PREFACE.

A DICTIONARY, Hindūstānī and English, accompanied by a reverse part, English and Hindūstānī, has hitherto been a desideratum in this country. It must be obvious to every one that the student of a foreign language, desirous of speaking and writing, as well as reading it, should have not only the words of such foreign language explained in his own, but also the words of his own tongue rendered into that foreign language; and that any Dictionary confined merely to one department is essentially defective.

Thirty years' experience in teaching the Hindūstānī language has convinced me that this deficiency, added to the exorbitant prices charged for Hindūstānī Dictionaries, has greatly impeded learners. I have therefore endeavoured to remove this impediment by compiling a Dictionary of the principal colloquial language of India at once copious, portable, and of a moderate price. These objects have been attained by using a small but clear and distinct letter-press; by employing the Roman character wherever it answered the purpose better than the Oriental; and by excluding every thing not practically useful. By these means I have been enabled in the following work to comprise in a single volume, of convenient dimensions, both parts of a complete Hindūstānī and Hindī Dictionary, including, at the same time, not only more words, but more information really useful to the student, than will be found in any Dictionary of the language hitherto published. ✓

“It is proper that I should here give a brief account of the sources to which I am indebted for the materials of this Dictionary, and of the mode in which I have compiled both its parts. The basis of the first part is the ‘Dictionary, Hindoostance and English,’ in 2 vols. 4to., published by William Hunter, M.D., Calcutta, 1808. Upon this foundation I have superadded at least fifteen thousand words and phrases from the following sources: 1st. A vast number of useful words, both Urdū and Hindī, from the eccentric, but copious vocabulary appended to Dr. Gilchrist’s ‘Hindee Moral Preceptor,’ 8vo. London, 1821. 2ndly, All the useful words and phrases occurring in Gladwin’s ‘Dictionary of Mahomedan Law and Bengal Revenue Terms,’ 4to., Calcutta, 1797. 3rdly, A great number of new words from ‘A Glossary of Indian Terms,’ 8vo., Agra, 1845, by H. M. Elliot, Esq., Bengal Civil Service. 4thly, Many Persian and Arabic words (which occur in Hindūstānī), from Professor Johnson’s last edition of Richardson’s ‘Persian and Arabic Dictionary.’ 5thly, Several thousands of Hindī words from Dr. Adam’s ‘Hindī Dictionary,’ 2nd edition, 8vo., Calcutta. 6thly, From the Vocabulary accompanying the ‘Prem Sājar,’ 4to., Calcutta, 1825, I have extracted all such words as were not found in Hunter’s Dictionary.

7thly, From Thompson's 'Hindī and English Dictionary,' royal 8vo., Delhi, 1846, I have culled many pure Hindī or Sanskrit words not to be found in any of the sources above mentioned. 8thly, I have inserted in their proper places all the words occurring in the Appendix to the 'Dukhnee Unwari Soheilee,' printed at Madras, 1824; also many words from the 'Qanoon e islam,' by Dr. Herklots, London, 1832. To the materials collected from all the foregoing sources I have added numerous words, phrases, and significations that I have met with in the course of my experience in teaching the language.*

In preparing this Second Edition, neither toil nor expense has been spared on the part of the author and publishers, in order to render it the most complete work of the kind ever offered to the public. The improvements and enlargements now effected are the following—

First. All the words contained in the Hindī Dictionaries of Dr. Adam and Mr. Thomson have, in this edition, been incorporated each in its proper place. By this means the student is now enabled, for the first time, to read by the aid of one single Dictionary, any production that may fall in his way, whether Urdu or Hindī.

Secondly. All Sanskrit and Hindī words are given both in the Persian and Devanāgarī characters; while words from the Arabic and Persian, together with those peculiar to the Dakhan, are given in the Persian character only. This enables the student at a glance to distinguish the words which are purely Indian or Hindū, from those which are Exotic or Musalmān.

Thirdly. I have inserted all the words contained in the Persian text of the Gulistān of Sa'dī, so as to enable the learner, by the aid of my Persian Grammar and this Dictionary alone, to qualify himself for passing the requisite examination in Persian.

Fourthly. To my friend and quondam pupil, Robert B. M. Binning, Esq., of the Madras Civil Service, I am indebted for numerous words and phrases peculiar to the corrupt dialect of the Dakhan, or South India; besides many interesting explanations and definitions of words purely Hindūstānī, that have never before appeared in any Dictionary of the language. These, when of some length, I have, in justice to Mr. Binning, marked with his name or initials; and I feel both pride and pleasure in thus publicly acknowledging how much I have been benefited by that gentleman's kind and disinterested services. At his own request an interleaved copy of the first edition was, some years ago, forwarded to him in India; and the result has been that the same was in due time returned to me, well filled with sound and valuable information.

Fifthly. I have also to express my sincere thanks to Dr. Charles Rieu, of the British Museum, for his able and hearty co-operation throughout, both in preparing the work for the press, and also in correcting the proof sheets as they were issued in the course of printing. Dr. Rieu, with a view to improve, or, more correctly speaking, to complete, his knowledge of the language, has, within the last four or five years, read the following important works; viz. in Urdu—the "Ahlākī Hindī," the "Khīrad-Afroz," the "Gulī Bahāwalī," the "Arā,ishi Mahfil," and the "Ishwānu-ṣ-Ṣafā"; and in Hindī—the "Baitāl Pachīsī," the "Singhāsān Battīsī," and the "Prem Sāgar." He used an interleaved copy of the first edition of this Dictionary; and marked down in its proper place every word not already included in that work, by which means a multitude of words and phrases has been collected that had hitherto escaped the notice of lexicographers, myself among the number. ✓

Lastly. I have to acknowledge my obligations to the valuable work recently published by Professor H. H. Wilson, Librarian to the East-India Company, &c. &c., entitled "A Glossary of Judicial and Revenue Terms, and of useful words occurring in Official Documents relating to the Administration of the Government of British India." From that work I have here inserted all such words as are Arabic, Persian, Hindūstānī, Sanskrit, or Hindī. Many of them never before appeared in any Dictionary, and a vast number of others may be met with in Dictionaries that have not attached to them the significations they bear in official documents. All such significations I have carefully added where they were wanted; and when the explanations were too long for insertion in full, I have referred the student to Professor Wilson's work for further information.

I have been enabled to save a vast deal of space by making a free and legitimate use of the Roman character, according to a fixed system—that of Sir William Jones. The economy of this plan will be seen at once by a reference to the words آنکھ ānhk, "the eye;" دل dil, "the heart;" گل gul, "a rose," or to the numerous compounds under the particles بی be, نā, and لā, &c.; where I have, in one column, given as much matter as the great quarto Dictionaries furnish in four or five. This has been effected by rejecting the Oriental type, which has enabled me to use a much smaller Roman type after the first line of every article. The use of the Roman character in all phrases and compounds, &c. originating from the leading word, as, for example, under آنکھ ānhk, &c., is just as unerring as if the Persian and Devanāgarī characters accompanied it throughout. Every Roman letter has its corresponding symbol in either of the Oriental characters; hence there can be no difficulty or uncertainty in converting any word written in the former into either of the latter. If the reader has the least doubt on this score, he has merely to cast his eye over the following tables.

Ist. A Table shewing the correspondence of the vowels in the Persian, Roman, and Devanāgarī characters:—

| VOWELS. | | | INITIAL. | | | NON-INITIAL. | | |
|----------|--------|-------------|----------|--------|-------------|--------------|--------|-------------|
| Persian. | Roman. | Devanāgarī. | Persian. | Roman. | Devanāgarī. | Persian. | Roman. | Devanāgarī. |
| ا | a | अ | اب | ab | अब | بد | bad | बद |
| اِ | i | इ | اس | is | इस | دن | din | दिन |
| اُ | u | उ | اُس | us | उस | بُت | but | बुत |
| آ | ā | आ | آس | ās | आस | بَات | bāt | बात |
| او | o | ओ | اوک | ok | ओक | سو | so | सो |
| اُو | u | ऊ | اُود | ūd | ऊद | تُو | tū | तू |
| اَو | au | औ | اَوْر | aur | और | نَو | nau | नौ |
| اي | e | ए | ايک | ek | एक | بي | be | बे |
| ايِ | i | ई | ايکھ | ikh | ईख | سي | sī | सी |
| ايِ | ai | ऐ | ايسا | aisā | ऐसा | هي | hai | है |

Let it be remembered, that in all Oriental words a is to be sounded short, as in "happy," "America;"—i, short, as in "fit," "fin;"—u, short, as in "put," "push;"—ā, long, as in "war," "water;"—o, long, as in "pole," "mole;"—ū, long, as in "rule;"—au, like our ou in "sound," or the German au in "haus," a house;—e, like our ea in "bear," or the French é in ·dé, only longer in quantity;—ī, long, as in the words "police," "machine;" and—ai, like our i in fire," "fine," or the German ai in "Kaiser," a Cæsar or emperor. The anomalous Sanskrit vowel ऋ ṛi is expressed in the Persian character merely by ر (re with a hasra) and in the Roman character by ri, sounded as ri in "rill," "rip," &c. The Arabic termination ـى is represented in the Roman character by a or ā, according as its sound is short or long.

2ndly, A Table shewing the agreement of the consonants, Persian, Roman, and Devanāgarī—

CONSONANTS.

| Persian. | Roman. | Devanāgarī. | Persian. | Roman. | Devanāgarī. | Persian. | Roman. | Devanāgarī. |
|----------|--------|-------------|----------|--------|-------------|----------|--------|-------------|
| ب | b | ब | د | d | द | ظ | z | ज |

| پ | p | प | د | d | ड | غ | gh | ग |
| په | ph | फ | ده | dh | ढ | ف | f | फ |
| ت | t | त | ذ | z | ज | ق | k | क |

| چه | chh | छ | ص | s | स | و | w | व |
| ح | h | ह | ض | z | ज | ه | h | ह |
| خ | kh | ख | ط | t | त | ي | y | य |

The Arabic consonant ع is represented in the Roman character by an apostrophe, thus, بعد ba'd. This can never lead into error, as the apostrophe is never used (in the Oriental words) for any other purpose. The symbol hamza of the Persian character is indicated by a similar mark (,) at the bottom of the line, and the imperceptible h at the end of Persian words is represented by the short vowel a, as may be seen in the word فایده fā,ida "gain or advantage." The nasal sound of the letter ن is indicated in the Roman character by i, and in Devanāgarī by the mark ' above the letter with which it is connected: thus, وہاں wahān وہاں "there;" ہانسنہا hānsnā ہانسنہا "to laugh." The terminations an, in, un, denote the Arabic nūnation, and the w denotes the Persian, which in some words is not sounded, as in کھواہ khvāh, خواہ. Lastly, the u indicates the short sound of u in a few Persian words, as خود khud.

3rd. A Table for converting the Devanāgarī characters into the corresponding Persian and Roman characters:—

3rd.—VOWELS FOLLOWING A CONSONANT.

| | | | | | |
|-------|-----|------|-----|------|------|
| बद | बाद | बिद | बीद | बुद | बूद |
| بد | باد | بد | بيد | بود | بُود |
| bad | bād | bid | bid | bud | būd |
| बृद | बेद | बैद | बोद | बौद | बः |
| ब्रुद | बैद | बैद | बुद | बुद | به |
| bṛid | bed | baid | bod | baud | ba |

It may be observed, that the Devanāgarī letter ङ has sometimes the sound of a cerebral r; in which case it is marked with a dot beneath, thus ङ̣, and corresponds with ر in the Persian character; as, बड़ा barā, "great," بڑا; and in like manner ङ̣ dh with a dot beneath becomes rh, as in बुढ़ाप "old age," بڑھاپا burhāpā. The various nasals of the Devanāgarī are represented in the Persian character by the letter ن, which will be found sufficient for all useful purposes. The letter ش is generally represented by ش; but sometimes by س; and the letter ك is more frequently ك than ش. The compound كش is generally represented by كش or كش, more rarely by كش, its proper sound. The compound كشي is represented by كشي; as, آگيا āgyā (ājnā), آگيا: its real sound is that of gn in the French words champagne, ligne, &c.

It appears, then, that the Devanāgarī alphabet may be represented with tolerable exactness in the Persian character; but the converse does not hold, as the Persi-Arabic alphabet has fourteen letters which have no exact counterpart in the Devanāgarī. The plan adopted in this case is to represent the letters in question by such Nāgarī letters as approximate nearest to them in sound, which in printed books are generally distinguished with a dot underneath; thus,

ث ح خ ذ ز ژ ص ض ط ظ ع غ ف ق
 क ढ ग ङ &c. ज ढ ज स ज ज ज ख ह ङ

In some printed books, for instance in Dr. Gilchrist's "Hindee Story-teller," an attempt has been made to form distinct Devanāgarī letters for the various forms of the Persian and Arabic z, which, it will be observed, are all represented by ज; but in reality the object is not worth the labour. In the first place, the Hindūs, who alone use the Devanāgarī character, are sparing in the use of Persian or Arabic words, to one or other of which the various forms of the letter z belong; and secondly, such words as they have in the course of centuries adopted have become naturalized, or rather corrupted, so as to suit the elements of the Nāgarī; thus, حاضري is generally written and sounded हाजिरी hājirī. The letter ع is generally represented in Nāgarī by employing the vowel with which it is connected, in the initial form, with a dot under it: as, بعد ba'd; علم 'ilm; عمر 'umr. This method is sufficient for practical use; but it is by no means satisfactory, as may be seen in the monosyllable बाद, which in Persian and Arabic is sounded ba'd (the a uttered from the bottom of the throat); but according to the rules of the Devanāgarī alphabet it makes bā'ād. In fact, the Hindūs seem to view the letter ع as a vowel, and not as a consonant, which it really is.

In the compilation of the Second Part, my principal authority is Dr. Gilchrist's "Dictionary, English and Hindoostanee," 2 vols. 4to. with Appendices, Calcutta, 1798, reprinted, &c. Edinburgh, 1810, in one volume, 4to. The merits of this work have been amply appreciated by Hindūstānī scholars for more than half a century. The first orientalist of the present day speaks of it as "a work of great merit and labour: the collection of Hindūstānī synonyma for every word is singularly full, and peculiarly adapted to a language which, varying in the use of words though not in structure, in every province abounds with synonymous terms, each of local and restricted employment. The whole (edition 1810) is in the Roman character, a singularity in its compilation which alone is indicative of no ordinary industry and perseverance." Such being the case, I have, as a general rule, availed myself of all the words occurring in Dr. Gilchrist's Dictionary, subject, however, to a strict course of correction. In Dr. Gilchrist's early days, the Hindūstānī language was in a manner unformed, and its orthography unsettled: hence, in a multitude of words he gives the long ū (oo) instead of the short u, and vice versa. I have throughout endeavoured to follow as my guides on this head the standard writers of the language, such as Mīr Amman, in the "Bāgh o Bahār;" Ikrām 'Alī, in the "Ikhwānu-s-safa," &c. &c. To the very copious collection furnished by Dr. Gilchrist, I have added several thousands of Persian and Arabic words (known to be used in Urdū) from the "Dictionary, English, Persian, and Arabic," by Dr. Wilkins, London, 1810, 4to. From Adam's "Dictionary, English and Hinduwēe," I have extracted many pure Hindī words which escaped the notice of Dr. Gilchrist. I have also found many useful words and phrases in the "Dictionary, English, Bangālī, and Hindūstānī," of P. S. D'Rozario, Calcutta, 1837, 8vo. Lastly, I have added numerous synonymous and expressive words and phrases which my own experience has supplied.

It will probably be thought that the Second Part of this Dictionary errs on the side of excess; but I have deemed it the safer course to run the risk of inserting a superfluous or even a vulgar word, rather than omit one that could by possibility occur in writing or conversation. It must be recollected that the Hindūstānī is, in more senses than one, a vulgar tongue, and that it abounds in a class of words, for the eschewing of which the great Dr. Johnson is said to have been once complimented by some elderly lady, to whom the polite lexicographer replied, "Yes, Madam, I have omitted all such words, but I find that you have been looking for them."

In Part First, compound words are generally to be found under the first or leading member of the compound; at the same time, it is proper to observe that the Hindūstānī language is capable of admitting or forming thousands of compounds not to be found in any dictionary: hence, the learner should bear in mind the more general rules of composition, as laid down in any good grammar of the language. The same remark applies with regard to the rules for derivation, particularly those relating to the formation of causal verbs and abstract nouns.

The few contractions used throughout the work are the following: The letters a, p, s, at the end of many definitions, denote that the word is from the Arabic, Persian, or Sanskrit respectively; the letter h distinguishes such words as are aboriginal or purely Indian; and d such as are peculiar to the Deccan (dakhan): the few words marked t and g are of Tartarian and Greek origin respectively. The other contractions are, m. denoting the masculine gender; f. feminine; a. an active or transitive verb; and n. a verb neuter. The letter v. imports vide, and pl. the plural number.

In Part Second, and occasionally in Part First, the following contractions are used in the formation of compound verbs: k, for karnā (or the Persian hardan), "to make;" h, for honā, "to be, to become;" j, for jānā, "to go, to be;" r, for rakhnā, "to keep, to have;" d, for denā, "to give;" l, for lenā, "to take;" ḍ, for ḍālānā, "to throw;" and b, for bāndhnā, "to bind." These, with the exception of the first two, are chiefly used in the formation of intensives, and consequently they have then laid aside their own primitive signification. As a general rule, compound words have their parts or members separated by a hyphen, thus, dil-nishin, tan-durust, sar-gardān, &c. Such compounds, when transferred into the Oriental characters, are optionally written entire as one word, or distinct as two. The short i, denoting the Persian izāfat, is indifferently written either as the last letter or the governing word, or separately between the two words, as dardī sar or dard i sar, the sense being abundantly obvious either way, as no Persian word ends in the short i except it be in a state of construction with the substantive or adjective following.

I have avoided cross references, which are very embarrassing to the learner, retaining only those in which the word referred to is either close at hand, or is attended by a long explanation which it would be needless to repeat.

Some good-natured friends have occasionally expressed to me their regret that the Second Part of the work had not been given in the Persian character. Had it been so, I must either, in the first place, have added the pronunciation in Roman characters to each word (otherwise the work would be utterly useless), and this would have increased its size to at least six times what it now is; or, in the second place, omitting the Roman character, I must have given all the vowel marks and other orthographical symbols, which would have extended it to at least ten times its actual bulk, without possessing one single advantage over what it now has.*

In conclusion, I have only to add, that amidst such a mass of small letters, it will not seem surprising that an occasional error of the press should occur. I trust, however, that the number of such errors is small; and I am confident that the generous, the learned, and the experienced (and it is only their good opinion I am ambitious to obtain) will not deny me their kind indulgence.

* Two lines of even the smallest Oriental types in this country would occupy at least as much space as five lines of the Roman character used in Part II. of this work. If the vowel-points, &c. be used, the spaces between the lines must be nearly doubled: hence the truth of the above remark will be obvious to those at all conversant with Oriental typography.

ح ḡim or ḡim-i-tāzi, the fifth letter of the Arabic alphabet, the sixth in the Persian, and the seventh in the Hindūstāni. It has the sound of j in judge. In Arabic it is a radical letter. In enumeration by abjad it stands for the number three. It is sometimes used: 1st, for sh, as kāḡ for kāsh, would that! 2nd, for g (particularly in conformity to Arabic pronunciation), as farāḡ for farang, Europe; 3rd, for the final imperceptible he, as fīrozaj for fīroza, a turquoise. Again, for j are used, 1st, t, as tārāt, for tārāj, plunder; 2nd, zh, as kazḡdum for kajḡdum, a scorpion; 3rd, g, as akḡshig for akhshij, contrary. When added to a pure Sanskrit substantive it denotes born, sprung, or produced from such substantive, as andaj, a bird, the egg-born, from andā; vārij, the lotus, lit. sprung from water.

He was the seventh avatār, when the deity descended for the purpose of destroying Rāvana, who having (for his devotion) a promise from Brahmā that he should not suffer death by any of the usual means, was become the tyrant and pest of mankind. The Devatās came in the shape of monkeys, as Rāvana had gained no promise of safety from them; hence Hanumān was Rāma's general. Rāmachandra's mother's name was Kaushalyā, his younger brother Bharata was son of Kaikēyī, who was the cause of Rāma's going to the desert to perform devotions, on the banks of the Pampā-nadī, insisting that her son should reign the fourteen years that Rāma employed in the devotion. It was while performing his devotion (or during his stay in the forests) in company with Lakṣmana (his brother by Sumitrā) that Rāvana appeared as a beggar, while he was absent hunting, and enticed away Shītā, which gave rise to the war detailed in the Rāmāyaṇa. Shītā was daughter of Janaka Rājā, who had promised to give her to any person who could break a certain bow, which was done by Rāmachandra. When in the forest, he drew a circle round Shītā, and forbade her to go beyond it, and left Lakṣmana to take care of her; but Lakṣmana hearing some noise which alarmed him for his brother, left her to seek him: then it was that Rāvana appeared and enticed her out of the circle (ganḍī), and carried her off in his flying chariot: in the air he was opposed by the bird Jatāyu, whose wings he cut and escaped. Rāmachandra reigned in Oudh (Ayodhya) before Christ 1600. s.
