JAPANESE WILDLIFE SANCTUARIES AND PUBLIC HUNTING GROUNDS, 1948

INTRODUCTION

The data for this preliminary study of wildlife sanctuaries and public hunting grounds in Japan were gathered as part of a general investigation of Japanese wildlife conditions and are published to assist Occupation personnel in avoiding areas off-limits for shooting.

TYPES OF SANCTUARIES

The responsibility for the management, conservation, and utilization of Japanese wildlife rests with the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry. Under Japanese law this Ministry approves and supervises all the types of sanctuaries and hunting grounds listed below except the natural monuments, which are under the control of the Ministry of Education. Confirmatory protection to birds and animals designated as natural monuments by the Ministry of Education is sometimes, but not always, given under the game laws by the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry. As the Ministry of Education has no authority over hunting and maintains no warden force, the main protection of the natural monuments comes from those neighboring municipalities in which enough local pride has been engendered to supervise and maintain them.

The types of sanctuaries and public hunting grounds are:

1. Inviolable sanctuaries (Japanese "kinryoku", literally "no hunting area"), established either by national or prefectural authority. Hunting by any method is strictly prohibited within the limits of these areas in order to conserve and increase birds and mammals.
2. No shooting areas (Japanese "juryo kinshi kuiki", literally "gun hunting prohibited area"), established by national, prefectural, or municipal authority mainly as a precautionary measure in those localities where shooting might endanger human life or property.

This preliminary study was prepared by Dr O. L. Austin Jr, head, Wildlife Branch, Fisheries Division.

3. Regions within the limits of which the hunting of specified birds or mammals is prohibited (Japanese "hokaku kinshi kuiki", literally "taking by any means prohibited area"), established by national or prefectural authority to protect only certain birds and animals. Hunting of other game in the same area is allowed.

4. Hunting grounds (Japanese "ryoku", literally "hunting areas"), in which the hunting franchise is delegated to an individual or group of individuals by national, prefectural, or municipal authority. The holders of the franchise charge a fee to those who hunt in the area, the proceeds of the fees going toward the upkeep of the preserve. Hunting in these grounds is permitted only under stated conditions as to time, bag, and method, ostensibly to prevent game diminishing as a result of abusive hunting. The number of hunters is limited by the regulations, and if more than the permissible number of hunters apply for admission the privilege is decided by drawing lots.

5. Community hunting grounds (Japanese "kyodo shiryochi", literally "joint hunting place"). These are traditional, and the few that remain date back to feudal establishment in pre-restoration days. All are fresh water or marsh areas, usually controlled by a village or a group of villages. In them waterfowl are netted in wholesale quantities for market. Otherwise strict sanctuary conditions are maintained, and the discharge of firearms prohibited.

6. Natural monuments (Japanese "tennen kinen butsu", literally "natural memorial thing"), designated by the Ministry of Education under authority of the Law for Preserving Scenic, Historic and Natural Monuments, enacted in 1919. They are designated to protect and perpetuate for posterity:

- (a) Animals found only in Japan
- (b) Animals which are very scarce in Japan
- (c) Animals which are threatened with extinction in Japan
- (d) Animals of special historic or other significance in Japan
- (e) Breeding grounds of colonial species
- (f) Characteristic faunas of specified areas

LIST OF SANCTUARIES AND PUBLIC HUNTING GROUNDS

Lists of sanctuary areas and public hunting grounds in Japan, as furnished by the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry and the Ministry of Education, were submitted to the local military government units in each prefecture for confirmation and verification. The corrected lists by prefectures of all areas off limits to unauthorized hunting as of 1 July 1948 are appended. Additional sanctuary areas have been proposed but not yet authorized in some prefectures, and investigations are still being conducted on the feasibility of maintaining others. As this list is therefore subject to change, hunters should request the most up-to-date information from local Military Government on entering any prefecture. The military government units in many instances have prepared maps showing both the localities listed and open hunting areas.
