Yet notwithstanding these obligations, it is reported that time hung so heavily upon his hands that Captain Doughty formed the habit of fuming when his pipe went out.

But the newly established and Joosely organized commonwealth was not long in learning the rudimentary lessons of preparedness. Early in 1784 the Indians in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Kentucky took it into their heads that the white settlers were too thick in the hunting grounds, and began one of their periodic thirming out processes.
