GRANT'S LOG CABIN

The log cabin, now located on west side of main drive below Fairmount Park entrance, east end of Girard Avenue Bridge, near 33d Street, occupied by General U. S. Grant at City Point, Va., during the siege of Richmond, was the scene of the hospitable entertainments of many distinguished visitors, but none were more warmly welcomed than President George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, then at the head of the Christian Commission. At his disposal General Grant placed the famous log cabin, and left to him the choice of its future location, as will appear from the following letter:

Headquarters Armies of the United States, Washington, D. C., July 21, 1865. George H. Stuart, Esq., Philadelphia. My Dear Sir: Lieutenant-General Grant directs me to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 20th inst. and to state that he is perfectly willing for the cabin in which he lived at City Point to be placed wherever you or the citizens of Philadelphia may prefer.

He also directs me to state, in reply to your communication for a history of the cabin, and especially to your reference to a supposed council of war between President Lincoln, General Sherman and himself, that he held no council of war at City Point, or any other place at any time; that the interviews between Mr. Lincoln, General Sherman and himself, to which you allude, were rather insignificant than "momentous," and that the only conversation of any importance which did occur between them took place in a steamboat. It consisted of General Grant's announcement that he intended to move out against General Lee at a certain time, with his directions to General Sherman to co-operate in North Carolina.

The cabin, however, you will permit me to say, has an interest beyond that to which, in General Grant's eyes, it seems entitled. It was built in November, 1864, so that the last four months of the rebellion, immediately prior to the great movements which resulted in its overthrow, were passed by him within its walls. Here he received the reports of his great subordinates almost daily, and sent them each their orders and their rewards. There he watched Sherman's route as he came across the continent to the sea, and afterwards along his memorable march through the Carolinas; from here despatched his instructions to Thomas, which resulted in the battle of Nashville and the discomfiture of Hood, so that concentration of any great force in front of Sherman was impossible. From here he directed Terry in the operations which culminated in the fall of Fort Fisher. From here he directed Sherman and Schofield, bringing one northward through the Carolinas, and the other eastward in dead winter across the north, and then sending him by sea to meet his great captain at Goldsboro, the co-operation being so complete that the two arrived, one from Nashville and the other from Savannah, on the same day. Here he received the rebel commissioners on their way to meet President Lincoln; here he ordered Sheridan's glorious movements, whose importance in producing the last great result can hardly be overestimated; from here he directed Canby in the campaign whose conclusion was the fall of Mobile; from here he despatched Wilson and Stoneman on their final raids; here he received the President, General Sherman, General Sheridan, General Mcade and Admiral Porter, in an interview interesting beyond comparison in the meeting at the one time and place of so many men of such importance by their talents and their positions, and here the lamented Lincoln passed many of the latest hours of his life before its crowning success had been achieved; here the last orders for all these generals were penned before the commencement of the great campaign which terminated the war.

These are reminiscences which I have ventured to recall, conscious that they must always be of transcending interest to the patriot and the historical student, although to the appreciation of my chief they seem, as he directs me to style them—insignificant.

I am, my dear sir, with great respect,

Your obedient servant,

ADAM BADEAU,

Brevet Colonel and Military Secretary.
