I declare that we support the work done by the E-HEALTH Literacy consortium and we tend to incorporate the products and methodology provided in our everyday working activities.

The goals set by this project are both important and clear: one of the main barriers to development of e-health is precisely the lack of awareness, confidence and skills to find, understand and appraise online health information - and apply this knowledge to make their health decisions, as well to trust e-health solutions. In order to address this need, the consortium developed material (repository, training toolkit, code of conduct) to

- Raise awareness among citizens about the possibilities of e-health services
- Qualify volunteers and staff to become "e-health guides" for the facilitation of e-health literacy
- Support multipliers, organisation and decision makers to promote the beneficial and sovereign use of e-health services

E-Health literacy has the potential to empower citizens to better manage their health and facilitate the communication between healthcare professionals and patients. I am looking forward to apply the results.
