PREFACE.

A modern Universal Exposition well might be called an encyclopedia of society, as it contains, in highly specialized array, society's words and works. It is a collection of the wisdom and achievements of the world, brought together for the inspection of the world—for examination and study by its experts. In constitutes a compact, classified, indexed compendium, available for ready reference, of the achievements and ideas of society, in all phases of its activities, extending to the most material as well as to the most refined.

The Catalogue of such a Universal Exposition is, therefore, perhaps the most comprehensive and representative contemporary record of the progress and condition of the human race that may be devised. It is a succinct and authentic record of the exhibits of the Exposition, which are the evidence of the capacity and performance in all lines, intellectual, social and industrial, of all of the people of the world. The value of such a document and its significance, socially and commercially, are incalculable. It is an epitome of the capacity and promise of mankind, while being at the same time a roll of honor, a certified register of those individuals and institutions which are taking active part in the life of the world to-day.

Director of Exhibits.
INTRODUCTION.

By Milan H. Hulbert, Chief.

The Department of Manufactures is so comprehensive in scope that two immense palaces are required to house the products coming under its classification. They are the Palace of Varied Industries and the Palace of Manufactures. Situated respectively to the right and left of the Great Basin, these two immense palaces form an important part of the main picture of the Exposition.

The Palace of Varied Industries contains exhibits of all those goods made to please the eye; while the Palace of Manufactures, on the other hand, contains exhibits of goods of a purely utilitarian nature. Each of these palaces is 1200 feet long and 525 feet wide, the total cost of the two approximating $1,500,000. A unique feature of their construction is a court, in the center of each, open to the sky, which adds much to lighting and ventilating the buildings.

The enormous size of the buildings and the thousands of people passing through, suggest a small city, and, following the practice in cities, the aisles have been laid out like streets, each having its name, and each exhibit its number.

The enthusiastic co-operation of the manufacturers of the United States and the unprecedented support of the foreign governments of the world have accomplished for the Department of Manufactures of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition a result far above the most sanguine expectations even of the officials most intimately connected with the work. This liberal treatment is due to several reasons other than the campaign of educational exposition methods carried on for the last three years by the Department itself with the 512,000 manufacturers composing what may be termed its clients.

The most important reason is the higher appreciation in the last few years of the value of ocular impression in advertising as compared to written description, and therefore an increased attention given to the proper display of any merchandise to which it is desired to attract attention. At the time of the Chicago Exposition it was generally considered sufficient if goods were installed in a manner answering commercial necessities, but experience since has taught that the best wares improperly displayed will not gain attention, and it is not now uncommon for the large retail stores to have high-salaried men in charge of window displays and arrangements of wares.

This attention to displaying artistically even the most commonplace goods has given the Department of Manufactures such a well-balanced installation that all parts of the two palaces are equally interesting. It has also led to the abolition of the "main aisle," as all the aisles in the two palaces are of equal width and have equal value to the sightseer.

There are three great divisions of the merchandise in the two palaces: The Textiles Section, containing textiles, tissues, clothing, fancy work, etc.; the Hardware Section, containing hardware, glass, heating and cooking apparatus, modern plumbing, lighting appliances, cutlery and sporting goods, and the Section of Industrial Art, including all those objects made to please the eye, such as art pottery, art glass, art jewelry, bronzes, silverware, precious stones, etc.

Unlike previous expositions, the machinery for producing the goods is shown in the same section with the goods themselves, and throughout both palaces the process of manufacture is demonstrated by machinery in actual operation. Hides are converted from the raw material to the finished article, then cut up and made into shoes by a model factory producing three hundred pairs of shoes a day; machinery is in operation making silks, cottons and woolens, while other machines in the same section are turning out hats, stockings, handkerchiefs, corsets, suspenders, gloves, hammocks, Indian blankets and numerous other articles. High speed envelope machines, a model paper box factory, blank book manufacturing, and the latest type of wire-screen weaving machines are seen in operation. These are supplemented by many moving displays, such as a large wind mill, made of thousands of hatchets, with revolving sails. House cleaning is done by the pneumatic process without moving the carpets and hangings from their places.

In the Industrial Art division the visitor is impressed with the advance made in the last ten years in the manufacture of artistic merchandise. Until recently, strictly speaking, we have been a commercial nation working almost wholly for the useful and economical, but the displays made in art silverware, art pottery, glass, bronzes, jewelry, china, furniture, interior decorations, tapestries, (examples of which are shown surpassing anything that has ever been done abroad), will convince the public that there is no more necessity of going to Europe now for the artistic in merchandise than there is for plate glass, silks, and the thousand other commodities which are made as satisfactorily in the United States as anywhere in the world.

In this Industrial Art Section such operative exhibits are found as the manufacture of imitation diamonds, the grinding, polishing and setting of turquoise, and the Indian expert making hammered silverware in his inimitable way.

In addition to an extensive display of clocks in the Varied Industries Palace, one of the most novel features of the Exposition is the floral clock which has been built on Agricultural Hill by the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Manufactures furnished the mechanism for this clock. It consists of a dial 100 feet in diameter, the numerals on which are approximately 15 feet high, and made entirely of flowers. At the top of the dial a small house has been built to contain the mechanism, and a mammoth hour glass is exposed to view, and on the top of this house there is a 5,000 pound bell, whose tones can be heard throughout the grounds. This bell strikes the hour and half hour, and upon the first stroke of each hour, the immense hour glass turns and the sand runs back. At the same time the doors of the house spring open, exposing the mechanism which controls the striking and operates the dial, and they close immediately upon the last stroke of the bell. At night the clock is brilliantly illuminated, about 1,000 lamps being used for this purpose.

The Department of Manufactures is also especially noted for its representative foreign exhibits. In this respect it far surpasses the great exhibit in the Palace of Industries at the Paris Exposition in 1900.

The Paris Palace of Industries was 1200 feet long and 160 feet wide, less than half the size of either one of the palaces devoted to similar exhibits at the Universal Exposition of 1904. Its contents were so well installed and displayed, and of such attractive interest, that this section proved the most popular of the entire Paris Exposition. The nations whose exhibits stood out prominently were France, England, Germany, Italy, Austria and Japan. Each of these nations has installed an exhibit of its special products of manufacture for the Universal Exposition at St. Louis, and in addition there are displays from Russia, Belgium, Hungary, Holland, Denmark, India, Persia, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Mexico, Siam, Cuba and Argentine. Germany, whose exhibit at Paris was by far the best display of Industrial Arts that nation has ever made, has in the Palace of Varied Industries at St. Louis a much more extensive and elaborate exhibit. France has installed in the Palace of Manufactures the most important and representative display that country has ever made in a foreign land, and the same can be said of all the nations participating in this great Exposition.
How to Locate an Exhibit in the Palace of Varied Industries or Manufactures.

Consultation with the Ground Plans of the Varied Industries or Manufactures Palaces on the preceding page, will show you that by an orderly arrangement of the blocks and aisles, and the method of numbering, it is quite easy to locate an exhibitor.

All the blocks are numbered, and above each block, a large white and blue sign is hung, giving the number. The streets running north and south are numbered, while those running east and west, are lettered.

If an exhibitor is located in block 45-A, street B-6, you can at once find this location by consulting the Ground Plans and finding block 45-A, and the exhibitor is at the intersection of B and 6 aisles. Foreign Countries are located by the block numbers only. Particular location of individual foreign exhibitors is not given. Most of the foreign exhibits are arranged by groups in such a manner as to make it possible to locate them easy.
