecum etc. h Luk. 1.6.

i Aug. contra Pelag. & Celest. lib. 1. cap. 48. Dilectum est quantum mihi uideatur secundum.

quamdam in uer homines conuersationem probabilē atque laudabilem, quā nullus hominū iusti posses in accusationi, et circumstantiis nis querelam uocare.

Quam propterea in conspectu Dei habuisse referuntur, quia in ea homines nulla diffinitione sallebant, sed ue apparebant humilitas: ita notierant oculis Dei.

k Phil. 3.6.

l Aug. de pecca. mer. & remis. lib. 2. cap. 13. Quid de illis laudabile dilectum est, quod non in eo comprehenditur quod de se.

o Apostolus cum in Christum non tum credidisset professus est, etc.

m Oros. A. 9. o. g.

de arbit. libert. Sine crimine dici quoniam & sine querela non est perfectionis testimonium, sed conuersationis exemplum.

n Heb. 7. 17. o 1. Iohn. 3. 4.

Zachary and Elizabeth, nor any of those others whom M. Bishop meaneth haue bene able to beare, and therefore wee haue nothing to rest vpon, but onely the faith of Iesus Christ to bee iustified in him.

40. W. BISHOP.

Rom. 7.

To will is in mee, but I finde not how to performe: If S. Paule could not performe that which he would, how can others?

Answer. He speaks there of auoiding all euill motions and temptations which he would willingly haue done, but he could not: marry he could well by the assistance of Gods grace, subdue those pronocations to sinne, and make them occasions of vertue: and consequently keepe all the commandements, not suffering those passions to leade him to the breach of any one of them. The like answer we make vnto that obiection, that one of the ten commandements forbids vs to couet our neighbors goods, his wife, or seruants, which (as they say) is vnpossible: but wee hold, that it may be well done, vnderstanding the commandement rightly, which prohibitech not to haue ill motions of couetousnesse and lecherie, but to yeeld your consent vnto them. Now it is so possible for a man by Gods grace to refraine his consent from such wicked temptations, that S. Augustine thinketh it may be done of a mortified vertuous man, euen when he is asleepe: and testifieth of himselfe, that waking he performed it.

Lib. 10. conf. cap. 7.

R. ABBOT.

a Rom. 7. 18.

b Ver. 12.

c Ver. 7.

M. Bishop hath a good facility in propounding our arguments, but hee hath very ill hap in answering of them. S. Paul would willingly haue auoided all euill motions, saith he, but he could not. Therefore say we, he could not fulfill the lawe. He could subdue those pronocations to sinne, saith hee, and not suffer them to leade him to the breach of any of the cōmandements: when, say we, the very pronocations themselves are a breach of the cōmandements. For what is it whereof the Apottle saith, as is alledged, ^a To wil is present with mee, but I finde not how to performe that that is good? It is euen the commandement, whereof he hath said before, ^b The commandement is holy, and iust, and good: for instance whereof and clearer euidence, hee setteth downe the commandement ^c Thou shalt not lust, which he still profecuteth vnder the name of good. Paul then confessech, that though he

he had a will to keepe and fulfill the law, and namely, the commādement, Thou shalt not lust, yet he could not find meanes to attain to that perfection, and why then doth M. Bishop attribute to him, the keeping of all the cōmandements, so as not to be led to the breach of any one of them.^d The law would haue him not to lust in that it saith?
Thou shalt not lust; and he was willing not to lust, but yet he did lust; how then should we say, that he did fulfill the law? If the law forbid euil motions and prouocations, and it is not possible for vs to auoid them, or to free our selues from them, it must follow, that it is not possible for vs to fulfill the law. But we forsooth do not vnderstand the com- mandement rightly, which M. Bishop telleth vs doth not prohibe euil motions of comētousnesse and lecherie, but onely consent vnto them. So then the law saith, Thou shalt not lust, but M. Bishop saith; Yes, thou maiest lust without any sinne, but thou maiest not consent vnto thy lust. But farre otherwise S. Austin saith, that the law in saying, Thou shalt not lust, doth set downe that there shall be no concupiscence to be restrained and bridled. Therefore he saith: The perfection of vertue is that which the law saith, Thou shalt not lust: this now (in this life) cannot be fulfilled. And againe, To fulfill the law, is not to lust: and who is there liuing that can so do? It is manifest then by S. Austin, that that commandement requireth a perfection, which in this world we neuer are able to attaine vnto, because it doth not onely forbid consent, but euen the very hauing of any euil motions or affections contrary to the law. And by those motions we do not onely breake the commādemēt, Thou shalt not lust, but we faile of yeelding loue to God with all our heart, with all our soule, &c because euil motions & lusts do occupie some part of the heart and soule, and withhold the same from God. Therefore S. Austin saith againe ^b so long as there is any part of carnal concupiscēce by continencie to be bridled, God is not perfectly loued with al the soule: for the flesh lusteth not without the soule, although the flesh be said to lust because the soule lusteth according to the flesh. Now therefore albeit it be true, that a man may resist such euil motions, and deny consent vnto them, yet is he not ther by freed frō trāsgression of the law. But yet M. Bishop falsely alledgeth S. Austin to that purpose, who in the place ⁱ cited, d Augu. 1. le

nupt. & concup.
lib. 1. cap. 27. Lex non vult. ut con-
cupiscam, que di-
cit. non con-cupiscet. Et ego
non lo concupiscere.
concupiscere no-
lebat, & tamen Concupiscerat.
e Idem Epist.
200. In sustitia
nomiam consum-
mata perseveran-
ter pr scientes
ad eius consum-
mationem quan-
doque venientis
v's peccati con-cupiscencia non cohibenda atque fronanda, sed nulla sit Hoc
enim posuit lex dicendo. Non con-
cupiscet.
f De Temp. Ser.
45. plentudo est
virtutis, quod lex dixit. Ne concupiscas Hoc modo impleri non po-
test.
g Ibid. Ser. 49.
Hoc dicit. legem
implere, hoc est,
non concupiscere.
Quis ergo hoc,
qui vult. potest?
h Aug. de perf.
sust. Cum est aliquid concupiscē-
cie carnalis, quod vel continendo frangitur, non omnimodo ex-
ta anima disgitur deus. Neque enim caro sine
animis concupis-
cis. quamuis caro
concupiscere di-
catur. quia car-nalter animis

concupiscit. i Augu. Confess. lib. 10 cap. 30. Sept' eism in somnis resistimus, &c. Potem est maris tua abundantiare gratia tua isfctio: motus etiam mes sopors exanguere, &c. Lugens in eo quod inconstitutus sum, & sperans perfe-cturum e in me misericordias tuas usque ad pacem plenariam quam habebunt tecum iniqua & exitiosa mea cum absorptaueris mors in victoriam.

not the seuenth as he quoteth, but the thirtieth Chapter, affirmeth indeed that sometimes men resist those cōcupiscences euen in their sleepe, that it is in Gods power to make him alwaies so to do. He signifieth his longing desire after that puritie and perfection, but his expectation of it onely then, when death shall be swallowed into victorie, howsoever God be able, if so it were his pleasure, to giue it euen now also in the meane time. And indeed there is no man liuing to whom can be attributed that perfection, to be altogether and wholly free from consent of sinfull lust. There is no man that fighteth so warily, but that sometimes, yea many times he receiueueth grieuous wounds, and findeth cause to cry mournfully vnto God for the cure thereof. A man resisteth in one thing, and is ouertaken in another; at one time he checketh those corrupt desires, with which as nets he is strongly intangled at another. This is the state of all flesh, and of this we haue cause to complaine, so long as we liue here.

41. W. BISHOP.

We do offend in many things: and if we say, we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues. But if we could obserue all the law, we should offend in nothing, nor haue any sinne, ergo.

Answer. I graunt that we offend in many things: not because it is not possible to keepe them, but for that we are fraile, and easily led by the craft of the diuell into many offences which we may auoyde, if we were so warie and watchfull as we ought to be: againe, although we cannot keepe our selues from veniall offences, yet may we fulfill the law, which is not transgressed and broken, unlesse we commit some mortall sinnes. For veniall sinnes, either for the smalnesse of the matter, or want of consideration, are not so opposite to the law, as that they violate the reason, and purport of it, although they be somewhat disagreeing with it. But of this matter more fully in some other place.

R. ABBOT.

There is no doubt, but if all impediments were taken away, whereby we are hindered from keeping the commandements of God, it should be possible enough, perfectly to fulfill the same.

It

It is true which S. Austine saith, that ^a it is not by any default of the lawe that wee fulfill it not, but by default of the wisdom of the flesh, which as the Apostle saith, is ^b enmity against God, and is not subject vnto the law of God, nor indeede can bee. Wee are by our frailtie led into many offences, (saith M. Bishop) and wee might auoide the same, if wee were so warie and watchfull as wee ought to bee. But so long as this frailtie hangeth vpon vs, and by the weakenesse and corruption of flesh, wee are not so warie and watchfull as wee ought to be, why doth hee attribute vnto vs a power and ablenesse to fulfill the law? And what is that that hee saith, but euen the deuice of the Pelagian Heretickes, who affirming, ^c that a man may bee without sinne if hee will, and beeing demanded who they were whom they tooke to be without sinne, by a wily shift answered, that they said not what men are, or what they haue beene, but what they may bee. Euen thus M. Bishop beeing vrged by the confession of the Apostles themselues, that in many things wee all offend and sinne, that is, doe trespassse and breake the commandements of God, confeiseth it to bee true, but yet notwithstanding saith, that it is possible to keepe them. But as Hierome answered the Pelagians, so wee answer him, ^d What a reason is this, that that is possible to be which neuer was, and may be done, which thou bearest witness that neuer any man did, and to giue to euery man that which in the Patriarkes, and Prophets, and Apostles, thou art not able to make good? To be short, as it is not possible for a man being feeble, and weake, and sicke, to beare a burthen, which notwithstanding being recovered and fully cured, he can beare with ease: so it is not possible for vs, so long as wee are compassed about with corruption and frailtie, to obserue & keepe the lawe and righteousnesse thereof, which yet beeing deliuered from all bondage of corruption and sinne, wee shall easily attaine vnto. His second shift is as absurd as the former, that though we cannot keepe our selues from veniall offences, yet we may fulfill the law, because it is not broken but by mortall sinnes. But the law it selfe saith, ^e Cursed is euerie one that continueth not in all things that are written in the booke of the lawe to do them. Therefore concerning all sins the sentence of the Apostle must stand good, that ^f the wages of sinne is death. So our Sauiour Christ testifieth, ^g He that breaketh one of the least of these commandements, and teacheth men so, hee shall be called the least in the kingdom of heauen, that is, saith S. Austine, ^h he shall not

^a Aug. de Spir. Et lit. cap. 19. Non vitio suo non implebitur lex sed vitio prudentia carnis.

^b Rom. 8. 7.

^c Hieron Epist. ad Crespionem. Hominem posse esse sine peccato. si velit.

^d C. Cum ab eis querimus, qui sint quousq; peccato sunt nota strophæ et dare cupiunt veritatem, se non eos dicere qui sint vel fuerint, sed qui esse possint.

^d Ibid. Quæ est argumentum ista posse esse quod nunquam fuisse? Possit fieri quod nullum fecisset? dare nescio cui quod in Patriarchis & Prophetis, & Apostolis fuisse nequeat probare?

^e Gal. 3. 10.

^f Rom. 6. 23.

^g Mat. 5. 19.

^h Aug. in Ioh. tract. 122. Consequens est, ut qui minimus est in regno caelorum, non sit res in regno caelorum.

enter into the kingdom of heauen. But we will demand of M. Bishop, are those veniall sinnes forbidden by the law or not? If they be not forbidden, then they are no sinnes: for ⁱ where there is no law, there is no trespassse, and ^k sinne shall be no sinne, if God do not forbid the being of it. But if they be forbidden, how doth he say, that to do them is no transgression of the law? for what is it but a transgression of the law to do that which the law forbiddeth to be done? The Apostle saith, that ^l by the law commeth the knowledge of sinne. Veniall sinnes then by the law are knowne to be sinnes: how are they knowne to be sinnes by the law, but that they violate the reason and purport of the law? But let S. Iohn here stop M. Bishops mouth: ^m Whosoever committeth sinne, transgresseth also the law; for sinne is the transgression of the law. Veniall sinne (as he tearmeth it) is sinne; therefore veniall sinne is the transgression of the law: he therefore that committeth onely those which he calleth veniall sinnes, cannot be said to fulfill the lawe.

42. W. BISHOP.

Lastly, it may bee objected, that the way to heauen is streight, and the gate narrow: which is so true, that it seemeth impossible to bee kept by flesh and bloud: but that which is impossible to men of themselves, is made possible and easie too, by the grace of God: which made Saint Paul to say I can do all things in him, that strengtheneth and comforteth me: and the Prophet Dauid, After thou (O Lord) hadst dilated my heart (and with thy grace set it at libertie) I did runne the waies of thy commandements: that is, I did readily and willingly performe them. Of the louing of God with all our heart, &c. shall bee treated in the questison of the perfection of iustice.

R. ABBOT.

Heere M. Bishop maketh the commandements of God, not onely possible, but possible and easie too. But I answer him againe, as Hierome did the Pelagian heretike: ^a Thou saiest, the commandements of God are easie, but yet thou bringest foorth no man that hath fulfilled them all. Tell me, saith he, are they easie, or are they hard to be done? If ^a Hier. ad Cresc. Facilia dicuntur Dei esse mandata, & tamen nullum proferre potes qui uniuersa compleuerit. Responde mihi, facilia sunt, an difficilia? si facilia, profer qui impleuerit, & cur Dominus in Euangelio, Intrate, inquit, per angustam portam? si autem difficultes, cur ausus es dicere, facilia esse Dei mandata que nullus impleuerit?

ⁱ Rom. 4. 15.
^k Aug. de pecc. mer. & rem. lib. 2. ca. 16. Neque peccatum erit si quid erit: si non diuisis in beatum ut non sit.
^l Rom. 3. 20.

^m 1. Joh. 3. 4.

Phil. 4.
 Psal. 118.

they be easie, shew vs who hath fulfilled them, and why our Saviour saith in the Gospell, Enter in at the strait gate? But if they be hard, why dost thou dare to say that the commandements of God are easie which no man hath fulfilled? Thus Hierome plainly excepteth against his answer to those words of Christ; for they to whom Christ speake, h those words, were and are men endued with the grace of God, and yet hee giueth them to vnderstand, that the gate of life shall be strait and narrow vnto them. Therefore S. Austine saith, that the way of veritie is hard, and though the grace of God do help, yet is not to be traueled without labour and paines. Now if it be so hard a matter, and so full of trauaile and paines, to compass that small and vnperfect righteousnesse which here wee haue, is it an easie matter with M. Bishop, to atchieue that absolute and perfect righteousnesse that is described in the law? Some help he thinketh to haue in that the Apostle saith; I am able to do all things in Christ, or by the helpe of Christ that strengtheneth mee. But the Apostle himselfe excludeth him from that helpe, in that he so plainly testified of himselfe, that he could not find how to performe the good that he would, as we haue seen before, yea & telleth vs, that though the spirit be in vs lusting against the flesh, yet by reason of the flesh lusting against the spirit, we cannot do the things that we would. He that could do all things, yet could not repell the buffeting Angell of Satan, by whom he was greuously afflicted, nor was thought able to withstand the temptations of pride and vaine glory, vpon the abundance of his revelations, as appeareth in that this sting of Satan was occasioned to bridle him therefrom. The place it selfe plainly sheweth the meaning of it selfe, that he was enabled to all things, that is, to the enduring of all things that concerned him in the seruice that he had in hand, that neither abounding nor wanting neither sulnes nor hūget should hinder him frō going on therein for the preaching & testifying of the Gospell, & for enlarging and cōfirming of the Church of Christ, accordingly as elsewhere hee saith, I suffer all things for the elects sake. But the restraint that Bernard vscth is not to be omitted. He is able to do all things, that is, all which it is behoouefull that he be able to do. Now what is behoouefull, it is not for M. Bishop to presume, but for God himselfe to determine, who hath not thought fite to bring vs to perfection in this life, that he may haue the whole glorie of our saluation in the life to come. The wordes of Dauid

b Aug de predest. & grat. ca. 9. Ad dūm est vultus iter. & quoniam ad inuā e gratia D. 1. 2. sine labore gradū dūm.
c Idem. cont. 2. ep. T. elag. lib 3. c. p. 7.
Ista parua iustitia. Et epist. 200. Iustit. a nondum consummata. d Phil. 4. 23.

e Gal. 5. 17.

f 1. Cor. 12. 7.

g 1. Tim. 2. 10.
h Bern. de dilig. Deo In illo omnia potest que tamen posse profici.

i Phil. 119.

k Rom. 7. 23.

l 24. m 2. Cor. 3. 17
n Rom. 8. 23.

o Il. b. 12. 1.

p Matt. 16. 41.

are as little helpfull vnto him, ⁱ I will runne the way of thy commandments, when thou hast set my heart at libertie. So farre as we are at libertie, so farre we runne, and so fast we runne. But we attaine not to that libertie yet, but that beeing ^k holden captiue to the law of sinne which is in our members, we haue still cause to crie, ^l Who shall deliuer vs (or set vs at libertie) from this body of death? ^m Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is libertie. We haue receiued as yet only ⁿ the first fruites of the spirit. We haue yet therefore but the first fruites of liberty, and there is still remaining somewhat ^o that presseth downe, and sinne hanging fast on, so that wee cannot runne without much hinderance and many falls, and the ^p willingnesse of the spirit findeth alwaies a let by the infirmitie and weaknesse of the flesh.

43 W. BISHOP.

Rom. 8.

Cap 5:

Mat. 11:

Rom. 13.
Mat. 22.

Hauiug now confuted all that is commonly proposed to proue the impossibilitie of keeping Gods commandements, let vs now see what we can say in prooffe of the possibility of it: First, S. Paul is very plainly for it, saying: That which was impossible to the law, in that is weakened by the flesh, God sending his Sonne in the similitude of flesh, of sinne, damned sinne in the flesh, that the iustification of the law might be fulfilled in vs, who walke not according to the flesh, but according vnto the spirit. See how formally he teacheth, that Christ dying to redeeme vs from sinne, purchased vs grace to fulfill the lawe, which before was impossible vnto our weake flesh. Againe, how farre S. Iohn was from that opinion, of thinking Gods commandements to bee impossible, may appeare by that Epistle: And his commandements be not heauie. Which is taken out of our Sauours owne wordes: My yoke is sweete, and my burthen is light. The reason of this is, that although to our corrupt frailty, they be very heauie: yet when the vertue of charitie is powred into our hearts by the holy Ghost, then lo, do we with delight fulfill them. For as the Apostle witnesseth: Charity is the fulnesse of the law. And, Hee that doth loue his neighbour, hath fulfilled the law: Which Christ himselfe teacheth, when he affirmeth, That the whole lawe and prophets depend vpon these two commandements, of louing God, and our neighbour. Now both according vnto our opinion and the Protestants, a man regenerate and in the state of grace, hath in him the vertue of Charity: wee hold it to bee
the

the principall part of inherent iustice: they say that their iustifying faith can neuer be separated from it: so that a righteous man beeing also indued with charity, is able thereby to fulfill the whole law. Let vs adioyne vnto these Authorities of holy write, the testimonie of one auncient Father or two. S. Basil affirmeth: That it is impious and vngodly, to say that the commandements of the spirit be vnpossible. S. Austine defineth, that we must beleue firmly, that God being iust and good, couldnot command things that be impossible for vs to fulfill: The reason may be, that it is the part of a tyrant, and no true lawmaker, to commaund his subiects to do that vnder paine of death, which he knowes them no way able to performe: for those were not to be called lawes, (which are to direct men, to that which is iust, but suares to catch the most diligent in, and to bind them vp to most assured perdition. Wherefore it was afterward decreed in an approued Councell of Arausican, as an article of faith, in these words: This also we beleue according to the Catholike faith, that all men baptized by grace there receiued, with the helpe and cooperation of Christ, can, and ought to keepe and fulfill those things which belong to saluation. The principall whereof are after our Sauours owne determination, to keepe the commandements: If thou wilt enter into life,

Serm in elict, Attende 161.

*De nat. & gra.
cap. 96.*

a Can. vii.

Mat. 19.

This by the way concerning the possibility of fulfilling the law.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop hath a good opinion of that that he hath done, and if his fellowes do not accept it accordingly, no doubt but he will thinke they do him great wrong. As for vs we may by his leaue thinke that that we see, that he hath babled much, and said as good as nothing, and that he is far from being a man to take vpon him the confuting of any thing that is defended on our part. But now leauing his confuration, he goeth in hand with prooffe of a possibility in vs to fulfill the law. And first he alledgeth to that purpose the words of S. Paul in some part handled before, ^a That that was vnpossible to the law, in as much as it was weake because of the flesh, God sending his owne Sonne in the similitude of sinfull flesh, and for sinne condemned sinne in the flesh, that the iustification or righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in vs, who walke not after the flesh but after the spirit.

a Rom. 8. 3.

spirit. Now of this place he saith, that it formally teacheth that Christ dying to redeeme vs from sinne, did purchase vs grace to fulfill the law which before was impossible to our weak flesh. But he is still so full of formality, that we can finde little matter in any thing that he saith. How hath Christ purchased grace for vs to fulfill the law in that sense as here we speake of fulfilling the law, when as the grace of Christ doth still leaue remaining in vs a weaknesse of flesh, to which the Apostle saith, it is a thing vnpossible to fulfil the law? All M. Bishops teeth cannot vntie this knot. If weaknesse of flesh hinder the fulfilling the law, then so long as we liue here the grace of Christ neuer putteth vs instate to fulfill the law, because it neuer taketh from vs the weaknesse of the flesh. His commentarie therefore is nothing woorth, and because it is but his owne, we make very small account or reckoning of it. The caule of our not fulfilling the law continueth still, and therefore we must referre the benefic here expressed to some other thing, then our fulfilling of the law. That the Apostie noteth first in saying, that Christ condemned sinne, comparing it thereby to a prisoner, a robber or murderer brought to the barre, and there receiuing sentence of condemnation and death, that thenceforth it should be bereaued of all action or accusation, of all plea or power against vs. This Christ hath done for vs by purchasing for vs the forgiuenesse of sinnes, whereby b the Lord imputeth righteousness without workes, because as S. Austine saith, c All the commandments of God are reputed to be done, when that that is not done is pardoned. Now when all the commandments of God are reputed to be done, the iustification of the law is fulfilled in vs. For what is the iustification of the law, but the iustification which the law might seeme to intend and propound vnto it selfe, that we might be acquitted of sinne, and accepted vnto life? Thus the auncient Fathers expound it for d the scope, the end, the thing destinated by the law, which when the law could not attaine vnto, Christ performed it vnto vs by the forgiuenesse of our sinnes. e He paid our debts, saith Theodoret, and performed that which was the scope of the law. f What was the end of the law, saith Oecumenius? That we should not be subiect to the curse. By Christ then that which was the scope of the law, was brought so effect in vs. So Chrysostome, g That which was the iustification of the law, not to be subiect to the curse, Christ hath effected vnto vs. Last of all Ambrose saith,

b How

b Rom. 4.6.

c Aug. Retract. lib. 1. ca. 19. Omnia Deo mandata facta deputantur quando quicquid non sit ignoratur.

d Theophylact. in Rom. ca. 8 Iustificatio legis id est, exus ipse & distinctio.

e Theodoret ibid. Nostrium debitum exoluit & legis scopum perficit.

f Oecumen. ibid. Quis est finis legis? Vt non a seimus maledictioni obnoxii. Per Christum quidem in effectum deductus est in nobis legis scopus.

g Chrysost. ibid. hom. 13. Que legis erat iustificatio non esse executioni obnoxii. At ibi perficit Christus.

^h How is the iustification of the law fulfilled in vs, but when there is giuen vnto vs forgiveness of all our sinnes? The Apostle therefore by the iustification of the law, vnderstandeth not inherent righteousnesse, but signifieth that that iustification which the law intended, but through our default could not make good vnto vs by inherent righteousness, Christ hath performed, in purchasing for vs forgiveness of sinnes, by which wee are reputed iust and blamelesse in Gods sight, and accepted to be inheritours of euerlasting life. Now S. Ambrose to the former words addeth, ⁱ That a man being iustified by the taking away of his sinnes, may appeare in his mind seruing the law of God, whereby hee noteth that to iustification by forgiveness of sinnes, is adioined regeneration to inherent righteousness, which he calleth afterwards a signe of iustificatio. And this we denie not, but do alwaies most religiously teach the same; onely wee denie that this is that, wherein consisteth our iustification before God, but it is a sequell and signe thereof, and wee neuer attaine to the perfection of it whilest we liue here. And if wee will either directly or vnderstand it in these words, wee must take thereof that which S. Austin saith, that ¹ God so worketh in his Saints, labouring in the temptatio of this life, as that there is yet for him largely to adde vnto them asking or craving of him, and mercifully to pardon them when they confesse it vnto him; yea, so as the same S. Austin elsewhere saith, ^m as that our righteousness in this life rather consisteth in forgiveness of sinnes, then in perfection of vertues. Now therefore though the place be vnderstood of inherent righteousness, yet it maketh not for M. Bishops turne, because it proueth onely, that Christ shall restore vs to the perfect righteousness of the law, which we affirme, that hee beginneth in this life, and shall fully accomplish in the life to come; but it proueth not that which he desireth, that in this life wee are enabled by the grace of Christ, to the perfect fulfilling of the righteousness of the law. To the other places that he alledgeth, that the commaundements of God are not heauie; that the yoke of Christ is easie, and his burden light, he himselfe in effect setteth downe the answer. To our corrupt frailty, saith he, they be very heauy. True; and therefore so long and so farre as this corrupt frailty continueth, so long and so farre the commaundements of God are still heauy vnto vs, which must needs be till that which ⁿ shall be sowed in corruption and weaknesse, shall be rearsed againe in h Ambros. lib. d.

Quomodo impia.
tur. n. nobis iustifi-
catis nisi cum datur remissio omnium peccato-
rum

i Ibid. Et sablatie peccatis iustifica-
tus apparet men-
te seruans lega-Dei.

k Ibid. Signum ius-tificati non hoc est in homine, ut
per id quod iustificatus apparet esse silius Dei.

l Aug. de sp. &
lit. ca. 36. Sic ope-ratur iustificati-
onem in sanctis su-
is in huius vite temptatione labo-rans. Ita ut tamen sic & quod peten-
tibus largitur adij-
ciat & quod con-
sistentibus clemen-
ter ignoscat.

m Idem de ciui.
Dei. li. 19. cap. 27:
Ipsa iustitia no-
stra tantum est in hac vita ut potius permissione pecca-
torum consuet quā
perfectione vniuersa-tum.

n 1. Cor. 15. 42.
43.

incor-

incorruption and power. When the vertue of charity, saith he, is powred into our soules, then we do with delight fulfill them. True, so farre forth as charity is powred into our soules. But so long as there is carnall concupitence, there cannot be perfect charity to take full delight in the law of God, because carnal concupitence euen by very being in vs, as S. Austine saith, doth abridge or diminish that spirituall delight of holy minds, of which the Apostle saith, I delight in the law of God, as touching the inner man. Then shall bee perfect righteousness, saith he againe, that is, perfect keeping of the commandements of God, when there shall be perfect health; then perfect health, when perfect charity: then perfect charity, when we shall see him as he is. In the meane time loue keepeth the commandements of God, but yet vnperfectly, because it selfe is but vnperfect, euen as a lame man goeth, but yet halteth in his going. To bee short, the same. S. Austine well obserueth, that God could not haue said that his commandements are not heauy, but that there may be an affection of heart to which they are not heauy. Therefore when a man shall bee conuerted vnto God with all his heart, and with all his soule, he shall finde the commandements of God not heauy vnto him. But that affection, that conuersion is yet but begun. So long as concupitence possesseth any part of the soule, all the soule is not yet conuerted vnto God. Very vainely therefore doth M. Bishop deale, when from that which we haue yet but in part for the fulfilling of the law, he inferreth the fulfilling of the whole law. But to make vp the matter, he bringeth some authorities of the auncient Church, as much to his purpose, as that that he hath said already. That that Basil saith, that it is impious to say, that the commandements of the spirit cannot be obserued (for so the words are) is spoken of those things, which by no means can be done. As where the spirit saith, Looke to thy selfe, if a man will expound it of bodily looking and viewing of himselfe, it is that that cannot be done. For the eye, as he saith, cannot see it selfe, it cannot see the head, nor the back, nor the face, nor into the bowels. Now it were wickednesse, as he saith, to say that the spirit commandeth any thing in this sort. But we say not so of the commandements of God; for we teach that by the grace of Christ we fulfill them in part already, and shal do it perfectly when the impediment which is the remainder of original corruption shall bee done away. But so long as the flesh lusteth against the spirit, so that we cannot do the

Aug. cont. Iulian lib. 4. cap. 2. In quantum vest nocet ad minuendam spiritualem delectationem sanctarum mentium, illa scilicet de qua dicit Apostolus: Condelector legi Dei, &c.

p. Idem de perfect. iustit. Rat. 8. Tunc erit plena iustitia quando plena sanctorum: tunc plena sanctorum quando plena charitatis: tunc plena charitatis quando videmus sicui est.

q. Idem de nat. & grat. cap. 69. Gestio non potestesse diminutus dicit, graua non sunt nisi quia potest esse cordis affectus cui graua non sunt.

t. Ibid. Cenuerfus quisque ad Dominum Deum suum ex toto corde suo ex toto animam suam mandatum Dei non habebit graue. Basil. in illud, Attendite tibi.

Impium est dicere spiritui praecepta seruare non posse.

things that we would, so long it is vnpossible for vs to obserue the righteousnesse of the law, according to the full measure and perfection thereof. Hereby the answer is plaine to the place that hee alledgeth out of Austine. For wee beleue that God hath not commaunded any thing vnpossible, meaning as he doth, absolutely and wholly vnpossible. We say as he saith, "There is no example of perfect righteousnes amongst men, and yet it is not vnpossible. For it might be performed if there were so great will put to it as is sufficient for so great a matter. And there should be so great will, if on the one side nothing were hidden from vs of those things which belong to righteousnesse, and on the other side the same did so delight the mind, as that that delight did overcome al other impediments of pleasure or paine. Which that it is not so, is not to be referred to any impossibility of the thing, but to the iudgement of God." For God, as he saith afterwards, wanteth not power so to assist the will of man, as that euen now righteousnesse may in euery sort be made perfect in him. And if it were the will of God that euen now this corruptible in any man should put on incorruption, & hee would appoint that he should liue heere immortal amongst mortal men, so as that all oldnesse being utterly consumed, there should be no longer any law in the members to rebel against the law of the mind, & that he should so know God as the Saints heereafter shall know him, who would be so mad as to affirme that God cannot do it? But why hee doth it not, somewhat there is in the secrecie & depth of his iudgement, that euery man: he euen of the iust may be stopped in their owne praise, and not be opened but to the praise of God. Thus therefore the commandements of God are not vnpossible to be done, because God can make vs able perfectly to fulfill the same. Yea, it is in his power euen in this life to bring vs to this perfection, if it were his will and pleasure so to doe. But in his wisdom he hath thought good to giue vs in this life only some tast and beginnings therof, whereby we very well see and vnderstand, that there is no impossibility in the rest. The reason why he doth so is, because hee will haue vs, yea euen the most iust and righteous of vs, full to vnderstand by our defects, that our saluation is not of our merits or works, but onely of his mercy. But in his due time hee will giue vs fully

u. Aug. de sp. & lit. cap. 35. Sine exemplo est in omnibus perfecta iustitia & tamen in possibili non est. Fieri enim si tanta voluntas adhibere: ut quanta sufficit tantae rei. Esse autem tantam si & nihil est: unaque pertinet ad iustitiam nos letet, & ea sic delectant animum, ut quicquid aliud siue voluptas siue dolor impedit alectatio illa superaret. Quod ut nisi non ad impossibile a: em, sed ad iudicium Dei pertinet.

x. Ibid. cap. 36. Nullo modo dicendum est Deo deesse possibilitatem qua voluntas sic adiuuetur humana ut iustitia omni ex parte modo perfectatur in homine. Quandoquidem si non veli: in quoquam etiam hoc corruptibile induere incorruptionem, atq; hinc: ut homines mortuus eum habere vivere minimè mortuum, ut tota penitus vetustate consumpta nulla lex in membris eius repugnet legi mentis, deumq; & hinc: presentem in cognoscit: sic eum sancti postea cognoscunt sicut. quis demens audeat affirmare non posse? Sed quare non facit, & c. est aliquid: non abditio & profundo iudicio: ut, ut etiam iustorum omne ei asserunt in laude sua, & non aperitur nisi in laudem Dei.

y *Flid. Primum
preceptū iustitie
quo iubetur dili-gere Deum ex to-
to corde &c. in illa uita complebimus
facie ad faciem.
Sed ideo nobis hoc etiam nunc pre-ceptum est ut admoneamur quid fide exposcere, quō spē premittere, et obliuiscendo que retro sunt, in que
anteriora extende-
re debeamus.*

to be satisfied with that righteousnesse, with the taſt onely whereof he now prouoketh rather then aſſwageth our hunger and thirſt.
Euen y the great commaundement of righteousnesse to loue the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our ſoule, with all our minde, where-to is conſequent that other of louing our neighbour as our ſelfe, we ſhall fulfill in that life when we ſhall ſee face to face. But therefore euen now is that commanded vnto vs, that we ſhould thereby be aduertised what to aſke and pray for in faith, to what to ſend our hope before vs, & to what to follow hard forward, forgetting that that is behind. Now therefore as it is moſt eaſie for a man that hath ſound and perfect cies to diſ-cerne the light, which yet is impoſſible for him that is blinde, ſo long as he continueth ſo; ſo when God ſhall perfectly reſtore vs to our ſpirituall health and ſtrength, it ſhall bee eaſie and delightfull vnto vs, to keepe all the righteousnes which God hath commanded, but ſo long as we continue in this weakenesse and frailty, we can by no meanes bee ſaid to attaine to the perfection of the law.
But heere M. Biſhop vnſtringeth his tongue againſt God, and ſaith that it is the part of a tyrant, not of a true lawmaker to commaund his ſubieſts to doe that vpon paine of death, which hee knowes them no way able to performe. A ſilly fooliſh man, that by his brainefick fancieſ meaſureth the wiſedome and righteousnesse of God, and taketh vpon him preſumptuouſly, to giue law vnto God in what ſort hee ſhall make lawes for men. But God is able in this behalfe to acquit himſelfe, that he may be iuſtified in his ſayings, and found clear when he is iudged. For the iuſt God was not in making of lawes, to regard mans ableneſſe but his owne righteousnesse, and therefore to forbid all ſinne, that hee might not ſeeme to approue any, and to commaund all righteousnesse, that hee might not ſeeme to neglect any. It ſhould not haue bene known to be ſinne which he had not regarded to forbid, nor taken for righteousnesse which hee had not vouchſafed to commaund. Was it fit that the rule of righte-ouſneſſe ſhould haue bene abridged in fauour of mans ſinne, when the want of power to fulfill the law, was not by Gods default in creating man, but by mans diſabling himſelf in turning away from God? But M. Biſhops folly and ignorance appeareth heerein very plainly, for that the ſcripture teacheth vs that the vſe of the law, we not being able to fulfill it, was to be ^a our ſchoolemaſter to traîne vs vnto Chriſt. God had not any opinion in giuing the law of our perfor-

^z Rom. 3. 4.

^a Gal. 3. 24.

performance thereof, but hee intended it to be as a glasse for vs to see our selues, and to conceiue thereby our owne estate, that finding our selues to be miserable and vicerly lost in our selues, we might the more readily accept of the saluation that is freely offered vnto vs by Iesus Christ. Thus saith the Apostle againe, b Christ is the end of the law for righteousnesse to every one that beleeueth. Therefore S. Austine saith, that the intent of the law reproving vs is this, to make vs for our misdoings to flie to the grace of the mercifull God, where what we doe amisse may be pardoned, and by the helpe of the same grace may not be done. To some part whereof wee are come already by repentance and amendment of life, and mortification of fleshly lusts, but yet not so, but that still wee do many things amisse, and stand in neede of pardon. The law in the meane time serueth vs for a patterne of true righteousnesse, teaching vs what wee are to strive vnto, what the purity is whereunto God hath called vs, that though in the prison of corruptible flesh, we cannot fully answer the same, yet we may still be labouring towards it, sighing & groaning at that infirmity and disease that hindreth vs from it, praying instantly vnto God to bring vs to it, that his grace and mercy may in the end make vs partakers of our desire, and thenceforth wee may neuer do amisse. Why should not this perfection bee commanded to man, saith Austine, although no man haue it in this life? For we cannot runne aright, if we know not to what to runne. And how should wee know if by no commandements it were declared vnto vs? Againe he saith: The Pelagians (he might haue said the Papists) thinke they know some great maister when they say, God would not command that which he knew could not be done by man. Let M. Bishop take knowledge of his obiection vsed of old by the Pelagian heretickes. S. Austine answereth, Whoknoweth not so much? But therefore doth hee command some things which we cannot do, that we may know what we are to aske of him. It is faith which by prayer obtaineth that which the law commandeth. The commandements of God then are not vnpossible; for if they were vnpossible, we could neuer hope to attain to the keeping of them. But now we pray vnto God that he will, and according to his promise we beleue that he will bring vs to that state of innocency and perfection, wherein wee shall fully answer the image of perfect righteousnesse, which is set before vs in the law. In the meane time there is a let that hindereth vs, and

b Rom. 10. 4.

c Aug. de nat. & grat. cap. 12. Haec est intentio legum arguentis ut prop- ter ea que pepe- ram sunt confu- giatur ad gratiam. Dominus miseran- tus, &c. ubi et re- mittantur que male sunt &c. eade gratia iuuante non fiunt.

d Idem de perfect. iustis. Rat. 17. Cur non preciperetur homini ista perfe- ctio quamuis eam in hac vita nemo habeat? No enim recte curritur si quo currendum est nesciatur. Quomodo autem sciretur si nullis preceptis ostende- retur?

e De grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 16.

Magnum aliquid Pelagiani se scire putant quando dicunt. Non iube- ret Deus quod sci- ret ab homine non posse fieri.

f Quis hoc nescit sed deo iubet aliquis que non possumus ut scia- mus quid ab illo petere debeamus. Ipsa est fides que orando imperatur quod lex imperat.

holdeth vs backe, that it is not possible for vs so long as it continueth, to do those things which yet are possible to bee done. The Arausican Councell saith nothing of fulfilling the law, but speaketh generally of doing those things which belong to saluatiō. Now to our saluation it belongeth to know and confesse, that ^{by the} workes of the law no flesh shall bee iustified in the sight of God. To our saluation belongeth an humble acknowledgement of our vnablenesse to satisfie the law, true repentance of our sinnes, the faith of Iesus Christ, that by him and in him wee may haue supply of that wherein we were found defectiue by the law. In a word, it is the way to exclude vs from saluation, to place our affiance and trust of obtaining the same in our fulfilling of the law, the Apostle telling vs, that ^{so many as are of the workes of the law, are under the curse, because it is written, Cursed is euery one that continueth not in all things that are written in the booke of the law to do them, whereas there is not a man iust upon earth that doth good, and sinneth not.} The words of Christ, ^{If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements,} were spoken to the young man, to the same end to which the law generally was giuen, to giue him occasion to measure and know himselfe by the commandements, that so he might seeke the way of saluation in Christ, which in the law being a transgressor further of he could not finde. But of these words enough hath bene said before in the question of ^{the certainty of Saluation}. For conclusion of this point, to quit M. Bishop, I will alledge the words of S. Bernard, ^{It was not unknowne to the commander, that the weight of the commandement doth exceede the strength of man; but hee held it expedient, that hereby men should bee aduertized of their owne vn-sufficiencie, and that they should know to what end of right consues they should labour to their vttermost. Therefore by commanding things vnpossible to vs, he hath not made vs trespassers, but humbled vs, that euery mouth may be stopped, and all the world may bee made subiect to God. For receiuing the commandements, and feeling our owne defect and want, we shall cry to heauen, and God will haue mercy vpon vs, and we shall know at that day that not for the workes of righteousness which we haue done, but of his own mercy he hath saued vs.} In which words he giueth vs to vnderstand, that God had reason sufficient to giue

g Rom. 3. 20.

a Gal. 3. 10.

j Eccle. 7. 22.

k Mat. 19. 17.

i Cha. 3. Sed. 3.

m Bernard in

Cant. ser. 50. Non

lasunt preceptorē

precepti pondus humanus excede.

ro vires sed iudi

cauit vile ex hoc

ip. o. sua ipsa in-sufficiencia aduo-

neri, et ut forent

sane ad quem ius-

titia a finem nisi

pro viribus opor-

teret. Ergo man-

dandū impossibilia

non prouerba o-

re. fecit sed huma-

les, ut omnes ob-

struarēt & sub-

ditus fiat to us

mandus Deo. Ac-

cipiens es quippe

mandata: ut & se

veritas def. Cum eamabimus in colum

& miseretur nostri

Deus, & sciemus in die illa quia non ex

operibus iustitie que

fecimus nos sed secun-

dam misericordiam

suaam salua. nos

fecit.

the law, though he knew it vs possible for vs in this state of mortality and weaknesse, perfectly to fulfill the law.

44. W. BISHOP.

Now that iust mens workes be not sinnes: which I prooue first, by some works of that pattern of patience, Iob: Of whom it is written, that notwithstanding all the diuels power and craft in tempting of him, He continued still a single harted and an vpriight man, departing from euil, and preferuing his innocency. If he continued an innocent, hee sinned not: Again, if in all these instigations to impatience, hee remained patient: these his workes were perfect. For S. Iames saith, Esteeme it my brethren all ioy, when you shal fall into diuers temptations: knowing that the probation of your faith worketh patience: And let patience haue a perfect worke, that you may bee perfect and entire, failing in nothing.

That good workes be no: stained with sinne.

Cap. 3.

Cap. 1.

2. King David thus by the inspiration of the holy Ghost speaketh of himselfe, Thou hast (O Lord) prooued my heart, thou hast visited me in the night, thou hast tried me in fire, and there was no iniquity found in mee. It must needs then bee granted that some of his workes at least were free from all sinne and iniquity. And that the most of them were such, if you heare the holy Ghost testifying it, I hope you will beleue it: reade then where it is of record, That David did that which was right in the sight of our Lord (and not onely in the sight of men) and turned from nothing that hee commaunded him all the dayes of his life, except onely the matter of Vrias the Hebrithite.

Psal. 16.

3. Reg. 15.

3. The Apostle affirmeth. That some men doe build vpon the onely foundation Christ Iesus, gold, siluer, and pretious stones: that is, being choise members of Christs Catholike Church, doe many perfect good workes, such as being tried in the furnace of Gods iudgement, will suffer no losse or deriment, as hee there saith expressly: Wherefore they must needs bee pure, and free from all dross of sinne, otherwise hauing bene so prooued in fire, it would haue bene found out.

1. Cor. 3.

4. Many workes of righteous men please God: Make your bodies a quick sacrifice, holy & acceptable to God: the same offering spirituall.

Rom. 12.

1. Pet. 3.

Phil. 4.

all sacrifices acceptable to God. And S. Paul calleth almes bestowed on him in prison, an acceptable sacrifice of sweet favour, and pleasing God. But nothing infected with sinne (all which hee hateth deadly) can please God, and be acceptable in his sight: God of his mercy through Christ doth pardon sin, or as the Protestants speake, not impute it to the person: but to say that a sinfull worke is of sweet savour before him, and a gratefull sacrifice to him, were blasphemy: wherefore wee must needs confesse, that such works which so well pleased him, were not defiled with any kind of sinne.

Mat. 5.
1. Tim. 6.
Ephes. 2.

Finally, many workes in holy writ be called good, as, That they may see your good workes: To be rich in good workes: We are created in Christ Iesus to good workes: but they could not truly be called good workes, if they were infected with sinne. For according to the iudgment of all learned Divines, it can be no good worke, that faileth either in substance, or circumstance, that hath any one fault in it: for bonum ex integra causa, malum ex quolibet defectu. Wherefore wee must either say, that the holy Ghost calleth euill good, which were blasphemy, or else acknowledge, that there be many good workes free from all infection of sinne.

R ABBOT.

The wise man hauing prefixed this title, That good workes bee not stained with sinne, which we say they be, taketh vpon him in his text to proue, that iust mens workes be no sinnes, which no man saith they be. We must beare with him, because his vnderstanding doth not serue him to take that for gold, wherein there is any drosse: for if it did, he would easily conceiue that the staine of mans sinne doth not destroy or take away the nature of the good worke which in man & by man is wrought by the grace of God. But leauing that peece of his folly, let vs examine his proofes, that good workes be stained with sinne, And first he will proue it by the example of Iob, because it is said of him, that ^a he continued still a single hearted and an vpright man, departing from euill, and preserving his innocencie. But it were very hard to say, how M. Bishops purpose should be made good out of these words. We find here a relation of Iobs goodnesse, but we find nothing to proue, that that goodnesse of his was no way touched or stained with sin. Now the reader is to vnderstand, that this comendation of Iob set down in the 1. Chapter, & after repeated in the 2. chapter to shew his constancy therein, was of old vrged by the

a Iob. 2. 3.

Pelagian heretikes, as now by M. Bishop to proue the perfection of the righteousnesse of man. But S. Austine well weighing the circumstance of the text, how it is withall said, There is none like him in the earth; and considering what Iob elsewhere saith; b How should a man be iust before God? answereth him in this sort; c According to a measure of humane conuersation, God giueth him this so great testimony of righteousnesse, but he himselfe being afraid of himselfe, according to that rule of righteousnesse, which as he can be seeth wub God, knoweth in truth that so it is, that there shal not a man be found iust before God. Thus he saith againe, that d he was commended in comparison of men liuing upon earth. Hereby then it appeared that there is nothing in these words of Iobs commendation, that auaieth M Bishop any whit at all. Which that it may the better appeare, Iob saith of himselfe as the vulgar Latine translateth, e I was afraid of all my workes. Whereof what we are to conceiue, we may esteeme by that that Gregory Bishop of Rome speaketh by occasion of other words of the same Iob, that f the holy man because he saw all the merit of our vertue to be faulty, if it be strictly iudged by him that iudgeth within, saith rightly, If I will contend with him, I shall not be able to answer him one for a thousand. To which purpose he saith afterwards againe, that g man is not able to answer to God, questioning or reasoning with him, because if he be sisted without fauour, the life euen of the iust quieteth him that examination. This made Iob afterward to say of himselfe againe: h Behold, I am vile, what shall I answer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth. Whereupon Hierome saith against the Pelagians: i Behold our Iob so innocent and without reproofe, with what end of righteousnesse he is crowned, that he standeth in need of mercy at Gods hands. By all which it may appeare, how impertinently M. Bishop alledgeth the words of Iames, to affirme the perfection of Iobs workes. Yea, what a mad connexion doth he make? S. Iames saith, k Let patience haue a perfect worke that you may be perfect and entire, failing in nothing. Therefore if Iob remained patient, then his workes were perfect. He should vnderstand that a man may remaine patient, and yet his patience not altogether perfect, being resisted and interrupted by the weaknesse and rebellion of the flesh; euen as came to passe in holy Iob, as may appeare by many of his owne speeches, and by the reproofe that God vsed to him in the end; l Is this to learne, to strine with the al-

b Cap 9. 2.
c Aug. de peccat. meriti. & remiss. lib. 2. ca. 10. Secundū modū conuersationū humanarū perhibet ei Deus tam magnū iustitię testimoniū. ipse autē se metueniē ex regula illa iustitię quā sibi potest consistere apud deū. in ueritate scit quia ita est quia non erit homo iustus ante deū.
d Ibid. ca. 12. Ex hominum qui uertice sunt coparatione laudatur e Iob 9. 28. Re-rebar omnia opera mea.
f Grego. Moral. lib. 9. ca. 1. Sanctus uir quia omne uirtutis nostrę meritum uirtutū esse cōspexit: si ab interno arburo districtē iudicetur, rectē subiacuit, si uolucro &c.
g Iud. cap. 8. Interrogationi illius homo respondere non sufficit, quis si remota in uoc pietatē et discreti ut in illo examine cū istorum uita succumbit.
h Iob. 39. 37.
i Hieron. cont. Pelag. lib. 2. Ecce Iob coller immaculatus & sine querele quā in iustitię sine coram uisus misericordia Dei indignat.
k Jam. 1. 4.
l Iob. 39. 35.

mighty? he that reprooueth God, let him answer to it. Therefore the remaining of patience doth not proue it selfe to be perfect; much lesse proued it the perfection of other workes. The perfect worke of patience intended by saint James is perseuerance, whereby we continue and grow forward to that perfection which our Sauour Christ setteth as a marke for vs to aime at, ^m be ye perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect: but yet still finde cause so long as we liue here, to say with the Apostle, ⁿ Not as though I were already perfect. If matter Bishop thinke that here we can be perfect and entire lacking nothing, let him remember what Saint Hierome saith, ^o To haue all things and to want nothing is a matter of his vertue who did no sinne, neither was guile found in his mouth. Let him not therefore dreame of it, ^p till we all meete together vnto a perfect man, and vnto the measure of the age of the fulnesse of Christ. But as touching perfection more hereafter.

That which he alledgeth spoken by Dauid concerning himselfe, is absurdly forced to his purpose, whilest he vrgeth it as simply & generally spoken, which was spoken onely in a special respect. ^q There was no iniquitie found in him as touching any imagination or practise against Saul, whereof he was vniustly and wrongfully accused; but other wise simply speaking of himselfe, he saith, ^r Mine iniquities are gone ouer my head, and as a weighy burden they are too beauiie for me. ^s O Lord if thou be extreame to marke iniquities, who shall abide it? Enter not into iudgment with thy seruant, O Lord, for in thy sight no man liuing shall be iustified. Hereby therefore it is plaine also that that which is said of Dauid, that ^u he turned from nothing that the Lord commanded him all the daies of his life, but onely the matter of Vriab the Hittite, is to bee vnderstood according to the occasion whercof it is spoken, the text setting downe before the wickednesse of Abyam in his reigne and gouernement ouer the Kingdome of Iudah, sinning himselfe by publike idolatrie, and causing the people also to sinne with him. To him his Father Dauid is opposed, as touching lawes and publike gouernement, and direction of his people, that he turned not aside from the commaundements of the Lord, nor caused any publike scandall or offence, but onely in commanding the death of Vrijab the Hittite, for colouring the adulterie committed in priuate with his wife.

^m Mat. 5. 48.

ⁿ Phil. 3. 12.

^o Hieron. cont. Pelag. lib. 1. Oratio habere & nullo indigere virtutis est eius qui peccatum non fecit nec inuenit in se in ore eius dolus.

^p Eph. 4. 13.

^q Psal. 17. 3.

^r Psal. 38. 4.

^s 130. 3.

^t 143. 2.

^u 1 King. 15. 5.

As touching the third prooffe that hee bringeth out of Saint Pauls wordes to the Corinthians, it is apparent by the place it selfe, that it is verie absurdly wrested. For Saint Paul speaketh there of building by the preaching of the Gospell, as is cleare by the wordes immediatlie going before; ^x According to the grace of God giuen vnto mee, as a skilfull Master builder I haue laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon; but let euery one take heed howe hee buildeth vpon it. Then signifying the foundation whereupon the building is to stand to bee Iesus Christ, hee persecuteth that caueat, giuing to vnderstand, that there shall be a triall of the worke of euerie builder, whereby losse shall growe to them who are not carefull to build such matter as is proportionable to the foundation. Hee therefore that buildeth gold, and siluer, and precious stones, that is, true faith and doctrine according to Christ, his worke shall abide the triall of the word of truth, and his labour shall haue reward. But if any man build vpon Christ timber, hay, and stubble, that is, the trash of humane traditions and superstitions, the fire, that is, ^y the word of Doctrine, as Chrysostome expoundeth it, shall consume it; by the word of the Gospell that which hee hath builded shall bee reprobued and reiected, and hee shall lose both his labour and reward. This is the verie direct and plaine meaning of the Apostles wordes, fully agreeing with the circumstance of the text. But Master Bishop perforce and against the haire, draweth the text to be construed of workes; and like to a sorie husband, who for a penny present gaine neglecteth a shilling profite another way, for the gaining of a present small aduantage, is content to bereaue himselfe of that that should steede him much more in another cause. For whereas they are wont generally to alledge this place, and to expound the fire heere spoken of, for the maintenance of Purgatorie fire, hee for a shift heere turneth Purgatorie fire into the furnace of Gods iudgement, and so striketh downe a maine pillar of the Popes Kitchen, and endangereth ^z the craft whereby hee and his fellows haue their goods. Surely if Purgatorie fire doe not burne here, it is hard to say how they will get it a chimney wherein to burne any other-where. But to the point, it hath bene already shewed, that there is no gold or siluer of our workes, wherein there is not found some drosse if triall bee made thereof in the furnace of Gods iudgement; no stones so precious wherein the Jeweller of heauen doth not find speckes and flawes, if he precisely take view of them, so that ^a woe to the commendable life of man, saith S. Austine, if God set mercie aside in the iudging of it, and therefore all pray that God will not enter into iudgement with them. The gold notwithstanding & siluer, and pretious stones which we build in our good works, through Gods mercie shall abide and haue their glorie; the drosse thereof the fire of repentance shal consume, whilest we aske and obtaine of him pardon and forgiuenesse of all our imperfections and wants, of all that timber, and hay, and stubble of carnall and earthly affections, with the dust whereof our feet haue been soiled, and beraied in walking the path of the faith of Christ. Yea he that ^b baptizeth his with the holy Ghost and with fire, will by this fire purge from vs and our works this drosse and corruption more and more, till he bring vs out of the furnace as the pure and perfect gold to be glorious before him for euer & euèr. To be short, the fire of Gods iudgement mitigated and aswaged with the water and dew of his mercie, shall at that day giue approbation and testimonie of righteousness to the good works of his seruants, so as that because they are true gold which that fire consumeth not, they shal not for some drosse receiue any losse or detriment therein, but fully receiue that reward in the hope and expectation whereof they haue laboured in the Lord. Therefore though we would vnderstand these words of the works of holy men, as without forcing them we cannot, yet is there nothing whence M. Bishop can inferre that which hee intendeth, that good works are wholly free from all drosse and staine of sinne. As little hath he for his purpose in his next argument. Many works of righteous men please God, saith hee, but nothing infected with sinne can please God. Nothing indeede if it be considered as infected with sinne; and therefore good works being touched and infected with the contagion of sinne, before they can please God, must haue some meanes to take away the guilt and imputation of the sinne.

^x 1. Cor. 3. 10.

^y Chrysost de penitenti. hom. 8. §. ne examinemus; verbo scilicet doctrine.

^z Act. 17. 15.

There was ^c iniquity in the holy offerings of the children of Israel, but the high Priest did beare the iniquity to make the offerings acceptable before the Lord. There is iniquity in our holy offerings, our spirituall sacrifices, but Christ our High Priest hath borne the iniquitie, and they are ^d acceptable to GOD by Iesus Christ.

Not

^a Aug Confess. lib.
9. cap. 17. *Vae citi-
am Lindabili vite
hominum si remota misericordia discretas eam.*

^b Mat. 3. 21.

^c Exod. 28. 38.

^d 1. Pet. 2. 5.

Not by themselves, or by their own perfection, but by Iesus Christ, being perfumed with the sweete incense of his obedience, who ^{e Ephes. 5. 2.} for us (to make vs acceptable both in our selues and in our works) hath giuen himselfe an offering and a sacrifice of a sweete smelling sauour vnto God. Therefore by the pardoning and not imputing of sinne, through the redemption of Christ, both the person and the worke are pleasing in Gods sight, neither is the same to bee called a sinnefull worke, as M. Bishop tearmeth it, because it is in substance a good worke, and the fruit of the good spirit of God, and the default and imperfection is onely an accident to the worke. Briefly wee are to lay vp in our hearts that which the Prophet saith: ^{f Psal. 103. 13.} As a father pitieth his children, so is the Lord mercifull vnto them that feare him: for he knoweth whereof wee be made, and remembreth that we are but dust. And therefore as a father accepteth the readinesse and obedience of his child to that that he commandeth, though he doe the thing perhaps but rawly and rudely: so is God pleased through Christ with the good intendment & indeauour of his children, for the doing of that that hee requireth, though by the weaknesse of the flesh, much halting and lamenesse, and imperfection appeare in that which they do.

By this appeareth the vanitie of his argument taken from the name of good workes, which he saith could not be trulie called good, if they were infected with sinne. For as the offerings were truely called holy offerings, in which notwithstanding there was some blot of iniquity: so are the workes of the faithfull truely called good works, in which notwithstanding there is a staine of the same iniquitie and sinne. They are good in the substance of the deede, good in the originall of the grace and spirit of God from whence they proceede, good in the will & indeauour of the person by whom they are done, good in the acceptation of God, in whose name and seruice they are done: but yet they haue a blemish of euill ^{g Ambros. apud August. contra Iulian. lib. 2. La- be: corporee corrupcionis.} by reason of the blot of bodily corruption growing fast to, as Ambrose speaketh, ^{h Hilary. ibid. Cor- pora nostra viti- rium omnium ma- : eria pro qua pol- lut: et: for adu: ni- bil in nobis inno- dum, nihil inno- cens obtinemus.} whereby being polluted and silted (saith Hilary) we haue nothing in vs innocent, nothing cleane. They are good then, but yet not perfect the good, yea if God should strictly and narrowly deale with vs, hee should haue iust cause of reiecting vs in the doing thereof, for that wee by our corruption do disgrace that which proceedeth holy, and pure, and good from him. Now therefore whereas he saith, that it can bee no good

good worke wherein is any defect, he saith vnruly, because good and euill haue their latitude and degrees: and accordingly as contraries expell each other, the one alwaies growing by the impairing of the other, accordingly as S. Austine saith: God doth not bring his good gifis into vs, except he take away our euils; and so far do the good things increase, as the euill are diminished: neither shall the one bee perfected, till the other be fullie ended. Now in this mixture of contraries, that giueth the name that preuaileth most: so that ^k men are called iust, as Hierome saith, not for that they are without all vice, but in that they are commended for the greater part of vertues. That therefore may rightly and truly bee called a good worke in some measure and degree of goodnes, which yet entirely, and perfectly, and wholly cannot be called good. But that wee may see how vainely and idely hee talketh, his conclusion is diligently to bee obserued, that there may be many good works free from all infection of sinne. There be many such, but all good works then it seemeth be not free from all infection of sinne. And if all bee not so, then let him tell vs how those good works which be not free from all infection of sinne, bee called goodworks, as hee importeth, seeing no worke can bee called good, as he hath told vs before, that faileth either in substance or in circumstance, or haib any fault or defect in it. Let him answer vs for those some, and his answer shall serue vs for all the rest.

45. W. BISHOP.

In lieu of the manifold testimonie of Antiquitie, which doth nothing more then recommend good workes, and paint out the excellencie of them, I wil set downe one passage of S. August. wherein this very contrarie is distinctly declared and determined: thus he beginneth: The iustice (through which the iust man liueth by faith) because it is giuen to man by the spirit of grace, is true iustice: the which, although it bee worthily called in some men perfect, according to the capacitie of this life, yet it is but small in comparison of that greater, which man made equall to Angels shall receiue. Which (heavenly iustice) he that had not as yet said himselfe to be perfect, in regard of that iustice that was in him: and also imperfect, if it be compared to that which he wanted. But certainly this lesser iustice, or righteousness, breedeth and bringeth forth merits, and that greater, is the reward thereof. Therefore hee that pursueth not this, shall not obtaine

i. Aug. de verb. Dom ser. 11. Non nobis inferri bona sua nisi auferat mala nosera: Et in tantum illa crescunt, in quantum ista minuantur. nec illa perficiuntur nisi ista finiuntur.
k Hier. ad Cresiphon: Iusti non quod omni vitio careant, sed quod maiori virtutum parte commendantur.

Lib. 3. contra duas Epist. Pelag. cap. 7.

obtaine that, Huberto S. Austine. Note first, that he defineth the iustice which we haue in this life, to be true iustice, which is pure from all iniustice and iniquitie: then, that it is also perfect, not failing in any duty which we be bound to performe. Lastly, that it bringeth forth good works such as merit life euerlasting. True it is also, that this iustice although perfect in it selfe, so farre as mans capacitie in this life doth permit: yet being compared vnto the state of iustice which is in heauen, it may be called imperfect, not that this is not sufficient to defend vs fro all formal transgression of Gods law: but because it keepeth not vs sometimes from veniall sins, and hath not such a high degree of perfection as that hath. S. Augustin hath the like discourse, in here he saith directly, that it appertaines to the lesser iustice of this life, not to sinne. So that we haue out of this oracle of Antiquity: that many works of a iust man are without sinne.

De Spir. & lit. vit. cap.

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop notably abuseth S. Austin, and maketh him in stead of all antiquitie, a witnesse of that which he oppugneth euen in that very Chapter whence he citeth the words here set downe. Which that we may the better discern, let vs examine particularly the collections that he maketh from the words. First, that the iustice that we haue in this life is true iustice. We acknowledge the same euen as it is true gold wherein notwithstanding there is found drosse; euen as it is a true pearle, which notwithstanding with handling hath a spot or staine. It is true righteousness, ^a but not pure, saith S. Bernard: b it will be found vnrighteousnesse and scant, if it be strictly iudged. Therefore M. Bishops exposition of true iustice is false, where he maketh the same to be pure from all iniustice and iniquitie. Secondly, he maketh S. Austin to say, that our righteousness in this life is perfect, not failing in any duty which we are bound to performe. But how lewdly doth he therein deale with S. Austin, who plainly reacheth, that ^c our righteousness in this life standeth rather in forgiuenesse of sinnes, then in perfection of vertues? Yea in this chapter cited by him, he saith: ^d The vertue which is now in the iust man is thus far forth called perfect, as that to the perfectiō thereof belōzeth both the a Bernard. de. verb. Esa Ser. 5. Humilis iusti. ia sed non pura. b Id. in iust. sanct. Ser. 1. Si districte iudicetur iniusta inuenitur omni iustitia nostra & minus habens. c Aug. de Ciu. Dei. lib. 19 ca. 27. Magis rem isti peccatorum confestat quam perfectione virtutum. d Idem contra 2. Epist. Pelag. li. 3. cap. 7. Virtus quae nunc est in homine iustitiam actus perfectam conuincitur, ut et eius perfectioe pertinet, etiam istius imperfectiōis, & in veritate cognoscitur.

in humilitate consistit. Tunc enim est secundum hanc infirmitatem perfecta ista parua iustitia, quando etiam quidam sibi desit intelligi. Ideoque Apostolus & imperfectū & perfectum se dicit imperfectum, cogitando quantum illi ad iustitiam desit, cuius pleni vniuersum adhuc esset & sitis. Perfectum autem quod & suam imperfectiōem confiteri non erubescit, & vs perueniam bene procedit.

knowledge in truth, and in humilitie the confession of the imperfection of it. For then is this small righteousnesse for the modell (or little measure) of it perfect, according to this infirmitie, when it knoweth what there is wanting vnto it. Therefore the Apostle calleth himselfe vnperfect and perfect, vnperfect, in bethinking how much he wanteth to righteousnes, the fulnesse whereof he yet hungreth and thirsteth after: perfect, both for that he is not ashamed to confesse his imperfection, and for that he goeth well forward to come to perfection. Now how should we here acknowledge imperfection, if we be perfect according to the vttermost of that perfection that is required of vs here? How can we take vpon vs to know, that there is somewhat wanting to our righteousnesse, when we must belecue it to be such, as faileth not in any duty which we are bound to performe? How did the Apostle think that he wanted much to righteousnesse, when his righteousnesse wanted nothing that it ought to haue? How is it said, that he was not ashamed to confesse his imperfection, when yet there was no imperfection for him to confesse? Nay, how is it that M. Bishop is not ashamed to seeke by Austin to auouch such a Paradoxe, so contrarie to sense, so contrarie to conscience, so contrarie to the confessions of al the faithful crying with one voice, For giue vs our trespasses, and that for this very cause, as S. Austin saith, because no man liuing shall be iustified in the sight of God. The same S. Austin telleth vs, that there is no example of perfect righteousnesse amongst men: that this is the perfection of man, to find himselfe not to be perfect: that he hath much profited in righteousnesse, who by profiting knoweth how farre he is from perfection of righteousnesse: that S. Paul was i perfect as a trauellor (to perfect righteousnesse,) not as one that was come vnto it, because they that go well forward, or profit well, are called perfect trauellors. These speeches are euident and plaine, and will M. Bishop tell vs, that S. Austin affirmeth, in this life a perfect righteousnesse, not failing in any dutie which we are bound to performe? To the same purpose S. Hierome also saith: that it is mans true wisdom to know himselfe to be vnperfect, and that there is but an vnperfect perfection of all that are righteous in this life. And againe, that true perfection

e Augustin
Psal. 142. Quare
hoc dicitur? &c.
Quoniam non iustificabitur,
&c.

f De spir. & lit.
cap. 35. Sine ex-
celsio est in homini-
bus perfecta iustitia.

g De Temp. ser.
49. Ipse est per-fectio hominum inuensisse se non esse perfectum.

h De spir. & lit.
ca. 26. In ea que
proficienda est iustitia multum
in hac vita ille proficit, qui quam
longè sit à perfe-
ctione iusticie proficienda cognouit.

k De nat. & grat. cap. 12. Bene proficientes dicuntur perfecti viatores.

l Hieron. contra Pelag. li. 1. Hec est hominis vera sapientia imperfectum esse se misse, atque ut ita loquar, cunctiorum in carne iustorum imperfec-tè i perfectio est. m
Ibid. lib. 3. Vera & absque omni sordè perfectio in celestibus referuntur, quando sponsus loquitur ad sponsam, Tu a pulchra es amica mea, & macula non est in te.

De peccat. mer. & remiss. lib. 3. cap. 13. Perfectus viator et si nondum erat itineris perfectione venientior.

l Hieron. contra Pelag. li. 1. Hec est hominis vera sapientia imperfectum esse se misse, atque ut ita loquar, cunctiorum in carne iustorum imperfec-tè i perfectio est. m Ibid. lib. 3. Vera & absque omni sordè perfectio in celestibus referuntur, quando sponsus loquitur ad sponsam, Tu a pulchra es amica mea, & macula non est in te.

which

which is without all filth or uncleannesse, is reserved vnto heauen, when the bridegroom shall say to the bride, Thou art all faire, my loue, and there is not a spot in thee. So saith Fulgentius, that^o there is yet no perfect perfection of the gifts of God, as where euery perfect man is yet wanting of perfection. And this made Origen to say, that^o in this life we may haue the image and shadow of vertues, but the vertues themselves when the things that are perfect shall come: and therefore that the iust man liueth rather, as he thinketh, in the shadow of vertues, then in the vertues themselves. To which words accordeth that of Hierome, alluding to that of the Apottle whereto Origen alludeth, that^p we know in part, and we see through a glasse in a darke speaking; and when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall bee done away. ¶ We haue (saith hee) but in a shadow and an image the cleane heart, that shall after see God and the happines of unspotted life. Though a man be a Patriarch, though a Prophet, though an Apostle, yet is it said to them by our Saviour, If ye being euill, &c. Where is hee now that telleth vs of such a perfect righteousnesse in this life, as faileth not of any duty that we are bound to performe, when as there is heere none but vnperfect perfection, no man but that wanteth of perfection: when as we haue heere but the image and shadow of vertues, no perfection without some filth or uncleannesse, none but which leaueth vs still in case to be called euill? Whereby appeareth againe the absurdity of his third collection, that our perfection yeeldeth such good works as merit euerlasting life. It is true that S. Austin vscth the name of merit, but that by the name of merits hee meaneth simply good workes, to which God hath promised reward, and not any merit properly so called, shall heereafter appeare in the question of merits. In the meane time how farre hee was from that opinion of meriting, which M. Bishop here would fasten vpon him, may appeare by the words cited by him out of Hilary against the Pelagian hereticks: ¶ Our hope is in the mercy of God for ever and ever: for the very workes of righteousnesse are not sufficient to the meriting of perfect blisse, vnlesse the mercy of God euen in this will of righteousnesse, doe forbear to impute the vices or defaults of humane passions and affections. Whereupon he himselfe saith: ¶ He confesseth the sinnes euen of iust men, affirming that they rather trust to the mercie of God, then haue n Fulgent. ad Monachum lib. 5. Diuinarum munerum nonnullum est perfectio. vi. p. 1. ubi omnis perfectus perfectio eius est indigens.

 • Origen. ad Rom. cap. 6. In presentibus vita puro quod formam atq; vnam habet virtutum tenere possimus. ipsas vero virtutes tunc cum uenerint illa que perfectio sunt: Et ideo iustus magis v. mibi videtur in umbra virtutum quam in ipsis virtutibus uiuere. p. 1. Cor. 13. 9. 10. 12.
 q Hier. contra Pelag. li. 3. Mundum cor quod postea sit visurum Deum & vitæ immaculate leuitudinem in umbra possidemus & imagine. Quia uis Patriarcha sit aliquis, quamuis Prophetæ, quamuis Apostolus dicuntur esse à Domino Salvatore, si eos cum suis malis, &c. r Aug. contra Iulian. lib. 2. c. Hilari. in Psal. 11. Spes in misericordia Dei in seculo, & in seculo seculi. Non enim illa ipsa iustitie opera ad perfectam beatitudinem sufficerent meritorium, nisi misericordiam Dei etiam in hac iustitie voluntate humanarum demeritationum & motuum non reprobantur vitia. (Ibid. Confessio eius in uis peccata iustorum magis eos afferunt in Dei misericordiam spem posse quam de iustitia sua sperare.

584 That good works are not free from stain of sin.

any confidence of their owne righteousness. It is not therefore the merit of righteousness, that we can rest vpon, but onely the pardon of Gods mercie, by which as we haue obtained the gift of righteousness; so we expect also the reward and crowne thereof, that it may be verified which the Prophet saith: he crowneth thee in mercie and compassion: and that of the Apostle, that eternall life is the gift of God through Iesus Christ our Lord. Now to these collections M. Bishop addeth a caueat, that this iustice though perfect in it selfe, so farre as mans capacity in this life doth permit, yet in comparison of the state of iustice in heauen may be called vnperfect. Which is as much as if he should say, that it is perfect in it selfe, so farre as it may be perfect there where it cannot bee perfect. For there is not in this life any capacity of perfect righteousness, as wherein wee continue still with the Apostle carnall sold vnder sinne, not doing the good that we would, by reason of the flesh lusting against the spirit, y rebellng against the law of the minde, leading vs captiue to the law of sinne which is in our members, so as that to auoide the enticements of the world, and to keepe our selues in our course entirely to God, is as S. Ambrose saith, a matter that we do more wish and desire then we can effect and do, and when we haue laboured much for it, cannot but condemne our selues for beeing so farre from it. But against this deuaice of his, we must note what hath bene said, that our perfection heere is not without some filth, and that it leaueth vs still euill, and therefore is not perfect in it selfe. Yea, and S. Hierome againe against the Pelagians distinguishing a two sorts of perfection and righteousness, the one to be compared to the righteousness of God; the other belonging to the frailty of man, denieth our perfection in this latter kinde, and saith, that in this sort it is true, that no man liuing shall be iustified in Gods sight, which he affirmeth to be spoken as touching a righteousnes called perfect not by comparison, but in respect of the knowledge of God. The knowledge of God then which knoweth all things according to truth, yet knoweth no iustice or perfection in vs, whereby we are able to stand iust and perfect before him. Therefore Gregory saith, that our very perfection is not without fault, vnlesse the seuerer Iudge do with mercy weigh it in the precise ballance of his examination Neither is it to be omitted which S. Austine saith, that all the life which we liue here, that is, all e Plat 103.4.

H Rom. 7. 14. 19.

x Gal. 5. 17.

y Rom. 7. 23.

z Ambros. de sag. secul. cap. 1.

Res v. si magis quàm effectus.

a Hieron. adu. Pelag. lib. 1. Perfectionem est duas in scriptura sancta esse perfectiones, duarq; iustitias: Primam perfectionem & incomparabilem veritatem perfectamque iustitiam Dei virtutibus constandam; secundam autem que competat nostre fragilitati: in qua illud quod dicitur, Non iustificabitur, & ad eam iustitiam que non comparatione sed Dei scientia dicitur esse perfecta.

b Grego. Moral. lib. 5. cap. 8. Ipsa nostra perfectio eius non caret nisi hanc seuerus iudex in subtili lance examinis iudiciorum dicitur pense.

c Aug. de Temp. ser. 49. In comparatione resur. eius illius fierens est tota ista vita quam gerimus. Vnusquisq; me iudicet se quid est iudicet & quid erit iudicet & inueniet in comparatione illius ista damna esse & seuerora.

d e

f g

h i

k

l

m n o p

q

r

s t

u

v

w x

y z aa ab

ac

ad

ae

af

ag

ah

ai

aj

ak

al am an ao

ap

aq

ar

as

at au

av

aw ax

ay

az

ba bb

bc

bd

be bf

bg

bh

bi bj

bk

bl

bm

bn

bo

bp

bq

br

bs

bt bu

bv

bw

bx

by

bz

ca

cb

cc

cd ce

cf cg

ch

ci cj

ck

cl cm

cn

co cp

cq

cr

cs

ct

cu

cv

cw cx

cy

cz

da

db

dc

dd

de

df

dg

dh

di dj

dk

dl

dm

dn

do dp

dq

dr ds

dt du dv

dw

dx

dy

dz

ea

eb

ec

ed

ee

ef

eg

eh

ei

ej

ek

el em

en eo

ep

eq

er es

et

eu

ev

ew

ex

ey

ez

fa

fb

fc

fd

fe ff

fg

fh

fi

fj

fk

fl

fm

fn

fo

fp

fq

fr

fs

ft fu

fv

fw

fx

fy fz

ga

gb

gc

gd

ge

gf

gg

gh gi gj

gk

gl

gm

gn

go

gp

gq

gr

gs

gt

gu

gv

gw

gx

gy

gz

ha

hb

hc

hd

he hf

hg

hh

hi

hj

hk

hl hm

hn ho

hp

hq

hr

hs

ht

hu

hv

hw

hx

hy

hz

ia

ib

ic

id

ie

if ig

ih

ii ij

ik

il

im

in io

ip

iq

ir is it

iu

iv

iw

ix

iy

iz

ja

jb

jc

jd

je

jf

jj

jh

ji

jj

jk

jl

jm

jn

jo

jp

jq

jr

js

jt

ju kv

kw

kx

ky kz

la

lb lc

ld

le

lf lg

lh

the righteousnesse of this life, is but dung in comparison of the resurrection, that if a man measure himselfe what he is now and what he shall be then hee shall finde that that which now is, is but losse and dung in comparison of that. Which how can it bee true, if that that is in this life be perfect in it selfe, so perfect as that it faileth not in any duty which we are bound to performe; yea, as that it meriteth and deserueth the righteousnesse of heauen? Can that that in comparison is but drosse and dung, bee truly said to deserue the righteousnesse of heauen? But concerning the same, hee addeth further, that it is sufficient to keepe vs from all formall transgression of Gods Law. So then thereby a man shall bee free from all formall sinne; and shall haue no formall trespassse for which to say, forgie vs our trespassses; and of formall transgression it shall not be true which S. Iohn saith, ^d If we say we haue no sinne we deceiue our selues, or which S. James saith, ^e In many things we offend all. Is not this a formall foolery of a man that would be taken to be wise? These are drunken fancies, fit for no other but drunken men, that neither know themselves nor others, and therefore we can take M. Bishop for no other but a vile hypocrite, who contrary to his owne conscience and knowledge, pleadeth in this sort for the perfection of the righteousnesse of man. But to fill vp the measure of his lewd dealing, he falsifieth another place of Austine, making him to say, that it belongeth to the lesser iustice, that is, the iustice of this life, not to sinne. Wherein he goeth about to make S. Austine a promoter and vpholder of that heresie, which with all his might he oppugned in the Pelagians, who defended as M. Bishop here doth a righteousnesse in this life, whereby a mā may be free from sin. And indeed the words which M. Bishop alledgeth out of Austine, are the aduersaries obiection, not the assertion of Austine himselfe. He bringeth them in by way of supposition what may be said, namely that there is a lesser righteousnesse belonging to this life, wherein the iust liueth by faith, to which righteousnesse it appertaineth not to sinne. Which obiection hauing profecuted more at large, and alledged what may be said for the maintenance thereof, he at length setteth down answer, wherof a part is contained in these words: Such iust mē liuing by faith haue no need to say, forgie vs our trespassses, & do conince it to be fals, which is writē, no mā liuing

d 1 Iohn. 1. 8.
e 1 Iam. 3. 2.

f Aug. de. sp. & lit. ca. 36. Sed dici potest quaedam iustitia minor huic uisae competens quam illius ex fide absurd dicitur etiani ad istam pertinere ne peccat. g Ibid. Tales uisio ex fide uiuenti et non opus habent Deo dicere, Dimittite nobis, &c. Falsumque esse conuincit eisdem scriptum est, Non significabitur, &c.

Sed quia hac falsa est: non possunt illud esse consequens uideo ut qualem libet uel quantum libet in hac uita potuerimus adquire iustitiam nullam in caelis habebimus qui nullum habetis omnino peccatum.

586 That good Works are not free from stain of sin.

*shall be iustificied in the sight of God, and that, If we say we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues: and that there is not a man that sinneth nor: and that, There is not a man iust upon the earth that doth good and sinneth nor. But because these sayings cannot be false, it followeth, that whatsoeuer, or how great soeuer we can define righteousnesse in this life, there is not a man therein that is without sinne. Where very plainly hee disclaimeth the assertion of any righteousnesse in this life, in which that may be found that M. Bishop speaketh of: namely, not to sinne. And surely had not this man a face of brasse, and an iron conscience, he would not in these dayes of light affirme a thing, or seeme to affirme it, so contrarie to the perpetuall doctrine and confession of the Church. As for his distinction of veniall sinnes, I haue before shewed it to bee friuolous and vaine, and the same (God willing) shall appeare further in the Section next saue one.*

46. W. BISHOP.

Rom. 7.

To these reasons taken partly out of the Scriptures, and partly out of the record of Antiquitie let vs ioine one or two drawne from the absurditie of our aduersaries doctrine, which teacheth euery good work of the righteous man to be infected with mortall sinne: which by being granted, it would follow necessarily, that no good worke in the world, were to be done vnder paine of damnation, thus: No mortall sinne is to be done vnder paine of damnation: for the wages of sinne is death: but all good works are stained with mortall sinne, ergo, no good worke is to be done vnder paine of damnation. It followeth secondly, that euery man is bound to sinne deadly: for all men are bound to performe the duties of the first and second table: but euery performance of any duty is necessarily linked with some mortall sinne, therefore euery man is bound to commit many mortall sins, and consequently to be damned. These are holy and comfortable conclusions, yet inseparable companions, if not sworne brethren of the Protestants doctrine. Now let vs hear what arguments they bring against this Catholike verity.

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop hath learned from his fellow M. Wright to strike the matter dead at one blow. Albeit, it is more likely, that these argu-

arguments going so currant amongst them, were agreed vpon at Wisbich or some other like place, in some solemne assembly and consultation, where the graue and reuerend companie of the Seculars laid their wits together, to giue the Protestants some ineuitable and deadly blow. It is hard to thinke, that one or two mens wits should serue to contriue such a matter as here is against vs. Now if some young Sophister of the Vniuersitie had stood by, and smiling at them had said, that it was pittie that they good old men, should be troubled with making of Syllogisms, who had forgottē of how many termes a Syllogism doth consist, would they not (think you) haue startled at the hearing of it, and thought themselues exceedingly disgraced by a boy? Surely the arguments heere set downe are such, as that if a boy in our Vniuersities should make the like in earnest, he should be thought iustly to deserue the rod; & yet these are they who take vpon them, as if wee were to say vnto them: ^a Because you onely are men, wisdome must dye with you He will proue by our doctrine, that no good worke is to be done vnder paine of damnation. And how? forsooth no mortall sinne is to be done vnder paine of damnation: but all good works are stained with mortall sinne, ergo &c. Did not his head serue him to know, that it is an error in arguing, when a Syllogisme consisteth ex quatuor terminis. We haue mortall sinne in the Maior proposition, and in the Minor, stained with mortall sinne. If he would haue kept the course of argument, hee must haue said thus: No mortall sinne is to be done vnder paine of damnation; but all good works are mortall sinnes, ergo, &c. Which if hee had said, the absurdity of his minor proposition had easily appeared, because every man could haue discerned, that good workes, though they haue some aspersiō or touch of our corruption, yet doe not thereby become sinnes, no more then gold by his drossē becometh earth or iron; no more then white linnen for some spot or staine, is to be accounted blacke haire-cloth; no more then the day is to be called night, because it hath but ouercast and darksome light. S. Hierome telleth vs, that ^b When S. Iohn saith, that there is no darknesse found in the light of God, he sheweth, that all others lights are blotted with some uncleannesse. The Apostles (saith he) are called the light of the world, but it is not written that there was no darknesse in the Apostles light. And what? will M. Bishop conclude, that because there was some darknes in the Apostles light, therefore their light was darknesse and not light? If he will not so conclude, then let him say, that it followeth not that good workes are sinnes, albeit in our doing of them they receiue some blemish and staine of sinne. But to shew vs somewhat more of the sweat and superfluity of his learning, he hath added another argument of the like feature, to proue that by our doctrine every man is bound to sinne deadly. And why so? because all men are bound to performe the duties of the first and second Table, and every performance thereof is necessarily linked with mortall sinne. Which is as if a man should reason thus: A lame man is bound by law to come to the Church; but he cannot come to the Church but hee must halt, therefore hee is bound by law to halt. M. Bishop is bound to pay a man twenty pounds, but he cannot tell the money without soyling his fingers: therefore hee is bound to soile his fingers. He can no way inferre his conclusion, but by a sophisticall cavillation, which the Logicians call fallaciam accidentis, whereby in the conclusion he inferreth that of the accident, which in the premisses is referred onely to the subiect, his argument by that meanes wholly without forme, and offending in the like sort as the other did. Bring it into his due fashion, and every child then shal see, that his prooffe is most ridiculous and absurd. For to bring in his conclusion, his argument must be this: Whosoever is bound to do the duties of the first and second Table, is bound to sinne. But every man is bound to doe the duties of the first and second Table; therefore every man is bound to sinne. His Prosyllogisme for the prooffe of his maior proposition out of his owne words must arise thus: Whosoever necessarily sinneth in doing the duties of the first and second Table, is bound to sinne: but whosoever is bound to do the duties of the first and second Table, necessarily sinneth in the doing thereof: therefore whosoever is bound to do the duties of the first and second Table is bound to sinne. Heere his maior proposition is apparently absurd: for though a man by reason of infirmitie cannot but sinne in doing his duty, yet it is the duty onely that he is bound to, and not to the sinne, because the sinne is not implied in the duty, but ariseth by casuall and accidentall necessitie from the condition of the man. Now therefore a man may doubt whether is greater in this man, his malice or his ignorance. In respect of his malice we may vse to him the words of the Prophet David: Thy tongue imagineth wickednes, and with lies thou cuttest like a sharp razor: Thou hast hast loked to speake all words that may do hurt, O thou false tongue. In respect of his ignorance, we may iustly scorne him as a presumptuous and sawcie companion, who being of so base quality, and not knowing how to frame an argument aright, would take vpon him to encounter a whole army of learned men, and so insolently dedicate his vnlearned fooleries to the King.

^a Iob. 12. 2.

^b Hier. aduers. Pelag. lib. 2. Quando dicit nullas tenebras in Dei lumine reperiri, ostendit omnia a horum luminis sordē aliqua maculari. Denique & Apostoli appellantur lux mundi, sed non est scriptum quod in Apostolorum luce nulla sint tenebrae.

47. W. BISHOP.

First, they alledge these words: Enter not, O Lord, into iudgment with thy seruant, because no liuing creature shall be iustified in thy sight. If none can be iustified before God, it seemes that none of their works are iust in his sight. Psal. 141.

Answer. There are two common expositions of this place among the ancient Fathers: both true, but farre from the Protestants purpose. The former is S. Augustines, S. Ieromes, S. Gregories in his Commentaries upon that place: who say, that no creature ordinarily liueth without many veniall sinnes for the which in iustice they may be punished sharply either in this life, or else afterward in Purgatory. Wherefore the best men do very prouidently pray vnto God, not to deale with them according vnto their deserts: for if he should so do, they cannot be iustified and cleared from many veniall faults. And therefore they must all craue pardon for these faults, or else indure Gods iudgements for them, before they can attaine vnto the reward of their good deeds. The second exposition is more ordinary with all the best Writers vpon the Psalmes: as S. Hilarie, S. Hierome, S. Ambrosius, S. Euthimius, and others: which is also S. Augustines, S. Gregories. All these say, that mans iustice in comparison of the iustice of God, will seeme to be no iustice at all: and so take these words, No creature, neither man nor Angell, shall be iustified in thy sight: that is, if his iustice appeare before thine, and be compared to it. For as the stars be bright in themselves, & shine also goodly in a clear night, yet in the presence of the glittering Sun beams, they appear not at all. euen so mans iustice, although considered by it selfe it be great & perfect in his kind, yet set in the sight & presence of Gods iustice, it vanishes away, and is not to be seene. This exposition is taken out of Iob, where he saith: I know truly it is euen so, that no man compared to God, shall be iustified. Take the words of the Psalm in whether sence you list (that either we haue many veniall faults, for which he cannot be iustified in De per iustie. Epistolad Cccf.

Iib. i. ad Crosiu cap. 10. lib. 9. moral. cap. 1.

Iob. 9.

Gods sight, or else that in the sight of Gods most bright iustice, ours will not appeare at all) and it cannot be thereof iustly concluded, that euery worke of the righteous man is stained with sinne: and consequently, the place is not to purpose.

R. ABBOT.

I would wish thee (gentle Reader) well to obserue M. Bishops twofold answer to this place. The more clear these words of Scripture are against the inherent righteousnesse of man, the more notably his singular impudency appeareth in seeking to shifte them off. Dauid saith it, a Prophet saith it, a man after Gods own heart saith it: Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, O Lord, for no man liuing shall be iustified (or found iust) in thy sight. Now M. Bishop answereth, that this is spoken in respect of veniall sinnes, without which no creature liueth, & for which a man may in iustice be punished sharply, either in this life or in Purgatory. Whers it isto bee obserued, that hee hath told vs in the Section last saue one, that veniall sinne is no formall transgression of Gods law, by reason whercof they hold, that veniall sinnes consist with true iustice, and hinder it not. So saith Andradius, c They can no way ouerthrow iustice, nor in any sort hinder the perfect and absolute obedience of the law. So then Dauids prayer must be this: Enter not into iudgement with me for veniall sinnes: for by reason of veniall sinnes which hinder not, but that a man is iust, no man liuing shall be iustified in thy sight. Which expositiō being apparently lewd and shamelesse, yet he hath learned of his maister Beliarisme to countenance it with the names of them who neuer thought any such thing. He alledgeth Austin, who in the place by him cited hath not a word to that effect, which maketh him to set none downe, because indeed there are none. But in the place mentioned the same Austin rightly saith, d Were it not that mercy reioyceth ouer iudgement, what hope should there be? For when the iust King shall sit upon his throne, who shall glory that hee hath a cleane heart, or reioyce that he is free from sinne? If no man shall bee able then to challenge to himselfe a cleane heart, where is that perfect iustice of workes which Master Bishop dreameth of, which cannot come but from a cleane heart? Hee citeth in the second place the reuerend Father Saint Hierome, who beside that he saith nothing for him, speaketh expresly and directly against him.

a Psa. 143. 2.

b Rhem. Testam.

1. Ioh. 1. 8.

c. Andrad. Orth.

explicat. lib. 5.

Iustitiam euertere

nullo pacto possunt

neque perfectam

Et absolutam legis

obedientiam quo-

quo modo uispe-

di e.

d Aug. de perse.

iustit. Super exal-

tat misericordia

iudicis. Quod si nō

esset, quae spes esset

Qui in loquidem

cum rex iustus se-

derit in throno,

quis gloriabitur

se castum habere

cor, aut quis glori-

abitur se esse im-

munē à peccatis?

c When

When the Prophet saith, In thy sight, he will haue it to be understood, that euen they which seem holy vnto men, are not holy to the notice and knowledge of God. for man seeth in the face, but God in the heart. Now if in the sight and beholding of God, whom the secrets of the heart cannot deceiue, no man be iust, it is plainly shewed that the heretikes (in affirming men to be iust) do not lift vp man, but detract from the power of God. Hee affirmeth that by the place it is proued, that to the knowledge and sight of God no man is iust, and M. Bishop maketh him a witnesse, that the Prophet speaketh of veniall finnes, which are nolet, but that a man is iust. In the like fraudulent manner, he nameth Gregorie, whose words are these; I know that manie seeme iust in the sight of men, and being lifted up to the hope of heauenly promises, do liue innocently in the world, who albeit they offend not in deede or worke, yet do sometimes fall by vaine and peruerse cogitation and thought. For whose minde do not vaine thoughts wound? whose heart do not temptations afflict? whose minde do not fleshly desires trouble? Therefore, he is not iustified in the sight of God who offendeth in the heart which God beholdeth. Now who would not wonder that M. Bishop should referre himselfe to these words for the exposition that he maketh of the place here in hand? And yet why should we wonder? for his maister Bellarmino had so alledged it; and that was enough: whether truly or falsly, what was that to him? But how farre Gregorie was from that which he would so faine fasten vpon him, appeareth by that that was a little before cited out of him, as also in that he saith, that euē the elect how soeuer they excell in righteousnesse, haue not sufficient to approue themselves innocent, if they be narrowly sifted in iudgment. Therefore not for veniall finnes which hinder not a man from being iust, but for such finnes as bereaue a man of the title of iustice and innocencie, doth the Prophet desire that God will not enter into iudgment with him. M. Bishops other answer is taken from an exposition, which he saith is more ordinary with al the best writers vpon the Psalmes, and yet indeede is no other but a meere Pelagian shiffr; that is, that mans iustice in comparison of the iustice of God, will seeme to be no iustice at all, euen as the Sunne drowneth the light of the Starres

*c Hieron ad Cresiphon. Quamuis dicit, In conspectu
iustis hoc melius
vult, quod etiam
qui hominibus
sancti videntur,
Dissimulant argu-
mentis se neque
qui sancti sunt.
Homo enim vi-
det in facie, Deus
in corde. Si autem inspiciat Deo & omnia contemplante quem cor-
dis arcana non fallunt, nullus est iustus, perspi-
cua ostenditur.
hereticos no ho-
minem in excel-
sa sus tollere sed potentie Dei de-
rogare.*
*Greg. in sept.
Psal. panitent.
Scio multos in conspectu homi-
num iustos viden-
ri, & ad spem
caelestium promiss.
sua deuotio in nocenter in mundo vivere, qui cū
non delinquant
in opere, laborant tamen aliquando vane aut peruer-
sa cogitatione.
Cuius enim men-
tem vane cogita-tionem non la-
tant? Cuius cortentationes non vexant? Cuius animus d. fideri a carni non tarbitur? Non ergo in conspectu Dei iustificatur, qui corde uelinqnat
quod in uisur Deus.*

^f Greg. Moral. lib 8. cap. 11. Quaslibet iustitias polleant nequaquam sibi ad innocentiā in uel electis iustitiam sibi ferri ad in iudicio requirantur.

that it appeareth not. Hierom hauing mentioned the words in question against the Pelagians, addeth thereupon; ^b Which testimonie under the name of pietie they delude with a new sifist. They say, that in comparison of God no man is perfect. As if this were it, saith he, that the Scripture speaketh of; & so he goeth on with the words which I cited out of him last before. That is not then by S. Hieromes testimonie that the Scripture meaneth when it saith, that no man liuing shall be iustified in Gods sight. For shal we be so mad as to think, that we are taught to pray to God not to enter into iudgment with vs, because our righteousnesse is not comparable to his? Where hath God required it so to be? ^h Hath God, saith Hierom, commanded me, to be the same that God is? That there should be no difference betwixt me and the Lord my creator? that I should be aboue the heighe of Angels? that I should haue that which the Angles haue not? Shall we thinke that the Creator will be offended, because his creature is not the same that he himselfe is? or that God will enter into iudgment with vs because we were not made Gods? If this be absurd, as indeede it is, then we must confesse, that therfore the Prophet teacheth vs by his example so to pray, because according to that righteousnesse that is commanded vnto vs and belongeth to our dutie, we are found greatly defectiue and wanting in the sight of God, as in the former section also I haue shewed that Hierom expoundeth that place. As for them whom M. Bishop citeth to warrant his exposition, he doth notably abuse them. First Hilary indeed speaketh of comparisō to God, but not as touching degree of righteousnesse, in which there can be no comparisō, because the one is finite and the other finite, but as touching an vniformitie and constant tenour of righteousnesse, whereby man should inuolably and vn moueably without interruption continue in that righteousnesse that concerneth him, as God doth in his righteousnesse. This he expresseth when he saith, that ⁱ God doth not measure these slippery sals of our changeable nature according to the inflexible constancy of his vchangeable substance, but in iustice and moderation expecteth so much of man as he remembereth the nature of man can reach vnto. For so is his promise in our willing minde to accept vs according to that that we haue, as the Apostle speaketh in another case. To this meaning he saith: ^k What hope is there if God will haue vs

^g Hieron. ad Caesiphont. Non iu-stificabitur, &c.
Quod testimoniu
sub nomine pietat-
is noua argumē-
tatione deludunt.
Axiom ad com-parationem Dei
nullum esse perfe-
ctum. Quasi scriptura hoc dixerit.

^h Ibid. Nūquid praecepit mihi Deus ut essem
quod Deus est?
ut nihil inter me
esset & Dominū Creatorem? ut me or essem Angelorum fastigios.
ut haberem quod
Angeli non ha-
berent?

ⁱ Hilary in Psal.
142. Non hos demit abilis nature
nostre promptif-
simos lapsus se-
candum indermi-
tabilis substantie sue inflexam
constantiam me-
ditur. sed iustus & moderans tengura ob homine
expectat quantum
humane memoria licere naturae.

^k Ibid. Quid spei
est si iudicari nos
secundū se Deus
velit si ad em-
parationem: si
tunc nostre inno-
centiam postulabit?

to be iudged according to himselfe; if he shall require the innocencie of our life in comparison of his: that is, to bee as free from slippes and fals in our state as he is in his? And to shew that man being subiect to alterations and changes is not iust in Gods sight, according to the righteousnes that concerneth him in his own state, he addeth:

¹ And what man living can be iustified in Gods sight, with whom anger, and grieffe, and lust, and ignorance, and forgetfulnesse, & casualty, and necessity, are blended and mingled either by the nature of the body, or by the motion of the ever-wauering soule; who also hath daily a greivous enemy at hand, euen the diuell lying in waite against the soule of the faithfull man, and persecuting the same to destroy it? For this doth the Prophet teach to bee the cause, why no man living can bee found iust in the sight of God. By which words being verie cleare & manifest, the reader may esteeme with what fidelity M. Bishop hath brought Hilary to iustifie his exposition of that place. With the like truth or rather vnttruth, hee citeth Hierome, who saith, that ^m the Prophet doth manifestly shew, that he did waite for Gods mercy, that he supposed some one to be iudge, betwixt God and him; which so being, God should be iustified in his sayings, and overcome when he is iudged: who therefore entreth into iudgement that he may iustly punish. Then reckoning Abraham, and Isaac, and Iacob amongst them of whom the Prophet speaketh, he inferreth: ⁿ Therefore not the very Patriarchs themselves shall bee found iust in the sight of God: for euen the stars are not cleane in his sight. What can be more plainly spoken, to shew that euen the most righteous and iust for want of puritie and iustice should iustly be punished, if God should enter into iudgment with them; and that if the verie starres, not by their owne sin, but by being in the ^o bondage of our vanitie and corruption, be found vncleane before God, much more are we vncleane, for whose sake it is that that imputation doth lie vpon them? But to make it yet further to appeare what Hierome conceiued of those wordes, hee saith in another place: ^p When the day of iudgement or death shall come, all hands shall be faint, because no work shall be found worthy of the iustice of God, and no man living shall be iustified in his sight. Where he plainly teacheth, not onely as touching comparison to God, but as touching that a iust man in himself ought to be, that no man living, no

¹ Flid Iustificari in conspectu Dei quis auentum potest. cui ira, cui dolor, cui cupiditas, cui obliuio, cui ignorantia, cui casus, cui necessitas vel per naturam corporis, vel per motum semper fluctuantis animae admixta sunt: & Cui & quotidie grauissimus hostis imminet, diabolus uidelet animae viri fidelis infidians, eamque ad uentum persecuti? Haec enim esse causam docet, quia nemo uiuens, iustificari in conspectu Dei potest.

^m Hieron. in Psal. 142. Manifestissime demonstrat, quia misericordiae Dei praesolatur, &c. Hic quasi aliquis iudicet inter Deum & Prophetam sicut & scriptum est, ut iustificeris, &c. Et propter causam in iudicium Deus uenisse punit.

^o Ergo nec ipsi Patriarchae iustificabuntur in conspectu Dei. Si alia enim non sunt merita in conspectu eius.

^p Rom. 8. 20. 21.

^p Hieron. in Esa. lib. 6. cap. 14. Cum aies iudicij vel dormitionis aduenieris, dissoluentur omnes manus, quia nullum opus dignum Dei iustitia reperietur, & non iustificabitur, &c.

not so much as in any one worke shall bee iustified in Gods sight, but his hands, that is, all his workes shall faile if God enter into iudgement with him. The next that he citeth is Arnobius, who for one part of his exposition of these words, saith, that man is not to be found righteous if he bee compared to God; that all beauty in Gods presence is but deformity, all strength but weakenesse, all riches but beggerie, all righteousnesse but unrighteousnesse. But having set downe this because this could not sufficiently expresse the meaning of the Prophe, he addeth further: And I pray thee that thou wilt cease to search out the righteousnesse that concerneth man, that should be neighbour to thy righteousnesse, because the enemy hath persecuted my soule, and compassed me about with such darkenesse of his deceipt, as that beleeuing my selfe to be dead with God, I thought I should finde no hearing with thy righteousnesse for my recoverie: therefore is my spirit troubled within mee. It is plaine then by the iudgement of Arnobius, that not onely in comparison of God, but euen by that righteousnesse that belongeth vnto man, no man liuing shall be found iust before the iudgement seat of God. Euthymius whom he alledgeth next, is as plaine to the same purpose. For although with Arnobius hee on the one side denie iustification in comparison of God, in comparison of whom, saith he, not onely man, but neither the Angels themselves are iust, because it is he onely that is not capable of sinne, yet not contented herewith, he on the other side expoundeth the praier of the Prophet in this sort; Enter not into iudgement, &c. that is, deale not strictly with me in the time to come: I fly vnto thee, and am not worthy to be called thy sonne, neither will I enter into iudgement with thee, neither do I set up mine owne righteousnesse, because it shall not bee iustified here in the flesh, where no man liuing is perfectly cleane. He further addeth reasons of the vsing of this praier, because wee daily sinne; because wee doe few good deedes in comparison of that that wee commit (in euill) and omit (in good): because wee doe little good in comparison of the benefites of God. Now then what is become of Master Bishops righteousnesse, so perfect as that it faileth not in any duetie which wee are bound to performe; yea, such as by which wee merit euermore life? Compare the one with the other, gentle Reader, and thou shalt see how well they agree.

q. Arno. in Psal.
142. Omnis pul-
chritudote presente deo mis est: om-
nis fortitudo infir-
ma; omnes diuitie
mendicet astomus humanae iustitia iustitia.

i. Ibid. Et ut vici-
nam tue iustitie
iustitiam humanae exquirere desinas quiso, quoniam
persecutus est ini-
micus animam me-
am. &c. Tanta me
obscuritate suae circumdidi: frui-
dis ut mortuum
me apud Deum
credens, putarem
me nullum recupe-
rationis apud iu-
stiriam uiam au-
ditum inuenire:
ideo anxius est
in me spiritus
meus.

Euthym. in Psal.
142. Id est, n. n.
districte mecum
agas in futuro:
ad te fugio & non suis dignus voca-
rificus tuus, nec
ego tecum intrare
in iudicium uol-
nec consilium iu-
stitiam meam
quod non iustifi-cabitur hic in carne, ubi nemo hic
uiuens plene iu-
stus est.

2. Ibidem. Quotidie peccamus: Parua bona facimus in comparatione commissionis & omissionis: minima bona facimus in comparatione beneficiorum Dei.

S. Austine in the place alledged, hath nothing at all concerning this text, nothing at all concerning the righteoufnesse of man. Only he saith of the Angels, that although by participation of God they be iust, yet in comparison of God they be not iust. Now if the Prophets words be to be taken as M. Bishop constructh them, then this prayer must bee the prayer of Angels as well as of men, because by the testimony of Austine, which Euchymius also obserueth, the very Angels themselues are not iust in comparison of God. Now wee doe not any where finde that it belongeth to the Angels to praie in this sort, and therefore it must be so vnderstood as is proper vnto men. And that vnderstanding thereof, the same S. Austine declareth to vs writing vpon that Psalme: Howsoeuer I seeme to my selfe right & straight, yet thou bringest a rule out of thy treasure; thou laiest mee to it, and I am found faultie. The words therefore import that not only by comparison, but by rule of righteoufnesse which God hath percribed to man, euerie man liuing is found failing of righteoufnesse in the sight of God, euen as elsewhere he saith: According to the most entyre rule of his truth, no man liuing shall bee iustified in his sight. Which he declareth yet more plainly in his foresaid exposition vpon the Psalme, when he teacheth that by the same defaults for which we praie daily vnto God, forgiue vs our trespasses, it cometh to passe that no man liuing shall bee iustified in Gods sight: Let the Apostles themselues say, let them say, forgiue vs our trespasses. And when it shall be said vnto them, why do ye say thus? What are your trespasses? let them answer: Because no man liuing shall be iustified in thy sight. Gregories minde is sufficiently plaine by that that hath bene said before. For what though hee say that the righteoufnesse of men & Angels is nothing in comparison of God? Doth that import that there is nothing else meant by the Prophet, when hee praierh vnto God not to enter into iudgement with him? By this then wee may see the lewd consciences of these men in citing the authorities of the ancient Fathers. Hee hath brought vs heere a great companie of their names for him, when there is not one of them but speaketh expressly against him, and the most of them in the selfe same places whence he alledgeth them. But he telleth vs further, that his exposition is taken out of Iob, from whom hee alledgeth these words; I know truly it is euen so, that no man compared to God shall be iustified. In which sort it is true, that we also read u Aug. cont. P'rif. cell. & Origen. ad Oref. cap. 10. Cuius participatione iustis sunt, eius comparat: me n'c iustis sunt.

x Idem in Psal. 142. Quantum iudicet rectus inbi videt, p'olue. i. u. de thesauro tuo regulam; coap:as me ad eam & prauus inuenior.

y Idem de peccat. mer. & remiss. lib. 2. cap. 10. Quantum ad integritatem regulam veritatis eius pertinet, non iustificabitur, &c.

z Idem in Psal. 142. Dicant Apostoli, dicant, Dimitte nobis, &c. Et cum eu dictum fuerit, Quare hoc dicitis? que sunt debita vestra? respondet. Quoniam non iustificabitur, &c.

a Iob. 9. 2.

the wordes in some of our translations, but it is true also that the word of comparison is not at all found in the Hebrew text. Therefore Arias Montanus translateth it ad verbum thus : b Why will a man iustifie himselfe with God? Pagnine thus ; c How will a man iustifie himselfe with God? S. Augustine also readeth to the same effect, d How shall a man be iust before God? Therefore these wordes of Iob haue nothing at all, whereupon that exposition of his may haue any ground. And though Iob had said, that man in comparison of God is not iust or cannot be iustified, yet it followeth not that that therefore should be all that Dauid meant in saying, that no man liuing shall be iustified in Gods sight. And that appeareth by S. Austine in the place now alledged, where bringing in the wordes of Iob ; e If I shall call my selfe iust, my mouth shall speake wickedly ; hee expoundeth the same thus ; f If I shall call my selfe iust against his iudgement where the perfect rule of righteousnesse prooueth me to be vniust, surely my mouth shall speake wickedly, and in respect hereof saith, that those wordes were vsed by Dauid : Enter not into iudgement, &c. For this cause then are wee taught so to pray, because the perfect rule of righteousnes prooueth vs to be vniust if God enter into iudgment with vs. By this place therefore wee whollie ouerthrow the righteousnesse of man, and do firmly prooue, that no man liuing either generally in the course of his life, or in any particular act or acts can be iustified before God, if God call him to the triall of the precise and perfect rule of righteousnesse and truth. Yea, if no man can be found iust in the sight of God, then it must necessarily follow, that no act of man can bee found iust, because the act must needs bee according to the condition and quality of the man, so that vnlesse a man be fully and perfectly iust, no act fully and perfectly iust can proceede from him, but must needs haue a staine of that sin which bereaueth him of the title of a iust man.

48. W. BISHOP.

One other ordinary hackney of theirs, is that out of the Prophet. All our righteousnesse is as a menstruous or defiled cloath. The which I haue already ridde to death in the beginning of the question of iustification, where it was alledged : The answer is briefly, that the Prophet praying for the sinnes of the people, speaketh in the person of the b Quid iustificabit se homo cum Deo?

c Quomodo iustificabit se homo cum Deo?

d Aug. de pecc. mer. & remis. lib.

e cap. 10. Quem admodum iustus est homo ante Deum?

c Iob. 20.

f Aug. ibid. Si me iustum dixero contra iudicium eius ubi perfecta illa iustitie regula me conuincit iniustum, profecto impie loquetur es mihi.

the sinfull; such as the common sort of them were, who had more finnes then good workes, and so their righteousnesse was like unto a spotted and stayned cloath. Now this disprooueth not, but that their good workes although but few, yet were free from all spots of iniquitie: it onely prooueth, that with their few good, they had a great number of euill, which defiled their righteousnesse, and made it like a stayned cloath.

R. ABBOT.

He hath so rid this hackney of ours, as that he hath pitifully galled himselfe in the riding of him. We do imagine that by that time he hath better aduised of this whole matter, he will thinke that some body did ride him when first he tooke this businesse in hand. We may here see the blinde insolencie of a presumptuous vaine man, who hauing said nothing but what is iustly to be derided and scorned, yet taketh vpon him as if he had giuen vs some very admirable and learned answer. Yea, in this very place he bableth as if his wits were to secke, crossing and thwarting that in one line which he vttereth in another. He telleth vs that the words of Esay were spoken in the person of the sinfull, who had more finnes then good workes, and so their righteousnesse was like unto a spotted and stayned cloath: and yet by and by he saith, that their good workes though but few, were free from all spots of iniquitie. Againe, as vncertaine where to stand, he telleth vs, that their euill works defiled their righteousnesse, and made it like a stayned cloath. If their good works were free from al spots of iniquity, how did their euill works defile them, and make them like a stayned cloath? Or if their euill works did defile their good, and make them like a stayned cloath, how were they free from all spots of iniquitie? Againe, we would demaund of him, how sinfull, or as he hath called them before, euill and wicked men should do good workes free from all spots of iniquitie, seeing our Sauour so plainly saith, that ^a an euill tree cannot bring forth good fruite, no more then we can gather grapes of thornes or figges of thistles. S. Paul telleth vs, that ^b so them that are vncleane nothing is pure, their mindes and consciences being defiled. Which made S. Bernard to say, that ^c if there be a blemish or blot in the conscience, nothing that commeth from it shall be without a blot. How then can it stand good which M. Bishop saith, that sinfull and wicked

^a Mat. 7. 18.
^b Luk. 6. 43.

^b Tit. 2. 15.
^c Petrus in Cant.
Ser. 71. Si fuerit
nauis in corpore
entia, nec quod
ex ea prodierit carbitur nauis.

wicked men do good workes which are free from all spott of iniquitie? But thus he turneth all vp side downe, and according to the present occasion, letteth goe whatsoeuer commeth next to hand, without feare or wit. But vpon the place I neede not to stand. I referre the Reader to that that hath bene^d before said thereof, where it hath bene shewed, that the Prophet by way of prophecie ended the praier in the name of the faithfull that were to liue in the desolations of Ierusalem and the Temple; that the praier of the Prophee Daniel, at that time fully expresseth the effect of the same praier of Esay: and therefore that it is the confession of the faithfull & godly, that their righteousnesse is as a stained cloth, and that the auncient Fathers haue vsed the place for prooffe thereof.

d Sect 3.

49. W. BISHOP.

3. There is not a man who doth not sinne: And blessed is the man whose sinnes be not imputed to him; and such like. I answer that the best men sinne venially, and are happy when those their sinnes be pardoned: but all this is cleane besides this question, where it is onely enquired, whether the good workes that the iust do, be free from sinne, and not whether they at other times do sinne, at the least venially. This is all which M. Perkins here & there obiecteth against this matter: but because some others do alledge also some darke places out of the Fathers, I thinke it not amisse to solue them here together.

S. Cyprian saith: That the besieged mind of man, can hardly resist all assaults of the enemy: for when couetousnesse is ouerthrowne, vp starts lechery, and so forth.

Answer. All this is true, that the life of man is a perpetuall warfare: yea man assisted with the grace of God, may performe it most valiantly, and neuer take any mortall wound of the enemies: although through his own frailty he may be sometimes foiled.

S. Hierom affirmeth: That then we are iust when we confesse our selues to be sinnes.

Answer. That all iust men confesse themselves to sinne venially: but neither of these places come neare the point in question, that not one good deede of the iust man, is without some spot or staine of sinne.

S. Austine hath these words: Most perfect charity which cannot be encreased, is to be found in no man in this life: and as long as it may

Dial. 1. cap. Pe-lag.

Epi. 29.

may be encreased, that which is lesse thē it ought to be, is faulty, of which fault it proceedeth, that there is no man who doth good, and doth not sinne. All this we grant to be true: that no man hath so perfect charity in this life, but that sometimes he doth lesse then hee ought to do: and consequently doth not so well, but that now and then he sinnech at the least venially, and that therefore the said holy Doctor had iust cause to say: Wo be to the laudable life of a man, if it bee examined without mercy. All which notwithstanding iust men may out of that charity which they haue in this life do many good workes, which are pure from al sinne, as hath bene proued. They alledge yet another place out of S. Sustine: That belongeth vnto the perfection of a iust man; to know in truth his imperfectiō, and in humility to confesse it. True: that is, as he teacheth else where: First, that the perfection of this life is imperfectiō, being compared with the perfection of the life to come. Again, that the most perfect in this life, hath many imperfections, both of wit and will, and thereby many light faulcs.

*Lib. 9. conf. 7.
cap. 13.*

*Lib. 2. con. du. 23
Epist. Pelag. cap. 7*

Now come we vnto S Gregory our blessed Apostle, out of whose sweet words ill understood, they seeme to haue sucked this their poison. He saith: The holy man Job, because he did see all the merit of our vertue to be vice, if it be straightly examined of the inward Iudge, doth rightly adde, if I will contend with him, I cannot answer him one for a thousand.

*Lib. 9. inora. 2.
cap. 1.*

I answer, that by our vertue in that place, is to bee understood, that vertue which we haue of our owne strength, without the aide of Gods grace; which we acknowledge to be commonly infected with some vice: that S. Gregory so tooke it, appeares by the words, both going before and following: before he writeth thus: A man not compared to God, receiued iustice: but compared vnto him, he leesech it. For whoe soeuer compareth himselfe vnto the author of all good, leesech that good which he had receiued: for hee that doth attribute the good vnto himselfe, doth fight against God with his owne gifts: And after thus: To contend with God, is not to giue to God the glory of his vertue, but to take it to himselfe. And so all the merit of this our vertue, which commeth not of God, but is attributed vnto our selfe, as proceeding onely from our selues, is the very vice of pride, and cannot be preiudicall vnto true good workes, all which wee acknowledge to proceede principally from the grace of God dwelling in vs. Hee saith further with S. Augustine, that in this lifewe cannot attaine vnto perfect fect purity, such as shall bee in heauen reade the beginning of his first and second booke of Morals, and there you shall finde him commending Iob to the skies, as a good and holy man; by his temptation not foiled, but much advanced in vertue.

R. ABBOT.

These arguments the most of them are foisted in of his owne head, there being none of ours that alledgeth them to that purpose to which he produceth them. But thus because he would bee taken for a valiant warrour he maketh himselfe a man of straw to fight with, and with all his might bestirreth himselfe against a shadow. But the worth of his answers is first to be seene in that which he saith to the words of the Apostle; ^a Blessed is hee to whom the Lord imputeth not sinne. The best men sinne venially, saith he, and are happy when those their sinnes be pardoned. Now the Apostle expoundeth the forgiueness, or not imputing of sinne there spoken of, to bee the imputation of righteousness. But the forgiuensse, of their veniall sinnes, is not the imputation of righteousness because without any forgiuensse of veniall sinnes, a man continueth righteous and iust, as wherein there is no breach of iustice and righteousness, and notwithstanding the same a man is iust in the sight of God, as out of the Romish doctrine was shewed in the section last sauing one. Therefore forgiuensse of sinnes spoken of in that place, cannot be vnderstood of veniall sinnes. Again, he maintaineth in the question of Satisfaction, that forgiuensse of sinnes taketh not away the temporall punishment of sinne. How then is a man hap-

^a Psalm. 32. 2.

^b Psal. 130. 3.
^c Aug. in Psal.
 129. Vidi propi-
torum vitam humanam
circumlatrari pec-
catum suis, accusari
omnes conscientias
as cogitationibus suis; non inueniri
cessum cor presu-
mens de iustitia
sua. Si ergo cor ex-istum non potest
inueniri, quod
presumat de sua
iustitia, presumat inueniri cor de miserordia Dei
et deat, si e.

ple, when those veniall sinnes be pardoned, if for want of satisfaction he remaine still to pay deare for them, as he speaketh in his Epistle, in Purgatory fire?
 He bringeth in a place of Cyprian, as idley as hee did the former texts. To that which he saith we answer him, that it is by the grace of Christ through the forgiuensse of sins, that the wounds which the faithfull man receiue, be not mortall. His foiles and wounds of themselves are such, as that he must say with David: ^b If thou, O Lord, be extreme to marke iniquities, who can stand? ^c He saw, saith S. Austine, the whole life of man in a manner to be barked at on every side with his sinne; ; all consciences to be accused by their owne thoughts; that in Gods sight, then can no good worke proceed from vs, which can be said to be perfectly and entierly good. For from an vnperfect cause, cannot come a perfect effect. ¹ If the roote bee faulty, the branch also must be so. A lame legge cannot yeeld an vpright and stedfast gate. Therefore needes must there be a lameness and blemish in all the good workes that issue from vs. For charity is not such asi: ought to be, till we loue the Lord our God with all our soule. But ^k so long as there is any carnall concupiscence, God is not loued with all the soule. And so long as wee liue heere, there is carnall concupiscence against the law of the minde. Therefore so long as wee liue here, charity is neuer perfect in vs as it ought to be, neither can any perfect good worke be effected by vs. M. Bishop minceth and qualifieth the matter, that no man hath so perfect charity, but that sometimes he doth lesse then he ought to doe. But the argument prooueth, that charity is alwaies vnperfect in this life, and therefore not sometimes onely, but alwaies a man doth lesse then he ought to do. There is alwaies a blot that staineth our charity, ¹ by reason whereof we haue nothing in vs clean, nothing innocent, as before was cited out of Hilary; and therefore it can yeeld no works that are free from blot and staine. But the Reader is heere to note the constancie of this man, who affirmeth here, that no man hath so perfect charity in this life, but that sometimes he doth lesse then he ought to doe, whereas before hee hath told vs of a righteousnesse so perfect in this life, as that ^m it faileth not in any duty which we are bound to performe. Thus giddily hee runneth to and fro, being vncertaine what to say, and neuer knowing where hee may stand sure. Now here he saith, that the other saying of Austine, Woe to the laudable life of man, if it bee examined without mercy, is spoken in respect of venial finnes, whereas Austine vseth the words in respect of hell fire, which they say is not incident to their venial finnes. For hauing professed that hee durst not say, that after baptisme no word went out of his mothers mouth against Gods commaundement, and that Christ saith, that if a man say to his brother, foole, he is guilty of hell fire, hee addeth these words; ⁿ And woe euen to the commendable life of man, if thou set aside mercy in the examining (or sisting) of it. To which purpose hee saith also in another place; ^o Who soener lusth here, how soeuer iustly he liue; woe vnto him, if God enter into iudgement with him. In which sort Arnobius also saith, ^p Woe vnto vs if hee require what wee owe to him;

iBern. in Cant ser. 71 Si radix in vitio & ramus.

k. Aug. de perfect. sustit. Cum est aliquid concupiscencie carnalis, &c. non omnimodo ex tota anima diligitur Deus.

1 Hilary. apud Aug. lib. cont. Iulian. li. 2. Supra sect. 44.

m Sect. 45.

n Aug. Confess. lib. 9. cap. 13. Vt etiam laudabili vte hominum si nota misericordia d scias eam. o Idem in Psal. 42. Quicumque hic vult quantumlibet iuste vivere, ue illi sic illo in iudicium intrauerit Deus. P. Arnob. in Psal. 135. Vt nobis si quod debeamus exegerit; ue nobis si quod debet reddiderit.

woe unto vs if he pay what he oweth to vs. These woes are not vttered in respect of Purgatory or any temporall affliction, but in respect of the issue of that finall dreadfull iudgement, the sentence whereof shall stand for euer. Now if they haue learned by the word of God to denounce this woe, then woe to M. Bishop, that to the contrary defendeth a righteousnesse so perfect in this life, as that his righteous man needeth not greatly to feare the rigorous sentence of a iust Iudge, as who faileth not in any duty that he is bound to performe; who can keepe himselfe from all but veniall sinnes, which are easily forgiven by the Bishops blessing, by holy water, by knocking the breast, by saying a Pater noster, by extreame unction, and some other such deuotions madly deuised to that end. As touching the other place of Austine, it hath bene already shewed, that our righteousnesse in this life is vnperfect, not onely by comparison, but simply in it self, and according to that that here is required of vs. The imperfections of wit and will, which M. Bishop speaketh of, are so great and so many, as that if hee did but with a feeling heart and conscience consider the same, hee would find that there is small cause in the most perfect of this life, to pleade for that perfection that he maintaineth. But being a man of a frozen and dead heart, and neither knowing others nor himselfe, by the name of many light faults hee passeth ouer those things which make the most righteous and iust to groane vnder the burden of them, and to say with David, Mine iniquities are gone ouer my head, and are like a sore burden, too heavy for mee to beare: My sinnes haue taken such hold vpon me, that I am not able to looke vp, they are more in number then the haire of my head, and my heart hath failed me. Tush saith M. Bishop, what neede all this adoe? all these are but light and veniall faults; but heereby wee conceiue that neither his will nor his wit haue indeede that perfection, that it were fit they should haue. His answer to the words of Gregory is ridiculous and childish. Gregory forsooth by our vertue meaneth the vertue that wee haue of our owne strength; when as Gregorie teacheth that wee haue no vertue of our owne strength, but onely by the gift of God. It is called our righteousnesse, saith he in another place, not which is ours of our owne, but which by the gift of God becommeth ours. According to this meaning, hee saith that the holy man Iob, because he saw all the merit of our vertue to be vice if it be strictly iudged by the internall Iudge, did rightly adde, If I

9 Sect. 4.

r Rhem. Testim. Annos. Mat. 10. 12. Sca. Proemio glossa.

[Psal. 38. 6.

r Psal. 40. 12.

u Greg. Moral. lib. 24. cap. 5. Iustitia nostra discretio non que ex nostro nostra est, sed que diuina largita est nostra. x Ibid. li. 9. ca. 1. Sanctus vir quia omne virtutum nostrum meritum tantum esse conspexit. si ab interno arbitrio distinet. Et iudicatur, sed subiungit. si uero, &c.

will contend with him, I shall not bee able to answer him one for a thousand. He applieth his speech to *Iob*s righteousnesse, which hee had no cause to imagine, that Iob alledged as attained vnto by his own strength. And shall we be so mad, as to thinke that if Iob had bene perfect by a righteousnesse receiued by the gift of God, hee would say he could not therefore answer God, because he saw all the merit of the vertue that he had by his owne strength to bee but vice? It is strange to see that these men should be so blinde, as not to see the grosse absurdity of these shifts. Gregory spake to the instruction of his hearers, whom surely he thought not to be worse then the Pharisee, but knew that they attributed their vertue and righteousnesse to the gift of God; and of that righteousnesse which they confessed to bee Gods good gift, teacheth them to acknowledge, that through our weakenesse and frailty, it becommeth defectiue and faulty, if God call it to precise and strict examination & iudgement. Euen as elsewhere hee saith againe; All the righteousnesse of man is conuicted to be vnrighteousnesse, if it be strictly iudged; it needeth therefore praier after righteousnesse, that that which being sifted might quail, by the meere piety of the Iudge may go for good. Where I hope that M. Bishop, though he will say much, yet wil not say, that Gregory meant that we should pray, that the righteousnesse which wee doe of our owne strength, by the piety and clemencie of the Iudge may stand for good. And if he dare not so say, then it followeth that of that righteousnesse, which in this life we attaine to by the gift of God; Gregorie saith, that it is found to be defectiue, and to come short of perfect righteousnesse, and thereby to be vnrighteousnesse, if seuered and strict account bee taken of it; which more peremptorily he affirmeth elswhere, saying: If we bee indged without mercy, our worke is worthy to be punished, which wee expect to haue rewarded. Therefore the teares of expiation, as he speaketh, are required, that humble praier may lift up the merit of our good worke, to the obtaining of eternall reward. So that howsoeuer hee commend Iob, as well hemight, sure I am that both Iob and he condemne M. Bishop, as a proud Pharisee, maintaining the righteousnesse of man against the righteousnesse of God, to the impeaching of the glory of God. Which hee doth also by his quillet of attributing good workes principally to the grace of God, not wholly but principally, that so he may reserue some place at least to the free will of man, because

y Ibid. cap. 11. Omnis humana iustitia iniustitia esse conuincit: ut, si districte iudicetur. Prece ergo post iustitiam indiget: ut, quae succumbere discussa poterat ipsa iudicis pietate conualescat.

z Ibid. ca. 18. Si remota pietate discutimur, opus nostrum parum dignum est quod remunerari pro eius prestolamur, &c. Relat ut postquam bonum opus agitur lachryme expiationis exquiruntur quatenus ad eternam praemia meriti recti operis subuehantur humilitas consolationis.

yet either caried away with vaine glorie, as S. Gregory takes it, or not giuing themselues to the works of mercy, spirituall and corporall, as S. Chrylostome expoundeth briefly not continuing in their former charitie (for faith once had, cannot after the Protestants Doctrine bee lost) were shut out of the kingdome of heauen, albeit they presumed strongly on the assurance of their saluation, as is apparent by their confident demaunding to be let in: for they said, Lord, Lord open vnto vs.

Iohn. 12.

4. Many of the Princes beleueed in Christ, but did not confesse him, for they loued more the glory of men, then the glory of God. What can be more eident, then that these men had faith? when the holy Ghost saith expressly, that they beleueed in Christ, which is the onely act of faith: and yet were destitute of charity, which preferreth the glorie and seruise of God, before all things in this world.

R. ABBOT.

That there may be faith without charitie we make no question; but the question is of that faith whereby we are iustified, or wherein standeth our iustification before God. It is to be knowne, that faith is of diuers sorts: there is a faith which is called a the faith of the elect, as being peculiar vnto them, and for which men are called b faithfull: and there is a faith by which the c diuels also are saide to beleene, and yet are not to be called faithfull. There is a faith whereby we d beleene that there is one God: and there is another faith, whereby e we beleene in God. There is a faith whereby f Simon Magnus f beleeued, whose heart was not right in the sight of God, and there is a g faith whereby God purifieth the heart. There is a h dead faith, and there is a i faith whereby wee liue, and Christ liueth in vs. There is a k faith vnfaigned, and thereby we vnderstand, that there is also a faigned faith. There is a faith that consisteth in l bare assens of the vnderstanding, and there is a faith that implyeth the affection of the heart and will. There is a faith whereby m hee which beleueneth shall neuer perishe: and there is a faith whereby some n beleene for a time, and in time of temptation go away. There is a faith which the world o destroyeth, and there is p a faith which is our victorie, whereby we ouercome the world. According to these differences, there is q a faith without workes, and there is r a faith which worketh by loue. We affirme then of the faith of the elect, whereby we beleue

a Tit. 1. 1.b Ephe. 1. 1.c Iam. 2. 19.d Ibid.e Iohn 14. 7.f Act. 8. 13. 21.g Act. 15. 9.h Iam. 2. 20.i Gal. 2. 20.k 1 Tim. 1. 5.l Occurr. in Iac.ca. 2. De simplici*assensu fidem dice-re solemus, &c.Rursum consecra-tionem ex assensuprocedentem cumfirmo assensu no-mi se fidei voca-mus.m* Iohn 3. 15.n Luke 8. 13.o 2. Tim. 2. 18.p 1. Iohn 5. 4.q Iam. 2. 14.r Gal. 5. 6.

beleue in God, to which the promise of iustification and eternall life is made, that it is a faith which cannot be separated from charity and good workes, but where soeuer it is, there is infallably ioined with it the loue of God, bringing forth the fruits of righteousness, which are by Iesus Christ, to the glory and praise of God. Now as touching this faith M. Bishops arguments must be vnderstood, or else they are nothing against vs; and being so vnderstood, a man would wonder that a wise man should shew so much folly, to bring arguments so impertinent and friuolous, at he hath done. The first is taken from the words of reprobate hypocrites, who at that day shall say vnto Christ, Lord, Lord, haue we not prophesied in thy name, &c. to whom he shall professe, saying, I neuer knew you, depart from me ye workers of iniquitie. They shall say, Lord, Lord, therefore they beleued in Christ, and were perswaded assuredly that they were of the elect; the conclusion as well agreeing to the antecedent, as a goose feather to a foxes taile. It is to be noted, that faith is grounded vpon the word of God, and the thing which it beleueth, is that that God hath said. Thus the Apostle telleth vs, that faith is by hearing, and hearing by the word of God; and therefore calleth the word of God x the word of faith, because that is the obiekt and matter of faith. Whatsoeuer we conceiue towards God beside the word of God, it is opinion, imagination, presumption, but faith it is not. Now the word of God denounceth, that the soule of the Lord hateth them that loueth iniquitie; that y all the workers of iniquity shall be destroyed; that Christ shall say to them at the last day, Depart from me ye workers of iniquitie. If then there be no faith but by the word of God, and the word of God denounce destruction to the workers of iniquity, how can it be said that the workers of iniquity haue faith to perswade themselves assuredly, that they are of the elect? S. Austine saith, z He who hath faith without hope and charity, beleueth that Christ is, but he beleueth not in Christ. For a how doth he say that he beleueth in Christ, saith Cyprian, who doth not what Christ hath commanded vs to do? How then doth M. Bishop say, that these beleue in Christ, in whom he confesseth there is no charity, no loue to Christ to do those things which he commandeth? They of whom Christ speaketh, as the words very plainly import, are heretikes, schismatiks, false Apostles, false teachers, yea and such also, as though they preach the truth of Christ, yet preach it not truly &

Phil. 1. 11.

Mat. 7. 22.

u Rom. 10. 17.

x Ver. 8.

x Psal. 11. 6.

y Psal. 92. 9.

z Aug. de tri. d. Dom. ser. Qui fidem habet, sine spe & dilectione Christum esse credit, non in Christum credit.

a Cyprian. de simplici p. c. s. Credere se in Christum quomodo dicit, qui non fecit quod Christus facere precepit?

b Phil. 1. 15. 18.
c Cap. 2. 21.

sincerely, but of enemie and strife, and vnder a pretence, who vnder the name of Christ seeke their owne, and not that that is Christs, making the word of God to serue them, & themselves not seruing it; vsing the Gospel for their purpose, when they haue no true purpose for the Gospel. taking the testament (of Christ) in their mouthes, but ha-ving to be reformed thereby, professing to know God when by their deeds they deny him. To the name of Christ euen in the mouthes of such wicked men, God sometimes doth that honor, as that miracles are done thereby, diuels are cast out & great cures are wrought, when in they much glory, & in respect thereof assume much vnto themselves. These in the end, not of faith, but for feare, whē they shall see that which they beleued not, that damnation is their end shall in perplexity of mind cry vnto Christ, whō before they regarded not, and therefore by him now shall be reiected. Of such, though professing to know God, and prophesying in the name of Christ, yet the Apostle saith as the vulgar Latine translateth, and as the word well beareth, that they are vnbeleeuers, yea as Thomas Aquinas expoundeth it, not fit to beleene. And if they be vnbeleeuers, why doth M. Bishop say they haue faith? or if they haue faith, why doth the Apostle say that they are vnbeleeuers? Surely they that beleue destruction to be the end of the works of iniquity, will be careful to auoid the same. Cyprian truly saith: Our conscience would be afraid if it did beleene: because it beleueth not, therefore it feareth not. If it did beleene, it would take heed, and if it did take heed it should auoid or escape, namely the punishments to come, whereof he speaketh in that place. The cause why men profit not by the word of God, is because it is not mingled with faith in those that heare it. Where there is faith, men profit by it, and it is the saour of life vnto life, but where faith is wanting, it commeth to passe which Ambrose saith: They go from hence to hell, that there they may learne that that is true, which here they would not beleue. Thus it commeth to passe with them of whom M. Bishop here speaketh, who either preach their owne deuices vnder the name of Christ, or mingle not that with faith in themselves, which they preach to be beleued of other men. There is not so much as one word in the text whence he should conclude, that euer they were endued with true faith.

The next of his arguments is taken from the man that came to the wedding, not hauing on a wedding garment. This argument he handleth

d Psal. 50. 16. 17.
e Ex. 1. 16.

f Phil. 3. 19.

g Tit. 7. 16.
h Thom. Aquin.
in Tit. 1. lect. 9.
Non opus ad credendum.
i Cyprian. de simplic. prela. Me-
tueret conscientia
nostra si crederet;
quia non credit omnino
nec metuit: si autem credet, retinet et timeat. Si crederet, quaderet.
k Heb. 4. 2.

l 1. Cor. 2. 16.
m Ambros. 1. 1.
Theſſ. ca. 4. Tyſſant hinc in ge-
bernant ut id ſ-
cant verum eſſe
quod credere voluerunt.

n Math. 22. 11.

handleth verie learnedly. First, he saith, that this man had faith; which because hee knewe wee would denie, therefore for prooffe thereof, hee addeth, that else hee had not bene admitted to the table which signifieth the sacraments. But this needeth as much prooffe as all the rest, nay it cannot bee prooved at all. For men are admitted to the sacraments by men, and they are admitted for profession of faith, when they that admittethem cannot tell whether they haue faith or not. For as Hilary saith, ° hypocrisie is wont to vse much art to deceiue men, & humane simplicity hardly perceiueth the fraud of a dissembling mind. Many pretend that which is not in them, and make profession of faith with the mouth, when in the heart they haue no faith at all. P Since the name of Christianity hath begun to be in so high regard, the hypocrisie of men hath increased; that is, the dissembling of them who by bearing the name of Christians, regard more to please men then God. Now sith all these are admitted to the sacraments, & yet all haue not faith, it followeth not, that because men are admitted to the sacraments, therefore they haue faith; nay, it is a very ridiculous and childish prooffe. Wherefore as it is said, that this man wanted charitie, so we say that he wanted also faith, and so M. Bishop is become as wise a man as he was before. Let him then expound the wedding garment to be charity, it shall hurt vs nothing. For we will answer him that hee wanted the wedding garment of charity, because he wanted faith: for had he had true faith, he should also haue had loue, because faith worketh by loue. But the wedding garment is as well faith as loue. It is indeede Jesus Christ himselfe, of whom the Apostle saith; Put ye on the Lord Iesus Christ; and againe, so many as are baptized into Christ, haue put on Christ. Him we put on first by faith, thereby making him ours, and applying to our selues the benefite of his redemption, that appearing before God in the scarlet garment of his obedience to bloudshed & death, we may by forgiveness of sins be accepted for his sake, & thenceforth the residue of our spirituall attire may be put vpon vs, whilest in putting on Christ, wee put on the new man, which according to God is created in righteousness & holinesse of truth; whilest wee put on the bowels of mercie, kindnesse, humblenesse of mind, meekenesse, long suffering, whilest by growing and increasing, wee are still putting on the breastplate of faith, and loue, and the hope of saluation for an helmet. Thus Chrysostome truly & rightly saith, that the wedding garment is true faith,

o Hilary in Mat.
cap. 22. In fallen-
dis hominibus plu-
rimum artus soler
habere simulatio.
Et patet qd. Hu-mana simplicitas
difficile fraudu-
tium simulatio-
nem intelligit.
p. Aug. in Psal. 7.
Postquam in tan. oculatione nonem
capit. esse Christia-
num. cuius hypo-
crisis; id est. simulatio. eo eorum que nomine Christiano
malunt hominibus placere quam Deo.
q. 2. Theol. 3. 2. Theol.
Agu. ibid. Licet
videantur habere
eam, non tamen
habent veram.
r Gal. 5. 6.
f Rom. 13. 14.
t Gal. 3. 27.

u Ephes. 4. 24.
x Col. 3. 12.
y 1. Thest. 1. 3.
z Chrysost. Op. in-perflum 34. Nuptial. vestimentum
est fides vera que
est per Iesum Christum & intacta. & c.

which is by Iesus Christ and the righteousnesse thereof, or his righteousnesse. And thus Ferus one of M. Bishops owne Doctores hath taught vs, that the wedding garment which is Christ, is put on two manner of waies: ^a first inwardly by faith, when upon our sinnes we put on his righteousnesse: then outwardly when we imitate his loue. The place which hee alledgeth out of the Reuelation, containeth nothing to the contrarie. ^b The fine linnen (where with the bride and spouse of Christ is araid) is ^{*} the righteousnesse of Saints; for so is the word in the plurall number. Here is then first ^c the righteousnes of faith fully perfect in the blood of Christ, by the imputation of his obedience and merits; and secondly the righteousnesse of good works & inward conformity vnto God begun in this life, and fully to be perfected at the resurrection of the dead, when Christ shall make his Church ^d a glorious Church; not hauing spotte or wrinkle, or any such thing, but to be holy and without blame. But the exception which he maketh, why faith can be no part of this wedding garment, is worthy to be noted. Hee hath before told vs, that the wedding supper importeth the Sacraments, the vse whereof is onely in this life; and heere faith, that faith cannot bee the wedding garment, because faith remaineth not after this life. How many mile to London? a poke full of plummes. But how soeuer that be, his wisdom might conceiue, that since the last iudgment dependeth respectiue vpon that that hath bene precedent in this life, therefore as with him the righteousnesse and good workes of the Saints which they haue wrought heere, are their wedding garment for the last daie, so we may also truely say, that the faith whereby in this life we beleue in Christ, shall be our wedding garment then, when as Saint Peter saith, ^e wee shall receiue the end of our faith, which is the saluation of our soules. Hee alledgeth Hierome for his purpose verie falsly, or at leastwise verie vainely. The words of Hierome are these: ^f The wedding garment are the commandements of the Lord, and the workes which are made vp of the law and the Gospell, and do make the garment of the new man. Why doth he alledge these wordes to exclude faith from being a part of the wedding garment, when as one of the commandements of the Lord, as S. Iohn telleth vs is this, ^g that we beleue in the name of his sonne Iesus Christ; when as ^h this is the worke of God, as our Sauiour saith, that is, a worke that God hath commanded, and wherein hee is pleased, that we beleue in him whom

^a Ferus in Matth.
cap. 22. Primo in- terne per fidem cū peccatis tuis super eratus Christi iu-sticiam, &c. Deinde cūm externe
scharis a'em eius
amulari.

^b Apoc 19. 8.

^{*} τὰ δικαιώ-

ματα τῶν ἀγίων:

^c Rom. 4. 5. 11.

^d Ephes. 5. 27.

^e 1. Pet. 1. 9.

^f Hieron. in Matth.
cap. 22. Iesus
nuptialis praecepta sunt Domini, & opera quae complē-
tur ex lege & E-uangelio, nouum
hominis efficiunt vestimētum.
^g 1. Joh. 3. 23.
^h Joh. 6. 29.

whom he hath sent : when as the workes that are made up of the law and the Gospell, consist not onely in charitie but in faith also? I stand not vpon the rest of the testimonies which he bringeth : for though any do by occasion name charitie for the wedding garment, as men by diuers occasions speake diuersly thereof : yet no man was euer so absurd, as expresly to exclude true faith from beeing one part of it, as M. Bishop doth. And if any doe speake sometimes of a faith without charitie and fruits of good workes, they speake thereof as wee doe, as beeing onely a bastard faith, a false and fained faith, an idle outward receiuing and professing of the faith, or doctrine of faith : not that true faith which the Apostle speaketh of, to which he assigneth our iustification in the sight of God.

The like foolish argument he maketh from the ⁱ foolish virgins: he may well call it the like, because indeede they are all naught. ⁱ They had faith, saith he: true, but they had not true faith; they had not that faith which the Apostle speaketh of, wherein our iustification is affirmed to consist. For of that faith the Protestants say truly, that it cannot bee lost, because God hath made vnto it the promise of eternall life, and therefore Christ praich for it, that it may neuer faile. They had a forme or shew of faith, as they had ^k a forme or shew of godsmesse, but neuer knew the power thereof. His tale of perfection is an idle dreame, as we shall see hereafter, if God will. As for them that apply this text to the profession of virginitic, they do apparent wrong therein, the verie text it selfe giuing to vnderstand, that thereby is described the kingdome of heauen, by which in these parables euerie where is vnderstood the whole state of the outward and militant Church professing to seeke the kingdome of heauen. To take it otherwise is to offer violence to a verie plaine and manifest text. Vnder the name of Virgins all are comprehended, who by profession and promise of faith and baptism, haue vnderaken to be ^l virgins, that is, entire and faithfull vnto Christ. By the lampe is imported that outward profession to men: the oile signifieth true faith and a good conscience inwardly to God. Howsoeuer the lampes of foolish virgins, of idle and emptie professors giue them credite with men, so as that they are not barred from the companie and conuersation of the wise, yet in the sleepe of death they shall goe out, and shall not serue to light them to go to God: then shall they too late seeke and wish for that, the opportunity whereof before they

i Matt. 25. 1.

k 2. Tim. 3. 5.

l 1. Cor. 11. 2.

they carelessly omitted. Then shall they cry, Lord, Lord, as the other did before, but it shall not boot them to cry when the doores shall be shut against them. Thus doth Christ giue the same to vnderstand of hypocrites in generall, which before he had done of hypocritical & false teachers: and what he saith here, he expresth more fully by the other Eūangelist, that when they shall cry, Lord, Lord, open to vs, & Christ shall answer vnto them, I know you not whence you are: then they shall begin to say, We haue eaten & drunk in thy presence, & thou hast taught in our streets. Where we see them pleading that they haue heard Christ preach, and they haue bene partakers of his Sacraments, but they cannot plead for themselues, that they beleued in him: therefore he shall answer them againe: I tell you, I know ye not whence ye are, depart from me ye workers of iniquity.

His fourth argument is of many amongst the chiefe rulers of the Iewes, who beleued in Christ, but yet confessed him not, because of the Pharisees, lest they should bee cast out of the synagogue: for they loued the praise of men, more then the praise of God. Here we see, faith indeed as he saith, but we see no necessity that faith should be vnderstood here to be without charity. Here is weake faith & weak loue, too much yet entangled & tied in the nets of carnall & earthly respects, but he hath no ground to affirme that there is no loue. Yes, faith he, for charity preferreth the glory & seruice of God before all things in the world, whereas these men were afraid to confesse Christ. Indeede perfect charity casteth out all feare, and perfect faith breedeth perfect charitie: but there is a beginning of true faith & loue, which beeing yet little & weake, and hauing not yet ouermastered all worldly regards, is for a time timorous and fearefull to confesse Christ, yet groweth to strength by little and little, till it resolue to cleaue vnto him with losse of all other things. Such was the faith of Nicodemus & Ioseph of Arimathea, who were two of these chiefe rulers, the one coming to Iesus by night, the other a disciple also, but secretly for feare of the Iewes, who yet afterwards beeing stirred vp with those things which they beheld & saw in the death of Christ, more boldly shewed themselues in his behalfe, and in the end forsooke all for the following of his seruice. In the meane time they shewed loue also to Christ, though weakly, the one in speaking in his behalfe, the other in withholding his consent from the counsell and deed that was acted against Christ; both in yeelding themselues

m Luk. 13. 25.

n Ioh. 12. 42.

o 1 Ioh. 4. 18.

p Ioh. 3. 2.
q Cap. 19. 38.r Cap. 7. 50. 51. s Luk. 23. 51.

to be his disciples, and to be instructed by him. Such was the faith and loue of the Apostles themselves, who were euery while affrighted, and in his greatest distresse ¹all forsooke him and fled. But he that ¹Mat. 26. 56. ²breaketh not the braised reed, nor quençeth the smoaking flaxe, ²Cap. 12. 0. will he bring forth iudgment into victorie, whete soeuer he seth in true faith, and vnfained loue, though yet weake and feeble, watereth and cherissheth, and vnderseueth the same, that it may grow to strength.

³Th: Euangelist (saith S. Austin) noteth and reprocueh some, of whom ³Aug. in Ioan. tract. 53. Vide e quomadmodum Euange lista notauerit & improbauerit quosdam, quos tamen in eum credidisse dixit, qui in hoc ingressu fides si proficerent amorem quoque humane glorie proficendo superarent.

notwithstanding he saith, that they did beleue in Christ, who if they did grow forward in this beginning of faith, wold by growing forward overcome the loue of humane glory, which the Apostle had overcome, who saith God for bid, that I should reioyce but in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ. This growth there is wheresoeuer there is true and vnfained faith, and because it cannot grow without loue, it groweth to the ouercoming of all contrarie loue, til it cleaue wholly vnto God. Thus the Gospel expresly teacheth concerning some of these chiefe rulers, and we cannot doubt, but that the like befell in the rest of them that did truly beleue in Christ. They beleued, but their faith was weake, and their loue was according to their faith: til increase of faith brought further strength of loue, and they learned by faith & loue to prefeire the seruice of Christ before all the glory of this world. Albeit, it is not to be omitted, that S. Iohn sometime following the Hebrew phrase, vseth the terme of beleueing in Christ abusiuely, applying it to them who by the miracles of Christ, and his manifest declaration of the truth, were conuicted in conscience to acknowledge him to be of God, but yet did not at all in their hearts submit themselves vnto him. Thus he saith in another place; that y many beleued in the name of Christ when they saw his miracles which he did, to whom yet he did not commit himselfe because he knew what was in them. Thus might it be said of some of those chiefe rulers, that they beleued in Christ, that is, were perswaded in their minds that he spake the truth, but yet preferring their credit & reputation with men, gaue no regard vnto it. But that there is another manner of beleueing in Christ, which is that wherof we speake, not incident to them who continue wholly possessed with such respects, Christ himselfe sheweth, saying: ²Ioh. 5. 44. How can ye beleue which receive honor one of another, & seek not the honor that cometh of God alone? They might therefore in some meaning be said to beleue in Christ, when yet yet they had no true faith, which as appeareth by these words, cannot be separated from loue, and seeking of the honor that cometh of God alone: which wheresoeuer it is begun, beginneth to looke vnto God, and winding by degrees out of all other regards, yeeldeth it selfe intirely to follow him. Therefore the distinctiō of faith being obserued, which the Scripture it selfe enforceth vpon vs, M. Bishop hath yet alledged nothing to proue, that true faith and charitie may be diuided, or that any man may be said truly to beleue in whom there is not also loue to righteousnesse and good works.

SI. W. BISHOP.

Cap. 2.

5 This place of S. Iames, (What shall it profit my brethren, if any man say that he hath faith, but hath not works: what shall his faith be able to saue?) supposeth very plainly, that a man may haue faith without good workes, that is, without charitie, but that it shall auaille him nothing: Calvin saith, that the Apostle speaketh of a shadow of faith which is a bare knowledge of the articles of our Creed, but not a justifying faith. Without doubt he was little acquainted with that kind of faith by which Protestants be justified, but he directly speaks of such a faith, as Abraham was justified by, saying, That that faith did worke with his works, & was made perfect by the works. Was this but a shadow of faith? But they reply, that this faith is likened vnto the faith of the Diuel, and therefore cannot be a justifying faith: that followeth not: for an excellent good thing, may be like vnto a bad in some things, as Diuels in nature are not onely like, but the very same: as Angels be: euen so a full Christian faith may be well likened vnto a Diuels faith, when it is naked and voyd of good workes, in two points: first, in both there is a perfect knowledge of all things revealed: secondly, this knowledge shall not stead them any whit, but only serue vnto their greater condemnation, because that knowing the wil of their master, they did it not. And in this respect S. Iames compareth them together: now there are many points wherein these faiths do differ, but this one is principal: that Christians out of a godly and deuout affection, do willingly submit their vnderstanding vnto the rules of faith, beleeuing things aboue human reason, yea such as seeme sometimes contrary to it. But the diuel against his will, beleeueth all that God hath revealed, because by his naturall capacitie he knowes that God cannot teach, nor testifie, any vntruth. Againe that faith may be without charitie, is proued out of these words of the same

same 2. chapter. Euen as the body without the spirit is dead, so also faith without works is dead. Hence thus I argue: albeit the body be dead without the soul, yet it is a true natural body in it selfe euen so faith is perfect in the kind of faith, although without charity it auail not to life euerlasting. Lastly, in true reason it is manifest, that faith may be without charity, for they haue seuerall seates in the soule, one being in the wil, and the other in the understanding: they haue distinct objects, faith respecting the truth of God, and charity the goodnesse of God. Neither doth faith necessarily suppose charity, as charity doth faith, for we cannot loue him of whom we neuer heard. Neither yet doth charity naturally flow out of faith, but by due consideration of the goodnesse of God, and of his benefits and loue towards vs, into which good and deuout considerations few men do enter, in comparison of them who are led into the broad way of iniquity through their inordinate passions. This according to the truth: and yet more different in the Protestants opinion: for faith layes hold on Christs righteousnes, & receiues that in: but charity can receiue P 2g. 85. nothing in, as M. Perkins witnesseth, but gues it selfe forth in all duties of the 1. and 2. Table. Now sir, if they could not apply vnto themselves Christs righteousnes without fulfilling all duties of the 1. and 2. Table, they should neuer apply it to them: for they hold it impossible to fulfill all those duties: so that this necessary linking of charity with faith, maketh their saluation not only very euill assured: but altogether impossible: for charity is the fulnesse of the law, which they hold impossib'e, and then if Rom. 12. the assurance of their saluation, must needs be ioyned with such an impossibility, they may assure themselves, that by that faith they can neuer come to saluation.

R. ABBOT.

That faith may be without charity and good workes, it is true, and we doubt not thereof, according to the meaning of faith of which S. James speaketh, which Caluin very iustly and rightly faith, is but a shadow of faith. For it plainely appeareth by the text, that hee speaketh of faith, as onely professed before men, as before hath bin alledged. Therefore he compareth it ^a to the good words of him, a Iam. 2. 16. that wisheth wel to the poore man, but doth nothing at all for him. To this tendeth his questiō, ^b What auailleth it though a man say that b Ver. 14. he hath faith? and this other demand, ^c shew me thy faith? The vtter- c Ver. 18. most that he extendeth it to by instance, is a meer historicall faith: ^a Thou beleeuest that there is one God. His purpose is to shew, that d Ver. 19: faith

faith if it be truly professed hath a root within, from whence spring by obedience the fruits of all good workes, and if it giue not forth it selfe by workes, it is no true faith. Whereas M. Bishop saith, that S. Iames speaketh directly of such a faith as Abraham was iustified by, he saith very vntuly and absurdly: for S. Iames bringeth the example of the true, and liuely, and workfull faith of Abraham, as opposite to that idle and dead faith, concerning which hee propounded that question of faith and workes. Yea of Abrahams faith hee sheweth that it was said, ^e Abraham beleeued God and it was counted vnto him for righteousness, which was neuer said of any man for saying that he had faith, for beleeuing that there is one God, for that faith that consisteth onely in profession before men. Now the faith of Abraham which ^f wrought with his workes, and was made perfect by his workes, ^g that is, saith Beda, was proued by the performance of workes to be perfect in his heart, this faith of Abraham; I say, is it whereby the Protestants hope to be iustified in the sight of God, as Abraham was, because ^h it was not written for him onely, that it was imputed to him for righteousness but also for vs, to whom it shall be imputed, beleuing in him that raised up Iesus our Lord from the dead. We alledge further, that the faith whereof S. Iames speaketh, is likened to the faith of diuels, and therefore that it cannot be the same with that which the Scripture nameth for a iustifying faith. M. Bishop answereth, that that followeth not, and for auouching thereof, maketh Abrahams faith not onely the same with the faith of hypocrites & false Christians, but also with the faith of diuels. He would qualifie the matter in shew, but in truth maketh no difference. An excellent good thing may be like vnto a bad in some things, saith he. True, but yet the bad cannot be like the good in that wherein standeth the goodnesse and excellency of the good. Now hee maketh the Hypocrites faith, if we consider the very act of faith, the same that Abrahams faith was, which was reputed vnto him for righteousness, and for which the Scripture setteth him forth as an excellent patterne of faith to be followed of all beleeuers. But to auoide the odiousnesse hereof, he sophisticateth the matter, and so much as in him lieth, blindeth his Reader. They are like (saith he) in two points: where in the first point, he comprehendeth the fulnes and perfection of that which he calleth Catholike and Christian faith, consisting (as here absurdly he saith) in the perfect knowledge of all things reuealed, as if

e Ver. 23.

f ver. 22.

g Beda. in Epist.
Iac cap. 2.

h Rom. 4. 23.

every one that hath their Catholike faith, haue the perfect knowledge of all things reuealed, but as more plainly he hath deliuered his mind before in beleening all to be true that God hath reuealed. No more is there in Abrahams faith, if we keep within the compasse of the nature of faith, & no lesse in the diuell, & the same in euery Catholike Christian, and so the diuell is become a Catholike whether he wil or not. Come on M. Bishop, rid vs of this doubt, for we cannot find by you, but that the diuell by Catholike faith is become a Catholike. He goeth on: Secondly this knowledge shal not steede them any wbst. But that is nothing to the very nature of faith, whether it steede or not steede. The essence & act of faith whether it steede or not steede, is no more but this, to beleene generally all to be true, which God hath reuealed, and therefore whether with good works or without, the faith of the Catholike Christian in the act of faith, is no other but the diuels faith. Now albeit he say, that these faiths differ in many points, yet of those many he nameth but onely one, and that nothing to the purpose. For if he will shew a difference of faith betwixt Christians and diuels, he must take it from faith it selfe, and not from those things which to the nature of faith are meere accidentall. Christians, saith he, out of a godly and deuout affection, do willingly submit their vnderstanding to the rules of faith. But this is not to make a difference, but to adde charity vnto faith. This godly and deuout affection, and willing submission, is an act of charity, and not of faith: an act of the wil and affection wherein charity is seated, not of the vnderstanding, wherein he saith is the seat of faith. And in this affection and submission, faith it selfe still is no more then it was before, to beleue all to be true that God hath reuealed. The diuel then still pleadeth for himselfe, that if the Catholike faith which M. Bishop hath described, do make a Catholike, there is no reason to except against him for being a Catholike, because he beleueth all to bee true which God hath reuealed. Or if he wil say that true Christian faith doth alwaies actually & necessarily imply this godly & deuout affection and willing submission of the vnderstanding to the rules of faith, then because this cannot be without charity, let him grant the question, let vs traue!! no further about this point, but let him say as wee say, that the true Christiã faith wherby it is said we are iustified, cã neuer be separate frõ charity & good works. Thus he casteth himself into the knoweth not what Labyrinths & mazes, & cannot tel how to get out. How much much better were it for him to acknowledge the simple and plaine truth of God, then to intricate himselfe in these perplexities, wherein he can find no place to stand secure. But yet out of the words of S. James, As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead, hee will further proue, that faith may be without charitie, and yet perfect in the kind of faith. Now this is it that hath bin said, that in the kind of faith, considering faith entirely in it selfe, he maketh Abrahams faith and the diuels faith to be all one. As touching the words of S. James sufficient hath bene said before. If faith bee considered as outwardly professed to men, as he intendeth it, good workes are the life of faith. If it be considered as it is inward in the heart to God, good works cannot be the life thereof, because that which is without cannot giue life to that that is within. Whereas he turneth workes into charity, he playeth the Sophister: for it is one thing to talke of charity, another thing to talke of workes; the one being in habite, the other in act; the one inward, the other outward; the one the tree, the other the fruit; the one the spring, the other the streame. But letting this passe as handled before, let vs see how he argueth from the place of James: Albeit the body bee dead without the soule, yet is it a true naturall body in it selfe. But that is not true, for a true naturall body is that onely, which hath the true members and parts of a naturall body, which a dead bodie hath not. ^k When the body is dead, saith Aristotle, there shall bee neither foose nor hand, but onely by semblance of name, as a man tearmeth a hand of stone; for in like sort is a dead hand: for all parts of the body are defined by their office and faculty. Therefore when they lye dead they are not the same, but retaine onely the shew and shadow of the name. The argument therefore must be turned against himselfe, that as the dead body is not a true naturall body, but onely by equiuocation is so called: euen so a dead faith, is no true faith, but onely by equiuocation for some semblance to men it carrieth the shew and shadow of the name of faith. Yet hee will not so giue ouer, but as hauing set the stocke vpon it, hee will winne it in this period, or else he will loose all. Indeede hee is like a sheepe tangled in the briars, the more he strugleth and striueth, the faster hee tyeth himselfe. He saith, that faith & charity haue seuerall seates in the soul, faith in the understanding, and charity in the will. But that is not so: for as hath bene before said, true and vnfaigned faith which the ^k Arist. Polit.

lib. 1. cap. 1.

Scripture commendeth, for iustification is a mixt action of the vnderstanding and will. Yea the Apostle expressly placeth faith in the heart, which is the seat of the affections. With the heart (saith hee) ^{1 Rom. 10. 10.} man beleueth vnto righteousnesse: If thou confesse with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, and beleue in thy heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt bee saved. No maruell that M. Bishop cannot tell what true faith is, who knoweth no other faith but onely a faith of the head, consisting in speculatiue fancies and imaginatiōs of the braines, and descending no lower then the tongue: whereas the Apostle speaketh of a faith of the heart, a feeling faith, which by feeling gathereth to it the affection and will; which is not onely an act of knowledge and vnderstanding, as M. Bishop dreameth, but implieth an affecting, desiring, embracing, seeking of that which it beleueth, a ioying and reuiewing of it selfe therein. So I alledged before out of Oecumenius, that the faith whereof Saint Paul speaketh is not a bare assent, as is the faith of diuels and Ant Bishops Catholike faith, but but some further consequence arising from the affection. Againe they haue distinct objects, saith he, faith respecting the truth of God, and charity the goodnesse of God. Indeede the truth of God is the object of our faith; but what is the matter of that truth, but the promise of God concerning his goodnesse towards vs? I should vterly haue fainted (saith Dauid) but that I beleue verily to see the goodnesse of the Lord in the land of the liuing. The faith (saith Ferus) which the Scripture cōmendeth, is nothing els but to trust to the free mercie of God. So then the goodnes and mercy of God is properly and truly the object of our faith. Yea and how should the goodnesse of God be the object of our charitie; but by being first the object of our faith? For therefore do we loue the goodnesse of God, or loue of God for his goodnesse towards vs, because first we beleue the same, neither can wee so loue but by beleuing. For charity consisting simply in affection, apprehendeth nothing in God of it selfe, but receiueth all from faith, which is it as Chrysostome noteth, whereby we conceiue a due and conuenient opinion concerning God. Loue is not a reciprocall action; the passage thereof is meerey from him that loveth to the thing that is loved. Thus therefore it is in our loue to God, but what we conceiue backe againe of him towards vs, it is by faith and not by loue. Yea M. Bishop himselfe verifieth this, in that hee saith, We cannot

m Oecumenius Jac. cap 2. Consecutionem ex affectu procedentē.

n Psal. 27. 13.

o Ferus in Mar. ca. 8. Fides quam Scriptura commendat nihil aliud est quam fidei gratia de misericordia.

p Chryso. in Rom. hinc. 8. Conuenientem deo opinionem accipit.

3 Eph: 3. 17.

loue him of whom wee neuer heard. For what is all our hearing, but onely by beleeuing that which we heare? First therefore wee heare of Gods goodnesse, his mercy, his truth, &c. and by beleeuing that which we heare, our affections are drawne vnto him. First therfore all these are the objects of our faith, and consequently become the objects of our loue. His next difference is a meere begging of the question. We say, that faith though it do not presuppose charity as a thing precedent, yet alwaies supposeth and inferreth it as an immediate and necessary consequent. For faith receiueth Christ to dwell in our hearts, who commeth not but accompanied with grace and with the fruits of the spirit, which alwaies grow and increase according to the increase and growth of faith. Great faith hath feruent loue, weaker faith hath weaker loue, but alwaies hath a measure of loue answerable to it selfe. Now by this that hath bene said it appeareth how vnruly M. Bishop saith for his last difference, that charity doth not naturally flow out of faith, whereas indeed common sense in diuinity doth instruct him, that the original therof is from thence and onely from thence. For if we cannot loue God but by hearing & beleeuing him to be that that he is, then it is faith which setting God before vs such a one as he is, wise, mighty, iust, mercif-ful, louing and gracious vnto vs, enamoreth our hearts, and breededeth in vs affections correspondent to his grace, neither is there any spark of loue but what ariseth from this ground. Yea M. Bishop himselfe confesseth so much, but that his wits are so besotted with his minion of Rome, that he knoweth not what hee saith. Charitie (saith he) doth not naturally flow out of faith, but by due consideration of the goodnes of God, and of his benefits and loue towards vs. Which is as much as if he should say, it doth not naturally flow out of faith, but doth naturally flow out of faith. For whence is this consideration of Gods goodnes, &c. but from faith? Do we consider these things any otherwise but as by faith we first apprehend and beleue the same?
 It is faith (as hath bene said) which affecteth and seasoneth the hart with the sweet tast and feeling of those considerations, and thereby allureth and draweth vs to loue him of whom we haue receiued so great loue. And for want of faith it is that it cometh to passe which
M. Bishop to make vp his sentence impertinently complaineth of, that few men enter into these good and deuout considerations;
 yea he and his by oppugning and destroying true faith, do helpe to draw men backe from considering of these things. Now all that hitherto he hath said, hetelleth vs is according to the truth, whereas indeede there is not a word true, as hath appeared : and if it had beene true, yet he had gained nothing thereby, because it followeth not, that those things which are diuided in facultie and vse, are therefore deuided in the subiect, or may be the one without the company of the other, as by infinite examples may be seene. But hee maketh faith and charity more different yet in the Protestants opinion. And how ? For faith (saith hee) layeth hold of Christs righteousnes, and receiues that in ; but charity receiveth nothing in, but giueth it selfe forth in all duties of the first and second table. But what of this? Will hee conclude thus, There is a difference betwixt faith and charity, therefore faith may be without charity? No forsooth : but vnlesse faith may be without charitie, the Protestants saluation is vnpossible. And why so? Marrie charity is the fulnesse of the law, and the Protestants hold it vnpossible to fulfill the law, therefore they can haue no charity ; and therefore by their owne doctrine they can haue no faith, because without charity there is no faith. What a horrible disputer M. Bishop is? how deepe a reach hath hee into hell, that hee can fetch from thence these profound conclusions against the Protestants? The Protestants answer to his ridiculous and childish collections, is easie and ready. True and liuely faith, by the consideration of the goodnesse and mercy of God towards vs in Iesus Christ, enkindleth in our hearts true charity and loue towards God, and towards our brethren and neighbours for Gods sake. The ayne and marke of which charity, is to giue forth it selfe in all duties of the first and second table. But charity so long as here wee liue is vnperfect in all men, and but perfectly attaineth to that that it aymeth at. Some attaine in some good sort to the performance of some duties, others to the performance of some other duties, but none attaineth to all, as Hierome well noteth against the Pelagian heretickes : yea and in those that wee do attaine vnto, there is also some weakenesse and default, some blot and staine, as hath bene shewed by the corruption of sinne that banqueth so fast on, and presseth vs downe whilest wee are labouring and striuing to ascend vppward vnto God. Thus therefore faith and charity go together, weake faith, and charity vn-

*Hieron. ad. i. Pelag.
lib. 1. Nullus in suo corporeculo
cunctas potest ha-
bere virtutes, &c.
(Heb. 12. 11.)*

Rom. 7. 19.

perfect, running in the way, but oftentimes through frailtie stumbling and failing; striving to the keeping of all Gods commandments, but yet forced to say with the Apostle, The good that I would, I do not, but the euill that I would not that I do: I delight in the law of God as touching the inner man, but I see another law in my members rebelling against the law of my mind, and leading me captiue to the law of sinne. But faith is our comfort, that God for Christs sake, and for his righteousnes sake which he hath wrought for our redemption, accepteth vs as perfectly righteous in him, that he forgiveth all our sins winketh at all our imperfections, and will heale all our wounds and infirmities, that what is now impossible through the weaknes of the flesh, may be made expedite and ready vnto vs, when there shall be no longer the flesh lusting against the spirit, but sin & death and all enemies shall be destroyed, and God shall be all in all. Thus the linking of faith and charity maketh no impossibility of our saluation, but it is the spirit of error that hath dazeled M. Bishops eyes, that he cannot discern how one truth agreeth and standeth with another.

1. Cor. 15. 28.

52 W. BISHOP.

Lib. 15. de Trin.
ca. 17. con. Cresc.
lib. 1. cap. 29.

Let vs annex vnto these plain authorities of holy Scripture, one euident testimony of antiquity: that most incorrupt iudge S. Augustine saith flatly, that faith may wel be without charity, but it can not profite vs without charity. And, That one God is worshipped sometimes out of the Church, but that unskilfully, yet is it he. Also that one faith is had without charitie, and that also out of the Church neither therefore is not faith. For there is one God, one Faith, one Baptisme, and one immaculate Catholike Church: in which God is not serued onely, but in which onely he is truly serued: neither in which alone faith is kept, but in which onely faith is kept with charity. So that faith, and that only true faith, of which the Apostle speaketh, One God, one faith, may be, and is in many without charitie.

Ephes. 4.

R. ABBOT.

2 Pet. 2.

The former of these two places which hee citeth out of An. sin, is answered ^a before. The faith of which he speaketh, is not the true iustifying faith, but onely the outward profession of the doctrine doctrin of faith. That is plaine by the second, One faith is had without charitie, euen without the Church, that is, one doctrine of faith: euen as the Apostle meaneth, when he saith, One faith, one baptisme, &c. Thus Saint Austin declareth it, when he calleth it the faith whereby it is beleued that Christ is the Sonne of the liuing God: the faith whereby we confesse Christ to be the Sonne of the liuing God: and in other meaning he could not say there is but one faith, because of the faith of particular consciences the Scripture saith, that euery man shall liue by his owne faith. That that he maketh the matter of faith, the diuels acknowledge and confesse, who yet cannot truly say, I beleue in God, I beleue in Iesus Christ, which is the voice and profession of a true iustifying faith, and cannot be separated from hope and charitie, as hath bene before made manifest by the acknowledgment of Austin himselfe: yea and the doctrine of faith, though in generall termes it may be sometimes found amongst heretikes, yet according to the substance and true meaning thereof, it is not to be found with them, as the same Saint Austin acknowledgeth, saying, If diligently those things be considered which belong to Christ, Christ is found, as touching his name, amongst all sorts of heretikes, who will needs be called Christians, but indeed he is not with them. So as then there may be the true faith of Christ in generall words, where the true meaning of the faith of Christ is denied, and there may be the true meaning of the faith of Christ in the profession of the mouth, when the same faith is not truly and effectually imprinted in the heart. And in this sort there may be indeed faith without charitie, but not the iustifying faith, as hath bin often said. If there be that faith concerning which it is said of Abraham, He beleued the Lord, and it was imputed to him for righteousness: there followeth alwayes charitie as a necessary and infallible consequent and companion thereof.

August. conr. Crefcom. lib. 1 cap. 29.

e Ibid. cap. 28. Fides qua creditur Christum esse filium dei uisus. Et cap. 29. Fides qua confitemur Christum esse filium Dei uisus. d Habac. 2. 4.

e August. Enchirid. cap. 5. Si diligenter quæ ad Christum pertinent cogitentur, nominentur inueniuntur Christus apud quoslibet hereticos, qui se Christianos uocari uolunt, re uerò ipsa non est apud eos.

f Gen. 15. 6.

53. W. BISHOP.

The Protestants bold assertions, that they cannot be parted, are great, but their proofes very slender, and scarce worth the disprouing.

The first, He that hath not care of his owne, hath denied his faith: therefore faith includeth that good worke of prouiding for our owne.

i. Tim. 5.

Answer. That faith there seemes to signifie, not that faith whereby we beleue all things reuealed, or the Protestants the certaintie of their salvation: but for fidelitie, and faithfull performance of that which we haue promised in baptisme, which is to keepe all Gods commandements: one of the which, is to provide for our children, and for them that we haue charge of: so that he who hath no such care ouer his owne charge, hath denied his faith, that is, violated his promise in Baptisme. There is also another ordinary answer, supposing faith to be taken there for the Christian beleefe, to wit, that one may deny his faith two wayes: either in flat denying any article of faith, or by doing some thing that is contrarie to the doctrine of our faith. Now he that hath no care of his owne, doth not deny any article of his faith, but committeth a fact contrary to the doctrine of his faith: so that not faith, but the doctrine of faith, or our promise in Baptisme, includeth good workes.

Ioh. 6.

2 There are among you that beleue not; for he knew who beleued, and who was to betray him: Opposing treason to faith, as if he had said, faith containeth in it selfe fidelitie. This argument is farre fetched and little worth. For albeit faith hath not fidelitie and loue alwaies necessarily ioyned with it, yet falling from faith, may well draw after it hatred and treason, yea ordinarily wickednesse goeth before falling from the faith, and is the cause of it: which was Iudas case, whom our Saniour there taxed, for he blinded with conetonsnesse, did not beleue Christs doctrine of the blessed sacrament, and by incredulitie opened the diuell a high way to his heart, to negotiate treason in it.

rIoh. 1.

3 The obiection that: Who faith he knowes God, and doth not keepe his commandements, is alyer.

Math. 7. & 25.
Psal. 1.
Job. 14.

Answer. He is then a lier in graine, who professing the onely true knowledge of God, yet blusheth not to say, that it is impossible to keepe his commandements: but to the obiection, knowing God in that place, is taken for louing of God, as: I know ye not: that is, I loue you not. Our Lord knowes the way of the iust, that is, approues it, loues it: so he that knowes God, keepes his commandements, as Christ himselfe testifieth: If anie loue me, he will keepe my word. And he that loueth me not, will not keepe my words.

Lastly, they say with S. Paul: That the iust man liueth by faith. But if faith giue life, then it cannot be without charitie.

Answer. That faith in a iust man is not without hope and charity, by al which consoyned he liueth, & not by faith alone. But faith is in a sinful
and

and vniust man, without charity: who holding fast his former beleefe, doth in transgressing Gods commandements, breake the bands of charity. And so it remaineth most certaine, that faith may be and too too often is without the sacred society of charity.

R. ABBOT.

The Protestants asseuerations are indeed very bold, but not vpon slender proofes. Their proofes are stronger then that any such silly disputers as M. Bishop is, shall be able to disproue them. As for his proofes to the contrarie, thou hast seene gentle Reader, how miserable, and poore, and beggerly they bee. See now what choice he maketh of our arguments, culling out those that he was best able to deale with, and what slender shifts he maketh to auoid them. ^{a 1. Tim. 5. 8.} He that provideth not for his owne, saith S. Paul, and namely for them of his household, hee denieth the faith, and is worse then an insidell. It must follow therefore, that there can bee no faith where this worke of charity is wilfully cast off. M. Bishop telleth vs, that by faith is here meant either fidelitie as touching the performance of that we haue promised in baptisme, or else the doctrine of faith. But let him expound it as he list, of either of them it shall yeeld an illation & consequence of that which we affirme. For seeing the introduction of iustifying faith is ^{b Mar. 1. 15.} repentance from dead workes, iustifying faith must alwaies implie a conscience and care of conforming a mans selfe to the doctrine of the Gospell, and to the promise and vowe that he hath made in baptisme of obedience vnto God, and therefore where dead works still raigne, it cannot be said that iustifying faith hath there taken any place. Therefore he that shaketh off the yoke of the doctrine of the Gospell, and by his conuersation disclaimeth the promise that he made in baptisme, plainly sheweth that howsoeuer hee professe the faith, yet that hee hath no true faith abiding in him. And this the Apostle teacheth of him who is so inhumane and barbarous, as that the commandement of God cannot moue him to prouide for them, the care of whom euen infidels by instinct of nature doe know and conceiue to belong vnto them. But wee would gladly vnderstand how M. Bishop diuideth the articles of faith from the doctrine of faith. For what do the articles of faith containe but onely the doctrine of faith? That then contrary to the doctrine of faith, must needs also be contrary to the articles of faith. He therefore that by his deeds denieth the doctrine of faith, denieth in effect also the articles of his faith, howsoever with his tongue outwardly to men hee make shew to confesse the same. M. Bishops answer then taketh not away the strength of this argument, but rather addeth further force and strength vnto it. But it is plaine by the very words, that the Apostle vnderstandeth faith as it is opposed to infidelity, affirming that such, though they be be-leeuers in name, as Hierome speaketh, yet indeed are not beleeuers. Therefore Chrysostome expounding the wordes by that saying of the same Apostle, ^d They professe that they know God, but by their deedes they denie him, inferreth, ^e How doth hee beleene that hath denied God? The argument therefore is firme and sure, that howsoever there may be an outward profession of faith, yet indeed there is no faith wheresoever there wanteth a correspondence of good workes.

In the second place, it is strange to see how M. Bishop making choice of his aduersaries weapons, yet is foiled in his owne choice. The argument he saith is little worth: but sure I am, howsoever little worth it be, it is more worth then his answer. He setteth downe the words of S. Iohn according to his vulgar Latin, but according to the true text they are thus: ^f But there are some of you that beleene not; for Iesus knew from the beginning which they were that beleued not, and who should betray him. Where when the Evangelist setting downe Christs words, There are some of you which beleene not, inferreth as a reason of his speech, for hee knew who should betray him, as if it had bene iointly, There are some of you which beleene not, for one of you shall betray me; doth he not plainly demonstrate that the betraying of him could not stand with beleeuing, that he could not be a beleuer that was to be the traitor? For what reason were it to say he beleued not, for he was to betray him, if he might beleue and yet betray him? Whereas M. Bishop saith, that faith hath not alwaies fidelity & love ioined with it, he beggeth the questiō; but that which hee addeth of falling away from the faith, as if Indas hauing before beleued, were now relinquishing his faith, beside that it is the begging of another point in question also, it is excluded by the Evangelist, in that he noted that Iesus knew from the beginning that Indas beleued not. Which wordes, from the beginning, M. Bishop knowing e Hieron. in 1.

Tim. cap. 5. Fidei
nomen.

d Tit. 1. 16.
e Chrysost. in 1.
Tim. hom. 14.
Quomodo huius-
m. di. credit quis Deum abnegauit?

f Ioh. 6. 64.

knowing that in the true reading of the text, noted also in the margin of his vulgar Latin, they wold be prejudiciall to him, thought it a point of wisdom to conceale. But to speake of that faith which Indas had, hee was not yet falling away from it: hee was yet an Apostle, and a preacher of the faith, and wee see that others departing from Christ, hee still continued with him, and gaue no outward token of vnbeleefe, and without doubt little thought now of doing that which afterwards hee did, which the Euangelist expressly noteth, that the diuell did afterwards put into his heart. But yet there is a truth of faith, concerning which our Sauour saith, intending his speech specially of him, There are some of you which beleue not, which is not incident to any child of perdition, because it is Gods gift, as our Sauour at large in that chapter expresseth, to them that come vnto him by the same gift, whom beeing come, hee neuer casteth away againe, and therefore they neuer lose that which they haue receiued.

Thirdly, he citeth for vs the words of Saint Iohn, He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandements, is a lier, and the truth is not in him. From which place wee argue, that because faith alwaies implicth knowledge of that wee beleue, so as that where there is no knowledge, there is no faith, nor can be, it must needs follow, that sith there is no knowledge of God where there is no keeping of the commandements, therefore where there is no keeping of the commandements, there is no faith. Now by knowledge we vnderstand a true acknowledgement of that which wee beleue, which is not a matter of bare speculation by verball apprehension, such as whereby blind men talk of colours, & homedwellers discourse of forrein countries where they neuer came, but an experimentall and approuing knowledge, an effectuall and telling knowledge, to which, because it is the knowledge of faith, our Sauior attributeth eternall life, when he saith, This is life eternall, so know thee the onely true God, and Iesus Christ whom thou hast sent: by which the Apostle saith, that the new man is renewed according to the image of him that created him. In which latter place wee are to obserue, that it is one thing to which we are renewed, and another thing, by which. The thing whereto we are renewed, is the image of God, which consisteth in charity: the thing wherby we are renewed is knowledge. Thus the Apostle S. Peter teacheth vs, that grace &

g Ioh. 13. 1.

h Ioh. 6. 64. 65.
i Vcr. 37.

k 1. Ioh. 2. 4

l Thom. Aquin.
2^a art. 2. ad 2.
Duplex est cognitio
diuine bonitati
vel voluntatis, vna quidem speculatiua, &c. Alia est affectiua siue experimentalis
diuini quae experitur
in seipso gustu
diuinae dulcedinis & complacentiae diuinae voluntatis.
&c.

* Ioh. 17. 3.
in Col. 3. 10.
n 2. Pet. 1. 2. 3.

peace is multiplied vnto vs by the knowledge of God, & of Iesus Christ our Lord; that the diuine power giueth vs all things pertaining to life and godlinesse, through the knowledge of him that hath called vs. Seeing then that knowledge heere is the thing whereby charity and all things pertaining to godlinesse are ministred vnto vs, it shall be absurd to expound knowledge to bee charity it selfe, albeit true it is that of this knowledge of God, euen as of faith, there ensueth alwaies charity and loue. This true and liuely and effectuall knowledge it is of which Saint Iohn here speaketh, giuing to vnderstand that barren and idle and fruitlesse knowledge is indeed no knowledge, and that howsoeuer a man seeme able to say much, yet that hee talketh but as by heresay, not knowing what hee saith, if his knowledge be not such as season his heart to the loue and keeping of the commandements of God. Because then true faith cannot be without this true knowledge, and this true knowledge cannot be where there is not the keeping of Gods commandements, it must follow, as I said before, that there is no faith where there is no keeping of the commandements of God. Now although M. Bishop alledge a place or two, where there is a necessity of expounding Gods knowledge towards vs in other sort then the word seemeth to import, yet hee bringeth none to import any necessity of making the same construction of our knowledge towards God. Let it bee granted him that Gods knowledge may import his loue, yet I suppose he cannot shew vs any where, that to know God, is to bee expounded simply to loue God. As for the liar, let him keepe it to himselfe, because hee best deserueth it: hee hath taken paines for it, and no reason that any man should bereaue him of his right. We professe the knowledge of God, and we professe and teach the keeping of Gods commandements, although wee also teach, that by reason of our corruption and weaknesse it is vnpossible for vs so long as wee liue heere, to keepe them perfectly and in such sort as thereby to be iustified in the sight of God. If M. Bishop will say that he keepeth them, I am sure that he is a liar, and as Hierome did tie the Pelagian heretike, so do I put him^o to bring in example of any other that hath so done.

The last place he draweth in backwards and by force, there being no man of vs that alledgeth it to the purpose here in hand. He maketh his choice, as we see, to serue his own turne. Because he had no great skill to answer, he thought it wisdome to take heed what he did obiect. But yet out of that sentence truly alledged, we may take somewhat to this point. The words are, ^{p Gal. 3. 12.} The iust shall liue by faith. According to these words, true faith is said alwaies to imply and containe eternall life. Our Sauior Christ speaketh as of a thing presently had: ^{q Ioh. 3. 36.} He that beleueth, hath eternall life; he is passed ^{r Cap. 5. 24.} from death to life. But without charitie there can be no state of eternall life, because ^{s 1. Ioh. 3. 14.} he that loueth not, abideth in death. If then wheresoeuer there be true faith, there be eternall life, and without charitie there can be no eternall life, it must necessarily follow, that wheresoeuer there is true faith, there is also charitie, and loue bringing forth the fruites of good workes, and seeking to winne others by example of iust and holy life. M. Bishops answer we see giueth checke to the holy Ghost. The holy Ghost saith, The iust shall liue by faith. Not so, saith M. Bishop: he liueth by faith, hope and charitie, and not by faith alone. Further I trouble not my selfe with his idle words, which containe nothing but a begging of the matter in question, and are applied onely to an argument of his owne deuce.

CHAPTER 5.

OF MERITS.

I. W. BISHOP.

Obserue that three things are necessary to make a worke meritorious: First, that the worker be the adopted sonne of God, and in the state of grace. Secödly, that the work proceed from grace, and be referred to the honour of God. The third, is the promise of God through Christ to reward the worke. And because our aduersaries, either ignorantly or of malice do slander this our doctrine, in saying vntruly that we trust not in Christs merits, nor need not Gods mercy for our saluation, but wil purchase it by our owne works: I wil here set downe what the Councill of Trent doth teach concerning Merits: Life euerlasting is to be proposed to them that work wel, and hope wel to the end; both as grace, of mercie promised to the sonnes of God through Christs Iesus, and as a reward by the promise of the same God to be

p. 292. in
p. 302. in

Seff. 4. cap. vlt.

be faithfull rendred vnto their workes and merits. So that we hold eternall life to be both a grace, as well in respect of Gods free promise through Christ, as also for that the first grace (out of which they issue) was freely bestowed vpon vs. And that also it is a reward in iustice, due partly by the promise of God, and in part for the dignitie of good workes vnto the worker, if he perseuere and hold on vnto the end of his life, or by true repentance rise to the same estate againe. In infants baptized, there is a kind of merit, or rather dignitie of the adopted sonnes of God, by his grace powred into their soules in baptisme, whereby they are made heires of the kingdom of heauen, but al that arriue to the yeares of discretion, must by the good use of the same grace either merit life, or for want of such fruite of it, fall into the miserable state of death.

R. ABBOT.

in opus indubitum, premium ex indubito (inquit parum, in Genf. 22. ult. p. 1295.)
174, debitum: / M. Bishop setteth downe three things, which he saith are necessary to make a work meritorious, but giueth vs no ground at al whereby we may rest perswaded, that where those three things do concurre, a man may be said to merit or deserue at Gods hands. He leaueth vs still to wonder, that a sinfull wretch offending and prouoking God from day to day, should dare to talke of merite and desert with God, but that we know that heresie and ignorance make men bold to frame the maiestic of God to their owne brainsicke and senselesse conceits. The conditions and circumstances by him mentioned, we alwayes teach and require in our doctrine of good workes, but farre are we from finding merit in any of them. For first, the adopted sonne of God standeth bound by dutie to do all things to the honor of his Father, and there can be no merit in doing that which a man by dutie is bound to do. Secondly, if the worke proceed from the grace of God, the worke is Gods & not mans, and therfore man can therby merit nothing. Thirdly if the reward depend vpon promise, then it ariseth not of the merit or worth of workes, especially there being by the frailtie of the worker and the bountie of the promiser that disproportion betwixt the worke and the reward, as that it is meere absurd to imagine that the one should be merited and deserued by the other. These things (God willing) shall further appeare in the processe of this

this question. In the meane time M. Bishop here challengeth vs for flandering their doctrine with some matters of vntiuth, as that they trust not in Christ's merits, that they need not Gods mercy for their saluation, but will purchase it by their owne workes. Now wee wote well that they vse speech of Christes merits, and Gods mercie and of trusting therein, because they know that if they abandoned the mention hereof, they would soone grow odious and hatefull to all men. For the cuppe of poison of the whore of Babylon they must vse a couer of such good words, least they make men loath to drinke thereof. But let it bee examined how they teach these things, and their falshood will soone appeare. By trust in Christ's merits, men conceiue the placing of the confidence of saluation immediatly therein, as the proper cause for which God accepteth vs to eternall life, who our selues are miserable sinners, and altogether vnworthy thereof. But their trust in Christ's merits, is that he hath purchased for vs grace, if wee list by free will to merit heauen for our selues, thereby to be iust before God in our selues, and worthy of the Kingdome of heauen, as M. Bishop in the former question of iustification hath declared. So then the effect of Christ's a Sec. 2 merits is tied onely to this life, and thenceforth we are to depend vpon that which here we do for our selues, by well vsing that grace which the merits of Christ first purchased for vs. Therefore one Richard Hopkins translating into English a Booke of Granatensis, as touching prayer and meditation, giueth it one where for a marginall note, that our Sauour Christ is our Aduocate for the time of this life, but after our departure out of this life he is nomore our aduocate, but our Iudge, for the time is past (saith he) of dealing with God by an Aduocate, &c. and we shall haue our definitiue sentence according to our workes. Whereby it appeareth what reckoning they make of the mercie of God, which they also pen vp wirhin the compasse of this life, and denie it that place which the Apostle giueth it, but at that day. Yea so little vse is there with them of Gods mercie, as that M. Bishop doubteth not to demaund, What need a b 3 Tim. 1. 8. c Cap. 4. Sect. 4. iustified man greatly feare the rigorous sentence of a iust iudge? Hence are those most insolent speeches of theirs, that good workes are ^d truly and properly meritorious, and fully worthy of euerlasting life; that heauen is the due and iust stipend which God by his iustice oweth to the persons working by his grace; that we haue

d Rhem. A. wor.
2. Tim. 4. 8.

a right to heauen, and deserue it worthily; that it is our owne right, bargained for and wrought for, and accordingly payed vnto vs as our hire: that good works be so farre meritorious, as that God should bee vniust if hee rendered not heauen for the same. Thereuppon Tapper sticketh not to say, God forbid that the iust should expect eternall life as the poore man doth an almes: for it is much more glorious that they should haue it as conquerers and triumphers, as the prize due vnto their labours. Thus you your selues haue written M. Bishop, and do we slander you in reporting truly what you haue written? No, no, your speeches are impudent and shamelesse in this behalfe, and such as wee wonder that your foreheads serue you to auouch. Why doth it not suffice you to preach good workes simply, as Christ and his Apostles did, with commendation of Gods mercie in rewarding the same? What need this vaine foolery of merite, so improbable, so absurd, so impossible, whereby you do not magnific God, but set vp the righteousnesse of man against the grace of God? As for the definition of the Councell of Trent, wee esteeme it not, knowing the same for the most part to haue beene but a conuenticle of base Italianate Machiauels, who by equiuocations and sophistifications haue deluded the world, and by casting the chaffe of some phrases of the Fathers vpon the meeres and puddles of the schoolemen, haue laboured to couer and hide the filth and mire thereof, and indeed haue left them still to serue by false confidence and trust for gulfs and whirlpools to swallow vp and deuoure the soules of men. Although the words of the Councell may beare some good construction according to the ancient Fathers meaning of the name of merits, yet by them they are deceitfully set downe to leaue open a gappe to the absurd and intollerable presumption of men, in aduancing and lifting vp the desert of mens workes, as if God were thereby greatly bound and beholding vnto them. How farre their meaning extendeth, will appere by M. Bishop, who will not haue vs thinke that hee will speake any thing but by the authority of that Councell. And first hee telleth vs, that they hold that eternall life is a grace; which indeed they dare not denie, because the Scripture expressly so affirmeth, Eternall life is the grace (or gift) of God through Iesus Christ our Lord. But he addeth to grace a supply of works, quite contrary to the Scriptures; for it is expressly said, If it be of graces, it is not of works; otherwise e lid. Heb. 6. 10.

f Ruard. Tapper.
in explicat. art.
Louan. tom. 2. art.
9. Absit vt iusti
vitam eternam expectent sicut
pauper elemosy-
nam. Multo nam-
que gloriosius est
iplos quasi victo-
res & triumphato-
res eam possidere
squam palmam
suis sudoribus debitam.

g Rom 6. 23.

h Chap. 11. 6.

otherwise grace is no grace. ⁱ Grace (saith Saint Austin) is not grace in any sort if it be not free in every sort. It is of grace, saith M. Bishop, and yet it is of workes also. But still to make a shew of vpholding grace, he telleth vs that though eternall life be by workes, yet the first grace, out of which those workes do issue, is freely bestowed upon vs.
 Which he saith onely as ashamed to deny grace altogether, and not of any conscience that hee maketh faithfully to auouch the same.
 For if the grace, whence those workes doe issue, which is the grace of iustification, be freely bestowed vpon vs, why doth he before labour to approue that we are iustified by works? Or if wee obtaine the grace of iustification by works, how doth hee say that the same is freely bestowed vpon vs? The plaine truth is, that by their works of preparation they make a man at least in some sort, as we haue heard before out of Bellarmino, to merit & deserue euen the first grace, if by the first grace we vnderstand the grace of their first iustification, as M. Bishop vsually doth. But beside grace, it is also a reward due in iustice, saith he. And how lo? Marry partly by the promise of God.
 Now if he rested here, we would not contend with him. For promise is indeed grace, and iustice in respect of promise is nothing but truth in the performance thereof, neither is here any impeachment of the free gift of God. But not contended heerwith, hee addeth, that it is due in part also for the dignitie of good workes. And thus he confoundeth those things which the Scriptures still very precisely distinguish, aduertizing vs that ^k if they which are of the law (that is of workes) be heirs, then is faith made void, and the promise is made of none effect: and againe, ^l if the inheritance bee of the law (that is, of workes) it is no longer by promise. To bee inheri-tors by workes, and to bee inheritors by promise, are things so opposite as that the one wholly excludeth the other, neither can they possibly stand together. As for that which hee saith of infants merit and dignitie, it is also the schoolemens fiction and de-uice. Remission of finnes is their Saluation as it is ours, and in them it standeth good which the Apostle saith, ^m As sinne hath reigned (ouer them) vnto death, so grace also reigneth by righteousnesse (that is, by imputation of righteousnesse) vnto eternall life, not by any dignitie in them, but through Iesus Christ our Lord. But as touching them that arrine so yeares of discreison, hee telleth vs that either they must by good use of grace merite life, or for want of such fruit fall

*i August. contra Pelag. & Celest.
 lib. 2. ca. 24. Non enim gratia Dei
 gratia erit vlla
 modo, nisi fuerit gratuita omnino modo.*

k Rom. 4. 14.

l Gal. 3. 18.

m Rom. 5. 21.

fall into the miserable state of death. A very hard sentence for himselfe, for if hee neuer haue life till he merite and deserue it, we can well assure him that he shall go without it. And I wonder that his heart did not tremble at the writing hereof, but that he hath hardened the same against the truth, and writeth but onely for maintenance of that occupation and trade, that must yeeld maintenance backe againe to him. What will hee say in the end, when hee shall lie wrastring with death, and ready to resigne his soule into the hands of God? Will he then craue for mercy, who writeth now so earnestly for merite? Let him take heede that God do not then answer him, Out of thine owne mouth will I iudge thee; thou euill seruant. Thou hast despised my mercie. Thou hast defined, that euery one that doth not merite life must fall into the state of death. Thy sentence shall stand good against thy selfe: thou art farre off from meriting life, and therefore thy iust portion shall be euerlasting death. Let him learn in time to feare his doome, and leaue off by this willfull oppugning of the faith and doctrine of Christ to rebell against God.

h Luke 19. 22.

2. W. BISHOP.

With this Catholike doctrine M. Perkins would bee thought to agree in two points: First, That merits are necessary to saluation: Secondly, That Christ is the root and fountaine of all merit. But soone after like vnto a shrewd cow, ouerthrowes with his heele the good milke he had giuen before: renouncing all merits in euery man, sauing onely in the person of Christ: whose prerogatiue (saith he) it is, to be the person alone in whom God is wel pleased. Then he addeth, that they good Protestants by Christs merits really imputed to them, do merite life euerlasting. Eue as by his right consnesse imputed vnto them, they are iustified and made righteous.

To which I answer, that wee most willingly confesse our blessed Saviours merits to be infinite, and of such diuine efficacie, that hee hath not onely merited at his Fathers hands both pardon for all faul'ts, and grace to do all good workes; but also that his true seruants workes should be meritorius of life euerlasting. As for the real imputation of his merit to vs, we esteeme as a fained imagination, composed of contrarieties.

For

rupt by blending and mingling with it, not the leaven onely, but the very poison of humane traditions. He renounceth, and so do we, all merit but what is in the person of Iesus Christ for vs, and thereby onely do we lay hold of eternall life, acknowledging that not for any thing that we do, but onely ^d in him the Father is well pleased towards vs, and accepteth vs to be his children, and heires of his kingdome. Whereas in his pleasure he tearmeth vs good Protestants, I must tell him as before, that if the Protestants do not exceed the goodnesse of them who will be taken to be the very best amongst the Papistes, without question they are very bad: and I doubt not but he himselfe will acquit the protestants from being so bad as he and his fellowes haue told vs that their good maisters the Iesuits be. But for answer he saith, that Christ did merite for his, not onely pardon of all faulcs, and grace to do all good workes, but also that their workes should be meritorious of life euerlasting. A strange speech, and such as the Apostles and Primitive Church were not acquainted with. Forsooth Christ did not merit eternall life for vs, but he merited for vs grace, that so we might merit eternall life for our selues. Now M. Bishop hath taught vs before, that grace is nothing, but as Freewill adioyneth it selfe vnto it, and so the conclusion is, that the grace of God doth not saue man, but man by the helpe of grace doth saue himselfe. Thus the matter resteth vpon vs, Christ offereth vs grace; we may receiue it, if we will; and when we haue it, we may, if we will, thereby deserue eternall life, other wise we go without it. But the scripture teacheth vs farre otherwise, that ^e the record that God hath witnessed of his Sonne is this; that God hath giuen vs eternall life, and this life is in his Sonne. Here is no record, that God hath giuen vs grace to deserue eternall life, but that he hath giuen vs eternall life; nor that this life is in our merits, but that this life is in his Sonne; so as that ^f he that beleueth in the Sonne, hath euerlasting life, and ^g they that beleue in the name of the Sonne of God, are to know, that they haue eternall life, God by the beginning giuing them certificate and assurance of the end. The reall imputation of Christs merits to vs, is no fained imagination, but a cleare truth, as hath bene before shewed. The contrarietic and opposition that he conceiueth therein, is his owne fond dreame, no doctrine of ours. We do not say, that Christs merits are really in vs, neither did Maister Perkins giue

d Mat. 3. 17.

e 1. Ioh. 5. 10. 11

f Ioh. 3. 36.
g 1. Ioh. 5. 13.

giue him any word whercof to imagine it, but onely that by imputation they are made really ours, because they were vnderaken and done for vs, euen as Christ the doer thereof is become really ours, euen ^h the Lord our righteousnesse. Whereas hee saith, that to ^h 1 Cor. 3. 6. say, that Christ onely is the person in whom God is well pleased, is to giue the lie to many texts of Scripture, which testifie, that God hath bene pleased towards Abraham, Moses, &c. wee suppose hee doth not well vnderstand himselfe. It is said of many, that God was pleased with them, or they pleased God, but the question is, in whom, for whose sake, by whose mediation God was well pleased towards them, and that was onely in Christ, onely for Christs sake, accordingly as the Apostle Saint Paul saith of all the elect: ⁱ He hath made vs accepted in his beloved, and Saint Peter, that our ^k spirituall sacrifices are acceptable to God by Iesum Christ. And this prerogatiue the voice of the Father giueth him from heauen: ⁱ This is my beloved Sonne in whom I am well pleased: namely, to ^l Mat. 3. 17. towards Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, Moses, David, and all towards whom he is well pleased. Which seeing it was the plainc meaning of M. Perkins, and M. Bishop acknowledgth it to bee true, that Christ is hee, for whose sake God is pleased in all others, what is it but childish and idle cauilling to make a question there, where by his owne confession none is to be made? Now where wee say, that wee haue no righteousnesse to iustifie vs before God, but only the righteousnesse of Christ, nor any merit whereby to presume of heauen, but only the merit of Christ, all our owne workes beeing blemished and stained with sinne, he biddeth vs tremble at that which thereupon necessarilie followeth. And what is that? Marry, that as wee haue no righteousnesse but by imputation, so wee must looke for no heauen but by imputation. But why should we not think, that the merit of Christs obedience and righteousnesse is of sufficient value and estimation to purchase for vs the kingdome of heauen, and euerlasting glory? Is it sufficient to purchase grace for vs to merit heauen for our selues, and is it not sufficient it selfe to merit heauen for vs? And if wee haue no merit of our owne, what should hinder but that wee may say with Saint Bernard: ^m Whatsoever is wanting ⁱ Ephes. 1. 6.

^k 1. Pet. 1. 5.

^l Mat. 3. 17.

^m Bernard. in
Cant. Ser. 61.

Ego silenter quic-
quid ex me mihi

deest, ut serpo mihi ex visceribus Domini: quoniam misericordia effluunt &c. Meritum proinde meum miseratione Domini. Non plane sum meriti imops, quatinus ille miserationum non fuerit. Quod si misericordia Domini multo, merito mihi non minus ego in merito sum.

to me of my selfe,, I boldly take it vnto me out of the bowels of the Lord, for they flow out with mercy. My merit is the Lords mercy : I am not poore in merit, so long as hee is not poore in mercy : and if hee be rich in mercy, then am I also rich in merits. Yea, Bellarmine M. Bishops master, after that hee hath sweat and trauelled mightily to auouch the righteousnesse and merit of workes, in the end beeing quite spent is content to retire into our port, & draweth to this conclusion, that ⁿ because of the vncertainy of our owne righteousnesse, and the perill of vaine glorie, the safest way is to repose our whole trust in the only mercy and goodnesse of God. Now if there be no saluation, no heauen without merits, and a man haue no merites of his owne, by what merits shall the mercy of God saue him, but only by the imputation of the merits of Christ? And will M. Bishop say of him, that as he hath no merits but by imputation, so he shal haue no heauen but by imputation? Shall this be all the comfort of that which Bellarmine commendeth for the safest course, to flie to the sole and onely mercy and goodnesse of God? Yea, saith M. Bishop : for God as a most vpright iudge will in the end repay euery man according to his woorth. What, and doe you M. Bishop expect, that God in the end should repay heauen to you according to your woorth? Goe foole, goe, leaue off this talke of merit and woorth : learne to know God, learne to know thy selfe, learne to say with Chrysostome : * No mans sheweth such conuersation of life, as that he may be worthy of the kingdome, but it is wholly the gift of God. Was not ^p Iohn Baptist worthy to loose the latchet of Christs shoe, and dost thou thinke to be worthie to raigne with Christ? But I leaue him heere to be whipped with his owne rod : his own conscience will one day siting him sufficiently with the remembrance of these assertions. As for the Prostants, let him take no care for their worthinesse. Wee beleue that there is for vs in Christ a reall worthinesse, for which we shall receiue a reall heauen. But let him take heede, lest whilest hee feedeth himselfe with a concept of worth where there is none, hee be deluded with a concept of heauen in his end, and indeede find none, nor euer attaine to that which is prepared for them that maintaine the truth of the Scripture, and glorie of God to their owne comfort. But of worthinesse there will be further occasion to speak hereafter. As for the place of Austine which he alledgeth as good to stand for him, it was written by him when hee was newly conuerted from the heresie

n Bellar. de iust.
lib. 5. cap. 7. Prop-
ter incertitudine
proprie iustitie, & periculum in-anis glorie iustiti-
am non est fiducia
totam in sola Dei misericordia & benignitate repa-
nere.

o Chrysost. in Col.
hom. 2. Nemo ius-tum vitæ conuer-
sationem ostendit,
vt regno dignus
esse possit, sed totum
donum est ipsius
Dei.

p Mar. l. 7.

heresie of the Manichees in such words and phrases as seeme plausible to humane vnderstanding and iudgement, which comparing one man with another, expresseth to it selfe the difference by termes of worthy and vnworthy, deseruing and not deseruing, howsoeuer to the sight & iudgement of God woorth & desert are farre from all. The purpose of S. Austine in that place, is to shew the ordinary course that God taketh, that hee will first haue vs to trauell in his seruice, before we receiue the reward thereof, as the Apostle declareth in saying, ^q The husbandman must labor before he receiue the fruits. But that S. Austine in maturity and ripenesse of iudgement was very farre from M. Bishops fauour of merit, may sufficiently appeare by one sentence of his where he saith, ^r God promised to men participation with God, immortality to mortal creatures, iustification to sinners, glorification to abiects and cast-aways. Whatsoeuer he promised, he promised to men vnworthy, that it might not be promised as a reward to workes, but being grace might according to the name be freely giuen; because to liue iustly, so far as man can liue iustly is not a matter importing mans merit, but the benefit and gift of God. Where plainly he sheweth, that whatsoeuer God hath promised, it is his mere and only gift: that to speake simply thereof, it is to be bereaued of the title of a reward of workes, because God promised the same when we had no workes: that it is not giuen for our woorth, because it was promised when wee had no woorth: yea and that we haue any good workes, it is an effect of the same promise, it cannot be thought to make any merit on our behalfe, but to set forth grace and mercy on Gods behalfe: so that all is free gift, all is grace and mercie, and the adding of one gift, and grace, and mercy to another, howsoeuer sometimes in some respects, as heereafter we shall see, the gift of God is set forth vnto vs vnder the name of recompence and reward. In a worde, by that that followeth, I doubt not but it will appeare, that the Protestants Proctor, if he must needs be so tearmed, hath said nothing in this behalfe, but what by S. Austine and other ancient Fathers may well be defended against this Romish Prater, who hath great insolencie of words, but sound matter of prooffe hee can find none at all.

q 2. Tim. 2. 6.

r Augusti in Psal.
109. Promisit hominibus diuinitatem, mortalibus immortalitatem, peccatoribus iustificationem, abiectis glorificationem.
Quicquid promissit, indignis promissit, ut non quasi merces operibus promitteretur, sed gratia a nomine suo gratis daretur, quia & hoc ipsum quod iuste uiuis, in quantum homo potest iuste uiuere non meriti humani, sed beneficij diuini est.

3. W. BISHOP.

But M. Perkins will neuerthelessse prooue, and that by sundry reasons, that their doctrine is the truth it selfe, and ours falshood.

First, by a sorry short syllogism containing more then one whole page. It is taken out of the properties of a meritorious worke: which must bee (saith he) foure: first, That the worke be done of our selues, without the helpe of another: secondly, That it bee not otherwise due debt: thirdly, That it be done to the benefit of another: fourthly, That the worke and reward be equall in proportion. These properties hee sets downe pythagorically without any prooffe: but inferreth thereon, as though he had proued them muincibly, that Christs manhood separated from the Godhead cannot merit: because whatsoener hee doth, hee doth it by grace receined, and should be otherwise due. Hee might in like manner as truly say, that Christs māhood united to the Godhead, could not merit neither: for he receined his Godhead from his Father, and whatsoener he doth, is therefore his Fathers by due debt. And so the good man, if he were let alone, would disappoint vs wholly of all merits, as well the impute of Christs, as of all ours done by vertue of his grace. Wherefore we must a little sift his foure forged proprieties of Merit: and touching the first, I say that one may by the good use of a thing receined by free gift, merit and deserue much euen at his hands that gaue it. For example, the Father bestowes a Farme vpon his sonne freely; who may by often presenting his Father of the pleasing fruits growing on the same deserue his further fauour: yea, he may by the commodities reaped out of that farm, buy any thing that it shall please his father to set to sale, as well as if he had neuer receined the farme from his fathers gift. Which is so common a case, and so sensible, that euery man of means wit, may easily reach vnto it: euen so by good manuring the gifts which God freely bestoweth vpon vs, we may both merit the increase of them, and according to his owne order and promise, purchase thereby the kingdome of heauen: which is plainly proued by that parable, Of the talents giuen by a King to his seruants; the which they employing well and multiplying, were therefore esteemed worthy of farre greater, and withall to bee made partakers of their Lords ioyes.

M. Perkins then was not a little ouerseene, to put for the first propriety of merit, that it must be done by a man, and of a man himselfe.

R. ABBOT.

R. ABBOT

M. Perkins saith very truly vpon noting the conditions necessarily required in a meritorious worke, that the manhood of Christ considered apart from his Godhead, because it is but a creature, and hath all by the gift of God, and doth all by bond of necessary dutie, cannot merit at Gods hands. Whereas M. Bishop against this saith, that he might in like manner as truly say, that Christs manhood united to the Godhead could not merit neither, because he receiued his Godhead from the Father, and therefore whatsoever he doth is his Fathers by due debt, he bewrayeth his notable and absurd ignorance. For Christ receiuech his Godhead of the Father to be equall to the Father, not inferiour; to be the same in substance, and maiestie, and glorie, that the Father is. Now duty and debt do necessarily enforce minoritie and subiection. Seeing therefore there is no minoritie or subiection in the Godhead of the Sonne towards the Father, there can be no debt or dutie of the Sonne in that respect towards the Father. Thus the good man (to repay him with his owne floute) is taken before he is aware in the nets of the Arian heresie, which made Christ as God inferiour, and subiect to the Father. The merit of Christ therefore consisted in this, as S. Paul noteth, that being equall to God his Father, and owing no debt or dutie, did voluntary humble himselfe to obedience and dutie for our sakes. So then M. Perkins, indeed a good man, as M. Bishop shall one day see, hath not by his assertion bereaued vs of the merits of Christ, but hath taught how rightly to vnderstand the same. But now he will a little sift, as he saith, the foure forged proprietie of merit, which M. Perkins hath set downe. Whether they be forged or not, will appear by the sequele; in the meane time his answers to them may seeme rather to haue come from the Smiths forge, then out of the studie, and from the learning of a Doctor of Diuinitie. The first condition required in a meritorious worke, properly so to be called, to which by dutie, debt and right for the workes sake, reward is to be yeelded, is, that a man do it of himselfe, and by his owne power. For so saith Hilary:^a It is for him to merit, who himselfe is to himselfe the author of getting his merit. Therefore S. Bernard hauing said that the merits of men are not such, as that life eternall by right is owing

^a Hilary de Trin. lib. 1. Meritum est qui ipse sibi meriti acquiritur auctor existit.

^b Bernard in Annunciat. ser. 1. Non talia sunt hominum merita ut propter ea ut auctore debeatur ex se. Et. Nam merita omnia Dei donum sunt. Et sic a homo magis propter ipsa Deo debet or est quam Deum hominum.

for them, giueth this for one reason thereof, because all Merits are the gifts of God, and so man is rather a debtor to God for thē then God to man. So Origen saith, that ^c he can hardly be perswaded, that there can be any worke, which by debt may require reward at Gods bands, in asmuch as it is by his gift that we are able to doe, or thinke, or speake any thing that is good. By this reason S. Austine, though according to the language of his time, he vseth the name of merit, yet taketh away the true nature of merit, by bereauing the righteousnes of man of hauing any thing due vnto it. ^d Eternal life (saith he) should be rendered as due vnto thee, if of thy selfe thou hadst the righteousnesse to which it is due: but now of his kinnesse we receiue not onely grace now to liue iustly in our labours to the end, but also grace for this grace, that afterwards we may liue in rest without rest. Here is then nothing due vnto vs, and therefore no merit, because whatsoeuer righteousnesse is in vs, it is onely Gods gift vnto vs. This reason in sundry places he giueth against opinion of hauing God ^e a debtor vnto vs by our doings, against the conceipt of ^f our worthinesse, or thinking that we haue any thing due vnto vs for the good workes that wee performe, because of God it is that we haue all. But M. Bishops head is sufficient to answer this, and that with greater depth of wit assure your selfe, then is to be found in the heeles of any Protestant whatsoeuer. A man (saith hee) may by the good vse of a thing receiued by free gift, merit and deserue much euen at his hands that gaue it. For example forsooth: The father bestowes a Farme vpon his sonne freely, who may by often presenting his Father of the pleasing fruires thereof, deserue his further fauour, yea by the commodities thereof hee may grow to bee able to buy any thing that his father shall set to sale. Surely this reason is very farmerlike, and smelleth more strongly of the cart then it doth of the Bible. But for answer, if a man bestow a thing vpon another, and the same can make no good vse thereof, but by his hand and helpe that gaue it him, is he not in all that redoundeth to him bound to him, by whose gift hee first enjoyed that which he hath, and by whose onely hand he maketh vse and profite of it? If a father bestow a Farme on his sonne, and the sonne can do no good therewith but by the Father: if hee increase nothing, raise nothing, but what is raised and increased to him by his father: if hee bee not able of himselfe so much as to stirre a hand to helpe himselfe, but his father doth all for him, shall wee thinke

e Origen. in Ro.
cap. 4. Vix mihi
sua dō vllum opus
esse posse, quod ex
debi or remunerat
tionē Dei deprecet
cui nō iam hoc ip-
sum quo laborare a-
liquod possunt,
vel cogitare vel
prosequi, ipsius do-no & largitione
facimus.
d Aug. Epist. 103
Tibi tanquam de-
bita redderetur
si ex te tibi esset iustitia cui debe-
tur. Nunc de ple-
ni tudine eius ac-
cepimus non solū
gratiam quam nunc
iuste in laboribus
vsque in finem vi-
uimus, sed etiam gratiam pro hac
gratia ut in re-
quie postea sine sine viuamus. e Idem in Psal.
32. & in Ioan.
tract. 3.
f In Psal. 43. in fine.

thinke that by the increase and profit that ariseth thereof, the sonne meriteth and deserueth any thing at his Fathers hands? can he giue the Father any thing, but what was first the fathers gift to him? Euē so is the case with vs. God hath bestowed vpon vs his calling and grace; but what are we the neerer, if his hand do not stil work for vs who hath said ^b Without me ye can do nothing; who in the beginning and to the end ^h worketh in vs, both to wil and to doe; so that ⁱ we haue nothing to speak of, but what Christ hath done by vs; ^k nothing to reioice or glory of, because we haue nothing of our owne, ^l nothing of our own but lying and sinne, so that we can yeeld nothing to God but what is his, ^m who hath wrought all our workes for vs, ⁿ of whom, and for whom, and through whom are all things, that he may be blessed for euer. Therefore the auncient Church taught against Pelagius the heretick, that ^o the grace of God is giuen to euery seuerall action. ^p Wee must know, saith Hierome, that we are nothing if he himselfe doe not keepe in vs that which hee hath giuen. God is still giuing, still bestowing: it sufficeth me not that he hath once giuen, unlesse he be still giuing: I pray to receiue, and when I haue receiued, I pray againe. This is it that wee are here to vnderstand, that not onely the first grace, but whatsoeuer consequently we haue or do towards God, it is altogether and wholly of the gift of God, and therefore in nothing can wee bee said to merit or deserue at Gods hands, because we cannot binde God as a debtor vnto vs, by any thing that is his owne. But Maister Bishop maketh no more account but this, that God hath giuen him a Farme, and by the well husbanding of it he must grow rich, and then make a further purchase of God againe. His Farme is the grace of God, which hee must manage by free will, and so fill his bagges with merites, that when God shall set heaven to sale, hee may bee able at once to buy a whole Kingdome for himselfe. But if this be all, let him take heede least of a rich Farmer hee become a poore begger, and his purchase be to be turned out of doores. Let him thankfully acknowledge the gift of God; but if he thus braue the matter with God with termes of purchase, he will prooue like the Laodiceans, of whom the holy Ghost saith; ^q Thou saiest, I am rich and increased with goods, and want nothing, and knowest not how thou art wretched and miserable, and blind, and naked. God will haue vs ^r to know at that day, that not for the workes of righteousness which wee haue done, but of his owne

g John. 15. 5.
h Phil. 2. 13.
i Rom. 15. 18.
k Cypriā ad Qui-
rin. lib. 3. ca 5. De nullo glorandum quando nostrū ni-
hil est.
l Aug. in Ioin. tract. 5. Nemo ha-
bet de suo nisi inie-dandum & pecca-
tum.
m Esa 26. 12.
n Rom 11. 36.
o Aug. epist. 106
Gratiam Dei &
adiutorium eius
etiam ad singulos
actus dars.
p Hieron. ad Cresiphont. Sciamus
nos nihil esse nisi
quod donauit, in nobis ipse serua-
uerit, &c. semper
largitor, semper donator est. Non sufficit mihi quod
semel donauit,
nisi semper
donauerit. Peto ut accipiam. &
cum accipero rur-
sus peto.

q Apoc. 3. 17.

r Bernard. in Cant
Ser. 50.

mercy

*Aug. in Joan. tract. 3. Quod
premiū immorta-litatis postea tribuit, coronas dona-
sua, non merita tut.*

mercy he hath saued vs, and that in giuing the reward of immortality, he crowneth not our merits but his owne gifts. As for that which he alledgeth of those that receiued the talents, and for the well vsing thereof were so bountifully rewarded, it proueth that God doth well requite the good vsage of the gifts that he bestoweth vpon vs, but well he knoweth that of woorth, of merit, and desert, there is nothing spoken there. The talent is Gods gift, and the well vsing of the talent is Gods gift, and therefore the reward commendeth the mercy of God, but can in no sort approue any merit or desert of man. But of reward more hereafter: in in the meane time M. Bishops sensible case is become senselesse in this case. M. Perkins like a Diuine, hath set downe this first condition of merit, and he hath answered it like a Farmer, as being more sensible to make vse of a peece of ground, then to dispute a question of the word of God. Let vs see now whether he haue any better successe against the second.

4. W. BISHOP.

The second, That a man must do it of his owne free will and pleasure, and not of due debt: carrieth in shew an opposition, but in deede there is no contradiction in it: for a man may, and euery honest man doth of his owne free will and pleasure, pay his due debt: but let vs pardon the disorder of words: his meaning being nothing else, but that the payment of that which is otherwise due debt, cannot be any meritorious work, to which S. Austine doth answer in these words: O great goodnesse of God, to whom when we did owe seruice by condition of our estate, as bond-men do to their Lord, yet hath he promised again & again the reward of friends. In which there is couched a comparison, which being laid in the light, will much helpe to the understanding of this matter, hee that hath a slaue, or bond-man, may lawfully exact of him all kind of seruice without any wages: Bread and a whip (saith a Philosopher) serue for a slaue. Now suppose the Master to be soueraigne gouernour of a state: then if it please him to make his man free, & withall a member of his common-weale, the same man by performing many good offices to the state, may iustly deserue of his Prince as great reward and promotion, as any other of his subiects: and yet may his Lord and olde Master say truly to him, all this that thou hast done, or could do, is but due debt vnto me, considering that thou wast my bond-man. So fareth it with

*Ser. 3. De verb.
Apq. b.*

with vs in respect of God: all that we can do is due debt vnto him, because he hath made vs, and endowed vs with all that we either bee, or haue. yet it hath pleased him, as a most kinde Lord, to set vs at liberty through Christ, and to make vs Citizens of the Saints, and as capable of his heauenly riches, as the Angels, if we wil do our endeuor to deserue them: and where as hee might haue exacted all that euer wee could do, without any kind of recompence: yet he of his inestimable goodnesse towards vs, doth neuer bind vs to do all we can do; and yet for doing that little which he commandeth, hath by promise bound himselfe to repay vs a large recompence: by which we may well understand those words of our Sauiour: When you haue done all these things that are commanded you, say that you are vnprofitable seruants: we haue done that wee ought to do. True. By our natine condition we were bound to perform, not only all these things that be now commanded, but whatsoever else it should haue pleased God to command: and this we must alwaies confesse, to preserue true humility in vs: yet God hath bettered our estate through Christ, and so highly advanced vs, that we not only be Citizens of the Saints, but his sonnes and heires, and thereby in case to deserue of him a heauenly crowne, and this is S. Ambrose exposition upon the place. S. Chrysostome pondering these words, let vs say, sake it for a wholesome counsell for vs to say, that we be vnprofitable ser-
Luke 17.

Mat. 25.
Ver. 31.

Mat. 25.
Ver. 31.

uants least pride destroy our good works: and then God will say, that wee be good and faithfull seruants as it is recorded.

Againe we may truly say, when we haue done all things commanded, that we are vnprofitable seruants, as venerable Bede our most learned countriman interpreteth: Because of all that we doe, no commodity riseth vnto God our Lord in himselfe: who is such an infinite occa-
In Luc. 17.

an of all goodnesse, that hee wanteth nothing: Whereupon Dauid saith; That thou art my God, because thou standest in neede of no good that I can do.
Psal. 15.

R. ABBOT.

That that shall merit, must be a worke done, of a mans own free will and pleasure, and not of due debt. The opposition of these termes is plaine and pregnant, and M. Bishops instance to the contrary is absurd. A man doth willingly pay his debts, but not vpon his own free will and pleasure. For what a man doth of his owne free will
 and

and pleasure, it is at his own choice to leaue it vndone if he list, but it is not at an honest mans choiceto pay his debts or not to pay, but by necessary duty hee is tied to the payment thereof. There is no man but in common course of speech vnderstandeth a contradiction in those words, but M. Bishop cannot let a rush go by him, but he wil be seeking a knot in it, and being sicke of Pisoes disease, albeit he know not how to speake, yet he can by no means hold his peace. But to shew that the payment of that which is due debt, may bee a meritorious worke, he alledgeth a testimony of S. Austine, importing no such matter. ^a O the great goodnesse of God, saith he, to whom whereas by our condition and state, we are of duty to do seruice, as bondmen to their Lord, and as seruants vnto God, as subiects to a potentate, and slaves to him that ransomed them, yet doth promise vnto vs the reward of friendship, that he may wrest or draw from vs the duties of seruice which wee owe. All is but this, that God of his mercy by promises of reward, draweth vs on to the performance of our duty towards him. I doubt not but the Reader will wonder what should moue M. Bishop here to alledge this place to that purpose that he doth, and yet he needeth not wonder that seeth still his manner of idle and impertinent allegations. Very common sense teacheth that I am not bound to a man, for the doing of that which he standeth bound to do for me. There is no merit in the doing of it, but trespasse if he do it not. Yet he telleth vs, that in S. Austines words there is a comparison couched that will put this matter out of doubt, Which in deed is so closely couched, as that in S. Austines words we can see no token of it, and full ilfaoueredly doth he deal with S. Austine therein to serue his owne turne. For whereas the godly Father vseth the words to set forth Gods mercy, that he vouchsafeth to promise reward for workes of due seruice, this cosening impostour chargeth God hereby with duty of iustice bound to paiement of wages for merit and desert of workes. But in the comparison by him laid downe, there are many differences to be obserued, which do lay open vnto vs the absurdity of it. First of the infinitie disproportion betwixt God and man it ariseth, that no man by bondage or villasage can be bound in that high degree to an other man, as euery man is bound to God; and therefore though one man being by community of nature the same that another is, may deserue at the hands of another man, yet it followeth not therefore that a man may deserue

a Aug. de verb. Dom. ser. 3. O magna bonitas Dei, cui cum pro condicione obsequia reddere debemus vno, e seruus Domino, famulus Deo subiectus potestati, mancipia redemptori, amicitiam nobis premia re promittit, ut a nobis obsequia debita seruiat.

serue of merit at Gods hands. Secondly, manumission and freedom with men extinguisheth bondage & seruice, but liberty and adoption to Godward, are a bettering of the condition of our seruice, but no discharge at all of the dutie of it; nay, we are free by libertie from sinne, from death, and from the diuell, but we continue still bound & seruants vnto God. So doth the Apostle tell vs, that thereby we are made b seruants vnto righteousnes, seruants vnto God. b Rom. 6. 18. 22.
 Therefore doth he write himselfe c the seruants (or bondman) of Christ, c Phil. 1. 1. and S. Peter teacheth vs to acknowledge our selues d the seruants (or bondmen) of God. d 1. Pct. 2. 16.
 Yea, and S. Austine in the place cited, calleth our workes e duties of seruice (or bondage) that are owing vnto God; which beeing the last part of the sentence, M. Bishop verie guilefully left out, because it wholly ouerthroweth that which he saith of the changing of our former state. Thirdly, the Prince is in some sort tied to the subiect, as well as the subiect to the Prince. For as the subiect hath neede of the Prince, so hath the Prince also of the subiect; as the subiect standeth by the Prince, so doth the Prince by the subiect, and therefore by necessity is tied to reward the seruice of the subiect, for the securing of his owne estate. But it is not so with God; we do nothing to benefit him, he needeth vs not, and therefore it is his meere mercy to vouchsafe any countenance to our seruice. Fourthly, there is some proportion betwixt temporall seruice & temporall reward, and yet such is the magnificence of Princes, as that for small seruice they giue great reward, farre beyond the worth of the worke which they reward; but there is no proportion, as shall be shewed, betwixt our temporall seruice to God, and his eternall rewards to vs, and much more roiall and magnificent is he to reward farre beyond all possibility of desert. Last of all, adde concerning M. Bishops free man, that that was said before concerning his farmer, that in the seruice of his prince hee is able to do nothing but by the helpe of his Prince, so that what is done, is indeede his Princes doing for him, and not his owne for himselfe, yea and that in his Princes seruice he commit so many defaults, as that if he bee questioned hee bee not able for a thousand to answer one, and we shall leaue the free man & the farmer both alike, both disclaiming merit and pleading mercy, content to take that of free gift which M. Bishops pride will not take but by desert. Now therefore briefly to touch his application: all this we can do, saith he, is due debt

debt vnto God. True, but not onely by state of our creation, but also in that liberty wherewith hee hath set vs free in Christ, because by our liberty wee are free from sin and death, but still continue bond to God. In this libertie he saith, that God hath made vs capable of heavenly riches, if wee endeavour to deserue them, but no where hath God set them foorth with that condition, and after all our endeavour wee are verie farre from deseruing. God, hee saith, doth not bind vs to do all that we can do. A lewd man, who cannot but know that we cannot by many degrees do that that we are bound vnto, and seeing hee bindeth vs to giue him all the heart, all the soule, all the minde, all the strength, how can he say that God doth not binde vs to all that we can do? Againe, by the same spirit hee termeth the commandements of God that little that hee commandeth. A foolish and senselesse man, a meere Pharisee not knowing the power of Gods law; otherwise if hee had grace and spirit to conceiue it, hee would by the law, as the Apostle did, finde himselfe dead in himselfe, and acknowledge that which now seemeth to him but little, to bee a burden beyond his strength. At length hee telleth vs, that God by promise hath bound himselfe to repay vs a large recompence. But if by promise, then of mercie on his owne part, not of merit on our part. By promise he bindeth himselfe, but by merit we binde him to vs. It is in his owne power to promise, and without promise hee should bee tied to nothing; but whether there bee promise or not, hee is tied iniustice to render for merit and desert. Now because Master Bishop in the issue of his comparison, canne finde nothing but promise, the end of his comparison must bee, that merit and desert is altogether to bee excluded. But by that that hee hath said, hee telleth vs that wee may well vnderstand those wordes of our Saniour, ^h When ye haue done all those things which are commanded you, say, Wee are vnprofitable seruants, we haue done that which was our dutie to doe. And how then are wee to vnderstand them? Marry by our natie condition wee were bound to performe all the commandements of God, and this wee must confesse to preserue true humilitie in vs; yet God hath bettered our estate in Christ, and made vs thereby in case to deserue of him. But what, in this better state are wee not still bound to performe that which God commandeth? doth our high aduancement to bee the children of God, take away the obligation of our dutie towards God? If it doe

f Mar. 11. 30.

g Rom. 7. 10.

h Luk. 17. 20.

doe not so, (and surely we are so farre from opinion of taking it away, as that rather it doth increase it then what shall become of Maister Bishops answer? We were bound before to the keeping of Gods commaundements, and we continue bound still; what merit can there be more now in the doing of them, then there was before? What, Maister Bishop, did our Saviour meane that by our native condition we were to say, We are unprofitable seruants, we haue done but our dutie, and did he meane that in our better condition of grace in Christ we are not to say so? See, gentle Reader, this is one of them who take vpon them to be the onely Masters of the world; and as if all learning and truth were locked vp in their Schooles. But had he not so much reason, as to consider that Christ taught his Disciples this lesson, when they were now partakers of that better state? In this betternesse of condition and estate, Christ teacheth them, that when they haue done all that is commaunded, they should say, We are unprofitable seruants, yea and by the comparison precedent, setteth them foorth still in condition of seruants vnto God, and sheweth that they cannot of dutie expect so much as thanks for all that they haue done. Doth a man thanke his seruant, because he doth that which was commaunded him? I trow not. So likewise ye when ye haue done all, say, we are unprofitable seruants, &c. As if he should say, Because you are seruants, learne you to conceiue in like sort of your seruice. Now Maister Bishop hauing set downe that goodly commentarie, addeth, And this is Saint Ambrose his exposition upon the place. But why doth he not set downe the words of Ambrose? why doth hee seeke to steale away onely with setting downe his name? Let Saint Ambrose himselve speake, and hee saith to his purpose not one word; nay he speaketh against him. Let no man reioice, saith he, or glorie in workes, because by right we owe dutie to the Lord. Acknowledge thy selfe to be a seruant that art indebted in manifold seruice. Do not set up thy selfe, for that thou art called the child of God: thou art to acknowledge grace, but not to be ignorant of nature: and doe not vaunt thy selfe, that thou hast serued well vvhich thou wast bound to doe. In which words he giueth plainely to vnderstand, that our native condition of seruice continueth still, and is not

*i. Ambrosii Luc. lib. 8. cap. 17.
Nemo in operibus
glorietur, quia iure Domino de-
bitum obsequium.
Agnosce te esse
seruum plurimum
obsequijs deservatum. Non te præferas quia ser-*

uus Dei dicaris: agnoscenda gratia sed non ignoranda natura: neq; se iustus si bene seruisti quod facere debuisti.

taken

taken away by the state of the grace of God, and that we are still to remember that we do but our duty; we do but what we are bound to do in all that we can do. Now further he alledgeth Chrysoſtome, but where is the place? We doubt him to be as falie in Chrysoſtome as he was in Ambroſe, and yet in that which he citeth what is there for merit, or what againſt debt & duty of ſeruiſe vnto God? Chryſoſtome taketh it for whoſome counſell for vs to ſay, that we be unprofitable ſeruants, leaſt pride deſtroy our good workes. But what? was it Chryſoſtomes mind that we ſhould ſay ſo and not thinke ſo? Did hee meane that by lying wee ſhould auoide pride? S. Auſtine well asketh the queſtion; Wilt thou then lye to ſhew humility? S. Bernard hauing cited thoſe words of Chriſt, addeth thus, But thou wilt ſay that Chriſt hath taught ſo to ſay for humilities ſake? true, ſaith he, it was for humility indeede, but what, againſt truth? What Chryſoſtome conceiued of the words, it may appeare when he ſaith: All that we do, we doe as fulfilling duty: therefore Chriſt ſaid, When ye haue done all, ſay, We are unprofitable ſeruants, &c. In another place he gathereth thereof, that they which haue done all, ſhall be reckoned to haue done but little: and againe, that Chriſt thereby commandeth vs to forget our good workes, namely as not woorth the remembrance and reckoning of, howſoever God in fauour & mercy doe accept them. But moſt directly he ſpeaketh to our purpoſe, where hauing ſet downe the words before alledged. No man ſheweth ſuch conuerſation of life, as that he can be worthy of the Kingdome, &c. he addeth, Wherefore Chriſt ſaith, When ye haue done all, ſay, We are unprofitable ſeruants, &c. This is it then that our Sauour Chriſt would ſignifie in thoſe words, that a man by doing whatſoever he can do, cannot attaine to be worthy of the Kingdome of Chriſt, but that it is to vs altogether the gift of God. To which purpoſe Marke the auncient Hermite notably applieth the ſame word: Our Lord, ſaith he, willing to ſhew that we are debtors of the whole law, and that the adoption of children is freely giuen to vs by his bloud, ſaith, when ye haue done all things that are commanded you, ſay, we are unprofitable ſeruants, &c. Therefore the Kingdome of heauen is not the reward (or wages) of workes, but it is the grace (or gift) of God prepared for his faithful ſeruants. On euery ſide therefore thoſe words of Chriſt are taken to import ſomewhat againſt merit and woorth: yet M. Biſhop by meanes that his minion of Rome hath hoodwinked his eies, ca-k Aug. de verb.

Apoſt. ſer. 25.
Propter humilitate ergo men-
ſuru.
l Berna. de tripl.
cuſtod. Sed hoc,
inquit, propter
humilitatem me-
xuit eſſe dicen-
diu. Plane pro-
ter humilitatem,
ſed nunquid co-
ſtra ueritatem?
m Chryſoſt. ad
pop. Antioch.
hom. 53. Omnia
que facimus, a-gimus debitum implemtes. Propterea & ipſa di-
cebat, &c.
n Idem de panis-
ſen. Qui omnia faciunt, parua feciffe compi-
buntur.
o Idem de panis.
& confeſſ. Obliuioni tradere
bona opera.
p Chryſoſt. ad
Coloſſ. hom. 2.
Supra. ſect. 2.
q Marc. Here-
mit. li. de ho qui ſe putant operibificari. Dominus totius legis
debitores nos eſſe
iudicari uolens, & filioru adoptionem proprio ſanguine nobis
gratuito daram,
inquit, Cum om-
nia feceritis, &c. Proprietate regnum coloru
non eſt merces
operu ſed gratia Domini fidelibus
ſerui prepara-
ta.

not see so much, but he is still doting vpon that which he can no where finde. Which the more plainely to shew, he citeth Bede for another construction of these words of Christ, that therefore we are to account our selues unprofitable seruants, because of all that we do, there ariseth no profit to God; but why did he leaue out that which Bede there addech, as giuing to vnderstand that that former was not the whole meaning of Christs words; We are unprofitable seruants, because the sufferings of this time, are not worthy of the glory to come, as in another place, which crowneth thee in mercy and compassion. He saith not, in thy merits, because by whose mercy we are prevented that we may humbly serue him, by his gift we are crowned to reigne with him? What M. Bishop, no more faith, no more trust in you? do you alledge Authors, when they condemne your doctrine, euen in the places whence you cite them? Leaue off, leaue off; it is hard for you to kicke against the prickles. You fight against the Gospell of Christ, against the truth of God, and do not you doubt but it will preuaile against you, and the conquest thereof shall be your vtter confusion if you hold on your course.

r Bede in Luc. cap. 17.

Act. 16. 14.

5. W. BISHOP.

And thus we fall vpon the third property of M. Perkins meritorious worke, which is, That it bee done to the profit of another: and say that albeit God in himselfe receiue no profit by our workes, yet doth he in the administration of his holy common-weale the Church, wherein good mens seruices do much pleasure him. And in this sence it is said of S. Paul, That by cleansing our selues from wicked workes, we shall become vessels sanctified, and profitable vnto our Lord. Againe, God is glorified by our good workes. That seeing our good workes, they may glorifie your Father which is in heauen. Finally, God doth reioyce at the recouerie of his lost children. If then good men traoualing painfully in Gods Vineyard, do yeeld him outwardly both honour, ioy, and commoditie: that may suffice to make their worke meritorius.

2. Tim. 2. Math. 5.

Ioh. 15. ver. 8. Luke. 15.

R. ABBOT.

As touching this condition, we contend not with Maister Bishop concerning his exposition thereof. Merits must be done by the will, and for the vse and behoofe of him at whose hands it must merit. So Christes obedience by the will of the Father, to the praise of the glory of his grace, did merit & deserue at his Fathers hands in our behalfe. Onely it is to be added, that it must fully satisfie the vse and behoofe whereto it is intended, and not faile in any point thereof. Now because ^a the children of God are so moued by the spirit of God, as that by their owne spirit as the sonnes of men through humane motions and affections, they sometimes faile and fall backe to themselues, and therefore do not so entirely and perfectly serue the vses of the Lord, to yeeld either glory to God, or loue to their brethren as they ought to do, therefore neither do they attaine to this condition of merit, nor can in any sort bind God to repay them for that broken seruice that they haue done, nay if he would call matters to strict reckoning and account, he hath rather occasion of quarell against them, for disgracing and defiling the works that he hath wrought in them.

^a Aug. Enchirid. cap. 64. Sic spiritus Dei excitantur ut etiam spiritus sui, &c. tanquam filij hominum quibusdam moribus humanis deficiant ad seipfos, &c.

6. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins fourth property is, That the worke and reward be equall in proportion: If he vnderstand Arithmetically proportion, that is, that they be equall in quantity, to wit, the one to be as great, or of as long continuance as the other: then we denie this kinde of equality to be requisite to merit: there is another sort of proportion, called by the Philosopher 5. Ethic. Geometricall: and the equality of that is taken by a reasonable correspondence of the one vnto the other: as when a good office is giuen vnto a Citizen of desert, it may be that the honour and commodity of the office is farre greater, then was the merit of the man: yet he being as well able to discharge it as an other, and hauing better deserued it, is holden in true iustice worthie of it: In like manner in a game where masteries are tried, the prize is giuen vnto him that doth best, not because the value of the reward is iust as much woorth, as that act of the man who winneth it: but for that such actiuitie is esteemed woorthy of such a recompence. Now the crowne of heavenly glory, is likened by Saint Paule, vnto a Garland in a game: where he saith, That we all runne, but one caneth away the prize. And, he that striueth for the maisterie, is not crowned, vnlesse he strive strive lawfully. It is also resembled vnto places of honor: I will place thee ouer much. And, I goe to prouide you places. Mat. 15.

Ioh. 14.

Grace is also in many places of Scripture compared to seede: For the seede of God tarieth in him. But a litle seede cast into good ground, and well manured, bringeth forth abundance of corne. Briefly, then such equality as there is betweene the well deserving subiect and the office, betweene him that striveth lawfully and the crowne, between the seede and the corne, is betweene the reward of heauen, and the merit of a true seruant of God. Mat. 13.
1. Joh. 3-

And thus much of M. Perkins first Argument, more indeede to explicate the nature and condition of merit, then that his reason nakedly proposed, did require it.

R. ABBOT.

The proportion that maketh merit or desert, must be Arithmetical, wherein the worke must fully equall the reward, though not in greatnesse and continuance, yet in value and worth. If the one in that sort do not counterpoise the other, the one cannot bee said to bee deserued by the other. But there is no proportion at all either Arithmetical or Geometricall, betwixt that that is finite and that that is infinite; therefore none at all betwixt the worke of man and the reward of heauen, the one being euerie way finite, the other in continuance infinite. So then Matter Bishops Geometricall proportion and reasonable correspondance is excluded also, because^a the grace (or gift) of Gods reward, as Fulgenius saith, doth so much there abound, as that incomparably & vnspokeably it exceedeth all the merit of the will and worke of man, albeit it bee good and giuen vnto him of God. There is no reasonable correspondance where the one incomparably and vnspokeably exceedeth all the merit and desert of the other. The same is imported by Saint Bernard, who hauing said, that mens meritis are not such as that life eternall is due vnto the of right, giueth reason thereof, beside that that I mentioned before:^b For what are all meritis to so great glory? M. Bishop will haue vs think that he did amisse to aske such a questiō, because there is as he saith such a reasonable correspondance betwixt the one & the other, as that the one cōtrary to S. Bernards sentence, is iustly & duly deserued by the other. And in the same sort doth he cōtrol Macarius,

^a Fulgent. ad Monim. lib. 1. Tantum ibi gratia diuina retributionis exuberat: ut incomparabiliter et a quo ineffabiliter omne meritum quomus bonis & ex Deo data humane voluntati & operatiōnis excedat ^b Ber. in Annunciat. Ser. 1. Quid sunt omnia merita ad tantam gloriam?

c Macar. homil.
 15 Siquis ab eo
 tempore quo cō-ditus est Adams
 usque ad finē mū-
 di mili. asses cōera diabolum & omnes dolores cruciatuq; pertulisset, nihil
 magnum fecisset respectu glorie
 quā consequatur
 est. & in qua infinita seculis cū Christo regnabit.

d 1. Cor. 9. 9.

who affirmeth, that though a man from the time that Adam was created euen to the end of the world, were in warfare aganſt the diuell, and did suffer all afflictions and sorowes, yet should he do no great matter in comparison to the glory which he shall receiue, being to reigne with Christ world without end. Now thē because all reasonable correspondance is quite sunke, Maister Bishops merit is quite drowned, and his deuce of Geometrical proportion will not serue his turne. But we are here to note the notable stupiditie of this merit-monger Pharisee, who maketh the like correspondance betwixt the merit of man and the reward of heauen, as is betwixt the well deseruing subiect, and an office bestowed on him, betwixt him that striueth lawfully and the crowne; betwixt the seede and the corne increasing thereof. Who would thinke that he could be so absurd, so basely to proportion those ^d good things which neither eie hath seene nor eare hath heard, nor haue entred into mans heart, which God hath prepared for them that loue him? And yet euen in these comparisons how farre is he beside the stoole? For first we know that subiects do not challenge offices at their Princes hands, by right and title of merit and desert, but by request of fauour and grace. Whatsoeuer a man hath done, he hath done the duty of a subiect, and it is at the discretion and pleasure of the Prince, to consider of that he hath done; and what is it to him, if his Prince bestow the office which he desireth, vpon a man of meaner quality and woorth then he thinketh himselfe to be? But if the honour and commodity of the office be farre greater, as M. Bishop saith, thē the merit of the man, shall we not think that he meriteth a dagger & a bell, that will go about hereby to approue a title of merit and desert with God? For if the reward of heauen be farre greater then the merit of man, why doth he seeke to make good our meriting thereof? As touching his second comparison of games & triall of maisteries, he might easily conceiue, that the prize ex conditō stādeth good to him that winneth it, but there is no question of the value or woorth of it, which haply is much lesse then to counteruaile the labour and paines that is bestowed for the gaining of it. As in the games of Olympus, the most famous that euer were in the world, the prize was but an Oline garland, nothing for worth in cōparison of the pains & expence mē were at, to prepare thēselues, & to trauel for the obtaining thereof: so that Tigranes whē Mardonius had perswaded Zerxes

to warre against the Grecians, hearing thereof said vnto him.
 ° Good Lord, Mardonius, what kinde of men hast thou brought vs to fight against, who trie maisteries not for gaining of money, but for shew-ing of prowesse and valour? So that the correspondence betwixt e Polydor. Virgil. de inuent. return
lib. 2. ca. 13.
 the gamester and the prize may be this, that the labour and paines on the one side is much, and the prize on the other side worth iust nothing, nor is esteemed at all for the value and wotth of it, and yet hereby forsooth Maister Bishop will set forth vnto vs a correspondence betwixt the merit of our workes, and the reward of heauen. As for the places of Scripture that hee citeth hereof, the Apostle thereby setteth foorth the consequence and order of the worke and the reward, God hauing designed the one to the other, as the prize is proposed in the game, but as touching value and worth, as touching merit and desert he intendeth nothing therein. His third comparison is, that the grace of God is compared to seede; as where Saint Iohn saith: this seede remaineth in him.
 In which place Saint Iohn hauing said, that hee that is borne of God f 1. Iohn. 3. 9. sinneb not, that is, finally and vterly, giueth reason thereof: for that being once borne of God, though he do greuoussly fall, as did Da-uid and Peter, and many other, yet there is still a seede remaining in him, which albeit for the time it seeme couered and dead, yet shall reuiue and spring againe, and bring forth fruit vnto God: and what is this to M. Bishops merit? He telleth vs, that by seede is imported the grace of God, but hee doth not shew vs, that by seede is imported the merit of man. To what end then is this brought in, but to let vs see that his head is idle, and doth not well aduise what he hath to say? Well, wee must conceiue his meaning by that hee saith, that a little seede bringeth forth abundance of corne. But wee must aske him whether there be that reasonable correspondence betwixt the seed and the increase, as that the one in worth should bee esteemed with the other? If M. Bishop should offer that correspondence to the husbandman for his crop, would hee not iudge him with his Geometricall proportion to bee scarcely correspondent to a wise man? Shall we then think him wel in his wits, that thinketh the seed of his merits to be a valuable consideration for the receiuing of the crop of heauenly rewards? Again, the husbandmans increase of his seed whence proceedeth it? Doth he by sowing his seed, expect it as a matter of merit & desert? Is it not wholly the blessing of God that sendeth the early and latter raine, and giueth strength to the earth to bring forth increase thereof: Euen so is it in all the reward that God bestoweth vpon vs. We sow the seed of our good works, but of theselues they yeeld vs no fruit; there is no worth or merit in them to require wages at Gods hands, but it is only the mercy and bounty of God whereby we shall reape the increase that wee expect thereof. Thus M. Bishop can find no meanes to thriue. Hee hath bene a farmer, and a free-man, and an officer, and a gamester, and a seedeman, and yet euery where he is crossed in his merit, and can no where light vpon a foundation to set it firme and sure. And yet marke, gentle Reader, how with his reasonable correspondence he minceth the matter, ouer that other his fellowes do. The Rhemists speake plaine English, as wee haue heard before, and tell vs that their works are iruely and properly meritorious, and not onely reasonably, but fully worthy of euerlasting life, that they haue a right to heauen and deserue it worily, and that God by his justice, oweth it vnto them. These are downe-right lads, that sticke not to vtter their mindes, but M. Bishop he commeth in paltring with his Geometrical proportion, and reasonable correspondence, and like a young nouice is abashed to say all, and by that meanes if good heede be not taken, is likely to marre the market of merit, to the harme of himselfe and the rest of them. Hitherto then it appeareth, that M. Perkins did rightly assigne those foure conditions or circumstances to be required in a meritorious work? which standing good as they do, there can be no merit; because al the good that we do is Gods; because in all we do but our duty, because that that we do doth not fully satisfie our duty, nor hath any due proportion or correspondence to the reward of heauen.

7. W. BISHOP.

His second testimony is, God will shew mercy vpon thousands, in them that loue him and keepe his commandements. Hence he reasoneth thus: Where reward is giuen vpon mercy, there is no merit: but reward is giuen vpon mercy, as the text proueth, ergo.

Answer: That in that text is nothing, touching the reward of heauen which is now in question: God doth for his louing seruants sake, shew mercy vnto their children or friends, either in temporall things, things, or in calling them to repentance, and such like: but doth neuer for one mans sake, bestow the kingdom upon another; vntlesse the party himselfe be first made worthy of it.

That confirmation of his, that Adam by his continuall and perfect obedience, could not haue procured a further increase of Gods fauor, is both besides the purpose, and most false: for as wel he, as euery good mans obedience, by good vse of Gods gifts, might day by day increase them: And that no man thinke that in Paradise it should haue beene otherwise, S. Augustine saith expressly, That in the felicity of Paradise, righteousness preferred, should haue ascended into better. And Adam finally and al his posterity (if he had not fallen) should haue bin from Paradise translated aline into the Kingdome of heauen; this by the way.

In Enchir. cap. 25

R. ABBOT.

What, when God promiseth mercy to thousands in them that loue him and keepe his commandments, doth he meane his mercy to their children only, and not to themselues? and is the mercy that is promised only for earth, and not for heauen? Here M. Bishop as it appeareth, was hardly bestead, when he could find no way to get out; but by such a senselesse and absurd shift. But to take away that corrupt glose of his, the Propheet David expressly referreth al reward to Gods mercy. ^a Thou O Lord art mercifull, or mercy O Lord is to bee

a Psal 62. 12.

ascribed vnto thee, for thou rewardest euery man according to his work.

Which words are generall of euery man, not signifying that which God doth to some for others sake, but that which euery man receiueth for his owne worke, and import not onely reward of temporall things, because they are the words which the Scripture euery where vseth to signifie the reward that shall be giuen at that day. Now then there is no merit either in things temporall or eternall, because it is of mercy that God rewardeth euery man according to his workes. And thus of Gods eternall mercy, the same Propheet alluding to the words of the commaundement, saith in another place: ^b The mercy of the Lord is for euer and euer vpon them that

b Psal 103. 17

feare him, and his righteousnesse towards their childrens children, euen such as keepe his covenant, and thinke vpon his commaundements to do them. It is Gods mercy then wherby to them that feare him and keepe his commandments, hee giueth reward for euer and euer.

Thewing himselfe iust also in performance of the same promise of his mercy to their childrens children. But could not the blind man here see, how by his owne answer hee doth circūuent himselfe? The place he saith must be vnderstood of temporall graces and benefites, not of the reward of heauen. So then by mercy God bestoweth the reward of temporall benefites, but by merit hee bestoweth the Kingdome of heauen. Now how strange a thing is it and improbable, that merits should extend to the purchase of the Kingdome of heauen, and yet should not serue to purchase temporall benefites here vpon the earth? If glasse be of so great price, how much more worth is a most pretious iewel? If earth be so much worth, as that mercy onely can yeeld it, shall we thinke that we haue merit to deserue heauen? But we will leaue the man to his folly: it may be when he hath better considered of the matter, we shall haue of him some wiser answer. In the meane time we acknowledge, that God doth not for one mans sake bestow the Kingdome of heauen vpon another, but yet of mercy he bestoweth it both vpon the one and vpon the other, both vpon the Fathers and vpon the children, euen all that feafe him and keepe his commandements. And sith of mercy he bestoweth it, certaine it is that they haue no merit to deserue and chalenge it, who soeuer they be that loue him and keepe his commandements. That which hee saith of Adam, hee saith it without booke, and hath no warrant for that hee saith. As for the place of Austine, though it containe nothing but what is probable, yet we answer to it by a rule which the same S. Austine hath prescribed otherwhere, that where there is controuersie of a very obscure matter, there being no certain & clear instructions of holy Scriptures to help vs therein, humane presumption is to stay it selfe, doing nothing by inclining either way.

8. W. BISHOP.

Now to the third Argument.

Scripture condemneth merit of works: The wages of sinne is death. True. But wee speake of good workes, and not of bad, which the Apostle calleth sinne: where were the mans wits? but it followeth there, That eternall life is the grace or gift of God. This is to purpose: but answered 1200. yeares past, by that famous Father Saint Augustine,

e Hieron. Sitanti vstrum, quanti pretiosissimum margaritum?

*d. Aug. de peccat.
mer. & remiss. lib.
2. ca. 36. Vbi de re obscurissima dis-
putatur, non adiu-
uantibus diuina-
rum scripturarum
certis clarisq; do-
cumentis, cohibere
se debet humana
presumptio, nihil faciens in alteram partem declinando.*

Rom 6.

in diuers places of his most learned Workes. I will note one or two of them.

First, thus here ariseth no small doubt, which by Gods helpe I will now discusse. For if eternall life be rendred vnto good workes, as the holy Scripture doth most clearly teach, (note) how thē can it be called grace? when grace is giuen freely, and not repayed for workes: and so pursuing the points of difficulty at large in the end resolueth: that eternall life is most truly rendred vnto good workes, as the due reward of them: but because those good workes could not haue been done, vntlesse God had before freely through Christ, bestowed his grace vpon vs, therefore the same eternall life, is also truly called grace: because the first roote of it was Gods free gift.

De grat. & lib. arb. cap. 8.

The very same answer doth he giue, where he hath these words: Eternall life is called grace, not because it is not redred vnto merits, but for that those merits to which it is rendred were giuen, in which place he crosseth M. Perkins proportion most directly, affirming, that S. Paule might haue said truly, eternall life is the pay or wages of good workes: but to hold vs in humility partly, and partly to put a difference betweene our saluation and damnation, chose rather to say that the gift of God was life eternall: because of our damnation, we are the whole and onely cause, but not of our saluation, but principally the grace of God, the onely fountaine of merit, and all good workes.

Epist. 106.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins alledged the whole words of the Apostle, not to argue onely from the assertion expressed in the latter part, that ^a eternall life is the gift of God, but also from the connexion of the whole sentence, that whereas it being said, that the wages of sinne is death, the sequelle of the speech, if there were any merit in our workes, should haue bene, The wages of righteousnesse is eternall life, he saith not so, but the gift of God is eternall life: and so both by that which he doth not say, and also by that which he doth say, sheweth, that there is no place to be giuen to the merit and desert of man. Now Maister Bishop taketh the first part of the sentence by it selfe, The wages of sinne is death, as if Maister Perkins had thence argued against merit, and asketh, Where were the mans wits? Surely his owne wits were not so farre from home, but that he

^a Rom. 6. 23.

he well knew wherein the proofe stood, but we see hee is disposed sometimes to shew his apish trickes, that we may see how hee can skippe and leape about the chaine, howsoever he aduantage himselfe nothing at all thereby. But at his pleasure hee produceth the words which M. Perkins properly intended, Eternall life is the gift of God through Iesus Christ our Lord. Hee telleth vs, that the place is answered 1200 years past by S. Austin in diuers places of his works. Now indeed it is true, that S. Austin in diuers places of his works hath handled those words, but the spite is, that in none of all those places he hath said any thing to serue M. Bishop for an answer. This may appeare by that that he saith in the very same book, and very next Chapter to that that M. Bishop citeth: b Whereas the Apostle might say, and rightly say, The wages of righteousness is eternall life, yet he chose rather to say, The grace of God is eternall life, that we may understand, that not for our merits, but for his owne mercies sake hee bringeth vs to eternall life, whereof it is said in the Psalm, He crownerh thee in mercy and compassion. Hereby it may seeme, that S. Austin meant to yeeld M. Bishop small helpe by his expounding of this place to the maintenance of their merits. But in the chapter cited by M. Bishop, he propoundeth the question how eternall life should be called the grace of God, seeing that it is elsewhere said, that God will render vnto every man according to his workes. The difficulty he sheweth to arise of this, that that is called grace which is not rendered vnto workes, but is freely giuen. Whereof he citeth the words of the Apostle: If it be of grace it is not of workes; otherwise grace is no grace. Then hee solueth the question thus, that wee must understand that our good workes to which eternall life is rendered, do belong also to the grace of God, signifying that God of his mercy intending to giue vs eternall life, doth by the same mercy giue vs those good workes to which he will giue it. For conclusion of that Chapter, he saith consequently: that because our good life is nothing else but the grace of God, therefore undoubtedly eternall life, which is rendered vnto good life is the grace of God: for that is freely giuen, because that is freely giuen to which it is giuen. But good life to which eternall life is giuen, is onely grace; eternall life which is giuen to good life, because it is the reward thereof, is grace for grace, as it were a reward for righteousness, that it may be true, as it is true, that God will render to every man according to his workes. In all which discourse plainely hee sheweth,

that

b Aug. de grat. & lib. a bit. cap. 9. Cum possit dicere & recte dicere, Stipendium iustitie vna a eterna, maluit tamen dicere Gratia Dei & c. ut intelligimus non pro meritis nostris Deum nos ad vna eternam sed pro misericordie suae prodicere, de quo, & c. e Ibid. cap. 8. Si vna eterna bonis opribus redditur gratia non operibus rediatur, sed gra is detur, & c. d Intelligamus & ipsa bona opera nostra quibus eterna redditur vita ad Dei gratiam perincre. e Vna nostra bona nihil aliud est qua Dei gratia sine dubio & c. vna eterna que bonae vite redditur Dei gratia est: & ipsa enim gratis nata est, quia gratis data est illi cui datur, sed illi cui datur tantummodo gratia est; hec autem que illi datur quoniam premittitur eius est, gratia est pro gratia, tanquam merces pro iustitia ut vpium sit, & c.

that good life is the grace & gift of God, and when God rendereth thereto eternall life, he doth but adde one grace to another grace, which although it be as it were a reward for righteousness, yet is indeed but grace for grace. Which fully accordeth with that that was cited out of him before, that Whatsoever God promised, hee promised to men unworthy, that it might not be promised as a reward to works, but being grace, might according to the name be freely giue, because to live iustly, so far as a man can live iustly, is not a matter of mans merit, but of the gift of God. So that although eternall life be as it were a reward of righteousness in consequence and order, yet absolutely to speake it is not so, because both the one and the other are only the grace and gift of God. Now if God by his free gift intending to vs eternall life, do giue vs his grace to leade a iust and holy life, that thereto he may giue it, haue we reason hereupon with M. Bishop, of mercie whereby we shold glorifie God, to build vp merit and desert for the glorifying of our selues? or shal we rather subscribe that which S. Austine saith for conclusion of that whole disputatiō concerning that place of the Apostle, as before I cited, that it is not for our merits that God bringeth vs to eternal life, but for his own mercies sake. The other place cited by M. Bishop is wholly to the same effect: When God crowneth our merits, he crowneth nothing else but his owne gifts. For as from the beginning we obtained mercy to be faithfull, so in the end he shall crowne vs in compassion and mercy. Whence eternal life is called grace for no other cause, but because it is freely gisen, not for that it is not rendered to merits, but for that the merits thēselues are giuen to which it is giuen. In which there is nothing that giueth any shew of fauour to M. Bishop but the very name of merits, but that that helpeth him nothing shall appeare hereafter, S. Austine meaning thereby meerly good workes, without any conceipt of merit as it is now vnderstood in the Church of Rome. Yea and that appeareth plainely here also: for if God in crowning merits, crowne nothing but his owne gifts, then those merits are not truly and properly so called, because a man cannot properly merit at Gods hāds by that that is to him nothing else but the gift of God. And this S. Austine sheweth further in that that foloweth: It is true righteousness (Supra lect. 2.

August. in 1. psal.
109.

g Idem Epist. 105.
Cum deus coronat
merita nostrā, nihil aliud coronat quā numera sua sicut enim ab in. o. si-da misericordiā
e n. centi sumus,
non quia fideles
eramus, sed ut
essemus, sic in fine
coronabit nos in misericordiā & misericordiā. Unde
de e. vita ipsa aterne gratia non occupatur, non ob-
laudat nisi quia gra-
tu datur, nec ideo
quia meritū nos
datur. sed quia
dona sunt & ipsa
merita quibus da-
tur.

h Ibid. Cui debe-
tur vita aeterna
vera iustitia est.
Si autem vera
iustitia est ex te
non est: si facta

est, descendens à Patre luminum, &c. Quia proprie d. homo, si accepturus ei vitam æternam, iustitiam quā in seipsum non est, sed tibi gratia est, cui gratia est & ipsa iustitia. Tibi enim tanquam debita reddere, ut, si ex te tibi esset iustitia cui debetur. Nunc ergo, &c. ut supra. Sc. 3.

to which eternall life is due. But if it be true, it is not of thy selfe, it is from above, descending frō the Father of lights: that thou mightst haue it, if at least thou hast it, verily thou hast receiued it. For what hast thou that thou hast not receiued? Wherefore o man, if thou be to receiue eternall life, it is in deed the wages of righteousness, but to thee it is grace to whom righteousnesse it selfe also is grace. It should be rendered as due vnto thee, if of thy selfe thou hadst the righteousnesse to which it is due. Now therefore of his fulnes we receiue not only grace, &c. but also grace for grace, &c. If eternall life be merited and deserued by vs, then to vs it is the wages of righteousnesse; then it is rendred as due vnto vs. But S. Austine though he confesseth, that it may be said, that it is the wages of righteousnesse, yet denieth it to be so to vs: and denieth that it is rendred as due vnto vs. Therefore it must necessarily be granted, that it is not merited and deserued by vs: it can no way be auoided, but that if it be deserued by vs, it is due vnto vs: but it is not due vnto vs, saith S. Austine, because the righteousnesse is none of ours. There is therefore on our behalfe no merit, no desert to which it should be accounted due. Thus S. Austine wholly bendeth himselfe to establish the truth of the grace of God, against the Pelagian hereticks, and saith nothing whereof M. Bishop may inferre the doctrine of merit, which he together with them maintaineth against the grace of God. But for the further declaring of S. Austines mind, I will obserue that one sentence of his vpon the Psalmes: To thee being a sinner is granted forgiveness; the spirit of iustification is giuen thee; there is giuen thee charitie and love, whereby to do al good things: and beyond al these things, he will giue thee also eternall life, and the societie of the Angels, all of mercy. Do not talke of thy merits anywhere, because euen thy merits also are his gifts. In which words it plainly appeareth, that albeit S. Austine useth the name of merit, according to the language of his time, yet he did it not in any such sense, but as still intending, that both in the beginning, and in the proceeding and in the end all is wholly and onely to be ascribed vnto Gods mercie. But M. Bishop telleth vs heere that S. Austine crosseth M. Perkins proportion, in that he affirmeth, that S. Paul might haue said, that eternall life is the wages of good workes. Wherein he doth but deceiue himselfe: because to speake simply it is true, that eternall life is the stipend and wages of true and perfect righteousnesse, according to the sentence of the law: He that

1 Aug. in Psal.

144. Data est venia peccatori, datus spiritus iustificationis, data est charitas & dilectio, in qua omnia bona facias, & super haec dabit & vitam eternam & societatem Angelorum: totum demeritoria. Merita tua nisi quia iactas, quia & ipsa tua merita illius dona sunt. & Gal. 3. 12.

doth these things shall live in them; and yet it is so but onely by covenant and condision, not by merit, because in doing all we should do but that that we are bound to do. But as hath been already said, S. Austin, though he graunt that simply it might haue bene so tearmed, yet denieth it to be so to vs. It is indeed the stipend or wages of righteousness, but to thee it is grace, that is, to thee it is no stipend. Now this is spoken vpon a supposall of entire and perfect righteousness; but take withall the exceptions that S. Austine putteth in by the way, as we haue seene: if at least thou haue it; and againe, so farre as a man can live iustly. And let it be considered herewith, which out of Austin hath bene abundantly declared in the former question, that there is no righteousness so perfect in this life, as that therby we can be found iust in the sight of God, and then merit and stipend shall be excluded, not onely for that our righteousness is the gift of God, but also for that we haue not that righteousness to which the stipend and wages of righteousness should be due. But let vs here consider the reasons which M. Bishop setteth downe in S. Austines name, why he did not say, The wages of righteousness is eternall life: partly, saith he, to hold vs in humility. Well, but yet it was not S. Austines meaning, that the Apostle wold keepe vs in humility by cōcealing that that is true, but by withholding vs from conceiuing proudly of our selues that that is not true: lest (saith S. Austin) righteousnesse should advance it selfe as of any merit that man should haue thereby. Againe, partly (saith he) to put difference betweene saluation & damnation. This reason he maketh of his owne, S. Austin hath it not: but what is that difference? Obserue it well, gentle Reader, for herein is the secret, and thou shalt see the lewdnesse of these wretched men in abusing the name of S. Austin to the colouring of their falshood. We are (forsooth) the whole and only cause of our damnation, but not of our saluation, but principally the grace of God. The grace of God he saith is principally the cause of our saluation, but not the whole and only cause: for we must vnderstand, that we our selues by our Free will are a part of the cause of our saluation. Yea vpon Free will they hang the effect of the grace of God, & from thence do they deriue vnto man that merit whereby he doth deserue eternall life. For they know well, that man cannot be said to merit any thing by that that is wholly the gift of God and therefore for the vpholding of merit and desert, they are so

Si tamen habes.
Epist. 105.
in quantum
homo potest iuste vivere. In v. sal.
 109.

Ne iustitia de humano se extol-
letur bono merito:

eager and earnest for the maintenance of free will. They walke in this behalfe in the verie steppes of the Pelagian heretikes, who as Prosper recordeth, alledged for defense of Free will,^o that men can haue no commendation nor merit, who are faithfull by the gift of grace. So S. Hierome bringeth in the Heretike saying resolutely: ^p No man shall take away from me free will, lest if God bee my helper in my workes the reward be not due to mee, but to him that worketh in mee. Euen so Popish merit standeth vpon free will: for ^q men, say the Rheimists, worke by their owne Free will, and thereby deserue their saluation. So saith, Alphonsus de Castro,^r In that we by free will consent to Gods motion, who yet had it in our power to dissent, a reward and wages is due vnto vs, and thence is our merit. In like sort Andradius telleth vs, that^s they are called our merits, because we freely & voluntarily vndertake those actions whereby wee merit with God. Now of this poisonfull doctrine whereby man is made partaker with God in the glorie of our saluation, they would make S. Austine a partaker and patron with them, who in condemning the Pelagian heresie, condemned the same, and challengeth our good workes which he calleth merits, wholly and only vnto God. So he saith, that^t all our good worke or merit is wrought vnto vs by grace onely, that^u all the merit of the iust through the whole life of this world is grace. ^v That thou art iust, saith he, repute it wholly to mercy. ^w That that we are and haue in goodnesse, we haue it wholly of him. To that purpose he alledgeth against the Pelagians a speech of Cyprians, requiring that^x no man proudly & arrogantly assume any thing to himselfe, nor call the glory of confessing or suffering his own, that whilest humble and lowly confession goeth before, and all wholly is yeilded vnto God, it may be granted vnto vs by his mercy, what soeuer wee humbly request in the feare of God. Now according to those words of yeelding or attributing all wholly vnto God, he saith in the same place, ^y We liue more safely if we attribute all wholly to God, and doe not commit our selues partly to God and partly to our selues. For reason whereof hee saith anon after, that b after the fall of man, God would not haue it belong to any thing but to o Prosper de lib. arbit. Afferunt nec huiusmodi habere eo, nec meritum qui ex dono gratiæ sicut fideles. p Hieron aduer. Pelag. Mihi nullus auferre poterit arbitrij libertatē, ne si in operibus meis Deus adiutor extiterit non mihi debeatur merces sed ei qui in me operatus est. q Rhemif. Annot. in Rom. 9. 14. r Alphons de Castro adu. heret. lib. 7. tit. Gratia. Ex hoc quod nos monitioni illius consentimus, qui tamen dissentire poteramus, debetur nobis merces & premium, & inde meritum nostrum. s Andrad Orb. explicat. lib. 6. t Costra merita dicuntur quia liberē & spontē illas actiones suscipimus, quibus aliud Deum promeremur. u Aug. Epist. 105. Omne bonum meritum nostrum non in nobis facit nisi gratia. w Idem. Hypog. lib. 3. Iusto unper totam seculi vitam meritum omne est gratia. x De ver. Dom. Serm. 7. Totum reputa quod iustus es pietati. y De verb. Apost. Serm. 16. Totum quod sumus & quod habemus boni ab illo habemus. z Idem de bono perscu cap. 6. ex Cypriano de Orat. Dom. Nequis sibi superbe arroganterque aliquod assumas, nequis aut confessionis aut passionis gloriam suam dicat, &c. ut dum precedit humilis & submissa confessio, & datur totum Deo quicquid suppliciter cum Dei amore petitur, ipsius pietate preletur. a Ibid. Tutiores viciniuis si totum Deo dimus, & non nos illi ex parte, & nobis ex parte committimus. b Ibid. cap. 7. Post casum hominis non nisi ad gratiam suam Deus pertinere voluit, ut homo accedat ad eum; neque nisi ad gratiam suam pertinere voluit, ut homo non recedat ab eo.

his grace that we come vnto him, nor wold haue it to belong to any thing but his grace, that we do not depart from him. And to those words of Cyprian he alludeth in diuers and sundry places, as namely, where he saith, that therefore the Apostle saith, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercie, that all wholly may be attributed vnto God, discoursing at large, that our willing & our running is not to be diuided betwixt the will of man and the mercie of God, because then as it is said on the one side, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercie, because the will of man alone sufficeth not, so on the other side it may be said, It is not of God that sheweth mercie, but of him that willeth and him that runneth, because the mercie of God alone sufficeth not. Now it were wickednesse thus to crosse and contradict the Apostles words, and therefore doth he conclude, that all is wholly to be ascribed vnto Gods mercie. See then the good dealing, or rather the lewd falshood of M. Bishop and his fellowes, who teaching for the maintenāce of their doctrine of merits, that good works are principally indeede of God, but yet partly of our selues, do alledge S. Austine for the defense thereof, who constantly teacheth to the vtter ouerthrow of merits, that our good workes are wholly and onely of the grace of God, and in no part of our selues. This is one thing for which we iustly detest them, as setting vp the glorie of man in stead of the glory of God; the righteousnesse of man in stead of the righteousnesse of God, and so by bearing man in hand with a merit of eternal life, do bereaue them of Gods mercie, by which onely they should attaine the same. And yet all this is graced and shadowed with goodly faire words, as we see here by M. Bishop, who hauing said that the grace of God is principally the cause of our saluation, and therein implied that our free will also is partly though not principally a cause thereof, yet addeth, that the grace of God is the onely fountaine of merit and all good workes. If grace be the onely fountaine of all good workes, then all good workes proceed onely from grace, and if onely from grace, then what can we merit or deserue thereby? If we merit and deserue thereby, then they are partly of vs, and of our free will, & then grace is not the only fountains of merit and all good workes. Therefore let him not lye in this sort; let him speake as he meaneth, & acknowledge that which they all maintaine, that good workes are therefore our merits, because they proceed

c Enchir. cap. 32.
 Propterea dilectum
 Non volens. &c. ut detur totum Deo.
 See of Freewill,
 Sect. 150

proceed from our Free will, and are no otherwise our merits, neither do we otherwise deserue by them, but as they proceed from our freewill. Yea when the grace of God hath done all that appertaineth to it to do, all is nothing with them vnclesse man adioyne thereto the worke of his owne free will. Either let him renounce his doctrin of Free wil, or else let him leaue with colourable words thus to delude and mocke the simple and ignorant reader, in saying that which he thinketh not, that the grace of God is the onely fountaine of merit and all good works.

9. W. BISHOP.

Ad Eph. 2.
Ad Tit. 3.

Now to those texts cited before about iustification, We are saued freely, not of our selues, or by the workes of righteousness, which we haue done. I haue often answered that the Apostle speakeith of workes done by our owne forces, without the helpe of Gods grace: and therefore they cannot serue against workes done, in and by grace.

R. ABBOT.

a Eph. 2. 1.

The oftinessse of his answer sheweth the corruptiō of his conscience, that was not moued with so often repeating a manifest vnruth. What, was it the Apostles meaning to teach the Ephesians, that they were not saued by the workes which they did, when they yet were ^a dead (as he saith) in trespasses and sinnes, or had the Ephesians any such opinion that the Apostle should need to reforme in them? Did they renounce their former workes to come to Christ that they might be saued by him, and did they afterwarde grow againe to a concept of being saued by their former workes? These are grosse and palpable vnruths, neither hath the Scripture any thing at al, that may giue any shew for warrant of such constructiō. Nay, as hath bene before said, when the Apostle hauing said, ^b Not of workes least any man should boast, addeth as a reason and prooffe hereof: ^c for we are his workmanship created in Christ Iesus vnto good workes, &c. as if he should haue said, We cannot be said to be saued by workes, because our workes are none of ours, but Gods works in vs, he plainly sheweth, that not onely workes before grace, but after also are excluded from being any cause of our saluation. The place to Titus likewise resteth our saluation only vpon ^d Gods mercy and

Ver. 9.

c Ver. 10.

d. Tit. 3. 5.

and therefore leaueth no place to our good workes, and therefore it is vsed by S. Bernard not only in this day for an exception against workes before grace, but ^e that we may know at that day, that not for the workes of righteousnesse which we haue done, but of his owne mercie he hath saued vs. e Bernard. in Cant. (cr. 50.

IO. W. BISHOP.

Now to that text which he budleth vp together with the rest, although it deserued a better place, being one of their principall pillars in this controuersie: it is, The sufferings of this life are not worthy of the glorie to come. The strength of this obiection lieth in a false translation of these words, *Axia pro te in doxan equal to that glory, or in the misconstruction of them: for we grant (as hath bin already declared) that our afflictions and sufferings be not equal in length or greatnesse with the glorie of heauen; for our afflictions be but for the short space of this life, & they cannot be so great as will bee the pleasure in heauen; notwithstanding we teach that this short and lesser labour employed by a righteous man in the seruice of God, doth merue the other greater and of longer continuance, and that by the said Apostles plaine words, for (saith he) That tribulation which in this present life is but for a moment and light, doth worke about measure exceedingly an euerlasting waight of glory in vs. The reason is, that iust mens workes issue out of the fountaine of grace, which giveth a heauenly value vnto his workes. Againe, it maketh him a quicke member of Christ, and so receiuing influence from his head, his workes are raised to an higher estimate: it consecrateth him also a temple of the holy Ghost, and so maketh him partaker of the heauenly nature, as S. Peter speaketh: which addes a worth of heauen to his workes. Neither is that glory in heauen, which any pure creature attaineth vnto of infinite dignitie, as M. Perkins fableth, but hath his certaint bounds & measure, according vnto each mans merits, otherwise it wold make a man equal to God in glorie: for there can be no greater then infinite, as all learned men do confesse.*

Rom. 8.

2. Cor. 4.

2. Pet. 1.

R. ABBOT.

These words of S. Paule to the Romanes, ^a The afflictions of this time are not worthy of the glorie that shall be reuealed upon vs, are verie directly cited, and are as pregnant to the matter here in hand.

2 Rom 8. 18.

M. Bishop saith, that that text is one of our principall pillars in this controuersie; and indeed it is so strong a pillar, as that all M. Bishops strength is not able to shake it from vpholding that which we profess to teach by it. But yet pro forma he chargeth vs with false translation and misconstruction. He telleth vs, that we should not say, worthy of the glorie, but equall to the glory. The greeke word, as Gramarians note, doth by his originall signifie those things which being put into the ballance, are of equall waight and poise one to the other, and from thence is it taken to signifie worth or worthinesse because there is a full correspondencie of value betwixt that that is said to be worthy, and the thing that is worthy of. And according to this vsuall signification of the word, do we translate, not worthy of the glory, &c. and though we should translate not equal, yet must we perforce vnderstand it as touching equality in worth. And heerein their own vulgar translation doth iustifie vs, Non sunt condignae passionis huius temporis ad futuram gloriam, &c. that is, as the Rhemists translate it, The passions of this time are not condigne to the glorie to come, &c. for what is condigne but equall or comparable in worth; whence they take their meritum condigni or ex condigno, to bee that which in value and worth is fully equiualent to the reward. Therefore Arias Montanus ad verbum readeth it thus, Non digna passionis nunc temporis ad futuram gloriam, &c. The sufferings of this time are not worthy to the glorie to come: which what is it but the same as to say, they are not comparable in worth to the glory to come? Now then why doth he go about to impeach our translation, when it is thus approued by their owne? But that it may plainly appeare that we haue no way falsified or misconstrued this text, let vs see in what sort the auntient Fathers haue cited and applyed the same. Saint Austin readeth the words thus, ^b The sufferings of this time are unworthy to the glory to come: and saying in another place that ^c the holy Martyrs are not to be proud as if they did any worthy matter for the participatiō of that country where is eternall and true happinesse: alledgeth afterwards for reason hereof these words, Because as the Apostle saith, the suffrings of this time are unworthy, &c. In the very same sort doth ^d Ambrose cite the same words in sundry places, and although

b. August. lib. 83
quest. 67. Iudiginae sunt passionis huius temporis, &c.

c. Idem de ciuit. Dei lib. 5. cap. 18. Nullo modo superbiā sancti Martyres, tanquā dignū aliquid participatione facerint; ubi aeterna est & vera felicitas. Et sub finem: superbia ne extollamur; Quoniam sicut dicit Apostolus. Iudigna, &c.

d. Ambrosio de Iacob. lib. 1. cap. 6. & de Interpellat. Iob. lib. 1. cap. 1 & in Psal. 118. ser. 19.

in the text inserted in his commentary vpon the Epistle to the Romanes, he reade as the vulgar Latine doth, yet in expounding the next verse he expresseth the effect thereof thus. The Apostle hath said thus the sufferings of this time are unworthy to the glory to come. Therefore elsewhere alluding to those words, hee sayth that the Saints whē they shal begin to receiue the glorious reward of their small paines, shall know that the sufferings of this time, are unworthy to haue so great glory of eternal reward yeilded vnto them. And againe in another place, The things which we suffer in this body, are unworthy of the reward of the glory to come. Hierome vpon that place saith, that a man could do nothing comparable in worth to the beauenly glorie, albeit it were but euen such as this life is. For whatsoeuer a man shall suffer before death, it is no more then he deserued before by his sinnes. But now both his sinnes be forgiven him, and then eternall life shal be giuen, the company of Angels, the brightnesse of the Sunne, &c. Occumenius expoundeth it, that we cannot suffer any thing worthy of the reward to come, or helpe any whit thereto. Fulgentius hauing said that the gift of Gods reward doth incomparably and unspeakeably exceed all the merits of good will and worke of man, bringeth for prooffe hereof these words of the Apostle, The sufferings of this time, &c. Bernard likewise affirmeth that the merits of men are not such as that eternal life may be due vnto them of right: & asking, what are all merits to so great glory: for confirmation citeth also the same words, and addeth No not if one man did endure them all. By all which it may appeare how truly M. Bishop and his fellowes make construction of this place, that the sufferings of this time are not equall in length and greatnesse to the glory to come, but yet for value and worth they beequall to it, and the one doth merite the other, expressly contrary to their owne text and translation. But to proue this, hee alledgeth further that the Apostle saith, that this momentary & light tribulation worketh vnto vs a farre most excellent and eternall waight of glorie. Yet we find not here the thing that he would proue, that this short and light tribulation doth merite and deserue that most excellent and eternall waight of glorie: nay who doth not see, that it is plainly excluded by the words? For if our sufferings and good workes be but according to the scant and small measure of our fraile and weake condition, short in time, and light in burden,

c. Item in Rom. 8. Preteritis temporibus passiones nostras dicit ad futuram gloriam. s. Idem de bona mortis, cap. 2.

Gloria mercede laboris exigui recipere cognoscent indignas esse passiones huius temporis, quibus remuneratiois eterne gloria tanta refertur.

Idem de inscripta. David ca. 2. Indigna sunt que in hoc corpore sustinemus remuneratioe futura glorie.

H Hieronim. in Rom. 8. Reuera nihil posset hominis condignum patri gloria celesti etiam si talis esset illa qualis modo est vita. &c.

i Occumen. in Rom. 8. Non possunt quicquam futura retributione condignum aut pati aut ad illam conferre.

k Fulgent ad Monim. lib. 1. supra sect. 6.

l Bernard in Anunciat. ser. 1. supra sect. 3. in Nec si unus omnes sustineat.

n 2. Cor. 4. 17.

and on the other side, the glory to come bee exceedingly or beyond measure excellent, surely then apparent it is, that the littlenesse and lightnesse of the one can neuer in worth attaine to the vnmeasurable excellency of the other. But he will say, the one worketh the other, the affliction worketh vnto vs the glory. True, and what then? Doth the one therefore merit and deserue the other? Surely as it is said of affliction, so it may be said of them that afflict vs, that they work vnto vs an excellent and an eternal weight of glorie; and yet it cannot be said that they deserue the same for vs. Affliction worketh vnto vs glory, only as an instrumentall cause, which beyond the nature thereof God vseth amongst other means to prepare vs and fit vs to be partakers of his glory. Hee therby o Job. 33. 16. 17.

p Ofc. 14. 5.

q Heb. 12. 10.

r 2. Cor. 4. 16.

si. Cor. 11. 32.

t Chrysol. in Gen.

hom. 25. Afflictio-

ones nos inducunt

v: operemur bona

Deo que grata opera.

u Rom. 8. 28.

x August. soliloq.

cap. 28. Quibus

omnia cooperantur

in bonum et in

ipsa peccata. vide

de corrept. & gra-

tia. cap. 9.

y Ambr. de pæ-

nit. lib. 1. cap. 11.

Ipsæ se morsus suo

vulnerat & con-

stra se armat. quæ

deilitandam pu-

eravit, &c. Impe-

ran: e Christo &

diabolus ipse fit

pre. de sue custor.

z Andrad. Orthod.

explic. lib. 6. Diui-

nitatem quandam

habent necesse

est, &c.

Tantum prome-

rantur. quantum

spiritus quo ducit-

ur dignitas atq;

amplius postu-

lat.

o openeth our eares, and subdueth our pride, and healeth our rebellions, and frameth vs to understanding, and maketh vs partakers of his holinesse, and whilest our outward man is corrupted, our inner man is renewed from day to day. In a word, when we are iudged, wee are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world.

t Afflictions (saith Chrysostome) do induce vs to those things that are good and acceptable vnto God. And thus the Apostle telleth vs, that all things worke together for good vnto them that loue God: yea saith S. Austin, even their very sinnes: and yet Master Bishop will not say, that all things and specially their sinnes do merite, and deserue the same good vnto them. Yea the diuell himselfe, by the ouerruling hand of God, is made to worke vnto vs our saluation and glorie, whilest (as Ambrose saith) he armeth vs against himselfe, and by the commandement of Christ is made the keeper of him.

whom hee would make a pray; whilest by being exercisid with his temptations, wee grow stronger in faith, and patience, and obedience, and so more and more able to resist him. Therefore neither haue these words of the Apostle any thing for M. Bishops turne that our sufferings heere doe merite the glory of the life to come.

Yet, as if hee had firmly proued his merite, hee goeth on to tell vs how it commeth to passe that our works haue this vertue, because they issue out of the fountaine of grace, which giueth a heauenly value vnto them. To which purpose their Andradus sayth, that our workes haue a kind of diuine quality, and wee deserue so much thereby, as the dignity and excellency of the spirit requireth, by which we are led. But if we haue this heaueuly value, no other-

wife but as they proceed from the grace of God, what haue wee thereby to challenge to our selues? how should wee be sayd to merite by that that is none of ours? It hath bene already shewed that it cannot be ascribed as a merite vnto vs, which is wrought of God in vs. And it is worth the while to note here the giddinesse of these men. The heauenly value and merite of their workes commeth of the grace of God, and yet forsooth they merite nothing by them but as they proceed from their owne free will. Why are they thus warbling and turning to and fro? Either let them say that the value of good workes is wholly of the grace of God, and then what is the worth thereof to them? or if they will say that they merit thereby, let them say that they haue a value and worth from them, whereby they deserue for them. But what will they say to Fulgentius and Bernard, who expressely say, as we haue heard, of the good workes that are giuen of God, that Gods reward doth incomparably and unspeakably exceed all the merite thereof, and that they are not such as that by any right eternall life should be due vnto them. And when Austine and Ambrose say, that the afflictions of this life are unworthy to the glory to come, of whose afflictions or sufferings do they speake but of the Saints, euen as the Apostle doth, who suffer by the gift and grace of God, are members of Christ and temples of the holy Ghost, euen of those sufferings wherein they suffer with Christ; of which Saint Ambrose yet further saith, to shew the meaning of the words here in hand, He is together glorified, who in suffering for him suffereth with him: and that the Apostle may exhort vs to suffering, he addeth, that all those things which we suffer, are too little and unworthy, that for the paines thereof so great reward of good things to come should be returned vnto vs. As for the infiniteness of the glorie of heauen, M. Bishop well knoweth, but that his idle head delighteth to make matter to talke of, that M. Perkins was neuer so idly conceited, as to imagine it according to his construction, that any pure creature enioyeth the same in infinite extent of measure and greatnesse, but only of time and continuance, because it hath no end. Now infinite in what sort soeuer, cannot be answered but by that that is infinite. The trespass of man against the infinite maiesse of God, could not sufficiently be answered but by the infinite punishment, which because it could not be in greatnesse, whereof a creature could not be caa Ambro. epist. 22.

Conglorificatur
ille qui patiēdo
pro ipso compati-
tur ei. Et ut horreatur ad passio-
nem adiungit, quo-
niā minora sunt
omnia que pati-
untur & insignia
pro quorum labo-
ribus tanta repen-
datur futurorum merces bonorum.

pable, was therefore supplied and made infinite by continuance. For the taking away thereof, there was to be yeilded an infinite satisfaction, which the Sonne of God yeilded by the infinitenesse of his person, though by onely temporarie sufferings and death. As then to take away a punishment not infinite in greatnesse, but in continuance there was necessarily required the merite of an infinite person, so to purchase the glorie of heauen, which to the Saints is infinite in continuance onely, not in greatnesse, there is likewise required the merit of an infinite person, which is onely the merite of Iesus Christ; so farre are we from doing any thing that may carie any semblable proportion of merite and desert. Now infinitenesse of glorie as touching continuance, doth not make a man equall to God, nay it doth not make the Saints of God equall one to another, who are different in measure of glorie, though euery one enioyeth the measure that he hath infinitely and without end. Thus M. Bishop like a drunken man is still offering to stand vp, but at euery next step tumbleth downe againe, and can say nothing, but what still redoundeth to his owne harme. The piller wee see standeth firme and sure, and hee can finde no meanes to throw it down.

II. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins fourth reason. Whosoever will merite, must fulfill the whole Law: for if we offend in one commaundement, we are guiltie of the whole Law; but no man can fulfill the whole Law. ergo.

Answer. I denie the first proposition: for one good worke done with his due circumstances, doth bring forth merite, as by all the properties of merite may be proued at large, and by his owne definition of merite set downe in the beginning. Now if a man afterward fall into deadly sin, he leaseth his former merit: but recouering grace, he riseth to his former merit, as the learned gather out of that saying of our Saviour, in the person of the good father, Do on him (that is on his prodigall sonne returning home) his former garment. His second proposition is also false, as hath bene proued at large in a senerall question. To that of Saint James, although it belong not to this matter, I answer, that he who offendeth in one, is made guiltie of all, that is, hee shall be as surely condemned, as if he had broken all: See Saint Augustine.

Epist. 29. ad Hieron.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins saith, that hee that will merite must fulfill the whole Law. M. Bishop denieth that, and saith that one good worke done with his due circumstances doth bring forth merite. Now happie men are they with whom one good worke is of so great worth. But what doth a man merite by that one worke? Surely if it bee a merite of heauen, I doubt not but M. Bishop for his part in that meriting facultie wherein hee liueth, hath in his opinion by many merites deuoured a number of the heauens of Democritus his innumerable worlds. But I pray you tell vs M. Bishop, if he be ^a cursed that continueth not in all things that are written in the booke of the Law, how should any man merite by performing onely one thing? If life be tied onely to the doing of all, why doe you make so many merites of that which by the sentence of the Law canne yeeld onely one? Nay S. James plainely telleth vs, as M. Perkins alledgeth, that ^b he that keepeth the whole Law, and yet faileth in one point, is guilty of all, that is, he is in generall guilty of breaking the Law, and therefore lieth vnder the curse that is pronounced by the Law. But this place M. Bishop saith belongeth not to this matter, and why, but because hee knew not what to say vnto it? for that that hee doth say, doth fullie make against himselfe. For how should one work done with his due circumstances bring soorth merite, when notwithstanding the doing of many workes with their due circumstances, a man for offending in any one is as surely to be condemned as if he had broken all? Marry saith he, a man may merite, and after by falling into any mortall sinne, he loseth his merite. But that cannot bee: for the Law as hath been said, maketh no promise but to him that fulfilleth all; and therefore till a man haue fulfilled all, hee can merite nothing; and therefore hath merited nothing by any former act or acts, if afterward he fall into any trespass of the Law. Now therefore there can bee no rising againe to former merit, where there is no merit at all, & the place which he citeth in that sort as he citeth it, may import a renewing to the former estate; but as touching merite, it importeth nothing at all. But whether those words of S. James belong to this matter or not, let S. Ierom tell him, who thereupon infers thus,

e Hieron. aduer. Pelag. lib. 2. Quis nostrum aliquando non peccauit? Si autem peccauit (quod negari non potest) & per unum peccatum omnium est reus peccatoris, non suis viribus sed Dei misericordia saluatur.

d 1. Ioh. 1. 8.

e Cap. 3. 4.

c Which of vs hath not sometime sinned? And if hee haue sinned (which cannot be denied) and by one sinne be guiltie of all sinnes, then is he not saued by his owne power but by Gods mercy. The place then by his iudgement, taketh away from man all power of beeing saued by any thing in himselfe, and leaueth him to bee saued onely by the mercie of God. To the other proposition of M. Perkins argument, he answereth also by deniall, and saith that in a generall question hee hath prooued that a man may fulfill the whole law: but by that he hath read the disprooffe of his prooffe, it will appeare to him I hope that hee hath prooued nothing. Now it is to bee obserued how slyly hee omitteth the place of S. Iohn alledged by M. Perkins, d If we say we haue no sin, we deceiue our selues, &c. which inuincibly prooueth that no man fulfilleth the whole law, because there is no man without sin, and euerie sinne is c the transgression of the law.

12. W. BISHOP.

His fifth reason. Wee are taught to pray on this maner, Giue vs this day our daily bread: where we acknowledge euerie morsell of bread to bee the meere gift of God, much more must wee confesse heauen to be.

Ans. M Perkins taketh great delight to argue out of the Lords praier; but he handleth the matter so handsomely, that a man may thinke him to be so profoundly learned, that hee doth not yet understand the Pater noster: for who taketh our daily food to be so meere the gift of God, that we must not either make it ours with our penie or trauell, wee must not looke to be fed from heauen by miracle, by the meere gift of God, but according vnto S. Pauls rule, either labour for our liuing in some approoued sort, or not eat. Yet because our trauels are in vaine vlesse God blesse them, we pray to God daily to giue vs our nouriture, either by sending or preseruing the fruites of the earth, or by prospering our labours with good successe: or if they bee men who liue of almes, by stirring up the charitable to relieue them. So we pray, & much more earnestly, that God will giue vs eternall life: yet by such meanes as it hath pleased God to ordaine, one of which and the principall is by the exercise of good workes, which God hath appointed vs to walke in, to deserue it. And it cannot but sauour of a Satanicall spirit, to call it a Satanicall insolencie (as M. Perkins doth) to thinke that eternall life can bee merited: when Saint Augustine and the best spirit of men since Christ's time

So thought and taught in most expresse termes.

R. ABBOT.

It well appeareth that M. Perkins better vnderstood the Lords praier, then that he had any need to learne of any such slender master as M. Bishop is. The argument which he vseth, is very effectuall and strong. If we cannot merit the food of this life, but must craue it of gift, much lesse can we merit euerlasting life. But saith M. Bishop, our daily bread is not so meerly the gift of God, but that wee must euer make it ours with our penic or trauell; we must labour for our lining, &c. Be it so; and yet by all our expence and labors & trauels we merit nothing; we looke for nothing by desert, but craue it of the blessing and free gift of God. Let M. Bishop say, Is there any man, who by his labour and paines canne challenge at Gods hands a morfell of bread as of merit and desert? If hee cannot, but is still bound to cry amidst all his trauels, Giue vs this day our daily bread, why doth he put man in opinion of meriting at Gods hands eternall life, who cannot by all his workes bind God vnto him for his daily bread? Wee labour therefore to lay hold of eternall life by such meanes as God hath ordained, and by the exercise of good workes which God hath prepared for vs to walke in, but after all our labour we still beg eternall life at Gods hands, as of his meere blessing and gift, that it may bee true both in the beginning and in the end, that ^a eternall life is the gift of God ikrough Iesus Christ our Lord. Yet he telleth vs that God hath appointed good workes for vt to walke in to deserue eternall life. But where hath he so appointed? We find that God ^b in his Sonne hath giuen vnto vs eternall life, and that hee hath ^c prepared for vs good workes to walke in, as the A-postle speaketh, namely to that eternall life which hee hath giuen vs; but that hee hath appointed vs good workes to deserue eternall life, M. Bishop cannot tell vs where to find. Now because the spirit of God hath not any where taught vs so to conceiue, what is it but Satanicall insolvency thus to teach against the doctrine of the spirit? And whereas hee saith that Saint Austine and the best spirit of men since Christs time, haue taught that heauen may be merited, wee first tell him, that all that is nothing vnlesse Christ himselfe haue so taught: and secondly, that hee falsly fathereth

^a Rom 6 23.

^b 1. Ioh. 5. 11.
^c Ephes 2. 10.

vpon the Fathers this misbegotten bastard of merit, which in that meaning as hee and his fellowes teach it, was neuer imagined by the Fathers, as partly hath appeared already, and shall (God willing) appeare further.

I 3. W. BISHOP.

But let vs heare his last argument, which is (as hee speaketh) the consent of the ancient Church, and then beginneth with S. Bernard, who liued a thousand yeeres after Christ: he (in I know not what place, the quotation is so doubtfull) saith, Those things which we call merits, are the way to the kingdome, but not the cause of raiging. I answer, that merits be not the whole cause, but the promise of God through Christ and the grace of God freely bestowed on vs, out of which our merits proceede: which is Bernards owne doctrine.

Ger. 68. in Cantic.
Manual. cap. 22.

Secondly, hee citeth S. Augustine: All my hope is in the death of my Lord: his death is my merit. True in a good sense: that is, by vertue of his death and passion my sinnes are pardoned, and grace is bestowed on me to do good workes, and so to merit.

Ex Psal. 114.

Thirdly Basil: Eternall life is reserued for them that haue striven lawfully, not for the merit of their doing, but vpon the grace of the most bountifull God. These words are vntuly translated: for first he maketh with the Apostle, eternall life to be the prize of that combat, and then addeth, that it is not giuen according vnto the debt and iust rate of the workes, but in a fuller measure, according vnto the bounty of so liberal a Lord: where hence is gathered that common and most true sentence, That God punisheth men vnder their deserts, but rewardeth them about their merits.

Psal. 120.

4. M. Perkins turnes backe to Augustine vpon the Psalm. 120. where he saith (as M. Perkins reporteth) He crowneth thee, because he crowneth his owne gifts, not thy merits.

Ans. S. Augustine was too wise to let any such foolish sentence passe his pen. What congruity is in this? Hee crowneth thee, because he crowneth his owne gifts, not thy merits. It had beene better said, He crowneth thee not &c. But he mistooke belike this sentence of S. Augustines: When God crowneth thee, he crowneth his gifts, not thy merits. Which is true, being taken in that sense which he himselfe declareth: To such a man so thinking (that is, that he hath merits of himselfe, selfe, without the grace of God) it may be most truly said, God doth crowne his owne gifts, not thy merits, if thy merits be of thy selfe, and not from him: but if we acknowledge our merits to proceed from grace working with vs, then we may as truly say, that eternall life is the crowne and reward of merits.

His other place on the Psalme is not to this purpose, but appertains to the first iustification of a sinner, as the first word, quicken & reuiue me, sheweth plainly: now we confesse that a sinner is call:d to repentance and reuined, not for any desert of his owne, but of Gods meere mercis.

R. ABBOT.

The place of Bernard, is in the very end of his booke De gratia & libero arbitrio, where hauing before decuded ^a the gifts of God into merits and rewards, he sheweth that merites are wholly to be ascribed vnto God, because ^b to consent to God, which is the thing wherein merite wholly consisteth, is not of our free will, but of God himselfe. So that although God in the worke of mans saluation do vse the will of man himselfe, yet there is nothing in the will of man to that purpose, but what is ^c wholly of the grace of God. Now hauing disputed and shewed these things at large, in the end of the booke he shutteth vp all with his conclusion, ^d If properly wee will terme those which we call our merites, they are the seed-grounds of our hope, incitements of our loue, tokens of our secret predestination, foretokens of our future happinesse, the way to the kingdome, not the cause of our raigning, or of our hauing the kingdome. Where plainly he giueth to vnderstand, that whatsoever is spoken of our merites, is but vnproperly spoken; that God hauing purposed vnto vs eternall life, bestowed his grace vpon vs to leade a godly life, as a foretoken thereof, and therefore that our good workes are but the way wherein God leadeth vs to his kingdome, which hee of his owne mercie hath intended and giuen vnto vs, and not the cause for which hee is moued to bestow the same vpon vs; euen as Saint Augustine speaketh, ^e the way by which hee will bring vs to that end which hee hath promised. Now what sayth M. Bishop to this place of Bernard? no question but he hath an answer readie, though by his owne confession he neuer saw the place; so notable a facultie haue these men

Psal. 142.

^a Bernard. de grat. et lib. arbit. Deuza sua Deus in merita diuisit & prænata.

^b Non equidem quod consensus ipse in quo meriti omne consistit ab ipso libero arbitrio est. Deus facit volentem, hoc est voluntati sue assentem.

^c Totum ex illa.

^d Si proprie appellatur ea que dicimus nostra merita spei que dicitur seminata, charitatis uicibus, uel ceteris predestinationis iudiciis future salutatis præfagis, ut regnandi, non causam regnandi.

^e Aug. in Psalra. 109. v. 14 qua nos perditurum est ad finem illam quem promittit.

to tell an Authors meaning before euer they looke into him: forsooth Bernards meaning is, that merits are not the whole cause, but the promise of God through Christ, and the grace of God freely bestowed upon us, out of which our merits proceed. Thus he answereth Bernard by a plaine contradiction to Bernards words, Bernard saith, they are not the cause: Yes saith M. Bishop, they are the cause, though they be not the whole cause. But see how scholerlike he dealeth therein; for it is as much as if he should say, The tree is not the whole cause of the fruite that it bringeth forth, but the roote whence it proceedeth, and the boughes whereupon it groweth; whereas the roote and the boughes are parts of the tree, without which it is not a tree; and therefore the exception maketh nothing against it, but that the tree is called the whole cause of the fruite. So saith he, Merits are not the whole cause of saluation, but the grace and promise of God, distinguishing merits as one part of the cause, from the grace and promise of God as another part of the cause; whereas merite by his owne rule in the beginning of this question, doth alwayes necessarily include the promise and grace of God, and can be no merite but as it proceedeth from grace, and hath of God a promise of reward. By this exception therefore he saith nothing to hinder, but that merits are the whole cause of saluation, fully and directly contrary to that that Saint Bernard saith, that merites (which he intendeth no otherwise but implying the grace and promise of God) are the way to the kingdom, but not the cause of our obtaining the kingdom. Yet of that which he saith, he telleth vs that it is Saint Bernards owne doctrine, not alledging any words of Bernard to that purpose, but onely quoting a sermon of his where there is nothing for his purpose, as afterwards shall appeare in answering his testimonies of the Fathers. In the meane time, whereas he excepteth that Bernard liued a thousand yeares after Christ, I must answer him that his testimonie is so much the more effectuell, in that God in the midst of so great corruption and darkenesse did still by him and others continue the light and acknowledgment of this truth.

¶ Aug. Manual,
ca 22. Tota spes
mea est in morte Domini mei: mors
eius meritum me-
um; refugium
meum, salus, vita & resurrectio mea.

The next place cited by M. Perkins is vnder S. Austins name, though that booke indeed be none of his: All my hope is in the death of my Lord: his death is my merite. M. Bishop hereto saith that it is true in a good sense. Where we see him to bee an apt scholler, and well to haue learned the lesson of the Index Expurgatorius.

¶ Wee set some good sense upon the errors of the Fathers when they are opposed against vs in contentions with our aduersaries. But what is that good sense? Marry, by the vertue of his death and passion grace is bestowed on me so merite. But surely hee doth not thinke that euer the author of those words intended that sense. If hee will make that sense of the one part of the sentence, hee must necessarily make the like of the rest. The death of the Lord is my merite, my refuge, my saluation, my life and resurrection. If his meaning be, the death of the Lord is my merite, that is, hath purchased for me that I should merite for my selfe; then in the rest also shall bee likewise said, the death of the Lord is my refuge, that is, hath purchased for mee that I should bee a refuge for my selfe; the death of the Lord is my saluation, life and resurrection, that is, hath purchased for me to bee saluation, life and resurrection to my selfe. So likewise where hee addeth, ^h My merite is the mercie of the Lord: so long as the Lord of mercie shall not faile, I shall not want merite: the meaning shall likewise be, the mercie of the Lord giueth mee ablenesse to merite for my selfe, and so long as his mercie faileth not, so long shall not I faile of good workes to merite and deserue heauen. Now these constructions are lewd and absurd, and indeede farre from the conscience of the writer of those words, who findeth nothing in his owne workes to comfort himselfe withall, and therefore flieth vnto the death and merite of Christ, and the mercy of God, as his onely succour, and the onely stay that hee hath to rest vpon. Which, that the reader may thoroughly vnderstand, I hold it not amisse to set downe what the same author hath written in another place of the same booke, euen out of the same spirit: Let my soule (saith hee) bee silent to it selfe, and passe ouer it selfe, not thinking of it selfe, but of thee, O my God, because thou art indeed my whole hope and trust. There is in thee my God and our Lord Iesus Christ, the portion and flesh and bloud of euery one of vs. Where my portion raigneth, I beleene that I also raigne; where my bloud ruleth, I beleene that I also haue dominion: where my flesh is glorified, I know that I also am glorious. Albeit I bee a sinner, yet I doubt not of this fellowship of grace. Albeit my sinnes hold backe, yet my substance (namely being now of his flesh and his bones) requireth it.

^g Index Expur.
in castigat. Ber.
trava.

^h Meritum meū
miseratio Domini
non sum meritis
inopi quādiā miserationum Dominus non de-
fuerit.

ⁱ Ibid. cap. 13. *Spē leas sibi & iosa
anima, et trāscat
se nō cogitando se,
sed se Deū merens
quoniam tu es reueratota spes &
fiducia mea.*

*Est enim in te Deo meo & Do-
mino nostro Iesu Christo, uniuscu-iusque nostrū, &
portio, et sanguis.*

Albeit

& caro. I'bi ergo portio mea regnat
 ubi regnare me cre-
 do. I'bi sanguis
 meus dominatur,
 ubi dominari me
 confido. F'bi caro
 mea glorificatur,
 ubi gloriosum me
 esse cognosco.
 Quamuis pecca-
 tor sim, tamen
 de hac communio-ne gratie non disfidio. Etsi peccata mea probent substantia mea requirit, Et si delicta propria
 mea excludant,
 naturae communio
 non repellit, &c.
 Desperare utique potuissem propter
 nimia peccata
 mea & vitia, cul-
 pas & infinitas
 negligentias meas
 quas egi & quoti-
 die inderi me: et ago corde & ore, &
 opere, & omnibus
 modis quibus hu-
 mana fragilitas
 peccare potest, nisi
 verbum tuum Deus meus caro
 fieret & habitaret in vobis. Sed desperare iam non audeo, quoniam
 subditus ille tibi
 usque ad mortem,
 mortem autem
 crucis, tulit thyro-
 graphum peccato-rum nostrorum, &
 affigens illud crui-
 ci peccata cruci-
 fixit & mortem.
 In ipso autem se-
 curus respiro, &c.

Albeit mine owne defaults doe exclude mee, yet fellowship of nature puiteth mee not away. I might despaire because of my exceeding great sinnes and corruptions, my defaults are infinite negligences which I haue committed, and dayly without ceasing doe commit in thought, and word and worke, and euery way that humane frailty can sinne, but that thy Word (O my God) became flesh, and dwelt amongst vs. But now I dare not despaire, because hee beeing obedient vnto thee vnto death, euen the death of the crosse, hath taken away the hand-writing of our sinnes, and fastning it to the crosse, hath crucified sinne and death. Now securely I take breath and heart againe, in him who sitteth at thy right hand, and maketh intercession for vs. By these words, and many other that might bee alledged out of that booke, the Reader may iudge of the construction that M. Bishop maketh of the words cited by M. Perkins. Wee see nothing here but confession of sinnes in himselfe; no other hope but onely for-giuenes of sins in Christ. Surely these are not the speeches of a man dreaming of an ablenesse giuen vnto him to deserue eternall life.
 No, no, it was neuer heard of in the world, that the meaning of these words, My hope is wholly in the death and Merit of Christ, should bee, that we hope to beeaue by Christ to merit and deserue saluation, vntill these brazen faced hypocrites were hired and set to worke by Antichrist for the confusion of soules, by making them to leane vpon the broken staffe of their owne merites, in steed of the onely sauing merit of the blood of Christ. The faithful haue alwaies in their end betaken themselues to this hold, and many returning vnto God euen at the last gaspe, hauing nothing in themselues to comfort themselues, haue securely reposed their hope in the merit and death of Christ, and with ioy and comfort haue gone to God; who if they had vnderstood hope in Christ according to M. Bishops exposition thereof, of beeing to bee made able by Christ to merit heauen, would haue beene rent and torne in peeces with perplexity and feare, neither could haue conceiued any comfort thereof at all. But let him alone, he shall one day vn-derstand the vnruth of his answer, when he shall bee glad to make vse of those words which we haue spoken of, or the like without that good sence as hee calleth it, which now his senselesse and dead heart imagineth of them. The place of Basil is as cleere as the light, yet

yet he labourerh to cast a mist before it also: but cannot so doe it, but that hee is forced in part to acknowledge the truth on our behalfe. ^k There is layd up eternall rest (saith he) for them that strive lawfully in this life, not to be rendered according to debts for workes, but provided according to the grace of the bountifull God, for them that trust in him. Where apparently Basil alludeth to the words of the Apostle, ^l To him that worketh, that is, to him that hath the righteousnes of workes, the reward is not imputed *, by fauour but by debt; and therefore the phrases being borrowed from the Apostle, must with him haue the same meaning as with the Apostle they haue. His meaning then is plaine, that that eternall rest is not rendred by way of debt, but by way of fauour and grace; and neuer hath any ecclesiasticall writer vnderstood those phrases otherwise. Onely M. Bishop telleth vs, that Basil's meaning is, that it is not rendred according to the debt of workes, that is, according to the iust rate of workes, but in a fuller measure, and aboue our merites. But his masters of Rhemes reject this commentary of his, and doe tell him that our workes are ^m fully worthy of everlasting life. God then doth not exceede the rate of our workes, as they say, but giueth onely what wee are fully worthy of, what we fully and iustly merit and deserue thereby. Yea and they saw well, that to teach otherwise as M. Bishop doth is to overthrow merite. For if God do giue vs aboue our merites, then wee doe not merit that which God giueth; or if wee doe merite it, then it cannot be said to bee aboue our merites. But it is aboue our merites, sayth M. Bishop, therefore it followeth necessarily that wee doe not merit or deserue it. Yea wee haue scene before out of Fulgentius and Bernard, that Gods reward doth so incomparably exceede all the merite and worke of man, as that eternall life is not due thereunto by right, neither should God doe any wrong if hee did not giue it: and therefore the sentence of Basil is true, according to the Apostles intendment of those termes which hee vseth, that eternall life is not rendered by way of debt for workes, but by grace, that is, freely bestowed to them that trust in him. M. Bishop telleth vs, that hee maketh eternall life to be the prize of the combat: but what of that, seeing hee giueh vs to vnderstand that this prize is with fauour and mercie proposed, and with the same mercie and fauour rendred to them that fight the combat? Therefore hee saith in another place, ⁿ There

^k Basil in Pf. 114.

Προκτιται

ὀνείπωσις ἀνα-

μία τῆς κληρονο-

μιαν ἀποδοῦναι

ὀφείλουσιν, ἡ

κατ' ὀφείλημα ἢ

ἔργων ἀποδοῦ-

μένη ἀλλ' ἡ κατὰ

χάριτος μεγαλο-

δωρου θεοῦ τοῦ

ἐκ τῆς ἀποδο-

κτου παραχομῆν.

1 Rom. 44.

^l ἢ κατὰ χάριτος,

ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸ ὄφει-

λημα.

^m Rhem. Tejtano

Annor. 2. Tim. 4.

ⁱ Basil. de humilit.
 Οὐδὲν ὑπο-λήλειπται σοὶ ἄλλο ἀλαζονείᾳ
 ἢ ἀθροῦσι, ἢ τὸ καύχημα ἐν ἡληκίᾳ τῆς ἐκρά-
 σης μου πρὸς πα-
 τερσίν σου, ζῆτοῦ-
 σαί ᾧ τὴν ἐν χρισ-
 τῷ ἢ μίσησάν
 ἡς ἀπαρκῆς ἔχον-
 τες ἴδην ἐπιλοῦσθε
 ἕσθω, τὸ ὄλον ἐν
 χάριτι ζῶντες ἐν
 ἁμαρτίᾳ θείᾳ.

o August. in Psal.
 102. Ergo coronat
 te, quia dona sua
 coronat non meri-
 ta tua.

p Idē epist. 105.
 et in Ioan. trac. 5.
 & de grat. et lib.
 arb. c. 7.

q De grat. et lib.
 arb. ca. 6. Profus salsa cogitantē
 verissime dicitur,
 dona tua coronat
 Deus, non merita tua, si tibi & te-
 ipso, non ab illo
 sunt merita tua:
 Hec enim si talia
 sunt, mala sunt:
 qua autem mala
 sunt, non coronat Deus. Si autem bona sūt, Dei dona
 sunt.

ⁱ There is nothing left thee O man to glorie of, whose glorying and hope consisteth in this, that thou mortifie all that is thine, and seek in Christ the life to come, whereof hauing the first fruits we are now therein, liuing wholly by the grace and gift of God. There is then with Basil no merit, no debit in any sort, because we liue wholly by the grace and gift of God, so that M. Bishops exposition is but a mere falsification of Basil's words.

M. Perkins further alledgeth a saying of Austin, He crowneth thee, because hee crowneth his owne gifts, not thy merits. M. Bishop answereth, that S. Austin was too wise to let any such foolish sentence passe his pen. Hee questioneth the matter, What congruity is it to say thus? Hee directeth a better forme of speech, It had bene better said thus. Now if the sentence be S. Austins, what will men but take M. Bishop for a foole, that wold so vnaduisedly befoole S. Austin, and take vpon him to correct his words when hee had no cause? The place indeed is misquoted, either by M. Perkins mistaking, or by the oversight of the Printer, for in stead of Psal. 102. hee hath quoted Psal. 120. by misplacing of the figure, a very small and easie oversight. But S. Austin in Psal. 102. hath these words, He crowneth thee because hee crowneth his owne gifts, not thy merits. Which is the same in effect with that which M. Bishop putteth in place of it, very often repeated by S. Austin, either in the same or very neer the same words, that God when he crowneth vs, ⁱ crowneth his owne gifts, ⁱ not our merits. But he answereth hereto very vntuly and deceitfully. It is true indeed that S. Austin there speaketh to him that thinketh he hath merits of his owne and of himself, that God wil not crown those because they are onely euill, and hee giueth not the crowne to euill workes, but he crowneth onely his owne gifts, because in vs there is no good worke, to which onely the crowne is giuen, but onely by Gods gift. ⁱ To him that so thinketh, (saith hee) it is rightly said, God crowneth his owne gifts, not thy merits, if thou haue thy merits of thy selfe and not of his gift: for if they be such, they be euill, and God crowneth not those that be euill, but if they be good, they be the gifts of God. Now to those words M. Bishop addeth in the same letter as if it were S. Austins, whether by the Printers fault, or by his owne lewd falshood he can best tell himself, this animaduersion, But if we acknowledge our merits to proceed from grace working with vs, the may wee as truly say, that eternall life is the crowne and reward of merits.

But M. Bishop did S. Austine tell you so? Will you so wilfully abuse him and pervert his words and meaning? Surely in the beginning of the next Chapter, which is but ten lines after the words cited, S. Austine saith thus: If then thy good merits be Gods gifts, God doth not crowne thy merits as the merits, but as his owne gifts. In which words he plainly denieth, that there is any respect of our merit, or that God accounteth vs as hauing merited, but that he giueth the crown and reward onely as to his owne gifts which he himselfe hath bestowed vpon vs. How bad a man then is M. Bishop, to make S. Austine say, that God crowneth our good works proceeding from his grace as our merits, when S. Austine expressly and flatly denieth the same. But there is yet some further poison hidden in his words: for when he nameth merits proceeding from grace working with vs, he diuideth betwixt God and vs that which S. Austine maketh entirely the gift of God. The worke is not meere of the grace of God in vs, but of grace working with vs, because we also as well as grace are partakers of the worke. So then S. Austine must not say, that God crowneth his owne gifts not our merits; but God crowneth partly his owne gifts, and partly our merits, because the good works which he crowneth are partly of his grace, and partly also of our owne freewill. By this meanes Master Bishop would hold it very absurd, which the same Saint Austine saith in the other place: When God crowneth our merits he crowneth nothing else but his owne gifts: for if hee crowne nothing else but his owne gifts, if he crown nothing at all of ours, then what part of the crowne is it that we can say is merited and deserued by vs?

His answer to the last words of Austine is excluded by the very words themselves: Lord for thy names sake thou wilt quicken me: in thy righteousness, not in mine; not because I haue deserued it, but because thou art mercifull. This place he saith appertaineth to the first iustification of a sinner: but it seemeth he gaue the answer somewhat too early in the morning before his eyes were well opened: for otherwise he might haue seene, that these are the words of a man already iustified, vttered in the name of the Prophet of God, not in the preterperfect tense as of a thing past, but in the future tense, as of a thing to come: Thou shalt or wilt quicken mee, and therefore cannot be vnderstood of any first iustification. The Prophet being already in part reuiued to the life of God, prayeth

r Ibid. cap. 7. Si ergo Dei dona sunt merita tua, non Deus coronat merita tua tanquam merita sua sed tanquam dona sua.

[Epist. 105. Cum Deus coronat merita nostra nihil aliud coronat quam munera sua.

r Aug. Psal. 142. Propter nomen tuum Domine uiuificabis me: in tua iustitia, non in mea, non quia ego merui, sed quia tu miserus.

stil to be reuiued and quickened more and more, and promiseth to himselfe by assistance of faith through the holy Ghost, that God will so do, not in my righteousnes, saith he, as Austin expresseth it not because I haue deserued it, but for his owne names sake, for his owne mercies sake, giuing to vnderstand, that not onely the beginning of the worke of God, but also the proceeding thereof is, not for any merit of man, but by the mercy of him by whom it was first begun. And whereas he saith that they confesse, that a sinner is called to repentance and reuiued, not for any desert of his owne, but of Gods meere mercie, he doth but blind his Reader with a concealed distinction of merit, hauing himselfe before taught, that his workes of preparation are the cause of the iustification of a sinner, as he hath corruptly argued out of the words of Christ, Many sinnes are forgiven her, because she hath loued much. So that the terme of meere mercie is vsed only colourably & for fashion sake, neither doth he acknowledge the meere mercy of God in any sort, but as the Pelagian heretickes did, in the first offer of his grace: u Of Iustificati.

on, Sc& 21.

14. W. BISHOP.

Having thus at length answered vnto all that M. Perkins hath alledged against Merits: let vs see what can be said for them, following as neare as I can M. Perkins order.

Obiections of Papists, so he termeth our reasons.

First, in sundry places of scripture, promise of reward is made vnto good works. If thou do well, shalt thou not receiue? To him that doth well there is a faithfull reward. Feare not to be iustified vnto death, because the reward of God remaineth for euer: and When you are reuiled & persecuted for my sake, reioyce, for great is your reward in heauen, and a hundred such like: therefore such works doe merit heauen for a reward supposeth that there was a desert of it.

Gen. 4.
Prou. 11.
Eccl. 18.
Mat. 5.

*M. Perkins answereth first, that the reward is of meere mercie, without any thing done by men. But this is most apparently false: for the Scripture expresseth the very workes whereof it is a reward: againe, a reward in English supposeth some former pleasure which is rewarded; otherwise it were to be called a gift, & not a reward: & much more the Latine and Greeke word, Mistos, Merces, which rather signifie a mans hire and wages, then a gift or reward. Wherefore M. Perkins skippes* to a second hifi: that for sooth eternall life is an inheritance, but not a reward.

Reply. We know well that it is an inheritance, because it is onely due vnto the adopted sonnes of God: but that hindreth not it to be a reward, for that it is our heauenly Fathers pleasure, that at his sonnes comming to the years of discretion, shal by their good cariage either deserue it; or else for their bad behaviour be disinherited.

M. Perkins hauing so good reason to distrust his two former answers, flies to a third: and granteth that eternall life is a reward, yet not of our workes, but of Christs merits imputed vnto vs: this is that castle wherein he holds himselfe safe from all Canon-shot: but he is foully abused, for this answer is the most extrauagant of all the rest, as beeing furthest off from the true sense of the Scripture: examine any one of the places, and a babe may discover the incongruity of it: namely, Christ saith, that great is their reward who are reuiled and persecuted for his sake: assigning the reward vnto their constant bearing and enduring of tribulation for Gods sake; and not to his owne merits imputed: and if you desire a formal sentence fitting this purpose, take this: Every man shall receiue ^{1. Cor. 3.} his reward, according vnto his owne proper labour, and not according ^{Iac. 1.} to Christs merits imputed vnto him. So a doer of the work shall be blessed in his deede: and not in the imputation of anothers deede.

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop hauing hitherto said much, and answered iust nothing, falleth in hand to sharpen his tooles and weapons againe, which were blunted and dulled by M. Perkins. And first, he opposeth places where mention is made of reward, presuming that reward must necessarily suppose and enforce merit and desert. To this M. Perkins hath answered, that reward is twofold: of debt, & of mercie. Eternall life, he saith, is a reward of mercie giuen of the good will of God, and not properly repayed as due to any thing that is done by man. M. Bishop replieth, that this is apparently false: for the Scripture (saith he) expresseth the very works wherof it is a reward. But I answer him againe, that it is not false, but very true, because although the Scripture do set forth vnto vs eternal life as the reward of such & such works, yet that is not to tye the Originall of the reward to the worke, but onely to note the sequelle thereof: the reward beeing in truth deriued from a former mercie wherby it was promised before the worke, and by which both the worke and the reward are giuen vnto vs. Nay, ^a They yet were not themselves, saith S. Austin, to whom saluatio was promised, that no man might glory in his merits: yea they to whom it was promised, were also promised themselves, that the whole body of Christ may say, By the grace of God I am that I am. ^b What seeuer God promised, saith he againe, hee promised it to vs being unworthie, that it might not bee promised as a reward to workes, but being grace might according to the name be freely giuen. So that although eternall life be, as it were a reward for righteousness, yet it is indeed but grace for grace, as out of him also we haue heard before. But saith M. Bishop, a reward in English supposeth some former pleasure which is rewarded. But that is not alwaies so: for I doubt not but many times an English begger hath come to him and asked him a reward, at whose hands notwithstanding he hath receiued no former pleasure: and euen so must Master Bishop begge at Gods hands the reward of euerlasting life. Yea but then it should be called a gift and not a reward: and did not hee know that it is called a gift? ^d Eternall life (saith Saint Paule) is the free gift of God. Christ saith of his sheepe: ^e I giue vnto them eternall life. ^f This is the record, saith Saint Iohn, that God hath giuen vnto vs eternall life. It may be he cannot see how it should be called both a gift and a reward. I will tell him therefore that secundum quid, and in respect it is called a reward, but simply and absolutely it is onely gift. Compare eternall life to the worke, and look no further, and so the Scripture calleth it a reward. But consider the original from whence the work it selfe also proceedeth, and all is meerly and wholly gift: yea and though in act and execution the work be before the reward, yet in intendment & purpose that which we call the reward is before the work, and God therefore giueth vs good works, because formerly by his election he giueth vs eternall life. From the English word he goeth to the Greek and Latin, μισθός, and merces, & saith, they rather signifie hire or wages, then gift or reward. And what of that, seeing the Apostle teacheth vs to distinguish that ^g μισθός, wages, may be reckoned to a man by fauour & not by debt. For he could not say: ^h To him that worketh, the wages is not imputed by fauour, but by debt, but that there is an imputing of wages by fauour also. And this appeareth in thē, who being called into the vineyard at the 11. houre, yet receiued for wages, ⁱ by fauour, not by debt, as much as they who were first called,

^a Augin Pl. 118. conc. 13. Nondum erant quibus promitteretur ne quisquā de meritis gloriaretur: & quibus promissum est, etiam ipsi promissi sunt, ut totū corpus Christi dicat, Gratia Dei sum id quod sum. ^b Idem in V'sal. 109. ut supra Sect. 2. ^c Idem de grat. & lib. arbit. cap. 8. Supra sect. 8.

^d Rom. 6. 23. ^e 2 Cor. 9. ^f Ioh. 10. 28. ^g 1. Iohn 5. 11.

^g Rom. 4. 4.

^h Mat. 20. 10. 14

called, and had borne the burden and beate of the day. The Lord of the vineyard gaue thē the same wages, ⁱ not as paying a price to their labour, but powring forth the riches of his goodnesse to them whom he chose without works, that euen they also who haue sweat with much labour, and haue receiued no more then the last, may understand, that they haue receiued a gift of grace, not a wages for their workes. Thus M. Bishop seeth hire and wages to be a matter of fauour, and the reward of workes, in some sort so called, to be nothing else indeed but a gift of grace. And if he will vnderstand it otherwise, let him heare the resolution of Marke the Heremite, saying: ^h Some not keeping the commandements, yet i thinke they beleue aright: againe, some there are who keeping the commādements hope to receiue the kingdome of heauē as a wages due vnto them. both of these faile of obtaining the same.

M. Perkins answereth secondly, that the kingdome of heauen is properly an inheritance, but is called a reward onely by figure & resemblance. To this M. Bishop replieth, that it is an inheritance, because it is onely due to the adopted sonnes of God. But that is not all: for it is not so called onely, because it is onely due to the adopted sonnes of God, but because by vertue of their adoption they haue the title of it, euen by being new borne the sonnes of God. For inheritance is a matter of birth, and though a man be of neuer so good desert, yet can he haue no title of inheritance thereby. The younger brother may be of better desert then the elder, yet that cannot make him his fathers heire. Where the thing is by desert, a man can haue no title to it till he haue deserued it, but what is by inheritance a man hath the right of it before he can do any thing towards the deserting of it. When therfore the Scripture setteth foorth vnto vs eternal life vnder the cōdition of inheritāce, it plainly teacheth vs, that we attaine not vnto it by any merits or workes, but that before any works God by adopting vs to be his children, giueth vs the state & prerogatiue thereof. And therfore whereas M. Bishop saith, that it is our beauenly Fathers pleasure, that all his sonnes cōming to the years of discretion, should by their good cariage either deserue it, or else for their bad behauior be disinherited, he speaketh at all aduenture, quite contrarie to the nature of the thing whereof he speaketh. And see how improbably he speaketh in respect of humane courses, to which he alludeth: what is there no remedy but that a son must either deserue his inheritāce, or else be disinherited? Are fathers wont to meature i Prosper. de uer.

Gen. lib. 1. cap. 5.
Non labori præiū
soluunt sed diuini-
as bonitatis sue ut
eos quos sine operi-
bus eligit efficien-
dens ut etiā i quā
in multo labore
sularunt, nec au-
riū quā nouissi-
mi acceperunt, intelligant: donū se
gratia, non operis
acceperunt mercedē.
k Mark herem. De
hū qui p̄t̄ am̄ ex
op̄tibus se iustifi-
cari.
πίδες μὴ πινύτις
ταῖς οὐραῖς παστύτιν ὀρθῶς ἰο-
μύζουσι. πινέδω
πινύτις τρε μισθὸς
θεοῦ ἰσραηλιτῶν ἢ βασιλείαν ἐκδέο
χομαι: ἀμφότε-
ροι τ̄ βασιλείας ἀπὸ φιλίας.

their Children by that rule? Is there no meane betwixt these two? Surely the behaiour of the heire is seldome such, as may be said to deserue the inheritance whereto he is borne, and yet fathers do not disinherit their children for not deseruing. There is an indifferent behaiour of sonnes, that yeeldeth no desert, & there is many times behaiour whereby they ill deserue, and yet by birth the right of inheritance standeth good vnto him. And this is our title, euen our new birth in Iesus Christ, whereby we are made heires of euerlasting life, when as notwithstanding our behaiour is such, as that being strictly examined, we well know that we deserue the contrarie. As for that which he saith of disinheriting, it is sometimes found with men who cannot reclaim their sonnes from euill courses, or fashion them to their own desire, (which what Father would not do, if it were in his power to do it, to auoyde the disinheriting of his sonne?) but with God who hath the hearts of his children in his hands, and can dispose them to his owne will, it is neuer found; but in this case it holdeth which the Apostle saith: The gifts & calling of God are without repentance: that is, as S. Austine saith, they are firmly settled without any change.

The third answer M. Perkins addeth, not for any distrust of the two former, but to giue further strength vnto them, and this answer is indeed a castle, that all M. Bishops Canon shot is not able to shake. He saith, that it is more extrauagant then the rest, and furthest off from the true sense of Scripture and I know not what, but all his extrauagant tearmes will nothelpe him to auoid the force of it. It is first to be noted how he peruerteth M. Perkins his words: for M. Perkins denieth not but that eternall life is the reward of our workes, but saith, if it be granted to be a deserued reward, is is not for our workes, but for Christs merits imputed vnto vs. It is then the reward of our workes, not for the desert of our workes, but because Christ by his merits hath purchased it and we in him receiue it for reward of our workes. To his merits only the reward is assigned and giuen to our vse: for his workes sake is it that any reward is promised or yeelded to our workes. For in him all the promises of God are yea and Amen: for his sake they were first made, and for his sake they are performed. The father giuing vnto vs his son, together with him giveth vs all things: He hath giuen vnto vs eternal life, but this life is in his Son; in his obediēce, in his merits eternall life is the reward of our workes.

1 Tim. 3. 7.

m Rom. 11. 29.
n Auzust. de
P. ed. S. an. 7. cap.
16. Sine mutati-
one stabilitē
fixa sunt.

o 2 Cor. 1. 20.

p Rom 8. 32.
q 1. Ioh. 5. 11.

If it be said, Blessed are ye when men reuile you, and persecute you for my names sake: great is your reward in heauen, it is for Christs sake that it is said: Blessed are ye; great is your reward in heauen. If it be said: Every man shall receiue his reward according to his labour, it is for Christs sake that it is so said. If it be said: The doer of the word shall be blessed in his deede, it is for Christs sake, that he shall be blessed in his deed. For if we consider our persons, the Father ^u bath accept- ^u Edj. hec. 1. 6. ^x Mat. 3. 17. ed vs in his beloued, in Iesus Christ, and ^x in him is well pleased to- wards vs. If we looke to our works, our sufferings, our seruice, all our spirituall sacrifices are acceptable to God, not by their owne worth, not by our desert, but ^r by Iesus Christ, by his merits, by his deserts, & therefore by his merits haue the reward allotted vnto them ^y Pet. 2. 5: Thus M. Bishop fighteth hard and getteth no ground: he thinketh, poore man, that hee hath troden M. Perkins vnder foote, but M. Perkins liueth triumphantly in heauen, & he liueth a base conquered man here vpon the earth, & by his defending of Merits, secludeth himselfe from that mercy, whereby he should attaine heauen.

15. W. BISHOP.

In stead of our second reason blindly proposed by M. Perkins, I will confirme the first with such texts of holy Writ, as specifie plainly your good works to be the cause of eternall life. Come vnto me ye blessed of my ^{Mat. 25.} Father, possess a kingdom prepared for you. And why so? For when I was hungry, ye gaue me meat, &c. the like is in the same chapter of the seruants, who employed all their talents: for their Lord said vnto the: Because you haue been faithfull in few things, I will place you ouer many. And many such like: where good works done by the parties themselves are expressly said to bee the very cause why God rewardeth them with the kingdome of heauen. Therefore hee must needs bee bolden for a verie wrangler, that doth seeke to peruert such euident speeches, and would make the simple beleue; that the cause there formally specified, is not to be taken for the cause, but doth only signifie an order of things. But if any desire besides the euidence of the text, to see how the ancient Fathers take it, let him read S. Augustine, where he thus briefly hand- ^{In Psal. 40.} leth this text: Come ye blessed of my Father, receiue; what shall ye receiue? a kingdome: for what cause? because I was hungrie, and you gaue me meat, &c. Of the reall imputation of Christs merites, there was nothing in those daies : and that iudicious Doctor found, that good works was the cause of receiving the kingdom of heaue.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop to help the former argument addeth some texts of holy writ, which specifie plainely, as he saith, our good workes to bee the cause of eternall life. To this purpose hee alledgeth the wordes of Christ as touching the last iudgment: Come ye blessed of my Father; possesse, or rather, inherite ye the kingdom prepared for you before the foundations of the world; for I was hungry and ye gaue me meate, &c. Where the very place it selfe disproueth that that hee intendeth to prooue by it : for by that that he saith, Inherite ye the kingdom, it is plainely gathered which S. Ambrose thence affirmeth : We receiue as a possession of inheritaunce those things that are promised vnto vs. And if we receiue the kingdom by way of inheritance, then it is not by merit, as hath already been declared. Again, when he saith, prepared for you from the foundations of the world, euen as S. Paul saith, God hath chosen vs in Christ before the foundations of the world, hee sheweth that the kingdom was prepared for them that inherit it, before they had any workes: and therefore, to reason in the same manner as the Apostle doth : not by workes, but by (the grace and mercy of) him that calleth, it is said: Come ye blessed, inherite the kingdom, &c. For to say that God prepared the kingdom for them, upon foresight of their workes, is the heresie of the Pelagians long agoe condemned. It must needs bee therefore that it was prepared for them without respect of workes, and that their workes are alledged not as the proper cause for which the kingdom is giuen vnto them, but as signes & tokens that they are they for whom it is prepared, euen as before wee heard out of S. Bernard, that they are tokens of our predestination, foretokens of our future happinesse, the way to the kingdom, not the cause of our obtaining it. No more can bee argued out of the other place. Reward wee find there, but Merits wee find none, neither can the one of these be euicted by the other. It only sheweth how God graceth his faithfull seruants by assigning vnto them vnder the name of reward, that wick indeede hee otherwise freely bestoweth vpon them. A most cleere example whereof we haue in our father Abraham, to whom God made at first an absoa Mat 25. 14.

b κληρονομίατι

c. Ambros. de obitu Theodosij. Tanquam possessionem hereditariam recipimus ea que promissa sunt nobis. d Ephe. 1. 4.

e Rom. 9. 11.

f August contra Julian. Pelag. lib 3. cap. 3. Ne forte autem constitutum omnem mundi ex operibus precegnit uti putarentur electi, secutus est et adiunxit, si autem gratia, &c. vide Epist. 105.

g Bernard. de gratia. & lib. arb. Occultae predestinationis indicia, future felicitatis presagia, via regni, non causa regnandi.

lute promise, that he would ^h make of him a great nation, and would ^h bless him, and in him all nations of the earth should be blessed, and yet afterwards vpon the triall that hee made of him for the offering of his son Isaac, taketh occasion to renew the promise, as if he would doe it for his obedience therein. ⁱ Because thou hast done this thing, and hast not spared thine onely sonne, therefore will I surely bless thee, & I will multiply thy seede after thee, &c. and in thee shall all nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice. The blessing was assured to Abraham infallible by the former absolute promise of God. ^k without any caution or condition, as Prosper well saith; but hee would haue Abraham to take knowledge by occasion of that that hee had done, that the promise before freely made, should in uiolably & without any impeachment stand good vnto him. Euen so God from our works taketh occasion of the renewing of his promises, & thereto for our assurance tieth the performance thereof vnder the name of reward, when as the true cause of all is his mercy in Iesus Christ, by whom onely it is that the worke is accepted in his sight. Now if God vouchsafe to honour vs, let not vs thereby take occasion to dishonour him, or challenge proudly to our merits, that for which we should sing praise onely to his mercy. Neither do we heerein wrangle or peruert the Scripture, but finding by the Scripture that God hath chosen and called vs, ^l that wee should bee to the praise of the glory of his grace, ^m which is not grace in any sort, except it be free in euery sort, we endcauor that this glory may be yeelded entirely vnto God, and that to this end it may alwaies bee acknowledged, that ⁿ eternall life is the gift of God, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Now whereas he alledgeth S. Austin to his purpose, he abuseth S. Austin as he is wont to do, who questioneth not any cause in the place by him cited, but vsing the wordes, Come ye blessed of my Father, receiue ye a Kingdome, goeth on heereupon to demand, not as Matter Bishop saith, For what cause, but ^o for what thing? He answereth, I was hungry and ye gaue me to eat. What is there so base, saith hee, what so concerning the earth, as to breake bread to the hungry? At so much is the Kingdome of heauen valued vnto thee. If thou haue no abilitie to breake bread to the hungry, &c. yet giue a cup of cold water, cast two mites into the treasury. The widow for two mites bought as much as Peter forsaking his nets, as Zachee did in giuing halfe his goods. It is valued vnto thee at so much as thou hast. Thus

h Gen. 12. 2. 3.

i Cap. 22. 16.

k Prosper. de voca: gen. lib. 1. ca. 3. Sine conditio: ne promiss. sine lege donatus.

l Ephel. 1. 6.

m August. cont. Pelag. & Celest. li. 2. cap. 24. Non enim Dei gratia gratia erit: villo modo nisi fuerit gratuita a omni modo.

n Rom. 6. 23:

o Aug. in Psalm. 49: Quia percipite? Regnum. Pro quare? Estisui, &c. Quid tam vile, quid tam terrenum quam frangere panem esurientis? Tanti vales Regnum caelorum. Si non hibes facultatem fragendi panem, &c. da calcem aqua frigide; mitte duo minuta in gazophylacium. Tantum emit vna dena duobus ministris, quatuor emit

Petrus relinquens retia, quantum emit Zachaeus dando dimidium patrimonium. Tanti vale quantum habueris.

the purpose of this iudicious Doctour, is directly against Master M. Bishops cause of receiuing the Kingdome of heauen, shewing how base and of how little worth the things are, whereto God notwithstanding of his vouchsafing grace returneth the Kingdome of heauen, that we may know that it is not for our merits sake that he bestoweth the same. As for the imputation of Christs merits, M. Bishop knoweth no vse of it, because he yet knoweth not himselfe, but he will then know the vse of the merits of Christ, when he commeth to know how vainly and fondly hee hath presumed of his owne. To the true Church of Christ, it was neuer strange tidings that Christs merites should bee imputed vnto them; whose hope hath alwaies bene to find fauour at Gods hands, by vertue of that meric that he hath performed for them.

16. W. BISHOP.

Heereby the way M. Perkins redoubleth that common slander of theirs: that wee take away a part of Christs mediation. For, saith he, if Christs merits were sufficient, what neede ours? It hath bene told them, but they will neuer learne to vnderstand it: I will yet once againe repeate it. We hold our Saviours merits to be of infinite value, and to haue deserued of God all the graces and blessings, which haue or shall be bestowed vpon all men, from the beginning of the world vnto the end of it: yet his diuine will and order is, that all men of discretion hauing freely receiued grace from him, do merit that crown of glory, which is prepared for them, not to supply the want of his merits, which are inestimable, but being members of his mysticall body, he would haue vs also like vnto himselfe in this point of meriting: and further desirous to traine vs vp in all good works he best knew, that there could be no better spurre to pricke our dull nature forward, then to ordaine and propose such beauenly rewards vnto all them that would diligently endeauour to deserue them. The man seemes to bee much ignorant in the matter of Christs mediation: I will therefore helpe him a little. It consisteth in reconciling man to God: which hee performed by paying the ransome of our sinnes, in purchasing vs Gods fauour, and in ordaining meanes how all mankinde might attaine to eternall life: in the two first points we do for the most part agree: to wit, that our sinnes are freely pardoned tthrough Christs passion: and that we are as freely iustified, and receiued first in- to Gods grace and fauour: although we require other preparation then they do, yet we as fully denie any merit of ours to be cause of either, as they do. Marry about the meanes of attaining to heauen, we differ altogether: for they say that God requires no iustice in vs, nor merit at all on our parts, but only the disposition of faith, to lay hold on Christs righteousnesse and merits: but we say that Christs righteousnesse and merit, are incommunicable vnto any meere creature: but that through his merits, God doth powre into euery true Christian a particular iustice, whereby he is sanctified, and made able to do good workes, and to merit eternall life. Which ability we receiuing of Gods free gift, through Christs merits, doth much more magnifie both Gods grace, and Christs merits: for the greater that the gift is, the greater is the glory of the giuer. And to argue that to be a derogation vnto his mediation and merits, which he hath appointed to be the very instrument of applying the vertue of them to vs, is indeede vnder colour of magnifying Christs merits, to vndermine and blow out all the vertue of them. But saies Master Perkins, what should we talke of our merits, who for one good worke we doe, commit many bad, which deface our merits, if we had any?

True it is, as it was once before said, that euery mortall sinne blotteth out all former iustice and merit: but by repentance both are recovered again: but must we not speak of any good, because we may hap to do euill? that is a faire perswasion, and wellworthy a wise man.

R. ABBOT.

To say that they take away a part of Christs mediation, is no flaunder but truth, as by M. Bishop himselfe appeareth in this very place. To M. Perkins saying that if Christ did sufficiently merit eternall life for vs, then he should do more then is needefull, in making vs able to merit for our selues, he answereth, that though Christs merits be of infinite value, and haue deserved of God all graces and blessings, yet his diuine will and order is, that we also merit that crowne of glory. But to what end when he hath merited it already? Marry not to supply the want of his merits, but as being members of his mysticall body, he would haue vs like vnto himselfe in this point of meriting. Thus we must think that M. Bishop is like vnto Christ in this point of meriting, or rather we must think him an impious wretched mā- thus

thus in meriting to consort himselfe and his with the Sonne of God, and to bring in these prophane nouelties into the Church, which neither Scripture, nor councill, nor father, nor any antiquitie was euer acquainted with. Where hath he euer read, that Christ would haue vs like vnto himselfe in this point of meriting? What is this but to affirme him in a kinde of generality, onely to be Iesus Christ, but that otherwise he hath left it to euery man to be a Iesus Christ, a Redeemer and Sauour for himselfe, because it is his will to haue vs like vnto himselfe in this point of meriting by which it is that he is become Iesus, and a Sauour vnto vs? It is by meriting I say, that Christ is vnto vs Iesus a Sauour, and therefore if we be like vnto him in meriting, it cannot be auoided but that we also are Sauours. Yea, and for this matter of meriting, necessary it was that he that should be our Redeemer should be God, because none but God, no Angell, no Archangell, no creature whatsoever could merit at the hands of God; and yet this man sticketh not blasphemously to affirme, that in this point of meriting we are like vnto the Sonne of God. And all this meriting for ought he saith, remaineth still needlesse and causelesse, because for shame he dareth not deny that in words which indeed he doth deny, that Christ's merits are inestimable, and haue deserued all graces and blessings for vs. Which being graunted, to what end should we be like vnto Christ in meriting? Nay, we rightly conclude thereof, because God doth nothing idly, that therefore he doth not appoint vs to merit that for our selues, which Christ hath already merited in our behalfe. Whereas he saith, that God desirous to traine vs up in all good workes, best knew that there is no better spurre so pricke forward our dull nature, then to ordaine and propose such heauenly rewards, we acknowledge that so farre he saith truly, but where he addeth that they are proposed to such as wil endenour so deserue them, I must remember him of the sentence of Marke the Hermite before alledged, that some keeping the commandements, expect the Kingdome of heauen as a wages deserued or due vnto them, and that these faile of the Kingdome of heauen. Now here M. Bisshop in his brauery sitteth him downe in his chaire, and taketh vpon him to teach M. Perkins, as a man much ignorant in the matter of Christes mediation, but if M. Perkins had knowne it in no better sort then he teacheth him, we might haue taken him indeede for a very simple and ignorant man. True it is which

Our conformity and likeness to Christ wherein it standeth (see of satisfaction. Sect.

2.

¶ Marc. Herem. 2.
Supra sect. 14.

which he saith, that the office of Christs mediation consisteth in reconciling man to God, and that he performeth this by paying the ransom of our finnes, by purchasing Gods fauour, and ordaining meanes how all mankind might attaine to eternall life. But hee saith very vntuly, that in the two first points for the most part we agree; for they are farre from agreeing therein with vs, or with the truth of the Gospell of Christ. They do not hold that our finnes are freely pardoned, or that we are freely iustified, albeit he is ashamed to confesse that they hold it otherwise. For what is it to say freely, but ^b for nothing, as his

And that appeareth by that he addeth next: although wee require other preparation then they do. For the workes of preparation they make to be the cause of the forgiuenes of finnes and iustification, as he himselfe hath ^c before disputed; onely hee thinketh the matter handsomely salued, that workes are the cause of iustification, but not the merit of workes, and with this iugling deuce he addeth, that they as fully deny any merit of ours, to be cause thereof as we do. Whereas the Scripture saith nothing of the merit of workes, but absolutely excludeth workes from being any part of the cause of our iustification before God; neither opposeth each to other grace, and merits, but grace and workes; not saying, If it be of grace it is not of merits, but ^d If it be of grace, it is not of workes, otherwise grace were no grace. Therefore these words of his, are but words of hypocrisie and fallhood, and vsed onely to blinde the vnskillfull Reader, and to conceale that venome & poison that would otherwise easily be espied. Albeit his master Bellarmine sticketh not to tell vs, that ^e saith which is one of their preparations, doth iustifie by way of merit, and doth in some sort merit forgiuenesse of finnes, that wee may know that very vntuly and against his owne knowledge, M. Bishop affirmeth that they as fully deny merit to bee the cause of forgiuenesse of finnes or iustification, as we do.

About the meanes of attaining to heauen, he saith, we differ altogether. For they say, saith he, that God requireth no iustice in vs. Where as he hath sought to cleare his owne part with a lye, so doth he with a lye seeke to disgrace ours. We do not say that God requireth no iustice in vs; we only deny that the iustice which God requireth in vs, is the cause of our iustification before God, or can yeeld

^b Rhe m. Testare explication of words in the end.

^c Of Iustificati
on. Sect. 21.

^d Rom. 11. 6.

^e Bellarm. de iustificat. lib. 2. cap.
17. Iustificat per modu meriti: suo
quodam modo meretur remissionem
peccatorum.

f Phil. 3.9.

g Esa. 9.6.
h Iohn. 17. 23.
i 1. Cor. 1. 30.
k Jerem. 23. 6.
l Psal. 71. 14.

vs any merit towards God, and therefore in this respect wee desire ^f to be found in Christ, and by faith to stand vnder the couerture of his merits and rightcouesnesse, and in the imputation thereof to be accepted vnto euerlasting life. Now against this hee saith, that Christ's rightcouesnesse and merits are not communicable vnto anie meere creature. But he saith he knoweth not what; for what should hinder but that what Christ hath done for vs, should bee communicated and imputed vnto vs? And is not Christ himselfe communicated vnto vs, & borne vnto vs, giuen vnto vs, become ^h one with vs?
 Accordingly therefore hee is ⁱ of God made rightcouesnesse vnto vs, euen ^k the Lord our rightcouesnesse, that we may say, ^l I will go forth in the strength of the Lord God, and will make mention of thy righte-ouesnesse onely. But he will haue it, that through Christ's merits grace is giuen vnto vs to do good workes, and to merit eternall life. One part whereof we acknowledge to be true, that through Christ's merits grace is giuen vnto vs to doe good workes, because good workes are the way wherein we are to walke to that eternall life which hee hath merited and purchased for vs. But the other part thereof is false, and we denie that he hath appointed vs by our good workes to merit for our selues eternall life. It is a Romish fancie, which we maruell they so busie themselues to comend to others, when none of them dare presume of it in himselfe. M. Perkins by sound argument hath confuted it, and M. Bishop is content againe barely to affirme it, without either prooffe of his owne part, or disprooffe of that that is said against it. In a word, wee doe not find in Scripture that Christ died for our good workes that they might merit, but only for our sinnes that they might bee pardoned. This is the ancient receiued faith of the Church of Christ, but the other is a no-uelty which antiquity neuer imagined, but is lately deuised in the Church of Rome. He saith that they by this doctrine of Merits, do much more magnifie Gods grace and Christ's merits then we doe. And why? For the greater the gift is, saith he, the greater is the glory of the giuer. But I answer him that the gift is greater, in that Christ giueth himselfe to be our merit and rightcouesnes, then it should be in gi-uing vs ablenesse to merit for our selues. And by this the glory of the giuer is most of all set forth, which then most clearly shineth, when there is least shew or appearance of any thing to be attributed vnto vs. Which is not in their popish doctrine, where man by his

his merits is set on horsebacke, and those merits are affirmed so to proceede from grace, as that they proceed also in part from his owne free will. Therefore to denie our merits, is not to vndermine and blow out the vertue of Christs merits, but to acknowledge the same to bee in themselves entirely and perfectly sufficient without vs, that whilest we yeeld nothing to our selues to reioyce in, the glory of our saluation may redound wholly to him to whom wholly and onely it doth belong. But to affirme merits on our part, cannot be without singular derogation to the mediation and merits of Christ, who hath taught vs to apply vnto vs the vertue of his merits, not by meriting againe for our selues, but by beleeuing in him, according to that which the Apostle hath taught vs, that God hath ^m set him forth to be an attonement (for vs) through ⁿ Rom. 3.25. faith in his blood.

M. Perkins against this vaine presumption of merit, alledgeth further, that for one good work that we do, we haue many euil, the offence whereof defaceth the merit of our best deedes, and maketh them too light in the ballance of the law. This M. Bishop lightly regardeth. Tush his mortall sinnes are taken away by penance, and his merits though they were gone, yet returne againe, and without doubt he wil thereof make himselfe a ladder that shall serue him to climb to heauen. What, saith he, must wee not speake of good, because we may hap to do euil? That is a faire perswasion, and wel worthy of a wise man. It is but a hap we must thinke that he doth any euill, and therefore he will not be barred from speaking of his good, and is no foole I warrant you in the perswasion thereof. Surely we thinke that Iob was somewhat wiser then M. Bishop, and yet he thought that perswasion not to bee vnworthy of him. ⁿ If I would contend with him, I should not be able to answer him one for a thousand. And when by the prouocation of his friends he had vsed that great iustification of himselfe, being reprov'd for it by the Lord, he renounceth to speake of his good any more, and saith, ^o I am vile: what shall I answer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth. Once haue I spoken, but I will answer no more, yea twice, but I will proceede no further. Dauid ^p seeing the whole life of man in a manner on every side to be barked at by his sinnes, thought his euils sufficient to stop his mouth from talking of his good, and crieth out vnto God, ^q O Lord if thou straitly marke iniquities, who can stand?

ⁿ Job. 9.2.

^o Job. 39. 17.

^p Aug. in Psal.
129 Fudit prope
totam vitam hu-
manam circumla-
trari peccatis suis.
^q Psal. 130. 20.

r. Auguſt. Plura
 inueniet peccata
 quam merita.
 Conf. lib. 9.
 ca. 13. Vt etiam
 laudabili vite ho-
 minum ſi remotā miſericordia de-
 ſectias eam.
 2. De verb. Dom.
 ſer. 15. Qui eſt
 qui non ſit debitor Dei niſi in quo
 nullam poteſt in-ueniri peccatum?

S. Auſtine thought it worth the while to conſider, and tooke it to be a barre againſt all pleading of Merit, that if God ſtrictly examine our behauiour, hee ſhall find more finnes then merits or good workes; and therefore he could cry out, Woe euen to the commendable life of man, if thou, O God, examine it without mercy. I wonder then what merit M. Biſhop can find in the commendable life of man. The ſame S. Auſtine asketh againe, Who is hee that is not a debter vnto God, but he onely in whom can no ſinne bee found? Now if we bee all debtors vnto God by our finnes, can wee by our good workes haue him a debter vnto vs? And what though God of his meere mercy and goodneſſe do pardon our finnes, and putting out of ſight and remembrance our euill deeds, do ſtill reſerue the acknowledgment of our well-doings? Shall we thereupon out of his mercy build a merit vnto our ſelues, and thinke that wee haue well deſerued at Gods hands, and bound him to vs by our good deeds, when by our finnes we haue a thouſand times more prouoked him to deſtroy vs? M. Biſhop is no doubt a wiſe man, and hath ſome great reaſon to ſettle himſelfe in this perſwaſion; but yet a fool may be ſo wiſe, as to wiſh him to take heede that the golden houſe of merits that he buildeth now, do not fall heauiſe in the end vpon his owne head.

17. W. BISHOP.

Let vs to our third Argument; God hath by covenant and promiſe bound himſelfe to reward our workes with life euerlaſting: Therefore good workes doe in iuſtice deſerue it: for faithfull promiſe maketh due debt. The covenant is plainely ſet downe: where God in the perſon of a houſholder agreeth with his workemen for a penny a day: that is, to giue them life euerlaſting for trauailing in his ſeruice during their lifetime, as all ancient interpreters expound it. Whereupon S. Paul inferreth, that God ſhould be uniuſt, if hee ſhould forget their workes, who ſuffered, perſecution for him: and ſaith, If it be iuſt with God to render tribu- tion to them that perſecute you, and to ſuch as are perſecuted, reſt with vs: vpon the ſame ground S. Hierome ſaith, Great truely were the iniuſtice of God, if he did puniſh euill workes, and would not as well receiue good workes. To all theſe, and much more ſuch like, M. Per- kins anſwereth, that covenant for workes, was in the old Teſtament, Math. 20.

Heb. 6.

2. Theſſ. 1.

 Li. 2. cont. Fouin.
 cap. 2.

but in the new, the covenant is made with the workman, not with the worke.

Reply. All that I cited in this argument, is out of the new Testament where expresse covenant is made for working and workes, as you haue heard. And as it was said in the old law, Do these things & thou shalt liue: so is it said in the new, If thou wilt enter into life, keep the cō- Math. 19.
mandements: and life eternall is the hire and wages for labouring in Gods vineyard, and not of the imputed iustice or merits of Christ: but looke about you and behold the goodly marke which M. Perkins sets vp: Marke, saith he, that it is said, God will render unto every man according to his workes: not to the worke, or for the worke. O sharpe and ouer-fine wit! doth hee render according to the workes, and doth he not render for the workes? If the rate of the workes bee the measure of the reward, that for fewer or lesser workes there is a lesser reward, and for many and worthier a greater: surely in my simple understanding, hee that giueth according unto the workes, giueth for the workes. That other adde inuention, that workes are there mentioned, not because they are rewarded, but because they are tokens that the doer is in Christ, for whose obedience God promiseth the crowne of life) is not worth the confuting, it is so flat contrary to the text: which ascribeth distinctlie that reward unto the workman for his workes, and not for Christs obedience imputed unto him.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop in the former section, as we haue seene, hath flowted M. Perkins with the name of wise man, and pronounced his ignorance, and hath taken vpon him to teach him. Now a man would wonder, that taking so much vpon him there, hee should heere argue so childishly and simply as he hath done. God hath by promise bound himselfe to reward our workes with life euerlasting: therefore good workes do in iustice deserue it: But what if some man for a goose quill should promise M. Bishop a goose, should not hee bee taken for a goose that would thereupon conclude, that a goose quill were worth a goose? Who would not deride and scorne the absurdity of such men, who set foorth themselves like champions and challengers, and bring such reeds or rather rushes to fight with? What, because God in mercy promiseth to reward our workes with life euertasting, doth it follow that our workes do deserue the same? Faithfull promise, saith he: make th due debt. But what of that? for the debt in that case ariseth not of any desert of him to whom the promise is made, but onely of the word of him that promiseth. A man for nothing may promise something, and for very smal things very great; where though there bee no comparison betwixt the one and the other, yet the promise standeth good. We must therefore distinguish betwixt debt of desert, and debt of promise. For debt of desert ariseth out of the nature and condition of the worke it selfe, which by it selfe bindeth him to whose vse and seruice it is done. But debt of promise groweth not from the thing that is done or yelded to another, but onely from the promise it selfe, whereby a man hath bound himselfe. Saint Austine well obserueth, that it is one thing to say to a man, Thou art debtor to me, because I haue giuen to thee; another thing to say, Thou art debtor to me because thou hast promised me. When thou saiest, Thou art debtor to mee because I haue giuen to thee, a benefit hath proceeded from thee, though by way of lending, not of meere giuing. But when thou saiest, Thou art debtor to me because thou hast promised me, thou giuest nothing to him, and yet requirest of him. Where the goodnesse of him that hath promised, will make good that which he hath promised, least fidelitly be changed to naughtinesse or euill. For he that deceiueth is naughtie. Therefore debt of promise we see is so farre from implying or importing desert, as that it bindeth the promiser for his owne sake, though there be nothing in the party to whom hee hath promised that may moue him or giue him cause of the performance of his promise. The comenanc he saith, is set downe, where God in the person of a householder, agreeth with his workmen for a penny a day, & c. But that thence no merit can be gathered, hath bene before shewed in answer to the first objection. Yea, and it is plaine; because if there had bene respect of merit, there should to vnequall worke haue bene assigned vnequall reward. But there all are made equall, that all may know, as was before alledged out of Prosper, that they receiue a gift of grace not a wages due to workes. It is iust then with God, as Master Bishop citeth, not to forget the workes of his seruants; iust with God to render rest to them that are persecuted for his sake, not in respect of any merit of ours, but for his own word and promise sake. It is a Aug. de verb. Apost. ser. 16. Aliter dicimus homini, Debes mihi quia dedi tibi; & aliter dicimus, Debes mihi quia promissisti mihi. Quando dicitur, Debes mihi quia dedi tibi, processit à te beneficium sed mutuum non donatum. Quando dicitur, Debes mihi, quia promissisti mihi, tu nihil dedisti & tamen exigit. Bonitas enim eius qui promissit dabit ne in malitiam fides conuertatur. Qui autem fallit malus est.

b Scd. 14.

c Prof. de vocat. gent. lib. 1. cap. 5. Se donum gratie non operum accipisse mere dem.

d Heb. 6. 10.

e 2. Thef. 1. 6.

f Ambrosii in Rom cap. 3. Iustitia Dei dicta est que videtur esse misericordia quia de promissione originem habet, & cum promissum Dei redditur, iustitia Dei dicitur. Iustitia enim Dei est quia redditum est quod promissum est.

called the iustice of God, saith Ambrose, which seemeth to bee mercie, because it hath his originall from promise, and when the promise of God is performed, it is called the iustice of God. For it is the iustice of God that that is paid or performed which is promised. Thus and no otherwise is the saying of Saint Hierome to bee vnderstoode, that ^g great should be the vniustice of God if he did onely punish sinnes, and did not receiue or accept good workes, namely because as hee hath in iudgement threatened to punish the one; so hee hath promised in mercy to reward the other. Otherwise if wee consider the workes themselues, they are ^h not such as that God should doe wrong, though hee gaue not vnto them eternall life, as Saint Bernard speakech, yea saith Hierome, ⁱ All hands shall faile at the day of death and iudgement, because no worke shall bee found worthy of the iustice of God. The more wickedly deale the Rhemish glosses, in referring those words of Hierome to the very merit of workes, not doubting with manifest blasphemy, to affirme that ^k good workes bee so farre meritorious, as that God should be vniust, if he rendered not heauen for the same. But Saint Austine farre otherwise saith: ^l God hath made himselfe a debtor vnto vs, not by hauing any thing of vs, but by promising all things vnto vs. ^m He is become a debtor, not by receiuing any thing from vs, but by promising what it pleased him. Hereupon, saith he, that which in so many places hee repeateth: ⁿ Wee say not vnto God, Repay that which thou hast receiued, but, Pay that which thou hast promised. Yea, hee plainely argueth, that ^o such wee haue of him whatsoeuer wee offer to him, and all our goodnesse is of him, therefore wee haue not yeilded any thing to him to hold him debtor thereby. Whence then haue wee him a debtor? Marry, saith hee, because hee is a promiser. See here Master Bishop; because all our good workes are of God, wee cannot haue him a debtor vnto vs by any merit of workes that wee doe vnto him, but hee is a debtor onely for his promise sake. ^p Let vs hold him a most faithfull debtor, saith hee, because wee haue him a most mercifull promiser. The promise was made in mercy; the performance

^g Hieron. Cont. Iocuriam. lib. 2. Reuera grando iustitia Dei si tantum peccata puniret & bona opera non susciperet.
^h Bernard in Annunciat. Ser. 1. Contra iustitiam faceret Deus nisi eam donaret.
ⁱ Hieron. in Esai. lib. 6. cap. 14. Cum Dies iudicij vel demeritiouis aduenit: dissoluentur omnes manus, quia nihil opus dignum Dei iustitia reperietur.
^k Rhem. Testam. Anno. Heb. 6. 10.
^l Augustin in Psal. 109. Debitorem se nobis Deus facit: nisi a nobis accipiendo. sed omnia nobis promittendo.
^m Idem. De verb. Apo? Ser. 16.
ⁿ Dicitur in iust. ver? Dom. Ser. 31.

est non aliquid a nobis accipiendi, sed quod ei placuit promittendi. n Idem in Psal. 32. 83. 109. & d. ver? Dom. Ser. 31. Non ducimus illa. Redde quod accipisti, sed Redde te quod promissisti.

• In Psal. 32. Cum ab illa habeamus quicquid illi offimus & ex ill. si. quicquid boni sumus, &c. ergo non ei aliquid dedimus & tenemus debitorem. Unde debet orari: Quia promissor est.

p Ibid. Tenemus fidelissimum debitorem, quia habemus misericor.issimum promissorem.

thereof now dependeth vpon the fidelity of the promiser, not vpon the merit of the worker, euen as the same Saint Austine saith; The promise is sure, not according to our merits, but according to his mercie.

¶ In Psalm. 88.
Non secundum merita nostra
sed secundum mi-
sericordiam illius
firma est promissio

But to the obiection here made, M. Perkins answereth by distinguishing the couenant & promise of God, that one is of the Law, another of the Gospell: one of workes, the other of faith: one of the old Testament, the other of the new. By the old couenant of the Law, the promise is made only to the worke, neither is the person accepted, but for the works sake. Now by this couenant God hath no delight in vs, because we continue not in his couenant there being none found that perfectly fulfilleth the righteousnes of the law. By the new couenant the person is first accepted by faith for Christs sake, and then the worke is accepted and rewarded, not for the merit of it selfe, but for the condition of the person. By the first couenant, the worke is reiected, if it haue not the vttermost that it ought to haue. By the second couenant, if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, not according to that that hee hath not; so that though there be by humane frailtie some imperfection in the worke, yet God pardoning the imperfection, accepteth of it, and rewardeth it, dealing as Fathers with their children, who accept their good endeauours, when in the works hapely there is nothing woorthy to be respected. Heere therefore the promises of God properly respect the person working, and not the desert or worthinesse of the worke. But Maister Bishop in the height of his ignorance, answereth, that all the places by him cited, are out of the new Testament, vnderstanding by the new Testament, the bookes which we call the new Testament, and the old Testament, for the bookes that goe vnder that name. Whereas Maister Perkins distinguisheth the two Testaments, as God himselfe doth, not by the bookes, but by the matter of the bookes; there being in the books of the old Testament, many things that belong to the new, and many things repeated in the books of the new Testament, that belong properly to the old. Such are the sentences by Maister Bishop alledged, Do this and thou shalt liue: If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements, though according to his reading he so citeth the former of them out of the old Testament, as if it were not spoken ¶ Heb. 8.9.

¶ 1. Cor. 8.12.

¶ Luk. 10.28.

¶ Math. 19.17.

in the new. But these, though by occasion they be mentioned in the Gospel, yet are conditions indeede properly belonging to the Law. Now in the old testament according to M. Bishops meaning, we may see example of that that M. Perkins saith, where it is said of Cain and Abel; * The Lord had a respect to Abel and his offering, but to Cain and his offering he had no regard. First he had respect to Abel, because of his faith in Christ, and consequently to his offering: but he had no respect to Cain being voide of true faith, and therefore he had no respect to Cains offering. For it is here true which the Law saith, Cuius persona non placet, nec cetera placent: where the person is not pleasing, nothing else can please; and therefore S. Bernard saith; y What wonderest thou Cain, that he hath no respect to thy gifts who despiseth thee? Wherefore it should not seeme strange to M. Bishop which M. Perkins hath obserued, that God rendering to the faithfull according to their workes, should be said notwithstanding not to do it for their works sake, because their workes are secondarily accepted for their owne sakes, & they are accepted for Christs sake, and both they and their workes are rewarded by vertue of that attonement; whereby he hath reconciled them vnto God. And thus howsoeuer Master Bishops simple vnderstanding conceiueth it not, greater workes haue greater reward and lesser workes haue lesser reward, and yet for Christs sake it is that greater or lesser haue either greater or lesse reward. But it is further demaunded, if workes do not merit, why are they mentioned in the promises? Not because they merit, saith Master Perkins, but Master Bishop repeateth it, Not because they are rewarded; whereas Master Perkins denieth not, but that workes are rewarded; onely he denieth that they are rewarded by vertue of their owne merit and worth, but by vertue of Christs mediation, for whose sake they are accepted in the sight of God. But we must not think strangely of this, because he doth therein but as he was woont to do. It is further added, that good workes are mentioned in the promises, as the proper markes and signes of them to whom appertaine the promises that are made freely for Christs sake: as tokens that the doer of them is in Christ, through whose merits the promise shall be accomplished. This to M. Bishop is an addle inuention, not woorth the confuting, it is so flat contrary to the text. But it is his addle head that taketh this for an addle inuention, and his ignorance of x Genes. 4. 4. 5.

y Bernard. in Cant. Ser. 24.
Quid miraris
Cain quod munera tua non respicit
quis te despicit?

the text that maketh him thinke it so flat contrary to the text. The text, saith he, ascribeth distinctly that reward vnto the workeman for his workes, and not for Christs obedience imputed vnto him. But we tell him againe, that it is for the imputation of Christs obedience, that the text ascribeth any reward to the workman for his worke, as is sufficiently approoued vnto him in the² defence of the answer to the first obiection. His whole errour standeth in this, that he cannot conceiue how the reward should be giuen to our workes, if it be giuen for Christs sake, or how it should be giuen for Christs sake, if it be promised to our workes, whereas both these accord in one, and for Christs sake it is that any such reward is assigned to our workes.

2 Supra. Sect.
24.

I 8. W. B I S H O P.

M. Perkins fourth obiection for vs is proposed unskilfully, yet could he not answer it, but by relying vpon that which is most vntue, that forsooth no one action of the best man is without fault: which hath bene already confuted, and might be by instances of Abrahams oblation of his sonne, Saint Iohn Bapists preaching, and reprehending of Herod, and Stephens martyrdome, with infinite such like, in which Master Perkins nor any else will be able to shew in particular, what fault there was. Againe, our Saviour saith: That if the eye be simple, the whole body is lightsome, not hauing any part of darknesse in it: and very reason teacheth vs, that a mans action for substance and all due circumstances, may be perfect. It was then a very silly shift to say, that neuer any man did any one action, with all his due circumstances.

Math. 6.
Luk. 12.

But in steede of that fourth Argument, I will put this: If a greater reward be due vnto them that do better workes, then a reward is due vnto them that do good workes, which is euident in reason: But a greater reward is provided for them that do better, as S. Augustine grounded vpon Gods word, proved in sundry places: namely vpon that, For starre differeth from starre in glory, so shall be the resurrection of the dead: specifying that virginity shall shine after one sort, chastitie in wedlocke after another, and holy widowhood yet after another: all (saith he) shall be there; but they shine diuersly: And of the same worke affirmeth, That martyrdome shall be higher rewarded then

Serm. 46. De verbis Dom.
1. Cor. 15.

Serm. 95. Lib. de
virg. cap. 44.

then any other worke. The like doth be upon those words, One ground shall yeeld thirty fold, another threescore fold, another an hundred fold : Comparing chastitie in wedlocke to thirty, in widowes to the sixty, and in virgins to the hundred. But most directly in his sixty seauen treatise upon Saint Johns Gospell, upon this verse : In my Fathers house are many mansions : where he saith, that albeit some bee holier, iustier, and more valiant then others, yet there shall be fit roomes for them all, where euerie one is to receiue his place according vnto his merit. That penny spoken of (by which saith he is signified eternall life) shall be giuen to euery man equally : because euery one shall liue for ever, and not one longer then another : but many mansions do signifie the different dignities of merits in the same everlasting life.

Mat. 20.

And S. Gregory in most expresse termes, doth teach the same doctrine, saying : Because in this life there is a difference of workes amongs vs, there shall be in the other life without all doubt a distinction of dignities : that as one here exceedeth another in merit, so there one surpasseth another in reward. Finally, S. Augustine, and S. Hierome, condemne it as an heresie, to hold there is not diuersity of merits in this life, and rewards in the next : Whereon followeth most manifestly, that there be meritts and rewards.

Lib. 4. mor. cap. 42

De heres. ber. 82.
Lib. 2. cons. Louix.

R. ABBOT.

The fourth obiection he telleth vs is unskilfully proposed, but yet he doth not tell vs how he would haue it proposed, because belike hee had small opinion of it. Yet I will doe him the fauour to put it into forme for him, to let it appeare whether hee bee likely of any aduantage by it. It must be thus : If good workes bee perfect and without fault, then they merite. But they are perfect and without fault, because they are the workes of the holy Ghost. Therefore they must needes merite. Now the first of these propositions is false. For although it bee granted that good workes bee perfect and without any defect, yet can they not merite at Gods hands, as may appeare by that that hath bene before said as touching the conditions of Merite. Euen Adam himselfe in the state of Paradise, could by desert haue challenged nothing at Gods hands, as neither canne the elect Angels still continuing in that integritie wherein they were first created. But Master Perkins denieth

Supra. Sect. 4.

the minor proposition, affirming that no workes of ours are perfect and without blemish, but doe all carie the markes of our vncleannesse, whereby beeing exacted in rigour, they are subiect to reproofe. For although in their originall, which is the spirit of God, they bee pure and cleane, yet as water though cleere in the fountaine, yet gathereth vncleannesse from the channell wherein it runneth, so the workes of grace wrought in vs, doe receiue some taint of the corruptiō of our nature through which they passe. And as the hand of the most cunning Scribe, write hee neuer so excellently by himseife, loseth much of his perfection and grace, in holding the hand of a childe to teach him to write, so the worke of the holy Ghost beeing most absolute in it selfe, yet in vs through the crookednesse and corruption of our nature, whilest it is framing vs to it selfe, loseth much of the beautie and glorie that it should haue, vntil the same spirit haue fully consumed all our drosse, that it alone may preuaile in vs. M. Bishop replieth, that this is most vtrue, and telleth vs, that it hath bene already consumed, but yet against his confutation it is iustified to him before, and will stand good, that there is no action of man so perfect, but that there is a defect to be found in it. The best of our actions is weakned by b the flesh lusting against the spirit, so as that we cannot do the things that we would. In our best actions it hapneth which our Sauiour saith; c The spirit indeede is willing, but the flesh is weake. And howsoeuer faith fighting against the weakenesse of the flesh, do preuaile and ouercome, yet euen of the resistance of the flesh there groweth a blemish, and the neerenesse of the infection thereof, doth breath out some distastfull quality vpon our workes, for which wee haue neede to aske pardon at Gods hands. But M. Bishop bringeth instances of Abrahams oblation of his sonne; of Iohn Baptists preaching and reprehending Herod; of his and Steuens martyrdom, with infinite other such like, saith hee, in which no man can shew in particular what fault there was. But why should we not conceiue the like of the martyrdom of Iohn and Steuens, as wee doe of the martyrdom of Peter? And of Peters martyrdom our Sauiour Christ beforehand saith; d When thou shalt bee old, thou shalt stretch forth thine hands, and another shall gird and leade thee whither thou wouldest not. Thus spake he, saith S. Iohn, signifying by what death he should glorifie God. Where when he saith, Whither thou wouldest not, there is plainly approued in Peters martyrdom,

b Gal. 5. 17.

c Mat. 26. 41.

d Joh. 21. 18.

tyrdome,

tyrdome a shrinking and drawing backe, a resistance and opposition of the will, so that though willingly he did vndergoe it, yet it was in some part also against his will. Whereupon S. Austine maketh this collection: If Peter the Apostle being of so great perfection, was led whither hee would not, and died with his will against his will, but with his will receiued the crowne, what marvell is it if there bee some feare in the suffering euen of iust men, euen of the Saints? There is feare by humane infirmity, and hope by the promise of God. And this resistance, this feare, this shrinking backe, the same S. Austine imputeth to the corruption of sinne. A man (saith hee) in mind seruing the law of God, and in the flesh carying still the lusts of sinne, which the Apostle forbiddeth to obey, by reason of the mind desireth indeede to be loosed, and to be with Christ, but by sense of the flesh refuseth and hunteth it. Now what ground hath M. Bishop to except John and Stephen in their martyrdome from the cōmon condition of the Saints? and why should he thinke that Johns preaching and reprehending of Herod was without that spotte of resistance and feare, when his martyrdome was not? And why should we imagine, that that weaknesse of the flesh which hath his worke in the martyrdome of the Saints, had not the like also in Abrahams oblation of his son, being a thing without doubt as crosse to his nature and will, as his owne death was. But saith M. Bishop, Our Sauiour saith, that if the eie be simple, the whole body is lightsome, not hauing any part of darknesse in it. It is true, if the eie bee wholly single and cleere, but where is the eie that is so cleere? Where is hee that saith not with Dauid Lighten mine eies that I sleepe not in death. Open thou mine eies, that I may see the wondrous things of thy Law. It is our whole worke or endeavour in this life, saith S. Austine, to heale the eie of the heart where-with we should see God. If it be our whole worke in this life to heale our eies, then wee expect not in this life to haue them fully whole. In the meane while therefore because it is Gods prerogatiue which S. John speaketh of, God is light, and in him is no darknesse at all, it must needs bee, as S. Hierome collecteth thereof, that all our lights are spotted and darkened with some filth. But hee telleth vs yet further, that very reason teacheth vs, that a mans action for substance, and all due circumstances may be perfect. And it may be indeed that his broken reason so teacheth him, howsoeuer his conscience bee contrarie to his reason. But our reason teacheth vs, that if there bee

yet

e. Aug. in Psa. 20
conc. 1 Si Petrus Apostolus tan a perfectione quo
nollet ductus est.
Et volens nolens
moriuus est, sed
volens coronatus
est, quia mirum se
est aliquis pavor
in passione etiam
iustorum, etiam
S. in flor. Pavor
est ex humana in-firmi-ate, spes ex
diuina promissione.
f. Idem Epist. 120.
Mente feruens
legi Des. carne au-
tem trahens desideria peccati, quibus obedire uenit Apostolus mentis
quidam ratione?
concupiscit homo
dissolus & esse cū Christo, sed id sen-
su carnis recusās & refugit.
g. Mat. 6. 22.
Luk. 11. 34.
h. Psa. 13. 3.
i. Psa. 119. 18.
k. Aug. de verb.
Dom. ser. 18. Tot a opera nostra in hac
uita est sanare
oculum cordis un-
de uidetur Deus.
l. 1. Ioh. 1. 5.
m. Hieron. contr.
Pelag. li. 2. Quaudo dicit nullus ten-ebrias in Dei lu-
mine reperiri,
ostendit omnia
aliorum luminis fode aliqua maculari.

yet darkenesse in the vnderstanding, and waiwardnesse in the will, and in both a stooping and inclining to the weaknesse and corruption of the flesh, as indeede there is, then all our workes saour of our earthly vessels, and nothing can come from vs, but certainly carieth a blot and imperfection with it. And therefore it was no silyly shift of M. Perkins, but a true defence, that neuer any man did any one action with all his due circumstances, because ⁿ all the soule which God wholly requireth in euerie action of his seruice, cannot bee wholly bestowed therein, so long as concupiscence possesseth any part thereof, as perpetually it doth so long as wee continue in the warfare of this life. But heere in stead of that fourth objection proposed by M. Perkins, M. Bishop bringeth vs foorth a leaden dagger of his owne. If greater reward bee due vnto them that doe better workes, then a reward is due vnto them that do good workes. But a greater reward is provided for them that do better workes: the conclusion should be, Therefore a reward is due vnto them that doe good workes. In stead whereof in the end of this idle discourse, he bringeth in this: Whereof followeth most manifestly, that there bee merites and rewards, But I pray you M. Bishop, whereof doth that follow? do merits follow in the conclusion, when in the premisses there is no mention of the? But we must pardon you: it seemeth your traouelling to Rome hath iogged your Logicke out of your head, and therefore such conclusions may easily slippe you. But the direct conclusion of your argument we grant, therefore a reward is due vnto them that doe good workes, onely with this exception, that it is due by the mercifull promise of God, not by vertue of any our merit or desert, and more your argument prooueth not. Now hee taketh great paines in the handling of this worthy argument, to proue inequality of reward, and all to no purpose, because wee deny not, but that as God in this life diuersly distributeth his graces, to some in greater measure, to some in lesse: so in the life to come hee will sort his rewards accordingly, that it may bee true which is written, that ^o euery man shall receiue his wages according to his labour. But whether greater wages to greater labour, or lesser wages to lesser labour, both are promised for Christs sake, as hath been shewed: and God will performe the same: ^p for his owne names sake, and not for any merite of ours, whereby hee standeth bound vnto vs. As for the terme of merits which hee alledgeth out of the Fathers, what wee are to conceiue thereof n Deus. 6. 9.

Aug. de perfect.
iustit. Cum est aliquid concupiscen-
tie carnalis, quod
bel continendo fre-
metur, non omni-
modo ex tota anima diligitur Deus.

o 1. Cor. 3. 8.

p Ezech. 36. 22.

thereof

thereof followeth anone after to be declared. Of virginity and widowhood we are to intreat in the question of Vates.

89. W. BISHOP.

The first reason is taken out of those texts, which teach that men are worthy of eternall life: They shall walke with me in whites, because they be worthy. God proued them, & found them worthy of himselfe. That you may be esteemed worthy of the kingdome of God. Now if men be worthy of eternall life, it must needs be granted, that they haue deserved it.

Apoc. 3.
Sap. 3.
2. Theff. 1.
Luk. 20. 35.

M. Perkins answereth: that they were indeed worthy, but not for their owne merits, but for Christs imputed vnto them. This is his onely refuge, yet bath he not, nor cannot shew any one text in Scripture that speaketh so. But to refell him, turne onely to the places, and there you shall find, that this worthinesse rose of good workes, as Christ saith: I know thy workes, and find them not full: yet there be some amongst you, who haue not defiled their garments (but haue their workes full) they shall walke with me in whites, because they be worthy: and by sustaining persecutions, they were made worthy of that kingdome. And in the words following the Apostle signifieth, that it is as iust for God to requite good workes with the ioyes of heauen, as he doth punish wicked with the paines of hell.

Apoc. 3.

2 Theff. 1.

R. ABBOT.

*M. Perkins for obiection proposeth the place of the Reuelation, They shall walke with me in white, for they are worthy, as whereby they would proue merit, because a man cannot be worthy but he must merit and deserue. M. Bishop out of his store addeth two other places of the new Testament, but they are such as whereby is ministered vnto vs a very ready and pregnant answer to the first. The place of Saint Luke is by their owne vulgar translation thus: Qui digni habebuntur: that is, They who shall be accounted worthy. The words of Saint Paul are: Vs digni habeamini: that ye may be esteemed worthie of the kingdome. Whereby we conceiue and vnderstand what mans worthinesse is, Gods dignation, Gods acceptatiō, Gods vouchsafing to take him as worthy for Christs sake though*

Apoc. 3. 4.

Luk. 20. 35.

2. Theff. 2. 5.

though in respect of himselfe he be not worthy. To this M. Bishop saith This is his onely refuge, yet can he not shew any one text of Scripture that speaketh so But we answer him, that all those texts of Scripture which do thus speake of God, reputing, or esteeming, or accounting worthy, do import so much vnto vs. For if our worthines stand in Gods esteeming and accounting of vs, we may not of the little of worthinesse conclude, that by perfection of reall qualitic we are that for which he is content in mercy and fauor to accept vs. We are accordingly worthie as we are iust. We are iust, to speake of perfect iustice, not by righteousnesse of workes, but onely by Gods imputation of righteousnesse without workes, as we haue seene before. In like sort therefore we are worthy ^d by Gods vouchsafing acceptance, not by our worthinesse, as S. Bernard saith. And hereto agree the confessions of the faithfull. Iacob saith, ^e I am lesse then all thy mercies, and all the truth which thou hast shewed vnto thy seruant: that is, as we reade it, I am not worthy thereof: according to that which Chrysostome saith: ^f Though we dye a thousand deaths, though we fulfill all the vertues of the soule, yet do we nothing worthy in compariso of those things which we our selues haue receined of God. Iohn Baptist, ^g then whom there arose not a greater amongst womens children, yet saith of himselfe in respect of Christ, ^h I am not worthie to beare his shoes: ⁱ I am not worthy to vntie the latchet of his shoe. The Centurion of whose faith our Sauiour testifieth, that ^k he had not found so great faith, no not in Israel, yet saith of himselfe, ^l I am not worthy that thou shouldest come vnder my roofe. ^m Reade, O man, saith S. Bernard, in thine owne heart, reade within thy selfe concerning thy selfe the witnesse of truth, and thou wilt iudge thy selfe vnworthy of this common light. Thus holy men haue spoken, thus they haue thought, and if our vnworthinesse be such to these things, shall we dreame of a worthinesse to the crowne of heauen? ⁿ Saue me, saith Dauid, for thy mercies sake: that is, saith S. Austine, ^o not in my righteousnes, not in my merits, but in thy mercie: not because I am worthy, but because thou art mercyfull. Againe, the same S. Austine saith in another place: ^p God yeeldeth vnto vs all good things because he is good, not because we are worthy, because he is mercifull, not because we haue merited in any thing. The Prophet acknowledgerh God giueth deliuerance ^q for his mercies sake, or as the vulger Latine readeth, for his

d Bern. in Dedicat. Eccles.
ser. 5. Nos sumus
sed ipsius dignati-
one, non dignitate
nostra.

e Gen. 22. 10.
f Chrysostom. de
compunct. cordis.
Et si millies mo-
riamur, et si om-
nes anime virtu-
tes expleamus
nihil tamen dig-num gerimus ad
ea que ipsi à Deo percepimus.

g Mat. 11. 11.

h Mat. 3. 11.

i Mat. 1. 7.

k Mat. 8. 10.

l Ver. 8.

m Bernard. in

Dedicat. Eccles.

Ser. 5. Lege, o

homo, in corde

tuo, lege intra

scipsum de teipso

testimonia veri-

tatis, et hac com-

muni luce iudi-

cabis te indignum

n Psal. 31. 16.

o Aug. in Psal.

30. Hoc est, non

in mea iusticia,

non in meis meri-

tis, sed in tua

misericordia; non

quia ego sum di-

gnus, sed quia

tu misericors.

p Idem in Psal.

41. Nebi Deus

omnia bona pre-

stat, quia bonus

est, non quia nos

digni sumus: quia ille misericors est, non quia in aliquo promerui.

q Psal. 44. 26.

names sake Saint Austin againe expoundeth it: That is freely, for thy names sake, not for my merit: because thou shalt vouchsafe to doe it, not because I am worthy to whom thou shalt doe it. Thus doth S. Augustine oftentimes giue checke to M. Bishops conceipt of worthinesse, by occasion of those phrases so often vsed, for thy names sake, for thy mercies sake, for thy righteousnesse sake. So Basil expoundeth the same phrase: For thy mercies sake: not because I am worthy, but because of thine owne goodnesse. Now if M. Bishop will haue no saluatiō but that he will be worthy of it, let him hear what S. Bernard saith: If we of childish stomack will not be saued freely, iustly are wee not saued at all. The dissembling of our misery excludeth mercy, neither hath Gods vouchsafing any place where presumption is of our worthines.

But M. Bishop to refel M. Perkins, biddeth vs turne to the places, and there we shall find, that the worthinesse rose of workes. But we haue turned to the places, and find no necessity thereof. Wee find that they that defiled not their garments were worthy, but that by their very workes they were worthy we find not. Nay their worthines indeed was in their garments. For what garments were they that they had not defiled, but the same wherof the Apostle speaketh: so many as are baptized into Christ, haue put on Christ. He is our purple garment of redemption by his blood: he is our Lilly white garment of innocency by his righteousnesse. They that with this profession of Christ doe ioyne idolatry, heresie, vncleannesse, do dishonour the name and profession of Christ, and disgrace the garments which should grace them; which these had not done. By these garments therefore they were worthy, by Christ, by his merits, by his obedience, by his righteousnes; in him and for his sake they were counted worthy, and whatsoever worthines God pronounceth of them for their works, it is by the gracious acceptation thereof in him. Albeit the place may very well beare another construction also that they were worthy, not absolutely, but compared to the other spoken of before. For one man compared to another, may be called worthy in comparison of the other, when simply considered in himselfe, & compared to the iudgement of God, he is not worthy. And to this distinctiō S. Ambrose leadeth vs, who speaking of the calling of the Apostles, whom Christ put y in his stead to beseech vs to be reconciled vnto God, saith of them: If we enquire the matter strictly, there can no man be found worthy to be the deputy of Christ: for all whom hee chose,

r Aug. in Psal. 43. Hoc est gratia, prpter nomen tuum, non propter meritū meū, quia tua dignitatis es factus, non quia ego dignus sum cui facias, I Psal. 142. r. 2. Basil. in Ps. 142: Non quod ego dignus sim, sed propter benignitatem tuam. u Bernard. in De. dicit, Eccles. Se. 5. Quod si non pueri animositate gratia saluari nolumus merito non saluamur. Excludit miserie distimulatio miseratiōne nec dignitatem locum habet, ubi fuerit presumptio dignitatis. x Cal. 3. 27.

y 2. Cor. 6. 20. z Ambros. in 2. Tim. 1. Si ad si. quidam querit nullus hominum potest dignus videri Picarius esse Christi. Omnes enim quos elegit, prius fuerant peccatores. Quansum ergo ad comparationem ceterorum bonorum, hi digni videntur sunt, quantum vero ad rem ipsam omnes indigni sunt.

were formerly sinners. In comparison thē of others, these (the Apostles) were found worthy; but as touching the thing it selfe all are unworthy. Thus plainly doth he giue vs to vnderstand, that men may be called worthy only in respect of other men. In the other place M. Bishop saith, that by sustaining persecutions, they are said to be made worthy. But he saith vnruly: for the Apostle saith onely, as was before alledged, that ye may bee counted worthy, which (as I haue said) is for Christs sake, ^a in whom it is giuen vnto vs, that not onely we should beleue in him, but also suffer for his sake, and because it is giuen vs, therefore how soeuer patiently we beare it, yet wee must still say as S. Austin teacheth: ^b Deliver vs, not for our merit, but for thy names sake

^a Phil. 1. 29.

^b Aug. in Psal. 43. Sicut patientes in tribulationibus sine gaudentes in prosperitatibus redome nos non propter meritum nostrum, sed propter nomen tuum.

^c Aug. in Psal. 42. Iudica inquit, me Deus: non timo iud. cum iuam quia noui misericordiam tuam. Discerne causam meam, distat inter eum qui in te credit, & in infirmitatis (sed distat conscientia, &c. idem in Psal. 32. Nec in misericordia Deus amat. ut iudicium nec in iudicio misericordiam, &c. Nunquid iudicium amittit aut non debuit iudicare inter conuersos & non conuersos? An robis iustum vide ut conuersus, & non conuersus equaliter habeatur? Ergo habet & iudicium in ipsa misericordia. Rufus in illo iudicio habet & misericordiam, &c. ePsalm 143. 2. f Basilin Psal. 142. Iustitie immixta est misericordia, & ita immixta ut ipsa iustitia benignas vocetur. f Ambros. in Psal. 118. Ser. 20. Iudicium quo fragilitas nostre estimatione censetur. In hoc ipso iudicium cum misericordia copulatum est, ut veritas iudicij miseratione Domini temperetur.

Yet hee goeth further and telleth vs, that in the words following the Apostle signifieth, that it is as iust with God to requite good works with the ioyes of heauen, as to punish wicked with the paines of hell. Neither do we make any doubt thereof, because he hath giuen his word & promise so to do. And it is as iust with God to perform his promise to the one, as it is to punish the euill deseruings of the other. By iustice and iust iudgement, God giueth rest vnto the persecuted, but this iust iudgement consisteth in iustifying and maintaining ^c their cause, as S. Austin noteth not in weying or examining their merit & worth. By iust iudgement God putteth difference ^d betwixt the conuerted and the not conuerted; betwixt the righteous and the wicked; betwixt him that serueth God, and him that serueth him not, betwixt him that beleeueth, and him that beleeueth not; and yet he that beleeueth and serueth God, yea and is persecuted for Gods sake, must craue iudgement with mercy to be receiued vnto life, praying with Dauid against meere iudgement: ^e Enter not into iudgement with thy seruāt, &c. That iustice therefore is to the faithful such as Basil speaketh of: ^f Mercy is mingled with iustice, and so mingled, as that iustice it selfe is called mercie. That iust iudgement is such, as Saint Ambrose speaketh of: ^g A iudgement wherein wee are iudged with consideration of our frailtie, in which, iudgement is ioyned with mercie, so that the truth of iudgement is tempered or qualified with the mercy of the Lord.

Now^h iudgement tempered and qualified, is indeed mercie as S. Ierome Bernard saith. As for the place cited out of the booke of Wisdom: God proved them and found them worthy of himselfe: though it be out of a booke the authoritie whereof we denie, and therefore can require no answer, yet it hath answer sufficient by that that hath bene said. God found them worthy of himselfe by finding them answerable to those conditions and rules, by which he is content in mercie to accept men as worthy, though simply no man can be worthy of him.

h. B. in Cant.
Ser. 14. In 10. 3
tempera uerum, 2-ricordia est.
i. V. in 3. 5.

20. W. BISHOP.

The sixth reason M. Perkins deliuereth thus: Eternall life is tearmed a crowne, and a crowne of righteousness to be given by a iust Iudge: therefore in this life it must be iustly deserved, otherwise it were not well called a crowne of iustice, nor could be said to be rendred by a iust iudge. M. Perkins answereth, that it is called a crowne by resemblance, because it is given in the end of the life, as the crowne is given in the end of the race.

2. Tim. 4.

Reply. If that were all the cause, and that there were no respect to be had to former deserts, it might then as well be called a halter by resemblance, because that also is given in the end of life: and in their opinion, more properly: because all their workes are defiled like a menstruous cloth: and a halter is the end of such wicked workes. But as a halter is due to a theefe, so is a crown of glory the iust reward of the righteous man.

Secondly he answereth, that it is called a crowne of iustice, because God hath bound himselfe by his promise to give it: heere then at length wee haue by his owne confession, that by Gods promise eternall life is due debt vnto the righteous: but as hauing over-shot himselfe, he addes, not for any desert of theirs, but onely for the promise sake. But as you haue heard before out of S. Matthew, that promise was made for working the time of his life in our vineyard, and so there was some desert on their part: and the seruants were rewarded, because they employed their talents well: and in this very place, Saint Paul reckoneth vpon his good seruices, for which the iust iudge would render him a crowne of iustice: and therefore the iustice is not onely in respect of Gods promise.

Math. 20.

Math. 25.

you will not beleue mee, prouing that I say out of the very text, rather thē M. Perkins on his bare word, let S. Augustin be arbitrator between vs, who most deeply considereth of euery word in this sentence: Let vs heare (saith hee) the Apostle speaking, when hee approched neare vnto his passion, I haue (quoth he) fought a good fight, I haue accomplished my course, I haue kept the faith: concerning the rest, there is laid vp for me a crowne of iustice, which our Lord wil render vnto me in that day, a iust iudge: and not only to me, but to thē also that loue his cōming: hee saith, that our Lord a iust iudge will render vnto him a crowne, hee therefore doth owe it, and as a iust iudge will pay it. For the worke being regarded, the reward cannot be denied. I haue fought a good fight, is a worke: I haue accomplished my course, is a worke: I haue kept the faith, is a worke: There is laid vp for me a crowne of iustice, this is the reward. So that you see most cleerely by this most learned Fathers iudgement, that the reward is due for the worke sake, and not onely for the promise of God. See him vpon that verse of the Psalm: I will sing vnto thee O Lord, mercy and iudgement. Where he concludes, that God in iudgement will out of his iustice crowne those good workes, which hee of mercy had giuen grace to do.

Li 50. Hom.
hom. 4.

Psal. 100.

R. ABBOT.

To the obiection of this place M. Perkins answereth, that euerlasting life is called a crowne onely in resemblance. For as hee which runneth a race, saith he, must continue and runne to the end, and so be crowned, euen so must we continue to walke in good workes vnto the end, & then receiue eternall life. Now for reply to this answer it seemeth M. Bishop had some conference with the hangman, and learning of him that a halter is the end of a wicked course, (let him remember his owne wicked course, and feare the iudgement of the iust God) he thought good to draw that obseruatiō to serue him for one shift And first to giue way to his hangmans deuce, hee curtalleth M. Perkins his answer: as if he had said no more but thus, that eternall life is called a crowne, because it is giuen in the end of the life, as the crowne is giuen in the end of the race. Whereto he replyeth, that if that were all, and that there were no respect to former deserts, it might be as well be called a halter. But M. Perkins answer expresth plainly plainly, as we see, that the crowne hath reference to them that continue to the end to walke in good workes, and therefore left no occasion or place for this hangmanlike and vnciuill reply. But his mind, it seemeth, was strongly set vpon the halter, and therefore by head and shoulders he would pull it in, onely to please himselfe and his table companions with a forced and witlesse iest. He addeth further, that in our opinion it should more properly be called a halter, because all our workes are defiled like a menstruous cloth, and an halter is the end of such wicked workes. Now we know no reason but that M. Bishop by most right, because he hath set downe the sentence, should keepe the halter to himselfe; for that we are wel assured that his best works are defiled as well as ours. But what will he say (I maruell) to Pope Leo the third, of whom Mathew of Westminister reporteth, that ^a being at Masse, about a good worke no doubt, a woman of his good acquaintance comming with her offering, crushed and kissed his hand, and therewith stirred vp in the Pope (a holy father I warrant you) some motions of the flesh. Now was this no defilement shall we thinke to so good a worke? Surely if M. Bishop had liued then, he would haue giuen iudgement of the Pope that hee should be hanged, because a halter is the end of such wicked Masse. But tel vs M. Bishop, do all your works goe so currantly and cleyly from you, as that you can presume to be free from the halter, that you haue here made? Haue you neuer offēded at masse in some such like sort as the Pope did? Doth not your mind often wander whē you seem to pray? Doe not sinister thoughts and respects many times interpose themselues, and make you to go crooked when you thinke to go vpright? Take heed that heerafter it be not said vnto you, Patere legem quam ipse culeris: Be tried by the law which thou thy selfe hast made: a halter is the end of such wicked workes. But of the condition of our workes, more hath been said before, then euer M. Bishop will be able to disproue. Here he concludeth, that as a halter is due to a theefe, so is the crowne of glorie the iust reward of the righteous man. True say wee, but yet not by the vertue of his righteousness and desert, but by the mercifull promise of Almighty God. In respect of which promise, it is called, as M. Perkins answereth, a crowne of iustice, because God by his promise hath bound himselfe to giue it, and in the performance of his promise he is approued iust. And this is the constant confession of vs all, which M. Bi-

^a Math. Westm.
lib. 1. Anno. 798.
Halter quedam,
ad quam aliquāda
accessum habuit,
ut dicebatur, ma-
nium eius comprā-
mit vter celebrā-
dum et comprā-
mendo deoscular, incentiuū libidi-nis in Papae excesaute.

shop seemeth to apprehend as casually or forcedly spoken by M. Perkins, that eternall life is due d. bi to the righteous and faithfull, yet with that exception still, which he thinketh M. Perkins added as having ouershot himselfe, because his ignorance conceiuech not how these two stand together, not for any desert of theirs, but only for his promise sake, as hath bin declared sufficiently^b before, in defending the answer to the third obiection. But as touching the place here handled, he shall find S. Bernard expounding this crowne of iustice in the same sort as we do. It is a crowne of iustice (saith he) which Paul expecteth, but of Gods iustice, not his owne. For it is iust that God pay what he oweth, & he oweth that which he hath promised. And this is the iustice of which the Apostle presumeth, euen the promise of God.

b See, 17.

c Bernard de
erat. & lib. arb.
Est ergo quam Paulus expectat
corona iusticie,
sed iusticie Dei,
non sue. Augustinus quippe ut reddat quod debet:
debet autem quod pollicitus est. Et hec est iusticia de
qua presamit Apostolus promif-sio Dei;

Albeit it is true also, that mans iustice is crowned, & that in that respect also it is a crowne of righteousness, who maketh question thereof? but still it is true, that it is not due to mans righteoulnesse by merite and desert, but is tied to it onely by the promise and grace of God. And thus doth the Apostle reckon his good seruice, for which the iust Iudge would render a crowne of iustice, not as pleading his desert thereof, but knowing that God hath promised such reward to such seruice. Hee alledgeth to the contrary the examples of them that were called into the vineyard, and of the other that receiued the talents, but of them he hath before receiued answer. Al his error is, that he cannot conceiue worke and reward, but that it must necessarily imply merite and desert, which notwithstanding children can distinguish, because great reward by fauour may be giuen when the worke is in no sort to be thought worthy of it. As for the place of Austine which he produceth, it giueth him no succor. We find there worke and reward: I haue fought a good fight, &c. the worke. There is layd up for me a crowne of iustice; the reward: but we do not finde that the reward is deserued by the worke: we do not find that by vertue of merite the iustice of God any way standeth bound vnto him. Nay in the same sermon S. Austin saith, d Par- don me Apostle, I know nothing of thine owne but euill: therefore when he crowneth thy merits, he crowneth nothing but his owne gifts. His collection from the place is already answered, that by the promise the reward is yeilded to the worke. In the other place there is nothing more then in that I haue spoken of, and hath full answer by the same exception. Onely I will remember M. Bishop, that d August. lib. 50.

homil. 14. Di-
niam Apostole, propria tua non
noui nisi mala.
Cum ergo Deus
coronat merita tua; nihil coronat nisi dona sua.

that by S. Austins doctrine there can no merit bee pleaded on our behalfe, because all our good workes come from grace on Gods behalfe, so that therefore the crowne is but grace for grace, and a latter mercy added as the consequent of a former mercy. And this S. Austin noteth concerning this very place of S. Paul here debated. The Lord will render unto me a crowne of righteousness. Why? because I haue fought a good fight, &c. But whence hast thou fought a good fight? &c. Yea not I, but the grace of God with me. Then it is by his mercy that thou art crowned. Be nowhere proud, but alwaies praise the Lord. In a word he saith againe as before wee haue seene, that God crowneth our merits, not as our merits, but as his owne gifts: and if they goe not vnder account of our merits in heauen, why are they so earnestly pleaded for as ours here vpon the earth?

e Idem in Psal. 102. Reddet mihi Dominus, &c. Quare? Quia bonum certamen certavi, &c. Unde certasti? &c. Non ego autem sed gratia Dei mecum. Ergo & quod coronaris, illius misericordia coronaris. Nisquam sis superbus: semper lauda dominum. f Idem de grat. lib. 2. cap. 7. Non coronat Deus merita tua tanquam merita tua, sed tanquam dona sua.

21. W. BISHOP.

And that the Reader may vnderstand, that not ouely S. Augustine doth so confidently teach this doctrine of merits (which Master Perkins blushed not to terme the inuention of Satan;) I will fold up this question with some testimonies of the most ancient and best Authors.

S. Ignatius, the Apostles auditor saith: Giue me leaue to become the food of beasts, that I may by that meanes merit and win God. Epist. ad Roman.

Iustine a glorious Martyr of the next age hath these words, speaking in the name of all Christians: We think that men who by works haue shewed themselves worthie of the will and counsell of God, shall by their merits liue and raigne with him, free from all corruption and perturbation. Apolog. 2. ant. med.

S. Irenaeus saith: Wee esteeme that crowne to be precious which is gotten by combat and suffering for Gods sake. Lib. 4. com. heres. cap. 72.

S. Basil. All we that walke the way of the Gospell, as merchants do, buy and get the possession of heavenly things by the workes of the commandements. A man is saued by workes of iustice. Ora in institum prom. Lib. de Spiro sancto, cap. 24.

S. Cyprian. If the day of our returne shall find vs vnloaden, swift, and running in the race of works, our Lord will not faile to reward our merits. He will giue for workes to those that winne in peace, a white crown, and for martyrdom in persecution he will redouble vnto them a purple crowne. Sermone eleemos. in fine.

S. Hilary. The kingdome of heauen is the hire and reward of them that liue well and perfectly. Can. 5. Jo. Mat. b.

Lib. 1. de Offic. c. 15.

S. Ambrose. It is euident that there remaineth after this life either reward for merits, or punishment.

S. Hierome. Now after baptisme it appertaineth to our trauels, according vnto the diuersity of vertue, to prepare for vs different rewards.

Ser. 68. in Cant.

S. Bernard. Prouide that thou haue merits, for the want of them is a pernicious pouertie.

Cant. 18.

Briefly that this was the vniuersall doctrine of all good Christians a-boue a thousand yeeres past, is declared in the Councell of Arausicane : Reward is debt vnto good works if they be done, but grace which was not debt, goeth before, that they may be done. These testimonies of the most ancient and best learned Christians, may suffice to batter the brazen forehead of them that affirme the doctrine of merites to be a Satanicall inuention, and to settle all them that haue care of their saluation, in the most pure doctrine of the Catholike Church.

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop will giue vs to vnderstand, that not only S. Austin, but all antiquity teacheth the doctrine of merits, so that M. Perkins might blush to call it the inuention of Satan. But M. Perkins had no cause to blush in that respect. He knew well that antiquitie is more wanted by Papiſts then followed. He knew well that in this doctrine of merites they wickedly bely antiquity and the Fathers. And indeede neuer any Father spake of merits, as they haue done. Iustly therefore did he call it, as it is, the inuention of Satan, seruing only to delude men, to put them in vaine hope, to lift them vp in pride, with opiniõ of gaining heauẽ, that they may by their pride be cast down to hell. But for the clearing of this point, it is to be vnderstood, that the name of merites is indeed verie vsuall amongst the Fathers of the Latin Church, but with no such meaning as the Church of Rome hath fancied thereof. For they only intended thereby briefly & in one word to signifie good works, workes that please God, that are accepted in Gods sight, that find fauor with God, & obtain reward at his hands. They dreamed not that in good works there should be a iust desert of heauen, that they should deserue it worthily, that they should be fully worthy of euerlasting life, that good works should as well be the cause of saluation, as euill workes are the cause of damnation, that that good works are so far meritorious, so far I say meritorious, as that God should be vniust if he rendered not heauen for them, as in the beginning hath bin shewed that now is the language of the church of Rome, These speeches or the like was neuer heard of amongst the Fathers. They vsed the word merite according to the signification wherein commonly they vsed the verbe mereri, which with them imported to obtaine, to find fauour for any thing to be giuen or done; so as that wicked men are said sometimes mereri, not surely to deserue, but to receiue or to find the fauour of benefits at Gods hands; yea and good men are said mereri not to deserue, but to receiue or to find euill vsage at the hands of the wicked. But by examples the matter will be plainer then by words. S. Austine saith,

^a Huius vite solatia quidam etiam cultores demonum accipere meruerunt: Some who haue bin worshippers of diuels haue merited, that is, haue found the fauour to receiue the comforts of this life. Againe,

^b Apostoli a suis ciuibus occidi meruerunt: The Apostles merited, that is, found such vsage as to bee killed of their owne people. ^c Pro actione gratiarum summus meruimus odiorum: In stead of thanks wee haue merited, that is, we found at their hands the fire of hatred. ^d Caveat homo ne ab illo misericordiam mereatur homo contra eius sententiam a quo factus est homo: Let man take heede that man doe not merite, that is, obtaine mercie of him, against the sentence of him, by whom man was made. So doth Ambrose vse the same word, ^e Iniquus Cain longaniam duxit a matrem, duxit uxorem, & hoc meruit promissione diuina: Wicked Cain liued long and married a wife, and this he merited, that is obtained or receiued by the permission of God. ^f Non debemus mirari quod Ioannes tantam gratiam nascendo meruerit: Wee are not to wonder that Iohn in his birth merited, that is, obtained so great grace. So Hilary speaketh, ^g Libros quos habere mereamur: I pray you let vs merit, that is, find the fauour to haue those bookes. So Hierom, ^h Veniam mereri debeo: I am to merite, that is, to obtaine pardon. So Gregorie Bishop of Rome, ⁱ Paulus cum redemptoris nomen in terra conaretur extinguere, eius uerba de celo meruit audire: Paul when he went about to extinguish the name of Christ upon earth, merited, that is, found the mercy & fauour to hear his words from heauen. In another place, O felix culpa qua talem ac tantum meruit habere Redemptorem: O happy sin of Adam that merited, that is, found the mercy to haue such and so great a redeemer. S. Austine applieth the word also

^a August. de ciu. Dei. lib. 5. cap. 24.

^b Idem in Psal. 35 c. Cont. lit. Petil. lib. 3. cap. 6.
^d De anima & eius orig. lib. 2. cap. 12.

^e Amb de Cain & Abel. lib. 2. cap. 10.

^f Idem. ser. 53.

^g Hilar. epist. 4. apud Aug. tom. 7.

^h Hieron. prefat. in Abdiam.
ⁱ Gregor. Moral. lib. 9. cap. 17.

k August. in
Psal. 35.

to beasts and cattel, ^k Homines habent aliquid apud Deum exceptum quod iumenta non merentur; Men haue somewhat excepted with God which beasts merit not, that is obtaine not. Thus the word hath grown also into translations, wherein the originals there hath bin no occasion of it. Where Cain saith, Mine iniquitie is greater then can bee pardoned, the Vulger Latin translateth, ^l Maiore est iniquitas mea quā ut veniam merear: Mine iniquity is greater thē that I can merit, that is obtaine pardon. Where S. Paul saith, ^m I obtained mercy because I did it ignorantly, &c. S. Austine out of some translation readeth, l Genes. 4. 13.

m 1. Tim. 1. 13.

n Aug. de Bapt.
con. Donat. lib. 4.
cap. 5.
o Ignas. epist. ad Romanos.

n Miserecordiam merui, I merited mercy, but importing nothing but the obtaining thereof. In an Epistle of Ignatius wee haue it commonly translated; I am in loue with none of the things that are seene, ut Iesum Christū merear adipisci, that I may merit to obtaine Christ, whereas in the Greeke it is ἵνα τὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν εὐρω, that is as Hierom translateth it, ^p ut Iesum Christū inueniam, that I may find Iesus Christ.

p Hierom. in Cat.
Eccles. Script.

Againe, in the next period the Greeke is ἵνα Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἀπολαύω, where the same translater readeth as before, the words being translated by Hierome, ^q tantum ut Christo fruar, onely that I may enioy Christ, And thus in infinite places haue they made the Greeke Fathers to speake of merit, where they neuer meant any such thing.

q Ibid.

But to make it plainely to appear, that by merit they meant not any such worthines or desert as M. Bishop speaketh of, let one sentence of Ambrose fully suffice. All the things that we suffer are too little & vnworthy for the paines werer of there (should be rendered to vs so great reward of future good things, as shal be reuealed in vs, whē being reformed to the image of God we shall merit (that is, attaine) to see his glorie

r Amb. epist. 22.
Omnia que patimur
minora sunt
et indigna pro quorum laboribus
tanta reperatur
futurorum merces bonorum que reuelabitur in nobis cū ad Des. imē ginem reformā: i gloriam eius facie
ad faciem aspiciere
meruerimus.

s Of iustification lect. 49. ex Gregor. Moral. lib. 9.
cap. 18.

face to face. Where to take merit properly to import desert and worthines, shoid be to make Ambrose in one sentēce absurdly crosse & contrary to himself, to say, that we deserue to see God face to face, when he hath first affirmed that euē our sufferings for Christs sake are vnworthy to haue so great glory yeelded vnto them. The same is more plaine by that that before hath beene alledged out of Gregorie, ^t If we be iudged without mercy, our work is worthy to be punished which we expect to haue rewarded: therefore the teares of expiation (saith he) are required, that humilitie of prayer may lift up the merite of our good worke to the obtaining of eternall reward. Where wee see he vseth the name of merit as vually they were wont, but sheweth that it is so far from being truly merit, as that in extremity it is worthy

thy to bee punished, and that it needeth teares of expiation, that is, earnest intercession & prayer to God for Christs sake to remit the spots and blemishes thereof, and that it is thus by prayer onely, that is, by fauour, that any reward is yeelded vnto it. But to this place most properly belongeth that of S. Bernard before mentioned, that the merits of men are not such as that eternal life is due for the of right or as if God should do wrong, if he did not yeeld the same vnto the. If (saith he) wee will properly name those which wee call our merites, they are the way to the kingdom, not the cause of our obtaining the kingdom. Where most plainly he giueth to vnderstand, that the name of merits is vnproperly abused, and howsoeuer custome had taken it vp, to call good works by the name of merites, yet that we are not to conceiue, that good workes for themselves can challenge any thing by any right, or that we can truly and properly be said thereby to deserue at the hands of God. And this is fully confirmed by Alfonso de Castro, who mentioning reward due to works, saith It is due, not by the nature of the worke, for the sufferings of this time are not comparable in worth to the future glory which shal bee revealed vpon vs, but it is due by right of promise: for nature hath taught vs this law, that every man shold take himselfe to owe that which he hath promised. Surely if the debt of the reward arise not from the nature of the work but onely by vertue of promise, then merit is no merit properly, because merit properly so called, ariseth from the nature of the work, being in it selfe iustly worthy of that that it is said to deserue.

To come the to the testimonies cited by M. Bishop, the first thereof which he citeth out of Ignatius, is a false translation, there being nothing in the Greeke to import merit, but onely the getting or gaining, or obtaining of God, as hath bene said. Suffer me (saith he) to be the food of beasts, that by them I may obtaine God. And how far Ignatius was from any such opinion of his owne merit, appeareth towards the end of the same Epistle, where he saith, I am ashamed to be named one of them (the Pastors of the Church:) for I am not worthy to be the very last or the very outcast of them, but I haue found mercie to be some body if I obtaine God. He reckoned not of merit or worth, but held it a matter of mercie to him to come to God. How hardly the was M. Bishop bestead, that in the forefront would put Ignatius when the words that he citeth are nothing for him, and his words in the same Epistle are altogether against him?

Bernard. in An. nunc. ser. 1. Negs enim talia sunt hominum merita ut propter ea vult eterna debeat: ut iure, aut Deus inuicem facere nisi eam donaret. u. Idem. de grat. et lib. 1. 7. tit. Grat. Debetur iniquaria non ex operis natura, quia ut ait Paulus, Non sumus condigne, &c. sed ex iure promissionis. Hanc enim legem nos natura docuit, ut quod quisque promissio debere se credas. 2. Ignat. epist. ad Roman. Ἐπατάμας ἄνθρωποις ἐστὶν θεοδότης, ὁ ἴσθι ἰσοῦ ἱπποχρίου. Sinite me bestiarum escam esse per quas Deus assequi licet. b. Ibid. Ego erubescō ex ipsis dici. Non enim sum dignus esse vobiscum aut purgamentum, sed misericordiam consecutus sum ut sim aliquis si Deum adiūscor. Eἴη μοι ὁ ἀρχιερέτης, ἢ ὁ ἀρχιδιάκονος, ἢ ὁ ἐπιμαχέτης ὁ ἰσχυρότερος αὐτῶν, ἢ ἱεροφειρομαχάλλ' ἢ ἄλιμμος ποτιτῶν ἰαῦ θεοῦ ἱπποχρίου.

The words of Iustinus Martyr also are very lewdly abused in the same manner. The words meritis suis, by their merits, are merely foisted in, neither is there any thing that can be construed to that purpose. c They (saith he) who by their workes shall shew themselves to the counsell of God worthy, or as M. Bishop translateth out of Bellarmino, who by their workes shew themselves worthy of the counsell and will of God, we have received that hee doth vouchsafe them to haue company with him to raigne with him, being made immortall & free from all perturbation. Where he nameth worthinesse in no other sort then the Scripture doth, as hath bin before shewed, comparatiuely, not simply; by acceptation, not by perfection; according to the phrase of men, whereto the holy Ghost is content sometimes to submit himselfe, not according to the exact censure of the iudgement of God: not as a matter of Popish merite, whereto God in iustice is bound, but to which God in fauor vouchsafeth, as he saith, to haue company with him. And this he maketh very plaine, when in the next words he addeth, d For in like sort as he created vs when we were not, so doe we thinke that he vouchsafeth them of immortality and dwelling with him who willingly make choise to do those things that are pleasing unto him. Now to haue being at first it was not of our selues. In like sort to chuse and follow what is pleasing to him, by those reasonable powers which he hath giuen vs, it is by his perswading and mouing of vs to the faith. Wherby he teacheth, that our being in God, & following of those things that are pleasing to him, is no more of our selues then our first creation and being was, but that it is by Gods perswading vs, Gods mouing vs, Gods working in vs, there being nothing therein to be attributed to our selues. Wherby he destroyeth the nature of merit, as I haue shewed e before, & to that purpose acknowledgeth the vouchsafing fauor and grace of God in receiuing vs to immortality and life with him; for where merit and desert is, there termes of vouchsafing can haue no place. Not that which Bellarmino translateth of men shewing themselves worthy of the wil and counsel of God may wel be vnderstood according to the phrase of the Apostle instructing vs f to walke worthy of the Lord, g to walke worthy of God who hath called vs unto his kingdome and glory, that is to say, as is fit for them to walke who haue received so great mercy at the Lords hands, to the very same purpose as elsewhere he saith h Let your conuersation be such as becommeth the Gospell of Christ. In which sort

John

e Justin. Mart.

Apol. 2.

Οὐδὲν

κέρως τῶ ἐκείνῳ

βελυμαπίαυ-

τῆς δὲ ἱερῶν δε-

ξυσι, τῆς ματ'

αὐτῶ ἀναστροφῆς

καταξιαβῆσιν

ἁποστολῆ φαρμά-

συμβασιλεύου-

τας ἀφάρτους ἡ

ἀπαθείς γινομι-

ναι. Quis si dignos

consilio illius se o-

peribus ostēderint,

cōuersatione cum

ipso dignatum iri

accepimus ut una

regnent incorrup-

sibiles, & à per-

turbatione immu-

nes effecti.

d See the same

of Freewill. l. c. d.

14.

e Sec. 3.

f Col. 1. 10.

g 1. Thess. 2. 12.

h Phil. 1. 27.

John Baptist saith, ⁱ Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance, that is, such i Ma: 3. 8.
 as are fitting and befitting them that professe to haue repented.
 So then men shew themselves worthy of the will and counsel of God, in behauing themselves as is agreeing to them that professe to know the will and counsell of God, without any necessity of merit to be imported thereby.

The words of Irenaeus are these; ^k The good combatant exhorteth vs to the combat of immortalitie, that we may be crowned, and may thinke the crown pretious, as being attained by fight, and not of it self accruing unto vs. And by how much the more it commeth by fight, so much the more pretious it is: & the more pretious it is, so much the more we may loue it. But the things are not in like sort loued which come of their owne accord, as those which are attained with much care. In all which, what is there to M. Bishops purpose? He onely sheweth that God hath appointed, that not with our ease and idleness the crown of life shall voluntary come vnto vs, but that wee with labour and trauell must strue to come to it, that in the attainment of it, it may bee the more ioyfull and pretious vnto vs. What is this other then we also teach, who yet cannot find heereby that our labour and trauell doth merit and deserue the crowne of life? The case is al one, as if a Prince hauing a subiect false frō him, & gone into a far country, should of meer grace & fauor send for him to come again, by letters patents granting him his pardō, and assuring him place of honor & state vpō his return home: who being to passe through the midst of the enemies of his Prince, must vse much fighting, and trauel, and pains, and vndergo many dangers both by sea and land for the atchieuing of this honor. Whē he cometh to his iourneys end he hath no title to pleade for his place, but onely the free donation and gift of his prince. By his labor & paines he hath gained himself the possession of it, & he might for the mean time lay it before him as a reward to comfort & encourage himself in the iourney that he was to make; but merit he can alledge none; no right can he alledge wherby to claime it, but only his Princes gift. Euen so it is with vs, We were false from God, and he hath called vs to him again, and giuen vs the promise of eternall life. By much combat and trauell we must attaine to it, and yet when we haue done all, we can plead no merit, we can make no claime but onely by our Princes gift, by the free and mercifull promise and bounty of Almighty God.

And

^k Iren. lib. 4. cap.
 27. Bonus agoni-
 sta ad incorrup-
 sele agonem ad-
 horitur nos ut
 coronemur, & pre-
 tiosam arbitremur
 coronam, videlicet
 que per agonem
 acquiritur sed nō vltro coalitam. Et quantum per agonē
 nobis aduenit, tantū
 est pretiosior.
 Quanto autem
 pretiosior tantū eā
 semper diligamus.
 Sed neque simili-
 ter diliguntur ea
 que vltro adueni-
 unt quā illa,
 que cuius multa
 sollicitudine adinueniuntur.

And hereby appeareth the answer to the place of Basil, that¹ we all who walk the way of the Gospell are merchants, getting by the works of the comandements the possession of heauenly things. For by the works of the comandements we obtain the possession, but not the right and title of heauenly things. They are the way wherein wee walke to ataine to that which God of his free mercy bestoweth vpon vs. Wherein because we yeeld our labor in the one to receiue the other, S. Basil so farre fitly compareth it to a kinde of merchandize or exchange, though not intending that in the merit of the one should be the purchase of the other. As for the other place, it is none of Basils being taken out of a counterfeited addition, which^m Erasmus well obserued, and by good arguments declared to be no part of Basils work. n A man (saith he) is saued by righteousnesse of works. But the Scripture saith, ° Ye are saued by grace through faith, not of works, least any man should boast. Whatfoeuer the author might meane in that he saith, we are sure that his words accord not with the phrase and stile of the holy ghost. And that the true Basil was farre from that mind, appeareth plainly by the note that he giueth vpon the words of the Psalme, ^p Arise, O Lord, helpe vs and deliuer vs for thy mercies sake. ^q Behold (saith he) how he endeth his speech. After a thousand vertues, whereby doth he pray to be saued? Euen of mercie and goodnesse. And vpon another of the Psalmes he saith, ^r Rewards, as they are thought to be, are yeelded vnto vs by the onely mercy & goodnes of God: for all the righteousnesse of men cannot equall the benefits which he hath already bestowed, much lesse those that are to come, which go beyond all the conceit of man. He saw well, that the Prophet after thousands of vertues could haue no hold of saluation but onely by Gods mercy. He saw well, that albeit Gods benefits goe vnder the name of rewards, yet in all our righteousnesse there is nothing to counteruaile in any sort the bounty of his goodnesse, and therefore was farre from that Pharisaicall and proud opinion of merit, which M. Bishop desireth to fasten vpon him. Which is easie to bee seene in that also which I cited out of him before, that^t eternall rest is layd vp for them who lawfully fight the combat of this life, not to be rendred by way of debts to workes, but provided by the grace of the bountifull God for them that trust in him.

^u Cyprian hath nothing for M. Bishops turne, but only the name

I Basil orat in princip. Prouerb.
 Omnes nos qui viam Euangelii-
 cam incedimus
 mercatores sumus
 pro oper. manda-
 torum nobis posses-
 sionem caelestium
 comparantes.
 m Erasm. Epist. prefixa libro Basil.
 de Spir. sancto.
 n Basil. de Spir.
 sancto. cap. 24. Homo saluus si: per iustitiam operum.
 o Ephes. 2. 8.
 p Psal. 44. 26.
 q Basil. in Psal. 43 Vide quomodo ser-
 monem clausit.
 Post mille virtutetes: vnde seruari
 orat? Ex mifericordia & benigni-
 tate.
 r Idem. in Psal. 23 Retributiones que
 putantur propter
 scelerum Dei benigni-
 tate hominibus
 praestantur.
 s Vniuersi siquidem mortaliu iustiti-
 e ne praestita
 quidem ab ipso
 bono adequant
 nedum futurae que & humanam cogitationem trans-
 cendunt.
 t Basil. in Psal.
 114. supra sect. 13
 u Cypr. de eleem-si: expeditos. si celeres, si in hoc ope-
 ris agone currentes dies nos vel reditionis, vel persecu-
 tionis inuenerit,
 nusquam Domi-
 minus meritis uo-stris ad praemium deerit. In pace coronam uincensibus candidam pro operibus dabit: in persecutione purpuream pro passio-ne geminabit.

of merits; and it is already shewed that that can auaille him nothing. In steed of merits put in good workes, which is all that it importeth; and Cyprian saith nothing but what we say. No more doth Hilary, whose words are, ^x This is the reward of them that liue well and perfectly, that from this matter of a corruptible bodie they are translated to a new and beauenly substance. M. Bishop somewhat forceth the place to serue his turne, but it is plaine by that that hath bene said before that the names of hire and reward are farre enough off from prouing merit and desert, And whatsoeuer they import with men, yet that they import not so with God, let Hilary himself be witness who speaking of the wages of them that were hired into the vineyard, saith, ^y Wages in deed there is none of gift, because it is due by worke, but God hath giuen the same freely to all by the iustification of faith. There is no merit then in the reward that Hilary speaketh of, because though it be termed reward, yet it is freely giuen by the iustification of faith.

In the place of Ambrose it is plaine, that the name of merits is taken indifferently for workes either good or euill. He saith, that ^z it is euident that for merits there remaineth after this life either reward or punishment: and M. Bishop will not say, that punishment remaineth for the merits that he pleadeth for. Yet he calleth good workes by the name of merits, but to how little purpose for Popish merit hath bin already shewed. And how farre Ambrose was from opinion thereof his owne words shall witness, where hee saith, ^a Which of vs can stand without the mercie of God? What can we do worthy of the reward of heauen? By what merit of man is it yeilded, that this corruptible should put on in corruption, or this mortall shold put on immortality? By what labours, by what suffering of wrongs can we abate our sinnes? The sufferings of this time are unworthy for the glory that is to come. Therefore the forme of beauenly decrees goeth before men, not according to our merits, but according to Gods mercie. This being so by the iudgement of Ambrose, why doth M. Bishop seeke to perswade vs by the name of Ambrose, that God frameth his heauenlie decrees concerning vs according to our merits, and that the workes that we do, are worthy of the reward of heauen? Hee vseth commonly the name of merit as the rest doe, but neuer had in his heart that matter of merit that M. Bishop dreameth of.

Non ergo secundum merita nostra, sed secundum misericordiam Dei caelestium decretorum homines

Hierome

^x Hilary in Mat. can. 5. Hac reddidit perfectique uicium merces est ut in nouam caelestemque substantiam ex hac corruptibili corporis materie transferatur.

^y Idem. ibid. can. 20. Merces quidem ex dono nulla est quia debetur ex opere, sed gratia: ut Deus omnibus ex fidei iustificatione donauit.

^z Ambros. Offic. lib. 1. cap. 15. Non euident est meritum, aut premia aut supplicia post mortem mereri?

^a Ambr. in Psal. 118. ser. 20. Quis nostrum sine diuina potest misericordione subsistere?

Quid possumus dignum praemij facere caelestibus? &c. Quod tandem hominum merito desertur ut haec corruptibilibus carodiuiat incorruptione, & mortali hoc induat immortalitatem?

Quibus laboribus possumus nostra leuare peccata? Indigna sunt passionibus huius temporis ad superuenturam gloriam. forma praecedat.

b Hieron. aduer.
Fouinian. lib. 2.
Nostri laboris est
pro diuersitate
uirtutum, diuersa
nobis premia pre-
parare.

c Supra sect. 17.
d Hieron. in Esa.
lib. 17. cap. 64. Si
consideremus me-
rita desperantium
est.

e Idē adu. Pelag.
lib. 2. Pro nihilo
saluos faciet eo:
hauā dubiū quin
iustos qui non pro-
prio merito, sed Dei saluantur clementia.

f Bernar. in Cav.
ser. 68. Quid de meritis saluati sit Ecclesia cui de
proposito Dei fir-mior suppetit, secundūq; gloria-di ratio? &c. Non est quod ians que-
ras quibus meri-
tis speremus bone presertim cum audias apud pro-
phetam, Non prop-
ter uos, &c.

Eze. 36 Sufficit
ad meritum scire
quod non suffici-
unt merita, &c.
Merita habere cures; habita data
uocaris. si uicium
speraueris miseri-
cordiam Dei, &c.
Permissa pau-
peras meritorum genera est.

Hierome also is cited but for shew, and onely to fill vp a place. b It belongeth to our labour according to diuersitie of vertues to prepare for our selues diuersity of rewards. The rewards by the promises of God are tied to the workes, and therefore in doing the works to which the rewards belong, we may well be said to prepare for our selues the same rewards. As we are said to worke out our saluation, because though it be Gods meere grace by which we are saued, yet he vseth our will and our worke for the effecting thereof, so are wee said also to prepare rewards for our selues, because God vseth vs as instruments to doe for our selues the works that belong to those rewards which he hath prepared for vs. And these rewards we doubt not, as before was said, but that they are diuers, according to the diuersity of our works, greater rewards to greater works, & lesse reward to lesser works; but what is all this to proue that the rewards are iustly merited and deserued by our workes? That Hierome thought not so, it is plaine by that we haue seene out of him ^c before, that there can no worke be found worthy of the iustices of God, as also for that he saith in the name of the people of God, ^d If we consider our owne merits, we must despaire, and resolue the euen concerning ^e the iust, that they are not saued by their owne merite, but by the mercie of God. There followeth Saint Bernard, whom M. Bishop would not haue cited if he had meant so faithfully as he should haue done. In what sort S. Bernard taketh the name of merits, hath bene declared a little before, so as they may well blush to cite anything out of him for maintaining their doctrine of merits. But M. Bishops dealing is so much the more vnholist, for that in the very same sermon Bernard ouerthroweth that that he would proue by him. ^f To what end is the Church carefull as touching merits, which hath a more sure and secure ground of reioycing by reason of the purpose of God? It is not for thee to aske, by what merits we hope for good things, seeing thou hearest by the Prophet, Not for your sakes, but for mine owne sake will I do it, saith the Lord. It sufficeth, for merit, to know that merits are not sufficient. Bee carefull to haue merits; when thou hast them, know them to be giuen thee: but for fruite thereof hope for the mercie of God. The want of merits is a pernicious pouertie. Thus vnder the name of merites he commendeth the hauing of good workes, and our care to be rich therein, shewing that it is a pernicious want to be destitute thereof, and to be men fruitlesse in the Church of God.

But

But yet when we haue them, he teacheth vs to conceiue the vn-sufficiency thereof, and to rest the expectation of the fruit and reward thereof onely vpon Gods mercie, who hath promised to performe it, not for our sakes, but for his owne sake, and so fully bereaueth them of that nature of merite which M. Bishop doth assigne vnto them. Thus doth he euerie where giue vs to vnderstand his mind:

My merit (saith he) is the mercie of the Lord. ^h euē the Saints haue neede to intreat for their sinnes, that by thy mercie they may be saued, not trusting to their owne righteousnesse. And againe: ⁱ Dangerous is the dwelling of them that trust in their owne merit: it is dangerous because it is ruinous. ^k This is the whole merite of man, to put his whole trust in him who hath wholly saued man. Many other such like speeches of his might bee alledged, whereby M. Bishop may well take occasion to bethinke himselfe, whether hee haue not done S. Ber- nard wrong to make him a patron of the doctrine of merits, which the Church of Rome now maintaineth. Let him dulie consider whether he haue done well to take a little aduantage of a scrap of a sermon, and to vrge it contrarie to the whole drift of the Authour in that place, and his perpetuall doctrine other where.

For conclusion, we are assaulted with a whole generall Councell that saith neuer a word against vs. The Arausican Councell saith, ^l Reward is due for good works if they be done, but grace which is no due, goeth before, that they may be done. Euen so say we: we also confesse that there is a reward due vnto good workes, which God taketh vpon him to owe vnto vs; but wee say it with that limitation that before we haue heard out of S. Austine, from whom that Councell boroweth almost all that they haue set downe, that ^m God hath made himselfe a debtor vnto vs, not for any thing that he hath receiued of vs, but by promising all things vnto vs. It is due then to the worke, not simply in respect of the worke it selfe, or for the merite and worth thereof, but by vertue of the promise that God hath made to them that so worke. And thus we are come to an end of M. Bishops antiquity, which we may see doth pitifully faile him, in that out of all antiquity he could bring no stronger proofes then hee hath done; his doctrine of merits being expressely thwarted by the most of them whom he hath brought for defence of it.

But as touching Antiquitie, gentle Reader, for thy further satisffaction, and the better arming of thee (if neede require) against the fraud

^g Ibid ser. 61.
Meritum meum misericordia domini.
^h Ibid. ser. 73.
Opus habet: Er-
ranis pro peccatis
exorare, ut de mi-sericordia salui fi-
ant proprie iustiti-
e non facientes.
ⁱ In Psal. Qui habitat. ser. 1. Periculosa habitat io-
illarum qui in me-
ritis suis sperant:
periculosa quia
ruinosa.
^k Ibid. ser. 16.
Hoc totum homi-
nis meritum sita-
tam spem suam ponat in illo, qui totum hominem
saluum fecit.
^l Concil. Arausic.
cap. 18. Debetur
merces de bonis
operibus si fuerit:
sed gratia que non debetur precedit
ut fuerit.
^m Supra. ser. 17.

fraud of these vndermining Sophisters, it should not be amisse to aduertise thee thus much, that as we do, so did the ancient Fathers vpon diuers occasions speake diuersly of good workes, and both their speeches and ours are alwayes to be weighed according to the same occasions. When there is cause to set forth the true and proper cause of our saluation, they referre the same as we do to the free grace and mercy of God, and wholly to his gift; they vilifie as we do the workes and worth of men, and acknowledge that there is nothing in vs in the confidence whereof we may offer our selues to God; nothing in strength, whereof we can stand before God, or whereby we should merit and deserue any thing at Gods hands. Here workes are considered meerly as they are, and as God in strict and precise iudgement findeth them to be, and therefore are pronounced of accordingly. But when occasion requireth to speake only of good workes and of the end thereof, and we look no further but to enforce a conscience of the way wherein God hath called vs to walke to that saluation that he hath promised, or when we haue in hand to commend any speciall point of godly and vertuous conuersation, we presse the same with all iustice, as the Fathers do; we shew how necessarily God requireth the workes of our obedience, how gratioussly he vouchsafeth in mercie to accept them, how he hath promised of his bountie to reward them. We forbear not to say, that eternall life is the stipend of our warfare, the hire and wages of our workes; that God hath not appointed heauen for idle persons and loiterers, but for such as labour for it; that because God rendereth heauen, we must haue that whereto it is to be rendered: if we haue not, there is no heauen for vs. We say, it is a crowne or garland; win it and wear it: it is a haruest; labor for it if thou wilt enioy it: it is a field of treasure; if thou wilt possesse it, thou must purchase it. Such kind of speeches euery mā may obserue, who is either a hearer of our sermons, or a reader of our bookes. Now if any man will hereof conclude, that we teach the merit of workes, it is his ignorance and mistaking, and he doth vs wrong. We teach what followeth of what; we teach the dependance and consequence of good life and eternall life, of the worke and the reward, God hauing so ordained the one to be the way whereby he will bring vs to the other. But when we looke to the true cause of all, we truly teach that it is God that giueth vs both good life and eternall life, both the

the worke and the reward, not the one properly for the other, but the one to follow the other, onely for his mercies sake. Thus the fathers also conceiued hereof, as appeareth by that that hath bene alledged from them. We speake as they spake, and they as we; and the Papiſts do them absurd wrong to wrest & straine their speeches as they do. Whatſe euer M. Bishop hath cited from them, vnderstand it according to S. Bernards rule before set down, as of the way not as of a cause, & they differ nothing at all from that that we say.

CHAPTER 6.

OF SATISFACTION.

I. W. BISHOP.

MAfter Perkins acknowledgeth first ciuill satisfactiō, that is, ^{Page 117.} a recompence for iniuries or damages any way done to our neighbour: such as the good Publican Zachew practised, ^{Luk. 19.} who restored fourefold the things gotten by extortion and deceit. This is wittily acknowledged by him, but little exercised among Protestants; for where the Sacrament of Confession is wanting, there men vse very seldome to recompēce so much as one fold for their extortion, bribes, vsury, and other craftie ouerreaching of their neighbours. But of this kind of satisfaction, which we commonly call restitution, we are not here to intreat, nor of that publike penance, which for notorious crimes is done openly, but of such priuat penance which is either enioyed by the confessor, or voluntarily undertaken by the penitent, or else sent by Gods visitation to purge vs from that temporall paine, which for sins past and pardoned we are to endure, either in this life, or in purgatorie if we die before we haue fully satisfied here.

R. ABBOT.

We wil neuer beleeeue you M. Bishop, that your vpstart sacrament of Confession hath any such effect as you pretend for satisfaction and restitution of euill gotten goods, vntill we shall certainly vnderstand, that your masters the Iesuites haue made restitution of those

those goods which you and your fellow Seculars, by Watson your proctor, haue charged them to haue embezelled by cosinage and villanie, in drawing them by their notable imposture of spirituall exercise to sell their whole estate, and to put the money into their hands. I might write heere a pretie storie, to shew what fruites your sacrament of confession hath yeelded in that behalfe, but the occasion no further requiring then it doth, let that one example now suffice. But in M. Perkins wordes you might haue taken knowledge of a Protestant, namely Zachens, without any sacrament of confession, offering restitution to them to whom he had done wrong; and doubt not you, but the rest who faithfully are that which they professe to bee, are alwaies readie to doe the like, and that more holily and religiously then you are wont to do. But to the purpose, the satisfaction here spoken of, is the yeelding of a sufficient and worthy recompence and contentment to God for the trespassse that we haue done vnto him. The verie naming whereof may be sufficient to make vs detest the doctrine of these wretched men, who doubt not, to the singular impeachment and dishonor of the crosse of Christ, to attribute vnto men a power for the performace of any such satisfaction vnto God. We may well maruell, that any taking vpon him to be a Christian man should haue his heart so senselesse and dead, as not to abhorre to think that a man should be said to giue a worthy recompence to God for his owne sinne. By which meanes they make that a matter of our merite, which neuer any faithfull man imagined to bee any other but Gods meere mercie; and teach men to seeke for that in themselues, which they should find only in the bloud of Christ; and take away the true conscience of thankfulnessse to God for the remission of our sinnes, whilest we can plead that hee doth not so forgiue vs, but that wee are faine to make him amends, & giue him full satisfaction for the wrong. Nay it taketh away also the true conscience of sinne it selfe, whilest it is hereby conceiued to bee a matter of so small moment, as that our beggerly deuotions and obseruations should bee thought to bee an effectuall expiation and redemption thereof. Yea and it argueth a verie base conceit of the high maiestie of God, to thinke so base trumperie, such baggage deuices as they haue forged, to bee a fitte and sufficient recompence for an offence to him. But heerein the Church of Rome hath renewed another point of the Pelagian heresie, relie, who taught ^a that pardon and forgiveness is not given to penitents according to the grace and mercy of God, but according to the merit and labour or paines of them who by repentance shall be worthy of Gods mercy. Thus the Pelagians affirmed, and thus the Papists affirm; the fathers and the children still accord in one. Against the Pelagians the ancient Church defined as we do now against the Papists, that it is to be confessed, that pardon is granted to the penitent or repentant by the grace and mercy of God, not according to their merits, in as much as the Apostle telleth vs, that repentance itself also is the gift of God. Here is no interposing of merit or satisfaction; here is nothing but grace and mercy, ^c which is not grace in any sort, as we have heard before out of S. Austin, except it be free in every sort. Arnobius derided in the Pagans this opinion of their satisfactions to their gods, and out of the nature and disposition of the true God, telleth the what the behauiour of their gods should be, if they were indeed as they are called Gods. ^d Do the gods tbe, saith he, sell their own wrongs, and as little children to appease them and to make them leaue crying, do take birds, and puppies, and hobbi horses, and cakes, to withdraw the fro the things they minded; so do the immortal Gods receiue these pacifications whereby to put away their anger & stomacke, and to be reconciled to tbe that offended tbe? But I had thought that the Gods without any recompence or satisfaction would leaue their anger, and remit to sinners their offences. For it is, saith he, the property of Gods liberally to forgive & to grant free pardons. This censure of Arnobius the Papists also vndergo, who make God in the like sort as did the Pagans, to sell his own wrongs for our satisfactions, and deny that God giueth to the penitent any free pardon, but he wil haue a recompence for the offence done vnto him, yea and that after the sin is not onely past, but also pardoned, as we are here told. Which I wish the gentle reader to obserue diligently, that thou maist see hereafter how vnhanfomly he managet this matter. These satisfactions M Bishop telleth vs, are either inioyned by the Cōfessor, or vnder takē by the penitent, or sent by Gods visitation. The two first kinds are in matter all one, either almes, by giuing a pee to a Priest, or a gift to a holy Church, or after a Iul Friday dianer, to fast at night with Suger cakes, & suckets, & wine, or to mumble so many Paternosters, Auenmaries, and Creeds, such & such daies for thus or thus long. And if they be but venial sins, to receiue the Bishops blessing; or to bee besprinkled with holy water, or to say one Paternoster, or to giue himselfe a knocke

^a Aug. Epist. 106. Quod penitentibus remissa non datur secunda gratiam & misericordiam Dei, sed secundum meritum & laborem eorum qui per penitentiam digni fuerint misericordiam.

^b Ibid. Faciatur secundum gratiam & misericordiam Dei venia penitentibus dari, non secundum merita eorum, quandoquidem etiam ipsa penitentiam donat Deus dicit Apostolus &c.

^c Aug. con. Pelag. & Celest. lib. 2. cap. 24.

^d Arnob. Ad adgentes lib. 7. Erone iniurias suas Diij vendunt atque ut paruis pusionibus quo animi parcant abstant que plerumque passivolos, pupulos, equulos parvas accipiunt, quibus aucari se possunt. ita Diij immortales placantur a ista iunum, quibus iras atque animos ponunt, & in gratiam suis cum offensibus redit. Igitur ego rebar Deo, &c.

^e S. x. i. proxi. in G. ossa venialis remittitur per benedictionem Prelati. per orationem dominicam, equem len. di. Nam iuniorum pe. tot. &c.

on the brest, or some such like matter will be satisfaction good enough. Such impudent and shameles harlots, haue we to do with, who stick not with their ridiculous toys to abuse and vilifie the maiesty of God, & to make a mockery of the appeasing of that wrath before which the Angels themselues haue no strength to stand. The like impiety we see in the other kind of satisfactiōs, which he saith are sent by Gods visitation, whereby we must think that euery ague, euery bile, euery sore finger is a satisfactiō for our sins. For although God do lay these things vpon vs, yet we in the bearing thereof do yeeld him a recōpence for such trespass or offence as we haue done to him. Now if we performe not these satisfactions here, then wee must after this life make satisfaction in the fire of Purgatory, if wee take not good order for the quenching of it. As for hel fire it makes no great matter; that burnes but little at Rome: the only Catholike fire is Purgatory fire. Hell yeeldeth neither gold nor siluer, but Purgatory is a rich mine, and the fire thereof melteth much treasure out of mens purses, that it may run into the Popes mint: & therefore no maruell if there be much Catholike businesse, & many bellowes blowing to keepe it from going out. This is a terrible fire, I warrant you, & if it be not enough to melt gold and siluer, how cruelly doth it scorch the tender soules, that lye frying and broyling in it? Hard therefore will be the case of them that neglect to make full satisfaction while they liue here: but yet there is a helpe for that, for the Popes pardon will cur off all. The Pope hath a store-house of satisfactions at Rome, wherein he hath hoorded vp whatsoeuer the Virgin Mary, & the Apostles, & other Saints & Martyrs haue by way of satisfaction payed to God more thē they ought him, & if a man wil come off and be liberal, he can thence furnish him with sufficient to make vp that which he wanteth of his own for payment for all his sins. And he (good holy Father) perceiuing in these times a fall of deuotion, & a loibosome that men commonly haue to do great penance, though their sins be far greater thē euer before, euen of pure cōpassion fearing to drine them either to despaire, or to forsake Christ and his Church enioyneth small penance, and pardoneth exceeding often and much, not only al enioyned penāce, but also al or great parts of what tēporal punishment soener due or deserued either in this world or in the next. Belike God is waxen more remisse in these latter times, and is not so strict to require satisfactions as he was wont to be, and hath bin con-

content to put the penalties and forfeitures that are made to him into the Popes hands, that he may make benefit of them, as hauing greater occasion of expences then Peter & Paul, & the first Bishops of Rome had. But one thing there is that maketh vs here somewhat to slicke: M. Bishop reckoneth Gods visitations for one part of these satisfactions. Now the Pope hauing so large power to remit all tēporall punishments due or deserued, either in this world or the next, we wonder that we could neuer yet heare, that a Popes pardon hath eased a fit of an ague, or cured head-ach, or tooth-ach, or such like: whereas by their assertion it should be strong enough to break the stone in the bladder, to cure the Strangurie, the Gowt, the Gangrena, the Noli me tangere, & whatsoeuer else Phisicians & Chirur-gians do accou: incurable. How should wee think that he that cannot giue helpe for any of these, should bee of power to set men free from Purgatory pains? But by his failing so wholly in these, we take him to be a liar in all the rest, & do proue both him and his Factors to be the notable impostors and counsers of the world, ^g through ^g consonnes with fained words making merchandize of mens soules, and ^g speaking things which they ought not for filth by lueres sake. We must take you (M. Bishop) to be one of these vnlesse you bring vs better matter then we looke for, for the prooffe of these things. Of Purgatory vntil you giue vs further occasion to speak further of it, sufficient hath bene already said in ^h answere of your Epistle to the King.

^g 1. Pet. 3. 3.
 Apoc. 18. 13.
 h Tit. 1. 11.

i Sect. 10. 16. 26

2. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins in his third conclusion decreeth very solemnly, That no man can be saued, vnlesse he made a perfect satisfaction vnto the iustice of God for al his sins. Yet in the explication of the difference between vs, define th as peremptorily, that no man is to satisfie for any one of al his sinnes, or for any temporal paine due to thē: which be flat contradictory propositions, and therefore the one of them must needs be false. But such odde broken rubbish doth he commonly cast into the ground worke of his questions, and thereupon raise th the tottering building of his new doctrine: and lets not, like a blind man, to make an outcry, that in this matter the Papists erre in the very foundation and life of religion: which in his first argument he goes about to proue thus:

Imperfect satisfactiō is no satisfaction at al: but the Papists make Christs satisfaction imperfect, in that they do therunto adde a supply ply of humane satisfaction: ergo, they make it no satisfaction at all.

Ans^r. This is a substantiall argument to raise the cry upon: which hath both propositions false. The first is childish: for he that satisfieth for halfe his debts, or for any part of the, makes some satisfaction, which satisfaction is vnperfect, & yet cannot be called no satisfaction at all, as euery child may see. His second is as vntrue: mans satisfaction is not to supply the want of Christs satisfaction, but to apply it to vs, as M. Perkins saith his faith doth to them, and to fulfill his will and ordinance.

God doth in baptisme for Christs sake pardon both all sins, and taketh fully away all paine due to sinne, so that he who dieth in that state, goeth presently to heauen. But if we do afterward vngratefully forsake God, & contrary to our promise transgresse against his commandements, then to the order of his diuine iustice requires, that we be not so easily receiued againe into his fauor: but he upon our repentance, pardoning the sin and the eternall punishment due vnto it through Christ, doth exact of euery man a temporall satisfaction, answerable vnto the fault committed: not to supply Christs satisfaction, which was of infinite value, and might more easily haue taken away this temporall punishment, then it doth the eternall: but that by the smart and grieffe of this punishment, the man may be feared from sinning; and be made more carefull to auoid sinne: and also by this meane: be made members conformable to Christ our head, that suffering with him, we may raigne with him. And therefore he hauing satisfied for the eternall punishment, which we are not able to do, doth lay the temporall paine upon our shoulders, that according vnto the Apostle, Euery man do beare his owne burden.

Gal. 6.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop well knew that M. Perkins speech importeth no contradiction, because in the one he intendeth that euery man is to make satisfaction for his sinnes, either by himself or by a Mediator; and in the other denieth that any man maketh this satisfaction, or any part thereof by himself. Though the phrase were not so easie of our making satisfaction, when hee meant it by another, yet his meaning was very plaine. There must be a satisfaction yielded to the iustice of God, which is done onely in Iesus Christ, whom God himselfe hath set forth to be an atonement or reconciliation through faith in his blood. Here is therefore no broken rubbish, but a sure foundation laid, and the building setled vpon it standeth firme and

a Rom. 3.25.

and fast, the wind wherewith M. Bishop hath blown against it being only his owne breath. And because ^b there is no other foundation to be laid, but only that which he hath laid, which is Iesus Christ, therefore not like a blind man, but vpon good discernment and sight, he hath made the outcry, that the Papists laying another foundation in the merits and satisfaction of men, do erre in the very foundation and life of Christian faith. To shew this he argueth in this sort: *A satisfaction that is made imperfect either directly or by consequent, is no satisfaction at all. But the Papists make Christs satisfaction imperfect, in that they adde a supply of humane satisfactions: therefore they make Christs satisfactiō no satisfaction at all. A substantiall argumēt, saith M. Bishop well, if it be not so, we expect that M. Bishop make it appeare to vs by a very substantiall answer. He telleth vs, that both the propositions are false, yea the first (saith he) is Childish, but well we wot that he hath giuen vs a very childish reason why he so saith. He that satisfieth for halfe his debts or any part therof, saith he, makes some satisfaction. But we tel him, that therein he fondly misapplyeth the name of satisfaction, which is a word of perfection, and therfoie cānot be rightly vsed of that that is imperfect. It importeth the doing of that that is sufficient and enough to giue full contentment to the party to whom it is done, and fully to quit the offence and wrong that is done vnto him. Therefore no man but M. Bishop is so mad as to say, that by the tender of a penny, a man offereth a satisfaction, when the debt or damage is an hundred pounds. Yea and howsoeuer the name of satisfaction may be abused in party-payment for matters of meete debt, yet he should remember, that in their schooles it is resolved, that because Satisfaction, as here it is spoken of, is *the taking away of displeasure and offence, and the taking away of offence is the restitution of friendship and loue, and there cānot be restitution of friendship and loue, so long as any impediment therof continueth, therfore there can be no satisfactiō for one sin (that is, for one part of a māns debt) so long as there is a remainder of another. M. Bishop might very well conceiue, that God receiueth not recompence of his wrongs by pence and halfpence, nor doth account the sacrifice of a sheepe to be some satisfaction towards the sauing of a soule. But it is the 2. proposition that specially concernes the point. To that he answereth, that mans satisfaction is not to supply the want of Christs satisfaction. Where we see it to be with them, as Tertullian

b 1. Cor. 3. 11.

c Thom. Aquin.
Supplement. q.
14. art. 1. c. Cum per satisfactiōē
tollit debeat effor-
sa peccatoris
peccati. offense
autem ab ino-
a mente diuine restitui iniquo per quodam peccati
impediatur, siens
non potest, ut
homo de uno pec-
catis satisfaciens Falsū re en c. Vile
in corpore.

d Tertullian.
aduers. Valen.
Nihil magis cu-
rari quam occul-
tare quod predi-
cant. sit amen
predicant qui oc-cultant, &c. Negant quicquid agnoscunt.

mentioneth of the Valentinian heretickes, ^d They care for nothing more then to hide that which they preach, if at least they preach who conesse and hide, they deny it howsoeuer they well know it. They do indeed make the satisfaction of Christ vnperfect, & our satisfactions to be the supply of his want, but yet because that soundeth odiously, they will not haue it knowne or taken that they do so. Yet M. Perkins brought prooffe thereof out of one their great Schoolmen, Gabriel Biel, who plainly saith, that although the passion of Christ be the principall merit for which is conferred grace, and the opening of the kingdom and glory, yet it is neuer the alone and total meritorious cause. It is manifest (saith he) because alwaies with the merit of Christ there concurreth some worke, as the merit of congruittie or condignitie of him that receiveth grace or glorie, if he be of yeares, and haue the vse of reason, or of some other for him if he want reason. Here it is expressly affirmed, that the passion of Christ is not a total meritorious cause, and if it be not a total cause, then it wanteth a supply, & that that is added for the producing of the effect, must necessarily beholde to be added for a supply of that that it wanteth. Seeing then to the satisfaction of Christ, as not being a total and perfect cause, our satisfactions are added for the producing of the effects of grace & glorie, it cannot be denied but that our satisfactions are a supply of somewhat wanting to the satisfaction of Christ. To this acknowledgment taken out of their owne bookes, why doth M. Bishop answer nothing, but that in his conscience he knoweth that they are guilty of that wherwith they are charged? Yea and the thing is very apparent of it selfe: for if they held the satisfaction of Christ to be a total and perfect satisfactiō, then they must needs confesse that in the nature of a satisfaction nothing else should be needfull for vs. But they require somewhat else as needfull in the nature of a satisfaction. Therefore they do not confesse the satisfaction of Christ to be a total and perfect satisfaction: for it implieth a manifest contradiction, to affirme any thing to be a total cause, and yet to require another cause as necessary for the same effect. M. Bishop telleth vs, that the vse of our satisfactions is to apply vnto vs Christs satisfaction, and to fulfil his will and ordinance. A goodly and witty deuice. I haue a medicin fully sufficient and auailable for the curing & healing of my wound, & I must haue another medicin for the healing of the same wound, which I must apply and lay to the former medicine. My surety hath fully and perfectly discharged my debt, and I must my selfe pay the debt againe, that my sureries paiment may stand good for me. A satisfaction to apply a satisfaction, is a toy so improbable & senselesse, as that we may think them miserably put to shifts, that could find no better cloke to hide their shame. Yet this is the couer of al their poisoned cups. They multiply their witchcrafts and sorceries without end, & bring into the Church what they list lewdly to deuise, and then tell vs that these things serue to apply vnto vs the merit & passion of Christ. The sacrifice of the Masse is the propitiatioⁿ for our sins, but it applieth vnto vs the sacrifice of the crosse of Christ. The blood & sufferings of Saints and Martyrs are available for the forgiveness of sins, but they apply vnto vs the vertue of the blood and sufferings of Christ. But here M. Perkins noted, that the meanes of application consist in Gods offering to vs, and our recciuing of him. God offereth Christ vnto vs by the word & Sacraments; we recciue him by faith. He required it to be proued, that by satisfactiōs Christ is either offered on Gods part, or recciued on our part. Why did M. Bishop omit to do this? Why doth hee neither bring reason, example, nor authority to shew vs, that satisfaction hath any such nature or vse of applicatiō, or in what sort it should be said to apply? Wee haue shewed ^e before, that faith is as it were the hand of the soule, an instrument properly seruing for apprehending, receiving, laying hold of, and applying to our selues: why doth not he make the same appeare to vs concerning satisfaction? But why do we require him to do more then hee can do? But here is a secret, gentle Reader, which I wish thee to take knowledge of, and if thou be acquainted with him, aske him (if occasion serue) the solution of this doubt. He telleth vs through al this discourse, that the vse of Christs satisfaction is to take away the guilt of sin, & the eternall punishment thereof, & that this we obtain in the forgiveness of our sins. But now after the forgiveness of our sins, these satisfactions remain to be performed by vs. If this be so; if the vse of Christs satisfactiō be determined in the forgiveness of our sins, & these satisfactions follow after, how or to what vse do these satisfactiōs apply vnto vs the satisfaction of Christ? As for example, M. Bishop giueth a man absolution before he dieth: he hath thereupon his sins forgiven him, & a release from eternall punishment, but yet, being not yet thoroughly scoured, to Purgatory he must go. Now then in what sort, and to

e Of Iustificatiō
on Sect. 19. 29.

what end doth Purgatory apply vnto him the satisfactiō of Christ? For the satisfaction of Christ medleth not with temporall punishments; he hath left the kingdome of temporall satisfactions & the whole reueneue thereof to the Pope. What do we heere then with applying the satisfactiō of Christ? Riddle this riddle he that can, for M. Bishop cannot do it: yet he telleth vs further, that our satisfactiōs are to fulfill the will & ordinance of Christ, and hereupon he entreteth into a goodly tale to declare vnto vs this ordinance. But his declaratiō is such, as that we may see in him that which Hilary said of the Arian heretikes: They thrust in words of truth, that the poison of their falshood may find entrance. It fitteth them which Tertullian said of the Valentiniāns: They fashion their most vaine & filthy deuices to the holy names, & titles, & arguments of true religion. He telleth vs, that God in Baptisme for Christs sake both pardoneth all sin, and taketh fully away all paine due to sin. But where I maruell hath he secne this miracle wrought? That God in baptisme giueth full forgiveness of sins we acknowledge, but yet did we neuer find, but that baptisme for pain & outward grieuances leaueth a man the same that it found him; sicke & diseased before, sicke & diseased still; lame before, lame still; blind before, blind still. We see that infants baptized, who (he saith) haue no sin to satisfie for, yet haue many pang, & frets, and sickneses, and how then doth baptisme take away all paine due to sin? He who dieth in that state, saith he, goeth presently to heauen: but he who dieth in that state, dieth he without paine? We see he talketh at randon who! by fancy, & not by reason, neither do his eyes look which way his feet go. Well, let this passe: What after baptisme? If after wee transgresse, saith he, then loe the order of his diuine iustice requires, that we be not so easily receiued againe into his fauor. Why but the Apottle S. John saith to them that are baptized, If any man sin, we haue an aduocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the iust, and he is the propitiation, or satisfaction for our sins. What is the difference then, if both in baptisme and after baptisme Christ be the attonement and satisfaction for our sins? Yea saith M. Bishop, God vpon our repentance pardoneth the sinne, and eternall punishment due vnto it through Christ, but doth exact of euerie man a temporall satisfaction answerable to the fault committed. But this cannot be, least as S. Hierome saith in another case, it bee partly a truth, and partly a lie which wee beleene in Christ. For then as touching eternall punishment it shall be a truth,

that

f Hilar. de Trin. l. 6.
*Ingerunt nomina veritatis vt
 virus falsitatis introeat.*

g *Tertul. aduers.
 Valent. Sanctis
 nominibus & ti-
 tulis, & argumen-
 tis vera religionis
 vanissima & turpissima figmenta configurant.*

b 1. Joh 2.2.

i *Hieron. in Esa.
 cap. 53. lib. 14.*
*Ne ex parte veri-
 tatis, & ex parte
 mentis lacrim credi-tur in Christo.*

that Christ is the propitiation for our finnes, but as touching temporall satisfactions it shall be a lie, and we shall be said to be the propitiation and attonement for our owne finnes. Which because it is blasphemous and wicked to assume, neither hath the Scripture taught vs any such division betwixt Christ & vs, therefore we must confesse that in name of satisfaction for reconcilment vnto God, we do nothing for our selues, but Christ only both temporally and eternally is the satisfaction for our finnes. Christ did not onely beare the infinite wrath of God; to acquite vs of eternall punishment, but according to the wordes of the Prophet cited by the Euangelist, He took (upon him) our infirmities, & bare our sicknesses, ^{k Efa 53.4.} that is, our temporall punishments; which what doth it import, but ^{Mat. 8.17.} that in respect of temporall punishments also Christ is our Redeemer, Christ is our satisfaction vnto God. And if not so, why do we then pray to God to bee deliuered from temporall calamities and afflictions for Christs sake? Nay, see how wickedly this deuce is framed. The blood of Christ serueth not to acquite vs from temporall punishments, but the blood of S. Peter doth, and the blood of Paul, and the blood of the Martyrs; these all are helpfull to free vs from temporall satisfactions. They pray by one Saint against the toothach, by another against the falling sicknes, by another against the plague, &c. their merits are auailable in this behalfe, but the merit of Christ auaieth nothing. And yet they tell vs, that the conclusion of all their prayers is, Per Christum Dominum nostrum; through Christ our Lord. But why do they thus bring in the mediation of Christ, if Christ in this respect haue done nothing for vs? If Christ haue left the burden of temporall satisfactions to lie wholly vpon vs, why doe they pray by him and through him to be discharged thereof? This the Church of the faithfull hath alwaies done, and in all times. The Church of Rome therefore dealeth vnfaithfully to retaine the wordes of the faithfull, and to giue checke to the meaning of them, by denying Christ to be our Redeemer from that wrath of God, whereby temporall afflictions and punishments are laid vpon vs. As for vs wee resolute that as the disobedience of the first Adam, brought vpon vs not onely eternall punishments, but also temporall, so the obedience and merit of the second Adam, to answer that in sauing which the other had done in destroying, hath made satisfaction to God for both, so that the faithfull penitent soule soule beleeuing & receiuing in Christ forgiuencesse of sinnes, beleeueth it selfe to be perfectly reconciled vnto God, & reckoneth not of any further satisfaction to be made vnto him. Now M. Bishop acknowledgeth that Christs satisfactio is of infinite value, & therefore that our satisfactio is not to supply his. But if it be of infinite value, why doth he restrain & abridge the effect thereof, in respect of the to whom the infinite value of it doth belong? why doth hee make the value thereof in respect of the temporall punishments of sin, altogether idle & of no vse? and if it might haue freed vs fro doing satisfaction for our selues, why doth it not? He giueth vs reasons, that by the smart thereof we may be feared & made carefull to auoid sin, & that by suffering, we may be conformed as members to Christ our head. You say well M. Bishop, but yet we heare nothing here concerning satisfaction. We require a reason of the assertion of our satisfactions, for that Christ we say hath yeelded a full satisfaction for vs, & you tell vs of being frighted fro sin, & made conformable vnto Christ, which are things that stand very well without any matter of satisfaction. The Scripture teacheth vs these vses of the sufferings of the faithful, but it saith nothing to vs concerning satisfaction. But for the better vnderstanding of this whole matter, it is to be obserued, that the temporall calamities & euils of this life, are of the selues, & in their own nature, the punishments of sin, the effects of Gods curse, the beames of his euerlasting fury and wrath, the forerunners of his dreadfull iudgment, preparatiōs to death, & death it selfe the vpsnot of al the rest, as it were a gulfe swallowing vs vp into fearefull darknes, & vnter destructiō both of body & soule. Now Christ being the lambe of God that taketh away the sinne of the world, in taking away our sins, taketh away consequently the effects of sin, because the cause beeing remoued, the effects cannot remaine. But in sin, as hath been before declared, wee are to consider both the corruption and the guilt, of which the guilt being taken away, the corruption may still remaine, & the effects of sin haue reference to both these. Being then reconciled vnto God through Iesus Christ, by the not imputing of our sins, wee see that the temporall afflictions & grieuances of this life, are still continuing & lying vpon vs. Hereupon the question is, our sins beeing forgiuen, in what nature they continue? We say; not as satisfactions to the wrath of God, in respect of the guilt of sin, but as cautions and prouisions of his leue, for the destroying of the corruption ruption of it. The guilt of finne is the foundation of satisfaction; and where no guilt is, there is no satisfaction to be demanded. When therefore forgiveness hath taken away the guilt, there can be no requiring of satisfaction, & the afflictions thenceforth lying vpon vs are of another nature, and to other ends & vses, then that either we should be said thereby to satisfie God, or that God should be said thereby to satisfie himselfe of vs. The vses thereof the Scripture noteth ⁱⁿ the destroying of the body of sin, ⁱⁿ the making of vs partakers of his holinesse, ⁱⁿ the renewing of the inner man from day to day, ⁱⁿ the making of vs meete to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light. ⁱⁿ We are chastened of the Lord when we are iudged, that we should not be condemned with the world. They serue, saith Augustine, for the reforming of our sins, for the exercise and triall of our righteousnesse, for the setting forth of the misery of this life, that in that life where shall be true & everlasting blisse, may both more seruenly be desired, and more instantly sought for. These reasons he giueth, why the punishments of finne as touching the matter of them continue still in this life after the forgiveness thereof, but of satisfaction not a word. Yea, being occasioned to speake directly to the point by the Pelagians, objecting to him, that if death had come by sin, then after forgiveness of sinnes we should not die, he answereth thus. They understand not that God suffereth the things, the guilt whereof he releaseth, that they may not hurt after this life. yet to remaine (in this life) for the sight of saue, that thereby we may be instructed and exercised, profiting and growing in the sight of righteousnesse. The guilt of death then and of all other temporall calamities, is taken away, but yet these things continue, not as matters of satisfaction, but as meanes of instruction for the framing of vs vnto God. He goeth on, and saith, that it may be as well said if for sinne it were said to man, In the sweat of thy browes shalt thou eate thy bread, and the earth shall bring forth vnto thee briars and thornes why after forgiveness of sinnes doth this labour remaine, and why doth the ground of the faithfull bring forth briars and thornes? Again, if for sinne it were said to the woman, In paine and sorrow thou shalt bring forth, how is it that after forgiveness of sinnes faithfull women still bring forth with the same paines? All these cases and the like he cleareth in this sort: Wee answer, that before forgiveness they are the punishments of sinnes, but after forgiveness, they are the sights and exercises of the iust. Where wee see that being

mRom 6 6.
 nHeb. 12. 10.
 o 2. Cor. 4. 16.
 p Col. 1. 12.
 q 1. Cor. 11. 32.
 r Aug. de Trin.
 t lb 1. c. p. 15.
 Irosun. 152.
 mda. que fitiles
 iud pe. for nor vel
 ad eo end: 224
 peccat. vel d
 ex ore d. impo.
 band onq. iust
 nam vel ad d.
 nist. and i. ver. e
 hunc m. s. r. a. v. illa r. erit bea.
 t. ad. a. r. a. q.
 p. p. a. d. d.
 s. i. r. e. ar. ord. n.
 t. i. s. & i. n. s. i. a. n.
 i. i. n. q. u. e. r. a. r.
 F. i. d. i. n. l. o. a. n.
 t. r. a. 7. 1. 2. 4.
 s. Aug. de peccat.
 mer. & rom. s.
 lb 2. ca. 33. Qu
 dicitur. si peccato
 r. i. s. a. c. u. s. e. s. t.
 u. n. v. i. u. i. n. i. s. t.
 i. t. u. s. n. o. e. r. u. n. t.
 u. r. n. o. n. e. l. l. i. g. i. t.
 q. u. o. n. d. a. r. i. s.
 q. u. o. n. d. a. r. i. s.
 p. 2. v. i. n. e. v. i. a. n. t.
 d. i. n. D. o. s. s. i. n.
 t. i. s. t. o. r. i. e. v. i. s.
 a. l. c. e. r. t. a. n. s. i. b. i.
 s. i. n. m. n. e. r. o. v.
 p. 2. i. s. e. r. u. t. i. a.
 m. u. r. & e. x. e. r. c. i. t.
 i. o. n. e. s. e. s. t.
 u. a. n. o. i. e. u. l. t. i. m. e.
 t. h. i. n. d. e. p. 5. 4.
 R. e. s. o. l. u. t. i. o. n. e.
 r. e. n. e. s. a. n. t. e. r. e.
 i. n. s. i. n. o. m. i. s. s. e.
 s. i. p. 1. 1. p. 1. r.
 t. o. r. i. s. p. 1. 1. e. f.
 i. o. n. i. s. i. n. e. c. e.
 r. e. r. t. i. m. a. 2. v. e. r.
 e. t. a. t. i. o. n. e. s. i. n.
 s. e. u. n. t.

drawne to answer precisely to this matter, he denieth them after forgiveness to be punishments of sinne, howsoever both he and we are wont in common speech to terme them so, because originally and naturally they are so. Therefore is there commonly that difference made betwixt the afflictions of the faithfull and the vnfaitfull, that that which is to the iust the exercise of vertue, as Origen saith, is to the vniust the punishment of sinne; that the plagues of the world, as Tertullian saith, are to the one for punishment, to the other for admonition and aduertisement. So can Thomas Aquinas say when occasion serueth, that y temporall evils are inflicted upon the wicked for punishment, for that they are not thereby helped for the obtaining of eternall life, but to the iust who are thereby helped, they are not punishments, but rather medicines. So then they are not punishments, they are no satisfaction where sinnes are forgiven, but they are referred to other ends. If they be satisfactions, the proper and onely vse of them in that nature is ex parte ante, in respect of time past, to giue recompence for offence formerly committed; and whatsoever else is alledged, is meere accidentall, but the proper and onely vse of afflictions where sinnes are forgiven, is ex parte post, in respect of time to come, to keepe vs from sinne, and to helpe forward our sanctification towards God. But M. Bishop hudleth and confoundeth all together, and by termes of the true vses of afflictions deliuered in the Scripture, deceitfully coloureth his matter of satisfactions deuised beside and against the Scripture. Let him speake distinctly as the Scripture doth, and then he must say, that that which concerneth the guilt of sinne, and belongeth to satisfaction, is laid wholly vpon Christ, that it may be true which the Prophet saith, The chastisement of our peace was laid vpon him, and by his stripes we were healed; but that which is laid vpon vs after forgiveness by Christ, is onely de futuro, to weaken and wear away the power of sinne, and in death which is the last of these afflictions, vtterly to destroy ic. Now therefore whereas he saith, that we must be conformable vnto Christ as members to our head, he notably abuseth the pretence thereof to the singular dishonour of Iesus Christ. He hath told vs before that we must be like vnto Christ in meriting, and here he telleth vs that we must be like vnto Christ in satisfying; but what? must we be like vnto Christ in those things wherein consisteth his being Christ? wherein standeth his being our Redeemer, our Saviour, u Origen. in Genes. hom. 16.

 Quid iusti exercit. in virtutis est, hoc iniusti pena peccati.
 x Tertull. Apolog. ca. 41. Omnes seculi plaga nobis forte in admonitiōe, vobis in castigatiōe, a Deo obueniunt.
 y Thom. Aquin. 2. 2. q. 114. art. 10. ad. 3. Temporalia mala infliguntur impijs in penam, in quantum per ea non adiuuantur ad consecutiōe vite eterne, iusti autem qui per huiusmodi mala iuuantur, non sunt pene sed magis medicinae.

z Eia. 53. 5.

a Of Merits.
 Sect. 16.

our, our high Priest and Mediatour vnto God? By meriting and satisfi-ying for vs, it is that Christ is our Christ, our Iesus and Sauour.
 If therefore we be like vnto him in meriting and satisfi-ying, what hindereth but that as he is in common Iesus, and a Sauour for all, so we also should be said euery man to bee a Iesus and Sauour for him selfe. Which because it is impious to affirme, and cannot bee auoided, if it be true which he saith, let him learne to know that we are to bee like vnto Christ in his image, not in his office; in act of conuersation, not in effect of satisfaction and redemption; in that that he is simply according to himselfe, not in that that he is by dispensation for vs. We must suffer as he hath suffered, but not suffer for our selues; or one for another, as hee hath suffered for vs. Wee must walke in obedience to God as he hath walked, but not to merit by our obedience for our selues, as hee by his obedience hath merited for vs. These are lewd and Antichristian deuices, seruing to iustle Christ out of his place, by a pretence of conformitie betwixt him and vs. M. Bishops conclusion therefore is without any ground, that Christ hauing satisfied the eternall punishment of sinne, hath left a temporall satisfaction thereof to be performed by vs. As for the words of the Apostle which he cieth for some proof thereof, Every man shall beare his owne burden, it had been his part to make it plaine; first that the burden there spoken of, is to bee vnder-stood of temporall afflictions. Secondly, if it be so to bee vnder-stood; he should again haue told vs how it followeth, that those afflictions must necessarily be taken to be satisfactions. Thirdly, if they be satisfactions, it would haue bene considered how this place standeth with the doctrine and practise of the Church of Rome, which, the Apostle saying, Every man shall beare his owne burden, that is, if we beleeue M. Bishop, shall satisfie for himselfe; doth not withstanding appoint one man to beare the burden and satisfactions of another. If euery man beare his owne burden, why doth the Pope pretend by his Pardons, to impart to one man, the satisfactions of another? or if the Pope doe thereby impart the satisfactions of Saints and Martyrs to the helpe of those that want, why doth Master Bishop tell vs that of temporall satisfactions it is said, that Every man shall beare his owne burden? But thus hee is wont to cite texts at all aduenture; be they with him or against him all is one; they helpe to fill vp a booke, and that is enough for his purpose.

But

But the meaning of those words plainly appeareth out of the circumstance of the place. The Apostle labouring to withdraw men from iudging and condemning others, and from iustifying themselves by measuring and comparing themselves to them who they condemned, wisheth every man to consider himselfe in himself, to make triall of his owne worke, not to continue himselfe, for that he seemeth to himselfe to be preferred before another, but to endeavour without comparison to others to be approoved in himselfe. To this meaning are these words; Let every man proue his owne worke, & then shall he haue reioycing in himselfe and not in another. For reason hereof he addeth, for every man shall beare his own burthen, as if he should say: It concerneth not one man what another is: the burdening of another shall be no disburdening of thee: what is amisse in him, he shall answer for himselfe, but locke thou to thine own burden, for what soeuer it is thou shalt answer to God for it. The burden then which the Apostle speaketh of is, as Thomas Aquinas saith, the burden of our reckoning & account to be made vnto God at the day of iudgement, and his words are to the very same meaning, as elsewhere he saith: Every one of vs shall giue account of himselfe to God. So that M. Bishops argument falleth out in the end to bee this; Every man at the day of iudgement must giue reckoning to God for himselfe. Therefore Christ hath left vs to make temporal satisfaction to God for our own finnes. Thou must take it as it is, gentle Reader, for he can make it no better then it will bee: denie his argument, and hee hath no more to say.

3. W. BISHOP.

Nay (saith M. Perkins) we must then be new Christs, and Redeemers, and Priests of the same order with himselfe. Nothing so, but hauing grace from him, we may in vertue therof satisfie, not for the crime it selfe, or everlasting punishment, which is linked with it: because that would require an infinite vertue: but for the tēporal pain of it, one indued with grace may satisfie, for the measure of stripes must not exceede the rate of the fault, the punishment then resting unsatisfied being limited, a creature may pay it. And that the Reader may better perceiue what we meane by the temporall paine, let him consider that in sin are two things, the one is the turning away from God, whom we offend, the other is the

c Ver. 5.

d Th. Aquin. in Gal. cap. 6. lect. 1. Omnis reddende rationis, & c. in die iudicij.
c Rom. 14. 12.

turning unto the thing, for the loue of which we offend: as for glory, lust, Ince, or such like, the sinner transgresseth: now when he is by the grace of God conuerted, his turning away from God, both the sin and the eternall paine due vnto it, are freely through Christ pardoned, but for the pleasure which he tooke in the sin, the man himselfe is to satisfie: and so according vnto the greatnesse of that his pleasure, he is to do penance.

R. ABBOT.

M Perkins gaue argument and reason of that which he said; but M. Bishop like a reasonlesse man without giuing any reason, affirmeth that againe, against which M. Perkins argued. Hee rightly alledgeth, that no part of the priesthood of Christ can be said to haue passed from him to vs, that to make satisfaction for sinnes whether temporally or eternally is a part of the priesthood of Christ, and therefore that it is not a thing passed from him to vs to make satisfaction for our sinnes. Againe, to attribute that to vs, for which and by which Christ is Christ, our Redeemer & high Priest, is to make vs Christs, Redeemers and Priests for our selues. But to attribute to vs to make satisfaction for sinnes either temporally or eternally, is to attribute that to vs, for which and by which Christ is Christ, our Redeemer and high Priest. It is therefore the same, as to affirm vs to be Christs, Redeemers and Priests for our selues. M. Bishop answereth ridiculously and childishly, Not so, but Christ hath satisfied for the eternall punishment which required an infinite vertue: as for the temporall paine it may be satisfied by vs. But what is here for exception to our collection, that sith the name & office of Christ, of a Redeemer and Priest standeth in satisfying for sinne, therefore if we be said to satisfie temporally for our selues, then as Christ is our Christ, Redeemer, and Priest, in respect of satisfying for the eternall punishment of our sinnes, so we are Christs, Redeemers, and Priests for our selues, in respect of making temporally an attonement for our selues. But that it belongeth to the Priesthood of Christ, to make attonement for temporall punishments, is plaine in the law, where we reade that the plague being begun, the high Priest in figure of our high Priest Iesus Christ, maketh attonement for the staying of it. ^a Take the censur, saith Moses to Aaron, and put ^{a Namb. 16, 46.} ire therein of the Alter, and put therein Incense, and go quickly to the *Cōgregatiō & make an attonement for the, for there is wrath gone out fro the Lord, the plague is begū. He did so, & the plague was staid. The like we se in the plague that followed vpo Davids numbring of the people, he offered burnt offerings & peace offrings, and the Lord was appeased towards the Land, & the plague ceased fro Israel. And hec by we vnderstād, that al the sacrifices of the law, wherin^e Christ was alwaies set before them, had a respect of appeasing the wrath of God not onely for euerlasting punishments in the world to come, but also for the temporall afflictions & punishments that are incident to this life. It is therefore a great impiety in the Church of Rome, to take away this part of Christs office from him, and to make euerymian thereof paraker to his wrong. But now whereas M. Bishop saith, that it would require an infinite vertue to satisfie for the euerlasting punishment of sinne, we would gladly know of him how it stādeth, that a greater vertue is required to satisfie for the euerlasting paines of hell, then there is to merit and purchase the euerlasting ioyes of heauen. Hee saith, the grace of Christ giueth force to our works to deserue the one; but if that be true, by what reason doth he deny that the grace of Christ giueth force to our satisfactions to quit the other? His owne confession in the one condemneth his assercion in the other, and because he denieth that our merits of satisfaction can release from hel, he must deny that our merits of purchase are of sufficient value to deserue heauen, because the grace of God must be holden to be of the same power and vertue on both sides. Againe it is vntue which he saith, that the temporall punishment being limited, may be satisfied for by a meer creature, because the satisfaction is not to be esteemed according to the quantity of the* d Th. m. Aquin. suppl. q. 12. ar. 1. ad 1. Sic ut offensa habuit quendam infinitatē ex infinitate diuine maiestatis: ita etiam satisfactio accipit quendam infinitatem ex infinitate diuine misericordie prout est gratia informata per quam acceptum redditur quod homo facere potest.
Con-

temporal punishment, but according to the maiesty of him to who the offence is done, who beeing the same in punishing, whether temporally or eternally, can haue none of sufficient worth to deal with the one, who is not the same for the other also. He cannot in any sort merit any thing at Gods hands, who is not in worth and power answerable to his infinit greatesse. And this Thomas Aquinas sa w, who to make good humane satisfaction, attributeth vnto it an infinite, in respect that it is informed by grace, & accepted thereby whereby we may see how well these men accord in the grounds of their defence. But Thomas Aquinas saw it to bee an absurd fancie which M. Bishop here followeth in designing a rate, as he calleth it, of sins to be answered by a measure of temporall stripes, whereas the infinitenesse of sin can beare no such limitation, nor be bounded in any sort within the cōpasse of temporall reuenge. But yet M. Bishop will make vs beleue that he hath a deuce whereby to make good this rate and measure. He telleth vs that in sin two things must be considered; the one is the turning away from God whom we offend, the other is the turning to the thing for the loue of which we offend. Our turning from God, both the fault & the eternall punishment due vnto it, he saith, are freely pardoned by Christ, but man forsooth must satisfie for the pleasure that hee tooke in turning to the creature. But this idle Sophisme of his is reiected also by the same great Rabbin of theirs, Thomas Aquinas as a thing of nought. Some say, saith he, that sinne hath an infinity in respect of auerting or turning away frō God, & so it is freely pardoned, but that in respect of conuersiō or turning to creatures it is finite, and so may be satisfied for. But this is nothing, because satisfiō answereth not to sin, but according as it is an office to God which hath not of converting to other things, but of auerting and turning frō God. There is a loue of the creatures which is according to God, & stādeth with the loue of God. The creature because it is good, it may be loued aright, saith Austin, and it may be loued amisse: aright if order be kept; amisse if order be peruerted. Therefore vertue & righteousness is not a deniāll of the loue of creatures, but it is, as hee saith, an order in louing. The act of sin then consisteth in disordered loue, in that the loue of the creature implieth an auersion and turning away from God. Now then seeing satisfaction is to be made by vs in respect of auersion frō God, & the punishment that belongeth to auersion frō God, is the eternall punishment of sin, as M. Bishop also saith, he must acknowledge by the doctrine of their owne schooles, that we are to make satisfaction for the eternall punishment of sin, and then let him tell vs what exception he hath yet giuen, that their doctrine of satisfactions doth not make vs Christ, and Redeemers of our selues, & Priests of the same order with the Sonne of God. But we are yet further desirous to know, vpon what ground M. Bishop would haue vs to beleue, that only temporall punishments should belong to the pleasures & delights of sin, or in what sort we should conceiue the same pleasures of sin seuered from auerting & turning away from God? These are such strange deuices, howsoeuer he fettereth them downe, as speciall tricks of wit, as that hee should thinke

him to haue written them in a dream, but that he vttereth so many of them, as that then wee must imagine him to liue in a continuall dreame. Must we thinke that the Apofiles were acquainted with this nice conceit of his? Did they meane that Christ suffered and died for our sins quantum ad auersionem, so farre as concerneth turning from God, but that he left vs to suffer for our own sins, and one for anothers sins quantum ad conuersionem, so farre as concerneth turning to the pleasures of our sins? Surely the Prophet saith, quantum ad auersionem: h All we like sleepe haue gone a stray; and quantum ad conuersionem, we haue turned euery man to his owne way, and addeth concerning both; And the Lord hath laid vpon him the iniquities of vs all. But M. Bishop hath learned another lesson of their schoolmen, who haue exercised their wits to mocke the word of God, for the colouring of those lewd and blasphemous nouelties, which the Romish Apostasie hath brought in, to the wrong and derogation of the crosse of Christ.

h. E. G. 51 6.

4 W. BISHOP.

But Christ (saith M. Perkins) said on the Crosse. It is finished: Wherefore all satisfaction was at Christs death ended, as well temporall as eternall.

Answer, That those words haue a farre different sense: To wit, that Christ had then ended his course, & fulfilled all prophecies, and endured all such orments, as it pleased God to impose vpon him for the redemption of mankind: of satisfaction temporall there is no mention, neither can any thing be drawne thence against it: No more can be out of this other: Christ made sinne for vs: that is, the punishment of sinne, as M. Perkins glasse it: but the learned say, an host or sacrifice for sinne. But we graunt that he suffered the punishment for our sinne, & say consequently: that all sinne is pardoned freely for his sake, and the paine of hell also, which is punishment of sinne: but not other temporall paines, such as he hath pleased the iustice and wisdom of God to reserue vnto euery sinner, to beare in his owne person. And after this sort, and no other was God in Christ; reconciling the world to himselfe. And that Saint Paul vnderstood well, that Christs sufferings did not take away ours, may be gathered by these his words: I reioyce in suffering for you, and do accomplish those things that went of the Passions of Christ, in my

2. Cor. 5.

Colof. 1.

how can it stand that after Christs redemption the obligation should still remain, & that there should be yet a further satisfaction to be made? Either it must be said that Christ hath not made a full redemption; or else it must be acknowledged, that Christ hath taken away all temporal satisfaction. But Christ in saying It is finished testifieth that in his death he fully finished our redemption. Therefore he testifieth that he hath left no place for any further satisfaction. This cannot be shifted off. A perfect redemption taketh away all obligation of further satisfaction, or else it cannot be called absolutely perfect. Christs redemption therefore beeing simply & absolutely perfect, must necessarily inferre a deniall of temporal satisfaction. Albeit the very name of temporal satisfaction in this case is absurd, because the guilt of sin being onely infinite & eternal, and in no sort temporall, cannot be brought within any compass of temporall satisfaction, as before was said. In a word, we doe not beleene that Christ plaid the Sophister vpon the crosse, to say quantum ad auersionem. It is finished, that is, the satisfactiō of sin is fully paid, but quantum ad conuersionem, al is not yet fully finished, but there remaineth some further satisfaction to be made. No more do we beleue that the Apostle when he said, ^a Christ was made sin for vs, did play false or loose, as meaning that if we vnderstand sin quantum ad auersionem, that is, it is true that he was made sin for vs, that is, the punishment or sacrifice for sin, but that quantum ad conuersionem we are made sin for our selues, or one man for another. Or that when it is said, ^b He suffered for sinnes once, the iust for the vniust, that he might bring vs to God, the meaning is that in part he suffered for our sinnes, to bring vs to God, but left vs in part to suffer for our owne sinnes, to bring our selues to God. Wee cannot be perswaded that that was the meaning of the Apostle when he said, ^c God was in Christ reconciling the world vnto himselfe, because he defineth that reconcilement to consist in the not imputing of our sins, and how are our sinnes not imputed if we be still holden in any sort to make satisfaction for the? But these things though they be apparently blasphemous & wicked, and do expose the Gospel of Christ to mockery & contempt, yet M. Bishop laboureth to colour with a sentence of S. Paul, which for more then a thousand yeares after the time of Christ and his Apostles, neuer any man vnderstood or expounded, to that meaning whereto hee applieth it. ^d Now reioyce I in my sufferings for you, and do fulfill or ac-

g 2. Cor. 5. 21.

h 1. Pet. 3. 18.

i 2. Cor. 5. 19.

k Col. 1. 24.

compleish.

compleish those things that want, saith M. Bishop, but the word is usquequatu) the remainder, those things that are yet behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake, which is the Church. M.
Bishop by translating those things that want of the passions of Christ, and applying the place to their satisfactions, giueth vs to vnder-stand that blasphemy of theirs, which he will seeme otherwise to denie, that for satisfaction somewhat is wanting to the passion of Christ, so that the passion of Christ is not taken with them to be a full and perfect satisfaction and redemption. He will say, the old interpreter so translateth, but because the old interpreter made not that vse of these passions in the words following, as M. Bishop doth, therefore to our meaning onely, and not to his, he translateth in that sort. The afflictions and sufferings of the faithfull are very often in the scripture termed ^a the afflictions and sufferings of Christ.
Christ is the head; we are the body.^m The head and the body, saith
S. Austine, make one Christ. He hath made vs one with himselfe, and therefore vnder one name of ⁿ Christ, he comprehendeth both himselfe and vs. Whatsoeuer then is done either to the head or to the body, the same is done to Christ. Christ the head hath suffered in himselfe whatsoeuer was needfull for the redemption and purchase of that body, whereof he was to be the head. He therefore suffered and died ^r for sinne as a Redeemer; we as redeemed are by suffering to be conformed vnto him, that in suffering we may be still ^s dying, and in death it selfe may fully and foreuer be ^o dead to sinne. Now because the afflictions of the body and members of Christ, are reckoned to be the afflictions of Christ, therefore so long as there is any part of the body still remaining to be afflicted, so long there is somewhat wanting, or yet behind of the afflictions of Christ. Thus S. Austine saith, ^p If thou be a member of Christ, whatsoeuer thou sufferest of them who are not the members of Christ, it was wanting to the passions of Christ. And thus S. Paul as a member of Christ professeth, that for his part he fulfilled the remnant, or that that was yet to be sustained of the afflictions & sufferings of Christ.
But he addeth, for his bodies sake which is the Church, and vpon these words specially the question dependeth. In what meaning is it that he saith he suffereth for the Churches sake? M. Bishop will haue vs thinke that it was to adde somewhat for his part to the common treasury of satisfactions, whence reliefe & succour might

1: 2 Cor. 1. 10.

Ph 1: 3 10.

1. Pet. 4. 1 3.

m Aug. in Psal.

Capit. 6. corpus

vnius est Chris-

tus.

n Gal. 3. 16.

o Rom. 6. 3. 11.

p Aug in Psal.

61 Si in membris

Christi es, quic-

quid pateris ab

eis qui non sunt

in membris Christi

deat passio-

bus Christi.

q1. Cor. 1. 13.

r Gal. 6. 14.

f Eia. 6. 3.

t Amb. of. m. 1.

Cor. cap. 1. Si

Christus pro nobis mortuus est, quomodo gratiam & beneficium eius hominibus impetramus ad eius iniuriam?

u Leo epist. 81.

Quoniam multorum sanctorum pietas in conspectu Domini mors fuerit, nullus tamen infans occiso mundi fuit propitiatio. A corpore iusti, non dederunt coronas, & de fortitudine fidelium nata sunt exempla patientie, non donec insisteret. Singulares quippe in singulis mortes fuerunt alterius quoque debitorum suo fisco perfoluit, quam inter filios hominum unius Dominus noster Iesus Christus extiterit in quo omnes crucifixi, omnes mortui, omnes sepulti, omnes sine etiam suscitati.

x Aug. in Ioan. tract. 84. Et si fratres pro fratribus moriamur, tamen in fraternitate peccatorum remissionem nullius sanguinis martyris sumitur, quod fecit ille (Christus) pro nobis, nec in hoc quid imitari remur sed gratuloremur conuicti nobis, &c. Quod si quis se pro merito Christi comparabit alieni se putando sanare peccata, multum est ad illum, non capit tantum &c. Dives est qui nec hereditario nec proprio unquam debito obnoxius & ipse iustus est & alios iustificat Christus. Noli contra eum te extolere, in tantum pauper ut remissionis peccatorum apparatus quo, idcirco in oratione mendicis.

be yeelded to men by the Popes indulgences, to supply the want of their owne satisfactions. We must thinke that somewhat was wanting to the suff. rings of Christ, to set vs free from temporall punishments, and towards that S. Paul paid his shot, and hauing suffered enough for his owne discharge, would adde somewhat to serue in common to ease the burdens of other men. But against this wicked and blasphemous fancie, the Apostle himselfe instructeth vs, when he saith, Was Paul crucified for you? If we beleue M. Bishop, Paul also was crucified for vs, but Paul himselfe denieth himselfe to haue bene crucified for vs. Therefore he teacheth vs to say, God forbid that I shold reioyce but in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ. not in the crosse of Paul, not in the crosse of Peter, but only in the crosse of Iesus Christ. If M. Bishop say true, we haue to reioyce in the crosse of Peter and in the crosse of Paul, and in the crosses of the rest of the Saints, as hauing redeemed vs frō Purgatory, & frō temporall pains; but we are taught to reioyce in nothing but in the crosse of Iesus Christ, that it may be true which he hath said, I haue troden the wine- presse alone, & of all people there was none with me. Therefore Ambrose saith; If Christ haue died for vs, why do we impute his grace and benefit to other men to his wrong? Very fildy to this purpose saith Leo Bishop of Rome: Albeit the death of many Saints hath bene precious in the Lords sight, yet the killing of no Saint hath bene the propitiation of the world. The iust receiued crownes, but gaue none, and of the fortitude of the faithfull haue growne exampl'es of patience, no gifts of rightousnesse. Their deaths were generall in euery of them, neither hath any man by his death paid the debt of another man, seeing amongst the sonnes of men it was onely our Lord Iesus Christ, in whom all were crucified, dead, buried, and raised againe. This was the auncient doctrine of the Bishops of Rome, but now Master Bishop telleth vs out of their Romish learning, that one man is the propitiation and attonement for another, that some men do pay debts, and make satisfactions for others, because Paul saith that he suffereth for the Churches sake. But S. Austine telleth him againe: x Albeit we as brethren die for our brethren, yet no martyrs blood is shed for the remission of the sinnes of the brethren, which Christ hath done for vs, and in that hath yeelded vs not any thing to imitate & follow, but what to re- voice of. For if any man will compare himselfe to the power of Christ, in thinking himselfe to heale the sin of another man, it is too much for him; he is not capable thereof. He is the rich man, saith he, who being not subiect to any debt either hereditary or of his owne, is both iust himselfe, & iustificth others, euen Iesus Christ. Doe not aduance thy selfe against him, being so poore as that thou appearest in thy praier daily a begger of the forgiveness of sins. There is no forgiveness of sins then by the blood of Martyrs; there is no ablenesse in one man to heale the sin of another, or to pay anothers debt: euery man is poore, euery man a begger, crauing from day to day the release and remission of his owne debts. This was S. Pauls case; thus he praied daily as Christ had taught him, and why then doth M. Bishop make him so rich, as that hee should bee able to make payment of our debts, that hee should purchase a release of the punishment of our sinnes, that hee should take vpon him ^v to make recompence for the wrongs that wee haue done to God, and to take away our offence towards God, or Gods offence and displeasure towards vs, as their name of Satisfaction doth impott? It was a farre other matter that the Apostle intended, in that hee saith that hee endured afflictions for the Churches sake. It was to confirme vnto the Church the truth of the Gospell of Christ; to cause the greater opinion of that doctrine which hee preached, in that he yeelded himselfe for the testifying thereof, to hazard and bestow his temporall life; to encourage and comfort the faithfull, to continue constant in the faith of Christ, according to the example that they had seene in him; to embolden other men to preach the word, notwithstanding the opposition that was made against it. And thus doth the Apostle expresse the ends and vses of his afflictions; ² the confirmation of the Gospell, ² the furthering of the Gos-pell, ^b the defence of the Gospell, ^c the magnifying of Christ. ^d If wee be afflicted, saith hee, it is for your consolation and saluation which is wrought in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer.

 Not then as to purchase any thing towards their saluation by his afflictions, but as to hearten and comfort them to the patient bearing of afflictions, in the enduring whereof God hath intended to bring their saluation to effect. Thus Thomas Aquinas, where his eyes were open, conceiued both of this text, and of that to the Colossians which is here in question, who writing vpon the words of the Apostle, Was Paul crucified for you? vseth these words:

7 Tho. Aquin.
 Supplem. q. 12. art.
 2 ad 1. Satisfac-
 tio est quaedam
 illate in iure recompensatio. Et q.
 14. Ablatio offen-
 sae. art. 1. in corp.

z Phil. 1. 7.
 a Ver. 12.
 b V. r. 17.
 c Ver. 20.
 d 2. Cor. 1. 6.

¶ Tho. Aquin. in 1. Cor. cap. 1. le 7. 2. Hoc proprimus est Christo, ut sua passione & morte nostram salutem operatus fuerit. &c. Sed contra hoc esse videtur quod Apostolus dicit, Gaudeo in passionibus meis pro vobis. &c. Sed dicendum quod passio Christi sui nobis salutaris non solum per modum exempli sed etiam per modum meriti & efficiencie, inquantum eius sanguine redempti & iustificati sumus, &c. Sed passio aliorum nobis est salutaris solum per modum exempli, secundum 2. Cor. 1. Gaudeo tribulamur, &c.

¶ Florent. 3. q. 48. ar. 5. ubi 3. Non solum passio Christi sed etiam aliorum sanctorum proficitur ad salutem nostram, ut Col. 1. Gaudeo in passionibus meis pro vobis, &c. Dicendum quod passiones sanctorum proficiunt Ecclesie non quidem per modum redemptionis, sed per modum exempli & exhortationis, secundum illud 2. Cor. 1. Sine tribulamur, &c.

¶ 2. Tim. 2. 10.

h In 2. Tim. 1. le 7. 2. Sed nunquid sufficit Christi passio? Dicendum quod sic esse videtur; sed passio Apostoli dupliciter expediebat. Primum quia debet exemplum persistendi in fide. Secundo quia confirmabatur fides & ex hoc in lucebantur ad salutem. i. Ambros. in Psal. 43. Petrus pro Ecclesia multa toleravit. Multa etiam Paulus ecclesie periculis periculis, cum cederetur virgibus, cum lapidaretur, cum in carceres truderetur. Ita enim toleravit in iniuriarum & usu periculis domini fuerat ut est populus, & ecclesia incrementum est consecuta, cum ceteri ad martirium festinarent videntes per illius passionem subleuati. Apostolorum decessisse virtutibus, sed etiam propter hanc breuem vitam immortalitatem esse questam.

¶ This is proper to Christ, that he by his passion and death hath wrought our salvation. But it seemeth to be against this which the Apostle saith; Col. 1. Now I reioice in my sufferings for you, &c. But we are to say, that the passion of Christ was the cause of our salvation, not only by way of example, but also by way of merit and effectual working, in that by his blood we are redeemed and iustified; but the sufferings of others is furthering to our salvation onely by way of example, according to that 2. Cor. 1. If we be afflicted, it is for your comfort & salvation, &c. Again in another place propounding by way of objection, that not only the passion of Christ, but also of other Saints was helpfull to our salvation, according to the saying of the Apostle, Col. 1. Now reioice I in my sufferings for you, &c. and therefore that Christ onely cannot bee called our Redeemer, but also other Saints; he answereth thus: We are to say that the passions of the Saints are helpfull or profitable to the Church, not by way of redemption, but by way of example & comfort (or encouragement) according to that 2. Cor. 1. If we be afflicted &c. So where the Apostle saith, I suffer all things for the elects sake, that they may also obtaine the salvation which is in Christ Iesus, hee asketh, what, was not the passion of Christ sufficient? Yes, saith he, as touching the working of salvation; but the Apostles suffering was two waies expedient. First, because he gave example thereby of continuing in the faith. Secondly, because hereby the faith was confirmed, and by that means they were induced and drawne on to salvation. Thus then we haue example, confirmation, comfort, encouragement in the sufferings of the Apostles and Saints, but wee cannot find any satisfaction for our finnes. And that M. Bishop may know that wee speake this from better authority then onely Thomas Aquinas, let S. Ambrose tell in what sense the Apostles suffered for the Church. Peter, saith hee, suffered many things for the Church. Many things also S. Paul and the rest of the Apostles suffered when they were scourged, when they were stoned, when they were imprisoned. For by that bearing of wrongs and experience of dangers, the Lords people was founded, and the Church received increase, for that other hastened to martyrdom, many Martyrs. This is indeed to fulfill the word of God, this is to fulfill the Gospel. In the like sort doth S. Austin make construction of the words of S. Iohn: "He laid down his life for us, therefore ought we also to lay downe our liues for the brethren: namely, ° for the edifying of Gods people, for the auouching of the faith. Thus it was said, that ^p the blood of Christians was like seed, that ^q the field of the Church beeing sowed with blood, did more fruitfully spring and grow, whilst ^r the Lord did grant that his seruants by their sufferings did win their brethren; but that the blood of Christian Martyrs was any satisfaction for the rest of the Church of Christ, or any redemption of the punishments of their brethren, it was neuer heard of in those times. They knew nothing then of the Popes store-house of Supererogations and satisfactions: they knew nothing of that marting, and chopping, and changing of merits which these presumptuous Romish hypocrites now maintaine, in whom it is much more verified then it was in the Donatists, which S. Austine saith: "They arrogate unto themselves so great righteousnesse, as that they brag not onely that they haue it themselves, but also giue it unto others. But to conclude this point, let M. Bishop know, that both hee and his fellowes are verie impudent and shamelesse men, thus to wrest the words of the Apostle, to the defense of a doctrine which for aboute a thousand yeeres was neuer heard of in the Church, and which haue out of the ancient Church according to the Scriptures a verie manifest and cleere exposition another way.

5. W. BISHOP.

Now to M. Perkins second reason. In sundrie places (saith he) of Scripture, wee are said to be redeemed, iustified, and saued freely: but this word freely importeth, that wee are saued without doing any thing our selues in that matter of saluation.

Answer. Not so good Sir, for euery in your owne doctrine, it is necessary that ye beleene, and bring forth the fruits of repentance, & that now and then, ye make some short prayers, and receiue the Communion, and doe many other oadde things in that matter of saluation: wherefore the word freely doth not exclude all our working and suffering in that matter.

R. ABBOT.

Those odde things, as this odde companion termeth them, which we require as necessary in the matter of our saluation, are no other but either occasions and affections of seeking & desiring, or meanes of our apprehending and receiuing that saluation which is freely & onely by Iesus Christ. We do not pray to be saued for our prayers sake, nor beleue to be saued for our faiths sake, nor receiue the communion to be saued, or to haue our sinnes forgiven by vertue of our receiuing, but we pray and beleue to haue our sinnes forgiven vs, and to be saued freely for Christes sake, and do receiue the communion for the strengthening of our faith in this beleefe, Christ by the Sacrament offering himselfe vnto vs with the whole benefit of his passion, to be receiued and made ours by faith. As for repentance consisting in the true feeling and acknowledging of our sinnes, whereby we see our selues in our selues to be lost and cast away, it is the motiue and occasion of seeking this saluation in Christ, and freely for his sake, and the fruites of repentance which we require are but the way, as hath bene before shewed, to the full attainement and possession of saluation, which we receiue by him. And further, we acknowledge that our repentance, our faith, our prayer, and whatsoeuer else is in vs towards God, is wholly and altogether of the gift of God, purposing saluation vnto vs of his owne free mercie, and therefore of the same mercie bestowing vpon vs these things which he hath appointed as preparations thereunto: but to our selues, as of our selues, we can challenge no part nor parcell of any of these things. Therefore on our parte nothing hindreth, but that we are said to be redeemed, iustified, and saued freely, that is ^a for nothing, as Master Bishops Masters of Rhemes do giue the signification of the word grauis. But if Master Bishop himselfe had ment to deale here truly and honestly with his Reader, he should not haue dodged in this sort, by talking of vs without answering for himselfe, but should haue made it appeare, how that which he affirmeth can stand with that which the Scripture teacheth. If we be not saued but by interposing our merits for the purchase thereof, how is it said, that we are saued freely, that is, for nothing? how can our sinns be freely forgiven, that a Rhem. Testam. explication of

words in the end.

is.

is, for nothing, when they are not forgiven but upon condition of satisfaction? Satisfaction is the payment of a price, as we have seen before out of Thomas Aquinas. Now to do a thing freely and to do it for price and payment cannot possibly stand together. Therefore M. Perkins argueth rightly: If we satisfie in our owne persons, then are we not saved freely, and if we be saved freely, then we make no satisfaction at all. M. Bishops leisure served him not to answer this point. We know he wanted no good wil, but in hast he was, & must needs be gone, because indeed he knew well, that he could say nothing, but that every child would see his doubling and shifting, and descry him to be a very vaine and wilfull man.

B. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins third reason. We pray daily, Forgiue vs our sins: now to plead pardon, and to satisfie for our sins, are cleane contrarie.

Answer. If our sins be mortall, we craue pardon both of the sin, and the eternall punishment annexed, and do willingly withall satisfie for the temporal paine: as the man who is convicted of high treason, and having both his life, honor, lands and goods, pardoned and restored vnto him, doth very ioyfully indure three moneths imprisonment, and any reasonable fine set on his head. If our sinnes be veniall, then that prayer is a speciall meane, both to obtaine pardon of the fault, and release of all the paine, as witnesseth S. Augustine, saying: That for the daily, short, and light offences, without which this life is not led, the daily prayer of the faithful doth satisfie. And that is not true which M. Perkins adds, that we are taught in that prayer, wholly and only to use the plea of Pardon. For in the same petition, we are taught also to pardon others, euen as we will looke to be pardoned. Againe, if there were only a plea of pardon, it would not serue M. Perkins purpose. For who would say, that within the compasse of the Pater noster, all things necessary to saluation be contained: besides, prayer is one part of satisfaction, as shall be proved hereafter, and so by oft praying for pardon, we may well satisfie for much temporall punishment.

In Enchir c. 71

R. ABBOT.

I pray thee, gentle Reader, that with M. Perkins argument here here propounded and M. Bishops answer to it, thou wilt compare that which M. Bishop himselfe before hath said: Doth not a Pardon (saith he) take away frō the fault pardoned, all bond of punishment due vnto it, and consequently all guiltinesse belonging to it? Who can deny this, vnlesse he know not or care not what he say? Hereby then vnderstand, that M. Bishop here either knoweth not, or careth not what he saith: for that as a man hauing forgotten himself he would make vs beleue, that the pardoning of a fault doth not take away all bond of punishment due vnto it. That which he said before is sensible and cleere to euery mans sight, but that which he saith heere is senselesse and absurd, euen in that very instance whereby he seeketh to make it good. The man who for high treason is but adiudged to short imprisonment and fine, is neuer said to bee pardoned. The prince dealeth graciously with him in not calling him further into question, but to giue him a pardon should be to cut off both imprisonment and fine. And who was there euer in the world before the time of these ranke witted Sophisters, that made that construction that M. Bishop doth of our prayer which we make to God, Forgiue vs our trespasses; as that our meaning therein should bee to say to him, Forgiue vs the sinne, and the eternall punishment, but as touching the temporall punishment, wee are willing and readie to make thee satisfaction for it. When we lye groning vnder the burden of temporall calamities and afflictions, do wee not say vnto God, Forgiue vs our trespasses, and begge of him remission of finnes, to the intent that by forgiveness of finnes we may bee eased of the same burden? The voice of Christ to the sicke of the palsie: b Thy finnes are forgiven thee, doth it not giue him present release from the bond thereof? Dauid saith, c Whilest I held my tongue (from acknowledging and confessing my finnes) my bones were consumed in my mourning all day; for thy hand was heavy vpon mee day and night, and my moisture was turned into the drouth of Summer, I acknowledged my sinne vnto thee, and did not hide mine iniquitie. I thought I will confesse against my selfe my wickednesse vnto the Lord, and thou forgauest the punishment of my sinne. By which words hee giueth vs to vnderstand, that the forgiveness of his finnes vpon his repentance and confession thereof, was the taking away of the grieuous malady wherewith he was so sore afflicted, & vpon experience hereof uttereth those words in the beginning of the

^a Of originall
sinne best. 1.

^b Mat. 9. 2.

^c Psal. 32. 3.

d. Ver. 1.

the Psalm, ^d Blessed is the man whose unrighteousnesse is forgiven, and whose sinne is covered: Blessed is he to whom the Lord imputeth no sinne, as to note that one part of that blessing is to be released from the temporall punishments that are due to sinne. Yea and to that purpose he addeth also after. ^e For this, that is, saith S. Austin, for forgiveness of sinnes, shall every one that is godly make his prayer vnto thee in a time when thou maist be found, surely in the overflowing of many waters they shall not come neere him. Where by many waters he vnderstandeth the manifold crosses & afflictions of this life, wherewith we are tossed to and fro by reason of our sinnes, and signifieth that the godly man by obtaining forgiveness of sinnes, obtaineth deliuerance and freedom from the punishment thereof. Forgiveness of sins then is not vnderstood with reseruatiō of temporall satisfaction, neither doth any thing remaine in the nature of punishment to him that by repentance and faith becommeth partaker of that mercy. As for his distinction of mortall and veniall sinnes applyed to the petition of forgiveness of sinnes, we know no such, neither is any such to be approued, as ^f before hath bene shewed. By Gods hearkening to our prayer all sinnes become veniall; if God heare not our prayer for forgiveness of sinnes, all sinnes continue mortall. Our Saviour Christ knew no such difference as M. Bishop maketh, that God when he heareth vs crying vnto him, Forgive vs our trespasses, doth forgive vs some sinnes wholly, and other some but in part, or that our prayer should be a speciall meane in some sinnes, to obtaine pardon of the fault, and release of punishment, and in other some not so. No, neither did S. Austin euer dreame, that God did forgive sinnes with a reseruatiō of the punishment thereof: hee knew well that forgiveness altereth the case and nature of afflictions, as hath bene before shewed. Maister Bishop citeth him saying, that ^g For the daily, short, and light offences, without which this life is not led, the daily prayer of the faithfull satisfieth. But as he saith so of these daily and light offences, so he saith of other also in the next words: It blotteth out also those from which the life of the faithfull wickedly led, but by repentance changed to better is departed, if as it is truly said, Forgive vs our trespasses, so it be truly said, As we forgive them that trespass against vs that is, if it be done which is said. So then as it satisfieth for the one, so it satisfieth for the other also: as for the lesser, so for the greater, and for both obtaineth

e Ver. 6. Aug. Probac. Pro qua hac pro ipsa venia peccatorum.

f Of iustificati-
on. Sect. 41.

g Aug. Enchir. cap. 71. De quotidiānis, breuibus, leuibusq; peccatis sicut quibus hec vita non ducitur, quo idē oratio fidelium satisficit v. c. Delet omnia hac oratio minima & quotidiana peccata. Delet & illa à quibus vita fidelium scelerat & eorum gesta seiparitero in nobis mutata discendit, si quemadmodum voraciter dicitur. Dimittite vobis, & c. ita veraciter dicitur. scilicet & nos, & c. id est. si fiat quod dicitur.

obtaineth pardon at Gods hands. But Master Bishop here doth merely abuse his Reader by an equivocation of the name of satisfaction. For Satisfaction with Saint Austine, as with all the aucient Ecclesiasticall Writers, importeth the meanes whereby wee are to intreate and obtaine of God pardon and forgiveness of our finnes: but with Master Bishop and his fellowes it importeth a punishment still remaining for sinnes past, and already pardoned, to be endured either in this life, or after death in Purgatorie, as he hath before expressed in the beginning of this Chapter. Saint Austine meaning then is, that the daily prayer of the faithful sufficeth to obtaine pardon at Gods hands for our daily and common trespas-ses, yea and for greater offences also when by repentance and amendment of life we forsake them: but no meaning hath he either that the saying of the Lords prayer, should bee a recompence to God for our trespasses, or that our trespasses being pardoned, there should still remaine a satisfaction to be performed for it. Now here Master Bishop further denieth, that in the Lords prayer we vse onely plea of pardon: for (saith he) we are taught also to pardon others such as we will looke to be pardoned. And what then? what, because we are taught freely to pardon others, shall wee hereupon conceiue, that God is hired by our pardoning others to giue pardon vnto vs? Our Saviour Christ noteth thereby the affect of them to whom it belongeth to vse the plea of pardon: he saith not any thing to be construed to the impeachment and derogation of the freeness of the pardon. Meekenesse and readinesse to forgive, is ^h a fruite of the spirit of adoption, by which we cry Alba Father, in the voice of which spirit only it is, that God hearkneth vnto vs. ^k It is for them to say, Our Father which art in heauen, saith Saint Austine, who now are regenerate and borne againe to such a Father of water and of the holy Ghost. If we speake not by his spirit, our voice is as the voice of strangers, and God giueth no regard vnto it. Therefore our forgiveness of others is not alledged as the cause for which God is moued to forgive vs, but we present it to him as the mark of his spirit, which he hath set vpon vs, & as the token that we are his childre, to whō he hath assigned it for a portio to be made partakers of the forgiveness of sins, & to whō Christ hath ministered comfort & boldnes to pray. His exception is very vaine also: for although the Lords prayer contain not all things necessary to saluation, yet the ^h Gal 5. 22. 23.

ⁱ R. m. d. 15.
^k Aug. Enchir.
 cap. 71. Eorum est
 dicere. Peter no-
 Her. c. qui iam
 in patria regene-
 rati sunt ex aqua & spiritu sancto.

¶ *Tertul. de fuga
in persecut. c. li.
de Orat.
m Auguſt. Epi.
121. cap. 12. Si per omnia precatōnū
ſanctarum verba
deſcuras, quantiū exiſtim. o nihil in-uenies quod non oſta dominice conſineat & con-
cludat oratō.
n Tertul. de Ora.
Breuiarium 10 i-
us Euangelij.*

o Thom. Aquin.
Supp. 9. 13. art.
15 in corp. Opus ſatisfactorium o-
pū et quod ſit pæ-
nale.

praier is the direction of all prayers necessary to ſaluation. Therefore Tertullian calleth it, as he in his manner ſpeaketh, 1 legitimam orationem, the prayer that ſerueth vs for a law of praying: and Auſtin alſo ſaith: m If thou go ouer all the words of holy prayer, thou ſhalt find nothing (as I thinke) which this Lords prayer containeth not. Yea Tertullian doubted not further to affirme, that n it is the breefe ſumme of the whole Goſpell. Now therefore if in the Lords prayer wee aſke forgiuenesse of finnes onely by plea of pardon, then it cannot bee that we ſhould be taught elſewhere to aſke forgiuenesse vpon tender of ſatisfaction, which wholly ouerthrowein the name and nature of forgiuenesse. And ſurely M. Bishops vnderſtanding might affoord him to conceiue, that although the Lords prayer containe not all things necessary to ſaluation, yet that that is there contained, receiueſh no checke from any thing ſpoken otherwhere. As for his laſt exception it is moſt abſurd, that the prayer by which we intreate God not to vrge vs to ſatisfaction, ſhould it ſelfe bee accounted a ſatisfaction, as if we ſaid vnto God, Forgiue vs our tref-paſſe, O Lord, and yet wee do not wiſh thee to forgiue vs altogether freely, and for nothing; for euen by our praying we make thee amends for our trefpaſſe. Satisfaction is defined with them to be ° a puniſhment, and becauſe prayer as M. Bishop telleth vs, is one part of ſatisfaction, we muſt vnderſtā that with them it is a puniſhment to pray, and M. Bishop hauing receiued the penitents confeſ-ſion, and inioyning him a number of Pater noſters, doth enioyne him ſo many puniſhments, and maketh him in effect to ſay vnto God againe, O Lord forgiue me my finnes, and that I may deſerue that fauour at thy hands, I here make thee ſatisfaction and recompence, by enduring this puniſhment of praying to thee. Nay, it is ſcant ſo well: I pray thee, gentle Reader, to marke well the contriuing of this matter. The penitent commeth to M. Bishop, who vp-on his confeſſion giueſh him abſolution of all his ſins, enioyning him for ſatisfaction and penance thus and thus to pray. So then he ſaith, O Lord, my ſins, be forgiuen me already, but yet for a puniſhment, and by way of ſatisfaction I ſay vnto thee, Forgiue vs our trefpaſſes. Theſe are the myſteries of the fornications of the whore of Babylon, things reaſonleſſe, witleſſe, ſenſleſſe, meer witcheries & enchantments of mens minds, ſuch as the very common inſtinct of Chriſtianitie ſhould teach all men to deteſt; to diſcouer them, is ſuf-ficient

ficient to confute them. But of this M. Bishop telleth vs wee shall heere more hereafter.

7. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins fourth Argument is taken out of certain odde fragments of auncient writers.

Guiltines being taken away, the punishment is also taken away. Tertul. de Bapt. pag. 18.
True: he that is guilty of nothing, cannot iustly be punished: for guiltines is a binding vp to punishment (as M. Perkins defineth,) then if the band to punishment be cancelled, the party is freed: but all this is nothing to the purpose, for guiltines of temporal punishment doth remaine after the sin and guilt of eternall be released.

Augustine saith, Christ by taking vpon him the punishment, De verb. Apost. ser. 37.
 and not the fault, hath done away both fault and punishment. Iust: the eternall punishment which was due to that fault, not the temporal: as S. Augustine himselfe declareth: God of compassion doth blot out our sinnes committed, if conuenient satisfaction be not on our parts neglected. In Enchir. cap. 70.

To that other sentence out of him: When wee are gone out of this world, there will remaine no compunction or satisfaction, it is easie to answer without the helpe of any new edition: for it will be too late then to repent, and so there is no place left to compunction, that is, contrition of heart: neither consequently to confession or satisfaction: as if hee had said, before wee go out of this world there is place for both compunction and satisfaction: and so that place is rather for vs.

Now to Chrysostome, who saith, That God so blottereth out our sins, that there remaines no print of them: which thing befalls not the body: for when it is healed, there remaineth a scarre; but when God exempteth from punishment, hee giues thee iustice. 1^o Tim. 10. hem. 5. Prem in. Esa.
All this is most true, and much against M. Perkins doctrine of the infection of originall sin, but nothing touching satisfaction: for we hold, that the soul of a sinner when he commeth to be iustified, is washed whiter then snow: so that there is no staine or print left in it of the filth of sin. It also freed frō all eternall punishment, but not from some temporall. Now gentle Reader, prepare thy selfe to behold a proper peece of cosinage Ambros. saith I reade of Peter steares, but I reade not of his satisfaction. Luk. 22

low of the craft lieth in the ambiguity of this word, satisfaction, which is not alwaies taken for the penance done to satisfie for the former fault, but is sometimes used for the defence and excuse of the fact. So speaketh S. Paul, Bono animo pro me satisfaciam, with good courage I will answer in defence of my self, or give you satisfaction: in like manner, Ready alwaies to satisfie every one that asketh you reason of that hope which is in you. In this sence doth S. Ambrose use the word, as is most plainly to be seene to them that read the place and confer it with the very like of his, I find not (saith he) what Peter said, but I find that he wept: I reade his teares, but J reade not his satisfaction: but that which cannot be defended, may be washed away. So that nothing is more manifest, then that satisfaction in this and the like places is take for defence and excuse of his fault, which Peter used not, but sought by teares and bitter weeping to satisfie in part for it: for this bewailing of our sinnes is one speciall kind of satisfaction, as S. Ambrose testifieth, saying, That he who doth penance, must with teares wash away his sinnes. The other place cited of S. Ambrose, De bono mortis, let vs adore Christ, that he may say vnto vs, feare not thy sinnes, nor the waues of worldly sufferings, I haue remission of sinnes, is rather for vs then against vs: for if by adoring and seruing of God we may be put out of feare of our sins and the punishment of them, then doth it follow, that prayers and such like seruice of Christ, doth acquit vs of sinne, and satisfie for the paine due to them.

Aq. 24. 10.

1. Pet. 3.

Lib. 10. in Luc.

Lib. 2. de penit.
cap. 5.

Is P salm. 31.

Hierome saith. The sinne that is couered, is not seen; not being seene, it is not imputed; not being imputed, it is not punished.

Ans. To wit, with hell fire: which is the due punishment of such mortall sin wher of he speaketh: or sin may be said to be couered, when not onely the fault is pardoned, but all punishment also due vnto it is fully payd.

Lib. 2. de penit.
cap. 5.

So doth S. Ambrose take that word couered saying, The Prophet calleth both them blessed, as well him whose iniquities is forgiven in Baptisme, as him whose sinnes are couered with good workes. For he that doth penance, must not onely wash away his sins with teares, but also with better workes couer his former sins, that they be not imputed vnto him.

Hom. 44. sup.
Matth.

Now we must backe againe vnto Chrysostome, belike he had forgotten this when he cited the other, or else this was reserved to strike it dead. He saith, Some men endure punishment in this life and in the

the life to come: others in this life alone: others alone in the life to come: other neither in this nor in the life to come: there alone as Dives, here alone as the incestuous Corinthian: neither here nor there, as the Apostles and Prophets, as also Iob and the rest of this kind, for they endured no sufferings for punishment, but that they might be knowne to be conquerers of the fight.

Answer. Such excellent holy personages sufferings as are mentioned in the Scriptures, were not for their sins; for they committed but ordinary light offences, for which their ordinary deuotions satisfied abundantly. The great persecutions which they endured, were first to manifest the vertue and power of God, that made such fraile creatures so invincible: then to daunt the aduersaries of his truth, and wishall to animate and encourage his followers. Finally, that they like conquerers, triumphing ouer all the torments of this life, might enter into possession of a greater reward in the Kingdome of heauen. All this is good doctrine, but nothing against satisfaction, that their surpassing sufferings were not for their owne sinnes. And thus much in answer vnto M. Perkins arguments against satisfaction.

R. ABBOT.

Against his answer to the words of Tertullian, I must vrge his owne words in the section before alledged, Doth not a pardon take away from the fault pardoned all bond of punishment due vnto it, and consequently all guiltinesse belonging to it? Who can denie this, vlesse hee know not or care not what he say? Now then put these together. Tertullian saith, The guilt being taken away, the punishment is also taken away. But the pardoning of a sinne saith M. Bishop, taketh away all guiltinesse belonging to it. Therefore consequently it taketh away all the punishment: for where there is no guilt, no punishment can bee. Yes saith M. Bishop, guiltinesse of temporall punishment doth remaine after the sinne and guilt of eternall bee released. But then a pardon doth not take away all the guiltinesse of sinne, as before he saith it doth. Oportet mendacem esse memorem: A lyer must bear a braine. Againe, wee would know some ground wheretupon we may be assured that sinne hath two kinds of guilt; for wee conceiue but one onely guilt whereby the sinner is guilty of all, both temporall and eternal punishments. Otherwise wee may wish as good warrant affi. me guilt of infinite sorts; one whereby a man is guilty of burning, another wherby he is guilty of drowning, another for the gowt, another for the palsie, and for every seuerall punishment a seuerall guilt; & that there may be a remitting of one of these guilts, & yet a retaining of the other. If M. Bishop take this to be absurd, he must giue vs leaue to take him for an absurd man in thus seuering the guilt of temporall and eternall punishments. Yea and this assertiō of his is the denying of that that in the ground of this question is supposed and confessed. For if the sinne be past and pardoned, as he saith at first, how remaineth there any guilt? for what is the pardoning of a sinne but the remitting of the guilt? The guilt is a bond, whereby wee stand bound to punishment; the forgiuing of the sinne, what is it but the releasing or loosing of this bond? If the bond be released, why doth he affirme that we are bound still? or if we be still bound, why doth he affirme the loosing of the bond? If he will say that the bond is partly released, and partly standeth still, then let him say, the sinne in part is pardoned, but not wholly, and then let him shew vs what warrant he hath, that God in that sort forgiueth sins by patches and peeces, which because hee cannot do, let him giue vs leaue to take him for that that he sheweth himselfe to be.

Tertul. de bapt. i: i: s: o. Exemptio reat u extimur & p: 242.

The words of Austin are meerey deluded with the same shift. b Christ (saith he) by taking vpon him, the punishment, and not taking vpon him the fault, hath done away both the fault and the punishment. Iust. saith M. Bishop, the eternall punishment, not the temporall. But how doth hee warrant this limitation in one part of the sentence which cannot be iustified in the other? Where it is said that Christ hath taken vpon him the punishment; it is vnderstood of our punishment both temporall and eternall, though that which should haue bene eternall to vs, by the infinit power of his Godhead was overcome and made temporall to him. Was it S. Austins meaning then to say, that Christ hauing taken vpon him our whole punishment, hath deliuered vs only from a part, and left the rest to be satisfied by our selues? Surely what Christ tooke vpon him for vs, from the same he deliuered vs. He tooke vpon him our temporall punishments: therefore hee hath taken away our temporall punishments, so that they remaine not in the nature of punishments

but

b Aug. de verb. Dom ser. 37 Suscipiendo panam & non suscipiendo culpam deluit & panam.

but of medicines, to them that haue obtained forgiveness of finnes by faith in him. That the mediation of Christ extendeth to the remitting of temporall punishments, I haue shewed^c before, and therfor need not stand here any longer to confute this improbable and vnlikely glose. As for the place of Austine which he alledgeth for colouring hereof, it hath his answer in the former section, being the next words to those that are cited there. ^d God hath giuento no man a freedome to sinne, albeit the finnes that are already committed he in mercie blotteih out, if conuenient satisfaction be not neglected. Here is satisfaction first, and thereupon the blotting out of sinne, but M. Bishop telleth vs of the blotting out of sinne first, and of a satisfaction required after. Why doth he wilfully abuse his Reader, to make shew of prouing that to which he alledgeth nothing? The thing that he should proue is, that God remitting the sinne and the eternall punishment, doth reserue the making of a temporall satisfaction, and he bringeth in Austine requiring conuenient satisfaction for the remitting of the sinne. His argument then if we will frame it, must be this; We must vse conuenient satisfaction vnto God for the obtaining of the forgiveness of our finnes. Therefore after that our finnes be forgiven vs, we are still to make a temporall satisfaction vnto God; which if it be not a good one, we may take him to be starke naught. Of the name of satisfaction I shall speake further in the last section; here it is enough briefly to obserue, that the conuenient satisfaction spoken of by Saint Austine is no conuenient argument for Popish satisfaction. The other place cited from him, is a flat deniall of satisfaction after this life. ^e When we are gone out of this world, there will not remaine any compunction or satisfaction. M. Bishop saith, that there remaineth satisfaction though there remaine no compunction; but S. Austine saith, there remaineth neither compunction nor satisfaction. But although M. Bishops whole drift tend to that that I haue sayd, yet I wish thee gentle Reader, to obserue here how pretily he circumuenteth himselfe. After this life (saith he) there is no place left to compunction, that is, contrition of heart, neither consequently to confession of satisfaction. If because there is no place for compunction in this life, therefore there be no satisfaction after this life, why doth he tell vs in the beginning that after this life there is satisfactio to be made in purgatory if we die before we haue fully satisfied here?

^c Sect. 2 & 3:^d August. Enchirid. cap. 70. Nemini deditur laxamentum peccandi quamuis miserando delectam facta peccata, si non satisfactio congrua negligatur.^e Homil. 5. Cum de hoc seculo transierimus, nulla compunctio vel satisfactio remanebit. Some read, vel aliqua satisfactio, which must be resolu'd thus, Non ulla compunctio vel satisfactio aliqua remanebit, or else the diuision leaueth place to compunction and repentance after this life, which opinion Austine there inuicteth against, and M. Bishop himselfe here discouereth.

why do they make men beleue, that for the dead satisfaction may be made by them that are aliue? There is satisfaction, he saith, after this life, and he saith there is no satisfaction after this life, and thus indeed knoweth not what to say. But yet he telleth vs, that S. Austine thereby acknowledgeth that before we go out of this world, there is place both for compunction & satisfaction, & so that place (saith he) is rather for vs. Wel, but what he gaineth in the scabberd, he loseth double in the dagger. If Purgatory sink into hell, they are in a wooll case. It is Purgatory satisfaction specially that they haue their liuing by. Now against Purgatory satisfaction he giueth vs this argument: where there is no place for compunction, there is no place for satisfaction. But in purgatory there is no place for compunction. Therefore there is no place now left for Purgatory satisfaction. As for satisfaction in this life, in such sort as S. Austine speaketh of it, we denie it not. Satisfaction is nothing else with him but true repentance, as shall be shewed hereafter; and we preach repentance, not according to the illusiōs of Popery, but according to the truth of the word of God.

Chrysof. de pœnit. hom. 3. Neque mihi dixeris, per multum peccari, quomodo saluari possim? Tu nequis, sed Dominus tuus potest, atque ita potest; ut tua delectat peccata. Sic enim delet peccata Deus, ut neque eorum uel stigma maneat. In corporibus quidem id non est: a. sed quatenus nullies conetur medicus cicatrix remonet: Deus autem sic delet ut neque cicatrix neque cicatricis super sit indicium, non vestigium quodquam, sed post pœnē liberationem & iustitiam uerit, & peccatū consequi ulem facit non peccanti. Extinguit enim peccatum atque id non esse facit nec fuisse.

Aug. de nupt. & concup. lib. 1. cap. 26. Eorum peccatorum que manere non possunt, quoniam cum sunt preterunt, reatus tantum manet. Sic. Reus est donec reatus ipse indiget remissionē.

The next words are cited out of Chrysofome, for which is noted Proem in Esaiam. Others citing the same work, do set downe what they cite, as ex Hypomnemise in Esaiam. But the words are by my copy in his third homily de pœnitentia, and they do indeed irrefragably ouerthrow M. Bishops satisfactions. Say not unto me, I haue sinned: how shall I be freed from so many sinnes? Thou canst not, but thy God can: yea and he will so blot out thy sinnes, that there shall remaine no print of them. Which thing befalls not the body, for when it is healed, there remaines a scarre, but God so blotteth out sinnes, as that there remaineth no scarre nor token of scarre, no print or signe at all, but after deliuerance from punishment he giueth thee iustice, and maketh the sinner equall to him that hath not sinned, for he extinguisheth sinne & maketh it not to be, yea as if it had neuer bene. Which words are apparently spoken of actuall sinnes, & The act whereof is past, as S. Austine saith, with the time wherein they are done, but the guilt remaineth, till by pardon it be remitted. Now God so remiteth it, saith Chrysofom, as that no print thereof remaineth. If no print thereof remaine, if it be as if it had neuer bene, how doth M. Bishop then teil vs, that after forgiuenesse there remaineth still a guilt of temporall punishment? This is the point; why did he not answer to it? why doth he turne his speech from actual sinnes whereof the place is meant, to originall sinne whereof it cannot be meant? because though he tell vs that originall sinne remaineth not, yet he cannot denie but that some scarre or signe thereof remaineth in the concupiscence of the flesh. But Chrysostome denieth the remaining of any scar or signe, which can no otherwise be true but onely in actual sinnes wherof nothing but the guilt remaineth, and which by remission is perfectly done away. But that originall sinne, though the guilt be remitted, yet as touching the corruption continueth still, hath bene sufficient shewed before in the handling of that question.

As touching the place of Ambrose, I will not gainsay that which M. Bishop answereth. Ambrose saith as M. Perkins alledgeth, ^h I h Ambrosii in Luc. lib. 10. cap. 22. Lachrymas eius lego, satisfactionem non lego. reade of Peters tears, but his satisfaction I reade not: but satisfaction is not there taken in that meaning whereof we speake. He meaneth indeed that he vseth no apology, no excuse or answer for himselfe, but yeelded himselfe with teares to the acknowledgment of that that he hath done amisse. The word of satisfactiō is here very vnproperly vsed, and therefore may very easily be mistaken, without any purpose of cosinage or fraud. I might as well obiect cosinage here to M. Bishop, who taking vpon him to make good his answer by another place of Ambrose, alledgeth for another place the very same which M. Perkins cited. But Ambrose hath the words indeed in another place in one of his ^l sermons, and therefore we will not charge M. Bishop here with cosinage, there being other wise euery while occasions enow to discover him to be a cosiner. As for that which he saith, that Peter sought by tears and bitter weeping to satisfy in part for his fault, we take him to deale very absurdly in that he should go about to make the Apostle so absurd, as to thinke the shedding of a few teares to be any part of the redemption of so great a sinne. The Apostles teares were no part of Popish satisfaction, but the tokens of true repentance, lamenting the wound, but seeking the cure onely in the satisfaction of the crosse of Christ. As for that which he alledgeth from Ambrose. that ^k he that repenteth must wish his tears wash away his sin: he needed not for that phrase to haue gone so far, he might haue found it in the places ^l before alledged. But he spake therein as we many times do, not as thinking the teares of the bodie to be the washing away of the finnes of the soule, but as to note that the weeping and teares of faith

^l Ser. 46. Lachrymas eius lego, satisfactionem non lego. Ne tē planē Petrus stetit et tæxur, quia quod deseri solet, non solet excusari.

^k De penit. 86. 2. cap. 5. Qui penitentiam agit, non solum diluere lacrymas debet peccatum suum, sed etiam. &c.

^l In Luc. lib. 10. cap. 22. Lachrymas delictuum quod uice pudor est confiteri: Et idem habes ser. 46.

do obtaine of God the washing away of our finnes in the bloud of Jesus Christ. In the other place S. Ambrose saith thus : Let vs seeke Christ in our last times, let vs embrace his feete, and worship him, that he may say vnto vs, Feare not: that is, feare not for the sins & iniquities of the world; feare not for the waues of bodily sufferings, I am the forgiuenesse of finnes. So long as there is necessity of punishment, especially such aⁿ hellish punishment as they say is in Purgatory, so long there is iust cause of feare. But S. Ambrose telleth vs heere, that Christ by forgiuenesse of finnes taketh away all occasion of feare; that in our finnes and iniquities hee leaueth vs nothing to be afraid of. It followeth therefore, that after forgiuenesse of finnes there is no further punishment, no further satisfaction to be made. Heere M. Bishop againe putteth off his Reader with a dodge: If (saith he) by adoring and seruing of God wee may bee put out of feare of our finnes and the punishment of them, then do. h it follow that prayers and such like seruice of Christ doth acquite vs of sin, and satisfie for the paine due to them. Which is as leaden an answer as if a man should say, If by intreating & praying the Physicion I obtaine of him a medicine whereby I am cured, then my intreating and praying is the very medicine it selfe by which I am cured. For what do we seeke Christ, worship him, embrace him, desire him, pray vnto him, but to be releued, succoured, comforted and saued by him, that in him we may haue satisfaction and remission of our finnes? What madnesse is it then to make our seeking, our worshipping, our praying, to be themselves the satisfaction that we profess to seeke in him? But such madnesse doe they runne into, who will not submit their right mindes to the obedience of the faith of Christ. In the next place followeth Hierome. That which is couered, is not seene; that which is not seene, is not imputed; that which is not imputed is not punished. He speaketh it for exposition of the words of Dauid, Blessed is the man whose vnrightheousnesse is forgiven, and whose sinne is couered; blessed is he to whom the Lord imputeth no sinne. Now if the forgiuing of sinne be not the impuring of sinne, then where sinne is forgiuen, there is no punishment, because there is no imputation of that to which the punishment is due. That which is not imputed, is not punished. To wit, saith M. Bishop, with hell fire. But that answer will not setue his turne: for if it be any way punished, it cannot be said not to be imputed: for whence ariseth the punishment

^m De bono mortis. cap. 12. Nos enim in temporum sine queramus, et conplectamur pedes eius, & adremus eum, ut dicat & nobis, Nolite timere, id est, nolite timere à peccatis seculari, nolite timere ab iniquitatibus mundi, nolite timere à fluctibus corporalium passionum; ego sum peccatorum remissio.

ⁿ Bellar. de penit. lib. 4. cap. 1. Penitentia que luenda restat post culpæ remissionem est illa ipsa penitentia quam in gehenna pati debuit peccator, remota soliditate eternitatis.

^o Hieron. in Psal. 31. Quod regitur non videtur: quod non videtur, non imputatur: quod non imputatur nec punietur. ^p Psal. 32. 1.

but from the imputation of the sinne? Now of not imputing S. Au- stine telleth vs, that when sinne is not impued, a man is taken as if he had neuer done it So saith S. Bernard, that what soeuer God hath de- termined not to impute, it is as if it had neuer bene. If it be as if it had neuer bene, if a man be taken as if he had neuer done it, how then doth M. Bishop tell vs, that there is still a satisfaction and punishment to be enduted for it? But therefore he bringeth vs another answer, such as for which he deserueth to be admired for a wise & well learned man. Sinne may be said to be couered when not onely the fault is pardoned, but also all punishment due vnto it is fully payed. So then whereas in brieffe Hierome saith, The sinne that is couered, is not punished: his meaning must be, that it is not couered till it be fully punished: nay he is made directly to contradict himselfe, & to say, The sinne that is punished, is not punished. Would not a man thinke him to be out of his right wits that maketh such wrong constructions of plaine words? As for the words of Ambrose which he bringeth in, what is there in them concerning punishment after the pardon of the fault? He speaketh of covering former sinnes with bet- ter workes, but of covering them with punishment he saith nothing. And as for that which he saith, though at large it may be construed well enough, yet according to the exact truth of Scripture it is vntrue, namely that sinnes are vnderstood there to be coue- red with good workes, as is plaine by that the Apostle witnesseth, that the Prophet in that place describeth the blessednesse of the man to whom the Lord imputeth righteousnesse without workes. But the true covering of sinne is that which S. Bernard speaketh of, when in one place he saith that the loue of the Father, and in another place that the righteousnesse of Christ couereth the multitude of our sins.
 And of those words of Dauid, it shall be worth the while to heare what Saint Austine saith, and to consider how well M. Bishops answer accordeth therewith. Because all is imputed to grace (saith he) and not to our merit, blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven and whose sinnes are couered. Not in whome no sins are found, but whose sinnes are couered. They are couered, they are hidden, they are abols-hed. If God haue couered sinnes, hee looketh not on them; if he looke not on them, he mindeth them not; if he mind them not, he will not punish them he will take no knowledge of them, he chuseth rather to forgiue them. If forgiuencesse of sinnes be such, as that God thence-

9. Aug. in Psal.
 118 Si quid a de-uisioe commisi-
 tor. propter uiam non imputatur. Et tanquam non su-
 erit: operatus ac-
 cipitur.

1 Bern. in Cant.
 ser. 23. Omne quod
 mihi ipse non im-
 putare deuenit,
 sic est quasi non fuerit.

1 Rom. 4. 6.

1 Bernar. in Cant.
 ser. 23. Charitas
 patris ipsorum con-
 operit multos: da-
 nem peccatorum.

2 Ibid. serm. 61.
 Iustitia tua in me
 operit multitudine
 nem peccatorum.

3 Aug. in Psal.

31. Quia totum
 gratis imputatur
 non meritis nostris
 beati quorum, & enou in quibus non sunt: inuenta pec-
 cata sed quorum
 reuera sunt peccata Cooperata sunt, re-
 dita sunt: aboluta sunt. Si tunc pec-cata Deum, noluit
 aduertere; si noluit aduertere, noluit
 re: aduertere: et si
 si noluit aduertere, noluit: noluit pun-
 ire: no: agnoscere, maluit ignos-
 cere.

foorth loketh not on them, mindeth them not, taketh no knowledge of them, punisheth them nor, let vs know that that which M. Bishop saith is an vntruth, that hee still reserueth sharp & seuer punishment both in this life and in the life to come to bee inflicted for them.

The force of the saying of Chrystome which is the last, standeth in this, that he denieth that the Apostles, and Prophets, and holy men endured their sufferings for punishments, but that they might be known to be conquerors in the fight. The place sheweth that the afflictions of the righteous and faithfull haue not the nature of punishments, but lie vpon them for other respects, & therefore not being in the nature of punishments, they cannot be accounted for satisfactions. M. Bishop answereth, that they were no punishments for their owne finnes. And why? for they (saith he) committed but ordinary light offences, for which their ordinary deuotions satisfied abundantly. A very dapper, but a verie sond speech of a remorselesse man, whose heart yet hath neuer felt what the burden of sinne is. Good Lord, how lightly doth he trip ouer with ordinary light offences! Surely the redeeming of those light offences required the shedding of the bloud of the Sonne of God; & is it so lightly to be skipped ouer, for which the Sonne of God shed his most precious bloud? Tulli, saith M. Bishop, their ordinary deuotions did abundantly satisfie for their sins. Belike they were proud hearted as he is: they would not be beholding to God, they would not die in his debt; what they owed him they would pay themselues for themselues, being rich enough, and well able to discharge all. But will he make those holy men as very fooles as himselfe, that they neither knew God or themselues, but would thinke their ordinarie deuotions to be sufficient satisfaction for their sins? No, no, they knew well that after all their deuotions they stood in need of Gods mercy, that they had still to cry, Forgiue vs our debts, Enter not into iudgement with vs: that all their merites were but drosse, and all their satisfactions were but dung if they were opposed against the iudgment of God, as to shield them from their sins. But M. Bishop yet addeth more: It is nothing against satisfactions, that their surpassing sufferings were not for their own sins. And why? because we must vnderstand forsooth, that though they were not satisfactions for their owne finnes, yet they were so for other mens, and in that respect are called surpassing, as namely exceeding ceeding the measure of their owne sins. This is that impious monster of Romish apostasie, whereby they have put the Saints in Christs place, and taught men to seek for that redemption in them which they shou'd seeke for and find in him alone. But we would gladly know of M. Bishop, where those surpassing sufferings of Iob and of the Prophets and other holy Saints of old were layd, before the storehouse was built at Rome? what vse were they put to? who was the dispencer and disposer of them? What, was there a Pope then also to send pardons flying about the world to fetch one soule out of Purgatory for the surpassing sufferings of another? Or shal we think that they lay idle al that while, that the whole haruest of the world towards the end of the world might be brought together into the Popes barnes? The high Priest of the Iewes was ouerseene, that he did not take vpon him to be Pope of Jerusalem, for of these surpassing sufferings he might haue raised much thrist. Wicked cariuues, that thus delude men with blasphemous tales and lies, who thus defile the innocent bloud of the Sonne of God, by mingling with it the leprous and corrupted bloud of sinfull men. They all thought wholly and onely to be redeemed by Christ, and must we thinke now in part to be redeemed by them? They knew themselues by their finnes guiltie of eternall suffering; and must we now thinke their sufferings to be beyond their sinne? But against this blasphemie, sufficient hath bene said before; albeit it is in it selfe so grossly impious and loathsome, as that the very mention of it is enough to make all Christian hearts to detest them that are the teachers of it.

8. W. BISHOP:

Now to the reasons which he produceth for it. And albeit he like an enill master of the camp, range our arguments out of order, placing that in the forefront of our side, which Caluin presseth out against vs, yet wil I admit of it, rather then brake his order.

1. Moses according to Gods commandement prescribed seuerall sacrifices for the sins of seuerall persons, and ordained that they should be of greater and lesser prices, according vnto the diuersitie of the finnes. Whence we argue thus: These mans faults upon their true repentance, ioyned with faith and hope in Christ to come, were pardoned; Therefore their charges in buying of sacrifices to be offered for them.

their

Li. 3. in his 2. cap.
4. num. 29.

Leui. 1. 5. 6.

their paines and prayers in assisting, during the time of the sacrifice, being painful works done to appease Gods iustice, were works of satisfactiō.

M. Perkins answereth many things, as men do commonly when they cannot well tell what they say directly to the purpose: First, that those sacrifices were types of Christs suffering on the crosse: what is this to the purpose? Secondly, that those sacrifices were satisfactions to the congregation: and what needed that, when they had offended God onely, and not the congregation, as in many offences it happeneth? Againe, if satisfaction must be given to the congregation, how much more reason is it that it be made to God? Reade those Chapters, and you shall finde that they were principally made to obtaine remission of God, as these words Leuit. 4. ver. 20. also do witness: And vpon that sacrifice, the sinne shall be forgiven them. So that sacrifices were to satisfie God, who thereupon forgave the sinne, and all paine due to it.

R. ABBOT.

*M. Bishop belike had no great conceit of this argument of theirs, and therefore was angry that M. Perkins should disgrace them by putting it in the first place. If fauouredly it is propounded, and if fauouredly maintained, but yet such learning it is, as he with great paines hath brought from Rome. The foundation that he layeth is a lie, and the building that he setteth vpon it, a ridiculous consequence. He telleth vs, that Moses prescribing by the commaundement of God seuerall sacrifices for seuerall persons, did ordaine that they should be of greater & lesser prices, according to the diuersity of the finnes. But where is that ordinance? why doth he not exemplifie that which he saith? where do we finde in Moses law, that for such or such a sinne, greater or lesse, shall be offered a sacrifice of such or such greater or lesser price? Surely he is little acquainted himselfe in Moses law, and some Register or other gaue him a gudgeon at Rome, and made him belecue that the Popes Taxa pœnitentiaria, whereby euery sinne is rated at a certaine price, was framed according to the same law of Moses, and according to the prices of the sacrifices prescribed therein. We reade there indeed of diuers sacrifices, as in finnes of ignorance ^a for the Priest a yong bullocke, ^b for the whole congregation the same; ^c for a ruler a he goate; for any of ^d the people a she goate; ^e for any consecrate thing by error withholden*

^a Leuit. 4. 3.

^b Ver. 14.

^c Ver. 22. 23.

^d Ver. 28.

^e Chap. 5. 15.

a ramme of two shekels; ^f for other trespassse against holy things ignorantly done, the same; for ^B sinne wittingly committed, the same f Ver. 18.
g Chap. 6.6.
 also; for the high ^h Priests yearly offering for himself and his house, h Chap. 16.3. a bullocke and a ramme; and for the whole people ⁱ two hee goats and i Ver. 5.
 a ramme. This duerficie we reade, and some few other such like, but of sacrifices of greater or lesser price, according to the diuersity of the finnes, we reade nothing, it is a thing that Moses and Aaron neuer knew. Well, let that go, let vs see what argument hee hath framed against vs. These mens faults (saith he) upon their true repen- tance, ioyned with faith and hope in Christ, were pardoned. Therefore their charges in buying of sacrifices, their pains and prayers in assisting during the time of the sacrifice, being painefull workes, done to appease Gods iustice, were workes of satisfaction. O what paines heere was for the appeasing of Gods iustice, to stand by and pray whilest the sacrifice was offering! Such cruell paines doth M. Bishop impose vpon his penitents for their sweet sins, that a man may sweare they are the worse for it all their life after. Vaine man, was this a paines to be spoken of, for the satisfying and appealing of the iustice of God for sinne? But to let this passe, if ^k the honest man, of whom M. Bishop hath spoken before, should out with a little Latin, k Of the cer-ra ney of saluati-
 on. sect. 2.
 and tell him here, M. Doctor, negatur argumentum, how foully wold he be grauelled, and so set at a Non plus, that he could not tell which way to turne him? What, because they that offered the sacrifice with true repentance in the faith of Christ were pardoned, doth it therefore follow that their charges and their paines were the sa-tisfactio for their sins? The honest man would tell him, good sir, you erre by assigning a wrong cause; for it was not for his charges and his paines that he was pardoned, but for his faith in Christ. He laid not his hand vpon himselfe, as to lay his sinne vpon himselfe, but ^l he layd it vpon the head of the dumb beast, as in figure of Iesus Christ, l Lem. 1.4. m Esa. 53.6.
^m upon whom the Lord would lay the iniquities of vs all. Therefore his sacrifice, if hee offered it aright, was onely a profession of the hope of redemption by Christ, & he was thereby instructed in him alone to expect full satisfaction and forgiuencesse of his finnes. Now thus in effect M. Perkins answered him, and hee reciting the answer by halues, asketh, What is this to the purpose? Very much it is against his purpose, if in the sacrifices themselues there were nothing else but a direction to seeke satisfaction in Iesus Christ. ⁿ The Law had n Heb. 10.2

the shadow of good things to come, and not the (liuely or substantiall) image of the things themselves. Therefore no satisfaction indeed, but onely a shadow of satisfaction to come was to bee found therein. For ° it was vnpossible that the bloud of buls and goats should take away sin. And therefore the Law was ^p abolished for the weaknesse and vnprofitablenesse of it. How should it be said to be weake, or why should it be called vnprofitable, if satisfaction for sins were to be found in it? Albeit in some meaning M. Perkins acknowledgeth in them a satisfaction, not to God, but to the Church of God, as testimonies of their repentance, and of their desire to bee reconciled to God and men. What needed that, saith M. Bishop, when they had offended God onely, and not the congregation, as in many offences it happeneth? I answer him, that because all men are sinners, euery man was by these sacrifices to giue acknowledgment thereof as touching himselfe, and to shew his care to be reconciled to God, either for publike or priuate offences, whereby hee had with Achan prouoked Gods wrath against his people as well as against himselfe. Vpon the doing whereof, men were accounted to the Church and with men, as sanctified and cleansed from their sinnes, and no exception was to be taken against their ioyning themselves to the Church. And therefore for warrant of this distinction the Scripture teacheth, that those sacrifices did ^a sanctifie as touching the purifying of the flesh, that is, outwardly to men, but ^r to sanctifie the conscience, to acquit the conscience of siones, it reserueth as a thing peculiar to the bloud of Christ. But, saith M. Bishop, if satisfaction must bee giuen to the congregation, how much more reason is it that it bee made to God? True, but what are we sinfull wretches, that we should think that any thing that we can doe should bee a satisfaction to him for sinne? But much more absurd are we to think, that the offering of a bruite creature should bee any part of the redemption thereof. Our satisfaction therefore is not any thing that wee do or can doe, but it is onely the pleading of a satisfaction payed for vs in the bloud of Christ. Yet he still vrgeth, that sacrifices were to satisfie God, because it is said, that upon the sacrifice the sinne shall bee forgiven. But I haue already answered him, that it was forgiven not for the sacrifice sake, but for Christs sake, whom the offerer was to vnderstand therein. And we know, that of Sacraments vsually those effects are spoken which properly belong to those things whereof to Ver. 4. p Chap. 7. 18.

q Heb. 9. 13.
r Ver 9. 14. &
Chap. 10. 1. 2.

whereof they are sacraments. It is rightly said by Tertullian, that God in these sacrifices required not the things which were done, but that for which they were done. And therefore as Origen saith, as touching the high Priests standing forth to appease the wrath of God, when the Angell was gone forth to bee the executioner thereof, The destroying Angell would not have bashed at the high Priests garments made of purple, and wool, and silke, but he understood these garments that should bee of the great high Preiest (Iesus Christ) and to them he yeelded; euen so we are to conceiue that the wrath of God was no whit nor in any sort pacified by those sacrifices for the things themselues that were done therein, but hee respected in them the blood and sacrifice of his onely begotten Sonne, and thereto was content to yeeld him selfe satisfied & appeased towards them that offered with faith in him.

Tertul contra Marc lib. 3. Non que fiebant exigens sed propter quod fiebant.
Origen in Num. lib. 9. Neque enim indumenta Pontificis purpura et lana et bysso contexta eruitisset Angelus ille uasicator, sed ista qua futura erant induerunt magna Pontificis intelligentia et cessit.

9 W. BISHOP.

The reason for vs (which indeed is the very groundwork of satisfaction) may thus be framed: many after pardon obtained of their sins, haue had temporall punishment layed upon them for the same sinnes, and that by Gods owne order: wherefore after the forgiuenesse of the sin, and the eternall punishment of it through Christs satisfaction, there remaineth some temporall paine, to be endured by the party himselfe for the same sin, which is most properly that which we call satisfaction. They denie that any man hath bene punished temporally for any sin which was once pardoned: wee proue it first by the example of the Israelites, whose murmuration against God, was at Moses intercession pardoned; yet all the elder sort of them, who had seen the miracles wrought in Egypt for their deliuerance, were by the sentence of God deprived of the sight of the land of promise, and punished with death in the wilderness for the very same their murmuration. The like iudgement was giuen against Moses himselfe and Aron, for not glorifying God at the waters of contradiction: both of them had their sin pardoned, yet were they both afterward for the same debarred from the entrance into the holy land.

Numb. 24.

*Numb. 30.
D. ut. 32.*

To this M. Perkins answereth, first, that a man must bee considered in a twofold estate, as he is under the Law, and as hee is under grace. In the former estate all afflictions were curses of the Law; in the latter, they they are turned unto the that beleue in Christ, from curses into trials, corrections, preuentions, admonitions, instructions, and into what you will else, sauing satisfaction. Now to the purpose. Whereas God (saith hee) denied the beleeuing Isralites, with Moles and Aaron, to enter into the land of Canaan, it cannot be proved that it was a punishment or penaltie of the law laid vpon them: the Scripture hath no more but that it was an admonition vnto all ages following, to take heede of like offences, as Paul writeth, All these things came vnto them for examples, and were written for our admonition.

1. Cor. 10.

Reply. He that will not be ashamed of this audacious assertion, needs not to care what he saith. Hath the Scripture no more of their fact, then that it was an admonition to others? Turne to the original places, where the whole matter in particular is related: First their murmuration then Moles intercessiō for them, and the obtaining of their pardon, & lastly after all the rest, Gods sentence of deprivation of them from entering into the land of promise, for that their murmuration. Again, Aron shal not enter into the land, because he hath bin disobedient to my voice: and of Moles, Because he hath trespassed against me at the waters of strife. So that nothing is more cleare, euen by the testimony of the holy Ghost, then that their daies were shortened, and their hope of entrance into the land of promise cut off, in punishment of those offences, which wer before forgien them. And these things being recorded, as S. Paul testifieth, for our admonition and instruction, we are to learne thereby, that God so dealeth daily with all those sinners that he calleth to repentance.

Numb. 14.
Num. 20. Ve. 24.
Deut. 32. 51.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop here maketh a hot and a long haruest, and all his corne will not yeeld him so much as one morsell of bread. He telleth vs that the argument which he here handleth is the very ground worke of satisfaction: now if the ground work faile, we may be wel assured that the building cannot stand. We deny indeed that any affliction or iudgement of God hath lien vpon any faithful man in the nature and condition of a punishment after the forgiuenesse of his sinne. The things themselues, which in their owne nature are punishments, and at the first are inflicted in that nature, yet the sinne being forgien, lose that nature, and become onely trials, preuentions, admonitions, instructions; neither do we therein conceiue Gods

Gods anger against vs, but his fatherly goodnesse, and prouidence & care to keepe vs to himselfe, that he may make vs partakers of eternall life. Thus carnall concupiscence being of it selfe a punishment of sinne, though according to the guilt it be taken away by remission of sins, yet according to the thing it selfe remaineth in, the faithfull, not now for a punishment, but for the humbling and exercising of vs, to make vs to know our selues, to draw vs to trust & confidence in God, to sharpen our desire & love of that righteousnesse for which we fight in fighting against it. So death of it selfe the wages of sin, becometh to the faithful as a poison broken into a medicine, and as a serpent that hath lost his sting: There is no sting but long, saith S. Bernard, man now dieth singing, and singeth dying. O thou mother of mourning, saith he, thou art turned to joy: thou enemy of glory doest now serue to give glory; thou gate of hel art used for an entry to the kingdom of heauen, and thou pit of destruction for the finding of saluation. S. Austin saith thereof, that God inflicted death for the punishment of sin, and after forgiveness of sins he stille left it for the exercising of righteousness, that, saith he, the fortitude of righteousness might be exercised in overcoming the feare thereof. The like hath beene noted out of him^e before concerning other iudgements laid vpon mankind in the beginning, by reason of sinne. Now as of these, so of all other afflictions after forgiveness of sinnes, wee resolute that they forgo their former condition and property, and cease to be reuengements and punishments for sinne, but haue other respects and vses for which they are continued. The examples so strongly urged by Master Bishop make nothing against this. First, the Israelites murmure, God to Moses threatneth wholly to destroy the, promising to make of him a mighty people. Moses prayeth vnto God to withhold that wrath from his people, & to forgive the trespass. God saith, I haue forgouen it, according to thy request: but he addeth, Notwithstanding as I lue at the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord: for all those men which haue seene my glory & my miracles which I did in Egypt & in the wildernes, & haue tempted me these ten times, and haue not obeyed my voice, certainly they shall not see the land wherof I swaue vnto their fathers. Here is the forgiveness of a sin, saith M. Bishop, and yet a punishment ensuing after. But wee answer him, that this example altereth the question, & cometh not within the compasse of that wherof we speake. For it is one thing to speak

^a Bern. in Cant.
Ser. 2. 6. Iam non stimulus sed iubi-
lus. Iam cantan-
do moritur homo & moriendo can-
tat. Usurparis ad
leisum mater morum. Usurparis
ad gloriam glorie inimica. Usurparis
ad inuictum reg-
ni porta inferi.
fouea perditionis
ad inuentionem
salutis.

^b Aug. de pec-
mer & remis. li.
2. cap. 34. Mortem
corporis propter
peccatum homini Deus infligit, &
post peccatorum remissionem prop-
ter exercendam iustitiam non ademit. Et paula prius eam fidelis-
bus euenire. ut eius timore vin-
cedo exerceretur
forti udo iustitie.
c. Ser. 2.

^d Num. 14. 10.

of the forgiveness of a sinne to the whole body of a people, and another thing to speake of forgiveness to one particular man. Forgiveness of a sinne to a whole people is not absolute, but onely in a respect: it is not simply the taking away of a sinne, but the taking of it away in some sort, and therefore though it be the excluding of one punishment, yet nothing hindreth, but that it may leaue place for another, yea and though in common there be a forgiveness, yet in particular there may still remaine an imputation of the sin, euen as amongst this people were many reprobates and cast awayes, who though they were forgiven and freed in respect of the destruction then threatened, yet being void of repentance and true faith, found otherwise spiritually no benefit at all of this forgiveness. God saith not here simply, I haue forgiven it, but I haue forgiven it according to thy request. Moses request was according to Gods threatening; Gods threatening was wholly to destroy that nation. In this respect God said, I haue forgiven it, namely so, as not at once to destroy this people according to my wrath and indignation conceived against them. And this Lyra very well obserued: He saith well (saith he) according to thy request, because he did not wholly pardon it, but onely as touching the not destroying of the whole people at once. Now albeit in this respect he did forgive it, because he did not wholly forgive it, therefore he voweth to glorifie himselfe throughout all the earth, by making them an example of his iudgement vpon vnthankfull men, with whom no sights nor sayings can preuaile to make them obedient to the voyce of God. Therefore he would forbear to destroy them in that sort; and to their seed he would make good the promise of the land of Canaan, but as for them he would weare out the whole multitude of them, that not one of them should haue the enjoying or sight thereof. This he laid as a iudgement in common vpon that generation of men, which had so infinitely from time to time prouoked him, as that they made him to sweare that they should not enter into his rest. yet in the bosome of that multitude we cannot doubt but many there were, who truly repented & obtained forgiveness both of this & of all their other sins, & yet together with the rest were deprived of entrance into that holy land. For God doth not except particular men from generall and common plagues, and when he striketh a nation with famine, sword, pestilence or other calamity; both one and other, good and bad are

subiect

e Lyra in Numeri
 ca. 14. Bene dicit
iuxta quod non
totaliter dimisit, sed quoniam ad
hoc quod non de-
leret totum popu-
lum simul.

¶ Psalm. 95. 11.

subiect vnto it. ^g We are shut up together in one house, saith Cyprian, and whatsoeuer befalleth within the house we suffer it all alike. Onely he so ordereth, that what is to a nation in common for reuenge and punishment, becommeth in particular to the repentant and faithfull a helpe and furtherance of saluation. And so was it with the beleeuing Israelites, who though by a common iudgement they were excluded corporally from the Sacrament and signe, yet were thereby spiritually edified, and learned with Abraham, and Isaac, & Isaacob so much the more to meditate, to desire & long for the spiritual and euerlasting rest. Albeit in respect of the faithfull also it is to be vnderstood that Gods chastisements oftentimes lye vpon them after forgiuennesse of sinnes, though not for punishments to theselues, yet for exemplary admonitions to others, ^h that (as Thomas Aquinas (speakerh,) they may be edified by the punishment that were scandalized by the sinne. And thus S. Austin rightly saith that the punishment is continued longer then the sinne, lest the sinne should be esteemed but small, if the punishment should bee ended together with it. And this M. Perkins well obserueth in generall concerning that example of the Israelites, that God though his iudgment proceeded not one way, yet would haue it to be seene another way, though not for punishment to them that repented and beleued, yet for example to future times to take heede of cutting themselves off by vnbeleef and disobedience. from the heauenly rest, as these had done from the seale and Sacrament thereof, the Apostle to that purpose saying: ^k These things came to them for ensamples, and are written to admonish vs upon whom the ends of the world are come. Now as we conceiue in generall of the faithfull of that people, so wee do in particular of Moses and Aaron. M. Bishop, vrgeth it set down, that therefore they entred not because they trespassed, because they were disobedient. And who maketh doubt, but that their trespassse and disobedience was the originall cause of the debarring of them? But stil we say that the cause of this debarring of them being forgiuen, the effect still continued for other vse: which in them was not onely morall, but also mystical, God willing thereby to giue to vnderstand, that the Law, which was giuen by Moses, and the priesthood that was executed by Aaron, could not bring vs to that eternall inheritance which was figured by the land of Canaan, but only Iesus, who was figured by Iosuah, could yeeld vnto vs the possession thereof. Thus S. Austin

^g Cyprian. contra Demetr. Intra vnam domum boni & mali interim continemur: quicquid intra domus euenit pari sorte perpetimur, dicitur, &c.

^h Tho. Aquin. 2^a 2^a 2^a q. 87. art. 6. ad 3. Et edificatur in pena, qui scandalizati sunt in culpa.
ⁱ Aug. in Ioan. 11. 24. Proditior est pena quam culpa, ne parua putaretur culpa, si cum illa finiretur & pena.

^k 1 Cor. 10. 11.

maketh mysticall and spirituall application thereof, affirming that ¹Moses did not bring the people of Israel into the land of promise, lest the law which was giuen by Moses not to saue, but to conuict the sinner, should be thought to bring vs into the kingdome of heauen. But fully to anwer this point and to stop M. Bishops mouth, let vs take that which the same S. Austin saith in another place: ^mWe seeke Gods punishment in Moses, saith he, and he had in a maner none, but that God at last saith to him, Go vp into the hill and die. He saith to an old man, Godie: he had now finished his yeares; what, should he neuer die? what punishment is this? He shewed him there his punishment, in that he said: Thou shalt not enter into the land of promise, to which the people was to enter. Moses did here beare a figure of some: for he being to enter into the kingdome of heauen, was it a great punishment not to come to that land which was promised, for a time to cary a shadow, and so to passe away? Did not many vnfaithfull men enter into that land? did not they that liued in that land commit many euils and offend God? did they not follow idolatry in that land? A great matter it was not to giue this land vnto Moses: but Moses was to beare a figure of them which are vnder the law, because the law was giuen by Moses and he sheweth that they which would be vnder the law, and would not be vnder grace, should not enter into the land of promise. Therefore that which was said to Moses was a figure, not a punishment: what punishment was it to an old man to die? what punishment was it, not to enter into that land, into which vnworthy men did enter? Here then it is plain, that the not suffering of Moses to enter into the land of Canaan, was not a matter of punishment, but a matter of figure. God took the occasion thereof of his trespassse, but the trespassse being remitted, it was turned from being a punishment to him to be a mystry of faith both to him and vs. But it were worth the while here to question with M. Bishop, how he should make the not entering of all these into the land of Canaan, to be any satisfaction for their sin: what did they or suffered they, that might carry the name of a satisfaction? Did any thing herein befall them, but what befel to many iust and godly Fathers before that time? He saith, their daies were shortened, but how were the daies of Moses and Aaron shortened, when the one liued to ⁿ 120. and the other to ⁿ 123. yeares, almost double to that nūber of yeres which Moses noted for the ordinary

I. August. contra Faust. Man. lib 16 cap. 19. Non introducebat populū in terram promissionis, ne videlicet lex per Moysen non ad saluandū sed ad conuincendū peccatorē data intro ducere putaretur. Ita Tertul. aduer. Marci nem lib. 3. m Idem in Psal. 98. Querimus vindictam in Moysē, prope nullā habet nisi quod ad extremum ait illi Deus, Ascende in montē & morere. Ait sem, Morte iam peegerat etates suas: nunquid nunquā erat moriturus? Quales illa vindicta? Ostendit ibi vindictam suam vtdiceret, Non intrabis in terram promissionis quam intraturus erat populus. Quandā figuram quorū nullā gerebat Moyses. Nam qui in regnū eorum intrauit magna illa pena erat ad terram illam non venire que ad tempus erat promissa vt umbram ostendentes & transiret? Nonne multi perfidi intrauerunt in illam terram? Nonne in illa terra viuētes multa mala fecerunt & Deum offenderunt? Nonne & idololatriam secuti sunt in terra illa? Magnū erat non dedisse terram istam Moysi, sed Moyses voluit gestare figuram eorum qui sub lege erant quia per Moysen data est lex. & ostendit eos qui sub lege esse vellent, & sub gratia esse nollent non intraturos in terram promissionis. Ergo illud quod dictum est Moysi figura erat, non pena. Sed mors que pena? Non intrare in illam terram que pena quod intrauerunt, indigni? N Deur. 34. 7. Numb. 33. 39.

time of the life of him, ^{p Psal. 90. 10.} The dayes of our age are threescore yeares and ten. Yea Moses was so old, as that he said, ^{Deut. 31. 2.} I am a hundred and wentie yeares old: I can no more go in and out. Againe, we wonder, whereas M. Bishop hath told vs before, that such excellent holy personages by their ordinarie deuotions satisfied abundantly for their sins, how it came to passe, that all Moses deuotions for the space of eight and thirty yeares after, could not satisfie for that one sinne of his, but that it stil hindred him frō entering into the promised land? ^{Deut. 3. 14.} Surely, M. Bishop cannot well tell vs how these things hang together. But to conclude this point M. Perkins had set downe by the words of the holy Ghost, the vse of Gods chastisements towards his children, and M. Bishop as loth to be acquainted therewith, saith nothing of it. ^{11. Cor. 11. 32.} When we are iudged we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world. The occasion thereof is our sinne, ^{1. Ver. 36.} For this cause many are weake and sicke amongst you, and many sleepe: but the vse thencefoorth is not for satisfaction but for saluation, that we may not be condemned with the world.

10. W. BISHOP.

Now to the next example, which M. Perkins maketh our third reason. King Dauid was punished for his aduoutrie after his repentance, for the child died, and was plagued in the same kind of incest by Abso- lon: and when he had numbred the people, he was after his owne repentance punished in the death of his people. ^{2. Re. 12.}
^{2. Re. 24.}

M. Perkins answereth, that the hand of God was vpon him after his repentance: but those iudgments: which befell him, were not curses to him properly but corrections of his sinnes.

Reply. What dotage is this, to graunt the very same thing, which he would be thought to deny: but yet in other termes, that the simple (whom onely he can beguile) may not perceiue it: if the hand of God were vpon Dauid correcting him for his sin, and that after his repentance: did not Dauid then suffer temporall punishment for his sinnes before forgiven? which is most properly to satisfie for shew. Yea ouer and beside this punishment inflicted by God, he of his owne deuotion performed farre greater satisfaction, by putting on sack-cloth, lying on the bare ground, by watering his couch with tears, and making ashes his food, & in this most pitifull plight, he made most humble supplication vnto God, to wash him more and more from his iniquity: he neuer dreamed that this his satisfaction should be any derogation vnto the satisfaction of his Lord and Saviour: but in the Psalme saith: that such an humble and contrite heart, is a sweet sacrifice vnto God. We denie not but the punishing of one, is a warning and admonition vnto another, to take heed of the like: so may not they deny, but that correction is to the party himselfe, as an admonition to beware afterward, so a correction and punishment of the fault past. Which S. Augustine upon this verse of the Psalme, Thou hast loued truth, teacheth most plainly, saying: Thou hast not left their finnes whom thou didst pardon, vnpunished: for thou before didst so shew mercy, that thou mightest also preferue truth: thou doest pardon him, that confesseth his fault, thou doest pardon him, but so as he do punish himselfe: and by that meanes both mercy and truth are preferued.

Psal. 50.

Psal 50.

R. ABBOT.

2. August. de peccat. mer. & remis. lib. 2. ca. 34 supra S. 67. 2.
b Tale aliquid nobis insinuat ut est de Patriarcha David, ad quem cum Propheta missus esset, ei q; propter peccatum quod commiserat cuiusma mala & iracundia Dei comminaretur. commissio peccati uonamemur. & tamen consequentia sentit que deus fuerat comminatus ut sic humiliaretur a filio suo. Cur a missis peccato quod erat minutus impleuit? Respondebitur remissionem peccati factam non hono a percipiendi: ut a impeditur eterna, subsistentia uerq;

This matter concerning David was answered long ago by S. Austin against the Pelagian heretikes, who hauing set downe for a rule of the chastisements and afflictions of this life, that ^a before forgiveness they are punishments of finnes; after forgiveness, the combats & exercises of the iust, as before was said, bringeth for example thereof this that M. Bishop here obiecteth concerning David. ^b Such a matter, saith he, is insinuated vnto vs concerning the Patriark David, to whom the prophet being sent, and threatening vnto him the evils, that by the wrath of God should befall vnto him for the sinne that he had committed, by the confession of his sinne he obtained pardon; & yet those things followed which were threatened, that he should be so humbled by his sonne. Why did God fulfill that, when he had forgiven the sinne? We are to answer, that the sinne was forgiven, lest the man should be hindered from eternall life: but the effect of the threatening followed, that the pietie of the man might be exercised and proued in that humiliation. Here was iust occasion giuen to Saint Augustine to haue mentioned Master Bishops satisfaction if he had knowne it, but he knew it not, and therefore said nothing of it. He denieth Davids afflictions after forgiveness to be punishments: he maketh the vse of them to be thenceforth onely for combat and exercise and triall of his pietie and faith. Therefore in calling them corrections as from a faillis comminationis effectum, ut pie a hominis in illa humilitate exerceretur atq; probaretur.

ther

ther in respect of time to come, not punishments as from a Iudge in respect of time past, we say nothing but what Saint Austine saith. As for Dauids mourning afterwards, expressed in the one and fiftieth Psalm, it was the testimonie of his true repentance, the expressing of his desire to be disburdened of his sinne, and to be established by the grace of God, that hee might not in such sort fall againe. His ^c fasting and lying on the earth, were to intreat the Lord for the sparing ^c of the child's life: but in nothing that he did do we find any dreaming of satisfaction. He knew well that it was a derogation to the satisfaction of Christ to seeke in himselfe that satisfaction that was to be sought for in Christ alone. He knew, that ^d a broken & contrite heart is as sweet sacrifice to God, but yet he knew it not to be a sacrifice propitiatorie for the sinne of man. It is not it selfe a satisfaction for sinne, but only the disposition of him who seeketh to find satisfaction in the Sonne of God. And this broken and contrite heart grieuing and sorrowing for sinne, is that punishment whereof Saint Austine speaketh in the wordes which Master Bishop citeth, and which he calleth the punishing of a mans selfe, and is the affection wherewith wee are to seeke forgiuenesse at Gods hands. Which when wee are carelesse of, God striketh vs with his rodde and punishments to worke it in vs, and to make vs seeke the forgiuenesse of our sinnes. This the Apostle giueth to vnderstand when he saith, ^e If we would iudge our selues, we should not be iudged of the Lord, as if he should say, that because we iudge not our selues therefore doth the Lord iudge vs, that thereby wee may be taught to iudge our selues. Thus our sinne is punished that it may be forgiuen, but after forgiuenesse thereof Saint Austine denieth (as we haue heard) that any thing remaineth as a punishment for sinne, neither doth this place import any thing otherwise. As for the other instance that he vseth concerning the plague inflicted for the numbring of the people, it was more for the punishment of the people, then of Dauid himselfe for the numbring of the people, though by Dauids numbring of them God would take the occasion of it. Therefore the storie saith: ^f The wrath of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he mooued Dauid against them, in that hee said: Go number Israel and Iudah. Here therefore necessary it was, and standing with the glorie of God by Dauids praier, that the sin of the people should be forgiuen as well as Dauids sin. Dauid praied c 2. Sam. 12. 16.

d Psal. 51. 17.

e 1. Cor. 11. 31.

f 2. Sam. 24. 1.

g Ver. 25.

for them. Hee offered a burnt offering as it were to tender vnto God the mediation of Iesus Christ, that for his sake hee might be mercifull vnto them. Vpon this it is said: The Lord was appeased towards the land, and the plague ceased from Israel. This maketh plainly against M. Bishop, because it proueth directly, that the forgiuing of the sinne was the staying of the plague, not that the plague continued after the forgiuenesse of the sinne.

II. W. BISHOP.

Our fourth reason: The Prophets of God, when the people were threatened with Famine, the Sword, the Plague, or such like punishments for their sinnes, did commonly exhort them to workes of penance; as fasting, praier, haire-cloth, and the like, to appease Gods wrath justly kindled against them: which being performed by them, God was satisfied. So (for example sake) the Nininites of Ionas preaching, doing penance in sack-cloth and ashes, turned away the sentence of God against them.

M. Perkins answereth, that famine, the plague, and such like scourges of God, were not punishments of sinnes, but corrections of a Father.

Reply. This is most flat against a thousand expresse texts of the Scripture; which declare, that for the transgressions of Gods commandements, he hath sent those punishments vpon the people of Israel. And what is the correction of a father, but the punishing of a shrewd sonne for some fault committed, yet in a mild sort? Or doth the Schoole-master (which is Caluins example) whippe the scholar, or strike him with the Ferula, but to punish him for some fault? So that great Rabbins seem not to understand what they say theselues, when they admit those scourges of God to be the corrections of a Father, but not the punishment for a fault. As though fathers used to correct those sonnes who neuer offended them: or masters to beat such scholers as commit no faults.

But saith M. Perkins, these punishments be tending: to correction, not seruing for satisfaction: what senselesse ryming is this? by due correction of the fault, the party is satisfied in iustice: and when he that hath offended doth abide such punishment as the grieuoufnesse of his offence did require, there is both due correction of the offender, and due satisfaction vnto the party offended;

M. Per-

M. Perkins finally sheweth vnto his old schiſt of imputatiue satisfaction: that for both our sufferings doe not satisfie, but the party punished by faulte is hold on vs satisfaction of the Messias, and testifie the same by their humiliation and repentance.

Reply. As we shal grant that all satisfaction hath his vertue from the gr. ce of God, dwelling in vs, which is giuen vs for Christs sake: so I say that Christs satisfaction taketh away all other satisfaction, is iust to be the principall point in question, & therefore an old triuants trick to giue that for a small answer, which was set in the beginning to be debated: looke vpon the forenamed ex. mple of the Nariuiues, of whom it is not certaine that they had any expresse knowledge of the Messias, and therefore were farre enough off from laying hold on his satisfaction. But most certaine & euident it is in the text, that God vpon the contemplation of their works of penance, took compassion on them, and was satisfi- ed; as by turning away the threated subuersion, is most manifest.

R. ABBOT.

¶ It is an old saying * Propter quod venimus, hoc age; Do that that we come for. M. Bishop buildeth here beside his groundworke. Hee propoundeth a satisfaction to be made for sinnes past and pardoned, that is, after the forgiuenesse of the sins, and bringeth vs arguments to prooue a satisfaction for the obtaining of that forgiuenesse. But wee will take them as they come, though by their owne grounds they be worth nothing, there being no satisfaction to be made by a man, as we shall see hereafter, so long as hee continueth in mortall sinne, and still continuing in it, vntill by forgiuenesse it bee bl'oued out. The Prophets denounce famine, sword, pestilence. M. Perkins should not haue made any question, but that they denounce them as the punishments of sinne, as fruits and effects of Gods curse according to the law. So did God accordingly execute them in furie and wrath, for iust reuengement vpon a rebellious and vnthankful people. The point of question stood not in this, neither needed M. Bishop to bestow so much paines for the prouing of it. Yet it is to be obserued, that although God in generall dencenced and executed the same by way of reuenge and punishment, yet in particular he had alwaies a respect to the calling & sauing of his elect, turning those common iudgements to be vnto them occasions of repentance.

* Tertul. adu. Marc. l. 6. 4.

penitance & turning vnto God to obtaine of him remission o sinnes and euerlasting life. To them therefore vpon their repentance the nature of punishments was altered, and they became meanes either to receiue them presently to endlesse blisse, or to further them in the way wherein they were to walke for the attainment of it. Of this enough hath been said already; but the matter heere is this, The Prophets denouncing such plagues, doe withall call the people to repentance, to fasting, to praying, to putting on sackcloth and ashes. This being performed, saith M. Bishop, God was satisfied. Therefore he will haue vs to vnderstand, that the doing of these things was a satisfaction, that is, the payment of a iust price vnto God, by which they merited the turning away of his fearefull and heauy wrath. But this argument of his followeth not, because we know, that a man in fauour may hold himselfe satisfied towards another vpon his humbling of himselfe, who yet receiueth not a satisfaction, that is, a iust and sufficient recompence for the debt that is owing him, or the wrong that is done vnto him. The seruant that ought his master ^b ten thousand talents, when he was called to payment, fell downe at his Masters feete, and besought him for patience. His Master heere with was appeased and satisfied, and forgaued him all the debt; and will any man heere upon say that he made his Master satisfaction for the debt? So is the case betwixt God and vs. Wee humble our selues before him, we praie, we in-treat him to forgie vs. He is herewith satisfied, that is, contented and appeased, and remitteth the trespassse. Shall we now here upon say, that our humbling of our selues, our intreaty and praiere to forgie vs, is the payment of our debt? This is a mad conclusion as we take it, but such pretty knots wil serue at Rome to tye the Popes trinkets together, and they hold fast enough there, because no man must meddle with the vntying of them. But this matter as Maister Bishop handleth it, would require somewhat further to be considered of. We are therefore to vnderstand, as in some part hath been signified before, that wee are to put difference betwixt outward and temporall forgiuenesse, respecting only a temporall & earthly benefit, and that inward and spirituall forgiuenesse, which serueth for the acquitting of the conscience, to the obtaining of eter-nall life. That outward and temporall forgiuenesse, is not in-dede to be called a forgiuenesse of the sinne, but onely a forbearing

b Matth. 18. 24.

ring of the punishment. And this forbearance God yeelded not onely to true and faithfull repentance, but also to the externall signes and tokens thereof, proceeding onely from worldly sorrow, vpon feare of temporall plagues and punishments either imminent or incumbent. For we must know that God ordereth the administration and government of the world, not only for the bringing of his elect vnto eternall life, but so also as serueth for maintenance of publike order, and state, and societie amongst men. Such is the wickednesse of mans nature and pronenesse to mischiese and violence, to lasciuiousnesse and filthinesse, and all kinde of iniquitie, as that the state of men would grow intollerable, if God did not take course both to restraine men from that enormitie and excessse of sinne whereto nature tendeth, and to giue encouragement to those courses, which serue for the common good and benefit of mankind. To which purpose Cyprian very rightly saith, If Gods censure and iudgement did not interpose it selfe amidst the doings of men, how great presumption would there be, growing secure and carelessse by the impunitie of sinne? Now therefore when men grow to outrage & ex:remity, he sendeth amongst them his diuine iudgements, the sword, the famine, the pestilence, which are as it were the lopping & pruning of mankind, when they grow too proud and ranke, and hereby he redresseth the insolencies and disorders that are found amongst them. But when men vnderstanding the wrath and iudgement of God, do shew their dread and feare thereof, and yeeld themselues, though but ciuilly, to be reclaimed, he sheweth himselfe outwardly appeased and satisfied, and putteth vp the sword which he had drawne against them. Thus though the Niniuites were heathens & infidels, yet when vpon the preaching of Jonas they put on sackcloth and ashes, and shewed tokens of repentance, God did forbear the destruction that hee had proclaimed against them. So when Abab hearing by the message of Elias the fierce wrath of God conceiued against him, did shew himselfe moued thereat by rending his clothes, and fasting, and lying in sackcloth, though he were a most wicked man, yet the Lord somewhat relented from the sentence that he had denounced, and deferred the execution thereof from the father to the sons time. In like sort the people of Israell when they euery while by idolatrie departed from God, yet vpon humbling of themselues at the feeling of Gods heavy hand, found

*c Cypri. cor. De-metr. Si non inter-cederet rebus ho-
manis diuina
censura, quanta
esset in homini-
bus auaricia sa-
ciorum impu-
nitate securi?
d Ezech. 1. 4. 21.
e Tertul. de anima cap. 14. Re-uera lux & fit-
mes & bella.
&c proximedis deparant, can-quam in sura insolentis. generis humani.*

*1. King. 11.
27. 29.*

mercy

mercy & deliuerance from the tyāny of their opprellours, though by the sequell it still appeareth, that they did it with a faithlesse and false heart. Thus God yeeldeth temporall benefit to outward discipline and conformity to his lawes, and sheweth his regard thereof for the course of this life, euen in them towards whom he hath no purpose of euerlasting life. Now although towards infidels and hypocrites vpon outward submission, God shew himselfe outwardly satisfied and contented, and do yeeld thereto the remitting of temporall punishments, yet M. Bishop will not hereupon conclude, that they haue made a satisfaction to God for their sinnes, because they themselues teach, that no man liuing in mortall sinne of impenitencie or infidelity, can performe any worke of satisfaction vnto God. So he himselfe here telleth vs, that all satisfaction hath his vertue from the grace of God dwelling in vs, which is giuen vs for Christes sake; whereupon it followeth, that where the grace of God dwelleth not by the faith of Christ, there can be no vertue of satisfaction in any thing that is done. The more vnthamefast man he, within foure lines after to bring the Niniuites for the prooffe of their satisfaction, of whom he himselfe saith, that it is not certaine that they had any expresse knowledge of the Messias (he should haue said, it is certaine that they had none) and therefore were farre enough off from laying hold on his satisfaction, and consequently were farre off from the participation of the grace of God. But all is one with him; it carieth a shew, and that serueth his turne, making no conscience at all of abusing the ignorance or vnadvisednesse of his Reader, and onely regarding to vphold a side. But now as touching spirituall forgiuenesse of sinnes, for the acquitting of the conscience inwardly to God, all that mourne and weepe, that rend their clothes and lye in sackcloth and ashes, that is, that performe outward tokens of repentance, are not partakers thereof. The reason whercof is, because these workes of themselues do spiritually yeeld no satisfaction or contentment vnto God. Then do they obtaine true forgiuenesse and remission of sinnes, when they are vsed only as affectiōs, wherewith we plead to the throne of the mercie of God the satisfaction of Iesus Christ, that not for the things which we do, but for his sake, and in him, according to his promise he may be well pleased towards vs. In his name, not in our owne we come vnto God; for his merits, not for owne we begge of him to be mercifull vnto

us; testifying by our repentance the feeling and greuance of our wounds, but professing to expect in him onely the medicine for the cure. Neither do we herein begge the point in question, as M. Bishop alledgeth, but we giue him plaine and currant answer. We denie that which they affirme, that workes of penance are true satisfactions to God for sinne. They seeke to proue it, for that God vpon the doing hereof is appealed, and forgiueth sinnes. We answer, that where God vpon the doing hereof, giueth forgiuenesse of sins, it is not for the works sake that is done, but for that the doer by faith seeketh and findeth the washing away thereof in the blood of Iesus Christ, it being he onely of whom we are taught, that ^h in him Col. 1. 14. we haue redemption through his blood, euen the forgiuenesse of our sins. There are that do those works, and yet haue no forgiuenesse; and therefore that other in the doing thereof obtaine forgiuenesse, it is not to be attributed to the works themselues, but to somewhat else that is respected therein. And what is all our repentance, but a bootelesse sorrow, a blinde horror and anguish of minde, wherein there is nothing but darkenesse and feare, but onely as it receiue light and comfort in the blood of Christ, for the mitigating and aswaging of it? If it selfe for it selfe can giue no comfort, it is not satisfaction in it selfe: and therefore in all our repentance our satisfaction is in him onely, who as S. Austine saith, ⁱ Paid that which was i Aug. in Psal. 31. Soluit quod non debebat, ut nos à debitiō liberaret. no debt of his, to free vs from our debt. These things are spoken by due and iust course, and therefore M. Bishop must take here againe the triuants trickes, in that he would with so bare a shift slip ouer a direct and formall answer.

12 W. BISHOP.

Our first reason: Daniel giueth this counsaile to Nabuchodonosor: Daniel. 4. Redeeme thy sinnes with almes, and thy offences with mercy on the poore. If by such good deedes our sinnes may be redeemed, as holy writ doth testifie, then it followeth that such works yeeld a sufficient satisfaction for them, for redemption signifieth a full contentment of the party offended, as well as satisfaction.

M. Perkins answereth, The skilfull in the Chaldey teach, that the word importeth rather a breaking off, then Redeeming.

Reply. To Authors in the aire, without pressing of the proprietie of the

the word no answer can be giuen: but let vs admit that it be broken off his sinne not being conuoussesse, but pride and laske of acknowledging kingdoms to depend vpon God, as the text it selfe doth specifie, To breake off this sinne by almes, and compassion of the poore, is nothing else but such works of charity, in some sort to satisfie Gods iustice, thereby to moue him to take compassion of him. And that by almes-deedes we are cleanse from our sinnes, our Saviour himselfe doth teach, saying: Giue almes and behold all things are cleane vnto you.

Luke. 11

R. ABBOT.

This obiection serueth much for the clearing of that that hath bene said in the former section, and to open a way to the true vnderstanding of many phrases, which by the Papists are abused to the maintenance of their absurd position of humane satisfaction. We are to consider, what the person is to whom they are spoken, and in what respect the Prophet spake them. Nabuchodonosor was a heathen King, voide of the grace and spirit of God, hauing no knowledge, nor yeelding any acknowledgment of God, but what God by miracle wrested from him, and yet thenceforth drowning that also in pride, oppreSSION, cruelty, tyrannie, and all kinde of iniquitie & iniustice. Now therefore by the doctrine of the Romish Schools, he was not in case to do any worke of satisfaction. For M. Bishop telleth vs, as we haue seene before, that all satisfaction hath his vertue from the grace of God, and Thomas Aquinas saith, that works done without charity, haue no power of satisfaction, & therefore where grace and charity are not, no satisfaction can be done. If then Nabuchodonosor, were not capable in their meaning, to do a worke of satisfaction, how impudently do they deal, to alledge that that was said to him to the maintenance of their doctrine of satisfactions? How should he be aduised according to their meaning to redeeme his sinnes, from whom by their own rules nothing could proceed that might in their meaning bee a redemption for his sins? Againe, here is nothing intended as touching the true forgiuenance of sins, wherein consisteth the spiritual reconcilment of man to God, but onely as touching the auoiding of a threatned outward iudgment, and the preseruacion of temporal & earthly state, which God yeeldeth ¶ Thom. Aquin. suppl. q. 14. art.

2. in corp. Sine
charitate opera
facta non sunt satisfactoria.

derh euen to ciuill and morall change of former euill courses, as before was said. Daniel had threatned vnto him from God the losse of his vnderstanding, and the casting of him forth to the company of brut beasts. He aduiseh him yet to alter his former doings, by which he had drawne that sentence vpon his selfe, to trie whether haply God would bee moued thereby to reuoke the iudgement which he had pronounced. Wilt thou, saith hee, as Theodores resolueh the speech, receiue the fruit of mercy? shew the same then to them who haue obtained the like condition of nature with thy selfe, for so thou maist perswade the iudge to put away his threatnings, and not to suffer thee to be brought to effect. Where Hieron conceiueh that Nabuchodnosor according to Daniels counsell, did shew mercy to the poore, and therefore for twelue months the sentence was deferred, vntill vpon glorying in his Babel, by sinne of pride he lost the benefit of mercy. So then wee see the forbearing of the punishment graunted to a meer outward reformation, and yet the King being an infidel, there was no remission of the sinne. There could therefore bee no satisfaction, because satisfaction cannot be without remission; whereof it followeth, that sith Daniels words had their effect without any satisfaction, therefore there can no satisfaction be concluded thereof. For further confirmation hereof, wee are to note what Origen saith as touching this matter, who obseruing, that ^d of good works there is one sort which we do for men or according to men; another which we do for God or according to God, for example thereof saith: A man doth good being moued by naturall iustice, and not in respect of God, euen as heathens many times did and many men do. This worke, saith he, is but common oile, and of no great savor, and yet it is acceptable with God, as Daniel signifieth, saying to a King that knew not God, Hear my counsell, O King, and redeeme thy sinnes with almes. Some such matter Peter also saith in Clement, that the good works which are done by infidels, do benefit them in this world, but not in the world to come, for the obtaining of eternall life; and that very rightly, because they do them not for Gods sake, but onely as of the nature of man. But they which doe these things in respect of God, that is the faithfull, haue benefit thereby, not the word no answer can be giuen: but let vs admit that it be broken off; his sinne not being conuoufnesse, but pride and lacke of acknowledging al kingdoms to depend vpon God, as the text it selfe doth specifie, To break off this sinne by almes, and compassion of the poore, is nothing else but by such works of charity, in som sort to satisfie Gods iustice, thereby to moue him to take compassion of him. And that by almes-deedes we are clenfed from our sinnes, our Sauiour him selfe doth teach, saying: Giue almes, and behold all things are cleane vnto you.

& gratia & multi faciunt homines. Opus illud oleum est vulgare, non magni odoris, & tamen acceptabile apud Deum, sicut Daniel significat dicens ad Baltasar Deum non cognoscentem, Audi &c. Tale aliquid dicit & Petrus apud Clonem, quoniam opera bona que fiunt ab infidelibus in hoc seculo eis proficiunt, non & in illo ad consequendam vitam eternam. Et conuenienter quia nec illi propter Deum faciunt, sed propter naturam humanam. Qui autem propter Deum faciunt, id est fideles, non solum in hoc seculo proficiunt eis, sed in illo magis autem in illo.

Luke. iij

R. ABBOT.

This obiection serueth much for the clearing of that that hath bene said in the former section, and to open a way to the true vnderstanding of many phrases, which by the Papists are abused to the maintenance of their absurd position of humane satisfaction. We are to consider, what the person is to whom they are spoken, and in what respect the Prophet spake them. Nabuchodonosor was a heathen King, void of the grace and spirit of God, hauing no knowledge, nor yeelding any acknowledgment of God, but what God by miracle wrested from him, and yet thenceforth dawning that also in pride, oppression, cruelty, tyrannie, and all kinde of iniquitie & iniultice. Now therefore by the doctrine of the Romish Schools, he was not in case to do any worke of satisfaction. For M. Bishop telleth vs, as we haue seene before, that all satisfaction hath his vertue from the grace of God, and Thomas Aquinas saith, that a works done without charity, haue no power of satisfaction, & therefore where grace and charity are not, no satisfaction can be done. If then Nabuchodonosor, were not capable in their meaning, to do a worke of satisfaction, how impudently do they deal, to alledge that that was said to him to the maintenance of their doctrine of satisfactions? How should he be aduised according to their meaning to redeeme his sinnes, from whom by their own rules nothing could proceed that might in their meaning bee a redemption for his sins? Againc, here is nothing intended as touching the true forgiueneffe of sins, wherein consisteth the spiritual reconcilement of man to God, but onely as touching the auoiding of a threatned outward iudgment, and the preferuation of temporal & earthly state, which God yeeldeth

*a Thom. Aquin. suppl. q. 14. art.
2. in corp. Sine
charitate opera
facta non sunt
satisfactoria.*

deth euen to ciuill and morall change of former euill courses, as before was said. Daniel had threatned vnto him from God the losse of his vnderstanding, and the casting of him forth to the company of brut beasts. He aduiseh him yet to alter his former doings, by which he had drawne that sentence vpon himselfe, to trie whether haply God would bee moued thereby to reuoke the iudgement which he had pronounced. Wilt thou, saith hee, as Theodores resolueh the speech, receiue the fruit of mercy? shew the same then to them who haue obtained the like condition of nature with thy selfe, for so thou maist perswade the iudge to put away his threatnings, and not to suffer the n to be brought to effect. Where Hierom conceiueh that Nabuchodonosor according to Daniels counsell, did shew mercy to the poore, and therefore for twelue months the sentence was deferred, vntill vpon glorying in his Babel, by sinne of pride he lost the benefit of mercy. So then wee see the forbearing of the punishment graunted to a meeke outward reformation, and yet the King being an infidel, there was no remission of the sinne. There could therefore bee no satisfaction, because satisfaction cannot be without remission; whereof it tolloweth, that sith Daniels words had their effect without any satisfaction, therefore there can no satisfaction be concluded thereof. For further confirmation hereof, wee are to note what Origen saith as touching this matter, who obseruing, that ^d of good works there is one sort which we do for men or according to men; another which we do for God or according to God, for example thereof saith: A man doth good being moued by naturall iustice, and not in respect of God, euen as heathens many times did and many men do. This worke, saith he, is but common oile, and of no great savor, and yet it is acceptable with God, as Daniel signifieth, saying to a King that knew not God, Hear my counsel, O King, and redeeme thy sinnes with almes. Some such matter Peter also saith in Clement, that the good works which are done by infidels, do benefit them in this world, but not in the world to come, for the obtaining of eternall life; and that very rightly, because they do them not for Gods sake, but onely as of the nature of man. But they which doe these things in respect of God, that is the faithfull, haue benefit thereby, not

Theod in Dan.
 4 Vs clemente (fructu percipere?
 Hanc eandē erga eos ostendit qui vnam tecū sortitū
 sunt naturam: ita enim iudici per fuisse: re poterit ve minas extinguat
 neque sinat eas ad
 exitum perducit.

c Hieron in Dan.
 4 *Fecit iuxta Dani
 elis consilium misericordias in pauperes, & deir
 co vsque ad merse duodecimū in eam dilat a ist sententia Sed
 quia postea ambu
 lam in aula Ba
 byloni gloriatur
 &c. bonum mis
 corde perditis
 malo superbia.*

d Origen in Mat.
 tracl. 35. *Operis
 boni aliud est quod
 facimus propter
 homines vel secū
 dum homines: ali
 ud autem quod
 propter Deum vel
 secundum Deum
 &c. Vt puta bene quis facit hominē
 naturali iustitia
 motus non pro
 pter Deū, quimodo
 faciebant in erudū*

& gen: 1 & multi faciunt homines. Opus illud oleum est vulgare, non magis odorū, & tamen acceptabile apud Deum, sicut Daniel significat dicens ad Baltasar Deum non cognoscentem, Audi &c. Tale aliquid dicit & Petrus apud Clementem, quoniam opera bona que fiunt ab infidelibus in hoc seculo eis profunt, non & in illo ad consequendam vitam eternam. Et conuenienter quia nec illi propter Deū faciunt, sed propter naturā humanam. Qui autem propter Deum faciunt, id est, fideles, non solum in hoc seculo proficiunt eis, sed in illo, magis autem in illo.

be cleane vnto you. Where presupposing as wee may conceiue that they did giue almes, or otherwise exhorting them so to do, hee withall directeth the true manner of the giuing thereof, consisting not onely in reaching a gift with the hand, but in giuing the heart and affection, and ¹ pouring out the soule, as the Prophet speaketh, to the hungry; in shewing iudgement, and mercy, and fidelity to our brethren, for the want whereof hee taketh exception against them in the next words, as Saint Mathew expresseth the particulars thereof. Therefore he admonisheth them by these words, that as they were carefull outwardly to cleanse their cups and platters, so they should much more be carefull to cleanse their hearts, to void themselves of hypocrisie, couetousnesse, briberie, crueltie, and to put on charity, compassion, mercy, iustice, and faithfulnessse, and then not onely their dishes and vessels, but their almes-deeds, their meates and drinckes now defiled with rapine and couetousnesse yea all things should be cleane vnto them. It is not for almes that Christ saith, Behold all things shall be cleane vnto you, for alme it selfe may be defiled and vncleane, but for ² loue out of a pure hart & a good conscience, and faith vnfained. So that in effect the word of Christ are but the same with that which the Apostle saith, All things are cleane to them that are cleane, that is, to them who in hart and conscience are purified and cleansed. And because ³ by faith the heart is purified, therefore he saith in effect, so them that beleene a things are cleane. So then Maister Bishop reasoneth thus, To them that giue almes in true faith and a good conscience, all things are cleane; therefore by almes-deeds wee are redeemed and purge from our sinnes. We denie the argument, because it is not by alme it selfe that all things are cleane vnto vs, but almes it selfe receiuet purity and cleanness from faith and a good conscience, without which it is in Gods sight defiled and vncleane.

13. W. BISHOP.

Math. 5.
Luke 3.

Homa. 10. in Math.

Our sixt. Bring forth the worthy fruits of penance. That is, & such workes as become them who are penitent: Which (as S. Chrysostome expoundeth) are: Hee that hath stolen away another mans goods, let him now giue of his owne: he that hath committed fornication, let him abstaine from the lawfull company of his owne wif wife, and so forth: recompencing the workes of sinne, with the contrary workes of vertue. The same exposition giueth Saint Gregorie, and to ours all others, venerable Bede interpreteth them thus. Mournie your sinnes by doing the worthy fruites of penance, to wit, by afflicting your selues so much for enery offence, as worthy penance doth require, which will be a sacrifice of iustice, that is, a most iust sacrifice.

Hom. 10. in E.
uang. in Psal. 4.

To this M Perkins answereth, that this text is absurd, for the word repent, signifyeth, onely change your minds from sinne to God, & testifie it by good workes.

Reply. His answer is most absurd, for wee argue out of these words (Worthy fruites of penance:) and hee answereth to the word going before, repent: which we vse not against them; and for his glose or testifying our repentance, is sufficiently confuted by the Fathers before alledged.

And Saint Iohn expressly maketh them, the meanes to escape the wrath of God, saying, that the Axe was set to the Roote of the Tree, and vnesse by worthy fruites of penance they appeased God, they should be cut up, and cast into hell fire: and seemeth to confute the laying hold on Christs satisfaction by faith: saying, it will not helpe you to say that yee are the Sonnes of Abraham, who was father of all true beleeuers: as much as if he had said, Trust not to your faith, hand off ye generation of vipers. For notwithstanding ye bee the sonnes of the faithfull, vnesse ye amend your liues, and for the euill workes which ye haue done heere-efore, make recompence, and satisfie the iustice of God with good, ye shall be cast into hell fire.

R. ABBOT.

This argument is like his fellowes that are gone before. Wee must doe such workes as become those, that are penitent, therefore the workes that we do are satisfactions for our sinnes. A man would thinke that Master Bishop should haue more discretion, then to bring such light stufte in so waightie a cause. Though Master Perkins had alledged it out of some of their bookes, yet reason would haue required, that hee in the reuiew should haue better aduised of it. But we see, Trigge and Trugge will not part companie; what his fellowes haue said, bee it good or bad, true or false, he will say it to the death. Onely his memory faileth him a litle, where he saith, that they use no argument against us from the words going before, Do penance, as they say; Repent, as we translate it hauing forgotten that his masters of^a Rhemes made a stout argument from thence in behalfe of penance and satisfaction. Very impudently they dealt therein, because it is contrary to their owne doctrine, to vrge penance and satisfaction vpon them that are to be baptized, and Thomas Aquinas affirmeth it to be an iniury to the bloud of Christ, as I haue^b before shewed; and therefore by their owne doctrine, the words of Iohn Baptist cannot be vnderstood of any such matter. But yet they were faine for a shift to take hold of that, becaus^e they had nothing else so colourably to serue turne it that behalfe. It was out of M. Bishops head what they had said, or else without doubt he would haue said the like. But M. Perkins hath rightly told him, that the Greeke word μεταοίησι there vsed by S. Iohn, signifieth the alteration and change of the mind from sin to righteousnesse. It importeth no acts of penance, but inward reforming of our affections for the amendment of our liues. And therefore doth Athanasius say that repentance hath its name from thence^c for that it transferreth or remoueth the mind from euill to good. M. Bishop will not stand vpon this; he vrgeth the other words, worthy fruits of penance. Howsoeuer he translate them absurdly, yet we approue his exposition of them, do such works as become them that are penitent; but what followeth hercof for him? Surely wee teach men to do such works as become them that professe repentance, to recompence former works of sinne with contrary works of vertue; former neglect and carelesnesse, with due circumspection and watchfulnesse ouer their waies and conuersation. Wee teach that in grieuous sins our griefe and affliction of mind should be the more, and that both inwardly it is so, and outwardly appeareth so to bee where true repentance is, euen as greater wounds cause greater feeling and paine, and make men more earnest to seeke remedy and cure. But in all this we can finde no satisfaction, in all this wee cannot finde that our affliction and sorrow is the thing it selfe that workes the cure. It is the humbling of our selues to seeke mercy at Gods hands, for the washing away of our finnes in the bloud of Iesus Christ, but we know not how it selfe should be taken for a water to wash vs from our finnes. But yet

^a Rhem. Testam.
Annot. Math.
3. 2.

^b Of Justificati-
on. Sect. 10.

^c Athanas. quest.
162. Ideo penitētia respiciētia di-
citur quod menti
a malo in bonum transferat.

M. Bishop will proue it so to be, because John Baptist saith, ^d Now is ^d Ver. 10. the axe laid to the roote of the tree: every tree therefore that bringeth not forth good fruite shall be hewne downe and cast into the fire. Which is euen as much to the purpose, as if he had said iust nothing. We say also that every tree that bringeth not forth good fruite, shall be hewne downe and cast into the fire, but still we say, what is this to satisfaction? We still require his prooffe, that for the vertue and worth of these fruites it is that God is appeased towards vs. But that cannot be; for a man cannot bring forth good fruite, except first of all he be made a good tree, for ^e an euill tree cannot bring forth ^e Chap. 7. 17. good fruite. And if he must first be a good tree that he may bring forth good fruite, then God must first be appeased towards him, which is by the faith of Iesus Christ, ^f whom God hath set forth to be our reconciliation or attonement through faith in his blood. Our good ^f Rom. 3. 25. fruites then are not the causes, but the effects of Gods being appeased towards vs. If we haue none, we are sure that we are in state of iudgement and damnation; and the sentence of Saint John taketh hold of vs; but if we haue them, we are not to account them the redemption of our finnes, but testimonies of the remission and forgiveness thereof. Yea but Saint John, saith M. Bishop, seemeth to confute the laying hold on Christes satisfaction by faith. Where, or in what words? Marry because he saith, Say not in your hearts, we haue Abraham to our father. We may imagine that he had a vizard on his face whē he wrote this, that the paper might not see him blush. Why, what is there in these wordes against the laying hold on Christes satisfactiō by faith? Forsooth he saith to them, it will not helpe you to say that ye are the sonnes of Abraham, who was father of all true beleeuers. Well, but what is this yet to laying hold on Christes satisfaction by faith? It is as much, saith he, as if he had said, trust not to your faith; hand off ye generation of vipers. This is a strange construction, that say not in your hearts, we haue Abraham to our Father, should be as much as to say, Trust not to your faith. But it grew at Rome, and we know that things farre-fetched are woont to be very strange. As for vs, we conceiue in our simplicity that Iohns meaning was to reprove them for flattering themselues, for that carnally they were the seede of Abraham, as if that were sufficient security for them towards God, when as in the meane time they neglected the repentance, and faith, and workes of

g Rom. 4. 12.
h Iohn. 8. 39.

Abraham. The true children of Abraham are they ^g who walke in the steps of the faith of Abraham, and ^h do the workes of Abraham, which they not regarding, could not be accounted the sonnes of Abraham, whose of-spring was reckoned according to the spirit, not according to the flesh. Thus doth our Sauiour testifie of them that they beleueed not; saying vnto them: ⁱ Publicans and harlots shall go before you into the Kingdome of God: For Iohn came vnto you in the way of righteousnesse, and ye beleueed him not, but Publicans and harlots beleueed him; and ye, though ye saw it, were not moued with repentance afterward that ye might beleue him. Now is it not a wonder, that whereas it is apparent that they had no faith, yet Iohn Baptist should say vnto them, Trust not to your faith? Well, all this is nothing, he cannot serue the Popes turne that will not notably cogge and lye. The rest of his commentarie accordeth with this, where he foisteth in the satisfying of Gods iustice, there being nothing in the words of S. Iohn, that loundeth to that effect.

i Math. 21. 31.

14. W. BISHOP.

Cor 7. 16.

The 7. objection with M. Perkins. Paul setteth downe sundrie fruites of repentance, whereof one is reuenge, whereby repentant persons punish themselves to satisfie Gods iustice, for the temporall punishment of their sinnes.

M Perkins answereth. A repentant sinner must take vengeance of himselfe, and that is, to vse all meanes to subdue the corruption of nature, & to bridel carnal affection, which kind of affections are restraints properly, but no punishments; directed against the sinne, but not against the person,

Reply. I neuer saw a y writer so contradict himselfe, and so dull, that he doth not understand his owne words. If this subduing of our corrupt nature be restraints only from sinne hereafter, and not also punishments of sin past, how then doth the repentant sinner take vengeance of himselfe, which you affirme that he must do? Reuenge as euery simple body knoweth, is the requitall of euill past: We graunt that all satisfaction is directed against sinne, and not against the person, but for the great good of the man, albeit that for a season it may afflict, both his bodie and mind too, as Saint Pauls former Epistle did the Corinthians, but this sorrow being according vnto God, doth much benefit the person, as the Apostle declareth. For besides this reuenge taken on himselfe to appease appease Gods wrath, it breedeth (as it is in the text following) in our corrupt nature that touch not such chastisement, A feare to returne to sinne, least it be againe punished, for where there is no feare of paines, & much pleasure, thither our corruption will runne headlong: stirreth up also in vs, Indignation against sinne, & all the wicked instruments of it, A defence and clearing of ourselues, with the honest sort. And an emulation, and desire to flie as farre from sinne as othe our equals, and consequently A loue of vertue and honest life, which freeth vs fr^o that sorrow and all other troublesome passions, all which are plainly gathered out of the same text of S. Paul.

R. ABBOT.

The Greeke fathers Chrysestome Theophylact, Occumenius, and Hierome amongst the Latines, do referre the reuenge there spoken of by the Apostle to the punishment of the incestuous man, whereby they maintained the authority and due regard of the lawes of God. But we further very willingly yeeld, that by reuenge is also meant a wreaking of a mans anger, as I may terme it, vpon himselfe; being offended and grieued at himselfe for the sinne that he hath done, and therefore bending himselfe to crosse and thwart those desires by which he was led vnto it. This the Scripture teacheth vs by the termes of ^a denying our selues, ^b mortifying our earthly members, ^c suffering in the flesh, ^d crucifying the flesh with the affections and lusts of it, and ^e destroying of the body of sinne. Thus men occasion requiring, giue themselues ouer to fasting, and weeping, and mourning, and forbearing of accustomed delights, yea and to open rebuke and shame with men, hauing by publik offence made themselues a scandall to the church. This reuenge we denie not; we say that hereby we testifie both to God and men the displeasure and offence that we haue taken against our selues; we teach others to take heed, and carefully to shun those occasions wherby we haue fallen; we labour hereby that the temptations of sin may no more in the like sort preuaile against vs; but we are still to seeke of that vse which M. Bishop maketh of it, that this anger of ours against our selues is a price of satisfaction for the appeasing of Gods anger. To this being the very point, he saith neuer a word; he telleth vs of reuenge, but he prooueth not that this reuenge is a matter of ^a Math. 16. 24.

^b Col. 3. 5.
^c 1. Pet. 4. 1.
^d Gal 5. 24.
^e Rom. 6. 6.

satisfactiō. We say that to this reuenge of true & faithfull repentance God granteth remission of sinnes, but we say he granteth it, because we seeke it, not in the merit of our reuenge, but onely in the blood of Iesus Christ.

15 W. BISHOP.

Lastly saith M Perkins: They make three workes of satisfaction, Praier, Fasting, and Almes-deedes.

For the first, it is meere foolishnes to think, that a man by praier can satisfie for his sins, it is all one as if you had said, that a begger by asking an almes can deserue the almes, or a debtor by requesting his creditor to pardon his debt, should thereby pay his debt.

That Praier doth appease Gods iustice, and obtaine pardon, God himselfe is witnesse, saying: Call vpon me in the day of tribulation, & I will deliuer thee. Praier cannot be made without faith in Gods power, and hope in his goodnesse, and therefore must needs be pleasing in Gods sight: by praier we humble our selues before God, and acknowledge his omnipotencie, and our infirmity. By praier we lament with bitter teares our owne ingratitude, folly, and wickednes, & bewaile the grieuousnes of our sinnes: such praier made King Dauid (as his Psalmes do testifie) waer his couch with teares, making them his foode day and night: and by them he satisfied for his former offences. So did a farre greater sinner then he, King Manasse: who falling into tribulation, prayed vnto the Lord his God, & did great penance before the God of his fathers, and prayed, and intreated earnestly, and God heard his prayers, & brought him back againe to Ierusalem into his Kingdome. Now to M Perkins Similes. A begger doth not deserue his almes, because he makes not this former kind of prayer, but the short sleight one of the Protestants from the lips outward. The like we say of a debitor, whose creditor being a needy man, will not be paid without mony, but God who needs non of our goods, highly esteemeth of an humble & contrite heart, grieued much for hauing sinned in the sight of God, and humbly suing vnto him for pardon. To such a one he said: did I not forgie thee all thy debts, because thou besoughtst me?

Psal. 49.

2 Paral. 33.

Math. 18.

R. ABBOT.

Master Bishops arguments are like the foxes whelpes, neuer a one better then other and all starke naught. It is strange to see whas

what shuffling and shifting he useth to make some good shew of a bad cause. The question is, whether prayer be a worke of satisfaction, that is, a worke of that woorth and price, as that by the merit thereof we make God a iust and sufficient recompence for the offence that we haue done. For the prooffe hercot he alledgeth the sentence of the Psalme; Call vpon me in the tyme of trouble, and I will beare thee. So then his reason is this, God hath promised to heare vs when we pray vnto him, therefore prayer is a worke of satisfaction. As much as if he should say, the prince promiseth a traitour vpon his submission and intreatie to giue him his pardon: therefore his submission and intreaty is a sufficient recompence for his treason. We may see how matuellously the Romaine religion sharpeneth mens eye-sight, that they can see mans satisfaction there, where God onely signifieth his owne mercifull disposition. Yea but God doth thereby witnessse, that prayer doth appease Gods iustice and obtaine pardon. Yea but what need a pardon when the sin is already pardoned? for prayer is made a worke of satisfaction after the forgiveness of the sinne, as I haue shewed before. A very ridiculous deuice, that God first remitteth the trespassse, and we afterwards for a punishment, and to make God amends and satisfaction, must say, Forgiue vs our trespassses. Therefore when he speaketh of obtaining pardon, he doth but seeke by words of truth to colour absurd dotages of falshood and error. The vse of prayer is indeed not to make satisfaction, but to craue pardon. It appeaseth Gods iustice by the intreating of his mercy, whilest we beseech him to heare vs, not for our prayers sake, but for Christs sake; not by the merit of our satisfaction, but by vertue of his intercession; not for the works sake which we do, but for his truths sake, for that he hath promised so to do to them that call vpon him. By our prayer we request him to forgiue vs, that is, not to vrge vs to satisfaction, and is it not an absurd fancy to affirme prayer it selfe to be a satisfaction? And what do men in this case, but mock and dally with God, in asking him forgiveness, when in the meane time they thinke to make him a full and iust requitall of his wrongs, so that there shall be nothing to be forgiven? For what remaineth to be forgiven where there is yeilded a sufficient recompence for the offence done? M Bishop goeth on and telleth vs, that prayer cannot be made without faith. It is true, & by faith it is that our prayer obtaineth all things at Gods hand.

b Ambrosio Præsent. lib. 2.
cap. 8. tanquam
ex syngrapha sides impetrat, nõ tanquam ex debite.

hand. But of faith it is true which S. Ambrose saith, that^b it obtaineth as by deed of gift, not by way of debt. It looketh not to our satisfaction, but to the promise of God through the mediation of Iesus Christ. Further he allegeth idly and impertinently, that praier is pleasing vnto God: that by it we humble our selues before him, acknowledging his omnipotencie, and our owne infirmity; that thereby wee lament and bewaile the grieuousnesse of our sinnes. He mentioneth King David watering his couch with teares, and making them his foode day & night: & Manasses greatly humbling himselfe, as the text saith, (not doing great penãce as he translateth) & intreating the Lord, so as that the Lord heard him, &c. Now all these things are according to the Proverbe, Pro arvis ligones; we call for rakes, & he sends vs mattocke; we demand one thing, and he answereth another. We say that praier is pleasing to God; we confesse all these vses and effects thereof, but what is all this to the proouing of satisfaction? how doth hee make it appeare that that which David and Manasses did, they did it with opinion or purpose to make satisfaction for their sinnes? I would aske him here with what face hee could thus set himselfe to delude his Reader with empty shadowes and shewes of vaine discourse, but that I see his whole booke in a manner is made of such delusions. But here to shew the absurditie of this assertion of theirs, that praier is a matter of satisfaction, M. Perkins had said, that it is all one as if they should say, that a begger by asking of almes should deserue his almes, or that a debtor by requesting his creditor to pardon the debt, should hereby pay the debt. See now what a schollerlike answer M. Bishop hath returned. To the first he saith, A begger doth not deserue his almes, because he makes not this former kind of praier, but the short sleight one of the Protestants from the lippes outward. Thus full simply he giueth a gird at the Protestants prayers, to shift himselfe from answering for their owne. But what if the begger do make that kind of prayer, and with much lamentation craue an almes, is he thereby to expect it as deserued and due vnto him? hath he hereby any iust right and title to that which he craueth? Surely, if it be due vnto him, it is no almes, or if it be an almes, then it is not due vnto him. Why could not Master Bishop conceiue the instance as well of the earnest and hearty request of the begger, as of that short sleight one from the lips outward, but that he was

was put to his shifts, and was glad thus in a cloud to steale away? But it is some further matter that he hath respect vnto. For we Protestants are content to pray simply as Christ hath taught, not thinking any vertue to consist in multitude of words, nor imagining that by the length of our prayers we are to preuaile with God, or that by the often saying of them he is the more affected with them, but measuring prayer by the intention and affection of the heart, vnering it selfe according to the motion of it selfe, either by few or many words. We pray not by rule, nor offer our deuotions to God by task and tale, knowing it to be but babbling to moue a necessary matter to God with superfluous and needlesse words. But the new Catholikes are like the old heathens, who thought themselves to be the better heard for their much babbling and often repeating, and therefore they say their prayers by number and stint, as if they would make therof a charme of inchantment to bind God to their will. A man for a penance must say so many Pater nosters, and so many Auenaries, and so many Creedes, and when he hath so done, he is man good enough, he hath made satisfaction for his sinnes. In one of their bookes there are seuen short prayers before which there is this Rubricke: Whosoever being in the state of grace, shall deuoutly say these seuen prayers following before the Crucifixe, with seuen Pater nosters, and seuen Auenaries, he shall obtaine fixe & fifty thousand yeares of pardon: fourteene thousand granted by Saint Gregorie, fourtene thousand by Nicholas the fifth, and those doubled by Six: as the fourth. O what a horrible vertue there is in the number of Seuen, when it comes to prayers and pater nosters, and Auenaries, what a foule rule would he make in Purgatorie, that should vse euery day to say these prayers? He should haue so many thousand yeares to spare from himselfe as that he might rid a great murther of soules out of that cruell prison. Such a like foolerie do we finde in their Jesus Psalter, commended for that the glorious name of Iesus is therein called upon foure hundred and fiftie times: in which there are fifteene principall petitions, which must be said euery one by themselves ten times, and you may say them upon your tenne fingers, (to be sure to keepe iust reckoning) or else upon tenne beades, and in euery of these tenne times the name of Iesus is thrice repeated, thirty times in euery petition, as for example:

d. August. Epist.
121 c. p. 10.
Multum lo-
quor non accipit
magis iustitiam
agere verba.
c. Math. 6. 7.

f. Horneberta blar. Virg. se-
culum usum Sermon. Qui-curaque in statu
gratie exstens
deuo è dixerit
sep. em orationes
sequen. e. i. c. 7.
Pater noster. c.
7. Ave Maria
c. e. imaginem
fie a u. meriti-
tur 36 milia
annorum man-
gent &c.

g. Jesus Psalter
in the end of the Manual of meditation, &c.

- 1 Iesu, Iesu, Iesu, mercie.
- 2 Iesu, Iesu, Iesu, mercy.
- 3 Iesu, Iesu, Iesu, mercy. &c.

The second petition.

- 1 Iesu, Iesu, Iesu, helpe me.
- 2 Iesu, Iesu, Iesu, helpe me.
- 3 Iesu, Iesu, Iesu, helpe me. &c.

The third petition.

- 1 Iesu, Iesu, Iesu, strength me.
- 2 Iesu, Iesu, Iesu, strength me.
- 3 Iesu, Iesu, Iesu, strength me, &c. till in every one ye make vp the number often. Now I trow the short sleight prayers of the Protestants be not comparable to these deuotions: no maruell if both heauen and hell be coniured at so often repeating of the name of Iesus. What Circe might be thought likely to bewitch men so farre, as to giue any regard to such drunken fancies? What Prophet, or Apostle, or Father, or Martyr, or Confessor hath giuen the any example of praying in this sort? Or if they haue no example of it, why do they thus leudly entangle simple soules with an opinion of deuotion in that wherein there is nothing but absurd and heathenish superstition? These now are the prayers of satisfaction, by which M. Bishop will haue vs to vnderstand, that there is a difference betwixt Catholikes and beggers; for Catholikes say their prayers often ouer, and thereby they merit much. And yet we see, that an importunate hungry begger will stand long, & go ouer his beggers dittie, as often as M. Bishops penitent doth his Pater noster and his Creed, who for all that, can claime nothing as due vnto him for the paines that he hath taken. And if a begger by his instance and earnestnesse can merit nothing at a mans hands, shall we thinke that a Catholike begger by his instance can merit and deserue at the hands of God? Beleeue it that list: as for vs we know that prayer craueth by way of almes, and therefore by way of merit can expect nothing.

His exception to M. Perkins second comparison is as ridiculous and vaine as the former: The like we say of a debter, saith he, whose creditor being a needy man will not be payed without money. But what if the creditor be not a needy man, but will be content without any money money to remit the debt? What are all creditours needy men, and are there none found that forgieue debts? doth M. Bishop know neuer a Catholike that sheweth so great compassion vpon a poore man, humbly intreating him in that behalfe? If he do not, wee suspect their charity: if he doe, wee suspect his honesty, who would mocke his Reader with such a paltry shif, telling vs an idle tale, what it is wherewith the creditor is payed, when our speech is of intreaty to remit the debt. But in this case it is cleere, that as it is absurd to say, that the debtors intreaty for the forgiuing of his debt may be called a satisfaction for the debt: so it is absurd to say, that our prayer to God for the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, may be called a satisfaction for our sinnes. There is no disproportion whence he may take any aduantage against the force of this exception. But yet further he maketh God by this meanes like vnto his needy creditour. For as the creditor must bee appeased by money, so must God by merit, and on both parts satisfaction is required. What it is wherewith the satisfaction is made it skilleth not, be it to God one way, and to the creditor another way; but on both sides there must be iust and worthy satisfaction. Hee would make vs beleue, that God freely forgiueth nothing, but either wee must by merit purchase our release, or else wee must lye by it, till wee haue payed the vttermost farthing. Yea & that must be many times for money also: for although God himselfe take no mony for Pardons, yet the Vicar of Rome doth for him. An humble and contrite heart will not serue the turne, he must pay for it that will be pardoned. Thus M. Bishops shifts fall out amisse on euery side, and hee can say nothing to serue his turne. Better were it for him to yeeld to the truth, then thus to shame himselfe by fighting so childishly against it. In a word we tell him, that God indeede esteemeth an humble and contrite heart, grieuing for sinne, and suing for pardon, but hee esteemeth the same as suing for pardon, not as presuming of satisfaction. A strange suter is he, that thinketh suite to be satisfaction, or that by requesting a pardon he iustly deserueth to be pardoned. He alledgeth that it is said, ^{h Mat. 18. 23} Did not I forgiue thee the debt, because thou besoughtest me, but yet he doth not find that it is said, I forgaued thee the debt, because by beseeching me thou madest me a full recopence & satisfaction for the debt. If he had made satisfaction therby, then it should not haue bin said afterwards, which M. Bishop should haue remembered: His master was wroth, and delivered him to the paylers till he should pay all that was due vnto him. There could nothing remaine due, where iust satisfaction had bene made.

¶ Ver. 34.

16. W. BISHOP.

Secondly, saith M. Perkins: Fasting is a thing indifferent of the same nature with eating and drinking, no more conterring to the kingdome of heauen, then eating and drinking doth. What an Epicurian and fleshy doctrine is this? Why then did the Numinis fast, put on sack-cloth, and lye on the ground (all which bodily afflictions are reduced to fasting) rather then eate, and drinke, and presume of Gods mercy, if the one had bene as acceptable to God as the other? Why is S. Iohn Baptist commended for his rough garments and thin diet, if cherishing the flesh pleae God as well as punishing of it? Christ saith expressly: That if we fast in secret, his heauenly Father will repay vs openly: will bee reward eating and drinking so liberally: but of fasting we shall haue a whole Chapter heereafter. Therefore briefly I here conclude, that this doctrine tendeth to the establishment of the kingdome of Atheists and Epicures, whose sweet speech is: Let vs eate, and let vs drinke, for after death there is no pleasure: true for such bells-gods and their followers.

R. ABBOT.

That fasting of it self is a thing indifferent neuer wise man made any doubt. No man euer yet in a right mind thought it to be a matter of vertue to keepe a mans belly emptie. Surely, if to fast be a vertue, then to eate and drink is a vice, because whatsoeuer is contrary to vertue is vice. If fasting of it selfe bee a good worke, a man may do a good worke against his will, because a man may be made to fast, when he hath more will to eate. But it might please his wisdom to vnderstand, that some things simply and of themselues are good: other some things simply and of themselues are euill: other some of themselues are neither good nor euill, but yet are instruments and may be vsed either to good or euill. Of this last kind are riches, health, strength, walking, sitting, waking, sleeping, marriage, virgi

virginity, and such like, by which for the things themselves a man is neither the better nor the worse, but by a good man they may be applyed to good, and by an euill man to euill. Of the same nature are eating, drinking, fasting, for none of which can a man be called better then another man, because they are things indifferently common both to good and euill, although by a good man they may be vled to good. And therefore as Iohn Baptist came ^a xei. a Mat. 11.18. 19. they eating nor drinking, so the sonne of man came both eating & drinking, to giue to vnderstand, that neither eating nor fasting of themselves do make vs any whit the more accepted in the sight of God. Neither did our Sauiour Christ by eating and drinking cherish the flesh in such sort as it is vnlawful to cherish the flesh which is ment of the vices, nor of the substance of the flesh, by wantonnesse, intemperancy, and excesse, nor by moderate and sober feeding and diet: in which respect let him remember what the Apostle saith, that neucr any man hated his own flesh, but loueth and cheriseth it, euen as the Lord doth the Church: thereby noting them to be vnna- b Eph. 5.29. turall monsters rather then men, of whom he speaketh in another place, who place religion in not sparing the body, and not h.uing it in any honor to satisfie the flesh. As for the Niniuites, if they had but only fasted, they had done as good as nothing, what had they done c Col. 2.23. more thē their cattle did? But they fasted to humble themselves to God, and to shew their feare of his iudgement, and for these things God vouchsafed to respect their fast. And thus he that ^d fasteth in secret, not to fast, but ^e by fasting to cherish prayer; not to afflict the body, but to afflict the soule: that is, that vltim the one not for it selfe, but for the other, not for ^f bodily, but for spiritual and godly exercise, him the Father seeth in secret, and wil reward him openly. It is not simply fasting, that God requireth, but humiliation and prayer; he requireth fasting accidentally, onely as a support and help thereof. Therefore the doctrine of Popery is most absurd and senselesse, which maketh fasting distinct, y by it selfe, and for it selfe, not onely an act of Gods worship, but also a matter of merit, such as whereby wee make satisfaction to God, and purchase of him the remission of our sinnes. M. Bishop alledgeth somewhat concerning fasting, as we see, but concerning this vse of fasting, thogh it were the matter in hand, he had nothing at all to say. As for his cauls they are handled before in ^g answer to his Epistle to the King. The kingdom g Eccl. 2.26.

of Athiests & Epicures in the whole world doth not flourish more then in the Court and Church of Rome, and I do almost perswade my selfe, that M. Bishop in his owne conscience is perswaded that it is so. I doubt not but he would tell a pretty tale in this behalfe concerning their masters the Iesuites, but that now his tongue is tyed vp, and he must say no more, he hath bene taught what it is to tel vs tales out of their schoole.

17 W. BISHOP.

Lastly, he saith, that almes-deeds cannot be works of satisfaction for sinnes: for when we giue them as we ought, we do but our duty, and wee may as well say, that a man by paying one debt, may discharge another, as to say by doing his duty, he may satisfie Gods iustice for the punishmēt of his sinnes. A man might suppose, that this man were pretily well seene in Carolo Buffone, that thus rusteth in graue matters with his simple Similes.

That almes-deeds redeeme our sins, purge vs from them & make all things cleane vnto vs, hath bene already proued out of holy Scriptures, I will ioine thereunto this one testimony of that holy Martyr S. Cypriā: Our frailty could not tell what to do, vnlesse the goodnes of God by teaching vs the workes of iustice and mercy, had shewed vs a certaine way of preferuing our saluation, which is that with almes-deeds we might wash cleane away the filth of sins, which wee had contracted after Baptisme. The holy Ghost speaketh in the Scripture and saith: Sinnes are purged by almes-deeds and faith.

Now to M. Perkins Simile. We deny that a man is bound to giue all the almes that he can: we are bound to giue that which we may well spare, when there is great want: but almes (which is a part of satisfactiō) is not giuen out of our superfluitie, but spared from our necessarie vses, and is many times bestowed, when ther is no such great need, vpon building Schooles, Colledges, Hospitals and Chapples. And this may serue to answer M. Perkins Similes against these three works of satisfaction. If any man desire to know why we make speciall reckoning of these three works, it is principally for two causes: First, we being to satisfie, must performe it with such things as be our owne, which be of three sorts, either they belong to our soule, or to our bodie, or to our externall goods. The goods of our mind we offer to God by prayer, by fasting, and other reasonable bodily discipline, we exhibite vnto him a living hoast, holy and pleasing God. By almesdeeds we make him an agreeable present Rom. 1. 12. of our goods. Secondly, all sinne as S. Iohn teacheth, may be reduced into three principall heads. The concupifcence of the flesh, that is lechery, 1. Epist. 2. which is cooled by fasting & such like afflicting of the body: Concupifcence of the eyes, covetousnesse, which is purged and chased away by almesdeeds: and pride of life, which is suppressed by humble prayer, and often meditation of our owne miseries.

R. ABBOT.

Simple similes, saith M. Bishop. Now he may be taken for a very simple mā, who to answer simple similes is forced to vse such simple shifts. We may wonder at the blindness of these arrogant and presumptuous hypocrites, who thus stand vpon their terms with God, of doing more for him then they are bound to do, more then by dutie they owne vnto him. Every man of common ordinary pietie and deuotion confesseth, that whatsoeuer we are, or whatsoeuer we haue, either within vs or without vs, we owe all to God. ^a In him Act. 17. 28. we liue, and moue, and haue our being. Of his bountie we receiue, and by his mercy we enioy whatsoeuer we enioy. So little interest haue we in any thing in his sight, as that at his commaundement we are to leaue whatsoeuer we haue. In all the gifts therefore which we giue in his name and for his sake, we are to say and to acknowledge, Tua ex tuis tibi offerimus, Of thine owne we offer vnto thee that which is thine owne, and nothing but thine owne. And although God haue not determined vnto euery man all particular vses of those benefites wherewith he hath endowed them, yet he hath taught euery man to remember himselfe to be the Lords Steward for that portio which he hath, and that to him he shall giue account of the disposing of it. He hath giuē euery man leaue to vse the same according to the state and calling whereunto he is called, and for the lawfull vpholding and increasing of it, and accordingly to haue respect of those that are his, ^b for whom he that careth not to provide, hath denied his faith, and is worse then an infidel; b. 1. Tim. 5. 8. but yet so, as that he c other wise also learne to do good works for necessary vses, that he be not vnfruitfull; Tit. 3. 14. that as he is a member of the body of Christ, so he employ that which he hath as occasio requireth, to the publike benefit and vse of the same body. And this is one part of the thankes that we ow vnto almighty God, not to think much when there is cause to bestow some part of that which we haue to the honor & seruice of him at whose hands we haue receiued all. Which, he that neglecteth to do, and turneth all to priuate vse, and to the building of his owne house, bringeth vpon himselfe the iudgement denounced by the Prophet, and commonly verified before our eyes, ^d He that conuerteth an euil conuentionnes to himselfe, that he may set his nest on high to escape frō the power of euil, consulteth shame to his owne house. Now seeing all that we haue is Gods, and we can no way sufficiently recompence the mercy that he hath shewed in bestowing the same vpon vs, what extreame madnesse is it to imagine, that thereout we can yeeld him a iust and worthy price of redemption and satisfactiō for our sins? Spare we neuer so much from our necessary vses, and giue we neuer so much as it were out of our owne bellies, yet our consciences should tell vs that it is not the thousandth part of that which God hath deserued of vs; and shall we be so witlesse as to thinke that that wee doe may be a sufficient recompence for the wrongs that we haue done vnto him? It is worthy to be noted which the Apostle teacheth vs, that ^e to be willing beyond our power to minister to the Saints is a grace of God bestowed vpon vs. It is the fruite of Gods loue towards vs to carry this minde towards those that are his. What strange men then are they, who of that which is the effect of Gods loue and mercie towards vs, will make a matter of our merite and desert towards God? In a word, M. Bishops answer is a most idle dreame; and because we can do nothing but what we owe to God, and all infinitely too little to shew forth our thankfulnessse towards him, we must say as M. Perkins doth, that in giuing almes as we ought, we do but our dutie; and that to say that by almes-deeds we may satisfie for our sinnes, is the same as to say, that a man by paying one debt may discharge another. But yet it concerneth them to sticke hard for the maintaining of this deuce, for in all the ports of Rome there is not a ship that hath brought in more rich lading then this hath done. For hereby they haue had the commaundement of mens purses, their goods and lands; and whilest they haue borne them in hand, that from necessary vses they must take somewhat for the redeeming of their sins, they haue made them rob their wiues, their Habac. 2.9.10.

2. Cor. 8.13.

their children, posteritie and friends, to bestow vpon holy Church, as they called, the gifts which they craued for themselues. By this pretence, like the Grasshoppers of Egypt, they deuoured all that was ^{f Exod. 10. 15.} green upon the earth: whatsoeuer was delightfome and pleasant they found meanes to make it theirs. And hence came those rich endowments of religious houses, men vpon conscience of sinne sparing no cost, in false hope to find some comfort thereby, as ^{g Answer to the Epitt. Ded. sect. 3. 1.} before was said, And this point of satisfaction was so much the more willingly entertained, because they that wer loth to trouble themselues with fasting and praying, yet found helpe enough hereby, for that ^{h Thron. Aquin. suppl. q. 15. m. 2. ad 3. Eleemosyn. aliorum vices supplere potest in quantum alia satisfactionis opera per elemosynam quisque sibi mercatur quodammodo in istis quibus elemosynam tribuit.} almes may supply or serue instead of the rest, in as much as by it a man in some sort buyeth for himselfe the other workes of satisfactiō in them to whom he giueth almes. This is the wonderfull vertue of the almes that is enioyned by a Popish Priest, that when a man neither fasteth nor prayeth, yet it maketh other mens fastings and prayers serue the turne for the remission of his sin. And this was the notable cosening deuce of those holy votaries, to make men beleue (as before hath bene mentioned) that they had a facultie to transport their merits and satisfactions to the vse of them that were beneficial vnto them, verifying in themselues that which the Apostle S. Peter had prophesied of them, ^{i 2. Pet. 2. 3.} They shall make merchandize of you. But M. Bishop here in malice to the Iesuits, quite passeth by religious houses, as if the almes of satisfaction did not belong to them. Howsoeuer he be outwardly pacified, yet manet alia mente repositum, it is neither forgotten nor forgotten, if he knew which way to worke his will. As for Schooles, Colledges, Hospitals, Chappels, the building of them (if it be in the true faith of Christ) is a gracious and godly worke, but when they are so done, they are done as testimonies of our thankfulness and dutie to God, not as satisfactions for our sins. Now although he haue hitherto proved nothing as touching satisfaction, yet presuming that he hath so done, he ioyneth to that supposed prooffe the testimony of Cyprian, saying that ^{k Cyp. de Eleem. Nec habebat quid fragilitatis humane infirmitas atque imbecillitas faceret nisi iterū pietas diuina subueniens iusticie & misericordie operibus ostensis viam quandam tuende salutis aperiret, ut sordēs post modum quascunque contrahimus elemosina ablaueret} our frailty & weaknes could not tell what to do vnlesse the mercy of God helping vs had by shewing vs the workes of iustice & mercy, opened vs a way for the preserving of our saluatiō, that by almes deede we cleanse or wash away whatsoeuer filth of sin we contract after baptisme. Which words of Cyprian, it we construe them in rigour as they sound, do containe a most dangerous and vnchristian assertion, and such as all men rightly minded do abhorre, that by Christ all our sinnes are forgiven in baptisme whatsoever we haue done, but that whatsoever we sinne afterwards is to be purged and cleansed by our selues. Whereof it must follow, that we who are baptized in infancie haue no further benefite of Christs redemption, but that we receive then for the freeing of vs from the bond of originall vncleanness. Yea and if the way whereby after baptisme we are to be cleansed from our sinnes be almes, in what case must they be who onely receive almes, and haue none to giue, & therefore want that meanes for the forgiveness of their sinnes? But the true doctrine of the Gospel setteth Christ before vs, not onely in baptisme, but afterwards also to be the Lambe of God that taketh away the sinne of the world. S. Iohn being baptized, spea- keth of himselfe amongst others, and saith it to them that are bap- tized, If any man sinne, we haue an Aduocate with the Fathers, Iesus Christ the iust, and he is the propitiation for our sinnes. The true con- fession of which point of faith S. Austin delinereh, in saying that the flesh of Christ is the true and onely sacrifice for sinnes, not onely those which altogether are washed away in baptisme but those also which afterwards steale upon vs by the frailtie of this life, for which the whole Church crieth daily in prayer to God, forgive vs our trespasses, and they are forgiven vs by that onely sacrifice for sinnes. We learne here another manner of lesson then Cyprian there teacheth, that after baptisme not the sacrifice of our almes, but the onely sacrifice of the bodie of Christ is the remission of our sinnes. M. Bishop must giue vs leaue rather to beleue Austine speaking according to the Scripture, then Cyprian speaking directly against the Scripture. And therefore wee answer him as the same Austine did the Donatists, when they alledged an Epistle of Cyprian against him, We do Cyprian no wrong to distinguish any writings of his from the authoritie of holy Scripture. We are not bound to the authoritie of this epistle (or sermon) because we account not Cyprians writings as cano- nicall, but consider them by the Canonicall Scriptures, and what therein agreeth to the authority of holy Scripture, we receive it with his praise, but what agreeth not by his leaue we refuse it. Albeit because we find Cyprian elsewhere acknowledging in the name of all the faithfull, that we haue Christ with the Father to be the aduocate for our sinnes,

1. Ioh. 1. 29.
 m 1. Ioh. 2. 2.
 n August. cont.
 2. epist. Pelag. li. 3.
 ca. 6. Caro Christi verū est & uni-
 cum sacrificium
 pro peccatis, non solum in quo
 uniuersa in bap-
 tismo & diluuntur;
 vnde in motum
 his que post ex-
 huius vite infir-
 mitate resurrept,
 propter que quoti-
 dianū uniuersa in oratione ad Deū clamant Ecclesia, Domine nobis,
 & cetera dicitur un-
 tur nobis per sin-
 guā sacrificiū
 pro peccatis.
 o C. ne. Crescon.
 lib. 2. cap. 31. Nos nullam Cyprianū
 facimus iniuriā
 quā eius quælibet
 dixerat a canoni-
 ca diuinarum Scripturarum
 auctoritate dis-
 tinguimus, & c.
 Et cap. 32. Ego
 huius Epistole
 auctoritate non tenor, quia literas Cypriani non canonicas ha-
 beo, sed eas ex ca-
 nonicis considero,
 et quod in eis di-
 uinū scripturā auctoritati congruit, cum laude eius acci-
 pro, quod autem
 non congruit, cum

pace eius respuo. p Cyprian. de orat. Dom. Ipsum habemus apud Patrem Aduocatum pro peccatis nostris, the reb y thereby confessing the effect of Christs redemption to be extended to the whole course of our life, we dare not conceiue, how soeuer his words be very harsh, that his meaning was so bad as thereby it may seeme to be. And to iustifie himself to conceiue no otherwise but that the washing and cleansing of vs from our sinnes amidst all our almes and deuotions consisteth not in that which we do, but in the blood of Christ, he saith in another place, O mercifull Lord, how often haue I transgressed the rules of thy doctrine; how often (O holy Lord) haue I despised thy commandements, and when thou saidst vnto me, Returne, I haue not returned; when thou threatnedst, I feared not, when thou wast good and gentle, I haue prouoked thee: beyond seuentie times seuen times I haue sinned against heauen and before thee. Who shall wash away so much filth? who shall take away the mucke that is thus growne together? Let Peter say what he will (in refusing to be washed) we haue need that thou wash vs, for we cannot wash our selues, but in all things that we do, we stand in need of the washing of thy pardon and mercy. With thee is the well of life, and the infinite death of mercies which haue bene from euerlasting: thou hast washed vs in baptisme, thou hast washed vs in thy blood, thou alwayes wastest vs by forgiving our daily sinnes. By these words he giu. th plainly to vnderstand, that he did not think the washing and cleansing of vs to consist in the merit of our almes, but in the forgiuencesse of our sins. He confesseth that in all that we do, we stand in need of pardon, and therefore cannot be imagined to thinke that any thing that we do is a satisfaction for our sinnes. In the other words therefore we must conceiue his purpose to be onely to note and set forth the acts and affections of them who truly and faithfully seeke remission of their sins by the mercie of God in the blood of Iesus Christ, albeit being instant and earnest, as men are wont to be to presse that that he had in hand, he runneth into inconuenient phrales and speeches, which otherwise stand not with the rule of Christian faith. Those workes of mercie and compassion towards our brethren, are the true fruites and effects, the consequents and companions of that contrite and broken heart, that repentance and faith to which God hath made the promise of his mercy, and therefore because in the doing thereof we find mercy, he so speaketh thereof as if by the workes themselves we obtained that mercie, when yet it is not for the workes like that God accepteth vs, but for Christs sake, whom by our workes

*c Idem, ser. de ab-lus peccati. Cicmonissime magister quales ego
a crimine tue
transgressus sum
regum, iniquitas culcia tua Do-
mine sanble con-tremisi, & cum diceret mihi, Re-
uertere, non sum reuerfus eum miseris, non renunciam bonis
esset et lenis, ex-spectans sus. Pl-
tra sep uagies
septies, in eorum & coram te pre-caui. Quis tot ser-dos abluet? quis
abradet siccora conglobata? Quicquid dicat Petrus, necesse est
v' ipse no. ablu-
as, neque enim
lauare nos possu-
mas sed i' iorum-
bus que agimus
i' u' u' gentis tue
lauare i' indigemus, &c. Apud
te foras v' e' e' i,
et misericordiam
que a' fieri sunt
pro, iudicis i' i' i' nos, i' b' u' i' nos baptismo, i' u' i' i'
finge i' u' o, f' i' u' i' u' o, q' ot' i' u' i' u' o, q' ot' i' u' i' u' o, q' o-*

we shew that we vnfaignedly seeke, and do truly belecue in him. And as for the place of Scripture which he alledgeth, though by error of the scribe perhaps it be, that there is noted in the margent be fourth of Tobie, yet these words not being found in Tobie, and the words that are in Tobie being cited afterwards, he therein aludeth vndoubtedly to a saying of Salomon, in the Prouerbes; but forcing the text, and putting in almes and faith in steed of mercy and truth. Which words of Solomon, if a whining aduersary by instance and importunitie will vrge vpon vs to expound of the mercie and truth of man, it must be read and construed according to the same meaning which is already expressed, ^d In mercy and truth iniquitie shall be forgiven, that is, where mercy and truth are, there is forgiveness of sinnes, as to note the conditions of the persons whose sins are forgiven, not the thing by vertue whereof they are forgiven. But we haue no warrant of any other Scripture in any other meaning to tie it to our mercy and truth, and therefore must vnderstand it of the mercie and truth of God, of which the Prophet Dauid speaketh, when hauing signified the forgiveness of the sinnes of Gods people, and the nearnesse of his saluation to them that feare him, he addeth for the cause thereof, ^e Mercy and truth are met together. Of which also the Euangelist S. Iohn saith, ^f Grace and truth, that is, mercie and truth come by Iesus Christ. Thus then by mercie and truth iniquitie is forgiven; not by any merite or worke of ours, not by any satisfaction that we can make, but by the mercie of God, truly performing the promise that he hath made of the remission of sinnes by the blood of Iesus Christ. As for the booke of Tobie noted as I said in the margent, and from whence Cyprian afterwards alledgeth other words of almes deliuering from death and purging all sinne, it is not of sufficient authoritie to proue vnto vs any matter of faith, the ancient Church testifying of it, and the rest of the same sort, as Hierome and Ruffinus haue recorded, that ^g they are not canonicall, and S. Anstine affirming that ^h the writings which are not in the Canon of the Iewes (as none are, but what they had written in their owne tongue) are not with so great authority alledged in matters of question and contradiction. Albeit we will not disanow those words in that meaning, as I haue before expressed, that almes deeds deliuer from death and purge vs from sinne, as arguments for prooffe that wee are deliuered from death and purged from sin, d Prou. 16. 3.

e Psal 85. 10.

f John 1. 17.

g Hieron. prolog. 2. cat. Jgitur sequentia Solomonis & Iesu filij Sinae liber, & Iudith & Tobias non sunt in Canone. Sic Ruffin in expof. Symb. h August de ciuit. Dei lib. 17. ca. 10. Aduersus contradictores non tantum a firmate professione que scripta non sunt in Canone. Ind. 20. 17. 11.

not as causes effecting and working the same purgation, or if we will vse the name of causes, as causes to our apprehension & knowledge, not as causes of the essence and being of the thing. But take all these speeches how we wil, it shal appeare (God willing) in the next sectiō that they make nothing at al for M. Bishop, and that they are impudently wrested to that purpose for which hec alledgeth them. In the meane time for the conclusion of this lectiō he telleth vs a reason why they make speciall reckoning of these three workes for satisfaction, but the ground of his reason fully overthroweth all the assertion thereof, Being to satisfie (saith he) wee must performe it with such things as be our owne. But say we, wee haue nothing of our owne, but whatsoeuer we haue is his, ⁱ of whom, and ⁱ through whom, and ⁱ for whom are all things. Therefore as before ha h bin concluded, we cannot satisfie at all. Whether they be goods of the mind, or of the body, or externall goods, we owe all vnto him, and we do but pay him with his owne. His applying of the words of the Apostle to fasting is absurd. Reasonable bodily discipline, saith he; whereas the Apostle by ^k reasonable seruice meanceth that that is mentall and spirituall, and thereby agreeable to God, who is ^l a spi- ^{k Rom. 12. 1.} rit, and will be worshipped in spirit and truth, not any ^m bodily exercise ^{l Iohn 4. 24.} which profiteth little, as the same Apostle speaketh. So the other words of a liuing sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, are misapplied to a particular act of fasting, hauing a generall reference to the whole course of a Christian life and conuersation. I omit the rest of his words as idle.

18. W. BISHOP.

But now to knit up this question: let vs heare briefly what the best learned and purest antiquity hath taught of this satisfaction done by man; and because M Perkins began with Tertullian, omitting his auncients: let vs first heare what he saith of it in his booke of penance. How foolish is it (saith he) not to fulfill our penance, and yet to expect pardon of our sinnes, this is not to tender the price, and yet to put out a hand for the reward: for God hath decreed to set the pardon at this price: he proposeth impunity to bee redeemed with this recompence of penance.

His equall in standing, and better in learning, Origen thus discourseth:

seth: See our good Lord tempering mercy with severity, and weighing the measure of the punishment in a iust and merciful balance: he deliuereth not vp a sinner for euer. But looke how long time thou knowest thy self to haue offended, so long do thou humble thy selfe to God, and satisfie him in the confession of penance.

That glorious Martyr, and most learned Archbishop S. Cyprian, is wonderful vehement against them that would not haue seuerer penance done by such as fell in persecutiō: saying: That such indiscreet men labour tooth and naile, that satisfaction be not done to God, highly offended against them. And saith further, That hee who withdraweth our brethren from these workes of satisfaction, doth miserably deceiue them, causing them that might do true penance, & satisfie God their mercifull Father, with their prayer and works, to perish daily, and to be more and more seduced to their further damnation.

S. Basil saith: Look to thy selfe, that according to the proportion of thy fault thou maist hence also borrow some helpe of recouering thy health. Is it a great and grieuous offence? it hath then need of much confession, bitter teares, a sharpe combat of watching, - and vncessant and continued fasting: if the offence were light and more tollerable, yet let the penance be equall vnto it.

Grat in sanct. lum. S. Gregory Naxianzē saith: It is as great an euil to pardon without some punishment, as to punish without all pity. For as that doth loose the bridle to all licentiousnesse, so this doth straine it too much.

By compassion on the poore and faith, sinnes are purged, therefore let vs be clenfed by this compassion, let vs scoure out the spots and filth of our soules with this egregious herb that makes it white, some as wool, others as snow, according to the proportion of euery mans compassion and almes.

De Helia & Icañ. S. Ambrose saith, Wee haue many helpes whereby wee may redeeme our sinnes: hast thou money? redeeme thy sinne, not that our Lord is to be bought and sold, but thou thy self art sold by thy sins, redeeme thy selfe with thy workes, redeeme thee with thy money. And, how could we be saued, vnlesse wee washed away our sins by fasting?

S. Hierome maketh Paula a blessed maion say, My face is to be disfigured, which against the commaundement of God I painted: my body is to bee afflicted that hath taken so great pleasure: my

Hon. 3. in lib. Judic.

Lib. 1. ep. 3.

Lib. 3. ep. 14.

Orat. in illa verba, ut rōde tibi. Idem Ambr ad virg. l. 2. cap. 8.

Jdm de paup. auor.

De Helia & Icañ.

Epist. 82.

often laughter is to be recompenced with continuall weeping: my silkes and soft clothing is to bee changed into rough haire. Read another Epistle of his to the same Eustochium, about the preserving of her virginity, and see what penance himselfe did, being a most vertuous young man. Ad Eustoch. de o-bisu Paul'e.

S. Augustin saith, He that is truly penitent, looks to nothing else then that he leaues not unpunished the sinne which he committed: For by that meanes, not spating our selues, he whose high and iust iudgement no contemptuous person can escape, doth spare vs. Epist. 54.

And hee sheweth how that a penitent sinner doth come to the Priest, and receiue of him the measure of his satisfaction. And saith directly against our protestant possion, That it is not sufficient to amend our manners, and to depart from the euill which wee haue committed, vnlesse we do also satisfie God for those things which we had done. Lib. 50. hom.
Hom 50. cap. 11;
Cap. 15.

S. Gregory saith, That sins are not onely to be confessed, but to be blotted out with the austeritie of penance. Lib. 6. in. 1. Reg.

I will close vp these Testimonies with this sentence of our learned countryman venerable Bede: Delight (saith hee) or desire to sinne, when we do satisfaction is lightly purged by almesdeeds and such like: but consent is not rubbed out without great penance: now custome of sinning is not taken away but by a iust and heauy satisfaction. In Psal. 1.

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop knitteth up the question, but he knitteth it (gentle Reader) with a bow-knot; if thou haue but skill to pull the right string, thou shalt presently loose all that he hath knit. Aske him, and let him tell thee the true state of the question heere disputed, and thou canst presently discern, that of these so many testimonies by him alledged, there is none, not so much as one that carrieth any shew or semblance to that for which hee citeth them. Such is the notable imposturage and cofinage of these fall harlots, in laying together huge companies of the places of the Fathers to blind the eyes of simple men, who are not able to discern whether they be applied right or wrong. I haue pointed at this matter before, but it commeth heere more fully to be declared. M. Bishop
in

in the beginning telleth vs thus: We are not here to treat of that publicke penance which for notorious crimes is done openly, but of such private penance which is either enjoyed by the Confessor, or voluntarily undertaken by the penitent, or else sent by Gods visitation to purge vs frō that temporall paine which for sins past and pardoned we are to endure either in this life or in Purgatory, &c. Mark that which he saith, gentle Reader, that satisfaction is not here ment of publicke penance for notorious offences, but only of private penance, and that for sins past & already pardoned. That thou maist the better vnderstand this secret of theirs thou art to obserue that in sin they affirme two things, the violation of amity betwixt God and vs, and the violation of iustice. For the renewing of amity, they say that a man cannot satisfie, because satisfaction must haue acceptance with God, and acceptance presupposeth amity and friendship. Again, satisfaction must haue some kind of equality, in respect of the offence for which the satisfaction is made. That there may be such an equality, it is necessary that as the offence hath a kind of infinity in respect of the object (which is God) so the satisfaction haue a kind of infinity in respect of the originall whence it hath beginning. It must therefore proceed from the spirit of God dwelling in man, or from man made by grace and charity the member of Christ and child of God. When therefore a man by mortall sinne hath expelled from himselfe grace and charity, he must first vpon his contrition and confession be reconciled and haue his sinne forgiven, and afterwards must make satisfaction for the same sinne. For they will haue vs thinke that though God bee content to bee friends with vs, and in that respect to forgieue the sinne, yet he will haue satisfaction made to his iustice for the wrong and trespasse that we haue done him. Thou mayst not wonder that they be very earnest in the assertion of this matter, because vpon this ground Purgatory standeth, and consequently the whole reueneue of the Popes pardons, and of all their obsequies and deuotions for the dead. Now this being the point of their defence, that God hauing forgiven and pardoned the sinne, there remaineth a satisfaction to be made by temporall punishment, which of all the Fathers by him alledged, speaketh any thing to that effect? He hath taken them all out of Bellarmino, but therein see the honesty & fidelity both of Bellarmino and him: peruse them, and consider of them again & again, and what doest thou find sounding to the prooffe of their assertion?

o Bellar. de pen.
lib. 4. cap. 1. Cum homines in Deum
peccant, aut citra
finem & iustitiam volunt. Ac pro
amicitiam restor.
munda, non potest
homo Deo satisfacere: nam satisfactio hominis erga Deum acceptatione ipsius Dei necessario indiget: acceptatio autem amicitiam presupponit. Et propterea ut satisfactio sit aliquo modo ad equalitatem: oportet ut sicut offensio habet infinitatem quādam ex parte obiecti, sic habeat satisfactio infinitatem aliquam ex parte prius ipsi satisfaciens. Proinde requiruntur opera satisfactoria sicut a spiritu Dei hominē inhabitante, siue ab ipso homine ut membro Christi ac filio Dei iam per gratiam & charitatem eff. Et c.

The Fathers speak of a satisfaction for the obtaining of the forgiveness of sins, but of a satisfaction to be made when the sin is forgiven; they say neuer a word, yea they neuer imagined any such thing. The church of Rome denieth that to be properly a satisfactio, which the Fathers call by the name of satisfaction, and knew no other but that, & yet that satisfaction they alledge for the prooffe of their new devised satisfaction. Yea Bellarmino himselfe confesseth, that Where the Fathers do seem to attribute to the actions of men to restore amity with God, and to satisfie for the remission of the sin, they must bee expounded of satisfaction ex congruo, not ex condigno. So had he said before, that with the Fathers in that case, the words of merit, price, satisfaction, redemption, must be taken in that sort. And yet whereas all these Fathers alledged speak of price, satisfaction, redemption, for the remission of the sin, he himselfe bringeth them to prooue a satisfaction de condigno, after the remission of the sinne. To speake of them briefly in order as he reporteth them, the first testimony out of Tertullian, concerneth publike penance, the whole book being written thereof, as Beatus Rhenanus sheweth in the argument of the same booke, & as by the author himselfe appeareth, in that he speaketh of such a repentance as is but once to be had after baptism, which was so ordered by the Church in publike penitency, but in private neuer neither would M. Bishop plead so hard for it, if it were so. Now publike penitency was a satisfaction to obtaine forgiveness, and so here Tertullian plainly expresseth, calling it a folly not to fulfill penance, & yet to expect pardon, affirming the one to be the price for the other, and that God hath set the pardon at this price. This then being a price for the pardon, commeth not within the compasse of our question, which is of a satisfaction when the sinne is pardoned. Origen purpose in the same place alledged, is by the example of the deliuerance of the Israelites when they called vpon the Lord, to shew that the Lord deliuereth a man: so aduersary powers to humble him that was exalted to afflict him, to breake him vntill he repent & seeke the Lord; exhorting to put away pride least the Lord bee angry and giue us vp into the hands of the enemy, that by the trouble of correction we learne that humility which wee should haue taught in the knowledge figura, ut conserat donec respiciat & querat donum, &c. Abi lacus superbia uicij se determinat. & cetera for the satisfaction. Donum & tradat nos, &c. hanc libertatem quam in se nati Christi uicij delinimus, in conseruacione seruatiuone dicitur: sal uicij benigne Dominum in uicij uicij cum sine, dicitur in conseruacione, & uicij pura uicij uicij & clementis lib. 1. in ore penitentium.

of Christ. Hereupon he inferreth that aduertisement of Gods *temper*ing mercy with seuerity, waighing the measure of his punishment by a iust and mercifull consideration, namely in that sort as he hath before deliuered, that in manner of a wholsome medicine, one contrarie may be cured with another. Therefore he saith that ^k God doth not giue ouer a sinner for euer, as to note that all that hee doth is but to bring a man to repentance; which beeing done, hee is satisfied. Whereupon he giueth aduice to a man, that according to the time that he knoweth himselfe to haue erred or offended, so he humble himselfe, and satisfie God in the confession of repentance; because (saith he) if thou reform and amend thy selfe, God is gracious & mercifull to withhold punishment from him who preuenieth it by repentance. Now what is all this, but that which the Apostle saith, ^l If wee would iudge ourselves, we should not be iudged of the Lord? He exhorteeth to preuent Gods iudgement, to humble our selues, to repent, to cast away our pride, to seeke God, to satisfie him by confession and acknowledgement of our sinnes, that God being gracious and mercifull may forbear to punish vs, but we finde nothing of that that we seeke for, that hauing humbled our sinnes, and being reconciled to God, and hauing obtained forgiuenesse of our sins, we shal remain bound to punishment and satisfaction for our sinnes. The words cited out of Cyprians epistles, concerne them who in the time of persecution had fallen and denied Christ, whom hee would not haue to be restored to the communion of the Church vntill they had publikely lamented their grieuous fal, and giuen good tokens of their true and faithfull repentance. Therefore hee blameth them that too lightly and easily receiued them againe, heereby causing that they conceiued not the wrath of God, that they feared not the iudgement of the Lord, that they knocked not at the Church of Christ, but without repentance and open confession of their sin had false peace preached vnto them with decentfull words. Here is therefore no speeche of satisfaction after peace and reconciliation to God, but only for the obtaining of this peace. And this is euident by the very words cited by M. Bishop, wherein Cyprian blaineth them that withheld men from satisfying God being angry; and he applieth them against vs, for denying satisfaction when God is pleased. In the other place Cyprian saith, that showing true repentance they might by their prayers & works satisfie God to the procuring of mercy; & M. Bishop alledgeith it

Tradidit humilios ut salubri medicaine ratione contraria contrarijs
curentur.
K Non in perpetuum
tradi linquentes. sel quanto tempore errasse te nisi, &c tante nobilominus
tempore humilia te ipsum Deo et satisficito ei in confessione peni
rentie. &c quia si
to ipse emendaueris,
sicut ipse cor
roxiis. pius et misericors est Do us qui vult etiam temperet ab eo qui illam pau endo
preuenit.
11. Cor. 11. 21.
M. Cyprian. lib. 1.
epi. 3. Proponitur
sacrilegis at que
dicitur, ne ira cog getur Dei, non timeatur iudicium Domini, ne pulse
tur ad Ecclesiam
Christi, sed sublati
punitur in nec
ulla exomologesi
crimini: facta
pax a non veris
pra byteris verbis
fallacibus predi
ceur, &c.
n. Jhu. Elaborant
ne indignanti Deo satisfiit.
o. Lib. 3. epist. 14.
Posunt ager es
penitentiam ce
ram. Deo piter ad misericordiam
precibus & operi
bus suis satisfi
cere.

to proue a satisfaction when men haue already procured mercie. Cyprian speaketh of a satisfaction, for want whereof men ⁹perish, and as M. Bishop translateth, are seduced to their further damnation, and M. Bishop applieth it to a satisfaction, for want whereof men perish not nor are damned, but must make it vp in Purgatory fire.

The words of Basil are as impertinent as the rest. He saith nothing but what we say, that the greater wound should cause the greater paine, the greater sinne the greater sorow, that we may so much the more earnestly seeke reconciliation to God, by how much the further we haue departed from him; but no shadow is there of satisfaction to be made after that we are reconciled vnto him. The last of his words containe the summe of all the rest: ⁹Let the repentance be equall or proportionable to the sin. To the like sentence of Ambrose he referreth vs in the margin; ¹A great wound had need of a very effectuall and long cure: a great sinne had need of great satisfaction. The words immediately going before are these: ²If the sinner spare not himself, then the Lord will spare him; and if in the short space of this life he shall recompence the euermourning pains of hel that are to come, he freeeth himself from euermourning. It is appaent therefore that he speaketh of a satisfaction whereby to obtaine forgiveness of sinnes for the auoyding of the euermourning paines of hel, not of a satisfaction after forgiveness, for the auoyding of the temporall paines of Purgatory. He writeth it to a virgin that had yeelded her self to be defiled and corrupted, and calleth her to publike and perpetuall penance, denying her any remission or pardon in this world. ³Continue in thy penance or repentance euen to the end of thy life, and do not presume that of mans hand any pardon can be granted thee, for he deceiveth thee that will promise that vnto thee. For thou which hast sinned properly against the Lord, must of him alone expect remedie at the day of iudgement. A hard censure, and vnworthy of Ambrose, and so contrary to that which otherwhere he hath written, as that we may well question whether it be his or no; but it being plainly denied her to haue forgiveness, how deceitfully is this example brought to proue satisfaction after forgiveness? With as great fraud he alledgeth Gregory Nazianzen, who in that place inueigheth against the Nouatian heretikes, denying repentance to them that fell after baptism, according to the censure now mentioned vnder the name of Ambrose. Against that rigor he saith, that ⁴in like sort are to be blamed but vnderstand.

p Jbid. Seductur ut magis creant & qui fringere possunt p u cadant. q Basil. orat. in illud, Auendo tibi. Adequetur peccato patientia.

r Ambr. ad virg. lapsam. Granis plaga alta & prolixa opus est medicina; grande scelus grandem habet necessitatem scilicet scilicet. . . s Pecca or si sibi non spercerit à Deo illi pareat ut, e si futurus parnis & hermie perpetuas in hoc paruo uo a spicio comp. usuerit, seipso in aeterno iudicio liberat.

t Jbid. In hunc penitentia est ad finem uitae, nec tibi praestas ab humano die posse ueniam dari quia descripte qui hoc tibi pellicerit uerit.

Quae enim praeprie in Dominum peccasti, ab illo solo te euenit in die iudicii expectare remedium. u Greg. Nazian. ora. 39 in similia hominis. In eodẽ uo in suis tã effrenata et omni animaduersionis metu soluta licentia, quã sciat, nec ulla clementia temperata commodat ocella omnes lib nas uisq; laxatus, hac uelomni ori elluisione crefo an.

bridled licence freed from all feare of punishment & cruel condemning, not mingled or tempered with clemency and mercy; the on loosning the bridle to all vices, the other stifling men with ouermuch straitnesse. Niceas in his cōmentary thus expresseth it, They alike deserue to be reprov'd and punished, who either punish not offender at all, but giue them wholly the bridle, or do so cōdemne them as that they leaue them no hope to obtaine pardon. He speaketh of the external government & discipline of the Church, wherein he blameth that mē should be left at liberty to offend without feare of punishment; and again blameth such extremity & rigor, that offenders when they repent, should be excluded from hope of pardon: and what is this to proue that men being pardoned by God, must notwithstanding yet make him a satisfactiō for their sinnes pardoned? No man I suppose is so blind, but that he seeth the falshood of this citation. The other out of the same Father is of the same condition. He speaketh of mercy and compassion, as meanes to purge sins, to scoure out the spots and filths of our soules; but he saith nothing of satisfactiō to be made after that those spots and filth are purged and scoured. Of the saying of Salomon which he alledgeth, I haue spoken in the former section: only it may be added, that whereas he for mercy and truth readeth By mercy and faith sins are purged, or iniquitie is forgiven, which the Hebrew text beareth very well, we may vnderstand it of Gods mercy in giuing, and our faith in receiuing the forgivenes of sins, the promise thereof being made to them that beleue in him. Again, he bringeth vs Ambrose speaking of redeeming our sins with our mony, & washing away sins with fasting; but we heare nothing of satisfaction or redemption after the forgivensse of our sins. Yea when he saith that the Lord is not to be bought and sold, he giueth vs to vnderstand, that he meaneth not that by our mony we purchase or merit at Gods hands, and therefore can not be said therby to make him satisfaction for our sins. That which he saith of redeeming, he wil haue it vnderstood of freeing our selus from the cords or bonds of our sins, that we may not be holden by the custome of them, whilest by well doing we resist and crosse the practise and lusts thereof, that they may not continue to bring vs vnto death. The Lord (saith he) is not to be bought and sold; but thou art so. Thou art sold to thy sins. Redeeme thy selfe by thy workes: redeeme thy selfe by thy mony. By one poison another poison is excluded: by the poison (of the Mawmon of iniquitie) death is repulsed, life is preserved.

Here

¶ Nicei. ibid. in comment. Pareo
mā sunt enī a re-prehensōe pānā-
que merentur qui vel peccantes
nulla pāna affici-
unt ipsi s; omnes
habeas remittit;
vel qui eos ita cō-
demunt ut nul-
lam consequenda
venia sperant relinquant.

¶ Orat. 27. de amo-
re pauperum.
Misericordie pur-
genur, amique
labes et inquina-
menta egregia illa
herba detergamus
&c.

¶ Miseri. orilia &
sūde peccata pur-
gantur.

¶ Ambr. de Helia
& ieiun. cap. 26.
Habemus plura
f. hūilia quibus
peccata nōstra redimimus. Habes pecunia: redime
peccatum tuum,
&c. Et ep. 82. Que nobis salus esse pot est nisi ieiun. o eeluerimus peccata
nōstra?

¶ Ibid. Non ve-nalis est Dominus
sed tu ipse venalis
es. Peccatis tuis venundatus es.

Redimo te aperi-
bis tu: redime te
pecunia tua, &c.
Venenum veneno excluditur. Vene-
no mors repellitur
vita seruatur.

Here is a redemption for the excluding of ſinne, not to pay a ſatisfaction for it; to ſet vs free from the bondage of committing ſinne, not to purchaſe the forgiveneſſe of it. Nay of that he hath ſaid immediately before, Let vs ſue to the Phyſition who hath cured our former wounds, and if any bitterneſſe be remaining, there ſhal not want a medicine. And if we have done wrong, he wil forget it who hath once pardoned. Albeit we have greatly offended, we have a great Phyſition, we have received the great medicine of his grace: for a ſtrong or great medicine taketh away great ſinnes. That which is next alledged out of Hierom concerning Paula, ſignifieth her lamentation of her former life, and ſetterth out her repentance of her ſinnes, which being but ſmall, as Hierom ſaith, ſhe ſo bewailed, as that a man would have thought her guiltie of grievous offences; but that proueth not that ſhe meant to make ſatisfaction hereby for pardoned ſinnes, neither doth he ſay any thing to that effect. No more doth he as teaching himſelfe in the other epiſtle to Euftochium, where he ſheweth what hardneſſe he endured at the firſt in the wilderneſſe to ſubdue the heate and luſt of youth, hauing as he ſaith, for the feare of hell condemned himſelfe to that priſon, but not ſo much as any word that he did any thing there for penance or ſatisfaction for his ſinnes. This is ſo wiſely applied, as that we may well thinke M. Biſhop put it in of his owne head, there being nothing either in words or in matter likely to ſerue the turne. As little helpe hath he in the next citation which is out of S. Auſtine, who telleth Macedonius the Lieutenant concerning them who being condemned to death, had their liues and pardon begged by the Biſhops, that they kept many of them whoſe crimes were manifeſt from the participation of the ſacrament, that by repentance and puniſhing themſelues they might appeaſe him whom in their ſinnes they had deſpiſed. Hereupon he inferreth: For he which truly repenteth, laboureth nothing elſe but not to ſuffer that euill which he hath done to be puniſhed: for by that meanes when he ſpareth not himſelfe, he is ſpared of him whoſe ſecret and iuſt judgement no deſpiſer ſhall eſcape. Which words being plainly deliuered of that repentance wherby God is appeaſed that he may not puniſh, what do they make to the prooſe of a puniſhment which they ſay God inflicteth when he is appeaſed? Concerning this puniſhing of our ſelues, I refer thee to that which before hath bin ſaid by occaſion of another ſentence of S. Auſtine in the tenth ſection.

*Flid. Conſugimus ad medicina
qui vulnera ſu-
periora curauit ei ſi quid ſuperſit acerbitate mede-loris d' erit. Eſi quid mitiore ſci-
nus maior non erit qui ſemel do-
nauit. Eſi graue
d' liquimus, magnis
medicis inuenimus
magnum medici-
na graue eris acc' pimus. Magna enim med cura to-lit pie e' magna
d' Hieron. epi ap.
Paulo. Ita tenet
peccata plangere
ut eam grauiſſi-
morum cum nunt
credere ream.
e Hieron. ad Euf-toch. Ob gehenne meritum tali me
carcere iſſe dam-
natum.
S. Auguſt. ep. 54.
Quoſdam quoru
manifeſta ſunt
crimina a uſira
ſeueritate libera-
tos a ſecitate re-
uocemus a tunc
ut poſſent pla-
ca e' poſſent auer-peccando come-
ſerant. ſequo e' ſos
punitendo.
g. Na nihil aliud ag' quem vera-
eſter pauit: niſi
u' id quod mal-
ſecis impium ſi
eſſe non ſint: ho-
quippe modo ſibi
non parant: ille
parat ea ut ad ſe
iſſe non: non ita
n' illi contemperant.*

h Gal. 5. 21.
 i August. hom.
 50. Cum in se
 pr tulerit seve-
 ritate m: dicere
 fort entia venas
 ad Anusitres
 per quos illi in ecclesia claus ministrantur, & accipiat sati-
 factiois sue mediū
 ut in offerendo
 sacrificio cordis
 contr. bulati de-
 no: us & supplex
 id tamen agat
 quod non solum illi profic ad reci-
 piendum salutē,
 sed & ceteris ad
 exemplum, ut si
 peccatum eius
 non solum in grau eius malo
 sed etiam in scan-
 dal. e est aliorum,
 atq; hoc expedire
 vultat ecclesie
 vide. ut amittit
 in m: ti ia multo-
 rum vel etiam
 totius plebis agere penitentiam non recusat.
 k Ibid Non suffi-ciat mores in me-
 lius commutare,
 & a factis malis
 recedere, nisi etia
 de his que facta
 sunt satisfiat Deo
 per penitentia
 d. lozem.
 l Non enim dictū
 est tantum ut
 a h:l. neas a pec-catis, sed & de preteritis, inquit Dominus deprecate ut tibi
 dimi: tan ur.
 m Greg. in R. g.
 hb 6. Non solum
 conf. enda sunt
 peccata, sed etiam penitentia auctori a e delenda. n Beda in Ps. 1. Delectatio seu voluntas peccandi quando ad satisffactioem veni: ut leui: et elemo: sya & alijs talibus purgatur; confensus vero non nisi graui penitentia deletur; con-
 sus. iudo autem non nisi rella & ponderosa satisfactioe absoluitur.

The other place is manifestly spokē of publike penitency. S. Austin exhorting euery mā in the guilt of those sins of which the Scripture teacheth, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God; to pronouce sentēce ag. iust himself of a sharp medicine, to come to the Priests by whom the keyes of the church are ministred vnto him, & of them to receiue the manner or measure of his satisfaction, that being deuout & humble in offering the sacrifice of a troubled or contrite hart, he may yet do that wh. ch may not onely do him good for the receiuing of saluatiō, but others also by example, that if his sin be not only to the grieuous hurt of himself, but also to the scandal of others, & it so seem to the Priest or Bishop expedient for the profit of the Church, he refuse not to do penance in the know edge of many or of the whole church. This is again a repentance for the receiuing of the forgiuenesse of sins & saluatiō, but no other satisfaction, required not onely for the good of the of- fender, but also for the good of other men & of the whole church, whereas M Bishops satisfaction concerneth only the man himselfe to be deliuered from Purgatory paines. To the same effect is that which he citeth further out of the same Homily: It sufficeth not to amend our manners and to depart from euill doings, vnesse for those things whicb we haue done we satisfie God by sorrow of repentance. To what end that satisf. on is vsed, he sheweth presently after: For it is not said on'y that we should abstaine frō sins, but pray to God also saith he (namely Ecclesiasticus) for the things that are past, that they may be forgiuē thee Here is all til for forgiuenes of sins, but nothing of satisf. action when sin is forgiuen. So when Gregory saith, that sinis are not only to be confessed, but also to be blotted out by austeritie of penance or repentance, he speaketh of a penance for the blotting out of sin, not of penance whē the sin is already blotted out. So doth Beda expressly apply his speech to the purging the blotting out, the pardoning of sin. Delight or desire to sin when we come to satisf. actiō is lightly purged with alm, deeds & such like; but consent is not blotted out by great repē- tance; but custome of sin is not pardoned but by iust and waigherie satisf. action. Thus (gentle Reader) of all that M. Bishop hath cited, yea and of all that Bellarmino hath cited, there is not one that speaketh of the point in question, as touching satisfaction after forgiuenesse of sins. No, it is a late deuce of the Schoolmen, which when they had set it abroad, they desired to color and to giue it tast by citing sentences of the fathers as touching satisfaction, when as the Fathers speake of satisfaction in one meaning, and they apply them in another. But I suppose I haue not yet giuen thee full satisfaction; vnlesse I further adde somewhat as touching the auncient Fathers vsing of this terme of satisfaction. It is therefore to be vnderstood, that the same was first applied to that publike penance, whereby open and notorious offenders did satisfie the Church, that is, giue sufficient and approued testimony and assurance of their true and vnfeined repentance for their sinnes. When any in the time of persecution had fallen by renouncing the name and faith of Christ, or had otherwise committed any great & scandalous trespassie to the griuance of his brethren, to the obloquy of religion and slauder of the Church, but especially to the offence of almighty God, and prouoking of his wrath, both against himselfe, and them also with whom he liued, he was by the publike censure of the Church secluded from the Communion, and cut off from the societie of the faithfull and godly, as vnworthy to be reckoned a member of Christ, or partaker of the hope that is by him. But yet ther was alwaies hope of restitution remaining to them who vpon conuenientiall were found penitent and griued for the euill which they had done. To this purpose therefore they were enioyned^p publike confession of their sinnes. They had their place appointed them in the Church, where they stood lamenting and mourning, & with weeping and teares cast themselues to the ground, praying to God for themselues, and commending themselues to the prayers of the assembly. It was prescribed them by watching, by fasting, by course, and vncouth apparel to afflict and humble themselues, that euery way their grieffe & sorrow might be seene. Which being duly performed the Church was satisfied, and taking compassion on them restored them againe to brotherly societie, and to the communion of the Church, and hereof first was the name of satisfaction taken vp. It was not therfore a satisfaction whereby they meant to make God a iust recompence for their sinnes, or as by paying a price of woorth and value to merit and purchase their owne pardon, but onely a satisfaction whereby the Church would be certified of their true repentance towards God, as not enduring that any man should

^p See hereof Tertul de penit^{en} tia, and the collections of Beatus Rhenanus in the argument of that booke.

he accounted a member amongst them, who by sinne had made himselfe a stranger to God, vntill they saw reason to be perswaded that God would be pleased to be reconciled to him againe. They could not looke into the heart to see any mans repentance and sorrow, but by mens deuout submitting themselues to the ordinances of publike censure and discipline they would be induced to the perswasion thereof, and being thereof perswaded, they received him againe whom before they had reiected. Hereof Saint Austin saith very plainely to shew the end of it; ^a A contrite and humbled heart God despiseth not, but yet because commonly the grieffe of one mans heart is secret to another, and commeth not by any words or signes to the certaine knowledge of others, being in the sight of him to whom it is said, My groning is not hid from thee, therefore rightly are there appointed certaine times of penance, that the Church also may be satisfied wherein sinnes are forgiven, because out of it there are none forgiven. Here is the true vse of those publike satisfactions. It is true that God yeeldeth to the contrite and broken heart remission and forgiuenesse of sinnes, but in scandalous trespasses he will haue the knowledge thereof to be taken in the forgiuenesse of the Church. A man in that case sinneth not against God onely, but also against the Church, in prouoking Gods anger, as before was said, not onely against himselfe, but also against them, in corrupting others, so much as in him lieth, by his euill example, in causing aduersaries by that occasion to speake euill of the Church: God therefore would that as the Church is interested in the wrong, so it should also be interested in the forgiuenesse thereof, so as that in this case no man is to presume of forgiuenesse with God, who is not so much as in him lieth, reconciled to the Church of God. This our Sauour Christ hath confirmed in the Gospell: ^r What soeuer ye bind on earth shal be bound in heauen, and what soeuer ye loose on earth, shall be loosed in heauen. ^s Whose sinnes ye remit, they are remitted; whose sinnes ye retaine, they are retained. So then the forgiuenesse of the Church is to be accounted as it were an admission to forgiuenesse with God, and a man taketh the one to be to him a confirmation of the other. Now the Church is to forgiue according to the same rule as God forgiueth, onely him that is penitent and grieued for his sinne, and therefore in such sort, as hath bene said, requireth satisfaction for certificate and assurance of such repen-

^a Aug. Enchir. cap 65. Cor contritum & humil. atum Deus non spernit. ^r erum quia plerumque dolor alterius cordis occultus est alteri, neq; in alio uotitiam per uerba uel quocumq; alia signa procedit cum sit coram illo cui dicitur, Gemitus meus a te non est absconditus, &c. Et dicitur unum uer ab ijs, qui Ecclesie presentant, tempora poenitentiae, ut si at etiam satis Ecclesie in qua remittuntur ipsa peccata, extra eam quippe non remittuntur.

^r Mar. 18. 18.

^s Iohn 20. 23.

tance. And this is specially that satisfaction which is so much spoken of in the writings and records of the ancient Church. But yet will M. Bishop say, the matter is not sufficiently cleared, because howsoever the name of satisfaction might haue originall from hence, yet we find them to haue applied the same to God also, and to haue taught men by such and such works to satisfie and appease the wrath of God. And we deny not indeed but that so they haue don, but yet we say, that they neuer spake of satisfaction in any such meaning as the name of it now importeth in the Church of Rome. Farre were they from hauing any thought, that any thing they did could be a satisfaction, that is, a iust and sufficient, and worthy recompence for their sinnes: but yet they called repentance by the name of satisfaction, as to note that it is the thing wherewith God is satisfied, that is, contented and appeased, not for the thing i selfe, but for that he hath promised to accept those passions and teares, and workes which are the issues and streames of a broken and contrite hart, carefully seeking his mercy, and humbly crauing remission and pardon in the name of Iesus Christ. In this sense they translated the name of satisfaction from the Church to God, and from publike to priuate repentance, neuer imagining, that any man would be so mad as to conceiue merit there where they taught the sinner, to aske mercy, where they taught that the whole effect of that that is done consisteth in Gods mercy, through the merit of Iesus Christ. Christ is made our atonement, saith Hesychius: therefore all the sacrifice of repentance (or penance) is administred and done in him, and all that a man obtaineth by repentance is referred to him. It is not then for our repentance sake, but for Christs sake, that in repentance we obtaine that mercy that we do obtaine. And to that purpose very notably serueth that which Chrysostome, mouing question in the name and behalfe of a sinner, and making answer thereto, very learnedly & religiously speaketh in this sort: "I haue spent all my life in sinne, and if I repent, dost thou thinke I shall be saued? Yea verily, saith he. But how shall I be certaine of that? or what persuasion can induce me to thinke so? I take assurance hereof from the mercie of the Lord, not from thy repentance. For thy only repentance

t Hesych in Leu 7. lib. 2. Christus
nobis propitiatio factus est, ergo in ipso omni: peni-
tentie sacrificium ministratur & a-gitur, & omne
quod ex peniten-
tia quis consequi-
tur ad eum refer-
tur.
u Chrysost. de pa-
nit. hom. 3. sive in Hypomnemat in Esaiam, Cum omni
uoluntate in peccatis deriuerim, si me
penitueris, sumo fiduciam. Peni-tentia enim tua
preuadet tantam
abstergere malorum elusionem. Penitentia si sola fuerit, merito
tibi metuendum est,
sed quoniam penitentie
Dei clementia, Deique pietas iuncta est, confide.

ne saluum? Prorsus sis. Unde hoc liquet? Ab ipsa Domini sui benignitate, non ex tua penitentia mihi sumo fiduciam. Penitentia enim tua preuadet tantam abstergere malorum elusionem. Penitentia si sola fuerit, merito tibi metuendum est, sed quoniam penitentiae Dei clementia, Deique pietas iuncta est, confide.

availeth not to wash away so great filth of sin. If there be thy only repentance, thou art iustly to be afraid, but because Gods mercy & cōpassion is ioyned with repentance, therefore be of good cheare. Here is nothing attributed to repentance for it selfe, but onely to the mercy of God vouchsafing to yeeld fauour and forgiuenesse to the repentant.

Therefore do they hang the whole fruit of repentance vpon faith: for ^x faith, saith S. Austin, is the foundation of repentance, and the repentance which proceedeth not from faith is unprofitable. ^y We are so to beleene, saith Ambrose, both the doing of penance, and the yeelding of pardon, as that notwithstanding we hope for pardon, as by faith, and not as of debt. Here is then no popish opinion of penance and satisfaction expecting remission by way of debt and duty as a thing deserued, but in the midst of our repentance or penance, we are taught to hope for pardon onely by the faith of Iesus Christ. Therefore S. Bernard saith, that ^z it is the onely suffering of the second Adam, that purgeth vs whom the only offence of the first Adam did defile; I say not (saith he, alluding to that which before he hath said concerning repentance and mortification) that any mans owne satisfaction can suffice him: for what is all our repentance, but onely that if we suffer not with him, we cannot raigne with him. By our repentance then which he expresseth before in weeping for our sinnes, in bearing our crosse, in mortifying our members, in offering our selues a sacrifice to God, hereby he saith we become like vnto Christ in suffering, and so are fitted to raigne with him, but yet the purging of vs from sinne he denyeth to these things, and reserueth it to Christ alone. For wee may aske as Ambrose doth: ^a By what paines or by what sufferings (or bearing of wrongs) can we abate or ease our sinnes? By which question he plainly declareth, that they did not hold the paines and sufferings of repentance or penance to be properly any purgation or satisfaction to take away sinnes. And this appeareth by Saint Austine when he saith: ^b What propitiation is there but sacrifice? What sacrifice but that which was offered to vs? the innocent blood being shed, hath blotted out all the sinnes of offendours. To which purpose elsewhere he saith, that ^c for the singular and onely true sacrifice, the blood of Christ was shed for vs. But most religiously and Christianly is that spoken which hee saith x Aug. de vera & falsa penit. cap. 2. Fides fundamentū est penitentię, &c. Penitentiā itaque que ex se in se procedit, vtilis nō est. y Amb. de penit. lib. 2. ca. 8. Ergo et agentem penitentiam & tribuentem veniam credere nos cōuenit, ut veniam tamen tanquam ex fide speremus, non tanquam ex debito. z Bern. de verb. lib. Job. In sex tribulationibus uniuersum fecundi Ale tribulatio purgat, q. 10: ceteramur vit offensa sola prioris, nam quod propria ciuitatis sufficere possit, factio. Quod est enim omnis penitentia nostra nisi quod si non comparimur, omnino non possumus conregnare? a Ambrosii in Ps. 318 Ser. 20. Quibus laboribus, quibus iniurijs possumus nosse leuare peccata? b Aug. in Psal. 129. Quo propitiatus est nisi sacrificium? Et quod est sacrificium nisi quod pro nobis oblatum est? Sanguis innocens sanguis delectat omnia peccata nocentium. c Idem contra aduers. Leg & prob. lib. 1. cap. 18. Singulari & solo vero sacrificio pro nobis Christo sanguis effusus est, yet In another place: ^d It is the one onely hope of all the godly growing under this burthen of corruptible flesh, and in the infirmitie of this life, that we haue an aduocate with the Father Iesus Christ the iust, and he is the propitiation for our sinnes. If there be no propitiation, that is, no satisfaction, but only sacrifice, & no sacrifice, but the bloudshed of the Son of God; if our onely hope with God be this, that we haue with him Christ for our aduocate & attonemēt for our sins: if by all our paines and sufferings we cannot ease our selues as touching our sinnes, but onely the suffering of the second Adam be the purgation thereof; if amidst all our penances we are to hope for pardon by faith, that is, by fauour and not by debt, not trusting to any merit of our repentance, but to the mercy of God, and referring all the fruite thereof to Iesus Christ, then farewell Popish satisfaction; the Fathers that speake of satisfaction say nothing for that satisfaction: but at Rome this brat was borne, and we must leaue it to be buried there. The Fathers haue spoken of redeeming our sinnes, purging our sinnes, washing our sinnes, blotting out our sinnes by prayers, by almes-deeds, by fasting, by good workes, but amidst this improprietic of words they haue retained, as we see, a faithfull acknowledgement of the true Christian faith. Albeit, why do I speake of improprietic of words as in them, when we our selues vpon occasion forbeare not to speake as they haue spoken? For which of vs is there that maketh question to say, It is a satisfaction to God, when a sinner turneth from his euill way: repent thee of thy sins, amend thy wicked life, humble thy selfe before God, aske mercy and forgiuennesse, and God is satisfied. Redeeme thy former crueltie with mercie, thine oppressions with almes-deeds, and let the Mammon of iniquitie serue thee for the sauing of thy soule. Wash away the filth of thine vncleannesse with bitter teares, and with fasting and mourning blot out the guilt which the delights and pleasures of sinne haue written against thee. Thou hast hitherto bene retchlesse towards God, make him recompence hereafter both in thine owne deuotion and care, and in seeking the recouerie of other men. Thus we speake, and who doth not thus speake, both in this kind and in other sort also, when yet we impute not to those things which we commend, any vertue or cleansing or washing of vs from our sins, but onely intend to note the affections and dispositions which are the fruites and testimonies of that true faith and repentance, w^ler-*d Item contra 2.

^e Idem contra aduers. Leg & prob. lib. 1. cap. 18. Singulari & solo vero sacrificio pro nobis Christo

Epist. Pelag. lib. 3.
cap. 5. Omnium
peccatorum sub hoc onere corruptibilis
carnis & in huius
vite infirmitate
gemitium spes
vna est, quod ad-
uocatum habemus
&c.*

by we seeke the washing away of our sinnes onely in the blood of Jesus Christ. And if we sometimes doubt not thus to speake, how much more securely would the Fathers vse such phrases, when yet there was no feare of those misconstructions of heresie and Apostasie, which haue since preuailed in the Church of Rome? We haue seene Bellarmino before acknowledging out of their principles, that the Fathers in these phrases imported only merit of fauour and grace, not merit of woorth and purchase, and therefore setting a side the name of merit, let vs not doubt but that they meant in all their speeches to vphold the grace and fauour of God by the mediation of Iesus Christ. They taught men amidst all their deuotions to aske

e Chryso. de bea-
to Philogonio. Ego testificor ac file-
i ideo quod si quisquam nostrum qui peccatis obnoxij
sumus, ex animo
vereg; pronittat
Deo se postea nu-
quam ad illa redi-
turum, nihil aliud Deus requirat ad satisfactionem v'riorem.
f 1. Cor. 11. 31.
g Idem in 1. Cor.
hom. 28. Non aix
it si puniemus, si
supplicium de no-
bis sumemus, sed si
diudicaremus,
hoc est, si nostra
tanquam volueri-
mus peccata cog-
noscere, si condem-
nare nos ipsos, libe-raremur vique & ab huius & a fieri vni seculi supplicij.

pardon of Gods mercie, and therefore could not be thought to teach the, that by the same deuotions they did deserue it. In a word I conclude this point, with a speech or two of Chrystomes, which I wish thee gentle Reader to compare with the doctrine which M. Bishop here hath brought vs from Rome: I testifie (saith he) & giue thee warrant, that if any of vs who are subiect to sinne (or guiltie of sin) do heartily and truely promise vnto God neuer to returne to the same, a-gaine, God doth require no further satisfactio. Again, vpon the words of the Apostle, If we would iudge our selues we should not be iudged of the Lord, he saith thus: The Apostle saith not, If we would punish our selues, If we would take reuenge of our selues, but If we would iudge our selues, that is, if we would only acknowledge our sinnes, if we would condemne our selues, we should be deliuered both from the punishments of this world, and of the world to come. Here we see, that after true repentance, there is no further satisfaction: that after true acknowledgement and confession of our sinnes, there is no reseruation of punishment, but by the mercie of God wee are set free both from the punishments of this world and of the world to come, whereby all that M. Bishop here hath built, is vtterly overthrowne.

19. W. BISHOP.

And if you please in few words, to heare the Protestants workes of penance and satisfaction, instead of our fasting, and other corporall correction, they fall to eating, and that of the best flesh they can get, and take in the Lord all such bodily pleasure, as the company of a woman will afford. In lieu of giuing almes vnto the poore, they pill them by fines and vnrasonable rents: and by vsurie and craftie bargaines, are not ascribed to cosen their nerest kinne. Finally, in place of prayer, and washing away their owne sinnes by many bitter teares, they sing merrily a Geneva Psalm, and raile or heare a railing at our imagined sinnes, or pretended errors. And so leaue, and lay all paine and sorrow vpon Christs shoulders, thinking themselves (belike) to be borne to pleasure and pastime, and to make merry in this world.

R. ABBOT:

A shrewd wench hearing her mother at angry words with her neighbour, and well knowing her mothers desert, gaue her this counsell, Call her whore first, mother, for feare lest she call you whore. M. Bishop knew very wel, that there is sufficient cause for vs to call his mother whore, and to vpbraid the Church of Rome with the poisoned and abominable fruites which their doctrine of satisfactions bringeth foorth. Therefore he thought it good policie in her behalfe to follow the counsell of the vnhappy girle, and to call whore first, that by laying some slanderous imputation of euil behauiour vpon vs, he might breake & abate the odiousnesse of those vncleane & filthie corruptions which he knew were iustly to be objected against them. He knew wel, that if we should paint them out from top to toe, we should make the Church of Rome to appeare a monster, most vgly and deformed, such as that all men may thereby take iust occasion to detest her. To giue him some taste of their good fruites, let him remember that of the Court of Rome it was said long since:

Eius auaritia totius non sufficit orbis :

Eius luxurie mercurix non sufficit omnis.

The world too little is their couetise to satisfie,

No barlots are enough to serue their filth by lecherie.

It is manifestly found, saith Math. of Paris, that the Church of Rome hath incurred the indignation of God. The governours and rulers thereof do not seeke the deuotion of the people, but the filling of their owne purses; not to gaine soules to God, but to take rents and to gather moxy, to oppresse them that are religious, by penaltie, vsurie, simonie, and di-riorum; non animas Deo lucrifacere, sed reditus capere & pecuniis congregare, re'ignosos opprimere, panis, vti a, lino ia & alijs diversis argumentis aliena usurpare. Non curatur de iustitia & honestate, &c. ad omnia Romana Eccl'ia vsa iabelu cupiditas confundens facti, uel factique, quod d' poss' o rubeo v. l. ut mer' t' x' v' g' n' & c' q' as om' ibi con- tis & expostis, vsu an pro paruo, simoniam pro nu' o in con. ueniens veniunt, n' a t' r' alias p' onicias sui conto. con. tulari, &c. Eiusd' Curia Papalis vsque ad nubes summi n' teterrimum exhalauit.

o Math. Paris. n' H. ur. co. 1. b' lbi. Mam- se' t' conuictam ell Ecclesia Ro- manam Dei in- dignationem in- corru' t' e. Ipsius e- nim magist' r' us & rector' n' n' s' p' u' s deuot' n' e, sed mar' supia ple- na querunt donauers other deuices to get other mens goods into their hand; there is no care of iust & honest dealing The insatiable couetousnes of the Church of Rome is grown to that passe confounding right and wrong, as that being past blushing, like a common and shamelesse harlot, setting her selfe to sale, and being exposed to all men, she accounteth vsurie for a small inconuenience, & simonie for none: so as that with her contagion she hath defiled other countries. The stinch of the Popes Court hath breathed out a most noysome fume euen to the very clouds. Of those times Abbas Vrspergensis speaketh in this sort: ° Then began mischiefs to be multiplied vpon the earth: for there arose amongst men discords, deceits, treacheries, treasons, so as that they betrayed one another to death and destruction. Spoyling and preying one vpon another, destructions and wastings of countries, burnings, seditions, warres and rapines, whether in the streets, or in places of robberies were iustified, so as that now every man is guilty of perurie, and wrapped in these foresaid wicked acts, and it cannot be excused, but that as the people is in these things, so is the Priest. Platina the Popes Secretarie breaketh out in passion thus: ° What do we thinke shall befall in this our age, wherein vices are grown to that, that they haue scant left any place of mercy with God? How great the couetousnesse of Priests is, especially of them that are in place of gouernement, how great their licentiousnesse affected euery way: their ambition and pompe, their pride and sloth, their want of knowledg: both of themselves and of the doctrine of Christ, how little deuotion and that more counterfeited then true, how corrupt their manners are, to be detested euen in profane and secular men, it skilleth not to say any thing, for that they sinne so apparently and openly, as if they sought to be commended for it. And in another place thus: ° Now is pietie and deuotion waxen so cold, as that I say not bare-footed, nay hosed and booted, they scant vouchsafe to pray. They weepe not as they go, or when they are at the sacrifice, but they laugh and that impudently, I speake euen of them whom their purple garments grace aboue other men: they sing not the Hymnes, for that seemeth a base matter, but they tell one another iests and tales to make each other laugh. The more prating and sawcie a man is, the more is he thought in this corruptiõ of manners worthy to be

c. Abba. Vrspergensis in Chr. The caperunt multiplicari in terris. Orta sicut sunt in hominibus similitates, dolus, perfidia, tradiciones: ut se inuicem tradunt in morte & interitum Rapine, depraedationes, terrarum, vastationes, incelsia, seditiones, & bella & rapine, sine in stratis sine in astronichis inflictae sunt, ut omnis homo iam sit periturus, & predictis facinoribus implicatus, ut vix excusari possit quin sit in his sicut populus sic & sacerdos. d. Platina de vit. Pontif. in Marcelino. Quid futurum nostrae aetatis arbitramur quia vitia nostra eo creuere ut vix apud Deum misericordie locum nobis reliquerint? Quanta sit auaritia Sacerdotum, quanta libido undique conquisita, quanta ambitio & pompa, quanta superbia & desidia, quanta ignoratio tum sui ipsius tum doctrine Christianae, quam parua religio & simulata pietas, quam vera, quam corrupti mores, vel in prophanis hominibus quos seculares vocant detestandi, nihil a timet dicere, cum ipsi ita aperte & palam peccent ac si inde laudem quarent. ° Idem in Stephano 3. Nunc adeo refrigit pietas & religio, non dico nudis pedibus, sed caligati & cobinatti vix supplicare dignantur. Non flet inter eundem, vel dum sacrificat, sed ridem & quidem impudenter: de his etiam loquitur quos purpura insigniore facit. Non hymnos cantant, ad eum (seu vtile videtur: sed iocos & fabulas ad risum concitandum enier se narrant. Quo quis ducior est & peius: sic, eo maior em in tam corruptis moribus laudem meretur. Seniores & grates viros reformatas hic noster clerus.

commended; our Clergie brookereth not staid and graue men. ¹The ecclesiasticall state hath giuen it selfe ouer to all luxurie and wanton lust. Mathew of Paris said of the time wherein he liued, ²In these times he that is not a bad man, is thought to be very good; the vniust man whē he forbeareth to hurt, is deemed to do good. Yea, and Machiauel one of the fathers of the Romish generation, yet did not doubt to say further, that ³nowhere was there lesse pietie or religion, then in those that dwelt neereſt to Rome. I do here but point at some few things that come next to hand, but he that would discourse this matter as it deserueth, and would gather the flowers of Romish conuersation out of their owne stories, or set forth the sanctified behaviours that are to be seene at Rome, at Venice, in Italy, Spaine, Portugall, Fraunce, amongst this Catholike generation, yea or discover the pretie trickes of many of our Catholikes here at home, should make it cleare enough that M. Bishop doth but play the hypocrites part, in offering to plucke a mote out of his brothers eye, and not seeing the great beam that is in his owne eye; it would appeare that he hath smal cause to bragge of the fruities of their doctrine of Pardons and satisfactions. ⁴A madde and pernicious doctrine, as Marsilius Patavinus called it long agoe, the beguiling of soules, worthy to be despised, and fit to be taken heede of of all Christian men: by which the Germanes complained, ⁵that the religion of Christ was abandoned & extinguished with them, for that euery man for a summe of money bestowed vpon pardons promised to himselfe a liberty to sinne without any punishment. Hence whoredomes, say they, incests, adulteries, periueries, murders, thefts, robberies, vsurie, and the whole sinke of mischiefes haue had their beginning. For what will men feare any longer, when they be perswaded, that for money, though it be much, not in this life only, but after death also they may get a licence and impunity of sinne: And indeede it is true which Hierome saith, that ⁶men more easily set light by their money, then they do by their pleasure, ⁷neither doth any feare that which he may redeeme or buy out for money, as Cyprian speaketh. Therefore when they perswaded men that they might satisfie for their sinnes, and that almes was the most speciall worke of satisfaction, and did supply the want of other satisfactions, as before was said, they that

¹In Gregor. 4. Ado in omnia luxū & libidinum sese effudit Ecclesiasticus ordo. ²Mat. Parisian. lib. 3. anno 1252. Quis ha temporibus natus non est, optimus reputatur: Iniquus enim latere cōstitit, prodesse indicatur. ³Machiauel. discipul. de republ. cap. 12. Nusquam minus vel pretatus vel religionis est, quam in his hominibus qui viciniores Rome habitant. ⁴Mat. 7. 3. k Marsil. Parau. de sens. pacis. part. 2. cap. 26. Venie promissio perniciosa & insanis doctrina & seductio animarū à Christianis omnibus contemnitella & catenada. ⁵Cent. gra. viii. German. art. 3. Profligata Christi pte as & extincta, quando quilibet pro modo pretij quod impendit peccantis impunitatem sibi pollicetur. ⁶Hinc supra. incestus, adulterii, periuera, homicidia, furti, rapinae sanora & tota magna sume fel originem traxerūt.

Quid enim maiorum amplius iam ho rebant mortales, quando sibi peccanti licentiam & impunitatem nedam in hac vita, sed & post obitum ere licet immodico comparari posse persuasam habet? in Hieron. 3. Mat. 19. Facilis est facinus uariare: ut quam uoluptas, n Cyprian. lib. 2. epist. 2. Quod a rebus potest, non timetur.

were of ability to giue almes liberally, that is, to stop the mouthes of begging Friers, were hereby thrust forward to all manner wickednesse, which either by secrecie they could conceale, or wherein by power they could vphold themselves, that humane lawes might take no hold of them. These things are more apparent both by storie and by sight, then that M. Bishops wit can serue to colour or hide them. It is nothing therefore that he telleth vs of their fasting, and almes, & praier, in as much as they do these things to purchase themselves liberty to sinne freely, and to take their pleasure otherwise. And whatsoeuer he can otherwise alledge hereof, he is to remēber that Chrysostome saith, that counterfeit almes, and fasting, and praier, are the sheepes clothing that serue to couer rauening wolues. With these sheepes garments the Pharisees of old couered their biting and destroying of soules. They were ^p a most straine sect, they fasted twice a weeke, they lay some upon thornes, other some upon stoncs, other some upon boords of small bredth, that they might easily fall beside, by this meanes to afflict themselves with watching, that they might attend to praying, they vowed continencie; some for foure, some for eight, some for ten yeares. By these dissembled deuotions they crept into the minds of the people, they seduced and beguiled them, and held them bound to their traditions, and ^a deuoured widowes houses under pretence of long prayers. By the same pretences M. Bishop and his fellowes ^r creep into houses, and ^eade captiue simple women laden with sinnes, and led with diuers lustes, and make them their instruments for the ^subueruing of the husbands and whole houses, and intangling of them, with the superstitions and abominations of the man of sinne. Albeit being more cunning then the Pharisees, they take such good course with their fasting and corporall afflictions, as that they neither abate their flesh nor their filthy lust, but by practise of shrift and confession, they insinuate themselves into the affections and secrets of the same woman, and thereby take aduantage against them to gaine them to their will. He twiteth vs with taking pleasure in the company of a women, but they by not being tied to the lawfull company of one, do referue to themselves a liberty of abusing many. And no maruell that such good fruites proceede from them, with whom it is a position, that ^t it is greater sacriledge for a Priest to marry, then to commit fornication or to keepe a concubine, yea ^u that by keeping many harlots he sinneth not so much. As for vs we liue

Ch 7. 6. Op.
imper. in Mat.
hom. 19. Quae sunt vestimenta oris
liis Species videlicet simulatio religionis; eie-mofina simulata, oratio simulata, ieiunium simulatum, & ceterae species pietatis quibus se
vestiunt lupi rapaces.
P Act. 26. 5.
Epphar. her. 16.
de Phariſeis.
q Mat. 23. 14.
r 2. Tim. 3. 6.

Tit. 1. 11.
r Coſter. Enchirid.
cap. 15. propoſ. 9.
Sacerdos ſi fornicetur aut domi concubinam ſoueat, tamen ſi grauiſacrilegio ſe obſtringat, grauiſſis tamen peccat ſi contrahat matrimonium.
u Campeg. apud Sleidan. Coment. lib 4. Si ſacerdotes mariti ſiant multo eſſe grauius peccatū quam ſi plurimas domi meretrices alant.

in mariage as did Abraham, ¹ the father of all that beleeue, as Isaac, ² Rom. 4. 11. ³ Jacob, the Patriarkes, the Priests, the Prophets, and other righteous men, and as the first Christians did, who all pleased God, and were accepted in his sight. We know there is no offence in mariage, because it is the ordinance of God, but we detest their vowed virginitie, by pretence whereof they wickedly defile themselves with vncleannes of the diuell. He telleth vs againe of eating the best that can be gotten, but we eate whether fish or flesh as lawes permit, what the prouidence of God doth yeeld vs, giuing God thank neither are we so scrupulous therein as he and his fellowes, whether in fish or in flesh, being forsooth ghosly fathers, take it as a scorne not to be entertained with the best. Whereas he mentioneth their almes, we finde it in former times which they bragge of, not to haue bene such, but ⁴ that in a time of dearth innumerable poore people haue died like dogs vpon dunghils, and in wine-shops, and in the streetes, without any compassion taken for their comfort and reliefe. And no maner, because almes was reduced by them to the maintenance of idle lozels in religious houses, as now it is to their night walking and wandering Circumcellions, but as for the true almes for the reliefe of the poore and needy, we doubt not but it is more faithfully exercised by vs, then it was or is by them. Of racking poore men by fines and vnrasonable rents, he shall see examples enow amongst their Catacolike disciples, of whom there be some, who for the colouring of their impious cruelties, do alledge concerning their tenants, liuing in due obedience to their Prince according to the lawes of God, that they are heretikes, and therefore that it skilleth not how they deale with them, not knowing that though their religion were the truth, yet it should concerne them which the Apostle saith; ⁵ Whilest we haue time let vs do good to all mē, though specially to them that are of the household of faith. Concerning vsurie, let him remember what Mathew of Paris reported of old concerning the Pope. ⁶ The Pope, saith he, who should be the paterne and example of all religion, is an open vsurer. He had here in England his bankers who were termed Carsini, who did vnto that trade of merchandise in his behalfe. Againe for craft and cosening, let him remember how the same Mathew describeth the Popes ⁷ extortions cloked with arguments and reasons, his mousetrap-like deuices, his goodly words such as might moue hearts of stōe, but that

¹ Math. Paris
Hen 3. anno 1158.
Deficiente annona
pauperū multitudine innumeralis
morta est, & in-nitia sunt passim
eorum corpora inmunda pre fame &
lucenia. quina
v. l. tena in porca-
ris, serguibus &
bisofis placis, &c

² Gil. 6. 10.
³ Math. Paris
Hen. 3. anno 1157. Papa qui forma & exem-
plum totius ten-
etur esse religio-
nis vsuarius est
manifestus.
⁴ Id. anno 1235.
Carsini in carce-rei Papalis.

c. Anno 1234.
 Argumentosus
 extortiones exco-gitans. Excogitata musculatione
 pecunia continge-re edotus. Per
 elegantissima que
 corda hominum
 lapidea videntur
 penetrare nisi
 facta humilitate
 ac iustitia luce
 claris aduersan-
 tia sequentur.
 Anno 1240.
 Absurdum vide-
 batur etiam sim-
 plicibus quam di-
 uersis musculis simplici Dei po-
 pulum substantia
 sua movebatur Romana curia
 priuare, nihil pe-
 tens nisi aurum & argentum.
 c. 1. Thefl. 4. 6.
 f. Col. 3. 16.

his deedes followed very clearly repugnant to humility and iust dealing. ^d It seemed absurd, saith he, euen to simple men, to see by how diuers traps the Court of Rome craving nothing but gold and siluer, practised to rob the poore people of God of their substance. Now therefore M. Bishop gaineth no credit to his doctrine of satisfactions, by charging these enormities vpon vs, inasmuch as they are found much more intolerably in the Pope himselfe, and therefore much more in them who are the members of so bad a head. Whosoever amongst vs doe sinne in these kindes, and cause the people of God to grieue, and his enemies to blaspheme his truth, wee teach them, and they shall find, that ^c God is the auenger of such things, and his iudgement shall in due time find out their sinne. Of the ridiculous absurdity of their satisfactory prayers I haue spoken before. His words of bitter teares are but formall; Catholike eies are too tender to be made red with bitter teares, and the form of their prayers fit teth not thereto. Our singing of Geneua Psalmes, as hee calleth them, indeede Dauids Psalmes, though many of them haply turned into English meeter at Geneua, is a deuotion prescribed by the holy Ghost, saying by the Apostle, ^f Let the word of Christ dwell in you plenteously, in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing your euil selues in Psalmes, and Hymnes, and spiritual songs, singing with a grace in your hearts to the Lord. If being merry in good sort we thus sing Psalmes, we therein follow the rule of S. Iames, ^g Is any man merry? let him sing. Yea and we hold it for a notable token of the apostasie of the Church of Rome, that it hath so abandoned this point of Christian exercise and deuotion, from all both publike and priuate vse. We do not raile, but performe the office of careful pastors and teachers in noting their sinnes and errors not imagined only, but verie sensible, nor onely pretended, but proued by the testimony of him who is truth, and cannot erre. As for that which he saith of laying all paine and sorrow vpon Christs shoulders, it is true that we do so indeed, as touching satisfaction for sinne, but otherwise God willeth not meanes to lay paines and sorrows vpon those that are his, to make them know that they are not borne to pleasure and pastime, but to ^h serue the counsell of God, & to glorifie his name. The Church of Rome swatmeth, as before hath beene noted, with Atheists and Epicures, that eary the shew of that perswasion, but amongst the true professors of the Gospel, there are no such found.

g Iames 5. 13.

h AAs 13. 9.

OF TRADITIONS

I W. BISHOP.

Master Perkins. Traditions are doctrines deliuered from hand to hand, cyther by worde of mouth or writing, besides the writtten word of God.

Concl. I.

His first conclusion as touching our consent. We hold that the very word of God was deliuered by Tradition from Adam to Moses, who was the first Pen-man of holy Scripture. Item, that the Historie of the new Testament (as some for eight, not eightie, or as other think for twenty yeares) went frō hand to hand by Tradition, till penned by the Apostles, or being penned by others, was approved by them. Hitherto we agree (but not in this which he interlaceth) that in the state of nature, every man was instructed of God immediatly in both matters of faith and religion: for that God then as euer since used the ministerie as well of good fathers, as godly maisters: as Enoch, Noe, Abraham, and suchlike, to teach their children and seruants the true worship of God, and true faith in him: otherwise, howe shoulde the worde of God passe by Tradition from Adam to Moses, as M. Perkins affirmeth, if no child learned any such thing of his father, but was taught immediatly from God? but M. Perkins seemeth to regard little such petite contradictions.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins meaning is plaine enough without any contradiction. God in the beginning reuealed his will vnto our father Adam, not by writing, but familiarly by word of mouth. Hee left it not thenceforth meerey to passe from man to man, but as he first gaue this light by immediate reuelation from himselfe, so afterwards he continued, renewed, and confirmed the same, raising vp some in all times to be neere vnto him, to whom in diuers manners, by speech, by visions, by dreames, by sundry illuminations and inspirations, he imparted the knowledge of himselfe, and endued them with eminencie of gifts and authority, to be ^b preachers of righteousnesse both to their owne families, and to other whom the Lord would call. It is not true then which M. Bishop would so gladly fasten on, that the doctrine of faith passed by tradition, in such sort as the question of traditions standeth betwixt them and vs. They pretende that Christ taught his Apostles diuers and sundry doctrines which hee would haue wholly left without writing to the custody of the Church, and to be reported successiuelly from man to man to the worldsend. But God did not in those first ages leaue his word in any such sort wholly to the memory and report of men, as trusting to their fidelitie for the successiue deliuering of that which at first had been receiued, but he himselfe tooke vpon himselfe the custody of his owne tradition, and continued still to report what he had first taught, knowing the chanel of humane conceipt to be more corrupt, then that the streame of diuine truth can long run pure & cleane therein. And this may sufficiently perswade vs, that our Sauiour Christ would not leaue any part of his religion to so vncertaine and doubtfull course, & so subiect to the corruptions of humane deuices. If God would euer haue had his truth to passe altogether from hand to hand, vndoubtedly he would haue taken that course in the beginning, when men liuing so long, might be likely to confirme and settle in their posteritie what they should beleue. But he saw there would be no safety, vnlesse hee himselfe still continued to be an instructour vnto them. He knew how subiect men are to alteration and change, howe easily one man mistaketh that which is rightly deliuered by another, how readily men sometimes come short, sometimes go too farre: how one mans fancy conceiueth one way, & another mans another way, and that we can neuer keepe any straight and euen path, so long as instruction is no otherwise had, but from man to man. Therefore where God himselfe attended not to keepe the fire burning which he had kindled, it soone went out: where men were left onely to tradition, they soone degenerated from that seruice of god, wherein they had beene brought vpp vnder iust and righteous parents.

There

There is no likelihood therefore that God finding so little safety in tradition in the beginning, would leaue his Church now to bee guided by tradition in the end. Nay, when he thought good somewhat to withdraw himselfe from that familiar conference, & dealing with men, he would otherwise supply the want therof, & prouide for the safety of his people, by appoynting a standing oracle of a written law, to which all men at all times might resort to bee informed as touching duty and seruice towards God. And as in the creation of the world, howsoeuer the light were at first sustained and spread abroad by the incōprehensible power of God, yet when he created the Sun, he conueighed the whole light of the world into the body thereof, so that though the Moone & starres shoulde giue light, yet they should shine with no other light, but what they receiued from the Sun, euen so in the constitution of the Church, howsoeuer God at first preferued & continued the knowledge of his truth, by immediate reuelation from himselfe to some chosen men, by whose ministerie he would haue the same communicated to the rest, yet when he gaue his word in writing, hee conueighed into the body of the Scriptures the whole light of his Church, so that albeit there should be Pastours and teachers therein, to shine as starres to giue light to others, yet they should giue no other light, but what by the beames of the written law was cast vpon thē. Which beames albeit they shined not then altogether cleare & bright, many things being lapped vp in obscure & dark mysteries, & rather signified by figuratiue ceremonies, then expressed in plain words, yet were they not to walke by any other light, nor to go without the cōpassē of the writtē word only what was obscure therin, God by his Prophets frō time to time made more & more apparent, vntill by Iesus Christ in the writings of his Apostles & Euangelists, he set vp a most full & perfect light, Now then in M. Perkins meaning it is true, that from Adam to Moses the word of God passed from man to man by tradition, that is, by word onely & not by writing, and thus as M. Bishop alledgeth good fathers & godly maisters taught their childrē & seruants the true worship of God, & true faith in him. But it is true also which he signifieth in the second place, that they whō God thus raised vp to bee teachers & instructours of others, receiued not the word onely by tradition from others, but had reuelation & confirmation thereof immediatly from God himselfe. Therefore there is no argument to be taken taken hence to giue any colour to Popish tradition, nay we may iustly argue, that if God would haue had the religion of Christ to be taught in any part without writing, hee would haue taken the course which he did then by immediate reuelation, to continue and preferue the integritie and truth thereof.

2. W. BISHOP.

His 2. Concl. *We hold that the Prophets, our Saviour Christ, and his Apostles, spake and did many things good and true, which were not written in the Scriptures, but came to vs by Tradition: but these were not necessary to be beleued: For one exāple he puts; that the blessed virgin Mary liued & died a virgin: but it is necessary to saluation to beleue this, for Heluidius is esteemed by S. Augustine an Heretike for denying it.

* De haeres. ad
Quod. ha. 84

R. ABBOT.

It is necessary to saluation to beleue that our Saviour was concciued and borne of a virgin. We perswade our selues also according to the common iudgement of the Church, that she so continued and died, but yet we deny it to be any matter of saluation so to beleue. We say as S. Basil doth, that ^a it should be no whit presudicial to the doctrine of faith, that the virgin Mary after that shee had in her virginity serued for the generation of Christ, should performe the office of a wife to her husband. Her virginity was necessary till the birth of Christ was accomplishe, but what was afterwards done, is not too scrupulously to be adioyned to the doctrine of this mysterie. But yet that no man might to the scandall and offence of deuout persons, affirme rashly that she ceased to be a virgin, he sheweth that the places of the Gospell, which seeme to giue suspition thereof, doe not euict it, but may well be construed otherwise. And therefore Heluidius for mouing an vnecessary question hereof, to giue occasion of publicke disturbance, and for affirming rashly, that which he had no warrant sufficiently to proue, was iustly condemned & reiected by the Church, neither can we approue any that shall doe as he did.

a Basil de human.
Christi generat.
Hoc nunc suspici-
onem generat ne
for san posteaquam puritate sua gene-
rationi dominice
per spiritum sanctum administrata
seruuitum domi-
nuptialia opera vi-
ro Maria non negauerit. Nos vero
licet n hil hoc do-ctrina pietatis officeret (nam donec
dispensabatur christi generatio neces-
saria erat virgini-
tas, quid vero po-
stea sit factum ad
mysterij huius do-
ctrinam non anxie coniungendum est)
veruntamen &c.

3. W. BISHOP.

His 3. Concl. Wee hold that the Church of God hath power to prescribe

scribe ordinances & Traditions touching time and place of Gods worship: And touching order & comelinesse to be used in the same (many with these foure cauents:) First, that it prescribe nothing childish or absurde. See what a reuerent opinion this man carrieth of the Church of God, gouerned by his holy spirit, that it neuerthelesse may prescribe things both childish and absurde. But I must pardon him, because he speaketh of his owne Synagogue, which is no part of the true Church. Secondly, that it be not imposed as any part of Gods worship: This is contrary to the conclusion, for order and comelinesse to be used in Gods worship, which the Church can prescribe, is some part of the worship. Thirdly, that it be seuered from superstition, &c. This is needlesse: for if it be not absurde, which was the first prouiso, it is already seuered from superstition, The fourth, touching multiuude may passe: these be but meere trifles: That is of more importance, that he termeth the decree registred in the Acts of the Apostles, a Tradition: whereas before he defined Traditions to be all doctrine deliuered, besides the written word. Now the Acts of the Apostles is a parcel of the written word, as all the world knowes: that then which is of record there, cannot be termed a Tradition.

R. ABBOT:

The cautions set downe by M. Perkins are materiall & necessary against the vsurpations of the Church of Rome, which hauing forsaken the direction of the spirit of God in the word of God, is now led by ^a a lying spirit, by ^b spirits of error; and therefore in her ordinances and traditions swaruet from the grauity and wisdom of the holy Ghost. The ceremonies of the Masse are apish and ridiculous toies; whereby in that which Christ instituted for a most sacred and reuerend action, they make the Priest more like to a iugler or to a vice vpon the stage, in his duckings and turnings, his kissings & crossings, his lifting vp and letting downe, his putting together the forefinger and the thomb, and another while ioining both his hands; his putting to the right eie & then to the left, with a number of such other absurde and foolish deuises. The like absurdity haue I noted before, that when the Priest hath pronounced absolution and forgiveness, they appoint a man for penance to say, Forgiue vs our trespasses, and againe, that they make their prayers like a charme, which to worke their effect, must bee said ouer thus or thus many times. I remember I haue read some where, that one of the Popes a 1. Kings. 22.

b 1. Tim. 4. 1.

would haue ordered that the Pope and his Cardinals should ride vpon Asses in token of humilicy, and for imitation of Christ, riding into Ierusalem vpon an Ass. The Cardinals thought that the foole rid the Pope, and took this for a childish and idle fancy. Now if the Pope the head of their Church, could be possessed with so childish & vaine a toy, why should wee doubt but that against their Church there is cause of the first caution, that the Church is not to prescribe any thing that is childish or absurd? The second caution is, that nothing be imposed as any part of Gods worship. This, saith M. Bishop, is contrary to the conclusion. And why so? For order and comelinesse to be used in Gods worship, saith he, is some part of the worship. But who taught him that deepe point of Philosophy, that an accident is a part of the subiect, that the beauty or comelinesse of the body is a part of the body? Order and comelinesse are matters of ceremony, not of substance; of outwarde ornament, not of inward deuotion, properly and immediatly respecting men, but by consequence onely reduced to God, & therefore can be no parts of the worship of God. The third caution is, that what the Church prescribeth, bee seuered from superstition and opinion of merit. Of opinion of merit M. Bishop saith nothing, which is a case that in high degree toucheth the Church of Rome, which of her owne traditions hath made meritorious works, and hath bewitched the people, to thinke that by the obseruation thereof they may purchase & deserue heauen. As touching superstition, he saith the caution is needelesse, for if it bee not absurd saith he, which is the first promise, it is already seuered fro superstition. Which indeed is rightly spoken according to the truth of the thing, because in truth all superstition is absurd. and therefore there should need no distinction betwixt that that is superstitious, and that that is absurd, but yet the distinction here hath vse in respect of the opinion of men, because many things are superstitious, which yet with men are hardly deemed absurd, for that ^c they haue a shew of wisdom, as S. Paul saith in voluntary religion & humblenesse of mind, and in not sparing the body, so that they many times blind the eies of thē that seem to be of very good sight. And this is the case of many Popish traditions, wherein as there are many thinges so absurde, as that they are faine to vse their wits to deuise couers and excuses, that they may not appeare to bee so grosse as they are, yet many other there are which are so fairely varnished with colours of piety and holinesse, as by the meanes thereof Satan first preuailed to bring thē into the church daze;

dazeling the eyes of men that they saw not the mischief that in time he should worke thereby to the religion and faith of Christ. The last caution is, that the Church of God be not burdened with the multitude of traditions. A thing wherof S. Austin complaineth in his time that d all was full of manifold presumptions, and that the religion which the mercy of God would haue to be free, by hauing but a very few and very manifest sacraments and obseruations, was so oppressed with seruite burdens, as that the state of the Iewes was more tolerable then it: who though they knew not the time of liberty, yet were subiects to the burdens of Gods lawes, not to mens presumptions. This caution, M. Bishop saith may passe but in this the Church of Rome hath more deeply offended, then did those times wherof S. Austin complained, hauing infinitely intangled the consciences of men, with the multiplicity of her witchcraft and sorceries, and endlesse variety of superstitious obseruations. These things now M. Bishop telleth vs, are but meere trifles, but the reason is, because he wanteth vnderstanding to conceiue the waight and importance of them. And from that want it proceedeth, that he alleadgeth a trifle indeed as a matter of more importance, that is that M. Perkins calleth the decree registred in the fiftieth of the Acts by the name of a tradition, hauing before defined traditions to bee all doctrines deliuered beside the written words. But if his sight had serued him, he might very readily haue scene, that in the first place M. Perkins had defined traditions as they are in question betwixt vs and them, & referreth the same onely to matters of doctrine, in which sort we admit of no traditions, but that here he speaketh of traditions more generally, in such sort as we grant traditions, as he expresseth, which are the positie and temporary ordinances & constitutions of the church. The decree then of the Apostles was no tradition in that meaning wherein we question traditions, because it was no matter of doctrine but onely of conuersation and temporary obseruation, but in the general vse of the name of traditions, it was a matter of traditō, because all ordinances of the Church are imported by that name.

4. W. BISHOP.

The difference. Catholickes teach, th. t besides the written Word, there be certaine vwritten traditions, which must be beleued and practised, as both profitable and necessary to saluation. We hold that the Scriptures containe in them all doctrine needfull to saluation whether it concerne faith or manners, and acknowledge no traditions for such, as he who beleueth them not, cannot be saued.

d. August. epist. 119. Tam multas presumptionibus sic plena sunt omnia, & c. Ipsam religionem quam paucissimis & manifestissimis celebrationum sacramentis, misericordiam Dei esse liberam voluit seruis oneribus premunt ut tolerabilior sit conditio Iudaorum. qui etiam si temeris libertatis non agnouerint, tamen legalibus sarcinis, non humanis presumptionibus subiunguntur.

Before we come to the Protestants reasons against Traditions, obserue that wee diuide Traditions into three sorts: the first we termed Diuine, because they were deliuered by our blessed Sauiour, who is God: the second, Apóttolicall, as deliuered by the holy Apostles: the third, Ecclesiasticall, instituted and deliuered by the Governours of the Church, after the Apostles dayes. And of these three kinds of Traditions, we make the same account, as of the writing of the same Authors: to wit, we esteeme no lesse of our Sauiours Traditions, than of the foure Gospels, or any thing immediately dictated from the holy Ghost. Likewise as much honour and credit doe we giue vnto the Apostles doctrine vnwritten, as written. For inke and paper brought no new holnesse, nor gaue any force & vertue vnto either Gods or the Apostles words: but they were of the same value and credit uttered by worde of mouth, as if they had beene written. Here the question is principally of diuine Traditions, which we hold to be necessarie to saluation, to resolue and determine many matters of greater difficultie. For we deny not but that some such principall poynts of our Faith (which the simple are bound to beleene vnder paine of damnation) may bee gathered out of the holy Scripture: as for example, that God is the Creator of the world, Christ the Redeemer of the world, the holy Ghost the sanctifier: and other such like Articles of the Creed.

R. ABBOT

Traditions saith M. Bishop, are of three sorts, Diuine, Apostolicall and Ecclesiasticall. Which distinction in some meaning standeth good but as he expresseth the meaning of it, it is absurd. For if Apostolike Traditions be expounded of doctrines, as he expoundeth them, what warrant hath hee to put difference betwixt diuine and Apostolike traditions, when the Apostles for doctrine deliuered nothing but what they themselues had receiued from God? Our Sauiour limited their commission in this sort, ^a teaching them to doe what soeuer I haue commanded you. Accordingly they professed to do. I haue receiued of the Lord that which I haue deliuered vnto you, saith saint Paul. ^c We gaue you commandements by the Lord Iesus, and hee that despiseth these things, despiseth not man but God. The gospel which was preached by me, I receiued it not of man, nor was taught it, but by the reuelation of Iesus Christ. Therefore Tertullian saith of them, that ^e they did not vpon their liking make choise of any thing to bring in, but faithfully assigned to the Nations the doctrine which they hadde received

^a Mat. 28. 20.
^b 1. Co. 11. 23.
^c 1. Theff. 4. 2. 8
^d Gal. 1. 1. 1. 2.
^e Tertul. de pre-seript. N. c. 4. si (Apostoli) quicquam ex suo ar-
 bitrio quod indu-
 cerent elegerunt.
 sed acceptam à Christo discipli-
 nam fideliter na-
 tionibus adsig-nauerunt.

received of Christ. So that if Traditions bee vnderstood of doctrine, there is no reason to make any difference betwixt the traditions of Christ, & the traditions of the Apostles, because they are both one. But if we wil make difference betwixt them, we must cal Apostolike traditions, onely such ordinances whether written or vnwritten, as the Apostles prescribed for ceremony & vsage in the Church, as the obseruation of the memoriall of the natiuitie, death, & resurrection of Christ, the alteration of the seuenth day from the Iewes Sabbath to the day of Christes resurrection, the precept of the Apostle of preaching bareheaded, & such like. And in these traditions we may note that they were sometimes subiect to diuersity according to diuersity of places, as was at first the feast of Easter sometimes subiect to alteration & change, where there might bee reason of any such alteration, as were the feasts of charity first vsed by the Apostles & afterwards abolished for the abuse of them, & as that order of the Apostle for preaching bareheaded, it beeing by the custome of that time a signe of honour and authority so to do, whereas since it is become a matter of authority to preach with the head couered. The obseruation of the Lords day we hold perpetuall & vnchangeable, because we find it noted in the Scriptures to haue bin from the Apostles, and there can be no reason of reuerfing or altering what they ordered therein. If thus M. Bishop will speake of Apostolike traditions, we acknowledge the same of them, but Apostolike doctriens we knowe none but such as are also to bee acknowledged for diuine. Thus therefore the question is of diuine traditions, that is, doctrines of faith & of the worship and seruice of God, which we deny to bee any, but what are comprised in the written word of God. Now of diuine traditions, he telleth vs some parabables, which it seemeth hee himselfe did not well vnderstand. We hold them, sayth he, to be necessary to saluation, to determine matters of greater difficulty. Belike then they are not necessary for theselues, but only to determine matters of greater difficulty, and those that are not necessary for the determining of matters of greater difficultie, are not necessary to saluation. By this meanes a number of their traditions must fall, Purgatory praier for the dead, inuocation of Saints, Popes Pardons worshippin of idols & images, and the rest, because no matters of difficulty are determined thereby. Againe, wee deny not, sayth he, but that some such principall points of our faith, which the simple are bound to belceue

f Jude ver. 1.

g Acs. 20.7.
Apoc. 1.10.

under paine of damnation, may be gathered out of the Scriptures. It seemeth then that the simple are not bound vnder paine of damnation to beleue the rest that cannot be gathered out of the Scriptures, & if he say they be so bound, then that clause of his was very idly and impertinently inserted. But we must pardon him: it seemeth he wanted sleepe the night before, and therefore being very drowsie, could not well consider of that he wrote.

5. W. BISHOP.

*deut. 4. 2.

M. Perkins goeth about to proue by these reasons following, that the Scriptures containe all matter of beleife necessary to saluation. Testimonie, Thou shalt not adde to the words that I comānd thee, nor take any thing there from. Therefore the writen worde is sufficient for all doctrine pertaining to saluation. If it be sayd, that this is spoken as well of the unwritten as written word: for there is no mention in the text of the written word: then M. Perkins addeth, that it must be vnderstood of the written word onely, because these wordes are as a certaine preface set before a long Commentarie made vpon the written Law.

Answer. Let the words be set where you will, they must not be wrested beyond their proper signification. The words cited signifie no more, then that we must not either by addition or subtractiō, change or peruert Gods commandements, whether they be written or unwritten. Now to inferre, that because they are as a preface vnto Moses law, that therefore nothing must be added vnto the same law, is extreame dotage. Why thē were the bookes of the old Testament written afterward, if God had forbidden any more to be written or taught, besides that one booke of Deuteronomie? Shall we thinke that none of the Propbets that liued and wrote many volumes after this, had read these wordes: or that they either vnderstood them not: or that vnderstanding them well, did wilfully transgresse against thē? one of these the Protestants must needs defend, or else for very shame surcease the alleaging of this text for the al-sufficiēcy of the writtē word.

R. ABBOT

2 deut. 4. 2.

M. Bishops allegations are too simple & childish to moue the Protestants to surcease the opposing of that text of Moses against vnwritten traditions & doctrines. Ye shal put nothing to the word that I command you, saith Moses, neither shall ye take ought therefrom, that ye may keepe the commandements of the Lord your God which I command you, thereby giuing to vnderstand, that euery putting too, or taking fro, is a breach of the comādemēt of the Lord. Against the exception.

tion which M. Bishop vseth, that these words may be vnderstood of commandements as well vnrwritten as written, M. Perkins answereth, that these words are as a preface to a long cōmentary or exposition of the written law, & therefore do import, that to the written law nothing is to be added, nothing to be taken from it, but that onely was to be done, which is contained therein. Now how soeuer M. Bishop doat, yet the case is plaine, that because Moses spake thus in respect of the written law, therefore the Israelites were to admit of nothing but what was written in the law. But saith he, why then were there bookes of the old Testament and of the Prophets written afterwards, if God hath forbidden any more to be written or taught, but that one booke of Deuteronomy? Behold a cosening Sophister, who seeth well, and knoweth, that saue onely by fallshood and deceit hee auaieth nothing. Wee say not that of the booke of Deuteronomy onely, but of the whole written lawe Moses sayd, Yee shall put nothing to it, &c. Againe we doe not say, that God did forbid any more bookes to be written or taught, but that no matter of doctrine, of faith, or of the worship of God, should be receiued, or written, or taught, but what was deriued from the written lawe. Now then I wish thee gentle Reader to obserue how the wise man in his owne answer circūuenteth and ouerthroweth himselfe. Moses sayth, Yee shall put nothing to the word which I cōmand you, nor take ought therefrom: now tell vs M. Bishop of what word he did say this? Hee telleth vs, that we must vnderstand it of the worde whether written or vnrwritten. Be it so, but you will confesse then, that to the word of God deliuered by Moses written or vnrwritten nothing is to be added, because the wordes of Moses plainly expresse to much, and how then came it to passe, that so many bookes were written afterwards? Wee hope you will not deny but that Moses therein taught the Israelites whatsoeuer was necessary to saluation: howe then doth it stand, that the rest of the Prophets added so much more in writing? To vse your owne wordes, shall wee thinke that the Prophetes read not these wordes, or vnderstood them not, or did wilfully transgresse them? Wee woulde gladly heare whether of these you will say. The man is mute, and he hath nothing to answer: if hee answer as he must, his answer fully serueth our turne, for defending the onely written law of Moses, that the bookes that were after written by the Prophets, serue to explaine and declare the law, & to shew the experiment & practise of it, but adde no point of doctrine, nor teach any article of religion towards God but what Moses hath written in the Law. But for the further strengthening of this argument, it is to be noted that Moses testifieth of himselfe that ^b he wrote at the wordes of God. In another place it is said, ^c Moses wrote this law and deliuered it to the Priests and to all the Elders of Israel, and commanded them saying, Every seuenth yeare thou shalt read this law before all Israel. The law then which he gaue them, he gaue them in writing, that they might read it, & it might be read vnto them. It could not haue bene said Moses wrote this law, if he had written but a part of it, and left another part vnwritten. Nay, it is said further afterwards, ^d When Moses had made an end of writing the wordes of this lawe in a booke vntill he had finished them, then Moses commanded the Levites saying, Take the booke of this law, and put it in the side of the Arke, &c. It is apparant then that Moses gaue not ouer writing the wordes of the law, vntill he had finished them, that is, vntill he had written all the wordes of the law, so that there was no word of the law, but that that was written in the booke of the law. And therefore that which is set downe by Moses, ^e Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them: is thus related by the Apostle, ^f Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the booke of the law to do the: therby to shew, that all the wordes of the law are written in the booke of the law, and nothing left vnwritten that was any part or parcel thereof. Thus when God would giue direction to Iosuah, ^g to obserue and do according to all the law which Moses had commanded him, giuing him charge according to the instruction of Moses here spoken of, not to turne away from it to the right hand or to the left, either by putting too or taking fro, to shew what he meant by all the law hee addeth, Let not this booke of the law depart out of thy mouth, but meditate therein day and night, that thou mayst obserue and do according to all that is written therein. Here againe it is plaine, that to obserue all the law of Moses, is to obserue all that is written in the booke of the law. And out of this place Cyprian beeing vrged by Stephanus Bishop of Rome with tradition, argueth against the receiuing of vnwritten traditions: ^h Whence is this tradition, sayth he? Whether descendeth it from the authoritie of the Lord and of the Gospell, or commeth it fro the comandements and epistles of the Apostles? For that those things must bee done which are written, God testifieth, saying

b Exod. 24. 4
c Deut. 31. 9. 10.

d. v. c. 24.

e. deut. 27. 29
f Gal. 3. 10.

g Iosuah. 1. 7.

h Cyprian ad Pompeium. Vnde est ista traditio? Virum in die dominica & Evangelium ea auctoritate descendens, an de Apostolorum mandatis atque epistolis veniens? Eam in faciendam esse que scripta sunt, Deus testatur, & proponit Iesu Nazareus dicens, Non recedat, &c.

saying to Iosuah. The booke of this lawe shall not depart out of thy mouth, &c. Where he plainly sheweth that out of these wordes he intendeth this conclusion, that concerning faith and deuotion towards God, as wee are to doe the things that are written, so what is not written we are not to doe. And this now is cleare by the place that we haue here in hand: for if all that Moses commanded were written, and nothing was to be added to that that Moses commanded, then nothing was to be added to that that was written, and those things which were written afterwards were no additions, but onely declaration and confirmations of those things which hee had before written. And thus did the ancient Fathers vnderstand that that is sayd of adding or diminishing as touching the written word. I reuerence the fulnesse (or perfection) of the Scripture, saith Tertullian, *L*et the schools of Hermogenes shew me that that which hee saith is written: if it be not written, let him feare the woe that is appointed to them that adde or take away. And so Basil saith, that k it is a manifest falling from faith, and an apparant sinne of pride, either to refuse any thing that the Scripture hath, or to bring in any thing that is not written, seeing our Lord Iesus Christ saith, My sheepe heare my voyce, they do not follow a stranger: and the Apostle by a humane example greatly forbiddeth in the holy Scriptures eyther to adde any thing, or take away, when he sayth, A mans testament when it is confirmed, no man refuseth or addeth any thing to it. Hereby then it is plaine, that the forbidding to adde or to take away, hath reference to the written word of God, and therefore that the doctrine of faith and religion is to be taken from thence onely, and nothing therein to be admitted but what hath the warrant of the holy Scriptures.

6. W. BISHOP,

M. Perkins His 2. testimony: *P*ro the law and testimony, if they speake not according to this word, it is, because there is no light in them. Here the Prophet teacheth (saith M. P.) what is to be done in cases of difficulty: men must not run to the Wizards and Southsayers, but to the Law and to the testimony, commending the written word as sufficient to resolve all doubts whatsoeuer.

Ans^r. By the Law and testimony in that place, the 5. bookes of Moses are to be understood: if that written Worde bee sufficient to resolve all doubts whatsoeuer, what neede wee then the Prophets? what neede wee the Euangelists and the Epistles of the Apostles? what Wizard would k Basil. ser. de fidei Manifestus est fides lapsus & liquidum superbia vitium vel respicere aliqui d eorum que Scriptura habet vel inducere quicquam quod scriptum non est, cum Dominus dicat, Oues mea uocem meam audiunt: alii enim autem non sequuntur, & Apostolus per humanam exemplum uehement. r prohibeat aliquid in diuini scripturis vel addere vel demere, cum dicit, Hom. in quidem Testamentum, &c.

Tertul. aduers. Hermog. Adoro scriptura plenitudinem. &c. Scriptura esse doceat Hermogenus officina: si non sit scriptum timeat ut illud ad uocentibus aut detrahentibus destinatum.

• Et y 3. o.

would haue reasoned in such sort? The Prophet willeth here, that the Israelites who wanted not to discern whether it be better to flie unto God for counsell, then unto Wizards and Soothsayers, doe see what is written in the lame of Moses concerning that point of consulting-Wizards: which is there plainely forbidden in diuers places. Now out of one particular case, whereof there is expresse mention in the written word, to concluded that alldoubts & scruples whatsoeuer are thereby to be decided, is a most unskilfull part, arguing as great want of light in him as was in those blind Israelites.

R. ABBOT.

If M. Perkins had thought himselfe to be so wise as M. Bishop doth himselfe, we should certainly haue condemned him for a wizard; what we thinke of M. Bishop in the meane time, we leaue it to him to consider of. The Prophet in the place alledged, dehortheth the faithfull from yeelding to the wicked motions and counsells of hypocrites and vnbeleeuers, who casting away all trutt and confidence in God, and relinquishing the yoke of obedience to him sought by other helpes and meanes to secure and establish themselves against the dangers which they imagined to themselves who as they had giuen themselves ouer to idolatrie, so followed the course of idolaters in this behalfe, and for aduice and direction in such things as concerned thē for their safetie, they sought & taught one another to seeke to Southsayers, and such as vled familiar spirits, and tooke vpon them to call vp the soules of dead men to giue answer to such things as should be demanded of thē. By them they would be instructed what to do, and what course to take for their owne good, & hereby were hardened in their abominations and apostacie from God, to the further prouocation of his wrath against themselves. He therefore aduertiseth the faithfull and godly not to ioyne with them in any such doings, but when they shuld persvade them to enquire of any such wicked persons, rather to answer them

^a Should not a people enquire at their God? Euery nation seeketh to their owne God. The Lord is your God, will ye not seeke to him? will ye go for i^e the liuing to them that are dead? Hereupon hee addeth the words here questioned: ^b To the law and to the testimony: if they speake not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. Wherin he giueth to the people of God a generall direction to goe to the law & to the testimony, to be instructed what waies they ought to walke in, and to hearken to none, to follow none but onely such as speake vnto them according to that word. The Prophets of God called men one way: false prophets, wizards and Southlayers called men another way: he teacheth them therefore a sure way to know to whom to commit themselues, by considering who spake according to that worde. Now to this the wizard giueth vs a wizardlike answer, that the Prophets willed them to see what was written in the law of Moles concerning that point of consulting wizards. So then there is no more here said but this, that if the wizards do not say vnto thē that they are not to consult with wizards; it is because there is no light in them, and who but a wizard would haue made such a construction of the place? The Prophet teacheth them in generall to seeke to the law of God for aduice and answer of such things as touching which they went to consult with wizards & southlayers: to be directed thereby in seeking to prouide for their owne safetic: thence to take resolution of their doubts: and to take it for certaine that they led them in darknesse, whosoever should draw them to other wayes then could be warranted thereby. c Every nation, sayth Basil vpon that place, did propound to their God the doubt and question whereof they desired to be taught, to haue resolution thereof whom they tooke to be gods, to them they offered their questions to be answered. Therefore he sheweth that the people of God for answer of their doubts, should go to God in going to the law and to the testimony d which god hath giuen, as to guide vs by the hand, & to direct vs the way. Wilt thou then, saith he, bee certainly perswaded what shall hereafter befall thee? Prouide diligently to do the things which the law commandeth thee to do and waite assured of the most ioyfull fruition of the good things which are provided for thee. If thou desire to enjoy good things, performe the commandements that are prescribed vnto thee. By Basils iudgement then it is plaine, that the words haue further meaning, then to refer them to the law concerning that one particular of consulting wizards. But Hierome goeth yet further, & tels vs the meaning of the Prophet in this sort: c If ye doubt of any thing, if ye would know the things that ye doubt of, referre your selues to the law and to the testimonies of the Scriptures. What wil M. Bishop say now, wil he call Hierome a wizard as he hath done M. P. for saying the Prophets meaning to be, that the Scripture, the written word should resolue thē of al that they doubted to wards God? Yea & the law it selfe sufficiently warranteth vs. so to cō-

^a Esa. 8. 19.

^b Ver. 20.

c Basil in Esa. cap. 8. Vnaquęq; nationem ambigiosam & questionem de qua cupiebat edoceri suo proponebat Deo: dissoluentiam Quos supponebant esse Deos hu offerre- bant diluendas in- quationes suas. d Adiect Deus legem velut manu- ductionem viam: ubi primum tem- pte certo persuade- ri qua sint futura? Prouide sedulo vs que tibi lex faci- enda preseruit; si- opere expleas dili- genter. & certus es pariter ucan- dis in fruitione repositis: ornati- bonor. m. & c. Bo- na persem si quide- desideres, qua pra- scripta sunt man- date, opere exi- quator. e Hu. ron. in Esay cap. 8. lib. 3. Si de aliquo dubitaueris, & si vultis nosse qua dubia sunt magis vos egi: & testimonij scripturę ser. pturarum.

f Deut. 12. 3. 2.

g *Quod præcipio
tibi hoc tantum facito Domino.*

ceiue Whatsoever I command you, take heed you do it, saith Moses, thou shalt put nothing thereto, nor take ought therefro, I those words M. Bishop, vulgar Latin expoundeth thus: What I command thee, that onely do to the Lord, thou shalt put nothing thereto, &c. Now wee haue seene before, that Moses committed to writing whatsoever he commadèd. If then nothing were to be done to the Lord but what Moses commanded, and all that Moses commanded was written, then by the written worde all doubts were to bee resolued as touching those things that were to be done to the Lord, and nothing to be done but that that was written. But saith M. Bishop, what need wee then the Prophets? what need we the Euangelists and the Epistles of the Apostles? I haue answered him before, but yet let me tell him here, that Faustus the Maniche denying God the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ to bee the authour of the old Testament, when hee was vrged that Christ approueth the same in saying, I came not to destroy the lawe, but to fulfill it, replied, that it could not be that Christ should say so, because the authour of the Lawe had sayde, that nothing should be added to the law nor taken from it. Saint Austine answereth him, that Christ came to fulfill the Lawe, not as that anything should be added which was wanting to the Lawe, but that the things should be done which are written therein, as his words (saith he) doeshew: for he doth not say, Not one iot or tittle of the law shall passe, till the things be added which are wanting, but till all things be done. Hence therefore we answer M. Bishop once againe, that the Prophets writings were no additions of doctrine, but onely explanations of the lawe, and so likewise that the writings of the newe Testament do adde nothing to the law, but onely doe further declare, and withall set foorth the accomplishment of those things that were foreshewed & prophesied in the law. And therefore Paul in preaching the Gospell, professeth to say no other things then those which the Prophets and Moses did say should come: so that to vse the distinction that Vincentius Lyrinensis vppon other occasion vseth, though the Euangelists and Apostles spake in a new manner, yet they spake no new matter, or to allude to Saint Austines wordes, though they varied in the tense, yet they differed not in the signification of the worde, but in both times, or in all times the same doctrine was preached, the same faith continued, the latter affirming nothing but what was confirmed by the writings of them that went before.

h August. cont. Faust. Manich. lib. 17. cap. 6. Veni legem adimplere non ut legi adderentur que deerant sed ut fierent que scripta erant, quod ipsa eius verba testantur: Non enim aut Iota unum aut unus apex non transiet à lege donec addantur que desunt, sed donec omnia fiant.

i AGS 26. 2. 2.

k Vincent Lyr. Eadem que d d cifi doce, ut cum dicas noue non d cas noua.

7. W. BISHOP.

3. Testimony, * These things were written, that ye might beleue, that Iesus is the Christ: & in beleueing, might haue life euerlasting. * Ioh. 20. 31.
 Here is set downe the full end of the Gospell, that is, to bring men to faith, and consequently to saluation: to which the whole Scripture alone is sufficient without Traditions.

Ans^w. Here are more faults then lines: first, the text is craftily mangled, things being put in stead of miracles. For S. Iohn saith, many other miracles christe did &c. but these were written, &c. Secondly, S. Iohn saith not, that for faith we should be saued, but beleueing we should haue saluation in his name, which he chipped off: thirdly, remember to what faith S. Iohn ascribes the meanes of our saluation, not to that whereby we apply vnto our selues christes righteousnesse, but by which wee beleeue Iesus to be Christ the Messias of the Iewes, and the Sonne of God, which M. Perkins also concealed.

Now to the present matter, S. Iohn saith that these miracles recorded in his Gospell, were written, that we might beleue Iesus to be the Sonne of God: and beleueing, haue saluation in his name, &c. Therefore the written word containes all doctrine necessary to saluation.

Ans^w. S. Iohn speaks not a word of doctrine, but of miracles: and therefore to conclude sufficiency of doctrine out of him, is not to care what one saith. But M.P. foreseeing this, saith, it cannot be understood of miracles only: for miracles without the doctrine of Christ, can bring no man to life euerlasting: true, and therefore that text speaking onely of miracles, proueth nothing for the sufficiency of the written woorde. Christes miracles were sufficient, to prooue him to be the Sonne of God, and their Messias: but that proueth not S. Iohns Gospell to containe all doctrine needfull to saluation: for many other poyns of faith must be beleued also. And if it alone be sufficient, what neede we the other three Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, or any of their Epistles, or the same S. Iohns Reuelations? Finally, admit that S. Iohns Gospell were al-sufficient, yet should not Traditions be excluded: for christ saith in it in plaine termes, * that he had much more to say vnto his Apostles, but they as then being not able to beare it, he reserved that to be deliuered vnto them afterward: of which high mysteries S. Iohn recordeth not much in his Gospel after Christs resurrection: and so many of them must needs be deliuered by Traditions unwritten. * Ioh. 16.

R. ABBOT.

More faults then lines, saith M. Bishop, but very slender prooffe doth he bring of any fault. First, he cauilleth that the text is mangled, and things put instead of miracles. The wordes are thus: Many other signes also did Iesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this booke: but these things are written that ye might beleue that Iesus is Christ the sonne of God, and that in beleeuing ye might haue life through his name. Where we translate the Greeke relatiue ταύτα being in the neuter gender, these things, because it hath not reference onely to miracles mentioned in the former verse, but to the matter of the whole booke, S. Iohn here intending to set forth the end & purpose of all that he hath written, For being^b in Asia, as Ierome saith and the seeds of heretickes beginning to grow, of Cerinthus, Ebion and others denying christe to come in the flesh, hee was forced by almost all the Bishops of Asia, and by messages from other churches, to write more deeply then the other Euangelistes had done, of the diuinity of our Saviour christ. Here then he signifieth that he hath so done: these things (saith he) are written, that ye may beleue that Iesus is Christ the Son of God. therefore Cyrril saith hereof: ^c As it were repeating or recounting the things which he hath written, he manifesteth the intent of his Gospell. The first fault then pretended by M. Bishop is no fault, because the relatiue implyeth generally what the Euangelist hath written according to the intent and purpose of his Gospell. The second fault is ridiculously alleadged; for when M. Perkins collecteth that by faith we be saued, how doth he meane it, or how doth any man meane it, but ^d by faith in the name of Christ? As touching the third point, it hath bene ^e before declared, that to beleue that Iesus is christe the Son of God, importeth the applying vnto vs of the merit and righteousness of Christ. For as a man may ^f beleue that there is a God, or that God is, and yet be still an infidell, wanting that beleefe thereof which is properly the act of faith, as Thom. Aquinas noteth, so a man may in some sort beleue that Iesus is Christ the Son of God, and yet not so beleue it as the Scriptures nameth it for the act of iustifying faith, because he beleueth it not vnder such conditions as are determined by the doctrine of faith. If it be taken onely for an act of vnderstanding as the Papists take it, a man may beleue it without any fruit, because the deuils so beleue: but the beleefe of the heart which the Scripture intendeth, importeth affiance, and trust, and inward feeling, &

1 Joh. 20. 30.

^b Hier. Proent in Matth. Cum esset in Asia & tunc hereticorum femina pullularent Cerinthi, Ebionis & ceterorum qui negant Christum in carne uenisse, coactus est ab omnibus penē tunc Asia Episcopis & multarum Ecclesiarum legationibus de diuinitate saluatoris altius scribere

^c Cyril. in Ioanlib 1. 2. cap. 61. Quasi repetendo quae scripsit intentionē Euangelij manifestat.

^d Act. 2. 16.

^e Of iustification Sect. 18.

^f Thom. Aquin. 2. 2. q. 2. art. 2. ad 3. Credere Deum non conuenit infidelibus sub eorum actu fidei. Non enim credunt Deū esse sub his conditionibus quas fides determinat.

com-

comfort of that which it beleeueth, whilst thereby we apply vnto our selues the benefite of the merit and passion of Christ, expecting thereby the remission of our sins. But now frō noting of faults M. Bishop cometh to a finall answer, that becaule S. Iohn spaketh of miracles, not of doctrine, therefore these words proue nothing for the sufficiency of the written word. Where M. Perkins exception still standeth vnremoued, that becaule by miracles without doctrine we cannot attaine to that faith whereby we beleeu that Christ is the Son of God; therefore the words of the Euangelist cannot bee restrained to miracles only. For others did miracles, as great, yea & greater then Christ did, as by example we see when^b by the shadow of Pauls body and by napkins & handkerchises from Pauls body the sicke are healed, which we read not of Christ himselfe. By miracles therefore Christ is not discerned vnlesse by doctrine accōpanying the same he be made knowne vnto vs, and therefore the words of the Euangelist must be referred to the doctrine also whereby he teacheth to make vse of the miracles of Christ. So S. Austin referreth the words both to those things which Christ did and said; ^k*The holy Euangelist testifieth, that Christ both did and saide many things which are not written*, and for the ouerthrowing of M. Bishops answer, and iustifying of our assertion hee addeth: but those things were chosen to be written, which seemed sufficient for the saluation of them that beleue. Cyril speaketh more exprelly: ^l*All things which Christ did are not written, but what the writers thought to be sufficient as well touching conuersation as doctrine, that shining with right faith and vertuous works, we may attaine to the kingdom of heauen*. It is not then our collection onely, but thus these ancient Fathers conceiued, that of the miracles and doctrine of Christ so much was written as is sufficient to instruct vs to faith, to the attainment of euerlasting life. And this is plainly deliuered in the words of S. Iohn, who could not say, These things are written that ye may beleue, and beleuing may haue eternal life, if there be not that written by the beleefe whereof wee may obtaine eternall life. Therefore as touching Saint Iohns Gospell containing all things needefull to saluation, wee answer him first, that indeede wee affirme that there is no article of faith necessarie to saluation, which is not to be taught and learned out of the Gospell of S. Iohn. Secondly, there is no cause so to restrain the wordes, as if Saint Iohn would meane onely in his Gospell to comprehend all that should be needefull for the instruction of the Church. Nay he hath.

g Ioh. 14. 12.
h Act. 5. 15.
i Chap. 19. 13.
k Aug. in Ioan.
tract. 39. Sanctus Euangelista testa-
tur multa Domi-
num Christum &
dixisse & fecisse
qua scripta non sunt Electa sunt au-
tem qua scriberen-
tur qua saluti cre-
dentium sufficere
videbantur.
l Cyril. in Ioan.
lib. 12. cap. 68.
Non omnia que
Dominus fecit con-
scripta sunt sed
que scribentes suffi-
cere putarunt tam
ad moris quam
ad dogmata, ut
recta fide & operi-
bus & virtute tri-
tulantis ad regnum
caelorum peruenia-
mus.

hath a plaine reference to those things which were beefore written by Moses and the Prophets, who all prophecied of the Messias, the Christ and annointed of the Lord, in whom God should bee God with vs, who should procure our place with God, the remission of our sins and euerlasting blisse ^m In their writings the Gospell was promised, ⁿ they testified the righteousnes of God by the faith of Iesus Christ, to all, and open all that doe beleue: ^o they gaue witnessse that through his name euery one that beleueneth in him should haue forgivenessse of sinnes: by them the doctrine of saluation was from time to time published to the Church. The perfection and accomplishment of this hope depended vpon the incarnation, death, and resurrection of Iesus Christ. These things in the p fulnesse of time God made good; he sent his Son made of a woman, and made under the lawe, to redeeme them that were under the law: who to that end q died for our sinnes according to the Scriptures, and was buried, and arose the third day according to the Scriptures. It remained now that it should be knowne that this was he whom the Father had sealed and sent for the working of our redemption. Therefore S. Iohn to that effect saith, These things are written, that ye may beleue that this Iesus is the Messias, that Christ r of whom Moses in the law and of whom the Prophets did write, the hope of the Fathers, the light of the Gentiles, the glory of Israel, that so beleueing ye may according to the promise of God haue life through his name. Albeit therefore he hath in his Gospell comprehended the summe of all that wee beleue, yet wee may conceiue that he vseth those words not so much to set forth the fulnes of that that he himselfe hath written, as to signifie that he hath sufficiently set foorth the accomplishment of those things which were written by Moses and the Prophets, in the beleefe whereof consisteth the obtaining of euerlasting life. And yet thirdly without impeachment of any thing already said, it is very likely that S. Iohn writing his Gospell last of all, & compiling together the 4. Gospels spake these words not only as touching that which he himselfe had written, but also of all written by the rest of the Euangelists, to signifie the vse therof in such sort as I haue said, to which Cyrils words before mentioned seeme to haue respect. But howsoeuer we will conceiue thereof, we cannot doubt but that S. Iohn would giue to vnderstand, that by the written Gospell and word of God, wee are sufficiently instructed to that faith in Christ whereby wee attaine to liue with him.

m Rom. 1. 3.
n Cap. 3. 21.
o A.G. 10. 43.

p Gal. 4. 4.

q 1. Cor. 15. 3.

r Ioh. 1. 41. 45.

As for M. Bishops question, if S. Johns gospel alone bee sufficient, what neede the other three gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, &c? it is but his cuckoes song, which he hath sung before. And hee may euen aswel say, what neede any Euangelist to write any story which another had before written? S. Mathew had writte the passion of Christ, what neede the rest to, mentiō again any thing that he had written. When S. Paul in the Epistle to the Galathians had first handled the question of iustification, what neede was there that he shuld handle it again in his Epistle to the Romanes? When Dauids thanksgiuing for deliuerance from his enemies was set downe in the 18, Psalme what neede the same to be mentioned againe in the 2. second book of Samuel? A number of such idle questiōs he might make of diuers things set downe in diuers places in the very selfe same words & of an infinite number of sayings which haue other to answer thiē to the very same effect. But the wisdom of God hath thus thought good to prouide for our saluation, not onely sufficiently but abundantly by the consent of diuers persons writing diuersly in diuers places & & at diuers times, to confirme vs so much the more in the beleefe of those things that are written to giue vs often occasion to remember and consider the same things to exercise our meditation and studie in comparing those things that are diuersly set downe, to sharpen our diligence in searching out the accord of those things that seem to differ, to set forth in the variety of his words the riches of his wisdom, that there may be therein both to edify the simple and weake and yet to busie the heads and vnderstanding of the learned, that it may neither be abhorred by the one nor contemned by the other. For these and other causes it hath pleased God that what is written sufficiently by one, shuld yet be written by other also. But M. Bishop in the end how soeuer the matter go, prouideth sufficiently for him self. For he telleth vs finally, that although S. Johns gospel were al-sufficient yet should not traditions be excluded. And why so? for Christ saith in it in plaine termes (saith he) that he had much more to say vnto his Apostles, but they as then being not able to beare it, he reserved that to be deliuered vnto the afterwards. And how then must we think that he deliuered those things? Mary of these high mysteries S. Iohn recordeth not much in his gospel after *Christ*s resurrectiō, & so many of them must be deliuered by tradition vⁿwritten. Here thou seest (gentle Reader) a budget large enough to receiue all the Popes traditions: we shall not need to doubt now but that he wil proue what he list : if it be for his turne without question it was one of those things that the disciples could not beare til after Christ was risen from the dead, and then he left it to them by tradition. But I would haue thee to obserue what a note S. Austin gaue long ago cōcerning that speech of Christ: All foolish hereticks who yet desire to be called Christiāns, do seek to colour the presumptions of their deuices, euen such as hum in sense abhorreth, by the pretence of that sentence of the Gospell where Christ saith, I haue many things yet to say vnto you, but ye are not yet able to beare them: as if these were the things which the disciples then were not able to beare. M. Bishop then by alledging this place for the making good of their traditions, hath gained thus much, that we must now account him, as also his fellows, in the like case amongst foolish hereticks who affirming wicked & abominable deuices which they cannot proue will make vs beleue that they are things which Christ had to say to his disciples & they were not able to beare them. But if Christ had left any such matters to be deliuered by traditiō, thē it shuld vndoubtedly be knowne which and what they were. We desire then by M. Bishop to be aduertised particularly thereof, and to know what those high mysteries were which the disciples could not beare. What shal we think that Christ spake of that trash which they deliuer vnto vs vnder the name of traditiōs? But S. Austin again curteth him off frō al answer in that behalf: Seeing Christ himself hath bin silent of those things, who of vs can say, they are these & these? or if he dare to say it, how doth he proue it? For who is there so vaine or so rash, who though he say things that are true, will affirme without any testimony frō God that those are the things which Christ wold not say? Which of vs shuld so do, & not incurre a note of great presumption, not hauing any authority either of a prophet or an Apostle? Now if it cannot be known what those things were of which Christ spake, then M. Bishop can haue no prooffe for their traditiōs hereby because wheras his words import that S. Iohn in his gospel recordeth somewhat hereof, though not much after the resurrection of Christ, we see nothing in that which he recordeth but that the matter of all the rest may be contained in the rest of his and the other Apostles writings. But for the more full clearing of this matter it is to be noted, that our Sauior before hath said to his Apostles: All things that I haue heard of my Father haue I made knowne to you. And again in his prayer to the Father, I haue giuen vnto them (saith

t. August. in Ioh. tract. 97. Omnes insipientissimi heretici qui se Christiānos vocari volunt maxime exhorret sensus tam eius hac occasione. Eua gelica sententia colorare conatur, ubi Dominus ait Ad huc mul a, &c. quia si hac ipsa sint que in uel discipuli portare non poterant.

u Ibid. tract. 96. Que cum ipse tacuerit, quis nostrum dicat, ista uel illa sunt? aut si dicere audeat unde probat? Quis enim est tam uanus aut temerarius us qui cum dixerit etiam uera quibus uoluerit, quia uoluerit, sine ullo testimonio diuino affirmet ea esse que tunc dominus diceret non? Quis faciat & non maximam culpam temeratus incurrat in quo nec Prophetica nec Apostolica excellit & asseruit. as. x Ioh. 15. 15. y Chap. 7. 8.

Bishop to be aduertised particularly thereof, and to know what those high mysteries were which the disciples could not beare. What shal we think that Christ spake of that trash which they deliuer vnto vs vnder the name of traditiōs? But S. Austin again curteth him off frō al answer in that behalf: Seeing Christ himself hath bin silent of those things, who of vs can say, they are these & these? or if he dare to say it, how doth he proue it? For who is there so vaine or so rash, who though he say things that are true, will affirme without any testimony frō God that those are the things which Christ wold not say? Which of vs shuld so do, & not incurre a note of great presumption, not hauing any authority either of a prophet or an Apostle? Now if it cannot be known what those things were of which Christ spake, then M. Bishop can haue no prooffe for their traditiōs hereby because wheras his words import that S. Iohn in his gospel recordeth somewhat hereof, though not much after the resurrection of Christ, we see nothing in that which he recordeth but that the matter of all the rest may be contained in the rest of his and the other Apostles writings. But for the more full clearing of this matter it is to be noted, that our Sauior before hath said to his Apostles: All things that I haue heard of my Father haue I made knowne to you. And again in his prayer to the Father, I haue giuen vnto them (saith (saith he) the words which thou gauest me, & they haue receiued them. If Christ deliuered all the wordes of God to his disciples before his death, then it must needs follow that he deliuered no other wordes vnto them after his resurrection. Therefore those many things which he had to speake vnto them, are not to be vnderstood of any other things then he had taught them before, but of a more full & perfect reuelatiō, for the more full & perfect apprehension & vnderstanding of the same things. To which purpose we are againe to note against M. Bishops fraudulent collection, that our Sauiour here saith not, that he wold declare those things vnto them himself after his resurrection but deferreth the same to the coming of the spirit, saying, ^z Howbeit when he is come which is the spirit of truth, he wil leade you into all truth. Now how he should lead them into all truth, he hath before shewed.

^a He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance which I haue told you. He should teach them all things, not by teaching them other things, but by bringing all things to their remembrance which they had bin taught by Christ himselfe. Therefore here Christ saith further; for he shall not speake of himselfe, but what soeuer hee shall heare that shall he speake. Whereby he importeth, that the holy Ghost should speake according to his example, & he stil professeth that ^b hee speaketh not of himselfe, that he doth nothing of himselfe, but as the father hath taught me (saith he) so I speake these things. Christ spake ^c not of himselfe, as Chrysostom noteth, because he spake out of the Law and the Prophets: for to speake of himselfe, is to speake without or beside the Law. So then the holy Ghost shall not speake of himselfe, but as Christ spake according to the words of the Father in the law and the Prophets, so the holy Ghost should speake according to the words of Christ, and therefore according to those things that are written in the Law and the Prophets. Therefore those many things which Christ had to speake vnto them, and into the truth and knowledge whereof the holy Ghost was to leade them, were no other things but what were contained in the written word of the Law and the Prophets, whereof as yet they were not capable, because as yet they did not so well ^e know the scripture, nor could do, vntill he should ^f open their vnderstanding that they might vnderstand the same. Origen vnderstandeth the words spokē to the Apostles ^g as I haue brought vp in the letter of Moses law, our Sauiour seeing that it was very hard to pul out of their minds the opinions which had grown up with the so those yers

^z Chap. 16. 13.
^a Chap. 14. 26.
^b Chap 7. 16. 17
^c Chap. 8. 28.
^d Chrysost. de sanct. & adoran. spiritu. Non discipuli a lege, non discipuli a Prophetis, & c. Non locutus est ex seipso sed ex Prophetis, & c. seipso enim loquor, extra legem loquor.
^e John. 20. 9.
^f Luke. 24. 45.
^g Origen. contra Cel. l. 3. Fortassis ut Iudas & militer legi Moisaicae educatus Apollolis habebat dicendum qua sit vera lex, & c. Videns perdiscipulo se esse ex animo reuelleret penē conarsa et vsque ad grandium statum coalita dogmata, adeoq; pro diuinis habitis vt amouere illa videretur impium, & c. Ideo dicitur, Deducit vos in eum veritatem, id est, in eum veritatem earum rerum in quas transfugerit veritates iudaeis vos vero cultum deum cetera.

which were taken to be of God, so as that it should seeme impious to remove them. Therefore where Christ saith, The spirit shall leade you into all truth, it is (saith he) as if he had said, Into all the truth of those things in the figures whereof ye haue bin conuersant, thinking thereby truely to worship God. Here is then no warrant at all for M. Bishops vnwritten mysteries: here is nothing as Origen conceiueth, but that the spirit should afterwards instruct them of the abolishing of the ceremonies of Moses law, which they were not yet well able to conceiue. And therefore against all illusions of heretikes pretending for their vnwritten traditions and doctrines the holy Ghost, as the Church of Rome doth, Chrystom taking it for granted, that what Christ spake is set foorth vnto vs in the writings of the Apostles and Euangelists giueth this most notable rule:^h If any of them who are said to haue the holy Ghost, do speake any thing of himselfe, & not out of the gospels, beleeue it not. Manes commeth and saith, I am the comforter which christ promised to the Apostles. Yea but where doest thou heare in the Gospell that the sun and the mōone are creators? &c. Where readeest thou these things? Because he readeth not these things written, but speaks of himself it is manifest that he hath not the holy Ghost. He then that speaketh that that is not writtē, speaketh of himself: & herby it is manifest vnto vs that it is not by the spirit of God, but by a fallie and lying spirit, that M. Bishop and the church of Rome doe tell vs of high mysteries deliuered by Christ, which are not written in the Gospell of Christ.

8. W. BISHOP.

This place of S. Iohn, M. Perkins patched up with another of S. Paul
 * If we or an Angelfrō beaue preach vnto you any thing besids that which we haue preached, let him be accursed: And to this effect hee blames thē that taught but a diuers doctrine to that which he had taught.

Ans^w. Now we must look vnto this gentlemans fingers: there were three corruptions in the text of S. Iohn, here is one, but it is a foule one. In stead of preaching vnto thē another gospel, he puts, preach vnto them any other thing: when there is great difference betweene another Gospell, and any other thing. The Gospell comprehendeth the principal points of faith, and the whole work of Gods building in vs: which S. Paul like a wise Architect had laid in the Galathians: others his fellow-workmen might build vpon it, gold, siluer, & precious stones, with great merit to thēmselues and thanks from S. Paul. Marry if any should digge up that blessed
 and

h Chrysoſt vt ſupra S. qu's coruqu: dicuntur habe-
re ſp r tum ſan-
ctum, ex ſeipſo lo-
qu: tur, non ex Euange'ij, non cre-
dite. Venit Manes, & dicit, Ego ſum Paracletus. &c. Vbi audiſtim Euan-gelio quod Sol &
Luna opifices ſunt,
&c. Vbi legiſti hac?
Ex quo non legit hac ſcripta, ſed a
ſeipſo loquitur,
manifeſtum eſt
quod non habet ſpi-
ritum ſanctum.

* Gal. I. 8.

* 1. Tim. I. 3

* 1. Cor. 3. 12.

and onely foundation, and would lay a new one, him S. Paul holdeth for accurſed. So that that falſification of the text is intollerable: and yet when all is done, nothing can be wringed out of it to proue the written word to comprehend all doctrine needfull for ſaluation: for S. Paul ſpeaketh there onely of his Goſpell, that is of his preaching vnto the Galathians, and not one word of any written Goſpell: no more doth he in that place to Timothie, and ſo it is nothing to purpoſe.

R. ABBOT:

M. Biſhop hath a quicke noſe to ſmell a fault in the citing of a text, where he can ſee none. The Greeke word εὐαγγελίζεσθαι wee tranſlate to preach, becauſe wee haue no Engliſh word that doth more neerly expreſſe the ſignification of it; and by preaching we alwayes vnderſtand the declaring of the Goſpell and word of God. The Rhemiſts according to their fooliſh maner tranſlate it to euangelize, but make Engliſh thereof and let it be, to preach for Goſpell, and then the words as they tranſlate them are thus:^a Although we or an Angell from heauen preach for goſpell to you beſide that which we haue preached to you for goſpell accurſed be he. As we haue ſaid before ſo now I ſay againe, if any preach to you for goſpell beſide that which you haue receiued, accurſed be he. Now then M. Biſhops correſtion any other Goſpell is not found at all; but that which M. Perkins tranſlateth any other thing, is neceſſarily vnderſtoode: for what is it to ſay, If any preach to you for goſpel beſide that which you haue receiued, but if any preach to you for goſpell anything beſide that? But here he will tell vs what the Goſpell is, & that he doth according to that wiſe maner as he is wont to doe. The Goſpell (ſaith he) containeth the principall points of faith, and the whole worke of Gods building in vs Where we would aſke of him why he only ſaith the principall points of faith, when preſently he addeth, the whole worke of Gods building in vs? Surely if the Goſpell containe the whole worke of Gods building in vs, then it containeth not onely the principall, but all the points of faith. Thus his penne ſtill outrunnes his head, and giueth him not leaue well to aduiſe of that hee ſaith. But the Apoſtle by theſe words giueth vs to vnderſtand, that he had preached vnto the whole doctrine of the Goſpell, & that this Goſpell which he had preached vnto them, is incōpatible of any doctrine as any matter of the Goſpel & doctrine of Chriſt beſide it ſelfe. S. Auſtin wel noteth

b August. in Ioan. tract. 93. Non aut plusquam accepisti, sed prater quod accepisti.

c Vincen. Lyrin. Annuntiare aliquid Christianis Catholicis prater id quod acceperunt nunquam licuit, nunquam licet, numquam licebit: & anathemate eos qui adnuntient aliquid prater quod quod semel acceptum est, nunquam non oportet, nunquam non oportebit

d Chrysof. in Gal. cap. 1. Neque dixit, si contraria annuntiauerint aut totum Euangelium subvertant, verum si vel paululum euangelizauerint prater Euangelium quod accepisti, etiam si quiduis labefecerint, anathema sint e Iren. ad. haer. lib. 2. cap. 1. Non per alios dispositionem salutis nostrae cognouimus quam per eos per quos Euangelium peruenit ad nos quod quidem tunc praeconati sunt postea vero per Dei voluntatem in Scripturis nobis tradiderunt fundamentum & columnam fidei nostrae futurum

f Phil. 3. 1.

g Chrysof. in Gal. Paulus etiam Angelus de caelo descendentibus preponit Scripturas, idque valde congruentius ostendit Angelum quamlibet magni, tamen serui sunt ac ministri: ceterum omnes Scriptura non a seruis sed ab uniuerso Domino Deo uenerunt ad nos.

that the Apostle doth not say ^b more then ye haue receiued, but beside that which, ye haue receiued, as leauing them to increase more and more in that doctrine which they had receiued, but not to admit of any other doctrine beside that. Therefore Vincentius Lyrinensis hereof saith, ^c To preach to Catholicke Christians any thing beside that which they haue receiued, it neuer was lawfull, it is neuer lawfull, it neuer shall be lawfull: and to accurse them who, do preach any thing beside what was once receiued, it was alwayes behouefull, it is alwayes behouefull, & alwayes shall be behouefull. What will M. Bishop here challenge Vincentius Lyrinensis for falsification, becaule he saith any thing beside that? If he will not, then let him acknowledge his owne folly in blaming M. Perkins where there was no cause of blame. Yet Chrysostome will offend him some what more: ^d Paul doth not say, saith he, if they preach contrary things, or if they subuert the whole Gospell, but if they preach but euen a litle beside the Gospell, which ye haue receiued, if they weaken but any thing, accursed be they. But yet he excepteth that S. Paul speaketh only of his Gospell that is, of his preaching to the Galathians, and not one word of any written Gospell, and therefore that nothing can be wringed out from hence to proue that the written word comprehendeth all doctrine needfull to saluation. I answer him by the words of Irenus, ^e We haue not knowne the means of our saluation by an other but by them by whom the Gospell is come vnto vs, which they verily preached then (at first) but afterwards by the will of God deliuered it vnto vs in the Scriptures, to be the foundation and pillar of our faith. This was the auntine opinion and perswasion of the Church, that what the Apostles first preached, they afterwards committed to writing, esteeming that to bee the safest and ^f surest way, that hereby the Church might be armed against the practises of all deceitfull & wicked heretickes that would go a bout to bring in their owne deuices, vnder colour & shew of the Apostles names. Because thereof whatsoeuer doctrine the Apostles preached is written, & by the auncient Church was holden so to be, they made no doubt to apply these words to the written Gospel & to vnderstand them to be accursed that preach any thing for doctrine of the Gospel, which is not thereby warranted vnto vs. Therefore Chrysostome saith vpon these words, that ^g Paul here preferreth the Scriptures before Angels comming from heauen, and that iustly, sayth he, for Angels albeit they be great, yet are but seruants and ministers, but all the Scriptures came vnto vs not from seruants, but from God the Lord of all. But let S. Austine briefly conclude this point, and shew vs to what these words are to be referred. ^h Whether concerning Christ, or concerning the church of Christ, or concerning anything that pertaineth to our faith and life, we will not say, if we, but euen as he going forward addeth, If an Angell from heauen shall preach vnto you but what ye haue receiued in the scriptures of the Law and the Gospell, accursed be he. The words of the Apostle to Timothie of ⁱ commanding * not to teach any other doctrine, sounding to the same effect as the other do, doe yeelde vs the like collection: as we haue seene in them.

h August. cont. l. 6. Petil. li. 3. ca. 6. Sine de Christo sine
de eius ecclesia, sine
de quacunque re
alia que pertinet
ad fidem v. tamq̃
nostram non dicam
nos nequaquam co-
parandi & qui di-
cit, Licet si nos, sed
omniò quod secutus adicit, Si Angelus de celo vo-
bis annunciauerit praterquam quod
in scripturis legalibus & Euangeli-ci accepisti anathema sit.
i. 1. Tim. 1. 3
* μη ἐτεροδιδ-
ασκαλείν.
* 2. Tim. 3. 16.

9. W. BISHOP.

The fourth testimonie. * The whole Scripture is giuen by inspiration of God, and is profitable to teach, to improue, to correct, and to instruct to righteousnesse, that the man of God may bee absolute being made perfect vnto euery good worke. In these words are contained (saith M. Perkins) two arguments to proue the sufficiencie of scripture: The first, that which is profitable to these foure uses, to teach (all necessary truth is not in the text) to confute errors, to correct faults in manners, to instruct (all men in duetic, is M. Perkins his addstion to the text) that is sufficient to saluation. But the scriptures serue for all these uses, &c.

Answer. ⁱ his text of holy Scripture is so farre from yeelding our aduersaries two arguments, that it affordeth not so much as any probable colour of halfe one good argument. In searching out the true sence of holy Scripture, wee must obserue diligently the nature and proper signification of the words, as M. Perkins also noteth out of S. Augustine, in his sixth obiection of this question: which if the Protestants did beere performe, they would make no such account of this text: for S. Paul sayth onely, that all scripture is profitable not sufficient, to teach, to reprove, &c. How are they then carried away with their owne partiall affections, that cannot discern betweene profitable and sufficient. Good timber is profitable to the building of a house, but it is not sufficient without stones, mortar, and a Carpenter. See de serues well, yea is also necessary to bring forth corne, but will it suffice of it selfe, without manuring of the ground, & seasonable weather? And to fit our purpose more properly, good lawes are very profitable, yea most expedient for the good gouernement of the common wealth: but are they sufficient without good customes, good gouerners and iudges, to see the same lawes & customes rightly understood and duely executed? Euen so the holy Scriptures (S. Paul affirmeth) are very profitable, as containing very good and necessary matter, both to teach, reprove, and correct: but he sayth not, they are sufficient, or that they doe containe all doctrine needfull for these foure ends. And therefore to argue out of S. Paul, that they are sufficient to all those purposes, when he saith on'y, that they are profitable to them, is plainly not to know, or not to care what a man saith: & to presse such an impertinent cauil, so often and so vehemently as the Protestants doe, is nothing else but to bewray vnto the indifferent Reader, either their extreme ignorance, or most audacious impudencie, that thinke they can face out any matter, be it neuer so impertinent. The same answer I make vnto M. Perkins his second argument out of the same place, that the holy Scriptures bee profitable to make the man of God absolute, but not sufficient.

I say moreouer that M. Perkins doth falsly english these words $\pi\alpha\sigma\alpha\ \gamma\rho\alpha\phi\eta$ into the whole Scriptures, when it signifieth all Scripture, that is euery booke of Scripture, & is there put, to verifie that the old Testament onely serues to instruct to saluation: for in the words next before. S. Paul sheweth, how that Timothie from his infancy had bin trained vp in the knowledge of the holy Scriptures, which (saith he) can instruct thee to saluation: and annexeth, as the confirmation thereof the text cited, All Scripture inspired of God, is profitable to teach, &c. Now in Timothies infancy no part of the new Testament was written, and therefore all Scripture which is here put to proue that Scripture which Timothy in his infancy knewe, cannot but by vnrasonable wresting signifie more then all the bookes of the old Testament. So that there are three foule faults in this the Protestants Achilles: The first in falsification of the text that it might seeme to bee spoken of the whole, which is spoken of euery part. The second, in applying that which is spoken of the old Testament vnto both the old and new. The third, in making that to be all-sufficient which S. Paul affirmeth onely to be profitable. And this is all they can say out of the Scripture, to proue that the written word containes al doctrine needfull to saluation; whereupon I make this inuincible argument against them, out of their owne position.

Nothing is necessary to be beleueed, but that which is written in holy Scrip-

Scripture. But in no place of scripture is it written, that the written word containes all doctrine needfull to saluation, as hath beene proued.

Therefore it is not necessary to saluation to beleene the written word to containe all doctrine needfull to saluation.

R. ABBOT.

Here is a long discourſe and a little answer, and gladly M. Bishop would wind out of this sentence of the Apostle, and it will not be. The whole words of the Apostle entirely set downe, will make the Reader plainely to vnderstand that hee hath taken a great deale of paines, and sayd iust nothing. Speaking to Timothie hee sayth, Thou hast knowne the holy Scriptures of a childe, which are able to 2. Tim. 3. 15 make thee wise vnto saluation through the faith which is in Christ Iesus. The whole scripture is giuen by inspiration of God, and is profitable to teach, to improue, to correct, to instruct in righteousnesse, that the man of God may be perfect, being perfectly instructed to euery good worke. The first part of which wordes doe sufficiently inferre that which we affirme: for if the Scriptures be able to make a man wise vnto saluation through the faith which is in Christ Iesus, then they are sufficient to instruct a man in all things necessary to saluation. If they be not sufficient to instruct a man in all things necessary to saluation then can it not be said, that they are able to make a man wise vnto saluation through the faith which is in Christ Iesus. The force of these wordes cannot be deluded; euery eye can see that if the Scriptures be able to make a man wise vnto saluation through the faith which is in Christ Iesus, then all the doctrine necessary to faith and saluation is contained in the Scriptures. Nowe for confirmation heereof the Apostle addeth, The whole scripture is inspired of God, and is profitable to teach (the truth) to improue (false doctrine & error) to correct (vice and sinne) to instruct righteousnes. From hence then we must inferre that which before is sayd, that because the Scripture is able to direct a man in truth and righteousnesse, therefore it is able to make him wise vnto saluation by faith in Christ: for in the embracing and following of truth and righteousnesse, consisteth the attainment of euerlasting life. If any man will except and say, that though it teacheth the truth, yet it teacheth not all truth necessarie to saluation, hee wholly ouerthroweth the Apostles confirmation. For if it doe not teach all truth necessarie to saluation uation, then it is not able to make a man wise to saluation . It may be sayd to helpe towards it, but it cannot be said to be able to doe it, if it containe not all thinges belonging to that wisdomē that concerneth vs for the obtaining of saluation, But the Apostle telleth vs that it so doth the things by him mentioned, as that the man of God may be absolute or perfect, being perfectly instructed, or being furnished and prepared to euery good worke. The man of God is well knowne by the phrase of Scripture to import the minister of God, in which sort the Apostle hath before said to Timothie, ^b But thou O man of God flie these things, &c. Here therefore he giueth to vnderstande that the Scripture is able to make wise vnto saluation, so able to instruct in truth and righteousnesse, as that therein the man of God, the minister of God findeth enough to make him perfect, and to prepare and furnish him to euery good worke. And if there be enough for the perfection of the minister of God, then surely it must needs follow that much more is it able to perfect euery other man to that faith and righteousnesse that should bring vs vnto God. But here M. Bishop putteth vs off with three wise answers, by which he wold faine persuade vs that wee altogether erre in the citing of these words. First he chargeth vs with falsification of the text, because wee reade, the whole scripture, whereas we should say, all scripture, the Greek words being πᾶσα γραφή not importing as he sayth the whole Scripture, but euery part. But why is this on our part a falsification, more then it is in the Rhemists, to translate according to their vulgar interpreter, ^c πᾶσα ἡ ἀλήθεια, the whole heard: ^e πᾶσα ἡ πόλις, the whole cittie: ^e πᾶν τὸ σῶμα, the whole body: and in their Latine ^f διὰ παντός τῆς ζωῆς, per totam vitam, through their whole life, which they English, through all their life If there bee no falshood in these translations, why must there needs be a falsification in ours? Yea and when it is all one with them to say, their whole life, and all their life, why must it be a fault in vs to say, the whole Scripture, where they say all scripture. Surely but that malice blindeth it selfe, and wil not see that that it doth see, they woulde conceiue that all scripture in this place can no otherwise bee taken but to signifie the whole scripture, euen as else where by ^g all the counsell of God wee vnderstand the whole counsell of God: in like sort as where it is sayd, ^h Qui iudicas omnem terram, Thou which iudgest all the earth, that is, the whole earth: ⁱ Conuocata omni domo, calling together all his house, that

* ἑξήρητισμῆ-νος alias ἑξήρητιμῆνος
b I. Tim. 6. II.

e Matth. 8. 32.
d Ver. 34.
e Ephes. 4. 16.
f Heb. 2. 15.

g Acts. 20. 7.
πάσαν τὴν βίβ-
λιν,
h Gen. 18. 25.
i Chap. 35. 2.

is his whole house: ^k Egressus est omnis exercitus Domini de terra Aegypti. All the army of the Lord departed out of the land of Egypt, that is, the whole army: ^l Profecta est omnis multitudo filiorum Israel, All the multitude of the children of Israel went out of the desert of Sin, that is, the whole multitude: ^m Congregabis omnem caetum Israel, Thou shalt gather together all the congregation of Israel, that is, the whole congregation: with infinite other examples of the like sort. And seeing the Apostle, when in the proposition, the scriptures are able to make thee wise unto saluation, must needs be vnderstood to mean collectively, the whole Scripture, because it cannot be sayd of euery part of the Scripture that is able to doe, what is it but wilfull dotage to vnderstand all scripture as ment otherwise in the prooffe? Especially when it is so apparant, that that which the Apottle affirmeth in the prooffe, fitteth to the whole scripture, and so inferreth that which is propounded to bee proued, but cannot agree to euery part of the scripture, because euery part of the scripture is not profitable to all those vses, to teach, to improue, to correct, to instruct in righteousnesse. Hee will say that those vses are not all ioyntly to bee vnderstood, but by disiunction, euery part is profitable either to teach, or to improue, or to correct, or to instruct in righteousnesse, though it bee not profitable to all these. But in thus saying hee quite ouerthroweth the Apostles confirmation, for it doth not follow, that because euery part of the Scripture is profitable eyther to teach, or to improue, or to correct, or to instruct in righteousnesse, therefore the Scriptures are able to make a man wise to saluation, because that may be sayd of the first chapter of Genesis, or any other like, that it is profitable either to teach, or to improue, or to correct, or to instruct in righteousnesse, that is, to one or other of these vses, and yet it cannot be sayd, that it is able to make a man wise to saluation through the faith which is in Christ Iesus. Therefore the words of the Apostle must be vnderstood of the whole scripture, which being able to teach, to improue, &c. is consequently able to make a man wise unto saluation through faith in Christ. And hereby his other caull is taken away, that we make that to be all-sufficient which is. Paul affirmeth onely to be profitable. For the Apostle nameth not profitable as to diminish any thing from sufficiency, but reckoning it to be profitable to all those vses that hee expresseth, he leaueth it plainly to be vnderstood, that it is sufficient to that that hee would conclude thereby k Exod. 12.41

l Chap. 17. 1.

m Leuit. 8. 3.

thereby. For vnlesse it be in such sort profitable, as that it be sufficient to teach, to improoue, to correct, to instruct, it cannot be able to make a man wise to saluation through the faith which is in Christ Iesus. Therefore Athanasius alluding as it seemeth to this place, sayth, The Scriptures being holy and inspired of God, are by themselves sufficient to the instruction of truth. M. Bishops instances therefore are friuolous and vaine. Timber is profitable for the building of a house, but it is not profitable for all those vses that concerne the building of a house, and therefore it is not sufficient. But the Apostle noteth the scripture to be profitable for all those vses that concerne the building of the house of God: and because it is so, therefore it is sufficient for that building. The second is against himselfe, for although there must be one to sow the seede, yet the seed it selfe is sufficient wherewith to sow the ground: and euen so, although there must be one to teach, to improoue, to correct, to instruct, yet the holy Scripture is sufficient wherewith to doe all these. Thirdly, good lawes are profitable (saith he) for the good government of the Common-wealth, but they are not sufficient without good gouerners and iudges. And be lawes neuer so sufficient for the common-wealth, yet they auaille nothing without gouerners and iudges seruing to put them in execution. Euen so we say, that albeit the holy scriptures do sufficiently instruct vs what doctrine is to be taught, yet all is vaine if there be none to teach it. But what a witles cauill is this, that when question is of the doctrine of the Scriptures, whether it be so sufficient as that they which teach are to teach no other, they object that the doctrine of the scriptures is not sufficient without one to teach? We tell him therefore againe, that, as where lawes are sufficient to gouerne by, good gouerners and iudges being necessary for execution thereof, are to iudge and gouerne onely by lawes: so the doctrine of the holy Scriptures being sufficient to teach by, though teachers be necessary for the teaching thereof, yet they are to teach nothing but onely by the Scripture, and therein onely is it that we affirme the sufficiency of the Scripture. But in humane lawes that sufficiencie is neuer found, they neuer fit all occasions and vses of the common wealth, neuer meete with all inconueniences and mischiefes, neuer determined all controuersies and causes, neuer prouide so perfectly for the right, but that it proueth to some mans wrong, and therefore though they be profitable, yet they are not n Athan. contra

Gentes. sius cont.
idola. Sufficiunt quidem per se sacra Scripturae in Scriptura ad
veritatis instructi-onem.

profitable every manner of way. In the holy Scripture the Apostle teacheth vs it is otherwise, it serueth vs for all occasions towards God: there is nothing that concerneth vs, but either by teaching or reproofing, or correcting, or instructing, it applyeth it selfe vnto vs: ° There is no sicknesse of the minde (saith Cyprian, referring himselfe to these words of the Apostle) to which the holy Scripture yeeldeth not a present remedy: All things are euident and cleare (saith Chrysostom) by the holy Scriptures, whatsoeuer things are necessary they are manifest. The scriptures therefore are in such sort profitable, as that they are sufficient also fully to instruct vs as touching the meanes of obtaining eternall life, As for customes, they may haue their place and vse amongst the lawes of men, but amongst the lawes of God they haue no place. 9 Because Christe onely is to be heard (saith Cyprian) wee are not to regarde what any before vs hath thought fit to bee done, but what Christ first did, who is before all: for we are not to follow the custome of men, but the truth of God. Christ (saith Tertullian) called not himselfe custome but truth. M. Bishop therefore dealeth but idley to alleadge the exorbitant and lawlesse customes of comon wealths, as a colour for traditions in the church of Christ. His last exception is, that the scriptures here spoken of which Timothy knew from his infancie, could be no other but the scriptures of the old Testament, because no part of the new Testament was then written, and therefore that that is here said cannot but by vnreasonable wresting signifie more then the old Testament, charging vs hereupon with falsification in applying it to both the old and new. Where the vaine man doth not see that he exceedingly strengtheneth the argument against himself: for if S. Paul could say that the Scriptures of the old Testament were able to make a man wise vnto saluation by the faith of Christ, how much more is it true of the scriptures now that they are able so to doe, when as by the new Testament so much light is added for the clearing of the old? The doctrine which the Apostles preached in the new Testament, they confirmed by the old. They taught no other faith but what was contained therein, onely the faith was more plainly and cleerly deliuered by them, because as S. Austin saith, in the old Testament the new is hidden, and in the new Testament is the manifesting of the old. The times (saith he) are diuers, but the faith is one. Seeing then the old testament was sufficient to instruct men to the faith of Christ, and the

o Cyprian. de dupl. martir. Nullus est an. morum morbus cui non presens remedium diuina scriptura suppediant.

p Chrysost. m. 2. Thes. hom. 3. Omnia clara sunt & manifesta ex scriptura diuina: quacunque necessaria sunt, manifesta sunt.

q Cyp. li. 2. ep. 3. Si solus Christus audiendus est, non est attendendum quid aliquis ante nos faciendum putauerit, sed quid qui ante omnes est Christus prior fecerit. Neq; enim hominis consuetudinem sequi oportet, sed Dei veritatem.

r Tertul. de velan. virg. Christus veteratam, se non consuetudinem cognominauit.

s Augr. de catech. i. iiii. In veteri testamento est occultus, nouus: in nouo testamento est manifestatio veteris.

t Idem in Ioan. tra. 4. Tempora variata sunt non fides &c. Fideiq; fides vtroq; coniungit.

instruction thereof notwithstanding is much more manifestly delivered in the new, and no other faith is taught in the new testament then is contained in the old, who doth not see that the conclusion standeth strong on our part, that much more the scripture now containeth all doctrine necessary to instruct vs to the faith of Christ? Albeit it is not true which M. Bishop saith, that S. Paul meaneth here only the scriptures of the old testament. For although when Timothy was a child, there were no other scriptures but onely of the old testament, yet when paul wrote these words to Timothy, the greatest part of the books of the new testament were extant. Hee wrote this epistle newly before his death, as appeareth by that he saith, I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departing is at hand. He had then written al the rest of his epistles, as we may easily conceiue neither is it likely but that the gospels of Mathew, Marke and Luke, with the Acts of the Apostles, were written before that time, the first by S. Mathew being testified to be written at the time of Pauls first imprisonment at Rome, & founding the Church there, where S. Luke makes an end of the history of the Acts of the Apostles, after which being not long after the beginning of the raigne of Nero, the apostle liued for the space of 12. or 13. yeares being put to death in the 14. yeare of the same Nero. Of S. markes gospel it is also manifest, because he died in the 8. yeare of Nero, as Hierome testifieth, six yeares before S. Pauls death, and therefore before the writing of this epistle. The like also is plaine of the former epistle of S. Peter, as appeareth for that his second epistle was written about the same time that S. Paul wrot this second epistle to Timothy, S. Peter being put to death at the same time as S. Paul was, and saying as he doth in the same second epistle: I know that the time is at hand that I must lay downe this my tabernacle. Now therefore so many of the bookes of the new testament being extant at that time, who can doubt but that the Apostle naming all scripture did speake of those bookes, vnlesse hee will be so mad as to say, that at that time they were no Scriptures: And as when we say that a man hath known the lawes frō a child, we do not meane to restraine his knowledge only to those lawes which were when he was a child, but will signifie his knowledge also of such lawes as haue bin since made: euen so when the Apostle saith, that Timothy had known the scriptures from a child, he would giue to vnderstand, that he was conuersant not only in the Scriptures that then u 2. Tim. 4. 6.

z Iren. li. 3. ca. 1.
Matth. H. brais
in ipsorum lingua
scriptura medidit Euangelij cum Petrus et Paulus Roma euangelizaret
et fundarent Ecclesiam.
 y Func. Chronol.
 z Hieron. in Catal.
Mortuus est. 8.
Neronis anno. & Alex
endria.

a 2. Pet. 1. 14.

then were, but also in such other as from time to time thenceforward were written for the same use. Nay who would make question, but that the Apostle setteth downe by the direction of the holy Ghost this commendation of all Scripture, would hereby giue vs to vnderstand what to conceiue of other scriptures also that were to be published afterwards: Therefore M. Bishop hath hitherto answered nothing, to take away the euidence of the argument taken out of the wordes of the Apostle, and the Protestants Achilles is stronger then that he may take vpon him the part of Hector to encounter therewith. But yet well fare a good stomacke, for though he haue said as good as nothing, yet he setteth a good face vpon the matter and concludeth this point with an invincible argument, like the invincible name of Spaine: Nothing is necessary to be beleued but that which is written in holy Scriptures. Very true, But in no place of Scripture is it written, that the written word containes all doctrine needfull to saluation, as hath bene proued. But this is not true: the proofes that it doth so, are pregnant and cleere: but his proofes to the contrary are childish and vaine, and therefore his conclusion cannot hold. In steed therefore of his presumed and invincible argument, we wish him to consider this. Whatsoever the written woorde teacheth vs of it selfe, that is necessary to be beleued. But the written word teacheth vs concerning it selfe, that it is able to make vs wise to saluation through the faith which is in Christ Iesus, It is necessary therefore for vs to beleue that it can so, and therefore to reiect all doctrine that cannot be approoued and warranted thereby.

IO. W. BISHOP

And by the same principle I might reiect all testimony of Antiquitie as needlesse, if the Scripture be so all-sufficient as they hold. Yet let vs heare what testimonie M. Perkins brings out of antiquitie in fauour of his cause.

Tertullian saith, take from heretickes the opinions which they defend with the Heathens, that they may defend their questions by Scripture alone, and they cannot stand.

Ans. Here scripture alone is opposed (as euery one may see) vnto the writings of heathen authors, and not to the traditions of the Apostles,
and

and therefore maketh nothing against them. Againe, saith M. Perkins out of the same author: We need no curiositie after Iesus Christ, nor inquisition after the Gospell, when we beleecue it, we desire to be leecue nothing besides it: for this we must beleecue, that there is nothing else which we may beleecue.

Answer. By the Gesspell there is understood all our Christian doctrine written and vnwritten, & not only the written word of the foure Euangelists, else we should not beleecue the Acts of the Apostles, or their Epistles, no more then traditions: which Christian doctrine written and vnwritten, we onely beleecue by diuine faith: to all other authors wee giue such credit as their writings doe deserue. If any man desire to see Tertullians iudgement of traditions, let him read his booke of prescriptions against hereticks, where he auerreteth that traditions serue better then the scriptures themselues to confute all heresies, hereticke alwayes either not allowing all the bookes of scripture, or else perverting the sense and meaning of the scriptures. And in his booke de Corona militis, he formally proposeth this questiō, whether traditions vnwritten are to be admitted or no: and answereth by many instances, that they must be receiued, concluding thus: For these and the like points if thou require law out of the Scriptures, thou shalt finde none: but tradition is alledged to be the author of them. Custome the confirmer, and Faith the obseruer. So that nothing is more certaine then that Tertullian thought vnwritten Traditions necessary to be beleecued.

R. ABBOT

It followeth not that antiquitie is needlesse, though all doctrine needfull to saluation be contained in the Scriptures, becaute antiquitie giueth vs many good and profitable helpes for attaining to the vnderstanding of many places and stories of the scripture, when yet it teacheth vs to admit of no doctrine but what is proued thereby. The first testimony alleadged by M. Perkins is out of Tertullian, ^a Take from heretickes when they conceine like the heathen, or what the heathen conceine, that they may determine their questions only by the scriptures, and they cannot stand. M. Bishop telleth vs for answer, that Tortullion opposeth scripture alone to the writings of heathen authors, not to the traditions of the Apostles, and therefore maketh nothing against them. But Tertullian speaketh not any thing there of heathen authors,

^a Tertul. de resurr. carn. Ausser hereticis qua cum Ethnicis sapiunt sine ut aliis legitur, quacumq; Ethnici sapiunt) ut de scripturis suis sistant & stare non poterunt.

thors, but of heathenish reasons & fancies wherby heretickes plead against the mysteries of faith, as there hee giueth example by the resurrection of the dead. He requireth them to forgo these, and to bring their questions onely to the Scriptures, or to the Scriptures alone. Now to say that he opposeth not Scripture alone to the traditions of the Apostles, is a ridiculous euasion, when as by calling them thus to onely Scripture, he giueth to vnderstand that he knew no such traditions belonging to matters of doctrine and faith, for determining of questions that might arise thereof. For whether he oppose the same to heathen authors or to heathenish reasons, wee may well take it to be absurd, that he should require heretickes to be brought only to Scripture, if it be as M. Bishop telleth vs that questions cannot bee determined onely by the Scriptures, or if hee thought any other meanes to bee as necessarie as the Scriptures for the determining of thē. But this sentence hath not so much strength by it selfe, as it hath by that that is cited together with it: ¶ Wee need no curiositie after Christ Iesus, nor inquiry further after the Gospell: when we beleene that, we desire to beleene no more: for this we beleene, that there is nothing further for vs to beleene. Where when M. Bishop saith, that by the Gospell is to be vnderstood all our Christian doctrine, so farre he saith truly, but when hee addeth, written or vnwritten, hee beggeth the question, and his Commentarie goeth without the compasse of Tertullians text. He should by plaine example or reason haue giuen vs to vnderstand that Tertullian by the Gospell importeth any doctrine vnwritten; otherwise hee may well thinke that we scorne his interpretation, hauing no warrant of it but his owne word Tertullian spake of the Gospell as the Apostle doth, who saith ^c that God before promised it by his prophets in the holy Scriptures, and that it was ^d opened and published amongst all nations by the Scriptures of the Prophets. We haue hard beefore out of Irenaeus that ^e the Gospell which the Apostles first preached, they afterwards committed to writing, to be the foundation and pillar of our faith, and out of Chrysostome, that ^f to speake any thing that is not written, is to speake of himselfe, and not out of the Gospell. So doth Basil of the word of God and Scripture, make one and the same thing, and denieth that there is any word of God beside the Scripture, saying: ¶ If what soeuer is not of faith be sinne, and faith come by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, then what soeuer is beside the holy Scrip-

b Idem de Pra-script. Nobun non est opus curiositate post Christum Iesum, nec inquisitione post Euangelium. Cum hoc credimus, nihil desideramus ultra credere. Hoc enim prius credimus non esse quod ultra credere debemus.

c Rom. 1, 2.

d Cap. 6. 26.

e Sect. 8.

f Sect. 7.

g Basil Ethic.

reg. 80. Si quis quid ex fide non est peccatum est, sicut dicit Apostolus, fides uero ex auditu, auditis autem per uerbum Dei, ergo quicquid extra diuinam Scripturam est, cum ex fide non sit, peccatum est, ture, because it is not of faith is sinne. If there be no Gospell but written, no word of God but Scripture, then surely Tertullian when he saith, that we need no inquirie further after the Gospell, taketh away Traditions, and leaueth no place for doctrine vnrwritten. Whereas he saith, that by the Gospell is not understood onely the written word of the foure Euangelists, he talketh idly, because no man vnderstood it so. The doctrine deliuered in the Acts and Epistles of the Apostles, is no lesse the doctrine of the Gospell, then that that is recorded by the foure Euangelists. But here to see Tertullians iudgement of traditions, hee referreth his Reader to the same Tertullians booke of Prescriptio against heretickes. Now this sentence alledged by M. Perkins was taken out of that booke, although hee quoted not the place, which M. Bishop knew not, because indeede hee had neuer read the booke. Therefore this that hee here saith, hee saith it only by hearesay, & for ought he knoweth Tertullian may as wel speake against Traditions, as any thing for them. And the truth is, that Tertullian speaketh no otherwise for Traditions, then doth Irenaeus whome hee cited before in his Epistle to the King, whome I haue shewed to make nothing at all for M. Bishops purpose. The occasion of both their speeches was the same, hauing to do with wicked and blasphemous heretickes, who admitted ^h of the scriptures no other wise then they list themselues, reiecting the bookes that specially made against them, and by additions & detractions framing the bookes which they did receiue to serue their owne turne, and by their wicked glosses wresting the words of scripture to the maintenance of their damnable errors. They tooke vpon them to know more then the Apostles, saying, that the holy Ghost which Christ promised to send, was not giuen to the Apostles, but to the, so that the Montanists affirmed, that ⁱ the holy Ghost spake more things in Montanus, then Christ did commit to the Gospell, & not onely more but greater and better things. When they were vrged by the teachers of the Church with these corruptions and falsifications; ^k they were ready to answer, that the corrupting of the Scriptures and false expositions thereof were rather founde with them; by meanes whereof there was no end of reasoning with them, because they could hold them to no certaine grounds wherupon to proceed against them. Hereupon Tertullian referred men as Irenaeus did, to consider the Churches planted by the Apostles, and which had had conti-

^h Tertullian. de Praescrip. p. 1. Ista haeresis non recipit quasdam Scripturas, & si quas recipit adlectionibus & detractionibus ad dispositionem instituti sui inuertit, & si recipit non recipit integras, & si aliquatenus integras praestat, nihilominus diuersas expositiones commentatur conuertit.

ⁱ Dicitur Paralel. n. plura in Montano dixisse, quam Christum in Euangelio protulisse ^k Hic & ipsi habent in nos retorquere, &c. a nobis postea adulteri. Scripturarum & expositionum earum mendaciam inferri &c.

continuance of Pastors and teachers from them, by them to learne what faith and doctrine was deliuered by the Apostles, as not doubting but what they deliuered was the truth, as ¹ who denysed nothing of their owne, but faithfully assigned to the nations the doctrine which they had receiued of Christ. Hee setteth it downe as a principle, that vndoubtedly ^m there was some one and certaine thing appointed by Christ for the nations to beleene: that whatsoeuer that was, Christ vndoubtedly deliuered it to his Apostles, ⁿ whom hee chose to bee teachers of all nations, and therefore that no other Preachers are to be receiued but whom Christ appointed: that to say that either the Apostles knew not all things, or did not make knowne all things to all men, is ^o to reprove Christ as sending Apostles either vn sufficient, or not dealing simply and plainly. Taking it then for graunted, that the Apostles deliuered all truth to the Church, he moueth another doubt that haply the Churches hadde erred, and forsaken that which at first was deliuered by the Apostles. To this therefore he answereth, that ^p it is not likely, if the churches had erred, that being so many and so great, they should in error light all vpon one faith: that they would surely haue varied in their error one from another, because where there are many going but by hap, they cannot all happen vpon the same end. Therefore what with many is found one (saith he) it is no matter of error, but that that was first deliuered vnto them. He goeth on further to shewe, that it is the marke of truth ^q to bee first, and that what cometh in after is to be reputed a lye, as appeareth by the Parable wherein the good seede or wheate was first sowed, and then afterwarde the tares. Thus by the order it is so manifest (saith he) that that is of the Lord, and true, which was first deliuered, but that strange and false, which is afterwarde come. Nowe if any of them would dare to challenge to themselves the antiquitie of the Apostles, he willeth them ^r to shew the originall of their churches, and the succession of their Bishops from the Apostles, which if there had bene any such, they might easily haue done, this being very litle more then a hundred yeres after the time of the Apostles. But withall he declareth, that such opinions of theirs as were mentioned in the time of the apostles, ^s were by the Apostles shewec &

^l Supra, scđ. 4. m Hoc propono, vnum & certum aliquid institutum esse a Christo quod credere omnimodo debeant nationes. n Duodecim praeceptos lateri suo adtegerat destinatos nationibus magistros &c. Si Christus Apostolos misit ad praedicandum, (praescribitur) non alios esse recipiendos praedicatores, quam quos Christus instituit. o In utroq; Christum reprehension. subjicientes, quia aut parum simplices Apostolos miserit.

^p Quid verisimile est, ut tot actantia in unam fidem errauerint? Nullus inter multos euentus vnus est exitus: variasse debuerat error doctrine Ecclesiarum. Caeterum quod apud multos vnum inuenitur, non est erratum, sed traditum.

^q Ab excessu reuertor ad primitiuitatem veritatis & posteritatem mendacitati deputanda, ex illius quoque Parabola patrocino, &c. Ita ex ipso ordie manifestatur id esse dominicum & verum quod sit prius traditum, id autem extraneum & falsum quod sit posterius immissum.

^r Signa audent se interserere etati Apostolicae, ut ideo videantur ab Apostolis tradita quia sub Apostolis fuerunt, possumus dicere. Eedant ergo origines Ecclesiarum suorum, euoluant ordinem Episcoporum suorum, &c. l Quae tunc sub Apostolis fuerunt, ab iisdem Apostolis & demonstrata & dicata.

e Nam & si facti-
 lites traduntur
 dum aut iam tunc
 fuisse deprehendit
 tur aut ex illis qua tunc fuerunt semi-
 na sumptisse, &c.
 Si sine ergo eadem
 nunc sunt al quan-
 to expolitiores, quae sub Apostolorum rudis
 habet suam exinde
 damnationem siue
 alia quidem illa
 fuerunt, alia autem
 postea oborta sunt.

& quasdam ex illis
 opinionibus usurpate runt habendo cum eis consortium praed-
 icationis, habeant
 etiam necesse est co-
 forum damnatio-nis, &c. Et si ubi de damnaticis par-ticiparentur, de a-
 tate sola praedica-rentur, tantò magis
 adultera, quan-
 to nec. Apostolis nominata. Unde fir-mius constat has esse quae adhuc tunc manserantur
 futurae.

ii Percurre Ecclesias Apostolicas apud quas ipse ad-huc Cathedra. A postolorum suis lo-cis praesidentur, a post quasi ipse ac-
 tibus: & littera eorum videntur &c.

Proxima est tibi A-chana: habet Cor-
 inthiam. & no lon-
 ge es à Macedonia
 habes Philippo &c

renounced, wherof he giueth sundry examples, of denying the resurrection, of obseruing circumcision, of forbidding marriage, of denying the Godhead or manhood of Christ, of worshipping Angels, and such like condemned in the writings of the Apostles: Thus (saith he) they shall the more easily be traduced, whilest they are found either to haue bene then, or to haue taken any seedes from those that were then. For whether they be now the same somewhat more polished and fined, which in the Apostles times were yet rude and unfashioned, they haue their condemnation from thence: or whether they were one then, and other haue since sprung up, which yet haue borrowed some opinions from them, surely in being partakers with them in their preaching they must needs also be partakers of their condemnation. And albeit they did not participate with those that were so cōdemned, yet (saith he) there should preiudice be taken against them onely for their latter age, being so much the rather corruptions of the truth, for that they are not so much as nam'd by the Apostles: whence it is so much the more certaine, that they are those which then it was foretold should be in the time to come. Hereupon he referreth his Reader to sundry particular churches, where were still Bishops in the seates of the Apostles, and their authentick Epistles were still read, as of the Corinthians, the Philippians, the Thessalonians, the Ephesians, the Romanes, which together with the Aphricane churches acknowledged one God, the Crea-tour of the whole world, and Iesus Christ of the Virgin Mary, the Sonne of the Creator, and the resurrection of the flesh: ioyning the law and the Prophets with the writings of the Euangelistes and Apostles, and thence deriuing that faith. Thus had hee before set downe the doctrine and faith, which in all this treatise hee thus laboureth to vphold and maintaine: *The rule of faith is this, to beleue that there is one on-ly God, and the same no other but the Creator of the worlde, who by his word first of all sent forth, made all thinges of nothing. The same word called his Son, was under the name of God diuersly seen of the Patriarkes, euer more heard in the Prophets, last of all by the spirit si Italiae ad aces, habes Romanam, &c. Cum Aphricanis quoque Ecclesijs contestatur: unum Deum nouit, Creatorem universitatis & Iesum Christum ex Virgine Maria, filium Creatoris, & carnis resurrectionem: legem & Prophetas cum Euangelicis & Apostolicis literis nascet, & inde fidem portat eam, &c. *Regula est autem fide: illa scilicet qua creditur unum omnino Deum esse, nec alium quam mundi Creatorem, qui uniuersa produxerit de nihilo per verbum suum primo omnium emissum, &c. Superest ut demonstremus an hac nostra doctrina, cuius regulam supra edidimus de Apostolorum traditione censeatur.

& power of the Father was brought into the Virgin Mary, made flesh in her wombe, and being borne of her did the part of Iesus Christ: preached thenceforth the new law and the new promise of the kingdome of heauen, wrought miracles, and being nailed to a crosse, rose againe the third day, and so forth according to the articles of Christian beleefe. Vpon the assertion of this rule he inferreth, that scilicet the truth must be ad- iudged to them who walke in that rule which the Church had deliuered from the Apostles, the Apostles from Christ, & Christ from God; it was hereby assured which he had before propounded, that the hereticke was not to be admitted to disputation by the Scriptures, who without the Scriptures were proued to haue no title to the Scriptures. Therefore for conclusion of all this hee saith that scilicet the corrupting of the Scriptures and of the meaning thereof, must bee reckoned to bee there where there was found diuersitie of doctrine from the Scriptures. For they (saith he) who intended to teach otherwise, had neede otherwise to dispose of the instruments of doctrine and teaching. For they could not teach otherwise, except they had somewhat otherwise whereby to teach. But on the contrary side he saith: As their corrupting of doctrine could not haue successe without corrupting of the instrument thereof: so neither could integrity or soundnesse of doctrine haue stood with vs, without the integrity of those instruments by which doctrine is handled. For in our Scriptures what is there contrary to vs? What haue we brought in of our owne, that somewhat being found in the Scriptures thereto contrary, we should remedie by adding or taking away, or changing any thing? What we are the same are the Scriptures euen from their beginning. From the we are euer since there was nothing otherwise then we are. This is the briefe summe of all that Tertullian in that booke saith, pertinent to the matter here in hand, wherein as there is nothing in fauour of the cause which M. Bishop maintaineth, so there is much to bee offered for the oppugning and conuincing thereof. First, it is apparent that Tertullian here saith not a word for the auouching of any doctrine beside the Scripture; but onely for instifying the doctrine that is contained in the Scripture. The hereticke oppugned the maine and fundamentall grounds of Christian faith, concerning the vnitie of the Godhead, the creation of the world, the Godhead and incarnation of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, the coming

Si hac ita se habent, ut ueritas nobis adiudicetur quicunque in ea regula inciderimus quam Ecclesie ab Apostolo, Apostoli a Christo, a Deo tradidit, constat ratio propositi nostri defendendum non esse admittendos hereticos, ad eandem de Scripturis pronocationem quos sine Scripturis probamus ad Scripturas non pertinere. Illic igitur & Scripturam & expositionem adulteratio deputanda est, ubi diuersitas inuenitur doctrina. Quibusus propositum aliter institit aliter disputandi instrumenta doctrina. Alias enim non potuissent aliter docere, nisi aliter haberent per quae docerent. Sic enim illi non potuissent succedere cuiuspietate doctrina sine corruptela instrumentorum eius, ita & nobis integritas doctrina non competit sine integritate eorum per qua doctrina tractatur. Etenim quid contrarium nobis in nostris? quid de proprio intulimus, ut aliquid contra rum ei & in Scripturis deprehensum detractioe uel aditione uel transmutatione remediarentur? Quod sumus, hoc sunt inde Scriptura ab initio suo. Ex illis sumus antequam nihil aliter fuissemus quam sumus, of the holy Ghost, and sundry other such like. They reiected such whole bookes, and razed such testimonies of Scripture as evidently made against them, affirming the same not to haue bene written by the Apostles, or by any diuine inspiration, ^a but foisted in, yea sometimes that they were to correct & reforme those things which the Apostles had written. Therefore albeit the points in question were manifestly decided by cleare testimony of Scripture, yet the authoritie of Scripture being reiected and refused, it was necessaric for many mens satisfaction to take some other course for the conuicting of them. Hereupon hee referred men to the consideration of the Apostolicke Churches where the doctrine of the faith of Christ was most renownedly planted, and had successiually continued from the time of the Apottles, that by the testimonie of those Churches it might appeare, both that the Scriptures were authentick and true, and that the doctrine auouched against the Heretickes, was no other but what the Apostles themselues by the institution of Christe had in those Scriptures deliuered to the Church. In which case they did nothing else but what we also haue done, when vpon exception taken against vs, as vsing the Scriptures partially for the maintenance of our religion, which yet euery eye may see to bee clearly iustified thereby, wee haue further alledged the tradition of the Church, and shewed by pregnant and expresse testimonie and wittnesse of the auncient Fathers and Councils, both that wee acknowledge all those Scriptures which were with them vndoubtedly approued for Canonicall. and doe gather no other assertions or doctrines, but what by them were gathered from thence. And if M. Bishop will not hereupon conclude vs to be patrons of their traditions, as wee suppose hee will not then let him know that he abuseth Tertullian, in seeking to make him a supporter thereof, who did nothing in effect but what wee doe: let him take knowledge of his owne singular falshood and trecherie, in alledging a speech of tradition, which importeth no more but the written doctrine of the Scripture, thereby to colour their traditions, which are both befside and contrarie to the Scripture. Yea and his trecherie is so much the greater in this generall naming of Tertullians booke of Prescriptions as making for their traditions, for that Tertullian, which is secondly here to bee noted, doth plainly affirme, that what they are, the Scriptures are, that a Contra Mare.

lib. 4. Contraria
quæq; sententia
sua erasit con-
spirantia cum Creatore quæsi ab assertoribus
eius in texta.
b Ibid Hæresis
sic semper emen-dat Euangel a dum vitiat. Irne.
lib. 3. cap. 1. Emen- datores Apostolicum.

that is, that they taught nothing but what the Scripture had taught them, yea and that integritie of faith coulde not haue stooode with them, but by the integritie of the Scriptures, by which the doctrine of faith is managed and taught, thereby signifying that albeit by the importunitie of heretickes they were forced to appeale to the tradition of the churches, yet that neither their safetie, nor the safetie of the churches to which they appealed stooode in tradition, but in hauing the Scriptures entire as they were first deliuered vnto them, that out of them they might teach what was first deliuered. Yea and that so, as they needed no adding to the Scriptures nor taking from them, nor changing of any thing, for the saluing of any thing which they taught, whereby it appeareth, that hee meant not to leaue any place for vnwritten doctrines, or any such traditions as the church of Rome defendeth against the plaine letter and expresse word of holy Scriptures, onely by taking vpon her to make such meaning thereof as may not touch her deuiCES, howsoeuer they containe impious idolatrie and blasphemie against God, and the apparent dishonour of the name of Christ. Againe, wee are to note, that he teacheth it to haue bene some one certaine matter of doctrine, which christ at the first deliuered to his Apostles; and the Apostles to the church: that that onely is true which was thus deliuered at first, but whatsoeuer since hath come in, is erroneous and false. To which purpose elsewhere also he giueth this prescription, that we are there to affirme the peruerting of the rule, where there is found laternesse of time: and againe, that authoritie is to bee yeelded to that that is the more auncient, but that to be preiudicased of corruption, which shall be proued to be the latter. Therefore in the wordes formerly alledged, we see he maketh it a certaine marke of corruption and fallshood, not to haue bene named or mentioned by the Apostles. Now if by this prescription we examine the doctrine of Poperie, wee shall easily perceiue and finde, that in it is the peruerting of the rule, as wherein there are so many deuiCES neuer mentioned by the Apostles, yea which hadde neyther name nor place for many hundreds, yea some not for a thousande yeares or more after the time of the Apostles, as hath bene declared before in answer of the Epistle to the King. This is a true and certaine rule, and necessary to bee obserued, and wee learne

c Contr. Mare. lib.
 3. Illic pronunchanda est regule in-teruersio ubi poste-ritas inuenitur.
 d Ibid lib. 4. Et prescribens autho-ritatem quod antiquius reperietur, &
 ei prescribens vitiationem quod posterius reuincetur.

thereby to condemne for nouelties and humane presumptions whatsoeuer hath not warrant from the beginning, and to adimtte of no faith or doctrine, but what the church receiued immediatly from the Apostles, and the Apostles from Christ, and Christ from God. And because what Christ receiued from God hath witness of the Law and the Prophets, as wee haue seene before out of Chrysofome therefore we are to know, that there is no doctrine truly affirmed as belonging to the new testament, which hath not confirmation and testimonie from the old. Fourthly, we see that albeit Tertullian did referre his Reader to tradition, yet hee tooke not his witness of tradition onely from the church of Rome, but also from other churches which were founded by the Apostles as well as it. So doth he also in another place, saying: Let vs see what milke the Corinthians did draw from Paul, by what rule the Galatians were reformed: what the Philippians, Thessalonians, Ephesians doe read; what the Romans also neare vnto vs doe teach, to whom Peter and Paul left the Gospell sealed with their blood. Wee haue also the churches which were taught by S. Iohn, &c. And although in his prescriptions hee name it as the honor of the church of Rome, that the Apostles Peter and Paule did with their blood vtter all their doctrine. to that church, yet doth hee not name it as a thing proper and peculiar to it, in as much as S. Paule plainly affirmeth, that to the church of Ephesus also hee had preached all the counsell of God, and thereby leaueth vs to vnderstand, that he did the like to all the churches. Hereby then we descry the notable fraud of M. Bishop and his fellowes, who now hang the authoritie of all tradition onely vpon the church of Rome, and will haue nothing authentically from other churches but onely from that church. For although Tertullian might safely argue from tradition in the consent of many churches, and might conclude it vndoubtedly to haue bin deliuered from the Apostles which was vniuniformly receiued by them all, when as none of them had power to obtrude or thrust vpon other churches any doctrines deuised by themselues, and especially being so soone after the time of the Apostles as before was sayd, yet can no such assurance be builded vpon any one church, and that so many hundreds of yeares after, and especially such a church as by tyrannie and vsurpation hath compelled other churches to bee subiect vnto it, thereby enforcing vpon them whatsoeuer it pleaseth to deuise for the seruing

e Contra Marc.
lib. 4. Videamus quod lac a Paulo Corinthij hauserint
ad quam regulam
Galat. sint recor-
recti, quid legant Phiipenses, The-salonicenses, Ephe-sij, quid etiam Ro-
mani de proxime
sonent, quibus Euangelium & Petrus & Paulus sanguine suo signatum reliquerunt. Habe-mus & Iohannis alie-nas Ecclesias, &c. f De prescriptis
Felix Ecclesia cui
totam doctrinam Apostolicam sanguine suo profunde-
runt.
g Act. 20. 27.

of it owne turne, and wherein there haue beene so many innouations and alterations, as that their varieties & vncertainties from age to age, doe shew that they are departed from that one certaine rule, which Christ and his Apostles first deliuered to the church. To conclude, Tertullian teacheth vs to take knowledge of such heresies or falshoodes as are noted to haue beene in the Apostles times, and by them condemned, and thereby to know them for deceiuers, not onely who teach the same, but any that haue taken seeds from thence, or being then but rude and vnfashioned are since polished and fined with more probable deuce and shew. Such were then the teaching ^b of justification by the workes of the law, ⁱ the worshipping of Angels ^k the not sparing of the body, nor hauing of it in honour to satisfie the flesh: to which we may adde the ^l forbidding of mariage, and commaunding of abstinence from meates noted for time to come. All which we see in the Papacie now maintained and practised; and though they bee glosed and coloured with trickes and shifts, that they may not seeme to bee the same that the Apostles spake of, yet by Tertullians rule are to bee taken to haue beene then condemned, inasmuch as the Apostles speaking of them as they were then, vsed no restraint for warrant of them as they are defended now. Thus then M. Bishop hath little cause to boast of Tertullians booke of prescriptions, and better might hee haue forborne the naming of him, but that he hath learned of his maister Bellarmino, to name authors sometimes in generall, when in particular they make nothing for that he saith: as in that whole booke Tertullian hath not one word for warrant of any tradition or doctrine that is not contained in the Scripture. But hee will make the matter sure, I trow, out of another place, where Tertullian formally proposeth the question whether traditions unwritten bee to be admitted or not, and answereth that they must so. Nowe it is true indeede that Tertullian so resolueth and concludeth the matter in those woordes which Maister Bishop hath alleadged, but he should withall haue told vs when it was that hee so resolueth, and then little cause should we haue to wonder at that he saith. He wrote his booke of prescriptions, when he yet continued in the societie of the church, but the booke which Maister Bishop citeth de Corona militis, hee wrote after wards, when hee was fallen away, and becsotted with the prophetic of Montanus, and purposely girdeth according to his vsual manner, at the Catholike
and

h Act. 15. 7.

i Col. 2. 18.

k 1 bid. ver. 28.

l 1. Tim. 4. 3.

and godly Pastors and professors of the church, and specially indeede of the church of Rome, at which it was that he was specially offended. Hee vpbraideth them as^m fearfull and faint-hearted, and minding nothing more if persecution should arise, then to runne away. And because they had condemned Montanus with his new propheticie, therefore he saith of them: ⁿ It remaineth indeede that they thinke of shunning martyrdom, who haue reiected the prophesies of the holy Ghost. The matter whereupon he tooke the occasion of this writing, was briefly thus. A Souldiour who was a christian, comming amongst the rest to receiue the Emperours donatiue, refused to weare his garland vpon his head as the manner was, but came with it in his hand. Being demaunded why he so did, he answered that hee might not doe as the rest did, because hee was a christian. Hereupon he was taken and cast in pryson, and feare there was least further danger should heereby grow to the whole church. Mary hereupon condemned the vndiscreete zeale of this man, who without cause in a matter meereley indifferent, would thus prouoke the Emperours fury, both against himselfe, and the whole profession of christian faith. Tertullian ready to entertaine euery such occasion, taketh the matter in hand, and writeth this booke as in commendation and defence of the constancie and resolution which hee had shewed in this matter. Now it is to be considered, what it was that was sayd on the churches behalfe, which Tertullian taketh vpon him to oppugne. ^o This they specially urge, saith he, Where are we forbidden to weare a garland? where is it written that wee should not weare a garland? To this he answereth, that ^p though no scripture had so determined, yet custome had so confirmed, which no doubt, saith he, came by tradition. He then bringeth in the churches reply, ^q But sayest thou, in pretence of tradition, authority of Scripture is to be required. Whereby it is manifest, that the church then reiected vnwritten traditions, and where tradition was alleadged, required authority of Scripture for the warrant of it: and hereupon was it that Tertullian being now become an hereticke, defendeth vnwritten traditions against the church. Therefore the latter Church of Rome in defending traditions beside the Scripture, followeth the steps of Montanus the heretike, and we in oppugning the same, do no other but take part with the auncient Church of Rome. Albeit the absurdity of Tertullians defence of traditions here doth sufficiently bewray

m Tertull. de Cor
ron. xlii. Non pastores eorum in pace leones, in pralio ceruos, &c. Non dabit quosdam
sarcinas expedire,
suga accingi de ciui-
tate in ciuitatem
nullam aliam Euangelij memoria
curant.
n Plané superest
ut martyria re-
cusare med tentur
qui prophetias
eiusdem sp. sancti;
respuerunt.

o Maxime illud
opponunt: Vbi au-
tem prohibemur
ne coronemur, &c.
Vbi scriptum est, ne
coronemur, &c. p Hanc si nulla
scriptura determinant, certé consue-
tudo corroborauit,
que sine dubio de traditione manauit
q Etiam in traditionis obtinuit exigen-
da est, in qua, authoritas scripta.

wray it selfe, in that he maketh it^r lawfull for euery faithfull man to conceiue and set downe what may be fitting to God, what helpfull to discipline, what profitable to saluation, and will haue tradition to be regarded, who soeuer be the author of it He maketh^r vs stone a sufficient witnessse for the approouing of tradition, who notwithstanding else-where though stil professed with the same humer, yet much more discreetly, saith, that^r Custom commonly hauing his beginning of ignorance or simplicitie, is by succession strengthened to common vse, and so is maintained against the truth, well obseruing withall, that^u Christ did not call himselfe custome, but truth, & that what soeuer sauoureth against the truth is heresie though it be an auncient custome. As for the instances which M. Bishop saith he bringeth for the iustifying of traditions vnwritten, they are partly impertinent, and partly heathenish and hereticall deuises: and surely if the church had bene then fraught with traditions, as the church of Rome is now, he would not haue bene so slenderly furnished for the approouing of them. His first instance is, that in baptisme^x they did professe to renounce the deuill and his pompes and his Angels. But this is no other but written doctrine, and the Scripture teacheth it, when it nameth^y repentance from deade workes as one of the foundations of Christian profession, and of the doctrines of the beginning of Christ, and we vse the same renunciation in baptisme, who yet disclaime traditions vnwritten. Forme of words maketh no difference of doctrine, & though in other terms yet we doe no other thing therein, but what the Scripture teacheth vs to do. His second instance of^z thrice dipping, is a matter onely of ceremonie, not of doctrine, and it is meere indifferent whether it be done once as in the name of one God, or thrice as to import the Trinitie of the persons. As for^a the tasting of milke and honse which is his third instance, it was also a voluntary obseruation, which may seeme first to haue bene brought in by hereticke, howsoeuer after it got place in the church, because Dionysius who for his time most exactly describeth^b the ceremonies of the church, maketh no mention of it. ^c Not to wash for a weeke after baptisme, not to fast or pray kneeling upon the Sunday, or betwixt Easter and Whitseide, were also but positie ceremonies, subiect to the discretion of the Church, vsed in some places and times, and

^r Annon p^untu
omni fidelicere concipere & con-
siliare dumtaxat
quod Deo congru-
at, quod discipline
conducit, quod sa-
luti proficiat? & e Saluo traditione
respectu quocunq;
traditione censetur
¹ Confirmata consuetudo in idonca
re se probat a tra-
ditionis.
^t De virgin. velan.
Consuetudo ser-
mitum ex ignor-antia vel simplici-
tate fortita in u-
sum per successio-
nem corroboratur.
^u Ita aduersus ve-ritatem vindica-
tur.
^v Ibid. Dominus noster Christus ve-ritatem se, non con-
suetudinem cognominauit, &c. Quod
eunq; aduersus ve-ritatem sapit, hoc
erit heresie, etiam
vetus consuetudo.
^x Aquam adituri contestamur nos
renunciare diabolo & pompa, et Angelis eius.
^y Heb. 6. r.
^z Dehinc ter mer-gitamur.
^a Inde suscepti lactu & mellis con-
cordiam prae gustamus.
^b Dionys. Ecclesiast. hierarch. cap. 4.
^c Lauare quocunq;
ano ex ea die per totam hebdoma-
dam abstineamus:
Die dominico ienu-
nium nefas duci-
mus vel de genicu-lu adorare. Eadem

in uinitate a die pascha in Pentecosten usa, gaudemus.

not in other, inſomuch that in part they are growne out of uſe euen in the church of Rome, and therefore come not within the compaſſe of traditions, as wee here diſpute of them. ^d To receiue the Sacrament at the hands of the Biſhop or Miniſters, is the inſtitution of chriſt and we are taught it by the written word, but either to doe it in the morning before day, or at the time of other feeding, was a meere arbitrary and indifferent thing, and the church of Rome nowe uſeth it at neither time. ^e Offerings yeerely made for the dead and for birth-daies, were firſt brought in by the heretike Montanus, to whome now Tertullian had addicted himſelfe, and of whom the eccleſiaſtical hiſtorie teſtifieth, that ^f under the pretence and name of offerings he cunningly deuſed the taking of rewardes and things. And although the one of them by the plauſible colour of it tooke ſuch faſt holde, as that the dreame thereof hath runne into the lakes and puddles of the church of Rome, yet the other was ſoone reiected, or not at all admitted, but onely amongſt his fellowes, Origen teſtifying that chriſtians ^g did not celebrate their birth-day, and that it was not found that any of the Saints had made a feſtiuall day of his birth-day. ^h Not to endure to haue any part of the Sacrament fall to the ground, is a part of that ⁱ decencie and reuerence which the Scriptures requireth to be uſed in ſacred and holy thinges: or if he ſpeake it of ordinary bread and drinke, the Scripture alſo teacheth, that of thoſe good bleſſings of God, ^k nothing ſhould be loſt. The uſe of ^l the ſigne of the croſſe was ceremoniall alſo, no matter of doctrine and faith, but onely an occaſion of remembrance, and a token of the profeſſion thereof, which in diſcretion for temporary conſideration was beegun, and by like diſcretion cauſe requiring, might be left againe. Our church in ſome part, where it is moſt free from Popiſh abuſe, uſeth the ſigne of the croſſe, and yet well knoweth, that vnwritten traditions, as the name is vnderſtoode in this diſputation, are not iuſtified thereby. We doubt not as touching outward uſages and ceremonies, as touching poſitiue conſtitutions and ordinances of the church, but that vnder the name of traditions, according to the circumſtances before expreſſed, they may be commanded, and are to be obeyed though they be not contained in the Scripture, but for matter of faith and of the worſhip of God, we deny that any thing may be admitted beſide the written woorde, and Tertullians inſtances are too weak to ſerue Maſter Biſhops turne to prouoe the contrary. To be ſhort

d Eucharſtia Sa-cramentum & in tempore uictus,
&c. c. i. in antelucan no cœtibus nec de
aliorum quàm
praſidentum manu
ſumimus.

e Oblationes pro
deſicientibus, pro natalijs annua die
facimus.

f Euseb. hiſt. ecol.
lib. 5. cap. 16. Sub prætextu & nomi-
ne oblationum mu-
nerum captatione
artificiosè com-
mentus eſt.

g Origen. in Iob.
lib. 3. Nos non nati-uitatis diem cele-
bramus ſed mortis,
&c. & in Leuit
hom. 8. Nemo ex omnibus ſanctis inuenitur diem feſtū
&c. egiſſe in die
natalis ſui.

h Calicis aut panis
etiā noſtri ali-
quid in terram de-
cuti anxie patimur
i I. Cor. 14. 40.
k Iohn. 6. 12.

l Ad omnem pro-
greſſum atq; pro-
motum, ad omnem
aditum et exitum,
ad uoſtitum &
calceatum, ad leſa
era, ad menſas, ad
lumina, ad cubilia
ad ſedilia aqua cunq;
nos conuerſi: o ex-
eret, frontem crucis ſignaculo tirmus.

short, it appeareth plainly by Tertullian, that the Catholicke church defended then against heretikes the same that we nowe defend against the Papistes, that pretence of tradition without authoritie of Scripture availeth not: and therefore that the papistes vnder the name of Catholikes are indeede heretickes, wrastling and fighting against the Church.

II. W. BISHOP

Come we now vnto his second testimonie out of S. Ierome, * who writing (as he saith) of an opinion, that S. Iohn Baptist was killed, because he foretold the comming Christ (the good-man would say, Zacharie S. Iohns Father, for the Scripture sheweth plainly why S. Iohn test his head *) But S. Ierome there saith, this Because it hath not authority from Scriptures, may as easily be contemned as approoued. Out of which particular, M. Perkins (shewing himselfe a doughtie Logitian) would enforce an vniversall, that forsooth all may be contemned that is not proued by Scripture. As if you would prone no Protestant to be skilfull in the art of true reasoning, because M. Perkins behaues himselfe in it so vnskillfully. But S. Ierome in the same place declareth why that might bee as easily reprov'd as allowed, not hauing any ground in the Scripture, because (saith he) It is taken out of the dreames of some Apocryphall writings, opposing Scripture to other improoued writings, and not to approoued Traditions: to which (he saith in his Dialogues against the Luciferians, before the middle,) That the Church of God doth attribute the like authoritie, as it doth vnto the written Law.

* In cap. 23. Matth.

* Matth. 14.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins indeede mistooke in naming Iohn Baptist in steed of Zacharie the father of Iohn Baptist, but it is no matter of consequence for his aduantage, and therefore might easily be pardoned by Master B. shop, who for aduantage hath made many greater and fouler faults. ^a Some, saith Hierome, will haue Zacharie (who is said to haue bene slaine betwixt the temple and the altar) to be meant of the father of Iohn Baptist, auouching out of the dreames of Apocryphall bookes that he was slaine because he foretold the comming of our

^a Ieron in. Matth. 23.

Saviour.

• Hoc quia ex
Scripturis non ha-
bet auctoritatem, eadem facilitate contemnitur quae
probat ut.

Saujour. * This, saith he,, because it hath not authoritie out of the scriptures, is as easily contemned as approoued. Where M. Perkins doth not out of a praticular inforce an vniuersall, as M. Bishop pretendeth, but rightly alleadgeth, that Hieromes words containing a minor proposition and a conclusion, must by rules of Logicke imply a maior proposition for the inferring thereof. This hath no authoritie out of the Scriptures: therefore it may be as easily contemned as approoued. Why so, but onely because whatsoeuer hath not authoritie of scripture, is as easily contemned as approoued? The argument contained in Hieromes wordes, cannot stand good but by this supply, and so it is not the inferring of an vniuersall from a particular, but the prouing of the particular by the vniuersall, according to due course. But M. Bishop telleth vs, that the cause why that storie might as well bee reprooued as allowed, was because it was taken out of the dreams of some Apocryphall writings. Which what is it but to vie a shift in steede of an answer, the sentence being in it selte entier, and absolutely giuing the cause of the reiecting of that story, because it had no authoritie out of scripture? Yea, if it be true which M. Bishop saith of traditions, Hieromes argument proueth to be nothing worth. For though this were written in Apocryphall bookes, and had no prooue of Scripture, yet it might be confirmed by tradition, and therefore it followeth not, that because it was written in Apocryphall bookes, and had no prooue of Scripture, it should hereupon be reiected. ⁹ In the Apocryphall writings, saith Austine. some truth is found, albe it because there are manie things also false, they haue no canonicall authoritie. If this therefore notwithstanding it were written in Apocryphall bookes might bee true, then it might be confirmed by tradition, and therefore not to be contemned, and thereof it followeth, that Hieromes reason of reiecting it for wanting authoritie of Scripture, is worth nothing.
Which if M. Bishop will not say, then lette him acknowledge that Hieromes meaning simply is this, that there is no necessitie for vs to beleuee, what authoritie of Scripture doth nor confirme, saying no other thing therein, but what else-where he maketh good, reasonning both wayes, ^c We beleuee it, because we reade it: we beleuee it not, because we doe not reade it. And surely if Hierome had had here any concept of tradition without Scripture, hee would not haue left this matter thus indifferently, as easily to be contemned as approued, but would simply haue contemned it, because tradition hadde giuen

b Aug. de cin. Dei
lib. 13. cap. 27. In Apocryphis et si
inuenitur aliqua Veritas, tamen pro-
pter nonnulla falsa
nulla est Canonica authoritas.

c Hieron aduer Heluid Natum deum esse de virgine credimus, quia legimus: Mariam
nupsisse Post par-
tum non credimus
quia non legimus.

giuen another cause of the death of Zacharie, namely for that hee affirmed Mary the mother of Iesus, to be still a virgin, and accordingly placed her in the temple in a place which was appointed onely for virgines and maidens. whereof Origen saith: ^d Such a tradition hath come to vs, and Basil: ^e A storie of Zacharie by tradition hath come to vs, and in like manner Theophylact: ^f Thus hath a narration deliuered by tradition to vs. If this then beeing deliuered by tradition, yet auailed so little in the Church, because it wanted the authoritie of Scripture, we may well conceiue that Hieromes meaning was plaine. that tradition howsoeuer colourable it seeme to bee, yet is of no moment or credit without the Scripture. As for the other wordes alleadged by Master Bishop that ^g to traditions the Church of God doth attribute the like authoritie as it doth vnto the written law, they are set downe for the wordes of a Luciferian schismaticke, and the example thereof taken from a Montanist heretike euen from Tertullian, of whome was spoken in the former section, inso much that some of ^h the instances of traditions vsed by Tertullian, are there set downe in Tertullians owne wordes. And yet by those instances it appeareth, that the wordes come not within the compasse of our question, because hee speaketh onely of Ceremoniall customes and obseruations which are temporall and occasionall, not of matters of doctrine and faith, which are necessary and perpetuall, which though they had in time growne to bee alike in practise and vse, as if they had bene written, yet in iudgement and doctrine were not holden to bee alike, and therefore for the most part haue ceased since to bee obserued euen in the Church of Rome.

12. W. BISHOP.

Master Perkins. His third Author is Saint Augustine. * In those things which are plainly set downe in Scriptures, are found all those poynts which containe faith and manners of liuing well.

Answer. All things necessary to bee beleued of every simple Christian, vnder paine of damnation, that is, the Articles of our Beliefe, are contain'd in the Scriptures, but not the resolution of hard matters: much lesse of all difficulties, which the more learned must expressly beleue.

^d Origen in Mat. tract. 16. Venit ad nos traditum talu &c ^e Basil. de humana Christi gener. Zacharia historia quedam qua ex traditione ad nos vsq; peruenit.

^f Theophyl. in Mat. cap. 23. Habet ista narratio nobis tradita.

^g Hieron. adu. Lucifer. Luc. sermone d. xii. &c Nam & multa al a qua per traditionem in ecclesijs obseruantur authoritatem sibi scripte leges vsurpauerunt.

^h Velut in suacroter caput mergitare, deinde egressos lactis & mellis gustare concordia, &c. die dominico & per omnium Penitenciam, nec de geniculis adorare et cinerum solvere

* Lib. 1. de doct. Chr. cap. 3.

* De peccatorum meritis cap. ult.

* Lib. 1. de bapt.
contra Donat.
cap. 23.

* De genes. ad
Itra. lib. 10. cap
23.

* Lib. 2. cap 3.
cont. max. Ari-
num.

* Heresi. 4.

leue, if they will be saved, which distinction S. Augustine elsewhere doth signifie: * and is gathered out of many other places of his workes, as in that matter of rebaptizing them, who became Catholickes, after they had bene baptized by heretickes. He saith, * The Apostles truly haue commaunded nothing hereof (in their writings) but that custome which was laid against S. Cyprian, is to be beleued to haue flowed from an Apostolicall tradition, as there be many things which the vniuersall Church holdeth, and therefore are to bee beleued. The same saith he of the custome of the church in baptizing infants. * And in his Epist. 174. of the word $\delta\upsilon\beta' \sigma\iota\omicron\nu$ that is not in the holy scripture & yet neuertheless is defended to be vsed in the assertion of faith. As also (saith he) we neuer reade in those bookes that the Father is vnbegotten, and yet we hold that hee is so to be called. * And Saim Augustine holdes that the holy Ghost is to be adored, though it bee not written in the word. The like of the perpetuall Virginitie of our blessed Ladie, * out of which and many more such like, we gather most manifestly that Saint Augustine thought many matters of faith not to be contained in the written word, but to be taken out of the Churches treasure of Traditions.

R. ABBOT.

It is strange to see here what stutting and stammering the man vseth, loth to confesse the trueth, and yet forced by the very euidence thereof, in a manner fully to subscribe vnto it. I pray thee gentle Reader to marke well the wordes of Austin, that are here alledged. In those things, saith he, which are plainly set downe in the Scriptures, are found all those things which containe faith and behauiour of life. He saith not barely, in the Scripture, but in those thinges which are plainly set downe in the Scripture: nor that some speciall matters of faith are found, but all those things are found, which containe faith and conuersation of life. Now how nicely doth M. Bishop mince the matter. All things, saith he, necessary to be beleued of euery simple Christian vnder paine of damnation, are contained in the Scriptures, as if S. Austin spake here only of simple Christians, and not of those that are of learning & knowledge, when as his drift is in this booke, to teach the Preacher how to conceiue of the Scriptures for his owne vse. Then he restraineth all those necessary things, to the articles of 1 Aug. de doct.

Christ. lib. 2. cap. 9
In ijs qua aperte
posita sunt in scrip-
turis inueniuntur
illa omnia qua
continent fidem
moreseque viuendi.

our beleeve, whereas S. Austine expoundeth himselfe as touching ^b hope and charitie, of which hee had intreated in the former booke Then he excepteth the resolution of harder matters and many difficult-ties which the learned must expressly beleue, when as S. Austine saith that in the Scriptures are found all those things which containe faith and conuersation of life, in somuch that we haue heard him ^c before pronounce a curse to an Angell from heauen, who either concerning Christ, or the Church of Christ, or any thing belonging to our faith and life, shall preach any thing but what wee haue received in the scriptures of the law and the Gospell. But yet if they will haue S. Austins words to be vnderstood of all things necessary to bee beleued of euery simple Christian, we would gladly know why they require euery simple man, vnder paine of damnation, to beleue the Popes supremacie, his succession from Peter, the power of his pardons, the validitie, of his dispensations, to beleue their doctrine of the Masse, of Purgatorie, of inuocation of Saints, of prayer for the dead, of worshipping idols and images, and a thousand such other deuices when as those are not found in any plaine places of Scripture, nay when as the plaine text of Scripture is cleerly and manifestly against them. Thou must vnderstand, gentle Reader, that M. Bi- shop giueth not this answer in earnest, but the euidence of S. Au- stines words being so pregnant against him, somewhat hee must say for the present, to colour the matter, howsoeuer it bee other wise contrary to his owne defence. It is not for their thirst to graunt that what concerneth euery simple Christian vpon paine of damnation is plainly set downe in Scripture; to beleue so is the marring of a great part of their haruest. But alas in this case what should hee doe? if Saint Austine say it, it is not for him to speake against it; onely what hee looseth here, hee must do his best to recouer other where. But for this lame answer, whereby hee in part confesseth the truth against himselfe, and yet la-boureth in part to conceale it and kepe it backe, hee seeketh patronage from another place of Austine, saying that Saint Au- stine else where doth signifie that distinction. Hee noteth in the mar-gent de peccatorum meritis cap. ultimo, but which booke it is of the three, hee noteth not, nor what the words are. Now in the last chapters of the first and third booke, there is nothing incident to this purpose, but that which S. Austine saith in the last chapter b *Spem scilicet & charitatem de quibus supe-

 riore libro tractauimus.*

c Supra. scilicet.

of the second booke, is such as that wee neede not wonder that M. Bishop, did forbear to set do vne his words. For hauing therein question whether the soule bee ex traduce, that is, whether it bee deriued and propagated by generation, with other points thereupon depending, hee saith that the matter is ^d with such moderation to bee handled, as that a man may bee rather commended for inquiring warily, then reproued for affirming rashly. For (he saith) where question is of a very obscure matter, without the helpe of sure and euident testimonies or instructions of the holy Scriptures, the presumption of man is to withhold it selfe, doing nothing by inclining either way. But hee goeth on yet further: ^e For albeit I know not how any of these points (mentioned before) may bee declared and made plaine, yet I beleeue that the authoritie of the words of God should bee most cleare concerning them, if man without damage of saluation promised might not be ignorant thereof. In which words wee see Saint Austine mentioning difficult and hard questions, but wee see withall that hee denieth the determining of any such without assured and cleare testimonies of holy Scriptures affirming that hee beleeueth that there should bee cleare authoritie of Gods word for the deciding of them, if man (and not onely simple men) without losse of saluation might not bee without knowledge of them. Hereby then hee most euidently testifieth, that whatsoeuer is necessarie for the saluation of mankind, hath cleere and euident testimonie of holy Scripture, and that what hath not so, wee are to surcease from defining any thing of it. How lewdly then doth M. Bishop deale, to make his Reader beleeue that Saint Austine saith for him, that the resolution of harder points and difficulties, which yet the learned must expressly beleeue, are not contained in the Scripture? But yet hee telleth vs, that that is also gathered out of many other places of his workes, and yet out of all those places alledged not any part or point of doctrine which Austine himselfe doeth not vndertake to iustifie by the Scriptures. It hath bene before declared, that when wee say that all matters of doctrine and faith are contained in the Scripture, wee vnderstand as the auncient Fathers did, not that all things are literally and verbally contained in the Scripture, but that all are either expressed therein, or by necessary illation and consequence to bee deriued from thence. S, Hierome doubteth not

d August. de peccat. mer. & remiss. lib. 2. cap. 26. Disputatiōem desideras eo moderamine temperatam ut magis inquisitio casus laudetur, quā precipitata reprehendatur assertio. Vbi enim de re obscurissima disputatur, non ad iuvantibus diuinarum Scripturarum certis et claris documentis cohibere se debet humanam praesumptio nihil faciens in alteram partem declinando.
e Ibid. Es si enim quodlibet horum quemadmodum demonstrari & explicari possit ignorem, illud tamen credo quod etiam hinc diuinarum eloquiorum clarissima esse auctoritas, si homo illud sine dispensatione pronissa salutis ignorare non possit.

of say as we doe,^f What things are written, we doe not denie: but what are not written, we reiect: and yet in the same booke hee saith also, hat it is ^g the proprietie of the holy Scripture, that those things whereof here might be doubt if they were not written, are set downe, but other things are left to our understanding to collect and gather them thereby. And in this sence Saint Austine saith, ^h By those things which we reads, we understand some things also which we doe not read. Thus both the same Saint Austine sometimes say, that the Church receiaeth some things that are not written, not that those things are not to be proued and defended by the Scriptures, but onely that they are not literally expressed in the Scriptures. And so it appeareth in the first instance produced by M. Bishop as touching the re-baptizing of them who became Catholikes after they had bene baptized by heretickes. For although Saint Austine say, thatⁱ the Apostles commaunded nothing thereof, but that the custome which was opposed to Cyprian was to bee beleued to haue flowed from an Apostlicall tradition, yet hee himselfe disputeth that poynt against the Donatistes continually by the Scriptures, refuseth to haue the matter decided but onely by the Scriptures, and in the first propounding thereof saith very plainly to them,^k That I seeme not to deale by humane arguments (namely for that a generall Councell hath so confirmed) I bring assured proofes out of the Gospell, whereby I shewe howe rightly and truly according to God it thus seemed good to them, that ecclesiasticall medicine should cure that in an hereticke or schismaticke wherein he is wounded and separated from the Church, but that which remaineth sound should rather be acknowledged and approoued, then by being disallowed should bee wounded. To omit many other places that might bee alleadged to the same purpose, soone after the words alleadged by M. Bishop, hee saith thus, ^l It is against the commaundement of God, that men coming from hereticke should be baptized, if there they haue receiued the Baptisme of Christe, because by testimonies of holy Scripture it is plainly shewed thus and thus. Literally therefore and as touching matter of fact and example, Saint Austine speaketh of it as not written in the Scriptures, but by Tradition so accustomed, because there is nothing expressly mentioned thereof, but yet sheweth that therefore this Tradition was accepted and approoued, because by testimonies of Scripture

^f Hieron. contra Heluid, Sicut hæc quæ scripta sunt, non negamus, iudicia uero non sunt scripta reuimus.

^g Ibid. Sancta scriptura idcirco et cæca de quibus possessores ambigunt, si nos iussu scripta, signaria cetera uero nostra intelligentie derelinquimus.

^h August. cont. Maxim. Arian. lib. 3. cap. 3. Ex his quæ legimus aliquid istam quæ non legitur, intelligimus.

ⁱ Idem de Bapt. contra Donatist. l. 1. cap. 23. Apostoli nihil exinde præceperunt, sed consuetudo illa quæ opponuntur Cypriano ab eorum traditione exordium sumpsisse credenda est.

^k Ibid. lib. 1. cap. 7. Ne humani argumenti id agere uideatur, &c. ex Euangelio præfero certa documenta quibus demonstro quam recte placuerit & uerè secundum deum, ut hoc in quoquam schismatico uel heretico ecclesiastica medicina curari: in quo uulnere separabatur, illud autem quod sanum manet, agutum potius approbaretur, quàm improbatum uulneraretur. Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 23. Contra mandatum Dei est quod uenientes ab hæreticis, illic baptismum Christi ac-ceperunt, baptizantur, quia sanctarum scripturarum testimonijs planè ostenditur, &c.

it was confirmed to be right, ^m because the reasons and testimonies of Scripture being well considered on both sides of that controuersie, it might be sayd, What the truth hath declared that wee follow. And thus it is true which S. Austine added in the place cited, ⁿ that there are many things which the whole Church holdeth, and for that cause are beleueed to haue come frō the Apostles, albeit they be not found set down in Scripture, because they be not namely and word for word set downe in Scripture, albeit they bee to be iustified by those things that are there set downe. Of this kind is that which M. Bishop nameth in the next place, of the custome of the church in baptizing infants, which Austine saith ^o is to be beleueed to be no other but an Apostolike tradition, & we also acknowledge no lesse. But what? did Austine hold it a traditio that could not bee proued and warranted by the scripture? Nothing lesse. For he himselfe against the Pelagian heretikes proueth the necessitie thereof by the Scriptures, ^p They say (saith he) that an infant not being baptizd cannot perish, because he is borne without sinne: but the Apostle saith, By one man sinne entred into the world, and by sinne came death, and so death went ouer all, for asmuch as all haue sinned, &c. Therefore the baptisme of infants is not superfluous, that they who by generation are bound to condemnation, by regeneration may bee deliuered from it. And in another place against the Donatists, ^q If any man (saith he) desire diuine authoritie in this behalf, we may truly coniecture what the sacrament of Baptisme auaileth in infants, by the circumcision of the flesh which the former people receiued. So by the rest of the Fathers sundry arguments are taken from the Scriptures for the iustifying of that custome, and ^r Bellarmino himselfe by the Scriptures proueth that infants are to bee baptized, and therefore full weakely doth M. Bishop deale to bring this for prooffe of their traditions, that is, of doctrines beside the Scripture. In his other obiections he is as idle as in any of these, or rather more idle. The Arian hereticke presseth Austine to shew where the worde $\delta\mu\delta'$ $\sigma\tau\iota\omicron\nu$ is reade in the Scripture. Saint Austine answereth him, that $\delta\mu\delta'$ $\sigma\tau\iota\omicron\nu$ was a Greeke word, and they spake Latin, and therefore it was first to be set down what is meant by $\delta\mu\delta'$ $\sigma\tau\iota\omicron\nu$ and then to be required in the scriptures

^m Ibidem. lib. 4. cap. 7. Quia bene perspectum ex utroque latere disputationis rationibus et scripturarum testimonijs, potest certam dici, Quod ueritas declarauit, hoc sequimur. n Lib. 5. cap. 27. Sicut sunt multa que uersitas tenet Ecclesia, & ab hoc ab Apostolis praecepta bene creduntur, quamquam scriptura non reperiantur. o De Genes. ad litter. lib. 10. cap. 27. Nec omnino credenda nisi Apostolica esse traditio. p August. epist. 89. Dicunt infantem morte praeventum non baptizatum perire non posse, quoniam sine peccato nascitur, &c. c. Dicit Apostolus Per unum hominem, &c. Ideo non est superfluum baptizatus paruulorum, ut qui per generationem illi condemnationi obligati sunt, per regenerationem liberentur. q De baptis. lib. 4. cap. 23. Si quisquam haec in re auctoritatem diuinam querat, &c. Veraciter conijcere possumus quid ualeat in paruulo Baptismi sacramentum ex circumsione carnis quam prior populus accepit. r Bellarm. de sacram. Baptis. lib. 1. cap. 8. l August. epist. 174. Respondebatur a nobis quia nos Latine loqueremur & illud Graecum esset, prius quaerendum esset quid sit Homousion, & tunc exigendum ut in libro sanctis ostenderetur, &c. quia etsi forsitan nomen ipsum non inueniretur, res tamen ipsa inueniretur. Quid est enim contentiosius quam ubi de re constat, certare de nomine?

because albeit the word perhaps bee not found there, yet the thing it selfe is found. For what greater wrangling is there, then to contend about the word, when there is a certaintie of the thing? Where we see M. Bishop in the place which hee himselve citeth, condemned for a contentious wrangler, that thus vrgeth the word consubstantiall, as a tradition beside the Scripture, when as the thing it selfe and matter imported by it, is contained in the Scripture, yea & S. Austin himselve in the same place proueth it by the Scripture, and else where asketh of the Arian heretike, What is Hemonson, consubstantiall, but I and my father are one? By the other word unbegotten he taketh advantage against the Arian, who had set downe that terme in the confession of his faith concerning God the Father. Hee damaundeth of him whether the Scripture had vsed that word, which not being found, and yet approoued, hee concludeth; *"Thou seest that it may bee, that of a word which is not set downe in Scripture, yet reason may be giuen to shew that it is rightly spoken: so therefore consubstantiall also, which we were required to show by authentic of Scripture, albeit we find not the very word there, yet it may be that we find that to which the word may be iudged to bee rightly applied. In these words therefore there is nothing imported but what we are instructed by the Scriptures; the meaning is there, though the letters and syllables bee not there. In like sort the case standeth with his other instance of the holy Ghost to be adored, which wee may wonder that he should be so impudent, or rather so impious, as to make an example of traditions beside the Scripture, as if the Scriptures did not procure that the holy Ghost is to bee worshipped, when as S. Austine proueth it there against the Arian no otherwise but by the Scriptures. But as touching all these points concerning the Godhead, let that suffice which Thomas Aquinas hath giuen for a rule, that concerning God we ought to say nothing which is not found in Scripture either in words or in meaning. Whereof he saith for example, *Though in very words it bee not found in holy Scripture that the holy Ghost proceedeth from the Sonne, yet in sense and meaning it is there found, To this our assertion accordeth, that no matter of faith or doctrine is to be admitted but what either in words or in sence is contained in the Scriptures. Let M. Bishop, shew vs the sence of their Traditions in the Scriptures, and wee will receiue them; though wee find not the words; but if hee alleadge for Traditions beside the Scripture those things, Idem contra Maximin. lib. 3: cap 12. Quid est Hemonson, nisi Ego & Pater unum sumus.

Idem epi. 174. Vides posse fieri ut etiam de verbo quod in scriptura Deo non est, reddatur tamen ratio vnderellō dicit ostendatur: sic ergo & homonson quod in autoritate diuinarum librorum cogebimur ostendere, etiamsi vocabulum ipsum ibi non inuenimus, fieri posse ut illud inueniamus eius hoc vocabulum recte adhiberi videtur.

Thom. Aquin. sum p. 1. qu. 36. art. 2. ad. 1. De Deo dicere non debemus, quod in sacra Scriptura non inuenitur vel per verba vel per sensum. Licet per verba non inueniatur in sacra scriptura quod spiritus sanctus procedat a Filio, inuenitur tamen quantum ad sensum.

y Sect. 11.

z August. heres.
56 & 84.a Hieron. aduer.
Heluid. Ipsa
Scripturarum
verba ponenda sunt, &c. Non credimus quia
non legimus.

the sence and meaning whereof is in the Scriptures, though the words be not, he abuseth his Reader, and saith nothing against vs. For this matter I referre thee further (gentle Reader) to that which hath bene said & beefore in answer of his Epistle to the King. As touching the perpetuall virginity of the blessed virgin, what we are to conceiue, hath bene beefore declared. S. Austine^z affirmeth it, but not vnder the name of a tradition: and Hierome when hee would maintaine it against^a Heluidus, tooke vpon him no otherwise to maintaine it but onely by the Scripture, thereby shewing that hee tooke tradition to bee a very weake and vncertaine ground. Now therefore it plainly appeareth that S. Austine hath pulled downe the churches treasury of traditions because M. Bishop can bring nothing to the contrary, but that hee plainly and truly meant that which hee said, that in those things which are plainly set downe in Scripture, are found all things belonging to our faith and conuersation of life, and thereby leaueth no place to M. Bishops matters of faith that are not contained in the written word.

I 3. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins his last testimonie is taken out of Vincentius Lyrinensis, who saith (as he reporteth) that the canon of the Scripture is perfect and fully sufficient for all things.

Ans. I think that there is no such sentence to be found in him: hee says by way of obiection, What need we make recourse vnto the authority of the Ecclesticall vnderstanding, if the Canon of the Scripture be perfect? Hee affirmeth not that they bee fully sufficient to determine all controuersies in religion, but through all his booke hee proues out the cleane contrary, that no heresie can bee certainly confuted and suppressed by onely Scriptures, without wee take with it the sence and interpretation of the Catholike Church.

a Vincen. Lyrin.
Hic forsitan ro-quirat aliquis.
cum sit perfectus Scripturarum
canon. sibiq; ad
omnia satis su-
perque sufficiat,
quid opus est vt
ei Ecclesiastica
intelligentie iun-
gatur authoritas

R. ABBOT

The words of Vincentius are vttered first by way of obiection thus:^a Some man happely may ask, seeing the Canon of Scriptures is perfect, and in it selfe abundantly sufficient for all matters, what needeth it that the authority of Ecclesiasticall vnderstanding shold be ioyned vnto it

He hath taught a man in the wordes before to ground and settle his faith,^b first by the authoritie of the law of God, and then by the tradition of the catholicke church, meaning by tradition, as appeareth, the interpretation or exposition of Scripture deliuered by the Church, not any matters of doctrine to bee receiued beside the Scripture. Hereupon he asketh the question, seeing the Scripture is abundantly sufficient, what neede is there to adde the tradition of the church? taking it for a thing receiued, and by all men approued, that the Scripture in it selfe is abundantly sufficient to instruct vs euery way and in all things belonging to faith and godlinesse, and therefore making it a doubt why the other should be needfull. And that we may vnderstand that he meant it not only by way of obiection, but positiuely in the repeating of the same poynts afterwards, he setteth downe this exception and reason,^c Not but that the Canon alone is in it selfe sufficient for all things, but because many interpreting the wordes of God as they list, do concerne diuers opinions and errors therefrom. M. Bishops answer then is false, that Vincentius affirmeth not that the Scriptures be fully sufficient to determine all controversies in religion, for Vincentius affirmeth it peremptorily, and therefore teacheth vs to shun them who after the Scriptures and interpretation thereof teach vs that there are yet other matters of Christian doctrine and faith that are not contained in the Scriptures. M. Bishop telleth vs that through all his bookes he proues the contrary. But what is that contrary? Marry that no heresies can be certainly confuted and suppressed by onely Scriptures without we take with it the sense and interpretation of the Catholicke Church. Whereby we see that either he hath not read that booke of Vincentius, or doth impudently falsifie that which he hath read. True it is that Vincentius in respect that heretickes doe often very guilefully alleadge the Scriptures, and wrest them to the maintenance and defence of their new deuices, doth referre a man for his safetie to the iudgement and resolution of the Catholicke church, not as they lewdly beare vs in hand, of the church of Rome, as if by it the Catholicke Church wereto be vnderstoode, but so as

^d that we hold that which hath bene deliuered euery where, and alwayes and of all: for this (saith he) is truly and properly Catholike, as the nature and signification of the worde declareth, which indeede comprehendeth vniuersally all. Hereto he frameth those rules of antiquitie, vniuersalitie and consent, idly bragged of many times by the Papists,

^b Duplici modo fidem manire: primo diuina legum auctoritate tum deinde Ecclesia Catholica traditione.

^c Ibid. Non quia canon solus non sufficit ad vniuersa sufficiat, sed quia verba diuina plerique pro suo arbitratu interpretantes, varias opiniones errorisque concipiunt.

^d Et id teneamus quo d' ubiq, quod semper, quod a omnibus creditum est, hoc est etenim verè propriè, Catholicum, quod ipsa vniuersalitate, declarata, qua omnia verè vniuersaliter comprehendunt.

when as according to the declarations of Vincentius they are not able to make good any one point of their doctrine oppugned by vs, but in diuers and sundry points are conuicted thereby. But the matter that toucheth M. Bishop very neerely, is the restraint and limitation of this rule, which he saith is not to be followed in all questions of the word of God, but onely or chiefly in the rule of faith, whereby he meaneth those things that concerne the articles of the Creed: in those questions, as he repeateth afterwards, upon which the foundations of the whole Catholike faith doe rest. It is vntrue then which M. Bishop saith, that Vincentius holdeth no heresie to bee suppressed or confuted but by the tradition of the Catholike Church, when as he applieth his rule only or at least chiefly to those heresies which touch the maine pillars & foundations of Christian faith, And it is yet further vntrue because Vincentius further addeth, that neither alwayes nor yet all heresies are to bee impugned in that sort, but onely those that are new and fresh, namely when as they first spring vpper, before they haue falsified the rules of auncient faith, and are therein hindered by the straitnesse of the time, and before (the poison spreading further abroad) they labour to corrupt the bookes of the auncient Fathers. But heresies that are far spread and are growne old, are not to bee set vpon in this sort, because by long tract and continuance of time they haue had great opportunitie to steale the truth. And therefore as touching all prophane heresies and schismes that are growne old, we are in no sort to doe otherwise, but either to conuince them, if need bee, by onely authoritie of scripture, or else to auoyd them, being aunciently conuicted and condemned by generall Councils of catholicke Bishops. Where wee see that Vincentius affirmeth directly contrary to that that M. Bishop reporteth of him, that heresies are not alwayes to be dealt with by those rules that he hath before set downe, yea and that heresies that haue continued long, & haue bene farre spreade, are no otherwise to bee conuicted but by onely authoritie of Scripture. And thereof he giueth reason, for that they haue hadde time and opportunitie to falsifie the rules of faith, and to corrupt the bookes and writings of the auncient Fathers, which heretickes alwayes labour to doe, so that the doctrine of faith cannot safely bee icoparded vpon their consent. Nowe whatfoeuer

• Qua tamen antiqua sanctorum Patrum consensio non in omnibus diuina legu quasiunculis sed solum certè praecipuè in fidei regula magno nobis studio & inuestiganda & sequenda est. In ijs duntaxat praecipue quaestionibus quibus totius Catholici dogmatis fundamenta nituntur.

• Sed neque semper neque omnes haereses hoc modo impugnanda sunt sed nouae recenteseque tantummodo, cum primum scilicet exoriantur antequam infarsint vetustèe fidei regulas: ipsius temporu ventur angustijs: ac priusquam manante latius veneno, maiorum volumina vitare conentur. Caterum si dilatata & inueterata haereses nequaquam hac via aggredienda sunt, eo quod prolixo temporum tractu longa ijs seruanda veritas u patuerit occasio. Atque indeo quascunque illas antiquiores vel schismaticum vel haeresion prophanas nullo modo nos oportet nisi aut

• Sola, si opus est, scripturae authoritate conuincere: ut certè tam antiquis uniuersalibus auctoritatibus Catholice Concilij conuictas damnatasque vitare.

M. Bishop and his fellowes dreame of this booke, this rule dooth so fit vs, as if Vincentius had purposely studied to instruct vs in what sort we ought to deale against them, and to iustifie the course that we haue vsed in that behalfe. Antichrist hath set vp his kingdome aloft in the Church, and the whoore of Babylon hath sitten like a Queene for many ages past. She hath fulfilled that that was prophesied of her, that ^h she should make all nations to drinke of the wine of the wrath of her fornications. ⁱ The kings of the earth haue committed fornication with her, and the inhabitants of the earth haue bene drunke with the wine of her fornications. She hath had ^k an armie of Priestes, according to the saying of Gregoric, an armie of Monkes and Friers, of Schoolemen and Canonists, who haue bin her agents and factors for the vtering of her merchandize and the vpholding of her state. They haue vsed their endeouour to the vttermost for the corrupting^l of the auncient monuments of the church. They haue made away many of the writings of the Fathers, they haue falsified those that remaine, they haue foisted in barstards and counterfeits vnder their names. Most lewdly and shamefully ^m they haue fathered vpon Origen, Hierom, Cyprian, Austin (& the rest) such things as they neuer dreamed of, unworthy not only of their conceit and learning, but euen of their slaues, if they had any, that were Scythians and Barbarians. By the meanes of such renowned authors they haue sought to gaine credite to deuices of their owne, such as the auncient Church was neuer acquainted with. Nowe therefore Vincentius his rule standeth good on our part, that inasmuch as they haue had so long time and oportunitie to steale away the truth, and to falsifie the Fathers writings, therefore wee are to conuict them by authoritie of Scripture onely, knowing it to bee true which Chrysostome saith, that ⁿ since heresies haue gotten foote in the Church, there is no prooffe of true Christianitie, nor other refuge for Christians desirous to knowe the truth of faith, but onely the Scriptures of GOD: no way for them that are desirous to knowe which is the true church of christ, but onely by the Scriptures. Our Lord (saith he) knowing that there should bee so great confusion of thinges in the last dayes, dooth

h Apoc. 14.8.
i Chap. 17.2.
k Gregor. lib. 4.
epist. 38. Rex super bia propé est &
quod dicitur est,
sacerdotum est pra
paratus exercitus.
&c.

l Erasmi. Epist. ad Varram Arch
episc Cantuar. apud Hieron.
m Ludou. Viues de caus. corrupt. ort.
Adscripti sunt O-
rigeni, Cypriano, Hieronymo, Augustino quae ipsi nunquam ne per quietem quidem
in mentem venerunt indignant non solum
tantis ingenij atq;
illa traditione, sed
etiam seruicorum
siquos Scythas habuerunt aut Seres.

n Chrysost. oper.
imperf in Math.
hom. 49. Ex quo
haeresis obtinuit Ecclesiam nulla pro-
bit. e potest esse vera Christianitati,
neque resurgit po-
tessit esse Christianorum alius volen-
tium cognoscere si-
deu veritatem nisi
seriptura divina,
&c. Nullomodo cognoscitur velen-
tibus cognoscere qua
sit vera Ecclesia

Christi, nisi tantummodo per Scripturas, &c. Siens Dominus tantam confusionem rerum in nouissimis diebus esse futuram, ideo mandat ut Christiani volentes firmitatem accipere fidei verae ad nuquam rem fugiant, nisi ad Scripturas. Aliqui si ad alia respexerint, scandalizabuntur & peribunt, non intelligentes quae sit vera Ecclesia & per hoc incident in abhominationem desolationis quae stabit in sancta Ecclesia loci.

therefore will that christians desirous to receive assurance of true faith should flie to nothing but onely to the Scriptures. Otherwise if they look to any thing else, they shall stumble and perish, not understanding which is the true church, and thereby shall light upon the abomination of desolation which shall stand in the holy places of the church. Now therefore wee haue done nothing but that that in the course of Christianitie is iust and right, to call the triall of the controuersies and questions of religion to the authoritie of the Scriptures onely, and to teach men therein onely to repose the certaintie and assurance of their faith. Albeit by the singular prouidence of almighty God it hath come to passe, that in antiquitie, as wee haue the same remaining vnto vs, there is yet light sufficient to discouer the apostasies and abominations of the Church of Rome, to iustifie the truth of God against their fallshood and lies, and to make it appeare that wee doe rightly and truely apply the Scriptures to the reproouing and conuincing thereof, as through this whole worke is most plainly and cleerely to bee seene. And this is so much the more manifest for that they themselues haue bene forced to complaine that they are faine

o Index Expur.
in castig. Bertram
Cum in Catholicis
veteribus alijs plu-
rimos feramus erro-
res & extenuemus
excusemus, excogi-
tato commento
per sepe negemus et commodum ijs
sensu m affingamus
dum opponuntur
in disputationibus aut in consuetioni-
bus cum aduersarijis, &c.

to beare with very many errors (as they call them) in the old Catho- like writers, and to extenuate them, to excuse them, by some devised shift to deuse them, and to set some conuenient meaning on them, when they are opposed in disputation or in conflicts with their aduersaries. In many questions we shew the antiquitie, the vniuersalitie, the vni- forme consent and agreement of the auncient Church for vs and against them, and it is itrange to see what poore and miserable shifts, yea what impudent and shamelesse deuices they are driuen to, and yet cannot auaille to suppress the light thereof. In a woorde, it is plainly found that they haue no cause to bragge of Vincencius Lyri- nensis, either as doing damage to vs, or yeelding any gain or ad- uantage to themselues.

14. W. BISHOP.

Thus M. Perkins hauing ended with the Law and Testimony, addeth in a postscript two other slender reasons to his former: the first, that christe and his Apostles used alwayes to confirme their doctrine with the testi- monies of Scriptures, and not with tradition.

Ans^w. First for our Saviour Iesus Christ, he out of his diuine wisdom deliuered delivered his doctrine most commonly in his owne name, But I say vnto you: and very seldome confirmeth it with any testimony out of the Law. The Euangelistes doe often note how Christe fulfilled the old prophecies: but neuer or very seldome seeke to confirme his doctrine by testimonies: their owne they do sometimes: but to say they neuer wrote any thing out of tradition, procedes of most grosse ignorance. Where had S. Mathew the adoring of the Sages? S. Iohn Baptists preaching? briefly, that was done before his owne conuersion, but by tradition. S. Marke wrote the most part of his Gospell out of Tradition receiued from Peter, as witnesseth Eusebius. S. Luke testifieth of himselfe, that he wrote his whole Gospell as hee hadde receiued it by tradition from them who were eye-witnesses. What desperate carelesnesse was it then to affirme, that the Apostles neuer vsed tradition to confirme any doctrine? when some of them built, not onely parcels, but their whole Gospels vpon traditions?

* Lib. 2. hist. cap
14.
* Cap. 1.

R. ABBOT.

The reasons seeme slender to M. Bishop, but yet the Reader must needs take them to bee very strong, in that they are put off with so slender and weake an answer. If the doctrine of faith and of the seruice of God had stood in the old testament in any part vpon tradition, vndoubtedly our Sauour Christ would haue made some mention thereof: and as he often referreth himselfe to the scriptures so would sometimes haue appealed to tradition also. But that doth he neuer: he reprobeth traditions and condemneth them, but neuer vseth one word to approue any. M. Bishop answereth, that Christ most commonly deliuereth his doctrine in his owne name (I say vnto you) and very seldome confirmeth it out of the Law. But that is a very weake and silly shift, yea there is in it apparent and manifest vnruth. For we find our Sauour in the gospell more often citing and alledging the Scriptures, then we heare him saying, I say vnto you, as euery Reader may obserue. Againe, where he doth say, I say vnto you, hee teacheth vs to vnderstand that^a he speaketh not of himselfe, but what hee saith, hee speaketh as Chrysostome before hath taught vs to construe it^b out of the Law and the Prophets; according to the written word of the Law and the Prophets, deliivering no poynt of doctrine but what hath witness and confirmation from thence. Thirdly, it is much to bee obserued against M. Bishop, that where our Sauour doth

^a Iohn. 14. 10.

^b Chrysost. Supra. fil. 7.

doth most often vse those words, ^c I say vnto you, hee vseth them to challenge the written law from the corruption of tradition, and to affirme the originall truth therof. For tradition had taught men to vnderstand the law literally only & of outward actions, but he shews in the commandements ^d of murder and adultery, that the intentiō of the Lawe is extended to the affections of the heart. Tradition had diminished the integritie of the Lawe, and taken from it, ^e teaching onely not to forswear: but he teacheth that the truth of the Law extendeth to vaine and idle swearing, Tradition had added to the Lawe of it owne deuce, and where God had saide, Thou shalt loue thy neighbour, by a corrupt glose put to it, Thou shalt hate thine enemy: but hee teacheth that the name of ^f a neighbour reacheth to them also that are our enemies. Thus hee rectifieth that which tradition had made crooked, but for tradition he saith nothing. Surely they that thus peruerted the written Lawe, would haue peruerted traditions also, if there had bene any: and Christ would haue restored the integritie thereof, but there is no surmise giuen vs of any such matter. We heare him often saying, ^g Haue ye not read? and ^h It is written, and ⁱ What is written in the law, how readest thou? but wee neuer heare him saying, Haue yee not thus receiued by tradition? He telleth the Sadduces, ^k Ye erre, because ye know not the Scriptures: and the cause of the Disciples error was noted, ^l As yet they knew not the Scripture: but no where doth hee note the not knowing of tradition for any cause of errour. He saith, ^m Search the Scriptures they testifie of me, but he neuer saith, search after Traditions, they are they that testifie of me. ⁿ How then should the Scriptures be fulfilled, saith he, but neuer mentioneth the fulfilling of any thing that was delivered by tradition. ^o He interpreted to his Disciples in all Scriptures the things which were written of him, but out of tradition hee interpreted nothing vn to them. ^p He opened their vnderstanding that they might vnderstand the Scriptures, but wee reade not of giuing them vnderstanding of traditions. Thus the Euangelistes from place to place, vpon diuers occasions doe set downe ^q the fulfilling of those things which were spoken by the Prophets mentioning the things which are written, but neuer once speake of the fulfilling of tradition. And what? will M. Bishop haue vs to dreame asidely as hee doth, that there were traditions from God beside the Scriptures, when wee find these infinit references to the Scriptures, and to traditions

c Mat. 5. 18. 20.

d Ver. 21. 28.

e Ver. 34.

f Ver. 44.

g Mat. 19. 4.

h Cap. 21. 13.

i Luke. 10. 26.

k Ma 22. 29.

l John. 20. 9.

m John. 5. 39.

n Mat. 26. 54.

o Luke. 24. 27.

p Ver. 45.

q Mat. 1. 22.

& 2. 17. & c.

ditions none at all? He telleth vs a childish tale, that the Euangelistes very seldom confirm Christes doctrine by testimonies, but their owne they doe sometimes, as if the doctrine of the Euangelistes were not the doctrine of Christ: and shewing that hee is little acquainted with the reading of the Euangelistes, who maketh that very seldom which is so often done. And when it is done, it is done by Scripture onely, neuer by traditions: which is the point whereto he shuld haue answered, and he saith nothing to it. Onely he lewdly abuseth the ignorant Reader, by seeming to say somewhat, when that which he saith is but an impertinent vagary, and concerneth not that that is objected to him. To say that they neuer wrote any thing out of tradition (saith he) proceedeth of most grosse ignorance. Where had Mathew the adoring of the Sages? &c. Pelting brabler, what is this to that that M. Perkins saith? Christ and his Apostles in infinite places confirm that which they preach by the doctrine of former times: they signifie, the fulfilling of those things which were of old taught vnto the people of God. They neuer confirm any thing but by Scripture, they mention nothing fulfilled that was taught by tradition but onely by Scripture. Tell vs M. Bishop how could this be, if there were tradition beside the Scripture? We aske you not whence the Euangelistes had the history of those times whereof they wrote, but how it commeth to passe that they neuer mention any thing delivered by tradition in former times? But these are the juggling tricks of shifting companions, deluding the eyes of the simple with shadows and empty colours, maliciously oppugning the truth when as they haue nothing to say against it. In that that we say, is nothing but what S. Hierom said long ago, Whatsoeuer the Apostles preached in the Gospell, they preached it by the words of the law and the Prophets: whereof it followeth against M. Bishop, that they taught no doctrine by tradition, but onely by the scriptures. As for his questions, where he demaundeth where S. Mathew had the adoring of the Sages and John Baptists preaching, &c. I answer him first with the like question where had Moses the story of the creation of the worlde, and the knowledge of those things which God in sundry places is brought in speaking as with himselfe? I suppose he will answer, that he receiued the same from him that made the world, from him that was the author of those speeches. So say we that Math. w learned the worshipping of christe by the Sages of christe himselfe whom they worshipped.

afficien in Mat.
13. Quicquid in Euangelio pradicabant, ego & prophetarum uoc-
bus comprobauit.

* Gen. 11. 6. &
16. 17. 20.

shipped: he learned John Baptists preaching of him whom John Baptist preached. He learned his Gospell as Paul did, who saith of himself, Neither received I it of man, neither was I taught it but by the revelation of Iesus Chr st. As touching the Gospell of S. Marke, Eusebius reporteth, that the faithfull who had heard the preaching of S. Peter, not thinking that sufficient, nor contented with the doctrine of that diuine preaching vnwritten, most earnestly intreated Marke that hee would leaue them in writing the commentaries or records of the doctrine which they had deliuered vnto them by word, and ceased not till they had perswaded him thereto. Now they say (saith he) that the Apostle when hee vnderstood this to haue bene done by the instinct of the holy Ghost, ioyed much in the desire of those men, and by his authoritie warranted this Gospell in writing to the reading of the Church. Now this story is well worthy to be obserued. The faithfull had heard the preaching of Peter: they thought tradition to be a very vncertaine keeper of the doctrine which they hadde heard: the desire to haue the same left vnto them in writing, to that purpose they intreate Marke the scholar and follower of Peter: the thing is done by the instinct of the holy Ghost: Peter acknowledgeth so much, and by his testimonie approueth the Gospell thus written to the reading of the Church. Who would not here wonder that M. Bishop should alleadge this story for patronage of his traditions, which shewes that the Church from the beginning was so ielous and fearefull of resting vpon tradition? S. Luke wrote his storie^u as they deliuered who from the beginning were eye-witnesses and ministers of the word, they^x in whom Christ spake, and whose word was^y the word of God, the word of the preaching of God. Yea and what hee wrote, hee wrote also as S. Marke did by the instinct of the holy Ghost, because as S. Paul. telleth vs, ^z all scripture is given by inspiration of God: and as of prophecie, so of the Gospell also we must vnderstand that^a it came not by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moued by the holy Ghost.^b When the disciples wrote (saith S. Austin what Christe shewed and said vnto the, it is not to be said that he did not write because the members wrote that which they learned by the inditing of the head. For what soeuer hee would haue vs to reade of the things which hee did and saide, hee gaue in charge to them as of his handes to write the same. Now therefore the

1 Gal. 1. 1.

t Euseb. hi. 7. lib. 2. cap. 17. Non suffecerant illis seruari aulita, nec conuerti fuerunt non scripta diuinae praedicationis doctrina, sed Marcum omnigena obseruatione obtinuerunt ut commentarios ipsius doctrinae eius quam verbo tradideram accepissent literis comprehensos relinquerent, nec desisterunt donec viro persuaserint, &c. Aient autem Petrum cum ex instinctu spiritus sancti factum hoc cognouisset, delectatum esse virorum istorum voluntate & scriptum hoc Evangelium Ecclesie ad legendum auctoritate sua confirmasse.

a Luke, 1. 2.

x 2. Cor. 13. 3.

y 1. Thess. 2. 11.

z 2. Tim. 3. 16

a 1. Pet. 1. 1.

b August. de consens. Euangel. lib. 1. cap. 35. Cum illi scriperunt quae ille ostendit & dixit nequaquam dicendum est quod ipse non scriperit, quandoquidem membra eius id operata sunt quod dictante capite conuenerunt. Quicquid enim ille de sancti facti & dicti nos legere voluit, hoc scribendum illi tanquam suis manibus imperauit.

Euangelistes grounded not their Gospels vpon traditions, that is, vpon report from man to man, but vpon the immediate oracle and instinct of God himselfe. But the absurd Sophister dallieth by an equiuocation of the word tradition, and whereas it is questioned betwixt vs in one meaning, hee bringeth proote for it in another meaning. The word originally may import any thing that is deliuered howsoeuer either by woorde or writing. Whatsoeuer God saith vnto vs, it may in this sort be called Gods tradition, because he hath so deliuered vnto vs. This doth Cyprian call that which wee reade in the written gossell, the originall of the Lords traditison, and willeth in the Lords cup to keepe the truth of the Lords tradition. Thus whatsoeuer wee haue receiued in the Scriptures was first tradition as deliuered by woorde, and still is tradition because it is deliuered in writing, tradition signifying whatsoeuer is deliuered, as before was sayd. But though the word in it selfe haue this generall and indifferent signification of any thing that is deliuered, yet in our disputation it is restrained to one onely manner of deliuering, by word and relation onely, and not by Scripture: and therefore where Irenaeus saith,^d Euangelium nobis in Scripturis tradiderunt, he that should translate as M. Bishop doth, they deliuered the Gossell by tradition in the Scriptures, should shew himselfe as absurd a man as M. Bishop is because hee set teth downe two opposite members of a distinction, and confoundeth them both in one. Now then the question is not in the generall signification, whether the Gossell were a tradition, that is, a thing deliuered from God, or whether it were a tradition by word, that is, a thing deliuered by word, but whether of that traditiō that is of that doctrine deliuered from God by word, any part were left vnwritten to goe thenceforth vnder the name of vnwritten tradition. Wee denie not but that the whole Law and Gossell is the Lords tradition: we denie not but that the Euangelistes in the historie of Christe hadde things first deliuered vnto them by woorde which they should afterwarde committe to writing, although in the writing thereof inspired of God, the holy Ghost bringing all things to their remembrance, and guiding them in what sort they should set them downe: but we denie that eyther in the Law, or in the Gossell there was any thing left vnwritten that concerneth vs to know for attaining of true faith and righteousnesse towards God. To come now to the point, howsoeuer the Euangelists built their Gospels vpon tradition, that is, vpon that that was then deliuered vnto them, whether by Christe or his Apostles, yet what is this to prooue that they confirmed any doctrine, that is, any part of this tradition now deliuered vnto them, by tradition of former times, that is, by any doctrine left vnwritten by Moses and the Prophets? This was the matter in hand, why then doth M. Bishop seeke thus in a cloud to steale away? He telleth vs of desperate carelesnesse, thinking to carry the matter with desperate words, but we must tell him, that it is desperate trechery in him thus to mocke his Reader with boisterous babling, when hee saith nothing to prooue that that he should, that either the Apostles prooued any doctrine by vnwritten tradition of the old testament, or left any thing to be prooued by vnwritten tradition in the new.

^c Cyprian. lib. 3. epist. 7. Ad radicem atque originem traditionis Domini reuertatur. In calice dominico offerendo custodire traditionis dominice veritatem.

^d Iren lib. 3. c. ap. 1.

^e Iohn. 14. 26.

15. W. BISHOP.

His other reason is, that if we beleene vnwritten traditions were necessary to saluation, then we must as well beleene the writings of the auncient Fathers as the writings of the Apostles: because Apostolicall traditions are not elsewhere to be found but in their bookes: but that were absurd, for they might erre.

Answer. That doth not follow for three causes, First, Apostolicall traditions are as well kept in the mind of the learned, as in the auncient fathers writings, and therefore haue more credit then the Fathers writings. Secondly, they are commonly recorded of more then one of the Fathers, and so haue firmer testimonie then any one of their writings. Thirdly, if there should be any Apostolicall tradition related but of one auncient Father, yet it should be of more credit then any other thing of his owne inuention, because that was registred by him as a thing of more estimation. And againe, some of the rest of those blessed and godly personages would haue reprinted it as they did all other falsehoods, if it had not bin such indeed as it was termed: which when they did not, they gaue a secret approbation of it for such, and so that hath the interpretatiue consent at least of the learned of that age, and the following for Apostolicall tradition.

*But Master Perkins proues the contrary by Saint Paul, who saith, * That I continue to this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying no other thing then that which the Prophets and Moses did say should come. Why make you here a full poynnt: let Saint Paule* make

make an end of his speech and tell us for what points of doctrine he alledgeth Moses and the Prophets: *Marrie to proue that Christ should suffer death, and rise againe, and that he should giue light to the Gentiles. For these and such like, which were evidently fore-told in holy writ, he neede not to alledge any other prooffe: but when he was to perswade them to abandon Moses Law, hee then deliuered to them the decrees of the Apostles, and taught them to keepe them: * As also* * A.B. 16.
*when he instructed the Corinthians in the Sacrament of the Altar, hee begineth with tradition, saying, * I deliuer vnto you as I haue receiued from our Lord, not in writing, but by word of mouth. And in the same Chapter putteth downe the contentious Scripturist, with the custome of the Church, saying. If any man lust to strue, we haue no such custome: so that out of S. Paul, wee learne to alledge Scriptures, when they be plaine for vs, and when they beare not so cleare with vs, to pleade Tradition, and the custome of the Church.* * I. Cor. 11.

R. ABBOT.

It is strange to see how M. Bishop hath slubbered ouer this matter, being of so great moment and importance for the authoritie and credit of their traditions. They tell vs that traditions vnwritten, are a part of the word of God. The councell of Trent professeth ^a to receiue them with the like affection of pietie and reuerence, as they do the holy Scripture. Now wee desire to know by what testimonie or warrant we may be secured particularly what these traditions are; for if they be alike to be esteemed with those things that are contained in the Scriptures there is a reason that they be approved vnto vs by testimoniall & witnessse equiualent to the Scriptures. If then the writings of the auncient fathers be made the witnesses of these traditions, wee must beleeue the writings of the auncient fathers, as well as wee beleeue the Scriptures. M. Bishop telleth vs that traditions are as well kept in the mindes of the learned, as in the auncient fathers writings and therefore haue more credit then the fathers writings. So then belike the mindes of the learned, together with the writings of the auncient fathers, are of equall credit and authoritie with the Scriptures, and if Maister Perkins had put in both these, then Maister Bishop had not had a word to say. But a Concil. Trident.

 ses. 4. cap. 1. Pars
 pietatis affectu
 ac reuerentia suscipit &c.

wee must yet aske further, whence or vpon what ground doe the mindes of the learned accept of these traditions. If hee will say, that they receiue them of the fathers, then the argument still standeth good. If he say that they receiue them of other learned that were before them, then it must be said that they also receiued them from other learned that were before them, and so vpward till wee come to the fathers, and so in fine it must fall out, that the fathers must bee alike beleeued as the holy Scriptures. If M. Bishop be ashamed to say so, let him tell vs otherwise what it is that we shall certainly rest vpon. But alas good man, we see he cannot tell what to say; only Bellarmino telleth vs, that ^b the assured certainty of all counsels & of al doctrynes, of faith, dependeth vpon the authority of the present Church. Now then the testimony of the present Church, is made of equall & like authority with the holy Scriptures, and Bellarmino is in as pitifull a case as M. Bishop is. For the testimonie of the present Church, what is it but the testimony of the learned of the present Church & therefore now the mindes of the learned are as good an oracle of truth as the Scriptures are. If this be not so, let vs heare from M. Bishop what else is to be said hereof: for if traditions be to be receiued with like deuotion & reuerence, as those things that we are taught in Scripture, then there must be somewhat or other to commend the same vnto vs with the like authority as the Scripture doth the rest, and what that is we are desirous to vnderstand. Now M. Bishop addeth two further exceptions against M. Perkins argument, and they are such wise ones, as that we may very well think them to be his own. Secondly, saith he, they are commonly recorded of more then one of the fathers, and so haue firmer testimonie then any one of their writings But what is this to M. Perkins his speech, which is not restrained to any one of the fathers writings, but taketh them iointly and inferreth it as an absurdity, that the writings of the fathers being taken all together, should be made equall in credit to the holy Scriptures. Thirdly saith he, a tradition being related but by one auuncient father, yet should be of more credit then any other of his owne inuention, because that was registred by him as a matter of more estimation. But what idle babbling is this? what maketh this to the clearing of the point in question? He will haue vs to receiue traditions with the like pietie and reuerence, as wee doe those things that wee are instructed by the Scripture. Hee putteth a case of tradition, reported by

^b Bellarm. de sacram. lib. 2 ca. 25. Omnium conciliorum veterum & omnium dogmatum firmitas ab auctoritate presentis ecclesie dependet.

by one onely of the fathers . He should hereupon haue answered how wee can in that sort admit of such a tradition as Apostolicall, but by yeelding the like credit to that one Father as we do to the hely Scriptures, But I see like a man in a wood, that knoweth not which way he is to goe, telleth vs that this tradition is of more credit then any other of his owne inuention, because it was registred by him as a matter of more estimation. O the sharpe wits of these Romish Doctours, that can diue so deepe into matters, and talke so profoundly, that they themselues vnderstand not what they say. To a little purpose is that which he addeth, that if that tradition were not as it was termed, some of the rest of the fathers would haue reproued it, which when they did not, they gaue it their interpretatiue consent to be Apostolicall tradition. But let the consent bee either interpretatiue or expresse: what is this against the consequence of the argument which he taketh vpon him to answer, that if we must receiue traditions in that sort as they require vs, and haue no wher to ground them but vpon the testimony of the fathers, then wee must giue as much credit to the testimonie of the fathers, as wee do to the holy Scriptures. I am forced thus odiously to inculcate the matter in question, to make the ridiculous folly of this wrangler the more plainly to appeare, who hauing nothing to say, yet bath not so much wit as to hold his peace. In this simplicitie hee goeth forward to answer the place of the Acts, where Saint Paule is brought in saying, I continue to this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying no other things then those which the Prophets and Moses did say should come. In which words it is plaine, that the Apostle protested in the preaching of the Gospell, to say nothing without the compasse of those things which had beene before spoken by Moses and the Prophets. M. Bishop answereth, that hee meaneth onely of those things which hee addeth, That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, &c. For these things, saith hee, evidently foretold in hely writ, he needed not to alleadge any other prooffe. Yea but what other prooffe doth he vse for any other doctrine? Forsooth when he was to perswade them to abandon Moses law, he then deliuered to them the decrees of the Apostles, & taught them to keepe them. Yea, but Paul preached a long while before those decrees of the Apostles were made, as appeareth frō his conuersion in the ninth Chapter, to the fiftenth Chapter, where

c. Acts. 16. 2.

* ὅτι ἐν ἐκείνῃ
λέγων ὅτι τε
οἱ προφῆται ἐλάλησαν. &c

d Rom. 16. 16

e Acts. 13. 23.

those decrees are made : and all this while what other prooffe did he vse, but onely the Scriptures of Moses and the Prophets ? Doe we not thinke that this man hath woonderfully hardned both his heart to God, and his face to men, that can apply himselfe to write in this sort ? He well knoweth that the question is not here of new decrees, but of old traditions, what prooffe the Apostle had, or what ground of doctrine from the old testament, but onely the Scriptures of the law and the Prophets ? The Apostle himselfe saith, he had no other; he taught nothing, but according to the written bookes of the old testament, according to that which elsewhere he saith, that^d the Gospell was published amongst all nations, by the Scriptures of the Prophets. For a summarie brieft thereof, he nameth the suffering and resurrection of Christ, &c. but he that saith that herewith he preached any thing but what was warranted by Moses and the Prophets, maketh him to dally and to speake a manifest vntruth, in that he saith that he spake nothing without the compasse of those thinges which Moses and the Prophets prophesied before. Now the wise man for instance against this telleth vs, that he deliuered the decrees of the Apostles, and taught them to keepe them. Which beside that it is nothing to the purpose, as hath bene said, doth also set forth his notable fillinesse and folly, in that for prooffe of traditions and doctrines vnwritten, he bringeth the example of the Apostles decrees, which are expressely mentioned to haue bene sent to the Churches in writing, They wrote letters by them after this manner, &c. But in the height of his wisdom, he goeth forward to proue the same by another speech, When he instructed the Corinthians in the Sacrament of the Altar, he beginneth with traditions, saying, I deliuer vnto you as I haue receiued from our Lord, not in writing but by word of mouth. Surely the mans head was wonderfull quaiſie in the writing hereof, or els we must thinke that he was in some traunce. I deliuer vnto you not in writing but by worde of mouth, when notwithstanding in his Epistle, he sendeth it to them in writing. Or what, doth he meane that the Apostle receiued it of our Lord, not in writing, but by word of mouth ? But what is that to the purpose, when he deliuered the same here by writing, and not by word of mouth ? He had heard there was some text or other there for his purpose, but neither did he well know it, nor had leisure to seeke it out. The words of the Apostle are these, I haue receiued

receiued of the Lord that which I haue also deliuered vnto you. Nowe we conceiue M. Bishop meaning; though his vnderstanding being very muddie, failed him so exceedingly in the expressing of it. The Apostle forsooth giueth to vnderstand, that he first deliuered vnto them the institution of the Lords supper. not in writing, but by word of mouth. And what of that? Doth it therefore follow, that by tradition of the old testament the Apostle proued any doctrine of the new? If this do not follow, his allegation is brute and bootlesse, and he shooteth wholly beside the marke. The Apostle professeth to haue deliuered what he receiued of the Lord; but what he receiued of the Lord, was according to the Scriptures of Moses and the Prophets. For the outward signes of the Sacrament were prefigured in Melchisedeck, bringing forth ^h bread & wine for the corporall refection of Abrahams armie, as the heavenly Melchisedeck should bring forth bread and wine for the spirituall refection and comfort of the sonnes of Abraham. As for the doctrine and faith imported by these signes, it is no other but what M. Bishop himselfe confesseth to haue bene evidently foretold in ho'y writ, namely that Christ should die for our sinnes, and should rise againe from the dead, to become a light and saluation vnto vs, the Apostle himselfe instructing vs the end thereof to be ^g to shew the Lords death ^g I. Cor. II. 26. ill he come. Here was then no neede to flie to vnwritten tradition, but of this institution the Apostles words stand good, that he said nothing but what the Prophets and Moses did say should come. And thus the fathers, and namely ^h Tertullian, to shew against the Marcionites, that there is but one God of the old and new testament, & not two Gods aduerse one to the other, as thole hereticke blasphemously affirmed, do set downe the accord of the Scriptures of the new testament with the olde, and the fulfilling of the one in the other, but of traditions in the new testament according with traditions in the old, they neuer spake a word, which yet in that cause had bene very needefull, if there had bene any such. But M. Bishop being like the Lynx turning about and forgetting what hee was feeding vpon, will tell vs perhaps, that whatsoeuer he had in hand, his meaning in the alledging of this place, was simply to proue the Apostles approving of traditions. And if he tell vs so, surely we will not denie, but that it is indecde full simply done. The Apostle saith that he first deliuered the institution of the Sacrament by word of mouth. What must we therefore thinke that it was not afterwards committed to writing? The contrary appeareth, in that we see it here written by himselfe. What is there here then to hinder, but that as the Sacrament first deliuered by word, was afterwards committed to writing so all other points of Christian doctrine & faith, though deliuered at first by word and preaching, yet were afterwards set downe in writing, and deliuered vnto vs in the Scriptures? And if nothing hinder, as indeede there doth not, then let him vnderstand that this place is very simply and impertinently brought for traditions vnwritten. To fill vp the measure of his folly, he telleth vs yet further, that the Apostle in the same Chapter putteth downe the contentious Scripturist, with the custome of the Church, saying, if any man lust to strinze, we haue no such custome. Where a man might oppose him very hard, if hee should aske him why those words of the Apostle doe not belong to the Traditionist, as well as to the Scripturist. We know his dreames are very strong, but otherwise why hee should apply these wordes to the Scripturist, hee himselfe cannot well tell. Againe it would be knowne of him what custome the Apostle affirmeth here. We heare him saying, Wee haue no such custome, but we do not heare him saying, We haue a custome. And therefore M. Bishops alledging of these words in behalfe of customs of the Church, may well make vs thinke, that in the doing of it hee had the very same head on that hee is accustomed to haue, to say nothing that he was much distressed for traditions and customes, when hee tooke not to be contentious, to bee an vnwritten tradition and custome of the Church. So that his conclusion is like a body without either head or feete, wanting strength to carie him so farre as hee is desirous to go, and because the Apostles doctrine was neither according to vnwritten traditions nor customes, but according to the Scriptures onely, we learne that neither tradition nor custome, but Scripture onely must beare sway for directing and prescribing true faith and doctrine in the Church.

16. W. BISHOP.

Huberto I haue confuted what M. Perkins brought against Traditions. Now to that which he saith for them on our behalfe.

* 2. Thef. 2. 15.

*First saith he, the Catholicks alledge, * Where, the Apostle bids*
the

the Church to keepe the ordinances which he taught them, either by word of mouth, or by Epistle: Hence they gather that besides the written word, there be unwritten traditions that are necessary to be kept and obeyed.

M. Perkins Answer. It is likely that this Epistle to the Thessalonians was the first that ever Paul wrote to any Church: and then some things needfull to saluation might be deliuered by word of mouth: but that was afterwards written in some others of his Epistles.

Reply. Obserue first, that instead of Traditions (according to the Greeke and Latine words,) they translate * Ordinances: euer flying the word Tradition, where any thing is spoken in comendation of them. But if any thing sound against them, then thrust they in the worde Tradition, although the Greeke word beare it not. See for this their corruption, and many other, a learned Treatise, named. The Discouerie of fallie translations, penned by Maister Gregory Martin, a man most singularly conuersant in the Greeke and Hebrew tongues.

Secondly, is it not plaine dotage, to auouch that this second Epistle to the Thessalonians, was the first that ever hee wrote? Surely, if none of his other were written before it, yet his first to the same Church must needs haue bene written before it. But let vs giue the man leaue to dreame sometimes. To the point of the answer, that all was written after in some other of his Epistles, which before had been deliuered by word of mouth. How proueth M. Perkins that? the man hath such confidence in his owne word, that he goeth not once about to proue it. Good Sir, hold you not heere: that nothing is needfull to be beleueed, which is not written in the word? Shew vs then where it is written in the worde, that S. Paul wrote in his later Epistles, that which he taught by word of mouth before, or else by your owne rule it is not needfull to be leueed. But yet for a more full satisfaction of the indifferent Reader, I will set downe the opinions of some of the auuncientest and best Interpreters of this place of the Apostle, that we may see whether they thought that S. Paul committed all to writing, and left nothing by tradition.

Saint Chrysostome in his most learned and eloquent Commentaries vpon this text, concludeth thus: Here vpon it is manifest that the Apostles deliuered not all in their Epistles, but many things also vwritten: and those things are as well to be beleueed, as the written. Oecumenius and Theophylactus vpon that place teach the same.

* De Sp. ca. 17.

S. Basil speakeeth thus I hold it Apostolicall to perseuere in Traditions not written, for the Apostle saith, I commend you that ye are mindfull of my precepts: and; doe holde the traditions, euen as I deliuered them vnto you: and then all adgeth this text: Hold the traditions which you haue receiued of me either by Worde or Epistle.

* Lib. 4. De fide
cap. 17.

S. John Damascen accordeth with the former saying, * That the Apostles deliuered many things without writing, S. Paul doth testifie, when he writeth, Therefore brethren stand and hold the traditions which haue bene taught you eyther by worde of mouth or by Epistle. These holy and iudicious expositors of S. Paul, free from all partialitie, gather out of this text of his, that many things necessary to be beleued, euen vntill their daies remained unwritten, and were religiously obserued by Tradition: which throweth flat to the ground M. Perkins his false supposition (fenced with neither reason nor authority) that Saint Paul put in writing afterward all that hee had first taught by word of mouth.

* 2. Tim. 2.

Moreover Saint Paul immediately before his death in one of the last of his Epistles, commaundeth his deare disciple Timothie, * To commend vnto the faithfull, that which he heard of him by many witnessnes, and not that onely which he should finde written in some of his Epistles, or in the written Gospell.

R. ABBOT

Heere M. Bishop beginneth with the taxing of our translations, for that we do not say, stand fast and keepe the traditions, but stand fast and keepe the ordinances, or the instructions which ye haue bene taught, blaining vs for that we vse the word traditions, where any thing foundeth against them, but vterly reiect it where any thing is spoken in commendation of them. But the reason of our translating in that sort is iust any godly, because our translation maketh nothing against that tradition which the Apostle intendeth in the Greek, & excludeth the stumbling block that might lie in the way of the more simple Readers, by meanes that Popish abuse hath caused the word to sound to a meaning altogether contrary to the intent of the Apostle. Where the word tradition carieth the same sence wherein it is now vsed, we set it down: but where παράδοσις in Greek importeth not that which custome hath made the word tradition to sound in English, good reason is there that wee leaue the worde tradition, and take rather some other word that may come most nearely to the expressing of the Greeke, Tyrant of old time did signifie a King, till by the abuse of Kings the name grew opprobrious and hatefull, and is now vled to signifie a cruell and vsurping king. He therefore that should now translate tyrannus, a king, should be thought scarcely well to enioy his wits. Translations are alwaies to be framed according to the proprietie and vse of words then vsually receiued when they are done, and to doe otherwise cannot but breede mis-understanding of many thinges. And we would gladly know, why we may not aswell translate παρὰδόσεις, ordinances, or instructions, as their Latine interpreter translateth it ^a: præcepta, and they precepts in their English. Albeit for the auoyding of their cauill I would rather translate it, ^b Stand fast and keepe the things deliuered, which ye haue beene taught either by word or by our Epistle. But here M. Bishop referreth his Reader to a learned treatise as hee calleth it, named, The discouerie of false translations, penned by Gregory Martin, there to see somewhat for this corruption and many other. I would not wish the Reader to forbear to looke vpon that booke, onely I wish him withall to take knowledge of Doctor Fulkes answer to it, and he shall see a discouerie of a number of futilous and vaine cauillations heaped together in that discouerie. Gregorie Martin wrote his pretended discouerie to bee a bellowes to blow vp treason and insurrection against his Prince, but when he failed of his hope, and his calumniations were laid open, his heart neuer serued him to defend what hee had written, because howsoeuer some things there were that with some probabilitie hee might cauill at, yet in the most he was made so naked, that he knew not how to couer his owne shame. But hee is long since gone to his iudge, & hath learned what it is to fight against Gods truth. But to come to the matter in hand, M. Perkins cannot be excused of too much negligence in his answer to this place. Hee taketh the second Epistle to the Thessalonians to be the first, and by that meanes nameth that for very likely which is very vntrue, and so with mention of a bare likelihood passeth ouer the argument without giuing any good satisfaction to him that would require it. Thus it is true which the Poet saith, Aliquando bonus dormitat Homerus, and because M.

^a I. Cor. II. 2.

^b 1. Thess. 1. 15.

Bishop dreameth so often, hee must needes give him leave to dreame sometimes. To supply that wherein M. Perkins failed, we answer him that the traditions which the Apostle recommendeth to the Thessalonians, were no other but such as hee mentioneth to the Corinthians, according to the Scriptures. S. Ambrose maketh the effect of his exhortation to be this: ^c to warne them to stand fast, and to perseuere in the tradition of the Gospell. ^d The Gospell (as beefore hath bene noted out of the Apostles wordes) was promised before of God by his Prophets in the holy scriptures, and therefore was accordingly ^e preached by the scriptures of the Prophets. The storie saith, that Paule at his being at Thessalonica, ^f opened and declared by the scriptures, that it behooued Christ to suffer, and to rise againe from the dead, and that this was Iesus Christ, whom (saith hee) I preach unto you. Being driuen from thence to Berea by the courage of the Iewes he preached there also, and ^g they who receiued the woorde searched the scriptures dayly, whether those things (which they taught) were so: whereby it appeareth that the word which hee preached in both places, was no other but according to the Scriptures. Thus wee haue heard him beefore, saying, that ^h hee spake nothing beeside those things which Moses and the Prophets did say should be. Now all the doctrine of the Gospell that is set downe in the Scriptures of Moses and the Prophets, is fully contained in the Scriptures of the new testament. Seeing therefore the traditions, that is, those things which the Apostle deliuered to the Thessalonians, were wholly according to the Scriptures of Moses and the Prophets, it must necessarilie followe, that in the Scriptures of the newe testament the same are fully and perfectly contained, and so on both sides nowe can be no other but according to the Scriptures. Wee are out of doubt, that the Apostle preached to the Thessalonians the whole doctrine of the Gospell, which wee find set downe in writing by the Euangelistes, and by himselve & other the Apostles in their Epistles to other Churches. In his former Epistle to the Thessalonians hee did not set downe that whole doctrine which is written by them. Nowe wee cannot make question but that his meaning was to exhort them to perseuere in the whole: as in those things which hee expressed in his Epistle, so int he rest also which wee finde written by himselve and others. Therefore the traditions or things deliuered by woorae, haue a necessary and vndeniable construction

1. Cor. 15. 3. 4.

c Ambros. in. 1. Thess. cap. 2. In traditione Euan-gely standum ac perseuerandum monet.

d Rom. 1. 2.

e Cap. 16. 26.

f Act. 17. 2. 3

g Ver. 11

h Cap. 26. 22.

of all the rest of the written doctrine of the Gospell that is not set downe in that first Epistle to the Thessalonians. Our exposition then is irrefragable and infallible, that the Apostle by those words hath reference to those things which are written elsewhere, but Master Bishop hath no argument to euict that hee intended any thing that is written no where. Because therefore wee haue a meaning of the wordes whereof wee are certaine and sure, wee rest there, and list not to admit a further meaning whereof wee can haue no assurance. As for that which hee cauilleth of, whether Paul in his Epistles wrote all that hee preached by word, I answer him, that hee wrote the effect and vse of all, but not all whereof that vse is to be made; because many things are written by the Euangelists necessarie for the vse of Christian faith, which are not written in the Epistles of Saint Paul, though by him they were deliuered to the Churches to which hee preached. But though hee wrote not all that was needefull to be written, yet wee beleue the testimonie that hee hath giuen in that Epistle which hee wrote last, euen a little before his death, when almost al the bookes of the new Testament were now written, that the Scriptures are able to make a man wise vnto saluation, through the faith which is in Christ Iesus; and therefore that, what by him and others, there is so much written as concerneth vs to know for our instruction in the religion and faith of Iesus Christ. Now whereas M. Bishop to proue the contrarie, alleadgeth the expositions of some of the Fathers concerning those wordes of the Apostle to the Thessalonians, I may well answer him as Austine answered Hierome, pressing him in the like sort, with the names of sundry of the Fathers that were before them I s'lie to Paul himselfe, to him I appeale from all expositors of his writings that thinke otherwise. Hee hath told vs, that the Scriptures are able to make vs wise vnto saluation, & therefore we do not beleue them that tell vs, that his meaning is in the other place, that we haue need of traditions beside the Scripture for supply of that wisdom; Yea and their collection as M. Bishop conceiueth of it, cannot stand good. It appeareth by those wordes of the Apostle, that he deliuered more to the Thessalonians by worde, then is contained in his former Epistle to the same, but it doth not therefore follow that he deliuered more vnto them then is contained in the Scriptures. No reason can there be deuised to make good this conexiō. But to examine thō

i 2.Tim.3.15.

*k Aug. Epist. 10
Ad ipsum confu-
gio: ad ipsum ab
omnibus enim aliter sentient literarum
eius tractatoribus
prouoco.*

1 Chrysoſt. in 2.
Theſſ. hom. 3. Omnia clara ſunt &
plana ex Scriptu-
ris diuini: quacun-
que neceſſaria
ſunt, manifeſta ſunt.

particularly, firſt wee may not thinke Chryſoſtome ſo forgetfull, as that he ſhould croſſe that which in the very next Homily before he hath ſaid: All things are cleare and euident by the holy ſcriptures: what ſo euer things are neceſſarie, they are manifeſt. Surely if any thing be to be cleared by tradition beſide the Scripture, then it cannot be ſaid that all neceſſarie things are manifeſt by the Scriptures. And therefore whereas he ſaith, Hereby it appeareth that the Apoſtles deliuered not all in their Epiſtles, but many things alſo unwritten, and both the one and the other are alike to be beleued, wee muſt vnderſtand it of that tradition which the Church holdeth collected and gathered from the Scriptures, though it bee not literally expreſſed therein. Thus the baptiſing of infants, and the not rebaptiſing of them that haue been baptizd by heretikes, and the adminiſtring of the Lords ſupper onely by the Miniſter and ſuch like, haue beene alwayes holden by the Church, and defended by the Scriptures, and yet they are no where literally contained in the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles. In ſuch things Chryſoſtome requireth a man to ſubmit himſelfe in peace to that which the Church practiſeth being grounded vpon the Scripture, and not contentiouſly to wrangle againſt it, becauſe it is not in very words contained therein. But if any tradition be vrged vpon vs that hath no ground or warrant from the Scripture, good reaſon we aſke, as Cyprian did of Stephanus, Whence is this tradition? Cometh it from the authoritie of Chriſt, or of the Goſpell, or from the inſtructions and Epiſtles of the Apoſtles? For God teſtifieth, that wee are to doe thoſe things which are written. Therefore if this tradition be commanded in the Goſpell, or in the Epiſtles or Acts of the Apoſtles, let it be obſerued and kept for holy.* Whereby he will haue it vnderſtood, that if it be not there warranted, it is not to be obſerued. The tradition which he there impugneſh is taught indeede by the Goſpel, though he conceiued not ſo, but here by he teacheth vs, that it was to ſtand for a certaine rule, that no tradition could be iuſtly approued without warrant of the Goſpell. And therefore Chryſoſtome himſelfe alſo teacheth vs other where, that if any thing bee ſpoken without ſcripture, the mind of the hearers goeth lame, but when out of the ſcriptures cometh the teſtimonie of the voyce of God, it confirmeth both the ſpeech of him that ſpeaketh, and the mind of him that heareth. Neither doth it ſufficiently giue this confirmation to alleadge generally, that the Scripture ſpeaketh of traditions, becauſe it is ſtill a m Cyprian. ad

Pomp. ſupra. Sect 5
* Si ergo aut in Euangelio praeſcribitur, aut Apoſtolorum Epiſtulis, aut Actibus, continetur, obſeruetur, et cer-
te hac ſancta tradi-
tio.

m Chryſoſt. in Pſal.
95. Si quid dicitur abſque Scripturis
auditorum cogita-
tio claudicat: ubi
verò ex Scripturis
diuina vocis prodijt
teſtimonium & lo-
quentis ſermonem & audientis ani-
mum confirmat.

queſtion,

question whether those be the traditions which the Scripture speaketh of, vnlesse by the Scripture it selfe they be iustified so to be To Chrysofom M. Bishop addeth Occumenius and Theophilaēt, but as they take their exposition out of Chrysofome, so in him they haue their answer. Next he bringeth in a sentence vnder the name of Basil, which is not onely suspected by Erasmus and others, but may by the place it selfe be well presumed to be none of his. There is good cause to thinke, that the Cuckow hath plaid her part, and laid her egges in Basil's nest: that some counterfeit to grace himselfe hath not sticked to disgrace him, by putting to him patcheries of his own deuice. To say nothing of the difference of style, and other arguments noted by Erasmus, we may obserue how he maketh Basil contrary to himselfe, not onely to those rules which hee hath giuen o-therwhere, but euen to the course which hee hath before professed in this booke, yea and maketh a seuerall question of that whereof Basil in the beginning of his booke seuerally propoundeth nothing. The matter as Basil declareth was this: ° that in his prayers in the Church for conclusion, hee would sometimes pronounce glory to God and the Father, with his sonne and the holy Ghost, and sometimes by the sonne in the holy Ghost. Some p affected as hee conceiueth to the heresie of Arius or Arius, blamed him for saying with the Sonne and the holy Ghost, affirming that seuerall termes should be vsed of the three Persons, of the Father, and by the Sonne, and in the holy Ghost, intending that in this diuersitie of phrases, a diuersitie of natures should be vnderstood. He sheweth that the heretikes borrowed this fancie q from the curiosities of vaine Philosophie, and propoundeth r that in the scriptures no such difference of those syllables is obserued. This he profecuteth s at large, and in the end propoundeth his aduersaries obiection: t that this manner of speaking, with the Sonne, was strange and vnusuall, but by the Sonne was familiar in the phrase of Scripture, and accust med with the brethren. He answereth, that u the church acknowledged the use of both those speeches, and did not reiect either of them, as if the one did ouerthrow the other. He affirmeth, that so many as did keepe the tradition of their auncestors without alteration in all countries and cities, did vse this speech. I therefore euen the very country clownes (saith hee) do so pronounce according to the manner of their forefathers. That then which hath bene sayd by our auncestors, we also say, that glory is commen to the o Basil de spir. Sanct. cap. 1. Glorificationem ab- soluens Deo ac Patri. interdum cum filio i. i. i. ac Spiritu sancto interdum per filium in Spiritu sancto.

p Cap. 2.

q Cap. 3.
r Cap. 4.

s Cap. 5.
t Cap. 6. in fine.

u Cap. 7.

the

the Father with the Sonne, and therefore we sing hymnes of glorification to the Father together with the Sonne. But he addeth, which is the thing that we are specially to obserue, ^x Albeit it is not enough for vs that we haue it so by traditions from the Fathers, for they also followed the authoritie of Scripture, taking their ground from those testimonies which a little before we haue alledged. Thus he calleth by the name of the tradition of the Fathers, that wherein they followed the authority of the Scriptures, and plainly instructeth vs, that without authority of the Scriptures, the tradition of the Fathers is no sufficient warrant for vs. And to this accordeth that which hath bene before cited from him, that ^y it is a declining from the faith to bring in any thing that is not written. Thus in another place he saith: ^z If whatsoeuer is not of faith is sinne, as the Apostle saith, and faith commeth by hearing; and hearing by the worde of God: surely whatsoeuer is beside the holy Scripture, because it is not of faith is sinne. And againe, It is needfull and conuenient, that euery man doe learne out of the Scripture that that is necessary for him, both for the full assurance of goodnesse, and that he may not be accusfomed to the traditions of men. Now howe can wee imagine, that Basil thus reducing all to the Scriptures, and though alledging as we do the tradition of the Fathers, yet with vs acknowledging, that that sufficeth not without authoritie of the Scriptures, should so loone after attribute so much to traditions that haue no confirmation from the Scripture? Albeit, this contrarietie hadde bene small, neither should we haue had any cause to take exceptiō against those words of traditions, whether they be *Basil*s or whose foecer, if in exemplifying the same he had not strained them so far, as that M. Bishop himselfe must perforce confesse they cannot accord with truth. For if he had no more but required the obseruation of traditions vnwritten, wee should haue conceiued that hee meant vnwritten, as Basil ellēwhere doth, who professeth ^b to use words that are not written, but yet such as varie not from the meaning of pietie according to the Scripture: wordes and terms which in letters and syllables are not framed to the Scripture, but yet do retain that meaning that is in the Scripture. Thus in the former part of the booke de Sp. sancto he mentioneth ^c speeches concerning the holy Ghost, which without scripture saith he, we haue receiued by the tradition of the Fathers, which yet are such as haue all their foundation and ground in the Scriptures. So in the place here questioned hee nameth diuers things

^x Quoniam hoc nobis no est satis sic a patribus esse traditum, nam & illi Scripturae secuti sunt auctoritatem &c.

^y Supra Sect. 5.
^z Supra. Sect. 10

a Idem reg. contract. q. 3. 5. Necessarium est & cōsonum ut ex sacra quibus Scriptura quod necesse sit, discat cum ad pietatis plerophoriam rum ne assuescat humanis traditionibus.

^b Basil. de side. Vocibus agraphis quidem, verum non alienis à pia securdum Scripturam sententia, &c.
^c Cap. 9. De Sp. sancto. Sententia quas traditione Patrum sine scripto accepimus.

things for unwritten traditions, which wee religiously hold according to the doctrine of the Scriptures, though the wordes be not precisely set downe therein. Such is in baptisme ^d the renouncing of the deuill and his Angels from what scripture, saith he, haue we it? Againe he saith, e The very profession of faith whereby we beleeue in the Father, the Son, & the holy Ghost, out of what scripture doe we take it? The maine matter which he labourerth there to approue by unwritten tradition, is the pronouncing of glory to the father, and the sonne, together with the holy Ghost, which yet he himselfe saith, that ^t it hath a meaning agreeing with the scriptures, and that in meaning it nothing differeth from that which Christ saith, the father, and the Son, and the holy Ghost: and so we also hold & professe according to the Scriptures. In this sense therefore we also admit of unwritten traditions, & blame, as he doth, them who strictly urge what things are found in the scriptures, that is, admit of nothing but what in precise termes is expressed therein, and therefore the words here in question thus far make nothing against vs. Yea and in the assertion of those other traditions which he mentioneth, he nothing crosseth vs, because we deny not traditions, as was sayd in the beginning, which are but rites and ceremonies of the Church, who our selues haue such traditions in vse, and deny not the libertie of other churches for the like. Such traditions he there mentioneth to haue beene in those times, the signing of them which professe Christe with the signe of the Crosse, praying towards the East, to be thrice dipped in baptisme, to pray standing all the time from Easter to Whitsontide, & such lik. Now such traditions we condemne not, but we cannot but dislike, that whereas these are no matters of faith & perpetuall necessity, but onely of arbitrarie and indifferent obseruation, he notwithstanding reckoneth the^e, ^p as hauing like force to pietie with those things that are written, and that the reiecting hereof shall be the^h condemning of those things which in the Gospell are accounted necessary to saluation. To which assertion M. Bishop for the credit of their Church of Rome will refuse to subscribe, because they hold the most of these things to bee indifferent, insomuch that there is no necessity with the^e of thrice dipping him that is baptised & that custome of standing in prayer for the time aboue named is worne out of vse. Wherein it cannot be denied, but that the Church of Rome hath done greatly amisse, if it be true concerning such traditions which Basil there is made to say.

d Cap. 27. Renuntate Satana & Angeli eius in bap-tismo ex qua Scri-
tura habemus?
e Ibid Ipsam fides
professionem qua
credimus in Patre & filium, & Spi-
ritum sanctum
quibus habemus
scriptis.
f Cap. 25. Vim ha-bet Scriptura con-gruentem. Nihil diferens dixero
quod ad sententia
vram attinet.

g Cap. 27. Quoru
utraq. parem vim
habent ad p. tatē.
h Et eadē mobinisi quā. Enurge-lio ad salutem nec
satis habetur.

In a word Basil's traditions if they be his, concerne not our disputation, either being such as are contained in the sense, though not in the letter of the Scripture, or else being onely temporarie and arbitrarie obseruations of the Church, neither of which we impugne. We impugne those traditions which are made necessary and perpetuall doctrines of faith, and of the worship of God, and yet neither in the letter, nor in the sense and consequence of the Scriptures can be iustified so to be. Of this sort are the Popes supremacie and succession of Peter, his Pardons, inuocation of Saints, worshiping of images, prayer for the dead, the single life of priestes, the curtolling of the Communion, the sacrifice of the Masse, & a huge deale of such other baggage. Wherein wee may take knowledge of the notable fraud of these Romish Traditioners, who tell vs out of the Fathers of traditions, traditions, when as in none of the auncient Catalogues of traditions those traditions are found, which they especially require to be beleued vnder that name. The Fathers mention Apostolicke traditions as they call them, whereof the Church of Rome obserueth nothing: the Church of Rome telleth vs of Apostolicke traditions whereof there is no mention with the Fathers. They agree not in their beadroll of traditions, and yet we forsooth must beleue that the traditions of poperie are the same that they speake of, and haue beene continued from the time of the Apostles. But what the manner of the auncients was, Hierome, teacheth vs to vnderstand, when he saith: ¹ Let euery Prouince abound in it owne iudgement or opinion, and thinke the precepts of their auncesours to be Apostolicke lawes. This was indeed their custome whatsoever obseruations they had, to terme them for the credit of them, Apostolicke traditions, howsoever they were but humane presumptions, and sometimes contrarie to that which the Apostles practised, as Hierome there sheweth of the traditions of ^k not fasting vpon the Lords day, and the d i es betwixt Easter and Whitsontide, which he saith that Paule and with him the faithfull did. But as touching all such traditions we are to consider what the same Hierome elsewhere saith, that ¹ What things men of their owne accord deuise and faine, as of Apostolicke tradition without testimony and authoritie of the Scriptures, the sword of God striketh downe. As for Damascene whom M. Bishop alleadgeth last, we hold him not woorth the answering. We doubt not but he defended vnwritten traditions without any qualification

i Hieron. ad Lucin Vnaquaque Proxim
cia abundet in sensu suo, & præcepta maiorum leges Apostolicas arbitretur.

k In Actibus Apo-stolorum diebus
Pentecostes & die
Dominico Aposto-lum Paulum &
cum eo credentes
ieiunasse legimus
l Idem in Agg.
cap. 1 Quæ absq̃
authoritate & testimonijs Scripturarum quasi traditione APostolica sponte reperi-
unt & con fingunt,
percutit gladius
De,

fiction being a notable idol-monger; and having no means for defence of his idolatrie but the pretence of vnwritten tradition. M. Bishop committed much ouer sight to reckon him for a man free from all partialtie, who in that respect could not but bee partiall in behalfe of the cause which hee had vnderaken against the written truth of God. But M. Bishop hath yet one string more to play vpon: S. Paule commandeth Timothie (saith hee) to commend vnto the faithfull that which he had heard of him by many witnesses, and not that onely which he should find in some of his Epistles, or in the written Gospell, S. Pauls words are these: ^m What things thou hast heard of me by many witnesses, the same deliuer to faithfull men which shall bee able to teach other also. He willett Timothie in speciall manner to instruct some in those things which he had heard and receiued of him, that they might be for the worke of the ministerie, and serue for the instructing and teaching of others. The question now is what those things were of which he speaketh. M. Bishop when hee saith: not onely that which he should find written, cōfesseth that the Apostle meant it of those things that are written, though hee will not haue it thought to be meant of those only. We take it then for granted, as indeed it cannot be denied, that the Apostle here intended those things that are written, but we would heare an argument to proue, that the Apostle meant any thing further that is not written. If hee might vse those words of those things that are written, what hindreth but that he might vse them of those onely? M. Bishop cannot proue that he did not so, but we proue that he did so because in the next Chapter he telleth the same Timothy: ⁿ The Scriptures are able ⁿ to make thee wise vnto saluation, through the faith which is in Christ Iesus. Therefore M. Bishops proofes come much too short, to giue vs any assurance that S. Paule by traditions vnderstood any thing, but what is to be learned by the Scriptures. m 2, Tim 2. 2.

17. W. BISHOP.

The second argument for Traditions, is this to beleeue that there bee so many bookes of holy Scripture, and no more: and that those bee they which are commonly taken so to bee, is very necessary to saluation: now this is not to be found written in any place of holy Scripture, but is receiued onely by Tradition, wherefore it is necessarie to saluation to beleeue some Tradition. M. Perkins answereth, that the bookes of the Old and New Testament, be Scripture, is not beleued on bare Tradition, but by the bookes themselves on this maner. Let the man who is endued with the spirit of discerning, reade the bookes, and consider first the author of them, who is God: then the matter contained, which is diuine: the maner of speech, which is full of maiestie in simple words: lastly, the end aymed at, which is Gods honour: and by this meanes he shall discern any part of Scripture from the writings of men whatsoeuer.

Reply. A wise and deepe obseruation I warrant you, and well worthy a graue Author: Let vs examine it briefly, first, he will haue his man endued with the spirit of discerning: who shall indue him with that spirit? M. P. seemeth to say, that euery sheepe of Christ hath his spirit. But S. Paule* teacheth plainly the contrarie, that some certaine onely haue the iudgement to discern. And touching this matter of discerning which bookes are Canonicall, which are not: not the learnedst in the primitive Church would take upon him to discern which they were: three hundred yeeres after Christ, was left vndefined by the best learned, whether the Catholicke Epistles of S. Iames and Iude: the second of S. Peter: the second and third of Iohn, and his Apocalypse, were Canonicall or no, as is confessed on all parts: hath then euery Christian this spirit of discerning, when the best Christian wanted it? Who more profound, more skilfull to discern, then that subtill and sharpe Doctor S. Augustine, & yet the Protestants will not allow him the true spirit of discerning which bookes be Canonicall. For he in diuers places of his workes, * holdeth the bookes of the Machabees to be Canonicall Scriptures: and expressly proueth the booke of Wisedome so to be: * and yet our Protestants will not admit them. See therefore how foolish and vaine his first rule is. come to the second.

His second is, that he who goeth about to discern whether the booke be Canonicall or no, must consider the Author, who is God. If he must at the first take God to bee the Author of the booke, what needes any further labour? it must needes bee Canonicall that hath God for the Author. This mans wits were surely from home, when hee discoursed thus: and therefore it should bee but folly to stand upon his particularities, let this one reason in generall serue to confute him: all this manner put together, serueth onely to helpe particular men to discern which bookes are Canonicall, who may easily after their diligent inquirie erre and be deceived in this point, because euery man is a liar. * And if there be

* I. Cor. 12.

* De doct.
Christ. cap. 8.
18: de ciuit.
Dei 36. lib. 2.
cont. Epist.
Gaudenc. 23.
* De Prædest.
Sanct. 14.

* Rom, 3.

be no more certaine meanes to assure them of this, which is the ground of all their Religion, then euery particular mans discretion and iudgement, then out of doubt their whole Religion is most unwisely builded upon meane mens inuentions and discretion: who also for the most parte doe neither vnderstande the language in which they were first penned, nor the vsuall phrases of Scriptures translated: that I say nothing of the figures, parables, prophecies, and controuersies which seeme to bee, and many other difficulties, and yet these men need not doubt, hauing learned some halfe dozen lines of Maister Perkins, but that reading any booke, they shall bee able presently to discern whether it bee Canonically or no. A goodly mockerie: Menne were not so taught in the Primitive Church, but the most skilfull and wisest in discerning Canonically bookes, trusted not vnto their owne iudgement, but leaned alwayes vpon Apostolically Traditions. So did Cerapion an auncient holy Writer (as Eusebius reporteth) reiect certaine bookes set out in the Apostles names, because they had not receiued from their Predecessors any such. The like doth Clement of Alexandria,* and that famous Origen* of the same booke, who obserue the Ecclesiasticall canon, as he hadde learned and receiued by Tradition. So doth hee deliuer his opinion of the foure Euangelistes, and other bookes of Canonically Scriptures, and not relying on his owne witte, which was excellent, or learning which was singular in all manner of languages and matters. That S. Augustine was of the same minde. may be gathered out of these wordes of his,* Contra Faustum. Of what booke canne there bee any assurance, if the letters which the church propagated by the Apostles, and by such excellencie declared throughout all Nations, doth teach and hold to be the Apostles, should be vncertaine whether they be Apostles or no? So that he maketh the declaration of the Church descended of the Apostles, to bee a sure pillar to rest vpon, for the certaine knowledge of Canonically Scriptures, and other spirits what soeuer, if they follow not that rule to be reiected: so farre is he off from encouraging euery sheepe of christes fold, to take that waightie matter vpon himselfe, as M. P. doth. And what can bee more aganist the most prudent providence of the diuine wisdom, then to permit euery one to be a iudge of the bookes of Canonically Scriptures? For if all those bookes, & no other shuld passe currant for canonically (which any christiā taking vpon him the spirit of discerning, would censure to be such) then away with all the old Testament, because diuers esteemed it to proceed of some euill spirits, as witnesses Freueus* and Epiphanius.* Yea not onely all the old must bee abrogated, but all the new also, because it

* Cap. 1
* Gap. 19.

* Lib. 35. cap. 6.

* Lib. 1. cap. 20.

* 1. 22.
* Hæref. 6. 6.

hath many falshoods mix'd with the truth: as some presuming greatly of their spirit and skill in discerning, did teach: so testifieth S. Augustine.

* Contra Faust. Some would haue had but one of the foure Gospelles, some five, some sixe, some seauen: some reiected all S. Paules Epistles, many, and those of the faithfull, did not admittē for Canoncall some of the other Apostles Epistles, nor the Reuelations. If then the diuine foresight of our Saviour had not prevented this most foule inconuenience, by instituting a more certaine meanes of discerning and declaring which bookes were penned by inspiration of the holy Ghost, which not: then by leauing it vnto euerymans discretion, he might bee thought to haue had but slender care of our saluation, which euery true Christian heart doth abhorre to thinke: and therefore we must needes admit of this most holy and prouident Tradition of them from hand to hand: as among the Protestants Brentius doth in his Prolegomenis, and also Kemnitius, handling the second kinde of Traditions, in his examination of the Councell of Trent: albeit they reiect all other Traditions, besides this one.

* Lib. 32. cap. 1.

R. ABBOT:

That which M. Perkins here saith, hath his proper vse in the ordinarie receiuing of the Scriptures in a Christian Church, where being from our infancie baptized into Christ, and bred vp in the continuall noise and sound of the word of God, and hauing by this meanes some deedes of the spirite of God sowed in our hearts, wee simply and without controuersie or question take the Scriptures, presuming vpon the record of the Church, and beleeuing them to be that which they are sayd to bee, that is, the booke of God, and in this perswasion applying our selues to the reading of them, and finding therein a spirit so different from the spirite of man, so great a maiettie in so great simplicitie, and all things so correspondent to those shadowes of truth and righteoufnesse, which ^a the worke of the law written naturally in our hearts, and confirmed by light of education doe represent vnto vs, wee resolute, and fully do beleue them to be that that at the first we presumed of them, the oracles of God, the words of saluation and eternall life, hauing an inwarde testimonie and coniunction to draw from vs the assent, and vn-moueaibly to ground vs in the assurance thereof. This seemeth to Maister Bishop to bee no wise obseruation, but the reason is because he himselfe

^a Rom. 1. 14. 15.

himselfe is scarcely wise. When he hath saide all that he can say, yet this must stand for good, that there is nothing that can cause the heart of man sufficiently to apprehend that the Scriptures are the word of God, till the Scripture it selfe in the conscience by the spirit do euident it selfe so to be. And herein it is true which Origen saith that ^b he who with all diligence and reuerence, as is meete, shall consider the words of the Prophets; it is certaine that in the reading and diligent viewing thereof, hauing his mind and understanding knocked at by a diuine inspiration, he shall know that the words which hee readeth were not uttered by man but are the words of God, and of himselfe shall perceive that those bookes were written, not by humane art, not by the word of mortall man, but by a maiestie diuine. In a word, as the Sunne when a man is brought into the light of it, not by telling, but by sight and by it owne light is discerned to bee that that giueth light vnto the world, so the Scripture which is as it were the chariot of ^c the Sunne of righteousnesse, when a man is brought into the sight thereof, euen by it owne light is discerned to be that that ministreth vnto vs the light of euerlasting life. Now the spirit of discerning, of which M. Perkins speaketh, is not to bee vnderstood of that speciall gift of ^d discerning spir. mentioned by S. Paul which imparteth a singular and eminent dexterity in spying and finding out the secret fraudes and deceits of counterfeit teachers and false Apostles, but the common spirit of the faithfull ^e which wee receiue, as the Apostle saith, that we may know the things that are giuen vnto vs of God: whereby it is true which our Sauiour saith: f My sheepe heare my voyce and they follow me: & they know the shepheards voice, and they will not follow a stranger, but they flie from him, for they know not the voyce of strangers. h I know mine, and am knowne of mine. Again hee saith ¹ If any man wil do his wil, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whether I speake of my selfe. Whereby he teacheth vs, that in applying our selues to learne and practise the will of God, we attaine to discern the doctrine to be of God. And therein consisteth that ^k spirituall vnderstanding which the Apostle recommendeth generally to the faithfull in his prayer for the Colossians, the vse whereof is ^l to discern things that differ (namely, from the truth) and ^m to try the spirits whether they be of God or not. Now the spirit as it vseth the ministry of the Church for the deliueing of the booke of scripture, so it vseth the ministry of the Church to giue aduer-

^b Origen de princip. lib. 4. c. 1. Siqui cum omni studio & reuerentia, qua dignum est Prophetica dicta consideret, in eo ipso dum legit & diligentius intuetur, certum est, quod aliquo diuino streamine mentem sensumq; pulsatus, agnoscat non humanitus esse prolatus eos quos legit, sed De esse (sermores, & ex se me ipso sentes non humana arte nec mor: alio eloquio, sed diuino ut ita dixerim) cothurno esse c nscriptos. C Ang in Psal. 80. Est in Scripturi nostri solus: & sanitas in sem uenis. d 1. Cor 12. 10. e 1. Cor. 2. 12. f Iohu 10. 27. g Ver. 4. 5. h Ver. 14. i Cap. 7. 17.

^k Col. 1. 9.

^l Phil. 1. 10.
 εἰς τὸ δοκιμᾶ
 ζῆν ὑμᾶς τὰ διαφέροντα
 m 1. Iohn. 4. 1.

tisement of those bookes which haue not the like authoritie as the Scripture hath. And this aduertisement it sealeth and confirmeth whilest hauing testified otherwhere the vndoubted doctrine of God, we discern there by some doctrines in those bookes, that are of another stampe, and not correspondent to the rest. For when they are in any part found to be of another spirit, wee conceiue of the whole, that they were written with another pen, and therefore albeit for the most part they cary the fauour and tast of those things which we reade in the other bookes, yet in their defects we fully apprehend that which we haue bene told, that they are not of like maiestie and authoritie with the rest, and though we may profitably reade them for those things wherein they are deriued from the other, yet that wee cannot securely ground any doctrine immediately vpon them. In this simplicitie without further question many thousands receiue the Scriptures, they read them, and by the power of the holy Ghost they grow thereby to faith and spiritual strength, and attaine vnto euerlasting life. So certaine are they of the truth, which they learne in them, as that they are readie to forsake all, and to lay downe their liues for the testifying of that which they beleeueth thereby. Against this M. Bishop, telleth vs, that not the learnedst in the primitiue Church would take vpon him to discern which bookes were canonicall, and which not. But in so saying he very greatly abuseth his reader, for the scriptures of Moses and the Prophets, and all the bookes of the new Testament saue only those few which he mentioneth, haue bene discerned and acknowledged for Canonicall without contradiction from the time that first they were deliuered to the Church. Yea but for three hundred yeares after Christ faith he, it was left vndefined by the best learned us touching those few, the Epistles of Iames and Iude, the second of S. Peter, the two later of S. Iohn, and the Apocalypse, whether they were Canonicall or not. Be it so, but is this a sufficient ground for him to affirme, that they discerned not which were vndoubtedly canonicall Scriptures, because they doubted whether these were so or not? What, did so many hundred thousand Martyrs suffer in the space of those 300. yeares, and did they know no certaine and vndoubted grounds whereupon to build the assurance of that for which they suffered? Did the Bishops and Pastors of the Church teach the people of God out of the Scriptures, and yet did they not discern whether they were

Scip-

Scriptures or not? As for the doubt that was made of these bookes by him mentioned, it was onely by some, and in some places, and vpon weake and vncertaine grounds, as the second Epistle of S.
Peter vpon difference of style, the Epistle to the Hebrewes, for that it seemed to some for want of vnderstanding to fauour the heresie of the Nouatians, the Reuelation of Saint John, for that to some such like it seemed to make for the millenarie fancie of Cerinthus but this was not sufficient so to ouerweigh the authoritie of them, but that the former testimonie that was giuen of them preuailed still in the Church, so that they were not since confirmed or first receiued into authoritie by the Church, but onely acknowledged and continued still in the authoritie which they had before. Therefore of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, and the Reuelation, Hierome testifieth thus: ⁿ This must we say to our men, that this Epistle to the Hebrewes, not onely of the Easterne churches, but of all the former churches and writers of the Greeke tongue, hath bene received as the Epistle of Paul the Apostle, albeit many thinke it either to haue bene written by Barnabas or Clement, and that it skilleth not whose it is, seeing it came from a speciall man of the church, and is dayly frequented in the reading of the churches. And if the custome of the Latines receiue it not amongst Canonically Scriptures, the churches of the Greekes by the like libertie receiue not the Reuelation of S. John, and yet we (saith he) receiue them both, not following the custome of this time, but the authoritie of the auncient writers; who commonly vse the testimonies of them both, not as they are wont sometimes to doe out of the Apocryphall bookes, but as being bookes Canonically, and of authoritie in the church.
 Hereby then M. Bishop may see, that it was but in his ignorance, and vpon some other mans word, that he saith, that for three hundred yeares it was not defined whether these bookes were Canonically or not, whereas they had vndoubted authoritie in the first Church and began in latter time to be questioned without cause. Of those other therefore which hee mentioneth, we conceiue in the like sort, of which they that in their simplicitie doubted, yet in the other Scriptures by the holy Ghost discerned the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, and thereby became partakers of life in him. Whereas he saith, that we allow not S. Augu-

n Hieron. ad. Darda. de terra repromiss. Illud nostrum dicendum est hanc Epistolam quam inscribitur ad Hebræos non solum ab Ecclesiu Orientali, sed ab omnibus retrò Ecclesiu & Gracis sermoni scriptoribus quasi Pauli Apostoli suscipi licet plerumque eam vel Barnabe vel Clementis arbitrentur, & nihil interesse cuius sit, cum Ecclesiastici viri sit, & quotidie Ecclesiæ in lecti- one celebretur. Quod si eam Latini non in consuetudo non recipi inter Scripturas Canonicas, nec Græcorum quidem Ecclesiæ Apocalypsim Ioan- nis eadem libertate suscipiunt, & tamē nos utraq; suscipimus, nequaquam huius temporis consuetudinem, sed veterum scriptorum auctoritatem sequentes, qui plerumque utriusque virtutis testimonij non ut interdum *the Apocryphus facere solent, &c. sed quasi canonicis & ecclesiasticis. * 2. Col 4. 6*

stine the true spirit of discerning which bookes be canonicall, because hee maketh the bookes of Machabees and the booke of Wisedome to be canonicall Scriptures, and yet we will not so admit them: we answer him, that he hath not the spirit to vnderstand and discern the meaning of Saint Austin. Ruffinus mentioneth the bookes whereof the question was as touching the reading of them in the Church to haue

o Ruffin. in expos. symb. apud Cypria Elae sunt: que Patres intra Canonem
 concluserunt, ex quibus fidei nostra assertiones confir-
 mauerunt.
 p Alij libri sunt
 qui non canonici,
 sed ecclesiastici: a quo o illis appella-
 ti sunt, &c.
 q Ceteras scriptu-
 ras apocryphas
 non erant, quas
 o illi in legi nonis.
 i Bell. 3.

been of three sorts: Some were^o canonicall, which hee reckoneth the same which we doe, upon which (saith he) they would haue the assertions of our faith to stand. Other some he calleth ^p Ecclesiasticall bookes, not canonicall, naming all those which wee terme the Apocryphall Scriptures, all which (saith he) the Fathers would haue to be read in the churches, but not to be alledged to prooue the authoritie of faith. A third sort there were which were termed by them ^q Apocryphall writings, which they would not haue to be read in the churches at all, which were all those that are wholly reiected as barstardes and counterfeits, such as were^r before spoken of in answer to the Epistle. Now of those three sorts some made but onely two, and that diuerly. Some reckoned vnder the name of Apocryphall Scriptures all that were not of the first sort, and properly termed Canonicall, as Hicrome did, who hauing reckoned the same bookes for Canonicall that Ruffinus doth, and accounting them in number two and twentie, as the Hebrewes doe, addeth that^t we are to know that what soener is beside these, is to be put amongst Apocryphall writings. Therefore (saith he) the booke called the Wisdom of Solomon, the booke of Iesus the Sonne of Sirach, of Tobie, of Iudith, are not in the Canon. Thus he reckoneth the Ecclesiasticall and Apocryphall bookes vnder one name of Apocryphall. Some on the other side vnder the name of canonicall bookes contained all that were not of the last sort, that is, of those bastards and counterfeits which were wholly exploded and reiected out of the Church. Thus S. Austine doth, extending the name of canonicall to all that was admitted publikely to be read, and therefore comprehending the bookes called Ecclesiasticall ioyntly vnder that name. But here the name of canonicall is not properly vsed, because the Scriptures are called canonicall, of being the Canon, that is to say, the rule of our faith, which those Ecclesiasticall bookes are not, as before wee haue heard. And what? doth Austine make them all of equall and like authoritie? Nothing lesse: for in the first place cited by M. Bishop, where hee setteth

teth all those bookes downe vnder one name of canonicall, he giueth this rule, in the canonicall Scriptures let a man follow the authoritie of the greater number of catholike churches, and this course he shal hold, to preferre those which are receiued of all catholicke churches, before those which some doe not receiue, and in those which are not receiued of all, let him preferre those which the more churches and of greater authoritie doe receiue, before those which are holden of the fewer and lesser authoritie or account. He would not haue vied any such exception, if he had taken all those bookes to be alike inspired of God, and therefore doth manifestly teach vs to make some difference betwixt them, and consequently not to account the bookes of Machabees properly canonicall, inso much as few or no Churches esteemed them so to be. And this may somewhat further appeare in the second place which M. Bishop citeth, where speaking of the Princes of the Iewes after the reedifying of the temple, he saith, The account of their termes is not found in the holy Scriptures which are called canonicall, but in other bookes amongst which are the bookes of the Machabees, which not the Iewes but the church reckoneth for canonicall, because of the great and wonderfull sufferings of some martyrs, who before the incarnation of Christ strived euen to death for the law of God. Where we see him plainly secluding those bookes from the Canonicall Scriptures, according as they were secluded by the Iewes, albeit withall he saith that the Church in a particular respect admitted of them as Canonicall, that is, publickly to be read, to giue knowledge of the constant suffering of some therein mentioned, for the testimonie of the law of God. But in what sort it was that the Church admitted of them, and the rest of that kinde, Hierome giueth vs to vnderstand; The Church readeth them, but accounteth them not amongst the canonicall Scriptures: it readeth them for the edification of the people, not to confirme the authoritie of the doctrines of the church. And this that Hierome saith, is confirmed also by Austine himselfe, where he teacheth, that those things which are not written in the canon of the Iewes, are not with so great strength (or authoritie) alledged against them that contradiet vs. Hereby therefore they are proued to be no canonicall Scriptures properly so called, because canonicall Scriptures being

Aug. de doct. Christ. lib. 2. ca. 8. In Scripturis canonicis ecclesiasticis Catholicarum quamplurimum auctoritatem sequuntur, &c. Tenebitur hanc modum in Scripturis canonicis, ut eam quae ab omnibus accipitur ecclesijs, proponat eam quae a non accipiuntur: in eum vero quae non accipiuntur ab omnibus proponat eas quas plures grauiorese, accipiunt eum quae pauciores maiorese, auctoritatem ecclesiae tenent.
Aug. de civ. Dei lib. 2. cap. 36. Quorum supplicatio tem porum non in Scripturis sanctis quae canonice appellantur sed in alijs inuenitur in quibus sunt Machabaeorum libri quos non Iudaei, sed ecclesiae pro Canonis habet propter quorundam martyrum passiones vehementes atq; mirabiles, &c.
Hieron. praefat. in lib. Salam. Sicut Iudith & Tobia & Machabaeorum libros legit quidem ecclesiae, sed eorum inter canonicas scripturas non recipitur, sic & haec duo volumina sapientiae & Ecclesiasticus quae ad edificationem peccatis, non ad auctoritatem vel firmitatem doctrinae accipiuntur.

confirmandum y Aug. de civ. Dei lib. 17. ca. 20. Aduersus contradiutores non tantum firmitate proferuntur quae scripturae non sunt in Canonis Iudaeorum.

the rule and measure of our faith, doe conuince those that contradict, which S. Austine acknowledgeth these doe not. The third place alledged by M. Bishop, helpeth yet further to declare this matter, where Gaudentius the Donatist alleadging the example of Razias, killing himselfe in the second booke of Machabees, for defence of their Circumcellions, casting themselues downe frō rocks, and prouoking others to kill them, that they might be accounted martyrs, S. Austine first condemneth the fact, which the author of that booke commendeth, and then addeth for exception further: ² This Scripture which is called of the Machabees, the Iewes account not as the lawe, and the Prophets, and the Psalmes, to which the Lord giueth testimonie as his witnesses, saying, All things must bee fulfilled which are written of me in the lawe of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalmes, but it is receiued in the church not unprofitably if it bee soberly reade or heard, specially for those Machabees, who for the law of God like true martyrs suffered so unwoorthy and horrible things at their persecutors hands: Where we see how coldly he speaketh of the receiuing of that booke, as rather to excuse the Church, then to defend it for so doing, that it was done not unprofitably, and yet with this exception, if it be soberly read, and the reason of the receiuing of it, not for the authoritie of the booke, but for the story of those Machabees, who there are recorded so constantly to haue suffered torments for their obseruing the lawe of God. But withall he absolutely sheweth, that those bookes are none of the, ^a to which Christ gaue testimonie as his witnesses, who not withstanding calleth those witnesses by the name of ^b all Scriptures, thereby giuing fully to vnderstand that these are no Scriptures. Hereby therefore we conceiue, that S. Austine well discerned the defect of these bookes, and rightly vnderstood that they are not so to be accounted of as those are, to which Christ hath giuen witness by his owne word, No otherwise therefore could he conceiue of the booke of Wisedome being of the same kinde, and that he did so, it plainly appeareth, for that of that and the booke of Ecclesiasticus it was that he sayd that which before I mentioned, that the bookes which are not in the canon of the Iewes, are not alledged with so great authoritie against them that say against vs. And that this booke was not receiued in the Church as a booke of diuine authoritie, appeareth by the very place which Maister Bishop citeth, where it is shewed, that Saint Austine citing a testimonie out of the sayde booke, exception was taken against it, ^c For that it was taken out of a booke that was not canonically. S. Austine indeede pleadeth earnestly to gaine credit to it, and alledgeth that of long time it had bene accustomed to be read in the Church, and men had vsed to cite the testimonie of it as diuine, but yet could not exprelly say that euer it was reckoned for a Canonically booke. And as for those arguments, M. Bishop is deceiued, to thinke that they could proue it to be Canonically, because the booke of ^d the Pastour was in like sort read in the Church, as Ruffinus beareth witness in the place before alledged, and yet was not accounted canonically Scripture, and Cyrril and Ambrose cite the bookes of Eldras by the name of ^e holy Scripture, and inspired of God, and Ambrose calleth him by the name of a Prophet, whereas Hierome calleth those bookes ^f dreames, and wiltheth no man to be d lighted with them. They vsed these bookes in their Sermons casually as we doe, thinking it not materiall to call them for exhortation to the people, howsoeuer they held them not of sufficient authoritie otherwise. Therefore they cited them with condition sometimes, ^g if we will receiue such or such a booke, as Hierome doth the booke of Iudub, and ^h Origen the booke of Wisdome, of which we here speake. By these things therefore it is plain enough, that though Austine were not willing that authoritie shuld in that sort bee detracted from any booke that was receiued publickly to be read in the Church, yet that hee was well able to discern, and so did, which bookes were of diuine and infallible authoritie, and which were to be accounted of inferiour and lesler worth, iudging thereof in effect no otherwise then we doe. Now from this M. Bishop goeth to another cauill at that that M. Perkins saith, that a man to come to know the Scriptures to be of God, must first take and beleue them so to be. He saith that the mans wittes were from home in so discoursing, but the cause is, because his wittes terue him not to conceiue that which M. Perkins saith. Very well and truly doth Saint Austine obserue, that ⁱ understanding is the reward of faith: Seeke not therefore, saith hee, to understand that thou mayest beleue, but first beleue that thou maiest understand. Hee gathereth it from that which the Disciples say, ^k We beleue and know that thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God. They first beleue, and in beleueing they learne to know. The beliefe of which Maister Perkins

² Idem. cont. Epist. Gaudent. li. 2. ca. 24. Hanc Serpturam que appellatur Machabeorum Iudaei non habent sicut legem & Prophetas & Psalmos, quibus Dominus testimonium in perhibet tanquam testibus suis dicens. Oportebat impleri, &c. Sed recepta est ab ecclesia non inutiliter si sobriè legatur vel audiat, maxime propter illos Machabaeos qui pro martyres a persecutoribus tam indigna atq; horrenda perpessi sunt. &c. a Luke. 24. 44. b Ver. 27.

^c Aug. de praed. sanct. cap. 14. Quod a me positū fratres istos ita ressusse dixisti ita quam non de libro canonico adhibēt.

^d Ruffin. in expo- sit. 37. m. b.

^e Cyrril. cont. Iulian. lib. 1. Sic ait Scriptura diuinitus inspirata, & c. Ambros. de obitu frat. Prophetico sermone dicitur, & c. Re- peto sacro scriptura solatia tua & de bono mors cap. 11. Aut propheta ad angelum, & c. Hieron. prefat. in Esdras & Nehem. Nec apocryphorum libri summijs delectetur.

^g Hieron. ad furi- am. Legimus in Iudith sicut tamen placet volumen recipere.

^h Origen. in Math. tract. 30. Si recipitur liber qui dicitur quoniam am sapientia est quae facta est populo colymna mibu, & c.

ⁱ Aug. in Ioan. tract. 29. Intellectus merces est fider: ergo noni quare intelligere non credas, sed credas ut intelligas.

^k Iohn. 6. 69.

kins speaketh, is the beliefe of a learner, of whome in matters of other knowledge, they are woont to say, Oportet discipulum credere, the learner must beleue. There are in all Arts and Sciences certaine propositions and principles, which the learner first accepteth vpon the worde of him that teacheth him: which notwithstanding afterwards hee attaineth so to knowe, as that if he that taught him, should say any thing to the contrary, he should thinke him beside himselfe, and by no meanes yeeld to him, as knowing that certainly now which he did at first beleue. Euen so is it in this case: a man hauing it wrought out of his owne conscience, that there is a God, to whome honour, and worship, and seruice is due, and that this God vndoubtedly hath some way reuealed wherein that honour and worship dooth consist, betaketh himselfe vpon the testimonie of the Church, to the reading and hearing of the Scriptures, and in the exercise thereof, findeth and feeleth that to bee true, which was testified vnto him, and saith: ¹ Like as wee haue heard, so haue we seene in the citie of our God. And as the Samaritans being drawn to Christe by the report of the woman, after they hadde seene and heard him, say, ^m Now wee beleue not because of thy saying, for wee haue heard him our selues, and know that this is indeede the Messias the Saviour of the world, so this manne being first brought to the Scriptures by the report of the Church, and thereby beleueing the same to be of God, doth by his owne experience afterwards fully apprehend the truth and certaintie of that report, yea more then was reported, so that he saith, ⁿ By whom I heard of thee, and I came to thee and haue beleued thee, with whom mine eyes haue seene much more then before was told me. Therefore he resteth not his faith now vpon the Church, but vpon God himselfe, so that though the Church should slide backe, and denie that which it hath beefore affirmed, yet he standeth secure, and chooseth rather to die a thousand times, then to forgoe the comfort and hope that hee hath conceiued by the Scriptures, which were at first deliuered vnto him by the Church. Thus Christian people haue beene woont to receiue the Scriptures of the handes of the Church, wherein they haue liued without seeking any further approbation and warrant thereof, because in the vse of them they haue giuen a sufficient warrant and testimonie of themselves. So then we rest not the Scriptures vpon the discerning of priuate spirits, as Maister Bishop idley and vainely cauileth,

1Psal. 43. 7.

m Iohn. 4. 42.

n Origen. in Cant.
hom. 2. Per. illo:
quidemandum: ad
te autem veni et tibi credidi, apud
quem multo plura
viderunt oculi mei
quam annuncianbantur mihi.

leth, but wee make the Church as the hand of God, whereby hee putteth the Scriptures into our handes, and priuate spirite doth no more but subscribe to the testification of the Church. But nowe if Maister Bishop will question the publike testimonie of our Church astouching knowledge what Scriptures are to bee deliuered, wee answer him, that such and such onely wee acknowledge and deliuer by our testimonie, because by like testimonie those onely haue bene acknowledged and deliuered vnto vs. Here then we referre our selues to tradition, and therefore all that Maister Bishop alleadgeth to the end of this section, is but fighting with a shadow of his owne, and nothing against vs. Hee saith in the end that Brentius and Chemnitius admit of this Tradition, albeit they reiect all other Traditions beside this one, whereas Chemnitius letting downe eight kindes of traditions, acknowledgeth seuen of them, and determineth our defence against the Papistes, to consist in one kinde onely. We fight not against the worde, wee know it hath his vse: Maister Perkins in three conclusions heere acknowledgeth traditions: the Church of Rome hath brought it by her abuse to one speciall vse and meaning, and in that vse onely wee impugne it, namely as it importeth matters not of temporarie rites and ceremonies indifferently vsed, but of perpetuall doctrine and faith, which neither in word nor in meaning can bee verified and confirmed by the written worde, presupposed and acknowledged to bee the worde of God. In this sence wee deny traditions: the name otherwise wee reiect not: wee say that by testimonie of tradition the notice of the canonicall Scriptures is giuen vnto vs. This Maister Bishop thinketh should make for the credit of their Church of Rome, dreaming that this must be by the tradition of that Church or that that Church must bee the witnesse vnto vs of this tradition. But therein hee very much deceiueth himselfe: amongst all the traditions mentioned by the auncient Writers, wee neuer finde this tradition, that for the number of the bookes of canonicall Scripture, wee must take the tale and tradition of the Church of Rome. If he can make good any such tradition, hee shall finde vs much the more fauourable for all the rest. Otherwise wee doe not know why it should not bee as readie for the Church of England, to iudge which are canonicall Scriptures, as it is for the Church of Rome. What meanes should they haue for the discerning of them, that is not as open to vs as it is to them? We take the account of holy Scriptures in the same sort as the auncient Church did, according to the tradition of the fathers, and out of the monuments of the Fathers. — Wee reckon those onely for Canonick bookes which from the time of the Apostles, haue had certaine and vndoubted testimonie to bee so; testimonie I say, of so many Churches, and nations, and peoples, to which at first they were deliuered, and thenceforth vsed amongst them to bee read in their churches, expounded in their pulpits, meditated in their houses, which the fathers haue perpetually cited in their bookes, and opposed in generall Councils against Schismatikes and heretickes, to which they haue attributed all authoritie for the deciding and determining the causes and controuersies of the Church, Against which none dare speake, saith Saint Austine, who will in any sort be called a christian man. ¶ The excellencie of the canonick authoritie of the old and new testament, saith he againe, being confirmed in the time of the Apostles, hath by succession of Bishops and propagation of churches bene set in a high and loftie seate, that all faithfull and religious vnderstanding may bee seruant vnto it. Nowe by the Scriptures which thus irrefragably and vnquestionably haue bene receiued vniuersally of the whole Christian worlde, wee learne to iudge of those bookes adioyned to the old testament, whereof question is betwixt the Church of Rome and vs. For in those bookes as touching the old testament, we learne that to the Iewes were committed the wordes of God, whereof it followeth, that none are to bee accounted the wordes of God, that were not committed vnto them. The booke committed to them our Sauiour Christe nameth to haue bene Moses, and the Prophets, and the Psalmes, and calleth these all the Scriptures, as before was noted, Because then these are all the Scriptures, and those which we seclude from the canon are none of these, it followeth that by the sentence of christe himselfe, they are declared to bee no Scriptures. And hereto agreeth the auncient tradition of the church of the Iewes, recorded by Iosephus, who acknowledgeth that they had onely two and twentie bookes, to which

o Bassia in expositione. secundum traditionem patrum monumentis accipimus. Hilar. Prolog. in Psal. Secundum traditiones veterum.

p Aug. in Ioannis. epist. tract. 2. Contra quas nullus audeat loqui quae se vult quoquo modo vocari Christianis. q Idem cont. Faust. l. 1. cap. 3. Excellentia canonice autoritatis veteru & nouit. tamē in Apostolorum confirmata temporibus per successiones episcoporum, & propagationes ecclesiarum tanquam in sede quadam sublimiter constituta est cuius seruiat omnis fidelis & pius intellectus.

r Rom. 2. 2.
f Luk. 24. 44.
t Ver. 27.

u Ioseph. cont. Apion. lib. 1. Sunt nobis solummodo duobus & viginti libri quorum iuste fides admittitur. Horum quinque sunt Moyses &c. Amoris Moyses vsq; ad Artaxerxem Perfarum regem Prophetarum scriptura suorum regis gestas conscripserunt in tredecim libris. Reliqui vero quatuor hymnes in Deum & vita hu- mana precepta noscuntur continere.

ustly they gave credit, whereof five are the bookes of Moses: From whom to the time of Artaxerxes King of Persia, the Prophets wrote the matters of their times in thirteene bookes, which are thus reckoned, 1. Iosuah. 2. the Iudges with Ruth. 3. the two bookes of Samuel.
 4. the two bookes of Kings. 5. the two bookes of Chronicles. 6. Ezra and Nehemiah. 7. Esther. 8. Iob. 9. Esay. 10. Icremy. 11. Ezechiel.
 12. Daniel. 13. the booke of the twelue lesser Prophets. The other foure, saith he, containe hymnes and Songs to God, and precepts of humane life, which are, the Psalmes, the Prouerbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Canticles. Of those things which were afterwarde written, hee saith, * that they were not of like credit to the former, because there was no certaine succession of Prophets amongst them. This tradition the Iewes hold constantly and inuicably till this day, and in their dispersion through the world, doe still giue witness to the bookes that were deliuered to the Fathers, GOD by his prouidence appoynting them to be y the roll-keepers of the christians, as Saint Augustine noteth, carying the law and the Prophets for the testimonie of that which the church teacheth. If GOD then haue appoynted them to be witnesses of those bookes of the old Testament, which should serue for the assertion of our faith in the newe, wee shoulde doe amisse to admit of other bookes of the old Testament for assertion of our faith, whereof they giue no witness. This computation of the Scriptures according to their tradition, is followed by the Fathers of the Christian Church, professing exactly to sette downe the number of Canoniall bookes, as by ^z Melito Bishop of Sardis, by ^a Origen, by ^b Athanasius Bishop of Alexandria, by ^c Epiphanius Bishop of Cyprus, by the whole Councell of ^d Laodicea, for the Greeke and Easterne Churches, and for the Latine and Welterne Churches, by ^e Hilarie, by ^f Hierome, by ^g Russinus, all reckoning for Canoniall Scriptures the same that wee doe, and excluding from the Canon the same that wee exclude.

x Ab Artaxerxe
 usq; ad nostrum
 tempus singula su-
 conscripta, non ta-
 men priori simi-
 lide sunt habita,
 eo quod non fuerit
 certa successio
 prophetarum.
 y Augusti cont:
 Iust. l. b. 12. cap
 23. Quid est hodie
 gens ipsa nisi qua-
 dam scripturaria Christianorum baiulans legem & Prophetas in testi-
 monium assertionis ecclesia.

z Euseb. lib. 4. cap
 25. Veteru instrumentis libros diligen-
 ter cognoscentibus
 Where wisdom in the Greeke: is aded
 by apposition to the Prouerbs, so called by the ancients. a Id. m. lib. 6. cap. 24. Where a fault is committed by Eusebius, in leaving out the booke of the twelue lesser Prophets, for the two and twentie.

b Athan. in Synopsi. c Epiphanius de mens. & pond. d Concil. Laodic. cap. 59.

e Hilar. Prolog. in Psal. Ita secundum traditiones veterum deputantur.

f Hieron. in Prolog. Galeato.

g Rufinus in expofitione Symboli.

The same reckoning we finde in the canons, which haue gone in the church of Rome vnder the name of the canons of the Apostles: onely ^h three bookes of Machabees are foisted in, of which we reade not to that purpose any other-where. Yea, and that they went not in that account in the church of Rome, is apparant by Gregorie Bishop there, who being to applie the example of Eleazar in the Machabees, to the matter that he had in hand, saith: 'Of this thing wee shall not doe amisse, to bring an example out of the bookes, though not canonical, yet set forth for the edification of the church. In which wordes he plainly sheweth, that neither the bookes of Machabees, nor the rest of that sort were holden for canonicall Scriptures, albeit they were set forth to be reade, for that they contained many thinges profitable for the edifying of the people. For this cause S. Austine reckoneth them amongst the canonicall bookes but because he confesseth, as we haue seene, that in contradiction they haue not that ^k confirmative authoritie, which elswhere he nameth for the prerogatiue of the Scriptures, hee thereby confesseth that they are not truely canonical, because it is for that authorities sake that the name of canonicall Scriptures is giuen to those to which it doth appertaine. Therefore we reckon him also as a witness of this tradition, whereby our church discerneth what bookes wee are to approoue for determining faith and doctrine in the Church, and vnder that name to commend as the infallible Oracles of God, to the deuotion of the people. But now Maister Bishop will aske, what the reason is, that admitting this tradition wee doe not admit also of other their traditions, of which wee also reade in the writings of the Fathers? Where to say nothing that their traditions are vncertaine as touching their beginning, variable in their proceedings, corrupt in their vse, and manie of them vpstart deuices, shamefully and lewdly attributed to the Fathers, whereas this tradition of the Scriptures without alteration or interruption, hath had constant & perpetuall acknowledgment both of the whole nation of the Iewes, and of the whole Christian Church throughout the whole worlde, from the beginning vntill this day, wee answer him, that by this tradition it selfe, wee are instructed against the admitting of their traditions. For this tradition or deliuering of the Scriptures from God, is as the deliuering of a com-

h Canon. Apofol. 37.

*i Gregor Moral.
lib. 19. cap. 13. De
quare non inordinate agimus si ex
libris licet non ca-
nonicis, sed tamen
ad ecclesie adifica-
tionem citius ex-
emplum profera-
mus. Eleazar enim, &c.*

*k August. cont.
fausi, lib. 2. cap. 4.
Confirmatio au-thoritatis clarescerent.*

mission from a Prince. For as by the commission the subiect is directed what to doe in the Princes seruice, and is thereby listed and bounded so, as to doe nothing but according to the tenure and warrant of the commission, being punishable if hee shall attempt any thing further vpon his owne head: so by this commission of holy Scripture deliuered vnto vs by the Church from God, wee are instructed and limited what to beleeue and what to doe as touching faith and dutie towards God, and are iustly to be punished if wee shall dare in any sort to goe beyond the bounds and warrant of this commission: yea and the Church it selfe is to hold and professe it selfe so tied to the precepts and rules of this commission, as that it may not presume to obtrude or thrust any thing vpon the people of God to be beleeued and taught, but whereof it hath thereby receiued warrant and instruction from God himselfe. And if the Church shall further attempt or enterprise any thing, as the Church of Rome doth, it is to receiue checke and controulement from this writ of Gods commission; neither are wee to thinke our selues discharged for that wee are thus told by the bearer of the writ, so long as by the writ it selfe wee are commaunded otherwise.

18. W. BISHOP.

The two next arguments for traditions, be not well propounded by Master Perkins. The third is to be framed thus: Either all the bookes of holy Scripture containe all needfull doctrine to saluation, or some certaine of them without the rest: Not some of them without the rest, for then the other should bee superfluous, which no man holdeth: therefore all the bookes of holy Scripture put together, do containe all necessary instruction. Now then the argument followeth, but some of those bookes of holy Scripture haue bene lost, therefore some points of necessary doctrine contained in them are not extant in the writen word, and consequently to be learned by tradition. Master Perkins answereth, first supposing some of the books to be lost, that all needfull doctrine which was in them, is in some of the others preserved. But why did he not solve the argument proposed? were then those bookes superfluous? Doth the holy Ghost set men to pen needlesse discourses? which this answer supposeth: therefore he giues a second more shamefull, that none be perished, which

* 1. Paral. ult.
 2. Paral. 9.
 * Hom. 9. in Mar.
 Et hom. 7. in priorum ad Corinth.

is most contrary unto the plaine Scriptures * as S. Iohn Chrysoftome proneth: * where he hath these expresse words: That many of the Prophetical bookes were lost, may be proued out of the history of Paralipomenō (which they translate Chronicles.) Now as for M. Perkins guesses, that some of them are yet extant, but otherwise called, some were but little roles of paper, some prophane and of Philosophie, I hold them not worth the discussing, being not much pertinent, and auowed on his word onely, without either any reason or authoritie.

R. ABBOT.

Of this argument well propounded, we deny the minor proposition. We say that some of the Scriptures, though some other had miscaried, should containe all doctrine needfull to saluation. The consequence that he maketh thereof, that then those other are superfluous, is childish and absurdly iniurious to the Scripture. The same doctrines are contained in a hundred places of holy Scripture, and who will hereupon conclude that they are superfluous in one place because they are contained in another? The Euangelists diuers times record the same stories, and euen word for word; and must it follow, that the latter did superfluously write that which the former had set downe? There is no point of necessary doctrine and faith contained in any one booke of holy Scripture, but the same hath testimonie and witnesse of other bookes. Matters of fact and circumstance there may bee one where, which otherwhere are not mentioned, but points of necessary doctrine and faith, haue manifold testimonie of the written word. Supposing it then to be true which M. Bishop saith that some of the old bookes were lost, which the wisdom of God thought necessary for those times, though vnnecessary for vs, yet it cannot be inferred hereof, that any doctrine was thereby lost, because though there might be some matters of storie there onely mentioned, yet there could bee no matter of doctrine that was not contained in Moses lawe. And if Maister Bishop will needs perswade vs, that some points of doctrine were there deliuered that are not in other scripture, and must now be learned by tradition, we desire to vnderstand whether by tradition he haue learned what those traditions were, and that out of their Churches treasury of traditions hee will discouer these secrets,
 of.

of which neither the Prophets nor Euangelistes, nor Apostles, nor Fathers, nor Councils were euer able to informe vs. He telleth vs that Chryssostome affirmeth the losse of those bookes: but doth Chryssostome tell him of any doctrines deriued by tradition from those bookes? Surely he wanted some prooffe for the Popes triple crowne & his yeare of Iubile, and the great store-house of merits and satisfactions at Rome, and dreaming it in his sleepe, beleeued it when he was awake, that these matters were written of in these bookes, and the bookes being now lost, they come to vs by a tradition of which the world neuer heard any thing for the space of two or three thousand yeares. But we must thinke that he wrote not these things for vs, but for them who hee thought would be more readie to beleeu him then we are. Now M. Perkins further answereth, that though those bookes were lost, yet it followeth not that any part of the Canon of the Scripture was lost, because there might bee bookes which were not reckoned for Scripture bookes. For prooffe hereof hee bringeth the wordes of the Apostle, Whatsoeuer thinges were 1^o Rom. 15. 4. written before time, were written for our learning, arguing heereof that because bookes that be lost cannot serue for our learning, and all the bookes of scripture that were formerly written, were to serue for our learning, therefore no bookes of scripture formerly written could be lost. M. Bishop after his manner, calleth it a shamesfull answer, but saith not a word to disproue it. Hee telleth vs that there were such bookes, but hee prooueth not that they were bookes of scripture, and to the reason alleaged out of the Apostles wordes hee replyeth nothing at all, and therefore I passe him ouer, without any further answer.

19. W. B I S H O P.

Master Perkins his fourth obiection of the Iewish Cabala, is a meere dreame of his owne: our argument is this, Moses who was the pen-man of the old Law, committed not all to writing, but deliuered certain points needfull to saluation by tradition; nor any Law-maker that euer was in any country, comprehended all in letters, but established many things by customs, therefore not likely that our christian law should be all written.

That Moses did not pen all, thus we proue: it was as necessary for women to be deliuered from originall sinne as men. Circumcision the remedy medie for men, could not possible be appli'd to women, as euery one who knoweth what circumcision is can tell: neither is there any other remedy provided in the written law, to deliuer women from that sinne: therefore some other remedy for them was deliuered by tradition.

Item, if the child were likely to die before the eight day, there was remedy for them, as the most learned doe hold, yet no where written in the law. Also many Gentiles, during the estate of the old Testament, were saued, as Iob, and many such like, according to the opinion of all the auncient Fathers: yet in the lawe, or any other part of the old Testament, it is not written what they had to beleue, or how they should liue: wherefore many things needfull to saluation were then deliuered by tradition

To that reason of his, that God in his prouidence should not permitte such a losse of any part of the Scripture: I answer, that God permitteth much euill. Againe, no great losse in that, according to our opinion, who hold that tradition might preserue what was then lost.

R. ABBOT:

It concerneth M. Bishop to speake well of the Iewish Cabala: for if the Cabala bee not good, certainly Popish traditions are starke naught: the Iewes hauing as good warrant for the one, as the papists for the other. Both of them to purchase credit to their owne fancies and deuices, betooke themselues to this shifting pretence, that the word of God was first deliuered by Moses, and then by christ and his Apostles, partly written and partly vnwritten. Whatsoeuer they haue listd to bring in, either of curiositie or for profit, they haue referred it to the vnwritten word, and this hath bene the sinke of all both Iewish and popish superstition, both verifying in themselues that which our Sauiour objecteth to the one, Yee haue made the commandement of God of no authoritie by your tradition. M. Bishop here like a louing brother taketh the Iewes by the hande, and will helpe them for the maintenance of their traditions, that by them he may gaine some reputiō to his owne. His proofs for them are such as that without doubt they being but dul-heads in cōpariō of him, were neuer able for themselues to deuise the like. That Moses committed not all to writing, he proueth, because it was necessary for womē to be deliuered from originall sin, but they could not be deliuered from it by circumcision, not being capable ther of, and no other remedy is provided in the written law; therefore some other remedie was deliuered for them by tradition. Further he alleageth, that there was remedie for children dying before the eight day, before which they might not be circumcised: but there is none found written, therefore it was deliuered by tradition.

O the excellent wit of this man! he hath with these arguments so troubled the whole pack of the Protestants, as that not one of them can tell what to say. But for our learning, M. Bishop, we are desirous to know of you what these remedies were that you speake of? What was the ceremonie for the freeing of women from originall sinne, and children dying before eight dayes old? Where haue ye found, or how can ye prooue that there was any such? Surely you that can see so farre into a milstone of traditions, are able (I trow) to informe vs what it was, if any such thing were. Ridiculous vain man bringing in steed of proofes fantastickall imaginations, whereof hee hath no ground, nor can giue vs any testimony at al, either from the Iewes themselues, or from other ancient writers, but only out of the presumptions and idle dreames of some of their owne schoolmen. Yea and in this deuce of his hee crosseth the doctrine of his owne part: for tell vs M. Bishop, did circumcision take away originall sin? If it did so, what difference then betwixt the sacraments of the old Testament and of the new? You are wont to tell vs, that the sacraments of the old Testament did signifie grace, but not giue grace: that they did signifie the taking away of sinne, but not take it away that they did signifie iustification, but did not iustifie. Therefore Bellarmino accordingly determineth, that circumcision did not iustifie or take away sinne, but in that respect was of as little force as vncircumcision, yea and argueth that if circumcision had iustified, then iustification should haue bene proper to men, because men onely are circumcised; so farre is hee from conceiuing that some other remedie was provided for women in steede of circumcision. For expounding the Apostles wordes, ^b Is God the God of the Iewes onely, as if he had laide ^c God is the God of all; how then is it credible that he should giue remedie against sinne to the Iewes onely? hee addeth. We may hence also argue, Is God the God of menne onely? is hee not also the God of women? Who then will belecue that he gaue a remedie (against sinne) that should be auailable for men onely? His resolution then is, that circumcision was no remedie against sin, because God would not appoint a remedie against sinne (as hee conceiueth) which

b Rom. 3. 29.
c Bellar. de effeo.
sacram. cap. 14.
Quasi dicat,
Deus est omnium
Deus: quomodo
igitur credibile
est eum dedisse remedii contra peccatum solum Iudæis? Possimus
notetiam hinc aliter argumen-tari. An iustificatorum Deus tantum?
nonne et Samaritanorum?
Quis ergo credat Deum de-disse remedium
quod solum iustificatorum proficit?

should not be common to the Gentiles as well as the Jewes, to women as well as men. Now therefore inasmuch as M. Bishops foundation faileth, surely that which he buildeth vpon it must needs fall, and looke what he will say was the deliuering of men from originall sinne, the same he must confesse hath bene the deliuering of women also, so that either hee must resolue one meanes for both out of the written word, or passe ouer to tradition vnwritten; and if he haue not a tradition for both, then all his matter of Iewish tradition must come to naught, and there is nothing proued but that Moses committed all to the written law. But his phrased of deliuering from originall sinne, implieth an error before confuted in the question of that point. Our regeneration consisteth in the forgiveness of sinnes, and the first fruites of the sanctification of the holy Ghost, the same spirit working sometimes without any signe or sacrament of initiation, as in the fathers vntil the time of Abraham, who himselfe was iustified before the sacrament of Circumcision; sometimes with that signe of circumcision, proper in execution to men onely, but yet sealing the fruite of Gods promise and the effect of his spirit both to men and women ^d according to the purpose of the grace of God: sometimes with a signe common both to men and women, as in our baptisme we see, thereby shewing that hee worketh freely according to his owne will, not tying himselfe to outward signes, but sauing onely by his grace, either with signes where they are, or without, where either there is no institution, as in the beginning, or there wanteth meanes and oportunitie of execution, as oft befell in circumcision of the old Testament, and doth befall in baptisme of the new. Now as touching M. Bishops third reason, it is as reasonlesse as the former, so that wee may wonder that the author of it should be so without reason. Iob and many such like Gentiles (saith he) were saued. Very true. But in the Law or any other part of the old Testament it is not written what they had to beleue or how they should liue. But that is not true: for seeing there is but ^e one faith ^f the same spirit of faith the whole body of Christ from the beginning to the end, by that faith that is written in the law of Moses, we know what they had to beleue, and according to that faith how they ought to liue. Yea and where it is written, what they did beleue, and how they did liue, there it is written what they had to beleue, and how they were to liue. But in the booke of

^d Ephes. 1. 5. 9

^e Eph. 4. 5.

^f 1. Corin. 4. 13.

Iob it is written of himself and of his friends, what they did belecue and what the ordering of their life was, all according to the lawe of Moses, and the faith therein contained. It is therefore vntrue which M. Bishop saith, that it is not written what they hadde to belecue or how they were to liue. But yet giuing the man his way, let vs see what his conclusion is: Therefore (saith he) many things needfull to saluation were then deliuered by tradition. We may see his head was troubled, and he had forgotten what he was to conclude: for this his conclusion should haue beene, Therefore Moses committed not all to writing. But this would not follow: for though it were not namely written of Iob what he had to belecue, yet wee cannot hereof inferre, that therefore he had any thing else to belecue, but that that is written. What hindereth I say, but that Moses may bee conceiued to set downe the faith whereof Iob was to be saued, though he doe not expressly say, that Iob was to belecue thus. But it may be that M. Bishop meant, that that conclusion should be subordinate to the former, and so would reason thus, Iob and such like receiued many thinges by tradition, therefore Moses committed not all to writing. Yet neither can this stand good, because nothing letteth but that Moses might commit to writing all that faith that Iob receiued by tradition. Iob was g anncienter then Moses, as Ambrose saith, and might receiue the doctrine of faith by word and tradition of other men: but yet wee see that that faith is no other but what Moses after comprised in the written law. Albeit what that tradition was, hath bene before declared, not resting in relation from one man to another, but continually renewed and confirmed by reuelation and illumination immediately from God, being certainly corrupted by tradition where hee did not graciously shew himselfe for the preservation of it. And as for other Gentiles, whosoeuer they were that were saued after the writing of the Lawe, they were saued onely by that faith which the Scriptures of Moses and the Prophets haue described vnto vs. But M. Bishop not content to bring Moses alone for a patron of traditions, telleth vs beside, that not any law-maker in any country comprehended all in letters, but established many things by custome: therefore (saith he) it is not likely that our Christian law should be all written. Where we may iustly hysse at his grosse and wilfull absurditie, that will measure the Law-maker of heauen with the Law-maker of the earth, and by imperfection

g Ambros. Offic.
lib. 1. cap. 36. Iob
antiquior Mose,
&c.

i Sc. I.

in the lawes of men, will argue imperfection in the lawes of God. No vnderstanding of man can either by lawes or by customes provide for all occurrents of the common wealth, but dayly there are arising and growing the occasions of new lawes: and will hee then frame the light of God to the measure of our darknesse? And yet what law maker hath there beene, or is there in the worlde, who if hee were able to comprehend an absolute perfection of all lawes, would not certainly take course to let the same downe in writing, as being the onely secure and safe way for the perpetuating thereof? And if he will thus conceiue of any wise and reasonable man, how much more should we attribute it to the wisdome of GOD, that knowing the slippernesse and mutabilitie of the minds & thoughts of men, hee would for safetie and assurance set downe in writing whatsoeuer hee would haue stand for Lawe of worship and seruice towards him? I neede not to stand vpon this, for the comparison is of it selfe so odious and absurd, as that euery man may woonder that the mans discretion should faile him so far as to reason in this sort. For conclusion of this section, a toy took him in the head concerning somewhat said by M. Perkins in the section before. It was said that it should cal the prouidence of God in question, to say that any part of scripture should bee lost. M. Bishop answereth, that God permitteth much euill. True, but he permitteth no euill iniurious to his owne Glory. M. Perkins suppoeth out of that that was sayd before, that all Scripture was at first written for our learning. To say that it was intended for our learning, and yet is now lost, what is it but to call in question the prouidence of God? His other answer, that there should be no great losse, because tradition might preserue that which was then lost, is a temerarious and witlese presumption, contrary to the experience of all ages, whereby it is found that nothing is continued according to the first originall which is deliuered by word only from man to man. And his assertion is so much the more ridiculous in this beehalfe, for that hee knoweth not any thing that Tradition hath preserued that was written in those books. If tradition hath preserued any thing thereof from beeing lost, let him acquaint vs with it: or if he cannot doe so, let him giue vs leaue to take him for that we finde him, a meere babler, giuing himselfe libertie to say any thing without feare or wit.

2c. W. BISHOP,

Now in steede of M. Perkins his first reason for vs of milke and strong meate: wishing him a messe of Pap for his childish proposing of it, I wil set downe some authorities out of the written word, in prooffe of traditions.

Our Saviour said, being at the poynt of his passion, * that he had many * Iohn.16.13. things to say vnto his Apostles, but they could not as then beare them.* Our Saviour after his resurrection appeared often vnto his disciples, speaking with them of the kingdome of God, of which little is written in any of the Euangelistes. * AG.1.1.

* I commend you brethren that you remember me in all things, * I. Cor. 11. and keepe the traditions euen as I haue deliuered them to you.

* O Timothy, keepe the depositum, that is, that which I deliuered thee to keepe: * Hold fast by the holy Ghost, the good things committed vnto thee to keepe: which was as S. Chrylostome and Theophylact expound, the true doctrine of Christ, the true sence of holy Scriptures, the right administration of the Sacraments, and government of the Church: to which alludeth that auncient holy Martyr S. Irenæus, * I. Tim. 6. * 2. Tim. 1. saying, that the Apostles layde vp in the Catholicke church, as in a rich treasury, all things that belong to the truth. * Lib. 3. c. 4.

S. Iohn who was the last of the Apostles left aloue, said, * that he had many other things to write, not idle or superfluous, but would not commit them to ink and pen, but referred them to be deliuered by word of mouth * Epist. 3. 13. And to specifie for example sake some two or three poynts of greatest importance, where is it written that our Saviour the Sonne of God, is du go idz, that is, of the same substance with his Father? Where is it written, that the holy Ghost proceedeth from the Sonne as well as from the Father? Where is it written that there is a Trinitie, that is, three persons really distinct in one and the very same substance? And that there is in our Saviour Christ Iesus no person of manne, but the substance of God and man subsisting in the second person of the Trinitie? Be not all and euerie of these, principal articles of the Christian faith, and most necessary to be beleued of the learned, and yet not one of them in expresse termes written in any part of the holy Bible? Wherefore wee must either admit traditions, or leaue the highest mysteries of our christian faith vnto the discretion and courtesie of euery wrangler, as shall bee more declared in the argument following.

R. ABBOT.

The messe of pap hath scalded M. Bishops mouth, and he would faine put it off to M. Perkins. Hee is ashamed of the childishnesse of this reason, yet not denying it to be one of theirs, but onely blameth M. Perkins his manner of proposing it, whereas we imagine he would haue done it, if he had knowne how to haue proposed it in better sort. But because he is so desirous to passe it ouer, let vs be content also to let it goe, leauing the messe of pap to them whose the reason is, and let vs followe him to examine the authorities which hee bringeth for prooue of their traditions. The first is from the words of Christ^a at the point of his passion saying that he had manie things to say vnto his Apostles, but they could not as then beare them. Which wordes being of old a speciall refuge^b of Macentanus the hereticke, an ancient Papist, we cannot wonder to be vsed now by the Papistes for the shrowding of that trash and the like as they haue borrowed of him. But of these wordes so much had bin said^c before as that I need not here to stand vpon them any further. His second authoritie is that in the Actes, concerning our Sauours appearing to his Disciples^d by the space of fortie dayes, and speaking of the things which appertaine to the kingdome of God. Of these things (saith M. Bishop) little is written in any of the Euangelistes. And we desire to know what hee hath learned of those things by tradition: and if hee will name to vs these or these things, wee desire to know how hee can prooue that those were the things whereof Christ spake: if hee cannot prooue it, we reiect his foolish presumption, and can much better denie then he affirme, What those things were, by tradition we know nothing, but by Scripture we doe know. The effect of all his speeches is set downe by S. Luke in his last chapter. There he maketh his Apostles^e witnesses of those things which he spake. What they witnessed, appeareth in their Sermons euery where in the Actes of the Apostles, and in their Epistles and writings, all consonant and agreeable to that brieue summe there expressed by S. Luke. Nowe then to argue as wee haue done before, we are sure as touching the things that are written, that they are of those things whereof Christ spake: but how doth M. Bishop prooue that he spake any thing more then that that is written? It is expressed by S. Luke that the things whercof

^a Iohn. 16. 12.^b Tertul. de uelant. uirg. 1.^c Sect. 7.^d Act. 13.^e Luke. 24. 48.

whereof Christ spake were things appertaining to the kingdome of God. But S. Paul^e testified the kingdome of God out of the lawe of Moses and out of the Prophets. The things therefore which Christ spake, as is also imported in the last of S. Lukes Gospell, were no other but according to the Scriptures of Moses and the Prophets, and therefore M. Bishops conceit of matters vnwritten must needs be an idle dreame. Thirdly he alledgeth the Apostles wordes, commending the Corinthians for that ^h they kept the traditions even as hee had deliuered the same vnto them. Where we find the name of traditions, which wee denie not, but traditions of doctrine that should remaine vnwritten wee finde not. By traditions wee vnderstand here out of the circumstance of the words following, rites and ceremonies prescribed by the Apostle for order and decencie in the publicke assembly of their Church, which kinde of traditions M. Perkins hath acknowledged in the beginning of this question. If M. Bishop will alledge that this is but a shift, and will needs enforce that it must be vnderstood of matters of doctrine, we wil gratifie him so farre, but still we require him to prooue that those matters of doctrine were any other then were afterwarde putte in writing. There was but litle of the new testament written at the writing of this Epistle. Those things which were afterwarde written must needs be vnderstood in these traditions whereof the Apostle speaketh, if we vnderstand them of doctrine, because we know that by his preaching he had deliuered those things vnto them. And if the Apostles wordes be necessarily to be vnderstood of those things that are written, wee desire to know how they can enforce any necessitie of vnderstanding any other things thereby. One of these traditions he mentioneth afterwarde,ⁱ the institution of the Lords Supper. It is written by himselfe, it is written by the Euangelistes. Here is then a tradition, but no tradition vnwritten. The sacrament of Baptisme was another of his traditions, but that is written also. Another tradition he himselfe expresseth, to haue bene ^k the death and resurrection of Christ, but that tradition is also plentifully contained in the Scriptures. So elsewhere he signifieth it to haue bene ^l his tradition, that hee which would not labour should not eate, and that tradition he hath also ^m there set downe in writing. Now sith these were of the number of his traditions, and yet are written, what should hinder but that the rest are written as well as these?

M. Bishop

FA 2. 28. 23.

g Luk 24. 37.
44. 46.

h I. Cor. 11. 2.

i Ver. 23.

k 2. Cor. 15. 3.

l 2. Thess. 3. 6.

m Ver 10.

M. Bishop alleadgeth the place, and so leaueth it without head or taile: there is the name of traditions, and that is enough for him, whereas if he should draw an argument from thence for their traditions, he knoweth that his folly would too plainly appeare. His next citation is out of S. Paule to Timothy: "O Timothy keepe the depositum saith he. Where we see that one ape will be like another: his masters of Rhemes would affect a foolish kinde of singularitye in translating, and he will shew himselfe as wise as they. Why could they not as well haue giuen English, and sayd, keepe that that is committed vnto thee to keepe, seeing that is the signification of the word depositum. Yet in the other place hee is content to leaue them, "Hold fast by the holy Ghost: the good things comitted vnto thee to keepe, where they read, keepe the good depositum. But what is that that was thus committed to Timothy to keepe? He telleth vs, that it was the true doctrine of christ, the true sence of holy Scriptures, the right administration of the Sacraments, and the government of the Church. But what of all this? Wee expected vnwritten traditions, and in all these things wee see no necessitie to vnderstand any thing but that that is contained in the Scriptures. In the Scriptures wee learne the true doctrine of Christe: and whatsoeuer is contained in the true sence of Scripture, is contained in the Scripture. There we learne whatsoeuer necessarily belongeth to the administration of the sacraments and government of the Church, But our question is heere of necessary doctrines which are neyther contained in the woord nor sence of holy Scripture, and M. Bishop doth amisse in the citing of these places, vnlesse hee can make it good, that such were committed to Timothy By S. Paul. Albeit those particulars are neither set downe by Chrysostome nor Theophylact: onely Theophylact generally expoundeth the words thus, Whatsoeuer things haue bene committed vnto thee by me, keepe as the commandements of the Lord, and diminish nothing thereof. Now although those wordes haue reference to more then is written in those two Epistles, yet they haue not reference absolutely to more then is written, because in the latter of those Epistles the Apostle plainly telleth him, that the Scriptures are able to make him wise vnto saluation through the faith which is in Christ Iesus. As for that which M. Bishop alleadgeth out of Ireneus, it is nothing at all to his purpose. He saith that the Apostles haue laid up in the church, as in a rich treasury, all things that belong to the truth; but how

1. Tim. 6. 20.

2. Tim. 1. 14.

p Theo. in Tim. cap
6. Quacumq; scilicet tibi sunt per me
demandata tanquam Dominipracepta seruata, nec
horum quicquam
imminues.

q 2. Tim. 3. 15.
Iren. lib. 3. ca. 4.
Apostoli quasi in deposito. nam diues plenissime in Ecc'e
sua contulerunt
omnia qua sunt ueritati.

how they haue laide the same vp in the Church, hee hath before expressed: The Gospell which they first preached, they after by the will of God deliuered to vs in the Scriptures to bee the foundation and pillar of our faith. Thus then the Church is the treasury of truth, by hauing the Scriptures which are the oracles of all truth. His last authoritie is taken from the wordes of S. Iohn which he vseth in his two latter Epistles: Hauiug many thinges to write vnto you, I would not write with paper and inke, but I trust to come vnto you and speake with you mouth to mouth. We see S. Iohns words, but hard it is to say how we should conclude traditions from them, S. Iohn would write no more to them in that sort, or in those Epistles: but doth it follow hereof that hee would teach them any thing that is not contained in the Scriptures? He might haue many things to write vnto them according to the Scriptures: and what should leade vs to presume that he should meane it of other thinges whereof wee are taught nothing there? In a worde, what is there in the citing of all these authorities but iupudent and shamelesse abusing of ignorant men, whilest for a colour hee onely setteth them downe, and for shame dareth not set downe how that should bee inferred that is in question betwixt vs and them? But to fill vp the measure of this illusion he goeth on yet further, and by way of specification asketh, Where is it written that the Sonne of God is of the same substance with the Father? or that the holy Ghost proceedeth from the Sonne as well as from the Father? or that there is a Trinitie, that is, three persons really distinct in one and the very same substance, or that there is in Christ the substance of God and man subsisting in one second person of the Trinitie? Absurd & wilful wrangler, where was it written which Christ sayd, Thus it is writtē and thus it beehooned Christe to suffer and to rise againe from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sinnes should be preached in his name amongst all nations. Where is it written in the Prophets which S. Peter alleadgeth, To him giue all the Prophets witnes that through his name all that beleeue in him shall haue forgiveness of sinnes? Where doe Moses and the Prophets say that which Saint Paule saith, they doe say that Christ should suffer, and that hee should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should shew light to the people and to the Gentiles? To come nearer to him, he hath told vs before, that the articles of our beleeve are contained in the Scriptures. But where is it written in the Scriptures, that wee should beleeue

† Ibid. cap. 1.

† Luke. 24. 46

‡ Acts. 10. 43.

x 1b: d. 16. 12. 13.

beleeue in God the Father almightie, maker of heauen and earth? or that we should beleeue in the holy Ghost? or that there is a holy Catholicke Church, a communion of Saints? I will say as he saith here, Be not all these things necessary to be beleued, and yet not one of them in expresse termes written in any part of the holy Bible? Hee will say, that though they be not there written in expresse termes, yet in effect and substance they were written there, and are thereby to be declared and prooued, and so hee will verifie the wordes of our Sauour Christ and his Apostles Peter and Paul, in those citations of Moses and the Prophets. Wizard, and are not those other articles then written in the Scriptures, because they are not written in expresse termes? Did not the Fathers conceiue all those poyntes of faith from the Scriptures, and by the Scriptures make prooue of them? Is it not the rule of their owne schooles which I haue before mentioned out of Thomas Aquinas, that concerning God nothing is to be said, but what either in words or in sense is contained in the Scriptures? What, are we maintainers of traditions, in saying that faith onely iustificth, that Christe onely is our mediator to the Father, that Saints are not to be inuocated, nor their images to be worshipped, because these things are no where written in expresse termes? Let it not offend thee, gentle Reader, that I be moued, to see a lewd man labouring by vaine cauillations to sophisticate and delude those that are not able to vnderstande his cosinage and fraud. It is the cause of God, and who canne beare it patiently that the soules which Christe hath bought should bee intoxicated with such charmes? We doe not say, that nothing is to be beleued but what is written in the Scriptures in expresse termes, but wee say that nothing is to bee beleued but what either is expressed in the Scriptures, or may be proued thereby, and therefore in oppugning traditions, we oppugne onely such doctrines of faith, as neither are expressed in the Scriptures, nor can bee prooued by the Scriptures. Let M. Bishop proue their traditions by the Scriptures, and we will not reiect them for vnwritten traditions, but will receiue them for written truth. But of this see what hath beene sayde before in the twelfth section of this question, and in the eleuenth section of the answer to his Epistle to the King.

The sixth and last reason for traditions: Sundry places of holy Scriptures be hard to be understood, others doubtfull, whether they must be taken literally or figuratively: if then it bee put to every Christian to take their owne exposition, every severall sect wil coyne interpretations in favour of their owne opinion: and so shall the word of God, or dained only to teach us the truth, be abused and made an instrument to confirme all errors. To avoide which inconuenience, considerate men haue recourse vnto the traditions and auncient records of the Primitiue Church, receiued from the Apostles, and deliuered to the posteritie, as the true copies of Gods word see the true exposition and sense of it, and thereby confute and reiect all priuate and new glosses which agree not with those auncient and holy commentaries: so that for the understanding of both difficult and doubtfull texts of Scripture, traditions are most necessary.

M. Perkins his answer is, that there is no such need of them, but in doubtfull places, the Scripture it self is the best glosse, if there be obserued first the analogie of faith, which is the summe of religion, gathered out of the clearest places, secondly the circumstance of the place, and the nature and significati^on of the wordes: thirdly the conference of place with place and concludeth, that the Scripture is falsly termed the matter of strife: it being not of it selfe, but by the abuse of man.

Reply. To begin with his latter wordes, because I must stand upon the former. Is the Scripture falsly termed matter of strife, because it is not so of his owne nature? why then, is Christ truly called the stone of offence or no to them that beleue not? S. Peter saith, Yes. No. saith M. Perkins, because that cometh not of christ, but of themselues. But good Sir, christe is truly termed a stone of offence, and the scripture matter of strife, albeit there be no cause in them of those faults, but because it so falleth out by the malice of men.

The question is not wherefore it is so called, but whether it bee so called or no truly: that which truly is, may be so called truly. But the scripture truly is matter of great contention, every obstinate hereticke understanding them according to his owne fantasie, and therefore may truly be so termed, although it be not the cause of contention in it selfe, but written to take away all contention.

But to the capitall matter, these three rules gathered out of Saint Augustine, be good directions, whereby sober and sound wits may much profite profite in study of Diuinitie, if they neglect not other ordinary helps of good instructions and learned commentaries: but to affirme that euery christian may by these meanes bee enabled to iudge which is the true sence of any doubtfull or hard text, is extreme rashnesse and meere folly. S. Augustine himselve wel conuersant in these rules, endued with a most happy witte, and yet much bettered with the excellent knowledge of all the liberall Sciences: yet he hauing most diligently studied the holy Scriptures for more then thirtie yeares, with the helpe also of the best commentaries he could get, and counsell of the most exquisite, yet he ingenuously confesseth, That there were more places of Scripture, that after all his study he vnderstood not, then which he did vnderstand. And shall euery simple man furnished onely with M. Perkins his three rules of not twise three lines, bee able to dissolue any difficultie in them whatsoever? Why do the Lutherans (to omit all former heretikes) vnderstand in one sort, the Calvinists after another, the Anabaptists a third way, and so of other sects?

And in our owne country how cometh it to passe that the Protestants find one thing in the holy Scriptures, the Puritans almost the cleane contrary? Why I say as there so great, bitter, and endlesse contention among brothers of the same spirit, about the meaning of Gods word; If euery one might by the ayd of those triuiall notes, readily disclose all difficulties, and assuredly boult out the certaine truth of them. It cannot bee but most euident to men of any iudgement, that the Scripture it selfe canne neuer end any doubtfull controuersie, without there be admitted some certain iudge to declare what is the true meaning of it. And it cannot but redound to the dishonor of our blessed Saviour, to say that he hath left a matter of such importance at random, and hath not provided for his seruants an assured meane to attaine to the true vnderstanding of it. If in matters of temporall iustice, it should be permitted to euery contentions (smatterer in the Law to expound and conster the groundes of the lawe and statutes as it should seeme fittest in his wisdom, and not bee bound to stand to the sentence and declaration of the iudge, what iniquitie should not bee law, or when should there be any end of any hard matter, one Lawyer defending one part, another the other: one counsellor assuring on his certain knowledge, one party to haue the right, another as certainly auerring not that, but the contrary to bee lawe, both alledging for their warrant some texts of Law. What end and pacification of the parties could be demised, vnlesse the decision of the controuersie bee committed vnto the definitive

finitive sentence of some, who should declare whether counsellor had argued iustly, & according to the true meaning of the law: none at all, but bloudy debate & perpetuall conflict each pursuing to get or keepe by force of armes, that which his learned counsell aunched to be his owne.

To auoid then such garboiles and intestine contention, there was neuer yet any law-maker so simple, but appointed some gouernour and Iudge who should see the due obseruation of his Lawes, & determine all doubts that might arise about the letter and exposition of the Law, who is therefore called the quicke and liuely law; and shall we Christians thinke that our diuine Law-maker; who in wisdom, care, and prouidence, surmounted all others, more then the heauens doe the earth, hath left his golden lawes at random, to be interpreted as it should seeme best vnto euery one pretending some hidden knowledge from we know not what spirit? no no, it cannot be once imagined without too too great derogation vnto the soueraigne prouidence of the Sonne of God.

In the old Testament, which was but a state of bondage, & as it were an introduction to the new, yet was there one appointed vnto whom they were commanded to repaire for the resolution of all doubtsfull cases concerning the Law: yea, and bound (were they vnder paine of death) to stand to his determination; and shal we be so simple as to suffer our selues to be perswaded, that in the glorious state of the Gospell, plotted and framed by the wisdom of God himselfe, worse order shuld be taken for this high point of the true vnderstanding of the holy Gospell it selfe, being the life and soule of all the rest?

R, ABBOT.

It is truly said by Thomas Aquinas, that ^a in propriety of speeches we are not onely to regard the thing signified, but also the manner of signification. A speech may be true & yet true only in some manner of signification, which therefore in propriety of speech is not true, because the thing properly & of it selfe is not that that the speech importeth it to be. Christ, saith M. Bishop, is truly called the rocke of offence.

*a Thom. Aquin.
sum. p. 1. q. 39.
art. 4. c. In prop-rietatibus locutionum non tan-
tum attendenda
est significatio, sed etiam modus significandi.*

Be it so, yet it is true only in some manner of signification, in which it is that the Scripture so calleth him; in propriety of speech it is not true, because Christ of himselfe and properly is not so. He becometh so to vnbeleeuers onely by their default, and therefore onely accidentally and respectiuelly is so called: set aside the respect, and hee cannot bee truly called so. Euen so the Scriptures are made a matter of strife by the iniquitie and importunitie of euill men, and to them onely they are so called whereas in themselues they are not so, but properly serue for the ending and determining of all strife. Maister Perkins therefore might iustly say, that they are falsly termed the matter of strife, hauing respect to the affection & intention of them by whome they were so termed. For they who gaue this name, gaue it by way of deprauing and disgracing the Scriptures, when being required by vs to stand to the iudgement of the Scriptures, they refused to do so, & alleadged that the Scriptures could giue no iudgement, but rather were themselues matter of controuersie and strife; seeking by this pretence to draw all to the determination of their owne Church. But herein they offered indignity and dishonour to him who hath giuen vnto vs ^b his word to be the lanterne vnto our feete, & the light vnto our steppes, by his precepts to get vnderstanding to hate al the waies of falshood. Froward men may take occasion to strue about matters of the Scripures, when notwithstanding the Scriptures cleare those things whereabout they strue. ^c The Scriptures, saith Tertullian, seeme to minister matter to heretikes, but yet they are to bee conuicted by the same Scriptures. Where there is in the heart humility and obedience to the word of God, there question and controuersie soone endeth: but where there is frowardnesse and selfewill, there will be no end of contention, howsoeuer there be apparent conuiction. To leaue this, & to come to the matter specially in hand, it seemeth that M. Bishop hath much forgotten what he was about, The matter in hand is to proue traditions, that is, doctrines of faith beside the Scriptures, & he maketh here a long discourse concerning the meanes of attaining to the vnderstanding of the Scriptures. Let that meanes bee what it may be; in the true vnderstanding of the Scriptures there is no other but the doctrine of the Scripture; and what is that to their traditions? In this argument he & his fellowes keepe their woont that is to trifle and say nothing to the matter whereof they pretend to speake. Yet to follow them in their own steps, the question is of the true interpreting and expounding of the Scriptures. It is apparant they say, what the Scripture saith, but it is doubtfull what it meaneth. There be many difficulties; some expound one way, some another way, hut how is it to be knowne who expoundeth the right way?

b Psal. 119. 104
105.

c Tertul. de re-
sur. carn. Videntur illis materi-
as quasdam subministrasse &
ipsum quidem
system literis conuincibiles.

way? M. Perkins bringeth them in playing their old trump, that we must haue recourse to the tradition of the Church, imitating therein the old heretikes, whose allegation was as Irenaus recordeth, that ^d by the Scriptures the truth could not be found out by them that were ignorant of tradition. To this M. Perkins answereth, that the Scripture it selfe declareth it owne meaning, if we obserue the analogie of faith gathered out of the manifest places of Scripture, if we weigh the circumstance of the place, and signification of the words: if we diligently weigh and compare one place with another, and vse such other like helpes as the Scripture yeeldeth. With these wordes M. Bishop notably playeth the tycophant, as if M. Perkins hereby affirmed, that every christian man by these meanes is enabled to iudge which is the true sence of any doubifull or hard text, that every simple man furnished with these three rules, is able to resolue any difficultie in the scriptures whatsoener. Against this hee bringeth in the confession of S. Austine, that after so long study, the things which he knew not in the Scripture, were more then those which he did know. Thus he setteth vp a S. Quintin for himselfe, and bestoweth himselfe very valiantly in running at it. But where doth M. Perkins professe this effect of those three rules with every christian man, every simple man, nay where doth he affirme so much of any learned man, be he neuer so learned? Hee setteth downe those rules as S. Austine doth the same and many other, as necessary helpes for the searching of the truth, and by the exercise whereof men should labour to profite & grow in the vnderstanding of the Scriptures, and may attaine to the knowledge of that truth that is necessary to saluation, but farre was he from conceiuing that which M. Bishop speaketh of, that every simple man may thereby resolue all difficulties whatsoener. M. Bishop for the attaining of the sence of Scripture, referreth vs to their Iudge, and to the traditions and auuncient recordes of the primitive Church, to those auuncient and holy commentaries. But is he so witlesse as to thinke that any man vsing this direction of his, shall be thereby enabled in the Scriptures, to resolue all difficulties whatsoener? If he will haue no such fantastlicall paradox gathered of that which he saith, why doth he lay the imputation of it vpon M. Perkins, when it followeth no more of M. Perkins speech one way, then it doth of his the other way? As for his question, why the Lutherans notwithstanding these rules, do vnderstand the Scriptures in one sort, the Calvinists after another,

d Iren. lib. 3. cap. 2
Cum arguuntur ex Scriptura in accusationem con-
uertuntur: ipsarum
scripturarum, &c.
quia non possit ex
his inueniri veritas
ab his qui nesciunt traditionem.

ther, the Anabaptists a third way, we answer him, that in his question there is more malice then wit. We aske him the like question, how it commeth to passe that notwithstanding their rules & directions, yet all these differ from them in the expounding of Scripture? Now as he will answer that notwithstanding their directions be true, yet that cannot hinder but that heretickes will dissent from them, so we answer him, that notwithstanding our rules and instructions in this behalfe be true, and taken from the course of the auncient Fathers, yet that cannot let, but that Popish heretickes, and selfe-willed Lutherans, and foolish mad Anabaptists will dissent from vs. If he wil say that albeit all these dissent from them, yet they themselues agree in one, the like will be sayd of all other parties, that albeit others do vary from them, yet amongst themselues they vary not. It is therefore no more preiudice to our rules that others dissent from vs, then it is to Papists that we dissent from them. As for the Anabaptists, let him not put them to vs, because we wholly detest them, but rather take them home to them, because being both of them the wicked offspring of him who is a liar, and the father of lies, they haue both learned of him to teach men by equiuocations & mentall reservations, to lye, to periure & forswear theselues. As for our owne country, we must tell him that the dissension betwixt Protestants & Puritans, was neuer so mortall and deadly amongst vs, as was the dissention of the secular Priests & Iesuites amongst them: the one in no sort to be cōpared to the other. If there might be such a garboile more then hellish or deuillish amongst them without preiudice of their religion, what preiudice should it be to vs, that there is some matter of difference amongst vs? He will say that the maine matter amongst them, was but a matter of circumstance & of gouernment and so his wisdom knoweth, if he list, that the matters of controuerse amongst vs, are onely matters of ceremonie and forme. Hee will say that they all accorded in the religion established by the councill of Trent, and so let him knowe, that we on both parts subscribe to the same articles of religion established amongst vs. He will say that there is some controuersie about the meaning of some of those articles amongst vs, and so lette him remember that there is great question of the meaning of some of the articles of the Trent religion amongst them. In a woorde, wee are able alwayes to iustifie, that in substantiall poynts of faith there is no

e Iohn.8.44.

so great difference amongst vs, but that there is greater to be proued to haue bene continually amongst them. But now M. Bishop hauing lightly passed ouer those obseruations of M. Perkins, commeth himselte to set vs downe a course for the attaining of the true and right sence of holy Scripture. For the first part whereof, he be-stirreth his Rhetoricall stumpe by way of declamation, to shew vs how necessary it is, that in the Christian church there should be a Iudge for the deciding and determining of controuersies and questions that arise about the Scriptures, and if in matters of temporall iustice Iudges be appointed, and euery law-maker doe ordaine gouernours and Iudges for the declaring and executing of his lawes and God tooke this course amongst the people of Israel in the old testament, hee telleth vs that surely Christ in the new testament would not leaue his church vnprovided in this behalfe. Where we will seeme for a time, not to know his meaning, but will simply answer him, that Christ in this behalfe hath provided for his Church, hauing given thereto ^f Pastours and teachers for the gathering toge- ther of the Saints, for the worke of the ministry, and for the building up of the body of Christ, till we all meete together in the vnyty of faith and knowledge of the sonne of God vnto a perfect man. As in ciuill states there are appointed magistrates and gouernours in townes and cities, for the resolution and deciding of causes and questions of ciuill affaires, so hath God appointed the ministers of his word, euery one according to the portion of the Lords flocke committed vnto him, to deliuer what the law of God is, and to answer and resolue cases and doubts, as touching faith and duty towards God, ^g to be able to ex- hort with wholesome doctrine, and to improue them that speake against it; to be the same to the people, as God of old required the Priests to be, ^h The Priests lippes should preserue knowledge, and men should seeke the lawe at his mouth, for he is the messenger of the Lord of hostes.
 If of these ⁱ any arise speaking peruerse things to draw Disciples after them, the rest are warned ^k to take heede to the Lords flocke, and therfore are by comon sentence & iudgement to condemne such that thereby the people of God may take knowledge to beware of them But if in the Church any controuersie or question depend parts being taken this way & that way, so that the vnyty of faith and peace of the Church is endangered therby, the example of the Apostles is to be imitated, and insolemne assembly & councill the matter is to

Eph. 4. 11. 12.

Tit. 1. 9.

Malach. 2. 7.

i Act. 20. 30.

k Ver. 28.

be discussed and determined, the Bishops and Pastors gathering themselves together either in lesser or greater companie as the occasion doth require, and applying themselves to doe that that may be for the peace and edification of the Church. And this hath bene the care of godly Christian Princes, that ¹ as amongst the Jews there was a high court of iudgement established for the matters of the Lord, to the sentence whereof they were appointed to stand, yea and he that did presumptuously oppose himselfe, was to die for his contempt; so there should be in their Christian States consistories of iudgement, assemblies and meetings of Bishops for considering and aduising of the causes of the Church, and what could not be determined in a lesser meeting should be referred to a greater, to a Councell prouinciall, or nationall, or generall. By their authoritie they haue gathered them together, they haue sometimes bin themselves present and sitten with them as moderators and after as princes haue by their edicts ratified and confirmed what hath bene agreed vpon, as we may see in ^m Constantine the great in the Council of Nice, in ⁿ Constantine the fourth in the sixth Synod at Constantinople in Trullo, in ^o Reccaredus the King of Spaine in the third Councell of Toledo. Now therefore albeit the Empire being diuided, and many Princes of diuers dispositions possessing their seuerall kingdomes and states, there be no expectation or hope of a generall council yet M. Bishop seeth that we hold it necessary that in euery Christian state there should be Iudges appointed for the causes and matters of the Lord and of the church, euen as in our church of England we haue our soueraigne Synods prouincial or nationall, the sentence whereof we account so waightly, as that no man may dare vpon peril of his soule presumptuously to gainsay the same. But yet withall, for the excluding of his issue, he must vnderstand that in causes & matters of faith and of the worship of God, we make these to whom this iudgement is comited, not lawgiuers at all, but Iudges only. As therfore the Iudge is not his owne mouth, but the mouth of the law, not to speak what he liketh, but what the lawe directeth nor to make any other construction of the law but what is warranted by the law: euen so the Iudge ecclesiasticall is to be the mouth of God, not ^p to follow his owne spirit, nor ^q to speake the vision of his owne hart, but out of the mouth of the Lord, neither to make other interpretation of the laws of God ther by the same lawes can be iustified & made good

1 Deut. 17. 8. 9.
2 Chron. 19. 8.

m Euse. de vita.
Constant. li 3. ca. 13
Prolatas sensim ex-
cipere, vicissim
serreopem utriusq;
parti, &c. quid: pfe
sentires eloqui.
n Synod. in Trullo per tot. Praesidente eodem pissimo Imperato-
re, &c. Conuersi-ente Synodo secundum Imperiali
sanctionem.
o Tolos. in. concil. 3.
Principes omnes re-
giminis sus postifi-
ces in unum con-
uenire mandauit,
&c. per tot.

p Ezech. 13. 8.
q ierem. 23. 16.

good. Thus we see, that as God tyed the Jewes to the sentence of the Priestes, so he requireth the sentence of the Priestes to be according to the law. According to the law, which (law) they shall teach thee thou shalt do: thou shalt not decline from the thing which they shall shewe thee. The Hebrew glose, saith Lyra, here teacheth, that if they say to thee, that the right hand is the left, or the left the right, this sentence is to be holden, which appeareth to be manifestly false, saith he, because the sentence of no man is to be holden of what authoritie so-euer hee bee, if it do manifestly containe falshood and error, and this is plaine by that that is put before in the text, They shall shew thee the truth of iudgement, and is afterwards added, They shall teach thee according to the law, whereby it is plaine that if they say any thing false, or decline manifestly from the law of God, they are not to be hearkened vnto. It is not then so to be conceiued, as that obedience should bee absolutely due vnto them, because as in the ciuill state there may bee corrupt Iudges that wrest the law, and giue sentence against law, so there may be corrupt men also in places of Ecclesiasticall iudgement, men more affected to their owne will, then to the woord of God, seeking rather themselues then Iesus Christ. It is therefore to be obserued, that as in matters of ciuill iustice, some things there are in the Law so cleare, that if the sentence of the Iudge be contrary thereto, euery man may discern and see that he swaureth from the truth, neither will a man take it to be law which the Iudge pronounceth, because his owne eyes perceiue the contrary: so those things that concerne faith and religion towards God, some things by the Scripture it selfe are so apparent and plaine, as that it is manifest, that not for any ambiguity in themselues, but by the iniquity and frowardnesse of men they are called into question: and that to question the exposition, is nothing else but to seeke collusion. In which cases the Iudge hath no more to do, but to deliuer the preremptory sentence of God himselfe, not to weigh, as S. Austine saith, but to recognize and acknowledge what the Lord hath already weighed. Sometimes matters are more hard and doubtfull, not so much haply of themselues, as by meanes of opposition and contradiction, and therefore are not so readily plaine, vntill they be made plaine. For the explaining and declaring whereof, the Church as the Iudge is to vse the helpe of the law it selfe, that is, of the holy Scripture, and to that purpose to apply the rules before expressed, and so not by meere authority, but by

1 Deut. 17. 11.

Lyra. ibid. Hic dicitur, si Hebraei ca. si dixerint tibi quod dexter a sit sinistra, vel sinistra dexter a, alu sententia est tenenda quod patet manifeste salsum esse, quod sententia nullius hominu cuiuscuq; sit autoritatu est tenenda, si contineat manifeste falsitatem vel errorem & hoc patet per hoc quod praemittitur in textu. Indicabunt tibi iudici veritatem, & postea subditur Et docuerint te iuxta legem eius. Ex quo patet quod: si dicunt falsum vel declinent a lege Dei manifeste, non sunt audiendi.

t. Aug. de bapt. conc. Dona. l. b. 2. ca. 6. offeramus statera diuinam in scripturis sanctis, & in illa quid sit grauius appendamus immo non appendamus sed a Domino appensa recognoscimus.

testimonie and warrant, to approue to the conscience of euery man the sentence that shall be giuen for determining the thing in doubt.

u Origen. in Lemit. hom. 5. In duobus testamentis licet omne verbum quod ad Deū pertinet requiritur & discutiatur ex ipsis omnem rerum scientiam capiunt. Si quid autē super fuerit quod non diuina scriptura discernat, nulla alia tertia scriptura debet ad authoritatē scientia suscipi, sed quod superest, Deo referuamus.

x Idē in Ierem. ho. 2. Necessē est nobis Scripturas sanctas in testimonium vocare. Sensus quoque nostri & enarratiōnes sine his testimoniis non habent fidem.

y Idem. in Math. 23. Debemus ad testimonium omnium uerborum quae proferimus in doctrina proferre sensum scripturam quasi confirmantem quem exponimus sensum. Si cut enim orane auris extra templum non est sanctificatio, sic omnis sensus qui fuerit extra diuinam scripturam, quamuis admirabili uideatur quibusdam, non est sanctus, quia non continetur a sensu scripturam quae solet cum salum sensum sanctificare quem in se habet.

By the two testaments, saith Origen, euery word that pertaineth to God may be searched out and discussed, and all knowledge of things may be taken from them, and if there be any thing further, which the holy Scripture determineth not, there ought no other writing bee receiued for authority of knowledge, but what remaineth we must reserve to God. It is necessary for vs, saith he, that we call the holy Scriptures to witnesse, for our sences and expositions without these witnesses haue no credit. Wee must, saith he again, for witnesse of all the words which we utter in teaching, bring forth the sence of Scripture, as cōfirming the sence which wee deliuer: for as all the gold which was without the temple was unholy, so euery sence which is without the holy Scripture, though to some it may seeme admirable, is unholy, because it is not contained of the sence of Scripture, which is wont to make holy, onely that sence which it hath in it self. By this rule the iudgement of the Church is to proceed, & so to vse the gift of interpretation, as that he that gainsaith may be conuicted as by the testimony of God himselfe, and they who haue not the gift of interpretation, may yet see and perceiue that their constructions and expositions are according to the Scripture. Now if the Church in their affirming or expounding, shall contrary that which the Scripture hath manifestly taught, & vnder pretence of being the Iudge in the causes of God, shall iudge against God, what shall we then do? Surely as a priuate man may by ordinary knowledge of the law, be able to accuse a Iudge of high treason against his Prince, eue so in this case a priuate manne by ordinary knowledge of the law of God, may be able to accuse the Church of high treason against God. And as it is ridiculous in case of treason, to alledge that it belongeth to the Iudge to giue the meaning of the law, and to leaue him at libertie to expound it, that it may rest therupon whether his own fact be treason or not: so it is in like sort ridiculous, to alledge that it belongeth to the church, to make the meaning of the Scriptures, that the Church is iudge, & it must rest in the power thereof, by expounding the scriptures to determine whether that which it selfe cōmandeth, be offence to God or not, The Church indeede is Iudge, but tyed to bounds of Lawe: if the Church Iudge against the euidence of the law, then God himselfe by his owne word is to be the Iudge. For what an absurditie shall it be further to require a Iudge, where God himselfe hath pronounced a sentence, or to require after a meaning where the Law speaketh as plainly as the Iudge can deuise to speake? When the Iudges of the people of the Iewes sayd, ^a A confederacie, and Esay the Prophet cryed out, say not, A confederacie, that is, followe not them that leade you to leagues and covenants with idolatrous nations, who was to bee the Iudge betwixt them? Esay saith to the people: ^a To the law and to the testimonie: if they speake not according to this worde, it is because there is no light in them Who was to be the Iudge when the Prophet Jeremie said one thing, and ^b The Priests and Prophets who were the Iudges, saide another? They said, ^c This man is worthy to die: he saith, If ye put me to death, ye shall bring innocent blood upon your selues. Who was now to be iudge betwixt them? Surely none but ^d the lawes which God had set before them, to which he calleth them: ^e the couenant which he commaunded their Fathers when hee brought them out of the land of Egypt. When our Sauour Christ stood on the one side, and the Iudges, namely, the high Priests, and Scribes, and Elders of the people on the other side, where was the Iudge? ^f Search the Scriptures, saith our Sauour Christ, for they are they that testifie of me. Wee see the highest court of iudgement vnder heauen pronounceth sentence against the Sonne of God. God indeed had appointed them for Iudges, but the righteoutnesse of the cause of Christ was not to bee discerned but onely by the Scriptures. Thus it hath bene in the Church of Christ: the Donatists on the one side affirmed thetheselues to be the Church: the Catholike and godly Bishops affirmed the Church to be with them: whom did these godly Fathers make the Iudge? Optatus speaking of a maine question betwixt them, whether he that was already baptized, though by an hereticke, might be baptized againe, saith: ^g You say it is lawfull, and we say, it is not lawfull. Betweene your, it is lawfull, and our, it is not lawfull, the peoples soules do wauer. Let none beleue you: nor vs: we are all contentious men. Iudges must be sought for: if Christians, they cannot be giuen of both sides: for truth is hindered by affections. A iudge without must be sought for: if a Pagan, hee cannot know the Christian mysteries: if a Iew, he is an enemy of Christian baptism. No iudgement of this matter can be found on earth, but from heauen But why knock we at heauen, when here we haue the testament of Christ

z. Esa. 8. 12.
 a Ver. 20.
 b Ierem. 26. 11.
 c Ver. 15.
 d Ver. 4.
 e Cap. 11. 3. 4.
 f. Iohn. 5. 39.
 g Optat. contra
 Parmenian. li. 5.
 Vos dicitis, licet, nos dicimus. Non licet, Inter licet vestrum, & non licet nostrum,
 nutant & remi-
 grant animo populo rum, Nemo vobis credat, nemo
 nobis: omnes con-
 tentiosi homines sumus. Querendi sunt iudices. Si Christiani, de utra-
 que parte dari non possunt quia studys
 veritatis impeditur.
 De foru querendus
 est iudex: si Paganus,
 non potest
 nosse secreta Christiana: si Iudaus, inimicus est
 Christiani baptismi.
 Ergo inter-
 ru de hac re nul-
 lum poterit reperiri:
 iudicium, de
 calo querendus est iudex. Sed ut quis pulsamus ad
 celum, curis huius
 mundi hic? Euangelio? Testimonium inquam, &c. Ergo voluntarius vel
 sic in Testamento, sic in Euangelio inquitur.

in the Gospell? In the Gospell, as in his Testament, we are to enquire and search what his will is. To the like effect Austin speaketh as touching a question betwixt him and the Pelagians, whether there be sinne in infants from their birth or not: ¹ This controuersie requireth a iudge let Christe therefore bee iudge: let himselfe say what his death serued for: This is my bloud, saith hee, which shall be shed for many for remission of sinnes. Together with him let the Apostle iudge, because Christe himselfe speaketh also in the Apostle. Thus they made no doubt to make the Scripture the Iudge, or Christ himselfe in the Scripture: knowing well that the iudgement of the Church in such cases is no other but onely the pronouncing of a sentence already giuen by the highest Iudge. To this purpose therefore hee requireth of the Donatists the bringing foorth of such things as are euident and plaine, because Christe somewhere or other hath plainly spoken whatsoeuer is necessary for vs to know. ¹ This I say beforehand and propound, that we make choise of such speeches as are open and manifest. We are to set aside such things as are obscurely set downe, and wrapped up in couers of figures, and may be interpreted both for our part and for theirs. It belongeth to acute men to iudge and discern who doth more probably interpret those things, but we will not in a cause which the people are interested in, commit our disputation to such contentions of wit, but let the manifest truth cry and shine foorth. Reade to vs those things that are as plaine as those are that wee reade to you. Bring somewhat that needeth not any man to expound it. This is the course of Ecclesiastical iudgement: by this meanes they are to stoppe the mouths of contentious men, and to satisfie the people that are interested in the cause. By all this then it appeareth, that God hath not left his Church destitute of authoritie of iudgement, but hath both appoynted Iudges, and prescribed them lawes whereby to iudge: onely that we remember, that ^k he is the Iudge amongst the Iudges, and the sentence must be his. But now we know what it is that M. Bishop aymeth at, for he would faine haue it conceiued, that there should be some one to be iudge, and that one must be the Pope. They name sometimes the Church, and sometimes the Councell, but the Church is but the cloake bagge, and the Councell the capcase to cary the Pope whether it pleaseth them, becaule neither the Church nor Councell can define any thing but as shall be pleasing to the Pope. The Church cannot erre, the Councell cannot erre, but the reason is, because

h Aug. de nupt. & concupis. lib. 2. cap. 23. Iste controuersia iudicem quarit. Iudicet ergo Christus & cui res mors eius profecerit ipse dicat. Hic est, inquit, sanguis & c. Iudicet eum illo, & Apostolus quid & in Apostolo ipse loquitur Christus, & c.

i Idem de unit. Eccles. cap. 4. Hoc prae dico atque propono ut quasque aperta & manifeste deligamus. & c.

the Pope cannot erre. Set aside the Pope, and the Church may erre and the Councell may erre, but the Pope onely cannot erre. This is a drunken fancie, witleſſe, ſenſleſſe, ſuch as the auncient Fathers neuer imagined or dreamed of, nay, vnworthy whereof there ſhould be any queſtion, whether theſe godly Fathers approoued it or not. If we would argue from the temporall ſtate, as M. Biſhop doth, what ſtate is there or hath bene that maketh one manne Iudge and interpreter of all lawes? Hee nameth it to haue bene ſo in the old Teſtament amongſt the Iewes, but either he knoweth not, or impudently falſifieth the ſtorie in that behalfe. For the law of Mofes did not make the high Prieſt alone a Iudge, but onely as elſe where it is expounded ¹ the chiefe of them that were appointed Iudges for all mat- I 2. Chro. 19. 11.
tters of the Lord. There was a whole Councell to which thoſe cauſes were referred, and by common conſultation and iudgement things were agreed vpon, and the ſentence accordingly pronounced by the Prieſt. He had not to ſay, I determine thus or thus, but as we haue example in the Goſpell, he ſaide, ^m What thinke ye? as being to haue conſent of the reſt beefore hee could giue a ſentence. m Mat 26. 66.
Therefore Mofes ſetteth all downe in the plural number, as of many, ⁿ If there ariſe a matter too hard for thee, &c. thou ſhalt come to n Deut. 17. 8. 9.
the Prieſtes of the Leuites, and to the Iudge that ſhall bee in thoſe dayes, and aſke and they ſhall ſhew thee the ſentence of iudgement, and thou ſhalt doe according to all that they of that place ſhall ſhew thee. According to the lawe which they ſhall teach thee, thou ſhalt doe, &c. Onely becauſe the ſentence in common agreed vpon, was pronounced by the Prieſt as the chiefe, therefore it is added: ^o And the manne that o Ver. 12. ſhall do preſumptuoſly, not hearkening to the Prieſt (as touching matters of the Lord) or to the Iudge (as touching ciuill cauſes, for wee ſee theſe two plainely diſtinguiſhed each from other that man ſhall die. Nowe if God would not in that ſmall kingdome haue all to depend vpon the iudgement of any one, how improbable is it, that to one ſhould be committed a iudgement of all matters of the Lorde throughout the whole world? And how do they make it good that any ſuch power or authoritie ſhould belong vnto him? They tell vs much of Peter, but wee find not that attributed to Peter which they aſcribe to the Pope, neither do they giue vs any warrant from Chriſt that that is deſcended to the Pope which is attributed to Peter. Surely if Chriſte would haue hadde the Pope to ſucceede in Peters place place, the Popes should haue bene qualified as Peter was. But we see the contrary : for amongst all the generations of men since the world was, it cannot be shewed, that euer there was such a succession of rake-hels and hel-hounds, such monsters and incarnate diuels, as haue bene amongst them, men that haue giuen themselves wholly to the deuill, as their owne stories doe report. Hereticke, Apostataes, Atheists, dogges, most vnworthy of all other to haue the Sunne shine vpon them, or the earth to beare them. Alphonsus de Castro sayde once, though afterwardees hee was made to vnsway it :

p Alphonsi de Castro, lib. 1. ca. 4. contra haeres. Cum confet plures eorum adeo esse literatos, ut Grammaticam penitus ignorent, quis sit, ut sacras literas interpretari possint?

Thus it was printed twice at first, but after for the Popes credit he was instructed to leaue it out.

q Gregor. lib. 4. Ep. 3. 2. Vniuersa Ecclesia, quod absit, a statu suo corruit, quando i qui appellatur vniuersalis cadit. Et lib. 6. Epi. 2. 4. 1. Cyprian. de simp. Pralat. Episcopatus vnus est vnus a singulis in solidum partinetur. I dem lib. 3. Ep. 13. Ideo copiosum est corpus sacerdotum, &c. ut si qui ex hoc collegio haeres facere, & gregem Christi lacrare & vastare tentauerit, subueniant ceteri. & quasi pastores viles & misericordes oues Domnicas in gregem colligant.

P When as it is certaine, that many Popes are so vnlearned, as that they are utterly ignorant of their very Grammer, howe can it be, that they should be able to expound the Scriptures? Surely very vnlikely it is, and who doth not see it to be the most certaine and ineuitable danger of the Church, that the moderation thereof, and the determining of the faith should be committed to one, but especially to such a one? Gregorie Bishop of Rome saw it well, when the Patriarch of Constantinople making claime to be vniversal Bishop, he gaue this for one reason against that vniuersalitie, for that if there be one to bee vniversal Bishop, in his fall must bee the fall of the whole Church. And that God by the multitude of the ouerseers of his Church, hath provided for the safetie thereof, Cyprian well obserueth, who one where affirming, that the office of Bishopricke is but one, whereof euenery Bishop fully hath his part, and therefore signifying that none hath therein to challenge prerogatiue aboue another, addeth further in another place, that therefore the corporation of Bishops consisteth of many, that if any one of this Colledge or company shall assay to bring in heresies, and to rend and waste the flocke of Christ, the rest should helpe, and as good and compassionate Pastors should gather the Lordes sheepe into his fold. This prouision of God, Antichrist the man of sinne, the Bishop of Rome, being to bring the abomination of desolation into the Church of Christ, hath defeated and made voyde, challenging to himselfe alone an vniversal power and authoritie of iudgement ouer the whole Church, and vnder pretence thereof deuising and establishing in the Church whatsoever he list, to the dishonour of God, to the peruerting of the faith of Christe, and to the destruction of infinite soules, making a meaning of the woorde of GOD to serue his turne, that nothing which hee saith or doth may seeme to be controlled or checked thereby. To this purpose pose they haue bewitched the worlde to entertaine this paradoxe which in the old Christian world was neuer heard of, that ^t if a man haue the interpretation of the Church of Rome of any place of Scripture, albeit he neither know nor understand whether and how it agreeth with the wordes of the Scripture, yet hee hath the very word of God. And in like sort doe our Rhemish impostors labour to perswade their Reader, that ^u if any thing in Paules Epistles sound to him as contrarie to the doctrine of the catholike church, (it is not vnknown what church they meane) he faileth of the right sense. Thus howsoeuer clearly the scripture soundeth, yet it meaneth not that which it saith, if it be contrary to that which they affirme. To this impudent deuise they are driuen, because they see that the Scripture condemneth them, vnlesse they themselues haue the managing of the Scripture that if the Scripture bee admitted for Iudge, it peremptorily pronounceth sentence against them, so that they haue no meanes to colour their abominations, but by challenging to themselues to be iudges of the scripture. As for vs we hang the doctrine of faith, not vpon our expositions, but vpon the very wordes of God himselfe: we make the holy scripture the iudge, not in ambiguous and doubtfull speeches, but in cleare and eident sentences, where the very wordes declare what the meaning is. It is a question betwix vs and them whether Saintes images bee to bee worshipped or not: they say they are, we say they are not. Let the Iudge speake, ^x Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any likeness of any thing in heauen above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth; thou shalt not bow downe to them, nor worship them. It is a question whether there bee now any sacrifice to be offered for the forgiuenesse of sins. They say there is so in their Masse, wee say there is none. Let the Iudge speake: ^y This is my bloud of the newe Testament which is shed for you, and for many for remission of sins. ^z Now where remission of sins is, there is no more offering for sin. It is a question beetwixt vs, whether the Saints be our Mediators vnto God or not. They say they are, we say they are not. Let the Iudge determine it, ^a There is one God (saith he) and one mediator betwixt God and man, euen the man Iesus Christe. It is a question whether a man bee iustified beefore God by workes or not. They say it must bee so: wee say it cannot be. Let the Iudge answer it, ^b By the workes of the lawe shall no flesh bee iustified in his sight. ^c That no manne is iustified by the law in the sight of God, it

^t Hosius de expres-so Dei verbo Sa-qu habet inter-pretationem Ecclē-sia Romana de ali-
quo loco Scriptura
etiamsi nec sciat
nec intelligat an quomodo cum Scriptura verbi
conueniat, tamen
habet ipsissimum
verbum Dei.
^u Rhem. Testam.
Argument of the Epistles in generall.

^x Exod. 20. 4.
Deut. 5. 8.

^y Mat. 26. 28
^z Heb. 10. 18.

^a 1. Tm. 1. 5.

^b Rom. 3. 20.
^c Gal. 3. 11. 12.

is evident, for the iust shall liue by faith, and the law is not of faith, but the man that shall doe those things shall liue in them. They alledge that the Iudge saith, that ^d a man is iustified by workes, and not by faith onely: we say, that that is onely in the sight of men or with men: they say, that it is in the sight of God. Let the iudge end it. If Abraham were iustified by workes, he had to reioyce, but not with God. It is a question whether the crosses and sufferings of the Saints doe yeeld vs any helpe with God, or any part of satisfaction for our sinnes. They say they doe, we say they doe not: let the iudge tell vs whether they do or not, ^f Was Paule crucified for you? ^g God forbid that I should reioyce but in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ. It is a question whether the people ought to bee partakers of the Lordes cup: they say no: we say yea. Let the Iudge decide it. ^h Drinke ye all of this. Thus in all matters betwixt them and vs, the iudge speaketh clearly on our side: his wordes are so plane as nothing can be more plane. Yet notwithstanding they tell vs, that all these thinges haue another meaning, which we must take vpon the Popes word. The commandment (forsooth) is meant of the idols of the Gentiles, not of the images of Saints. As if a whore-monger should say, that the lawe forbiddeth whoredome of Christians with heathens, not one with another. The Scripture, they say, intendeth there to no other Mediatour of redemption but one, but Mediators of intercession there are many. As if an adulterous woman should say, that shee may haue but one husband of this or that sort, but of another sort shee may haue many. And yet they make them mediators of redemption also, because they make them mediators of satisfaction, and redemption is nothing else but the payment of a price of satisfaction. Thus they dally in the rest, and shew themselues impudent and shameles men: let them for their meaning reade to vs as plane wordes of the iudge, as those are that we reade to them, and we will admitte of them. If not, they must giue vs leaue to stand to the sentence of the iudge of heauen and earth, and to account the Pope as he is, a corrupt & wicked iudge, although were he what he should be, yet void of all title of being iudge to vs.

22. W. BISHOP.

Give me leaue (gentle Reader) to stay somewhat longer in this matter,

ur, because there is nothing of more importance, and it is not handled any where else in all this Booke. Consider then with your selfe, that our coelestiall Law-maker gaue his law, not written in like and Paper, but in the hearts of his most faithfull subiectes, * endowing them with the blessed spirit of truth, * and with a most diligent care of instructing others, that all their posteritie might learne of them all the poynets of christian doctrine, and giue credit to them as well for the written as unwritten word, and more for the true meaning of the word, then for the word it selfe. These and their true successors bee liuely Oracles of the true and liuing God, them must wee consult in all doubtfull questions of religion, and submit our selues wholly to their decree. S. Paule that vessell of election, may serue vs for a singular modell and patterne of the whole: who hauing receiued the true knowledge of the Gospell from God, yet went vnto Hierusalem with Barnaby, to conferre with the chiefe Apostles, the Gospell which he preached, lest perhaps he might runne in vaine, and had runne, as in expresse words he witnesseth himselfe. * Vpon which fact and words of S. Paule, the auncient fathers do gather, that the faithfull would not haue giuen any credit vnto the Apostles doctrine, unlesse by S. Peter and the other Apostles, it had bene first examined and approued. * Again, when there arose a most dangerous question of arrogating Moyses lawe: was it left to euery christian to decide by the written word: or would many of the faithfull beleene S. Paule, that worthy Apostle in the matter? Not so, but vp they went to Hierusalem, to heare what the pillars of the church would say? where, by the decree of the Apostles in councell, the controuersie was ended: which S. Paule after ward deliuered in his preaching, commanding all to obserue and keepe the decree and ordinance of the Apostles * And if it would not be tedious, I could in like manner shew, how in like sort euery hundredth year after, errors and heresies rising by misconstruction of the written words, they were confuted and reiected, not by the written woorde onely but by the sentence and declaration of the Apostles scholars, and Successors.

See Cardinall Bellarmine, * I will onely record two noble examples of this recourse vnto Antiquitie for the true sence of Gods woorde: the first, out of the Ecclesiasticall hystorie, * where, of S. Gregorie Nazianzen and S. Basil, two principall lights of the Greeke church, this is recorded, They were both noble men, brought vp together at Athens: and afterwarde for thirteene yeares space, laying aside all profane bookes, employed their studie wholly in the holy Scriptures, * Ierem. 31.

* Cor. 3.
* Iohn. 15.

* Gal. 2.

* Tertul. lib. 4.
in Marc. Hier. Ep
89. quæ est 11.
inter. Ep. Augustini. August. lib.
28. contra Fau-
stum. cap. 4.

* Act. 15.

* Tom. I. lib. 3.
cap. 6.
* Lib. II cap. 9.

tures. The sense and true meaning whereof they sought, not out of their owne iudgement, (as the Protestants both do, and teach others to doe) but out of their Predecessors writings and authoritie: namely, of such as were knowne to haue receiued the rule of vnderstanding from the tradition of the Apostles, these be the very words.

*The other example shall bee the principall pillar of the Latin church S. Augustine, who not onely exhorteth and aduiseb vs to follow the decree of the auncient church, if we will not be deceiued with the obscuritie of doubtfull questions, * but plainely affirmeth, That he would not beleue the Gospell, if the authoritie of the Church did not mooue him vnto it. * Which words are not to be vnderstoode as Calvin would haue them: that S. Augustine had not bene at first a christian, if by the authoritie of the church, hee had not bene thereunto perswaded: but that when hee was a learned and iudicious Doctor, and did write against heretikes, euen then he would not beleue these bookes of the Gospell to haue bin penned by diuine inspiration, and no others, & this to be the true sense of them: unlesse the catholicke church (famous then for antiquitie, generalitie, and consent) did tell him, which and what they were: so farre was hee off from trusting to his owne skill and iudgement in this matter, which notwithstanding was most excellent.*

* Lib. contra.
Crescon. l. c. 33.
* Contra. Epist
fund. cap. 5.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop here sette th the stocke vpon it, and at one game he is minded to winne all, but indeed as a coufening gamester by shifiting and iugling beguileth honest simple men, so doth hee abuse the simple Reader with goodly glorious words, crauing leaue as it were to giue him satisfaction in a high point. and applying himselfe vnder this colour most trecherouly to delude him. Consider (saith he) that our celestiall lawgiuer gaue his law not written in Inke and paper but in the hearts of his most faithfull subiects. For this he quoteth the words of God by the Prophet Jeremy :^a After those dayes, saith the Lorde, I will put my law into their inward partes, and write it in their hearts, &c. and the wordes of the Apostle to the Corinthians^b Yee are manifest to be the Epistle of Christe ministred by vs, not written with inke, but with the spirit of the liuing God, not in tables of stone, but in fleshiy Tables of the heart. Nowe therefore hee will haue vs to conceiue that which Andradus one of the great maisters of the Trent-Councell a Iere. 31. 33.

b 2. Cor. 3. 3.

Councell hath told vs, that^c Christ did not looke that the Gospell should lye written in letters or printed in parchments, but that by declaration of words it should be published to all creatures. Where wee see how they apply themselves so much as in them lyeth to impeach & vilifie the authoritie of Scriptures, as if they were written onely of priuate fancie, and Christ had had no care or regard to haue it so. But how impertinently those places are brought for prooffe hereof, appeareth very plainly out of the words themselves. For what was the law that God promised by Jeremy to write in the hearts of his people? Was it not the law giuen before by Moses, concerning which Moses also expresseth the same promise that Jeremy doth:

^d The Lord thy God will circumcise thy heart, and the heart of thy seed, that thou maist loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soule that thou maist liue. Now^e that law God himselfe had deliuered in writing, and^f commaunded Moses also to write the same. Therefore the words of Jeremy as touching writing Gods law in our hearts, can import nothing against the writing of it with inke and paper, but onely that the lawes which were before by the ministerie of Moses deliuered only in inke and paper, should by the power of the holy Ghost through the faith of Christ bewrought and written in the affections of the heart: that God in Christ would not administer onely outwardly the letter of the lawe, whether in writing or in preaching, but would in both by the regeneration of the spirit giue grace inwardly for the fulfilling of it. As little to that purpose is the other place. The false Apostles laboured to impeach the credit of S. Pauls Apostleship, as it hee had had no sufficient commission or warrant of it. S. Paul for himselfe alledgeth that the Corinthians were as an Epistle from Christ, where by hee was sufficiently commended and his calling testified vnto them, in that the Gospell by his ministerie had had so great successe, & taken so great effect among them. That singular effect of his preaching hee importeth to haue bene a greater assurance vnto them then any epistle written with inke and paper, and to haue commended his ministerie about the ministerie of Moses, who gaue the Law onely in tables of stone, because here the spirit of God concurred with the outward seruice, and wrought mightily in their hearts, for the receiuing of the doctrine of the faith of Christ, and conuerting of the vnto God. Now to say that the Corinthians were an epistle not written

^c Andrad. Orith. explicat. lib. 2. Non stetit Christus ubi Euangelium literis descriptum aut in membranis exaratum iaceret, sed ubi verbum explicatum omni creatura promulgaretur.

^d Deut. 30. 6.

^e Exod. 34. 1.

^f Ver. 1. 7.

ten with inke nor in tables of stone, what is it to shew that the celestial law-giuer gaue not his lawes written with inke and paper? Surely the difference of the two testaments, which is the thing that M. Bishop would insinuate, was neuer holden to consist in this, that the one should be written and the other vnwritten, because euen in the old testament the new was written, but herein it stood, that the one either written or taught by word, ministred onely knowledge what we ought to do, not anie grace for the doing of it, but the other not onely teacheth by writing or by preaching but ministreth also grace to worke in the heart obedience to that that it teacheth. The old Testament, saith S. Austin, is so called because of the corruption of the old man, which was not healed by the commanding and threatening letter, but the other the new, because of the newnesse of the spirit, which healeth the new man from the old corruption. But wee would gladly know of M. Bishop how it is true which the Apostle saith that all Scripture is inspired of God, if it be true which he saith, that God did not giue his lawes written with inke and paper. If the Gospell might well enough haue bene kept in mens hearts without writing, why were the faithfull so instant with S. Marke first, & after with S. Iohn as we haue scene before, for the writing of their Gospels? Why doth the Apostle tell the Philippians, that it was necessary for them that he should write vnto them the same things that hee had preached vnto them, if there were no such necessitie? Why is S. Iohn in the Reuelation so often commaunded to write, to write, If tradition might serue as well as writing? Surely Irenaeus telleth vs, that it was by the will of God that the Apostles deliuered vnto vs the Gospell in writing as we haue shewed before. So likewise wee haue heard S. Austin saying, that Christ commanded his disciples to write what he would haue vs to reade of his sayings and doings. The same S. Augustine saith againe, that God would place a butwarke against deceitfull errors in the holy Scriptures, against which no man dare speake that will in any sort be taken for a Christian man. Do these Fathers tell vs that it was the will of God, the commaundement of Christ, that his lawes should be deliuered vnto vs written with inke and paper, and will M. Bishop perswade vs that it was not the will of God? But I would further question with him, What, are they al, so perfect in the Gospell at Rome, as that they neede no written Gospell? Is it so settled in their hearts & remembrances by tradition onely, as that without

August. de sp. & lit. cap. 20. Propter veteris hominis nocentem & minantem minime sanabitur dicitur illud testamentum vetus hoc vero nouum propter nouitatem spiritus qua hominem nouum sanat a vitio vetustatis h. 2. Tim. 3. 16.

i Phil. 3. 1.

k Reuel. 1. 11 & cap. 2. 1. etc & cap. 14. 13. I Iren. lib. 3. c. 1. Euangelium per voluntatem Dei in scripturis nobis tradiderunt. m. Aug. supra. sect. 14. n. Idem in epist. 108. tract. 1. Contra iudaeos errores deus voluit ponere firmamentum in scripturis, factum contra quos nullus audeat loqui qui quoquo modo se vult videri Christianum.

any Scriptures it might be prelerued amōgst them: If M. Bishop say yea: he knoweth himselfe to be a lyer. If he say, no, what is the reason that he setteth thus lightly by inke and paper? Fie vpon this wilfull blindnesse: how strange a thing is it that any man should thus cast a veile ouer his owne eyes? He telleth vs further, that Christ endowed his Apostles with the blessed spirit of truth, & with a most diligent care of instructing others, that all their posteritie might learne of them all the points of Christian doctrine. Now thus far he saith true: but his purpose is, with a little truth to couer a great lye. For he addeth, that we should giue credit to them as well for the written as vnwritten word. Sycophant, what haue we here to do with the vnwritten word? The vnwritten word is the matter in question, and must it here be presumed before it be proued? Let it first be made good, that the Apostles meant to leaue behind them any vnwritten word. We say, that because they had care that all posteritie by them should learne all the points of Christian doctrine, therefore they had care that all the points of christian doctrine should bee committed to writing, that as S. Luke professeth to haue written to the intent that Theophilus might thereby acknowledge the certainty of those things wherof he had beene instructed, so by his writings and the rest, we should acknowledge the certaintie and assured truth of their doctrine, and not lie open to the illusions of such impostors and cosiners as M. Bishop is who vnder the names of the Apostles should broach those things which the Apostles neuer thought. Whereof we haue a notable example in P. Papias, who succeeded immediatly after the time of the Apostles, who whilest hee was not contented with those things which were left in writing, but was still hearkening after euery one that tooke vpon him to haue bin a follower of any of the Apostles and enquiring what any of them had said or done, swallowed manie gudgeons giuen him by such deceiuers, and deliuered, * as reported to him by tradition, many fabulous things and strange doctrines, concerning himselfe by that meanes amisse of the Apostles speches, and giuing occasion to many other to erre as hee did, whilest for his antiquitie they respected him very much. This is the end of M. Bishops vnwritten word: they will teach vs what pleaseth their Lord god the Pope, & the make vs belecue it is a part of the vnwritten word. But yet he addeth again, that our crediting the Apostles shuld be more for the meaning of the word then for the word it self. Where it is not in any good meaning that he thus nicely distinguisheth betwixt the word it self & the o Luke, I. 4.

p Euseb. hist. lib. 3. ca. 36.

Alia tanquam
ex vna traditione
ad serelata et pere grinas quasdam ser
uatori parabolas & d. Eir. nu. cum nonnullis fabulosis adicit, & c. Ape
solicus disputatio
nes non rite acce pit & c. Quamplu rima post se eccla
sasticu vnu orro
ru causam dedit,
qui ad antiquitatē
issuare pexerunt.
& c.

meaning of the word, leauing it forsooth to be vnderstood, that they left the worde one way and the meaning of the word another way: the one in writing and the other in tradition. But what, will M. Bishop haue vs thinke that the Apostles would write wordes, and not meane by their words to signifie their meaning? Is it likely that they would write one thing and in meaning intend another? Did they not write to that very end, that in their writing it should appeare to all ages what doctrine they taught? Surely they were honest and plane dealing men: they would not beguile vs, they would not mock vs: they haue simply told vs what their minde is. There are many difficulties in their writings and in the whole Scripture, it is true, but yet there are perspicuities also so farre as is needfull for the clearing of them. There is to exercise the strong: but yet there is also to suite and comfort the weake. There is to prouoke the appetite, but yet there is also to satisfie the hunger. There is a depth for the Elephant to swim, but there are also shelses and shallowes for the lambe to wade. It is truely said by S. Austine, that without any great difficultie we thereby attaine to those things that are necessary for saluation, and that the doctrine thereof is so tempered, as that there is no man but may draw from thence that there is sufficient for him, if he come to draw with deuotion and pietie, as true religion requireth he should do. M. Bishop goeth on and telleth vs, These and their true successors be the true and liuely oracles of the true and liuing God: then we must consult in all doubtfull questions, and submit our selues wholly to their decree But what M. Bishop? are not onely the Apostles, but their successors also the liuing oracles of God? Which of the successors of the Apostles euer tooke vpon him either seuerally or ioyntly so to bee? We haue heard that the household of God are built vpon the foundations of the Apostles and Prophets, but that they are built vpon the foundations of the Apostles successors wee neuer heard. As for consulting with the Fathers in doubtfull questions, wee willingly yeeld to doe it, that we may haue their helpe to find out in the scripture the resolution of such doubts, but that wee are to submit our selues wholly to their decree as accounting them the oracles of God, is a poynt of learning which S. Austine knew not when he saide: I am free in such writings of men whatsoever they bee: because to the Canonickall Scriptures onely doe I owe consent without refusall. But not to stand too long vpon these fancies, let one place of Hierome be

q Bernard. in par. ser. 64. In Pelago sacra lectionis & agnus ambulat & elephas natat.
r Aug. ep. 2. Non quid ad ea qua necessaria sunt salutis tanta in eis difficultate perueniatur. Item de uisib. cre. dendi. cap. 6. In Scripturis disciplina ita modificata ut nemo inde haerere non possit quod sibi satis est si modo ad haerendum deuotè accipit ut uera religio possit accedat.
s Ephel. 2. 20.

u Aug. de nat. & grat. cap. 6. Ego in huiusmodi quorumlibet hominum scriptu liber sum, quia solum Canonice Scripturis debeo si ne ulla recusatione censem.

be an answer to them all.^z *The Lord will declare or shew in the Scripture of the people, and of the Princes that haue bene in her. How will the Lord declare? Not by word but by writing, or by Scripture. In whose Scripture? Euen in the Scripture of the peoples, which is read to all peoples: that is, that all may understand. The Lord hath spoken by his Gospell, not that a few, but that all should understand: the Princes o; Christ haue not written for a few, but for all the people. The Princes are the Apostles and the Euangelists. Those (saith he) which were or haue bene in her. Marke what hee saith, which were, not which are: so that the Apostles excepted, whatsoeuer after shall be said, is cut off, and hath no authoritie. Albeit therefore a man be holy, albeit he be learned, after the Apostles, he hath no authoritie. In which words he sheweth vs, that the counsell of God thought good to leaue vs the Apostles doctrine, not by word, not by tradition, but by writing: that the scriptures which he hath giuen vs by them are so disposed, as that they serue for the vnderstanding of all men, that all authoritie of doctrine is concluded and ended in them, neither hath any after them authoritie to teach vs any thing towards God, that is not warranted and approued by their writings. It is false therefore which M. Bishop saith, that Christ gaue not his lawes written with inke and paper: and againe, that the meaning of the word is not to be knowne by the word it selfe: and againe, that the successors of the Apostles also are the liuely oracles of the true and liuing God. In the next place he abuseth the Apostle S. Paule, and vnder colour of the names of two or three of the Fathers, absurdly misapplieth his going vp to Hierusalem, as if he had gone to haue his doctrine examined and approued by the Apostles that were before him. He nameth S. Peter single and by himselfe, as to haue vs to conceiue, that S. Paul yeilded some high preheminance & superiority to him. But there is no such matter as he pretendeth, the Apostles own declaration ouerthroweth all this fancie. He professeth, that he receiued not his Gospell of man, nor was taught it but by the reuelation of Iesus Christ. After that he had receiued the reuelation of the Gospell from Christ, & was appointed to preach the Gospell amongst the Gentils, directly against M. Bishops deuise he saith ^z Immediately I communed not with flesh and bloud, neither went I up to Ierusalem to them that were Apostles before me, but went into Arabia, &c.^z He asked no mans counsell (saith Ambrose) nor referred it to any man what he should*

^z Hier. in Psal. 86 Quomodo narra-bit Dominus? Non verbo sed Scriptura. In cuius Scriptura? in populorum
qua Scriptura po-
puli omnibus legi-
tur, hoc est, ut om-
nes intelligent, &c.

y Gal. I. 12.
z Ver. 16. 17.
z Ambrosius in Gal.
cap. 1. Nec consiliū
cuiusquam petiit, aut ad aliquem re-
tulit quid esset alicui ritu, sed protinus
Christum predicauit.
&c. Non fuisse dicit necessitatem elekti
se a Deo pergendi
ad precessores Apo-stolos, ut aliquid
forte disceret ab eis
&c.

do, but forth with preaching Christ. He saith that there was no necessity that he being chosen of God, should go to the Apostles his predecessors, as haply to learne any thing from them. Now how badly doth M. Bishop deale to make his reader belecue, that S. Pauls doctrine was first to be examined & approoued by Peter, and the rest of the Apostles, when as S. Paule protestedly saith, that he went not to take any approbation from them, becaule he had receiued equall authoritie & comission with them. He further declared, that b three yeares after hee went to Hierusalem to see Peter, and abode with him c 5. daies. c Not to learne any thing of him, saith Ambrose, because he had already learned of the author himself, by whom Peter was taught, but for affection of the Apostleship & that Peter might know that the same comission was giuen to him which Peter himselfe had. He went to him d not for any benefit but for honors sake to see him, saith Theophylact. Not for any such honors sake as M. Bishop imagineth, as to acknowledge him his superior in place & office. S. Paul himselfe professing himselfe e in nothing to haue bene inferior to the very chiefe Apostles, but for that honours sake of which the same Apostle saith: f In giuing honor, go one before another, & whereof we are wont to say, that we name a man honoris gratia, for honours sake, by which g the younger honoreth the elder the equall his equall, yea & the superior his inferior. For otherwise it is true which Cyprian saith that h the rest of the Apostles were the same that Peter was, indued with equall fellowship both of honour and of power. But to go forward i 14. yeares after befell that that M. Bishop here speaketh of that Paul went up againe to Ierusalem. The occasion whereof was that that he mentioneth here as another matter about the question of the Gentils obseruing of Moses law. Paule and Barnabas had preached the Gospell with great successe amongst the Gentiles and namely at Antioch Whilest they were abiding there, k there came downe certaine frō Iudaea, & taught the brethren. Except ye be circumcised after the maner of Moses, ye cannot be saued. Hereupon there was great dissention and great disputation of Pauls & Barnabas against them. These false Apostles pretended theselues to haue come frō the Apostles at Ierusalem, & to haue receiued their instructions frō them, as may appeare by those words of their answer, l We haue heard that certaine which departed frō vs haue troubled you with words, and cumbrd your minds, saying y: must be circumcised & keepe the law, to whom we gaue no such commandement. Vnder this colour they

b Ver. 18.

c Ambrosioid.

Non ut aliquid ab

eo disceret, quia

iam ab auctore di-

dicerat, a quo &

ipse Petrus fuerat

instructus, sed prop-

ter affectum Apo-

stolatus & ut scires

Petrum hanc illi di-

tam licentiam quā

& ipse acceperat.

d Theophylact in

Gal. I. Non utilita-

tus sed honoris dū-

taxat gratia, ut Pe-

trum petaver.

e 2. Cor. 12. 1.

f Roma. 1. 2. IO.

g Theophyl. ut supra. Vi eum qui

atate esset prouelli-

or veneratur, &

magnificetur

h Cyprian. de simpl

Pralat. Hoc erant re-

liqui Apostoli quod

fuit Petrus, par-

e consortio parati &

honoru & potestati-

i. Gal. 2. 1.

k Act. 15. I.

l Ver. 24.

they slandered Paul, as teaching another Gospell then the other Apostles did. Now when as they thus pretended the Apostles names, and made shew to haue receiued commaundement from them, it was necessary for the satisfaction of the Church, that the matter should be cleared by the Apostles themselues. Wherefore it was thought good, & Godⁿ by reuelation also so directed, as the Apottle signifieth, that ¹¹ he and Barnabas, & some other of the should go to Ierusalem to the Apostles and Elders about this question. This occasion of his going let S. Ambrose declare: ^o The Iewes, saith he, caused an euill opinion of him in behalfe of their law, as if he disagreed frō the preaching of the rest of the Apostles, & herby some scruple grew to many, so as that the Gentils might be troubled or perplexed with doubts, lest by him they should be drawne to any thing else then the Apostle deliuered who hadde beene with the Lord. For by this occasion the Galathians were peruerted by the Iewes, saying: that Paul deliuered or taught otherwise then Peter did. Hence it came to passe, that being admonished by reuelation from the Lord, he went up to Hierusalem. What to do? to be examined and approved of thē as his superiors & iudges, M. B. saith: What, hadde he preached the Gospell now 17. yeares, & doth hee now at length remember himselfe to come to his superiors to be examined of them? no such matter. He came as hee saith ^P to confer with them of the Gospell which he preached among the Gentiles. Now ^q it is one thing to cōfer saith Ierome, another thing to learne. There is equaluy betwixt them that conferre; but betwixt him that teacheth, and him that learneth, hee that learneth is the lesser. He conferred then with the other Apostles, as his equals, not in respect of himselfe, as to haue any thing added to himselfe by thē, but only for satisfactiō of the Church, that the scandall of the slander of the false Apostles might be remoued, & all the Church might know, that in their doctrine they cōsented al in one, that so neither his labor thenceforth, nor that that he had bestowed might be bestowed in vaine, by reason of any such false suggestions of his dissenting from the rest. And to shew that hee conferred with thē to no other end, he saith afterwards, that ^r they added nothing further to him, that^t they sawe that the Gospell of the uncircumcision was committed to him as the Gospell of the circumcision was committed to Peter, that they who seemed to bee pillars, James, Peter, and Iohn gaue vnto him, and Barnabas right handes of fellowship, Yea that he was so farre from being inferiour to them, as that at Antioch:^u he withstood Peter to his face as iustly to be blamed, for not going the right

m Gal. 2. 2. n Act. 15. 2.
o Ambr. in Gal. 2.
Ad Iudaei causam legum mala illi fiebat opinio, quasi discordes a predicatore one cativorum Apostolorum, & hinc fiebat multis scrupulus, ita ut gentes possent perturbari ne in aliud inducerentur ab eo quam tradebant Apostoli quicum Domino iuerant. Nam ipsa occasione subuersi sunt Galata a Iudaudicentibus, quia aliud tradebat Paulus quam Petrus. Hinc factum est ut admonitus reuelatione Domini ascenderet Hierosolymam &c. p Ver. 2.
q Hiero. in Gal. 2. Aliud est conferre aliud discere. Inter conferentes aequalitas est, inter docentem & discipulum, minor est ille qui discit.
r Ver. 6.

t Ver. 7.

u Ver. 9.

u Ver. 11.

way to the truth of the Gospell, in that hee seemed by his caringe to draw the Gentiles to the obseruation of the law, contrary to that which before had bene acknowledged by him. Now then the reason is manifest of S. Pauls going vp to the pillars of the Church, albeit he were as great a pillar as any of them. And as for the sentence of the Councel, it did not teach him any thing which he knew not, but onely signified the common acknowledgement of that which he had before taught. x He understood from the beginning, saith Chry-

x Chrysoft. in Gal.

Ab initio quid esset agendum perspexerat, nec opus habebat ulli doctore, sed quae post multam discussionem erant Apostoli decreturi, hoc ipsa citra discessum calius habebat apud se certa & inlubitata.

y Tertul. contra. Marc. lib. 4. Ascendit ad consultandos Apostolos ne forte secundum illos non credidisset & non secundum illos euangelizaret.

z Hieron apud, August. Epi. 1. 1. Ostendens se non habuisse securitatem Euangelij praedicandi, nisi Petrus & illorum quicum illi erant fuisset sententia reoratum.

4 Gal. I. I.

stome, what was to be done, and needed no teacher, but what the Apostles after much debating should decree, the same had he certain and undoubted with himself from heauen without debating. Now by this that hath bene said, we may conceiue what to thinke of those allegations which M. Bishop for a shew hath quoted in the margent. That which Tertullian saith is apparent false, that y Paule went to Hierusalem to consult with the Apostles, lest haply he had not beleued as they did, or did not preach the Gospell as they did. As though it were likely, that the Apostle would haue continued his preaching for 17. years, not knowing whether he preached right or wrong. As though he knew not that which hee preached to be the truth, hauing receiued it (as before is shewed) by the reuelation of Iesus Christ. That which Hierome saith must bee esteemed according to the humor wherein hee wrote it, which was in great choler and stomacke towards S. Austin for diliking his opinion as touching Peters dissimulation, mentioned in the chapter whereof we here speake. His words are, that 2 Paul had not had securitie of preaching the Gospell, had it not bene confirmed by the sentence of Peter and those that were with him. As though hee hadde preached 17. years, as before was said, without warrant of preaching. As though he expected confirmation now from Peter, or those that were with him, who so long before had had confirmation from christ himselfe. As though he became an Apostle by warrant of Peter, & those that were with him, who in the begining of his Epistle writeth himselfe, a Paul an Apostle, not of men, nor by man, but by Iesus Christ, with many other words before mentioned, disclaiming the receiuing of any authoritie from men. Ieromes heat made him forget that which is before cited out of his exposition vpon that Epistle, that conferēce importeth equality, and therefore that the Apostle shewing that he wēt to confer with the rest of the Apostles, importeth that he receiued of the no warrāt of authority, but only testimony of cōfēt.

As for that which is quoted out of S. Austine, it maketh nothing to M. Bishops purpose. If there had bene no Apostles living, that Paul in communicating with them, and conferring with them of the Gospell, might appeare to be of the same societie, the church would not have beleueed him. But when they knew him preaching the same wh^{ch} they preached, and living in their vniuy and fellowship, des^g also the same miracles which they did, God thus commending it, he obtained authoritie, that his words are now heard in the Church, as if Christe were heard speaking in him, as he himselfe most truly saith. In which words he attributeth to the rest of the Apostles the giuing of a testimonie, that hee was of the same societie and fellowship with them, but importeth nothing at all of any their iudiciall power or superioritie ouer him. The occasions of the words will shew the purport of them. Manicheus the hereticke wrote an Epistle as the Apottle of Christ, contrarying those things which were written by the true Apostles. The Manichees vrged this Epistle as the true story of Christ, alledging that the Gospelles were corrupted and not true, S. Austine questioneth how the Church should take him for an Apostle, or admit that for true which he wrote concerning Christ, when as hee liued not in the time of the Apostles, nor was knowne to be one of them, by hauing communion and fellowship with them. For euen Paul, saith hee, if he hadde liued after their times, and had not bene knowne to haue societie and company with them, and by his preaching & miracles together with them, had not bene commended to the Church by God, the Church could not haue taken him for an Apostle of Christ, nor beleueed him vpon his owne word. This is all that is sayd,* and nothing intended that the rest of the Apostles should giue him warrant as Iudges, but only as witnesses testifie him to be one of them. But now admit that they were as Iudges, & were to giue commission & warrant to S. Paul: what is it that M. Bishop would proue thereby? Forsooth that there were some of authoritie for iudgement, and deciding the controuersies of the Church. Be it so: but why doth hee take paines for that which we doe not denie? Yea but it is that Peter may be knowne to be the Iudge. Be it so that Peter amongst the rest was one, yea & a chiefe man amongst them, because S. Paul saith, that James, and Peter, and Iohn seemed to be pillars, that is, speciall and chiefe men amongst the Apostles. Yea, but that is not enough, but Peter must be the high & soueraigne Iudge,

b August cont.
Faust lib. 28. ca. 4
Et non inueniet in carne Apostolos
quibus communican
do & cum quibus Euangelium confe
ratur esse apparet
ecclesia illi omnino
non crederet. Sed
cum cognouisset eum
hec annuntiantem
quod etiam illi an nuntiant, et in corum comunionem
atque unitate uiuen
tem, accedentibus
etiam per eum tali
bus signis qualia & illi operantur, ita
eam Domino com
mendante, meruit authoritatem ut
verba illius hec sic audiantur in ec
clesia, tanquam in illo Christus sicut
ipse verissimum dixit locutum audiat.

c Gal. 2. 9.

and.

and the rest onely assistants & helpers to him. But that is apparently false, because in that iudgement of which S. Paul speaketh Iames saie as the chiefe, and accordingly pronounced the definitiue sentence: d to him saith Chrysostome, the principality or chieftie was committed. Yet let vs yeeld so much that Peter was the highest Iudge in this assembly: what of that? Marry forsooth the Pope succeedeth in Peters place, & he must therefore be the one high and supreme Iudge ouer all churches. This is the issue that M. Bishop driueth at, but for his life cannot tell how to conueigh the Pope into S. Peters place. This conclusion Bellarmino maketh out of three places that are here alledged, quoting them only as M. Bishop doth frō him, but citing no words, and saying of them that they expressly affirme, that the church would not haue beleened Paul, had not his Gospell beene confirmed by S. Peter. Therefore it belonged to Peter then, and now to his successour, to iudge of the doctrine of faith. Where we see him to be outright a Iesuite, that is, a man of a brazen face & a wicked conscience, for that hee knewe well that two of these doe not mention Peter, but speake generally of the Apostles, the third which is Hierome, nameth not Peter alone as hee doth, but coupleth with him those that were with him, and maketh that which he saith common to them all. But it is a further point of impudencie in him, to force that vpō the Pope here by, which neuer any of these Fathers nor any other euer imagined, that he should be in Peters place the vniuersall Iudge of Christian faith, so that if S. Peter who they say was Bishop of Rome beefore had beene dead before that councill of Hierusalem, & Paul the third had succeeded in his place, Paul the Apostle must haue had his gospell confirmed by Paul the Pope, as impious a cañtife as euer the world bred. I will not stand to rake any further in this filth, let them lie in it that loue it, and M. Bishop hauing taken vpon him to sweare whatsoeuer Bellarmino doth lie, must be content to be dawbed with his dirt. He goeth on and telleth vs, that he could thew how enerie hundred yeeres after, heresies were confuted and reiected not by the writen word onely, but by the sentence and declaration of the Apostles schollers and successours. So then they were not reiected by the sentence and declaration of any one Iudge, he is now gone from that, but it was by the sentence and declaration of the Apostles schollers and successours, as all Bishops were. And indeede in those first Councils the Bishop of Rome hadde no more to doe then other Bishops, yea sometimes lesse then some others, to whō the moderation of the present

d Chrysost. in Act.
hom. 2; Iacobus
fert & non refert:
illius principatus
conceditur.

e Bellar. de verbo
Des. lib. 3. cap. 5.
Disert è affirmant Ecclesiasticon non fuisse Paulo creditur am nisi Euangelium
eius a Petro confirmatum fuisse. Ergo Petri erat tunc & proinde successoris eius nunc
de doctrina fidei

present business by general consent was committed, as in the Nicene council to ⁱ Hosius Bishop of Cordubain Spaine about all the rest of the Bishops, who theretore subscribed first of all. And as for the deciding of matters, it was referred onely to the authoritie of the written word, as appeareth in the same council of Nice, where Constantine propoundeth this rule vnto the: ^h The bookes of the Evangelists & Apostles, as also the oracles of the old Prophets, do plainly instruct vs what to thinke concerning Gods matters: therefore setting aside all hostile discord, let vs take the resolutions of our questions frō the wordes of the holy Ghost. Their sentence whichfore was but to acknowledge and pronounce the sentence, which the holy Ghost hadde giuen in the written word, & no otherwise did they take vpon them to declare it, but by the same woorde. Onely for the greater satisfaction of the Church, & the more fully to take away all cauillations of heretickes, they alledged somtimes the testimonies of such as had bene before them, to shew that by the same written word, they had taught no otherwise than they did. Albeit there were not alwaies general Councils for the confuting and reiecting of heresies, but many times the Pastours of the Church in their priuate writings confuted and condemned them only by the verdict & sentence of the written woorde. So Hilary only by the voice of the heauenly Iudge in the Scriptures reiected the Arian heresie, ⁱ neuer hauing heard of the Nicene definition, vntill he was going into banishment for that faith. Yea, and after the definition of the council. S. Austin did not rest vpon their sentence, but vpon the sentence of the written woorde, and therfore saith to Maximinus the Arian: ^k It is not for mee to alledge the council of Nice, nor for thee to alledge the council of Ariminum: neither am I bound to the authoritie of the one, nor thou of the other. By testimonies or authorities of Scripture, not proper to either of vs, but common to both, let matter try with matter, cause with cause, reason with reason. He knew very wel that the sentence of a council might be questioned also, & therfore that the controuersie must finally rest vpon the sentence of the Scripture. M. Bishop further referreth vs to Bellarmine, as touching those Councils euery hundred yeeres, whose instructions are needlesse to vs to certifie vs of the truth in that behalfe, being otherwise better to be knowne then by any thing that hee can tell vs. But I would wish that he that desireth to know the qualitie and disposition of that wretched manne, should throughly examine that chapter that Maister Bishop quoteth, wherein he hath ¶ Theod. hist. i. 2. ca. 13. Cuius concily fuit ille non princeps? g. Concil. Nicen. h. Theod. hist. li. i. c. 27. Evangelii & Apostolici libri non antiquorum Prophetarum oracula plane non instrunt quid deus lus dixit.

¶ ἐπεὶ τοῦ θεοῦ sentendum sit: proinde posita hosili discordia sumamus ex diuini spiritus explanationis questionem.

i. Hilary. de synod. cont. Arian. fidem Nicenā nunquam nisi exulaturus audiri.

k. August. contr. Maximin. lib. 3. cap. 14. Nec ego Nicenens, nec tu debes Arminense tanquam praesudicatus proferre consilium. Nec ego huius, nec tu illius auctoritate detine ru scripturam, non auctoritas illius, non quoniam cur que proprijs, sed vtriusque communibus testimonijs res eorum te causa eum causa, a quo cum ratione conuertet.

set downe so many apparent and wilfull lies, as that it may well appeare what spirit it was that led him throughout his whole bookes. In the next place he telleth vs an idle tale & impertinent, of Basil & Gregorie Nazianzene, of whom Ruffinus reporteth, that ¹ laying aside their prophane studies, they applyed themselves only to the books of holy Scriptures, and sought after the understanding of them, not out of their own presumption, but out of the writings & authoritie of their auncients, who also themselves by such as had succeeded frō the Apostles, had receiued the rule of understanding. To what end doth he alleadge this against vs? Where it is sayd that they sought not the vnderstanding of the Scriptures out of their own presumption, for the shooting of his bolt, he maketh a parenthesis thus, As the Protestants both do & teach others to do. But the Protestants would haue him know, that that description of the studies of those two fathers, dooth rightly describe the studies of euery learned Protestant. They see it to their grieve in all our bookes, & in the processe of this whole book, it will appeare to him, that the Protestants vse the help of the fathers writings as a singular benefit of God, for the true vnderstanding of the Scriptures, and for the finding out of the truth in those controuersies that are depending betwixt vs & them. Yea, so farre are we from contenting our selues with our owne vnderstanding, as that we forbear not to turne & wind al Popish authors, either of former or latter time, that what gold we can find in their dunghils, we may apply it to the furnishing of the temple of the Lord. But it pitieth me to thinke of the sillinesse of this man, in vpbraiding vs with not searching the writings of the auncient Fathers, of whō I am perswaded that wee may truly say, that he neuer read so much as one volume of any one of the fathers, & had bene in pitifull case for the writing of this booke, had not Bellarmino bene content vpō trust to lend him the whole stock. Well, hee hath read them that haue read the fathers, & if they lie, be it so: hee cannot tell how to help either himselfe or them. Thus for the finding of a Iudge we came first to the Pope, and from the Pope he hath brought vs to the counsels, & from the counsels to the writings of the fathers, & now frō the writings of the fathers he leadeth vs to the Church. Hee allegeth to this purpose two sayings of S. Austin. The former vpon occasion of the question betwixt the Donatists & him is thus, ² Whosoever feareth to be deceiued by the obscurity of this question, let him seeke for aduise to that same church, which

¹ Ruffin. lib. 2. c. 9.
Omnibus Græcorū
secularium libri
remotu soli diuina Scripturæ volumi-
nibus operā dabant
earumq; intelligentiam non ex propri-
a presumptione, sed
ex maiorum scrip-
tis & authoritate
sequebantur: quos & ipsos ex Apostolica successione in-telligendi regulam suscepisse constat

in August. cont.
Crescon lib. 1. ca.
33. Quisquis falli
metuit istius obscu-ritate questionis, can-dem ecclesiam de illa consulat quam
sine ulla ambigua-
tate sancta Scrip-
tura demonstret.

with-

without any ambiguity the holy Scriptures doth demonstrate and poyne out. We admit the condition: we willingly hearken to the judgement of that Church: in obscure points which we do not readily vnderstand, we highly esteeme the censure of that Church, which otherwise by the Scripture is demonstrated to bee the true Church.

S. Austine in those words hath reference to the whole church from the time of the Apostles, & very rightly directeth him that was not able otherwise to discern, to presume that to bee the truth which from the very originall had bene continued and practised in the Church. This serueth not M. Bishops turne, because it fitteth not to

M. Bishops Church. No more doth that other place which hee citeth, "I should not beleene the Gospell, vntlesse the authoritie of the catho-like Church should moue me to it. M. Bishop before hand telleth vs that S. Austine did not speake this as touching his being at first a christian, but euen now being a learned and iudicious Doctor, hee would not beleene but for the authoritie of the Church. But very lewdly doth he abuse S. Austine in making him so to say, as if he had resolued that it being supposed that the Church should backslide and fall away, hee himselſe also would play the Apostata, and fall away from the faith of Christ. What, was his faith built vpon men, and not vpon God himselſe? Did he not know that though ^o every man bee a liar, yet

God is true? What if the whole worlde had conspired against the booke of God, as not long before by Arianisme it hadde against the Sonne of God, when Constantius the Emperour said to Liberius Bishop of Rome concerning Athanasius, ^p Who art thou to the whole world, who thus alone standest with a wicked man? Liberius though afterwards he yielded, yet for that time answered well: The word of faith is no whit impeached by my being alone: and would not, thinke we

S. Austine beare the like minde, howsoeuer all other fell away, yet constantly to cleave to that which he knew to be the truth? It is not all M. Bishops foolish Rhetoricke that can make vs to beleene that

S. Austine would make any such protestation to that effect. Yea, and were not both he and his fellowes very absurdly wilfull, they would well enough see, as haply they doe, by that which goeth before, and that which followeth, that it can be no otherwise construed, but as in the person of a man at first receiuing the Christian faith: to whom it is no small motiue thereunto, that the same faith hath found credit and entertainment throughout the whole world. But the words them-

n Idem cont. epist.
funda. cap. 1. Ego
vera Evangelio no
crederem nisi me
Catholica ecclesia
commoueret au-
thoritas.

^o Rom 3. 4.

^p Theoderet hist.
li. 2. ca. 16. Quota
partem es orbis ter-
rarum qui solus sa-
cu cum homine
scelerato. Liberius
Non dimittit
solitudinem mea ver-
bum fidei.

¶ Idem et supra.
 Si inuenires aliquem aut euangelio non dum credit, quid faceres dicenti tibi, non credo? Ego uero Euuangelio non crede-rem nisi me Catho-
 lice ecclesie comou-
 eret authoritas.
 Quibus ergo obtem-
 peranti dicentibus, Credite euangelio ocur eis non credero
 dicentibus mihi, Noli credere Manichao? Elige quod uelis. Si dixeris, crede de Catholice, ipsi me monent ut nul-
 lam fidem accom-
 modem uobis, &c.
 Si dixeris, Noli Catholice credere, non recte facies per Eu-
 uangelium me cogere
 ad fidem Manichae, quia ipsi Eu-
 uangelio, catholice predicantibus cre-
 didi.
 ¶ Idem confess. lib.
 6. cap. 5. Semper credidi & esse te & curam nostri gere-
 re etiam si ignorabam uel quid sen-
 tiendum esses de substantia tua, uel
 qua uia duceret
 aut reduceret ad te
 I deoq; cū essemus
 infirmi ad inueniendam liquida ra-tione ueritatem &
 ob hoc nobis opus es-
 set auctoritate
 sanctorum litera-
 rum, iam credere & speram nullo mo-
 do te fuisse tributurum tam excellen-
 tem illi Scripturae
 per omnesiam ter-
 ras auctoritatem nisi & per ipsam ti-bi credidisset & per ipsam te quari uoluisset.

themselves shall best declare to what purpose they were set downe.
 ¶ If thou shouldst find any man who yet beleueneth not the Gospell, what wouldst thou do to him saying vnto thee, I do not beleue? Surely I should not beleue the Gospell, vntlesse the authoritie of the catholicke Church should moue me vnto it. Whom then I haue hearkened vnto, saying vnto me, Beleue the Gospell, why should I not hearken to them, saying to me Beleue not Manicheus. Chuse whether thou wilt. If thou wilt say, beleue them of the catholike church, they giue me warning to giue no trust to you. If thou wilt say, Do not beleue them of the catholike church, thou shalt not do well to force me by the Gospell to the faith of Manicheus, because by the preaching of them of the catholike church, I haue beleued the Gospell. We see that both the propounding and the proceffe of these whole words, do cry out against M. Bishop, and as it were with loud voice, do proclaime that S. Austins meaning was no other, but that the consent and authoritie of the Church ouerspredding the whole world, was at first a mighty & strong inducement vnto him to beleue that Gospell wherein all so constantly did accord: because it could not be of God which had gotten that estimation and account with so many nations and peoples of so strange and diuers dispositions. Marke the wordes gentle Reader, What wouldst thou do to him, saying, I doe not beleue: Surely I should not beleue vnlesse, &c. vnto who I hearkened saying Beleue the Gospel &c. By the preaching of them I beleued the Gospell. The thing is apparent vnto any man that doth not stop his owne eyes that he may not see. And hereof most holily & deuoutly the same S. Austins speaketh in his confessions to God, euen as it were to tell vs the meaning of these words: I alwayes beleued, saith he, that thou art, and that thou hast care of vs, albeit I knew not what to thinke of thy being, or which way should leade me or bring me againe to thee. Therefore when I was too weake by apparent reason to find out the truth, and for this purpose needed the authoritie of the holy Scriptures, I began now to beleue that by no meanes thou wouldst giue that excellency of authority to those scriptures euen throughout the whole earth, but that thou wouldst haue vs thereby to beleue thee, and thereby to seeke thee. This place sheweth the true effect of that other speech, and it is great impudency and impiety in M. Bishop and his fellowes, to force vpon S. Austine that protestation which they doe by their false construction.

23 W. BISHOP.

This matter is so large, that it requireth a whole question: but being penned up within the compasse of one objection, I will not dwell any longer in it, but here fold up this whole question of Traditions, in the authoritie of the auncient Fathers: out of whom, because I have in answering M. Perkins, and else-where, as occasion serued, cited already many sentences: I will here be briefe.

S. Ignatius the Apostles Scholler, doth exhort all Christians, * To * Euleb. li. 3. 36.
stick fast vnto the traditions of the Apostles, some of which he committed to writing.

Polycarpus, by the authoritie of the Apostles words, which he had receiued from their owne mouthes: confirmed the faithfull in truth, and overthrew the heretickes. * Ibid. li. 5 c. 20.

S. Irenæus, who imprinted in his heart Apostolicall traditions, receiued from Polycarp, saith, If there should bee a controuersie about any meane question, ought we not to runne vnto the most auncient Churches, in the which the Apostles had conuerled, and from them take that which is cleare & perspicuous to define the present question? For what if the Apostles had not written any thing at all, must we not haue followed the order of Traditions, which they deliuered to them to whom they deliuered the Churches?

Origen teacheth, that the Church receiued from the Apostles by tradition, to baptize Infants. *

Athanasius saith: * We haue proued this sentence to haue beene deliuered from hand to hand by Fathers to Fathers: but ye, O new Iewes, and sonnes of Caiphaz, what auncestors can ye shew of your opinion?

S. Basil hath these words: * We haue the doctrine that is kept & preached in the Church: partly written, and part we haue receiued by tradition of the Apostles in mysterie, both which be of the same force to Godlines, and no man opposeth against these, who hath at the least but meane experience of the Lawes of the Church, See Gregory Nazianz. Orat. 1. in Iulian.

* Rom. 6.
* Lib. de. de. c. 1.
Niceni conc.

* De Spir. Sancto, cap. 7.

M. Bishop is heere as he was before, like the melancholike merchant of Athens, who reioyced at the sight of euery ship that came in perswading himselfe that it was his ship. Hee cannot light any where vpon the name of traditions, but he presently imagineth that it is meant of their Popish vnwritten traditions. And here in the first place to colour this, he translateth the words of Eusebius amisse, by changing the singular number into the plurall. ^a He warned them saith Eusebius concerning Ignatius, that they should cleaue steadfastly to the tradition of the Apostles. He saith not traditions, as to note sundry doctrines left vnwritten, as M. Bishop would haue it, but tradition, as entirely & generally to signifie the doctrine deliuered by the Apostles. Therefore he must necessarily bee vnderstood of the doctrine of the Apostles which is written, but there is no necessitie of vnderstanding any more. This tradition, that is, the doctrine deliuered by the Apostles, Eusebius, saith that Ignatius did testifie by writing, and what he testified we should see by those writings if we had them now in such sort as he left them, euen no other doctrine but what the Apostles before hadde left in writing. But those Epistles haue bene diuersly in hucksters handes, being growne to greater number then Eusebius and Hierome heard of in their times, & containing many things now which they had not then, and many then which they haue not now. Ignatius now is made to say, that ^b if any man fast vpon the Lords day or vpon the Saturday, he is a murderer of Christ, whereas S. Austine confesseth, that ^c he found it not defined by any precept of Christ or his Apostles what dayes we are to fast and what not, and Hierome as we haue heard before confesseth, that Paul and others with him did fast vpon the Lordes day. He is now made to say, that ^d if any man obserue Easter with the Iewes, or shall beare the marks of their festiuall day, he is a companion and partaker with the who killed Christ and his Apostles, whereas it is manifest by the ecclesiasticall hiltory, that ^e Polycarpus the Bishop of Smyrna at that time kept Easter in that sort, and refused to yeeld to Anicetus Bishop of Rome to do otherwise, & therefore that there was no such obseruation to which Ignatius should adioyne any such censure as here is. Againe Hierome citeth this sentence out of Ignatius, that ^f Christ chose Apostles who were sinners aboue all men, which now is not found in those Epistles

^a Euseb. lib. 3. cap. 32. Vt Apostolorum traditione inuisa se adherent admonebat.

^b Ἰσχυρῶς ἐπεσθαι τῷ Ἁποστόλων παραδόσεως Ignat. epist. 5. ad Philip. Siquis dominico die ieiunauerit aut sabbato prater unum sabbatum, uel est Christi interfecto.

^c Aug. epist. 86. Quibus diebus ieiunare oporteat uel quibus non oporteat nullo Domini uel Apostolorum precepto inuenio definitum.

^d Ignat. ibid. Siquis cum Iudaeis pascha paregerit, & festi eorum symbola susceperit, uel particeps est & socius eorum qui Dominum occiderunt & Apostolos eius.

^e Euseb. hist. lib. 5. cap. 23.

^f Hieron. cont. Pelag. lib. 3. Ignatius uir apostolicus & martyr scribit ad aliter: Elegit Dominus Apostolos qui super omnes homines erant peccatores.

Epistles that we haue. Therefore sith we haue his writings no otherwise but maimed & corrupted, it is hard from them now to gather any certaintie at all, & those same traditions which M. Bishop speaketh of, are but meere forgeries conueyed into them by the Popes agents, albeit the former of those traditions which I haue mentioned, maketh them also murderers of Christ, because they saie vpon the Saturday, or else they must denie that these epistles do faithfully report the traditions of the Apostles. But what Tradition it was that Irenaeus meant, wil appear by that that is cited in the next place concerning Polycarpus, who M. Bishop saith, by the Apostles words receiued from their owne mouthes confirmed the faithfull in truth, and ouerthrew the heretickes. Let his author speake, and let the Reader iudge how honestly he dealeth in this citation. The words are the words of Irenaeus, of whome Eusebius reporteth, that in certaine speecches against Florinus the hereticke, hee saith of himselfe hauing bene with Polycarpus when he was very yong & I remember the ser-mones that he made to the people, and how he told that he had bene conuersant with Iohn and others that saw the Lord, and mentioned their speecches, and what he had heard of them concerning the Lord and concerning his miracles and doctrine, as receiued from them who themselues had seene the Word of life, and reported all things agreeable to the holy Scriptures. Here was then the tradition of Polycarpus, containing nothing else but according to the Scripture. As touching the tradition that Irenaeus speaketh of, it hath bene before shewed that it containeth nothing else but the elementall articles of Christian faith, for the auouching whereof hee was forced to appeale to the tradition and successiue doctrine of the Church, because he had to do with heretickes that refused the triall of the Scriptures. He saith rightly, that if nothing had bene written we must haue rested vpon Tradition; but because God knew that Tradition was too vncertaine and weake a meanes for preservation of truth, therefore as he hath before said, the Apostles deliuered the Gospel which they preached in writing, and that by the will of God, to be the foundation and pillar of our faith. In a word when he saith, What if the Apostles had not writte anything at all? must we not then haue followed the order of tradition?
 he intimateth that now that they haue written, we are to follow that which they haue written for the certaintie & assurance of our faith. He forceth the order of tradition in this sort vpon the heretiks;

Euseb. hist. eccl.
lib. 5. ca. 18. Cam.
memerare queam
sermones eius quos
fecit ad multitudi-
nem, & quomodo
se cum Ioanne ac ro-liqui qui Dominũ
viderant conuerso
tum esse dixerit &
sermones corũ me-
morauerit, & qua
ex illis de Domino
audierant & de vir-
tutibus eius & do-
ctrina tanquam ex
ipsis quibus verbum
vita viderant et cuncta sanctis
Scripturũ consensu
reconseruit.
 h See the Answer to the Epistle. sect 11.

because by the Scriptures there was no dealing with them but, the matters whereof he treateth, are cleerly taught therein, as euery where he sheweth throughout his whole booke. His next allegation is vaine and childish, Origen teacheth that the Church receiued from the Apostles by tradition to baptize infants, whereas Bellarmino himselfe proueth it to be necessary by the Scriptures, as I haue shewed^d before. That of Athanasius is as little to the purpose as all the rest. The thing that he hath in hand in the^k booke cited is to giue a reason of the decree of the Nicene Councell, that the Sonne of God is of the same substance with the Father. He sheweth, that the Fathers there assembled determined it by the Scriptures; Constantine also so directing them as we haue seene before. The matter was so cleared, as that the heretickes for shame were content to subscribe to that which was concluded vpon. Yet hee declareth that afterwards they fell to cauilling, that the words whereby the Councell expressed their meaning, were not found in the Scriptures; that they deuised them of themselues, and that none of the former Fathers had vsed the same. He answereth, that ^l Whosoener is of a studious mind, or desirous to learne, will know that those words, though they be not found in the Scriptures, yet haue the same meaning which the Scriptures intend, and doe signifie the very same. Further, against their other cauill he sheweth by diuers places alledged, that the Fathers of former times had vsed the same words and maner of speech as the Councell did. Hereupon he concludeth, ^m Behold wee shew that this sentence hath bene deliuered from fathers to fathers, as it were from hand to hand: but O you new Iewes and sons of Caiphaz what fathers or auncesors will ye shew us for your termes? Now I shall not we thinke that M. Bishop hath here brought vs a stout prooffe for traditions vwritten, and doctrines beside the Scripture? Euen as if we should say to M. Bishop and his fellowes, Behold wee shew you that which we say of the iufficiencie of the Scriptures deliuered from fathers to fathers, euen as it were from hand to hand, and he should herupon cite vs for witnessses of their traditions. As much witt should he shew in this, as he now doth in that. The place of Basil is answered at largeⁿ before. He further referreth vs to the first oration of^o Gregorie Nazianzen against Iulian, but was ashamed to

i. Sect. 12.

k Athanas. lib. Quod Nicena. synodus congrui & pijs verbis decreta sua super Ariana haeresi exposuerit.

l Cognoscat quis quis est studiosioris animi huius voces tametsi in Scripturis non reperiantur habere tamen eas eam sententiam quam Scriptura voluit & hoc ipsum sonare, &c. m Ecce nos demonstramus istiusmodi sententiam a patribus ad patres quasi per manu traditam esse. Vos autem nos Iudaei, Caiphaz, hoc ipsum sonare, &c. n Ecce nos demonstramus istiusmodi sententiam a patribus ad patres quasi per manu traditam esse. Vos autem nos Iudaei, Caiphaz, hoc ipsum sonare, &c. o Greg. Nazian. contra Iulian. orat. 1. Doctrina nostra insigniorum videtur ob ecclesiae figuram quas traditione acceptas in hunc usque diem seruauimus &c. I dem hic cogitans scholas omnibus ciuitatibus ex trinnere parabat, & sacras fides partim altiores. partim depressiores n Sect. 16.

o Greg. Nazian.

contra Iulian. orat.

1. Doctrina nostra

insigniorum videtur

ob ecclesiae figuram

quas traditione ac-

ceptas in hunc us-

que diem seruauimus

&c. I dem hic cogi-tans scholas in omnibus ciuitatibus ex

trinnere parabat, &

sacras fides

partim altiores.

partim depressiores

perphoranorum dogmatur

lectiones & explicationes influxerunt in praecationum alternatum canendarum formam. &c.

let downe any wordes of his, because the matters of tradition that hee there mentioneth amongst the Christians, which Iulian the Apostata apishly would resemble in his Paganisme, were schools and formes higher and lower, lectures, hospitals, monasteries, companies of virgins, singing by turnes, and such other matters of external order and discipline in the Church, and what are these to prooue traditions, that is matters of doctrine not cōtained in the Scripture? We admit almost all those things which hee there speaketh of, and yet we condemne traditions in that sence as we here make question of them. Surely M. Bishops traditions are in a miserable case, that in all antiquity can find no better foundations whereupon to build them. A man would not thinke that in so serious a matter he would so trifle as he hath done, bringing not one place in any sort applicable to his purpose, but only that of Basil, & yet neither that of sufficient waight to prooue that that he hath vndertaken to prooue, as before hath bene shewed.

14. W. BISHOP.

Because I have cited already some of the Latine auncient Doctors: in stead of the rest, I will record out of them in a word or two, how old rotten heretiks used alwayes to rescēt unwritten traditions, and flie wholly vnto the writsen word. See the whole booke of Tertullians prescriptiōs against heretickes, which principally handleth this very point. The same doth Irenæus wite of the Valentinians and Marcionists. The Arians cōmon song vnto the Catholickes was, I will not admit to be read any words that are not written (in the Scriptures) as witnesseth S Hilary in his booke against Constantius the Emperour, against whome hee alledgeth the preaching of the Apostles and the authoritie of the auncient Bishops expressed in his liuely colours.

S. Augustine some 1200. yeares agoe, recordeth the very forme of arguing, which the Protestants use now adayes in the person of Maximinus an Arian, in his first booke against him in the beginning. If thou shalt (saith this heretik) bring any thing out of the Scriptures which is common to all, we must needs heare thee, but these words which are without the Scriptures, are in no sort to be receiued of vs: when as the Lord himselfe hath admonished vs, and said, in vaine do they worship me teaching commaundements and precepts of men How S. Augustin opposed against them unwritten traditiōs, hath bene afore declared.

• Horn. 52. Cant. The like doth S. Bernard affirme of certaine heretikes of his time called Apottolici.

So that most truely it may bee concluded, that euen as we Catholickes haue learned of the Apostles and auncient Fathers, our noble progenitors, to standfast and holde the Traditions which wee haue receiued by worde of mouth, as well as that which is written: euen so the Protestants haue receiued as it were from hand to hand of their ignoble predecessors old condemned heretickes, to reiect all Traditions, and to flie vnto the onely Scriptures.

R. ABBOT.

For conclusion of this question hee bringeth vs here a rotten tale, how old rotten heretickes used alwayes to reiect unwritten traditions, and flie wholly to the written word. To make this tale good, he bringeth vs first a lie, and then a fond cauill. Hee referreth his reader first to Tertullians booke of prescriptions, the purpose whereof what it is, I haue shewed before at large, but in all that booke is no worde of heretickes flying wholly to the written worde. Tertullian sheweth how they mangled and marred the Scriptures beeing vrged therewith, reiecting what and where they list, so that by the Scriptures there was no dealing with them: but that they did flie to the Scriptures, or required triall thereby, he affirmeth not. And this is plane by Irenæus, euen in that place whence M. Bishop citeth him for his second witness, and where he speaketh of the very same heretickes of whom Tertullian spake. ^a Heretikes (saith he) when they are reprobued by the Scriptures, fall to finding fault with the Scriptures, as if they were not aright, nor of authoritie, and that they are doubtfully set down, and that by the Scriptures the truth cannot bee found of them that are ignorant of tradition: for they say that the true was not deliuered by writing but by liuely voyce, and that therefore Paul sayde, Wee speake wisdom among those that bee perfect. Now by these very woordes of Irenæus, doe thou esteeme (gentle Reader) the trecherie of this man, who beareth thee in hande that Irenæus noteth it there for a propertie of heretickes to reiect unwritten traditions, and to flie wholly to the written worde, when as it was their abusing and refusing of the Scriptures that made him to appeale to the tradition of the Church, the matters of their heresies beeing concerning ^a Iren. lib. 3. c. 3.

Cum ex Scripturis
arguantur in accu-
sationem ipsarum conuertuntur Scripturarum, quasi non recte habeant
negue sint ex authoritate et quia variè sunt dicta &
quia non possit ex
huius inueniri veritas
ab his qui nesciant traditionem. Non enim per litteras tra-diam illam, sed per viam vocem: ob
quam causam et Paulus dixisse,
sapientiam loqui-
mur inter perfectos

cerning the fundamentall articles of our beleeefe, which are euidently taught by the written word. It is truly said, that heretickes shunne the Scriptures euen as the sheefe doth the gallowes: and as it is true in other heretickes, so it is in the Papists, vpon whom how iustly those words of Irenaus light, and how fully they describe their vsage towards the Scriptures, hath bene ^b before declared. To this apparent lie M. Bishop, addeth a blind cauill, for which hee bringeth the speeches of Constantius the Emperour and Maximinius, both Arians, out of Hilary and Austine. The matter is answered sundry times before. Against the assertion of the Church, that the Sonne of God is consubstantiall or of the same substance with the Father, they excepted idley and vainely, that they would admit no words that were nor written. M. Bishop knoweth well that wee doe not so, because we receiue and professe those words which they refused, yea he knoweth that wee say and teach, that the Pope is Antichrist, that the Church of Rome is the purple whore of Babylon, that the Masse is an abhominable idoll and wicked prophaning of the Sacrament of Christ, and such like, and yet these words are no where found in the Scripture. We contend not concerning words let them vse what words they will, so that the doctrine imported & meant by those words bee contained in the Scriptures. Of those heretickes called Apostolici S. Bernard saith no such matter as hee alledgeth. All that he saith is that ^c they did not receiue the ordinances of the Church, and what is that to the doctrines of faith taught by Christ and his Apostles, which are not contained in the Scriptures? Concerning which against M. Bishops conclusion I conclude this question with the saying of Saint Austin before alledged, and worthy here againe to be remembered, ^d Whether concerning Christ or his Church, or any thing that belongeth vnto our faith and life, I will not say, if we, not being to be compared to him that saith, if we, but if an Angell from heauen shall preach vnto you anything but what ye haue receiued in the Scriptures of the Law and the Gospell, accursed be hee ^d Hearken to it M. Bishop, and let it make you afraid to pleade for Traditions any more.

^b Answer to the Epistle sae 11.

^c Berna. in Cant. ser. 66. Institutio Ecclesie non recipiunt.

^d August. supra scil. 8.

CHAPTER 8.
OF VOWES.

I. W. BISHOP.

MAfter Perkins is very intricate and tedious in delinering his opinion concerning Vowes; I will in as good order as I can, briefly correct his errors herein. In his passage (which he intituleth of our consents) he rangeth many things, wherein we differ much; as first in the definition of a vow, which he defineth thus: A Vow is a promise made to God, touching some dutie to bee performed to him. This definition cometh too short of a Vow, & agreeth unto all other covenants made betweene God and man; and so Adams acceptance not to eate of the forbidden fruite should be a Vow, and Noes building of the Arke: and briefly every acceptance and promise to fulfill any of Gods commandments: & consequently every breach of them must needs be two severall finnes, the one of disobedience in such a precept, the other of infidelity by breaking of our vow. All which absurdities necessarily follow of M. Perkins his definition, & be things unheard of either in holy Scriptures or among the ancient holy Fathers, proceeding onely out of the drosse of their owne devices, and therefor with as great facility to be denied of us as they doe with audacitie avouch them. To make up then the definition, we must adde, that the promise to God bee of some better good, proceeding from our owne free choise & libertie: so that no vow is made without a mans free choise to bund himself, over and besides all other necessary bonds: which to be of the nature of a vow, we gather first out of the holy Scriptures: * If thou make a vow, be not slow to performe it: but if thou wilt not promise, thou shalt be without sin. What can be more cleare, then that a mā may chuse whether he wil vow or no: which is confirmed in S. Paul: He that decreeth in his heart, not having necessity, but having power over his owne will, &c. So that this libertie to promise, or not to promise, is of the substance of a Vow, and that if he list not to vow, he doth not sinne: which were very false, if the acceptance of necessary duties were Vowes. For he that refuseth to accept them, doth sin: as if a man should refuse to performe any of Gods commandments.

* Deut. 23.

Hence it followeth most manifestly, that the promise which wee make to God in Baptisme, of keeping Gods commaundements, is no vow, if a vow be taken properly, because it lieth not in vs to refuse it, without we will withall refuse the grace of Baptisme, and remaine in the state of damnation. And M. Perkins affirming it to bee a Vow, and often repeating it, dooth not once confirme it with any shadowe of prooffe, but takes that for granted, which he knowes we doe denie flatly.

R. ABBOT.

What the nature of a vow is, we shall best conceiue by the vse thereof, which we find expressed in the Lawe of God, which if wee wel weigh & consider, we shall conceiue that a Vow is nothing else but a deliberate and solemne promise made to God of some honour or seruice to be done vnto him, interposed for a motiue to the obtaining and receiuing of some speciall benefites at his handes. The matter of Vowes in the lawe of Moses is vsually noted to bee some ceremoniall worship, God hauing thereby prescribed to his people certaine formes of externall obseruations, whereby they should vpon occasions testifie their thankfulness and deuotion towards him. As in other their legall seruice they were restrained frō following their own deuce, so in this poynt also of Vowes they were limited: neither might any thing be done by vow to God, but whereof God had giuen warrant and approbation by the lawe. Albeit because deuotion and thankfulness is a matter of free and voluntarie affection, and readie of it selfe to shew it selfe, therefore God, though he himselfe directed in that case what might and should bee done by him that vowed, yet did not by expresse commaundement tie any man to vow, but left it so farre foorth to issue from the free and voluntarie motion of his owne heart. Nowe the vse of vowes we find in Scripture to haue commonly bene vpon condition of receiuing some benefit and mercy at Gods hands. Thus Jacob beeing to go to his vnkle Laban for auoiding the furie of his brother Esau, a Gen. 28.20.
 vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and keepe me on this iourney which I goe, and will giue me bread to eate and clothes to put on, so that I come againe to my fathers house in safetie, then shall the Lord be my God, and this stone which I haue set up as a pillar, shall be Gods house, and of all that thou shalt giue mee, will I giue the tenth vnto thee.

b Num. 27.2.

e Iudg I .30.

d 1.Sam.I.II.

e Plal.66 .1.2.

f 2.Sam 15.8.

g Tertul.advers.
Mare.lib.3. Non exigens Deum qua
suebant, sed propter quod suebant, ob ho
nore[m] scilicet Dei.

So the sonnes of Iacob the Israelites in the wildernesse ^b vowed a vow, saying, If thou wilt deliuer and giue this people (which were of the Canaanites) into mine handes, I will make their cities anathema, that is, I will vtterly destroy them, reseruing the spoyle thereof to be consecrated vnto thee. Thus ^c Iephthe vpon condition of victory against the Ammonites, vowed for a burnt offering to the Lord whatsoeuer at his returne should first meete him out of his owne house: ^d Hannah vpon condition of hauing a sonne, vowed him for a perpetuall Nazarte to the Lord: ^e Dauid maketh vowes to God in the time of his trouble, namely vpon condition of beeing deliuered therefrom: and Absolon though counterfeity, yet expressing the manner and vse of vowing, saith to Dauid his father, ^f Thy seruant vowed a vow when I remained in Gesbur in Aram, saying, If the Lord shall bring me againe to Ierusalem, I will serue the Lord, pretending thereby the offering of some sacrifices and offerings, by which he would shew himselfe thankfull to God. And thus as in all other seruice in the Law the performance of outwarde ceremonies was required, not for themselves, but for the spirituall duties that were shadowed thereby, euen so was it in vowes, that not for the carnall and outward things that were vowed, but for the inward affections and deuotions thereby exercis'd, they were acceptable vnto God. For it is true which Tertullian saith, ^g God did not require the things themselves that were done, but that for which they were done, which was for the honor of God. Therefore to speake properly and principally of the intention of vowes, the matter of them was spirituall and inward deuotion, though acted by carnall seruice. But spirituall acts and duties of religion are the same now that they were then, and the same then as now. Therefore the thing properly and principally meant in vowes, continueth now the same as it was also then. Whereof it must follow, that they who make vowes of other intendment then they did & make promises to God of other matters then were meant in their vowes, do deale very sinisterly & corruptly in alledging their example for the warrant of them. Yea and seeing the spiritual deuotions intended in their vowes are commō to all persons & of all conditions, neither did import any thing that should belong to any deuided sorts or societies of mē, but what all Christians should alike performe to God, what are they but deuisers of new worship and seruice vnto God, who vnder the colour of those vowes, do now bring in select and speciall acts & exercise of religion peculiar onely to some men? If all Christian deuotions signified by those vowes, were found amongst the Iewes, as hath bin said, and these select and peculiar deuotions were not found, certain it is that these deuotions are but superstitions, and haue no warrant from the old Testament to bee practised in the new. Now then to come to that which M. Bishop saith, albeit there is no man but well knoweth that a promise is more then a bare acceptance, yet wholly to take away that cauill, we terme a vow a solemne promise, whereby a man in speciall manner bindeth himself to that which he voweth. Albeit where there is a promise made to keepe Gods commaundements, who but an absurd man wil hold it for an absurdity to affirm that in the breach there is a double trespass, because to the obseruation hee was tyed with a double bond, both absolutely by ductie, and respectuely by couenant and promise, and therefore must needs be said to violate his duitie the one way, and his fidelitie the other. Otherwise why doth God vpon^h a promise to keepe his lawes, so often charge his people in speciall manner for dealingⁱ unfaithfully with him, calling them in that respect^k children in whom is no faith, no fidelitie or trust,^l lying children, ^m*a false or lying seed*, with sundry other speeches in sundry places to the like effecte. It was therefore but a Romish distemper of M. Bishops eies, haue made him vnable to see gold from drosse, and caused him to take that for an error, which comon vnderstanding should informe him to be a truth. As for that which he telleth vs, that by our definition wee make all couenants with God and promises to him to be vowes, we answer him, that we do indeed take all serious and solemne promises to God to bee very fitly contained vnder that name, not but that in precise manner of speaking there is a difference to be made betwixt them, but because we are not much scrupulous of distinction of words & termes, where saue only in circumstance there is no difference betwixt the things themselves, no difference, I say, at all in that respect wherein they are questioned betwixt the Papistes and vs. For the onely difference is this, that vowes properly so called are vttered, as by examples I haue shewed beefore, with condition of obtaining somewhat at Gods handes, but other othes and couenantes, and promises, are absolutely and simply made. According to this strict rule of speaking, it is onely a couenant and promise that wee make to GOD in Baptisme, to forsake the Deuill and all his workes, h Deut. 5. 27.

i Psal. 78. 8.
k Deut. 32. 20.
l Esay. 30. 9.
m Chap. 57. 4.

all serious/solemne
to God, vowes.

vowes & othes
or couenants, w^{ch} differing.

to belecue in God and to serue him : but it is a vow, when a man in sicknes, by way of repentance of his former life, saith, If the Lord will be mercifull vnto me, and vouchsafe to restore mee to health againe, I will forsake all my former euill wayes, and betake my selfe faithfully to his seruice. The matter then on both sides is one & the same, and the difference is onely in forme of speaking, which being no other, we make no doubt of calling both by the name of vowes, neyther is there any question in that behalf, because the Papistes terme absolute promises Vowes as well as wee. But M. Bishop, out of the drosse of their schooles, taketh vpon him to teach vs another difference, that a vow is a promise to God of some better good, the same proceeding out of our owne free choise and liber:ie, whereas other promises may bee of necessarie duties, not being at our choyle; but whereto we are tyed otherwise. Where he leaueth vs to guess what he meaneth by some better good, the wordes importing a comparison, and therefore implying a reference to some other good, then which that is better which wee promise by a vow. This mysterie Thomas Aquinas shall open for vs, who saith, that this better good is so called in comparison of that good that is commonly necessary for the obtaining of saluation: meaning thereby that it is better then those vertues and good workes which in common beclong to the dutie of euery Christian man. Which fancie of theirs is very fond & vaine because when of old the vow was sacrifice, and the common dutie was mercie, the vow could not be said to bee of a better good then was the common dutie, for that mercie was better then sacrifice, as God himselfe gaue to vnderstand, saying, I will haue mercy and not sacrifice. Yea it hath bene before shewed, that of old the thing principally intended in vowes was matter of common dutie, though included for the time as it were in the shell of those outward ceremonies, and therefore vowes cannot be said to bee of better good then common dutie. We see the speciall matter of Iacobs vow before mentioned, to haue bene that that concerneth euery man for the obtaining of saluation, Then shall the Lord be my God: before which, neither the building of a house to God, nor the giuing of a tenth of his goodes to God, could bee preferred as a better good. And who dooth not vnderstand and see, that in this assertion of a better good in their vowes, they affirme that that is directly contrary to the doctrine of the Scriptures, How doth hee vow a better good, *n Thom. Aquin.

sum. 2. 1. qu. 87.
art. 2. 1. in corp.
Dicitur maius bonum in comparatione ad bonum quod communiter est de necessitate salutis.*

o Ose. 6. 6.

good, who in the vow of continencie burneth with fleshly lust, whē the Apostle so plainly saith, It is better to marry then to burne? p 1. Cor. 7. 9. How do they vow a better good in their vow of pouertie and beggery, when as our Sauour saith, It is a more blessed thing to giue, then to receiue? q Mat. 23. 35. How do they in their vow of obedience tie themselues to a better good, in making themselues slaues to the rules of men, then other men doe in following the commaundements of God, when as the Scripture saith, Bee yee not made the seruants of men? r 1. Co. in. 7. 23. These are very pecuilli and absurd deuices, bred in corrupt and rotten braines, and no way sauouring of Christian vnderstanding. As for that which hee addeth, that a vow must proceed of our owne free choise and libertie, and that no vow is made without a mans free choise to bind himselfe, whether he vnderstand it of vowing or of the thing that is vowed, there is no necessitie thereof. For albeit it be true that a man is not alwayes tied to vow, but sometimes is at libertie whether to vow or not, yet this is not so alwayes and in all vowes; beecause (as shall be hereafter shewed) it is one part of honour and dutie which God requireth of euery Christian man, that we religiously vow and promise our selues and our faithfull seruice vnto him } p. 1000. Whereby it appeareth as touching the thing vowed, that it is not alwayes at our free libertie and choise before our vow, whether to do it or not. For seeing necessary duties are some part of the matter of vowes, & it cannot but be sinne to forgo necessary and commanded dutie, it must needs follow, that vowes are made of those things also, which it is sinne otherwise not to doe, and are not at our choise and libertie whether to be bound to them or not. It had bin sinne in Iacob not to haue the Lord for his God, and yet it is the thing that he voweth, as we haue seene. Then shall the Lord be my God. The words which M. Bishop alledgeth for his purpose out of Deuteronomy, If thou vow a vow, be not slacke to performe it, but if thou forbearst to vow, it shall be no sinne vnto thee, D. eut. 23. 21. are altogether referred to legall vowes. The spirituall dutie of thanksgiuing exercised by those types & figures, could not be omitted without sin, but it was no sinne not to make the ceremoniall vow; they were at their owne free choise and libertie in that behalfe, but we cannot thence frame a rule generall for all vowes. The other place which is cited, is wholly impertinent, S. Paul thereby onely affirming that the father doth well to keepe his daughter a virgine, when hee is vpon good good grounds assured that hee hath no necessitie to doe otherwise, when he hath full resolution that without any snare or danger to her he may to do. ¶ He that standeth firme in his owne heart that he hath no need (by perill or feare of incontinencie to marry his daughter) but hath full power ouer his owne will (to doe safely what he liketh in that behalfe) and hath decreed in his heart that he will keepe his virgin, he doth well. This is his meaning, saith S. Ambrose that he that hath a daughter that hath no minde to marry, keepe her a virgin, and doe not thrust upon her occasion of mariage, who hee seeth hath no will or desire thereto: for if it be for a man to doe a benefite much more is it for him not to take it away. Now how badly doth M. Bishop deale to wrest these words to his description of vowes, as if the Apostle had spoken of vowing to be where there is no necessitie thereof, but a man hath full power whether to vow or not, when indeed hee saith nothing at all to that effect. Here is therefore as yet no prooffe, that libertie to promise or not to promise is of the substance of a vow, nothing to proue that the name of vowes doth not belong to the acceptance of necessary duties, such duties as in the refusall whereof wee should commit sinne. Nothing therefore is there to hinder, but that the promise that we make to God in baptisme should properly be called a vow, if we vnderstand the proper vse thereof in respect of the thing vowed as M. Bishop doth. Wee take the proper vse from the matter not from the matter of it: as hath bene before said, but because the question here is what is properly the matter of a vow, wee say there is no exception thence to be taken why the promise of baptisme should not properly be called a vow. Surely Herome maketh holinesse in body & in spirit the matter of a Christian vow. S. Austin asketh the question & answereth it, What are we to vow to God? To beleue in him, to hope for eternal life at his hands, to liue well according to the manner of life that is common to all, not to steale, not to commit adultery, not to loue drunkenes, not to be proud, not to kill, not to hate our brother. And againe, What do we vow to God but to be the temple of God? He maketh it the best vow to offer our soule to God. How? By holy behauiour, by chaste thoughts, by good workes, by declining from euill and turning to good. If these things be the matter of Christian vowes, why is the profession of baptisme which containeth all these things, denied to be a vow? The great schoolmaster of the Roman church

u Ambros. in l. Cor. 7. Hoc dicit ut qui virgi. e n habet cui animus ad nuptias non est, seruet illam, nec illic uigetur familie nuptiarum. quam uidet nubendi voluntatem non habere: si enim beneficia praesanda sunt, quanto magis minus sunt auerenda?

x Hieron. in Esa. lib. 7. cap. 19. Votum offert et soluit Domino qui est sanctus corpore & spiritu.

y August. in psal. 78. Quid debemus uocari? Crede in illum, sperare ab illo vitam aeternam bene viuere secundum communem modum, scilicet non facere, ad alterum non facere, non committere uolentiam &c.

z Idem in psal. 131. Quid uouemus Deo nisi ut simus exemplum Dei? 7 Votum optimum offerre auium nostram, Quomodo Moribus sanctis, cogitationibus castis, operibus fructuosis, auerendo à malo, & conuertendo ad bonum.

defineth ^b a vow to be the testification of a voluntary promise which is to be made to God, and concerning those things which belong to God: and according to this definition maketh that a v. w which all make in baptisime, because there voluntarily men protest and promise to consecrate to God both their bodies and their soules, as being both his by right of creation & redemption, and wil M. Bishop here come in and tell vs, Hic magister non t. natur, Here our master tells a lie? Their ordinary glosse calleth those protestations of baptisime the common vowes, without which there is no saluation: and Thomas Aquinas durst not denie but that the same properly doe fall into the nature of a vow, because they are voluntarily don, but forsooth most properly they are no vowes, because that is most properly a vow which is altogether voluntary, that is, such as that a man is wholly at his owne choise whether he doe it or not. And whence commeth this most properly? Marry out of the forge of Thomas Aquinas his braines, who seeing that that which he was to say for their other vowes could not well hang together, if the promise of baptisime should bee taken for a perfect vow, hewed and pared the definition of a vow that it might be fitted for his turne. Azorius the Iesuite telleth vs, that the auncient Divines, as also the Master of the sentences, seeme to thinke that baptisime is a vow properly and truly so called but (saith he) it is more probable which the rest of the Schoole-men holde. Thus against the iudgement of the auncient Divines, they frame al things as they list and wee must take euery of their blinde sophismes to bee a certaine rule of truth. But we refuse them to be our matters, and chuse to follow that which the Church before them hath followed, accounting all those things the matters of our vowes to God which were figured by those ceremonies and sacrifices which were vowed by the law, euen all the spirituall sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving and al good works whereby we honor and glorifie almighty God, all which according to our state of life we promise to God in baptisime and therefore do account that promise a vow, because it containeth the spiritual substance of those auncient vowes. The compiler of the book of Sentences in S. Austins works, hath frō one or other gathered this sentence, Whosoener well beethinke th him what to vowe to God, and what in vowing to pay, let him vow himselfe and pay himselfe This is required of God, and this is due to God. If this bee the right conceit of a vow, then the promise of baptisime is a vow, and it is

b Pet. Lombard.
 sen lib. 4. dist. 28.
 Votum est testificatio
 quadam promissio quae Deo & de his quae ad Deum sunt fieri debet, &c. Commune illud quod in baptisimo omnes fa-
 ciunt, &c.

c Gloss. ordinari. in Psal 75. Commu-
 nia vota sine quibus
 non est salus.

d Thom. Aquin.
 sent. 2. 2. q. 38. art.

2. ad 1. Sub voto baptizatorum ca-
 dit quia voluntari-ritur, licet sit de necessitate saluti,

&c. & incorp.

Omnino voluntaria
 sunt propter sine
 cadit sub voto.

e Azor lib. 1. c.

cap. 14. Baptisma
 esse votum proprie-
 tum veteres Theo-
 logi cum magi-
 stro videntur senti-
 re sed probabiliter
 est quod scholasticus
 alij teneant.

f Sent apud August. 2. in fine.

Quisquis bene cogi-
 tat quae vovenda
 sunt & que vovendo
 pro se vel pro alio
 vovenda: & reddat.

Nec exiguus, locdebetur.

not true which M Bishop saith, that there is no vow properly so called of necessary duties, because we vow that which God requireth, and which is due to God. Albeit for conclusion I am to aduertise thee (gentle Reader) that we make not the matter of vowes to consist onely in necessary duties, that is, such duties as God namely requireth of vs, but that sometimes we vow those things which rest vpon our choyse, and whereof in particular we are commanded nothing. For albeit God require thankfulness and dutie for the mercies which we haue received of him, yet hee hath not precisely set downe, that by way of thanks a man should alwayes do this or that but hath left the deuout and thankfull minde to cast and consider which way he may testifie the affection of his heart, by doing some good worke whereof he hath vnderstanding by the woorde of God that it shall be acceptable vnto him. Thus a man, though not bound to it, yet may vow to doe seruice to G O D in the ministry of the Church, and being a minister, conceiuing his seruice in this or that sort to be profitable to the Church, may by vowing himselfe thereto abridge himselfe of that libertie which otherwise hee might enioy.

So may a manne vow a part of his goods to the poore, as Zachens did, when as by no commaundement he is vrged so to doe. The like may men doe for the building and endowing of Schooles, Hospitals Colledges, and such other godly and charitable vses, when yet these things by precept are not necessarily laid vpon them, Yea neither doe we question but that a man vpon good grounds, and so long as hee shal not thereby be intangled in a snare, may priuately vow vnto God a single life, to the end that hee may the more commodiously apply himselfe to the seruice of the kingdome of God: this vow beeing conditionall only so far as it shal bee seconded with the gift of God, and so long as it shall stand with peace of conscience towards him. In these & such like is the true imitation of the outward ceremonie of the law, wherein men were at their libertie whether to vow or not works whereof generally we haue warrant by the word of God, but whereof in particular there is no necessitie imposed vpon vs, being left vnto vs at large, thereby freely and voluntarily to exercise our zeale and deuotion towards God. Wherin notwithstanding we are to remember that caution that Chrysoftome giueth, k If a man exactly weigh the matter, our vertues are due to God, albeit they be not promised or vowed, which Christ signifieth when he saith, We haue done that that

p. 997. ②

s. Luke 19.8.

h. 1. Co. 7.35.

i. Mat. 19. 12.

k Chrysoft. in psal.
49. Si quis autem exaltes perpendit,
et si minime promis-
satur, v. ritus samē ei debetur. Id Christus significans dice-
bat, Quae debui-
mus facere fecimus

was our ducty to do. For seeing we are bound^d to loue the Lord our God with all our hart, with al our soule, with all our mind, with al our strength we must conceiue that though nothing be directed vnto vs in particular as touching the necessitie of such or such a worke, yet in the generall we doe nothing therein but what we owe to God, because whatsoeuer is within vs or whatsoeuer is without vs, we owe all to him. Yea and the vow of our baptisme doth after a sort containe all these other vowes in that beeing there consecrated wholly to God, we vndertake thereby to take all occasions and oportunities to doe honor vnto God. As for Popish vowes, being as they are for the most part brainfick & idle fancies, such as whereof neither in the general nor in the particular we haue any testimony from God that they are accepted in his sight, they are only apish counterfeits of those legall and ceremoniall vowes, but doe no way carry the true resemblance of them, nor that life of spirituall worship and seruice that was shadowed thereby.

1 Luke. 10. 27.

2. W. BISHOP.

The second point of our supposed consent is, that Vowes were some part of Gods worship in Moses law, but are not so in the Gospell, which we also deny. M. Perk. proves his assertion thus: Vowes belonged to the ceremonies of Moses law, but all those ceremonies are abolished by Christs passion.

Ans. That Vowes in themselves were no part of the ceremonies of Moses law, but true parts of the worship of God in all estates, as well in the state of nature and the Gospell, as in Moses law: but this point M. Perk. handleth againe in the first point of our difference, where it shall be discussed. Thirdly he saith that speciall vowes may be made in the new law, to performe some bodily exercise for some good ende, as to fast, to taske our selues to prayers, or study of holy Scripture, and such like, but many rules must then be obserued; that wee vow an honest thing agreeable to Gods word: this we allow. Secondly, that it be so made that it may stand with Christian libertie, that is, that it make not such thinges necessary in conscience, which Christian religion leaues at libertie. This rule of his is flat repugnant to the nature of a vow, and contrary to himselfe. For he saith a little before, that a Christian may vow fasting, prayer, almshoues. I then demaund, hauing vowed these thinges, is hee not bound to performe them? Yes, or else he breakes his vow, with which God is highly.

* Deut. 23.
Eccles. 50.

highly displeas'd. * An vnfaithfull promise displeaseth God. Then is it manifest, that all vowes doe abridge vs of our libertie, and make that vnlawfull for vs which before our vow was lawfull: which is so euident of it selfe, that I maruell where the mans wit and memorise was when he wrote the contrary.

His other rules, that a vow be made with good deliberation and with consent of our superiours, and not onely of thinges possible, but also of the better sort, we allow for they are taken out of our Doctors. See, S. Thom.

Quaest. 38.

R. ABBOT

That which M. Perkins saith is true, that in the Law of Moses the ceremoniall worke it selfe was a parte of the worshippe of God, and was to bee done in it selfe by way of obedience to God. Hee speaketh not of the act of vowing simplic by it selfe, as M. Bishop tallly wresteth his words, but of the vow of a ceremoniall ductie in the way of seruice to God, which if M. Bishop doe not acknowledge to be abolished, hee must become a Iew, and practise the sacrifices and offerings prescribed by Moses law. But of this hee telleth vs that wee shall heare more hereafter, and wee are content to wait his leifure. As touching vowes vnder the Gospell, M. Perkins affirmeth, that they may bee made as touching the performance of some outward & bodily exercise, for some good ends and purposes, as when a man seeing himselfe prone to drunkenesse, doth by a vow bind himselfe for a time to the forbearing of wine and strong drinke, or vpon occasions tyeth himselfe to set fasting, and prayer, and reading of the Scriptures, and giuing of some set almes, and such like. But as touching such vowes, he deliuereth certaine cautions to bee obserued. The first M. Bishop alloweth, that our vow bee agreeable to the will and word of God. The second he vnderstandeth not, and therefore cauilleth at it. It is required that our vow stand with Christian libertie, that is, that by vowing we intangle not our consciences with any opiniõ of the necessity of the thingsthemselues which wee haue vowed, as if any worshippe or holinesse consisted in those externall and formall obseruations, but that in our practise of them we know that in themselues they are no matters of conscience, nor doe yeeld vs any part of righteousnesse with God. Now this which M. Perkins applyeth against the concept of the very thinges themselues which which a man hath vowed, M. Bishop construeth as if he meant it of being at liberty from the performing of his vow. But a man may religiously performe his vow, and yet know that the thing it selfe is of no value with God which he performeth; and therefore M. Perkins wits did not faile in deliivering, but M. Bishops in vnderstanding. Those other conditions that such vowes must be made with content of superiours, and of things that are in our power to doe, and agreeable to our vocation and calling, and with good deliberation, and for a good end, M. Bishop approueth also, and therefore not questioning whence they were taken, and telling him that our vprightnesse appeareth therein, if we be content to take of them what is consonant & agreeable to the truth, we so let them go.

conditions of the vow
1.
2.
3. 4.
5.

3. W. BISHOP.

Now to the points in difference.

First, the Church of Rome (saith M. Perkins) teacheth, that in the new testament, we are as much bound to make vowes, as was the Church of the Iewes, we say no; considering that the Ceremoniall Law is now abolished, and we haue only two ceremonies by commandment to be obserued for parts of Gods worship: Baptisme and the Supper of the Lord.

Answer. What, is not your Holly-day service (which you call diuine service) any part of Gods worship in your owne opinions? Can a publike assembly instituted to honour God by prayer and thanksgiving with externall ceremony of time, place, apparell, kneeling, standing and sitting be no part of Gods worship in your irreligious Congregations, assembled together against Christ and his catholick Church? be it so. But admitting as you doe, your service to be good; it could not truly be denied to belong vnto the worship of God. But to the matter of difference, you grow very carelesse in your reports of our doctrine: for we hold that neither in the old nor new law, any man is bound to vow, but that it is & euer was a counsell, and no commandment, neuerthelesse, a thing of great deuotion and perfection in both states, intrinsecally belonging and much furthering to the true worshippe of almighty God, which we proue in this sort, In a vow are two things; the one is the good which is vowed, called the materiall parts: for example, Fasting &c. The other, the promise it selfe made to God, which is the forme; the materiall parts do belong vnto their severall vertues: but this promise and performance of it be substantiall parts of Gods worship. For by promising of any good thing unto God, we acknowledge and professe that God is the soueraigne goodnesse it selfe, and taketh great pleasure in all good purposes and determinations: therefore to honour and worship him, we make that good promise againe, in performing that good service of God, we testifie, that he is most maiestically, reuerend, and dreadfull. And consequently that all promises made to him, are to bee accomplished most diligently, and without delay, wherein we honour and worship him, as contrariwise they doe much dishonour him who breake with him, as if hee were of no better account then to bee so deluded. This thing in it selfe is so certaine and cleare, that he who denies it, must needes eueher be ignorant in the nature of a vow, or not know wherein the true worship of God consisteth: for according unto the holy Scriptures it selfe, all good deedes done to the glory of God, be acts of the true worship of God. And Saint Anne * did worship God, by fasting and prayer. And * almes bestowed on Gods prisoners, is called a sacrifice pleasing and acceptable to God: And it is saide, * to be a pure religion before God, to visite Orphanes & widowes: If then all other vertuous duties done to the glory of God, be parts of his true worship; much more vowes which by speciall promise dedicate a good deedes to Gods honour: they then being of their owne nature, speciall parts of his true worship of God, it followeth necessary, that at all times they were and may be used to the true worship of God: that they were in practise before Moyses Law is euident by that vow which Iacob made, * of setting up a stone, which should be called the house of God, and of paying the tenthes of all his goods. Out of which vow, we also gather, that God holdeth for agreeable, any kind of good service offered unto him, out of our owne deuotion: albeit he hath not commaunded it, for no such thing as Iacob there vowed was commaunded him, but he being well assured that it would be well taken by God, which was offered of good will, to his greater honour, he vowed it, and is in holy Scripture commended for it.

Againe that when Saint Paul * seemeth to disallow voluntarie worship, he must be understood to speake either of erroneous, or of frivollous and foolish things promised to God, which do not properly serue to the setting forth of his honour.

R. ABBOT

Our diuine service, our prayers and thanksgiuings to God, our hearing of his worde, and receiuing of his sacramentes are indecde the worshippe of God, and our publike assemblies are instituted hereby to honour God, but as for the externall ceremonies of time, place, apparell, kneeling, standing, and sitting, if M. Bishops wits stood right, he would know that they are things accidentall to the worship of God, but no parts thereof. God is not honoured by our meeting at such a time, or by beeing in such a place, or by wearing such or such apparell, or by our kneeling, or standing, or sitting, but by the things which according to his commaundement wee doe in the vsage of these things. The Church was wont to forbear kneeling in their prayers from Easter to Whitsontide, and yet wee suppose M. Bishop is not so absurd, as to say that therefore they fayled to doe to God some part of his worshippe. A number of apish gestures for many hundred yeares were wanting in the Masse, and was there some parte of Gods worshippe wanting all that while? This matter needeth not to be stooode vpon, nor would there haue beene occasion to speake of it at all, but that mens senses commonly faile them most, when they thinke to vse them most acutely against God. He calleth our congregations irreligious, and saith they are assembled against Christ and his Church, but God hath iustified our congregations to their shame and confusion, and for the maintenance of them hath so shewed his prouidence & power, that as the Aegyptians saide, ^a The Lord fighteth for Israell against the Aegyptians, so the Romish idolaters haue beene forced to say, The Lorde fighteth for the English congregations against vs. But to come to the matter, he findeth fault with M. Perkins his report of their doctrine, and therefore himselfe reporteth it, that they holde that neither in the old nor new law any man is bound to vow, but that it euer was a counceill and no commaundement, yet neuerthelesse a thing of great deuotion and perfection in both states, and intrinsecally belonging to the true worship of God. Where as touching ceremoniall vowes, he saith truly hath in the old no mā was exprelly bound to vow, but that those vowes were matters of perfection in the old lawe, if wee will take it vpon his word, we may, but how to proue it he cannot tell:

it is a meere dotage, neither is there any ground whereupon to affirm that euer they were taken so to bee. Nay euen then was it true which Origen saith,^b To offer a mans selfe to God was a matter of greater perfection and eminencie then all vowes: which he that doth, saith he, is the follower of Christe. But as touching vowes & promises of spirituall duties and seruices which were figured in those ceremoniall deuotions, it is vtterly false which hee saith, whether in the old or new law, that we are not bound vnto them, and his owne words do planely shew the cōtrary. For he telleth vs that vowes do intrinsecally belong to the true worship of God, and who doubteth but that God hath required and commanded whatsoeuer beelongeth intrinsecally to his worship and seruice? For if they bee not commaunded, there is no necessity of them. If there be no necessity of them, then the religion and worship of God may stand perfect without them. If the worship of God may stand without them, then they do not intrinsecally belong to the true worship of God. But beecause the true vowes are intrinsecally and essentially beeloning to the true worship of God, therefore we must vnderstand and know them to be commaunded of God, and that hee hath not left any intrinsecall part of his true worshippe, to depend vpon our will. And this will yet further appeare by Maister Bishops proofe, who, setteth downe the matter and forme of a vow, the matter the good thing which is vowed: the forme the promise it selfe made to God, telleth vs that this promise and the performance of it are substantiall partes of Gods worship. For by promising, saith he, of any good thing to God, we acknowledge and professe that God is the soueraigne goodnesse it selfe. Nowe if vowes bee a substantiall part of Gods worship, and yet not commaunded of God, then some parte of the substance of Gods worship hangeth vpon our discretion and choise, whether to yeelde it him or not, and wee may yeeld him a maimed worship wanting some parte of the substance of it, and yet committe no trespass against him. So likewise if vowes bee the acknowledging and professing of the soueraigne goodnesse of God, and yet not commaunded of God, wee may without sinne forbear some parte of the acknowledgement and profession of the soueraigne goodnesse of God. If thereby wee testifie that he is most maiesticall, reuerend and dreadfull, and yet God haue not commaunded them, wee may refuse to giue this testimony without any impeachment of the maiestic of GOD.

^b Origen. in Num. hom. 24. Semet ipsum Deo offerre hoc est perfectius & eminentius omnibus votis: quod qui facit imitator est Christi.

But God is not worshipped in that sort; hee hath not left our acknowledgement of him arbitrary to the discretion of our will. He hath commanded vs ^c to giue vnto him the glory of his name, that is, ^cPsal. 96. 8. the glory that belongeth & is due vnto him, and if vowes bee a part of that glory as M. Bishop telleth vs they be, they cannot be exempted from that commandement. Christ hath commanded vs ^d to giue ^d Mat. 22. 37. to God the things that are Gods. If vowes bee a substantiall part of the worship of God, we are tied to giue the same vnto him, neither may we thinke our selues bound for one part onely, and at our own liberty for the other: Now all this paines that hee taketh, to proue that vowes are a part of the worship of God, is but lost as touching vs, because he fighteth without an aduersary, & proueth that which we deny not; but it giueth vs aduantage against them, to charge them with manifest and abhominable idolatry, in the confessing vowes to be a substantiall part of that worship of God, they communicate this honour to the Saints, and make vowes to them of fastings, prayers, pilgrimages, churches, altars, tapers, and what not: a thing so voide of all testimonie of Scripture, as that Bellarmino is content to say, ^e that when the holy Scriptures were written, ^e Bellar. de cultu sancti. ca. 9. Cum scriberentur scriptura sancta nondum caperat vsus ueniendi sancti. the custome of vowing to Saints was not yet begun. It is nothing therefore against vs that he alledgeth, that Iacob made a vow, thereby to proue that there was vse of vowes before the time of Moses law but whereas he saith that the things which Iacob vowed, were out of his owne deuotion, and not commanded of God, he speaketh it but at all aduantage, and hath no ground for that that he saith. For if his reason be because we do not read that any thing was commanded to Iacob in that behalfe, we may likewise argue that hee did all other deuotions out of his owne heart, and receiued them no. by commandement from God, because wee reade nothing of any such commaundement. But it is true which Origen saith, that no man ^f Origen. cont. Cels. lib. 7. Nemo qui oculis anima cernit alio modo Deum colit quam sicut ipse docuit. that seeth with the eyes of his soule, worshippeth God otherwise then as he himselfe hath taught, and which Hilary saith, that ^g we may not understand otherwise concerning God, then as he himselfe hath witness'd ^g Hilary. de Trinit. lib. 4. Non potest aliter de Deo quam ut ipse est de se testatur intelligi. himselfe. A. Bishop therefore doth amisse to make Iacob as blind as he himselfe is, that he should go about to worship God with deuotions of his owne deuce. He receiued instruction of the will of God from the fathers that were before him, & he had also immediate reuelation & illumination from God himself. We see that God afterwards in the law giueth commandement of the same things of building altars and paying tithes, & vndoubtedly God gaue not commandements of things which he had learned of Iacob, but which Iacob had bene taught by him. Yet, and because the Apostle S. Paul condemneth ^h will worship or voluntary religion, that is, all such deuotions as men vndertake of their owne deuice, thereby giuing to vnderstand that God neuer approueth any such, surely we may wel resolue that Iacob would not be guilty of any such presumption, but would first open his eare to learne of God what to doe, before hee would put forth the hand to do any thing vnto God. But saith M. Bishop, S. Paul when he seemeth to disallow voluntary worship, must bee vnderstood to speake either of erroneous or of friuolous and foolish things promised to God, which do not properly serue for the setting forth of his glory. Where we see the very patterne of an erroneous, and friuolous, and foolish answer. The Apostle simply taxeth will worship as erroneous; and friuolous, and foolish, & M. Bishop telleth vs, that he meaneth that will worship that is erroneous, or friuolous and foolish. Hee must bee vnderstood of friuolous and foolish things saith M. Bishop, & the Apostle telleth vs that he speaketh of such things as ⁱ haue a shew of wisdom; and therefore not to fight, but onely to spirituall iudgement are friuolous and foolish. And therefore doth the Apostle make them erroneous, and affirme that ^k they perish in the vsing, because they are after the doctrines and commandements of men, alluding to that which our Sauiour in the Gospell citeth out of the Prophet ^l In vaine doe they worship me, teaching for doctrines the precepts of men; but M. Bishop will haue vs think that the Apostles meaning is not to reprove generally the doctrines and commandements of men, but onely some that be erroneous. In a word, set them one against another, and hearken well what they say. The Apostle saith, voluntary religion or worship is erroneous, because it is after the doctrines and commandements of men. Maister Bishop saith, all voluntary worship is not erroneous, but onely that that is erroneous. But here wee must thinke, that when he thus tooke exception against promising to God friuolous and foolish things, he was quite out of the remembrance of the vowes of their religious orders. Wee must in charity bee perswaded that hee thought not of them, because he would haue considered, that in condemning the vowing of friuolous and foolish things, hee should con-

demne

k Col. 2. 23.

i i b l d.

k Ver. 23.

l Mat. 15. 9.

demne them, as in which there are so many fantastick and friuolous toies, as touching their apparell and other vsage, as that wee may woonder that euer such drunken deuices could come from sober men, if at least they were sober that were the deuifers of them. And if he had remembred them, or when he doth remember them, I maruaile what qualification or distinction hee would haue vsed, or will vse to salue the matter, that so ridiculous fooleries should be thought as properly seruing to the setting forth of the honour of God. Albeit it may bee that though beeing subtile and wise, hee afterwards pro forma disputeth, in the behalfe of those vowes that hee may not walke too openly, yet carying still a splene to the Iesuites, and for their sakes to all the rest he would first giue vs to vnderstand that in his mind he accounteth all those vowes as superstitions, and wholly condemned by the sentence of the Apostle. We are verie desirous to construe his meaning the best way.

4. W. BISHOP.

*Now that Vowes should be frequented in the state of the Gospell, besides the euidence of Sains Pauls Vowe, * and diuise other such like, * A.D. 18. the Prophet Esay diaferretell, in these woordes: * They shall wor- * Esay. 19. 18. shippe him with sacrifice and gitts, and they shall vow vowes vnto our Lord, and performe them, To which Master Perkins answereth, first, that by such ceremoniall worship as then was in vse, the Prophet doth expresse the spirituall worshippe of the new Testament. This exposition is vnluntarie and nothing proper: For what is more wild and absurde, then (to declare that Christians shall make no vowes) to say that they shall make Vowes, as though one contrarie were fute or would serue to expresse the other. This exposition being very vnmette, Maister Perkins adioyneth a seconde, that in the newe Testament we haue vowes of Morall and Euangelicall duties, but such are not any parte of Gods worship: so that first you shall haue no vowes at all: Seccondly, the winde being chang'd, you shall haue them, but as no parts of Gods worship, as though Morall and Euangelicall duties vnder taken and performed to Gods greater glory be not the very sinewes and substance of his seruice and worship.*

R. ABBOT.

a Act. 18. 18.

b Numb. 6. 2.

c I. Cor. 9. 20.

d Aug. epist. 19
Non mentientu
astu sed compati-
ontu affectu.

e Esay. 17. 21.

By the evidence of ^a S. Pauls vow, it is euident that M. Bishop wanted some discretion, to bring that for an example of prooffe, that vowes are to be frequented in the state of the Gospell, the same beeing ^b the Nazarites vow, according to the ceremony of Moses law, no more belonging to the state of the Gospell, then did all the Leuiticall priesthoode and sacrifices, condescended vnto by the Apostle, as M. Perkins before had told him, and he wisely saith nothing to the contrary, only for the infirmitie and weaknesse of the Iewes, ^c to whom for the time he became as a Iew, ^d not by craft of lying, as S. Austine saith, but by affection of compassion, that hee might winne them vnto Christ. As touching the place of Esay, it is to bee obserued that M. Perkins bringeth it in as alleadged by them, to prooue that in externall exercises we haue as much vse of vowes as the Iewes had, ^e The Egyptians (saith the Prophet, importing the like of all the Gentiles) shall know the Lorde, and shall doe sacrifice and oblation, and shall vow vowes vnto the Lord, and performe them. To this he answereth, that the Prophet according to the vsuall manner of all the Prophetes, doth by the ceremoniall seruice of the Leuiticall priesthoode, import the spirituall worship of God, intending that because it is spirituallly meant, therefore it is misapplied to the establishing of corporall and outward seruice. Now M. Bishops reply is like himselve, peruerse and crosse, that the Prophet would not say, They shall vow, to signifie that they should not vow. I answer him, that neither doth M. Perkins so intend, but that the Prophet would signifie, that when those Leuiticall and ceremoniall vowes should cease, yet the Gentiles should performe to God that spirituall worshippe and seruice that was figured thereby, and because the woordes are meant of spirituall duties, therefore that they are absurdly wrested to the maintaining of a new kinde of ceremoniall vowes. For as the Prophet saith, that ^f they should do sacrifice & oblation, & bringeth in the Lord saying, ^g Their burnt offerings and sacrifices shall be accepted vpon mine altar, and againe, ^h The Rammes of Nebaioth shall come vp to be accepted vpon mine altar, when yet the altar & burnt offerings and sacrifices should bee quite abolished, and therefore hee saith it onely to signifie that they should doe that spirituall seruice of inwarde and spi-

f Ibid.

g Cap. 5. 6. 7.

h Cap. 60. 7.

spi-

spirituall sacrifices that were represented and shadowed in those carnall obseruations: so doth he say, that they should vow vowes, whē yet those Leuiticall vowes should haue an end, onely because they should performe to God those spirituall deuotions which were signified by those vowes. Now as touching those spirituall deuotions M. Perkins addeth for another part of his answer, that the Church of the new Testament maketh vowes vnto God of morall & Euangelicall duties, the vow and promise whereof first made in bapptisme, we alwayes renew when we come to the Supper of the Lord. But withall he saith, that vowes be also made of things and actions indifferent, which things notwithstanding are not to be accounted anie parte of the worship of God. Which words consisting of two parts seuerally applyed, M. Bishop confoundeth and most lewdly & wretchedly peruerteth, as if M. Perkins had said, that in the new Testament we haue vowes of Morall and Euangelicall duties, but such are not any parte of Gods worshippe, and so with a harlots face not fite to blush, passeth ouer the matter, when as it was directly shewed him howe that propheticie is fulfilled in the new Testament without anie of the fooleries of Popish vowes. I pray thee gentle Reader, to consider the matter well. M. Perkins saith, that wee Christians vowe vowes of morall and Euangelicall duties, and if wee make any other vowes of thinges indifferent, those thinges must not bee taken for anie parts of Gods worship. M. Bishop maketh him to say, that vowes of morall and Euangelicall duties, and the duties themselues are no part of Gods worshippe. Thinke with thy selfe what credite thou mayest giue to him, who sticketh not so impudently to peruert so apparent and plaine woordes. But in those vowes of morall and spirituall duties is the true performance of that propheticie, and we may so much the more rest vpon it, because M. Bishop hath nothing to say against it. What further belongeth to the declaration of those vowes, I put it off to be handled in the next Section.

5. W. BISHOP.

Againe saith M. Perkins, they alledge for Euangelicall vowes: Vow vnto God and pay it. M. Perkins his answer is, that this bindes the Iewes, he would haue you understand, not the Christians. We say: that it is no commaundement to either of them, but an exhortation, as well to the one as to the other. First, because good vowes do tend to the greater glorie glory of God in all states: (as hath bene proued before) Secondly, for that the Prophet in the next verse, yeelding the reason why wee must pay our vowes, saith, That he vnto whom wee haue vowed is terrible vnto the Kings of the earth: and therefore most likely that such vowes bee spake of there, may be made of any sort of men inhabiting the earth.

Thirdly, because the ancient Fathers take it to extend vnto vs Christians, as well as vnto the Iewes: let one S. Augustine serue, in his Commentarie vpon the 75. Psalm. Because we haue handled those things (saith hee) peradventure thou who wast willing before, but now wilt not vow: but marke what the Psalm said vnto thee? It saith not, Do not vow, but vow and pay it; wilt thou not vow? Therefore wouldest thou haue vowed, but not haue fulfilled it? nay rather do both: Let the one be of thine owne promise, the other shall be performed by the helpe of God. He then tooke these words to belong vnto his Auditors who were no Iewes.

In the same place hee doth highly commend Christians for vowing, some Chastitie, some Hospitalitie, some Pouertie: but because contraries being set together, each doe more lively appeare in his kinde, let vs with this Exposition, compare M. Perkins his Commentarie vpon this place: who saith, that the Prophet speaketh of vowes, of Prayer and thanksgiuing: For so (saith Maister Perkins) doth he expound himselfe, My vowes are vpon me, I will offer prayes vnto God. Well aynd, I warrant you: The sixe and fiftieth Psalm written first, is the Exposition of the seuentie fine Psalm, which was conceited and uttered after. Again, in the seuentie fine Psalm David speaketh to others: in the other he speaketh of himselfe. Thirdly, the Prophets wordes in the sixe and fiftieth Psalm, confirme rather that which hee taught beefore, that all considerate vowes are praises and parts of Gods worship, or as the wordes do more literally sound, because his vowes, that is, his prayers and desires were by God accomplished, therefore he would praise and thanke him.

R. ABBOT

• Psalm 56. 12.

• Vow and performe vnto the Lord your God, saith the Prophet, all ye that bee round about him. M. Perkins verie truely saith, that these words whether we call them an exhortation or a commaundement, did concerne the Iewes onely as touching ceremoniall vowes, but as touching the spirituall intendment of them of prayse and thanksgiuing, giuing, do generally concerne both them and vs. M. Bishop like old True-pennie neuer but like himselfe, runneth away with a peice of this answer, and setteth himselfe to proue that which M. Perkins denieth not, that the words respect both the Iewes and vs We acknowledge so much M. Bishop: we say they concerne only them in those duties or deuotions that were proper to them onely, but in common they concerne both them and vs, in those duties and deuotions that belong to both. We cannot doubt but that the Prophet had reference to the condition of that time, & did inuite both the Priests and the people to that outward seruice of sacrifices and offerings, in the exercise whereof it pleased God in his wisdom then to traine them vp. But because we heare God so often professing, that he respected not their naked and bare sacrifices, and seeming so to reckon of them as if he had neuer giuen comādement of any such, namely when they were destitute of that inward pietie and obedience & deuotion, which God would haue to be exercised thereby, therefore we must conceiue that the Prophet here also looked further then to outward seruice, and in comāding to them the exercises thereof, did call them to inward affections of praise and thanksgiuing vnto God. Seeing then the outward solemnities and ceremonies which were the externall matter of their vowes, were but instructions and inducements to spirituall offices and duties, which in the right vse of vowes were principally vowed thereby, therefore in the spirituall construction of those ceremonies, wee are to learne what is the true and proper matter of Christian vowes, And because God as he is the same God, so as touching spirituall worship, is a like worshipped from the beginning to the ende, wee cannot doubt but that in the example and praise of the faithfull in those times wee may behold as in a glasse, what the duties are that by their vowes are recommended vnto vs, what wee find amongst them, we know the same belōgeth to vs. What we find not amōgst them, their vowes giue vs no warrant or example of it. Now what applications & constructions they made of those sacrifices & offerings and other ceremonies which they vowed vnto God, we may see by many phrascs & speeches which the Scriptures purposely vse to shew the meaning of them. Many examples thereof we haue in the Psalmes:^b Offer the sacrifices of righteousness: ^c Offer vnto God thanksgiuing, and hee that sacrificeth praise, hee honoureth m:^e. ^d The sacrifices

^b Psalm. 4. 5.

^c 50. 14. 23.

^d 51. 17.

sacrifices of God are a contrite spirite, a contrite and broken heart.
^f Let them offer sacrifices of praise. & I will offer to thee a sacrifice of praise.^h Let my prayer be in thy sight for incense, and the lifting up of my hands an evening sacrifice. Thus saith Ionas,ⁱ I will sacrifice vnto thee with the voyce of thankesgiuing, and Osee,^k We will render vnto thee the calues of our lips. The vow of humbling or afflicting themselues by fasting, what it imported appeareth by Gods reprouing of them, for that^l in the day of their fast they sought their owne will as giuing to vnderstand, that by their fast they were to bee instructed to the forbearing of their owne desires, to the renouncing of their owne wils, to the subduing of their owne corrupt and euill affections, to the elchewing of crueltie, oppression and violence, that they might make way to the workes of mercie which God did cō-mand them, as in the Prophets words there is shewed,^m Is not this the fast that I haue chosen, to loose the bonds of wickednesse, to take off the heaue burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and to breake every yoke? Is it not to deale thy bread to the hungry, to bring the poore that wandreth into thy house? &c. In brieffe the Prophet Micheas sheweth the signification of this humbling, and of all their sacrifices;ⁿ Hee hath shewed thee O man what is good, and what the Lord thy God requireth of thee, Surely to doe iudgement, and to loue mercy, and to humble thy selfe to walke with thy God. The vow of the Nazarites was the principall vow of all the rest. What the intention thereof was is expressed in the first description of the ceremonie of it,^o to be separated to the Lord. Now this was the common condition of all that people to be separated to the Lord, as God himselfe giueth them to vnderstand,^p I am the Lord your God, which haue separated you from other people: therefore shall ye be holy vnto me; for I the Lord am holy, and I haue separated you from other people that ye should be mine.
 But God by a speciall vow of ceremoniall obseruations, whereby in outward things for the time they were diuided from the common conuerlation of themselves and their owne people, would giue a spectacle and example to the rest of them, of putting off those car-nall and earthly affections by which they should bee like to other peoples, for preferuing of spirituall integritie and holinesse towards him. And therein is exemplified the condition of all the faithfull, of whom our Sauour hath told vs, that^q they are not of the world, but he hath chosen them out of the world, & therefore are^r to flic the corruption

f 107. 22.
 g 115. 17.
 h 141. 3.
 i Ion. 1.9
 k Ose. 14. 13.

l Esa. 58. 3.

m Ver. 6.

n Mich. 6. 8.

o Num. 6. 7.

p Leuit. 20. 26.

q Joh. 15. 19.
 r 1. Pet. 1. 4.

ruption that is in the world by lust, and to hearken to the voice of God,¹ Come out from among them, and separate your selues, saith the Lord, and touch no uncleane thing, and I will receiue you. These are then the vowes that belong to vs, vowes of prayer, of prayle and thanksgiving, of denying our selues, of mortifying our owne affections, of mercie and compassion towards our brethren, and in a woorde, of keeping our selues holy vnto God: euen thole vowes whereof we reade many examples in the Psalmes and other Scriptures: ^c Thou saidest, seeke ye my face, and my heart answered thee, O Lord, I will seeke thy face. ^u Helpe vs O God of our saluation for the glorie of thy name, &c. So wee that bee thy people and sheepe of thy pasture shall prayse thee for euer, and from generation to generation we will sette forth thy prayse. ^x Let thy hand be vpon the man of thy right hand, and vpon the sonne of man whom thou madest so strong for thine owne sake: so will not we goe backe from thee: reuine thou vs and wee will call vpon thy name. ^y Teach me thy way O Lord, and I will walke in thy truth. ^z Teach me the way of thy statutes, and I will keepe it vnto the end: giue mee vnderstanding and I will keepe thy law, yea I will keepe it with my whole heart. ^a I haue sworne and I will performe it, that I will keepe thy righteous iudgements. Thus doth Osee the Prophet instruct the people of God, ^b Take you wordes, and turne to the Lorde and say vnto him, Take away all our iniquitie, and receiue vs graciously, so will we render the values of our lips. These vowes are recommended vnto vs in the new Testament, when we are taught ^c to deny our selues, and to take up the crosse of Christ that wee may follow him, ^d to mortifie our earthly members, ^e to giue our selues vnto God, & our members as weapons of righteousness vnto God: ^f to offer our bodies a holy, liuely and acceptable sacrifice vnto God: ^g to glorifie God both in our bodies and in our spirits, as beeing both his: ^h to liue vnto him which died for vs and rose againe. These vowes we made to God in our baptisme: and we professe the continuing and renewing of them from time to time in comming to the table of the Lord, as also in our daily prayers and meditations, and in all those promises which the remembrance of our owne wayes draweth from vs euery while. Of these the Prophet Esay spake in the section before: of these the Prophet Dauid heere saith, Vow vnto the Lord your God and performe the same, all ye that bee round about him. Now then it is true that vowes are to the honor and glory of God, and that wee are to consider the dreadfull maiestie of God,

2. Cor. 16. 17.

Psal 27. 8.

79. 3. 13.

80. 17.

85. 1.

119. 33. 34.

Ver. 106.

Cfe. 14. 3.

Mat. 16. 24.

Col. 3. 5.

Rom. 6. 13.

Cap. 1. 1.

1. Cor. 6. 10.

1. Cor. 5. 5.

God, that we may be moued carefully to performe the vowes that we haue made vnto him, and that these vowes are such as may bee made by all sorts of men inhabiting the earth: and what of all this, either against M. Perkins or against vs? As for S. Austin, hee confirmeth all that hath bene here saide of the exposition of these vowes, that the things that we are here willed to vow, are ¹ to beleene in God, to trust in him, to liue a good life, to hope to receiue of him eternall life, and such like as we haue seene before. Now it is true that hee saith further, that ^k some vow chastitie in marriage by keeping themselues the husband to his owne wife onely, or the wife onely to her owne husband: some hauing bene married, vow not to marrie againe, some from the beginning vow virginities, some to vse their houses for hospitalities to the Saints, some to distribute all their goodes to the poore: some of which vowes we question not, the rest are afterwards to be considered of. But that which M. Bishop citeth, of his exhorting men not to forbear vowing for the necessitie of the performance thereof, but for that to trust to the helpe of God, to proue that he tooke those wordes to belong to his auditors and not onely to the Iewes, it is a prooffe needlesse, because wee acknowledge so much, in such sort as hath bene saide before. As for that which he further addeth, of setting contraries together, that each may more liuely appeare in his kind, it is but the liuely setting foorth of his owne indiscretion & folly. M. Perkins to shew what may be vnderstoode by vowes, in the place here handled alledgeth a speech of Dauid in a former Psalm. ¹ Thy vowes are upon me, O God: (that is, the vowes which I haue made to thee are lying on mee to bee performed,) I will render praises vnto thee. In which place we see that the Prophet expoundeth vowes concerning praises to God, whereupon M. Perkins alledgeth, that vowes likewise in the other place may bee construed of prayes and thanksgiuing vnto God. Against this M. Bishop excepteth full wisely I warrant you, as not likely that the Psalme fiftie sixe writen first, should be the exposition of the Psalme seventy five which was conceited and uttered after. But did not his vnderstanding serue to instruct him, that Dauid though not expounding the latter Psalm in the former, yet in the former expounding vowes to bee prayes, doth teach vs how to expound vowes, when they are mentioned in a latter Psalm, or in any other Scripture sounding to like effect? And who but he is ignorant, that Scriptures formerly writ-i supra scilicet. i.

ex Augustini in
P. sul. 7.

k Ibid. Alii vo-uent castitatem
conjugalem, ut Prater uxorem suam
non noverint aliam,
Et. Alij vovent
experti sele coniu-
gium nihil tale ultra pati: alij virgi-nitatem ab ipsa vo-
eunte aetate vovent
alij vovent dominum
suam hospitalens
omnibus sanctis:
alij vovent relin-
quere cransu sua,
Et.

1 Psalm. 56. 12.

ten doe often giue vs light and helpe for the vnderstanding and expounding of Scriptures that are written later? His seconde exception is as good as that, namely that Dauid in the latter Psalmes speaketh to others, in the former of himselfe. And what then? What should hinder but that by the name of vowes he should signifie the prayes of God in speaking to others, when he himselfe expoundeth vowes to be the prayes of God in speaking of himselfe? Albeit hee mistaketh in making Dauid the author of the latter Psalmes, which is rather thought to be written in the time of Ezechias, but questionlesse after Dauids time. In his third exception his head being wild, he telleth vs that the Prophets woordes in Psalmes fiftie sixe confirme rather that which he taught before. Where before when as the Psalmes sixtie sixe is the former of the two Psalmes: I thinke he cannot well tell what he meant by this speech. But what is the thing confirmed? That all considerate vowes are prayes and parts of Gods worship. What he meaneth by considerate vowes we know not, but we take those onely to be considerate vowes whereby we vow those things which God hath warranted vs to vow. Thus are vowes a part of Gods worship, when we vow those things which he hath taught vs to bee belonging to his worship. Such were for the time the ceremonies and sacrifices of the Lawe, not for themselues, but for the spirituall dutie that was implied in them and acted by them. If they were not put to this vse, God held them not for any part of his worshippinge. Dauid therefore hauing respect to this, signifieth that the thing which hee properly intended by his vowes, was prayse and thankses to God. This is all that Dauid sayeth, and was by Master Perkins fittely alledged for that that he had in hand.

6. W. BISHOP.

Let vs now come to the second poynt, wherein we dissent: Th. y (saith M. Perkins) hold vowes made of things not commanded, as of fasting, Pray. r. &c. to be parts of Gods worship; and that they tend vnto a state of perfection. We say flatly no, holding that lawfull vowes bee stayes & props of Gods worship; but not the worshippinge it selfe: this is long since confuted But here M. P. setteth up a rotten prope or twu, to uphold his ruyinous building, saying, S. Paule saith plainly. Bodily exercise profiteth little, + 1. Tim. 4. but godlinesse profiteth much. Where are you good sir? We treat here of vowes,

vowes, which are formally actions of the mind: what do you now about bodily exercises? Vowes are principall parts of that godlinesse, which is so profitable. And if by bodily exercise, fasting, and other corporall paine or labour be understood, then we say, that such thinges of themselves would profite little: but being directed to the chastising of the rebellious flesh, to the end we may lesse offend, and better serue God, then they may much profite vs. But let vs heare M. Perkins his seconde reason against such vowes. Gods kingdome standeth not in outward things, and therefore his worship standeth not in outward things.

Answer. Gods kingdome in it selfe standeth not in outward thinges, and as it is in vs also, it doth consist chiefly in inward worship, by faith, hope charitie, and religuon, in whose kingdome vowes hold an honorable ranke: but a great part of this worship among vs, depends of outward thinges: for be not the two only parts of Gods worship among Protestants (as M. Perkins saith in this question) Baptisme and our Lords Supper, both which partly consist in outwardly both speaking & doing? And is not faith (which is the roote of all Christian Religion) gotten by outward preaching and hearing?

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop sheweth himselfe againe in his right colour: for whereas M. Perkins mentioning vowes of thinges not commaunded, addeth for example, as of meates, drinckes, and attire, &c. he in steed hereof putteth in, as of fasting and prayer, &c. that he might make his Reader beleue, that M. Perkins affirmed prayer to bee no parte of Gods worship. Well, he must keepe his wont, and it fitteth well the cause that hee hath in hande. The thing that M. Perkins poundeth is this, that lawfull vowes of thinges not commaunded, are stayes and proppes of the worship of God, but not the worship it selfe. This M. Bishop saith is long since confuted, but where he cannot tell. But for prooffe hereof M. Perkins first alledgeth the wordes of S. Paule, ¹ Bodily exercise profiteth little, but godlinesse is profitable for all thinges. To these wordes M. Bishop giueth an answer that fully confirmeth what M. Perkins saith. But first hee beeginneth merily, Where are you good Sir? Here M. Bishop, what would hee? we treat here of vowes, saith hee, which are formally actions of the mind: what doe you now about bodily exercises? Yea but M. Bishop, you haue told vs before of god vowes, and considerate vowes, and therefore wee presume presume you allow not of all vowes, as if a man should vow the^b kil^b of a man, or the cutting off of a dogges necke. You will tell vs then, that good vowes are such as whereby wee vow good things, and then we answer you, that vowes indeed take their condition and qualitie from the things themselues that are vowed, and therefore that those onely vowes are the true worship of God whereby wee vow those things that belong to his true worship. Whence it followeth, that where bodily exercises are vowed by which God is not worshipped, the sentence of the Apostle is rightly alledged against the taking of those vowes for anie worship of God, that bodily exercise profiteth little, but godlinesse is profitable for all things. We see the Apostle setteth downe bodily exercise for one thing, & godlinesse for another, and thereby teacheth vs, that bodily exercise by it selfe is no part of godlinesse: and if bodily exercise be no part of godlinesse, then vowes of bodily exercise can be no part thereof. It is but a tradition therefore that M. Bishop saith, that vowes are principall parts of that godlinesse that is so profitable, because they are no parts of that godlinesse but when that godlinesse it selfe is the thing which we vow. But now he addeth, If by bodily exercise fasting and other corporall paine or labour be understood then we say, that such things of themselues would profite little, but being directed to the chastising of the rebellious flesh, to the ende we may lesse offend & better serue God, then they may much profit. And what is this but that that M. Perkins, saith that such things are staves and proppes and helpes of the worship of God, but in themselues they are no part of Gods worship? The mortifying of fleshly lusts, the auoyding of sinne, the yeelding of our obedience to God, these are things wherein God is worshipped. But fasting and such other exercises are onely helpes to these and no part of them, and therefore the vowes thereof (as M. Perkins saith) are no other wise to bee reckoned, but as proppes & staves, and not as partes of the worship of God. Poperie hath wickedly taught men to reckon of them as meritorious workes and satisfactions for sinne, yea not onely for a mans owne sinnes, but for other mens sinnes also. These are impious and damnable conceipts, and farre from that which the Scripture hath taught vs to conceiue of all outward things. But against that opinion of vowing such outward and bodily seruice, Maister Perkins further vrgeth, that the kingdome of God standeth not in outward things, as eating, drinking and such like, alluding to the words of the Apostle, The kingdome of God is not meate and drinke, but righteousnesse and peace. and ioy in the holy Ghost, and he that in these things serueth Christ, pleaseth God and is approoued of all men. The Apostle would thereby haue it vnderstood, that we are no whit the nearer to the kingdome of God by eating or not eating, by drinking or not drinking by wearing or nor wearing this or that, or by any such like things. belonging to the externall conuersion and life of man. By outward things then we vnderstand not all things that are done outwardly, but onely those things the vse whereof properly belongeth to the outward man. The preaching and hearing of Gods word, the ministring and receiuing of the Sacraments, are things outwardly done, but they are things belonging not to the outward but the inward man. M. Bishops exception therefore as touching these things is nothing to the purpose, but the argument standeth good, that because the kingdome of God consisteth not in such outward things as belong to the outward man, therefore Popish vowes are to be condemned as superstitious, and as hauing no ranke in anie true religion, whereby men make vowes of such outward things, to become thereby the nearer to the kingdome of God. Nowe marke gentle Reader; that as M. Bishop began this Section with onely, so he endeth it with another, that M. Perkins saith, that Baptisme and the Lords Supper are the two onely parts of Gods worship amongst the Protestants whereas M. Perkins saith no other but thus; We haue onely two ceremonies to be obserued by commendement which are Baptisme and the Lords Supper. It is one thing to say, onely two ceremonies another thing to say, two onely parts of Gods worship. But let M. Bishop remember what the gaines of a lyer is, that a man knoweth not how to beleue him when he speaketh truth.

Rom. 14. 17.

7. W. BISHOP.

But it would wearie a willing man to traile after all M. Perkins his impertinent errors. Let vs then at length come vnto the principall point in controuersie. Catholikes (saith he) maintaine such vowes to be made as are not agreeable to the rules afores-named. The first is, that of continence, whereby a man promiseth to God to keepe chastitie in a single life that is, out of the state of wedlocke. This kind of vow is flat against the word word of God, as he saith, which he proueth first out of S. Paule, If they cannot containe, then let them marry: True, if they haue not vowed chastitie before, as the common Christians of Corinth (to whose Saint Paule there speaketh) had not. For such, if they cannot liue otherwise * 1 Cor. 7 chastly, it is better they marrie then bee burned, that is, defiled with incontinencie. But to them who had vowed chastitie before, S. Paule writeth in another style, That if they but desire to marrie, they incurre damnation, * because they haue made frustrate & broken their former faith and promise made vnto God of their chastitie. So that this first text is a furlong wide at the least from the marke. * 1. Tim. 5

R. ABBOT.

It would wearie a man thus to traile after an impudent and wrangling Sophister, who doubteth not as wee see, so apparently and wilfully to lye, and neither vnderstandeth what M. Perkins saith, nor what himselfe should say. Wee must come nowe to the principall point in controuerse, as he termeth it; let vs see how well he caryeth himselfe in the debating of it. M. Perkins allegation is, that the Papistes maintaine such vowes as are not agreeable to the rules before mentioned, which are necessarie to bee obserued in lawfull vowes. The first of these is their vow of Continencie, whereby a man promisseth to God to keepe chastitie alwayes in single life, that is, out of our state of wedlocke. Against this vow he alledgeth first the words of S. Paule, ^a If they cannot containe, let them marrie, for saith he, it is better to marry then to burne. This is the commaundement of almightie God, to all to whome the gift of continencie is not giuen, that they betake themselues to marriage, as to a safe port and harbor, where they may be free from being tossed and turmoiled with the waues and stormes of incontinencie and raging lust, that so with quiet mind & pure conscience they may serue God, & without interruption call faithfully vpon him. Now what hath M. Bishop learned out of his many large volumes for answer to this? The holy Ghost saith, let them marry: True, saith he, if they haue not vowed chastitie before, as the common Christians of Corinth to whose S. Paul there speaketh had not. Where when he cōstrueth the Apostles words of cōmō Christiāns, he putteth me in mind of the Manichees, who wold by no meanes allowe of marriage in their Elects, their speciall and choysed men, but as for their auditors, that is, the common sort, ^b they were content to beare with them if either they would not or could not live unmarried. Thus would he make vs beleeue that the Apostle spake but of the common sort, but meant not anie thing of the rest that were more speciall men, when as the Apostle professeth himselfe to write ^c to all that call upon the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and in the beginning of that Chapter whence this allegation is taken sayeth, ^d for the auoyding of fornication let euery man haue his owne wife, and euery woman her owne husband, and sayeth it to them ^e that had written vnto him in the name of the Church, who vndoubtedly were not of the common sort. But the exception which he vseth is the verie same as whereby the Scribes and Pharisees of old deluded the commaundement of God, as our Sauour mentioneth in the Gospell, and made it of no effect by their tradition. God saide, ^f Honour thy father and thy mother. True, sayd they, except hee haue vowed or sworne the contrarie. Amongst sundrie wicked oathes amongst the Iewes, whereby they vowed the committing of lewde and damnable acts, and then halted to the doing thereof that they might not be forsworne, this (as Philo the Iewe testifieth) was one, that ^g they would not helpe or doe good to such a one so long as they liued. Amongst manie other formes or fashions of swearing, Iosephus giueth vs to vnderstande, that one specially was ^h Corban, which is as much as to say, By the gift. Concerning which maner of oath it is that our Sauour Christe reprooueth their absurd superstition, where he bringeth them in saying, ⁱ Whosoever sweareth by the altar, it is nothing, but hee that sweareth by the offering (or the gift) that is upon it, he is a debtour: that is as, Hierome saith, ^k that they most earnestly required to be kept. So then if by any occasion the sonne had saide to his father, ^l Corban, that is, by the gift, if thou haue any profite by me, vnderstanding after their maner, then let God destroy me, or such or such euill befall mee, hee was hereby tyed, as they taught, that he should yeeld no succour or reliefe to the necessitie of his father. Whatsoeuer God had commaunded, it skilled not: he had now bound himselfe & must stand to it, not to do that that God had required of him: let his father beg or starue, or do what he would or could for himselfe, but of him he must haue nothing. The verie like is the tradition of the Pharisees of the

Romish

b August. cont
Faust. lib. 30. c. 6
Multi vestros auditores in hoc obedire valentes
vel non valentes
salua amicitia
soleratis.
c 1. Cor. 1. 2. d Cap. 7. 3

e Ver. 1.

f Exod. 20. 1. 2.

g Philo de legib.
special. Iure iuran-
do suam inhumana-
tatem confirmat
dum negant se huc aut illum adiuturo
ullo beneficio
quoad vixerit.
h Ioseph. contra.
Apion. li. 1. In sum-mandum quod Cor-
ban appellatur.
i c. Apud nullos
autem inuenitur
hoc iuramentum nisi apud Iudaos
solos, quod interpretatur ex Hebraica
lingua, Donum Dei.
i Mat. 23. 18.
k Hieron. ibid.
Hoc studiosissime
reprobant.
l Math. 15. 5.
Mark. 7. 11.

Romish synagoge, who when God hath said, If they cannot con-taine let them marrie, answereth, Be it so, if they haue not vowed the contrarie: but if they haue vowed single life, whether they containe or not containe, they must not marrie: let them swelter and boyle and burne in filthie lust euen to the very bottome of hel, yet marrie they must not in anie case. And whereas the Apostle saith, It is better to marrie then to burne. M. Bishop telleth vs that for such, that is, for common Christians, if they cannot liue otherwise chastly, it is beter to marrie then to be burned, that is, defiled with incontinencie: leauing it to be vnderstood, that for Votaries, for such speciall Christians as he is, it is better to bee burned that is, defiled with incontinencie, then to marie. And that it may appeare that I do not vniuistly force this consequence vpon him, Cardinall Campegius doubted not most impudently to say, that ^m it is a greater sinne for Priests to be married, then to keepe many harlots at home: & in the like sort Costerus the Iesuite, thatⁿ a Priest albeit he be guilty of great sacriledge if he commit fornication or keepe a concubine, yet sinneth more grieuoussly if he marrie. Yea that wee may not thinke that some pettie fellowes onely haue so conceiued, Bellarmino that filthy Friar saith the same: ° Both are euill, to marrie and to burne, but yet the worse of the two is to marrie: yea she that marieth after a (simple vow (that is, when she hath but vndertaken to vow, and hath not yet solemnely done it) yet in some sort sinneth more then she that committeth fornication. See these wretched caufes, whom neither feare of God nor shame of men can hold backe from so diuelish and damnable assertions, whereby they do but set a snare to halter and strangle the consciences of men, as they haue done many thousands, and by whoredome and filthinesse without remorse sent them headlong to hell fire. As though, saith Philo, to forswear (in such a case) for the keeping of Gods lawes, were not much better and more acceptable to God. For a man addeth sinne to sinne whilest he abu-seth his oath, whereas he should rather forbear from euill doing. Let him therefore forbear, and humbly intreate God that of his merces he will pardon the vnadvised rashnesse whereby hee was led headlong to swear: for to double the fault when thou mayest disburden thy selfe of the one halfe, is verie great madnesse, and scarcely possible to bee cured Thus spake Philo of those vowes and othes whereby men binde themselues contrarie to that which God hath commaunded, and in Sleidan. Comment. li. 4. Quod sacerdotes mariti

sunt nullo esse gra-
uius peccatum quam
si plurimas domi
meretrices alant,
u. Coster. Enchir. cap 15. Sacerdos si for-nicetur aut domi
concupiram foueat
tamen si graui sacri
legio se obstringat,
multo tamen gra-
uius peccat si mariti
monium contrahat.
o Bellar. de Mo-nach. cap. 30. Viri bere & viri immo-
penu est nubere, & o Qua nubi post votu simplex tamen ali-
quo modo magu
peccat, quam qua
fornicatur.
p Philo de Leg. Special. Quasi non ma-
luis deoq; grauius
tale periuurium, modo
seruatur, leges, &c.
Addit enim culpa
cul' pam, dum sacra-
mente abutitur,
eum debuisset vo-
tum abstinere a malesticijs: Abstinetigitur, & supplec-Dum exoret ut
pro sua clementia temeritatis inconsu-li agnoscat qua ad
iurandum p'iceps actus est nam dupliciter: nam cum te
post exoneare di-
midio, maxima est
in iuria vix vique
carabi u.

his wordes shall bee the iust condemnation of them, who by presence of a vowe of humane institution and deuice, debarre men from doing that which God hath taught them to do, and tye them to that vncleannesse whereby they are lothsome and hatetull vnto him. Marke it I pray thee gentle Reader, that by their vow of continencie, they professe more to renounce mariage which is the ordinance of God, then fornication and whordome which is the worke of the diuell. A man hath vowed continencie, but yet cannot containe. What must be the meanes to salue this euill? Not mariage by anie meanes which is the medicine that God hath appointed, but adulterie, and fornication, and vnnaturall Sodomiticall filthinesse and vncleannesse, to which the diuell tempteth. It is a doctrine neuer heard of in the world, vntill by the tyrannie of Antichrist the Church became a styre for these filthie swine, that a man should be taken to vow more against mariage, then against vncleane and filthie lust. But yet this notable hypocrite here beareth vs in hand, that S. Paule was the author of this accursed and desperate paradoxe. To them (saith he) that had vowed chastitie before, Saint Paule writeth in another style, that if they but desire to marrie they incurre damnation, because they haue made frustrate and broken their former faith and promise made vnto God of their chastity. Where we must vnderstand, that they of whom the Apostle there speaketh were poore widowes, who were to liue of the almes of the Church, and were vsed by the Church to looke to poore sicke and impotent people, and to giue some attendance to trauellers and strangers, who were faithfull Christians comming by occasion to the place where they were, to wash their feete, which was a thing much done in those hote countreyes, and to do such other necessarie vses as might concerne them. Now because they that were married could not fitly be employed to such seruice, neither was it fitte that the Church should be euery while to seeke by their bestowing themselues in mariage that did vndertake it, therefore they made choise onely of such who would resolue and promise not to marrie againe. And that they might bee the more fitte and likely, both to make and keepe this promise, the Apostle giueth this caution; ¶ Let not a widow be chosen under threescore yeares of age, after which there neede bee small doubt that shee should haue minde or desire of marriage. This is the great vowe of chastitie that. M. Bishop tellet

telleth vs of, that a woman of threescore yeares old, beeing to doe some seruiceto the Church, and to bee relieued therein by the Churches almes, should first promise not to marrie againe. But the Apostle hauing set downe this caution, goeth on further saying, But refuse the younger widowes : for when they haue begun to waxe wanton against Christe they will marry, hauing damnation because they haue broken the first faith. Hee will haue no widowes of the yonger sort admitted to that companie, for the euident perill and daunger thereof ensuing, which by experience then hadde in some sort appeared. For some young widowes comming by this meanes to liue idle vppon common charge, gaue themselues to wantonnesse, and quite cast off the remembrance and regarde of their dutie towards Christ, yea and as Hierome vnderstandeth the word vsed by the Apostle, They committed fornication to the iniurie of Christ, whose they had professed themselues to be. The Apostle afterwards further expresseth what he meaneth by this waxing wanton against Christ, when he saith, Certaine are alreadye turned after Sathan, namely that they proceeded so farre, as that by apostasie and infidelitie they forsooke the faith and religion of Christe, and betooke themselues to follow Sathan, whom by their baptisme they had professed to forsake. But of such he saith, that being thus growne wanton against Christ, they will marrie, and addeth, hauing damnation because they haue broken the first faith. Where the question is, to what these latter wordes are to be referred, whether to that he saith, they are waxen wanton against Christ, or to the other words, they will marrie. M. Bishop saith, that therefore they haue damnation, because they will marrie, but to giue some colour thereof hee falsifieth the text, and in the Apostles name setteth downe his owne wordes. We say, that therefore they haue damnation, not because they will marrie, but because they are waxen wanton against Christ. We proue it to be so out of the text it selfe : for whereas M. Bishop in the Apostles name saith : they haue damnation because they haue made frustrate and broken their former faith, the Apostle himselfe saith not so, but because they haue made frustrate their first faith. Nowe their firste faith was that whereby they first beleeued, and gaue themselues to Christ : in which sort it is saide to the Church of Ephesus, I haue somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first loue ? Remember from whence thou art fallen, and doe the first *r Hieron. ad Corin Fornicata sunt in iniuriam uiriusus

Christi: hoc enim
Graecus sermo significat.
1 Cor. 15.*

r Apoc. 2. 4.

workes, and this faith was not broken by willing to marrie, but by being become proud and wanton against Christ. M. Bishop then doth amisse, to put in their former faith, which is of doubtfull construction, instead of their first faith, whereof there is no doubt. If he will say, that the Fathers commonly vnderstande it of their promise not to marrie, we will answer him, that whatsoeuer any of the Fathers say, yet we will not pull out our owne eyes, and say that we doe not see that that indeed we do see. Albeit there want not of the Fathers to iustifie vs in this behalfe, who by plaine allusion to this place, expound the first faith of the faith of baptism, and that which we haue at first receiued in the profession of Christe. So dooth Athanasius, when he saith: Wo vnto you that make frustrate the first faith of baptism which was deliuered from heauen. In like sort Vincentius Lyrinen mentioning * how earnestly the Apostle inueyeth against the Galathians, who so lightly were remoued from him that had called them in the grace of Christ, applieth to them these words, Hauiing damnation for that they hadde broken or made frustrate their first faith. So Hierome saith, They are not worthie of credit who haue broken their first faith, I meane Marcion and Basilides and all heretickes, &c. It is plaine then that the first faith is that according to which wee haue first beleeued in Christ, and first plighted our troth to him. But by a second argument also from the text we proue that that we say, where the Apostle addeth: I will therefore that the younger (widowes) marrie, and beare children, and gouerne the house, and giue no occasion to the aduersarie to speake euill: for certaine are alreadye turned backe after Sathan. Which last words do plainly import, that he meaneth that precept of such young widowes as were alreadye chosen into the companie mentioned before, being apparently to this effect, some are alreadye fallen away and turned after Sathan: therefore I would haue the rest that are yet remaining to marrie, least the like euill befall to anie of them. But this hee would not haue sayde, if he had meant that it had bene damnation for them to marry, or their willing to marry hadde bene that frustrating of their faith which he there intendeth, and therefore it is plaine that hee meant not in that sort. And thus Chrysostome though hee seeme there to vnderstand faith of their promise not to marry, yet plainly determineth that the Apostle in those words speaketh of them of whome hee hath saide before, they will marrie, though not as hauiing yet

*Athanasius de vn ta Dest. Trin. Va vobis
qui primam fidem
baptismi calidius institutam irritam facitis.*

*x Vincen. Lyrin.
Scitum cunctis est
quam vehementer
inuocatur in quos-
dam beatus Aposto-
lus qui mira leuita-te translati fuerant ab eo qui eos voca-
uerat in gratiam
Christi. &c. Habent tes damnationem quod primam fi-
dem irritam se-
cissent.*

*y Hieron. pr af.
epist. ad Titum.
Non sunt digni fide
qui primam fidem
irritam fecerunt, Marcionem lo-
quor & Basilidem & omnes hereti-
cos. &c.*

7 Ver. 14.

runne into those excesses which he setteth downe. ^a I will therefore because they are willing, I also will that the younger widowes marry: for it is much better that they doe so, then that they doe those other things (namely to waxe wanton against Christ, to goe idle from house to house, being praters and busibodies, &c.) They should indeede carefully looke to those things that beclong to God, and keepe their faith or promise, but because they do not so, it is better th. y doe thus (to marry) then to doe those other things. For by this meanes God is not prouoked, neither are those euilles learned. For that widowhood bringeth forth no good, but of marriage many good things proceede, and this specially for that thereby a remedy is provided against their negligence and carelesse minds, because they know themselves to bee subiect to their husbands. Thus doth Theophylact expound the wordes: ^b I had rather indeede that these widowes hadde not fallen away from the promise or covenant made with Christe, but seeing they had rather marry, I also assent vnto them: for it is better that they become huswifes, then that they wandr vpp and downe to other folkes houses, and turne to trifles and idlenessse. Thus Ambrose also saith: ^c Because those contrary and unlawfull things which hee hath spoken of such widowes, shall bring them to death therefore he giueth counsell, and chargeth that those things bee done which are lawfull. For it is better that they take charge of their owne house, then to use flatterie in the houses of others. More expedient is it to marrie, then vnder a good and godly profession to walke so, as to bee subiect to publike note. Nowe then if M. Bishop will not belecue vs, yet he will not gaine say the assertion of these auncient fathers, that the Apostle heere for auoiding those mischiefes and inconueniences that he speaketh of, giueth libertie of marriage to them who notwithstanding had bene receiued into the number of Church widowes, with profession and promise not to marry any more. Yea, and that it may yet further appeare, how farre the auncient Church was from the beastly and lewd conceipt of Romish hypocrites before expressed, Cyprian speaking of virgins which had vowed virginitie, saith thus: ^d If by their faith they haue dedicated them-

a Chrysost. in 1. Tim. hom. 15. Volo igitur: quia & ipsa volunt, volo & ego adolestentiam nubere, &c. longè enim praestat haec suocere quam illa. Operabat quippe sollicitè curare quae Dei sunt, fidemq; seruare: quoniam verò illa non sunt melius est ista fieri quam illa. Neq; enim diuirituratur neq; mala ista discuntur: quippe viduitas illa nihil parit boni. ex nuptijs vero plurima bona procedunt & illud antecommnia, quòd negligentia uilium & animo resipino consultatur dum uis se subditas norunt.

b Theophyl. in 2. Tim. cap. 5. Maluissimè quidem inquit uiduas haec à paucioribus cum Christo institumine deseruissiet sed cum nuptias malint et ipse assensior &c. Est enim satius maritissumiliat fieri, &c. quia per alienam domos eorum uagari, & ad nugam conuersi et et utra.

c Ambrosii in 1. Tim. cap. 5. Quoniam quas praedixit de huiusmodi (uiduis) contraria & illic in praedictis exi ad meritum, idcirco consultum dat & praecipit ea fieri quae licita sunt. Delius est enim diuirituratur suae curam gerere, quam in aliena domo aduari. Et multum expedit nubere, quam sub bona & pia professione notabiliter incedere.

d Cyprian lib. 1. epist. 11. Si se ex fide Christo dederunt, pudici & casti sine ulla tabula peremerent: ita forte & stabiles primum uirginitatu expellent. Si autem perseverare nolint vel non possunt, melius est ut nubant quam ut in ignem suu delictis cadant.

se'ues to Christe, let them continue purely and chastly without any euill report: so let them firmly and steadfastly looke for the rewarde of Virginitie. But if they will not or cannot perseuere, it is better that they marrie, then that by their wantonnesse they fall into the fire. M. Bishops maister Bellarmino, beeing pitifully distressed with this testimonie, that hee might finde a way and meanes to answer it, treacherously suppresseth the first part of the sentence, & saith that Cyprian spake not of those which had vowed continencie, but of them who were yet in deliberation what to doe, whereas the very words of Cyprian, as we see, do mention them who by their faith haue dedicated themselves to Christ. Of virgins already vowed, S. Austin also saith: They which would marrie, and therefore doe not marrie, because they cannot freely doe it, were better to marrie then to be burned, that is, then by the secret flame of concupiscence to be consumed in lust. S. Hierome in like sort complaining of some by whom the holy profession of virgines was disgraced, whlest they miscaried themselves, addeth: who are openly to be warned either to marrie if they cannot containe, or else to containe if they will not marrie. To conclude, Epiphanius saith, that^h better it is for a man that is fallen from his course (of virginitie and single life) openly to take a wife according to the law, and long to be penitent for his fall from virginitie, and so to bee brought into the Church againe, and not daily to bee wounded with the wickednesse which by the deuill is brought upon him. Thus, saith hee, the church was learned to teach: these are her medicines wherewith to heale. This was the concept of the auncient Church, though too much addicted to that vowing of virginitie, yet in the defect thereof giuing place to marriage, rather then to vnleane and filthy life. But the Church of Rome nowe is become a desperate Surgeon: a Surgeon did I say? nay a cruell butcher, and a slaughterer of the consciences of menne, not healing wounds, but poisoning them, and for salues and medicines giuing them cordes and halters to hang themselves. Albeit their singular hypocrisie and impudencie in this beehalfe notably appeareth, when telling vs that the Apostle denounceth damnation to them that marrie after a vow of single life, they notwithstanding giue to the Pope a power to dispence where hee list for the breaking of this

e Bellarmino in lib. de
lib. concord. Lutheri
art. 16. Cyprianus non de ijs loquitur
quae continentiam uouerunt: sed de ijs quae adhuc deli-
berant quid sint
facturae.
f. Aug. de sancti-
virginit. cap. 3. 4.
Hae qua nubere uolunt et ideo non nubunt qui impu-
ni non possunt,
melius nubent
quam uerentur,
id est quam occul-
tae concupiscentia
flammae in ipsa
concupiscentia
uastentur.
g. Hieron. epist. ad
Demetriadem.
Sanctum uirginum
propositum quarun-
dam non bene se-
quentium nomen
et famas: quibus
aperte dicendum
est ut aut nubant
si continere non possunt aut continent
si nolunt nubere.
h. Epiphanius in h. 6. s.
Apostolic. Melius
est lapsurum a cursu
palam sibi uxorem
sumere secundum
legem et a uirgini-
tate multo tempore
penitentiam agere
et sic rursus ad
ecclesiam induci
et c. et non quoti-
dum occultu iaculu
sauciari, ab improbitate qua ipsi a diabolo insuntur. Sic nouit ecclesia praedicare: haec sunt sanationis medicamenta.

vow, and to giue liberty of mariage. Thus Mathew of Paris mentioneth that he dispenced withⁱ Elnor the daughter of King Iohn, ⁱ Math. Paris. m Henr. 3. anno.
1237. and sifter to King Henry the third, that hauing solemnly vowed widowhood, yet thee might marrie to Simon Mounfors Earle of Leiceſter. So doth Platina record, that^k Celestinus the third did ^k Plat. de vit. Pou-
t. fin. Celestin. 3.
 by voluntarie dispensation giue Constantia the daughter of Roger,
 King of Sicilia, and being professed a virgin to the Emperour Henry the sixt, vpon a condition a benefit to come to himselte thereby. Many other examples are there of the like, by which they teach vs lightly to esteeme of that they say as touching this matter being in their owne account, a thing wholly subiect to the Popes will. As for vs, we are perswaded that if the Pope herein can dispense, wee may much more securely presume of that dispensation which God by his word hath giuen, commaunding them to marrie that cannot containe. Master Bishop then may see, that the text alledged was not a furlong from the marke, but hee himselte was gone a furlong, or rather a mile from his owne wits, that would goe about to perswade vs that it is better for votaries to burne, that is to bee defiled with incontinencie then to marrie, when the Apostle absolutely saith, It is better to marrie, then to burne, yea that they are all beasts and men of seared consciences, who by a vow intend to tye men more strongly from marriage, thē from beastly and filthy lust.

S. W. BISHOP.

The second is much like: It is a doctrine of diuels, to forbid to^l Tim. 4. marrie: truth, if one should hold mariage in it selfe to bee wicke dand therfe ore condemne it in all sorts of persons, as Montanus, and the Manichees did. But wee haue a more reuerend opinion of mariage, then the Protestants th: vselues. For wee with the Apostle^o hold it to be a great^l 1 phel 5.
 Sacrament: they, that it is a morall contract only. Notwithstanding, wee maintaine, that such persons, who being of ripe yeares haue aduisedly vowde chastity, may not marrie: not because mariage is not honourable but for that they haue sol. mly promised to God the contrary, which wee also hold to be better, then if he had married. And so to use S. Austins words, He forbidde th to marrie, who saith it to be euill, but not he.
 who:

who before this good thing, preferreth a better And a little after, you see (saith he) that there is great difference betwene perfwasion to virginity, by perffering the greater good before the lesler, & forbidding to marie, by accusing lying together for issue. The first is, the doctrine of the Apostles, which we teach, the latter only of devils."

* Lib. 3. cont.
Faust. Manich.
c. ap. 6.

R. ABBOT

Because the second is like the first, we presume it to carie sufficient waight and strength of argument against M. Bishops, answer. The Apostle reckoneth it for one of ^a the doctrines of devils to forbid to marrie. M. Bishop answereth, Truth is one should hold mariage in it selfe wicked, and therefore condemne it in all sorts of persons as Montanus and the Manichees did. But if he had vnderstood what he had said, he would not here haue named Montanus; for Montanus in this point was outright a Papist, and condemned the Marcionites and Manichees for that opinion, with which M. Bishop, here chargeth him. Tertullian being become by his fall the champion of Montanus, and being vrged by the catholike Church with the words of the Apostle, in the place here cited against ^b commanding to abstaine from meates, answereth the place concerning meates, as Master Bishop here doth concerning mariage, that the holy Ghost in these words ^c condemneeth heretikes that should command perpetuall abstinence, to destroy and disgrace the workes of the Creator, Such, saith he, as wee finde with Marcion and Tatian (with whom the Manichees therein consented) not with (Montanus his) paracletus. As therefore in meates, so in mariage Montanus condemned them who dishonored the worke of Gods creation, and tooke it to be a thing in it selfe vncleane, and wholly to bee condemned. therefore Tertullian writing againe in behalfe of Montanus concerning mariage, setting the Church on the one side vnder the name of Naturalists or Carnalists, and heretikes on the other side a 1. Tim. 4. 3.

b Ibid.

c Tertull. de Ieiun Pradamnar. s. tam
hareticos perpetuā
abstinentiam pra
cepturos ad destru
enda et despicienda
opera creatoris,
quales inueniamus
apud Marcionem,
apud Tatianum
&c. non apud para
cletum.

d Tertull. de Mono
gam. Haretici nup tias auferunt, Psy
chici ingerunt: illi nec semel, nisi non semel nubunt, &c.
Neq; continentia
eiusmodi laudanda
est quia haeretica
est, neq; licentia defendenda quia Psychica est: illa blasphemista luxuriam: illa destruit nuptiarum Deum, ista confundit:

saith, ^d Heretikes take away mariage, Carnalists vrg it; they marry not so much as once: these marry more then once: their continency is not to bee commended, because it is hereticall, nor the licence of the other to be defended, because it is carnall: the one blasphemeth, the other excee- cedeth: the one destroyeth God from being the author of marriage: the other shames him. Anone after he saith, that ^e their Paracletus did resist: Christ according to the faith, with the whole order or ordinance of the Creator. In the same place hee alledgeth their soundnesse in the rule of faith, namely that which summarily wee profess in the articles of our Creede, as an argument that those things which they taught were not of the euill spirit, ^f who would first haue corrupted them in faith, and then haue peruerted them in order of conuersation whereas now their integrity in preaching (the faith) did giue assurance or warrant for them. A man, saith hee, must first be an heretike concerning God, and then as touching institution of behaviour, but Montanus their Paracletus, was, as he saith, an instructour or teacher (not of any new faith but) of new order and conuersation, to which purpose he saith in another place, hauing set downe a brieffe of the articles of our beliefe, ^g This law (or rule) of faith abiding, other matters of discipline and conuersation do admit newnesse of correction, and maketh the end of the sending of their Paracletus to be this, that discipline or conuersation might be brought to perfection. Montanus then denied not marriage according to the rule of faith, to bee Gods institution, but profelleth of their continencie that it ^h honoured the lawe of marriage, and therefore M. Bishop did him great wrong to couple him in that sort with the Manichees, who wholly blasphemed marriage as vncleane, and hauing originall from the deuil and power of darkenesse. But yet hee will say that Montanus taught somewhat against marriage, and we acknowledgethe same, yet not as to condemne marriage, but ⁱ to preferre continencie, as Tertullian saith. It is true that albeit he acknowledged marriage to be Gods institution, yet he held the liberty thereof to be permitted but onely once, and that once to be yeilded onely to the infirmisse of the flesh, euen as M. Bishop said before, that to common Christians the Apostle said, If they cannot abstaine let them marry, but it is plaine by Tertullian, that all this was but to commend a itate of greater perfection, ^k the ministerie of their Paracletus being that men should profite to better thinges, and ^l should walke according to the holynesse of the flesh, which they deemed one speciall way to consist either in not marrying at all, or marrying but once: in opinion whereof, and some other pointes of conuerlation

^e Ibid Christum Paracletus contestatur qualem credimus cum toto ordine creatoris.

^f Ibid Adversarius spiritus ex diuersitate pradicatonum apparet primo regum adulterans fides: & ita ordinum adulterans disciplina, &c. Fidem dicit pro eu integri- tate pradicatonum, &c. Ante quod de Deo hereticus sit necesse est, tunc de infirmo, &c. Paracletus noua disciplina institutor, &c.

^g Tertul. de velad. virgin. Hac lege fidei manente cetera iam disciplina & conuersationum admittunt nouitatem correctionum, &c. Propterea Paracletum misit ut ad perfectum perduceretur disciplina.

^h Ibidem de Monog. Continent a religiosa legem nuptiarum honorat.

ⁱ Ibid. Saluo inquit iure nutendi. Plaud saluo, &c. nihilominus iamen ex ea parte destructo qua continentiam praefert. &c. Prelatio- ne continentia impedita. k De velad. virgin. Qua Paracletus aduinastratio rursus haec, &c. quod ad meliora profectur. l De m Ibid. Nos quos spirituales merito

 dici facti. ut spiritus alia charismata.
 n Origen. apud Pamphil. in Apo-
 log. Cataphryges dicentes, Non acce-
 das ad me quoniam
 mundus sum: non enim accipio uxore-
 rem, nec est sepul-
 chrum patens est
 tur mecum sed sum Nazareus Dei non
 bibens vinum sicut & illi.

accounting them of the Church ^mnaturall and carnall men, as before was said, they called themselues spirituall, and in that respect are brought in by Origen as saying: ⁿ Come not to mee, for I am pure and holy: for I take no wife, neither is my throate an open sepulcher, (as it were to feed and eate treely as those men do) but I am a Nazarite of God, forbearing to drinke wine as the Nazarites did. Thus then howsoeuer they held God to bee the author of marriage, and the liberty thereof to haue bene formerly permitted once and more then once, yet now they taught, that they were called to a greater exquisitnesse and perfection of conuersation, and therefore were either partely or wholly to forbear. Heereby then it appeareth, that the Montanists and the Manichees are to be seuered one from another and if the Apostles words do condemne them both, then M. Bishops answer is vn sufficient, because they were not both guiltie of that which he saith the Apostle there intended. Let him tell vs: doth the Apostle by those words condemne them both or not? If hee say yea, as he must, then we inferre, that the Apostle then did not speak onely of them who held marriage to bee a thing wicked in it selfe, because the Montanists did not thinke so. M. Bishops answer therefore must haue a supply, & that supply must bring forth the Montanists and the Papistes within the compasse of the Apostles wordes. The Apostle himselfe giueth vs that supply when he saith, that those spirits of error of which he speaketh, shall speak lies in hypocrisie. They then of whom the Apostle speaketh, shall in hypocrisie forbid to marrie. And what is it to say in hypocrisie? Surely, to forbid marriage in hypocrisie, is to forbid it vnder colour of puritie and holinesse, and more then ordinary perfection. The Manichees did forbid marry-age, but they forbid it not in hypocrisie, but by open and professed blasphemie: neither did they so much forbid it, as blaspheme and condemne it. A man may forbid that which notwithstanding in it selfe he thinketh lawfull enough, but they wholly condemned marriage, as of it selfe wicked and damnable, and without any forbidding to bee absolutely detested. The Apostles caueat was not so greatly needfull against them or such other as they were, because their abhominable blasphemie did apparently bewray it selfe, and was easily to be discerned: but the greater daunger was to come by them who in hypocrisie should teach these doctrines of deuils, that is, with faire shewes and goodly pretences, and insinuations which might

might blind the eyes of them that were not iealous and suspicious thereof, and theretore of these specially hee giueth admonition to the Church, Thus did the Montanists disallow of mariage not as of euill institution, but onely as a more prophane and carnall state, fitting for vulgar and cōmon Christians, but not so well sorting, specially second mariage, with that eminency of purity and perfection whereto their Paracletus did instruct them. Now in the same sort as the Montanists did, so doe the Papists forbid mariage onely in hypocrisie, only as accounting it a more secular and vulgar kind of life, then is fitting to their spirituall and perfect states. M. Bishop telleth vs that they hold it to be a great sacrament, and some of them absurdly and ridiculously make the carnall coniunction of married persons the consummation of that sacrament, whē notwithstanding in that sacrament and consummation of the sacrament they affirme that impurity and pollution as cannot stand with their sacrament of orders. Mariage (saith Bellarmino)^o hindreth the office of sacrificing, because therein is required an eminent puritie and holinesse, whereas in the act of mariage there is mingled an impuritie & pollution. Thus Costerus saith, If in the old law it were not lawfull for them that were polluted with the uncleannesse of the flesh, either to eate the shew bread, or to handle holy things or to enter into the temple, much lesse doth the administering of our sacraments belong to them, who giue themselves to wives and to getting of children. There appeareth not (saith he) so great glorie of mind, & grauity of manners in the man, who, is still sitting by a woman, and attending to her, because all lust weakeneth stayed manners, and maketh a man lesse admirable: whereas it is fit for Priests to carry a graue kind of maiesty by holy chasticitie, that they may be reuerenced and admired of others. Thus these beastly Friars measure the ordinance of God, by the filth and corruption of their owne wicked hearts, and in hypocrisie depraue that state of life as voide of grauitie, and modestie, and maietie, and as if there were nothing therein but lust and sitting by a woman, and attending to her, wherein notwithstanding the holy Fathers, the Patriarchs, the Prophets, Priests, Nazarites, and Apostles serued God: yea and when theselues for the most part miri qui in circula semper assident eidemq; vacit, quia libido omnis more compositos dissoluit, minusq; ad irabilem hominem reddit sacerdotum potest sancta castitate grauem quandam pra se ferre modestatem, qua uenerationi sint & admirationi caeteris.

o Bellar. de Cleric. cap. 19. Matrimonium impedit minus sacrificandi quia summa quadam puritas & sanctitas in eo requiritur: in actu uero coniugij negari non potest, quin admixta sit impuritas quadam & pollutio.

p. C. ster. Enchir. cap. 15. Si in veteri lege carnis immunditia pollutum non licebat vel edere pares propositiois vel manibus contrere, uel res sacras vel templum ipsum intrare, multo minus huic consentiatur a nostrorum admistrato, qui uxoribus suis liberisq; procreandis uult, &c. & post Non tamen sicut uolunt animi, motus, grauitas claret nisi o-

q. Aug. de morib. Manich. cap. l. 9. Vidimus post transi-tiones neficio quos famulus tam petu-
lantissime adimere tes ut omni iura triualium impudicitiam impudencioq;
superaverit.
r Trident. Concil.
sess. 6. cap. 1. Oblatio mundis: qua
nulla ind guttate
aut malitia offeren-
tū inq. nari potest
Sigenat. epist. ad
Philadelp. Siquis
vnam diuit Deum, & constitetur lesu
Christum, corrup-
tionem & coingui-
nationem vocat legitimam comixti-
onem & filiorum
procreationem, hominum habiten-
tiam apostatam.
r Canon. Apost. cap.
6. Episcopus aut presbyter propriam
uxorem nequaquam
sub obtentu religionis abijciat. Si vero reiecerit, excom-municetur: si perseuerauerit d. i. c. i. a.
tur.
u. Concil. Gangren-
ca. 4. Siquis d. i. c. enit presbyterum co-
ingatum tanquam
occasione i. i. i. u.
quod off. rre non debeat, & ab eius
stinet, anathe m. st.
x Math Paris in V Villiel. Cong. Pres-byteros uxorates
a diuino remouit
officio & laicū
M. ssas eorū audire
incedit no uo
t exemplo, &c.

are like the Manichees, detesting marriage, and yet ⁹ neighing like fed horses at euery woman that passeth by, with such immodest and wanton behaviour, as passeth the unchastity and impudencie of base and common rascals; some pretty tokens whereof the Reader may find in the storie of Weston and his fellowes, casting out the diuell from Sara Williams and her sister. They vow againit marriage as too prophane and vnholly a state, but they vow not against adultery, fornication, incest, Sodomy, against the horrible vncleanness of vicious burning lust; they vow not against gluttony, drunkenness, Simony, periurie, robbery; these things being of the diuell hinder not, but that they may sacrifice, becaule their ^r sacrifice is so cleane, as that it cannot be defiled with any indignity or euill of them that offer it; only in marriage being the institutiō of God, there is that impurity & pollutio as by no means may stād with the grauity & maiesty of their priestly function. But to them belongeth that of Ignatius: ^r If any man pro-fesse one God and confesse Iesus Christ, & doe call the lawfull communiti-on of man and woman, and the procreation of children a corruption or defilement, the same hath the apostaticall dragon dwelling in him. Now then of such spirits the Apostle speaketh, as wherewith the Romish doctrine is now inspired, not directly condemning the institution of marriage, but by obliquity of words impeaching & disgracing it as too base & vnfitting for the eminent purity & holiness of some sorts of men. And against such spirits was that Canon made, that goeth with other vnder the name of the Apostles; ^r Let not a Bishop or a Priest put away his wife vnder pretence of religion: if hee so do, let him be excommunicated: and if he perseuere let him be deposed. So did the council of Gangra decree: ^u If any man make difference of a married priest, as if by reaso of his marriage he should not minister, & doth therefore withhold himselfe from his ministraton, accursed be he. This did Pope Hild: brād that firebrand of hell, who ^x put away married Priests from doing diuine seruice, and forbad to be present at their seruice, & in those steps the Church of Rome still walketh, & hath the same curse still lying vpon her till this day. By this appeareth how farre it is from truth, which M. Bishop, saith that they haue a reuerend opinion of marriage, when in effect they iudge no otherwise thereof thē the Montanists did, nor any otherwise at all, but onely that they appropriate their opinion to some sorts of men, whereas the Montanists deemed alike concerning all. As for that which hee saith, that the Protestants hold marriage to be a moral contract only, he speaketh it but according to the skil that he hath in the Protestants doctrin, which is very little or none at all, but what his maisters haue reported of them. The Protestants teach as God himselfe hath taught, that marriage is the covenant of God, and that they who are ioyned in lawfull marriage, ^{Y^r Prou. 2. 17.} ^{z^r Mat. 19. 6.} are ioyned by God, and therefore that it is more then a morall, that is, a ciuil and humane contract. He goeth on, and telleth vs what the cause is why their votaries may not marry, not because marriage is not honorable, saith he, but because they haue solemnly promised to God the contrary. But therein he lieth vnto God, and talketh dissemblingly, because albeit they are content to say indefinitely that marriage is honorable, yet denie it to bee honorable in some states of men, and doe therefore bind them from it by vow, because they hold it dishonorable for them. It is not as hee fraudulently sayth, that therefore they may not marrie because they haue vowed the contrary, but therefore they make them vow, because they hold that in that state of life they may not marry, yea do hold it for a pollution and vncleanness in them. Whereas he saith, that in vowing against marriage a man doth better then if he had married: how true it is, appeareth commonly by the effects. To vow against the ordinance of God which hee hath appointed for an infirmitie which cannot be auoided, what is it but to bid battell to God, and madly to fight against him. God hath sayd, If they cannot abstaine, let them marry; to vow against that that God hath sayd, that though hee cannot containe, yet he will not marry, is to sinne desperately against God. As for that which hee alledgeth for his purpose out of Austin, it belongeth not thereto. Austine speaketh nothing there of vowing, neither doth he so fully and perfectly there tell vs the meaning of the apostles words, because hee examineth not the circumstances of them. He accounteth virginie and continencie of single life, a superiour good to marriage, and we denie it not, as hath been before said as touching preferment and priority of gift: but excellency of gifts is a matter of externall preheminece and preferment with men, not of internall righteoulnesse towards God, neither is a man the better for the hauing, but only for the well vsing of them. Saint Austin neuer thought that either virginie or the vow of virginie was acceptable to God for it selfe, and howsoeuer wee accord not a Answer to the Epistle 1^o c. 8.

with him as touching the vowing thereof, yet vnderstanding virginitic and single life with that implication as hee doth, as hauing more commodiouse and oportunitie to serue God, and being vsed accordingly, there shalbe small difference betwixt him and vs, and this will be nothing for M. Bishops turne, because this preferment is onely accidentall by consequence and vse, not essentially belonging to virginitic for it selfe.

9. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins his third and last text is, * Mariage is honorable among all, and the bed vndefiled. The strength of this place lieth in a double corruption of the text: for this verbe (is) is not in the text, nor cannot bee the course of the Apostles speech, requiring a verbe of the Imperatiue woode, as both the sentences before and after do conuince.

Againe, if you will haue the Apostle say, that mariage is honorable among all men, wee must also needs take him to say, that the bed is also vndefiled among all, which was not true. Also that their conuersation was without couetousnesse, &c. For there is no reason why this word (is) should bee ioyned with the one more then with the other. And nothing but passion doth cause them to make the middle sentence an affirmatiue, when they turne both the other into exhortations.

The second corruption is in these words (among all) when they should translate (in all,) and the Adiectiue beeing put without a Substantiue must in true construction haue this word (things) ioyned with it, and not (men:) wherefore the text being sincerely put into English, it woulde carry no colour of their error. For the Apostles saying is, Let mariage be honorable in all things, and the bed vndefiled. Here is no willing of any man to marry, but onely a commaundement to them that be married to liue honestly in marriage, to keepe (as elsewhere he saith) their vessels in sanctification, and not in dishonor, and then shall their mariage be honorable in all things, that is, in all points appertaining to matrimonic: so that now you see that M. Perkins is not able to bring any one place out of Scripture to disprove the vow of chastitie.

R. ABBOT.

A double corruption, sayth M. Bishop, and yet there is neyther of them them to be seene and vnlesse we will take his simple word, hee is able to proue none. First he blameth vs for saying, Marriage is honorable telling vs that we should rather say, Let marriage bee honorable, and seeth not in the meane time that our translation is implied in his owne: for why should the Apostle say, Let marriage bee honorable, but because it is so; as if he should say, let it bee so reconed of as it is, a thing honorable amongst all. But without any implicatiō the latter part of the sentence being affirmatiue, sheweth that the Apostle meant to speake affirmatiuely in the former also. In this sort S. Augustine conceiued the Apostles meaning, who mentioning the good things that are in marriage, due order of generation, fidelity of chastity, and the sacred bond of marriage it selfe, addeth, ^a In all these respects marriage is honorable in all, and the bed is undefiled. So also Chrysostom vnderstandeth it as we translate it, that the Apostle ^b setteeth downe that marriage is honorable in all. So likewise Theophylact rendereth the words affirmatiuely, ^c Marriage is honorable marriage is worthy of honor: and in the very same sort ^d Paphnutius in the Council of Nice, and the ^e Fathers & Bishops of the sixth Synod in Trullo cite it as an affirmatiue speech Marriage is honorable in all, & therefore we reiect M. Bishops assertion as childish and vaine, that this cannot bee the course of the Apostles speech. The sentences before and after, are vnterred according as the matter requireth, but it more fitteth here for the inferring of the latter part of the verse that the Apostle say affirmatiuely, Marriage is honorable then Let it so bee, that fornicators and adulterers may vnderstand them: shewes to be without excuse, in that marriage is appointed as an honorable state, and remedy for the auoiding of such sinne. And thus doth Chrysostome tie the two parts of the verse together: ^f For if marriage be granted, then the fornicator is iustly punished. So Occumenius: & For if marriage be permitted, and be lawfully without sin to satisfie concupiscence what pretence of excuse shall there be for fornicators & adulterers? The former part of the sentence then is an assertiō that marriage is permitted, & is lawful without sin. Yea but then M. Bishop wee must sake him to say that the bed also is undefiled amongst all, which (saith he) is not true. But he should haue told vs why it is not true; where if he had answered, that the bed of marriage is not vndefiled amongst al, because some pollute it by adultery and whordom, it would haue appeared that his vnderstanding was very short, that could not conceiue that the Apostle telleth vs

^a August. cont. Pelag & Celest. lib. 2. cap. 34. Propter hac omnia honorabilisumpta in omnibus & thorus immaculatus.

^b Chrysostom. ad. Heb. hom. 33. Cum posuisset honorabile coniugium & thorus immaculatus, ostendit quod merito inserat quae sequuntur.

^c Theoph. in Heb. 13. Coniugium honore est, honorabile dignum est. d Socrat. hist. lib. 10. cap. 1.

^e Sext. Synod. can. 13.

^f Chrys. vs supra. Si enim coniugium concessum est, iussu fornicator supplicij afficitur.

^g Occumen in Heb. cap. 13. Nam si coniugium permittitur est & sine peccato licet ad explendam concupiscenciam, quae erit excusatio nisi preteritis fornicatoribus & adulteris.

h 1. Cor. 3. 17.

what the mariage bed is of it selfe, not what it becometh by the v-sage of it. He saith else where,^h The temple of God is holy which ye are and yet wth shall he saith, if any man destroy the temple of God, him will God destroy, as giuing to vnderstand, that the vncleannesse of men may defile that which God hath made holy. So it is in this case, the bed of mariage is holy and vndefiled, God reputeth no vncleannes or pollution to it, it is lawfull without sinne, as Occumenius hath before expounded it:  They that rise from it are vndefiled,* saith Prima- sus, not drawing from thence any spot of sinne, but the vncleannesse is when the bed of mariage is made the bed of adultery, and mans fil-thinesse polluteth that which God hath sanctified. In a word, that which the Apostle saith of all the creatures of God, is to be applied to the mariage bed, it is ⁱ cleane to them that are cleane, that is to them who by chast conuersation preferue in it that holinesse and honour that God hath attributed vnto it. Now by that that hath bene said, appeareth the vanitie of his second cauill, where hee saith that in steed of in all things, we say amongst all or amongst al men. The greek words are ἐν παντι that is in all, and the sentence being so read, Mariage is honorable in all, what else doth it sound but mariage is honorable in all men? And this is indeed the true and proper tranlla-ting of the words; for wee in reading amongst all, do disaduantage our selues by not expressing literally the words of the Apostle. For we know that that may be honorable amongst all, which yet all are not capable of. The calling of the minitter and of the magistrat is honourable amongst all, but yet all cannot be ministers and magistrates. But the Apostle saith that mariage is honorable in all, to signifie that it is a state of life which God hath instituted to be free for al men. And that this is the true meaning of the Apostle, appeareth by that that hath bin before said. For if these words do serue to be-reauē fornicators and adulterers of all pretence of excuse, then that must be so taken as that fornicators and adulterers must vnderstand that they appertaine to them. And how shall they vnderstand that the words do appertaine to them vnles we take them in this sort that mariage is honorable in all men? for otherwise they may hapily say, Mariage indeed is honorable, but it did not belong to vs. For suppose that Popes and Popish Priests bee fornicators, as their Cannon law telleth vs, that ^k few of of them are found without that fault

* Primasus in Heb.
 13. Immaculatus
lestus: immacu-
lasi & illi inde
surgentes, hoc est,
maculam peccati
inde non trahentes.
 i Tit. 1. 15.

k Dist. 81. Maxi- mianus in glos. Cō muniter dicunt quod Clericus pro simplici fornicatione deponi non debet, quia pauci sine illo vicio inueniuntur.

how shall they be deprived heere of the excuse of their filthinesse, if they may say, Wee held marriage to be honorable, but it was not lawfull for vs to marry? But the words do serue to take away from al adulterers and fornicators all excuse of such vncleannes. They must therefore be taken to affirme indeede that which they seeme to do, that marriage is honorable in all men. And so doth Theophilaēt apparently expound it, He sayth not that marriage is unfitting for the elder and fit onely for yong men, but honorable for all, though withall hee expound thole words in all, as importing ^m euery way and at all times. But M. Bishop bringeth vs to the Grammar, and telleth vs, that the adiectiue being put without a substantiue, must in true construction haue this word (things) ioyned with it. Full wisely, I warrant you, and with great skill: as though where the Apostle saith, ἅπαντες ἔχουσιν γινῶσκαι, wee are not to translate, there is not knowledge in all men, or all men haue not knowledge, but rather there is not knowledge in all things, because the adiectiue is there put without a substantiue: and where the Apostle saith, ὅτι γὰρ πάντων ἡ πίστις, we should not say all men, but all things haue not faith: and where he sayth, ὁ ὁδὸς ἑαυτὸν ἀντι-δύλον ὑπὲρ πάντων, we should not translate who gaue himselfe a redemption for all men, but for all things, because in these places the adiectiue is put without the substantiue, as in infinite other places it is, where notwithstanding it must necessarily bee vnderstood not of all things but of all men. It is not passion then, as he obiecteth to vs, but plaine frenzie, as it seemeth, that maketh him to vse these blind and ignorant cauillations, and the places of Scripture which M. Perkins hath alledged against their vow of continencie, stande still firme and sure for ought that he hath beene able to say against them.

10. W. BISHOP.

The Scripture being so barren for him, he shall belike recompence it with the abundant testimonie of antiquitie in fauour of his cause: but oh unhappie chance, hee hath cleane forgotten in this question the record of the auncient Church: what, was there not one Father, who with some one broken fragment of a sentence or other, woulde releue you in this your combat against the Vow of Chastitie? I will helpe you to one, but I feare me, you will scarce thanke mee for my paines: it is such a one, as is

1 Theoph. in Heb
13. Non quia sup-tia state promedi-
oribus miris, con-
ueniant, adolefcenti-ulos verò admo-
dam decent sed
cunctis aut honori
sunt.
m Vel in omnibus
hoc est, quibusum
modu, & quous
tempore.
n 1. Cor. 8. 7.

o 2. Theff. 3. 1.

p 1. Tim. 1. 9

neither holy nor father, but the auuncient Christian Epicure Iouinian, who, as S. Augustine hath recorded* and S. Ierome*, did hold that virginitie of professed persons, men and women, was no better then the continencie of the married. So that many professed virgins beleeuing him did marry, yet himselfe did not marry, as Friser Luther did: not because he thought chasticitie should be rewarded in the life to come, with a greater crowne of glory: but because it was fit for the present necessity, to auoyd the troubles of marriage: see iust the very opinion of M. Perkins and our Protestants. But this heresy, saith S. Augustin in the same place was quickly suppressed and extinguished, it was not able to deceiue any one of the Priests. And in another place thus* he speaketh of Iouinian, Holy Church most faithfully and valiantly resisted this monster. So that no maruell if that M. Perkins could finde small releefe in antiquitie for this his assertion, which the best of them esteemed no better then a monstrous sacrilegious heresie.

* Hares. 83. ad
Quod vult.
* Lib. 1 contra Iouin.

* Lib. 2 retrac. 22

R. ABBOT

How simply M, Bishop hath dealt in the answering of the Scriptures alledged against him, we haue very well scene already, and it hath been made appeare to him that we want not testimony of antiquitie for the applying thereof in such sort as we doe. Albeit wee freely say to him, that our faith resteth entirely vppon the word of God: and where God hath spoken plainly to vs, we will not suspend our assent vpon question, whether men thinke the same that God hath told vs. If men haue giuen testimonie thereof, we take their witness and vse it: if not, we say as in another case Cyprian doth: Wee are not to looke for the testimonies of men, where we haue warrant already from God himselfe, and with the Apostle Saint Paul, Let God be true, and euery man a liar. In the meane time we do but suffer M. Bishop here to go like a foole to the stocks for correction, not imagining whither he goeth, and like the poore fish to dally & play with the baite wherein hee receiuethe his owne bane. Hee sporteth himselfe with Iouinian, and in the cause of Iouinian we bring not a broken fragment of a sentence of some father, but in a manner a whole Church, and no meane Church, but euen the Church of Rome, defending and maintaining that virginitie, of professed persons is no better (with God) then the continencie of the married. The old Church of a Cyp. lib. 2. ep. 5

Non sunt expectanda testimonia humana, cum procedunt diuina suffragia.
b Rom. 3. 4.
c Prou. 7. 22.

Rome condemned the doctrine of Montanus, which was the same in effect as before I haue said, that the Church of Rome now maintaineth. The old Church of Rome vpheld the doctrine of Iouinian, which was the same that wee nowe defend against the Church of Rome. This matter (gentle Reader) hath bene declared beefore at large ^d in the answer to M. Bishops Epistle, and thither I refer thee for the full vnderstanding of it. Here I will onely briefly remember thee, that the doctrine of Hierome against Iouinian found generall opposition in the Romane Church, and howe scandalously and offensively it was taken, his owne words may giue vs to vnderstand, when in his apologic he saith, A great offence, the Churches are ouerthrowne, the world cannot abide to heare it that I haue saide, that virginittie is more pure (or holy) then marriage. It was no small matter that made him thus to speake: to hold that virginittie is more holy then marriage, was then taken to bee a doctrine pernicious to the Church, and the world could not brook the hearing of it. Some priuate persons were intangled with the conceit of it, but it was most hainouly taken when it came publikly to bee defended. And albeit Siricius then Bishop of Rome, a superstitious & vnlearned man, the first for ought appeareth that sought to giue way in the Church of Rome to the dregs and filth of Montanus, which that Church had before condemned, albeit I say this Siricius with some few of his owne packe hadde giuen sentence against Iouinian, yet so little did his sentence auaille with the rest of the Clergie, as that Hierome found himselfe much aggriued at their taking parte against him. His words are plaine, Though secular men thinke much that they are put in lower place then virgines, yet I maruell that Priests and Menkes and continent persons do not commend that which they do. They containe themselves fro their wines that they may imitate the chastitie of virgins, and wil they haue it that married women are the same that virgins are? Hereby it plainly appeareth, that howsoeuer in practise they hadde yeilded to the decree of Siricius, and to those fancies which then were somewhat growne as touching single life, yet they retained still the same iudgement and opinion of doctrine, that Virginittie and marriage for themselves made no difference at all with G O D, howsoeuer the one be more conueniēt then the other for auoiding the distractions and troubles of our present life. For the rest look to the place before mentioned, which I hope wil giue thee satisfaction

ds. a. 8.

e Hieron. apolog.
pro. lib. aduor. lo-
uin Grandepiacu-
lum, euer sa suno
ecclesia, orba audi
re non potest, si vir-
ginitatem diximus
esse inuicem
quam nuptias

E Ibid. subintro. Si seculi homines indignantur in vino-
is gradu se esse
quam virgines, miror clericos &
monachos & conti-
nentes non lauda-
re quod faciunt.
Castrant se ab uxoribus suis ut imi-
tentur virginum
castitatem, et idip-
sum velunt esse
maritatum quod virgines.

as touching this whole matter. As for Luthers mariage hee hadde groundes sufficient whereupon to satisfie himselfe in that behalf, and better were it for a great number of M. Bishops copelmates to do as Luther did, then to practise that filthinesse which vnder colour of continencie they now doe.

II. W. BISHOP.

But M. Perkins hath an argument that shall neuertheless demonstrate the vow of perpetuall chastitie to be intollerable. For (saith hee) this vowe is not in the power of him that voweth : for continencie is the gift of God, who giueth it not vnto all, but vnto whom he will, when he will, and as long as he will. And if we object, that by prayer and fasting the gift of continencie may be obtained of God : he answereth, that it cannot, because it is not necessary to sa'nation. We reply, that it is necessarie for all them that haue vowed chastitie. And be it so, that God giueth it not vnto all, yet doth he certainly giue it to some, for otherwise they cannot keepe their vowes, but to the dishonour of God, and to their owne damnation should breake them.

And we onely teach, that some such who haue vowed chastitie, could keepe it: so that the argument is very childissh, and too too weake to leade any wise man away from the holy and auncient doctrine of the church.

R. ABBOT.

A very simple remonstrance doth M. Bishop here giue vs to M. Perkins his demonstration. The ground of the argument is this, that to make a vowe of that which by ordinary prouidence of GOD is not in our power, and wherein wee haue no assurance of the extraordinary gift of God, is an intollerable presumption, a wilfull tempting of God, and a seeking to bind his gifts to the headlong rashnes of our fancies. What is he but a mad man that will make a vow to go vpon his head, or to flie in the aire, or ^a to stay the Sun as Iosuah did, or ^b to deuide the sea as did Moses, or ^c to stay the raine as Elias did, or ^d to make iron swim as Elizeus did? Now of continencie wee are taught that it is a speciall gift of God. Our Sauour Christe expressly telleth vs, ^e All men cannot receiue this thing, but they to who it is giuen Therefore ^f they to whom it is not giuen, eicher haue no wil to it, or fulfill

^a Iesu. 10. 13.
^b Exod. 14. 21.
^c 1. King. 17. 1.
^d 2. King. 6. 6.
^e Mat. 19. 11.
^f August. de lib.
 arb. ca. 4. Quibus non est datum, aut
 nolunt, aut non im-
 plent quod volunt.

not that which they are willing to, Saint Paul saith, & Every man hath his proper gift of God, one thus, and another thus: and shall he that hath received his gift one way, vow the performance of that which belongeth to another gift which he hath not received? But say they, the gift is to be obtained by fasting and praier. Yea but seeing praier also is the gift of God, how can he presume that God will giue him grace to pray for the obtaining of that other gift who haue wilfully vowed without God, and hauing received no gift whereupon to vow? Surely they to whō it is not giuen sometimes haue no will to it, as we see before in S. Austins words, and how can they faithfully pray for that whereto they haue no will? But it is true here which Solomon saith, ^b It is a snare for a man after the vowes to make inquirie: first to vow and then to bee to seeke and to learne for the keeping of it. And what? doth fasting and prayer obtaine of God whatoeuer wee list to aske? Shall we vow to do as Moses, and Iosuah, and Elias did, as I said before, and then thinke by fasting and praier to obtaine it? Saint Austin rightly saith, ⁱ God in mercy sometimes denieth that which we ask because he thinketh it not conuenient for vs, or he hath determined otherwise, ^k God is gracious (saith hee) who oftentimes giueth not what we desire, that he may giue vs that which we will like better when hee hath giuen it. Thus Saint Paul, though ^l he besought to be eased of that sting of the flesh, the messenger of Satan which buffeted him, yet obtained not what he desired. Therefore M. Perkins very well obserueth that there are two sortes of the giftes of God, some common to all, and therefore necessary because he hath determined not to bring vs to saluation without them, as are repentance, faith, forgiuenesse of sins, sanctification of the spirit, which as God first giueth, so to our faithfull prayers he yeeldeth the increase thereof. Other giftes there are which God hath intended to bee proper and peculiar to some, and whereof hee maketh not others partakers, because the want thereof is no hinderance to their saluation, as are the gifts of toongs, of healing, of knowledge, of wisdom, of vtterance, and such like. Of this sort is the gifte of continencie, which because it is not necessary for saluation, we can no more presume to obtaine by fasting and prayer, then we can any of those other, or health, wealth, preferment, or any such outward and temporall benefite. We may assay & vse the meanes to see what God will do, but we haue no promise whereupon we may certainly resolue our selues for successe therein.

g 1. Cor. 7. 7.

h Prou. 20. 15

i August. de verb. Dom. ser. 53. Aliquando Deus proptius negat quod peti.

k Idem epist. 34. Bonus Dominus quatenus tribuit sapē quod volumus vique malum attribuat.

l 1. Cor. 12. 8.

As therefore to vow the vse of those other gifts when a manne hath them not, onely vpon presumption by prayer and fasting to obtain them, is the part of a brainsicke and distempered man, euen so is it for a man to vow continencie, not hauing receiued but presuming afterwardes by fasting and prayer to obtaine the gift whereby hee should containe. But where M. Perkins answereth that the gift of continencie cannot be presumed of by prayer and fasting because it is not necessary to saluation, M. Bishop replieth, that it is necessary for all them that haue vowed chastitie. And why so? For otherwise they can not keepe their vowes, but to the dishonour of God and their owne damnation should breake them. Where wee see that M. Perkins vnderstandeth necessary in one respect, and M. Bishop in another. Master Perkins intendeth, that prayer and fasting do not certainly obtaine any thing, but what in it selfe and simply is necessary to saluation. M. Bishop will haue vs thinke that it obtaineth certainly whatsoever is necessary in respect of a vow for the performance thereof, But because that which M. Perkins saith is true, therefore that which M. Bishop saith is false, neither may we imagine by prayer & fasting to subiect the gifts of God to the madnesse of our vowes. What? because a man voweth to be a prophet or to speake strange toongs, shall it therefore bee necessary for his saluation, that God bestow vpon him the gift of prophecie or the gift of toongs, because otherwise he shall breake his vow? If we will thinke thus absurd, we must say in the vow of continencie as we will in this, that the gift of continencie is not necessary to saluation, but it is necessary for a man to repent him of his rash and headlong vow, to aske God mercie for abusing his sacred name in so vnlawfull sort, and to vse the means ordained by God for auoiding the mischieues of that vow wherein he findeth not himselfe seconded and confirmed by the gift of God. Beccause I say the gifte of continencie is not in it selfe necessarie to saluation, therefore God doth not alwayes yeelde it to the prayers of men, howsoeuer they haue vowed it, but leaueth them to the repentance of their errour, and to the remedy which hee hath appoynted for them: and they who hauing vowed against marriage, and not hauing the gift of continencie do perseuere therein, they do no other but rebell against God, and not further their saluation by keeping their vow as they call it, but increase their owne damnation by the pollution and vncleannesse of filthy lust. Whereas he saith, that they

onely

only teach that such as haue vowed chastitie can keepe it: I answer him as Austin did to Iulian the Pelagian, that where^m Christ saith, All receiue not this saying, but they to whom it is giuen: he might haue sayde, All receiue not this saying, but they that will, if it be true which they say. For if they that haue vowed chastity can consequently keepe, it the whosoever will vow it, is presently thereby put in state for the keeping of it, and that is whosoever will, because whosoever will, may vow. Which because it is apparently absurd, therefore our argument is strong enough to satisfie a wise man against so vaine and childish answers.

m August. cont. Iulian. lib. 5. ca. 10. Non omnes capiunt verba cum possent dicere, Non omnes capiunt verbum, hoc, sed qui volunt, si verum esse quod dicitur vos.

12. W. BISHOP.

But to the further confirmation of this point, let vs heare what the holy Fathers teach touching the possibilitie of this vow.

Tertullian heare the and expounding these wordes, * He that can take, let him take. * Chuse (saith he) that which is good, if thou say thou canst not, it is because thou wilt not, for that thou mightest if thou wouldest, hee dooth declare who hath left both to thy choise.

* Lib. de monog. Mat. 19.

Origen upon the same place. * He that will take this word that is set downe of chastitie, let him pray for it, beleeuing him that sayde, Aske and it shall be giuen you, and hee shall receiue it: which dooth plainly confute M. Perkins, who saith, that although we aske neuer so much, we cannot obtaine this gift. With Origen agreeth Saint Ierome upon the same place, who saith, It is giuen vnto them who haue requested it, who haue desired it, and trauelled that they might receiue it.

* Mat. 19.

The same song chaunteth Gregorie Nazianzene, which is of three kinds of Eunuches.

* Orat. 31.

Saint Chrysostome saith, It is possible to all them who make choise of it: and further addeth, that our Sauour Christ himselfe doth prooue it there after this sort: Thinke with thy selfe if thou haddest beene by nature an Eunuch, or by the malice of men made one, what wouldst thou then haue done, when thou shouldst both haue beene deprived of that pleasure, and yet not haue hadde any recompence for thy paine. Therefore thanke God, because thou shalt haue a great reward, and a glittering crowne, if thou liue so as they must

doe.

do without any reward: yet (saith he) thou mayst do it more easily, safely and pleasantly, both because thou art fortified with hope of recompence, and also comforted with a vertuous conscience.

We will wrap up this point with Saint Augustine, who directly confuteith Master Perkins by many reasons and examples: Lib. 2. De adulterinis coniug. cap. 12. Et de bono viduit. cap. 20. And vpon the Psalme, an hundredth thirtie seuen, hee yeeldeth another reason, why God will more really assist them, saying Hee that exhorteth thee to vow, will helpe thee to fulfill it. All which heauenly doctrine, because it is spirituallly iudged (as the Apostle speaketh) the carnall man cannot understand: and therefore Master Perkins being perswaded that few canne liue chasty except they marrie, auoucheth that this Vowe doth bring forth innumerable abhominations in the worlde: not the hundredth part so manie as the fleshy heretickes imagine, and out of flying and lying tales report and bruite abroad. Nay I dare affirme, that lette the authentickall Recordes of our Realme be well perused, and you shall finde more lewd filthie lecherie to haue bene practised by Ministers and their wines this last age, then was in a thousand yeares before by all the Catholicke Priests and religious persones of the Land.

This may serue for a reproofe of all that M. Perkins obiekteth against the Vow of chastitie: afterwarde the man would somewhat reason the matter by shewing how he condemmeth not chastitie, yet saith, that marriage is better then it, in two respects. If Iouinian was reputed by the learnedst and holiest fathers, a Christian Epicure and a monster, because he durst make marriage equall with virginite: what shall this man be, who sayth it is better? His reasons are so childish, that by the like you may prooue durt to be better then gold: wherefore I will not stand vpon them.

Hee neuerthelesse afterward concludeth, that one may purpose constantly with himselfe to lead a single life; but so, as he may change vpon occasion, and this to be a counsell of expedience, but not of perfection.

Lastly, that if any hauing the gift of continencie doe vow, and afterward marrie (the gift remaining) they haue sinned: which is flat against his owne second rule, which prohibites vs to lose our libertie, and to make any thing unlawful in conscience, which Christian religion leaueth at libertie.

h Rom 7.16.

receiueh, yet euery one receiueh not the thing which hee asketh, because we ^h not knowing what to pray as we ought, do sometimes ask those things which are either vnprofitable or vnecessary for vs. It is true that the prayer of the faithfull neuer returneth emptie; but yet therefore are we taught in our prayers to submit our selues to the will of God, and to say with our Sauour, ⁱ Neuerthelesse not as I will, but as thou wilt be done, because God, though ^k hee heare vs alwayes for our good, yet doth not heare vs alwayes according to our will. Because therefore the gift of continencie is a speciall gift which God hath not left indifferent to euery man, we may not vpon our praieres resolue to receiue in particular that gift, ^l After Fewe we haue no warrāt in particular for the obtaining of it. And yrie, sould Origen himselfe vpon occasion well discerne, when hee saith that our Sauour reproveth such masters as cruelly and vnmmercifully, without weighing the strength of their hearers, do enioyne them things beyond their power, as they (saith he) who forbid to marry, and from that which is expedient do force men to a puritie or cleannesse more then needeth, who also teach them to abstaine from meates and by the word of their exposition do bind other such burdens to which they should not at all compel faithfull men, being beside the will of Christ, saying, My yoke is sweet and my burden light; and do lay them by their word and doctrine vpon mens shoulders, bowing them downe, and causing them that are not able to beare them, to fall vnder the waight of their heauy cōmandements. Thus spake Origen against them, who notwithstanding alledged for themselues, as wee haue seen, the same that he saith in the other place, that God of his part will not bee wanting, and they that aske shall receiue of him. And if it be true which hee saith in those former words, then there was no cause for him here to blame those teachers for laying too heauie burdens vpon men, because they might iustly answer as he doth, that the burdens were not to bee accounted too heauie, for that euery one that asketh may receiue strength for the bearing of them. But because he iustly reproveth those teachers, therefore he giueth to vnderstand that M. Perkins iustly saith, that though it cannot bee doubted, that some by prayer obtaine the gift of continencie, yet it is not yeldded to the prayers of euery man, and many though they pray neuer so much, yet receiue it not. As for Hieromes words they shew which is the way to obtaine it, but doe not say that that way will bring euery man vnto it.

i Mat. 26.39.

k Augusi. Exaudis Deū et si non sēper ad voluntatem se per tamen ad utilitatem.

l Origen in Mat. tract. 24. Reprehendit huiusmodi preceptores qui crudeliter et sine misericordianon secundum existimationem vtrius uniuscuius que audientis, sed maiora virtute ipsorum iniungunt, ut puta qui prohibent mōbere & ab eo quōd moderatam mūditiā compellunt: qui etiam ducent abstinere acibus, & alia huiusmodi ad quae non omnino oportet cogere, fideles alligant per verbum expositionis suae onera grauiā citra voluntatem Christi dicentis, Inquam meum suauis est, et onus meum leue est, & imponunt ea quantum ad verbum suum super humero hominum curuantes eo: & cadere facientes sub pondere grauius mandatorum eos qui beati lare canon suffe ruit.

It is giuen to them that haue asked it, that haue desired it, that haue laboured to receiue it, but it followeth not that it is giuen to all that do so. He expressely directeth his speech against them who thought that either ¹¹ by fatall destinie or by fortune and chance men receiued this gift, and the wether that not so, but by prayer and labor they that haue it do attaine it. But if all might so obtaine it, there were reason of that aduertisement which hee giueth presently after, ^o Christ saith. He that can receiue it let him receiue it, that euery man may consider his owne strength whether he be able to fulfill the precepts of virginity & continencie: for continencie is of it selfe a flattering thing, and allureth euery one to it; but men are to consider their strength that he may receiue it who is able to receiue it. What needeth this consideration of our strength, and the doubt of our being able, if wee may resolue that euery one that asketh and seeketh, receiue strength to be able. Yea and the obtaining of this ablenesse requireth greater labour then euery mans strength can beare, appeareth by Hierome himselfe, who of himselfe confesseth, how ^p hardly by the hardnesse of the wildernesse he attained to the bridling of incontinent desires. ⁹ I was not able (saith he) to beare the provocations of vicious desire and heate of nature, which when I repressed by ostensifling, yet my mind was still raging with thoughts. ¹ I thought my selfe to be amidst the pleasures of Rome. My body was rough with sackcloth, and my skin and flesh was become blacke; stil I weeping and mourning; I slept not but as sleepe oppressed me, and then I laied my bones scarcely hanging together upon the bare ground, My drinke was cold water, and it was too daintie for me to haue any thing boyled. Yet I who was thus the companion of Scorpions and wild beasts, yet (in my mind was many times present among the companies of maidens. My face was pale with fasting, and my mind was still raging with desires in my cold body, and my flesh being now dead before my selfe, onely the fires and heates of lusts were still boiling within me. This hee acknowledgeth as touching himselfe, and if he in that inuincible obstinacie against himselfe, yea in the wildernesse, where his companie was but Scorpions & wild beasts, yet found so great difficulty to attaine to that that he sought for: what shall we expect of them who are tyed to liue there

m Hieron. Nath
 19 Hi datum est
 qu petierunt, qui voluerunt, qui ut
 acciperent labor
 auerunt.

11 Id Nemo potest
 sub hoc verbo fati
 vel fortunam intro
 duc.

o Ibid Inferi Qui potest capere capiat
 ut unusquisque co
 sideret uires su
 utrum possit uirgi
 alia & pudicitia im plere praecipit. P. r se enim castitas
 blanda est, & quora
 libet ad se allucius
 sed consideranda
 sunt uires ut qui po
 test capere capiat, p Hieron. *Vix ere
 mti dicitur refræ
 nauit.*

9 *Ad Rust de vi uendi forma. Incon
 tina uisiorum arde
 remq; natura ferru
 non puteram, quera
 cum crebru uicinis
 frangerem memora mien cogitationibus astuabat.*

r Ad Eustech, de ci Hod. virginis. In eremo constitutus,
 & c. Putabam me
 Romani interesse delictis, & c. *Hor
 retant sacco mem
 bra deformia, &*
liquida casti firi Æthiopia

canu obduxerat.
Quod id lacryma,
quod id geminis, &
*siquando repugnau
 tem somni irma neris oppressisset, no
 dahumo ossa uix
 harent a cellidēā,*
*Deicibu & palu sa
 ceo cum etiam lan*

gentes monachi aqua frigida utantur & celtum aliquid accepisse luxuria si Illeigitur ego, & c. scorpionum tantum so cium & ferarum sape choris intereram puellarum. Pallebant ora ieiunij & mone desiderij: astuabat in frigido corpore, & antehominem sumo iam carne p avertina sela libidinum incendia bulliebant.

where there is still casting of oile into the fire, and occasions mightily to prouoke that desire which so mightily prouoketh it selfe where there is no occasion. Yea wheresoeuer men liue, there is not one of a thousand that can yeeld himselfe, to the doing or suffering of that which Hserome describeth in himselfe, and therefore the vowing of continencie is no other but euen as the casting of a mans self into the sea, where though sometimes men find meanes to scape yet there is certaine and apparent danger and likelihood of being drowned. Now the words of Hserome seeme to be but the imitation of Gregory Nazianzene, who as he chanteth the same song, to vse M. Bishops phrase. so is to haue the same answer. Having reiected those fancies of destiny and fortune, as also the opinions of mens free will for making themselues chaste, hee saith it is gigen^r But adde, saith he it is gigen to them that are willing to it, & by inclination of minde are thereto caried. He saith that there must be in a man a will and inclination for the obtaining of it, but doth not say that euery man that hath a will to it doth obtaine it which is the matter here in question. Yea he maketh that will whereby it is obtained a speciall gift of God and wholly his gift, so that they who haue not this speciall will inspired of God, though they haue vowed a thousand times, yet can neuer pray or labour effectually for the obtaining of that which they haue vowed. Chrystomes exposition wee reiect, being very manifestly contrary to the drift of our Sauour in that place. He maketh this gift commonⁿ to all that will, whereas by Hierome before wee learne that Christ therefore said He that can receiue it, let him receiue it, because all cannot so do. As for S Austin in the first place he saith somewhat again M. Bishop, but for him nothing at all. It is now rightly said. He that can receiue it, let him receiue it, but kee that containeth not, let him marry: thereby plainly signifying that the words of Christ do import that euery one is not capable of that precept of containing, and therefore that those expositions are not true which M. Bishop hath brought to proue that they are so. The second testimonie is taken out of a booke which, is none of Austins, and the reason which he vseth of husbands long absence from their wiues by traouelling or like occasions, that if in such cases they can containe, then they may also for keeping their vow, is vninsufficient. For wee haue promise of Gods helpe in the necessities and temptations which his wisdom & prouidence imposeth vpon vs, but

Gre. Naz. orat.
26. Cum audieris, Quibus datū est,
ad te, Volentibus datum est. Et ijs qui animi inclinatione
usa feruntur.

e. Ibid. Propositum
quoque si sum atq;
electio diuinum
quoddam beneficiū est, &c. Ipsius quo-
que velle a Deo est,
&c.

ii. Chryf. in Matho.
O. Hu datum est
qui sponte id eligūt
Offendit superiore
Auxilio nobis opus
esse quod quidem omnibus paratum
est, si volumus in hac luctatione super oves euadere.

* August. de adul-
ter. coniug. lib. 2.
cap. 12. Nunc recte iustissime dicitur, Qui potest cap. 10, capiat qui autem se non co-
ni. et. nubat.

v. Erasmus. consur. n.
lib. de bono vtilitat.
Mira ditionis facti-
lit. u. & candor cla-
mitat none esse Augustini.

but we haue no promise of his helpe in those temptations which we procure vnto our selues, and wherein wee tempt him by presuming vpon his helpe, to go one way when he hath directed vs to go another. The last words which he citeth, are spoken in general of vow- ing, and we doubt not but that in those things which we vow law- fully according to the will and word of God, the helpe of God who hath giuen vs a heart to promise our seruice to him, will mercifully assist vs accordingly, as we call vpon him for the performance ther- of, but so to secure euery man who wilfully voweth that which God requireth not of him, is a spice and tast of those dregs wherewith Montanus as I sayd before corrupted the doctrine of the Church. He that exhorteth thee to vow, will helpe thee to fulfill it, but he exh- orteth none in this case, but them that are able: He that is able, let him receiue it, and let him receiue it, saith he, but sayth not, let him vow it and what is that to moue thee to vow, and to presume that after- wards he will make thee able? Yea, and what we are to conceiue in this case, we are somewhat to esteeme by Austine himselfe, who in his confessions to God acknowledgeth those 7 night illusions and pollutions of the flesh, which in defect of marriage, carnall concu- pifcence is wont to cause, which are so vnnatural and lothsome, as that no man should doubt but that chaste marriage is a thousand times rather to be chosen, then to endure the custome thereof. And if Ass- tine at those yeares as hee speaketh of, & in so great deuotion, could not be free from such pollution, what shall wee thinke of so many who in strength of body and heate of blood, with ease and full diet do vndertake that Popish vow of single life, but that euen in them it is true which S. Bernard saith, Take from the Church honorable marriage and the undefiled bed, and thou fillest all with keepers of concu- bines incestuous persons, seed-loosers, maniacs, Sodinites, and all manner of vnclane persons. And this to haue been the fruit and effect of that vow of virginity and single life, all ages by experience haue found It hath been alwayes the trap wherein Satan hath taken men & wo- men to hold them bond and captiues to filthinesse & vnclaneffe. When they had vowed they might not marry, & yet not being able to containe, they haue fallen to whoredome: whence they grew to damnable practises, as Tertullian in part sheweth, either to hinder conception, or to marre that which they had conceiued, or if they could not prevent the birth, yet thē to strangle & murder the child that was borne, Cf the last wherof a notable example was seene in

7 Aug. Confess. in
10. cap. 30. *1. ama mea non fit ta-
bellusit atq; vni sannu etiam non solum non perpe-
tret illa corrupte-
larum suspitudo-
nes per imagines anormales vsq; ad ear-nifluxum sed ne
consentiat quidem
&c. Quid ad hoc
(in hac aetate) sicut in hoc genero male
moribus Domino,
bono meo, &c.
a Bern in Cant.
fir. 66. Tolle ex
ecclesia honorabile conubium & the-
rum immaculatū
nonne repleam concupiscit, incestuosos, semitustu-u, molli tu, masculi-tatem concubitori-
um, & omni den-
gere inuicem do-
tum.*

b Tertull de velud
virginib. Sic Deu
quet tam infantes & perfecti & perducti ad partum inte-
gro dixerit, debet latos siquandū a matris, &c. Hac admittit agita-
tionalia & inuita
virginitas.

c Paralipon apud
Abbat Vrsberg in
epst Huldrici. Cū quadā die in tota a rum suum propter piscas nisi se &
allatandi plusquā
sex millia s'f'vū
capita videret, inti
ma max dūctus pe nitentiaingruus et iactum a se de absti nentia decre: uno
tant a cadū causa
confessus cum ligno
illud pa ientia
fractu purgavit.
d Cypri. lib. 1. ep. 11 Detecta iū in co
dem lecto pariter
manasse cum mas
culu

e Idem de singular
cler. Eunuchi nostri ambulant sine fami
nina soliditate
dormire.

f Quanti & quales
episcopi & clerici
noscuntur nasu fra
gasse cū voluit in nasu fragili nau
gara.

g Chrysof ser.

Quid regulares fa
mina viru cohabi tent. Derident &
sales in nos iactant
&c. ut posthac me
liu si ne virgines
quidem esse qua sic
prauaricariatē dē
i Hierō. ad Rustic videus non nullos à militibus non pas se discedere, &c. & prater vocabulum
nuptiarum omnia
esse matrimonij.

i Idem ad Eustoch vnde sine nuptijs a liud nomen vxorū
Vnde nouum con
cubinarum genus?
Vnde meretrices u niuirā? Eadem de
mo, uno cubiculo,
sape uno tenentur & leūlo & sus
piciofos nos vocant

si aliqui dixerimur, k Ber. de conuer. ad Cler. cap. 29. Post fornicationes, post adulteria, post incestus nec ipsa quidē a pud aliquos in nomini a passiones desunt. l Ibid Nec latec quous pra multis in dence pra impudentia quarunt. m Hieron.
aduer. vigil. Non ordinant diacones nisi prius uxores duxerint.

the time of Gregory Bishop of Rome the first, as Hulderichus the Bishop of Augusta mentioneth, when out of a poole which the sayd Gregory caused to be drawne, there were taken about sixe thousand infants skuls or heads, to his great greife at the sight thereof, & great repentance of the decree that hee had made against mariage. So Cyprian maketh mention of a notable abuse of such as professing to be virgins, yet^d would lye in bed and sleepe with men, stitl taking vpon the, that they were not defiled by the, yea he hath written^e a treatise of purpose against the, who hauing caused single life, yet would not be without the company and conuersation of women, euen in their beds, and were not ashamed by abusing examples of Scripture, to colour their lewd course. He alledgeth^f Bishops and Priests, many and men of great worth, falling in that sort and by that occasion. Chrysofome also hath written a Sermon of purpose, complaining^g that women professing rule of continencie, had men dwelling with them and affirmeth, that the behauiour of virgins did cause such iests and scornes amongst the Pagans, as that it were better there should be no virgins any more to attempt to sinne in the like sort. How often doe wee reade Hierome taxing the exceeding lightnesse & licentiousnesse of the Monkes and professed virgins of Rome, noting and reprocuing Monkes for being in such sort with women, as that^h saue onely the name of marriage all things were like as if they were married: reprocuing virgins for becommingⁱ mines in name without any wedding, yea terming them plainly concubines and harlots. They will be (with men) sayth he, in the same house, in the same chamber, yea oftentimes in the same bed, and they say we are too suspicious if we thinke any thing thereof. So doth Bernard report amongst the Clergie of his time, k fornications, adulteries, incests, yea and the passions of reproch, as hee calleth their acts of Sodomiticall filthinesse. Of the persons guilty hee sayth, l They cannot be hid they are so many, nor care to be hid they are so impudent. Yea, the gloss of their Canon law before hath told vs that few of them were found free from fornication. Such were euen of old the fruits of the vnmarried Clergie, as that some Bishops, as Hierome reporteth, though after his manner he speaketh of the with reproch, would^m admit none into holy orders, vnlesse they were first married. By the fruits therefore it appeareth, that the vow of single life is no heavenly doctrine, as M. Bishop calleth it, but that it came first frō hell, & tendeth wholly thither, & that the defenders thereof after so great experience, are such as S. Paul speaketh of, who have their consciences burned with a hot iron, & are thereby past feeling, and therefore far from spirituall discerning. As for that which he saith, that more filthy lechery would be found by authentical records in ministers & their wives in this last age, then in their Preests in a thousand yeares before, we must take thē but as the words of an impudent & shameles harlot, who being notorious & infamous to the world for her abhominable filthinesse, yet doubteth not to vaunt her selfe to a chaste & well reputed matrone to be a honester then she. Now M. Bishop perswading himself that he hath said much, whē indeed to the purpose hee hath saide little, groweth angry here that M. Perkins should say, that in two respects marriage is better then virginitie: yet only storming at it, he letteth it passe, because he hath nothing to say against it. But to anger him a little more, I will say this to him, that simply & absolutely to speake of the things thēselues, marriage is better then virginitie. I proue it for that God in the state of mans innocency & perfection laid, ⁿ It is not good that the man should be himselfe alone. That which in the state of righteousnes & innocēcy was good, is vndoubtedly better of it self, thē that that in that state was not good. Marriage was good in the state of innocencie, single life was not good. Marriage therefore is better then single life. That virginity is become better then marriage, it is casual & accidental, by reasō of those euils, & distractions & troubles, which came into the world by sin, which should not haue bin if there had bin no sin. Let him take my words as they are, & not crosse me with speeches of the cōparison of marriage & single life in the now corrupted state of mā. As touching Iouinian enough hath bene said before. Those fathers who accounted Iouinian for an Epicure & a monster, as M. Bishop saith, for making marriage equall with virginitie, when he himself liued an vnmarried & a chaste life, if they had seen the things that haue befallen since, would haue changed their mind, & haue learned by further experience to reforme their error, and to giue the name of Epicures & monsters to them whose doings by the witnesse of their owne stories haue shewed them so to bee. Who vnder colour of taking parte with those fathers in condemning Iouinian for an hereticke, and carying some semblance of following them in that beehalfe, haue from the highest of their votaries to the lowest, made the earth to stinke euen as high as heauen, with the abhominable corruption & filthynesse of their vnmarried life. Whereas M. Perkins saith, that if any hauing the gift of continencie do vow single life, & the same gift remaining doth marry, he therein sinneth, M. Bishop saith that this is flat contrary to his own second rule, which prohibites vs to lose our liberty, & to make that unlawfull in conscience, which Christian religion leauech at libertie. But the contrariety is not in M. Perkins words, but in M. Bishops vnderstanding: Christian libertie importeth not a being free from performing that which a man hath vowed in thinges indifferent, but only a freedome from any holy opinion of the thing it selfe which he hath vowed. A manne knoweth in this case that to marrie or not to marrie is all one to God, but yet he will not marrie because he hath vowed, & God maketh him able to performe his vow. To be short, he might haue takē his answer frō M. Perkins own words, that a mā is to know, that if he mary, he sinneth not in marrying, but in cauffles and vnnecessary breaking his vow, when hee may keepe the same. Which if he would not haue taken frō M. Perkins, hee might haue taken it from S. Austin, whom M. Perkins citeth to that effect, or whosoeuer is the author of that book: The mariages of such are not to be iudged damnable, but the breaking of their vow. Their mariage therefore standeth good, as he there disputeth, though they remaine culpable for their former vow.

13. W. BISHOP.

Now to supply M. Perkins his default, who was accustomed to rehearse, although many times vntowardly, yet lightly alwayes some reasons for the Catholike party: which in this question he hath wholly omitted, I will briefly proue by an argument or two, that it is both lawfull and very commendable for menne and women of ripe yeares and consideration, hauing well tryed their owne aptnesse, to vow virginity, if by good inspirations they be therunto inwardly called. My first reason is this, that which is more pleasant and gratefull vnto God, may very well be vowed to him but virginity is more acceptable to God then marriage. The first proposition is manifest, and hath no other exception against it, but that which before is confuted, to wit, if we be able to performe it. The second is denied by them, which we prouue in expresse termes out of Saint Paul, He that ioyneth his virgin doth well, but he that ioyneth her not, doth better: and againe of widomes: They shall bee more happy by *Saint Paul*s iudgement, if they remaine vnmarried: This may be confirmed out of Esay, Where God promiseth the Eunuch that holdeth greatly of the thing that pleaseth him, that he will giue him in his houshold and within his walles a better heritage and name, then

• Aug. de bono viduita cap. 9.
Non ipsa vel talium nuptia damnanda iudicantur sed damnatur frater qui non videt.

• 1. Cor. 7.

• Es. 56.

then if they had bene called sonnes and daughters. I will (saith God) giue them an euerlasting name. And also out of the booke of Wisdome

Blessed is the Eunuch which hath wrought no vnrighthouse, &c. for vnto him shall be giuen the speciall gift of faith, & the most acceptable portion in our Lords temple, for glorious is the fruite of God. Which is also plainly taught in the Revelations, where it is said, that no man could sing that song but 144000, & the cause is set downe, These bee they which haue not bene defiled with women, for they are Virgins. To these latter places, M. P. answereth, pag. 241. that to the Eunuch is promised a greater reward: but, not because of his chastitie, but because hee keepeth the Lords Sabbath and covenant. But this is said vnadvisedly; for to all others that keepe Gods commaundements, shall be giuen a heauenly reward: but why shall they haue a better heritage, and more acceptable portion then others, but because of their speciall prerogative of chastitie?

M. P. then answereth otherwise here: that the single life is better and more happie, because it is freer from common cares of this life, & yeeldeth vs more bodily ease and liberty to serue God. But 1200 yeares ago S. Augustine of set purpose confuted this error in sundry places of his learned Works, specially in his treatise, De Virginitate, in these Chapters 13. 23, 24. 25 where he accounteth him no Christian that doth contradict Christ promising the kingdome of heauen to Eunuchs. And in the 25. Chapter more vehemently exclaiming: O impious blindness, why dost thou caull and seeke shifts? why dost thou promise temporall commoditie onely to the chaste and continent: when God saith * I will giue them an euerlasting name. And if thou wouldest perhaps take this euerlasting for a thing of long cōtinuance, I adde, inculcate, & often repeate, that it shal neuer haue end. What wouldest thou more? This eternall name, whatsoever it bee, signifieth a certaine peculiar and excellent glorie, which shall not be common to many, albeit they be placed in the same kingdome, &c. Which in the 29. Chapter he confirmeth out of that place of the Apocalypse, cited aboue in these words: The rest of the faithfull shall see you, and not enuie your state, but ioy in it, & so be partaker of that in you, which they haue not in themselues: for the new song which is proper vnto you they cannot sing, but shall heare it, and bee delighted with your so excellent a blessednesse: but you, because you shall both sing and heare it, shall more happily reioyce and raigne more pleasantly.

Which may be also confirmed out of the Apostle in the same place: where he assureth that the single life is better for the service of God, saying: that a woman unmarried and a virgin, think of the things which belong unto our Lord; how she may please God, and bee holy both in body and spirit. And our blessed Saviour teacheth, * That some become Eunuches for the kingdome of heauen: which, to be taken there properly for the reward in heauen, S. Augustine (with the rest of the Fathers) teacheth: * What could be spoken more truly or more perspicuouly? Christ saith, The truth saith, the wisdom of God affirmeth them to geld themselues for the kingdome of heauen, who doe of a godly determination refrain from mariage; And contrarily, humane vanity doth contend by impious temerity, that they who do so, do it to auoide the necessary troubles of matrimony, and that in the kingdome of heauen they shall haue no more then other men.

R. ABBOT

M. Bishop, here taketh vpon him to proue the vow of virginity to be lawfull, but yet we see it is with certaine cautions and conditions to be therein obserued. First he will haue them to be of ripe yeares & consideration, & well to try their owne aptnesse. Secondly, it is lawfull, if by good inspirations they be thereunto inwardly called. But put the case that these cautions be not obserued, that some vow rashly and vndoubtedly, without triall of their own aptnesse, & without any good inspirations calling them to it, or hauing vpon some triall iudged themselues apt, yet afterwards finde it otherwise, what shall they do, not being now able to keep that which they haue vowed? Marrie let them sinke or swim, let them burne till they be consumed, let them be brothels and harlots, and what they will, they haue vowed, & they must stand to it, but marry they must not. As for that which he saith of good inspirations inwardly calling them, it is a meere begging of the question. We deny that there are any good inspirations inwardly calling to that which wee are not outwardly taught by the inspired word of God. The spirit & word of God go iointly together, and where the word giueth vs not warrant and direction for that we do, they are illusions and not inspirations, by which wee are led. Now of vowing virginity or single life, the word of God hath neither precept nor example. Al exercises of true righteousness we find amongst the people of the Iewes; we find amongst them all the spirituall intendments & significations of their ceremoniall vowes; but

* Math 19.

* De virginit.
cap. 23.

but of this vow of single life & virginity we find nothing, saue only amongst their sectaries in the corruption of their state and religion, as namely the Pharisees, who for one of their exercises of great holiness,^a vowed continencie and virginitie, sometimes for ten yeeres, sometimes for sixe or for foure yeeres, as Epiphanius reporteth of them. But yet M. Bishops argument will put the matter wholly out of doubt. That, saith he, which is more pleasant & gratefull to God may be vowed unto God, but virginity is more acceptable to God then marriage: therefore it may be vowed. He nameth an exception to the first proposition, if we be able to performe it, and saith that it is before confuted, but his confutation commeth too short, and it still standeth good, that continencie is a thing whereof we cannot promise the abilitie to our selues, and therefore cannot make any lawfull vow thereof. But letting that passe, let vs examine the proofes of his minor proposition, that virginitie is more acceptable to God then marriage. Hee bringeth first the words of S. Paul,^b He that ioyneth his virgin in marriage, doth well, but he that ioyneth her not, doth better, and concerning the widow: she shall be more blessed if she so abide in my iudgment. We heare the wordes, but yet we see not any prooffe therein of that which M. Bishop would proue by them. We know that libertie is better and more blessed then bondage, and yet libertie is not more acceptable to God then bondage, or the free-man then the bondman. ^d It is a more blessed thing, as our Saviour saith, to giue then to receiue, and yet it followeth not, that he that giueth is more acceptable to God, or more blessed with God then he that receiueth. S. Paule himselfe giueth vs to vnderstand in what respectes he meaneth better and more blessed. First when he saith, ^e It is good for the present necessitie, that marriage bee forborne by them that can forbear. ^f What is this necessitie, saith Hierome? Woe saith he, to them that be with child, and to them that giue sucke in thit day. Therefore the wood groweth that it may afterwards be cut downe. Therefore is the field sowed that it may afterwards be reaped. The world is full, the earth containeth vs not, warres are still hewing vs downe, diseases take vs away. Shipwrackes swallow vs up. He giueth hereby to vnderstand, that the Apostle meaneth this necessitie of the troubles that are incident to the faithfull, by persecutions & other temporal calamities, the bearing wherof is so much the more easie, by how much the lesse a man is distressed and distracted with care of wife & children, & hath therby no hinderance, but a Epiphanius h. ar.

16. Quidam eoru
cum se exercebant,
praescribent sibi
decennium aut
duodennium aut qua-dringennium virgini-
tatis & continen-
tia.

b I. Cor. 7. 38.

c Ver. 40.

d Act. 10. 35.

e Ver. 26.
Hieron. cont.
Heluid sub sinem.
Qua est ista necessi-
tas? ut praegrantibus & lactentibus in die illa. I deo sibi non succrescit ut postra recidatur. I deo ager seritur ut motatur. I am plenus
est orbis, terra nos non capit. Quos die
bella nossecant,
maribus subtrahunt,
naufragia absor-
bent, &c.

That either by life or by death hee may freely doe that that shall bee according to God . Againe, to signifie his meaning the Apostle further saith: The married shall haue tribulation in the flesh, but I spare you.^h I would haue you to bee without care. The unmarried careth for the things of the Lord, how he may please the Lord: but the married careth for the things of the world how he may please his wife. ¹ I spake for your commoditie, that ye may cleaue to the Lord without separation. By all which wordes the Apostle importeth that there are many cares and distractions incident to marriage, whereby a man is holden to the respect of the things of this life and of the world, that he cannot so wholly addict himselfe to God. From these distractions single life, if a man will so vse it, is more free, and giueth a man full liberty of applying himselfe entirely to those things wherein consisteth the seeking of the kingdome of heauen. Thus therefore single life is better and more blessed, because there is in it greater opportunitie of following those good thinges wherein consisteth the attainment of eternall blisse. Thus the Father doth better that continueth his daughter being so willing vnmarrid, because he leaueth her at full libertie to bestow her self to the Lords vse. Thus the widow is more blessed if she so abide, because shee is more free to serue the Lorde, But M. Bishop telleth vs, that twelue hundred yeares agoe, S. Austin of set purpose confuted this error, and specially in his Treatise de Virginitate, whence he nameth sundry chapters 13. 23. 24. 25. Where it appeareth that M. Bishop neither vnderstandeth what we say, nor what it is that S. Austine confuteth: S. Austines speech is against the

k Aug. de sanct. Virginit. cap. 13. Qui putant contententia bonum non esse necessarium propter regnum caelorum, sed propter praesens saeculum, quod scilicet conuicia terrenis curis pluribus atq; artibus distenduntur, qua molestia virginis & continentis carent.
l Ibid. cap. 24. Praesenti vita utile esse, non futura.

k who thinke that the benefite of continencie is not needfull for the kingdome of heauen, but onely for this present worlde, because marriage is distracted with many earthly and troubl. some cares, the incumbrance whereof virgins and continent persons doe auoide: in a worde, as afterwards he expresseth it, that it is profitable for this life, not for the life to come. Nowe when wee say that single life where the gift of continencie is, is more helpfull and yeeldeth greater opportunitie to the seruice of God, do we make it profitable for this life onely, and not for the life to come? Hath the seruice of God a reference onely to this world, and doe we follow Christ onely for a benefite in this life? Indeed we should be far wide if wee thought that the end to which the Apostle driueth should be an idle, & voluptuous life, but wee determine that the preferment of continency & single life so cōcerneth
 this

this present life, as that it specially respecteth eternall life. We reckō not of the preterment thereof in respect of this life, but all the account that we make of it is in respect of the life to come, knowing that by how much the more industriously and incessantly we apply our selues to the worke of God, so much the greater reward of glorie we shall haue with him, not by reason of anie merite or desert, but by the heavenly disposition of that voluntarie grace and mercie which hath promised, that ^m our labour shall not bee in vaine in the Lord, becauē ⁿ every man shall haue his wages according to his worke. ^m 1. Cor. 15. 58. ⁿ Cap. 3. 5.

S. Austin therefore in confuting them that lay, that the benefite of continencie is only for this life, saith nothing against vs. He accounteth him no Christian, saith M. Bishop, that doth contradict Christ, promising the kingdome of heauen to Eunuches. Though those be no words of Austin, yet we will aske him, for what Christ doth promise them the kingdome of heauen? Doth he promise it to them for being Eunuches? Surely then many should come to the kingdome of heauen who neuer had anie beliefe thereof. It is not then their being Eunuches that Christ respecteth, but their more earnest seeking the kingdome of heauen. And thus the other sentences which he alledgeth out of Austin, in the maine drift of thē contrarie nothing that wee say: onely in two respectes we differ from him and he from vs. First, we hold the texts of Scripture which hee bringeth to be very vn sufficient for the prooofe of that which he intēdeth. For the words of the Prophet Esay are not spoken of Eunuches, as for following some speciall kind of life in the Church, but for imbracing the common faith and religion of the Church, and are properly referred to them who properly & truly are called Eunuches M. Bishop to make them serue his turne, falsifieth and corrupteth them, the text being in this sort, ^o Let not the sonne of the stranger which is ioyned to the Lord ^o Esay. 56. 3. speake and say, The Lord hath surely separated me from his people, neither let the Eunuch say, Behold I am a dry tree: for thus saith the Lord vnto the Eunuches that keepe my Sabbathes, and chuse the thing that pleaseth me, and take hold of my covenant, euen vnto them I will giue in mine house and within my walles, a place and a name better then of sonnes and daughters (or otherwise, better then to the sons and daughters:) I will giue them an euerlasting name that shall not be put out Which wordes and the rest that follow, doe manifestly tend to take away frō them of whom he speaketh, all opinion of separation from

p Eph. 1.

from the people of God, or of being excluded from hauing name and portion in his house. The Gentiles were aliens and strangers from the common wealth of Israel, and thereby strangers from the covenants of promise, but God giueth vnderstand, that in Christ this difference shall bee taken away, and whosoeuer of the gentiles shall cleane to the Lord and embrace his covenant, their prayers shall be acceptable vnto him, and they shall haue like place in the house of God. Againe, God gaue it as one part of his blessing vnto Abraham, that his seede should bee multiplied, and as one branch of that blessing, he promised vnto the seed of Abraham, If they should hearken vnto his Lawes and obserue them they should bee blessed aboue all people, and there should be neither male nor female barren amongst the. Wherefore to bee barren and without children, was with them a matter of much sorrow and shame, and as a token of not being beloued of God, but their glory, as Cyril citeth, was in birthes and bringing forth and conceiuing. Nowe vpon the Eunuch or gelded man the law of Moses had layd it as a matter of curse and reproach that he should not come into the congregation of the Lord, hee should haue no place amongst them in their assemblies which were sacred and holy to the Lord. This therefore might seeme to stand still as a bar against such, frō being reckoned amongst the people of God: but God lignifieth, that in Christ this barre also should bee taken away.

f Cyril. in Esa. lib. 5
rom. 3. Gloria coru
in partibus & pa turionibus &
conceptionibus.
d Deut. 23. 1.

u Cyril. ut supra.
Si quis sit Eunuchus, id est, carens liberis & sobole,
ne dicat apud
seipsum, ego sum
lignum aridum, id
est, ne moleste ferat orbitatem. Apud Deum enim nihil
est, nec eum reijciat.
x Ibid. Nihil etiam
nocet imo necesse
esse dico, ut mentio
nem faciamus nunc eorum qui se propter regnum
caelorum Eunuchos reddiderunt, quibus oratio à deo
hoc loco habita non abs re accommodari potest.
y Psal. 92. 12.

Cyril expoundeth the words thus, If any man bee an Eunuch, that is, wanting children and issue, let him not say with himselfe, I am a drie tree, that is, let him not take grieuously his being deprived thereof. For with God this is nothing, neither will he for that cause reiect him. Hee saith indeed afterwarde, It is not hurtfull, yea it is necessary, I say, that we here make mention of the who haue made themselues Eunuchs: for the kingdome of heauen, to whome the speech here used by God may, not impertinently, be applied, but he plainly enough importeth, that the proper construction of the woordes is that that he hath beefore deliuered. God therefore willeth the Eunuch, not to account himselfe a drie tree, as not y to be planted in the house of God, and as being deprived of the blessing of the people of God, but to know, that howsoeuer there lay vpon him a note of exclusion by the Lawe, yet now if he should ioyne himselfe in faith & religion to the people of God, he shuld be altogether as one of the, and howsoeuer his name might seeme to die for want of sons & daughters, yet he shuld haue

a name

a name better then the name of sons and daughters, euen an euerlasting name, which shal neuer be put out, but be glorious with God for euer. Men ioy much in the continuance of their name by their issue & posterity, by sonnes & daughters, but to be named amongst the people of God and called one of his, is a farre greater name then the name of many sonnes and daughters, Otherwise if wee reade it a better name then to the sonnes and daughters, it hath reference to the people of the Iewes, who for being of the seede of Abraham, were peculialry reckoned for the children, for sonnes and daughters. Thus is it said of them by our Sauour Christ: ² The children of the ^{Mat. 8. 12.} ^a kingdome shall be cast out: and againe ¹ It is not meete to take the childrens bread, and to cast it to doggs. Therefore he giueth to vnderstand that the Eunuch by being the child of God, through the faith of Iesus Christ hath a more glorious name, then if he were named of Abrahams seede, in the title whereof the Iewes so proudly & vainely reioyced. In a word, the maine drift of the Prophets words generally of strangers, & particularly of Eunuches, is to signifie in Christ the pulling downe of the whole ^b partition wall of all legall separa- ^b Eph. 2. 14. tions, that we should know there is an end of those differences and vncleanesses which the law imputed, and that now ^c there is neither Iew nor Greeke, bond nor free, male or female, (no difference of maimed or whole) ^c Gal. 3. 28. but all are one in Christ Iesus and ^d in euery nation ^d Act. 10. 35. (and of euery sort of men) he that feareth God and worketh righteousnesse is accepted with him. This is the true and proper effect and meaning of that place, neither can it without wresting and violence be expounded of Eunuchs in that sence as S. Austin speaketh of the And whereas S. Austin so taketh the words as that God shuld giue to these Eunuchs a better name then to the sonnes & daughters, which to expresse M. Bishop translateth very fallly and corruptly a better name then if they had bene called sonnes and daughters, as making the names of sons and daughters an inferior name to that that should be giuen to Eunuchs, it is altogether improbable and vnlikely which he conceiueth. The name of sons and daughters is the common name of all the faithfull, and not a name of meaner quality belonging onely to some inferiour sort. Thus saith God concerning all his people: ^e Come out from amongst them, and separate your selues ^e 2. Cor. 6. 17. and touch no vncleane thing, saith the Lord, and I will receiue you and I will be a father vnto you, and ye shall bee my sonnes and daughters, saith

saith the Lord' almightie. S. Austine then might not say, that the Eunuches should receiue a better name then the name of sonnes and daughters, because the highest honour that God giueth to thē who touch no vncleane thing, is to receiue them for sonnes and daughters. Therefore Cl. mens Alexandrinus not vnderstanding the words of any speciall place about the sonnes and daughters, but of a preheminance about them, who for not doing the things there specified, are reiected from being sonnes and daughters, saith;^t If the Eunuch obey the word, and keepe the Sabboths by abstaining from sinne, and fulfill the commandments, he shall be more honorable then they who without ordering their life and conuersation aright, are onely taught and instructed by the word. Another place S. Austine alledgeth to his purpose out of the Reuelation of S. Iohn, where hee setteth downe his vision of a Lambe standing upon mount Sion, and with him an hundred fortie and foure thousand, hauing his Fathers name written in their foreheads. Of them it is said anon after.^h These are they which are not defiled with women for they are virgins: these follow the Lambe whither soeuer he goeth; these are brought from men, being the first frutes vnto God and to the Lambe. In the applying of which place to virgins according to the flesh, wee cannot but find a great want of that circumspection and iudgement which S. Austine is wont to vse, and take him to haue bene much blinded and caried away with preiudicate and partiall affection, that could not discern his owne error therein. Surely it is no light token of vnheedinesse, that he reckoneth all to be defiled with women that are not corporally virgins. What shall we hold the Patriarkes, the Prophets, the Apostles to be defiled with women because they were married men? Would he account that a defilement which the holy Ghost pronounceth to be an undefiled bed? Again it is to be noted that these hundred fortie and foure thousand, it is said before that they were sealed of all the tribes of the children of Israel. The numbers accord, and so^l Origen referreth them both to one, and if Origen will not serue, M. Bishops maisters of m Rhemes acknowledge as much, giuing a marginall note thus: Christ and the same number of elect that were signed Chapt. 7. Now how could Austine vnderstand virgins according to the flesh amongst the tribes of Israel, amongst whom there neuer was anie such profession of virginity? Therefore as touching this place we will oppose Ambrose against Austine, who expounding the

f Clam. Alexan.
Strom. lib. 7. S.
verbo obedierit Eunuchus, et sabbata custodierit per abstinentiam a peccatis, & fecerit mandata honorabilior erit ijs qui absque recta vit a institutione solo verbo erudiantur g Reuel. 14. 1.
h Veri. 1.

i Heb. 13. 4.

k Reuel. 7. 4.

l Origen in Exo. hō.
I. Ex singula tribu bus duodecim milia
&c. qui se cum mu-lieribus non coingui-nauerunt, sed virgini-
nes permanserunt.
m Rhem. Test.
Annot Reuel.
14. 1.

the wordes of S. Paul: ¹ I haue prepared you for one husband to present you a pure virgin to Christ, saith thus: ^o He will haue them to be virgins in the faith? by reason whereof he is iealous in their behalfe of corrupters of the faith: that he may at the day of iudgement present them undefiled vnto Christ the Iudge. Hence it is that wee read in the Reuelation of S. Iohn, These are they that haue not defiled themselves with women, for they are virgins, &c. By women he signifieth error, because error began by the woman, euen as he nameth the woman Iezabel (chap. 2. 20) because of Abahs wife, who in zeale of Baal slue the Prophets of the Lord: whereas hee meaneth idolatrie wherewith the manners of men and true faith are corrupted. For if we vnderstand women of women indeede, so that therefore we thinke them to be called virgins, because they kept their bodies vntouched, we exclude the Saints from this glorie, because all the Apostles except Paul and Iohn had wives. Thus S. Ambrose exprely and by good reason reiecteth that exposition of S. Austine, and sheweth that virginity in that place is not corporally to be vnderstood, but spiritually, of being free from the corruption of heresie & idolatrie, the entilements whereof are like the entilements and allurements of harlots, in which respect the city of antichrist is called The whore of Babylon with whom the kings and nations of the earth commit whoredome and fornication, and therefore they that hearken to such entilements, and breake their faith to God, they are sayd to be defiled with women, according to the phrase that Moses often vseth of going a whoring after other Gods. As on the other side * by syncretitie of faith and puritie of conuersation, the soule (saith Origen) is approved for a virgin and uncorrupt. So the author of the Commentaries vpon the Reuelation which go vnder S. Austins name, expoundeth the name of Virgins in the same place to import not such onely as are chaste in body, but rather or specially euery Church which keepeth or holdeth pure faith, not polluted with the adulterous commixtion of heretikes, nor unhappily continuing to the end without repentance in the dangerously flattering and deadly pleasures of this world, and citeth the place before mentioned to the Corinthians for declaration thereof. Thus we dissent then frō Austine as touching the application of those places of Scripture which he alledgeth to his purpose, & the Reader

n 2. Cor. 11. 2.
cap. 11. Virgines
vult eas esse in fide, vnde & cor-
ruptores fidei ze-
latur ab huius indiudicij incon-
taminatos eos
assignet iudicij christo Hinc est vnde
in Apocalypsi loannulegitur, Hi
sunt inquit. qui cum mulieribus
non sunt conquina-
ti: virgines enim permanferunt. Hi sequuntur agnum quocumq; iterit. In mulieribus errorem significauit quia
error per mulierem
cepit, sicut & Ie-
zabel mulierem
dicit propter ux-orem Achab qua
zelo Baal Dei Pro-
phetas occidit.
Hinc intelligitur
idolatria qua corrumpunt mores & fides veritas.
Nam si mulieres
mulieres intelligit, vt idio putet vir-
gines dicit quia corporis suam incorporata seruauerit excludit ab hac gloria sanctorum, quia omnes Apostoli ex-
cepti Ioanne & Paulo uxores
habuerunt
p Rea. 17 l. 2.
q. euit. 20. 5.
* Origen in Levit.
1. c. 1. Anima
fidei simplicitate & puritate abluam incorrupta probatur
& virgo.
1. Arg. in Apoc. 11.
1. Virgines hoc

loco non solum corpore castos intelligamus, sed maximè omnem Ecclesiam qua fidem puram tenet, sicut dicit Apostolus Respondiui vos, &c. nulla haraticorum adulterina commixtione pollutam, nec in mai' blandu & mortifero huius mundi voluptatibus vsque ad exitum vita sua absq; remedio patientia infelici perseverantia colligaram.

may perceiue, that it is not without cause that we so doe. Another thing wherein we cannot accord with him is, that he assigneth vnto virgines a speciall glory peculiar to themselues, and eminent aboue all others, which vnder correction of so learned a father, wee hold to be a very fabulous and vaine conceipt. For although virginie and single life doe yeeld the oportunitie of greater rewarde by giuing libertie of greater worke, yet it followeth not, that they haue any thing so appropriated vnto thē, but that in married estate they that doe the like worke may rest in expectation of the like rewarde. The portion of all that are of the faith, is to bee blessed with faithfull Abraham, ^r to be caried by the Angels into Abrahams bosome, ^u to sitte downe with Abraham, and Isaac, and Iacob in the kingdome of God. Abraham, and Isaac, and Iacob were married men, and therefore virgins shall haue their place all one with those that haue beene married. Our Sauour Christ told his Apostles, who all saue Iohn were married, that ^x they should sit vpon twelue seates to iudge the twelue tribes of Israell. He gaue them seates indifferently: he gaue not Iohn a speciall seate higher then all the reste, and shall wee thinke that other virgins shall haue seates aboue all them? They are mentioned as hauing ^y their names written alike vpon the twelue foundations of the Church, and shall we say, that one of their names was written in letters of gold, and all the rest with inke. Moses a married manne, and Elias a virgin ^z appeared with Christ not in any diuerse, but both in the same glory. Therefore Ignatius a virgin also saith of himselfe, ^a I wish being found worthy of God, to be found in Gods kingdome at the feete of them that were married, as of Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, Ioseph, Esay and the other Prophets, as of Peter and Paule (marke that hee reckoneth Paul for a married man) and the other Apostles who were married men. In a word, it was but S. Austins too great opinion of virginie in the flesh, that made him without any good groundes to entertaine that conceipt of some different and speciall glory in name thereof to be assigned vnto virgins. Truth saith, the Wisdome of God saith, that they who of religious purpose do forbear marriage, and vse the gift of continencie, doe make themselues chaste for the kingdom of heauen, but truth doth not say, neither doth the wisdome of God say, that in name of virginie or continency they haue greater reward then others, but only as they vse the same more earnestly to seeke the kingdome of heauen, which if the married do alike

f Gal. 3. 9.
t Luk. 16. 2.
u Mar. 3. 11.

x Mar. 19. 28.

y Reu 21. 14.

z Iuk. 7. 31.

a Ignat. ad Philadelph. Opto dignum Deo inuentum ad vestigia eorum (qui nuptijs operam dederunt) in regno inueniri: sicut Abraham, & Isaac, & Iacob, & Ioseph, & Esau & aliorum Prophetarum: sicut Petri & Pauli, & aliorum Apostolorum qui nuptijs operam dederunt.

as they, they shall haue reward alike. But saith M. Bishop, the Apostle assureth that single life is better for the seruice of God. And what? had not M. Perkins said so much to him, & do not we say the same? but we adde, that it is better and more commodious where the gifte of continencie is, but where the gift of continencie is not, there marriage is much better for the seruice of God. Againe we say, it is most commonly, not alwayes so, for^b marriage (saith Chrysostome) may be so taken, as that it shall be no hinderance to perfect life: euen as the Ecclesiasticall historie saith of Spiridion a bishop, that^c he had wife and children, and was thereby no whit the worse about things pertaining to God. As for the words which he citeth out of the booke of Wisdome beside that they are no canonical Scripture they make nothing for him. They are an allusion to the words of Esay, & onely signifie that to the Eunuch that worketh righteousnes, shall be giuen that excellent gift that belongeth vnto faith, & a portiō or state in the Lordes temple, which is a thing acceptable and blessed aboue all things and that^d one thing about all things to bee desired, but as touching comparison of portions in the house of God, it intendeth nothing.

^b Chrysost. in 1. Tim. hom. 10. Ita assum. possunt nup. ita et perfectioris et in impedimento non sint.
^c Sozomen. li. 1. cap. 11. Vxorem habebat, & liberos, non tamen propter ea res diuinas negligensius obijt.
 Αλλ' ου παρὰ τούτο τὰ θεῖα χεῖρας, d. Dial. 27. 4.

14. W. BISHOP.

Secondly, all the Protestants doctrine for marriage, & against vowes, is notably confuted by S. Paul, * where he saith: That there were then certaine widowes, who when they waxed wanton against Christe, would marrie, hauing damnation (saith he) because they made void and cast away their first faith: which was as S. Augustin * and the rest of the Fathers expound it, they had vowed continencie, but would not performe it.

* 1. Tim. 5.

* De sanct. vir. cap. 23.

Now these young widowes (if the Protestants doctrine were true) not hauing the gift of continencie, did very well to marry, and were in no sort bound to keepe their vowes, which was not in their power: but the Apostle dooth not acquit them of their vowe, but teacheth that they were bound to keepe it in that hee pronounceth damnation to them if they marrie.

R. ABBOT.

To all that is here said I haue fully answered before in the 7. Sectiō. The Protestants indeed say, and they make it good, that those yong widowes.

widowes not hauing the gift of continencie, did well to marry, and were by the Apostle willed to marrie, lest haply any of them should by waxing wanton against Christ, fall into the like damnation as some other had done. An impious and deuillish tyrannie it is, when any haue vowed rashly that that is not in their power, to tye them to their vow, and so to cause them by filthie lust and vncleannesse to runne into damnation, who by repentance of their vnaduised rashnesse, and vsing the remedy ordained by God, should keepe themselues in purenesse and peace of conscience to saluation

II. W. BISHOP.

Thirdly, the example of our heauenly Saviour, who would neuer marrie: and of the blessed Virgin Saint Mary, who vowed perpetuall virginity: and of the glorious Apostles, who as S. Hierome witnesseth were in part virgins: and all after their following of Christe, abstained from the company of their wines. And of the best Christians in the purest antiquitie, who, as Iustinus one of the auncientest Greeke Authors among Christians: and Tertullian his peere among the Latines, doe testify, did liue perpetuall virgins.

Out of these examples, we frame this argument.

Our Captaines and ring-leaders, who knew well which was the best way, and whose examples wee are to follow as neare as wee canne, vowing Virginity, we must needes esteeme that state for more perfect specially, when as the single man careth onely howe to please God, and to bee holy in body and mind (as the Apostle writes) when as the married are choaked with cares of this world. And vnlesse a man had made a league with hell, or were as blind as a beetle, how can he euer perswade himselfe, that to wallow in fleshly pleasure, and satisfying of the beastly appetites, is as gratefull to God, as to conquer and subdue them by fasting & Prayer?

Finally, if S. Paule giue counsell to the married, to containe during the time of Prayer Priests and religious (that must alwayes be in a readinesse to minister the Sacraments, and to thinke vpon such thinges as belong vnto our Lord) are therefore vpon a great consideration bound to perpetuall chastitie;*

* Aug. cap. 44.

de virg.

Bed. I. Luc.

* Clem. Alex.

lib. 3. Strom. lib. 1

contra Iouin.

In Apol. 1. ad

Aut.

Tertul. apol. 1.

cap. 9.

* I. Cor. 7.

R. ABBOT.

To the first of these instances Clemens Alexandrinus answered long since, when by hereticke it was vsed as M. Bishop now vseth it against mariage, ^a These glorious braggers (saith hee concerning those hereticke) tell us that they follow the Lord who married no wife nor possessed any thing in the world. He answereth: They know not the cause why Christ married not. First hee was to haue the Church to be his proper spouse. Secondly, he was no common man that he should neede a helper according to the flesh. Again, it was not needfull for him to beget children who abideth himselfe for euer, and is borne the onely Sonne of God. If M. Bishops wits had not greatly failed him, he would not haue brought the name of our Saviour Christ into this questiō. We know that the incarnation of the Son of God was a matter of diuine dispensation, and directed to speciall and certaine ends & vses and the mariage of a wife came not within any compasse thereof. Yet he would honour mariage by vouchsafing to be borne in married estate, by chusing his Apostles almost all married men, by being present at a mariage, and gracing the same with a speciall miracle, by affirming the coniunction of mariage to be of God, and the bond thereof to be inuiolable. His second instance is of the Virgin Mary, who he saith vowed perpetuall virginity: but that is false, neither is there any ground or any probabilitie that shee did so. He alledgeth S. Austin for prooffe therof, but S. Austins name is not sufficient, vnlesse we haue some what else to build vpon. The Angell declared vnto Mary, that Christ should be borne of her: she asketh, ^b How shall this be seeing I knew not a man? This he saith imported, that she had vowed virginity, ^c because she would not haue asked how she being a woman should bring forth a sonne being promised vnto her, if she had intended by mariage to haue company with Ioseph. But S. Austin here preiudicateth himselfe, in that he acknowledgeth, that ^d the manner or customs of the Iewes did not then beare this vow: which being true, how should wee thinke that she should before hand grow into the opinion or concept of such a vow. Again, how improbable is it, that hauing vowed virginity, she would betroth her selfe in mariage when as amongst that people it was accounted a matter of so great reproch to faithfull women, to die without issue, which a Clem Alexan, Strom lib. 3. Dicitur gloriosi istriacato- retis Dominum imitari, qui neque uxorem duxit, &c. Nesciunt causam cur Dominus uxorem non duxerit. Primum quidem sponsam habuit Eclesia. Deinde verò nec homo eras communit vs opus haberet etiam adiu- tore aliquo secun- dum carnem. Ne- que erat ei necesse procreare filios qui manet in aeternum, & natus est solus Dei filius.

*b Luk. 1. 34.
c Aug. de sancti. Virg. cap. 4. Non quisisset promissio- nis filium, quomo- do sanctissima pariu- ra esset si concubi- tura nupsisset.
d Ibid. Hoc Israe- litarum more: ad hoc recusabant*

e 1. Cor. 7. 4.

she knew not then should in virginitie befall her? Moreover, how vnlikely is it, that hauing vowed virginitie shee would put her selfe vnder ^e the power of a husband, vnlesse it could be proued, which cā not, that Ioseph had vowed continency as well as shee? Surely it cannot be doubted; but that in sooth and simplicity at the first they intended their marriage according to the vial manner of other faithfull and godly persons. As for the reason that S. Austin: giueth it is vn sufficient, because there might bee cause of asking that question without any intendement of such a vow, Thereof let M. Bishop be informed by S. Ambrose, who maketh this the cause, The Prophet saith. Take vnto thee a signe: Behould a virgin shall conceiue, and shall bring forth a child. This Mary had read, and therefore shee beleued that it should come to passe, but how it should be she had not read For to so great a Prophet it was not reueiled how it should be. Mary the knew wel that she was not to conceiue him of whom the Angell spake by the knowledg of man, and therefore asketh how it should be otherwise, seeing it should not be that way? but as touching vowing virginitie there is nothing here meant. M. Bishops third example is of the Apostles, of which he saith, part were virgins: but knowing well that that part was a very small part, for there are none of them said to haue bene virgins, but onely Paul and Iohn. And yet concerning Paul albeit some say, that he was neuer married, as a I lleadged before out of Ambrose, yet some of the more auncient affirme, that he was married, as namely we haue seene Ignatius, & before reckoning him amongst married men. So doth also Clemens Alexandrinus say that Paul is not abashed in one of his Epistles to speake to his wife, which he did not lead about with him, because he needed not much to be ministred vnto. The words which hee meaneth are to the Philippians, I beseech thee faithfull yoke-fellow helpe those women which laboured with me in the Gospell. It is true, that in respect of that power that he had of himselfe for containing, he saith I would that all men were euen as I my selfe am, but these authors (as wee see) haue holden that for no necessary prooffe, but that Paul might bee married also as the rest were. Yea but all of them (saith M. Bishop) after their following of Christ abstained from the company of their wiues. But that is more then Master Bishop can prooue, yea Clemens Alexandrinus against those Heretickes before mentioned condemning marriage, asketh thus: Do they also reiect the Apostles? For Peter and Philip

f. Ambrosii Luc. 1.
Accipe inquit signum tibi, Ecce virgo in utero, &c. Leogerat hoc Maria, ideo credidit futurum sed quomodo fieret ante non legerat. Non enim quemadmodum fieret vel tanto Prophetia fuerat reuelatum.

g. Sed. 13.

h. Clem. Alexan. Strom. lib. 3, Paulus certe non veretur in quadam Epistola suam appellare coniugem. quam non circumferebat quod non magno ei opus esset ministrare.
i. Phil. 4. 3.
k. 1. Cor. 7. 7.
l. Clem. Alex. ut supra. An etiam Apostolos reprobat: Petrus enim et Philippus filios procreauerunt Philippus autem filius quoque suus virum caecidit.

begat

begat children, and Philip bestowed his daughters to husbands. And this of Peter is confirmed by the legend of the Romane Church, which amongst many notable lyes & counterfeit stories lighted no doubt vpon some truth. The Legend recordeth that Peter had a daughter named from his owne name giuen him in his Apostleship, Petronella, which in the time of the persecution by Domitian the Emperour, was much desired by Flaccus a noble man, and thereby appeareth to haue been then but young, whereas if she were not born after the time that Peter was an Apostle, shee must needs be about threescore yeares old, it beeing no lesse from the time that Peter was called, to the time of that persecution. And to giue the more likelihood hereof, wee find it certaine that Peter led his wife with him from place to place where he preached, as did also other of the Apostles, whereof the Apostle S. Paul (speaketh manifestly: ^m Hanc m I. Cor. 9. 5. we not power to leade about a sister being a wife, as well as the rest of the Apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord and Cephas? M, Bishop will say he meant it not of wiues, but of other deuout women: as though it were not more likely, that the Apostles hauing wiues should leade about their owne wiues rather then strange women. Yea and the words of the Apostle conuict it so to bee vnderstoode, who would not be absurd in speech, to say a sister being a woman, and therefore must needs be taken to say a sister being a wife: & therefore they that take it otherwise are faine to falsifie & misplace the Apostles words as the vulgar Latin doth. And whereas they are wont to say that those deuout women should go about with the apostles to minister vnto them of their substance, as some did to our Sauior Christ, it can not be the meaning of the Apostle heere, because he speaketh heere of a power whereby he might burden the Church with himselfe and his: but the going about of such women with them had bin the disburdening of the Church. Yea & such women should haue bin sayd to haue followed them, not to be led about by thē, neither would the Apostle haue spoken singly as of one, because it could not but haue caused suspitio & obloquy, to go one with one, saue only with their owne wiues. And thus Clemens Alexandrinus in the place before cited vnderstandeth it of the Apostles wiues, & sheweth the cause why the apostles tooke them with them, ^m to minister to women which kept the houses, & that by them the doctrine of the Lord without reproese or euill suspition might enter into the closets of women. This was the speciall

n Clem. Strom,
lib. 3. Ministratio ra apud mulieres
qua domos custo-
diebant: per quas
etiam in gynaeceum
absq; reprehensione
malau suspitione
ingredi posset do-ctrina Domini

o Ibid. Non vt uxores, sed vt fratres circumducant.

p Idem Stram. l. b. 7. Cum vidisset uxorem suam diu ad mortem, & c. exhortando & consolando proprio nomine eam compellens dixit: Hec tu, memento Domini. Tale erat beatorum matrimonium & usque ad amicissimam per secula affectio. Vide Euseb. hist. lib. 3. cap. 27.

q Iust. Apol. 1.

χ πολλοί πρεσβυτεροι

καὶ πολλὰ

ἐξήχον τοῦσα

καὶ ἐβδομη

κον τοῦσα ἐ

κ παίδων

μαθητέυθη

σαν τῷ χριστῷ

ἀφθοροί θια

μένουσι. καὶ

ἐυχομαι κατα

πάν γένος ἀν

θρώπων τοίου

τους δεῖξαι.

I. Tertul. Apolo-

cap. 9. Nos ab isto

euenti diligentis-

sima & fidelissima

castitas sepit, quan-

tumcumq; a stupris

& omni post ma-

trimonium exce-

su, tantum & ab

incestis casu tui su-

mus. Quisdam mul-

ta seculares totam

uim huius erroris

uirtutina continen-

tia depellant, senes, ueneri.

cial cause of their leading the about, & in that respect Clement saith, that they led them not as wines but as sisters, not in regard that they were wiues onely, but for that they were also sisters in the faith of Christ & in the hope of the Gospell, and thereby meeete for that vse which was the thing properly intended in the leading of them. But hereby he sheweth, that certain it is, that the Apottles led their wiues about with the, & so namely the Apostle S. Peter, of whom he hath before sayd as we haue heard, that he also begat children: and when afterward his wife was put to death for the faith of Christ, he was there present, as the same Clement also testifieth in another place, & did per exhort and comfort her, and calling to her, sayd: O wife remember the Lord Iesus. Such (saith he) was the mariage of such blessed persons, and their perfect affection, euen to the greatest amitie. Now last of all M. Bishop for example nameth the best Christians in the pu- rest antiquitie living perpetuall virgins: he citeth for it Iustin Martyr and Tertullian, when he taketh it indeed from the fantastical dream of his owne idle head. Of the best Christians neyther of them sayth a word, onely they say that some did liue virgins and vnmarrid amongst them, to shew how far they were frō the fornications & incests, which were vsually practised amongst the Pagans. Iustin hauing said, that by the doctrine of Christ he that locketh upon a woman to lust after her, hath committed adulterie with her in his heart, & that not onely the committing of adulterie, but also the will and desire thereof maketh a man reiected of him, interreth these words: Surely many with vs both men and women of threescore or seuentie yeares, who from their childhood haue learned the doctrine of Christ, doe continue uncorrupt. and I glory that in all sorts of our men I can shew such: The Translator to uncorrupt, hath added cælibes, vnmarrid, but there is no reason by the words of Iustin to vnderstād any thing else, but that they kept themselues uncorrupt frō fornication & vncleannes, which it was hard to find, that any amongst the Pagans to such yeares had done. But yet of that I will not contend: onely I say, that taking the words of vnmarrid persons, here is nothing sayde that eyther they were the best, or better then any other. No more is ther in the words of Tertullian, who taxing the fornications & incestuous filthines of the Pagans, saith: Most diligent & faithful chastity hath hedged vs in frō such euent, & as far as we are frō fornication, & al excesse beyōd marriage, so far are we from the case of incest. Iea some both old & yong doe

put away the whole force of this error by continencie of virginitie. Now what is there here whereupon M. Bishop should say, that the best Christians liued in perpetuall Virginitie? But wee must not stand vpon such matters: either wee must giue him leaue to doe thus, or else hee must write no more. Well wee see now that his examples are farre from seruing his turne, and therefore in steade of his blind argument gathered of selfe conceipts, we will argue thus: that seeing none of our captains and ring-leaders whom God hath set before vs as exāples to be followed, haue giuen vs any example of the vow of virginity, therefore we must condemne it as a blind, a wilfull, and superstitious vow. Nay we will argue further: Abrahams our Father, in the steps of whose faith we are to walke, & into whose bosome wee shall bee gathered, was a married man, not once onely, but twise married. So were the rest of the Patriarchs married men; and so the Priests, the Prophets, the Apostles, and almost all that the Scripture setteth before vs as examples of perfection. Therefore they are lewd hypocrites & no true teachers, that beare vs in hand that Christian perfection cannot stand with mariage. Yea but the single man saith M. Bishop, careth onely how to please God, and to be holy in body and mind, as the Apostle writes, when as the married are choaked with the cares of this world. But the Apostle onely telleth vs what may be by the condition of single life, and the right vse thereof not what alwaies and necessarily is. For wee know that the married many times lesse careth for the things of the world then the vnmarried, and the vnmarried many times lesse careth to please God then the married doth. What, did M. Bishop and his fellowes care onely how to please God in that heate of spirit, whereby they were caried against the Iesuites? or do the Iesuits, yea their Popes and Cardinals and Bishops, care onely to please God? Good men, they haue all quite giuen ouer the world, and they breath nothing but only heauen. A man may wonder at the impudency of this man, who doubteth not to speake so contrarie to his own knowledge both in himselfe and the rest of them. It is true, that single life hath ordinarily more oportunitie and liberty to the seruice of God then mariage, which is the thing that the Apostle meaneth, but seldome it is so vsed or neuer, but that mariage in some attaineth, to as great holines and perfection as single life. But M. B. in great anger goeth forward ward saying: Wlesse a man had made a league with hell, or were as blind as a beetle, how can he euer perswade himselfe, that to wallow in fleshy pleasure, and satisfying of the beastly appetites is as gratefull to God as to conquer and subdue them by fasting and prayer. Where we see a beastly filth out of a prophane mouth and stinking breath, so speake of sacred & holy matrimony, as if there were nothing therin but wallowing in fleshy pleasure, and satisfying of beastly appetites. What, is it a matter of sacrament with the to wallow in fleshy pleasure and satisfying of beastly appetites? Doth he teach their married Catholike disciples that they wallow in fleshy pleasure, and satisfying of beastly appetites? Surely the auncient Church of Rome held the moderation of lusts (by marriage) to be chastity, as Tertullian in behalfe of Montanus vpbraideth them, and Paphnutius informed the Council of Nice & they receiued it, that the^m company of a man with his owne wife is chastitie, & what then shal we thinke of a filthy carion, that accounteth nothing to be in marriage but wallowing in fleshy pleasure, & satisfying of beastly appetites, thereby blaspheming the sacred institution of God, & traducing all those holy men of God of whome before was spoken, that liued in married state. Now further hee telleth vs that S. Paul giueth counsell to the married, to containe during the time of prayer where I leaue it to thee, gentle Reader, to esteeme whether the man were sober in so reciting the words of the Apostle, S. Paule saith:

Defraud not one another except it be with consent for a time, that ye may attend to fasting & prayer. Which words haue manifest referēce to extraordinary occasions of humbling our selues to God, and of testifying vnto him the griefe and sorrow of our hearts, by depriving our selues of the vse of all those things whereof wee take any ioy or delight according to the flesh, or to any speciall occasions of gathering our spirits and soules more nearely vnto God, whereby it concerneth vs to depart, as I may say so much the further from our selues. In this sort God when he was to giue the law to prepare the people to due reuerence and attention, commanded them three daies before to be sanctified, to wash their clothes, and not to come at their wines. Another time being greatly offended with them, hee commandeth them to lay aside their cesty raiment, that they might shew the sorrow of their hearts by a neglect and carelesnes of the attiring of their bodies, And thus we know, that fasting in such cases is vsually adioyned to prayer, that the afflicting of the body may sharpen *Tertul. de pud.

Eousq; iam exo
leuis ut moderatio
libidinum pudici
tia credatur.
in Socras hist. lib.
I. cap. 8. Viri cum legitima uxore com
ambitum castimo
niam appellauit,*

1. Cor. 7. 5.

Exod. 19. 15.

p Cap. 33. 5.

sharpen and giue edge to the affection of the soule. Vpon such occasions the Apostle permitteth some withdrawing of the husbande from the wife, but yet with this exception, that it bee by consent and but onely for a time, and then come together againe, saith he, that Sabbath tempt you not for your incontinencie. Where when he requireth consent, he giueth to vnderstand, that where there is necessitie of fasting & prayer, and yet consent of defrauding cannot be obtained, their fasting and prayer is to be vsed without defrauding, because defrauding may not be without consenting. Now these wordes belonging to speciall occasions, and beeing only conditionall, the Romish hypocrites will haue to concerne all times, and to be absolutely so meant, as if ordinarily there could be no prayer where there is the companie of man and wife. As if the Apostle would say, Let the husband giue to the wife due beneuolence, and likewise the wife to the husband, and yet tell them withall, that if they doe so they cannot pray. But the Apostle S. Peter in this and all other respectes willethe husbands to dwell with their wiues as men of knowledge, giuing honor to the wife as to the weaker vessell, that (saith he) your prayers be not interrupted. So farre was he from thinking the societie of the faithfull husband and wife to be the interrupting of their prayers, as that hee instructeth carefully to preferue it, that their prayers may not be interrupted. And who doubteth but that those lesions of holy Scriptures whereby we are taught to pray alwayes, and not to waxe weary, 1. 1. Pet. 3. 7. to pray continually, to pray euery where, do concerne the married as well as the vnmarried, and therefore do import that marriage hindreth not but that we may so do. Surely it concerneth the holy men of God to pray as much as it concerneth vs, euen the Patriarchs and Prophets, and other iust and righteous men, neither can we doubt but that righteously and holily they performed that deuotion vnto God, and yet they liued in mariage, and their wiues were partakers with them in this godly seruice. Now is it come to passe, that mariage is a blot and hinderance to our prayers, seeing it was none to others? or if mariage be no bar against the prayers and deuotions of other faithfull people, what ayle Priests and religious persons, that they cannot pray & performe other seruice to God if they bee married? Vntill the time of Salomon who first ordered the attendance of the Priests by turnes, the high Priest of the Iewes whō it concerned to be most pure & holy of any creature vnder heauen, yet in married estate, u Exod. 28. 36.

x Clem. Strom.
lib. 2. Apostoli
epistola cum de matrimonio &
liberorum pro-
creatione innumerabilia precepta con-
tineant nusquam
honestum modera-
tumq; matrimoni-
um prohibuerunt, sed legum Euan-
gelio seruantes conuenientiam
utrumq; admittunt
&c.

estate & performing the offices therof presented himself daily vnto God, bearing the figure and person of Iesus Christ our high Prieste the Sonne of God, and wearing a frontlet wherein it was engrauen, "Holinesse to the Lord. Moreouer, after the deuiding of their courses, it is not found that euer the Priests in the time of their ministration were forbidden the company of their wiues. What then is it but superstitious hypocrisie, that maketh Romish Priestes to say they cannot holily doe their seruice vnto God, if they bee married as they were? It is well obserued by Clemens Alexandrinus that * the Apostles Epistles though giuing innumerable precepts of marriage, and procreation of children, and governing the house, yet doe no where forbid or abrogate honest and modest marriage, but keeping an accord betwixt the law and the Gospell, doe admit both of the married and the unmarried. Now if there be an accord to bee kept in this behalfe betwixt the lawe and the Gospell, and that the Apostle did keepe, then it is manifest that he determined not marriage to bee any hinderance to sacred ministrations in the gospell, because in the law it was not so. In a word, both Priestes and religious, if they haue not the gift of continencie, are by marriage to bee fitted to the seruice of God, which in the pollutions of incontinencie they cannot doe as they ought to doe. Master Bishop saith, they are bound to chastitie, but that is not true. They are bound from marriage, but to chastitie they cannot be bound. If they haue not the gift of continencie, they cannot be chaste, but are polluted and defiled both in body and soule, with vnchaste and lewd affections. But such pollution and vncleanesse is no let with them to the seruice of God, onely marriage is a let: polluted and defiled let them be, but married they may not bee.

16. W. BISHOP.

We will close up this point with some sentences taken out of the ancient Fathers, in prayse of Virginitie, which M. P. in all this question vouchsafeth scarce once to name, as though Virgins and Virginitie were no English words, or not as plaine as continencie.

S. Cyprian, De habitu Virginum, intitleth Virgins to bee the most noble and glorious persons of Christs flocke: and addeth, that they shall receiue of God the highest reward and greatest recompence.

S. Chry-

S. Chrylostome * citeth, Virginitie to be the top of perfection, and the highest tippe of vertue.

* Lib 3. cont.
vitup. vit. necess.

And Athanasius, De Virginitate, in the ende bursteth out into these wordes: O Virginitie, a treasure that wasteth not, a gurland that withereth not: the Temple of God, the Pallace of the holy Ghost, a precious stone, whose price is not knowne to the vulgar, the ioy of the Prophets, the glorie of the Apostles, the life of Angels, the Crowne of Saints.

S. Ambrose Lib. 1. de Virginitate paulò post init. Virginitie is a principall vertue, and not therefore commendable that it is found in Martyrs, but because it maketh Martyrs: Who can with humane wit comprehend it, which nature doth not hold within her lawes? it hath fetched out of heauen that it might imitate on earth: neither vnfitly hath it sought a manner of life in heauen, which hath found a spouse for her in heauen.

This surmounting the clouds, the starres and Angels hath found the worde of God in the bosome of his father, &c. See who list to read more to this purpose the rest of the Fathers in their workes of Virginitie: of which most of them haue written. And S. Ierome, who is behind none of the rest in his bookes against Iouinian and Heluidius, all which doe most diligently exhort to vow virginitie, do teach how to keepe it, and most vehemently inuicigh against all them that doe breake it. And if any bee so mad as to credit rather our fleshy ministers, then all that honorable and holy Senate of the auncient Fathers, he deserueth to liue and die in perpetuall darknesse.

In this matter I haue stayed somewhat longer, because our carnall teachers, with the lewd example of their dissolute Disciples, haue corrupted our age with fleshy and beastly liberty: In the other points, I will recompence it with breuity.

R. ABBOT.

M. Perkins rather nameth continency then virginitie, because virginitie noteth properly the state of the body, but continencie is the vertue of the minde, which gouerneth and preferueth the integritie of the body. As for those great commendations which the fathers by him mentioned, and other of them do giue to virginitie, we.

we so much the lesse respect them, by how much the more the same fathers haue made it appeare vnto vs, as before we haue leene, that those commendations were but snares and aduantages taken and vsed by Sathan for the intangling of many thousand soules to sin, & to their owne damnation. Their immoderate and excessiue opinion and extolling thereof, drew many thousands to vndertake the profession of single life, who when they neyther could performe what they had vndertaken, nor might without reproch and infamy leaue their course, were content euen to cast themselues into the deuils mouth, and by practise of lewd and vncleane life, to worke their owne confusion and otherthrow. Albeit we would aske M. Bishop what it is, for which they commended virginie in so high measure and degree? If they respected the integritie of the flesh, what was it more then was to be found amongst heathen idolaters, as in the vestall virgins and others, or then is nowe to bee found amongst the Turkes? If hee will say that they respected it as dedicated to God, why should they make that a seruice to God, wherein they that knew not God, might glory as well as they, and wherein for it selfe there was nothing that concerneth the seruice of God? If hee will say that they conceiued it not as in it selfe to be a seruice of God, but onely regarded the imploying of it to those thinges whereby God is serued, they meant nothing against vs, because we also conceiue the power of virginie to be an excellent gift, and worthy to bee admired and honoured, where according to the freedome and libertie that it giueth, it is faithfully bestowed to the seruice of Iesus Christe. An excellent gift I say, as the gift of learning, the gift of eloquence, the gift of tongues & such like, which may be in the euill as well as in the good, & therefore are no otherwise acceptable to God, but only in their vse. Nowe as excellent gifts are very seldome and rare, so is it in this: many may be willing, but few attaine vnto it: and therefore it was the great ouersight of many of the Fathers, so promiscuously to entertaine multitudes, and by such bonds to tie them to that kinde of life, whereto so many were vnable, and whereof they found that to be true which Hierome confesseth, that^b it was in very many to begin, but in fewe to perseuere. As touching their sayings which M. Bishop alledgeth, they neede not much to bee stood vpon. If they speake of virginie in the two former sorts nowe mentioned, they

^b Hieron. adu.
Tom. lib. I. Incipit
de plurimorum est,
perseuerare paucos vltimo.

they fall of themselves. In the last meaning I answer, let virgins be according to the patterne which they describe, that there be in them no desires of the flesh and of the body, and there remaine in them onely the things of vertue and of the spirit for the receiuing of heavenly glory, and wee will honour them as the more excellent portion of the Lords flock, and the top of Christian perfection, not for their virginity but for their piety, whereof notwithstanding they haue the better opportunity by virginity; and only so as that if married persons shall equall them in piety, they shall stand as high as they. The saying of Athanasius as he alleadgeth it is a counterfeit, neither was Athanasius the Author of any so base a worke. The words here cited do shew the singular vndiscretion both of the Author that wrote them, & M. Bishop that cited them, in that he calleth virginitie the toy of the Prophets, and the glory of the Apostles, when in a manner all, both the Prophets & Apostles were married men and not virgins; and the life of Angels, when it is a thing nothing concerning Angels. These are but flourishes of vaine wits, which respect not how substantiall, but how glorious their words be. And to such Rhetoricall amplifications, Ambrose as touching that matter of virginitie is too much affected, and appropriateth those things to the deuotion of virgins, which nothing hindereth, but that they should be common to the faith and deuotion of married estate. He so speaketh as, if heavenly life were onely to bee found in virgins, whereas in married persons the Scripture setteth before vs the speciall examples and patternes thereof. As for Hierome, he needeth no censure of ours, being of old sufficiently censured by the Church of Rome, as before hath bene shewed. Wee reuerence his learning, but yet wee cannot but acknowledge in him some want both of modestie and pietie, where in a proposterous humour of extolling virginitie, hee speaketh basely and rudely concerning marriage, and doubteth not to transcribe into his workes those sentences and arguments, which Tertullian in his heresie vsed to the same purpose against the Church, as to him that compareth his epistle ad Gerontiam de Monogamia, and first booke against Iovinian to Tertullians booke de Monogamia, will easily appeare. To be short, all the exhortations & rules that they could vse for the keeping of virginity, could not auaille, but that the stinke thereof hath alwaies.

Cyprian. de hab. virg. Quibus desideriam carnem & corporis nulla sunt. Solam vobis quae sunt virtutis & spiritus ad gloriam remanserunt.

alwaies bene lothsome to the world. They set bankes against a streame that could not be staied, and thereby caused a deluge and ouerflowing of great vncleannesse, Which if Chryostome saw to be such, as that he held it better there should be no more virgins, as before was shewed, what shall wee but take them wilfully to dwell in darknesse, who after so much further experience, continue to maintaine that damnable vow, which all Christian ages from the time that it first began, haue had cause to rue. As for the ministers they liue in chaste and lawfull marriage, as the Prophets & Apostles haue done, and can for that bee no more accounted carnall and fleshly then they were, yea and they think that the wals of the stewes and Surgeons instruments beyond the seas, and the confession closets of many female Recusants at home will beare witnesse at that day that they haue not bene so carnall and fleshly as Romish Priests.

I7 W. BISHOP,

Concerning the vow of pouertie and monasticall life, in which, as M. Perkins acknowledgeth, men bestow all they haue upon the poore, and giue themselues to Prayer and Fasting: yet hee is not ashamed to a- uouch that this vow is against the will of God, and assayeth to prooue it: Acts cap. 20. verse. 35. It is a more blessed thing to giue, than to receiue.

Answer As the very proposition (that it is displeasing to God to cut off all cares of the world, and to betake our selues wholly to his holy seruice and contemplation of heauenly matters) is in it selfe prophane and ungodly, so the prooffe thereof is denoid of naturall wit and sence. Marke the Argument: It is against Gods will to giue away all, because it is more blessed to giue than to receiue: Why, if it be a more blessed thing to giue; then they please God better that giue. So that this his prooffe, improoues flatly his owne assertion: But the dreamer meanes perhaps that if you giue all at once, you shall not be able to giue afterward, but rather stand in neede to receiue, Reply. But no such humane prudence can be drawne out of that sence, which encourageth rather to giue for the present, then to provide for hereafter.

The true meaning of the place, is to exhort Christians to labour and trouaile

travaile, at vacant times to get their owne living, and to provide something also to bestow upon them who stand in neede rather then to be idle, and to stand in neede of almes, as S. Paul himselfe did: which they did best performe, who had sold all they had, and distributed it to the poore, as the example of Paul himselfe, and the first Christians doth sufficiently declare, who sold all, and laid the price at the Apostles feete.

• A. 4.

R. ABBOT.

He hath promised vs here to be short, and I will promise him not to be very long, because of this matter sufficient hath beene said before, in ^a answer of the epistle to the King. This vow of pouerty, as was there said, is but a branch of the heresie of the Euchites or Mesalian heretikes, who in like sort as Popish Monkes did profess ^b to renounce the world, and to depart from their goods, having any thing of their owne, nor any poss: sion upon earth, and therefore stretching forth the hand, and begging as not having nothing whereof to live, otherwise giuing themselves wholly to prayer, and ^c praying so much, saith S. Austin as might seeme incredible to them that heare of it. They caried as goodly a shew as that is that M. Bishop here alledgeth, but their renouncing of the world and praying was adiudged heretical, and so is that that he defendeth, and so much the more damnable for the superstitions and blasphemies that are added to it, as touching heavenly perfection, satisfaction for sinnes, merit of supererogation, whereby they are able to giue spirituall helpe towards the sauing of the soules of other men. He talketh of cutting of worldly cares & betaking mens selves wholly to the seruice of God, and cōtemplation of heavenly matters, but he knoweth that their vow of pouerty hath not cut off worldly cares, but hath sent their begging Friars vp & down the country, & hath set them a worke to be scraping & crauing, that they haue had smal leisure to the contemplation of heavenly matters. The cōtemplation of heavenly matters is a goodly speech, but alas it is a matter that they for the most part are little acquainted with: their rising was the fall of all learning & it was grown to a by. word, ^d More vnlearned: then a Monke, & therefore very vnfit were they for the cōtemplation of heavenly matters. In a word, it is well knowne that without the vow of pouerty, men haue more fruitfully giuen themselves to the contemplation of heavenly things, then euer they haue done in the profession of that vow. They haue lewdly abused the world, and

vnder

a Sect. 18.

b Epiph. har. 10
Videntur ut qui renunciaverunt
mundo et de pro-
prijs bonis esse-runt, &c. Non ha-
bent possessionem,
ut inquirunt, in terra. Extendunt manus & petunt velut
victu carantes &
nihil possidentes, &c Orationibus va-
cantes &c.
c Aug. de heres.
Tantum orant ut
si quod hoc de illis audiunt incredibile
videatur.

d Vide Hossin. de Orat. Monachos.
lib 6. ca. 18.

vnder pretence of pouertie, haue bestirred and busied themselues by begging, to engrosse and claspe into their handes the riches and pleasures of the world, and whilest they had nothing in proprietie, they had in communitie whereof to liue like Epicures and belly gods, and were nothing lesse then that they would seeme to be, But to come to the point. Maister Perkins against the vow of pouertie or beggerie, alledgeth the words of Christ, It is a more blessed thing to giue then to receiue. M. Bishop sayth, that this prooffe is deuoid of naturall wit and sence, and calleth him a dreamer for the alledging of it. But would not a man thinke Maister Bishop himselfe to be out of his wits, that would giue this answer, and by and by confesse that Maister Perkins cited the place in other meaning? Hee well knoweth that the vow of pouertie importeth a condition and state of life for the time to come, and implieth giuing but onely accidentally, because a man that hath something, must needes giue that away before he can be in state to haue nothing, but if hee haue nothing, hee can giue nothing, and yet that is no impeachment to his vow: The argument then standeth good, that because it is a blessing of God to bee in state to giue rather then to receiue, therefore for a man to renounce that state, wherein God hath made him able to giue, and by a vow of pouertie to bind himselfe to a state wherin he must begge and receiue of others, is wilfully to renounce the blessing of God, and witlelly to vndertake that which God threatneth to the wicked for a curse, Let his children be vagabonds and begg their bread. The words of Christ do plainly instruct vs to take such course, and to maintaine so farre as we can that condition of life, wherein we may haue to shew our charity & loue, as occasion serueth, to our brethren that stand in need. But this M. Bishop calleth humane prudence: and telleth vs that the sentence rather encourageth to giue for the present, then to provide for hereafter. The sentence indeede encourageth to giue, but it teacheth a man so to giue, as remembering alwayes, that it is a blessed thing to giue rather then to receiue, and therefore so to giue, as that still he may giue, and not wilfully to put himselfe in case to receiue onely or beg, and not to giue. And this is not to be carefull of providing for hereafter, but onely not to tempt God by carelesnes, and by wilfull vnproviding & depriuing himselfe of that which God hath provided for him whereof to do good, and to shew mercy both for the present & for hereafter.

Now

c. 20. 35

f. psal. 107. 10.

Now he that vbraided M. Perkins euen now to bee deuouide of naturall wit and sence, is himselfe here so witlesse & sencelesse, as that he seeth not his owne answer to make directly against himselfe. For if the place doth teach men to labour and travell, that they may haue to bestow vpon others that need, then surely it condemneth them who make a vow, that they neuer will haue any thing to giue to thē that stand in need. S. Paul laboured that he might haue of his owne to supply his owne necessity, and to help others. So did they, saith M. Bishop, that sold their lands, & laid the price downe at the Apostles feet So doth S. Paul teach all men. Let him that stole steal no more g Ephc. 4. 28. but let him rather labour & worke with his hands the thing that is good, that he may haue to giue vnto him that needeth. But the vow of pouerty & beggery, disableth a man for euer from being capable of any thing of his owne, whereof hee may minister to them that neede. This vow therefore is contrary to those rules and precepts which the Apostle gaue for the direction of Christian life.

18. W. BISHOP.

*The next place is, * Giue me neither riches nor pouerty.*

* Plo., o. 8.

Answer. The Prayer is good, and fitteth the persons of honest men who liue in the world, and was of some perfection too in the state of Moses law, in which it was made, as dissuading from conuentionnesse of great riches, but it commeth too short of the perfection of the Gospell, wherein we are counsell'd to esteeme as dung all worldly riches.

R. ABBOT

He blamed M. Perkins answer in the former Section, as deuoid of natural wit and sence, but I pray thee, gentle Reader, if thou light vp on him to aske him, where his wittes were when he gaue this answer To the one part he answereth, a giue me not riches, but to the other a P. o. 30. 8. Giue me not pouerty, which is the thing vrged against him hee answereth nothing. We are counsell'd in the Gospell, he saith, so esteeme as dung all worldly riches. True, & therefore we say Giue me not riches. But yet in the Gospell wee are taught to pray for that that is conuenient according to our place and condition, when we say, Giue vs this day our daily bread, and therefore we say, Giue me not pouerty, whereupon it is added; Feede mee with foode conuenient for me. The praier, saith he fitteth the persons of honest men that liue in the world. Hypocrite who taught the this distinction of praiers? Hath the spirit spirit of God set it downe as a praier of the wisest man, & is it now come to be posted ouer to I know not what honest men? It was of some perfection, he saith, in the estate of Moses law, but commeth too short of the perfection of the Gospell. Hypocrite, the Apostle hath taught vs, that^b whatsoeuer things were written before time, were written for our learning, and must we vpon the word of an idle Sophister be perswaded, that that praier is too base for vs to learn? And what were not men taught in the state of Moses law, to esteeme as dung all worldly riches? Did not David say:^c If riches increase set not your heart vpon them. Did not Solomon say of riches,^d Wilt thou cast thine eyes vpon that that is nothing? Did not Esay say,^e All flesh is grasse, and all the glory thereof as the flower of the field? Were they not as fully taught to despise the world, and to ioy in God as we are? But the man so dreameth of perfection, perfection, as that wee may very well thinke, that there is some very great imperfection in his head. In a word therefore, God hath taught a man to say, Giue me not pouerty, but they teach a man to say, I will vow pouerty, and what doe they then but teach a man to contrary that which God hath taught?

b Rom. 15.

c Psal. 62. 10.

d Prou. 23. 5.

e Isa. 40. 6.

19. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins his third reason is taken out of Deut. 28. 22. where pouerty is numbred among the curses of the law, none of which are to be vowed.

*Answer. It is one thing to be punished with pouerty for transgressing of Gods law, and another (I trow) for the loue of God to giue away all we haue to the poore: The former was acursed in the law of Moses, the latter is a blessing and the first blessing in the Gospell: * Blessed are the poore, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen: Which sentence, albeit it may be applied very well vnto humility, yet more literally signifieth voluntary pouerty, as by the sentence opposed against it is manifest. * Woe be to you rich men, &c.*

* Luc. 6.

* Ver. 23.

R. ABBOT.

The words of Moses are^a The stranger shall lend to thee, and thou shalt not haue to lend to him.^b Thou shalt serue thine enemies in hunger & thirst, and in nakednes, and in need of all things. Christ hath taught vs before, that it is a blessing to haue wherof to giue; and Moses teacheth vs that it is a curse to be in want, & not to haue wherof to led & what is thē the vow of pouerty but the renouncing of a blessing and the voluntary vndergoing of a curse? M. Bishop answereth, that a Deut. 18. 44.

b Ver. 48.

it is one thing to be punished with poverty for transgressing the law of God, another for the love of God to give all to the poore. But thē is it done for the love of God, when God calleth vs to the doing of it; otherwise it is no matter of the love of God, but of humane presumption and selfe wil. Therefore his answer here is al one, as if he should say, It is one thing for a man to be accursed of God, another thing voluntarily to lay Gods curse vpon himselfe; and how wel that serueth his turne let himselfe iudge. Yet he will proue that it is a blessing, yea the first blessing in the Gospel. And how? forsooth because Christ saith, Blessed are the poore, for theirs is the kingdom of heauē. We may see the poore man was driuē to poore shifts, when he was faine to vse this text for the making good of his vow of pouerty. If his leisure had serued him he would haue turned to the fitt of Mathew, & there haue seen our Sauour expounding himself, Blessed are the poore in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heauen. Now a man would think that M. Bishops learning should haue taught him long before this, that a man may be rich in worldly goods, and yet poore in spirit; and that vndoubtedly Abraham the father of all beleeuers was such a one. Yea saith hee, it may wel be applied to humilitie, yet more literally it signifieth voluntary pouerty. And how may that appeare? forsooth by the sentence opposed against it, it is manifest, Wo be to you rich men. But I maruel what strings M. Bishop hath to tie this argument together. Christ saith, Wo be to you rich men: therefore that which he saith before, Blessed are ye poore, must necessarily be vnderstood of volūtary pouerty. What, doth Christ absolutely meane wo to all that be rich? When he expoundeth the poore to be poore in spirit, doth he not teach vs proportionably to vnderstand the rich? This childish collection is reproued by our Sauour Christ, whē his disciples being astōished at that which he said How hardly do they that haue riches enter into the kingdom of God: he answereth Children (thereby reprouing their weakness of vnderstanding) how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God? The wo then is not to all that are rich, but to such as trust in riches; but there are men who are rich in this world who yet are not high minded, and trust not in vncertaine riches but in the liuing God. Christ hauing shewed the end of the man that trusted in riches, addeth, So is euery one that gathereth riches to himselfe, and is not rich in God. Wo be to them that are rich in this world and are not rich in God, but a man may be rich in this world, & yet

c Luke 6. 10.

d Mat. 5. 3.

e Mat. 10. 23:
f Ver. 24.

g 1. Tim 6. 17

h Luke. 12. 21.

rich in God also by acknowledging spiritually his owne pouerty in himself, and receiuing all things of Gods mercy. Seeing therefore a man may bee rich according to this worlde, and yet none of them to whom Christ saith, Wo be to rich men, surely nothing hindereth but that a man may be rich, and yet may bee one of those poore whome Christ pronounceth to be blessed, & therefore M. Bishops argument is idle, and proueth nothing lesse, then that Christs sentence is to be vnderstoode of voluntarie pouertie, so that still it remaineth good, that the vow of pouerty and beggery is the voluntarie casting away of the blessing of God, and the vndertaking of his curse.

20. W. BISHOP.

*Thus M. Perkins his texts of Scripture against pouertie failing him, he fetcheth about another way, saying that it is a rule of the holy Ghost: He that will not labour (namely in some speciall and warrantable calling) must not eate .

* 1. Theff. 3.

Ans. I allow both the text and the glosse, and find nothing there against religious persons, whose calling is speciall perfect, and therefore best warrantable; not so (saith he) because they giue the selues to prayer & fasting. What a profane superstition is this? Is not a life giuen to prayer and fasting agreeable to the wil of God and laws of his church; albeit many religious men do ouer and besides very great seruices to Gods church, in preaching, teaching and writing of most learned books. But suppose they did nothing else but fast and pray, did they not very well deserue their sustenance? yes much better then they which trauell all the yeare about the providing of it. For in vaine do men labour if God blesse not their worke with seasonable weather, which he doth rather at the prayer and instance of such good innocent soules that are to be fed with it, then for the Plough-mans owne labors sake. And if by their fasting, watching and such like affecti- ons of their bodies, they do partly satisfie for our superfluous pampering of the flesh, and teach vs by their good example to bridle and correct it: do they not deserue at our hands bodily sustenance? And who better performs all duties of the second table then they, being most obedient to all their superiours, and not hurting their neighbour in life, person, or anie manner of their goods? And so in their seuerall callings offend no honest men, and doe much good both vnto the Church and Common-wealth.

R. ABBOT.

* 2. Theff. 3. 10.

If S. Paul whē he said, He that will not labor, let him not eate, did take praying praying to be laboring, then the Messalians had as wel to answer for themselves as the begging Friers, because they tooke as great paines in praying as the begging Friers can do: yea those idle loiterers, concerning whō the Apostle speaketh, had sufficient to answer for themselves, that there was reason for them to eate because they did pray. Surely M. Bishop is a good proctor for such thriftles drones, who will be content to pray apace, & as much as the Friers do, if that may be reckoned a labor for which to require their meat. But prayer is a common duty & seruice of all callings, & not a distinct labor of any one Till M. Bishop blotted this paper, I think it was neuer read, that praier & fasting was a calling, save only in the conceit of those Euchites or Messalians, of whō I spak, albeit they indeed fasted not. But wher as M. Perkins saith, that men liuing a part, & giuing themselves onely to praier & fasting, do liue in no calling, M. Bishop because he cannot proue the contrary, beggeth it. What a profane stupiditie is this, saith he? Is not a life giuen to prayer and fasting (put in as it should be, only to prayer and fasting) agreeable to the will of God and lawes of his Church? You should not haue asked the question M. Bishop, but haue proued it so to be, because therein stood the question, which it was your stupiditie not to see. The argument propoundeth to you, that it is necessary for euery man to labor in some calling, that he may haue according to Gods ordināce wherof to eate. It alledgeth that to liue apart & to be giuen only to praier & fasting, is not to labor in a calling & do you answer al with, Is it not so? To make vp the matter, he addeth that many religious men doe ouer and beside very great seruices to Gods church; in preaching, teaching and writing of most learned books. Yee say wel M. Bishop, such mē because they labor, may iustly eate, but these matters are accidental, and their vow & religion may stand without them, and therefore the matter is not answered by them. I admit that which he saith, but there might here worthie stories be told of the preachings of their Friers of all sorts. But M. Bishop himselfe knowing that this is but impertinent, goeth on: Suppose they did nothing else but fast and pray, did they not very well deserue their sustenance? If they did nothing but fast and pray, it should bee with them according to the Apostles rule, because then they should eate nothing. But nowe be aside fasting and praying they eate also, which the Apostle sayth they should not doe, because they do not worke. They fast a little, that they may eate enough, and there is no idle lozell but would be content with their fasting, so that hee may haue their diet otherwise. In a word, M. Bishop may keepe his opinion to him selfe, but the Apostle sufficiently teacheth vs, that beecause they labour not, therefore they doe not so well deserue sustenance as they who labour all the yeare for the prouiding of it. As for the blessing of God, it dependeth not vpon the prayers of such who haue no warrant for the state of life wherein they pray: and the ploughmans prayer is more acceptable to God then theirs, beecause he followeth that rule of life which God hath taught, who neuer prescribed anie rule of Monkish trade. Good innocent soules, saith hee, whereas by all stories it appeareth that there hath not beene a more stinking vermine vpon the earth: euen some of their owne men haue discouered them so to bee. But M. Bishop is not satisfied, vilesse to folly he adde blasphemie, saying, that they satisfie for our superfluous pampering of the flesh. Impious man, Christ is the satisfaction for our sins what haue we to doe with the satisfactions of wretched men, who damnably sinne in those things wherein they take vppon them to satisfie for others sins? And what, M. Bishop, is there any superfluous pampering of the flesh to bee found amongst you? Alas how haue ye deceiued vs all this while? We thought that you had bene nothing but spirit, and that superfluous pampering of the flesh had beene onely amongst vs, But your teeth would haue bit your tongue, if yee had not somewhat told vs truth. Take it to yee M. Bishop, for it belongeth to none more rightly then it doth to you, and the example that yee lay beefore yee fitteth accordingly. But to shut vp all this matter, hee telleth vs that none performe all duties of the second table better then they. As howe? They are most obedient to their superiours. God hath commaunded them to obey and honour their parentes, their princes and gouernors, and they leaue these at fixe and seuen as they say, to performe obedience to other superiours superstitiously deuised of their owne. They many times impiouly with the Iewes cast off the respect of their parents by pretence of their vowes, they withdraw themselues into lurking dennes from seruice to their princes and publike state, yea many times they nourish rebellion and treason against them, and yet they are most obedient of all other, being not at all obedient to them whom God hath comanded them to obey. Againe hee saith, they hurt not their neighbour in life, person or any manner of goods. Yea but the life of a Christian manne consisteth not in doing no hurt onely, vnlesse he also do good, and what good do they? It is doing good that Christ shall commend at the last day, ^b I was hungry and ye gaue me meate, and thirstie, and ye gaue me drinke. On the other side, he shall obiect the want of doing good, ^c I was hungry and ye gaue me no meate, and thirstie and ye gaue me no drinke. And what shall the Monkes then say? O Lord, though we did thee no good, yet we did thee no hurt. We had wherewith to feede thee, and to cloth thee, and to harbour thee, but wee gaue all away at once, and made a vow that wee would neuer haue any thing againe to doe thee good: thou shouldest therefore starue and perish for hunger and cold, but looke for nothing further at our hands. We were content to fast and pray according to our rule, and to spende our time in such witlesse obseruations as our founders directed vs for matters of great perfection: but as for those things which thou hast required, wee left them to men of more base and vnperfect state, as nothing at all concerning vs. This is their begging Friers condition of life, and this is that performing of the duties of the second table which M, Bishop speaketh of. They fast and pray, but do no good at all, neither to Church nor commonwealth, neyther hath any kind of men beene generally more offensiue and pernicious then they haue beene.

b Mac. 25. 34.

c Ver. 42.

21. W. BISHOP.

After all this waste winde, M. Perkins confesseth, that a man may upon a speciall calling sell all his goods, as the Apostles did. What then (good Sir) shall become of your former arguments? may one then vow a curse of the Law, and leaue off prayer for neither pouertie nor riches, and say that it is not a blessed thing to giue them to receiue.

All these arguments which were whilome of great force, must now be nothing worth, because it pleaseth M. Perkins, the wind now sits in an other corner, such weathercocks surely are to be much respected.

He saith further, in time of persecution a man may also leaue all: he should rather haue sayd, he must leaue all, or else lose al, for the persecutor will not spare him. Lastly, hee doeth not condemne old auncient monks, who liued by the sweate of their browes, and were married many of them, as hee saith: but his authors cited say not so, neither shall hee be able to cite one auncient allowed and approved writer, who saith that the auncient monkes lined with their wines, if perhaps they hadde beene married before. But no man will if fleshly ministers thinke it no life without their fleshly mates. As for labouring at vacant times, it was alwayes, and is to this day in practise among many religions. If other doe in good studies, writing or teaching imploy that time of labour, no doubt but they doe farre better.

R. ABBOT

There is no man but easily conceiueth, that those things many times which of themselves are vnlawfull and wicked in vs, yet are lawfull and necessary when God commaundeth them. It had bin a wicked thing in Abraham of his owne head to attempt the killing of his son, but it was an act of religious and godly obedience when God required it. It is desperate wickednesse for a man wilfully to cast away his owne life: but at Gods commaundement to offer and yeeld his life, it is right and iust. It was vncleannes in Moses law to touch any excrement or dung: yet when God appointed ^a Ezechiel so to doe, it was no vncleannesse. The Iewes did sin grieuouly in binding themselves by vow not to honour their parents: and yet when Christ calleth, no man may say ^b Let me first go and burye my father: yea ^c he that hateth not father and mother, saith Christ, he cannot be my disciple. Euen so albeit it be superstitious and sinfull of our owne heads to relinquish the state of life whereunto God hath called vs, vnder pretence and colour of giuing our selues idly to prayer and fasting, yet it is sacred and holy obedience to leaue all when God calleth from all, who yet neuer calleth vs in the leauing of all thinges to vow the neuer hauing of any thing againe. These cases are sensible and manifest, neither was there cause for M. Bishop to talke of wind and weber cocke in M. Perkins, but rather to wish better discretion and vnderstanding to himselfe. As for the auncient Monkes, albeit many of them were very absurd and senselesse hypocrites, yet we denie not but many that went vnder that name were iust and holy men, trained vp as in our vniuersities to vertue and learning, that they might afterwards serue for the ministry of the Church. M. Bishop would gladly attribute to their Monks some imitation of them, but it sticketh betwixt his teeth, and he knoweth not well how to bring it out. They are so vnlike them, that they are scant worthy to be accounted as apes in comparison of men. That which M. Perkins saith of marsed Monks, is taken out of S. Austin, though he cite not the place, who setting down the heresie of them that were called^d Apostolicks saith, that arrogantly they so called themselves, for that they received not into their communion, VIENTES CONIUGIBVS, such as had company with their wives & possessed any thing of their owne (saith he) as the Catholike Church hath many, both Monks and Clergie men. Let M. Bishop tell vs the English of vientes coniugibus, and then tell vs whether those Monkes liued with their wives. As for the Ministers, they haue no fleshly mates, but lawfull wives, as they had whome S. Austine speaketh; but M. Bishops former acknowledgement concerning themselves of their superfluous pampering of the flesh, doth fully assure vs, that for lawfull wives they betake themselves to fleshly mates, and that it is true of them now which in the Parliament of England vpon the complaint of the filthy Sodomie that was found amongst them, was said of their vnmarr'd Clergie, that^e the daintie fare of the Clergie men did require either a naturall purgation or a worse.

^a Ezech. 4. 12.

^b Mat. 8. 21
^c Luke 14. 26

d. August. har. 40.
Apostolici qui se
istis nominis arrogan-
tissime vocabantur
quod in communione
sua non reser-
perent vientes con-
iugium & res pro-
prias possidentes quales habet Ca-
tholica Ecclesia & Monachos & Cler-
icos plurimos.

c Cheremi. de calib sacerd. Delicata em-bavia virorum Ec-
clesiasticorum vel naturalem purgati-
onem quaerere vel
piorem.

22. W. BISHOP.

In defence to the Catholike partie, M. Perkins hath not a word, wherefore I will briefly supply his want, and proue it to be very gratefull to God to sell all and giue it to the poore.

I omit the example of our B. Saviour (who would not haue any poore cottage of his owne, so much as to rest his head in, but would wholly liue of almes) and come vnto this heavenly doctrine. He teacheth a yong man whom he loved, in flat words, That if he would be perfect he should go and sell all he had, and giue it to the poore, and come & follow him and then should haue a treasure in heauē. These words are so expresse and euident, that there can be but one way to shift from them, which M. Per. saith vnto, pag. 244 to wit, that these words were only meant vnto that yong man, and not to be applied vnto any others, no more then those words to Abraham of sacrificing his son Isaac. But this silly shift of our poore Pretestars is confuted manifestly in the same chapter of S. Mathew where a little after S. Peter saith, Lord behold we haue left all things and haue followed thee, what reward shall wee therefore haue? Wee haue done (as S. Hierom expoundeth it and the very sequell of the text doth plainly require) that which thou commandedst in the words before

Mat. 19.

to that yong man, What answer made our Sauour? That his commandement was only meant vnto that yong man, & that they had done foolishly in so doing: nothing lesse, but promiseth that they shall therefore sit with him in twelue seates, iudging the twelue tribes of Israell. And that whosoever would forsake father, mother, lands, goods, &c. for his sake should receiue an hundred fold, and possesse life euerlasting. Can any thing bee more plaine out of the word of God it selfe, then that not this or that man, but whosoever shall forsake all for Christ doth very blessedly. And if need were, I could cite most of the auncient Fathers teaching those words of Christ. Go and sell all, to be an heauenly counsell giuen generally to all. S. Antonie tooke them spoken to him, In vita eius apud Athanas. Saint Augustine to him ad Hilarium to omit later religious men, I will only cite S. Hierom, who doth brisely both declare our Catholick doctrine & shews also who was the author of the Protestants opinion,* saying thus To that which thou affirmest, that they doe better, who vse their goods, and do by little and little distribute to the poore the profits of their possessions, then others who selling them giue all at once, not I, but our Lord shall answer, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell all that thou hast, and giue it to the poore. Christ speaketh to him that will be perfect (not to the yong man onely) who with the Apostles forsooke both father, shippe and nets. That which thou Vigilantius commendest, obtaineth the second and third degree: so that the first (which is to sell at once) bee preferred before the second and third: which is, to giue by little and little the fruite of our reuenues to the poore*

* Epist. 99.

* Lib. cont. Vigil.

R. ABBOT.

M. Bishop here Propoundeth, to proue, that it is a gratefull thing to God to sell all and giue it to the poore; but that commeth too short of the vow of pouertie, which is that a man neuer more shall haue any thing of his owne. A man may by occasion forgo all that hee hath for Christs sake, and yet not bind himselfe neuer to bee owner of any thing more. But this is the thing that M. Bishop should proue that it is gratefull to God to vow neuer to haue any thing of his owne. A thing that troubled the Friers, but specially the Franciscans, who vowed pouertie in the highest degree, because by this meanes they were proued theeues, and could not deuise how to shift it off, For what is he but a theefe, that eateth, and drinketh,

* Vide Hossian.
de Orig. Monac.
lib. 6. cap. 16.

and

and clotheth himselfe with that that is none of his owne nor can be by any right? But they by no right or title might haue any thing of their owne. Other beggers eat and drinke their owne, because by gift it becometh theirs. But these Friers by their rule might haue no right, title, or interest in any thing to be their owne; their good funder Francis hauing laid it downe, that without any construction. glossie or interpretation they should haue nothing of their owne. Now this in part is the thing that M. Bishop must prooue, that it is pleasing to God, that men vow to liue like theeues, to eat & drink and weare that that is none of theirs. Let vs see then what hee can alledge for prooffe thereof. His first example commeth not within compassie of this disputation, because wee know that our Sauour Christ submitted himselfe to the bearing of our curie, that he might purchase a blessing for vs.^b He being rich for our sakes became poore that we through his povertie might be made rich. Yet neither is there here any thing of any vow, neither can we question but that Christ possessed as his owne whatsoeuer was ministred vnto him, and therewith^c bought whatsoeuer was needful, to vse the same as his owne, which the vow of povertie admitteth not. Now to the example of Christ, hee addeth the lesion that hee gaue to the yong man,^d Go sell all that thou hast, if thou wilt be perfect, & giue it to the poore, and come and follow me, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen. But still wee faile of that that we require: we heare not Christ here saying to him, Vow thy selfe hereafter to perpetuall povertie and beggery, that thou mayst neuer hereafter haue any thing of thine owne. This is the very pointe, and of this the sentence of Christ importeth nothing. Well, let this go, but of that speech of our Sauour M. Perkins answereth, that it tended to discover the secret corruption of the yong mans heart, and therefore was a commaundement not common to all, but speciall to him, as was to Abraham the commaundement of offering his sonne. And to this effect Clemens Alexandrins vnderstandeth it, saying,^e When Christ saith, If thou wilt be perfect, sell what thou hast and giue to the poore, he disproueth him that glorieth that he hath kept all the commaundements from his youth: for he had not fulfilled the commaundement, Thou shalt loue thy neighbor as thy selfe. But then as being to be perfected by the Lord he was taught charitably to communicate and bestow. Notably therefore he forbiddeth vs to be rich, but to be rich iustly and unsatisfably.

^b 2. Cor. 8. 9.

^c Iohn. 13. 19.

^d Mat. 19. 21.

^e Clem. Alexan. Stromas lib. 3. Cū dixit, si uis perfectus esse, &c. refellit eum qui gloriatur quod omnia a uentate precepta seruauerit non enim impluerat illud, Dilige proximum tuum. &c. Tunc uero dicitur, qui a Domino perfectus dicitur docetur comuni caritate & imperiis per charitatem, Pulchre ergo non prohibuit esse diuites sed esse diuites iuste & inexplabiliter.

Cle-

Clement then saith as M. Perkins saith, that the words are directed to a particular occasion, and had their speciall vse in respect of him to whome they were spoken, to discouer his erroneous conceit and opinion of himselfe. This is not then a silly shift of the poore Protestants, but the true exposition of an auncient and learned Father. But what doth he alledge for the confuting of this silly shift? Marry that S. Peter a little after saith, Lord wee haue forsaken all, and haue followed thee, what reward shall we haue? And what is that? Wee haue done (saith he) that which thou commandedst in the words before to the yong man. But that is not so; for wee doe not find that they sold all to giue to the poore, as hee was commaunded to doe, much lesse that they vowed neuer after to haue any thing, as M. Bishop would proue by it. For it is apparent, that though the Apostles then had left the care and the vse, yet they had not left the poprietie & right of all. They medled not with anything they had, they attended not to any businesse of their owne, they gaue ouer their nets and their ships, & the following of all worldly affaires, that they might wholly follow Christ, but yet that they had stil their owne, it appeareth by the words of Christ, Ye all shall be scattered every man to his owne, and shall leaue me alone. So is it said of Iohn that when Christ said to him. Behold thy mother, meaning it of the blessed virgin, he thenceforth tocke her to his owne home. Yea and by the last chapter of his Gospell it may well bee conceiued that they had still their ships and their nets to go a fishing as they had before, But howsoeuer that be these words make nothing against M. Perkins answer, because the disciples had had a like speciall calling to follow Christ as this yong man had, and they doe thereby but professe their yeelding themselues to that speciall calling of Christ, as this yong man shuld haue done to this calling directed particularly to him. Albeit therefore this commaundement were here intended onely to the yong man, yet there was no cause why Christ should say that they had done foolishly in doing that they had done, because they had receiued the like commaundement in effect before, & by vertue thereof had before this forsaken all and followed him. Now as those callings of the disciples, and Christs commaundements to them of following him, were particular to themselues and not common to all, nor could be vnderstood as belonging to this yong man, so neither can this commaundement to the yong man bee vnderstood here as spoken

f Ver. 27.

g Iohn. 16. 32.

h Chap. 19. 27.

spoken in cōmon to the disciples; or belonging vnto vs. In a word Christ called him to be one of his disciples, as the rest were, and his calling cānot be vnderstoode to belong vnto vs any more then their calling doth. Now as Christ saith peculiarly to the disciples, that they hauing left all at his commaundement and followed him shall sit vpon twelue seates to iudge the twelue tribes of Israel: so he maketh a common and general promise to al, that whosoener for his names sake and for the Gospells sake shall forsake all that is, shall be content to yeeld all into the persecutors hands and to loose all rather then to denie the name of Christ and to forsake his Gospell, hee shall now receiue an hundred; and in the world to come eternall life. This is true, wee doubt not thereof, but M. Bishop himselve must perforce confesse, that this maketh nothing at all to prooue that the former words spoken to the yong man do belong to vs. For that forsaking of all which Christ here speaketh of for his names sake and for the Gospells sake, is a necessary dutie, without the performance whereof a man cannot be Christs disciple.^k Whosoener (in this caule) will saue his life, saith Christ, shall lose it; and whosoener shall lose his life for my sake and for the Gospells sake, he shall saue it. But M. Bishop telleth vs that that selling of al and giuing to the poore, is no commandement but a counsell, a matter not necessary but voluntary which a man may chuse whether he will doe or not. He that forsaketh not all in such sort as Christ speaketh thereof in the latter words sinneth grieuouly against Christ: but M. Bishop saith, that a man may forbear to sel all and giue to the poore, and yet sinneth not. Hereby then we may see how vntowardly he dealeth, in taking from one of these a cōfirmation of the other, and so it appeareth that hither M. Perkins answer standeth good, that those words of our Sauour Christ to the yong man, were intended onely in particular to him, and concerne no other in proper meaning, but onely such to whom they were in particular directed, as they were to him. But yet that M. Bishop may know that we haue some what more to say then M. Perkins hath saide, and can make it good that they most wickedly abuse this place to the maintenancē of their vowes and opinion of perfection, I will some what more fully examine the circumstances thereof. I shall seeme hapily here to go against the streame and to be somewhat preiudicated by the opinion of sundry of the Fathers but yet (gentle Reader) let not names of men carry thee away from

ⁱ Luke. 14. 26.
^k Marke. 8. 35.

from that which thou thy selfe canst manifestly discern to bee the truth. Remember what hath bene already said, that the words of Christ literally and in proper vnderstanding belonged peculiarly to the yong man, but yet we deny not but that as the calling of the rest of the Apostles, so the calling of this yong man by deduction and moralization is to be applied vnto vs, onely the question is, in what meaning it doth concerne vs. Let it bee obserued what meaning M. Bishop intendeth of it, that Christ here recommendeth a matter of counsell, not necessary for Christians, but voluntarily to be followed as a matter of speciall perfection by such as will: so as that without this a man may be saued and come to eternall life, but by the doing of it he meriteth a release of his owne and other mens sins, and an eminent & more then ordinary degree of glory in euerlasting life. But the text plainly sheweth that this cannot bee there meant, and that the lesson that Christ taught him did concerne a dutie necessary for the obtaining of eternall life. The question that he moueth to Christ, is 1 Good master what shall I do to obtaine eternall life? Our Sauour answereth, If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commaundements. He professeth himselfe so to haue done from his youth, and addeth, what lacke I yet? What is it whereto hee supposeth some what to be lacking? Every man seeth whereto it is to berefered, What lacke I yet to the obtaining of eternall life? Accordingly then the answer of Christ is to be construed, If thou wilt be perfect, that is lacking nothing to the obtaining of eternall life, go sell all that thou hast and giue to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen, and come and follow me. That this is the meaning of the perfection here spoken of, appeareth by the two other Euangelists who thus set downe the answer of Christ 1 One thing is lacking vnto thee, 2 Yet lackest thou one thing sel all that thou hast, &c. Whereto did he lacke one thing, but to that whereof he made the question, to the obtaining of eternall life? Christs words then in effect are, Thou hast not yet all that is needefull to the obtaining of eternall life, but if thou wilt be perfect lacking nothinge thereto go sel all that thou hast, &c. Now if we vnderstand it as M. Bishop would haue vs, then there was no cause why the man should go away so sorrowful at that that Christ said. For the thing that he desired was to haue eternal life and if he might haue had eternall life without the forgoing of his riches, it would haue fully satisfied him. But M. Bishops doctrine

1 Mat. 19. 16.

m Mark 10. 21.
a Luk. 18. 23.

it might be said to him that he troubled himselfe in vaine, for the wordes of Christe were but a counsell and not a commaundement, and that there was not any necessitie of doing that that was layde vnto him. They that would bee of a high degree of perfection aboue other, mult so doe, but if he would rest in a lower degree, he might continue as he was, and yet obtaine eternall life. But the yong man concerned not so: he knew that Christs words imported a condition of obtaining eternall life, according to the question that he had moued to him, and therefore was very sorrowfull. And hereto accord the words of Christ ensuing, Verily I say vnto you, that a rich manne shall hardly enter into the kingdome of heauen. It is easier for a camell to goe through the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdome of God. Why doth Christ vse these words, but that the yong mans respecte of his riches did hinder him, not from a state of perfection aboue others, as M. Bishop dreameth, but wholly from entering into the kingdome of God? Furthermore it is to bee considered how improbable a thing it is, that to a man who knewe as yet only the Iewishe religion, & had no knowledge of the faith of Christe our Sauior wold giue at first a direction of perfection aboue others in Christian profession. He was as yet no disciple of Christ, he beleued not in him, and is it credible that he would teach him at the first dash, of a ruler, according to M. Bishops vnderstanding, to become a Monke? Nay it appeareth plainely, that whereas the man had a zeale of God, and no doubt in true meaning did walke according to the Law so farre as hee had the true vnderstanding thereof, our Sauior Christ would instruct him that that was not sufficient for the obtaining of eternall life, but he must be content vpo his calling and commaundement to renounce all that he had, to cast off al vain loue and confidence of worldly thinges, and to become one of his disciples and followers. In a worde, hee teacheth him to bee of the same mind that the Apostle S. Paul professeth as touching himselfe.

° As touching the righteousnes of the law I was unrebukable, but I think all thinges but losse for the excellent knowledge sake of Christe Iesus my Lord, for whom I haue counted all thinges losse, and doe iudge them to be dung that I might win Christ. For so it is, that morall workes, whether of Iewes or of Gentiles, are not available in the sight of God: they want their forme, and life, and perfection, vntill the same be giuen vnto them by the faith of Christ.

o Philip. 3 (1. 8.)

o Ambr. in Psal. 1.
Virtutes sine fide
sola sunt: videntur
vivere, sed prodesset
non possunt,

leaves,

leaves, saith S. Ambrose, they shew greene, but they cannot profite vs Therefore the faith of Christ teacheth vs to renounce all trust and confidence thereof, and to trust onely vpon him. This is the perfection whereto Christ calleth this yong man, as if he should haue said vnto him, Thou doest well in that which thou doest, but that is not enough: if thou wilt haue good of it, become my disciple, and to that end bee content to forgoe all that thou hast, and come and follow me, Where to know how these words do belong to vs, it must be considered that this man was called to a corporall and outwarde following of Christ according to the flesh, by meanes whereof hee must necessarily forgo the vse of those great possessions that he had.
 Thus the Apostles had partly done already, and were afterwarde fully and wholly to doe, being to bee corporally employed to preach the Gospell through the world: & thus Christ calleth this yong rich man to do the same. But our following of Christ now consisteth not in changing of our places, but in giuing him our affections, neither is performed by the foote but by the hearte, neither is it a matter of speciall dutie belonging onely to some, but vniuersally concerneth all that belong to him. As is then our following of Christ, so is our selling of all that we haue, a matter of the heart and affection, whilest in the midst of all that we haue, we haue our minds so vntied & free from the loue and respect of worldly things, as that we are readie to forgoe all when the cause of Christe and his gospell shall require vs so to doe. And this M. Bishop out of their owne grounds must bee forced to confesse whether hee will or not. For by Bellarmino wee vnderstand, that to be a Monk is a state for the gaining of perfection, but to be a Bishop is a state of perfection already attained, and therefore that perfection already attained standeth without literal or actuall selling of all, because their Bishops may be rich, and many of them are so rich as that for wealth they are able to compare with Kinges. If these Bishops were formerly Monkes, howe doe they keepe their vowe of doing perpetually that which Christe speaketh of in this place, vnlesse it be so meant as I haue sayd: to say nothing that these are notable fellowes to tell vs of a perfection in renouncing the worlde, and yet of a perfection too in returning afterwarde to the worlde againe. If they were not Monkes, as a number neuer were, and yet attaine to a state of perfection, then it is not necessarie to perfection literally to sell and to forsake all, but it is sufficient according

q Bellar. de Mo-nach. cap. 2. Status Episcoporum est
 status perfectionis adeptus: status veligiosorum est status perfectionis
 acquirenda.
 r Erasmi. in epist.
 Hieron. ad Helio-
 dor. in antidoto.
 Quid dicemus de
 tot egregijs Episcopi qui vel cum-regibus certe
 possunt opulentijs

ling to our construction, habitually in disposition and affection to be ready thereto if cause require. Yea M. Bishop his selfe will confesse, that it is not a thing necessary for vs for the obtaining of eternal life, literally & actually to forsake all. But it was put to the yong man as a necessary condition literally to be performed for the obtaining of eternal life, as before was shewed. The words of Christ therefore are not literally to be applied vnto vs as they were to him. To be short, Gulielmus de sancto Amore very truly against M. Bishops vow of beggery expoundeth the words of Christ concerning habitual not actuell pouertie; namely, that Christ requireth of vs not forthwith to cast away all that wee haue, but that when the confession of the name of God and the glory of Christ requireth, then wee bee ready to forsake all euen as when Christ requireth, of his followe is the hatred of father and mother, and of their owne soule, he doth not simply bid not to honour their parents, much lesse to hate them, but that occasion so requiring they be ready for Christs sake to neglect all. Now this dutie concerneth all, and therefore the words of Christ in application to vs do belong to all, and are very fallly abused for the establishing and defending of Monkish vowes, which are peculiar to some, and if men list may without sin be none at all, as M. Bishop himselfe hath before made plaine vnto vs. But hee is content to tell vs that the words concerne all, yet as a counsell onely, not as a commandement; they are a heauenly counsell (saith he) giuen generally to all. But this is not so; they were a commaundement giuen to him to whom they were giuen, as M. Bishop himselfe a litle before hath termed them & as they concerne vs they are a commaundement to vs also. The yong man sinned in refusing to do that that Christ directed him, and it is sinne to vs not to doe that that herein is intended concerning vs, If S. Anthony and S. Austin in that sort tooke it to be said to them, they did rightly therein: but otherwise if Christ did not say to them, come and follow me, in the same sence wherein he spake to the yong man, then they had no reason to think that Christ saide to thē, Go sell all, in the same sence that he did to him. If their coming to Christ, & following of him were a matter not outward but inward, thē their selling all was to be a matter not outward but inward, vntill the following of Christ by loue & affection within, could not stand with the keeping of those things that are without. As for Ieroms reproof of Vigilius, it moueth vs litle in a cause that by the text it selfe is cleere & plaine.

Hospin de Orig. Monac. lib. 6. ca. 17. ex. Antonino. Mandatu esse ibi paupertatem habituale non actualem. Magistare Christi sum a nobis non ut iam omnia alijciamus qua habemus sed, ut cum confesio diuini nominis gloria Christi postuauerit, tum propter eum omnia deserere parati simus, &c.

His cholere and heate in those matters that were questioned betwixt S. Austin & him, do bewray that he could not endure that any man should dislike what he approued. He calleth Vigilantius in another place, a holy Priest, and wee find not that he hath said any thing but what standeth with the holinesse and truth of the word of God, & we approue that which he here saith, that they doe better who use their owne goods, and by litle and litle deuide the frutes of their possessions to the poore, then they who sell their possessions, and giue all at once. These make Christ a great feast for once, and leaue him afterwards to hunger and thirst, but the other haue care continually to minister comfort and releife vnto him. As for Hieromes distinguishing of degrees, we admit not of it, because it hath no ground in the text which he alledgeth, yea and so much the lesse, because in the church of Rome it selfe, as hath bene shewed, the state of perfection which is the highest degree, standeth with the enioying of those goods to the forsaking whereof Hierome attributeth that perfection.

23 W. BISHOP.

I might confirme this former argument with the example of the fore said best Christians,* who hauing possessions & lands, sold all & brought the price of them, & layd it at the Apostles feete: and were yet enforce it by the fact of Ananias and Saphira his wife, who hauing sold all theirs, presented but part of the money vnto the Apostles, and reserued the rest vnto themselues. Belike they were of M. Perkins his mind, that it is better to giue then to receiue, and therefore kept part to that purpose; but they therefore were both punished with present death: which proueth inuincibly, both how laudable it is to sell all, and how dangerous to halt in such holy workes.

But to auoyd prolixitie, I do but point at the places: and that Ananias as the rest had promised this to God (which is a vow) it appeareth in the text, where it is said, that he lied not vnto men, but vnto God, in not performing his promise.

And here we deduce very cleerly, that such a vow is much pleasing vnto God, thus: That which is commended by our Saviours owne both example and doctrine, and was practised by the Apostles and most holy Christians, that may be vowed very laudably: but to sell all, and giue it to the poore, is scab.

c Hieron. aduers
Vigil. Afferiteos melius facere qui viciuntur rebus suis & paulatim frui
suarum possessionum
diuident quam illos
qui possessionibus
diuidentu semel
omnia largimur.

R. ABBOT.

It cannot be proued, neither doth the text say, that those fore-said best Christians sold all that they had. Let him take his owne Rhenish translation, and tell vs which way hee can make good that which he saith. ^a As many as were owners of lands or houses, sold and ^{a Acts 4. 14.} brought the prices of those things which they sold, and laid it before the fete of the Apostles. The text sayth, they sold and brought the price of that they sold: it saith not that they sold all, and brought the price of all. Philip was one of them, and yet Philip had his ^b house still, and ^b Cap. 21. 2
I hope M. Bishop will not thinke but that hee had something in his house also, wherewith hee gaue entertainment to Saint Paul, and those that were with him. And who doubteth but that the rest kept their dwelling houses furnished for their owne vse, and for the vse of other godly and faithfull brethren, as occasion should serue?
So it is sayd of Barnabas, that ^c whereas hee had a field, or a peece of ^c Cap. 4. 37 land he sold it, but it is not sayd that he sold all. So Ananias and Sa- phira ^d sold a possession, or a peece of land, but they are not said to haue ^d Cap. 5. 2 sold all that they possessed. And whereas M. Bishop sayth, that the same Ananias and his wife made a vow, because it is sayd that ^e they lied vnto God, he talketh idley. They lied vnto God, because ^e Ver. 4.
they pretended to bring the whole price of that which they sold, when they brought but a part thereof. But those other faithfull Christians did that which the common state and necessity of the Church did then require. Many poore doubtlesse were then con-uerted to the faith of Christ, who being now ioyned to the Church, could expect no releife but from the Church. They therefore who had wherewith to releiue the necessity of such, were to testifie their faith and loue, by communicating & imparting to them of that they had. Here was no matter of Monckery: it was an example of the common fruit that should be of true Christianity and piety, when soeuer like occasion should require. He sheweth not himselfe a liuely and feeling member of the body of Christ, who in the publike want of the Church, cannot find in his heart to dispossesse himselfe of somewhat for the succour and comfort of other members. Letting these things briefely passe as M. Bishop doth, let vs see what argument he collecteth of these examples. That which was commended by our Sa- uiours own both example and doctrine, and was practised by the Apostles and most holy Christians, may bee vowed very lawdably. But to sell all and give it to the poore is such. We denie his second proposition, because it pronounceth that absolutely and simply, which in the other proposition is vnderstood respectiuely onely, and with exception.

† Hieron. adu.
Tonin. lib. 2. Au-stithones venditū qua habebat et pub-
licē distributū nihil sibi quā pāllolū
reseruauit.
‡ Idem in Math
cap. 10. Bactroperita, contemptores
seculi, & omni ap-
nihilō ducentes ce-
llarium secum ve-hibant.

† Antisthenes the Philosopher, who was maister to Diogenes, sold all that he had, as Hierome mentioneth, and made publike distribution thereof. So doth the same Hierome mention a sect of Philosophers called Bactroperita, who were contempters of the world, and set all things at nought, onely carrying a bagge or wallet with them, and yet these did not that which Christ commended, or the Apostles practised. Christ hath commended it, and the Apostles and faithfull christians by their practise haue taught it, when it concerneth vs necessarily for the following of Christ: when the commandement of Christ and his cause and Gospell doth require it. But to do it voluntarily and of our owne heads, when no such cause requireth it, it is not a matter of commendation with Christ, but of our owne superstitious and fond presumption. The former way we may lawfully and laudably vow it, yea and we doe all vow in our baptisme, to forsake all rather then to forsake Christ: to keepe nothing the keeping whereof should keepe vs away from Christ. But when the hauing of our wealth hindereth not, but that in mind and affection we may follow Christ, and keepe our selues faithfull vnto him, then to vow the relinquishing thereof, is a superfluous and rash vow, no seruice of God, but a pleasing of our owne fancie, and no where commended by Iesus Christ.

24. W. BISHOP.

Now one word of obedience before we end this question. This vow saith M. Perkins, is against Christian liberty, wherby we haue granted vs a free use of all things indifferent, and therefore to bee bound to certaine meates and apparell is intollerable: but this reason hath bene reprovod already: * he addeth, Stand fast in the liberty wherein Christ hath made you free: Doth your breath or heart faile you Sir, that you stop thus in the midst of a sentence, the rest belike discovereth the fraud of it: And wrap not your selues againe in the yoke of bondage, to wit, bind not your selues to the obseruation of Moses law, as yee shall do if yee be circumcised. All this is good: but doth it follow heereof, that in the law

* Gal. 5. 10. 1

law of grace, wee should not obey our superiours, nor obserue such good orders as holy church hath appointed? nothing lesse: but happy is that necessitie, as Saint Augustine witnesseth, which holdeth vs close to those things which be better to do, than to leaue vndone, otherwise our weaknesse would quickly shrinke backe. And againe if Christes sufferinges without his obedience (as M. Perkins himselfe testifieth, Page. 61) had not bene auailable for our iustificasson, no doubt, but those works which are garnished with the vertue of obedience, are more acceptable in Gods sight.

Finally, M. Perkins saith, that wee magnifie these three vowes of chastitie, povertie, and obedience. And goe a reason haue we so to do, as hath bene shewed: but saith he, for the vow of Baptisme, we haue made no such account of it, as they do, which is not so. Wee holde indeede that the covenant which we make in Baptisme, is no vow, but a full and assured promise to beleene in God, to renounce the deuill and all his workes, and to keepe all Gods commandements, which we keepe or do our best indouour to keepe: at least wee teach not as the Protestants doe, that they are impossible to bee kept, for that is enough to discourage any man from endeuouring to keepe them. And as touching the vow which hee saith we made in our creation; wee remember nothing of it, nor neuer heard speake of it by any good author, not that we make, or meane we any vowes when we receiue the B. Sacrament. These be but nouelties of wordes, and the raising of some decayed wits.

R. ABBOT.

Christian libertie hath not onely set vs free from the rigour and curse of the law, but also from the yoke of externall obseruations, that is, from placing religion and holinesse, the worship and seruice of God, and from reputed cleannesse or vncleannesse towards God in any externall or outward things. Concerning this libertie against the Monkish vow of obedience, M. Perkins alledgeth the Apostles wordes, ^a Standfast in the libertie wherewith Christe hath made you free. Here Maister Bishop beeing somewhat pleasurable, asketh: Dost your breath or heart faile you, Sir, that you stop thus in the midst of a sentence? Why, I pray, what is the rest of the sentence? And wrappe not your selues againe in the yoke of bondage. And what meaneth that? Marry binde not your selues to the obseruation of Moses law, as ye shall doe if ye bee circumcised. And was it then then the meaning of the Apostle, that they should not wrap themselves in the yoke and bondage of Moses law, which was giuen of God, but they might wrap themselves in the yoke and bondage of the lawes of men? Did God ease vs of his yoke, to giue men libertie to yoke vs againe with their deuises? What an idle exception is this of his, and why doth he not remember, that the Apostle maketh this instruction generall against all yokes of humane imposition, where he saith, ^b Ye are bought with a price: bee ye not made the seruants of men. S. Austine lamenteth it as touching the condition of

b I. Cor. 7. 23.

c Aug. epist. 119.
Ipsam religionem
quam paucissimi & manifestissimis celebrationum Sacramentis miseri-
cordia Dei esse
liberam voluit,
seruilibus oneribus
premut ut tolera-
bilis sit conditio Iudaorum qui etiam si tempus libertatis non agno-
uerint, legalibus
tamen sarcinis non humani presump-
tionibus subiciantur.
d Col. 2. 16. 20.

his time, that whereas the mercy of God would haue religion to be free, hauing very few, and those very manifest Sacraments or mysteries of obseruations, men did so oppresse it with seruite burdens, as that the state of the Iewes was more tolerable, who albeit they knew not the time of liberty, yet were subiect to the burdens of the law of God, and not to humane presumptions. It is plaine then by S. Austines iudgement which therein is very true, that the liberty of Christian faith and religion, is not onely from the burdens and yokes of Moses law, but also from all burdens of humane presumptions, and therefore M. Bishop answer is very vnsufficient to our obiection. The vnsufficiency whereof will the better appeare in considering the other place alledged by M. Perkins and omitted by M. Bishop, ^d Let no man iudge you in meate and drinke: why are ye led with traditions or decrees

Touch not, tast not, handle not? which all perish in the using, being after the doctrines and commandements of men: By which words he plainly sheweth, that by the libertie of Christ no rules may be sette downe, whereby menne should bee iudged in conscience about meates and drinks, about touching, tasting, handling, or any thing decreed by the doctrines and precepts of men. And what dooth hee then but thereby condemne all Monkish institutions, whereby the consciences of men are burdened and intangled with so many obseruations about meates, drinks, apparell, and other matters reckoned as a purchase of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and the merit of eternall life? This cannot be auoided, but that since the doctrines and commandements of men as touching meats & drinks, & such other things be condemned, therefore Friar Frauncis & his fellow Dominicke, with the rest of them, were superstitious hypocrites to prescribe rules, and to require obedience to bee performed vnto them in such things. Yea, and let M. Bishop bee reckoned with them, who setteth such before vs vnder the name of supericours to bee obeied, and calleth those good orders which the Apostle reiecteth because they are but mens traditions, and nameth that a holy Church, which contrary to the Apostles doctrine approueth such orders. As for that which S. Austine saith, Happy is the necessity that compelleth to the better, it is true where the thing is good whereto we are compelled, but vnhappie is the necessitie whereby wee tie our selues to those things which are superstitious and offensiuē vnto God. Where he saith that if Christes sufferings without his obedience had not bene auailable for our iustificatiō, no doubt but the works which are garnished with the vertue of obedience, are more acceptable in Gods sight. he notably plaieth the hypocrite, to make Christes obedience to his father, a cloke for their Friarly obedience to superstitious and absurde men, It is true indeede which S. Austine saith, that there is nothing so expedient for the soule as to obey, but it is then true, when we obey them who according to God are to bee obeied. & The obedience of Christ, saith Origen, is the ornament and iewel of the Churches necke, and therefore in Christes behalfe wee are to obey none, but onely them in whom we obey Christ. We are to obey them who ^h teach the things which he hath commaunded, not those things which they themselves haue deuiled. ¹ The Apostles, saith Tertullian, gave themselves no liberty to bring in anything of their owne will, and we are to follow none but such as haue followed the Apostles to deliuer faithfully Christes words, not presumed rules and orders of their owne inuention. ² We are not, saith he, to chuse (or follow) any thing, which any man of his owne discretion hath brought in. Mathew of Paris telleth a story of ¹ Friar Francis, that when he deliuered his rule to the Pope to be viewed and confirmed, the Pope considering the same, and beholding the deformed condition of the man, bid him get him to the swine, & wallow with thē, and bestow his paines to preach to them. The Friar presently went where swine were, and tumbled himself amongst them, & frō top to toe beraied himself all ouer with mire and dirt. In this habite he goeth to the Pope againe, saying, My Lord I haue done as thou commaundedst, I pray thee now to hearken to my request. The Pope admired the man, and being sorie for that he had said to him, granted him the confirming of his rule. Were not heere two fooles well met, and may wee not make it a question whether was the greater foole, whether the Friar

before

e. Aug. epist. 45.
Felix est necessitas
qua in meliora
compellit.

f. Aug. in Psal. 70
Nihil tam expedit
anima quam obe-
dire.

g. Origen in caute.
hom. 2. Ornamentum & monile cer-
nicui ecclesia obedientia Christi est.

h. Mat. 28. 20.
i. Tertul. de prascrip. Nec ipsi (A-postoli) quicquam ex suo arbitrio quod
inducerent elige-
runt.

k. Ibid. Sed ne eligere quod aliquis
de suo arbitrio induxerit.

l. Math. Parisiū Henr. 3. anno.
1227.

for so doing, or the Pope for approving that which he did? Yet this brain-sick and drunken trick of a dirtie beast goeth with M. Bishop for a vertue of obedience, and was one of those worthy acts, for which of a Friar he became a Saint. Such is the rest of the obedience that their vow tieth thē to, euen to a number of mad & witlesse fancies, such as that a man may well thinke thē to be bewitched of Satan, in that they place deuotion & holinesse in such toyes. We leaue their obedience to thē, & not only of these absurdities, but of those other matters which carie some better shew of sobriety & grauity, we say as S. Ambrose hath said, wee iustly condemne all newe thinges which Christ hath not taught, because Christ is the way for faithfull men. If Christ haue not taught what we teach, wee hold it worthy to be detested. Now therefore let them magnifie their three vowes whilest they wil, but because Christ neuer knew them for his, we cōdemne them as superstitiously deuised, & blasphemously maintained to the iniury and wrong of the crosse of Christ. We magnifie the vow of baptisme as the only Christian vow, approving no other vowes but what are implied & cōtained therein, because therein for the whole course of our life we vow & dedicate our selues wholly vnto God. M. Bishop saith, that that is no vow but a full and assured promise, and yet in the former section he hath told vs, that to promise to God is a vow. We vow our selues therein to the keeping of Gods commandements, and we endeauour to keepe them, and by the grace of God wee attaine to the keeping of them, but yet so as that we know it to be one of Christes commandements to say daily vnto God, Forgiue vs our trespasses, because we do not so keepe his other cōmandements, nor can so keepe them in the infirmity of this flesh, but that in many things we offend all. This we teach, and this is so true, as that M. Bishop himselve in his owne conscience is forced to subscribe it, and yet by a wilfull spirit of contradiction bendeth himselve to dispute against it. The vow of baptisme we alwayes renew in receiuing the Lords supper, because therein wee profess our selues to bee of his retinue, and renew the promise of being holy vnto him. As for that which Maister Perkins saith of a vow made in our creation as touching our obedience to God, in what meaning hee spake it, I cannot determine. There may be nouelty in the word, but prophanenesse which is the thing that the Apostle condemneth, there is none. He might suppose Adams promise thereof before his fall, or the bond and duty in Ambros. de Virg. lib. 7. Nos non omnia qua Christus non docuit, iure damnamus quia via fidelibus Christus est: Si ergo Christus non docuit quod docemus nos illud detestabile iudicamus.

in Aug. cont. 2. epi. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 7. Ita dixerim, mandata fecerunt ut ipsa mandata meminerimus pertinere ad orationem in qua veraciter quotidie dicunt sancti filij promissionis, fiat voluntas tua & demitte nobis, &c. o Iam. 3. 2.

p L. Tim. 6. 20.

duty arising of our creation, whereby wee are no lesse tied then by a vow. Of his termes of rauing and decaied wits, we will leaue him to consider further, presuming that one day hee will thinke that in all this matter he hath but raued, and that his wits were not right in taking vpon him the defence of so bad a cause, CHAPTER. 9.

OF IMAGES:

OVr consents. Wee acknowledge the ciuill use of Images, as freely M. Perkins.
 & truly as the Church of Rome doth. By ciuill use, I vnderstand that which is made of thē in the common societie of men, out of the appointed places of the solempne worship of God: And this to bee lawfull appeareth, because the arts of painting and grauing are the ordinances of God, and to be skilful in them is the gift of God, as the example of Bezaleel and Aholiab declare.* This use of Images may be in sundry things. Exod. 35.
 First in adorning & setting forth of buildings; so the Lord cōmanded his Temple to be adorned with Images of Palme-trees and Pomegranates of Buls, Cherubs, and such like. Secondly, they serue for distinction of coyns. Thirdly, Images serue to keepe in memory friends departed whō we reuerence, & therefore in the daies after the Apostles, Christiāns used priuately to keepe the pictures of their friends departed which after ward (saith he) by abuse came to be set in Churches & worshipped, of which hereafter.

Second conclusion: We hold the historicall use of Images to bee good and lawfull: that is, to represent to the eie the acts of Histories, whether they be humane or diuine: and thus we thinke that the histories, of the Bible may be painted in priuate places.

Third conclusion: in one case it is lawfull to make an Image, to testifie the presence or effects of the maiestie of God: namely, when God himselfe commands it: so was the brazen Serpent made to represent Christ crucified: & the Cherubs ouer the Mercie seate, to represent the maiestie of God whom the Angels adore: And therefore it is saide: Thou shalt not make to thy selfe (that is upon thine owne head) any grauen Image: This by the way is a very wilfull peruerting of those words (to thy selfe) which cannot signifie, but, to thine owne use, that is, to adore them, as is plainly declared in the text following.

The fourth conclusion: The right Images of the new Testament, are the doctrine & preaching of the Gospel, wherein Christ & his benefites are lively represented unto vs: but these be metaphoricall Pictures, not belonging to this purpose: for it is one thing to describe in words, another to expresse in lively colours and lineaments.

I. W. BISHOP.

These conclusions containe, as M. Perkins affirmeth, the doctrine of the Church of England which I would beleue, if I did not see the Magistrates publikely to take away Pictures from Catholikes, to teare and burne them, which were kept but in private places: yea, their more feruent disciples cannot abide a Crosse standing by the high-way-side, or in any, neuer so prophane a place, but either they beat and hale them down, or most despitefully deface them: bewraying iudeede unto all moderate men, their cankered stomackes against him that died on the Crosse: who will one day (when he pleaseth) confound them. But to couer this their malice, they cast ouer it the mantle of zeale, saying that the Papists make them their Gods, and that therefore they are to be abolished.

O men blinded with spite against true deuotion We Catholikes are a thousand times more zealous of the true honour of the liuing God then any Protestants euer were or will bee: And that small reuerence which we yeeld unto Images, is more different from the honour and obedience due unto Almighty God, that the cope of heauen is distant from the center of the earth,

R. ABBOT.

They say the diuell neuer goes away but he leaues a stinke behind him M. Bishop as it appeareth, had giuen ouer this worke at the question of satisfaction, but better remembering himselfe, hee tooke the mater in hand againe, and then would by no meanes giueouer till he had lift vs this stinke of Images. This is one of the grosse and palpable abominations of the kingdom of Antichrist, the filth whereof there is no man but seeth, saue only they^a in whom being unbeleeuers, the god of this world hath blinded their mindes, that the light of the glorious Gospell of Iesus Christ, which is the Image of God, should not shine unto them. By this the Church of Rome hath matched all the idolatries of the heathen, and brought all their iugling deuices into the Church, abusing the ignorance and simplicity of

of the people as grossely and damnably as neuer they did. But in this field I haue walked at larg before in ^b answer of the Epistle to the King, and therefore I will here tye my selfe to those things which ^b Master Bishop giueth vs occasion to consider of. M. Perkins in his third conclusion affirmeth a lawfulnessse of making Images, to testifie the presence and effects of the maiestie of God; when God himselfe hath so commaunded, & he exemplifieth in Moses his making of the brazen serpent in figure of Christ crucified, & the Cherubin set ouer the mercy seate, God there promising his presence, & signifying the attendance of Angels to do him seruice. Concerning this point Tertullian being vrged by idol-makers with the example of the brazen serpent, answereth very rightly: ^c *It is well that the same God both did forbid by law that any likenesse should bee made, and by extraordinarie commandement did appoint the likenesse of a serpent. If thou worship the same God, thou hast his law, Thou shalt not make the similitude or likenesse of any thing: if thou looke to the commandement of making a similitude afterward, do thou imitate. Moses, do not against the law make an image, unlesse God command the also. God giueth not lawes to himselfe but to vs: what hee commandeth to the contrarie by his owne authoritie, is no iustification of our presumption. For this cause M. Perkins obserueth, that in the commaundement it is said: Thou shalt not make (TO THY SELFE) any grauer image: so thy selfe, that is (saith he) vpon thine owne head, or vpon thine owne will and pleasure. M. Bishop saith, that this is a wilfull peruerting of the words, which cannot signifie, but to thine owne use, that is to adore. Thus hee cannot abide they should bee restrained from doing some what of their owne heads, and as their owne will: it is death to them to be hedged from that walke. Yet Moses gaue it for a lesson from God, ^d Ye shall not do euery man what semeth good in his owne eyes, What I command thee that only do to the Lord; thou shalt put nothing to, nor take ought therefrom. Whereby it appeareth, that M. Perkins exposition containeth a truth, that to the Lord, or by way of seruice to God, no image might bee made but what God himselfe commaunded, neither doth the text declare any thing to the contrarie, but that that is the true meaning of the words which hee expoundeth. In his fourth conclusion he saith, that the right Images of the new Testament, are the doctrine and preaching of the Gospell, and all things that by the word of God do thereto apper-*

Tertul. de Idol. Banē quodidem Deū & lege vetnō: similitudinem fieri, & extraordinario praecepto serpentis similitudinem inter dicit. Si eundem Deum obserues, habes legem eius. Ne feceris similitudinem dī & praeceptum facta postea à similitudine respicū, & tu imitare Moysen. Ne feceris aduersus legem similitudinem, nisi & tibi Deus iusserit.

d Dent. 1. 8 & 2. vult Hoc tantum facio Domino.

taine, whereby Iesus Christ is described before our eyes, as the Apostle saith, euē as crucified amongst vs. This (saith he) is an excellent picture whereby Christ with his benefites is liuely represented vnto vs. These are Metaphoricall pictures saith M. Bishop not belonging to this purpose. But why doth hee admit that which M. Perkins citeth out of Origen affirming that Christians haue no other, The images to be dedicated to God are not the workes of Carpenters, but hewed by the word of God and framed in vs, namely, vertues to the imitation of him, who is the first borne before all creatures, in whom are the examples of iustice, fortitude, temperancie, wisdom, pietie and other vertues. These are Images dedicated to God in the minds of them that exercise such vertues, wherewith we beleue the principall of all such Images, the image of the inuisible God, who is God the onely begotten, to be conveniently honoured. He knew no other images lawfull amongst Christians, but onely such as wherein wee beare the image of God and of his Son Iesus Christ, but this M. Bishop thought not good to take knowledge of. As for that which he saith, that he beleueth not our doctrine to be as M. Perkins hath set downe, because the Magistrates publickely take away pictures from Catholickes, and tear them downe and burne them, hee must vnderstand that it is nothing to vs what hee beleueth. Our Magistrates know how to put difference betwixt the lawfull vse of things & the vnlawfull abuse: they know well how such pictures and images are by Papists turned to Idols & therefore to shew the detestation of the dishonor that thereby is done to God, they burne them, and tear them, and deface them being found with them, that they may no more bee abused to such idolatrie. Where otherwise they are found, and are not subiect to their superstitious and false deuotions, our Magistrates do nothing against them, because they are not offended at the hauing, but at the abusing of them, By reason of those idolatrous fancies, it is, that our more feruent disciples, as he calleth them, cannot abide a Crosse standing by the high way side, or in any other place. They carie therein a true zeale to God, though not alwaies so aduisedly managed as it ought to be. But if any of priuate fancie proceed to the demolishing and destroying of such publike monuments, we approue it not, and they that do it, deseruedly receiue their check. We are well enough perswaded, that they who first began the erecting of those Crosses, did it meerey in the honour of the name of Christ, that were before foiigen. contra Celsum. lib. 8. Simulachra Deo dicēda

sunt non fabricorum
opera, sed à verbo
Dei dedolata forma
itaq; in nobis, videlicet virtutes ad imi-tationem primoge-
niti totius creaturæ
in quo sunt iustitia temperantia, fortitudinis, sapientia, pi-
etas, ceterarumq;
virtutum exempla.
Ha. sunt statua
Deo dicatæ in ani-
mæ virtutes exer-
centium, quibus
decenter honorari
credimus omnium
humilissimis statuari
archetypum primū,
&c.

before had stood the ensignes of false and idoll Gods, & at the head of euery way, there might be lifted vp a trophée and standard as a monument and token of the exaltation of him that died vpon the Crosse. They were farre off from Popish idolatrie: they had learned not to worshipping that that is made with hands being conuerted from worshipping it stockes and stones, they knew they were not to returne to the same againe: they caried the same mind as did Helena, when she found the Crosse whereon Christ was crucified:^h she worshipped the King (saith Ambrose) verily not the wood: for this were heathenish error, & the vanity of ungodly men: but she worshipped him that was hanged vpon the wood. But what they erected onely for historical ostentation of the aduancement of the kingdome of Christ, that Poperie turned to heathenish abomination, & gaue to the Crosse the honour that belonged onely to him that died vpon the Crosse.

g Rec. 16. 39.

h Ambr. de obitu
Th. codof. Regem
adorauit non lignū
utique quia hic gen-
tiliti est error & vanitatis impiorū sed adorauit illum qui pendit in ligno.

In respect whereof pubicke authoritie hath done that, that seemed necessarie for the taking away of such idolatrie. It hath remoued what contained open and apparant scandall to true religion, and hath left the rest to fall of it selfe, applying it selfe to the rule of S. Austin,ⁱ We first labour to breake the idols in mens hearts, knowing that where the heart is reclaimed from idolatrie, it learneth to esteem of things outward as they are. And thus (thanks bee to God) men haue now learned to behold Crosse, and go by them without those superstitious opinions and vsages which before haue bene had and obserued toward them. Now, where publike authoritie ceaseth, it is not for priuate men to begin againe, neither can it be warranted, that men in shew of zeale cary themselues tumultuously for the reforming of such errors, S. Austin could say of breaking the Pagan Idols,^k Where power is not giuen vs, we do it not; where it is giuen vs, we omit it not. Much more are wee to obserue the same rule in those things which are deemed in their originall to haue contained nothing preiudiciall to the faith. Yea & by common experience wee see, that by such priuate opposition, beside that it is iniurious to publike government, men do but enkindle the minds of their opposites to a more earnest affecting of those things, which before they haue semed very lightly to set by. But yet the ground whereupon either publikely or priuately we or any of vs haue bene moued to the defacing of any such superstitious Images, is that which M. Bishop nameth, because the Papists haue made them Gods, & therein robbed;

i Aug. de verbis Dom. Ser. 6. Primum
agimus ut idola
in eorum cordibus confringamus.

k Ibid. Vni nobis nō est data potestas, nā
facimus tibi data est.
non pratermissi-
mus.

robbed God of that deuotion and seruice which peculiarly belongeth vnto him. Here he cryeth out, O men blinded with spise against true deuotion. but we on the other side giue most humble thankses to God, that by his word he hath giuen vs light to see what true deuotion is, and hath freed vs from their yoke, who vnder the name of Christian deuotion held vs in the bondage of heathenish abomination. As for them, whether they be zealous of the true honour of the living God, their fruites do shew, who in all things, and specially in this matter of Images, carie themselues so contrarie to the expresse word of God. And whereas he saith that the small reuerence which they yeeld to Images is more different from the honour due to God, then the cope of heauen is distant from the center of the earth, he sheweth that he hath learned of the Iesuities to equiuocate with God, as they are wont to do with men. How doth he call it a small reuerence which they doe to Images, when it appeareth not but that they doe the same to Images, that they doe to God? They kneele to them they pray to them, they vow vovues to them, they offer offerings to them, they sweare by them, and yet M. Bishop would make vs beleecue, that there is great difference betwixt the worship that they do to images, and that which they do to God. But forsooth we must thinke that by a mentall reservation they make a difference, and though all things outwardly seemeth the same, yet in mind and vnderstanding they preferre God before their Idols. Thus they would haue vs to thinke, when as notwithstanding Andradius their great defender of the Counsell of Trent, freely confesseth, that with the worship of Latria (belonging they say to God onely) they worship the crosse of Christ. Yea Polydore Virgil another of their owne fellows, hath told vs how they haue obserued this difference: Men are growne to that madnesse (he saith) that this part of pietie is little differing from flat impietie. For there are a many of the more rude and ignorant who worship images of stone or wood, of marble or brasse, yea and painted and garnished with colours upon the walles, not as figures, but euen as if they had verily sense, and do put more trust in them then they do in Christ or other Saintes to whom they are dedicated. Wee doubt not but he would speake of his owne as fauourably as hee could, and therefore we may well conceiue what horrible impiety it was that wrested frō him this confession. There followeth more to that purpose, wherin hee sheweth how the masters of that Image craft

l Andrad. Orth. explicat. lib. 9. Non tamen inficiamur hac nos Latria ad ratione Christi praclarissimam crucē colere & venerari. in Polyd. Virgil. de inuent. rer. lib. 6. cap. 13. Eō insania deuentum est ut hac pietatis pars parum differat ab impietate. Sunt enim bene multi rudiores stupidiore scilicet qui saxea vel lignea marmoreas, aeneas seu in parietibus pictas varijs coloribus litas imagines colant, non ut figuram sed perinde quam si essentum aliquid quem habeant, & ijs magis fidant quam Christo. & alijs diuis quibus dicata sunt, &c.

craft made their profit of it, drawing on the people in that simplicitie to offer richly vnto them, but what he said, he is made nowe not to say, the Spanish Censors hauing taken order by their Index Expurgatorius, that al that matter in their editions is left out. Thus they take care that their Idolatrie may continue still, prouiding so neare as may be, that nothing may be extant amongst them for the disco- uerie thereof. And hereby it appeareth, that it is but for bashfulnesse that M. Bishop telleth vs of so great difference of worship, and how- focuer he and such other as he is, can pleade for themselues a mental reservation, euen as the Philosophers and learned amongst the hea- then did, yet they suffer the people to run on in this abomination to worship the Images with as great deuotion, as if they were verie Gods.

2. W. BISHOP.

And that these hotter brethren may see what reason Maister Per- kins had to allow of the ciuill and historicall use of Images, I thinke it expedient to note here, how in the purest antiquitie, Images were made and respected.

That famous Image of our blessed Sauiour, which the woman cured of the bloudie fluxe, set up in brasse at Cæsarea Philippi, vpon a pillar of stone, is not unknowne vnto any that haue read the Ecclesiasticall Hy- storse of Eusebius, Lib. 7. cap. 14. And how God did approoue it by gi- uing vertue vnto an herbe when it did grow to touch the hemme of that Picture, to cure all manner of diseases. Which Image Eusebius himselve did see standing untill his dayes, which was 1300. yeares agoe, as hee there testifieth: as also, that he saw diuers others, namely, of Saint Peter and Paule.*

*This goodly stature being most memorable both for antiquitie of it, being made our Sauiour yet liuing, and for the miracles wrought by that herbe, growing at the foote of it, Iulian the Apostata for malice against our Sauiour, caused to be broken downe, and set up his owne Image in the place of it: but his was presently with lightning and thunder from heaue consumed into ashes, and our Sauiours, by the Christians carried into their Church, as witnesseth Zozomenus

Another picture of our Sauiours visage, he himselve is reported to haue sent vnto Abgarus Prince of Edessa, as witnesseth Metaphastes In vita Constantini, Damascene, and Euagrius,* who dooth in the same*

* Mar. 9.

* Lib. 5. hist. cap. 10.
* Lib. 10 de Imaginibus.
* Lib. 4. hist. cap. 18.

same chapter rehearse a notable miracle, wrought by the same image to deliuer the towne from the sacking of the Persians. And in his fift book and 18. chapter, recordeth another miracle done by the image of the blessed Virgin Mary in a prison at Antioch.

The third image representing our blessed Saviour, is said to haue bene made by Nicodemus his secret Disciple, which afterward was taken by the Iewes, and in despite of Christ was crucified, and to their confusion, much blood issued out of it.

This historie is in the worke of S. Athanasius that sound pillar of the Church, intituled, De passione imaginis, and is either his, or some other verie auncient and graue writer: For it is related in the seuenth generall counsell, act. 4.

That Saint Luke the Euangelist drew the picture of our blessed Ladie, is registred by Theodorus Lector 1000. yeares ago, and * Metaphrastes, In vita Lucae, and Nicephorus *

Tertullian, an author of the second hundredth yeare after Christe, hath left written, * that the image of Christ in shape of a shepheard carrying a sheepe on his shoulders, was engrauen upon the holy Chalice used in the Church. In the time of S. Chrysostome, they were so common, that they were caried in rings, drawne on cups, painted in chambers. See Theodoret. in histor. relig. in vita Simeonis Stelitæ. August. lib. 2. de conf. Euang. cap. 10. And the 7. Synod act. 4.

R. ABBOT.

This Section M. Bishop writeth, neither against M. Perkins nor against vs, but onely against some hott er brethren, indeed against his owne shadow, because I know none that doe not allowe of the ciuill and historicall vse of Images. But yet it shall not bee a misse to note somewhat as touching some of the examples that hee bringeth becausse albeit by his owne wordes it appeareth and is true, that they are nothing to his purpose, yet his drift is by such examples of Images, to gaine some credite to their corruption and abuse of them. It is true that Eusebius maketh mention of such an Image

^a Euseb. hist. lib. 7. cap. 17.

set vp^a at Cæsarea Philippi by the woman whome Christ cured of the bloudie issue, and that an herbe grewe at the foote of it, which when it grewe to a certaine height, cured all diseases miraculously but

but that he himselfe saw it, he saith not, neither doth hee speake of any religion or deuotion in anie sort done vnto it. If Poperie hadde then swayed, what a worke would there haue beene about that Image? what pilgrimages, what offerings, what kneeling, what censuring, and no end of superstition? But there was no such matter, nor anie manner of seruice done for the honour of it. Of the erecting of that Image Eusebius himselfe there saith :

It neede not seeme strange, that those of the Gentiles who of old were cured by our Saviour Christe did such things, for that wee haue seene the Images of his Apostles Peter and Paule, yea and of Christ himselfe, kept painted with colours in tables, for that of old they haue beene wont by a heathenish custome thus to honour them whom they tooke to bee preservers and sauiours of them. Where it is duely to be noted, that Eusebius re-ferreth the originall hereof to the Gentiles, to heathenish custome and imitation, not to any institution of Christ, or of his Apostles and Euangelistes, or other Pastours and Bishops of the Church.

Againe, that which hee sayeth of other Images of Christe and Peter and Paule, he saith as of a matter verie seldome and rare : Wee haue seene such, saith he, as importing it was no common and ordinarie thing. As for that which M. Bishop maketh the speciall commendation of this Image, which is the herbe growing at the foote of it, it maketh me greatly to suspect, that in the report of it somewhat is amisse : doe thou iudge, gentle Reader, whether there be not iust cause of such suspicion.

Frist Eusebius himselfe reporteth the matter onely by hearesay : They say, saith he, that the womans house is yet shewed, and that there continueth a notable monument of the benefite done to her by our Saviour : they say that the same hath the Image of

Iesus. It hath continued euen untill this time, and may be seene of them that trauell to that Citie. If hee hadde reported this matter as of his owne sight and knowledge, some more reason there had bene to giue credite to it, but he doth not so report it, and therefore we cannot so firmly rest vpon that which hee saith. Secondly wee so much the lesse belecue it, for that it hath no other testimonie but onely his hearesay, there being no other of the auncient fathers that giueth vs any record or witness of it. M. Bishop citeth Sozomen, making mention of that herbe also, but he doth it only vpon Eusebius his credit, other prooffe or knowledge of it he bringeth none. Now it is

b Ibid. Nec mirum videri debet eos qui ex gentibus nati sunt a Sennatore nostro curati sunt ista fecisse, quando & Apostolorum illius imagines, Pauli videlicet & Petri, demum, & ipsius Christi in tabulis coloribus depictas asseruauit videns quod vestiges ex gentili consuetudine eos quos seruaturus parauerunt hunc in modum honorare soliti sunt.

c Ibid. Damianus eius ostendit beneficij, Senatoris illius cellati admirari dicitur, & c. Haec statuarum imaginem Iesu habere dicunt, & c. Masi ad nostram uique tempora, si cui & videri ceteris abiqui in illam cunctis atque communinot possible that so famous a testimonie & iustification of the name of Christ should be omitted by Iustin Martyr, by Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, Tertullian, Arnebius, Minutus Felix, and others in their Apologies and defences of Christian religion against the heathen: yea in the expounding of the storie of that woman in the gospel, neither Origen nor Chrystome, nor Hylarie, nor Ambrose, nor Hierome make any mention of such a matter. This I suppose should much weaken the credite and opinion of the miracle by him reported, to say nothing that if any such matter had bene knowne, which could not but be knowne, it is not credible that it could haue stood for the space of those three hundred yeares in so many terrible persecutions. wherein nothing was left vnattempted or vndone to take away all thinges that might giue any glory to the name of Christe. Some speech it seemeth there grew afterwarde concerning it, at leastwise of the standard or Image which in likehoode stode there, which so soone as ^d Iulian the Apostata heard, hee sent to haue it taken away, and his owne Image to bee set vppe in steade thereof. Which being done in despite of Christ, no maruell if by thunder & lightning from heauen God reuenged it, and turned topsyturuiue the Image which that renegate set vppe against the name of Christ. Yea we doubt not concerning Popish Idols and Images of Christe and his Saints, but that Gods reuenge shall follow them, who destroy them in contumely & reproach of Christ, and in despight and hatred of his name, howfoeuer they themselues are abhominable also in the sight of God; who are the makers and vsers of them. For hee who amongst the heathens so notoriously reuenged the sacrifices that were done to idoll-gods, when they were done to them vnder the name of gods, will vndoubtedly reuenge the contempts that are offered and done to sacrilegious Idols in the name of Christ, because their malicious purpose is therein directed against Christ himselfe. The tenne tribes being deuided from Iudah, built themselues altars wherewith to sacrifice to God, exprelly contrarie to the law of God, who admitted ^e no altar but in the temple at Ierusalem, but yet when Ahab and Iezabell pulled downe those altars in contempt of God, and in behalfe of Baal, Elias the Prophet complaineth vnto God: ^f Lord they haue digged downe thine altars: That therefore which Sozomen reporteth of the destructiō of Iulians image, serueth not to adde any credit to Popish Images, if at least it

^d Sozomen. hist.
lib. 5. cap. 20.

^e Deut. 12. 11.
13. 14.

^f 1. King. 19. 10.

bee true which he alone also reporteth, who in the same place reporteth some other very fabulous and vaine things. The next example of Images is so much the more impudently alledged, for that in their owne Decrees those two Epistles of Abgar to Christ, and of Christ to Abgar, whence that fable is taken, are condemned for an apocryphall or counterfeit deuce. It is to be noted also, that ^h Eu-sebius mentioneth Abgarus sending an Epistle to Christ, & Christs answer to him, but of this matter of Christs image he saith not one word. The tale it appeareth was then begun, but it was not come to perfection till afterwards Damascen that notable Idol-monger added to it another peece, and to that peece Nicephorus added yet another peece, and so nowe it serueth M. Bishop and his fellowes for an authentical and good record. As for the miracles that hee telleth vs of, they litle auaille with vs, because the one standeth wholly vpon a false ground, and for the other or rather for both, we know that Euagrius sometimes sheweth too little discretion in the entertaining of such tales. The third instance M. Bishop himselfe distrusteth, and naming first Athanasius for the reporter of it, cometh in presently with either it is his, or some other verie graue and ancient writers. And why? for, sayth he, it is related in the seventh generall Council, namely wherein they seemed euery man to haue put on a vizard vpon his face, that they might not bee seene to blush at those lewd and shamefull forgeries wherewith they then almost eight hundred yeares after Christ, laboured to set vp the worshipping of Idols and Images, by the instigation and furtherance of a wicked Empreffe, vsurping and tyrannizing in the minoritie of her sonne. Wee shall haue afterwards further occasion to speake concerning this councill: in the meane time it is to be vnderstood, that ⁱ Sigebert mentioneth this matter of the Image of Christ to haue befallen as the report was, 400. yeares after the time of Athanasius, in the yeare of our Lord 765. at which time much good drinke was in brewing to make men drunke with the opinion of that Idolseruice which Satan then by might and maine laboured to bring in. Yet M. Bishop to directed by his maister Bellarmino, is not ashamed to cite this as vnder the name of Athanasius, by his name to gaine some credite to a lye. Such another tale doth he tell vs out of Theodorus Lecter, and Metaphrastes and Nicephorus, of the Image of the virgine Marie, taken by Saint Luke the Euangelist, of whom wee

g. Dist. 11. cap.
Sardica Roman.
ex decret. Gelas.
1. Concil. rom. 2.
Epistola Abegaruregu, and Iesum Apocrypha: Epistola Iesum ad Ab-
garum regem apo-
crypha.
h. Euseb. hist. lib. 1.
cap. 14.

i Sigebert. m.
Chron. anno. 765

reade that hee was a Physition, but that hee was also a Painter we reade not. This matter hath no record at all for fixe hundred yeares after Christ, and we must beleue it vpon their words who so long after haue deuised it of their owne heads. They come too late to informe vs what Saint Luke did, and because it hath no better witness we reiect this also for a lye. The rest I omit, importing onely a ciuill and historicall vse of Images, as M. Bishop propoundeth, which we question not, onely against the seuenth Synod we except as an vnfit witness in this cause, which from historicall vse lifted vp Images to be adored with religious and holy worship.

3. W. BISHOP.

This briefly of Images in generall: none a word or two of the signe of the Crosse, which our Protestants haue banished from all their followers: neuerthelesse it cannot be denied to haue been in most frequent vse among the best Christians of the Primitiue church.

*Tertullian hath these words, * At euery going forward and returne when we dresse vs and pull on our shoes, when wee wash and sit downe, at the lighting of candles, and entring into our chambers, finally when we set our selues to any thing, wee make the signe of the crosse on our fore-heads.*

*Saint Ambrose * exhorts vs to begin all our workes with the signe of the crosse.*

*S. Augustine. * What is that ensigne of Christ, which all men know, but the crosse of Christ, the which signe, vnesse it bee made on the fore-heads of the faithfull, yea, on the water by which they are regenerate, and on the Oyle and Chrisme wherewith they are annointed, and on the sacrifice wherewith they are nourished, not one of them are orderly and duly administred. Our Protestants then that haue neither holy Oyle, nor sacrifice to make the crosse vpon, are in pitifull taking.*

But heare also what some of the best Greecke Doctores do say of this same signe of the crosse.

*S Cyril. * agreethfully with Tertullian, saying: make this signe of the crosse both eating and drinking, both sitting and standing, and walking and speaking, in summe, at all times,*

*S. Basil * accounteth this making the signe of the crosse, among some*

Some of the principall traditions of the Apostles.

Origen * yeeldeth one reason why we make this signe, affirming that feare and trembling doth fall upon the euill spirits, when they see that signe of the Crosse made with faith. * Num. 6. m. ca. 15. Exod,

S. Gregorie Nazianzene * reporteth, that the wicked Apostata Iulian, being frighted with spirits, made the signe of the Crosse, which hee had renounced, and yet it deliuered him from them. * Orat. I. in Iul.

S. Chrysoftome most largely discourseth of the glorious vse of the Crosse, Orat quod Christus sit Deus. See the place, among an hundred other commendations of it, he hath these wordes: That the heads of Kings are not so decked with their Diademes, as with the signe of the Crosse, and concludeth, that all men strue to passe other in taking to them this admirable Crosse, and that no man was ashamed of it, but esteemed themselves more beautified with that, then with many Iewels, borders and chaines, garnished with Pearle and precious stones.

Heu quantum mutamur ab ipsis: Alas, what a pitifull change is this, that that which was of the best Christians reputed deare and holy, should now bee accounted a point of superstition and plaine witchcraft?

By all which we learne, that the best Christians both used alwayes & highly esteemed of holy Images, euen from our Sauiours owne dayes, and God himselfe hath by diuine testimonie of miracles recommended them vnto vs, not onely for the ciuill and historicall vses of them, but more to honour them whose pictures they were: for no man in his right wits can denie, but that it is and alwayes hath bene reputed as a great honour done to the deceased, to erect him an Image, to eternize the memory of his noble acts: as also that it is great encouragement to all beholders of such Pourtraits, to endenour to imitate their glorious examples. The very sight of the Image of Polemon, a most chaste and holy personage, moued an unchaste woman to change her life, as out of S. Gregorie Nazianzene is related* * Synod. 7. a. 8. 4.

Having so great testimonie for the auncient vse of Images, and such manifold commodities by the discrete and holy practise of them, he must needs be furiously transported with blind zeale, that makes warres against Crosses, and burnes holy pictures, as of late the Superintendent of Hereford did in the market place openly.

R. ABBOT.

Of the signe of the Crosse enough hath bene said before in answer to M. Bishops Epistle to the King. We condemne it not being taken as an arbitrarie and indifferent ceremonie, voluntarily vpon occasion accepted by the discretion of the Church, and left free to the like discretion as occasion requireth, either to be wholly relinquished, or the vse thereof to be moderated and abridged without opinion of anie violation or breach of religion towards God. So long as it was kept within compasse of being onely a matter of admonition, a token of profession, and occasion of remembrance of the name of Christ, so long there was no reason for any man to contend concerning the vsing of it. But since it hath growne from being a meere ceremonie, to bee accounted as a Sacrament of grace and saluation, an instrument of sanctification and holinesse, containing a spirituall vertue and power of blessing, and ministring inward strength against our spirituall enemies, it hath concerned the godly discretion and wisdom of the Church, to vse due care to redresse those erroneous and superstitious conceipts thereof, which tend to the detriment and wrong of the faith and name of Iesus Christ. We haue receiued no commandement thereof from God, no institution of Iesus Christ, no word or warrant of the Apostles, and therefore beeing brought in by men, it ought to bee subiect to the iudgement of the Church, and not the Church tyed to any bondage of the vse of it. Our Church therefore hath vsed her libertie in this behalfe, and though wee denie not but that the signe of the Crosse were in most frequent vse, as M. Bishop saith, in the primitive Church, yet considering it to bee a thing iniurious to the faith and crosse of Christ where it is made a matter of mysticall consecration and blessing, hath discharged vs of it where it was taken in that sence: and yet that wee seeme not wholly to explode that which antiquitie hath approoued, hath there retained it where it may carrie no shew of being subiect to that construction. We vse it not to our selues, to our meates and drinckes, to the water of Baptisme, to the bread and wine of the Lordes Supper, or anie other-where where it was vsed with that meaning as in Poperie it was vsed in all these: wee vse it in baptisme with the application first intended, and to them which yet knowe not the vse of it, that that which is done to them may be a remembrance to vs, & to them also when

when they shall hereafter knowe and see the same in others, not to be ashamed of Christ crucified, and of the bearing of his crosse, but with courage and constancie to follow him whose in baptisme wee haue vowed our selues to bee. We know the Papists themselues are not so frequent in the vse of the crosse in their ordinarie conuersation, as some ancienter times haue beene; and therefore as they themselues haue done in part, so they must giue vs leaue further also as occasion requireth to relinquish the custome of it. Now then as touching the testimonies of antiquitie which M. Bishop alledgeth for the approving thereof, first Tertullian and Ambrose and Cyrisdo simply note the vulgar vse of it, which in them and in thole times we condemne not: they had their reason for the vsing, and so haue we for the leauing of it. S. Austine goeth further and saith, that ^a unlesse the signe of the crosse be applied to the water of baptisme, and to the sacrifice wherewith the faithfull are nourished, neither of them is rightly or orderly done; but hee meaneth rightly or orderly in respect of the order and custome of the Church, not as touching any ordinance of God, euen as if we would say, that baptisme is not rightly administered with vs without adding afterwards the signe of the crosse, who yet account no religion or holinesse at all in the adding of it, and neither hold baptisme to be the better in the hauing, nor the worse in the wanting of it. The sacrifice of which S. Austine there speaketh, the Protestants want not, howsoeuer in respect of Popish abuse they forbear the name. He speaketh of a sacrifice wherewith the faithfull are nourished, which is our Sacrament whereof they are communicants and partakers, not the Popish sacrifice where they are only lookers on. See what hath beene laid hereof before in ^b answer of the Epistle to the King. As for Chrisme or holyoyle, as M. Bishop termeth it, spoken of in the same place by S. Austine, the Protestants are in no pitifull taking for the want of it, because they want nothing thereby that Christ hath commanded to bee had. The ancient Churches vsed their ceremonies at their discretion. ^c Faber Stapulensis noteth many ceremonies of oldetime vsed, which are now quite omitted in the Church of Rome. We leaue out Chrisme by the same authoritie whereby they haue left out of their ceremonies so many publicly receiued in ancient time. But so much the rather do we forgoe this, that we may not seeme to vphold that abhominacion of Poperie, whereby in their coniurations and benedi-

^a Aug. in Ioan. tract. 113. Quod signum nisi adhibeatur sine frontibus credentium, sine ipsi aqua qua regenerantur, sine oleo quo Chrismate unguuntur, sine sacrificio quo aluntur, nihil eorum rite perficitur.

^b S. A. 27.

^c Faber Stapul. in Dionys. eccl. hierarch.

Etions they giue power to these impotent creatures of water, oyle, salt, and such other like, to serue for soules health and for forgiueneſſe of finnes, and for resisting the power of the diuell, which are no other but blasphemous deuices, meere illusions of Satan, drawing men to put their trust in these trumperies, that they may neglect true faith and trust in Christ himself. Basill mentioneth the signe of the crosse no otherwise but in baptisme as we vse it. As for his speech of traditions, what we are to attribute vnto it, hath bene before shewed in the question thereof; The words of Origen do nothing concerne the outward signe of the crosse made with the hand, but the inward signe and print thereof consisting in faith. What do the diuels feare what doe they tremble at? Vndoubtedly at the crosse of Christ, whereby they were triumphed ouer, whereby they were stripped of their principallitie and power. Therefore feare and trembling shal fall vpon them, when they shall see faithfully fastened in vs the signe of the crosse, & the greatnes of that arme which the Lord stretched forth vpon the crosse. Therefore no otherwise will they feare thee, except they see in thee the crosse of Christ, except thou canst say, God forbid that I shoulde reioyce but in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ. This is then the crosse or signe of the crosse whereat the deuill is dismayed, euen the faith of Christ crucified, and our glorying and reioycing in him onely, whereby we are inwardly signed and marked to be his. That which Gregory Nazianzene reporteth of Iulian the Apostata we are somewhat doubtfull of, because it may be a matter either misreported or misconstrued. Iulian and his coniurer goe into a darke caue to consult with the diuell about getting the Empire. The deuill beginneth after his wonted maner to appeare. Iulian being afraid signeth himselfe with the crosse, the deuill hereupon departeth away. Being brought againe, hee departeth againe vpon the same occasion. The coniurer telleth Iulian, that it was not for feare that the deuill went away, but because he detested his making of the signe of the crosse. Now the question is, how this matter commeth to bee knowne, for here was no body but Iulian and the coniurer and the deuill, and we cannot well imagine who should be the true reporter of it. Againe, it is doubtfull whether the historians do make right construction of this accident if it were so, Iulian was a vile miscreant, a wretched catife, euen a limme of the deuill, and what, shall wee thinke that with the signe of the crosse one deuill driueth away another? It is likely that the Basill de Spir. sanct cap. 27. Vt signo crucis eos qui spern in Christum collocarunt signemus, &c.

e Orig in Exod. ho. 6. Quid timeat mones? quid tremunt? sine dubio crucem Christi in qua triumphati sunt in qua exultant in qua exultant principatus eorum & potestas. Timor ergo & tremor cadent super eos cum signum in nobis viderint crucis fideliter fixus, & magnitudinem braehy illius quod Dominus expandit in cruce. Non te ergo aliter timeant nisi videant in te crucem Christi: nisi & tu poteris dicere Mihi absit gloriari &c.

coniuurer knew well the meaning of the diuell, that it was not for feare that he went away, but onely for that he could not abide that anie that came to aske counsell of him, should make anie shewe of hauing to doe with Christ. Whatsoever the matter there were, wee vndoubtedly resolute, that it is but a meere illusion of the diuell, to seeme to goe away at the signe of the crosse, when in the heart there is no faith or beliete in the crosse of Christ, as in Iulian there was none. As for that which hee citeth out of Chrysostome, that ^f the heads of kings are not so decked with their diademes as with the signe of the crosse, our most noble King James will confesse no lesse, and we will subscribe the same, that the greatest honour of his Crowne is the signe of the crosse, as an acknowledgement of the Sonne of God that died vpon the crosse. The glorie of pearles and precious stones is mortall and transitorie, but immortall is the glory of that which his Maiestie professeth, by bearing the signe of the crosse vpon his Imperiall Crowne. That otherwise the signe of the crosse is not nowe so affected and admired as Chrysostome there describeth, it is partly for that there is not so great occasion thereof nowe as then there was, when as Christians liued so commonly amongst the heathens partly for that Poperie hath so intollerably abused it, and by sinister and superstitious fancies and opinions of it, hath put it into the hands of coniuers, sorcerers, witches, charmers, who most damnably haue made it one of the speciall instruments of their diuellish and wicked practises. Now therefore it is enough for vs, that in substance of faith concerning Christ crucified, wee agree with the auncient Church: as for the change of an accident or ceremonie, it is not sufficient to put anie difference betwixt the and vs. The house of God ceaseth not to be the same, for taking away a peece of an appentise which hath bene so beaten with wind and raine, as that it is quite rotten, and yeeldeth to the walles neither ornament nor defence. The change therefore ariseth not so much of vs, as of the thing it selfe, which howsoever it was aunciently reputed of, yet hath since bene made, though Maister Bishop will not haue it so thought, a point of superstition and plaine witchcraft. The auncient Church would not be thought to make a religion of the Crosse, and Tertullian yet continuing sound, acquiterh them thereof. ^h Wee doe no worship to Crosse, saith Minnus Felix imitating and more plainly expressing the meaning f Chrysost. hom.

Quod Christo sit Deus. Neque enim sic regia corona ornatur caput vs
serua. &c.

g Tertull. Apol. o.
16 Quicquid nos
religiosus putat,
&c, h Minus Felix in Ostav. apud Arnob
Crucis nec colimus
nec optamus: ut vos
plane qui lignos da-os confecti crucis ligneas vs
decorum vestrorum partes forsitan ad-
orati.

i Ambrose epist. 77

Per momenta singu
la fronti propria co temptum mortu inscribit, ut pote qui sciat sine cruce Domini salutem se habere non posse* Cyril cont. Iul. lb 6 Pretios ligni crucefacimus in memoria omni boni & om

ni virtutu.

k Idem in Ioan. lib
8. c. 17 Cruce infignita mens i celestis alimonia & Spiritus sancti gratia affatim pascitur

Et. Quisqum ocu

los animi ad Chris

tum cruce affixum
souverterit, ab omnivulnere peccati illico curabitur.

l Breniar. Rom. sab

bat. quarto quadra

ges. O crux ane spes unica Hoc passio

tempore, Ange pijs

iustitiam, Resist

dona veniam.

m Oramus te Do

mine sancte Pater.

Et. ut digneris be

nedicere hoc lignum cruce tua, sitremedium salute generi humano, sit

soliditas fidei, bono

rum operum pro

fectus & redemptio
an marum, sit solamota & protectio & tucela adversus

sua iacula immo

corum &c.

Exod. 32. 4.

of Tertullian, but you, saith he to the Pagans, who consecrate wooden gods, do haply worship wooden crosses as peeces of your gods. Ambrose maketh this the vse of the signe of the crosse, that thereby a Christian man euery while writeth vpon his owne forehead the contempt of death, as who knoweth that without the crosse of Christ hee cannot be saued. When Iulian objected to Christians the vse of the Crosse, Cyril maketh no more thereof but this that, they made it in remembrance of all goodnes & all v. rtue. Whatsoeuer they say of the crosse or of the signe of the crosse, they referre it to the faith of Christ crucified, not to the crosse it selfe, but to the inward cogitation of the benefite of his crosse, k The mind marked with the crosse saith Cyril, is plentifully fed with heavenly foode, and grace of the holy Ghost: who soeuer turneth the eyes of his mind to Christ nailed to the crosse he shall be forthwith cured from all wound of sinne. They vse the outward signe onely to turne the minde to the behoulding of the crosse of Christ, thereby hoping to receiue comfort and defence. But Poperie hath taught men to doe as if God had giuen to the signe of the crosse some formal power to doe great wonders for vs, in this sence haue witches & charmers borowed it from them, as was before said Yea Poperie hath taught men most blasphemously to say to the wooden Crosse:

1 All-haile, O Crosse, our onely hope

In this time of the passion:

To godly men increase righteousnesse,

And to offenders grant forgiveness.

They haue made the people to worship it, to pray to it, to do to it all manner of religious deuotiō, as if the wooden crosse were to be taken for Christ himselfe. Vpon pretence that hee hanged vpon a crosse, they haue attributed that to the crosse which becometh to Christ onely. Consider the prayer which they make for consecratiō of the crosse; m We beseech thee O Lord, holy Father, that thou wilt vouchsafe to blesse this wood of thy crosse, that it may be a sauing remedy to mankind, strength of faith, furtherance of good workes, and a redemption of soules: that it may be a comfort, protection and defence against all the cruell darts of the enemies, &c. This is nothing else but to set vpa blocke or a peece of wood in stead of Christ, and to cause men to say vnto it, Thou art our redēption & saluation, euen as the Israe lites said of the golden Calfe, n These are thy Gods which brought thee out of the land of Egypt. These and such other like both impious blasphemies and superstitious fancies, haue caused vs to content our selues with the faith of Christ crucified, and to forbear the outward ceremony of the crosse, which was of old vsed only as a token of the profession of that faith. For conclusion of this matter of the crosse thou must note gentle Reader that it is but onely a crosse whereof they all speake whom he hath alledged; of the Crucifix they say no thing. And so indeed they vsed barely the crosse, but the Crucifixe in those times was yet vnknowne. That seemeth to haue growne from the Pagans, saith Beatus Rhenanus, the fathers winking at it, that so they might be drawne to Christianitie. That which came in by conniueance and winking at Pagan fancy, the Church of Rome hath since taken hold of, & turned it according to the manner of the Pagans to extreame abomination. Now albeit full little it bee which M. Bishop hath hitherto saide in the behalfe of the Images, & that vpon so broken and hollow grounds, as that we may thinke him scarcely well in his wits that would build any thing therevpon, yet he is well perswaded of that he hath said, and telleth vs that wee may learne thereby that that yet wee cannot see, that Christians haue alwaies highly esteemed of Images, that God hath recomended them by miracles, and that not only for the ciuill and historicall vse, but more to honor them whose pictures they were. The signe of the crosse indeede belongeth not to this question, but otherwise what a poore deale hath bee brought vs lies and all, that serueth any way to iustifie their Popish vsage of Images. He hath told vs of certaine pictures of Christ, and Peter and Paul, which wee also haue: hee bringeth but one only example of any standing Image, and that acknowledged to be of heathenish custome, and imitation of Paganisme, The miracles that hee reporteth what slender and vncertaine prooffe they haue, appeareth by that that hath bene said. Surely if Popery had bene then in the world, M. Bishop would haue bene able to haue brought vs manie famous authors and pregnant examples of all Churches for the same which they now do. Many carts, are not able to beare the Legends that might be written of Images, and their miracles since the Church of Rome first vndertooke the patronage of them, and shall we beleue that the ancient Church was of their mind, when there is so scant and silly shew of any authority or testimony for warrant thereof? Wee may therefore see what a speciall faculty M. Bishop hath:

o Beat. Rhen. in Tertul. Apologet.
ca. 16. apparet.
Crucifixi effigiem
sculptilem aut pict.
am id temporu cruci non solitam abidi-
c. Id a gentilibus
natum videtur, conuenientibus sancti patribus ut vel sic ad Christianis-
mum pertinerentur.

hath in making a conclusion, and how workmanlike he can build a large house vpon a little ground, But out of that wit which hee hath shewed therein, he telleth vs, that no man in his right wits can denie, but that it is, and alwaies hath bene reputed a great honour to the deceased, to erect him an Image to eternize the memory of his noble acts Where if his owne wits had bene right, hee would haue remembred that this of old was a heathenish reputation, but no such honour done to the deceased amongst the people of God. There was no such honour done to Abraham, & Isaac, & Iacob, to eternize the memorie of their noble acts not to Moses nor Iosuah nor Dauid, nor any other of those holy men. And what shall wee think that Solomon had not his right wits, who in the building of the Temple neglected to set vp Images of all these, to eternize the memorie of their noble acts? This conceipt of Maister Bishops is prophane and fooliish, and fauouring wholly of Paganisme, neither dowe finde that the holy men of God haue euer reputed this as an honour to be done vnto dead men. Nay, he herein pointeth to the very roote from whence idolatry first sprung. Men being by death deprived of them whom they loued, would comfort themselues by making their pictures and images, therby to keepe some kind of sight and memoriall of them. Thus the father did by his deceased sonne. and men to them at whose hands they had receiued great benefits, or whom they would seeme in speciall manner to admire. From humane effectiō they proceeded to opinion and exercise of religion, and whilest they doated vpon Images of the dead, they would thereby doe some honour and seruice to them. The heart of man being gone astray from God, grew more & more in the liking of this deuice, and the diuell ceased not by all meanes to further the same, vntill he had brought it to the height of all abhominable idolatry, and found meanes to haue deuotion done to himselfe thereby vnder the name of God. Thus S. Austine noteth, that

p. August. cont. Faust. lib. 2. cap. 17. Ex desiderio mortuorum constituta sunt imagines vnde simulachrorum usus exortus est, & maiore adulatione diuini honoris deserebantur tanquam in caelum recepti, pro quibus se in terris damonia colenda supposuerunt & sibi sacrificari à deceptis & perditis flagitarunt.

P of desire or loue to the dead images were set up, whence the use of Idols began, & by greater flattery diuine honors were done to them, as being taken up into heauen, in steed of whom the diuels here on the earth did substitute themselues, and required of deceiued and wretched men, to haue sacrifice done vnto them. Hereof the booke of Wisdom saith:

¶ The vaine-glerie of men brought in Idols into the world. When a father mourned for his sonne that was taken away sodainly, hee made an image for him that was once dead whom now hee worshippeth as a God, and ordained to his seruants ceremonies and sacrifices. Here is the originall and effect of that fantastickall deuice which Maister Bishop mentioneth of eternizing the memorie of men, and of their noble acts, by making Images and pictures of them. As for that which he addeth of great encouragement hereby giuen to all beholders of such portraites, to indeauour to imitate their glorious examples, they are the glorious words of a vaine man babling his owne conceipts. If God had seene this to bee a fit meanes for encouragement to vertue, hee would not haue failed to giue to his people a commaundement thereof, neither would he by speciall law haue taken away from them all vse and practise of this encouragement. He telleth vs a tale out of their second Nicene Counsell, of a lewd woman reclaimed by the sight of Polemons picture, but hee must bring vs a better authoritie if hee will haue vs to beleue him, because wee know it to haue bene the practise of that Councell, to tell their owne lyes vnder the Fathers names Surely wee must thinke that shee was well prepared before, that by the sight of a picture could be moued to leaue her vitious and vnchast life. Out of doubt amongst all the pictures and Images of their Romish Church, Maister Bishop cannot giue vs one example of the like. But he telleth vs that the manifold commoditie of Images, stand in the discrete and holy practise of them, and it is likely that that discretion and holinesse is worne out from amongst them, and for that cause not one Curtizan learned by the Image of our Lady that which that vnchast woman learned by the Image of Polemon, and so much the lesse for that sometimes some gallant Curtizan is chosen to make our Ladies Image to her likenesse. Foolish vaine man, what discretion can there be in that, in the practise whereof God hath pronounced men to be ^r void of understanding? What holinesse can bee in that which he affirmeth to be ^f an abomination? what profit in that which he hath taught vs to be ^c profitable for nothing? what teaching by that which he calleth ^u the doctrine of vainity concerning which he hath said ^x Woe vnto him that saith to the dumbe stone, Rise vp, it shall teach thee? Which things considered, the Superintendent of Hereford, saith he but good manners would hane taught him to say the r Esa. 44.19.

f Ibid.

c Ver. 10.

u Jerem. 5. 3.

x Habac. 2. 19.

the Lord Bishop of Hereford did iustly that which he did to take away crosse and pictures from such as make Idols of them, and openly to burne them, not transported therein with blind zeale, but led thereto with mature indgement and discretion, not being like the Trent and Romish Bishops, who for the most part are like the Idols which they worship carying a name of that they are not; but a man of learning, and grauity, and wisdom, giuing honour to the place wherein he is, as the place hath done to him.

4. W. BISHOP.

The difference. Now to the points in controuersie, which are three, as M. Perkins delinereth: The first is, in that the Church of Rome holds it lawfull to make Images to resemble God; though not in respect of his diuine nature, yet in respect of some properties and actions. We contrarily saith M. Perkins hold it unlawfull to make Images any way to represent the true God. For the second commandement saith plainly Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any grauen Image, nor the likenesse of any thing in heauen, &c. The Papists say that the commandement is meant of the Images of false Gods; but it must needs be understood by the Image of the true Iehouah, & it forbids to resemble God, either in his natures, or in his properties and works; for so saith the Romane Catechism upon the second commandement.

Answer. This passeth all kind of impudencie, to quote the Romane Catechisme in defence of that opinion, which it doth of set purpose disproue. It teacheth indeede, that the very nature and substance of God, which is wholly spirituall, cannot be expressed and figured by corporall lineaments & coulours, & alleadgeth the places produced by M. Perkins to proue that unlawfull; yet by and by annexeth these words: Let no man therefore thinke it to be against religion, and the lawe of God when any person of the most holy Trinitie is purtraited in such sort as they haue appeared, either in the old & new Testament, &c. But let the Pastor teach, that not the nature of God, but certaine properties and actions appertaining to God, are represented in such pictures. If the man be not past grace, he will surely blush at such a foule error. His texts of Scriptures are taken out of the same place of the Catechisme, and do proue onely that Gods proper nature cannot nor may not be resemblod in any corporall shape or likenesse.

Then

Then Maister Perkins returnes to confute the answer made him: that Idols are there only prohibited and saith, that we then confound the first and second commandment. For in the first was forbidd'n all false Gods which man frames unto himselfe, by giuing his heart and the principall affections thereof unto them. (Good) and in the second (admitting it to be the second) is forbidden to draw into any material likenesse, that Id. ll which the heart had before framed unto it selfe, and so giue it anie bodily worshipp: which is distinction good enough to make two seuerall commandments. Now the Romane Catechisme, following Clement of Alexandrina: Lib. 6. Stromat. and Saint Augustine Quest. 71. super Exod, and Ep. 119. cap. 11. and the Schoole-doctors in 3. Sent. distinct. 3. doth make two commaundements of the Protestants last, distinguishing desiring thy neighbours wife, from coueting thy neighbours goods, as they do, Thou shalt not commit adulterie, from Thou shalt not steale: and make but one of the first two, because the former doth forbid inward, and the second outward Idolatry: and the outward and inward actions about the saide obiect are not so distinct, as the desiring of so diuerse thinges, as a mans wife for lecherie, and his goods of couetousnesse: And yet besides, adde another reason verie probable, that the rewarde and punishment belonging alike to all the commaundements, cannot in good order be thrust into the middle of them, but must be placed eiber with the first or last. Now comprehending the two former in one, the rewarde is annexed conueniently to the first: whereas, if you make them two: it is out of order, and without any good reason put after the second. This I say, not to condemne the other deuision, which many of the auncient wruters follow: but to shew how little reason Maister Perkins had to trust to that answer of his, that we should confound the first and second, which he saw the very catechisme cited by himselfe, doth make but one of both.

R. ABBOT

M. Bishop doth much amisse here to put M. Perkins to the blush for an ouer-sight, as touching the Romane Catechisme, and therein verie ill prouideth for himselfe, who in his owne booke hath scarcely written one leafe, wherein there is not cause for himselfe to blush. Verily, he hath little cause to bee so angry with M. Perkins, for thinking better of the Romane Catechisme then it dooth deserue.

deserue : hee onely poynted at it in a marginall note by memorie. which oftentimes deceiueth the carefullest man. Albeit it may be that M. Bishop and I are both deceiued, and so is it very likely, that by ouer-sight of the writer or the printer, the marginall note is put after, which should be applied to the wordes before. The Papistes say the commaundement is meant of the Images of false Gods. But the point of question is, whether it be lawfull to make an Image to represent God. We say it is not lawfull, because God hath wholly forbidden it, when he saith, Thou shalt not make to thyselfe anie grauen image, &c. That hereby God forbiddeth the making of any Image to him, we prooue, for that God after the giuing of the law, aduertiseth his people by Moses, as to declare the intent of this commaundement, that therefore ^a they sawe no image in the day that the Lord spake vnto them in Horeb out of the midst of the fire, because they should take heede vnto themselves, not to corrupt themselves by making them a grauen Image, or representation of any figure. Againe, by the Prophet Esay he expostulateth the matter with idolaters saying ^b To whom will ye liken God, or what similitude will ye set up vnto him? M. Bishop answereth, that those texts do proue onely that Gods proper nature cannot or may not be resembled in any corporall shape or likeness. But if these places proue onely this, what doe they proue more then the heathen Idolaters themselves freely confessed, such at least as were of any capacitie or discretion amongst them. They knewe their Images to be but corruptible thinges, hauing beeginning and end, and therefore that they could not expresse the nature and condition of the Godhead, which they knew to be immortall. Hermes Trismegistus as Cirill alledgeth, saide, that ^c it is impossible to signifie the i incorporeall God by a body, or by a thing vnperfect to comprehend that that is perfect, or to compare that that is eternall, to that that is but for a moment. Zenophon a follower of Socrates, acknowledgeth that ^d the forme of the true God cannot be seene, and therefore is not to be enquired of: as also Aristo Chius, that the same cannot be comprehended. They both, saith Arnobius, perceived the maiesty of God by despaire to attaine to the understanding of him. Antisthenes the Cynicke affirmed, that ^e God is not like to any, and therefore that no man can learne him by an image. So doth Euripides for the notifying

^c Clemens Alexand. in protrept. Antisthenes dicit Deum nullisse similem: quare eum nemo potest discere ex imagine.

of God vse these woordes: Who seeth all things, and himselfe is not scene. Plato saith: It is hard to finde out the father and maker of the world, and when thou hast found him, it is vnpossible to declare him: yea he saith further, that no name is fitting to him, and that no knowledge can comprehend him, and the names that are giuen him are taken of after-effects, and abusiuely spoken of him. It were infinite to alledge all that might be here brought, to shew that the Pagans and Heathens tooke the proper nature of God to be incomprehensible, and therefore made not their images as to expresse the deitic, but onely as signes and shadowes fitting the condition and state of men. And if the heathen idolaters conceived thus, much more are we to think so of the Iewes, that they well vnderstood that the maiestic of the immortall God could not bee set forth by the figures or forme of any creature. What, when they made the golden Calfe, and worshipped it, doth M. Bishop imagine them to be such Calues, as to thinke God himselfe to bee like a Calfe? They knewe their Calfe could not set forth the proper nature of a Calfe, and therefore must needs bee farre off from thinking that it could resemble the proper nature of God. So was it likewise as touching the Calues that were set vppe at Dan and Bethel: they were set vppe as visible signes at which they should worship God, but neuer did they think that the proper nature of God was described or resembled by them. As the Romanes at first worshipped Mars their God of battell by a speare, not because they thought him to be like a speare, but because the speare imported his property and act, so the Iewes worshipped God by a Calfe, not thinking him to bee like vnto it, but thereby onely to bectoken him, who by the Oxen in the tillage of the ground, ministreth bread for the sustenance of the life of man. Now therefore Maister Bishop yeeldeth vnto them a good Apologie and defence of all their Idolatry committed in these Calues. For they hadde to say for themselues, that they trespassed not the commaundement of God, because they did not intende by their Images to resemble the proper nature of God, but did onely represent him in his effects, which the commandement forbiddeth not. But this seruice serued not the turne, neither did the people of God euer dreame that by this distinction they might take liberty to set vpp a nic Image vnto God. Yea, and therefore dooth Moses tell them, as before was alledged, that they sawe no Image in the day when the

Ibid. Qui cuncta cernit, ipse sed non creatur.

Ibid. Vniuersum in patrem et effectorem & inuentum diffinit est & cum inuenti fieri non potest et enuncius.

In Cy. il. cont. Iul. lib. 1 De vno Deo

Plato dixit nomen illi nullum congruere, neq. humanam cognitionem posse appellat ones qua de ipso dicuntur a posterioribus esse, abusuq. de ipso dicit.

i Exod. 31.4.

k I King. 12.28

I Clem. Alexand. in protrept. Roma antiquitus statua Marti esse habeam dic. scriptor Varro.

I

S

Lord

Lord spake vnto them, because they should make none, no not to represent him in his properties and actions, because hee appeared in no such. Therefore doth he by the Prophet disclaime the likening of him, and the setting up of a similitude vnto him, because hee will no way be likened, nor will haue any similitude to represent him in his properties and effects. Therefore Origen telleth Celsus the Pagan, ¹¹ that common sense doth will men to thinke that God is not delighted with honour of images made by men, to represent his likenesse or anie signification of him, yea ¹² who saith hee, that hath his right wits will not laugh at him, who after those excellent and very philosophical disputations concerning God or the Gods doth looke to Images, and either offereth prayers vnto them, or by the contemplation thereof, as of some visible signe goeth about to lift vpp his mind to the cogitation of God thereby to be vnderstood? Thus he wholly explodeth all vse of Images for anie signification of God, or any representing of him, as thereby to be remembered or vnderstood of vs. We may not therefore so vnderstand the commandement of God, as to leaue men at liberty to commit idolatrie, and to hold themselues sufficiently excused, for that they meane not by their Idols to resemble the proper nature of the Godhead. But they further tell vs, that God by that commaundement forbiddeth onely Idols, that is as M. Bishop expoundeth, either Images that are taken for Gods, or Images of false Gods. So then take away false Gods, and here is no forbidding of Images at all: they shall be a part of the religion and worship of the true God both in himselfe and in his Saints, onely wee must take heede that we do not admit by them any false God. Thus they circumscribe and pare the commaundements of God, and force them by their constructions into such compasse, as that they may doe what they list, and yet not seeme to bee within any checke of them. But to this M. Perkins answereth, that this should be to confound the first and second commaundement, the one forbidding all inward, the other all outward idolatrie, which M. Bishop acknowledgeth to be distinct on good enough to make two severall commaundements, and yet will not be content to rest vpon that distinction. Hee will not condemne it, but yet neither will hee commend or follow it, because hee well knoweth that it condemneth them of hainous impietie and sacrilege against God, for that they then in their ordinarie Primmers and Catechismes, do wholly leaue out one of Gods commaundemēt

m Origen. cont.
Cels. lib. 3. Communis sensu cogitare
nos iubet non dele-ctari Deum hoc
honore imaginum
quæ efficiunt eius aut significationem
repraesentat ali-
quom.
n Ibid. 4. 7. Quis sana mentis non rideat eum qui po-
tenter illius est
valde Philosophi
cas de Deo sine dijs disputationis statu
ae respicit et aut
preces eis offert aut
per earum costum-
plationem tanquam
sacris al cuius con-
spicui conatur anti-mumerigere ad imaginationem inselligibilem nati-
nam?

and cannot denie but they do so. Now they haue some colour for that they doe, as setting downe but a brieft and the capitall matter of the commaundement, but if that distinction be admitted, they haue nothing to excuse themselues of leauing out the whole commaundement. And thus they do indeede to the vttermost of their power suppress and conceale this second commaundement: and whereas they cannot preuaile but that some will bee reading, yet they so order the matter that they shall take no knowledge of that in their reading, least thereby they grow to any dislike or suspition of their idolatry. But the distinction of those two commaundements is manifest, God in the one condemning all false gods, in the other all false worship, as namely, in making any image vnto God, or in way of deuotion & seruice to him, or the image of any other thing whatsoeuer, to yeelde thereto, or otherwise without an image to yeeld to the thing it selfe any part of deuotion and religion, which is a thing belonging to God onely. And we cannot doubt but that there is one commaundement for preferuing the externall worship of God entire and pure, to which as to the head (these ten commaundements being not onely lawes but also heads or capitall points of particular lawes, as Philo well noteth) all the particular lawes as touching that matter of the worship of God are to be referred: Which becaufe they cannot bee taken to be contained in any of the other three commaundements, therefore we must necessarily take this as a distinct commaundement to which all those particulars must belong. And thus the Iewes, whose testimonie in this behalte is of great moment, tooke them to be distinct, as appeareth by P Josephus and Philo; reckoning the first commaundement, that there is one God, and he onely to be worshipped: the second, that no image of any creature is to bee adored. In the same sort doth Athanasius distinguish them ¶ The first is, I am the Lord thy God: the second, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any image or any likeness. Origen saith, that some tooke those two commaundements to be one: but if we so take them, saith he, we shall not make up the number of ten commaundements, and where then shall be the truth of the name of the Decalogue, namely, which signifieth ten commaundements? He saw well that there can be no reason of deuiding the last commaundement as we reckon it into two: and therefore that there can be but nine vnles we distinguish the two first in such sort as hath bin said. But the Romane catechisme M. Bishop telleth c Philo. Ind. de Decalog. Leges sunt capitales particularium.

p Ioseph. Antiq. lib. 3. cap. 4. Primum praeceptum Deum esse unum & hunc solum colendum: secundum Nullius animalis simulacrum adorandum. Sic Philo de Decalogo.

¶ Athanas. in Synop. Exod. Primum est Ego sum Dominus Deus tuus Alterum. Non facies tibi ydoli simulacrum &c ¶ Origen. in Exod. hem. 8. Hac omnia nonnulli putant unum esse mandatum Quod sita putetur non complebitur decem numerus mandatorum & ubi iam erit Decalogi veritas?

tellecth vs doth otherwise, following therein the diuision of Austine and Clemens Alexandrinus, deciding the Protestants last commaundement into two. Where we see the course that they follow in the vse of the Fathers writings, namely, that howsoever they professe to stand to the generall accord and agreement of them, yet if some one or two varying from all the rest doe serue their turne, they leaue all the rest, and the matter shall goe with them. As for the Schoole-doctors, M. Bishop did but put them in to fill vp the roome: for little reason is there that the streames of our religion should be taken to runne out of puddles that haue bene so lately digged, and as well might hee haue named himselfe and his fellowes as haue named them. But by reason hee will make it good, that there is more reason to confound the two first commaundements, then to make one of that which we call the last: because the first forbidding inward, and the second outward idolatry, the outward and inward actions about the same object are not so distinct as the desiring of so diuers things, as a mans wife for lechery, and his goods of concupisnesse. Which reason of his is alreadie ouerthrowne by that that hath been sayd of the difference of two first commaundements. For thereby wee see that as God and the worship of God are two distinct things, so the commaundements must be diuers which instruct vs to conceiue of our dutie in respect of both. The first commaundement requireth of vs an acknowledgement of one true God: the second requireth the true worshipping of him. A man may acknowledge one onely God, and that hee onely is to bee worshipped according to the first commaundement, and yet breake the second commaundement by worshipping him amissie, as by setting vp an image whereby to worship him, which hee there forbiddeth to be done. Therefore those termes of inward and outward idolatry, do not sufficiently distinguish those two commaundements, because the first commaundement is broken by outward idolatry, in the outwarde professing and following of any false god: and there is inward idolatry against the second commaundement in the inward framing of idol-seruice vnto the true God. Here is then very materiall ground of difference betwixt the first and second commaundement, but a silly reason is it to alledge a difference of things coueted and desired, to make thereby a diuision of the last commaundement. The thing there forbidden is lust and concupiscesce as the roote and fountaine of all sinne and wickednesse, and therefore the Apostle setteth downe for the whole effect of that commaundement, Thou shalt not lust, and calleth it often the commaundement, the commaundement, as to note that it is but one commaundement which saith, Thou shalt not lust. Hee exemplifieth lust in the commaundement by some obiects, leauing the rest to be vnderstood but if we wil deuide the commaundement of lusting, because the things are diuers that are lusted after, there must be a necessitie of making more commaundements, because as there are lusts tending to couetousnesse and lechery, so there are also that tend to disobedience, to murder, to lying and slaundering, and such like, and therefore by M. Bishops reason there should bee so manie seuerall commaundements against lust. But to shew that that diuision which they follow is not good, we may note that whereas they make the ninth commaundement, Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours wife, and the tenth, Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, &c. which order may not be broken if we will deuide the commaundements as they do: Moses himselfe dooth alter the same, and setteth it downe as it was first endited thus, Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, thou shalt not Exod. 20. 17. couet thy neighbours wife, nor his seruant, &c. as it was after repeated thus, Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours wife, thou shalt not Deut. 5. 27. couet thy neighbours house, nor his seruant, &c. and by so indifferent placing of those two branches, infallibly prooueth that they are not two commaundements but one only. If M. Bishop wil not yeeld this we would know howe he will order the commaundements, as in the twentieth of Exodus they were first deliuered from the mouth of God? If he will make the ninth commaundement, Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, then hee must say that the ninth and tenth doe both serue to forbid the coueting of our neighbours goods. If hee will not say so, hee must accorde with vs that those two which they deuide are but one commaundement, and therefore that which they make but one, must be deuided into two. His other reason is of the same moment as the former, that reward and punishment belonging alike to all the commaundements, must be placed either with the first or with the last. But M. Bishop considereth not, that there is a punishment or threatning annexed also vnto the third commaundement and yet it is no argument to say, that therefore it must bee the first.

Again, hee considereth not that G O D annexeth that promise and threatning to the second commaundement, not for the order but for the matter of it, to mouue his people so much the more attentiuely to regard it, as giuing to vnderstand that it most highly prouoketh him, to haue the honour that belongeth to him giuen to stockes and stones, and that men should fall downe to the workes of their owne hands. And this the Scripture most plentifully teacheth vs, that God in so high manner detesteth this about other finnes, as that for this he giueth men ouer to their owne hearts lusts, to v/e affections, to a reprobate sense, to do those things that are not conuenient, that by all filthynesse and vncleannesse they may dishonour themselues who haue in so base and vile sort dishonoured him. Very pregnant example whereof we haue in the Church of Rome, which since it gaue entertainment to this idolatrie, hath made it selfe a verie sinke of sinne, stinking and lothsome both to Christians and Infidels, neuer ceasing running headlong from one corruption to another, from one wickednesse to another, vntill it had made vp a full measure of all abomination, and became according to the wordes of S. Iohn, ² an habitation of dems, the hold of all soule spirits, & a cage of enery vncleane and hatefull bird.

Nowe therefore God knowing howe prone and readie his people were to this grosse idolatrie whereof they presently gaue example in worshipping the golden calfe, giueth them a speciall warning in this behalfe, telleth them that he is a ielous God; and thereby signifieth, that as the ielousie of the husband cannot endure that the wife vnder any pretence yeeld the vsage of her body to another, nor can bee satisfied by hauing it answered to him, that she doth it not as to her husband, but onely as to her husbands friend; and for loue to her husband, so he cannot brooke the communicating of his worshippe vnder any pretence to idols and images, to blockes and stones, nor taketh it for answer that wee account them not as gods, but doe it thereby to honour God; but most seuerely reuengeth this filthie polluting of the religion that is due vnto him. This is the cause of annexing the threatning to this second commaundement, and very simply dooth the Romane Catechisme gather thereof the confounding of it with the first.

y Rom. I. 24. 26.
28.

u Iohn. 18. 2.

5. W. BISHOP.

But M. Perkins goeth on and saith, that our distinction betwene Image and Idoll (that Image representeth a thing that is, but an Idoll a thing supposed to bee but is not) is false and against the auncient writers, who make it all one. Wee prouethe contrary, first by the authoritie of the ancient Doctors, Origen* and Theodoret* who in expresse words deliuer the same difference of Image and Idoll, which is taken out of S. Paul, * saying that an idoll is nothing in the world, that is, such idols as the heathen take for their gods, are nothing formally, that is, though they be great peeces of wood or stone materially, yet they represent a thing that is not, that is, such a thing to be a god, which is nothing lesse. See M. Perkins but quote one place in the whole Bible, where they are used both for one.

* Hom. 8. m.
Exod.
* 2y. 38. in Ex.
* 1. Cor. 8.

I will cite some, where if you use the one for the other, you must offend all good Christian eares: as where a man is said to 'bee made' after the image of God, may you say after the idoll of God? Christ is said to be the image of his Father: will you call him the idoll of his Father? Surely hee cannot denie but the seuenth generall Councell holden about nine hundred yeares past and gone, is so farre off from making image and idoll all one, that it doth accurse all them who call the image of Christ and his Saints, idols.

But Tertullian* (saith M. Perkins) affirmeth them to bee all one: * D. d. d. d. d. not so neither: for he maketh Idolum a diminutive of eidos, which signifieth a forme or similitude: so that Idolon is but a small similitude or slender image, not so much for the quantitie, as for that it representeth but darkely.

Eustathius an excellent Greeke interpreter, upon the eleventh booke of Homers Odissea, describeth Idolum to signifie a vaine and vanishing image, as the shadow of a man, a ghost, or phantastical imagination. And so it cannot bee that all prophane Authors use these two words indifferently, seeing both in proper signification, and by the declaration of the learned there is great difference betwene them.

But Saint Stephen calls the golden Calfe an idoll, so it was indeede: What is that to the purpose?

And Saint Hierome saith, that idols are the images of dead men, (adde) that are taken for gods: True, many Idols be Images: all such as truly represent any person that was once living heere, but no images be idols, unlesse it be taken for a god: And so Idols requires besides the Image, that it be made a god, or the image of a false god.

R. ABBOT.

Heere is nothing but fraud and falshood, and a ridiculous shifting of the commaundement of God, by an idle distinction of Idols and Images. They tell vs that the second commaundement forbiddeth Idols onely and not Images, when as in truth euery Image to which deuotion or worship is performed, is no other but an Idol. The word εἰδωλον in Greeke signifieth originally the same that imago doth in Latine, that is, an image, forme or shape, as appeareth by the vse of the word generally amongst all prophane authors. But by Ecclesiasticall vse, the signification thereof is restrained, and it is made the proper name of those Images to which any religious seruice or deuotion is done. The name of an Image then continueth more generall in signification, noting euery forme or likenesse of any thing described or shaped to whatsoever purpose or intent, as is the Princes Image vpon the coyne, and the likenesses of men, beasts, birds, trees, flowers, wherewith embroiderers, painters, grauers, caruers, adorne and beautifie their works, and in a word euery impression and forme whereby one thing carrieth the resemblance of another. The Image then of it selfe is but an Image, and seruing barely to resemble any creature, it hath no offence in it, but adde worship vnto it and spirituall deuotion, and it becommeth thereby an Idoll, and the deuotion that is done vnto it is idolatry; that is, the worship of an Idoll. Howsoever therefore the words originally are in meaning the same, yet because the custome of the Church hath appropriated the one to speciall signification, wee accordingly distinguish them: in such sort notwithstanding as that where the name of Image implieth that for which an Image is called an Idoll, as in this question of Images it doth, there we take an image and an idoll to bee the same, and no difference betwixt them. But the truth of this matter will appeare in examining the particulars which heere M. Bishop hath set downe for the iustifying of their Idols. The difference that that hee maketh betwixt an Idoll and an Image is this, that an image representeth a thing that is, an Idoll representeth a thing supposed to be, but is not. Where I pray thee (gentle Reader) to marke well how handfomly they deale in the contriuing of this matter. An Idol forsooth is a representation onely of such things as haue no being, and the second commandment forbiddeth onely idols: it therefore must be vnderstood to condemne onely representations of such things as haue no being. Which being so, wee marvell what those words import which are added in the commandement, The likenes of any thing that is in heauen above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth: or what Moses meant speaking yet more particularly, Take heed that ye make not the representation of any figure, the likenesse of man or woman, the likenesse of any beast that is vpon the earth, the likenesse of any feathered fowle, the likenesse of any creeping thing, &c. We would know of M. Bishop what it is that Moses here condemneth, whether Images or Idols? If hee say Images, then Idols onely are not forbidden by this commandement. If hee say Idols, then Idols are not onely representations of those things that are not, because all the things here mentioned haue their reall existence and being in the world. But we can vse no better meanes to circumuent him, then by the authorities which hee himselfe alledgeth, where following the example of his maister Bellarmino, hee referreth his Reader to the places, but setteth not downe the words, because he well knoweth that they fully make against him. First, Origen hauing set downe that Gods and Idols differ much: and againe that there is difference of Idols and resemblances or images: hee prosecute the latter in this sort, It is one thing to make an Idoll, another thing to make a similitude or image. If in any mettall of gold or siluer, or wood or stone, a man make the forme of any foure-footed beast; or serpent, or bird, and set vp the same to be worshipped, he hath not made an Idoll, but an image or similitude: or if he set vp a picture for that purpose, he is to be said to haue made a similitude: but he maketh an Idoll, who according to the Apostle, saying that an idoll is nothing, maketh that that is not. And what is that that is not? It is a shape which the eye hath not seene, but the mind fancieth to it selfe. As for example, if to the body of a man one frame the head of a dog or of a ram, or to one shape of a man make two faces to a mans likenes so farre as the brest, do adde the hinder parts

b Origen in Exod. bo. 8. Longe aliud sunt Idola & aliquid dy: & rursum differentia idolorum & similitudinum. Aliud est ergo facere idolum, aliud similitudinem. Si quoniam in qualibet metallo auri vel argentis, vel ligni, vel lapidi faciat faciem quadrupedi animalis: uel serpentis: uel aui & stant in illam adoranda, non idolum sed similitudinem facit: uel etiam si piliuram ad hoc ipsam faciat, &c. Idolum uero facit ille qui facit secundum scripturam dicentem quia idolum nihil est: scit quod non est. Quid est autem quod non est? Species quam non uidet oculus, sed in se sibi animus fingit. Ut si quis humani membri caput cannu aut arctis formet, uel ursum in hominu habita duas facies fingat aut humano pilosum postremo partes equi aut piscu adiungat. Hac & similia quis facit, non similitudinem sed idolum facit. Facit enim quod non est, nec habet aliquid simile sui, &c. Qua sermo Dei uniuersa complectens simul aburat & abigit & non solum idolum: sed uocat sed & similitudine omnium quoniam in terra sunt & in aqua & in caelo.

of a horse or of a fish. He that maketh these or such like, maketh not a similitude but an idoll. For hee maketh that that is not, nor hath any thing like unto it. All these the word of God comprising together, condemneth and reiecteth, and doth not onely forbid an idoll to be made, but also the similitude of all things that are in the earth, & in the waters, and in heaven. Theodor^{us} imitating Origen, speaketh to the very same effect: How differ an idoll and a similitude or likeness? An idoll representeth nothing that hath being, but a similitude is the image or shape of some thing being. Whe then some of the Greeks doe fancie shapes that are not, as Sphinxes, Tritons, Centaures; and the Egyptians, men with dogs faces or heads of oxen, such fictions of things that are not be called idolls, but similitudes be calleth the image of things that are, as of the Sunne, the Moone, the starres, of men, of beasts, of creeping things, and such like all which hee forbiddeth to worship, either outwardly by gesture or inwardly by mind. Thus these authors the latter of them taking occasion by the former, apply the name of Idols onely to such imagined formes and shapes which haue nothing answerable to them in the creatures of the world, as Sphynx bearing in the face the shape of a maide with wings, and all the rest of the bodielike a Lion; Triton or Dagon being the forepart of a man and the hinderpart of a fish; the Centaures being in the one part men and the other horses; Anubis having an ox-head to the bodie of a man, and sundry other such like. Now what a trouble would it bee to M. Bishop, if the honest man with whom hee questioned^d before should come to him, saying, Good sir, you asked mee a question a while since, I pray let mee make bold now to aske you another, What, were all the idolls that wee heare and reade of such anticke and counterfeits as you tell vs out of these authors, formes and shapes to which nothing in the world hath correspondence? Wee tooke it that the^e golden calfe which the Israelites made and worshipped in the wilderness had bene an Idoll, which yet was^f the similitude of a calfe or bullocke that eateth hay. So did wee thinke of their^e Images of men, which the Prophet Ez:chiel saith, they made, and committed whoredoms with them (which S. Hierom expoundeth to haue bene^h the Idols of Bel or Bial, Camosh, Astaroth and Melchom, and the ordinary glosse of Priapus). And thus we see the author of the booke of Wisdom, bringing in^k a father making the image of his son, and the people counterfetting the visage, and making the.

e Theod in Exod.
quæst. 33. Qui dicit semitidolum & similitudo? Idolum
nihil representat
quod subsistat, si-
militudo vero est alicuius imago & officium. Cum ergo Græci quidam for-mamini minimi subsiste-res effigunt: veluti Sphinxas, Tritonas, Centauros: Egyptij
vero homines canina
facie bubulo vâ capu-
sales rerum nõ subsistentium simi-
liti idola vocat, si-
militudines autem
rerum subsistentium imagines veluti Solis, Lunæ, Stellarum
hominum, beluarum
reptilium & huiusmi-
lium in quæ omnia ve-
rat adorare aut (animis) colere
d. Chap. 3. lect. 1.

e AA 7. 1.
E. Psal. 105. 23.
g. Zech. 1. 17.
h. Hieron. in Exod.
lib. 1. cap. 16. O m-nibus conspexit Hiero-
salem & vertit in idola Belus & Ba-alu Chamos, &c.
i. Glossa ord. in ibid.
k. Wild. 1. 14. 16

the gorgeous image of a king, which he calleth exprelly ¹ idols, and noteth therein the beginning of them. Thus doth David in the Plaine describethem by the parts and members of mans bodie, I Ver II. 15.
They haue mowthes and speake not, eyes haue they and see not; they haue eares and heare not, noses haue they and smell not, they haue hands and hande not, feete haue they and walk not, neither make they any sound with their throte. m Plal 115. 5.
 If these be rightly called Idols, as wee suppose they are, wee desire (good sir) to know how it standeth good which your authorities report, that the name of Idols belongeth onely to such fantasticall shapes as before are spoken of. The honest man here putteth M. Bishop to a blanke, hauing nothing to say but by the renouncing of his owne authors. For if hee say that those bee no idols, euery man seeth that hee speaketh vnruth: if hee say they bee, then he contrarieth his owne allegation of himselfe. Now what impudencie is this both in his maister and him, thus colourably to cite the names of Origen and Theodores, when they themselues well know, that that which they say is contrary to the Scriptures, contrary to the rest of the Fathers, contrary to the perpetuall consent and currant language of the whole Christian Church? But yet (gentle Reader) I would haue thee to question with him some what further, What M. Bishop, are onely Idols forbidden by the second commaundement whereof we speake? Yea, saith he. Yea but your authors M Bishop tell vs, as appeareth by their words before, that not onely Idols which are shapes of things are not, but also all images and representations of things that are, as of men or any other creatures, are thereby forbidden ⁿ that neither by mind or affection we worship them, nor by outward (sew and gesture bow vnto them; n Or gen. of supra, Viruū q̄, refectat sumā p̄ uisū, ut, nec affellū, gelus nec s̄c̄ia adores how can it be then which you say, that onely Idols are forbidden. Here M Bishop is plunged againe, and knoweth not what to say, because his images also which he thought to haue pulled out, are by his owne authors brought within the compasse of the second cōmaundement, so that howsoeuer they seeme to vary from the rest in a curious deuce of the signification of a word, yet for the condemning of Popish idolatry they say the same that all the rest say, The translation which his authors herein follow, is the translation of the Septuagint. Thou shalt not make to thy selfe an Idoll, nor the likenes of any thing, &c. where that which they call idol, is in the Hebrew. Pesels, which in many other places they translate γλυπτόν and

and is the same as in latin sculptile, which importeth a thing carued or grauen to the likenes of any thing, or as we call it a grauen image, so as that Arias Montanus a Papist tranſlateth it, Non facias tibi dolaturam omnis effigies I thou shalt not make to thy ſelfe any carued work of any likenesse. By reason that Idols were for the most parte carued or grauen worke therefore the holy Ghost may seeme to take that word as most common and generall, vnder that according to custome of speech, to comprehend all the rest, onely adding by way of exposition, or the likenesse of any thing, &c. Yea the words in Deuteronomie being set downe without any particle coniunctiue or disiunctiue, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe a carued or grauen worke the likenesse of any thing in heauen aboue &c. doe plainly argue that those words are added as an exposition, as if he had saide Thou shalt not make to thy selfe Pesell, that is, the likenesse of any thing, &c. The Septuagint therefore respecting that Pesell by vse was grown to signifie generally the images of the heathen gods, of whatloeuere kind, would in the Greeke according to the intendment of the commandement set downe a word of the like large extent and signification, and thereto made choise of εἰδωλον an idoll, as seruing to expresse all formes and shapes which men set vp to do worship vnto them, And that the most auncient Church conceiued there no otherwise of the name of Idoll appeareth by Iustinus Martyr, who disputing with Tryphon the Iew, readeth Image in steed of Idoll, saying that God commaunded by Moses to make neither image nor similitude either of things in heauen aboue or in the earth beneath. Hereby therefore it appeareth that that which Origen and Theodoret say is built wholly vpon a false ground, and cannot by any other authoritie be made good. Yet M. Bishoptelleth vs that that which they say is taken out of the Apostle where he saith, that an idoll is nothing in the world. which Origen indeede citeth to make good that meaning which before hath bene expressed; although seruing nothing at all to that effect. But see here the trechery of this our false and faithlesse Sophister, who making Origen his author bringeth the words in one meaning when Origen applieth them vnto another, For Origen when he alleadgeth that an Idoll is nothing in the world meaneth (as wee see in his words before) that it is a shape, to which nothing answereth amongst the creatures of the world; for those Sphynxes, Tritons, Centaures, and such like, are meere fancies, neither o Deut. 5. 8. Ar.

Mont. transl.
interlinearu.

p Deut. 7. 25. &
12. Where by Pesell, the grauen images of their gods, all maner images of their gods are to be vnderstood.

q Iustin. Mart.
dial cum Tryph.
Deus in erat qui per Mosen sanxit (μάτη εἰδωλα μάτη εὐμοίωμα ποιήσαι)
nequa omnino fieret vel imago vel simi-litudo neque co-
rum quae in caelo,
&c. r 1. Cor. 8. 4.

neither is there any such thing at all: but M. Bishop saith, that an idol is nothing, that is, it is no god. It is nothing formally, (saith he) that is though they be great peeces of wood or stone materially, yet they represent a thing that is not, that is such a thing to be a god which is nothing lesse. But it is one thing not to be, another thing not to be a god, neither can a thing be said, to be nothing because it is, no god: and therefore very wretchedly doth hee peruert the words of Origen by drawing them from things vnderstood simply notto bee, to things vnderstood onely respectiue to bee no gods. Yea he hereby ouerthroweth all that Origen there saith, because if by representing that that is not, hee meane the representing of such a thing to bee a god, which is nothing lesse, then those images and resemblances which hee there speaketh of, of men, and beatts, and birds, set vp amongst the Gentiles to bee worshipped, shall bee said also to bee nothing and to represent a thing that is not, because they represented such things to bee gods which are nothing lesse, which is wholly repugnant to that which Origen hath set downe. Thus either Origen and Theodore both must bee taken with one breath instantly to crosse another, or else wee must take M. Bishop to bee alewd man who seeketh to father a bastard vpon them, which is begotten by himselfe. Albeit neither can we approue that construction which Origen maketh of the Apostles words, as if an idoll were onely a representation or forme to which there is nothing correspondent in the world. For who is ignorant, that the idols of the Gentiles were for the most part the images of men, and set vp in the names of men deceased in the like sort as Popish images? Thus Tertullian vpbraideth the Pagans, that in their owne consciences they knew well enough that the gods which they worshipped were but men, that it was to bee proued in what place they were borne, where they had liued and left remembrance of their workes where they were buried. Therefore he telleth them of their custome of making gods, They consecrate them for gods whom a little before by publicke mourning they confessed to be dead Thus did parents take vpon them to honour their owne children that were dead before them, as ^u Lactantius sheweth that Tully did his daughter. Thus did the louer to his beloved, as did the Emperour Adrian to his paramour^x Antinous, building a temple to him, and causing him to be worshipped. So did the children consecrate their parents, as ^y Bacchus, Apollo, Mercury & Pan did the father

Tertullian Apolo-
cap. 80. Prouoca-
mus ad conscientia
vestram & calla-nos dominet si poterit negare omnes
istos deos vestros ho-
mines fuisse, &c.
testimonium parti-
bentibus & ciuitati
bus in quibus nati
sunt, & regionibus in quibus aliquid ope-
rati vestigia relique-
runt in quibus etiam sepulti demonstran-
tur.

^r Cap. II. Quos ante paucos dies
luctu publico mor-
tuos sunt confessi in deos consecrant.
^u Lactan Instit. lib.
I. cap. 15. ex M. Tul
lib. de consolat. Ap-probantibus dijs im-mortalibus: ipsi in eorum cetu locati a ad opinio: om omnium mortalium con-
secrabo.
^x Origen contra.
Cels. lib. 3.
^y Lactant. etc.
supra.

Antinous A

father Iupiter, and their children afterward the like to them. And this ^z Cyprian & Austine note to haue bene reueiled to Alexander the great as a great secret by Leo an Egyptian Priest, that not onely their petite gods Hercules, Aesculapius, Romulus, and such like but also those of the higher ranke, Iupiter, Iuno, Saturnus, Vesta, Vulcanus and the rest were but men and women to whom such honours had begun to bee yeilded after they were dead, it being by custome receiued when men were renowned either for strange acts or good desertes, to honour them as gods when they were dead, by setting vp their images, and doing sacrifice and deuotion to them. Hereupon Lactantius saith, as noting the most vsuall shape and forme of their idols, ^a The idols which they worship are the shapes or images of dead men. Yea they who conceived better of the condition of their gods, acknowledged that, ^b the shapes of men were applied vnto them, & that either by the aduice of wise men, that they might the more easily turne the minds of ignorant men from naughtinesse of life to the worship of the gods, or of superstition, that there might be images which the people comming to shou'd beleene that they came to the gods themselves. It is plaine therefore that Origen, erred in vnderstanding the Apostle, to say that an idoll is nothing, that is, a shape fitting nothing in the world, because idols were in most commonly the shapes of men and set vp as popish images in remembrance and honour of dead men, suppoled for their merits and good desertes to bee aduanced to heauen. And in this respect S. Austine preferred the Pagans and heathens before the Manichees, for ^c the Pagans worship things that be, though they be not to be worshopped, but you (saith hee) worship those things which be not at all, but are fained by the vannie of your deceunfull fables and tales. The meaning then of the Apostles words, An idoll is nothing, is that which the Scripture else where telleth vs, ^d it is profitable for nothing, e it can neither do good nor euill, nei ther saue nor destroy, neither make cleane nor vnclane. ^f Idols are saith Austine, but to satisfaction they are nothing: to steed vs or profit vs they are nothing. g They are, saith Chrysostome, but they can do nothing: they haue no more understanding then other stones. Hitherto then all that M. Bishop saith, is but an Idoll according to his owne construction, making shew to be some what when indeed it is nothing. But yet he maketh a further challenge, Let M. Perkins quote but one place in the whole Biblie where (an idol and an image) they are used both for one. This he saith, presuning vpon his masters word, and though we quote many places, all will be one: for he is sworne to his master, and wil be true to him. But if he turne his Bible he shall find Samuell saying to Saul according to their owne translation, ^h Nor to obey is as the wickednesse of idolatry: it should be, is iniquitie and idolatry. The Hebrew worde which is there translated idolatry is Teraphim which their owne latter translator Arias Montanus putteth into the text, but in the margin to expresse the true and proper significatiō of the word, setteth downe images, images. The words then literally are, To transgresse is iniquitie and images. Let M. Bishop then tell vs whether an Image here doe signifie the same as an Idoll, and bee putte in place thereof or not, for wee thinke that hee will graunt that the meaning is this, To transgresse is iniquitie and idols, that is to say, idolatry. Shall we quote any more then one? He shall finde then that Micahs god called Pesel, an idoll, as hee will haue it translated, is called also ^h Teraphim an Image: and the Israelites are sayd to destroy ^l Tsalmei the images of Baal, which their owne translation elsewhere calleth ^m the idols of Baal: and Ezechiel in one place obiecteth to the Israelites ⁿ Tsalmei, the images of their abomination and of their idols, which in another place hee calleth: ^o the idols of their abominations: and againe hee calleth them ^p the images of menne, which were the idols of Baal, Chamosh, and the rest, as hath bene before said: and the author of the booke of Wisedome saith of the idol ^q It cannot helpe it selfe, because it is an image that hath need of helpe: and the auncient Church in the second commaundement for Idol, as the Septuagint translated it, did translate Image, as before I shewed out of Iustinus Martyr. Accordingly the auncient Fathers commonly vse the name of Images concerning Idols, as Lactantius calleth them ^r sacred or holy images, and Tertullian ^s cold images like to their dead principals: and of Sidrach, Misach and Abednego refusing to worshippe the Idoll which king Nabuchodonosor set vp, he saith. ^t they refused to honour his image. So saith Cyprian of the duels, ^u They lurke vnder sacred or consecrated images: and Austine, ^x They, by know not what art, are put into images, that is, visible shapes or representations. So saith also Minutus Felix, that ^y the common people pray to the consecrated images of dead men. It were infinite to alleadge all that might bee brought out of the Scriptures and Fathers to shewe this promiscuous and indifferent vse of the words or names of Idols h 1. Sam. 15. 27.

Quasi scilicet idolalatria nullo ac-
quiescere.

i Iudg. 18. 31.
k Chap. 17. 5.

l 2 King. 11. 18.
m Iudg. 10. 6.

n Ezech 7. 20.
o Chap. 16. 36.

p Ibid. Vers. 17.
q Wisd. 13. 16.

r Lactan. Instit.
lib. 3. cap. 18. Ipsa.

s Imagines sacra,
&c.

t Tertul. Apolog.
ca. 12. Imagines

u frigidis mortuorum
suum simillimas
non adoramus.

x Idem de Idolol.
Honorem imaginis
eius respiciunt.

y Cyp. de Idol.
vanit. Sub consu-cratis imaginibus
deliteant.

z August. de civi.
Dei. lib. 3. ca. 24.
Demones per arti-
ficium quam imagi-
nibus inlit. hoc est,
visibilibus formis a-ctiu

ch. u v Sicut Felix in
Ora. apud Ara.

w Quod ibi: at ho-
rum imagines
consecratas vulgus orare? &c.

and images; and putting off the one in steede of the other, Images for Idols; where the circumstance giueth occasion to vnderstande such images to which religious seruice and deuotion is performed; but M. Bishop telleth vs that he can bring some places, where if we vse the one of those wordes for the other, wee shall offend all good Christian eares, as if we should say that man was made after the Idoll of God; or that Christ is the Idoll of his Father. Where wee may see, that it is much that he can doe, and yet when he hath all done, it is nothing to the purpose. What dooth hee herein but confirme that which I haue before saide, that ecclesiasticall vse hath restrained the signification of idoll to be taken in the euill part only of Images superstitiously and sacrilegiously abused, and therefore that it cannot nowe be so generally applyed as originally it might be? And yet further his wisedome should haue considered, that we speake here of images as they are incident to the second commaundement, which are the worke of mens handes, and are set vp for deuotion and religion and therefore if hee would haue spoken pertinently, should haue brought vs an example out of the Scripture, where there is anie mention of such an image that is worshipped, which is not also to be called an idoll. If he could shew vs such an example, it made somewhat for their Images, but those which hee bringeth are impertinent and auaille him nothing. As for Christ, hee is the substantiall image of his Father, and to be alike worshipped with him, and of him S. Austine somewhere saith, that no image of God is to be worshipped which is not the same that God is: and thereby condemneth Poperie of idolatrie. And if any other image of God were to bee worshipped, it should be man, who was created after the image of God, rather then a senselesse blocke that hath onely some outward shape and proportion of a man. But to presse as yet further with a matter of no waight, he telleth vs that the seuenth generall Councell nine hundred yeares past, doth accurse all them who call the Images of Christ and his Saints Idols. He meaneth it of the idolatrous seconde Nicene councell, which was almost eight hundred yeres after Christ and about eight hundred yeares past, where hee to make it seeme the more auncient addeth almost an hundred yeares. Of this Councell we shall see more in the end, but here it is to be noted in what meaning they pronounce that curse, and howe, according to that meaning, as men caried with a spirit of giddinesse and frensie they vtterly

*2. Aug. Nulla imago Dei colit de bet nisi illa qua hoc est quod ipse.
Epist. 119.*

*2. An. Dom. 789.
Epist. to King
107.*

vterly circumuient and ouerthrow themselues. If they hadde meant images simply, we wold accord with them that the images of christ and his Saints are not to be called Idols, for such images wee haue and thereby shew that we condemne them not. Yea where they are put in the Churches, wee say as Charles the great and his Councell said for answer to that Nicene Councell,^b We call not images putte in Churches by the name of Idols, but that they may not bee called idols, we forbear to adore & worship them. But the meaning of that Councell is otherwise, that the Iunages of Christe and his Saints beeing worshipped, yet are not to be called idols, and in this sence doe they accuse them that confound them both in one. Concerning which it is to bee obserued that the same councell amongst sundry other heresies^c accuseth the idolatrie of Nestorius in or concerning the man Iesus Christ. The heresie of Nestorius stode in the deuiding of the manhood of Christ from the Godhead, whereby he made two distinct persons distinctly and seuerally to be acknowledged and worshipped. He made the Godhead onely an assistant to the manhood, and more eminently and effectually shewing it selfe in him then in vs, but otherwise no more vnited to the manhood then it is to vs. Therefore he denieth that the virgin Mary might be called θεοτόκος the mother of God, or that it might be saide that God suffered for our sinnes, albeit the Scripture so plainly saith,^d That holy thing which shall bee borne of thee shall bee called the Sonne of God: and againe, Feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his owne blood. Now because he made a distinct person of the manhood of Christ, and yet acknowledged to worship the man Christe, hee was hereby charged to breake the first commandement, Thou shalt haue no other gods but me^e We should by so doing (saith Cyril) make frustrate the lawe which giueth worship to one onely who is truely God, and affirmeth that this is to leade men away from the knowledge of God, and so teach the world (ἀνθρώπων λατρείαν) the worshipping of a manne. This is it which that Nicene Councell calleth the idolatrie of Nestorius, which they could not but condemne; vnder that name, if they would carrie any countenance of trueth, because by the Councell of Ephesus and the Catholicke and godly Bishops (as appeareth by Cyrril) it hadde beene before in that sort notoriously condemned. Heere then wee say, if the manhood of Christe beeing taken seuerally and without personall vnion of the Godhead became an idol

(for

^b L. b. Carol. mag. contra Synod. pro adorand. imagin. Non nos imagines in basilicis positas idola nuncupamus sed ne idola nuncupentur, eas adorare & colere recusamus.

^c Nicen. 2. Act. 7. epist. ad Constan. es Iren. Anathematiz. are Ary in siniam, & c. Nestorij idolatriam in homine.

^d Luke 1. 35.

^e Act. 10. 18.

^f Cyril. de reb. fido ad Reg. Legem igitur vitam, & c. Irritum faceremus legem quia uos uere Deo adorationem affert, ut & sapientiam loquimur & c. Veri homines à cognitione Dei ad uent & mundum hominum cultum docet.

(for that the name of idolatrie importeth) by beeing worshipped what should lette but that the Image of Christ beeing worshipped is much more iustly to bee called an Idoll, which hath no manner of vnion neyther to God nor manne. In what respect the name of idoll is so applied, shall be shewed afterwarde, but in the meane time we desire to know how it should bee idolatrie to worship the manhood of Christe, and yet it should be no idolatrie to worshippinge the image of Christ, and as the image of Christe, so the images of the Saints also. We cannot conceiue this poynt, and therefore we expect M. Bishop, in this behalfe to be resolued by you. Well then leauing him to demurre vpon it for the sauing of the credite of their Councill, let vs come to the consideration of his next authoritie. M. Perkins alledgeth Tertullian, saying, that euery forme or representation is to be termed an idoll. Not so neither, saith M. Bishop, for hee maketh Idolum a diminutive of eidos which significeth a forme or similitude, so that Idolon is but a small similitude or slender image, not so much for the quantitie, as for that it representeth but darkely. It seemeth that it was some what darke when hee looked vpon Tertullian, or that he tooke Tertullian for such a darke author, as that hee was loth to trouble himselfe to looke vpon him at all. Tertullian indeede saith, that εἶδος significeth a forme or similitude, and that from thence by diminution is deriued εἰδωλον which proportionably with vs maketh or importeth a little forme, but by that that followeth hee giueth to vnderstand, that as in Latine Paxillus, a naile: figulus, a potter: mandibulum, a iaw, and many other like, so εἰδωλον in Greeke is a diminutive onely in forme and sound, not in the signification and meaning of the worde. For he inferreth thus, ^h Therefore euery forme or lesser forme requireth it selfe to be called an idoll, and thence is idolatrie, which is a manner deuotion and seruice about any such idoll. It is plaine then that he maketh the name of an idoll to extend to all formes or representations, whether greater or lesser, expressely saying that is idoll leth not what a one it be, of what matter or what shape, that no man may thinke that that only is an idoll which is consecrated in the shape of man. To whatsoeuer forme then or likenes we yeeld deuotion or seruice, wee therein commit idolatrie, and it is that which properly wee call an idoll. But to make this yet more plaine, hee addeth further a little after, ^k Humane error worshippeth all things saue him that made all. The images of those thinges are idols: the consecration of images is idolatrie.

Idols

^g Tertul. de Idol.

Εἶδος graecè formam sonat, ab eo per diminutionem

εἰδωλον diminutum a quo apud nos formulam fecit.

^h Ibid. Legitur omni forma vel formula idolum se dici exposcit. Inde idololatria omnia circa omne idolum famulatus & seruatus.

ⁱ Nihil interest quale sit, qua de materia, qua de effigie, ne quis pntet idolum habendum quod humana effigie sit consecratum.

^k Omnia colit humanus error propter ipsum omnium conditorem. Eorum imagines idolorum consecratio magnum idololatria.

Idols then by Tertulians iudgement are all manner images set vp to represent either men or any other creatures, & consecrated to haue religious duty performed vnto them. And so else where he saith of deifying men by their images after their death; Being dead they are made Idols by their habit and service of consecration. It is consecration then or dedication, that of an image maketh an Idoll, and therefore are Idols termed sacred images and consecrated images, as before I haue shewed out of Lactantius and other writers. Hereby then we may conceiue, that M. Bishop surely wrote in the darke, when he set downe Tertulian affirming Idoll to import representing darkely, when hee saith not any one word tending to that effect, but leaueth them the same as are the representations of Popish images. Neither doth Eustatius make any more for him then the rest, who when hee calleth ghosts of the dead men obscure and vanishing Idols, importeth thereby the large signification of the word Idols as belonging to all manner shapes and representations, both which are solide, and constant, and abiding, and those also that are aieric, and darksome, and lightly vanish and passe away. For if the word Idols had imported onely such darke and vanishing shadowes, to what end should he adde those Epithetons, the force whereof was alreadie contained in the signification of the word? And if Homer or any other doe apply the name of Idols, to fancies, and dreames, and shadowes, it is nothing against vs, who know and confesse that the word ἰδωλα in the originall signification, extendeth so largely as to be fitly vied thereof, euen as the word image may also, as appeareth by S. Austine who of the words of Christ 7 he sonne can doe nothing of himselfe, but what he seeth the father doe &c. saith, that n if they be understood carnally according to humane concept, the scule full of fancies doth no other but frame certaine images as of two men, a father and a sonne, the one of them shewing and the other seeing, the one speaking and the other hearing, all which, saith hee. are the idols of the heart. In a word whatloeuere hee can seeme to alledge out of prophane Authors concerning the signification of the word Idoll, it auaieth him nothing, the case standing as I haue shewed, that ecclesiasticall custome of speech hath termed euery consecrated image by the name of an Idoll, neither can hee alledge anie, whose testimonie is in this case to be regarded, with whom an Image to which worshipping is done, is any other then an Idoll.

Idem. de Coro. m. Mortui idola statim sunt habitus & cultus, consecrationem.

m Eustath in Hom Odyss. lib II Genus diminutionis Libnicus x statum quo vbi debant hominum mortuorum idola obscura & euasida &c.

n Aug. in Psal. i. alt. 5 Quasi sim- till gatur secundum habitum in ier um carnal. corp. h' a- iud. obu. j. an. ma plerūq. phata, ma- turū si quajdam imaginis v. lat. duo rurs. hemia. patris & filij. vniu. osten- dit. ita alterius vobis tu vniu. loquentu. alterius audientu. qua corona idola cor. d. sunt.

M. Perkins further alledgeth, that the golden calfe of the Israelite^s was an Idoll. What is that to the purpose saith M. Bishop? Very much against that toy of his, that an Idoll is that that representeth a thing that is not; for a calfe is a thing that is, and therefore the golden calfe cannot be said to represent a thing that is not. Yea, but said hee, it represented that to be a God which was nothing lesse. But that is a sophisticall perverting of the words of his authors, as hath bene before shewed, and being but his owne foolish fancy, what is it to vs? His authorities make onely that an Idoll, which representeth in shape a thing that simply is not. Albeit neither will that shift of his rid him from this obiection; for it is manifest that the Israelites made the golden Calfe to be vnto them a visible signe and representation of the true God, by which they would haue some token of his presence amongst them, and his conducting and guiding of them. By their first propounding the matter, it appeareth that they would haue the Idol in place of Moses, by whom because hee was as it were a Mediatour betwixt God and them, they conceiued God to bee present with them. Therefore they say Make vs Gods to go before vs, for as for this Moses which brought vs out of the land of Egypt, wee know not what is become of him, making the want of Moses the only cause why they required Gods. When the Idoll is made, they say, These be thy Gods O Israel, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt. They had said before this Moses which brought vs out of the land of Egypt, and they knew well that the Calfe being newly made was not it that brought them out of the land of Egypt. Therefore as they acknowledged Moses onely as the minister of that God, by whom they were brought out of the land of Egypt, so they require the Calfe only as a signe and representation of that God by whom they were brought out of the land of Egypt, and only in that sence they say, These be thy Gods ô Israel, &c. Therefore they proclaime accordingly To morrow shall be the holy day, not to the Calfe or to any other god but to Iehovah the Lord, which was the proper name of the only true God. And thus ^q Abulensis the great Schooleman vpon that place confesseth, that by the Calfe they intended to worship God, as doth also ^r Fernus their own Preacher at Mentz, yea & the Romane or Trent catechisme before spoken of, which affirming that to resemble the Godhead by an image, is the breach of the commandement, to shew that the Israelites committed this breach inferreth

Exod. 32. 1.

Ver. 4.

Ver. 5.

q Abulens. in Exod
 aa. 12. 9. 7. Dens
 qui se eduxit. &c.
 iste est quem his seruis id est in isto corpore aureo latet
 sua virtus.
 r Fernus. in Act.
 sup. 7.

reth thus, Wherefore the Israelites crying before the image of a Calfe [Catechis. Tri deo in explicat. praecip
I Quae circa Israel
sa qui ante vitulo simulachrum cla-mabant, His sunt di
tini, &c. idololatri sunt appellati qui mutantur gloriam
suam in similitudi-
nem vituli comen-
dentis sanctum.
*These are thy gods, O Israel, &c. were called idolaters because they changed their glory (which was their God) to the similitude of a Calfe that eateth hay. Which words are altogether inconsequent; vnlesse it bee taken that the Israelites in their Calfe intended the worship of their God. And this appeareth further in the Calues that were set vppe at Bethel & Dan, to the worship wherof when Ieroboam would induce the people, he propounded vnto them as Iosephus reporteth it, that God is absent from no place, nor is included or compassed any where, but as he knoweth all things, so heareth euery where, and euery where respe-cteth them that worship him: therefore that he liked not that for exercise of religion they should goe vp to Hierusalem, but he had consecrated two golden calues at Dan and Bethel, that at either of those places according to their dwelling, they might more neere at hand in due manner worship God. By which words it is plaine, that in the worship of the Calues he made shew of no other, but thereby to worship God, and therefore Iehu destroying the worship of Baal, for the vpholding of the worship of those Calues, vaunteth of^u the zeale that hee had for Ie-hounah, the Lord, and the Samaritans accepting of the same worship are said thereby^x to serue the Lord. Herby thē it is plaine, that an Idol is not that onely which representeth that to bee a God which is not, but also that wherein is intended the representation & worship of the true God. Last of al, M. Perkins alledgeth, that Hierom saith that idols are the images of dead men. Adde, saith M. Bishop, that are taken for Gods: for many idols be images, saith he; all such as truly represent any person that was once lining here, but no image an idoll, vnlesse it bee taken for a God. But that this is very false, it is manifest because the Pagans themselves, at least the wiser sort of them neuer tooke their images to be Gods, yea they scorned them that thought them to bee so witlesse as to vnderstand thē so. Who saith Celsus, vnlesse he be altogether out of his wits taketh them for Gods, and not for images dedicated to the gods? ^z It is not probable or likely, saith he, that the workes of base artificers & who are oftentimes lewd mē should be reckoned amongst the gods. So Olympius another Pagan Philosopher, when hee saw the people of his parte disinaied at the casting downe of their Images ^u exhorteth thē not to fall away frō their religion: for as for those images they were no other but corruptible matter, & therefore might be brought to nought, but there had dwelt in thē diuine powers, and those were now gone*

gone to heauen. Thus Arnobius bringeth them in, excusing themselues, that^b by the images they worshipped the gods: and Austine, c We worship not these things: these are but onely signes. So Athana- sius mentioneth that they pleaded for their images, that^d they ser-ued for letters, which whilest men did reade, they might thereby learne the knowledge of God. Seeing then that the heathen Images were Idols, and yet were not holden to be verie gods, it is hereby manifest, that an image may be an idoll, though it bee not taken to be a God. It Maister Bishop will say that the multitude notwithstanding tooke the Images themselues to be gods, we answer him that so the vulgar people doe amongst them also, as before I shewed out of Polydore Virgil, but the heathen were of his minde, to haue their religion citeemed according to the vnderstanding of such wise menne as he is. But in the conclusion he will mend the matter saying that an Idoll requires beside the image that it bee made a God, or the Image of a false God. So then though it bee not taken for a God, yet it must be the image of a false God. Where to omit what hath bene already said for disprooffe hereof, by the example of the golden Calues, and to say nothing of Micahs mothers idoll, who faith of the siluer wherewith she would make it, that for that vse she had dedicated it to Iehouah the Lord, thereby shewing that she meant to doe it as a seruice to the true God, to let these goe, I lay, we find e Hierome alledging that where we read in Genesis,^f Then began men to call vpon the name of the Lord, g m st of the Hebrew writers did so take it, that then Idols were first made in the name of the Lord, & to resemble him. By which testimonie it is plaine that the name of Idols beelon-geth not onely to the images of false gods, but to those images also that are set up in the name of the Lord, and to resemble him. In which fort^h Germanus the patriarch of Constantinople faith of the Israelites, that they thought him not to bee a God neither true nor false, of whome they saw not an idoll framed before them, plainly calling that an Idoll also which is framed and set vpp in the name of the true God. And that this may the better appeare vnto vs, wee may obserue that the Idols of the Gentiles were not condemned by the fathers onely, for that they were the images of false gods, but vpon supposall that those were truly gods whō they worshipped, yet they dispute against images, as things too base, and vile, and vnfit to bee vsed for seruice of them to whō they would yeeld the acknowledgment of being gods.

b Arnob. adu.
Gen. li. 6. Deos in-quitiū per simula-
chra veneramus.
 c Aug. in Psal. 85.
Iste non coluisti:
Et: signa sunt.
 d Athan. ad. l. do-
la. Aiani illi asmodo simulastra pro-
elementū literariū
humano generi esse
quae cum legunt,
Dei notitiam con-
discrete possunt.

e Judg. 17. 3.

f Gen. 4. 26.

g Hieron. tradit.
Heb. in Genesi. Pri-usque Hebraeorum
arbitrariū quod
dunc primum in no-
mine Domini et in similitudine eius fa-
bricata sint idola.
 h Synod. Nicen. 2.
Act. 4. in epist. German. Hoc unum
arbitrariū non esse Deum neque verū
neque falsum nisi quoniam idolum forma
non videant.

if it be certaine that those be Gods who you think so to be saith Arnobius, and that they dwell in the highest regions of heaven, what cause, what reason is there that you should make these images (or as they will haue it these idols) seeing ye haue otherwise to who to pray, & of who in extreme tie to request help? What can there be more inuicious, reproachfull, intollerable, then to know one to be God, and to make his supplication to another: to looke for helpe of the diuine power, and to make his prayer to a senselesse image? So Lactantius saith, & To what end are images which are the tokens either of them that are dead, or of them that are absent? Now if the Gods cannot be absent, who because they are Gods (or of diuine nature) in what soeuer part of the world they be, do heare and see all things, then are their images vaine, they being euerywhere because it is sufficient in their hearing to pray vnto them by their names. And to this purpose do they obiect vnto them out of their owne booke the sentences of their owne writers, condemning the worshipping of their Gods by images as Austin bringeth in Varro, acknowledging that ¹ the Romanes for about a hundred and seuentie yeares worshipped their Gods without images, and that if they had still so done, the Gods should haue bene more holily and purely serued or regarded: and that they who first set up the images of the Gods for the people did both take away feare and added error, wisely esteeming saith S. Austine, that the Gods in that blockish senselesnesse of images, might easily bee contemned. Much more might be laid to like effect out of Clemens Alexandrianus, Origen, Cyprian, Athanasius, & others in their tracts against the Pagans, but by these it is sufficiently to be vnderstood, that the cōdēnation of their idols ariseth not onely of being the images of false Gods, but of that being images they were worshipped, howsoeuer the Gods might be supposed to be true Gods which they worshipped therby. And who would doubt but that the Carpocratia heretiks ^m setting up the image of Iesus and Paul & withall of Pythagoras, Homer, Plato, Aristotle, and doing worship, offering sacrifice burning incense vnto the, did comit idolatry & make idols of these images albe it they were so far fro taking the to be Gods or images of Gods, as that it was one part of that heresie to deny the godhead of Christ: Thus the name of Idoles and Idolatry are sometimes metaphorically

i. Arnob. adu. Gens lib. 6. Si certum est Deos esse quos remus, atq; in summo celi regionibus degere, qua causa qua ratio est ut simulachra ista fingantur a vobis; cum habeatur res certas quibus preces possint effundere & auxiliū rebus postulare? &c. Quid fieri potest iniuriōsissimum, contumeliosissimum, durissimum Deum alterum scire & res alteri supplicare: opē strare de nomine & nullius sensus ad effigiem deprecari? &c. Lactant. Institut. li. 2. cap. 2. Quid simulachra volunt qua aut mortuorum aut absentium monumenta sunt, &c? Sicut absentis esse non possunt qui quoniam dimissum in quantum, mundi parte fuerint vident et audiunt vniuersa, superuacua ergo sunt simulachra illi ubiq; presentibus cum satis audientium nomina precibus aduocare.

Aug. de ciuit. Dei lib. 4. ca. 31. Dicit Varro antiquus Romanos plusquam annos centum & septuaginta Deos esse simulachro coluisse: quod si adhuc, inquit, mansisset, caesus die obsecrarentur, &c. Deu qui primis simulachra Deorum populo posuerat & metu compulso & erroris in addidisse, prudenter existimans Deos facile posse in simulachrorum stoliditate contemni. m. Epiphanius her. 27. Carpocrat. Habent imagines Pythagora Platonis Aristotelis &c. cum quibus etiam imagines Iesu collocant collocataq; adorant & gratia mysteria perficiunt &c. sacrificiorum atq; alia, &c. August. de heres. Colebant adorando incesumq; ponendo. Iren. li. 1. ca. 24. n. Augusti ibid. Iesum hominem tantummodo passus perhibetur.

o Theodoret. in Col
cap. 2. Laodicea
synodus lege canit ne precarentur An gelos.

p Laodic. Concil ca 35. Quicumq; ante inuentus fuerit oc
culte hinc idolola
tria vocans anathe
ma fit quoniam ac
relinquens Domi
num nostrum Iesu Christu filium Dei
accessit ad idola.

q Theodoret. in Exod. q. 37. Quis
Trinitati unam
substantiam con
fientur, diuina uo
cu legem obseruant
nihil enim aliud pro
Deo colipermittit
excepta diuina nar
tura Qui uero erro
re sequuntur Arii
atq; Euanomij ma
nifeste in diuinam
legem committunt.
consentientes quidem unum silium, sed
creatum esse asseren
tes & a diuina sub
stantia alienum cu
autem Deus dicat,
Non erunt tibi dij
alij prater me isti professo Deum ali
um introducunt.

r Athan. cont Ariu
oraz. 4. Cur sese no
adnumerant genti
libus siquidē ambo Creatore omisso
creatura inseru: ai f Aug. de verb. A post. ser. 3. ista. in no bu tanquam idola
frangenda sunt.
r Idē cont. Faust.
lib. 14. ca. 11. In phantasmatis fab
ularum suarū ido
la colunt. u Hieron
in Zachar. ca 13.
Hæreticorum per uersæ doctrina
quodcumq; simulac nerit uertit in I
dolum.

applied to those creatures which are vnlawfully worshipped, albeie they be either not supposed, or expressly denied to be Gods. In which sort the Councell of Laodicea forbidding to pray to Angels as Theodoret briefly expresseth the effect of that Canon, addeth: Whofoeuer shall be found giuing himselfe secretly to this idolatry, ac cursed be he, because forsaking our Lord Iesus Christ the Son of God he hath made accessse to Idols. By which words it is plain, that by praying to Angels, men make Idols of the, though they do not think the to be Gods, because praier is a deuotion that belongeth onely to God.
The like M. Bishop must confesse according to the opinion of Ari us, euen of Christ himselfe. For if the first commandement forbid onely Idols, as M. Bishop will haue it, and Arius in impugning the diuinitie of Christ, and yet acknowledging to worship him, did breake the first comādemēt, then it cannot be denied but that by the doctrine of Arius Christ must become an Idol. That Arius ther in brake the first commandement, appeareth by Theodoret They saith he who confesse one substance of the Trinitie doe obserue the law of the word of God, for they permit nothing to be worshipped for God, saue onely the nature of God But they which follow the error of Arius & Euan omius, do manifestly trespassse against the law of God cōfessing that the Son is one, but affirming him to be created & a stranger frō the substāce of God, Whereas God then saith, Thou shalt haue no other Gods but me these verily bring in another God M. Bishop therefore must necessarily graunt that Arius made an Idoll of Christ, whom notwithstanding he denied to be God, and therefore that the name of an Idoll may belong to that which yet is not taken to be a God. Therefore doth Athanasius say of them, that by their opinion they were to bee recko ned with Gentiles, because together with them in steede of the Crea tor, they worshipped the creature, which as it was idolatry in the Gen tiles, so it must be in them also. The like we haue heard before of the Nestorian heresie, condemned of idolatry for worshipping the manhood of Christ, without acknowledging the personall vnitie thereof to the Godhead. To be short S. Austine saith of the works of the flesh reckoned vp by the Apostle, fornication, uncleanesse, &c.
These are we to breake in our selues as Idols; & again telleth the Ma nichees that in their fabulous fancies they worship Idols, and Hierome generally saith of heretikes, that whatsoeuer they denise or feigne they turne it to an Idol, not for that men haue any opinion of God-head in their lusts and fancies, but because they yeeld them that affection and seruice which they owe to God. By all this then it appeareth, that because the name of Idols is metaphorically applyed to things for being worshipped, or deuoutly and affectionately embraced and followed, which yet are not holden to bee Gods, therefore the proper vse thereof belongeth to Images, in respect of worship done vnto them, though the same Images be neither taken for Gods, nor bee the Images of false Gods, whence it followeth that Popish Images because they are worshipped, must necessarily come vnder the name of Idols.

6. W. BISHOP,

Now to those few authorities which M. Perkins citeth in his fauour: To them of the Councell of Eliberis and Epiphanius, which seeme to speake against setting up of Images in Churches: I will answer in their place. To that out of Lactantius lib. 2. instit. ca. 19. Where Images are for Religion sake, there is no Religion, the force lieth in false translation of images for idoles. Put: where idols are for religion, there is no Religion: But what, suppose hee speake against worshipping of images in generall, it were not proper to this purpose, where we speake onely of making images, and not of all sorts of images neither, but of an image onely to represent some properties or actions of God.

That out of Origen* is yet farre wider: We suffer not any to worship Iesus at Altars, Images, or Temples, because it is written: Thou shalt haue none other Gods. Here is nothing concerning the making of Gods image: onely Christians are forbidden to goe vnto the heathen Temples, and there at their Altars or idols to worship Iesus, who hath no affinitie, nor can endure any fellowship with idolaters.

* Cont. Cel. lib. 7.

R. ABBOT.

The wordes of Lactantius are,^a It is vndoubted that where images are, there is no religion. M. Bishop chargeth vs with false translation of images for idoles. A poore shift, but it must serue where there is no better: yet how vaine it is, appeareth by the reason which Lactantius addeth: ^b for if religion consist of things diuine, and there be nothing diuine but in heavenly things, then images are void of religion, because

^a Lactan. instit. lib. 2. ca. 19. Non est dubium quin religio nulla sit vbi cum que simulacrum est.

^b Ibid. Nam si religio ex rebus diuinis est, diuina autem non est nisi in caelestibus rebus, caret ergo religione simulacra quia nihil potest esse caeleste in ea re quae sit ex terra.

there can be nothing heavenly in that that is made of earth. Now we suppose that M. Bishop can put no difference betwixt Idols and Images, in respect of being made of earth, and therefore must needs confesse that Lactantius meant to make no difference betwixt Images and Idols. But that the folly of this exception may the better appeare, to say nothing that the Fathers vsually call heathen Idoles by the name of Images, as by some examples I haue shewed in the former section, let vs obserue the reasons which Lactantius himselfe vsfeth against them in the chapter next before, and we shall plainly see that Simulachra and Imagines, idols saith M. Bishop, and images are put both for the same thing. ^c I haue shewed saith he, that the religions of the Gods are vaine for three reasons. First, because the images which are worshipped are the shapes of dead men, and it is disorderly and vsfitting, that the image of a man should be worshipped of man who is the image of God. Images, we say, but if M. Bishop will say it must be idoles, then let him translate the reit also in like sort, because the word is the same. It is vsfitting that the idoll of man should be worshipped by the idoll of God. Which if hee will not then let him acquit vs of false translation, and confesse that Lactantius speaketh heere of images, as indeede he dooth. And if he will not acknowledge it by the first reason, yet we hope he will by the second, where hee setteth downe the very name of images. ^d Another reason is, saith hee, for that it (ipse imaginis sacre) the holy images which vaine men serue are altogether without sense because they are earth, and who understandeth not that it is a wicked thing that a creature made upright, should bowe downe it selfe to worship earth? Where calling thole images which he had called before Simulachra, he sheweth that Simulachra are as we translate them images, and that in this poynt Idols as M. Bishop calleth them, and images are all one, the reasons which he alledgeth standing alike against Popish Images, as they do against heathen Idols. The other part of his exception is but another part of a shift, M. Per. propounding to proue not only that it is vnlawfull for vs to make any image any way to represent the true God, but also that we may make no Image of any thing in way of religion to worship God, much lesse the creature thereby. M. Bishops supposall then that Lactantius there spake against worshipping of images in general, maketh the place directly to serue to that purpose, for which it was alledged. The wordes of Origen are applied also to the same ende, who

^c Ibid. cap 17.
Docuit religiones
Deorum triplici ratione vanus esse
Vna quod simula-
era ipsa qua coluntur effigies sint hominum
mortuorum:
est autem peruersum & incongruum vs
simulachrum hominum
a simulachro
Dei colatur.

^d Altera quod ipsa imagines sacre qui bustanis simi homines sensu carent quis terra sunt. Quia autem tem non intelligat
nescit esse rectum
animal curare ut adoret terram?

where Celsus obiecteth, that Christians not enduring to look at temples, altars, and Images, are therein like to the Scythians, Moores, Persians, and such like barbarous nations, answereth, that the barbarous nations do it ocher wise and for ocher respects, but Christians for beare these things, saith he, because of that which the Law saith, Thou shalt have no ocher Gods but me; and thou shalt not make to thy selfe an image, &c. and thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him onely thou shalt serue, and many ocher like speeches which do so forbid vs altars and Images. as that they require vs rather to die then to defile the faith that we haue concerning God with such impieties. M. Perkins rather poynted at the place then cited it, & M. Bishop was loth to take the paines to looke into it, and therefore returneth an idle tale, that Christians were forbidden to go to heathen temples, and there to worship Iesus at their altars and idols, although in the meane time they might haue Idols and Images of their owne, whereas the thing that Celsus obiected was, that they could not abide Images at all, and as afterwardes he speaketh againe, did shun the dedicating of altars, Images and temples; and the very words here alledged do plainly expresse, that they wholly abhorred Images as an impious defiling of religion, and condemned by the law of God. And therefore by and by after hee saith, It is impossible that hee that knoweth God should make supplication to Images: it is a foolish thing that a man should offer prayers to images: wee honour not images, because we take heed so much as we can lest we fall into any such conceipt as to attribute any diuine matter vnto them. It is euident then that Origen wholly condemned Images as touching all vses of religion, to which M. Bishop would approue them.

7. W. BISHOP.

Having confuted the Protestants arguments against the making of Images to represent some propertie or action of God, I now come vnto the third like prooffe of the. The first reason set downe by M. Perkins I referre to the next point: the second is: God appeared in the forme of a man to Abraham and to Daniel, who saw the auncient of daies sitting on a throne. Now as God hath appeared, so may he be pourtraied & drawen.

M. Perkins his answer is, Not so, unlesse it be expresse commanded of God.

Reply. This first is flat against his owne second conclusion, where hee holdeth it lawfull to represent to the eye in Pictures, any hystorie of the Bible

e Orig. cont. Cels. lib. 7. non ferunt templarum, aras, & statuas inspicere, ne Scythia quidem & Numida, &c. f Christians temperant ab his propriis illud Legum, Dominum Deum unum timere, &c. & alia similia que adeo nos prohibent ab atriis & simulacris ut etiam emortuificent eorum quam continentemul non strare de Deo sicut talibus impietatibus.

v Lib. 8. Celsus ait nos ararum, statuarum templorumque dedicationes fugere.

h Li. 7. Impossibile est ut qui deum novit supplicet statuam: stultum est si quis precis simula chris offerat: Nos ideo quoque non honoramus simula chra, quia quantum passimus caueamus ne in eam credulitate uti etiam ut & hu tribuamus diuinitatem aliquam.

Gouet 164.

Jan 9.

Bible in private places, both the foresaid apparitions bee in the old Testament, and therefore may be painted in private places, which cannot be truly done without you doe represent God in the same likenes, as there he appeared. And what reason leadeth in words to represent those actions of God, the same serveth to expresse them in lively colours. Not so, sayth M. Perkins, because when God appeared in the forme of a man, it was a signe of Gods presense, for that time onely, and for no longer. Be it so, it might notwithstanding be recorded in writing, that the memory of such matters ioyned with loving kindnesse might endure longer. And if it pleased God, that this short presense of his should be written to be perpetually remembered, euen so the same might be ingrauen in brasse, to recommend it to us so much the more effectually: For as the famous Poet doth by the light of nature sing.

Segnius irritant animos demissa per aures,
Quam quæ sunt oculis subiecta fidelibus.

Such worthy acts as by the eares are to the mind conueyd, Domoue vs lesse then that which is by faithfull eye descryd.

This argument may be confirmed by the pictures of Angels, of Vertues, and other such like spiritual or accidentall nature: for if such things as haue no bodily proportion or shape, may notwithstanding be counterfeited & resembled in some qualities, why may not some propertie or actiõ of God be in like manner represented? That thou mayest (Reader) vnderstand the better what we meane, obserue that pictures represent after three sorts. Some expresse to the quicke, the very shape, proportion, and colour of the patterne: as the lively picture of a man, or of any such corporall thing: others represent things as they did appeare and were acted, as if the Painter should expresse the meeting of God with Abraham and his entertainment, he must then resemble God in the same likenesse of a man in which he shewed himselfe to Abraham.

Thirdly, an Image of a spirituall thing, may be drawne not to resemble the nature of it, but to leade our vnderstanding by such a similitude, into some better knowledge of that thing: so are Angelles painted like goodly yong men with wings, to teach vs that they bee of an excellent pure nature, euer flourishing, and most readie to dispatch with all expedition any employment to which God sends them: and so may God the father bee pourtraited as a goodly old graue man, sitting in his throne of maiestie, attended vpon by millions of Angels, (as he is described in Daniel. 9.) to instruct vs how he is eternall, infinite, wise, and of most redoubtable maiestie.

istic. In either of these two latter sorts we hold that God may be represented, and so in the seventh generall Councell, the drawing of the holie Ghost in forme of a Dove, as he appeared, Mat. 3. is approoued.

R. ABBOT.

Here M. Bishop telleth vs what they hold, but as for prooffe of that that they hold, which in so weightie a matter should specially haue bene regarded, hee bringeth none, nothing out of the old or newe testament, no example of anie Patriarch, Prophet, Apostle, Euangelist, nor of any of the godly Princes, or righteous and faithfull seruants of God, there beeing not one of them found to haue made an Image to represent God since the world beganne. Yea he bringeth vs neyther Father nor Councell for the space almost of eight hundred yeares after Christ, and that which he bringeth then so vncertaine & vn sufficient, as that we may iustly wonder at their wilfulnesse who will affirme or hold so important a matter vpon so small ground. Their allegation is, that God appeared in the forme of a man to Abraham and to Daniel, and as he hath appeared so he may be pourtraited and drawne. Now albeit we may approue a ciuill & historickall vse of Images as he alledgeth, yet we denie that the same extendeth so farre as to warrant an Image of God, because howsoeuer it hath pleased God to appeare at any time, yet hee hath giuē to vs an expresse charge, that we presume not to set vp an image in any sort or meaning to represent him. Therefore albeit God had appeared to Abraham in the forme of a man, whence the Israelites might take occasion to figure him in that sort, yet to preuent their so doing Moses telleth them, as before hath bene shewed, that ^a they saw ^{a Deut. 4 15.} no image in the day when the Lorde spake vnto them in Horeb out of the midst of the fire, that they might not corrupt themselves, and make them a grauen image, the representation of any figure, the likenesse of male or female, &c. Take heed, saith he, lest ye forget the covenant of the Lord ^b your God which he made with you, and make you any grauen image, the likenesse of any thing, as the Lord thy God hath charged thee. ^{b Verf. 23.} Where if the Israelites had bene skilled in M. Bishops distinction of making Images, this had hindered them nothing at all, but that at the first they might carue, or graue, or paint God in the likevesse of a man, because he had so appeared to Abraham, or afterwardes ^c of a goodly ^{c See hereof after in fo. 19.} eld old graue man, as this hypocrite speaketh, and I abhorre to reapeate, because he appeared to Daniel also in the forme of a man, vnder the name of the Auncient of dayes. But they knew not this kind of learning: they tooke the commaundement simply as it was intended, and therefore perpetually through all their generations, saue onely when they fell away from God, they held it vnlawfull to make anie Image vnder any pretence to represent God. If they had vnderstood the commaundement of God as M. Bishop doth, vndoubtedly they would haue left some examples of doing that which hee sayeth may be done. But king Agrippa told Caligula the Emperor when he wold haue had his Image set vp in the temple of Hierusalem, This Temple euen from the beginning neuer admitted any Image made with hands, because it is the house of God: for the workes of painters and caruers are the Images of sensible Gods, but our forefathers haue holden it a thing vnlawfull to paint or carue him that is inuisible. Accordingly the Christian Church receiued and practised, denying that God who is without body and is inuisible, may bee described by any figure, as Origin saith, no not to represent any signification of him, as I obserued^e frō him before. Thus Theodoret saith, that Moses^f instructed the Iewes that they should not at any time attempt to frame any image of God, seeing they had a scene no likeness of him: that they should not set vp anie Image of the inuisible God. In like sort Clemens Alexandrinus setteth it downe for the doctrine of Moses which he saith Numa by him instructed taught the Romanes,^g that wee are not to make any image of God like to man or any other thing, because no man may any otherwise meddle with God who is the soveraigne good but onely by the minde, and therefore the same Clement affirmeth as by the wordes of the Apostle, h We haue no image in the world, because in the creatures there is nothing that can represent the image of God. Because there is nothing that can represent God, therefore they admitted no image of God at all. As for M. Bishops goodly distinction of painting and describing, it is no other then the Pagans themselves would well like of for their defence. Hee excepteth no otherwise against making Images of God, but onely the first way, as the Image should be vnderstood fully and to the quicke to resemble God, and in that sort the very heathens denied the resembling of God, or making any Image of him, as hath bene before said. Yea Zeno the Stoicke in that respect condemned the making of Images to their Gods, as Clemens

c Philo Ind de legat ad Caum Hoc templum iam indè ab initio nullam vnam admittit manus factam effigiem, eum sit Deo domicilium: picturam enim atq; statuvariorum opera sunt sensibilem deorum imagines: illum autem inuisibilem pingere aut fingere nefas dixerunt maiores nostri.

d Orig. cont. Cels. lib. 7. Deum in corporeum & inuisibilem nulla figura eir cum scribitur.

e Supra sect. 4.

f Theodoret. in deut. qu. 1. Instruere eos ne tentent vquam diuinam imaginem effingere, cum archetypi speciem minimè viderint, &c. ut nullam imaginem construant inuisibili Dei.

g Clem. Alex.

Strom. l. 1. c. 1. Numa ex his qua à Mose tradita sunt aditus prohibuit Romanis ne hominum aut animarum similes Dei facerent imaginem, &c. quod id quod est optimum non alia ratione quam sola mente vllis licet attingere. h Ibid lib. 6. Nihil nullum est simulacrum in mundo quoniam in rebus genitum nihil potest Dei referre imaginem.

Alexandrinus also sheweth, ⁱ because nothing that is compounded is worthy of the gods. Now therefore they will say to M. Bishop, that hee cannot denie but that God hath appeared in the likeness of a man, and therefore that nothing hindereth, but that according to that apparition they may paint their gods like men, though they know them to bee of more excellent nature then can be fully expressed thereby. Yea and if they adde anie other thing thereto, or worship them in any other shapes, they doe it not as to resemble the nature of the gods, but to leade mens understanding by such similitudes into some better knowledge of them. They set forth Mars with helmet and target & other complements of fight, Apollo with a glistering Crown on his head, and bow and arrowes in his left hand, Mercurie with wings at his feete, and a rod or mace in his right hand, Cupid blinde with a dart also in his hand, but ^k these badges, saith Philo Iudaus are added to the Images to signifie the benefits that these gods yeilded to mankind and to their worshippers, or otherwise some speciall properties & effects severally belonging to euerie of them. With the same minde and respect they sometimes worshipped Iupiter in the likeness of a Swan, Aesculapius of a Serpent, Mercurie of a Dog, Pan of a Goate, Apis of an Oxe, not thinking them to be like to anie of these, but either for that they were saide sometimes to haue appeared in such likenesses, or for that they wold herby expresse somewhat that was memorable concerning them. To be short, there was nothing so absurd in their Idolaters, but they had their Hieroglyphicall and Physicall interpretations to salue the deuce and practise thereof, and therefore M. Bishop hath no reason to except against them, because they professe to haue bene led by the same reasons by which he seeketh to vphold the idolatrie of his owne part. But that hee may seeme not altogether without authoritie to say that which hee saith, hee alledgeth vnto vs the second Nicene Councell approouing the drawing of the holy Ghost in forme of a Dove, because he is read in the Gospell so to haue appeared. Where it seemeth to mee that hee shoulde haue done much more wisely for himselfe, not to haue alledged that record at all, because vndoubtedly his Reader must needs thinke, that it is a very bad matter that he hath in hand, for defence whereof for almost the space of fve thousand yeares from the beginning of the world there is no example to be found. If he hadde cited nothing, it might haply haue bene supposed that he i Ibid. li. 5. Diab.

Zeno oportere nec
templa sacrorum
imagines: nihil e-rum quod sit compositum esse Dye
d. gnatum.

k Philo de legat. ad Caesarem. Hae gestamina simulachru
adduntur ut signi-
ficent utilitates ab
hu. Dijs exhibitas
humano generi
suisq. cultoribus.

had notwithstanding somewhat to cite, but no manne will imagine that for his prooffe hee would haue come downe so lowe as that Councell, if he had had anie better authoritie to rest vpon. But the mishap is, that that Councell also faileth him; insomuch as it sayth nothing positiuely for the drawing and painting of the holy Ghost in the forme of a Doue, and doth approue those speeches which generally condemne the resembling of the Godhead in anie forme. A relation is made of one Sennerus, who at Daphne tooke away the Doves framed in gold and siluer and hanged ouer the fonts as in figures of the holy Ghost, saying that they ought not to vse the name of the holy ghost concerning any such forme of a Doue. Hereupon Tharastus readie to apprehend euerie thing that might make for their Image-idolatrie, answereth thus: ¹ If the holy Fathers receiued

1 Nicen. 2. Act. 5.

Sig n nomine sancti Spiritus dedicatus columbas sancti Patris receperunt, quanto magis corpus incarnati uerbi in terris in corpore uis recipiendus? in Ibid. ex Ser. Ioan Episc. Thess. De autem imaginem (dico) seruatoris nostri Iesu Christi) quem admodum ipse super terram cum hominibus conuersatus est, pingimus, non ut ipsa natura Deus est. Quia enim posset esse Dei similitudo, aut qua figura in corpore, ineffigibilis, uerbi Patri? Deus enim (ut scriptum est) spiritus est. Quonia uisum est deo et ari uigenerunt filium suum de caelis demisit eorum quo pro nostra salute ex Spiritu sancto et uiolata uirgine Deipara incarnatus est, nos eius humanitatem e ratione pingimus, non illius in corpore deitatem.

*doves dedicated in the name of the holy ghost, how much more is the body of the incarnat Word scene upon the earth in a body to be receiued; meaning the image of the body of Christ. If they did hee saith, but hee saith not that they did it lawfully if they did so. A man may say, if a Popish Priest may bee permitted to keepe a concubine or a harlot, much more should it bee thought lawfull for him to marrie a wife, and yet doth not therefore approue, that it should bee lawfull for a Popish Priest to keepe a concubine or harlot. And that the Councell did not approue it as a thing lawfull, it is manifest by those narrations and authorities which they doe approue and alledge for the approving of their Images. They alledge a Sermon of Iohn Bishop of Thessalonica containing a disputation betwixt a Pagan and a Christian, where the Pagan obiecing in defence of their Images, that Christians also did make Images, not onely to their Saints, but also to their God: the Christian answereth as touching God thus:*

*The image of God, I meane of our Sauiour Iesus Christ, we make according as he was conuersant with men upon the earth, not as by nature he is God: for what likenesse can there bee of God, or what figure of the word of the Father which is without body, and not to be expressed by anie shape? for God (as it is written) is a spirit. Because it seemed good to the Father to send downe from heauen his onely begotten Sonne, that by the holy Ghost he might bee incarnate of the pure Virgine the mother of God, therefore wee paint his humanitie in that sort, but not his incorporall Godhead. Afterwards out of Leontius there is read a disputation betwixt a Iew and a Christian, the Iew professing to beleeue, that*

Christ

Christe is the Sonne of God, but that hee was offended to see Christians contrary to the commaundement to fall downe beefore Images, and the Christian thereto answering: The Scripture commaundeth, that to God as he is God, no similitude or likenesse shall be made, and that no image shall be worshipped as God: but the images which thou seest are made to the remembrance of the incarnation of Iesus Christe which hath yeelded saluation to vs. But the Saints images doe in like sort signifie the battels and victories of euery of them against the Demill and the world. Againe, it is alledged out of the confessions of certaine Martyrs, thus: We doe not by formes and shapes resemble God: being simple and incomprehensible, neither haue wee intended by waxe and wood to honour the substance which is aboue all substance, and hath his being before beginning. By al which it is euident that they wholly disclaimed the painting and picturing of the Godhead, so that their whole decree throughout the Councell proceedeth onely as touching the images of Christ, as he was perfect man, and of the Angels and Saints, as appeareth also by their Synodall Epistle in the end of the Councell, but of images of the Godhead they decree nothing. Whereby wee see that M. Bishop is a man of an euill nature and disposition, who will thus make a bad matter worse then it is. A good mind will make things better and not worse, but whereas the Councell was bad enough in decreeing worship to the Images of Christ and his Saints, he maketh it worse then it was, by fathering vpon it the approuing of the Images of the holy Ghost. We see then that hee hath no prooffe at all for making an image of God, and therefore it was but a poynt of indiscretion in him to tell vs in what manner and meaning they picture and resemble God, it being alledged that it is not lawfull in any manner or meaning so to do. As for his discourse of motiues that come by sight, it fauoureth of the grosse conceipt of all idolaters, who cannot endure to bee without babies and puppets and no longer thinke they haue a God, then they haue a God to looke vpon. To heare of God or to read of him in his word, and to behold him in his workes it is not sufficient, but by an image they must needs haue him sette foorth more nearely to feede their eyes. Surely if the wisdom of God hadde thought it fitte, that wee should haue learned him by painting and caruing, hee would not haue failed to haue giuen vs instruction thereof. But sith hee hath not so taught vs, yea sith he hath taught n Ibid. ex. Leuit.

Deo vt talis est
Scriptura inuis
non esse faciendam similitudinem, neq;
aliquam imaginem
ad adorandum esse vs Deum. Imagines ad
enim quas videt ad memoriam Iesu
Christi salutarum
in incarnatione pinguntur. Porro illius humanitatem ex primentes Sanctorum autem images eodem modo
vt uisusq; p^{er} alia contra diabolum &
mundum uictori-
asq; significant.
o Ibid. ex Conf.
Diacon Chastophy
Non enim diuinum simplex existens & incomprehensibile
formis & figuris assimilatum, nequo cera & lignis super substantialiam &
ante principia exis-
tentem substantiam
honore deo
urimus.
p Ibid. Act 7.
Epist. ad Costan. & Iren. Quatenus scilicet periculis hominibus.

the contrary, and condemned them, (as hath beene before shewed) who haue pretended to bee instructed by such meanes, what a simple man doth Master Bishop shew himselſe, to reaton againſt God, and to ſay, If Angels and vertues may bee figured and repreſented, why may not ſome propertie or action of God bee in like manner repreſented? A ſimple man indeed, that hath not learned to put a difference betwixt the creature and the Creator, nor vnderſtandeth that that which is yeelded to the pleaſing of our curious fancy in the one, yet may iuſtly bee condemned as a wicked preſumption to bee attempted in the other. God hath forbidden to make anie ſimilitudine to him. He hath not limited vs any meaning wherein wee may do it. What is it but wilful contempt in vs to ſay, that in this or that meaning wee will doe that which hee hath abſolutely ſaid wee ſhall not doe?

8. W. BISHOP.

The firſt point then beeing obtained, that ſuch images of God may bee made: I come to the ſecond: That all holy Pictures may bee placed in Churches; which I proue by the argument that M. P. made for our firſt obiection. In Solomons temple were erected Cherubins, which were Images of Angels, on the mercie ſeate, where God was worſhipped, and upon the walles and very doores of the ſame pictured. To this M. P. an-ſwereth, that they were erected by ſpeciall commaundement from God, who preſcribeth the very forme of them, and the place where they ſhould be ſet, and therby Moles had a warrant to make them, let them ſhow the like warrant for their images, if they can.

Secondly, (ſaith he) the Cherubs were placed in the moſt inward place of the Temple, and ſo were remoued from the ſight of the people, and the Cherubs without the vaile, though they were ſeene, yet were they not worſhipped.

Reply. This mans wits were gone a wool-gathering, when propoſing to himſelſe the Cherubs erected in Solomons Temple: he anſwereth of the Cherubs made by Moles 350. yeares before: a moſt groſſe over-ſight and a ſham-full ſhift: but ſuch as men deſperately defending vn-riues, muſt needs uſe. For if he had answered directly, he had not had a word to ſay: for neither did God preſcribe the forme of them, nor giue any ſpeciall

speciall commandement to Solomon, to make and erect any such Cherubs, as he that pleaseth to reade the Chapter may see, and there they were placed not onely in the inward, but also in the outward parts of the Temple, upon the walles and very doores, that they might be scene of all the people: which M.P. finding, fluted from thence, and did flie vnto another, which because it spake of Cherubs, hee thought would serue to blind his simple followers.

Moses indeede had an expresse precept for the making of them as hee had for the curtaines and curtain-rods, and euery particular belonging to the Tabernacle: But Solomon without any speciall commandement out of his high and holy wisdom, understood that hee might most lawfully and laudably imitate that heauenly patterne of Moses: and as the building was farre more sumptuous and stately, so in the number and quantitie of pictures exceeded, which is a sufficient instruction and warrant for all men after his daies so make and set images in the Church. And this finally M. Perkins seemes to graunt, when he saith, that these Cherubs without the veile, were there to be scene, but not to bee worshipped: so that wee haue gotten one steppe further, that Images may not onely be made, but also be set up in the churches: which is fortified by the testimonie of Tertullian, in the place cited before: where hee saith, that our Sauiour was pictured upon holy Chalice, which were used at the Altars and of Sozomenus, who witnesseth that our Sauiours picture was taken into the church.

S. Gregory Naz. * maketh mention of images in the church of Diocæsarea, trimmed up by himselfe. * Epist. 49.

Saint Basil * pointeth to that holy mans picture, standing in the church. * Orat in Barl.

Damasus * shewes how Constantine in the church of S. Iohn Laterane, erected a siluer Image vnto our Sauiour * In vita Siluæ.

Saint Chrylostome in demonstrat. quod Christus sit Deus. And S. Aug * do teach, that the Crosse was on the holy Tables, and used at all holy functions. And the reason why images should principally be set in churches, is very pregnant. For where should holy pictures of holy men be more properly bestowed, then in holy places: and the church being a resemblance of heauen (as S. Paule teacheth, *) is most conueniently decked up with Images: the representations of heauenly creatures: that men entring into that holy place, may by the view and consideration of such an heavenly shew, retire their minds from worldly business, and lift them up unto the soueraigne Monarch of both heauen and earth.

R. ABBOT

There is some wit in gathering wooll, but M. Bishop spendeth his time in gathering mofle, and therein is little wit. For some colour of setting vp their idols in Churches to bee worshiped, they full simply alledge the Cherubins that were set vp in the temple which Solomon built, which M. Bishop saith were the images of Angels, and that they did represent the Angels wee will not deny, but of what shape they were, no man saith Iosephus, can cōiecture or affirme any thing. Our English translation readeth on where, that they were like children, but by the testimonie of Iosephus being himsele an Hebrew, it appeareth that that signification of the Hebrew word is not certaine, and the same word being no where else found in the Hebrew text leaueth it the more doubtfull what construction may be made of it. And the doubt is so much the greater, for that in the vision of Ezechiel there is exprelly noted a difference betwixt the face of a Cherub, and the face of a man, ^c Every beast (saith he) had four faces, the first was the face of a Cherub, the second was the face of a man, &c. But to let that passe, to the obiection M. Perkins an-swereth, that those Cherubins were erected by speciall commandement of God, who had prescribed both the former of them, and the place where they should be set, and thereby Moses had warrant to make them, which they haue not for their Images. Here M. Bishop alledging that M. Perkins proposing to him selfe the Cherubins erected in Solomons temple, answereth of the Cherubins made by Moses 30. yeares before, falleth into a great rage, and cryeth out, a most grosse oversight and shamefull shift, but such (saith he) as men desperatly defending vntruths must needs use, and if he had answered directly he had not had a word to say. Now who would thinke that so wise a man would take so great paines to beewray his owne ignorance who would thinke that in such heate he would charge another man with grosse oversight, when he himsele doth so grossely ouersee himselfe? God commaunded Moses to make the Arke, and the propitatorie or mercy seate, which was the couer of the Arke according to the fashion that he had shewed him. Withall he appointed him

^a Ioseph. Antiq.
lib. 8. cap. 2. H. a Cherubica effigies
quana specie fuerint nemo vel conieere
potest vel eloqui.
^b 2. Chr. 3. 10.

^c Ezech. 10. 14.

him to make two Cherubins, one at the one end of the mercy-seat, and the other at the other end, so as that with their wings stretched out, they should cover the mercy-seat. Which done he saith, ^d There will I declare my selfe vnto thee, and from aboute the mercy-seat betwene the two Cherubins which are vpon the Arke of the Testimonie, I will tell thee all things which I will giue thee in commaundement vnto the children of Israel. According to this commaundement Moses did, but what was done with those Cherubins which Moses set vpp it is vncertaine: whether by the enemies taking of the Arke, as most likely it is, they were taken away, or whether they fitted not the place of the temple where they should stand, the Tabernacle and furniture thereof being before made portable to bee remoued from place to place. Howsoeuer that were, this is certaine, that Solomon by vertue of the same commaundement, and to obserue that which by Moses was prescribed, made two Cherubins to stand in the same place as the other did, and to the same vse. The worke therefore being finished ^e king Solomon and all Israel being assembled together, the Priests brought the Arke of the couenant of the Lord into his place, into the oracle of the house, the most holy place, euen vnder the wings of the Cherubins: for the Cherubins stretched out their wings ouer the place of the Arke, and the Cherubins covered the Arke. Inasmuch then as God had by the law directed in what sort this should be done, Solomon needed no further special commaundement for the doing of it, but had trespassed against God, if being appointed to build a house vnto God, he had not done it according to such rules as the law before had limited for the doing of it: so idle a fancie is it which M. Bishop here deliuereth, that out of his owne high wisdom onely he thought it lawful for him to imitate that which Moses had done before, and consequently so vaine a cauill is it which hee vseth, that the obiection being mooued of the Cherubins made by Solomon, M. Perkins answereth by the commaundement thereof giuen to Moses, when as there was the very same respect of both, and Solomon renewed them by the same commaundement, by which Moses at first made the. 2. Cherubins of which the question is specially mooued, were erected in the most holy place, whether, as the christian faith to the Jew before spoken of in the 2. Nicen coucell, ^f it was graunted to no mortal man to haue access, but onely to the high priest, and that once only in the yeare, yea and there was also a veile drawne before to d Exod. 25. 21.

e I. King. 8. 5. 6.

f Nicen. Synod. 2. Art. 5. ex Leont.

Quo sane nulli mortal. in dabatur accessus praterquam summo Sacerdoti, idque semel in anno.

g Exod. 26. 33. a. Chron. 3. 14.

make a separation betwixt the holy place, and the most holy, so that no man had the sight of any thing therein. Very fallly therefore & vnholly doth M. B. deale to cōfound these Cherubins with the rest as touching their place, and generally to say, There they were placed not onely in the inward, but also in the outward parts of the Temple vpon the walles and very dores, that they might be seene of all the people, it being euident that these were neuer to bee seene of the people nor of any, saue onely the high Priest, and consequently were such as can giue no warrant at all to setting vp of Popish images. As for the rest of the Cherubins which the text mentioneth they were of other sort, wrought in the curtaines, and seeling of the wals, and vpon the dores and vessels onely for garnishing and beautifying the workes, but Cherubins that were standing images there were none but only those two. The veile of the most holy place was wrought with Cherubins,^h the wals were carued with grauen figures of Cherubins, palme trees, and other grauen flowers: ^k the doores also with the like,^l the bases whereupon the caldrons were to stand were grauen in the borders with Lions, Bulls, and Cherubins. Here it is plaine then, that the Cherubins were of no other respect or vse, but as the figures of palme trees, Pomgranats, Flowers, Lions, Bulls, and other such like, not in any sort for exercise of the deuotion of the people, but onely for the adorning of the house. Yea and to these also the people hadde no accessē within the house, being prohibited to come any further then to the dore, neare to which stode the altar to which they were to tender their sacrifice, the Priest receiuing the same, to do with it according to the law, but they themselues might not go in. There was one part of the Temple which was called ^mthe holy place, into which the Priestes and Leuites ordinarily went to performe their ordinarie seruice: another part was called the most holy place into which onely the high Priest went once a yeare, and these two parts are most properly called ⁿthe Temple, in which Solomon beestowed all that curiositie of worke. But without these was the vast-roume into which the people resorted, where they waited ^o in Prayer whilest the Priestes performed the seruice, wherein they were accustomed to be taught, and our Sauour Christ and his Apostles preached vnto them, going also in generall vnder the name of the Temple, yet not hauing in any sort that glorious beauty of workmanship that the other parts had, either can M. Bishop tell vs of any Cherubins therein.

Seeing

^h 2. Chro. 3. 14.

ⁱ Kings 6. 29.

^k Ver. 35.

^l Cap. 6. 29.

^m Exod. 26. 13.

Heb. 9. 6. 7.

^a Luk. I. 21.

^o Ver. 10.

Seeing then there were no standing Cherubins in Salomons temple but onely two, which were wholly remooued out of sight, and the rest had no other vse but onely the same as the figures of Lions, and Bulles, and Flowers, and Palme trees, and such like and of dead men there were no images at all, not of Abraham, Isaac Iacob, or any other, wee should thinke that that temple yeeldeth so small grace to Romish Idols, as that like Dagon they must fall to the ground and breake their necks, vnlesse there be some better means and helpe found for the vpholding of them. As for the vse whereto Salomon intended those workes of his, who is there that maketh question of it? Who doubteth but that by curiositie of Imagerie of caruing and grauing, and painting, men may beautifie either their houses or their Churches in the like sort as hee did? Yea M. Bishop well knoweth that wee doe not thrust Images wholly out of our Churches, because wee haue in Westminster, in Pauls, and commonly in the rest of our Churches throughout the land many images of our deceased Kings and Queenes, of our Nobles and States higher and lower, which we preferue, and adde more to them from day to day. We determine nothing absolutely against Images, but we determine against images in case of superstition and idolatry or in perill thereof. Take away the feare of superstition, and against images or pictures we say nothing. If therefore some of the Fathers not fearing or suspecting that heathenish abomination would get place in the Church, were more secure in this behalfe, and doubted not to adorne their Churches or other places with pictures & images of Christ and his Apostles, of Saints and Martyrs, wee wonder not thereat. but yet how rare a matter this was, may appear by the poore store of examples that M. Bishop bringeth thereof. That of Tertullian was onely ^p a picture vpon the chalice, of a shepheard carying his lost sheepe vpon his shoulder, as in figure of Christ seeking mankind, & recouering him to God, of which kind of picture no man maketh any question. The second example is of the image that stood in the street at Cesarea Phillippi, which in the time of Iulian the Apostata was broken in peeces by the Paganes, and the Christians ⁹ooke up the fragments thereof, and set it in the Church, Gregorie Nazianzene mentioneth certaine ¹¹ images in the Church of Diocæsarea, but what they were, or whose they were it appeareth not, but by his wordes of trimming, not the images, but

p Tertul. de pudicitia. Procedant pictura Calicum vestrorum, si vel in illis per lucibus inter pretatio peccandi illius: (onu perdit a d Domino requisita & humeru eius reuelata)
 q Sozomen. hist. lib. 5. cap. 20 Chrysostanicum eius fragmenta collegissent in Ecclesia posuerunt.
 r Gregor. Naz. ep. 20: Neque enim si statua desiciantur hoc nocuerunt

Temples quod ex
struimus, omnes
nostrum in eo exor
nanda solum.
Basil Orat. de Barlaam. Abito certaminum ac vi toriarum Marty ri à vobis postia magine vultus, &c.
Video manus ad ig
nem lucens exalt
is à vobis descrip tam, &c.

u Chrysoft. demon
strat. Quod Chri stus sit Deus. In frons nostra figu
ratur: sic in sacra
mentis, in sacerdoti ordinationibus, sic
in cruce, in myste
riis eius fulget.

August. de sancti
Ser 4. Cum cru cis caractere Al
terius sacramenta
consecrantur.

Wild 14. 10.
Chap. 15. 5.

August. Epist. 49
Cum hu sedibus honorabilis sublimi tate locatur ut à precantibus & im
molantibus atten
dantur, ipsa simi
litudine animato
rum membrorum
atque sensuum quæ
sui insensata & ex
anima afficiunt
infirmos animos ut
viveret ac spirare
videatur.

Idem in Psa. 113
Ducit & infirmo
quodam affectu ra tio infirma corda
mors alium forma
similitudo et mem
brorum imitata
comparo: & post Quæ adorat vel
orat intuenti simu lacrimum qui non sic afficitur, ut ab
eodem exaudiri pu
tes, & ab eo fieri præstari quod desiderat, speret.

the Church, it appeareth that they were onely for the ornament thereof. Basil onely mentioneth an image or picture that did represent the burning of the hand of Barlaam the Martyr, more lively set forth then he could by words declare it, of which kind M Bishop may see many in the stories of our Martyrs. Their Pontificall is but a bastard witness and of too late yeares to tell vs what Constantine did: he must bring vs better prooffe, or else wee beleue not that which he reporteth by it, though to vs it bee nothing. The last instance out of Chrysofome and Austin (though that out of Austin de Sanctis be a meere forgerie) concerneth onely the signe of the Crosse vsed at the Sacrament as before was said, not any standing image either of the Crosse or of him that was crucified, and therefore is wholly impertinent to the matter heere in question. Hereby then the Reader may suppose that the vse of Pictures and Images in the Primitiue Church was not great, but specially of those standards whereof our question is principally intended, and by which idolatrie hath specially bene committed, inasmuch as there are so fewe certaine and pregnant examples thereof to be found. But whether it were greater or lesse, experience hath since taught vs to misdoubt that which they misdoubted not. Wee haue found it to bee true which the author of the booke of Wisedome saith, that y images are a snare to the feete of the unwise, and that the sight of an image stirreth up the desire of the ignorant, so that hee is in loue with the forme that hath no life, euen of a dead image. When they are honorably set up in places aloft, saith S. Austin, that they may be beheld: of men praying and offering vnto them, euen by the very semblance of liuing members and senses, albeit they be sencelesse and without life, they so affect weake minds, as that they seeme to be alieue and to take breath, The similitude of the formes, saith he againe, and imitation of the frame of the members leadeth and draweth by an infirmities of affection the weake hearts of men: and who worshippeth or prayeth beholding an image, but he is so affected, as that hee thinketh the same heareth him, and hopeth that that which he desireth shall thereby be done for him. Hauing then found this by experience to bee true, we are carefull to shunne all the danger of such superstition, and therefore where we find Images subiect to such abuse, as in the hands of Popish Recusants, we deface and destroy them, and otherwise that there may be no occasion of such abuse, wee eschew and auoide the setting vp of the like as haue bene vsually worshipped amongst the, chusing rather to garnish our Churches with sentences of Scripture or with such Imagerie as Solomon did the temple, wherof there may be no daunger; then with glorious standards and images of men which may againe giue occasion of stumbling and falling to the weake minds of simple and ignorant men. As for M. Bishops, reason why images of holy men should be placed in Churches, it standeth vpon so fickle ground as that it must needes fall. He alledgeth that the Apostle (Heb. 9.) maketh the Church to be a resemblance of heauen. But that which the Apostle there saith is not of our Churches, nor can be drawne thereto, but is spoken of the Sancta sanctorum, the most holy place of the temple of Hierusalem, into which onely the high Priest entred in figure of Iesus Christ once in the yeare, wherby (saith he)^c the holy Ghost signified, that the way into the holiest of all, c Heb. 9. 8. (that, is into heauen) was not yet opened, whilc as yet the first tabernacle was standing. Hence then we argue against M. Bishop out of his owne grounds, that seeing in the most holy place of the temple which was indeed the resemblance of heauen, there were admitted no images of holy men, therefore in our Churches though they be granted to carrie a resemblance of heauen, which he cannot proue, yet it followeth not that Images should bee admitted to haue any place. Yea and the vse of our Churches is not for gazing and staring, but for prayer vnto God, for hearing of his word, and receiuing of the Sacraments, to the deuotion whereof the mind doth the lesse bestow it selfe when it is auerted and withdrawne by the businesse of the eye. And sith in the outmoste Court also of the Temple whither the people resorted, this heauenly shew of M. Bishops was altogether wanting, either we must condemne the wisdome & discretion of him by whom the temple was built, or else wee must reiect this deuice as fantastickall & childish, to which M. Bishop ascribeth the retiring of our minds from worldly businesse, and lifting them vp to God. Nay, images serue not to lift vp the mind, but to depresse it and keepe it downe, and this was one speciall argument wherby the Father impugned the Images of the Pagans,^d for that by the eye they held the mind doating & dreaming vpon an Idoll here on earth, when by spirituall contemplation and deuotion it should bee lifted vp to heauen; so ill hap hath M. B. that he can say nothing for Popish Images which hath not bene before impugned in Pagan Idoles

^d Aug. in Psal.
 117. Valent ad
curuandam inf.
licem animam & c.
Cyprian. contra Dement. LaBant, inst. lib. 2. cap. 20.

9. W. BISHOP.

Now let us come to those two objections of M. P. which seemes to be against the erection of images in churches. The first is out of the councell of Eliberis cap. 36. which commaundeth, that nothing should be painted on the walls of the church, that was adored of the people.

Ans^r. That if the councell speake of the image of God (in which sense M. P. citeth it and the word (adored) doth insinuate) then it may be said, that the councell inhibiteth that sort of Gods images which are made to expresse the diuine nature: if it be extended vnto all sort of images, I answer, that they were forbidden to be drawne vpon the church walles but not to be set in Tables vpon the altar, or in any other place. The reason is beecause that councell was holden in time of persecution, as appeareth by the twenty fifth canon of it: and then, if the persecutors had found out the place of their assembly, as they often did, those pictures must needs either haue bene defaced by themselves, or left vnto the derision & despight of the heathens; & pictures also painted vpon such poore walles as they had then to their churches, would either by the moisture of the walles, or other incommodie, haue bene quickly disfigured: wherefore to the greater honour of such sacred things, those graue Fathers thought it not meet to haue them drawne vpon the church walles, there being many more meete places for them in the churches.

R. ABBOT.

It seemeth that they are much troubled with this Canon of the Eliberine Councell, which maketh them to turne it and wind it one way and another way to set some such meaning vpon it, as that it may not seeme to make against them. The Canon is this:^a It hath seemed good to vs, that there shall be no pictures in the church, lest that which is worshipped or adored be painted vpon the walles. Bellarmine alledgeth out of their Writers foure seuerall answers, and being satisfied with none of them falleth in the end to the discrediting of the Councell,^b What soeuer it decreed, it was but a prouinciall councell, and of but nineteene Bishops, and was neuer confirmed, and seemeth to haue erred in other decrees. This trick of his master M. Bishop thought

^a Concil. Eliberi.
Can. 6. Placuit in Ecclesijs & Curas esse no debere, ne
quod colitur aut a-doratur in parieti-
bus depingatur:
^b Bellar. de mass. ff.
Quicquid Concilii
statuerit. &c. contra nostrantium esse
potest Concilii 19.
Episcoporum quod prouinciale fuit &
minime confirmatum
& in alijs decretis videtur errasse.

thought not good to vse, thinking it to be somewhat too homely, but out of those rejected answers patcheth y^p somewhat to serue the turne till he can provide better. First, he telleth vs that the Councell inhibiteth that sort of Gods images which are made to expresse the diuine nature. But this, saith Bellarmino, seemeth not to serue the turne both for that the Councell speaketh generally of pictures & also because there neuer were any such images used in the Church which are very idols: and the Councell speaketh of that that was wont to bee done, and forbiddeth the doing of it anymore. As for M. Bishops reason of the tying of the Canon to the images of God namely that the word (Adored) doth so insinuate, it maketh much against himselfe. For if the Councell intended, as indeede it did that adoration belongeth only to God, then by the iudgement of this Council, the second Nicene Council decreed idolatry, & the Church of Rome now practiseth it, in giuing adoration to Saints and their images, as also to other images whatsoeuer, because none of them are gods. M. Bishop finding no hold in this answer, goeth to another, which is a scrap of Doct. Sanders answer, set downe also by Bellarmino, that the Council decreed that which time and place then required, because there was doubt least the Pagans should think that the Christians worshipped stockes and stones, and againe least in those times of persecution, the images should by the persecoutours bee reprochfully used. Of this answer Bellarmino saith^d I confesse that the reason of the Canon, Least that which is adored and worshiped be painted vpon the walls, doth not well agree to this exposition. But M. Bishop to shew his cookery, dresseth this answer in a little other sort, and whereas Doct. Sanders vnderstood images for those reasons to be wholly forbidden, he telleth vs that they were forbidden to bee drawne vpon the church walls, for then they must bee forced to deface them themselves, or else must haue them to be disgraced by the enemies, but did not forbid them to be set in tables vpon the Altar or in any other place. Their onely care then was to haue their images at liberty, that if occasion of persecution required, they might be packing bagge and baggage, and like Aneas his Gods might bee shipped away to another Countrey, if they could not finde safaty in their owne. Thus whereas Doct. Sanders his conceipt was, that for feare of persecution, they were to haue no images, Maister Bishop is of another minde, that they might haue them standing vpon the Altar or in other places,

c Ibid Non videtur satisfacere tum quia Concilium loquitur de picturis in genere, tum etiam quia non erant in usu eo tempore immo nec unquam fuerunt in ecclesia tales imagines quod sunt vera idola Concilium autem loquitur de eo quod fieri solebat & interdicitur deinceps fieri.

d Fateor rationem illam Canonis (Nec quod adoratur, &c) non multum quadrare huic expositioni.

onely they might not haue them painted vpon the wall. But the wise man had forgotten the first part of the Canon, It seemeth good to vs, that there shall be no pictures in the church, not that there shall be no pictures vpon the Church wals, but that there shall bee no pictures in the church. Whereby it appeareth plainly, that they supposed no other being of them in the Church, but onely by being painted vpon the wals; and if they had intended the hauing of them any otherwise in the Church, as vpon the altar or in any other place they would not haue forbidden the hauing of them in the church by a flat contradiction to that which they intended. There were yet no standards of images in the Churches; onely they had begun to adorne them with historical pictures & paintings. The fathers thinking it a dishonour to him whom wee adore and worship, to be pictured vpon a wall, to take away that abuse, forbid the hauing of any pictures in the Church, referring their words to that kinde of images because there was no other kinde to which they had occasion to direct them. But Bellarmines exception standeth still good against this answer that the reason of the canon fitteth not to it, which is not for any feare of the pictures, falling into the hands of infidels, but that that which we worship be not painted vpon the wals. And by the same reason hee excepteth also against the third answer, which is taken out of Alanus Copus, that Christians worshipped their images as Gods, & in that sence the Councell did forbid them for then saith he it should not haue bene said, least that which is adored be painted, but rather least that which is painted be adored. The last answer to which hee saith the reason of the canon doth most fitly agree, is that good stuffe which M. Bishop here addeth for supply, that pictures painted vpon such poore wals as they had then to their churches, would either by the moisture of the wals or other incommoditie (he knoweth not what) haue bene quickly disfigured; therefore for the honour of such sacred things, those graue Fathers thought it not meete to haue them drawne vpon the wals, there being many more meete places for them in the church: So then those graue Fathers are forced in effect to say thus, We will not haue any pictures in the Church, because there are many meete places for them in the Church, and they will soone be disfigured being painted vpon the walls. Wee think good to haue no pictures in the church; that that which is worshipped may not be painted vpon the walls, that is, We wil haue pictures in the Church, and that painted which is worshipped, onely for feare of being too soone disfigured, our Church walles being subiect to much moisture, it shall not bee done vpon the wall; albeit if that inconuenience may bee preuented, wee doe not dislike, but that that which is worshipped may be painted vpon the wall. Hypocrite, what doest thou with that soule which Christ hath so dearlie bought? wilt thou sell it wilfully to lies and falshood? The Canon directly forbiddeth the hauing of pictures in the church. The reason is because they would not haue that which they worshipped to be painted vpon the walls. They knew it might as well be painted on the wall as any where else, but they were acquainted with no other hauing of pictures in the church, but onely by painting on the walles. Therefore to exclude them wholly out of the church, which is the thing that they propound, they giue reasons of an vndecencie and vnfitnesse, that that which is worshipped should be painted on the wals. Bellarmino therefore seeing well that none of those answers can satisfie any reasonable man that readeth the Canon it selfe, thought it best for a farewell to disgrace the councill in such sort as I haue before shewed; & much better should M Bishop haue done the same, and acknowledged that the council speaketh against them but they regard it not, then thus to seeke to smother a truth with a manifest and wilfull lye.

10. W. BISHOP.

The second objection is out of a post-script of Epiphanius letter, vnto Iohn Patriarke of Ierusalem, in which is written, as M. Perkins falsely reporteth: that it is against the authorsty, of Scripture, to see the pictures of Christ, or of any Saint to hang in the church.

Answer. It is there onely, to see the picture of a man. Now that he should meane of Christ or of some Saints, is only gashed, yet M. Perkins makes no bones to thrust them both into the Text: euen so doe we thinke that some old enemy of images added that post-script vnto Epiphanius letter. Our reasons are, because it hath no coherence with the former letter or stile. Again, in the seuenth councill, when all that could be found out of aniquitie, was cited against images, no tidings there of this place, which if it had bene true, might haue bene one of the principall. Thirdly, in the same councill, other two places brought, as it were out of Epiphanius workes, were found to be none of his: And for images was alledged.

alledged, that Epiphanius owne disciples erected an image to their maister, and set it in the Church; which they would neuer have done, if hee had taught them to be against the Scripture so to doe.

M. Perkins obserues a speciall reason in Epiphanius other counterfeited testimonie: That images must not be suffered in the common house, because we must carrie God in our mindes. To which we answer, that images must be suffered in all places, that we may the better carie God in our hearts, being by the sight of them, both often put in minde of him, and much moued to honour and loue him.

R. ABBOT.

That all this answer is but a meere shift, appeareth by Alphonsus de Castro, who confesseth that Epiphanius did hold this error as he calleth it against images, as did also after him Serenus Bishop of Massilia, in the time of Gregorie the great, but maketh this excuse for them^a that the matter was not then so manifest, neither had the Church at that time defined any thing of it, and therefore it was free for them, without any note of heresie to bee of that minde. I pray thee, gentle Reader, here to obserue, that the worshipping of images was no point of Christian faith or doctrine in the time of Gregorie the great, that is, for sixe hundred yeares after the time of Christ, and that it was free for men without being questioned of heresie, all that while to speake against it. Hereby then esteeme who they are that are to be accounted new maisters, bringers in of new doctrines, and setters vp of new religions in the Church of Christ, M. Bishop is loath to deale plainly as Alphonsus did, and therefore will by no means haue it thought that Epiphanius was of that minde, but bringeth vs certaine wooden deuices, to perswade men that hee meant some other matter, or rather that the testimonie alledged, is none of his. Maister Perkins briefly alledgeth that Epiphanius saith, it is against the authoritie of Scriptures, to see the image of Christ, or of any Saints hanging in the Church. Maister Bishop saith that it is there onely, to see the pictures of a man, that hee should meane of Christ or of some Saint, is only gathered, & both are thrust into the text. Whether it be so or not, let it appeare by Epiphanius himselfe.^b I found there (in the Church at Anablatha) a veile hanging

^a Alphos. adu. haeres. lib. 8. tit. Image Res non erat adeo aperta nec de illa
re, quoad scia unquam ecclesia illo tempore
definierat quapropter liberum tunc
erat cu contra haeresis notā ita sentire
^b Epiphani. epist. ad
Ioannē Hierosolymit Inuenti ibi
velum pendens in foribus eius de ecclesia tinctū et depictū & imaginē habens quasi Christi vel scti
eticianus dicit: nō enim scia memini cuius imago fuerit Cum
ergo vidissem in ecclesia Christi contra authoritatē scripturā
rariū hōinū pedere
imaginē scidi illud & magna dedit consilium custodibus
eiusdem loci ut pauperem mortuū eo obuoluerent & offerrent, &c.

hanging at the doores of the Church dised and painted, and hauing the image as it were of Christe or some Saint, for I doe not well remember whose image it was. When therefore I sawe that contrary to the authoritie of the Scriptures, there was the image of a manne hanging in the Church, I cut it, and aduised the wardens of the place, that they should burie some poore man in it. It is here verie euident, that of the image of Christ or of some Saint, he saith that it is against the authority of the Scriptures, to see the image of a man hanging in the Church. M. Bishop would seeme to be blinde, but indeed he saw this well enough, and therefore seeketh other shifts, because this could not serue. He would make vs beleue that some oldemie of images added that post-scripte vnto Epiphanius letter, calling that a post-script which is a iust and substantiall part of a letter or Epistle, and seeking to haue it accounted an addition by another man, which all copies both of Epiphanius his workes in Greeke, and Hieromes translation of that Epistle into Latine, doe vniuniformely deliuer as written by Epiphanius himselfe. But yet it shall not be amisse to consider his reasons. First, it hath no coherence with the former letter. As though it were so strange a thing to write of two matters in one letter, whereof the one hath no coherence with the other. But otherwise all thinges very iustly accord. The thing was done as Epiphanius and Iohn the Bishop of Ierusalem, to whom the Epistle was written, were going together to Bethel. It was in the diocesse of the sayde Iohn. Epiphanius had promised to the people of the place, to send them another veile for that which hee cut. He sendeth it to the Bishop and requesteth him to cause the same to bee receiued by the ministers of the place, and them withall, to giue charge that such veiles which make against our religion be not hanged up in the Church of Christ. Thus therefore hauing other occasion to write to Iohn Bishop of Ierusalem, to cleare himselfe as touching some grieuances which the saide Iohn had conceiued against him, there was apparent occasion and reason of the adding of this matter. As for the difference of stile, it is a very fond and friuolous allegation, there being no manner of ground whereupon he should conceiue it, or whereby he can affirme it. His second reason is, beecause in the seventh Councell when all that could be found out of antiquitie was cited against images, there was no tidings of this place, which might haue bene one of the principall if it had bene true. But therein againe his maister dooth exceedingly abuse him.

*c Ibid. Et deinceps præcipere in ecclesia Christianismo di vela que contra religionem nostram
veniunt, nō appen-
di.*

For in the Councell of Constantinople related by that seventh Councell, and to whose citations it is that Bellarmino referreth that speech, there are set downe but only eight authorities or testimonies of former antiquitie, and that eight testimonies are not all that can be alledged out of antiquitie against images, I hope M. Bishop will easily conceiue and finde by this discourse. Yea, and the Fathers of that Councell professe ^d to sette downe but few testimonies of many, willingly passing over the rest which, say they, are infinite, that they who will may search them themselves. And as touching Epiphanius citing one place out of them, they adde, ^e: The same father in other of his Sermons, hath said many things for the casting downe of images, which they that are studious by search shall easily finde. It appeareth therefore that those Fathers hadde no meaning to bring all that might bee brought, and it is a wilfull falshood to say that they did so. And that there was more to haue beene alledged out of Epiphanius, it is plaine, not onely for that hee calleth ^f the deuising of images, a whore dome or fornication, and setteth it downe for a matter of the Carpocratian heresie, that amongst other they worshipped the image of Christ, as before was said, but also for that hee condemneth the Collyridian heretikes for making the image of the virgine Mary, and offering to it, whose heresie for that cause he calleth ^g the image-making heresie, or an heresie giuen to making of images, and calleth the desire of making images a deuillish practise. For the deuill, saith he, stealing into mens minds under pretence of righteousness, deifieth the mortall nature in the eyes of men, and by variety of arts frameth standards bearing in shew the images of menne. And they verily who are worshipped are dead, but they bring in their images to bee worshipped which neuer were aliue, the mind going a whoring from the true and only God, euen as a common strumpet absurdly desiring variety of carnall company, & is past being content with the lawfull marriage of one man. Here by appeareth the falshood of that which Epiphanius the Deacon in the place heere cited by M. Bishop, saith as touching this Epiphanius the Bishop, that in his booke against heresies, he set downe none as touching images: when as exprelly he cōdemneth in those heretiks the making of the image of the virgine Mary, as I haue said, and offering to it, as their manner was to offer to it a cake: whence they had that name of Collyridians giuen to them. And hereby may be cond Synod. Constanti

no. som. 5. apud Ni
con. 2. Ab. 6. Ex
multū pasca testi
monia collocanti
bus: reliqui qua
in finit a sunt uolen tes super sedimus,
ut qui uelint ipsi
requirant.

e Ibid. Idem in alijs quoque sermonibus
suis de Imaginum
subuersione multa
dixit que studiosi
quaerentes facile in uenient.

f Epipha. de har ca
I. Nondum erat in uentum aliquod a liud quam sola scōr
ratio & exegita
ti simulachrorum.

Sic in Ancorato.
g Idem. har. 79.

Huius simulachri
fica heresis radicu bus excisus, &c. Es post. Simulachri
cum hoc studium

& diabolicus cona
tus. Præstatu enim
in istis semper subi
ent hominum mentē
Diabolus, mortali

naturam in homi
num oculis deificā,
statuas humanas
imagines præferen tes per artium uo
rietatem expressit.

Et illi quidem mer
tui sunt qui adorā
tur: ipsorum uerò
imagines qua nun
quam uixerunt,

&c. adorandū in troducunt, adulte
rante mente a solo

& uno Deo, uelut commune scortum
ad multam multi pliciū coitus absur
ditatem irritatum,

& quod temperan
ciam legitimo coitus et uuius uiri destrinit.

ceiued what account we are to make of M.B. third reason, that in the same councell other two places were brought as it were out of Epiphanius workes, which were found to be none of his. Where M. Bishop turneth one place into two, and the same one more likely to be forged by him that mentioneth it, if it were forged, then by any man else. The wordes are cited as out of an Epistle of Epiphanius to Theodosius the Emperour, in the end wherof he saith these words were: I haue often dealt with my fellow Ministers for the taking away of Images, but I haue not bene accepted of them, neither would they suffer, that in some few words I should speake vnto them. These words, or rather the whole Epistle Epiphanius the Deacon affirmeth not to haue bene written by the other Epiphanius, but alledgeth nothing to proue it so. Onely like a wily Sophiilter hee reckoneth vppe of the Bishops that liued in the time of Epiphanius diuerse chiefe men, as Basil; Gregorie Nazianzine, Gregorie Nyssene, Chrysofome, Ambrose, Amphilocheus, and Cirill, so carying the matter, as if these were the men with whome Epiphanius hadde dealt, and hereupon inferring that if these so worthy men would not yeeld to him for the taking away of images, thē there should be no reason now to take them away, whereas he had no reason at all, whereupon to imagine that these or any of these should be the men of whom Epiphanius meant. Now beside that Epistle, he importeth that some other writings there were alledged of Epiphanius directed against Images, which, that beeing the readiest way to put them off, hee without any prooffe at all affirmeth to be counterfeit, but seeing wee haue found him false as touching those workes which he confesseth to haue bene written by Epiphanius, we can giue him no credit for the demerall of the rest. Whatsoeuer they were we see they haue taken course to make them away, & indeed what hath lien in them they haue laboured to suppressle whatsoeuer most clearely did make against them, and in place thereof to foist in bastardes and counterfeits such as are fit to serue their turne, but are altogether vnworthie of them whose names they are forced to beare. The last reason of Epiphanius his scholars, erecting an image to him, and setting it in the church, of what waight it is may bee esteemed by that that hath bene said. It resteth only vpon the credite of Epiphanius the Deacō, & that is little in this case. Epiph. the Bishop of Cyprus liued 400. years before this Epiph. the deacō, that is, before the time of that 2. Nicen Councell. If they would haue bin beleued.

b Synod. Nicen. 2.
Act. 6. Epiph. resp tom. 5. Sa pe
cum commissis
mei de ablatis
imaginum agi. sed
ab is non receptus
sum, neq; vel in paucis vocem meā audira sustinuerunt.

as touching a matter foure hundred yeares beefore, they shoulde haue brought meete prooffe and testimonie thereof, which sith they did not, wee cannot hold it for trueth, inasmuch as otherwise wee finde them so many wayes culpable of vnruth. But whereas Maister Bishop saith, that those Schollers of Epiphanius would neuer haue done so, if he hadde taught the same to be against the Scripture, it is his bare presumption, & not any necessary conclusion, because though Moses had taught the children of Israel from God, that they should make no Idols or worship them, yet when he was but a little gone from them, they made them, yea Aaron himselfe made for them a golden Calfe. As touching the other sentence of Epiphanius cited by Maister Perkins out of the Councell of Constantinople it is this :

i Synod. Constantinop. apud Nicen. 2.

Act. 6. Este me-mores dilecti filij
ne in ecclesiam imagines inferatis, neq̃
in sanctorum came-
terijs eas statuatu:

sed perpetuo circū-
ferite Deum in cor-dibus vestris. Quine-tiam noq̃ in domo communis toleren-
tur. Neq̃ enim fas est Christianum per oculos suspensum
ueneri sed per occu-
pationem menti.
k Deut 4. 23. 25.
l Rom. I. 20.

Bee mindfull beloved sonnes, not to bring Images into the Church, neither to sette them in the Churchyardes, but alwayes carie God about in your hearts. Yea, let them not be suffered in the ordinarie house, for it is not fit for a Christian man to bee holden by the eyes, but by the occupation of the minde. M. Bishop answereth, that Images must be suffered in all places, that wee may the better carie God in our hearts, being by sight thereof put in minde of him. But how vaine this answer is hereby appeareth, for that wee finde in the Scriptures, that the setting vp of such Idols is propounded to bee the ^k forgetting of Gods couenant, and the corrupting of our selues, but find it no where commended in the Scripture, to be a meanes of remembering him. He hath set before vs the heauen and earth as a glasse, wherein wee may behold^l his power and Godhead, and thereby bee mooued to make enquire after him. He hath giuen vs his worde to answer vs what is needefull when we enquire of him. He hath appoynted the Sacraments for seales of that grace and mercy, that hee hath reuealed in his worde. He setteth the spectacles of his prouidence, and mercy, and iudgement continually beefore our eyes. By these meanes hee hath taught vs to be put in minde of him, and to learne to cary him in our hearts, but to be put in minde of him by an Image, it is only a vaine and friuolous pretence of Idolatrie, and no direction or instruction of the holy Ghost. It is enough for vs, that the people of God who were to remember God as well as wee, yet neuer found it lawfull to set vp an Idoll to remember him thereby.

II. W. BISHOP.

Now I come unto a third point, which M. Perkins maketh the second of our difference, that images may be not onely made and set in churches, but also worshipped.

M. Perkins holds the contrary: and his principall ground is the second commandement, which containes (saith he) two parts. The first forbids the making of images to resemble God: the second, the worshipping of them or God in them, in these words, Thou shalt not bow downe to them.

Answe. If it be onely forbidden to make the image of God, and so adore it, then the making and worshipping of the image of Christ, or of any other creature, is not there prohibited: and so this second commandement more then thise alledged, will not serue the turne against any other Image but God onely. And in plaine reason, according also to M. Perkins his owne confession, the commandements of the first table touch onely our dutie towards God, that we giue him all his due honour, and doe not giue any part thereof unto any thing else whatsoener. Wherefore diuine and godly worship is onely there spoken of, and not such worship as wee giue unto any creature, or to the picture of it. And consequently there is nothing there against the worshipping of holy images.

Obserue that there is a soueraigne worship due so God as to the creator and gouernor of all the world, and to giue this to any creature is idolatry. Another honour, by infinite degrees inferiour, yet absolute in it self is ascribed unto Angels, and men as creatures endued with reason, and made after the likenesse of God, and to exhibite this to whom it is due, is ciuility and not idolatry. This honour may be deuided into two parts, because these creatures are like to God, as well in their naturall powers and qualites, as in their supernaturall. And that honor which is giuen to man or Angel, in respect of any naturall qualitie, may be called morall or ciuill but that which is attributed unto them in regard of their supernaturall gifts, may well be called religious and spirituall, because it is due unto them onely for their spirituall and religious qualities.

There is a third kind of worship, yet meaner then the other: which is a kind of dependant and respectiue worship: as when a seruant is honoured or cherished, not for his owne but for his maisters sake. And this is that worship which we allow unto images, which for the Saints sake whom it doth represent, we do either reuerently regard, or take off our hat, or bow our knee vnto it. This third kind of worship being all we allow vnto pictures, were he not that understands it more then halfe franticke, that should thinke it a great desparagement vnto the incomprehensible worship of God, that to one of his seruants pictures I should yeelde some such pettie reuerence: or that God should forbid this in the forefront of his sen commaundements? nothing lesse.

R. ABBOT.

It is true that the commaundements of the first table doe touch onely our duty towards God, requiring that we giue him all his due honor, and doe not giue any part thereof to any thing else whatsoeuer. Therefore the second commaundement for preseruing entirely the honour of God forbiddeth the making of any image whereby to represent or resemble him, and not onely so, but any image whatsoeuer to bow downe to it or to worship it, yea & not onely the making and worshipping of images, but also the worshipping of the creatures themselves, any whatsoeuer either in heauen or earth. Both the wordes of the commaundement and the Scriptures of particular lawes that are referred vnto it, do planely shew that all these things are to be vnderstood therein. Now then seeing the law said both of images and of creatures, Thou shalt not bow downe to them nor worship them, it must follow that they who make the images of Saints and doe bow downe to them and worshippe them, do trespassse against this commaundement, and therefore the commaundement is by M. Perkins rightly and well applied against Popish Images. But M. Bishop telleth vs, that onely diuine or godly worship is there spoken of, and not such worship as they giue to any creature or to the picture of it. And we acknowledge that onely diuine and godly worship is there spoken of, but diuine or godly worship wee say is all manner worship pertaining to godlinesse and religion, and therefore that they in giuing religious worship to Saints and to their images, do contrary to the commaundement giue vnto them diuine and godly worship. But M. Bishop with a distinction of worship taketh vpon him as doe his fellows to mock God, and albeit they commit all absurdity of idolatry, yet by a school-trick will make him belecue that they doe him no wrong at all. He telleth vs of a soveraigne worship due to God, and of a religious or spirituall worship due to Angels and Saints, and of a dependent and respectiue worship due to Images. But what, is not the soueraigne worship of God a religious and spirituall worshippe? or what doe they make of their worship of images? is there no religion therein, and do they account it onely a profane and carnall seruice? If on all parts there be religious and spirituall worship as he will not deny, what a wise part doth he play to giue vs a distinction of three members whereof one comprehendeth all? Well, howsoeuer hee fumble in his termes, yet wee must take vpon vs to vnderstand his meaning well enough, namely that they make three kinds of worship, one belonging to God, another to Angels and Saints, and a third to Images. They are wont to make but two kindes, latria to God, and doultia to Angels and Saintes, and both these feuerally to be performed to their images, and we can hardly take M. Bishops word for any warrant that they are nowe minded otherwise. It hath bene their common rule, that ^a the honour of the image redoundeth to him whose image it is. Therefore Thomas Aquinas resoluech that ^b the same reuerence is giuen to the image of Christe and to Christe himselfe, and because Christ is to be worshipped with the worship of latria (that is, Diuine and godly weisship) it followeth that his image also is to be worshipped with the same worship of latria. Therefore Andradus saith as hath bene ^c before shewed, Wee deny not but that we worshippe the Crosse of Christ with this worship of latria. So then inasmuch as the Saints are to be worshipped with the worship of doultia, therefore they hold that their Images are in like sort to be worshipped. Bellarmino sumperech somewhat at the matter, and telleth vs, that ^d it may be admitted that improperly and accidentally images may be worshipped with the same kinde of worshippe wherewith their principals are worshipped: but one of his fellow Ieluites affirmeth simply and plainly, that ^e it is the constant opinioin of their Diuines, that the image is worshipped with the same honour and worship wherewith hee is worshipped whose image it is. M. Bishop therefore, but onely that he hath the countenance of to great a Cardinall as Bellarmino, might haply receiue a checke for doing some disgrace to holy Images, by putting them to a lower and inferior kinde of worship then the common opinion of their Deuines doth attribute vnto them. Which indignity he maketh the greater by making images as seruants or seruuing men to them whose Images they be, to Christ and his Saints,

^a Thom. Aquinas
p. 3. q. 25. art. 3.
ex Damasco. How nor imaginu ad
prolety pum perno
rit.

^b Ibid in corp.
Eadem reuerentia
exhibetur imagin
Christi & ipsi chri
sto. Cum ergo chri stus adoretur con
suetudine latria con
sequens est quod
cuius imago sit ado
ratione latria ado
ra da.

^c Scilicet.
d Bellarmino. de
Imag. art. c. 23.
Admissio potest
imagines posse colli
improprie & par accidens eodem ge
nere cultus quo ex
emplar ipsum colit
tur.

^e Azar. Institur.
lib. 9. cap. 6. Con
stanti est Theologu
rum sententia ima
gines eodem hono
re & cultu coli
quo colitur id eum
est imago.

or to God if they be images of God. As when a seruant is honoured not for his owne but for his masters sake: so is that worshipp (saith he) which wee allow to images, which for the Saints sake whome it doth represent, wee doe either reuerently regarde, or take off our hat, or bow our knee vnto it. But what reason is it to make seruants of them, who are more trimly decked and more loftily set vp then euer their masters were? A seruant is to be regarded for his masters sake, but what reason is there to giue to the seruant that honour that appertaineth to the maister, yea which the maister hath holden vnlawfull to be done vnto himselfe? Peter for bad Cornelius (saith Athanasius) when he was about to worship him, saying, For I also am a man. The Angell also when Iohn would worship him, suffered him not, saying, See thou doe it not, for I am the fellow-seruant of thy brethren the Prophets, and of them that keepe the wordes of this booke: worship God. Wherefore it belongeth to God onely to bee worshipped, sayth hee, neither are the Angels ignorant thereof, who albeit they exceede others in glorie, yet acknowledge themselues to be creatures, and that they are to be reckoned in the ranke of them that are to worshippe, and not of them that are to bee worshipp'd. Nowe if Angelles and Saints haue refused to haue worshipp done vnto them, because they are but menne and fellow-seruants with vs to God, howe may it bee thought lawfull for vs to doe it to their seruants, that is, to idols and images, as to their seruants for their sakes? Surely wee cannot see howe this by any reason can stand good. Albeit wee hold it also an vnmanerly and rude part in M. Bishop thus to thrust seruants vpon them without their will. Where doth it appeare vnto him that they haue promised entertainment to any such seruants: what couenant haue they made with them? what wages doe they pay them? what seruice doe they require of them? nay what seruice should they expect of senselesse blockes, which haue eyes and see not, eares and heare not, hands and handle not, feete and walke not, throate and speake not which cannot ^hgoe when they are bid goe, nor come when they are bid come, nor doe what they are bid doe. And if they bee of no seruice, if they be good for nothing, why are they set forth to vs by a comparison of seruantes to bee well entertained and vsed for their masters sake? M. Bishop then hath heere made a wise hande, to set downe a distinction of worshipp, the particulars whereof are neyther pleasing to vs nor to his owne friends.

Albeit

¶ Athanasius contra Arian ser. 3. Petrus adorare volentem Cornelium inhibuit, &c. Ange-lus quoque Ioannē
in Apocalypsi se
adorare volentem
non admisit, &c.
Quocirca felius
numinis est adorari neque id ab Angeli ignoratur, qui quamquam cetero-
rum gloria transcen-
dit creaturas tamen cessit, neque in classibus adorando-
rum sed adoranti-
um agnoscunt se
computari debere.

¶ Psal 135. 5.
Heuel. 3. 20.

¶ Mat. 9. 9.

Albeit it is withall to be vnderstood, that these distinctions of worship, whether M. Bishops or any others, belong to the theoremes of their schooles, not to the practise of their Churches. They tell vs of diuers kinds of worship in their schooles, when as in their churches there is no difference to be seene; but what they doe to God, the same they docto Saints, the same also to the images of the Saints. Wherein that their absurditie and the vanitie of their distinction may the better appeare, let vs examine what things they are that belong to diuine and godly worship, which they call Latria, which if they bee found to giue in common to their Saints and images, then it shall bee manifest that their distinction is vsed but onely for a shew to blind the vnaduised and ignorant Reader, but cannot with any intelligent minde acquit them of that idolatrie which we impute vnto them. To diuine or godly worship, Cyril & Austine, doe reckon to be belonging ⁱ sacred deuotions, priesthood, temples, altars, sacrifices, and offerings, ceremonies, festiuall dayes and solemnities, vows, prayers, praises and thanksgiuings, adoration and worship, confessions, all which the diuels did procure to bee giuen to them when they fought to draw vnto themselues the honour of God. S. Austine againe expoundeth latria to consist ^k in doing sacred deuotions and sacrifices, or consecrating any thing that is ours or our selues by any rites or ceremonies of religion. Now what is there of all these things which they yeeld not to their Saints, and in the name of the Saints to the images of the Saints? They worship them, they pray vnto them, they make confessions and vowes to them, they giue thanks to them for benefites receiued, they performe sacred deuotions and ceremonies to them, and thereto consecrate themselues and their goods, they keepe holy daies and fasting daies in the worship and honour of them, they set vp lights before them, they put precious and costly garments vpon them, they make pilgrimages to them, and no end is there of religious rites and duties which with all holie obseruation they yeeld vnto them, ^l Who doubteth (saith Saint Austine) but that to whomsoeuer wee build a temple, wee serue him with latria, that is the worship of God ^m For if to any of the most excellent Angels (saith he) wee should of wood and stone build a temple or church, we should yeeld to the creature a seruice which is due to God onely subiberemus eam seruitutem qua uni tantum debetur Deo.

i. Auent. de ciu. Dei, lib. 7. cap. 32. Sacra, sacerdotia, templum, altaria, sacrificia, ceremonia, dies festi, & quicquid aliud ad latria pertinet, &c. Cyril contra Iulian. lib. 4. Sacrificia, festiuitates, hymni, gratiarum actiones &c. adoratio, &c. preces, confessiones, celebritates &c. Vinde Aug. de ciu. Dei. lib. 10. cap. 4. k. Auent. de ciu. Dei. lib. 10. ca. I. V. sacrificium, vel aliqui nostri seu nos ipsi religioni ritibus consecramus. Hic est enim deitatis debitum, &c. Latriam nostri interpretati sunt. l. dem. contra ser. Arian. cap. 29. Si aliquibus spiritibus nobis Spiritus sancto templum fabricaremus, quibus dubitaretis nos latria seruire? l. d. contra Maximin. lib. 1. Si templum alicui Angelo excellentissimo de lignis & lapidibus sacrumus, &c. creatura

But this they did as Erasmus there notethⁿ to every of the Saints, accordingly as Boniface the blessed^o consecrated the Pantheon of the Romans to the honour of the blessed Virgine and all the Martyres; according as they are taught to pray comming into a Church,^p O ye Saints of God in the honor and remembrance of whom this Church was dedicated and these altars consecrated, &c. Where it appeareth also that they consecrated altars to the Saints and to their honour, yea insomuch that in the Churches they had many times their peculiar chappels and altars, and Priests, our Ladies chappell, our Ladies altar, our Ladies Priest, & so for other Saints, whereas S. Austin also testifieth, that to be honoured with an^q altar is a thing proper to God onely. Albeit here they except that they offer not their sacrifice to any but to God onely, namely that in their masse they do not say, We offer vnto the O Peter or Paul, but referue this as peculiar to him onely who hath crowned them. A goodly matter that of all the worship that belongeth to God they keepe one onely act or office entire vnto him. Albeit here they doe but halt and dally with God, because howloeuver they pretend to offer to God onely yet they professe^r to offer to God in honour of the Saints: and whereas our Sauour Christ hath instituted that sacrament to be celebrated as a diuine and godly worship,^t in remembrance of him, they herein ioyne the Saints in fellowship with him and professe the same holy celebration to be performed and done^u in remembrance of them. And yet it is to be obserued further that sacrifice it not to be vnderstood onely of propitiatory sacrifice, as they affirme their masse to be, but of all consecrated and holy offerings, concerning which generally God hath said^x He which sacrificeth or offereth to other gods but to the Lord onely shall be slaine. Where^y by immolation or sacrifice (saith Lyra) is vnderstood to be forbidden oblation, drink offering, burning of incense, and such other things which in the temple were done directly to God himselfe. Hereby then it is plaine that all manner of religious and holy offering is to be accounted a peculiar honour of God alone, and therefore did Epiphanius condemne the Collyridian heretickes as making a god of the Virgine Marie, in that by way of deuotion^z they offered a cake vnto her or in her name.

Erasmus ibid. in margin. Hoc nunc fit quibus libet diuis.

Platin. in Bonif. 4. Pantheon a Rhoca obtinuit consecranitq; in honorem beatae
virginis omniumq;
martyrum.

Hora virg.
Maria secund.
usum Sarum.
Sancti dei in quorum honore & commemorata vane hac sancta
dedicata est Ec-
clesia & hec al-
taria consecrata,
&c.

Aug. de verb
Do. ser. 6. Quod pro nomine ac-
cipiant illius statuam, ara testatur. Quod il-
lic facit ara si
illud non habetur
pro nomine?

Triden. concil.
sess. 6. cap. 1. Vn-
de nec sacerdos
dicere solet, offe-
ro tibi sacrificium
Petro vel Paule,
&c.

Bellarmin. de
sanct. beatitud.
cap. 7. Sacrificia vane Eucharistia
quum laudum et precum in coram honorem Deo
publice offerunt.
347.

2. Cor. II. 24.
25.

Concil. Trident
ad supra Inho-
noram & memoriam sanctorum
a clesia missis
celebrare con-suevit

Exod. 22. 10. Lyra ibid. Per immolationem hic prohibita intelligitur prohibita oblatio, libatio, aburificatio, & talia quae fiunt in templo ipsi Deo directi, z Epiphanius hares. Panem proponunt & offerunt in nomen Mariae, &c. Sanctum orat Mariae corpus at non Deum, &c.

But this the Church of Rome doth, and teacheth men to doe: they offer to their idols and images all manner offeringes of gold and siluer, and iewels, and whatsoeuer else may serue for the vse of them who make their profit of those offeringes, and therefore cannot bee cleared of offering sacrifice to the Saints and their Images, that is, of giuing them in this respect also the worshippethat becometh to God only. Thus as ^a the harlot in the Prouerbs eateth and wipeth her mouth, and saith, I haue committed no iniquitie, so the harlot of Rome going a whoring from God, bestoweth vpon her idols all the worship & honour of God, and doth to them all that shee doth to God and in the meane time pretendeth that it is not diuine or godly worshippes, but onely an inferiour kind of worship that shee doth assigne vnto them. Which because it is more manifest then that it can bee denied, the Valentian Iesuite to take away the inconuenience thereof arising, that they are guiltie of Idolatrie, frameth vs a new definition of Idolatrie, that it is not the giuing of the worshippethat God to a creature, but ^b the giuing of the worship of God to a creature as to God, therby thinking that they are to bee acquitted of Idolatrie for that albeit they giue diuine honor and worship to their Images, which hee could not denie, yet they giue it not to them as taking them to be gods. But S. Austin simply saith, that ^c they are called Idolaters who giue to Images that seruice that is due to God, which they doing by his owne confession, inust consequently be affirmed to be idolaters. Neither can the distinctions vsed by M. Bishop and the rest, whatsoeuer colours they set vpon them, excuse them in this behalfe, because howsoeuer they terme it an inferiour worshippethat they doe to Saints and Images, yet it is religious worshippethat or worshippethat of religion, and worshippethat of religion is peculiar to GOD alone. ^d The Apostle (saith S. Austine) forbiddeth that worshippethat of religion be yeilded to a creature. ^e Christians (saith he) are to obserue that with dutie of religion they worship God onely. Therefore he saith as touching the Saints, ^f Let it be no religion with vs to worship dead men: they are to be honoured for imitation, not to be worshipped for religion: we honour them by way of loue, not by way of seruice. To this purpose the same S. Austine very fitly obserueth, that religion is so called of tying our selfe to God onely, that wee may conceiue that as Lactantius sayeth,

^a Prou. 30. 20

^b Greg. de Valen. de idololatri. lib. 2. cap. 1. Idololatrie ratio creaturae diuinum honorem habere sicus Deo.

^c Aug. de Trin. lib. 1. cap. 6. Idololatrie dicuntur qui simulachris carnis tribent seruitutem qua debetur Deo. ^d August. contra Faust. lib. 14. ca. 13. ^e Apostolus & creaturam laudat, & citamen cultu religionis exhibere videt.

^e Idem contra 2. epist. Pelag. lib. 3. cap. 4. Qui dicat non debere obseruare Christianos ut vni Deo religioni obsequia seruiatur. ^f Idem de vera relig. cap. 55. Non sit nobis religio cultus hominum mortuorum, &c. Honorem sunt propter imitationem, non adorationem, &c. Honoramus propter religionem, &c. Non ramus eos charitate, non seruitute.

^g Ibid. Et vni religantur in eis non seruimus, unde religio dicitur creditur.

^h no religion or worship is to be holden but of God only. In respect whereof hauing condemned images, he vseth this exhortation, that we adore nothing, worship nothing but the onely Godhead of our maker and Father. ^k He onely is to be worshipped, saith S. Austine, in the enjoying of whom alone he becommeth blessed that worshippeth him. ^l Wee hearken to him (saith Origen) who teacheth us that God onely is to be worshipped, and as for other things that they are nothing, or that they are indeede, but are worthie of honour onely, not of adoration and worship, which can be granted to no creature without iniury unto God. Now then what do they but mocke vs in telling vs of a diuers kinde of worship to be performed by way of religion to God, to Saints and Images, when as in religion there is no worshipp to be done to any but to God alone? They tell vs they giue not the same worship to Images or to the Saints as they doe to God, when as religion teacheth vs that no worship at all is due either to images or Saints, but to God onely. Albeit they lie therein, as hath beene shewed, inasmuch as by the common opinion of their Diuines, the Images of God and of Christ are to be worshipped with diuine worship, because diuine worship is due to them that are represented thereby. Now therefore whereas M. Bishop saith, that all the worship which they doe to Images is but reuerently to regard, to put off the hat and to bow the knee to them, he speaketh as a manne ashamed of that which euery where and in all places is practised amongst them. And it may be that he speaketh it but onely by equiuocation in respect of the verie Image it selfe, for in ^m the very image it selfe (saith Bellarmino) there is some sacred matter, namely the likenesse to a holy thing, and the dedicating or consecrating of it to diuine worshipp, and therefore Images themselves in themselves are worthy of honour, and not only as they represent or beare the person of the principall. His proposition more fully expresseth the same, ⁿ The Image of Christe and of the Saints are to be worshipped not onely accidentally or vnproperly, but properly and in themselves, so as that they determine the worshipp themselves as they are considered in themselves, and not onely as they supply the place of their principall. Thus haply M. Bishop by a cunning distinction telleth vs that they giue no more worshipp to images then that which he mentioneth, because in one meaning they giue no more as they are considered.

^h Lactan in insti lib. I. cap. 20. Religio et veneratio nulla alia nisi unius Dei tenenda est.

ⁱ Ibid. lib. 2. cap. 18. Nihil aliud adoremus, nihil colamus nisi solum artificis nostri parentisq; unicum numen.

^k August. contra Fausi. lib. 20. ca. 5. Solus ille colendus est quo solo fruens beatus sit cultor eius.

^l Origen. contra Celsi. lib. 1. Ei adhibemus animum qui docet solum hunc colendum esse, cetera nihil esse, aut esse quidem sed honore tantum atq; adoratione qua nulli creaturae concedi potest atq; diuinitatis iniuria.

^m Bellarmin. de Imagin. sanctor. cap. 21.

ⁿ In ipsa imagine sacrum, nimirum similitudo ad rem sacram, & ipsa dedicatio siue consecratio diuino cultui. Ergo ipsa in se & non solum ut prototypi vicem gerunt honore digna sunt.

ⁿ Ibid. Imagines Christi & Sanctorum veneranda sunt non solum per accidens vel improprie, sed etiam per se & proprie, ita ut ipsa permittunt venerationem, ut in se considerantur, & non solum ut vicem gerunt exemplari.

in themselves, but let him make the meaning what hee will, hee knoweth well that in the deuotion of the people they haue all the same worship and seruice done to them as is done to God himselfe. Albeit that which hee himselfe mentioneth is a witlelesse a senselesse and drunken deuotion, like to the superstition that was derided in the Pagans, who ^o at the sight of the image of Serapis (or such like) were wont going by to kisse the hand, namely in token of doing reuerence thereto. What a brutish and beaulty absurditie is it, that an vnderstanding soule should deiect it selfe to do reuerence to a block? God hath said, I thou shalt not bow downe to them: and againe teacheth man to say, Shall I bow to the stocke of a tree? The Prophet saith of Idolaters, They worship the worke of their owne handes which their owne fingers haue made, and a man bowed himselfe, and a man humbled himselfe, therefore spare them not. Hee denounceth the vengeance of God to them who to stockes & stones, to the works of mens handes will doe euen those pettie reuerences which M. Bishop speaketh of. Therefore whereas he saith, This third kinde of worship beeing all that we allow vnto pictures, were he not that vnderstandes it more then halfe franticke, that should thinke it a great disparagement vnto the incomprehensible worship of God, that to one of his seruants pictures I should yeeld some such pettie reuerence, or that God should forbid this in the forefront of his ten comandements? I answer with his owne wordes, Nothing lesse. We see that like Caiaphas hee speaketh the truth, and is not aware. Indeede it is nothing lesse then a franticke humour to bee instructed by Gods commaundement, and therupon to deny the doing of any worship to pictures and images: but to affirme the same, and to doe such reuerences to pictures, is a plaine token that Idolaters are like the idols which they worshippe, altogether void of vnderstanding and without the light of common sence, Therefore rightly the Prophet saith, They that make them are like vnto them, and so are al they that put their trust in them.

o Mnut. Felix in Ost apud Arta.
Simulachro Serapidu deratato (ut
vulgus superstitiosus solet) manum
or. admoens oscu-
lam labijs presert.
p 11. 44 19.
q Ch p. 2 8.9

r p sal 115. 8.

12 W. BISHOP.

But let vs go on with M. Perkins his argument. His second is, The brazen Serpent was an image of Christ crucified, appointed by God: y. e. when the children of Israel burned incense vnto it, Ezechias brake it in peeces ..

o 4. Reg. 18.

Answer.

Ans^w. So when Christians generally giue godly honour to images, as those Israelites did to the serpent, let them also be broken by their lawfull superiour if no better remedy may be found. But as that verie brazen serpent duly worshipped many hundred yeares by the same people beefore they fell to idolatrie, as witnesseth S. Augustine, where he reckoneth the brazen serpent among those signes which are worthie of religious worship so good Christians may worship all sorts of holy pictures, so they thinke no god to dwell in them, nor put any trust in the pictures, but use them onely to stir up deuotion, to keepe their minds from wandering after their domesticall affaires, and to conserue the memorie of Gods happy seruants.

* Lib. 3, de Trini,
cap. 10.

R. ABBOT.

We are desirous to know where the superiours of the Romish Church haue broken any images to which godly honour hath beene giuen. That it hath beene giuen to them, it is confessed by Polydore Virgil, as I haue before shewed, acknowledging that ^a that part of pietie did litle differ from impiety, and that the people did worship images not as figures but so as that they did put more trust in them then in Christ and the Saints to whom they were dedicated. These words they deface and blot out, with many other following which serue to the laying open of this wicked abuse, but of the reforming of any abuse herein committed, we can yet vnderstand nothing. And seeing Greg. de Val. plainly confesseth that they giue diuine worship to Images, as hath bene shewed in the former section, we must take this speech of M. Bishop to be vsed but for a shift without any meaning to haue their idols so roughly dealt with as hee pretendeth. Nay as the Pagans were made beleeue that ^b if the image of Serapis were hurt or touched, all the world would presently be dissolued: so the Romish politicians perswade themselues that their golden worlde will soone come to nought if once they should offer to lay violent hands vpon their sacred and holy images. As for that which he saith of the brazen serpent duly worshipped many hundred yeares, it is a most impudent lie, neyther is there so much as anie shewe of anie thing whereupon hee should so affirme. The childrē of Israel had bin accustomed ^c to burne incense to it, Ezechias tooke knowledge of it (which it seemeth some other godly kings before him had not done) & cōdemned it as wicked & vnlawful, & to take away vtterly the occasion of that idolatrie hee

^a Polyd. Virgil. de inuent. rer. lib. 5.
cap. 13.

^b Ruffin. hist. lib. 2
cap. 23. Persuasio
dispersa quod si hu
mana manus firmo
Eachrum illud con
sigisset, terra dehis
cens illico solueret sur in Chaos, &
repentē calum rns
rot in praecept.
^c 2. Kings 18. 4.

hee brake the same brazen Serpent in peeces, calling it in contempt because of the abuse of it, a peece of brasse. That it was worshipped then we find, and for that cause was destroyed, but that it was euer lawfully worshipped, there is nothing to be found. Yet M. Bishop very lewdly seeketh to father this conceit vpon S. Austine, ^d As witnesseth Saint Austine, saith he, where he reckoneth the brazen Serpent among those signes which are worthie of religious worshippe. The thing that S. Austine saith is this, that to declare somewhat to vs from God sometimes a forme or kinde of thing is made either to abide for a while as might the brazen Serpent that was lift up in the wilderness, and as letters or writing may: or else to passe away as the seruice is performed, as the bread made for the vse in receiuing the Sacrament is consumed. Hereupon hee addeth, But these things beeing knowne to men because they are done by men, may haue honour as matters appertaining to religion, but wonder as matters of maruell they cannot haue. And what is here nowe whence M. Bishop should affirme that S. Austine accounted the brazen Serpent worthie of religious worship? What doth he say more of the brazen serpent then he doth of letters and writing, and will M. Bishop say that hee will haue letters and writing to bee worshipped? Things appertaining to the vse of religion are to be honored by decent and seemely vsage, as our Churches, pulpits, vestments, cups, books, and such like, and yet they are not to be worshipped. Saint Paul saith, The elders that rule well are worthie of double honour, and yet wee hope M. Bishop will not vpon a good opinion of himselfe take vpon him to bee worshipped. ^f Euery one that worshippeth, honoureth, saith S. Austine, but euery one that honoureth doth not worship. Therefore Epiphanius saith of the blessed Virgine, ^g Let Mary bee in honour: let Father, Sonne and holy Ghost be worshipped: Let no man worship Mary: this mystery belongeth unto God. She is holy and honourable, but is not to be worshipped. The brazen serpent then might be honored by being carefully kept, as Manna was for the remembrance of the benefite thereby receiued, but thereupon to assigne to it religious worship is a collectiō somewhat strange. Seeing therefore the brazen Serpent was neuer lawfully worshipped, M. Bishop hath no argument from thence to prooue that good Christians may worship all sorts of holy pictures, but M. Rerkin argument standeth good, that sith the brazen Serpent created by the commaundement of God himselfe, yet when it was worshipped

^d Aug. de Trinit. lib. 3. cap. 10. Aliquando ad hoc pro eadem species vel aliquantulum manura, sicut potius serpens ille aeneus exultatus in eremo, sicut possunt et litorum: vel per ad ministerio transitura, sicut panis ad hoc factus in accipiendo sacramento consumitur, sed ista quia hominibus nota sunt quia per homines sunt honorum rationem reliquosa habere possunt, stuporem sanquam rationem possunt.

e 1. Tim. 5. 17.

^f August. contra Iulian. ca. 23. Honorat omni qui adorat, non autem adorat omni qui honorat.
^g Epiphanius hares. 47. Sit in honore Maria, Pater & Spiritus sanctus adoretur, Mariam nemo adoret, Deo debetur hoc mysterium, &c. Sanctus est & honoratus, at non ad adorandum.

was therefore destroyed and abolished : therefore much more all other images beeing erected onely of humane curiositie without commaundement from God are to be defaced and destroyed when religious worship or seruice is done vnto them. As for M. Bishops vses of his images to stirre up deuotion, to keepe the mind from wandering, to conserue the memorie of Gods happie seruants, they are (as I haue before shewed) the vaine pretences of Idolaters, neyther is there any good effect to be expected from them, to say nothing that these things are nothing to the point in hand, which is the worshipping of them.

13. W. BISHOP.

Now to the third argument, which is iolly, and worthy the wilde witte of a madde minister. Christ would not so much as bow his knee vnto the deuill, although he would haue giuen him the whole world for doing of it: therefore we must not adore images. True, if the Image were M. Bezaes ensigne, or of their maister the deuill, or any of his hel-bounds.

R. ABBOT

Here M. Bishop was disposed to play the Sycophants part, or else he might haue seene that M. Perkins meaning was otherwise then to frame any such argument as hee hath hewed his words to. The point in question is the worshipping of Images. M. Perkins for our principall ground against it, alledgeth the second commaundement. To declare the meaning of the commaundement he alledgeth the example of our Saviour Christ, who when the deuill requireth him ^a to fall downe and to worship him vpon promise to giue him the whole worlde, taketh exception against him, not by the indignity of his person, but by the commaundement of the law, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely thou shalt serue, importing thereby, that the law doth forbid the doing of that which the deuill required to any saue to God onely. He reiecteth him, I say, not in the name of a deuill, but generally in the name and condicion of a creature, teaching by the law that no creature, none but onely God is to bee holden capable of that which hee demaunded to himselfe. Nowe then if M. Bishops wits stand right, the argument standeth good, good, that sith Christe by the lawe challengeth to God onely that which the diuel required of him, which was to fall downe and worship him, wee are thereby to learne that wee are not to fall downe and to worship any creature, not the Saints themselues, much lesse the vile idols that are set vp in their names. Here I know what they are ready to except, that Christ saith not there, Thou shalt worshippe the Lord thy God onely, but Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and leaueth onely to the other part, Him onely thou shalt serue as not denying but that other things may be worshipped beside God, but only denying vnto thē the seruice of latría, the word there being λατρεία, whence latría is deriued, which they say is the seruice peculiar vnto God. But how vaine this exception is, appeareth by considering the originall wordes of the law, which saith in like sort of both, ^b Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God and thou shalt serue him, adding the word onely to neither part. The name of feare is more generall and containeth all religion and deuotion towards God, but in steed thereof our Sauour Christ nameth worship, which is a parte of that feare, fitting the wordes to the present occasion, and yet not forcing the lawe, because the challenge that God maketh to the whole, must necessarily be vnderstood of euery part. Nowe whereas the sentences in the lawe are sette downe without the limitation of the worde onely, our Sauour Christe to shew the meaning of the Scripture in such speeches concerning God, addeth that limitation to the latter part, not as to make that onely peculiar to God, and to leaue the former in common to others, but in the one teaching vs what we are to vnderstand in both, because by what reason the one is appropriated to God, by the same is the other also, and leauing vs to conceiue that whatsoeuer God challengeth as a parte of his worship and glory, the same is to bee giuen to no other beside him. To which purpose Tertullian very well saith, Truth so requireth in the defining of one God, that what is his, be his alone for so shall it be his, if it be onely his. And so did Ambrose vnderstand the words of Christ, when he saith, ^d We reade that nothing beside God is to be worshipped, because it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely thou shalt serue. And to take it otherwise, taketh away the force of Christs exception against the diuell: for it is no sufficient reason to say, I will not worship thee, because it is said, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, if other things may be worshipped beside

^a Mat. 4. 9.

b Deut. 10. 20

c Tertull. aduers^{us} Hereses Veritas sic vnum Deum exigit defendendos solus sit quicquid ipsius est: ita enim ipsius oris si fuerit soluerit d Ambros. de Spiritu sancto lib. 2. cap. 12. Neque adorandum quicquam praeter Deum legimus quia scriptum est, Dominum Deum adorabis side

side God. If to make good the answer of Christe they will rest the strength thereof vpon the latter part of the wordes, they confound themselues, and make our assertion good. For if in the wordes of the law αὐτῷ μόνῳ λατρεύσεις, Him only thou shalt serue, be an exception against that which the deuill requireth of Christ, to fall downe and worship him, it must necessarily be granted, that to fall downe and worship is λατρεύειν, to performe a seruice of latria: to do that seruice which belongeth to God only. Wherefore will they, nill they, they must confesse that the law intendeth to say, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God only, and thereof we rightly gather, that because God only is to be worshipped, therefore wee may not worship any creature whatsoeuer, but least of all dead and senselesse blockes M. Perkins wits therefore were not wilde in the propounding of the argument, but M. Bishops honestie failed in the collecting of it, and that because his wits failed for the answering of it. As for his owne termes I will briefly answer him, that M. Beza is there now where he is free from being touched with the barking of such dogs, and that they haue the deuill for their maister, to who that belongeth which S. Iohn saith, They worshipped deuils and idols of gold & of siluer, and of brasse and of stone, and of wood, which neither can see, nor heare, nor go, which hath no where to bee verified but in the Popish Church: and lastly that they are to be accounted the diuels hel-hounds, who haue giuen themselues wholly to the deuill, as many of M. Bishops holy fathers haue done, and namely for the present: Syluester the second for the gaining of the Popedome.

e Reuel. 9. 20.

f Platin in Syluest.
 2. Totum se diabolo tradiderat. Pontificatum adiuuante diabolo consecutus est, hac lege ut post mortem totus silus esset.

14. W. BISHOP.

M. Perkins his fourth reason. A man (saith he) may be worshipped with ciuill honor, not with religious, which is wholly prescribed in the first table, and yet the meanest man is a more excellent image of God then any painted one.

Ans^r. A man may be worshipped with religious honor, in respect of his supernaturall gifts, as well as with ciuill honor of his naturall properties as hath beene before declared: and no other religious honor is either prescribed or proscribed in the first table then such onely as is proper to God

But (saith he) Thomas of Watering holdes that the Crucifixe is to be adored with the same honor that Christ is. Leauing Thomas of Watering

e 2. Part. 94. 25.
 28. 3.

tering and of Wapping to them that deserve it: I answer to the place of Saint Thomas of Aquine, that he speaketh (like a most learned Philosopher and Divine) very profoundly, that the image may bee considered in it selfe, and so he saith, it is not to be worshipped at all, or as it doth conuey our mind unto that which it doth represent: and so because there is but one and the same motion of our understanding & will towards christ and the crucifixe, we do adore them both at once with the same act of adoration, but in a far different degree, for Christ wee adore properly as the true God, but the crucifixe accidentally as a thing ioyned with Christe. Euen as (saith hee, expounding himselfe) art. 4. when one doth his homage unto the king, he worshippeth withall his purple garment, not that any worship is due to the robe, but the whole is giuen unto the person, which cannot be seperated from that which is so closely ioyned to the person: euen so the diuine person of Christ is properly adored, but improperly all things conceiued together with it, are said also by that deepe doctour to be adored. He that hath an eare of hearing let him heare: for our purpose it sufficeth to know that he assignes very small worship to themselves.

R. ABBOT

M. Perkins argueth, that they which wil worship an image of God should rather worship man then any other image, because the meanest manne is a more excellent image of God then all the images of God and of Saints that are deuifed by men. And if it bee vnlawfull with religious honor to worship a mā, thē much more is it vnlawful to worship an image that is made by mā. To this M. Bishop ful wilely answereth, that a mā may be worshiped with religious honor in respect of his supernaturall gifts, Now we doubt not but he thinketh himself to haue some supernaturall gifts, and is hee so verie a naturall as to thinke that wee may fall downe and worshippe him in respect of his supernaturalls? Cornelius in respect of supernaturall calling and gifts worshippeth S. Peter, & he refuseth it, saying^a Stand vp, for I my self am a man. S. Iohn in respect of supernaturall gifts worshippeth the Angell, and he also disclaimeth it saying,^b Do it not, I am thy fellow-servant, worship God. What, is M. Bishop so witleffe as to thinke that Cornelius tooke Peter to bee a God, or that Iohn tooke the Angell so to be? No, but they tooke them to bee excellent seruants of God. and in that respect worshipped them: yet they renounced it, being ^a 1a. 10. 26.^b Reuel. 19. 10.

beeing done in that respecte, and giue vs to vnderstande, that religious worshippe is not to bee giuen to Apostles because they are but menne, nor to Angels because they are but fellow-servants, but is proper to God onely. It saououreth therefore of a verie naturall wit, to say that a man may be worshipped with religious worshippe in respect of his supernaturall gifts, and because there is no religious worshippe but what is due to God onely, therefore verie idly doth he say that there is no other religious worshippe either prescribed or proscribed in the first table then such onely as is proper to God. There is no other prescribed, because in right there is no other, and that is proscribed and condemned when it is giuen to any other. But specially is it condemned when it is giuen to stockes and stones, to pictures and images, and therefore iustly dooth M. Perkins censure Thomas Aquinas for affirming verie impiouly and idolatrouly that the Crosse is to bee worshipped with godly worshippe, euen with the same that is due to Christ himselfe. M. Bishop seemeth here to shew some signe of grace, and to be ashamed of this damnable and wicked position, and faine would saue the matter, but it will not bee. Thomas Aquinas propoundeth the question, Whether the crosse of Christ bee to bee worshipped with the worshippe of latria? Hee determineth that it is, because wee giue the worshippe of latria to that wherein wee put the hope of our saluation. But we put the hope of our saluation in the Crosse: for the church (sayth hee) singeth, All haile, O Crosse, our onely hope, at this time of the passion: To the godly increase righteousnesse, and to the guiltie graunte forgivenessse. Therefore the Crosse is to be worshipped with latria, that is, the worship that is due to God. Marke it, gentle Reader, that they put the hope of saluation in that Crosse to which they say, All haile, O Crosse, &c. and therefore do worship it with latria, with diuine and godly worshippe. M. Bishop maketh the matter somewhat daintie with his distinction of properly and improperly: but Thomas like a plaine meaning manne speaketh downe right, albeit otherwise hee bee as full of distinctions as any other. As for that which M. Bishop sayeth, it is a tale which hee hath learned out of Bellarmino, and putteth it out vnder Thomas Aquinas his name, but Thomas himselfe sayeth nothing to that effect, whose name notwithstanding must sway more then *Bellarmino*s canne doe. His resolution more largely and distinctly sette downe is this, that

c Thom Aquin.
sum. p. 3. q. 25. art.
4. Virum crux
Christi sit adoran-da adoratione latria? &c. Illi exhibemus cultum
latria in quo poni-
mus spem salutis.
Sed in cruce Christi ponimus spem
salutis: cantat enim Ecclesia, O Crux,
anc. spes unica, &c.
Ergo crux Christi
est adoranda adoratione latria.

that ^d to a thing without sense, a reuerence may be due in respect of a reasonable nature in no manner of wayes: first in that it representeth the same reasonable nature: secondly, in that it is in any sort ioyned to it. The first way, saith he, men are wont to worship the kings image, the second way the Kings garment: but they worship both with the same worship where with they worship the King himselfe. Here is good stuffe, but yet it is such as Thomas his head could deuise to set vp the crosse to be worshipped like a God. A pretie problem might be moued hereupon, and worthily debated, if there had happened to bee a lowse in the Popes garment somewhat neerely ioyned to him, when Thomas should come to worship him, whether hee should bee sayd to worship the Popes lowse, and that with the very same worship as the Pope himselfe. If being ioyned in any sort to that which is worshipped, doe put that that is ioyned in case to bee worshipped alike, then surely the Popes lowse must be worshipped if he happen to haue one, as by the same reason must also the wormes that breede in their rotten wooden gods. But to apply this to the crosse hee saith: ^e If then we speake of the very crosse wherein Christ was crucified: we are to worship the same both waies, namely one way as it representeth the figure of christ extended vpon the crosse: another way for touching the members of Christ, and for being embred with his bloud. Whereupon in both respects it is worshipped with the same worship as Christ himselfe, that is, with the worship of latria, and therefore doe wee speake and pray to the crosse as to Christ himselfe that was crucified. But if wee speake of the image of the crosse in any other matter, as stone or woode, or geld, or silver, we then worship the crosse, onely as the image of Christ, which wee worship with the worship of latria. Wee heard before of Helena, that when shee found the crosse whereupon Christ was crucified, shee worshipped not the crosse, because that saith Ambrose, had beene a heathenish error, and a vanity of ungodly men, but shee worshipped onely him that died vpon the crosse, but Thomas if she had liued in his time, would haue taught her a new point of diuinitie, that in two respects before mentioned shee should haue worshipped that crosse with the very worship of Christ himselfe, and in one respect euery crosse that is made in likenesse of that crosse. Thus the Popes Angelicall Doctor hath determined: this the Church of Rome hath beleued: this the common opinion of their diuines as b Ibid in corp creaturae insensibile non debetur honor

vel reuerentia nisi
ratione rationalium naturae, & hoc du-plicitur, uno modo
in quantum reprae-
sentat rationalem
naturam alio mo-
do in quantum ei
quocumq; modo conuenit. Idem. Primo modo consueta
sunt homines venerari
regi imaginē
secundo modo eius vestimentum. V-
triusq; autem venerationis homines eodem veneratione qua venerantur &
regem.
c Ibid. Sic ergo lo- quamur de ipsa
cruce in qua Christus crucifixus est, utroq; modo est à nobis veneranda,
una scilicet modo
in quantum reprae-
sentat figuram
Christi extensam in ea, alio modo ex
contactu ad membra Christi & ex
hoc quod eius sanguis est perfusus.
Vnde utroq; modo
adoratur eadem
adoratione latria, & propter hoc vtri-
usque uincem alloqua-
mur & deprecamur
quasi ipsam crucifixum. Et ce-
terò loquamur de offigura crucis Christi in quacumq; alia materia, &c. Sic venerantur crucem
tantum ut imagi-
nem Christi quom
veneramur adora-
tione latria.
S. Ambrosii de obitu Theodosij. Supra
scilicet l.

wee see before, hath maintained, and this the people accordingly haue practised. Now this can by no meanes be excused of idolatrie, for it is idolatrie to giue the worship of God to that that is no God. But the crosse is no God, and therefore it must needs be idolatry to giue to the crosse the worship of God. Of God it is saide as touching diuine honour and worship, Him onely thou shalt serue. Now as S. Austine saith, ¶ If it were saide of the Father, Him onely thou shalt serue, we might not giue this seruice to the Sonne, or if it were said of the Sonne, Him onely thou shalt serue, we might not giue it to the Father. If then by these words vled concerning the Father, there shoulde bee an exception against the Sonne, who yet is the liuely and substantiall image of the Father, and the same that the Father is, how much more when it is said of one God, the Father, Sonne, & holy Ghost Him onely thou shalt serue, are wee to take it for an exception against a senselesse and dead image, that no diuine worshippinge or seruice bee done vnto it? Bellarmino therefore after so many ages, seeing that this can by no meanes bee acquitted of idolatrie, though hee could not reforme it in the Church, yet hath shewed his good will according to the old manner of the Pagan Philosophers, to salue it in the schooles, telling vs, that h the worship that is giuen to images, is not the same: that is giuen to the principals, but onely by a kind of analogie or proportion is reduced to it, and therefore that to the images of Christ (or to the crosse) there is not to be giuen latria (the worship of God) but an vnperfect kind of worship, which is reduced to latria, as that that is vnperfect to that that is perfect. This is his owne newe deuice, and their schooles before knew not this tricke, or at least approued it not, yet he saith, that perhaps Thomas, & Bonauenture, & others, meant in that sort, and then saith he, we all agree. He saith but perhaps, but knowing well that it is past perhaps, and very certaine that Thomas neuer had any such meaning, as appeareth also very plainly by his woordes. Nowe M. Bishop willing to gratifie the Iesuites whom hee so lately persecuted, leaueth Thomas and followeth Bellarmines deuice, yet so as that being carefull to saue the credit of their deope Doctor as he calleth him, he setteth it downe in Thomas his name. Albeit to say the truth hee dooth not well accord either with the one or with the other, for whereas hee saith that the Image being considered in it selfe, is not to be worshipped at all, he contrarieth Bellarmino, who, as appeareth before, assigneth a worship to Images as they are considered.

¶ Aug. cont. ser. Ariam. ca. 29.
Hanc seruitutem non exhibebimus Filio si de Patre dicitur est. Et illi soli seruies: aut non exhibebimus Patri si de Filio dicitur est, Et illi soli seruies, &c.

¶ Bellarmino de imaginibus sancti. cap. 25. Cuius cui per se & proprie debetur imaginibus est cultus quidam imperfectus qui a logice & reducitur per similitudinem ad speciem cultus eius qui debetur exemplari. &c. Imaginibus Christianis debetur latria vera & simpliciter, sed cultus sine comparatione inferiori qui tamen allatriam sicut imperfectum ad perfectum.
 ¶ Ibid. Forté Thomas & Bonauenture & alij hoc sensum dixerunt voluerunt, &c. quod si ita est omnis conuenientia.

red in themselves, and not onely as they respect their principals. For the rest, Thomas saith indeede, that^k there is the same motion of the soule towards the Image, as towards that whose Image it is, whereof it followeth as Maister Bishop saith, that they are worshipped both at once with the same act of adoration. But whereas hee saith that that is in a farre different degree, Thomas was neuer so absurd as to thinke, that in one and the selte same act there canne bee a different degree, and therefore absolutely concludeth as I haue before alleadged, that the same reuence is due to the Image of Christe, and to Christe himselfe. Maister Bishop addeth that they adore Christe properly as the true God, but the crucifixe accidentally as a thing ioyned with Christe, but Thomas maketh that a realō why the crosse is worshipped with the very same worshippe as Christ himselfe,^l because by representation or touching it is vnited vnto Christe, being in this respect much more iustly to bee condemned of idolatrie in thus worshipping the Crosse, then Nestorius was for worshipping the sole manhoode of Christ, because albeit Nestorius acknowledged not any substantiall or personall vnion betwixt the godhead and the manhoode, yet hee acknowledged a farre greater vnion then that which Thomas assigneth betwixt Christ and the crosse. And here it were worthie to bee enquired, what manner of vnion or coniunction this is that they tell vs of, by what bond it holdeth, what effectes it worketh whether it be any offering of violence to Christe, when the wooden Roode is rotten and worme-eaten to hew him in pieces, and cast the same into the fire, and so disunite the thinges that were before vnited? But Maister Bishop somewhat resolueth vs of this matter, teaching vs to conceiue of Christe and the crucifixe, as of the King and his purple robe: the woorst is, that he saith that there is not any worshippe due to the robe, whereas Thomas out of his idle dreames, hath before told vs, that wee worship the Kinges garment with the same worshippe as the King himselfe. So then the matter is come to a faire passe, that there is no worshippe at all due to the Crucifixe, becausē there is none due to the Kinges robes, and then what is it that wee dispute of all this while? Hee telleth vs, that the worshippe of the King cannot bee seperated from the robe that is so closely ioyned to his person. But what, is the Crosse or Crucifixe as closely ioyned to Christe as the robe is to the King?

^k Thom. ubi supra
ars. in corp. Moysi animā in imaginem
inquantum est
mago est vnus & i-dem cum illo quo
est in rōe.

^l Ibid. art. 4 ad. 2.
Cruz Christi. et non fuerit vnita verbo Dei in persona; fuit tamen
ei vnita per reprā-sentationem &
contāctum.

If hee canne make that good, hee giueth vs some reason of falling downe before the crosse: but if Christ be in heauen and the Crosse vpon the earth, then is this a poore and simple defence of their worshipping the crosse. The diuine person of Christ, he saith, is properly adored. True, but that diuine person of Christ is in heauen, and why are they not content to worshipping him properly where hee is? Why do they vnder a foolish pretence of a Kings robe, bring in an improper worshipping of that, which being here vpon the earth, is so farre and so wholly disioined from him? Will not M. Bishop thinke him either a foole or a mad manne, who finding the Popes robes in his Castle of S. Angelo, will kneele downe to the robes, and make his request to them when the Pope himselfe is in his Lateran consistorie? Surely euen so must wee thinke that they egregiously play the fooles who stand babling to a crosse here on earth, when their suite is to Christ himselfe sitting about in heauen. Thus wee haue giuen him an eare to the hearing of all this, but wee haue therein heard what hee saith out of Bellarmino, not what Thomas Aquinas saith, but by Thomas his owne woordes wee say still that hee ascribeth the same worship to the crosse, as he doth to Christ himselfe.

15. W. BISHOP.

Lastly, M. Perkins saith, without quoting any place, that Augustin and Grogoric in plaine termes deny images to be adored, and so do wee too, taking adoring as they do for the worship that is proper to God.

R. ABBOT.

Saint Austine saith that by the commaundement of God, We are forbidden to worshippe any similitude or image of God that is denised or framed by manne. Hee noteth ^b worshippers of pictures and reliques to haue bene then condemned by the Church. He commendeth Varro the old Romane a heathen man, for ^c thinking that religion is more purely obserued without images, and affirmeth that therein hee drew neere to the knowledge of the truth. Hauing in another place shewed how a shadow of the wisdom of God appeareth in men, in making the pourtraitures and Images of the creatures which hee hath made, and namely of men he addeth: ^d As for them who haue

^a August. ep. 11.
 119. cap. 11. *Prohibetur coli aliqua is signum homi-
 num Dei similitu-
 do.*
^b *Idem de morib.
 eccles. Cathol. cap.
 32. Noui multos
 esse sepulchrorum
 et picturarum adoratores, &c. Quos & ipsa condemnat ecclesia, &c.*
^c *Idem De cin. det.
 lib. 1. cap. 21. Cassius existimat sine simulachris obseruari religionem. Quis non uideat quantum propinquauerit ueritati & idem in lib. 83. quast. 78. Qui talia opera etiam coluerunt, quantum deniauerint a ueritate hinc intelligi potest, quia si ipsa animalia corpora cohererent quam multo excellentius fabricata sunt et quorum sunt illa imitamenta, quid eis infatuus dicere-
 mus?*

worshipped such, how farre they haue gone away from the truth, maye heere by be understood, because if they should worship the very bodies of those lining creatures, which are much more excellently made, & where of those images are but imitations, we would pronouuce them to bee most unhappy. In a word, those discourtes which he vseth to shew the certaine danger of superstitious fancies, arising of the resemblances of images to the formes and shapes of men, doe fully and without exception determine against all vse of Popish images. As for Gregory, he had some speciall cause giuen him, fully to signifie his mind as touching this matter of images, and albeit hee approved the historicall vse of them in the church, yet hee absolutely condemned the worshipping of them. Serenus the Bishop of Massilia, seeing the people to worship images, brake them and defaced them. Gregorie hearing thereof, writeth to him thus, ^f It is lately reported to vs, that your brother hocod beholding some worshipping images, did breake the same images being belonging to the church, and threw them away. And indeed we commended you for hauing a zeale, that nothing made with hands should be worshipped, but yet we iudge that the images should not haue beene broken. For therefore are pictures used in the church, that they who are unlearned may by sight read those things at least upon the walls which in bookes they cannot reade. Your brotherhood therefore should both haue preserved the images, and yet also haue forbidden the people the worshipping of them, that so the ignorant might haue whence to gather the knowledge of the history, and the people might not offend in worshipping the picture. Serenus it seemeth made some scruple of that which Gregorie wrote to him: whereupon the same Gregorie wrote to him againe to like effect as beefore, that hee approved his forbidding to haue them worshipped, but did blame him for breaking them. For it is one thing, saith he, to worship a picture or image, another thing by painted story to learne what is to bee worshipped. It should not be broken which was set up in the Churches not to be worshipped, but onely to instruct the mindes of ignorant men. You are to shewe them by testimonies of holy Scripture, that it is not lawfull to worship any thing that is made with hands, because it is written, Thou shalt worship the no reprehendimus. &c. Aliud est enim picturam adorare, aliud per picturam historiam quid sit adorandum addiscere &c. frangere non debuit quod non ad adorandum in ecclesijs sed ad instruendam secularem mentes suis uesientium collocauit.

 &c. scriptura sacra testimonij ostendendum est cu quia manus factum adorare non liceat quia scriptum est, Dominum Deum unum adorabim. &c.

Lord thy God, and him onely thou shalt serue. After other words to the same effect he concludeth, ^h If any man will make Images, forbid them not, but by all meanes auoide to worship images. Consider here gentle Reader, whether thou canst finde M. Bishops distinction in these words of Austine and Gregorie: whether it be likely that they meant, that with some kinde of worship which is proper to God, Images may not bee worshipped, but yet that they haue also their kinde of worship wherewith they are to bee worshipped. Think with thy selfe whether any Papist would speake as they speake, and if no man would so speake that meaneth as Papistes doe, then surely these Fathers were farre enough from Popish meaning. Is any man so voide of vnderstanding, that being to shew that Princes are not to bee obeyed in so high degree as God, will absolutely determine that Princes are not to bee obeyed? This is the case here: they expressly and without exception, define that images are not to be worshipped, and that the people are so to be taught, that they must not worship images, and would they be so mad as thus to speake if they meant as in Poperie it is, that the people must be taught to worship images? Gregorie saith as we see, that they are not set vp to be worshipped, but onely for the instructing of the ignorant, and must we vnderstand that they are not onely for the instructing of the ignorant, but also to bee worshipped. These are impudent shifts, bewraying corrupt and euill consciences of men ⁱ condemned in themselves, and yet wrastling and fighting against themselues. These Fathers knewe no religious worship but what becometh to God, and therefore resolute that to giue worship to images, should bee to dishonour God. Concerning Gregories minde of placing Images in Churches, I say briefly, that he might by that which then befell, haue somewhat discerned the perill and danger thereof, but if hee hadde imagined the horrible filthyneesse and abomination of idolatry afterwardes thereof ensuing, he would haue changed his minde and haue regarded the words of him that saith, ^k Thou shalt not put a stumbling blocke before the blinde, and againe, ^l Cursed be he that maketh the blinde to goe out of his way.

In Ibsd Siquis imagines facere uoluerit minime prohibe adorare uero imagines modum omnibus denita.

ⁱ Tit. 3. 11.

^k Leuit. 19. 14.
^l Deut. 27. 18.

16. W. BISHOP.

Having now answered to all that M. Perkins objecteth against the worshipping of images: let us now examine the reasons, which he maketh in defence of it.

The first by him proposed is this Psalme 98. Cast downe your selues before his footstool, which was the Arke: now if the Arke were to be worshipped, because it represented Gods footstool, much more may the image be worshipped. M. Perkins answereth, that the words must be englished thus, Bow at or before the Arke, not to the arke, but to God before the Arke.

Reply. If it were so, yet must they admit that we must kneele, as or before images, so we kneel: to honour or pray to God: against which, some of their Preachers do cry like mad-men: but the Hebrew phrase carrieth, that we must kneele to the arke, as they who be skilfull in the language do know, and that the arke was worshipped of the Israelites, is other wise verie evident: for first none, but the high Priest might come into the place where it was: and it was caried before the campe with great solemnity, to ^{I. Reg. 4.} search out a resting-place for the whole host. And when they were to fight against the Philistians, they had great confidence in the presence of the arke: and ^{Cap. 6.} cap. 6. 5000. of the Bethsamites were slaine for seeing the arke; and ^{I. Reg. 1.} Oza was by God smitten to death for touching the arke. Doth not all this conuince in what reuerence the arke was had, euen by Gods owne testimony?

To this may be added the authority of S. Ierom, ^{Ep. 17. cap. 3.} who doth teach that it was the more worshipped for the Cherubins and pictures of Angels, that were erected at the ends of it: whereby hee declareth that hee thought images worthy of religious worship.

To this we may ioyne that of S. Paul, ^{Heb. 11.} that Iacob by faith adored the top of his sonne Iosephs rod: so doth the Greeke text of S. Paul say, as ^{Heb. 11.} Erasmus also translate it: The Protestants mangle the text pitifully. to auoid the place. see the Annot of Rhemes Testament.

R. ABBOT.

This was one of the notable arguments which M. Bishops Nicene Councell vsed for the worshipping of Images, because Dauid saith, ^{Psal 99. 5.} Bow your selues to his footstool. Though it be full simple and slender, yet wee see for want of better they are content to vse it still. If M. Bishop could shew vs that images are to vs the Lords footstool, as the Arke was to the Iewes, hee would handle vs somewhat shrewdly; but the spite is they want a text for that, and S. Paul moreouer telleth vs that ^b the temple of God (which was ^c the house of rest for the Arke of the covenant of the Lord, and for the footstool of our God) hath no agreement with Idols. And therefore whereas vpon M. Perkins answer that they were willed to bow at or before the Arke M. Bishop inferreth it as to be admitted, that wee must kneele at or before images to pray to God, it is a very drowisie conclusion, and fitter to come from the head of an Idoll; then of an vnderstanding man. The Arke was no image, and why then doth hee argue thus from the Arke to images? He will say that the Cherubims stood neere the Arke, namely at each end one, which with their wings ouershadowed the Arke. Be it so, but what is that to his purpose, seeing the Prophet here speaketh not of bowing before the Cherubims but before the Arke? Yea, but saith hee, a man could not kneele before the Arke but hee must needs also kneele before the Cherubims. Well and if M. Bishop be in place where he cannot kneele to God, but he must needs haue an image before him, we condemne him not. We cannot kneele to God, but there are manie things before vs, our Churches, our houses, the aire, the heauen, the Sunne, the Moone, the starres; but there is great difference what standeth before vs, by casuall or necessary position of place, and what we set before vs by intendment of affection. A man cannot kneele before the King, but they must needs bee before him that are about the King, as must also the seate or the horse whereon the King sitteth, & yet we do not say that he kneeleth before them that are about a King, or before the Kings seate or his horse, because he hath no intentiō thereof or of them, but onely of the King. The Arke was the place, whereat God had promised to the Iewes his presence amongst them. They kneeled before the Arke to kneele to God there present, and to pray to him. The Cherubims were placed by the Arke, but their kneeling had no reference to the Cherubims, but to God only ^d sitting betwene or vpon the Cherubims. Take away the Arke and there was no kneeling before the Cherubims, but though the Cherubims were away (as it is thought they were long time after the taking of the Ark, til by Solomon they were renewed) yet there was still kneeling before the Arke. Now if M.

Bishop.

^b 1. Cor. 6. 16.
^c 1. Chron. 28. 1.

^d Numb. 7. 19.
 Plal. 30. 6.

Bishop could prouethat we haue the like promise of gods special presence at their images & idols as the Iewes had thereof at the Arke, there were some reason whereupō to argue, that we are to kneele at or before Images, as they were to kneele at or before the Arke. But vnlesse he do so, wee must still think they are not mad men that cry out against such as pray at or before Images to pray to God, but rather iudge thē men sober and well aduised, in that they condemne such mad fooles, who e talke to dead things, & f babble to the wals, as Heraclitus the Philosopher said, when they take vpon them to pray to God. That there is no vse of images for prayer to God, I refer him to those speeches of Arnobius and Lactantius which I haue before set downe in the first Section. But to put his argument yet somewhat further out of ioynt, it is to be remembred which hath bene before noted, that the Arke or footstool of God, whereto the Prophet wil- leth them to bow, was a thing wholly remoued out of sight. It stood in the innermost part of the Temple which was Sancta Sanctorum, the holiest of all, whither the high Priest onely went in, and that once onely in the yeare, and before which there was a veile or curtaine drawne, that the Priests themselues coming into the holy place had no sight of it. Whereby it is manifest that their bowing to the Arke was a farre other matter then M. Bishop would haue to be done to their images. He would think hardly to haue this heauenly shew (as before hee hath tearmed it) locked vp and imprisoned in the darke so that men should haue no sight of it, and so much the rather, for that their Nicene Councell full wisely and learnedly concluded the setting vp of images out of those words of Christ No man lighteth a candle to put it under a bushell, but on a candlesticke. Very impertinently therefore doth he bring those words of Dauid to approue their kneeling at or before images to pray to God. Albeit hee is not therewith contented, but will further haue it proued, that we must kneele to the image themselues: for the Hebrew phrase, saith he, carrieth, that we must kneele to the Arke as they who are skilfull in the language do know. But the skilfull in the language do also know, that it is no otherwise laid, Bow your selues to his footstool then it is said afterwards in the same Psalmie Bow your selues to his holy mountaine. The phrase is one and the same, and if by the one hee will say, that they were to worship the Arke, then by the other also hee must say

e Origen. contra Cels. lib. 6. In eruditissimos dicimus quos non pudet alioqui res inanimas. lib. li. 1. Quis Deus inanimas accedunt, periinde faciunt ac si fabulantur eorum parietibus.

g Mat. 5. 15.

that:

that they were to worship the mountaine. If the latter do not proue the worshipping of the mountaine, then the former doth not proue the worshipping of the Arke. And indeede the phrase importeth no other, but as we are wont to say, to kneele to the East, that is towards the East: or to lift vp his eyes to heauen, that is towards heauen: and they are thereby taught to bend and direct themselues in their worship and deuotion towards mount Sion and the arke and Temple seated thereupon, as the place where the Lord had promised to dwell, & frō thence to heare their prayers when they should call vpon him. Which they were not onely to do when they were present or neere at hand, but also when they were removed turt her off. Thus Solomon prayeth for them,^h being gone out to battell against their enemies, when they shal pray towards the city which thou hast chosen, and towards the house which I haue built for thy name, then heare thou in heauen their prayer. So beingⁱ captiues in their enemies land, when they shall pray towards the Land which thou gauest vnto their fathers, and towards the city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I haue built for thy name, then heare thou their prayer and supplication &c. Thus Daniel in the captiuity of Babylon, though both the city and Temple were destroyed for the time, yet because of the promise of God:^k This is my rest for euer, here will I dwell for I haue a delight therein therefore did^l set open his chamber window towards Ierusalem, and kneeling vpon his knees three times a day prayed and prayesd God. This was their kneeling to the arke and to mount Siō, and M. Bishop in arguing hereupon, that they worshipped the Arke, dealeth as absurdly as the Pagans did of old with the Christians, who because the Christians^m prayed to or towards the East, thought they worshipped the Sunne, and gaue out that they made the Sunne their God. The Christians worshipped Christ onely in bending themselues towards the East, and so the faithfull Iewes in bending or bowng towards the Arke, intended the worship of God onely, and therefore a senselesse part it is to alledge those wordes of the Prophet for the defence of the worship of Popish idols. And if they would proue the worshipping of any thing thereby, or the praying at or before any thing, it should be the worshipping and praying before that that was prefigured by the Temple and the Arke. The Temple one way was a figure of heauen,

h I. King. 8. 44.

Ver. 43.

k Psal. 137. 14.

Dan. 6. 10.

m Tertul. Apol.
cap. 16. Solem
credunt Deū nostrū
&c. In desuspicio quod in oriente
nos ad Orientem
regionem precari

uen, as before was shewed, where in God doth dwell, and hath ⁿ thousand thousands of Angels standing before him, and tenne thousand thousand thousands ministering vnto him. M. Bishop then should by his course of interpretation conclude from the Prophets words, that wee should worship heauen. But he should rather conceiue, that as we worship and pray towards heauen, but yet doe not worship heauen or pray to heauen, so did they also worship and pray towards the Temple and the Arke, but did not worship or pray to them.
 Another way the Temple was a figure of the Church of Christ, & of euery faithfull man: ^o Know yee not, saith the Apostle, that yee are the Temple of God: and againe ^p ye are the Temple of the liuing God
 The Arke whereat and whereby hee is present with vs, and dwelleth in vs, is the faith of Iesus Christ, our ^q propitiatorie and mercy seate, & by his presence the Angels also attende vpon vs, ^r being ministering spirits sent forth for their sakes that shall be heires of saluation. Now therefore M. Bishop should rather proue by the Prophets words our kneeling in our prayers before a faithfull man, or worshipping a faithfull man, then our kneeling before an Image, or worshipping an Image, and if it bee absurd thereby to affirme the worshipping of a liuing man in whom God dwelleth, much more the worshipping of a dead and senselesse blocke, which hath no fellowship with God. Yea and if by those words it were warranted to set vp the image of dead men, and to worship them, what was the cause that the Iewes conceiued not so much? Why were they without that beauntly shew as M. Bishop in the height of his earthly wisdom called it? If they neuer conceiued it, neuer practised it, what shall wee but take them for cousins & deceiuers, who offer this violence to the Scriptures, and most impudently wrest the to the maintenance of that filthinesse and abomination which expressly they condemne? But yet Master Bishop telleth vs, that it is otherwise very euident, that the Israelites worshipped the Arke And how I pray you? First, none but the high Priest might come into the place where it was. Well, and what then? It was carried before the campe with great solemnitie to search out a resting place for the whole host. True, and what more? When they were to fight against the Philistines, they had great confidence in the presence of the Arke. There was great cause why they should so, carrying them-

n Dan. 7. 10.

o I Cor. 3. 16.

p I Cor. 6. 16.

q Rom. 3. 25.

O'ν πρόθετο
δ Θεός ἰλασῆ-

ριον.

r Heb. 1. 14.

themselues respectfully towards God, because it was the token that God had giuen them of his presence amongst them: let vs heare the rest. Fiftie thousand of the Bethsamites were slaine for seeing the Arke. It is true in deed that for looking into the Arke so many of thē were slaine: is there any thing yet behind? Oza was by God smitten to death for touching the Arke. Well and what of all this? Doth not all this conuince in what reuerence the Arke was had euen by Gods owne testimony? As if to proue M. Bishop, to bee a profound Clarke, a man should say: He hath learned a little Rhetoricke, and lesse Logicke, and is per saltum a Doctor of Diuinity, and per inopiam a Priest, and doth not all this conuince that he hath some learning? Witleffe cauiller, is there any thing in all those allegations that importeth the worshipping of the Arke? Nay marke (gentle Reader) that whereas he propoundeth to proue, that the Arke was worshipped he maketh his conclusion, that the Arke was had in great reuerence. But they had the temple also in great reuerence, and the altars, and the offerings and all things that by the law were cōmanded to be holy, and will he therefore inferre, that all these were to bee worshipped? They were to haue the Priests in great reuerence, & specially the high Priest and shall wee therefore say that they worshipped the Priests? What is this reuerence but a religious respect and care of the sacred and due vsage of holy things according to their kind? Thus are we to haue our Churches in reuerence with those vtensils and implements that belongeth to them, that they be had and vsed with that decencie and seemeliness as fitteth to things that serue for holy ministrations. As for Hierome M. Bishop wholly abuteth and falsifieth his words: for hee saith nothing at all of worshipping the Arke for the Cherubims and pictures of Angles that were erected at the ends of it (this is a very wilfull and impudent forgetie) but he saith, that the Iewes of old reuerenced the Sancta Sāctorum, because there were the Cherubims and the mercy-seate, and the Arke of the Testamēt and Manna and Aarons rod, and the golden altar. He knew well that if he had reported Hieroms words aright they would not found for his purpose, but to frame them to his turne, hee changeth the reuerence of the holy place because of the Cherubims and the Arke, into worshipping the Arke because of the Cherubims, as if worship were performed properly to the Cherubims, whereas by the lawe of

{ Hieron. ad Marcel. ut commigret Bethleem Venerabā
tur quōdam Indas Sancta sanctorum
quia ibi erant Cher-
rubim & propitiatorium & arca te-
stamenti, Manna,
virga Aaron, & al-
tere autem.

* Origen. contra Celsilib. 5. Caelstes
Angelos nemo ado-
rat quise legi Mo-
si subdidit.

Moses, as Origen saith, no worship was done to the Angels themselves, and much lesse to the Cherubims which represented the Angels. The word venerari which Hierome useth, albeit it be often vsed for worshippe and seruice done to God, yet is of to large signification, as that it is yeilded to all those things to which wee yeeld any reuerend and dutifull respect. So doth ^r Saint Augustine vse the word of the reuerence that we vse to the Sacraments, not onely the Lords Supper, but also the Sacrament of Baptisme. So doth Ambrose say, that ^u Abraham gaue veneration to the bread and wine which Melchisedec brought forth, and we suppose Maister Bishop is not so farre gone as to say that wee worshippe the Sacrament of Baptisme, or that Abraham worshipped the breade and wine. Thus therefore Hierome saith, that the Iewes hadde a reuerend regard of the Sancta sanctorum, but of religious worship as done to it, hee saith nothing, and much lesse dreamed of any religious worshippe to be done to idols and images, which haue no institution from God as the Sancta sanctorum had. But to helpe this argument Maister Bishop further alledgeth, that Saint Paule saith, that Iacob by faith adored the toppe of his sonne Iosephs rod: So doth the Greeke text of Saint Paule say, saith he, as Erasmus also translateth it. And further he addeth, The Protestants pitifully mangle the text to auoide the place. But I answer him, that the Protestants doe see them to be in a pitifull case, who hazard their soules vppon a religion that is faine to vse such pitifull arguments for the defence of it. For howsoeuer it were graunted, that Iacob foreseeing by faith the kingdome that should befall to Ioseph in his sonne Ephraim, did in token thereof make an obeisance to the rod or scepter that was in Iosephs hand, or that hee yeilded that obeisance or adoration in respect of Iosephs present authoritie vnder Pharaos, yet what shoulde this bee to the worshipping of Images? Wee know that adoration or worship ciuilly vnderstood is giuen to Princes. Abraham ^x adored the Princes of the Hittites. The Israelites are said to haue adored or worshipped the Lord, and then the king, namely, king Dauid. If Iacob yeilded the like adoration as to the kingdome and power of his sonne Ioseph, either present or to come, as some Greeke Writers expound it, what is this, I say, to the worshipping of Images? But as touching this matter. Hierome saith vpon the place in Genesis.

^r August. de doct. Christi li. 3. cap. 9.
^u Sicuti est Baptismi Sacramentum & celebratio corporis & sanguinis Domini. Quia unusquisque imbutus agnoscit ut ea non carnali seruitute sed spiritual potius libertate veneretur.
^u Ambrosi de ijs qui initiantur mysterijs cap. 8. Melchisedec protulit eam qua Abraham veneratus accepit.

^x Gen. 12. 7.
^y I Chr. 19. 23.

whence:

whence those wordes seeme to bee taken,² In this place some vainely imagine, that Iacob adored or worshipped the toppe of Iosephs scepter, to wit, that honouring his sonne hee adored or worshipped his power or authoritie, whereas in the Hebrew it is read farre otherwise, and Israell worshipped towards the beds head, meaning, that after his sonne had sworne vnto him, being now secure as touching the request that he hadde made vnto him, he worshipped God towards the beds head. For the holie deuout man being nowe oppressed with old age, had his bed so set as that the fashon of his lying might without difficultie yeelde him readynesse to pray, & thus howloeuver M. Bishop caull and wrangle, yet Hierome plainly resolueth, that it was God onely and nothing else that Iacob worshipped, and therefore readeth in his translation thus, that when Ioseph² had sworne, Israell worshipped the Lord, turning himself to the beds head. Now the Hebrew text being manifestly against him, he taketh vpon him to vrge the Greeke text of S. Paule, affirming it to bee saide there, that Iacob worshipped the toppe of Iosephs rod, not caring for his owne aduantage to sette the holy Ghost at variance with himselfe, and to make him destroy in one place what hee affirmeth in another. But that which he affirmeth is vntue and false: S. Paule doth not say, that Iacob worshipped the top of Iosephs rod: neither doe the Protestants pitifully mangle the text to auoide the place, but the Papistes pitifully follow a translation apparently false, that the text may seeme to make for thē. The words are προσεχύνουσιν ἐπὶ τὸ ἄκρον τῆς ῥάβδου αὐτοῦ, he worshipped vpon the top of his staffe, or as we more plainly expresse it, leaning vpon his staffe. By which words the Septuagint translated the woordes of Moses beefore mentioned Israell worshipped vpon or towards the beds head, their translation in Grammer construction fully answering the wordes of the Hebrew, but that for mittah, a bed or couch, they seeme to haue translated matteh, which signifieth a staffe or a rod, making it by addition of a Pronoune, his staffe or his rod, or for some speciall reason thereto moouing them, thought good in stead of the one, to take the signification of the other, being of the same deriuation, & no difference betwixt them in writing, but onely by the vowels, thereby to expresse that Iacob being very aged and weake, and keeping his bedde vsed the helpe of a staffe to stay himselfe as he worshipped vpon his bed, or towards his beds head, Thus they translated, vpon what consideration we know not, but so as that they nothing preiudice that z Hieron. quest. He

by. in Genes. In hoc loco quidam frus-
tra simulant ado-
rassē Iacob sicut ita tem sceptri Ioseph quod i videlicet ho-
rans filium, pote-
statem eius adora-uerit, cum in Hebraeo multo aliter legatur. Es adorauit, inquit, Israel
ad caput lectuli,
quod scilicet post
quam ei iurauerat
filius securus de penitentia quam roga-
uerat, adorauerit Deum contra ca-
put lectuli sui. Sanctus quippe & Deo
deditus vir oppres-
sus senectute sibi ha-
bebat lectulum po-
situm ut ipse iacen-
tis habitus, absq̄
difficultate vlla ad
orationem esset pa-
ratus.

a Gen. 47. 31.
vulgat Quo iurante adorauit Israel Dominum conuer-
sus ad lectuli ca-
put.

that which Moses saith, because both may well stand together, that he vsed a staffe to rest vpon, and that so doing hee worshipped towards the beds head. And that they therein expressed a truth, though not set downe by Moses words, yet otherwise receiued or coniectured, wee fully and certainly belecue, because the holy Ghost hath thus cited the wordes according to their translation, obseruing the same course as commonly we see the Apostles and Euangelistes do in their citations from the old testament, who so long as the place retaineth from the originall that for which they cite it, and containeth no vntruth, forbear not to vse the translation which was commonly receiued and vsed, though haply otherwise it do not exactly accord with the same originall Hebrew text. Nowe the matter for which the Apostle citeth those wordes, standeth in that that it is sayd, that Iacob worshipped, he giuing thereby to vnderstand, that Iacob by faith so fully rested assured of that which vpon the promise of God hee had beleueed, as that he worshipped and prayd God, as if he hadde then seene and enioyed the performance and accomplishment thereof. This therefore beeing exprelly deliuered in the text, as the Septuagint haue translated it, he maketh no question of the other wordes, though they bee not exactly sorting with that which Moses hath set downe. But here the matter of question is concerning the translating of that translation. M. Bishop telleth vs, that we should translate thus, And he (Iacob) worshipped the top of his (that is, of Iosephs) rod, and affirmeth that so it is in the Greeke text. We deny it, and say that that translation is false, becaule it wholly leaueeth out the Preposition ἐπι in the Greeke, answerable to the Preposition gnal which is vsed in the Hebrew, there beeing no probability or likelihood of reason, why they should so doe. The Hebrew Preposition gnal amongst other significations importeth at, vpon, neare to, towards, ouer against. The word rosh signifieth the head, the top, the highest or vppermost parte of a thing. Symmachus therefore translateth the Hebrew words, ἐπὶ κεφαλῆς τῆς κλίνης, vpon the beds head. Aquila thus, ἐπὶ τῷ ἄκρῳ τῆς κλίνης, ὑπὸ or at the top or vppermost part of the bed, as if a man would say, vpon his pillow at the beds head. Hierome in Latine, as wee see beefore, translateth one where contra caput lectuli, ouer against his beds head: another where, conuersus ad caput lectuli, turning towards the beddes heude. Accordingly the Septuagint though differing in the signification of the last woorde, yet translate the former, ἐπὶ τῷ ἄκρῳ, at or vpon the toppe. And of their translation S. Austine mentioneth diuers translations into Latine, all expressing the Preposition, ^b super caput virgæ vel in capite, siue in cacumine vel super cacumen, at or upon the toppe. Seeing therefore they will make vse of the Preposition in translating from Hebrew into Greeke and Latine, and from Greeke into Latine, what reason should we haue in translating from Greeke into English to neglect the same Preposition as if it were not there at all? They all agree thus farre: He worshipped at, upon, towards the head or the toppe, and therefore teach vs to disclaime them that say, he worshipped the toppe. Now then because the Greeke woorde $\rho\acute{\alpha}\beta\delta\omicron\varsigma$ signifieth a staffe, and better fitteth to the former wordes, then to translate it a rod, therefore wee translate the wordes, He worshipped, namely, God, upon the toppe of his staffe, that is, as wee say to expresse the meaning more plainely, leaning upon his staffe. Hee worshipped God inclining or bowing towards the staffe which hee hadde in his hand, resting himselfe vpon it, and staying himselfe thereby. And that M. Bishop may know that we are not the deuisers of this translation; let him vnderstand that the old Syriacke Interpreter, as appeareth by Tremellius, translated in the same sort: ^c Adorauit super summitate baculi sui: he worshipped upon the toppe of his staffe. So Theodore expounding Genesis according to the Septuagint, albeit hee referre the adoration to Ioseph in both respectes before mentioned, which we haue seene before that Hierome wholly condemneth, yet as touching the meaning of the latter wordes saith, that ^d Iacob sate vp and leaned vpon his staffe, taking hold of the toppe thereof with his right hand. S. Austine yet further iustifieth vs in this beehalfe, saying that whereas ^e in the Latine bookes it was reade, Et adorauit super caput virgæ eius, he worshipped vpon the top of his rod, (that is, of Iosephs rod:) many had it more truly: Et adorauit super caput virgæ suæ: hee worshipped vpon the top of his owne rod. Which obseruation of his is of great moment for the discerning of the truth as touching this poynt. If that which is here said be vnderstood of Iacobs rod, then Master Bishop knoweth well, that that which hee fancieth hath no ground at all. But that S. Austine saith is the true reading, not of Iosephs rod, but of his owne rod, not ^f $\tau\eta\varsigma \rho\acute{\alpha}\beta\delta\omicron\upsilon \alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\upsilon$, but $\tau\eta\varsigma \rho\acute{\alpha}\beta\delta\omicron\upsilon \alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\upsilon$, as the common Greeke text readeth at this day, and by the great Linguist Arias Montanus is written in that sort. Now according

^b Aug. in Gen. 94. 1. 62.

^c Tremel. ver. sex Syriaca translata one Heb. 11. 21. d Theodore in Gen. quest. 103. Sedit & baculo innitebatur dextra apprehendens summitate scæ eius

^e Aug. de Gen. quest. 162. Quod habent Latini codices, Et adorauit super caput virgæ eius, nonnulli codices emendati habent, Et adorauit super caput virgæ suæ.

^f Ibid. Fallit eos Græcum verbum quod eisdem literis scribitur, siue eius sine sua sed accensum disparesunt. ^g Ar. Montan. text Græc. interlinear.

ding to this reading Saint Austine saith, that ^h the meaning is very plaine, that the old man Iacob carrying or bowling a rod in such sort as old age is wont to do a staffe, as he bowed himselfe to worship God, did it upon the top of his rod which he so carried, as that bowing himselfe upon it, or over it, he might or did worship God. Here is therefore nothing but the carying or holding of a rod or a staffe to leane or to rest vpon in such sort as old age is wont to doe, thereby to stay himselfe as he inclined or bowed himselfe to worship God. And this construction is no whit empaired by the other reading, because by infinite examples it is manifest, that the Pronounce ἀυτοῦ is vsed also in the reciprocall signification as ἀυτοῦ is, and serueth to returne that whereto it is added, as belonging to the subiect whereof the matter present is affirmed. But if notwithstanding, they will refuse that reading, and say that they will not take it to bee meant but of Iosephs rod, yet Saint Austine there also excludeth them from their purpose, not reading as they doe, He worshipped the toppe of Iosephs rod, but He worshipped upon the toppe of Iosephs rod and adding, to shew what might then bee the meaning of it Whether haply had he taken the rod of Ioseph, when the same Ioseph sware to him, and whilest he yet held it after he had taken his oath, and not yet deliuered it forth with worshipped God. For he was not abashed so long to beare or hold the ensigne of his sonnes power, where the figure of a great matter to come was foreshewed. Thus euery way Saint Austine challengeth the adoration and worship to God, and teacheth vs, that if it bee spoken of Iosephs rod, yet it shall import that Iacob hauing in his hand the rod or scepter, or mace, which was the ensigne of Iosephs authoritie in Egypt vnder Pharao, did leane or bow himselfe thereupon to worship God. In a word therefore here is nothing any way to proue the religious adoration and worship of any creature, but most fantastically of all other is it alledged for the worshipping of Images. He further referreth vs to the Rhemish Testament, but hee should withall haue confuted Doctor Fulkes answer to it, if hee would haue had any thing there to be beleued. There is nothing there said of this matter, but what is here already answered.

*h Aug. ibid. Facili intelligeretur sanam qui virgam serebat
comore, quo illa
arabaeulum solet,
ut se inclinaret ad
Deum adorandum
id utique fecisse super cacumen virga-
sua, quam se sere-
bat ut super eam
caput inclinando adoraret Deum.*

*i Ibid. Quid offer-ge, Adorans super
cacumen virga-
eius, id est, filij sui Ioseph. An forte
ab eo virgam quan-
do ei iurabat, idem
filius & dum eam
tenet post verba iu-
rantis nondum illa
reddita mox ado-
rans Deum? Non enim pudebat eum
terre transier insigna potestatis filij
sui ubi figura magna res futura pra-signabatur.*

17. W. BISHOP.

The second reason is taken out of Exodus. 3. where God said to Moses Put off thy shoes, for the place where thou standest is holy. Now if places be holy and to be reuerenced by reason of the presence of Angels why not, as well the Image that representeth an Angell or some Saint, which is equall to Angels. M. P. his answer rather confirmeth then solucth this argument: for he saith that the ceremonie of putting off his shoes, was commanded to strike Moses with a religious reuerence; not of the place, but of the person there present, which was not God, but an Angell, as the text there expresseth.* The place then being holy, required the reuerend respect of putting off his shoes, and the reuerence done to the place, struck Moses with a religious reuerence of the Angell speaking in the person of God, euen so holy pictures being first duly reuerenced, doe strike men with a religious regard of the Saint represented. To this, let vs annexe that dayes bee truly called holy and worshipped as the first & last dayes of the feast of Easter be: & the vestments of Priests^b because they are dedicated and employed to holy uses: euen so Images which are made in honour of God and his Saints, and erected to moue and teach vs to embrace heauenly courses.

* Exod. 3.

* Exod. 12. 16.

* Exod. 28. 5. 2.

R. ABBOT.

The place where Moses stood was holy, dayes were called holy, the Priests vestments were holy, therefore Images are holy and must be worshipped. The Sunne shines in the colehouse, and the Moone in the Mustard pot, therefore all M Bishops witlieth in his left elbow. Do these men deserue any other but scorne and contempt, who bring vs reasons in no other sort, then, as if they were outright either mad or drunke? What is the medius terminus (I maruell) that should co-uey holinesse to Images from those things which hee mentioneth?

The place where Moses stood was holy, as Origen rightly saith;^a not of it selfe, but because the presence of God had sanctified the place, M. Bishop saith, it was not God but an Angell, but hee speaketh therein falsely and ignorantly. It was an Angell indeed, but it was^b the Angell or messenger of the Lords couenant,^b the Captaine of the Lords host, the second Person in Trinitie, the Sonne of God, vually ter-

^a Origen. in Ios. hom. 6 Per seipsum non sanctus locus sanctus, sed quia Dominus stabat cum Moyses pro auctore Domini sanctificauerat locum.

^b Mal. .i. l.

h. 10. s. 14.

termed an Angell in those apparitions, because hee tooke vpon him the office of an Angell, to doe the messages of the Godhead vnto men, ^c Surely (saith Eusebius) it is not lawfull to thinke, that the apparitions of God deliuered in holy Scriptures, are to bee attributed to the inferiour Angels which minister vnto God. Therefore he expoundeth them, and namely, this to Moses as ^{*} Ambrose also doth of Christe the Sonne of God, and proueth by the very plaine text, that the Angell there mentioned was God: ^d When the Lord saw that Moses turned aside to see, God called vnto him out of the middest of the bush saying, Moses, Moses: And he answered, I am here. Then he sayd, Come not hither, put off thy shooes from thy feete, for the place where thou standest is holy ground. Moreover he sayd, I am the God of thy Fathers, the God of Abraham, &c. Then Moses hid his face, for he was afraide to looke vpon God, thus ^e the Angell speaking to Moses in the bush, as S. Steuen termeth him, is called by our Saviour CHRIST ^f God speaking to Moses in the bush. I did amisse therefore to terme M. Bishop ignorant in this behalf, for hee could not but knowe the matter: I should rather haue termed him impudent, that to make an aduantage and yet nothing woorth, would contradict that which the Scripture so expressely saith. As for dayes they were appointed by God to bee holy in respect of being applyed to holy vse, but that those dayes were called worshipfull, it is but M. Bishops deuice, because he would haue vs to take him for a worshipfull wise man. So the vestiments of the Priests were holy, because, as he saith, they were dedicated and employed to holy uses. Let all these thinges be taken for graunted, as they are: but what of all this to the holinesse of Images? Surely we doe not know, but they may as well conclude that the Popes excrements are holy, the paringes of his nailes, and the pollinges of his head, or whatsoever other filth or foolerie they will commend to vs. No maruell if there were that holinesse in the ^g Franciscan Friars weede, as that men desired as a matter of great safegard to bee buried therein: or that the Franciscans breeches should be of great vertue to yeeld women speedy trauell, for daies and vestiments of old were holy, and the place where Moses stode was holy ground. But it is further to be obserued, that though all those things which Master Bishop nameth were holy, yet none of them is found to haue beene worshipped. Moses did not worship the holy ground, The Israclites did not worship the holy dayes,

^c Euseb. hist. lib. 1. cap. 2. Sanctus sanctus est visio Dei in Scripturis traditae Angelus illi inferioribus ac ministris Distribuas esse suspicari.

^{*} Amb. in Psal. 43. Qui est in rubo et sui Moysi nisi priuogenitus Dei filius. Sic in Epist. ad Col. c. 1. d Exod. 3. 4. c Act. 7. 30.

^f Mar. 12. 26.

^g Vide Hospiman, de orig. Monachar. lb. 3. ca. 12.

nor the Priestes garments. The temple was holy, the altar was holy, the offerings were holy, the Priestes were holy, and many other things, and yet they worshipped none of them : how then come we here to the worshipping of Images? Well, we must learne it our selues if we can, Maister Bishop can lay no more then hee hath done. But it should be very strange, that we should see more therein then the church of the Iewes could euer see: they read and knew all those things to be holy which Maister Bishop nameth, and yet they could neuer finde the worshipping of Images. He telleth vs of the Cherubims which God commaunded to bee sette wholly out of sight, or were vsed as the pictures of Lions, and Bulles, and Flowers, and Trees for the garnishing of the workes of the temple and the fashion whereof no man doth knowe, as before was sayde, but what was the reason that knowing those Scriptures whereof wee speake, they could neuer light vpon Maister Bishops heauenly shew of the Images of dead menne? ^h Varro the heathen Romane alledgeth them for example, that religion is more purely and holily obserued without Images. Tertullian mentioneth out of Cornelius Tacitus, that when Pompey ouercame the Iewes, and ⁱ entred into the Temple to view the secretes of their religion hee found no Image therein. King Agrippa telleth Caligula, that in it ^k there was no Image, neither secretly nor openly, in respect whereof beeing strictly holden as a poynt of their religion, he dissuadeth the same Caligula from attempting to set vppe his Image therein as he went about to do. Clemens Alexandrinus saith, that ^l the Iewes worshipped not mens workes of gold, of brasse, of silver, of Iurie, of wood and stone, namely, the images of dead men, which men vpon vaine persuasion worshipped, but did holily lift up their hands to heaue. This the Iewes practised, this they most religiouly obserued, and what should bee the reason hereof, if the Scriptures which Maister Bishop alledgeth, doe make for the defence of the worshipping of Images? Surely, because they did thus for the keeping of the commaundement of God, wee must necessarily take M. Bishops worshipping of Images to be the inuention of the Diuell.

^h Aug de ciuit. De lib 4. ca. 31. Sine simulachris castius diu obseruatur. Cuius sententia sua testem gentem Iudaeam. i Tertul. Apolo. cap. 16. Tacitus refert Cn. Pompeium cum Hierusalem cepisset praeceperit templum ad id speculandum Iudaeae religionis arcanis, nullum illis simulachrum reperisse. Tacitus, ad Philo de legat. ad Caium. Nullum ibi simulachrum vel in occulto vel in propatulo. i Clem. Alex. in Protrept. Qui non opera hominum a aerea, a uca, & argentea, & eburnea lignea, & lapidea hominum qui mortui sunt adorant simulachra, qua inani consilio adorantur ab hominibus, sed sanctus uoluntatis tollunt ad celum, &c.

181 W. BISHOP.

The third reason proposed by M. Perkins in favour of the Catholics is: It is lawfull to kneele downe to a chaire of estate, in the absence of the King: Therefore much more to the Images of God and his Saints in heauen glorified, being absent from vs.

To this he answereth, that it is but a ciuill worship to kneele to the chaire of estate, and that very commendable, to shew our loyaltie vnto our Prince: but kneeling vnto the Images of Saints is religious, and therefore not alike.

Reply! He proposeth our argument to the halfe, or else this answer had bene preuented. For thus runneth our reason: As the chaire of estate is to be worshipped with ciuill reuerence, in respect of the temporall Prince whom it representeth: euen so the Images of holy personages that raigne now in heauen, are to bee worshipped with a holy and religious kinde of curtesie: for as Temporall honour is due vnto a Temporall Prince, so religious and spirituall honour, is due vnto spirituall and most holy personages. And as a good subiect testifieth his loyaltie and good affection towards his Prince, by honoring his regall throne: So doth a good Christian giue testimonie of his dutifull, both estimation and deuotion toward those heauenly creatures, by giuing honour vnto their Images. At leastwise, why do not the Protestants exhibite ciuill reuerence as well vnto the representations of Gods Saints, as to the shadowes of the secular Maiestie? unlesse it be because they are fallen out with the Saints of God, and are become adorers of sinfull men.

R. ABBOT.

We may here conceine that images are brought to great distresse, in that froin arguments in the schooles they are faine to flie to the ceremonies of the Court. It should seeme strange that formalities obserued to Princes in their Courts for maiestie and royall state, should be made patternes of religious deuotions to be practised in the Church. But a man in danger of drowning is glad to catch at euery twigge, and this desperate cause of Images hauing

no manner probability of any approued reason or example for the iustifying of it, is glad to shift any way, and setteth foorth shadowes and gholstes to make shew of armed and fighting men, M. Bishop saith that M. Perkins answer had bene preuented, if the argument had bene well proposed, but now that hee hath proposed it, what doth it containe but onely a begging of that to bee graunted him which is denied in M. Perkins answer? The thing that hee should haue proued is, that there is a like respect of religious worship to Saints, as of ciuill reuerence to Princes, and hee onely affirmeth it, but reason he hath none. But to take such stuffe as he bringeth vs, first, we tell him that the chaire of estate is not bowed vnto for that it representeth the Prince, as he very idely and fondly dreameth, but for that it is the Princes seate, it being holden for a matter of princely maiestic, that there bee a reuerence performed to those things which serue in speciall manner for the Princes vse. In which sort at the Princes table, though the Prince not yet come vnto it, yet the seruice is done vpon the knee, as with bowing and obeisance also at the tables of inferiour States, where we suppose M. Bishop is not so madde as to thinke that either the meat, or the table, or any thing else doth represent them in respect of whome this duty is performed. On the other side, no such duty is done to the Princes image, because it is not a matter of the Princes vse, and if we should see M. Bishop kneeling to it, we should either thinke him drunke, or take him for a foole. No argument therefore can be drawne from the honour done to Princes, to approue the honour that is done to Saints, because in that kind wherein it is required to be done to Saints, it is absurd and ridiculous to bee done to Princes. Yea M. Bishop may as well conclude, that the Saints should haue their cloth of state, and carry scepters in their hands, and that our Lady the Queene of heauen, as they call her, should haue Ladies to beare vp her traine, because Kings and Queenes haue so, as that wee are therefore to kneele to Saints images, because wee kneele to the cloth of state. Well, yet Master Bishop, telleth vs that as temporall honour is due to a temporall Prince, so religious and spirituall honour is due vnto spirituall and most holy personages. But vainely and absurdly: for how should his proportion stand, when hee putteth Princes on the one side, and subiects on the other? Let him say as he should say, As temporall honour is due to a temporall Prince, fo and much more religious and spirituall honour is due to him, who spiritually, and in way of religion is our Soueraigne and Prince. If he can prooue, that the Saints are appointed to bee spirituallly our Kings and Soueraigne Lords, he saith somewhat other-wise his proportion halteth, and goeth so lame, as that it cannot carrie him whither he would faine goe. He telleth vs, that they now raigne in heauen: but wee answer him, that they raigne, and are Kings spirituallly in heauen, by hauing a victorie and triumph ouer their spirituall enemies, not by hauing a dominion and Soueraign-tye ouer vs. Wee are taught to acknowledge the Saints and Angels for our ^a brethren and fellow-seruants, who because they are no other, therefore will not take vpon them to be our Lordes, neither canne wee without offence tender our seruice and deuotion to them. Therefore S. Austine saith, as we haue scene before, ^b Wee honour them not by seruice, but by loue: they are to bee honoured by imitation, not to bee worshipped by religion. And of the Angelles Origen saith, that ^c this is it that gaineth their fauour to vs, and maketh them willingly to do all things for vs, when they see vs well affected towards God, and that wee embrace his Sonne Iesus Christ, struing daily to growe more and more to the knowledge of him, but no man may dare to offer his prayers but onely to the Lord God, who is abundantly sufficient for all, by our Sauiour the Sonne of God. Now therefore as seruants and subiects to their fellow-seruants and subiects yeelde affection and loue, but none setteth vp to other a royall throne to honour them as Princes, so wee giue our loue and affection to the Saints, wee testifie and commend their vertues, wee lay before vs their good example, wee acknowledge their blisse, wee desire and long for the fruition of their companie: but we make them not our spirituall Princes and Soueraignes: and therefore we giue them no dutie or seruice of religion, which is the royaltie of God, knowing that they woulde hide their faces, and exceedingly abhorre to haue the same offered vnto them. And hereby we see howe idly M.B. goeth on in his tale, that as good subiects testifie their loyaltye and affection towards the Prince, by honouring the regall throne, so good Christians giue testimonie of their duetyfull estimation and deuotion towards those heavenly creatures by giuing honour vnto their Images. For neither haue we the conditiō of subiects in respect of the Saints, neyther doe wee owe any such deuotion or duty to them, neither

^a Rem. 6. 11. & 9. 10.

^b Aug. de vera relig. cap. 55. sup.

^c Origen contra Cels. lib. 5. Hoc nobis Angelus Dei reddit satis propterea vs libenter pro nobis faciunt omnia quod bene affecti sumus erga Deum, & quod Filium eius verbum com- plectimur, &c. con- tendentes indes ad clariorum eius noti- tiam &c. Et paulo ante: Ne qui audeat precibus offerenti- si soli Dominus Deo qui vnus omnibus abunde sufficiat, per Seruatores vestrum Dei Filium, &c.

haue the images that are sette vpe in their names that referre to them, as the royall throne hath to the Prince. We honor the chaire of estate, because of the Princes vse therof for maiestie and state: but seeing the Saints are in heauen, what haue they to doe with blockish idols here on earth, or if they were vpon the earth, what vse should they haue of them? And therefore it is an idle and fond question which he asketh, why wee yeeld not ciuill reuerence to the representations of Gods Saints, as well as to the shadowes of secular maiestie, because we haue no ciuill conuersation with the Saints, as we haue with Princes; neyther is there any ciuill vse of those counterfeite Idols, as there is of the Princes chaire of state. Neither are we therefore fallen out with the Saints, as hee vainely cauilleth, but rather we labour to be, and hope to be the same that they are. And because we hope so to be, and are neither so impious nor so foolish, as to think that men hereafter should set vp Idols to vs to worship vs thereby, therefore we hold it for impietie and folly to vse anie such superstition to the images of the Saints. As for Princes though they bee sinfull men, yet we haue learned of Christ concerning them, to giue to Caesar the things that are Caesars, and as they are vnto vs the shadowes of the maiestie of God, so to giue vnto them ciuilly some shadowes of the honour that belongeth vnto God.

4 Mar. 22. 21.

19. W. BISHOP.

M. P. makes a third point of difference, that we may not worship God in any such image in which he hath appeared vnto men. In this we doe not differ, unlesse he takes it otherwise than he deliuereth it. Those images wee hold more reuered then any others, as representations nearer approaching vnto the Diuinity; yet because they do not expresse the Deitie, God is not directly apprehended nor worshipped in them; but onely by collection, as for example: The forme of a graue old man in Daniel, doth not represent Gods person, but we gather by that auncient forme Gods eternitie, whereby we arise to a more perfect conceit of God, whom we adore: now other images of Christ and his Saints, doe cary our mindes directly vpon their proper person, whome in their images we adore and worshippe after their degree. But we worship images with farre meaner reuerence then anie of the Saints, in regard onely, that they do represent such personages, and do induce vs more to loue and honour them, and do stirre vpon our dulnesse more often and ardently to honour God in the Saints, and the Saints in their degrees: as also to imitate their holy example as hath bene said more then once, that al may understand how farre off we are from giuing Gods honour vnto either Saint or image. But this point of difference is made to bring in a common argument of theirs, to wit, that the worshipping of the golden Calfe is condemned as flat idolatrie: and yet the Israelites worshipped not the Calfe but God in the Calfe. To which we say, they did not worship the true God in the Calfe, but the God of the Egyptians, which was taken by them to haue the shape of a blacke Calfe with white spots. See S. Augult. And therefore making the golden Calfe to represent this false God, and attributing their deliuerance vnto that supposed God, and not vnto the God of Israel, committed idolatrie, which the text prooueth most manifest, these be thy Gods that brought thee out of Egypt. M. Perkins answereth, that the meaning is nothing else, but that the golden Calfe was a signe of the presence of the true God: such glosses without anye authoritie of the auncient Fathers is ridiculous, being against the plaine text: but saith he, we must not thinke the so mad, as to take a Calfe made with their eare-rings to be their God, no: but we may well thinke them so ungratefull vnto the true God their deliuerer, that they did ascribe their deliuerance not to him, but vnto that God which the Egyptians serued, whose pourtraiture was that Calfe.

* Exod. 32.

* Lib. 18. de ciuit. cap. 5.
* 1. De nat. Decor. Ver. 4.

R. ABBOT

It is one speciall faculty that men attaine vnto by Romish learning, that they are able at any time by a distinction to inocke God. Let God say what he will, they will say the contrary, and yet by a distinction they will make it good. God commaunded his people that they should make no manner a figure, or forme, or image, wherby to represent or worship him. Accordingly the faithfull obserued, and did throughout all their generations: they abhorred alwayes in any meaning to set vp an image vnto God. They dedicated their temple vnto God without any image, saith Philo. Thomas Aquinas saith of that time of the old testament, that to the true God being incorpall or without body, no corporall or bodily image might be set up, & to that purpose citeth out of Damascen, that it is a point of extreme fol-

a Deut. 4. 16.

b Philo de legat. ad

summ. Vt eximio

sanum dicatur

inuisibili Deo sine

ulla effigie.

c Thom Aquin.

summ pars 3.

quæst. 21. art. 3. 1p

si vero Deo cum

si incorporatus nul

la corporalis ima-

go poterat poni: quia ut dicit Damasc. in sapientia summa est & impietas figurare quod est diuinum, sed quia in nouo testamento Deus factus est homo, potest in sui imagine corporali adorari.

ly and impiety to figure that that is diuine, and therefore in the newe testament approueth no image of God, but as God was made manne, that is, the images of Christ. So M. Bishops Nicene fathers, albeit they were idolaters as well as Aquinas and Damascen, yet they condemned the making of images to the godhead, as before hath bene shewed, and approued onely the images of Christ, and of the Saints. M. Bishop now telleth vs that they were all fooles, and made a needlesse scruple for want of the knowledge of his distinction: for though God be not directly to be apprehended or worshipped in an image, yet by collection he may, as by the forme of a graue old man we gather Gods eternity, saith hee, and thereby arise to a more perfect concept of God, whome wee adore. Thus for want of his learning they wanted the meanes to arise to the more perfect concept of God, because they feared to picture God in the forme of a graue old man. But I haue^d before shewed that this impious dreame of his accordeth with the concepts of prophane Philosphers, who did not thinke that their images did or could expresse the deity, but they vsed them onely as steps, whence by collection they might ascend to the contemplation of the diuine power. It hath bene there also declared, that it is wholly wicked and vnlawfull in any signification or meaning to take vpon vs by an image to represent God. Whereas hee seeketh out of Daniel to approue this forme of a graue old man, he dealeth lewdly therein, Daniel there saith of the Auncient of dayes, his garment was white as snow, & the haire of his head like the pure wooll, but of a graue old man hee saith nothing. Of our Sauour Christe appearing to S. Iohn it is also saide, ^e His head and his haire were white as white wooll and as snow: and will M. Bishop be so fond hereupon, as to picture our Sauour Christ like a graue old man? Old age also importeth not eternity, as he fancieth, but rather decaying & declining: and therefore is very vnfit to signifie the infinite being of the euerlasting God. But leauing that to the wisdom of God, why hee hath thought good thus or thus to appeare to men, we hearken to his commaundement, who saith that in the giuing of the law hee appeareth in no likenesse, because he would haue no image or likenesse set vpon to him. Wee follow also the example and practise of the faithfull people of God, who albeit they did reade of these apparitions of God, yet neuer durst presume thereupon to make anie Image, whence they might by collection arise to the more perfect concept of him.

d 3. r. 4. & 7.

e Dan. 7. 9.

f Reuel. 1. 14.

As touching their worshipping of the Images of Christe and his Saints, and that by vaine pretences they bestow vpon Saints and their Images the worshipp due to God onely, enough hath bene already said. So hath it bene also plainly declared already, that as the Israelites in worshipping their golden Calues, intended to worshipping the true God, and Maister Bishops assertion that they meant thereby to worshipping the God of the Egyptians, is but vpon his owne worde, and therefore we reiect it as a dreame. Bellar- mine in this matter wauteh too and fro, hee sawe the trueth plainly enough, and therefore is forced to confesse, that ^h it is not unlikely which Abulensis and Caietan, and other of their writers say, that it may bee admitted that the Iewes in the idoll did thinke to worshipping the true God: but yet loth to stand to this, as being too directly against his purpose, he commeth in with perhaps this and perhaps that, and sheweth that indeed hee knew not what to say. But what sence is there in that Maister Bishop saith, that the Israelites should imagine that the GOD of the Egyptians deliuered them out of the land of Egypt; If they had caried the opinion of many Gods, it was more probable and likely for them to thinke, that the God of the Egyptians would rather haue done a fauour to the Egyptians then to them, and therefore would rather haue kept them in Egypt, then haue deliuered them from thence. They afterwarde went a who- ring after other Gods, the Gods of the Sidonians, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and others, and yet to none of them did they euer ascribe the deliuerance out of the land of Egypt, and howe then is it likely that they should ascribe it to the Egyptians God? And if they hadde meant to worship the Egyptians God, there is no question but they woulde haue worshipped him in the same manner as the Egyptians did. But the Egyptians worshipped their God not by a golden Calfe, but by a liuing Calfe, which was to bee of a certaine colour and certaine markes, which they so much regarded, as that when that Calfe or Bullocke was dead, they went vppe and downe with great mourning and lamentation till they hadde found another coloured and spotted in the same sort. Seeing therefore this was a matter of so great moment, they would by no meanes haue neglected it if they hadde meant to worshipping the Egyptians God. Howe much rather shoulde wee thinke that they intended by their golden Calfe to worshipping their owne God for

^b Supra, Sec. 5.

^b Bellarmin de Imag. Sanct. cap. 13. Dicunt nec im- probabiliter admit- te posse quod Iudaei in idolo putauerint se colere Deum ve- rum.

ⁱ Exod. Viii. An- not. to Aug. de ciui. Dei. l. 18. cap. 5.

receiving of him the like benefite, as for which the Egyptians worshipped their imagined God by whoring calfe; King Apis in a time of great dearth and famine, greatly relieved the Egyptians, and specially the cite of Alexandria, whom being dead they for that cause honoured as a God for reasons diversly conjectured, naming him Serapis. For the worshipping of him, they made speciall choise of a calfe of bullocks, as fittest for memoriall of the benefite for which they honoured him, because men are specially sustained and fed by the labour of the Oxen. The Israelites at that time in more miraculous manner, received the like benefite at the hands of their God. He fed them with Manna from heaven when they hadde no meanes at all to provide themselves bread. Aaron therefore being required to make them Gods, being vndoubtedly more intelligent, then either to impute their deliuerance to the God of the Egyptians, or to thinke God to bee like a calfe, yea and not being ignorant of the construction which the Egyptians made of their calfe, made a golden calfe; onely as a signe and memoriall of the God by whom they were nourished and fed, whence according to M. Bishops rule they might by interpretation and collection, arise to the remembrance and concept of God. Hauing then made the Calfe, he saith, These are thy Gods, O Israel, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, in no sort referring them to the God of the Egyptians, but remembering them thereby of their owne God, who by Moses brought them out of the land of Egypt. Which hee doth by that rule which M. Perkins mentioned out of S. Austine, that Images are wont to bee called by the names of those things, whereof they are images. For the rest I referre thee, gentle Reader, to that that is saide before. As for that which he saith, that the Egyptians tooke their God to haue the shape of a blacke Calfe with white spots, if some other man had said it, I should haue said that he had spoken like a Calfe. Hee quoteth S. Austine for witness of it, but S. Austine saith no such thing. He saith that Apis being king of the Argiues, came into Egypt, and dying there became Serapis the greatest of all the Gods of the Egyptians. He noteth out of Varro, that he was called Serapis of the coffin wherein hee was buried, being worshipped in his coffin before any Temple was built for him; the coffin being in Greeke οσπος, which being added by way of composition to Apis, made Sorapis, and by change of a letter was turned to Serapis. He saith that it was decreed, that k Ruffin. hist. lib. 2.

cap. 23. Apis fe-
runt cum famu
tempore frumenta apud Alexandria
defecissent, ex pro-
prio assatum civi-
bus alimenta prabuisse. Quo defuncto in honorem eius instituerunt Memphis
templum, in quo
bos quasi indicium
optimi agricola
nutritur, &c.
et in templo
tabernaculo

1 Aug. ad Simplic
lib. 2. q. 3. Solent imagines carum ve-
rum nominibus ap-
pellari quarum
imagines sunt.

m. Aug. de ciuit.
De lib. 1. c. 6. q. 2.

no man upon paine of death should say that he was a manne, and that in all temples where Isis and he were worshipped, there stood an image at the dore which hadde the finger laied to the mouth, as requiring silence that no man should say that they were menne who were there worshipped. He addeth, thatⁿ the Egyptians daintly kept and fed the bullocke in the honour of Apis or Serapis, but that they tooke Serapis their God to be like a blacke calfe with white spots, neither he, nor Tully, nor any other euer imagined, till M. Bishop by a milchance lighted vpon it in a dreame.

n Ille bos quem mirabili vanitate decepta Egyptus in honorem eius delictijs affluentibus aliebat, &c. Apis vocabatur.

20. W. BISHOP.

But now before we end this question, I must let you understand what worthy men they were that first beganne to wage battell against Images: they were the Iewes in their Talmud. Ord. 2. tract. 1. dilt. 2. See Synod 7. act. 5. A barbarous Persian Xenias, as witnesseth Nicephorus Lib. 16. cap. 27. 7 hen Mahomet the great God of the Turkes. Alcoran. ca. 15. & 17. with such like infidels, sorcerers, and the scum of the earth.

See Card. Bellarmine de Imag. lib. 2. cap. 6.

I will with one or two testimonies of the auncientest Fathers finish this controuersie. Lactant. In car. de pass. Christ. Kneele downe and adore the venerable wood of the Crosse.

Hierom, in vita Paulæ: She adored prostrate before the Crosse, as if she had seene Christ hanging on it.

Basil against Iulian cited, act. 2. Synod. 7. I honour the hystoric of the Images, and doe properly worship them.

Finally in the 7. generall Councell holden 900. yeares past, they are condemned of heresie, that deny the use and worshipping of holy Images.

R. АBBОТ.

M. Bishop in this worthy conclusion will tell vs what worthy men they were that first beganne to wage battell against images, and first nameth vnto vs the Iewes in their Talmud. But hee sheweth himselfe a very simple manne to goe about to perswade vs, that the Iewes in their Talmud were the first oppugners of the worshipping of Images, vnlesse hee hadde shewed vs withall, that their forefathers before the Talmud hadde entertained and practised the same. It was but a thing mistaken by him: they were
the

the Iewes indeede that were the auncient oppugners of Images, but these Iewes were Moses and the godly Kings of Iudah, Asa, Hezechias, Iosias, and such other, together with the Prophets of God, who denounce the wrathfull vengeance of God against this filthy and abhominable pollution of the true worshipp of God. If thote faithfull people of God hadde worshipped Images, M. Bishop had had somewhat to say of the Iewes latter detesting and abandoning of them: but because there is no example found of any godly man that euer did so or so taught, we thereby vnderstand, that what the Iewes do or haue done in that behalfe, they haue done it by obseruing constantly so farre soorth the doctrine and practise of their godly fathers. The Turkes also doe that which they do in respect of Gods commaundement. They acknowledge the law of the tenne commaundements to be of God, and finding the worshipping of Images to be therein condemned, they accordingly detest it. And in this respecte Poperie hath lien as a stumbling blocke in the way both of Turkes and Iewes, and hath caused them to fall into the greater hatred and despite of the name and faith of Christe, and let a barre against them to keepe them frō entring into the Church of Christe. They knowe that the worshipping of Images is condemned of God, and therefore seeing the profession of the name of Christe to bee ioyned to worshipping of Images, they haue wholly deemed the same to be sacriledge & enmitie against God, and haue shunned it accordingly. This scandall God hath in part reuenged already, by deliuering those Easterne Churches where this idolatry was first established, by cruell destruction into the Turkes handes. The Church of Rome hath scene it, and it is verified in her which Saint Iohn prophecied, The remnant of the men which were not killed with these plagues, repented not of the workes of their handes, that they might not worship deuils and idols of gold, and of siluer, and of brasse and of wood, and of stone, which neither can see, nor heare, nor goe. Therefore God hath giuen ouer that filthy whore to all abomination and vncleanness both spirituall and corporall, and will in due time performe that which hee hath foretolde, concerning a perpetuall desolation to befall vnto her. As for Xenaias or Xenias the Persian, if he were otherwise faultie, he was iustly for that to beare his iudgement: but in oppugning the worshipping of Images, if he did so, he did the part of a iust and faithfull man, I referre the Reader der to that beefore hath bene sayd, concerning him in ^b answer of the Epistle to the King. But nowe that Maister Bishop hath thus brought in by way of contempt, Turkes, and Lewes, and a barbarous Persian, waging warre against Images, wee would looke that hee should bring vs glorious troupes of the auncient Fathers, speaking in fauour of them, Behold, gentle Reader, the wretchednesse of a damnable and wicked defence. Hee hath heere offered vs the verse of a Poet, the fact of a woman, and a counterfeit sentence not found in Basilis workes, but Fathered vpon him most impudently foure hundred yeares after his decease. Surely if Poperie had bene the religion that was professed of old, there could not haue wanted many and most pregnant testimonies for that which they nowe practise. But there are none : they are put to a miserable shift to get any thing that may giue but some shewe of grace to that which they defend. But such as they are let vs examine what they say. First Lactantius by a Poeticall fiction bringeth in our Sauour Christe hanging in ruefull plight vpon the crosse, and there calling to man to behold and consider him in that estate, ^c To behold his haire and his necke all imbrued with blood : his head all rent with thornes, and shedding or distilling the warme blond vpon his sacred face, his eyes closed together and wanting light, his cheekes buffeted, his tongue drie and poisoned with gall, his countenance pale like death : Behold, saith he, my hands pierced with nailes, my ioynts racked and drawne soorth, a great wound in my side, and a streame of blood issuing from thence, my feete bored through, my members all blouid. Here vpon followe the words which Maister Bishop citeth, Kneele downe and with weeping adore the worthy wood or tree of the crosse, and humbly kissing the ground bedewed with innocent blood, wash it with thy teares. Where we see all framed to Poeticall manner of speaking, and may easily perceiue that the Author intendeth no more, but that beeholding by the spirituall contemplation and meditation of faith, the bitterness of the passion of Christ for our sakes, wee should in heart and affection euen fall prostrate beefore him, as hanging vpon the Crosse, and kisse the ground bedewed with his most sacred and innocent blood. Wee can no more suppose nowe the reall adoring of the Crosse, whereof hee speaketh, then wee canne suppose the ground nowe really moisted with the blood of Christe, and therefore canne no otherwise take it, but that hee referreth our medita-

c Lactan. carm. de pass. Christi. En aspice crines sanguine conrotos & sanguinolenta sub ipsi Colla comu, spinisq; caput crudelibus haustum Vndiq; diuisa plume unum super ora cruorem, Compres- soi speculari oculos et luce carentes. Afflicta siq; Senas, aenem suscipia linguam Felle venenatum & pallente: funero vultu. Certe manus clauan fixas trahitq; lacertas. Atq; in- gers lateri vulnus cere inde sinorem Sanguinem fessiq; pedes artusq; cruertis: Flecte genu lignum, cruce venerabile adora Flecti, in oculis terangi, cruore maderem Ora peruen- tum in lachrymas suffunde su. utu. &c.

d Gal 3.1.

tion to the Gospell, where ^d haung Christe described before our eyes as crucified amongest vs, we should in minde and deuotion as it were kneeling before his crosse, humble our selues to him. But that Lactantius was very farre from worshipping spiritually the very wood of the crosse, he plainly enough sheweth when hee resolueth it ^e to be a thing unlawfull to worship any thing beside God. Yea, and we haue heard before out of Ambrose concerning the crosse of Christe, euen the very crosse whereon hee was crucified, that to worshippe it were ^f beathenish error and the vanitie of wicked menne: Whereby wee learne to esteeme of that which Maister Bishop further citeth of Paula a noble gentle woman of Rome, of whome Hierome reporteth, that traouailing to Hierusalem, and comming to the place where Christ was crucified, ^g falling prostrate before the crosse, shee worshipped as if she had seene the Lord there hanging before vs. Hee telleth vs that she worshipped, but he doth not tell vs that she worshipped the Crosse. The present conceipt of the place was a motiue vnto her there to fall downe to worship Christe in heauen, but of worshipping the crosse there is nothing sayde there, much lesse of any thing that shoulde induce vs to the worshipping of Maister Bishops Images. Nay Hierome saith, ^h Wee worship neither Sunne, nor Moone, nor Angels, nor Archangels, nor Cherubim, nor Seraphim, nor any name that is named in this worlde, or in the worlde to come. The words cited vnder the name of Basil, can haue no more credit then they haue who are the reporters of them, which is none at all. They are alleadged out of the seconde Nicene Councell, and the Councell it selte is brought as a witnesse of the worshipping of Images, but howe base account is to bee made of that Councell I haue beefore giuen to vnderstande in answer of the Epistle. Albeit that thou maiest, gentle Reader, more particularly vnderstande the trueth of that censure, it shall not bee amisse somewhat further to note the originall and processe of the sayde Councell. It hath bene beefore shewed, that in the time of Gregorie Magnus Bishop of Rome, which was about fixe hundred yeares after Christe, Serenus the Bishop of Massilia seeing the people to worshippe the Images in the Church, in great zeale brake the Images in peeces, and threw them out of the Church, that there might bee no occasion there left of any such abomination,

Gregory

e Lactantius insitunt. lib. 5. cap. 9. Nesciunt quantum sit reus adorare aliud praterquam deum. f Supra Sect. 1. Ex Ambrosio.

g Hieron. in Epistaph. Paula Prostrata ante crucem quasi pendentem dominum cerneret adorabat.

h Hieron ad Riparadu. Vigilant. Ne solem quidem & lunam, non Angelos, non Archangelos, non Cherubim, omne nomen quod nominatur in presenti seculo & in futuro colimus et adoramus.

Gregorie hereupon wrote to Serenus, and though hee disliked his breaking of them, yet comended him in that hee could not endure the worshipping of them. This was then the doctrine of the Church of Rome, that howsoever Images might be vsed historically for remembrance, yet by no means might men performe deuotion or worship to them. But whilst vnder pretence of that historicall vse they attained to high and honourable place in the Church, and were gloriously set foorth as great ornaments thereof, Satan hereby tickled the fancie of the people, and bred in them an itching humour of damnable superstition, which grew more and more, till Idolatry was openly practised by the worshippe of them, and the Bishop of Rome, who before had giuen sentence to the contrary, became the maine champion to fight for the maintenance of this abuse. This we find to haue come to passe about an hundred yeares or very little more after the time of Gregory, at which time the Emperors of Constantinople with the most of their Bishops, mightily, opposed themselues against this new deuotion, and by their edicts caused Images wholly to be defaced and abandoned out of the Churches. The pursuit of which cause when ⁱ Leo Isaurus verie earnestly followed, Gregory the second swaruing frō the steps of the former Gregory, tooke vpon him^k to excommunicate the Emperour and all that tooke part with him in destroying of Images. Gregory the third his successeur went further and assembled a Councell at Rome, and there decreed the worshipping of Images, and hauing so done, renouined the former excommunication, & added thereto a sentence of deprivation, and by rebellion and treason found the meanes to alienate from the Emperour whatsoeuer there was then in Italy remaining to him. Against that Romane councell ^l Constantinus Copronymus the son of Leo about the yeare of our Lord 755. assembled at Constantinople a Councell of the Easterne Bishops to the number of three hundred and thirtie, which wholly determined against the worshipping of Images, thinking also the vse of them in any sort to bee not onely vnecessary, but altogether vnlawfull and contrary to the word of God. The detestation that they had conceiued of the impious and wicked abuse, made them for the auoiding thereof to prohibite that vse which was lawfull, as a man desirous to make a crooked rod straight, bendeth it too farre the other way. But this determination of that Councell

ⁱ Sigebert. Chron
anno. 725.

Paulus Diacon. de
gest Longo. lib. 6.
cap. 49.

^k Zonar Anna.
tom. 3. Synodico anathemate ob-
strinns. & c.

^l Zonar. ibid et Sigebert. an. 755.

appealed not that contention, the humor of superstition being restlesse and endlesse, neuer ceasing if it bee able to stirre, till it gaine strength for the vphoulding of it selfe. So it was, that to Leo the sonne of Constantinus Copronymus was married Irene a proud and wicked woman, who vpon the death of her husband, abusing the minority of her sonne, tooke vpon her selfe the gouernement of the Empire, and being of a womanish affection delighted with babies, about foure and thirtie yeares after that Councell of Constantinople that generation of Bishops being in a manner quite worne out, she commaundeth another Councell in the same place, the Bishops by that time being well fitted for the doing of that which she desired to haue effected. The cause of their assembly being publikely knowne, namely that it was for the bringing in againe of the worshipping of Images, the people of Constantinople gathered themselues together, and threatened to do some violence to them if they should conclude any such matter. This feare hindereth them from proceeding according to that they had purposed, and hereupon Irene dissolved that meeting for that time, and the next yeare after caused the same to bee renewed at Nice in Bithynia, where the first great and famous Councell was houlden against Arius the hereticke vnder Constantine the great. But wee may here easily conceiue a great difference in course of proceeding betwixt that former and this latter Councell. The former Councell continued for the space of three yeares and more, long time and deliberation being taken for debating and discussing to the full points of question that should bee decided in it. This latter continued but onely twentie dayes, being begun 8. kalend. Octob. and being ended 3. Id. Octob. so that they seeme to haue before determined what to conclude, and for no other cause met together but onely to say what they had determined. The President of this Councell who managed the whole busines thereof was one Tharasisus, who of a courtier and a souldiour, contrarie to the canons of the Church, was made Bishop and Patriarch of Constantinople, a man verie vnfit and vnwoorthie for such a place. According to the weakenesse of the head was the proceeding and behaviour of the whole bodie, wickedly abusing the Scriptures, wresting and peruerting the sentences in Fine. commet.

in Chronol. anne 787.788.

of the Fathers : no reason so foolish but they admire it, no lye so grosse but they applaude it, nothing there reade vnder the name of any famous author, but it is certainly true : no man may speake against it. The first action beeing spent in receiuing of penitents, who were a remainder of the former Councell, and now for keeping of their places recanted what they had there sayde, they come in the seconde to the reading of the letters of Adrian Bishop of Rome, which beeing done, they all professe their consent to that which he wrote, and so an end. In those letters hee singularly abuserh Constantine the great, fathering vpon him a tale of a leprosie, and that whē he had appointed the murthering of infants, that he might haue their blood to bathe himselfe in for the curing of it, Peter and Paul appeared to him in his sleepe, and recommended vnto him the Baptisme and faith of Christe, and that by means thereof hee should obtaine his health : that to this end they willed him to send for Syluester the Bishop of Rome, who lurked in secret for feare of falling into the persecutors hands, to whom when he was come, he declared this whole matter, & asked him (if we will belieue this notable cosiner) what kind of gods he thought those two to be, namely Peter and Paule, that had appeared to him ? that Syluester telling him they were no gods, but seruants and Disciples of Christ, caused their Images to bee brought forth, which when hee saw, hee sayed, these are they whom I sawe in that vision: (an excellent skill in the Image-maker, that hee could light so iust vpon the visages of them that were dead almost three hundred yeares before :) that hereupon Constantine was baptized at Rome, and restored to his health, and did sette vpe manie goodly Images of Christ and his Saints in the Churches there. With this most impudent and shamelesse forgerie, so plainly contradicted by ^a Eusebius his storie of the life of Constantine, by ^b Ambrose, by ^c Hierome, by ^d Socrates, by ^e Theodoret, by ^f Sozomen, who all declare that Constantine was baptized at Nicomedia amidst manie Bishops there, and that newly beefore his death, which was ^g seuen yeares at least after the death of Syluester: with this lewd tale, I say, Adrian

^a Euseb. de vita Constant. lib. 4. cap. 62.
^b Ambros. de obitu Theo. doct.
^c Hieronym. in chronica.

^d Socrat. lib. 1. cap. 26. ^e Theodoret. lib. 1. cap. 12. ^f Sozomen. lib. 2. cap. 32. ^g So it is by the computation of Funcius: but Sozomen. hist. lib. 1. cap. 16. saith that Iulius the second after Syluester was Bishop of Rome at the time of the Nicene Councell: which being so, Syluester must bee dead at least thirteene yeares before Constantine was baptized.

maketh his onfet for images, & then proceedeth to the contaminating and prophaning of the Scriptures, alleading that God made manne according to his Image, as if thereupon it should concerne vs to make images and worshippinge them: that Noe and Abraham set vp altars vnto God: that Iacob erected a stone, and powred oile vpon it, & called it Gods house: that the same Iacob worshipped vpon the toppe of his rod, as if worshippinge of Images were to bee prouoed by examples of hauing no Images to worshippinge: that Moses made the Brazen serpent and the Cherubims, and^h if, sayeth he, the people of Israel were saued from their plague by looking vpon the brazen serpent, doe wee doubt but that wee are saued beeholding and worshippinge the Images of Christe and of all the Saints? as it there were the like reason of that which GOD in one kinde for speciall cause commaundeth, and that which in another kinde manne of his owne head fondly presumeth without God. For further proofes he citeth out of the Psalmes, ⁱ Confession and beauty are before him: ^k Lorde I haue loued the beauty of thy house, and the place of the tabernacle of thy glorie: ^l My face hath sought after thee, thy face Lord will I seeke: ^m The rich of the people shall make their supplication beefore thy face: ⁿ O Lord, the light of thy countenance is sealed vpon vs.

Can we hold him for other then a graue and reuerend Prelate, that coulde dispute so substantially, so wisely, so learnedly for the worshippinge of Images? May not wee bee taken for blinde buzzardes, that cannot see the same sufficiently prouoed and warranted by these texts: or rather are we not to take him for a lewde cosiner and peruerter of Gods woorde, who would thus detort and wrest the Scriptures to that whereto they giue no semblance of approbation or liking? As hee dealeth with the Scriptures, so doth he with the Fathers. Hee alledgeth amongst others one place vnder the name of Basil, in which the words are which M. Bishop here citeth, which yet is certaine to haue beene written by another a long time after the death of Basil. Amongst other words there are these: ^o I confesse holy Mary, who brought forth Christ according to the flesh, calling her (Deiparam) the mother of God: which there is no mā so blind but seeth that they are purposely set down against the Nestorian heresie and that without doubt after the time of the Ephesine coucell when that name of Deipara was first publicly auouched to the Churches vse, which was holden about 50. yeares after *Basil*s time.

h Si Israeliticum
populum per inspectionem ceteri serpentis seruatum a sua peste credimus Christi verò Dei et seruati oris nostri
omniumq; sancto-
rum figuras con-
templantes et vene-
rantes dubitamus
nos seruari?
i Psal. 95. vulga.
k Psal. 25. 8.
l Psal. 26. 13.
m Psal. 44. 14.
n Psal. 4. 7.

o Confiteor de nde sanctam Mariam
qua secundum car-
neme illum peperit hanc Deiparam veram.

Yea and it was yet long after that also before these words were written, inasmuch as there is affirmed the worshipping of images, whereas there is no example of the worshipping of images then to be found in any Church throughout the whole world. Some other of the Fathers hee handleth in the same sort, citing them all either fallly or impertinently, whilst either hee imputeth to them that which they neuer wrote, or impudently forceth to the gracing of the worshipping of images, that which they spake onely of the historical and ciuill vse. Yet vpon these silly grounds the Councell proceedeth, and they professe their beleefe to bee P according to the tenour of Adrians letters perfectly worshipping images, saith Elias Cretenensis, and I pronounce anathema to them that professe otherwise: yea q I receiue, embrace and honour them, saith Stauratus the Bishop of Chalcedon, as being the earnest of my saluation, and I accurse them that thinke otherwise. See here the worthy companie of M. Bishops learned men, much respecting what the grounds and proofes were that they would conclude vpon. In the third action after the receiuing of some other penitents, they reade the communicatorie letters of Tharasius, lately before chosen Patriarch of Constantinople, to the Patriarchs and Bishops of Antioch and Hierusalem, and their answers to him, wherein they signifie their consent to the worshipping of images. For prooffe they care not; it is enough to say they professe it, and the rest of that act is nothing but voyces of approbation of that which they say. In the fourth action they fall roundly to their businesse, and bring foorth their proofes, such as they haue, and happie is hee that can bring foorth a place that but speaketh of an image; that is argument good enough for the worshipping of them. First because they would haue it knowne that they had a Bible amongst them, they bring it foorth, and there they reade some few places out of Exodus, Numbers and Ezechiel concerning the making of Cherubims, to which they adde the place to the Hebrewes mentioning the Cherubims of glorie ouershadowing the mercie-seate Here vpon Tharasius giueth this worthie obseruation, Let vs marke, that because the old Testament had diuine signes, the new hath from thence taken the Cherubims of glorie couering the mercie-seate: the whole Synod answering, Verie right, so the truth is indeed.

p Constant. iuxta tenorem literarum quæ ab Adriano &c. missæ sunt hominibus consentio, &c. & cû hac fide ad tribunal Christi proficiscar, &c. Elias: perfectè eos adorans: qui verò secus consentior eos anathematizo. q Staurat. Imagines recipio, à plebore & honore velut archæonem existentes: secus autem consentientes anathematizo.

r Heb. 9. 5. l. Animaduertendum tri sacerdotis quia vetus Scriptura diuina habet Symbola, & ex his assumptis noua Cherubim gloriæ abum brantia propitiatorum. Sancta Synodus dixit, Rectè domine, ita est veritas.

A companie of very wise men, that could not see that the new Testament no otherwise speaketh of the Cherubims then as of a matter pertaining to the old, and therefore what should hence be gathered for auouching images in the new? Tharasmus goeth yet further, If the old Testament had Cherubims covering the mercie-seate, we also will haue the image of Christ and his ho'y mother, and the Saints so ouershadow our altars. What is a gentle man but his pleasure? We will haue: and is it not a stout reason that because Moses set vp two Cherubims in the tabernacle out of all mens sight saue the high Priests once a yeare, and which wee do not find that euer any man did worship, therefore wee should set vp the images of Christ and of dead men for all men to looke vpon, and that they may fall downe before them and worship them? They are soone weary of Scriptures, and to the Fathers they go; they bring out of Chrysostom that the people much delighted and affected to haue the picture of Meletius: and that he himselve was greatly in loue with a picture describing an Angell destroying an armie of barbarous people: they alledge that Gregory Nyssene and Cyryll say that they had seene exquisite pictures of Abraham offering vp his sonne Isaac: that Gregory Nazianzene in certaine verses setteth foorth, that a harlot being by a yong man wonne to come vnto him for practise of filthylust, comming to the doore and seeing the picture of Polemon the Philosopher, went backe as it were ashamed, and left that filthynesse vndone: that Antipater the Bishop of Bostria maketh mention that the woman cured of the issue of bloud set vp an image of Christ: that Asterius mentioneth an image describing the suffering of Euphemia the martyr: all which being admitted for true, yet what is there herein for the worshipping of images? I may not here omit the collection of Theodosius the Bishop of Amorium, which he offereth to the Councell after the allegation of all these things: The holy Apostle thus teacheth vs, saith he, Whatsoever things were written before, were written for our learning: therefore sacred images and pictures both of solide worke & drawne in colours, are set vp for our learning, zeale, and figure, that wee being like vnto them may yeeld the like fight with God, that he may place vs in the same state and portion wherein they haue bene, and make vs fellow-heires of his heauenly kingdome. Was not here a man of a quicke nose and a very sharpe sent, that could smell Images in those words of the Apostle? yea et si uetus Scriptura habuit Cherubim obumbrata propitiarium, et nos quoque imagines Iesu Christi et sanctae Deiparae, sanctorumque habebimus obumbrantes altaria.

in Diuinus Apostolus sic docet, Quae cumque praescripta uisus, &c. Ipsa igitur sacrae imagines & picturae tum multorum operibus tum colorum mater. a delictis namque nostris doctrinam zelum & typhum eriguntur & pictae sunt ut et nos illis conformes, idem certamen apud Deum exhibeamus, &c.

hee would haue vs also like to the Images (for so his woordes sound) that so it may be verified of vs which the Prophet saith, ^x They that make them are like unto them, and so are all they that putte their trust in them. Well, from thence they go to miracles, that in Cæsarea Palestina the reliques of Anastafius being to bee brought thither, a certaine woman denied beforehand to worship them. She is thereupon stricken in her loines with intollerable torture and paine, so continuing for the space of foure dayes, Which being ended, in the euening Anastafius standeth by her, willeth her to goe to the church & there to beg of him to make intercession for her that she might be made whole. As she came neare to the church, beholding the image of Anastafius, shee cast her selfe downe before it, and with great lamentation and teares pacified the Martyr, and straight wayes rose vp whole and sound. If this bee not true, the deuill is a verie knaue and as little to be trusted now as euer he was. The next is reported vnder the name of Athanasius, albeit it is storied by Sigebert, as before I haue noted, as a thing done foure hundred yeares after the death of Athanasius. But these men were their craftsmasters, they knewe well that great lies are not easily beleueed but vpon the credite of great names. A Jew forsooth in Beryth hired a house where a Christian had dwelt, who after he had bene there abiding, vpon a time inuited certaine other Iewes his countrimen to dinner: as they fate at table, one of them lifting vp his eyes spied there an image of Christ: a wonderfull matter, that the good man of the house all this while could neuer see it. Well, they raile at him for hauing such an Image, they complaine of him to their Elders and chiefe Priestes, they excommunicate him, they take the Image from thence: they remember what villanie and despight their fathers hadde done to Christ, and the like they doe to the image: at length they cause one to thrust it in the side with a speare and forthwith streames of bloud and water issued out, insomuch that a whole pail or waterpot was filled with it, and therewith all manner of sicke persons that came thither were cured, so as that the Iewes hereat were greatly amazed, and hereby conuerted. Afterwardes the Bishop of the place beeing greatly in doubt what to doe with all this bloud and water, at length tooke diuers glasse bottels and sent portions thereof about the worlde into Asia. Europe and Africa: onely it seemeth there was some default in the messengers, of whome there hath

x Psal. 115. 8.

beene no newes vntill this day, by reason whereof wee reade not of any processions or solemnities vsed abroade for the receiuing and entertaining of this wooden blood, nor any miracles done by it in any of those places to which it was sent, otherwise wee shoulde wonder that it should bee dried vp and no newes now to bee heard of it. May wee not say of them that receiued the se monstrous fables, that y God hadde sent them strong delusion that they should beleue lies? But heere Tharasmus very vnwarily tooke a course to marre the miracle-market, and did enough to put his fellowes from the telling of many wonders of their images, but that they had good stomackes and not easily ouercome with any quaueme.² Some man will say, saith he, why are no miracles done by our Images? To whom let vs answer wh the Apostle, Miracles are not for them that beleue, but for them that are in unbeleefe. They who thus handled that image, were infidels, and therefore a signe was giuen them of God by the image. Tharasmus knew well enough that there were no miracles done by their Images, but yet this could not stop the mouthes of them that came thither prepared to tell lies. Therefore anone out they come with such other like tales of blood issuing out of the Images and reliques of Martyrs, of a man molested and vexed by the deuill, with whom the deuill conditioned to trouble him no more, so that hee would giue ouer worshipping the image of our Ladie: of a man cured of a fistula in his thigh by praying to the Images of Cosmas and Damianus, the same Saints comming to him that night and our Ladie in the middest, saying to them, See: here is th: man, helpe him forthwith: of another who hauing the pictures of Cosmas and Damianus in waxe, could therewith cure the tooth-ach or anie other paynes: of another who beeing sodainly taken with an extreame sickenesse and paine, applied to the place where he was pained the image of Christ, and was by and by restored: of a Goldsmith, who at the request of Neanias made a crosse, vpon which when it was set vppe, there became miraculously wrought three pictures, and ouer them three names written in Hebrew, Emmanuel in the middest, and on the two sides Michael and Gabriel: of a man troubled with a cruell sore, who being brought into the Church and set vnder the image of Christ, there dropped thence a deaw into his fore, where-with hee was healed forthwith: of an image of our Ladie in Zozopolis, from the hande whereof dropped oyntmentes for the curing

y 2. Theff. 2.

v. Sed quispiam dixerit. Quomobrem miracula a nostris maginibus non eduntur? Cui sane ita sit cum A postulo responsum Miraculorum cre dentibus data sunt, sed illi qui in cre dultate versantur Hi autem qui ima ginem ita tractabat erant infidels: qua de causa signum il li datum est a Deo per imaginem.

of diseases. Thus there were present there that knewe more then Tharafius did : hee knewe no miracles done by Images but onely to Infidels, but they knewe them very common to Christians also. Amidst these and many other such grosse fooleries, they alleadge some names of the auncient Fathers, either counterfeitly, as that of Basil mentioned before by Adrian, or impertinently, as of Athanasius and Basil speaking of Images ciuilly and hystorically vsed, but not saying a worde for their worshipping of images. Of a later generation they bring first Leontius a Bilhop of Naples, who they say was about the time of Mauricius the Emperour, but they say it vntruely, as appeareth for that hee is so pregnant for Image-worshippe, which by Gregorie Magnus was in the time of Mauricius so expressely contradicted. This Leontius to serue his turne, openly falsifieth and belyeth the Scriptures, affirming that Solomon in the building of the Temple set vppe in it the Images of men, and that Ezechiel in the patterne that was giuen him for redifying the same, was likewise willed so to doe, which appeareth by the text it selfe to bee altogether vntrue. There was pictures of Cherubims, and Palme trees, and Lions, and Buls, and flowers for ornament of the workes, as before was said, but neuer was there in the Temple scene the Image of a manne, saue what by Idolaters was brought in. The rest of his discourse serueth to shew the Iew, in what manner and meaning they worshipped images, beefore hee hath shewed him that it is lawfull to worship them at all. They bring further the woordes of one Anastasius, putting a difference betwixt adoration and latria, making the former common to menne and Angels, the other peculiar to GOD onely : but yet not affirming anie thing of either of them to beelong to Images. To supplie that, they bring an Epistle of Gregorie the thirde to Germanus, who some threescore yeares before hadde beene Patriarch of Constantinople, and was condemned in the former Councell there holden, and three Epistles of the same Germanus himselfe, all by the like argumentes and with the same Sophistric handling this cause of Images, and vnder pretence of vsing them for admonition and remembrance, inferring the worship of them. Which done, vpon these goodly groundes they come for conclusion of that session to pronounce their anathematismes against all them that denie Images to be worshipped.

In the fifth session they follow the same course. First they bring in authorities nothing to the purpose, as of Cirill, noting it as an impietie in Nabuchodonosor that hee tooke away the Cherubims out of the temple of Ierusalem, and of Simeon the Eremit, complaining to the Emperor Iustinus the yonger concerning the Samaritans spoiling a Church, and with indignitie defacing the Images that were found in it, which, what doe they appertaine to the worshipping of Images? Then they bring in testimonies of no authoritie, the parties being of latter time and interested in this quarrell, as of one Iohn Bishop of Thessalonica, taking vpon him to satisfie a Pagan, and of Leontius before spoken of answering the Iew concerning the meaning of their worshipping of Images, without any prooffe that it is lawfull so to doe. Indeede plaine it is that the worshipping of Images was a scandall and barre both to the Pagans and Iewes to hinder them from admitting the Christian faith. They could not disswade the idolatrie of the Pagans, beecause they themselues changing the persons did the like. They could not perswade the Iewes of the truth of Christian religion, beecause they knewe well that to worshippe an image is a thing condemned by Gods commaundement. But from thence they proceed to caluminate them that impugned images, first for citing Apocryphal writings, as the Journals of the Apostles, and of menne vnfound in the faith, as Eusebius: and secondly for taking part with euil disposed men, as Xenaius and Seuerus, as if it should bee any hinderance to the truth that sometimes vpon occasion euill men become defenders thereof: and thirdly for defacing such booke as hadde bene not long beefore written for defence of such idolatrie, wherein whatsoeuer they did, they did it by iust grieuance and caution against the increas and growth of this abomination. Nowe this beeing but a sinister and indirect course, backe they goe againe to their trumpe, that is, to miracles, and as if it had bene some perfume to sweeten the roome, they tell againe the tale of the deuill promising not to trouble a manne if hee would forbear to worshippe the image of our Ladie: another of a woman who being greatly grieued at the charges that she had bene at in the digging of a well and could get no water, sawe one come to her in her sleepe, who willed her to get the image of one Theodosius an Abbot, which being let downe into the well, the water flowed abundantly; another of an Eremit, who beeing sometimes to goe from his caue, would pray to the image of our Ladie that his candle might continue burning till his comming againe, and that going sometimes for two or three moneths, sometimes for five or fixe moneths, he found it burning in the same sort as he left it. No maruell if they could scant hold at the hearing of these stories, and therefore they hereupon fall to cursing them that condemned the worshipping of images, and so an end for that time. The sixt action was the reading of an answer formally penned against the actes of the former Councill of Constantinople against Images, the examination whereof, because it would be too long, I leaue to the Reader, though what it is may well bee esteemed by their proceedings hitherto. The seuenth session which is the last, containeth the Synodicall definition of the Councill for Images to bee worshipped, and their subscriptions thereto, with their certificate thereof to the Emperour Constantine and his mother Irene the Emperesse, as also the Bishops of all Churches. Thus thou hast (gentle Reader) a brieft of the comedie of M. Bishops learned Councill, though I confesse I am farre from acting it, to cause thee that mirth that the reading of the Councill it selte would doe. Their speeches are so ridiculous, so vsauoury, so voide of all Christian grauitie and vnderstanding, as that thou wouldest think they al spake but in a dreame, or as being scant sober to aduise of that they say. Albeit there are two things which I wish thee therein obserue: first that they approoue no other Images but onely of Christe incarnate and of the Saints, and do wholly condemne the making of any images of God, as appeareth by the epistles of Germanus, by the speeches of Leontius against the Jew, of John Bishop of Thessalonica against the Pagan, of Constantine the Deacon, the custos rotularum, of the Church of Constantinople in the fourth and fift actions. The second is that they wholly demie to images the worship of latria, which they terme the worshippinge proper to God onely, as appeareth by the epistle of Tharafius to Constantine and Irene in the seuenth act. In both which points the church of Rome hath gone beyond them, not doubting to make images of God the Father in the likenesse of an old manne, as M. Bishop hath beefore acknowledged, and of the holy Ghost in the forme of a Doue, and by the common iudgement of her Diuines hauing affirmed that the worshippinge of latria is to bee giuen to the image of Christe and his crosse, as hath beene beefore shewed, and by practise yielded nolesse to the Images of all the Saintes. Thus haue they exceeded the measure of the idolatrie there decreed, and neuer ceased till the superstitions of the people had in manner fully matched all the abomination of Pagan and heathen men. The Councell being ended, a copie thereof was sent to

Charles the great, who at that time was king of France. Hee hauing receiued it, sent it ouer into this land to haue the iudgement of the Church here concerning the matter of it. What followed, let it appeare by the narration of our old English historian Roger Hovedon recited also by Mathew of Westminster. ^a In the yeare 792. Charles the king of France sent a synodical booke into Brittain, which had bene directed to him from Constantinople, in which booke (alas for woe) many thinges were found inconuenient and contrary to the true faith, specially for that by the agreeing assertion of almost all the Easterne Doctores, being no lesse then three hundred Bishops or more, it was decreed that images ought to bee worshipped, which thing the Church of God holdeth altogether accursed. Against which Albinus wrote an Epistle, wonderfully fortified by authoritie of holy Scriptures, and in the name of our Bishops and Nobles carsed the same with the booke to the king of France.

By this wee see what credite M. Bishops Nicene Councell hadde with the auncient Church of this lande, and that hee dooth but play the Sycophants parte in that hee goeth about nowe so highly to commend the same vnto vs, contrary to so notable a iudgement of our forefathers and auncesters so long ago, yea wee see how impudently they lie, in laying that our forefathers from the beginning were of the same religion that the Church of Rome is of now. But that was not all that Charles did: for he caused also a Councell to bee assembled at Franckford in Germanie of the Bishops of Italy, France and Germanie, who with common voyce condemned that Nicene Councell, and plainly declared that the sentence thereof for worshipping of images was contrary to the woorde of God. Abbas Urspergensis speaking of this Franckford Councell, hauing shewed that therein the heresie of Felix was condemned, who helde that Christe was but by adoption the Sonne of GOD, addeth further,

^b The Synod also which a few yeares before was assembled at Constantinople (for there it was first begun) under Irene and Constantine, and by them called the seventh, and an vniuersall or generall Councell, was by them all reiecte'd as voyde, that it should neither be called the seventh

^a Roger Hoved. Anial. part. 1. ann 792. Carolus rex Francorum misit Synodalem librum ad Britanniam sibi à Constantinopoli directum, in quo libere heu probdalar) multa inconuenientia & vera si dete contraria reperiebatur: maxime quod pene omnium Orientalium doctorum non minus quam trecentorum vel eo amplius Episcoporum unanimi assertione confirmatum fuerit, imagines adorari debere, quod omnino Ecclesia Dei execratur. Contra quod scripsit Albinus episcopus ex autoritate diuinarum scripturarum mirabiliter affirmatum: illamque eodem libro ex persona Episcoporum ac Principum nostrorum regi Francorum attulit. Idem habetur apud Mat Westmonasteriensium.

^b Abb. Ursperg. Chron. anno 791. Synodus etiam quae ante paucos annos in Constantinopoli congregata sub Irene & Constantino filio eius septima & vniuersalis appellata est, ut nec septima nec aliquid diceretur quasi supernacua ab omnibus abdicata est.

nor any thing else. So saith Regino also concerning the same councill, The false Synod of the Greekes which they had caused for the worshipping of Images, was reiected by the Bishops there. The acts of this councill were published in a booke vnder the name of Charles himselfe, as hath bene before said, and a copy thereof was sent to Adrian the Bishop of Rome, who to the Nicene coucell had bin one of the great maisters for the worshipping of Images. Hee poore man playing the parte of an Abbreniator, taking out of the booke what he list, and as hee list, taketh vpon him to write an answer to it, some parte whereof is still to be teene adioyned to that Nicene Council, but it is so pitifull an answer, as may well giue vs to vnderstand what is to bee thought of the whole matter. Syrus the Friar sawe so much very well, but he handsomely to colour the matter saith: d Whilest commonly to the vnskilfull Reader hee may seeme not fully enough to answer his aduersaries, hee as it were beeing about another matter scourgeth them notably. This was a Friarly deuice, to make the vnskilfull belecue that there are some deep mysteries in Adrians words which euery man cannot see, whereas any wise man may see that his answers are most putide and shamefull, and verie vnfitting indeede, as hee saith, to those things which he would seeme to answer. Therefore in fine M. Bishops defence of his image-idolatric is such as can giue no wise man any iust satisfaction for the approuing of it.

To Doctor Bishop.

Thus M. Bishop, I haue taken paines to giue the Reader a tast of the marrow, and a feeling of the pith of your many large volumes. Wherein if my opinion deceue mee not, hee will finde by tast so little sweetnes, and by feeling so little strength, as that hee will take you either for a silly and iniudicious man, who are your selfe abused; or for a wilfull and wicked cosiner, that seeke to abuse others with such base and deceitfull stufte. To touch the reputatiō of your iudgement and learning, I know should be as the handling of a sore, very greiuous to your selfe, and offensive to your fellowes and seduced followers, whom you haue wonne I know not by what means so greatly to admire you. Therefore I will not heere question your learning, let it be what it is thought to be: it can be no preiudice to the truth, onely I exhort you to take heed that you bee not found with that learning that you haue to fight wilfully against God. You haue

e Chron. Regino. lib. 3. anno. 794. Pseudo synodus Gracorum quare pro adorandu ima ginibus fecerant a pontificibus reiecta est.

 Conci. rom. 3. e. dist. surij. appen. Nicen. concil. 2.*

d Syrus ibid. Lor. Flori. Plerunq. dum non satū ap te aduersarij respondere imperito. is Flori. videri potest, eos tanquam aliud agens egrogis flagellat.

haue giuen shrewd tokens in sundry places of your booke, of a very malicious and wicked hearte, sometimes wittingly and purposely calumniating your aduersarie by false imputations of saying what hee saith not, sometimes guilefully concealing for your aduantage many things which he doth say: dissembling allegations and authorities which you could not answer, and answering other some without euer looking what the authors say. I know the blinde eateth many a fly, and they who know nothing to the contrary haue taken your arguments and answers for pregnant and very sure, and your booke hath gone for a great oracle amongst them. But surely hee that aduisedly weigheth the course and manner thereof, will easily imagine that in very many places you hadde one within you to tell you that you did but patch, and palter, and shift, and desperatly shut your eyes against the light that most cleerely shined vnto you. It may doubtlesse be said of you which S. Austin confesseth of himselfe whilest hee was intangled with the heresie of the Manichees, that you ^e approve the things which you haue bene taught for true, not because you know, but because you wish them so to be. Beware M. Bishop, of doing any thing presumptuously in this behalfe. Remember him that said, ^f It is hard for thee to kicke against the prickes. By beating your selfe against the rocke, you doe but harme your selfe: the rocke shall neuer be remoued. Giue glorie to God by acknowledging the trueth of God, the breath whereof hath already blowne downe the towers of Babel: the sound whereof as of the Lordes trumpet hath cast downe the walles of Iericho, and there is a curse laied vpon him that buildeth them vp againe. ^g It is the glory of vanitie, as S. Austine saith, not to yeeld to any force of truth. But the glory of vanity is but vaine glory, and to take a pride in being constant or rather froward in error, is the high way to confusion and shame. You may thinke it to be a blot of your credite beeing a Doctor of diuinitie to yeeld that you haue bene deceiued all this while, but it is no blot, M. Bishop, to confesse that degrees and learning are no priuledge against error. You haue bene content though with some impeachment, to yeeld to the Iesuites, but it shall be no impeachment to you to yeeld to Iesus, whose name you with others by your Proctours haue told vs that that hypocriticall vermine doth singularly abuse to the cloaking and colouring of much falsehoode and villany. Take experience thereof in your selfe. Whilest you haue

August. de duob. animab. cont. Manich. Accidit ut quicquid dicerent miris quibusdam modis non quia sciebam sed quia optabam verum esse pro vero approbarem.
f ARS 26.14.

August. de civ. dei. lib. 6. cap. 1.
Esperatur gloria vanitatis nulli cedere viribus veritatis.

haue relied vpon Bellarmino the chiefe captaine of them, you see how many lies and false tales you haue deliuered vpon his woorde, both generally through your whole booke, and specially in your Epistle to the king. Will you be any longer led by them who thus grossly do abuse you? Returne M. Bishop, and bee a meanes for others to returne out of the bondage of ^h the man of sinne, ⁱ out of the snare of the deuill of whom they are holden to doe his will. Submit your selfe to that truth which you see, I say you see, that you are not able to resist. I speake not, I confesse, as vpon any opinion or hope that I haue to preuaile with you. I know a dry sticke neuer bendeth till it breake, and I feare you are more dry then that wee may looke for any bending of you. I pray God I may haue occasion to say that it was but a false feare, but if not, yet these woordes of mine shall serue hereafter for witness betwixt God and you, and therefore for h 2. Thest 2.

i 2. Tim. 2.

conclusion I say to you as Cyprian said to Florentius:^k You haue my writings and I haue yours: at the day of iudgement both shall be recited before the tribunall seate of Christ.

^k Cyprian lib. 4. epist. 9. Habebis litteras meas et ego tuas: in die iudicij vtrumq; ante tribunal Christi recitabitur.

FINIS.

The first part of the book is devoted to a general history of the world, from the beginning of time to the present day. It is written in a simple and plain style, and is intended for the use of schools and families. The author has endeavored to make it as interesting and useful as possible. It contains a great deal of valuable information, and is well adapted to the purpose for which it was written. The second part of the book is a history of the United States, from the first settlement to the present day. It is written in the same simple and plain style, and is intended for the use of schools and families. It contains a great deal of valuable information, and is well adapted to the purpose for which it was written.

THE AUTHOR HAS BEEN ASSISTED BY THE EDITOR
 OF
 THE WORKS OF
 THE AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMONS
 AND
 THE AMERICAN BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS
 IN
 THE YEAR
 1820

THE END

FINIS

ath. 19. 17. p. 279.

