

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

VOL. 5.—No. 156.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

THE ADVANCEMENT OF ART, AND ITS APPLICATION TO INDUSTRY.

(The following forms part of the paper read by comrade Crane at the recent Liverpool Art Congress, which we are enabled to publish by the kindness of the writer.)

WE are here to further the advancement of Art in its application to Industry. Are we quite sure that we do not mean, The advancement of Industry by the application of Art?

For the last two or three centuries, we appear to have been applying all the power of organisation, the ingenuity, and the mechanical invention of man to the advancement of Industry, in the interest of competitive commerce; not with the advancement of Art as the object, but rather that of profit-making; with the economic result that we cannot find work enough for the compulsorily idle hands to do; while in the din of the vast workshop of machine production, and the fierce battle of the world-market, Art can hardly find a place for the sole of her foot.

Mechanical invention in the interest of trade has dominated us. Mechanical invention has outstripped the invention of the artist. Mechanical smoothness has taken the place of artistic thought and finish. And why? Because, to our great deity of commercial enterprise and successful trade, the amount of the output is more regarded than the artistic quality of the material and work.

The very spirit and meaning of the word "artistic" implies something harmonious; something in relation to its surroundings; something arising out of the joy of life, and expressing the delight of the artist in his work, however arduous; something personal, the expression of one mind or of many; congruous; expressly and lovingly addressed to particular persons, and adapted to particular places and things. Not a mere system of guess work: beginning with the designer, who makes a guess at the sort of thing that may possibly "take," rather than what he personally likes and has a feeling for. The designer again being dependent on the manufacturer, guessing what the market or the trade will take; as he again depends on the conjectures of the trade, as to what an unknown quantity in the public can be induced to take. The public again, surrounded with every species of conundrum in the name of art, is driven to guess in its turn as to—not what it really likes, or what is good and fitted to its purpose, but—what is the correct thing to buy, or what other people buy, or are likely to buy. So the whole structure of applied art under our present system, speaking generally, is built upon the shifting sands of insincerity and speculation.

Let us enquire what natural affinity there is between art and industry. Properly considered, obviously, they should be inseparable; but the spirit that rules industry now is wrapped up in the one object of the salesman—to sell.

The spirit of industry is merely to produce. The spirit of the artist is not merely to produce, but to express, as well as produce, and to express something which is a joy to him in the making, and may be a joy to the user and beholder. In the search after perfection of method of expression, in the struggle to express his thoughts, to make his work, whatever it be—the lines of a design, a simple repeating pattern, a moulding, a sculptured ornament, a figure, a group, a picture, a building—to make his work live, to answer to his thought, and so touch the thoughts of others, the artist will frequently undo or destroy his own work, will cast aside the labour that has cost him perhaps hours of toil and thought, and try again, until his work answers more nearly to the ideal in his mind. Considerations of the market are forced upon him, it is true, too often, but these have no necessary connection with art, and in so far as he ceases to be true to his ideal, and is seriously influenced, or driven by circumstances to work consciously and exclusively for money, he must deteriorate.

Now, the man of commerce, the controller of industry, seeks only to make a saleable article. He is influenced in his industrial production simply by this object. He takes the opinion of salesmen—of the trade, not of artists, as a rule; and so far as any artistic standard or aim enters into the produce of his manufactory, it is strictly checked by the average of what his rivals are doing, and by the discovery of what the big public can be persuaded to buy.

Slowly, perhaps, some personal force or centre of artistic sincerity creates a new impulse, a new desire in a jaded public, sated with every craze and whim, under the name of art. Slowly the wave of fashion rises, swiftly it rolls; and it affects the salesman first. His arts fail him. He cannot palm off these coarse and inharmonious colours, these hideous patterns, or this clumsy furniture, charm he never so wisely. He sells at a "great sacrifice," and returns to the industrial king—the manufacturer—who either evolves something "new and original" out of his inner consciousness, or on the premises, for next season, or he seeks out the artist. He makes a compact with him. The man of ideas meets the man of industry and profit. The result is, of course, a compromise. The artist must turn out "taking" novelties in design for the market,—that is, the market of guess-work. The market must be the first consideration; it is imperative to sell one's season's goods.

Commerce, like the old woman in the nursery-tale, stands at the stile (of an over-stocked market) with her obdurate pig (over-production) that refuses to move, until the stick (of new demand) has been persuaded to bring its influence to bear, and one by one all the characters of the commercial drama act and re-act upon each other, by the very necessities of their existence,—middle-man and public, capitalist and labourer. We shall find their prototypes in our nursery-tale up to the ox (personifying John Bull) driven to action from the fear of the butcher, the nemesis of foreign competition.

The little allegory from the nursery fits the situation exactly. It has been revealed unto babes.

So the whole mill of industrial commercial production is fed and set in motion, and grinds on year after year. The wheels of its machinery, like those of fortune herself, lifting some into prosperity upon the condition of the ruin of others, and the working order of the whole depending on the existence of the vast majority of our brothers and sisters in the condition of not being more than one week's remove from destitution.

This is the social and industrial structure we have raised—in which we live, and move, and have our being. Art and industry, like figures carved in stone, may adorn its portal, and our hopes and fears, our regrets for the past, our thoughts for the future, play like cloud-shadows upon its grim façade, which will yet mock our efforts at humanising and beautifying, until its tenants some day insist on improvements, perhaps even involving a change of plan and structure.

Meanwhile our fluctuating harlequin of fashion and trade comes and goes. This year we are going to be "artistic"—everything is to be "artistic"—art-colours, art-furniture; art in the attic, art in the coal-hole. Next year, away with your degraded colours! let us be frankly barbaric in mauve and magenta! Is this the delightful, spontaneous caprice of unstable humanity, seeking novelty in the simplicity of its heart? Is it wholly unconnected with the inscrutable movements and exigencies of those commercial and industrial potentates whereof I have spoken?

The world having increased so much under the sway of our industrial kings (we will grant them that); having congregated in vast centres for the convenience of commerce and industry, necessarily has large and immediate wants. Millions of interdependent human beings demand to be fed and clothed, warmed and sheltered; with swift and efficient means of communication, and carriage from place to place. Wholesale industrial production does it, with the aid of steam and electricity; and does it so thoroughly (as regards quantity, and the purchasing power of the community) as to over-shoot the mark, and glut the market; which means that a number of citizens are obliged to go without the comforts and necessities they have assisted in producing, seeing that the system of production is not economically organised in the interest of the community, but rather for the profit of individuals.

The world does not stop in its demands at food, and clothes and shelter, however. Man doth not live by bread alone. He needs mental bread, spiritual exaltation, amusement, excitement, and would clothe his thoughts in artistic and architectural garments. Here, however, wholesale industrial machine production is distinctly at fault, even if in the quantity of its food-stuffs and bare necessities it has been blameless. The making art a commodity, or in the endeavour to make it so, its distinctive virtue and value has been left out of account.

In associating it with purely mechanical and sub-divided toil, in handing it over to the blind fingers of insensate machinery, or in setting before it a purely commercial object, both its spiritual and sensuous qualities are lost, and the reforming and educating influence, both of its practice and its ultimate appeal, is lost. The human interest being reduced to a minimum, or made to depend solely on the impulse of the pictorial sketcher, or designer, in no sort of relation to the man or the process, by which his work is to be reproduced, is apt to lose itself in the desire for mere novelty or trick, to become the art of the newspaper, which rests its claims to attention on its impartial, partial, or partisan record of passing events and news—nothing if not new. Thus both the beauty and the dignity of art are endangered, while the reduction of the handicrafts to mechanism take their personal interest and individuality away.

The idea of producing art wholesale by steam-power, is certainly an extraordinary one. It is very much like printing a misquoted line from a poet, repeating it page after page, and calling the result a book.

Our mechanical invention, directed to the cheapening of the processes of industrial production, and the acceleration in speed of that production, has out-stripped our artistic invention. In our efforts to increase the means of production we have lost sight of the end. In purely artistic production, the old methods, the old tools, mostly remain as they have done for centuries, unaffected by mechanical invention, for the simple reason that nothing can supersede the hand. The tools of the sculptor, the carver, the painter, are but extra fingers, supplementary to the original four and the indispensable thumb, to which the artist continually recurs, and with which his work is begun and ended. That personal touch and impress of character we value so highly, in what we call the Fine Arts, with the disappearance of the handicraftsman, and the severance of designer and workman, has practically ceased to exist, except in those instances of individual revival of pursuit of a craft on its original lines, of which among the cultured and the leisured, or on the part of painters or sculptors, as a diversion, have increased so much of late years.

The modern conditions of manufacture appear to have destroyed the old traditions of the handicrafts. Our commerce has vulgarised and confused the public taste. Yet, where any form of art is concerned, anything in the nature of a pattern or design in the material of surface decoration in any form, appealing to the eye, in the goods produced: manufacture is absolutely dependent on design of some sort. It may be begged, borrowed, paid for, or stolen; but still the design must be there to start with. Yet design, so far as it is under the influence of the existing conditions, has become tamer and tamer, and more and more meaningless and superficial; and it is obvious that the ill-effects of a bad design are increased a thousand-fold—or exactly in proportion to the increase in the mechanical power and speed of its production by the resources of machinery.

When the power of reproduction is so enormous it becomes, obviously, more than ever necessary to reproduce nothing in design, but what is sound and good in its way. If not, far better confine ourselves to the manufacture of plain materials—good cloth, well woven and dyed, without pattern; serviceable furniture, without carving or painting, unless it can be sincere and thoughtful; useful pottery as good in contour as the wheel and the skill of the thrower can make it, unspoiled by the ravings of the china painter, distracted by centuries of false taste, or confused by dictionaries of ornament, or the impressionism of the modern Japanese or Parisian.

There are, of course, certain great industries which are absolutely dependent on the surface designer and pattern-maker; such as cotton-printing, carpet-weaving, paper-staining, for instance; manufactures which would not exist at all without a constant supply of designs. There is no doubt that this is fully recognised by the manufacturers or their managers, and the utmost pains, consistent with a due regard to the possibilities of profit, are taken by the leading firms to secure at least competent working drawings, if not tasteful designs. It may be conceded too, that as regards design, these industries have been the first to show the influence of those ideas, which have produced a kind of revolution among designers of late years; with the result, that a movement which appears to be purely English in origin, has made its mark in these directions, and has largely counteracted the stream of tendency, which at one time set so strongly towards Paris, as the head centre of taste in all matters of art, the disastrous effects of which still affect us in many ways.

The real secret of Continental influence in design upon us is no doubt to be found in the fact that the severance of the arts and handicrafts has never been anything like so complete in other European countries as in industrial England. Our great industrial rival, America, shows the same want of originating power in artistic design; the same tendency, in a more marked degree, to avail herself of Parisian modes in art. However degraded the taste of the designer, or debased in type the design, the French or Italian designer remained thoroughly in touch with the craftsman, and understood the technical conditions of the work thoroughly; so that his working drawings would be perfectly adapted to the method of manufacture. We have here, at any rate, one reason why our manufacturers have given preference to French designers, and have been so much in the habit of crossing the water for new supplies. Yet we must recognise that so closely connected are now all countries, commercial and industrial, that the slightest change in one will surely affect the other. If foreign artists and workmen are in demand, our own suffer; or if our native talent is preferred, then our Continental brothers are worse off;—this, of course, is the result of competition. Level up all round with technical education, competition would come in again: you would get a technically educated proletariat, but no more secure of a livelihood than they are at present. Supposing England temporarily regained her commercial ascendancy, the suffering would only be transferred from one country to another; and can we morally justify it to ourselves that people of one nationality have more right to live than those of another? These are awkward questions.

I think this shows that existing economic conditions are dead against the aim of the schools [of art]. There are, of course, many schools of high proficiency as such, and as examples of good working models, under the South Kensington system. I am not, however, personally able to feel much more enthusiasm for schools of art, as such, however efficient according to the official standards, than I am for academies; because I believe that the only training worth having in the arts must be in the workshop, as of old: since I hold that the true root and basis of all art lies in the handicrafts, and that the artistic impulse and invention weakens as it loses its close connection and intimate relationship with them.

So that there are abundant reasons why art, as applied to industry, should not be in a flourishing and vigorous condition.

It is not surprising, if we bear these thoughts in mind, that design has come to be regarded as a sort of Cinderella of art; her fine sisters, be-decked in paint and public favour, go to the ball, and leave her to mind the hearth, or the workshop. But she is not without her fairy godmother—inventive adaptation—who comes to her aid; and though it is hoped she will never lose her domestic qualities and substantial household virtues, she may yet win her share of applause, and wearing the shoe of good-luck, be recognised as the true bride of the prince Imagination.

At the preliminary meeting for the formation of this Association, held in London in the summer, I took occasion to say that “we must turn our artists into craftsmen, and our craftsmen into artists.” That is the problem before us in this matter of Art and Industry.

I do not pretend to have found a cut-and-dried solution: but there is one first necessary step to be taken, it seems to me, as a matter of common honesty, if we are really sincere in our desire to unite art and industry; and it is this: That the workman should have the credit of the work of his own head and hands—whether designer or craftsman. We must no longer be content with the vague—however convenient—designation of authorship (or rather proprietorship), So and So and Co., now commonly affixed to works of applied art or industry in our exhibitions, but we should require the actual names of the contrivers and craftsmen, whose actual labour, thought, and experience produces what we see.

Make a man responsible, and give him the credit of his own skill in his work; his self-respect at once increases, and he is stimulated to do his best: he will take pride and pleasure in his work; it becomes personal and therefore interesting.

I think it is most important to recognise certain facts—to know exactly how, and where we stand in this matter of art and industry; which, moreover, cannot be separated from the great economic question, of which indeed it is but a part.

Do not let us deceive ourselves, or expect to gather the grapes of artistic or industrial prosperity from economic thorns, or aesthetic figs from commercial thistles.

It is idle to expect artistic sense and refinement to spring from dull and sordid surroundings, or a keen sense of beauty amid the conditions of monotonous and mechanical toil. Unless your artist and craftsman have personal freedom, leisure, cultivation, and continual access to the beauty of both art and nature, you will get neither vigorous design nor good craftsmanship.

Let us look the sphinx fairly in the face, and take the length of her claws and wings, before we offer our solution of the riddle. It may be that the problem will solve itself in the course of time, as part of that great and constant movement of evolution, in which we ourselves, and our lives and interests are involved; which no man can do much either to impede or to accelerate; though the action of the least of us counts in the total sum—since it is the slow but sure result of causes at work through the long progress of centuries, bound up with the laws of nature, and the course of human destiny itself.

WALTER CRANE.

COTTON TRADE.—Important meetings of the Masters' and Men's Committees were held at Bolton on Monday 31st, for the purpose of considering the position of affairs there. The operatives had submitted a proposal that the men at Messrs. Crook be paid day wages at the rate of two guineas per week. This the masters declined to accept, as being 6s. higher than is earned on the class of spinning-mule worked upon, but submitted a counter proposal that Messrs. Crook pay for the month the average earnings of the district on that size of mule—namely, £2, 18s. gross as weekly wages. This includes the payment of two piecers engaged by each spinner. At the meeting of the Men's Committee this offer was unanimously rejected, on the ground that the Messrs. Cook ran their machinery at a higher rate than was the average of the district. The dispute, therefore, still continues. Short time has already commenced, three days a week being worked, and 30,000 operatives are affected. They are fully prepared for this, and say they have sufficient reserve funds to enable them to remain out for twelve months.—The strike at Waterloo Mills has ended in favour of the men.—At Cinderhill Mill, Todmorden, the operatives have given notice for altered arrangements, and a 10 per cent. advance.—The threatened strike at Wellington Mills, Blackburn, has been averted for the present. The spinners in future will be able to get better pay.—The grinders at Park Place Mill, in same town, have decided to come out if the masters take 6d. per week from their wages; at the present time they are only getting 21s. per week, and that is 3s. below Oldham and district.

THE CARES OF WEALTH.

In Defoe's inimitable story of 'Colonel Jack,' the hero, is in the beginning a poor outcast boy of the London streets, who gets his living by day as he can, and at night sleeps in the ash-holes or annealing-arches of the glass-houses in Rosemary Lane or Ratchiff Highway. He is telling of his first introduction by an older companion to the art and mystery of thieving; they have been successful and got clean away with their booty. Whereon, Jack says:

"He shared the money very honestly with me; only at the end, he told me, that though it was true, he promised me half, yet as it was the first time, and I had done nothing but look on, so he thought it was very well if I took a little less than he did; so he divided the money, which was £12 10s., into two exact parts, viz., £6 5s., in each part; then he took £1 5s. from my part, and told me I should give him that for hansel. Well, says I, take it then, for I think you deserve it all: so, however, I took up the rest; and what shall I do with this now, says I, for I have nowhere to put it? Why, have you no pockets? says he; Yes, says I, but they are full of holes. I have often thought since that, and with some mirth too, how I had really more wealth than I knew what to do with, for lodging I had none, nor any box or drawer to hide my money in, nor had I any pocket, but such as I say was full of holes; I knew nobody in the world that I could go and desire them to lay it up for me; for being a poor naked, ragged boy, they would presently say, I had robbed somebody, and perhaps lay hold of me, and my money would be my crime, as they say it often is in foreign countries; and now, as I was full of wealth, behold I was full of care, for what to do to secure my money I could not tell; and this held me so long, and was so vexations to me the next day, that I truly sat down and cried.

"Nothing could be more perplexing than this money was to me all that night. I carried it in my hand a good while, for it was in gold, all but 14s.; and that is to say, it was in four guineas, and that 14s. was more difficult to carry than the four guineas; at last I sat down, and pulled off one of my shoes, and put the four guineas into that; but after I had gone a while, my shoe hurt me so I could not go, so I was fain to sit down again, and take it out of my shoe, and carry it in my hand; then I found a dirty linen rag in the street, and I took that up, and wrapt it all together, and carried it in that a good way. I have often since heard people say, when they have been talking of money, that they could not get in, I wish I had it in a foul clout; in truth, I had mine in a foul clout; for it was foul, according to the letter of that saying, but it served me till I came to a convenient place, and then I sat down and washed the cloth in the kennel, and so then put my money in again.

"Well, I carried it home with me to my lodging in the glass-house, and when I went to go to sleep, I knew not what to do with it; if I had let any of the black crew I was with know of it, I should have been smothered in the ashes for it, or robbed of it, or some trick or other put upon me for it; so I knew not what to do, but lay with it in my hand, and my hand in my bosom, but then sleep went from my eyes: O, the weight of human care! I, a poor beggar-boy, could not sleep so soon as I had but a little money to keep, who, before that could have slept upon a heap of brick-bats, stones, or cinders, or anywhere, as sound as a rich man does on his down bed, and sounder too.

"Every now and then dropping asleep, I should dream that my money was lost, and start like one frightened; then, finding it fast in my hand, try to go to sleep again, but could not for a long while, then drop and start again. At last a fancy came into my head that if I fell asleep, I should dream of the money, and talk of it in my sleep, and tell that I had money, which if I should do, and one of the rogues should hear me, they would pick it out of my bosom, and of my hand too, without waking me; and after that thought I could not sleep a wink more; so that I passed that night over in care and anxiety enough; and this, I may safely say, was the first night's rest that I lost by the cares of this life, and the deceitfulness of riches.

"As soon as it was day, I got out of the hole we lay in, and rambled abroad in the fields towards Stepney, and there I mused and considered what I should do with this money, and many a time I wished that I had not had it; for, after all my ruminating upon it, and what course I should take with it, or where I should put it, I could not hit upon any one thing, or any possible method to secure it, and it perplexed me so, that at last, as I said just now, I sat down and cried heartily.

"When my crying was over, the case was the same; I had the money still, and what to do with it I could not tell. At last it came into my head that I would look out for some hole in a tree, and see to hide it there till I should have occasion for it. Big with this discovery, as I then thought it, I began to look about me for a tree; but there were no trees in the fields about Stepney or Mile-end that looked fit for my purpose; and if there were any that I began to look narrowly at, the fields were so full of people, that they would see if I went to hide anything there, and I thought the people eyed me as it were, and that two men in particular followed me to see what I intended to do.

"This drove me farther off, and I crossed the road at Mile-end, and in the middle of the town went down a lane that goes away to the Blind Beggar's at Bethnal Green; when I came a little way in the lane, I found a footpath over the fields, and in those fields several trees for my turn, as I thought; at last, one tree had a little hole in it, pretty high out of my reach, and I climbed up the tree to get it, and when I came there, I put my hand in, and found (as I thought) a place very fit, so I placed my treasure there, and was mighty well satisfied with it; but, behold, putting my hand in again to lay it more commodiously, as I thought, of a sudden it slipped away from me, and I found the tree was hollow, and my little parcel was fallen in quite out of my reach, and how far it might go in I knew not; so that, in a word, my money was quite gone, irrecoverably lost; there could be no room so much as to hope ever to see it again, for 'twas a vast great tree.

"As young as I was, I was now sensible what a fool I was before, that I could not think of ways to keep my money, but I must come thus far to throw it into a hole where I could not reach it. Well, I thrust my hand quite up to my elbow, but no bottom was to be found, or any end of the hole or cavity; I got a stick of the tree, and thrust it in a great way, but all was one; then I cried, nay, roared out, I was in such a passion; then I got down the tree again, then up again, and thrust in my hand again till I scratched my arm and made it bleed, and cried all the while most violently; then I began to think I had not so much as a half-penny of it left for a half-penny roll, and I was hungry, and then I cried again; then I came away in despair, crying and roaring like a little boy that had been whipped; then I went back again to the tree, and up the tree again, and thus I did several times.

"The last time I had gotten up the tree I happened to come down not on the same side that I went up and came down before, but on the other side of the tree, and on the other side of the bank also; and, behold, the tree had a great open place in the side of it close to the ground, as old hollow trees often have; and looking into the open place, to my inexpressible joy, there lay my money and my linen rag, all wrapped up just as I had put it into the hole; for the tree being hollow all the way up, there had been some moss or light stuff (which I had not judgment enough to know), was not firm, and had given way when it came to drop out of my hand, and so it had slipped quite down at once.

"I was but a child, and I rejoiced like a child, for I hollo'd quite out aloud when I saw it; then I run to it, and snatched it up, hugged and kissed the dirty rag a hundred times; then danced and jumped about, run from one end of the field to the other, and, in short, I knew not what, much less do I know now what I did, though I shall never forget the thing, either what a sinking grief it was to my heart, when I thought I had lost it, or what a flood of joy overwhelmed me when I had got it again.

"While I was in the first transport of my joy, as I have said, I run about, and knew not what I did; but when that was over I sat down, opened the foul clout the money was in, looked at it, told it, found it was all there, and then I fell a-crying as savourily as I did before, when I thought I had lost it.

"It would tire the reader should I dwell on all the little boyish tricks that I played in the ecstasy of my joy and satisfaction, when I had found my money; so I break off here. Joy is as extravagant as grief, and since I have been a man I have often thought, that had such a thing befallen a man, so to have lost all he had, and not have a bit of bread to eat, and then so strangely to find it again, after having given it so effectually over,—I say, had it been so with a man, it might have hazarded his using some violence upon himself.

"Well, I came away with my money, and, having taken sixpence out of it, before I made it up again, I went to a chandler's shop in Mile-end, and bought a half-penny roll and a half-penny worth of cheese, and sat down at the door after I bought it, and eat it very heartily, and begged some beer to drink with it, which the good woman gave me very freely.

"Away I went then for the town, to see if I could find any of my companions, and resolved I would try no more hollow trees for my treasure. As I came along Whitechapel, I came by a broker's shop, over against the church, where they sold old clothes, for I had nothing on but the worst of rags; so I stopped at the shop, and stood looking at the clothes which hung at the door.

"Well, young gentleman, says a man that stood at the door, you look wishfully; do you see anything you like, and will your pocket compass a good coat now, for you look as if you belonged to the ragged regiment? I was affronted at the fellow. What's that to you, says I, how ragged I am? if I had seen anything I liked, I have money to pay for it; but I can go where I shan't be huffed at for looking.

"While I said thus, pretty boldly to the fellow, comes a woman out, What ails you, says she to the man, to bully away our customers so? a poor boy's money is as good as my lord mayor's; if poor people did not buy old clothes, what would become of our business? and, then turning to me, Come hither, child, says she, if thou hast a mind to anything I have, you shan't be hector'd by him; the boy is a pretty boy, I assure you, says she, to another woman that was by this time come to her. Ay, says the t'other, so he is, a very well-looking child, if he was clean and well dressed, and may be as good a gentleman's son for anything we know, as any of those that are well dressed. Come, my dear, says she, tell me what is it you would have? She pleased me mightily to hear her talk of my being a gentleman's son, and it brought former things to my mind; but when she talk'd of my being not clean, and in rags, then I cried.

"She pressed me to tell her if I saw anything that I wanted; I told her no, all the clothes I saw there were too big for me. Come, child, says she, I have two things here that will fit you, and I am sure you want them both; that is, first, a little hat, and there, says she (tossing it to me), I'll give you that for nothing; and here is a good warm pair of breeches; I dare say, says she, they will fit you, and they are very tight and good; and, says she, if you should ever come to have so much money that you don't know what to do with it, here are excellent good pockets, says she, and a little fob to put your gold in, or your watch in, when you get it.

"It struck me with a strange kind of joy that I should have a place to put my money in, and need not go to hide it again in a hollow tree; that I was ready to snatch the breeches out of her hands, and wondered that I should be such a fool never to think of buying me a pair of breeches before, that I might have a pocket to put my money in, and not carry it about two days together in my hand, and in my shoe, and I knew not how; so, in a word, I gave her two shillings for the breeches, and went over into the churchyard, and put them on, put my money into my new pockets, and was as pleased as a prince is with his coach and six horses. I thanked the good woman too for the hat, and told her I would come again when I got more money, and buy some other things I wanted; and so I came away."

The weight of chains, number of stripes, hardness of labour, and other effects of a master's cruelty, may make one servitude more miserable than another; but he is a slave who serves the best and gentlest man in the world, as well as he who serves the worst—and he does serve him if he must obey his commands and depend upon his will.—Algernon Sidney.

Until we have altered our dictionaries and have found some other word than morality to stand in popular use for the duties of man to man, let us refuse to accept as moral the contractor who enriches himself by using large machinery to make pasteboard soles pass as leather for the feet of unhappy conscripts fighting at miserable odds against invaders: let us rather call him a miscreant, though he were the tenderest, most faithful of husbands, and contend that his own experience of home happiness makes his reckless infliction of suffering on others all the more atrocious. Let us refuse to accept as moral any political leader who should allow his conduct in relation to great issues to be determined by egoistic passion, and boldly say that he would be less immoral even though he were as lax in his personal habits as Sir Robert Walpole, if at the same time his sense of the public welfare were supreme in his mind, quelling all pettier impulses beneath a magnanimous impartiality.—George Eliot.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON!

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

CONTENTS.

Advancement of Art, and its Application to Industry	WALTER CRANE	1
Cares of Wealth	DANIEL DEFOE	3
Notes on News	WILLIAM MORRIS	4
Revolutionary Calendar—Louis Blanqui	V. DAVE	5
Correspondence		5
The Labour Struggle		6
International Notes		6
Letter from America	H. CHARLES	7
Executive Business, Reports, etc., etc.		7
Lecture Announcements, Notices of Books, etc., etc.		8

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday January 2.

ENGLAND	Boston—Woman's Journal	ITALY
Die Autonomie	Liberty	Turin—Nuova Gazzetta Operaia
Justice	Chicago—Knights of Labor	SPAIN
Labour Tribune	Vorbote	Seville—La Solidaridad
London—Freie Presse	Baecker Zeitung	PORTUGAL
Norwich—Daylight	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
Postal Service Gazette	Fort Worth (Tex)—South West	GERMANY
Railway Review	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Berlin—Volks Tribune
The Miner	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung	AUSTRIA
Revolutionary Review	Valley Falls (Kan.)—Fair Play	Wien—Gleichheit
Worker's Friend	Coast Seamen's Journal	HUNGARY
NEW SOUTH WALES	Port Angeles—Commonwealth	Arbeiter-Weekend-Chronik
Hamilton—Radical	FRANCE	DENMARK
INDIA	Paris—Cri du Peuple (daily)	Social-Demokrat
Bankipore—Behar Herald	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	SWEDEN
Madras—People's Friend	Le Proletariat	Malmö—Arbetet
UNITED STATES	Lille—Le Cri du Travailleur	Stockholm, Social-Demokraten
New York—Der Sozialist	St.-Etienne—La Loire Socialiste	NORWAY
Freiheit	L'Union Socialiste	Kristiania—Social-Democraten
Truthseeker	BELGIUM	WEST INDIES
Jewish Volkszeitung	Ghent—Vooruit	Cuba—El Productor
Backer Zeitung	Antwerp—De Werker	MEXICO
Alarm	SWITZERLAND	Sinaloa—Credit-Foncier
Workmen's Advocate	Bulletin Continental
	Geneva—Przedswit

NOTES ON NEWS.

A CERTAIN Mr. George W. McCree (who, since he says he has been a Christian worker in London since 1848, must now be an old man) has been writing an optimistic letter to the press, on the subject, "Is London growing better?" which question he answers in the affirmative. He instances the growth of cheap literature; "Every man can now have his newspaper" (mostly lies), "his magazine, and his cheap edition of Shakespeare, Dickens, Burns, and Scott." True, if he has got any surplus after feeding, clothing, and housing himself: but how is the cheapness got? Our friends the compositors, the hack literateurs, the girls in the "doing up" binders, can answer that question partly I think. Dog-fighting is extinct, he says, and pugilism nearly so: yet Jack the Ripper is not extinct, nor the mass of brutality bred from a hideous life of suffering and squalor, of which he is but the blossom.

"For a halfpenny a tired work-girl can get a lift across one of the bridges on a rainy night." Ah, Mr. McCree, how tired is she? Why is she tired? How many nights in the year is she thus tired? What kind of a life does she earn by her hopeless weariness? Does she ever think of this in the course of her lift across the bridges?—and do you and your like? "An aged toiler with his bag of tools can reach home for twopence, often for a penny." O noble boon, O glorious gain! Yet it would be more of a gain if that "aged toiler" had a tolerable home to go to, instead of the dog-hole which serves him as a halting-place between the workshop and the workhouse.

"Clothing, food, fruit, and furniture are cheap." Yes, how blessed cheap, and how damned nasty when they are intended for the consumption of the workers, who have made them, or grown them, and brought them to market! "In hundreds of tidy establishments hot coffee" (Ugh! what stuff it is!) "plumcake, peasoup, good milk, and a rare vegetarian dinner on easy terms await the hungry man." In these "tidy" establishments I note that dirt and stink are not expressly charged for: and yet they are charged for, since cag-mag is dear for what it is, and the poor man's penn'orths are but scanty ones. It is sickening to think of this commercial dole to the "lower classes" of garbage not fit to be thrown to the dogs: and to think that it has a price at all; that there is anyone, I won't say to buy it, but to eat and drink it, uncompeled.

"Many public-houses have been closed." Yes, but many are open, and are full too, beastly holes as they are, with not a rag of comfort in them; which is worse (to my unphilanthropic mind) than their selling liquor—if it were good: whereas that offered to the poor is just about good enough to poison cats with—if it were strong enough.

"Ragged schools and refuges have almost entirely prevented another generation of criminals." Open Pentonville gates then, and let out everybody but Socialists and rioters, since there are no criminals! As indeed I think there are but few who have not been made by that "vastly improved" London of yours, and polished up fine by Pentonville and its sister hells.

"The increasing sympathy between the rich and the poor, the employer and employed." Of that increasing sympathy, I think I know more than you do, Mr. McCree; and I have seen some curious examples of it, and heard some queer talk on the subject both among the rich, and among the poor; and, judging from all I have heard and seen, it has seemed to me that that "increasing sympathy" was about what was likely to happen betwixt a mass of most miserable slaves, now beginning to discover that they are slaves, on the one hand, and a body of slave-owners, blind and supercilious, but now at last beginning to see a possibility of their losing their slaves. Such sympathy as there can be between two such sets of men is likely to lead not to the continuous cheapening of cag-mag and shoddy for the benefit of the "lower classes," but to experiments in the streets of some new machine guns.

For a word here to those of our readers who belong to the rich classes, the well-off. Some of you prate about the virtues of the working classes, and doubtless they have virtues, in which lie hid the germs of our new society: but unless they are conscious and willing servants of your class, and on the verge of rising into it, they have not got those virtues which you think they have: commercial virtues, to wit, which you call, e.g., honesty, fidelity, and gratitude, but which others might call commercial foresight, servility, and prudent expectation of fresh benefits. No, the "poor," as you call them, are divided into two groups; those who are conscious of discontent against you, and would raise themselves at your expense by abolishing your class; and those who, without being conscious of their wrongs, work you and your wealth for what it is worth.

The first group are the intelligent and really honest among the "poor": the second (poor wretches!) have not intelligence enough to be honest and courageous, and are able to do nothing at present, but get out of you what they can by fawning on, and cheating you, taking your miserably shabby gifts with such "gratitude" as can be imagined. Both these groups are your slaves and therefore your enemies; but whatever you may think, and in spite of all your efforts at stifling the free speech of the first group, it is the second that is the most dangerous to you, for it is by far the most numerous: and when the day comes, as it most surely will, unless you are wise in time, when these poor people can make no more out of you; when your "captainship of industry" is discovered even by yourselves to be a fraud (i.e. when you can no longer live on it) when your charity doles to the poor have to cease, you will be face to face with the once-contented poor, those Englishmen whose patience and good sense you now contrast so proudly with the foolish visionaries of Continental Socialists, but who then will be "contented" no longer; and who will, driven by their ignorance and despair to attack, not your position only, but your persons.

If you could but be wise in time! But can you be? My experience of the last five or six years makes me doubt it. Class prejudice is so obstinate, and so deceptive and insinuating, that in proportion as the movement towards equality grows and becomes more practical amongst the discontented "poor," the hearts of the rich are hardened against that movement. There are many in that class, some of whom I know, who six years ago were flushed with excitement over the rhetorical part (not the would-be economics, of that they knew little and cared less) of Henry George's 'Progress and Poverty,' who are now mere votaries of Law-and-Order. There was no appearance of the two camps being formed then; now there is, and they are being driven into their own camp. And these, mind you, are not mere hypocrites or tyrants at heart, they are simply people who cannot escape from their class. So strong that curse is!

London is better is it? We want more evidence than that of Mr. McCree to prove that. At least it is bigger, and who can really doubt but that with its size its suffering has increased? But if it is bigger, why is it bigger? Because the riches (far be it from me to say the wealth) of the country has increased enormously. Will anyone say that the improvement of London, "vast" as it may be, is at all proportioned to that increase in riches? If he does say so he lies. What has been done then with that increase of riches, which should have been used for the bettering of London, i.e., for the welfare of those who made it? It has gone the way of all riches, it has been wasted by the rich. We have been laborious, ingenious, and commercially successful—what for? That we might remain unhappy, and sing songs of triumph over the cheapening of cat's-meat for human beings. In a word, we are slaves still, for all our "vast improvement."

Says the Pall Mall anent the police outrage of Christmas Eve: "If they (the outrages) are not inquired into and punished promptly and severely, Mr. Monro will pass as Sir C. Warren has passed, for there is nothing more abhorrent to the average citizen than organised outrage by a disciplined force inflicted on law-abiding men exercising their rights of citizenship." I fear that the writer is judging other citizens by himself; very few signs of indignation against these outrages have appeared as yet. The events of the past two years in England and America tend to show that whatever was the case once, the average citizen is now always willing to hound on the police against poor men who are not pleased with their poverty. They expect the police to support law-n'-order to the utmost, by any means convenient to them at the moment. Mr. Monro has been put in his place to see this done, and for nothing else. I agree that the Christmas Eve job is a test for him; but nothing would surprise me more than his passing that test satisfactorily to honest men and good citizens.

W. M.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

FORTNIGHT ENDING JANUARY 12, 1889.

1	Tues.	1651. Charles Stuart the Younger swears on his knees to the Covenant at Scone. 1730. Edmund Burke born. 1774. Thomas Hollis died. 1788. Etienne Cabot born. 1840. John Frost, Chartist, sentenced. 1863. Slaves emancipated in the United States. 1881. L. A. Blanqui died.
2	Wed.	1813. Trials of Luddites at York. 1868. Swearing in of special constables because of Fenian alarms. 1885. Gower Street explosion.
3	Thur.	1642. The five members accused by Charles Stuart the Elder. 1831. Trades-union "outrage." 1838. Trial of Glasgow cotton-spinners for combination. 1852. John Mitchel escapes from Tasmania. 1869. First Congress, at Geneva, of the Romand sections of the International, and founding of L'Egalité , journal of that federation, edited by Bakounine and 8 others.
4	Fri.	1838. Meeting of sympathy with the Canadian rebels. 1846. Food riot at Inverness. 1875. Creation of the Chambre du Travail , federation of all the labour associations at Brussels. 1879. Execution of Moncasi.
5	Sat.	1066. Death of Edward the Confessor. 1477. Raising of the siege of Nancy by the Swiss republicans, and death of Charles the Bold. 1537. Killing of Alexander de Medici, tyrant of Florence. 1755. Damiens' attempt on Louis XV. 1808. Wilhelm Weitling, Communist, born.
6	Sun.	1402. John of Arc born. 1561. Anabaptist rising in London. 1661. Rising of Fifth Monarchy men suppressed. 1794. Trial of Wm. Skirving for sedition. 1872. Socialist Congress at Chemnitz (Saxony); 120 delegates.
7	Mon.	1763. Allan Ramsay died. 1772. Fr. Marie Charles Fourier born. 1793. Trial of James Tytler for sedition. 1850. Revolt in Barham Union Workhouse, near Ipswich. 1866. La Tribune du Peuple becomes the first official organ of the International in Belgium. 1872. Strike of 70,000 colliers and ironworkers in South Wales.
8	Tues.	1642. Galileo died at Florence. 1793. Trial of John Morton, James Anderson, and Malcolm Craig for sedition. 1796. Collet d'Herbois died. 1883. Monster trial at Lyons of the Anarchists, Kropotkin and 57 others.
9	Wed.	1832. Suicide of Colonel Brereton during trial by court-martial at Bristol. 1854. Astor Library, New York, opened. 1871. Bombardment of Paris.
10	Thur.	1645. Archbishop Laud beheaded. 1793. Trial of John Elder and Wm. Stewart for sedition. 1798. Trial of George Meal-maker for sedition. 1870. Victor Noir shot by Pierre Bonaparte. 1880. Trial of the makers of the underground passage towards the Imperial Treasury of the city of Kherston; 9 sentenced (2 to mines). 1885. First number of La Revue Sociale , monthly review edited by P. Argyriades.
11	Fri.	1831. Richard Carlile sentenced for "inflammatory language" in Prompter .
12	Sat.	1746. Heinrich Pestalozzi born. 1793. Aug. Comte born. 1826. Constitution of New Harmony adopted. 1840. Chartist rising at Sheffield. 1848. Rebellion in Sicily. 1870. Victor Noir demonstration at Paris.

Death of Blanqui.—Louis Auguste Blanqui, born at Puget-Théniers, 8 Feb. 1805; died at Paris, 1 Jan. 1881. After having studied at the same time law and medicine, he very soon began his career as a politician and a revolutionist. He entered the Carbonari societies, where he became acquainted with the Communist Buonarrotti, one of the most prominent Babouvists. During the eventful year 1827 Blanqui was wounded three times—in April and in May, and Nov. 29, when he had his neck pierced by a bullet. Soon afterwards he was arrested at Nice, and that was his début in prison life. 1829 he entered the Globe, an influential paper of the time, and July 27, 1830, he took to arms, but the monarchy he helped to pull down having been replaced by another one, he became one of the most ardent members of a secret society, Société des Amis du Peuple, and made such a vigorous propaganda that he was arrested July 31, 1831. The 10th of January 1832 he expounded his theories before the jury, stating the necessity of war between the rich and the poor classes, and was sentenced to one year in jail. One of the defenders of the accused of April 1834, he appeared in that capacity in May 1835 before the Court of Peers. Again arrested, on March 13, 1836, he was sentenced in August of that year to two years, 3,000 francs, and police supervision for the affair of the Rue Lourcine—i.e., illegal association and clandestine fabrication of gunpowder. The 12th May 1839 he took up arms again with the members of the Société des Saisons. Denounced at the very moment when he was reaching Switzerland, he was arrested October 14, 1839, and sentenced to death by the Court of Peers, January 13, 1840. His sentence having been commuted to one of imprisonment for life, he was transferred to the Mont-St-Michel. There he suffered intensely, both morally and bodily. A report of the doctors, stating his condition of health hopeless, having been sent to the Government, he was pardoned Dec. 4, 1844. Blanqui protested against any measure being taken in his favour, and refused to leave the infirmary. Towards the end of May 1846 the authorities put in a cell next to his an agent-provocateur, Houdin, who denounced him as the inspirator of a new secret society, and he was tried, but acquitted, by the tribunal of Blois in April 1847. At last, February 25, 1848, a revolution burst out in Paris, and Blanqui, acclaimed at the Prado Club, was liberated by the will of the people. As soon as he arrived at Paris, he founded the Central Republican Society, which played a prominent part in all the events of that eventful year. After the invasion of the Chamber, he was again arrested (May 26). On the 7th of March 1849 he was tried by the High Court at Bourges and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, which he passed at Doullens, at Belle Isle, and at Corte (Corsica). After his ten years were over, he was administratively, in pursuance of the law of public safety, transported at Mascara (Algeria), where he was detained until the general amnesty of 1859. At Paris, where he went back again, he at once resumed his revolutionary work. On March 10, 1861, he was arrested, and sentenced June 14 to four years for secret conspiracy and publication of forbidden literature. Aug. 27, 1865, he escaped from the hospital Necker, where he was lying ill, and succeeded in reaching Brussels, from which town he continued to direct the organisation and the movements of his political followers and friends. He also often came secretly to Paris, and was there, in fact, on January 12, 1870, when Victor Noir, murdered by Pierre Bonaparte, was buried. If Rochefort had not been there on that day, Blanqui and his friends would have again resorted to an insurrection, but owing to Rochefort's cowardice, he had to wait for another opportunity. August 14, he tried with a few men to plunder the gun-magazines of the fire-brigades of the Boulevard La Villette. Three weeks afterwards, the Third Empire was smashed to pieces at Sedan, and Blanqui began the publication of La Patrie en Danger, which has been very rightly considered as a real masterpiece of journalistic power and knowledge. On October 31, 1870, an insurrectional movement caused Blanqui to become a member of a provisory government, but a convention was passed between himself and the members of the so-called "regular" government. Feb. 12, 1871, he wrote, under the title of Un dernier mot (a last word), a severe indictment against the men of the 4th September, and left Paris on the same day. On March 10 he was sentenced to death, in contumaciam, by a court-martial for the affair of October 31. A few days afterwards he was arrested and transferred to the fortress Taureau, whilst at Paris he was elected a member of the Commune, in the 18th district by 14,953 votes, and in the 20th by 13,859. In September 1872 Thiers ordered him to be confined at Clairvaux, his sentence to death having been changed to one of perpetual detention. In 1878 the revolutionary Socialists of Paris began an agitation in order to obtain the release of the veteran revolutionist and conspirator. They induced their friends, wherever a vacancy occurred, to put down Blanqui's name as their candidate, and after many vain attempts, they succeeded on Feb. 20, 1879, at Bordeaux. The French Chamber of course invalidated the election, but the result of the political agitation was, however, that Blanqui was liberated from jail. An old man of 75 years of age, having suffered one half of his lifetime in prison, very often under dreadful circumstances, which we cannot record here, Blanqui certainly would have deserved some rest; but his indomitable energy would not allow him to stop for one moment in his propaganda work. He organised meetings and delivered speeches at Marseilles, Nice, Bordeaux, St Etienne, Lyons. Nov. 3, 1880, he went to Milano, to honour the combatants fallen at Mentana, and a fortnight afterwards he started at Paris a new paper, Ni Dieu ni Maître (Neither god nor master). December 27 he took the chair at the meeting of the Rue Lecourbe, and made his last speech, a glorification of the revolutionary ideas for which he had struggled and suffered all his life through. During that very night he had an apoplectic stroke, and after two days' illness, passed away. An immense crowd, with red flags, made his funeral one of the largest demonstrations that have been witnessed at Paris. A bronze statue of Blanqui, lying dead in his shroud, was erected on his grave in 1885, and is one of the best works of the illustrious Dalou.

Blanqui was a Communist, but he first wanted to become master of the political machinery in order to overthrow the bourgeois régime, by means of a provisional dictatorship he would have edicted, in political and economical matters, a certain number of dispositions which would have by and by led the masses of the people to adopt Communism pure and simple. He laid down his views in the following works: 'Defence of Louis Auguste Blanqui before the Court of Assize,' Paris, 1832, 8vo; 'Reply of Auguste Blanqui,' Paris, 1848 (an eloquent answer to Taschereau's accusations against Blanqui being a denunciator and a mouchard); a collection of articles, signed Suzamel, on morals, monotheism, mixture of faith and science, etc.; 'La Patrie en Danger,' Paris, 1871, 8vo; 'A Political Prisoner in 1871,' Paris; 'Ni Dieu ni Maître,' Paris, 1880; 'La Critique Sociale,' 2 vols. 8vo, published by Granger, Paris, 1885. He also wrote various scientific works; among others, 'Concerning the Causes of Zodiacal Light'; 'Sidereal Eternity,' being an astronomical hypothesis; etc.—V. D.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Miss Joseph (Southview, Clevedon) writes for information "on the question of Socialism, bearing particularly in mind the past history of the subject, its definite aims, present position, and future prospects":

- BENOIT MALON—"Histoire du Socialisme," 5 vols. Derveaux, Paris. 45 frs.
- R. MEYER—"Emancipationskampf des Vierten Standes." 2 vols. Mehring, Berlin. £2.
- LACROIX ET GUYOT—"Histoire des Prolétaires." 1 vol. Derveaux, Paris, 10 frs. (about).

The foregoing are valuable in order named. An exhaustive series of articles on "Socialism from the Root Up," by William Morris and E. Belfort Bax, appeared in this paper some time ago; the numbers containing it can be sent if required. The article "Socialism" in last edition Encyclopædia Britannica, and the paper read by Mr. G. Bernard Shaw to the Economic Section of the British Association last year, published in November Our Corner (63 Fleet Street, 6d.) may also be read.

- J. G. (Edinbro')—The books you ask for are:
 - W. H. P. CAMPBELL—"The Robbery of the Poor." Modern Press, London. 1884. 8vo.
 - JNO. CARRUTHERS—"Communal and Commercial Economy." Stanford; London, 1883. 8vo. 9s.
- They shall be sent.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

JOHNSTON ENGINEERS.—At a special meeting of master engineers, it was decided to grant an advance of 1s. to the workmen, beginning on Jan. 1.

ALYTH MILLWORKERS.—The operatives in D. Smith and Sons spinning mills, Alyth, struck work on Dec. 21st. They demand an advance of 5 per cent. immediately.

EDUCATE, EDUCATE.—At Larkhall, Scotland, there is a miner who is a member of the School Board, and in the evening classes he is a member of the Board School. That is one phase of the labour struggle which it is worth while to reflect upon.

SHIPBUILDING TRADES.—The executive of the Boiler Makers and Iron Shipbuilders' Society have made a demand for a rise of 12½ per cent. in the wages of all their members in the shipyards on the Tyne and Wear, thus making the claim general on the north-east coast. If the advance be conceded the total improvement in wages during the past twelve months will have been 17½ per cent. It should be remembered, however, that the men suffered reductions during the four years' depression equal to 25 per cent.

SHALE WORKERS.—The Glasgow Mail's commercial man says:—"Gentlemen engaged in the oil trade fear that they will have some trouble with the shale miners, who are demanding an advance in wages owing to the colliers having received a rise. The oil companies state that they would be happy to concede the men a rise were the prices better for the manufactured article. However, there is a feeling that the various companies will require to grant the men some advance. Presently there is a good demand for burning oil." Is the "will require" not father to the "would be happy?"

SOUTH WALES COAL DISPUTE.—The wages dispute between the employers and the workmen in the South Wales coal trade continues. Mr. A. Thomas, M.P., speaking on the 28th last, in the Rhondda Valley, where he owns several collieries, expressed an earnest hope that the masters would agree to the demands of the men, and so revise the sliding-scale basis as to make it respond more rapidly to the rise and fall in the marketable price for coal. He had been severely condemned for having recently prophesied an increase of 15 per cent. in wages; but 5 per cent. had now been granted, and he had every confidence that before autumn the remaining 10 would follow.

SEAMEN'S STRIKE AT LIVERPOOL.—The Liverpool sailors and firemen are again making a request for more wages, and their demand in this instance is greater than the previous ones, being for an all-round advance of £1, or something like about 30 per cent. Circulars have been freely distributed amongst the men emanating from the "National Amalgamated Sailors' and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland," and as a result there was a good deal of excitement in the vicinity of the Sailors' Home, Canning Place, Monday. The rate of pay now demanded in the case of steamers is £4 5s. per month for firemen and £4 for sailors, whilst in the case of sailing vessels £3 5s. was asked for Baltic and Quebec ports, and £3 for southern voyages. A number of both steamers and sailing ships were down for signing articles, but in no case would a crew consent to go at the old rate of pay. Some of the steamers being bound to leave instantly had to pay the higher wages, but several sailing ships would not accede to the demand of the men, who appeared more united than they were on former occasions. The disaffected men kept a sharp look-out for any who might show a willingness to take the old wages, but notwithstanding this some men did sign at the old rates.

LONDON BOOT TRADE.—A meeting of manufacturers and workmen, appointed by their respective bodies, was held at Seyd's Hotel, Finsbury Square, on Monday, 31st, for the purpose of compiling a statement of wages for the whole of London. The meeting was the outcome of negotiations of a conciliatory character which have proceeded for some months between the representative societies, with the object of placing the relations between employers and workmen upon an amicable and workable basis, besides tending to prevent a continuance of the sweating system. Ten were appointed on each side, and although 13 workmen attended three withdrew on the voting taking place. In the first place a letter was read from Mr. Thomas Lilley (of Messrs. Lilley and Skinner, boot manufacturers), regretting his inability to attend, and adding that it had appeared clear to the delegates of the Trades Union and the members of the Employers Association that if a new statement was to be formed it should be sufficiently broad and comprehensive to embrace not only a limited section of the trade, but there should be an honest attempt to settle the whole question, and to make one statement of wages to which every manufacturer and every workman in London could fairly agree. At various subsequent meetings of manufacturers and workmen it was unanimously agreed that upon this broad basis a new London statement should be built. The task that lay before the board presented one of the most difficult problems the shoe trade had had to solve. Speaking on behalf of manufacturers, he said that what they were fully agreed upon was this—that if there was to be a London statement it must be one that every manufacturer in London and the suburbs should be compelled to work to, thus raising the status of the trade and putting an end to the present miserable system of sweating and other irregularities.—Mr. Freake, a workman, complained of the sweating system, and the chairman said that the employers were at one with the workmen in wishing to put it down.—A long discussion then took place upon a proposal emanating from the employers, to the effect that a comprehensive statement of wages for the whole of the metropolis should be drawn up, but this encountered opposition from the working men delegates, some of whom considered that the third-class rejected statement of five years ago should be made the minimum. Eventually the meeting adjourned for half an hour to discuss the matter in private. On reassembling the workmen asked that the resolution might be withdrawn, but this was not acceded to. An amendment was then submitted from the workmen, to the effect that the word "comprehensive" be omitted, and upon this being carried the resolution was unanimously agreed to as altered. The meeting was then adjourned till Thursday, when other resolutions will be considered.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The last returns to the Local Government Board from the various parishes and unions of the metropolis show the number of indoor poor to be 59,801, and outdoor poor 24,589 adults, 15,521 children under the ages of 16 years, or a gross total of 99,831, exclusive of lunatics, imbeciles, and inmates of various hospitals and institutions or of vagrants. The number at the corresponding period of last year was 102,559, being a decrease in pauperism of no less than 2,728.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

FRANCE.

The third national Congress of syndicates and corporative working men groups, held at Bordeaux and at Le Bouscat, some weeks ago, has voted, amidst others, the following resolution, as a means to ensure the application and execution of the various measures decided by the Congress. "Whereas, up to the present moment, the powers that be have always refused to listen to the isolated claims which have been laid before them, and that it is therefore urgent that such a situation should be put an end to, by presenting these revendications under a new, collective, general and more imposing form; further, that in order to give to that new movement a stronger weight, it is necessary to concentrate the action of all the syndicates upon a small number of revendications, i.e. those which are the most general and the most important, without thereby renouncing any other claims, the Congress resolves: 1. On Sunday morning, February 10, 1889, a delegation of all syndicates and corporative working men groups of France shall be sent, to the Prefecture of their department or to the mairie of their respective communes, in order to demand the following reforms: a. Eight hours workday; b. Fixing of a minimum of wages, corresponding in each locality with the normal cost of life, minimum to be enforced upon all employers of work. 2. On Sunday, February 24 following, the same delegation shall be sent to the same departmental or communal authorities to receive the result of their deliberations. In both instances the delegations shall be accompanied by an imposing mass of working men."

A very important Congress of Revolutionary Socialists has just been held at Troyes. More than 300 various Socialist organisations have sent delegates, and the first sitting of the Congress has been opened amidst over two thousand assistants. The population of Troyes is very sympathetic to the assembled workers, but the officials of Floquet's government have done their utmost to provoke disorder, but in vain. This Congress, not being one of the possibilist shape, all schools of Socialism are represented, and it is expected that the resolutions which shall be passed there will be of considerable importance as to the International Revolutionary Congress to be held next year at Paris.

At Cette, the native town of Rossel, who has been chief commander of the military forces of the Commune, there was until recently, a street called Thiers Street, after the name of that infamous little demagogue, who ordered Rossel to be shot at the plateau of Satory. The municipal council of that town has now decided to alter the denomination of this street, which will henceforth become The Rossel Street.

In three or four weeks there will be a legislative election at Paris, and General Boulanger has promised to stand as a candidate. Lively scenes, to be sure, will be witnessed on that occasion. The political clown, Henri Rochefort, who is Boulanger's Barnum, foresees 300,000 voters coming forward in favour of his favourite friend, and Floquet is quite upset at the idea that the Parisian people could vote for the "pretender." He is in search of the best man to oppose Boulanger; most likely Ranc, a renegade, or Vacquerie, a republican of the Victor Hugo stamp, will be the selected sheep. Boulanger's popularity and success being chiefly the outcome and result of the government's blunders, it is most likely that before the poll comes on they will make some egregious faults, so as to ensure the election of the man they fear most in France.

BELGIUM.

The glass-blower's industry suffers heavily from an acute crisis, which is likely to become disastrous to the workers of that trade. The small producers, ruined by the colossal production of the large firms, fail to find the usual credit at the bankers, and in all probability will ere long be compelled to stop work altogether, and the industry will then at once be monopolised in the hands of the large producers, who form between themselves a few but important financial companies. The workers now engaged in the small firms risk, therefore, to fall very soon out of work. The big companies mastering the market, will again be in a position to lower the wages, which, of course, will result in protests and in agitation; and if the glass-blowers resort to strike, a considerable number of other workers will be compelled to take the same course. In expectation of such events, it will be wise for the workers to commence to organise their forces in time, in order to succeed in the struggle they will have to face.

Some more workers have been arrested in connection with the last miner's strikes, and the government seem to do all they possibly can to irritate the working-people of the coal districts. Among those lately arrested is to be mentioned also Hector Conreur, one of the most sympathetic figures among the Socialist propagandists in those regions, and who, not long ago, was released from jail. The Belgian Nupkinses have already begun their "work." A series of strikers have been sentenced to six and seven month's imprisonment.

ITALY.

In our issue of Dec. 22 last, we wrote a few lines concerning a pamphlet which comrade Valera is about to issue at Milano. As it appears, we misunderstood his intentions; to what extent, however, the following letter will explain:

"Dec. 26th, 45, Theobald's Road, W.C.

"Dear comrades,—Comrade Victor Dave, who wrote a note on my pamphlet ('Lasciateme Passare') misunderstood its meaning. He says that 'I intend to persuade Socialists convicted for political offences to ask for pardon from their respective governments...'; I said the contrary. Not because I should shrink from giving them such advice, but because the governments, as soon as they became aware of our tactics, would not grant it. But if they were so stupid as to allow us to work for our cause, why should we hesitate between lying idle in prison cells or lost in foreign countries, and continuing to fight against that society which we wish to eradicate or pull down?"

"Because your temper of mind forbids it.

"Temper of mind! This is a false firmness of mind. Strength of mind consists in being faithful to the cause which I deliberately espoused and loyal to my friends; not in being a mere toy in the hands of my enemies.

"To talk of honour between me and them is nonsense.

"If, for instance, I want to pass a bridge in order to destroy something, no matter what, and my rulers compel me to take off my hat, I swear I would not go back.

"My ideal is higher and greater than a quarrel about a mere question of form. I shall bow to them perhaps to-day, but only to be their own hangman to-morrow.

"Moreover, my social hatred is not really directed against a certain set of men in power, but against all those classes which represent society at large, and which will not surrender booty derived from labour until they feel the revolutionary knife at their throats.

"Once cut the throats of our bloodsuckers, and we shall hear no more of liveried ministers and their royal masters.

"This, and only this, is the reason why I should like to see Socialists tramping on every prejudice—as long as there is no principle involved—in order to hasten direct towards those better days when work shall entirely be for the workers.—Yours sincerely,
"PAOLO VALERA."

Now our readers may judge for themselves. Comrade Valera will take off his hat in order to pass the bridge. . . . When his pamphlet comes to hand, we may have something more to say.

SWITZERLAND.

In reference to the circular of the National Council, dated May 11, 1888, by which a political police department has been instituted in Switzerland, and in further reference to the "secret instructions" issued by the various cantonal authorities, one of which secret documents we reproduced last week in this column, M. Locher, the newly-elected member for Zurich in the National Council, has introduced a proposition to the effect of cancelling the circular of last May, because it is altogether in contradiction with paragraphs 4, 55, and 56 of the Federal Constitution, as also with the regulations of the cantonal constitutions, regarding the rights of free speech and free meeting. M. Locher gave the best possible reasons in defence of his proposition, which, nevertheless, was negatived by 99 members of the Council. Poor "free" Helvetia, 99 councillors obeying Bismarck's orders, and not the slightest symptom of insurrection amongst the once so proud sons of Tell.

Comrade Hans Bächtold died last week at Bern, and was buried by all the friends of the labour movement in the canton. The name of Bächtold is closely connected with the history of the Socialist cause in Switzerland, and especially in the canton of Bern. He was one of the best committee members of the former Arbeiterbund, and has worked devotedly since the last eighteen years in the ranks of the Socialists. His power of organisation was unrivalled, and the proletariat has lost in him one of its ablest defenders.
V. D.

LETTER FROM AMERICA.

The following clipping from the Chicago Times of December 12th may be taken as a sign of the times:—

"The Socialistic Turner society of Lake View [a suburb of Chicago city] circulated printed cards yesterday announcing a free entertainment for Friday evening at Lincoln Turner hall. The programme consists of a lecture by Frau Hedwig Henrich-Wilhelmi upon "The Power of Faith," to be followed by a free discussion from the Socialists. Mayor Boldenweck immediately notified the manager of the Turner hall to inform the Socialists that the hall would not be opened for the entertainment. He further said that he would send word to the committee that they should not arrange for any more meetings, as none would be permitted while he was mayor of Lake View. At the police-station are stacks of rifles and cartridge-boxes containing twenty-five rounds of ammunition ready to be put on at a moment's notice. The captain said emphatically that no Socialistic meetings would be tolerated. In his weekly instructions to the policemen yesterday afternoon he said to them that should any officer wilfully neglect to report gatherings of the Socialistic Turner society, he would be relieved of his star."

For the purpose of holding their meetings the Socialists and Anarchists of Chicago have to resort to all the tricks and dodges used by the Russian Nihilists. And yet we are told we are living in a free country!

The committee appointed by the Senate of the State of New York to investigate the different trusts has completed its labour. Amusing was the testimony of the president of the cotton bagging trust, who spoke of the trust as a "sympathetic movement" on the part of the manufacturers.

Competition must go. Even railroad presidents say so. In a lecture delivered at a meeting of the Commercial Club of Boston, Charles Francis Adams, president of the Union Pacific Railroad, gave vent to the following remarkable utterances:

"Our present difficulty lies in a word—in the absence among railroad men of any high standard of commercial [mark the phrase] honour. These are strong words, and yet, as the result of a personal experience stretching over nearly twenty years, I make bold to say they are not so strong as the occasion would justify. The railroad system of this country, especially of the region west of Chicago, is to-day managed on principles which, unless a change of heart occurs, and that soon, must inevitably lead to financial disaster of the most serious kind. There is among the lines composing that system an utter disregard of those fundamental ideas of truth, fair play, and fair dealing which lie at the foundation not only of the Christian faith, but of civilisation itself. With them there is but one rule—that many years ago put by Wordsworth into the mouth of Rob Roy—

'The good old rule, the simple plan,
That he shall take who has the power,
And he shall keep who can.'

The railroads of this country are moving rapidly toward some great system of consolidation."

For his criticism of railroad "morals" Adams is to-day declared by his colleagues to be a crank, but they all sustain him in his belief that a combination of all the railroads of the United States is in the air. C. P. Huntington, the great railroad king of the west, says to-day: "When there is only one railroad company in the United States it will be better for everybody, and the sooner this takes place the better. I don't think we can move too fast. There are strong influences at work to bring about this consolidation." Chauncey M. Depew, the president of the large Vanderbilt system, said: "Mr. Adams' ideas on consolidation are excellent. The day is certainly coming when all the roads will be consolidated." Another railroad president expressed himself like this: "General union is the only salvation, and it is coming earlier than most people expect."

The trial against the alleged "Q" railroad dynamiters in Geneva, Ill., is proceeding.

Friday the 14th inst. a meeting has been organised by the A. R. Parsons Club in Cooper Union, New York City, to welcome Mrs. Parsons on her return.

On the 11th inst. the delegates of the American Federation of Labour met in convention in St. Louis, Miss. This is numerically the strongest labour organisation in the world, numbering 700,000 members in good standing.

It is characteristic of the capitalist press that the proceedings were hardly mentioned in the columns of the dailies. Samuel Gompers, president of the Federation, welcomed the delegates, and after having opened the congress, proceeded to read his annual address. He advocated a new eight-hour movement, and deprecated political action. As regards the coming international congress at Paris, he said it would not be wise to have so many international congresses in succession, but that the relations of American and foreign trades unions were of the most friendly character. Referring to the Knights, he said: "As regards the Knights of Labour, I can only state that their behaviour toward us has not assumed a more friendly nature. It seems—intentionally or unintentionally I know not—to be in their system to use their influence in the fights between capital and labour in favour of the capitalists. In this way they have met with some success during the last year." He went for Powderly as the czar of the Knights of Labour in red-hot style. The first and second days were spent principally in appointing committees. The treasurer submitted the following report: Balance on hand December 1st, 1887, 2,605 dollars; income 4,512 dols.; expenditure 3,933 dols. The third day was devoted chiefly to discussing whether or not the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners should be admitted in the Federation. The Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners is already admitted. A resolution to the effect that the Amalgamated Society be not admitted on the ground that it would be detrimental to the interests of labour to have more than one organisation in any trade admitted to the Federation created a good deal of discussion, and strong speeches were made in support of it. The resolution was finally adopted. A resolution was also adopted to employ organisers in all cities numbering more than 150,000 inhabitants. The delegates also resolved to recommend to the different unions the printing of a weekly organ of the Federation, and further to submit to Congress a Bill taking the children out of the control of the single States and putting them under the control of the national government. The Bill should also contain a paragraph prohibiting in the United States the employment of children under fourteen years of age. The eight hours movement engaged the attention of the delegates on the fourth day. The 1st of May 1890 was selected to introduce all over the United States the eight hours a-day system. The delegates resolved to organise on the 22nd of February 1889 (Washington's birthday), 4th of July (commemoration of independence), and the first Monday in September (Labour Day), all over the United States mass meetings for the purpose of agitating this question. A committee was appointed to draw up a manifesto to call on the bosses to grant the eight-hours day. A motion to increase the salary of the president from 1,200 to 1,500 dollars a-year was lost—26 against, 19 for. A motion to levy a weekly assessment of two cents per member for the purpose of creating a strike fund was adopted. The fifth and last day was devoted to the election of the officers. Samuel Gompers and P. J. McGuire were re-elected president and secretary. Boston, Mass., was chosen as the next meeting place of the convention.

Newark, N.J., December 18, 1888.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Library.—The Library is open to members of the Socialist League and affiliated bodies. LIBRARY CATALOGUE, containing the Rules, 2d. D. J. NICOLL and W. BLUNDELL are the Librarians.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, Jan. 7, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888: Clerkenwell and Leicester to December. Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Contribution fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will shortly appear.

Propaganda Fund.—R. Unwin, 3s. 6d.; K. F., 6d.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.
FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" PRINTING FUND.

K. F., 6d.; A. Seglie, 6d.; T. R., 6d.

NOTICE TO MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE.—Propaganda Committee meets on Tuesday, January 8th, at 8.30 p.m. Important business; all members who are interested in the propaganda are asked to attend.
D. J. NICOLL.

REPORTS.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road Sunday morning. Weal sold fairly; choir attended. Speakers were Lyne, sen., A. J. Smith, Dean, and Maughan. At Weltje Road, good meeting in evening by Mordhurst, Lyne, sen., and Maughan.

MILE END.—On Saturday evening, Gould, S.D.F., opened a very interesting debate on "Will Parliamentary Action help to bring about the Social Revolution?" Harding, S.D.F., occupied the chair. The opener was supported by White and Richardson, and opposed by McCormack, Cores, Davis, and Charles. The debate was adjourned till Saturday next.—H. D.

MITCHAM.—On Sunday last, a meeting was held at Clare Villas, Mitcham, of a number of the old members of the Mitcham branch. It was decided that the Fair Green, Mitcham, be the open-air station as heretofore, and the secretary be instructed to notify the S.D.F. of the fact, as there has been some misunderstanding upon the point. It was also resolved to acquire an indoor meeting-place at the earliest opportunity.

VICTORIA PARK.—Good meeting in Victoria Park on Sunday, addressed by Davis. Fair sale of Weal.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on 24th, Morris's lecture, "Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists," was read and discussed on Saturday night. Usual meeting at Castle Street addressed by Duncan, Aiken, and Leatnam.—J. L.

IPSWICH.—On Thursday evening Creed lectured in the Pioneer Hall; H. Brown in chair.—J. T.

NORWICH.—On Sunday afternoon usual meeting held in Market Place addressed by Mowbray. Very fair audience present. In evening Mowbray lectured in Gordon Hall. Fair sale of Commonweal.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Bloomsbury.—This Branch is now actively working. Socialists resident in this locality should send their names in at once to 13 Farringdon Road.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Sunday Jan. 6, at 8.30 p.m., Free Concert by members and Friends. Branch Members' Business Meeting at 7 p.m. sharp.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings are held on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Sunday January 6, at 8 p.m., William Morris, "Socialism."

Hackney.—Secretary, E. Lefevre, 14 Goldsmiths Sq., Goldsmiths Row, Hackney Road.

Hammersmith.—Kelmecott House, Upper Mall, W. Hoxton.—12, Basing Place, Kingsland Rd. Business meetings of this branch are held every Friday evening at 9 o'clock.

London Fields.—All communications, etc., to Mrs. G. G. Schack, 26 Cawley Road, South Hackney.

Mitcham.—Meets every Sunday, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road, at 11 a.m.

Mill-end and Bethnal Green.—95 Boston St., Hackney Road.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road. On Friday Jan. 11, Nicoll will open a discussion, the subject to be "The Social Revolution: the Means and the End. Members please attend at 8.30."

Waltham and Camberwell.—This branch is now in working order. Friends in this locality are earnestly invited to co-operate, and send their names in. Committee meetings every Monday, 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church St., Camberwell Green.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Secretary, P. Barron, 14 Ann Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meeting every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secy.

Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.

Galashiels (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secy.

Gallatown and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn St.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.

Ipswich.—Pioneer Hall, Tacket Street. Meets on Sunday evenings.

Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. McGill, 22 Gilmour St. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Rd. and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m. communications to T. Paylor, Leister.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 8, Gordon Hall. Monday, at 8, Lecture by Mowbray, subject "Life of Christ"; tickets 1d. each. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Hall open from 8 p.m. until 10.30. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Association.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½, Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

All persons who sympathise with the views of the Socialist League are earnestly invited to communicate with the above addresses, and if possible help us in preparing for the birth of a true society, based on equality, brotherhood, and freedom for all.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 6.

11.30...Latimer Road Station...Hammersmith Branch
11.30...Regent's Park.....Mainwaring
11.30...Walham Green, opp. Station.....The Branch
3.30...Hyde Park.....Hicks
3.30...Victoria Park.....The Branch
7.30...Broad Street, Soho.....Nicoll
7.30...Clerkenwell Green.....The Branch
7.30...Weltje Rd., Ravenscourt Pk.....Hammersmith.
Tuesday.
8.30...Fulham—back of Walham Green Ch. ... Branch

EAST END.

SUNDAY 6.

Leman Street, Shadwell 11 ...Cores.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.Ipswich.—

Sproughton, Wednesday evening.

Westerfield, Thursday evening.

Needham Market, Sunday morning and evening.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3.

LIMEHOUSE BRANCH S.D.P.—Sunday Jan. 6th, at 8.30, H. Davis will lecture on "Anarchist Communism v. Social Democracy."

DULWICH W. M.'s LIBERAL AND RADICAL CLUB, 108 Lordship Lane.—Mr. F. Verinder, "The Taxation of Ground Rents and Values." Thurs. Jan. 10, at 8.

All those desirous of helping in the work of the S.L. in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with comrade F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

LEICESTER.—A course of lectures on "Socialism, its Aims and Principles" is being delivered in Leicester Secular Hall. The fifth lecture will be delivered on Sunday January 20 by Graham Wallas—subject, "Property under Socialism."

THE SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—The Half-yearly Members' Meeting will be held at 13 Farringdon Road, E.C., on Saturday Jan. 12, at 8 p.m., when the attendance of all members is requested. Members please bring or send their subscription cards for audit.

SOUTH LONDON.—Friends who will help to establish a Branch of the Socialist League in South London will please place themselves in communication with C. Henze, 41 Bolton Street, Thomas Street, Kennington Park, S.E., or by letter to H. Hopkins, 17 Gairloch Road, Shenley Road, Peckham, S.E.

A meeting of the East-end Branches of the Socialist League will be held on Thursday Jan. 10, at 8 p.m., at the International Working Men's Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road, for the purpose of considering the advisability of forming one large English section of the Revolutionary Party in the East-end. Branch Secretaries please take notice. Friends and sympathisers are earnestly requested to attend.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE LITERATURE.

Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 3d.; Large paper, 6d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d.

"All for the Cause!" Song. Words by William Morris; Music by E. Belfort Bax. 4to, 4 pp. 6d. per dozen, 4s. 6d.

"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.

Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Order the Book from your bookseller, from this Office, or from Mrs. A. R. PARSONS, Publisher, 785 Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago.

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction.

With Portraits.

3d.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX

Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.

Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

WILLIAM REEVES, 185, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Just Published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Being seven Lectures, delivered on various occasions for the Socialist League.

Reeves & Turner, 196 Strand; or Commonweal Office.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity

New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

This journal is the organ of the Australian Socialist League. Copies may be had at the office of the Commonweal, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. 1½d. per copy, 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

Price 1d.; Post-free, 1½d.

THE RIGHTS OF LABOUR ACCORDING TO JOHN RUSKIN.

Arranged by THOMAS BARCLAY.

Second Edition.

"Your pamphlet is the best abstract of all the most important pieces of my teachings that has yet been done; and I am entirely grateful to you for doing it, and glad to have your letter."—Extract from letter received from Mr. Ruskin.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH ... at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

VOL. 5.—No. 157.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

THE LUDDITES.

"History is, indeed, mainly the biography of a few imperial men, and forces home upon us the useful lesson, how infinitesimally important our own private affairs are to the universe in general. History is clarified experience; and yet, how little do we profit by it! Nay, how should we expect it of those who so seldom are taught anything by their own? Delusions, especially economical delusions, seem the only things that have any chance of an earthly immortality."
—J. RUSSEL LOWELL, Speech at Dedication of Free Public Library, Chelsea, Mass.

THIS quotation more exactly fits its present place than many a quotation with which chapters are at times headed, for each sentence is pertinent to the subject in hand. For instance, how little do governments seem to learn of the clarified experience contained in the records, brief though they be, of popular agitations, revolts, and revolutions. That history is mainly the biography of a few men is very well borne out by the comparative space given to the Luddites as compared with the space given to, say Wellington, in most histories. In the 'History of England' by J. Franck Bright, for instance, while the reverend author gives about twenty pages to laudation of Wellington and his career in Portugal, twelve or sixteen lines is all that is given to the Luddites, who are drawn simply as a rabble of night rioters. Pages of praise for the filibusters who ravaged whole continents, and to whom the "black man" or Frenchman was simply vermin to be destroyed, but no word even of extenuation for the men who, only heroes of their own hearths and homes, dared death for the right to live at home.

Even J. R. Green, in his 'Short History of the English People,' a work which claims, and fairly, not to be a "drum and trumpet history" but a history of the people, can only give some ten lines of most passing mention to the Luddites, giving not the slightest detail, nor even mentioning that some twenty English people were done to death to vindicate Law-'n'-Order and appease Capital, which was in mortal fear.

"Delusions, especially economical delusions, seem to be the only things that have any chance of earthly immortality," says our late American minister and one time democratic poet. Seeing to-day the number of once firmly supported economic propositions, which are now allowed to be economic delusions—as, for instance, the "Wage Fund Theory,"—it may be that the whirligig of time will yet bring about a day when the abuse which has been showered on machine-breakers, will be qualified by admitting that the economist's laudation of machinery was proof of yet another "economic delusion," and that the so-called "poor deluded men" who in 1811-12 and 1816 formed an organisation to give practical expression to their objection to slow starvation, for the sole benefit of capitalist stocking and lace manufacturers, were not wholly wrong from the "greatest good of the greatest number" point of view.

In the 'Life of Lord Sidmouth,' by Dean Pellew, it is recorded that in 1779 there was living in a village in Leicestershire a person by name of Ned Lud; being somewhat of weak wits he was the butt of all the boors of the place. One day, driven to desperation, he chased one of his tormentors into the house of a stocking-maker, but not being able to catch the boy vented his rage by smashing up the stocking frames. This Lud seems to have thus furnished the title of an organisation, which for a time caused more concern to the English of the mid and north countries than the devilish work which was being carried on by English armies abroad. On those armies and their allies of Spain and Portugal, English money had been poured like water for years, while the people at home were by excessive taxation, bad harvests, and disorganised commerce, being driven to desperation. In the factories machinery was making its influence felt. Although the average price of wheat was 11s. per quarter, the handloom weavers of Glasgow had to work for 7s. 6d. per week; the makers of war material were the only prosperous people. Under these conditions trouble was certain, and as the winter of 1811 closed in the trouble came to a head.

On a Sunday afternoon in November, the workers stood about the market-place and streets of Nottingham and consulted what to do. A manufacturer at Bulwell hearing that he was to be attacked, gave out that he should arm his workmen and barricade his house. On Monday he was called upon to give up his frames, to which his reply was a shot, killing one of the besieging party, who thereupon retired, carrying away the dead man. Shortly the party returned with reinforcements, and the defenders had just time to get away by the back door as the storming party burst in. Frames and everything in the house was reduced to ashes. "Ned Lud" had been there, for by this time it had become common to denote in that way a stocking or lace frame had been damaged.

On Tuesday the Luddites waylaid a carrier, unloaded the frames, breaking the iron-work and burning the wood-work in the streets. At night they cleared a whole village of frames, and on the Wednesday, after destroying fifty frames, passed on to and destroyed a corn-mill, swearing vengeance against millers and corn-dealers as well as frame-masters.

On Thursday, the authorities thought it was time to act, and on Friday an application reached the Home Office. By Sunday, Nottingham was filled with local militia, and "tranquillity was restored," at least, so said Law-'n'-Order; but just exactly as the same report has often been given as to Chartism, Fenianism, and Nihilism, so Authority was proved a liar, for right on through the winter and the spring, and on again to winter, General Lud and his Luddites kept Law-'n'-Order busy. County after county, Derbyshire, Leicestershire, Lancashire, Cheshire, and Yorkshire, one after another experienced the attention of Ned Lud.

By an Act of 28th Geo. (ch. 55) frame-breaking was an offence punishable with fourteen years' transportation; but as this applied only to hosiery frames, not to lace and net frames, it gave Government an excuse for introducing two new coercion bills, which was done by Mr. Secretary Ryder on February 14, 1814. By one of those bills, frame-breaking was made a capital offence; by the other bill, the country magistrates were to make lists of all males over twenty-one years of age and select a sufficient number to act as "specials."

As one more proof of the beauties of parliamentary representation and the speed with which legislators can move—for their own defence—these bills passed the Commons in a week, the various divisions being 49 against 11; 40 against 15; second reading carried by 94 against 17, a resolution to adjourn the debate moved by Sir S. Romilly being lost by 80 against 15. Third reading carried without division on February 20th. In the "other place," as it is called, the opposition was somewhat stronger, "some of the lords," says a chronicler of the time, "speaking with even greater severity than had been used in opposition in the House of Commons." Readers of Macaulay or of parliamentary history of the Pitt period will remember mention of Gerard Hamilton, who by one great oratorical effort came to be known as "Single-speech Hamilton" of the Commons: it is worth mentioning when writing of the Luddites that Lord Byron can claim to be "single-speech Byron" of the Lords, for it was in opposition to the new coercion bill that Byron made his one parliamentary stroke for the English democracy. It was on February 27, on the motion for second reading, that Byron rose, unknown to almost every one in the place, and made a speech satirical, earnest, poetical, pleading and warning; the Cunningham Graham of the moment, he made exactly such a speech as we have of late become accustomed to from the ranchman-laird,—full of sympathy for the suffering, but as pearls before swine to his hearers, for "pruputty, pruputty, pruputty was then in a devilish bad way." The resolution was carried, a motion by Lord Lauderdale to adjourn till Monday being lost by 32 against 17; on March 5th passed third reading without division.

The bill having become law, was not allowed to grow cold; for as the agitation was kept actively going, there was plenty of reason given to put the Act to work. In spite of the streets of Nottingham being paraded by militia, hussars, infantry, and Bow Street officers, frame-breaking, was kept going. In Manchester, Huddersfield, Leeds, and Bradford, cloth-mills were sacked and burned. By the clever device of wearing soldiers' great-coats, parties of rioters moved about almost side by side with the regulars, and after doing damage were able to get clear away. In April some militia stores were visited by the Luddites, who thus supplied themselves with arms. As it was found that money was being freely offered to the local militia by Luddite messengers, it may have been that the defenders of the militia stores were not very earnest in their defence; any way it was deemed advisable to send down seven regiments of regulars in one week.

On April 30 the streets of Nottingham were placarded with bills offering a reward for the delivery of the mayor, dead or alive, to the Luddites. Two manufacturers, one of Huddersfield and one of Nottingham, were shot dead.

Some assistance was given by some members of the United Irishmen coming over. Some arrests were made, but no confessions could be extorted, even when at the trials before the special commission at Chester in May sixteen were condemned to death. Five of these were executed, eight transported, and the others imprisoned.

Bread and flour was, although now summer had arrived, getting still dearer, flour being 7s. per stone. At Sheffield the flour dealers were visited by a very strong deputation of some thousands, and persuaded to sell at 3s. per stone. Roofs were stripped of all sheet-lead, gutter-spouts, pumps, and all other lead procurable, was used to make Luddite bullets; and in June eight more Luddites were hanged, this time at Manchester.

THOMAS SHORE, jun.

(To be concluded).

"THE PRINCE AND HIS HAND."

I WAS attracted the other day by a heading in the Pall Mall Gazette, "A Manchester Merchant Prince." It turned out to be an account of the life of John Rylands, who died recently. It related how he began his industrial career while at school by buying a bundle of trinkets cheap at a sale and disposing of them again to his playmates, realising by the transaction a handsome profit. His next step was to engage an old nurse of the family and her husband to do weaving for him, paying them out of the funds he had in hand; and the result was the realisation of still further substantial profits. From these small beginnings he went on, until he dies as chief of probably the largest manufacturing and mercantile concern in the entire world. About fourteen years ago, when the business was converted into a limited liability company (or as I have heard my father call them, "a company with unlimited ability to lie") the capital was two millions; since then the development has been even more rapid than before, and now no fewer than twelve thousand "hands" are employed by the company. Poor "hands"! I happened to know one when I was in Manchester, and perhaps it may not be a waste of time to set the condition and income of some of these "hands" beside the income of the man of whom the Pall Mall says "not only many a monarch but many a State has an income which, compared with the annual receipts of John Rylands, would fall almost into insignificance."

Now amongst other things Rylands and Sons, Limited, make shirts—that is, their "hands" make them and they sell them; and the friend I alluded to, the wife of an accountant's clerk who had been for some time out of work, through no fault of his own that I could find, was at last driven to seek work in Rylands' shirt-factory. There were about 500 girls employed there making shirts of various kinds; the kind she had to make were the cheap cotton shirts which working people wear—the fine white ones being kindly reserved by providence for those who do not work; of course, quite right, the working people could not keep them clean! For the making of these shirts the handsome sum of one penny each was paid for men's and three farthings for boys'. The pieces were cut out roughly by machinery, and the making included trimming them, fitting them together, and finishing the shirt, all except the buttons and button-holes, which were done by other hands and paid for with a few pence per dozen shirts, I do not remember the exact amount. At this work she could earn in a week from four to five shillings if there was plenty of work to keep her going all the time, but often there was not, or the machine broke down or several other things happened, and then she would bring home any less sum; I have known her bring home one shilling, after spending nearly the whole week at the factory; for it was only sometimes that they would allow them to go home when there was no work, they were often kept in their places for days waiting for some work to come in.

Very often her earnings were all that the two of them had to live upon, and I have known them go for weeks when they had only on an average sixpence a day to spend on food, light, and coals for the two of them. Thus lived one of Rylands' "hands"! But then they were not probably born with the business faculty; in fact I remember my friend pawning her wedding-ring to help some one in still worse straits, and of such is not the kingdom of "merchant princes," to which Mr. Rylands belonged. Driving a hard bargain with school-mates for trinkets and using the proceeds to pay a paltry wage to an old nurse for doing some weaving for him,—that is a much more likely beginning for a man who is to make his fortune in this world as things now are! I have no wish to draw special attention to Mr. Rylands' character, as I know little of him; probably he was no worse than the rest of millionaires who have died recently or are still living; the only evil I accuse him of is dying a millionaire; and I do not forget that had I been born with the business faculty largely developed, very possibly I should have been studying how to increase my fortune instead of writing for the Commonweal this Sunday afternoon.

But taking Mr. Rylands, not individually but as a type of the successful business man, I think we may fairly use his life to illustrate how our present system works and what its rewards. The man who rises gets his first start through "cuteness;" he makes a little money by some sharp bargain and then employs it to get a "hand" or two extra to work for him in some line of work where his cuteness has shown him that there will be a good margin between the price he will have to pay for his labour and the sum for which he can sell the product his hands will make, or in other words he looks out for the ine of business where the difference between the value of a man's labour and what it is necessary to pay him for it, is the greatest, and this difference he seeks to pocket as fast as he can, giving all his attention to keeping the difference as great as possible; he lives carefully at first, and uses the extra wealth which he saves from the labour of each of his hands to build workshops and factories and set still more hands on to earn wealth for him. Soon, if his cuteness continues to serve him, he becomes immensely wealthy, and finally dies worth millions. He may have done nothing to benefit the community, nay, he may have greatly injured it by fostering some unhealthy want; at the best he has simply been cute enough to get business into his own hands, which, but for him, others would have done, and for doing this he is enabled to leave his children in a position in which, by the exercise of the smallest amount of common sense, they may be able to live like princes for all future generations, they and their children after them, without doing a stroke of useful work for the community, which will have to support them thus in luxury. This has been going on for generations now, until we have a vast class of the children of such men being kept in idleness and luxury by the community; so vast is this class of idlers and so great is their capacity for consuming wealth that although the workers toil from morn till night; although the means of production have been so improved that the work of days can now often be done in a few minutes; and although the amount of wealth produced has increased out of all proportion to the increase of population; yet, after supplying these idlers with what they require, the workers have not enough left to keep them from starvation! And, as we saw, a woman after making a shirt, and doing her share towards supporting the idlers, has left for herself but one penny!

What is to be done then? Why! what but to give over supporting the idlers, of course, and let them work for their own luxuries if they want them—then there would be plenty for all the workers.

RAYMOND UNWIN.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING JANUARY 19, 1889.

13	Sun.	1790. Monasteries suppressed in France. 1794. Trial of Maurice Margarot for seditious practices. 1878. Reception of Davitt and others in Dublin on their release.
14	Mon.	1858. Orsini's attempt upon Louis Napoleon. 1858. Conspiracy Bill in England. 1868. Arrest of Barrett for Clerkenwell explosion. 1823. Peter Lavroff born.
15	Tues.	1798. Trial of Angus Cameron and James Menzies for sedition. 1841. Barrère de Viensac died. 1887. Father McGlynn inhibited and deprived.
16	Wed.	1798. Trial of Patrick Finney for high treason. 1840. Sentence of death passed on John Frost, Zephaniah Williams, and Wm. Jones. 1888. Jean Baptiste André Godin died.
17	Thur.	1706. Benjamin Franklin born. 1824. Lord Erskine died. 1863. Edward Duffy found dead in his cell at Millbank. 1880. Unemployed in Hyde Park; 30,000 said to be out in building trades alone. 1885. Unemployed at Mansion House.
18	Fri.	1796. French flag hoisted on the Tower of London by a schoolboy causes panic. 1865. Pierre Joseph Proudhon died. 1868. Fenian proclamation posted on the Mansion House. 1871. German Empire proclaimed at Versailles. 1883. The Russian "Holy League" dissolved. 1888. John Burns and Cunninghame Graham tried for riot.
19	Sat.	1561. Thomas Venner executed. 1764. Wilkes expelled the House of Commons. 1863. Founding of La Libre Pensée at Brussels, an association for secular funerals. 1872. The Sagasta ministry, Spain, proclaims the International.

Peter Lavroff.—Peter Lavroff, the most important representative of the revolutionary Socialist movement in Russia, was born in 1823 at Melechow, a village in the Velikoluck district of the government of Pskow. According to Przedswit, he was first educated at home, and only in 1837 entered the School of Guards and then the College of Artillery. 1843 he became an officer in the Russian army, and soon afterwards started his lectures on mathematics at the last named college, and continued them up to 1866. He also taught advanced mathematics in a special class of the Constantine Military Academy. In 1855 he took part in the defence of the Neva against the English fleet, but had no opportunity for actual fighting. At the same time he was a member of the St. Petersburg Municipality and Common Council. He first took to writing poetry, and some of his poems were afterwards published abroad by Alexander Herzen. In 1852 he contributed military and scientific essays to General Bogdanowicz's 'Military Encyclopedia.' His more important scientific and literary career, however, began only with the reign of Alexander II. From 1856 onward he wrote a good deal on philosophical topics, his work on Hegel especially engrossing public attention. In 1860 Lavroff gave three public lectures on philosophy, for the benefit of the Russian Literary Association, these being the first secular addresses since Nicholas had abolished the philosophical chair at the University. He was arrested in 1866, after Karakozow's attempt, under Muravieff's dictatorship, and finally deported to the province of Wologda, to remain there under police supervision. From that time down to 1870, when he succeeded in flying abroad with the assistance of Lopatin, he contributed articles and essays to the Russian reviews under the assumed name of "Mirtow." Then it was that he wrote his famous 'Historical Letters' which exercised such a tremendous influence on the Russian youth and produced so many heroes and heroines to the cause of social revolution in the land of despotism and czarism. Lavroff now went to Paris, where he became acquainted with Eugène Varlin, who induced him to join the International Workingmen's Association, and, as a member of that body, he came to London, 1871, in order to obtain for the Commune the assistance of the General Council. On this occasion he made the acquaintance of Marx and Engels. In 1872 he received from Russia a proposal to publish a Socialist review, and accordingly, in the ensuing year, appeared the first number of Wpered (Forwards!). At first published at Zürich, the editorial staff came in 1874 to London. Wpered was the organ of the Russian propagandists, in opposition to which Bakounin started the publication of pamphlets advocating immediate rebellion. The great Anarchist objected to slow propaganda, but wanted to revolt and stir up at once the working classes. Bakounine's influence prevailing in Russia, Wpered suspended its publication in 1876. Soon after Wpered's first appearance, Rabotnik (Worker) and Nabat (Alarm-bell) were also started, the last one in direct opposition to Lavroff. Nabat was edited by Peter Tkatcheff, who began by launching against Lavroff a violent and libellous pamphlet, stating that the eminent Socialist was rendering services to the reaction, a sort of venomous imputation which scurrilous people have always in readiness to discredit those who do not happen to be their friends. Again settled at Paris, 1877, Lavroff resumed his relations with the French Socialists and contributed to the Egalité of Jules Guesde. At his own residence he lectured weekly on the Commune and on the events that preceded it. These lectures were subsequently published in book form. Therein he showed that the gigantic uprising of Paris became a failure for want of a definite social-political programme and strong organisation lines. The arrest and impending extradition of Leo Hartmann led to a still closer connection with French Socialists and even Radicals and it was owing to Lavroff's strenuous agitation that Hartmann was at last liberated and able to leave Paris for London, escaping the Czar's clutches. When in 1881 revolutionary Russia organised the "Red Cross Society" for the purpose of assisting Socialist prisoners, Lavroff and Vera Zaslitch were entrusted with the collection of contributions abroad. An appeal published in some French newspapers, with a view of inducing Continental sympathisers to contribute, led the government to expel the valiant revolutionist. Once more in London, he soon received from the Executive Committee of the "Narodnaia Volia" (the People's Will party) the editorship of a new review which was to be the foreign organ of that party. Meanwhile he managed to return to France, without, however, the decree of expulsion being withdrawn. Lavroff published then the Messenger of the People's Will jointly with Tichomiroff, who recently passed from the party of the revolutionary Socialists to that of the Czar. Here again Lavroff was basely calumniated by unlicensed diplomatists à la Madame de Novikoff, and sham Radicals à la T. P. O'Connor, a whole score of whom would not reach Lavroff's ankle. In the course of the year 1872, Lavroff, being a member of the Anthropological Society of Paris, had a brilliant discussion there with Dr. Pellarin, which afterwards was published from the record of that society under the title of L'idée du progrès dans l'anthropologie (The idea of progress in anthropology). But Lavroff's writings being chiefly in the Russian tongue, we may as well, following Przedswit, give some outline of the thoughts with which he has been feeding revolutionary Russia for more than thirty years. His favourite theme is to analyse the relations of morality to revolutionary activity. He doesn't agree with those scientists who believe that morality is innate to man. On the contrary, an examination of morality with different people at various times leads to the conclusion that man evolves morality under the influence of surrounding conditions, and chiefly under that of communal social life. Thus morality may be termed that which affords general social advantage. Absolute morality doesn't exist: what is good for society at the time is moral. Man's purposes and aspirations differ, some being good, others less so. It must, however, be admitted that a man is fully entitled to select, as his purpose, his freedom of action, the possibility of continual self-development, the possibility of utilising all his faculties. Does the present social order allow the varied development of man's aptitudes and insure to them perfect freedom of movement? In the present capitalistic order a small class exploits an enormous majority. Can a working-man, who toils all day long, think of developing his faculties, can he act freely? No, he is mostly even unable to live regularly, he cannot even satisfy his most important wants. Thus the present order prevents the large majority even from satisfying their needs, and all the more so from developing their aptitudes. It is bad, then, and must be fought against. Each one individually and all collectively are therefore justified in aspiring to undermine this order. The present social order being bad, and its overthrow advantageous to society, all means leading to that goal are then good. Accordingly, it is moral to use the most violent means for the crushing out of that order, whereas it becomes immoral not only to counteract these violent means, but even to look on indifferently at the fighting parties. Science having shown that Socialism alone can satisfy all the needs of modern societies, since it is the only system that does away with all exploitation, Socialism therefore is the highest good, to which every man is morally bound to aspire. The Socialist ideal is so high and so great, and so beneficial to the whole of society, that everything must be sacrificed to that ideal; as compared to the realisation of Socialism, everything becomes narrow, unimportant, subordinate. The conclusion is easy enough: it is the necessity of revolution, since no class has ever voluntarily renounced its power and privileges; on the contrary, the ruling classes have used all efforts to retain these, even at the cost of their lives. Only by force one can come to his rights; thus the proletariat must conquer "society" in order that society may be realised. Revolution is unavoidable; it is immoral to teach that peaceful overthrow of capitalism is possible, since history and experience teach the reverse. What high prices had humanity to pay for its progressive development! What sufferings to undergo before science and art and industry became possible, before those institutions from which "civilised" societies derive their present advantages were possible, before states were united, before exchange was introduced! Slavery, bloody wars, dark superstitions. When man of present time benefits by certain institutions, he has the moral duty of showing his gratitude to humanity by working himself at its further progress and development. As regards the agitators, Lavroff points out that nowadays when science is the property and privilege of the few, popularisation of knowledge in larger circles is even more important than the discovery of new truths, since there already exist many truths unknown to the general public, who therefore cannot make proper use of them. To-day the most important task is to agitate against the existing order, since humanity can only then derive benefit from science, art, industry, when all things will be accessible to all. Purely scientific work has not therefore at present that usefulness that it shall have later on. When Socialism shall be triumphant, all will be admitted to knowledge, and then science will be properly applied. To-day he contributes most to science who strives to overthrow the present order, since only when all shall be happy science will be universal, which means really and universally useful, when prejudices will have disappeared, then only we shall get a true varied science that in its course will progress apace. So far, a social worker, a Socialist agitator, is more useful to humanity than a scientist, and therefore every individual has the moral duty of fighting for his ideals, even when he feels himself without allies. In all his writings Lavroff lays stress on the enlightenment of the masses, and is very sharp against those sham Socialists who maintain that it will then only be possible to think of the Social Revolution when capitalism will have reached its highest pitch and small production will have completely disappeared. He maintains that the enlightenment of the masses can lead to a revolution before the accumulation of capital is entirely completed, and that the working classes, at any rate, are in a position to accelerate the ultimate crisis. He also considers that the realisation of Socialism will cause an entire downfall of all religion, for at present the working-man sighs faintly for heaven, and gladly imagines another and better world, finding but misery in this one, from which he turns his eyes in fright and looks for an ideal. But with the disappearance of misery, with the crushing of the present prison-like society, with the reign of the new order, when man will become free, when sad life will make room for pleasant life, ugly-looking life for artistic enjoyment, when the master will disappear,—then religion will vanish along with him. These ideas and many others are embodied in Lavroff's works, 'Social Revolution and the Task of Morality,' 'Historical Letters,' etc., etc. The great Russian thinker is now busily engaged in a new extensive work, which is to be his scientific will to his native country. And we devoutly wish that health and strength may be fully continued to him for the achievement of that monument of his intellectual life which will give to many a coming generation better prospects and higher hopes towards a brighter and happier future.—V. D.

Edward Duffy.—Fenian leader and martyr; was born at Ballaghaderreen, county Mayo, in 1840; found dead in his cell at Millbank, January 17, 1868. In 1863 he threw up the situation he then held and gave himself entirely to the Fenian propaganda in Connaught, becoming "the life and soul of the Fenian movement west of the Shannon." He was captured at Sandymount Nov. 11, 1865, along with James Stephens, C. J. Kickham, and Hugh Brophy, but was allowed bail in the following January, as he was dying of consumption. No sooner was he out than he was at work again. Rearrested at Boyle on March 11, he was tried on May 21, and sentenced to fifteen years penal servitude. In his speech before sentence he said: "The dream of my life has been that I might die fighting for Ireland. The jury have doomed me to a more painful but not less glorious death. I now bid farewell to my friends and all who are dear to me. I am proud to be thought worthy of suffering for my country; when I am lying in my lonely cell I will not forget Ireland, and my last prayer will be that the God of Liberty may give her strength to shake off her chains." He is buried in Glasnevin cemetery, near Dublin, where the concluding words of his speech from the dock are inscribed on his tombstone.

French flag on the Tower.—When the royal standard was flying at the Tower to mark the Queen's birthday, the son of the deputy-chaplain, a youth of seventeen named Grose, hoisted over the ramparts a silk tricolour three yards wide and long in proportion. It continued flying for three hours before it was discovered by the garrison, and gave rise to the wildest rumours and conjectures. When the authorities at length heard of it, the mayor of the Tower went himself to strike it, but taking in his loyal haste a wrong turning, it was gone ere he reached it. A diligent search traced it to the boy's bed, and he, with a confederate named Hayward, was expelled from the Merchant Taylors' School "as young men of dangerous principles." Hayward's father appealed to the Merchant Taylors' Company to get his son re-seated, but in vain; on the 5th of February, when his appeal was heard, its rejection was immediately followed by the granting a holiday to the rest of the boys, "to reward and confirm the spirit of loyalty they had displayed," whereupon the boys presented a suspiciously eloquent address "expressive of their abhorrence of all seditious and republican principles."—S.

The following notes were crowded out last week:—

Victor Noir.—Victor Noir, a young journalist who was sent by Paschal Grousset, one of the editors of La Marseillaise—Rochefort's paper—to Prince Pierre Bonaparte at Auteuil, near Paris, in order to ask for a retraction of the insults he threw on Rochefort or else a reparation by way of a duel, was simply shot down by that princely brigand. The murder in itself was not very astonishing; in the family of the Bonaparte murder is an ordinary course that has been taken oftentimes in order to get rid of difficulties. As for Pierre Bonaparte, he murdered in cool blood several people in Belgium, in Turkey, and at Rome. Victor Noir was but another victim of that wholesale assassin. The revolutionaries of Paris resolved to take advantage of the funeral of Victor Noir to try an insurrection at Paris. Three hundred thousand people assembled, a considerable number of them armed and ready for action, Blanqui came on purpose from Brussels to Paris for that occasion. The revolutionary masses wanted the cortège to pass through Paris on their way to the Père-Lachaise, instead of going to the cemetery of Auteuil, at some distance from Paris. But Rochefort, who at that time possessed great influence among the Parisians, dissuaded the masses of the people from listening to those who seriously meant revolution, and his advice was followed, however reluctantly. The real reason of Rochefort's action was, everyone now knows, the astounding cowardice of that humbug politician who has already done more harm to the cause of Socialism and revolution in France than a score of genuine enemies would be able to do. Anyhow the demonstration clearly showed to the supporters of the Third Empire that their adversaries in Paris were legion, and that very soon the day would dawn when the Bonaparte dynasty would sink in the dust.—V. D.

Galileo.—Born 1564; died at Arcetri, 1642. It was not an easy undertaking, in those days, to contradict the teachings of the Bible; and yet Galileo, thinking that the interests of truth are greater and nobler than those of self-preservation, did so, and suffered dreadfully for the sake of truth and science. That great discovery in the planetary system, first made by Copernicus, that the sun is the centre of the universe, and that around that centre gravitate Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, the Earth, was confirmed and developed by Galileo, who, besides, illustrated himself by discovering the force of gravity, the hydrostatical balance, the proportional compasses, the composition of the telescope, the constitution of the Milky Way, the rotative movement of the sun, the generations of the comets, the four satellites of Jupiter, and new theories of dynamics. In 1589 Galileo was professor of mathematics at the University of Pisa, where the great success of his teachings stirred up against him a great number of enemies, among whom the peripatetics were prominent. They finally compelled him to resign (1592), but the Republic of Venice offered him a professorship at Padua, where he met with the same gigantic success. At last, in 1615, the Roman Inquisition summoned him to appear before its dreadful tribunal. The Jesuits accused him of having destroyed heaven and earth by immobilizing the sun and making our globe freely evolve in the infinite space, and he was at once put in an in-pace of the Minerva monastery, laid in chains, and tortured by the tormentors of the Inquisition, before whom he appeared in shirt and barefoot. The acute pains which he suffered at the hands of these religious brigands led him to a retraction of the scientific propositions he had established; but at the same time his conscience burst open and he exclaimed, "E pur si muove!" (And yet it moves!) Galileo only escaped the bloody clutches of the inquisitors to be shut up for the remainder of his life in a solitary house at Arcetri, where he was not allowed to perform any kind of scientific researches. The Inquisition, however, gave an "intellectual" occupation to the great and illustrious man: he was ordered to recite, all the year through, the psalms of penance! Broken down by all those persecutions, Galileo languished some years more in his Arcetrian prison, comforted only amidst all his sorrows by the affectionate love of his daughter Maria Celesta. Nearly all the works, the scientific observations, the plans, the astronomical calculations and computations which Galileo had made during his long life were destroyed and dispersed as "infected with heresy." Yet he had done enough in order that his name be for ever more associated with the names of those who have been the forerunners of modern science and the harbingers of every progress in the world.—V. D.

Men only associate in parties by sacrificing their opinions, or by having none worth sacrificing; and the effect of party government is always to develop hostilities and hypocrisies, and to extinguish ideas.—Ruskin, 'Fors,' No. 1.

If the law to hang thieves must continue, I wish it may take hold of the great ones first, lest we renew the practice once in Athens, where they hanged none but little thieves, and the great thieves pronounced sentence. I am more afraid of those that rob by power of the law, than of those that endeavour to take my purse on the highway.—W. Cole, A Rod for the Lawyers, 1659.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HATED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON!

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. B.—Thanks, but unsuitable.

T. R.—The Pall Mall was established 1865 by George Smith, of Smith, Elder, and Co., as a Conservative organ; transferred in 1880 to Henry Yates Thompson, his son-in-law, who changed its politics to Liberal, and is still the proprietor. Editors, Frederick Greenwood (1865-1880), John Morley (1880-1883), and W. T. Stead. Published at 2d. till Jan. 1st, 1882, when it was first sold at 1d. On the 1st of this month it changed its shape from its familiar 16 small pages to the ordinary 8 large.

CONTENTS.

		PAGE.
The Luddites	THOMAS SHORE, jun.	9
"The Prince and his Hand"	RAYMOND UNWIN	10
Revolutionary Calendar—Peter Lavroff; Edward Duffy; French Flag on the Tower; Victor Noir; Galileo	H. H. SPARLING and V. DAVE	10
Notes on News	WM. MORRIS and H. H. SPARLING	12
To the Hammersmith Choir	WALTER CRANE	12
Correspondence		12
Education: What it is, and what it should be (continued)	DANIEL McCULLOCH	13
Literary Notes		13
The Labour Struggle		14
International Notes	H. SCHEU	14
"An Excellent Experiment"	G. CORES	14
A Call to Arms	D. NICOLL	15
Conventionalism—Extreme Specialisation and Sub-division of Labour—Dry Rot—Smash!		15
The Brothers		15
Executive Business, Reports, etc., etc.		15
Lecture Announcements, Notices of Books, etc., etc.		16

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday January 9.

ENGLAND	Alarm	SPAIN
Church Reformer	Workmen's Advocate	Barcelona—El Productor
Christian Commonwealth	Boston—Woman's Journal	Seville—La Solidaridad
Justice	Chicago (Ill)—Vorbote	Barcelona—Tierra y Libertad
Labour Tribune	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	Madrid—El Socialista
Labour Leader	Fort Worth (Tex)—South West	PORTUGAL
London—Freie Presse	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
Norwich—Daylight	FRANCE	GERMANY
Personal Rights Journal	Paris—Cri du Peuple (daily)	Berlin—Volks Tribune
Railway Review	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	AUSTRIA
Telegraph Service Gazette	Le Proletariat	Wien—Gleichheit
To-Day	La Revolte	Brunn—Arbeiterstimme
Worker's Friend	Le Coup de Feu	HUNGARY
NEW SOUTH WALES	L'Union Socialiste	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik
Hamilton—Radical	HOLLAND	ROUMANIA
INDIA	Hague—Recht voor Allen	Jassy—Municipiorul
Bankipore—Behar Herald	BELGIUM	SWEDEN
Madras—People's Friend	Ghent—Vooruit	Malmö—Arbetet
UNITED STATES	Antwerp—De Werker	WEST INDIES
New York—Der Sozialist	Liege—L'Avenir	Cuba—El Productor
Truthseeker Annual	ITALY	MEXICO
Freiheit	Rome—L'Emancipazione	Sinaloa—Credit Foncier
Truthseeker	Cremona—L'Eco del Popolo

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE Pall Mall Gazette has been handselling its new and very disagreeable format by turning on its jingo stop most vigorously, though it is true that this is nothing new to it, as it is often smitten with a very acute form of the disease of loyalty to the British Empire. This time its old boss, Mr. Morley, comes in for it; and what seems a little ominous is that Admiral Maxse, a very hard-shell Coercionist, is turned loose on him and not rebuked for his snarl. Mr. Morley is compared, much to his disadvantage, to the Whig turfite, Lord Rosebery, and in short the ex-editor is well whipped for one of his merits, perhaps his only one, an instinctive dislike to Jingoism.

It is difficult to see how all this can go on along with the advocacy of Home Rule; for what it means really is "our empire, right or wrong!" And no reasonable man who looks at the thing with other eyes than those of an election agent, doubts that the establishment of Home Rule would be a serious blow to that elaborate machinery of violence and fraud called the British Empire. Mr. Morley has the grace to see that it is a preposterous insult to logic to protest against coercion in Ireland when you are advocating coercion in Egypt and the Soudan, and therefore he certainly is guilty of the crime of anti-Jingoism.

It is a pity he cannot be a little more logical, and learn to see that our buccaneering wars and Christian heroes are just incidents in the huge commercial war that has made England so "great" and so unhappy, and that those whose mission it is to "civilise" barbarism by the introduction of wage-slavery cannot be nice about their means. One day it is rum-and-bible, another sword-and-bible, but cheap wares and sweating are what both these instruments are used for alike; and horrible as the slaughter of the bullet is, it is not more horrible than the slower process of the sweater if we could only see the latter as plainly. Mr. Morley can never answer Admiral Maxse and the Pall Mall effectively till he sees clearly that nothing can save the barbarians of Africa from the dreadful life which civilisation is preparing for them, but the speedy realisation of Socialism.

The papers which have been commenting on the last new Yankee joke, the electric sugar fraud, are astounded that people were taken in by an inventor who promised them to remove the dross from a pound of raw sugar without decreasing its weight. But this is a very mild form of a modern commercial miracle. Here is a much stronger one. You send a pound of thrown silk to the dyer, and he first takes from it something less than a quarter of a pound of gum which the worm has put on it, and then sends it back to you dyed black and weighing two pounds and a quarter; and you have no difficulty in convincing the public that the additional weight is all the work of the long dead silk-worm, instead of being, as it really is, made up of coarse materials and what-not of secret.

I call the Yankee inventor a very uninventive and timid person for not promising at least three pounds of sugar instead of one, without doing anything to it. It would only have been a parable of the present monopolist society.

W. M.

Motto for The Star for 1889—"Go on! Die going on!"—Browning.

On Saturday the readers of the Star saw the foregoing at the head of the editorial notes, and many wondered what it could mean. Is the Star going to stop, and is this a gentle warning of the dread event? As for the applicability of the motto, that is another matter, during its brief existence the Star has done more of "strategic movement to the rear" than any other paper of its size.

If it keeps up (or down) to its record in that regard as well as in general character, the only motto entirely appropriate will be found in the well known word of command of the colonel of the historic North Cork Militia: "Advance two steps backward, and dress by the gutter!"

S.

TO THE HAMMERSMITH CHOIR.

SWEET voices broke my sleep on Christmas morn:
Clear through the moonlit air their anthem rung
Of human hope and fellowship that sung—
A mass for souls, not dead, but yet new born:
A herald blast on Freedom's silver horn
As dayspring on the brooding darkness flung,
With tidings of new joy on tuneful tongue—
The marching songs of Labour travel-worn.

As one in dreams I heard, and wondering rose,
E'en as the shepherds marvelling of old
To hear the angels quiring; and my blood
Quickened to catch at last their stirring close;
And to my heart took hope and courage good
In thought of days to be, in time untold.

Christmas, 1888.

WALTER CRANE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEAR SIR,—I read Commonweal every week with much pleasure, and am with you in thought and aim in your efforts—the social regeneration of humanity. I read with much pleasure your notes in reply to that gospel-grinder McCree. If London is in need of a few more such men, Bristol can well spare at least a hundred. They tell us to keep our eyes heavenward, to hate all Socialists, to be thankful for what we have, what we haven't got let us hope would render us miserable if we had it. Such men as McCree tell me that Commonweal is a very wicked paper to read. One of McCree's class told me that since reading your paper I had got very discontented. If he never spoke the truth before, he did then. Discontented I am, for it is the great preliminary to all progress. The amount of poverty here in Bristol is very great; work is very slack. I send you a few newspaper cuttings; perhaps they may be interesting.—Yours fraternally,
Bristol, January 7th, 1889.

W. J. BLACKMORE.

[The cuttings include a column of the Bristol Mercury filled with the fulsome "charitable" appeals of the advertising parson, each anxious to impress the public that "Codlin's the friend, not Short"; a report of the "Happy New Year" speech delivered by the mayor to the Town Council, in which he took a roseate view of everything; and a discussion which followed on granting holidays to the workmen employed by the Corporation. This last we shall comment on in our next issue.—Ed.]

EDUCATION: WHAT IT IS, AND WHAT IT SHOULD BE.

(Continued from p. 410.)

WITH this one splendid exception there is nothing to admire, little that can be approved of, in what we call our Educational System. It does not proceed on any intelligible lines to any definite human end—as human beings it leaves us, all but exactly, where we began, to develop as we are inclined, or as our circumstances prescribe. The same observations apply generally to education in the higher schools and universities. Here also “of the human soul this much is known that it has a faculty called memory”—here the same mechanical stuffing with grammar and dead vocables, and the issues are similarly deplorable. Here we have the same chaos, want of discrimination; no selecting, no adapting of means or gifts to ends is attempted. The student himself makes the selection. “Profoundly learned I would grow,” he says, like the student in Faust. He will be a lawyer, law-giver, wise governor of men. Not because he feels his perception of the difference between Right and Wrong to be uncommonly keen, or that he hopes to bring about the establishment of justice and equity among men, nor has he been selected in any wise way because of the striking prominence of these virtues and hopes in the young man—oh, no, he only happens to have the opportunity and must have a profession. In the same haphazard way we get our medical and clergy men, our Captains of Industry, Organisers of Labour. These hopeful, or not so hopeful, young men get together in the Class Room, where the professor stands ready to pump into the young buckets indifferently—they have come presenting their ears and memories, and he utters forth his vocables:—

Then forward steps your sage to show,
And prove to you it must be so;
The first being so, and so the second,
Nor third nor fourth would ever be.
This, scholars of all countries prize—
Yet 'mong themselves no weavers rise.

It is in this way Goethe satirises our University methods of filling our bellies with the east wind, and consequent divorce of theory and practice. The effect of this is to inundate the world with professional quacks and gentlemen loafers, from the highest mitred bishop to the common mountebank at the fair-booth, and spreading out into all imaginable directions. When your lawyer, it may be, is finished, he proceeds to hang his brains out at his shop door “for such as please to buy 'em,” for hire either to God or the Devil, it makes no matter. Or he may become a parliamentary hack, or possibly an able editor; in the one case to eloquently perorate and flippantly skip you over the surface of every subject, in the other with an exasperating gracefulness write the most inconsequential stuff, or illustrate how Truth, after a pretence of pursuing it, heedless of consequences, through the most labyrinthic windings, may never be touched, or else shown to be quite superfluous by the aid of beautifully evasive terminology. In any case his vocation henceforth is to “darken council and weave over the face of Justice a web of lies.” In the case of the medical profession I don't know that any more complimentary language can be held. They, too, are part of our commercial profit-mongers' society, which occasions the need of so many quacks and leeches. As a class, I don't think the medical men possess a monopoly of loving, sympathetic knowledge of the human soul and body, so necessary in “the art of healing.” With his tabulated banes and certain prescribed antidotes, a medical man hopes to win a good practice, and generally gets it. In his whole list of chemicals there is no rhubarb, senna, or purgative drug to scour the body politic free of pestilent city slums, of the ruinous effects of over-work on the one hand, on the other of the enormous horrors flowing from enforced idleness in which our rich and poor are weltering; of the glaringly wicked social inequalities which surround him on all hands and occasion his very existence. He appears to be quite unconscious of all this, and consequently subsists on his very ignorance, tinkering away with college artifice on external symptoms with never a thought to bestow on the source of the disease.

Our educational methods might be impeached on the ground alone that (assuming our Class society to be right) it gives the working lad no trade, but lets him loose among a perplexing multiplicity of pursuits to find one, while it degrades the “arts” into a means of earning a livelihood. Thus the high principle of Religion which teaches us how to live is transformed into a means whereby a livelihood may be earned. Hence we have the young divine inflated with college logic, metaphysics, and the moral sublime, tripping circumspectly off, nothing doubting, on his high career of saving souls, before he has even discovered his own. Why, if a man is religious, he should thank God and make no boast of it, as honest Dogberry would say, but in a commercial age it can bring a “profit” and its value is reckoned at so many hundreds or thousands annually. Not indeed that we are in want of so much preaching, as, if the world was to be saved in this way it would have been saved long ago; nor that we know less of Right individually than we can practice—it is all the other way! That we should “love our neighbours as ourselves” has surely been dinned sufficiently into our ears, even if we did not instinctively know it (notwithstanding that this last would be denied emphatically by Mr. Bradlaugh, who is the arch apostle and high priest of our devil-take-the-hindmost commercial system). That we can not love our neighbour as ourselves this system loudly asserts, and substantiates its assertion by rendering it quite impossible—hence the futility of preaching. When we reach a condition of society in which this will be reversed, a condition when less of Right is known than can be performed, then we can ask for a race of teachers who may “allure to brighter worlds” and “lead the way.” For the present I can only regard this class as part of our dislocated time, a section of the huge army of exploiters who work at no useful calling—an excellent product of deranged educational methods.

In point of results then, our higher schooling and university training differ little from the elementary kind considered at the outset of this article—the men come out much as they went in, and for the rest,—the character of the man, his capacities or aptitude never being operated on for any wise end—we have the same animalism as in the former case, only highly cultured, highly polished. An excellent illustration of this was furnished to us sometime ago by one of these “superior persons.” In a series of articles, forming a fine specimen of the “spiritual food” supplied to its readers by Chambers's Journal, this “superior person” explained in a very elaborate and unsophisticated fashion, what a scandalous piece of swindling was the trade he worked at on God's earth. None of your rough housebreaking, vulgar pocket-picking pursuits, but the refined, genteel, and highly respectable one of Stockbroking. The writer was perfectly frank and sincere, and appeared to have no misgiving while making the hideous nature of the game amply manifest, shewing the disgustingly savage, wild beast scrambling of the Mammon-worshippers for the coveted shares—the “friendly blows” that dealt disaster, the lucky hits of the accomplished swindler. However, it is not for these things I make use of the articles, but for certain “moralisings” with which the writer concluded—of the kind that such minds can only think. In the reflective mood the writer's eye turned naturally inwards, and there it beheld—a stomach! Human nature was a very poor affair. “As long as the world had lasted,” the writer said, “the human animal had tried to get money without working for it, and would continue to do so as long as it would last.” Straightforward, isn't it? Doubtless it will recall to many the “Pig Philosophy” of the “Latter Day Pamphlets,” nevertheless we may venture to reproduce a few of the leading points of faith, or “articles” of that universally popular philosophy.

Article 1.—The Universe, according to pigs of sensibility, so far as sane conjecture can go, is an immeasurable swines' trough, consisting of solid and liquid, and of other contrasts and kinds;—especially consisting of attainable and unattainable, the latter in immensely greater quantities for most pigs.

Article 2.—Moral evil is unattainability of pigs' wash; moral good, attainability of ditto.

Article 9.—“What is Justice?” Your own share of the general swines' trough, not any portion of my share.

Article 10.—But what is “My share?” Ah! there in fact lies the grand difficulty; upon which pig science, meditating this long while, can settle absolutely nothing. My share,—humph! my share is, on the whole, whatever I can contrive to get, without being hanged or sent to the hulks.

To what base uses may our education tend, but it is seldom we have such a purely unsophisticated pig as the writer in Chambers's to explain it so precisely.

I think it is fair to make the deduction, that these deplorable consequences are the outcome of what we term our Educational System. By consigning the multitude to hopeless drudgery nothing is left to them but mere animalism to manifest itself in ways we need not specify. In the case of the few, by compelling precious energy to be expressed in entirely wasteful, ruinous and immoral ways, leaving the same animal highly “refined,” highly intensified.

Of course there is the element of Natural Law with its agents Competition, Commercialism, referred to at the outset. Commercialism says life is a battle; Nature says, consequently certain results will follow of the kind we have seen! Life is indeed a battle, but it is not necessarily a fighting with and against one another, but rather a warring against nature—as Carlyle would say a “battle against human starvation, against chaos, necessity, stupidity.”

DANIEL McCULLOCH.

(To be concluded.)

LITERARY NOTES.

ARTICLES OF INTEREST in January magazines:—Asiatic Quarterly: “The March of the Mongol,” W. B. Dunlop; “Land Revenue Administration of Poonah,” A. Rogers. Law Quarterly: “Notes on the English Law of Marriage,” H. W. Elphinstone. Blackwood's: “English Farmers,” T. E. Kebbel. Contemporary: “East Africa as it was and as it is,” Joseph Thomson. “Zola,” Mrs. Emily Crawford. Nineteenth Century: “Isolation, or Survival of the Unfittest,” Duke of Argyll; “A Thousand more Mouths every day,” Earl of Meath; “Mr. Bryce's American Commonwealth,” Frederic Harrison; “Daniel O'Connell,” W. E. Gladstone.

The Revolutionary Review (H. Seymour, 35, Newington Green Road; monthly, 3d.) has issued its first number, and proposes to represent what one of its contributors calls the “formidable and utterly uncompromising Anarchist.” The same writer considers the Commonweal and Freedom to represent the “logical extreme of State Socialism!” A poem, “Grace before Meat,” by Lothrop Withington, and an editorial preface, are the most notable contents this month.

THE DESTROYER.—I should like to destroy most of the railroads in England, and all the railroads in Wales. I should like to destroy and rebuild the Houses of Parliament, the National Gallery, and the East end of London; and to destroy, without rebuilding, the new town of Edinburgh, the north suburb of Geneva, and the City of New York.—Fers Clavigera, No. 1.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

COTTON TRADE.—In consequence of the Bolton Master Cotton Spinners' Association and the Operative Spinners' Society being unable to agree upon the terms of settlement, short time has been adopted all through the trade by the employers, with the view of forcing the men to return to work. At Clitheroe and Macclesfield the strikes are going on unchanged.—At Burnley a strike of weavers has taken place, but the men went back on the understanding that some arrangement would be come to.—At Darwen, the weavers at the new weaving shed belonging to the Cotton Hall Spinning and Manufacturing Company struck Wednesday 2nd, on account of extra work; and the weavers at Bowling Green Mill have given notice. The notice expires on January 9th, and will affect about 300 hands. Cause—the extra work and excessive fining.

SHOE TRADE.—The conference between employers and workmen, which held its first meeting a week ago, sat again at Seyd's Hotel, Finsbury Square, Thursday 3rd, to decide upon a new wage scale for the wholesale shoe trade in London. On the agenda paper were a number of resolutions submitted by the employers, but only the first of these was considered:—"That a statement be compiled on a system of classification by standard samples." The formation of a permanent Reference Board was suggested, by whom all questions as to the rate of payment should be settled. A workmen's delegate proposed as an amendment, the addition of the words "except where the quality can be otherwise defined." This was discussed at considerable length, and upon a division the voting was—For amendment, 8 (all workmen); against, 8 (all employers' delegates). The resolution was then put, with the same result. The Chairman (Mr. A. Lion, employer) remarking that, as the proceedings at this early stage had come to a deadlock, it would be useless to continue the sitting, adjourned the conference to next Monday. He hoped that before the next meeting some modus vivendi would be found. Amidst objections from the workmen delegates he vacated the chair, and the proceedings were thus adjourned.

LURGAN HEMSTITCHING TRADE.—A strike of a rather serious nature has taken place in Lurgan, Ireland, in the hemstitching trade, which gives employment to many hundreds of female workers of the town and neighbourhood. For about two years past, the business has been depressed; and, instead of a uniform rate of payment being adopted by the various manufacturers, the rule has been for each to make whatever arrangement suited him with his own workers. The workers allege that in certain cases the employers, by the system of measurement and computation adopted, have succeeded in reducing the amount that can be earned by the worker much over, without effecting any visible change in the rate of wages; but, on the other hand, the manufacturers contend that they have long been paying their workers a higher wage than the present condition of business actually warrants, more especially when regard is had to the fierce competition to which Lurgan manufacturers are exposed. At any rate, the workers have been complaining for months past, and at last things have come to a head in three of the leading concerns of the town. The whole of the hemstitchers in the employment of Allen, Johnston and Co., William Street; John Ross and Co., High Street; and James Clendonning, High Street, on Wednesday refused the terms laid down by the employers. The strike will affect several hundred of the female workers, and as these have not for some time past been earning very high wages, the existing dead-lock is likely to be attended by very injurious and painful results.

SCOTCH MINERS.—An agitation for an advance of 6d. a day began with a National Conference in Glasgow on Saturday, 5th. At present the position of affairs is somewhat as follows:—We have five coal-producing districts, which may be classed alphabetically thus: Ayrshire, Fife and Clackmannan, Lanarkshire, The Lothians, and Stirlingshire. After the great Manchester Conference in September last, an agitation for a 10 per cent. was set agoing. Ayrshire took the lead, and by threatening to strike got a 15 per cent. advance on the 1st November. Stirlingshire also got the advance during the same month; Lanarkshire got 5 per cent., and The Lothians 10 per cent. During December, Fife and Clackmannan men got 5 per cent., and Lanarkshire two advances of 2½ and 5 per cent. respectively, making 12½ per cent. in all. There is thus considerable diversity in the wages paid, which it is expected the Conference will tend to remove. The wages paid, that is the recognised wages, are 3s. 6d. in the West of Scotland, and 3s. 9d. in the East. It is worth noticing that the higher rate is paid where the hours are shortest. In Fife and The Lothians the hours are from 8 to 9 per day, whereas in the West of Scotland the men work from 9 to 11 hours. This is another question which is meant to be dealt with at once, and a strong effort is to be made to get an 8 hour day established early in the year. In Fife the men have kept to their 8 hours for nearly a score of years, though at present certain managers are endeavouring to get the men to work longer by refusing to allow them to leave the pit before a certain hour, which would mean for the men full 9 hours underground. Where this is being tried the men threaten to strike, unless the new rule be withdrawn.—Labour Tribune.

SEAMEN.—About one hundred seamen upon strike marched through Liverpool on the 3rd, headed by a banner. They afterwards held an outdoor meeting, at which it was stated that the present rate of wages simply meant starvation for seamen, and is very much lower than that obtaining in any smaller ports. In Liverpool many able-bodied seamen are paid as low as £2 10s. per month, and in no case does it exceed £3 10s., and this is only given on some of the lines. Compared to this Cardiff sailors receive £4, and firemen £4 5s. as a maximum, but even in the worst-paid sailing boats the minimum is never lower than £3. On the Glasgow steamers the sailors obtain £3 10s. and the firemen £3 15s. At Newport, Sunderland, South and North Shields, Greenock, and Swansea the figure is £3. Efforts are now being made, however, in Liverpool and Glasgow to secure £4 and £4 5s., this being the regulation rate of the National Amalgamated Sailors' and Firemen's Union, a body which has only existed 18 months, but has a membership of 10,000, 3,000 having joined within the last two months. Although repeated reports have appeared that the strike has been in existence for some time, the Star says that this is incorrect, the efforts up to the present being to arrange terms upon amicable conditions. No grants have been given out of the Union funds for those who refuse to sign articles on the old terms; but after this week some tangible help will be given. In Liverpool several boats have been delayed, not being able to secure their complement; in a few instances the wages demanded have been conceded. While shipowners in the main refuse to grant the full sum, they have offered an advance of a few shillings per month, but this the men refuse, asserting that anything less than £4 per month is insufficient to maintain their wives and families. Seeing that the executive of the Sailors' Union are making energetic preparations for opening 40 additional branches in various parts of the country, it is evident that they have learned the lesson that if they wish to help themselves they must organise.

YORKSHIRE COLLIERY STRIKE.—The following report of the dispute at the Church Lane Colliery is taken by the Labour Tribune from the Sheffield Independent of December 29th:—"On Thursday, the men locked out at the Church Lane Colliery, Dodworth, met, when the unionists received their usual weekly pay from the officials of the Yorkshire Miners' Association. The following statement was made: The men came out on strike for the 10 per cent. advance in accordance with the resolutions passed at the Derby and Manchester Conferences. When the deputation waited on the managing director they were told that it could not be granted unless the men conceded certain allowances for bad working places, sticky roofs, etc. These allowances, if conceded, would make a very serious reduction in the men's wages. After further negotiations had taken place another deputation of the men waited upon Mr. Hartley on the 22nd of December, when the men were told that if a settlement was come to the men would have to return to work under the new arrangements, viz., from six to eight men should work in one gate in place of two or three as before; the tramming to be done by ponies instead of by men; the coal in the banks to be worked end on. The men stated that the prices previous to the strike were 1s. 6d. per ton for coal, and 8d. per ton for slack which passed over and through the screen of 'Billy Fairplay' as the case might be. The managing director further stated that the starting prices would have to be with the 10 per cent. included, 1s. 4d. per ton for coal for board work in banks, and 1s. 6d. per ton on end in banks, and 7d. per ton for slack, which means a reduction of 1½ per cent. These proposals the men decline to accept. The deputation were informed that on these terms only could work be resumed. A resolution was passed to the effect that they will only resume work on an advance of 10 per cent. being given. The men are still appealing to the various collieries in the district and the public. About 500 men and boys are out."

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

ITALY.

The winter intensifies the misery of the labouring classes. From all parts of the peninsula come reports of exceptional sufferings and hardships. In Caltanissetta and Finale Emilia it came to riotous encounters between the unemployed and the authorities. In no instance, of course, is an attempt being made to mitigate these continuous crises, but the coming revolution is staved off by brutal force or hypocritical promises. Numerous domiciliary visits and arrests among Socialists are reported. The tribunals outdo the police in class prosecutions.

At Trapani several suspected Anarchists were sentenced, and L'Amico del Popolo (The People's Friend) in Brescia, a Socialist paper, was fined, and its editor sent to prison. Whilst the authorities thus aggravate the existing class antagonisms, the legislature proposes to punish those who denounce this system. The Senate has amended the new Local Government Bill under discussion, by a provision, which excludes from the communal suffrage all those who have been condemned for incitement to hatred between the classes. Our comrade Costa, who, in the Chamber of Deputies, on the 19th December last, protested strongly against this provision, was four times called to order, because he put stress on the existing and by the authorities aggravated antagonisms between the classes, and thereby used the words "oppressors and oppressed." "There are no oppressors and oppressed," the President reproved him, "all the classes ought to proceed with fraternal love!" Fraternal love of "the classes" is good!

A strike of the cabdrivers of Pisa was brought to an early end by some cheap promises on the part of the prefect.

At Napoli, a society of domestic servants has been formed—the first of this kind in Italy. H. SCH.

"AN EXCELLENT EXPERIMENT."

THE Star says "an excellent experiment is now being tried at Norwich. Labour Bureau has been formed. . . . About three months since, when, like the Star, they found "the question of the unemployed pressing upon" them, a sort of small panic mingled with crafty scheming set in among the capitalists of Norwich. All the local labour-thieves and professional philanthropists were invited to a meeting to consider the question, and a great gathering of these birds of prey was accordingly held. After a lot of talk—the upshot of which was a general agreement that they couldn't give the unemployed useful productive work on a large scale, and that something might occur if they didn't move in the matter—it was decided that a "labour bureau" should be started. A committee was appointed and an office opened for "the work." Forms of application were issued to the unemployed containing a long list of questions as to the names, ages, families, pawntickets, rent, names of previous employers, length of employment, reason of dismissal or of leaving employment, whom to apply to for a six month's good character, the amount of wages applicant had received and would require, etc., etc. Despite such a list of questions it seems "307 were registered." (How many were disheartened, refused to answer the questions, or were turned away as unsatisfactory, we are not told.) The first acts of this "excellent" affair was—1. To send a dozen men to Swansea to take the places of men on strike; 2. To place men at work laying out a public garden on Mousehold Heath at about half the usual wages given to men in that occupation; 3. Later on, to send men to Ipswich to perform the part of "scabs." We hardly require the Star's writer to tell us that "the bureau was officered by the late mayor and present deputy" of Norwich, a man named Harmer, a notorious girl-sweating clothing manufacturer, "and other citizens of standing." Now, we are told, these wiseacres finding that "the great majority of the men asking relief belong to the unskilled class," therefore "they make two proposals, first, the formation of a window-cleaning brigade (this is excellent!), and then, for quite the younger members of the unemployed, the starting of a technical school." The latter proposal being one to provide employers of labour with workmen free, or almost free, of cost, under the pretence of teaching them a trade.

Excellent! For the employers. Excellent dodge for deceiving the starving workless workers! Excellent shift for shelving the question! Well may the Star say, "County Councillors, please note." G. CORES.

A CALL TO ARMS.

Tune, "Cheer Boys, Cheer."

Long have we sat in poverty repining,
Wearily waiting for the break of day,
Slight is the hope our saddened hearts inclining,
Darkness around us and a world's decay.
False prophets preach that we should turn to gladness
Life's weary load of sickening misery,
We have but one hope to change our heavy sadness,
The day shall quickly dawn to change our woe to glee.

Chorus—To arms, men! To arms!
The tyrant's hearts are quaking,
To arms, men! To arms!
To hail the break of day;
To arms, men! To arms!
The world to arms awaking,
As every people
Sweeps tyranny away.

We have but one hope, the hope of revolution,
To bring us joy, and banish dark despair;
Woe to the rich, swift comes the retribution,
When revolution leaps from famine's grisly lair.
Fierce on the rich her glittering eyes are gleaming,
Dark are the tresses of her snaky hair,
Sharp is her sword, and fearful in its seeming,
She's strong as death, and deadly as despair.

Gather, ye poor, behind her blood-red banner,
Red as the blood that flows within your veins,
The storm grows behind, the strong winds fiercely fan her,
Fight on her side, there's Freedom for your pains.
Through the wide earth a fearful trump is sounding,
Thrones, kings, and rulers, falling 'mid dismay,
The lightning flashes, thunder far resounding,
See! the gleam of weapons throws back the light of day.

D. NICOLL.

CONVENTIONALISM—EXTREME SPECIALISATION AND SUB-DIVISION OF LABOUR—DRY ROT—SMASH!

"AND then came a race of men who, like those that inherit great estates, had no incentive to continue the work which had been so splendidly begun. In one generation the genius of Egypt slumbered, in the next it died . . . The creative period passed away, and the critical age set in. Instead of working, the artists were content to talk. Their admiration was sterile, yet still it was deserving. But the next period was lower still. It was that of blind worship and indiscriminating awe. The past became sacred, and all that it had produced, good and bad, was revered alike. This kind of idolatry invariably springs up in that interval of languor and reaction which succeeds an epoch of production. In the mind history of every land there is a time when slavish imitation is inculcated as a duty, and novelty is regarded as a crime. But in Egypt the arts and sciences were entangled with religion. The result will be easily guessed. Egypt stood still, and Theology turned her into stone. Conventionality was admired, then enforced. The development of the mind was arrested; it was forbidden to do any new thing. . . .

"The physicians were compelled to prescribe for their patients according to rules set down in the standard works. If they adopted a treatment of their own, and the patient did not recover, they were put to death. Thus even in desperate cases heroic remedies could not be tried, and experiment, the first condition of discovery, was disallowed. . . .

"Each profession stood apart; each profession was even sub-divided within itself. In medicine and surgery there were no general practitioners. There were oculists, aurists, dentists, doctors of the head, doctors of the stomach, etc., and each was forbidden to invade the territory of his colleagues. This specialist arrangement has been highly praised, but it has nothing in common with what has arisen in modern times.

"It is one of the first axioms of medical science that no one is competent to treat diseases of a single organ unless he is competent to treat the diseases of the whole frame. The folly of dividing the diseases of such organs as the head and the stomach, between which the most intimate sympathy exists, is evident to the unlearned. But the whole structure is united by delicate white threads, and by innumerable pipes of blood. It is scarcely possible for any complaint to influence one part alone. The Egyptian, however, was marked off like a chess-board into little squares, and whenever the pain made a move a fresh doctor had to be called in.

" . . . It is needless to explain that division of labour is highly potent in developing skill and economising time. It is clearly of advantage that in an early stage of society the son should follow the occupation of the father. It is possible that hereditary skill or tastes come into play; it is certain that apprenticeship at home is more natural and more efficient than apprenticeship abroad. The father will take more pains to teach the boy, the boy take more pains to learn, than will be the case when master and pupil are strangers to each other.

" . . . Hence they established customs which their successors petrified into unchanging laws. They adored the grand and noble wisdom of their fathers; whatever came from them must be cherished and preserved. They must not presume to depart from the guidance of those god-like men. They must paint as they painted, physic as they physicked, pray as they prayed. The separation of the classes which they had made must be rendered rigid and eternal.

"And so the arts and sciences were ordered to stand still, and society was divided and sub-divided into functions and profession, trades and crafts. Every man was doomed to follow the occupation of his father; to marry within his own class; to die as he was born. Hope was torn out of human life. Egypt was no longer a nation, but an assemblage of torpid castes, isolated from one another, breeding in an in. It was no longer a body animated by the same heart, fed by the same blood, but an automaton neatly pieced together, of which the head was the priesthood, the arms the army, and the feet the working class. In quiescence it was a perfect image of the living form; but a touch came from without and the arms broke asunder at the joints and fell upon the ground."

THE BROTHERS.

(FROM AN OLD BOOK.)

THERE were three brothers, Cain and Abel and one unnamed.

Cain arose against Abel and slew him.

Their brother looked on.

And when Abel cried unto him for help he refused.

For he said: He loved peace and abhorred all manner of violence; per- adventure Cain might stay to reason with him.

In process of time the children of the three brothers increased, so that they overspread the earth.

To this hour, when the sons of the first Murderer would slay the seed of the Righteous, the descendants of him who abhorred all manner of violence refuse their interference to prevent the wrong.

Verily the crime of Cain shall be expiated sooner than the crime of these. Art not thou, too, thy brother's keeper?

—LINTON'S 'English Republic' (p. 112.)

OUT OF WORK MEMBERS.

Two painters (Hammersmith Branch) would be glad of odd jobs.
One carpenter and two labourers (Mitcham Branch).

STOCKTAKING.—With the incoming of the New Year, most working-men engaged in the numerous large firms in and around London, were treated to an extra holiday (after the long and somewhat degrading interval called Christmas) on account of "Stocktaking." How long does it take the worker to take stock after his year's drudgery? He can look into the most convenient shop-window, which will serve him as a full size mirror, and observe his jaded skeleton,—this will not take up much time.—H. D.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Executive.—The cessation of a large number of outdoor meetings, and the poverty of the workers, causes the circulation of the Commonweal to decrease during the winter months. An exceptionally low circulation this winter throws a heavy financial burden upon the League, and to avoid reducing the size of the journal, or reverting to a monthly issue, it has been decided upon by the Council to send out a full statement of the position of the Weal to all branches, and also an abstract of same to all subscribers, with an appeal for subscriptions.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, Feb. 4, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888: Clerkenwell and Leicester to December. Notice to Branch Secretaries—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will shortly appear.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.

FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" PRINTING FUND.—B. W., 6d.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following have handed in their names as guarantors for sums of not less than 6d. weekly:—S. Presburg, D. Nicoll, J. Presberg, H. Davis, Morris Wess, H. Daum, L. Trunk, R. Turner, J. Turner, W. B. Parker, J. Lane, H. Sparling, M. Morris, V. Dave, Wm. Blundell, Curtis, and F. Kitz. Five hundred wanted.

REPORTS.

LONDON MEMBER'S MEETING.—This meeting took place at 13, Farringdon Road, on Monday, Jan. 7; Thos. Cantwell, chairman; S. Presburg, secretary. The statement of position of Weal was read and discussed. After several suggestions for the future conduct of the paper, it was ultimately resolved "that a Guarantee Fund be opened by the League, to which all members and friends of the Cause should be asked to contribute not less than 6d. weekly, and that a list of guarantors appear in Commonweal, with a request to all members and sympathisers to send in their names thereto."

FULHAM.—Sunday evening, Morris lectured in our rooms on "Socialism"; fair audience and several questions asked. Members are earnestly requested to turn up at all meetings of the branch.—S. B. G.

ABERDEEN.—No propagandist work done during holiday week. Informal social gathering held at Leatham's house on 2nd, and choir practice on 3rd.—L.

EDINBURGH.—On 3rd we had a large social gathering of members of League and Federation, and spent a profitable and pleasant evening. On 6th, in the Moulder's Hall, in absence of lecturer, John Smith, S. L., delivered an admirable extempore address in his own inimitable Scotch style. Good discussion. The S. L. are holding no Sunday meetings of their own this winter, but are working along with S. D. F. They thought it injudicious to have two lectures on Socialism on the same night; the consequence is that we have, instead of two thin meetings, a large gathering with plenty of enthusiasm and discussion.

GLASGOW.—On the evening of Monday, Dec. 31st (Hogmanay), we held our fourth annual social gathering. About 80 were present, including ladies, and the meeting was the most successful of the kind we have yet had. From eight o'clock at night till three on New Year's Day morning, song, recitation, and dance made the time fly merrily. At twelve o'clock the new year was inaugurated with resounding cheers for the Social Revolution. A gratifying feature of the evening was the presence of a number of our German comrades, who sang and contributed much to the heartiness of the proceedings. Our comrade Dr. Reddie, Edinburgh, addressed the meeting in English and German. On Sunday last, at 2.30, Glasier, Joe Burgoyne, and Tim Burgoyne addressed a good meeting on Jail Square. At 5 o'clock Tim Burgoyne, Glasier, and Dan McCulloch held our usual meeting at Paisley Road Toll, where there was a large and attentive audience. Later on in rooms, our usual Sunday evening meeting of members took the form of a tea party. Comrade R. F. Muirhead was in the chair, and the sanctity of the Scottish Sabbath was invaded by songs and recitations, revolutionary and humorous. During the evening, comrade J. Bruce Glasier was presented with a token of the member's esteem and recognition of his services to the Cause.

IPSWICH.—No meeting Thursday night. Saturday night, enjoyable social evening in Pioneer Hall; Bat-terbee in chair. Sunday evening, Keed lectured; Woodhouse in chair. Business meetings held on Monday evenings from 7 to 8 p.m.—J. T.

NORWICH.—Sunday afternoon, usual open-air meeting in Market Place; much larger audience than usual, owing to the fact that an employé of a large tailoring firm in this city would speak from our platform in defence of his firm, who had been often attacked by us for the miserable wage they pay a large number of females, employed by them. Notwithstanding his denial as to the wages paid, he was unable to prove his assertions when challenged by Mowbray, and admitted the girls were fined if more than 10 minutes late; these fines, he boasted, were put to a good purpose—divided among the whole of the employés at the end of the year—these noble individuals taking their share of the plunder of the poor girls. After lengthy speeches from Mr. Edwards, the ex-Mayor. Mr. Harmer's champion, and Mowbray, a vote was taken whether Mr. Harmer's was a sweating firm or not; about 20 voted it was not—this number included most of the foremen, who had mustered strongly in their master's interest—the vote in favour of it being a sweating firm must have been 10 to 1. The meeting lasted about two hours, and seemed to have been very interesting to those present. At Gordon Hall, in evening, a discussion took place on "Equality." Monday, Mowbray addressed two unemployed meetings; large numbers are out of work here.

LECTURE DIARY.
LONDON.

Bloomsbury.—This Branch is now actively working. Socialists resident in this locality should send their names in at once to 13 Farringdon Road.
Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Sunday Jan. 13, at 7 o'clock sharp, Branch Business Meeting. At 8.30 p.m., D. Nicoll lectures on "The Paris Commune."
Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings are held on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Sunday January 13, at 8 p.m., J. Turner, "Insufficient Remedies."
Hackney.—Secretary, E. Lefevre, 14 Goldsmiths Sq., Goldsmiths Row, Hackney Road.
Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday 13th, H. H. Sparling, 8 p.m. "Luxury now; Necessity then."
Hoxton.—12, Basing Place, Kingsland Rd. Business meetings of this branch are held every Friday evening at 9 o'clock.
London Fields.—All communications, etc., to Mrs. G. G. Schack, 26 Cawley Road, South Hackney.
Milham.—Meets every Sunday, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road, at 11 a.m.
Mil-end and Bethnal Green.—95 Boston St., Hackney Road.
North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road.
Waltham and Camberwell.—This branch is now in working order. Friends in this locality are earnestly invited to co-operate, and send their names in. Committee meetings every Monday, 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church St., Camberwell Green.
Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 49 Berner Street, Commercial Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Secretary, P. Barron, 14 Ann Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.
Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.
Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meeting every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secy.
Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.
Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.
Galaashiels (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secy.
Gallatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn St.
Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.
Ipswich.—Pioneer Hall, Tacket Street. Meets on Sunday evenings.
Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour St. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.
Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Rd. and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m. communications to T. Paylor.
Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.
Norwich.—Sunday, at 8, Gordon Hall. Monday, at 8, Lecture in Gordon Hall by Mowbray, tickets 1d. each. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wed. and Thurs., Gordon Hall open from 8 until 10.30. Friday, at 8.30, Committee Meeting. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Association.—On Monday January 21st, a Farewell Concert will take place in the Gordon Hall on behalf of comrade Mowbray, who leaves this branch early in February for London. A good programme will be provided, and a string band in attendance. Tickets 6d. and 3d., to be had at all meetings.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.
Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.
West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

All persons who sympathise with the views of the Socialist League are earnestly invited to communicate with the above addresses, and if possible help us in preparing for the birth of a true society, based on equality, brotherhood, and freedom for all.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 13.

11.30...Latimer Road Station...Hammersmith Branch
11.30...Regent's Park...The Branch
11.30...Walham Green, opp. Station...The Branch
3.30...Hyde Park...The Branch
3.30...Victoria Park...The Branch
7.30...Broad Street, Soho...The Branch
7.30...Clerkenwell Green...The Branch
7.30...Weltje Rd., Ravenscourt Pk...Hammersmith

Tuesday.

8.30...Fulham—back of Walham Green Ch. ...Branch

EAST END.

SUNDAY 13.

Leman Street, Shadwell 11...The Branch.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.
Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.
Ipswich.—Sproughton, Wednesday evening. Westerfield, Thursday evening. Needham Market, Sunday morning and evening.
Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.
Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3.

All those desirous of helping in the work of the S.L. in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with comrade F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

LEICESTER.—A course of lectures on "Socialism, its Aims and Principles" is being delivered in Leicester Secular Hall. The fifth lecture will be delivered on Sunday January 20 by Graham Wallas—subject, "Property under Socialism."

THE SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—The Half-yearly Members' Meeting will be held at 13 Farringdon Road, E.C., on Saturday Jan. 12, at 8 p.m., when the attendance of all members is requested. Members please bring or send their subscription cards for audit.

SOUTH LONDON.—Friends who will help to establish a Branch of the Socialist League in South London will please place themselves in communication with C. Henze, 41 Bolton Street, Thomas Street, Kennington Park, S.E., or by letter to H. Hopkins, 17 Gairloch Road, Shenley Road, Peckham, S.E.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE LITERATURE.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
- Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). 1d
- The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. 2d
- The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 3d.; Large paper, 6d.
- The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. 1d
- The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper 4d.
- The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. 1d.
- True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
- Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. 1d.

- "All for the Cause!" Song. Words by William Morris; Music by E. Belfort Bax. 4to, 4 pp. 6d. per dozen, 4s. 6d
- "Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. 2d.
- Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. 6d.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. H. SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

Labour Platform Series, No. 1.

A LABOUR PROGRAMME: by J. L. MAHON; with an Introduction by R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, M.P. An attempt to define the principles and policy of the Labour Party; contains a criticism of the present industrial system, a sketch of a scheme of State Co-operation, and a statement of the political policy of the Labour Party. 108 pp. crown 8vo, paper covers, 6d., cloth 1s. (postage 1d.).

Useful to Parents, Teachers, and School Managers.

EDUCATION AND THE SCHOOL BOARDS: by J. L. MAHON and ROBERT SCOTTER; with an Introduction by C. A. V. CONYBEARE, M.P. A concise hand-book to the history of Education, the Education Acts, Education Statistics, and Education Reform. Foolscap 8vo, 56 pp., paper covers 4d., limp cloth 6d. (postage ½d.).

Labour Platform Series, No. 2.

THE NAIL AND CHAIN MAKERS: containing a Plea, by R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM, M.P.; a Protest, by C. A. V. CONYBEARE, M.P.; and a Proposal, by J. L. MAHON. Crown 8vo, 16 pp., 1d. Parcels for sale or distribution 24s. per 500, 5s. per 100 (postage 7½d.), 1s. per dozen post free.

The London Press Agency, 51 Bedford Row, W.C.

THE LABOUR LEADER.

AN ADVANCED POLITICAL JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF LABOUR.

The Miner will in future be published under the above name. First number issued January 10th; future numbers on 1st of the month, instead of 15th as hitherto.

Subscription, monthly 1d.; 1s. 6d. per annum.

Edited and published by KEIR HARDIE, Cumnock, Ayrshire.

LA REVUE SOCIALISTE.

EDITED BY BENOIT MALON.

8, Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SUMMARY OF THE DECEMBER NUMBER.

"The End of the Year," B. Malon; "Essay on Scientific Socialism," P. Argyriades; "Svetosar Markowitch and Servian Socialism," B. Malon; "Auguste Comte's Positive Politics," H. Aimel; "Socialist Pamphlets of Lassalle to the Berlin Workers"; "Bill for Regulation of Work-hours," H. Aimel; "Cadastral Revision," De Roz Maria; "About Deism," E. Raiga; "Socialist Anthology," Daniel Stern, Thomas Hood, Turatti; "Socialist Movement in France and Abroad," M. Favergeon; "Review of Boos," G. Rouanet and E. Fourniere.

TERMS:—France, 6 months 9 francs, 12 months, 18 f. Abroad, " 10 " 20. Payments to be made to M. Rodolphe Simon, 8 Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by

H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

JULIUS BORDOLLO'S

LABOUR NEWS AGENCY

213 Forsyth Street, New York City, U.S.A

American agency for the Commonweal. All Labour literature kept in stock. Send for list, post free.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE, at 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

VOL. 5.—No. 158.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THERE are curious signs of the time abroad, that show us pretty clearly in what an element of discontent we are living, e.g., a leader in the Daily News, that pink of respectability, in lamenting the heavy record of murder of the past few months, does seem to be fairly shocked at the record of the gallows also. "We are getting perilously near a revival of the good old hanging days," is a sentence in strong contrast with the feeling of a large part of the well-to-do classes, whose word, like that of the king in the old romance, is "Hang and head! hang and head!"

On the other hand, as a matter of course, after the burglary at Muswell Hill, the courage, humanity, and wisdom of the successful thieves of our sham society, the well-to-do, to wit, is illustrated by the loud cry for the flogging of burglars, and apparently of people (of the "lower orders") suspected of being burglars. We must never forget that the boasted humanity and tenderness of human life of our century depends entirely on the feeling of continuous safety amongst the ruling classes; as soon as they are conscious of any hole in their rampart, of any enemy amongst them, humanity and tenderness is cast to the winds. "To think that I—I should be subjected to violence, should be liable to be robbed or shot—I, amidst all my soft wrappings and the bosom of the family; I, who in my daily luxury and cowardice manage so successfully to forget both death and the reasons for living! Hang and head and torture those wretches that have made me afraid!" That is the ordinary sentiment of the comfortable classes.

This is the constant tendency of the masters of society, of those who believe their position to be eternal; and who are so stupid as to fail to see that if they drive their enemies (on whom they live) to be conscious that there is no hope for them but the hope of revenge, they are building up for themselves a hell of daily terror; since, indeed, the one unendurable evil is fear.

The Pall Mall jeers at the Daily News for its exaggeration of the hangings, and laments not that so many people are hanged, but that so many are unhanged. It apparently favours the idea that it is possible to kill off so many of the bad specimens, that you will not only purify "society" thereby, but also terrify those that are left of them into quiescence, thus killing two birds with one stone. This, after all, is only another way of accepting the eternity of sham society, mingled with the ferocity of the Christian religionist, who considers himself bound to be revenged on immorality.

For my part, I think the exaggeration of the writer in the Daily News is to his credit, as it is the result of the impression of loathing at the horrible judicial murders of the last quarter of the year, culminating with the slaughter of the two lads at Maidstone, which was obviously a judicial crime due to sheer cowardice.

Per contra the Star has some very timely and very sensible remarks on this matter of the "punishment" of crimes against property. (Crimes against a crime? Can that be?) It is to be hoped that its working-men Radical readers will take them to heart, since I fear there are not a few of them who are inclined to share in the "just indignation, i.e., the revenge for the terror of the "plate-basket proprietor face to face with robbery."

"There is no getting over the fact," says the Star, "that we have turned our burglars into murderers." Just so; and also we have been driven into that idiocy by our initial idiocy of making them burglars. I quote the Star again: "The trade of manufacturing and hardening felons at the greatest possible cost to the community (the main secret of the process is teaching them to associate the idea of labour with useless torture) goes on, whitewashed by the addition of a little hypocrisy to its brutality and stupidity." Most true; and this no less so: "Our penal system is an abominably cruel one; and it is made so for no other reason than that our honest poor fare so wretchedly, that if prisoners were treated with humanity, the victims of our sweaters would find in Pentonville a comparatively pleasant refuge from the miseries of their workshops and garrets. This is the naked truth." It is indeed; the cruel judge with his solemn hypocrisy of morality is the necessary complement to the sweater of sweaters, the capitalist employer.

Sham society continuously revenges herself on the "criminals" whom she has created, and without whom she would cease to exist. How long will it be before all those who have a grain of honesty left in them, will understand this, and come out of her to become rebels against her?

Meanwhile, I think that for much of the change of feeling on this point of the treatment of so-called criminals, which to me (a middle-aged man or rather more) is obvious enough, we have to thank men like Sir Charles Warren and Mr. Balfour, and that never-enough-to-be-praised custom of our beloved country of treating political prisoners as mere felons. Some years ago none of us thought of a gentleman being sent to jail till he had been ungentlemanned. The fact that now we see personal friends who have worn the order of the Broad Arrow, and that we may wear it ourselves, has quickened the imaginations of us, the gentlemen, considerably.

Sham society is at work to try to purge itself of what every one must admit to be a crime, the condemnation and imprisonment of two innocent men, Brannaghan and Murphy, for burglary. The way it is setting about it is to indict four policemen for conspiracy to bear false witness. Put no amount of revenge on the lower instruments of legal tyranny can undo what has been done, or give back the lost years of their life to its victims.

Nay, more: supposing these men are found guilty, let us not forget also that they are habitually encouraged to give false evidence by the very Law that tries them. They are not indeed encouraged to tell downright obvious lies, for they might be found out; but their statements as guardian of Law and Order are received in practice (whatever the theory may be) as facts that it is useless or dangerous to question. And surely to poor and ignorant men, degraded by their miserable profession of thief-catching, this is a mere invitation to the invention of falsity and the suppression of truth, and the general wresting of facts towards a conviction. Once again, if these men are found guilty and punished, sham society will punish them for the crime she has driven or allured them to.

The Pall Mall believes that the Puritan and the Socialist will meet on the common ground of Sabbatarianism! H'm, well; they may meet on that ground; but if they do, it will be to fight on it. We hope no enquirer into Socialism will be led astray by such nonsense into thinking that a Socialist can be either a Sabbatarian or a Puritan. I say flatly that the Puritan, as Puritan, is the enemy of the human race, his horrible galvanism of Christianity the worst religious trap which the world has fallen into.

Lord Rosebery and Sir J. Lubbock have been lamenting that the elections for the County Council cannot be wholly un-party-political. Here is the Devil objecting to sin with a vengeance! Are you tired of politics, Sir John? Do you want to keep politics all to yourself, my lord Rosebery? Probably. In short, what Lord Rosebery and the others mean on this head is, "You County Councilmen, attend to your jobbery; you'll have plenty of it and you were made for it; but don't meddle with politics, that's for your betters. Look here, this is the way to do it! Ain't it funny?"

The Pope is laying a heavy charge on the bishops in America to do their best to put down the Socialism which is spreading amongst the Irish Roman Catholics there. This is good news on both sides; on one that Socialism is spreading enough to annoy his Holiness; on the other a sign that neither side of orthodox Christianity will attempt to draw us into entangling alliances. The Pope is right. Real Catholicism died with the Middle Ages: modern Catholicism is but a survival from it, kept alive on the one hand by its alliance with absolutist bureaucracy and on the other by its alliance with Puritanism, with which, though Catholicism is less revolting on the surface, it has much in common: the Salvation Army, e.g., being a development quite in the manner of modern Catholicism. It is good to know our enemies; both these are of them.

The plot against humanity in Central Africa is going on briskly. The check given to the Germans has had its necessary result in stirring up those would-be masters of the world, the rulers of the German people, to set on foot a new expedition in regular military style, with twelve field guns to aid. At the same time we have news of a "revolution" in Uganda. The missionaries have been driven away, and Islam has been proclaimed there; which means that the Arabs, the only people capable of organising opposition to the European pirates, have got the upper hand there. However, we must be cautious in accepting news from the tainted source of filibusters and filibusters' friends; for it will often be fabricated, or at least exaggerated, in order to stir public opinion into getting up fresh filibustering expeditions.

W. M.

WHIGS ASTRAY.¹

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN

OWEN MARX BAKOUNINE JONES, an architect (unsuccessful), and—the Rev. SWAIN STRIDE, a Nonconformist parson, and } advanced Radicals.
MR. JEREMIAH BROWN, a business man }

SCENE—A comfortable bachelor-looking room in MR. BROWN'S house, with tobacco and pipes and grog to the fore. MR. STRIDE and MR. BROWN sitting on either side of the fire, looking important and self-satisfied. Enter to them MR. JONES with an ill-concealed grin on his face; after the usual greetings he sits down and says:

Jones. Well, Mr. Brown, here I am, ready to hear what you have to say to me, and eager to know what puts you into such good spirits this evening, as you obviously are in.

Brown. Well, we are; we have been talking about matters that make us hopeful.

J. I am glad of that. I see so many doleful faces nowadays, that it does me good to see two cheerful ones, especially as finials to two such pinnacles of the temple as a parson and a man of business.

Stride. I don't like you to call me a parson, Jones. I am none of your priests; and really I think you know me well enough not to set me down as a relation of Chadband. You know very well that what I'm really interested in is politics, and practical at that; and that I want them to be discussed without fear or favour; so knowing you for a cantankerous Socialist, I asked Brown to ask you to come here to-night.

J. Thank you for the compliment—and also for your company: you want to cheer me up, which is kind of you. But you know how curious I am; what can it be? It can't be politics, for things are looking rather blue for your side of the house. Is business beginning to boom, Brown? Have you been speculating in a gold-mine which is turning up trumps, Stride?

B. Well, perhaps business is a thought better. But that's not it. You see—

S. (interrupting). It so happens that you are out about it's not being politics. Brown and I think matters are looking much more hopeful of late.

J. Indeed! And now I look at you, there is something portentous about your cheerfulness. What's up? Are you going to turn Tory-Democrats, the last refuge for the desperately hopeful? Or does the Salvation Army raise your spirits? Have you got another Gordon on hand to put a stop to war by cutting down the fruit-trees on which potential warriors live, and to put a stop to slavery by killing the niggers before they can be made slaves of? Are you civilising Africa?

S. Now don't you be offensive about Gordon: you know I'm dead against the whole nigger-slaying business.

J. Yes, but somewhat in favour of the Christian-hero pest. But let that pass. Is Lord Salisbury dead? Don't be too glad of it; it won't do you Liberals much good. Vic can truly say with King Harry in 'Chevy Chase,'

"I trust I have within my realm
An hundred good as he."

S. (laughing). Hear the spite of the Tory-Democrat!

J. (severely). Don't call bad names, Stride!

B. (anxiously). No, but ain't you a Tory-Democrat, Jones? Stride always calls you one.

J. Yes, that comes of his innate wisdom, that does not need vulgar information. I am not a Tory-Democrat, Brown.

B. What are you then? Because—

S. (interrupting). Come, let's be serious, Jones. You know I'm really a practical Socialist.

J. Indeed I did not know it. May I ask—

S. (interrupting). No, please don't interrupt me! I say I am a practical Socialist; and yet I cannot be one of your hard-shell

Socialists, with your impossible nostrums of the abolition of capital and railways, and your preposterous ideals of communism and equality; and your false political economy, dead in the teeth of all the accurate thinkers of the day, such as Mill and Tennyson and Ricardo and Swinburne, and—and—Lord Rosebery and Auberon-Herbert. But yet, you see, I was bothered that there should be no true Socialist party that I could work with heartily; and now I really think that we are getting one, and I've got out a sort of manifesto of it: indeed, there it lies on the table now.

J. And you have asked Brown to ask me here to cheer me up with it? How kind of you. Is it in print?

S. No; but any Radical paper will print it.

J. Well, well, things are getting on fast. And is Brown a member of the new party? Are you a Socialist, Brown?

B. Well, where's the harm of a name? Stride and I thought—

S. (interrupting). We don't call ourselves Socialists, of course.

J. No, of course not.

S. We call ourselves Advanced Liberals or Radicals.

J. (with preternatural gravity). Hah! But is that such a great invention in the way of names?

S. That's just the beauty of it.

J. I grant you the beauty of it must be there—or nowhere.

S. Pray be serious, and don't interrupt!

B. I assure you, Jones—

S. (interrupting). We are Socialists who don't set class against class, which I think is downright wickedness.

J. (softly). Let the galled jade wince, my withers are unwrung! The ages have done all that for me.

S. (taking up a paper from the table). Nevertheless we have a clear, definite Creed, which I will now lay before you, Jones.

J. Ah, now I see what makes you look so happy! You are Radicals who have been searching for the planks of your platform, and you think you have discovered the necessary timber—(sotto voce) all out of your own heads.

S. (hurriedly, and not listening). Yes, that's it. Now look here, this is the preamble. (Reads.) 'It is always foolish and wicked to set class against class, but the time has come for a resolute forward movement in favour of the toilers of our streets and fields. Legislation cannot do much to make the weak strong, to make the poor rich, to make the miserable happy; but it can keep off the greedy hand, and shield the helpless from oppression. It can help the poor to help themselves. It can break down legalised monopoly. It can clear the road by sweeping away many hindrances in the path of men without influence. It can give the poor "the benefit of the doubt." It can help the wage-earner to give his child a chance. It can provide something better than the workhouse for old men and women whose strength is spent and whose friends are gone.'

J. It is nicely written, Stride, and I'm sure that you mean well, so far as you know how to; but you are deceiving yourself. How can legislation do all these things with one hand, while with the other it is engaged upholding that very monopoly (do you know what monopoly is, my friend?) of which the poor and their terrible needs are a necessary result? It exists to support the greedy hand; it exists for oppression, and when ceases to oppress will cease to exist. This is a riddle you cannot rede till you know a little more.

S. Well, well, that's only the preamble. Wait a bit! Our first plank is, 'Government by the people, for the people, in the interests of the people.'

J. If the people govern themselves for themselves and in their own interest, there will be nothing but themselves: is that so? Can it be so while the present system lasts, reformed or not? Your first plank is not a plank, but a phrase, and a phrase without meaning. As long as there are rich men nursed up at the expense of the people they will govern us for their interest, whatever the machinery of their government may be. Meantime the people is but the material for the feeding of the rich.

S. Well, this next is a plank, at all events: 'The State should as far and as fast as possible delegate to each locality the rights of self-government, and should encourage and protect them in the use of such rights.' There!

J. County Councils, eh? A Tory measure; and properly so. Bodies with feeble administrative powers in themselves; mere machinery in the hands of the central government; good to strengthen that by doing its dirty work and appearing responsible for it, while in reality they are responsible for nothing. That is what you mean by self-government. If you were to mean more your plank would be a plank to be walked by the present society; for when the State has delegated all its powers what is the good of it, and what shall we do with it?

S. Hilloa! Since when have you turned Anarchist?

J. Don't use words you don't understand. But go on.

S. 'We should lift the burdens as far as possible from the shoulders of the struggling classes'—

J. Stop a bit! That's good! as far as possible is a good phrase. No Tory could object to that plank so far. Well, where are you going to put these burdens when you have lifted them as far as possible? I suspect back, again.

S. We would 'put them to a greater extent on the shoulders of those who toil not, but without toiling have enough and to spare.'

J. Well, that I call a great invention; only it smacks somewhat of going about to get something out of nothing. For how the devil can those who toil not (i.e., produce nothing) have enough and to spare—unless they steal it? In short, your struggling classes are too poor to pay taxes; that you admit (and by the admission admit also that the whole of the middle-classes or well-to-do are thieves). So you are going to set the other classes to steal from the poor, in order that the taxes may be duly paid. That will bring about no new blessing for the struggling classes; they enjoy it already.

¹ The portions of this dialogue between the single "quotes" are taken from a genuine document—"A Radical's Creed," by John Page Hopps, in the Pall Mall Gazette of Dec. 10th, 1888.

S. You needn't talk nonsense! 'We believe in a graduated income-tax and graduated death-dues.'

J. Just so: to be paid by those who have no income but what they steal. Here is a pretty outcome of "the career open to talent," which I believe is still the great maxim of the Radicals. Certainly I need not talk nonsense.

S. Now listen! 'We are in favour of a reform of the poor-laws.'

J. Gently, gently!

S. 'It is of course necessary to watch carefully lest the path to the poor's purse or the poor's house should not become too easy.'

J. Stop! Do you know why it is necessary?

S. No.

J. Of course, no. Why (also of course), because the share of the national purse which the poor get by working hard is only just enough to give them a most miserable life. So that if you did not make the path to that palace of bliss, the poor-house, a hard one, that kingdom of heaven would be taken by storm.

S. Well, 'At any rate that is no reason why the hopelessly beaten in the battle of life should be penned up like criminals.'

J. Excuse me: it is the reason.

S. 'In any case the neglect of poor old people in England is almost our greatest sin and shame.'

J. The sentiment does honour to your heart: but you are too sensitive: there are plenty of sins and shames quite as bad; the neglect of worn-out workers is a natural consequence of the career open to talent according to the doctrine of private property.

S. Well, now I have begun, I suppose I must go on. But how cantankerous you are!

J. I flatter myself I am. But go on, pray.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

(To be concluded.)

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING JANUARY 26, 1889.

20	Sun.	1649. Trial of Charles Stuart for treason against the people. 1794. Meeting of the London Corresponding Society at Globe Tavern, Strand. 1802. Trial of Govr. Wall for murder. 1870. Alex. Herzen died at Paris. 1880. First number of La Revue Socialiste , Paris, monthly review edited by Benoit Malon. 1883. Explosion at Glasgow.
21	Mon.	1561. Venner's followers executed. 1793. Execution of Louis XVI. 1864. National League founded in Dublin by John Martin. 1888. Dr. Adolph Douai, Socialist, died.
22	Tues.	1561. Francis Bacon born. 1880. Report of Statistical Society on "Strikes of the last ten years." 1887. C. W. Mowbray (9 months) and Fred Henderson (4 months) sentenced at Norwich.
23	Wed.	1806. W. Pitt died. 1844. Sir Francis Burdett died. 1866. T. L. Peacock died. 1871. Demonstration in Trafalgar Square against bombardment of Paris. 1875. Charles Kingsley died.
24	Thur.	1732. Beaumarchais born. 1808. Wilhelm Weitling born. 1840. Bishop of Exeter's petition as to Robert Owen presented to the House of Lords. 1862. Miles Byrne died. 1884. Explosions at House of Commons and the Tower.
25	Fri.	1819. Ernest Jones born. 1870. Sixth annual Congress of the Workingmen's Assembly, State of New York. 1885. First number of Commonweal .
26	Sat.	1651. Denis Papin presents to the Royal Society, London, the English translation of his book, "The New Digester." 1869. Ernest Jones died. 1884. Execution of a spy at Kharkoff.

Sir Francis Burdett.—Radical reformer. Born Jan. 25, 1770; died Jan. 23, 1844. One of the most prominent figures in the Reform agitation of the opening years of this century. Like most of his fellows, he drew his inspiration from France. On leaving college he went on a European tour, and was resident in Paris during the early days of the Revolution, where he regularly attended the debates of the Convention and many of the meetings of the clubs. Returning to England in 1793, he married in the same year, and three years later entered Parliament as a Reform candidate. He was not long in Parliament before the Government found him a vigorous and determined enemy. In 1797 he vehemently denounced and indicted them for their encroachments on popular rights. He protested against the war with France as a futile attempt to stifle the flame of liberty. Again and again did he take this tone, and came to be the recognised champion of the democracy. He moved for the repeal of the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act, and opposed the exclusion of Horne Tooke from the House of Commons. He so thoroughly exposed the malpractices of the Government on political prisoners that a special order was issued to prevent his gaining access to the jails. In 1802 began the great contest for the representation of Westminster, which, after much litigation and two elections, ended in 1806 in a tremendous triumph for the reformers: the first great victory they won. Burdett sat thirty years as member for Westminster. After very many fights upon flogging in the army, etc., in 1810 he made a breach of the privileges of the House in defending a Radical speaker imprisoned for the same offence. Beaten by an adverse vote, he had his speech printed and issued it to the people, thus appealing to them against their "representatives." The Speaker issued his warrant of arrest, and Burdett barricaded his house: troops were called out to aid in his arrest, and the people rose in his defense. The Houses of Parliament were garrisoned and fortified, the Lifeguards stationed in the streets, and the town patrolled by many thousands of soldiers. On the fourth day, Burdett's house was taken by storm, himself arrested and consigned to the Tower. There he remained for the rest of the session, in accordance with ancient custom. Until 1819 he steadfastly maintained the position he had taken up; in that year occurred the massacre of Peterloo. As soon as Burdett received the news of this event he wrote a letter to his constituents, in which he said: "What! kill men unarmed, unresisting, and, gracious God! women too, disfigured, maimed, cut down, and trampled on by dragons! Is this England?—a land of freedom? Can such things be, and pass by us like a summer cloud, unheeded? Forbid it every drop of English blood in every vein that does not proclaim its owner bastard!" Brought to trial by the Government, he defended himself with great ability, but was condemned to pay a fine of £2,000 and be imprisoned for three months. When the Reform Bill was carried, Burdett considered his work done; he was old, and viewed with suspicion the new ideas of younger men; distrust of O'Connell and dislike for the "Liberator's" methods of work also tended to weaken his adherence to the advanced wing of his party. The reaction of 1835 found him out of sympathy with the majority of his constituents, and he left Westminster for North Wiltshire, which he represented as a very mild Conservative until his death.

To Burdett is due the making of free speech again possible in England. In his long battle with unjust laws and privileges he displayed such powers as to be declared by the highest authority the greatest constitutional lawyer in the country.

Alexander Herzen.—The Socialist ideas penetrated into Russia under the reign of the Emperor Nicholas, and the various groups to which belonged Alexander Herzen, Ogareff, Bakounine, and others, were the very centres out of which the revolutionary doctrines were propagated in all classes of society. As far back as 1849 Fourierist conspirators were sentenced to be shot, but afterwards "pardoned" and sent to Siberia. At the same time, a school of realistic novel-writers imbued with advanced Liberal and Radical opinions, among whom Tourguenief and Gregorowitch were most prominent, attracted public attention to the terrible condition of the Russian serfs and claimed their emancipation. The Russian rural commune was studied, and the collectivist or communist traditions which were found therein gave a new and solid basis to the Socialist doctrines. Czarism and despotism unfortunately were so powerful that it was scarcely possible to make much useful propaganda. Alexander Herzen went first to Paris, and after the coup d'etat, started in London Kolokol (the Bell), "the first free Russian paper." Secretly introduced into Russia, Herzen's organ at once met with an extraordinary success. Schédo-Ferroti, who abused him so bitterly, is compelled to acknowledge the tremendous power of his propaganda. In spite of the vigilance of the custom officers and the police, Kolokol had an exceedingly extensive circulation, for the copies which were introduced into Russia went around from man to man, so that one single copy may have had a hundred or more readers. The paper was written out; parts of it were learnt by heart and recited in large circles; in one word, the greatest enthusiasm prevailed wherever it appeared. The reason of such marked and decided success is easy enough to conceive: with Herzen and through him began the revival of the Russian nation. In a powerful and masterly manner he criticised Russian despotism and western bourgeoisdom alike and came to the conclusion that Communism alone was the right outcome of society. Herzen was above all a great critic, an energetic denier, who did not want to build up, but only to demolish. Old society, he contended, is deadly ill, we only have to prepare its burial, our successors will find out their own way, prepared by our critical work. At that period of his career, Herzen may very well be termed an Anarchist, but afterwards he became a Socialist and an evolutionist. Even after having been very intimate with Michael Bakounine, who largely contributed to Kolokol, he severed all connection with him and violently wrote against his former friend's ideas. But besides Socialism, which became merely a theory for him, we must say that Herzen developed a marvellous political activity, of which the results were immense for Russia. It has been asserted that one ought to go back as far as Voltaire, perhaps, to find another example of such a prodigious influence won solely by one man's writings. It can be said that, during ten years, Herzen, a political convict, deprived of all his rights, expelled from several countries, has nevertheless ruled over Russia. By his eloquent pen, by the elevation of his thought, he won the minds of all people, even of those whose interest it was to destroy the coming freedom. Under the influence of public opinion, stirred up by Herzen, the Government were compelled to grant reforms of which they would never have thought but for him, and which appeared as wonders in a land like Russia. Among those reforms there is one which is grand enough to immortalise the great Russian exile: the enfranchisement of thirty million men who bore the name of serfs and who really were slaves. Certainly the act of enfranchisement has not given the peasants all they wanted; the Czar granted just as much as he thought necessary in order to avoid an agrarian revolt; Tchernyschewsky, for instance, afterwards openly said that if he had known that the question would have been settled in that way, he would have preferred a complete defeat instead of such a dubious victory. Anyhow the peasants felt themselves somewhat freer, for they were no longer treated so brutally as before, and they were at least enabled to look forward with better hopes and more certainty to their final deliverance. Herzen died at Paris, where a French edition of his complete works (10 vols., 8vo) was published by Germer-Baillière (afterwards Alcan Lévy).—V. D.

Myles Byrne.—United Irishman. Born at Monaseed, county Wexford, March 20, 1780, died in Paris, Jan. 24, 1862. Son of a farmer, in 1796 he agreed to become a yeoman on condition of getting a lease renewed for his mother, but his father, who was then ill, dying in the meantime, he escaped from his bargain, and could thus boast he "never wore a red coat." Entering the United Irishmen in 1797, he threw himself into the work with such energy that he, a boy of seventeen, was soon the most influential organiser in his native county. June 3, 1798, he joined the rebels at Corrigrua, and after Vinegar Hill (June 21) rallied a number of pikemen, whom he led in a number of small fights with great skill and daring. Castlecomer was unsuccessfully attacked; he was again beaten at Ballygullen; and on July 4, he joined "General" Joseph Holt in the Wicklow mountains, where he held out for months in the hope of help from France. Going to see his mother and sister on Allhallows Eve, he narrowly escaped arrest; making his way to Dublin disguised as a cardriver. Here he stayed and got employment as clerk in a timber-yard. In the spring of 1803 he met Robert Emmet, whom he readily joined in his project of another armed rising, taking some of the most dangerous and difficult parts of the work to his own share—making contracts with gunmakers, arranging the manufacture of pikes, and procuring war material in general. He brought into the plot a large number of Wexford and Wicklow men who had been proved in '98, and in the projected taking of Dublin Castle (July 23) he was, with them, to have attacked the entrance on the Ship Street side while Emmet attacked the front. Through Emmet's failure to keep the agreement, the attempt fell through. On returning from the Wicklow mountains Byrne was sent by Robert Emmet to Paris, where he was to communicate with T. A. Emmet, agent of the United Irishmen to the First Consul, as to obtaining aid from France. After some difficulty he reached Bordeaux in an American ship, and helped compose a report on the state of Ireland, which was laid before Napoleon. An Irish expedition was promised for the near future, and as a preparation there was formed (Nov. 1803) an Irish legion in the service of France, a very different body from that Irish brigade which was broken up at the revolution of 1789. In this Byrne served from 1804 to 1815; beginning as a lieutenant of infantry, he soon became a captain, and in 1810 was made commander of a corps d'élite; June 18, 1813, he was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honour; and was made chef de bataillon (lieutenant-colonel) just as Napoleon's abdication prevented his signing the commission. After the revolution of 1830 he was recalled from Greece and became chef de bataillon in the 56th line regiment; in 1832 received the cross of the Legion of Honour from Louis Philippe. In 1835 he resigned, and lived for the rest of his life in Paris, where his striking personality and remarkable history made him a noted man. He is buried at Montmartre, and there has been a monument placed upon his grave there. He was very much more than a mere "patriot," taking a deep interest in the struggles of all peoples, alike for their political and economic freedom.—S.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON!

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors.

Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. da S. T. (Porto).—You owe 3s. already; the annual subscription is 6s. Remittances to be made payable to Frank Kitz.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	WILLIAM MORRIS 17
Whigs Astray: A Dialogue	WILLIAM MORRIS 18
Revolutionary Calendar—Sir Francis Burdett; Alexander Herzen; Myles Byrne	VICTOR DAVE and H. H. SPARLING 19
Notes on McCree	D. NICOLL 20
Release of Oldland	20
Education: What it is, and what it should be (concluded)	DANIEL McCULLOCH 21
The Labour Struggle	22
Letter from America	H. F. CHARLES 22
International Notes	VICTOR DAVE 23
When the People Have their Own Again	AN GEALBHAN GARAIÐH 23
Executive Business, Reports, etc.	23
Lecture Announcements, Notices of Books, etc.	24

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday January 16.

ENGLAND	FRANCE	GERMANY	SPAIN	AUSTRIA	HUNGARY	ROMANIA	DENMARK	SWEDEN	NORWAY	WEST INDIES	MEXICO
Croydon Echo	Paris—Cri du Peuple (daily)	Berlin—Volks Tribune	Barcelona—El Productor	Wien—Gleichheit	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik	Jassy—Muncitorul	Social-Demokraten	Malmo—Arbetet	Kristiania—Social-Democraten	Cuba—El Productor	Sinaloa—Credit-Foncier
Ble Autonomie	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)		Seville—La Solidaridad	Brunn—Volksfreund
Justice	La Revolte		Madrid—El Socialista
Labour Tribune	L'Union Socialiste
London—Freie Presse
Norwich—Daylight
Postal Service Gazette
Railway Review
Sozial Demokrat
INDIA
Bankipore—Behar Herald
UNITED STATES
New York—Der Sozialist
Freiheit
Truthseeker
Jewish Volkszeitung
Backer Zeitung
Alarm
Workmen's Advocate
Boston—Woman's Journal
Investigator
Chicago (Ill)—Vorbote
Daily News

NOTES.

MR. MCCREE has returned to the charge with another letter in the columns of the Daily News. It now appears that this gentleman thinks he has proved his case by contrasting the present year of our Lord with 1848. He imagines that he smashes all opposition by stating that the people are much better off both morally and materially in these advanced days than they were in '48.

Well, it may be true that the people are better off now than then. But Mr. McCree should not select a year of exceptional distress like '48 to prove his optimistic theories; '48 was a year throughout the Continent, of revolution, the year of Chartist plots, the year of the great demonstration on Kennington Common in England, when middle-class London was in an agony of panic at the revolution which seemed to be impending. It was a year too in which 14 Chartist chiefs were arrested by 300 armed policemen, while plotting insurrection at Angel Tavern, Blackfriars, while seizure of arms and arrests were made at many other places. So probably matters were a trifle worse than they are now.

But then the people hadn't been starved and poisoned down to their present poorness of health and physique in the back slums of London. If they did swear and curse more, what of it? It was, perhaps, proof of a stronger physical organisation; but now too many of the masses are too spiritless to curse, too broken down in body and mind to revolt against the misery which oppresses them. They have not even sufficient spirit to kick the pious pretenders out of doors when they come lecturing them upon the crime of being poor, the beauties of godliness, thrift, and temperance. And this is the sort of thing which gospel-grinders call a vast improvement!

There isn't so much cursing, manners are improving, vice is not so prevalent. Dear me, one would think Mr. McCree had dwelt in Belgravia all his life. Has he ever listened to the conversation of the East-end rough, to that outpouring of filthy slime, far worse than the good honest hearty curses of the days gone by. Has he ever walked along a populous street in the West-end, or in the suburbs of London? If he hasn't, let him do it, and if he can come forward with these lies in his mouth again, he must have more than the usual share of impudence necessary in his profession of "minister" of the Gospel.

I can tell Mr. McCree one virtue which some of the poor have learned from the ministrations of himself and his brethren. Those who have been brought immediately under their influence have learnt "hypocrisy" to such a degree, that they have perhaps taken in their masters. This is the great improvement; but hypocrisy with its sham refinement is no proof of increasing purity of heart and mind. It is only a covering for far deadlier evils than openly displayed themselves in the days that have passed.

Under the benignant rule of Mr. McCree's masters, degeneration, moral and physical, is spreading rapidly like a fearful pestilence through every section of the population, while Mr. McCree and his brethren do their best to hide the evil and cover up the sore. The cry of these false prophets has always been the same, "Peace, peace!" when there is no peace, but murder, famine, and hideous war. Go on, Mr. McCree, whitewash the sepulchre of middle-class society; but we can still smell, despite the fair outside, the odour of corruption and the stench of dead men's boncs. D. N.

RELEASE OF OLDLAND.

OUR comrade Alfred Oldland was released from Pentonville prison on the 8th inst., after having suffered fourteen months' imprisonment. It will be remembered that in November, 1887, the police, after having driven the unemployed from Trafalgar Square, set upon and brutally beat them as they were about to leave Hyde Park in orderly procession. Having been specially pointed out by police officers with the cry, "He's a leader!" Oldland, in sheer desperation, raised his stick to defend himself against a score of policemen who were advancing upon him with drawn truncheons. Having slightly struck one of them, he was charged with assault. Being tried before Mr. Edlin at the Middlesex Sessions, that worthy associate of "Mother Jefferies" sentenced him to twelve months' hard labour, and two months extra if he failed to find sureties to "keep the peace" for another twelve. He complained of the amount of food allowed to prisoners, saying, according to an evening contemporary, that it was "simply starvation." As a rule, the authorities release Socialist prisoners extremely early; but on this occasion a large number of comrades were kept waiting in the cold morning air until 9 o'clock.

Charity to those to whom justice is denied, is only a bribe to make them submit to tyranny and injustice.—Bronterre O'Brien.

A very useful discussion, "Land, Labour, and Capital," is going on in the columns of the Co-operative News, in which the Rev. Oswald Birchall and other friends are taking an effective part.

The beginning of all good law, and nearly the end of it, is in these two ordinances,—that every man shall do good work for his bread; and secondly, that every man shall have good bread for his work.—Ruskin, 'Fors,' No. 10.

STARVING DUSTMEN.—The Croydon Echo, in its issue of the 10th, makes a vigorous attack on the municipal administration, which dooms numbers of poor men to misery while a few officials feast on the fat of the land. It also holds up to merited obloquy the local vicar, who has been blessing the Bumbles for "lowering the rates!"

THE POPE AND THE SOCIALISTS.—According to the Daily News correspondent the Pope, in an audience he gave a few days ago to several American prelates, instructed them to strenuously combat the Socialist movement which has lately begun to spread among the Irish Roman Catholics settled in America. If the measures taken privately should not prove sufficient, a Papal Rescript, similar to the one addressed to the bishops in Ireland, will probably be sent to the United States.

SOCIALISM IN MANCHESTER.—Our comrade Wess, whose constant, untiring work in the cause has gained him the warm esteem and trust of all who knew him here, has lately gone to Manchester. Of course, he at once began to do all he could to stir the deadly-lively town. In a private letter to a friend here he gives some account of his experiences, and seems very hopeful as to the work that may be done there. His address is 19, Charlotte Street, Hightown, where he will be very glad to hear from those who are willing to help him.

AN IRISH POLICEMAN REBELS.—A sensational incident occurred last week in Loughrea. When the Quarter Sessions Court adjourned after hearing several Clanricarde ejections, the local Nationalists brought out the band, which played national airs through the streets to celebrate the determined struggle made by the tenants against Lord Clanricarde. At the head of the band marched a policeman in uniform, and, addressing the crowd, he declared that the police were sick of the degrading work which they were called upon to perform—evicting poor people and seizing a priest's car and vestments on the public road. For his own part he was resolved not to go on with it any more, and he called for three cheers for John Dillon, William O'Brien, and the Clanricarde tenants, which were heartily responded to. At this juncture a body of police marched on the scene and arrested the constable.

EDUCATION: WHAT IT IS, AND WHAT IT SHOULD BE.

(Concluded from p. 13.)

I REFERRED before to Nature's manner of "educating." In the future, and in order to proceed on proper lines, we shall require to imitate her a little; this time not with the aid of Competition, but of Art. I say in the future, because this demands a revolution in thought and consequent destruction of our present condition of social life and relations. For education means development, it means the creation of conditions that will afford the fullest opportunity to all mankind, for the due cultivation of our manhood and womanhood. Instead of drudges, loafers, and swindlers, it would make men and women—a somewhat truer and higher ideal than the making of money, or of raising a race of drudges to enable others to make it. It is indeed impossible to exaggerate the importance of a right education under the guidance of wise, sympathetic teachers. Not mere stuffing with dead vocables, of themselves indefinite, and too often distorting the natural inclination, fitness of the pupil.

On this matter Goethe has said: "Well formed healthy children bring much into the world along with them. Nature has given to each whatever he requires for time and duration; to unfold, this is the duty of teachers; often it unfolds itself better of its own accord." Granting the indispensability of the alphabet and what follows from it, could not this art of teaching be carried into higher, more definite regions? Could we not have a teaching class to preside over, educate, draw out and direct the youthful capacities of doing, of being, and enjoying—in all ways to take from the region of sentiment, the thought of the poet? What a piece of work is a man! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! It might be asked what can education not do; education that will not confine itself to one mechanical quality of the mind, but will embrace the mind itself, the character, and whole moral and physical powers of the man.

Of course such education is only possible after every form of social inequality, all artificial distinction of rich and poor, high and low, has been destroyed, and in this sense a true educationist is necessarily a revolutionist, as Social Revolution only will make education possible. No separation of the brain and the hand will be attempted, nor can this even be done without inflicting disaster on both, as is seen to-day. There is no such separation in nature. At present, however, very many are confined to mere drudgery possessed with brains, and therefore, capable of profiting by reasonable leisure; while the ostensible "brain-worker" is very often seen to be without brains. Therefore true education must be industrial for all alike, as only in a combination of the physical, external, and practical, with the intellectual and creative, can we get a full expression of the man. Work, labour, is no equivocal expression, but is the outward and palpable revelation of the inward. In a reasonable state of society all will be required to perform their share of labour, that each may be relieved from undue toil, and ample leisure provided for the proper development of the enormous treasure of human worth, energy, and talent, now lying all defaced or trodden out of sight,—

"Then a man shall work and bethink him, and rejoice in the deeds of his hand,
Nor yet come home in the even too faint and weary to stand."

What an immense blessing and relief it would be to the human race were we once well rid of the sickening hurry and worry, impetuous haste and scramble, with which every description of work is associated to-day—how you are hounded on by some lynx-eyed master, or snobbish sycophantic "gaffer," until the thing you are fashioning becomes hateful, a thing you can have no joy or delight in, but are only anxious to get it out of your sight. How far different the work might be, the life might be, to feel you were infusing your soul in your work—a pleasure in the doing, and done to be a source of genuine profit and pleasure to yourself and others.

An objection might be noted here that is always sure to be made to such a ruthless disregard of "superior abilities," "genius," and such-like, as is implied in such an educational scheme—an objection, however, that can only emanate from commercial travellers, commission agents, and the general fraternity of touts. What about the poets, the Shakespeares, the Miltons, "would you have them descend to some paltry occupation?" It might be difficult to allay the apprehensions of the touts, but we could remind them that the Shakespeares were rare, and we might also with reverential awe and whispering humbleness say this—that most of us rise, up to mediocrity merely. On the other hand, this at least is to be remarked, that no human being is born with brains so meagre as to warrant the enormous cruelty perpetrated by Society in confining a man to the solitary occupation of boring like rats in mines, from the moment they are able to work till the day they die; and it is an aggravation of the offence to imagine that it is other than an altogether hideous decree. It might also be remarked that among our so-called "brain-workers," few weavers rise to weave us a web of thought of the texture of a Hamlet or 'Paradise Lost.' There is something irreverent, however, in such references to the marvels of the poet's mind, as they cannot be spoken of as labour in that sense of the term under consideration. To body forth the forms of things unseen will always be the glory and exceeding great reward of the poet, and he will be the last to object to useful and healthy physical exercise, else he is no true poet.

With the leisure that would result to every individual, by all performing a part, a man would be enabled to develop his powers and his usefulness in a variety of ways, and not be confined to one monotonous round of the same kind of labour. And whatever the labour he might be engaged in, it would in all cases have the full assent of his manhood being an intelligent participator in the end aimed at. Whereas at present the worker is a mere mechanical drudge, and, so far as he is concerned, the work engaged in is quite aimless, no part of his life, except in so far as he expends his life on it to get his daily bread. There is, perhaps, nothing more forcibly illustrates this than to see a body of workmen, after having finished off some beautiful mansion, meekly and with a very appalling kind of magnanimity leave it to somebody, while they slowly make their way for some obscure, smoky, and ill-ventilated hovel. They build the mansions and they build the hovels—but the hovels are for themselves, the mansions are for the rich. Of course it might be said the bishop, banker, merchant, or to whoever the mansion was left, had money and could buy it, while the individual workmen had not. But if the bishop had been in the desert of Sahara all his days, instead of living in the midst of wealth-producing millions, he would not have had his money. Or, better still, if the bishop, etc., belong to their monopoly independent of the millions, then let them go to the desert of Sahara with it, and much good may it do them, leaving the workers, the industrial armies—"every soldier with his two five-fingered hands at his shackle bones and miraculous head on his shoulders"—behind, with the quarries, the mines, the workshops, and the fair fields! No single man can accomplish anything, but all men in intelligent combination and co-operation can, with a certain approximation to equity, satisfy the wants of each.

Looking on a certain "miscellany of men," Carlyle remarked: "Some score or two of years ago all these were little red coloured pulpy infants, each of them capable of being kneaded, baked into any social form you chose." A right education would regard all men at the outset, without distinction of parentage, as simply "red-coloured pulpy infants," incipient citizens, who by every kind of appropriate furtherance were to become the men and women of the future. Care would be taken that the surroundings would be of such a nature as would give the dawning intelligence impressions of beauty, of truth, and of purity. In this light, furnished by the social idea of education, we see that human wretchedness, disease, all deformity what we call sin, is not necessarily a permanent part of human life, but quite accidental and passing. At least it is purely relative, and the result of the influences with which we have been surrounded.

Just consider what a monstrous mass of ugliness, of filth, and smoke a big city is; the hideous diversity and irregularity of its buildings, regardless of form, line, or device, except pig device. Side by side with some magnificent pile is some contractor's shed or huckster's shop, every nook and cranny utilised regardless of anything in nature or art. Consider the homes of its inhabitants, the overcrowded streets and lanes and closes, with their multitudes of dirty urchins enjoying themselves as they can in the gutters. Can we think these things do not stamp impressions of the same kind on the people? Must not these be distorted images, polluted thoughts, corrupt actions—moral and physical ugliness? "Let no one think that he can alter the first impressions of his youth," said Goethe. All the more important then that we should make our surroundings of a kind that would purify and exalt, not stain and debase; and, how full of hope for the future of our race is that education which implies this, and will not omit to improve these surroundings. All poetry and prophesy declare that man is good by nature,—

In virtue trained enlightened youth,
Will love each fellow creature;
And future years will prove the truth
That man is good by nature.

"Lo!" said one of the old Hebrew prophets, "this only have I found, that God hath made man upright." True he has sought out many "inventions" in his long pilgrimage down the ages, in slow painful gropings in the dark, in hard battlings with disorder and despair, with wild stormful passions in and around him. Still he has always been growing, advancing, and doubtless it is this same "inventive" faculty, restrained by culture and directed by wisdom, that is destined yet to "conduct the world to freedom."

DANIEL McCULLOCH.

I think nobody but a bishop or a bank director can ever be rogue enough to deserve hanging.—Ruskin, 'Fors,' Dec. 1874.

LABOUR AND LAZINESS.—But some one may say, "Have you not a word to give us about the workmen?" Certainly. We look forward to a time when the artizan shall not be regarded as a machine for the capitalist to squeeze; we know—alas, how well we know!—the life of the men who are up in darkness, and who labour until they are too tired to read or think or do anything but doze sluggishly till bed-time. A little laziness would not do some of these fine fellows any harm. We have seen boiler-makers come home night after night with their strong arms almost numbed. If the men sit down for a few minutes after tea, they are like inert masses, and no idea can penetrate their dulled senses. On the other hand, we know the eager vigorous men who go out to political meetings or lectures or who attend reading-rooms, and we admire them and their life. We should like to see the mechanic and labourer have a steady, certain amount of leisure—call it time for laziness if you like; we are not particular over names. We emphatically declare that a nation is disgraced in which thousands of the most useful citizens pass their days in fierce toil and their brief leisure in semi-somnolence. The prudent, active artisan of the future will take care of his own interests, and we shall not see clever hard-working fellows housed like pigs, and resting content with the dull enjoyments of brute beasts.—Family Herald.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

SEAMEN'S WAGES.—An increase of 5s. in the wages of seamen and firemen was conceded at Dundee on January 10th, the rates for a steamer being 80s. and 85s. per month respectively.

LANARKSHIRE MINERS.—The miners at the extensive collieries of Archibald Russell, Greenfield, Hamilton, have been notified that on and after Monday, 14th inst., they will receive an advance of 6d. per day.

FACTORY WAGES AT DUNDEE.—On January 10th, the executive of Dundee Mill and Factory Operatives' Union resolved, "On account of continued improvement in local trade and scarcity of hands, to agitate for a third increase of 5 per cent. in the wages of the operatives."

LOCK-OUT AT WEST HARTLEPOOL.—The following notice was posted on January 8th in Gray's and Company's shipyards: "In consequence of the action of the men engaged in the iron department, this yard will be closed on the 16th inst., and all except those required by the respective foremen will be discharged. Such men as we retain will be engaged from day to day."

SAILORS' STRIKE.—The strike of sailors and firemen in the employ of Lord Londonderry at Seaham Harbour and Sunderland, was brought to an end at a late hour on Thursday night. The whole of the men's demands have been conceded, and the settlement is attributed to the power of the National Union of Sailors and Firemen, which the men joined in a body last Tuesday. Many attempts were made to fill up with "rats," but none could be got.

JEWISH LABOUR IN MANCHESTER.—A strong effort is being made to organise the Jewish work-people in this city, as is being done in London, Leeds, and other places. Meetings have been held, with the result that a large number gave in their names for the purpose of forming a club, having for its aim the enlightenment and education of the workers on all subjects bearing on the labour question, as also to combine the workers employed in different trades for the purpose of co-operating with the English workers in their struggle against the sweating system.

ADVANCE IN MINERS' WAGES.—On Friday 11th, deputations from the various pits in Burnley waited upon the two firms of colliery proprietors, viz., the executors of Colonel Hargreave and Messrs. Brooks and Pickup, asking for 10 per cent. advance in wages. The increase was granted. It affects about five thousand miners. A great strike was threatened if it had not been conceded, and an agitation is still in progress on the question of unionism. The masters decline to recognise the Union which is being formed, and a considerable number of men have been discharged, as they allege, for joining the organisation.

COTTON TRADE.—At Blackburn, the Park Place Mill dispute has gone in favour of the men.—The weavers at Loughbridge Shed, Kelbrook, have struck against unjust arrangements of work.—The Cotton Hall Company's disputes at Darwen has ended satisfactorily for the weavers.—The strike of weavers at Lower Heyes Mill, Macclesfield, has now entered its twenty-sixth week, and there has been nothing new during past week.—Further negotiations took place on Friday 11th, with regard to the dispute in Bolton, whereby some thirty thousand operatives are working short time three days a week. The masters renewed their offer to pay £2 18s. per spinner weekly wages; but this the operatives at once rejected, suggesting a conference between the committees on the subject. The dispute has now entered on its fifth week, and great privation is experienced owing to the loss of wages.

DUNDEE MILLWORKERS.—The spinners at Broadford Works came out on strike for an increase of 5 per cent. on their present rate of wages. They base their demand upon the fact that the employés at the jute works on two occasions during the past year received an advance of 5 per cent. (10 per cent. in all), and that there seems to be general prosperity in trade. A deputation waited on the manager on Thursday evening, and made a representation to this effect. He stated he would "only be too glad to grant the increase asked for, but that the state of the flax trade was such at present as to make it impossible for any advance to be conceded." There appears to have been an understanding between the employés and their masters that a week's notice would be given of the workers' intention to strike, but at eleven o'clock on Friday the spinners to the number of about a thousand came out. None of the other departments in the factory are affected by the stoppage of the spinning, and are all in full operation. In the course of the day the girls paraded the streets. On Monday, Rev. A. Williamson, the President of Dundee and District Factory Operatives' Union, addressed a mass meeting. Comrade Webster also spoke.

SLAVES OF THE DUSTHEAP.—Disclosures of sweating at their own dust wharf surprised the Clerkenwell Vestry at the meeting on the 10th. It was reported that an explosion of carboric powder at the wharf had seriously injured the right eye of a woman dust-sifter, and as she would be unable to resume work for at least a fortnight, the Works Committee recommended that she should meanwhile receive 12s. per week, the explosion having occurred through the act of a vestry servant. Mr. Evans informed the vestry that the sifting of dust was not done by the superintendent of the wharf, but by a contractor, who received 1s. 3d. for each load, and drew in one year near nearly £500. He engaged a number of poor women, who, standing up to their knees in dust, sifted the dust for 7s. a week when they made full time. Often, for lack of dust, they only laboured half-days, and then their pay was proportionately less. Young women, however poor, would not do such work at the price. They preferred prostitution. The sweater himself strutted about with a big cigar in his mouth, like a gentleman. So arduous was the work that two women engaged in it in a neighbouring parish dropped dead while sifting; but these two women would take a load and divide the price of sifting and the value of occasional things of worth which were found in the dust-heap. The result was they were much better paid. £1 a week was not too much to pay the injured woman, but care must be taken that none of the money was appropriated by the sweater. The clerk said that in addition to the 7s., the injured woman received something in kind in the shape of coal, and the wharf superintendent valued her income at 12s. weekly; but when asked, where did she get the coal, answered, "From the dust itself!" It was agreed to give the woman 12s. weekly during her disablement, the vestry clerk paying her directly. It was then unanimously resolved that the whole system of dust-sifting at the wharf be referred to the Works Committee for consideration and report.

LETTER FROM AMERICA.

THE once great and influential labour organisation known all over the world as the Knights of Labour, is rapidly sinking into insignificance. The members are leaving the body in swarms. The Blacksmiths' Assembly of Reading, Pa., left on Dec. 25th in a body. A short time ago the strength of this assembly was four hundred members. A week before Christmas the Coopers' Local Assembly of Chicago also withdrew, and it is more than probable that within two weeks after new-year's day all the fifty-one local coopers' assemblies in the United States will also withdraw from the Knights of Labour and form themselves into a national organisation, with honest officers and principles to suit the radical ideas of the coopers. It is greatly to be regretted that an organisation which in its earlier development promised so fair has come to this. The Knights of Labour was founded specially to bring about a fraternization of the workers as a class in contradistinction to orthodox trade-unionism, which dealt principally with the combination of workers belonging to one trade. Speaking of the future of labour organisation, comrade Lum, the editor of the Alarm and an old Knight, says this week—and I may add that I thoroughly endorse his view:

"Organisation still remains, but it is reactionary. The trade-union spirit is selfish; instead of a generous combination with fellow workers, interest is narrowed to one, whose interest becomes the concern of only those directly allied with him. What can be more dreary than a trade union meeting where but few attend and all business is purely routine? The labour movement demands more than unions to force wages up. It demands the fraternization of the workers combined with decentralization of power. On the one hand we have fraternization and autocracy [Knights of Labour]; on the other isolation and decentralization [American Federation of Trades and Labour Unions]. This cannot last. The spirit of the age demands an organisation wherein different trades may mingle and fundamental economic principles may be inculcated. The unions should remain, for without them the workers would be left a prey to sordid greed; but from these unions let men come together in fraternal accord. This was the dream of the Knights before betrayed by Powderly. The work will now have to be done elsewhere. And it will be done."

The pessimism of the last two years, which has crushed the spirit of even the most enthusiastic advocates of labour rights, is gradually giving place to a healthy and energetic optimism.

The trial of Charles T. Parsons, the slave-dealer of Northampton, Mass., whose general character I described in the Commonweal of December 15th, has come off in Springfield, Mass. Parsons was found guilty of gross cruelties. He was sentenced—to pay a penalty of 500 dollars!

"The Ford Immigration Investigation Committee will shortly introduce a bill in Congress to restrict immigration. What is really needed is a bill consisting of three words only: 'Shut that door.'"—Daily paper. Comment superfluous.

Another alleged dynamiter is convicted, and society is safe once more. On the 24th Dec., as a Christmas gift, the jury in the Bauereisen conspiracy case at Geneva, Ill., returned a sealed verdict. Bauereisen was found guilty and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. The jury stood eight for five years and four for a fine; but they soon compromised their difference. The prisoner's council moved at once for a new trial, and the judge set Jan. 3 apart for hearing the motion. Bauereisen was speedily taken to jail. He was tried under an indictment charging him with exploding dynamite at South Aurora, Ill., on June 14th, 1888, at the time of the great "Q" strike, and with complicity in a general conspiracy to destroy property of the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad. All the evidence against him consisted of testimony given by informers. I have reported the case at length in previous letters, and therefore need not go into it again. The most interesting feature in the case is that the Brotherhood of Railway Engineers, the most conservative and aristocratic labour organisation in the world, has been openly charged, to use the exact words of solicitor Chester Dawes, with being "if not guilty of complicity in the dynamite outrages against the Burlington company, at least guilty of aiding, encouraging, and shielding those of its members who have been found in the plot."

The employés of the Pottstown, Pa., Iron Company were dismissed rather summarily, and this shows how little feeling employers have for their men. Without previous notice, on Christmas Eve the men, after being paraded, received the following notice: "Please take notice that the accompanying pay is in full of all your wages to date, and terminates your employment with this company."

It may be possible that, in the beginning of the new year, all the engineers of the western railroads will go on strike. The engineers want the classification system, which prevails on a good many western roads, abolished, and the mileage system introduced instead. This predicts a very lively time for the roads. There is hardly one which has not, owing to the rate wars, lost money, and they are therefore not in a condition to battle with their engineers. If the engineers strike quickly, they may strike good.

Preparations are being made for taking the eleventh census of the United States. A Bill has been presented to the Senate providing for a thorough examination of the industries of the country; of the employment and idleness of the people; of the tenures and amounts of the holdings of the lands of the nation by individuals; of companies and corporations; and of the indebtedness or liabilities in the form of mortgages or deferred instalments now resting upon the farms and produce of the people. A petition has been sent to Carroll D. Wright, superintendent of the Labour Bureau in Washington, asking that the statistics of the unemployed be taken. Interviewed on this point, Wright gave the following answer: "I have a long petition here asking that the statistics of the unemployed be taken, and stating that the provision for taking them in the law of 1879 was disregarded. The fact is that they were taken, but the answers were so unsatisfactory that it was not thought worth while compiling and publishing them." Query: How is it that a Government official is never in want of a ready answer?

The State of Pennsylvania must be mad. Anyhow, it looks to reasonable people that way. To explain: The State of Pennsylvania has resolved to sue Jay Gould for having violated the constitution of that commonwealth. About a year ago young Robert Garrett, president of the Baltimore and Ohio system, went mad because, in his absence, Jay Gould bribed the officials of that system to sell to him the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company. This the officials did. Since then the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company has been consolidated with the Western Union Telegraph Company (Jay Gould's property). The State of Pennsylvania does not like this consolidation, but the State ought to know that Jay is more powerful than courts, legislatures, and executives—that, in fact, he and his clique are THE Government. Notwithstanding this knowledge, or perhaps only for the purpose of making a show, Attorney-General Kirkpatrick, in the name of the people of Pennsylvania, on the 29th of December made an application to a judge in HERRISBURG, Pa., for a writ of quo warranto against the Western Union Telegraph and the Baltimore and Ohio Companies for violating that part of the constitution of Pennsylvania prohibiting the consolidation of competing lines. The writ is returnable on the 29th of January. But oh, my! won't the people of Pennsylvania get worsted by Jay!

The time for the city elections in Chicago is nearing again, and, in order to be able to pose anew as saviours of Chicago, Major Roche, superintendent of police Hubbard, and Bonfield are suppressing meetings to the right and left. On the 27th December, comrade Lucy Parsons was announced to speak at Waverley Hall, in Chicago, but the police locked the door and permitted nobody to enter. The Arbeiterbund, a Socialist society with a very moderate programme, is not permitted to hold meetings anywhere in Chicago. This society has made an application to the Master in Chancery for an injunction restraining the police from interfering with or preventing their meetings. The decision has not been given yet. Even the capitalistic press is unable to support the police any longer. The following story I clipped from the New York Herald: "Frederick W. Soelter, of Cincinnati, a wealthy maltster, left Chicago for home last night, threatening damage suits against Chief of Police Hubbard and Inspector Bonfield. Mr. Soelter's grievance is that while in the city on business, and notwithstanding that he had 6,500 dollars on his person, he was arrested and detained several hours, being treated meantime to a ride through the streets in a patrol wagon. He was not brought into court, and when he sought satisfaction at police headquarters was told with warmth that the best thing to do was to get out of Chicago as soon as he knew how. Previous to his arrest, Mr. Soelter had been to a Radical gathering that turned out harmless enough."

The Chicago Times is very bitter in its denunciations of the police. In its issue of December 24th it contains two leading articles against Bonfield, concluding with the words: "The power of the law to curb misuse of municipal power is yet to be shown." HENRY F. CHARLES.
Newark, N.J., January 1st, 1889.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

FRANCE.

Comrade Baudelot, administrator of the bi-monthly paper Ca Ira, is to be prosecuted by the Paris Court of Assize for several articles which did not please the Republican Nupkinses.

A provisional committee, consisting of the following members: Cluseret, Ferroul, Planteau, Félix Pyat (Deputies), Champoudry, Chassaing, Dumas, Marsoullan (Municipal Councillors), Ostyn, Protot, Urbain (ex-Members of the Commune), Bricon, Chatelain, Closmadeuc, Fesneau, Cougny, Gravier, Martelet, Mijoul, Quinoux, Rousseau, and Royannez (members of various revolutionary bodies), have formed a new revolutionary group, called "La Commune," and also issued a manifesto urging the revolutionary masses to prepare themselves for the "next" Commune. "Since the Commune of 1792, the greatest revolutionary act has been the Commune of 1871. Each individual and each party must be considered and judged by the part they took in the latter uprising; 1792 has saved France by its victory, 1871 has saved the Republic by its sacrifice. The Commune of the Centenary will save France, the Republic, and above all the Social Revolution." We earnestly hope that this forecast may prove true. It is timely enough that the French Socialists should look forward, for the possibilists of the so-called Parti ouvrier become more and more reactionary and Floquetists, and Cadettists.

AUSTRIA.

The Social Democrats assembled at Hainfeld, have constituted their party on the following lines:—The Social Democratic party is not national, but international; all means of propaganda, press, meetings, congresses are to be used; all measures of coercion to be fought against; Parliamentarism, though not of much importance in their eyes, is to be taken advantage of; reduction of hours of labour, abolition of children's work, etc.; obligatory, gratuitous, and secular education, hence separation of State and Church; abolition of standing armies, to be replaced by complete armament of the people; in all questions, political and economical, to struggle for the interests of the proletariat as a class. We would have expected somewhat "more" than these paltry measures from our Austrian friends; perhaps they will "march on" in a little while.

ITALY.

Two new Anarchist papers are about to be started, Il Libero Patto (Free Contract) at Ancona, and Humanitas at Naples. The latter is to appear secretly, since the former paper of that name has never been lucky enough to be published without at once being confiscated. The Socialist press in Italy has an exceptionally hard struggle to face, but our Italian comrades, to their honour and credit be it said, are of indomitable energy and endurance. V. D.

There are, indeed, said to be republican villages in America, where everybody is civil, honest, and substantially comfortable; but these villages have several unfair advantages—there are no lawyers in them, no town councils, and no parliaments. Such republicanism, if possible on a larger scale, would be worth fighting for.—Ruskin, 'Fors,' No. 1.

During the last year five persons, three of them Londoners, left ten and a half millions of money to their successors. Seventeen other persons left eight and a half millions of money between them. Other nineteen each left more than a quarter of a million of personality. The estates of forty-one persons thus account for twenty-five millions.—Court Journal.

EXPEDIENCY.—Caiphas was a man of expediency; he assembled the Sanhedrim that they might consult, lest the Romans should come and take away the place and nation, and asked: "Know ye not that it is expedient that one man should die for the people?" and the priest of expediency triumphed: the "one man" was crucified. Within 50 years from that time Christianity was going forth into all the regions of the earth, and gathering together the Roman and the Greek, the Barbarian and the Scythian, the bond and the free, into the fold of Christ. Meanwhile the ploughshare was passing over the dust of Jerusalem.—W. J. Fox.

WHEN THE PEOPLE HAVE THEIR OWN AGAIN.

THOUGH prating fools in Parliament
May do their utmost to prevent
The people's knowing who are who,
Or finding out what they can do;
In spite of them all, how'er they may bawl,
And Wrong defend with might and main,
The Right it shall win, and the good days begin
When the people have their own again.

The lawyers all may do their best
For profit, rent, and interest,
And parsons also after fees
May give the coward conscience ease;
But writ on the wall is the tale of their fall,
Whose pleasure is the people's pain;
Ere long they'll be gone, and freedom be won
When the people have their own again.

We see the promise in the east,
The dawning day of Freedom's feast;
And though the despots call it crime
To hail with joy the coming time,
Right well do we know how soon they must go,
And hear their threatening with disdain;
We know that at length we shall rise in our strength,
And the people have their own again!

AN GEALHAN GARAIDE.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Library.—The Library is open to members of the Socialist League and affiliated bodies. LIBRARY CATALOGUE, containing the Rules, 2d. D. J. NICOLL and W. BLUNDELL are the Librarians.

Executive.—At the last meeting of the Council, comrades Kitz, Nicoll, and Cantwell were elected as a sub-committee to organise the celebration of the Paris Commune. In the course of a discussion upon the management of Commonweal, it was urged that secretaries of branches, especially of the provincial branches, should make their reports as readable as possible by giving a general idea of the work in their districts.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, Feb. 4, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888: Clerkenwell and Leicester to December. Notice to Branch Secretaries—Please remit to Central Office your Branch-Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will shortly appear.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" PRINTING FUND.—J. H. Middleton, 4s. 6d.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following have handed in their names as guarantors for sums of not less than 6d. weekly:—S. Presburg, D. Nicoll, J. Presberg, H. Davis, Morris Wess, H. Daum, L. Trunk, R. Turner, J. Turner, W. B. Parker, J. Lane, H. Sparling, M. Morris, V. Dave, Wm. Blundell, Curtis, F. Kitz, B. W. B., S. Mainwaring, J. Morris, W. Leatham, C. Tilley, Samuels, Solomon, Esther Isaacson, Frieden-holl, Kahan, Rochman, A. Seglie, and Mrs. Schack. Five hundred wanted.

NOTICE TO MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE.—Propaganda Committee meets on Tuesday, January 22nd, at 8.30 p.m. Important business; all members who are interested in the propaganda are asked to attend. D. J. NICOLL.

REPORTS.

CLERKENWELL.—On Sunday evening, Brookes in the chair, D. Nicoll lectured on the "Commune of Paris." Hall closely packed, and enthusiastic discussion followed by members and visitors. Commonweal sold well, also pamphlet entitled "Paris Commune."—S. P.

FULHAM.—On Tuesday evening, at the back of Walham Green Church, Smith, Bullock, Beasley, and Groser spoke to a fair meeting. On Sunday evening, Tochatti, Smith, and Groser spoke outside rooms, and drew a fair audience inside for Turner, who lectured on "Insufficient Remedies." Many questions asked, and good debate followed.—S. B. G.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meetings at Latimer Road and Weltje Road on Sunday morning. At Latimer Road, choir sang new song, "To Arms," and others. Speakers were Maughan, Tochatti, A. J. Smith, Dean, and Fox. At Weltje Road, speakers were Maughan and Morris. Choir sang "No Master" and "March of the Workers." In evening, H. H. Sparling lectured at Kelmiscott House on "Luxury now; Necessity then." Many questions and fair discussion.

HYDE PARK.—Good meeting held in conjunction with the S.D.F. Those in charge of this station are requested to bring the platform next Sunday.

NORTH LONDON.—A lecture was delivered at 6, Windmill Street, on Friday, 11th inst., by D. Nicoll, on "The Social Revolution, the Means and End." A very interesting discussion followed. This was the first lecture announced by the branch, and it is their intention to follow it up by a series every fortnight during the winter months. Socialists of all shades of opinion are invited to attend.

VICTORIA PARK.—Good meeting held at this station last Sunday. ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on 7th, Morris's lecture, "How we live, and how we might live," was read and discussed. At Castle Street on Saturday night, usual meeting addressed by Aiken, Duncan, and Leatham, the first speaker dealing with the strike at Broadford Works, where he is a heckler.—L.

GLASGOW.—On Sunday at 5, Glasier and Pollock spoke at Paisley Road Toll. This station is within the bounds of Govan, where the present election contest is going on. The speakers denounced vigorously both candidates, who are typical capitalists, and laid down the principles of revolutionary Socialism. Those who believe that anti-Parliamentary teaching is unpalatable to the working-class, would probably modify their views had they been present. The attendance of members at our rooms is good—but there appears at present to be a lull of public interest in Socialism, and indeed in all political propaganda, except when artificially stimulated by an election.

NORWICH.—Sunday afternoon, usual meeting in Market Place; large audience. Mowbray spoke on the unemployed question, and also referred to the sweating tailoring firm, making several challenges for this firm to come forward and confute. In evening, in Gordon Hall, very interesting discussion on "Socialism." Several important questions asked and answered satisfactorily; audience larger than usual. Fair collections and sale of Commonweal. During the week large unemployed meetings have been going on daily, the men also marching through the streets with a large black banner, inscribed; "We want work, not charity."

YARMOUTH.—A fair meeting was held here on Sunday morning. In the afternoon, an audience of about 1,000 listened attentively to comrades C. Reynolds, Mills, and Poyntz; two quires of Commonweal sold, and every prospect of a strong Branch being formed.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

- Bloomsbury.—This Branch is now actively working. Socialists resident in this locality should send their names in at once to 13 Farringdon Road.
- Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Sunday Jan. 20, at 8.30, George Cores, "Parliamentary Government." Branch will hold a meeting on Clerkenwell Green prior to lecture.
- Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings are held on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Sunday January 13, at 8 p.m., S. Bullock, "Adulteration."
- Hackney.—Secretary, E. Lefevre, 14 Goldsmiths Sq., Goldsmiths Row, Hackney Road.
- Hammersmith.—Kelmecott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday Jan. 20, at 8 p.m., Sydney Olivier (Fabian Society), "Socialist Individualism." Wednesday 23rd, at 8 p.m., Graham Wallas (Fabian), "Democracy."
- Hoxton.—12, Basing Place, Kingsland Rd. Business meetings of this branch are held every Friday evening at 9 o'clock.
- London Fields.—All communications, etc., to Mrs. G. G. Schack, 26 Cawley Road, South Hackney.
- Mitcham.—Meets every Sunday, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road, at 11 a.m. Special Meeting on Sunday Jan. 20, at 11.30. Members please note.
- Mile-end and Bethnal Green.—95 Boston St., Hackney Road.
- North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.
- Waltham and Camberwell.—This branch is now in working order. Friends in this locality are earnestly invited to co-operate, and send their names in. Committee meetings every Monday, 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church St., Camberwell Green.
- Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.

PROVINCES.

- Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Secretary, P. Barron, 14 Ann Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.
- Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.
- Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meeting every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secy.
- Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.
- Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.
- Galashiels (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secy.
- Gallatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn St.
- Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.
- Ipwich.—Pioneer Hall, Tacket Street. Meets on Sunday evenings.
- Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. McGill, 22 Gilmour St. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.
- Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Rd. and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.
- Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.
- Norwich.—Sunday, at 8, A special meeting of members and friends will be held in the Gordon Hall, to consider the present position of the Commonweal and its future success; it is hoped there will be a good attendance. Monday, at 8, A Concert on behalf of comrade Mowbray, who is leaving this branch for London. Tickets 6d. and 3d. each. A good programme will be provided, and a string band in attendance. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members Meeting. Wednesday and Thursday, Hall open from 8.30 until 10.30. Friday, at 8, Committee Meeting in Gordon Hall. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Association.
- Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

All persons who sympathise with the views of the Socialist League are earnestly invited to communicate with the above addresses, and if possible help us in preparing for the birth of a true society, based on equality, brotherhood, and freedom for all.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 20.

11.30...Latimer Road Station ...Hammersmith Branch
11.30...Regent's ParkThe Branch
11.30...Walham Green, opp. Station.....The Branch
3.30...Hyde Park.....Nicoll & Parker
3.30...Victoria Park.....Mrs. Schaack & Hicks
7.30...Broad Street, SohoThe Branch
7.30...Clerkenwell GreenNicoll
7.30...Weltje Rd., Ravenscourt Pk.....Hammersmith

Tuesday.

8.30...Fulham—back of Walham Green Ch. ...Branch

EAST END.

SUNDAY 20.

Leman Street, Shadwell 11 ...Mrs. Schaack.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.
Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.
Ipswich.—
Sproughton, Wednesday evening.
Westerfield, Thursday evening.
Needham Market, Sunday morning and evening.
Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.
Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3.

ST. PANCRAS REFORM CLUB, Grafton Lodge, Prince of Wales's Road, N.W.—Rev. S. D. Headlam, a lecture. Thursday, at 8.30.

All those desirous of helping in the work of the S.L. in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with comrade F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

INTERNATIONAL WORKING MEN'S EDUCATIONAL CLUB, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road, E.—On Saturday January 19th, Benefit Concert in aid of Pamphlet Fund.

LEICESTER.—A course of lectures on "Socialism, its Aims and Principles" is being delivered in Leicester Secular Hall. The fifth lecture will be delivered on Sunday January 20 by Graham Wallas—subject, "Property under Socialism."

THE SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—The Committee will meet at 63 Lincoln's Inn Fields, on Saturday Jan. 19, at 7.30 p.m. Members please send their subscription cards to the Secretary for audit.

SOUTH LONDON.—Friends who will help to establish a Branch of the Socialist League in South London will please place themselves in communication with C. Henze, 41 Bolton Street, Thomas Street, Kennington Park, S.E., or by letter to H. Hopkins, 17 Gairloch Road, Shenley Road, Peckham, S.E.

DER ARBEITERBUND "GLEICHHEIT" ladet alle deutschen Arbeiter Londons, welche mit den Bestrebungen der Arbeiterbewegung sympathisiren, ein, sich am Montag, des 21 Januar 1889, abends 8 Uhr zur Besprechung ihrer Interessen im Cosmopolitan Club, 38 Charles Square, Brunswick Place, Hoxton, einzufinden. Eintritt frei für Jedermann.
DER ARBEITERBUND "GLEICHHEIT."

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

OUR NATIONAL CAKE:

WHO MAKES IT, AND WHO EATS IT.

Large display poster to bring home the aims of Socialism to the workers.

Sent free on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage. J. J. Harrison, 44 Oxford Street, Sheffield.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

WILLIAM REEVES, 135, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE LITERATURE.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d.
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d.
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris, Bijou edition, 3d.; Large paper, 6d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d.
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d.

"All for the Cause!" Song. Words by William Morris; Music by E. Belfort Bax. 4to, 4 pp. 6d. per dozen, 4s. 6d.

"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.

Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

This journal is the organ of the Australian Socialist League. Copies may be had at the office of the Commonweal, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. 1½d. per copy, 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

Recently Published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Being seven Lectures, delivered on various occasions for the Socialist League.

Reeves & Turner, 196 Strand; or Commonweal Office.

JULIUS BORDOLLO'S

LABOUR NEWS AGENCY

213 Forsyth Street, New York City, U.S.A.

American agency for the Commonweal. All Labour literature kept in stock. Send for list, post free.

Price 1d.; Post-free, 1½d.

THE RIGHTS OF LABOUR ACCORDING TO JOHN RUSKIN.

Arranged by THOMAS BARCLAY.

Second Edition.

"Your pamphlet is the best abstract of all the most important pieces of my teachings that has yet been done; and I am entirely grateful to you for doing it, and glad to have your letter."—Extract from letter received from Mr. Ruskin.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C

THE LABOUR LEADER.

AN ADVANCED POLITICAL JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF LABOUR.

The Miner will in future be published under the above name. First number issued January 10th; future numbers on 1st of the month, instead of 15th as hitherto.

Subscription, monthly 1d.; 1s. 6d. per annum.

Edited and published by KEIR HARDIE, Cumnock, Ayrshire.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 159.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE result of the elections for the London County Council and the Govan election, shift the scales once more toward the "Liberal" side; for, as a matter of course, in spite of all disclaimers the County Council election was fought out in London on party lines. As to the Govan election, if the Liberal success tends at all to bring the Irish matter any nearer to a conclusion, it is so far favourable to us. As to the County Councils once more, it must be a very sanguine Socialist indeed who can really believe that they will have any inclination to go beyond the well understood lines of very moderate "reform," which will make no monopolist in the least in the world anxious about the safety of his heart—i.e., his purse.

It is surely a matter of regret that our generous-minded and energetic comrade John Burns should be pitchforked into that thicket of red tape, which our new "Parliament for London" is pretty certain to turn out; but, undoubtedly, the return of such a "dangerous" man at the head of the poll is a sign of the times worth noting.

An account in the Boston Investigator of an interview with Colonel Ingersoll on the subject of Robert Elsmere, is interesting as showing the effect which the Socialist movement has had on that outspoken and eloquent Secularist. As far as I remember, in his early works Ingersoll shows no sign of being able to see beyond his own class; with him, as with so many intelligent middle-class men, the world was made up of the triumphant middle-class engaged in putting the finishing strokes to the work of demolishing feudal and absolutist oppression, and clearing away the cloud of superstition which yet hung over the latter end of the contest. The following sentence amongst several others has a very different ring about it.

"The poor man willing to work, eager to maintain his independence, knows that there is something higher than charity—that is to say justice. He finds that many years before he was born his country was divided out between certain successful robbers, flatterers, crawlers, and cringers, and that in consequence of such division not only himself, but a large majority of his fellow-men are tenants, renters, occupying the surface of the earth only at the pleasure of others. He finds too that these people who have done nothing and who do nothing have everything, and that those that do everything have but little."

Again, as to "charity": "For instance in England, think for a moment of the manner in which charities are distributed, the way in which the crust is flung at Lazarus. If that parable could be now retold, the dogs would bite him. The same is the case in this country (America). The institution has nothing but contempt for the one it relieves." It is much to be wished that all Secularist orators were as open to such generous ideas as "Col. Bob" seems to be. More power to him!

Apropos of charities, I have been begged to contribute to the Providence (Row) Night Refuge and Home for deserving men, women, and children. I have no word to say against the charity in question, which seems to do what work it can with less expensive machinery than most, and at least is doing good service in stating the facts plainly; I notice also that it has no harsh words for the poor folk it succours; but I must emphasise the word "deserving" by the way, for surely if there be any one who deserves less than the quite elementary help a night refuge can give him, what can that less be, short of a merciful bullet through his brains? Heavens! what strange words we use—about other people! The circular speaks about "the appalling destitution which is in the midst of us; and the number of persons who are walking the streets for nights homeless." Again, another word. Whom, I pray, does this appal, unless it be the sufferers themselves? Yet they, too, surely are long past being appalled. Will it appal the London County Council? I fear not.

And yet it well might if they could think of it. A hundred thousand people starving to death is appalling, I think, on any terms. One hundred thousand people is the population of a tolerably large town, even in the populous nineteenth century, if they were all brought together in one town. Reading, e.g., has 42,000. Fancy living in Reading with all its population out of work, i.e., starving! Think of yourself on a considerable island with no one in it able to do a stroke of work! Would that be less than appalling? And is it less appalling when this is happening amidst prosperous and respectable men going contentedly about their business and pleasure?

And why is not everybody who could by any chance amend it, always talking about it and about nothing else? Surely all business, public or private, should be but subsidiary to such a question as the solution of this "difficulty," this "problem," as we call it with lying cowardly evasion. For that is not all. Listen again: "There are numbers of women under the sweating system working from 6 a.m. to 12 p.m., and sometimes till 3 p.m., can only earn from 4s. 3d. to 5s. 6d. a week." We know the story, don't we? Or if we don't, why don't we, if it is true? As it is.

Do we know also that while business is improving, as is the word on all hands, "the applicants for poor-law relief exceed by 3,000 the number last year, and the charitable institutions are besieged." You capitalists, that is appalling enough if you will only consider what those two facts brought together mean. But you are not appalled, and I think will not be, until all doubt that your own skins are in immediate danger is at an end.

Again: "The outcasts who were at a distance, at Stratford, Victoria Station, Hyde Park, New Road, Dalston, and Hackney, had the bus fare paid to them to Liverpool Street, were most of them so poor, ragged, and dirty, that the conductors would not admit them, etc." Never mind, they were equal before the law to the Duke of Westminster and Mr. Blundell Maple. Oh pleasing and useful equality! Three cheers for civilisation!—with one cheer more for its—lice!

Yes, an old story indeed; and the why and wherefore of well-to-do people, not ill-natured or specially stupid above their fellows, looking on and sending from time to time a guinea to some such charity as this above mentioned, is not far to seek. No consideration of the subject, no talk, if it were continuous for a dozen years, would help. They would not know what to do, except by way of feeble palliatives, if they were to turn their whole attention to the subject. For they have not yet conceived the possibility of getting rid of the curse of private property and the struggle of the strongest for profits, which is its natural outcome. And the necessary outcome of that is that the extremely unsuccessful are not fit to ride in the same bus with even the moderately successful, or, if you please, even the moderately unsuccessful; so many minor grades there are in this hierarchy of the money-bag.

Most of all we have to remember that the only way out of this dreadful misery for the many, and the shame and crime for the few, of being forced to forget that it exists, is the attainment of a SOCIETY OF EQUALS. All inequality, whatever specious pretexts it may be veiled with, bears beneath the veil this grinning skeleton of stolid misery, side by side with soft, cowardly, well-to-do life. All inequality, I say, unless we are consciously striving to extinguish it, must in the end result in this last degree of inequality. The classes in a society can be "moderately" unequal when a man can be "moderately" honest and a woman "moderately" chaste.

The Immigration Bill before the Congress of the United States has suddenly flashed on the capitalist press as a kind of morning star of hope. To build a brazen wall of perpetual peace round the fools and snobs of the civilisation of a Continent, so that no soul should inhabit it except the said fools and snobs and their miserable slaves, is indeed an invention worthy of the Nation of Inventors. It is no wonder that the Telegraph is so enthusiastic about it. A reasonable man however, is likely to ask, "Will it work or burst?" W. M.

WHIGS ASTRAY.¹

A DIALOGUE BETWEEN

MR. MARK BAKOWINE JONES, an architect (unsuccessful), and—the
 Rev. SWAIN STRIDE, a Nonconformist parson, and } advanced Radicals.
 Mr. JEREMIAH BROWN, a business man

SCENE—A comfortable bachelor-looking room in Mr. BROWN'S house, with tobacco and pipes and grog to the fore. MR. STRIDE and MR. BROWN sitting on either side of the fire, looking important and self-satisfied. Between them MR. JONES with an occasional ill-concealed grin on his face.

(Concluded from p. 18.)

S. 'We are in favour of giving some relief by way of security of tenure to leaseholders who are exposed to enormous losses and ruin. It is true that this may only be in accordance with a contract voluntarily entered into; and it must be admitted that the evil is a difficult one to deal with.'

J. Yes, so difficult with your qualification tacked on to the remedy (as you think it) that you won't deal with it at all. It doesn't matter: a man who can have enormous losses must be rich: it is a question between two groups of capitalists. Pass on.

S. 'We are in favour of the State making some provision for employing men and women who are unable to find work. It is a matter requiring very careful treatment; but no one can believe that the State as the people's executive has exhausted its powers in this matter.'

J. Well, if it has, certainly exhaustion has come before effort; for it has never tried to give work to the rejected of the labour-market: and if it did try it could only do so at the expense of the workers generally.

S. Well, but you see, 'the work provided and the wages paid need only be sufficient to stave off hopeless poverty; but that at all events a wise and practical system of government might offer.'

J. Yes, indeed, only sufficient to stave off hopeless poverty: an easy job, isn't it? Man alive, do you know what hopeless poverty is? Live the life of it, and then you will know. And how many live such a life!—two thirds of all the workers? Nearer three thirds, I think. Your system of government need be wise and practical indeed to stave that off.

S. Let us hope it will be; for we say 'there ought not to be a single human being in the nation who can honestly stand up and say: I am willing to work, but I know not where to go to earn house-rent and daily bread.'

J. Of course there ought not, and I am glad to hear you say so; but what are you to do but cherish your sentiment as a pious opinion? Can't you see that if it were so, labour would be dear; the capitalist would have to compete for the workman, instead of the workman for the capitalist, as is now the case? The capitalist would be undone, and would cease to employ, unless by the aid of new machinery he could once more win the blessing of having a due amount of men willing and unable to work. And if the capitalist won't employ labour—i.e., workmen—how is it to be employed?

S. They must employ themselves, I suppose.

J. I suppose so. In that case, where are those non-producing classes that you are so tender of?

S. Well—gone, I suppose.

J. So do I suppose. And yet you have been speaking of them as though they and their necessary complement, the poor, were essential and eternal.

S. (after a pause). For my part, Jones, I think you are trying to confuse the simplicity of true democratic ideas with your pedantic political economy. Let us come back to the point. Now please attend. 'We are in favour of making justice easy of access to all. The path to the judge ought to be the most easy; but it is the most difficult. Justice ought to be the cheapest commodity in the nation; and it is the dearest.'

J. The path to the judge is pretty easy for some people; and it strikes me that when they find him, they pretty often find an animal which is a cross between a baboon and a tiger. But do you know that I suspect that by justice you mean law; and I more than doubt if that wouldn't be dear at any price. For doesn't all civil law mean the enforcement of private contract, with all its intricacy, by the overmastering violence of the executive, which doesn't trouble itself to consider whether the carrying out of the contract will be injurious to the private person or to the community, so long as it has been entered into legally?

S. I really don't understand you.

J. I fear not; and there are many in your case, who think that peace means the rule of law. So much the worse for all of us. I advise you to watch a civil process in a law court (if you haven't done so already), and then tell me what you think of it. If you then don't understand what I have been saying, it's no use trying to make you understand.

S. Well, listen to this! Now I think that you will agree with me: 'The Radical is in favour of a resolute reform of the Land Laws, with a view to getting the whole of the land into the hands of the community or the State. Our great towns, especially London, are getting dangerously congested simply because the countrymen who are pressing into them cannot get at the land; and they cannot get at the land because of laws and customs which were never made for tenants and labourers, but for landlords and aristocrats; and there will never be any hope for the labouring classes in the country districts until these bad old laws and customs are changed.'

J. I agree with what you say, and with what you might mean, but which I don't think you do mean, since you began by cursing those who set class against class.

S. Why! what do you mean?

J. Ain't the landlords and aristocrats a class?

S. Well—well—perhaps they are.

J. They are, when you have properly understood the meaning of the word aristocrat nowadays; to wit, a person privileged to live on the labour of others.

B. Of course he doesn't mean—

S. (interrupting). Yes, yes, Brown, you're quite right. Of course, I don't mean that the land shall be taken from the landlords without compensation; though, perhaps, not full compensation.

J. Mr. Brown, will you lend me a pound?

B. (putting his hand in his pocket). With pleasure, my dear fellow.

S. (laughing rather sulkily). Only he will require compensation.

J. Twenty shillings, eh?

B. Oh, silver will suit perfectly well.

J. Now I was thinking 15s. would do.

B. (grinning). I see; an apologue. No, Mr. Jones, I shall want the twenty shillings in full.

J. So will your landlords, friend Stride—if they can get it. Believe me, they will try for more if a Radical government should (the fancy is a wild one) try such a measure as "getting the whole of the land into the hands of the community or the State." And if they can't get more, I promise you they won't take less without fighting for their position.

S. I don't know; perhaps they will if the thing is done carefully, without frightening them. Of course they won't if you go hillooing Socialism at them.

J. Well, if you like, we will grant that they will agree to the land nationalisation which you propose to them. What are you going to do with the other capitalists?

S. The other capitalists! We shan't meddle with the capitalists at all.

J. Indeed! They will do what they like with their riches then?

S. Certainly; it would be mere slavery for them else.

J. And what are their riches?

S. Well—well—well—

J. I see you don't know, so I must tell you. So much privilege to make the producers of wealth pay for leave to live for no cause except the "interests" of the taxers. That is what you have got to take away from the landlords and aristocrats. If you leave them that, whatever measure of land nationalisation may be passed, whoever owns the land, they will monopolise the use of it. And how can you compensate people for taking away such a monopoly but by giving it back again to them?

B. (gasping). But—why—Mr. Jones, you are advocating the abolition of private property!

J. Mr. Brown, you are a clear-headed man. Shake hands!

[BROWN seems rather doubtful, but JONES seizes his hand and shakes it enthusiastically.]

S. Never mind, Brown, he doesn't mean half he says.

J. I wish I could say half I mean.

S. Now comes the really important and practical part of our platform. We 'are in favour of one man one vote . . . of equal suffrages for men and women . . . of a more democratic House of Commons . . . the candidate under certain conditions should be freed from the official conditions; and it might be good policy to offer a small annual payment to those M.P.'s who need and desire it—'

J. Hold on, your qualifications and exceptions and cautions are muddling me sadly; but it don't matter.

S. We 'are in favour of making an end of the House of Lords as a house of hereditary legislators.'

J. Yes, so that you may have the Lords in the Commons; more qualifications. Well, go on; are you nearly at an end?

S. Yes, yes! I'm just at the end. 'When Ireland has its Parliament for Irish affairs, and Scotland has its Parliament for Scotch affairs, and Wales has its Parliament for Welsh affairs, the present House of Commons might be turned into the English Parliament; the House of Lords might then be converted into a great Imperial Parliament for Imperial affairs, in which there should be representatives from every part of the Empire at home and across the seas. This is the great Radical ideal.'

J. Well, that's a new way of abolishing the House of Lords, certainly! I don't think they will grumble much at it. At any rate, you wind up with a good thumping piece of nonsense.—Well, I must be off; that lecture will be half over by now, and I promised to go.

B. (showing renewed energy after a tendency to sleep). Stop a bit, Mr. Jones; I think I ought to explain to you that the earlier part of our programme—

S. (interrupting). Yes, Brown, yes; our friend understands. You see, Jones—

B. (rather indignantly). I say, Stride, just let me have one word. Mr. Jones, all that about land nationalisation, and State works for the unemployed, and the old people at the workhouse, and all that—you musn't be too severe upon it; because, I say, it is put in—(no, Stride, let me go on!)—just to make people, or some people, help us in these suffrage matters, which is the thing we advanced Liberals or Radicals really care about; and I flatter myself we know something about it too.

¹ The portions of this dialogue between the single "quotes" are taken from a genuine document—"A Radical's Creed," by John Page Hopps, in the Pall Mall Gazette Dec. 10th, 1888.

J. Well, I must say I think you ought to, considering the number of years you have been hemming and hawing about it. But look here, gentlemen, I must go, I bet the lecturer is just in his peroration. But, I say, isn't "Advanced Radicals" rather lengthy in spelling?

B. But, Jones, how would you spell it?

J. Try—it will save you some letters—try W-H-I-G-S A-S-T-R-A-Y—it means the same thing if it don't spell it. Well, good-bye; I shall just be in time for question-time.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

GERMANY.

The stonemasons of Berlin have been on strike since the 9th of this month. On the 2nd of January they were asked to sign a sheet presented to them by their foreman, by which they agreed to resign from the union of their trade. This Stonemason's Union has existed for over seven years, is very well organised, and has done a lot of good to the members, especially as a relief fund for patients. The workers, of course, declined to sign their resignation, and in consequence of their refusal were at once dismissed. Our Berlin friends now request their English comrades to do for them all they possibly can, in order to enable them to win the battle. All moneys in support of the strikers are to be sent to the following address: Joseph Jeschky, stonemason, Melachton Street, 5, Hof I, Berlin, N.W.

The German police at Hamburg has suppressed the paper of the chalk and stoneworkers, Der Grundstein, which was a very ably edited trade organ.

BELGIUM.

The tribunal of Mons has begun its work of vengeance against the miners who some weeks ago struck in the Centre and Borinage districts. A first series of fourteen workers have been tried and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, ranging from one to seven months. Other series will follow, and then only the "big" trial for high treason against Defuisseaux, Laloi, Gérard, Maroille, etc., will take place. These last-named Socialists have done nothing whatever which looks "high treasonable," but the Government could not afford to spend all their dynamite for mere trifling trials with two or three months jail as ultimate result. Hence "high treason" must be got up and shall be.

Comrade Laurent Verrycken, the initiator of the open-air propaganda meetings in Belgium, is now being tried in half-a-dozen courts of justice for the flimsy offences of obstruction, rioting, unlawful assembly, and so on, and takes opportunity of making also indoor meetings before the magistrates. He is always sentenced, of course, but only in a fine of 4s., which is much cheaper than the hiring of a hall would be, and the magistrate's courts are always fully crowded with Socialists.

The Belgian Parti ouvrier has started a Socialist satirical paper at Brussels under the title of La Trique (The Cudgel).

AUSTRIA.

At Fünfhaus, ten Socialists have been arrested, among whom are comrades Sticht, Schuhmaier, and Wiesinger. At Ottaking, seventeen more "criminals" have met with the same fate, comrades Trojan, Haubner, Vitz, and Schmidt being among their number. At Vienna, comrades Raab and Hader have been expelled. The editor of Gleichheit, comrade Adler, will soon have to stand his trial, and for certain will be found guilty of all sorts of mischievous deeds. And so it is that the social revolutionary ideas day after day are winning more ground in that old feudal and rotten land of the Hapsburgs.

SWEDEN.

We told our readers, some weeks ago, that three Socialist papers had been prosecuted, and now we have two more to add to them, the Socialdemokrat at Stockholm, and Arbetet at Malmö. The editors of the three former have just now been sentenced to several months of imprisonment; Pehr Erikson, editor of Volkstimme (People's Voice), to twelve months for one article. At this very moment all the most known Socialists of Sweden are in prison. The government have resolved to kill the Socialist movement, and never before has the party entertained better hopes towards its rapid development. That is the curse of persecution.

RUSSIA.

A Russian paper gives some interesting but dreadful figures on transportation, from which we take the following résumé:—Number of persons transported to Siberia from 1827 to 1846, 159,755; from 1867 to 1876, 156,585; from 1870 to 1877, 114,370; from 1880 to 1886, 120,000; total, 545,710. Out of that number the following were "political" criminals: from 1827 to 1846, 51,000; from 1867 to 1876, 78,500; from 1870 to 1877, 62,442; from 1880 to 1886, 64,531. Alexander II. caused even more people to be transported to Siberia than the atrocious despot Nicholas, and then we find "respectable" historians telling us that Alexander II. was a most liberal-minded ruler, and that he, at least, did not deserve his fate.

V. D.

There are, practically, two absolutely opposite kinds of labour going on among men for ever. The first, labour supported by capital, producing nothing. The second, labour unsupported by capital, producing all things. A little while since, I was paying a visit in Ireland, and chanced to hear an account of the pleasures of a picnic party, who had gone to see a waterfall. There was, of course, ample lunch, feasting on the grass, and basketsful of fragments taken up afterwards. Then the company, feeling themselves dull, gave the fragments that remained to the attendant ragged boys, on condition that they should "pull each other's hair." Here you see, in the most accurate sense, employment of food, or capital, in the support of entirely unproductive labour.—Ruskin, 'Fors' No. 2.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 2, 1889.

27	Sun.	1808. Trial of Gunpowder Plot conspirators. 1775. Schelling born. 1808. D. Strauss born. 1814. Fichte died. 1817. J. E. A. Godin born. 1832. Mazzini founds "Young Italy." 1834. Marseilles. 1842. Outbreak at Oporto. 1871. Capitalism of Paris.
28	Mon.	1796. William Stone tried for high treason. 1824. Bernard Becker born. 1876. Francis Deak died. 1885. Industrial Revolution Conference began.
29	Tues.	1737. Thomas Paine born. 1794. Hamilton Rowan tried for sedition. 1794. Meeting of the London Corresponding Society at the Globe Tavern. 1799. Northern Star , organ of the United Irishmen, suppressed. 1833. First "reformed" Parliament met. 1860. E. M. Arndt died. 1880. A secret press of the People's Will seized at St. Petersburg after armed resistance; compositor Lubkin shot himself.
30	Wed.	1649. Execution of Charles Stuart the Elder. 1794. Hamilton Rowan tried for seditious libel. 1871. House of Representatives (by 172 to 21) welcome Fenians to the United States. 1877. Trial for a demonstration on the Kazan Place, St. Petersburg: 21 tried, 5 sentenced to the mines, 10 to Siberia.
31	Thur.	1804. Lighting of the Beacons. 1811. Peter Finnerty imprisoned for 18 months and bound over for 5 years for "libel" on Castle-reagh. 1849. Auguste Reinsdorf born.
1	Fri.	1801. Maximilian Paul Emile Littré born. 1840. Commutation of sentence on Frost, Williams, and Jones. 1851. Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley died. 1863. Lassalle publishes his "Open Letter" to the Leipzig Central Committee on the convoking of a General German Workers' Congress. 1875. Lock-out of 50,000 South Wales miners.
2	Sat.	1808. Ledru Rollin born. 1866. Fenian (Special Commission) trials closed: convicted, 36; acquitted, 3. 1884. Wendell Phillips died.

Bernard Becker.—German political writer, born at Breslau 1824. After the revolutionary events of 1848, in which he took an active part, he was compelled to leave his native country and went to London, where he lived up to the year 1862. He then returned to Germany and settled at Francfort-on-the-Main. After the foundation of the "German General Workingmen's Association," Ferdinand Lassalle designated Becker as his representative for the section of that body established at Francfort. November 2, 1864, he was elected by all the branches of the country president of the Association, in lieu of Lassalle, who died on the 31st of August previous. But soon after the great agitator's death, disharmony and discord grew fast among the members of the party, Countess Hatzfeldt and Becker were unable to come to an agreement, the latter refusing to allow the Association to serve the interests of the Prussian Government and those of the reactionary-feudal party. In the month of July 1865 Becker was expelled from Prussia, and at the end of the same year he resigned the chairmanship of the Association. In the course of one year he succeeded, in spite of the intrigues of Countess Hatzfeldt, in trebling the number of the members of that once famous organisation. He then went to Vienna, where he started, with some other revolutionaries, in the month of February 1868, the first Austrian Socialist paper, Wiener Arbeiter-Zeitung. In 1872 the Brunswick section of the International Workingmen's Association delegated him to the General Congress of the Hague, where he always voted with the authoritarian fraction, represented by Karl Marx. Since that time he alternately lived in England and in Switzerland. As his writings contain valuable information for various periods of the history of the social revolutionary movement in Europe, we may as well quote here his principal productions: 'die deutsche Bewegung von 1848' (Berlin, 1864, 8vo); 'Missbrauch der Nationalitätenlehre' (Vienna, 1867, 8vo); 'die Reaction in Deutschland gegen die Revolution von 1848' (Vienna, 1868, 8vo); 'Enthüllungen über das tragische Lebensende Lassalle's' (Schleiz, 1868, 8vo); 'National-öconomische Raketen' (Sonderhausen, 1871, 8vo); 'Der alte und neue Jesuitismus' (Brunswick, 1872, 8vo); 'die Arbeiterfrage und das neue Evangelium' (Schaffhausen, 1872, 8vo); 'Karl Fourier' (Brunswick, 1874, 8vo); 'Geschichte der Pariser Commune 1789-1794' (Brunswick, 1874, 8vo); 'Briefe eines deutschen Bettelpatrioten' (Brunswick, 1875, 8vo); 'Geschichte der Arbeiter-Agitation Lassalle's' (Brunswick, 1875, 8vo); 'Geschichte der Pariser Commune 1871' (Leipzig, 1879, 8vo). This last work, full of dirty insults and of deliberate calumnies, has caused many revolutionaries in nearly all European countries to raise vehement protests against the writer, who since that time seems to have given up all Socialist writing and now devotes his literary faculties to the interests of commercialism and bourgeoisdom.—V. D.

The following note relates to Jan. 24, 1867:—

The Unemployed sack bakers' shops.—Hyde Park riots were not the only revolutionary symptoms of these years of Reform agitation. Bread was dear and wages were low, and riotous demonstrations were common by impudent people who declined to starve while bread could be had, by the most irregular means. If distress was bad anywhere it was bad in Deptford and Greenwich. The suspension of shipbuilding and other works had caused a great scarcity of employment in these populous suburbs, and a large number of workmen were reduced to severe distress, aggravated by the inclemency of the weather. Doubtless under these circumstances the good bourgeois were not surprised to see symptoms of a riot appearing in Greenwich and Deptford, unemployed men parading the streets and attacking some of the shops. During the afternoon some relief had been distributed at the relieving offices, but it was not sufficient for the hundreds who were clamouring for bread. They were turned away empty, and this catastrophe followed. Suddenly a simultaneous movement was made towards the shops in High Street, Deptford, and in a few minutes the crashing of glass was heard and a baker's shop was completely cleared out. They then came to the shop of another baker, who to save damage distributed his bread freely among the people. In the Broadway another attack was made upon the shop of a baker, and bread was carried off under the noses of the police, who were, we are assured, in additional force that evening, but were wholly insufficient to prevent the riot; and it was not until the arrival of large reinforcements of mounted men that "order" was restored. Next morning large numbers of men again assembled, panic-stricken tradesmen closing their shops in every direction; but there was no renewal of the rioting. Its effect as usual was seen in the effusive distribution of middle-class charity, although of course it was all put down by the ordinary press to that dreadful and malign creature the London "rough."—D. N.

Non-union carpenters are referred to in Denver as "bushwhackers," in Pittsburg as "jay-hawkers," in Texas as "Punch and Judy showmen," and in California as "travelling chips."

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors.

Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LURGAN (Ireland).—Can any of our readers give name and address of a probable correspondent?

CONTENTS.

		PAGE.
Notes on News	WILLIAM MORRIS	25
Whigs Astray: A Dialogue (concluded)	WILLIAM MORRIS	26
International Notes	VICTOR DAVE	27
Revolutionary Calendar—Bernard Becker; The Unemployed Sack Baker Shops	V. DAVE and D. NICOLL	27
Notes	G. McLEAN	28
Henry George		28
Skinning the Louse	THOMAS SHORE, JUN.	29
The Labour Struggle		30
The Govan Election	J. BRUCE GLASIER	30
The Despotism of Order		31
Socialism v. Individualism in Leicester	THOMAS BARCLAY	31
The Battle-cry of Freedom		31
Executive Business, Reports, etc., etc.		31
Lecture Announcements, Notices of Books, etc., etc.		32

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday January 23.

ENGLAND	Chicago—Knights of Labor	ITALY
Caslon's Circular	Vorbote	Rome—L'Emancipazione
Justice	Baecker Zeitung	Cremona—L'Eco del Popolo
Labour Elector	Detroit—Der Arnie Teufel	SPAIN
Labour Tribune	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Barcelona—El Productor
London—Freie Presse	Port Angeles—Commonwealth	Seville—La Solidaridad
Postal Service Gazette	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung	Madrid—El Socialista
Railway Review	S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal	PORTUGAL
Ruskin's Reading Guild Journal	Valley Falls (Kan.)—Fair Play	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
Sozial Demokrat	Denver—Arbitrator	Porto—A Revolucao Social
Telegraph Service Gazette	FRANCE	AUSTRIA
Worker's Friend	Paris—Cri du Peuple (daily)	Wien—Gleichheit
INDIA	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	HUNGARY
Bankipore—Behar Herald	Le Proletariat	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik
Madras—Peopl's Friend	La Revolte	DENMARK
UNITED STATES	Le Coup de Feu	Social-Demokraton
New York—Der Sozialist	HOLLAND	SWEDEN
Freiheit	Hague—Recht voor Allen	Malmö—Arbetet
Truthseeker	BELGIUM	Stockholm, Social-Demokraten
Volkzeitung	Ghent—Vooruit	WEST INDIES
Jewish Volkszeitung	SWITZERLAND	Cuba—El Productor
Alarm	Bulletin Continental	MEXICO
Workmen's Advocate	GERMANY	Sinaloa—Credit-Foncier
Boston—Woman's Journal	Berlin—Volks Tribune
Liberty

NOTES.

FOR staggering superlatives, the political promises dangled before the eyes, and dinned into the ears of the working-men in Govan, during the past contest, were enough to make the spread-eagleism of the biggest mouthed spoil-seeking swash-buckler in the United States take a back seat in the top gallery. The big braggadocios on either platform went through their antic pranks on this occasion for the entertainment of the working-men alone. The non-workers and overpaid under-strappers don't require to be convinced of what the good Parliamentary men do for them in this "great and glorious" empire, but the working-men apparently need a lot of convincing.

Both platforms rung with the praises of the late member for Govan—Sir William Pearce—and what he did for the working-men of the Clyde. They took as granted that if William Pearce had not lived, the world's commerce would not have required the ships his firm built, and the workmen would not have got the work they did. The working-men of the Clyde enabled William Pearce, who came among them comparatively poor, to die, leaving a fortune of a few hundred thousand pounds over a million. He died a millionaire, they are working-men still, and some of them starving.

From the one platform the working-men were assured that if they voted for Pender, the Unionist candidate, the Tory Government would send lots of war-ship work to the Clyde; but if they voted for Wilson, the Gladstonian, the Clyde and all its works would be wiped out from the face of the earth. The other platform assured the working-men that they owe all their "liberties and advantages" to the Liberals, and if they voted for Wilson, the Gladstonian, they would be supporting "the righteousness which exalteth a nation," and all they have to do after that is to shut their eyes and see what god will send them.

It is hard to tell which was the biggest bamboozler. Both candidates roll in wealth made up of the balances left after "doing their best for the working men in their employ." The pretensions of both were equally insulting to the intelligence and manhood of the working men they addressed. The antic pranks of both in their frantic fight have something akin to those which characterise a street brawl, got up to entertain the dupes who become the victims of the nimble fingers of pals in crime to the pair of performers who are so mad at each other. The political world is, at last, becoming too thin to deceive working men.

It is reported in the Unionist paper: "Sir John Pender said they would not expect a long speech from him, because he had a good deal of hard work in prospect, and they knew what that meant. One reason for his coming to the Govan Division at this time was his desire to keep them all hard working." Has it come to this, that an acceptable bribe to working men is the assurance of being kept hard working? Socialists somehow have been under a delusion in thinking the working class did too much work and received too little wages. The work which Sir John Pender promises to bring to the Clyde is enough to undermine the loyalty of other shipbuilding places in this "great and glorious" empire, for, according to his statements, if he be returned the Clyde will get all the trade and the integrity of this "great and glorious" empire will be secured, even although the Clyde's gain should be the Thames' loss.

The pranks and pretensions of the religious ranter are no less ridiculous than those of the political poltroons. At the Free Church Presbytery meeting in Edinburgh which settled the call to the Rev. John McNeill, London's choice told his brethren that "at length he had come to sufficient light from heaven to make the decision." The congregation of Regent Square will now be the happy possessors of a minister who possesses "sufficient light from heaven."

The "ladies and gentlemen" of Kelvinside—according to a "J. B. Fleming" who writes to the Glasgow Herald in a hey presto manner about the affair—have demonstrated the fallacy of an allegation often made by Socialists. It appears from this great economist's crowing that 278 of the Kelvinside gentry have, by a prodigious effort, managed to collect £156, 10s. for "Old John," a car and bus driver, who has been on their route for the past thirty-five years. With that sum they purchased an annuity of £6 4s. 8d. per quarter from the Prudential Assurance Company, and in that transaction "J. B. F." finds sufficient argument in support of the following silencer to Socialists: "The result shows how false is the allegation frequently made by Socialist agitators that the better classes have no care for their humbler neighbours. This man was honest and civil and obliging in the station God placed him, and he has not been left to want in his old age."

The cock-sureness of "J. B. F." in his "result" is really refreshing. He appears to think that the growing discontent of the workers with the present arrangement will be removed by this isolated act of charity, which, after all, the "better classes" do not provide. If he would reflect on the source of the Prudential Company's income, and how they are enabled to provide this annuity, he would see, if he be not economically blind, that it is not the "better classes" who have really come to "Old John's" aid in his old age. Justice, and not charity, is the great need.

The "better classes" of Kelvinside are mostly persons who have risen from as humble a position as "Old John's," through the tricks of trade. Obviously the traits of character which they admire in "Old John" did not form any part of their assets "in the station God placed them." The care of the "better classes" for their humbler neighbours, notwithstanding its rarity and thinness, has always lurking within it something of the insurance policy or the investment intended to bring profit. G. McL.

HENRY GEORGE.—Henry George's Standard makes a protest against the attitude of the Chicago authorities toward public meetings and processions. It is too late in the day, Mr. George, for you to pose as a champion of freedom of speech. You once had a chance to vindicate that cause such as comes to a man but once in a lifetime, and in the trial hour you not only failed the cause, but betrayed it. Let one of the meetings against the suppression of which you now protest be held; let someone present throw a bomb and kill an officer; let the speakers be arrested on a charge of murder; let a jury packed with the hirelings of capital convict them; let a judge sentence them to be hanged; let the supreme court formally sanction the whole; let a large portion of the people, hounded on by a bloodthirsty and prostituted press, clamour for these men's death; and let this culminate in the middle of a political campaign in which you are running for office: under these circumstances should we not see you do again what you have done once already,—declare that a supreme court can do no wrong, that in face of its opinion you recant yours, that the convicted men deserve to be hanged, and that you will not lift voice or pen to save them? We have known you, Henry George, in the past, and we know you for the future. The lamp holds out to burn, but for no such vile sinner as yourself. In vain your efforts to return to the fold. As Ingersoll says, "Twon't do."—Liberty.

SKINNING THE LOUSE.

"See Sir James Grubb absorbed in deep laid schemes,
Gold haunts his thoughts all day, all night his dreams.
Possessed of half a million, still he's poor,
And saves a penny to increase his store:
Give him the hide and tallow for his pains
He'll whip a louse a mile, and boast his gains.
In thrifty maxims he displays his wit,
'Get what you can, and hold fast what you get.'
He'll tell you with an oily canting tongue,
'Man wants but little here and that not long':
Though from his eager groping it appears
As if he thought to live a thousand years."

In a foot-note to the above passage it is related of Sir James Lowther that one day, after paying twopence for his dish of coffee, for which he changed a piece of silver, he was helped into his chariot (being very lame and infirm) and was driven home. A short time after he returned to the coffee-house, on purpose to acquaint the woman who had served him that she had given him a bad halfpenny, and demanded another in exchange for it. Sir James had £40,000 per annum, and was at a loss whom to appoint his heir.

If it were not for some such louse-skinning, it would never be possible to pile up such stupendous fortunes as from time to time the papers make note of. It is reported that in 1888, ten persons died leaving behind them for the lawyers to lie about, £10,544,000; seventeen others bequeathed £8,500,000; nineteen others left £7,000,000; and 900 additional persons left £25,000,000. Close on £52,000,000 in the hands of a little over 900 persons. This sum of money was left in sums of £3,544,978 to a minimum of £150,000.

Some, perhaps, may urge that louse-skinning would do but little towards piling up such gigantic sums, but such objectors miss a very essential point—that all large masses are made up of infinitely small atoms. All, or most of, these immense fortunes are made up by the power which the exploiter has of repeating a very small operation an infinite number of times. Go on to any exchange and note the haggling which takes place over a fraction of one per cent., the secret of the chaffering lies in the fact that the particular deal may be for some hundreds of thousands of one particular article, in great demand.

Very few great fortunes are made by deals in articles of little demand, such as Castles or Koh-i-noors. Manchester cotton goods, of which the output is reckoned by hundreds of millions, has probably been the source of some of the largest fortunes in this country, and has allowed more of the louse-skinning. By the almost imperceptible addition of china clay and other adulterants, the quality of the fabric has been reduced, which gives two chances of profit; selling rubbish at price of cotton and quickly returning demand; but with slow improvements in manufacture comes increased output at reduced cost, and increased power of playing man off against man, and increased power of sweating the operatives paltry pittance. A manufacturer with ten men at work for him could make but a small living for himself, even if he fined the ten men two shillings each; but having ten thousand men in his employ, could live luxuriously on a fine of one penny per man.

Two shillings per man on ten men would only be £1—not enough for a bottle of wine, some would say. One penny per man on ten thousand men is just on £42; good louse-skinning that. John Rylands, one of the merchant princes who died a few weeks ago, had some twelve thousand men in his employ. Among other sources of revenue he kept a laundry, and it is related that on one occasion, overhearing a conversation which led him to think he had been robbed of the cost of washing a shirt, he "raised snakes" for the hands of the washerwoman's department.

Besides the sweating of wages which is so profitable over large numbers, there are a hundred other ways in which the control of large numbers of slaves is made to produce an infinity of profits so small in themselves as to escape challenge, but which in gross make large fortunes. By supplying the necessities of daily life, by providing some sort of lodgment at extortionate rents, by lending money in advance of long-deferred payment of wages, and last, but not least, by borrowing of the workers. "Borrowing?" say some; aye, borrowing. Hundreds of thousands of pounds have been borrowed by unscrupulous employers in the pettiest of sums on promise of interest or annuity, sometimes repaid, but very often not. Ten thousand workers invited to take shares in their works subscribe a few pence, or perhaps a shilling a week. Ten thousand sixpences, £250 per week, or £13,000 per annum. Of course, no slave paying in only sixpence per week is allowed to challenge the financial solidity of the "Firm," and wouldn't know how to go over the accounts if he did. At the end of ten years comes a smash, and the £130,000—invested in the wife's name—is just enough to retire to Italy on, or go into the House of Commons with. Hurrah for louse-skinning!

Arrived in the "House," the opportunities of skinning are vastly increased. Invited to become managing director of some big company, he can carry on his same old games, by the power of securing Government contracts for the vast stores required by the nation; by securing the appointment of some relative to manage a clothing factory, say, the sweater inside helps the sweater outside; by the power of war-making all over the globe the demand for stores is increased; for a royalty of a few pence a patriotic inventor will sell a new shot, or any other war material, to his own country—or any other.

Our soldiers in Egypt to-day, sent there to support the pretensions of the vilest gang of skimmers who ever cursed two countries, are fighting with shoddy weapons, made by the same sweaters who supply the enemy against whom they are arrayed. No matter, the stuff is made and sold, and the skinner skins until he dies and leaves his three or four millions sterling; and the millions still go on growing simply by force of attraction. This power of attraction has been proved repeatedly of late years in a variety of ways in the increasing number of large fortunes left by manufacturers, and in the tendency to amalgamation of firms, companies, and special industries.

A great outcry is being made as to the growing evil of syndicates, rings, corners, etc. This is all nonsense. We should welcome these naked expressions of monopoly as the most positive evidence of the speedy breaking up of present-day commercialism; as a proof that the much-vaunted claim of the so-called captain of industry is all rot; as a proof that the capitalist pure and simple is not an essential in production, for he can be replaced by the small shareholder, managing directors, foremen, and other reasonably-paid servants taking the place of the now played-out speculator-in-chief.

It is related in Pliny's 'Natural History' that at one time one-half the province of Africa was owned by only six landlords, whereupon the emperor—Nero—slew the whole six. See the amount of knife-grinding which this syndicate saved, as compared with France a hundred years ago. This emperor evidently understood the great advantages of having to deal with a syndicate, for he expressed a wish that all his enemies could have but one neck, so that he could have one big strangling match. ●

The syndicate-mongers of to-day are performing a most useful function: they are reducing to a coherent, easily-understood system the absolute power of a few over the many. The "advantages of competition to the general public" has been played down so fine that the "doctrine of diminishing profits" now proves to the competing exploiters that they must now do their skinning without competition.

While the public had more than one sole garment to be robbed of, the robbers robbed independently, and the sufferer failed to understand all the details of the performance. Now that there is nothing but the one skin to remove, the robbers agree to do the scalping in Indian fashion—one to scalp and the others sit in a ring and smoke. Now that there is nothing but skin to remove the public will kick, and there are fewer to serve the kicks out to, so each will have a bigger share.

And they will get it too. It is generally believed that "making a cross," as done by uneducated persons when unable to sign their name in full, dates from the time when even the nobility were in the same position. The cross represents a sword, in the pommel of the sword was inserted a seal. Charlemagne, when issuing the document by which the Romish liturgy was ordained throughout France, "made his mark" to it, and Mezeria states that under the mark was commonly inserted, "I have signed it with the pommel of my sword, I promise to maintain it with the point."

Education is spreading, very few now use the mark the masses can even read, and as a result they are learning how much the sword has been concerned in their exploitation. Of all the shams of this sham-ridden country, the talk about our commercial supremacy is the rottenest, in that it claims that it is "powerful." The fashion in which some men of light and leading talk about the blood-stained fashion in which the Old World empires were built up, while our mighty empire has been simply the result of the force of ideas, aided by our very superior manufactures.

Among the great landowners the farther you travel back the nearer you get to the time of the sword. The instrument of conveyance was not a parchment but a sword, the conveyancer was the owner of the strongest arm. Gained by the sword, sealed by the sword, maintained by the sword.

Then come the manufacturers, the emigrant, and the colonial trading company. The first helping to drive the second out of the country; the emigrant by force or by fraud, or by both, effecting a landing, securing a footing, and at last killing off the native of the desired land; opening new markets for the manufacturer, and paving the way for the big trading company, which at last in the new land unites in one body the devilments of both the landowner and capitalist manufacturer, as found and left at home.

Every now and again, where the killing out of the aborigines has not been effectual, there comes a big upheaval, as the Sepoy mutiny, or as the Egyptian, and at this particular minute in Central Africa. Once more comes the demand to uphold, by the power of the sword, the supremacy of the peaceful missionary and his equally peaceful blood-soaked exporter-manufacturer; and more important still is it borne in upon the whole of the units concerned, that what has been gained by the sword will have to be maintained by the sword, even the right (!) to "Skin a Louse" foreign or native.

THOS. SHORE, jun.

In ancient Egypt, crimes could not be compounded as in so many other ancient lands by the payment of a fine. The man who witnessed a crime without attempting to prevent it, was punished as a partaker. The civil laws were administered in such a manner that the poor could have recourse to them as well as the rich.—Winwood Reade's 'Martyrdom of Man.'

The true root and basis of all Art lies in the handicrafts. If there is no room or chance of recognition for really artistic power and feeling in design and craftsmanship—if Art is not recognised in the humblest object and material, and felt to be as valuable in its own way as the more highly rewarded pictorial skill—the arts cannot be in a sound condition; and if artists cease to be found among the crafts, there is great danger that they will vanish from the arts also, and become manufacturers and salesmen instead.—Walter Crane.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

STRIKE AT LIVERPOOL.—The short-gangs struck on Jan. 17th, and at a meeting same night they decided to stand firm.

ENGINEERS' WAGES.—The men engaged in the repairing shops at South Shields, who were out for an advance of 2s. per week, have had their demands granted.

BIRMINGHAM NAILMAKERS.—A meeting representing 15,000 nailmakers was held in Birmingham on January 17th, and an application made for an advance of 10 per cent.

LIVERPOOL SEAMEN.—The demand of the seamen of Liverpool for higher wages is likely to be conceded. On Friday 18th several crews were shipped at advanced rates, and no disturbance took place.

MAYBOLE SHOEMAKERS.—The men and women employed in St. Cuthbert's Shoe Factory, after being on strike since the new year, resumed work on the 18th, the dispute having been amicably settled on the day previous.

SHIPBUILDERS' STRIKE.—The shipyard hands of the Tees and the Hartlepoons left their employment on Jan. 16th, having declined an offer of 5 per cent. advance on piece-work and 1s. per week on time wages, with a similar advance in July. They demand 7½ per cent. and 2s. per week. Eight or nine thousand men are affected.

BLOCK CHAIN TRADE.—Notice has been given on behalf of the operatives engaged in the block-chain trade for an advance. They ask for a return to the 4s. list, which represents an increase of 10 per cent. on rates now paid. Two attempts have been made to convene a conference of employers and representatives of the operatives to consider claims, but they failed, and the operatives felt that they had no alternative but to demand an increase in the usual way. The men have been empowered by the Midland Trades' Federation to give notice, and will no doubt receive the support of that organisation.

SEAMEN'S STRIKE.—The seamen and firemen of Glasgow came out on strike on Friday 18th. At a meeting of the National Amalgamated Seamen and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland the following resolution was unanimously carried: "That we, the seamen and firemen of Glasgow, considering our wages to be far lower than they ought to be, resolve to demand the following rate of wages—for firemen, £4 5s.; seamen, £4, in all classes of steamers, except weekly boats, for which the wages demanded will be 30s. per week; for sailing vessels to the Baltic and Quebec, £3 15s., and southwards £3."

LURGAN HEMSTITCHERS.—The strike among the hemstitchers has extended in a very serious manner. In addition to the employes of Ross and Co., who have been off work a fortnight, the hemstitchers of Thomas Falloon and Co. and of James B. Hanna and Co. have now gone on strike. There is reason to believe that the operatives now out are being sustained by the hemstitchers of other concerns not affected by the present movement. Some of the employers allege that if the strike continues much longer it will inflict permanent injury on the trade of the town, but outside the principals in the trade there is undoubtedly much sympathy with the workers in their effort to resist unjust and unfair treatment.

COTTON TRADE.—At Macclesfield the strike of weavers at the Globe Mills, after lasting six months, has ended in a defeat for the strikers, who have accepted 5 per cent. under standard rates, instead of the Blackburn list they asked for.—At Soughbridge (Kelbrook), weavers have gone back on being promised all they asked; same at Navigation Mill, Blackburn.—At Holme Mill, Padiham, over 400 looms are idle through extra work and other grievances.—At Millsteads Mill, Todmorden, the Blackburn list has been conceded, and trouble is over for the time being.—The grinders at Beard Mill (New Mills) have won. Some of the rats that came to take their places are out in the cold and seem likely to be kept there.—The Belton strike has been brought to an end by the acceptance of the operatives' terms.

ABERDEEN.—Under the heading of "Dundee Mill-workers," a report appeared in this page last week of a strike of the employes at Broadford Works. A correspondent writes that these works are situated in Aberdeen, not Dundee. The workers remained out for three or four days, but as there was no combination among them, and as they had no funds to enable them to remain out on strike, it was deemed best to go in again on the old terms in the meantime, but to form a union of the 3,000 girls and men, and if the desired increase of 5 per cent. were not given in a few weeks, to come out again organised, and with funds to support them while out. The Rev. Henry Williamson (Dundee), Rev. Comrade A. Webster (Aberdeen), and the local Trades' Council have fought well for the workers; but it is very suggestive of the character of trades' unionism as a whole, that an attempt was made by a minority of the Trades' Council to pass a vote of censure on some of their office-bearers for presuming to take up the cause of unskilled and unorganised labour without the permission of the Executive, to obtain which it would have been necessary to call a meeting, which would have paralysed all action for several days.

A MINER'S INCOME AND EXPENDITURE.—Everything nowadays is becoming sensational, except coal-mining, says a Lancashire correspondent of the Labour Tribune, and even in that avocation the continual recurrence of accidents, fatal and otherwise, is looked upon as something extraordinary; and I am hoping that, notwithstanding the resistance of some of the workmen, the period is close at hand when by full compliance with the law, and the introduction of safety appliances in the shape of detaching hooks preventing overwinding, safety catches and extra precautions in preparations and examinations of shafts, levels, brows, and working places by competent officials, and last, but not least, by the adoption of an explosive compound that will not ignite gas when exploded in the presence of a feeder or sudden outburst, accidents will be few and far between. While the coal industry in this district is as good as it is at present, everybody engaged in this great industry should learn to "make hay while the sun shines." Six days per week at the pit ought to be sufficient for the man who works; but of course four has been the most that could be put in during the Christmas and new-year's holidays; consequently the strain upon the housewife's purse has been greater than it could possibly bear. I happened to drop into a house on Saturday afternoon last, where there are seven. The father and one boy aged thirteen were the workers. The pay had just arrived, and myself being recognised as the best scholar present, I was requested to dot down the items of income and expenditure. The latter I give; the former—as I leave your readers to guess—was insufficient to meet demands. Here are the items of expenditure: Rent (a fortnight), 9s.; grocer, 7s.; baker, 4s. 6d.; vegetables (or greengrocer), 2s. 9d.; clothing, 2s.; coal, 1s. 6d.; milk, 1s. draper, 1s.; clock repairs and literature, 3s.; insurance, 1s.; understandings (boots and clogs), 2s.; ornaments, 1s.; sundries—for crocks, blacking, black-lead, etc., not mentioning paste for plate; amounts to £1 17s. 9d.; while father and son had only mustered in real wages about £1 2s. 0d., deficiency 15s. 9d. This has to be fetched up by extra effort, increased vigilance, more work, or longer hours in the mine. All this with a 10 per cent. advance recently conceded, an increasing trade and unprecedented prospects. For, taking prices of coal all round, as given in the Manchester papers, it averages 6s. 6d. per ton. So putting: getting and drawing per ton, average 1s. 10d.; haulage, hooking, and brow work, 7½d.; ripping roads, packing ditto, etc., day wage, 1s.; management and office work, 7½d.; royalty and wayleaves, 9d.; depreciation, or reserve fund, 3d.; total, 5s. This deducted from 6s. 6d. leaves just 1s. 6d. profit. Now, just take a colliery yielding 2,000 tons per day, the profit would be £40 per day, or for six days per week, as colliers in this district are working, £300 per week. Supposing the capital invested to be £60,000 and the working weeks forty, a profit of £12,000 is shown, or an interest of 20 per cent. While this is so, is it right or reasonable that the collier should toil to the extent that when he ceases it must be from sheer exhaustion, rendering his little bit of leisure time as useless as it is possible to make it for want of rest?

THE GOVAN ELECTION.

THERE is a deal of significance in the result of the Govan election to Socialists. At the last election Sir William Pearce, Tory, polled 362 votes over Mr. Dickson, Gladstonian Liberal; while at the present election Mr. Wilson, Gladstonian Liberal, has polled 1,071 votes over the Unionist candidate, Sir John Pender. The election was fought on the very same questions as before. Whence, therefore, the difference? I am absolutely certain that not five men in a hundred have changed their views on the Irish or on any other question during the interval. The reason is really this: Whereas before the Unionist candidate, Sir William Pearce, was the most influential employer of labour in Govan, the present Unionist candidate has no trade connection with the district whatever; whereas before the Liberal candidate had no trade interest in the district, the present Liberal candidate has. It is true Mr. Wilson's works are situated in the adjoining constituency; but his interest as a local employer of labour is not much the less on that account. He is in a business way connected with and is probably on friendly terms with all the Govan shipbuilders. They did not care—or dare—to boycott him and use their influence with their men against him, as they cared and dared to do against Mr. Dickson, the previous Liberal candidate, who was a stranger. On the other hand, Sir John Pender, the Unionist candidate, had no direct means of coercing the electors, like Sir William Pearce. Sir William Pearce employed when busy nearly 5,000 men. It was notorious that—explain it as we may—Sir William succeeded in making hundreds of his employes who were Gladstonians either vote for him or abstain from voting altogether, for fear of losing their bread—not to mention butter. At least 1,000 men have voted Gladstonian in this contest who did not vote at all at the last contest; while some 260 have deserted the Unionist side. Thus we see how the electors, being, comparatively speaking, free on this occasion to vote as they chose, have voted for Mr. Gladstone and Home Rule, instead of Toryism and coercion—it being apparent to every observer that in Govan as in most parts of Scotland the majority of working men are, and were at the last general election, on Mr. Gladstone's side.

We have therefore in the result at Govan a most significant example of the power of the capitalists to enslave the workers not only economically but politically.

It is the universal opinion that had young Sir G. W. Pearce, the son of the late member and the present head of the great Fairfield Shipbuilding Company, stood as candidate—politically ignorant and incapable as he is—the result would have been vastly different: which means, as plain as plain can be, that his power as an employer of labour would have constrained the workers of Govan to violate their political convictions. The incident therefore shows that in this country, as in America and elsewhere, no amount of mere statute or constitutional freedom can secure freedom of political action to the workers. So long as the workers are economic slaves they will be political slaves.

The new member, Mr. John Wilson, has no qualities to recommend him as a candidate except that he is rich and is willing to support Mr. Gladstone on the Home Rule question. He has no sympathy with the claims of the workers, and is opposed to almost every proposal of an "advanced" kind. His record as an employer of labour is bad. He was the first employer in the brass trade to raise the hours of labour from 51 to 54 per week, and to reduce the wages of the men 1s. per week. Even during the contest an action at the instance of H. M. Inspector of Factories for violation of the Factory Act was brought against him, and is still sub judice. The jubilation of working-men at his return is therefore a species of insanity. One Irishman was heard to exclaim, "It is the greatest victory of modern times next to the battle of Waterloo—except perhaps the battle of Bannockburn!" There is however an aspect of the matter in which even we as Socialists may see cause for hope, if not rejoicing. The more capitalists of the type of John Wilson sent into Parliament the sooner the working class will see the hypocrisy of their pretensions as champions and friends of the rights of labour, and the sooner will active hostility between the capitalist class and the working class be begun. In the meantime at least it is better to send capitalists than Socialists to Parliament—capitalists will speed the revolution, Socialists will only retard it.

J. BRUCE GLASIER.

Is it not so To-day?

In the modern world we find luxury the harbinger of progress; in the ancient world the omen of decline. But how can this be? Nature does not contradict herself; the laws which govern the movements of society are as regular and unchangeable as those which govern the movements of the stars. Wealth is in reality as indispensable to mankind for purposes of growth as water to the soil. It is not the fault of the water if its natural circulation is interfered with; if certain portions of the land are drowned while others are left completely dry. Wealth in all countries of the ancient world was artificially confined to a certain class. More than half the area of the Greek and Roman world was shut off by slavery from the fertilising stream. This single fact is sufficient to explain how that old civilisation, in some respects so splendid, was yet so one-sided and incomplete.—Winwood Reade's 'Martyrdom of Man.'

THE BATTLE-CRY OF FREEDOM.

(ADAPTED FROM A CELEBRATED SONG OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR.)

We will rally round the Red, boys,
We'll rally once again,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom;
We will rally from the hill-side,
We will rally from the plain,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom.

Chorus—Then Labour forever! Hurra, boys, hurra!
Down with the tyrants, up with the flag,
While we rally round the Red, boys,
Rally once again,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom.

We are answering the call
Of our brothers gone before,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom;
And we'll fill the vacant ranks
With a million freemen more,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom.

We are gathering around us
The noble, true, and brave,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom;
And although he may be poor,
None shall ever be a slave,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom.

Many fall amid the fray, boys,
But we'll face them to the last,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom;
And our comrades brave shall hear us
As we go rushing past,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom.

For the liberty of Labour,
We are leaping to the fight,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom;
And we'll make the Wrong go under,
Win the victory of Right,
Shouting the battle-cry of Freedom.

SOCIALISM V. INDIVIDUALISM IN LEICESTER.

COMRADES.—Some time ago a local Fabian here induced the Leicester Secular Society to have the Fabian lectures on the Basis and Organisation of Socialism given in the Secular Hall. The first series is now over; has been brilliant, Clarke's lecture calling forth the admiration even of the Individualists. The Secular Hall has been quite full, and reports have been sent to the advanced local press. But the Individualists determined upon a course of lectures to counteract, or throw off the scent. The first was a real red-herring trailed by Mrs. Fawcett, widow of the late Postmaster-General. She consented to come down here for the modest sum of £15 (afterwards commuted to £12 we hear). There she stood, glittering in diamonds, flattering the "dogged honesty" of her sex, that safe-guards it against Anarchism and wicked schemes of expropriation. Her subject was, "Why are Women's Wages Lower than Men's?" Her matter was a string of commonplaces, except when she declared that appropriating the land would be robbery, and the removal of capitalists social suicide. People were expecting an eloquent discourse: they were disappointed. Our next antagonist was J. H. Levy on "The Economics of Individualism." You must know that the "Liberty and Property Defence League" have published the statement that they organised this opposition course of lectures in Leicester. Levy took up time in denying this, and repudiated the L. and P. D. L., evidently quite ashamed of it. He opened with a loud flourish of trumpets. He would challenge Socialists to find "a loophole in his armour" (sic!). He coolly appropriated some of the principal positions of Socialism as Individualism, and then denounced Socialism as tyranny, slavery, and wholesale interference with everybody. He diverted attention from the main question by turning down the by-lanes of "population" and "vanishing rate of interest." He said man had a right to all his own faculties do produce, and no one should stand between him and the "raw material." Being asked whether the labourers' faculties had not produced the improvements put into and on the land, and whether Individualism proposed the restitution of these with the "raw material," he did not answer. Contradicted Mrs. Fawcett point-blank re land nationalisation. Was good enough to remind Socialists of the difficulties they would have to encounter in carrying out their principles. Predicted the recession of the revolutionary wave, etc., etc. Mr. Levy has a very objectionable manner of gesticulating in the faces of opponents. He directed his gaze and his discourse towards us Socialists several times, as if "put on" to us. In his opening flourish of trumpets he undertook to be rigidly "logical." He was reminded of this in the discussion following, and some half-dozen pure assumptions in his address pointed out to him; but he declined to answer and make the attempt to justify himself.

Next Individualist lecture was by a Mr. Reed, "Philosophy of Individualism." It was originally intended for Individualists: if they never have it delivered to them they will be more fortunate than we. I cannot describe it better than one of the audience did—"something like the weather of late." At the outset of the Fabian lectures, Hubert Bland, hearing the Individualist lectures announced, congratulated the audience. He said he had found Socialism had always spread more after a course of Individualist lectures. It would be so in Leicester. His prediction has been fulfilled; teste the opposition to the Individualist doctrines, and the loud applause accorded to the Socialist lecturers and discussants. Our cause is pushing forward; the ideas are working; prejudice is broken; we are comprehended. The Fabian method is a wise one for a town like Leicester. We are converted nearly hundreds of us, and may be quite by the end of the lectures; but still I doubt if we shall organise any more. We shall see.

THOMAS BARCLAY.

THE DESPOTISM OF ORDER.

AMONG the superstitions of education are those in favour of what is called order. It is not that there is no such thing as order, but that its advocates are bigoted, narrow, and exclusive. It is coolly taken for granted that if what somebody calls order is good, what that same somebody calls disorder is bad. As if there might not be had order as applied to things? It is simply arrangement according to some notion, and disorder is simply arrangement according to some other notion. If a parlour is arranged with chairs in rows all around the walls, with everything in right lines, every one says, "How stiff, how intolerable, how little taste is manifested!" But swing round the lounge in the corner carelessly; let the chairs be scattered about, just as they would be if persons had but used them; shove the centre table a little out of the very middle of the medallion, so that it shall not be set, and then people say the parlour has a social and easy air. What is this but a disguised revolt against the despotism of order?—New York Ledger.

INSCRIPTION FOR AN OBELISK IN PRINTING-HOUSE SQUARE.

A page of the Times the Devil read,
And he flung it down:—Ahem!
I'm the father of lies, I know, he said,
But I'm damned if I father them!

—LINTON'S English Republic (p. 249).

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Library.—The Library is open to members of the Socialist League and affiliated bodies. LIBRARY CATALOGUE, containing the Rules, 2d. D. J. NICOLL and W. BLUNDELL are the Librarians.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Membership Cards can now be had by the Branches at 9d. per dozen from Central Office.

The Article, published in No. 152 of Weal, Dec. 8th, 1888, addressed to "Working Women and Girls," is now being issued by the Propagandist Committee in leaflet form for distribution, at 3s. 6d. per 1,000.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, Feb. 4, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Clerkenwell, to December, 1888:—Leicester, to January.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.

FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" PRINTING FUND.

H. K. Austin, 14s.; Aug. Heine, 1s.; J. W. Browne, £1; W. Bell Scott, £1.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following sums have been received towards this fund:—S. Presburg, 1s. 6d.; D. Nicoll, 1s. 6d.; J. Presburg, 1s.; H. Davis, 1s. 6d.; H. Daum, 6d.; L. Trunk, 1s.; R. Turner, 1s.; J. Turner, 1s.; W. B. Parker, 1s.; J. Lane, 5s.; F. Kitz, 1s.; H. H. Sparling, 1s.; M. Morris, 1s.; Wm. Blundell, 1s.; Samuels, 6d.; S. Mainwaring, 6d.; Kahn, 6d.; Rochman, 1s.; J. Morris, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 1s.; A. Seglie, 1s.; C. Tilley, 6d.; B. (per R. Turner), 1s.; B. W., 1s.; Knifel, 6d.; Diemshietz, 3d.; Matlouski, 2d.; and Goldstein, 1d. The following have also given in their names as guarantors for sums of not less than 6d. weekly:—Curtis, Morris Wess, W. Leatham, Friedentoll, A. Soloman, Esther Isaacson, V. Dave, and A. Scheu. Five hundred wanted.

REPORTS.

CLERKENWELL.—Good meeting at the Green, addressed by Brooks, Nicoll, and Hicks. After the meeting, comrades and friends adjourned to the hall at 13, Farringdon Road, where Cores lectured on "Will Parliamentary Government Benefit the Workers?" An animated debate followed. The subject stands adjourned for discussion to Sunday evening next.—P.

FULHAM.—A fair meeting addressed by Smith, Bullock, and Groser on Tuesday evening, at back of Walham Green Church. Sunday evening, after Groser and Ashbourn had spoken outside, R. Catterson Smith lectured in our rooms to a good audience. Many questions, good discussion, and 2s. 8d. collected.—G.

HAMMERSMITH.—Meeting at Latimer Road Sunday morning at 11.30 a.m., fair audience; speakers were Manghan and J. Smith, assisted by choir. Good meeting at Weltje Road at 7 p.m.; speakers, Wm. Morris and Lyne, jun. Commonweal sold fairly during day. In evening, S. Ollivier lectured at Kelmiscott House; good discussion.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on 14th, G. B. Shaw's paper, "My Friend Fitzthunder the Unpractical Socialist," read and discussed. Semple in chair, and attendance good. At Castle Street on Saturday night, large meeting addressed by Barrow and Leatham, choir singing "The Proletariat," "March of the Workers," and "Hark the Battle Cry!"—L.

GLASGOW.—Two very successful meetings on Sunday—at 2.30 Joe Burgoyne and Glasier spoke on Jail Square; at 5.30 the same speakers addressed a good audience at Paisley Road; 1s. collected and the Commonweal sold out. In the evening, under the auspices of the Christian Socialists, comrade the Rev. Mr. Forrest of Kilmarnock delivered an admirable address on "Social Salvation" in the Waterloo Hall to a large audience.

NORWICH.—Sunday afternoon, large meeting in the Market Place; Mowbray spoke upon the condition of the workers; audience very attentive; good collection; Commonweal sold out. In evening, good meeting of members and sympathisers held to consider position of Commonweal; several suggestions made, and a guarantee fund opened by the Branch. It is hoped as many comrades and sympathisers as possible will support it, in order to help to make the paper a success.

YARMOUTH.—As Sunday morning was wet, there was no meeting. A fairly attended meeting was held in afternoon; some Weals and Chants were sold. The mayor of Yarmouth has denied that there is exceptional poverty, and attributes the agitation to the Socialists. Several names have been received for starting a branch. It is hoped to find a place of meeting during week; and get branch started at once, although many of the men are afraid of being seen at our meetings, fearing to lose their work. Several Radicals are joining.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

- Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Business meeting every Sunday at 7.30 p.m. Sunday Jan. 27, at 8.30, J. Turner will lecture on "How to obtain Anarchist Socialism without the aid of "Parliamentary Government," continuing the discussion on "Parliamentary Government."
- Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Waltham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Sunday January 27, at 8 p.m., H. Halliday Sparling, "Luxury Now; Necessity Then."
- Buckney.—Secretary, E. Lefevre, 14 Goldsmiths Sq., Goldsmiths Row, Hackney Road.
- Hammersmith.—Kelmecott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday Jan. 27, at 8 p.m., William Clarke (Fabian Society), A Lecture. Wednesday 30th, at 8 p.m., William Morris, "Socialism."
- Hoxton.—12, Basing Place, Kingsland Rd. Business meetings held every Friday evening at 9 o'clock.
- London Fields.—All communications, etc., to Mrs. G. G. Schack, 26 Cawley Road, South Hackney.
- Mitcham.—Meets every Sunday, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road, at 11 a.m.
- Mile-end and Bethnal Green.—95 Boston St., Hackney Road.
- North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Friday Jan. 25th, debate between Samuels and White. These discussions will be continued every alternate Friday.
- Waltham and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.
- Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.
- Wimbleton and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbleton and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

- Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Secretary, P. Barron, 14 Ann Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.
- Bristol.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegat. Meets Tuesdays at 8.
- Carnoustie (Scottish Section; Forfarshire).—Meeting every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secy.
- Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.
- Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.
- Glasgow (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secy.
- Gullatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section; Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn St.
- Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.
- Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour St. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.
- Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Rd. and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.
- Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.
- Norwich.—Sunday, at 8, Gordon Hall. Monday, Hall open from 8.30. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Hall open from 8.30. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Association. Sunday February 10th, a farewell Demonstration by comrade Mowbray will be held.
- Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.
- Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.
- West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.
- Yarmouth.—All desiring to join branch in course of formation here should communicate with C. Reynolds, Bow 45, George Street, who is acting as Secretary pro tem.

All persons who sympathise with the views of the Socialist League are earnestly invited to communicate with the above addresses, and if possible help us in preparing for the birth of a true society, based on equality, brotherhood, and freedom for all.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 27.

- 11.30...Latimer Road Station ...Hammersmith Branch
11.30...Regent's ParkThe Branch
11.30...Waltham Green, opp. Station.....The Branch
3.30...Hyde ParkNicoll, Parker, & Cores
7.30...Broad Street, SohoThe Branch
7.30...Clerkenwell GreenCores
7.30...Weltje Rd., Ravenscourt Pk.....Hammersmith

Tuesday.

- 8.30...Fulham—back of Waltham Green Ch. ...Branch

EAST END.

SUNDAY 27.

Leman Street, Shadwell 11 ...Mrs. Schaack & Cores

PROVINCES.

- Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.
Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.
Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.
Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3.

THE SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—The Committee will meet at 63 Lincoln's Inn Fields, on Saturday Jan. 26, at 7.30 p.m. Members please send their subscription cards to the Secretary for audit.

LEICESTER.—A course of lectures on "Socialism, its Aims and Principles" is being delivered in Leicester Secular Hall. The sixth lecture will be delivered on Sunday February 10th by Annie Besant—subject, "Industry under Socialism."

SOUTH LONDON.—Friends who will help to establish a Branch of the Socialist League in South London will please place themselves in communication with C. Henze, 41 Bolton Street, Thomas Street, Kennington Park, S.E., or by letter to H. Hopkins, 17 Gairloch Road, Shenley Road, Peckham, S.E.

IPSWICH LABOUR REFORM LEAGUE.—Pioneer Club, Theatre Yard, Tacket Street.—On Sunday Jan. 13th J. Thomas lectured to good audience upon "What is Socialism?" F. Brown in chair. On Sunday 20, F. Brown gave interesting lecture on "Christianity v. Science" to fair audience; Murphy in chair. Good discussion both times.

EAST-END PROPAGANDA.—A meeting will be held on Saturday January 26th, at 40 Berner Street, at 8.30, to discuss the amalgamation of the East-end Branches of the League. Members please note.—A united meeting of members of the Hackney, London Fields, and Mile-end and Bethnal Green Branches will be held at 26 Cawley Road, South Hackney, on Sunday February 3rd, at 4.15 p.m.

DRUM AND FIFE BAND.—Junior members of the S.L. and other revolutionary bodies willing to join a band are requested to attend at the Hall, 13 Farringdon Road, Sunday January 27, at 6 p.m. prompt. Those who have already given their names in, please notice. The object of the band is to assist in every way possible the revolutionary propaganda. For further information address communications to R. Turner, jun., care of F. Kitz, 13 Farringdon Road.

NOTICE

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE LITERATURE.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . . 1d
- Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . . 1d.
- The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . . 2d.
- The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. . . 6d.
Bijou edition, 3d.; Large paper, 6d.
- The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barelay. . . 1d
- The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . . . 4d.
- The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . . 1d.
- True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . . 1d.
- Useful Work & Useless Toil. By William Morris. . . 1d.
- "All for the Cause!" Song. Words by William Morris; Music by E. Belfort Bax. 4to, 4 pp. 6d.
per dozen, 4s. 6d
- "Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . . 2d.
- Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . . 6d.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

BY THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

SOCIALIST SONGS

FOR

POPULAR SINGING.

A Handy Collection. Contains 33 effective pieces from the pens of William Morris, Edward Carpenter, C. W. Beckett, J. Bruce Glasier, D. J. Nicoll, H. Halliday Sparling, and others. A number reprinted from the Commonweal and other sources. Should be in the hands of all Socialists.

Twopence. 1s. 4d. a-dozen.

Orders to be addressed to JAMES LEATHAM, 7 Jamaica Street, Aberdeen.

OUR NATIONAL CAKE:

WHO MAKES IT, AND WHO EATS IT.

Large display poster to bring home the aims of Socialism to the workers.

Sent free on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage. J. J. Harrison, 44 Oxford Street, Sheffield.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity

New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST

MANIFESTO.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

THE ALARM

A. R. PARSONS' OLD PAPER.

"Men die, but Principles live."

Subscriptions 8s. per annum.

Can be sent with Commonweal from 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction.

With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

THE LABOUR LEADER.

AN ADVANCED POLITICAL JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF LABOUR.

The Miner will in future be published under the above name. Issued on the 1st of every month.

Subscription, monthly 1d.; 1s. 6d. per annum.

Edited and published by KEIR HARDIE, Cumnock, Ayrshire.

Recently Published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Being seven Lectures, delivered on various occasions for the Socialist League.

Reeves & Turner, 196 Strand; or Commonweal Office.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 160.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

MR. O'BRIEN has got another four months, which no doubt is as little as could be expected "under the circumstances." But the circumstances are curious. A citizen is summoned before a court, and with his counsel has to fight his way into it; when in it, he finds that his judges are going practically to try him with closed doors, and being naturally indignant at this proceeding, takes the far more reasonable course of fighting his way out of it amidst the applause of everyone except the said judges. Here are strange proceedings against the respectability of a Court of law-and-order! Such things have been the immediate preface to open rebellion.

Robespierre in his time was accused of "demoralising" the guillotine by too indiscriminating use. Mr. Balfour, in his career of pasteboard-Tory-Robespierre, will have to beware of this trap of the demoralisation of punishment; or rather he has already fallen into it, and thereby won the sincere thanks of all Socialists; for, though it may be said that the Balfourian persecution in Ireland is but a game being played between two bodies of politicians, yet it must be remembered that the tortures of the prison-cell are a very palpable reality, and also that they have not been inflicted only on "gentlemen," who have duly counted the cost and accept it as part of the political game, but also on poor people who will receive but a very moderate amount of glory as a reward. The felon's punishment has been "demoralised" in Ireland, and bears with it no least shadow of disgrace, but honour rather; and the reflection of this demoralisation is spreading even to respectable England.

The Star and the Pall Mall, the two Radical prints of London, are at daggers drawn just now, and perhaps for the rest of their natural lives. This may well be thought a mere battle of the kites with the crows; though apart from the blind and obvious partyism of the Star, and the amusingly blatant jingoism of the Pall Mall, both papers have been of some service to us. But to a bystander the whole controversy anent the aldermen is a curious commentary on electioneering in general. "Fight hard," says the Star, "get in your Liberals while you can, you may not have another chance." "Fight soft," says the Pall Mall, "perhaps our opponents will remember our generosity when their turn comes, and fight soft also."

I must say that from a party point of view the Star seems to me to have the best of the argument; for if you go into the game, you must take the advantages of the game as they turn up, or lose them. On the other hand, that you should be obviously afraid to put up for re-election your men who have just won does not say much for the wisdom of the ballot-box. Our two contemporaries illustrate neatly the two quagmires in which politicians wade, and become so loathsome thereby. For the Star, reforms are means toward that great end the success of the Gladstonian Liberals, which by some unexplained magical process will at once both destroy poverty and sustain riches and make us all happy,—or if not, it isn't our business. For the Pall Mall, Radicalism is an enterprise for the discovery or manufacture of a moralized Toryism (under the name of democracy) whereby the British Empire, having reduced the rest of the world to starvation, shall reign supreme, with the ten Commandments of an exclusive ancient eastern tribe (glossed by modern hypocrisy) our rule of life, and a high court for the trial and punishment of anatory excesses;—or, indeed, is this also only another and less honest form of the great political maxim, "We in, you out, and the rest to the Devil"?

The Daily News, in an article on the O'Brien incident, says, "We disapprove of boycotting, whether it is practised by the Primrose or National League." O holy simplicity! Of the journal, too, which the other day was praising the proposal of the United States Congress for the wholesale boycotting of Socialists from the soil of America. But Nulle fides cum hereticis servanda—no faith need be kept with heretics.

We have had another anniversary lately; that of the fall of Khartoum and the death of the general of the Christian commercialists—Gordon, to wit. It is to be supposed that as long as it is convenient to remember him and his virtues we shall have them dinned into our ears. But whatever they may have been, or however amiable they may have made him to his friends, do not let us forget that he was the general of these pests of the world; and that he had to carry on war as war—that is to say by means of slaughter and destruction—and that slaughter and destruction carried on wholesale in a bad cause is murder of the worst kind: murder, the evil consequences of which are hard to foresee or measure. The Fall of Khartoum was a victory of the oppressed; and whatever Gordon might have been had he been fighting for the good of the world, as it was he fell not as a martyr to a great cause, but as an instrument of oppression whom fate at last thrust aside.

The acceptance of Boulanger's triumph as a victory for monarchism can only come of ignorance or impudence: of course the various openly reactionary factions would vote for their champion, but it is now notorious even to our middle-class press that their votes would never have returned the General; and that a great mass of Socialists have voted for him simply to be used as a stick wherewith to beat the opportunist dog, and the worse the man is the properer for that purpose, for the easier he will be to throw away when he is done with. That is their view, but undoubtedly it is a dangerous game to play; surely they had better have voted for Boulé, and thus have registered themselves definitely as revolutionists along with men like Vaillant. It is strange, too, that they should have forgotten the extra-ferocious part which Boulanger's regiment played amidst those who massacred the Commune.

W. M.

Comrade Hobart, who put up as a candidate in one of the divisions of St. Pancras, deserves our sympathy. The Star announces that he wasn't only defeated because he was advanced, but that he was "rather too much so." This means, I suppose, that he did not drop his principles sufficiently to please the respectable householders of St. Pancras. How this goes to confirm what William Morris has always said, "that for a Socialist to get elected, it is absolutely necessary that he should get in as something else." Comrade Hobart is to be commended for his honesty; but he may be advised to drop the electioneering business for the future. He is plainly not suited for it.

Our valued contemporary, the Star, went into ecstasies upon the attainment of its first year of existence. With the modesty so characteristic of its eminent editor, it spent two columns in singing its own praises. Among other good things too numerous to mention, it recounts that "Thanks to our efforts, the stupid ostracism of the Socialists has come to an end; and on their side, too, Socialist organisations have abandoned much of the wild talk, the viewy aims, the impracticable methods which they inherited from German sources."

It will be news to German Socialists to hear that they are noted for "their wild talk," etc. If Socialism had come from T. P.'s own beloved country it might be understood. But how do our State Socialists relish T. P.'s assertion that "He," by the seductive blarney of a countryman of O'Connell's, has converted them from "raving revolution" to the mild paths of constitutional agitation? We can imagine indignant denials from some of them; but let that pass.

What I want to deal with particularly is the "stupid ostracism" of the Socialists by, I presume, the respectable Liberal party. We ought, it seems, to be thankful to T. P. for providing us with an introduction to respectable society. But, unfortunately, the stupid ostracism has rather intensified on the part of the respectable press. Take the Daily News, for instance, which boycotts the very mention of any Socialist meeting, and its example is copied by one or two Radical journals I could name.

This was not so a few years back, when the News and these other papers looked upon Socialism as a mild form of lunacy, to be treated with good-natured indulgence. Now it is so formidable that it is endangering the existence of the great Liberal party, and therefore it is ostracised as much as possible.

That Socialism is becoming popular among the workmen Radicals of London cannot be denied; but for that we haven't to thank the Star, but the events in Trafalgar Square. The shoe's on the other foot; the Star tolerates Socialism because its customers want it.

I have merely cited this passage from the Star article as an instance of the admirable cheek of a certain able editor. It forms a splendid example of the primary art of a commercial age, the art of self-advertisement. To those who desire to become proficient in this charming accomplishment, we may recommend them to study that two columns in the Star.

What T. P. has done for the State Socialist party is this—He and his party have served them like Disraeli served the Whigs, stolen their clothes and left them breathless and shivering. Result, every political humbug is masquerading on the County Council as a State Socialist, while the editor of the Star ejaculates, "Hooray! that's one of our candidates!"

D. N.

THE MANCHESTER MARTYRS.

THOSE who have listened with quickened pulse to the spirited war-song "God Save Ireland" must often have wondered who were the "noble-hearted three," whose gallant death is so brilliantly celebrated in T. D. Sullivan's stirring verses. For those among us of the younger generation, and, perhaps, for some even of our elders, there is but a dim and misty recollection of an event which happened nearly twenty-four years ago. I can recall hearing much when a boy of the dreaded Fenians, whom I, in common with other middle-class lads, looked upon as a species of newly-discovered cannibal, noted for their savage ferocity; but this dread was mingled with a large amount of admiration; and when the news came of the gallant attack on the prison-van at Manchester, and later the account of how Allen, Larkin, and O'Brien boldly and calmly met their death upon the scaffold, then I, with many others, began to reverence such dauntless heroism. Election speeches and eloquent gasconade are all very well, but a brave deed under the banner of a cause which we are taught to loathe will dwell in our memories far longer than all the palaver of the mightiest orator that ever lived.

The memory of these events is well worth reviving at any time, and especially now, as only recently a very distinguished countryman of the gallant Fenians who were basely murdered by English law, has taken occasion to eulogise the murder of our Chicago comrades by the administrators of the capitalist-made laws of the United States of America, and so, by reflection, endorses the murder at Manchester. Let me tell briefly what led up to that legal murder at Manchester of the men who knew how to die for their country.

After the fiasco of '48, one or two of the refugees held still to the hope of an armed rising that should sweep alien rule out of Ireland. James Stephens and John O'Mahony studied in Paris all the methods of the more experienced Continental revolutionists, and, having done so, proceeded to put them in operation, Stephens at home and O'Mahony in America. In the south of Ireland Stephens found little subterranean fires were smouldering that afterwards broke out in the "Phoenix Society." 1858 saw the first little sputter; a few years more and there came the Civil War in the United States. Here the Irishmen saw, as they thought, a golden opportunity; not only was it a school of arms where in deadly earnest they could prepare to meet the English red coats, but at the time England was supposed to be so involved with the Southern States that the crushing of Secession would mean war with her. Into the Federal ranks poured the Irishmen in thousands; the Fenian societies spread like wildfire in Ireland and America. In 1863 the Irish People was founded in Dublin, and preached Fenian doctrines uncompromisingly; in September 1865 it was seized by the authorities and every Fenian arrested on whom they could lay hands. In May 1866 the Fenian invasion of Canada took place, when the grateful Republic repaid the Irishmen who had sustained it on their bayonets by betraying them to the British Government. Then it was resolved to beard the lion in his den. The whole story of the risings, the alarms, and the misfortunes of '67 is too long to tell here; our part of it begins on November 11, 1867, when before daybreak some "active and intelligent" constables noticed four broad-shouldered, muscular, but "suspicious-looking" men loitering about a clothes-dealer's shop in Manchester. Two were arrested after a desperate struggle, but two got away; those taken had tried very hard to get their hands into their coat pockets; and as they had loaded revolvers there, it is quite possible that the constables might have paid dearly for their interference. After several remands, the truth was discovered by accident, and the supposed burglars proved to be two famous Fenian leaders, Colonel Thos. J. Kelly and Captain Deasy. When first arrested they had given false names and the police could not find anything against them, but the magistrate kindly remanded them under the Vagrant Act, and on their being brought up again, and the intelligence of the police force of Manchester still not being up to time, a second remand was decreed by the Solon of the magisterial bench. The whole of this proceeding was clearly illegal, for they were certainly not vagrants in any sense of the word; but any stick will do to beat a dog with, and any law is good enough for a Fenian or a Socialist.

It was the afternoon of September 8th when the two prisoners Kelly and Deasy were placed in a police-cell, after their remand, to wait for the prison-van which was to convey them to the City Jail, Bellevue. About three o'clock the van was drawn up to the front of the police-court to remove all the prisoners, and among them the two Fenians. At this time the police noticed two men hanging about the court whom they suspected to be Fenians. They attempted to arrest them, but on the display of a revolver and bowie-knife by these dangerous persons, the police thought better of it, and allowed them to get off with very little difficulty. This appears to have caused some slight alarm among the police-court officials, and Kelly and Deasy were put in irons, and other precautions also were taken. Seven policemen accompanied the van, in addition to the driver and Sergeant Brett—three riding with the van and four in a cab following; Sergeant Brett was seated in the corridor inside the van. Besides the two Fenians, one woman and three or four boys were inside the van as prisoners. The van started; but it was not noticed by the sage police authorities that beside its guard of police it was preceded by several Fenians in a cab.

About midway between the city and the jail the van had to pass under a railway arch, which crosses the Hyde Road, adjacent to which are a number of clay-pits. There is a large hotel near the railway bridge, called the Railway Hotel, where a number of military-looking men were gathered. As the afternoon drew on, the number of these men increased, and at three o'clock more than fifty had collected. Amongst them was one taller than the rest; he was a fair-complexioned man, wore a black coat and cap, and seemed to be the leader. This man was afterwards identified as William Phillip Allen. At about four o'clock these men seemed to get restless and excited; they kept walking across the roadway in front of the hotel, and from the summit of a high bank of clay looked intently towards the city. At length Allen took up his position on the clay bank, and one by one, ten or twelve men gathered around him. The rumble of the prison-van was heard in the distance; Allen held up his hands, and from different points men glided towards him. The majority of these men were either mechanics or people evidently belonging to the middle-class; very few of them were poorly dressed.

When the van came in sight, Allen held up his hands, and two revolvers glittered in the light. His comrades followed his example. The few spectators of the scene noticed that they were all armed with new revolvers. The moment the van approached the arch, Allen stepped forward, and presenting a revolver at the driver, called on him to stop. He had scarcely spoken before a volley of pistol-shots were fired at the van. Then followed a wild scene; one of the horses was shot, and began plunging; the other, frightened, turned aside; and from that moment Allen and his friends were masters of the situation.

When the pistol-shots were fired the officers on the top of the van scrambled down as quickly as they could, and the driver was knocked off with a large stone. One of the leaders climbed up to the top of the van, and at a signal from him about twenty labourers, who had been hiding in a clay-pit, climbed up after him. The armed men formed a circle round the van and menaced all who approached with loaded revolvers. Those on the roof were supplied with huge stones, and battered at the roof, which was too strong for them. Allen then directed some labourers armed with hatchets and crow-bars to burst the door in. The constables, aided by some tavern loafers and a few other English slaves, eager to do a good turn for a policeman, with the snobbish servility of their class, attacked the brave Fenians; but a few revolver-shots quickly sent them to the rightabout. It was found impossible to force the door, and one of the party discharged a pistol through the lock. The policeman Brett, who refused to get out of the way, and applied his eye to the keyhole of the door at the critical moment, got a bullet through his head for his stupidity. His keys were taken from him, the doors unlocked, and the prisoners released. As Deasy was borne from the van, Allen clasped his hand and exclaimed, "I will die for you, Deasy!" He kept his word. Their object effected, the Fenians dispersed; but unhappily Allen and a few others were captured by the police and their toadies. Other persons to the number of twenty were afterwards captured in the general hunt for suspects that followed, and five men with eighteen others were placed on trial charged with the killing of Brett.

The Government appointed a special commission to sit at Manchester for the trial of the prisoners, and on the 27th of October Mr. Justice Blackburn and Mr. Justice Mellor arrived in that city, and the commission was opened on the next day.

D. J. NICOLL.

(To be continued.)

LONDON PAUPERISM.—The number of paupers in London, exclusive of lunatics in asylums and vagrants, on the last day of the second week in January, was 103,685, as compared with 104,618 on the corresponding day of last year, 101,114 in 1887, and 96,228 in 1886. The vagrants relieved on the same day numbered 1,090, of whom 943 were men, 132 women, and 15 children under 16 years of age.

THE UNEMPLOYED AND THE COUNTY COUNCIL.—The Social Democratic Federation have convened a meeting of the unemployed at Cleopatra's Needle, Thames Embankment, for Thursday, 31st, at two p.m. It is proposed to send a deputation from the meeting of the unemployed to the meeting of the new London County Council at Spring Gardens, to "call upon the member of that Council to use their utmost efforts, collectively and individually, to organise the labor of honest workers, who demand justice, not charity, on artisans' dwellings, embankment of the Thames, improvements of the streets, the erection of baths, washhouses, public halls, improved latrines—such as have been built in the city—and other useful public works."

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 9, 1889.

3	Sun.	1757. Volney born. 1769. Wilkes expelled from House of Commons for publishing "No. 45." 1794. Trial of Alexander Scott for sedition. 1813. Leigh Hunt tried for seditious libel. 1887. Sir Henry Maine died. 1888. Interpellation in the French Chamber on the decoration swindle.
4	Mon.	1555. Rogers burnt at Smithfield. 1615. Porta, physician, died. 1793. Trial of James Smith and John Mennon for sedition. 1794. National Convention abolishes slavery in all French colonies. 1811. Trials of the Caravats and Shanavests. 1861. Southern American Confederacy formed. 1878. Trial ends of 193 Russian Socialists for carrying on their propaganda: sentences—13 to mines, 20 to settlement in Siberia, 80 acquitted but banished by administrative order; the "trial" had lasted three years.
5	Tues.	1781. Lord George Gordon tried for high treason. 1799. Galvanni died. 1820. Dr. Drennan died. 1846. Johann Joseph Most born. 1872. Five months' strike of the Brussels marble-workers began. 1878. Vera Zassulich attempts the life of General Trepoff, chief of police at St. Petersburg, by whose order Bogoliuboff had been flogged. 1881. Thomas Carlyle died.
6	Wed.	1649. House of Lords abolished. 1778. France acknowledges the independence of America. 1804. Dr. Priestley died. 1813. Hugh Fitzpatrick tried for publishing Scully's History of the Penal Laws .
7	Thur.	1633. William Prynne tried before the Star Chamber. 1649. Monarchy abolished in England. 1803. Trial of E. M. Despard for high treason. 1812. Charles Dickens born. 1828. Robert Taylor sentenced for blasphemous libel. 1849. Charles Gavan Duffy tried for high treason. 1868. Arrest of the Fenian "Captain Mackay" at Cork. 1870. Barricades thrown up in Paris. 1877. J. F. O'Mahony died. 1879. Strike-riot at Liverpool Docks. 1879. Ossinsky, Sophie Leshern, and others make armed resistance to arrest; for which Ossinsky afterwards hanged and two sent to the mines. 1835. Reinsdorf and Kuchler beheaded.
8	Fri.	1576. Robert Burton born. 1849. Karl Marx tried at Cöln for provocation and rebellion. 1870. Street fighting continues in Paris. 1886. Unemployed riots in West-end of London. 1887. Anniversary meeting "proclaimed" but held; labour riots in Blantyre same day.
9	Sat.	1574. Vallée burnt for crime of heresy. 1849. Proclamation of Roman Republic. 1874. David Friederich Strauss died.

Sir Henry Maine.—Born 1822; died Feb. 3, 1887. Was educated at Cambridge, where in 1842 he took a brilliant degree. He was after Tutor of Trinity Hall, and in 1847 became Regius Professor of Civil Law. Three years later he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn and also at Middle Temple, in 1854 was appointed Reader of Jurisprudence at the Temple, when he resigned the Cambridge chair. In 1856 he wrote 'Roman Law and Legal Education' in the 'Cambridge Essays,' followed, in 1861, by the larger and profounder work on 'Ancient Law.' In 1862 he was made a law member of the Supreme Council of India, and after a long stay in India, returned to become professor of jurisprudence at Oxford (1870). A year later he was made a member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India and K.C.S.I. In the same year appeared his published lecture on 'Village Communities in the East and West.' In 1877 he was elected Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. In following year he resigned his Oxford professorship. His principal works, besides those already named, were 'The Early History of Institutions' (1875), and 'Dissertations on Early Law and Custom' (1883), and 'The Popular Government' (1885). Most of them are but parts of a great enquiry into a science of law, which he did not live to complete, but which is of material service to later students.—S.

William Drennan.—Born at Belfast, May 23, 1754; died same place, Feb. 5, 1820. Educated at Glasgow, where he took his M.A. in 1771; then went to Edinburgh to study medicine, taking his M.D. in 1778. During his stay at Edinburgh he was noted as one of the foremost students of his time, distinguishing himself in philosophy as well as medicine, becoming a favourite pupil and personal friend of Dugald Stewart. He practised two or three years in Belfast, and then moved to Newry, where he began to study with great interest the political and social movements of the period. His writings, signed "Orellana, the Irish Helot" (1784), attracted wide attention. In 1789 he moved to Dublin, where he gained a good practice and a conspicuous place in the really brilliant society of the capital. He was one of the celebrated "Monks of the Screw," and a friend of Lysaght and Curran and their like. At the same time his interest in political affairs grew ever deeper; he belonged to the club founded in 1790 by T. A. Emmett and Peter Barrowes; and in June 1791 he wrote the original prospectus of the United Irishmen. He was one of the moving spirits of the United organisation, and wrote for it most of its earlier addresses and proclamations. Among them were: The Test of the Society of the United Irishmen of Dublin, Nov. 1791; Circular specifying objects of the Society, Dec. 30, 1791; Address to the Society on proceedings being taken against their secretary, J. Napper Tandy, Feb. 28, 1792; Address to the Friends of the People in London, setting forth the state of the representation in Ireland and operation of the Penal Code on Catholics, Oct. 26, 1792; Address to the Delegates for promoting a Reform in Scotland, Nov. 23, 1792; Address to the Volunteers of Ireland, signed by Hamilton Rowan, chairman, Dec. 2, 1792 (this was the address beginning "Citizen Soldiers," for distributing which Rowan was convicted); Address to the Irish Nation, William Drennan, chairman, Jan. 25, 1793 (for this Drennan was tried for sedition, and acquitted, June 26, 1794, after splendid defence by Curran); Resolutions adopted by the Society of United Irishmen as to the imprisonment of Oliver Bond and the Hon. Simon Butler—Bagenal Harvey in the chair, Thomas Russell, secretary (five years later, the chairman and secretary were hanged, Bond was condemned but died suddenly in prison, and Butler was banished); Address of the Society to their Catholic countrymen, June 1793; Address to Dr. James Reynolds, on refusing to be examined on oath before a committee of the House of Lords, Henry Jackson, chairman, Aug. 14, 1793; Address to Oliver Bond and Hon. Simon Butler, John Sheares, chairman, Aug. 16, 1793; Address to Thomas Muir, Bagenal Harvey, chairman, Nov. 22, 1793; and others. He wrote constantly for the Press, and afterwards in the Harp of Erin, contributing songs and poems and some striking articles. In 1791 appeared his poem "The Wake of William Orr"; in 1795 "When Erin First Rose"; in 1798 "The Wail of the Women after the Battle" and "Glendalough." These poems are those by which he is now best known, but they by no means represent his whole work even in this one part of it. He was the first to call Ireland the "Emerald Isle," which he did in "When Erin First Rose." After 1798 his political career closed; while his opinions were unchanged, he thought their realisation hopeless. Feb. 3, 1800, he married an English lady of some wealth, and in 1807 left Dublin for Belfast, where he quietly remained till his death, devoting himself entirely to literature. He founded the Belfast Academical Institution, and started the Belfast Magazine, to which he contributed largely. He was carried to the grave by six Catholics and six Protestants. As a poet he was possessed of much power, but has been overshadowed by the better-known Moore, to whom some of his pieces have been ignorantly ascribed. His published works are: Dissertation... de Venæsectione in febribus continuis, Edinburgh 1778, 8vo; Essay on the moral and political state of Ireland, in a letter to Earl Fitzwilliam, Dublin 1795, 8vo; 3rd edition, London 1797, 8vo; A Letter to... W. Pitt (On the Contemplated Union of Great Britain and Ireland), Dublin 1799, 12mo; A Letter to... C. J. Fox (on the means to ameliorate the condition of the Irish People), Dub in 1806, 8vo; Fugitive Pieces in prose and verse, Belfast 1815, 16mo; The Electra of Sophocles (translated by W. D.), Belfast 1817, 8vo; Glendalough and other Poems, 2nd edition (with a memoir), Dublin 1859, 8vo.—S.

John Francis O'Mahony.—Born at Kilbenny, county Cork, in 1816; died in New York, Feb. 7, 1877. Son and nephew of two who had been "out" in '98, he did not want from his earliest boyhood for rebel influences. He studied at Trinity College, Dublin, but did not take a degree, his course of reading by no means coinciding with that prescribed for him; he became an accomplished Gaelic scholar, acquired a thorough knowledge of Greek, Latin, and French, and a passable acquaintance with Hebrew and Sanskrit. In 1843 he interested himself in the Repeal movement; afterwards attached himself to the Young Ireland party, and in 1848 was one of those who took the field with O'Brien at Ballinacorney. He managed to escape to France, and lived in Paris for several years, where he supported himself by journalism and the teaching of Greek and Latin. In 1854 he joined Mitchel in New York and took a prominent part in various Irish organisations. In 1857 he published a translation of Keating's History of Ireland, the earlier part of which is largely taken up with the deeds of the ancient Fenians. While at work on this he no doubt first thought of applying the old name to the new secret military organisation he had planned with Stephens at Paris, and which started in the United States about 1859. In 1861 came the great Civil War, and the Fenians flung themselves by tens of thousands into the war on the side of freedom. O'Mahony was colonel of the celebrated 69th New York, mainly made up of Fenians, who also formed the bulk of Meagher's Irish Brigade, the Corcoran Legion, and other regiments with records. The Fenian, or Irish Republican, Brotherhood (I.R.B.) was reorganised at conventions in Chicago (1864) and Cincinnati (1865). O'Mahony threw up his commission even before the close of the war, so largely did the society grow, and gave himself wholly to the task of organising. Although he had many differences with Stephens and the Central Council on matters of policy, he remained president for some years. He did not take a personal part in the invasion of Canada (1866), when his comrades were betrayed by the United States Government to that of England, nor in the rising in Ireland (1867), but kept on steadily at what he held to be the more pressing duty for him—organisation. The latter part of his life passed in continual toil for a livelihood, amid ill-health and poverty. Of him it was said: "He had friends who were willing to sacrifice anything for him; yet he was often in need of a dollar, and when his poverty was discovered he declined to receive assistance in any shape or form. One way or another, he always managed to earn his own living. He seemed, however, to care nothing for success in life, his whole mind being absorbed with one idea—rebellion in Ireland. A ten-dollar greenback over and above his immediate wants was a fortune to him, but one he held a loose hold of, for any person who approached him with a woeful story was sure to get it out of him." His body was brought home to Ireland and buried at Glasnevin, with the honours of a public funeral.—S.

WHITE-LEAD WORKERS' WOES.

IN Burdett Road, Mile-end, E., there is a white-lead factory which is owned by a Mr. Johnson, who recently stood as the Tory candidate for the County Council in the Limehouse division. The white-lead industry is a notoriously unhealthy one, even when conducted with the most careful precautions against danger; and its unhealthiness is increased manifold when, as in Johnson's factory, even the mild degree of care compelled by law is not strictly regarded. Last week a number of the men employed at this factory came out on strike, and a Star reporter gathered from them some details as to the nature of their work and the special grievances of which they complain in this particular case. The manufacture of white-lead is a simple enough process. Ordinary lead is first melted down in huge cauldrons, and when melted is run off into crates, each weighing 3lb. These are then rolled four together, and the masses of 12lb. each are stowed in pots with acid and a covering of tan. They are left here for three months, at the end of which time they are taken out white-lead. The most unhealthy part of the work is the removing of these from their receptacles. The tan is rotting, and—especially in raw weather—sends up a poisonous steam, and the lead is covered with a fine dust that flies about at the least disturbance. Respirators covering the mouth and nose should be worn by the men employed in removing the lead, to prevent the poisonous dust penetrating into their throat and lungs. The grievances which at Johnson's factory intensify the danger of the work are several. First, as to hours of work and rate of wages. The working day, except on Saturday, is 10 hours; the pay is 4³/₄d. an hour; the average wage, if a man worked his full time, would reach about 24s. Then as to the conditions under which the work is done. While the lead is being moved, it is the custom to saturate it in order to abate the dust; but, as it would make more labour to water the tan, this precaution is neglected in Johnson's establishment. The respirators supplied by the firm are extremely defective. They are simply little bags of thin linen with cord attached at opposite sides to be tried round the head. A handkerchief tied loosely over the mouth would be a better protection, for the respirators are of such a shape that they become damp with the men's breath, and the dust sticks to them and gets into the mouth. Many of the men suffer from lead-poisoning through this; they are often ill, and the unsightly eruptions that cover their hands and break out over their bodies tell but too plainly of the lack of proper care. The joints of the fingers become rotten; the hands, blotched with sores, lose all power. A doctor is supposed to inspect the factory three times a week; as a matter of fact, the men complain that his visits rarely extend themselves beyond an exchange of courtesies with the manager in the office. He never speaks to the men, and very seldom ventures into the factory itself. In some mysterious way, the master always seems to know when the inspector is coming, and things are carefully prepared beforehand. One of the worst grievances is the driving conduct of the foreman. Meanwhile, although the men have come out on strike, they are without organisation or means of carrying on a prolonged struggle. They allege that women have been set to the work they had left. If so, Mr. Johnson has rendered himself liable, for the employment of women at this particular branch of the work is illegal. Not that the illegality of it much matters these days, for to sweat his men in that fashion is so profitable that he can afford to pay a few fines. The only present hope of the workers lies in publicity and the boycott the publicity may bring; their only lasting hope is in Socialism.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON!

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. H. (New Cross).—Will advertise your books next week. WILL BE USED.—G. McL. (The Kirk's Alarm); H. D. (Free v. State Communism); J. H. W. (The End of a World); G. S. (A Utopian Nightmare). J. B. L. (Islington).—Will reply by post.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	MORRIS and NICOLL 33
The Manchester Martyrs	D. J. NICOLL 34
Revolutionary Calendar—Sir Henry Maine; Wm. Drennan; John Francis O'Mahony	H. H. SPARLING 35
White-Lead Workers' Woes	35
Wendell Phillips	LOTHROP WASHINGTON 36
International Notes	V. DAVE & MAY MORRIS 37
Socialism in South America	JOHN CREAGHE 37
Out-of-Work Members	37
The Labour Struggle	38
In the United States	H. F. CHARLES 38
The Spirit of Revolt	39
The Meeting at Milan	39
Executive Business, Reports, etc., etc.	39
Lecture Announcements, Notices of Books, etc., etc.	40

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday January 30.

ENGLAND	ITALY
Justice	Turin—Nuova Gazzetta Operaia
Labour Elector	Turin—Il Muratore
Labour Tribune	Rome—L'Emancipazione
Norwich—Daylight	Milan—Il Fascio Operaio
Postal Service Gazette	Cremona—L'Eco del Popolo
Railway Review	SPAIN
Social Democrat	Barcelona—El Productor
Worker's Friend	Seville—La Solidaridad
NEW SOUTH WALES	Madrid—El Socialista
Hamilton—Radical	PORTUGAL
Sydney—Australian Star	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
INDIA	AUSTRIA
Bankipore—Behar Herald	Wien—Gleichheit
Madras—People's Friend	Brunn—Volksfreund
UNITED STATES	HUNGARY
New York—Der Sozialist	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik
Fredheit	ROMANIA
Truthseeker	Jassy—Muncitorul
Jewish Volkszeitung	DENMARK
Alarm	Social-Demokraten
Workmen's Advocate	WEST INDIES
Boston—Woman's Journal	Cuba—El Productor
Chicago—Knights of Labor
Vorbote
FRANCE
Paris—Cri du Peuple (daily)
Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)
La Revoltte
La Revue Socialiste
HOLLAND
Hague—Recht voor Allen
BELGIUM
Ghent—Vooruit
Antwerp—De Werker
Liege—L'Avenir
SWITZERLAND
Arbeiterstimme
GERMANY
Berlin—Volks Tribune

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT is not an agreeable thing, because it murders men haphazard. If it was applied impartially to all men at the age of thirty, there would be some use in it. As a rule, men become useless lumber after reaching thirty years, so far as their fellow-beings are concerned. If you wish for truth, hope, courage, honesty, generosity, enthusiasm, go to the young. If you seek for selfish cynicism, rotten morality, mischievous plottings, and deceitful humbuggery, seek among the men of years, who "know the world." There are some splendid exceptions to this sad rule nevertheless. Wendell Phillips was the most splendid exception of all. "Age could not wither, nor custom stale" his youthful ardour for justice, truth, liberty, and progress. He belonged not to the tinpot band of social reformers who possess only strength to advocate, or mind to conceive, some petty cause of the hour. All "arrows of the chace" met in the flashing eye of Phillips a sympathetic glance. From the day of his birth in Boston, on Nov. 29, 1811, to the day of death in Boston on Feb. 2, 1884, he was always the soldier of human freedom, and made Boston a beacon-light to all the oppressed souls of earth. The son of the first mayor of Boston, of a family for generations the pride of the town, and himself always the darling of the city, it was yet Wendell Phillips' chief delight to gird at the Yankees. Not the Yankees of London penny-a-liners—anything from an Esquimaux to a Patagonian—but the real Yankees, the New Englanders, the race which has dominated so much the Western world as to overshadow all other peoples. Yet Wendell Phillips was of the sanctum sanctorum of Yankeeedom. But just as his cousin, Oliver Wendell Holmes, has administered a famous home slap in his phrase "the Hub of the Universe," so Phillips chastened what he loved, and exemplified the same characteristic which has made the English race the imperial race, the fact that they are able to have "a searching of heart," and to know and denounce their own faults as no stranger can denounce them. It was comical, a few months ago, to see the strange incapacity of a Frenchman to understand how an English playwright could savagely satirize his own race to the advantage of a foreigner. No man but an Englishman or a Yankee can understand this proud pre-eminence. No real Englishman or no real New Englander ever boasts about the achievements of his people. It all speaks for itself. It is their swarm of penurious parasites of all nationalities who, in both the Old and the New worlds, do all the bombastic parading of achievements they are only able to mar and not help, and do not understand. It was this love of criticism of his own people which made Wendell Phillips such a power for good. If there was a wrong to be redressed, he denounced every traitor to his ancestry who in New England condoned the offence. It would have been waste of breath for Wendell Phillips to have addressed a less sensitive or more ignorant constituency, as William Lloyd Garrison found when he tried to teach human rights to the illiterate muckworms of Maryland. Wendell Phillips once remarked that "brains rule the world, and it will be a sad day when brains cease to rule it." This was his guiding principle. He was determined that the brains of lazy permitters of injustice should not rest. In chattel slavery, in wage slavery, in social corruption of all kinds, Wendell Phillips found a life work for his surpassing oratory. It should be the joy of every toiling slave that the most perfect oratory the world has ever known (even Demosthenes and Grattan pale before Phillips) was wholly devoted to his cause. Unlike many famous orators, notably Edmund Burke, Phillips was as great to the favoured ones who had his oratory hot from the mouth as to the student who pores over his recorded utterance. Wendell Phillips, with a visage and person like a Grecian statue, with a voice no favourite of the theatre possessed the equal of for melody and flow, and, above all, with a perfect possession of his whole reasoning faculties at any emergency—with all these splendid attributes Wendell Phillips might have been the idolised pet of all the rich and powerful of earth, and had poured into his lap every gift which a corrupt aristocracy can lavish upon the advocates who sell their genius to the cause of oppression. Instead of this, Wendell Phillips made a free gift of his finest efforts to the cause of the toiling poor. The son of aristocracy he renounced his class, and gave to democracy his life-strength, his courage, and his commanding talents. As a mere youth he hurled into lasting ignominy the cowardly apologists of the murder of Lovejoy. In his early prime he, above all other, made New England too warm for a scurvy politician of any rank who dared advocate the doctrine of human slavery. Giants like Daniel Webster and Edmund Everett, men the equal of whom for forensic strength in pleading any cause which had a shred of argument to cover it could not soon be found, were yet hustled from the pedestals they had disgraced. Nor when mere chattel-slavery went down on the terrible blood-dripping altar, piled with a million of human victims, was Wendell Phillips's life-work yet half accomplished. For the last twenty years of his life his daring tongue sent forth again and again stinging attacks upon the infamies of the wage-slavery system which had replaced the horrors of chattel-slavery. No social question was treated by Wendell Phillips except in the most truth-telling and thoroughly educated spirit. Superficial critics spoke of his arguments as "brilliant" and "apparently convincing"; for they possessed no power to answer them, and wished to lead the mob to infer that these arguments were only for effect. As a fact, a record of Wendell Phillips utterances on the labour question is a text-book of scientific exactness and permanent value. Above all things, Wendell Phillips repudiated officialdom and mere political place-hunting. He was a democratic communist of the natural type, and a thorough-paced advocate of individual liberty and responsibility. He never would take an office himself, and probably formed the only instance of a man for whom the officials of his country suspended their labours in honour of his death, when he had never been ought but a private citizen. Perhaps the most important factor in Phillips's usefulness to humanity was the beauty of his private life. The wife of his youth, who had inspired and sustained him in his noblest purposes, became in age a confirmed invalid, entailing long years of the most chivalrous yet enslaving devotion from the great orator. He who above all others broke the forced shackles from humanity, yet presented the most heroic picture of that ennobling slavery which comes from devotion to those we love.

L. W.

THE SOCIAL PIPE.—Somebody who is not particularly pressed for time has been making a lot of tobacco statistics. He says the total consumption of tobacco in Europe may be put down at an average of 2½lb a head. In the Netherlands the proportion is a little over 7lb., in Austria-Hungary 3½lb., in Denmark 3½lb., in Switzerland 3½lb., in Belgium 3½lb., in Germany 3lb., in Norway 2½lb., in France 2½lb., in Sweden nearly 2lb., in Spain 1½lb., in Great Britain and Ireland 1½lb., in Italy 1½lb., and in Russia 1½lb. In the United States the proportion is greater than that of any European country except Holland; it amounts to 4½lb. The largest revenues derived from tobacco are those of France, Great Britain, Austria-Hungary, and then Spain and Italy.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

FRANCE.

Boulangier has, of course as was expected, been returned for the Seine Department, and by a big majority too. All the Republicans, together with the sham Socialists of the Parti ouvrier, have not been able to avert from Paris the ominous threat of Caesarism. We do not know what he is likely to do, but certainly the 17,000 men who have voted for Boulé, as representing Social Revolution, are not going to allow the wholesale murderer of the Communards in 1871 to have his own way towards dictatorship and reaction. At any rate the contest has already done this much: the Floquet ministry is near its death, and the Premier and his colleagues informed the President that they were prepared to resign, should M. Carnot consider their departure from office a step calculated to improve the chances of overcoming the difficulties which might be apprehended. The first difficulty France will have to face will be the dissolution of the Chamber, which may be the first step towards Revolution. If so, then all is well that ends well.

GERMANY.

A bit of fun comes from Germany. In the neighbourhood of Offenburg, where an election for the Reichstag took place some days ago, the burgo-master of a small village posted on the walls of his little kingdom the following announcement: "All those who shall vote in favour of the Socialist candidate, Adolf Geck, will be fined one thousand marks, or be imprisoned for six months!" That burgo-master is much more of a statesman than Bismarck, he knows best how to get rid of these unpleasant people. He is a contributor to the Kladderadatsch, or to the Kikerikiki, no doubt!

At Magdeburg, several arrests of Socialists have been made during the last fortnight. Hundreds of revolutionary leaflets have been distributed, and those arrested have been caught whilst doing their deserving work. In some other places of the "beloved Fatherland," thousands and thousands of leaflets have found their way to the reader without any mishap to the distributors.

At Kottbus, comrades Flassig and Haidle were sentenced to six and four months of jail respectively, for having distributed a quantity of electoral leaflets, which were merely announcements for the Socialist candidates. Lieb Vaterland, magst ruhig sein!

BELGIUM.

Our Belgian comrades, Georges Defuisseaux, Laloï, Maroille, and others, are still in jail, waiting till the magistrates have finished their shameful work of "constructive" plot against them. Nothing has been found until now to construct a plot with, but since the Nupkins have been ordered to make discoveries, they will no doubt at last come forward with some flimsy indictment good enough at any rate to make safe once more "religion, order, family, property," and all the rest of bourgeois institutions. Whilst they are busy at work, they generously distribute weeks and months of imprisonment among the "minor" offenders of the last strikes.

Comrade Paul Gille has been sentenced by the Court of Assize at Brussels to six months imprisonment for the mere utterance of his opinion towards the police, for his sole offence has been to have shouted, "A bas la police!" The police, of course, had as usual interfered with the right of public gathering and knocked down some Socialists, who were parading through the streets as they had a perfect right to do. But since Bismarck reigns supreme in Belgium, once so proud of its sense of freedom, all liberties are trampled under foot by the livery-men of the Iron Chancellor.

The Executive Council of the Parti ouvrier has issued a circular to all their branches and affiliated bodies, convening them to their annual general Congress, which is to be held at Jolimont, in the province of Hainault, on 21st and 22nd of April next.

Besides the Parti ouvrier, numerous Anarchist groups are formed throughout Belgium, especially at Brussels, Louvain, Antwerp, Liege, Verviers, and other places, and very interesting discussions are carried on between the Socialists and themselves, La Révolte every now and then giving information about these meetings.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

No less than two hundred and thirty newspapers are now prohibited in the land of the reactionary Hapsburgs, namely, sixty-seven written in the Italian tongue, forty-eight in German, twenty-nine in Servian, twenty-four in Hungarian, twenty-two in Roumanian, three in Russian, and one in Turkish. Most of these publications are either Socialistic or advanced Radical.

Since our Austrian comrades have held their Congress at Hainfeldt, numerous arrests have taken place. At Fünfhaus ten Socialists have been arrested, as we told our readers last week; seventeen at Ottakring, five at Prague, two at Brünn, etc., etc. As a set-off, comrade Adler, editor of Gleichheit, and three other Socialists, against whom a charge of secret conspiracy had been constructed, have been dismissed.

RUSSIA.

In spite of all that has been said by the bourgeois press regarding the dreadful railway accident of Borki, where the Russian autocrat and his family have "wonderfully escaped death through the benevolence of Almighty God," whose magnanimity, however, did not extend to thirty-seven persons of the imperial suite who were killed, the "accident" has now proved to have been the result of a Nihilist attempt. Accordingly, the officials of the railway, who at first were only dismissed, and the authors of the inquiry, who simply concluded their report by attributing the whole affair to a mere accident, have been arrested. But the Nihilists connected with the attempt have not been found out, and it is already stated that the principal organiser of the conspiracy has happily passed the frontier of his despotic fatherland. We wish the same good luck to all those concerned in the holy work of freeing Russia.

SPAIN.

CUBA.—HAVANNAH.—Propaganda for the freedom of labour goes on with a certain briskness in this region. A "section of working shoemakers," for instance, issues a sturdy and enthusiastic manifesto to their fellow-workers, on the occasion of their own successful strike in this city, followed by one in the same trade in the neighbouring town of Guanaboa. Among several sensible remarks on the present position and future of labour, the circular points out that co-operation is not the end-all, be-all, to be tried for: and that in England, where it has gained so distinct a position, the workers as a whole are pretty much where those of other countries are. The co-operation and organization of the workers as a means towards the one especial end, they of course advocate warmly, and are trying to stir up their comrades in the island to a similar feeling of esprit de corps.

M. M.

SOCIALISM IN SOUTH AMERICA.

You will be glad to hear that in this country the workers have begun to bestir themselves. Until about two months ago the capitalists in general lived in a fools' paradise, always repeating that, whatever might occur elsewhere, we were ages away from strikes or anything of the sort in Buenos Ayres. But any one who directed the slightest attention to the matter knew well that the condition of the workers had become unbearable. Everything was booming for the exploiters, while the wages of the workers had risen nothing, and the paper money was depreciated to the extent of 45 to 50 per cent. Rents at the same time had risen enormously, and a tremendous increase in municipal taxation on food (!) had made meat, it was said, as dear as in London,—this in a country where meat is looked upon as almost worthless.

But suddenly the skilled workers of the Southern Railway (an English company) declared that they were no longer able to bear it, and demanded that their wages should be paid in gold, and as the company, ever since the depreciation of the paper money, now about five years, had charged for everything at the price of gold, it seemed reasonable they should do so after being robbed of 40 or 50 per cent. for five years. They were refused, of course, and went out on strike. They met to consult among themselves in a public square, and were clubbed and about 120 of them taken prisoners. The constitution of this "free" country of course guarantees the right of public-meeting; naturally it must be on a level in everything with the most advanced countries, as they say, but somehow or another the police have orders to disperse by force any meeting, notice of which has not been given twenty-four hours previously, and permission obtained to hold it!

Well, after great reluctance, and all the while declaring that the masters had the welfare of the workers deeply at heart, the company agreed to give an increase of 25 per cent., and the workers accepted it. Since then, however, it has been a scene of fresh strikes every day, and at present the capitalists are in a most pleasing state of annoyance and even fright, for the matter had not gone far when they found out that there were large numbers of Socialists among the workers, and now the theme of eloquent leading articles of the most powerful "organs" is the injury done to the workers by the Socialists who have induced them to strike! As if starvation was not good enough incentive!

The Germans have a club some years established, and I believe it has a good number of members, though the Germans are few compared with other nationalities in Buenos Ayres. A public meeting was called last Sunday at the German Club, in order, as the announcement stated, to discuss the question of strikes. It was attended by workmen, Socialists and non-Socialists, of all nationalities, and also by some members of a masters' association, called the Industrial Club.

The discussion was opened by our comrade Enrique Malatesta, who is a thorough and active Anarchist, and who has tried twice to establish a paper in Buenos Ayres in the last four years. He spoke so well that even the capitalists present learned something, and they confessed in their papers next day that he was not quite a raving maniac, but seemed to have some reason for what he said. He was followed by others in Spanish, French, and Italian, many of whom spoke out vigorously the language of Anarchism. The members of the Industrial Club found themselves, as they thought, in a hornets' nest; the air smelt of dynamite. They hastened to clear out, and now every day the capitalist papers are doing good propaganda work by raving at us like wild bulls—or asses. On Tuesday last La Prensa, which disputes with one other paper here (La Nación) the place of the Times of this Republic, came out with a leader attacking Socialists and workmen all round in the most furious style. It said that all was the work of the Socialists, and that all the latter were foreigners without one exception, as it was impossible for any one to become Socialist on the soil of this country; also that if workmen turned Socialists they would all be turned out of the country and that capitalists in any case would soon get so disgusted if striking continued that they would withdraw their capital and go to speculate!!

Perhaps you will scarcely believe that the ignorance of the writer could go so far, but so it is written, and I preserve it in the original for future reference. I have written to the paper showing what a fool the writer is, but I feel certain my letter will not be published. I told him, among other things, the fact that I am acquainted with many Argentines who understand Socialism, and among them one of the few literary men the country can boast of has written a pamphlet entirely Socialistic in spirit, and has declared himself to me to be a Socialist.

On the other hand, El Correo Espanol which is the "organ" of the Spaniards, adopted a very different tone. It admitted that there was abundant reason why workmen should combine to try and improve their condition, as they were not able to live at present, and that the condition of the workers here, with all that the other papers are so constantly saying of their happiness, was actually worse than in Europe,—at least, it said, it could answer for Spain.

Since writing the above, I have seen Malatesta, and he tells me the chief of police sent for him a few days ago and said that for the future the meeting of the Anarchists which is held every week would be attended by a policeman! This is liberty as understood in this Republic!

Malatesta desires me to send his fraternal salutations to Dr. Merlino and Krapotkine, with whom he has been a fellow soldier in the Cause.—Yours fraternally,

JOHN CREAGHE
(Physician and Surgeon).

Lujan, Provincia de Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, Nov. 30, 1888.

OUT OF WORK MEMBERS.

Two painters, one labourer, and a carriage trimmer (Hammersmith Branch).

One member who would be glad of odd jobs, another in want of situation as bootmaker (Clerkenwell Branch).

THE SYNDICATE SYSTEM OF "SKINNING THE LOUSE."—A Workington correspondent writes to the Glasgow Herald, January 26th:—"It is reported that a London Syndicate have made important offers to Cumberland mine-owners for the sale of their iron ore mines in the West Cumberland district, and that for one property £130,000 has been offered, and for another £100,000. These offers are now under consideration of the respective firms."

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The Lurgan hem-stitchers are still out, and show no signs of yielding.

RAILWAYMEN.—At Killylea Station on the Great Northern of Ireland, the station-master gets 16s. per week, less rent and superannuation.

DUNDEE MILLWORKERS.—At a meeting on 24th of January, of the Dundee mill and factory operatives, presided over by the Rev. Henry Williamson, it was agreed to request the employers to grant another advance of 5 per cent. on wages.

STRIKE AT GREENOCK.—The holeborers engaged in the shipbuilding yard of Messrs. Caird and Co., Greenock, have struck work for an increase in the rate of wages. The carpenter's labourers in the employment of Messrs. Russell and Co. have also demanded an advance of wages.

SMITH'S WAGES ON THE WEAR.—The smiths employed in the Wear shipyards have lodged a notice with the secretary of the Wear Shipbuilders' Association, claiming an advance of 3s. on time wages and 12½ per cent. on piece prices. The matter will be dealt with by the Conciliation Board.

FALKIRK PIPE-MOULDERS' STRIKE.—The strike of the pipe-moulders in and around Falkirk still continues. It has now lasted ten weeks, and some of the strikers have to appear in a court of "law"—not justice—for accompanying a few "scabs" on their way from work with singing and hooting.

YORKSHIRE MINERS.—The strikers at Church Lane Colliery, Dodworth (1,000), Gawthorpe Colliery (150), Stanley Colliery (about 250), are still holding out against the bosses' refusal to grant the generally conceded 10 per cent. They are receiving strike pay from the Association, and also the result of a voluntary weekly levy of 3d. per member throughout the county.

DUNDEE AND LEITH SEAMEN.—Four seamen arrived at Dundee last week to join the American Arrow Line steamer "Crystal." They had engaged at £4 per month, which is 5s. less than the wages demanded in Dundee. On their arrival they were met by the officials of the Dundee Sailors' Union, who treated them to breakfast and persuaded them to return to Leith. Later in the day, however, four "rats" were secured at Montrose at £4 per month.

STAFFORDSHIRE MINERS.—After speaking of the improved trade here, the Labour Tribune correspondent goes on to say that some of the pits "are so full of men that in some cases they cannot get 2s. a day. One man has worked six days for 7s. I know of one case where four men, personally known to me—men who can do a day's work with most men—earned for twenty turns' work the magnificent sum of £2 12s., charge less 2s. 9d., leaving a total to be divided among the men of £2 9s. 3d."

COLLIERY ENGINE-KEEPERS.—At a largely attended meeting of colliery engine-keepers in the Cambuslang and Rutherglen districts, after discussing their low wages (3½d. and 4l. per hour), their long hours and the great responsibility placed upon them, it was unanimously agreed to approach the managers and solicit an advance of 3d. per shift. The Fife colliery engine-keepers have resolved to enter into negotiations with the engine-keepers of the West of Scotland and the Lothians with a view to amalgamation.

GLASGOW TRADES' COUNCIL.—At last week's meeting the delegate of the Seamen's Association reported that the demands of the men had been granted, and the strike had consequently terminated. Mr. Elliot moved a motion demanding the resignation of Mr. Broadhurst, M.P., as secretary of the Parliamentary Bills Committee, on account of his refusing to put a question in Parliament regarding an accident in one of the public works in England at the request of Mr. Champion, which was discussed and adjourned.

SAILORS.—The National Amalgamated Sailors' and Firemen's Union is going ahead. A few days ago it was 7,000 strong; since then two more branches have been formed—one at Cork, the other at Hull—and the membership has risen to 11,000. The increase is going on at the rate of 1,700 per week, and in every port at which it has been established sailors have gained the union rate of wages. This wonderful growth leads us to hope that it will not long remain a merely national organisation, but have to put International to its name.

IRISH TRADE UNIONISTS.—An association known as "The Irish Federated Trade and Labour Union," has issued a circular to all the labour associations in Ireland, in which its objects are stated to be: 1. To unite the various trade and labour organisations in Ireland into one organisation governed by a central body, holding congresses annually, or bi-annually, for the better protection of their interests, and the interest of Irish manufactures generally. 2. To establish a journal having for its sole purpose the furthering of the views of the governing body, by whom it shall be directly controlled. 3. To procure representation in Parliament and in local governing bodies. 4. To establish a bureau of correspondence, to which a list of contracts about to be competed for may be supplied; so that the governing body shall be able, if circumstances permit, to bring public opinion to bear on the manner in which such contracts may be disposed of. John Ward is chairman and T. J. O'Reilly and P. Belton are hon. secretaries. The committee rooms are at 33 Denmark Street, Dublin.

MIDLAND IRON AND STEEL WAGES BOARD.—The award has been made by Sir Thomas Martineau, president of the Board, with regard to the latest application for higher wages, saying that by an award dated October 5, 1888, it was directed that from October 20 puddlers' wages should be 7s. 3d. per ton; that wages of mill and forge men should be regulated by the same rate; and that award should be subject to one month's notice, to be given at the end of any week by either side of the Board; that about November 2 the operatives' secretary duly gave notice that the operatives would require the Board to reconsider the wages fixed by said award, with the view of an advance. In consequence of notice, negotiations took place between representatives of employers and operatives, but they failed to agree, and accordingly it was remitted to the president as arbitrator. A meeting took place before him at the Council House, Birmingham, on Monday January 7, when the operatives claimed that puddlers' wages should be increased 7½ per cent. Having carefully considered the subject, on the 21st the president made his award as follows: 1. That puddlers' wages shall continue at 7s. 3d. per ton until the 2nd day of February 1889. 2. That from and after that date until the 30th day of June 1889, puddlers' wages shall be 7s. 6d. per ton. 3. That wages of mill and forge men shall be regulated by the above rate in the same manner as heretofore. 4. That from and after the 30th day of June, 1889, the above award shall be subject to one month's notice, to be given at the end of any week by either side of the Board.

LONDON COMPOSITORS DECLARE FOR EIGHT HOURS.—The compositors of London have been polled on the eight hours question. The secretary sent out 5,075 papers asking the question, "Are you in favour of an eight hours working day?" There were 3,984 papers returned; 2,201 votes were given in favour of the proposition and 1,411 against it, while 372 remained neutral. There were 1,062 papers unaccounted for and 29 were informal. To the question, "Are you in favour of it being obtained by Act of Parliament?" 1,578 answered yes; 561 no, and 672 were neutral.

SHOE TRADE.—Delegates representing 18,000 shoe rivetters and finishers of the National Trade Union held a conference at Leicester on 21st, to consider course to be adopted owing to increasing introduction of machinery. Delegates from London, Manchester, Leeds, Liverpool, Glasgow, and other large towns took part in a protracted discussion. Special reference was made to the difficulties created by the Union rules, owing to their prohibiting payment by the day except over an entire establishment, and the desirability of making them more elastic, so as to suit the special requirements of increased machinery, was pointed out.

SCOTCH COLLIERIES.—The movement throughout Scotland amongst the colliers for an advance of 6d. a day on their present wages is marked by a weak yammering feverishness. The associated masters in the west have conceded 17½ per cent. in all from the bottom rates; but it must be remembered that the Scotch colliers, before the upward movement, had been punished with a break of 7½ per cent., which their fellow-workers in England did not get; and even now the highest paid of the Scotch colliers are just about equal to the lowest paid colliers in England. There is only one district in England which works longer hours than Scotland. The want of unity amongst the Scotch miners is visited on them by the masters with a corresponding refusal to concede the advances in wages which the price of their product, even under the present unjustifiable burdens, warrants. Meetings amongst the miners in all the districts are numerous, but jealousy amongst the leaders paralyses any force of action the present favourable opportunity germinates. An advance of 6d. per day, which is equivalent to 10 per cent., has been conceded to the Airdrie miners. This makes 20 per cent. advance to them since November last. The men at Eaton Colliery, belonging to the Morningside Coal Company, struck for a few days, and received an advance of 6d. on their day. Threats of "drastic measures" if the 6d. a day be not conceded forthwith have been uttered by the men of the Mid and East Lothian Miners' Association, the Lanarkshire miners, the Stirlingshire miners, the Ayrshire miners, and the Clackmannanshire miners. The Fife men were showing some signs of probable action lately, but they have now succumbed on the masters promising an increase of 10 per cent. to take effect on 9th February. This gives the Fifers a total advance of 15 per cent., leaving them still behind all other districts in Scotland.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

OWEN BROWN, son of John Brown, of Ossawatimie, and last survivor of the Harper's Ferry insurrection, died last week and was buried at Pasadena, Cal., on January 12th. He was 74 years old. The last part of his life he lived like a hermit on a remote summit of the Sierra Madre Mountains, known as Brown's Peak.

The great "Q" strike of last year is settled at last. The basis of the settlement is that the company will not blacklist any of the engineers and firemen who were concerned in the strike, and will assist all those who have not been guilty of violence, or any other so-called improper conduct, in finding employment.

The last kick against T. V. Powderly's Knights of Labour has been dealt. Four of the surviving five of the original seven founders of the order have issued a manifesto against Powderly, and call upon all honest Knights to save the labour movement from destruction through corruption.

The "clearing house" scheme of the railroads, which I reported in detail in a previous letter, seems to have been impracticable. All the shareholders, the managers, and other officials of the American railroads, are yearning for concentration, for a trust. But as there can in one trust only be one leading mind, so the different presidents are fighting for this "elevated" position. All chances, of course, are that if the organisation is perfected, Jay Gould will be the ruling spirit. On the 10th inst., New York leading bankers, and the presidents of most of the railroads of the United States, met in New York city, and a plan was drawn up for an organisation embodying as its cardinal principles the maintenance of rates and the arbitration of disputes among the railroads west of Chicago. The new plan is similar to the "clearing house" scheme. At the same meeting the presidents of the Eastern roads resolved to form a similar association. The next day the presidents met again, and agreed to appoint an advisory committee of five to exercise a general supervision over the railroad traffic of the country, one member to represent the Eastern trunk lines, one the Western roads, one the Southern roads, one the North-western roads, and one the South-western roads. It is said that this committee is not to have any executive power, but is expected to exert a strong "moral" influence on the roads. One of the greatest difficulties the railroad men will have to meet in forming their trust, is the arrangement of a system of uniform classification. Under the present system the tariffs are of a rather chaotic nature, and changeable from day to day. But I am strongly of opinion that before this year is ended, the combination of the United States railroads will be completed, and then we will be confronted with the most gigantic monster organisation.

Claus Spreckels, jun., the California sugar king, has won his case against the Eastern Sugar Trust, ostensibly fought in the interest of the people of the State of New York. On the 9th inst., Judge Barrett, of the New York Supreme Court, decided that the North River Sugar Refining Company had forfeited its charter for having sold out to the sugar combination. He also pronounced the sugar trust illegal, justifying this action by saying: "It (the trust) comes as near to creating an absolute monopoly as is possible under the social, political, and economical conditions of to-day. If allowed to thrive and become general, it must inevitably lead to the oppression of the people and ultimately to the subversion of their political rights." The lawyers in the interest of the sugar trust are trying to get a stay of proceedings. The object of this is to prevent the appointment of a receiver to wind up the affairs of the North Side River Company, until the defendants have time to appeal to the Court of Appeals and get a decision. Great is the rejoicing among the faithful, i.e., the petite bourgeoisie and the aristocrats of labour over this decision. They exclaim, piously screwing up their eyes heavenward: "There are judges yet in America!" This is all nonsense. It is foolish to fight against combination. We are and must be going fast in the direction of combination, competition having proved to be a wasteful mode of production. It is just like fighting against evolution to fight against the trusts. Fighting against them will do no good, but we must expropriate the owners of trusts and begin working combined capital in the interest of the community. There is one thing I have not been able to find out as yet, and that is, "Why did Judge Barrett declare trusts in general as illegal?" I know the sugar trust was combated in the interest of Claus Spreckels, jun., but this is not a complete explanation of the judges action. Some people say he did it in the interest of public morals. That's idiotic indeed, because public morals in the States are identical with—Boodle. Perhaps in my next letter I shall be able to clear up the mystery.

The Chicago Times is continuing its able and brilliant attack on the Chicago police. Bonfield has now also been drawn into the controversy. All the eastern newspapers never mention the affair at all. Mum is the word for them. The Indianapolis Sentinel, a capitalistic paper par excellence, says in an editorial: "Bonfield is a brute who has no more conception than one of the Czar's jailers of the nature of a free government. His campaign against Anarchy has been a crusade of fraud and false pretences, conducted with a view solely to his own glorification and without any regard for private rights or the public welfare. It was to his precipitancy and bloodthirstiness that the Haymarket slaughter was chiefly due, and the part he played in the prosecution of the men accused of complicity in that affair ought to cover his name with infamy for all time to come. Bonfield will find that fighting the Chicago Times is a very different matter from fighting a few penniless and friendless foreigners. We have no doubt that the Times will bring his inglorious official career to a speedy period." Well, is "our silence going to be more powerful than our speeches have been"?

On the 11th inst. Bonfield sent the following letter to the Times:

"To the Chicago Times and J. J. West, its editor-in-chief, and Joseph R. Dunlop, one of its editors.—For several days past the columns of the Chicago Times have contained articles charging me with gross corruption in my official position in the police department of this city. In reference to these charges I have invoked the courts of the country to determine their truth or falsity. I have been attacked not only as a man and a citizen, but as an officer of the municipal government, and therefore not only my own individual right but to a great extent the interests of the community are involved. J. J. West and Joseph R. Dunlop have this day waived an examination which would have disclosed the real truth. In the nature of things the decision of the court cannot be rendered in all probability for several months. I now, therefore, propose to you that the question of my individual guilt or innocence of corruption charged against me in each and all of your articles since the third day of January, 1889, be submitted without delay to three judges of the Circuit Court of Cook County. I propose that the three judges be named for the purpose indicated by all the judges of that court; that the three judges hear all the testimony which may be adduced on either side and render their decision. If their decision or that of two of them has the effect of sustaining any one of your charges of receiving stolen property or assisting or colluding or conniving with any member of the police force in receiving or of concealing stolen property, or in attempting in any way to suppress any evidence of such receiving by any member of the police or any other person, or of any collusion with gamblers, or any other criminal class, or any criminal, or of any taking of bribes or bribe under any guise, or of any dishonesty, or any dishonest act or action in my official position, then I will at once dismiss each and every civil suit in which I am the plaintiff now pending in the Circuit Court and will recommend to the State's Attorney to enter a noke prosequi as to the criminal charges against J. J. West and Joseph R. Dunlop now pending in the Criminal Court of Cook County. I await your answer.—JOHN BONFIELD. I join in the above letter and make the same proposition for myself which Mr. Bonfield makes as to himself.—MICHAEL J. SCHAACK."

Bonfield had evidently studied the Parnell investigation bubble. But the Times was not to be caught napping. In an editorial it says: "It would be the height of folly to permit a subterfuge of this character to betray the paper into a free-for-all, go-as-you-please contest for the police to corral and intimidate proposed witnesses, and without a tribunal legally constituted to try the case. The plan proposed seeks to stop the investigation of the Times at this point, while every day accumulates new and important facts substantiated by reliable witnesses." When the case of Bonfield v. the Times was called in the police-courts the lawyers of the paper waived examination and so the matter will go to a higher court.

Newark, N.J., January 15, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

THE MEETING AT MILAN.

Of late the whole energy of the Labour movement has been absorbed by the agitation for the European peace and disarmament. After a great number of demonstrations all over the country, a monster meeting was held on the 13th of January, at Milano, in the Theatre Dal Verne. It was not international as intended, as there were only French delegates, but it was at any rate imposing on account of the number of adherents. More than seven hundred Italian and French societies, mostly of working men, had sent their representatives. It is therefore to be regretted that the revolutionary idea did not dominate the resolutions, though it found vent in many speeches and an enthusiastic reception in the assembly. The chair was taken by Pantano, a Radical member of the Italian Parliament, with socialistic leanings, and our comrade Cipriani; and as honorary presidents, Anatole de la Forge, Liebknecht, and Saffi were nominated. The resolution arrived at demands: the suppression of the military system, international simultaneous disarmament and international arbitration, and calls on the nations to oppose by all means the criminal conspiracies of those who desire and prepare for war. What these means are, the Radical leaders of the concern wisely and cautiously did not state. To their great dismay, some Socialist speakers however pointed them out forcibly, as well as the inconsistency with which these soft-fighting Republicans ask for peace amongst the nations, whilst they do not object to the continuous murderous warfare that is going on in our present society. Those who deny this war, or declare it inevitable, and protest at the same time their love of peace, are either idiots or hypocrites.

The Milan meeting was at any rate a new proof of the goodwill existing between the working classes of all nations, and an indignant expression of disgust of the Italian workers at the infamous part that their government is disposed to play in the forthcoming monarchical war against republican France.

H. SCH.

NOTICE TO MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE.—Propaganda Committee meets on Tuesday, February 5th, at 8.30 p.m., to further consider Samuel's leaflet, "A Straight Talk to Working-men," and other important business. Elocution Class.—At the conclusion of business of the Committee, Brooks will open a discussion on "The Great French Revolution of 1789." All members who are interested in the propaganda are asked to attend. D. J. NICOLL.

THE SPIRIT OF REVOLT.

FROM A SONG OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR.

WANT a weapon? Gather a brick,
Club or cudgel, or stone or stick;
Anything with a blade or butt,
Anything that can cleave or cut.

Anything heavy, or hard, or keen!
Any sort of slaying machine!
Anything with a willing mind
And the steady arm of a man behind.

Want a weapon? Why, capture one!
Every soldier has got a gun,
Belt and bayonet, bright and new;
Kill a soldier and capture two!

Shoulder to shoulder, son and sire!
All! call all! to the feast of fire!
Mother and maiden, and children brave;
A common triumph or single grave.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Library.—The Library is open to members of the Socialist League and affiliated bodies. LIBRARY CATALOGUE, containing the Rules, 2d. D. J. NICOLL and W. BLUNDELL are the Librarians.

Executive.—At Council meeting, Jan. 28th, upon a discussion re Commonweal, it was decided to get the opinion of the members at their next London meeting on 4th inst.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Membership Cards can now be had by the Branches at 9d. per dozen from Central Office.

The Article, published in No. 152 of Weal, Dec. 8th, 1888, addressed to "Working Women and Girls" is now being issued by the Propagandist Committee in leaflet form for distribution, at 3s. 6d. per 1,000.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, Feb. 4, 1889, at 13, Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888.—Clerkenwell, to December, 1889:—Leicester, to January. Mitcham and North London, to February.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorized to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" PRINTING FUND.

W. Morris (Coleford), 5s.; A. Scheu, 4s.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—Nicoll, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; Knifel, 6d.; J. Presburg, 6d.; H. Davis, 6d.; Blundell, 6d.; J. Lane, 5s.; Tilley, 1s.; Seglie, 6d.; Solomon, 6d.; R. Turner, 6d.; J. Turner, 6d.; Leatham, 6d.; Morris Wess, 1s.; Kitz, 6d.; J. Morris, 7s.; B. W., 6d.; and Samuels, 1s.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.—Regents Park—Parker and Cantwell spoke. Good sale of Weals. Hyde Park—Nicoll, Parker, Cores, and Hicks spoke. Large audiences. Songs went off well. March in procession to Clerkenwell Green, escorted by police. Clerkenwell Green—Parker, Brookes, and McCormack spoke. After which comrades and friends adjourned to 13, Farringdon Road, to hear lecture.

CLERKENWELL.—On Sunday evening, at 8.30 p.m., Cores in the chair. J. Turner lectured on "How to obtain Anarchist Socialism without the aid of Parliamentary Government." Very good discussion followed of members and visitors, which were very ably answered by the lecturer. Commonweal sold well, and 2s. 6d. collected.—S. P.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road, Sunday morning, at 11.30. Speakers, Dean, Fox, Bullock, Davis, Maughan, and A. J. Smith. Choir sang during meeting. Good meeting also at Weltje Road in evening at 7. Speakers, Lyne junr., Dean, Bullock, and Beasley. Choir assisted. Morris lectured at Kelmscott House, at 8, in place of advertised lecturer, who was ill.—G. M.

NORTH LONDON.—On Friday a good debate on "The Social Democratic Programme," took place between Samuel (S.L.) and White (S.D.F.). There was a good attendance and much interest shown.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting, on 21st, Leatham read lecture on "The Modern Revolution," Cooper in chair, and discussion carried on by Barron, Duncan, and Slater. In spite of miserable weather, usual meeting held at Castle Street, Saturday night, Duncan and Leatham addressing large and boisterously-enthusiastic crowd. Several questions at close. Choir sang several songs.—L.

GLASGOW.—On Wednesday evening Dan McCulloch read his paper on "Education, what it is, and what it should be," to the Maxwell Parish Church Literary Society. A discussion followed, which showed that there is a deal of heathenish notions on social matters surviving in the minds of those spiritually-minded young Christians. On Sunday, at 2.30, Glasier and Joe Burgoyne spoke on Jail Square, and at 5 o'clock Burgoyne, Glasier, and Gilbert spoke at Paisley Road Toll. There were good audiences at both meetings.

NORWICH.—Sunday afternoon open-air meeting held in Market Place for awhile, and then adjourned to the Gordon Hall to consider whether arrangements could be made for Mowbray to stay here; several suggestions made. In evening a general meeting of members was held, a large number turned up; lengthy discussion took place upon report of a Special Committee appointed to consider the causes of the dissension existing in the Branch. Good sale of Commonweal.

YARMOUTH.—A good meeting held on Sunday afternoon; questions asked and answered to the satisfaction of the audience. On explaining that we should have assistance from Norwich but for expense, the people immediately made a collection to cover railway fare of a speaker.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Olerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (1/2-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card, to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30 p.m.
Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Sunday February 3, at 8 p.m., Graham Wallas (Fabian), "The French Revolution of 1848."
Hackney.—Secretary, E. Lefevre, 14 Goldsmiths Sq., Goldsmiths Row, Hackney Road.
Hammersmith.—Kelmecott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday February 3, at 8 p.m., G. B. Shaw (Fabian Society), "National Wealth." Wednesday 6th, at 8 p.m., Rev. Stewart D. Headlam, "Christian Socialism."
Hoxton.—12, Basing Place, Kingsland Rd. Business meetings held every Friday evening at 9 o'clock.
London Fields.—All communications, etc., to Mrs. G. G. Schack, 26 Cawley Road, South Hackney.
Mitcham.—Meets every Sunday, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road, at 11 a.m.
Mile-end and Bethnal Green.—95 Boston St., Hackney Road.
North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Friday February 8, Discussion.
Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.
Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.
Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Secretary, P. Barron, 14 Ann Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.
Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.
Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meeting every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secy.
Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.
Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street. All persons desirous of joining are requested to communicate with A. Coulon at above address.
Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.
Galashiels (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secy.
Gallatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn St.
Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.—SPECIAL NOTICE.—William Morris will lecture on "The Society of the Future" in the Albion Hall, on Sunday 10th February, at 7 o'clock. Admission: body of hall, collection at door; gallery, 6d.
Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour St. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.
Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Rd. and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.
Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.
Norwich.—Friday 1st, at 8.30, Members' Meeting: comrades are requested to attend for important business, election of officers. Sunday, at 8, Gordon Hall. Monday, Hall open from 8. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday Thursday, and Friday, Hall open from 8 until 10.30. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Assoc.
Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25 1/2 Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.
Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.
West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.
Yarmouth.—All desiring to join branch in course of formation here should communicate with C. Reynolds, Row 45, George Street, who is acting as Secretary pro tem.

All persons who sympathise with the views of the Socialist League are earnestly invited to communicate with the above addresses, and if possible help us in preparing for the birth of a true society, based on equality, brotherhood, and freedom for all.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 3.

11.30...Latimer Road Station ...Hammersmith Branch
11.30...Regent's ParkNicoll
11.30...Walham Green, opp. Station.....The Branch
3.30...Hyde ParkParker
7.30...Broad Street, SohoThe Branch
7.30...Clerkenwell GreenCores
7.30...Weltje Rd., Ravenscourt Pk.....Hammersmith

Tuesday.

8.30...Fulham—back of Walham Green Ch. ...Branch

EAST END.

SUNDAY 3.

Leman Street, Shadwell 11 ...J. Turner.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.
Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.
Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.
Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3.
Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

THE SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—The Committee will meet at 63 Lincoln's Inn Fields, on Saturday Feb. 1 at 7.30 p.m. Members please send their subscription cards to the Secretary for audit.

LEICESTER.—A course of lectures on "Socialism, its Aims and Principles" is being delivered in Leicester Secular Hall. The sixth lecture will be delivered on Sunday February 10th by Annie Besant—subject, "Industry under Socialism."

EAST-END PROPAGANDA.—Please note.—A united meeting of members of the Hackney, London Fields, and Mile-end and Bethnal Green Branches will be held at 26 Cawley Road, South Hackney, on Sunday February 3rd, at 4.15 p.m.

SOUTH LONDON.—Friends who will help to establish a Branch of the Socialist League in South London will please place themselves in communication with C. Henze, 41 Bolton Street, Thomas Street, Kennington Park, S.E., or by letter to H. Hopkins, 17 Gairloch Road, Shenley Road, Peckham, S.E.

DRUM AND FIFE BAND.—Next meeting will be held at 13 Farringdon Road, Sunday February 3, at 7 p.m. Contributions in aid of the funds are urgently needed, and should be forwarded to E. Turner, treasurer, care of F. Kitz, 13 Farringdon Rd. Any comrade capable of taking the post of instructor to the Band is requested to communicate with G. Cores, Secretary pro tem., Farringdon Road.

IPSWICH LABOUR REFORM LEAGUE.—Pioneer Club, Theatre Yard, Tacket Street.—A good discussion was opened here last Sunday by Creed, on "Has Machinery Lessened Labour?" There was a fair attendance and a very good discussion, in which Thomas, White, Spinks, Brown, Riches, Woodhouse, the Steward, and F. Charles (of London, in the chair) took part. The new ideas are steadily and surely making headway here. Next Sunday a debate between Thomas and Spinks on "Is a Representative Government Necessary?"

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonwealth.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE LITERATURE.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). 1d.
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 3d.; Large paper, 6d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. 1d.
"All for the Cause!" Song. Words by William Morris; Music by E. Belfort Bax. 4to, 4 pp. 6d. per dozen, 4s. 6d.
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. 6d.

CHICAGO COMMEMORATION COMMITTEE. STATEMENT OF ACCOUNT. RECEIPTS: Donations from Clubs and Branches... 15 12 7; Collections and Donations as per Commonwealth at Chicago Meetings... 7 10 4; Profit on Literature Sold... 2 5 0; Sale of Mrs. Parsons' Portrait... 2 9 5; Sale of Tickets for Tea... 11 9 0; By Deficit... 17 19 2 1/2; Total Receipts... £76 4 0. EXPENDITURE: Mrs. Parsons' Travelling Expenses... 39 6 2; Hire of Halls... 7 7 0; Printing of Posters, Handbills, Mrs. Parsons' Portrait, etc... 9 12 0; Welcome Tea at St. Paul's Cafe... 9 10 6; Hire of Vans for Park Meetings... 2 10 0; Band for Hyde Park Meeting... 1 14 0; Postage and Telegrams... 1 15 0; Incidental Expenses... 1 10 9 1/2; Loss on Store Street Meeting... 2 18 6 1/2; Total Expenditure... £76 4 0.

JOSEPH LANE, Treasurer of Committee.

LA REVUE SOCIALISTE.

EDITED BY BENOIT MALON. 8, Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SUMMARY OF THE JANUARY NUMBER.

"The Confluents of Socialism," B. Malon; "The Right to Strike, and its Consequences," P. Boileau; "Violence," G. Tridon; "Essay on Scientific Socialism," P. Argyriades; "Alcoholism," E. Fourniere; "Alarm Cry," A. Veber; "Socialist poetry," E. Herbel; "Mme. de Barrau," Emile de Morsier; "Social Movement," A. Verber; Correspondence; Books.

TERMS:—France, 6 months 9 francs, 12 months, 18 f. Abroad, " 10 " 20. Payments to be made to M. Rodolphe Simon, 8 Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

JULIUS BORDOLLO'S

LABOUR NEWS AGENCY

213 Forsyth Street, New York City, U.S.A

American agency for the Commonwealth. All Labour literature kept in stock. Send for list, post free.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS. PRICE 1s.

'COMMONWEAL' OFFICE, 13 Farringdon Road, E.O.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING. Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE, at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the
SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 161.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE usual game is being played with Mr. O'Brien in Clonmel Jail as to prison clothes and the like. I suppose, since he has begun in this fashion, and has once considered himself bound to protest against "degradation," he must go on with it. We have over and over again in these columns expressed the commonsense view that it is the inflictor, rather than the endurer of prison brutalities, who is "degraded" by them; and also that we do not see why there should be classes in prison any more than in the outside world. At the same time, no one can refuse admiration to O'Brien's staunchness; he accepts the rules of the game and is determined to play it out to the end, and if he sticks to it he must win.

Balfour and his mates are certainly piling it on. The sentences on Mr. Sheehy carry the matter on a step further; six months and four, not to run concurrently as I understand, is good measure according to modern views of political criminality. However, Mr. Sheehy and his friends must remember that worse things have been done within the last two years. In America they hang people outright for the same crime as Mr. Sheehy has committed, and the Balfourian revenge for which the Gladstonians very rightly consider so monstrous; and, indeed, we may say of Ireland. "If they do these things in the green tree, what shall they do in the dry?"

The suicide of the Crown Prince of Austria is tragic enough—granted. Granted also that the contrast between his position, so high above the many agonies of ordinary struggling people, and the pain that slew him is dramatic. But not less tragic, surely far more so, is many a death that has taken place in London within the last few months that has had but a few disregarded lines in a daily paper for its epic. Even a day or two ago a poor man was charged before some magistrate with jumping into the Thames—with the crime of being able to bear it no more, since there was no chance for him on any side. I thought the piteous reasons he gave for committing this crime could hardly have been stronger; I am sure his case demanded considerably more pity than that of the late Prince; and, besides the pity, abundance of shame on our part; and between the pity and the shame longer newspaper articles might have been written, perhaps with profit, that have been concocted concerning the late tragedy in high life.

Mr. Goschen, in addressing a big Tory gathering at Stratford, took upon himself the pleasing and easy task of taunting Mr. Morley and Mr. Gladstone for not having done anything towards bettering the condition of the workers in spite of their democratic pretensions. This is a fair taunt coming from a Socialist, and even coming from a Tory cannot be satisfactorily answered by a Liberal; but a Socialist can answer with a clear conscience. "Goschen, two wrongs don't make a right; you have done no more than the others, and you only plume yourself on doing no less because your principles bid you do less—which makes your boasts absurd. You can only get any credit for some little thing you may have been forced into doing, by putting your position in this way: 'I am the enemy of the human race, and yet I have actually done something for the good of the human race.' Goschen, with all your usurer's cleverness, you are a fool!"

By the way, what between Lord Wolseley on conscription, Mr. Goschen on the national defences, and Mr. Stanhope's promise of a rapidly approaching European war, it is pretty clear that we are going to have a pull at the guinea-tree next Session on behalf of the army and navy, and that some glorious jobs will be set on foot. Some of the papers, even the Jingo Pall Mall, seemed to think that Mr. Stanhope had been overdoing it. That's quite a mistake; this kind of mustard-plaster should always be laid on with a trowel, and the Pall Mall shows by its practice that it understands that well.

The Balfourian banquet at Dublin with its "great laughter," and "shouts of laughter" over a man in prison, may turn out rather more serious than Mr. Balfour thinks: people are often more moved by the way in which a thing is done than by the thing itself; and I should think that there could be few stomachs strong enough outside the purely party camp to stand this last strong meat (or strong drink perhaps) of Mr. Balfour. As to the man himself what can be said? The refined Cambridge gentleman, the superior person, the representative of culture, turning out such an unmitigated snob! Truly one doesn't want to scratch a middle-class tyrant very deep to find the low ruffian in him.

And after all, this hero, who boasts himself as having courage enough for anything, has funked and bolted, and Mr. O'Brien has had his clothes given back to him. Once again we fail to see that O'Brien has escaped a "degradation"; but, on the other hand, it is pretty clear that Balfour has tumbled into one.

The Star, the manager of the London Council election on the Liberal side, has had a roughish shake; but is pretty much quit for the fright, since it has got its "Progressive" list in as Aldermen with the single exception of the Earl of Meath, once Lord Brabazon (who the devil voted for him?)

But when you have looked at the list you won't find very much in it to frighten a Tory. The one distinguished person in it is Mr. Frederick Harrison, he has at least the advantage of not being a politician; but he himself would indignantly repudiate the name of Radical or Democrat, and he has on many occasions attacked Socialism directly. But certainly he is the best man on the list.

I am afraid that the Star having got rid of its fear, and having triumphed in this matter of the Aldermen, will not take warning by the incidents of the too obvious tendency of its machine politicians to rat when convenient.

We wish the Star well in virtue of some really useful articles it has from time to time; like the notes on our prison system which we quoted lately; or its excellent article on the Boulanger affair, which will clear the mind of many persons of misunderstandings on that point. But we wish it so well that its "unprecedented success" does not make us specially happy. Rather we wish it could understand the advantages of being in a definite and even narrow majority; the honour, the pleasure, the freedom of that position. No longer then need we puff Lord Rosebery or even Sir J. Lubbock and Mr. Edis a little; no longer need we have with sinking hearts to put in a daily column of Jeames-ery for the benefit of the democracy, or dangle before the delighted eyes of the dwellers in very small houses in the suburbs visions of the laces and diamonds of Society—h'm, well!—ladies. No longer need we in the same breath curse Warren and bless Bonfield, or look upon O'Brien's cell with horror while we are mildly satisfied with Parsons' gallows. We might be free, though our circulation decreased.

A Radical as a Radical in these days, when Socialism has already been well preached, must be a half-informed and somewhat blundering person, but he need not be an opportunist, or a machine-politician: he may be honestly struggling towards the light, and may have a genuine indignation at the unmerited suffering of the poor, though he has not yet thoroughly learned what causes them and does not know a remedy for them. Such men we may quarrel with at times, but they are not enemies, and they mostly will become our comrades. Let the Star be the organ of these men, and it will find a real function to fulfil, and be the intermediary between honest democratic enquirers and those who have been happy enough to learn what the real current of events is. This will be better than collecting a kennel full of curs that they may turn round and snap at its heels on the first opportunity.

Meantime, the fact that a really popular paper must of necessity, in order to sell, be such a very "mixed lot," shows what a prodigious amount of work has to be done, even among those who are beginning to understand their degrading position of dependence on the rich—their masters.

W. M.

THE MANCHESTER MARTYRS.

(Continued from p. 34.)

What the feeling was in England in those bad days, when even moderate reformers like Charles Bradlaugh often delivered themselves of their doctrines at risk of their lives, may be imagined from the vivid description of Mr. T. D. Sullivan, which tells the fatal story in better words than mine. "On Monday, October 28th, the three Irishmen were placed at the bar of the Manchester Assize Court, and formally placed on their trial for wilful murder. With them were arraigned Thomas Maguire, a private belonging to the Royal Marines, who was on furlough at Liverpool at the time of Kelly's liberation, and who was arrested merely because he happened to be an Irishman, and who, although perfectly innocent of the whole transaction, had been sworn against by numerous witnesses as a ringleader in the attack, and Edward O'Meagher Condon (alias Shue), a fine-looking Irish-American, a citizen of the State of Ohio, against whom, like his four companions, true bills had been found by the grand jury. It would take too long to describe the paroxysms of excitement, panic, and agitation that raged in the English mind during the period that intervened between the committal of the prisoners and the date at which we have now arrived. Nothing was to be heard of but the Fenians; nothing was talked of but the diabolical plots and murderous designs they were said to be preparing. The Queen was to be shot at; Balmoral was to be burned down; the armouries had been attacked; the barracks were undermined; the gas-works were to be exploded, the bank blown up, the water poisoned. [How like the rumours current in Chicago after the 4th of May!] North, south, east, and west, the English people [it ought to be middle-classes] were in a ferment of anxious alarm. Fenianism was cursed as an unholy thing, to be cut off from society; as an ulcerous sore; to be banned and loathed as pestilent—a foul creation with murder in its glare, and torch of the incendiary burning in its gory hand." Doesn't this read like the Star leader on Anarchism? Reaction uses always the same stale old libels to attack an advanced movement. Mr. Sullivan continues: "Under these circumstances, there was little chance that an unprejudiced jury could be empanelled for the trial of the Irish prisoners. The Home Secretary was memorialised on the subject, and the application was renewed before the judges in court, but the efforts to obtain justice were fruitless. The blood of the British lion was up; with bloodshot eyes and bristling mane he stood awaiting his prey, and there was danger in trifling with his rage. Even special commissions were voted slow, and a cry arose for martial-law, lynch-law, or any law that would give the blood of the victim without hindrance or delay. So the appeal for time was spurned; the Government was deaf to all remonstrances; British (?) blood-thirstiness carried the day, and the trial proceeded without interruption."

As you read these lines, it is impossible for anyone to avoid noting the strong resemblance between the so-called fair trial of our Chicago comrades and the hideous burlesque of justice which was performed in the Assize Court at Manchester. The same coarse, stupid, brutal libels shrieked aloud by the mob of the middle-class in the drawing-room, and its humble imitators in the slum; nor were the hireling scribes of the reptile press behindhand in either cases in swelling the roar for blood against these "foreign incendiaries." In both cases all that could be done to hang the men was done, and successfully done, to the eternal disgrace and dishonour of the middle-classes of "free" England and America.

Let us glance briefly at the trial; it is well to be as brief as possible. The judges with their minds made up as to the sentence before they take their seats. The middle-class jury that never requires any evidence to convict revolutionists of crime. They must be criminals or how could they be revolutionists? Who could desire to revolutionise such a lovely and admirable society as ours but criminals? In this view are there not even to be found many middle-class Radicals—aye, and pseudo-Socialists too—who are ready to agree with the hucksters of the till and the counter? The witnesses—well, the less said about the witnesses the better. They were drawn for the most part from four well-matched classes—corner-men, sneak-thieves, prostitutes, and policemen. Those who know the high regard for truth and lofty notions concerning the sanctity of an oath entertained by these good people, may get some idea of the evidence. It is not surprising under these circumstances to hear that it varied strangely. For instance, there was considerable dispute among the witnesses as to who fired the fatal shot. One witness said it was O'Brien, others Condon, others Allen; but before the trial was over it was evident that the prosecution intended to fix it upon Allen. On one point most witnesses seemed agreed; whoever there was any doubt about, there could be none about Maguire. Seven witnesses swore positively that he was very active in the attack, and some even repeated the words he was supposed to have said. The value of this evidence was proved when the Crown admitted, by giving Maguire a "free pardon", his own statement that he was miles away at Liverpool when the attack on the van took place, and that he was totally innocent of any connection with Fenians and Fenianism. Nice evidence this to justify the passing of the death sentence upon five men!

On the evening of Friday November 1st the trials terminated. It was half-past five o'clock when Judge Mellor concluded his charge. The court was crowded with British respectability; the middle class was there in all its force—rich, over-fed, cruel. In their lust for blood, men and women keep their eyes fixed upon the prisoners, to enjoy their agony of suspense as the jury retires to consider their doom; but the brave men show no sign of fear or faltering; they stand calm and erect in proud defiance.

The jury return after an absence of an hour and twenty minutes. Your verdict, gentlemen? "Guilty." Shouts of applause from the ladies and gentlemen in the court; but the men do not tremble, and their calm proud courage forces reluctant admiration even from the carrion curs around. The applause dies away; but another sound rises on the air: a cry of distress from women stricken to their hearts by the cruel verdict, mourning for son, husband, brother, who are to be butchered in the shambles of the law.

The martyrs are asked by the town-clerk if they have anything to say. Yes, they have; noble, brave words; brave and noble as their deeds. Allen speaks first. He declares his innocence of the death of Brett. The young hero faces his murderers, and hurls at them his burning words of courageous defiance. "I don't say this for the sake of mercy; I want no mercy, I will have no mercy. I'll die as many thousands have died for their beloved land, and in defence of it. I will die proudly and triumphantly in defence of republican principles and the liberty of an oppressed and enslaved nation. . . . I have been condemned to death upon evidence on which an Englishman would not hang a dog, on the evidence of prostitutes, convicted felons, policemen and loafers. . . . As for myself I feel the righteousness of my every act with regard to what I have done in defence of my country. I fear not, I am fearless, fearless of any punishment which can be inflicted upon me; and with that, my lords, I have done."

Michael Larkin spoke next; he looked a shade paler than at the beginning of the trial, but he showed no want of resolution in his firm set face. He spoke coolly and distinctly, and stated that so far from being concerned in the shooting of Brett, he had not even had revolver or pistol in his hand on that day. "I did not go to take life away, but I did go to the rescue of those two noble heroes confined in the van—Kelly and Deasy." In concluding, he declared that he forgave those who had sworn his life away.

O'Brien spoke with even more defiance of judge, jury, and ruling classes than the others. He spiritedly criticised English middle-class hypocrisy, that sympathises, or pretends to, with the oppressed abroad, but crushes down more mercilessly the victims of its tyranny in England and Ireland. This denunciation was too much for the judge, who tried to stifle the last words of this heroic young man. He appealed with a jesuitical assumption of kindness to O'Brien to say no more on such an unpleasant subject. "The only possible effect of your observations will be to tell against you with those who have to consider your sentence." But O'Brien spurned this hypocritical attempt to silence him, and continued his eloquent denunciation of English society. "They [the English middle classes] cannot find words strong enough to express their horror at the cruelties of the king of Dahomey, because he sacrificed 2,000 human beings yearly; but why don't these persons who express such horror at misgovernment of other countries look at their own? Let them look at London and see those that want bread there, while the aristocrats riot in luxuries and crime. Look to Ireland; see the hundreds and thousands of its people in misery and want; see the virtuous, beautiful, and industrious women, who only a few years ago—aye, and yet—are obliged to look at their children dying for want of food. Look at what is called the majesty of the law on one side, and the long deep misery of a noble people on the other. . . . I am not astonished at my conviction. The Government of this country have the power of convicting any person they choose. They appoint the judge; they choose the jury; and by means of what they call patronage, which is the means of corruption, they have the power of making laws to suit their own purposes. I am confident that my blood will rise a hundredfold against the tyrants who think proper to commit such an outrage." O'Brien seems to have been the only one of the prisoners who recognised that there was a social question common to all countries alike, and that the cause of the peoples is the same in every land.

Edward Maguire, who it will be remembered was a loyal Irishman who had no connection with the attack on the van, nor with the Fenian organisation, made a law-'n'-order speech. Had never been a Fenian, had never seen Col. Kelly; spoke with feeling of "his queen and country"; referred to his services in the army, the high character given him by his commanding officer; and thus almost convinced judge and jury that they had made a mistake, and paved the way for a reprieve.

Condon made a spirited speech, pointing out the unfairness of the trial, the prejudice excited by the newspapers, and also reminded the court that if Jefferson Davis or Garibaldi had been released by similar means, England would have applauded the deed. He concluded his speech by the cry of "God save Ireland!" which was taken up with enthusiasm by his companions in the dock.

This concluded all the speeches. The judges produced their black caps, and passed sentence; the men standing firm and unflinching while these ghouls mumbled out their prearranged doom. The last words of mockery, "May God have mercy on you," had died away, and the heroes turned to leave the dock. Before they left they cast one glance to their weeping friends. The mournful pathos of their farewell rings still in the ears of those who read the account of the trial: "May God be with you, Irishmen and Irishwomen." But it will not do to show weakness before the enemy, and as they leave the court they raise their voices in another shout of defiance, "God save Ireland!" and the black door leading to the condemned cell swallows them up.

D. J. NICOLL.

(To be concluded.)

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

FRANCE.

Up to the present moment, we know of half-a-dozen International Congresses which will be held at Paris during the course of the present year. We mean, of course, such Congresses in which the Socialists and working classes generally are interested: 1. International Congress of Co-operative Societies, organised by the Federal Council of these bodies; 2. International Congress of the Mutual Relief Societies, organised by the section of Social Economy at the Paris Exhibition; 3. International Congress of Freethinkers, organised by the General Council of the Freethinkers' Society in Belgium and the Socialist Federation of the French Freethinkers, at which the social rôle of Freethought and the question of the emancipation of the proletariat will be discussed; 4. International Congress of Social Economy, convened by our friends of La Revue Socialiste and by the Republican Society of Sociology; 5. International Congress of Women, called by the Central Committee of the Society of the Rights of Women; 6. International Working-men's Congress, convened by order of the last Trades' Union Congress, held here at the end of last year. And if matters do not alter, we may have two International Working-men Congresses, instead of one; the first being called together by the Federation of the Socialist workers of France, that is to say by the Possibilists or Parti ouvrier, and the second by the organisers of the recent Conferences at Troyes and Bordeaux, the independent working-men's syndicates, the Socialist party of the Marxist school, the Blanquists or social revolutionary party, and others. If it were possible, we would rather see one real general and international Congress, the result of which would most certainly be the reconstruction, on a new scheme, of the old International Working-men's Association; if not, we need hardly say that our sympathies would be with the second Congress, as representing the most advanced section of the Revolutionary Socialist Party, to which the Socialist League has hitherto adhered. We shall soon have another opportunity to call back the attention of our readers to the same subject, which will be of very great importance as to the future development of Socialism throughout the world.

Last Thursday comrade Ossip Zedkine died at Paris, at the age of thirty-six years, having been born at Odessa in 1853. He belonged to a wealthy family, and began very early to disseminate the Socialist ideas among the working classes of his native land. In order to do better propagandist work, he became a carpenter. In 1871 he was obliged to fly and succeeded in reaching Switzerland. He afterwards settled in Germany, at Leipzig, where he worked several years for the cause, until he was arrested in 1881. After his release out of jail, he was expelled from Germany and went to Paris, where he lived ever since. He was a very learned man, knowing nearly all European tongues. For years past he has been a steady contributor to Le Socialiste, of Paris, Social Demokrat, then at Zurich, Volks Tribune, of Berlin, etc., etc. He was buried by his friends of the Social Revolutionary Party of France and by his comrades of the Russian political colony of Paris.

GERMANY.

The Berlin police have decided not to allow in the future large meetings to be held on Sundays. Comrade Max Schippel, editor of the Berlin Volks Tribune, complains in the last issue of his paper of being subjected to the especial care and watch of the police. He is always accompanied, from morn till night, by a couple of detectives who have to take note of all his calls and steps in every direction. Schippel having not asked for "the pleasure of their company," is much annoyed by these importunate co-workers in the cause. At Mayence, more than forty houses were thoroughly searched, but the result was next to nil. At Lorrach, six Socialists have been arrested, whilst smuggling forbidden literature from Switzerland into Germany. At the very same time, a lot of fifty thousand leaflets of the same "forbidden" contents found its way to the "beloved fatherland." It was smuggled through the frontier at the other end of the same place of Lorrach. Good fun that!

At Frankfort-on-Main, comrade Georg Meier got three months for having belonged to a secret society—of which he was the only member! The judge who sentenced him must have been mad or drunk, or even both together. He will soon advance in the career and become a councillor at the Supreme Court of Leipzig. He is too good for Frankfort and must get "high treasoners" to judge. How idiotic these Nupkinses are all round!

At Berlin, comrades H. Lau, K. Schubert, A. Kuhn, E. Kann, P. Brunsch, F. Schultz, G. Brodenfeld, W. Langefeldt, and R. Volkmann were tried as "secret conspirators," and sentenced to thirty-two months of imprisonment. Not one single private person was called as witness, the charge being merely substantiated by officials of the Irving-Mahlow type.

Although much annoyed by Bismarck's employees, as we said before, comrade Max Schippel has decided to start a Berlin workingmen's library. One pamphlet of thirty-two pages is to be issued every month at the price of twopence. The following will appear in the first series: 1. A socialistic novel; 2. The working women and the question of labour; 3. Trades' Unions and their utility in the workers' movement; 4. Labour legislation and the political parties; 5. The Government's plans of social reform; 6. The French workingmen's movement and their leaders; 7. Regulations and rules concerning the right of assemblage and meetings; 8. The threatening bankruptcy of the large European States. The first pamphlet has just been issued, and the second will be ready by February 23rd.

BELGIUM.

Comrades Laloi and Mignon, two at least of the dangerous plotters against Belgium's security, have been set free. They have been imprisoned for several months, and the Attorney-General has failed to find out a charge on which to prosecute them. Why, then, are Defuisseaux and Maroille still in jail? They have done exactly the same thing as their happier friends, viz., nothing at all.

A new weekly paper has been started by the Socialists at Liege under the title of L'Emancipation. It is to be written on the same lines as the other organs of the Belgian Parti ouvrier.

Last week our comrade Louis Courgeon, died at Brussels at the early age of fifty-one years. He was a Freethinker and a Socialist of indomitable energy, and his death will be strongly regretted by the Belgian Socialists, whom he always helped in their struggles by word and deed. Courgeon served in the ranks of the soldiers of the Commune, having been the chief of a battalion which fought very bravely to the end. Ever since the days of proscription in 1871, he lived at Brussels, and had succeeded in making a new home in his adopted country. He will be long remembered by all those who have known him personally, and who are aware of the good services he rendered to the cause of Revolutionary Socialism and of Freethought.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Comrades Kreutzer and Nemetz, both editors of the Bücker Zeitung, have been arrested at Vienna at the time they were reporting to their fellow workers the results of the Hainfeldt Congress of the Austrian Socialist Party. Comrade Eisenhuber met with the same fate. V. D.

ITALY.

The demonstrations of the unemployed are on the increase. At Brescella the workers of the building trade, after a procession through the town, which was headed by a man carrying as a banner a long pole with a loaf of bread on the end of it, had the usual promises from the Mayor. In the small province of Ferrara more than seven thousand men are out of work. Some sham relief work has been granted by the authorities in consequence of the threatening attitude of the workers. At Faenza, on the 7th and 8th of January, several bakeries were pillaged by the starving and exasperated population. Valiant military and police behaved most brutally in the restoration of law-n-order, even against women and children. Thirty-seven arrests have been made and the municipal counsel has promised work. Also at Parma, on the 15th of January, the soldiery were sent against the riotous starvelings. The town was for two days in a state of siege. Thirteen prisoners were made by the heroes, and some relief work was not started, but promised.

Several strikes are reported. That of the compositors of Milano, the ironworkers of Terni, and the navvies of Cremona.

The Socialist propaganda is actively carried on. We greet as a hopeful sign the reappearance of the valiant newspaper, Il Fascio Operaio, at Milano, which is now in its seventh year. From Ancona the publishing of a new Socialist organ, Il Libero Patto, is announced.

At Ravenna a meeting of Socialist delegates have decided to take part in the administrative elections. A programme will be shortly forthcoming to that end.

On the other hand the police are not idle. At Messina on the evening of the 18th January, two policemen have been observed to place a bomb on the threshold of the "Fascio Operaio," a Club of working men, who were at the time assembled at a meeting. The bomb exploded with great noise, but without doing much damage, before the two rascals could slink away. They were secured by an excited crowd, disarmed, and dragged to the police station. The story would be incredible, were the place of action not Sicily and the time Carnival. H. Sch.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 16, 1889.

10	Sun.	1755. Montesquieu died. 1800. Trial of Napper Tandy and Harvey Morris for high treason. 1843. Richard Carlile died. 1874. Jules Michelet died. 1880. Attempted execution of Alexander II.
11	Mon.	1650. Rene Descartes died. 1867. Fenian raid on Chester. 1867. Great Reform meeting in Trafalgar Square. 1878. Kovalski and others arrested in Odessa after the first armed resistance in the Russian movement; for which Kovalski shot, 4 sentenced to five years in fortress. 1876. First No. of Les droits de l'homme , Paris.
12	Tues.	1571. Nicholas Throckmorton died. 1804. Immanuel Kant died. 1809. Charles Darwin and Abraham Lincoln born. 1844. Daniel and John O'Connell, John Gray, Thomas Steele, Richard Barrett, Rev. Thomas Tierney, Charles Gavan Duffy and T. M. Ray sentenced for conspiracy. 1848. First No. of the United Irishman , Dublin, issued.
13	Wed.	1835. Henry Hunt died. 1867. Fenian rising in Kerry. 1878. Spy Nikonoff executed in Rostov. 1882. Jessie Helfmann died in prison (sentenced to death for taking part in execution of Alexander II., but commuted to mines for life).
14	Thur.	1693. Massacre of Glencoe. 1696. "Assassination plot." 1766. T. R. Malthus born. 1792. Bonnets Rouge began to be in fashion.
15	Fri.	1401. William Sautre, first English martyr, burned. 1564. Galileo born. 1713. Anthony Ashley Cooper, third Earl of Shaftesbury, died. 1747. Jeremy Bentham born. 1839. Hindenlang, De Lorimier, Nicholas, Narbonne, and Daunais, Canadian rebels, hung at Montreal.
16	Sat.	1792. Second part of Paine's 'Rights of Man' published. 1834. Ernst Haeckel born. 1880. L. Hartmann arrested in Paris for taking part in attempt on Czar's train near Moscow, but police prevented by French public from handing him over to Russian Government. 1885. Unemployed demonstration on Thames Embankment, and deputation to Local Government Board.

OUT OF WORK MEMBERS.

Two painters, one general labourer, and a member who makes carriage cushions and tarpaulins. If any of our readers know of anything that will give employment to them, they will be doing a good turn to deserving members (Hammersmith Branch).

One member who would be glad of odd jobs, another in want of situation as bootmaker (Clerkenwell Branch).

The law which will not allow a pheasant's egg to be stolen or destroyed, permits the child to be robbed of the man—to be cheated of the present strength which should feed his growth, develop his frame, and make him a hale healthy being, capable of labour and the enjoyment of rest. Of this (according to the intention of nature) future self, the factory child is swindled in a fraudulent bargain, and the miserable being is unconsciously, unconsentingly, repugnantly, made spendthrift of manhood in infancy.—Examiner.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON!

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 15 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 15 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

D. O.—The notorious Dr. John Brenan once translated the saying you quote apropos of Gordon—De mortuis nihil nisi bonum—"When scoundrels die, all knaves bemoan 'em."

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	WILLIAM MORRIS 41
The Manchester Martyrs (continued)	D. J. NICOLL 42
International Notes	V. DAVE and H. SCHEU 43
Revolutionary Calendar 43
Notes	D. J. NICOLL 44
Patriotism in Norfolk	G. CORES 44
Working-men, Indeed!	J. BRUCE GLASIER 46
Workmen, Arise!	E. DYKE 45
Correspondence 45
The Labour Struggle 46
In the United States	H. F. CHARLES 46
The Storehouse of Nature	JOHN BEDFORD LENO 47
Executive Business, Reports, etc., etc. 47
Lecture Announcements, Notices of Books, etc., etc. 48

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday February 6.

ENGLAND	CHICAGO	ITALY
Church Reformer	Chicago—Knights of Labor	Turin—Nuova Gazzetta Operaia
Justice	Vorbote	Rome—L'Emancipazione
Labour Elector	Fort Worth (Tex.)—South West	Milan—Il Fascio Operaio
Labour Tribune	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Cremona—L'Eco del Popolo
London—Freie Presse	Port Angeles—Commonwealth	SPAIN
Norwich—Daylight	St. Louis (Mo.)—Die Parole	Barcelona—El Productor
Postal Service Gazette	S. F.—Coast Seaman's Journal	Seville—La Solidaridad
Railway Review	Valley Falls (Kan.)—Fair Play	Barcelona—Tierra y Libertad
Revolutionary Review	San Francisco—Pacific Union	Madrid—El Socialista
Social Demokrat	FRANCE	PORTUGAL
To-Day	Paris—Cri du Peuple (daily)	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
Worker's Friend	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	AUSTRIA
NEW SOUTH WALES	La Revolte	Wien—Gleichheit
Hamilton—Radical	HOLLAND	HUNGARY
INDIA	Hague—Recht voor Allen	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik
Bankipore—Behar Herald	BELGIUM	DENMARK
UNITED STATES	Ghent—Vooruit	Social-Demokraten
New York—Der Sozialist	Antwerp—De Werker	SWEDEN
Freshheit	Liege—L'Avenir	Malmö—Arbetet
Truthseeker	SWITZERLAND	Stockholm—Social-Demokraten
Alarm	Arbeiterstimme	NORWAY
Workmen's Advocate	GERMANY	Kristiania—Social-Demokraten
Boston—Woman's Journal	Berlin—Volks Tribune	WEST INDIES
Liberty		Cuba—El Productor

NOTES.

THE editor of the Star has suddenly discovered that a large contingent of the gentlemen whom he was so loudly recommending a few weeks ago, to the free and independent electors, for the County Council, are "flabby, limp, and commonplace."

Lord Compton is flabby. Just fancy this advanced reformer, this amateur Socialist, who could not be sufficiently cracked up to the electors of Central Finsbury as the Star's pet candidate; he's flabby! Here, if the Star goes on like this, chucking over its idols in this fashion, it will soon arrive at the abyss of dreadful Anarchism, and the editor will cease to believe in any one but himself.

Not only is Lord Compton flabby, Lord Monkswell limp, and that dear young Radical M.P., and part proprietor of the Daily Telegraph, Mr. Lawson, "extra commonplace," but what the Yankees would call "the whole show" is characterised by its "indecision, vacillation, and timidity." O ye gods, and these are our candidates!

To any one who had even examined the portraits, or who knew anything at all concerning the record of these men, this would be no news; but it was surprising to see the editor of the Star kicking his protégés downstairs a few days after he had been exalting them to the skies. He has discovered that they are humbugs; there is hope for him. How long will it take him to find out that he, too, is a humbug and a democratic sham?

It might as well be suggested to the County Council that now they have settled such important business as electing their aldermen, that the people of London are most atrociously sweated, starved, and rack-rented, and then perhaps a worshipful council may find some slight leisure to consider even these little matters. Of course, consideration, and not much of that, is all that the people can expect from so high and important a body.

The case of a poor woman whose daughter was brought up before a City Alderman, Mr. Renals, charged with the fearful crime of begging, and who paid 4s. 3d. a-week for the den in which she and her husband and four children were "hoveled and hustled together, each sex like swine," might even raise a passing feeling of commiseration in the breast of middle-class County Councillors. It moved the City Alderman, who said that the rack-rent was "monstrous," and gave her £2 from the poor-box to help her along; but then it is clear that he must be an exception to his class.

Alderman Renals perhaps would find on enquiry that a rent of 4s. 3d. for a single room is not so very exceptional in the London slums, and that the vice, misery, and poverty which such rack-rents, combined with the sweating of rich middle-class firms, engender, is as a rule considered perfectly right and natural by ladies and gentlemen of well-regulated minds. And the people may be sure that a Council which in trifling matters forces even the Star to comment upon its indecision, vacillation, and timidity is not the body to alter it.

Nor, alas, is any other body of the usual middle-class kind likely to do so. They have all an invariable knack of behaving in the same manner when questions relating to the poor come up before them. They fear to attack the property of others in the misery of their fellows for fear their own may be thereby endangered; for in their hearts they know they are in the same boat as the biggest scoundrel of a sweater.

What, then, is to be done? Nothing, if the people wait for the middle classes to do it for them. Everything, if the people will but act for themselves. The new County Council is confessed a sham by the author of its being. Would a Plan of Campaign in rack-rented slums of London also prove a sham? If the people could be got to take it up, it would carry terror to the hearts of the boldest of middle classes, and would do more good in a month than voting for representatives like those at present in the County Council will do in a hundred years. That business begins in humbug and ends in humbug, and they are fools who dream that putting a piece of paper in a box can in any way right the wrongs or remedy the griefs of mankind. Courage, dauntless courage, and vigorous action, can alone conquer the forces that range themselves against the masses of the people.

Let those who suffer, consider. It is quite certain that while they suffer in quiet save for an occasional grumble, and pin their faith to some political humbug, as they have done in the past, so long will their misery continue. Let them answer: Have they ever gained anything by their past methods of action or inaction? But let them strike the middle class in their only vulnerable part, their pocket, and even middle-class statesmen may consider that the wrongs of England as well as those of Ireland merit some attention. D. N.

PATRIOTISM IN NORFOLK.—We learn from a local organ that the emigration agent has been having "high times" here of late. It appears that a Mr. George Randall, emigration agent and lecturer for the Government of Queensland, has held no fewer than 700 meetings in different parts of this country during the last eighteen months. But nowhere has he been more successful than in Norfolk, having dispatched 400 farm labourers from that county to Queensland during his eighteen months campaign, and, we are told, an immense number have of late accepted and filled up emigration forms which were distributed at the conclusion of his meetings. "Wherever he went he was met by throngs of well-dressed, stalwart, agricultural labourers, magnificent specimens of humanity, the pick of the country for health and strength, wearing the green leaf in their headgear, the badge of the willing emigrant. Mr. Randall says he never met with better specimens of English manhood in all his previous tours in England. Never has he had to reject so few for physical imperfections." We should never forget that "all that glitters is not gold," but especially when the emigration agent is about, and so one would like to hear what some Queensland comrade or friend has to say as to the truth etc. of the following tale, no doubt very "highly coloured" for the unsophisticated farm labourer: "The wages of a single man at farmwork in Queensland are £40 per annum with board and lodging at the expense of his employer." (?) "A married couple, if the wife cared to make herself useful, can earn from £50 to £70 a year, in addition to food and house accommodation." "It is a common thing for labourers to become farmers for themselves, as 160 acres of land can be obtained at the nominal price of 2s. 6d. per acre, the payment for which might extend over five years." One cannot help suspicious feelings arising when such pictures are painted by interested people. Many others quite as promising as this one have turned out to be nothing better than deliberate frauds on the workers. There is one idea which suggests itself to the mind, and that is, the agricultural labourers need not emigrate to Queensland to get land at 2s. 6d. per acre, but in Norfolk itself they could get land on considerably better terms, i.e., for nothing, if they'd but make up their minds to refuse to pay rent for the use of either land or capital to idle thieves. Our Norwich comrades might take the hint and follow up their good work in the past by a little vigorous Anti-emigration and No Rent agitation in the district.—G. C.

WORKING-MEN, INDEED!

To earn one's livelihood is not necessarily a virtue; it is only a virtue when it is done by free choice. Most working-men would gladly cease to earn their livelihood to-morrow if they could compel anybody else to earn it for them. They are only working-men because they cannot help it; they would become gentlemen fleecers and loafers if they could. Most working-men are heartily ashamed of being working-men, and are ever so much more civil and obliging to their "betters" than to their own class. Observe a group of working-men standing on a pavement; if a gentleman comes along they stand aside and let him get past, but if a working-man comes along they don't notice him, and he has to step off the pavement and get on again. No orthodox British working-man would pass a gentleman lying drunk under a lamp-post without ascertaining if the gentleman had not hurt himself, and at least giving him a lift on his legs; but if the drunk man happened to be a working-man like himself he would pass him by as if he were the emptyings of a street dust-bin.

Working-men as a rule are dunderheads and donkeys so far as their interests as a class are concerned. They don't want to fight for their rights, and they don't know how even supposing they did want. They are afraid to speak, lest their masters hear them; they are afraid to threaten or intimidate lest they break the law. Great heavens! if we Socialists had to lead Irish landlords into the Social Revolution instead of working-men, what a magnificent agitation we would have! How we would make history! How they would intimidate the authorities and defy the law! How they would stick together and fight every inch of the ground! Irish landlords know how to agitate, educate, and organise. They don't turn traitors, and make fools of each other like working-men. They are the best trade unionists in the world; they know their own interests and they make everybody else know. With all their crimes I admire them! I would shake hands with and accept a drink from a tyrant rather than a slave any day. Of course, the Irish landlords will be defeated and utterly ruined—they are in the minority and on the wrong side. Working-men are in the majority and on the right side; they, however, won't run any chance of being defeated for a long time to come unless they look alive. You can't defeat nothing; and the workers as an organised or fighting force are nothing—they don't in fact exist. I hope the Irish landlords (much as I respect them) will be beggared and reduced to the necessity of earning their bread by the sweat of their brows, soon; for they will join, I am sure, the Socialist League to a man, and then we will have an agitation worth speaking about!

Working-men know little, and usually care less, about their own concerns. What they do know they learn from the capitalist press. They won't support labour or Socialist papers. Such papers are not sufficiently interesting or aristocratic for men earning from 15s. to 30s. per week. What the devil do they care about the condition of the Cradley Heath chain-makers, or the match girls, or this strike or that? What interest have they in the condition or doings of common working folk like themselves? No, what they want to know about is whether the Princess Louise of Wales is really going to be married to Lord Fife; whether Mr. Gladstone means to visit the Pope; whether Miss Helen Terry prefers "Robert Elsmere" to "Little Lord Fauntleroy"; or whether Lord Lonsdale intends going to hunt buffaloes on the Rocky Mountains when he comes back from his expedition to the North Pole, or whether he will return home.

If a working-man rises to put a question to a candidate during an election, his fellow working-men greet him with cries of "Does your mother know you are out?" "He's a Tory spy!" "Oh, never mind him, he's wound up; he'll soon run down!" "Awa' hame, man, and wash yer face!" and similar encouraging expressions. If a gentleman stands up to put a question, these same idiots will whisper to each other, "Who is he?" "Has he a big business?" and probably yell out "Order! order! let's hear what the gentleman has to say!"

When an employer of labour grants his men an advance of pay or a reduction of hours, the men carry him shoulder high round the yard and yell and cheer like maniacs; but when the spokesman of a deputation to ask a master for a rise of pay or a reduction of hours is dismissed at the end of the week, his fellow-workmen are afraid to be seen drinking a glass of beer with him. When a master's daughter is getting married, every man in the establishment will come back for several hours every night for a week to decorate the chimney stack and the old ricketty roofs with Union Jacks and royal standards—as well as subscribe a shilling or half-a-crown for a present to the bride; while if one of their own number dies leaving a wife and family in destitution, hardly one will volunteer to get up a subscription-sheet in their behalf, and most of them will grudge the price of a sixpenny ticket.

If a master orders a workman to do a certain thing—and, in order that the workman may not think anybody else is referred to, particularises him as a "damned fool"—the workman proceeds to obey with as much alacrity and cheerfulness as though he had been asked to do it by a pretty girl, and was to receive a kiss on his return; while if a labourer asks said workman to do some trifling service for him, the workman politely tells him to "Go to hell out of that!" This may not be poetry, but it is true!

Working-men don't consider their masters as robbers; they believe their masters entitled to all the profit they can get. They believe masters are as necessary in the world as sunshine and rain, or the law of gravitation, and that industry would collapse without them. When they hear Socialists denouncing masters for their tyranny, and saying masters are not needed, they either grin and walk away, or get angry and threaten to duck the speakers in a horse-pond. They believe masters are intellectually and morally superior creatures to themselves, and they elect them to School Boards, Town Councils, and Parliament.

Of course, all working-men are not so stupid as I have represented above; not by any means. But the great majority decidedly are. I have said these things not because I dislike or despise working-men—I am a working-man myself. I have spoken thus to shame them into braver and manlier behaviour, to rouse the truer and higher instincts which I know they possess. Working-men as fathers, brothers, sons, and friends are right enough. But in relation to their masters and one another in their workshops, and in relation to their own class interests, they are—or, at least, the most of them are—sneaks, flunkeys, cowards, slaves, traitors, and nincompoops! and if they don't know it they ought to! It isn't my fault anyhow if they don't—heaven help them!

J. BRUCE GLASIER.

WORKMEN, ARISE!

WRITTEN BY E. DYKE, A CABMAN, ABOUT 1883.

(Reprinted by Request.)

AIR—"The Blue Alsatian Mountains."

By the side of a bright river which through a meadow ran
He spent his happy childhood, until the child became a man—
Until the child became a man.

Then tales of distant cities determined him to go
And view the boasted glories, the fruits of thousands' woe.

Chorus—

This opened his eyes with a sad surprise
To see the half-starved workers increase the rich man's prize.

Then he formed a resolution, for he heard the workers' wails,
To increase their joy and knowledge, from their eyes remove the scales—
From their eyes remove the scales.

But those he laboured hard for and those for whom he fought
Strive against each other, and not the foes they ought.

Workmen, arise! your labour you must prize;
You sell it far too cheaply, so your lives are choked with sighs.

His toils and truths were fruitless, so the leisured classes rose
And flung him into prison, where he wears a convict's clothes—
Where he wears a convict's clothes.

And heedless of his anguish, and of the truths he taught,
The workers fight each other, and not the foes they ought.

Working men, arise! obey his stifled cries;
Unite and fight together until each oppressor dies!

CORRESPONDENCE.

"SOCIALISM V. INDIVIDUALISM IN LEICESTER."

SIRS,—I have only just seen the letter from Mr. Barclay in your issue of Jan. 26th. Before he wrote you such a glowing description under the above heading, he should have taken care to inform himself on the facts. Mrs. Fawcett did not lecture here as an Individualist, and indeed probably thinks Individualism quite as bad as Socialism. Mr. Reed kindly came down as a substitute, the lecturer announced being ill. He only knew he was coming two days before, and his lecture was not one of the series on Individualism arranged for. As a fact four were arranged, of which we have had one, so Mr. Barclay is rather early with his song of triumph, besides which he can hardly be said to be unbiassed in his judgment, and his letter does not read like a cool, impartial criticism.

I don't know why Mr. Clarke's lecture should be singled out of the Fabian series, as though that were the only one that the Individualists admired. I am a pronounced Individualist myself, and I may say that I congratulate the Fabian Society on all the lectures, and think they are most fortunate in having such able lecturers to advance their cause. It has been a great pleasure to us to listen to them, none the less a pleasure I hope because we disagreed with them. We believe them to be earnest men, imbued with a horror for the evils of life, and trying to find a remedy for them. My firm hope and belief is that by hammering away with our various theories, we shall gradually evolve a far higher form of society than we have at present.—Yours truly,
SYDNEY A. GIMSON.

19, Upper Tichborne Street, Leicester, February 1, 1889.

It is not so much this literary piracy which exasperates me as the intolerable Anglo-Saxon hypocrisy of the austere Englishmen, who turn up their eyes in holy horror when any mention is made of what they are fond of calling French vices. They would have the world believe that all the evils of their social system are imported from us, and they seem to consider me the incarnation of all that is worst in France. Such Pharisaical prudery is sickening. Let those who presume to condemn my writings read Ben Jonson, and Smollett, and Byron, and say whether in the whole range of French literature they can find anything more coarse, and indelicate. If you walk along the Rue de Rivoli you will find vile books in abundance. It is a significant fact that they are written in English. But what is the literary food which they offer their well-trained daughters? They deny them the tainted French novel, and substitute moral, oh, highly moral, English and American newspapers. And what do these unsullied buds of womanhood learn in the same moral sheets? They learn that in England, as elsewhere, woman is woman whatever her rank and station, and that man remains man in spite of titles or pretensions. They are served every morning at the breakfast tables with a detailed account of abominations and depravities, and I would respectfully ask if all this sensational news is any the less hideous because it is truth, because it is the work of the police reporter instead of the literary artist?—M. Zola.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The Midland miners, having settled the wage question till the end of June, are using the interval to draft a better scheme of working for the future.

Goods guards and firemen on the Great Western Railway are asking for ten hours and higher wages, and are rather indignant at the way in which they are being treated.

Northumberland colliery proprietors have offered an advance, on the basis of a sliding scale, equivalent to about five per cent. The offer will be laid before the men, who claim 10 per cent.

In Derbyshire, the reactionary candidates for the County Council have so beaten their opponents, that mine-owners and other large employers are plucking up courage to propose reductions.

MINERS' FEDERATION.—At a meeting of representatives of the Miners National Union at Leeds, January 30th, Mr. Burt, M.P., presiding, a resolution was adopted declaring a federation of all mining districts imperatively necessary.

Railwaymen are so pleased and flattered by the "polite recognitions" of the A.S.R.S. which railway companies occasionally make, that one is almost tempted to wish they could meet with an old-fashioned rebuff that would give their backbones a needed stiffening.

LIMERICK—CARTERS' STRIKE.—A strike occurred amongst the carters in Limerick on Saturday 2nd, against a reduction of 2d. per load. The house of one man who went to work at the reduced rate was broken into by the strikers. Five were arrested, and were remanded for a week.

ENGINE-KEEPERS' STRIKE.—The engine men at Newton Colliery, Lanarkshire, came out on strike on Sunday morning, Jan. 27th, for an advance of six per shift—a wage of 4s. per day. The pits have been idle, and the colliers have expressed warm sympathy with the strikers, and refuse to risk their lives in descending the pits with strange engine-men.

SMALL CHAIN TRADE.—There is likely to be a serious dispute at Cradley Heath, the operatives making special and best chains having decided not to continue working at prices specified in the "revised" list, the half-inch chain having been reduced 4d. per cwt. They contend that in the face of a rising market it is unreasonable to expect them to submit to a reduction.

GIRLS IN LONDONDERRY LINEN FACTORIES.—A representative of the factory girls of Londonderry has applied to the secretary of the London Trades Council for information to enable the girls who are mainly engaged in linen manufacture to band themselves together for trade protection and benefit purposes, on the lines upon which Bryant and May's match-girls are organised. A copy of the rules of the Match-girls' Union and other information has been sent them.

GLASGOW TRADES' COUNCIL.—The following motion was carried by a large majority at their meeting on January 30th: "That this Council expresses its warmest sympathy with the pipe-moulders who were convicted at Falkirk a few days ago for merely exercising what we believe to be the right of every worker in the United Kingdom—viz, the right of advising or influencing their fellow-workers not to lend their help to the employers when a dispute existed in connection with their trade."

CARDIFF TRAMWAY CONDUCTORS.—The whole of the conductors on the Cardiff tramways struck on Tuesday. A notice had been given them to pay a deposit of £2 each as security for good behaviour. They demurred, and when the manager put fresh men on the cars for the purpose of being instructed, the conductors struck. There is some excitement in the town over the event. As we go to press (Wednesday, 6th) it is reported the police decline to interfere unless actual assaults take place, but they have ordered all the temporary conductors off the cars, on the ground that they are unlicensed. The traffic is almost entirely at a standstill. Gangs of strikers are parading the streets, but they are quiet and orderly.

CHAINMAKERS' WAGES.—The Wages Board in the South Staffordshire small chain trade have adopted a revised list of prices which conceded an advance of 10 per cent. in workmen's wages, to be paid on and after Monday, Feb. 4th. Mr. Hingly, M.P., who is a large employer, has advised the operatives to refuse work at factories where the masters decline to grant the advance, on the ground that there is no necessity for the people to work at prices at which they are unable to earn a living.—At a meeting on Jan. 30th of employers in the block chain trade in the South Staffordshire and East Worcestershire districts, held at Cradley Heath, it was decided to concede advances in prices from 12 to 25 per cent., the average being 18 per cent. The decision will avert a threatened strike.

LURGAN HEMSTITCHING AND VEINING TRADE.—The public meeting held on Wednesday by the 500 or 600 female operatives, on strike with the express purpose of preparing the way for a settlement, seems to have only widened the breach between employers and employed. On Thursday there was a meeting of delegates from nearly all factories in town; as result, circulars were sent to the different firms requesting them to appoint an arbitrator, who should meet the arbitrator on behalf of the workers—Mr. W. Livingston, T. C.—for the purpose of considering terms of settlement. Only one small firm sent any reply whatever to the circular, and it is stated that many employers have distinctly declared that they will not consent to any arbitration in which Mr. Livingston, T. C., may be engaged. There are, in all, thirteen factories in Lurgan, of which six are now on strike.

ENGINEERS' CONFERENCE IN NEWCASTLE.—A conference of employers in the North-East Coast engineering trade and representatives of the workmen's Grand Council was held on 31st, at County Hotel, Newcastle. The meeting was convened for discussing a demand from the men for an advance of 2s. per week. The circular giving notice of demand was dated January 9th, and the notice expired on February 4th. The number of men affected is between 14,000 and 15,000, including non-unionists, and comprising fitters, turners, pattern-makers, smiths, brass finishers, coppersmiths, planers, and slotters, in the Tyne, Wear, Tees, and Hartlepoons. The meeting lasted between three and four hours. The employers offered to grant an advance of 1s. per week, and another advance of 1s. to take effect in July. The representatives of the men intimated that they had no power to make any such engagement. They would, however, lay the proposition before the men at the various lodges. It is stated that the wages of the workmen generally are about 32s. per week as against 37s. in 1883, and the advance asked for would make their wages to run at 34s. per week.

THE BROKEN SIXPENCE.—In reply to the colliers' demand for a sixpence on their day's wages, some of the East Lothian coal-masters have posted up notices conceding 3d. per day. At a meeting of the colliers in the Bathgate district on Jan. 31st, the chairman said they were led to believe through the press that at a meeting of the masters of Airdrie, Bathgate, and Slamnan, it was agreed that they should get an advance of 10 per cent., but when it came it was only 5 per cent. "They halved the sixpence in twa." A motion was unanimously agreed to that no work should be done until the 10 per cent. be granted.—At a delegates meeting of Lanarkshire miners on Jan. 31st, it was the unanimous opinion that all miners in the county should press for an advance to what would equalise concessions to 1s. per day, as given in several districts. The colliers at Fouldhouse have been conceded 5 per cent., with the promise of another 5 per cent. when the Benhar and Bathgate districts get it. Coal was advanced at Preston-grange Collieries on Jan. 30th 1s. per ton, which makes the product of one day's work of a collier about 4s. more valuable to the master, and the latter has, consequently, philanthropically conceded 6d. a-day advance to the former. These niggardly concessions are an earnest of what the men, if they dared, might do.

SEAMEN'S STRIKE.—The seamen and firemen of the entire fleet of Channel and coasting steamers have struck for an increase. 1,700 men came out in Glasgow and not more than fifty of these are non-union men; by now the number out is nearer 3,000, and the strike is extending every day. The Allan Line had a friendly interview with their men, which ended in a satisfactory arrangement, they having frankly conceded the men's demands—viz, for seamen and firemen on westward route, 90s. a month, and for southward route £4 for seamen and £4 5s. for firemen a month. The other lines have managed to get a few boats to sail, manned by a scratch crew of "scabs," made up of officers from their other ships which are detained by the strike, some "yachtsmen," clerks, stewards, and one or two mean despicable colliers—probably Orangemen—who are always ready to act as traitors to their class. The captains, mates, pursers, clerks, and stewards will soon tire of doing firemen's work, and the lesson they will get at it will, perhaps, moderate their ideas of the relative worth of the assistance they receive from their sweating fellow workers in earning a livelihood. The strike had increased the numbers on the local roll of the union on Jan. 31st to over three thousand men. The men's demand is for 30s. per week, and it was reported on Thursday that Mr. Burns had offered 30s. in one boat, but Mr. Wilson, the secretary of the union, impressed upon the men that their watchword should be: No vessel should leave belonging to Mr. Burns till the rise was conceded to the whole of them. Although the men pay their share of the police-rates, the police are all on duty fighting and bullying for the masters alone. The lessons of this strike are convincing the men how necessary it is for all classes of workers to be united against their common foe. The workers and employers are two distinct nations, and if when two nations are at war the horsemen, foot-soldiers, and navy of the one were to act independently of each other, disregarding each other's difficulties of position, while all the forces in the opposite camp were united, the result can easily be guessed. The Messrs. Burns have posters advertising for seamen and firemen at 27s. per week, and the union has out counter-posters telling Mr. Burns to keep his 27s. till he is able to pay 30s. The owners are using every effort to break up the union of the men, and are threatening not to take any old hands back when a settlement does come. It has been said that in stopping work without warning, the men made themselves liable to prosecution by the masters. But it seems that in acting as they have done the men have kept within their right, the engagement being terminable on either side without notice. There is no uniform practice in the payment of wages, some firms paying weekly and others fortnightly. The strike is rapidly extending as vessels arrive in port. About 150 quay-labourers have struck to assist the seamen, and a mass meeting was held on Sunday with that object, several members of the Trades Council taking part. On Monday, another mass meeting took place in the Typographical Hall, which included seamen and firemen, to promote an association among the quay labourers, and to mark the public sense of their splendid behaviour in standing firmly alongside their fellow-workers in the struggle against wrong. The boiler scalers employed in the shore gang of the Allan Line, also struck on Monday for an increase. They number about a hundred, and are paid at the rate of 5d. per hour; they demand an advance of 1d. per hour. Many boardmen are parading the streets in the vicinity of the harbour carrying boards, warning passengers against risking their lives in boats "sent to sea under-manned with incompetent crews." "DON'T GO WITH BOATS THAT CARRY SCAB CREWS." So long as the workers confine their attention to the wage-system, so long will they always be placed at a disadvantage. Profits off their labour under the present system must be made for the masters by hook or crook. At present they can only say: "The better things we cannot see, because they are not yet in sight." The other ports at present affected are Greenock, Ardrossan, Belfast, Dundee, Liverpool, and Londonderry. At Liverpool, the Cork Steamship Co. has conceded 4s. 6d. a-week, but the other companies are holding out.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

ARCHBISHOP CORRIGAN of New York is displeased with the members of the Anti-Poverty Society. This society is composed of the followers of the ex-priest Dr. McGlynn. "His grace" has issued a circular which was read last Sunday from all the pulpits belonging to his diocese, in which he declares attendance at meetings of the Anti-Poverty Society a "reserved case"—that is, he practically puts everybody attending a meeting of this society under the ban. He gives for so doing the following explanation:

"In the first place, the successor of St. Peter, addressing and teaching the Universal Church, has affirmed that 'the right of property is sanctioned by the law of nature.' The founder of the Anti-Poverty Society proclaims the opposite. The Holy Father has branded the doctrines of this unhappy leader as 'false and pernicious.' He has stated that 'he will never retract them.' The Holy Father, through his organ, the supreme tribunal of the Holy Office, of which he himself is the President, has declared attendance at these reunions 'an open and public sin.'"

Corrigan appended to the circular McGlynn's declaration of faith. The words which are objectionable to the boss of the Catholic Church in this declaration are:

"I have taught, and I shall continue to teach, in speeches and writings, as long as I live, that land is rightfully the property of the people in common, and that private ownership of land is against natural justice, no matter by what civil or ecclesiastical laws it may be sanctioned, and I would bring about instantly, if I could, such change of laws all the world over as would confiscate private property in land, without one penny of compensation to the miscalled owners."

It seems that the Catholic authorities are still unable to grasp the questions of the day, but this lack of intelligence after all is from our point of view their best quality.

Bonfield, Schaack, and Co. are cornered closer and closer. The Chicago Times during the past week has been accusing the Chicago police force of being implicated in frauds upon private individuals and city. It asserts that requisition allowances were illegally collected and unaccounted for by Bonfield's department; that wholesale opportunities for the perpetration of fraud were taken advantage of by the "force"; and that private policemen while supposed to be on duty have been engaged to build, repair, and decorate houses belonging to Bonfield and Schaack. It also asserts that public moneys have been diverted into "improper" channels—that is, into policemen's pockets. The stolen property found in the possession of Loewenstein was fully identified by the owners; and altogether the outlook is not very brilliant for the blue-coat loafers. The Times puts a long series of questions, which accuse Bonfield of various disgraceful proceedings; and Captain Schaack is also subjected to an interrogatory. The only answer the Times has received up to date was that a capias was issued on the 18th inst. for the arrest of the proprietor of the Times on a charge of criminal libel preferred by Captain Schaack. The court fixed the bail at 4,000 dollars.

The Times in its duel is ably seconded by the Chicago Daily Mail. It may be interesting to recall to the memories of the readers of the Commonweal that it was the Chicago Mail which wrote on the 1st of May 1886 in an editorial: "These two fellows, Parsons and Spies, have been at work fomenting disorder for the last ten years. . . . Mark them to-day; keep them in view; hold them personally responsible for any trouble that occurs; make an example of them if trouble does occur." And to-day, after about three years, the Mail openly states that the Haymarket massacre was caused through Bonfield's bloodthirstiness. And yet he did at that time nothing but what the Times, the Mail, and suchlike bid him to do.

Talk about bourgeois gratitude! Pshaw! Such a thing never existed. Gary to-day is a mental and physical wreck, the laughing-stock of the bench in Chicago for his childish fears. Over half of the policemen who made the attack on the peaceable working-men's meeting in Chicago on the 4th of May 1886 have since then been dismissed from the "force" for perpetual drunkenness, insubordination, etc. Bonfield, Schaack, and "Jake" Loewenstein are accused of the vilest crimes by the high priests of bourgeoisdom, the editors of the capitalistic sheets. E. Furthmann, the assistant-prosecuting attorney, has been obliged to leave the city service and he is to-day eking out a miserable livelihood by doing Bonfield's legal dirty work. Half of the jury who returned a verdict of guilty against the Anarchists have been permitted to fail in business; and last but not least, Governor Dick Oglesby, the man who refused to "pardon" our five, is accused of having misappropriated public moneys.

Mr Shumway, a senator in Springfield, Ill., legislature, introduced a few days ago the following resolution:

"Whereas, the auditor's biennial report issued in the year 1886 (in that year Oglesby was already governor of Illinois) shows that the sum of 18,705 dollars over and above the salary allowed by law was expended at the executive mansion for various items including dry goods, toilet soaps, combs, brushes, cards, decorations, chamois-skins, cooking utensils, mirrors, hammocks, washing, table-ware, and many other articles not necessary for the repair of the executive mansion; he it resolved by the senate, the house concurring herein, that a special joint-committee be appointed whose duty it shall be to examine the auditor's report issued in the year 1886 and ascertain whether the said expenditures in said report are all warranted by law."

Verily, as Heraklitus of Ephesus had it, all things flow. There is only Grinnell left now; but as comrade Holmes of Chicago says, every dog has his day, and surely Nemesis will reach him too.

Newark, N.J., January 23, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

"I detest leading men. I've seen enough of these gentry in my time. They are like goats in a young plantation: they do harm everywhere. They stand in the path of a free man, wherever he turns, and I should be glad if we could exterminate them like other noxious animals. The fact is that the strongest man upon earth is he who stands most alone."—Henrik Ibsen.

RUSH-LIGHTS.—An extravagant eccentricity of language, which may mean anything or nothing, is the sure characteristic of a certain kind of popularity which distinguishes the sensationalists in politics, journalism, and religion. The first have been called "Tory Democrats," the second "New Journalists," and the third "Ranters." It is characteristic of all three that they are neither practical or permanent factors in their respective departments as public teachers and leaders. The "Tory Democrat" is now an "extinct volcano," the "New Journalist" is fast approaching the same,—although occasionally there still arises a flicker of alarm in that quarter which is generally extinguished like a farthing dip, leaving no trace behind but a smut and a smell,—but the "Ranter" is presently roaring his "gags" from the holy of holies. The righteous people of the Free McCrie-Roxburgh "Circus" in Edinburgh are beginning to be acknowledged in Scotland as the best rearers of "Ranters." They it was who gave John McNeill to London—a man who can even produce "suppressed laughter" at the sacred Sunday services in Spurgeon's Tabernacle. It is reported in the press that they are about to call the Rev. John Robertson, of Stonehaven Free Church, as Mr. McNeill's successor. The former is not behind the latter with pulpit "gags." In speaking at Stonehaven, on January 30th, he perpetrated the following, which is good for the paid officer of a rigid Calvinist organisation:—"The communicants on the Church rolls were an untrained mob. If polling-booths were put at each church door, and the record collected, they would vote for a distillery on the golden streets and lager-beer saloons on the banks of the river of life (laughter)." . . . "They were to take the citadel of the devil with a rush." Now that is surely an honest confession. On its present lines, the Church is more likely to take and possess the citadel of the devil than the citadel of god. This statement also suggests that the sensationalist sermonisers of to-day need some other name than "ranters" to designate them. The preachers of the old doctrines a hundred years ago were called "Old Lights," and those of the new doctrines "New Lights"; but our storming preachers of to-day are sound in doctrine (they have more sound than sense), and they could all fittingly be classified as "Rushlights." This name would also do for the new journalists and politicians.—G. McL.

IN THE STOREHOUSE OF NATURE.

(REPRINTED FROM "KING LABOUR'S SONG-BOOK," 1861.)

IN the storehouse of Nature there's wealth for each corner,
I care not how many or few they may be;
When the bare limbs of Winter appeal to the Summer,
She sends them new vestures befitting and free.
There's no miserly thought to chide her for giving,
No partisan prompting to stamp her with blame;
But directing her favours to those who are living,
She trusts in man's justice to keep him from shame.

All the birds in the air, all the fish in the river,
The wealth that lies buried in land and in sea,
Are the bountiful gifts of a bountiful giver,
Who scorns the injustice that robs you and me.
There is not in this wide world a nation so crowded,
That one human being need perish from dearth;
Look around! in the sunshine, when landscapes are clouded,
And tell me if Sorrow be king of the earth?
All we get we return, there's no waste in creation,
No miser e'er carried his store to the grave;
When Labour and Hope guide the strength of a nation,
Kind heaven will rain plenty to succour and save.

JOHN BEDFORD LENO.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Executive.—At last Council meeting, in answer to invitation from Norwich Branch, it was agreed to send F. Kitz to take part in Mowbray's Farewell Demonstration in Norwich on Feb. 10th.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, March 4, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Propaganda Fund.—Collected at Regent's Park, 1s.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.
FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—Nicoll, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 1s.; J. Presburg, 6d.; H. Davis, 6d.; Blundell, 6d.; Rose, 2s.; Seglie, 6d.; R. Turner, 6d.; J. Turner, 6d.; Latham, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; Deane, 6d.; Sparling, 6d.; M. Morris, 6d.; Samuels, 1s.; Mainwaring, 2s.; J. Presburg, 6d.; B. W., 6d.; Solomons, 6d.; Friedenholz, 1s.; Matlouski, 4d.; Diemsheitz, 3d.; and V. Dave, 2s. 6d.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON MEMBERS' MEETING, Feb. 4th.—The principal subject for consideration was the Commonweal. Several valuable suggestions were made by different members present for reducing the cost, so that the paper may be continued in its present form. It was decided that all suggestions be considered and reported on by the Ways and Means Committee.

LONDON OUTDOOR PROPAGANDA.—Good meetings were held last Sunday at Hammersmith, Fulham, and Regent's Park; Hyde Park meeting stopped by weather. Short meeting held at Leaman Street. A slight improvement in the sale of Weal at all stations.

CLERKENWELL.—No lecture delivered last Sunday, as members attended Mowbray's benefit at Berner Street.—S. P.

EAST LONDON.—There being a general desire among East End members of S. L. for better organisation with a view to more effective propaganda work in this district, a meeting was held on Sunday afternoon last, and it was agreed to unite the several small branches in the district, and to establish one strong branch in their place. H. Davis was elected secretary pro tem, W. Diggins treasurer, and G. Cores librarian pro tem. We hope shortly to commence some propaganda here. Members and friends are requested to observe notice in another column.

HAMMERSMITH.—Fair meeting at Latimer Road, Sunday morning; speakers, Tarleton, Mordhurst, Bullock, A. J. Smith; choir sang; Commonweal sold fairly. Rain prevented Welje Road meeting in evening. At Kelmescott House (George Bernard Shaw (Fabian) lectured in something like his old style on "National Wealth"; several questions and brisk discussion. £1 donation from T. E. W. has been handed over by vote to funds of Fulham branch.—G. M.

ABERDEEN.—At indoors meeting on 28th January. Hyndman's article, "Revolution or Reform" was read and discussed. No open-air meeting owing to intensely cold and stormy weather.—L.

GLASGOW.—On Sunday, at 2.30, Glasier and Joe Burgoyne addressed a large audience on Jail Square. At five o'clock the same speakers addressed a meeting at Paisley Road, where 2s. 8½d. was collected for Seamen's strike. In the Maxwell Parish Church, at seven o'clock, our comrade Rev. John Glasse, Edinburgh, gave a vigorous and pronounced sermon in favour of Socialism to a crowded congregation.

ISWICH.—A good meeting held here on February 3rd; W. Moore, of Norwich, and C. Reynolds spoke. All Weals sold out. Mowbray will speak at Yarmouth next Sunday, at 11 a.m. The branch has secured a temporary room at 48 Row, next Co-operative Stores, and will hold their first meeting to-morrow (Monday night) where Reynolds will lay the principles of Socialism before the members.—G. R.

NORWICH.—Friday last large meeting of members held, important business transacted. The members have resolved to unite and make future propaganda a success. The following officers were appointed: A. T. Sutton re-elected secretary, A. Moore assistant secretary, G. Poyntz treasurer, W. Moore librarian. Sunday afternoon usual open-air meeting held in Market Place only for a short time, as we gave way to some friends taking our stand to hold meeting protesting against imprisonment of O'Brien, at which Mowbray also spoke. In evening Adams lectured in Gordon Hall to good audience on "Progress and Poverty"; meeting opened by singing "No Master"; chair taken by Darley: very interesting lecture, supported by the chairman; Poyntz and Mowbray concluding with a general discussion. Good sale of Commonweal, and collections during the day.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

- O'erkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card, to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30 p.m. Lecture on Sunday February 10, at 8.30. W. Blundell "A Socialist Line of Demarcation." Sun. 17, Brookes, "The French Revolution of '89." Sun. 24, Mrs. Schack, "How Women can Help the Socialist Movement." Sun. March 3, H. Davis, "Objections to Socialism Answered."
- East London.—26 Cawley Road, Victoria Park. Next meeting will be held Sunday February 10, at 4.30 p.m. Secretaries of dissolved branches (London Fields, Bethnal Green, and Hackney) please attend. Members and friends desiring to join this branch should at once send their names to the secretary, H. Davis 97 Boston Street, Hackney Road.
- Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Sunday February 10, at 8 p.m., R. Catterson Smith, "A Sketch of the French Revolution of 1789" (Carlyle).
- Hammersmith.—Kelmescott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday February 10, at 8 p.m., E. Belfort Bax, "The Marxian Theory of Value." Wednesday 13, at 8 p.m., Mrs. Annie Besant (Fabian), "Physical Force."
- Hoxton.—12, Basing Place, Kingsland Rd. Business meetings held every Friday evening at 9 o'clock.
- Mitcham.—Meets every Sunday, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road, at 11 a.m.
- North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Friday February 8, Debate between G. Cores and White (S.D.F.).
- Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.
- Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.
- Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

- Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Secretary, P. Barron, 14 Ann Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.
- Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.
- Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meeting every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secy.
- Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.
- Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street. All persons desirous of joining are requested to communicate with A. Caulon at above address.
- Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m. William Morris will lecture on "Equality" on Wednesday 13th, at 8 p.m. Place of meeting will be announced at Sunday joint-meetings of S.D.F. and S.L.
- Galaithels (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secy.
- Gallatown and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn St.
- Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.—SPECIAL NOTICE.—William Morris will lecture on "The Society of the Future" in the Albion Hall, on Sunday 10th February, at 7 o'clock. Admission: body of hall, collection at door; gallery, 6d. Gathering of members in rooms on Sunday at 1.30 to meet Wm. Morris.
- Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. McGill, 22 Gilmour St. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.
- Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Rd. and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.
- Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.
- Norwich.—Sunday, at 3 p.m., a great farewell demonstration will be held in the Market Place to Mowbray, who is leaving for London; members of the branch will take part, also Frank Kitz (London). At 8 p.m., in the Gordon Hall, Mowbray will give positively his last address. Monday, at 8 p.m., in the Gordon Hall, addresses will be delivered to the members only; all comrades should attend. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Gordon Hall open from 8 until 10.30. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Association.
- Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street Wednesday, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

Yarmouth.—All desiring to join branch in course of formation here should communicate with C. Reynolds, Row 45, George Street, who is acting as Secretary pro tem.

All persons who sympathise with the views of the Socialist League are earnestly invited to communicate with the above addresses, and if possible help us in preparing for the birth of a true society, based on equality, brotherhood, and freedom for all.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 10.

- 11.30...Latimer Road Station...Hammersmith Branch
11.30...Regent's Park...Parker
11.30...Walham Green, opp. Station...The Branch
3.30...Hyde Park...McCormick
3.30...Victoria Park...Hicks
7.30...Broad Street, Soho...The Branch
7.30...Clerkenwell Green...Nicoll
7.30...Weltje Rd., Ravenscourt Pk...Hammersmith

Tuesday.

- 8.30...Fulham—back of Walham Green Ch. ...Branch

EAST END.

SUNDAY 10.

- Leman Street, Shadwell 11...Mrs. Schaack.

PROVINCES.

- Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.
Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.
Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.
Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3.
Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

NORTH HACKNEY RADICAL CLUB, 83 Church Street, Stoke Newington.—Sunday February 10, at 8.30, Rev. J. Cartmel-Robinson, "The Puritan Rebellion."

INTERNATIONAL W. M.'S CLUB, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.—A GRAND MASQUERADE will take place on Saturday February 16, in aid of the revolutionary propaganda. Tickets 6d. each.

MONARCH COFFEE HOUSE, Bethnal Green Road.—"Large Families the Sole and Only Cause of Poverty." Dr. C. Drysdale will lecture on the above on Sunday February 10.

THE SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION—The Committee will meet at 63 Lincoln's Inn Fields, on Saturday Feb. 8 at 7.30 p.m., to enroll members and receive subscriptions.

LEICESTER.—A course of lectures on "Socialism, its Aims and Principles" is being delivered in Leicester Secular Hall. The seventh and concluding lecture will be delivered on Sunday March 3rd by Hubert Bland—subject, "The Outlook."

SOUTH LONDON.—Friends who will help to establish a Branch of the Socialist League in South London will please place themselves in communication with C. Henze, 41 Bolton Street, Thomas Street, Kennington Park, S.E., or by letter to H. Hopkins, 17 Gairloch Road, Shenley Road, Peckham, S.E.

DRUM AND FIFE BAND.—Next meeting will be held at 13 Farringdon Road, Sunday February 10, at 7 p.m. Contributions in aid of the funds are urgently needed, and should be forwarded to E. Turner, treasurer, care of F. Kitz, 13 Farringdon Rd. Any comrade capable of taking the post of instructor to the Band is requested to communicate with G. Cores, Secretary pro tem, Farringdon Road.

IPSWICH LABOUR LEAGUE.—Pioneer Club, Theatre Yard, Tacket Street.—Sunday February 3, a debate took place between Thomas and Spinks on "Is a Representative Government Necessary?" Its uselessness and evils were well put. Questions put and fairly answered negatively. Next Sunday there will be a debate between Spinks and Read on "Are Parliamentary Governments Failures?"

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

COMMONWEAL OFFICE, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

A COMRADE who has been discharged from employment for his opinions, and has been out of work for some months, wishes to sell off some of his books.

(Nearly new)

- Volney's Ruins of Empires. 1s. 3d.
Is Socialism Sound? Debate between Annie Besant and G. W. Foote. 1s.
Mistakes of Moses (Ingersoll). 10d.
Essays on Socialism (Besant). 1s. 6d.
Christianity or Secularism? Debate between G. W. Foote and Dr. McCann. 10d.
Co-operative Commonwealth (Gronlund). 1s. 6d.
A More Excellent Way (C. Howell). A Socialist novel. 3s. (pub. 6s.).

(Soiled)

- History of French Revolution (Besant). 1s. 6d. (pub. 3s. 6d.)
The Devil's Pulpit (Rev. R. Taylor). Astronomico-Theological Discourses. 2 vols. 1s. 6d. (pub. 6s.).
Freethinker's Text-book, Part I. (Bradlaugh). 1s. 3d.
Scott's Poetical Works, with portrait. 1s. 6d. (pub. 3s. 6d.)

(All bound in cloth)

Anyone desirous of purchasing please apply to W. H., 152 Pomeroy Street, New Cross, S.E.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE LITERATURE.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. 1d.
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). 1d.
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Biju edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. 1d.
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. 1d.
"All for the Cause!" Song. Words by William Morris; Music by E. Belfort Bax. 4to, 4 pp. 6d. per dozen, 4s. 6d.
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. 6d.

LA REVUE SOCIALISTE.

EDITED BY BENOIT MALON.

8, Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SUMMARY OF THE JANUARY NUMBER.

"The Confluents of Socialism," B. Malon; "The Right to Strike, and its Consequences," P. Bailey; "Violence," G. Tridon; "Essay on Scientific Socialism," P. Argyriades; "Alcoholism," E. Fourniere; "Alarm Cry," A. Veber; "Socialist poetry," E. Herbel; "Mme. de Barrau," Emile de Morsier; "Social Movement," A. Verber; Correspondence; Books.

TERMS:—France, 6 months 9 francs, 12 months, 18 f.
Abroad, " 10 " 20.
Payments to be made to M. Rodolphe Simon, 8 Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SOCIALIST SONGS FOR POPULAR SINGING.

A Handy Collection. Contains 33 effective pieces from the pens of William Morris, Edward Carpenter, C. W. Beckett, J. Bruce Glasier, D. J. Nicoll, H. Halliday Sparling, and others. A number reprinted from the Commonweal and other sources. Should be in the hands of all Socialists.

Twopence. 1s. 4d. a-dozen.

Orders to be addressed to JAMES LEATHAM, 7 Jamaica Street, Aberdeen.

JULIUS BORDOLLO'S LABOUR NEWS AGENCY

213 Forsyth Street, New York City, U.S.A.]

American agency for the Commonweal. All Labour literature kept in stock. Send for list, post free.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE, at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 162.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE great demonstration against coercion in Ireland which took place on Sunday afternoon was rather spoiled by the very heavy snowfall which had taken place and which was still going on throughout the whole of the proceedings. Of course, as it was the weather, that was to blame, one could only "damn the nature of things" and endure the ill-hap with what philosophy one might. The Unionists have been chuckling over their foes' discomfort, and the Home Rulers have answered them with justifiable pride in the numbers and spirit of those who turned out; and the Socialists, who joined with all their hearts in the protest, and, with the advanced Radicals, formed the bulk of the meeting, are not quite heartbroken at the loss of a mere parade.

For these Home Rule demonstrations which lead to nothing but more demonstrations are getting rather played out. A real "demonstration" means something, and those who really "demonstrate" are there to show that they mean it. But these happy-hunting-grounds of the politician, we now know under the much-abused name, mean nothing but the keeping Radicals quiet and giving Socialists a chance of working off their steam, while the Whigs quietly play their part of the parliamentary game for all it is worth. There are men, even among Liberals, who are tolerably earnest; but the bulk of them—!

Putting Gladstone to one side, for he can with some show of reason plead age and infirmity, what ails Harcourt or John Morley that they should not go to Ireland and there demonstrate? They could at one and the same time show their hatred for the plank-bed argument and test for themselves its efficacy in converting a political opponent. Mr. T. P. O'Connor, even, might for once pluck up his courage to the point of incurring a slight personal risk. That would win him some of the respect he lacks now, and advertise the Star as well. Especially if he took his proprietors along with him.

We have given the same advice before: it was not taken. It will not be now. The fact of the matter being, that while the Tories are in earnest, the Whigs are not. For a long while the game of party politics was played in "gentlemanly" style. The opposing forces marched and counter-marched with much bravery and banners. Nobody meant anything, outside an inconvenient small minority who could be kept within bounds. But the people are waking even in England, and the Tories begin to see that the game is growing dangerous for them; the people have an ugly habit of getting serious, and then they refuse to be frightened at pasteboard bogies.

So the Tories must needs recur to the old-fashioned friends and allies of law-'n'-order, the plank-bed and the prison-cell. They must leave off playing at government and begin to govern. The Whigs are half in sympathy with them, knowing that they would have to do the same were they in the same place; as they have done, and will do again. But they must go on with the game; and as they are too cowardly to make it earnest, they play monkey to the Radical and Home-Rule cat, ever ready to claim advantages and repudiate responsibility. At the same time they make the most of their time while the temporary alliance lasts, to demoralise the party of progress as much as they can and retard its advance.

If the wheel takes another turn, and a strong Whig ministry comes into power, we shall speedily see what a giant fraud is the "Great Liberal Party," and what uncanny creations are the fruit of it. Meanwhile we must not be led away too far by the glory of great names and the bluster of the Star. Our aim is a single one, and reached by one road. So far as any one will walk with us, we are willing to allow him to keep our company; but that should not mean slackening our pace to suit his. The passing agitations of the time are helpful to us, or not, as we make use of them; and in doing so we must never lose sight of the inevitable revolt against the commercial system for which we prepare, and which is coming with ever-increasing speed. S.

It is extraordinary how little the average middle-class newspaper requires to build up a charge of incitement to "crime" on the part of an Irish Home Ruler or an English Socialist. Here is the Echo trying to prove that Mr. O'Brien deserves his four months because he incited the people to kill Inspector Martin. Here are the sentences of Mr. O'Brien's speech which the Echo relies upon to prove this most extraordinary assertion.

It appears that Mr. O'Brien in his speech at Ballyral, after recommending Irishmen to follow the example of the Primrose League, continued as follows: "Yes, you must do this, there is no alternative but the bludgeon." The Echo then points out that on Sunday week an Irish mob acted on Mr. O'Brien's advice, and bludgeoned Inspector Martin to death.

I am at a loss, however, to see what connection there can possibly be between the two events. There is not the slightest attempt on the part of Mr. O'Brien to recommend the use of the bludgeon, but only the peaceful methods of the Primrose League, pointing out at the same time that if the boycott were not used extreme measures would become necessary; but how this can be tortured into a kind of general injunction to settle the hash of police inspectors on every available opportunity, puzzles the wit of man to discover.

The Unionist press does not fail to do its utmost to work up most agonising and realistic accounts of the condition of the said inspector's smashed skull. The same thing was done in Chicago with regard to the wounds of policemen injured by the explosion of the bomb. If these people would only use the utmost resources of realism in describing the ghastly injuries inflicted by English Gatling guns and grape-shot upon the bodies of the unfortunate savages, it might perhaps have given the general public a higher opinion of their humanity.

It is all very well to go into hysterics over the killing of a police inspector, but how is it that these same journals which are so eloquent upon this topic could not find a graphic paragrapher to pile up the agony over the fearful condition of the heads of the poor workmen bludgeoned to death by police last year in Trafalgar Square? If the murder of four workmen is such a small matter, surely we may conclude that the killing of a policeman is also of no very great consequence.

For my part, the trimming cowardice of the Liberal leaders, who are so very anxious to protest their detestation of this act of resistance against the law, is about as mean as it can be. After all, what did the people do but defend the person of a man they loved and admired against the legal outrages of the prison cell; and if the emissary of legal brutality came to grief, what reason is there for these Pecksniffian tears over his fate?

The Star seems suddenly to have reawakened to the extraordinary merits of its chosen candidates. The men who last week were "timid, vacillating, and commonplace," are our democratic heroes now they have been bullied into accepting the Star list; they are "stalwarts" once again, say till their next fit of vacillation and timidity; so the world wags. If any one will take the trouble to collect the varied utterances of the Star during the ensuing year concerning its favourite councillors, it would doubtless form an interesting collection.

Mr. Firth had betrayed the people the other day, now "We have won and splendidly won, thanks largely to Mr. Firth's energy and good management," and the people of London may be happy in the knowledge that "We now have on the Council a majority large enough to make Our programme a happy reality for the people." O let us be joyful! The capitals in the quoted sentence are mine.

The wicked Tory is warned that if he dares to obstruct, something dreadful will happen to him. "Let the monopolists obstruct if they dare!" After this Titanic sentence I naturally expected to hear that they had got a new patent guillotine up in the Star office, that with the aid of the steam engine would cut off heads with the same rapidity as the press throws off copies of the paper; but I am greatly relieved to hear that the Star will only shatter the Tories into everlasting nothingness by a "protest" if they should be too daring.

Mr. John Morley prefers to lose his seat rather than accept that very moderate item of the Social Democratic Programme, an eight hour bill. He has, of course, plenty of objections from the practical point of view, though the only one which is really serious is the objection that it would do nothing to diminish sweating, as the worst forms of sweating occur when work is taken home by the slaves of that system.

Your objections are all very well, Mr. Morley; but what are we to gather from them? Is it that you think with us that nothing but a Social Revolution can really raise the condition of the workers, or have you some better plan for making misery more bearable than that of the Social Democrats? Or do you think that this is the best of all possible worlds managed in the best possible manner? We would like to know.

It has come at last to this. He who is not with us is against us, just as much if he is a superfine Liberal philosopher, whose works abound with passages of pretended sympathy for the people, or one of those who join in the "brutal feasts of the rich," heedless of the handwriting of doom upon the palace walls. The day has gone by for words, it is deeds that are needed now; and it is by deeds that we shall know our friends from our foes. That is the message of the people to Liberal and Tory alike.

D. N.

DISGRACEFUL FACTORY RULES.

MANY of our readers are ignorant of the inside of factory life; perhaps believing some of them that what they hear about it is exaggerated. In order, then, to give them an idea of its truth we offer the following little piece of realism, the "Rules and Regulations to be observed by the Work-People employed by Clarke, Nickolls and Coombs (Limited), Hackney Wick Confectionery Works, London, E.," which are given letter for letter from the printed copy issued by the firm. Inside the cover is printed in red the following:—

These Rules and Regulations will come in force on January 1st, 1889, and every employee of the Company, and all succeeding employees in their first engagements, will receive a copy free. In the event of any person leaving and presenting themselves for re-engagement, they must produce this copy, or if they are unable to do so, must procure a new copy, for which a charge of one penny will be made.

LODGE ACCOMMODATION.—A charge of one penny per week for each person is made for the use of the lodge. This penny will be deducted from wages. Those who stay in the lodge for meals will be required to pay an extra penny each per week. The persons in charge of the lodge will collect this extra penny.

FINES.—Any person on whom a fine may at any time be inflicted has a perfect right to refuse to pay the same by accepting the alternative of immediate dismissal. A fine once paid cannot be recovered.

Then begin the

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

1. Work to commence at 8 a.m. punctually, and to terminate at 7 p.m., except on Saturdays, when the Works will close at 2.30.
2. Fifty-six hours of actual work to be reckoned a week.
3. One hour allowed for dinner, 1 p.m. to 2 p.m., except on Saturdays when half-an-hour is allowed, 1 to 1.30 p.m.
4. Any one coming late will lose half-an-hour's pay. If twice late in one week to lose half-an-hour for the first and one hour for the second time, and if more than twice late to lose one hour for each time, including the first. No one allowed to come to work after 8.30 in the morning, nor later than 2 o'clock in the afternoon, except by permission of the Manager or of the General Foreman.

Note.—This rule applies to piece workers as well as day workers.

5. Every person on entering the Works both morning and afternoon must take their brass tickets from the board and deposit the same in the time box, any one omitting to do so will be marked absent and paid accordingly, but no one allowed to place in the time box any ticket other than their own, and any one so doing will be liable to immediate dismissal.

6. The gatekeeper will every morning and afternoon, make out a list of those numbers which he has marked as being either absent or late. This list will be hung up where it can easily be read, and every person is requested to examine it twice-a-day, and if they find that they have been marked late or absent by mistake must immediately report the same to the gatekeeper who, if satisfied that a mistake has been made, will alter his books accordingly.

7. No person is entitled to notice before dismissal, nor is any required before leaving, although wages will only be paid once a week.

8. Any person absent for a whole day without sending word to the General Foreman as to the cause of absence, will be considered as having left and be treated accordingly.

9. The time for each week to be made up to 7 p.m. on Thursday; overtime for that day to be carried forward to next week. Piece work also to be made up to Thursday night. Wages to be paid on Friday.

10. No one allowed to leave the premises during working hours without permission of the Manager or of the General Foreman, and no one allowed to leave at any time except by the proper entrance at the gatekeeper's lodge.

11. No child, young person, or woman, allowed on any part of the premises except the lodge during meal-times, and no man allowed on the premises except such as may be specially required.

12. No person allowed to enter any room except where he or she works or has business.

13. To prevent accident or damage to machinery, everyone is strictly forbidden to go near any machinery except employed thereat. Damage done to machinery, implements, materials, goods, or property, to be paid for by those causing such. And any person being cognizant of any infringement of this rule and not immediately reporting the same to the Foreman of their Department, or to the General Foreman, Manager or Directors, will be treated as an accomplice of the offender.

14. For the support of the Medical Club, one penny per week will be deducted from the wages of every person employed in the works, in return for which they will be entitled (with certain exceptions) to receive Medicine and Medical Attendance in the event of illness while in the Firm's employ.

Note.—As a matter of convenience 6d. will be deducted every 6 weeks instead of 1d. weekly from those whose earnings amount to or exceed 10s. per week.

15. No tea or coffee making or drinking allowed on any part of the premises except the lodge.

16. No intoxicating liquors to be brought on any part of the premises including the lodge, and no smoking allowed.

17. Reading of books or newspapers in the works is not allowed.

18. No swearing or obscene language allowed, and quarrelling and striking strictly prohibited. And any annoyance caused to fellow workpeople will be treated as a misdemeanour.

Note.—This rule applies to all not only while at work, but also when coming to or going from the Works.

19. No one allowed to use sugar sacks as aprons, or aprons made of sugar sacks, whether belonging to the firm or otherwise.

20. Every one must be decently dressed and cleanly in appearance.

21. No person allowed to light the gas but a Foreman, Forewoman, or his or her Deputy, who must use the lamp or taper specially provided for that purpose, and on no account must lighted paper or matches be used.

22. Loan Societies or Clubs of any sort are not allowed within the precincts of the Factory. Nor is it allowable to raise a subscription for any purpose whatsoever without the consent of the Directors.

23. Goods or materials are not allowed to be eaten or taken away. Any one offending against this rule will be subject to immediate dismissal and to the forfeiture of what wages may be due, and also to be rigorously dealt with according to law.

24. The bell rings for half a minute before one o'clock, and again for half a minute before seven o'clock, and no one allowed to discontinue actual work until the bell begins to ring, nor to leave the room in which they are employed until it has ceased to ring.

25. Every one must consent to be searched before leaving the premises.

26. Punishment in the shape of fines or dismissal will be inflicted at the discretion of the Directors for any breach of the above Rules and Regulations, but wilful damage, theft, etc., are also liable to be dealt with according to law.

27. No one will be allowed to come to work while suffering from any infectious disorder, nor while any infectious disease is present in their homes. Any breach of this rule will be punished by instant dismissal, and the offender will not at any future time be taken on again.

Here follows a "Wages Calculator showing the rate [from 3s.] . . . up to 40s. per week," and three pages of "General Information," as to "engaging new hands", Factory Act, Library "of several hundred volumes of standard works, open to all employees who have been 12 months in the Company's service", Annual Collection for Hospitals, Holidays, and Fire Practice. The holidays are "Good Friday, Easter Monday, Whit Monday, First Monday in August, Christmas Day, and Boxing Day." "In general the day following each of these days is also observed as a holiday." There is no intimation whether any of the holidays are paid for or no: they are not. The firm which enforces the above rules is one of the best and most respectable of its kind in London. What, then, must the position of the workers be in a lower-class factory?

S.

IPSWICH UNEMPLOYED.—Thomas and Creed held first meetings of unemployed here on Monday, 10th, first addressing them at the Commissioners' Yard, where about 200 of them had assembled. Thomas afterwards visited the Labour Bureau, where he had a very stormy interview with the gentleman in charge, who stated that there were not 50 men out of work. We afterwards addressed about 400 on the Cornhill, who listened with great attention, and who seemed to take in the new ideas, so that further meetings are arranged for.

THE KIRK'S ALARM.

"The fact was, the churches in Glasgow, Edinburgh, or any other great city, had become far too much a mere Sunday meeting-place for the highly respectable and well-to-do. Those for whom the church chiefly existed were conspicuous by their absence. When people went to church in this country, it was not so much to engage in an act of common worship at the footstool of God as to meet together in social respectability to listen to a sermon—at least to sit at a sermon, whether they listened to it or no."—Rev. Professor Story (Established Church).

"One of the greatest difficulties which the Church had to contend with was the indifference of multitudes who were within its shadow. How it had arisen it would perhaps be difficult to say. But, however, it had arisen; it was a great appalling fact with which the Church had to reckon."—Rev. Wm. Watson, Dumbarton (U. P. Church).

"There's a heretic blast
Has been blawn in the wast,
That what is not sense must be nonsense."

EVER since the days of Burns, when the unco' guid were alarmed with the heretic blasts of the New Light clergymen, by their "preaching that three's ane and twa," the Scotch kirk has winked at the preaching of all such "damnable doctrines," which seek to join faith and sense. But the kirk of to-day is moved with an "alarm" that affects it in a more vital part than the orthodoxy of its preachers. Its pocket is affected; for by its own confession it has lost any influence it ever had over the artisan population, and for them alone is its gospel preached. Those interested parties who have hitherto been the stoops of the kirk have discovered that the kirk is not effectual in doing that for which they have been supporting it, and it is admitted by the clergymen and presbyteries of Scotland that the numbers who have ceased to attend "divine worship" in the churches "are very large and alarmingly on the increase." It is also admitted that not more than ten per cent. of artisans attend church, and a census taken by one of the sects showed only 4 per cent. of an artisan population doing so in the southern district of Glasgow. In pointing out these facts at the last Established Presbytery meeting in Glasgow, ex-Baillie Gray said "there was a great Africa in our midst." The report submitted to the Established Church Assembly showed that in 407 parishes 102,367 are not connected with any church, in 505 congregations the membership has alarmingly decreased, in 163 the membership has remained stationary, and over the whole country the membership has declined in proportion to the increase in population.

The puerile suggestions to remedy this which have been put forward by the various presbyteries, and the inventions and innovations of individual parsons, give evidence of how dark they all are respecting the real cause of the decay in churchism, or, if they be cognisant of it, all their innovations, debates, and commissions testify of the many incongruous shufflings they are prepared to adopt before they apply themselves to the one thing they lack. A close observation of those who attend church in Scotland will reveal the fact that not more than 20 per cent. are men, the balance being made up by women, girls, and boys who have not yet command over their own choice. Of the men it will be found they are mostly shopkeepers or others who place a money value on church attendance. The different tradespeople are, in all districts, in evidence at the church in the same proportionate preponderance—drapers are always before grocers and so on—the bigger profits each trade yields being the measure of "religion" found amongst its dependents. The state of affairs respecting church attendance is more alarming in the cities to those who hold undue privileges in the present false society, than it is in the country districts. The odium theologum has lost its powers in our cities. The people are more unrelated in cities than in the country districts, and they have consequently freed themselves earlier from the theological ban. It has now no power in the cities to prevent the workers from meeting on the day most suitable to them, to discuss matters pertaining to their daily life and work.

The parson's monopoly of Sunday is doomed. The country districts follow the cities in social customs, and already it is becoming fashionable in country districts to be somewhat unconventional. Signs are not wanting that the workers of both city and country will soon use the time they already refuse to the church, in discussing and deliberating affairs of vital importance to them here and now. It is not so long since social, labour, or political meetings would have been impossible in Glasgow on a Sunday, and now they are of a weekly occurrence; and in country districts—where the Sunday usually was devoted to the church alone, unless when the "unco' guid" were closeted in their homes with the blinds drawn and the toddy-kettle on the fire—it is common now to see mass meetings of miners deliberating on affairs which press upon them more closely than the plain pulpit platitudes to be heard in the churches. The gentry who give money to the church so that its gospel may be preached at the poor, have certainly ample cause for alarm at the failure of the church in its policy of mental coercion. Workpeople have ceased to believe that it is the will of a good God that they should be content in the position they now find themselves. They decline to load God with such a responsibility, which, they see clearly enough, belongs entirely to the church itself with its "damnable doctrine" of perpetual poverty. The truth is beginning to dawn upon Scotch artisans that it is not in consequence of anything outside of the province of our moral teachers which causes the poor to be always with us. They now see there is enough and to spare, produced by the workers and the resources of nature to provide for the needs of all, if our moral teachers had performed their part of the social contract as efficiently as the workers, scientists, inventors, sun and earth have done theirs. Our moralists are the only defaulters. This is now recognised by the dullest day labourer who knows of the increased stores of wealth that cannot find a means, under the present arrangement, to reach the ends for which they exist. When our moralists see the way to abolish the thieving checks which at present stem the free flow of the industrial channel, and preach and act accordingly, I have no doubt "the common people" will flock to them in as large multitudes and hear them as gladly as their prototypes did of old when a present living gospel was preached to them.

The failure of the church to reach the workers, is found in the fact that the "gospel" it now preaches is not a gospel for them. They have taken away the gospel, which the common people of old heard gladly, out of the church and hid it so that the artisans of to-day do not know where to find it. They have "made the house of prayer a den of thieves." Its triune god is manifested through pride, laziness, and hypocrisy, and in its temples the "money-changers" do congregate. The church of to-day instead of being a house of prayer, is converted by the "money-changers" into an instrument for acquiring wealth, position, and power—things which drove the real Christ to his greatest outbursts of anger. Is it any wonder that educated artisans should cease to attend such a place, or that its priests should be forced to entice them with smoking sermons, or theatrical mounted pulpit performances, or pulpit gags of the Beecher type, such as "The Tilton scandal has knocked my 'Life of Christ' into a cocked hat"?

There is hope in the present alarm of the church for Socialists. The Established Church Presbytery of Glasgow has, by its late debates, confessed that it is not now the church of the poor. At a late meeting the "shepherds" proclaimed their ignorance of the poor in their own "fields of labour," and appointed a commission to enquire and report. This commission has only to enquire into the housing of the poor, for if it would extend its enquiries to what makes them poor, members of the Presbytery would be scandalised thereby. They apparently forget a mouse can die as readily of starvation in a gilded trap as in any other. In the vast 96 per cent. of the artisan population which the church fails to touch, there is a something which only requires the light of Socialist truths to enliven it into action. The deeds done to, and by, these artisans, are the simple ingredients of that something—

"Our deeds do follow us from afar,
And what we have been makes us what we are."

Our duty as Socialists, therefore, lies openly before us, viz., to reach that something with the only additional ingredient that can make it a living force for reform. By bringing the light of Socialism on the deeds they are forced to perform for the present false society, and what they get in return for doing them, and by holding up the hope of the new society of justice, plenty, and happiness, in the way we can most efficiently reach them, we will enliven the 96 per cent. as rapidly and efficiently as a lighted match would enliven a powder magazine.

GEORGE M'LEAN.

DISCRETION OR ——— ?

ON the evening of Friday, 1st February, Professor Geddes, of Edinburgh, delivered a lecture on "Theories of Social Progress" to the Aberdeen Junior Liberal Association. While "going for" the orthodox political economist on the one hand and the Socialist on the other, and partly misrepresenting the position of both, he said that the formation of commercial syndicates and the socialization of labour simply paved the way for the community to take over production and distribution. He pointed to the difference between the condition of the newsboy and that of the telegraph boy as an indication of how much better it would be to live in the future as a servant of the Co-operative Commune than to live in the present as the wage-slave of a capitalist.

From what we had heard of Professor Geddes, we were led to expect that he would hit out at trades-unionists, co-operators, and Socialists alike, and that, as an admirer of Ruskin and as something of a Positivist, he would advocate the moralisation of trade. We were at once surprised and bewildered to find him advocating Socialism very explicitly. Comrade the Rev. Alex. Webster and myself had gone to the meeting with the intention of opposing him; but we were so taken aback by the upshot of the lecture, that we hesitated to tackle him for his misrepresentation of the Socialist position, thinking we must surely have misapprehended him. We or at least I, did not realise how far the lecturer had erred until after the meeting, which the chairman seemed anxious to bring to a sudden close. Geddes admitted frankly to myself when the meeting had broken up that he was a Socialist.

This may be a good way of stealing a march on the enemy; and I do not care to accuse a man like Geddes of want of courage and honesty. But it does not seem quite fair to pretend hostility to the Socialists and then to adopt their ideas; to set political economy on the one hand and a misrepresentation of Socialism on the other, and then to set forth Socialism as advocated by us as the golden mean. As to the avoidance by Mr. Geddes of the name Socialist, I do not see that this policy can be justified on the plea that there is a prejudice against Socialism. Socialism is a good name for an excellent set of principles (to put it mildly); and what we ought to do is unreservedly to adopt the name, and by advocating the principles, root out or live down the prejudices against it.

JAMES LEATHAM.

STRIKE OF SEAMEN.—There is no change in the situation with respect to the strike of seamen at Liverpool. The Union continues firm, while owners profess confidence in their ability to tide over the difficulties caused by the strike. Meanwhile men are being attracted from the outports. It was thought that some "knobsticks," as outsiders are termed, would be turned back when applying for service on the Servia on Saturday, being unable to produce their discharges. However, everyone presented was duly passed by the inspector and went on board the unionists displaying great irritation.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN NEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

D. A.—'Poland; an Historical Sketch,' translated by E. S. Buchheim from the German of Count Helmuth Carl Bernard von Moltke, was published in 1885 by Chapman and Hall. You will find the following useful and trustworthy: 'Poland; her Glory, her Sufferings, her Overthrow,' by Prof. K. Wolski; published by Kerby, London 1883, 8vo.

CONTENTS.

		PAGE.
Notes on News	SPARLING & NICOLL	49
Disgraceful Factory Rules	S.	50
The Kirk's Alarm	GEORGE MCLEAN	51
Discretion or —?	JAMES LEATHAM	51
The Manchester Martyrs (concluded)	D. J. NICOLL	52
Education and Starvation	53
In the United States	H. F. CHARLES	53
International Notes	P. V.	54
Bibliography	VICTOR DAVE	54
Revolutionary Calendar—Francois Haack	VICTOR DAVE	54
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	55
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	56

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday February 13.

ENGLAND Die Autonomie Justice Labour Elector London—Freie Presse Norwich—Daylight Postal Service Gazette Personal Rights Journal Railway Review Sozial Demokrat Worker's Friend	Workmen's Advocate Twentieth Century Boston—Woman's Journal Chicago—Knights of Labor Detroit—Der Arme Teufel Milwaukee—National Reformer Port Angeles—Commonwealth San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal	BELGIUM Ghent—Vooruit Antwerp—De Werker Liege—L'Avenir
INDIA Bankipore—Behar Herald Madras—People's Friend	FRANCE Paris—L'Egalite (daily) Le Parti Ouvrier (daily) La Revolte Le Coup de Feu	ITALY Turin—Il Muratore
UNITED STATES New York—Der Sozialist Freiheit Volkzeitung Jewish Volkszeitung	HOLLAND Hague—Recht voor Allen	SPAIN Seville—La Solidaridad Madrid—El Socialista Cadiz—El Socialismo
	SWITZERLAND Arbeiterstimme	PORTUGAL Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
		GERMANY Berlin—Volks Tribune
		AUSTRIA Wien—Gleichheit
		WEST INDIES Cuba—El Productor

THE MANCHESTER MARTYRS.

(Concluded from p. 42.)

LITTLE more remains to be told. How false was the verdict and the evidence of witnesses in one case, was shown by the testimony of some thirty or forty English reporters connected with the London and provincial press, who declared that, despite the evidence of witnesses and the verdict of the jury, "they believed, on the strength of their long experience in cases of criminal procedure, that Thomas Maguire, private in the Royal Marines, was innocent of the crime of which he had been convicted and that his conviction has resulted from mistaken identity." This knocked a tremendous hole in the conviction; for in spite of the opinion of judge, jury, and witnesses, these reporters declared their belief in the innocence of a man whom these good people had condemned to death. This placed the Government in an awkward pickle: if they acted on the testimony of these newspaper reporters and liberated Maguire, they would discredit their own court of justice, for if it could condemn one to death who was innocent, might not the others it had condemned be also innocent? But his innocence was so evident that the Government feared to be logical, and Maguire on 21st of November received a "free pardon" for what he had not done. Maguire was at once liberated; Allen, Larkin, Shore, and O'Brien were still detained in custody. Many were the efforts made to obtain a reprieve for them. John Bright, Algernon Charles Swinburne, and many other Englishmen, were among the petitioners. We are pleased to say that the London workmen also did their best to save these gallant lives: Protests were passed against the execution of the condemned Irishmen at many large public meetings in London. But the capitalistic press shrieked for blood, and howled at and cried down these demonstrations of humanity. Lord Derby, who was then at the head of the Government, refused to listen to any appeal. He declared that it was not a political offence, but a murder, commonplace save for its peculiar atrocity. He even went out of his way to say that the act for which these men had to die was "a cowardly and detestable deed." It may be doubted whether his lordship would ever under any circumstances find sufficient courage to imitate it. A deputation of the London artizans attempted to approach her majesty with a petition, but the petitioners were driven from the palace gates and were mobbed and hooted by the royal flunkies and tradesmen.

At the very last moment another man had his sentence commuted—Shore, the Irish-American. Why he was respited is a mystery; for if taking part in the rescue of Kelly and Deasy was a crime deserving of the penalty of death, Shore clearly ought to have been hung with the others, for in the dock he proudly declared before a crowded court that he was a full participator in the rescue. Some explanation may be found for this unexpected clemency when it is mentioned that Shore happened to be an American citizen, and the brave English middle class, always courageous before the weak, and cowardly before the strong, feared to incur the enmity of the powerful American Government. This last reprieve raised the hopes of the friends of the condemned men, but alas! these hopes were soon to be disappointed.

Even before the respite of Shore the Government were pushing on the preparations for the execution. Troops were poured by rail into Manchester and every other city where an Irish element existed. The inevitable "specials" were sworn in in abundance, and their ranks were greatly strengthened by all the roughs in Manchester by the announcement that beer and refreshments should be free as air to every gallant "special" who rallied around his beloved queen and country on this momentous occasion. All the streets in the neighbourhood of the prison were closed to ordinary traffic, filled with police and "specials," and were crossed at close intervals by strong wooden barriers. Troops and artillery garrisoned the jail, and large platforms were erected on each side of the scaffold on which the troops crouched down "with the muzzles of their rifles resting upon the wall." The whole terrific preparations were capped by a proclamation from the mayors of Manchester and Salford, advising all law-abiding and peaceful citizens to keep away from the place of execution. Of course, as our readers know, in those days executions were public. The account of these mighty preparations may give them also some idea into what a pitiful state of funk the bold money-grubbing Briton had been thrown by the attack on the prison-van at Manchester.

In the midst of this excitement and terror, the condemned men were quietly passing the last hours of their lives. On the day before their execution, Friday the 22nd of November, the doomed men bade farewell to the few relatives who were allowed to see them. The parting of Larkin with his family was agonising. Poor Allen, although not quite twenty years of age, was engaged to a young girl who loved him most devotedly. She was refused by the tyrants who were murdering her lover the last poor consolation of bidding him farewell. On Friday evening they were locked up for the night at the usual hour—about half-past six o'clock. Here their thoughts were disturbed by the brutal merriment of a mob which was gathering outside the prison gates to gloat upon the legal murder of the morrow.

The scene outside the jail on the terrible Saturday morning is thus described by Mr. Sullivan: "Between them [the mob] and the massive prison walls rose piles of heavy barricading, and the intervening space was black with a dense body of men, all of whom faced the gloomy building beyond, and each of whom carried a special constable's baton in his hand. The long railway bridge running close by was occupied by a detachment of infantry, and from the parapet of the frowning walls the muzzle of cannon trained on the space below might be dimly discerned in the darkness. But the crowd paid little attention to these extraordinary appearances; their eyes were riveted on the black projection which jutted from the prison wall, and which, shrouded in dark drapery, loomed with ghastly significance through the haze. Rising above the scaffold, which replaced a portion of the prison wall, the outlines of a gibbet were descried; and from the cross-beam hung three ropes, terminating in nooses, just perceptible above the upper edge of the curtain which extended thence to the ground. The grim excrescence seemed to possess a horrible fascination for the multitude. Those in position to see it best stirred not from their post, but faced the fatal cross-tree, the motionless ropes, the empty platform, with an untiring, an insatiable gaze, that seemed pregnant with some terrible meaning; while the mob behind them raved, struggled, pushed, and fought; and the haggard hundreds of gaunt, diseased, stricken wretches, that vainly contested with the strange types of ruffianism for a place, loaded the air with their blasphemies and imprecations."

The fatal hour strikes. A line of warders is formed in the gaol court. The sentries on duty cease their march; magistrates and reporters stand aside, and a dead silence prevails for a few moments. At three minutes past eight o'clock the solemn voice of a minister repeating the litany of the Roman Catholic Church is heard, and the head of the procession becomes visible through the fog. The three men march to the scaffold accompanied by a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, Canon Cantwell. The fatal nooze was first placed over Allen's head. O'Brien is placed by him: the two heroes bend over, and, capped and pinioned as they are, affectionately kiss each other. Larkin is now brought out and led directly to his place. The sight of his two brother martyrs capped and pinioned, with the fatal cord around their necks, seemed to unman the poor fellow utterly. O'Brien, firm and unshrinking to the last, turned to him and murmured a few words of encouragement. Calcraft disappears; the three men stand a moment before the multitude; then the bolts are pulled back, the trap falls, and three corpses swing below the scaffold.

The law has triumphed! The gentlemen of England have avenged themselves upon the rebels who despised their "law-'n'-order." But to-day in Ireland the verses that tell of their gallant death have become a song of triumph and victory, and it is the memory of the Fenians of Manchester that upholds the Irish peasant against the utmost force of his oppressors.

Now a few words in conclusion. The whole Nationalist party in Ireland, moderates and Fenians, look upon Allen, Larkin, and O'Brien as martyrs who were cruelly and basely murdered by the English Government. Every year the Irish people commemorate the murder of these brave young men. Yet a certain Irish Nationalist accuses the revolutionary Socialists in England of "unmanly whining" when we remember the murder of our comrades in Chicago, and tells us for comfort that they were justly executed. We reply that they had done nothing which the brave Irishmen at Manchester had not already done. O but the Chicago Anarchists believed in physical force! So did the Fenians at Manchester: not only did they believe in it, but they acted up to their belief. The Anarchists were present [?] when a bomb was thrown that killed a policeman. Allen and his companions were likewise present when a shot was fired that killed a policeman. Both bands of heroes were condemned to death by a lying press, a packed jury, and a butcherly judge. Why does not the law-'n'-order loving editor of the Star say that the Manchester Fenians were justly hung for these very excellent reasons? Be logical, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, and say at once that if one body of revolutionists deserved death, then so did the other. But we revolutionists declare that both bands of heroes will be remembered by future generations when certain popular editors and their papers have sunk into the well-merited obscurity—that awaits the shams who during their brief lifetime impose upon the credulous and unthinking. Let respectable editors rejoice in their "largest circulation" and monetary prosperity. A day will come when people will remember what they now forget, and will forget what they now remember; and in those days the names of the Chicago and Manchester martyrs will be on the lips of thousands who will know nothing of the people who now insult the dead. May we learn to imitate these heroes, and if our turn comes, to die as proudly and defiantly. We cannot have higher or nobler examples of courage and fortitude. May we be worthy of them.

D. J. NICOLL.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

ARE we nearing another 1873—a year which was specially remarkable for its industrial, commercial, and financial panic—is a question which even capitalistic papers are beginning to ask themselves. They feel that it is no longer safe to pursue an ostrich policy, and they are beginning, as one paper puts it, "to advise business-men everywhere to prudently take in sail and go slow for a while. There are squalls ahead." And well may they sound the bugle-call of alarm! The country has, if competent authorities can be relied upon, hardly ever been more dangerously near a most momentous crisis than just at present. All the long-indulged-in talk about abnormal prosperity, booms everywhere and for everybody, Yankee enterprise, well fed and clad workers, and sound investments, did not and could not explain away the facts staring everybody in the face. First of all, the coal-trade is in a very miserable state. The winter has up to now (the end of January) been mild indeed, unusually mild, and as a consequence the demand for coal has not been half so strong as in years gone by. It is said by people well able to judge that there is at present as much anthracite coal ready for consumption as the country needs for the next twelve months. A great many mines have shut down, and more than 20,000 workmen in that branch of industry are without employment. Of the men still at work most are working half or three-quarter time. The iron and steel works are not much more prosperous. Competition has been very strong among them: there are a good many more works of this kind than are necessary for the satisfaction of the demand of this article. Railway building is just now not very much in favour with the monied class, and this also adds to the discomfort of the iron and steel works. How many workers in this industry are forced to be idle it is exceedingly difficult to ascertain, but their number cannot be small. The woollen industry, which of late has been very sickly, has had little or indeed no chance to improve during the last twelve months, and even a high, almost prohibitory, import tax did not nor could mend matters very much. The workmen in this trade are reported to have little if any work to do. The railroads, owing to the very short crops, have been doing a comparatively small business, and the low prices paid by the grain speculators for wheat have still more, if such were possible, pauperised the farmers of the western States. The farmers of old States are migrating to new homesteads in the territories, trusting to be able to find more favourable conditions. The Indian territory has not as yet been opened up for settlement to the whites, but the settlers are already pouring in by the thousands, and the soldiers find it impossible to keep them out. There is hardly a single industry or trade which may claim to be in a flourishing condition. And last but not least, the sudden change of system from a highly competitive mode of production and distribution to the concentration and consolidation of capital, has unsettled everything. The workers, thrown upon the pavement through the shutting down of some establishment or other by the order of a trust, find it exceedingly difficult to obtain employment elsewhere, and capital itself has hardly had time to get used to the new order of things. Nearly every day we hear of the formation of some trust or other, and of the simultaneous closing down of numerous factories and works. The capitalists suffer little through this revolution in matters economic; they take care they are not "left," and as usual the workers alone have to bear all the burden. All over the country strikes, lock-outs, shut-downs, reduction of wages, and miserable failures of the boycott are reported. The Monongahela, Pa., miners resolved a few days ago to stand out against a reduction in wages of about 15 per. cent.; in the Connellsville, Pa., region, fourteen thousand coke-workers, in mid-winter, are considering the advisability of striking to prevent being still further reduced below the "standard of miserable existence" rate; in Brooklyn, N. Y., 800 carmen are on strike, a dispute between capital and labour which has already caused the loss of a life, of a "scab"; in New York city 2,000 carpet-workers, 2,300 Cuba cigarmakers, 2,000 feather-curlers, have been compelled to strike; and so on, ad infinitum, throughout the length and breadth of the entire country. Well may the capitalists and their hirelings, the press-slaves, look gloomy. However, they need fear nothing. They can well afford a panic, a stagnation of trade, a temporary cessation of the modern cesspool called commerce. Their means permit them to do so; and if perhaps the workers become rebellious, a thing which is much to be doubted, then the capitalists have only to command the police, the militia, or the Pinkertons and suchlike to shoot a few of the "lazy," the "unwashed," the "unkempt," and the order will be obeyed without murmur. And what are the workers doing? As they are wont—sleeping, trusting to-morrow will take care of itself.

Till it is too late, till they are thrown by thousands into the streets to starve, or at best to beg and to steal. When the waves of misery are getting more powerful in their turn, and more destitution has knocked out of them the last remnants of energy, perhaps then, and only then, they may think of preparing themselves to take some action. Then, when it is too late, when they have lost the golden opportunity to take hold of all the things they have created, and to work them for the good of the community at large and not for the benefit of a class, then perhaps they may induce and persuade themselves to believe that after all the Socialist Cassandra was right. Instead of considering all this today, of preparing for the inevitable fight, they talk, talk, talk, ignoring the harsh march of stern economic evolution—of introducing the eight hour's labour day. Think of it, ye evil powers that be in hell and elsewhere, and smile, for your work will be done. And when it is too late, despair, a spirit of hate, of revenge, will take possession of the workers. Vandal-like they will go and smash, smash whatever is to be smashed. For reason has left them. But when the smashing is done, what next? The intelligence will be missing to do the building-up, and once again the slave will sneak back to his workshop, glad once more to feel the master's whip. And such will be the end of the panic of 1889—

The Chicago Times is continuing the battle against the corrupt Chicago police gang. Many of your readers will be puzzled at this. They will ask themselves undoubtedly: How does it come to happen that a capitalistic paper, above all a newspaper, undertakes a crusade against the corruption of officials? It has yet to be recorded that a capitalistic paper, especially in America, ever did anything in the interest of public morality, or for the sake of protecting persecuted innocence and standing up for the right. Neither is this the case with the Chicago Times. Ostensibly, and if we were to believe its self-laudation, this paper is the most moral and the best public spirited in existence. However, there is an "inner history" for its present conduct. Way back in the year 1886, Carter Harrison was mayor of the good city of Chicago; no man could be more popular, more liked for his liberalism, real demagogism, than Carter. And such is the case with him to-day. Under his administration happened the Haymarket affair, and respectability charged him through his liberalism with having been one of the "constructive" causes of this encounter between police and people. "Clear the rascal out!" became the watchword of the rich and the well-to-do of the Citizen's Association. And cleared out he was, and John Roche the present mayor came in on the "Saviour of Society" ticket. Since then Carter has travelled round the world; he is back now in Chicago, desirous to take anew in his hands the political whip: In a few weeks the election for mayor will come off. Carter wants himself or one of his henchmen to be returned with a sweeping majority. The rottenness of the "Saviour of Society" administration—Roche, Bonfield, Schaack—has only to be shown up to effect this. Hence the attacks of the Times. So in the present onslaught of the editor of the Times, who is gifted with a keen sense for detecting a good thing on the police, the "fine Italian hand" of Carter Harrison may be discerned guiding the fight strategically.

The Central Labour Union of New York has endorsed the plan of the American Federation of the Trade and Labour Unions calling for demonstrations in favour of the eight hours' day. Mass meetings will be held in New York City on July 4th and September 2nd, 1889, and February 22nd, 1890.

Newark, N.J., January 29, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

SKILLED AND UNSKILLED LABOUR.—At Newcastle, on Saturday, the United Tyne District Labourers' Association was formed. The object of the association is to advance the interests of the unskilled labourers of all classes, and if possible to improve their position. On the Tyne and Wear there are 25,000 unskilled labourers employed in the shipyards alone.

EDUCATION AND STARVATION.—At Dalston Police-court on Friday week, February 8th, before Mr. Bros, between seventy and eighty summonses were heard, taken out by the School Board for London against persons who had not sent their children to school. Most of the people were miserably poor, and some had had to journey in the cold and wet from the extreme east of Bethnal Green. One woman, who looked defiantly round the court, said to Mr. Stone, School Board prosecutor, "I think I'll speak to this gentleman (indicating the magistrate). I can't speak to the School Board gentlemen." Mr. Bros: You must behave yourself. Defendant: Yes, sir; but he has summoned me for the big gal as minds the baby, and she is a deal o' good to me when I goes to work. Mr. Bros: How old is this girl? Defendant: Twelve next birthday as ever is when it comes. The officer: The child is only just eleven. Defendant: I don't tell lies. I was never brought up to it. Mr. Bros: Have you a husband? Defendant: Yes, and he and I, if we works hard in the busy season, can't earn more than 25s. a week, and out of that we 'as to keep ourselves and five children and pay 7s. 6d. rent. Mr. Bros: I think you ought to stop at home and mind the children. Defendant: And then I should have to let 'em starve. We always 'as to pay the rent of the house, 12s., whether the lodger pays or not; and 'as we works for the landlord he always stops it. Why, last time I had to take the boots off the young uns' feet to pay what you fined me. Mr. Bros: I'll give you another chance, and adjourn the case for a month. On leaving the court the woman glared at the School Board officer, saying, "If I had my way I would cloke you."

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

ITALY.

At last the Italian unemployed have imitated their brethren on this side of the Channel by revolting against the shameful system which forbids the makers of wealth to earn, even while working, their bare livelihood. The bread riot that took place in Rome on Friday week, is identical with that which London witnessed on February 8th, 1886. The hungry unemployed, tired of waiting for work from their rulers, with one accord rose up, marching through the eternal city, smashed shop-windows, stopped tram-cars, carriages, and defied and resisted the so-called representatives of law and order, shouting loudly ever and anon "Long life to the Social Revolution!" When some of the well-to-do classes dropped from their balconies a handful of coppers, the "mob" furiously resented the well-meaning conduct with indignation, crying, "Down with the bourgeoisie! We want work and not charity!" In Gregoriana Street, where the Premier has a private house, the excited crowd shouted, "Down with Crispi! Down with the Government! Death to those that will not give us work! Down with the capital! Up with the barricades!" At Montecitorio they stoned the House of Commons building, and they gave vent to their passion, "Up with the Social Revolution! Down with the Camarra! Down with speculators! Hither and thither, or work or barricades! Viva the '89!" The leader of this great riot is merely a blacksmith, almost unknown, who had the good sense to remind his fellow-workers on the previous day that at the meeting held in Rome, September 30th, 1888, in Piazza, Dantez voted a resolution promising that on the very day that hunger should knock at the door of their slums, they would go and take the bread where there is also the luxuries (Great cheers, and Bravo Guocchetti! Long live Guocchetti!) We ought to take the necessities of life where we can find them! The day afterwards, when the deputation came back from the Under-Secretary of State, telling them to wait two days, our comrade Guocchetti sung out upon a chair, Enough of waiting! we are hungry! and the people shouted, Long life to the social revolution! Ninety-seven were arrested, including Guocchetti. Many of the rioters were brought to the hospital with their limbs broken. But nevertheless the riot was not a total failure, as we read in the capitalist dailies that they have looted many shops and wounded seventeen policemen (questurini) and soldiers. P. V.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

'A Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of all Ages and Nations.' By J. M. Wheeler. London: Progressive Publishing Company, 1889.

It has been truly asserted by John Stuart Mill that "the world would be astonished if it knew how great a proportion of its brightest ornaments, of those most distinguished even in popular estimation for wisdom and virtue, are complete sceptics in religion", and Mr. Wheeler intends to show us, in a handy little Dictionary, "how many of the world's worthiest men and women have been freethinkers."

This design, and its complete realisation, fully deserves to be encouraged not only by those who in matters of religion are freethinkers, but even by all those who in the various fields of human activity are working for the future against the past, for enlightenment and progress against darkness and reaction. Socialists in particular should avail themselves of the opportunity of securing the valuable references gathered by the author. Socialism is not only an economic theory pure and simple, as we are often told; as a true science of society, it embraces all the various manifestations of the social body, in matters of economics, politics, and religion alike. Thus in our opinion Mr. Wheeler has not only made a contribution to the cause of freethought and towards the history of "the good old cause," as he terms it, but he has rendered good service also to the cause of the emancipation of mankind at large. His book therefore deserves to meet with a full share of favour from all parts.

The biographies—or rather biographical notes, for it was impossible considering the small size of the book, to give a full view of any of the lives dealt with—are generally sufficient and in most cases accurate enough to be used in first instance, as preliminary references for further research in special works. We have carefully looked through the first series (Abelardus to Bauer), the only one yet published, and from this instalment we may expect to have soon at our disposal a fairly good contribution to especial bio-bibliography. But why does Andrieux deserve a place in Mr. Wheeler's nomenclature? Because he is a freethinker? He is not; he is only a renegade. He was at the Anti-Concil at Naples in 1869. Yes, but there he did reactionary work, vehemently opposing the introduction of materialistic views in school teaching. In 1880 he executed the decree against the religious congregations of Paris. Yes, but he was compelled so to do, and did it most reluctantly. I am sorry to find that contemptible name among such a number of well-deserving writers and thinkers. Why has J.-J. Altmeyer, late professor at the University of Brussels, been omitted? He has propagated the "good old cause" in Belgium for nearly forty years, at the cost of many a sacrifice. And Count d'Alton-Shée, the French Socialist, who was "neither Catholic nor Christian," as he put it, and at whose secular funeral Gambetta made one of his best speeches—why does he not appear, as he deserves to? M. Victor Arnould is said to have written a 'History of the Church, and a little work on the 'Philosophy of Liberalism.' That is certainly not enough. His 'History' is but an introduction to his 'Tableau de l'histoire sociale de l'Eglise' that appeared in the Revue de Philosophie Positive of Littré and Wyruboff and that is continued now in the Société Nouvelle. Moreover, M. Arnould has been from 1868 to 1873 chief editor of La Liberté, wherein many a battle for freethought has been fought. Besides 'La filosofia e la ricerca positiva,' Mr. Wheeler might have told us that Angiulli has written 'Questioni di filosofia contemporanea' and 'La pedagogia, lo stato, e la famiglia,' which are, from a philosophical point of view, two capital works. He ought also to have mentioned 'Les Harangues de l'Exil' of Bancel, which contain splendid pages, from a freethinker's point of view, about Voltaire, Rousseau, Montaigne, Pascal, Bossuet, and others.

Mr. Wheeler knows Plato's reflection that "though it be the merit of a good huntsman to find game in a wide wood, it is no discredit if he does not find it all," and he has anyhow found enough to make a good and useful work, that was much needed, and for the completion of which we are anxiously waiting.

VICTOR DAVE.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 23, 1889.

17	Sun.	1600. Giordano Bruno burnt at Rome. 1794. Trial of Charles Sinclair for sedition. 1856. Heinrich Heine died. 1866. Habeas Corpus suspended in Ireland, about 250 suspects immediately arrested. 1880. Explosion of about 100 lbs. dynamite at Winter Palace, St. Petersburg; attempted by Kholturine, a cabinet-maker, an agent of the Executive Committee. 1880. A spy, Larkoff, killed in St. Petersburg by order of the Executive Committee. 1885. Revolt of political prisoners at Irkutsk; 9 soldiers and 30 exiles killed and wounded.
18	Mon.	1793. Trial of J. T. Callender, W. Berry, and J. Robertson for seditious libel. 1857. Unemployed meetings in Smithfield. 1879. Joseph Raynor Stephens died.
19	Tues.	1473. Copernicus born. 1619. Vanini burnt for heresy. 1820. Cato Street Conspiracy formed. 1858. "Conspiracy to Murder" Bill thrown out by House of Commons. 1861. Russian serfs freed. 1878. Myschkine hung.
20	Wed.	1694. Voltaire born. 1831. Poles defeat Russians at Grohow. 1855. Joseph Hume died. 1887. Congress of Belgian Co-operative Societies at Ghent.
21	Thur.	1667. Baruch Spinoza died. 1799. Trial of Rev. G. Wakefield for writing and John Cutbell for publishing a seditious libel. 1803. Colonel Despard and six others hanged for high treason. 1819. Carl Daniel Adolf Douai born. 1879. Prince Demetrius Kropotkine, Governor of Kharkoff, killed by revolutionists for cruel treatment of political prisoners. 1882. Trial of 20 for conspiracy to revolt: Soukhanoff (a naval officer) shot; 18 others to mines, many for life. 1886. Socialist demonstration in Hyde Park; 75,000 present. 1887. Great unemployed demonstration in Dublin.
22	Fri.	1787. First Convocation of Notables (France) began to sit. 1796. Trial of Thomas Kennedy for high treason; of Andrew Glennan and 12 others for conspiracy. 1811. Trial of John and Leigh Hunt for seditious libel. 1831. Miners' riots in Cernwall; at Helston to prevent shipment of corn, and at Blazey in defence of their "combination." 1855. Bread riots in London. 1864. Riot between Fenians and their opponents at the Rotunda, Dublin. 1875. Charles Lyell died.
23	Sat.	1716. Earls Derwentwater and Kenmore beheaded for rebellion. 1823. Trial of "Bottle Conspirators," Dublin, for alleged attempt on the Lord Lieutenant. 1842. Edward von Hartmann born. 1848. French Revolution begins. 1870. Anson Burlingame died. 1882. Marie Ferré died. 1885. Fenian Congress at Paris.

François Haeck.—Born at Zoersel, in the province of Antwerp, 1818; died at Brussels, February 3, 1889. His parents being very poor, young Haeck was compelled to leave school at an early age and become apprentice to a printer at Brussels. But he was desirous of learning, and attended as much as he could the evening classes in the capital. Particularly fond of mathematics and natural science, he soon attracted the attention of his teachers, and got on so wonderfully well that after a few years he was able to leave the printer's shop and to be himself a professor of mathematics. He soon afterwards published a book on infinitesimal calculation which is considered by specialists as a work of high value and merit. The study of advanced mathematics led him to the study of astronomy, physics, chemistry, and besides he became acquainted with matters financial, commercial, and industrial—so much so that he took to the study of political and social economy. He then became an adept of the Fourierist social doctrines, and to his last hour remained faithful to the economical conceptions of his youth. The Fourierist pure and simple, of course, was by and by transformed into a Socialist "guarantist," as the French word has it—i.e., that he was more and more favourable to such institutions as are able to guarantee, either by private initiative or by the power of association or by legislative interference, a better situation for the working-classes generally. Led forward by these principles, he became successively a member of the Union démocratique, of the Socialist party of the province Brabant, of the Reform League, and lately of the Socialist Workingmen's party. "The programme of that party," so he said once to his friend De Paepe, "is entirely in my own desiderata, and therefore I am amidst you; but my views are far ahead of yours, and I am always, as good old Fourier, for integral association, attractive labour, and free and complete development of all human faculties." He was also among the originators of the Belgian freethinkers' movement. In the last years of his life he devoted all his energy and all his financial means towards the solution of the dreadful question of alcoholism, and he has found that solution, not in teetotalism or any other bogus and philanthropic remedy, but in the scientific purification of strong liquors and in the absolute prevention of delivering any other drinks than those which have undergone that chemical purification. Comrade De Paepe, as a scientist, asserts that Haeck's invention would have sufficed to enrich him, and yet he only worked and overworked himself to fall step by step into the most unbearable misery. So often it is the fate of great and generous men. Anyhow, the time is wellnigh approaching when Haeck's service to the cause of humanity will be recognised. De Paepe says that he will be ranged among the greatest benefactors of mankind, for he will have discovered the only remedy to that appalling evil of alcoholism, more dreadful even than the peste of the middle ages. At any rate, the proletariat will surely have a kind remembrance for the humble and learned man who loved them and worked for them all his life through.—V. D.

NORTHUMBERLAND MINERS.—The miners of Northumberland are demanding an advance of 10 per cent. in wages, 15 per cent. being asked by some lodges. A few months ago the men received an advance of 5 per cent. The employers have now proposed a sliding scale; but there is a strong disposition on the part of the men to reject it. The ballot papers examined in Newcastle on Saturday showed the voice of the county to be in favour of simply demanding a 10 per cent. advance.

LANCASHIRE COTTON TRADE.—A crisis has occurred in the trade. The Employers' Association having been informed by the North-east Lancashire card and blowing room operatives that they repudiate the Blackburn standard list of prices, serious complications are expected. In some sheds notices have already been given in. At Brierfield one shed, with 200 looms, is already stopped; another, with 300 looms, is working out; and another is partially stopped. The agitation to prohibit steaming in sheds is progressing, and the total signatures will not fall far short of 250,000. A meeting of Lancashire Members will consider the question early next Session.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, March 4, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Clerkenwell, to December. 1889:—Leicester, to January. Mitcham and North London, to February.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Commune Celebration.—At this year's celebration, the choir will sing the "Marseillaise," "When the People have their own again," and "All for the Cause." All willing to take part are invited to practise along with the Hammersmith choir, which meets every Thursday at 7.30 prompt.

Children's Party.—A Children's Party will be held at 13, Farringdon Road, on March 12th. Subscriptions, etc., can be sent to the Secretary, Mrs. Groser, 19, Rigault Road, Fulham. The Committee will meet at 13, Farringdon Road, on Tuesday, Feb. 19th, at 7.30 p.m. All members of the Committee are asked to attend.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.
FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

NOTICE TO MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE.—Propaganda Committee meets on Tuesday, February 19th, at 8.30 p.m. Important business; all members who are interested in the propaganda are asked to attend. Leaflet on "Commune" by Sparling and Dave will be read.
D. J. NICOLL.

REPORTS.

LONDON OUTDOOR PROPAGANDA.—At Leman Street, Cores and Turner addressed a short meeting here on Sunday morning. At Clerkenwell Green on Sunday evening, a good meeting was held by Mainwaring, Cores, Hicks, and Parker. Some comrades also assisted at the great Anti-Coercion Demonstration at Hyde Park last Sunday.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road on Sunday morning, in spite of snow; speakers were Dean and Maughan, and Crouch (S.D.F.); choir assisted. At night, the hall was fairly full to hear Belfort Bax lecture on "The Marxian Theory of Value." This branch has now been for a long time in fine condition and working well, between 30 and 40 members attending the business meetings. Several open-air meetings have been regularly kept up throughout the winter. As the weather improves new stations will be taken up, and we are preparing for a rousing propaganda.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on 4th, Leatham read lecture on "Revolution by Reform," Slater in chair. Stormy discussion at close. Outdoor work rendered impossible by wind and snow.—J. L.

EDINBURGH.—On Wednesday 6th, J. Gilray read essay on Matthew Arnold's "Social Ideals" to Old Greyfriars Literary Society. The subject was, of course, dealt with from a Socialist standpoint. There was a good attendance, and an animated discussion, in which comrade Milliet took part.

GLASGOW.—On Saturday evening, we held a meeting on Jail Square, Pollock and Glasier being the speakers; owing to the cold weather the meeting was not large. On Sunday, at 5, Pollock and Joe Burgoyne addressed a fair meeting at Paisley Road. At 7 o'clock William Morris gave a lecture on the "Society of the Future," in the Albion Hall. There were some 600 or 700 present—a large audience considering the cold weather and the unfavourable situation of the hall. The lecture, which was listened to with great attention and frequently applauded, obviously made a deep impression on the audience. Quite a number of questions were put to Morris at the close, which he answered with his characteristic vigour and aptness of illustration. A resolution in favour of Socialism was carried with only one dissident. Some seven quires of Commonweal were sold and a considerable amount of literature. Financially the meeting was a success. A gathering of members took place in our Rooms at midday to meet Morris and discuss propaganda matters. The gathering was not so large as it ought to have been. No special intimation was sent to members, and in future members must depend for branch intimations upon announcements in the Weal. On Tuesday Morris addressed the students of the School of Art on "Arts and Crafts."

NORWICH.—Kitz, who was sent here last week by the Council, reports that a good meeting took place in the Market Place at 3 p.m. on Sunday; a crowd of about 1,000 stood in the midst of a severe snowstorm for over an hour, and paid close attention to the speeches; 11s. collected for Mowbray fund. Fair audience in Gordon Hall at night despite the terribly inclement evening. The audience was of the right sort, critical and attentive. Songs and readings wound up an enjoyable evening. Comrade Kitz has received most encouraging reports of Yarmouth, a sturdy movement going on there; and as to Norwich they are pulling together well, and are likely to soon attain once more the position they had temporarily lost.

YARMOUTH.—Two successful meetings here, Sunday 10th, on the Priory Plain, in the morning at 11 a.m., and in the afternoon at 3 p.m. Mowbray gave a stirring address at the morning meeting, Reynolds in the chair. In the afternoon Ruffold in the chair, Reynolds gave a short address. Several new members have joined branch. Last Sunday night Reynolds was appointed secretary, and Ruffold treasurer.—C. R.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card, to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30. Lecture on Sunday February 17, at 8.30, Brookes, "The French Revolution of '89." Sun. 24, Mrs. Schack, "How Women can Help the Socialist Movement." Sun. March 3, H. Davis, "Objections to Socialism Answered."

East London.—26 Cawley Road, Victoria Park. Members and friends desiring to join this branch should at once send their names to the secretary, H. Davis, 97 Boston Street, Hackney Road.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Sunday February 17, at 8 p.m., S. Bullock, "Adulteration."

Hammersmith.—Kelmescott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday Feb 17, at 8 p.m., A Lecture. Wednesday 20, John Burns (S.D.F.), "Socialism from a Workman's Standpoint." Thursday 21st, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 22nd, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion on some point of interest in the propaganda.

Hoxton.—12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road. Business meetings held every Friday evening at 9 o'clock.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Friday February 22, Nicoll will read Kropotkin's "Spirit of Revolt."

Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.

Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Secretary, P. Barron, 14 Ann Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.

Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street. All persons desirous of joining are requested to communicate with A. Coulon at above address.

Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.

Galashiels (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secretary.

Gallatown and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.

Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Gordon Hall, Duke Street.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

Yarmouth.—Business meetings every Monday at 8 p.m. See below for open-air propaganda. C. Reynolds, Row 45, George Street, Secretary.

All persons who sympathise with the views of the Socialist League are earnestly invited to communicate with the above addresses, and if possible help us in preparing for the birth of a true society, based on equality, brotherhood, and freedom for all.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 17.

11.30.....	Latimer Road Station	Hammersmith Branch.
11.30.....	Regent's Park.....	Mainwaring.
11.30.....	Walham Green, opposite Station	The Branch.
3.30.....	Hyde Park	Parker and Nicoll.
3.30.....	Victoria Park	Mrs. Schack and Turner
7.30.....	Clerkenwell Green	Parker.
7.30.....	Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park	Hammersmith Branch.

TUESDAY 19.

8.30.....	Fulham—back of Walham Green Church	The Branch.
-----------	--	-------------

EAST END.

SUNDAY 17.

11	Leman Street, Shadwell.....	Hicks and Turner.
----------	-----------------------------	-------------------

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

NORTH HAGNEY RADICAL CLUB, 83 Church Street, Stoke Newington.—Sunday February 17, at 8.30, Mr. Henry Kershaw, "Manhood."

INTERNATIONAL W.M.'S CLUB, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.—A GRAND MASQUERADE will take place on Saturday February 16, in aid of the revolutionary propaganda. Tickets 6d. each.

THE SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—The Committee will meet at 63 Lincoln's Inn Fields, on Saturday February 15, at 7.30 p.m., to enroll members and receive subscriptions.

LEICESTER.—A course of lectures on "Socialism, its Aims and Principles" is being delivered in Leicester Secular Hall. The seventh and concluding lecture will be delivered on Sunday March 3rd by Hubert Bland—"The Outlook."

ARBEITER-BUND GLEICHHEIT, 38 Charles Square, Brunswick Place, City Road.—This Club has started work, and will be pleased to receive visits from friends or enroll new members.—H. Schwarzenberg, Sec.

SOUTH LONDON.—Friends who will help to establish a Branch of the Socialist League in South London will please place themselves in communication with C. Henze, 41 Bolton Street, Thomas Street, Kennington Park, S.E., or by letter to H. Hopkins, 17 Gairloch Road, Shenley Road, Peckham, S.E.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower Marsh, Lambeth.—Sunday February 17, at 8 p.m., H. W. Hobart, "Deferred, not Defeated." Tuesday 19th, 8 p.m., Sydney Olivier, B.A. (Fabian Society), "English Socialism in Theory and Practice."

IPSWICH LABOUR LEAGUE.—Pioneer Club, Theatre Yard, Tacket Street.—The members of the above League, representing all shades of political opinion, do vigorously and indignantly protest against the inhuman and brutal treatment by the Tory Government of the Irish people, especially in regard to the disgraceful and senseless indignities heaped on its representatives that has now culminated on the patriot and undaunted foe Mr. O'Brien, M.P.; and we likewise heartily sympathise with all men despotically imprisoned in fighting for justice and freedom of speech in England.—J. REID.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE LITERATURE.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3s. 1d
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d
"All for the Cause!" Song. Words by William Morris; Music by E. Belfort Bax. 4to, 4 pp. 6d. per dozen, 4s. 6d
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES
FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

L'EGALITÉ,

ORGANE DE CONCENTRATION SOCIALISTE,

L'Homme Libre and Le Cri du Peuple have been amalgamated under the above title, and no effort will be spared to make the new paper in every way a worthy exponent of Socialism, as well as a high-class daily newspaper.

Editorial Committee: Daumas, Ch. Longuet, Edouard Vaillant (Municipal Councillors); L. Fiaux, Granger, Jules Guesde, Paul Lafargue, B. Malon.

SUBSCRIPTIONS (England and United States): three months, 7s. 6d.; six months, 15s., one year, 30s.

Address remittances, etc., to Jules Roques, manager; editorial communications to A. Breuillé, secretary.

142 RUE MONTMARTRE, PARIS.

THOMAS BINNING,
PRACTICAL LETTERPRESS PRINTER

(MEMBER LONDON SOCIETY OF COMPOSITORS)

158 PENTONVILLE ROAD, N.,

will be glad to receive orders from Trades' Unions, Workmen's Clubs, Progressive Associations, etc.,

for all kinds of Printing, especially

Handbills, Leaflets, Programmes, Pamphlets, REPORTS, RULES, CIRCULARS, CARDS, ETC.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

OUR NATIONAL CAKE:

WHO MAKES IT, AND WHO EATS IT.

Large display poster to bring home the aims of Socialism to the workers.

Sent free on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage. J. J. Harrison, 44 Oxford Street, Sheffield.

LA REVUE SOCIALISTE.

EDITED BY BENOIT MALON.

8, Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SUMMARY OF THE JANUARY NUMBER.

"The Confluents of Socialism," B. Malon; "The Right to Strike, and its Consequences," P. Boilly; "Violence," G. Tridon; "Essay on Scientific Socialism," P. Argyriades; "Alcoholism," E. Fourniere; "Alarm Cry," A. Veber; "Socialist poetry," E. Herbel; "Mme. de Barrau," Emile de Morsier; "Social Movement," A. Verber; Correspondence; Books.

TERMS:—France, 6 months 9 francs, 12 months, 18 f. Abroad, " 10 " " 20. Payments to be made to M. Rodolphe Simon, 8 Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SOCIALIST SONGS

FOR

POPULAR SINGING.

A Handy Collection. Contains 33 effective pieces from the pens of William Morris, Edward Carpenter, C. W. Beckett, J. Bruce Glasier, D. J. Nicoll, H. Halliday Sparling, and others. A number reprinted from the Commonweal and other sources. Should be in the hands of all Socialists.

Twopence. 1s. 4d. a-dozen.

Orders to be addressed to JAMES LEATHAM, 7 Jamaica Street, Aberdeen.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

8 ARTHUR PLACE, PARADE, BIRMINGHAM.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. Price, post free, 5d. 6 copies, post free, 2s. 4d. 12 copies, 4s. 6d. 3 dozen, 12s. 6d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity

New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

A COMRADE who has been discharged from employment for his opinions, and has been out of work for some months, wishes to sell off some of his books.

(Nearly new)

Volney's Ruins of Empires. 1s. 3d.
 Is Socialism Sound? Debate between Annie Besant and G. W. Foote. 1s.
 Mistakes of Moses (Ingersoll). 10d.
 Essays on Socialism (Besant). 1s. 6d.
 Christianity or Secularism? Debate between G. W. Foot and Dr. McCann. 10d.
 Co-operative Commonwealth (Gronlund). 1s. 6d.
 A More Excellent Way (C. Howell). A Socialist novel. 3s. (pub. 6s.).

(Soiled)

History of French Revolution (Besant). 1s. 6d. (pub. 3s. 6d.)
 The Devil's Pulpit (Rev. R. Taylor). Astronomico-Theological Discourses. 2 vols. 1s. 6d. (pub. 6s.).
 Freethinker's Text-book, Part I. (Bradlaugh). 1s. 3d.
 Scott's Poetical Works, with portrait. 1s. 6d. (pub. 3s. 6d.)

(All bound in cloth)

Anyone desirous of purchasing please apply to W. H., 152 Pomeroy Street, New Cross, S.E.

THE ALARM

A. R. PARSONS' OLD PAPER.

"Men die, but Principles live."

Subscriptions 8s. per annum.

Can be sent with Commonweal from 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction.

With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

THE LABOUR LEADER.

AN ADVANCED POLITICAL JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF LABOUR.

The Miner will in future be published under the above name. Issued on the 1st of every month.

Subscription, monthly 1d.; 1s. 6d. per annum.

Edited and published by KEIR HARDIE, Cumnock, Ayrshire.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by

H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

Recently Published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Being seven Lectures, delivered on various occasions for the Socialist League.

Reeves & Turner, 196 Strand; or Commonweal Office.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE, at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEALTH

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 163.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

At the meeting for considering the housing of the poor, Mr. Rowlands said that the present movement in that direction was not "political bird-lime." We may thank Mr. Rowlands for teaching us that word, and go on to say that it would be indeed disgusting if it were; a quite horrible thing to think of, that it should be possible for any set of men to make a false pretence of raising an agitation to house those like men who are now housed worse than dogs! To pretend that you are going to take trouble to make a man happier, when in fact you are only taking trouble to get his vote!

Yet "he who excuses himself accuses himself," says the proverb; and it is clear that Mr. Rowlands thinks that there may be people who would bring this accusation with some show of reason; for "politics" have waded through such seas of mud and blood, that it has become impossible to clean them.

However, though we are forced to allow that there are probably some of those who are setting on foot this matter who are really on the bird-liming business, it would be unfair to assume that of all of them. After all, politics must have hardened a man's heart to stone, if he (being otherwise than a malicious fool) is not disturbed by the thought of a London slum, and would not do something to amend it. Besides, the fact that the political bird-lime is spread on this twig shows that the workers are beginning to think something of their own condition; and that is the first step to their changing it altogether.

It is certainly an indication of the direction in which things are moving that our friend the Star, which, once for all, whatever may be its merits or demerits, is the London Radical paper, has this sentence in its leader on the St. James's Hall meeting: "There is no scheme which the wit of man can devise by which the poor can be made less poor without making the rich less rich." This is not Radicalism of ten years ago; not even the five years ago "Socialism plus the Ten Commandments"—which latter some people think were made in the interests of the "property" of the nineteenth century—i.e., to control the poor and leave the rich free. On the contrary, it is a direct attack on private property.

When, however, we get to looking into what it is proposed to do, we Socialists cannot help seeing that the measures proposed are not only timid, but are insufficient also. Sir C. Russell said in his speech that the model (ugh!) lodgings of the Peabody and Waterlow companies were not inhabited by the poor of the working classes, but by those earning large wages (considerably less than Sir Charles "earns," however!), and were let at prices that could not be paid by the ordinary working-man. If that is the case—and I have not seen it denied—then this means that the ordinary working-man cannot pay the market price for tolerably (or not quite tolerable) decent lodgings: so that the least the municipality can do is to see that no lodgings are below that standard of decency, the price for which the ordinary working-man cannot pay: for if any such lower lodgings exist, he will infallibly be driven into them by the force of the action of the market.

But if all lodgings come up to this standard of decency, and the ordinary working-man is able, owing to the action of the municipality, to occupy them, that will mean just this, that the house-rent of the worker will be lowered. "Well," some will say, "a very good thing too." Doubtless, in itself; but please, my friends, note the weight of the chain which binds you. If your house-rent were lowered, you would with your present wages have more to spend on your clothes and food. Therefore, since though there would be a law keeping lodging up to a certain standard of decency, there would be none for keeping wages up to a certain point, your wages would fall under the influence of competition. Paying lower rent you would not need so much wages to buy your food and clothes, and consequently would not get as much; since the pinch of hunger would always force the poorest to undersell the others in the labour-market. This would happen unless you brought some form of compulsion to bear upon your masters, and forced them to pay you the same wages as before your rents were lowered; and even then they would find some means of evading any agreement you might come to.

For you must understand that you workmen are not paid in proportion to the work you do, but are paid just as little above mere subsistence (or starvation) wages as you will take without rebelling in some way. The natural operation of the labour-market forces you to accept subsistence such as a stingy slave-owner provides for slaves, whose labour can be done by almost any one, and whose places as beasts of burden can be readily supplied when they drop. Whatever any of you have got more than this, you have got, as the Star hints to you, by forcing your masters to give back to you some of the plunder they have stolen from you; stolen by means of the very poverty of you, which some of them are even now, hypocritically or ignorantly, deploring.

Some of the plunder you have forced them to give back to you, but how little! And even that little you get from them on the terms that you shall allow a vast number of the workers to be not in the least above that lowest standard of the over-driven underfed horse; to live a life as miserable as that of any slave that the world has yet seen. A life that would be but mere torture to any one who had not been compelled by the habit of his slavery to renounce the hopes and feelings of a man.

It is little indeed that you have forced your masters to yield to you; but you see you can force them to give up something. Put your hands to the task and force them to leave off plundering you altogether! That also can be done when you are determined to do it.

It is good indeed that London slums should be abolished—perhaps on any terms. But if only they could be abolished at the expense of those whose robbery has bred them! These half-measures if they succeed in abolishing them, which they will not, mean abolishing them at the expense of the poor who have suffered and do suffer by them. If this is all democracy can do, let it make haste to melt into Socialism, which alone can destroy poverty and riches, and all the grist of misery which these two mill-stones have ground between them. W. M.

FREE versus STATE COMMUNISM.

SINCE the introduction of the new Local Government Bill by the Tories, and in view of the establishment of the County Council, there are many well-meaning persons whose hopes have been raised by the prospect of this measure. There are also many who point to it as the silencer of the clamorous Free-Communist.

Now, although much might be said to the former set of well-meaning persons, as to their position with respect to this "reform," I intend to deal more particularly with the latter—i.e., those who think that it will form a basis for all that the Anarchist-Communist desires.

This group may be broadly described as Parliamentary Socialists, who have hitherto regarded the State-machine—the House of Commons—as the undeveloped Hercules, which will, when grown sufficiently strong, take the burdens of the country on its strong shoulders and thus relieve us of any further trouble. Again and again have we been told by these people that every modern Act of Parliament, from the first Irish Land Bill to the last Employers' Liability Act, unmistakably indicates the direction whither we are tending. "Our modern civilisation," says Gronlund, "mainly consists in this: that the State—that is, society in its organised form—has been constantly expanding its jurisdiction, and has more and more contracted the sphere of individual ownership and control. Why, nearly everything the State now manages for us was once entrusted to private individuals" ('Co-operative Commonwealth,' p. 94). Gronlund may be considered something of a master of State-Socialism, and there are many, both in this country and in America, who have followed his teaching. "In the fulness of time," according to his dictum, Parliament will take over the land, and all other means of labour, and administer them from the centre in the interests of the whole community. Centralisation was the ideal of his followers, the House of Commons the great engine by which this was to be brought about: in fact, the perfection of the State was the end of all things.

Now, however, with many who but a short time ago held this view all is changed. The new Local Government Bill has acted like a magic charm on them—they are Communists now, and their ideal is decentralisation! "We are in favour of the establishment of local communes, each retaining its own autonomy—that is to say, each commune self-governing." This is the description one often hears nowadays from our friends the State-Communists; and we are as often assured that the free-communal system advocated by the anti-Parliamentary Socialist and this scheme is really identical. Let us therefore examine both schemes and see whether it is true.

After the establishment of the State-communal system, the representative body in each commune would wield authority quite as much as the central representative body of to-day. Monopoly is carried on mainly by individuals to-day, who are more or less divided in their mode of doing "business," and may really be described as scattered. In one place we behold a landlord, in another a capitalist, in another a money-lender, each engaged in backing up "his own private interests"; and although it is true they, when taken together, monopolise the whole of the resources of the country between them, it is also true that they are separate in their general mode of working, their motto being "Each for himself and the devil take the hindmost." Thus we are afforded the opportunity of choosing, to a small extent, our immediate master. But under the State-communal system the means of labour would fall under the entire control of the communal committee. This committee being the only monopolist, would constitute itself landlord, capitalist, and money-lender. Monopoly in each commune having now become intensified to its utmost capacity, there would be but one master—viz., the communal committee.

Now, the Free-Communist, on the other hand, would destroy all such monopoly, and thus prevent authority arising therefrom. The commune, as I understand it, does not imply the "legislative" committee at all. All committees, under Free-Communism, must, in every sense, become the servants of those who have sanctioned their formation, but they must not attempt to legislate. The functions of the legislative committee is to make laws for others to obey; which again implies representative government, and its necessary counterpart—masters and slaves.

The Free-Communist believes that the people, once having obtained the free use of land and tools of production would group themselves in industrial circles, in such a way that each individual would be enabled to obtain the necessities and luxuries of life with the expenditure of the least labour-force.

I can imagine the necessity for committees, even under Free-Communism, the work of which may be of a varied character; but for all that, their duties would be essentially of a transitory and superficial nature. I can even imagine one of these committees trying to assume more important functions than those conferred on it. The instant it attempted to do so it would commence to legislate, and if it were to succeed it would become the governor of those whose servant it was before. Any such attempt, however, on the part of the committee is doomed to failure, because the people are now economically free, and cannot again be made slaves. Committees may make laws to their heart's content, but if they do not possess the "resources of civilisation" with which to enforce their rule, they may save themselves the trouble, for no one will dream of obeying their mandate.

Our sufferings to-day may be truly said to be due to the enforcement of too much prescriptive (committee-made) law, which we recognise to be an artificial means of supporting an equally artificial system of society. "Would you have people do as they like?" is often asked when we urge this view. We answer in the affirmative, and point out that it is only necessary to place people under conditions in which the interests of the individual are identical, and then we need not fear the result from each doing as he likes. Of course, in a society such as we live in, which is, first, divided into classes, the individuals in each class divided, their interests ever conflicting, competition—i.e., war—being the arbiter as to who shall succeed—is it any wonder that we forbid each to do as he likes? But when the classes are welded together, and the concern of one is really the concern of all; in short, when there is but one class, governed by voluntary co-operation instead of competition, the conflict in society which we now witness will come to an end. Emulation will doubtless find a fitting place in such a society. As J. S. Mill ('Political Economy,' Ch. 1, Book 2, p. 127) has very ably pointed out: "But the power also of emulation, in exciting to the most strenuous exertions for the sake of the approbation and admiration of others, is borne witness to by experience in every situation in which human beings publicly compete with one another, even if it be in things frivolous, or from which the public derive no benefit."

Before we can obtain this condition of society, however, we must destroy all State-regulated authority, whether national or communal.

The contention that the people are not good enough to manage their own affairs is no longer regarded as serious; the people are even beginning to question the democratic motto, "Government for the people and by the people," as something that is not all perfect. At every turn of the overburdened lives of the toiling masses they are face to face with the creature of government—authority—which seems to lie at the bottom of all their miseries; and we may be sure that when this view of the situation is well established in the minds of the workers, woe betide those who clamour for more government.

H. DAVIS.

THE END OF A WORLD.

A VERY interesting review of the remarkable work lately published by E. Drumont entitled 'La fin d'un monde,' appears in the last issue of the Socialist magazine La Société Nouvelle. The author, as the reviewer remarks, shows to what a state of decomposition society has arrived, highly civilised as it is supposed to be. By "the end of a world" M. Drumont means the end of one form of civilisation, of a particular social system. It is the end of bourgeois society, of capitalism, to which he points; and his cry, Down with the Jews! Death to the Jews! must be interpreted, Down with the exploitation of labour by capital.

The author points out in a very forcible manner how the change from theocratic monarchic society—that which was founded on divine right—to the bourgeois democracy, to capitalism, affected prejudicially the great mass of the workers.

"Capitalism deeming itself bound by no moral obligation to those whose labour it utilised, conceived the toil which suffers no repose, allows no truce, toil which leaves to the human being not one minute for recreation, for prayer, for thought, and called it Progress, the Triumph of the Nineteenth Century, the Glory of the new era. Theocratic society had made work a means to gain heaven without suffering too much upon earth (the Church guaranteed to the worker ninety days rest in the course of the year, days on which it was strictly forbidden to work); Capitalism made it the path to immediate hell."

But the most interesting portion of the work is that which indicates the signs that capitalism approaches dissolution. As the great feudal system was established at the cost of the holders of small fiefs, so the great capitalist system has been constituted at the expense of the small capitalists. This concentration has been going on for some years with terrible rapidity; it crushes the weak with pitiless might, and it is dividing the bourgeoisie into two bodies—the wealthy, who use their wealth as a means to exploit labour, and that more meritorious body which does some sort of work but which is being thrust back into the proletariat. The reign of the bourgeoisie, then, draws to a close, for it is dismembered; the one part is being absorbed into the proletariat, the other resolves itself into a form of aristocracy which has no analogy in history—a titled plutocracy rather than an aristocracy in the old sense of the word (the government of the best); a hybrid class, luxurious, timid, greedy, daring nothing without the permission of Rothschild.

The last fortress of the bourgeoisie is government and the House of Commons. There the family is assembled, bourgeois from head to foot. The Conservatives submit themselves willingly to the Liberals, provided they don't touch their property; the Republicans will put up with a monarchy, provided they keep their offices. They exchange opinions on these matters in the lobby, where they are boon companions; then they take their seats in the house and pretend to wrangle so as to amuse the people and make them forget that they are dying of hunger.

M. Drumont is of opinion that it needs only a spark to set in full blaze the heap of combustible matter upon which society rests to-day. A great change has come over the people since 1870, a new sentiment has taken possession of the French people—that of hatred. There is more difference between the people of that time and the people of to-day than there was formerly between men who lived two centuries apart. Even their faces have altered. A man of the people in face of a bourgeois can scarcely disguise the aversion with which he regards him. Women, young women, who were formerly unacquainted with these matters, who endeavoured rather to calm, to appease, to humanise, have become even more passionate than the men.

To sum up, says the reviewer, it is evident that in M. Drumont's opinion our social organisation, which has no other foundation than the love of wealth, the pursuit of wealth by all and any means, cannot longer endure; it is irretrievably condemned to destruction, and order no longer exists save in appearance.

A sad conclusion this for those who, like M. Drumont, fail to see how order will be evolved out of this disorder, who have not the hope that is in our hearts, who have not the conviction that is in our minds, that the end of a system, the crash of a world, heralds the birth of the new society, the triumph of Socialism and of humanity.

J. HUNTER WATTS.

TRAMWAY SLAVES.—These poor creatures must feel rejoiced at the success of the masters they slave for. Why should they not? Surely their hearts must rejoice when they hear £1,000,000, the results of their labour, have gone into the pockets of the shareholders of the North Metropolitan Tramway Company. The company is flourishing. People who want to live without labour, and who have already monopolised some of this world's common wealth, will hasten to speculate if they have the chance. Imagine 9½ per cent. half-yearly dividend, £53,837 clear half-yearly profit. Here are tidings of joy. The slaves have their paltry weekly wage docked upon this or that excuse, real or imaginary. But are they not receiving a constant wage? Have they not regular employment? What matters it if a trifling deduction is made now and again? They must consider themselves fortunate that their masters have been so good and kind as to employ them. So much for popular errors of the passing age of ignorance. Now behold the faint light of the new age struggling to dispel the darkness in which we find ourselves enveloped! The slaves are beginning to ask what does it all mean. Should we who have toiled for the past six months, we who faced the inclemencies of the weather, we who have slaved harder than the horses that drag the cars, should we not have had that £53,837? We have done the work, but the men who have got the money have done nothing for what they have received. Surely there must be fraud somewhere? Yes, there most undoubtedly is, and it is because our whole system is based upon similar fraud, sanctioned and enforced by law, that the wage-slaves have been so long in discovering it.—A. B.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

The great strike on the New York tramcar system is practically ended, and, as might have been foreseen, with a defeat of the workers. Never since the year of chronic strikes, 1886, has New York been confronted with a conflict between capital and labour of such magnitude. The strikers, to their honour it must be said, have stood up like men till the last moment for their rights and the rights of organised labour in general, and the complete failure of the strike, or rather the crushing defeat of the men, must be attributed to bad generalship—bad beyond degree—on the part of the leaders. This cowardly and at the same time stuck-up gang belong to the miserable crew who had ill manners enough, even after the Indianapolis disclosures, to present General Master Swindler Powderly, when last in New York about two months ago, for the “eminent services rendered by him” in ruining the Knights of Labour organisations—with a gold-headed cane.

Ever since the beginning of this year trouble has been brewing between the bosses and the employés of the railroad companies. The workers through their executive committee had drawn up an “agreement” to serve as basis for the relations between masters and men for 1889. The two principal points demanded in this document were two dollars minimum wage a-day and ten hours work instead of twelve,—surely demands none too revolutionary, and which certainly might have been easily conceded by the companies, especially when it is considered that each of these companies pays at least 25 per cent. dividend a year, in spite of “watered” stock. But the smart, business-experienced presidents of the soulless corporations knew their day had come; they were determined to break up the organisation of their men and to substitute the trip system for the wages system. By the trip system the men are paid for each trip made, and through this they frequently have to be on duty for sixteen hours while only getting compensation for about ten hours work done. The employés were flatly told that the companies did not feel disposed to sign any “agreement,” and all attempts made by the men to induce the companies to submit all matters in dispute to a board of arbitration chosen by the companies themselves resulted in nothing. “There is nothing to arbitrate,” coolly answered the presidents. After that, nothing could be done by the workers but to strike or to sacrifice their organisation. A secret ballot had been taken in all the New York assemblies belonging to Knights of Labour national district assembly No. 226, and they all voted for a tie-up. In the early morning of January 29th twenty-one roads were tied-up, throwing altogether about 6,500 men out of employment. Hardly ever before were men animated by a firmer spirit of solidarity, of devotion to a cause. They all seemed to fully grasp the idea that they had either to win or submit in future to the most unjust and arbitrary treatment. Even after everybody, even the most optimistic, had to admit that the strike was lost, the desertions from the ranks were few and far between. However, an element has appeared of late in labour struggles which will make it hardly possible for any strike to be won: a superabundance of unemployed workmen—“scabs,” in other words. For each man who goes out on strike ten instantly stand ready to take his place. So large have the numbers of the unemployed become that even a capitalistic paper like the Herald is compelled to say editorially:

“The whole story, on all sides of it, is a tragedy. It is full of suffering, misery, a struggle for life in a city that is overcrowded with workmen who vainly seek for the means to buy bread and coal. There is a question for political economists, for charitable church people to discuss, and it is an enormous question. We confess that it seems to us far greater than any problem presented by current politics. The tariff is a side issue and can be left to solve itself; the federal surplus is insignificant. But how shall we provide work for willing hands? how shall we enable these thousands of idlers to get an honest living? how shall we prevent them from settling down into a discontented, revolutionary and dangerous class? There, gentlemen of New York, you have the most solemn, the most pressing and the most impressive problem of the hour. It is not disposed of when this strike breaks. Not by any means. It will come up again, in a new shape perhaps, but come up it will in some shape, until the wisdom of the country has established right relations between capital and labour.”

The companies soon had more applicants for work than they had jobs to distribute. Police-superintendent Murray was at once notified of the tie-up, and set about arranging ostensibly for the protection of life and property, in reality for helping the companies to win. The police, as usual, through the whole trouble acted like the wild beasts they are. The following story, which I clipped from a capitalistic paper, may give an idea of the brutality of a free country's police:

“You three men go and clean out that saloon; use your sticks gently.” Captain Killilea, of the Twenty-second precinct, gave this order to three of his policemen yesterday afternoon. The place designated was ‘The Belt Line Oyster and Dining Saloon, with seats reserved for ladies,’ that is operated, as the name suggests, for the refreshment of the employés of the Central Park, North and East River Railroad Company. It is directly opposite the stables, on Tenth Avenue, between Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth streets. This restaurant is a rendezvous for strikers and their allies during each cessation of hostilities. Two of the policemen forced their way into the place, where about fifty hungry strikers thought themselves secure from persecution. The third officer stood at the door without, and as the inmates of the trap emerged as if under propulsion by a powerful spring, he was hit by the stick of the officer in waiting on the most convenient part of his anatomy. Captain Killilea's admonition for gentleness may have been obeyed, but the horrid cries of pain that were wrung from each striker as he was struck sounded as if uttered in sincerity.”

They used their clubs in the most brutal manner; they were instructed to “shoot to kill,” as Inspector Williams, the Bonfield of New York, put it.

The second day of the tie-up the cars began to run again, in the beginning generally “passengered” by policemen. There was, considering the action of the police in protecting the interests of the companies, and the facts of the existence of the unemployed, but one course open to be pursued by the strikers: To make it by any or by all means impossible for the companies to run any car. “But we would through such action lose the sympathy of the public,” one of the leaders remarked to me. The sympathy of the public be d—d! Mere sympathy does no good to a starving man. Might only can as yet ensure right in this world. The sympathy of the public never—anyhow, not in this case—took any substantial shape; in fact, as soon as the cars began to run again they were soon used by the public, and amongst the first persons who availed themselves of the opportunity to ride in cars happened to be that queer specimen of exquisite and comely womanliness—the American lady.

On some points the strikers tried the obstruction policy. Rocks were piled on the tracks, barricades were built, ashes and dung were dumped in the streets, but as this was only done in few instances it produced hardly any effect. Many collisions occurred between the strikers and the police, but no life was lost. The strike is over, and organised labour let it be hoped has gained one more experience. In Brooklyn, things took much the same shape.

On January 30th, Judge Barrett, of the New York Supreme Court, dissolved the North River Sugar Refining Company because, as he decided previously, it forfeited its charter by becoming a member of the Sugar Trust. The judge also appointed a receiver of the company's property, who is required to realise all assets and distribute the cash among the stockholders. As this company by order of the trust has for some time ceased to manufacture sugar, the ruling of the judge will not alter the position of the trust.

Hugh O. Pentecost, the brilliant seceder from the Protestant Church, says in the issue of the Twentieth Century of February 2nd, referring to the legal decision about trusts:

“Judge Barrett has decided that the North River Sugar Refining Company has forfeited its charter by joining the Sugar Trust, and this is called by the papers a ‘great blow at trusts.’ But a stockholder in the Sugar Trust told me the day after the decision that he did not wish to sell his stock because, as he explained, this case will be appealed, and if Judge Barrett's decision is confirmed it is only against one of the smallest concerns in the trust, which has been idle for some time, and there are fifteen other refineries which will each have to be proceeded against in the same manner and whose cases must be similarly decided before the trust is destroyed, and if it ultimately is broken up, by that time ‘some other method’ will have been discovered to accomplish the purpose which the trust has in view, which, this stockholder says, is ‘to make more money than by the old methods.’ When we consider ‘the law's delays’ and that the Sugar Trust represents about fifty millions of dollars, I presume the stockholders are right in not wishing to sell their stock. But Judge Barrett's decision was a great opportunity for the moral editors of the daily papers. There is nothing like being zealous for reforms which cannot be accomplished and would amount to nothing, economically, if they could.”

The different express companies, eight in number, of the United States, have signed an “agreement,” that is they formed a combination commonly known as a trust. In their circular the following significant paragraph occurs: “It will be necessary to call a convention of the several superintendents of the express companies so as to arrange the future conduct of the business relating to the fixing of rates.”

A gigantic combination of the leading cattle men of Kansas, Texas, Colorado, Montana, Indian Territory, and New Mexico is about to be effected. The principal purpose of the combine is to avoid the commission merchant. So the game of combination is going on swimmingly.

The Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company on the 1st inst., shut down sixteen of its collieries in the Schuylkill region, and 4,000 men are thrown out. The remainder of the company's collieries, thirty-five in number, are working three-quarter time. The men have not yet recovered from the effects of the strike they lost about a year ago. Starvation will be the lot of most of them.

Newark, N.J., February 5, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING MARCH 2, 1889.

24	Sun.	1468. Gutenberg died. 1794. D. I. Eaton tried for publishing a seditious libel. 1796. Trial of Patrick Hart for high treason. 1806. Trial of Governor Picton for inflicting torture. 1810. Trial of John Lambert and James Perry for libel. 1817. Suspension of Habeas Corpus Act. 1848. Louis Philippe abdicated: Second French Republic proclaimed by Louis Blanc from the steps of the Hotel de Ville.
25	Mon.	1847. Samuel Fielden born. 1848. Tricolor Flag adopted by French Republic. 1858. Trial of Orsini.
26	Tues.	1786. D. F. Arago born. 1793. Thomas Spence tried for selling ‘Rights of Man.’ 1797. Banks suspended cash payments. 1852. Thomas Moore died. 1884. Explosion at Victoria and attempts at other London railway stations.
27	Wed.	1534. “Kingdom of God” established in Münster. 1833. From July 26, 1832, to this date 254 persons imprisoned in London for selling unstamped papers. 1843. Amouroux born. 1854. Lamennais died.
28	Thur.	1533. Montaigne born. 1799. Thomas Muir died at Paris. 1869. De Lamartine died. 1878. Insurrection in Thessaly.
1	Fri.	1769. Williams pilloried for publishing North Briton . 1787. First Convocation of Notables during administration of M. de Calonne. 1789. J. R. McCulloch born. 1791. Riot at Dublin, provoked by police at annual masquerade at “The New Rooms,” Rutland Square: police beaten, several of them killed and many wounded. 1796. Reform riot in Manchester Theatre. 1843. Trial of Feargus O'Connor and 58 others begun at Lancaster.
2	Sat.	1629. Speaker held in the Chair while the House of Commons passed a motion condemning the king's policy. 1882. Attempt to shoot the Queen.

Adolphe Clémence.—Born at Paris, 1842; died in the same town, Feb. 5, 1889. In the last years of the Third Empire, he joined with Varlin, Malon, Franckel, and others the International Workingmen's Association (1st Parisian Bureau) and devoted all his leisure hours to the propagation of the social revolutionary ideas mainly embodied at that time in the above-named organisation. In March 1871 he was elected by 8,000 votes member of the Paris Commune for the fourth district of Paris. After the defeat he succeeded in leaving Paris and went to Lausanne, where he lived in exile for more than fifteen years. He also spent some time in London. He came back to Paris in 1886. Adolphe Clémence was a bookbinder by trade, and soon became an artist in his profession. In 1867 he wrote for the Bookbinders' Trade Union a book on Bookbinding as an Art, which was eagerly looked for by all bibliophiles at the time, and is now very scarce. When the Paris Municipal Council was engaged on the “Ecole du Livre,” it at once consulted Clémence, who was abler than any one else to give them valuable technical hints as to the ways and means of creating such an institution under the best circumstances. Comrade Lefrançais retraced his career over his grave in the Cemetery of Bayeux.—V. D.

The Dundee rope and twine spinners have resolved to demand an increase of 2s. per week.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN KNEW IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

D. A.—In addition to the books we named last week, a Polish friend highly recommends J. Pnyjemski's 'Sketches of the Polish Mind.' Lond. 1857, 8vo. WILL BE USED.—'Growing Respectable,' J. H. W.; 'Liberal Malignity,' Edgworth; 'To West-end Tailors,' Myer Wilchinski. H. C. (Newark, N.J.).—Send on conclusion of translated paper.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	WILLIAM MORRIS 57
Free versus State Communism	H. DAVIS 57
The End of a World	J. HUNTER WATTS 58
Tramway Slaves	A. BROOKES 58
In the United States	H. F. CHARLES 59
Revolutionary Calendar—Adolphe Clemence	VICTOR DAVE 59
A Straight Talk to Working Men 60
The Grinning Ape	L. W. 61
Housing the Poor	D. J. NICOLL 61
Out-of-Work Members 61
Our Brave Protectors 61
The Labour Struggle 62
International Notes	H. SCH. & MAY MORRIS 62
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	63
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	64

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday February 20.

ENGLAND Justice Labour Elector Labour Tribune London—Freie Presse Norwich—Daylight Railway Review Social Demokrat Telegraph Service Gazette Unity INDIA Bankipore—Behar Herald Madras—People's Friend UNITED STATES New York—Der Sozialist Freiheit Truthseeker Volkszeitung Jewish Volkszeitung Workmen's Advocate Boston—Woman's Journal Liberty Chicago—Knights of Labor Vorbote Baeker Zeitung	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel Fort Worth (Tex)—South West Milwaukee—National Reformer Newark—Arbeiter-Zeitung San Francisco—Arbeiter-Zeitung San Francisco—Pacific Union St. Louis (Mo.)—Die Parole Denver—Arbitrator Valley Falls (Kan.)—Lucifer FRANCE Paris—L'Egalite (daily) Le Parti Ouvrier (daily) La Revolte Le Coup de Feu La Revue Socialiste Pobudka HOLLAND Hague—Recht voor Allen SWITZERLAND Arbeiterstimme BELGIUM Ghent—Voortuit Antwerp—De Werker Liege—L'Avenir	ITALY Turin—Nuova Gazzetta Operaia Rome—L'Emancipazione Milan—Il Fascio Operaio Cremona—L'Eco del Popolo SPAIN Seville—La Solidaridad Madrid—El Socialista PORTUGAL Lisbon—O Protesto Operario Porto—A Revolucao Social GERMANY Berlin—Volks Tribune AUSTRIA Wien—Gleichheit Brunn—Volksfreund Brunn—Arbeiterstimme HUNGARY Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik DENMARK Social-Demokraten SWEDEN Malmo—Arbetet WEST INDIES Cuba—El Productor
--	--	--

A STRAIGHT TALK TO WORKING-MEN.

FELLOW-WORKERS,—The time has now come when we, the workers of all countries, should begin to consider the causes and effects of our present poverty and wretchedness. Poverty which we have battled against so long and often, by all means, including thrift, abstention from alcohol, from meat, and from necessary recreation, but in vain. It seems that the harder we work and the more work we do, the more profit we make for our masters and the less time and opportunity for ourselves. And in the struggle to get on, we often become victims to some form of chronic disease, and die a slow and miserable death long before our time. Even when we can provide against sickness and slackness of trade, and the many other unexpected cares which are part of our lives, we find that it is impossible, even for a skilled mechanic, to live in anything like the comfort that he desires. On our insufficient and uncertain wages we are expected to be self-respecting, independent, and honest—virtues which the rich themselves have not as yet cultivated.

Now we propose that all people shall have equality of opportunity and the right to use all the great gifts of Nature according to their needs. We do know this, that the land and all the means of producing wealth are in the possession of a few—a small class—and this class came by these things not by honest toil, but by force or fraud, either by past robberies or from the unpaid labour of their workers; and we Socialists intend that the workers shall get possession of the land and machinery, and means of transportation and transit, and that these shall be used by all and for all. The land, which no man made, is claimed and now held by a few idlers, who, because of the increase of the population and their needs, manage to extort enormous rents from the actual workers, for the use of that which the landlord class have not in any way helped to produce or enhance in value. In 1810 they took from the people of the United Kingdom twenty millions as rent, but now they get more than two hundred millions yearly.

Now it does not require a great amount of education to understand that all persons who do not work, are living on those that do. Call them princes, priests, bondholders, politicians, or by any other name, they are all the same as pickpockets, for they consume the best of everything and produce nothing—except it be vice and misery of all kinds. And when our masters kindly allow us to work for them, they give us back a week later, just to keep us going, a small part of what we have previously produced, and they call that our wages. Their horses and mules they feed as soon as they buy them, and doctor them when sick, but we have to keep ourselves and families a whole week, and sometimes longer, before we can get back less than a third of the wealth that our own labour has produced; and if we fall ill we may go to the hospital or workhouse.

Now, we have eminent statisticians recording that out of the thirteen hundred millions that are annually produced, only four hundred and fifty millions go to the workers as wages. The other eight hundred and fifty millions are divided amongst the landlords, shareholders, money-lenders, and other sweaters, who "rob the workers all the week and praise their God on Sunday." They thrive on our misery and degradation, no matter on what part of the earth we were born. They and their so-called newspapers have succeeded, unfortunately, in setting us against one another, so that they may be better able to keep us in ignorance and fleece us. And when they can no longer make "enough" profit out of us, they invest their money in other lands where the people can live cheaper, or import cheap labour, and so make the desired profit. Then we are turned adrift to compete with the thousands of other victims of this rotten commercial system, at the dock-gates or at other similar drudgery. Our savings, if we have any, soon go; our clothes and other things that were so long coming, have to go to pawn; and as we get more shabby and miserable-looking day by day, our chances of employment get less and less, till at last we drift into the ever-increasing army of the unemployed—outcasts of the present diabolical system.

Therefore, we must combine with all workers and would-be workers, and agitate by night and day, using all available means and standing all together against the common enemy—the Exploiter. It is now that we begin to feel the effects of our boasted Civilisation, Christianity, Arts, Sciences, and English freedom, and what good Governments are, or ever have been, to the workers. We cannot get credit to the smallest amount; our property is not sufficient security for a single day's food. The rich man, who has never worked, can get credit from anyone to an enormous extent, and if he cannot or does not pay, then he may by some legal process get off with a shilling in the pound. Now we claim that all wealth is produced by labour of head or hand, applied to natural resources. Therefore, all wealth belongs to labour. Machinery which is supposed to lessen labour, does under the present system in reality lessen wages and also our chances of employment, and is continually putting us out—which causes a great deal of what is wrongly called over-population. Although only ten men may be employed in making a machine, hundreds of others are displaced by it. We learn from this that the workers must get possession of all the inventions that are made, improved and perfected by man, and use them for the benefit of all.

We specially urge our fellow-workers to use any and every means to avail themselves, at every opportunity, of all the vast accumulations of wealth that are stored up on all sides, which have been produced by us and our forefathers. And we further call upon all workers to at once educate themselves in these matters; to educate themselves to know and feel the discontent that breeds resolve; and organise, so as to be able to repudiate the right of all non-workers, whether as individuals, companies, cliques, or Parliaments, to own or control the land, machinery, or anything that is necessary for the production, distribution, or enjoyment of wealth.

We desire freedom, economic, social, and political, but we must first learn what that means. Learn from our fellows, and take advantage of all the means of education, such as reading-rooms, public libraries, lectures, Socialist papers, etc., how the emancipation of the workers shall be brought about and by themselves, independent of and in spite of the rich and ruling classes, who have so long kept us in the ignorant and degrading conditions with which we are so familiar. And then, when the majority of the useful people have prepared themselves, we shall be able to live and work as men and women ought, honestly and happily. In conclusion, we ask you individually to circulate the Socialist idea at every opportunity, and help to bring about this great and beautiful change.

[It is intended to issue the above article as a leaflet by the Propaganda Committee. Readers are asked for criticism, and might suggest improvements.]

D. J. NICOLL, Secretary of Propaganda Committee.

THE GRINNING APE.

"A MERRIE CONCEITED JESTE."

THERE are two little islands,
Which in the ocean stand,
And on those little islands
The folk are very grand :
They are so grand and mighty
They say they rule the sea,
And yet their little islands
Are dens of misery !
That they are freemen ever
Is still the people's boast,
Yet a Monkey and his Nunky
Are left to rule the roast !

O the Monkey and his Nunky
Are a pair of precious knaves,
They seek to play their panky tricks
To make the people slaves !

The Monkey thinks it precious fun
A-harassing the poor,
By shutting them in prison walls
Or flinging out of door,
And taking every honest man
To stretch him on a rack ;
And this he thinks so comical,
It makes his sides to crack !
He chatters and he jabbars,
And his chops are all a-grin,
And "Go it, Monkey !" cries his mate,
"Your Nunky bets you win !"

O the Monkey and his Nunky
Are a pair of precious knaves,
They seek to play their panky tricks
Or find the people graves !

Now the over-fattened Nunky,
The greedy gross Baboon,
Has lived a lurcher on the land
For many a changing moon :
He and his race before him
Have sucked the people's blood,
And coward stabbed each noble heart
Who 'gainst their thieving stood.
So the Nunky cheers the Monkey
For playing every trick,
To leave himself a freer hand
The people's pence to nick !

O the Monkey and his Nunky
Are a pair of precious knaves,
They're bound to play their panky tricks
Whoever mercy craves.

O it is so fine and funny
It makes the people smile,
To see how they are murdered
And laughed at all the while !
The people are so merry
(At least I've heard it said)
They're asking as the richest joke
To have the Monkey's head,
To use it as a football
To play upon the green,
And ask his Nunkey if such sport
He ever yet has seen !

O the Monkey and his Nunky
Are a pair of precious knaves,
They're bound to play their panky tricks
To make the people slaves !

L. W.

DEMONSTRATION AT VICTORIA PARK.

At Victoria Park last Sunday, long before the time appointed for the proceedings of the demonstration to begin, processions began to march into the park with bands playing and flags and banners flying. By 4 o'clock (the time advertised to begin) the park presented a very interesting spectacle. As far as the eye could reach were to be seen the upturned faces of the immense crowd of persons of both sexes and all ages. At least 50,000 were present. When the Socialist League banner entered the park, heading a monster procession, the Bethnal Green branch of the S.D.F. united with the S.L. and held a joint meeting, at which Bentley presided, and was addressed by Harding, Power, Hicks, and Mowbray. The audience were both attentive and enthusiastic, and received the remarks of each speaker with applause.

At the East London Working Woman's Association platform, H. Davis presided, and the speakers were Mrs. Schack, Miss Sumpter, F. Henderson, D. Smithers, and C. W. Mowbray. The audience at this platform were decidedly revolutionary. The various speakers were received with enthusiasm, and the following resolution was carried unanimously: "That while we protest most emphatically against the brutal conduct of the Tory Government against Mr. O'Brien and the coercion of the Irish people, we no less most emphatically protest against that coercion existing in this country as well as in Ireland, which doom thousands of our fellow men and women to slavery and death by starvation."

H. D.

HOUSING THE POOR.

THE meeting at St. James's Hall the other night was interesting for several reasons. Foremost we note with gratification the timid approaches of the Liberal party towards State Socialism. They advance not quite with the alacrity of a duck taking to water, but more with the air of a timid tight-rope dancer whose main fear is that he may topple over into unknown depths. Their anxiety to stand well with the respectable classes and persuade them that their proposals are not revolutionary, while they seek to make the people think that if they stick to the great Liberal party they will find it very much to their advantage, is truly ludicrous.

How in the name of that genius of humbug, the G.O.M. himself, is it possible to improve the condition of the people without being revolutionary? And yet these middle-class impostors seek to make the people think that they are going to do something serious, when they exclaim at the same time, with their tongue in their cheek, to the middle classes, O don't be alarmed; it's only our fun, bless your innocence!

Let me say a few words in vindication of my assertion that, according to the statement of one of their own speakers, it would be impossible even to remedy in the slightest degree overcrowding in London, without doing something that the Liberal and Radical Union would consider very revolutionary indeed. The Rev. Mr. Price Hughes stated at this very meeting, according to the Daily News report, which I presume may be relied upon as tolerably accurate, that in Soho "there were people living in single rooms the rent of which varied from 5s. 6d. to 8s. a-week, while the comfortable classes assumed that a man ought not to pay more than a tenth of his income in rent." Does Mr. Hughes or his friends propose to reduce these rents to a tenth of the income of the people who live in these rooms? Their income averages about 20s. a-week; the fair rent of these rooms would therefore be about 2s. weekly. I wonder if Mr. Cremer, one of Mr. Hughes' colleagues, would consider this reduction "revolutionary." I wonder how he would like it applied to the house property of which he is the happy owner?

Let us ascend a little higher in the social scale. The respectable artisan who earns an average wage of 30s., pays 9s. 6d. or 10s. 6d. for three rooms. Looked at from the view of the comfortable classes, he ought to pay 3s. Please, Mr. Hughes, is the London County Council going to let its new dwellings at this rate? If it does, either the social revolution or its speedy suppression by the horse and foot of Mr. James Monro is near at hand. Why, what would become of the house-farmers, or that public benefactor the ground-landlord, if rents were to be reduced in this ruthless fashion? Why, the Plan of Campaign would be nothing to it!

But don't be alarmed, my most respectable friends, the County Council is going to do nothing of the kind. It is far more probable that aspirations soar in the direction of those of that very moderate reformer Mr. James Rowlands, M.P. (I like to give the full title), who announced that "the Radicals of London" were determined not only to obtain a reduction of sixpence a-week in the rent of an industrial dwelling (N.B. What a pity these great people cannot condescend to talk English), but to secure sanitary conditions and some approach to comfort in the homes of the poor. (Tremendous applause.) How grand, how inspiring is this great, this un-revolutionary reform! Those who live in single rooms will pay 5s. instead of 5s. 6d. to the great and good County Council, and the respectable artisan will also be rack-rented to the tune of 9s. weekly. Don't be alarmed, house-farmers and ground-landlords, your turn is not yet.

Still, I must own to a certain amount of anxiety as to how a reduction of sixpence a-week in rent will raise the slum-dweller from his present misery to comparative affluence and comfort. We heard from the magisterial bench that 4s. 2d. is a monstrous rack-rent. What, then, would Mr. James Rowlands' reduced rent of 5s. be? Surely it would not be much consolation for the dwellers in Soho to be rack-rented by a Liberal County Council instead of a Tory house-farmer; and yet this is what this grand reform comes to. Though the Liberal party may believe in throwing sops to Cerberus, it is quite clear that they don't mean to over-feed the noble animal. We can trust them at least not to injure the people's health by too much kindness. And the impostors call this Socialism! Well, if the people are taken in by this shallow humbug, they deserve to be, and that's all.

D. J. NICOLL.

OUT OF WORK MEMBERS.

Two painters, one general labourer, and a member who makes carriage-cushions and tarpaulins. If any of our readers know of anything that will give employment to them, they will be doing a good turn to deserving members (Hammersmith Branch).

One member who would be glad of odd jobs, another in want of situation, as bootmaker (Clerkenwell Branch).

The sale of "licenses," of any kind whatever, must be iniquitous; for a license must be an authorisation to do wrong or to do right; and it must be an iniquity to authorise anyone to do wrong, or to forbid anyone to do right.—W. H. R.

OUR BRAVE PROTECTORS.—Scene: New Cut, an odorous fried fish shop, and a penny show, a group of hungry little ones staring and smelling at both; a brave policeman busy in cuffing their ears and driving them into the gutter. Says a youngster, "Er, yer can clout us yer bacon-gobbler, but yer can't catch Jack the Ripper, can yer?" Scene No. 2: Crossing from Wellington Street, Strand, hear feeble old woman say to a stalwart defender of law-'n'-order, "Please, sir, will you see me across the road?" "Get along, you old bitch, what next?" and the next minute stops a string of 'buses in order that a carriage laden with surfeited human beings may get to Gaiety Theatre door.—F. K.

THE SOCIAL TREND.—"I feel the symptoms of matrimony creeping all over me," says Mr. Graves to Lady Franklin in Bulwer Lytton's 'Money,' and forthwith he makes her proposals of marriage. This half-consciousness of an abstract sentiment is often the prognostic of some practical step. It cannot be denied that during the last few years the symptoms of Socialism have been creeping all over us. This creepy sensation indicates a social trend in the public mind of no small importance. It is too patent and too general to be pooh-poohed. It cannot be long before it is followed by practical measures, more extensive and far-reaching than recent reductions of these social ideas to actual practice, . . . and the Christian Church must not let its heart be troubled nor let it be afraid, though it does feel the symptoms of Socialism creeping all over it.—Christian Leader.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The employers in the Blackburn cotton trade have declined to assent to the operatives' demand for three additional holidays.

A "manifesto" is to be printed and circulated by the Edinburgh Trades' Council, with a view to the better organisation of the labour of the city.

The Bo'ness miners have been offered an advance of 7½ per cent. in lieu of the 10 per cent. asked, and they are continuing to work on these terms.

A majority of members of the Aberdeen Trades' Council are opposed to compulsory insurance as tending, among other things, to weaken the strength of trades' unionism.

The shipwrights on the Wear have agreed to accept an advance of 1s. 6d. a week this month, and another shilling in July. They originally asked for an unconditional rise of 3s. on their present rate of 34s. a week.

BATHGATE MINERS.—At a meeting of the coal-miners employed in the Boghead mines, belonging to Young's Paraffin Light and Mineral Company, on the 15th, it was unanimously resolved to let the works stand "till the grass grows on the wheels" unless they get the advance of 10 per cent. demanded.

THREATENED STRIKES.—The men employed at the Askam-in-Furness Iron Works have given notice of their intention to strike unless a man named Dutton, who has refused to become a member of the National Association of Blast Furnacemen, is dismissed.—The iron-workers at the Millom Iron Works in South Cumberland are also threatening to strike.

LONG HOURS AND SHORT PAY.—We are informed, says the Railway Review, of a signalman near Ripon whose regular hours of duty are twelve or thirteen per day, frequently having, during the excursion season, to stay on duty seventeen hours or more. For these extra hours he is rewarded with ninnepence by his generous employer—the rich North-Eastern.

STRIKES AND WAGES.—Several conferences on the wages question have been held between the employers and representatives of the men engaged in the shipyards and engineering works of the Tyne and the neighbourhood. A settlement has been effected with the drikers, time men, and shipwrights in the Tyne and Blyth yards, they having received very substantial increases in their wages.

KIRKCALDY STRIKES.—The tier boys on strike at Messrs. Nairns and the Kirkcaldy Linoleum Works resumed work on the masters' terms on the 16th. Those employed by Barry, Ostler, and Co. still remain out, and work there has been brought to a standstill, all the printers having been sent home. The mill-workers are still out, and appeals are being made to the public for support.

HOLLOWWARE TRADE.—The chances are that the whole of the hollowware manufactories in the United Kingdom will be stopped within a fortnight. Notices were handed in three weeks ago; suspended on Saturday week for a fortnight; arbitration suggested and accepted; and now the disputants are putting the finishing touches to their respective statements. It is difficult to compute the number of workmen affected; the total is variously stated at 8,000 to 20,000.

SCOTCH MINERS.—The Lothians men have now got the 10 per cent., and the advances got in the different counties are as follows:—Fife, 15 per cent.; Lothians, 20 per cent.; Stirlingshire, 20 to 25 per cent.; Lanarkshire, 17½ per cent.; Ayrshire, 22½ per cent. Ayrshire men are still keeping up the agitation for another 7½ per cent., which they expect to receive this week. The demand still keeps good, all the collieries working full time, while in Fife alone over 300,000 tons have had to be taken from stocks to meet the demand. All this too, be it remembered, during the "dull season."

SHOEMAKERS' STRIKE.—The strike of the workmen employed by D. and J. Smith, boot-manufacturers, Newton-on-Ayr, still continues. Seven or eight "scabs" continue at work, and the strikers testify their displeasure by waiting at the factory gate at meal hours, and selecting a particular man, they escort him with a flute-band home and back to the works again, and take means to draw public attention to the obnoxious individual by holding a cap over his head. Procurator-Fiscal Brown has declined, we are informed, to prosecute the men under the Trades' Union Acts. The firm have raised an action in the Circuit Court to have the apprentices ordered to resume their work.

SEAMEN'S STRIKE.—A telegram from New York on the 12th states that a number of men visited a wharf at Boston the previous night, and induced several seamen to desert the ship upon which they were employed. They also assaulted the captain because he ordered them away. The agitators claimed to be acting on behalf of the Liverpool strikers. On the 14th it was reported that the strike in Liverpool had practically ended in a complete victory for the men. A deputation of seamen again had an interview with the heads of the mail steamship companies, and those of the Allan, the Inman, the International, the Cunard, and others expressed themselves heartily sick of the strike, and prepared shortly to concede the Union demands. Several large liners are lying in the docks waiting to commence the emigration season, when several hundred seamen will be required. The companies say that they will then give the Union rates, but will reduce the number of seamen carried on each boat. The Clyde seamen and firemen's strike terminated the same day after two hours' interview between the men on strike and the shipowners. The men agreed to accept the masters' terms of 27s. weekly, in the hope that as times improve they will get something more. They had 25s. at the beginning of the agitation, and came out demanding 30s. The Leith men have received for months 28s. and 27s. 6d. per week. The majority of the vessels at Leith are weekly traders. In London on the 15th it was reported the Navigation steamers Starling, Granton, Virgo, and Gannet, have paid the National Union rate of wages. At night there was a meeting in connection with the Union at Edward Street, Deptford. At Gravesend same evening, a representative meeting of sailors and firemen was held for the purpose of establishing in the port a branch of the National Amalgamated Sailor's and Firemen's Union. They adopted the following resolution: "That we firmly resolve that we will support the Union, and also all the sailors and firemen of the General Steam Navigation Company, by helping them to obtain Union wages." The chairman then briefly described the history and work of the Union, mentioning that although it had been in existence for only sixteen months, its present number of members amounted to 35,000. Before the meeting terminated the chairman said that a branch meeting of the Union would be held at the same place next evening (Saturday).

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

ITALY.

In consequence of the Roman riots, the authorities have at last started some road-work on the banks of the Tiber, which will give employment to some 1,200 hands. That is very little relief of the prevailing distress. The unemployed number many thousands, mostly workers in the building trade, who suffer under an acute crisis, brought on by the wildest speculations of the jerry-builders. Many of the workers had with their families been decoyed to Rome from the provinces by splendid promises, and were, after the collapse of the swindling concerns (the promoters of which had meanwhile filled their pockets), abandoned to their fate. Since last autumn they have continually demonstrated, without any other result but vain promises from the Government and the Municipality, until at last the measure of their sufferings was full to overflowing. The terror of the middle-classes gives great impetus to the police and a cheap pretext to the Government to suspend the right of public meeting all over Italy. Wholesale arrests have been made in Rome, and many hundreds of those immigrants from the provinces will be expelled from the holy city, to starve in the obscurity of their native place. The hackneyed assertion that it is the "foreign agitators," and not the misery, that incites the loyal and contented natives to open rebellion, must hold good once more. In Parliament the prime minister pretends, even, that most of the rioters were no real workers at all, and hinted vaguely at paid agents. In reply, our comrade Costa denounced in passionate and vigorous language the cursed commercial system of the present society. Honourable members tried to howl him down at the outset, but were silenced by the force and passion of his speech.

There is trouble brewing everywhere. The misery is alike in town and country. Fresh demonstrations of the unemployed are reported from Cecina, Ravenna, Parma, Lugo, Ferrara. At the two last named places the mayors appeased the hungry crowd by the magnanimous distribution of 25 centesimi a-head—that is, 2½d. They will return and ask for more.

At Livorno, female coral-workers and rag-gatherers have struck work for an increase of wages. There was some slight encounter between the women and the police, and several arrests have been made.

The police of Florence have outdone their brethren of Messina. They "discovered" their bomb in the right time and proper place, and had thus a pretext to secure a few obnoxious Anarchists of that town. H. SCH.

SPAIN.

TARRASA.—Acted upon by fear of the growing Socialist feeling everywhere, the authorities have recently distinguished themselves by magnifying a molehill into a mountain, and bringing before public notice that very revolutionary feeling they want to suppress. Not long since, a few lads met in the public square on leaving the factories for the singing of a song containing local allusions, for which they were dispersed by the municipal guard and police. The following night those who met in the square were men; the next night again, and more and more of them, thus intimating that a public square was for the public use, and putting to the test a question which, unfortunately, is always solved negatively. Finally an announcement was published forbidding groups to be formed "of more than three persons." The combative nature of man was naturally fired in the citizens of Tarrasa by this, and they turned out in larger numbers than before. The next night they tried to assemble again, but found the square "occupied" by the civic guard and a certain number of cavalry, who dispersed the gathering crowds after the fashion some time back familiar to the inhabitants of our peaceful isle.

SPANISH MINERS.—By mining statistics for the year 1888, lately published, we gather that there has been an increase on the preceding year in accidents and deaths, but on the other hand it is satisfactory to learn that the revenue for the year shows a considerable increase on previous years—a fact which, as our informant El Socialista says, should be very consoling to the families of those killed while contributing to all this wealth. The wages of those employed in and about the mines in some provinces are 2 francs, 1 fr. 50 c., and 1 fr. for the men, and 1 fr. and 0.75 c. for the women and children.

PORTUGAL.

Oporto.—The stevedores employed on the Duro have declared themselves on strike. As the movement will be prejudicial to the capitalist interest, the Government are arranging to send to Oporto a company of military engineers to "spoil sport" for the strikers. Thus the armed workers will serve not only to shoot the unarmed workers, but also to depreciate the value of the labour-market at critical moments like this!—La Solidaridad.

The first number of a new Socialist weekly has appeared in Oporto under the name of El Trabajador, edited by Anthesa de Quental, a revolutionary well known in the peninsula. M. M.

"The panic in London at the time of the Trafalgar Square meetings was nothing," writes a Roman correspondent of the Pall Mall, "to the panic here now. The least mention of 'the mob' causes the shops to be shut, and at every bank soldiers are stationed. Moreover, the police do not allow working-men to walk about in more than twos or threes. Even Mr. Matthews did not interpret 'meetings' so strictly as this."

NORTH HACKNEY RADICAL CLUB, 83 Church Street, Stoke Newington.—Sunday February 24, at 8.30, Mr. C. R. W. Offen, "The Responsibility of the Democracy."

THE SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—The Committee will meet at 63 Lincoln's Inn Fields, on Saturday February 23, at 7.30 p.m., to enroll members and receive subscriptions.

LEICESTER.—A course of lectures on "Socialism, its Aims and Principles" is being delivered in Leicester Secular Hall. The seventh and concluding lecture will be delivered on Sunday March 3rd by Hubert Bland—"The Outlook."

ARBEITER-BUND GLEICHHEIT, 38 Charles Square, Brunswick Place, City Road.—This Club has started work, and will be pleased to receive visits from friends or enroll new members.—H. Schwarzenberg, Sec.

SOUTH LONDON.—Friends who will help to establish a Branch of the Socialist League in South London will please place themselves in communication with C. Henze, 41 Bolton Street, Thomas Street, Kennington Park, S.E., or by letter to H. Hopkins, 17 Gairloch Road, Shenley Road, Peckham, S.E.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower Marsh, Lambeth.—Sunday February 24, at 8 p.m., A Lecture. Tuesday 26th, 8 p.m., Graham Wallas, M.A. (Fabian Society), "Property under Socialism."

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Executive.—At the last Council meeting, it was urged upon the managers of outdoor meetings to be more energetic in making collections at our stations. The two delegates to the Co-operative Aid Association, Davis and Cores, gave in their reports, and were re-elected to represent the League delegates to the committee to arrange the projected Conference.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, March 4, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Commune Celebration.—At this year's celebration, the choir will sing the "Marseillaise," "When the People have their own again," and "All for the Cause." All willing to take part are invited to practise along with the Hammersmith choir, which meets every Thursday at 7.30 prompt. A Special Practice will take place at 13, Farringdon Road, on Tuesday, February 26th, at 8 p.m.

Children's Party.—A Children's Party will be held at 13, Farringdon Road, on March 12th. Subscriptions, etc., can be sent to the Secretary, Mrs. Groser, 19, Riguault Road, Fulham. The Committee will meet at 13, Farringdon Road, on Tuesday, Feb. 26th, at 7.30 p.m. All members of the Committee are asked to attend.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Clerkenwell, to December. 1889:—Leicester, to January. Mitcham and North London, to February.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Membership Cards can now be had by the Branches at 9d. per dozen from Central Office.

The Article, published in No. 152 of Weal, Dec. 8th, 1888, addressed to "Working Women and Girls," is now being issued by the Propagandist Committee in leaflet form for distribution, at 3s. 6d. per 1,000.

Propaganda Fund.—Collected at Regent's Park, 1s. 7½d.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

CHICAGO COMMEMORATION FUND.

Samuels (Nov. 27th), 2s.; H. K. (Jan. 12th), 1s.; Brocher (Feb. 1st), 1s.; S. Sturt, 2s. 6d.; F. Sturt, 2s. 6d.

"COMMONWEAL" PRINTING FUND.

C. Launspach, £1 5s. 0d.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—Nicoll, 1s.; Mrs. Schack, 1s. 6d.; J. Presburg, 1s.; Blundell, 1s.; Seglie, 1s.; R. Turner, 1s.; J. Turner, 1s.; Latham, 1s.; Kitz, 6d.; Deane, 6d.; Sparling, 1s.; M. Morris, 1s.; S. Presburg, 1s.; B. W., 1s.; Solomons, 6d.; H. Schutt, 1s.; Tilley, 2s.; M. Wess, 6d.; Friedenholll, 6d.; Kneifel, 1s.; C. W., 7s.; Trunk, 2s.; Mrs. Sandham, 5s.; and F. S. Ellis, 14s. From Norwich Branch, 7s. 3d.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON OUTDOOR PROPAGANDA.—Good meetings were held last Sunday at Fulham, Hammersmith, Regents Park, Victoria Park, and Shadwell. Commonweal sold out at several stations.

HAMMERSMITH.—Very good meeting at Latimer Road on Sunday morning at 11.30 a.m.; speakers were Dean, A. J. Smith, and Maughan, and Crouch (S.D.F.); choir assisted. Fair sale of Commonweal. At Weltje Road at 7 p.m., Morris and Tarleton spoke to good audience; sale of Commonweal fair. At Kelmscott House at 8, comrade Beasley lectured to rather worse audience than usual. Morris was lecturing at the West Kensington Park Club, and drew some of our frequenters there, and the first fine Sunday evening of the year no doubt tempted others on to the river and elsewhere.

ABERDEEN.—Open-air work still interfered with by stormy weather. Indoor meeting on 11th poorly attended, so adjourned to meeting where Dr. Hunter was addressing his constituents, and Leatham put a number of questions which seemed to irritate the member for North Aberdeen very much. Comrade Cooper also feathered the doctor on Thursday night at Woodside.

EDINBURGH.—On Wednesday, Feb. 13th, William Morris lectured in Queen Street Hall on "Equality." Audience numbered 200, and would have been larger had we managed to hire the hall earlier. Had only day or two to advertise, but Scottish Leader kindly devoted on day of lecture a whole column to a sketch of Morris's career as artist and poet. The Scotsman also "honoured" the lecturer with a column and a quarter of criticism. Meeting successful also financially. On Sunday, Feb. 17th, in Moulder's Hall, Melliet delivered deeply interesting lecture on Victor Hugo, and kept attention of audience riveted for an hour and a quarter.

GLASGOW.—On Sunday at 5, Joe Burgoyne and Glasier spoke at Paisley Road Toll. There was a good audience, which paid much attention to the speeches but very little to the collection hat, only 6d. being contributed. We rather like the Paisley Road Toll folk nevertheless, and when they learn to be as economical in their dealings with the capitalists as they are with the Socialists, the Revolution will be at hand! At 7 o'clock, Glasier and Turley (S.D.F.) addressed a large audience on Jail Square. We intend increasing the number of our open-air meetings, and members are requested to pay attention to the announcement column.

NORWICH.—Sunday morning, well attended member's meeting held in Gordon Hall; various means adopted for future propaganda. Sunday afternoon usual open-air meeting in Market Place, good audience addressed by W. Moore, Darley, and Poynts, who delivered some capital addresses. In evening, Adams read the League 'Manifesto' to good audience, several questions asked; animated discussion opened by Poynts, Darley, and Mills; discussion adjourned until next Sunday evening, when Mills will open the discussion by leading off in the negative. The chair was taken by G. Ashley; meeting concluded with songs and recitations, and three hearty cheers for the Social Revolution. Good sale of Commonweal, and 5s. 8d. collected for propaganda.—S.

YARMOUTH.—We held two most successful meetings here last Sunday. Comrade Arthur Moore in the chair, Darley (of Norwich), a comrade from London, and Reynolds (of Yarmouth) addressed the morning meeting. In the afternoon a comrade of Norwich assisted us with a telling address; Darley left at noon for Norwich meeting. Altogether we had a good day here. Commonweal sold out at morning meeting. Mr. Howes, newsagent, George Street, is agent for the Commonweal, where those desiring can purchase it. Things are moving in the right direction.—C. R.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card; to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30. Lecture on Sunday February 24, at 8.30, Mrs. Schack, "How Women can Help the Socialist Movement." Sun. March 3, H. Davis, "Objections to Socialism Answered."

East London.—A Members' Meeting will be held Sunday March 3rd, at 4 p.m., at 26 Cawley Road, Victoria Park. All members and officers of the three dissolved branches are requested to attend. H. Davis, secretary pro tem., 97 Boston Street, Hackney Road.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Lecture on Sunday February 24, at 8 p.m., Arthur J. Bywaters, "Some Popular Objections to Socialism Considered and Answered."

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday Feb 24, at 8 p.m., A Lecture by William Clarke, M.A. Wednesday 27, at 8 p.m., Sidney Webb (Fabian), "Economic Socialism." Thursday 28th, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday March 1, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion on some point of interest in the propaganda.

Hoxton.—12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road. Business meetings held every Friday evening at 9 o'clock.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m. Members are requested to turn up at 8 p.m. at the "Lord Napier," Mitcham Fair Green. Important business.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Friday February 22, Nicoll will read Kropotkin's "Spirit of Revolt."

Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.

Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.

Dumdee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street. All persons desirous of joining are requested to communicate with A. Coulon at above address.

Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.

Galashiels (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secretary.

Gallatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.

Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. McGill, 22 Gilmour Street. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, Gordon Hall, at 8, resumed discussion on the Manifesto, by comrade Mills. Tuesday, at 8.15, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8, Discussion Class. Monday, Thursday, and Friday, Gordon Hall open from 8 p.m. Saturday, Co-operative Clothing Association, 8 until 10.30.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

Yarmouth.—Business meetings every Monday at 8 p.m. See below for open-air propaganda. C. Reynolds, Row 45, George Street, Secretary.

All persons who sympathise with the views of the Socialist League are earnestly invited to communicate with the above addresses, and if possible help us in preparing for the birth of a true society, based on equality, brotherhood, and freedom for all.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 24.

11.30.....	Latimer Road Station	Hammersmith Branch.
11.30.....	Regent's Park	Blundell.
11.30.....	Walham Green, opposite Station	The Branch.
3.30.....	Hyde Park	Hicks, Nicoll, & Parker.
3.30.....	Victoria Park	Mowbray and Davis.
7.30.....	Clerkenwell Green	Parker.
7.30.....	Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park	Hammersmith Branch.

TUESDAY 26.

8.30.....	Fulham—back of Walham Green Church	The Branch.
-----------	--	-------------

EAST END.

SUNDAY 24.

11	Hackney—"Salmon and Ball,"	Davis and Hicks.
11	Leman Street, Shadwell.....	Mrs. Schaack & Mowbray.

FRIDAY 1.

8	Philpot Street, Commercial Road	Mowbray & Cores.
---------	---------------------------------------	------------------

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 5 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d.
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
 Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
 Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

'COMMONWEAL' OFFICE, 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

JULIUS BORBOLLO'S

LABOUR NEWS AGENCY

213 Forsyth Street, New York City, U.S.A

American agency for the Commonweal. All Labour literature kept in stock. Send for list, post free.

THOMAS BINNING,

PRACTICAL LETTERPRESS PRINTER

(MEMBER LONDON SOCIETY OF COMPOSITORS)

158 PENTONVILLE ROAD, N.,

will be glad to receive orders from Trades' Unions, Workmen's Clubs, Progressive Associations, etc.,

for all kinds of Printing, especially

Handbills, Leaflets, Programmes, Pamphlets, Reports, Rules, Circulars, Cards, etc.

KARL MARX.

A NEW AND HIGHLY ARTISTIC ETCHING.

India Proof, 19 by 24 inches.

Price Two Dollars.

Etched and published by ALFIRA C. KIHN, 298 Jay Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., U.S.A.

Also for sale at New York Labour News Co., 25 East Fourth Street, N.Y.

Copies mailed to any address on receipt of price.

OUR NATIONAL CAKE:

WHO MAKES IT, AND WHO EATS IT.

Large display poster to bring home the aims of Socialism to the workers.

Sent free on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage. J. J. Harrison, 44 Oxford Street, Sheffield.

LA REVUE SOCIALISTE.

EDITED BY BENOIT MALON.

8, Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SUMMARY OF THE JANUARY NUMBER.

"The Confluents of Socialism," B. Malon; "The Right to Strike, and its Consequences," P. Boilly; "Violence," G. Tridon; "Essay on Scientific Socialism," P. Argentiades; "Alcoholism," E. Fourniere; "Alarm Cry," A. Veber; "Socialist poetry," E. Herbel; "Mme. de Barrau," Emile de Morsier; "Social Movement," A. Verber; Correspondence; Books.

TERMS:—France, 6 months 9 francs, 12 months, 18 f.

Abroad, " 10 " 20.

Payments to be made to M. Rodolphe Simon, 8 Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SOCIALIST SONGS

FOR

POPULAR SINGING.

A Handy Collection. Contains 33 effective pieces from the pens of William Morris, Edward Carpenter, C. W. Beckett, J. Bruce Glasier, D. J. Nicoll, H. Halliday Sparling, and others. A number reprinted from the Commonweal and other sources. Should be in the hands of all Socialists.

Twopence. 1s. 4d. a-dozen.

Orders to be addressed to JAMES LEATHAM, 7 Jamaica Street, Aberdeen.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

8 ARTHUR PLACE, PARADE, BIRMINGHAM.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. Price, post free, 5d. 6 copies, post free, 2s. 4d. 12 copies, 4s. 6d. 3 dozen, 12s. 6d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
 New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE.
 Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C.

THE ALARM

A. R. PARSONS' OLD PAPER.

"Men die, but Principles live."

Subscriptions 8s. per annum.

Can be sent with Commonweal from 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction.

With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

THE LABOUR LEADER.

AN ADVANCED POLITICAL JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF LABOUR.

The Miner will in future be published under the above name. Issued on the 1st of every month.

Subscription, monthly 1d.; 1s. 6d. per annum.

Edited and published by KEIR HARDIE, Cumnock, Ayrshire.

THE DEMOCRATIC REVIEW.

EDITED BY LOTHROP WITHINGTON.

LONDON 1882, 8vo 160 pp.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of this pioneer revolutionary miscellany are still obtainable. Price 6d. each number, post free 6½d. Office of Commonweal.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

Recently Published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Being seven Lectures, delivered on various occasions for the Socialist League.

Reeves & Turner, 196 Strand; or Commonweal Office.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 164.

SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE Star has been warlike of late, in view of the opening of Parliament, and has been urging on its leaders the duty of fighting hard so as to bring on a dissolution. The Star hints not obscurely at organised obstruction under the leadership of Mr. Gladstone. But Radicals may set their minds at rest, they will have no such excitement as this. Mr. Gladstone is no rebel, but a decent respectable party parliamentary leader; and to do him justice he has never pretended to be anything else. The gilded idol has not pretended to be alive itself, it has been its worshippers only who have seen life in the inert mass. Don't call the poor thing names if it won't get up and put out the fire—or, call it names if you like; but it will be all the same, it won't move.

If the Radicals who sympathise with Home Rule want to do anything at this juncture, they must not wait for their leaders but must do it for themselves. The time is not yet past when they might make the stroke (recommended in these columns before) of withdrawing from the House of Commons in a mass, and allowing the Tories and Whigs to govern them under protest. But, unfortunately, the Radicals are so wedded to a wretched little war of outposts, that they now scarcely perceive that there is a main battle. To exhaust your energies in attacking mere accidental effects of the evil, and wear out the patience of your adherents in winning victories that lead nowhere, and suffering defeats in which there is no dignity; these are the Radical tactics in England, and it is ten thousand pities that Socialists can be found to imitate them.

Under the name of "Australian Working-class Vagaries," the Daily News lately has had an article which may be worth a word or two. The writer rates the Australian workmen soundly for their folly in striking, when they already have such enormous wages. Of course, he assumes that he knows their business better than they know it themselves, and very naturally assumes that their business is to keep trade humming for the benefit of the capitalists. Of course he does not tell us what the purchasing power of the high Australian wages is, how much food and clothes and amusement (if any of the latter) they will buy; and we should like to have some information from our friend the Australian Radical on this head.

But even granted that the workmen in Australia are well supplied with necessaries comparatively with their British brethren, does not this wise-acre understand that workmen who are thrust into such a beastly corner of the earth, must be paid extra for living there, away from any chance of participation in the intellectual pleasures of the Old World, and that they will only be got to go there on those terms, unless, indeed, they are shipped off by obvious violent means?

This latter plan seems to be in the writer's mind. He says: "The moral of the story is this, the supreme task of governments is the adjustment of the labour-markets. It is sheer folly to allow enterprise to slacken, and commercial ruin to spread, because men here or there make unreasonable demands. If the patient and frugal Chinaman is refused work that needs be done, then a much larger proportion of the 350,000 annual increase of the population of the United Kingdom must be emigrated to these shores."

"Must"? Mr. Emigration Agent; and how, pray? On the whole, I think you will have to give up the idea of a press-gang for the purpose. And you need not grumble at that; there is plenty of compulsion at work to procure you land-thieves in Australia the "plenty of honest and moderately inexpensive labour" for which you say there is but one cry. Screw down the wages at home till people are rather past the verge of starvation and the streets are thronged with the unemployed; strengthen the chain of police and soldiery round them, so as to safeguard yourselves from anything more dangerous than an occasional unorganised bread-riot, which is always more serviceable to the masters than the slaves; and for aught I can see you will have for a little time "moderately inexpensive labour" to enable you to go on living on other people's toil.

But here comes a hitch for you; and therein I see another moral to your tale which has escaped your eye. When you have deported your British starvelings to Queensland and other colonies, and they begin to be a little less starved, and have leisure and spirits to consider their position, you will find that they are not such fools as you thought. They will begin to say: Well, we are better off than we were; why should we not be as well off as we can be? Here are the recourses of nature, and here we are, the workmen; what else do we want to produce all the wealth we need? Why should we pay the greater part of all that we produce to people who do nothing but work hard at keeping up their position of being our masters? Dimly when we were worse off we knew That the wit of man can devise no scheme by which the poor can become less poor without the rich becoming less rich. And now that we are better off we see it clearer still, and we also see that we now have a chance of acting on our insight.

In short, "the moral of the tale is this"; and it is a very encouraging one if the "tale" is true: This is the moral, that the Australian workmen, having before their eyes all that wealth, actual and potential, refused to be bribed by somewhat higher wages than they would have at home into acquiescence with their position of inferiority to the useless classes! The Daily News' Emigration Agent, on the contrary, clearly and very naturally looks upon the workmen in the colonies and at home as so much marketable goods and nothing else. What he is really aiming at is to transport the whole of the evils of our civilized life in England in the lump to our colonies, in order that by means of it he may make those evils more lasting in the old world. All honour to the workmen who consciously or instinctively resist such a vile scheme.

W. M.

The directors of the Civil Service Stores are said to be in a dilemma which will "excite the generous sympathy of shopkeepers all over the kingdom." They have just made up their accounts for the last half-year, and find they have taken a trifle less than £500,000 sterling. Out of this results the very moderate profit of £10,000. But according to the articles of their association the company cannot divide more than 5 per cent., and so small is the capital that 5 per cent. absorbs only £5,000. There is something like £3,000 carried over from the preceding half-year, and thus the directors have £8,000 more than they can distribute among the shareholders. Of course it will never enter their heads to apportion it among the employes from whose labour it came!

Here, according to the Pall Mall, is Sir George Trevelyan's version of the Liberal programme as put before the party by its trusted leaders:

1. The assimilation of the taxation on real and personal property.
2. A sound registration system which will give men the votes which Parliament intended them to have.
3. Religious equality.
4. Abolition of the privilege of the plural vote.
5. The reform of the House of Lords.
6. The rating of ground rents.
7. The entrusting the local representatives of the people with the charge of the police.
8. The regulation of the liquor traffic.
9. The redress of Ireland's long-standing grievances.

So much for the "Liberal" side of it. The Star gives the "London Radical Programme," saying that "the London Liberal members, with the view of carrying into effect the Radical programme for London, have given notice of the following bills relating to the metropolis, which they will bring in during the present session of Parliament:—

1. A bill for the better housing of the working-classes.
2. For the better incidence of rates.
3. For the better registration of voters.
4. For the equalisation of the poor-rates.
5. For giving to the County Council of London the control of the police.
6. For the regulation of meetings in Trafalgar Square.
7. For enabling the County Council of London to deal with the water supply.
8. For enabling the County Council to establish markets and to acquire existing market rights.

These bills apply exclusively to the metropolis. Besides these, bills for the enfranchisement of leaseholds, for registration, for the extension of the hours of polling, and for the abolition of aldermen, have been introduced by London members, but apply to the whole country."

It might, perhaps, afford matter for debate as to the exact shade of difference between the "Liberal" and "Radical" programmes; it cannot as to their "moderation" and "practicability." S.

A UTOPIAN NIGHTMARE.

PROBABLY there are few Socialists who ever see that mild and moral publication called the Leisure Hour. I don't advise anyone to waste a sixpence on it, but those who have a chance will find in the January number an article decidedly amusing, and indirectly instructive, to a Socialist.

The article is entitled "The Social Revolution Achieved: What Then?" An important question this, touching on doubtful ground—where even angels might fear to tread. "What Then?" Well, this is what the writer of the article in question did "then" (in his imagination): "I mounted," he says, "to my bachelor lodging in a quiet suburb, and was just going to sit down to my evening meal." A decidedly practical, common-sense course of action, doing great credit to our author's equanimity. For "it was the evening of the last of the terrible days of the social war in Paris. . . . But this time it was the people that had conquered. . . . Capitalists, proprietors, masters, merchants, shopkeepers had disappeared; . . . many killed in the conflict, others massacred in cold blood, and those who were not in concealment had fled from the doomed city. . . . In the deserted streets and the empty mansions one could only see groups of grimy workmen, mostly excited with drink. . . ." And so our friend goes calmly home to supper.

He is disturbed by the entrance of three men, who, as it soon appears, have come to stay. They say to him, "The Social Commune have had prepared a statistical record of apartments; and as the rich have too great accommodation and the poor too little, it has been arranged that each person shall have a right to a place. You have four rooms, and you live alone. Therefore you must give lodgings to three persons, my two comrades and myself." One man, one room: this is an excellent idea, and, I think, quite new to Socialists. Well, our friend acquiesces, finding that there will be no rent to pay for the rooms in future; and he presently asks them to partake of his bachelor supper. They do so, and he rather imprudently gives them some of his wine, so that they "began to be even merry." Then follows some "close conversation." The youngest of the three exults in the thought of doing no more work. He is going to live on the "two milliards" in the Bank of France, and on the food, drink, clothing, etc., in the stores and warehouses. Whereupon our friend delivers himself of the following remarks. They tell very much for Socialism; but that doesn't matter. He didn't see it, nor the editor either. He says:

"But all this would not last very long among so many. The two milliards in the Bank of France divided among the thirty-eight millions of Frenchmen would give scarcely fifty francs per head. And as to the money and the provisions in the shops or in private houses, that might last for a week, or, if you like to say it, a month, and there would be an end of it. The wealth of a country is not at the bottom of wells, from which it can be always and at any time drawn; it is a water which runs, and renews itself at every instant. Work or industry is the source of a country's wealth; if the fountain stops only during eight days the river will soon be dry. If in a few days, or a few weeks at the very utmost, work is not resumed everywhere, we shall all die of starvation, as in a beleaguered city."

The oldest comrade chides the young man, who "has spoken like a child." He admits the necessity of labour: but "instead of working for the benefit of a master, we shall now work for our own profit." This gives opportunity for about half a page on equality, obedience, etc.; we learn that "industry is like an army," which is rather a curious thing for industry to be like, and gives rise to speculations as to what other abstractions, such as Religion, Idleness, and the like, may be compared to. However, one sees the writer's meaning, and so it serves.

Soon we are bidden remember "that these men were not of what are called the criminal classes, as some suppose all Socialists and Communists to be. They were decent [thank heaven for that, at least!] working men, misguided by the teaching and plausible statements of theorists and demagogues." On the resumption of the "close conversation," the oldest man states that "It is that we may obtain the entire product of our labour that we have made the social revolution." He illustrates his meaning by imagining "one thousand workers in a factory, who get 1,200 or 1,500 francs yearly," and "a master gaining perhaps 100,000 francs." Of course it is easily shown how this salary, divided among the thousand men, would only amount to an extra 100 francs a year for each of them. I believe our author thinks he has made a strong point here; and it may be well to show how the difficulty is to be met.

There are many businesses in which the men are so underpaid and the work is turned out so cheaply, that the whole receipts of master and men together do not amount to nearly the equivalent of the men's labour. The difference goes into the pockets of the consumers, who get their goods far below their value. Further, it must not be forgotten that a man's wages are in reality the quantity of necessary articles he can buy with his money. Now so many men are taken from useful work, to produce useless rubbish of all sorts for the rich that the production of necessary articles is very small compared to the universal demand for them. Consequently, when the workers come to spend their money, they only get a very small part of their money's worth. But our friend seems not to recognise that money only represents exchange-value: he appears to think there is some intrinsic use-value in the money itself; and the result is an amazing confusion.

This confusion is rendered still deeper when they begin to talk about capital, with the very haziest notions as to what capital is. Communism and Collectivism get into a mix too. The editor tells us in a note (where, by the way, he advocates reform, to avoid revolution—on the "sop for Cerberus" principle) that "in France the tendency of Socialist opinion is toward Communism and Anarchy." But here we have mere State Socialism. The oldest says, "The State or Government would supply all the capital we require"; to which the other replies, "But the State has not the power to make capital drop from heaven, like the manna in the wilderness. The State never has any money except what it takes from those who contribute to it"; and so on, and so on. The poor man has forgotten his own most true statement that "work or industry is the source of a country's wealth." He is still under the delusion that the working classes live on the money supplied by the capitalist. He actually has not realised that it is victuals and drink—the produce of labour—that we all live on; and that in a reasonable commune (whatever a Collectivist State might attempt) money would be dispensed with altogether; nor has it ever occurred to him that the members of such a commune, instead of worrying about whether each got 100 francs more or less, would simply work to supply their own common needs; and that, having no idle class to keep, nor any men wasting their time in producing useless things, they would all have much leisure—certainly far more than a Leisure Hour—for enjoyment.

However, the three men are convinced that the social revolution is a failure; and in his disappointment the youngest thumps the table so hard that—our friend awakes, and lo, it was a dream!

Now this is significant. He attributes his "nightmare," as he calls it, to having read the 'Journal de Pétroleur' before going to sleep; but when he dreams, without the least surprise, of having supper enough to share with three other men, and wine on top, of that, he really must forgive us if we—well, think what we like, but suggest that he join the Blue Ribbon Army.

It were a pity if, without good reason, the space of the Commonweal were wasted over such a helpless thing as the Leisure Hour—hardly worth the trouble of kicking, so feeble is it. Perhaps the following consideration may be my excuse.

Such nonsense as the article in question, sandwiched in between mere frothy inanities, is the sort of thing that house-mistresses supply for their servants' reading. As Socialism spreads, we may expect a large increase of such misrepresentation; and the question is, How shall we best open people's eyes, so that they may not be deceived by it? The first thing plainly is, to make them anxious to see through it. Now no one would care two straws for the realisation of such a low ideal as the Leisure Hour credits us with. A mere rise of wages all round, gained by getting rid of all employers, and in all else the same shabby life that we lead to-day—such an aim wouldn't be worth fighting for. 'Twould be a case of "mountains in labour" over again. The fact is, it will take something deeper than mere economics to make a success of the inevitable overturn of society. To begin with economics is to begin at the wrong end. But let men once realise what a far happier and nobler life is possible for them, and they will soon learn enough about surplus-value and the rest of it to meet all ordinary objections. And where their logic fails them, they will defiantly take their stand on still firmer ground, and answer, "Right or wrong, we are sick of this shameful, miserable life we lead to-day. We conceive something better, and we intend, spite of all you say, to try for it, and prove you wrong by the happy lives we lead."

We cannot make too much of our ideal. That light should be kept clear in view through everything. But while so many mere palliatives are going about under the name of Socialism, and so many men and women are being led into the bogs of parliamentary representation and the like, by the will-o'-the-wisps of constitutional agitation, we must expect the progress of Socialism to be hindered by frequent falls over such tangles of stupidity as this in the Leisure Hour.

G. STURT.

HOLLOW-WARE.—All the notices given to employers in the Birmingham hollow-ware trade have been withdrawn, pending arbitration proceedings. The operatives were asked to submit three names from which the employers could select one to act as arbitrator with regard to certain points which arose out of the new lists upon which the masters and men could not agree. On Saturday it was announced the employers had selected Alderman Avery, subject to his consenting to undertake the duty. It is understood that the arbitrator's decision will be accepted by both parties.

AN ECHO FROM THE SCAFFOLD.—Though the proofs were not conclusive, the young Italian patriot, Oberdank, was executed for supposed participation in a plot to free Trieste from the Austrian yoke. This happened seven years ago. In vain did Oberdank's mother plead for mercy. The great humanitarian poet, Victor Hugo, lent her his powerful aid, also in vain. The Emperor of Austria remained inexorable. Now this monarch, according to the Star, while still crushed with grief and despair, has received the following letter:—"Trieste, Feb. 8th.—Sire, You are an unhappy father. I regret that in consequence of the tragic death of your only son, you must have experienced all the heartrending agony, the unspeakable grief, which I, a poor abandoned mother, endured on the morning of December 20, 1882. Bow down, as I have done, before the Supreme Will.—The Mother of Oberdank."

IN THE UNITED STATES.

INSPECTOR BONFIELD, Captain Schaack, and detective Jenkob Loewenstein, of the Chicago police, the three officials who did all the dirty work of the Chicago Citizens' Association to get our martyrs convicted, were on the 6th of February suspended by mayor Roche, pending the investigation to be made into their character. Suspension in this case is but a milder word for dismissal. The trio have brought libel suits against the Chicago Times for damages aggregating a million and a half dollars.

In Chicago a movement has been set on foot to secure the "pardon" of our imprisoned comrade Oscar W. Neebe. A petition to the new Governor of Illinois, Fifer, is now being circulated by his friends.

The Standard Oil Trust has gobbled up the Amazon Oil Company, and is now sole owner of the Ohio oil field.

The latest in the formation of trusts is—a trust of justices. On the 7th inst. the Justices of the Peace of Hudson County, New Jersey, met and formed a trust. They at once resolved to raise their fees.

Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of the National Department of Labour, has submitted to the Secretary of the Interior his fourth annual report, which deals exclusively with "working women in great cities." In his preface the commissioner says:

"A quarter of a century ago women were allowed to enter but few occupations. Now there are hundreds of vocations in which they can find employment. The present report names 342 of them. Whenever any industrial operations are simplified to such an extent that the weaker person can perform what was done of old by the stronger one the cheaper labour comes in and wages must of necessity be lowered" whether to the one formerly performing the labour or to the new comer.

"So, as the adult man in light occupations has given place to the woman or to the young person, wages in specific employments have decreased as compared with the former wages of the man."

Bradstreet's Weekly has published a statement of the failures of the last years in the United States. According to this paper, 10,587 failures were announced in 1883, against 9,740 in 1887, 10,568 in 1886, 11,116 in 1885, 11,620 in 1884, 10,299 in 1883, 7,635 in 1882, and 5,929 in 1881.

The same publication gives some interesting figures which it has collected in reference to capital and labour disputes. During 1888 there were reported

"679 strikes and lock-outs, an average of more than two each working day, involving 211,841 industrial employes, as against 884 strikes and lock-outs, an average of nearly three each working day, involving 345,854 employes, in 1887, and 350 strikes and lock-outs, involving 448,000 employes, in 1886. The decline in the number of men involved in strikes in 1888 from the totals of 1886 was 236,359, or over 52 per cent., while the decline last year from the figures of 1887 was 134,013, or 38 per cent. Comparing the number of strikes reported in 1888 with those of 1886, 679 against 350, there is apparently an increase of 94 per cent. in two years. There were 29 lock-outs in 1888, affecting 74,837 employes, against 20 lock-outs, involving 46,000 employes, in 1887, and 10 lock-outs, involving 80,000 employes, in 1886. Of those in 1888, 11, including 61,325 employes, failed, and 18, involving 13,512 employes, succeeded. Thus the employers won 62 per cent. of the lock-outs, but succeeded in carrying their point with only 18 per cent. of the men locked out. Nearly 38 per cent. of the strikes in 1888 were successful, while 50 per cent. of the workers involved gained their demands. In 1888 7,562,480 days' labour were lost in successful and unsuccessful strikes. The days lost in successful strikes in 1888 numbered 1,972,902, while those in unsuccessful strikes 5,589,578. The grand total loss of wages in successful strikes in 1888 is estimated at 2,959,353, and in unsuccessful strikes is said to aggregate 3,334,367 dollars."

The big car strikes in New York city and Brooklyn are ended. On February 5th a meeting of the local assemblies belonging to national district assembly No. 226 Knights of Labour was called to decide as to whether the strike should be continued or not. The vote was in favour of ending the strike. The Executive Committee of the district therefore declared the strike "off." Much the same course was gone through in Brooklyn, in national district assembly No. 75 Knights of Labour. Just the very day the strike was declared off a collision happened in New York between the strikers and the police, which resulted in the loss of a life—a striker's. The brutal way in which the police tried to force a way for a car through a crowd in Sixty-first third so infuriated the people that they threw stones and other missiles at the car. Without any other provocation, the policeman Snyder, standing on the front platform of the car, and the "scab" conductor, drew their revolvers and fired at the crowd. Striker James McGown fell and was killed almost instantaneously. A dispute arose as to who had killed the unfortunate man, but at last the authorities agreed, the why I know not, to fix the charge on Snyder. He and the conductor and the driver were brought before a coroner's jury consisting mainly of small shopkeepers and suchlike bourgeois rabble. The jury, of course, dutifully brought in a verdict that McGown was shot by Snyder while in the discharge of his duty, and that Snyder, the conductor and the driver of the car deserve every commendation and credit for the heroic (!) manner in which they acted in defence of the property intrusted to their care. The jury also found that McGown was a rioter at the time he was shot. Snyder was discharged by the court. Who after this will yet maintain that cowboyism does not reign supreme in "the land of the free and the home of the brave"?

As soon as the strike was declared off the men applied for re-employment; but in New York as well as in Brooklyn all those who were taken back had to sign an iron-bound "agreement" swearing off allegiance to all labour organisations, and re-entering the employ of the different companies as individuals only. They had to promise they would resign from every labour organisation they belonged to. Yet in spite of all these humbling and degrading conditions, which the unfortunate men, in order to escape starvation, were compelled to accept, but 3,000 found re-employment; 3,500 more had to join the great and ever-increasing army of the homeless, friendless, penniless.

It is calculated that the strike has cost New York city about half a million dollars. The calculation is made up this way: The strikers lost in wages 6,500 men at 1 dol. 50 c. a-day, 8 days, 78,000 dols.; loss of the companies, 203,100. From stoppage of traffic, fear of the public: theatres lost in patronage, 60,000; shopkeepers lost, 150,000; minor houses (brothels?), restaurants, etc., 10,000; total, 501,100 dollars.

It is interesting to note how the capitalistic press calculates the loss of the companies. Let us, for instance, take the account of the Fourth Avenue road, the property belonging to the Vanderbilts, as given by the Herald:

"The Fourth Avenue road has seventeen miles of track. Its usual receipts from fares is over 2,600 dols. a day. The loss of this for eight days means a deficit of 20,800 dols. This company fought the strike from the first, hiring new men, giving them three good meals a day and buying coats and blankets by the hundred. These expenses, with good dinners for 150 policemen at the Park Avenue Hotel every day, and breakages of property, must have made the outlay of the company about 900 dols. a day. Multiply this by eight and you have 7,200 dols., which, added to the 20,800 dols. loss of income, makes the big total of 28,000 dols."

In the same manner the accounts of the other companies are made up. It must have been quite an item for capital to feed about 3,000 policemen, to quench their thirst and to satisfy their desire for aromatic conchas. But New York capitalists know well how to treat their "blue boys." In Brooklyn the police have been made disgusted over the niggardly treatment of the railroad people, who tried to feed them on weak coffee and stale bread and treacle.

The loss of Brooklyn is calculated to be: railroad company, 7,100 dollars; strikers, 14,000; business men, 30,000; benefits, subscriptions, 4,500; total, 56,600 dollars.

The Philadelphia Ledger says: "It is stated that out of 30,000 mine labourers in the Luzerne district of Pennsylvania, only 9,000 obtained steady work during January. The falling off in wages, as compared with the same month last year, is 97,235 dollars. The outlook for February is still worse. Business of all kinds is greatly depressed."

There were 71 strikes, involving 18,926 men, reported to Bradstreet's in January this year, against 68 strikes, involving 40,436 men, in January 1888, and 92 strikes, involving 76,971 men, in January 1887.

Newark, N.J., February 12, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

MINE AND THINE.

THE following lines are literally translated from a poem written in Flanders in the 14th century, and show how the men of that day longed for the simplest Communism, probably with nearly as much reason amidst the high-handed open violence of "kings and scoundrels," as we have for our longing amidst the fraudulent veiled violence of capitalists and scoundrels:—

Two words about the world we see
And nought but Mine and Thine they be.
Ah! might we drive them forth and wide
With us should rest and peace abide;
All free, nought owned of goods and gear
By men and women though it were.
Common to all all wheat and wine
Over the seas and up the Rhine.
No manslayer then the wide world o'er
When Mine and Thine are known no more.

Yea, God, well counselled for our health,
Gave all this fleeting earthly wealth
A common heritage to all,
That men might feed them therewithal
And clothe their limbs and shoe their feet
And live a simple life and sweet.
But now so rageth greediness
That each desireth nothing less
Than all the world, and all his own;
And all for him and him alone.

Translated by WILLIAM MORRIS.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING MARCH 9, 1889.

3	Sun.	1756. W. Godwin born. 1794. Trial of Joseph Gerrald for sedition. 1848. Louis Philippe, as "Mr. Smith," lands in England. 1861. Serfdom abolished in Russia. 1879. W. K. Clifford died.
4	Mon.	1799. Trial of John Vint and two others for libelling the Czar. 1866. Fenian mass-meeting in New York. 1877. George Odger died. 1880. Karl Sladkowsky died. 1880. S. O. Molodietzky attempts the life of General Loris Melikoff, Governor-General of St. Petersburg.
5	Tues.	1817. Trial of Alexander McLaren and Thomas Baird for sedition. 1867. Fenian risings in Ireland. 1877. Trial of 50 Russian Socialists for working in factories under false names and carrying on secret propaganda: sentences—mines, 6; Siberia, 11; banishment, 19; prison, 6. 1880. Molodietzky hanged. 1882. Edwin James died.
6	Wed.	1812. Trial of D. I. Eaton for blasphemous libel. 1815. Riots in London on account of a bill prohibiting importation of corn, lasted three days. 1848. Riots in Trafalgar Square and West-end. 1867. Proclamation of the Irish Republic sent to the Times and other papers. 1868. First prosecution of the International at Paris; five prisoners. 1880. S. O. Molodietzky hanged. 1881. Land Nationalisation Society formed.
7	Thur.	1896. The Press, organ of the United Irishmen, seized by Government, and office wrecked. 1867. Fenian rising near Dublin: Fenians hold market-place at Drogheda against police and soldiers, but at length beaten off. 1878. Osinsky makes attempt on Procurer Kotlierevsky at Kieff.
8	Fri.	1831. Riots in South of England to prevent shipment of corn.
9	Sat.	1762. William Cobbett born. 1867. P. L. Lavroff banished by administrative order to Kadnikoff; whence he escaped same day three years later.

LEICESTER.—A course of lectures on "Socialism, its Aims and Principles" is being delivered in Leicester Secular Hall. The seventh and concluding lecture will be delivered on Sunday March 3rd by Hubert Bland—"The Outlook."

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

N. O.—The Free Labour Journal (first number Oct. 3, 1863) was a forerunner of Jus, and met the same fate. It advocated Courts of Arbitration for trade disputes, Emigration, and Technical Education; talks of the tyranny of the trades unions, etc.
N. D.—“Spartacus” was W. J. Linton.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	MORRIS & SPARLING 65
A Utopian Nightmare .. .	G. STURT 66
An Echo from the Scaffold 66
In the United States .. .	H. F. CHARLES 67
Mine and Thine .. .	WILLIAM MORRIS 67
Revolutionary Calendar 67
Liberal Malignity: The New Jesuits .. .	EDGEWORTH 68
To West-end Tailors .. .	MYER WILCHINSKI 69
There's Plenty for All .. .	JOHN BEDFORD LENO 69
The Paris Workmen's Congress 69
The Labour Struggle 70
The Wholesale Society and Productive Co-operation 70
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings .. .	71
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc. .. .	72

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday February 27.

ENGLAND Die Autonomie Justice Labour Elector Labour Tribune London—Freie Presse Norwich—Daylight Postal Service Gazette Railway Review Sozial Demokrat Ruskin's Reading Guild Journal INDIA Bankipore—Behar Herald Madras—People's Friend UNITED STATES New York—Der Sozialist Frelheit Truthseeker Volkzeitung Jewish Volkszeitung Workmen's Advocate	Boston—Woman's Journal Chicago—Knights of Labor Detroit—Der Arme Teufel Fort Angeles—Commonwealth San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal San Francisco—Pacific Union Denver—Arbitrator Valley Falls (Kan.)—Fair Play FRANCE Paris—L'Egalite (daily) Le Parti Ouvrier (daily) Le Proletariat La Revolte HOLLAND Hague—Recht voor Allen BELGIUM Ghent—Vooruit Liege—L'Avenir SWITZERLAND Arbeiterstimme	ITALY Turin—Nuova Gazzetta Operaia Turin—Il Muratore Milan—Il Fascio Operaio Ancona—Il Libero Patto SPAIN Seville—La Solidaridad Barcelona—El Productor Madrid—El Socialista PORTUGAL Lisbon—O Protesto Operario GERMANY Berlin—Volks Tribune AUSTRIA Wien—Gleichheit Brunn—Arbeiterstimme DENMARK Social-Demokraten WEST INDIES Cuba—El Productor
---	---	---

LIBERAL MALIGNITY: THE NEW JESUITS.

THE most malignant symptom of social disease in our day is the prostitution of intellect, under its three forms of Literature, Science, and Art, to plutocracy. Hence the inventions that should lighten the burdens of toil, increase them by supplanting the employed and putting skill at a discount, and shift the yoke to the shoulders of women and children. Great works of art, instead of developing taste and ideality among the masses, as in Greece, have become private property, the ostentation of privilege, adorning the palaces of great robbers.

But the most shameful fact of all is, that men of letters, whose fortunes are not directly due to plutocrat patronage, but depend on the sale of great numbers of books at small prices, should combine with the oppressors of that labour whose spoils nourish luxury. This is the more ungrateful, because of their clearer knowledge of the facts and methods involved, and when these men of letters profess “liberalism,” it is also the more hypocritical. Their very existence as “liberal,” secular or infidel, propagandists, depends upon a tolerance of speech and press which they refuse to other economic controversialists. An arch-type of this evil eminence, because of his intellectual and social culture, is Moncure D. Conway, one of the few who a quarter of a century ago had the moral courage to withstand and oppose the madness of the interstate war, and whose recent work, ‘Pine and Palm,’ is a gem in English literature.

Bred to the pulpit, i.e., to professional obscurantism, Conway broke the trammels of theology; he refused to owe his bread to the authority of an imaginary despot; but entered no less zealously than his ex-clerical brethren, into the holy alliance of Government, Capitalism, and the Church, with Mother Grundy for their housekeeper and common prostitute. Under this selfish and sinister bias, Conway in face of the miseries of London and New York, quiets his conscience with the Malthusian placebo. They rush upon their fate by pullulation. If they would abstain from pigging, and thus allow themselves to die out naturally, after a while, they would be few enough to command better prices for their labour. What can be done for a class that insists upon extravagance in children? Can a man of Conway's intelligence pretend to be ignorant that it is the inherent vice of misery to pullulate, as of luxury to rarefy? Was there ever a numerical excess of individual perfections, such as culture obtains in flowers, fruits, or animals? Does not this check to numbers, or quantity by quality, visibly reign in humanity? What hypocrisy! to blame the masses starved into coarseness, ignorance, and filth, degraded by industrial despotism to a lower moral level than any other beast than the hog—and not even like it, fattened for the table—for lacking self-control over the only passion whose exercise is left to them in common with other brutes! If capitalism, omnipotent through its governmental agent and its church conjuring, would but reconstitute chattel-slavery, kill off supernumeraries, and treat the rest as other beasts of burden or pleasure, there would be comparatively little ground of complaint and fewer to complain—or rather to be complained about—for these dumb-stricken ones can complain only by crime or by death.

Instead of culture, such as makes the Conways, heedless of their brother's woes, our plutocracy gives its proletaires the lot of Tantalus; which Nature has spared to the cart-horse and other beasts of burden, whose intelligence scarcely transcends their situation. It would not be worth while to single out an illustration of the so common apathy of egoist culture. I have just happened to learn that at the epoch of the “Anarchist” trial at Chicago, Conway while thanking me for informing him about the case, and letting me suppose he would use his influence in the direction of justice, was writing to the New York Tribune against the lives of the accused. He had also proclaimed himself an opponent of the death penalty; yet after the execution, he said to a friend of mine who was deprecating this public crime, “It was best they should be exterminated.”

Here is a teacher of ethics for you, that found the Christianity of Jesus not good enough for him, and that finds blasphemy against the money power an unpardonable crime.

Conway was not ignorant of the iniquities of the Anarchist trial, and avowed to me in general terms his disapproval of its proceedings. He also told me that he had read Spies' autobiography, which whatever economic dissent it may provoke, cannot fail to touch sympathies in every noble heart. No one could have limned the characters in ‘Pine and Palm,’ without having felt what it is to be a gentleman. Yet here is one hand in glove with Gary, Bonfield, Schaack and Co., synonyms of an ineffable monstrosity of baseness, cruelty, and perfidy. Suppose, which is improbable, that Conway ever believed the condemned accessory to the bomb-throwing, i.e., to the crime of resenting a police aggression on the right of assemblage, added to the other crime of using their constitutional rights of speech and press in behalf of ideas that Conway does not share. Are these two legal innocences adequate to converting previous horror of capital punishment into an exterminative hatred?

Let me interpret the true inwardness of Conway's conduct. Attached as a partisan to the privileges of the ruling class by his culture, and too intelligent not to be aware of their injustice, he like his ethical comrades, Salter, Adler and Co., all “free thinkers,” has become a systematic hypocrite, who sees in the police, however hoodlum, and in courts, however corrupt, the palladium of his privileged culture. To be such a partisan is to confine every sentiment of humanity to the membership of one's own social class; it is to be as narrow and bigoted a sectarian as Calvin or as Torquemada, independently of doctrines, it is to be as impervious as an alligator to justice or to charity. Such is the culture which is achieved at the cost of extreme degradation and misery; in our civilised proletariat, here is an exponent of the very best results of our system of government, and from this we never shall move so long as the police forms a class apart from the mass of citizens, instead of being renewed from week to week by lot from all the able-bodied. Chicago has been the police-made organic law.

EDGEWORTH.

OUT OF WORK MEMBERS.

Two painters, one general labourer, and a member who makes carriage cushions and tarpaulins. If any of our readers know of anything that will give employment to them, they will be doing a good turn to deserving members (Hammersmith Branch).

One member who would be glad of odd jobs, another in want of situation as bootmaker (Clerkenwell Branch).

Two painters would be glad of work (North London Branch).

LONDON PAUPERISM.—The number of paupers in London on the last day of the first week of February, exclusive of lunatics in asylums and vagrants, was 105,730, as compared with 110,319 in 1888, 104,253 in 1887, and 100,517 in 1886. The vagrants relieved on the 7th inst. numbered 1,234, of whom 1,058 were men, 166 women, and 10 children under sixteen years of age.

TO WEST-END TAILORS.

At this time of the year we are all of us, more or less, out of employment, and during the last busy season (that broke off for some of us long before Christmas) we had to work long hours, and in many cases in unhealthy workshops, and many is the scuffle¹ and the drag² we were in. Many a night we had to work to get a job done, many a snarl from the foreman, and many a job ill-paid—and for what? Do you think it is necessary to go through the anxious and worrying life, with all its uncertainties and disappointments, for the scanty reward that we get? How many of us can live through a slack time without the pawnshop? How often we are without the means of getting the makings of a suit or even a coat; and our children—how we crib the pieces of cloth and linings to make them little things, because the cheap clothes, when we can afford them are so common and nasty. And yet we are always making up the finest of materials. For whom? For other useful people? No. For honest men and women? Sometimes. And how do our fellow-workers get clothed? We know that they are obliged to get slop-made shoddy things, that are made by women and children in London and the provinces and on the Continent, in factories, for starvation wages, and the contractors that employ them getting richer on their misery and prostitution. Now does it not seem, friends, a very disreputable state of affairs, when we West-end tailors are never making anything for our fellow-workers, but always toiling for the comfort and benefit of the so-called upper classes; who in return do not do a single stroke of anything useful whatever, but who manage to get out of the annual results of the united labours of the workers of England, about eight hundred millions of pounds as rent, interest, and profit. "Oh, but they keep us employed!" say some. Yes, and there's the mischief. They do keep us employed on their fashions and finery (the very trimmings of which would clothe all the naked ones), keeping us away from doing the work for our fellows in all other trades and occupations, who require our labours so much. Who are continually robbing them and us, and out of the proceeds manage to keep many of us wasting our time for them and their servants. Think of the liveries that are made in a year! Think of how many honest men and women that are obliged to go to service to these people whom we work for! Who keeps these gentlefolk and their man and maid-servants? Who earns the money that buys and keeps their horses and carriages, and their expensive furniture and jewellery and wines? Why, the workers of all countries. All wealth is produced by labour, that's clear. Then labour must claim all the wealth that is stored up on all sides. These lazy people pass their time mostly in pleasure, vicious and degrading; who call themselves our superiors because, forsooth, their fathers or friends were successful thieves, not open and daring like Dick Turpin or any of the robbers of old, but in a strictly legal way protecting themselves with laws of their own making, founded or floated bogus companies, or sucked their per cents. out of the sweat and blood of the miners, or cotton hands, or the many other speculations they are engaged in at our expense.

How many of us would not have been tailors, or for the matter of that, other kinds of tradesmen, if the land had not been stolen from the people. They say (and they have it over the entrance to the Royal Exchange) that the "earth is the Lords and the fullness thereof," but they have taken advantage of the people's apathy and ignorance, and to day the earth is the landlord's, and he can and does turn us off it and makes for himself and confederates a pleasure ground. Thus it is that we are forced to come to the towns and cities and compete with already under-paid labour, and there being a demand for house-room the rents are put on. We are obliged to live in unhealthy places, we cannot get wholesome food or pure air, and we are obliged in many cases to go to work for sweaters. We perhaps go out and get work for ourselves to make at home; and if we have children they must help, and the wife also, and from so much close confinement we get sallow and miserable looking. How many of us know how many tailors die, long before their time, of consumption and other chest diseases in London alone? And shall we not make a struggle to free ourselves from this slavery? "Yes," you say, "there's the Tailor's Society!" Can that get us back the vast stolen results of our labours, past and present? Does not the society admit the necessity of masters, and only wishes to get out of the profits a little more as wages? And is not the little money we get back from the society in cases of sickness and death, part of the hard earnings of ourselves and others, who have denied themselves and families the necessary comforts to be able to keep up the payments? Must we always be so stupid to think that we cannot work and live without masters? I for one say that the whole system of masters and slaves is a rotten and unfair one.

We are told to be thrifty and temperate. That is, that we the workers, the producers, should not partake of the comforts and luxuries that we make, but should deny ourselves of nearly all that is worth living for, even to actual necessities, in order that the idlers may have more ease, more luxuries, more wealth. Because the cheaper we can live the less wages will we get, and so leave the shirkers more surplus. "Ah! but we all stand the same chance to get on," say some. Yes, but we can only get on at the expense of many of our less fortunate fellows, who may have more real ability and be in every way more worthy, and yet because another is more cringing or crafty he stands the better chance. We may all learn cutting, and pay away our hard-earned savings to some quack professor, but we only make so many more competitors for the job and so bring down the wages. Some will say, perhaps, that by belonging to the society and paying an extra 1½d. a-week for so many years, that you become eligible for admission to the "Home" at Haverstock Hill. Just fancy! After working a lifetime, perhaps, for the benefit of the innumerable parasites that fatten on us. After helping to build up the fortunes of some Poole or Redfern, and living on the cag-mag that falls to the lot of many of us, perhaps being a teetotaler, non-smoker, vegetarian; reared sons, perhaps, who have gone and fought for their country's "honour" and "nobly" died for some money-monger's profit, and who might have been a support in old age and infirmity. What a grand reward! Well, you might say, its better than nothing or the workhouse.

No, fellow-workers, it is not the reward that we are entitled to. We tell them, the aristocrats, money-lenders, stock-jobbers, and all the other sweaters, that it is good enough for them—they who have never worked, and never starved; they who have exploited the workers of all countries; they who have set us against one another because we were born on different parts of the earth; they who pay us a few pence a day to go out to India or Egypt to be shot at for their pleasure; they who debauch our daughters, our sisters, and our sweet-hearts; they who pass laws to keep us in subjection, to keep us servile and ignorant; they it is whom the workhouses, almshouses, and infirmaries are good for! They have by combination, international and social, acquired their privileges. We must do likewise. We must combine with the down-trodden workers of all countries and colours, and educate and agitate until the whole so-called civilised world is convulsed.

Let us no longer waste our time and energies on politics, and no longer be the Christ-crucified between the two thieves—Capitalism and Landlordism—but let us work unceasingly for the preparation of the workers for the great Strike of Labour throughout the world, when the two armies shall be opposed, the Workers and the Shirkers. This can and shall be accomplished in a comparatively short time, if you individually make it the duty of your life. The more we agitate the more converts we shall make, and the nearer we shall be to the great crisis, the great strike, the great Social Revolution.

MYER WILCHINSKI.

THERE'S PLENTY FOR ALL.

FROM "DRURY LANE LYRICS."

THERE'S plenty for all, but we thwart one another,
And the weak gather weeds, while the strong cull the flowers;
Let man aye treat man like a man and a brother,
And there's plenty for all in this rich world of ours.
Had the godhead been selfish, no frail flower blooming,
Would, dying, bequeath its perfume to the air;
And the life-giving streams, through our wide valleys roaming,
Would have ne'er spread their circles, nor mirrored a star.

Dark deeds and rare virtues, self-love and negation,
In the wisest of nations have struggling met;
And the page that records the good deeds of the nation,
Is polluted with crime that we fain would forget:
Did men love one another as firm as they hated,
This world were a spot wherein no man could grieve;
Will the palate of Woe with Man's tears ne'er be sated?
Will man never practice to live and let live?

Shall the shadows of darkness grow shorter or longer?
Have martyrs unbowed trod the scaffold in vain?
Will brotherly love become weaker or stronger?
The crimes of the past be enacted again?
Fair plenty shall enter the cottager's dwelling,
Laughter will shake his fat sides at his board,
Pæans to Joy fill the breeze proudly swelling,
And the wand of old Time change the serf to a lord.

JOHN BEDFORD LENO.

THE PARIS WORKMEN'S CONGRESS.—It has been resolved by the French National Labour Committee that the International Workmen's Congress shall be held during the latter half of July, immediately after the great national fêtes, which will celebrate the centenary of the Revolution. All groups, associations, or trade unions, which are represented, must prove that they were in existence in 1888. The votes will be taken by nationality, each nation having one vote, to be decided by the majority of its delegates. The agenda will include—(1) International legislation on the hours of labour; (2) The most practical means to employ so as to establish constant relations between the labour organisations of the different countries without infringing upon their autonomy. All nationalities can place other questions on the agenda for discussion. It is not at present determined where the Congress shall be held, but it is possible that it may take place in the great hall of the new Paris Labour Exchange now in course of construction. This building will cost £120,000, and will hold 180 separate offices for the use of the various trade unions. The arrangements for organising the Congress are entrusted to the French Workmen's Party (Federation des Travailleurs Socialistes de France). A discussion will be raised on the method by which the eight hours' principle is to be enforced. The French committee makes a special appeal to the English trade unions ("so well organised and so powerful") to be present through their delegates. It is to be hoped, says the Star, that this appeal will be responded to in a spirit more cordial than that which marked the conduct of the Parliamentary Committee at last November's Congress. Trade unions merely will not be the only bodies represented in Paris. All genuine societies organised to promote the interests of the working classes as a whole are invited to send delegates.

¹ Hurry.

² A drag is when with all your hurry you don't get the job done in time.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The Northumberland miners have agreed to accept the terms proposed by the masters.

The Kirkaldy mill-workers who were on strike, resumed work on the 21st of February.

The plater's helpers employed in the Wear shipbuilding yards struck work on February 20th for an increase of wages.

The Leith carters at a meeting on Saturday night resolved to form themselves into a branch of the Scottish Horsemen's Union.

The strike in the Stockport hat trade still continues. The employers, it is said, are about to establish some defensive organisation.

The rivet beaters in Leven Shipyard, Dumbarton, came out on strike on Saturday, Feb. 23rd. Several hundreds of men are affected.

There is a movement amongst the members of the Greenock branches of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers for an advance of $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per hour.

IRONMOULDER'S WAGES.—The ironmoulders on the Clyde have intimated that they will require an increase of $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per hour, to take effect on the 29th inst.

A deputation to the managers reported to a crowded meeting of miners at Broxburn, February 23rd, that the Mineral Oil Association refused to grant the advance demanded.

BOILERMAKER'S WAGES.—The shipbuilders on the Mersey have agreed to grant the boilermakers and others an increase of 5 per cent. on piece-work and 1s. on time wages from 1st of March, with a similar further increase on 1st of July.

SHIPYARD STRIKERS STAND OUT.—By a ballot the 2,000 shipyard helpers on strike at Sunderland for an advance of 1s. 6d. a week have refused the builder's offer of an increase of 6d. per week. The strike, therefore, continues. As a compromise, the men have offered to accept an advance of 1s.

NEWRY (IRELAND) SPINNERS.—The operatives in spinning department of Bessbrook Company's Spinning Mills, Dromalane, Newry, struck work on 20th for an increase, and consequently the workers in preparing and reeling departments are also idle. All the mill hands, to the number of about 300, are now out.

SOUTH WALES COLLIERS.—At an adjourned meeting of the South Wales colliers, held on Saturday at Aberdare, the employer's conditional offer of 5 per cent. advance was rejected by a majority. It was afterwards decided to demand an increase of 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in wages throughout the district of South Wales and Monmouthshire.

CHAINMAKERS.—The chainmakers in small-chain trade have accepted new list of prices lately formulated. The new list will make a reduction upon best qualities, and also a slight decrease in prices upon some classes of inferior chain. The list represents an increase upon most of the common chain. The chainmakers are now all busily at work.

LABOURERS' WAGES.—A large representative meeting of hillmen and labourers was held at Baillieston last week to discuss the wage question, and according to reports their weekly wages ranged from 13s. to 17s. per week. The following resolution was unanimously agreed to: "That we, the labourers and hillmen of Baillieston district, consider that we have been unfairly treated by our employers not giving us a fair share in the recent advance in wages, and consider that at least the weekly wage of labourers ought to be 18s.; and further, that they join the order of the Sons of Labour."

TIN-PLATE WORKERS.—At Morriston, on Saturday, a great demonstration took place to sympathise with the workmen who have given notice to the proprietors of Worcester and Upper Forest Tin-plate Works to cease work a month from February 6th. On the reception of this notice the proprietors gave notice that they would close the works at the end of the month rather be dictated to. Morriston being the centre of the tin-plate industry, the dispute is creating great anxiety. Resolutions pledging support in the approaching struggle were adopted. Over 2,000 workpeople, it is stated, will probably be locked out in about six days, and the works stopped.

MASTERS AND APPRENTICES.—D. and J. Smith, boot manufacturers at Newton-on-Ayr, applied to the Court to have two of their apprentices ordered to return to their work under the alternative of imprisonment. In defence, it was explained the boys had left their employment because of not being taught the business in accordance with the indentures, and pleaded thereby that the masters had thereby broken the indentures in having kept them almost exclusively at boy's boots, instead of also giving them men's and women's. Sheriff Paterson, after hearing proof, has decided that the masters had not fulfilled the contract with their apprentices, but held that the boys had no right to leave their work, having other remedy. He ordered them to go back, and the masters to give them a proper share of higher class work.

MANCHESTER CIGARETTE WORKERS.—A branch of the Cigarette Workers and Tobacco Cutters Union has lately been formed at Manchester. Last Thursday week the members of that society employed at the firm of Muratti and Co., at St. James's Street, Oxford Street, about 21 in number, have left work on account of the firm refusing an advance of 3d. per 1,000, which, according to the employes' statement, would simply be a returning of the 3d. that has recently been taken off. The prices at present are 2s. 6d. to male workers per 1,000, and 2s. 3d. to females for the same quantity and quality of work. The strikers are all foreign Jews, most of whom are females. Unfortunately, there are seven English Christian females still at work, and the prospect of those on strike is not very hopeful. The conditions, fines, abuse, etc., they were subject to is indescribable.

SEAMEN'S STRIKE.—A crowded meeting was held on Thursday 21st at Deptford in connection with the Sailors' and Firemen's Union, John Burns in the chair. It was reported that the General Steam Navigation Company were willing to reinstate the men on strike, and would not insist on their being transferred from one ship to another without any rest, and would concede an advance of 2s. per week on the wages formerly paid. After some discussion a resolution was passed by a majority of two to one agreeing that the men should return to work Friday on these terms. An amendment proposing that the men should stand out for an increase of 5s. was lost, but nearly 200 men remained neutral, voting neither for the resolution nor amendment. Mr. Abbott, secretary, bitterly complained of the manner in which the agitation had been boycotted by the London newspapers, with the exception of the Star, whereas in provincial seaports the local press had given full publicity to the proceedings of the Sailors' Union. John Burns said at very short notice he had attended that meeting, and brought with him cordial expressions of sympathy from several members of parliament. With regard to the General Steam Navigation Company, he noticed from their report for the year ending 1888 that they had earned £9,000 more than in the corresponding half-year of 1887; they had put by £40,000 for depreciation, besides a dividend of £11,040 for the shareholders and carrying over a balance of £3,344. That justified the men in asking for an increase, especially as the manager got £2,000 a year for four hours per day on six days of the week, while they worked nearly night and day all the week. That was a shame. He promised them the support of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, to which he belonged, and would endeavour to put a stop to the boycotting by the press.—At the Dublin Trades Council on the 18th it was stated that the owners of ten ships had conceded their demand. Michael Murphy had given his men a rise from 25s. to 30s. Tedcastle 25s. to 30s., the Caledonian, on the Silloth line, from 28s. to 30s. Palgrave and Murphy had also recognised the justice of the request, and had given a concession, but the British and Irish Steampacket Co. did not entertain the proposals. The men were willing to leave the dispute to arbitration. The Lord Mayor has consented to be one of the arbitrators. There has been a warm little dispute caused by the officers of the fire-brigade trying to prevent their men joining the Seamen's Union; but the question has been settled by the Water-works Committee resolving that "the Committee have no concern with the men as to their becoming members of any association so long as such action on their part does not interfere with the discipline and efficiency of the brigade."

THE WHOLESALE SOCIETY AND PRODUCTIVE CO-OPERATION.

THE Co-operative News publishes the following circular, copies of which are issued to the shareholding societies in the Wholesale:

GENTLEMEN,—We address you on a subject of importance to co-operators. We believe that the revision of the rules of the Co-operative Wholesale Society offers an opportunity for reconstituting the Co-operative Wholesale Society's workshops on a truly co-operative basis.

Delegates at the meetings of the Co-operative Wholesale Society have decided to appoint a committee for the purpose of considering and reporting on the present rules and constitution of the Wholesale Society.

In the present condition of co-operative opinion, which demands a solution of the labour problem, it is most desirable that the instructions given to this committee should include power to take this subject especially into their consideration, and report upon it.

The Wholesale Society stands before the public as the most prominent representative of co-operative industry; by its faults we are judged; by its failures to carry out the co-operators' principles, the public condemn our cause.

We venture to set before you some suggestions which, if incorporated in the rules of the Wholesale Society, would make it a federation in reality.

At present the productive workshops of the Wholesale Society too often act as an impediment to its progress.

By adopting a scheme similar to that outlined, it is possible to continually extend the productive side of co-operation with the help of the Wholesale Society. Workshops of this kind, possessing local self-government, and infused with local energy, would be a strength and support to the Wholesale Society, and make it what it ought to be, the great central agency for the collection and distribution of every product of co-operative industry.

We address you as fellow co-operators. We are, like you, members of co-operative societies, and therefore wishful that our Wholesale Society should have a generous programme, which would give opportunities for expansion in co-operative production.

We ask you to seriously consider the proposal we now lay before you, and pledge those for whom you vote to support proposals at least as liberal to the workers as those annexed. We remain, gentlemen, yours faithfully.

(Signed by the Executive Committee and the Secretary, H. E. Ivimey.)

Labour Association, for Promoting Co-operative Production based on the Co-partnership of the Worker. Central Office, 1 Norfolk Street, Strand.

SUGGESTIONS FOR IMPROVING THE RELATIONS OF THE WHOLESALE SOCIETY WITH ITS WORKSHOPS.

1. Separate registration of each workshop as a workshop society under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, so that workers can hold shares.
2. Wholesale Society's present capital invested in the existing productive works to be represented in £1 shares, consecutively numbered.
3. Such capital to bear the same rate of interest as is now being charged the workshops by the Wholesale Society in their accounts.
4. The Wholesale Society to remain the sole distributors to co-operative societies of the products, receiving the same commission as the workshops are at present charged in the Wholesale Society's accounts.
5. The Wholesale Society to receive such proportion of profits as will pay their present average dividend on custom.
6. The Wholesale Society to have the option to accumulate their profits in share capital of the workshop societies.
7. In the event of there being at any time surplus capital in any workshop, the shares to be paid out as consecutively numbered.
8. The share-list of each workshop society to be always open to the workers for investment in the workshop in which they are employed.
9. The workers' share capital to receive the same rate of interest as that of the Wholesale Society invested in the workshop.
10. The workers to receive (as workers) the profits remaining after providing for numbers 3, 4, 5, and 9.
11. The workers' profits to be always capitalised in shares, except such portions as are set aside for special funds.
12. A committee of management to be appointed for each workshop, upon which the workers shall elect at least one representative in the beginning, the numbers to be increased as the workers' proportion of capital increases.
13. The workers to appoint an advising committee.
14. Each workshop society to become a shareholding member in the Wholesale Society.

COSMOPOLITAN CLUB, Charles Square, Hoxton.—Sunday March 3, at 8 p.m., C. W. Mowbray, "Socialism and Politics." Friends are specially asked to turn up here on this occasion, this being the opening night.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Executive.—At the last Council meeting, Sparling, Davis, and Cores were elected as delegates to Metropolitan Radical Federation on the question of the right of public meeting in Trafalgar Square.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, March 4, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp. Members are specially asked to attend the next meeting, as the question of the best method of conducting London propaganda will be discussed.

Commune Celebration.—At this year's celebration, the choir will sing the "Marseillaise," "When the People have their own again," and "All for the Cause." All willing to take part are invited to practise along with the Hammer-smith choir, which meets every Thursday at 7.30 prompt. A Special Practice will take place at 13, Farringdon Road, on Tuesday, March 5th, after the business of the Propaganda Committee has been finished.

Children's Party.—A Children's Party will be held at 13, Farringdon Road, on March 12th. Subscriptions, etc., can be sent to the Secretary, Mrs. Groser, 19, Rigault Road, Fulham. The Committee will meet at 13, Farringdon Road, on Tuesday, March 5th, at 7.30 p.m. All members of the Committee are asked to attend.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1889:—Clerkenwell, Leicester, Mitcham, and North London, to February.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Membership Cards can now be had by the Branches at 9d. per dozen from Central Office.

The Article, published in No. 152 of Weal, Dec. 8th, 1888, addressed to "Working Women and Girls," is now being issued by the Propagandist Committee in leaflet form for distribution, at 3s. 6d. per 1,000.

Propaganda Fund.—Collected at Regent's Park, 1s. 2d.; and at Hyde Park, 1s. 7d.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.

FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

NOTICE TO MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE.—Propaganda Committee meets on Tuesday, March 5th, at 8.30 p.m. Important business; all members who are interested in the propaganda are asked to attend.

D. J. NICOLL.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—Schmitt, 1s.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; J. Presburg, 6d.; Blundell, 6d.; R. Turner, 6d.; Seglie, 6d.; J. Turner, 6d.; Latham, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; J. Morris, 2s.; B. W., 6d.; and S. Presburg, 6d.; J. Stirling Robertson, 4s. From Norwich Branch, 1s. 6d.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON OUTDOOR PROPAGANDA.—A good meeting was held last Sunday at Regent's Park, when Cantwell, Blundell, and Parker spoke; 1s. 2d. collected. At Hyde Park, Parker, Davis, Cores, and Nicoll spoke; several chants sung with good effect, and 1s. 7d. collected. Procession to Broad Street escorted by police, horse and foot; a short meeting was held at Broad Street. At Clerkenwell Green, Parker, Brooks, and McCormack spoke. Literature and Commonweal sold well at these stations.

CLERKENWELL.—On Sunday, February 24th, Mrs. Schack lectured on "How Women can Help the Socialist Movement"; very good discussion and many questions asked. Several women were present, but it was suggested that more women should attend Socialist halls and lectures, outdoor and indoor, on Sunday evenings and at other times. We closed with several revolutionary songs and the Marseillaise; 2s. 8d. collected.—S. P.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting on Sunday at Latimer Road at 11.30 a.m.; very good audience; speakers were Dean, Maughan, Wm. Morris, Crouch, and A. J. Smith; choir assisted; 16 Commonweal sold. At Weltje Road at 7 p.m., good meeting was held; speakers were Lyne, jun., Tarleton, and Bullock. At Kelmscott House, Wm. Clarke lectured to fair audience. The business meetings of this branch continue to be well attended. A few more voices wanted in the choir.—G. M.

NORTH LONDON.—Last Friday week, Nicoll read Kropotkin's article entitled "The Spirit of Revolt" to a select audience; very well received, and a good discussion followed.—T. C.

ABERDEEN.—At open-air meeting in Castle Street on 23rd inst., we were moved by police to another part of the square. Here we had to contend with cheap jacks, fruit-sellers, and a revivalist meeting in close proximity, but held our own against the whole chorus. Duncan and Leatham addressed large and densely packed meeting, and drew the revivalists into speaking about the social question from their point of view; questions at close. Comrade Cooper has made an excellent platform for us. At indoor meeting on 18th, Carpenter's lecture on "Private Property" read and discussed. Leatham is doing good propaganda in the most popular local paper, in which he is running a series of articles.

GLASGOW.—On Wednesday evening, members distributed leaflets at Mr. Naorji's meetings in the City Hall. On Sunday at 2.30, Glasier and Tim Burgoyne spoke to a good audience on the Green. At 5 o'clock, Joe Burgoyne and Glasier spoke at Paisley Road Toll on the "Distribution of Wealth." There was a large crowd, and the people listened attentively, but all the wealth they distributed into the hat when it was sent round was 5d. At 7 o'clock we held a meeting at St. George's Cross, a station which we abandoned two years ago after a short campaign. There was a very good audience, mostly of the well-dressed class. They seemed much interested, and bought Commonweal well.

NORWICH.—Sunday morning, a large number of back copies of Commonweal was distributed by several comrades at one or two of the surrounding villages. In afternoon, a short open-air meeting was held in Market Place addressed by Darley and Poynts; audience not so large as usual owing to the very bad weather. In evening, at Gordon Hall, Freeman in chair, discussion upon the 'Manifesto' was resumed. Mills opened in the negative at some length, and was supported by W. Moore. Owing to the length of time taken up, it was decided to adjourn until next Sunday evening, when it will be again resumed in the negative. Meeting concluded with songs by Darley, Emery, and Lennyng, a duet by G. and H. Ashley, and three cheers for the Social Revolution.—S.

YARMOUTH.—Sunday morning, Reynolds and Ruffold paid a promised visit to Gorleston, and held a meeting in a building used as a sailor's look-out, which was kindly offered us, the weather being very cold. We were listened to very attentively, and asked to go again. We sold six Weals. In the afternoon we held usual meeting on Priory Plain, Ruffold and Reynolds again being the speakers. All our Weal sold.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card, to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30. Lecture on Sunday March 3, at 8.30, H. Davis, "Objections to Socialism Answered." Sun. 10th, A Lecture. Sun. 17th, D. Nicoll, "English Revolution, 1815-1817—Spafeld and Derbyshire Insurrection." Sunday 24th, H. Halliday Sparling, "Luxury Now; Necessity Then." Sun. 31st, Frank Kitz, A Lecture.

East London.—A Members' Meeting will be held Sunday March 3rd, at 4 p.m., at 26 Cawley Road, Victoria Park. All members and officers of the three dissolved branches are requested to attend. H. Davis, secretary pro tem., 97 Boston Street, Hackney Road.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Lecture on Sunday March 3, at 8 p.m.

Hammer-smith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday March 3, at 8 p.m., a Lecture. Thursday 7th, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 8th, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion on some point of interest in the propaganda.

Hoxton.—12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road. Business meetings held every Friday evening at 9 o'clock.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.

Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.

Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street. All persons desirous of joining are requested to communicate with A. Coulon at above address.

Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m. Central Halls, Nicolson Street, Tuesday 5th March, at 8 p.m., Leo Melliet will lecture on "Woman and Social Progress."

Galashiels (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secretary.

Gallatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.

Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 9 a.m., comrades distributing Commonweal will meet in Gordon Hall. Sunday, at 8 p.m., resumed discussion on the Manifesto. Tuesday, at 8.15, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8, Discussion Class. Saturday, Co-operative Clothing Association, 8 until 10.30. Monday, Thursday, and Friday, Gordon Hall open from 8 p.m.—All comrades having books belonging to the Branch are requested to return them at once to the Librarian, W. Moore, in order that a complete catalogue may be made.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

Yarmouth.—Business meetings every Monday at 8 p.m. See below for open-air propaganda. C. Reynolds, Row 45, George Street, Secretary.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 3.

11	Broad Street, Soho	Nicoll & Mowbray.
11	Hackney—"Salmon and Ball,"	Hicks and Davis.
11	Leman Street, Shadwell	Mrs. Schaack and Mowbray.
11.30	Latimer Road Station	Hammersmith Branch.
11.30	Regent's Park	Parker, Springfield, Mainwaring.
11.30	Walham Green, opposite Station	The Branch.
3.30	Hyde Park	Nicoll, Brookes, Mrs. Lahr, and Parker.
3.30	Victoria Park	Davis and Mowbray.
7.30	Clerkenwell Green	Brookes and Parker.
7.30	Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park	Hammersmith Branch.

TUESDAY 5.

8.30	Fulham—back of Walham Green Church	The Branch.
------	-------	------------------------------------	-------	-------------

THURSDAY 7.

8.15	Hoxton Church	Cores & Mowbray.
------	-------	---------------	-------	------------------

FRIDAY 8.

8	Philpot Street, Commercial Road	Mowbray & Cores.
---	-------	---------------------------------	-------	------------------

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday: St. Mary's Plain, at 11; Market Place, at 3.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

CONCERT, THEATRE, AND BALL, at the Communistic Working Men's Club, 49 Tottenham St., Tottenham Court Road, W., for the benefit of ADAM WELLER, whose family are in great distress, he having been ill many years; and who has been a hard worker for the cause in England for about 20 years; on Sunday March 3rd, at 8.30 p.m. Programmes, 6d. each.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
- Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d
- The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d.
- The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
- The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
- The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
- The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
- True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
- Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d.
- "Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.
- Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

'COMMONWEAL' OFFICE, 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

JULIUS BORDOLLO'S

LABOUR NEWS AGENCY

213 Forsyth Street, New York City, U.S.A

American agency for the Commonweal. All Labour literature kept in stock. Send for list, post free.

THOMAS BINNING,

PRACTICAL LETTERPRESS PRINTER

(MEMBER LONDON SOCIETY OF COMPOSITORS)

158 PENTONVILLE ROAD, N.

will be glad to receive orders from Trades' Unions, Workmen's Clubs, Progressive Associations, etc.,

for all kinds of Printing, especially

Handbills, Leaflets, Programmes, Pamphlets, REPORTS, RULES, CIRCULARS, CARDS, ETC.

L'EGALITE,

ORGANE DE CONCENTRATION SOCIALISTE,

L'Homme Libre and Le Cri du Peuple have been amalgamated under the above title, and no effort will be spared to make the new paper in every way a worthy exponent of Socialism, as well as a high-class daily newspaper.

Editorial Committee: Daumas, Ch. Longuet, Edouard Vaillant (Municipal Councillors); L. Fiaux, Granger, Jules Guesde, Paul Lafargue, B. Malon.

SUBSCRIPTIONS (England and United States): three months, 7s. 6d.; six months, 15s., one year, 30s.

Address remittances, etc., to Jules Rouques, manager; editorial communications to A. Breuillé, secretary.

12 RUE PAUL-LELONG, PARIS.

OUR NATIONAL CAKE:

WHO MAKES IT, AND WHO EATS IT.

Large display poster to bring home the aims of Socialism to the workers.

Sent free on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage. J. J. Harrison, 44 Oxford Street, Sheffield.

LA REVUE SOCIALISTE.

EDITED BY BENOIT MALON.

8, Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SUMMARY OF THE JANUARY NUMBER.

"The Confluents of Socialism," B. Malon; "The Right to Strike, and its Consequences," P. Boilly; "Violence," G. Tridon; "Essay on Scientific Socialism," P. Argentiades; "Alcoholism," E. Fourniere; "Alarm Cry," A. Veber; "Socialist poetry," E. Herbel; "Mme. de Barrau," Emile de Morsier; "Social Movement," A. Verber; Correspondence; Books.

TERMS:—France, 6 months 9 francs, 12 months, 18 f.

Abroad, " 10 " 20.

Payments to be made to M. Rodolphe Simon, 8 Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SOCIALIST SONGS

FOR

POPULAR SINGING.

A Handy Collection. Contains 33 effective pieces from the pens of William Morris, Edward Carpenter, C. W. Beckett, J. Bruce Glasier, D. J. Nicoll, H. Halliday Sparling, and others. A number reprinted from the Commonweal and other sources. Should be in the hands of all Socialists.

Twopence. 1s. 4d. a-dozen.

Orders to be addressed to JAMES LEATHAM, 7 Jamaica Street, Aberdeen.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3D. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2s. 6D.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by

H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

WORKS BY JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction.

With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'
BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

THE LABOUR LEADER.

AN ADVANCED POLITICAL JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF LABOUR.

The Miner will in future be published under the above name. Issued on the 1st of every month.

Subscription, monthly 1d.; 1s. 6d. per annum.

Edited and published by KEIR HARDIE, Cumnock, Ayrshire.

THE DEMOCRATIC REVIEW.

EDITED BY LOTHROP WITHINGTON.

LONDON 1882, 8vo 160 pp.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of this pioneer revolutionary miscellany are still obtainable. Price 6d. each number, post free 6½d. Office of Commonweal.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

Recently Published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Being seven Lectures, delivered on various occasions for the Socialist League.

Reeves & Turner, 196 Strand; or Commonweal Office.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 165.

SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

CELEBRATION OF THE PARIS COMMUNE.

THE Celebration of the Eighteenth Anniversary of the Paris Commune (convened by the Socialist League and the Social Democratic Federation) will be held on SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 16th, at Eight prompt,

AT THE

SOUTH PLACE INSTITUTE,

SOUTH PLACE, MOORGATE STREET, E.C.

The following speakers will address the meeting:—

WM. MORRIS, H. QUELCH, D. NICOLL, JOHN BURNS, FRANK KITZ,
H. BURROWS, H. HALLIDAY SPARLING, A. S. HEADINGLEY, ELEANOR MARX-AVELING, P. KROPOTKINE, LE MOUSSU, and E. BERNSTEIN.

CHAIRMAN: H. M. HYNDMAN

Selections of Music will be given during the Evening by Members and Friends of the Social Democratic Federation, and the Choir of the Socialist League will render the 'Marseillaise,' 'All for the Cause,' and 'When the Workers have their own again,' etc.

Comrades and friends are earnestly requested to take in hand the collection of money for the defrayal of expenses, for which purpose collection sheets have been issued. Donations may be sent to

W. H. LEE (S.D.F.), or F. KITZ (S.L.),
Organising Secretaries, 13, Farringdon Rd., E.C.

NOTES ON NEWS.

It is difficult indeed to say a word about the "Great Case" which has not already been said dozens of times. Socialists must of course join in the general rejoicing. If things had gone the other way the reactionaries would have been encouraged to more and more acts of oppression, and the Times newspaper would have been our master till we could have mustered strength to upset the whole concern. As things go the Times has been hit hard indeed; and although it is true that by taking things quietly and letting the days pass, it will in a few months regain something of the appearance of its old prestige, yet at all events its forward movement to take us all by the throat has been checked.

As to Mr. Parnell, he is not of us, and probably, in time to come, will be very much against us; but it would be ungenerous indeed not to rejoice in his triumph over such a vile crew as the Times and the Tory Government. On the other hand, we think no better of him for being cleared of the crime of being art and part with the revolutionary party in Ireland; and as to the famous or infamous letter, when the fac-simile first appeared in the columns of the Friend of Informers, I remember rubbing my eyes and saying to myself, "Why, what the devil has bit the Times now, where's the harm in that letter?"

For the Government of course the blow is serious; but the hopes of a speedy dissolution in which the Star and other Radicals are indulging are surely delusive. The Government majority on the amendment to the Address shows pretty clearly that though there may be some of the Tory party who are ashamed of the tactics of their leaders (now they have failed), yet they have no choice but to vote straight on a division. Indeed, as to the shame, I doubt it; for politics make blackguards of us all.

However, when the general election does come, no doubt this defeat will go some way to overthrow the Tory party, and unless the unexpected weighs down the scales on the other side once more, we may look for a Gladstonian Parliament next time. Well, what then? As to Ireland compromise, and shelving the matter until it reappears, one may well hope, with a far more revolutionary aspect. As to the country in general? Well, what we may reasonably expect is, that the New Gladstonian Parliament will think that they have done enough for the popular side in conceding some crippled Home Rule to Ireland, and will set their face against any serious change in England. And on the whole I think that this which is likely to happen is the best thing that could happen. For there are many Radicals, and perhaps some Socialists, who expect much from a new Liberal Parliament, and if they get nothing perhaps they will bestir themselves a little, and try to push things forward.

For just think, while all these fine ladies and gentlemen, these miracles of refinement and cultivation, were crowding into the Court as into a theatre, to enjoy themselves over this judicial drama, the point of which was to find out, whether a certain Parliamentary leader was more or less mixed up with an enthusiastic and generous attack (though made on grounds that we should not agree with) on that great reactionary power, the British Empire—while all this was going on, and the corruption of well-to-do society was day by day being exposed, all around them thousands of poor people were (and are) dying of starvation and living in torment, without a hand being held out to help them. Anything is good enough to obscure the thought of that and what will come of it—though nothing worse than itself can come of it. And there is no wonder in that, for all this suffering is the foundation of "Society." Touch it, attempt seriously to remedy it, and down topples that false Society itself—and there is the remedy, and there is no other. W. M.

As comrade John Burns well said when speaking there, the meeting of the Metropolitan Radical Federation, of which a report will be found elsewhere, marked an era in the history of the struggle for free speech. The picked men of the working-men's Liberal and Radical clubs were met together, resolute, angry, ready to do anything—if they could but resolve on what was to do. They would have nothing whatever to do with the cowardly proposal to get parliament to "legalise" their meetings. The right of public meeting antedated parliament by centuries; it was one of those imprescriptible rights which the people had never delegated to any legislature. They would not be "allowed" to do that which was well within their right. Such was the clearly expressed feeling of the meeting right through.

The two Liberal members who came down to direct, remained to be rebuked and badgered. They were beginning to feel a little uncomfortable, when Sir Charles Russell came in, and their faces cleared. But they soon clouded again, not to clear for the rest of the evening, when they found how futile was the would-be coup-d'état, and how little even the "old lion of the law courts" could do for them. To see Mr. Pickersgill gradually lose his grandiose air, and plead and wriggle like a frightened pettifogger under the stern questioning of his judges! Mr. Morgan, his companion, met with a less severe reception, for he was obviously a good honest old man, a survival from bygone days. But more instructive than all, was to see Sir Charles Russell straining every nerve to master a hostile audience—of Liberals and Radicals!—and failing.

All his prestige and the greatness of his power could do nothing for him. The old familiar shibboleths fell on deaf ears—deaf to everything but "Free Speech" and "Trafalgar Square." And it was by no means an audience of Socialists; the delegates of Socialist organisations were in a very small minority. The fiercest speeches were made by the delegates of Liberal clubs and similar bodies; from the body of the meeting came the shouts of denunciation, the short bitter sen-stances that stung Sir Charles into rage and whitened the face of Mr. Pickering. So infuriated were the Radicals by the thought of the treachery wrought against them that it was the Socialists who again and again, by immense effort, secured a hearing for "the accused." This was so marked that Mr. Morgan admitted it to a League delegate after the meeting.

It was a time to be remembered, that night on which the old party ties were shown to have been destroyed by the batons of Bloody Sunday. Amid immense cheering, the delegate of the Deptford Liberal Club declared that Liberal and Tory were alike when the claims of labour were in question; that the meetings in Trafalgar Square might have added as much again to the forty years during which they have been allowed, had not the unemployed come to "show their rags there." And if the Liberals want to win back the allegiance of the London workmen by the next election, they will have to begin early and bid high.

Meanwhile, we Socialists should take heart from the "stirring of the dry bones," and work on unwearied. Who knows but our day is much nearer than we dream of?

S.

A MINSTREL COMMUNIST.

We have suffered quite a loss lately, in this neighbourhood, in the death of our old friend, Joseph Sharpe; and as a specimen of one of the people—of native feeling, dignity, gentleness, in the very poorest walks, and of that desire for and belief in a better social life, which runs like a golden thread through the thoughts of the real workers in all lands—it may be worth while to put on record some little account of him.

At the time when I first knew him, some ten years ago, Mr. Sharpe was sixty-two or sixty-three years of age; had a somewhat military air, like an old-fashioned colonel or general, but in very reduced circumstances; a heavy grey moustache, handsome profile, and youthful, even jaunty carriage. Only a few weeks before he died—last January—he presented much the same appearance, working—in red scarf and old greatcoat—in a corner of one of my fields. Sometimes, when smartened up a bit on Sunday or other day, and walking briskly up the lane, I would from the distance wonder what young man it was coming to pay me a visit. The same youthfulness characterised his mind. Notwithstanding all the reverses and struggles of a long and hard life, he possessed an indomitable power of hope, a sanguine innocence which saw no difficulties ahead as soon as he had set his mind on a thing. Only a year or two before he died, he said to me one day, "To belong to a Communistic society has always been the dream of my life, and I don't despair of it now. Peace and goodwill and true fraternity—that's what we want."

In fact, at the time when, as I have said, I first knew him, he had just been joining in an experiment for the realisation of peace and fraternity. A small body—about a dozen—of men calling themselves Communists, mostly great talkers, had joined together with the idea of establishing themselves on the land somewhere; and I have understood that it was at their instance that John Ruskin bought the small farm (of thirteen acres or so) at Topley near Sheffield, which he afterwards made over to S. George's Guild, and which now, under the name of S. George's Farm, has been put in the hands of another, less voluble and more practical, body of Communists—John Furniss, George Pearson, and Co. However that may be, it is certain that the first-mentioned set of men—of whom William Harrison Riley, formerly editor of the International Herald, was one of the most active, and among them our friend Joseph Sharpe—did for a short time occupy S. George's Farm. Their idea was not (at any rate at first) to abandon their various occupations in and around Sheffield, but to give their spare time to communal work at the farm, and in some way to share its produce—the scheme including, as most Communistic schemes seem to do, some project for the establishment of a school on the place. Unfortunately the usual dissensions arose—usual, I would say, wherever work of this kind is ruled by theories instead of by practical human needs and immediate desire of fellowship. The promoters of this scheme knew next to nothing of agriculture—being chiefly bootmakers, ironworkers, opticians, and the like—and naturally were ready to dogmatise in proportion to their ignorance; and in a very short time they were hurling anathemas at each other's heads; peace and fraternity were turned into missiles and malice; the wives entered into the fray; and the would-be garden of Eden became such a scene of confusion that Ruskin had to send down an ancient retainer of his (with a pitchfork instead of a flaming sword) to bar them all out.

Mr. Sharpe, probably, in his naive way, was as much convinced that his theories were the right ones, and that failure was due to their not being followed, as any one. He was at this time a harpist by profession, and believed in the harmonies of the spheres; but he thought, as he often told me, that discipline was very necessary in order to create harmony; and there, perhaps, he was right: but, alas! who was to enforce it? He had had, I believe, some experience of the same kind of thing before, at Mount Sorrel, near Leicester, where he was born. His life had been a curiously diversified one—always with this dream of human communism floating over it. He laughed when he told me that he was apprenticed to a butcher, saying "I couldn't kill a goose, never." Then he went into the police force for a time—by way of a change; and after that got employment in a factory. Factory work, however, becoming slack, and as he was now married, and a small family growing up, he bought a harp. "Do you see, I had a good voice—I was about thirty then—and I thought that if I was thrown out of work I could make a little by singing up and down. Having a young family makes you anxious. Well, I worked hard at the harp for three years, and could play pretty well at the end of that time; and I soon began to make quite a good thing by singing and playing: so that when the time came that I was thrown out I took to that entirely." There was possibly another reason for taking up the harp. The Chartist movement was going on at that time. Our friend, as may be imagined, was an ardent enthusiast for the five-point Charter—to be enforced by points of steel if necessary; he had often drilled with his comrades in the deserted granite-quarries of Mount Sorrel; they had muskets and other weapons hidden away in their homes. Possibly he thought it would be as well to have a trade at his finger-ends which would make him independent of locality or of the caprice of an employer. Anyhow the new trade stood him in good stead. He went about Leicester and neighbourhood, enlarging the circuit of his wanderings, till one day he came to Sheffield. "Well, I suppose they had hardly ever seen a harp in Sheffield before, and it took wonderfully. I was out at one public-house or another every evening—couldn't get away—and there was no early closing then. At last I had to bring my wife and family over and settle there; and Fred was growing up, and I taught him the fiddle; and from the time he was about twelve he accompanied me about, and has done ever since. We did very well then—made many pounds a week often—going to village-feasts; but it's not the same now."

In truth they were a pair of good musicians—both endowed with ear and taste superior to the kind of work they were often called upon to perform,—the father with a fine voice and considerable dexterity in accompaniment, the son hardly at a loss for any tune on the fiddle that might be asked for. The village feasts were a great institution at that time. They lasted for a week in each locality, beginning on the Saturday evening and extending to the following Saturday. The ancient pagan or pre-Christian practice of "well-dressing" often formed part of the festival; indeed, this custom is still kept up in some of the remoter villages of Derbyshire, and the chief well or fountain in a village is adorned with greenery, sometimes very cunningly and tastefully (as, for instance, I have seen Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter, represented by human figures elegantly inlaid in flower-heads on a green background, inside the porch of a well otherwise decorated with leaves and branches). The neighbours would congregate to these feasts from miles round; dancings and drinkings went on all night long in farm parlours and public-house upper chambers, sleepings in barns and on kitchen settles and floors, and frolics (and some work!) during the day. I have been down with the old man and his son into Lincolnshire—where the feasts are yet maintained with some spirit—taking my turn with them to carry the harp (and I found it no light weight—54 lbs.), through the byelanes around Horncastle and Coningsby, and dancing at night on sanded board floors with the young fellows and occasionally girls (though these jewels are rarer) of the locality, and enjoyed the times much.

But the advent of the railroads had already begun to tell upon the rural life. As the importance of the villages waned, and the agricultural population began to flow towards the towns, the feasts also began to fall off. People began to save their cash and their holidays for trips to the seaside and day excursions to London, and the money dribbled away from the old channels. After a few years Joseph Sharpe began to find his receipts diminishing, and the last twenty years of his life were a pretty continuous struggle with poverty. He opened a small shop in Sheffield, which his wife attended to while he was out playing, but there was not much to be got out of it; then came the fiasco at St. George's Farm; and after that there was little left to look to. He did not, however, lose his native pluck and hopefulness. There was something almost Quixotic about his dignity of manner and generosity under circumstances which would have justified a very different bearing; as, for instance, when he would, travelling by train with a companion, insist on paying fares for both, though he could ill afford it; or spread his table with the last he had for a casual visitor. In this respect his communism was not of that kind which makes free with other people's goods, and is niggardly of its own. His love of literature and the ideal tendency of his mind stood him in good stead in these times; to get hold of a book on Astronomy or the poems of Shelley was to forget all his troubles. Latterly he would make me translate to him, as best I could, the 'Divina Commedia' of Dante, and ultimately he bought himself Cary's translation of the 'Inferno.' On his bookshelf were Humboldt's 'Cosmos,' Pickering's 'Races of Man,' and several old-fashioned works on Physiology, a subject of which he was very fond.

Meanwhile, and notwithstanding a falling exchequer, he managed to bring up a small family and send them out into the world. One of his daughters went to Australia, and it was always a great day for him when a letter came from her, or a Sydney Bulletin—a paper he was very pleased with on account of its Socialist tendency. Indeed, the growth of the Socialist movement gave our friend a new impetus and object in life. Commonweal and Justice and Freedom, and other Socialist papers and pamphlets, were carried by him to remote villages and public houses through Derbyshire, Lincolnshire and Yorkshire, and the amount of propagandist work done by him in this way was probably very considerable. He enjoyed an argument, too, and was not easily worsted, for though in detail his ideas were crude and theoretic, and often quite vague and unclear, still he possessed a truly British obstinacy which never knew when it was beaten, and also a certain ease and grace of expression that gave credit to the general truth of the doctrines which he upheld. When I took to my little farm and garden at Millthorpe, Mr. Sharpe came and worked for me; and though his rows of potatoes were not always of the straightest and most regular, owing, I fear, to the inveterate ideality of his mind, still he was always a plucky and hard worker, full of enterprise, and a cheery companion. He and his wife took a small cottage in the neighbourhood, and many of our Socialist and other friends remember pleasant evenings spent there—the low-raftered room, with bright fire, the one or two pictures of Garibaldi on the wall, the harp in the corner, sometimes played upon, the reminiscences of old Chartist and other times. The minstrel was also a bit of a verse-maker, and one evening—it was Christmas time—when I came in, he was pinning a paper with some verses on it to the wall. He said: "The old lady and me were talking about old times—how we went to school together more than fifty years ago—but it seems like yesterday—and how we got married and brought up a family, and they all gone away; and now we are left alone, and wondering which of us will be the first to go. And then I thought of some verses which I once wrote to my father and mother, and I thought I would copy them out and stick them up here." But there were tears in the old man's eyes as he spoke.

It was not so long after that before it turned out that he would be the first to go. Some symptoms of heart-disease—and then he had to take to his bed. The doctor said his heart was just about worn out. The usual discomfort, prostration, sleeplessness followed, with intervals when he was quite chatty and good company. His pluck and hopefulness remained with him, his chief anxiety being that his wife should not be troubled. "Cheer up, mother," he said, as in her grief she leaned and kissed him, "I am going to prepare a New Jerusalem for you!" One day the new parson called. Sharpe was generally rather amusing with parsons, having a cheerful way of drawing them into endless discussions on Free Will and Predestination. I asked him afterwards how he got on with this one. "Very well," he said; "he asked me if he should put up a prayer for me."—"What did you say?"—"I told him he might do as he pleased, I didn't think it necessary."—"You see," he added, "I'm always praying somehow or other. I find I can't help it. Sometimes I pray to the stars."

"I have never feared death," he said, "and I don't alter my opinion now: it has to come to everybody, that is quite certain." "I believe in the future still, and think a true community will come some day; but you know, E—, the nation will have to suffer before it comes, and many leaders and teachers will be wanted."

He died "very peaceable and gentle," as one present expressed it; nor will the death of the old Communist make any difference to the great world, but he and his harp will be missed over a large area around here.

E. C.

Millthorpe, Feb. 1889.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING MARCH 16, 1889.

10	Sun.	1861. T. G. Schevchenko, Little-Russian popular poet and revolutionist, died. 1872. Giuseppe Mazzini died at Pisa.
11	Mon.	1793. Irish Volunteers suppressed by proclamation.
12	Tues.	1817. J. Cashman hanged for treason in connection with the Spa-fields riots. 1858. Serious riot in Dublin. 1868. Attempt on life of Duke of Edinburgh at Sydney.
13	Wed.	1733. Dr. Joseph Priestley born. 1794. Trial of Joseph Gerrald for sedition. 1811. Trial of John Drakard for seditious libel. 1848. Chartist meeting on Kennington Common. 1848. Open-air demonstration at Berlin. 1858. Orsini and Pierrri guillotined. 1879. William Broadhead died. 1881. Execution of Alexander of Russia with a dynamite bomb prepared by Kibolchich, and cast between himself and the condemned by T. A. Prinsvitzky, who consciously paid with his life for the successful carrying out of the mandate of the Executive Committee of the People's Will. 1882. Anniversary of the execution of the Tzar celebrated at Cleveland Hall, London. 1887. Attempt on Alexander III. by two students.
14	Thur.	1820. Gilbert McLeod transported for five years for sedition. 1842. Congress of Trades and Political Associations at Manchester. 1846. Famine riots in Ireland. 1848. Metternich expelled from Vienna. 1881. Secret bomb-factory seized at St. Petersburg; Sablin killed himself. 1883. Karl Marx died.
15	Fri.	1812. D. I. Eaton imprisoned for publishing the 'Age of Reason.' 1881. Famous article in Freiheit . 1884. Conspiracy against the King of Spain discovered.
16	Sat.	1796. Joseph Gerrald died. 1820. Henry Hunt, John Knight, John Thacker Saxton, Samuel Bamford, Joseph Healey, James Moorhouse, Robert Jones, George Swift, and Robert Wylde, tried for "conspiracy to overturn the Government by threats and force of arms," at Peterloo. 1881. Underground dynamite mine discovered under Sadovaja Street, St. Petersburg, where Tzar had to pass. 1883. Explosion (nitro-glycerine) at office of Local Government Board, Whitehall, and unsuccessful attempt at same time on the Times office.

Joseph Gerrald.—Born in the island of St. Christopher, West Indies, Feb. 9, 1763; died at Port Jackson (now Sydney), New South Wales, March 16, 1796. Son of a West-India planter, he was educated at a well-known boarding-school in Hammersmith, and afterwards by the celebrated Dr. Samuel Parr. From the first he showed considerable parts, and was deservedly a favourite with his masters and schoolmates. He was about twelve years old when his father died, leaving an estate impoverished through extravagance. He left England when he was about seventeen, having already formed an acquaintance with Sheridan and won the favour of Pitt, at that time a reformer. Soon after his return to the West Indies he married and had two children, a son and daughter, both of whom survived him. From circumstances which it is now impossible to explain, he lost most of his property and was reduced to comparative poverty. Upon this he went to America, where he lived for several years, and practised at the bar. During this time he came into contact with the leading minds of the Republic, and thoroughly imbibed their principles. Early in 1788 he came to England to enter upon proceedings for the recovery of his property. He arrived amid the excitement as to the Regency Bill, and despite his invalid state, caused by hardships he had unwisely exposed himself to in the course of his travels, he took part in the agitation and wrote pamphlets, at the request of Sheridan and his friends. A letter of his to a friend in 1789 speaks of him as one "whose constitution has been so shattered by continued sickness and anxiety, that he will incur a premature old age, and in a short time be numbered among the silent dead." In the same letter he speaks of retiring for the rest of his life to a lodging "at Walton-on-Thames, in a sober, retired family." The pressure of his friends and his own inclinations, however, soon led him to lay aside his intentions and become a member of the Constitutional Society and afterwards of the London Corresponding Society. Of the latter body he soon was one of the most active and distinguished members, and was chosen, along with Maurice Margarot, to represent it in the British Convention at Edinburgh. Pitt was now a renegade and in power; his ministry was resolved on crushing the Reformers. Gerrald was one of the selected victims. Fyshe Palmer and Margarot were "tried" before him; but though he was pressed by all his friends to escape the fate their "trials" showed to be in store for him, he refused to do so, though the way stood open, saying: "My honour is pledged; and no opportunity for flight, however favourable—no expectation of danger, however alarming—no excuse for consulting my own safety, however plausible—shall induce me to violate that pledge. I gave it to men whom I esteem, and respect, and pity; to men who, by avowing similar principles, have been brought into similar peril; to men who were confirmed in those principles, and led into that peril, by the influence of my own arguments, my own persuasions, and my own example. Under these circumstances, they became partakers of my responsibility to the law; and therefore under no circumstances will I shrink from the participation with them in the rigours of any punishment which that law, as likely to be administered in Scotland, may ordain for us." At the time on bail in England, he could easily have fled to France, but instead went back to Edinburgh. Before he went, he addressed a severe and dignified letter to Henry Dundas, Secretary of State, in which he said: "I take my departure for Edinburgh; . . . not for the purpose of taking my trial (for trial implies candid examination), but, as you well know, for the purpose of receiving my sentence of transportation for fourteen years. As you send to the things called—and in one sense justly called—the criminal judges of Scotland the sentences which they are to pronounce in all cases of State prosecution, you may as well make me the bearer of your mandates. I shall punctually transmit them; and, what may surprise a man of your cast, though I make the promise, shall faithfully keep it. . . . When I went to Scotland, I expected persecution from the Government, and protection from the people. I have met, and do still expect to meet with both. But I trust that the period is fast approaching when neither legal quibbles nor fur gowns will shelter the abuse of delegated authority, and when the people will know, will feel, and will assert, that the law is only the means, but that justice is the end, and that the SAFETY OF THE PEOPLE IS THE SOVEREIGN LAW. At all events, be assured that the severities of the Scottish criminal judicature shall be exceeded, if possible, by the firmness with which I will encounter them." His friend, the great thinker and writer William Godwin, wrote to him about the same time: "I cannot recollect the situation in which you are in a few days to be placed, without emotions of respect, and I had almost said, of envy. . . . Your trial, if you so please, may be such a day as England, and I believe the world, never saw. It may be the means of converting thousands, and progressively of millions, to the cause of reason and public justice. You have a great stake. You place your fortune, your youth, your liberty, and your talents on a single throw. If you must suffer, do not, I conjure you, suffer without first making use of this opportunity of telling a tale upon which the happiness of nations depends. Spare none of the resources of your powerful mind. . . . What an event would it be for England and mankind if you could gain an acquittal! . . . It is in man, I am sure it is, to effect that event. Gerrald, you are that man! Fertile in genius, strong in moral feeling, prepared with every accomplishment that literature and reflection can give. Stand up to the situation. Be whole yourself. . . . You REPRESENT US ALL!" And never did the cause of the people find a worthier voice: clear, calm, cogent reasoning, warmed by the fire of genius, and rising occasionally to heights of grave and noble eloquence, Gerrald's speech on his defence put forth in detail the rights of the people for which he contended, and supported them with a thousand conclusive arguments. A speech of great length, lasting for hours, but with no superfluous point in it. After the verdict had been rendered, he said: "I am as little hurt as I am surprised at the verdict returned, inasmuch as I find that the Public Prosecutor himself, in the House of Commons, anticipated the fate which I was to meet; but, my lord, I trust that a moral and enlightened world, collectively, will do justice to the purity of the motives which have actuated my conduct; and I glory in being the advocate of a cause, with which is complicated Truth, Justice, and Freedom, which I know must and will ultimately triumph." He was sentenced to fourteen years transportation. This was in March 1794; in April he was removed to London and committed to Newgate; whence in October he was transferred to Giltspur Street. On May 2, 1795, he was, without warning, dragged from a sick-bed, ironed, conveyed to Gosport, and hurried on board the "Sovereign" transport, for Botany Bay. He suffered terribly during the voyage, reaching New South Wales November 5, 1795, in a state of great weakness. He survived his arrival only five months. Almost with his last breath he said: "I die in the best of causes; and I die, as you are my witnesses, without repining." He was buried at Farm Cove, and on his tombstone it was recorded that "he died a martyr to the liberties of his country." Is his grave there forgotten, like his memory at home? Or is it known and visited as one of the few tombs in Australia that will be looked for in time to come? It is the last resting-place of one of the most honest, most generous and most able of the advocates of the liberties of mankind.—S.

We learn, says the Daily News, with a regret that will be widely shared in this country and in Australia, that Lady Gavan Duffy, wife of Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, has lately died at Nice. Lady Gavan Duffy, who was in her thirtieth year, had never recovered from a fever which followed her confinement, which took place at the end of December. Her death took place on Sunday last. She leaves four children, the youngest less than two months old.

"FOR THE PEOPLE."—The splendid poem by James Jeffrey Roobe under this title, reprinted in the last number of Christian Socialist, and there credited to the Independent, was given in Commonweal, No. 128, June 23, 1888, and acknowledged as taken from Conolly's "Household Treasury of Ireland's Poets," New York, 1887.

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—The number of paupers in London (exclusive of lunatics in asylums and vagrants) on the last day of the second week of February was 107,056, as compared with 110,220 on the corresponding day of last year, 104,560 in 1887, and 102,050 in 1886. The vagrants relieved in the metropolis on the last day of the second week of February numbered 1,191, of whom 1,030 were men, 144 women, and 17 children under sixteen years of age.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

D. A.—Charles Cole, "a London Mechanic," published a volume of 'Political and Other Poems,' 1835, which was highly praised by Cobbett and also by the critics of the time.

L. T. H.—The Irish Truthseeker was published in Belfast, 1848, by Hugh Clark. It was not a success.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	MORRIS & SPARLING 73
A Minstrel Communist	EDWARD CARPENTER 74
Revolutionary Calendar—Joseph Gerrald	H. HALLIDAY SPARLING 75
The London County Council	W. HARRISON RILEY 76
In the United States	H. F. CHARLES 77
Trafalgar Square 77
The Labour Struggle 78
Correspondence—Legal Innocence	EDGEWORTH 78
International Notes	V. DAVE 78
Death of James Francis Murray 78
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	79
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	80

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday March 6.

ENGLAND	Chicago (Ill)—Vorbote Baeker Zeitung	SWITZERLAND Geneva—Przedswit
Justice	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	ITALY
Labour Elector	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Rome—L'Emancipazione
Labour Tribune	Port Angeles—Commonwealth	SPAIN
London—Freie Presse	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung	Barcelona—El Productor
Norwich—Daylight	S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal	Madrid—El Socialista
Personal Rights Journal	San Francisco—Pacific Union	PORTUGAL
Railway Review	St. Louis (Mo.)—Die Parole	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
Sozial Demokrat	Newfound'd, Le Reveil les Masses	GERMANY
Telegraph Service Gazette	FRANCE	Berlin—Volks Tribune
Unity	Paris—L'Egalite (daily)	AUSTRIA
INDIA	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	Wien—Gleichheit
Bankipore—Behar Herald	Le Proletariat	Brunn—Volksfreund
Madras—People's Friend	La Revolte	HUNGARY
UNITED STATES	Le Coup de Feu	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik
New York—Der Sozialist	HOLLAND	DENMARK
Freiheit	Hague—Recht voor Allen	Social-Demokraten
Volkszeitung	BELGIUM	SWEDEN
Jewish Volkszeitung	Ghent—Vooruit	Malmo—Arbetet
Workmen's Advocate	Liege—L'Avenir	Stockholm, Social-Demokraten
Boston—Woman's Journal
Investigator

"VIVE LA COMMUNE!"

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE

Will be GIVEN AWAY with next week's COMMONWEAL.

* * * Newsagents and others are requested to send their orders early, as a large demand is anticipated.

Copies on Fine Paper for Framing, 2d.; post free, 2½d.

THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.

WHAT IT SHOULD DO.

SOME of the new Council's doings can be clearly foreseen. There will be much talk, more talk, most talk. There will be discussion, dispute, disagreement, detraction. On the one hand, heroic and thorough remedies will be termed preposterous, utopian, and impossible; and, on the other, alleviates will, and truly, be termed futile and hopeless. But out of the tiresome turmoil of talk some good will result. There will be more public, earnest, and practical discussion of social evils and social reforms than has hitherto been known in England, and the discussion will stimulate thought and greatly multiply the number of social reformers.

What should be done? A complete answer is, perhaps, beyond the capacity of a finite mind, but there are important measures of relief that can be suggested by all old social reformers, of whom I am one.

Work must be organised. Carlyle says, "All human interests, combined human endeavours, and social growths in this world have, at a certain stage of their development, required organising; and Work, the greatest of human interests, does now require it." Before we can organise understandingly, society must be scientifically and systematically analysed. A social census should be taken, which, in addition to the usual census particulars, should specify the amount and nature of property, and the exact location of lands and buildings owned by each person. The gross income of each person, and from what occupation or investment it is derived. The amounts paid as rent of lands and buildings. As regards the poor and "working classes," exact information should be obtained of the number of persons unemployed, and of the sort of work they can do; also of the average hours of labour of those who are employed; and all such particulars should be carefully classified and summarised.

Meantime, Labour Offices should be opened in every district, and every applicant for work should be given immediate employment of some kind. Starving people should not be expected to wait until the census auditors have completed their calculations. If the Council can think of nothing else for the first day's applicants to do, let it give them all the red tape to make carpets of. If the Council can't find anything in the "great world of London" for the next day's applicants to do, then (the red tape being out of the way), it is not so competent a body as I hope and believe it to be.

The Council should, and probably does, understand that immediate assistance is needed by at least one hundred thousand people in London, and that such assistance, in a non-charitable form, will require a large sum of money at the outset. How should such a large amount of money—of legal tender—be obtained? By getting possession of the misappropriated property of the city guilds and other misused trusts, and by taxation of ground-rents? Those resources are available—barring red-tape—but the best way to obtain an immediate supply of money will be to make it, in the form of London Council Notes, of denominations of value of five and ten shillings, and one, two five, ten, twenty, and one hundred pounds. With these notes (which would become money by being made legal tender), all the slums of London could be immediately purchased—the land and the buildings thereon. New buildings could be erected, new streets and squares made, and old streets widened. The "improvements" would increase the incomes from the property, and, as the saying is, "pay for themselves," or, so far as sovereigns and bank-notes are concerned, be made without cost. The Council Notes would pay for improvements; the rents of the improved property would be paid in notes, which, having done their work, could be made into pulp for wrapping paper. The gas and water works, and the trams, should be bought, improved, and operated by the Council on the same "costless" principle; that is, without any expense for gold or usury.

But the red tape!—backed by a multitude of usurers and ignoramuses? I have no hope that this first Council can abolish it. Wilkie Collins wrote: "Look where you will, in every high place there sits an Ass, settled beyond the reach of all the greatest intellects in this world to pull him down. Over our whole social system, complacent Imbecility rules supreme—snuffs out the searching light of Intelligence with total impunity—and hoots, owl-like, in answer to every form of protest, 'See how well we all do in the dark.' One of these days, that audacious assertion will be practically contradicted, and the whole rotten system of modern society will come down with a crash." Let the crash come, and welcome, if the Asses cannot be otherwise disarmed and dethroned.

Let all people have a fair opportunity to earn their living at occupations they are fit for, and there will be no more need to wrangle over such expedients as gratuitous school dinners. (The children are entitled to a full supply of daily food, or none. If the parents cannot, or will not, provide proper food, clothing, and shelter for their children, then they—not being anybody's "private property," but being wards of the State—must be wholly cared for by the State, or a competent agency thereof.)

The establishment of the Council is an important step in the right direction. It is the Commune¹ Council of the greatest town in the world. The first Council will be genteelly reformatory—not shockingly revolutionary. I have not yet seen a list of its members, but if a few of them are really Radical, they will be outvoted by the Party of Order—the representatives of lawyers' laws and perquisites, the church's dominion and prerogatives, the landlord's, the householder's, and banker's usuries, and the red-tape of all beadle and bumbledom.

But despite all the obstructions caused by ignorance and avarice, the Council will, as I said at the outset, be the means of doing some good. By stimulating thought on social questions, it will inevitably increase the number of Socialists and weaken their adversaries. Therefore, fellow Socialists, let us cry Hurrah for the Council! and then let us roll up our sleeves and work harder than ever.

Townsend Centre, Mass., U. S.

W. HARRISON RILEY.

"It is the greed for gain which is responsible for four-fifths of the crime committed," said a popular clergyman, and then he accepted a call for £500 more per year.

¹ Many people seem unaware that there are over 20,000 recognised communes in France, and that a large proportion of the towns of England are described as communes on their official seals.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

DURING the year ending December 31st, 1888, 518,518 immigrants arrived in the United States, as against 510,058 in 1887. Of the total number arrived, 172,317, or 33 per cent., came from the United Kingdom, as against 178,071, or 35 per cent., in 1887. The following table shows the arrival from Great Britain and Ireland during the past two years :

	1888.	1887.
England and Wales	77,168	83,493
Ireland	71,761	72,599
Scotland	23,588	21,979
Totals	172,317	178,071

The new eight-hour movement is making but slow progress. It is hardly talked about, not even in labour circles. The first meetings to be held to discuss this question are to be held on the 22nd inst. (Washington's birthday), and yet nowhere are active preparations made to make the meetings a success. To break the ice, delegates representing twenty-five trade and labour organisations, held a conference in New York some days ago, under the auspices of the American Federation of Labour, at which a committee of three was appointed to prepare an address to the workers, and a committee of nine to arrange for a great demonstration on the evening of February 22nd at Cooper Union in New York city. The Central Labour Union of New York was severely criticised by the delegates present for its inactivity. The committee of three has in the meantime drawn up the address of which the following extracts will give the principal points :

"In the name of the trade and labour organisations of New York city we cordially and earnestly invite you to attend a mass meeting to be held on Friday evening, February 22, at Cooper Union, in order to inaugurate the eight hour movement decided upon by the Convention of the American Federation of Labour last December.

"The eight hour workday is an issue on which all wage earners, organised and unorganised, employed and unemployed, stand united. You are all interested in the great cause which we now urge you to struggle for. Misery and overwork are the parents of ignorance. Reduce the hours of labour, elevate the standard of life of the toiling masses, and you will sap the very foundation on which rests political corruption, which disgraces the honour of our nation.

"Therefore it behoves us as toilers, as citizens, as a people who have a common inheritance, to give this movement all the aid and encouragement so necessary to success.

"We urge you by the undying bonds that unite us, by our duty to our fellow men and posterity, to attend the meeting. Let the glad tidings go forth from Cooper Union on the evening of Washington's birthday to the workers of America that the labouring men of New York are in sympathy with the spirit and necessity of our time, to enforce on May 1, 1890, eight hours for work, eight for rest and eight hours for what we will."

As will be seen, the address contains some assertions which will hardly bear criticism.

It is reported in the daily papers, and not as yet contradicted, that Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labour, has of late had many conferences with T. V. Powderly. It is to be hoped that Gompers remembers that he has a reputation to lose, and also that "bad company corrupts good manners." It is further reported that the two "labour leaders" have arrived at an arrangement to work hand in hand in the eight hours movement and to forget, at least temporarily, their mutual antagonism. More than likely the "Pauper's Palace," the headquarters in Philadelphia of the Knights of Labour will be turned into a "Working-men's Exchange."

Superintendent Murray of the New York police has sent in to the Police Commissioners a report of his action during the last street-car strike. The report shows that the police were several days before the strike aware that the men intended to strike, and they had consequently ample time to prepare themselves for their "duty." The policemen, of course, are much praised by their chief for their "courage," strict attendance to duty, and, last but not least, their "humanity," shown during the strike. The superintendent also makes the following two "suggestions": "First, the reliance that can be placed upon a thoroughly organised and well equipped police force in maintaining the public peace; and second, the necessity of making immediate provision for a stronger force, numerically speaking, and giving to it all the improved aids that science, wisdom, and experience might suggest." The "force," he suggests, should be increased from 3,000 to 4,000 men; there should be more patrol wagons, and the electric communications between the stations and the central office should be vastly improved. Of course the "chief" will get all he wants granted. A month's vacation was granted to him to go to Florida and to get a severe cold (!) cured which he contracted during the strike. And 3,500 strikers are yet without work. Are they to go also to Florida—or are they to die, as they are doing, in the gutter? "Blessed be a Christian country!"

Appropos Christianity. The New York police have got a pension fund. A few days ago the Sixth Avenue Railroad sent a cheque of 500 dols. to this fund, with a copy of resolutions praising the force for its success in protecting the company. The Broadway Company followed suit with a cheque of 1,000 dols., and the Fourth Avenue Railroad (the Vanderbilt's) imitated the good example by sending to the same fund 5,000 dols. Even some capitalistic papers saw the stupidity of such action and they kicked. The Police Commissioners interviewed said: "That as pay for police services the money of course could not be accepted, but that as a voluntary gift for 'sweet Christian charity's sake' the mammon would be taken." "Sweet Christian charity," indeed! Gentlemen, the veil which you have thrown around your rotten carcasses, composed of brutality and hypocrisy, is getting dangerously thin! Beware, every dog has his day!

At Birdsboro, Pa., the Brooke Iron Company on the 12th inst. posted notices in their mill works that they would be obliged to ask (!) their employes to accept a reduction, beginning March 1st. The amount was not stated. The wages of the puddlers are already reduced from 3 dols. 25 cents. to 3 dols. per ton.

The 700 employes of the Pottsville Iron and Steel Company's Fishback rolling mill in Pottsville, Pa., were notified of a reduction of from 10 to 15 per cent. in wages, to take effect on Monday next. The men will hold a meeting on the 15th inst. to decide whether or not they will accept the reduction.

The workers of the central iron works in Harrisburg, Pa., have been informed that on the 4th of March a reduction of wages of 25 per cent. will be put in force.

The American Flint Glass Workers' Union is a strong one. There are 5,920 men in it, and only 79 non-union men in the trade outside of it. Of the 5,920 men in the union, 5,678 are employed at present. All but six of the 117 flint glass furnaces in the United States are in operation.

The Massachusetts State Board of Arbitration, on the joint application of a Rockland shoe manufacturing concern and its employes, has fixed a scale of wages to be paid.

The cane chair-workers of Heywood Bros. and Co., in Gardina, Mass., have had to submit to a reduction in wages of 20 per cent. Since September last year their wages have been reduced 40 per cent.

The following despatch is cabled from Montreal, Quebec, and has been headed by a skunk of an editor of a capitalistic paper, "Idle labourers in Montreal refuse employment that is arduous." However, there are plenty of lamp-posts in New York when the time comes:—

"There are always hundreds of able-bodied, deserving labourers, principally outdoor workers, thrown out of employment here during the long winter months, and they have to hustle pretty hard to secure a living at all. This year the number of those in distress is much larger than usual. When the city authorities, forced to do something by the popular clamour, advertised their willingness to give work to the unemployed, there was an unexampled rush to the City Hall. Nearly a thousand men gathered there this morning to endeavour to secure means to keep the wolf from the door. The crowd was made up of various types, from the toughest specimen of the wharf rat, in tattered garments, to the respectable working-man, decently apparelled. The employment offered was that of snow shovelling and other work on the roads, and some hundreds were given employment in this line, but there were many left, and when they demanded work City Surveyor St. George told them they could go to the city stone-yards and break stones, for which they would be paid 5 dols. per toise. To his surprise no one accepted the offer, and all without an exception replied that they would sooner starve than break stones. An old hand would be able to earn 1 dol. a day, but a novice at stone-breaking would take a very long time, perhaps ten days or a fortnight, to break a toise."

If men who are willing to shovel snow in Canada refuse any kind of work, that kind of work must be bad indeed! The sneer of the reptile pressman is surely "cheap and nasty."

Newark, N.J., February 19, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE.

A MEETING of delegates of Liberal and Radical clubs and associations, forming what is known as the Dillon-Lewis Open-air Meetings Committee, held Monday-week night, denounced "the course of conduct pursued by the authorities in the statement of the case between the people and the Government as to the right of meeting in Trafalgar Square, and declares that such conduct is a disgraceful breach of the engagement entered into on the part of the Government." Mr. Conybeare said they did not deem it necessary to go to Parliament for a recognition of the right they had enjoyed for so many years, and it was resolved—"that the right of public meeting ought not to be made dependent upon any new legislation, as it was an undoubted right under the Constitution." Another resolution condemned "the apathy and want of courage of the Liberal party generally, and the members for London in particular, in not attacking the Government for the misuse of the police in regard to the Trafalgar Square meetings." The sub-committee were appointed delegates to a conference on the subject to be held by the Metropolitan Radical Federation.

At the Borough of Hackney Club on Thursday night about 400 delegates of Liberal and Radical clubs and Socialist organisations assembled; one of the finest conferences that has assembled in London, and the men meant business. The London Liberal members sent Messrs. O. V. Morgan and Pickersgill as a deputation. Mr. Ben Ellis (Peckham) took the chair and the West Southwark Club delegate moved that a meeting be called for an early date in Trafalgar Square. It was, however, at once resolved: "That the Liberal members' deputation report on what they had done in Parliament to assert the right of free speech." Mr. Pickersgill got up to face an audience which soon proved to be thoroughly hostile. Instead of facing the motion, Mr. Pickersgill talked about what should be done in the future. The delegates wanted to know why the conduct of the Government in suppressing meetings had not been energetically and persistently attacked; and Mr. Pickersgill was not inclined to discuss that point. Then Mr. Morgan tried, and though he personally met with a more kindly reception, the delegates again quite firmly expressed their disapproval. Then Sir Charles Russell, who had entered the hall meanwhile, evidently with a sort of coup d'état in view, got up. In spite of appearing in the full flush of his great victory, in spite of his immensely clever and powerful speech, his attempt to excuse the conduct of the Liberals on the Trafalgar Square question was received with the most emphatic disapproval, and he would hardly have been heard had it not been for the Socialist delegates present. Sir Charles's main point was that, although the continuous proclamation was illegal, they could go no further in legal measures after a popular jury had justified the suppression of the meeting on Nov. 13, 1887, by convicting Cunningham-Graham and Burns. This point brought out the loudest expressions of dissent, and Sir Charles Russell had to bow to the storm awhile. Cunningham-Graham hotly declared that the jury was not a popular, but a packed shopkeepers' jury. He vehemently denounced the doctrine that the right of free speech should depend upon either Parliament, law courts, or jury, and was vociferously cheered. Mr. Saunders, Mr. G. Bernard Shaw, John Burns, and Connell all delivered terse and vigorous speeches, the whole tenour of which was bitter resentment against the Liberal party for not taking up the right of free speech in Trafalgar Square. There could be no mistake about the unanimity and depth of the feeling of dissatisfaction that prevailed. When Sir Charles rose for the third time, his temper was up. In cross-examination tones he declared that they had done their best, and that they (the delegates) were to blame for not sending more Liberals in for London constituencies; but he was met with lusty shouts of "What use are they?" "They won't defend our rights!" and similar expressions. The meeting was in a highly excited state, but the full exasperation of the delegates did not burst forth until Mr. Pickersgill, in response to an appeal that he should move and amendment to the Address on the subject, as suggested by the Star some days before, timidly answered that he could not do so without consulting the other London Liberal members. This was hissed outright, and it was well that the next speech was by a calmly-disposed delegate, who moved the adjournment of the conference for a fortnight. The Star concludes its report by saying: "There could be no mistaking the strong and even bitter feeling shown by the meeting, and it is to be hoped that before the conference reassembles some vigorous course of action will be resolved upon by the Liberal party." We may add our hope that whatever the "Liberal party" may do now, they will be unable to lull the working men again into the dead-alive condition they were in before Bloody Sunday worked them up.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The North Warwickshire miners assembled at Bedworth on the 27th, and resolved to demand a 10 per cent. advance.

There are fears in some quarters of a strike with the colliers in Wales. They are firm in their demand for 12½ per cent. advance in wages.

Cabinet makers are warned, by advertisement in the local press, to keep wide from Kirkcaldy and the central district of Glasgow during impending disputes. At Kirkcaldy a few have resumed work, and a large number have left the district and got work elsewhere.

SOUTH WALES COLLIERS.—More than a thousand notices to cease work in 28 days were handed in on the 1st by the Abercarne colliers in default of 12½ per cent. advance. The same course is adopted by all collieries throughout South Wales which are governed by the sliding scale board.

LABOURERS STRIKE.—The labourers in Levenbank Foundry, Dumbarton, have struck for an advance of ½d. per hour. Their present wage is 4d. per hour. The masters offered to grant the increase to some of the men and not to others, but this offer was refused; and the labourers, numbering 80, left work.

STRIKE AT HOLMES.—At a mass meeting of shale miners, held at Broxburn on Thursday week, it was reported by the Holmes men that three of their number had been victimised for taking an active part in union affairs, though their dismissal was on other small pretexts. They had agreed not to resume work until the men were restored to their places.

SEAMEN'S STRIKE.—A monster meeting of the trades and labourers was held in the Phoenix Park, Dublin, on Sunday, March 3rd, to express sympathy with the seamen on strike. The Trades' Council and other bodies took part in the demonstration. James McDonnell, T.C., presided, and addresses were delivered by M. Darby, the Glasgow delegate, P. A. Tyrrell, Wm. Graham, and others.

MOTHERWELL MINERS.—At last week's meeting it was stated there were 914 miners in the district, of whom 650 belonged to the union. Resolutions were passed (1) demanding an increase of 6d. per day on their wages, (2) calling upon all miners in the kingdom to support Mr. Cunningham Graham's Eight Hour Mining Bill, (3) that all members of Parliament be requested to support Mr. Baird's Mining Accident Bill.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES PENSION FUND.—On Thursday 28th, the employés in the London and North-Western Steel Works at Crewe held a great meeting on leaving the works. Several thousand were present, and the following was unanimously passed: "That we, the workmen employed at the west portion of the London and North-Western Railway Steel Works, Crewe, decline to have any further deductions made from our wages for the pension fund. We further demand that the money already stopped from our wages should be returned at once."

THE STEAMING OF WEAVING SHEDS.—On the 26th a monster petition, signed by 42,000 operatives of Blackburn, was forwarded to London for presentation to the House of Commons, praying the Legislature to put a stop to the excessive infusion of steam into Lancashire weaving sheds. Petitions are also being forwarded from other towns, the agitation against steaming, which began in Blackburn, having been taken up generally amongst the operatives of Lancashire. The petition states that the steaming of weaving sheds is a serious evil, and is detrimental to the health of the operatives.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LEGAL INNOCENCES.

After mailing the paper on Conway, I have reflected that the phrase in which I qualify the bomb-throwing and the incendiary propaganda respectively, as "two innocences," made perhaps too great a demand on the reader's intelligence of the technically legal point of view that I assumed, irrespective of either policy or morality, by which neither act nor words were anything like innocent, though some may approve them while others condemn them. As regards the propaganda, neither Gary nor the Supreme Court of Illinois pretended that it came within the scope of criminal law, in itself, or without acts of violence. As to the bomb-throwing, I do not rest its legal innocence merely on the general and imprescriptible right of self-defence, but first on the Illinois law that holds all persons present at a meeting responsible for acts of any of them. Now, if they were collectively inculpated by the act of violence, they were equally exculpated by concurrence with the countermand of Spies, in coming unarmed, all except the bomb-thrower himself. He, however ill-judged his act, was legally exculpated in another way, by the ruling of Judge McAlister, a few years previous, that resistance to police force, when aggressive and unauthorised by higher civic authority, was legal. The Haymarket case was still stronger in this sense than the other, inasmuch as that was a secret meeting, while the Haymarket was open and authorised officially by presence of the mayor, who on the other hand, had personally instructed Bonfield not to interfere because of its orderly character. Moreover, violence at the secret meeting could but have avenged the tailor, murdered there by the police; whereas at the Haymarket, being used preventively, as the police were in the act of charging on the meeting, the most valid objection to the bomb is that it was only one, and inadequate to disable the aggressors whom it provoked and whose bloody reprisal it seemed to justify or was calculated to do so with the help of the capitalist press. The insistence of the Cook County Court for a collective trial betrays its purpose to condemn, yet even with this arbitrary method, fairness would have cleared the accused. The same legal logic bears upon the imputation of conspiracy at Gmef's Hall on the 3rd of May. If, notwithstanding the perjury of the chief witness Waller, it could inculpate the accused collectively, through its planner Engel, of a plot against the police, they must equally have been exculpated by the efforts of Spies to prevent the execution of that plot, made as soon as he heard of it. A collectivism that generalises only such evidence as criminales, while refusing to apply in the same way what exculpates, has no more legality than justice, and can only be compared to the ropes with which Versailles murderers encircled their victims before firing on them.

EDGEWORTH.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

BELGIUM.

It is now more than six weeks ago since the quarrymen of Quenast, about two thousand in number, went on strike, and they have hitherto shown such an admirable spirit of solidarity that it is most probable that they will win their case. The wives of the strikers, notwithstanding the hard conditions they live in, are of indomitable energy, and incite their husbands to hold out to the utmost and never to surrender to the "owner" of the quarries, an individual named Urban, one of the biggest exploiters of other people's labour that exists in high-capitalistic Belgium. At the beginning of the strike, Urban, who has plenty of friends in the Government, thought it advisable to ask for some soldiery, which was at once granted, and soon afterwards a meeting of the strikers was interfered with by these soldiers. A striker named Joseph Laurent was fatally wounded, and several women received severe blows. Then gendarmes and soldiers charged the people assembled and fired right and left, even in the houses. A man named Lethème, who sat quietly dining at his table, was shot dead by these murderers. Several persons were wounded. In spite of these provocations, the quarrymen stick to their ground and mean to have the ultimate victory. The Executive Council of the Parti ouvrier are doing their utmost to support the men on strike, and so also the various Socialist Federations established throughout Belgium. The co-operative bakeries of Brussels, Ghent (Vooruit), Liège, Antwerp, etc., send thousands and thousands of loaves weekly to their comrades of Quenast, the smaller organised groups send wagons of potatoes, or money to buy same, the Association of Jupille has sent important quantities of bacon, and so on. We hope that the Belgian Parti ouvrier will continue to do their best for the poor wage-slaves of Quenast, and then Urban, and not they, will have to surrender.

A few days ago, comrade Aimé Mahaim, member of the General Council of the Belgian Parti ouvrier, died at Brussels. He was one of the founders of the Ligue ouvrière (Workers' League) of Cureghem, near Brussels, secretary of the Brussels Federation of Trades Unions, and accountant of the Co-operative Maison du Peuple (People's House) at Brussels. The Belgian Socialist papers acknowledge the large part he took in their various organisations.

The next Congress of the Federation of Belgian Rationalist Societies will be held this year at Lodelinsart, in the province of Hainault, when the agenda-paper will be as follows: 1. Philosophical education in the family; 2. Considerable influence which women's education, if based on rationalism, would involve for the party of Freethought; 3. What ways and means could be used to get rapidly that philosophical education developed among free-thinkers' families; 4. Emancipation of the proletariat; 5. About the urgent necessity for all workers and peasants in joining the rationalist movement; 6. Ways and means to be used to come to that end as soon as possible.

As our readers will see from the above-quoted agenda, the Belgian free-thinkers do not hesitate to discuss two of the greatest social problems of our times—viz., the emancipation of woman and the reform of the family, and the enfranchisement of the proletariat, both urban and rural. Why do English freethinkers not do so?

The Belgian freethought party has just started a new monthly review, entitled La Raison (Reason), under the editorship of Léon Furnémont, 39 rue del Enseignement, Brussels. Among the contributors are Dr. César De Paepe, Professor Hector Denis, MM. Émile van der Velde, Guillaume De Greef, etc., who are both freethinkers and outspoken Socialists. We hope that this new venture of our Belgian friends will live long and do good to the cause.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Since last month our two colleagues of Brünn, Volksfreund (People's Friend) and Arbeiterstimme (People's Voice) have considerably enlarged their size, and now they are enabled to devote a larger amount of space to matters of an international character. Both papers are well written and generally interesting.

Three weeks ago comrades Alois Trajan, Adolph Talisch, Joseph Lischta, K. Bonupf, F. Knoth, T. Haubner, A. Braunseis, T. Wenisch, F. Schmidt, T. Nerad, T. Jungmaier, and Joseph Pica, after several months of preventive imprisonment, have been tried for alleged "secret conspiracy"—always the old game. In his curious indictment against the defendants, the attorney has put his case "all right" in a rather delightful way: The prisoners, it is true, have merely constituted an "Arbeiterverein" (workers' society), but these societies very soon become permeated by Social-Democratic ideas, and it not seldom happens that these Social-Democratic ideas give way to Anarchist doctrines,—and therefore (!) it will be well to bring the prisoners at once under application of the clauses of the exceptional anti-Anarchist laws! And the Austrian Nupkinses did so, and sentenced the "future" Anarchists to fifteen months hard labour.

A new monthly review, Sozialdemokratische Monatschrift, has been started at Vienna, VI, Gumpendorferstrasse, 79, under the editorship of comrade A. Grosse, the first issue of which is entirely devoted to the debates on the anti-Anarchist laws and the speeches of Pernerstorfer and Kronawether, deputies to the Reichsrath.

V. D.

DEATH OF JAMES FRANCIS MURRAY.

On Tuesday, March 5th, at Paddington Cemetery, a large number of old Chartists and followers of Bronterre O'Brien, assembled to do honour to the remains of James Francis Murray, who died on Feb. 27th. H. M. Hyndman and Herbert Burrows represented the Social Democratic Federation, and F. Kitz the Socialist League. Hyndman and Burrows spoke at the grave-side. H. Burrows, in a moving and eloquent address, alluded to the deceased's life-work in the interest of the workers, and appealed to his audience to emulate the example shown by our deceased comrade's fidelity to principle.

COUNCIL AND LONDON MEMBERS' MEETING OF S.L.—At meeting on 4th inst., it was unanimously resolved: "That this meeting of the Council and London members of the Socialist League desires to record their regret at the loss of an old and esteemed worker in the Cause, and to express their condolence with his relatives." Frank Kitz was appointed League delegate to attend our comrade's funeral on the following day.

THE SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—The Committee of the above Society passed the following resolution at their last meeting on the 2nd inst.:—"The Committee of the Socialist Co-operative Federation hereby record their sincere regret at the removal by death of James Francis Murray, a veteran in the Cause of Labour and their esteemed co-worker, and express their heartfelt condolence with his family." Our late comrade was a member of the Committee from the commencement of the Society.—DUNCAN C. DALLAS.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, April 1, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Commune Celebration.—At this year's celebration, the choir will sing the "Marseillaise," "When the People have their own again," and "All for the Cause." All willing to take part are invited to practise along with the Hammersmith choir, which meets every Thursday at 7.30 prompt. A Special Practice will take place at 13, Farringdon Road, on Saturday, March 9th, at 8.30 p.m. All members of choir please attend.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1889:—Clerkenwell, Leicester, Mitcham, and North London, to February.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Membership Cards can now be had by the Branches at 9d. per dozen from Central Office.

The Article, published in No. 152 of Weal, Dec. 8th, 1888, addressed to "Working Women and Girls," is now being issued by the Propagandist Committee in leaflet form for distribution, at 3s. 6d. per 1,000.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

CHILDREN'S PARTY.

A Children's Party will be held at 13, Farringdon Road, on March 12th. Tea on table at 4 p.m. sharp. Comrade E. Radford with magic lantern at 5 p.m. Subscriptions, etc., can be sent to the Secretary, Mrs. Groser, 19, Rigault Road, Fulham.

CHICAGO COMMEMORATION FUND.

Three Railway Men (per H. B. Tarleton), 1s. 6d.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—H. Schmitt, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; J. Presburg, 6d.; Blundell, 6d.; R. Turner, 2s. 6d.; J. Turner, 6d.; Latham, 1s.; Kitz, 6d.; Seglie, 6d.; B. W., 6d.; S. Presburg, 6d.; Solomon, 6d.; Tilley, 6d.; Kneifel, 1s.; Samuels, 1s.; D. Nicoll, 6d.; E. E. Minton (13 weeks), 6s. 6d.; and A. J. Wharton (South Wimbledon), 2s. 6d. Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON MEMBERS.—The monthly meeting of London members, held on Monday the 4th inst., resolved: "That this meeting do recommend branches of the Socialist League at their branch meetings to regularly obtain names of comrades willing to sell papers and literature, make collections, carry platforms, etc., in connection with the open-air meetings of the League, in order to take some of the work from off the shoulders of the speakers, and add to the efficiency of the propaganda."

FULHAM.—On Tuesday evening, back of Walham Green Church, Maughan, C. Smith, and Lynes, jun., addressed a fair audience. Sunday morning, Samuels spoke to a good meeting, and in the evening Smith, Lynes, and Maughan had an excellent audience outside our rooms.—S. B. G.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road at 11.30 a.m., speakers were Dean, A. J. Smith, Lyne, sen., Lyne, jun., Maughan, Crouch, and last but not least, "Our Young Saint;" 17 Commonweal sold. We were well supported, as usual, by a detective sergeant taking notes of the several speeches, backed up by six or seven more of them. We sometimes think they mean mischief, as our meetings begin to enlarge and our comrades attend well. Good meeting at Weltje Road at 7 o'clock; speakers were Lynes, jun., and Maughan. At Kelmscott House, Wm. Morris lectured on "How shall we live then?" Interesting discussion.—G. M.

ABERDEEN.—Open-air work again prevented by heavy snow-storm. At indoor meeting on 25th ult., Leatham read paper on "The Socialist Movement throughout Europe," being a review of Dr. Zacher's work, "The Red International." Gray, sen., occupied the chair, and discussion was carried on by Aiken, Duncan, Slater, and Leatham.

NORWICH.—On Sunday, Reynolds and Harboard, from Yarmouth, paid us a visit. In afternoon, usual open-air meeting in Market Place, chair taken by Darley; Reynolds spoke at some length to very good audience, although the weather was very cold. In evening at Gordon Hall, Mills in chair, discussion upon "Manifesto" was resumed; Houghton opened in affirmative, supported by Darley and A. Moore; fair audience.

YARMOUTH.—Usual weekly meeting held Sunday on the Priory Plain, Ruffold in chair; W. Moore and Poynts, of Norwich, spoke. Meeting good, though not so large as usual, owing to severe weather. Branch is progressing well, and is very confident of gaining a strong position when finer weather allows larger meetings.

IPSWICH PIONEER DEBATING CLASS.—Comrade Creed opened debate at above class last Sunday night on "Organisation of Labour" to a good audience; good discussion, in which Thomas and others joined.—M. C.

CHESTERFIELD DISCUSSION SOCIETY.—On Sunday evening, Feb. 24th, comrade Suel, from Nottingham, gave the last of our present winter course of Sunday evening lectures. He compared France in 1790 with England in 1890, and certainly gave one of the most eloquent appeals for Socialism that we have had. Considering the size of our town, and that this is the first attempt which has been made to hold secular lectures on Sunday evenings, we consider that the course has been very successful. The majority of the subjects have been bearing on Socialism, and I think we may certainly claim to have brought several over pretty much to our way of thinking. We intend to start again in the autumn with renewed vigour, and make the next course even more successful than this has been.—R. U.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower Marsh, Lambeth.—Tuesday March 26, at 8 p.m., H. Halliday Sparling, "The History of Radicalism." Sunday March 31, a Lecture by Wm. Morris.

BIRKBECK DEBATING SOCIETY, Breams Buildings, E.C.—March 18, at 8 p.m., Mr. J. L. Shadwell will move: "That no scheme of Socialism can really improve the condition of the working classes." Non-members are allowed to be present and take part in the voting, but members only are allowed to take part in the discussion, except by permission of the chairman.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card, to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30. Lecture on Sunday March 10, at 8.30. Sun. 17th, D. Nicoll, "The English Revolutionary Movement, 1815-1817; Spa-fields Riots and Derbyshire Insurrection." Sunday 24th, H. Halliday Sparling, "Luxury Now; Necessity Then." Sun. 31st, Frank Kitz, A Lecture.

East London.—26 Cawley Road, Victoria Park. H. Davis, secretary pro tem., 97 Boston Street, Hackney Road.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend. Lecture on Sunday March 10, at 8 p.m.

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday Mar. 17, at 8 p.m., a Lecture. Thursday 21st, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 22nd, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion on some point of interest in the propaganda.

Hoxton.—Comrades desiring to help in the propaganda of the Socialist League in this locality are requested to send their names and addresses to H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road.

Milham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m. North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road.

Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Irevigate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.

Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street. The annual Celebration of the Paris Commune will be held at the above on Monday March 18, at 8 p.m. All friends of the cause invited.

Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meet ings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.

Galashiels (Scot Sect).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secretary.

Gallatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.

Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 9 a.m., comrades distributing Commonweal will meet in Gordon Hall. Sunday, at 8 p.m., A Lecture. Tuesday, at 8.15, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8, Discussion Class. Saturday, Co-operative Clothing Association, 8 until 10.30. Monday, Thursday, and Friday, Gordon Hall open from 8 p.m.—All comrades having books belonging to the Branch are requested to return them at once to the Librarian, W. Moore.—COM-MUNE CELEBRATION.—A great open-air demonstration will be held in the Market Place at 3 p.m. on Sunday March 17th, addressed by Mrs. Schack (London), also other London comrades and members of the Branch. At 8 p.m. same day lecture in Gordon Hall on the Commune. On Monday 18, at 8 p.m., in the Gordon Hall, a Social Meeting will be held in commemora-tion of the Commune; admission 1d.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

Yarmouth.—Business meetings every Monday at 8 p.m. See below for open-air propaganda. C. Reynolds, Row 45, George Street, Secretary.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 10.

11.30.....	Hackney—"Salmon and Ball,"	Cores and Davis.
11.30.....	Latimer Road Station	Mrs. Schack.
11.30.....	Regent's Park	Nicoll and Mainwaring.
11.30.....	Walham Green, opposite Station	The Branch.
11.45.....	Leman Street, Shadwell	Mrs. Lahr, Turner, and Parker.
3.30.....	Hyde Park	Parker, Mrs. Lahr, and Nicoll.
3.30.....	Victoria Park	Mowbray, Mrs. Schack, Cores, and Davis.
7.....	Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park	Hammersmith Branch.
7.30.....	Broad Street, Soho	Nicoll.
7.30.....	Clerkenwell Green	Parker, Brookes, and Mowbray.

TUESDAY 12.

8 Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch.

THURSDAY 14.

8.15..... Hoxton Church..... Davis, Mowbray, and Cores.

FRIDAY 15.

8 Philpot Street, Commercial Road..... Parker, Cores, and Kitz.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday: St. Mary's Plain, at 11; Market Place, at 3.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

NORTH HACKNEY RADICAL CLUB, 83 Church Street, Stoke Newington.—Sunday March 10, at 8.30, Mr. M. Culpin, M.D., "How to Abolish Poor Rates."

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d.
 "Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
 Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
 Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Price 1d.; Post-free, 1½d.

THE RIGHTS OF LABOUR ACCORDING TO JOHN RUSKIN.

Arranged by THOMAS BARCLAY.
 Second Edition.

"Your pamphlet is the best abstract of all the most important pieces of my teachings that has yet been done; and I am entirely grateful to you for doing it, and glad to have your letter."—Extract from letter received from Mr. Ruskin.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C

ONE PENNY.

The Political World.

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY.

Edited by
 RONALD SMITH.

Full of Interesting and Amusing Matter.
 PICTURES, NEWS, AND NOTES.

12 Catharine Street, Strand, W.C.

THOMAS BINNING, PRACTICAL LETTERPRESS PRINTER

(MEMBER LONDON SOCIETY OF COMPOSITORS)

158 PENTONVILLE ROAD, N.,

will be glad to receive orders from Trades' Unions, Workmen's Clubs, Progressive Associations, etc., for all kinds of Printing, especially Handbills, Leaflets, Programmes, Pamphlets, REPORTS, RULES, CIRCULARS, CARDS, ETC.

KARL MARX.

A NEW AND HIGHLY ARTISTIC ETCHING.
 India Proof, 19 by 24 inches.

Price Two Dollars.

Etched and published by ALFIRA C. KIHN, 298 Jay Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., U.S.A.

Also for sale at New York Labour News Co., 25 East Fourth Street, N.Y.

Copies mailed to any address on receipt of price.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by
 H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

THE DEMOCRATIC REVIEW.

EDITED BY LOTHROP WITHINGTON.

LONDON 1882, 8vo 160 pp.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of this pioneer revolutionary miscellany are still obtainable. Price 6d. each number, post free 6½d. Office of Commonweal.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3D. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2S. 6D.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Library Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
 Vol. III., AUTUMN seventh edition 12s.
 Vol. IV., WINTER seventh edition 12s.

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo, at 2s. 6d. each.

ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE ÆNEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond. A Morality.

Square 12mo, 143 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

L'EGALITÉ,

ORGANE DE CONCENTRATION SOCIALISTE,

L'Homme Libre and Le Cri du Peuple have been amalgamated under the above title, and no effort will be spared to make the new paper in every way a worthy exponent of Socialism, as well as a high-class daily newspaper.

Editorial Committee: Daumas, Ch. Longuet, Edouard Vaillant (Municipal Councillors); L. Fiaux, Granger, Jules Guesde, Paul Lafargue, B. Malon.

SUBSCRIPTIONS (England and United States): three months, 7s. 6d.; six months, 15s., one year, 30s.

Address remittances, etc., to Jules Roques, manager; editorial communications to A. Breuille, secretary.

12 RUE PAUL-LELONG, PARIS.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 166.

SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

CELEBRATION OF THE PARIS COMMUNE.

THE Celebration of the Eighteenth Anniversary of the Paris Commune (convened by the Socialist League and the Social Democratic Federation) will be held on SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 16th, at Eight prompt,

AT THE

SOUTH PLACE INSTITUTE,

SOUTH PLACE, MOORGATE STREET, E.C.

The following speakers will address the meeting:—

WM. MORRIS, H. QUELCH, D. NICOLL, JOHN BURNS, FRANK KITZ, H. BURROWS, H. HALLIDAY SPARLING, A. S. HEADINGLEY, PETER KROPOTKINE, LE MOUSSU, and E. BERNSTEIN.

CHAIRMAN: H. M. HYNDMAN

The following is the resolution which will be moved at the meeting:

"That this meeting hopefully recalls the establishment of the Commune of Paris, and expresses its sympathy with the French workers who heroically struggled to abolish class rule, and the cruel capitalist exploitation of man by man; and looks forward with confidence to the early emancipation of labour for which they strove, being determined to employ all means to achieve that end."

Selections of Music will be given during the Evening by Members and Friends of the Social Democratic Federation, and the Choir of the Socialist League will render the 'Marseillaise,' 'All for the Cause,' and 'When the Workers have their own again,' etc.

Comrades and friends are earnestly requested to take in hand the collection of money for the defrayal of expenses, for which purpose collection sheets have been issued. Donations may be sent to

W. H. LEE (S.D.F.), or F. KITZ (S.L.),
Organising Secretaries, 13, Farringdon Rd., E.C.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE London Liberal and Radical Union has played a kind of return-match to the meeting commented on by us last week. That respectable body is obviously somewhat shocked at M.P.'s being treated like common clay, and has proceeded to clap a plaster on their wounds, although not without a certain amount of protest from the other side, but of course Mr. Howell and Mr. Cremer took care that the due resolution should be passed. Mr. Howell thought it disgraceful for Radicals to attack the M.P.'s who had been doing their best for the right of public meeting. Dear me, Mr. Howell! if everybody did his best what a different world we should have! And as for these gentlemen, if they had done their half-best or their quarter-best, we should all have praised them as men quite up to the mark. But to speak plainly, what they did was—nothing: though it must be admitted that they rather regret it now.

Poor fellows! They had been investing largely in Irish "political bird-lime," and didn't see the point of making an experiment in English ditto at the time; besides, they thought that they had got their dicky-birds already, and need not catch them over again. Let us hope that they were mistaken. The extreme Radicals may yet take a leaf out of the book of a man who is much praised now—Mr. Parnell, to wit. How did he convert Mr. Gladstone to Home Rule? By organising his followers to vote Tory. It is an old story now; but perhaps the Radicals remember it yet.

After all, probably Mr. Howell was joking: his solemn condemnation of Sunday meetings, which followed this, gives one that impression; and more particularly his professing to think that anyone present wanted him at any meeting except a due proper official Whig one; for the joker who cried out that he would have to go to Sunday meetings was quite obviously a joker.

The fact is, to Mr. Howell a meeting is not an assemblage of citizens, gathered together to give genuine expression to a sense of their grievances; or to educate themselves into understanding their haplessly servile condition and its only remedy: to him a meeting in the open-air is a necessary though seldom-to-be-resorted-to piece of the machinery of the machine-politics of which he is a votary. Such a meeting as this does not need a Sunday or general holiday for its success; it is simply a matter of wire-pulling and money-spending, and the thing is done, whatever it may be worth; and that is not much, I fancy, even to its projectors. Meantime, do not forget, working-men, that this M.P. who so despises Sunday meetings is your special representative.

Mr. Matthews' humbug about the Square is exactly what we might have expected of him; but it is rather surprising that the Star should still talk the stale nonsense of trying the matter legally: surely all those poor fellows who were so shamefully treated by the police and other courts for not rioting have had enough of law. The law courts will take very good care to confirm the police and its generals in all they have done. As far as these matters are concerned, they are there for that purpose. When juries begin to refuse to follow the direction of the judge when persons accused of defending their rights are before them, that will be a sign that the well-to-do are beginning to sympathise with revolution—and when will that be?

Meantime, those Radicals who really take to heart this trampling down of what they conceive to be their rights, should turn themselves seriously to the duty of making the whole democratic party throughout the country, look at this affair of the Square from the same point of view that some (only some, I fear) of the London Radicals do. It is not and cannot be a mere London question, but concerns all strugglers for freedom throughout the length and breadth of the land.

W. M.

The Glasgow Herald is "wise" in its generation. It has awakened to the fact "that the labouring classes of this country are becoming fully conscious of their strength," and that their "strength" is something more than merely numerical. With that fact lying heavy on his mind, the editor is constrained to say something to protect the interests of his masters—the commercial classes—and through them his own, by advocating isolated co-operative production, whereby the commercial classes can pocket the employers' fleecings, and he assures the workers that in following the directions of Karl Marx, "labourers [are] on a false scent." The "strength" of the labourers is more than numerical, it is growing more "knowing," and the scent of commercial papers is beginning to stink in their nostrils.

The parasites of labour have hitherto been assured that British workmen would never listen to the "dangerous doctrines" promulgated by their continental comrades, but that is all changed now. The Glasgow Herald is forced to admit, "Our workmen are slowly but surely following the lead of their continental brethren. It is time for society at large to realise that by far the most important question that looms in the immediate future is that of labour—its position, its claims, its rewards, and its fallacies. We may shut our ears to the clamour that is already beginning to be heard at our doors. Those sounds, dreaded as they are by many, are becoming articulate, and it will not be easy to ignore the fact for long." This admission, coming from whence it comes, is significant and hopeful to Socialists. Our opponents clearly recognise and admit that in our movement there is a "strength" which must be met by other means than those they have hitherto forged in their mental foundries.

But this editor, whose foundation rests on the workers' wrongs, is fain to poise as the friend of the workers. He says, "We fear, however, that the sufferers will have to be contented to wait until statesmen and philosophers have agreed upon a method by which the 'socialism of the chair' may be converted into a reasonable and practical scheme for the amelioration of the condition of the masses. The present attempt to force on action at the cost of all other legislation cannot but be received by society at large with resentment." Mr. Editor need have no fear that the sufferers will "be contented" under these conditions. They will not wait in their "strength", which is getting something more than "numerical", until "statesmen and philosophers have agreed upon a method," and these latter will not find it "easy to ignore the fact for long." The workers do not require to be told that anything which will improve their conditions will "be received by society at large with resentment." They have analysed and summed up society's "resentment," and they know its meaning and worth.

In advocating his method, this "philosopher" of the chair says: "The would-be co-operator need not wait for legislation to put his theories into practice. He can begin at once by exercising economy, not parsimony, in his daily life. Then when he has succeeded in accumulating a little store, he will be in a position to join with one other person, or many other persons, in producing useful commodities, the profit which shall be wholly his own or his partners'." This "philosopher" seems never to have heard of producers having nothing to divide, owing to it having been annexed by the dealer, and yet in the same sheet in which his philosophy appears we read, "The dividend of the Edinburgh Meat Market Company, whose business premises are in Fountainbridge, is announced as 40 per cent." Neither does he condescend to say how a labourer getting 13s. per week, with a house and family to provide for, can exercise "economy, not parsimony" in order to accumulate "a little store" to start business. How can a coalminer become a coalmaster?

G. McL.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT IN ECSTASY.

SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT appeared in dazzling rhetorical raiment at Derby a couple of weeks ago. There was an exaltation in his utterance as of one who stood beside the throne of the most high political virtue, and whose eyes beheld the glory of universal justice. One could almost hear the flapping of his wings! What had happened? What event of transcendental importance had occurred thus to stir the waters of Sir William's deepest and innermost emotion, and inflate his seraphic soul upon the empyrean of political ecstasy? Had some great national calamity been averted? Had some class wrong, hoary with centuries of crime, been abolished? Had some great and gladdening measure of freedom been achieved? Not so. The event that had transfigured Sir William was of a much loftier order—the "Parnell letters" had been proved forgeries!

In his ecstasy over the discomfiture of the Times and the wicked Tories, and in his jubilation at the prospects of the Liberal party—himself included—coming back to office and emoluments, Sir William exclaimed, "We live in remarkable times—times that will live in the pages of history!" What a lofty idea of the making of history Sir William has! The poor Invincibles believed that if they could succeed in "removing" Mr. Forster, Lord Spencer, and probably Mr. Gladstone, they would in a humble way be making history; but they were not, alas! statesmen; they had not the magnifying eye of the politician, else they might never have been hanged, poor fellows! Had they had a particle of the political prescience of Sir William Harcourt, they would not have purchased knives and dipped them in the blood of their foes, they would have purchased pens and tracing paper and forged a few letters sympathising with rebels and political crime.

Surely, friends, this exclamation of Sir William's exemplifies the utter shoddiness of the sentiments that inspire, and the ideas that guide, the political leaders of our time? What a nation of dupes their followers are! The people who can be induced to believe that the fiasco of determining the right or wrong of Home Rule by an inquisition upon the private correspondence of Mr. Parnell, is a subject that will form a staple part of the history of our time, must have about as silly a conception of the duty of future historians as they have of present day statesmen. That the Parnell Commission business may form a theme for future comedy writers is likely enough; but that anything resulting from its revelations will be treated as a heroic episode in the future histories—long or short—of our country, presupposes the notion that our posterity will be a race of gaping idiots.

We do live in remarkable times; but what is most remarkable in them, appears to be quite beyond the ken of Sir William Harcourt and his political crew. Political slanders and party intrigue, letter forging and newspaper lying, are no new features in the world's history—they have been vastly common events, indeed. The terrible economic war raging around us; a free and civilised industrial population living in abject poverty amid stupendous wealth created by their own hands; the growth of social revolt, and the impending fall of centuries of class privilege and oppression—these are remarkable and manifest facts of our time, facts which will vitally determine the destinies of the race; and these, I venture to assert, and not the nine days' wonder of Parliamentary gossips, will be the episodes of our time that will live in the pages of history. In a few years Sir William Harcourt, the Parnell Commission, and all the incidents in the party sham-fights of our day, the record of which fills the columns of hundreds of newspapers, will be forgotten, and their influence on the evolution of human progress practically effaced; but the Social Revolution which has already begun in our midst, its causes, its incidents, the efforts of its disciples and martyrs, unheeded by politicians and unrecorded by the press, these will not be forgotten, but will assume a majestic importance as the years go on and their achievement is seen and felt in the transformation of civilised life.

Immediately after emitting the above exclamation, Sir William referred to his "distinguished friend Sir Charles Russell" as "a man who by the greatness of his ability and the strength of his sympathy for freedom would deserve to take a place in the noble profession to which he belongs with Erskine, as a man who is willing to do battle against fraud and injustice, and to vindicate the principles of truth and freedom." Great Jehosaphat! What hallelujah chorus is this? Who is this blessed Sir Charles Russell whom Saint William Harcourt thus doth magnify? What great and good deeds hath this lawyer politician done that that lawyer politician doth so jubilantly praise him? Let us see. Five years ago Sir Charles Russell spoke and voted on the side of pay and preferment against Irish freedom. Three years ago he was made Attorney-General under Mr. Gladstone, and spoke and voted with his leader on the side of pay and preferment for Irish freedom. He prosecuted, for pay and preferment, Burns, Champion, Hyndman, and Williams, when, despite his efforts, they were acquitted of "crime." He lately championed Mr. Cunningham Graham and the people's right to hold meetings in Trafalgar Square—he was paid to do so, and his political credit depended upon it. He has recently defended Mr. Parnell with much ability—he is paid to do so, it is said at the rate of £50 to £100 a day. Noble and disinterested sympathy for truth and freedom this! How many lawyers and politicians are there, think you, who would not do battle, as earnestly at least, against "fraud and injustice" for a similar fee? Truly, if the advocacy of justice and liberty were universally rewarded as Sir Charles's has been, political sanctity would become an epidemic in our midst.

The trade of a lawyer Sir William Harcourt designates a "noble profession." We can estimate the value of the adjective "noble" in Sir William's mind by remembering, that the first principle of that profession is to undertake the defence of any man or any claim for which the best fee is offered, and that it is esteemed a duty in that profession to use every will and simulate every sympathy for the cause of your client, no matter how black or rotten it may be. For every lawyer on one side of a case there is a lawyer on the other, so that one at least of every two must be brazening lies and cloaking crime; and in turn they must all do so.

As for Erskine, wherein is his claim to apotheosis? He was probably as good a man as it is possible for a lawyer to be; he was also a brilliant "pleader." He pleaded mostly on the side of popular liberty it is true; but his subsequent elevation to the Lord Chancellorship shows that in doing "battle against fraud and injustice" he did not forsake the path of pay and preferment. In the early part of his career he defended the publication of Thomas Paine's 'Age of Reason'—he was paid to do so—while in after years he pleaded vigorously for its suppression and the imprisonment of its publisher, when paid as a Government hack. No, the profession of an advocate is as sordid and hypocritical as the system which makes it profitable and respectable. It is twin with the profession of politics; two pretty handmaids of freedom and justice they are!

And Sir William himself: what a bright and beautiful specimen of political sanctity! Like his "distinguished friend," he speaks and votes on the side of the party that promises him most office and most pay. How long is it since he and the Times were bosom friends? When his party was opposed to Home Rule he denounced Mr. Parnell and his followers malignantly and unscrupulously. He accused them of the blackest crimes, and threw them as recklessly into prison as Mr. Balfour now does. He sent police and marines to coerce the poor Skye crofters to pay blackmail to robber landlords. Together with his "distinguished friend" he prosecuted the Social Democrats for doing in London, what he commends Irish Nationalists for doing in Mitchelstown. Verily, they are two political saints worthy of red letters in the calendar of devout liberalism!

Poor Richard Pigott was a born politician; had he been wealthy he would also have been a successful one; he would have made an admirable ambassador or secretary of state. But he was poor, and his poverty maimed his talents, and left traces of honesty in his character which spoiled him. He has committed suicide. If all political sneaks and frauds were to go and do likewise, Mr. Gladstone would have some difficulty in filling his offices when he again comes into power.

J. BRUCE GLASIER.

The mill-workers of Dundee have resolved to agitate for a third advance of 5 per cent. on their wages, to take effect on the 15th of March.

The Durham miners are agitating for an advance of 20 per cent., and a mass meeting was held last Saturday, to decide on what steps should be taken to force it.

The Greenock shipyard smiths, who wanted a rise of 10 per cent., have been offered, and they have accepted, 7½ per cent. They resumed work on the 7th of March.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

THE prison life of Joliet, Ill., appears to be telling upon the nerves of Oscar W. Neebe, imprisoned for fifteen years for his participation in the alleged organisation of the Haymarket "massacre" on May 4th, 1886, in Chicago city. On the 22nd inst. he is reported to have written a letter to Governor Joe Fifer of Illinois, in which he says he knew nothing about the plot which led to the Haymarket affair. He says, further, if the Governor will only pardon him, he will demean himself in future as a good citizen and leave the labour movement alone. It is also reported that Judge Grinnell, who acted as prosecuting attorney in the famous Anarchist trial, has stated his readiness to sign Neebe's pardon-petition if the latter will tell publicly all the ins and outs of the alleged Anarchist conspiracy. So after all, Louis Lingg was right when he said, "I hope I shall be hanged, for prison life might unman me." Neebe has done sterling good action for the good of humanity before his incarceration, but his last step has rendered him worthless to the cause for the future. It may, however, be stated right here that he never understood much about the science and philosophy of Socialism and always believed in the methods and principles of progressive trades unionists.

Most of the big lumber mills in Washington Territory have been closed down on the 22nd inst., by order of the lumber trust. More than fifteen hundred workmen are out of employment in consequence.

Suspended inspector of the Chicago police, the cowardly and infamous John Bonfield, has fired a parting shot at his friend Mayor Roche of Chicago. On the 12th inst. he sent a letter to this worthy saying that he did not desire to draw the city's money during his suspension pending the investigation into his conduct, and that consequently he desired to resign at once. He further wrote that he did not intend to return into the service of the city, even if proved to be innocent. The poor fellow complained that he had been treated with so little gratitude for having done nothing but his duty, and that he was sacrificed by the mayor, who feared to lose the patronage of Anarchists, Socialists, lottery-agents, and gamblers. Gamblers and lottery-agents are powerful persons, it is true; however, they were your best friends, Mr. Bonfield. But it is good to hear that Socialists and Anarchists are so influential in Chicago city as to be able to remove a high police officer, almost an autocrat. It is said John Bonfield will now begin business as manager of a private detective agency, à la Pinkerton's. Captain Schaack has already retired to his landed estates in Wisconsin, resolved henceforth to cultivate cabbages instead of workmen's heads. Jakob Loewenstein, the detective, hopes to be restored to his former position. Sic transit gloria mundi.

The agitation, little as it is, for the new eight hours day has begun in earnest. On the 22nd inst. mass meetings were held in a number of American cities. The centre of the agitation will be in New York. As regards numbers, the meeting in New York city has been a decided success. The large hall in Cooper Union was filled to overflowing. Colonel Ingersoll, Professor Felix Adler, and sundry other minor stars were advertised to speak, but of course they did not put in an appearance. Samuel Gompers, the president of the American Federation of Labour, made the leading speech, from which it may be learned that, "The demand for eight hours on May 1st, 1890, does not mean a general strike, but a cry to capital to cease its war on labour; that efforts will be made to bring about an amicable settlement of the question with employers, but that it was necessary to have a thorough organisation of working people all over the States, so that employers would be willing to listen to labour's demand." The following resolution was adopted at the meeting:

"Whereas the application of scientific genius to the invention and development of machinery has most marvellously increased the productive capacity of the human race, making it possible to supply all the material wants of man and banish every necessary cause for the poverty of a single human being; whereas in consequence of defective but remediable industrial regulations the application of machinery and the minute subdivision of the processes of industry are continually throwing large numbers of the working class out of employment, visibly swelling the ranks of the permanently unemployed class, and dooming year by year a larger and larger proportion of this vast and rich continent to a fate fruitful of moral, mental, and physical degradation; whereas the existence of an idle class or classes is a standing menace to the Republic and an insult to humanity; therefore be it

"Resolved, That in the light of the foregoing and undeniable facts it becomes our solemn duty to use all means consistent with human dignity to reduce the hours of labour to such a point as would afford to all the opportunity to labour—to earn their daily bread; and be it further

"Resolved, That we in mass meeting assembled do heartily endorse the action of the St. Louis Convention of the American Federation of Labour in fixing the date for the final inauguration of the eight-hour work-day at May 1, 1890; and be it further

"Resolved, That we pledge ourselves, individually and collectively, to aid to the full extent of our ability, regardless of all minor considerations, this grand and determined movement of the American people for the eight-hour work-day, and to conquer in spite of all opposition eight hours for work, eight hours for rest, eight hours for what we will."

I am sorry to say that most of the Social Democrats, headed by editor Sergius E. Shevitsch of the Volkzeitung, have joined this movement. It is painful to see them and so able a man as Shevitsch in such company. For the last twenty years they have joined, not heeding the voice of their intellect, every crank movement in America, as the Grangers, the Greenbackers, the Henry George movement, etc. They have to do most of the work, and are also used statuesquely on show days. 'Tis a pity, but it is true. Now what does the whole business amount to? We are to have no general strike. Gompers and his henchmen know well that the places of the strikers would be instantly filled by the out-of-works. This they will not risk. We are therefore asked to cry out to Capital, "Now gentlemen, look here; we are overworked, we want to work fewer hours. Please be good enough to grant our demand. Look here, we are organised, but we dare not strike; there are too many men out of employment for that. But look at our organisation and be frightened. You are gentlemen after all; you don't mean any harm, of course not; so for the good of the country, show that capital and labour can harmonise." And the lion and the lamb will lie down together in peace—that is, after the lamb has been gobbled up by the lion. Sammy Gompers and Shevitsch, what has become of your shrewdness and smartness? Echo answers—Evaporated into demagogism.

There were 302 failures in the United States during last week, against 183, 163, 208, and 254 in the corresponding weeks of 1888, 1887, 1886, and 1885 respectively.

Newark, N.J., February 27, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

THE EIGHTEENTH OF MARCH.

THEN said the rich man, urged by fear to flight,
I covet safety for my children's sake;
The workman, sword in hand, his life at stake,
Answered, 'Tis for my children that I fight.¹
Full of prophetic fire they stormed the height,
Then reeling, dazed with freedom, scarce awake,
Fell back and perished; bidding us retake
And strongly hold the rock of common right.

Brothers, they fought our battle; yet, O shame!
We know them not, or spurn their dust with scorn;
How then shall we make good that glorious claim
For which they longed amid their lives forlorn?
Yet when we share their ardour and their aim
The life they died to bear us will be born.

REGINALD A. BECKETT.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING MARCH 23, 1889.

17	Sun.	1754. Madame Roland born. 1848. Irish Flag presented (St. Patrick's Day) to the Provisional Government by Irish patriots in Paris. 1877. Public funeral to George Odger. 1880. Razovsky and Lozinsky (a soldier) hung in Kieff. 1882. Meeting at Grafton Hall, London, to celebrate the Commune and death of the Czar.
18	Mon.	1823. First public meeting in the Rotunda (Dublin), to hear Robert Owen lecture on his proposed "plan for improving the various classes in society." 1848. "Guns go off of themselves" at Berlin: official proclamation afterwards that it was "not a revolution, but a transaction." 1871. Commune of Paris proclaimed. 1876. Ferdinand Freiligrath died. 1878. Trial of Fomicheff and others at Odessa for propaganda in the army; 2 sentenced to prison.
19	Tues.	1796. William Skirving died. 1843. Monster Repeal meeting at Triln. 1848. Insurrection breaks out in Berlin. 1872. Præau de Védel shot as a Communeard. 1874. Rochefort, Jourde, Paschal Grousset, Baillère, and two others escape from New Caledonia.
20	Wed.	1828. Henrik Ibsen born. 1866. William Francis Donaghy (Capt. Mackay) sentenced to twelve years. 1875. John Mitchel died.
21	Thur.	1763. W. J. McNevin born. 1832. Goethe died. 1843. Robert Southey died. 1848. Arrest of Meagher, Mitchell, and O'Brien.
22	Fri.	1639. Campanella died. 1641. Trial of Strafford began. 1856. First number of Robert Owen's Millennium Gazette (monthly, Gd.); published until Oct. 1857. 1871. "Men of Order" demonstration in Paris: the red flag raised at Lyons. 1873. Strike ended of 60,000 colliers in South Wales.
23	Sat.	1820. Sir F. Burdett tried for his protest against the Manchester Massacre. 1885. Riel's rebellion breaks out in Manitoba. 1886. Strike riots in Belgium began.

Hermann Ferdinand Freiligrath.—Born at Detmold in Westphalia, 17th June, 1810, died at Cannstatt, 18th March, 1876. The most illustrious of Germany's popular poets, he sang in wonderful tunes for the people, and suffered a long exile for the cause of Revolution. At the early age of sixteen, young Freiligrath, whose education had chiefly been at home, was sent to a relative of his, in order to serve there as clerk in a large house of business. He remained with his uncle for five years, learning French and English thoroughly, the knowledge of which languages afterwards made of him the best, the first translator of English and French poetry. From Amsterdam, where he then went, he sent to the Deutschen Museum/manach, edited by Chamisso and Schwab, his first poetical labours, and they at once made his name famous among the literary men of his country. Gutzkow, himself an illustrious writer, called him the German Victor Hugo. The publisher of the works of Goethe and Schiller, Herr von Cotta at Stuttgart, invited the young poet to prepare a volume of his songs, and in 1838, when his first volume appeared, he became tremendously popular. His name was in everyone's mouth; Wolfgang Müller, Matzerath, Pfarrus, Häcklander, Simrock, Lammernann, at the time Germany's greatest writers, sought his friendship. Freiligrath, no longer a clerk, went to Unkel, a romantic place on the Rhine, there to live and to sing to his heart's content. But it did not last very long; the time was politically a very excited one; great poets, like Herwegh, Prutz, Dingelstedt, were fully engaged in the midst of the storm, and Freiligrath could not long remain inactive; his heart was at one with that of the people, and, in May 1841, he published a series of poems which were intended to form his profession of faith. He sings for freedom and justice, condemns the existing censure, exalts the poor and the oppressed. Formerly he had been very popular chiefly among the literary men of his time, now his popularity grows and grows fast among those classes of society which are traded upon by the politicians of all shades. But the Government of course could not tolerate any longer a man who had so audaciously made front against them, and they were consulting for the prosecution of the poet when he suddenly showed his back to his fatherland and went to Brussels, where he found the Communists Heinzen, Karl Marx, and Burgers. From Switzerland he launched on his native country a new volume, entitled 'Ca ira!' (1846), which rang the alarm-bell calling the German people out to Revolution. After a short stay at London, when the French Revolution of 1848 broke out, immediately followed by similar movements in nearly all European countries, Freiligrath, desiring to be an active soldier of the cause, went back to Germany and settled at Düsseldorf. Aug. 29, 1848, he was arrested, and Oct. 3 his trial for provocation to armed rebellion ended with his acquittal. He now became a member of the staff of die Neue rheinische Zeitung, of which Karl Marx was the chief editor, until the paper was suppressed. Freiligrath once more was obliged to leave Germany, and settled definitely in London. In 1852 he was one of the accused of the Communist trial at Coln. He remained at London as director of a Swiss banking house until 1867, when a patriotic donation was offered him from all parts of Germany, and soon afterwards he returned home, devoting all his care to prepare a complete edition of his works. The best edition of his works has been published at Stuttgart, at G. T. Gösschen's, under the title of 'Ferdinand Freiligrath's gesammelte Dichtungen' (6 vols. 8vo, 1877).—V. D.

¹ Lissagaray.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN
 HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication. As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d. Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

I. O'R.—You are right, Gerrald's father was an Irishman.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	MORRIS & McLEAN 81
Sir William Harcourt in Ecstasy	J. BRUCE GLASIER 82
In the United States	H. F. CHARLES 83
The Eighteenth of March	REGINALD A. BECKETT 83
Revolutionary Calendar—Hermann Ferdinand Freiligrath	VICTOR DAVE 83
The Commune of Paris	PROPOSED LEAFLET 84
Songs for the Celebration 85
Bibliography	VICTOR DAVE 86
Commune of Paris (Notices of Meetings) 86
London Compositors and Henry Broadhurst	W. B. 86
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings 87
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc. 88

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday March 13.

ENGLAND Christian Socialist Die Autonomie Justice Labour Elector Labour Tribune London—Freie Presse Norwich—Daylight Postal Service Gazette Railway Review Social Demokrat Worker's Friend	Chicago—Knights of Labor Denver—Arbitrator Detroit—Der Arme Teufel Port Worth (Tex)—South West San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung Valley Falls (Kan.)—Fair Play San Francisco—Pacific Union	SWITZERLAND Arbeiterstimme
INDIA Bankipore—Behar Herald Madras—People's Friend	FRANCE Paris—L'Egalite (daily) Le Parti Ouvrier (daily) Le Proletariat La Revolte L'Union Internat. des femmes	PORTUGAL Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
UNITED STATES New York—Der Sozialist Freiheit Volkszeitung Jewish Volkszeitung Workmen's Advocate Boston—Woman's Journal Liberty	HOLLAND Hague—Recht voor Allen	GERMANY Berlin—Volks Tribune
	BELGIUM Ghent—Vooruit Antwerp—De Werker Lleco—L'Avenir	AUSTRIA Wien—Gleichheit Brunn—Volksfreund
	SPAIN Seville—La Solidaridad Madrid—El Socialista	ROMANIA Jassy—Muncitorul
		DENMARK Social-Demokraten
		SWEDEN Malmo—Arbetet
		NORWAY Kristiania—Social-Democraten
		WEST INDIES Cuba—El Productor
		MEXICO Sinaloa—Credit-Foncier

THE COMMUNE OF PARIS.

FELLOW-WORKMEN.—No doubt you have often wondered why we Socialists hold in such high honour the men and women who fought and died in Paris eighteen years ago. By the ordinary newspapers, the "reptile press," you are told that they were red-handed ruffians, idle miscreants, abandoned characters. You are told also that the crimes they committed were so monstrous, that shooting down in cold blood thirty-five thousand men, women, and children, unarmed and prisoners, was only a slight punishment compared to what they really deserved. Now, what were they, and what did they do?

They were the people of Paris. Neither the best nor the worst—neither aristocrats nor criminals, those inevitable fruits of inequality—they were the People! And what they did was to fight for their freedom, to defend it against aggression, against the mastery of the money-bag. They died for the liberty of labour, of the workers of the world. It was for this they were butchered then; it is for this they are condemned and vilified now.

The Empire which had paralysed France was dead; the "Republic" which had taken its place was a shameful pretence, a treachery. Reactionary, royalist, corrupt, it had betrayed France and tricked her people. Made up of money-lenders, stock-jobbers, and capitalistic parasites, the "Republican" Ministry was more anxious to render property secure than to make real the Republic. To keep their own power over the public purse, they gave up everything—not their own. Afraid of the democracy of Paris and the large towns, they intrigued with the rurals, whom they blinded and misled; with the soldiers of the empire, whom they bribed and flattered. On Paris, the mainstay of the Republic, they concentrated their hatred. There were the men who dared to think and act for themselves, who dared to set the people above privilege. There the proletariat, the working-class, was alert and resolute, resolved on a true republic, imbued with Socialism.

In order, then, to have an excuse for coercion, and an opportunity for killing off the inconvenient men who would not join in the legal jugglery, the benevolent bourgeois government resolved on provoking a riot. So they tried to seize the cannon of the National Guard, the volunteers of Paris; cannon bought and paid for with the willing pence of the men who had used them during the siege in defending their homes. But, for once, the rulers had reckoned without their host. The "riot" became a revolt. Paris rose, and declaring herself guardian of the Republic, took possession of her own. Panic stricken, her oppressors fled. In a frenzy of fear, the usurping profit-mongers rushed from the city, followed by aristocrats, thieves, and loafers. Paris was left in the hands of her people.

The Commune, the ancient, the immemorial embodiment of popular right, which had again and again saved Paris, France itself in 1792, was proclaimed and its administration organised. Workmen, professional men, shopkeepers, pressed into its service. For the first time there was no thought of classes, the proletariat took its due place in the conduct of affairs. For two months it did so; and for two months the internal control of Paris was administered as never before nor since. For two months there was no crime, no vice, no poverty, and no oppression. "Each for all, All for each," was the rule of life. Many "unfortunates" even, products of the corruption of the empire, threw off at once their dreadful trade, and heroic, self-sacrificing, ennobled, became the devoted nurses of the wounded and the sick.

The privileged classes in all countries were alarmed. If only the example of Paris were to be followed elsewhere! If only the small middle-class of other countries were to fraternise with the workers, and put an end to the living on other men's labour! The misery of the many for the profit of the few, the subjection of labour to capital, and class-control of the means of production must be maintained. So the Governments of Europe looked on while the German Government helped that of Versailles to draw an iron ring round Paris, within which the greatest tragedy of modern times was to be consummated. The soldiers of the Second Empire, picked from those regiments most brutalised by their training, partakers in the atrocities of Africa and Mexico, were hurried back from their German prisons and led against the "rebels." Against enormous odds, under innumerable difficulties, weak and wounded from the recent horrors of the siege, Paris held out stoutly, but at length was beaten down; falling even then by treachery more than by force. Then began a dreadful massacre; women, children, sick and wounded, unarmed men and helpless cripples, felt the fury of outraged respectability, the revenge of shaken monopoly. By the orders of a bourgeois government, at the instance of civilised capitalists, and in order to secure the supremacy of property, deeds of fiendish cruelty were done from which the most barbarian despot might well recoil. The attempt of the mere common people to do without their masters was bloodily punished and put down.

Now, we ask you to examine for yourselves the truth of this story. Take nothing for granted. Come among us, and hear what we have to say for ourselves; you have heard what can be said against us. See which is true; and then if you find us in the right, as you will, join us in working and fighting for the aims of the men of the Commune. They fought and died for the right of the people to live, to work, and to enjoy the fruits of their work. To hold and utilise for the common benefit the land whereon they labour, and the means of labour whereby they live. They saw, as we see, that so long as the land on which we live, the tools wherewith we work, and all the wealth we have produced, and need, are owned and controlled by a class, we are owned and controlled by the same class in like measure. They saw, as we see, that so long as we allow our masters, the capitalists, to rule us: so long as we bow to their laws, pay respect to their parliaments and what not, or hope for relief from their justice or their mercy, we shall remain the miserable slaves we are. No! we must Agitate, Educate, Organise. Agitate, that we may stir up our fellows to see their true position. Educate, that we may know why we are robbed and how to end it. Organise, that we may strengthen our hands to take over the land and the means of production, that all may work who can, and all consume who need. Come then, fall in! The ranks are closing up on either side. You should not hesitate long, but throw in your lot with us "For the Freedom of the Peoples and the Brotherhood of Man!"

[It is intended to issue the above article as a leaflet by the Propaganda Committee. Readers are asked for criticism, and might suggest improvements.]

D. J. NICOLL, Secretary of Propaganda Committee.

SOCIALISM IN ROUMANIA.—The Vienna correspondent of the Daily News telegraphed on the 5th: The Roumanian Government has sent a circular to all the prefects on the subject of Socialism. Attention is called to the fact that Socialistic propaganda are beginning to spread all over the country.

A large syndicate with a capital of twenty-five million dollars has been formed to combat with the Chicago meat trust. The managers of the new concern will raise their own cattle, slaughter it, and sell the meat directly to the consumer all over the States. As Phil. Armour, the Chicago beef and pork king and leader of the trust, is backed by a capital of about 100 million dollars, the fight between the two trusts promises to become interesting. Good luck to you, gentlemen, it's refreshing to watch thieves fight about the booty.—C.

SONGS FOR THE CELEBRATION.

THE following revolutionary songs are here reprinted by request. They are those which will be sung by the choir of the Socialist League at South Place on the 16th. The first is written to the old air, "When the King enjoys his own again." "All for the Cause" will be sung to the air composed for it by E. Belfort Bax; copies of the music and words may be obtained at the Hall during the meeting, or at the League offices, 13, Farringdon Road, E.C. The other two are too well known to need any direction. The audience will be asked to join heartily in singing the Marseillaise.

WHEN THE PEOPLE HAVE THEIR OWN AGAIN.

THOUGH prating fools in Parliament
May do their utmost to prevent
The people's knowing who are who,
Or finding out what they can do;
In spite of them all, how'er they may bawl,
And Wrong defend with might and main,
The Right it shall win, and the good days begin
When the people have their own again!
The Right, etc.

The lawyers all may do their best
For profit, rent, and interest;
And parsons also after fees
May give the coward conscience ease;
But writ on the wall is the tale of their fall
Whose pleasure is the people's pain:
Ere long they'll be gone, and freedom be won
When the people have their own again!
Ere long, etc.

We see the promise in the east,
The dawning day of Freedom's feast;
And though the despots call it crime
To hail with joy the coming time,
Right well do we know how soon they must go,
And hear their threatening with disdain;
We know that at length we shall rise in our strength,
And the people have their own again!
We know, etc.

H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

LA CARMAGNOLE.

QUE faut-il au républicain ?
Que faut-il au républicain ?
La liberté du genre humain !
La liberté du genre humain !
La pioche dans les cachots,
L'école dans les châteaux,
Et la paix aux chaumières.
Vive le son, vive le son,
Et la paix aux chaumières
Vive le son du canon.
Dansons la carmagnole !
Vive le son, vive le son,
Dansons la carmagnole !
Vive le son du canon !

Que demande un républicain ?
Que demande un républicain ?
L'égalité du genre humain !
L'égalité du genre humain !
Plus de riche debout,
Plus de pauvre à genoux,
Aux fainéants la guerre.
Vive le son, etc.

Que demande un républicain ?
Que demande un républicain ?
Du fer, du plomb, et puis du pain !
Du fer, du plomb, et puis du pain !
Du fer pour travailler,
Du plomb pour se venger,
Et du pain pour nos frères.
Vive le son, etc.

Ah ! s'ils avaient le sens commun,
Ah ! s'ils avaient le sens commun,
Tous les peuples n'en feraient qu'un,
Tous les peuples n'en feraient qu'un ;
Au lieu de s'égorger,
Ils viendraient tous manger,
A la même gamelle.
Vive le son, etc.

Vive la Commune de Paris,
Vive la Commune de Paris,
Ses mitrailleuses et ses fusils !
Ses mitrailleuses et ses fusils !
La Commune battue,
N'est pas encore vaincue,
Elle aura sa revanche.
Vive le son, etc.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

HEAR a word, a word in season, for the day is drawing nigh,
When the Cause shall call upon us, some to live, and some to die !

He that dies shall not die lonely, many an one hath gone before,
He that lives shall bear no burden heavier than the life they bore.

Nothing ancient is their story, e'en but yesterday they bled,
Youngest they of earth's beloved, last of all the valiant dead.

E'en the tidings we are telling was the tale they had to tell,
E'en the hope that our hearts cherish, was the hope for which they fell.

In the grave where tyrants thrust them, lies their labour and their pain,
But undying from their sorrow springeth up the hope again.

Mourn not therefore, nor lament it that the world outlives their life ;
Voice and vision yet they give us, making strong our hands for strife.

Some had name, and fame, and honour, learn'd they were, and wise and strong ;
Some were nameless, poor, unlettered, weak in all but grief and wrong,

Named and nameless all live in us ; one and all they lead us yet
Every pain to count for nothing, every sorrow to forget.

Hearken how they cry, "O happy, happy ye that ye were born
"In the sad slow night's departing, in the rising of the morn.

"Fair the crown the Cause hath for you, well to die or well to live
"Through the battle, through the tangle, peace to gain or peace to give."

Ah, it may be ! Oft meseemeth, in the days that yet shall be,
When no slave of gold abideth 'twixt the breadth of sea to sea,

Oft, when men and maids are merry, ere the sunlight leaves the earth,
And they bless the day beloved, all too short for all their mirth,

Some shall pause awhile and ponder on the bitter days of old,
Ere the toil of strife and battle overthrew the curse of gold ;

Then 'twixt lips of loved and lover solemn thoughts of us shall rise ;
We who once were fools and dreamers, then shall be the brave and wise.

There amidst the world new-builled shall our earthly deeds abide,
Though our names be all forgotten, and the tale of how we died.

Life or death then, who shall heed it, what we gain or what we lose ?
Fair flies life amid the struggle, and the Cause for each shall choose.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

MARSEILLAISE.

YE sons of freedom, wake to glory !
Hark ! hark ! what myriads bid you rise !
Your children, wives, and grandsires hoary,
Behold their tears and hear their cries ;
Behold their tears and hear their cries.
Shall hateful tyrants, mischief breeding,
With hireling hosts, a ruffian band,
Affright and desolate the land,
Whilst Peace and Liberty lie bleeding ?
To arms ! to arms ! ye brave !
The avenging sword unsheath !
March on ! march on !
All hearts resolved
On liberty or death !

See now the dangerous storm is rolling,
Which tyrant kings confederate raise ;
The dogs of war let loose are howling,
And lo ! our fields and cities blaze ;
And lo ! our fields and cities blaze.
Shall we basely view the ruin
While lawless force, with guilty stride,
Spreads desolation far and wide,
With crime and blood their hands imbruing ?
To arms ! etc.

With luxury and pride surrounded,
The vile, insatiate despots dare—
Their thirst for pride and power unbounded—
To mete and vend the light and air ;
To mete and vend the light and air.
Like beasts of burden would they load us ;
Like gods would bid their slaves adore ;
But man is man, and who is more ?
Then shall they longer lash and goad us ?
To arms ! etc.

O Liberty ! can man resign thee,
Once having felt thy generous flame ?
Can dungeons, bolts, or bars confine thee,
Or whips thy noble spirit tame ;
Or whips thy noble spirit tame ?
Too long the world has wept bewailing,
That falsehood's dagger tyrants wield ;
But Freedom is our sword and shield,
And all their arts are unavailing.
To arms ! etc.

ROUGET DE LISLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

'The Quintessence of Socialism.' By Dr. A. SCHÄFFLE. English Translation by BERNARD BOSANQUET, M.A. (Swan Sonnenschein and Co., London, 1889).

THE little book of the former Austrian Minister of agriculture and commerce in the Hohenwart ministry, has had up to the present date eight successive editions, and its thirty thousand copies have been eagerly read and perused by politicians of all schools and Socialists alike; for some time even it was thought dangerous enough to find its place on the index list of Socialist literature, prohibited in Germany by Bismark's muzzle laws; it has been translated long ago into nearly every European tongue, and now lastly, thanks to Mr. Bernard Bosanquet, it has also been rendered into English. Two or three London publishers have of late endeavoured to put before the English reading public some good foreign publications on matters of social politics and Socialism, which is altogether a sign that a growing interest is beginning to be felt, at last, for this section of scientific speculation; but it may as well be said that in that respect, as in many others, England has yet much more to do than any other country in Europe.

Dr. Schäffle's 'Quintessence' certainly well deserves to be known in England by all those who are engaged in the battle of Socialism, although we do not admit, with M. de Laveleye and Mr. Bosanquet, that it is the "only publication" that explains the scheme of Collectivism and treats it in a scientific manner. Without speaking of Collins, who in order of time at any rate, may be called the first exponent of the Collectivist theory, and of Constantin Pecqueur, Ramon de la Sagra, Louis de Potter, respectively the French, the Spanish, and the Belgian theoreticians of the same doctrine, we must point out that Naquet, in his book 'Religion, Famille, Propriété' (1868), has some good chapters on it, and that Dr. César de Paeppe, in his remarkable reports of the International Congresses of Brussels (1868) and of Bale (1869), and more so in his splendid defence of Collectivism, which appeared in La Liberté (1869), in answer to Professor Hector Denis's Proudhonian (Mutualist) views of the question of private property, has given a thorough scientific exposition of the question dealt with, some six years afterwards by Dr. Schäffle, the 'Quintessence' having first appeared in 1874 in a German review 'Deutsche Blätter,' for the purpose of laying before a mixed public (consisting largely of theologians) a scientific and yet popular picture of the economic consequences of the newest form of Socialism, and then only, as the preface to the first edition says, it was put in book form in order to reach a wider circle of readers. It is also but fair to state that, following Dr. de Paeppe's exposition, several papers, belonging officially or not to the International Working-men's Association, such as L'Internationale at Brussels, L'Égalité at Geneva, La Solidarité at Neuchâtel, La Fédération at Barcelona, Le Travail and Le Socialiste at Paris, La Réforme Sociale at Rouen, Das Demokratische Wapfenblatt (afterwards Der Volksstaat) at Leipzig, La Solidaridad at Madrid, l'Égalité at Naples, De Werkman at Amsterdam, and some others, published from 1869 to 1873, on the question then at issue a large amount of literature, most of which was as scientific as Dr. Schäffle's 'Quintessence' itself.

Dr. Schäffle's 'Quintessence' tends to prove that the ultimate aim of the revolutionary Socialist movement is to replace the system of private capital, i.e., the speculative method of production, regulated on behalf of society only by the free competition of private enterprises, by a system of collective capital, that is, by a method of production which would introduce a unified (social or collective) organisation of national labour, on the basis of collective or common ownership of the means of production by all the members of society. This collective method of production would remove the present competitive system, by placing under official administration such departments of production as can be managed collectively (socially or co-operatively), as well as the distribution among all of the common produce of all, according to the amount and social ability of the productive labour of each. In other words this amounts to claiming, firstly, collective ownership of the means of production; and secondly, individual or personal ownership of the means of consumption, these only to be acquired by the personal labour of the adult members of society. From a purely Socialistic point of view these claims are evidently legitimate, and in the six first editions of his book Dr. Schäffle has given us a true and adequate description of the Socialist's position, so much so, that for a long time past he himself has been acknowledged as one of the ablest adherents and exponents of Socialism.

Meanwhile, we have to say that this has never been so. It is not as an adept of any revolutionary party whatever that Dr. Schäffle wrote his 'Quintessence,' but as a critic of the history of social evolution, that he merely laid down an exposition of the doctrine of Collectivism. But he does not at all agree with it; on the contrary, in the two last editions of his work he points out that the democratic collective system is entirely in complete antagonism with his own views, and that his 'Quintessence' is not, and never has intended to be, an advocate for democratic Socialism. Nay, he has even done more than this. Pretending to further pursue the critical objections of the 'Quintessence,' he has in reality smashed to pieces his own work by trying to expound the utter impracticability of Socialism in his pamphlet entitled 'Die Aussichtslosigkeit der Socialdemocratie' (1885), (The Hopelessness of Social Democracy), which was followed by two other writings, suggested by the famous "positive social reform" taken in hand by the German Government, namely, 'Der Korporative Hilfskassenzwang' (Compulsory Incorporated Benefit Funds), and 'Die Inkorporation des Hypothekarkredits' (The Incorporation of Mortgage Credit).

Although originally written as a warning to Conservatives, we nevertheless recommend our English comrades to read the 'Quintessence,' which is at any rate the work of a thorough expert in matters of social economy.

VICTOR DAVE.

While we seek honour, we lose liberty.—Lord Bacon.

The total income of the Brechin Mill and Factory Operatives Union since it started is £104, and the expenditure a little over £9. The union consists of 400 female and 1,100 male members.

ANOTHER PROPOSED SYNDICATE.—The Wolverhampton correspondent of the Daily News writes: "Another trade syndicate is proposed. The industry now sought to be cornered is the fire-brick trade. Negotiations have been inaugurated amongst the makers in South Staffordshire, East Worcestershire, Leeds, and elsewhere for buying up works and the declaration of a common price list. The required capital of the syndicate is set down at £3,000,000, and Lord Dudley's name is mentioned as chairman. If the proposals should be carried through, it will be a serious matter for the iron trade, for it is proposed to immediately increase prices 5s. per thousand."

THE COMMUNE OF PARIS.

The Yarmouth comrades, assisted by those of Norwich, and Mrs. Schack and H. Davis, of London, will hold a celebration on Sunday the 17th inst.

The annual celebration will be held by the Dublin Socialist Club, at 16, Dawson Street, on Saturday, March 16th, at 8 p.m. All friends invited.

The Edinburgh Branch of the Socialist League will celebrate the anniversary on the 18th inst. For details see local announcements.

An East-end celebration will be held under the auspices of East-end branches of Socialist League and International Clubs, at Cooper's Hall, Commercial Road, E., on Monday, March 18th, at 8 p.m. Speakers—F. Kitz, D. Nicoll, G. Cores, Rochmann, and others; chairman, C. W. Mowbray.

At Norwich on Sunday next, a meeting will be held in Market Place at 11 a.m. A great open-air demonstration will be held in the Market Place at 3 p.m., addressed by Mrs. Schack and H. Davis (London), assisted by branch members. At 8 p.m. same day, lecture in Gordon Hall on "The Commune." On Monday, at 8 p.m., in Gordon Hall, a Commemoration Meeting will be held. Songs, etc., will be sung by the branch choir. Admission, 1d. each.

"Art for art's sake" corresponds to the political formula, Everyone for himself: it may dominate decaying societies for some years; but over a people which rises into new life and to noble aims, it is powerless.—Mazzini.

Another strike of cotton operatives has occurred at Blackburn, making the fifth strike within a week. Fifteen hundred looms are now stopped. The cause of all the strikes, with one exception, has been the character of the material, which the operatives allege to be so bad to weave that they will not weave it unless the employers concede an advance of 5 per cent.

A number of labourers in the village of Whaplode, the Pall Mall says, have obtained allotments at a rental of £3 10s. per acre. On their petition the Holbeach rural sanitary authority has purchased 13½ acres of grass land at £69 per acre. This body, which is now in treaty for land in two other villages is the first in the eastern counties, it is said, to set the Allotments Act in motion. This is also one of the first instances of the local authority purchasing land outright to let to the labourers. Hitherto all that local bodies appear to have done is to induce owners to let their land in allotments.

Under the Midland system of fog-signalling, fogmen are provided for distant signals only, drivers having to grope their way on towards the home and starting signals, and find them as best they can. The consequences of running past one of the latter signals when at danger might have serious results, but, notwithstanding that that fact is well known to the company, it is prepared to risk it, putting forth the miserable plea—or rather subterfuge—that sufficient men cannot be got to supply all the signals with fogmen. They will ask us next to believe that there is no such thing as the unemployed.—Railway Review.

HOW THE INNOCENT ARE PUNISHED BY LAW.—The uninitiated say law is intended to punish the guilty. But we live in an artificial state of society, and are oppressed by artificial law; hence, when even one really guilty person is punished by law, half-a-dozen innocent not unfrequently have to suffer, and sometimes more intensely than the violator of the law. But it cannot be otherwise, since our irrational system makes the wife and children the property of the husband. If the husband places himself within reach of the law, say, assaults a policeman and gets six months, the law not only punishes the offender but also the wife and children who have not offended. Who can rightly estimate the amount of suffering a mother and her children undergo, who have been deprived by the law of the support of the bread-winner? The nincompoops of to-day call this justice, and say the majesty of the law must be respected; but we say there can be no justice between man and man under our present system, and that more iniquity is perpetrated under the name of law than any other. Then away with this rotten social system, and this abominable sham called law!—A. B.

LONDON COMPOSITORS.—At the annual meeting of the London Society of Compositors, held on March 6th, lively discussions took place on the subjects of the London Trades Council and the Trades Unions Parliamentary Committee. The former body was severely handled for its "flunkysm" and "fossilisation"; and concerning the latter, an amendment was moved to reduce the annual grant this year to £5, on the ground of the shortcomings of its secretary, Henry Broadhurst, M.P. Among other things, it was charged against this gentleman that he had received from Mr. Brunner shares in his company to the value of £500, shortly after Broadhurst's now historical tub-thumping in favour of the election of his friend to Parliament. Hence the significance of his silence over the disgraceful conditions of labour at the works of Brunner, Mond, and Co. Ultimately, after much excitement, and appreciation of the remarks of the mover of the amendment, the meeting was adjourned till the 20th, when Mr. Broadhurst is to be invited to attend. We would suggest to the compositors that they should not rest their case against Mr. Broadhurst alone, but pay some attention to the bungling of the Parliamentary Committee over the eight-hour ballot, and their handling of the International Congress last year, as well as their attitude towards the one convened for Paris this summer. They will do well to protest by adopting the amendment, for this Committee have been carrying matters with a high hand lately; but after that, had they not better try if they cannot send better representatives from their own society to the Trades Congress and other bodies?

NORTH HACKNEY RADICAL CLUB, 83 Church Street, Stoke Newington.—Sunday Mar. 17, at 8.30, C. W. Mowbray, "Objections to Socialism Answered."

ST. GEORGES COFFEE TAVERN, 106 Westminster Bridge Road, S.E.—Monday, March 18, at 8 p.m., J. Blackwell will lecture on "Anarchist-Communism."

SYNAGOGUE PARADE.—A Procession of Jewish Unemployed and Sweaters' Victims will be held on Saturday March 16th, and will proceed to the Great Synagogue, where the Chief Rabbi will deliver a sermon to the unemployed and sweaters' victims. The procession will start, with music, at 12.30 from 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road, E.

BIRKBECK DEBATING SOCIETY, Breams Buildings, E.C.—March 18, at 8 p.m., Mr. J. L. Shadwell will move: "That no scheme of Socialism can really improve the condition of the working classes." Non-members are allowed to be present and take part in the voting, but members only are allowed to take part in the discussion, except by permission of the chairman.

ATHENÆUM, next door to Gower Street underground station.—On Sunday March 17th at 7.30 p.m., Herbert Burrows will lecture on "Social Democracy and Anarchism—a Challenge to Anarchists"; and he asks us to say that he will be very glad to see as many Anarchists as possible present, "so that we may have a friendly discussion."

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Library.—The Library is open to members of the Socialist League and affiliated bodies. LIBRARY CATALOGUE, containing the Rules, 2d. D. J. NICOLL and W. BLUNDELL are the Librarians.

Executive.—That the Socialist League delegates to the Metropolitan Radical Federation be instructed to advise the Radicals to organise a national protest against the closing of Trafalgar Square and the suppression of Free Speech, and the Socialist League will aid them to the best of its ability.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, April 1, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Commune Celebration.—A Special Practice of the choir will be held on Saturday, March 16th, 6 p.m., at 13, Farringdon Road, before the Celebration.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1889:—Clerkenwell, Leicester, Mitcham, and North London, to February.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Membership Cards can now be had by the Branches at 9d. per dozen from Central Office.

The Article, published in No. 152 of Weal, Dec. 8th, 1888, addressed to "Working Women and Girls," is now being issued by the Propagandist Committee in leaflet form for distribution, at 3s. 6d. per 1,000.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

NOTICE TO MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE.—Propaganda Committee meets on Tuesday, March 19th, at 8.30 p.m. Important business; London propaganda. All the speakers and members of the League are specially asked to attend. D. J. NICOLL.

COMMUNE COMMEMORATION FUND.

W. H., 4s. 6d.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—H. Schmitt, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; J. Presburg, 6d.; Blundell, 6d.; R. Turner, 6d.; J. Turner, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; Parker, 1s.; Seglie, 6d.; B. W., 6d.; Nicoll, 6d.; and Tilley, 6d. Norwich Branch, 3s. 3d. and 2s.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

CLERKENWELL.—Good meeting on Green Sunday night, addressed by Cores, McCormack, and Parker. In hall, Cores in chair, Brookes continued lecture on "The French Revolution," in which great interest was shown by the audience. Brookes will continue subject on the first Sunday in April.—S. P.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road Sunday morning. Speakers were Maughan, Dean, Crouch, Lyne, jun., Mrs. Schack, and Tochetti. Choir sang several songs, including new one by a comrade of the branch; 18 Commonweal sold. At Weltje Road 7 p.m., speakers, Maughan, Crouch, Catterson Smith, and Mordhurst. At Kelmscott House at 8, Ernest Radford lectured on "The Ethics of Revolt." Many questions and good discussion.

EAST END.—Good meetings on Sunday at Leman Street, Mowbray, Turner, and Mrs. Lahr were the speakers. Salmon and Ball by Davis and Cores. In Victoria Park, Mowbray, Charles, and Mrs. Schack spoke. Commonweal sale slightly increased this week.

ABERDEEN.—Good outdoor meeting Saturday night, addressed by Duncan and Aiken. At indoor meeting on 9th, a paper by Dr. Drysdale on "The State Remedy for Poverty" was read and discussed, several members who have never spoken before being so exasperated at the paper that they rose and went for it. At Woodside on the 8th, W. C. Spence, M.A., a local schoolmaster and prominent Liberal, gave lecture answering the question, "Is Socialism Inevitable?" Duncan and Leatham attended to oppose him, but as he answered very heartily in the affirmative, Leatham took up subject where he left it and carried it on a little further.

EDINBURGH.—On 3rd in Moulder's Hall, J. Bruce Glasier delivered an effective criticism of the Scotsman's article on Morris's lecture on "Equity." He also spoke at open-air meetings here and in Leith. On 5th in Central Halls, L. Mellet lectured on "Woman and Social Progress." He gave a vigorous historical sketch of the social condition of woman, and dealt with her position, present and future. His stirring exhortation resulted in seven women joining our movement. Other lectures for women will be given.

GLASGOW.—An excellent days propaganda on Sunday. At 2.30 we held simultaneously two meetings, one on Jail Square and the other a hundred yards away on the Green, Downie, Joe Burgoyne, and Pollock speaking at former, and Glasier and Tim Burgoyne at latter. There was an S.D.F. meeting between us, so that the people could not possibly escape us. At 5 o'clock, Glasier and Joe Burgoyne spoke at Paisley Road Toll, and at 7 o'clock Joe Burgoyne, Gilbert Pollock, Tim Burgoyne, and McCulloch all spoke at St. George's Cross. Glasier also lectured on "God and the State" in the Secularist Hall at 6.30. Five dozen Weals sold.

NORWICH.—On Thursday last several comrades went to hear a paper read by the Sheriff of Norwich on "What ought to be the attitude of Christians towards Socialism." W. Moore and Stone took part in discussion. Sunday afternoon, usual open-air meeting in Market Place; fair audience present; speakers, Moyley, Darley, and Poynts. In evening, in Gordon Hall, Adams gave interesting address, Poynts in chair; Mills took part in the discussion.

YARMOUTH.—Sunday morning, Ruffold and others held meeting and distributed leaflets at Gorleston. In afternoon, good meeting on Priory Plain; Ruffolds opened by reading "Down with the Socialists!" after which Reynolds spoke, dealing specially with education under Socialism. Very great interest manifested; after meeting, little knots could be seen discussing among themselves.—The Branch has secured a very suitable room for weekly meetings; first meeting Tuesday evening March 19th.—C. R.

IPSWICH PIONEER DEBATING CLASS.—Good discussion was opened here last Sunday on the Local Government Bill, showing its deficiencies. Thomas and Creed, and others took part. Comrade Thomas opens discussion next Sunday on the "Commune of Paris."—M. C.

TOWER HILL.—Taking advantage of Radical demonstration last Sunday afternoon, comrades of the S.D.F. and League occupied a platform and passed a resolution protesting against coercion, but recognising it as the logical outcome of the present system. The speakers were Harding, Hicks, McCormick, and Parker.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Bloomsbury.—Percy Hall, Percy Street, Tottenham Court Road.—Sundays at 8.30. Members asked to attend.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card, to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30. Lecture on Sunday March 17, at 8.30., D. Nicoll, "The English Revolutionary Movement, 1815-1817; Spa-fields Riots and Derbyshire Insurrection." Sunday 24th, H. Halliday Sparling, "Luxury Now; Necessity Then." Sun. 31st, Frank Kitz, A Lecture.

East London.—Cosmopolitan Club, Charles Square, Hoxton. Business meeting on Sunday 17th, at 7 sharp. All members requested to attend. At 8.30 F. Kitz will lecture on "Criminal Classes, High and Low."

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend.

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper-Mall, W. Sunday Mar. 17, at 8 p.m., a Lecture. Thursday 21st, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 22nd, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion on some point of interest in the propaganda. Sun. March 24th, Touzeau Parris.

Hoxton.—Comrades desiring to help in the propaganda of the Socialist League in this locality are requested to send their names and addresses to H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary.

Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.

Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street.

Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.

Galloway (Scot. Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secretary.

Gallatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Roslyn Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.—SPECIAL.—Peter Kropotkin will lecture on "The Problems of our Century," in the Waterloo Hall, on Sunday 24th, at 7 o'clock.

Gorleston.—Coffee Tavern, England's Lane. Monday March 18, at 8 p.m., C. Reynolds will lecture on "Why are the Workers Poor?" All welcome.

Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 9 a.m., comrades distributing Commonweal will meet in Gordon Hall. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8, Discussion Class. Thursday and Friday, Gordon Hall open from 8 p.m. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Association.—All comrades having books belonging to the Branch are requested to return them at once to the Librarian, W. Moore.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Tuesdays at 8. March 19, C. Reynolds on "What Socialism Teaches."

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SUNDAY 17.

11.30.....	Hackney—"Salmon and Ball,"	Parker and Cores.
11.30.....	Latimer Road Station.....	The Branch.
11.30.....	Regent's Park	Mowbray.
11.30.....	Walham Green, opposite Station	The Branch.
11.45.....	Leman Street, Shadwell.....	Nicoll and Turner.
3.30.....	Hyde Park	Parker and Mrs. Lahr.
3.30.....	Victoria Park	Mowbray, Cores, and Charles.
7.....	Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park	Hammersmith Branch.
7.30.....	Broad Street, Soho	Nicoll.
7.30.....	Clerkenwell Green	Brookes.

TUESDAY 19.

8.....	Fulham—back of Walham Green Church	The Branch.
--------	--	-------------

THURSDAY 21.

8.15.....	Hoxton Church.....	Mowbray and Cores.
-----------	--------------------	--------------------

FRIDAY 22.

8.....	Philpot Street, Commercial Road.....	Parker, Cores, and Kitz.
--------	--------------------------------------	--------------------------

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 11 and 3.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower Marsh, Lambeth.—Tuesday March 26, at 8 p.m., H. Halliday Sparling, "The History of Radicalism." Sunday March 31, a Lecture by Wm. Morris.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . . 1d
- Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . . 1d
- The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . . 2d.
- The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. . . 3d.
Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
- The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . . 1d
- The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . . . 4d.
- The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . . 1d.
- True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . . 1d.
- Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . . 1d.
- "Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . . 2d.
- Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Price 1d.; Post-free, 1½d.

THE RIGHTS OF LABOUR ACCORDING TO JOHN RUSKIN.

Arranged by THOMAS BARCLAY.
Second Edition.

"Your pamphlet is the best abstract of all the most important pieces of my teachings that has yet been done; and I am entirely grateful to you for doing it, and glad to have your letter."—Extract from letter received from Mr. Ruskin.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C

ONE PENNY.

The Political World.

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY.

Edited by
RONALD SMITH.

Full of Interesting and Amusing Matter.
PICTURES, NEWS, AND NOTES.

12 Catharine Street, Strand, W.C.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.
PRICE 1s.

'COMMONWEAL' OFFICE, 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

KARL MARX.

A NEW AND HIGHLY ARTISTIC ETCHING.

India Proof, 19 by 24 inches.

Price Two Dollars.

Etched and published by ALFIRA C. KIHN, 298 Jay Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., U.S.A.

Also for sale at New York Labour News Co., 25 East Fourth Street, N.Y.

Copies mailed to any address on receipt of price.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by
H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

THE DEMOCRATIC REVIEW.

EDITED BY LOTHROP WITHINGTON.

LONDON 1882, 8vo 160 pp.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of this pioneer revolutionary miscellany are still obtainable. Price 6d. each number, post free 6½d. Office of Commonweal.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3D. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2S. 6D.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Library Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
Vol. III., AUTUMN . . . seventh edition 12s.
Vol. IV., WINTER . . . seventh edition 12s.

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo, at 2s. 6d. each.
ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE AENEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond. A Morality.

Square 12mo, 143 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 292 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

L'EGALITÉ,

ORGANE DE CONCENTRATION SOCIALISTE,

L'Homme Libre and Le Cri du Peuple have been amalgamated under the above title, and no effort will be spared to make the new paper in every way a worthy exponent of Socialism, as well as a high-class daily newspaper.

Editorial Committee: Daumas, Ch. Longuet, Edouard Vaillant (Municipal Councillors); L. Fiaux, Granger, Jules Guesde, Paul Lafargue, B. Malon.

SUBSCRIPTIONS (England and United States): three months, 7s. 6d.; six months, 15s., one year, 30s.

Address remittances, etc., to Jules Roques, manager; editorial communications to A. Breuillé, secretary.

12 RUE PAUL-LELONG, PARIS.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, LONDON

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 167.

SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE Liberal victory at Kennington is being received with a flood of self-gratulation by the organs of that side of the game of politics, which is a little trying to the feelings of Socialists, whose victories are yet to come; or to speak more correctly, as well as more hopefully, are still below the surface. Nevertheless, do not let us forget in the first place that it is a protest against open, brutal, undisguised coercion in Ireland, against which we Socialists have protested over and over again whenever we have had an opportunity, as indeed our principles compelled us to do.

In the second place, although it might be possible for the Tories to dish the Gladstonians by themselves bringing in an Irish Compromise, it is not very probable that they would make the compromise go far enough to shelve the Home Rule Question for the present; and, in fact, we shall be hampered with this question until the Gladstonians have come in pledged to definite Home Rule. Undoubtedly the Irish agitation has been of service to the cause of Revolution; but it has for the present done about all it can for us, especially since Mr. Parnell has been whitewashed into a very angel of respectability by the proceedings of the Commission.

Besides all this, a brutally Tory government in power, although it brings the Radicals and the Socialists into occasional alliance, and therefore seems to push forward Socialism, has this disadvantage—that it obscures the fact that Socialism is the only hope of the workers. Get together some three years hence some of those enthusiastic Radicals who have returned Mr. Beaufoy for Kennington, and ask them how much better off they are for having a Liberal Government in power, and you will have your answer short enough I'll warrant. By all means let the Tories go; they proclaim themselves the enemies of the people, and undoubtedly we must attack them. Now then, let the Liberals, the friends of the people, come in, and let us see what they will do—in all essentials exactly the same as the Tories. Well, then we know where we are, and may expect some of our democratic friends to come to the same knowledge.

The great anti-Coercion meeting at St. James's Hall was doubtless a success, and very enthusiastic; it was, I am told by a friend who was present, wholly a middle-class meeting, as might have been expected. The lesson to be drawn from these facts is encouraging, for they show us how suddenly the public opinion may change about a measure which, to the ordinary public at least, seems revolutionary. I daresay Mr. Morley's speech was more than all that was expected of him, but how much more effective the following speech would have been.

"Ladies and gentlemen, why waste time in going over for the hundredth time what you all know about this matter? I prefer rather to bring a blush of honest pleasure to your cheeks and my own by recalling to you an incident which happened to me about eight years ago, which will show you how much I (and I believe you) have improved since that time. I was standing as candidate for Westminster at the time, and was addressing the electors summoned specially to hear me. I gave them my views on various political matters (for the most part of no importance now), and then followed the heckling; and I answered many questions to the complete satisfaction of the audience. At last a troublesome Irishman in the gallery (I ask your pardon, Mr. Parnell) put me the question, 'How about Home Rule?' I wish I could remember the exact words of my answer, but they have escaped me amongst all the other phrases I have been compelled to concoct and utter since. I can only say that logically, neatly, succinctly, I repudiated Home Rule as an impossibility, a danger, and a disgrace"—(signs of dissent amongst the audience)—"and you cheered me to the echo."

"Now, ladies and gentlemen," he might have gone on to say, "is not this cheering, in view of all the blessings of Home Rule which you now know by heart? In a very few years we have been, so to say, brought out of a barren wilderness of negation and coercion, into a paradise of goodwill and friendliness with our neighbours"—(great cheers)—"and have found out that they were only asking for that self-government which we claim (but don't get) for ourselves. Now if there were no other countries in the world but Ireland and England (the latter entirely inhabited by happy middle-class people, producing nothing and living on each other, as you probably suppose is the case), I might ask you to disperse at once after having given three cheers for Mr. Parnell,"—(enormous cheering)—"and—those who once put him in prison. But I have recently acquired information, which may perhaps reach you before long, and I wish to say a word or two to you about it."

"I am now (with some reluctance, I must confess) prepared to admit that Home Rule for Ireland is not likely to be the only new and revolutionary measure which we may have to consider in our lifetime. It seems that the happy view of the composition of society in England which I have mentioned just now is not as strictly accurate as we once thought it. In fact it seems probable that we cannot include factory hands at 24s. a-week and farm labourers at 10s. in the middle classes, and that there are a great many of such persons, and also that they are getting it into their heads that as they make all, they ought to have all"—(groans and hooting)—"Well, well, of course we know how idiotic that is now, just as we knew Home Rule to be idiotic nine years ago: but we may as well make up our minds that ten years hence we shall probably be meeting as we are now, to protest against coercion in England, and to pass resolutions in favour of the communization of the means of production"—(great uproar, amidst which Mr. Morley sat down, after having been heard by one reporter to say, "Well, after all, it sounds as well as the other").

If the Pall Mall interviewer is to be believed, Mr. Beaufoy, M.P. has already stripped off his lion's skin. Questioned about Trafalgar Square, he answers: "I do not think the electors had any more sympathy than I had with the extreme view which is prepared to defend the abuse as well as the use of the right." Well, you may ask Mr. Beaufoy what that means. In the next sentence he explains: "All our shopkeepers, at any rate, had a good deal of fellow-feeling with their West-end brethren, who objected very naturally to seeing Trafalgar Square turned into a place of public meeting in permanent session." What our electioneering snob means is clearly that a "respectable" meeting, one held for backing up some form or other of our capitalistic government, shall be allowed; but an unrespectable one, held by men with a real grievance, shall be bludgeoned. Exactly; that is just what we have always expected from the Liberals: "Yes, you may speak if we are quite sure you will say nothing we don't like to hear." Otherwise—well, here is one of those Radical M.P.'s for London whom Sir C. Russell advised the delegates the other day to elect in order to get them back the Square. These be your gods, O Israel!
W. M.

The Broken Hill mines in Australia now pay dividends at the rate of 126 per cent. on the £19-share paid up, and the total amount paid in dividends for the half-year ending 30th November is £192,000. This piece of news appears in the commercial column of a paper which continues to breathe "threatenings and slaughter" for the workers of Australia should they seek to better their condition by such movements as will disturb this dividend and frighten the capitalists away. The free and independent press of honest Scotland has seen fit in its wisdom and prerogative to warn the miners of Australia that if they continue harrassing capital as they were doing during their late strike, they would kill the goose that laid the golden egg. From the above piece of news it is obvious the capitalist is not "the goose."

Why should the workers be such geese? If they lay the golden eggs, why should they be so foolish as to let the "cacklers" who lay none gather them? The voice of the "promoter" receives its "fibre" from the unorganised state of the workers, and the big syndicates of the capitalists must needs be met by bigger and closer combinations of the workers. The battle which is imminent with these two is the real cause of the increase of the naval and army expenditures of the "Great Powers." The "greatness" of these powers lies in the ignorance of the workers. That is mending; and the suicide of M. Denfert Rochereau, the director of the Comptoir d'Escompte, is as significant to the robbed workers as Pigott's is to the libelled Parnellites.

In commenting on Mr. Cunninghame Graham's speech, a Glasgow editor says "it pains him [Mr. Graham] to find that there are so many poor and helpless people in the United Kingdom side by side with rich and prosperous people." Instead of trying to show why some are "poor and helpless" and others "rich and prosperous," this editor goes on to "whine, put finger in the eye, and sob," "snarl and snap malignant wise, like dog distract or monkey sick," and he writes: "It is not fair, however, to the House of Commons to pour out a flood of trite, though benevolent generalities by the hour together, to the interruption of all other business." Mr. Graham is, I hope, able to appreciate this editor's remark. The business of the gentlemen of the House of Commons is other than the good of the people—nay, it on all points is opposed to the good of the people—and it is not fair to delay these gentlemen in their business. Leave them, Mr. Graham, be fair with them, and take the people's business to another and more efficient tribunal—the people themselves.

Further on, this editor says, "The working classes of the United Kingdom are not so miserable that they would in their despair welcome a Prussian or French invasion. Nor would they gain by becoming foreigners." This editor sees wherein the working classes may be foreigners in their native land! but he cannot see they are foreigners now; and yet there is not a workman but has to pay heavy toll for leave to exist. What worse conditioned could the workers of these islands have been even although Britain had lost all its Continental wars? Would it not have consummated the desire of the workers throughout Europe earlier and more efficiently than it can possibly be done under the present national divisions? The working classes would have ere this realised the meaning of increased votes for the army and navy.

GEORGE McLEAN.

TRUSTS.

I MUST . . . call attention to "trusts" and to their importance to Socialism. It is quite the thing for politicians, reformers, and persons who think that they think, to attack "trusts" and "monopolies"; but exactly where "trusts" and "monopolies" begin, and corporations, and the private control of things public, leave off, they do not decide to tell us; or why, if one is so beneficial, the other should be so harmful. Don't be deceived. The principle underlying a trust is just the same as that which underlies a business firm and a corporation; the motive is gain, and selfishness is the keystone of that arch. A trust is no more than several business firms, or several incorporated companies, co-operating under the lead of three or more directors, so that they may buy cheap and sell dear—so that they may limit the supply and create a demand, and control both. Business firms, incorporated companies, syndicates and trusts are all children of different growths, and competition is the mother of them all. Competition is the underlying basis of our trade. Society recognizes that "competition is the life of trade." Well, trusts are the result; for men who can help it will not be compelled to compete—they combine. If children will play with fire they will get burnt. Competition will burn all people who suffer it to rule their exchanges. It is merciful that we be burnt by a quick, rather than be singed, through a long series of years, by a slow fire. Aristotle said to the Greeks: "Trade is incompatible with that dignified life which it is our wish that our citizens should lead, and totally adverse to that generous elevation of mind with which it is our ambition to inspire them." Again, Prof. Richard T. Ely says that: "The ancient Persians held commerce to be a school of lies. Cicero and the Roman philosophers despised commerce, Cicero going so far as to say a merchant could never make anything unless he lied in the most atrocious manner. St. Chrysostom believed it scarcely possible that a man could be at the same time a Christian and a merchant. . . . Commerce originated in robbery, and in early ages it supplied chiefly articles of luxury. Phœnicians and Greeks were pirates before they were merchants, and piracy played an important rôle in the development of English commerce in the sixteenth century. . . . Benjamin Franklin said there are three ways for a nation to acquire wealth: 'The first is by war—this is robbery. The second, by commerce, which is, generally, cheating. The third is by agriculture—the only honest way.' The late Horace Greeley used to lament in his Tribune the large number of merchants, and hoped that the time would come when ninety-nine men out of a hundred would become real producers."

These old seers understood the principle which actuated those persons who struggled "to buy in a cheap and to sell in a dear market." If it were wrong for a trust to control all the sugar sold within the United States, or all the copper sold in both America and Europe, then it is wrong for the corner grocer to control all the sugar and most of the soap sold within the locality he monopolizes. That the corner grocery-man "gets a corner" upon everything he can, is beyond question—his gratification of selfishness and of monopoly is only limited by his ability to take advantage of his customers. Business, under the laws of competition, has no conscience. "There is no friendship in business—business is business." The difference between the corner grocery-man and the president of a trust is one of degree, not of principle. Smart business persons have, in all times, combined so as to get advantages over those who do not have the thought and the sense to associate and to protect themselves. The firm widened into the company, the company deepened into the syndicate, and now comes the trust—greater than all, simply because those men in the trust are wider, deeper, and longer than those who are not. The crying "stop thief," by the great little merchants and the little great "anti-monopolists," is merely a trick at blackmail, nothing more. History shows us that no people have ever acted for their own preservation and advancement until they were forced to do it—and even then they did it reluctantly, and made every kind of excuse to their persecutors for having to stand up for equity and correct dealing. "Carlyle, in his history of the French Revolution, mentions that noblemen going to or coming from hunting had a right to, and were in the habit of shooting at men of the working classes to try their aim or empty the barrels of their guns. It seems that these noblemen had a great liking for human game, for Carlyle relates that, a short time previous to the outbreak of the Revolution of 1789, a law was passed limiting at two the number of working-men whom a nobleman might legally shoot when returning from hunting." The privileged classes of our day don't shoot the unincorporated; they simply bind them hand, soul, and foot legally. The sooner our people come to understand that the plan of the government of the United States is not broad, deep, or long enough to protect them in their pursuit of usefulness and happiness, the better it will be for all concerned. The trusts are the most potent agencies in society to-day to awaken our people to a knowledge of where we, as a people, are drifting. The protests and laws against trusts—laws, forsooth, by legislators who are largely the promoters and controllers of the said trusts—even if they were sincere, are as impotent to stop business men from co-operating to do a certain thing for gain, as are the acts of a crowd of children trying to sink a monitor by blowing paper pellets, through a glass tube, against its iron sides. Trusts are a fact. They are the certain steps toward assured Socialism. There is no escape from this end. Trusts are the results of competition, yet with their life competition dies. They attract into their co-operative union, by the assurance of big gain, little work and no risk, or they crush out of existence, all firms, companies, and syndicates which buy and sell the thing or things they deal in; and in this way, they substitute exclusive control for competition. By association and discipline business men are enabled to carry out their purpose, be that purpose good or bad. "Reformers" might learn a lesson from trusts and their management, did they stop long enough from their mad ravings to watch and study. Trusts will finally compel the people to organise for self-preservation, whether they are Socialists or not. The big-brained business men in these big trusts do not wish to know that they are Socialists, and that they, more than any other persons, are forcing upon the people a co-operative commonwealth. That does not matter. Their selfishness is hastening the overthrow of competition as a ruling force in society, as surely as the selfishness of the Southern planter hastened the overthrow of chattel slavery. To the barbarians, electricity is an element of destruction and awe. By thought and method, electricity is controlled, and it becomes a force wonderful, varied and beautiful in its uses. We will yet see that the selfishness in man is a hidden force which, in spite of itself, will give "the open sesame" to the era of inter-dependence in all the affairs of mankind; for, as soon as all the railroads get as thoroughly under one man's control as the telegraph lines now are, and every staple of food, and all the lands are as absolutely managed by trusts as our expressage and money are by companies, then integral co-operation will become a necessity, and big business men will be forced to see that there is more profit, more leisure, more individuality, more liberty, and more pleasure to be had through a plan for construction, systematized and perfected, rather than in trying to advance to a place of safety by methods of "wreckage" and destruction. . . .

Before leaving trusts and their importance as a means to force society to incorporate for self-preservation, I wish to call attention to the fact that every invention, every practical application in chemistry, every rich deposit of natural wealth, and every improvement in machinery, will be, from this time forth, bought up and monopolized by trusts; hence, the inventions and discoveries of our people, instead of being a direct benefit to the masses, will be the certain means of crushing them still further into a state of abject dependency. An army which permits the enemy to capture all its cannon and ammunition is not so helpless as the . . . producers are now, with every product of their skill, thought, and toil immediately seized to empower the few to crush the many. Think of this, friends, and see if there is not an absolute necessity for us to incorporate and to work for self-protection.

ALBERT K. OWEN

in 'Remarks to the Subscribers of the Credit Foncier Company.'

THAT RED REBEL, MILTON!—Of freedom, the main end of government, which if the greater part value not, but will degenerately forego, is it just or reasonable, that most voices against the main end of government should enslave the less number that would be free? More just it is, doubtless, if it come to force, that a less number compel a greater to retain, which can be no wrong to them, their liberty, than that a greater number, for the pleasure of their baseness, compel a less, most injuriously, to be their fellow-slaves. They who seek nothing but their own just liberty, have always the right to win it and to keep it, whenever they have power, be the voices never so numerous that oppose it.—Milton.

SOME GREETINGS.

At the meeting in South Place Chapel, on Saturday, March 16th, in Celebration of the Anniversary of the Commune of Paris, the following interesting messages and letters were read from various bodies and comrades in this country and on the Continent:—

DUBLIN SOCIALIST CLUB.

"Irish comrades join in honouring the memory of the martyred dead, and in working for the realisation of the ideals of 1789 and 1871. Vive la Commune!"

SOCIALIST LEAGUE, GLASGOW.

"Greetings! Hurrah for the Revolution! The red flag will yet wave over Edinburgh Castle, and the march of the workers be heard on the mountains of Lochaber!"

SOCIALIST LEAGUE, NORWICH.

"Revolutionary greetings! We trust you are having a successful meeting, and are certain that the worker's emancipation is near at hand. Vive la Revolution Sociale!"

MANCHESTER INTERNATIONAL WORKMEN'S SOCIETY.

"Greetings from Manchester International Workmen's Society. Vive la Commune! Vive la Revolution Sociale!"

THE LEAGUE OF POPULAR INSTRUCTION, VERVIERS, BELGIUM.

"The League of Popular Instruction fully sympathises with you in your Celebration of the Anniversary of the Paris Commune! Please accept the most cordial expression of our sympathy and international solidarity.

"By order of the League, "PIERRE FLUSE."

THE SOCIAL DEMOCRACY OF DENMARK.

"Fraternal greetings from the Danish Socialists to the English worker's meeting to celebrate the Anniversary of the Commune of Paris. The heroic fight of the Commune has awakened the oppressed to a consciousness of their rights. A cheer for Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity.

"The General Council of the Danish Social Democracy,
"KNUDSEN, HÖRDUM, HOLM, WUNBLAD, MEYER, HOLDT, MÖLLER,
"OLSEN, ANDERSEN, HURUP, JENSEN, and BERG."

THE SOCIALISTS OF HOLLAND.

"We are with you in celebrating the Anniversary of the Commune of Paris. The Socialists of the whole world are united on the 18th of March; then it is the memory of a triumph. Alas! it endured too short a time! But the blood of our martyrs was and is the seed of the church of the future, wherein there is a place for every one at the dinner of life. The past may tell us how to hold our own triumphantly, after having broken the chains of the slavery which Capitalism has caused.

"One for all and all for one, that shall be our sign, the sign of triumph. This century must not disappear before this triumph is obtained. When every one does his duty we must gain. Therefore, we shall not end our efforts before the aim is achieved for which our French brothers died in 1871—the Emancipation of Labour! Vive la Commune! Vive la République Internationale et Socialiste!
"In the name of your Dutch comrades,
"F. DOMELA NIEUWENHUIS."

THE CENTRAL REVOLUTIONARY COMMITTEE OF PARIS.

"In my own name and in that of the Central Revolutionary Committee, I send you the expression of our fraternal solidarity, on the occasion of this grand anniversary of the 18th of March, when you are celebrating in unison with us the first victory of the Parisian revolutionary proletariat,—so short a victory and so soon followed by its heroic defeat!—and when we pledge ourselves to avenge that defeat by the next victory of the international revolutionary proletariat.

"In England, as in France, as in all countries where the sufferings of the oppressed excite the popular wrath, where Socialist action and Socialist propaganda are making a breach in the power and privileges of the capitalist class, everywhere in fact where the oppressed, the miserable, and the discontented struggle for their emancipation, for political freedom, and social equality, the Commune erelong shall have its revenge and the Revolution its triumph.

"To you all, friends and Socialists of England, and to you all, who in this struggle against reaction and capitalism, against all bourgeois parties, never yielding, never giving in, are decided to march on without rest or truce until our victory is gained, to you all, in my friends and in my own name, Salut et fraternité!
"ED. VAILLANT,"
(Ex-Member of the Commune.)

THE POLISH SOCIALISTS OF THE SOCIETY "SOLIDARNOSE," AND THE PAPERS 'WALKI KLAS' (THE CLASS WAR), AND 'PRZESDZWIT' (DAWN).

"On this day of glorious commemoration, we join with you in celebrating that memorable event, the Proclamation of the Commune.

"When, after a dreadful war, the people of Paris raised the standard of social readjustment, they proved themselves the indomitable champions of International Revolution; and the fall of the Commune became a disaster for the entire world.

"Nowadays, when the revolutionary party has reformed its battalions in France, when, thanks to your valiant efforts, Socialism rapidly develops itself all over England, and that even among us, in the Slavonic countries, the struggle for emancipation becomes more and more ardent, we may hope that a new Commune shall no longer be beaten by Reaction. On the contrary, upheld by the combined efforts of all peoples, it will be the prologue of the decisive emancipation of the proletariat.

"Vive la République Universelle! Vive la Revolution Sociale!
"For the Polish Socialists,
"STEPHAN LEONOWICZ."

THE PARISIAN AGGLOMERATION OF THE FRENCH SOCIALISTS, AND THE ORGANISING COMMITTEE OF THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS.

"We shall celebrate at the very same hour as you the International Commemoration of the Paris Commune, which shone out on the proletariat of all the world as the sun of hope.

"We send our fraternal greetings to the brave comrades who, taking again in their hands the glorious Chartist movement, struggle with so much energy, and with so much perseverance prepare the proletariat of England for the coming 18th of March of the International Revolution.

"We invite you at the same time to take part in the International Congress which the Socialist Revolutionary Party and the Chambres Syndicales of France are preparing for the 14th of July next.

"Vive la Révolution Internationale!"

PAUL LAFARGUE.

THE POLISH SOCIALISTS OF THE GROUP "POBUDKA."

"Citizens,—We join heartily with you in your demonstration to celebrate the anniversary of the Paris Commune.

"To the same extent that the proclamation of the Commune has been the dawning hope for the bettering of the lot of humanity, so much also its fall has been felt as the greatest misfortune that has happened up to the present time.

"The defeat of the Commune in the humiliating treaty of Frankfurt, the enslavement of Alsace and Lorraine for long years to come, the germ of international hatred which paralyses our propaganda for the universal solidarity of all workers; in the disastrous bourgeois republic of France, and the growth of German despotism; it has caused the armed peace, the expenses of which fall on the masses of starving proletarians; and more than all that, it has been followed by the monstrous Franco-Russian alliance, the degradation of all Republican ideals.

"Comrades, Europe makes great strides towards the Revolution. Following the example of their predecessors who struggled for the social and political development of all countries, who fought and perished for the Commune, the Polish revolutionaries will be always found on the spot where the blood of the oppressed flows, shed by the fratricide hand of tyranny. Vive la Revolution Sociale! Vive la Fraternité des peuples! and greetings to all comrades.

"POLANOWSKI."

THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE SOCIALIST SOCIETIES OF GHENT, BELGIUM.

"Dear Comrades,—I have been asked to write you a few lines to be read at your manifestation in honour of the Commune of Paris, which I undertake to do, though I feel that I have not the talent necessary for so great a task.

"Can one imagine any nobler tribute to the Commune of Paris than the imposing spectacle of these popular demonstrations which are held at this time throughout the whole world in honour of the Commune? Do not they clearly show that Paris, whilst fighting for its own emancipation, for its right of self-government in reactionary France, was working at the same time for the emancipation of the workers of the whole world?

"On the 18th March we celebrate the glorious event of the proclamation of the Commune with enthusiasm and with hope in the future; and during the bloody week of May we shall shed tears of rage and sorrow over the massacre of so many thousands of victims, over the infamous deeds of the reactionaries.

"We have lived, fought, and suffered with Paris, as to-day we join the fight of the great city and hope with her hopes. But do not, comrades, let to-day's fête make us forget the duties of to-morrow. The union of the forces of Labour should be the rallying cry to attain not only the autonomy of a single city, but the triumph of the Proletariat and the reign of Equality.

"To work, comrades! Do not let the 18th March be only the anniversary of the Commune, but a festival in which the people fraternise, preparing themselves to rally round the same flag and to fight for the same principles.—Fraternal greetings, E. ANSELE."

FROM WILLIAM MORRIS.

"Hammersmith, March 16th, 1889, 3 p.m.

"To the Chairman of the Meeting, Commune Celebration.

"Dear Comrade,—I find, to my extreme vexation and disappointment, that I am unable to leave the house this afternoon, being still lame with rheumatism and gout. I should be obliged if you would excuse me to the assembled comrades.

"I need hardly say that I wish the greatest success to the meeting. The efforts of Socialist propaganda during the last few years have had their effect, which is obvious not only in the organisations of men and women definitely professing Socialism, but also on the whole of society: so that it cannot be doubted that there are vast numbers of persons who are preparing for Socialism, and who at the next crisis will be forced into our ranks. Meantime, in this country at least the masters of society are showing their uneasiness in other ways than the familiar one of mere brutal repression, though they are ready for as much of that as they may think necessary. Many schemes are on foot for removing the discontent which our masters are beginning to feel as a burden on them and a threat also; between the preaching of thrift to day-labourers, and the making the world happy by the aggregation of all fiscal burdens into the single tax; from the Charity Organisation Society to Mr. Henry George,—there are many and many idiotic evasions on foot; all of which have for their basis the improvement of the condition of the poor, at their own expense, for the peace and happiness of their masters.

"While the middle classes are beginning to admit the horror of the miserable life of poverty, they refuse to admit the idiocy of the system that causes it. Make the working classes happy—well and good! But are we to pay for it? Now it seems to me that the Commune of Paris was prepared to answer this question with a simple Yes, and that that is the reason why to-day we once more celebrate their defeat as the herald of the victory which is to be, and as a preparation for it. If there were any amongst the defenders of the Commune who did not understand that its ultimate aim, its reason for existence, was the abolition of class society, its enemies at least understood it well—and wrote their endorsement in the blood of 30,000 men slain after their foul and useless victory.

"I say this is why we celebrate year by year the heroic attempt of the Commune of Paris to lay the foundations of a new society. It is because we are engaged in the same struggle; and it is our special business amidst all the chatter and self-gratulation caused by the kind of schemes I have mentioned, to point out to the workers now awakening to a consciousness of their position that masters and slaves cannot be friends, that of necessity what one gains the other loses; that the only ground on which the workers can meet their masters is that on which the latter shall cast down their privilege of mastership; and that no master-class can be persuaded into this, but must be forced into it, either by the threat of force, or, if it must be, by its action; finally, that the workers must prepare this force by learning to understand their position, and by organising themselves into an irresistible power. This every Socialist must do his utmost to forward conscientiously, or he need hardly call himself a Socialist, since he really falls back into the ranks of those who have not learned the principles of action as he has, and who, being ignorant, can only wait for the impulsion of that force, which it is the Socialists' business to help to fashion for the realisation of the Society of Equality.

"With fraternal greetings to all comrades, and with expression of satisfaction that the S. D. F. and the S. L. are again holding this important celebration in common, I am yours,
WILLIAM MORRIS.

Inspector Forster's anxiety to guard South Place Chapel during the Commune Celebration, on Saturday, with a strong force of his biggest boys in blue, has been a godsend to the illegal robbers, who managed two or three very successful hauls in the neighbourhood of Long Lane and Queen's Square. Needless to say, no one has been caught.—F. K.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors.

Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. B. G.—Will be used.

H. DAVIS.—Crowded out; will be used next week.

CONTENTS.

		PAGE.
Notes on News	MORRIS & McLEAN	89
Trusts	ALBERT K. OWEN	90
Some Greetings		91
The Commune Celebration at South Place Institute		92
Correspondence		93
The Jewish Parade and Law-'n'-Order	F. KITZ	93
To Manchester Friends		93
Revolutionary Calendar—William Skirving	H. HALLIDAY SPARLING	93
The Labour Struggle		94
Why are Thousands Born to Perish?	JOHN BEDFORD LENO	94
Socrates and Sweating		94
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings		95
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.		96

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday March 20.

ENGLAND	WORKMEN'S ADVOCATE	BELGIUM
Die Autonomie	Boston—Woman's Journal	Ghent—Vooruit
Justice	Investigator	SWITZERLAND
Labour Elector	Chicago—Knights of Labor	Arbeiterstimme
London—Freie Presse	Baecker Zeitung	SPAIN
Norwich—Daylight	Vorbote	Madrid—El Socialista
Postal Service Gazette	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	Barcelona—El Productor
Railway Review	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Cadiz—El Socialismo
Sozial Demokrat	Port Angeles—Commonwealth	GERMANY
Worker's Friend	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung	Berlin—Volks Tribune
NEW SOUTH WALES	St. Louis (Mo.)—Die Parole	AUSTRIA
Hamilton—Radical	FRANCE	Brunn—Volksfreund
INDIA	Paris—L'egalite (daily)	HUNGARY
Bankipore—Behar Herald	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik
UNITED STATES	Le Proletariat	SWEDEN
New York—Der Sozialist	La Revolté	Malmo—Arbetet
Freiheit	L'Attaque	Stockholm, Social-Demokraten
Truthseeker	Le Pere Peinard	WEST INDIES
Volkszeitung	HOLLAND	Cuba—El Productor
Jewish Volkszeitung	Hague—Recht voor Allen
The Truth

THE COMMUNE OF PARIS.

CELEBRATION AT SOUTH PLACE INSTITUTE ON SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1889.

From year to year these meetings grow in importance and enthusiasm. Last Saturday, the Hall of South Place was packed beyond the doors; every gangway was full, and it was barely possible to move about in any direction. Before 8 o'clock the seats were already more than full, and late comers had to stand where they could.

The proceedings opened with the singing of "When the People have their Own Again" by the Socialist League choir. This was followed by the reading of telegrams and letters received from comrades in the provinces and abroad; these are given in another page.

H. M. Hyndman (chairman) said that this year we should not only think of the event, the anniversary of which we had met to celebrate, but also of that other, the centenary of which would soon be here. As the one was to the political revolution which led to the emancipation of the bourgeois from obsolete class-laws and oppressive restrictions, so was the other to the Social Revolution which should free the proletariat, and should not only amend but end class-society altogether. It was especially our part to learn from the past; the failures that had been must prepare us for the successes to be. On this one night of the year when we met in absolute accord, with all divergence of ideas and difference of methods forgotten or laid aside, we should promise to resolutely discipline ourselves to be ready for all the dangers and difficulties of the struggle in which we were engaged.

Frank Kitz (S.L.) moved the following resolution:—

"That this meeting hopefully recalls the establishment of the Commune of Paris, and expresses its sympathy with the French workers who heroically struggled to abolish class rule, and the cruel capitalist exploitation of man by man; and looks forward with confidence to the early emancipation of labour for which they strove, being determined to employ all means to achieve that end."

He said that he came fresh from a new police outrage upon innocent and unarmed men; used the occurrence to point the moral that passive endurance could not last for ever, that constant successive attacks would at length wear out the patience of the people, who would show their resentment by means that would make the game unprofitable for those who began it. The revolt of Paris was provoked by an invasion of popular right, and from like causes like events would spring. Behind the baton of the policeman was the venal lying of the press, which represented all these things as the outcome of foreign influence. Well! it was true, and we were proud of it, that in us the prejudices had perished which made men hate one another because they were born in different parts of the world. Ours was the really catholic religion that rose above all boundaries, and united all men as brethren. Even the despised "criminal" was recognised by us as a product of the system we fought with, and a rebel against its law. We should open all prisons and cast down all barriers; but that was not enough, we must untiringly educate ourselves and our fellows, that reaction should not be, as always hitherto, the fruit of popular ignorance.

H. Quelch (S.D.F.), in seconding the resolution, said that Paris eighteen years ago seized on power so that she might raise the oppressed of all peoples. This was why the privileged of all peoples joined in exulting over her defeat. He asked what we had done hitherto to follow her example? It was our duty to find and eliminate the causes of her failure and our own; the time was pressing. English workmen were waking up, and adopting our "wild and visionary" schemes. Up to the present they had been "virtuous" for their masters' benefit; the time had come for them to be a little "vicious" for their own, and to get their masters to become "virtuous" on their own account.

A. S. Headingley (S.D.F.) supported the resolution as one who had taken part in the Commune. He described some things which took place under his own eyes while engaged in ambulance duty. How the Versailles fired on the red-cross flag of the Geneva Convention; how they fired on little children going to school. The bestial ferocity shown in the attack on Paris and after its fall had never been surpassed. The murder of Florens, and the behaviour of Boulanger's troops showed what the temper of the attack was from the beginning. It must not be forgotten that it was an attack, and that Paris fought in self-defence. Looking back on Paris he could not help thinking that next time the people anywhere had to defend themselves, they would think of the treachery and brutal vengeance of the bourgeois, and would fight with less tenderness and more energy.

Peter Kropotkin (Freedom Group) drew attention to this being the eighteenth anniversary of the Commune, and said that since '89 no government in France had lasted more than eighteen or nineteen years. It was almost certain that the government of rascals that now cursed France would have to follow the precedent, and give way to something else. Whatever that was, it would not be parliamentaryism, of which the people was thoroughly tired, not merely of this one government. Events were ripening fast, and who could tell when the Commune should revive itself, this time for ever? The revolution would concern itself with no parties, and he thought that the people would rely less on authority and more "on their own fist." He cited the testimony of Zola, among others, that the present system was tottering to its fall, and urged the workers to note the change which is taking place, and to prepare themselves at a thousand centres; to do the work that lies near to their own hand, and to take that which was requisite for the satisfaction of their own needs. All work, all preaching, will influence the movement; the propaganda must be concentrated nowhere, but spread everywhere. Then the next Commune could not be isolated, and its foes would find no standing ground, the flames would burst up everywhere under their feet, and the international proletariat would free itself.

At this point a collection was taken up to defray the expenses of the meeting, and realised £8 6s. 6d.

The Carmagnole was sung by G. Brocher (S.L.), the audience joining heartily in the chorus.

John Burns (S.D.F.) said that this audience, large and enthusiastic as it was, was no gauge of the spread of our ideas. It was not by the count of heads there or anywhere else that it could be judged. He instanced a municipal committee he had that day taken part in; formerly such an occasion would have been one of almost unrestrained enjoyment; this time it had been, apart from the actual work done, mainly occupied in discussing the Commune, its aims and methods. The reaction was quicker than we to see what was coming and how close it was: hence the employment of methods with which we were all familiar. We must untiringly continue to incite and stimulate the workers of the world to follow the example of Paris, and endeavour to realise our ideals in the actuality of daily life.

H. H. Sparling (S.L.) said that we heard now a good deal about the "chawbacons" who made up the bulk of our metropolitan police, as we had heard before of the "brutal rurals" who did so obediently the murderous work to which they set in Paris. It was not enough to defend ourselves where we were attacked; let us carry the war into the ranks of the enemy, by spreading the "poison" of our opinions in the villages, and so cut off the supply of ignorant recruits. Much the same thing applied to the reptile press, and the poor devils compelled to prostitute their pens for daily bread. In this case it was at the readers we must aim. Create a demand for Socialism among the readers, and the supply of that, as of anything else, would be forthcoming. Everywhere, in season and out of season, we must work. It is not enough to "celebrate" once a-year, or even to subscribe now and then; each must work always, counting no act too small, no sacrifice too great.

R. B. Cunninghame Graham, M.P., said that it had been well said that the government of the Commune rose with virtue in the morning and retired with virtue at night. Our government, and every bourgeois government, rose with humbug in the morning, retired with humbug at night, and kept humbug in sight all day. He valued the Commune for the noble example it set for us and all the world; he valued its annual celebration because it brought us all together, and did us incalculable good by that one thing alone. It was for us to take to heart its example and precept, and do our best to carry them into practice. Let us not stone another because he differs with us in method, but do our duty as we saw it, leaving others to do theirs.

The resolution was then put and carried, with one dissident. The meeting then rose to its feet, and, standing uncovered and silent for a few moments in memory of the dead, burst into three rousing cheers for the Social Revolution.

"All for the Cause" was sung by the S.L. Choir, and the "Marseillaise" by the whole audience, and the meeting broke up and dispersed quietly.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOMERS TOWN INSTITUTE LITERARY & DEBATING SOCIETY.

I have the pleasure to inform you that the following resolution was passed after one month's discussion by a majority of 5:—"That this meeting is of opinion that Socialism is the only thing that can benefit the working-classes, and urges upon the Government the necessity of starting relief works to meet the demands of the unemployed of this great metropolis."—Sir, I remain, yours in earnest,
G. H. THOMAS.

77, Euston Road, March 11, 1889.

THE JEWISH PARADE AND LAW-'N'-ORDER.

THE International Working Men's Club, Berner Street, arranged a parade of unemployed and sweaters' victims on Saturday, March 16th, and proposed visiting the Synagogue and engaging the attention of Dr. Hermann Adler and his congregation of well-fed choshens. Adler may entertain a belief that all will meet on an equality hereafter in a better land, but he and his clientele are determined to postpone that meeting until the sweet by-and-bye; so respectable, orthodox Judaism called in the aid of Christian defenders of law and order, in the persons of City and Metropolitan police, to keep them from contact with the victims of their greed. The ruffians of the Metropolitan police, aided by a number of spies and roughs, got up a row outside the Club by encouraging boys to stone the members. One, getting an ugly cut, naturally retaliated; the police thereupon forced their way into the Club, kicking the steward, and a brave inspector knocked Mrs. Diemsheitz down and kicked her so as to lame her, using meanwhile the most horrible oaths. Several comrades were arrested on the pretence of having assaulted these wretches, and when in the police-station, a detective seized a poker and beat Diemsheitz about the head with it. When bail was procured, every obstacle was thrown in the way of the men's release. The bail were warned that it was a serious case, and told elegantly not to be fools, and waste their money on a lot of foreigners. Some who tried to see the prisoners were knocked down on the police-station steps, and generally the whole affair was a lesson in law-'n'-order. Bearing in mind the outrages committed by the police at the International Club, Stephen's Mews, a few years back, resulting in one death and many life-long injuries, and seeing every chance of a repetition of that scene when night fell, the police were warned that a defence would be made if any such tactics were resorted to. Preparations were duly made for the defence of the club during the night, but, apparently as the result of the warning, no attempt was made, and the police bullies carefully avoided the neighbourhood. It would be well for all concerned to take note that there is not the slightest intention on the part either of English or foreign Socialists to allow such police outrages to be perpetrated without risk to the perpetrators in future.

F. KITZ.

TO MANCHESTER FRIENDS.

ALL comrades in and around Manchester desiring to see the cause of Socialism pushed forward, and willing to help in spreading the Commonweal, leaflets, pamphlets, and other revolutionary literature, or assisting in a paste-pot brigade, are asked to meet comrade W. Wess on Thursday night, at the International Working-men's Club, 122, Corporation Street, corner of Hanover Street; or to communicate with him at 31, Brompton Street, Cheetham, Manchester. Those sympathisers who cannot take the risk of doing active work, can greatly assist by subscribing, through the secretary of the Socialist League, towards leaflet distribution fund, of which there is a great lack here.

Eds.

The object of life is to be happy, the place to be happy is here, the time to be happy is now, and the way to be happy is to make others happy.—Colonel Ingersoll.

Gabriel Dumont, who was Louis Riel's lieutenant during the Canadian half-breed rebellion, has been pardoned by the Canadian Government. He is on his way back to his tribe mates.

There is no truth—shall we say no honour?—in public life. Men seem to seek Parliamentary honours in the pursuit of their personal ambition. If the cause they were elected to serve can be advanced in conjunction with their own interests, they will aid it; if it cannot, it must go to the wall. Public life is all a struggle for personal distinction, and in the struggle principle is at a discount.—Reynolds.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING MARCH 30, 1889.

24	Sun.	1794. Hébart and Anacharsis Clootz guillotined. 1871. The Commune proclaimed at Toulouse and Narbonne, and red flag hoisted at Marseilles.
25	Mon.	1812. Alexander Herzen born. 1879. Attempted execution of General Drenteln, chief of gendarmes at St. Petersburg, by Mirsky.
26	Tues.	1848. Insurrection at Madrid. 1869. Memorial meeting for Ernest Jones in Trafalgar Square. 1871. Election of the Commune at Paris.
27	Wed.	1820. Trial ends of Hunt and others for their conduct at Peterloo. 1875. Edgar Quinet died.
28	Thur.	1757. Damiens executed. 1833. Twelve members of the "Irish Patriotic Brotherhood" sentenced—ten of them to ten years, and the others to seven and five years each—"for conspiring to overthrow the Queen's authority in Ireland and to murder various owners of land." 1884. Socialist Congress at Roubaix, France.
29	Fri.	1855. Giovanni Dianori attempts life of Napoleon III. 1872. Agricultural Labourers' Union formed. 1875. John Martin died. 1879. Lock-out at Pimlico army-clothing factory. 1884. Riots at Cincinnati. 1887. Attempt on Alexander III. by an officer.
30	Sat.	1135. Maimonides born. 1870. Negro Suffrage in the United States. 1881. Arrest of John Most and committal for trial; seizure of Freiheit plant, etc. 1882. Execution of procurator Strielnikoff in Odessa by Khalturin and Jevlakoff, by order of the Executive Committee, for cruel and treacherous treatment of political prisoners.

William Skirving.—Born at Liberton, near Edinburgh, about 1750; died March 19, 1796. Son of a farmer, he was educated for the Burgher Secession Church. After finishing his course at Edinburgh University, he studied divinity under the celebrated Professor John Brown of Haddington. He, however, gave up his intention toward the ministry—which was probably less due all along to his own desires than to the wish of his, like that of every well-conducted Scotch family, to see their son "wag his paw in a pulpit"—and became a tutor in the family of Sir Alexander Dick of Prestonfield. Tutoring, however, was evidently not his line, and he ultimately settled as a farmer in Kinross-shire, and married a Miss Alexander of Kirkcaldy, with whom he obtained the small estate of Strathruddie in Fifeshire, which afterwards furnished him with a nickname. He was very fond of agriculture, of which he made a special study, and on which he published "The Husbandman's Assistant," and other treatises; he even stood, very nearly with success, for the Chair of Agriculture in Edinburgh University.

His studies and publications brought him to Edinburgh in 1792, where he enrolled himself among the Friends of the People, soon becoming secretary (unpaid) to their General Association. The first convention met in December 1792, Skirving acting as secretary. So also he did to the second, which assembled in May 1793. The policy of the Pitt administration was now in full swing, and it was highly dangerous to utter anywhere a liberal sentiment, political or social. Skirving knew his conduct to be narrowly watched, and that his prominent position among the Friends of the People could not fail sooner or later to place him in the hands of the authorities, and he was not surprised, therefore, that the first pretext was taken for his arrest. In July a General Meeting was held at the Berean Meeting-house, Dundee, at which an address was adopted, of which Skirving did not approve, although, as he said afterwards, it was "merely the strong effusion of honest hearts, alarmed by the measures of those in administration, judging the constitution in the utmost danger, and catching at the first ground of alarm which presented themselves to their view." It was printed and issued, judged to be "seditious and inflammatory," he was thrown into prison, his house searched and his papers seized. Muir and Fyshe Palmer followed, but were tried first: Muir on August 30 was transported for fourteen years, and Palmer on September 13 for seven. Skirving, meanwhile, let out on very heavy bail, continued to discharge his duties as secretary, and in that capacity signed an outspoken address adopted by the General Convention at Edinburgh in October (Oct. 29—Nov. 6), which said that "this society is determined to adhere to the original principles of its institution." On the 19th November the General Convention again met, at Convention Hall (Mason's Lodge), Blackfriars Wynd. At the fifth day's sitting (Nov. 23) the name of the Convention was changed to "the British Convention of the Delegates of the People, associated to obtain Universal Suffrage and Annual Parliaments"; the vote was unanimous, the delegates rising and clasping hands as they gave it. A few days afterwards, the Convention was addressed by Butler and Rowan, as delegates from the United Irishmen. In following Butler, Gerrald used words that remain true to-day as then: "As soon as the alarm-bell was rung, the Opposition joined the Ministers. Party is ever a bird of prey, and the people its banquet." On Thursday December 5, the Lord Provost and magistrates of the city broke in upon and dispersed the Convention. Skirving, who was present at the meeting, thought this only applied to the British Convention, and tried to revive the old "General" Convention. To that end they repaired the same evening to a house in Flesh-Market Close, at the head of the Canongate, outside the jurisdiction of the city magistrates, and there held a meeting and appointed a committee to "report, with all convenient speed, on the means to be adopted for making a spirited resentment of the illegal proceedings of this day." Next morning (6th) they met in a loft or workshop in Lady Lawson's Yard, on the south side of the Crosscauseway, but were speedily dispersed by the Sheriff-Substitute of the county, who came with a large force of constables, etc. Another attempt was made by Skirving, who called a meeting, by advertisement in the Edinburgh Gazetteer, for the 10th, at a house belonging to him, formerly called the Cockpit, in or near the Grassmarket. But the house was taken possession of by the Town Guard, himself arrested, and his papers again seized. Kept in prison for some weeks, and let out for another while on heavy bail, he was brought to trial January 6, 1794. The "trial" lasted two days, and ended in a verdict of fourteen years' transportation—a foregone conclusion, ordered from London, as in Gerrald's case. On May 1, 1794, he sailed in the "Surprise" from St. Helen's, and reached Port Jackson on October 25. Here he took a farm, which he called New Strathruddie, and settled down to his old pursuit; but the hardships he met with, together with those endured in the living hell of the convict-ship, were too much for him. He was attacked by dysentery, and left his farm to obtain medical assistance; but rather than alarm his friends, he delayed proper care too long, and the attack proved fatal. He was emphatically what his friends called him, "A tried patriot and an honest man." Not brilliant and widely read, like Muir and Gerrald, but of good natural parts, sound sense, unflinching courage, and unblemished integrity.—S.

If not any man of a million has a right to govern me, then the million men have no right to govern me. A millions times nothing is only nothing.—W. H. R.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

All the boilermakers and shipbuilders on the Clyde, except one Dumbarton firm, have joined the Clyde Employers' Association.

The Bessemer departments of the Barrow Steel Company struck on the 11th of March for an advance in wages. They resumed work on the 13th, pending an arbitration.

The caulkers at Caird and Co.'s, Greenock, have struck for an advance, and the fitter's helpers at Russell and Co.'s also come out for an increase of halfpenny per hour. The latter demand has been satisfactorily met.

DUNFERMLINE MILLWORKERS.—The strike for an advance of 10 per cent., or better yarn, still continues. Crowded meetings of the girls on strike are held daily, and some piggy friends of the girls are dissatisfied because they listen to addresses from the Socialists.

BELFAST MILLWORKERS.—A strike for an advance in wages originated in York Street Mills on the 11th of March. This is the largest spinning mill in the country, and 2,500 persons are affected. The movement spread rapidly to the other mills, and on the 13th of March 3,000 hands were out of employment.

RAILWAYMEN.—Shunters at Crewe (L.N.W.R.) get 25s. for 72 hours a week, and they have 3s. 2d. a month stopped for "clubs." On the Hull and Hornsea branches of the N.E.R., there are signalmen employed at 12s., 13s., and 14s. a-week. The other week a Midland carter received 2s. 5d. for 12 hours overtime, and last Christmas the G.W.R. porters at Paddington for 12 hours overtime got 1s. 11d.!

Messrs. Merry and Cuninghame, coalmasters, were summoned before the Kilmarnock Sheriff Court, last week, for payment of some unpaid wages which arose from the pithead-man deducting, as tare, 2½ cwt. from tubs which only weighed 2¼ cwt. The case was settled out of court. This appears to be the same firm that we had to comment severely upon in this column at the close of 1887 for importing Poles into their steel works at Glengarnock.

TINPLATE TRADE.—Much excitement is created in tinplate circles throughout Wales by a proposal on the part of tinplate consumers in America to buy up all the Welsh tinplate works. The price mentioned is £5,000 for each mill. The alleged principal object of the scheme is to do away with the middleman, who, it is said, at present derive the most profit from the trade. The advantage expected from the formation of the "tinplate ring" is that the market and the production would be completely controlled, and prices regulated in accordance with the ideas of the producer rather than of the consumer.

HOLMES STRIKE.—The strike at Holmes still continues. Warrants have been issued to remove the men out of employer's houses. The works employ 150 miners, and about 25 "scabs" have been got to work. All the Mineral Oil Companies have agreed to combine and assist the Holmes Company to defeat their workers, either by contributing supplies of shale or by a money payment in proportion to the output. At a meeting of the men on March 13th, Mr. Wilson, the union secretary, said he did not mean to abide by the conditions imposed upon him when liberated from jail, as he found them illegal. He advised the men to go out and picket. It was agreed to make provision for the coming evictions.

GLASGOW TRADES COUNCIL.—At a meeting on March 13th the delegate of the tobacco-pipe trade stated that their association had greatly increased its membership since the new year in Glasgow and throughout Scotland generally, and that in Glasgow a demand made for improved wages had been conceded. It was also reported that the engineers had on Saturday asked for a rise of ¼d. per hour, and that they had received several favourable replies. On the motion of our comrade T. Burgoyne a resolution was unanimously carried thanking Messrs. Cunningham Graham and Conybeare for "the noble action taken by them in advocating the rights of labour in the Commons on the evening of 6th March,"—apparently treating with contempt the silence of their "labour representatives," or the speech that was worse than silence of Master Charles Fenwick, M.P.

MINERS' CONFERENCE.—A conference of miners' delegates from all parts of the country will be held at Birmingham on 26th March, when the principal business will be "to consider the advisability or otherwise of asking and demanding another advance in wages of 10 per cent." In October last a conference of the miners of Lancashire, Yorkshire, Staffordshire, Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, and North Wales, was held in Manchester, and as a result an advance of 10 per cent. in wages was secured, and in other parts of the kingdom increases in some cases of more than 10 per cent. were obtained. Now that the price of coal has been advanced, it is desired to ascertain the feeling of the different districts as to an agitation for higher wages. Some communications have been made with the different districts by circular, and it is found there is a general disposition to seek the advance.

PLEASE TAKE NOTE!

How is it that the Commonweal does not publish more news from the Branches? Because the editor is not omniscient, and the local secretaries forget that he depends upon them for news. Hint: Let us know what you're doing.

How is it that not all that is sent is inserted? Because branch secretaries forget that the editor has less than a thousand hands, and often mix things so that it would mean entirely re-writing their letters before they could be of use. Hint: Keep reports separate from announcements, and news from both. Write briefly, plainly, and on one side of the paper.

SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—A Public Meeting, to further the objects of the above Society, will be held at Claremont Hall, Penton Street, Pentonville, N., on Tuesday March 26, at 8 p.m., to be addressed by Annie Besant, H. A. Barker, Herbert Burrows, W. A. Chambers, C. Graham, M.P., T. Shore, jun., and others.

UNITED RADICAL CLUB, Kay Street, Goldsmiths Row, Hackney Road.—A course of Four Lectures on "Socialism and Practical Politics," will be given by members of the Fabian Society, on Sunday evenings at 8.30 p.m. March 24th (Rev. S. D. Headlam in the chair), Sidney Webb, "The Failure of Radicalism." 21st, George Bernard Shaw, "The True Radical Policy." April 7th, Graham Wallas, "Practical Land Nationalisation." 14th, William Clarke, "Practical Socialism."

WHY ARE THOUSANDS BORN TO PERISH?

FROM 'KING LABOUR'S SONG BOOK.'

Why are thousands born to perish
For the want of daily bread,
When the earth is one broad table
With the richest luxuries spread?
Has humanity been fashioned
From a pure and baser clay;
That to feast 'mid mirth and plenty,
This to starve and pass away?

Who dare claim the unclimbed mountain,
With its scattered wealth around;
Or the rich and teeming valley,
Where abundance may be found?
There are none so blindly daring—
Lost to honour, lost to shame!
Then to God and earth and nature
Be the never-ending blame.

Yet beware whom thou art blaming;
Look around with steadfast eyes
On the countless wealth ungathered
From the rivers, earth, and skies!
Seek the cause among thy neighbours,
Let the truth be bravely told,
That humanity is worthless
To the heart enslaved by gold.

JOHN BEDFORD LENO.

SOCRATES AND SWEATING.

THE "Sweating Committee" has now issued a second Report, but we do not find, says the Pall Mall, that it supplies that little historical introduction upon the origin of the sweating system for which some of us fondly looked. Perhaps the Lords believe that the "sweating system" was a slow and gradual evolution; and indeed upon sound theoretic principles this ought to be the case. Historically, however, it is not the case. The sweating system sprang fully developed from the human brain—deliberately invented at one blow. And the inventor was—Socrates. If any man should doubt this, let him look up the passage in Xenophon's Memorabilia. He will there find how Aristarchus when he sat with Socrates was depressed and absent-minded. Well he might be, since (like others in later days) he could get no rents from his property, and had a numerous family looking to him for support. Socrates enquired the reason of his gloom, and Aristarchus explained that he was in great perplexity: "For since the city has been disturbed, many having fled to the Piræus, there have come together to me both sisters and nieces and cousins left behind, in such numbers that there are in the house fourteen who are free born; but we receive nothing from our land, for the enemies have possession of it, nor from our houses, for there has arisen a scarcity of inhabitants in the city; but no one buys our furniture, nor is it possible to borrow from any quarter." Socrates asked: "Concerning both garments of men and women, and vests and cloaks and mantles, do those with you know how to make none of these things?" "Nay, all of them, as I believe." Socrates then pointed out how these fourteen female relatives might be set down to make garments of men and women, and vests and cloaks and mantles, and how Aristarchus might dispose of these articles at a profit, and how he would in that case cease to look unlovingly upon his relatives, who would no longer be a burden to him, and they would cease to look unlovingly upon him as an unwilling protector. "By the gods," said Aristarchus, "you seem, Socrates, to me to speak so well that hitherto I did not permit myself to borrow money, knowing that when I had spent what I might have received, I should not be able to repay it, but now I seem to myself able to venture doing it for the means for the commencement of my undertakings." And so Aristarchus went home greatly comforted, and became the first sweater. His methods were precisely those of his nineteenth century successor, for as Xenophon explains, in regard to the workers, "they, labouring, did dine, and when they had finished their labours they supped; . . . and the women loved him as a guardian, and he loved them as useful to him. But in the end, coming to Socrates, he related to him with delight both these things, and that they blamed him alone in the house of eating, being idle." The case, we perceive, is complete and typical; the workshop is domestic, the meals are taken in the workshop, the trade is in ready-made clothing. We cannot but regret that Xenophon has left untold the further history of Aristarchus. Did he retire upon a competence, or did he enlarge his business? Did suitors beguile away from him those profitable ladies, his sisters and cousins and nieces? Was his example largely imitated, and did prices fall in consequence? All these questions are beyond the elucidation of any committee of enquiry; but one thing remains clear: Aristarchus, the Athenian, was the first sweater, and Socrates taught him the trade.

SO DIFFERENT HERE.—Indian agents who have had the opportunity to study the red man's domestic life say that neither male nor female are capable of feeling the sentiment of love. A buck marries to have a slave; a squaw to have a lodge. It is only amongst highly-civilised people, like our own bourgeois, that real love-matches take place.

NATURAL RIGHTS.—Man from his very nature is a gregarious animal; there is no instance in nature of savage solitary man; society is necessary for his preservation and the continuance of the human race; therefore no right can be properly termed a natural right, which is not also a social right; or, in other words, the rights of society are natural rights. If, therefore, any man, or class of men, claim privileges as natural rights, inconsistent with the well-being, and even existence of the society, or political state, of which he is a member, such claim is to be utterly rejected, as not being properly a claim of a natural right; or if of a natural right in a solitary state of nature (such a state being supposed to exist), certainly not a claim of right to be admitted by the society of which he is a member; because it tends directly to the destruction of the society, and all claim of presumed right must yield to the paramount claim of real social right, the preservation of the state.—Duigenan.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, April 1, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1889:—Clerkenwell, Leicester, Mitcham, and North London, to February.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Membership Cards can now be had by the Branches at 9d. per dozen from Central Office.

The Article, published in No. 152 of Weal, Dec. 8th, 1888, addressed to "Working Women and Girls," is now being issued by the Propagandist Committee in leaflet form for distribution, at 3s. 6d. per 1,000.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.
FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

CHILDREN'S PARTY.

Between 40 and 50 children sat down to an excellent tea on the 12th inst., at 13, Farringdon Road. Comrade Radford afterwards entertained the youngsters with a magic lantern; then followed games and a distribution of toys. Altogether both young and old spent an enjoyable evening, the party breaking up about 11 o'clock. List of subscriptions:—Cantwell (Propaganda Committee), 2s. 4d.; E. W., 2s.; S. B., 2s. 6d.; W. M., 2s. 6d.; J. A. Morris, 2s.; H. B. T., 2s.; R. C. S., 1s.; May Morris, 6s.; Mrs. Schack, 3s.; Mrs. Gostling, 2s. 6d.; M. J. Edwards, 1s. 6d.; W. H., 4s. 6d.; and Touzeau Parris, 2s. 6d. Total received, £1 14s. 4d. Doll received from Miss C. Hills. S. GROSER.

REPORTS.

LONDON OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.—Good meetings held at Leman and Philpot Streets last Sunday. All papers sold.—A good meeting was addressed at Victoria Park by Charles and Hicks on Sunday afternoon.—Good meeting on Sunday morning at Regent's Park; Mainwaring and Cores spoke. Fair sale of Weal, and 1s. 1d. collected.—At Hyde Park, comrade Furlong (S.D.F.), Mrs. Lahr, Culwick (S.D.F.), Mainwaring, Cantwell, McCormick, and J. Williams (S.D.F.) spoke to a very large meeting, which lasted 3 hours 20 minutes. Commonweal sold out, 'Chants' ditto, and a large quantity of pamphlets. Collected 4s.

BLOOMSBURY.—A packed meeting at Percy Hall listened on Sunday evening to Cunningham Graham on the "Condition of Chainmakers at Cradley." Interesting lecture; 7s. collected.

FULHAM.—Tuesday evening, back of Walham Green church, Crouch and Green spoke to a good audience. Sunday morning, Crouch had a good audience opposite Railway Station, and in the evening an excellent audience was addressed by Smith, Lynes, jun., and Groser.—S. B. G.

HAMMERSMITH.—A very good meeting held at Latimer Road on Sunday morning; speakers were Dean, Catterson Smith, Lynes, sen., Lynes, jun., and Maughan; choir also sang. 27 Commonweal sold. At Weltje Road at 7 p.m., a very good meeting; speakers were Bullock, Dean, Lynes, jun., Mordhurst, and Maughan; choir sang. Fair sale of Weal. At Kelmscott House, our comrade Beasley lectured on "The Nationalisation of Railways." Brisk discussion.—M.

ABERDEEN.—Large and enthusiastic meeting at Castle Street on Saturday night, addressed by Duncan and Leatham, while Aiken pushed literature vigorously. At indoor meeting, on 11th, Duncan read essay from Morris's "Hopes and Fears for Art."

GLASGOW.—On Sunday, at 2.30, we held a meeting on the Green, when Joe Burgoyne and Glasier spoke to a large crowd from the new stool made for the Branch by Tim Burgoyne. At 5.30, Pollock, Joe Burgoyne, and Glasier spoke at Paisley Road Toll. After the meeting was over, a smart-looking religious lady, dressed in silk, confided to the speakers that they were all of their father, the devil! At 7 o'clock, the same speakers spoke at St. George's Cross, much interest being manifested by a good audience in their exposition of Socialism. Commonweal sold out.

NORWICH.—Comrades Davis and Mrs. Schack arrived here on Saturday; enjoyable evening spent in Gordon Hall. On Sunday the Branch held a great demonstration in Market Place at 3 p.m., addressed by Poynts, who acted as chairman. The resolution was proposed by Darley and spoken to by Mrs. Schack, and carried with two dissentients. Good sale of papers, and good collection. Davis could not speak at this meeting, as he missed the train at Cantley, on his return from Yarmouth, and was compelled to tramp to Lingwood in order to catch the 5.28 train. Another meeting was, therefore, announced in Market Place for the evening. At 7.30 a good meeting was held, addressed by Poynts and Davis; good impression made. At Gordon Hall, at 8, addresses were delivered to an attentive audience by comrades Davis and Shack on the Paris Commune, assisted in a most able manner by comrade Houghton, who pointed out the usefulness of the Paris insurrection, and at the same time explained its errors. This meeting was commenced by singing "No Master." During the evening comrade Poynts rendered a recitation, and the meeting was brought to a close by singing the "Marseillaise."—H. DAVIS.

YARMOUTH.—Very successful meeting, Sunday morning, in celebration of the Paris Commune. Mrs. Schack and H. Davis gave good addresses, and were listened to with marked attention. Commonweal sold fairly well, and 5s. collected to defray expenses. In afternoon Reynolds and Ruffold held good meeting. On Monday night Reynolds lectured at Gorleston on "Why are the workers poor?" On Tuesday evening, at the "Three Fishes," North Howard Street, a paper was read by Reynolds on "What Socialism Teaches."—C. R.

IPSWICH PIONEER DEBATING CLASS.—Discussion took place on Sunday upon the Commune of Paris, opened by Thomas; slight opposition, which was easily answered. Creed proposed the resolution printed in Commonweal, which was seconded by Bishop, and caused a lively discussion. An amendment to it leaving out the first line, was defeated by two, and the motion was carried.—M. C.

CLUB AUTONOMIE, Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road, W.—A Commune Celebration was held on Sunday evening at the above club. Speeches were delivered in English, French, and German to an enthusiastic audience, the English speakers being Harragan, Withington, and Samuels.

DUBLIN.—The anniversary of the Commune was celebrated by the Dublin Socialist Club at the rooms, 16, Dawson Street, on Saturday, March 16th. There was a large attendance. Addresses were delivered by King, Conlon, Russell, O'Connor, and others.

COMMUNE CELEBRATION.—At Cooper's Hall, Commercial Road, E., on Monday, March 18th, a very successful celebration was held. The platform was decorated with red flags and mottoes in English and Hebrew. The speeches in Yiddish, German, and English were enthusiastically received. The East End branch of the Socialist League, International Working-men's Club, Morgenroethe Club, and Limehouse branch of S.D.F. co-operated.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Bloomsbury.—Percy Hall, Percy St., Tottenham Court Rd.—Sunday March 24, at 8.30, J. Hunter Watts, "Socialism."

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card, to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30. Lecture on Sunday March 24, at 8.30, H. Halliday Sparling, "Luxury Now; Necessity Then." Sun. 31st, Frank Kitz, A Lecture.

East London.—Cosmopolitan Club, 30 Charles Square, Hoxton. The next meeting of members will be held on Sunday March 24th, at 7.15 p.m. Members should turn up punctual; very important business.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend.

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday Mar. 24, at 8 p.m., a lecture by Touzeau Parris, "How we gain Knowledge." Thursday 28th, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 29th, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion on some point of interest in the propaganda. Sunday March 31st, Percival Chubb (Fabian Society), "Work and its Reward."

Hoxton.—Comrades desiring to help in the propaganda of the Socialist League in this locality are requested to send their names and addresses to H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary.

Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Carmouste (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.

Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street.

Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.

Galashiels (Scot Sect).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secretary.

Gallatown and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.—SPECIAL.—Peter Kropotkin will lecture on "The Problems of our Century," in the Waterloo Hall, on Sunday 24th, at 7 o'clock; Cunningham Graham will preside. Peter Kropotkin will meet members of the Branch on Sunday at 3 o'clock.

Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 9 a.m., comrades distributing Commonweal will meet in Gordon Hall; at 8 p.m., a lecture. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8, Discussion Class. Monday, Thursday and Friday, Gordon Hall open from 8 p.m.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Tuesdays at 8 p.m.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SATURDAY 23.
8 Mile-end Waste Cores, Hicks, and Mowbray.

SUNDAY 24.

11.30 Hackney—Gibraltar Walk Cores, Hicks, and Davis.

11.30 Latimer Road Station The Branch.

11.30 Regent's Park North London Branch.

11.30 Walham Green, opposite Station The Branch.

11.45 Leman Street, Shadwell Mowbray and Turner.

3.30 Hyde Park Parker and Mrs. Lahr.

3.30 Victoria Park Mowbray, Cores, and Charles.

7 Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park Hammersmith Branch.

7.30 Broad Street, Soho Nicoll.

7.30 Clerkenwell Green Brookes.

TUESDAY 26.
8 Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch.

THURSDAY 28.
8.15 Hoxton Church Mowbray and Cores.

FRIDAY 29.
8 Philpot Street, Commercial Road Mowbray and Cores.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 2.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

NORTH HACKNEY RADICAL CLUB, 83 Church Street, Stoke Newington.—Sunday March 24, at 8.30, G. Standring, "Does Royalty Pay?"

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower Marsh, Lambeth.—Tuesday March 26, at 8 p.m., H. Halliday Sparling, "The History of Radicalism." Sunday March 31, a Lecture by Wm. Morris.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . . 1d
- Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . . 1d
- The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . . 2d.
- The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
- The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . . 1d
- The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . . . 4d.
- The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . . 1d.
- True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . . 1d.
- Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . . 1d.
- "Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . . 2d.
- Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Price 1d.; Post-free, 1½d.

THE RIGHTS OF LABOUR ACCORDING TO JOHN RUSKIN.

Arranged by THOMAS BARCLAY.
Second Edition.

"Your pamphlet is the best abstract of all the most important pieces of my teachings that has yet been done; and I am entirely grateful to you for doing it, and glad to have your letter."—Extract from letter received from Mr. Ruskin.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

SOCIALIST SONGS

FOR

POPULAR SINGING.

A Handy Collection. Contains 33 effective pieces from the pens of William Morris, Edward Carpenter, C. W. Beckett, J. Bruce Glasier, D. J. Nicoll, H. Halliday Sparling, and others. A number reprinted from the Commonweal and other sources. Should be in the hands of all Socialists.

Twopence. 1s. 4d. a-dozen.

Orders to be addressed to JAMES LEATHAM, 7 Jamaica Street, Aberdeen.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.
PRICE 1s.

*COMMONWEAL OFFICE 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.

CHEAP EDITION. NEW ISSUE. NOW READY. The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction. With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS' BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

THE DEMOCRATIC REVIEW.

EDITED BY LOTHROP WITHINGTON.

LONDON 1882, 8vo 160 pp.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of this pioneer revolutionary miscellany are still obtainable. Price 6d. each number, post free 6½d. Office of Commonweal.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3d. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2s. 6d.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

WORKS BY JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenaeum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

LA REVUE SOCIALISTE.

EDITED BY BENOIT MALON.

8, Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SUMMARY OF THE MARCH NUMBER.

"Rabelais and the Church," F. Audiger; "Taxes," A. Veber; "The Socialism of Blanqui," B. Malon; "Hours of Labour," P. Argyriades; "Positive Politics," H. Aimel; "Socialism among Inferior Beings," J. Sagnol; "Instruction and Socialism," N. Tesseyre; "Socialism in Hungary," B. Malon; "The Referendum," Rittinghausen and de Laveleye; "Poetry," E. Herbel; "Anthology," George, V. Hugo, Lange; "Social Movement," A. Weber, J. Sagnol; "Bibliography," J. Sagnol; "Obituary," G. Havet.

TERMS:—France, 6 months 9 francs, 12 months, 18 f. Abroad, " 10 " 20.

Payments to be made to M. Rodolphe Simon, 8 Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

LADY BRIDGE BUILDINGS, SHEFFIELD.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. 1 copy, 2d., by post, 3d.; 3 copies, 8d.; 6, 1s. 3d.; 12, 2s. 5d.; 24, 4s. 9d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free. 50, post free, 6s. 100, post free, 11s.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

THE LABOUR LEADER.

AN ADVANCED POLITICAL JOURNAL, DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF LABOUR.

The Miner will in future be published under the above name. Issued on the 1st of every month.

Subscription, monthly 1d.; 1s. 6d. per annum.

Edited and published by KEIR HARDIE, Cumnock, Ayrshire.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 168.

SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

IF Socialists retain any illusion as to the apparent defeat of Matthews and Warren (which was so loudly crowed over by a part of the Radical press) having any influence over the conduct of the police to the people, the brutality on 16th inst. will surely have swept such illusion away. It is not easy to imagine a worse case of arbitrary and cowardly violence than that which was perpetrated on our comrades of Berner Street, reproducing some of the worst features of Bloody Sunday, such as the beating of prisoners in the police-cell. Furthermore, is it probable that such things are done by the police out of the pure cussedness of the individual? That would be absurd to suppose; the authorities expect their men to behave in this manner, such deeds are practically, not condoned, but approved of. It is assumed that every poor man must be treated as an enemy of that society which is undoubtedly his enemy. And if he adds revolutionary ideas to his poverty—well!!

I can imagine a smug orderly well-fed military-looking higher officer of the police talking to some refined gentleman, and saying to him, "Well, my dear sir, you don't know the London rough; you can do nothing with him unless you knock him about; and as to who are roughs, why in such places as Berner Street the whole population are roughs. You must just let us act, my dear sir, and don't pay any attention to any outcry that a parcel of poor Jews may make. They can't do you any harm; the native roughs are quite inclined to fall upon them, and some day it will have to be done." And the refined gentleman would go away thinking it was all right, slumming being now out of fashion again. But if he could only bring his mind to bear upon so dull a subject, he might see that it is somewhat dangerous that it should have become an understood thing amongst the poor that the police are their natural enemies. "Those whom the gods will destroy they blind," says the ancient proverb.

The London County Council has made a very false step in closing the doors of its committee rooms on the public. This is going the way of the Board of Works. Why, it is exactly these committees that it is important for the public to know all about, that they may detect the first germs of corruption, criticise short-comings, discover incompetency, and encourage administrative qualities where they exist. It is very little use the public being admitted to the mere parade-days of the Council if it is to be excluded from its business meetings. This hole-and-corner resolution was passed owing to the laziness of the Progressives on the Council, who, one would have thought, might at least have been present on such an occasion. Or what explanation have they to offer?

The government have not been leading a happy life lately. The opposition have been working their victory in the Parnell Commission for all it is worth, and it has proved rather remunerative. However, one need neither affect to feel special moral reprobation, and still less surprise. Morally they are in a bad position, because they have been found out; that is all. For the rest, though they are cornered as to matters of detail, they have a good defence to put forward in the lump which should be accepted by the other side if they were not so steeped in hypocrisy.

For, after all, what is their business? The defence of property; the defence of the brigandage of the classes. We must at once get out of our heads that they have anything else to do. So what these Tory robber-chiefs or thief-syndicate have to say to their Liberal attackers is simply: "You know the interests which we have to defend, and how paramount they are; you in the enthusiasm of playing the party game have made a false step, and (no doubt without intending it) have attacked the rights of property, and have let loose upon us a crowd of ignorant Irish peasants, who don't know what they want, though they know that we (and you) keep them poor. They are headed by an ambitious, astute, and satisfactorily short-sighted politician, Mr. Parnell. So now it is our business to try and cure your blunder, if it be not incurable; and the only way to do that, as you yourselves will one day find out, is to use all our resources of force and fraud, and set ourselves stiffly to say 'No' to any claims that could be brought against us, whatever humanity or justice there might be in them.

"And as to all this pother you are making about our using our advantages in the shape of prisons and spies and rapsallion magistrates, really it is very unconstitutional of you, when you know that any and every government would use the same instruments whenever it thought it necessary. Why didn't we have a State prosecution against Parnell and his gang? Why, because we thought it would be such a breakdown if we failed, as we feared we might; and we thought that if we carried it on under cover of the Times, that at all events some of the dirt might stick, and that we might have gone about bragging that we could have prosecuted had we pleased. However, you will see, the time will come when a Liberal Government will have to do just the same sort of thing, when these damned Socialists begin to make a little head, perhaps. And how will you like it then? No, my friends, remember that passage of holy writ, and do as you would be done by."

But if the Government are rather hard set on by their declared enemies, they can't be said to help themselves much. Just as there is a fate on the Liberals to push on questions which they had much better have left alone, like the agrarian question in Ireland, so there is a fate on the Tories to discredit their party by saying the very worst that they possibly can for themselves. Lord Salisbury, e.g., made a most unaccountable blunder in his hint that perhaps after all the forged letters were not so very much forged. Real generosity is not to be expected from politicians on any occasion, but a little simulation of it would help them wonderfully sometimes, and on this occasion a little "frankness" of this sort might almost have retrieved the position for the Tories. It is lucky that reactionaries are such fools.

Neither should a man in his position have begun by using the words "calumnies and falsehoods." Says the proverb, "Don't speak of a rope in the house of a man whose father was hanged." And the parliamentary history of the last few days has done something towards putting some of the said "calumnies and falsehoods" into a different category, that of facts.

As to the rest of his speech, it was in the main, if properly read, an eloquent plea for revolution, under cover of a defence of law and order; for what it practically said was this: "Granted that the Irish have grievances against us, that the prison system is bad, that men are being put in prison for making political speeches of a certain tenour; yet is it not all law? Did not you, the English democracy, allow these laws to be made? If you want them altered go to parliament and get them altered." Behind all which there was a kind of gleeful chuckle, Don't you wish you may! For of course Lord Salisbury's true complaint is that his opponents have used the really effective weapons of boycotting and the Plan in the teeth of constitutionalism, and he very naturally "says you haven't played fair."

All this may be damaging argument for a debate, in which pure constitutionalism is to be assumed. But we may almost hope that pure constitutionalism is getting played out, and that the democracy will have the wits to see that if a change is good, it is good against the law, and that those who try to uphold the law against it are simply the enemies of the human race. Meantime it is encouraging to think that the great Liberal party, with Mr. Gladstone at its head, are accused of egging on people in Ireland to break the law wholesale, and that as a matter of fact it cannot rebut the accusation.

But we must not be too sanguine; it is only in Ireland that the Liberals like law-breaking as an instrument for law-mending. Doubtless the time will come when they will have to face the same trouble in England. The Irish question once shelved, the question of labour and capital which is involved in many side issues in the Irish matter will lie bare and obvious before them, and what will they do then? How, for instance, will a Liberal Government treat a no-rent manifesto in London? And why should a labourer be fined for wanting to sleep under a roof in London any more than in Tipperary? Will you say, the Irish cottar has laboured on his land, and has got just enough to keep himself and can pay no rent. True, but has not the English labourer done the same? Yet Lord! What a set of evasions the politicians will have to use to point out the essential difference between the two! And how easy it will be to clap Socialists into jail for doing the sort of thing that O'Brien has been doing and over whose fate the Liberals have been so indignant. W. M.

We are informed by a lady friend that a poor sewing-woman was lately employed by a clergyman's wife to make underclothing at a starvation price; for instance, for a night-dress sewn entirely by hand she received 1s., and was offered 9d., which latter price she refused. Any one who understands what work there is in hand-sewn linen, will appreciate this preposterous price—perhaps the pious lady threw in religion as a make-weight. The friend who told us the story said that she herself employed the woman to do some sewing for her, and on offering her what she considered a moderate price, the poor soul was so much taken off her guard with surprise, that instead of taking it without a word she exclaimed at the enormity of the pay, which was twice as much as her other patronesses would have paid her. And, indeed, it is not the poorer folk that beat down prices from sheer necessity, but often ladies and gentlemen from mere self-complacency at their power of bargain-making, and who, with all their cultivation and sensibilities, have got no nearer to justice and right dealing than this—beating down prices in the smaller industries with one hand, and with the other perhaps subscribing to a Mansion House Fund or a Dog's Home.

The lately published prospectus of the "Bellite Explosive" Company (Limited), gives far more prominence to the advantages this new explosive possesses in warfare than to those which recommend it as useful in mining operations. The company are confident of the greatest success; every scrap of news that points towards warfare, in whatsoever part of the world, will, one must think, cause directors and shareholders to rub their hands in glee over the newspapers at their comfortable breakfast-tables. It is nothing new, this trading and speculating in warfare—any more than is the trading on and coining human miseries of all sorts—but every fresh announcement of the sort, frank and impudent and brutal, renews one's disgust at the social order which endures, approves, and applauds the rage for money-making (without personal labour) at whatever cost to others.

Here we have more of the same sort. In a recent issue the Star says: "It is believed that a new industry is about to be started by the Birmingham Small Arms Company (Limited), who have lately fitted up a branch for the manufacture of drawn steel shells, the company having secured two War Office contracts which will keep them busy for the remainder of the year." M. M.

THE SOCIETY OF THE FUTURE.

In making our claims for the changes in Society which we believe would set labour free and thus bring about a new Society, we Socialists are satisfied with demanding what we think necessary for that Society to form itself, which we are sure it is getting ready to do; this we think better than putting forward elaborate utopian schemes for the future. We assert that monopoly must come to an end, and that those who can use the means of the production of wealth should have all opportunity of doing so, without being forced to surrender a great part of the wealth which they have created, to an irresponsible owner of the necessities to production; and we have faith in the regenerative qualities of this elementary piece of honesty, and believe that the world thus set free will enter on a new cycle of progress. We are prepared to face whatever drawbacks may accompany this new development with equanimity, being convinced that it will at any rate be a great gain to have got rid of a system which has at last become nearly all drawbacks. The extinction of the disabilities of an effete system of production will not, we are convinced, destroy the gains which the world has already won, but will, on the contrary, make those gains available to the whole population instead of confining their enjoyment to a few. In short, considering the present condition of the world, we have come to the conclusion that the function of the reformers now alive is not so much prophecy as action. It is our business to use the means ready to our hands to remedy the immediate evils which oppress us; to the coming generations we must leave the task of safeguarding and of using the freedom which our efforts shall have won them.

Nevertheless, we do partly know the direction which the development of the world will take in the immediate future; the evolution of past history teaches us that. We know that the world cannot go back on its footsteps, and that men will develop swiftly both bodily and mentally in the new Society; we know that men in general will feel the obligations of Society much more than the later generations have done, that the necessity for co-operation in production and life in general will be more consciously felt than it has been; that the comparative ease of life which the freeing of labour will bring about will give all men more leisure and time for thought; that crime will be rarer because there will not be the same temptation to it; that increased ease of life and education combined will tend to free us from disease of body and mind. In short, that the world cannot take a step forward in justice, honesty, and kindness, without a corresponding gain in all the material conditions of life.

And besides what we know, a knowledge without which we should not take the trouble to agitate for a change in the basis of Society, we cannot help guessing at a great deal which we cannot know; and again, this guessing, these hopes, or if you will, these dreams for the future, make many a man a Socialist whom sober reason deduced from science and political economy and the selection of the fittest would not move at all. They put a man in a fit frame of mind to study the reasons for his hope; give him courage to wade through studies, which, as the Arab king said of arithmetic, would otherwise be too dull for the mind of man to think of.

There are, in fact, two groups of mind with whom Social Revolutionists like other people have to deal, the analytical and the constructive. Belonging to the latter group myself, I am fully conscious of the dangers which we incur, and still more perhaps of the pleasures which we lose, and am, I hope, duly grateful to the more analytical minds for their setting of us straight when our yearning for action leads us astray, and I am also, I confess, somewhat envious of the beatitude of their dreamy contemplation of the perfection of some favourite theory; a happiness which we who use our eyes more than our reasoning powers, for noting what is going on in the world, seldom or ever enjoy.

However, as they would and do call our instinctive vision dreaming, and as they almost always, at least in their own estimation, have the better of us in argument when we meet in friendly battle, I must be careful what I say of them, and so will for the present at least only deal with the visionaries or practical people. And one thing I must confess from the beginning, which is that the visions of us visionary or practical people differ largely from each other, and that we are not much interested in each others visions; whereas the theories of the analysts differ little from each other, and they are hugely interested in each others theories—in the way that a butcher is interested in an ox—to wit, for cutting up.

So I will not attempt to compare my visions with those of other Socialists, but will simply talk to you of some of my own, and let you make the comparison yourselves, those of you who are visionaries, or let you unassisted by me criticise them, those of you who are analytically given. In short, I am going to give you a chapter of confessions. I want to tell you what it is I desire of the Society of the Future, just as if I were going to be reborn into it; I daresay that you will find some of my visions strange enough.

One reason which will make some of you think them strange is a sad and shameful one. I have always belonged to the well-to-do classes, and was born into luxury, so that necessarily I ask much more of the future than many of you do; and the first of all my visions, and that which colours all my others, is of a day when that misunderstanding will no longer be possible; when the words poor and rich, though they will still be found in our dictionaries, will have lost their old meaning; which will have to be explained with care by great men of the analytical kind, spending much time and many words over the job, and not succeeding in the end in making people do more than pretend to understand them.

Well now, to begin with, I am bound to suppose that the realisation of Socialism will tend to make men happy. What is it then makes people happy? Free and full life and the consciousness of life. Or, if you will, the pleasurable exercise of our energies, and the enjoyment of the rest which that exercise or expenditure of energy makes necessary to us. I think that is happiness for all, and covers all difference of capacity and temperament from the most energetic to the laziest.

Now, whatever interferes with that freedom and fulness of life, under whatever specious guise it may come, is an evil; is something to be got rid of as speedily as possible. It ought not to be endured by reasonable men who naturally wish to be happy.

Here you see is an admission on my part, which I suspect indicates the unscientific mind. It proposes the exercise of free will on the part of men, which the latest scientists deny the possibility of, I believe; but don't be afraid, I am not going into argument on the matter of free will and predestination; I am only going to assert that if individual men are the creatures of their surrounding conditions, as indeed I think they are, it must be the business of man as a social animal, or of Society, if you will, to make the surroundings which make the individual man what he is. Man must and does create the conditions under which he lives; let him be conscious of that, and create them wisely.

Has he done so hitherto? He has tried to do so, I think, but with only moderate success, at any rate at times. However, the results of that moderate success he is proud of, and he calls it civilisation. Now, there has been amongst people of different minds abundant discussion as to whether civilisation is a good thing or an evil. Our friend Bax in his very able article on the subject, did, I think, really put the matter on its true footing when he pointed out that as a step to something better, civilisation was a good, but as an achievement it was an evil. In that sense I declare myself an enemy of civilisation; nay, since this is to be a chapter of confessions, I must tell you that my special leading motive as a Socialist is hatred of civilisation: my ideal of the new Society would not be satisfied unless that Society destroyed civilisation.

For if happiness be the pleasurable exercise of our energies and the enjoyment of necessary rest, it seems to me that civilisation, looked at from the static point of view, as Bax phrases it, tends to deny us both these good things, and thereby tends to reduce man to a machine without a will; to deprive him gradually of all the functions of an animal and the pleasure of fulfilling them, except the most elementary ones. The scientific ideal of the future of man would appear to be an intellectual paunch, nourished by circumstances over which he has no control, and without the faculty of communicating the results of his intelligence to his brother-paunches.

Therefore my ideal of the Society of the future is first of all the freedom and cultivation of the individual will, which civilisation ignores, or even denies the existence of; the shaking off the slavish dependence, not on other men, but on artificial systems made to save men manly trouble and responsibility: and in order that this will may be vigorous in us, I demand a free and unfettered animal life for man first of all: I demand the utter extinction of all asceticism. If we feel the least degradation in being amorous, or merry, or hungry, or sleepy, we are so far bad animals, and therefore miserable men. And you know civilisation does bid us to be ashamed of all these moods and deeds, and as far as she can, begs us to conceal them, and where possible to get other people to do them for us. In fact, it seems to me that civilisation may almost be defined as a system arranged for ensuring the vicarious exercise of human energies for a minority of privileged persons.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

(To be continued.)

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING APRIL 6, 1889.

31	Sun.	1867. Fight at Kilclooney Wood; O'Neill Crowley killed. 1882. N. Soukhanoff shot in Kronstadt for being a member of the Executive Committee and a very influential propagandist among his fellow naval officers. 1883. Sentries posted at new Law Courts, Somerset House, etc., hitherto unguarded. 1887. Three persons hanged for the attempt on the Czar of the 13th.
1	Mon.	1282. Sicilian Vespers. 1815. Bismarck born. 1820. Radical disturbances in Glasgow. 1826. First number of the Ass: or, Weekly Beast of Burden , London, 1d. 1848. Republican attempted invasion of Belgium. 1871. M. Thiers proclaims war against the Commune. 1872. F. D. Maurice died. 1878. Greek insurrection. 1878. First issue of La Science politique , Paris, monthly review by Emile Acolas.
2	Tues.	1793. Great slave-trade debate. 1794. Trial at Lancaster of Thos. Walker, William Paul, Samuel Jackson, James Cheetham, Oliver Pearsall, Benjamin Booth, and Joseph Collier, for "a conspiracy to overthrow the constitution and government, and to aid and assist the French (being the king's enemies) in case they should invade this kingdom." 1840. Emile Zola born. 1865. Richard Cobden died. 1871. Versailles open fire on Paris. 1878. Lord Leitrim executed.
3	Wed.	1854. Wendell Phillips and Theodore Parker tried for aiding runaway slaves. 1871. Gustave Flourens killed. 1882. Khal-tourin and Jevlakoff hanged in Odessa for killing Strielnikoff.
4	Thur.	1774. Oliver Goldsmith died. 1871. Revolt at Limoges: Duval and other Communards taken prisoners at Paris and murdered. 1871. Paris Commune abolishes State endowments of the Church.
5	Fri.	1794. Danton and Desmoulins guillotined. 1814. Napoleon banished to Elba. 1820. Battle of Bonnybridge. 1865. De Laveleye born.
6	Sat.	1593. John Greenwood and Henry Barrow hung at Tyburn for issuing seditious books. 1669. Jean Jacques Rousseau born. 1780. Commons vote that influence of the king should be diminished. 1809. Arrest of Sir Francis Burdett. 1887. Attempt on Alexander III.

Khaltourin was one of the most remarkable figures of the Russian movement from 1873 to 1882. Besides being known as author of two important terrorist deeds—death of procurator Strielnikoff and the explosion at the Winter Palace in Feb. 17th, 1880—he was certainly the most successful and popular leader of the St. Petersburg working-men. A cabinet-maker by trade, with the reputation of being the best polisher in the capital, he enjoyed confidence and popularity among a very large number of comrade workers. He joined the Social Revolutionary party in 1873, and worked well in it up to 1879, when he offered to the Executive Committee of the terrorist party to blow up the Winter Palace. He had tried almost all ways, open and secret, of propaganda and organisation in the Socialist cause, but always at the end of all his efforts met such obstacles in politics and police, that he finally decided on regicide. He was the originator of the first exclusively working-men's revolutionary organisation, the "Northern Workmen's Union," and also of the journal written, managed, and printed exclusively by workmen. This journal was printed in a special secret printing office, which also was founded by Khaltourin under such difficulties and troubles as are known only in Russia. All these results of enormous efforts of several years were hindered and destroyed by ever-watchful spies and policemen. After the unsuccessful attempt to blow up the Winter Palace, which failure Khaltourin himself ascribed to insufficient quantity of dynamite (120 lbs.) being stored in the basement, the police failed to discover his whereabouts until he appeared after nearly two years in Odessa, and heroically executed the order of his party, destroying the miserable life of a trained scoundrel and executioner, Strielnikoff. This important official had almost unlimited power over all political prisoners in South Russian prisons, and used against them all means of moral torture and physical hardship known to the modern inquisitors. At last the revolutionary party was tired of him and condemned him. Khaltourin with his assistant found him sitting upon one of the benches on a boulevard of Odessa, and shot him in the broad light of day. Khaltourin was arrested merely through the mistake of some mechanics passing by, who took him for a thief, and afterwards regretted bitterly that they had assisted the police in capturing him.—TCH.

It would be an unsound fancy and self-contradictory to expect that things which have never yet been done, can be done except by means which have never yet been tried.—Lord Bacon.

SOCIALISM versus INDIVIDUALISM IN LEICESTER.

THE second series of the Fabian lectures dealing with the organisation of society has now come to an end. They have been much relished. Graham Wallas's appeal at the end of his lecture was one of the most pathetic and eloquent we ever heard. Annie Besant was accompanied by Herbert Burrows and Rev. Stewart Headlam. All available sitting-room was occupied, galleries, platform, and all. The applause was loud and frequent. Headlam spoke in response to calls from audience; and Herbert Burrows being invited to follow, with an astonishing verbal rapidity and logical acumen, put the gist of the social problem inside twenty minutes. Hubert Bland succeeded in getting the Radical "dander ris." Indeed, the Radicals were the only people to square accounts with on this occasion, the Individualists having for some mysterious reason quitted the field. The Individualist lectures have alternated with the Socialist ones, and have been exceedingly lively. Mr. Frederick Millar, of the Liberty and Property Defence League, has a style and vocabulary that were much admired by some of us, though his abuse is apt at first to throw argumentation off its guard. Stale inanities, filthy literature, thieves, fools, and brats, are among some of the terms that Mr. Millar intended to pass for argument. He ended his discourse with a fine Rule Britannia outburst. Being ironically congratulated on his Jingoism, and on his being a fitting instrument of the society of aristocratic and plutocratic parasites and perpetual pensioners he represented, there came a challenge on the right of the word "perpetual," during which the Labour Emancipation League's leaflet, "The Liberty and Property Defence League, who and what are they?" was quoted to the audience and handed up to Mr. Millar, who hurled an abusive epithet at it, and refusing to touch it blew it to the ground. This the audience resented, and the lecturer was hissed.

Next came Mr. Wordsworth Donisthorpe, who at least kept us in good humour. Some of his paradoxical utterances left us wondering whether he could be in earnest. Liberty was so defined as to make no difference between it and Tyranny. Liberty included "liberty to do evil"; liberty of a strong man to knock a weak one down and rifle his pockets. As certain of the audience remarked afterwards, this kind of liberty involves slavery of the knocked down and rifled, and is too prevalent already. Mr. Donisthorpe threw himself unconsciously into the arms of Socialism by declaring that "Individualists accept the doctrine of Anarchy." He showed his ignorance of the Anarchic doctrine by stating that he was unaware that Anarchists advocated communisation of the means of production. The impression of the lecture and discussion on many of us was that Donisthorpe was recklessly inconsistent, like a man who feels his case is somehow bad. We feel that he didn't do justice even to his own side.

Lastly came Mr. Alfred Milnes, M.A., who, though highly embittered against Socialism, showed himself the most reasonable of the Individualist lecturers. He played straight into our hands by asking, "How could there be such a thing as a contract except where the parties are equal?" There is no bargain, said he, where the advantage is all on one side, and where a man can say to another man, "Both of us shall observe as much as I please." Lecturer was asked whether this was not just the case between the capitalist and the labourer? He did not answer. Quoted the Abolitionist's saying to slave-owners, "Show us from God your authority for holding your slaves." Was again asked could not we put this test of authority to the landlord about his land? Did not answer. Thought in cases of "Adulteration of food," State interference could be "excused"; as also in cases "where all are agreed on something, but none dare begin it." Resented anybody interfering with him to regulate how many hours a day he should work. "If A is forcing B to work eight hours, then jump on A," said the lecturer. Was asked by one of audience, "Supposing A's working fourteen hours resulted in B only getting six hours, should we not jump on A, or call on him to partly support B?" Lecturer was much concerned with the threatened break-up of the family institution by Socialists, and alleged that it was a Socialist proposal to "nationalise woman." It turned out in discussion that such proposals were only on paper, and belonged to the Utopian epoch.

The way it strikes a Socialist is, that all along the Individualists have done their best to conceal their views that no readjustment whatever of the ethical basis of property is necessary. Cases trivial and superficial, such as the opening of free libraries sans consultation of the assumed objecting minority, have been kept well in the foreground; but the giant grievances—the fundamental injustices inseparable from the private ownership of land and capital—these have been ignored in every lecture, and conveniently let slide if brought up in the discussions. Not a word in criticism of rings and corners; not a word about the unemployed, or the status of the crofter, cottier, and agricultural labourer. No, no! Laissez-faire! Laissez-faire for the benefit of landlord and factory-lord; and Laissez-faire too, in consequence, your own condition. We have nothing to propose by way of amelioration—no positive proposals whatever to remedy any evils arising from the present relations of capitalists and labourers. And we imprecate you not to be so wicked as to interfere in any way with things as they are, except it be to reverse the whole current of political events these many years past, that have been alas! so tyrannical to poor us, and so favourable every way to you. But, no again! All this legislation has not been favourable to you. It is a delusion, and you would be better back in the old days of the unmitigated play of capitalistic conditions. It need hardly be said this view does not agree with the Radicals here, who are consequently repelled by Individualism, however slow they may be in joining the ranks of Socialism.

THOMAS BARCLAY.

Says the Rochester (U.S.) Chronicle: "Over some of our schools such an inscription as this might truthfully be placed: 'All children are alike; if not, they must be made so. It is not our business to inform, inspire, enkindle, but to cram. Never mind perception, relation, analogies, the ordinary sequence of ideas, and the development of aptitudes. It is detached facts that we are after. Education means not the drawing out, but the filling up.'"

JOHN SWINTON.—All friends of the labour cause everywhere will be glad to hear of the renewed health of John Swinton. We see from an exchange that the operation on his eye has been entirely successful, and he has thus been enabled to resume literary work. He lost the hard-won result of a toiling life over the bright strong labour-paper, which left such a gap when it fell, but it is now said that recent events have placed him above pressing anxiety either in the present or future. Rumour speaks of a book soon to be printed, containing the varied reminiscences of his long and crowded life.—S.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors.

Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. B. G.—In type, but crowded out.
REGINALD A. BECKETT.—Will be used.

CONTENTS.

		PAGE.
Notes on News	Wm. & MAY MORRIS	97
The Society of the Future	WILLIAM MORRIS	98
Revolutionary Calendar—Kalatourin	TEHL	99
Socialism versus Individualism in Leicester	THOMAS BARCLAY	99
Growing Respectable	J. HUNTER WATTS	100
The Government of Millionaires	HENRY F. CHARLES	100
Correspondence—"Internationalism"; "Another Greeting"		101
International Notes	V. DAVE, H. SCH., & MAY MORRIS	102
Socialism in Norfolk	DAVIS & MRS. SCHACK	102
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings		103
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.		104

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday March 27.

ENGLAND	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	BELGIUM
Justice	Fort Worth (Tex)—South West	Ghent—Vooruit
Labour Elector	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Antwerp—De Worker
Labour Tribune	Newark—Arbeiter-Zeitung	Liege—L'Avantur
Leicester—Countryman	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung	SWITZERLAND
London—Freie Presse	S. F. Coast Seaman's Journal	Arbeiterstimme
Norwich—Daylight	San Francisco—Pacific Union	SPAIN
Postal Service Gazette		Seville—La Solidaridad
Railway Review	FRANCE	Madrid—El Socialista
INDIA	Paris—L'Egalite (daily)	Barcelona—El Productor
Bankipore—Behar Herald	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	PORTUGAL
Madras—People's Friend	Le Proletariat	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
UNITED STATES	La Revolte	Porto—A Revolucao Social
New York—Der Sozialist	L'Attaque	GERMANY
Freiheit	HOLLAND	Berlin—Volks Tribune
Volkszeitung	Hague—Recht voor Allen	DENMARK
Backer Zeitung	ITALY	Social-Demokraten
Workmen's Advocate	Turin—Il Muratore	SWEDEN
The Truth	Rome—L'Emancipazione	Malmo—Arbetet
Boston—Woman's Journal	Milan—Il Fascio Operario	Stockholm, Social-Demokraten
Chicago (Ill)—Verbote	Corato—Il Comune

GROWING RESPECTABLE.

OUR movement has reached a stage at which we are confronted with a new and unexpected danger. We are growing respectable in the eyes of the world! The sweets of popularity are being tasted by some of us whose names a little while ago were a stink in the nostrils of respectability. "What foolish words have I uttered, that they applaud me?" said the Roman orator whose speech was interrupted by the applause of his hearers. Without any undue indulgence in the cynic vein, we must critically examine ourselves and our methods of propaganda if we find that commendation-pence are awarded us by those from whom hitherto we have received more kicks than halfpence. During the last eight years many men have passed through our ranks who as recruits promised to be of great service to the cause of Socialism; but one by one they grew weary of the abuse that was heaped upon them, of the sneers of their fellow-workmen in the factory or at the bench, of the social ostracism to which they were condemned if they happened to belong to "the classes," and they dropped out of the movement, one, if not more, into the obscurity of the House of Commons; others to turn to account as party-hacks their trick of talk; and the rest to drift aimlessly through existence on the dead sea mis-called Life. The dust lies already on their names. We will not disturb it; but let us take heed lest elated with our successes at the polling-booth, gratified even with the stint of praise we get from those who speak fair of us now they fear us, we sink into the insignificance of the pigwiggins who wage a puny warfare on the field of party politics. Useful work may be done, and is being done, by Socialists upon Vestries, Board of Guardians, and School Boards; and even the dry bones of the House of Commons might be stirred by the presence of one or two of our less vigorous speakers whose presence could be spared from the more important arena of the street or the market-place. But our comrades who have been placed in these positions of trust will abuse that trust if they forget that they are only touching the fringe of the question when they claim that public works should be initiated to relieve distress, that education should be free, that members of Parliament should be paid and election expenses defrayed by the State, if they forget for one hour that they are revolutionary Socialists, pledged to the overthrow of class dominion and of the hideous slavery called wagedom which results from the private ownership of the means of production. We must not forget that the praise of us in the columns of the capitalist press is conceded, not from sympathy with our aims, but because those aims are forgotten, as it is hoped we shall forget them if our steps can be turned aside from the rough road of the social-revolutionist into the pleasant paths of public office and popular favour. "Only fools and flunkeys admitted here" is written over the portals of respectability; and depend on it, if the janitor passes any of us, it is because we have servilely disguised our opinions or have foolishly lost our faith in the future. We cease to be revolutionists when we grow respectable in the eyes of the multitude, for they respect only the accomplished fact, not those who war against present facts, present systems. The social revolution accomplished, everyone will respect it; we, or our memories, will be admitted respectable; but, living or dead, living soul or dead carcass, till then we belong to the rabble. We can only masquerade, or worse, as respectabilities. "The beggars" was the term applied to those who rid the Netherlands of the Spanish yoke, but that term of contempt came to be accepted as a title of honour. So be it with us. We belong to the rabble. None so poor, none so degraded, none so oppressed, but may enlist under our banner, certain that his oppressor will be stricken down, the source of his poverty and his degradation removed, and that banner carried at last to victory full and final. We have as yet scarce entered on the conflict. The heat of the day, the burden of the fight, has yet to be borne. Amenities are still exchanged between the combatants, because the fury of battle has not been aroused, as it will be excited as soon as our attacks upon the exploiting classes grow more vigorous, as soon as they perceive that their privilege to lead pleasant, easy lives at the cost of the misery and degradation of the masses is in serious peril. It is, perhaps, a reproach to us that these courtesies are still possible, that our enemies speak any good thing concerning us. Countless thousands of our fellow-men and fellow-women are being done to death, are dying daily, victims of the brutal system to which they are subjected. Is it a time to parley with the foe? Is it so great a thing that we are admitted into council with him to debate and discuss how many more victims must be sacrificed to his greed of rule, his lust of gold? It is well to get some mitigation of the terrible penalties imposed by the rich upon the poor because they are poor and helpless, though to do so we temporise to the extent of making use of the legislative machine to serve our own purposes and frustrate those for which it was devised. But we must be guilty of no such compromise of principle as that which would earn for us a clear title to respect from society as constituted to-day, for only the successful thief, the exploiter of labour, commands general respect, while contumely is heaped upon those who have been robbed of health, of manhood, of education, of the right to earn their own bread, of everything that makes life human—robbed, too, by the very classes that sneer at those they have wronged as "the scum," "the mob," "the rabble." Better the hatred than the respect of such people, and without doubt we shall earn that hatred if we ourselves continue to hate injustice and love right. "Woe unto you [Socialists] when all men shall speak well of you."

J. HUNTER WATTS.

THE GOVERNMENT OF MILLIONAIRES.

"Le roi est mort. Vive le roi! Commonplace, fat Grover Cleveland has stepped down from his exalted position to make room for still more commonplace—if that be possible—Benjamin Harrison, the would-be descendant from Major Harrison of rebel fame, and also from Pocahontas, the lovely Indian maid, kidnapped from her native home by the cheating Virginians. Talk about the possibility of mediocrity reigning all supreme under Socialism! Well, if I thought it possible that people like Grover and Ben might be leading stars in any Socialistic community, however small, in the future, I should cease toiling for my ideal, and rather hang myself at once. Why, indeed, these gentry are the very personification of mediocrity and "decent respectability"! Grandpa's son Ben Harrison and his partner in the game of politics, Levi Morton, arrived some days ago in good health in Washington. By the way, it's curious to see the tribes Levi and Benjamin working in harmony. Grover entertained his successor in right royal style, and industrious workmen had everything prepared for the coronation. However, Jupiter Pluvius spoiled the show. It rained all day on the glorious 4th of March. In his speech from the throne—commonly known under the title Inauguration Oration—Ben showed that he understands the value of speeches prepared carefully by political sharps. Words, words, platitudes and sentences which no intelligent human being can either interpret or understand,—that is the impression the document made upon any person of average faculties of comprehension. He said practically next to nothing, but needed an ocean of articulation to effect that. Of course, protection of our native industries is going to be strictly adhered to by our new administration. In reviewing a century's changes, Ben tells us that "the masses of our people are better fed, clothed, and housed than their fathers were. The facilities for popular education have been vastly enlarged and more generally diffused. The virtues of courage and patriotism have given recent proof of their continued presence and increasing power in the hearts and over the lives of our people. The influences of religion have been multiplied and strengthened. The sweet offices of charity have greatly increased. The virtue of temperance is held in higher estimation."

Naturally we must be thankful indeed that to-day we can wear more shoddy clothes than a hundred years ago; that we can buy cheaper boots—boots with paper soles and rotten uppers. The jerry-builder, it must be confessed, is also a very needful person, and oleomargarine surely is easily digestible food for a workman's stomach. Who would dare to say that it is not very gratifying to know that in our days we have a greater opportunity to get our heads crammed with all sorts of nonsense. The sentence about "the virtues of courage," etc., is brilliant indeed, especially when we remember that the war for the preservation of the union was fought by 83 per cent. foreigners, and that the genuine Yankee was generally first at meal times but severely missed as soon as the enemy was seen approaching. A propos "sweet offices of charity," how long is it ago that bread buttered with strychnine was advocated to be given to tramps by generous and kind-hearted Americans? Not before the floods, I guess. Refreshing it is to read that "we have not attained an ideal condition. Not all of our people are happy and prosperous; not all of them are virtuous and law-abiding. But, on the whole, the opportunities offered to the individual to secure the comforts of life are better than are found elsewhere, and largely better than they were here one hundred years ago."

The Anarchists high and low also come in for a little straight talking, at which I suppose both camps will snap their fingers:

"Those who use unlawful methods, if moved by no higher motive than the selfishness that prompts them, may well stop and enquire what is to be the end of this. An unlawful expedient cannot become a permanent condition of government. If the educated and influential classes in a community either practise or connive at the systematic violation of laws that seem to them to cross their convenience, what can they expect when the lesson that convenience or a supposed class interest is a sufficient cause for lawlessness has been well learned by the ignorant classes? A community where law is the rule of conduct, and where courts, not mobs, execute the penalties, is the only attractive field for business investments and honest labour."

The new administration is a good one. It meets with my full approval. It is essentially an administration of, for, and through millionaires. What's more to be desired in this best of all good countries? The Senate is at present composed of seventy-six senators, none of which owns less than a million. In the biographies of the cabinet officers we generally find the following significant paragraph: "After . . . he devoted himself principally to railroad enterprises and other financial ventures, in which he has been highly successful." Doesn't that read nice? So eminently respectable and genteel! Let us for illustration's sake take two well-known men in the cabinet, known not only in America, but also equally well known in Europe—Levi P. Morton, late of New York, London, and Paris, banker and (s)peculator, now Vice-President of the Union and President of the Senate; and John Wanamaker, late exploiter of Philadelphia, and sweater of Berlin, Germany. For a patriotic cabinet, two pretty international characters, aren't they? Both men owe their present positions to the boodle they have subscribed to the Republican campaign fund, and the facts I am about to relate I have taken from capitalistic papers. First, Levi P. Morton. The capitalistic paper in question begins an article on Plutocracy Personified by saying:

"Levi P. Morton is no doubt personally as good as most others of his type, if not better. It is the type that is objectionable in public office, a type that has grown into prominence since the war, with the increase of individual wealth and the assertion of the power of money in politics. It represents the most dangerous element in public life—the plutocratic element. It judges men not by their principles, but by their price. It regards public office as an article of merchandise, to be bought and sold the same as dry-goods or railroad shares. The strongest political argument it can offer is a thumping check."

It then goes on to relate how Morton used all his official positions and those of his friends to further the interests of his banking-houses in New York, London, and Paris. At the conclusion of the article, the paper gives a list of the monies spent by Morton since 1872 to achieve his ends:

1872. Grant, President	... D.50,000	1881. Carr, Sec. of State	... D.5,000
1873. Mayer, Sec. of State	... 5,000	1882. Folger, Governor	... 20,000
1874. Dix, Governor	... 50,000	1883. Carr, Sec. of State	... 5,000
1875. Steward, Sec. of State	15,000	1884. Blaine, President	... 75,000
1876. Hayes, President	... 50,000	1885. Davenport, Governor	... 10,000
1876. Morton, Congress (defeated)	75,000	1885. Morton, U.S. Senate (def.)	50,000
1877. Churchill, Sec. of State	5,000	1886. Daniels, Court of Appeals	5,000
1878. Morton, Congress (elected)	125,000	1887. Grant, Sec. of State	... 10,000
1879. Cornell, Governor	... 50,000	1887. Morton, U.S. Senate (def.)	100,000
1880. Garfield, President	... 250,000	1888. Harrison, President, and
1880. Morton, Congress (elected)	150,000	Morton, Vice-President	400,000
1880. Collected	... 700,000	1888. Collected	... 550,000

Amounting in total to 2,755,000 dollars, or considerably over half a million sterling.

John Wanamaker is a man of similar calibre. Both men started life as poor boys, and are in consequence "self-made," thereby relieving the Lord of a great deal of responsibility. Wanamaker is the Whiteley of Philadelphia. He believes in protecting American labour, but has most of his work done abroad, principally in Berlin. A reporter of a capitalistic paper visited his German establishment. In the busy season he employs there several hundred women at cloak-making. The work is done by contract, vulgarly called "sweating." The girls earn from about 3s. to 15s. a-week for eight months. The reporter goes on to say:

"The girls make no secret of the fact that it would be impossible for them to live without the assistance of a friend—a "bridegroom," they call him. He helps them to buy clothes, takes them to beer and music gardens occasionally, and pays their rent in the idle season. Scarcely a girl who does not live at home with her parents but is dependent on assistance of this kind. If she does not get it she is considered unfortunate by her associates."

Wanamaker during the last election contributed about £80,000 to the Republican campaign fund.

I might go on ad infinitum in these revelations about a republican government, but the foregoing will suffice to show what a delusion "popular government" indeed is.

Newark, N.J., March 13, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

UNITED RADICAL CLUB, Kay Street, Goldsmiths Row, Hackney Road.—A course of Four Lectures on "Socialism and Practical Politics," will be given by members of the Fabian Society, on Sunday evenings at 8.30 p.m. March 31st, George Bernard Shaw, "The True Radical Policy." April 7th, Graham Wallas, "Practical Land Nationalisation." 14th, William Clarke, "Practical Socialism."

CORRESPONDENCE.

INTERNATIONALISM.

COMRADE,—Hoping you will find space for the following in next issue of Commonweal, I take the liberty to trespass on your time.

I suppose you are aware of the controversy lately carried on by Justice against us Germans generally, and the German Social-Democratic party specially. Last week I wrote a letter to our comrade, the editor of Justice, containing a general reply against those accusations brought forward against us in Justice, asking him to print it, which latter he refused, making the excuse that my letter was too long. This is the reason why I now ask you for the same favour, hoping you will find it possible to comply with my desire.

First of all let me say that I cannot accept the excuse of the editor of Justice—viz., "my letter being too long," in the face of the fact that he cuts it down to seven lines and then he finds space for forty-five lines of his own one-sided remarks. I am pretty sure my letter would not have taken up much more space; and I should have thought the editor would have felt it his simple duty of international fraternity and impartiality to reproduce a fair reply against so many unproven assertions and accusations on his part. But now I wish to give my letter to Justice in substance, with a few remarks upon the forty-five lines of our comrade in last week's Justice.

A few weeks ago the Germans were accused by the editor of Justice as being exclusive and clannish. This is, at least in my opinion, an assertion against all known facts, and the reverse is the truth. The Germans, as is well known, travel all over the globe, and wherever they go, they mix up with and really dissolve into the native population: so much is this the case, that it is a great trouble to the chauvinistic Government in Germany. The Germans nowhere keep up their nationality; and the best proof for this are the English colonies and the United States; and I myself should not be much surprised if the Germans at present in Cameroon would sooner become niggers than the reverse. These are known facts about the Germans generally, and the same applies to German Socialists. But in the course of time other nations have become so accustomed to this German characteristic that when now a German anywhere asks to have it a little his own way, the general outcry is—O, the Germans want it all their own way.

Now we are again accused of "printing our papers in our own language, which not one out of ten thousand understands." The first is absurd, and the anticipation that we would condemn the French and English if they should take the same course in Germany is simply ridiculous; the other assertion is at least a gross and wilful exaggeration. Out of the whole population of the globe, one out of every fourteen is able to speak German; and if we take the so-called civilised world, one in every five understands and speaks German.

Then we are blamed for confining ourselves to our own national clubs. This is truth and untruth mixed together. As far as England is concerned, the German Socialists have tried their very best to mix up with their English brethren, but have very often been rebuked; whenever they tried to be active, they very often received the reply, "That is foreign," and so of course many of us by and by withdrew and confined ourselves to our own clubs—which, by the way, are very much frequented by English Socialists, and the English Socialistic papers are bought and read by a considerable number of Germans.

The truth is simply this: We Germans are international, but we decline to become English or French, and to obey one-sided orders. Internationalism means respect for each other's liberty and national habits, and not submission of one nation to the other.

But now as to the coming Paris Congress. I shall not say one word pro or con in regard to the animosity between the German Social-Democrats and French Possibilists: I am not at all speaking for a party, I am speaking for myself. When I did not object at the Congress of 1886 against the appointment of the Possibilists to organise the coming Congress, I could not think that they would go so far as to lay down the rules for admission and make a standing order ready, etc.; as far as I know, they were only charged to make preliminary arrangements, and leave the business to be done by the Congress. I am quite sure if the German party had been charged with the same object, they would have confined themselves to procuring a hall, receiving the delegates, etc., and would have left the Congress itself to do the real business. I think we are entitled to have a fair share in all affairs connected with the Congress; and if we shall be fed entirely on English pudding or French cabbage, we decline, for fear of an overloaded stomach; if we are invited to an international dinner, we want at least a dish of our own choice—a dish of Sauerkraut.

Our comrade of Justice offers his service to smooth over those differences between the French and Germans, but I think his tone in the whole affair shows that he is very little qualified to do so, because in my opinion all his controversy is nothing else than a good illustration of the proverb—the pot calls the kettle black. We all suffer more or less under a chauvinistic, patriotic education, and the English education is, as far as my knowledge goes, in the first place in this respect, and the result is showing itself in those one-sided remarks in Justice.

Concluding, our comrade in Justice desires me and others to join him to put a stop to such "petty wire-pulling." I for one shall gladly do so, as soon as I can see that it does not mean, "Put a stop to German wire-pulling and establish English or French." But I must say that in the German demands about the Paris Congress I cannot see any wire-pulling at all.—I am, yours fraternally,

March 16, 1889.

H. RACKOW.

ANOTHER GREETING.

The following letter from Belgian comrades was received too late to be read at the Commune meeting, or to be inserted in the Commonweal of last week:—

Comrades,—In preparing to write you a letter on the subject of the Commune, of March 18th, I see that your commemoration takes place on the 16th of March, i.e., this evening. My letter, therefore, is too late to be read, as it does not leave Belgium before your meeting begins; even a telegram would not arrive in time. Under these circumstances, it only remains for myself and my friends, members of the Socialist Federation of Brussels (Belgium Labour Party) to send you our regrets at our greeting reaching you too late, assuring you that at this very time, while you are celebrating the great proletarian vindication of the 18th of March, we are with you in heart. Others of our Belgian friends will have sent you in time, no doubt, their greetings in the name of all.—Yours heartily,

DR. DE PAEPE.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

BELGIUM.

In the beginning of the month of May, twenty-seven Belgian Socialists will be tried before the Court of Assize of the province Hainault, at Mons, as "conspirators against the safety of the Belgian State." Our readers will remember that this is the outcome of the last strikes which happened in the mining districts of Charleroi and Mons. The accused are: Alfred Defuisseaux, solicitor; Emile Adant, engineer; Paul Conreur; Leopold Rouhette, painter; Emile Baudoux, miner; Georges Defuisseaux, editor of La République; Edouard Laloi; Désiré Maroille, secretary of the co-operative bakery Frameries; Alexis Ledoux, miner; Alfred Malengret, miner; Hector Conreur, tailor; Louis André, miner; Pierre Mayence, engineer; François Mignon; Joseph Carpent, miner; Fabien Gérard, newsagent; Joseph Bassart, ironworker; Victor Massart, ironworker; Léopold De Borre, agricultural labourer; Henri Hubert, miner; Constant Cochart, miner; Emile Masse, ironworker; François Rothermel, photographer; Emile Auquier, shopkeeper; Jules Urbain, grocer; Nicolas Godard, treasurer of the co-operative society at Frameries; and Charles Moyaux, miner. All the members of the Executive Council of the Republican Socialist Party are included in the prosecution. The Public Prosecutor has already published his indictment against the accused, and we will soon have an opportunity of considering, according to its deserts, that grotesque piece of class justice.

Meanwhile, comrade Ferdinand Pintelon, another of the arrested men during the same last strikes, has been sentenced to one year imprisonment for "incendiary language."

The quarrymen at strike at Quenast are not likely to resume work before having won their battle. They show an admirable spirit of brotherhood and solidarity, and the Belgian workers generally support their fellow comrades in a most remarkable way. The administrator and owner of the quarries, Urban, having written to the bourgeois papers that his stock was large enough to supply all his wants for another six months, the Executive of the Parti ouvrier, to their credit be it said, answered to that piece of impudence by publicly pledging themselves to keep the 2,000 men at strike just as long as it would please Urban. From all parts of the country the workers are helping the quarrymen, by sending money, bread, meat, vegetables, etc., and they will most likely beat the millionaire Urban who wants to subdue them.

HOLLAND.

On the 16th inst. our comrade Fortuyn, one of the most energetic Socialist propagandists of Holland, stood before the Amsterdam Nupkinses, accused with "inflammatory speech." In December 1888, at a public meeting at Drachten, Fortuyn had told his audience "that it was high time for the workers to resist the existing laws and by some means or other to get rid of them." This was the only sentence in the whole speech objected to by the Public Prosecutor, and for that sentence he asked not less than eight months' imprisonment! Comrade Fortuyn at any rate thought the opportunity good to make a Socialist speech in court, and he delivered a splendid discourse, disclosing to the astonished judges the whole revolutionary programme of the working classes. Judgment was deferred.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Last week our Vienna colleague Gleichheit (Equality) and our Brünn colleague Volksfreund (People's Friend) were again confiscated by the police authorities. Scarcely a fortnight passes away without the suppression of one or more of the Socialist organs in the feudal land of the Hapsburg reactionaries.

At Prague, comrade Joseph Ulrich and Franz Michalek have been sentenced for high treason to six and three years imprisonment with hard labour. Their "crime" merely consisted in the distribution of two Anarchist papers, entitled Pombsta and Revoluce. Besides, comrades Joseph Gabriel and Johann Bartosch, for not having denounced the action of their two friends, have been sentenced each to fifteen months' imprisonment with hard labour!

SWITZERLAND.

Last Friday, Socialists of all nationalities were assembled at the cemetery of Geneva, in order to assist in the inauguration of the monument erected to the memory of Johann Philip Becker, the veteran revolutionist who, for half a century, struggled in the ranks of the workers for the cause of justice and freedom. The German Deputy, William Liebknecht, made a very impressive speech, retracing Becker's career; Favon, Deputy to the National Swiss Council, following him, urging upon those assembled the necessity of union for international success of the workers' claims; then Héridier, in the name of the Central Revolutionary Committee of Lyons, paid a tribute of homage to the soldier of the revolutionary cause, and citizen Schrac spoke for the Swiss Socialists. The citizens Viveg, Engell, and Delafontaine replied in the name of Becker's family.

NORWAY.

Socialism is making good progress in that little land, in spite of the persecutions that our comrades there have to suffer. Their Socialist organs are steadily increasing; a few weeks ago, a new paper defending Anarchist ideas was started at Trondjem. It is entitled Nye Tid (New Time).

POLAND.

The Polish emigration at Paris has started a new monthly review under the title of Pobudka (Daybreak Reveille). Comrade L. Mengès acts as manager of the magazine, and its offices are established at the Librairie Kéva, 7, rue Berthelot. The Polish Socialists have never been able to fully grasp the international character of the social revolution: hence they call themselves Polish Nationalists-Socialists, and they believe in what is called the principle of nationalities. They declare the social question to be inseparable from that of the independence of Poland as a nation, and act and write accordingly. Every man and every nation having an indisputable right to exist and to fully develop their natural forces, their aim is to realise that principle in Poland; therefore they first struggle for the political independence of their country from alien yoke, and only afterwards they want to upset the actual economical and social state of things, based on wage-system and private ownership, which course seems to us inconsistent, since political freedom would not alter one jot the economical condition under which the Polish people are now compelled to live their miserable lives, exactly as the national independence of Switzerland and its larger so-called political liberties do not in the very least affect the material welfare of its inhabitants.

V. D.

ITALY.

The Roman riots of the 8th of February have served the government as a pretext for a ferocious prosecution of all the known Socialists of Italy. In Rome itself, according to L'Emancipazione, within ten days after the riots, more than a thousand arrests have been made. About seven hundred of the victims, being provincials, have been brought to their native places, whilst the remaining three hundred have been committed for trial under the double charge of conspiracy against the State, and the organisation of armed bands for the purpose of plunder and destruction. It will be difficult, even to the vile instruments of a corrupt Government, to sustain these charges. At any rate, we have to expect a monster process equal only to the infamous prosecutions of former times in the Papal and the Bourbonic States, or the provinces under Austrian rule.

At Milano, the authorities—acting on the sound principle that prevention is better than cure—made wholesale arrests to prevent a repetition of the Roman riots. From Torino, Genova, Spezia, and other places, nightly domiciliary visits and arrests of many well-known popular leaders are reported. Despite all this, the hunger demonstrations and small riots of the unemployed form an unbroken chain through the whole kingdom. A marked feature in the movement is the agricultural element. The misery among the peasant folk in Sicilia, Romagna, Le Puglie, Mantova, Como, and other provinces, is heartrending, and not conceivable for an English workman. In Como, the agricultural workers (wage-slaves like others in the whole of Italy) threaten a general strike. The authorities have sent soldiery from Milano for the protection of the masters.

Amongst the numerous sentences lately passed against Socialists, there is an infamous piece of class justice which merits record. On March 28th, 1888, a bomb was thrown at the door of the Livorno Cathedral without doing bodily harm to anybody. An Anarchist of that town, Fortunato Gerbi, was suspected and taken into custody. After a prolonged judicial enquiry, during which he was kept in jail, he was brought before a Florence jury who found him guilty. He was sentenced to penal servitude for 11 years, though his guilt was by no means established. He ought to have been tried at Livorno, but so weak was the evidence against him that the public prosecutor did not venture to bring him before a jury of Livorno men, who are well known for their progressive ideas and honesty of judgment. It is rumoured that the authorities, encouraged by their success, will bring four other Livorno Anarchists before the same reactionary tribunal in order to secure a conviction. The Italian government may take a leaf out of Mr. Balfour's book, and get their Anarchists put before the tribunal of Removables specially appointed for the purpose of dispensing class justice.

H. SCH.

SPAIN.

MADRID.—On Sunday the 17th, the representatives in this city of the Labour Party joined forces with the "Socialist Group of Madrid," and held a very successful meeting in the Felipe theatre. There was some good speaking, which was listened to closely and with applause by the audience, and numerous letters and telegrams of greeting and sympathy were read. Meetings were held also by the Socialists of Malaga, Valencia, Bilbao, and Tarragona, etc.

M. M.

SOCIALISM IN NORFOLK.

We arrived in the quaint old city of Norwich after a sharp ride of three hours from the great Inferno—London. A large number of comrades of the branch received us at the station, and hand-shaking and hearty greetings followed. On reaching the Gordon Hall, a further muster of comrades were there to receive us, whose eagerness to make us comfortable proved them to have fully imbibed that spirit of brotherhood, so necessary to make good Socialists. After some talk, the comrades rendered some revolutionary songs, and thus we passed a very pleasant evening.

Next morning (Sunday) we went to Yarmouth, comrades Reynolds and Ruffeld meeting us at the station, who are certainly to be commended for their earnestness for the Cause. On arriving at Priory Plain, a large audience quickly collected, whose earnest interest in the doctrines we preach was obviously apparent. It was evident, too, that our position has been greatly strengthened by the fight for free speech which took place there last year. We are sure to have a very strong branch here soon, and no doubt when the great struggle between the rich idlers and the poor workers takes place, Yarmouth will be among the first to proclaim the Commune.

Large and enthusiastic meetings were held in Norwich on our return there. The good seed sown in Norwich during the past few years is still bearing fruit, despite the great loss sustained by the return of comrade Mowbray to London. The gap caused thereby, however, is being ably and effectively filled by the energetic members of the branch.

H. DAVIS AND MRS. SCHACK.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, April 1, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1889:—Clerkenwell and Mitcham, to end of February. Leicester, North London, and East London, to end of March.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Membership Cards can now be had by the Branches at 9d. per dozen from Central Office.

The Article, published in No. 152 of Weal, Dec. 8th, 1888, addressed to "Working Women and Girls," is now being issued by the Propagandist Committee in leaflet form for distribution, at 3s. 6d. per 1,000.

Propaganda Committee.—The Committee meets on Tuesday, April 2nd, for the discussion of important business. Branches are asked to assist the Propaganda Committee in circulating Samuel's leaflet, "A Straight Talk to Working-men," by purchasing 500 or a 1,000 copies, as expenses are very heavy. The price per 1,000 will be announced. Orders to be sent to the Secretary of Propaganda Committee, 13, Farringdon Road, E.C.

Propaganda Fund.—Jean Armand Byl, 6d.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.
FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—H. Schmitt, 1s.; Mrs. Schack, 1s.; J. Presburg, 1s.; Blundell, 1s.; R. Turner, 2s.; J. Turner, 1s.; Kitz, 1s.; Kinfel, 1s.; Seglie, 1s.; B. W., 1s.; Nicoll, 1s.; S. Presburg, 1s.; Tilley, 1s.; and Rose, 6d. North London Branch, 2s.; Norwich Branch (Mar. 13th), 3s. 0d. and 2s. 2d.
Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

BLOOMSBURY.—In the absence of the lecturer at Percy Hall, Percy Street, Tottenham Court Road, last Sunday evening, G. Cores opened a discussion on "Communist Anarchism and the use of Physical Force." A good debate followed, in which Doughty, Humphreys, Parker, and others took part; Mrs. Lahr was in the chair. We are now boycotted by the proprietor of this hall, who fears the respectables who rent the place from time to time, will not continue their patronage if Socialists are tolerated there. Comrades are asked to turn up on Sunday afternoon in order to hear latest arrangements.—W. B. P.

BROAD STREET.—A procession marched from Hyde Park here last Sunday evening; Mrs. Lahr and Parker were the speakers. Good meeting.—W. B. P.

CLERKENWELL.—On Sunday, March 24, Mowbray in chair, D. Nicoll lectured on "The English Revolutionary Movement, 1815-17, Spa-field Riots and Derbyshire Insurrection." This lecture was given in place of comrade Sparling's (as advertised) "Luxury now, Necessity then," it being announced with regret that he was confined to his bed on account of illness. Comrade Sparling has promised to lecture at a later period, which will be duly announced. The hall was well filled with very attentive audience. Good meeting on the Green by Mowbray and Brookes.—S. P.

EAST LONDON.—A good opening meeting was held at Gibraltar Walk on Sunday morning, which promises to be a most excellent station; Charles and Cores addressed the audience here. In Victoria Park in the afternoon, Davis, Cores, Charles, and Hicks, spoke to a long and successful meeting. Mr. Hoffman, a courteous opponent, took exception to the Anarchistic tendency of the speeches, but was well replied to by Charles and Davis. Next Sunday at 4 p.m., the points raised will be further discussed by comrade Charles and Mr. Hoffman.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting held last Sunday, 11 a.m., at Latimer Road, and we had a large and appreciative audience; speakers were Dean, Crouch, Lyne, sen., and Maughan, assisted by choir; and by the efforts of our comrade Lynes, we sold all our Commonweal. We held a good meeting at Weltje Road at 7 p.m.; speakers were Dean, Tarleton, Lyne, sen., and Maughan; choir sang 'The Proletariat.' Fair sale of Commonweal. The comrades in this district (Latimer Road), intend to extend their efforts shortly in the neighbourhood of North Kensington.—G. M.

HYDE PARK.—As we are getting crowded into a corner of the park away from the Marble Arch, under the pretext of protecting some new grass sown where we have spoken for 4 years, we made a start on our old ground. Parker opened, and was immediately requested to go to the other side of the park, and after a conference with the two police-inspectors we agreed to use the space pointed out to us, and if we found it unsuitable to take further steps to contest the point; in the meantime we would interview the Office of Works. A good crowd followed us to the spot indicated. Parker opened, and was followed by Mrs. Lahr, Mainwaring, Groser, and Cantwell. Commonweal sold out and 1s. 10d. collected. Pamphlets also sold well.—T. C.

NORTH LONDON.—At Regent's Park, owing to speaker not appearing till a quarter to one, a rather short meeting was held. 30 Commonweal sold and some pamphlets; 1s. 10d. collected.

ABERDEEN.—Large and attentive meeting at Castle Street on Saturday night, addressed by Aiken and Leatham. Quite a flood of questioning at the close, the meeting being prolonged for three hours. At indoor meeting on 25th, comrade Bateman's rousing pamphlet, "Socialism and Soldiering," read and discussed.

EDINBURGH.—Through inadvertence, report of Commune celebration here not sent last week. We had enthusiastic meeting. Two French comrades who fought for the Commune in '71 were present. Usual revolutionary toasts drunk, and songs sung. Lebeau sang "La Carmagnole," and Melliet, Davidson, Donaldson, Gilray, and Glasse spoke.

GLASGOW.—Kropotkin's meeting on Sunday was a great success. The hall was crowded, 1,500 being present, although admission was by payment at door. Cunninghame Graham, M.P., rode thirty miles in the rain from Gartmore to take the chair, and was in capital form—his speech from the chair full of characteristic spirit and epigram. Kropotkin, whose subject was "Problems of our Century: What has been done to solve them, and what remains to do," spoke with remarkable fluency and force. He gave a comprehensive survey of the economic and social changes of the century, and pointed out the manifold evidences of the inevitable approach of a Socialist régime. At the conclusion he answered several questions, his replies being received with great applause. A resolution in favour of Socialism was moved by Downie, seconded by Leo Melliet in an admirable speech, and carried with only few dissentients. Shaw Maxwell then delivered a spirited speech, and Pollock and Glasier also spoke. Several new members joined, and over eight quires of Commonweal and nearly six quires of Freedom were sold. The meeting was well reported in the local press—an unusual act of grace.

NORWICH.—On Monday the 19th inst., we concluded the celebration of the Commune by holding a social meeting in the Gordon Hall; a very enjoyable evening was spent; the chair was taken by comrade Morley; comrade Davis opened with an address, followed by Mrs. Schack, upon "How women can help the Socialist movement." Mrs. Schack made a special appeal to the females present. This was followed by revolutionary songs and recitations, given by members, comrade Davis, and Mrs. Schack—the latter recited in the German language. The Celebration was brought to a close at a very late hour by singing the "Marseillaise," and concluded with three hearty cheers for the Social Revolution.

—On Sunday last, in the morning, a large number of old Commonweal were distributed in the surrounding villages. In the afternoon, the usual open-air meeting was held in the Market Place, addressed by comrades Darley and Poynts: our audience was somewhat detracted from the speakers, through one or two individuals raising a discussion on the outskirts of the meeting. In the evening, Poynts lectured in the Gordon Hall to a fair audience—subject, "Slavery"; chair taken by comrade Emery. Several questions asked, and discussion followed; comrades Emery, Adams, and W. Moore took part. Fair sale of Weal.

YARMOUTH.—A very good meeting held on Priory Plain Sunday afternoon. Ruffold opened the meeting with a few well-chosen remarks, after which Reynolds gave a lengthy address, dealing more especially with the drink question, and religion. The audience very attentive. Sold 16 Commonweal, and collected 2s. 7d. Several members joined during past week.—C. R.

IPSWICH PIONEER DEBATING CLASS.—Good debate held here last Sunday night on the "Local Government Bill," in which comrades Thomas and Creed took part, besides several others. Comrade Thomas showed the fallacy of representation, and maintained that we ought to do things for ourselves instead of trusting it to others. Creed opens the debate next Sunday on "Organised Labour," comrade Thomas in chair.—M. CREED.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Bloomsbury.—Percy Hall, Percy Street, Tottenham Court Road.
Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card, to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30. Lecture on Sunday March 31, at 8.30., Frank Kitz, "The Freiheit Prosecution by the English Government."

East London.—Next meeting of members on Sunday March 31st, at 8 p.m., at 97 Boston Street, Hackney Road. Important business. Members, attend.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend.

Hammersmith.—Kelmescott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday March 31st, Percival Chubb (Fabian Society), "Work and its Reward." Thursday April 4, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 5th, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion on some point of interest in the propaganda. Sunday April 7, at 8 p.m., J. Hunter Watts.

Hoxton.—Comrades desiring to help in the propaganda of the Socialist League in this locality are requested to send their names and addresses to H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary.

Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 4½ Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.

Dumlee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street.

Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.

Galashiels (Scot Sect.).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secretary.

Gallatown and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.

Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 9 a.m., comrades distributing Commonweal will meet in Gordon Hall; at 8 p.m., a lecture by comrade Adams—subject, "True History of the Commune." Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8.30, Discussion Class—subject, 'Co-operative Commonwealth.' Monday, Thursday, and Friday, Gordon Hall open from 8 p.m. Sunday April 7, W. Moore, "Socialism: some of its objections."

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Tuesdays at 8 p.m. On Sunday, comrades Morley and Houghton, of Norwich, will come over and help us; therefore two meetings will be held—in the morning at 11 a.m.; afternoon at 3 p.m.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SATURDAY 30.

8 Mile-end Waste S. Presburg, Cores, and McCormick.

SUNDAY 31.

11.30..... Bethnal Green—Gibraltar Walk Davis, Hicks, and Mrs. Schack.
11.30..... Latimer Road Station The Branch.
11.30..... Mitcham Fair Green C. W. Mowbray.
11.30..... Regent's Park Parker and Mainwaring.
11.30..... Walham Green, opposite Station The Branch.
11.45..... Leman Street, Shadwell Turner and Mowbray.
3.30..... Hyde Park Parker, Nicoll, Mrs. Lahr.
3.30..... Victoria Park McCormick, Hoffman, and Charles.
7 Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park Hammersmith Branch.
7.30..... Broad Street, Soho Mrs. Lahr and Parker.
7.30..... Clerkenwell Green Mowbray and Kitz.

TUESDAY 2.

8 Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch.

THURSDAY 4.

8.15..... Hoxton Church Mrs. Lahr and Charles.
8 Ossulton Street Mrs. Lahr and Cantwell.

FRIDAY 5.

8 Philpot Street, Commercial Road Charles and McCormick.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, at 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower Marsh, Lambeth.—Sunday March 31, at 8 p.m., William Morris, "Equality."

LIMEHOUSE BRANCH S.D.F., 339 Burdett Road, E.—F. Charles lectures at 8 o'clock on Sunday evening, April 7th—subject, "What's to be done during a Revolutionary Period."

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. . 2d.
 Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d.
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Price 1d.; Post-free, 1½d.

THE RIGHTS OF LABOUR ACCORDING TO JOHN RUSKIN.

Arranged by THOMAS BARCLAY.
Second Edition.

"Your pamphlet is the best abstract of all the most important pieces of my teachings that has yet been done; and I am entirely grateful to you for doing it, and glad to have your letter."—Extract from letter received from Mr. Ruskin.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C

SOCIALIST SONGS

FOR

POPULAR SINGING.

A Handy Collection. Contains 33 effective pieces from the pens of William Morris, Edward Carpenter, C. W. Beckett, J. Bruce Glasier, D. J. Nicoll, H. Halliday Sparling, and others. A number reprinted from the Commonweal and other sources. Should be in the hands of all Socialists.

Twopence. 1s. 4d. a-dozen.

Orders to be addressed to JAMES LEATHAM,
7 Jamaica Street, Aberdeen.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.
PRICE 1s.

COMMONWEAL OFFICE, 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

WORKS BY JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

- Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.
The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

- Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE.
Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

LA REVUE SOCIALISTE.

EDITED BY BENOIT MALON.

8, Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SUMMARY OF THE MARCH NUMBER.

"Rabelais and the Church," F. Audiger; "Taxes," A. Weber; "The Socialism of Blanqui," B. Malon; "Hours of Labour," P. Argyriades; "Positive Politics," H. Aimel; "Socialism among Inferior Beings," J. Sagnol; "Instruction and Socialism," N. Tesseyre; "Socialism in Hungary," B. Malon; "The Referendum," Rittinghausen and de Laveleye; "Poetry," E. Herbel; "Anthology," George, V. Hugo, Lange; "Social Movement," A. Weber, J. Sagnol; "Bibliography," J. Sagnol; "Obituary," G. Havet.

TERMS:—France, 6 months 9 francs, 12 months, 18 f.
 Abroad, " 10 " " 20.
 Payments to be made to M. Rodolphe Simon, 8 Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by

H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

THE DEMOCRATIC REVIEW.

EDITED BY LOTHROP WITHINGTON.

LONDON 1882, 8vo 160 pp.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of this pioneer revolutionary miscellany are still obtainable. Price 6d. each number, post free 6½d. Office of Commonweal.

OUR NATIONAL CAKE:

WHO MAKES IT, AND WHO EATS IT.

Large display poster to bring home the aims of Socialism to the workers.

Sent free on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage. J. J. Harrison, 44 Oxford Street, Sheffield.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Library Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
 Vol. III., AUTUMN . . . seventh edition 12s.
 Vol. IV., WINTER . . . seventh edition 12s.

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo,
at 2s. 6d. each.

ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE ÆNEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond. A Morality.

Square 12mo, 143 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction.

With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

JULIUS BORDOLLO'S

LABOUR NEWS AGENCY

213 Forsyth Street, New York City, U.S.A.

American agency for the Commonweal. All Labour literature kept in stock. Send for list, post free.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 169.

SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

A SUNDAY CLOSING BILL (second reading) has been passed by a House of Commons which is very susceptible to the voting power of any solid body of the public. M.P.'s know not only that the teetotallers are a large and well-organised set of people, but also that they will go to the poll at election time. Meantime, the said members do not trouble themselves in the least about the real wants and hopes of the mass of the people, and so between carelessness as to the lives of the people and anxiety about their votes, if these can only be gathered together in formidable proportions, they pass measures like this bill of Mr. Stevenson's, a gross and abominable piece of oppression, a measure fit only for a set of helots, while they allow the public to be poisoned by any and every commercial rascal who finds that in the competitive race for position, water and chemicals are more for his purpose (selling for profit) than the result of properly fermented malt and hops.

John Bright is dead, and the newspapers have been busy heaping up a dung-heap of rotten nonsense over his dead body. The first thing that must strike any thoughtful and dispassionate observer, is that for any public purpose "the Great Tribune" has been dead several years. For the rest, it is fair to say that the man was personally honest always; but so essentially blood bone and soul a middle-class person, that he could not escape from the conventionalities of that class, i.e., from its innate hypocrisy. He was utterly incapable of imagining himself in the position of any one outside the great commercial middle-class; to him that class included all the human reality of society. The upper class was a mere perverse obstruction to the progress of Podsnap; the lower, mere machinery to enable Podsnap to carry on his business. Business and the kind of family affection, and the kind of religion suitable to it, were the whole duty of man, and anything which came in its way was to be sternly swept aside.

In this view of life John Bright was singularly consistent. Some Home Rule Radicals wondered that he should turn anti-Gladstonian in his last days; it would have been wonderful if he had not. For in these later days the Irish Question has begun to look towards revolution, and against that Bright always set his face most determinedly.

It would have argued genius and quickness of wit in Bright, neither of which qualities he ever had, if he could at any time of his life have perceived that he himself was engaged in a war continuous and implacable, the war of commerce. But what he could see as war he did genuinely hate; nor did he favour a war, as more dishonest persons of his way of thinking have done, because it was a war of the market, a crime necessary to commerce.

No one who was not in this respect a man of principle, could have assumed the attitude which he did at the time of the Crimean War. Though he was hated bitterly at that time by the Whigs and Tories, he was very popular with the advanced Liberals, and, to do Bright justice, he was no man to seek for popularity from his enemies. Well, this popularity he threw away at the bidding of principle, as he saw it, coolly and deliberately, and became the very outcast of politics. I remember well the fury of hatred against him, which could not have been surpassed if he had proposed to meddle with the property of the rich. The sacramental phrase was, "I should like to hang John Bright."

A middle-class, repentant of having so mauled their true and steady champion, is now heaping fulsome flattery on his unconscious head; and one enthusiast was especially anxious that he should be buried with all the honours in Westminster Abbey. Truly a solace for the dead worth having! To form one of the gang of fools, rogues, and ruffians, whose capacity for pushing themselves into notoriety is expressed in a series of undertaker's lies, whose outward hideousness pollutes the most beautiful building ever raised in England by the hands and hearts of the people. Whatever wrongs we may have against John Bright, we would not revenge ourselves by thus ticketing him fool and dunce.

W. M.

A man has been murdered by London policemen for being "violent." He resisted arrest, and they gave him the "frog's march," under which treatment he died. Of course all respectable people sympathise with the policemen under whose hands it happened, and say, "How sad for them!" Recognising that respectable society is only upheld by the police, they feel, though few of them dare say it frankly, that whoever resists their lawful authority merits any fate, however horrible it be, that his contumacy may bring upon him. Still it cannot be difficult for any ordinarily humane person to see that the "frog's march" is one of those brutalities which only degraded and cowardly ruffians are capable of inflicting on their fellow-men, but which, in proportion to their degradation and cowardice, they delight in inflicting.

As it is the inevitable outcome of their occupation that policemen should be degraded and demoralised, those who employ them, if they make pretence to humanity, should see that there are some limits laid down, within which the lambs of law-'n'-order might be told to restrain their ferocity. The coroner at the inquest on the victim of the "frog's march" said that his treatment was illegal, and seemed under the impression that so much restraint at least on the freedom of action of the police would be salutary. But the Chief of Police, Mr. Matthews, would not have his men hampered "in the exercise of their duty," and "was not prepared to prohibit the 'frog's march.'"

Could not some one suggest to the House of Commons that it do resolve itself into a Committee of Investigation and adjourn to the terrace, there to see Mr. Matthews frog's-marched by four stalwart constables of the A Division, specially selected for tenderness? If Mr. Matthews' nose were skinned by contact with the gravel, and the breath knocked out of him by one or two bumps of his stomach against the ground, it would add an interesting and instructive touch of realism to the scene, and give honourable legislators an idea of how the laws they make are administered.

Henry Broadhurst, Esq., M.P., is to have a banquet of honour at the National Liberal Club. This is, of course, by way of counter-manifesto to the charges made and proved against him; of endorsing his denial of responsibility to the men he used to be supposed to represent; and of adopting him definitely into the Great Liberal Party. That is all right now, so far as it goes, but there may come a time when those who now crowd to get tickets will be even more anxious to explain away their presence on such an occasion. Stranger things have happened.

JOHN BRIGHT.

"Who shall dwell in thy holy hill? . . . He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour; . . . he that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved."

"He hath said in his heart, I shall not be moved: for I shall never be in adversity. His mouth is full of cursing and deceit and fraud: under his tongue is mischief and vanity. He sitteth in the lurking places of the villages: in the secret places doth he murder the innocent: his eyes are privily set against the poor. He lieth in wait secretly as a lion in his den: he lieth in wait to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net. He croucheth and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall by his strong ones."

As an infant at my mother's knee I was almost taught to consider but two men dwelling with in the four seas of Britain as worthy of love and respect, Richard Cobden and John Bright. We are all doomed to pass our lives picking our path through the painful fragments of shattered idols scattered along our way, and generally come to the conclusion that it is folly to lift any miserable human personality to the position of a pattern, much less to that of a god. We learn by cruel experience to reserve our respect for ideas, and our aid for truth from whatever initiative, being of necessity always on the alert for betrayal in the most trusted quarters. The dangers of hero-worship are strikingly illustrated in the careers of Bright and Cobden. These two have been the stock subjects of adulation during our era for the "women and fools," but when the stern and sober warriors of the social war are arming for the death-grapple they are in no humour for such chatter as the death of the last of the "free trade twins," has deluged us all with during the past week. This adulation needs a sharp rebuke. "There's mischief in 't," as the playor says.

Bright and Cobden deserve no love, no praise, no imitation. We can allow for their shortcomings, their ignorance, their bigotry, their mistaken ideals. We have no call to join in a hurrah to their honour. They were the avowed champions of the "commercial classes," the people who would wish to turn England into one vast combination of pawn-shop and sweater's den, living on buying and selling, faking up deceitful wares for alluring the eye of the ignorant foreigner, inducing him to purchase what he did not need or ought to have made for himself, while he was cajoled into feeding and clothing the denizens of England as a sort of humble tribute for their condescension in patronising him. In one of the brutal blurring moods of Cobden, he gloated with a sort of fiendish satisfaction upon the pall of death which his cunning schemes had brought upon the handicrafts of many lands, and warned in thunder tones the only too greedy English ears that any thwarting of Cobdenite doctrines would re-awaken the independence of the foreigner. With sickening obstinacy, Bright never tired of proclaiming the British shopocracy as the possessors of all the virtues, supporters of all the rest of Society, and inventors of all human blessings.

At this day there are thousands of homes of the toilers and poverty-ridden victims of commercialism decorated with a portrait of John Bright, looked up to as a sort of shrine or holy grail. Poor fools! There is little salvation in that smug and selfish countenance! The poor and outcast were to John Bright objects of simple toleration and contemptuous pity. He never had a glimmering of the sense of manhood and its paramount rights above the possession of that which moth and rust can corrupt and thieves break through and steal! Yet he was a nominal follower of George Fox, bred of an ancestry which had fought for human freedom and human equality; fought, not by the miserable use of indiscriminate violence, but by patient suffering and persistent refusal to bow down to the dictates of oppression. The fatal malady which corrupted the moral nature of John Bright is the same which has been fatal to his sect, to Jews, to every body of erst time champions for freedom who become themselves enslavers of their fellow-beings. It is more fatal to wrong than to be wronged, to oppress than to be oppressed. The Quakers and Jews who become exploiters of labour, instead of rebukers of authority, necessarily become dabblers in all the sins their ancestors have denounced and tried to eradicate.

John Bright was born in an age when he and his people, instead of living by the sweat of their face, lived by the sweat of the face of others, "putting out money to usury," "taking reward against the innocent"; and the "backbiting" and "doing evil to one's neighbour" follow as the night the day. It is a very pretty phrase, "free trade," having an attractive ring to the uninitiated, especially the word "free," as if it were allied to any real freedom. Ask nine out of ten men what were the earliest energies of John Bright as a legislator directed to in the main, and he will answer, "Why, to free trade, of course." Nothing can be more mistaken. Instead of using his first year in Parliament as an advocate of any species of freedom, John Bright spent that golden age of youthful strength in battling with angry vehemence for bare-faced slavery, just as his co-conspirator Gladstone made his maiden speech as a special pleader for filthy lucre for the sale of his father's slaves (after the fashion of Westminster, taking it as a first duty to look after his own pockets before the slower business of humbugging the yokels begins). Not that Gladstone and Bright had much in common, or were ever in full fellowship. It is interesting to note that Bright's first words in the House of Commons were a rebuke to the "flimsy excuses" of Gladstone, which the latter was assured would not serve him "before the bar of public opinion."

In the twin capitals of modern commercialism, London and New York, it has been a remarkable coincidence that two men of the same name (in fact, really not very distant cousins, had they been of Scotch blood) stood out as champions of labour against the unlimited greed of the plutocrats. In London, Anthony Cooper; in New York, Peter Cooper. It was against the tireless efforts of Anthony Cooper, then known as Lord Ashley, that John Bright first raised his envenomed speech, battling for three years against Lord Ashley's attempts to protect the factory slaves in some small measure. With great complaisance Bright paraded the fact that, at his own factory, the children could earn over a penny an hour and the full-grown men threepence, but as to limiting their toil to eleven hours a-day, why the British Empire would be in danger. At length, in 1846, after Lord Ashley had been partially successful in regard to other legislation, the tribune of the people (and of the factory sweating-masters) was rewarded by defeating the general eleven-hour bill on a close division—only ten majority in a house of four hundred. The division-list tells its own story. Names which have a sinister sound to the ears of English workmen crop up in the majority. A Baring was one of the tellers. Two other Barings are on the roll. Following on after Bright, among others, come Bouverie, Carnegie, Cobden, Drummond, Hope, Hume, Labouchere, Peel, Ricardo, etc., etc., the political economy gradgrinds, and henchmen of the swarms of Scotch, Dutch, and Jewish stockbrokers who have swooped down upon England since the seventeenth century. The broken and degraded remnants of the old English aristocracy, just beginning to recognise that they had sold their noble birthright to Shylock for a very small mess of the pottage of temporary debauchery, now tropped in blind rage into the other lobby; not out of much love for the toiler, but out of hatred for the common despoiler, the money-grubber. Among the number were also some names dear to English literature—Sheridan, Macaulay, Disraeli, etc. There is food for study in that famous division-list. It is much more significant than the Book of Kings. It should teach the workers that no man can serve both them and Mammon.

John Bright was ever foremost in denouncing distant inequities; always reforming some one's else house. He had a horror of the slavery of other lands; he advocated turning England into one vast slave-shop of the cruellest kind. It was all moral to him as long as every man (who possessed sufficient cunning and hardness of heart) had an equal chance of becoming himself a slave-driver. This was his idea of "freedom of trade." No disturbing fancies ever seemed to float across his vision that there was anything wrong in his being enabled to saunter in ease about Pall Mall upon the cruel confinement and ceaseless industry of factory slaves in Yorkshire or Lancashire. He salved his conscience with the idea that his factory was no worse (perhaps better) than others. Just as his brother factory-lord, Samuel Morley, used to pose as a philanthropist on flinging about bounties which he never earned and about which he never consulted the men who did earn them, so John Bright considered himself a heaven-ordained minister to tell the foolish workmen what to think and what to do.

All the rats of the public press are now beslobbering over John Bright's memory, just as they have denounced him when that was supposed to be their proper cue. What they say of him now is as foolish as what they have said in the past. They regret in one case his falling away from his principles in later years; or exult, on the other hand, that he saw the error of his early ways. As a fact, John Bright never budged from his beaten track. The cackling Kelts who have been dinning our ears of late years with denunciations of the man, were themselves the silly dupes who used to cheer him to the echo in former years when he was as "falsely true" to his present position as of late. It was their inability to understand his real value. He never advocated the rights of man; he never advocated the enfranchisement of toil; he never favoured anything but the most bitter waging of the social war, reserving all his dislike for mere political blood-spilling (which to his jealous eye was waste of powder for the benefit of the aristocrats he hated).

The corrupting cancer of selfish money-grubbing destroys all true morality. The iniquitous business of stealing the product of your fellow-man has to be upheld by unlimited lying, perhaps uncscious in the case of John Bright, but lying all the same. All his life, like all men who have hardened their heart against the poor, his mouth was "full of cursing and deceit and fraud." When Feargus O'Connor dares to utter these truthful words in the House of Commons—

"If he were asked to place his hand upon the men who lived exclusively upon the sinew, marrow, bones, and blood of women and children, if he could group them all in one lump, he would put his hand upon the master manufacturers. If there were ever a body of tyrants which existed in any country, it was the manufacturers of England."

as a challenge to John Bright and his mates, the pious "tribune of the people" has not a word of defence, but "croucheth and humbleth himself," gives a cowardly whine about "coarse vituperation," and meanly taunts poor Feargus with his social failure, as if that had anything to do with the issue! But bare-faced lying was also necessary. Only a few years ago John Bright had the audacity to proclaim that in his past career he "was in favour of legislation restricting the labour and guarding the health of children." Listen to the "tribune of the people" "his eyes privily set against the poor," seeking to "murder the innocent" in the "secret places," "to catch the poor" in "his net":

"Messrs. Kennedy and Company were employing upwards of 130 children under thirteen years of age; yet, in a short time, so annoyed were they by the interference of the inspectors appointed under the Act, that they became disgusted, and dismissed from their employment—many other proprietors doing the same—the entire 130 children. So that the only effect of the protective clauses introduced into the Act was to cause the dismissal of these children. He (Mr. Bright) was satisfied that the tendency of legislation such as they had heard advocated there that night was neither convenient for those engaged in trade nor benevolent to those employed, and that they could not follow worse counsel than that suggested by the noble lord (Lord Ashley) and his friends. Nothing could be more fatal to the trade than the course which it was desired to pursue; and nothing could be more fatal, he would add, to their own legislation; for let them press the matter a little tighter than they had done, and the time was not distant when they would be called upon to retrace the whole of their legislation with regard to this question."

It is almost dangerous to give full vent to one's indignation over this utterance. I'm afraid our impulsive friend Othello would blurt out, "He's like a liar gone to burning hell." But to me the man who uttered these shameful, cunning, selfish phrases was nothing, is nothing. He was what nature made him, narrow, sordid, and cunning, ignorant and insolent. He was honest after his feeble light; villainously dishonest after a nobler standard. My indignation is reserved for a section of the aforesaid cackling Kelts whose venal pens bristle all over the despicable newspaper press of London, who are to-day servilely lauding this piece of broken clay; for the five millions of human atoms, "mostly fools," who swallow this dictum as the unanimous utterance of the town (according to Mr. Gladstone); for the degraded nation and the degraded age which allows such men to be our guiding stars. "These be thy gods, O Israel!"

The only excuse for John Bright is sheer ignorance. He may have supposed himself opposed to slavery when he lived upon the enforced labour of others; he may have supposed himself opposed to brutal warfare when his position depended upon organised and universal murder; he may have supposed himself in favour of free agency among workmen when he upheld laws which keep their face to the grindstone; he may have thought he had given the poor a benefit by "cheaper bread," when he believed in depriving them of all bread except at the supreme pleasure of himself and his fellow task-masters. All I can say is that his ignorance was ethereal. His contempt for the poor (as also his ceaseless venom against Robert Owen and all social reformers) was simply loathsome in a pretended follower of Jesus of Nazareth. Here is his notorious "residuum" speech:—

"I have always been in favour of household suffrage. I believe that the solid and ancient basis of the suffrage is that all persons who are rated to some tax should be admitted to the franchise. There is a small class which it would be much better for themselves if they were not enfranchised, because they have no independence whatsoever, and it would be much better for the constituency also that they should be excluded, and there is no class so much interested in having that small class excluded as the intelligent and honest working-men. I call this class the residuum, which there is in almost every constituency, of almost hopeless poverty and dependence."

Now this man could have had no idea of human rights as originating in humanity. His division line, of course, must come from so-called "property," even among his "honest and intelligent working-men." Property consists in the right to steal the product of other people. To him "honesty" and "intelligence" implied this faculty. Doubtless he was too ignorant to understand this; it was only an instinct. This instinct dominates his whole class. A few weeks ago one of his near relatives (a woman) let out the secret in Kennington. She said the land agitation has caused "property to depreciate." Quite right, my lady. "Property" is likely to depreciate still further; it is like to disappear altogether. Nature knows no reason why you and yours should live by the labour of others. While you are sufficiently cunning, and the mob able to bear your pilferings in patience, all is well. But the over-burdened mule either succumbs or rebels at last.

George Fox made his own suit of leather, as Carlyle has rendered famous. George Fox required no "compromise with sin" to sustain him in a false position. His nominal followers to-day, foul with the disease of usury, play—

"such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep."

John Bright was the mouthpiece of these degraded beings. He was not like Gladstone, a scheming politician, ready to take any side, and plotting for applause and power. John Bright was the type of one of those two thieves (land and money) between which, as Bronterre O'Brien was fond of repeating, the cause of the workers is crucified. Because John Bright denounced the land robbers, the workers have been fools enough to trust in his saving arm. As a fact, there was nothing noble in Bright's hatred of the landlords. Bright represented the ancient "British" spirit, the real "residuum" of the queer mixed race of England, the stupid, unenlightened, bigoted, grasping, and servile element, which Romans, Angles, Danes, and Normans have rolled over in vain. There was nothing new or true in Bright's vulgar jibe about Disraeli's blood. The miserable Piers de Gaveston called Aymer de Valence "Joseph the Jew." John Bright knew nothing about the "English blood" of himself or of others. There was nothing about him which is associated with the real glory of the Anglo-Norman race. That race is not a race of cheap goods, of smoke-choked slaves, of the fairest island of earth turned into the blighting waste of steam-driven slave-dens. All this will pass away. A new generation will look back upon it all with horror and contempt, and wonder how a deluded people could ever have been wasted by such a social disease as produces such examples of human distortion as John Bright.

"O England, model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What might'st thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!"

L. W.

DUCKS AND FOOLS.

WHEN I was in Iceland, I was told about the habits of the eider ducks, which breed in great quantities in the little islets scattered about the firths there, and also of their treatment. They, of course, get their own living; they are pretty good to eat, but not very good; so they are not allowed to be shot, because they produce valuable down, which can be got at by the following process: They make their nests on the ground in the above-mentioned islets; the duck half strips her breast of the down to line her nest; this down is at once collared from the nest by those who are privileged to do so according to law. Then the duck pulls off the rest of her down, as she is anxious to sit and hatch; comes the legal owner of the down, and takes that also. Then comes the drake and half strips himself; this also the legal owner takes, grumbling because the drake's down is coarser, and also because his game is over; for now the poor devils of ducks would not hatch their eggs unless the drake were allowed to line the nest with all that remains to him. Therefore this time the down is not taken; the eggs are allowed to be hatched, so that in due time they may fulfil the function of their lives, and produce down for others' use. Moral: Ducks are obliged to stand this from Icelanders; but why Englishmen should stand similar usage from Englishmen is a curious question.

W. M.

EVICCTIONS IN LONDON.—A Parliamentary return has been issued, showing the number of warrants issued by justices under the Act 1 and 2 Vict., c. 74, for the recovery of possession of tenements within the metropolitan police district during the two years ended September 30, 1888. The divisions in which the largest number of warrants were issued are as follows: Whitehall, 378; St. James's, 235; Marylebone, 418; Finsbury, 702; Bethnal Green, 100; Whitechapel, 77; Lambeth, 87; Southwark, 281; Hammer-smith, 231; Wandsworth, 99. The total number of warrants was 2,757, and in 187 cases force was required to give effect to the warrant, these cases including 97 in Marylebone, 21 in Holborn, 22 in Bethnal Green, and 22 in Wandsworth. In three cases only was such force resisted—namely, in Marylebone, Finsbury, and Southwark.

FROM THE SLUMS.

WHAT care they for the lives we live,
Styed in a single room?
What thought, men, do these wealthy give
To all that is our doom?
What are the pauper lives to which
Our wants, our wives, condemn?
Our children's squalor—to the rich,
What are these things to them?
Of their æsthetic art they fuss;
They'd scorn to waste a thought on us.

Their sickly novel's loves and woes
May wake their cultured sighs;
Some spaniel or canary shows
How much their pets they prize;
We are but human flesh and blood;
We want—we starve;—what then?
We are not of their pack or stud;
Why should they care for men?
Of racer—pointer, they may fuss;
They'd scorn to waste a thought on us.

So be it; but we read at last;
To question Why we dare
One life is in an alley past,
One, in a wealthy square;
Why they to pampered lives are born,
We, starved lives to endure;
And if God made us for their scorn,
Or wills there shall be poor.
And at our clubs we dare discuss
Why they must differ so from us.

Why we are low—why they are high,
We reason all we can,
Yet fail to find the reason why
Man differs so from man.
We've blundered somehow into this,
Men's common rights forgot;
Now seems it that 'twere not amiss
That all should share one lot,
Should know one equal comfort thus,
Nor rich nor poor be known to us.

W. C. BENNETT.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING APRIL 13, 1889.

7	Sun.	1820. G. Klapka born. 1868. T. D'Arcy Magee shot. 1881. Irish Land Bill introduced.
8	Mon.	1801. Revolt at Warsaw. 1832. Co-operative Congress at Huddersfield. 1840. Bronterre O'Brien sentenced for sedition. 1848. Trial of Chartist rioters. 1848. Repeal banquet to O'Connell. 1867. Special Commission for trial of Fenians opens at Manchester. 1871. Monument to Ernest Jones unveiled in Ardwick Cemetery, Manchester. 1834. Serious labour-riot in Kidderminster, caused by importing "rat" weavers during a strike.
9	Tues.	1626. Lord Bacon died. 1797. Trial of John Gale Jones for sedition. 1817. Trial of William Edgar for administering unlawful oaths. 1834. Revolt at Lyons. 1869. Massacres at Seraing.
10	Wed.	1784. Viscount Strangford tried for acting criminally and corruptly as a Lord of Parliament, Ireland. 1820. Sir Charles Wolseley and Rev. Joseph Harrison tried for their "seditious" speeches at the Stockport meeting on the previous 28th of July. 1848. The great Chartist Demonstration on Kennington Common. 1833. Trial of the "Invincibles" began at Dublin.
11	Thur.	1814. Napoleon abdicated. 1839. E. Courmet born. 1887. Anti-Coercion Demonstration in Hyde Park; 150,000 present.
12	Fri.	1793. Phillips imprisoned for selling 'Rights of Man.' 1823. Second public meeting in the Rotunda, Dublin, to hear Robert Owen lecture. 1334. Defeat and massacre of the Lyons Socialists. 1858. Trial of Simon Bernard. 1867. The "Erin's Hope" ("Jaemel") sails from New York. 1871. Pierre Leroux died. 1878. Vera Zassulich acquitted of the killing of General Trepoff. 1879. Nihilist address to the Czar. 1885. Eight-hour labour-day demonstration in Hyde Park, held by the S.D.F.
13	Sat.	1593. Henry IV. of France issues the Edict of Nantes. 1812. Luddite riot at Leeds. 1829. Catholic Emancipation Bill passed. 1861. Taking of Fort Sumter begins American Civil War. 1872. Samuel Bamford died. 1886. J. H. Noyes died.

Vera Zassulich.—The acquittal of Vera Zassulich by a Russian jury made an epoch in the history of the Russian movement. General Trepoff (the Sir Charles Warren of St. Petersburg at that time) caused one of the political prisoners who were kept in the House of Detention to be flogged for not having taken his hat off before the General. Other prisoners confined in the walls of the same prison made a riot in their cells in order to prevent the disgraceful operation being performed, but they were beaten by warders till quite exhausted, and Bogoliuboff (the insulted prisoner) was flogged in spite of all that could be done. Outsiders did nothing. Officials, lawyers, authorities, and public men,—all knew what was going on in the prison, and none moved a finger to check the omnipotent Trepoff. But there appears in his office a humble, decently-dressed young girl, and presents him with a petition, accompanied by a revolver-bullet in the dictator's abdomen. Of course she was arrested, imprisoned, and tried; but the jury hated the General so much that they acquitted Vera Zassulich. The police and gendarmes tried to arrest her immediately after acquittal, but her friends and the enthusiastic crowd prevented it from being done, leaving one killed and several wounded on the spot. Vera has been living ever since in Switzerland.—TCH.

CLUB AUTONOME.—Lecture on "Anarchism," by James Harragan, on Sunday April 7th, at 3.45.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. H.—Your postcard came to hand too late for insertion of notice.
H. S. (Manchester).—Report came too late for insertion last week.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	105
John Bright	105
Ducks and Fools	107
From the Slums	107
Revolutionary Calendar—Vera Zasulich	107
Evictions in London	107
The Society of the Future (continued)	108
The "Frog's March"	109
Vigorous Speaking in a Scottish Pulpit	109
Jewish Cabinet-makers in Manchester	109
The Labour Struggle	110
Socialism in Aberdeen	110
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	111
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	112

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday April 3.

ENGLAND Church Reformer Justice Labour Elector Labour Tribune London—Freie Presse Norwich—Daylight Postal Service Gazette Railway Review Social Demokrat INDIA Bankipore—Behar Herald UNITED STATES New York—Der Sozialist Freiheit Truthseeker Volkzeitung Jewish Volkszeitung Workmen's Advocate United Irishman Boston—Woman's Journal Liberty	Chicago—Knights of Labor Vorbote Baeker Zeitung Detroit—Der Arnie Teufel Milwaukee—National Reformer Newark—Arbeiter-Zeitung San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal San Francisco—Pacific Union Valley Falls (Kan.)—Fair Play FRANCE Paris—L'Egalite (daily) Le Parti Ouvrier (daily) Le Proletariat La Revolte HOLLAND Hague—Recht voor Allen BELGIUM Ghent—Vooruit ANTWERP—De Werker	SWITZERLAND Arbeiterstimme ITALY Turin—Nuova Gazzetta Operaia Rome—L'Emanazione Milan—Il Fascio Operaio SPAIN Madrid—El Socialista Barcelona—El Productor PORTUGAL Lisbon—O Protesto Operario GERMANY Berlin—Volks Tribune AUSTRIA Brunn—Volksfreund Wien—Gleichheit DENMARK Social-Demokraten SWEDEN Stockholm, Social-Demokraten
--	--	--

THE SOCIETY OF THE FUTURE.

(Continued from p. 99.)

Well, but this demand for the extinction of asceticism bears with it another demand; for the extinction of luxury. Does that seem a paradox to you? It ought not to do so. What brings about luxury but a sickly discontent with the simple joys of the lovely earth? What is it but a warping of the natural beauty of things into a perverse ugliness to satisfy the jaded appetite of a man who is ceasing to be a man—a man who will not work, and cannot rest? Shall I tell you what luxury has done for you in modern Europe? It has covered the merry green fields with the hovels of slaves, and blighted the flowers and trees with poisonous gases, and turned the rivers into sewers; till over many parts of Britain the common people have forgotten what a field or a flower is like, and their idea of beauty is a gas-poisoned gin-palace or a tawdry theatre. And civilisation thinks that is all right, and it doesn't heed it; and the rich man practically thinks, 'Tis all right, the common people are used to it now, and so long as they can fill their bellies with the husks that the swine do eat, it is enough. And all for what? To have fine pictures painted, beautiful buildings built, good poems written? O no. Those are the deeds of the ages before luxury, before civilisation. Luxury rather builds clubs in Pall Mall, and upholsters them as though for delicate invalid ladies for the behoof of big whiskered men, that they may lounge there amidst such preposterous effeminacy that the very pushed-breeched flunkies that wait upon the loungers are better men than they are. I needn't go further than that: a grand club is the very representative of luxury.

Well, you see I dwell upon that matter of luxury, which is really the sworn foe of pleasure, because I don't want workmen even temporarily to look upon a swell club as a desirable thing. I know how difficult it is for them to look from out of their poverty and squalor to a life of real and manly pleasure; but I ask them to think that the good life of the future will be as little like the life of the present rich as may be: that life of the rich is only the wrong side of their own misery; and surely since it is the cause of the misery, there can be nothing enviable or desirable in it. When our opponents say, as they sometimes do, "How should we be able to procure the luxuries of life in a Socialist society!" answer boldly, we could not do so, and we don't care, for we don't want them and won't have them: and indeed, I feel sure that we cannot if we are all free men together. Free men, I am sure, must lead simple lives and have simple pleasures: and if we shudder away from that necessity now, it is because we are not free men, and have in consequence wrapped up our lives in such a complexity of dependence that we have grown feeble and helpless. But again, what is simplicity? Do you think by chance that I mean a row of yellow-brick, blue-slatted houses, or a phalangstere like an improved Peabody lodging-house; and the dinner-bell ringing one into a row of white basins of broth with a piece of bread cut nice and square by each, with boiler-made tea and ill boiled rice pudding to follow? No; that's the philanthropist's ideal, not mine; and here I only note it to repudiate it, and to say, Vicarious life once more, and therefore no pleasure. No, I say; find out what you yourselves find pleasant, and do it. You won't be alone in your desires; you will get plenty to help you in carrying them out, and you will develop social life in developing your own special tendencies.

So, then, my ideal is first unconstrained life, and next simple and natural life. First you must be free; and next you must learn to take pleasure in all the details of life;—which, indeed, will be necessary for you, because, since others will be free, you will have to do your own work. That is in direct opposition to civilisation, which says, Avoid trouble (which you can only do by making other people live your life for you). I say, Socialists ought to say, Take trouble, and turn your trouble into pleasure: that I shall always hold is the key to a happy life.

Now let us try to use that key to unlock a few of the closed doors of the future: and you must remember, of course, in speaking of the Society of the future, I am taking the indulgence of passing over the transitional period—whatever that may be—that will divide the present from the ideal; which, after all, we must all of us more or less form in our minds when we have once fixed our belief in the regeneration of the world. And first as to the form of the position of people in the new Society—their political position, so to say. Political society as we know it will have come to an end: the relations between man and man will no longer be that of status, or of property. It will no longer be the hierarchical position, the office of the man, that will be considered, as in the Middle Ages, nor his property as now, but his person. Contract enforced by the State will have vanished into the same limbo as the holiness of the nobility of blood. So we shall at one stroke get rid of all that side of artificiality which bids us sacrifice each our own life to the supposed necessity of an institution which is to take care of the troubles of people which may never happen: every case of clashing rights and desires will be dealt with on its own merits—that is, really, and not legally. Private property of course will not exist as a right: there will be such an abundance of all ordinary necessities that between private persons there will be no obvious and immediate exchange necessary; though no one will want to meddle with matters that have as it were grown to such and such an individual—which have become part of his habits, so to say.

Now, as to occupations, we shall clearly not be able to have the same division of labour in them as now: vicarious servanting, sewer-emptying, butchering, letter-carrying, boot-blackening, hair-dressing, and the rest of it, will have come to an end: we shall either make all these occupations agreeable to ourselves in some mood or to some minds, who will take to them voluntarily, or we shall have to let them lapse altogether. A great many fidgetty occupations will come to an end: we shan't put a pattern on a cloth or a twiddle on a jug-handle to sell it, but to make it prettier and to amuse ourselves and others. Whatever rough or inferior wares we make, will be made rough and inferior to perform certain functions of use, and not to sell: as there will be no slaves, there will be no use for wares which none but slaves would need. Machinery will probably to a great extent have served its purpose in allowing the workers to shake off privilege, and will I believe be much curtailed. Possibly the few more important machines will be very much improved, and the host of unimportant ones fall into disuse; and as to many or most of them, people will be able to use them or not as they feel inclined—as, e.g., if we want to go a journey we shall not be compelled to go by railway as we are now, in the interests of property, but may indulge our personal inclinations and travel in a tilted waggon or on the hind-quarters of a donkey.

Again, the aggregation of the population having served its purpose of giving people opportunities of inter-communication and of making the workers feel their solidarity, will also come to an end; and the huge manufacturing districts will be broken up, and nature heal the horrible scars that man's heedless greed and stupid terror have made: for it will no longer be a matter of dire necessity that cotton cloth should be made a fraction of a farthing cheaper this year than last. It will be in our own choice whether we will work an extra half-hour a-day more to obtain a clean home and green fields; nor will the starvation or misery of thousands follow some slight caprice in the market for wares not worth making at all. Of course (as I ought to have said before) there are many ornamental matters which will be made privately in people's leisure hours, as they could easily be: since it is not the making of a real work of art that takes so much ingenuity as the making of a machine for the making of a makeshift. And of course mere cheating and flunky centres like the horrible muck-heap in which we dwell (London, to wit) could be got rid of easier still; and a few pleasant villages on the side of the Thames might mark the place of that preposterous piece of folly once called London.

Now let us use the key to unlock the door of the education of the future. Our present education is purely commercial and political: we are none of us educated to be men, but some to be property-owners, and others to be property-servers. Again I demand the due results of revolution on the basis of non-ascetic simplicity of life. I think here also we must get rid of the fatal division-of-labour system. All people should learn how to swim, and to ride, and to sail a boat on sea or river; such things are not arts, they are merely natural bodily exercises, and should become habitual in the race; and also one or two elementary arts of life, as carpentry or smithing; and most should know how to shoe a horse and shear a sheep and reap a field, and plough it (we should soon drop machinery in agriculture I believe when we were free). Then again there are things like cooking and baking, sewing, and the like, which can be taught to every sensible person in a few hours, and which everybody ought to have at his fingers' ends. All these elementary arts would be once again habitual, as also I suppose would be the arts of reading and writing: as also I suspect would the art of thinking, at present not taught in any school or university that I know of.

Well, armed with these habits and arts, life would lie before the citizen for him to enjoy; for whatever line he might like to take up for the exercise of his energies, he would find the community ready to help him with teaching, opportunities, and material. Nor for my part would I prescribe for him what he should do, being persuaded that the habits which would have given him the capacities of a man would stimulate him to use them; and that the process of the enjoyment of his life would be carried out, not at the expense of his fellow-citizens, but for their benefit. At present, you know, the gains held out as a stimulus to exertion, to all those who are not stimulated by the whip of the threat of death by starvation, are narrow, and are mainly the hope that the successfully energetic man shall be placed in a position where he shall not have to exercise his energies: the boredom of satiety, in short, is the crown of valiant exertion in civilisation. But in a social condition of things, the gains that would lie before the exercise of one's energies would be various and wide indeed; nor do I in the least in the world believe that the possibility of mere personal use would, or indeed could, limit people's endeavour after them; since men would at last have recognised that it was their business to live, and would at once come to the conclusion that life without endeavour is dull. Now what direction that endeavour would take, of course I cannot tell you; I can only say that it would be set free from the sordid necessity to work at what doesn't please us, which is the besetting curse of civilisation. The suggestion of a hope I may, however, make, which is of course personal—which is that perhaps mankind will regain their eyesight, which they have at present lost to a great extent. I am not here alluding to what I believe is also a fact, that the number of people of imperfect mechanical sight is increasing, but to what I suppose is connected with that fact—namely, that people have largely ceased to take in mental impressions through the eyes; whereas in times past the eyes were the great feeders of the fancy and imagination. Of course people use their eyes to prevent them from tumbling down stairs or from putting their forks to their noses instead of to their mouths, but there as a rule is an end of the use they are to people. I am in the habit when I go to an exhibition or a picture-gallery of noticing their behaviour there; and as a rule I note that they seem very much bored, and their eyes wander vacantly over the various objects exhibited to them, and odd to say, a strange or unusual thing never attracts them, no doubt because it appeals to their minds chiefly through their eyes; whereas if they came across something which a printed label informs them is something familiar, they become interested and nudge each other. If, e.g., ordinary people go to our National Gallery, the thing which they want to see is the Blenheim Raphael, which, though well done, is a very dull picture, at least to anyone not an artist; and they do this because they have been told that the—h'm! the—the—well, the thief that owned it managed to squeeze an exorbitant sum of money out of the nation for it. While, when Holbein shows them the Danish princess of the sixteenth century yet living on the canvas, the demure half-smile not yet faded from her eyes; when Van Eyck opens a window for them into Bruges of the fourteenth century; when Botticelli shows them Heaven as it lived in the hearts of men before theology was dead, these things produce no impression on them, not so much even as to stimulate their curiosity and make them ask 'what 'tis all about; because these things were done to be looked at, and to make the eyes tell the mind tales of the past, the present, and the future.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

(To be concluded.)

All friends willing to assist in the formation of Branch of the S.L. in Streatham should communicate with J. Campbell, 98 Wellfield Road, Streatham.

UNITED RADICAL CLUB, Kay Street, Goldsmiths Row, Hackney Road.—Sunday April 7th, at 8.30. Graham Wallas, "Practical Land Nationalisation." 14th, William Clarke, "Practical Socialism."

SOUTH NORWOOD LIBERAL AND RADICAL CLUB, 92 Portland Road, South Norwood (3 minutes from Norwood Junction).—On Tuesday April 9th, at 8 p.m., Eleanor Marx Aveling, "A Socialist Programme."

THE FROG'S MARCH.

THAT Mahoney's death must be attributed to the circumstances attending his removal to the police-station, no sane man can dispute. During this period he was in the keeping of the police, therefore his caretakers (?) must be held responsible for what happened. The jury at the coroner's inquest, however, took quite a different view of the question. One juror was an eye-witness, and as a proof of the close attention with which he watched the case, when asked by the coroner whether the deceased knocked the policemen about "with his feet or hands," his reply was "Oh, anyhow." This very graphic description evidently satisfied the coroner. This intelligent witness also "thought that the man killed himself in his temper," an idea which was corroborated by the still more intelligent coroner, who remarked, "That's what the medical evidence points to." The only wonder is that this most intelligent jury did not bring in a verdict of "Suicide whilst in an unsound state of mind." The sapience of the coroner and the jury was still further manifested when they recommended that the "frog's march" should be discontinued. Superintendent Arnold remarked, "It cannot be discontinued because it is not sanctioned." A juror proposed passing a vote of censure on the police. After a few remarks from the coroner and Arnold, the jury proceeded to give another proof of their supreme wisdom by signing the verdict without adding any censure on the police.

Any one making himself acquainted with the facts of the above case, must feel convinced that justice is no factor of our law-n'-order system. All rational minds will hold the four policemen concerned in this case guilty of murder; and a jury, not quite so thick-headed as the one that tried this case, would have brought in a verdict of "Homicide."

Matthews and Monro evidently approve of the "frog's march," and Monro would like to receive suggestions. The only suggestion which could be made is that Matthews, Monro, the coroner, and the jurors in this case should qualify by first going through a process of alcoholisation, then have their heels kicked and their persons generally hustled about, and lastly, be treated to a "frog's march" from Shoreditch Church to the police-station. If they don't commit suicide on the way, they will then be able to speak authoritatively on the merits and demerits of this vexed question. A. B.

VIGOROUS SPEAKING IN A SCOTTISH PULPIT.

It is not often that the ermined hypocrites who sit upon the judgment seats of our land, receive such a vigorous wiggling as was given them last Monday week by the Rev. David McQueen in the Pleasance United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh—more power to him! Referring to the execution of Jessie King, the baby farmer, for the murder of babies committed to her charge, the reverend castigator said: "Why is mercy so scant in the court here? Because morality is not always on the bench. The sinner has little or no mercy on the erring. If all the justices, sheriffs, and law lords had to undergo an examination in moral character, there would doubtless be several vacancies in Parliament House. A knowledge of the ten commandments is as necessary as an acquaintance with Scottish law. Are all sheriffs pure of heart and clean of hand? I fancy there are some of them who have seldom heard of the seventh commandment." He then condemned in scathing terms the punishment of newsboys with the lash for selling newspapers within the sacred precincts of Waverly station. "The day is coming!" he exclaimed, "when the miserable farce of Justice and Sheriff Court and Court of Session will be trampled and spat upon by an enlightened Christian conscience." Commenting upon a statement made by the Lord Justice Clerk, in reviewing a case where an Aberdeen mill-worker, who had been ruined by a "gentleman of means" under cover of a promise of marriage, had received £300 damages, in which he said "the sheriff had given £300 damages! £300 damages for the ruin of an Aberdeen mill-worker! The thing is ridiculous!" "This," exclaimed the preacher, "happened in Scotland, in a court of justice. The speaker was the Lord Justice Clerk. This is his idea of morality. What should we do? Why, society should hiss him from the bench. We should petition the Queen to send him about his business. If he is a member of a Christian church his name should be erased from the roll. What justice can the poor expect from such a filthy channel? What can innocence hope for when such as sit as her judges are corrupted?" There is some logic as well as humanity in preaching of this stamp. We could do with a deal more of it. J. B. G.

The race dies constantly, not from old age, but dies out from the distemper of poverty and consequent crime.—Rev. Geo. N. Boardman.

In the Leader, a Liberal weekly, there are two discussions in progress, one on "Shall we feed School Board children?" and one on "The housing of the poor," in both of which some of our friends might profitably take part. To the last-named our comrade Chatterton contributed a letter in last week's issue.

The Working Men's Club and Institute Union makes the offer to working men and women of a third-class journey to Paris and back, for the Exhibition, and four days' board and lodging, for £2 11s.; or six days for £3 3s. For four days in Paris, with two drives round to see the sights and two days admission to the Exhibition, £3 7s.; or for seven days' stay, three drives, and two days in the Exhibition, £4 13s. The railway tickets are available for 14 days, and any may stay up to that limit for 6s. 6d. per day for lodging at the Hotel Longchamps (close to the Exhibition), a meat breakfast, a substantial meat tea, light, and ordinary attendance. An interpreter will accompany the excursionists. Applications must be made to J. J. Dent, 150, Holborn.

JEWISH CABINET-MAKERS IN MANCHESTER.—On Saturday week a crowded meeting of Manchester Jewish cabinet-makers was held in the International Club, 122 Corporation Street, and was addressed by Messrs. Remond, Harper, Barnes, and Hutchison (S.D.F.) of the Alliance Cabinet-Makers' Association. Comrade Wess, who presided, referring to the sermon in a neighbouring synagogue of the Delegate Chief Rabbi (Dr. Know-nothing Adler), in which he termed Socialists "blatant, noisy, atheist and anarchist agitators," and advised working men to avoid them, said, "This crowded meeting of Jewish workers serves as a protest against such shamefully libellous misrepresentations of the cause of the workers." He appealed to those present to persevere in the struggle for the emancipation of labour, heedless of any such idle talk and abuse by well-fed representatives of the golden calf. The meeting was very enthusiastic from beginning to end, and resulted in the formation of a branch of the above-named association.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

Plumbers are requested to keep from Dundee at present.

The Dundee branch of the Sailor's and Firemen's Union has passed resolutions against working with non-society men.

Some of the firemen on the Severn, Wye, and Severn Bridge Railway are paid at the rate of 2s. 6d. a-day, and their employers wonder they are "discontented."

The dispute at the Ocean Collieries, South Wales, affecting 6,000 men, was settled on March 21st, the men obtaining an advance of 5 per cent. this month, and 7½ per cent. next month.

The wages of iron ore miners in the service of the Cleator Moor Iron Ore Company, Cumberland, have been reduced ¼d. per ton. The men have been agitating for a 10 per cent. advance.

The number of members in the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants at the end of 1888 was 12,080, being a net increase during the year of 1,250 members; this number has been very largely added to this year.

BELFAST SPINNERS.—An extensive strike has again broken out in the Ulster spinning trade, the employes of two large mills in Belfast having gone out on Tuesday, 19th ult., for an advance of 5 per cent. Nearly 3,000 operatives are now idle.

CARPENTERS AND SHIPWRIGHTS.—The carpenters and shipwrights of Greenock and district have decided upon asking for an increase in wages. The carpenters are just now paid at the rate of 6½d. per hour, and they wish 7d.; the shipwrights are paid 7d. per hour, and they wish 7½d. and 8d. for old work.

GREENOCK SAILMAKERS' WAGES.—The sailmakers of Greenock asked for an advance of a halfpenny per hour on their then rate of wages three months ago, and were granted an advance of a farthing per hour at that time. The masters have now conceded the other farthing, so that the wages are now 6½d. per hour, or 30s. 4½d. per week of 54 hours.

ROPE AND TWINE SPINNERS.—At a meeting of Dundee rope and twine spinners lately, a letter was read from the employers offering an advance of 1s. per week, on condition that the men turned out a larger quantity of work. It was stated that this meant an additional day's labour per week, which was considered wholly out of the question. The men resolved to adhere to their demand for an unconditional increase of 2s. per week.

SYNDICATES AND SOCIALISM.—Apropos of the revival of the idea of a great coal syndicate, Mr. Ellis Lever proposes that the whole of the minerals and collieries in the Kingdom should be acquired and worked by the State. By working mines on the most economical and scientific methods, the price of coal might be reduced. A saving of 1s. per ton in getting coal would result in a profit of £8,000,000 sterling per annum, or 5 per cent. on the capital of 160 millions.

STRIKE AT HORWICH.—The labourers employed at the locomotive works at Horwich a few days ago sent in a memorial demanding an advance of wages and threatening to cease work. This was met last week by the discharge of sixty of them. On Monday twenty-one more received notice. A well-attended meeting of the men was held same evening, when it was resolved not to resume work next day. It was arranged that they should meet near the entrance to the works and endeavour to persuade those not present at the meeting to follow their example.

SAILORS AND FIREMEN.—A meeting of the Deptford Branch of the National Sailors' and Firemen's Union was held in the West Kent Yeoman, Edward Street, lately, when the secretary stated that many members were still unemployed, owing to the unfair manner in which they had been treated by the General Steam Navigation Company, and assured the men that such treatment to faithful servants would not be forgotten by a union that would have power to show that and another company in Scotland that by their combination they could demand a fair wage and obtain it.

SAILORS' WAGES.—There seems little doubt that before long the wages of Liverpool sailors will have fallen to the old figure, as shipowners are evidently determined to go on reducing them as long as they can obtain men. Last week another sailing vessel secured a crew at the low rate of £2 15s., and it is stated that an attempt will be made to get crews for two sailing ships at £2 10s. Under the circumstances, the union men will probably be again called out on strike. They assert that owners, unless compelled, will not make any endeavour to forward the interests of their men by giving them a reasonable amount of pay.

THE COTTON TRADE.—We learn that there is an agitation in the cotton districts to obtain more holidays in the year. The Power Loom Weavers' Association at Darwen have issued a circular asking the masters to give them an interview on the question. They ask for Christmas Day, New Year's Day, Good Friday, and a week in July at the time of the local fair. At Great Harwood, the employers met the operatives demand by an ingenious attempt to get off one day by counting in a Sunday in the few days they ask for in summer to recoup their strength a little. The deputation declined the offer, saying they would lay the suggestions before a public meeting. At Rochdale also the question has been partly discussed, the yearly meeting of the Trades' Council resolving to "assist the Mayor in arriving at one recognised holiday for the New Year."

BRICKMAKERS.—With the prospects of an improvement in the building trade, the operatives engaged in the brickmaking industry in the Birmingham district, numbering about 2,000, have given notice that they require an advance of 9d. per thousand on the common bricks, 1s. 9d. on pressed or front bricks, and 2s. 6d. on quarries. The men contend that they are entitled to the increase, because the masters have advanced the price of bricks; but the employers on the contrary urge that the increase was necessitated by the higher price charged for fuel. The men state that at the present time they are no better off as regards the wages they receive than they were twenty years ago; but this statement, of course, is denied by the masters. While the moulders have made application for the above-mentioned increases, the wheelers have also demanded an additional halfpenny per hour.

RAILWAY SERVANTS' CONFERENCE.—The Executive Council of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants met at Perth the other day. Carlisle moved that that meeting believed that the amalgamation under the English society was impracticable, but that a working agreement between both societies was desirable; regretted that the annual meeting of the English society disapproved of the three first clauses of the working agreement arrived at at Leeds, but recommended to the Executive Council of the English society the adoption of the remaining clauses, with the view of engendering a spirit of friendship between the two societies. Glasgow Central seconded resolution, which was adopted by 15 to 13. A series of resolutions were unanimously carried in support of an amendment of the Employer's Liability Act, of the establishment of coroner's inquests in Scotland, of labour representation in Parliament, and of the appointment of practical workmen as inspectors of factories and mines.

MASTER AND MAN.—The North-Western directors have been dining in a new saloon car while going at a speed of sixty miles an hour, and we are told that there was not the slightest oscillation. If the directors want to find the latter, we would recommend a dinner in a goods guard's van, at—not sixty—but thirty miles an hour. They would discover the difference there was between that place and a saloon; and, having experienced the inconvenience under which a goods guard eats his dinner, they might be led to do something for his comfort in that respect.—Railway Review.

HOW WE ARE GOVERNED.—It may be remembered that a few weeks ago we announced that a company had been formed for the purpose of placing on the leading thoroughfares omnibuses in which smoking was to be allowed. Subsequently, owing to a police regulation prohibiting smoking in licensed public conveyances, the scheme had to be abandoned. It was thought that the Chief Commissioner of Police would have been in a position to have relaxed the law. But it appears that no such simple and sensible move like this can be done without a special Act of Parliament. As to get even an unopposed Bill through Parliament costs about twelve hundred pounds, the scheme has in the meantime been postponed.—Whitehall Review.

THE FIRST CHANGE.—It may be objected that a healthy and vigorous man is not oppressed by ten or twelve hours labour a day; and I grant that, if he be well fed, his strength may not be so much exhausted by this exertion as to give him pain. But this is regarding him merely as a working animal. My proposition is, that after ten or twelve hours of muscular exertion a day, continued for six days in the week, the labourer is not in a fit condition for that active exercise of his moral and intellectual faculties which truly constitutes him a rational being. . . . The first change, therefore, needed for the improvement of the working classes, is a limitation of the hours of labour, and the dedication of a portion of time daily to the exercise of the mental faculties.—George Combe.

The Manchester Sunday Chronicle rejoices, or should rejoice, in the possession of a contributor who is not a mere spinner of stale platitudes on things in general. Under the name of "Nunquam," he fills three or four columns with notes that are a refreshing novelty in provincial, or any other, journalism. His attitude may be seen from the concluding one of his notes in a recent number: "On the one side there are Individualism and Competition—leading to a 'great trade' and great miseries. On the other side is justice, without which can come no good, from which can come no evil. On the one hand are ranged all the sages, all the saints, all the martyrs, all the noble manhood and pure womanhood of the world; on the other hand are the tyrant, the robber, the manslayer, the libertine, the usurer, the slave-driver, the drunkard, and the masquerade. Choose your party, then, my friends, and let us get to the fighting." He is not always at that level, but keeps near enough to it to be a powerful influence for good in a benighted city.

SOCIALISM IN ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on 25th March, Carpenter's essay 'England's Ideal' read and discussed. On the same night Kropotkin lectured under the auspices of the local branch of the Scottish Geographical Society to "a large and fashionable audience." The wirepullers who secured him for the geographers kept him out of our hands; but on the following night a private meeting was held in the Queen's Rooms, when Kropotkin delivered an excellent "talk at large" on Socialism. Though the meeting was advertised in no other way than by simply passing round the word, about 150 persons were present. The audience was respectable to a sickening degree—a large proportion of those present having been manifestly attracted by no higher motive than the desire to hear and see a live prince; but they applauded the points as briskly as if they understood them, and seemed prepared to swallow anything. Webster and Leatham spoke, the former putting in a word for the Branch.—At Castle Street on Saturday night a large and sympathetic meeting was addressed by Duncan and Leatham. Things are looking up for us in Aberdeen. Even the weather has ceased to be hostile to open-air work. Some of our comrades have been martyred to the extent of losing their employment on account of their connection with the Branch: the plot thickens against others. We seem to have reached the second stage.

DEATH.

BURROWS.—March 29th, at 283 Victoria Park Road, London, Mary Hannah, wife of Herbert Burrows, Social Democratic Federation, age 43. American papers please copy.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, April 1, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1889:—Clerkenwell and Mitcham, to end of February. Leicester, North London, and East London, to end of March.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Membership Cards can now be had by the Branches at 9d. per dozen from Central Office.

The Article, published in No. 152 of Weal, Dec. 8th, 1888, addressed to "Working Women and Girls," is now being issued by the Propagandist Committee in leaflet form for distribution, at 3s. 6d. per 1,000.

Paris Commune.—Branches having Subscription Sheets for the Paris Commune are requested to return them at once.

Defence Fund.—A meeting of delegates of Metropolitan Working-men's Clubs met last Friday week at the Patriotic Club, Clerkenwell Green, for the purpose of assisting our comrades of the Berner Street Club, who, after being ill-treated by the police, are now sent for trial on a false charge of assaulting them. A strong Committee was formed for the defence. C. W. Mowbray was appointed secretary and F. Kitz treasurer. An earnest appeal is made for funds to conduct the defence. All remittances to be sent to F. Kitz, treasurer, 13, Farringdon Road, E.C.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

CHILDREN'S PARTY.

Subscriptions received—£1 12s. 10d. Cost of Tea—£2 1s. 8½d. Deficit on same—8s. 10½d. Any subscriptions towards covering this deficit should be sent to Mrs. Groser, 19, Rigault Road, Fulham.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—H. Schmitt, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; Blundell, 6d.; R. Turner, 1s.; J. Turner, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; Seglie, 6d.; Tilley, 6d.; Rose, 6d.; B. W., 6d.; Mainwaring, 1s.; Nicoll, 6d.; Samuels, 2s.; and Clapham, 1s. Norwich Branch, 1s. 9d.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

CLERKENWELL.—On Sunday, March 31st, at 8.30 p.m., D. Nicoll in the chair, Frank Kitz lectured on "The Freeheit Prosecution by the English Government." Hall filled by visitors and members, who showed great interest in lecture when comrade Kitz referred to the hardships Socialists had to endure when this great movement for humanity in its true sense first began. A good meeting was held on Clerkenwell Green by J. Turner and D. Nicoll, which then adjourned to above hall.—S. P.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting Sunday morning at Latimer Road; speakers were Dean, Lyne, sen., Crouch, Maughan, and Saint. The comrades of this district are doing good work in the neighbourhood. 44 Commonweal sold. Good meeting in evening at Weltje Road; speakers were Crouch, Kitcher, Lyne, sen., and Maughan. 9 Commonweal sold. The comrades wishing to extend their work have determined to open another open-air station at St. Ann's Road, and will be glad to see friends turning up. In evening, Percival Chubb (Fabian) lectured at Kelmscott House on "Work and its Reward." Several questions and bright debate.—G. M.

MITCHAM.—Our last meeting on Sunday morning was enlivened by opposition. Our opponent advised the working-men present, whom he termed "you fellows," to practise thrift, abstention from intoxicating drink, and limitation of families. In this last particular he was not practical enough to indicate the methods. He was answered by Mowbray and Kitz. Our opponent will open the meeting on Fair Green at 11.30 next Sunday morning; 1s. 6d. collected for local propaganda.—K.

NORTH LONDON.—In Regent's Park on Sunday morning, meeting addressed by Cantwell, Brooks, Mrs. Lahr, and Samuels. Good meeting in Hyde Park in the afternoon, which lasted four hours. We took our stand on the same place as last Sunday, and had a good crowd and rather lively meeting. Cantwell, Mrs. Lahr, and Brooks spoke, also J. Williams (S.D.F.), who provoked a good discussion; 6s. 11d. collected and good sale of Weal.—T. C.

VICTORIA PARK.—Last Sunday, H. Davis took up the debate which had been arranged with Mr. Hoffman on "Anarchism," the comrade who made the arrangement failing to appear. The debate was well conducted, and attracted a good audience, which showed great attention throughout. After a somewhat lengthy meeting, the debate was adjourned to next week. Fair sale of Weal.

EDINBURGH.—On 26th ult., meeting for women addressed by Melliet. On 27th, P. Kropotkin met us in Moulder's Hall on his way south; no time to get up a public meeting. On 28th, Glasse read first part of paper on "Mirabeau." On 30th, Christie on "Homes of the Poor." On alternate Thursdays, in 35, George IV. Bridge, we study French Revolution and English Economic History.

GLASGOW.—Much enthusiasm was imparted to our members by comrade Kropotkin's visit, which made itself apparent at the very successful outdoor meetings this week. On Saturday afternoon, almost simultaneous with Glasier's departure for Dundee to take part in the free-speech demonstration there, Pollock and Downie started for the mining village of Cambuslang, where they captured a good number of people drawn together by the brass band of a travelling circus opposite. On Sunday morning on Jail Square, good meeting held by Pollock, T. and J. Burgoyne, McCulloch, and Downie. Two other very good meetings were held in the evening: one at Paisley Road Toll at 5 o'clock, the other at St. George's Cross at 6.30. Commonweal sold out, as well as a good number of pamphlets. We afterwards adjourned to our rooms, where a pleasant day's campaigning was brought to a close by an agreeable conversation.—S. D.

LEEDS.—During the winter months we have had regular Sunday night lectures, all of which have been well attended, and much good has been done to the cause through their agency. With the advent of finer weather we intend doing a vigorous propaganda in our town, and hope to show by our efforts that Leeds is no longer behindhand in the fight. At the quarterly meeting on Sunday last Alfred Mattison was elected Secretary, to whom all communications should be addressed.—A. M.

NORWICH.—Sunday morning a large number of back numbers distributed in the country villages. In afternoon, usual open-air meeting was held in Market Place, addressed by Poynts, assisted by Reynolds (Yarmouth), who spoke on the fallacy of politics. In the evening, another good meeting in Market Place; Poynts opened, followed by Reynolds, who delivered a capital address; audience listening very attentively until close of the meeting. At Gordon Hall, Adams gave interesting lecture upon "The True History of the Commune," W. Moore in chair; good audience; several questions, and discussion followed; Moore and Mills took part; ably replied to by lecturer. Good sale of Commonweal and collections.

YARMOUTH.—The meeting here Sunday morning addressed by Reynolds and Morley was well attended. In the afternoon, Ruffold, Morley, and Houghton spoke to an appreciative audience. All the Commonweal sold out, and 2s. 2½d. collected. After the meeting, comrades met together at one of the comrades', and a pleasant hour was spent. Our comrades are quickly imbibing the spirit of fraternity and brotherhood.—C. REYNOLDS.

IPSWICH PIONEER DEBATING CLUB.—A debate was held here Sunday evening, when Creed opened on "Organised Labour," Thomas in chair. Lively discussion, several strangers being present, one from the Amalgamated Society of Engineers. By the wish of the audience, the further discussion was adjourned till next Sunday, when Khill will open, and Creed reply. The new ideas are surely and steadily gaining ground here, and we are very hopeful as to future results.—C.

NOTTINGHAM.—The Nottingham Socialist Club, which meets at Old Street, St. Ann's Street, opened the summer season on Sunday with a good meeting in the Great Market Place. Comrades Peacock and Rook spoke; 1s. 4d. was collected for club funds, and the Commonweal sold out.—R. P.

A GRAND CONCERT will be held in the Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, on Sunday, April 14th, for the benefit of comrade WESS, who has been out of work for a long time. The following comrades will sing and recite during the evening: W. Morris, Mrs. Taylor, Wm. Blundell, W. B. Parker, Mrs. Blundell, J. Turner, D. Nicoll, J. Presburg, Miss Morgan, McCormick, and others. ADMISSION BY PROGRAMME, 6d.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

- Bloomsbury.—Percy Hall, Percy Street, Tottenham Court Road.
- Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Members who cannot attend are requested to send in their subscriptions due, with card, to branch, if they can do so without inconvenience to themselves, or otherwise communicate with secretary. Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30: Sunday April 7, Members are requested to turn up to a special business meeting at 7 p.m. sharp. At 8.30, lecture by C. Mowbray, "The Socialist Movement in Norfolk." Sunday 14th, No lecture, owing to concert on behalf of comrade Wess.
- East London.—A business meeting will be held on Saturday 6th April, at 97 Boston Street, Hackney Road. Members, attend.
- Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend.
- Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday April 7, at 8 p.m., J. Hunter Watts, A lecture. Sunday 14th, Graham Wallis (Fabian Society), "Leasehold Enfranchisement: a Warning." Thursday April 11, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 12th, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion on some point of interest in the propaganda.
- Hoxton.—Comrades desiring to help in the propaganda of the Socialist League in this locality are requested to send their names and addresses to H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road.
- Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.
- North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.
- Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.
- Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary.
- Wimbledon and Merton.—All those desirous of helping in and around Wimbledon and Merton, should communicate with F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road.

PROVINCES.

- Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.
- Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.
- Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.
- Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.
- Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street.
- Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.
- Galashiels (Scot Sect).—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, secretary.
- Gallatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street.
- Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11.
- Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.
- Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.
- Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.
- Norwich.—Sunday, at 9 a.m., comrades distributing Commonweal will meet in Gordon Hall; at 8.15 p.m., lecture in Gordon Hall—W. Moore "Socialism, some of its Objections." Sunday 14th, lecture by A. T. Sutton. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8.30, Discussion Class—subject, 'Co-operative Commonwealth.' Monday, Thursday, and Friday, Gordon Hall open from 8 p.m.
- Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.
- Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.
- West Calder (Scottish Section).—Sec., Robert Lindsay, West Calder.
- Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Business meeting every Tuesday evening. The Commonweal can be purchased of Mr. Hous, newsagent, George Street.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SATURDAY 6.
8	Mile-end Waste Brooks
SUNDAY 7.
11	Latimer Road Station Lyne, Dean, Maughan
11.30	Bethnal Green—Gibraltar Walk Mrs. Schack
11.30	Clerkenwell Green The Branch
11.30	Hammersmith—St. Ann's Road Crouch and Saint
11.30	Mitcham Fair Green The Branch
11.30	Regent's Park Nicoll and Mainwaring
11.30	Walham Green, opposite Station The Branch
11.45	Leman Street, Shadwell Mowbray
3.30	Hyde Park Nicoll, Parker, and Mrs. Lahr
3.30	Victoria Park Debate: Davis v. Hoffman
7	Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park Kitz and Samuels
7.30	Broad Street, Soho Brooks and Nicoll
7.30	Clerkenwell Green The Branch
TUESDAY 9.
8	Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch.
THURSDAY 11.
8.15	Hoxton Church Mowbray and Cores
8	Ossulton Street Nicoll and Mrs. Lahr
FRIDAY 12.
8	Philpot Street, Commercial Road Charles

PROVINCES.

- Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, 7.30 p.m. Sunday: Waterside Gate, Duthie Park, 3 p.m.
- Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.
- Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.
- Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3 and 7.30.
- Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

LIMEHOUSE BRANCH S.D.F., 339 Burdett Road, E.—F. Charles lectures at 8 o'clock on Sunday evening, April 7th—subject, "What's to be done during a Revolutionary Period."

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). 1d.
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. 1d.
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
 Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
 Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Price 1d.; Post-free, 1½d.

THE RIGHTS OF LABOUR ACCORDING TO JOHN RUSKIN.

Arranged by THOMAS BARCLAY.
 Second Edition.

"Your pamphlet is the best abstract of all the most important pieces of my teachings that has yet been done; and I am entirely grateful to you for doing it, and glad to have your letter."—Extract from letter received from Mr. Ruskin.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C

SOCIALIST SONGS

FOR

POPULAR SINGING.

A Handy Collection. Contains 33 effective pieces from the pens of William Morris, Edward Carpenter, C. W. Beckett, J. Bruce Glasier, D. J. Nicoll, H. Halliday Sparling, and others. A number reprinted from the Commonweal and other sources. Should be in the hands of all Socialists.

Twopence. 1s. 4d. a-dozen.

Orders to be addressed to JAMES LEATHAM,
 7 Jamaica Street, Aberdeen.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.
 PRICE 1s.

COMMONWEAL OFFICE, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.

WORKS BY JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

- Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.
The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

- Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

LA REVUE SOCIALISTE.

EDITED BY BENOIT MALON.

8, Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

SUMMARY OF THE MARCH NUMBER.

"Rabelais and the Church," F. Audiger; "Taxes," A. Veber; "The Socialism of Blauqui," B. Malon; "Hours of Labour," P. Argyriades; "Positive Politics," H. Atmel; "Socialism among Inferior Beings," J. Sagnol; "Instruction and Socialism," N. Tesseyre; "Socialism in Hungary," B. Malon; "The Referendum," Rittinghausen and de Laveleye; "Poetry," E. Herbel; "Anthology," George, V. Hugo, Lange; "Social Movement," A. Weber, J. Sagnol; "Bibliography," J. Sagnol; "Obituary," G. Havet.

TERMS:—France, 6 months 9 francs, 12 months, 18 f.
 Abroad, " 10 " 20.
 Payments to be made to M. Rodolphe Simon, 8 Rue des Martyrs, Paris.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by
 H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
 New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

THE DEMOCRATIC REVIEW.

EDITED BY LOTHROP WITHINGTON.

LONDON 1882, 8vo 160 pp.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of this pioneer revolutionary miscellany are still obtainable. Price 6d. each number, post free 6½d. Office of Commonweal.

OUR NATIONAL CAKE:

WHO MAKES IT, AND WHO EATS IT.

Large display poster to bring home the aims of Socialism to the workers.

Sent free on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage.
 J. J. Harrison, 44 Oxford Street, Sheffield.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Library Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
 Vol. III., AUTUMN seventh edition 12s.
 Vol. IV., WINTER seventh edition 12s.

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo,
 at 2s. 6d. each.
 ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE ÆNEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English
 verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English
 verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other
 Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond
 A Morality.

Square 12mo, 143 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs,
 Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful
 Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction.

With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s.
 Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from
 T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

JULIUS BORDOLLO'S

LABOUR NEWS AGENCY

213 Forsyth Street, New York City, U.S.A

American agency for the Commonweal. All Labour literature kept in stock. Send for list, post free.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 170.

SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

"CIVILISATION" is happy again, for Stanley is alive and successful and is "coming home." Meantime, since there have been several persons hanged for murder during the last few months, we may well ask whether when he comes home Stanley will be put upon his trial for the capital offence? Or if not, wherein his hanging men because they refused to serve him at the risk of their lives differs from murder? This is, indeed, a short way with breach of contract, which no doubt many rich people at home would like to take if they durst.

As some of our readers may not have seen former notes and articles in the Commonweal on this subject, we may as well explain to them in a few words how it is that Stanley is the enemy of workmen in Great Britain as well as of the natives in Africa. His mission is "to open up Africa;" that is, to establish regular trade with the people of the interior of that vast continent. Now this trade the natives do not want, and resist as much as they can. They do not want trousers, rum, bibles (printed by scab labour), or cotton cloth scientifically weighted with sulphate of barytes; and, in point of fact, the bargain in our trade with them would be, that we should take from them what we want and give them what they do not; which they understand and consequently will only admit the trade if it is forced on them. This as we see, Mr. Stanley (and the whole British nation, which clearly approves of his hanging his hirelings for refusing to go on with him) is quite prepared to do. Therefore, he is clearly the enemy of the natives of Africa.

But is he the friend of the natives of England? Will he not render a service to them by "opening up Africa," by getting fresh trade whereby to employ the workmen here? Some workmen uninstructed in the truths of Socialism may believe this, but we Socialists know that it is false. If the position of the labourers in England is a good one, it may be a good thing to supplant African barbarians by English labourers; if it is not, it only spreads the evil which we are suffering from here, and by that process helps to perpetuate it. And this is all the good which this piracy can get for the English workman. There will be gains indeed from the plunder of Africa, but those gains will fall to the capitalists and their middlemen and led captains; they will be called "profits," and will be sweated out of the workmen, English and African, who will be enslaved by this march of civilisation.

English workmen, therefore, should know that this man is the friend of their enemies and the enemy of their friends. The friend of the capitalist who lives by robbing the workman of the results of his toil, and therefore by that very act is his enemy; the enemy of the barbarian who lives by the labour of his hands, and is therefore the brother of the English workman. It is to be hoped then that if, unfortunately, Stanley reaches England safely, the workmen of this country will make some demonstration against him, and so clear themselves of participation in his crimes.

"As there is some probability that during the current year the trustees of the British Museum may be induced to throw their institution open on Sundays, the Parliamentary friends of Sunday opening think it better not to raise the question by means of a direct motion, but have, it is said, decided to bring it forward on the Estimates."—Pall Mall.

This is a curious instance of the kind of hold that the people has upon its own property and over its servants. We are to sneak behind the possible goodwill of the trustees, instead of claiming our rights straightforwardly. "Their institution" too!!! O yes, it is but too clear that it isn't ours. Britons never never never will be slaves! Won't they?

Last week the House of Commons managed to spare a little time from the consideration of the difference between tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee, to the consideration of the position of the poor in our big towns. Mr. Broadhurst, who was once poor and is now rich, was the initiator of the discussion, which to say the truth might just as well, for all the good it could do, have been held in a middle-class discussion-forum. For, indeed, the habitual discussion of tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee does not educate men to consider the great tragedy of life in the lower classes. Besides, from the nature of their position, the loyal members of that House must shut their eyes to the causes of the misery which now and again in the course of years they deem it politic to talk about.

For truly what is the disease, the mere symptoms of which Mr. Broadhurst (who was poor and is now rich) called their attention to? What is the disease, but these very gentlemen themselves and the life that they live of sweating the poor for their own aggrandisement? When that proprietary class, which (and which only) they represent, is got rid of, the symptoms will no longer be there for us to deal with. When the rich are gone there will no longer be any poor. That is the one truth that our rulers have got to learn. But can they learn it? That is more than doubtful. The rich class exists, it is a living and active organism, and it is difficult or perhaps impossible for that which exists to realise non-existence.

Also, of course, it is the business of these gentlemen to insist on the necessity for their existence, nay the impossibility of their extinction. Their song chanted in various tones is always, "As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen"—or hurrah!

Under these circumstances it is not wonderful that the debate was languid to the last degree, and that the pretence of having anything to say about such a subject was not even decently kept up, and that none of the party leaders had a word to say on the subject, so that even as "political birdlime" it was but a failure.

But consider what a condemnation of the whole of our political system! The condition of the poor (i.e., of almost the whole of the working classes) in our big towns. What a subject! Surely a six nights debate on it is not too much to consider it in; surely all the big bucks of both parties will be in their places eager to claim their share in dealing with the most, nay, the only important matter of the day. The Irish will forget Home Rule, for they also have big towns in Ireland; the Tories will try to show the advantages of a benevolent demi-semi despotism; the Liberals that the franchise will educate even a sweated tailor to claim his rights; the Radicals will make a sudden leap towards Socialism, and the whole country will hang breathless on their deliberations.

Alas! none of that happened. The condition of the poor is not "practical politics." Their votes, when they have any, can be got at even when they are left to starve. So what does it matter? Indeed, what everybody in this wretched rag end of a debate, or conversation, really said was, "Who cares?" Yes indeed, who, if the workers themselves do not?

That is an old and hackneyed pass-word of Cobbett's, but is always good and necessarily true: "House of Commons—Den of Thieves."

W. M.

The Star is really improving. Of course, like all papers and men without definite clear principles to regulate and guide their conduct, it wavers and wanders a good deal, contradicting itself in lamentable fashion every other while. But the general tendency is good, and, in despite of occasional lapses into the old pathways, and burstings out of the old Adam, shows that the lessons of the time are being learnt by its conductors, and that they recognise "which way the cat is jumping." To us the semi-socialism they sometimes talk may seem particularly small beer, as indeed it is; but, remembering the impossibility of even that in an ordinary daily a short while ago, and the rarity of it even now, one may look upon it with some complacency as a sign of the times, and take it as a warning that our work is bearing fruit.

The extremes to which the vacillation of the Star carry it were wel shown by its having a strong "Socialist" article one night, and the very next going in for the following toadyish and reactionary nonsense:

"The dinner to Mr. Broadhurst at the National Liberal Club, and Sir William Harcourt's sincere eulogy, are an appropriate acknowledgment of his services to the better kind of Liberalism. There is no defter trade-unionist member in the House of Commons than Mr. Broadhurst. His tact, his industry, his knowledge of detail, are quite unrivalled in their way. He has done the class to which he belongs a service which they would be the first to recognise. No better pilot of a workman's bill in the House exists; no quicker eye for a dodge; no safer judgment. Mr. Broadhurst is not a great popular tribune, and does not pretend to be; but he does the people's detail work with never-failing-skill."

An unfortunate feature about Mr. Broadhurst, as the Star has ample means of knowing, is that he does not confine his "quick eye for a dodge" to its appropriate sphere, the House of Dodgers, but brings it into active operation among the less guileful trades unionists. This they are now finding out, as the recent decisions of the London Compositors and Amalgamated Engineers testify; and one might think it rather impudent in a merely political-party paper rushing in at such a time to defend him against his fellows in this way. But of course the real significance of it is, as we said, that Mr. Broadhurst is now definitely received into the bosom of the Great Liberal Party. S.

The philanthropic capitalist is busy with his schemes for elevating mankind. Those who doubt this statement are respectfully referred to two prospectuses, which I have before me, and which I intend to comment upon. The first is that of the company for promoting the distribution and sale of the Bellite Explosive. Don't be frightened; this company is not started by revolutionists of any description. The board of directors consists of two noble lords, one capitalist, a J.P., and a major-general. So that no doubt can be entertained by even the most incredulous person of its complete respectability.

This explosive is, according to the prospectus, of a remarkable and even unique description. While it is more powerful than dynamite, it possesses other qualities which give it a high reputation, the most curious being that it will not go off except under very extreme provocation. It cannot be made to explode by friction nor by shock nor pressure. You may expose it to the electric spark or to the lightning flash, but it won't go off. You may put it in fire, and it will burn away like ordinary fuel. The only thing that will explode it is a detonating cap, and it is therefore absolutely safe. Then bellite can be used in shells, which may be fired without any risk. So to bayonets that bend and guns that burst, the Government will be able to add additional strength to their warlike resources by shells that won't go off.

But the Bellite Company is likely to find a formidable rival, from the warlike standpoint, in the Snyder Dynamite Projectile Company, Limited. Mr. F. H. Snyder, a supreme genius, who adds to his skill as an inventor the further recommendation of being a member of the Peace Society, has discovered a method of using dynamite in shells. With the prospectus is sent a number of press notices which laud the new projectile to the skies for its many admirable qualities. The Times declares that "a single shell of this description, striking the side of the most solid ironclad in existence, would send her to the bottom." The Admiralty and Horse Guards' Gazette, Feb. 2nd, '89, tells us "that a 20-pounder gun planting a couple of shells into a column of men would kill outright a large number, while those left would be literally paralysed from the awful concussion, and placed hors de combat." The prospectus points out that the havoc created by a Snyder projectile in a town, fort, or camp would be "simply incalculable." I have a faint recollection of the yell of horror which arose from the capitalist press when some desperate men exploded dynamite in London—without doing very much harm to anybody. I can also remember the heavy sentences inflicted on these men, and which they are still suffering, for committing these "crimes." It is surely rather comical to find these very papers speculating with complacent serenity upon the probable slaughter, often of non-combatants, which would follow the advent of one of these projectiles in "town, fort, or camp." Truly middle-class morality and humanity would be funny, if it were not so hideously hypocritical.

Not only does the capitalist press praise these new methods of wholesale slaughter to the skies; but the capitalist public rushes to buy the shares of the principal explosive companies, which pay a dividend of 15 per cent. These shares in all cases are at a high premium, as will be seen from the following quotations: Noble Explosives Co. £10 shares now fetch £25; New Explosives Co.'s £3 shares, about £4 10s.; E. C. Powder £3 shares, about £5 5s. Really the benevolence of five per-cent. philanthropists who invest their savings in model dwellings for the poor must be a subject for wonder, when we consider what high dividends they are renouncing by not investing their cash in some explosive company. Still we must ask our capitalist friends to clear their minds of cant, and before shrieking against the desperate deeds of men driven to frenzy by tyrannical injustice, to spare a little of their superfluous indignation for the people who in their greed of unearned increment invest their money in providing explosive infernal machines for the wholesale murder of the human race. D. N.

THE SOCIETY OF THE FUTURE.

Concluded from p. 109.)

OR again, in times past, when what is (I suppose as a joke) called the Educational Department at South Kensington was more or less mixed up with the Art Department, I have followed up a group through the wonders of the drift of the art of past days, and perceived that their eyes never steadied once on any of these things, but that they brightened up at once when they came across a glass case in which the constituent parts of an analysed beef-steak were neatly arranged and labelled, and that their eyes devoured little pinches of nothing in particular, with a trusting faith in the analyst which I confess I could not share, as it seemed to me that it would require a quite superhuman honesty in him not to snatch up a few pinches of road-dust or ashes and make them do duty for the recondite substances which his toil had brought to light in that familiar object. In literature you will find the same thing going on, and that those authors who appeal to our eyes to take in mental impressions are relegated by our most "intellectual" critics to a second place at least: to pass by Homer and Beowulf and Chaucer, you will find the "truly intellectual" man elevating mere rhetorical word-spinners and hunters of introspection above such masters of life as Scott and Dickens, who tell their tales to our senses and leave them alone to moralise the tale so told.

Now I have dwelt at some length on this matter of the eyesight, because to my mind it is the most obvious sign of the march of civilisation towards the intellectual-paunch stage of existence which I have deprecated already; and also because I feel sure that no special claim need be made for the art and literature of the future: healthy bodily conditions, a sound and all round development of the senses, joined to the due social ethics which the destruction of all slavery will give us, will, I am convinced, as a matter of course give us the due art and literature, whatever that due may turn out to be. Only, if I may prophesy ever so little, I should say that both art and literature, and especially art, will appeal to the senses directly, just as the art of the past has done. You see you will no longer be able to have novels relating the troubles of a middle-class couple in their struggle towards social uselessness, because the material for such literary treasures will have passed away. On the other hand the genuine tales of history will still be with us, and will, one might well hope, then be told in a cheerfuller strain than is now possible. Nor for my part can I doubt that art will appeal to the senses of men now grown healthy; which means that architecture and the kindred arts will again flourish amongst us as in the days before civilisation. Civilisation renders these arts impossible, because its politics and ethics force us to live in a grimy disorderly uncomfortable world, a world that offends the senses at every turn: that necessity reacts on the senses again, and forces us unconsciously to blunt their keenness. A man who notices the external forms of things much nowadays must suffer in South Lancashire or London, must live in a state of perpetual combat and anger; and he really must try to blunt his sensibility, or he will go mad, or kill some obnoxious person and be hanged for it; and this of course means that people will gradually get to be born without this inconvenient sensibility. On the other hand, let this irrational compulsion be removed from us, and the senses will grow again to their due and normal fulness and demand expression of the pleasure which their exercise gives us, which in short means art and literature at once sensuous and human.

Well, now I will try to draw these discursive remarks to a head, and give you a more concise and complete idea of the society into which I would like to be reborn.

It is a society which does not know the meaning of the words rich and poor, or the rights of property, or law or legality, or nationality: a society which has no consciousness of being governed; in which equality of condition is a matter of course, and in which no man is rewarded for having served the community by having the power given him to injure it.

It is a society conscious of a wish to keep life simple, to forego some of the power over nature won by past ages in order to be more human and less mechanical, and willing to sacrifice something to this end. It would be divided into small communities varying much within the limits allowed by due social ethics, but without rivalry between each other, looking with abhorrence at the idea of a holy race.

Being determined to be free, and therefore contented with a life not only simpler but even rougher than the life of slave-owners, division of labour would be habitually limited: men (and women too, of course) would do their work and take their pleasure in their own persons, and not vicariously: the social bond would be habitually and instinctively felt, so that there would be no need to be always asserting it by set forms: the family of blood-relationship would melt into that of the community and of humanity. The pleasures of such a society would be founded on the free exercise of the senses and passions of a healthy human animal, so far as this did not injure the other individuals of the community and so offend against social unity: no one would be ashamed of humanity or ask for anything better than its due development.

But from this healthy freedom would spring up the pleasures of intellectual development, which the men of civilisation so foolishly try to separate from sensuous life, and to glorify at its expense. Men would follow knowledge and the creation of beauty for their own sakes, and not for the enslavement of their fellows, and they would be rewarded by finding their most necessary work grow interesting and beautiful under their hands without their being conscious of it. The man who felt keenest the pleasure of lying on the hill-side under a rushen hut among the sheep on a summer night, would be no less fit for the enjoyment of the great communal hall with all its splendours of arch and column, and vault and tracery. Nor would he who took to heart the piping of the wind and washing of the waves as he sat at the helm of the fishing-boat, be deadened to the beauty of art-made music. It is workmen only and not pedants who can produce real vigorous art.

SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—A social gathering of members and sympathisers will take place at 28 Grays Inn Road (14 doors from Holborn) on Sunday April 21st, at 6 p.m., to discuss the position and best means of promoting the interests of the Society. Admission free. Tea, coffee, and cake provided.

And amidst this pleasing labour, and the rest that went with it, would disappear from the earth's face all the traces of the past slavery. Being no longer driven to death by anxiety and fear, we should have time to avoid disgracing the earth with filth and squalor, and accidental ugliness would disappear along with that which was the mere birth of fantastic perversity. The utterly base doctrine, as Carlyle has it, that this world is a cockney nightmare, would be known no more.

But perhaps you may think that Society being thus happy and at peace, its very success would lead it to corruption once more? Yes, that might be if men were not watchful and valiant; but we have begun by saying that they would be free, and free men are bound to be responsible, and that means that they shall be watchful and valiant. The world will be the world still, I do not deny it; but such men as I have been thinking of will surely be fitter to meet its troubles than the dwellers in our present muddle of authority and unconscious revolt.

Or again, some may say such a condition of things might lead indeed to happiness but also to stagnation. Well, to my mind that would be a contradiction in terms, if indeed we agree that happiness is caused by the pleasurable exercise of our faculties. And yet suppose the worst, and that the world did rest after so many troubles—where would be the harm? I remember, after having been ill once, how pleasant it was to lie on my bed without pain or fever, doing nothing but watching the sunbeams and listening to the sounds of life outside; and might not the great world of men, if it once deliver itself from the delirious struggle for life amidst dishonesty, rest for a little after the long fever and be none the worse for it?

Anyhow, I am sure it would be the better for getting rid of its fever, whatever came of it; and sure also that the simplicity of life I have spoken of, which some would call stagnation, would give real life to the great mass of mankind, and to them at least would be a well-spring of happiness. It would raise them at once to a higher level of life, until the world began to be peopled, not with commonplace people, but with honest folk not sharply conscious of their superiority as "intellectual" persons now are, but self-respecting and respecting the personality of others, because they would feel themselves useful and happy, that is alive.

And as for the superior people, if such a world were not good enough for them I am sorry, but am driven to ask them how they manage to get on with the present one, which is worse. I am afraid they would have to answer, we like it better because it is worse, and, therefore, relatively we are better.

Alas! my friends, these are the fools who are our masters now. The masters of fools then, you say? Yes, so it is; let us cease to be fools then, and they will be our masters no longer. Believe me, that will be worth trying for, whatever may come afterwards.

Take this for the last word of my dream of what is to be—the test of our being fools no longer will be that we shall no longer have masters.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

BRITISH PLUCK.

The Labour Tribune, "organ of the miners and bolt forgers," after describing an elaborate model dwelling-house fitted up by German coal-masters for their miners, comments in the following strain:—

"This paternal interest in, and oversight of their workpeople is very interesting, and would be admirable were it not that, as every one knows who has studied the Continental relations of Capital and Labour, the manliness of the workpeople is bartered away. Compared with the Englishman, who would probably decline to be catered for in this fashion, the miner on the Continent is a mere slave. The wants of the men are provided for in the same spirit and for the same reason as the colliery-horses are well stalled and well fed. And with a good stall and sufficient food they are expected to be content like any other animal. Resistance to authority or rebellion against grievances is a crime which must be sternly quelled and severely punished, as every Continental strike is sufficient to show. Perhaps we are rather insular in our notions, but of the two we would rather be justly than generously treated, and we have no wish to transplant this feature of German life."

It would be interesting to know whether manliness is an especially English attribute, and of which the British worker has a monopoly. Opposite the paragraph quoted is an account of the cheating and grinding of the Cradley Heath chainmakers, and of the terrible infant mortality amidst them, written presumably by the author of the note about English manliness, and he consoles himself with the reflection that—

"We should hardly be surprised if the Cradley people themselves regard this massacre of the innocents as one of the least of their troubles, seeing that every fresh arrival means one more mouth to be fed and one more difficulty added in the way of getting a living. And when the tiny sufferer pines away and leaves such an inhospitable world, it is hardly to be wondered at if the parents find a much too ready consolation in the thought that the bairn is 'better off,' while the struggle for its parents has become, at least, a trifle lighter."

It is depressing to find a labour paper waving the Union Jack in this fashion, and thanking their stars that they are not as other men, especially unmanly Germans, instead of recognising the international solidarity of Labour.

F. K.

He that will not have new remedies will have new evils.—Lord Bacon.

BURIED ALIVE.

THE heady odours o'er the lands
Make drunk young lovers as they wend;
I saw a man with horny hands
Li to a tenebrous hole descend.
The heavens dazzle; luscious June
Her sap of gladness doth distil;
Bees honey make and hum in tune—
The man is in his black hole still!

How good a thing is idleness!
The lizards whisper, "Let us sleep!"
The mellow airs, with a caress,
Over the languid senses creep.—
The man's hand did a lantern shield—
Dermice and rabbits with a will
Make merry in the clover-field—
The man is in his black hole still!

Schoolboys should hie on such a day
To gambol 'neath the forest trees;
The workshop windows all the way
Stand open to the summer breeze.
What does he, hidden from the light?
Oh, in the sun, upon the hill,
The ant-heaps are a pleasant sight!—
The man is in his black hole still!

The cricket doth his rattle spring,
Night falls, and all is hushed in rest,
With head ensconced beneath her wing,
The sparrow sleeps in her warm nest.
But is not his long day's work sped?
The stars of eve come forth until Heaven's vault is all irradiated—
The man is in his black hole still!

He comes! On what funereal ground
Abideth this black man accurst?
Denser than the shades night casts around
The solid darkness he has burst.
O miner! to a graveyard here
Thy hard lot binds thee, to thy ill;
Coffined in life or on the bier,
The man is in his black hole still!

EUGENE POTIER
(Translated by LAURA LAFARGUE).

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING APRIL 20, 1889.

14	Sun.	1794. Meeting of the London Corresponding Society at Chalk Farm. 1832. First number of The Crisis: or, the Change from Error to Truth and Happiness , edited by Robert Owen. 1834. Massacres of the rue Transnonain, Paris. 1849. Hungary proclaimed a free State. 1865. Abraham Lincoln assassinated. 1879. Solovieff's attempt upon the Czar.
15	Mon.	1836. George Engel born. 1840. Repeal Association founded. 1881. Murder by law of A. T. Jeliaboff, S. L. Perofskaja, N. Kilbalehich, T. Mikhayloff, N. Rissakoff. 1882. Mine discovered under Moscow Cathedral.
16	Tues.	1790. Benjamin Franklin died. 1871. Hyde Park demonstration of fraternity with the Commune. 1878. Strike of 80,000 cotton operatives in Lancashire. 1836. Karakatoff's attempt upon Alexander III.
17	Wed.	1560. Philip Melancthon died. 1790. John Frith tried for high treason. 1858. Acquittal of Dr. Simon Bernard of conspiring to kill Louis Napoleon. 1876. Fenian prisoners escape in the Catalpa from Western Australia. 1884. Bradlaugh and Hyndman debate on Socialism in St. James's Hall. 1885. Murder of Colombian rebels.
18	Thur.	1775. American War of Independence began. 1817. Trial of James Harrison for sedition. 1824. Byron died.
19	Fri.	1772. Ricardo born. 1775. Battle of Lexington. 1823. Robert Owen's third lecture in the Rotunda, Dublin. 1843. Limerick monster meeting; 120,000 present. 1882. Charles Darwin died.
20	Sat.	1653. Cromwell dissolved the Rump Parliament.

'The Crisis.'—The first number of The Crisis: or, the Change from Error and Misery to Truth and Happiness was published April 14, 1832. It was edited by Robert Owen until Oct. 27 (No. 34), when Robert Dale Owen was joined with him; they carried it on thus to April 20, 1833. On April 27 that year, the subtitle was changed to "The National Co-operative, Trades Union, and Equitable Labour Exchange Gazette." No editor's name appears, but it is known to have been the Rev. J. G. Smith. On April 12, 1834, the words "Equitable Labour Exchange" have dropped out, and it so continues to the end, August 23, 1834, when The Crisis was discontinued, to make way for the New Moral World, edited by Robert Owen, and the Shepherd, edited by the Rev. J. G. Smith.—S.

THE WOLVES AND THE JACKALS.—The Detroit Free Press gives a fable that, reading Landlord and Capitalist for Wolf and Jackal, just about hits the mark: A pack of Wolves having assembled to take action in the matter of reforming the morals of the Jackals, the Lion was asked to preside. "I'll do anything to accommodate," he replied, "but it seems to me that the Wolves are as much in need of reform as the Jackals." "No doubt of it," said the leader of the pack, "but if we pitch into the failings of others we distract attention from our own." And it was therefore Resolved, That the Jackals must reform, or the power of the law be invoked. MORAL—We see it every day.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HIED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. B. (Manchester), and others.—Please note that reports cannot possibly be inserted if they reach us later than first post Tuesday.

X. A.—Write to the secretary of our Branch there; he will tell you all about it.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	MORRIS, SPARLING, and NICOLL 113
The Society of the Future (concluded)	WILLIAM MORRIS 114
British Pluck	F. KILZ 115
Buried Alive (Translated by LAURA LAFFARGE)	EUGENE POTIER 115
Revolutionary Calendar—'The Crisis'	H. H. SPARLING 115
Culture to the Rescue	REGINALD A. BECKETT 116
The Indian National Congress	A. BROOKS 116
Scotch Notes	J. BRUCE GLASIER 117
Correspondence	117
The Labour Struggle	118
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	119
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	120

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday April 10.

ENGLAND	FRANCE	GERMANY	SPAIN
Justice	Paris—L'Égalité (daily)	Berlin—Volks Tribune	Seville—La Solidaridad
Labour Elector	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	Brunn—Arbeiterstimme	Madrid—El Socialista
Labour Tribune	Le Proletariat	Wien—Gleichheit	Barcelona—El Productor
London—Free Press	La Revolte	HUNGARY	PORTUGAL
Norwich—Daylight	Le Coup de Feu	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
Postal Service Gazette	Pobudka	ROMANIA
Railway Review	HOLLAND	Jassy—Muncitorul
Social Demokrat	Hague—Recht voor Allen	DENMARK
Unity	Ghent—Vooruit	Social-Demokraten
INDIA	Arbeiterstimme	SWEDEN
Bankipore—Behar Herald	ITALY	Stockholm, Social-Demokraten
Madras—People's Friend	Turin—Nuova Gazzetta Operaia	Malmö—Arbetet
UNITED STATES	Turin—Il Muratore	WEST INDIES
New York—Der Sozialist		Cuba—El Productor
Freiheit
Truthseeker
Volkszeitung
Jewish Volkszeitung
Workmen's Advocate
The Truth
Boston—Woman's Journal
Investigator
Chicago—Knights of Labor

CULTURE TO THE RESCUE.

THE question, "Is life worth living?" which could hardly be raised in any age but ours, continues to receive amplification at the hands of its original propounder, Mr. W. H. Mallock. In an article on "The Scientific Basis of Optimism" in the Fortnightly Review for January he delivers himself of the following creditable utterances:

"No one would wish to speak flippantly—or at all events no sane man can think lightly—of the importance of giving to all a sufficiency of daily bread. But however we realise that starvation and privation are miseries, it does not follow—indeed we know it not to be true—that a light heart goes with a full stomach. Or suppose us to conceive that in the future it would come to do so, and that men would be completely happy when they all had enough to eat, would this be a consummation calculated to raise our enthusiasm, or move our souls with a solemn zeal to work for it? Would any human being who was capable of anything that has ever been called a high conception of life, feel any pleasure in the thought of a Humanity 'shut up in infinite content,' when once it has secured itself three meals a-day, and smiling every morning a self-satisfied smile at the universe, its huge lips shining with fried eggs and bacon?"

There is something very irritating in the cool impudence with which this full-fed philosopher argues the advisability of all people having the common necessities of life; but we are apt to forget that this is only self-evident to Socialists. "It does not follow," however, "that a light heart goes with a full stomach." Perhaps Mr. Mallock has never had an opportunity of trying whether it goes with an empty one. Our contention of course is that without the satisfaction of bodily needs it is impossible to realise any social ideals whatever; and that consequently it is useless to strive for any desired improvement until this foundation be laid. Then, and then only, shall we see if light heartedness or any other desirable quality can be successfully cultivated on a large scale. The next point is that even supposing material satisfaction would produce social contentment, refined ladies and gentlemen with philanthropic tendencies would be unable to "work for it," owing to the "conception of life" involved not being sufficiently high to "move their souls with solemn zeal." Putting aside altogether the elementary question of mere justice in the apportionment of wealth to work, the sacrifice of the highbred and delicate enjoyments of Mr. Mallock and his circle to the vulgar claims of popular hunger is too impious to be thought of. Yet, to show that it is possible, even for persons whose interest in art is perhaps as deep as that of Mr. Mallock himself, I quote the following lines, which have always particularly struck me, from the pamphlet entitled 'Useful Work versus Useless Toil':

"If the cripple and the starveling disappear from our streets, if the earth nourish us all alike, if the sun shine for all of us alike, if to one and all of us the glorious drama of the earth—day and night, summer and winter—can be presented as a thing to understand and love, we can afford to wait awhile till we are purified from the shame of the past corruption, and till art arises again amongst people freed from the terror of the slave and the shame of the robber."

This Mallock is he who used to invite Laurence Gronlund to dinner, and try to coax him out of the impregnable fortress of Marxian economics. This is what he gets in return ('Danton in the French Revolution'):

"If he were perfectly frank he would say: 'Life is not worth living to any but an aristocracy. An aristocracy implies an exclusive class, implies that the mass of men be kept down. Then let them be kept down, for it is better that life be enjoyed by some than that it be enjoyed by none.' This is a sentiment so selfish as to be satanic, and it is false."

The cynical pessimism here stripped naked is very thinly veiled indeed in the whole passage I have quoted from Mallock; it is clearly shown in the last line, which is simply brutal. This horrible image is, however, valuable as showing the real nature of that delicacy and refinement which these superior people are so disinterestedly anxiously to preserve.

REGINALD A. BECKETT.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

EVEN the distant East is showing signs of awakening. Revolutionary thought is developing itself even there. Knowing what government in India is, we recognise in the Indian National Congress a party working on as progressive lines as the paternal government which administers the affairs of our Oriental brethren will permit under their benign rule. 'Tis true, there is nothing very alarming in their modest programme; but, in it, the elective principle is demanded. This Congress, be it remembered, is only in its infancy; the meeting at Allahabad is only its fourth. Its first meeting at Bombay was attended by 80 delegates, the second at Calcutta by 400, the next at Madras by 600, and the last by 1,500. Evidently the people of India perceive in this body the nucleus of an organisation through which they could make their wants and grievances known. The movement is essentially middle-class, having the support of nine-tenths of that element, "regardless of creed and race differences." No wonder that some timid and ignorant people are clamouring for its suppression. Such demands, however, can have but one effect, viz., increasing its popularity. Already the numerical strength of the association is 70,000; 70,000 men struggling to throw off some of the heavier and more oppressive burdens which British domination has imposed upon them. With the increasing spread of education, and as each successive Congress meets, we may expect to see a development of thought which in course of time must find expression in the endorsement of Socialistic principles. Then the Indian National Congress will have struck on the only lines on which the conditions of life of each and all of the numerous peoples of India can be altered for their mutual advantage.

A. B.

LOUIS KOSSUTH DYING.—News from Turin states that Louis Kossuth, the famous Hungarian patriot, who has been living there for a long time past, and has nearly completed his 84th year, is dying.

THE STRIKE AT MARSEILLES.—The strike which took place on the 1st among the men employed by the different shipping companies at Marseilles, and in which over a thousand are concerned, still continues. No agreement appears probable at present. There has been no disturbance, despite the provocative efforts of the enemy.

At the fourth annual festival of the Dundee and District Mill and Factory Operatives' Union the other week, after tea, there was a good deal of praise given to the Rev. Mr. Williamson, the "factory-worker's friend." This gentleman has fought well for his proteges and done yeoman service in their cause, so that no one will grudge him any praise he may be given; but in one of the speeches a suggestive line occurs. His "aim was to see every family in that city earning 15s. per week (applause)." Now, when that is the "aim" or ideal, imagination recoils from picturing what the present reality must be.

VICTORIA PARK DEBATE.—The debate which has been carried on in Victoria Park between H. Davis and Mr. Hoffman the last few Sundays, has attracted a good deal of attention. The orderly and courteous manner in which it has been conducted, is not its least important feature as a piece of propaganda. Both speakers were listened to with marked attention, and the points on either side were well taken up by the audience. Our friend, Mr. Hoffman, it is only fair to say, met our comrade in the most fraternal spirit, while strongly disagreeing with the Anarchist theory as laid down by Davis. The following were the points raised in this debate:—1. Can organisation exist without government? 2. Is some central authority necessary, either national or local? 3. Must the rule of the majority always prevail? 4. What would be the result of the abolition of all prescriptive law? 5. How far has law aided and fostered what is known as the sweating system? 6. Would the rule of the physically strongest prevail under Anarchy? 7. Are the police force an accidental factor of the present conditions, or are they a necessary corollary of the present system of private property and misery?

SCOTCH NOTES.

No sensible Scotchman can be a patriot nowadays. He may love the hills and glens of Scotland, but they are no more his glens and mountains than are the Hindu Koosh or the plains of Timbuctoo. Of course he can peep at them over a hedge, or squint at them through a railway carriage window, just as he can look at the crags and peaks of the moon through a telescope.

I used to be a bit of a patriot myself. I enrolled myself a volunteer and joined lustily in singing "God save the Queen," with the view of defending my country from foreign invaders, when I heard that the Russians were marching upon Constantinople. I have since discovered that I have no country at all; and so far as the land of Scotland is concerned, I might as well be a Russian or a Turk. The only privilege a man has in being a Scotchman, is the privilege of fighting for landlords abroad and voting for them at home. There are some Scotchmen, however, who appear to esteem this privilege vastly.

I was present a week or so ago at a Liberal demonstration in a country town. The enthusiasm with which Lord Rosebery's name was received simply staggered me. Lord Rosebery I know as a man who makes politics a recreation and horse-racing a business. When Munro Ferguson, M.P., "of Novar," stepped upon the platform, the workmen waved their hats and caps, and cheered him as vociferously as if he had just returned from butchering a few thousands of Arabs or niggers, or from marrying the daughter of an American millionaire. So far as I know Mr. Ferguson has done neither, and what on earth they cheered him for, except that he was a landlord, I cannot conceive.

When Irishmen cheer like mad about William O'Brien, John Dillon, and Michael Davitt, there is some reason and method in their madness. These men have done something, or at any rate are endeavouring to do something for Irishmen; but when Scotchmen cheer Lord Rosebery and Munro Ferguson, two robber landlords who cloak their plunder in the hypocritical garb of Liberalism, then we are perplexed indeed.

A weekly paper recently took a plebescite on the question as to who was the greatest living Scotchman—Lord Rosebery was returned at the head of the poll! Again I say no sensible Scotchman can be a patriot.

Lord Rosebery the greatest living Scotchman! Who, then, is the greatest dead Scotchman? I have always had a vague dread that it will some day be proved that Robert Burns was an Irishman.

It has already been proved, I believe, that Wallace was a Welshman, or something of that kind; and if Burns is taken from us, no great democratic Scotchman will be left us—except perhaps Rob Roy. Rob Roy was a cattle-stealer and an outlaw. He stole cattle from rich landlords who had plundered the people; and he defied the laws made by rich landlords to protect their plunder. Thus in a humble way he was a pioneer of modern scientific Socialism. Would that we had a Rob Roy nowadays in Scotland!

The Dundee People's Journal and the Scottish Leader are both generous in admitting into their columns letters in favour of Socialism. In the former, comrade Leatham of Aberdeen is writing a series of articles on the labour question from a Socialist standpoint.

Henry George's forthcoming lecture tour in Scotland is of some interest to Socialists. For the man himself we can have neither admiration or respect: his betrayal of our brave comrades, the Chicago martyrs, being one of the basest episodes in modern political campaigning. We have no need, however, to vindicate their memory by tracking him down with accusation and denunciation—their fame will burn through the night of years as bright and imperishable as the stars. They were heroes; he is a politician.

There is no reason why Socialists should display hostility towards the propagation of his land-nationalisation scheme. It is true the scheme itself—especially since it has been cut down and polished round to pass through the mesh of practical politics—is a reactionary one; but none the less the assertion of the principle upon which it is based—the right of the people to the land, and its necessary attack upon landlordism and plunder—in a measure makes for Socialism.

If there were any likelihood of Mr. George's "single-tax" proposal, or any other scheme of mere fiscal reform, directing the attention of thoughtful and earnest people from the great problem of the destruction of class privilege and mastership in every form, Socialists might reasonably regard the advocacy of such measures with disfavour. But there is none: Socialism is already an immensely preponderating force in Scotland, and the minor momentum of land-nationalisation may impel but cannot retard it.

The Land Restoration League was founded in Glasgow by Henry George almost contemporaneously with the formation of the Scottish Land and Labour League by Andreas Scheu and a few other Socialists. The Land and Labour League was then a very small body—a dozen or so; the Land Restoration League had 2,000 names upon its roll in the course of a few weeks. For a while it appeared as if the Land Restoration League was going to become a formidable political party, likely, indeed, to soon rival the historic Liberal and Tory parties. But it did not. The formation of branches of the Social-Democratic Federation and Socialist League in Glasgow about a year afterwards drew from it a large number of its most useful and enthusiastic members. Since then the number of Socialists has greatly increased, while the Land Restorers—especially after the defeat of their candidates at the general election of 1885—have diminished.

In fact the Land Restorers immediately exhibited a tendency to arrange themselves into three classes,—those who thought land restoration was enough; those who thought it was not enough; and those who thought it was rather more than enough. The first of these have stuck to their four-shillings-in-the-pound-tax-upon-landlords theory of complete economic salvation; the second have become Socialists; while the last have reverted to mere political Radicalism. A not inconsiderable number, it is true, belong to neither of these groups, but regard land restoration as a step merely towards Socialism; these latter opportunists form undoubtedly the ablest, and probably the most numerous portion of those who still prefer to style themselves land restorers. Anyhow, if Henry George takes means to ascertain the position and strength of the movement which he founded, he will discover that Socialism has seriously thinned the ranks of his followers in Scotland; and of those that answer to the call of his voice there will be few of any account who are not much more Socialists than land restorers.

Let, then, Mr. George preach. His propaganda, so far as it goes, will at least stir up the soil for us. Where his ploughshare goes, there our hands shall sow, and there also our hands shall reap.

J. BRUCE GLASIER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

COMRADE,—I have been greatly pleased with a novel feature in L'Egalité, a Parisian paper, which I should be glad to see copied by the Commonweal. I refer to the "Tribune Socialiste." In the columns which carry this title, Socialists of all schools are allowed to freely discuss their theories, and the result is that much instructive and interesting reading is provided for the whole body of subscribers. I feel sure that if you introduced a Socialist Free Tribune into the Commonweal, you would secure a great many new contributors in the form of correspondents, and would afford an opportunity to the latest converts to Socialism to thoroughly understand our principles. Interesting as are the orthodox articles in the Commonweal and Justice, I feel confident that there is a large body of Socialists who, like myself, would like as a change to read letters written in the language of the workshop and the street by comrades who are seeking to know the why and wherefore of Socialism and Anarchism. Moreover, I hold that the friendly discussion of our differences of opinion as Communists, Anarchists, and Social Democrats, is decidedly useful to the common cause of the emancipation of labour.

Whilst writing, and having in view the recent decided tendency of the Socialist League towards Communist-Anarchism, I would draw the attention of comrades to the recent modification in the organisation of the Spanish Socialists which was agreed to at the Congress of Valencia. The clauses which have been adopted unanimously by the delegates, and have since been submitted to the groups for their confirmation, are as follows:

1. By Anarchism we understand a social state in which there is no necessity for government. We are of opinion that whilst the principle of authority exists, there will be no guarantee for the liberty of all members of society. The principle of authority or of the direction of society, supposes that those who associate together are incapable of ruling themselves, and it always degenerates into tyranny. Sociology proves to us that man has already attained his majority, and that he is worthy to enjoy all the liberty that the laws of Nature—the only ones which we accept—permit him to enjoy. The only obstacle raised against this enjoyment is a matter of interests, monopolies, and privileges, sustained not by reason or justice, but by deception and force.

2. Since we recognise that a society will never be completely Anarchist whilst there remains in it the least authoritarianism or subjection, we must also recognise as a guarantee of liberty the abolition of the principle of private property and of the exploitation of man by man.

3. Consequently to the above, the revolutionary Anarchist organisation will be formed of all individuals, societies, groups, circles, journals, etc., who accept Anarchism, without distinction of revolutionary means or economic schools.

4. Since man ought to be free in his actions as well as in his right of association, and since the groups and the individuals are free to make arrangements with others, and to act as it appears best to those who are interested in obtaining the required results, without any other hindrances or obstacles than those which necessarily exist in accordance with the end to be obtained—no statutes or rules of conduct are imposed, and to each individual, to each group, and to all the organisation, is left the study and the means which they will find most suitable to secure the triumph of Anarchism.

5. We believe that it will be convenient for all the units of the organisation to have a Centre of relations and statistics, so as to facilitate the exchange of information, communications, and agreement between the groups, a kind of clearing-house of the organisation, with no other rights nor any initiative; and the units of the organisation will determine how this Centre shall be constituted, as well as the individuals it shall consist of, its locality, duration, etc.

These clauses, I think, contain much matter for reflection. I commend them to the careful thought of those members of the League who desire to see their organisation rendered yet more powerful and yet more decided in its opposition to authority in every shape and form. English Socialists have, I venture to think, still something to learn from their Continental brethren.—Fraternally yours,

JAMES BLACKWELL.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The Lanarkshire steel smelters will get an advance of 5 per cent. towards the end of this month.

The master-joiners of Greenock have agreed to advance the wages of their men from 6½d. to 7½d. per hour.

The rope and twine spinner's strike in Dundee still continues. One master has granted the men's demands.

The struggle between the ironworkers at Millom and Askam is still continuing, and all hope of a compromise seems to be given up.

The Edinburgh Corporation workmen connected with the cleansing department have unanimously agreed to join the Carter's Union.

A strike of labourers, smiths, and crane-drivers for an advance in wages has taken place at Horwich Locomotive Works of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company.

The coal-owners in the South and West Yorkshire districts met at Leeds on April 9th, to consider their action respecting the demand of the men for 10 per cent. advance as agreed upon at the Birmingham Conference.

A strike has taken place at Greenock with the quay labourers, engaged to discharge beet-root sugar from the steamer Ibis. The men refuse to work until they are paid 7d. per and 10½d. per hour as overtime after 6 p.m.

A proposal, says a Glasgow paper, is being ventilated in the south, and is meeting with considerable support, that in future contracts a clause should be inserted providing that prices shall rise and fall in proportion to the rise and fall in wages.

MASONS' LABOURERS' STRIKE.—The masons' labourers on strike at Kilmarnock have agreed to form a Kilmarnock Branch of the Scottish Labourers' Union. The men are at present paid 4d. per hour, and are agitating for an increase to 4½d., which the masters have declined to concede.

BAKERS' UNION.—A meeting is to be held next Saturday evening at 8 p.m., at the "Prince Arthur," Brunswick Place, City Road, for the purpose of starting a union for the district of Shoreditch, Hoxton, and St. Lukes. Meetings will be held shortly in the north, south, and west of London.

The miners throughout the South Wales and Monmouthshire coalfields, numbering about 60,000, returned to work last week, at an advance in wages of 7½ per cent. The miners demanded an advance of 12½ per cent., but a compromise was effected by the coalowners, and a great strike was averted.

KILMARNOCK MILL GIRLS' STRIKE.—The girls in the employment of T. and J. Ferguson, Nursery Mills—about 600 in number—have come out on strike against the bad quality of yarn supplied. The firm state the matter complained of is quite inadvertent, and promise to do all in their power to meet the wish of the workers. But the strike continues.

DUNDEE TRADES COUNCIL.—It was resolved, at a meeting held 3rd April, to take a plebiscite of all trades unionists in Dundee, for the purpose of seeing whether they were in favour of an eight hours' day, and also for ascertaining whether it was the desire that it should be obtained by Act of Parliament or through the agencies of the various societies.

RIVETERS' STRIKE.—Nearly all the riveters who were out on strike at Govan have returned to work. Some dissatisfaction still prevails among a section of the men, and also with those engaged in other branches of shipbuilding. In one of the largest yards it is said that wages in certain branches have been increased from 40 to 50 per cent. within the past six months.

GAS-STOKERS.—Sunday morning the gas-stokers and firemen, who are agitating and organising all over London, held another meeting opposite "The Ordnance Arms," Barking Road. Hobart spoke, urging them to organise, having always in view to ultimately get complete control of their work, and thus get the whole of the result of it. Numbers joined the union. Mowbray will address them Sunday next.

RAILWAY SERVANTS AND PENSIONS.—During last week a ballot was taken among the men employed in workshops of the London and North-Western Railway at Crewe, whether or not the pension fund should be continued or abolished. The fund has caused much irritation, and the men have held mass meetings against it. The result of the ballot was made known on Thursday 4th. More than 11,000 voted for its abolition and about 900 for its continuance.

DARWEN BRICKLAYERS.—The bricklayers of Darwen are working at a higher rate of wages, the result of a threatened strike. For a long time they have been working for 8d. per hour, whilst in Blackburn 8½d. is paid. Some time ago a Bricklayers' Society was formed, and since then an agitation has been in progress for an advance. The masters took no notice, and a fortnight ago the men intimated their intention of leaving their employment; but the masters decided to pay 8½d. the same as Blackburn.

STUD AND PEG, AND GAS-RIVET MAKERS.—The operatives in the stud and peg factories at Blackheath and surrounding places have given notice for an advance. Unless the employers concede the increase the men have threatened to strike. The gas-rivet makers in same districts have also given notice for an advance. This notice expired on Saturday, and in the event of the masters refusing to concede the claim—viz., 8s. per cwt.—it is very probable that the operatives will decline to take out any more iron at the old rates.

CLYDE SHIPWRIGHTS.—Negotiations have been pending for some time between the Clyde Shipbuilders Employers' Association and the members of the Associated Shipwrights' Society regarding an advance of wages. After two conferences between representatives of both Associations, it has been arranged that the shipwrights receive an increase of ½d. per hour, commencing April 4th and continuing till September 6th. Another meeting will take place previous to this latter date, to arrange future rates in terms of the employers' new association rules.

SCOTCH MINERS.—The General Assembly of the Sons of Labour, representing the mining districts of Lanark and Dumbartonshire, has unanimously agreed to take joint action with the English and Welsh miners to secure a 10 per cent. advance on an early date. The Fifeshire miners have given notice of the same action. It is intended to hold a demonstration at Hamilton—11th April—to give direction and force to the movement inaugurated at the Birmingham Conference. William Small, miners' secretary, Lanarkshire, submitted to the Home Office some of the alleged unsatisfactory audits at various collieries under the Truck Act, and the law officers of the Crown are to be asked their opinion on the subject.

DARLSTON GUN-LOCK TRADE.—On Tuesday week a meeting of gun-lock filers on strike was held at the offices of the Nut and Bolt Makers' Association, Darlston. Mr. R. Juggins presided, and said they had now entered upon the eleventh week of the strike. He regretted that the employers had not conceded the small advance asked for. He thought it was high time to start the operatives to work on the co-operative principle, which would be far better than wasting the money on a strike. Each workman had his own tools, so there would be nothing to provide but the means of purchasing the locks and stocking them until there was a demand for them. He was willing to suggest this plan to the next Council meeting of the Midland Counties Trades' Federation. A resolution in this sense had the approval of the meeting.

MILITARY BOOTMAKING.—A "Cavalry Bootmaker" writes to the Star to call attention to the price paid for labour to the bootmakers at Aldershot. He says that the cavalry soldier pays the best price in the country for his work, and the man that does it gets the worst pay. Here are his prices for repairing:—Boots soled, heeled, welted, 4s. 10d.; wages, 1s. 7d.; materials, 1s.; profit, 2s. 3d. Boots soled, heeled, 3s. 10d.; wages, 1s. 2d.; materials, 10d.; profit, 1s. 10d. Boots heeled, 10d.; wages, 3d.; material, 1d.; profit, 6d. Boots toe-pieced, 10d.; wages, 3d.; material, 2d.; profit, 5d. Patch, 4d.; wages, 1d.; profit, 3d. Spur-rests, 4d.; wages, 2d.; profit, 2d. It will take a man a day of 13 or 14 hours to do two pairs of those boots, and for that amount of time and labour he gets 3s. 2d., while the master bootmaker pockets 4s. 6d. He winds up by asking: "Is it right or is it just that a man will sit down 14 or 15 hours making a heavy pair of cavalry jack-boots for which he gets 3s. 6d., and out of that he is compelled to lay out 4d. with the master bootmaker for materials to make them with, and at the same time have to find a workshop, while the master boot-maker pockets 10s. on that pair of boots? It is nearly time the military authorities put a stop to this." Yes! and it is time that workmen everywhere should set to work to "put a stop to this;" for it is going on in all trades everywhere and all the time.

NATIONAL AMALGAMATED SAILORS' AND FIREMEN'S UNION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.—The following notice has been issued to "sailors and firemen, bo'suns and donkeymen shipping at Tidal Basin Shipping Office": At a large meeting of the Tidal Basin Branch of the above Union, held on the 22nd March 1889, it was resolved to adopt the following rates of wages, and to stand firm until these rates are paid: Firemen, in western ocean boats, £4 15s.; sailors, ditto, £4; firemen, to the southward, Mediterranean, and Suez Canal, £4 10s.; sailors, ditto, £4. Sailing ships—Baltic and Quebec, £3 15s.; southward, £3 5s.; donkeymen, in western ocean boats, £5 5s.; ditto, southward, Mediterranean and Suez Canal, £5; boat-swains, ditto, £5 5s.; boat-swains, in western ocean boats, £6. The notice goes on: "What we ask in the above rates is not too much, and in asking this we are only seeking what will enable us to keep our wives and families in a respectable manner. We are only asking a fair share of the fruits of our hard labour. . . . Join the already strong ranks of the National Union, and ask others to help you. In times past we have looked to the shipowners to do something to better our condition, but now let us strive as men who are free-born and have all the advantages of improved times to assist us to raise ourselves to the position we should occupy—namely, that of the most important factor in this great nation's commerce." There are at present 46 branches of the National Union established, having a membership of 50,000. Seafaring men wishing to become members may be enrolled at the following London branches: 3 Mint Pavement, Tower Hill; 9 Jeremiah Street, Green's Home, East India Dock Road; 1 Tickford Terrace, Tidal Basin.

ALVERTHORPE WOOLLEN WEAVERS.—The strike of woollen weavers at Alverthorpe, near Wakefield, still continues, and there seems at present no prospect of a settlement. About 130 are affected. It is now over five weeks since the weavers, women and girls, refused a reduced rate of payment. Various kinds of woollen fabrics are manufactured by the firm, including a large proportion of tweeds and fine blue-cloths. For weaving, so much per piece is paid, and the contract between the firm and the weaver extends simply to the piece which she undertakes to produce in the loom. The rate of payment has been considerably lowered more than once. Formerly as much as 8s. 6d. was paid per piece (about 50 yards) of tweed. Some time ago this was reduced to 5s. 6d. No resistance was offered, though it was felt to be a considerable "drop"; but when the firm about five weeks ago intimated that the same work would have to be done for 4s. 8d. the weavers quitted the mill, many of them leaving their pieces in process of weaving. In so doing they of course committed a breach of their contract, as they afterwards found to their cost. Sixty-five of them were summoned before the West Riding magistrates for the offence, and each was ordered to pay 3s. 3d. damages and 6s. 6d. costs, at the rate of 2s. 6d. per week, amounting in all to £33, 6s. 3d. The justices further ordered the defendants to return to the mill and complete the weaving of the pieces. This they have done. It is stated, however, that so far they have not paid any instalment, and that they are determined not to do so, as they cannot understand the equity of their having to pay damages and to complete their contract in addition. As to the wages earned, it is asserted on behalf of the weavers that a good hand in full work can weave five pieces of tweed in a fortnight. These, paid for at 5s. 6d. each, would bring 27s. 6d., or 13s. 9d. per week. At 4s. 8d., the reduced rate, the amount earned would be only 11s. 8d. per week. This would be low, even if constant work could be obtained, which hitherto has not been the case. Suppose a lack of work of two days and a half in the week, as has sometimes occurred, the amount earned would not exceed that paid for a piece—4s. 8d. The rate for fine blue cloth has also been lowered. At one time as much as 11s. 6d. per piece was paid for one kind. This was brought down to 9s. 8d., and now the rate offered is 7s. 11d. An expert hand requires eight days to turn out two pieces, and not more than 11s. could be earned on the average in the week. Here again full employment has not been the rule. One of the weavers, who has been engaged on this class of work, and has the reputation amongst her fellows of being both industrious and quick at the loom, from October until the strike began did not earn on the average more than 6s. per week, owing to having to wait for work. The masters put their case thus: They admit that they have reduced the plain cloth rate as stated, but assert that they have introduced such an improvement in the arrangements as will make it possible for the weavers they intend to employ to earn quite as good wages at the lower rate as they did under the old system at the higher rate. Some 14 or 15 of the old hands have returned to work, other weavers have been taken on, and they are thus enabled to run some 50 or 60 looms; so that they are in a position to judge what a good weaver can earn under the new scale. The wages-book, they assert, already shows that from 14s. to 16s.

per week can be made at plain work. The weavers, on the other hand, say that there has been no alteration made in the speed of looms, nor in any other way, so far as they know, which would enable them to make as good wages. The firm further state that they do not intend to run more than 20 or 30 additional looms. It would therefore appear that a large proportion of the girls and women on strike will have to look for employment elsewhere. They do not belong to any trades union, and an appeal is being made for contributions to enable them to continue the struggle. The public are said to be responding pretty well, those who are out receiving 4s. a-week. A procession of the strikers was broken up by the police, and two girls who were marching at its head with concertinas were fined for "obstruction."

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, May 6, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Oxford, to end of September.

1889:—Clerkenwell and Mitcham, to end of February. Leicester, North London, and East London, to end of March. Bradford, to end of April.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Commonweals for 1888, handsomely bound in red, are now ready, price 5s.; per post, 5s. 6d.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—H. Schmitt, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; Blundell, 6d.; R. Turner, 1s.; J. Turner, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; Seglie, 6d.; Tilley, 6d.; Rose, 6d.; B. W., 6d.; Latham, 1s. 6d.; Nicoll, 6d.; Fuller, 6d.; S. Presburg, 6d.; and A. Scheu, 5s. Norwich Branch, 2s. Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.—Mile End Waste—Fair meeting on Saturday, when Brookes spoke; some friendly opposition from a Fabian. Hyde Park—Nicoll, Mrs. Lahr, Furlong (S.D.F.), Cantwell, and Hicks spoke. Good sale of Weals, and 1s. 10d. collected. Clerkenwell Green—Brookes, Nicoll, and Mrs. Lahr spoke to good meeting. A great many of the comrades and friends then went to our hall, 13, Farringdon Road, to hear Mowbray lecture on "Socialism in Norfolk." Victoria Park—Splendid meeting on Sunday to hear debate between H. Davis and Mr. Hoffman. Good sale of literature.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road on Sunday morning; Dean, A. J. Smith, Maughan, Kitchen, and Saint were the speakers; 59 Commonweal sold; choir sang Marseillaise. Attempt to hold meeting at St. Ann's Road was not a success, but we will try again next Sunday. As this is a very poor neighbourhood we have to face great apathy. At Weltje Road on Sunday evening a fair meeting; speakers were Kitchen, Mordhurst, Crouch, A. J. Smith, Spry, and Maughan. At Kelmscott House, Hunter Watts (S.D.F.) lectured.—G. M.

WHITECHAPEL AND ST. GEORGES-IN-THE-EAST.—A lecture was given by Annie Besant on Wednesday, April 3, on "Is Socialism a Dream?" Good audience in spite of bad weather. A splendid meeting at Leman Street on Sunday morning. Mowbray, Samuels, and McCormick were the speakers.—T.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on 1st, G. B. Shaw's lecture on "The Economic Aspect of Socialism" read and discussed. At Castle Street on Saturday night, large enthusiastic meeting addressed by Duncan, Leatham, and Gilray (of Edinburgh), the latter having stayed in town over Saturday on Sunday on his way north on business. Same speakers addressed a meeting at Duthie Park, Waterside Gate, on Sunday. The weather, however, is still so cold that few go to the park, and meeting was small and fluctuating. This station, which is exposed and out of the way, must be abandoned for some time yet, though we trust to be able, "when the balmy breezes blow," to run a second open-air meeting every week.

GLASGOW.—On Sunday at mid-day, we held our usual meeting on Jail Square, Downie, Joe and Tim Burgoyne being the speakers. At 5 o'clock, Downie, Glasier, Gilbert, Joe and Tim Burgoyne spoke at Paisley Road Toll. At 7 o'clock, Joe Burgoyne, Glasier, and Pollock addressed a meeting at St. Georges Cross.

NORWICH.—Sunday afternoon, usual meeting in Market Place, very fair audience; Poynts opened, followed by Darley. After the meeting, groups gathered discussing Socialism, etc. In evening, W. Moore lectured upon "Socialism, some of its objections," Lennyng in chair. Unusual number of questions put and answered; animated discussion, Darley, Adams, Poynts, A. Moore, and others taking part.

YARMOUTH.—A fair meeting here on Sunday was addressed by Ruffold and Reynolds. 18 Weal sold, and 1s. 5½d. collected.—C. R.

IPSWICH PIONEER DEBATING CLASS.—A good debate, adjourned from previous week, on "Organised Labour," was continued on Sunday; good audience; Thomas, Suthron, Brown, Khill, Bishop, Harvey, Mr. Frank Bowman (chairman), and several others took part. A very pleasant evening. Creed, in reply, pointed out the urgent necessities of trade unionists embracing Socialism.—M. C.

NOTTINGHAM SOCIALIST CLUB.—Good meeting in the Great Market Place on Sunday; Rools and Peacock spoke. Collection 1s. 6d., and Commonweal sold out, also a quantity of the Aberdeen Socialist songs. Branch meets Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Sundays at Club-room, Old Street, St. Ann's Street.—R. P.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE IN MANCHESTER.—All sympathisers and friends of the Cause in this district are earnestly requested to give their assistance in forming a branch, by becoming members if possible, and making it known to others who may be interested. The active and systematic propaganda of our principles is nowhere more needed than in this benighted metropolis of chira clay, and shoddy. The first meeting to enroll members and make arrangements will take place at the International Working-men's Club, 122, Corporation Street, corner of Hanover Street, on Tuesday next, 16th inst., at 8 p.m.

Comrade Wess.

A GRAND CONCERT will be held in the Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, on Sunday, April 14th, for the benefit of comrade WESS, who has been out of work for a long time. The following comrades will sing and recite during the evening: W. Morris, Mrs. Taylor, Wm. Blundell, W. B. Parker, Mrs. Blundell, J. Turner, D. Nicoll, J. Presburg, Miss Morgan, McCormick, and others. ADMISSION BY PROGRAMME, 6d.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30. Sunday April 14th, No lecture, owing to Concert on behalf of comrade Wess.

East London.—97 Boston Street, Hackney Road.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend.

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday April 14, at 8 p.m., Graham Wallas (Fabian Society), "Leasehold Enfranchisement: a Warning." Thursday April 18, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 19th, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Walworth and Camberwell.—Committee meeting every Monday, at 7.30 p.m., at 3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen (Scottish Section).—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Oddfellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Carnoustie (Scottish Section: Forfarshire).—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.

Dundee (Scot. Sect.).—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street.

Edinburgh (Scottish Land and Labour League).—35 George IV. Bridge. Meet ings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8 p.m.

Gallatoun and Dysart (Scottish Section: Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. Secretary, A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Weekly meeting of members on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets every Sunday at 11. Members wishing to join in our Saturday afternoon propaganda excursions are requested to assemble in Rooms on Saturdays at 4.30.

Kilmarnock.—Secretary, H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street. Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 9 a.m., comrades distributing Commonweal will meet in Gordon Hall; at 8 p.m., lecture in Gordon Hall by A. T. Sutton. Monday, at 8, Lecture on "Phrenology" by Mr. Roberts, on behalf of the Branch funds; admission free; collection will be taken at the door. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8.30, Discussion Class—subject, 'Co-operative Commonwealth.' Thursday and Friday, Gordon Hall open from 8 p.m. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Association.—At Easter a great Demonstration will be held, addressed by C. W. Mowbray (London) and others.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Business meeting every Tuesday evening. The Commonweal can be purchased of Mr. Hous, newsagent, George Street.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

(Weather permitting.)

SATURDAY 13.
8	Mile-end Waste.....East London Branch
SUNDAY 14.
11	Latimer Road Station.....Dean, Lyne senr., and Saint
11.30	Bethnal Green—Gibraltar Walk.....The Branch
11.30	"Canterbury Arms"—Kilburn Road.....Mainwaring
11.30	Hammersmith—St. Ann's Road.....Maughan, Crouch, and Spry
11.30	Mitcham Fair Green.....McCormick
11.30	Regent's Park.....Nicoll and Mrs. Lahr
11.30	Walham Green, opposite Station.....The Branch
11.30	Leman Street, Shadwell.....Davis, Turner, and Mowbray
3.30	Hyde Park.....Parker, Nicoll, and Mrs. Lahr
3.30	Victoria Park.....East London Branch
7	Clerkenwell Green.....Parker and Brookes
7	Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park.....The Branch
7.30	Broad Street, Soho.....Parker
7.30	Mitcham Fair Green.....Kitz
TUESDAY 16.
8	Fulham—back of Walham Green Church.....The Branch.
THURSDAY 18.
8	Ossulton Street.....North London Branch
FRIDAY 19.
8	Philpot Street, Commercial Road.....Brookes
8.15	Hoxton Church.....East London Branch

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, 7.30 p.m. Sunday: Waterside Gate, Duthie Park, 3 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Manchester.—Outdoor meetings every Sunday. Stevenson Square at 3 p.m.; Viaduct, Chester Road, at 7.30.

Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3 and 7.30.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

FULHAM LIBERAL CLUB.—Sunday April 14th, at 8.30, William Morris will lecture on "Equality."

UNITED RADICAL CLUB, Kay Street, Goldsmiths Row, Hackney Road.—Sunday April 14th, William Clarke, "Practical Socialism."

ELEUSIS CLUB, 180 King's Road, Chelsea, S.W.—Sunday April 14, Mr. Mark Knowles, Barrister, "The Revolution Settlement of 1688." At 8 p.m.

CLUB AUTONOME, 6 Windmill St., Tottenham Court Road.—Sunday April 14, at 3.45 p.m., lecture by Lothrop Withington, "A Reply to Herbert Burrows on Anarchism."

SOUTHWARD AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower March, Lambeth.—Tuesday April 16th, W. M. Thompson, "Leaders of the Democracy."

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
- Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d
- The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d
- The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3s.
- The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
- The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
- The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
- True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
- Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d
- "Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.
- Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Price 1d.; Post-free, 1½d.

THE RIGHTS OF LABOUR ACCORDING TO JOHN RUSKIN.

Arranged by THOMAS BARCLAY.
Second Edition.

"Your pamphlet is the best abstract of all the most important pieces of my teachings that has yet been done; and I am entirely grateful to you for doing it, and glad to have your letter."—Extract from letter received from Mr. Ruskin.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C

SOCIALIST SONGS

FOR

POPULAR SINGING.

A Handy Collection. Contains 33 effective pieces from the pens of William Morris, Edward Carpenter, C. W. Beckett, J. Bruce Glasier, D. J. Nicoll, H. Halliday Sparling, and others. A number reprinted from the Commonweal and other sources. Should be in the hands of all Socialists.

Twopence. 1s. 4d. a-dozen.

Orders to be addressed to JAMES LEATHAM,
7 Jamaica Street, Aberdeen.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

COMMONWEAL OFFICE, 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

KARL MARX.

A NEW AND HIGHLY ARTISTIC ETCHING.

India Proof, 19 by 24 inches.

Price Two Dollars.

ETCHED AND PUBLISHED BY ALFRED C. KIHN,
293 Jay Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., U.S.A.

Also for sale at New York Labour News Co.,
25 East Fourth Street, N. Y.

Copies mailed to any address on receipt of price.

Can be had of W. Reeves, 185 Fleet Street, London.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE.
Paper Cover. 3s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

Our Parish and Our Duke;

OR, WHAT LAND NATIONALISATION MEANS.

A Letter to my Fellow-Parishioners.

BY
EDWARD CARPENTER.

To be had of the Author, Millthorpe, near Chesterfield. Price 2s. per 100, post free.

ARBEJDEREN

("The Worker")

DANISH SOCIALIST WEEKLY.

Edited and published by NICOLAJ PETERSEN and GERSON TRIER.

Subscription 3s. a-year.

Nansensgade 28A, Copenhagen.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

299 SHALES MOOR, SHEFFIELD.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. 1 copy, 2d.; by post, 3d.; 3 copies, 8d.; 6, 1s. 3d.; 12, 2s. 5d.; 24, 4s. 9d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free. 50, post free, 6s. 100, post free, 11s.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Libra y Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
Vol. III., AUTUMN . . . seventh edition 12s.
Vol. IV., WINTER . . . seventh edition 12s.

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo, at 2s. 6d. each.
ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE AENEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond A Morality.

Square 12mo, 143 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction.

With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

BY THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

JULIUS BORDOLLO'S

LABOUR NEWS AGENCY

213 Forsyth Street, New York City, U.S.A.

American agency for the Commonweal. All Labour literature kept in stock. Send for list, post free.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 171.

SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THERE has been a sharp discussion going on in the columns of the Star as to whether the Socialists or Social Democrats (which on the whole is the properer name for those really implicated) ought to respond to the invitation of the Star Radicals to form some sort of alliance with them. Mr. Hyndman began the discussion in a very able letter, in which he pointed out the indisputable fact, that in whatever the present day Radicals differ from the Liberals they owe the distinction to the adoption of Socialist views; and in which he asserted that though it was natural for the Radicals to seek for the alliance it would be wise for the Socialists to refrain from it.

This discussion must clearly have to do with the position of Radicals and Socialists as parties, for already on many occasions Socialists have not hesitated to ally themselves with the Radicals for a purpose which seemed clear to both. For example, the League as well as the S.D.F. has shown itself at almost all the anti-Coercion meetings where they thought they could be of service in pushing forward what appeared to them a revolutionary movement. We cannot declare against a proposition merely because Radicals (or for the matter of that Tories) agree to it.

But as to parties? It is quite true, as Mr. Hyndman implies, that in all alliances between parties the stronger uses the weaker and throws it off when it finds it convenient to do so: running the risk, however, meantime of finding that the weaker party has, as it were, eaten its way into the skin of the stronger and so destroyed it. It is equally true also that the stronger or respectable party must make its programme from the programme of the weaker, spoiling it as much as it dares to do in the process.

And then what is a party? Our old acquaintance, Mr. Mahon, in a letter to the Star, says that there is no Socialist party, but only a propaganda; his view being, I suppose, that for the sake of gaining the advantages of "a party" the Socialists should merge themselves in the Radical party. But, after all, is there a Radical party? There are plenty of Radicals, doubtless; but how can they be called a party when they themselves are now declaring for what they at least believe to be a modified Socialism, and yet they must feel or simulate enthusiasm for their leader, Mr. Gladstone, who has never heard of Socialism, and for their other leader, Mr. Morley, who knows just enough about it to be able to use phrases which repudiate it? Their policy is to attach themselves to the Liberals and work them to further their semi-Socialism, just as some of our Social Democratic friends want to work the Radicals to further their Socialism. They have no party leaders and no party representatives.

And what is a Radical? I mean, of course, a Radical of to-day. The Star in its answer to Mr. Hyndman really answers this question quite ingeniously, and shows us that a Radical of the new type is a man who would believe in Socialism if he could only find out what it is, and who would cast Whiggery aside if he could only convince himself of its being possible to carry on without it. The Star, which we have been taking all along as the representative of this view, often prints sheer Socialism, which we have been glad to quote at times; but also often exhibits the most commonplace Whiggery. Therefore, without imputing any bad faith to its disclaimer of using Socialism as "political birdlime," I say it is being so used, and I don't agree with its prophecy that when Home Rule is got it will still advocate this semi-Socialist Radicalism. On the contrary, we may be sure that the Gladstonian success will produce a fresh cleavage; the Whig element in Radicalism will declare itself Whig (or Tory, it does not matter which), and the Socialist element will declare itself Socialist.

At the same time I think we must accept with cheerfulness this fact of Radicalism permeated by Socialism. Six years ago the attitude of the Radicals, even the furthest advanced of them, was Mr. John Morley's "I don't know you." And now what are these words in the leader of a Radical paper about contract? "It" (the new Radicalism) "does not recognise that free contract exists between the workers and the capitalists, the landlord and the tenant." My Radical friends, that is an attack on the very palladium of Radicalism; on the recognition of that free contract between the monopolist and his "dependent" our present holy society rests. What middle course can there be between that "Free Contract" and the abolition of monopoly?

But the Star wavers through its terror of the might of Whiggery: "It does recognise that if such contracts are made, they should be subject to the constant revision in the interests of the weaker party." O impotent conclusion! For it means the robber shall still be allowed to rob, but that some of his stealings shall be taken away from him. How much? "A great deal if I can manage it," says the Radical. "None at all, if I can help it," says the Monopolist, "I and my armed executive." What can come of these two differences of opinion in the long run? Abolition of monopoly in the teeth of the monopolist—nothing else.

Meantime, while the Radicals are drifting towards Socialism, let Socialists be contented to be a propaganda and not a party. A propaganda can afford to have principles genuinely believed in by its members; a party in order to constitute itself must give up some principle, or make a semblance of doing so, which semblance is very likely to grow into a reality; and when it has got as far as that, this mere piece of opportunism is likely to become a shibboleth which all members of the party must utter or be boycotted. The Socialist propaganda has done perhaps already more than we who have been living amongst it know. It ever there should be a Socialist party, at least let there be a Socialist propaganda of principle existing beside it and not tied to it. I am sure that we cannot do without that, whichever way politics may turn.

W. M.

At a special meeting on Thursday 11th, the London County Council by 64 votes to 31, passed the following resolution:

"That London is the only city in Great Britain which, whilst paying the expenses of the police, has no voice in its control or management; that this state of things is anomalous, unjust, and unworthy of the first city in the empire; and this Council therefore cannot doubt that Parliament will take an early opportunity of supplementing its scheme of local government for London by transferring the management of the police to the Council."

The question had been partly debated on the previous Tuesday, and was then adjourned to Thursday. The discussion was an interesting and instructive one, but of course in these days of the Parnell Commission the reports in the daily press met with little mercy from the editorial blue pencil. So that few people know much of what was said. One good thing was that the opposition speeches were most fully reported, their "arguments" given unutilated.

Among the worst of the reactionary speeches were those of two Star "progressives," Lord Lingen and Mr. Frederick Harrison. The last named, lifting his olympian eyebrows, told the Council that it was only a "conglomerate vestry," and wholly incompetent to control a police force on which the safety of the empire depended!

Mr. Marks, representative of the Financial News and mouthpiece of the money-bag, held that London was the refuge of "the rag-tag and bob-tail of creation," who needed to be held down with a strong hand. Dr. Longstaff had a fit of mob upon the brain, and was skilfully treated by John Burns, who followed him, saying: "If we have vicious and criminal classes in London, if we have the rag-tag and bob-tail of creation—and I don't deny that we have, specially at the West-end—the proper method of dealing with them is not to bludgeon them, but to remove the causes that produce them."

Colonel Rotton, a fiery little man, with twenty-two years uneventful military service behind him, was great in support of discipline and law'n-order. Colonel Howard Vincent posed as the ex-prefect of police, and was learned, statistical, and Cassandra-like by turns; heaped-up wealth, and powerful interests, and ragged mobs and revolution, and square miles of jurisdiction, and the rights of respectable people, were all hurled at his opponents in the course of his speech.

The list of the opponents of popular control is completed by the following names: Mr. Farquhar, banker; Mr. H. L. Foster, lay preacher and company-promoter; Mr. Boulnois, late of the Board of Works; and Sir W. De Souza, Knight, count of Rome, Commander of the Orders of the Corporation and of Christ, and Knight of the Golden Spear. It is enough to name them; comment is needless.

S.

SELF-HELP versus STATE-HELP.

So begins a document of some six or seven closely-printed pages, recently issued by the Liberty and Property Defence League. The phrase has the appearance of a motto; and I suppose it is intended as a suggestion of the general principles of the Society; unless, indeed, which is far from probable, it has some meaning of a secret nature, only revealed to the initiated, after attention has been paid to the equally obscure, though highly suggestive phrase, "Subscriptions voluntary from 5s. upwards" with which the circular ends.

For unfortunately, as it makes no assertion, the motto, if such it be, sheds no light of its own on the darkness in a mind uninitiated in the mysteries of the League; and if one tries to illuminate it for himself, he is immediately entangled in the endeavour to choose the right one out of the many possible meanings of the words "self," "state," "help"—not to speak of some ambiguity about "versus." Thus, one hardly knows whether he is to be treated to the history of an actual contest, as when, for example, we read over the account of a cricket-match, "Kent versus Surrey"; or whether the mysterious words refer merely to a comparison between two principles, as one might speak of "Free Trade versus Fair Trade."

Then again, "State-help"; what does that mean? "State" is such a very wide and doubtful term, and may apply to anything, from the Russian autocracy or the English Government on the one hand, to the popular self-government aimed at by many Socialists on the other. In the last case, "State-help" would be synonymous with "self-help"; but since the phrase in question implies a difference between self-help and State-help, I conclude that "State-help" means assistance offered by a government to those who need it.

But if it be true that "When you want a thing well done you must do it yourself," it follows that none would seek the aid of government unless unable to help themselves. "State-help," therefore, must refer to assistance offered to the helpless.

Now, as it is absurd to speak of "self-help" with reference to the helpless, these first two words must apply to another set of persons, who are not helpless, but have both the power and the will to help themselves. But the phrase runs "Self-Help versus," etc. Plainly it can be no question of comparison, because the two "helps" spoken of are of an entirely different nature. Accordingly, "versus" must mean against, or contesting. These worthies, then, who can help themselves, are against, or in hostility to, the aid that may be offered by the Government to those who need it.

And now the motto stands interpreted to us, calling our attention to the efforts of the Powerful to frustrate the attempts of Government to give assistance to the Helpless. This view of the object of the Liberty and Property Defence League is supported by the summary which the League gives of its aims: "For maintaining freedom of contract, for upholding proprietary rights, and for resisting Socialistic legislation." Just so; "resisting legislation" which might interfere with proprietary rights for the benefit of those who have no property.

The document is addressed "to everyone concerned with land, houses, and agriculture." Surely this is a little too wide: for all, however helpless, are "concerned" with the houses which give shelter, and with the land, on whose produce alone life can be supported. But there can be no end served in addressing the helpless; and this must therefore be an appeal to the other class, to enlist their sympathies with the League, so that they may combine to help one another maintain their power. It is worth noting that the Liberty and Property Defence League countenances combination as an advantageous form of self-help.

After this address, we get, as our interpretation of the "versus" would lead us to expect, a sort of statement of the contest the League has been engaged in, in a long list of "Bills opposed or promoted by the League during the last six Sessions," beginning with the year 1883. I fail to discern those that have been "promoted," but there are no fewer than 104 which have been opposed, and almost all of these have been either amended or dropped—presumably (or so at least we are led to believe) through the action of the League. One which "received the royal assent" shows us the Liberty and Property Defence League in the awful position of offering opposition to the will of Her Most Gracious Majesty!

I will merely mention one or two. Here, for instance, in 1887 are the "Sanitation of Houses in the Metropolis" Bill, the "Mining Acts Insurance" Bill, the "Agricultural Tenants' Relief (Scotland)" Bill, and so on—104 of them! The objections to them are mainly to the effect that they "tax the ratepayers for Socialistic purposes," "establish the principle of compulsion," and generally exhibit a "dangerous Socialistic" tendency. Such are by far the majority of the objections; but here and there is evidence of a touching interest in the welfare of the Helpless, who, however, must not be assisted "out of the rates." For instance, the "Housing of the Working Classes (England)" Bill, 1885, is of a "demoralising character," and its "mischief would recoil on the working classes." (Is it fair to look for examples of such mischief in the already comfortably housed?) The "Law of Distress Amendment" Bill would "curtail the credit of every tenant" to the extent of £5, and so render the landlord more severe in collecting his rents! But these are exceptions. The general idea is, that the owners of property should be left free to do what they like with their own.

A careful examination of these Bills throws an instructive light on the value of private property. Not one of the 104 makes any attack upon the institution of private property; not one even hints at such a thing. The most "Socialistic" of them would but provide for a compulsory sale, by which the owner would receive the equivalent in money for the land or houses he yielded up. What need, then, to talk of the "defence" of property? Why should not £1,000 be as useful in gold as in land or houses? It is for this reason. Money, at the best, is only a convenience—never a necessity. Men need food and shelter, and these can only be had by actual work on land or on capital derived from land; so that land is a necessity. But money can neither be utilised as food or shelter; and no one really needs it who has access to land and capital. It follows that those who are in any way shut out from the land are at the mercy of the owners of it. If they would have food and shelter (and they cannot do without them) they must submit to the conditions of those who can forbid them to use the land from which food and shelter are produced.

That is the advantage of being one of the owners of property. Its "possession" consists in having the power of making conditions with those who wish to labour. And the unrestrained exercise of this power is what the Liberty and Property Defence League means by "liberty." It is a "liberty" I do not envy them. I have always found that in proportion as I get mixed up with "property," the clearer and finer perceptions of my mind become dulled and paralysed. The sunshine ceases to delight me, friendship is forgotten, and life becomes a bore so long as I am enslaved to the cares which such liberty imposes. Think of 293,500 pamphlets issued to defend a "liberty" like this!

So much for the property owners. For those who have no property, "liberty," according to the Liberty and Property Defence League, means that there shall be nothing to hinder them from submitting to the conditions imposed upon them. They must be free to work long hours, to pay rent for unwholesome houses, to contract disease and to spread infection,—in short, they should have liberty to live or die in any way profitable to the owners of property. The poor have this gospel of the Liberty and Property Defence League preached unto them by an average of 49,000 pamphlets in each parliamentary session.

The rich would say to the poor, "We give you the choice of living in these filthy houses, and working for us till you are worn out, or rot with disease; or this,—or no land to work on, no shelter over your heads. Lifelong toil for us, or death from exposure and starvation. You are free to choose. You decide to live for us! Very well; it is a 'Free Contract,' and let no law interfere." I suppose every slave has always had the choice between submission and death, and to that extent was free!

At first reading of this document, I said to myself, "These men have such an objection to law, and to the interference of government, that they are open to the suspicion of being Anarchists!" But it is by no means so. Their ownership of property is, as we have seen, merely a conventional privilege,—which depends not so much on their own will as upon other people's recognition of it. In the long run, it merely amounts to having the power to keep out from all houses and land those who will not submit to certain conditions. Yet they can make no fence so high, no stone wall so strong, that it would be a physical impossibility for the poor to enter in and make use of these necessities for themselves.

No; their fence is of another nature. Their property is enclosed by the law, and their power is supported by the Government, which punishes those who would step across the boundary of the law. That is the main function of Government. It cannot compel a man to work; but it can and does compel him, if he will work, to accept the conditions of the "free contract," and if he will not accept them it can compel him to be idle.

The Liberty and Property Defence League desires no interference with the free contract; it requires the Government to enforce the conditions imposed by property,—the long day's work, the low wages, the rent for insanitary dwellings; for on these the rich depend, and so can live idly by the help of the working-people.

But observe to what this leads us. These rich men, these owners of property, these "Self-Helpers," cannot live as they do without the help of the poor, and they need the help of the Government to force the poor to assist them!

The motto with which we started takes another meaning now. It is the rich who are helpless, and need the aid of the "State." The true self-helpers are the poor, who support not themselves alone, but also the rich, and the Government which forces them to be poor, by helping the rich live on them.

The whole thing turns completely round. One sees now (what the Liberty and Property Defence League is unconscious of) that these 104 abortive Bills were a mere blind, intended by their promoters to persuade the toilers that the Government is their friend. But plainly it exists only for the support of property,—to assist the helpless rich against the helpful poor.

There is a simple way by which those who have no property may test this. We have seen that the law cannot compel them to work. Let them, therefore, combine (taking a notch from the Liberty and Property Defence League), and for one week refuse—labourers, mechanics, clerks, shopmen, servants, carters, railway men, refuse—to do a stroke of work for the owners of property. The latter, deprived of their support, will at once find themselves helpless, and being in danger of starvation will be ready to make a new contract (will they call it "free"?) with the toilers.

Then, if the toilers determine for the future to help only themselves and one another, they will have free access to all property; Government-help or State-help, in the present sense, will be a thing of the past, and they will attain that happy liberty of personal joy undreamt of in the philosophy of the Liberty and Property Defence League.

G. STURT.

AUSTRALIAN SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

REPORT FROM AUGUST 26 TO DECEMBER 30, 1888.

At the last monthly meeting of members, which was held on January 2, 1889, it was decided that the balance-sheet should be drawn up for the four months ending December 30, 1888, with the view of having quarterly balance-sheet instead of half-yearly ones as heretofore. Accordingly a balance-sheet has been prepared balancing the accounts to the end of the year 1888.

Since the last Report closed, the League has done a large amount of propaganda work, in which the editor of the Radical, comrade Winspear, has given valuable assistance. We have had 5,000 leaflets printed, setting forth the merits of the large reading-room, the weekly debates, and the principles of Socialism. These have been distributed in weekly lots in the Domain and other parts of the city and suburbs.

The League has (at the invitation of the Coal-lumpers' Union) held several meetings in the large room of the Lord Nelson Hotel, at which addresses were delivered on Co-operation and the principles of Socialism by comrades A. F. Drake, McNamara, and Lesina, Messrs. Powell, McQueen, and others. The workers at Millers Point have in contemplation the starting of a co-operative distributive store on Socialist lines.

Several open-air meetings have been held in the Domain and Belmore Market, and the principles of Socialism are slowly but surely gaining a firm hold on the minds of the more intelligent workers. The Sunday lectures and debates were carried on without any intermission, and large audiences have taken great interest in the subjects discussed. The following subjects have been discussed, among others: "The French Revolution of 1789," "Australian Federation," "The brutal Coercive Laws of the Salisbury Government," "The Methods of Trades Unions," "A General Strike of the Miners," "Abolition of Capital Punishment," "Free Trade and Protection," "Newspaper Unfairness and Dishonesty," "That State Socialism would reproduce Barbarism," "Co-operative Distribution," "Prostitution, its Cause and Cure," "Plan of Campaign against the Rent System," "The Injustice of Interest," "The Hanging of Louisa Collins and Punishment of Criminals," etc. On November 11, a large open-air meeting was held in the Sydney Domain, to commemorate the first anniversary of the murder of the Chicago comrades. A lecture was given making clear the details of the whole affair by W. H. McNamara. In the evening a large gathering took place at the League Rooms, when addresses on the Labour Struggle were delivered by W. H. McNamara, Copeland, Norman, McDougal, and Petterson. Several recitations and songs were given, including the "Marseillaise." On September 16, a highly successful Social and Reunion of members and friends took place, when a large and choice programme of recitations, songs, and musical solos contributed to the amusement of the large assemblage present. The public Reading Room which the League has opened has continued to attract great numbers of visitors, and a large addition of new European and American papers has been made to the former list. On November 25, it was resolved to hold a general meeting of members the first Wednesday in each month. These meetings were inaugurated on December 5. At the end of the year we received the gratifying intelligence that a branch of the Socialist League was being formed in Melbourne, and that another one was likely to be established in Brisbane.

The following report and balance-sheet was read and adopted at a special general meeting of members of the League, which was held on Wednesday February 6th, at the Rooms 533 George Street: August 26th, 1888, to Dec. 30th, 1888. Receipts, £29 4s. 2½d.; disbursements, £26 14s. ½d.; credit balance, £2 10s. 2d. Assets, £24 9s. 8d.; liabilities, £9 5s.; balance to credit, £15 4s. 8d. Audited and found to be correct by Harry Weber, E. M. Paasch, W. H. McNamara (hon. Secretary). A. M. Pilter, chairman.

Those who have beyond their power to use well, are as really enslaved as those who sell their bodies to others on condition of being kept from starvation.—Rev. Geo. A. Boardman.

The marriages of mankind are not made in churches. They are only "solemnized" therein. The marriages of bird-kind are solemnized by a faithful obedience to natural laws during the continuance of the marriage. Mankind in civilised countries generally "solemnize" their marriages by telling lies and paying for the privilege of having the perjury recorded in a big book.—W. H. R.

ANOMALOUS QUERIES.—A Socialist would like to find the "Way to Destruction," and enquires if it leads to the destruction of the present system of society.

A member of the S.D.F. wishes to know if there is Justice enough to slide along to kingdom come. By the latter expression he means J. C.'s heaven upon earth.—A. B.

WOMAN AND CHILD LABOUR IN HOLLAND.—THE HAGUE, April 12.—The Second Chamber of the States General has passed the Bill regulating the conditions for the employment of women and children in manufacturing industries. The measure, which does not apply to agriculture or to domestic service, absolutely forbids the employment of children under twelve years of age. For persons under sixteen years of age and for women the period of work per day is limited to eleven hours; while in the case of children under fourteen and women night work is prohibited. The Bill also makes it obligatory that there shall be a period of rest during the working hours, and that women shall not be employed for four weeks after confinement. Finally, Sunday work is forbidden.

"THE SWINISH MULTITUDE."—Burke.

(Reprinted from the Chartist Circular, where it is said that "the following rejoinder to the contemptible insult of the pensioned apostate Burke, was written by a member of the celebrated London Corresponding Society, 1800.")

DID Nature mean us to be slaves,
The property of fools and knaves?
Have we no claim, or just pretence,
To common rights or common sense?
Or will you say, the hand divine
Made some for lords, the rest for swine?
If this be fact, explain the cause
Why swine must needs be ruled by laws:
Except you call their fate a law,
To eat dry husks and sleep on straw.

And when they're fattened to be taken,
And quartered into hams and bacon,
To satiate those who may think fit
To eat their carcass bit by bit.
Although our all will not suffice
Unless our life's a sacrifice,
It would be treason to repine,
Because, you know, we're only swine.

We're only swine! How well it suits!
For shallow men may govern brutes;
And foolish men in foolish things
Oft act as well as foolish kings.
Let swine-herd be the name of those,
Who lead the nation by the nose,
And boast that by a right divine
They're ruling men, not driving swine.

We're only swine! Think but what fun
To see a pig strut with his gun;
How fierce and terrible the sight
To march large herds of swine to fight.
That illustrious York, that noble peer,
How famous must his name appear:
Instead of heroes bold, to lead
A nasty filthy grunting breed.

We're only swine! What humble pride
When nobles get on us to ride;
Yes, monarchs mount our gristly back
And make each joint and sinew crack;
We groan beneath the ponderous weight
Of all the creatures of the State—
Placemen and pensioners beside,
An ugly caterpillar tribe—
But, were we all of noble birth,
They would want swine to root the earth.
To sweat and toil for their support,
And, when they please, to be their sport.

Then hold not swine in such disdain,
Since 'tis by them you have your gain;
But turn and treat them with respect,
Lest they should grunt at your neglect;
And if they be provoked—what then?
The Swine will rise—and rise to MEN!

ABSTINENCE.

Of course we Socialists are all familiar with all the threadworn arguments of our opponents, the total abstainers, on this point, and the veriest tyro in Socialism can refute what they have to say.

Our friends, the Co-operators, however—I mean the true co-operators, i.e., the Federalists—while endeavouring to extinguish the worst phases of our existing commercialism, still maintain that self-denial is a virtue and warrants some reward. This is one of the maxims by which they justify the payment of interest on capital to their shareholders. They say, knowing the condition of the workers in general, it requires some self-denial to set aside even the trifling amount which every shareholder has to put by till his share is fully paid up. Thus they really make a vice appear as a virtue. For an individual to deny himself some necessity of life, or we will go further, say even the gratification of some pleasure for the sake of enabling him to have more of the necessities of life, or of gratifying pleasures to a greater extent a little later on in life, is surely selfishness of the most intense degree.

The state of society which we Socialists wish to bring about is one in which, in the words of the prophet of Nazareth, men and women will have to "take no thought for to-morrow," neither what they shall eat, nor what they shall drink, nor wherewithal they shall be clothed. We want co-operative communes of voluntary organised labour to stud and beautify the earth. In such communes the only abstention necessary would not be imposed by law, nor by the majorities, but by nature itself, viz., abstention from the violation of natural law. Rational people—and I take it under such a system of society all people would be rational—would not think of acting irrationally by infringing immutable laws; and if any, in an unwise moment did so, such would not be punished by man-made laws but by their own acts.

Abstention, indeed! and that at an age when compulsory abstention from everything that makes life worth living for, is enforced upon hundreds of thousands of workers in this and in all civilised countries of the world! No. The problem of the day is not to what extent self-denial is to be practised by the workers in order to prolong their weary existence, but what can be done to put an end to this system of enforced self-denial which we are obliged to practice involuntarily. The realisation of our so-called dreams is then the only solution of the problem. Let us hope the day is not far distant.

A. BROOKES.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors.

Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

R. C. S.—Thanks; always welcome.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	MORRIS & SPARLING 121
Self-Help versus State-Help	G. STURT 122
Australian Socialist League	123
Woman and Child Labour in Holland	123
"The Swinish Multitude."—Burke	123
Abstinence	A. BROOKES 123
The Thuggee of Commercial Thugs	GEORGE McLEAN 124
Our Radical "Friends"	F. KITZ 124
Correspondence—St. George's Farm	125
The Labour Struggle	126
A Study of Social Evolution	126
Fall River Slaves	126
Revolutionary Calendar—Pierre Dominique Toussaint
L'Ouverture	H. H. SPARLING 126
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	127
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	128

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday April 17.

ENGLAND	Jewish Volkszeitung	BELGIUM
Die Autonomie	Workmen's Advocate	Ghent—Vooruit
Freedom	The Truth	Liege—L'Avenir
Justice	Boston—Woman's Journal	SWITZERLAND
Labour Elector	Chicago—Knights of Labor	Arbeiterstimme
Labour Tribune	Baecker Zeitung	Geneva—Przedswit
Labour Leader	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	ITALY
London—Freie Presse	Fort Worth (Tex)—South West	Rome—L'Emancipazione
Manchester Sunday Chronicle	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Milan—Il Fascio Operaio
Norwich—Daylight	Newark—Arbeiter-Zeitung	PORTUGAL
Personal Rights Journal	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
Railway Review	S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal	Porto—A Revolucao Social
Revolutionary Review	San Jose—Pacific Union	GERMANY
Sozial Demokrat	FRANCE	Berlin—Volks Tribune
Telegraph Service Gazette	Paris—L'Egalite (daily)	AUSTRIA
INDIA	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	Wien—Gleichheit
Bankpore—Behar Herald	L'Attaque	Brunn—Volksfreund
Madras—People's Friend	HOLLAND	SWEDEN
UNITED STATES	Hague—Recht voor Allen	Malmö—Arbetet
New York—Der Sozialist	SPAIN	WEST INDIES
Volkszeitung	Madrid—El Socialista	Cuba—El Productor

THE THUGGEE OF COMMERCIAL THUGS.

THE Thugs were a religious fraternity which flourished alike under Hindu, Mahomedan, and British rulers, and whose ramifications spread over the whole of India from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas. Although every year their murdered victims were numerous, their way of life, nay, their very being, was quite unknown to the most active and vigilant British functionaries, and very imperfectly understood even by the native governments. They insinuated themselves into the confidence of travellers, with whom they joined for the alleged purpose of mutual safety, and when a proper place could be selected for the murder of their dupes, and due precautions taken against intrusion, their victims were removed in the most expeditious and religious manner. If a traveller had a dog it was also killed, lest the faithful animal should cause the discovery of the body of its murdered master. They believed that in robbing and murdering, agreeable to their religious rules, they were rendering an acceptable service to their deity. Captain Sleeman said of them, that "no men observe more strictly in domestic life all that is enjoined by their priests, or demanded by their respective castes; nor do any men cultivate with more care the esteem of their neighbours, or court with more assiduity the goodwill of all constituted local authorities. In short, to men who do not know them, the principal members of these associations will always appear to be among the most amiable, most respectable, and most intelligent members of the lower, and sometimes the middle and higher, classes of native society; and it is by no means to be inferred that every man who attempts to screen them from justice knows them to be monsters."

When we reflect upon the number of victims who are daily murdered in Christendom by the conditions of life and work which are imposed upon them, with the sanction of religion, and how "amiable" and "respectable" and "intelligent" the chief upholders of the system are, which enables the murdering of the workers to flourish and be profitable, agreeable to their religious rules, we shall detect many points of agreement between the religious notions and deeds of the Thugs and those of the successful churchmen and profit annexers of to-day. The crimes of the Thugs were devised so cunningly that the most vigilant authorities were unaware of their existence; and so it is with the employers of labour under our present legal and religious rules. The individual murders sanctioned by our present legal and religious rules, are, like our new naval estimates, spread over a number of years. Occasionally it is otherwise, as our great pit disasters too frequently prove; but passing over these necessary evils for the accumulation of profits, it will be admitted by all that the working-classes do lose half of their possible days of life owing to the conditions imposed upon them by their Thug employers, if indeed it can be said that they ever possess life as distinguished from mere existence. The most noble and useful lives of our time are being sacrificed by the Thugs of commerce, unknown, apparently, to the most vigilant Christian authorities, and very imperfectly understood by the commercial Thugs themselves.

The commercial Thugs of to-day have also insinuated themselves into the confidence of their fellow travellers for a like alleged safety, as did the Thugs of India, and when the victims of their system drop from their presence the Thugs of commerce cannot see wherein they are to blame, nay, they rather believe that in providing work, which means death, for their victims, "they are rendering an acceptable service to the deity, agreeable to their religious rules." Do we not see the successful sweater and the prosperous publican observing "strictly in domestic life all that is enjoined by their priests, or demanded by their castes," and may this not convince us that the priests do not enjoin the "one thing needful," and their castes do not demand that which is necessary to make them whole—free from crime? The commercial system makes it impossible for a whole man to live. A man's worth and importance in it is measured by that which is not his, nay by that which subtracts from him and which is the measure of his guilt and another's wrong. Our commercial Thugs also cultivate with "care the esteem of their neighbours," and they "court with assiduity the goodwill of all constituted local authorities." They do more, they comprise our local authorities, and it therefore becomes impossible for the simple-minded and thoughtless to "know them to be monsters." The dullest day-drudge is beginning to learn the limits of a man's power to create wealth, and to be cognisant of the fact that the possession of wealth beyond that measure is Thuggee—the lives of men—and that all who are guilty of the same are Thugs of a more hidden type than those which permeated India. Britons were awakened to the knowledge of Thugs in India fifty years ago by a writer in the Edinburgh Review, and we may hope that the increasing power of the Socialist press will be able to awaken them now to the presence of the Thugs in their midst. Many layers of custom, prejudice, and fear will have to be pierced and torn asunder before we can reach the real kernel of Thuggee in our present false system of society, but when it is reached and seen by the workers its destruction will be sudden and complete, so that when the new system of Socialism is held up it will draw all men unto it. GEORGE McLEAN.

And the same humility I use in inventing, I employ likewise in teaching. For I do not endeavour either by triumphs of confutation, or pleadings of antiquity, or assumption of authority, or even by the veil of obscurity to invest these inventions of mine with any majesty, which might easily be done by one who sought to give lustre to his own name rather than light to other men's minds.—Lord Bacon.

OUR RADICAL "FRIENDS"—In connection with the proposed union of political Socialists and Radicals, and from which so much is to be gained (by the Radicals), a few reminiscences may be of interest. When Gladstone, using the "resources of civilisation," threw thousands of Irish people into prison, including Parnell, the wirepullers of the Radical clubs and hangers-on of the Liberal party were coercionists. When subsequently he, with Sir William Vernon Harcourt as Home Secretary—"We are all Socialists now"—threw J. Most into jail and seized the property of a working-men's club, and placed the documents so seized at the service of Continental despots, thus securing the arrest of numerous Socialists abroad, these same Radicals came as delegates to one or two meetings of the Freiheit Defence Committee and then stayed away, and with usual Radical courtesy did not even return the subscription-sheets with which they were entrusted. Four Radical clubs of the Chelsea district were so sympathetic over the fate of the "divine figure of the North" that they refused to help the defence of Most in any way. Then a most brutal outrage was committed by the police at the Stephen's Mews club in '85; there existed at the time a small but growing Socialist party, and these gave the only help our foreign comrades received; the Radicals acted as usual. And now another brutal outrage has been committed upon our comrades of Berner Street. The Radical club delegates are acting in precisely the same fashion; one club in Hackney has declined to help, on the ground that it was a quarrel between the orthodox Jews and Socialists, and that therefore they could not interfere. The idea that the use of a policeman's fist or boot has a religious aspect is worthy of the Radical followers of the G.O.M. If a policeman's truncheon ever comes into contact with the heads that thought out this decision, doubtless the truncheon would receive the greatest injury. Although not a political Socialist, I hope our political comrades will abstain from transfusion of blood with such a flaccid crew as the Radicals of the metropolis.—P. S. I may add that the Patriotic Club has been a notable exception to the policy condemned above.—F. KITZ.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ST. GEORGE'S FARM.

A CORRECTION.

"E. C.," in the Commonweal of March 9, very seriously, though, of course, quite unintentionally, misrepresents my position in relation to the "Committee" of Communists, at whose instance Ruskin bought the Totley Farm. I was not one of the members of that committee, and, therefore, not "one of the most active." I never attended any of its meetings, and was not responsible for its shortcomings. Indeed, I was the "retainer" of the guild first authorised by Ruskin to check the proceedings of the committee.

I will not here attempt to explain why the committee failed. Most, if not all, of its members were honest and earnest. Of these, Joseph Sharpe, the "Minstrel Communist," was one of the most admirable, and I read "E. C.'s" kind and accurate account of him with much interest and pleasure.

I have been urged, by a late retainer of St. George's Guild, to write an account of my experience at Totley for publication in Good Words, but, if I ever do write it, it will be for the Commonweal.

WM. HARRISON RILEY.

A QUERY.

Will any comrade give further information concerning that unsuccessful Communistic farm at Totley, mentioned in the Commonweal of March 9th (in an article entitled "A Minstrel Communist")? It has raised several questions in my mind. I should like to know why that attempt failed, where a subsequent endeavour is apparently successful. Several reasons were suggested by the writer to account for the failure; and it seems to me they deserve the attention of all Communists. First, it is stated of the participators in the scheme that "they were great talkers, knowing next to nothing of agriculture," whereas the present members are "less voluble and more practical." Had they been dependant on the farm for their living, their want of practical knowledge would naturally have been fatal; but as they appear to have got their living from other sources, a few mistakes might have been discouraging, but need hardly have been totally disheartening, to men with sufficient initiative to start such a scheme. That they actually made the attempt shows them to have been energetic and open-minded to a degree far above the average. But this to my mind only increases the importance of the question.

The incompatibility of pure Communism with the surrounding competition would have been a far likelier rock for them to split on; but such a difficulty is not hinted at. Further, they must have been prepared for such difficulties if their economical theories were tolerably sound. That such was the case, I conclude, both from the fact that they are spoken of as Communists, and that one of the participators, mentioned by name in the article, happened, by a curious coincidence, to be a contributor to the Commonweal of the same date—and therefore, I take it, a Socialist.

Another cause of failure is suggested in the following: "Unfortunately, the usual dissensions arose—usual, I would say, wherever work of this kind is ruled by theories instead of by practical human needs and immediate desire of fellowship." Perhaps some comrade can tell us what the desires were which impelled these men to their honourable endeavour. For spite of their want of success, to have made the attempt at all is a thing to be proud of.

Now let me state my difficulties, premising that I by no means desire to see rocks ahead, but shall be only glad to be convinced that they are mere mirages.

(1) First, with regard to practical knowledge. Could the present system be overturned to-morrow throughout the world, there would be many millions who, however willing, would be as ill prepared for useful labour as these Communists of Totley. With the disappearance of the idle class, all those whose labour consists in producing luxuries for that class and for their dependants would find their occupation gone, and, with "practical human needs" enough, would find themselves without the practical knowledge necessary to meet them. Take London alone. There we have a population of five millions, living almost entirely on the produce of other men's labour, daily imported. Most of these five millions are congregated there for the sake of capitalists, and the greater proportion of their labour would be found quite useless as soon as there were no more exploiters of labour. So that the establishment of a commune in London would eventually result in the discovery by the majority of its inhabitants that there was no earthly reason for them to be there. Should they try to remain, they must be fed by the outside world, and they would be unable to produce anything to send back in return for their food. Evidently they must disperse. But the majority will "know next to nothing" not only of agriculture, but of any other labour needed in a state of Communism. The disintegration or dissolution of our overgrown towns is a large order, and we shall want our wits about us if it is not to be muddled over. And there is no slirking it, unless cause and effect should cease to work. Sooner or later it must be faced; and that is my excuse for suggesting the difficulty.

(2) Supposing the present system overthrown, will sound economic theory be sufficient cement to bind a new system together? I will say directly, No; but, if only to arouse thought, I ask, How near are we towards getting it sufficiently sound? The Communists of Totley must have had considerable advantages in this respect; yet they failed. Perhaps the Socialists of to-day are better informed,—they ought to be. But Justice has lately been pointing out and remonstrating against a deplorable disagreement between French and German Socialists; and this scarcely looks as if the Socialism which the average working man has time to learn is sufficient to ensure the necessary unity. It may be, indeed, that when the enemy Capitalism is dead, the common enemy Hunger will keep us together—"practical human needs," as Carpenter has it. But unless it can be shown that mere necessity will produce the necessary unity, I think we should be prepared to face the possibility of its not doing so. Admitting, then, the utmost success to Socialistic propaganda, we should have, on the inevitable downfall of the present system, a people with sound economical views, but views of such a nature as will not by themselves produce unity; and a large number of this people ignorant of the practical knowledge necessary to support life. What is to bind them together, if economics are insufficient, while they gain that knowledge, and afterwards?

(3) "The immediate desire of fellowship," Carpenter hints, is necessary. Very well. To what extent is that desire necessary? Are we doing our best to foster it? Or are we going about it in a haphazard way, relying merely on the slow course of evolution? That it is gradually developing I firmly believe; that the preaching of Socialism is giving it an increasing momentum must be admitted; and there is not the smallest doubt in my mind that in the atmosphere of equality which Communism would produce, it would flourish to an extent unimaginable to us. That, however, will be of small service to us in this day, if it be the fact that Communism cannot exist until the desire of fellowship is further developed than it is, say, amongst the Continental Socialists. As an evolutionist, I believe that causes have been at work, ages before Socialism was thought of, or even before the early Christian communism, developing this instinct; and if it be true (as I think it is) that the reason why Socialists hope to succeed where religions have failed is that they recognise the law of cause and effect, and mean to bring that, instead of mere sentiment, into their service, then it is plainly our duty to investigate, and endeavour to apply, the causes that develop the instinct of fellowship. For this reason, I think the careful study of such affairs as this at Totley would be most serviceable.

I should much like to know why the present operations at Totley are successful. Have the participators the sufficient desire of fellowship, which the former body lacked? If so, how far short of the necessary standard the average man must be! But I am very sceptical about such tremendous superiority in the men themselves (no disrespect to them is intended), and am rather inclined to think that their success must be due to some advantage in the method pursued.

The mention of their being connected with St. George's Guild lends colour to this surmise. Ruskin (to whom I owe it that I am a Socialist) has strong ideas on government and obedience; and there is probably a pretty complete organisation on the present Totley Farm. It may in the long run be mainly a difference of words between him and me; but as an Anarchist (at least so far as ideal is concerned) I have had strong objections to government and obedience, looking to individual self-control as the only element out of which Communism can proceed. And now, if that character which makes a man a law unto himself can only be developed by some sort of Communism, where am I? I may, and do, retain my ideal; but the idea of going straight for it, in the sense of discarding all intermediate means, is absurd. After all, Communism is only an economical means to an ethical end; it is, once more, a case of cause and effect—or, finally, an affair of human selection. And though it may be that I shall still do my best work by looking forward, and encouraging others to look forward, to the far ideal of Anarchism, yet in the meantime I must admit that the Social Democrats, whom I have hitherto thought somewhat mistaken, are doing quite as good work in their different way. Ruskin, too, looks like a practical man, after all; and even such a movement as "technical education," mere slave-training dodge as it is, may smooth the way of the Revolution, by providing to some extent the practical knowledge that will eventually be required.

Bearing in mind that wider knowledge may perhaps assist the development of fellowship, by producing a greater unity between different bodies of Socialists, I should like to draw one conclusion that may have a more immediately practical value.

The downfall of the present system will perhaps disintegrate our large towns, and will certainly leave many unable to organise themselves for their own support, both for want of practical knowledge and for lack of sufficient desire of fellowship. But, until this desire can be developed, a fair working substitute may be found in careful organisation,—perhaps even with some authoritative power, though it is hard to see whence such power will be derived. Where are we to look for such an organisation which will be able to direct the labour of those unskilled in useful work? To dogmatise would be absurd, but I think one way would be to form large organisations of trades. Thus, Socialists, while teaching the general principles and aims of our Cause, might especially impress upon the members of a particular trade the desirability of taking complete control of it themselves at the earliest opportunity, without necessarily waiting for a general revolution. If, for instance, several industries, such as building, baking, and railways, were thus organised, then the establishment of a Commune in London would not be doomed to failure, because the country was not ready to support the useless people there; they could be immediately drafted into one or other of these industries, where, starting as simple unskilled labourers, they would gradually be absorbed into the general body of the workers. So the work of organisation, so difficult if attempted in all branches of industry at once, would be spread out over some years, and the chances of an abortive Revolution considerably diminished.

But all this is mere theory, and theory can only be useful when founded on facts. So I ask again for more light on these experiments at Totley, as perhaps the nucleus of a history of contemporary tendencies in the evolution of Socialism.

(GEORGE STURT.

Farnham, March 28th, 1889.

If what is called the "National Debt" is really a national debt, then this nation is bankrupt. We are a nation in pawn! Though, in the form of "interest," the Debt has been paid in full six times over, yet it is still owing; and all the children of the working classes of England will be regarded as debtors to the usurer classes, until the world is at an end—or until the People open their eyes. Then they will make the usurers open theirs!—W. H. R.

What was said in a recent number of "Nunquam" in the Manchester Sunday Chronicle may be said with even more force of "Proletarian" in the Montrose Review. With this difference, however, that "Proletarian" takes up definitely the Socialist attitude. Speaking of the "free speech" agitation in Dundee he says:

"The prisoners in this case have to contend with the hostility not only of a middle-class magistracy, but of a capitalist press. Editors of papers like the Dundee Advertiser and People's Journal have to dance to the tune that the proprietors of the papers play; and the eye of the proprietors is fixed on advertisements—i.e., profits. The pious editors, therefore, as well as the bulk of the Dundee magistrates, strongly

Believe in Freedom's cause,
Ez far away ez Ireland is;
They love to see her stick her claws
In them infarnal Pharisees—

the Irish landlords; but when the claws begin to stick in a specimen quite as 'infarnal,' the British capitalist, then

Libbaty's a kind o' thing
That don't agree with—

Socialists."

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

ENGLISH RAILWAYMEN.—On the Great Northern Railway at Doncaster, the goods guards are finding themselves done away with in favour of brakemen working at 20s., or 10s. less than was paid to the guards. On the same line the following figures are given as signalmen's wages: Holloway Yard, 28s.; Caledonian, 29s.; Finsbury Park, 24s. to 25s. In '78 they were reduced 1s. all round, and lately they have undergone the same operation.

BAKERS' UNION.—A meeting was held on Saturday last at the "Prince Arthur," Brunswick Place, City Road, to organise the journeymen bakers of the district into a Society, so that they may be the better able to fight the battle of Labour v. Capital. The meeting was international in character, the speaking being in both German and English. 5s. 6d. collected. It was decided to hold meetings with the same object in view in all parts of London.

IRISH RAILWAYMEN.—The Railway Review says there is a man employed by the Great Northern Co. at Belfast, among whose multifarious duties are the collecting of tickets, timing of trains, collecting weekly accounts, taking wagon numbers, making out returns, keeping account of demurrage, and the filling up of his spare time assisting the clerks. For this work he is awarded 15s. every week. He recently made application for an advance, when he was told that such could not be paid, as he was getting more than some men in the service with more responsible duties. It concludes by saying, "What it is the latter got was not stated, but we should like to know."

STRIKE OF LASTERS AND FINISHERS.—About 140 men of Messrs. Pocock Bros., Southwark Bridge Road, have been out on strike for about a fortnight, and the men of the Northampton branch of the same firm have also struck. The cause of the strike is the reduction of wages proposed in the new Statement submitted to the men. Another Statement, admitting of some reductions, drawn up by the men, was refused by the firm. The points in dispute seem to be the classification of tops, and the refusal by Messrs. Pocock Bros. to supply grindery without allowing an equivalent or extra wage instead. We understand the firm has tried to put out the work to other places, but their mean attempts have not as yet succeeded. The men live in hope.

ACCIDENTS AMONG DOCK LABOURERS.—The Lancet, reverting to the prevalence of accidents among dock labourers, contends that Colonel Martindale's evidence before the House of Lords' commission does not refute the dockers' assertion that in five years' work 50 per cent. of the workers met with accidents. Col. Martindale acknowledges that 142 accidents happened in a year among the men in his employ—averaging 5,300 per day. Ruptures, however, and many spinal injuries are not included, and it is notorious that only a small proportion of the accidents that actually occur come to the knowledge of the dock companies. If they were always reported the foreman would be censured, and the man who had caused the foreman to be censured by reporting his accident would find it difficult to obtain employment when cured. It is therefore wiser to go away quietly and trust to the charity of fellow-workers for help, instead of making claims on the company.

A STUDY OF SOCIAL EVOLUTION.

OUR comrade Peter Kropotkin is about to give a course of six lectures under the above title, of which the following is a syllabus:—

I.—The Problems of our Century.—The intellectual movement of our century—Economic, political, and moral problems raised—No satisfactory answer found—Dualism in morality—Want of inspiration in philosophy, literature, and art which results from it—Issues searched for—Socialism and its aspirations.

II.—The origins of our present economical and political organisation.—The primitive Saxon, Celtic, and Slavonian communities—The Communes of the mediæval times—Their interior organisation—Their federations—Monuments left—Internal causes of decay.

III.—The origins of our present economical and political organisation (continued).—The growth of modern States—Europe threatened by invasions—The absorption of the Communes by the State—The centralised State—The Colonies and the growth of Industry—Its economical consequences—The growth of representative Government.

IV.—Philosophical Systems and popular movements aiming at the reconstruction of Society.—The popular ideal as it appears in the mediæval times—Internal struggles within the Communes—The risings of the peasants—The religious and economical movements of the Reformation—The Anabaptists—The philosophical and economical aspects of the Revolution in England.

V.—Philosophical Systems and popular movements aiming at the reconstruction of Society (continued).—The philosophical systems of the eighteenth century—The risings of the people and the French Revolution—The Communists of the nineteenth century—The national workshops of 1848 and the impossibility of organising labour by means of a Government—Birth of modern Socialism.

VI.—Modern Socialism.—Its various schools—Collectivism—Anarchy: its system of philosophy—Freedom of the individual and his need of association as the basis of future progress—Moralising influence of Socialism—Dualism in morality cast away—A glimpse into the future—Economic production, Science, and Art in a free Communist Society.

Details of place and time, etc., will be shortly announced.

FALL RIVER SLAVES.—See those mill slaves at Fall River. Six thousand of them are now striking for enough to live on. Fall River has fifty-three cotton-mills alone. That proves that there must be millions in the business. The average dividends paid range between eighteen and thirty per cent. The mills turn out 500,000,000 yards a-year. The average profit is a cent a yard. This leaves 5,000,000 dollars a-year to be divided among fifty-three mills; an average of nearly 100,000 dollars profit annually per mill. The larger concerns make more, the smaller ones less; the profit depends on the output. Now what do these operatives want? Simply the old January scale of wages, which would make a difference to this grab galaxy of mills of 182,000 dollars a-year. An average of about 3,500 dols. a-year to each mill; 300 dols. a-month; 10 dols. a-day. These mill-owners, bloated on a profit of five million dollars a-year, refuse to pay a pittance of ten dollars a-day to their starving fortune-makers, to help them keep body and soul together. That's the mathematics of Capital's side in this question. How much do these mill-slaves make? A fourteen-year-old girl can average 3 dollars a-week; a woman, with constant work at four looms, can make between 5 and 6 dollars. Men who do woman's work get woman's wages; not a cent more. Very few make more.—N.Y. Evening Telegram, March 13.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING APRIL 27, 1889.

21	Sun.	1868. O'Farrell hung at Sydney for attempt on Duke of Edinburgh. 1874. William Carpenter died.
22	Mon.	1826. Sack of Missolonghi by the Turks. 1852. Collapse of great strike of Engineers. 1875. Birth of "organised obstruction" in the House of Commons.
23	Tues.	1794. Trial of James Bird and others for conspiracy. 1817. Trial of James McEwan and others for administering unlawful oaths. 1832. Co-operative Congress at the "Institution of the Industrious Classes," King's Cross; Robert Owen in the chair. 1873. International Workmen's Club formed in connection with the British Federation of the International. 1885. Explosion at the Admiralty.
24	Wed.	1521. Execution of Juan di Padilla. 1731. Daniel Defoe died. 1861. Peasant riot at Bezdna in the Kazan Government. 1867. Trial of Thomas F. Burke for high treason. 1871. Demonstration of match-makers against the match-tax. 1887. Hyde Park demonstration in aid of the Northumberland miners.
25	Thur.	1599. Oliver Cromwell born. 1799. Trial of Earl Thanet and four others for riot. 1820. Volney died. 1852. Arthur O'Connor died. 1865. Georg Kmety died. 1883. Fenian Convention opened at Philadelphia.
26	Fri.	1711. David Hume born. 1848. Chartist demonstration on Clerkenwell Green.
27	Sat.	1803. Toussaint L'Ouverture died. 1806. Louis Kossuth born. 1881. Emile de Girardin died. 1882. R. W. Emerson died.

Pierre Dominique Toussaint L'Ouverture.—Born at Breda, near Cape town, San Domingo (Hayti), May 20, 1746; died in the Castle of Joux, near Besançon, France, April 27, 1803. He was the son of slave parents, both of them full-blooded Africans; and from his earliest childhood showed remarkable ability. He managed to learn to read and write, and became his master's coachman. Still applying every leisure moment to study, he rose gradually to be superintendent over the other negroes on the estate, and meanwhile had acquired a splendid education. In his earlier years he used the name of his birthplace for surname, but was afterwards called L'Ouverture, as having provided the "opening" of the road to freedom for his people. In 1789 San Domingo had attained a high pitch of prosperity, and was inhabited by three classes—whites, free people of colour (mostly mulattoes, and many of them wealthy proprietors), and slaves. The mulattoes demanded that the principles of the Revolution should be extended to them; and in spite of the furious resistance of the whites, this was done in 1791, by decree of the French Convention conferring on the mulattoes all the rights of French citizens. But the whites proceeded to such violent measures, and petitioned the Convention so strongly, that the decree was soon revoked; whereupon the mulattoes threw in their lot with that of the slaves, who had meanwhile risen against the yoke. Toussaint had taken a prominent part in the negro part of the agitation, and joined the rebels, using his knowledge of surgery and medicine as the physician of their forces. He speedily rose in influence among them—so rapidly indeed as to arouse the jealousy of their chief, Jean François, who caused his arrest on the charge of undue partiality to the whites. He was set free by the rival of François, Baisson, and a partisan war followed; but on the death of Baisson, Toussaint became reconciled to Jean François, and again placed himself under his orders. In the confused fighting that followed Toussaint took a leading part, and was at one time in alliance with the Spaniards; but in 1793 the commissioners of the French Convention declared slavery abolished and all the inhabitants of the colony free and equal. Toussaint thereupon came to the aid of the French, occupied the Spanish posts in his neighbourhood, and joined the French general Laveaux, whom he afterwards delivered from the mulatto chiefs, who had got him into their power. He was then made a general of division, and successfully set about bringing under French rule the whole of the northern part of the island, with the exception of the Mole of St. Nicholas, which remained in British possession. By the treaty of Bâle (1795) Spain ceded her part of the island to France. In April 1796, Toussaint was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Armies of San Domingo, and exercised his functions to such effect that the strong places hitherto held by the British were soon after surrendered to him by General Maitland. He had meanwhile organised and drilled a powerful negro army, and now set himself to restore to the country the prosperity that so much war had driven away from it. Under his just and impartial rule trade and agriculture began again to flourish, and San Domingo seemed in a fair way to become all that the ambitious dreams of his youth had pictured her. On May 9, 1801, he proclaimed San Domingo a republic, independent of, but in friendly relation with, that of France. He himself was to be president for life. For this step two reasons are alleged, the one by his admirers, and the other by those of Napoleon. One of these is that he feared the perceptible reaction that was going on in France; and the other, that he desired to gratify an overweening ambition, bred by the immense power he had wielded for several years. Both of these causes were probably at work, together with a desire to emulate Napoleon, who had become his model. But as soon as peace with England was concluded, Napoleon, then First Consul, put forth a proclamation that slavery was to continue in Martinique and Cayenne, and that "order" (including slavery) was to be "restored" in San Domingo, which was to be once more reduced to the level of a colony. Toussaint met this with a counter-proclamation, in which he affirmed his friendship to the French Republic, but left no doubt as to his intention to repel the threatened injustice by force. Buonaparte sent a squadron of 54 sail, under the command of his brother-in-law, General Le Clerc, to reduce the "rebels." This overwhelming force at first discouraged even Toussaint himself, but not for long. Feb. 17, 1802, he was proclaimed an outlaw, but continued to defend himself with desperate courage. At last the defection of Christophe and Dessalines obliged him to listen to terms. In doing so he was drawn into one of those traps which Napoleon set for his enemies, and became the object of one of the blackest pieces of treachery that even that master of perfidy ever performed. His outlawry was reversed, and on a visit to Le Clerc he was received with military honours. General Brunet invited him to a conference on June 10, when the generals retired, under the pretence of consultation, the negro guard was disarmed, and their chief kidnapped and sent to France. For awhile he was lodged in the Temple, but was soon moved from among the dangerously sympathetic Parisians to the remote castle of Joux, where ten months of rigorous confinement was enough to break the lion-heart and send the great negro leader to his grave.—S.

A NATION'S STRENGTH.—The man who drives the plough or swings the axe in the forest, or with cunning fingers plies the tools of his craft, is as truly the servant of his country as the statesman in the senate or the soldier in battle. The safety of a nation depends not alone on the wisdom of the statesman or the bravery of its generals.—Whipple.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, May 6, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Oxford, to end of September.

1889:—Clerkenwell and Mitcham, to end of February. Leicester, North London, and East London, to end of March. Bradford, to end of April.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible. A list of Branches in arrears will appear.

Commonweals for 1888, handsomely bound in red, are now ready, price 5s.; per post, 5s. 6d.

Propaganda Committee.—The Propaganda Committee meets on Tuesday, April 23rd, at 8.30 p.m. Important business; all members of the League interested in the propaganda invited to attend.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—H. Schmitt, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; Blundell, 6d.; R. Turner, 1s.; J. Turner, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; Segie, 6d.; Tilley, 6d.; Rose, 6d.; B. W., 6d.; Mrs. Isaacson, 5s.; Nicoll, 6d.; and E. W., 10s. Norwich Branch, 2s.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.—Canterbury Road, Kilburn—Owing to the inclemency of weather, meeting was a failure. We trust, however, next Sunday to have better luck. Hyde Park—Brookes, Parker, Hicks, and Mainwaring spoke: 1s. 7½d. collected. Broad Street, Soho—This meeting fell through owing to weather; the speakers were at their post. Clerkenwell Green—Mainwaring, despite the weather, spoke to good audience.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road Station on Sunday morning; speakers were Lynes, sen., Lynes, jun., Davis, and Maughan; choir sang at the close of meeting. Afterwards we went to Kensal Green and held very good meeting there. During morning the comrades of this district sold 108 Commonweal. In evening at Weltje Road, meeting not good owing to wet; speakers, Spry and Maughan. At Kelmscott House, S. Bullock lectured.—M.

WHITECHAPEL AND ST. GEORGES-IN-THE-EAST.—F. Kitz lectured at International Club, 40, Berner Street, Wednesday 10th, on "The Préfect Prosecution." Fair audience, and much interest shown. At Leman Street on Sunday morning, Turner spoke in the rain for about an hour to fair audience. A little friendly opposition at the finish.—J. T.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on Sth, Leatham read a paper on "The Future of the Workers" Discussion carried on at close by Slater, Duncan, and Leatham. Meeting at Castle Street on Saturday night addressed by Duncan and Leatham, whilst Aiken pushed literature.—J. L.

EDINBURGH.—On 7th, Mellet lectured on "Law and Order." Good meeting and interesting discussion.

GLASGOW.—On Thursday evening at the members' discussion class, the question of how best to reply to the usual objection "that it is impossible to realise Socialism," was discussed—all the members present giving a short speech. On Sunday we held two good open-air meetings, one at Paisley Road Toll, Joe Burgoyne, Glasier, and Gilbert being the speakers, and the other at St. George's Cross, where Glasier and Joe Burgoyne spoke; 55 Commonweal sold.

MANCHESTER.—Sunday afternoon good meeting in Stevenson Square, Ritson, Marshall, and Bailie speakers. A City Councillor who was present indicated a desire to oppose, but declined to address audience from the chair. At 7.30 we held the first meeting of the season at Chester Road, when Nixon opened with an original Socialist song, and Marshall and Bailie spoke. We began with scanty audience, which developed into a large and lively gathering and ended rather tumultuously owing to some noisy opponents. We hope to do some good work here as the weather improves.—W. B.

NORWICH.—No open-air meeting on Sunday owing to wet weather. Meeting held in hall, very fair audience, Poynts lectured on "Social Democracy and Anarchism," several questions asked. In evening lecture was delivered by a friend from Cambridge, subject, "Life and Works of Thomas Paine," to good audience; Darley in chair. Lecture was an interesting account of Paine, and frequently applauded. Discussion followed; Poynts and A. Moore took part. After lecture a very enjoyable time was spent, and numerous songs, readings, and recitations rendered, concluding with Marseillaise.

YARMOUTH.—Short meeting on Priory Plain at 3 p.m. Sunday, addressed by Ruffold and Reynolds; 18 Weal sold and 1s. collected. After meeting the members met at a comrade's house to discuss Mowbray's visit, for which arrangements were made, and also a collection to defray any expenses.—C. R.

DUBLIN.—At the Progressist Club, 87, Marlboro' Street, Saturday, April 13th, J. O'Gorman lectured on "What is Human Slavery?" the address being an exposition of the general principles of Socialism. An interesting discussion followed, the opposition being better than the average. The lecture was well supported by King, Graham, Coulon, and others.

NOTTINGHAM SOCIALIST CLUB.—In spite of cold and rain, fair meeting held on Sunday night in the Great Market Place, Rooke in chair. Peacock denounced the sweating of the teachers employed by the Nottingham School Board, and urged that the Socialists should be more strongly represented on that body.—P.

WESS BENEFIT.—The concert at 13, Farringdon Road, on Sunday last was a success. The Russian choir was an interesting feature, and the vocal music on the whole, considering the absence of professional aid, was good. A few recitations were also rendered with effect, and the Marseillaise was sung in French and Russian. The entertainment concluded with a little dancing and refreshments.

WEST SOUTHWARK LIBERAL AND RADICAL CLUB, 45 Charlotte Street, Blackfriars Road.—Rev. S. D. Headlam.

ELBUSIS CLUB, 180 King's Road, Chelsea, S.W.—Sunday April 28, at 8 p.m., Mr. Sidney Webb (Fabian), "The New Departure of the Liberal Party. Social Reforms."

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower March, Lambeth.—Tuesday April 30th, W. S. de Mattos (Fabian Society), "Socialism and Economics."

SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—A social gathering of members and sympathisers will take place at 28 Grays Inn Road (14 doors from Holborn) on Sunday April 21st, at 6 p.m., to discuss the position and best means of promoting the interests of the Society. Admission free. Tea, coffee, and cake provided.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (¼-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30.

East London.—Business meeting on Sunday 21st, at 7.30, at 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road. Members, attend.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend.

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday April 21, at 8 p.m., H. Halliday Sparling, "The Commune of London." Thursday April 25, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 26, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road J. Turner, organising secretary. On Wednesday April 24, J. Blackwell will lecture on "Government and Crime."

PROVINCES.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Dublin.—Dnblin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Discussion Class on Thursday evenings at 8—subject next Thursday "Henry George's Single-tax Theory." French Class meets on Mondays at 8 p.m. Members wishing to join in our Saturday afternoon propaganda excursions requested to assemble in Rooms on Saturdays at 4.30.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 8.15, C. W. Mowbray will lecture in the Gordon Hall—subject, "Socialism not Akin to Radicalism." Monday, the comrades will open the Country Propaganda; at 8.30 p.m., a Social Meeting will be held in the Gordon Hall. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8.30, Discussion Class. (Open-air arrangements given below.)

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Business meeting every Tuesday evening. The Commonweal can be purchased of Mr. Hous, newsagent, George Street.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY 20.

8 Mile-end Waste Davis, Brooks, Mrs. Schack

SUNDAY 21.

11 Latimer Road Station Lyne senr., Maughan, and Dean
 11.30 Bethnal Green—Gibraltar Walk Mrs. Schack and Cores
 11.30 "Canterbury Arms"—Kilburn Road Charles, Mainwaring, Hicks
 11.30 Hammersmith—St. Ann's Road The Branch
 11.30 Kensal Green Crouch, Davis, Dean, and Spry
 11.30 Mitcham Fair Green Debate between F. Kitz and an opponent
 11.30 Regent's Park Parker and Nicoll
 11.30 Walham Green, opposite Station The Branch
 11.30 Leman Street, Shadwell Davis, Turner, and Mowbray
 3.30 Hyde Park Darwood, Jeffries, and Parker
 3.30 Victoria Park Davis, Mrs. Schack, and Mowbray
 7 Clerkenwell Green Brookes, Kitz, Parker, and Nicoll
 7 Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park The Branch
 7.30 Broad Street, Soho Mrs. Lahr
 7.30 Mitcham Fair Green The Branch

TUESDAY 23.

8 Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch.

THURSDAY 25.

8 Ossulton Street Mrs. Lahr and Nicoll

FRIDAY 26.

8 Philpot Street, Commercial Road St. George's Branch
 8.15 Hoxton Church Mrs. Lahr

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Manchester.—Outdoor meetings every Sunday. Stevenson Square at 3 p.m.; Viaduct, Chester Road, at 7.30.

Norwich.—Sunday: Ber Street Fountain, at 11—Samuels and Darley; Market Place, at 11—Rochmann and Poynts; Market Place, at 3, a great demonstration will be held, addressed by C. W. Mowbray, M. Rochmann, and H. Samuels (London), chair to be taken by comrade Darley; Market Place, at 7.30—Poynts, Rochmann, and Samuels.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

SCOTTISH LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.

Aberdeen.—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Odd-fellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8.

Jarnoustie (Forfarshire)—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary.

Dundee.—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Edinburgh.—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8.

Falashiels.—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, Secretary.

Falltown and Dysart (Fife)—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School.

A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street, Secretary.

Kilmarnock.—Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday. H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street, Secretary.

West Calder.—Robert Lindsay, West Calder, Secretary.

AUSTRALIAN SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

Sydney.—533 George Street. Lectures and debates every Sunday evening. W. H. McNamara, Secretary.

Melbourne.—"Golden Fleece" Hotel, Russell Street. Lectures and debates every Sunday evening. J. A. Andrews, 18 Ophir Street, Richmond, Secy.

On Easter Monday.

A FREE CONCERT AND BALL will be given at 13 Farringdon Road, on Easter Monday, to commence at 8 p.m. All comrades able to assist with music, reading, or song please help.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors) 1d
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. 2d
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3s. 1.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. 1d
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
 Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
 Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Our Parish and Our Duke; OR, WHAT LAND NATIONALISATION MEANS.

A Letter to my Fellow-Parishioners.

BY
 EDWARD CARPENTER.

To be had of the Author, Millthorpe, near Chesterfield. Price 2s. per 100, post free.

ARBEJDEREN

("The Worker")

DANISH SOCIALIST WEEKLY.

Edited and published by NICOLAJ PETERSEN and GERSON TRIER.

Subscription 3s. a-year.

Nansensgade 28A, Copenhagen.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

299 SHALES Moor, SHEFFIELD.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. 1 copy, 2d., by post, 3d.; 3 copies, 8d.; 6, 1s. 3d.; 12, 2s. 5d.; 24, 4s. 9d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free. 50, post free, 6s. 100, post free, 11s.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LIFE OF ALBERT R. PARSONS.

290 PAGES, BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

Telling the Story of his Life, so full of startling incidents, ending with the tragedy of Nov. 11, 1887.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM

GEN. B. F. BUTLER, GEN. W. H. PARSONS, CAPT. W. P. BLACK, GEO. A. SCHILLING, and others, make this one of the most interesting books of our time.

Price (Postpaid) 6s. 6d.

Address—MRS. PARSONS, 785 Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

KARL MARX.

A NEW AND HIGHLY ARTISTIC ETCHING.

India Proof, 19 by 24 inches.

Price Two Dollars.

ETCHED AND PUBLISHED BY ALFRED C. KIHN, 298 Jay Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., U.S.A.

Also for sale at New York Labour News Co., 25 East Fourth Street, N.Y.

Copies mailed to any address on receipt of price.

Can be had of W. Reeves, 185 Fleet Street, London.

FREIHEIT

INTERNATIONAL ORGAN OF THE GERMAN-SPEAKING ANARCHISTS.

EDITED BY JOHN MOST.

Subscription, 2s. per quarter; under cover, 4s.

John Müller, Post Office Box 3135, New York, U.S.A., or Office of Commonweal.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenaeum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Feap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Feap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
 New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Library Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
 Vol. III., AUTUMN . . . seventh edition 12s.
 Vol. IV., WINTER . . . seventh edition 12s.

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo, at 2s. 6d. each.

ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE AENEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond A Morality.

Square 12mo, 143 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction.

With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

Now READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

BY THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

OUR NATIONAL CAKE:

WHO MAKES IT, AND WHO EATS IT.

Large display poster to bring home the aims of Socialism to the workers.

Sent free on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage. J. J. Harrison, 44 Oxford Street, Sheffield.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 172.

SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE rich are getting so extremely kind to the poor, that, if they don't take care, they (the rich) will expend all their time in performing these kindnesses, and will have no time left for performing the absolutely necessary duty of finding means of wasting the wealth which they have sweated from the poor; and a pretty mess we shall be in then! For since the "poor" are only employed by the sweating process, and depend for their subsistence on the sweaters, if the sweaters don't sweat we shall be all undone together—unless the workers have come to the conclusion that they will employ themselves for their own benefit.

Here is a queer example of this rash philanthropy, this killing people with kindness. The National Home Reading Circles Union, which resolved the other day "that it was advisable to organise in a large and effective manner a plan by which to direct and encourage home-reading among all classes of the people," etc., etc.

"All classes." Yes, but they mean one class. You bet they won't come to me—I wish they would. At the meeting in question the stream of twaddle flowed on very steadily. Said the Bishop of London: "It would not be difficult to make home-reading a very living thing, though not quite so powerful as the voice of the teacher." "The voice of the teacher," that means the Bishop, I suppose; "the voice of the teacher" is good, very good.

The Venerable Archdeacon Farrar thought, "That it would do much to counteract the flood of wicked, malicious, and frivolous literature with which England was inundated." I say, which of the three are we of the Commonweal? Not "frivolous," I think; "wicked and malicious," I fear. O parson, parson, what tall words you use; but taller follow. "They might find in them (books) fruits which are fruits of Nepenthé, and flowers that are flowers of Amaranthe." Yes, only I fear that the cases are not uncommon where beefsteak and porter would be more welcome than Nepenthé and Amaranthe; nay, would enable us to find those "articles" in our books—if we have any.

In short, what the devil is it all about? Are there not books enough written year by year in this country drowned in "culture"? Are they not cheap enough, as cheap as worthless paper and scab labour can make them? What is needed, O benevolent rich gentlemen, to further "home-reading"? I think you know, though you don't choose to confess it. Leisure, freedom from anxiety about livelihood, pleasant roomy clean dwellings, access to pretty places and the rest; in short, reasonable ease of life, and above all unanxious leisure. When people have this they will read such books as they will, such as suit them, and, pax Mr. G. Howell, amuse them. Can a man have this when he is a trembling dependent for his livelihood on the caprice of another man, who is himself a slave to a system of cut-throat competition? We all know he cannot.

In short, O benevolent persons and parsons, your kindness to the working-classes will be welcome to them when it is no longer used as an excuse for your continued robbing of them. Is it "malicious," I wonder, to quote Scripture and say, "Let him that stole steal no more." Meantime, it is not a little ridiculous to see the efforts of these worthy folk to wag the dog's tail for him since he declines to wag it himself.

W. M.

Last week the Liverpool landing-stage was overcrowded with emigrants going by steamer to America. On seven vessels there went six thousand exiles, including English, Scotch, and Irish, Germans, Italians, Norwegians, Russians, Hungarians, and Polish Jews. A number of English agricultural labourers sailed for South America. The leading Atlantic lines ran extra steamers to meet the enormous traffic. From Southampton a lot of Scotch fishermen have gone to South Africa. A constant stream is flowing to Australia. Every outward-bound steamer carries a load of exiles somewhere—anywhere, if only they get away from their native land.

And all this is not, as in the old days of the Scando-Gothic exodus, an overflow of freemen from sterile lands too small for their teeming myriads. Nor is it, as with the Elizabethan English, the voluntary going out of a strong and poor people, freemen still, if not so free as their forefathers, against a great and unwieldy wealthy nation, that barred their way and at the same time offered a fine field for plunder. These folk have indeed the hunger that drove out their forefathers, but have neither the longing for adventure that led them round the world, nor the strength and freshness that enabled them to destroy and replace the effete systems that confronted them. These are slaves fleeing from the lash to the lash.

They go from lands in which there is plenty of room for them were it not for monopoly and injustice, to lands that meet them with the same injustice and subject them to the same monopoly. They are slaves born and bred; have lived as slaves at "home," and carry with them the will to be slaves wherever they go. Yet with the poison they carry the antidote; among the slaves there go some exiled men, men driven out because of their manhood, even as the slaves are driven out because of their slavehood. And so, while for the Land of Behest they find the Land of Betrayal, with blood and bitterness for milk and honey, and wander in a desert of commercialism that seems to stretch beyond their utmost vision, there are among them the men who will lead them out of it into the land that lays beyond.

Meantime it is not pleasant for Englishmen who reflect upon what their fathers were—pirates and freebooters, it is true, but men at least, and lovers of freedom, though it were only for themselves—and then think that Englishmen are among the most willing slaves and makers of slaves that can be found in all the world. Nor is this only so in far-off lands; there is a proof of it this present week at our very doors. It is proposed to "colonise" with English labourers an Irish estate which has been cleared of its native tenants. The proposal is made, not because the English will be, as their fathers were, strong thieves, able and ready to buy with hard blows what booty they desire, but because they will crouch more tamely and be plundered more patiently than those they replace.

I may be a crude barbarian and the rest of it, but I prefer their fathers. To me there is nothing more terrible in the present system than the loss of manhood it has brought about. The only thing that gives me patience enough even to listen with moderate calmness to the preaching of palliatives is the hope that, perchance, they may in some way give to the working classes a chance to recover somewhat of the fibre and backbone that will be needful ere they can achieve their freedom or live as freemen. That is their only argument, and, needless to say, not a conclusive one.

S.

THE ENGLISH REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT, 1815 TO 1817.

SPA-FIELDS RIOTS AND DERBYSHIRE INSURRECTION.

It is a commonplace among many revolutionists to say that the English people have no revolutionary traditions. To some extent this is true, for we are forced to go back to the days of Wat Tyler and Jack Cade, to those of the "Pilgrimage of Grace," or to those of the "Levellers" and "Fifth Monarchy Men," if we want to discover a time of really formidable risings of the dispossessed. But still revolutionary traditions of a kind do exist among the people. Hyde Park railings are still a watchword among Radicals, who are anxious to prove that beneath their placid demeanour there lurks something dangerous; and the great Chartist demonstration on Kennington Common is still a subject for conversation among older men. But these, though revolutionary traditions, are revolutionary in a very mild way, and do not come up in any way to traditions of the great revolutions which have displayed themselves upon the stage of Paris during the past century. Well, but degenerate as we are, and tamely as our people put up with starvation and undeserved misery—with a quietness which is the wonder of other nations—yet there are passages in our history in which the country seems to have escaped an actual uprising almost by a miracle; and the period I am going to refer to is one of them.

You must transport yourselves back into the dawn of this century, into the good old times of which our grandfathers and grandmothers are so fond of talking. We are in the dawn of the manufacturing era, and it is still possible for the mechanic, after working in a factory during the day, to go back to his cottage in the country to sleep in the evening. Machinery is just coming into general use, and there have been already in 1812 serious riots against the introduction of machinery in the north-country districts; but it is not with deeds of the Luddites that I have to do: that has been already dealt with by another comrade of ours in the pages of the Commonweal. London then was not one-third the size it is at present. Chelsea, Marylebone, Somers Town, St. Pancras, Clerkenwell, and Mile-end were countryfied suburbs, surrounded by fields, which a few minutes walk would take you into. The southern side of the Thames was still more rural. There were open fields where now stands the obelisk at St. George's Circus; Greenwich, Walworth, and Camberwell were completely isolated from the town. In Lambeth there were disused windmills, which a few years back had been in active use. London was growing, but growing much more slowly than it is at present; and even down to 1848 there were large open spaces at Kennington and Clerkenwell, which had not yet become the prey of the suburban builder, upon which large meetings could be held. In the country the large manufacturing towns were, like London, not near their present size. There were then no railways, and news took two or three days in coming to London from the more remote parts of the kingdom, and the highwaymen of the penny-dreadful had not long vanished from the country. The great battle of Waterloo was about to be fought and won, and the trade of England, though greatly stimulated by the Continental war which had lasted over twenty years, had sunk into a terrible depression. Closed factories and starving workmen were common, and the distress was increased by heavy taxation, the result of twenty years' fighting to extinguish French freedom. I have the authority of a writer in the Edinburgh Review for stating that the furniture of hundreds of decent families was sold by auction in the public streets for arrears of taxation.

It was not surprising under these circumstances to find that discontent increased, although of course there were not wanting respectable people to place all the responsibility for distress and discontent alike upon the shoulders of very wicked people, who were not known in those days as Socialists, but were commonly called Radicals, and were known in polite society as people of French principles. Most of these Radicals were in truth Jacobins, and regarded the great French Revolutionists of 1793 as the prophets of their creed; but these Radicals, needless to say, were much more advanced than those of the present day. They did not alone believe in the abolition of the House of Lords or the disestablishment of the Church as the goal of their desires; they were Republicans, and demanded manhood suffrage and annual parliaments. Many, too, were followers of Thomas Spence, the English land-nationalist, who desired the restoration of the land to the people not by the single-tax methods of Henry George, but by the people actually taking possession of it, after the manner now recommended by the Communist-Anarchists. Robert Owen, too, had begun to preach his theories of social reconstruction; but as he did not believe in physical force, and as his doctrines had not obtained much hold upon the people, they were not looked upon as very dangerous by the authorities, who only regarded him as an amiable enthusiast, a dreamer of beautiful dreams, which many very lofty people regarded with a certain amount of charitable interest, as they had not become the war-cry of a popular party, and there was therefore no chance of their inconvenient realisation.

While these advanced ideas were seething in the breasts of the people, England was being ruled by men beside whom Balfour and Salisbury are angels of light. The renegade George Canning, the hypocritical Sidmouth, bloody Castlereagh—these were the gentlemen who managed affairs and who were willing to use the iron hand in crushing down the people. It was not enough that trade was bad and thousands were starving: something must be done to increase the rents of the land monopolists, and therefore a measure was passed through parliament to prohibit the importation of foreign corn. But the men of London, who had not lost their manhood in stifling slums, but could still breathe the free air of the country-side, determined that they would not see their wives and children starved for the benefit of these greedy leeches, and some strange sights began to be seen in the streets of the metropolis. On March 6, 1815, a few days after the introduction of the Bill to the House of Commons, the people assembled in the avenues and lobbies of the House, declaiming against the Corn Bill: At one o'clock they are cleared out from the lobbies by constables, and driven into Palace Yard. But the crowd increases, and grows more desperate. Amid the cheering for popular members, the ministers are saluted by howls of rage and cries of "No Corn Bill!" The carriages of unpopular members are stopped, and they are forced to walk through the crowd amid hissing and hooting. The transition from hissing and hooting to blows is easy, and some members who are in favour of starving the people are very roughly handled, among them being the Attorney-General. At this juncture the military are called out, and the crowd are dispersed at the point of sabre and bayonet. But the trouble is not over. The people driven from the House of Commons rally in other parts of the town and the crowd sweeps towards the house of Lord Eldon, the Lord Chancellor, in Bedford Square, then a fashionable neighbourhood, Belgravia being as yet undreamt of. It is now ten o'clock in the evening as the mob reaches the house. The temper of the crowd is dangerous, for a rope is thrown over a lamp-post in front of the door, on which they announce their intention of hanging his lordship. Some lively proceedings follow; the iron railings in front are torn up and the door is battered down. In pours the crowd, and they begin to smash his lordship's furniture; but his lordship has escaped by the back way. It is possible they might have proceeded to other extremities had not the guards arrived, when the people as usual dispersed.

In the meantime, mobs are gathering in other parts of the town, and a dense crowd attacks the house of Mr. Robinson, the introducer of the Corn Bill. This gentleman fares badly; his house is completely sacked, the occupants making a hasty exit by the back door, while his furniture and pictures are thrown out of window and trampled to pieces by the people outside. The Earl of Pembroke in his carriage, on his return from the House of Lords, encounters another detachment of the mob; the carriage is smashed to pieces, the earl barely escaping with his life. It is pleasing to read in the papers of the time that the Royal Horse Guards and three regiments of foot-guards were under orders during the whole of the day, and that to the latter twenty-four rounds of ball cartridges were served out. It was no doubt a source of great unhappiness to the ministers that the troops were not able to shoot any of the rioters.

On the next day, March 7th, the West-end is in a state of siege, the houses of unpopular members being guarded by troops. Round the House of Commons large crowds assemble, so evidently tumultuous in their disposition, that they are only kept in order by a liberal display of infantry and cavalry. But despite the troops the riots go on, and though the Horse Guards are continually on the move, the rioters elude them by acting in small parties, fifty or a hundred strong, and the wreckage of window-panes is considerable. No sooner is one crowd dispersed than the military are called to curb the operations of another; and though the scene of the riots did not exceed half a mile, the damage is always done in the temporary absence of the military. A most determined attack is made again upon the house of Mr. Robinson, but from the windows there comes a volley of musketry: there are some soldiers inside in ambush, and a man falls shot through the heart. As usual, the victim is a peaceful spectator; there is no clue to his identity found upon him, but he is supposed from his dress to be a naval officer. As night falls over the tumultuous scene, large mobs gather in the city in the neighbourhood of Finsbury Square, and an attack is made on Whitebread's brewery. The Horse Guards are summoned from the West, and in their absence a huge mob gathers in the Dials and pours down St. Martin's Lane to the House of Commons, cursing the Corn Bill and threatening destruction to its supporters. Fortunately for the unpopular members, the House has adjourned, and the people vent their rage upon the building, bombarding it with showers of stones; hardly a pane of glass is left unbroken. The police are helpless, and the Guards are sent for. They come down at full trot, their sabres drawn, from the City and West, and the crowd flee before them into the churchyard of St. Margarets, whence they fling stones and curses at the troops.

The next day the houses of Lord Castlereagh and Mr. Ponsonby are assailed. At Ponsonby's the people are fired upon by the servants, but that does not daunt them, for the iron railings are torn up and the door is battered down, but before they can storm the house the troops arrive, and the people retire before them. London is now full of troops, poured into it from every country district. The House of Commons, the Houses of the ministers and supporters of this iniquitous law, are guarded by strong detachments of infantry, while the streets are patrolled by the cavalry in such strong force that a renewal of the riots is almost impossible. So we find the disturbances conclude on the 9th with the few cases of window-breaking. The loyal inhabitants of the middle class pluck up courage, and in response to an appeal from Lord Sidmouth are sworn in in large numbers as special constables. The Corn Bill passes, and the people are forced to suffer in silence. But these riots were significant of the troubles that were to come.

D. J. NICOLL.

(To be continued.)

METROPOLITAN PAUPERISM.—Census of metropolitan paupers (exclusive of lunatics in asylums and vagrants), taken on the last day of the weeks named hereunder (enumerated inhabitants in 1881, 3,815,000). First week of April, 1889, indoor, 59,201; outdoor, 38,231—total, 97,432; first week of April, 1888, indoor, 59,871; outdoor, 49,264—total, 109,135; first week of April, 1887, indoor, 57,565; outdoor, 42,162—total, 99,727; first week of April, 1886, indoor, 55,790; outdoor, 42,125—total, 97,915 (excluding patients in the fever and small-pox hospitals of the Metropolitan Asylum District; the number of these patients on the last day of the week was returned as 623 in 1889, 1,284 in 1888, 456 in 1887, and 235 in 1886). Vagrants relieved in the metropolis on the last day of the first week of April, 1889: Men, 759; women, 137; children under sixteen, 18—total, 914.

"We are all Socialists now, as Sir William Harcourt said, and the last to join the distinguished band is none other than Mr. Goschen, the Immaculate. Mr. Goschen among the Socialists is indeed a case of Saul among the prophets. But what more Socialistic suggestion could we have than his proposal that all fortunes above £10,000 should pay a special extra duty of 1 per cent. on passing into the hands of the heirs? This 1 per cent. on large fortunes left at death differs in no whit in principle from that of a graduated income-tax. Mr. Goschen is one among the many who have greased the slide down which we are plunging into Socialism." So says the Pall Mall. It would be easy indeed to find a "more Socialistic suggestion," and it may be doubted whether we are plunging "down" into Socialism, but both proposal and comment may serve as straws to show which way the current sets.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

"Look at the big stores of the city. What do we find? Activity? Not much. Huge stacks of goods are covered. Every warehouse in the city is packed to overflowing, and safety deposit vaults are actually utilised for storing goods, which under ordinary circumstances would be put in common storehouses."

"We are in a disturbed condition of affairs. We are unsettled from cellar to ridge-pole. The clenched hand of poverty is raised against the fist of wealth. Class feeling is generated. Our writers and our orators speak about the labouring class and the wealthy class, and the respectable class and the working class."

"The Garfield ghost still walks the land. Guiteau's curse still floats in the air. Mysteries and secrets are still among the unexplained."

Now it might be easily supposed that the foregoing sentences were written by some wild and fiery revolutionist; and yet such supposition would be essentially incorrect. They are not the product of a red-hot Anarchist's brain, but have been printed as editorial notes in the eminently respectable New York Press, the organ of trusts, syndicates, etc.—in fact, capitalism par excellence. Are we indeed nearing the crisis?

The Arizona Legislature passed some days ago a law which clearly shows the spirit in which capitalists would like to deal with their men. Here is the text of the law:

"Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Arizona:—

"Sec. 1.—If any person or persons shall wilfully and maliciously make any assault upon any railroad train, railroad cars, or railroad locomotive, within this Territory, for the purpose and with the intent to commit murder, robbery, or any other felony upon or against any passenger upon said train or cars, or upon or against any engineer, conductor, fireman, brakeman, or any officer or employe connected with the said locomotive, train, or cars, or upon or against any express messenger or mail agent on said train, or in any of the cars thereof, on conviction thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall suffer the punishment of death.

"Sec. 2.—Any and all persons who shall counsel, aid, abet, and assist in the perpetration of any or all of the offences set forth in the preceding section, on conviction thereof shall be deemed to be principals and shall suffer the punishment therein prescribed.

"Sec. 3.—Upon the trial of any and of all persons charged with the violation of this Act, it shall not be necessary to prove, nor shall it be deemed material to a conviction, that the defendant or defendants specifically intended to commit the offences, or any of them herein set forth, upon or against any particular person, but it shall be sufficient if it is proven to the satisfaction of the Court and jury trying the cause, as the result of such unlawful assault, some person or persons were killed, robbed, or injured, as the case may be, or that such assault was perpetrated with the design to commit some felony."

Referring to this "humane and pre-eminently American statute," the New York Herald suggests the following appropriate suppositions:

"Suppose that the employes of the Southern Pacific Railroad were on strike; suppose that an excitable striker should jump on an engine and commit 'any other felony' upon the person of the man who took his place; that act would be punishable by death. And what is to prevent the railroad companies, which seem to own the Territory, from having laws passed making interferences of any kind by strikers felonious?"

The Eastern Railroad magnates surely will regret that the east has become too effete for such laws to be passed in eastern legislatures. However, these gentry generally know "how to get there all the same."

The State of Maine has got a new tramp law, and a very atrocious piece of legislation it is indeed. Even more atrocious, if such is possible, than the law just described of Arizona. The law came into effect on the first of this month, and the very first case which came under its jurisdiction is a splendid illustration of its inhumanity. The law stipulates that "all who ask for food, lodging, or charity in any form are deemed tramps, and must be sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour." This applies whether the poor person asks for private or for public charity. Some days ago, at Lewiston, Me., a man applied at the police station for a night's lodging. He explained that he had been working in the State, but having no money and being without work, he was walking back to his home in Massachusetts. The man, who was proved to be a genuine worker, was at once arrested and sentenced to sixty days' imprisonment with hard labour. Even the newspapers are kicking against this law, and the pity is that it may be abolished: it was too good an illustration of Yankee "humanity and Christianity."

If tramps are treated like this the abominable treatment of prisoners can cause small wonder. During last year about 12,000 men and women were sent to the Deer Island penitentiary, near Boston, to undergo their various "punishments." In the coldest days of the winter, these unfortunates were not provided with more clothes to wear than in the hottest days of the summer. It must be added that the island is situated in a position where climatic changes are quickly felt, and the wind coming over the sea is cutting in the extreme. On the whole, I believe cannibals are standing on a higher human plane than Yankee society is.

Bad news comes from the city of Chicago. Comrades will remember that the Chicago Arbeiter-Zeitung, the Vorbote, and the Fackel used to be under the editorship of Spies, the organs of the International Working-men's Association. Spies' very unfortunate tactics, which he pursued during his incarceration, to quasi-endorse "electioneering propaganda" has in the meantime produced bitter fruits. The papers got, after the 11th of November, 1887, into the hands of a gang who had for nothing in the world so much interest as for money-making. The principles which were believed in by "our five" were openly ridiculed in the columns of their late organs. To the money-grubbing policy on the part of the stockholders of the Arbeiter-Zeitung may also be attributed the suspension of the Chicago Alarm and the Chicago Labour Enquirer. And now it appears that the worst possible act has been added to the previous offences. Naturally, electioneering is at the bottom. Carter Harrison declined the Democratic nomination for mayor, and in his place a local Chicago politician called Cregier was nominated. The "Labour Parties" also put up a ticket for the municipal offices, which displeased the Socialistic Labour Party, and in the last hour this latter party resolved to participate in the coming election independent of any other party by putting up a ticket of their own. The Chicago Arbeiter-Zeitung attacked the Socialistic ticket as well as that of the "Labour Parties," and supported Mayor Roche for re-election. Mayor Roche and his party are the men on whose hands the blood of our martyrs has not dried as yet. The ostensible reason the paper gave for its course is, that Roche promised to do all in his power to have our comrades in Joliet released, and that Roche was the man who suspended Bonfield. The real reason, more than probably, is that the managers and the editor—one Jens. L. Christensen—of the paper have accepted boodle from the Republican party. Faugh! The Democratic ticket (Harrison's crew) got elected.

The following telegram is at present making the round of the capitalist press. The telegram speaks for itself:—

"Mine Inspector Blewitt, of the First Anthracite district, comprising the Lackawanna Valley, near Scranton, Pa., has just completed his annual report of deaths and accidents for the past year, and it furnishes an interesting chapter in the cost of coal mining. The companies operating in the district are the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, the Delaware and Hudson, the Pennsylvania Coal Company, the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, William Connell and Co., the Hillside Coal and Iron Company, and several smaller concerns.

"There are employed at this black industry of mining anthracite in the First district 23,481 persons, and these mined nearly 10,000,000 of the 34,000,000 tons that were shipped from Pennsylvania last year. They worked 233 days of the 365, and one person was killed for every 133,539 tons of the output. During the past year 74 persons were killed in the First district at the work of mining, which shows what a perilous avocation is that of the miner, even under the most favourable circumstances. This is an item in the price of coal that is rarely ever taken into account when the coal barons figure out their balance sheets, but it is none the less a grim feature of the great industry at which men are so poorly paid as at present. As most of the men that are killed leave widows and large families the black agony of the anthracite industry can be readily imagined.

"Mine Inspector Blewitt reports that in his district 307,781 kegs of powder were used in the work of mining during the year. As the market price of the powder is only 1 dol. 50 cents., and the companies compel their miners to pay 3 dols. per keg for it, the amount realised by the corporations of this district on powder alone during the year is nearly half a million dollars. The miners are worked up considerably over this powder question, which they are agitating quite vigorously. The companies claim that the price, 3 dols. per keg, was fixed upon during the war, when powder was much dearer than it is now, and that that was to be the basis for the regulation of wages. They hold that to reduce it now would be equal to advancing the pay of the miners, and the iniquity is so ancient that they actually regard it as an outrage that the press should call attention to a wrong that is so firmly fixed by usage.

"The men, on the other hand, deny the right of the companies to charge war prices for powder in these piping times of peace, and they hold that if they cannot sell cheaper they should not prevent their workmen from purchasing their powder where they could buy to the best advantage. As matters now stand the miners seem to have the best of the argument and the companies the best of the situation. Several important meetings will be held throughout the valley to discuss this and other labour questions during the next few days."

Boston, Mass., April 8, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING MAY 4, 1889.

28	Sun.	1513. 'Prentices' riots in London. 1789. Mutiny of the Bounty . 1789. Rising of Saint Antoine and sacking of Réveillon's paper warehouse. 1820. Fight at Oldham between Radicals and soldiers.
29	Mon.	1763. Wilkes committed to the Tower. 1828. Test Act repealed. 1839. Chartist riot at Llanidloes. 1871. The Freemasons plant their banners on the ramparts of Paris. 1882. Infernal machines "found" in the New York post-office. 1887. Belfast shipbuilders' strike.
30	Tues.	1849. French attack on Rome repelled by Garibaldi. 1871. Communist rising at Lyons. 1872. Genton shot as a Communist.
1	Wed.	1820. Hanging of the Cato Street conspirators—Ings, Brunt, Davidson, Tidd, and Thistlewood. 1825. Constitution of New Harmony adopted. 1834. Third series of Wooler's Black Dwarf (8vo, monthly, 3d.) begins. 1861. Anton Petroff, spokesman of the rebel peasants, hanged at Bezdna, Kazan Government, Russia. 1866. Fenian schooner Friend takes and scuttles British schooner Wentworth near Eastport, U.S. 1886. First weekly number of Commonweal .
2	Thur.	1792. Ankarström executed for killing Gustavus III. of Sweden. 1818. Karl Marx born. 1842. Monster Chartist petition presented to the House of Commons by T. S. Duncombe. 1878. Great strike of cotton-spinners and riots at Burnley. 1879. Dubrovin hanged for armed resistance to arrest, St. Petersburg. 1882. Parnell, Dillon, and O'Kelly released from Kilmainham.
3	Fri.	1748. Abbé Sieyès born. 1782. House of Commons expunges resolutions against Wilkes. 1788. All-night session of French Parlement to consider scheme of "Plenary Court." 1791. Revolution in Poland. 1799. Trial of Benjamin Flower, printer of the Cambridge Intelligencer , before the House of Lords for libel and breach of privilege in an article upon the Bishop of Llandaff as an opponent of reform. 1823. First meeting, at Morrison's Hotel, Dublin, of the Hibernian Philanthropic Society, formed in consequence of Robert Owen's lectures. 1845. Tom Hood died—"He sang the Song of the Shirt." 1886. Murder of strikers by police in Chicago.
4	Sat.	1788. Arrest of D'Espréménil and Goeslard de Monsabert, and "exile" of Parlement. 1789. Assembling of States-General at Versailles. 1848. Insurrection at Munich. 1886. Hay-market meeting, Chicago.

JOHN BALL.—"Mad," as the landowners called him, it was in the preaching of John Ball that England first listened to a declaration of natural equality and the rights of man. "Good people," cried the preacher, "things will never go well in England so long as goods be not in coramon, and so long as there be villeins and gentlemen. By what right are they whom we call lords greater folk than we? On what grounds have they deserved it? Why do they hold us in serfage? If we all came of the same father and mother, of Adam and Eve, how can they say or prove that they are better than we, if it be not that they make us gain for them by our toil what they spend in their pride? They are clothed in velvet, and warm in their furs and their ermines, while we are covered with rags. They have wine and spices and fair bread; and we, oatake and straw, and water to drink. They have leisure and fine houses; we have pain and labour, the rain and the winds in the fields. And yet it is of us and of our toil that these men hold their state." It was the tyranny of property that then as ever roused the defiance of Socialism.—Green's 'Short History.'

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEARD IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors.

Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

RECEIVED:—Will be used—John Greenwood; Edward Carpenter. Under consideration—G. S.; J. M. (Manchester); J. B. (Walworth). Unsuitable for various reasons—G. H. B. (Manchester); S. H. C. (Cleckheaton); T. M. (Paddington); R. H. C. (Dulwich).

REPORTS.—Some reports again received too late, and are crowded out.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	MORRIS & SPARLING 129
The English Revolutionary Movement, 1815 to 1817: Spa-Fields Riots and Derbyshire Insurrection	D. J. NICOLL 129
Metropolitan Pauperism	130
In the United States	H. F. CHARLES 131
Revolutionary Calendar	131
A Tramp's Diary	RAYMOND UNWIN 132
Hymn for a Birthday	SPARTACUS (W. J. Linton) in "Chartist Circular" 133
A Study of Social Evolution	133
International Notes	VICTOR DAVE 133
The Parnell Movement	SPARLING 133
The Labour Struggle	134
Rich and Poor in '89	GEORGE McLEAN 134
Boldly Break the Chain	C. W. BECKETT 135
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	135
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	136

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday April 24.

ENGLAND	FRANCE	SPAIN
Diplomatic Flysheets	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Madrid—El Socialista
Justice	Newark—Arbeiter-Zeitung	Seville—La Solidaridad
Labour Elector	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung	Barcelona—El Productor
Labour Tribune	S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal	PORTUGAL
London—Freie Presse	St. Louis (Mo.)—Die Parole	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
Norwich—Daylight	FRANCE	O Rebelde
Postal Service Gazette	Paris—L'Egalite (daily)	GERMANY
Railway Review	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	Berlin—Volks Tribune
Social Demokrat	Le Proletariat	Wien—Gleichheit
Worker's Friend	La Revolve	DENMARK
UNITED STATES	La Revue Socialiste	Social-Demokraten
New York—Der Sozialist	HOLLAND	Copenhagen—Arbejderen
Truthseeker	Hague—Recht voor Allen	SWEDEN
Volkszeitung	BELGIUM	Stockholm, Social-Demokraten
Jewish Volkszeitung	Ghent—Voorruit	Malmö—Arbetet
Workmen's Advocate	ITALY	WEST INDIES
Boston—Woman's Journal	Milan—Il Fascio Operaio	Cuba—El Productor
Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	Arcona—Il Libero Patto
Fort Worth (Tex)—South West

A TRAMP'S DIARY.

THE following cutting from the Pall Mall Gazette of March the 16th, affords a very good instance of how we manufacture criminals under the present system, absolutely compel them to steal by a force more irresistible than the scourge or the sword:—

"In the pocket of a man convicted of larceny in the Tyneside Police-court, a diary has been discovered which contains a minute record of the owner's experiences. After describing how on one night he slept on the sands, and on another contrived to hide and find a night's lodging in a pew in church, the diarist notes day by day his attempts to get casual employment, with varying success, at the docks and elsewhere. On one occasion he appears to have had the good fortune to be engaged by some engineers aboard ship for several days, for which he received 15s. With part of this he purchased a cap, a scarf, and a pair of shoes at a cobbler's. The diarist then continues as follows:

Tuesday, 7 a.m., off to the docks once more; if I could only get another berth like that, but I don't; spend 10d. for grub, and 9d. for bed.

Wednesday, same old round, and nothing to do; spend 8d. on tuck, and 9d. for bed.

Thursday, do., do., etc.; expended 1s. 5d.

Friday, do., do.; 1s. 5d.

Saturday, things look blue; 1s.

Sunday, bed till 12 a.m., got nothing to eat. Bible class at 2.30; church at 6.30; bed at 9.30; beastly hungry; what a lot of money beds cost—my last 9d.—left with a halfpenny.

Monday, 6 a.m., halfpenny pot of coffee, and off to the docks; I feel famishing; get some ship biscuit on board one of the boats, and that's all for two days; walk about all night.

Tuesday, 8 a.m., chop sticks for a woman until 12, and get 3d. for it—mean old screw—bought some breakfast: no more till 8 p.m.; carry a portmanteau, and get a bob; trust the men; clover that night.

Wednesday, 7 a.m., went to the dock hopeless; to — station, carried two loads, 1s. 6d.; grub 8d.; bed 9d.

Thursday, 6 a.m., up to dock; no work; got a meal on board one of the boats at 9 o'clock; got some biscuits at 3 o'clock; no more grub; no more work; no bed to night; no breakfast in the morning. . . . I'm dreading Sunday.

Friday, 2.30 a.m., crossed in the ferry, and knocked about the quay till seven o'clock; then went into the S. H. office; then up to — dock; just as bad here, not even a biscuit to be had. I suppose if they knew how bad I wanted it they might give me one, but they don't; think they can't surely know, or they would not refuse me. How shall I get this week-end over? I'll not go to the workhouse, if I starve in the street, and I don't know of a single friend to turn to. I wish to God I was dead, and it was all finished with me. I'm sick of the fight. Honesty, charity, love of fellowmen! Why don't they preach a substantial bodily sermon to poor devils like us; and I suppose I'll have to go and put in another Sunday in church for the sake of a seat, and to get warm. I feel as if I could bite the throat out of some of the fat, greasy, self-satisfied-looking brutes, as they loll in and out of church. Last Sunday, when they went sailing past me, and I thought of all the good things they would have, I hated them, every one. Surely some of them might have seen how hungry I was. I felt faint and sick enough, if I didn't look it. Perhaps I glowered over hard at them when they did look. However, I got over it, and I suppose I'll get over this; doesn't much matter if I don't, nobody seems to care much what I do or where I go. If I only had my life over again from the time father died, how differently I would have done, for only one of my lost chances, my wasted opportunities. But what's the use? I guess I'll have to drive through this and worse before I'm out of the rotten hole—"

Let any one in imagination go through the eleven days as this poor fellow describes them; let him see the result of his bit of good fortune growing less and less each day, as he trudges about vainly seeking work, until at length it is all gone and he has to walk the street all night unable to get a bed or a bite of food; let any one imagine the suffering that he must have undergone, weary, hungry, and, worse than all, hopeless! What a wretched dreary world it must have looked to him! What beastly selfish fiends the well-fed people must have seemed as they passed by, leaving him ten times more lonely and wretched for their very presence. Let any one if he can realise the utter dreariness of such a life, the hunger, weariness, and sickening despair, and then let him remember that every day there are thousands and tens of thousands of men going through that misery. At every dock gate in the country you may see them; at almost every ironworks, factory, or anywhere that there seems the faintest chance of getting a bit of work. The other day as I looked out of my office window into the yard of a large ironworks, I saw a man standing; his face attracted my attention, there was such a look of anxiety on it, a nervous impatience to know the result of the interview he hoped to get with the manager of the yard, and withal a look of dread lest it should only be another disappointment. Presently the manager comes along; I watch the man as he steps up to meet him, for a moment a ray of hope beams in his face as with beating heart he begins to stammer out, "Please, sir, could you find me—" "Don't want any one to-day," and the manager is gone. But that man's face! I have more than once wished that would go from my memory! He stood for a moment, and as that ray of hope died from his face there settled on it such a look of utter misery and despair as I hope it may not often fall to my lot to see again.

We Socialists are sometimes accused of looking only on the evil side of life, and disregarding all the good that lies about us. Well, there may be much good in the world, many good people in all classes, and many happy ones, but while it is even possible for such misery as I have described to be the lot of tens of thousands of our fellow countrymen, I cannot see how any person with the least feeling and imagination can enjoy the good as it should be enjoyed; and when such misery is not only possible but is made inevitable by our present system of industry, surely there can be happiness for no one with any sympathy for their fellow men till the system is entirely swept away and something more human put in its place.

Brotherhood, too, we are told, is not to be brought about by a change in conditions, an equalisation of wealth, but only by a change in the heart of the individual. Perhaps if some who think thus should read this tramp's thoughts as he sat in church and watched his well-fed "brethren" filing past, they may be constrained to admit at least that such conditions are hardly conducive to true brotherly feeling, and that some very considerable modification in these conditions might make such feeling very much more possible than at present.

But what is this at the end? "Lost chances," "wasted opportunities." "Ah!" says our friend triumphantly, "you see it was his own fault, not Society's at all!" And as he speaks I seem to remember hearing something about "raising up them that are fallen," "bearing one another's burdens," "breaking bruised reeds," and it seems to me that the religion which our friend so ardently supports used to teach something rather different. But of course I must be mistaken, for evidently now if a man has missed a chance, or a few chances may be, of getting himself on in the world, he has committed the "unpardonable sin" for which no punishment can be too severe, and if when he tries to earn honestly his daily bread Society denies him the chance and leaves him to starve, it is enough to point to one or two such lost opportunities for "getting on." There is an end to any sympathy there might have been; "serve him right" is the verdict, and the self-constituted judge in declaring it, animadverts on the splendid system which thus so surely punishes all those who commit the unpardonable sin of not getting on. RAYMOND UNWIN.

What do we live for, if it is not to make life less difficult to each other? —George Elliot.

HYMN FOR A BIRTHDAY.

WEEP, mother! that thy child is born—
To stunted youth, to manhood worn
In thankless service, to a home
Of snaky woes, a poor-house tomb.
Weep, Mother England!—Every morn
Thou hast a thousand born!

Weep, Mother!—With thy children's bread
The Hounds of Wealth are over-fed;
Toil is harvesting despair;
Lone and loveless sittest thou where
Famine smiles:—Lo! every morn
Thy thousand victims born!

Factor's child! who teacheth thee?
Factor's mistress—Misery.
Teacheth what? How sweetly fair
Is the spring-time of Despair;
How Christ loved ye.—Every morn
Redeem the thousand born.

Youth! what lovest thou? Thy blood
Crawleth still within its mud.
Lovest thou yon squalid thing?
Wherefore are ye marrying?
Is't not enough, that every morn
A thousand slaves are born?

Moan! moan! thou pallid Sepulchre—
Brooding o'er thy nurslings dear:
Queen and Mother! greyly bowed
O'er thy hopes' grave—and the shroud
That doth lap thee:—Every morn
The tenfold hecatomb is born.

The very worm o' the grave can feel;
And the snake-like wound the heel
Of the Oppressor: though men be
Worms, the corpse is Tyranny.
Hope, mighty Mother!—Every morn
A thousand men are born!

SPARTACUS (W. J. Linton) in Chartist Circular.

A STUDY OF SOCIAL EVOLUTION.

OUR comrade Peter Kropotkin will give a series of lectures at the Kensington Town Hall on the following Tuesdays:—May 28th, June 4th, 11th, 18th, 25th, and July 2nd, at 5 p.m. Admission by ticket, for the course of six, 21s., 10s. 6d., and 5s.; for single lectures, 5s., 2s. 6d., and 1s. The following is a syllabus of the lectures:—

I.—The Problems of our Century.—The intellectual movement of our century—Economic, political, and moral problems raised—No satisfactory answer found—Dualism in morality—Want of inspiration in philosophy, literature, and art which results from it—Issues searched for—Socialism and its aspirations.

II.—The origins of our present economical and political organisation.—The primitive Saxon, Celtic, and Slavonian communities—The Communes of the mediæval times—Their interior organisation—Their federations—Monuments left—Internal causes of decay.

III.—The origins of our present economical and political organisation (continued).—The growth of modern States—Europe threatened by invasions—The absorption of the Communes by the State—The centralised State—The Colonies and the growth of Industry—Its economical consequences—The growth of representative Government.

IV.—Philosophical Systems and popular movements aiming at the reconstruction of Society.—The popular ideal as it appears in the mediæval times—Internal struggles within the Communes—The risings of the peasants—The religious and economical movements of the Reformation—The Anabaptists—The philosophical and economical aspects of the Revolution in England.

V.—Philosophical Systems and popular movements aiming at the reconstruction of Society (continued).—The philosophical systems of the eighteenth century—The risings of the people and the French Revolution—The Communists of the nineteenth century—The national workshops of 1848 and the impossibility of organising labour by means of a Government—Birth of modern Socialism.

VI.—Modern Socialism.—Its various schools—Collectivism—Anarchy: its system of philosophy—Freedom of the individual and his need of association as the basis of future progress—Moralising influence of Socialism—Dualism in morality cast away—A glimpse into the future—Economic production, Science, and Art in a free Communist Society.

Tickets may be obtained from the Secretary of the League at office of this paper.

The laws govern the poor, and the rich govern the laws.—Goldsmith.

Alas! cried Muhammad al Emin, royalty hath neither kindred nor bowels of compassion.

Verily, the Prophet (Mahomet) said, "One dirhem of usury which a man eats, knowing it to be so, is more grievous than thirty-six fornications; and whoever has been so nourished is worthy of hell-fire."

If you allow your people to be badly taught, their morals to be corrupted from childhood, and then when they are men punish them for the very crimes to which they have been trained in childhood—what is this but to make thieves and then to punish them?—More's 'Utopia.'

The rich are for ever striving to bear away something further from the daily wages of the poor by private fraud and even by public law, so that the wrong already existing (for it is a wrong that those from whom the State derives most benefit should receive least reward) is made yet greater by means of the law of the State.—More's 'Utopia.'

The rich devise every means by which they may in the first place secure to themselves what they have amassed by wrong, and then take to their own use and profit, at the lowest possible price, the work and labour of the poor. And as soon as the rich decide on adopting these devices in the name of the public, then they become law.—More's 'Utopia.'

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

GERMANY.

In a former issue of this paper we announced that one hundred Socialists were about to be tried for secret conspiracy, and kindred damnable crimes, at Barmen-Elberfeld. Now we hear that twenty-eight more "criminals" have been added to the list, and some fifty witnesses too. Nearly every street in Barmen-Elberfeld is represented by one "conspirator," or at least by one or two witnesses. The immediate neighbourhood of the town has a respectable contingent of "plotters"; then come Solingen and Lennep-Mettmann, which are fairly represented. Düsseldorf, Aix-la-Chapelle and Cöln hold up their old reputation of "revolutionary nests"; Cassel has not been forgotten, and Francfort-on-the-Main has "defiers of the law" by the score. The Grand Duchy of Hesse-Darmstadt has not been spared, nor has the Grand Duchy of Baden, Karlsruhe having given to the forthcoming trial several of its best Socialists. Munich and Nürnberg will represent Bavaria, through comrades Viereck and Grillenberger. Saxony, a centre of Socialist ideas, will of course have a strong deputation of "the most wicked criminals." Königsberg, Iserlahm, Lüdenschied, Hagen, Bochum, and several other towns, are also doomed. The indictment, a terrible piece of magisterial literature, has tales to tell about Vienna, Paris, and London, the most abominable places in Europe. When this trial is over, Germany will be safe for ever and Socialism will exist no more. "Heil dir, ó Germania!"

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Last Thursday died at Pressburg a former adherent of Kossuth, in the person of Bishop Hyacinth Ronay, whose career, in spite of his clerical robes, was a very remarkable one among Hungarians of the period. As a young man, he joined the Hungarian revolutionary movement, and acted as commissioner of Revolutionary Government. On being driven into exile, he lived in London from 1849 till 1866, when the amnesty enabled him to return to his native country. He was at once elected member of the Hungarian Parliament, and on Count Andrassy's recommendation, was accepted by the Empress of Austria as her teacher in Hungarian. Bishop Ronay was afterwards approved by the Emperor as teacher of Hungarian history both to the Crown Prince (who since . . .) and to Princess Valérie. It was to Bishop Ronay that General Latour conveyed the Emperor's wishes, in the following words: "Give your lessons to the Crown Prince according to your own convictions. We want the truth, even the revolutionary truth!"

SWITZERLAND.

The official enquiry about the manufacture of bombs at Zürich has come to an end. Thirteen students, of Russian and Polish nationality, have been arrested. Four or five of these are likely to be set at liberty, because they have not been convicted of having actually taken any part in the "perpetration of that horrible crime." The others will be expelled from "free Helvetia." Much ado about nothing!

The Federal Council of the Swiss Republic has addressed to all the industrial States of Europe an invitation to send delegates to a conference which will be held at Berne during the month of September next, with a view of bringing about an international convention on the question of work in the factories. The following items are to be discussed: 1. Prohibition of Sunday work; 2. Fixing of minimum age for children's admission in factories; 3. Fixing of minimum of labour hours for young workers; 4. Prohibiting the employment of non-adult workers and women in unhealthy or dangerous factories; 5. Restriction of night work for non-adult workers and women; 6. Ways and means to ensure the execution of the resolutions come to.

SWEDEN.

Sweden is making headway in Socialism with very considerable success. Our friends there have four important papers, Socialist circles and groups, revolutionary trades' unions in all towns of some importance, in all industrial centres. Even among the peasantry Socialist ideas are spreading rapidly, much more so than in any other European country at the present time. The government begins to fear the growing movement; hence in Sweden, like elsewhere, they become maddened and institute prosecutions by the score.

Our friends, however, do not seem to be much frightened by the action of the authorities, and they have convened in Stockholm a Congress of all their Swedish supporters from far and near, which has been held from the 19th to the 22nd of the present month. More than sixty Socialist organisations were represented at the Congress, which has been a very important one. Next week we hope to be in a position to give some details about the proceedings.

V. D.

THE PARNELL MOVEMENT.¹

WHATEVER differing opinions may be held of Mr. O'Connor's personal merits, or of the policy he pursues and pleads for, there can be but one opinion of his book upon the recent history of Ireland. Even the Times has to admit that he "writes with extraordinary force, animation, and eloquence. He writes as an impassioned advocate, no doubt, but he is too good an advocate to write with gratuitous or conscious unfairness. . . We have read nothing on that important subject more lucid, more dramatic, or more fascinating." That is exceedingly high praise, but it is difficult to say that it is not justified by the facts. In those parts of the book where it comes into comparison with the work of John Mitchell or Gavan Duffy, there is no doubt that it suffers by the contrast, but the application of such a test would be distinctly unfair and misleading. It is not Mr. O'Connor's fault that his pages tell much more than he means, and that the facts he marshals with such care and skill lead on to much further conclusions than he would be willing to admit. He has done his part of the work well, and it is to be hoped that the public will do theirs by reading every line of it, not resting content with his deductions, though accepting them for the most part as far as they go, but forming their own, and if these be not near akin to those of Socialists it will not be for lack of a vivid exposition of the grotesque horrors wrought by monopoly either of land or capital.

The taking of interest has seventy parts of guilt, the least of which is as if a man commit incest.—Mahomet.

¹ "The Parnell Movement." By T. P. O'CONNOR, M.P. Commission edition. Fisher Unwin, 1s.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

Platelayers on the Caledonian Railway get 17s. a week where a few years ago they got 21s.

Two Somerset miners who were working together at one of the pits for 60 hours each, received 14s. each at the end of it. Another got about 1s. 10½d. a day on an average, and such cases or worse are said not to be uncommon.

BELFAST PAINTERS' STRIKE.—About sixty painters have struck on the Queen's Island Shipbuilding Works, Belfast. These men, during the recent disputes, received an increase of 1s. per week, with an intimation of a further increase. Not getting this, they have gone out.

MINERS' WAGES.—At a numerously attended meeting of colliery proprietors, held at Manchester, to consider the application of the miners for an increase of wages, it was unanimously resolved to refuse an advance, on the ground that it was not warranted by the state of trade.

NORTH WALES COLLIERS.—All the miners employed at Gatewen Colliery, Wrexham, numbering about 500, on Thursday 18th, sent in a demand for an advance of 10 per cent. This step is certain to be followed by all the North Wales colliers very shortly, and will cause considerable agitation.

SMALL-CHAIN TRADE.—The notice given to the employers by the operatives in the South Staffordshire small-chain trade expired on Saturday. The masters have conceded no advance, and the operatives have decided to cease work until all the employers consent to pay the 4s. list issued in January 1887. About 2,000 men are concerned.

WROUGHT NAIL TRADE.—The fourteen days' notice for an advance in the wrought nail trade expired on Saturday, but in order to avert a strike the Executive Committee have decided to allow the notice to terminate a fortnight after the 20th inst. In the meantime deputations will wait upon the employers and urge them to concede the advance.

BANBRIDGE SPINNERS' STRIKE.—The machine boys and girls in the employment of Hayes and Co., Seapatrick, Banbridge, Ireland, thread-spinners, have struck for an advance of 3d. a-day. For some time past disaffection prevailed owing to the neighbouring mills at Belfast and Gilford advancing wages. There is no likelihood of a settlement unless an increase is agreed to. About 200 employes are out, and are determined to remain idle unless an increase is granted.

GAS-RIVET AND STUD AND PEG MAKERS.—The gas-rivet makers in Old Hill and Hales Owen districts have declined to strike for the list prices, and the operatives' efforts to improve their position have failed to a certain extent. In the course of a few weeks an effort will be made to obtain the full list. The majority of the employers have intimated their willingness to concede the 4s. list should trade continue to improve. A deputation of stud and peg makers have waited upon the employers, and the whole of the latter, it is stated, have agreed to pay the list price of 1887, with the exception of one, and it is expected that he will be forced to give the price.

NORTH OF ENGLAND IRON TRADE.—Last week at a meeting held at Darlington, the Board of Conciliation and Arbitration resolved on the adoption of a sliding scale on the basis of 2s. (two shillings) above shillings for pounds, short weight. That such scale shall come into force on the 1st day of July, 1889, and continue until the last Saturday in July, 1891. The changes under the scale shall take place every two months, and the variations will be the same as under previous sliding-scales. The following were said to have been the various alterations made in wages since 1875 to the present time. This showed that there was paid for thirty-seven months, 6s. 9d.; twenty-eight and half months, 7s.; two-and-half months, 7s. 3d.; twenty months, 7s. 6d.; nine months, 7s. 9d.; six months, 8s.; one-and-half months, 8s. 6d.; two months, 8s. 9d.; forty-eight and-half months, 8s. 3d.; making an average for 155 months of 7s. 6½d.

AGITATION IN THE SALT TRADE.—The Chester correspondent of the Daily Telegraph states: "The newly-formed trades' unions among the saltworkers have decided to affiliate themselves into one society, having its headquarters at Winsford, Cheshire. For some years a Saltmakers' Society has been in existence in Cheshire, but it has rather been a relief society than a trades organisation. Now that the affiliation has been completed, on the advice of Mr. Broadhurst, M.P., the society constitutes 1,200 men at Winsford, 600 at Northwich, and 200 at Droitwich. Much enthusiasm prevails at Winsford among the men, who are daily joining the society. Captain Turner, who represents Winsford in the Cheshire County Council, has been enrolled a member, and has promised to do whatever he can for the men. Dr. O'Kell, Winsford, has joined, and the secretary's books contain the names of many Winsford tradesmen, who express themselves determined to see fair play between the men and the great organisation which employs them. The Salt Union has taken over 4,000 men from the old works. A great many changes, introduced with a view to more economical working, have given great anxiety to the men. At the Jubilee Works, as already announced, the workmen have gone out on strike. The dispute has assumed a very threatening aspect all round. Indeed, great tact will have to be exercised to avert a general strike."

CARPENTERS AND JOINERS.—The recently issued report of the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners is decidedly interesting, and well shows what the work is that a "well-managed" trades union does and is capable of doing. The society has over 25,000 members, and the net income for the past year was £76,468 14s. 5½d., an increase of £8,649 2s. 9½d. on the previous year, and after meeting all demands the year closes with a cash balance of £37,896 1s. 11d., which added to the building and other property of the society, brings up the total worth of the society to £44,235 19s. 7d., or £1 15s. 3½d. per member. To show what has been done by means of this income here are a few items. In the maintenance of unemployed members £30,105 12s. 7½d. has been spent. For sick benefit £16,895 has been spent, and £4,519 3s. 6d. for superannuation; £1,600 14s. for tool benefit, that is to say, for replacing lost, stolen, or destroyed tools; £1,150 for accident benefit; £3,211 18s. for funeral benefit; and £206 3s. 5½d. in paying the railway fares of workmen taking work at a distance from their own homes. One or two trade disputes have had to be fought, but the sum expended upon them was a comparative trifle, which almost escapes notice among the big figures just quoted. Nothing more is needed than a careful glance through this report to show how true our contention is as to the ordinary trade unions, that they are simply the medium through which their members pay their own poor-rates after having paid their employers. Not a solitary item shows an effort to propagate their principles or support a labour paper. Ye fools and blind!

RICH AND POOR IN '69.

Condensed from the British and Foreign Evangelical Review for July 1869: Article III—"The Late Commercial Crisis," by J. R. M.

DIRGES, with more of execration for their misdeeds than commiseration for their fate, have been howled over the fallen, while no end of peans are being sung in honour of those who have survived the general disaster, and that are thriving on other people's ruin, as if it were all owing to their wisdom and discretion, or as if they alone knew how "to make the best of both worlds." For ourselves, we have not aptitude for reviling misfortune or worshipping success. Our main, if not our only object, however, is to see how far the times, or the spirit of the age, as it is called, has been responsible for those usages and excesses from which we are suffering, and to suggest changes that must shortly come to pass, if the prosperity and happiness of the masses are consulted. And certainly, if anything should give weight to what we say, it is the vantage-ground from which we speak, with so many instances fresh in our minds, of honest industry coming to grief, of men who were held in high estimation being openly branded as traitors, of honest men losing all confidence in themselves, as well as in each other, and men actually coveting each other's downfall to keep themselves in countenance, as well as glad of any pretext for saddling their neighbour with a portion of their losses. Such, in brief, is a true picture of our late experience. It has been said, that while faith is the condition of spiritual health and prosperity, the contrary holds true in worldly matters. If we were all solitary units, self derived, self sufficing, and having within ourselves all the means of happiness, it might indeed have a show of wisdom; but we are differently constituted, owing our very existence to each other, and so dependent on each other for succour and happiness, that he commits an act of bankruptcy, in the worst sense of the word, who says "Am I my brother's keeper?" It is not well that man be alone, neither is it that he should be so far above his fellows as to be either difficult of access or unapproachable. We have made gods of some men, and less than men of others, of which our late experience has been only the nemesis. There is no better way of judging of the moral state of a people than by comparing the character of those now rolling in wealth with that of those moderately well-to-do or reduced to poverty. Tried by this test, no country ever had greater reason to be ashamed. We never had richer men amongst us, or a greater number, and our rich men never had a worse character, so greedy, grasping, and cold-hearted, unscrupulous up to the full measure of their impunity—or that tampered more with the letter of the law, trusting to the ingenuity of lawyers, or a long purse, to bring them through, and availing themselves of every resource in the way of social intimidation and coercion. Speaking of our modern plutocracy as a class, they are base, bloody, brutal—bearing on their shoulders heavier load of guilt than those who have been convicted of crime. If a city arab steal a pocket-handkerchief, he is seized and carried off to the Mansion House, and in ten minutes may be ordered to Bridewell, while the plaintiff in lavender gloves, possibly one of the class referred to, is complimented by the sitting alderman on having abated a nuisance, and he goes home to his dinner, glorifying himself on having taught one ugly urchin at least a moral lesson. But how stands the case with this poor boy? He was brought into this world without his consent; he probably never saw his father, and it had been better he had never known his mother. Yet here he is with an existence thrust upon him, at war with society from the hour of his birth, shunted out of sight for taking the only means before him of keeping body and soul together; and yet the arab may be the better man of the two. Where little is given, little should be expected; and the city arab is not unworthy of regard if he is guilty of no crime but such as is instigated by the cravings of hunger. Instead of resorting to clumsy and dangerous methods of possessing himself of other people's property, the brigand at heart can attain his ends in a more legal and gentlemanly fashion. Instead of being sometimes dragged before a magistrate, he may even himself aspire to a seat on the bench. Fraudulent bankrupts, pawnbrokers, sweaters, and all the brigands who have succeeded in acquiring other people's property and in evading the law, can easily, in the present society, cover up their tracks, as the Yankees say, and secure admission in society by buying an estate in the country, presenting a memorial window or altar-piece to the parish church, and buying a living for their son. Then there is no saying what the latter, whose position is based on the robbery of the poor, may become. Having the full odour of sanctity as well as gentility, he makes a hit in marriage, believes in apostolical succession, becomes a Ritualist of the first water, and to crown all, finds out he is the promising scion of an old family, that came over with William the Conqueror. But without further illustrations of the way in which millionaires are manufactured, we have said enough to show that money-making is easy enough, if a man will but devote himself, soul and body, to so unworthy an end; and the danger we are in, notwithstanding household suffrage, is that of being overborne by a low-minded, heartless plutocracy. While others can scarcely get the slightest recognition for whatever merits they possess, the man with the long purse is assumed to be everything he can or ought to be. There is scarcely a virtue of which he may not be wanting, or a vice he may not indulge in with the most perfect toleration. It were a miracle if he scrupled to work on men's fears, whenever it answers his purpose. If he wishes a seat in Parliament, he is inundated with requisitions and smothered with votes of confidence; and, getting in on his own terms, he does as he likes in the House. Yet, it may be, he has not an atom of dignity in his person or bearing, and that he is as little able to talk sense, sentiment, or grammar as he is endowed with principle, patriotism, or taste. His only object in going to the House is to improve his social position, get a baronetcy, be made "right honourable," or obtain a peerage; and to get any or all of these he will be as unscrupulous as he is either in the working of his capital or in the means he takes to increase it. How foolish it is to expect that such men can or will do anything for the benefit of the nation.

G. McL.

The future will place civilised societies in an inexorable dilemma: justice or death.—Charles Letourneau.

Be indifferent alike to pleasure and to pain; care only to do work, honest, successful work (no futilities), in this hurly-burly world.—Thomas Carlyle.

LABOUR EMANCIPATION LEAGUE—Sunday afternoon Outings.—The first of the series will take place on Sunday May 5th, to the Merton Socialist Club, and will consist of the members and friends of the Bethnal Green Branch of the S.D.F. and the L.E.L. (Hoxton). A demonstration will be held on Mitcham Fair Green at 7 p.m. Brakes will start from the L.E.L., 1 Hoxton Square, Hoxton, N., at 2 p.m. Tickets 1s. 3d. each, may be had of the members of the above organisations. Tickets must be paid for by Saturday 4th. H. A. Barker, Excur. Sec.

BOLDLY BREAK THE CHAIN.

Tune: "Who deeply drinks of wine."

WORKERS all, of every land,
Knit in one heroic band,
Lo, the hour is nigh at hand
To boldly break the chain.

Lift your noble battle-call,
ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL,
Cry, till quakes the prison wall,
Then boldly break the chain.
Workers all, of every land, etc.

Pope and Parliament and Czar,
Strive in vain your path to bar;
Brotherhood is stronger far,
And boldly breaks the chain.
Workers all, of every land, etc.

Crowns of glory for the brave,
Manhood for the meanest slave!
On, 'tis ours a world to save,
Who boldly break the chain.
Workers all, of every land, etc.

C. W. BECKETT.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, May 6, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.
FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

REPORTS.

LONDON OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.—Regent's Park—Nicoll, Parker, and Samuels spoke. Protest meetings against police brutality were held at Mile End Waste, Hyde Park, Victoria Park, and Clerkenwell Green on Sunday last. Mile End Waste—Brookes, Turner, Springfield (S.D.F.), Mrs. Lahr, Leggett, Hicks, and Phillips (Berner Street Club) spoke; 4s. 4d. collected. Hyde Park—Cantwell, Parker, Brookes, McCormick, Tochatti, Nicoll, Mainwaring, and Furlong (S.D.F.) spoke; a few of our songs were sung, and 5s. 0½d. collected. Clerkenwell Green—Parker, Nicoll, Somerville (F.R.C.), Murphy (I.N.L.), and Brookes spoke; 4s. 2½d. collected. At all these meetings the following resolution was put and carried unanimously:—"That this meeting, while expressing its deepest sympathy with our comrades of the Berner Street Educational Club who have been maltreated and victimised by the police, at the same time condemn the brutal and dastardly conduct of the force on this occasion, and also the law's delay in the hearing of the case, which has been the cause of depriving—at least for a time—some of our prosecuted and persecuted comrades of the means of earning their living."

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road on Sunday morning; speakers were Lynes, sen., Maughan, A. J. Smith, and Tochatti; 29 Commonweal sold. Owing to the noise of the trams and omnibuses passing along in front of our meeting at Kensal Green, the audience was not so good as we had expected; speakers were Dean, Crouch, and Lyne, jun.; 15 Commonweal sold. At Weltje Road 7 p.m., a fair meeting; speakers were Maughan, Crouch, Spry, and Saint; 8 Commonweal sold. At Kelmscott House, H. H. Sparling lectured on "The Commune of London."

MITCHAM.—A large meeting held on the Fair Green. Our opponent of Sunday week opposed on the same grounds as before, but with much more courtesy, leaving out the word quackery, etc., with which he interlarded his previous discourses, and acknowledging the existence of the evils we attack; 2s. 8½d. collected for local propaganda. In the evening at our meeting-room, a friend continued the reading from last Sunday of the speeches of the Chicago Anarchists. Several new members made, and good sale of Commonweal.—K. F.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on 15th, a paper by John Robertson on "Culture and Reaction," was read and discussed. At Castle Street on Saturday night, a large and sympathetic crowd was addressed by Duncan and Leatham.

EDINBURGH.—On 21st, comrade Power of London addressed two open-air meetings, getting 12 men to join at the Leith one. In the Moulders' Hall he graphically described East London life and made a stirring appeal to join the movement.

MANCHESTER.—We held two meetings on Sunday. In Stevenson Square, Ritson, Marshall, and Bailie spoke to attentive audience. At our new station, Chester Road, at 7.30, we began with fair audience; same speakers, no opposition. On Sunday May 5th there will be no meetings here, as the Branch will take part in great annual Socialist Demonstration at Blackstone Edge, near Rochdale.

NORWICH.—On Saturday Mowbray arrived from London, and spent enjoyable evening amongst old comrades. Sunday morning, good meeting in the Market Place; Darley and Mowbray spoke. In afternoon, large and attentive crowd assembled to welcome our comrade back; chair taken by Darley, who opened meeting, followed by Mowbray, who gave a "Straight Talk to Working Men." In evening, Poynts addressed good meeting in open-air, which adjourned to Gordon Hall, where Mowbray lectured upon "Socialism not akin to Radicalism"; chair occupied by Adams. Mowbray dealt with the fallacy of supporting Radical programmes, and pointed out the only means of gaining freedom for the workers—by Socialism. Discussion opened by Cooper, who favoured "constitutional means," such as eight-hour movement, etc.; he was followed by the chairman, Darley, Poynts, and Hardy, who supported the lecturer; Mowbray concluded by an able reply. Sale of Commonweal and Freedom, 6s. 5d.; collected for propaganda, £1 2s. Monday afternoon, successful meeting in Market Place, notwithstanding a counter demonstration by Salvation Army; Darley, Mowbray, and Poynts spoke upon the action of the police towards our comrades at the Berner Street Club; 3s. was collected towards the defence fund.

DUBLIN.—At the Progressist Club, 87 Marlboro Street, Saturday April 20th, A. Shields lectured on "How to Abolish Human Slavery." There was a good attendance, discussion being very lively—King, Coulon, Frizelle, Flunkett, and others doing good work.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (¼-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Committee meeting every Sunday at 7.30.

East London.—97 Boston Street, Hackney Road.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend.

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday April 28, at 8 p.m., A Lecture. Thursday May 2, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 3, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary. On Wednesday May 1, D. Nicoll will lecture—subject, "Law and Order."

PROVINCES.

Bradford.—Read's Coffee Tavern, Ivegate. Meets Tuesdays at 8.

Dublin.—Dublin Socialist Club, 16 Dawson Street.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Discussion Class on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets on Mondays at 8 p.m. Members wishing to join in our Saturday afternoon propaganda excursions are requested to assemble in Rooms on Saturdays at 4.30.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 8, lecture in the Gordon Hall. Monday, at 8.30, lecture by Mr. Roberts—subject, "Phrenology"; proceeds on behalf of Branch funds; all seats free, collection at door. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' Meeting. Wednesday, at 8.30, Discussion Class. Thursday and Friday, Hall open from 8 p.m. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Assoc.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Business meeting every Tuesday evening. The Commonweal can be purchased of Mr. Hous, newsagent, George Street.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY 27.

8 Mile-end Waste Davis, Brooks, Mrs. Schack

SUNDAY 28.

11 Latimer Road Station Maughan, Dean, and Crouch
11.30 Bethnal Green—Gibraltar Walk Mrs. Schack and Cores
11.30 "Canterbury Arms"—Kilburn Road Charles, Mainwaring, Hicks
11.30 Hammersmith—St. Ann's Road The Branch
11.30 Kensal Green Lyne senr., Lyne junr., and Davis
11.30 Mitcham Fair Green Turner
11.30 Regent's Park Parker and Nicoll
11.30 Walham Green, opposite Station The Branch
11.30 Leman Street, Shadwell Davis, Turner, and Mowbray
3.30 Hyde Park Darwood, Jeffries, and Parker
3.30 Victoria Park Davis, Mrs. Schack, and Mowbray
7 Clerkenwell Green Brookes, Kitz, Parker, and Nicoll
7 Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park The Branch
7.30 Broad Street, Soho Mrs. Lahr
7.30 Mitcham Fair Green Turner

TUESDAY 30.

8 Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch.

THURSDAY 2.

8 Ossulton Street Mrs. Lahr and Nicoll

FRIDAY 3.

8 Philpot Street, Commercial Road St. George's Branch
8.15 Hoxton Church Mrs. Lahr

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Manchester.—Outdoor meetings every Sunday. Stevcnson Square at 3 p.m.; Viaduct, Chester Road, at 7.30.

Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3 and 7.30.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

SCOTTISH LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.

Aberdeen.—Organiser, J. Leatham, 7 Jamaica Street. Branch meets in Odd-fellows Hall on Monday nights at 8. Choir practice at 46 Marischal Street on Thursday evenings at 8. Jarnoustie (Forfarshire)—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Samuel Wilson, Secretary. Dumlee—Meetings every Sunday in the Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Edinburgh.—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8. Galashiels.—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, Secretary. Gallatown and Dysart (Fife)—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street, Secretary. Kilmarnock.—Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday. H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street, Secretary. West Calder.—Robert Lindsay, West Calder, Secretary.

AUSTRALIAN SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

Sydney.—533 George Street. Lectures and debates every Sunday evening. W. H. McNamara, Secretary.

Melbourne.—"Golden Fleece" Hotel, Russell Street. Lectures and debates every Sunday evening. J. A. Andrews, 18 Ophir Street, Richmond, Secy.

SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE FEDERATION.—The Committee will meet at 28 Gray's Inn Road (Holborn) on Saturday April 27, at 7.30, to receive subscriptions, etc.

NORTH LONDON BRANCH.—A Public Meeting will be held at Camden Hall, King Street, Camden Town, on Tuesday 30th inst. Speakers—Kitz, Mowbray, Turner, and others. The meeting will be interspersed with Socialist songs.

ELEUSIS CLUB, 180 King's Road, Chelsea, S.W.—Sunday April 28, at 8 p.m., Mr. Sidney Webb (Fabian), "The New Departure of the Liberal Party. Social Reforms."

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . . 1d
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . . 2d
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. . . 2d
 Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . . 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . . . 4d
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . . 1d
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . . 1d
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . . 1d
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . . 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
 Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
 Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Our Parish and Our Duke;

OR, WHAT LAND NATIONALISATION MEANS.

A Letter to my Fellow-Parishioners.

BY
 EDWARD CARPENTER.

To be had of the Author, Millthorpe, near Chesterfield. Price 2s. per 100, post free.

ARBEJDEREN

("The Worker")

DANISH SOCIALIST WEEKLY.

Edited and published by NICOLAJ PETERSEN and GERSON TRIER.

Subscription 3s. a-year.

Nansensgade 28A, Copenhagen.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

299 SHALES Moor, SHEFFIELD.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. 1 copy, 2d.; by post, 3d.; 3 copies, 8d.; 6, 1s. 3d.; 12, 2s. 5d.; 24, 4s. 9d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free. 50, post free, 6s. 100, post free, 11s.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LIFE OF ALBERT R. PARSONS.

290 PAGES, BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

Telling the Story of his Life, so full of startling incidents, ending with the tragedy of Nov. 11, 1887.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM

GEN. B. F. BUTLER, GEN. W. H. PARSONS, CAPT. W. P. BLACK, GEO. A. SCHILLING, and others, make this one of the most interesting books of our time.

Price (Postpaid) 6s. 6d.

Address—MRS. PARSONS, 785 Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

KARL MARX.

A NEW AND HIGHLY ARTISTIC ETCHING.

India Proof, 19 by 24 inches.

Price Two Dollars.

ETCHED AND PUBLISHED BY ALFRED C. KIHN, 298 Jay Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., U.S.A.

Also for sale at New York Labour News Co., 25 East Fourth Street, N.Y.

Copies mailed to any address on receipt of price. Can be had of W. Reeves, 185 Fleet Street, London.

FREIHEIT

INTERNATIONAL ORGAN OF THE GERMAN-SPEAKING ANARCHISTS.

EDITED BY JOHN MOST.

Subscription, 2s. per quarter; under cover, 4s.

John Müller, Post Office Box 3135, New York, U.S.A., or Office of Commonweal.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
 New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Just Published, square crown 8vo, 200 pp., 6s.
A TALE OF THE HOUSE OF THE WOLFINGS, and all the Kindreds of the Mark. Written in Prose and Verse.

Library Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
 Vol. III., AUTUMN . . . seventh edition 12s.
 Vol. IV., WINTER . . . seventh edition 12s.

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo, at 2s. 6d. each.
 ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE ÆNEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond A Morality.

Square 12mo, 143 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

OUR NATIONAL CAKE:

WHO MAKES IT, AND WHO EATS IT.

Large display poster to bring home the aims of Socialism to the workers.

Sent free on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage. J. J. Harrison, 44 Oxford Street, Sheffield.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3D. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2s. 6D.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

COMMONWEAL OFFICE, 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 173.

SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES.

THE Socialist League advocates International Revolutionary Socialism. That is to say the destruction of the present class society, which consists of a class of men who live by owning property and therefore need not work, and a class that has no property and therefore must work in order that they may live to keep the idlers by their labour. Revolutionary Socialism insists that this system of society, which is the modern form of slavery, should be changed to a system of Society which would give every man an opportunity of doing useful work, and not allow any man to live without doing useful work. The result of this would be that livelihood would not be precarious nor labour burdensome. Labour would be employed in co-operation, and the struggle of man with man for bare subsistence would be supplanted by harmonious combination for the production of common wealth without the waste of labour or material.

Every man's needs would be satisfied from this common stock, but no man would be allowed to own anything which he could not use, and which consequently he must abuse by employing it as an instrument for forcing others to labour for him unpaid. Thus the land, the capital, machinery, and means of transit would cease to be private property, since they can only be used by the combination of labour to produce wealth.

Thus men would be free because they would no longer be dependent on idle property-owners for subsistence; thus they would be brothers, for the cause of strife, the struggle for subsistence at other people's expense, would have come to an end. Thus they would be equal, for if all men were doing useful work no man's labour could be dispensed with. Thus the motto of Liberty, Fraternity, and Equality, which is but an empty boast in a society that upholds the monopoly of the means of production, would at last be realised.

This Revolutionary Socialism must be International. The change which would put an end to the struggle between man and man, would destroy it also between nation and nation. One harmonious system throughout the whole of civilisation would take the place of the old destructive rivalries. There would be no great centres breeding race hatred and commercial jealousy, but people would manage their own affairs in communities not too large to prevent all citizens from taking a part in the administration necessary for the conduct of life.

Thus, while we abide by the old motto

Liberty, Fraternity, Equality,

we say that the existence of private property destroys Equality, and therefore under it there can be neither Liberty nor Fraternity.

We add to the first motto then this other one—

FROM EACH ACCORDING TO HIS CAPACITY, TO EACH
ACCORDING TO HIS NEEDS.

When this is realised there will be a genuine Society; until it is realised, Society is nothing but a band of robbers.

COUNCIL OF THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

THE sentence on the Zulu chiefs for the crime of having the hardihood to defend their country against land-thieves, is worthy of the very worst days of the Roman Empire; amongst all the records of tyranny nothing worse has been recorded than this last piece of cruelty of "civilisation." It seems hardly possible that the sentence can be carried out, bad as we are.—W. M.

THE ENGLISH REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT, 1815 TO 1817.

SPA-FIELDS RIOTS AND DERBYSHIRE INSURRECTION.

(Continued from p. 130.)

It has often been noticed in times of fear and disturbance, that not only is the public mind in an abnormal condition of intense excitement, but that nature also becomes distempered. Times of revolution are preceded and accompanied by earthquakes, terrible storms, or intense heat and drought; not to mention those aerial messengers, comets, which are supposed to bear with them the fate of kings and empires. Apart from the superstitious belief of our ancestors, there is a natural explanation, we know that nature and his surroundings act upon the man, that we are one with nature, and that her storms and tempests reflect themselves in us. Besides, heavy storms and thirsty drought destroy the corn crops and make bread dear, and a dear loaf will often bring the misery of the suffering people to such a pitch that revolt becomes the only escape from unbearable anguish. It was that terrible storm of hail, thunder, and rain exactly a year before the great French Revolution, which destroyed the crops and proved the last straw on the back of the French peasant, who otherwise might have borne his sufferings in silence for years longer. And even in our times, which are looked upon by all men as revolutionary, we see that Nature lends her aid to hurry on the inevitable convulsion. Think of the natural history of the last few years: earthquakes, floods, summers of scorching heat burning up corn and pastures, summers of pouring rain rotting the corn in the fields; hope and dread of they know not what in the hearts of men, and in the sky the lurid gleam of a new dawn about to break upon the world.

So at the time I am writing, in England at least, nature urged the people forward to revolt. The summer of 1815 was remarkable for a great drought throughout the country, and grass became unusually scarce. Farmers were forced to sell their cattle in large numbers at a great sacrifice. This made meat cheap for the time, but only at the cost of its becoming very dear in the succeeding year. Despite the drought, the harvest was not so bad, so the people did not feel at once the effects of the Corn Bill.

And thus for a time there was a period of comparative quiet. This was broken on October the 10th by a great strike among the merchant seamen on the Tyne. The treatment and payment of these men was far worse than what it is at the present time, and it was no wonder that they rebelled against the hard conditions of their lot. The steps they took to make their strike successful were of an extraordinary character. They had entire possession of the river, and they built a bridge of boats across, which effectually prevented any ships moving out of the port of Newcastle. It was estimated that there were over a thousand sail of shipping in Tyne which could not get men. The number of military and police in Newcastle was not large, and they were totally helpless before these daring rebels, who had the town entirely in their possession, and were thus enabled to keep the strike going by unlimited credit among the shopkeepers. No vessels were allowed to go to sea without a permit from the organising committee of strikers, and you can imagine they did not get this permit without agreeing to the committee's terms. The rebels numbered 4,000, and they paraded their forces through the town twice a-day—in the morning and afternoon. If any man of them did not turn out with his comrades, he was treated as a blackleg, and they inflicted a very comical punishment upon him, by parading him through the town with his face blackened and his jacket turned inside out. This confederacy, after lasting some weeks, was broken up by the army and navy combined; for while a small army of soldiers were brought into the town to overawe the strikers, the bridge of boats was cleared out of the way by seamen from ships of war that had been ordered to Newcastle. The strike then collapsed.

On November 15th there was a strike among the miners at Wolverhampton, who, on being charged by the yeomanry, gave them such a warm reception with stones and brickbats that these zealous defenders of law and order were forced to retreat in great confusion. The strike was afterwards put down by his majesty's dragoons.

The rest of the year 1815 passed quietly, but these ominous signs made the middle and upper classes look with dread upon the future. And they soon had cause. I have said the harvest was not bad, but it was bad enough to cause a rise in the price of wheat, which the wet summer of 1816 drove up from fifty-two shillings to the extraordinary price of a hundred shillings a quarter. This is a little over three times the price of corn at present time; so for a loaf you give 3d. for now-adays you would have had to give 10d. in 1816. Trade was at a standstill; the streets of towns were crowded by beggars; robbers infested the roads of both town and country; while the ranks of the unemployed were recruited largely from the multitude of soldiers and sailors now discharged. While this was going on, princes, ministers, and rich men indulged in reckless extravagance, and revelled in profligate orgies. It was evident that England was on the verge of a revolution, and it is still a matter for wonder on the part of the student of history that England escaped the threatened convulsion.

The trouble began among the agricultural population. With a scanty wage of 7s. a-week, and very often not that—for, owing to the introduction of machines and other causes, employment is scarce among the agricultural labourers—it is not easy to live in a time of dear bread and general scarcity. It is in Suffolk that trouble begins, and from Suffolk it spreads through the neighbouring counties of Norfolk, Cambridge, and Essex, till at last it develops into an agrarian insurrection. On May 9th, 1816, incendiary fires break out in Suffolk. The spring nights are illumined by the glare of blazing ricks and barns; and by the light of the flames mobs assemble and destroy the machinery which turns them upon the roadside. The establishments of manufacturers who have oppressed the poor are not spared, and the manufactories of Mr. Chandler of Ilminster and Mr. Kingsbury of Bungay are burnt to the ground. In the space of ten days there are fifty fires in the county of Suffolk alone. On the 19th the sheriff of Suffolk and Mr. Willet of Brandon arrive in London at the Secretary of State's office with an alarming account of the state of the country, and a request for military assistance. It appears that from breaking threshing-machines and firing ricks the people have proceeded to open insurrection. A reduction of the price of bread and meat is the object of the rioters. They demand that a maximum be fixed, that the highest price for wheat be half-a-crown a bushel and that of prime joints 4d. a pound. At Brandon the rioters are in considerable force; they number, it is estimated, some fifteen hundred. They are divided into several parties, and are attacking the houses of the various local tyrants. At Brandon they have levelled several houses to the ground, including that of Mr. Willet the butcher. The sheriff of Suffolk and Mr. Willet, on their way to London, saw from the high ground a fire near Ely, which they conjecture to be the work of another party of rebels. The rioters were armed with long heavy sticks, the ends of which, to the extent of several inches, were studded with sharp iron spikes. Their flag was inscribed "Bread or blood," and they threaten to march to London. How much of this is true, and how much may be put down to the excited imagination of Mr. Willet and the worthy sheriff, I will leave to your judgment. A curious point is that the description of the rioters and their demands are similar to those of the French peasants in the time of the great Revolution, and it is evident they are under intelligent guidance. It is a fact at the present time there are popular songs among the Suffolk peasantry celebrating the French Revolution, one of which runs as follows:

"Weeva la! ye French conventions,
Weeva la! ye rights of man,
Weeva la! ye bold Americans—
You're the lads that first began";

so it is possible that the example of the French peasants may have greatly affected them.

The sheriff and Mr. Willet are dismissed with promises of assistance, and return to the distracted county.

On Thursday the 16th riotous bands of youths and other people smash the windows of respectable persons and sack a flour-mill at Norwich. A Doctor Alderson, who comes out to remonstrate with them, is knocked down. Respectable inhabitants assemble at the Guildhall, where they continue till a late hour; they then sally forth with staves and torches to the flour-mill, but find, no doubt to their intense disappointment, that the rioters have dispersed—a fact which one might think they might have known beforehand.

About the same time there is a rising at Bideford, a seaport in Devon, to prevent the exportation of provisions while the people are starving. Three of the ringleaders are arrested and thrown into prison, but an immense crowd collects, the prison doors are broken down with hammers and bludgeons, and the prisoners are released.

Meanwhile rioting has continued at Norwich, doubtless encouraged by the news that comes from Suffolk and other places. The gallant mayor and worthy burgesses determine on 22nd of May that strong measures are called for to curb the growing forces of sedition; but on this occasion it is not found necessary to expose the valuable lives of the magistrates and respectable citizens of Norwich. The troops and yeomanry are called out, and there is a battle royal in the Market Place. Fire-balls are thrown among the troops, which scare the horses, while a fusilade of stones rattles upon the helmets of the dragoons and yeomen. This battle lasts for some considerable time, but the riot is quelled at last, and order reigns in Norwich. D. J. NICOLL.

(To be continued.)

There is no creature whose inward being is so strong, that it is not greatly determined by what lies outside it.—George Eliot.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

TALK about paternalism or grandmotherly "government" being the necessary result of the adoption of Socialistic principles on the part of society at large! Just look at this specimen of paternalism indulged in by a private enterprise based on individualistic notions:

"An engineer of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company covers the round trip from New York to Philadelphia, which is about 170 miles, once a-day. . . He is not allowed to indulge in intoxicating liquor of any kind—he is ordered in fact to drink nothing but cold water, tea and coffee being also denied him. The number of hours that he must give to sleep are prescribed under the company's rules, and his amusements are chosen for him by his employers—the theatre being strictly forbidden. He is allowed one month's vacation each year without deduction of pay. In fact, as you can see, he is expected to give the best of his time, talent, and strength to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and this company has advanced so far in the line in which other railroads must follow sooner or later, that it arranges to care in a paternal way for its employes."

Liberty and Property Defence League people please note!

The agricultural labourer—also described as the farm hand—seems to be getting dangerously near the point of superfluity. Experiments to substitute orang-utangs and suchlike man-apes for this kind of labour, which were tried in the States a few years ago, appear to have shown the impracticability of this idea, as nothing more of it was heard since. But in the meantime technical improvements were made in agricultural machinery which practically does away with manual labour altogether, whether provided by man-apes or human beings. Mr. Edward Atkinson, writing in Bradstreets, points out that "certain farming operations are carried on in California, where farming has already almost changed from an agricultural to a mechanical pursuit, which seem to indicate that the development of American farming in the direction of extraordinary economy is going on at a faster rate than anyone could have thought possible. One of the California farmers, who has wheat-fields of several thousand acres in extent, has sent on a statement of the cost of planting and harvesting his last crop. This was all performed, from the ploughing of the land to the sacking of the wheat, by a great and ingenious piece of mechanism, and from first to last—that is, ploughing, harrowing, seeding, cutting, thrashing, winnowing, and bagging the wheat—the cost did not exceed eighty cents (3s. 2d.) per acre. Assuming that the average yield is from 10—14 bushels to the acre, the labour-cost of producing wheat is insignificant in the extreme. Eight cents (four pence) a-bushel would be so low a labour-cost that the humblest ryot in India could hardly hope to hold his own against it."

No wonder that the workers in the United States, mostly ignorant and prejudiced, if they could have their way would resolve by a large majority to "luddite" all machinery. Of late, in many a trade co-operative societies have been formed whose members have sacredly pledged themselves never to make use of any machinery whatsoever. Editor Dana, of the New York Sun, said a few days ago, "In many of our institutions and ideas we resemble the flowery kingdom of the middle"; and the editor is in the main correct, perhaps more so than anybody dares to admit to himself.

The New York newspapers have taken the first step towards forming a trust. A combination was formed by them, with the exception of the Herald, to raise the price of the Sunday issues to five cents. The Herald always charged this price.

The sugar trust has raised the price of sugar to 9 cents a-pound. Altogether a rise of 3 cents, or 33 per cent., since the formation of the trust.

Some time ago, a comrade in the cause received the following letter from an acquaintance:

"I am very sorry indeed I cannot render you any assistance in getting a job, but your being an 'Anarchist' prevents me from doing so. You have no idea how 'Anarchists' are hated in this country. If you were a thief, a forger, or had committed any other crime—aye, even that of murder—you might be forgiven, but in the people's eyes there is no excuse for one who is an 'Anarchist.'"

If we consider what these sentences imply, and then read the following letter, we must admit to ourselves that all is not lost as long as such workers in the cause as the noble woman in Grinnell can be found:

"Grinnell, Iowa, April 5th, 1889.

"... That you may better understand our position, perhaps I had better tell you of the origin of our little 'group.' This city was founded by and named after J. B. Grinnell, a first cousin of Julius Grinnell of Chicago, the State Attorney in the Anarchist trial. J. B. Grinnell vouched to the court for the good character of Harry Gilmer when he was called to give witness against Spies et cons. On the day our Chicago comrades were sentenced to death all the bells were rung in rejoicing; the same thing was done at noon on the day of the murder, and at night they had bonfires and general rejoicing. So far as I knew, I was the only Anarchist in the place; but I draped my office in mourning, put on a mourning costume, and then went to work to make converts to the cause, right here among its most bitter enemies. I have had some success: our 'group' now numbers eleven, but six are mechanics and common labourers of very poor education. These men cannot read Marx, Proudhon, or Spencer; the language, the logic, the science are all far above the reach of my poor friends. And they have so little time. When night comes they are too tired for books, too tired to think; but a paper, you know, or a leaflet, can be carried in the blouse and read at the noon hour, and perhaps discussed with other workmen.—Fraternally yours,

"DR. MARY HERMA AIKIN."

Let capitalism come and show such unselfish workers for its cause, and we will gladly take a back seat. Surely "the religion of Socialism" breeds the same spirit as Christianity did in its better and nobler days.

That the institution of private property in the means of production and distribution is at the bottom of all social evils, can hardly be doubted any longer by reasonable people. Of course, people possessed of an over abundance of "analytical proclivities" may question the correctness of this statement, but they will find it a hard nut to crack to prove it incorrect. We have just now a fine illustration of its truth in the States. A part of the Indian territory known as the Oklahoma lands, will be opened for settlement on the 21st inst. People have been hanging around these lands for years awaiting their opening. They will stand no better chance than the new-comer who only arrives on the 21st in the selection of homesteads. They are consequently in a very ugly frame of mind, and it will be strange indeed if there is not any amount of bloodshed and violence indulged in during the settlement of the territory. It is estimated that at present already about 100,000 persons are ready at the frontier to enter Oklahoma. There are only about 10,000 homesteads to be given away. For each section open there will be at least a dozen applicants. The military authorities state that the soldiers are not equal to the task of keeping the people out, and that they will be unable to prevent bloodshed and violence. Every train arriving is crowded, and the wagons are passing in like an endless chain.

The foregoing also proves that incalculable numbers of people are out of work. For each job at the disposal of the new President, there are at least twenty applicants.

Strikes are breaking out again like an epidemic over the whole country. The carpenters in most cities are out to enforce the nine hour day. In Allentown, Pa., the ironworkers struck against a reduction of 10 per cent.; in St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn., the street car men are out against a reduction of 25 per cent.; and in Newark, N.J., the thread-workers and spinners of the Clarke works had to strike to prevent a large reduction.

Notices like the following are nowadays of daily occurrence in trade union papers:—

“Painters are warned to stay away from Brooklyn, N.Y., as trade is dull and many of the craft are out of employment.”

“Labourers and mechanics are warned to stay away from Springfield, Ohio, as there are over 2,000 idle men at present in that city.”

“Miners are warned to stay away from Lehigh, Indian Territory, as the mines there are being run only two days in each week. Hundreds of idle men are in the vicinity.”

“Labourers and mechanics are warned to stay away from Pittsburg, Kansas, as there are hundreds of men in that city at present who are unable to obtain employment.”

“Workingmen are warned to stay away from Peoria, Ill., as there are hundreds of men there unable to obtain employment. Pay no heed to advertisements appearing from time to time in Eastern papers. They are untruthful and misleading.”

Indeed we may ask ourselves the question: “Is the world getting madder or are we getting near the crisis?”

In the alleged dynamite conspiracy case of the Burlington, Quincy, and Chicago system, two more verdicts were rendered by a “jury” in Geneva, Ill., viz.: Broderick to one year’s imprisonment, and a fine of 500 dols. against Godding. Two more victims of capitalistic brutality.

The Chicago Arbeiter-Zeitung is now branded by all labour papers for having “boodled” during the late election.

The Social Democrats in Chicago, Ill., polled for their candidate as mayor, 167 votes; in Milwaukee, Wis., they obtained 420 for their candidate as city judge; and in Jersey City, Heights, N.J., they materialised 104 votes all told.

The Social Democrats of Massachusetts had a conference in Boston about a week ago, when they resolved “to nominate a full State ticket, and to take several other steps which would lead to the control of Massachusetts being conducted by their party.”

Boston, Mass., April 15, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING MAY 11, 1889.

5	Sun.	1789. Opening of the Assembly of the States-General in France. 1821. Napoleon Buonaparte died at St. Helena. 1860. Garibaldi embarked for Sicily.
6	Mon.	1850. Meeting in St. Martin's Hall. 1862. H. D. Thoreau died. 1867. Reform demonstration in Hyde Park. 1882. Killing of Burke and Cavendish in Phoenix Park.
7	Tues.	1716. Septennial Bill passed.
8	Wed.	1795. Fouquier-Tinville guillotined. 1840. Socialist Congress at Leeds. 1843. Monster Repeal meeting at Kilkenny. 1873. John Stuart Mill died.
9	Thur.	1800. John Brown, of Harper's Ferry, born.
10	Fri.	1774. Louis XV. dies at Versailles. 1857. Indian Mutiny breaks out. 1870. Barricades thrown up at Belleville. 1881. Bradlaugh ejected from the House of Commons.
11	Sat.	1796. R. T. Crossfeild tried for high treason. 1840. Feargus O'Connor sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment. 1860. Landing of the "Thousand" at Marsala. 1866. Commercial crisis and stoppage of banks. 1878. Hodel's attempt on Kaiser Wilhelm.

THE POWER OF EDUCATION.

THAT the propertied classes may be the better able to keep for their own special advantage the accumulated labour of the workers, they have appropriated the great thoughts of all preceding generations of men and women who have left any traces behind them of having led useful lives. They are thoroughly conscious that class domination can only exist as long as ignorance prevails, and therefore it is that only the barest elementary knowledge is imparted to the children of the workers. Fearing that this knowledge may in itself prove dangerous, a correcting influence is supplied—the mysteries of the future life intervene. Thus the necessary trailing in subjection is imparted to fit the children of the slaves for the weary lives which the masters, in the endeavour to perpetuate their shameful institutions, think proper to impose.

Now, as we claim that the material products of the workers of past generations should be held collectively by existing generations, so all those whose inclinations and tastes so lead them should have opportunities for acquiring and enjoying the fruits of the mental labours of those who went before them.

“Knowledge is power,” says Bacon, and it is the monopoly of knowledge by the classes that gives them sophisticated speakers to gull the slaves with the idea that there must be men to rule and men to be ruled; it gives the crafty men who are perpetually engaged in law-making, i.e., fencing in the so-called rights of private property; it gives them a class of people who pretend to lighten the miseries of this life by depicting the perpetual bliss of the future; and it gives them those pompous individuals who can live in luxury without the slightest pretence of doing work.

“Knowledge is power,” and when the knowledge that the workers are being robbed by the classes is clearly understood by them, it will in itself become the power by which the destruction of the classes will be effected. Thus the education of the people must precede and be the means of effecting their emancipation.

A. B.

THE PEOPLE'S HOPE.

O, say not they are mad who hold
The faith that ours should be,
The Paradise of which we're told,
That we yet hope to see;
Things as they are may suit the few,
They'll suit the people when,
Content, they share their portion too
Of all God meant for men;
They are not mad who bid us dare,
Of all God gives to claim our share.

Our day is near, and come it must,
The day that surely shows
That God, to all he makes is just,
Nor wills our human woes;
They are not mad who cry, “Be wise,
No starving lives endure;
On to the day that forward lies,
Where there shall be no poor.”
They are not mad who bid us dare,
Of all God gives to claim our share.

W. C. BENNETT.

A CLEARANCE MELODY.

FOR THE MILLIONS.

“He hath oppressed and hath forsaken the poor. He hath violently taken away a house that he builded not.”—Words of the Man of Uz.

AIR—“Git out o' the way Ole Dan Tucker.”

WINTER time for village razing,
Summer grass is prime for grazing—
Give me room to feed my flocks in;
Out go MEN, and in go OXEN:
Sheriff, come to village-wracking—
Send these “wretches” off a-packing;
Don't be moved by want or weeping,
Child at play, or old man creeping.

Wrackers, this devoted village
Can't produce an ounce of pillage—
I took all they scraped together,
Hot, or cold, or rainy weather:
Fed am I on dishes dainty—
Starved are they amidst of plenty!
Don't be moved by want or weeping,
Foodless child, or old man creeping.

Sheriff, fall to village-wracking—
Send these “wretches” off a-packing;
Spade and pick and crowbar—ready—
“CHARGE”—and “level,” sure and steady!
Wrackers, list to no beseeching—
Deathbed groan or woman screeching—
Don't be moved by want or weeping,
Child at play, or old man creeping.

Sheriff, see that woman linger!
From her birthplace quickly fling her;
For the child that dies beside her,
Shelter will yon graves provide her!
Wild her scream and full of horror!
Here we have no shelter for her—
Don't be moved by woe or weeping,
Gasping child, or old man creeping.

On yonder graves are salt tears falling—
Women clapping hands and calling
To their kindred and relations,
Sleeping sound for generations.
See, the children fly affrighted!
Hearths for them no more are lighted—
Wet and cold, in ditches sleeping,
Naked mothers o'er them weeping.

Sheriff, on these heaps of wreckment
Toast we British Law Ejection;
Dust and crash and screaming over,
Silence reigns!—and now for clover!
Now I've room to put my flocks in—
Out go MEN, and in go OXEN!
Staunch were we 'gainst woe and weeping,
Child at play, or old man creeping!

(Taken from a ballad-slip which circulated widely in Ireland many years ago.
Landlords have grown humane since then!)

Add to the power of discovering truth, the desire of using it for the promotion of human happiness, and you have the great end and object of our existence.—Herbert Spencer.

Next in importance to the inborn nature, is the acquired nature which a person owes to his education and training; not alone to the education which is called learning, but to that development of character which has been evoked by the conditions of life.—Dr. H. Maudsley.

Verily, the Prophet (Mahomet) said, “He who shall take the right of a Moslem by a false oath, verily God will make hell-fire proper for him, and will forbid him Paradise.” Then a man said to his highness, “Although the right so taken should be trifling and contemptible?” He said, “Although it should be but a twig from a bush of thorns.”

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication.

As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d.

Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

NOTTINGHAM SOCIALIST CLUB.—Report received too late; must arrive first post Tuesday morning.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Statement of Principles	137
The English Revolutionary Movement, 1815 to 1817: Spa-Fields Riots and Derbyshire Insurrection (continued) .. .	D. J. NICOLL 137
In the United States	H. F. CHARLES 138
Revolutionary Calendar	139
The Power of Education	A. BROOKES 139
The People's Hope	W. C. BENNETT 139
A Clearance Melody (Taken from a ballad-slip which was distributed in Ireland)	139
Notes on News	WILLIAM MORRIS 140
Note from Leicester	T. B. 140
Correspondence—St. George's Farm—Socialist Demonstration at Blackstone Edge	141
Note from Aberdeen	141
Labour in South Africa	141
The Labour Struggle	142
International Notes	VICTOR DAVE 142
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	143
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	144

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday May 1.

ENGLAND	Baecker Zeitung	SWITZERLAND
Caslon's Circular	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	Arbeiterstimme
Die Autonomie	Fort Worth (Tex)—South West
Justice	Milwaukee—National Reformer	SPAIN
Labour Elector	Newark—Arbeiter-Zeitung	Madrid—El Socialista
Labour Tribune	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung	Barcelona—Ticrra y Libertad
London—Freie Presse	S. F. Coast Seaman's Journal	PORTUGAL
Manchester Sunday Chronicle	Valley Falls (Kan.)—Fair Play	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
Norwich—Daylight		GERMANY
Railway Review	FRANCE	Berlin—Volks Tribune
Sozial Demokrat	Paris—L'Egalite (daily)	AUSTRIA
Telegraph Service Gazette	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	Wien—Gleichheit
Worker's Friend	Le Proletariat	Briunn—Volksfreund
	La Revolte	HUNGARY
UNITED STATES	Le Coup de Feu	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik
New York—Der Sozialist	Lille—Le Cri du Travailleur	ROUMANIA
Freiheit		Jassy—Municipiorul
Truthseeker	HOLLAND	DENMARK
Volkszeitung	Hague—Recht voor Allen	Social-Demokraten
Workmen's Advocate	BELGIUM	Copenhagen—Arbejderen
The Truth	Ghent—Vooruit	SWEDEN
Boston—Woman's Journal	ITALY	Malmö—Arbetet
Investigator	Turin—Il Muratore	WEST INDIES
Chicago—Knights of Labor	Rome—L'Emancipazione	Cuba—El Productor
Vorbote

NOTICE.

Comrade Kropotkin wishes it to be announced that the lectures on Social Evolution, which were to have been given in the South Kensington Town Hall, will not now be delivered. Some misapprehension having arisen as to the circumstances under which they were being promoted, Kropotkin, who wished to give an exposition of Socialism in the interest of society only, has declined to proceed with them.

NOTES ON NEWS.

Few people who have watched the course of what is called "justice" in the present day, and especially Sir Peter Edlin's administration of it, will have expected anything like what justice is poetically supposed to be from the Clerkenwell Sessions House when presided over by that legal luminary; but even those who have read of the case in the ordinary reports of the daily papers, will be a little startled at the disgraceful sentence passed by Edlin on our comrades of Berner Street.

It seems that Edlin is so pleased with himself, that he is going to ask the County Council to raise his salary by £500. The Star suggests very appropriately that they might so far take his request into consideration as to lower it by that amount. For, after all, is Sir Peter really earning his salary? from his employer's point of view I mean. The "law" or "administration of justice," or whatever else you call it, is at its best such a cruel instrument of oppression against the poor, that those servants of it, the judges, would best serve the interests of the ruling classes that employ them, who should carry on their vile office with an affectation at least of moderation and fairness. The game of the masters of Society at present is to get people to say, "Well, the system has its blemishes, but you see it doesn't work so ill. Let it alone!"

But men like Edlin are resolved, it seems, to prove that the system is all blemishes; to make it clear to poor people that the law is their enemy. He seems determined to carry on the tradition of the police-courts after Bloody Sunday, and to show those that are discontented with their share of the wealth of the country (all kicks and no half-pence), that to be accused by a policeman is to be condemned by the Court, and that the boasted liberty of Englishmen is only meant to apply to those who have property to back it.

In fact, "too much zeal" is surely injuring the usefulness, to their employers the upper classes, of some of our judges. The other day Sir Peter Edlin pointed out to the public the abuses of our law courts in the matter of judge-directed verdicts, by an unsuccessful attempt to bully a jury into accepting his view of the evidence instead of carrying out the spirit of their oath by insisting on their view. This again was a very poor service to render to the votaries of law-'n'-order.

In short, if the County Council do raise Sir Peter Edlin's salary, they will surely do so in virtue of their sympathies with Revolution, and consider him as a revolutionary agent to be encouraged in his present course; so that at last people will find that the whole thing is unbearable, that the very air they breathe is so corrupted by tyranny and oppression that it stifles them.

Mr. John Morley took some pains at Newcastle the other day to pronounce against the eight hour's movement. Whatever our views as Socialists may be as to the value of this movement (and I amongst others think it will prove illusory), Mr. Morley means by pronouncing against it to pronounce against Socialism, and against the Socialist-Radical movement as led by the Star. That paper considers Mr. Morley's disclaimer as courageous on his part; but I don't know. All it means is that he has cast up the pros and cons as to the effect to be produced on his election on the one hand, and his position as a claimant for Mr. Gladstone's shoes on the other, and has come to the conclusion that it will be better for him to run the small risk of the Socialist vote at Newcastle, rather than involve himself in an alliance with the Progressive Radicals, and be suspected of Socialist tendencies. The time is not yet come when a statesman can get beyond Whiggery. Will it ever come?

The Pall Mall Gazette has taken up the cause of the Primrose Ladies with such fervour, that one may hope it is so blinded with enthusiasm as not to perceive that at the best that valuable institution is furthering the emancipation of Ladies, not of women. For otherwise, judging by this and other articles (notably a long-winded essay by that very hard-shell Radical, Admiral Maxse), one must say of it that it is becoming almost too fair for journalistic war, and shows signs of being on the verge of conversion by Balfour's heroism and Salisbury's "sweet reasonableness." W. M.

It will be our own fault if in our own land society is not organised upon a new foundation.—Miss Sedgwick.

There are many in the world whose whole existence is a makeshift, and perhaps the formula which would fit the largest number of lives, is "a doing without, more or less patiently."—George Eliot.

NOTE FROM LEICESTER.—We have had John Burns here lately, and we hope to see him again in about a month. LECTURED twice on a Sunday. Grand audiences; Secular Hall filled in the afternoon (an astonishing thing). Tea provided in the hall after the noon lecture. About thirty Socialists and their friends sat down. One friend had come twelve miles. At the evening lecture—"Past, Present, and Future of Trades Unionism"—Burns attacked Bradlaugh and the labour leaders, Broadhurst and Howell; predicting, by virtue of his being behind the scenes and seeing what's what, defection of the first-named, and accusing the others of corruption by the capitalists. Being charged himself with taking money from the Tories at Nottingham at the time of his candidature, he replied in a short history of the affair, giving the name of the gentleman (a chairman of a Liberal Association in Liverpool) who furnished the money alleged to be "Tory gold," and which Burns used to defray the expenses of a Socialist programme and propaganda. The lecture, which was not so witty as the afternoon one, on "Modern Poverty: Cause, Effect, Remedy," was solid, and called forth letters in the local press—remonstrances and denials on the part of the people charged, and reply by Burns. For the first time, our Branch cleared all expenses and had a few shillings to the good. Burns's style just hits the popular taste. He is neither pedantic, nor too grammatical. His powers were recognised in the audience's bursts of applause and ringing laughter. A visit or two from him to any tottering Branch is calculated to put it straight and firm. A London Fabian recommended Burns to us, and a local Fabian paid his personal expenses. When a member of one section (Fabian) pays for a member of another section (S.D.F.) to lecture for the benefit of a third section (S.L.), it ought to shut our enemies' mouths about our contradicting and excluding one another.—T. B.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ST. GEORGE'S FARM.

A SUGGESTION.

In speaking of our friend Harrison Riley as "one of the most active" of the Communist party at Totley, I did not imply or mean to imply that he was one of the most active talkers—rather the opposite—nor did I say anything about his being on the committee. It is quite possible, however, that my account of the affair is defective, as, though I have tried to get accurate information on the subject I have found it hard to do so; and I quite endorse comrade George Sturt's suggestion that some one should write a detailed story of the venture. Who better than Riley himself—since his letter suggests his willingness to do so? Riley, show up!

In reference to the letter of George Sturt, I think one reason why all these little communal schemes fail is their narrowness—and it is a good thing they do fail, though it is also a good thing (and a very good thing) that they are started and succeed for a time. I think they all help the Cause on, and break ground in one direction or another; but when you come to have a score or fifty or even a hundred people penned together in a little community, they are bound either to chafe and gall each other into a state of exasperation and explosion, or else if they are so like-minded as to have no serious differences it can only be by reason of their exceeding narrowness and sectarian character (as of some of the communities in the United States), which of itself condemns them beforehand to failure. Personally, I would not like to belong to a community of under a million people! I think with that number one might feel safe, but with less there would be a great danger of being watched. If one used the common funds, for instance, to have a glass of beer on the sly, and the majority were blue ribbonites; or to have a good dinner, and they were vegetarians; or if one wanted to use bad language, and the rest of the community was highly æsthetic; how one would be made to feel it! But in a large body an immense variety of opinion and practice (though there would have to be limits even here) would be represented and allowed for; and under those circumstances Communism would be splendid. However, all success to these small ventures, all the same. Some of them may grow to become large ones, and may rise as it were from below to meet the great general movement towards Communism, which owing to economic conditions is taking place from above. And all honour to those who have fought to establish these little communities. They have kept the sacred fire alight through a long and dark night.

April 21, 1889.

EDWARD CARPENTER.

OUR FIELDS AND CITIES.

George Sturt's query in relation to St. George's Farm, Totley (Commonweal, April 20th) is very helpful. To provide for the millions, now being killed in towns and cities, is the question on which many others turn; the control of agriculture is a condition in the path of our progress which Kropotkin recognises in his article in the Nineteenth Century, June, 1888.

I write from a district in which 24,000 population have 90,000 acres of average arable land to breathe in—we have nearly 4 acres a head to swing our arms upon—and the adjoining districts are very similarly placed. The wild animals, wild birds, and wild fruits which might be here in a wild state, would nearly feed us all, and it is only 40 miles from London! In most of the villages the existing population would be ten years in getting the land prepared for an average vegetable crop. We require quite double our present population to do the work of agriculture alone, as it ought to be done, even in the present way of doing it, which, as is well known, is imperfect.

If the additional workers could be added quietly, they would be incorporated into rural life without the difficulty that most people think. There is not much to fear that the town worker could not mix with the rural worker, when once each saw that it is needful to both that they should so mix. The business of agriculture is not the mystery that the land-holders would make us believe. Almost every worker knows what to do and when to do it, and a very large percentage could guide a freshman without external supervision; but to secure the cordial co-operation of the present rural worker it is necessary first to show him that the added men are not to be competitors who might eat him up. The wretched circumstances under which he has grown up leave him very much a prey to jealousy of "strangers," as the present middle-class teach him to regard every one outside his native parish.

Our Radical friends say, "Nationalise the land and all will change," but their scheme would place much more power in the hands of farmers than they now have (economically). Land Nationalisers speak as if forty millions of cultivated acres were already in half-acre "allotments."

The most useful propaganda for the country districts would be co-operative farms. They would excite the deadly hostility of the existing master agriculturist, which in itself would be of the greatest assistance to the Cause. To establish a co-operative farm we should have to face a stiff rent and an equally stiff rate of usury on the cost of implements, cattle, etc., for equipment. I can find a sufficient number of men ready to take the work up, but they say "How are we to get over the first harvest?" Clearly by the use of the product of previous labour, which just at this moment is in a farmer's keeping, and consists of certain sheep and other things which when he counts he calls his; and the men who are about have a habit of thinking they are his and not theirs.

Co-operative farms would bring back the people to the localities where the death-rate is 13 in the thousand instead of 19 to 30; they would transform field-work from its present drudgery into a pleasant occupation carried on by healthy people in its proper season, so as to afford reasonable leisure when the elements prohibit outdoor work; at which times the state of the workers is now that of exceptional misery.

Should "Our Cities" smash up suddenly, and not give the interval for quietly transferring the people back to the land, we shall indeed have to use all our wits and energies too. The confusion will be great.

JOHN GREENWOOD.

SOCIALIST DEMONSTRATION ON BLACKSTONE EDGE.

A great Socialist demonstration will be held on Blackstone Edge, on Sunday May 5th, 1889. The following will address the meeting: Mr. R. B. Cunninghame Graham, Labour M.P. for Lanark; comrade Frank Kitz, representative of the Socialist League; comrade H. M. Hyndman, representative of the S.D.F.; comrade A. Wess, representative of the international workmen; comrades Maguire and Paylor, Leeds, representatives of Yorkshire; comrades Horrocks, Riding, Sharples, representatives of Lancashire; also comrades Walkden, Ritsou, Phair, Shufflebotham, West, Radcliffe, Marshall, Parkinson, Hall, Evans, Thompson, and others.

A preliminary meeting will be held at the Big Lamp, Littleborough, at 11.30—comrade Evans in the chair. The meeting will be addressed by comrades Horrocks, Hall, Kitz, Shufflebotham, West, Wess, Walkden, and Thompson.

At 12.30 a Welcome Dinner to the various representatives will be held in the Turner Dining Rooms, Littleborough. Tickets, 1s. each. Early application is necessary, as the hall is limited for size.

At 1.20 the Branches will be marshalled at the Lamp, Littleborough, and proceed to Blackstone Edge at 1.30 in processional order as follows: 1st, Speakers and Council; 2. Blackburn; 3. Sheffield; 4. Bolton; 5. Leeds; 6. Manchester and International; 7. Daiwen; 8. Salford; 9. Bradford. 10. Rochdale.

The chair will be taken at 3 p.m. prompt by Dr. Geo. Brown, Rochdale, and the following resolutions will be submitted to the meeting and supported by the various comrades:

1st resolution—"That this meeting, recognising the terrible privations of the skilled and unskilled artisans from want of employment, therefore calls on the borough and councils to employ them in useful work by the erection of healthy artizan dwellings, to be let at the cost of erection and maintenance, and other public works, at trade union rate of wages."

2nd resolution—"That this meeting calls upon the Government to introduce a compulsory Eight Hours Bill, and enforce the registration of places or habitations as workshops wherever any article is in the process of manufacture."

3rd resolution—"That this meeting of the masses of Yorkshire and Lancashire recognises the justice of the claim that Socialism is the only means for the complete emancipation of the toiling masses, and we therefore pledge ourselves to enroll ourselves as members of Socialist bodies and work for the accomplishment of the Social Revolution."

A meeting will be held in the evening at the Town Hall Square, Rochdale, on the return from Blackstone Edge.

All communications, applications for dinner tickets, etc., to be made to comrade J. M. Hutchison, 24 Manchester Street, Salford, who alone has authority to make all arrangements.

J. M. HUTCHISON, Sec. Lancashire Council.

NOTE FROM ABERDEEN.—During the last fortnight, a discussion which has attracted a good deal of interest and attention, was opened up in the columns of a local Conservative evening paper by Webster and Leatham, each writing without knowing that the other was doing so, and both letters appearing simultaneously. The subject was the position of the mill-worker, upon which a local clerical "worker's friend" had delivered a rose-coloured and misleading sermon, of which a report had appeared in said Conservative organ. The reporter spoke with appreciation of the practicality of the reverend philanthropist's sermon; but in a leader which followed our comrade's letters the editor assumed a very different tone, making a frank confession of the miserable condition of the millworkers. We find that Gronlund's advice as to invading the capitalist press with Socialistic contributions can be followed with good results.—L.

LABOUR IN SOUTH AFRICA.—Mr. John Hogan, Chairman Johannesburg Building Trades' Association, writes to Reynolds respecting a cablegram sent from Johannesburg to some English papers by a Mr. G. Kynoch, M.P., reading, "Transvaal wants thousands carpenters, masons, bricklayers; 30s. daily." He says: Mr. G. Kynoch, M.P., has been grossly misinformed as to the wants of the Transvaal, or has knowingly given a very misleading account of the actual condition concerning the building trades of this State, and more especially of Johannesburg and Pretoria. I believe the cablegram was sent about the beginning of January this year; wages were then on the average 18s. per day of nine hours, and, anticipating a rise of wages, the cablegram may have been forwarded for motives best known to the sender and speculative gentry of these parts. About two and a half years ago the ruling wages for Johannesburg was 7s. 6d. to 10s. per day of ten hours, and has risen with the development of these gold-fields to 22s. 6d. per diem of nine hours—the average for the present week. Considering the stir made among the English artisans by such reports, I think it but right the other side of the question should be put. The cost from an English port to a South African port can easily be reckoned at your end of the journey, and after landing at Port Natal, which I daresay leaves the shortest route to these fields (about 400 miles), £15 would no more cover the journey per rail and coach. All luggage is forwarded about 240 miles by mule and bullock waggons, the trip by the former occupying ten to fifteen days; the latter, eighteen to thirty days. Board and lodging comes between 35s. and 45s. per week, exclusive of washing. At present house rent is very high, three or four roomed cottages are not to be had, nor any class of dwelling suited for a married working man. The cable message may give an impression that the Transvaal is thickly studied with towns, where employment is easily obtained, whereas the very opposite is the case. Johannesburg, Pretoria, and Klerkshorp are the only towns where artisans could reasonably chance a trip in search of employment, and already artisans are flocking to this place in great numbers from Natal and the Cape Colony. Building material often runs short of the demand, and at present fully one-half of the jobs are at a standstill through the scarcity of bricks, caused by the monopoly granted by the Government to a syndicate for the manufacture of bricks by steam in Johannesburg. And when material can be obtained, some builders have a peculiar idea in advertising fifteen to twenty men wanted, to suit their requirements of five to seven men. Such an advertisement is often the means of breaking up home and luring people this way. White labourers have no chance in the Transvaal, and I may say South Africa, as the blacks can be got to work for 1s. to 3s. per day, sunrise to sunset, and blacks are also principally engaged in the mines, having a white man to boss them up. American and Swedish manufactured doors, sashes, frames, and other class of joinery leaves little to be done in that line, and the means of transit are so uncertain that tradesmen lose a good deal of time. Apologising for the length of this letter, and hoping the above will prepare those artisans who are contemplating a trip to this El Dorado—El Dorado to capitalists and company mongers alone—not to expect a bed of roses, but 22s. 6d. a-day for 22s. 6d. worth of labour, and also to caution them before acting on the advice of questionable cablegrams, believe me yours truly.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The Fife and Clackmannan coalmasters have decided that the present prices do not warrant any advance in miners' wages. The men had asked for 10 per cent.

IRONWORKERS' WAGES.—Notices were posted on the 25th at the extensive works of the Dowlais Iron and Steel Company, informing the employés that it had been decided to grant an advance of wages to all the hands.

At a meeting of blast furnacemen, held on Thursday 25th, at the Hen and Chickens Inn, Castle Street, Dudley, the resolution passed a week or so ago was confirmed, that two men from each works should wait on the masters and ask for a 10 per cent. advance, and report to a meeting on May the 6th.

The Saltmakers' Association of Winsford, Cheshire, has issued a notice to the Salt Union demanding a reduction of the hours for men and an increase in number of men working in gangs, and stating that if their demands are not conceded every man in the employ of the Union in Cheshire will be called out.

SEAMEN'S WAGES.—The seamen on the Tyne, who are members of the Sailors' and Firemen's General Association, are at present agitating for an advance of wages—namely, £4 5s. on deck, £4 10s. below, £5 for cooks and stewards, and carpenters £6 per month. A public meeting and demonstration were held Monday 29th at North and South Shields. Resolutions were passed urging the men to stand out for the advance, and recommending the men not to ship with non-union men.

CHAINMAKERS.—A meeting of chainmakers has been held at the New Town Lane Schools, Cradley Heath, at which a resolution was carried to declare a general strike at all the factories where the employers refuse to pay the list prices. There appears to be a general impression amongst the leaders of the men and operatives alike that the strike will be of short duration. The new list represents an increase in wages ranging from 5 to 12½ per cent. A cordial letter was read from Cunninghame Graham, M.P., and it was also reported that some employers had already given in.

NORTHERN COLLIERS' WAGES.—The fresh ballot of the county of Durham coalminers has been completed. The existing sliding-scale is unanimously condemned, and an increase of 20 per cent. in wages is demanded. The present sliding-scale terminates in about two months' time. A mass meeting of the miners at the Seaham Harbour and Rainton Collieries and the men from the neighbouring collieries held a mass meeting on Saturday afternoon at Seaham Harbour, and decided to demand an advance of 20 per cent. in wages. Resolutions were also passed condemning the local sliding-scale, and calling upon the Durham miners generally to organise more efficiently. A meeting of Northumberland officials with reference to the soft coal trade in that county was held same day. It was reported that the notices which had been sent in by the men engaged in the soft coal trade asking to be placed on the same footing as those at the steam coal collieries had been withdrawn.

WEST BROMWICH BRICK TRADE.—The agitation respecting wages in the brick trade is now extending to the Black Country. A dispute has arisen at one of the largest brickworks in West Bromwich between the employers and the setters and drawers as to rate of wages to be paid in future. The kilns in which the bricks are made have been recently enlarged, and under these circumstances the men employed in setting and drawing claimed an advance. It has been the custom to pay the men piece-work, a certain number of days being allowed for drawing and setting the kilns. The men contended that the enlargement of the kilns considerably increased their stint, and applied to have a sum equal to a quarter of a day's wages added to the allowance to each kiln. This the employers declined at first to concede. The men then gave a week's notice, which expired on Friday 19th. Meantime the masters advertised for other men, and at one time the dispute wore a serious aspect. It was, however, reported last Friday that the employers had given in and that the men would resume work last Monday.

WAGES IN THE COAL TRADE.—At a numerously attended meeting of colliery proprietors at Manchester on the 16th ult., it was unanimously resolved to refuse an advance on the ground that it was not warranted by the state of trade. An interview took place at Sheffield on the 17th ult. between the coalowners of South and West Yorkshire and the Yorkshire Miners' Association, on the question of an advance of 10 per cent. On behalf of the men it was urged that the coalowners were quite able to concede the advance, but the owners declared that neither trade nor prices had improved so much as to justify it. The deputation said they would report the result to the National Miners' Conference at Nottingham, and no doubt the men of Yorkshire would abide by the decision there come to. If a strike were decided upon the men would come out. Eight large mass meetings were held in different parts of Yorkshire on the 19th to demand the advance. The wages position in Staffordshire is becoming serious. The employers' section of the Wages Board have resolved to refuse the demand for a reduction on the basis selling price of coal to 4s. 9d., arguing that it would raise wages abnormally high. They will advise the men to accept the present 5s. basis on the ground that probably by the second week in May the scale itself will give a 5 per cent. advance. The men may determine to send in their notices, but the masters will not give way. The board meets on Tuesday.

THE BERNER STREET POLICE OUTRAGE.

The infamous sentence passed by Jeffries Edlin upon our comrade Lewis Diemshietz is of a piece with the whole procedure of the case since the brutal outrage committed by the police on 16th March. The accused men and their witnesses were kept in dalliance around the court day by day; and to show that the other side knew perfectly well when the case would really come, no police witnesses (sic!) were visible until the hearing of the case.

To be ill-treated, imprisoned, and financially ruined is the lot of comrade Diemshietz, and we here appeal to all Socialists to help us in our efforts to obtain a reversal of the sentence and defray the costs of the defence. We wish also to recompense Diemshietz for his loss.

F. KITZ, Sec. Defence Com.

HACKNEY RADICAL CLUB, 5 The Grove, Mare Street, Hackney.—Monday May 6, at 8.30, Hubert Bland, "Where Radicalism Fails."

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

FRANCE.

A new Socialist organ has been started at Paris, entitled Quatre-vingt-treize ("1793"). It is a weekly exponent of the revolutionary ideas, and has, among its contributors, Eugène Fournière, the author of l'Intégral; Basley and Cluseret, Socialist deputies; Amilcare Cipriani, the Italian soldier of universal revolution; Benoît Malon, editor of La Revue Socialiste; and several others.

A few days ago there died at Paris a man who has rendered great services to the cause of social revolution—Antonio de la Calle, former revolutionary Minister of Public Works at Carthage during the memorable and glorious insurrection of 1873. He was also a very distinguished philologist. From the time of the defeat of the Spanish revolt down to his death, he has lived an exile in Paris, and has written very remarkable essays and studies on the political and social events of his native country, which were published in La Justice.

BELGIUM.

The Parti ouvrier has held its annual conference at Jolimont, in the province of Hainault, and it has been attended by M. Paulard, Municipal Councillor of Paris, one of the leaders of the Possibilist party of France. The Belgian Socialists have decided to officially take part in the proceedings of the next international congress of Paris, got up by the Possibilists, in spite of the report given to the conference by comrade Volders, formerly delegate of the executive of the Parti ouvrier at the Hague conference—a report which concluded to the abstention of the Belgians from the Paris Possibilist Congress. The Jolimont conference, however, has also finally decided to send delegates to the Marxist International Congress.

The Belgian Anarchists have resolved to start a weekly entitled Le Drapeau noir (the Black Flag).

The trial for high treason of comrade Defuisseaux and twenty-seven other Socialists will begin on May 6th, before the Court of Assize at Mons.

HOLLAND.

Shortly, a new Socialist paper will appear at Flushing, province Zeeland, under the title Licht en Waarheid (Light and Truth). This new weekly journal, published by L. Mieremet, is intended to be a purely theoretical organ of the Socialist ideas, in order not to interfere with Recht voor Allen, which brings all kinds of news. Some time ago another weekly was started at Flushing, entitled Volkstem (Voice of the People), but it did not succeed, and was obliged to stop its publication. We hope that this venture will meet with a better fate and do good service to the cause.

Last year we announced in these Notes the death of one of the most learned men among the Dutch Socialists—comrade Roorla van Eysinga. His friends now intend to publish the articles which he wrote in various periodicals and magazines. The two first series of a book entitled 'Brieven zonder oorspronkelijkheid' (Letters without originality) have already appeared and are most interesting. They contain a scientific demonstration of the Anarchist idea and a critical essay on parliamentarism.

Comrade Croll, co-editor of Recht voor Allen, has just published a small pamphlet on 'Co-operation,' in which he warns all Socialists not to lay any stress on the "co-operative business," not only as a Socialist aim, but even as a means towards the realization of the Socialist doctrines. The publication of this pamphlet is all the more significant, since comrade Croll himself has done his utmost to encourage the development of co-operative institutions, and in fact Holland has for the last two or three years indulged very much indeed in that special line. The Dutch comrades have now begun to find out that the spirit of revolt, without which a sincere Socialist can hardly be imagined, is vanishing away in proportion to the progress and success of the co-operative institutions, and they think that it is high time to stop that game. Comrade Croll's pamphlet has been widely spread and no doubt will do a good deal of real socialistic propaganda among the Dutch Socialists and co-operators.

The Dutch Radicals through the initiative of M. Stoffel, manufacturer at Deventer, and under the impulsion of M. Flürscheim, the German apostle of the land nationalisation idea, have just started an agrarian league, with a view of pursuing the same ends as the kindred German and Swiss associations and the English and American "peaceful transformers of private property." The Dutch Socialist workers are not in the least concerned in the new movement, which up to the present time, at any rate, is only got up by the Radical bourgeoisie.

NORWAY.

For some time past the compositors and printers have been on strike at Christiania. They do not only ask for higher wages, but also want to bring about a complete reorganisation of the printeries. It is a general strike of the whole trade that is going on, and the workers have up to now been supported by the Socialist party and by several foreign branches of their fellow-tradesmen. Some of the most important printing firms have tried to get workers from Denmark, but as soon as they arrived at Christiania they heard that they had been engaged under false pretences, and altogether refused to start work. One of these printing firms has to do all the official printery, as the publication of the parliamentary records, the official gazette, etc., and now the copy has to be sent over to Denmark. The compositors in Christiania convened a large meeting to protest against the action of the Government, but they were interfered with by the police, who proclaimed the meeting. An interpellation was made in the Chamber of Deputies, in order to protest against such proclamation, with the result that 34 members out of 78 declared themselves against the Government.

SERVIA.

Parliamentarism is flourishing in a strange way in little Serbia! The other day the deputy Tovanovich, a prominent member of the progressist and Radical party, was murdered at Mutnez, at the instigation of his political opponents,—a very easy method of simplifying party politics.

V. D.

LABOUR EMANCIPATION LEAGUE—Sunday afternoon Outings.—The first of the series will take place on Sunday May 5th, to the Merton Socialist Club, and will consist of the members and friends of the Bethnal Green Branch of the S.D.F. and the L.E.L. (Hoxton). A demonstration will be held on Mitcham Fair Green at 7 p.m. Brakes will start from the L.E.L., 1 Hoxton Square, Hoxton, N., at 2 p.m. Tickets 1s. 3d. each, may be had of the members of the above organisations. Tickets must be paid for by Saturday 4th. H. A. Barker, Excur. Sec.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, May 6, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Commonweals for 1888, handsomely bound in red, are now ready, price 5s. per post, 5s. 6d.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th. Place of meeting and other particulars will be duly announced.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Oxford, to end of September. 1889:—Clerkenwell and Mitcham, to end of February. North London, East London, and St. Georges East, to end of March. Bradford, Hammersmith, and Leicester, to end of April.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible.

Propaganda Committee.—The Propaganda Committee meets on Tuesday, May 7th, at 8.30 p.m. Important business; all members of the League interested in the propaganda invited to attend. The leaflet, "A Straight Talk to Working Men," is now on sale at 3s. per 1,000. Can be obtained of the Secretary, at 13, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

Defence Committee (Berner Street).—Hammersmith, 17s.; collected at Clerkenwell Green, 4s. 5d.; Manchester Branch, 2s.; and Leeds Branch, 4s. 8d.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.
FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—Blundell, 1s.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; R. Turner, 1s. 6d.; J. Turner, 1s.; Kitz, 1s.; Nicoll, 1s.; Rose, 1s.; Samuels, 1s.; Greenbark, 5s.; and B. W., 1s. Norwich Branch, 2s. and 1s.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

CLERKENWELL.—An indignation meeting was held on Clerkenwell Green last Sunday, to protest against the unjust sentences passed by Edlin against our comrades of the Berner Street Club; Parker, Murphy (I.N.R.), Mr. Benn (F.R.C.), Mowbray, Nicoll, and Cores spoke; 4s. 5d. collected.

HAMMERSMITH.—Largest meeting yet held at Latimer Road on Sunday morning; speakers were Lynes, sen., Lynes, jun., Maughan, and A. J. Smith; 42 Commonweal sold. At Weltje Road in evening, we had a large meeting; our speakers were Crouch, W. Morris, and Lynes, sen.; 12 Commonweal sold. At Kelmscott House, G. B. Shaw (Fabian) lectured; many questions and heated debate.—G. M.

HYDE PARK.—Cantwell, Brookes, and Mrs. Lahr spoke; 6d. collected.

MITCHAM.—A good meeting held on the Fair Green; good sale of Commonweal. In the evening at the rooms a branch meeting was held, and S. Gregory elected as assistant secretary; 1s. collected for local propaganda.

ST. GEORGES-IN-THE-EAST.—Comrade Blackwell being unable to get away from work in time to lecture, comrade Brookes took his place and gave an interesting address on "The Growth of Thought in India." Questions and slight discussion at close. A splendid meeting at Mile End Waste on Saturday night, addressed by Brookes, Cores, and Hicks. No meeting at Leman Street last Sunday morning on account of rain.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on 22nd, John Robertson's paper on "Culture and Pessimism" (being the companion lecture to the one of last week) was read and discussed. At Castle Street on Saturday night, Duncan and Leatham addressed a large crowd; questions at close.—J. L.

EDINBURGH.—On 22nd, Henry George held forth in Music Hall; well heckled by Socialists; wonderful display on the "prophet's" part of quibbling and double-shuffling.

GLASGOW.—On Thursday evening, Henry George's single tax theory was discussed; there was a good attendance of members. On Sunday at mid-day, Joe Burgoyne and Glasier spoke on Jail Square; at 5.30, Glasier, Joe Burgoyne, and Gilbert spoke at Paisley Road; and at 7 o'clock Joe Burgoyne and Glasier spoke at St. George's Cross. On the previous week, for which no report was sent to the Weal, Leo Melliet visited our rooms several times and gave interesting addresses to the members.

MANCHESTER.—At our meeting in Stevenson Square, McCormick (of London) spoke to a good audience, and gave a graphic account of the police outrage at Berner Street, E.; Bourne, Rison, and Baillie also spoke; 2s. collected for Defence Fund, but, unfortunately, the rain dispersed many of our audience. At night we had the best meeting since we began at Chester Road; speakers were McCormick, Marshall, and Baillie. We find the singing of Socialist songs much appreciated. No meetings here on Sunday next, as we shall be at Blackstone Edge Socialist Demonstration.

NORWICH.—Sunday afternoon, good meeting in Market Place; Poynots opened, followed by Darley; fair sale of Commonweal. In evening, usual lecture not held; the members held a social meeting. All comrades interested in the propaganda are requested to attend next members' meeting.

YARMOUTH.—Two meetings on Priory Plain Sunday; largely attended; speakers Reynolds and Ruffald; 3s. 5d. collected and 21 Commonweal sold. In evening, several comrades met for developing public speakers.—C. R.

DUBLIN PROGRESSIVE CLUB.—At 87 Marlboro Street, Saturday April 27th, G. King lectured on "The Prospects of the Irish Workman." The lecturer dealt with the conditions of industrial life in Ireland, and showed that Home Rule and peasant proprietary would not make any material change in the condition of the Irish workers. A vigorous discussion followed, in which the views of the speaker were violently assailed. Conlon, Shields, and Frizelle spoke.

RATHMINES BRANCH, IRISH NATIONAL LEAGUE.—On Wednesday evening Mr. Dixon, jun., delivered an address on Socialism. There was a good attendance, and the lecture was listened to with great attention. In the course of a lengthened address Mr. Dixon said he was not a land-nationaliser, for he could not consider it as the real solution of the land difficulty. He went on to show that Socialism, in the truest and purest sense, could only be the proper solution. And though universal Socialism, which was his ideal—may be very remote, still that was no reason why they should not continue to pursue that aspiration until its practicability shall have been tested (cheers). A very warm discussion followed, and a vote of thanks.

ELEUSIS CLUB, 180 King's Road, Chelsea, S.W.—Sunday May 5, at 8 p.m., Mr. E. F. V. Knox, B.A., "The Irish Question."

SHEFFIELD.—Hall of Science, Sunday May 5, J. Sketchley—subject, "Nationalisation of the Land—Why Needed, and How."

CLUB AUTONOME, 6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road, W.—Sunday May 5, 7 p.m., a lecture—"How to Abolish the Monopoly of Land and Money."

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Sunday May 5, at 7 p.m., Special Business Meeting. At 8.30, lecture by F. Charles, "What's to be done during a Revolutionary Period."

East London.—Business meeting on Sunday May 5th, at 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road.

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend.

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday May 5, at 8 p.m., A Lecture. Thursday May 9, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 10, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary. On Wednesday May 8, lecture by C. W. Mowbray, "Socialism and Politics."

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Oddfellows' Small Hall, Crooked Lane.

Bradford.—Laycock's Temperance Hotel, Albion Court, Kirkgate. Tuesday May 7th, at 7.30, lecture by Gaskell. Waggonettes will leave Bradford Town Hall on Sunday May 5th, for Blackstone-Edge, at 9.30 a.m. P. Bland, 5 Buxton Street, Manningham, secretary.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Discussion Class on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets on Mondays at 8 p.m. Members wishing to join in our Saturday afternoon propaganda excursions are requested to assemble in Rooms on Saturdays at 4.30. On Thursday evening, May 9th, J. H. Moffat will read a paper in Rooms—subject, "The Social Condition of the People during the Time of Shakespere."

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Manchester.—Working Men's Educational Club, 122 Corporation Street.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 8, lecture in the Gordon Hall. Tuesday, A special meeting of Members will be held in Gordon Hall, at 8.30, for the election of officers, and other important business. Wednesday, at 8.30, Discussion Class. Monday, Thursday, and Friday, Hall open from 8.30. Saturday, Co-operative Clothing Association.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Business meeting every Tuesday evening. Elocution Class at comrade Hadley's every Friday at 8 p.m. Commonweal sold by Mr. Hous, newsagent, George Street.

FRIENDS WILLING TO AID in forming Branches in the undermentioned places are asked to write to the addresses given: Liverpool—W. H. Chapman, Vegetarian Restaurant, 1 Chapman St. Walworth and Camberwell—3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green. Wimbledon and Merton—F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Hoxton—H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road. Streatham—J. Campbell, 98 Wellfield Road, Streatham.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY 4.

8 Mile-end Waste Cores and Brookes.

SUNDAY 5.

10.30..... Latimer Road Station Hammersmith Branch

11.30..... Bethnal Green—Gibraltar Walk The Branch

11.30..... "Canterbury Arms"—Kilburn Road The Branch

11.30..... Hammersmith—St. Ann's Road The Branch

11.30..... Kensal Green The Branch

11.30..... Mitcham Fair Green Mainwaring

11.30..... Regent's Park Nicoll and Mrs. Schack

11.30..... Walham Green, opposite Station The Branch

11.30..... Leman Street, Shadwell Mowbray and Turner

3.30..... Hyde Park Nicoll, Mrs. Lahr, and Hicks

3.30..... Victoria Park Davis and Mrs. Schack

7 Clerkenwell Green The Branch

7 Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park The Branch

7 Mitcham Fair Green... Demonstn. by L.E.L., L.U., S.D.F., and S.L.

TUESDAY 7.

8 Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch.

THURSDAY 9.

8 Ossulton Street Nicoll.

FRIDAY 10.

8.15..... Hoxton Church The Branch.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Manchester.—Outdoor meetings every Sunday. Stevenson Square at 3 p.m.; Viaduct, Chester Road, at 7.30.

Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3 and 7.30.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

SCOTTISH LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.

Carnoustie.—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant.

Dundee.—Meetings every Sunday in Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Edinburgh.—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8.

Galashiels.—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, Secretary. Gallatown and Dysart (Fife)—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. A.

Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street, Secretary. Kilmarnock.—Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday. H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street, Secretary. West Calder.—

Robert Lindsay, West Calder, Secretary.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower March, Lambeth.—Tuesday May 7, at 8 p.m., E. B. Aveling, D.Sc., "Henry George and Socialism."

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . . 1d.
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . . 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . . 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . . . 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . . 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . . 1d.
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . . 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post-free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Our Parish and Our Duke;

OR, WHAT LAND NATIONALISATION MEANS.

A Letter to my Fellow-Parishioners.

BY

EDWARD CARPENTER.

To be had of the Author, Millthorpe, near Chesterfield. Price 2s. per 100, post free.

ARBEJDEREN

("The Worker")

DANISH SOCIALIST WEEKLY.

Edited and published by NICOLAJ PETERSEN and GERSON TRIER.

Subscription 3s. a-year.

Nansensgade 28A, Copenhagen.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

299 SHALESMOOR, SHEFFIELD.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. 1 copy, 2d.; by post, 3d.; 3 copies, 8d.; 6, 1s. 3d.; 12, 2s. 5d.; 24, 4s. 9d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free. 50, post free, 6s. 100, post free, 11s.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LIFE OF ALBERT R. PARSONS.

290 PAGES, BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

Telling the Story of his Life, so full of startling incidents, ending with the tragedy of Nov. 11, 1887.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM

GEN. B. F. BUTLER, GEN. W. H. PARSONS, CAPT. W. P. BLACK, GEO. A. SCHILLING, and others, make this one of the most interesting books of our time.

Price (Postpaid) 6s. 6d.

Address—MRS. PARSONS, 785 Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

KARL MARX.

A NEW AND HIGHLY ARTISTIC ETCHING.

India Proof, 19 by 24 inches.

Price Two Dollars.

ETCHED AND PUBLISHED BY ALFRED C. KIHN, 293 Jay Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., U.S.A.

Also for sale at New York Labour News Co., 25 East Fourth Street, N.Y.

Copies mailed to any address on receipt of price.

Can be had of W. Reeves, 185 Fleet Street, London.

FREIHEIT

INTERNATIONAL ORGAN OF THE GERMAN-SPEAKING ANARCHISTS.

EDITED BY JOHN MOST.

Subscription, 2s. per quarter; under cover, 4s.

John Müller, Post Office Box 3135, New York, U.S.A., or Office of Commonweal.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Just Published, square crown 8vo, 200 pp., 6s.

A TALE OF THE HOUSE OF THE WOLFINGS, and all the Kindreds of the Mark. Written in Prose and Verse.

Library Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
Vol. III., AUTUMN . . . seventh edition 12s.
Vol. IV., WINTER . . . seventh edition 12s.

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo, at 2s. 6d. each.

ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE ÆNEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond A Morality.

Square 12mo, 143 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

DER ARME TEUFEL.

EDITED BY ROBERT REITZEL.

Offices: 6 Champlain Street, Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Subscription, 2 dols. 50 c. yearly.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3D. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2S. 6D.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

COMMONWEAL OFFICE, 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEALTH

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 174.

SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

ONE could hardly have a better specimen of the inefficiency, stupidity, and humbug of Parliament, than the debate on the Leasehold Enfranchisement Bill. In the first place, the measure, whatever its merits or demerits, might be, purported to be a bill in the interests of the working-classes. This was enough to thin the House down to the number which are usually got together when anything of any interest to the public has to be discussed, for nothing of that kind of course interests the House at all.

Then consider the ignorance of these legislators! Both sides approached this bill as though it were of a terribly Socialistic and revolutionary affair; its promoters thought they were making a great concession to the growing feeling for Socialism, and that the working-classes would almost have a new life given them by it. The professed reactionaries attacked it on the same grounds, the useful Mr. Matthews saying that he looked at it as blank Communism, and that it attacked the principles of private property directly.

What an exhibition of ignorance! The truth is that it is really a definitely Conservative and reactionary measure, and the booby Matthews with the whole of his colleagues ought to have supported it, carried it, and put it into working order. Here is the point, stated over and over again by Socialists. Landlordism is bad; landlords are bad; therefore, says this sham Socialistic measure, let us break these few landlords up that now exist into many pieces, and so have more and more landlords; each one of these landlords will be a "kind of a man" with an interest in the monopoly in which he shares, and which he will do his utmost to defend. What can possibly result except the strengthening of the monopoly which it is the business of Mr. Matthews and his crew to defend, and which it is the business of every Socialist to attack?¹

The Vigilance Committee who are so watchful over our morals are making another attack on Zola, this time through expurgated English editions. Apart from the blatant hypocrisy which attacks the symptoms and lets the causes alone, this is a gross piece of stupidity. What do they object to? The coarseness? This is a matter of art; it must be admitted that there are works which sin against art in this direction. But what then? Is bad taste to be made a matter for a criminal court? In that case I think the prisons might be filled to overflowing with criminals taken from the "cultivated" and "refined" classes. Besides, there are many sinners among the English classics in this respect; in a breath—Fielding, Chaucer, Shakespeare, and our translation of the Bible must be condemned and expurgated.

Or is the demoralising effect on people to be the matter to be considered in the extremely "moral" air of a Court of Justice? And how pray? I hold that there are dozens of most respectable works which the Vigilance Society wouldn't think of attacking, which are far more demoralising and corrupting than Zola. Henry James' novels for instance; or even in their feeble way, Mr. Besant's imitations of Charles Reade, whose books, though very amusing, are not specially "moral" (small blame to them) according to the standard of the Vigilance Society.

W. M.

The Pall Mall has been commenting severely on the "too-elaborate 'editing'" of the Irish World, taking as its text the telegram from Mr. Parnell to Patrick Ford, upon which the light and playful pen of the editor had been professionally exercised. Here is the telegram, with the parts added in editing printed in italic:

¹ It may be worth preserving for future reference the following particulars:—The second reading of the Leaseholders Enfranchisement Bill in the House of Commons on Wednesday, May 1, was supported by 124 Gladstonian Liberals, including Mr. Gladstone, Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Mundella, and Sir George Trevelyan; 13 Irish Nationalists; 11 Conservatives: Sir George Elliot, Sir E. Lechmere, Sir John Puleston, Admiral Mayne, Colonel Hughes, Messrs. Holloway, Kelly, Mallock, B. Robinson, Seton-Karr, and Whitmore, and eleven Liberal Unionists, including Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Caine. The majority which rejected the bill was composed of 172 Conservatives and 15 Liberal Unionists.

"Montreal, March 9th, 1889.
"Will be leaving on Thursday for Ireland in the 'Baltic.' Shall, of course, return to America after the elections. The work here is vitally important, and must go on. Tell my friends to keep the good work going and the flag flying, and we shall come back with victory shining on our banners to complete a labour in America that is yet scarcely begun. Dillon remains here on guard, and will keep the ball rolling till my return. Canada has welcomed us magnificently, and Montreal turned out in a style that shows to our enemies that Irish hearts are Irish everywhere. Men of America! keep on forming Land Leagues—and above all, sustain the men at home in the present crisis. Have called, by telegraph, a hurried conference of Irish leaders at the New York Hotel on the morning of my departure. Hope for your presence."

Hereupon the Pall Mall moralizes:

"The art of padding has certainly been carried to great length in America. It is a useful art in its way, for when you are using the telegraph, especially from great distances, it is ruinously expensive to transmit all the words which form what may be called the cartilaginous matter of the dispatch. All that is necessary is to telegraph the bones and allow the ingenious news-editor at the other end to clothe them with flesh and blood. This method, however, which is perfectly innocuous when practised with discretion and with the assent of the sender of the telegram, becomes very mischievous when it is practised without discretion and without the prior knowledge of the person who telegraphs. And the proof that such padding is resorted to so unscrupulously as to transform the whole character of the dispatch, entirely vitiates the claim of the newspaper indulging in such a practice to be the authentic record of contemporary history."

"Authentic record of contemporary history" indeed! The "perfectly innocuous" method when "practised with discretion," is as Mr. Stead well knows, exercised by every news-editor in London, and for the most part even more unscrupulously than by the Irish World man. Among the worst offenders are the Pall Mall and its evening rivals; while the one paper on which the "innocuous" method is least apparent is the much-abused Times. No! it is not only a few out-of-the-way papers or over-enterprising journals, as we Socialists know to our cost, the news-editors of which embody the "dry bones" of fact in the "flesh and blood" of an over-active fancy!

And as for the "authentic record," this hardly looks like it:

Pall Mall Gazette, April 24th.

"Lord Derby is, I hope, not going out of public life altogether. England can ill spare the active services of such clear-headed and independent peers as the Lord of Knowsley."

Pall Mall Gazette, April 25th.

"Lord Derby's chronic inability to make up his mind seems to have followed him. . . . In Lord Derby's case it is, no doubt, only another instance of the diseased scepticism of intellect." . . .

Journalists, like the members of all other trades and professions in these evil days, are, we know, crippled and corrupted by the economic conditions of their calling; but those of them who "set up" to be better than their neighbours must expect to be more severely judged than their "unregenerate" fellows, just as is the psalm-singing sweeter or the lay-preaching company-promoter. Mr. Stead must really cool his fiery indignation until he proves his own superiority to the conditions that make journalism what it is.

Nor, as we have said, are his evening rivals, democratic or otherwise, beyond reproach. Does not even the Star embroider? Has it not an "Artist, Unknown" whose name is less well than widely known among those who care anything for art, and who, under a specious covering of democratic cant, endeavours to conceal his presumptuous ignorance and morbid spite? Can it not preach Socialism one day and praise Broadhurst or Bradlaugh for their moderation on the next? Has it not been known to denounce a landlord (in Ireland) on the front page for exacting his rent, and a tenant (in England) on the back page for the non-payment of his?

But all these are little things—"legitimate business," and in the "ordinary way of trade." It is only when they are found out that they matter. In a state of society like that we live under, where the hurry-scurry of competition is so severe, and where a poor journalist has to please so many people, or at least to avoid offending them—shareholders, advertisers, readers, and political patrons—the wonder is that he has even a few rags of honesty left wherewith to drape his naked wickedness—or wicked nakedness. It is only when he would persuade one that those rags are a prophet's mantle or the gown of a grand inquisitor that one's rage rises and one feels inclined to fling the "confumelious stone."

THE ENGLISH REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT, 1815 TO 1817.

SPA-FIELDS RIOTS AND DERBYSHIRE INSURRECTION.

(Continued from p. 138.)

WHILE this is going on the riots still continue in Suffolk and Norfolk, and rioters are even beginning to advance into the Fen country. At Cambridge, the mayor and respectable citizens are much alarmed at seeing strange groups of countrymen loitering in the market-place armed with large and heavy sticks. A cry of panic goes through the town; these must be the Fen rioters. So, as it was in France in the Great Revolution, when the cry of "The Brigands are coming" rang through the land, the valiant shopkeepers of Cambridge formed themselves, not into a National Guard, but were sworn in as special constables to the number of three hundred, and Cambridge is saved from imminent riot and pillage. Thus panic spreads far and wide. That these people have some cause for their panic is made evident by some events that occur a few days afterwards. The people of Littleport, aided by some of the Suffolk rioters, gather in the night and attack the house of the Rev. Mr. Vachel. The reverend gentleman meets them at the door with a loaded pistol, but he is rushed upon and disarmed, and is soon flying over the fen country with his wife and daughters. It may surprise some of you that the people should attack ministers of the gospel and shopkeepers, but those who know anything of rural life know very well that these people are among the most brutal of village tyrants, and the only surprise is that they got off so lightly. The Rev. Vachel is also a country magistrate, another good reason for popular detestation. Well, the rioters are now in possession, the house of the reverend gentleman is pillaged, and they levy contributions of food and money from the respectable inhabitants. The Littleport rioters then start for Ely, a quiet cathedral town standing in the midst of the marshes, which even in these days of railroads and telegraphs carries one back into the distant past. These dangerous rioters are armed with every deadly weapon they can find. At Ely they are joined by the lower classes, and the respectable inhabitants are persuaded to part with a good deal of portable property. Butchers, bakers, grocers, and millers hasten with alacrity to supply the hungry rioters with a good store of victual in case a worse thing befall them. One confiding miller, a Mr. Richards, advances them £50 without the slightest security. Having thus spoiled the Egyptians the rioters return home.

Meanwhile, the yeomanry and troops are gathering, and advancing upon the lair of the insurgents. Littleport is surrounded; the insurgents retreat into the houses, from whence they fire on the troops. For a few minutes a sharp conflict is kept up, but the rebels at last give way and flee in all directions. They are pursued mercilessly by the cavalry, and seventy-three prisoners and sixty guns are captured by the friends of law-'n'-order. Five young men are afterwards hanged as the leaders in this revolt of hunger; they die with firmness and courage.

The effect of these disturbances was seen a few days afterwards, for at a meeting of the Lord Lieutenant and magistrates of the county of Suffolk, it was resolved, "That the most patient and careful attention should be given, with a view of tracing the causes of these disorders, and of relieving, as far as circumstances will permit, the present distresses of the labouring poor." It is strange that these gentlemen could not think of this before the people were forced into revolt by hunger and starvation. It seems that riots have their uses after all.

After the disturbances in Norfolk, the wicked pitmen on the Tyne begin to give trouble. It does not appear that they burnt any houses or broke any windows, but they had the fearful impudence to go on strike for higher wages, but fortunately, through the prompt and vigorous action of the magistrates, aided by two troops of cavalry, this sedition was nipped in the bud. Eight of the leaders were taken into custody and committed to prison, and the strikers who had dared to complain that their wages were inadequate, taking into consideration the high price of bread, were driven back like slaves to their work. And this in a country that talked over patriotic dinner-tables of its boasted freedom!

But despite the laudable exertions of the magistrates, the Eastern Counties are still in a very unquiet state. There are riots at Downham and Southey, where the labourers insist upon 2s. a day for their labour and fix the price of bread. Troops of yeomanry are hurried hither and thither to quell these smouldering embers of insurrection. Numerous arrests are made, and droves of prisoners are brought into Norwich. The insurrection has spread to Essex, where bands of men are marching about armed with axes, saws, and spades, and smashing machinery in every direction.

At Halstead a furious riot breaks out, the people liberating four prisoners who had been lodged in the House of Correction for machine-breaking. A police constable takes refuge from their vengeance in the shop of a local tradesman, the shop is furiously attacked and every window smashed to pieces. The people of the town are joined by friends from surrounding villages, who are armed with bludgeons, pitchforks, and other agricultural implements. The yeomanry, a force composed of slave-drivers, landlords, and farmers, is called out; the riot act is read, and the crowd is charged several times, but without effect, the cavalry recoiling before these desperate mutineers, who, entrenched in the churchyard amid the tombstones, do so bespatter them with brickbats, stones, and other missiles, that the yeomanry flee before the rioters, and window-breaking and attacks upon the houses of the middle-classes go on triumphantly. It isn't till the next day, when troops arrive from Colchester, that the riot subsides.

In Devon there are incendiary fires, and the whole town of Honiton is thrown into panic by their frequent occurrence. The watch patrols the streets throughout the night, and large vessels are kept filled with water stationed at frequent intervals in the streets. This, however, does not prevent a large farmhouse being burnt to the ground about a mile from the town.

An amusing illustration of the fearful funk into which the respectable classes were thrown at this time, is furnished by an incident that occurred at Maidenhead on July the 5th. The authorities of this small town were thrown into a terrible state of alarm by hearing that some miners were approaching, and dragging a coal waggon filled with coals. There being no work for them, they had adopted this means of soliciting the contributions of the charitable. It appears they had dragged this waggon all the way from Staffordshire. Now you would have thought there was little to be alarmed at in this, yet the news reaching London police officials were horribly frightened. Bow Street runners were sent to Maidenhead, the military were put under arms, special constables were sworn in, and all because some forty men were dragging a waggon of coal to London. The miners were met at Maidenhead thickets by the combined forces of the law, and were warned that they must not come any further or the consequences might be serious. The business ended by the magistrates of Maidenhead buying the coals and giving the miners a present of money, and the colliers returned back to Staffordshire. Several other parties were met with and sent home in a similar way.

On the 20th of July a terrific storm broke over England, with thunder and lightning, and one of the heaviest showers of rain ever known. Floods swept in torrents over the land, carrying away hay and corn, and destroying the crops in all directions. Thus the country was menaced with famine in the coming winter. But already matters were bad enough in the iron districts; factories are closed, and multitudes of workers wander crying for relief. Charity was exhausted, and many families were forced to eat cabbage stalks and the refuse of their little cottage gardens, the only food they could obtain. It was evident that matters would go from bad to worse in the winter that was coming.

The spirit of revolt is spreading far and wide in England, and on the 25th of August the prisoners in Newgate break out into sudden rebellion. A person visiting the jail loses his watch, a very natural occurrence in those days, when the prisoners were confined in a large common room during the day where their friends could see them, only being locked up in separate cells at night. The keeper orders the prisoners and their friends to be searched, but these men revolt against this indignity, and expel the officers and turnkeys of the prison from the wards in which they are confined; they tear up the iron railings of the stair-ways for weapons, and barricade the entrance to their wards with the prison furniture. The keepers fire some shots, but fear to attack these desperate insurgents. The jail is surrounded by a strong force of constables to prevent the prisoners escaping over the roof, or breaking through the walls of the jail into the street. They do attempt to break through into Warwick Lane, but the walls are too thick and they are ultimately forced to surrender by pangs of hunger on August 26th. Thirty of the most prominent of the rebels are picked out and placed in solitary confinement.

A band of robbers is captured at Saffron Walden, Essex, on the 12th of October. It is admitted by the ordinary press of the time that it is poverty that has forced them to this irregular method of living, for the poor men in the neighbourhood cannot earn higher wages than 6d. or 8d. a-day. These robbers were in the habit of attacking the houses of farmers and gentlemen, and in the course of their operations one man had been shot in his house. The band numbered twelve altogether, and a man, his wife, and three sons were among the number. Many worthy people were very much shocked at the levity and indifference displayed by these rebels against law-'n'-order upon their arrest.

On October 16th, some Luddites, disguised and with blackened faces, appear at the village of Loughboro, near Leicester, and smash numerous lace-making machines that were producing shoddy goods and being worked under price. The leader of this mysterious band addresses the workmen employed in the factory, and tells them that if they can tell him where there are any other machines being worked under price they will go and serve them in the same way. Luddism evidently contained in it the elements of modern trade unionism. It must be remembered that at this time combinations for raising wages among working-men were forbidden by law, and that in consequence they always took a secret form. Any man joining in a combination, however peaceful and orderly, could be sent and were sent to prison for two or three months. Trade unionism was yet in its infancy, and, in fact, barely existed except in a very temporary and badly organised form. Despite these laws strikes occur, though they are usually treason riots and rebellion and are put down by all the force at the command of the government.

At this time there is a big strike among the men at the Tredegar Ironworks, Newport, who determine that as hard work only brings starvation, they might as well starve without work, and on the 21st of October they are out on strike. The strikers march through mountain passes to Merthyr Tydvil, intending to bring out their comrades who are employed at factories there. The magistrates at Merthyr Tydvil swear in special constables, and, arming them with pikes, station them in a narrow pass in the mountains to oppose the onward march of the strikers. The two opposing forces come face to face, and the strikers charge on the specials, who bolt, leaving their weapons in the hands of the insurgents. The strikers march on to Tydvil, are joined by the workmen there, and extinguish every blast furnace throughout the town. The strike spreads over the whole district, and the strikers at last amount to some 12,000 men. The military are called out, but are used simply to prevent the strike spreading, and the workmen are at last forced by hunger to return to their work, and yet the rich man's press owns that the strikers could hardly find subsistence at their low rates of wages.

D. J. NICOLL.

(To be continued.)

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING MAY 18, 1889.

12	an.	1539. Suppression of monasteries in England. Strafford beheaded. 1794. Madame Elizabeth guillotined. 1796. Babeuf's conspiracy suppressed. 1809. Joseph Hanson, Esq., sentenced to six months' imprisonment and fined £100 for "aiding and abetting the weavers of Manchester in a conspiracy to raise their wages." 1839. Outbreak at Paris.
13	Ton.	1848. Insurrection at Vienna. 1872. Moritz Hartmann died.
14	Tues.	1645. Battle of Naseby. 1649. Dr. Dorislaus assassinated at the Hague. 1820. Henry Grattan died. 1885. Louis Riel taken prisoner.
15	Wed.	1723. Christopher Layer hanged for high treason. 1800. James Hadfield fires at George III. in Drury Lane Theatre. 1820. Henry Hunt sentenced for sedition. 1847. Daniel O'Connell died. 1848. Trial of Smith O'Brien for sedition. 1871. Russian police armed with revolvers. 1881. Second secret press of the Will of the People captured with bloodshed.
16	Thur.	1771. Robert Owen born. 1848. Trial of T. F. Meagher and John Mitchell for sedition. 1871. Owen Centenary Festival in London. 1871. Vendome column destroyed in Paris. 1882. Prosecution of the Freiheit for an article on Phoenix Park murders.
17	Fri.	1802. Action of John Hevey against Major Sirr for assault and false imprisonment, Dublin. 1826. Notice "to the friends of the Social System" that New Harmony is overcrowded and no more can be received. 1880. Trial of Dr. Weimar, Hero as a Doctor of the Russo-Turkish War, for assisting Solovieff in attempt on Alexander II.; sentenced to 20 years in mines; died there, 1882.
18	Sat.	1756. War declared against the King of France by George II., "King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland." 1839. Riot at Glasgow. 1843. Monster meeting for Repeal at Charleville, Ireland; 300,000 said to be present.

WORN-OUT MACHINES.

HERE is a pretty fair specimen of the educational focus of editors of the capitalistic press, who undertake to answer their correspondents on social matters. In the Family Herald dated Saturday, May 4th, appears the following:

"FIRE-HOSE.—It is true that some firms cast aside their old servants with less compassion than they would bestow on an old horse; and we are sorry that you have such gloomy forebodings. As things go, your wages are not bad, and you would be mad to risk the loss of your situation. Take time, compose a plain simple statement of your plans regarding leather gear, and send it to one secretary at a time. There is no hurry, and you may even introduce yourself to the locomotive superintendent at your junction. But be very wary; for employers rarely care to retain the services of a man after he has once shown signs of being unsettled. Mind, above all things, that you cannot afford to nourish personal pique. No man on earth is necessary; and you may easily drift off into the forlorn host of the unemployed if you once exhibit the least temper or resentment at one of the slights which the best of us must sometimes endure."

The above, to speak plain, means that the poor "old" servant should sacrifice all manhood, and cringe and crawl to an exploiter that has had very likely the best of his days. How very funny to a Socialist the last sentence reads, "No man on earth is necessary," etc. To be logical, perhaps the best thing that could happen would be that the man who penned such an absurdity should go and hang himself, and prove to the world that he means what he says. We of the Socialist camp shall still go on preaching discontent, and old machines and young machines who are suffering from exploitation on all hands can take heart, for there is still left enough manhood on the part of Socialists for the carrying out of the entire abolition of the opportunities of masters to show spleen and spite on those men, or even women, who care to show what we understand as an expression of discontent, as against the above statement, an "exhibition of temper." Wm. BLUNDELL.

Individualism is only a tenable creed if it is thorough-going and consistent, if it bases itself upon first principles. To pretend to individualism while upholding all the worst encroachments upon individuality, in the shape of robbery from the common stock, with its consequent restriction of individual liberty to the right of starving in the public highway, is a sham, and a delusion.—(Grant Allen, on "Individualism and Socialism," Contemporary Review, May, 1889).

REPUBLICS EN FÊTE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 29TH, AND PARIS MAY 6TH, 1889.

STAND back, you Emperors and Kings!
Back—back, from out our way!
Of great Republics now Earth rings,
And Presidents, to-day.
You've had your innings far too long,
And henceforth you must learn
Free-chosen rulers, wise and strong,
To-day will have their turn.
The many have both votes and eyes
To will no fools shall play
With laws and rights we've learned to prize;—
Back, kings, from out our way!

Yes, we remember Athens rose
To greatness with no kings,
And, ere her sunburst knew its close,
What glory from her springs!
Thoughts that her freemen spoke endure
And rule us here to-day:
Ah! had her chainless days been sure,
How long had been her sway!
But hers was but the life of towns
That Philip's hordes could slay;
Now emperors dread republics' frowns,—
'Tis kings that cringe to-day.

Rome, free, was first in strength and fame;
Her freedom was her might;
'Twas when her sons but slaves became
That rule from her took flight.
Republican, her awful word
Shook empires to the dust;
A slave, she dared not grasp the sword
'Neath tyrants' frowns and lust.
She fell, to teach us, wise at last,
To loathe imperial sway.
The days for emperors are past,—
Back, kings, from out our way!

Remember Italy's great time,
When her republics rose,
When Florence and Milan, sublime,
Could scoff at Freedom's foes;
How Switzers, free, struck for Man's rights,
Won well, with blood and steel;
How Marston Moor's and Naseby's fights
Enthroned our commonweal;
But Cromwell died, and with him past
Our kingless rule away,
Our first Republic, not our last;
Back, kings, from out our way.

Paris, this hour thine eyes are lit,
Bright with a joy divine,
As France recalls, with memories fit,
Her days of '89.
Then, like a Samson, she arose,
Defeat to kings to deal,
And hurled a crowned head 'mongst her foes,
And levelled his bastille;
Kings and you emperors, shun to speak
The hate you fain would say;
To-day, Republics are not weak;
They're fawned upon to-day.

And thou too, thou of fifty States,
Of nations yet to be,
Laugh at the Old World's sneers and hates;
What are they now to thee?
The flag thy Washington flung out,
Stream high its banded bars;
To-day, thy sixty millions shout
Beneath the stripes and stars.
Speak smoothly, Bismark, to the power
That law, to earth, shall say,
Republic, that o'er all shall tower;
Back, kings, from out its way.

Yet, O Republics, hold it true,
Your rule we only prize,
Because we surely look to you,
Than kings, to be more wise;
We throne you not for empty fuss,
But that your rule shall give
A fairer, dearer life to us,
That all may nobly live;
From all, for all, your power you hold
To bring man's better day;
That Earth may know its age of gold,
Back, kings, from out our way.

Greenwich, S.E.

W. C. BENNETT.

In every country which enjoys the European system of civilisation, the right of property has ever been in a state of evolution, always tending to give a greater degree of independence to the individual owner; in other words, the evolution has always worked in favour of individual egotism. Who can say that the evolution is now complete, or that we have yet realised the highest ideal system in the disposition of our property? A progressive evolution is for every society one of the conditions of existence. The right of proprietorship cannot, therefore, remain stationary.—Charles Letourneau.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEARD IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication. As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages: None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d. Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

T. J.—The question you raise is an old one; on Feb. 16, 1845, at the Finsbury Institution, Goswell Road, Mr. William Cooper lectured "On the Writings of that Eminent Social Reformer, Charles Dickens, Esq.," and the discussion afterwards was on "Are the writings of Dickens in accordance with the philosophy of Robert Owen?"
A. L. (AUTONOMIE), and others.—If you pay no heed to our oft-repeated requests, and send in reports and notices too late, you can hardly expect their insertion.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Notes on News	MORRIS and SPARLING 145
The English Revolutionary Movement, 1815 to 1817: Spa-Fields Riots and Derbyshire Insurrection (continued)	D. J. NICOLL 146
Revolutionary Calendar	147
Worn-out Machines	W. B. 147
Republics en Fete	W. C. BENNETT 147
The Sugar Trade	J. SKETCHLEY 148
In the United States	H. F. CHARLES 149
The Labour Struggle	150
International Notes	VICTOR DAVE 150
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	151
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	152

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday May 8.

ENGLAND	FRANCE	GERMANY	ITALY	PORTUGAL	SPAIN	AUSTRIA	DENMARK	SWEDEN	WEST INDIES
Church Reformer	Boston—Woman's Journal	Berlin—Volks Tribune	Arbeiterstimme	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario	Madrid—El Socialista	Wien—Gleichheit	Social-Demokraten	Stockholm, Social-Demokraten	Cuba—El Productor
Justice	Chicago—Knights of Labor	Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	Rome—L'Emancipazione	Milan—Il Fascio Operaio	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Brunn—Arbeiterstimme	Goteborg—Folkets Rost
Labour Elector	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	Le Proletariat	Fort Worth (Tex)—South West		S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal	Lille—Le Cri du Travailleur
Labour Tribune	Milwaukee—National Reformer	La Revolte	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung		Valley Falls (Kan.)—Lucifer	Hague—Recht voor Allen
London—Freie Presse	S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal	Pobudka	S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal			Ghent—Vooruit
Postal Service Gazette	Valley Falls (Kan.)—Lucifer	Lille—Le Cri du Travailleur				Antwerp—De Werker
Railway Review		Holland				Liege—L'Avenir
Social Demokrat		Belgium
Unity
Worker's Friend
INDIA
Bankipore—Behar Herald
Madras—People's Friend
UNITED STATES
New York—Der Sozialist
Freiheit
Truthseeker
Volkszeitung
Jewish Volkszeitung
Workmen's Advocate

THE SUGAR TRADE.

For several years an agitation has been going on in reference to the sugar trade of the country. That agitation at the present time is assuming large proportions in different parts of England and Scotland, and is likely to become more intensified very shortly. The rise in the price of sugar of some 30 per cent. which has already taken place, and the further rise that is sure to follow, is creating great uneasiness among numbers of the poorer classes, whose enjoyment of the common necessities is always too limited.

Again, large numbers of the working classes have been led, by some means, to approve and support the present policy of the Tory Government in favour of the abolition of the so-called bounties, under the impression that the sugar industry of Great Britain has been and is being ruined by the importation of what is called bounty-fed sugar from the Continent. We are also assured that our West Indies are being ruined, and that if the bounty system is not got rid of, the British empire will go to the dogs. For years past we have been told that the sugar trade is declining, and that thousands of men were out of employment in consequence. It is necessary therefore to enquire into the truth of these statements, to see how far they are true and how far they are false.

To begin with, we must bear in mind that we do not produce the raw material, either for cane or for beet-root sugar, and that our refineries must therefore depend on foreign importations. Let us therefore take the quantity of raw sugar imported and the amount retained exclusively for refining:

	Imported and retained for home consumption.	Net for refining.
1855	... cwts. 7,259,148	... cwts. 6,451,331
1860	... " 8,506,882	... " 7,529,960
1865	... " 9,878,933	... " 8,685,279
1870	... " 11,542,937	... " 10,405,311
1875	... " 14,807,628	... " 12,711,386
1880	... " 15,722,532	... " 13,061,938
1883	... " 18,516,416	... " 16,321,447
1886	... " 14,621,414	... " 11,952,560

Here we have a decline on 1886, but take the two next years. Net consumption of the United Kingdom:

1886.	1887.	1888.
Tons.	Tons.	Tons.
1,146,414	1,173,338	1,182,618

Here we have an enormous increase in the quantity imported and retained for home consumption, also in the quantity for refining purposes. This does not include the sugar used in brewing, etc.

But it is contended that the rapid development of beet-root sugar is destroying the cane-sugar trade. The rapid development of the beet-root none deny, but that it has destroyed the cane-sugar trade is not true, as the following will show. Imports of Raw cane sugar.	Beet-root sugar.

1855	... cwts. 6,952,122	... cwts. 372,011
1865	... " 9,280,728	... " 963,796
1875	... " 14,105,968	... " 2,158,743
1880	... " 11,803,097	... " 5,198,516
1882	... " 14,534,870	... " 5,304,355
1883	... " 11,949,337	... " 8,417,299
1886	... " 9,359,523	... " 6,774,560

And taking the estimated production of the whole world for 1889, we have the following:

Raw Cane Sugar.	Raw Beetroot Sugar.
Tons.	Tons.
2,432,000	2,808,000

But it is objected that the increase in our imports of raw cane sugar is from foreign countries and not from British possessions. Undoubtedly such is the case. But we import the raw material for many of our textile trades, and do not reject it because it comes from foreign countries. Then as far as the West Indies are concerned, the planters there (largely non-resident) have been complaining for at least half a century. In 1840 a Committee of the Commons reported that "Our West Indian colonists enjoyed a monopoly on the sugar imported into the United Kingdom of 6½d. per lb., equal to a tax of £6,000,000 a-year. That, including the interest on the £20,000,000 we paid them for the abolition of slavery, we were paying them £7,000,000 a-year to induce them to take £3,000,000 worth of our manufactured goods." And how was that monopoly secured. By an import duty of 24s. per cwt., which operated as follows:

	Price per cwt.	Duty per cwt.	Per cent. of duty.
Common raw sugar	... 25s.	... 24s.	... 96
Middle quality	... 28s.	... 24s.	... 86
Fine	... 37s.	... 24s.	... 65
Double refined	... 70s.	... 24s.	... 34

Here we see the rich paid a duty of 34 per cent., the workers a duty of 96 or 86 per cent. Shall we restore that monopoly which worked such ruin and oppression in years gone by? We condemn non-residence on the part of landlords, Irish or others; and we have to some extent got rid of non-residence in the State Church; and shall we legislate for the aggrandisement (by re-enacting a monopoly) of a gang of non-resident West Indian planters?

We are told that the present agitation is largely due to the action of the sugar-refiners of London and Liverpool. Is, then, the trade of either of those towns declining? is it even stationary? What are the facts of the case? Let us see, taking the years

	1840.		1880.		1883.
	No. of refineries.	Output. Tons.	No. of refineries.	Output. Tons.	No. of refineries.	Output. Tons.
London	30	137,280	15	191,000	15	260,000
Liverpool	13	85,280	12	205,000	10	250,000

True, complaints come from Bristol, and even from Greenock. But the latter town has not much to complain of. In 1840 the number of refineries there were 17, and the output 126,880 tons per annum. In 1880, number of refineries 10, and the yearly output 241,000 tons. In 1883 the number was 9, and the output that year 237,000 tons. At Bristol there has been a decrease in the production. And why? Simply because they adhere to the old mode of manufacture. Yet we are told by Parliamentary Paper 325, 1884, p. 55, that the two refineries there have done fairly well throughout, and that while the freight to Liverpool of beet is 12s. 6d. per ton, and to the Clyde 15s., it is only 7s. 6d. to Bristol; and that there is room in Bristol for another refinery, if started on modern principles, etc. Taking Great Britain as a whole, we find the following:

	1840.		1880.		1883.
	No. of refineries.	Output. Tons.	No. of refineries.	Output. Tons.	No. of refineries.	Output. Tons.
	66 or 67	423,120	39	700,000	36	816,000

Then it is complained that we import large quantities of refined sugar, and that such imports ought to be restricted, if not prohibited.

It is quite true we do import refined sugar. It is equally true that we export (of British produce) refined sugar. And the imports and the exports fluctuate in different years, and will continue to do so.

	Imports of refined sugar into United Kingdom.	Exports of refined sugar (of British produce) from United Kingdom.
1877	171,000 tons	56,000 tons
1880	152,000 "	48,000 "
1883	162,000 "	58,000 "

We hear a great deal about our imports, but not a word about our exports.

Let us now take the question of Labour. When I have heard it stated that tens of thousands were out of work as a consequence of our cheap sugar importations, I have always inquired where and when were these tens of thousands employed. The gullibility of John Bull is a very elastic quality, and he has been gulled pretty well with regard to the sugar industry of Great Britain. Not only has the quantity of British produce increased enormously, but the number of the employed has also increased very largely. True the number employed has not increased in proportion to the increase in the output. In the sugar trade, as in every other department of production, labour-saving machinery is the rule, and will continue to be so. But in the sugar trade the number has continually increased, and is increasing year by year. Take the following from the census returns :

No.	1851.	1861.	1871.	1881.	1884.
Employed.....	2,820	3,756	3,833	4,484	5,200

Place these figures by the side of the following, and then ask the question, What has the sugar industry to complain of? By the census returns for 1881 we find the number employed were in the 1871.	1881.	Decrease.

Silk Trade.....	80,132	60,595	19,557
Hosiery Trade	44,203	38,823	5,580
Glove Trade	22,590	15,524	7,066
Gun Trade.....	11,576	7,741	3,385
Lace Trade	48,383	44,144	4,239
Shoe Trade (1861)	246,493	216,557	29,937
Farmers.....	249,907	223,943	25,964
Market Gardeners	98,069	65,882	32,187
Agricultural Labourers ...	963,348	870,798	91,550

In all these trades production increased, while the number employed decreased. But in the sugar trade there was an increase in both.

In a Parliamentary paper issued in 1881 (No. 317), at page 14, we have the following:—No. 7, Men and boys per 100 tons (soft sugar) output per week; if output not exceeding 400 tons per week, 35 men and boys per 100 tons; if output over 400 tons and not exceeding 800 tons, 30 men and boys per 100 tons; if output over 800 tons and not exceeding 12,000 tons, 25 men and boys per 100 tons.

Thus we find that the greater the production, proportionately, the less the number employed. We also find that whereas in 1868 the average output per man was 126 tons per annum, in 1880 the average was 173 tons.

Now as to the gain to the people by cheap sugar. In the Parliamentary paper, No. 325, page 52, we have a very important table. Taking the years 1871 to 1883 inclusive, we have it shown that the average reduction in the price of sugar was 2s. 6d. per cwt.; that the yearly saving rose from £1,646,948 in 1871 to £2,706,808 in 1883; and that the total saving during the thirteen years was £28,290,459. Then we must take into account the jam and the confectionery trades, so largely developed during the last twenty years, and due almost entirely to cheap sugar, and which give employment to some 75,000 persons.

Looking at the whole subject, I am surprised that any man, and especially any one claiming to speak on behalf of the working-classes, should support a reactionary policy for the further aggrandisement of a mere handful of capitalists belonging to the sugar industry. Not that I am in favour of the bounty system; far otherwise. But that is a matter for the consideration of the bounty-paying nations, and not for us. And the strangest thing is, that even working-men should be found foolish enough to go in for dear sugar to enrich the capitalist class, and to support a government in its reactionary policy—a government ready to drag England at the heels of the European despotisms, and to execute the orders of the Continental despots.

J. SKETCHLEY.

BUSINESS NOWADAYS.—Employer (to new clerk): This package of money you've just counted is two half-crowns short. New clerk: How do you know? You said you hadn't counted the money.—"I said that to test your honesty. I hardly know what to do about it."—"I can help you out; you take me into partnership, and I'll do the stealing for the firm and you can do the lying, and we'll make things hum."

AN EXPLANATION.—Several comrades in the North having expressed surprise at the absence of F. Kitz from the Blackstone Edge Demonstration, it is thought advisable to insert the following explanation. Some weeks ago, a Mr. J. M. Hutchison wrote on behalf of the organizing committee to the Socialist League, asking them to send a delegate to represent the Socialist League at the meeting; F. Kitz was elected, and his expenses guaranteed. Suddenly it was discovered by Mr. Hutchison, on April 30th, that there would be too many speakers, and, as funds were low, F. Kitz had better not attend, and the epistle containing this notification was signed, "Yours fraternally, John M. Hutchison." To that letter a reply was sent, stating that no expense would fall upon the organising committee, as the cost of the League's delegate would be paid by the Socialist League, and that the real reasons had better have been stated for the exclusion of the League delegate. Since then there has been no more letters from "Yours fraternally, J. Hutchison."

IN THE UNITED STATES.

THE American Federation of Labour has issued charters for 130 organizers. Several general organizers will be kept on the road all the time, while others will devote their time to certain localities.

The Boot and Shoe Workers' International Union, which has lately seceded from the Knights of Labour, has obtained a charter from the American Federation of Labour. This Union has thirty-seven local branches scattered through the shoe-making districts.

The cigar-makers are in a bad way. Work is very scarce, the pay miserable, and plenty of non-union men about. Some cigar-makers are forced to work for wages as low as 4 dols. a week, and the "iron scab," as the men are calling the cigar-making machines, is rapidly making work harder to secure.

Major Roche of Chicago left office on the 15th inst., and his last official act was the reinstatement of Ex-Captain of the Police, Michael J. Schaak, and yet we were told by the present "boodling" editors of Spies' old paper, the Arbeiter-Zeitung, that one of the reasons why they supported Roche and his party, was that he had suspended Schaak. O shade of Spies!

Blacklisting has killed a prominent labour agitator. On Thursday, the 17th of this month, a friend of Charles Turcell, a New York Knight of Labour, called at the latter's home and found him lying unconscious on his bed. He had taken a dose of morphia, and died about midnight the same day. Turcell, who had been a clothing salesman, lost his job in July last year, and has been unable to get work since, owing to being blacklisted by all employers of labour. Only a few days before his death he told a friend:—"Whenever I feel that I am likely to become a burden to my friends or the world in general I shall leave it." He was a widower, and left four children. Turcell belonged to the conservative wing in the Knights of Labour, and was an active opponent of the Home Club, the Radical faction in District Assembly 49, New York. If Conservative agitators are treated in this way, what can we expect will be done unto the Radicals. Blacklisting, it appears, indeed, has more effect than boycotting.

To expect sympathy with poverty from a Yankee would surely be demanding too much, but anyhow, I hardly thought it possible that even Yankees would be low-minded enough to utilize poverty to provide them with "pleasure." However, I have been in error. Some days ago the plutocrats of Spencer, Mass, held at the town hall a "poverty ball." Each participant in this "grand" affair wore the most sadly dilapidated garments imaginable, and "poverty" is said to have been the air of the evening. The dancing orders were printed on shoe tags, and the menu on fringed brown paper. At midnight the gormandising began with the finest viands, furnished by the most noted purveyor of the town. This was no poverty affair. Of course, anything is possible in a country where everything is conducted on the "Sand-the-sugar-and-come-to-prayer" plan. And yet people dare to speak about the horrors of a revolution! Indeed, what's to be wondered at is, considering the brutality and the provoking attitude of ruling classes, that there are so few revolutionary "horrors." If every poor man, when his chance comes, "would do unto others as has been done unto him," how—well, my experience in life suggests things to me too ghastly to allow the subject to be pursued any further.

Herbert Spencer is reported to have written to a friend in Chicago that he does not think the "railroad morals" and policy of the United States any worse than those of England. President Adams, of the Union Pacific, a short while ago, in a lecture delivered at Boston, Mass., declared that the "morals" of American railroads were based on the plan, "Let him take who has the power, and let him keep who can." Now, if American railroads are so bad, how bad must the English be? It appears to me it is a case of "pot and kettle." Mr. Spencer says he has put himself at the head of a railroad reform league in England, as he claims that there has been more corruption by railroads in the House of Commons during the past ten years than has taken place in federal and State legislatures in the United States during the entire history of railroads. There are, he adds, over 180 members of Parliament who are simply the agents of railroads and similar corporations. Most of these are lawyers who owe their election to the roads they serve. These people serve their masters and supporters of new projects, and make no sub rosa statement of the number of votes they can command in the House, but proclaim it openly. And yet English revolutionary Socialists are seriously asked to reform this den of thieves, or, anyhow, to use it as a means of propaganda. Touch pitch and you get dirty!

The triangular fight between Claus Spreckels, jun., the California Sugar King, the Sugar Trust, and the peoples of the States of New York and California proceeds merrily.

It will be remembered by the readers of the Commonweal that some time ago Judge Barrett decided that by joining the trust the North River Sugar Company had violated its charter. A receiver of the Company was in consequence appointed. Two more suits are pending against the trust, viz., of the people of California against the American Sugar Refining Company at San Francisco, and of the people of New York against the Havemeyer and Elder Company at New York. All at once it was discovered that both companies had assigned to three individual members of the trust, and that the suits, in consequence, most likely will be dismissed. The trust, apparently, is preparing for stormy weather. Mr. Havemeyer, the leading man in the concern, when interviewed about the affair, coolly said, "We have to get there somehow. The trust, under some form or other, has come to stay." Of course, the people will gradually find out that trusts cannot be killed by law, and that it is nonsensical on their part to furnish the fighting forces in a battle between two would-be monopolists in the struggle for supremacy. Spreckels, who desires to bring the trust to his terms, has discovered that the legal machinery is too ponderous to stifle this octopus; so he is trying the "help yourself" method. He is building large refineries on the Atlantic seashore, and, what is more, he is trying to corner his antagonist by cornering all the raw sugar. It is reported that he quietly sent his agents to Cuba, the West India Islands, Demerara, and Brazil, and has bought up the greatest part of the present crop. There is only a very small stock of raw sugar on hand. It is also said that it is Claus's plan "to turn toward Europe the tide of his great sugar production for the next few weeks, and, while pocketing the profit on the rise there, the United States will be left practically without sugar. Just as prices begin to lower in Europe, and have reached the highest figure in the States, he will cut off the supply abroad, and sell at his figures his stuff in the home market." His friends say he can keep up this game of see-saw all through the summer. He will have conquered the trust, make a fortune, and the people—that stupid ass—will pay the bill.

Boston, Mass., April 22, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The pipe-moulders employed by Cochrane and Co., near Middlesbro', have been conceded an advance of 7½ per cent.

The strike of ironworkers at Millom and Askam, which has lasted about ten weeks, shows no sign of coming to an end.

The London Society of Compositors have resolved to send two delegates to the Paris International Congress in July. One of them is A. G. Cook, their librarian and a member of the London School Board.

The Cigar-Makers' Mutual Association have been taking a vote on the eight-hours question, with the following result: eight-hours working day, 324 for, 155 against; obtaining it through parliament, 229 for, 101 against.

CARPET MAKER'S WAGES.—The Master Carpet Maker's Association has given notice of a 20 per cent. reduction in wages on piece goods, and 10 per cent. on "square." The reduction will be resisted at Dewsbury and Heckmondwike.

BARNSELY BUILDERS.—The masons and bricklayers of Barnsley and district struck work last week, with the view of enforcing an advance in wages of 3d., to make the price 8d. per hour. The masters offered 7½d. The bosses have now conceded the demands of the men.

WELSH IRON AND STEEL WORKERS.—The proprietors of the Ebbw Vale Company on Saturday, advanced the wages of the whole of the iron and steel workers in their employ 5 per cent. The proprietors of the Cyfartha and Dowlais Iron and Steel Works have granted their men an advance of 7½ per cent.

TYNE ENGINEERS.—At a meeting of the Executive Council of the Federal Board, held at Ord Arms on Tuesday night, the notice regarding the second advance was discussed, and it was decided that negotiations should be opened with the Employer's Association, and that individual action in the shops must be avoided.

BIT FORGERS AND FILERS.—On Saturday the Walsall and Bloxwich bit forgers and filers gave fourteen days' notice for a 15 per cent. advance of wages, negotiations with the employers for an amicable arrangement of the matter having so far failed. About 400 workmen are concerned, about one-half of whom are in the trade society.

CUMBERLAND COAL WORKERS.—At a conference of masters and men, the masters agreed to an advance of 1¼ per cent. to be paid from next "making-up" day, and to continue till end of June. It was also arranged that the masters would meet the men directly any advance took place in the price of coal, with a view to giving the miners a share of such improvement.

GREENOCK BAKERS.—At a meeting of operative bakers in Greenock held on Wednesday, May 1, the following rule was adopted:—"That the week's work shall consist of 55 hours—9½ hours on the first five days of the week and 7½ hours on the Saturday—it being imperative that the day's work shall not commence earlier than 5 a.m., and 1½ hours' to be allowed for meals."

IRISH FEDERATED TRADE AND LABOUR UNION.—On the 4th, at the Angel Hotel, Dublin, the first meeting of the Irish Federated Trades' Congress was held, and the Irish Federated Trade and Labour Union was formed. It was almost the 76th anniversary of the first meeting of the Hibernian Philanthropic Society, which was formed May 3, 1823, to apply Robert Owen's plans to Ireland.

BURNLEY MINERS.—A mass meeting was held on the 2nd to consider the strike which has been going on at one of the local pits. The president of the federation reported an interview with the manager of the pit, and the settlement of the strike. The meeting confirmed the action of the Nottingham Conference, the determination being expressed to demand 10 per cent. advance in common with the other mining communities at the end of June.

RAILWAY SERVANT'S WAGES.—At a meeting of the signalmen employed on the North British and Caledonian Railways, held at Edinburgh on Sunday, it was unanimously agreed to support the following proposals put by Mr. Henry Tait:—Boxes to be divided into three classes: Third class boxes to start at 2ls. per week, and rise 1s. yearly to 24s. a-week; second class boxes to start at 25s. per week, and rise 1s. yearly to 27s. per week; first class boxes to begin at 28s. per week, and rise 1s. yearly to 29s. per week; relief signalmen to be paid at the highest rate, and 1s. 6d. per night allowed for lodging money; time and quarter for all overtime, and time and half for all Sunday duty, the latter to commence at midnight on Saturday to 12 midnight on Sunday. A number of men joined the Edinburgh branches of the society at the close of the meeting.

THE SALT UNION.—On Friday 3rd, a meeting of the Winsford Salt-makers' Association was held on the Bowling Green, Winsford, to receive the replies of the Salt Union to the grievances formulated last week. The directors stated in their reply that they could not concede all the demands of the workmen as to the hours of work, and with regard to other demands, some were granted and some refused. The following demands of the workmen, as the outcome of the meeting, will be presented to the Salt Union:—(1) That work be discontinued at 4 o'clock, and that early and late loading be done away with; (2) that every man is put in his place again, failing which a general strike will take place; (3) that every man out of work have a fair share of work; (4) that there be four men where three are now employed; (5) that firemen finish work at 9 o'clock on Saturday night and commence at 2 o'clock on Monday morning; (6) that each man draw 3½ tons at a draft; (7) that 2s. per ton be paid for bag salt and 1s. per ton for Monday morning salt.

LEITH SEAMEN.—The local branch of the Union brought pressure to bear on the London and Edinburgh Shipping Company. On Saturday week the crew of the 'Meteor' demanded an increase from 28s. to 30s. a-week, and this request was acceded to before the ship sailed. On Wednesday 1st, before the 'Iona' sailed for London, the crew made a similar demand, but sailed on being promised a rise commencing from the end of the week, the terms also including that the same men should be kept on. At present the same company's steamer 'Marmion' is lying alongside in the Victoria Dock. On Friday, the crew ought to have gone on board to work as usual, but they held out for same increase as crews of the other vessels. The secretary communicated with the company, when the following agreement was come to:—"We accept the notice that 'Marmion' men complete the 28s. per week agreement at end of the present week, ending Tuesday, 7th of May, the new agreement to begin from that date." Whether the new agreement will be similar to that made with the other crews is not known.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

BELGIUM.

The Socialist Co-operative Society "Vooruit," at Ghent, has inaugurated, amidst brilliant fêtes, its new bakery, and it may perhaps interest those who care for such co-operative institutions, to know how "Vooruit" came into existence and how it progressed. At Ghent the organisation of the working classes began really in 1857, and in 1865-1867, at the time of the rapid growth of the International Workingmen's Association in Belgium, the old city of Van Artevelde was fairly well organised. The fall of the Commune of Paris, and other political causes, made Socialism nearly die out in Flanders. The movement in favour of the co-operative and the relief fund societies was practically started about the year 1873. Some thirty Socialists erected the co-operative bakery "De vrye Bakkers" (the Free Bakers). The first eighteen months were very hard to pass through, and it seemed to all interested as if complete ruin had been near at hand. But the revival of Socialism in 1874 and 1875 caused hundreds of workers, who chiefly were non-Socialists, to join the co-operative movement. This was a new sort of danger, because scores of workers had merely joined for the sake of reaping the pecuniary benefits of the institution, whereas the founders, who were Socialists, organised the co-operation only as a means of propaganda towards the realisation of their social ideas. A split was unavoidable, and came about in 1881, when the Socialists, numbering fifty men, borrowed 2000 francs from the "Broederlyke Weversmaatschappij" (Weavers' Fraternal Society) and founded therewith "Vooruit" (Forwards). After three weeks, the members numbered four hundred, and all the new comers were warned that the society was a Socialistic one, and that a large part of its benefits was to be devoted to the propagation of Socialism. In 1883, "Vooruit" inaugurated their present house on the Garen markt, and were the first to introduce in Belgium the kneading-machine and hot-water ovens. In the same year they built extensive premises for their bakery, and others for reading and concert rooms. At the present time "Vooruit" has 4,000 families as their members, and provides these with nearly 100,000 lbs. of bread weekly. In 1885, 1886, 1887 they helped Belgian and French strikers with considerable quantities of bread, and besides distributed among strikers in Flanders over 50,000 francs. The society has bought Place de l'Industrie, 7,000 square yards of ground, whereupon they have built their magnificent model bakery with eight hot-water ovens and all the most recent mechanical improvements. In their place on the Garen markt they have their printery, where the daily Socialist paper Vooruit is produced. In the rue des Char-treux they possess a shoemaker's shop and considerable factories for boot-makers, carpenters, blacksmiths, and cigarmakers. There also is their hall for athletics, several installations for working-men circles, and a beerhouse. Place de l'Industrie, they have built three coal-warehouses. Further, they have three chemist shops, one grocery, one drapery, one hosiery, and with these three concerns alone their business amounts to 350,000 francs yearly. "Vooruit" employs 150 clerks and workers of every description, and its total yearly business amounts to two million five hundred thousand francs. We earnestly hope that our friends of "Vooruit" will never forget that co-operation is only, at its best, a very mild means of furthering Socialist ideas, and that, at its worst, it can even become directly opposed to Socialism altogether. History tells us a number of examples, illustrating our assertion.

GERMANY.

The Elberfeldt monster-trial seems not yet to be ripe for a "public show." Up to the present date there are 128 accused, 408 Crown and other witnesses, an indictment of several hundred yards in length, and so on. But all this will not do. Last week, it was stated by the reptile Press of Bismark's Fatherland that the whole Social-democratic fraction in the Reichstag was to be charged as well, and even to have the first and most prominent place upon the roll of "criminals." This week, it is said that these comrades may not be indicted at all, and now, the last intelligence from Elberfeldt is to the effect that the date of the trial and the real number of persons to be dealt with cannot as yet be definitely ascertained. What does it all mean? Perhaps only this after all: Parturiunt montes, nascitur ridiculus mus. The mountain in labour brings forth a mouse.

At Osnabrück we shall soon have another Socialist trial. Numerous persons have already been examined, and others are anxiously wanted. Of course, the same "crime" as everywhere has been perpetrated, viz., secret conspiracy, in other words, humbug.

For some time past have the tailors and needlewomen of Hamburg been on strike. The strike committee there requests all those engaged in the tailoring trade not to come over until they declare the finish of their struggle. At Frankfort-on-the-Maine, the potters have resolved to leave working, and equally request their fellow comrades in the trade not to accept work there under any circumstances whatever. At Itzehoe, the strike of the brick masons and carpenters is still lasting, and the committee declare that they will endeavour to hold to the utmost of their power. A certain number of engineers are also at strike at Nürnberg.

RUSSIA.

In one of our last issues we have said that the bomb affair at Zurich was come to an end by the expulsion of three or four Russian comrades. More recent information shows that this is not to be the case. Arrests of Russian students continue to be effected day after day, their photographs are at once taken and put into the so-called "Verbrecheralbum" (Album of Criminals!), their houses are carefully searched by the federal police authorities, even the Russian library has been closed by the Swiss Cantonal magistrates, who seem to act under the direct influence of the Petersburg government. Sixteen more students have been sent to jail, and it is feared that wholesale expulsions are going to be ordered.

Besides, rumours are still current to the effect that the Czar has been wounded by a bombshell thrown into the Palace by an officer of the Imperial Guard. Whether this be true or not, the Revolte asserts that he has not been, last Thursday, at a parade where, for reasons of etiquette, his presence would otherwise have been of necessity. Has he really been wounded? The telegraph explained his absence by saying that a plot had been discovered. Perquisitions and arrests are made on a very great scale in nearly all the larger towns, especially in Western Russia. The revolutionary movement, somewhat relaxed of late, has started afresh with renewed vigour, as is shown also by the Russian press abroad. A new paper (Free Word) has come to light; another one is announced to appear shortly. At New York, the Russian exiles have put themselves together for the publication of Znamia (the Flag), of which the tenth number has just come out.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, June 3, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Commonweals for 1888, handsomely bound in red, are now ready, price 5s.; per post, 5s. 6d.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th, at 13, Farringdon Road. Agenda has been sent to Branches.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Oxford, to end of September. 1889:—Clerkenwell and Mitcham, to end of February. North London, and St. Georges East, to end of March. Bradford, Hammersmith, and Leicester, to end of April. East London, to end of May.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible.

Defence Committee (Berner Street).—Collected at Mile End Waste, 4s. 4d.; T. Bolae, 2s.; E. B. B., 10s.; Ipswich, 5s. 3d.; East London Branch (S.L.), 4s. 1d.; collected on Clerkenwell Green by Clerkenwell Branch (S.L.), 4s. 3d.; E. Snelling, 5s.; Fulham Liberal Club, 5s. 4d.; Mimosa, 5s.; and Manchester International Workmen's Club, 6s. 3d.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—Blundell, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; R. Turner, 6d.; J. Turner, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; Nicoll, 6d.; Rose, 6d.; Samuels, 1s.; B. W., 6d.; Wess, 1s.; Schmitt, 1s.; H. H. S. 6d.; M. Morris, 6d.; and J. Wood, 2s.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.—Mile End Waste—Good meeting on Saturday; speakers were Cores, Mowbray, and Davis; fair sale of Weal. Victoria Park—Good meeting on Sunday addressed by Davis and Schaack, and fair sale of literature. Regents Park—Large meeting last Sunday, Mrs. Schack, Cantwell, and Nicoll were speakers; good collection and 27 Commonweal sold.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road station on Sunday; speakers were Dean, Lynes, sen., Lynes, jun., Crouch, and A. J. Smith; 35 Commonweal sold; choir sang. We have had a little disagreement with the teetotal party at this station, but have now arranged matters suitable to both. At Weltje Road at 7, good meeting; speakers were Kitchen, Lynes, sen., Maughan, and Sparling; 16 Commonweal sold. Good meeting at Beadon Road in morning, Tarleton and Morris speakers; 13 Commonweal sold.—G. M.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting on 29th ult., comrade George Cooper read a smart paper on "Our Individuality" to good meeting; Thompson in chair; discussion carried on by Duncan, Leatham, Duncan, sen., and Cooper, who replied. At Castle Street on Saturday night, good meeting addressed by Aiken, Duncan, W. Cooper, and Leatham; questions at close.—L.

BRADFORD.—On Tuesday, April 30th, Maguire lectured at Laycock's on "Working Men and the State"; fair discussion, W. Sugden, the Labour member on the School Board opposing; Paylor and Mitchell fairly settled the opposition. Two waggonettes filled with members and friends, went to Blackstone Edge on Sunday, having a most enjoyable time altogether, though we were disappointed at the absence of Kitz. It is a splendid opportunity for propaganda, which another year we on the Yorkshire side hope to make more of.—P. B.

EDINBURGH.—On Monday, April 29, J. Gilray read an essay on "The Social Creed of Christianity" to a Church Society. This creed, he held, committed them to Socialism; discussion at close. On Thursday, May 2nd, animated discussion in our meeting-room as to what should be our attitude to the rising labour party. General finding was freedom to the individual to work as he saw fit along with that party, but that the work of the League was education in Socialist principles. Three of our members attended Mr. Hardie's meeting here on Saturday, one speaker urging that Socialism be declared to be the final aim of the Parliamentary Labour Party's programme. On Sunday, John Smith and Burn co-operated with S.D.F. in speaking to good meetings in the Meadows.

MITCHAM.—Good meeting in the morning addressed by Kitz and Brooks; a local Christian wanted our audience to attend church; heckled about Genesis he failed to satisfy us as to where Cain obtained his wife, and being reticent on other points the audience minded him not. In the evening our visitors from the L.E.L., L.U., S.D.F., and S.L., held a large meeting on the Fair Green; speakers were W. Mowbray, Kitz, Brookes, Mainwaring, Barker, Pope, and a comrade of the S.D.F.—K. F.

NORWICH.—On Sunday morning, a large number of Commonweal were distributed at the surrounding villages. In the afternoon, Darley and Poynts addressed open-air meeting in the Market Place, which was somewhat disturbed by an individual who was intoxicated. In the evening no meeting was held. On Monday evening, Mr. Roberts delivered a second lecture in the Gordon Hall, subject, "Organic Life" which was very interesting; chair taken by W. Moore.

NOTTINGHAM.—On May 2, Snell gave us a capital review of Miss Howell's "A More Excellent Way" at the club. On the 5th, good meeting was held in the Market Place; Peacock and Rooke spoke; literature sold well, and 1s. 4d. collected.—R. P.

YARMOUTH.—Two meetings on Sunday. At close of afternoon meeting, questions were asked, and answered to general satisfaction. Adams and Morley of Norwich gave good addresses at both meetings, which were attentively listened to by good audiences. 5s. 6d. collected for propaganda.—C. R.

DUBLIN.—At Progressive Club, 87 Marlboro Street, Saturday May 4th, H. Sutton Frizelle lectured on "Why I am a Socialist." There was a large attendance and a lively discussion; O'Gorman, Conlon, Landye, and O'Donlevy supported the views of the lecturer.

IPSWICH PIONEER DEBATING CLASS.—A lively discussion has taken place here the last three Sunday nights on the Irish Question. Creed opened, and others who took part in the discussion were Khill, Southron, Day, Bishop, and Thomas, who caused some enthusiasm by pointing out that the Irish would not be free until they had free use of all natural resources. Several strangers were present, and they enjoyed themselves very much, and we are very hopeful as to future results.—M. C.

HACKNEY RADICAL CLUB, 5 The Grove, Mare Street, Hackney.—Monday May 13, at 8.30, Graham Wallas, "The True Radical Policy."

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower March, Lambeth.—Sunday May 12, at 8 p.m., H. M. Hyndman, "Human Society as it Might Be." Tuesday 14, at 8, Sidney Webb (Fabian), "The Failure of Radicalism."

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (1/4-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). Sunday May 12, At 8.30 sharp, lecture by F. Charles, "What's to be done during a Revolutionary Period."

East London.—Crown Coffee Tavern, 2 Columbia Road, Hackney Road. Sunday May 12, Business Meeting at 7.30; members, attend. Sunday 19th, H. Halliday Sparling, at 8 o'clock, "Rent, Interest, and Profit."

Fulham.—8 Effie Road, Walham Green. Committee meetings on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock sharp. All members are earnestly requested to attend.

Hammersmith.—Kelmescott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday May 12, at 8 p.m., A Lecture. Thursday May 16, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 17, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary. On Wednesday May 15, lecture by Rev. Stewart Headlam, "The Sins that cause Poverty." 22nd, H. Halliday Sparling, "The Evoluted Canniba"

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Oddfellows' Small Hall, Crooked Lane.

Bradford.—Laycock's Temperance Hotel, Albion Court, Kirkgate. Tuesday May 14, at 7.30, lecture by comrade Mitchell.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Discussion Class on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets on Mondays at 8 p.m. Members wishing to join in our Saturday afternoon propaganda excursions are requested to assemble in Rooms on Saturdays at 4.30.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Manchester.—Working Men's Educational Club, 122 Corporation Street.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 9 a.m., comrades distributing Commonweal will meet in Gordon Hall. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' meeting. Wednesday, at 8, Discussion Class. Monday, Thursday, and Friday, Hall open from 8.30. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Association.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25 1/2 Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Business meeting every Tuesday evening. Elucution Class at comrade Hadley's every Friday at 8 p.m. Commonweal sold by Mr. Hous, newsagent, George Street.

FRIENDS WILLING TO AID in forming Branches in the undermentioned places are asked to write to the addresses given: Liverpool—W. H. Chapman, Vegetarian Restaurant, 1 Chapman St. Walworth and Camberwell—3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green. Wimbledon and Merton—F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Hoxton—H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road. Streatham—J. Campbell, 98 Wellfield Road, Streatham.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY 11.

8 Mile-end Waste Cores and Brookes.

SUNDAY 12.

10.30 Latimer Road Station Maughan, Lynes sen., Dean
 11.30 Bethnal Green—Gibraltar Walk Mrs. Schack and Cores
 11.30 "Canterbury Arms"—Kilburn Road Mainwaring
 11.30 Hammersmith—Beadon Road Hammersmith Branch
 11.30 Mitcham Fair Green Nicoll
 11.30 Regent's Park Sparling
 11.30 Leman Street, Shadwell W. S. de Mattos on "Capital"
 3.30 Hyde Park Mrs. Lah and Davis
 3.30 Victoria Park Mowbray and Mrs. Schack
 7 Clerkenwell Green Nicoll and Brookes
 7 Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park Hammersmith Branch
 7.30 Mitcham Fair Green The Branch

TUESDAY 14.

8 Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch.

THURSDAY 16.

8 Ossulton Street Nicoll.

FRIDAY 17.

8.15 Hoxton Church The Branch.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, 7.30 p.m.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; St. George's Cross at 7 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Manchester.—Outdoor meetings every Sunday. Stevenson Square at 3 p.m.; Viaduct, Chester Road, at 7.30.

Norwich.—Sunday: Market Place, at 3 and 7.30.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, at 3 every Sunday.

SCOTTISH LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.

Carnoustie.—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant.

Dundee.—Meetings every Sunday in Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Edinburgh.—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8.

Galashiels.—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, Secretary. Gallatown and Dysart (Fife)—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. A.

Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street, Secretary. Kimarnock.—Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday. H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street, Secretary. West Calder.—Robert Lindsay, West Calder, Secretary.

HATCHAM LIBERAL CLUB, Portland House, New Cross Road.—Sunday May 12, at 8.30, Hubert Bland, "Where Radicalism Fails."

SHEFFIELD.—St. George's Liberal Club.—Mr. J. Sketchley will lecture on Monday May 13, at 8 p.m., on "Work and Wages."

FRENDALE LIBERAL AND RADICAL CLUB, 35 Bedford Road, Brixton.—Thursday May 16, at 8.30, Hubert Bland, "Where Radicalism Fails."

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Songs for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
- Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d.
- The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d.
- The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
- The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
- The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
- The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
- True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
- Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d.
- "Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.
- Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

No. 6 of "The Socialist Platform."

JUST PUBLISHED, 24pp., 1d.

TRUE AND FALSE SOCIETY.

BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

Price 1d.; post free, 1½d. Usual price to Branches or the trade.

Our Parish and Our Duke; OR, WHAT LAND NATIONALISATION MEANS.

A Letter to my Fellow-Parishioners.
BY
EDWARD CARPENTER.

To be had of the Author, Millthorpe, near Chesterfield. Price 2s. per 100, post free.

ARBEJDEREN

("The Worker")

DANISH SOCIALIST WEEKLY.

Edited and published by NICOLAJ PETERSEN and GERSON TRIER.

Subscription 3s. a-year.

Nansensgade 28A, Copenhagen.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

299 SHALESMOOR, SHEFFIELD.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. 1 copy, 2d., by post, 3d.; 3 copies, 8d.; 6, 1s. 3d.; 12, 2s. 5d.; 24, 4s. 9d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free. 50, post free, 6s. 100, post free, 11s.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LIFE OF ALBERT R. PARSONS.

290 PAGES, BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

Telling the Story of his Life, partly from his own pen, so full of startling incidents, ending with the tragedy of Nov. 11, 1887.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM

JOSEPH GRUENHUT, GEN. W. H. PARSONS, GEN. B. F. BUTLER, CAPT. W. P. BLACK, WM. HOLMES, LIZZIE M. HOLMES (SWANK), LOTHROP WITHINGTON, and others, make this one of the most interesting books of our time.

Price (Postpaid) 6s. 6d.

Address—MRS. PARSONS, 735 Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

KARL MARX.

A NEW AND HIGHLY ARTISTIC ETCHING.

India Proof, 19 by 24 inches.

Price Two Dollars.

ETCHED AND PUBLISHED BY ALFRED C. KIHN, 298 Jay Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., U.S.A.

Also for sale at New York Labour News Co., 25 East Fourth Street, N.Y.

Copies mailed to any address on receipt of price.

Can be had of W. Reeves, 185 Fleet Street, London.

FREIHEIT

INTERNATIONAL ORGAN OF THE GERMAN-SPEAKING ANARCHISTS.

EDITED BY JOHN MOST.

Subscription, 2s. per quarter; under cover, 4s.

John Müller, Post Office Box 3135, New York, U.S.A., or Office of Commonweal.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Just Published, square crown 8vo, 200 pp., 6s.

A TALE OF THE HOUSE OF THE WOLFINGS, and all the Kindreds of the Mark. Written in Prose and Verse.

Library Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
Vol. III., AUTUMN seventh edition 12s.
Vol. IV., WINTER seventh edition 12s.

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo, at 2s. 6d. each.

ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE ÆNEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond A Morality.

Square 12mo, 143 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNES-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

DER ARME TEUFEL.

EDITED BY ROBERT REITZEL.

Offices: 6 Champlain Street, Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Subscription, 2 dols. 50 c. yearly.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3D. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2S. 6D.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

COMMONWEAL OFFICE, 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEALTH

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 175.

SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

No one will wonder that the second reading of the new flogging bill has passed the House of Commons with a large majority. It was a matter of course that the present house would not lose an opportunity of showing how reactionary it is. But after all this was not, and was not likely to be, a matter of party; the Quaker Pease being as hearty in voting for it as any of the older kind of oppressor of the people. The vote was essentially the vote of the unthinking middle classes, and the debate was thoroughly in accordance with it.

It would be mere waste of time to take in hand the various forms which the ferocity and folly of these Philistines of Philistines took; but one may say that there were two lines taken up by the defenders of the measure. No. 1 was the effectiveness of brutality as a deterrent of brutality, and No. 2 was the exaltation of the moral duty of making the enemy whom you have caught pay for the enemy whom you cannot catch. On the one hand rank cowardice, on the other stupid revenge are the motives of such legislation.

With such cowards and ruffians as the reactionists of the House of Commons it would be loss of time to argue; and it would, of course, be no less a waste of time to prove to Socialists that while the gigantic wrong of class robbery supported by violence is overshadowing us like the deadly upas-tree, individual theft of any kind cannot excite much moral indignation in us; but since this paper will, it is hoped, fall into the hands of open-minded persons who have not yet learned what Socialism is, we may as well point out first that severity of punishment does not deter persons from committing offences which they are forced into by their surrounding circumstances; and next, that if it did, it might be possible to buy this benefit too dear; and that the price which these severe moralists and benefactors of their kind are prepared to pay for a diminished list of violent burglaries, is the degradation of the whole public.

Furthermore, these wisecracks might if they had read a little history (but fancy an M.P. reading history!) have noted that however pleasant revenge may be, it is an expensive pleasure, and that cowards should not meddle with it. And it is not easy to believe that the shopkeepers who want to add new tortures to our criminal law would venture on doing so if they really understood the necessary consequences of driving violent and brutal men (men made violent and brutal) to despair, and that what their precious bill will do will not be to deter the "criminal class" from burglary, but to egg them on to murder. It will probably, if it becomes law, prove the death-warrant of many a quiet householder, who might otherwise have gone on sanding the sugar and calling to prayers for many years.

But really it is a sickening job arguing about a set of cowardly and hypocritical pirates who have got just one idea into their heads on the subject of theft, which is that they alone amongst all the world should be allowed to rob with violence and then escape the consequences of robbery by violence.

W. M.

For far too long those who "go down to the sea in ships" were helpless, unorganised, and dumb under oppression. Even England, "mistress of the waters," left her sons to perish by sea, as she left them by land, wholly unheeded so long as their deaths were due to the profit-making greed of her capitalists. And they themselves seemed well-nigh content it should be so. But they have begun to move like the rest of the workers everywhere, and they have now a tremendous union, and an organ of their own. That they may meet with the success they deserve, and not be content for long merely with the objects they set forth in the platform to be found in another column, but go on to form the Navy of Labour which shall complement the Army of Labour that is growing so rapidly, is our earnest wish.

The rabid philanthropist makes himself a nuisance everywhere, as indeed he seeks to do, counting it to himself for righteousness that he makes religion, temperance, or anything else, stink in the nostrils of the ordinary man, however admirable the things may be in themselves. The other day at the County Council there came up a question whether the licence of a certain public-house should be preserved or no. There were only a few—seventeen, as the division showed—in favour of its preservation; it was quite obvious from the very beginning of the debate how the vote was going. But Mr. F. N. Charrington could not let the opportunity pass for a speech of the most approved Chadband-Stiggins type, with a raw-head-and-bloody-bones addition of iron bars and broken skulls, etc.

Now, nobody familiar with the working class, or any other class in this country, can deny that the lessening of drunkenness is a most desirable end; and in these days of adulteration it would be quite as well in most cases to drop drinking altogether. But just when one has admitted so much, and perhaps begun to feel a little inclined oneself to do a little in the direction of discouraging the drinking habits of the people, along comes the Chadband or the Charrington with a scream of contempt for anything but his own doctrines.

"Think of your soul's welfare, and never mind your wages. Be sober and miserable and obedient, and everything your masters tell you, and you'll go to heaven. The more you suffer here, the happier you will be above. Be sober and save, and become yourself a capitalist. Don't ask for justice; all that's due to you is charity. Crawl and crouch and pray and snivel and whine, the more you abase yourself before your betters here, the higher you will be exalted hereafter."

A man is often measured by the company he keeps, and so is a principle. So when Temperance comes, as it nearly always does, mixed up with such doctrines, and also comes armed with a bludgeon with which to batter down anybody not actively on its side, what is one to do! To allow, even for a moment, that temperance or total abstinence, or anything of that kind, is a radical cure for all social ills, is impossible for a Socialist. If you do not swallow that pill, however, and swear by water, you are damned as a drunkard, and held up to opprobrium as a preacher of excess.

All that one can do is to keep one's temper as well as may be, and explain the true position of affairs; that so long as the wage-system lasts, so long will wages tend to a minimum marked by the amount required for bare subsistence; that so long as wages remain at this minimum, squalor, disease, and misery must be the lot of the working folk; and that so long as they are squalid, sick, and wretched, they will be drunken and degraded.

S.

OKLAHOMA AND VIENNA.

It is now an axiom in evolution that "the life history of the individual is an epitome of the life history of the race," of course conditioned and varied to some extent by immediate environment. The ontogeny and phylogeny of sociology is as much a certainty as in any other branch of evolution, but it is seldom that the student has so good an opportunity of observing and proving this truth in evolution as the newspapers have furnished in their reports of the rush in Oklahoma and the tram-slaves' strike in Vienna. The same papers gave reports of John Morley's plain talk to his labour constituents, and in the simple fact of reporting the first two events gave John the lie. With sturdy John, as with all the so-called philosophical Radicals, "thrift" and "self-help" are the sole saviours of Labour. Events in Oklahoma show how small a chance bare Labour ever has to get ahead of Capital and Privilege.

The treatment accorded to the native peoples of America by the whites has been precisely the same as that dealt to the natives of Australia, New Zealand, Africa, and, in short, to the natives of any land where once a few whites have been allowed a footing. The record of United States officialism in dealing with the Indian is one long history of shameless trickery and fraud, backed up by brutality and force; law-'n'-order of the most approved type, as explained by the poet—

“Laws, as we read in ancient sages,
Have been like cobwebs in all ages.
Cobwebs for little flies are spread
And laws for little folks are made;
But if an insect of renown,
Hornet or beetle, wasp or drone,
Be caught in quest of sport or plunder,
The flimsy fether flies in sunder.”

For some fifteen years a struggle has been carried on, partly by show of legal method and form, and partly by brute force, of the most nakedly old-fashioned form expressed by the lines—

“Let him take who has the power,
Let him hold who can.”

This particular struggle began when a few adventurers, headed by a Captain Payne, who having held the position of Sergeant-at-Arms of the Kansas State Senate, was able to make use of friends at court when he proceeded to utilise the knowledge he had gained of the district in question. A company was formed with a large capital for the purpose of backing up a party of desperate men, who then proceeded—to use a digger's term—to jump the Indians' claim. This party managed to evade (?) the troops, and effecting a lodgment founded a settlement. It must be noted here at once that the capitalist is already on the scene. £500,000 is a small sum to subscribe with the hope of controlling the fee simple of some two or three millions of acres of land. After a week or two these settlers were, however, dislodged and arrested by troops, but were only kept in prison a couple of weeks, long enough to make them heroes and short enough time not to deter numbers of men ready to be recruits for the new land. By this means in course of a few years something like a firm hold had been secured, and then of course something like a claim for consideration could be dodged up with which to go formally before the Legislature, and then comes in the very useful help of the quite respectable people who sub rosa find funds for exploration, and votes in the House to make a state title to the stolen lands.

Having next gone through the sham of buying from the natives their birthright, for the merest mess of pottage, in the shape of new allotments or reservations in more inaccessible districts, then comes the proclamation which throws open the new land for the benefit of the pioneers of civilisation (?), the settlers who shall make the land fruitful in every inch, and give reason for new capitalist dodges in shape of new railroads, markets, and all the other blessings which accompany civilisation to-day.

One of the first of these blessings, if not the very first, of course, is law-'n'-order, a recognised system of authority, and it is somewhat sad to find civilisation discounted at the very start by the fact that the bitterest curses are being hurled at the men elected—by popular ballot too—to be lower marshals, etc., for having used their power and influence to secure the most advantageous plots of land. It is hard to believe, impossible to understand, why, if America be such a paradise for the poor and the struggling, that so many should be willing to suffer the hardships of miles of travel to get a new start as for weeks have been marching towards Oklahoma.

When the day broke which was to allow the people on this tract of land, 50,000 people were ready to “Rush for the Spoil,” “La Terre,” and in a few days thousands were in as mad a rush to get out of the country. Death by cold, by starvation, and by murder had prevented many rushing back, and others remain because absolutely without any hope of reaching any part where they could get a new start, all their money gone in fares and food at excess rates. Railway companies, food rings, and frauds of every sort have, as usual, utilised the boom to eat up the small capitalist, the thrift man, and afterwards will eat up one another.

The state of things which in settled countries has been brought about by gradual steps of force and fraud, and fraud and force, in this new state were exhibited in every stage in a few hours. The man with the most dollars could buy the fastest horse, and could reach the best plot to claim as his own; had the best chance of hiring as his own private police the men whose capital had been all used up in reaching the land of promise; had the best chance of winning the election to public office—by buying votes with food—and the best chance of securing immunity for any and every act he should commit to secure his hold on what his dollars had put him in possession of. In a few hours an election for municipal officers had been held, a newspaper started, and a bank opened, one city, Guthrie, divided into lots and all sold. By the next morning some people were dying of cold and starvation, and several men shot in quarrels over disputed claims to land.

Reading every available report, and reading between the lines also, it is easy to see that in Oklahoma in the course of a few days, even hours, every hideous detail which goes to make up our vaunted civilisation was exhibited in its worst form; that in Oklahoma in less than a week a whole life history of society making was given in brief, at the same time that one detail was being given in extenso in Vienna.

In Vienna as in Oklahoma, the capitalist rules the roost. In both cases the government and the general body of the community have been the slaves of capital; by turns the capitalist tricks the government and the people, or boldly defies. The tram company in Vienna by use of capital secures a monopoly agreeing to certain rules; having secured its monopoly, sets aside as of no moment all idea of keeping any other part of the covenant than to make dividends. It is only when its extreme use of its powers as monopolist employers of labour have driven its slaves to revolt, that the full results of this power is felt. It is only when all the horrors of a land war and rush to Oklahoma is seen, that the rotten state of things in America—as in every capital ridden land—is fully appreciated, and in both cases the only solution is the same.

THOMAS SHORE, jun.

A LESSON FROM ARGENTINA.

WHILE the debased dunces of the English daily press are amusing their readers with little nothings about parties, the world outside the range of these little minds does things which Anarchists may well applaud. The finance minister, Mr. Varela, of the Argentine Republic had courage enough to lay hands on the sacred ark of the present system—he closed the Bolsa or Exchange for some days, and the police held the keys. His reason for this act was based on the fundamental law of the State, which declares that personal gain shall not set aside the law for the general public good. This law the Bolsa gamblers had infringed by trafficking in the minted currency of the country, to make gains by withholding from circulation gold which had been minted, causing wild confusion in all financial transactions and paralysing trade. To such an extent had this proceeded, that in a proposed transfer of a banking account at Buenos Ayres to a London bank, paper might be taken at the same amount, but gold was not to be had except at the rate of £49 only for the £100 to be transferred. This in a country rich in gold and other metals in the soil, and with a great quantity already coined at great cost to the State.

To such a pass had the absorption of gold coin attained, that Signor Pechico in the Senate proposed the use of leather money, which, having no intrinsic value, would not be used for gain by trafficking in its varying premediated values.

The Buenos Ayres Herald of March 22 thus records the event:

“Last night at a late hour Mr. Varela signed two important notes which burst like bomb-shells in the quarters where their contents first leaked out. It was not considered probable that H. E. would proceed to extremities with the Camara Sindical, but as if scenting danger in the breeze on being made aware of the Camara's intention to fight the battle out, H. E. without a moment's hesitation ordered the chief of police to close the Bolsa hermetically, giving right of entry solely and only to the president and members of the Camara Sindical and porters in charge of the establishment. H. E. then turned his attention to the Camara Sindical itself and sent it a stiff note, advising the members of the measures adopted, adding that their attitude could only be ascribed to one of two causes—either that they were unable to procure the fulfilment of the decree, or that they deliberately set it at defiance. It is due to the minister to state that these measures were rendered a necessity by the action of the Camara, who put the fat in the fire by forwarding H. E. a note in which his authority to interfere in the Bolsa is respectfully disallowed. Only one of two courses was thus left open—battle or retreat—and with the vigour and energy which has characterised the minister's action throughout in the matter, he has elected for the former. This keynote of alarm will create consternation and no small confusion, not only in the ranks of bulls, bears, stags, and guttersnipes, but in the commercial world generally. What are merchants to do for their gold? What are brokers to do for their commissions, shipbrokers for their freights, and produce-brokers for their clients? The Bolsa with its traditions and memories was a meeting-place for all, worthy of the vast business interests worked from its centre and with which it rose, progressed, and thrived. It would be of course absurd to suppose that such a vast institution can have its career thus untimely blighted. Mr. Varela is neither Vandal nor Goth. He seeks not to desecrate nor destroy the temple, but to purify it, and his interdict will only have a momentary duration. But in any case, whatever issue may arise or determination be come to, it will take more than a minister's note or a police commissary's influence to crush the Bolsa de Comercio.”

That's all right from a commercial point of view; it will “take more than a minister's note or a police commissary's influence to crush and uproot the Bolsa de Comercio.” But all the same, rude hands have been laid upon the “temple,” and if “purification” once begins, who shall say where it shall end?

A later mail says that after four days the Bolsa was opened by permission of the minister of finance, who, however, had shown that he looked upon the currency of a country the same as he would upon the water-mains or lamp-posts, as public property for general use, not for private individuals or companies to get hold of and keep back until enormous ransoms were paid to the gamblers and Bolsa thieves who had seized them.

H. KING.

THE COMMUNE IN AUSTRALIA.

By last mail we hear of successful Australian celebrations of the Commune of Paris. On Sunday, March 17th, the Sydney Branch of the Socialist League held an open-air meeting in the Domain in the afternoon at 3 p.m. In the evening a meeting was held at the Rooms, 533, George Street, when addresses were delivered on the Paris Commune by A. M. Pilter, W. H. McNamara, A. Crockett, Léon Planchenault, and others. The following resolution was carried at each meeting:—“That this meeting expresses the deepest sympathy with the heroic attempt of the workers of Paris to overthrow the domination of the classes that live by the robbery of labour, and looks forward to the time when the distinction of classes will be abolished, and the hopes for which so many workers have sacrificed their lives will be realised in the true society of the workers of all countries.” Appropriate songs and recitals were also given.

The Melbourne Branch held its demonstration on the 18th, at which J. A. Andrews, Rosa, Petrie, and others were speakers.

At Brisbane, and other places where our friends were not strong enough to hold public meetings, they met together to encourage one another, and to strengthen their hands for work.

“GETTING ON.”—An example of the remarkable change that has come over Mr. Bradlaugh's position in the House of Commons, since the days when a majority of the House were in arms against him, was forthcoming at question-time the other day. Among the many absentees were Lord Charles Beresford and Mr. Lockwood, who, both having notices of motion, placed them in the hands of the member for Northampton. The House laughed to hear Mr. Bradlaugh rising “on behalf of Lord Charles Beresford” to give notice of his intention on that day month to move his resolution on the organisation of the navy. But Mr. Bradlaugh has been getting on for some time, and is now rather a favourite with the Conservatives than otherwise.—Court Journal.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

GERMANY.

In Westphalia and Rhenish Prussia, a strike of considerable importance has broken out among the miners, which from day to day is assuming wider dimensions. Very nearly one hundred thousand men have left working, and they seem well decided to stick to their demands, viz., an increase of 15 per cent. on their wages and a shortening of their work hours. Soldierly of all arms have been concentrated in these provinces, and General von Albedyll, commanding the Westphalian Army Corps, has gone from his headquarters at Münster to Gelsenkirchen to direct the movements of the troops. Of course, in Germany as elsewhere, the usual course which is adopted for the regulation of the conditions of work consists in bringing on the spot as many soldiers as possible, and in ordering them to shoot right and left on unarmed men, who are merely asking not to be kept any longer on starvation wages. The presence of so many soldiers has already resulted in a lamentable loss of life, and threatens to bring still more about. Collisions are frequent between the military and the men on strike. Already a dozen people have been shot dead, and many wounded, including women and children. Whenever the strikers gather in order to discuss their interests the troops order them to disperse, and if they are not very quick in doing so fire is soon opened on them and "order restored." At Bochum the soldiers even shot dead two or three persons and wounded several others who had nothing to do with the strike, but had just arrived by rail. Near Dortmund they killed a number of colliers after having really provoked them to resistance. At Gladbeck three miners were shot dead, and ten or twelve severely wounded. At Brackel, another conflict between the military and the strikers ended with the result that three men were killed and a number of others wounded. That is the way in which the stupid representatives of law-'n'-order believe they will bring about an understanding between the mine-thieves and those who are employed as slaves on their own property.

BELGIUM.

The scandalous trial for high treason against our comrades Georges Dufuisseaux and some twenty others, is now going on at the Court of Assize of Mons, in the province of Hainault. We intend to report fully this case as soon as the proceedings are terminated, which will not be before another week. But we must say, however, that this trial is one of the most disgusting illustrations of the abominable way in which the governments are continually getting up plots by their own agents, in order to ruin a movement and send to prison its supporters. The counsel for the defence have decided to call as witnesses the Premier of Belgium, one Beernart, who received the agents provocateurs in his cabinet at midnight to give them his instructions, the Minister of Justice, one De Volder, who encouraged the sinister provocateurs to use "violent language" underlined by dynamite explosions, and some other "big" personages. The indignation is general among the Belgian working-classes and part of the bourgeoisie; they ask for the complete acquittal of all the accused Socialists. We shall see.

SWEDEN.

The last Swedish Socialist Congress, which was convened at Stockholm, has come to the following results. In all the questions discussed there has been a majority with moderate views against a strong minority holding very extreme opinions. The majority thought it to be premature to sever there and then all connection with other political organisations. For instance, they found it expedient to unite with such parties as, at the elections, honestly and earnestly claim universal suffrage and popular rights. The minority was of opinion that Socialists have to stand aloof from all other bourgeois parties, as these parties amalgamate more and more in one reactionary mass. The majority declared religion to be matter of private concern, whereas the minority wished it to be understood that all religious creeds must be condemned and propaganda made against their spreading. The question whether the Socialist party thought it necessary that, in order to realise their aims, physical force should be resorted to, was negatively by 18 delegates against a minority of 16, the following resolution being carried: "The Socialist party does not aim at a violent revolution, but if the blindness and the egoism of the ruling classes do provoke such a course, the party will be prepared to use any means in order to secure for the people the most abundant results of their struggle." The minority pleaded for forcible action, and wanted the proceedings on that question to be carried on with closed doors. In the case of a revolutionary movement breaking out, the Socialists were of opinion that they might possibly find good help among the military, the permanent army in Sweden being almost entirely recruited from the poorest classes of the population. As to the organisation of the party, an executive of seven members, with an equal number of substitutes, has been elected to direct the movement. The whole country has been divided into three districts (Stockholm, Malmö, Gothenburg) which carry on their propaganda on their own lines, each district having an official organ—Socialdemokraten for Stockholm, Arbetet for Malmö, and Folkes Röst for Gothenburg. At Novoköping exists also a local paper Proletären.

On the other side, it is said that the Swedish Government is about to submit to the deliberations of the Riksdag a Bill cut after the pattern of the German muzzle-laws against the Socialists.

SWITZERLAND.

The daily papers have reported at length the case of a certain Wohlgenuth, police inspector at Mühlhouse, and a tailor of Basel named Lutz. The Swiss Federal Council have now settled the matter by the following decree: "The Federal Council, considering that August Wohlgenuth, police inspector at Mühlhouse, has committed on Swiss territory acts of which the results are of a compromising nature for the internal and external safety of Switzerland; considering further that the act of tampering with Balthazar Lutz, of Bavaria, residing at Basel, has resulted in creating agitation among the workers of Basel, Alsace-Lorraine, and the Duchy of Bade; that among other manoeuvres, Wohlgenuth wrote to Lutz 'to act unscrupulously'; decides that Wohlgenuth be expelled from the Swiss territory. On the other hand, considering that Lutz, tailor at Basel, has accepted the rôle of an agent provocateur and the monies offered to him for agitating amongst the workers of Basel, Alsace-Lorraine, and the Duchy of Bade, and that he has accepted to report to Wohlgenuth, decide that Lutz be expelled from the Swiss territory." Der Sozialdemokrat contends that Lutz, who belongs to the German Social-Democratic party, has only acted in the way he did in order to be better enabled to catch the German officer at work, and we think it but fair, without expressing an opinion ourselves, to state what our German colleague has to say about him.

HOLLAND.

Last Saturday our friends at the Hague decided to have a lark, and they resorted to a tolerably good joke. Some Socialists succeeded in effecting an entry into the Great Tower, and replaced the old dirty yellow Orange standard by a red flag bearing a Socialist inscription, which was not discovered until broad daylight. The flag was of course then removed, and the dirty Orange rag restored to its place. A judicial inquiry has been opened; dear me! The Star, in its extreme Radicalism, calls the joke an extraordinary outrage!

FRANCE.

A new Socialist revolutionary paper will be started at Lyons on the 23rd of the present month, with comrades Augier, Servelle, Chabrat, and Humblot as editors. It is to be entitled Le Flambeau Rouge (The Red Link), and the offices of the paper are established at 51, Rue des Trois-Pierres. The terms for subscription are very low, 1s. 2½d. per quarter for England and America. We hope that our Lyons comrades will succeed in their venture.

AUSTRIA.

The tramway strike at Vienna having succeeded, the bourgeois class are beginning to look after some vengeance. Last Monday, prosecutions were opened against some two hundred participants in the "troubles" in Favoriten and Waehring. The usual kind of charges were preferred against the accused, i.e., violently resisting the public authorities and causing damage to property. The bourgeois Nupkinses scandalously condemned these men, who had merely defended themselves against the brutality of the soldiers, to terms of imprisonment varying from five to fifteen months. V. D.

HERE'S A HEALTH TO THEM THAT DELVE AND HEW.

TUNE—"Here's a Health unto His Majesty."

HERE'S a health to them that delve and hew,
With a fal lal lal la la la la,
Whose backs are burdened by the few,
With a fal lal lal la la la ;
And he that will not pledge this health,
We'd wish him neither health nor wealth,
Nor yet a rope to hang himself,—
With a fal lal lal la la la la.

And hurrah for the corn and wine they win,
Too good to stuff in an idle skin.

Then here's to the day, now dawning fair,
When all shall labour, and none go bare.

When the cowering slave, with forethought wan,
Shall fear no more than befits a man.

And the lordly wasters, who but they Shall earn their victual an honest way?

So this our parting toast shall be,
Conversion to the enemy!

C. W. BECKETT.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING MAY 25, 1889.

19	Sun.	1796. Paul Thomas Lemaitre, John Smith, and George Higgins acquitted of treason. 1816. Food-riots in Suffolk, and demand for maximum prices, wheat 2s. 6d. a bushel and meat 4d. a lb. 1825. St Simon died. 1886. Strikes in Belgium.
20	Mon.	1793. "Law of Maximum," fixing price of commodities, proclaimed at Paris. 1793. "Insurrection of Prairial" by Sansculottes (Prairial 1, year 3). 1796. Trial of John Reeves for "seditious libel" in his book intitled 'Thoughts on the English Government, addressed to the quiet good sense of the people of England, in a series of letters.' 1820. Murder of Sandt, executioner of Kotzebue. 1867. Sentence on Captain John McAfferty, Fenian. 1887. Private murder in prison of five persons implicated in the attempt of March 13th on the Czar.
21	Tues.	1358. Revolt of the Jacquarie. 1795. Insurrection of the Faubourgs. 1798. Trial of James O'Coigley, Arthur O'Connor, John Binns, John Allen, and Jeremiah Leary at Maidstone for high treason as United Irishmen. 1867. Trial of Edward Duffy for high treason as a Fenian.
22	Wed.	1793. First number of One Pennyworth of Pig's Meat; or Lessons for the Swinish Multitude , published weekly at 1d. by Thos. Spence. 1868. Second prosecution of the International at Paris; 9 prisoners. 1885. Victor Hugo died.
23	Thur.	1498. Savonarola burned. 1851. Lalor Shiel died. 1867. Captain John McClure and Edward Kelly, Fenians, sentenced. 1881. Nihilist manifesto issued at St. Petersburg, offering peace if reforms are granted. 1887. Great strikes among Belgian colliers and ironworkers.
24	Fri.	1744. Jean Paul Marat born. 1804. Trial of W. Cobbett for libel in the Weekly Political Register on the Lord Lieutenant (Earl Hardwick) and other members of the Irish Government. 1808. Weavers' riot at Manchester. 1879. William Lloyd Garrison died. 1885. Rioting at Paris.
25	Sat.	1803. R. W. Emerson born. 1839. Chartist meeting at Kersal Moor, near Manchester. 1848. John Mitchel transported for 14 years. 1871. Strike of 9,050 engineers at Newcastle. 1872. Sérizier, Bouin, and Boudin shot as Communards. 1881. Johann Most found guilty; judgment deferred for arguing of legal points.

Becky Sharp's acute remark that it is not difficult to be virtuous on ten thousand a year has its application to nations; and it is futile to expect a hungry and squalid population to be anything but violent and gross.—Huxley.

from the waggon with his son, and the crowd roaring with fury rushes on. The rest of the people in the waggon follow, carrying the other flags. There are seventy police, the whole available force from Bow Street, upon the ground. These rush upon the men bearing two of the flags, one of which has the inscription "The brave soldiers are our friends" upon it, and drag them from them and break the flags to pieces. They, however, let the crowd rush on unmolested. The people pour on to the number of six or seven hundred down Coppice Row and through Cowcross Street to the city. In Skinner Street, Snow Hill, an arms shop is sacked. Young Watson rushes in, pistol in hand, demanding arms. Another young man, a Mr. Platt, in the shop, seized with a fear that Watson is going to shoot him, grapples with him, and in the struggle the pistol goes off and Platt is seriously wounded. The mob then rush through Snow Hill to Cheapside, down to Royal Exchange. The gates of the Royal Exchange are open and they rush through it. The Lord Mayor and some city constables are in waiting, and they charge on the crowd and capture Hooper and the remaining tricolour. The people who have got through the Exchange turn to rescue their comrade, but the gates of the Exchange are closed by constables and Lord Mayor. The rioters endeavour to force the gates, and discharge their guns and pistols through the bars at the upholders of law and order. Finding it impossible to force these solid barriers, they pour off towards Bishopsgate, young Watson leading their sword in hand. They reach Bishopsgate Street, and rushing down Houndsditch arrive at the Minories. In the Minories at that time were several gunsmiths' shops, and two were broken open and pillaged. In one of them near Tower Hill the people found two small field-pieces, and in obedience to orders received from the leaders, a sailor began to sponge and load one. Meanwhile Thistlewood and the elder Watson went on to the Tower. There were a number of soldiers on the ramparts, attracted by the tumult, for many of the crowd were loading and discharging their muskets and pistols in the air, to the alarm and consternation of the timid shopkeepers. Thistlewood climbed on the rails in front of the moat, and called upon the soldiers to join the people and hand over the Tower to the populace. The soldiers made no response to these overtures. Finding that the military would not fraternise, the people returned towards the Minories. They had just reached the top when a wheel came off one of the small pieces. This caused some confusion, and young Watson called on the people to form themselves in military order. But before they had complied with the request the Guards rode into the Minories and the crowd fled in confusion, throwing away their arms in all directions; and the leaders, deserted by their men, were forced to follow their example. Thus ended the famous disturbances of Spa-Fields.

D. J. NICOLL.

(To be continued.)

CORRESPONDENCE.

In answer to our comrade Blackwell's suggestion, and in default of someone else beginning that free discussion he speaks of, I wish to note down a few thoughts suggested by reading the clauses of the Anarchist Congress at Valentia, as stated by our comrade; premising that I do so in no polemical spirit, but simply giving my own thoughts and hopes for the future for what they may be worth.

I will begin by saying that I call myself a Communist, and have no wish to qualify that word by joining any other to it. The aim of Communism seems to me to be the complete equality of condition for all people; and anything in a Socialist direction which stops short of this is merely a compromise with the present condition of society, a halting-place on the road to the goal. This is the only logical outcome of any society which is other than a close company sustained by violence for the express purpose of "the exploitation of man by man" in the interest of the strongest. Our present "society" dominated by capitalism, the society of contract, is a form of this class-society which has been forced upon those who hold the slave ideal by the growth of knowledge and the acquirement by man of mastery over the forces of nature. The history of "society" since the fall of feudalism has been the gradual freeing of class or slave society from the fetters of superstition, so that it might develop naturally within its prescribed limits of "exploitation of man by man," and that stupendous and marvellously rapid growth in power and resources of modern slave society is due to this shaking off of superstition.

Communism also will have to keep itself free of superstition. Its ethics will have to be based on the recognition of natural cause and effect, and not on rules derived from a priori ideas of the relation of man to the universe or some imagined ruler of it; and from these two things, the equality of condition and the recognition of the cause and effect of material nature, will grow all Communistic life. So far I think I can see clearly; but when I try to picture to myself the forms which that life will take, I confess I am at fault, and I think we must all be so. Most people who can be said to think at all are now beginning to see that the realisation of Socialism is certain; although many can see nothing further than a crude and incomplete State Socialism, which very naturally repels many from Socialism altogether. All genuine Socialists admit that Communism is the necessary development of Socialism; but I repeat, further than this all must be speculative; and surely in speculating on the future of society we should try to shake ourselves clear of mere phrases; especially as many of them will cease to have a meaning when the change comes that we all of us long for. And here I join issue with our Anarchist-Communist friends, who are somewhat authoritative on the matter of authority, and not a little vague also. For if freedom from authority means the assertion of the advisability or possibility of an individual man doing what he pleases always and under all circumstances, this is an absolute negation of society, and makes Communism as the highest expression of society impossible; and when you begin to qualify this assertion of the right to do as you please by adding "as long as you don't interfere with other people's rights to do the same," the exercise of some kind of authority becomes necessary. If individuals are not to coerce others, there must somewhere be an authority which is prepared to coerce them not to coerce; and that authority must clearly be collective. And there are other difficulties besides this crudest and most obvious one.

The bond of Communistic society will be voluntary in the sense that all people will agree in its broad principles when it is fairly established, and will trust to it as affording mankind the best kind of life possible. But while we are advocating equality of condition—i.e., due opportunity free to everyone for the satisfaction of his needs—do not let us forget the necessary (and beneficent) variety of temperament, capacity, and desires which exists amongst men about everything outside the region of the merest necessities; and though many, or if you will, most of these different desires could be satisfied without the individual clashing with collective society, some of them could not be. Any community conceivable will sometimes determine on collective action which, without being in itself immoral or oppressive, would give pain to some of its members; and what is to be done then if it happens to be a piece of business which must be either done or left alone? would the small minority have to give way or the large majority? A concrete example will be of use here, especially as it affects my temperament. I have always believed that the realisation of Socialism would give us an opportunity of escaping from that grievous flood of utilitarianism which the full development of the society of contract has cursed us with; but that would be in the long run only; and I think it quite probable that in the early days of Socialism the reflex of the terror of starvation, which so oppresses us now, would drive us into excesses of utilitarianism. Indeed, there is a school of Socialists now extant who worship utilitarianism with a fervour of fatuity which is perhaps a natural consequence of their assumption of practicality. So that it is not unlikely that the public opinion of a community would be in favour of cutting down all the timber in England, and turning the country into a big Bonanza farm or a market-garden under glass. And in such a case what could we do, who objected "for the sake of life to cast away the reasons for living," when we had exhausted our powers of argument? Clearly we should have to submit to authority. And a little reflection will show us many such cases in which the collective authority will weigh down individual opposition, however reasonable, without a hope for its being able to assert itself immediately; in such matters there must be give and take: and the objectors would have to give up the lesser for the greater. In short, experience shows us that wherever a dozen thoughtful men shall meet together there will be twelve different opinions on any subject which is not a dry matter of fact (and often on that too); and if those twelve men want to act together, there must be give and take between them, and they must agree on some common rule of conduct to act as a bond between them, or leave their business undone. And what is this common bond but authority—that is, the conscience of the association voluntarily accepted in the first instance.

Furthermore, when we talk of the freedom of the individual man, we must not forget that every man is a very complex animal, made up of many different moods and impulses; no man is always wise, or wise in all respects. Philip sober needs protection against Philip drunk, or he may chance to wake up from his booze in a nice mess. Surely we all of us feel that there is a rascal or two in each of our skins besides the other or two who want to lead manly and honourable lives, and do we not want something to appeal to on behalf of those better selves of ours? and that something is made up of the aspirations of our better selves, and is the moral conscience without which there can be no true society, and which even a false society is forced to imitate, and so have a sham social conscience,—what we sometimes call hypocrisy.

Now I don't want to be misunderstood. I am not pleading for any form of arbitrary or unreasonable authority, but for a public conscience as a rule of action: and by all means let us have the least possible exercise of authority. I suspect that many of our Communist-Anarchist friends do really mean that, when they pronounce against all authority. And with equality of condition assured for all men, and our ethics based on reason, I cannot think that we need fear the growth of a new authority taking the place of the one which we should have destroyed, and which we must remember is based on the assumption that equality is impossible and that slavery is an essential condition of human society. By the time that is assumed that all men's needs must be satisfied according to the measure of the common wealth, what may be called the political side of the question would take care of itself.

WILLIAM MORRIS.

THE NATIONAL AMALGAMATED SAILOR'S AND FIREMEN'S UNION OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.—Among the chief objects of this recently formed but already very powerful Union are:—(1) To improve the condition and protect the interests of all classes of seafaring men. (2) To establish homes for seamen in all places where the Executive Committee deem it expedient. (3) To make advances of money to seafaring men at low interest on security of their wages and allotment notes. (4) To endeavour to obtain reasonable hours of duty, and to maintain fair rates of wages. (5) To assist members whose interests have been damaged by reason of prominent services rendered to the society. (6) To afford legal assistance, either as plaintiff or defendant, to any member of the society in respect of matters arising out of, or incidental to, his employment as a sailor or sea-going fireman, cook or steward, including claims for wages, damages for breach of contract for wages, compensation for injuries, claims for salvage, alleged liability for negligence or misconduct involving loss or forfeiture of wages or involving penalties, and all claims and liabilities, whether under the Merchant Shipping or any other Act or Acts of Parliament, or otherwise, of what nature soever, so arising or incidental as aforesaid, nevertheless, to the rules of the society; and to provide for the maintenance of members detained on shore till their cases are tried. (7) To use every effort to provide for the safety of ships work in order to prevent loss of life at sea. (8) To provide a better class of men for the merchant service, and to see that all members that are engaged through the Union shall be on board at the appointed time and in a sober condition ready for work. (9) To provide assistance to shipwrecked mariners. (10) To provide assistance to members who are travelling in search of work. (11) To put seafaring men, intending to become members but for the time being unable to pay, on the same footing as paying members, except with regard to financial benefits, by granting them Privilege Cards. (12) And to provide funds for the relief of members in sickness or temporary disablement, and for their respectable interment." Full particulars on application at any of the branches of the Union, or at the office of their organ Seafaring, 150, Minories, E.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The strike which originated among the machine boys in the Armagh Spinning Mills Thursday week continues, and five hundred hands are out of work.

Nearly all the boilermakers at Southampton returned to work on Friday the 10th. All the firms but one have conceded the increased wages demanded. The strike has lasted eight weeks.

The Union seamen and firemen at Leith are demanding an advance of 2s. per week, which will make their wage 30s. per week. It is alleged by one employer that he can get men at Rotterdam for 20s. per week.

SALT TRADE STRIKE.—The salt workers employed at Newbridge Works, near Winsford, Cheshire, have come out on strike. It is anticipated their action will be followed by the whole of the salt workers in the district, numbering about 3,000.

At a meeting of the employés of the Glasgow Tramway Company held on Sunday, it was resolved to form a Union for all classes of workmen employed by the Tramway Company. Before leaving the hall, 150 of the men enrolled themselves members of the new organisation.

BELTH CABINETMAKERS.—At a crowded mass meeting on Tuesday, it was unanimously resolved to demand a reduction in hours of labour and the abolition of piece-work. A deputation was formed to approach the masters, and if an unfavourable answer was received action would be taken on the 1st of June.

GLASGOW CABINET-MAKERS' STRIKE.—This strike for an advance of 10 per cent. on day wages and 15 per cent. on piecework is still undecided. A considerable number of Cumming and Smith's men have returned to work, and Wylie and Lochhead's cabinet and chair makers have accepted an advance of 5 per cent.

AYR SHIPYARD.—Most of the labourers employed at Ayr shipyard have struck for an advance. There are two sections out, ordinary labourers who have been working for 3½d. an hour, and those who may be styled skilled labourers who have been working for 6d. an hour. The former demand an advance of ½d. and the latter ¾d. per hour.

About a thousand millworkers recently engaged at Shrigley Mills, Killey bagh, near Downpatrick, are on strike for an increase of wages. After an unsuccessful meeting of employers and workmen on the 8th inst. was held, stones were thrown at the employers and a riot ensued. The manager's house and co-operative stores were attacked, and 60 panes of glass were broken in the factory.

ENGLISH COLLIERIES.—Northumberland soft-coal miners have refused to accept 2½ per cent. advance; they demand 7 per cent. A strong demand for coal and coke for Germany and some Dutch ports continues at Newcastle—another proof of the international interest workers should have in each other's labour struggles. The coals their English comrades dig and are robbed of are thrown at the heads of the miners on strike on the Continent. They supplement the bullets of the Continental capitalists' hired murderers.

GLASGOW JOINERS.—The Glasgow joiners, to the number of 200, came out on strike on Saturday 11th. They desire 8d. hourly; their present wage is 7½d. At a meeting in Albion Hall it was reported that several masters who have contracts to be finished before the term have granted the advance. It is believed the strike will be of short duration. Later.—This dispute is practically at an end. 89 employers have already conceded the ½d. per hour demanded, but there are still about 300 men out. Deputations are visiting the shops at work in support of the men on strike.

NAIL AND CHAIN TRADES.—In South Staffordshire and East Worcestershire the operatives are agitating for an advance, but owing to employers' operatives being disorganised, no satisfactory decision can be arrived at. In some districts it is feared it will be necessary to resort to a strike. The horse-nail makers' notice for an advance of 6d. per thousand expired Saturday, but the employers say they cannot concede it, owing to machine-made nails being imported from abroad. At meetings of chainmakers on strike Saturday, at Cradley Heath, it was stated that about half of the operatives had resumed work at the advanced rate of wages, and others were determined to remain out until the advance was conceded. Some leading employers have stated that trade will not warrant a further advance, and one firm is said to have lost a foreign order for 200 tons through being unable to execute it at the prices lately specified. Several employers assert they shall be compelled to close their factories.

IRISH RAILWAYMEN.—According to a correspondent of the Railway Review, the following are the wages on the northern division. The traffic manager gets a salary of £800 per annum. The superintendents get £3 per week, first-class station masters 30s. to 40s. per week (very few at this latter figure), chief goods clerks 22s. 6d. to 25s. (one or two have 27s. 6d.), booking clerks 15s. to 20s. (at Belfast 25s.), second-class station masters 20s. to 22s. 6d., invoice clerks 8s. 6d. to 13s., while at Belfast it is a little higher; passenger guards 20s. (those on branch lines 15s.), night train guards 15s. There are also a few running on main line at 15s., and no prospect of an increase. Consequently it is only a matter of time, and 20s. guards will be a thing of the past, as the 15s. gents lately applied for an increase, which was declined. Goods guards 19s., assistants 18s., and their hours average over 70 per week, principally all-night duty. The hours of branch line guards are about 13 daily. Inspectors receive 20s., third-class station masters 16s. and 17s. 6d. per week; head porters 15s., 16s., and 17s., according to work; ticket collectors, 13s., 14s., and 15s., and at Belfast, 20s.; passenger porters average 11s., Belfast, 12s.; goods porters 11s., and in some cases 10s.; examiners, 15s.; waggon greasers, 7s. 6d.; shunters, 14s. and 15s., Belfast 20s.; signalmen, 11s., 12s., 13s., and one or two instances of 15s. and 16s. Sunday duty is worked 12 hours to the day, but it is not paid for; in fact, no pay is allowed in the traffic department for Sunday duty, nor is overtime paid for, except in a few cases in provincial towns. On market days for taking in and loading the butter, eggs, etc., the men are rewarded with the enormous sum of 1s. each, though they have been known to work till four o'clock in the morning. This company can also claim credit, if credit it be, for having a station master at 16s. per week, out of which they deduct 3s. per week for rents, thus leaving their official with a salary of 13s. per week. These figures will show that Irish railwaymen are nearly as badly off as the peasantry, but, like their brethren of England, they are too "respectable" to make much row about their condition.

LONDON BRICKMAKERS.—The brickmakers in North and East London are on strike. The men have had their wages reduced twice during the last few years by 6d. per thousand bricks each time. Since bricks now average 5s. more per thousand than they did this time last year, they demand an increase of 6d. per thousand. The strike has lasted about six weeks, and all attempts at reconciliation have failed. The men have no trade union, and are now reaping the consequences. They are collecting subscriptions for themselves and families.

NOTTINGHAM LACE TRADE.—Nottingham lace manufacturers have decided on a reduction of 40 per cent. in wages paid to the men in the curtain branch of the trade. In the event of the reduction being rejected the employers will propose to refer the matter to arbitration. But it is believed the men will resist, and a strike affecting several thousand hands is probable. The employers state that they have come into serious competition with manufacturers outside the borough, who, it is asserted, pay their work-people from 60 to 70 per cent. less than the rate of wages which prevails in Nottingham.

BRICK TRADE.—Subscriptions are being collected for the brickmakers on strike in Birmingham, and are received, amongst other places, at the headquarters, the Garrison Tavern, Garrison Lane. Up to the present £61 1s. 9d. has been subscribed, and a fortnight ago 1s. 6d. each was paid out to the strikers. The men have written a letter in which they desire to show that they are not fairly dealt with by the side of other branches of the trade. They write:—"Twenty-three years ago we were receiving 3s. 6d. per 1,000. We were then paying 1s. per 1,000 clay wheeling, and 7s. 6d. per week for carrying off. Suppose an average moulder to make 15,000 per week, that would leave the moulder £1 10s. At the present time we are receiving 4s. per 1,000, which is 6d. advance; out of this we pay 1s. 5½d. per 1,000 wheeling, 12s. 6d. per week carrying off, which at the present day leaves the moulder £1 5s. 7½d. This shows a reduction of 4s. 4½d. per week, although the masters consider we have had a rise." At a meeting of the masters it was resolved not to concede the demands, and endeavour to start their works with imported hands. Two yards have already started with imported hands, and a third will be next week. The masters stated that they had received applications for work from outside men.

LEWIS DIEMSHITZ AND JUDGE EDLIN.

At the Boro' of Hackney Radical Club last Sunday morning, after the band performance, the president of the club (Mr. Thomas Tongue) called the attention of the members to Lewis Diemshitz's imprisonment. After the facts had been explained, Mr. Wayne, the president of the Political Council, proposed: "That the members of this club (numbering 1,800) protest against the brutal sentence of three months' with hard labour passed by Sir P. Edlin on Lewis Diemshitz for a trivial technical outrage, while discharging his duty as steward of the club, committed on P.C. Frost; and asks the Home Secretary for a remission of the remainder of his sentence." This was unanimously carried.

The Council of the S^ML, at their meeting on Monday 13th, passed the following resolution unanimously, with instructions to the secretary to forward the same to the Home Secretary: "That this meeting protests against the unjust sentence passed upon Lewis Diemshitz by Judge Edlin of three months' hard labour, and to find sureties for twelve months after, for simply trying, as steward of the Berner Street club, to prevent a forcible entry into the premises of the club by detectives, police, and others, on March 16th; and this meeting further resolves that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Home Secretary, with a request that he will exercise his prerogative by revising the sentence."

The same course has been followed on Thursday 9th at open-air meeting in Euston Road; on 12th at Clerkenwell Green, open-air; and by the Hammersmith Branch at their indoor meeting. Several provincial Branches have followed the example.

A working man—Mr. F. Willis, member of the executive, London Society of Compositors—has published a pamphlet entitled 'The Identity of Interests of Employers and Employed.' Having seen the title, we think our readers will dispense with any criticism from us; but any person wishing to know further of it may purchase a copy for threepence, although we should warn such a one that the production is not intended as a piece of humour. We suggest to Mr. Willis that in his next effort he should delight the scientific world by a monograph on the mutual good feeling that ought to subsist between the fox and the goose. After having squared the interests of the exploited and the exploiters, he would find the subject an easy one for his great literary powers.

POLICE!—Sitting at Wandsworth the other day, Mr. Bridge quite eclipsed himself as the policeman's friend. A tramcar driver, named Gommon, was charged with being drunk during his employment. Policeman Mackenzie swore that he "reeled against the car," "nearly fell headlong over the splashboard," and performed other acrobatic feats which showed that he was drunk. At the station Gommon said, "If you say I am drunk, I am drunk," a remark which sounds sarcastic, but which Mr. Bridge says "is a common one, and he did not know of a single instance where it was made by a sober man"! The Rev. W. Sharp, a "fare," said that Gommon was not drunk, but was charged because he said something "which ruffled the constable's temper" while changing horses. He had "never witnessed a more abominable breach of discipline," and he expostulated with the policeman. Another witness, a solicitor, swore that the constable "rushed violently at the driver three times," and "was white with passion." Several bystanders expostulated with the constable, and declared that Gommon was sober. Mackenzie, recalled, admitted the expostulation; whereupon Mr. Bridge "came unhesitatingly to the conclusion that the prisoner's manner and conduct justified the police in thinking that he was drunk, and the officer acted within his duty in removing him from the car. He did not believe that the indignation of the gentlemen who had appeared on behalf of the prisoner was justifiable, and it was to be regretted that they did not go to the police-station to complain, as this would have been the conduct of most Englishmen desirous of seeing fair play. He gave the prisoner the benefit of the doubt, and ordered him to be discharged." "Not guilty, but don't do it again," is wisdom itself compared with this. Mr. Sharp had explained that he did not go to the station because he had some heavy luggage with him; and the solicitor did not go because he had some business to attend to. Yet because a parson does not carry heavy luggage all over the country, and because a solicitor does not neglect his business, a constable may be "justified" in thinking a sober man drunk, and haling him off to prison!—Pall Mall Gazette.

HATCHAM LIBERAL CLUB, Portland House, New Cross Road.—Sunday May 19, at 8.30, Annie Besant, "The True Radical Policy."

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, June 3, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Commonweals for 1888, handsomely bound in red, are now ready, price 5s.; per post, 5s. 6d.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th, at 13, Farringdon Road. Agenda has been sent to Branches.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Oxford, to end of September.

1889:—Mitcham, to end of February. North London, and St. Georges East, to end of March. Bradford, Hammersmith, and Leicester, to end of April. East London, and Yarmouth, to end of May. Clerkenwell, to end of June.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch apitipation fees as soon as possible.

Propaganda Committee.—The Propaganda Committee meets on Tuesday, May 21st, at 8.30 p.m. Important business; all members of the League interested in the propaganda invited to attend. The leaflet, "A Straight Talk to Working Men," is now on sale at 4s. per 1,000. Can be obtained of the Secretary, at 13, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

The secretary of the Propaganda Committee asks members and friends to forward subscriptions for the purpose of printing leaflets for free distribution, of which there is a great need. Subscriptions to be sent to the Secretary, D. J. Nicoll, 13, Farringdon Road, and will be acknowledged in the Weal.

Defence Committee (Berner Street).—J. Wood (Limehouse), 2s.; Manchester Branch, 1s. 4d.; Norwich, 6s. 2d.; T. O'Connell (Woolwich), 2s. 6d.; per R. Turner, 1s.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication.

FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—Blundell, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 6d.; R. Turner, 6d.; J. Turner, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; Nicoll, 6d.; Rose, 6d.; C. Saunders, 1s.; B. W., 6d.; and Schmitt, 1s. Norwich, 1s. 2d. Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

CLERKENWELL.—On Sunday, F. Charles lectured on "What's to be done during a revolutionary period" to attentive audience; questions and discussion followed; 1s. collected; 1s. 1d. collected for Defence Fund.—S. P.

HAMMERSMITH.—Fair meeting at Latimer Road on Sunday morning; speakers were Lyne, sen., Lyne, jun., Maughan, and Crouch; 32 Commonweal sold. Fair meeting at Beadon Road, speakers, Morris and Tarleton. Good meeting at Weltje Road in evening; speakers were Mordhurst, Lyne, jun., Kitchen, and Maughan; 16 Commonweal sold. At Kelmscott House, W. Morris lectured on Bellamy's "Looking Backward" and Grant Allen's article in the current Contemporary.

ABERDEEN.—No indoor meeting held last week, Monday being the Spring holiday. On Tuesday night, Henry George lectured under the auspices of the Junior Liberal Association, when Webster and Leatham put a number of questions. The answering of some of these cost him a good deal of rhetorical jugglery. Webster, however, did good "biz" by playing him off against the temperance people. At open-air meeting at Castle Street on Saturday night, Duncan and Leatham spoke to a large crowd, the latter dealing at length with George's "Remedy."

EDINBURGH.—On Sunday afternoon, John Smith, Davidson, Bain, and Gilray spoke in Queen's Park. In the evening in Meadows, Bain spoke along with comrades of S.D.F. Socialists who have worked with us in Edinburgh, will be sorry to hear that John Hossack died of consumption on 29th ult. after a very long and painful illness. He was an earnest and intelligent Socialist and a general favourite. As long as he was able he worked hard for the Cause.

MANCHESTER.—We found Stevenson Square on Sunday afternoon in possession of a meeting of the British Anti-Mormon Society with a brass band. We deferred speaking against the latter, but our comrade Ritson got an opportunity to expose their misleading and fallacious pictures of the horrors of Utah. Some Weal sold at the meeting. Afterwards we held a very good meeting, Parkinson and Ritson were speakers. At 7.30 we began at Chester Road, and Bailie and Ritson addressed the largest audience we have yet had here; some questions were put, to which satisfactory replies were given.

NORWICH.—Sunday afternoon the usual open-air meeting was held in the Market Place, addressed by Darley and Poynts. Comrade Darley moved a resolution for the release of Lewis Deimshitz, seconded by comrade Swash, and upon its being put to the meeting it was carried unanimously.

YARMOUTH.—We held two successful meetings here, speakers were Ruffold and Reynolds. At the afternoon meeting, Reynolds dealt with "Some Objections to Socialism;" 3s. 4d. collected, and 22 Commonweal sold. On Monday next we hold a first meeting at Belton, a village five miles from Yarmouth. Next Sunday, Reid of the Glasgow branch S.D.F., will give an address on "The Present Position and Condition of the Masses."—C. R.

DUBLIN.—At Progressive Club, 87 Marlboro Street, Saturday May 11th, J. Landye, the veteran Internationalist, lectured to a fair audience on "What do we mean by Progress." A lively discussion ensued, Smith, Coulon, and others taking part.

NOTTINGHAM SOCIALIST CLUB.—On Thursday, Peacock read a chapter from the "Summary of the Principles of Socialism" at the club. On Sunday, good meeting in the Market Place; Peacock, Rools, and Hickling spoke; 1s. 6d. collected, and literature sold well.—R. P.

THE "THREE KINGS," CLERKENWELL CLOSE.—Brookes lectured here last Sunday on "The Progress of Socialist Thought."

FERRSDALE LIBERAL AND RADICAL CLUB, 35 Bedford Road, Brixton.—Thursday May 23, at 8.30, J. F. Oakeshott, "The True Radical Policy."

CLUB AUTONOME, 6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road, W.—Sunday May 19, 8 p.m., a lecture by George Bonham, "Liberty versus Authority."

HACKNEY RADICAL CLUB, 5 The Grove, Mare Street, Hackney.—Monday May 20, at 8.30, George Bernard Shaw, "Practicable Land Nationalisation."

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower March, Lambeth.—Sunday May 19, at 8 p.m., Mrs. G. G. Schack, "How Women can Help the Socialist Movement." Tuesday 21, at 8, Rev. Stewart Headlam, "The Sins which cause Poverty."

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (4-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). No lecture on Sunday May 19, as Branch will hold last meeting for receiving resolutions for Conference, at 7 p.m. sharp.

East London.—Crown Coffee Tavern, 2 Columbia Road, Hackney Road. Sunday May 19, Business Meeting at 7 o'clock sharp. H. Halliday Sparling, at 8 o'clock, "Rent, Profit, and Interest."

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday May 19, at 8 p.m., A Lecture. Thursday May 23, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 24, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 9 sharp, Weekly Business Meeting; after business, a discussion.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary. On Wednesday May 22, lecture by H. H. Sparling, "The Evoluted Cannibal."

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Oddfellows' Small Hall, Crooked Lane.

Bradford.—Laycock's Temperance Hotel, Albion Court, Kirkgate. Tuesday at 7.30.

Glasgow.—84 John Street. Reading-room (Draughts, Chess, etc.) open 10 a.m. till 10 p.m. daily. Discussion Class on Thursday evenings at 8. French Class meets on Mondays at 8 p.m. Excursion on Saturday first to Renfrew; members meet in Rooms at 4.30.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Manchester.—Working Men's Educational Club, 122 Corporation Street.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 8, lecture in Gordon Hall. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' meeting. Wednesday, at 8.30, Discussion Class. Monday, Thursday, and Friday, Hall open from 8.30. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Association.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Business meeting every Tuesday evening. Elocution Class at comrade Hadley's every Friday at 8 p.m. Commonweal sold by Mr. Hous, newsagent, George Street.

FRIENDS WILLING TO AID in forming Branches in the undermentioned places are asked to write to the addresses given: Liverpool—W. H. Chapman, Vegetarian Restaurant, 1 Chapman St. Walworth and Camberwell—3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green. Wimbledon and Merton—F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Hoxton—H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road. Streatham—J. Campbell, 98 Wellfield Road, Streatham.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY 18.

8 Mile-end Waste..... Davis and Brookes

SUNDAY 19.

10.30..... Latimer Road StationLynes sen. and Maughan
11.30..... Bethnal Green—Gibraltar WalkThe Branch
11.30..... "Canterbury Arms"—Kilburn RoadMainwaring
11.30..... Hammersmith—Beadon RoadHammersmith Branch
11.30..... Mitcham Fair GreenMrs. Schack
11.30..... Regent's ParkDavis
11.30..... Leman Street, ShadwellTurner and Nicoll
3.30..... Hyde Park.....Davis, Parker, Mrs. Lahr and Brookes
3.30..... Victoria ParkNicoll and Mrs. Schack
7 Clerkenwell GreenParker
7 Weltje Road, Ravenscourt ParkHammersmith Branch
7.30..... Mitcham Fair Green.....The Branch

TUESDAY 21.

8 Fulham—back of Waltham Green Church The Branch.

THURSDAY 23.

8 Ossulton Street..... Nicoll.

FRIDAY 24.

8.15..... Hoxton Church..... McKenzie & Cores

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, 7.30 p.m.

Edinburgh.—Sunday: Queen's Park, at 3.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Manchester.—Outdoor meetings every Sunday. Stevenson Square at 3 p.m.; Viaduct, Chester Road, at 7.30.

Norwich.—Sunday: Bawburgh, at 11. Market Place, at 3.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, every Sunday at 11 and 3.

AUSTRALIAN SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

Sydney.—533 George Street. Lectures and debates every Sunday evening. W. H. McNamara, Secretary.

Melbourne.—"Golden Fleece" Hotel, Russell Street. Lectures and debates every Sunday evening. J. A. Andrews, 18 Ophir Street, Richmond, Secy. —W. Baillie, International Working-men's Club, 122 Corporation Street, corner of Hanover Street.

SCOTTISH LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.

Carnoustie.—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant.

Dundee.—Meetings every Sunday in Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Edinburgh.—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8.

Galashiels.—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, Secretary. Gallatoun and Dysart (Fife)—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatoun Public School. A.

Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street, Secretary. Kilmarnock.—Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday. H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street, Secretary. West Calder.—

Robert Lindsay, West Calder, Secretary.

A NIGHT WITH JOHN BEDFORD LENO, author of 'Drury Lane Lyrics,' 'Kimburton,' 'The Last Idler,' etc.—A Complimentary Smoking Concert, under the patronage of the "Hotspur Club," consisting of Readings and Songs from the works of J. B. Leno, will take place at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet Street, on Monday May 27, at 8.30 prompt. Tickets 1s. and 2s.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). 1d.
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. 1d.
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

F. KITZ,

MERTON CLUB HOUSE, 3 CLARE VILLAS, MERTON ROAD (near High St., Merton, S.W.).

Agent for Socialistic and advanced Literature for Wimbledon, Merton, and neighbourhood.

All orders promptly executed. Commonweal and Australian Radical on sale.

ARBEJDEREN ("The Worker")

DANISH SOCIALIST WEEKLY.

Edited and published by NICOLAJ PETERSEN and GERSON TRIER.

Subscription 3s. a-year.

Nansensgade 28A, Copenhagen.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

299 SHALES Moor, SHEFFIELD.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. 1 copy by post, 3d.; 3 copies, 8d.; 6, 1s. 3d.; 12, 2s. 4s. 9d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free. 50, post free, 6s. 100, post free, 11s.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction. With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by

H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAX MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

SEAFARING.

THE ORGAN OF THE SEAFARING CLASS: A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER FOR SEAFARING FOLK AND THEIR FRIENDS.

Published every Saturday, price one penny. Sent to any part of the United Kingdom, or to any of the countries comprised in the Postal Union, post free, at the following rates of subscription: twelve months, 6s. 6d.; six months, 3s. 3d.; three months, 1s. 8d.

Seafaring may be obtained at any branch of the National Amalgamated Sailors' and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland, at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons' Bookstalls, from a newsagent, or at 105 Minories, London, E.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3D. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2s. 6D.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

SOCIALIST LEAFLETS.

Single page, 8vo size, 2s. per thousand.

Why be Transported?
 "Down with the Socialists!"
 The cause of Prostitution.
 The Workers' Claims and "Public Opinion."
 Tramcar Slavery.
 Shall Ireland be Free?
 Ireland a Nation.
 Songs for the Workers.
 The Skeleton or Starvation Army.

Single page, 4to size, 3s. per thousand.

To Working Women and Girls.
 Strikes and the Labour Struggle.
 The Liberty and Property Defence League.
 The Doctrines of the Communists (2 leaflets).
 Labour is the source of all Wealth.

2 pages 8vo, 3s. per thousand.

What Socialists Want.

4 pages 8vo, 4s. per thousand.

A Straight Talk to Working Men.

These Leaflets, at prices given above, can be had from the Commonweal manager in any quantities by Branches, members, or sympathisers, for distribution, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

ESSAYS IN MODERN SOCIALIST CRITICISM.

BY ERNEST BELFORD BAX,

Author of 'Jean Paul Marat,' 'Handbook to the History of Philosophy,' etc.

Uniformly bound in red cloth, cr. 8vo; each 2s. 6d.

Second Edition.

I.—THE RELIGION OF SOCIALISM.

"A rather deep but intensely interesting treatise on the fundamental principles of Socialism, as entertained by the leaders of the movement at the present day."—City Press.

"Mr. Bax is by far the ablest of the English exponents of scientific Socialism."—Westminster Review.

"Mr. Bax is a thoughtful man, and is always ready to follow his opinions to their most startling consequences."—Contemporary Review.

II.—THE ETHICS OF SOCIALISM.

CONTENTS:—The New Ethic—Revolution of the Nineteenth Century—Criminal Law under Socialism—Concerning "Justice"—The Morrow of the Revolution—On Some Forms of Modern Cant—Men versus Classes—the Curse of Civilisation—The Will of the Majority—"That Blessed Word"—The Odd Trick—Doctor Faustus and his Contemporaries—Immortality—A free Fantasia on Things Divine and Human.

Swan, Sonnenschein, and Co., Paternoster Square.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

DER ARME TEUFEL.

EDITED BY ROBERT REITZEL.

Offices: 6 Champlain Street, Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Subscription, 2 dols. 50 c. yearly.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 176.

SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

THE ENGLISH REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT, 1815 TO 1817.

SPA-FIELDS RIOTS AND DERBYSHIRE INSURRECTION.

(Continued from p. 157.)

THE conspirators then hurried off to Watson's lodgings at No. 1, Dean Street, Fetter Lane. Here the two Watsons and Thistlewood determined that it was best for them to take a trip into the country for the benefit of their health, so they packed up some linen and clothes and started. They accordingly left London. It was about ten o'clock before they climbed Highgate Hill, and walked towards the open country. As they were passing Highgate Church, they were noticed by a horse patrol, who had received orders to look after suspicious persons in consequence of some highway robberies having recently been committed in the neighbourhood, which was then very lonely and quiet. There happened to be two watchmen standing close to the church railings, and the patrol beckoned to them to follow him. Then riding up to the three men, he asked them where they were travelling to; they replied to Northampton. He said it was a late hour for travelling, and informed them that he was a horse patrol from Bow Street, which was then the Scotland Yard of London. Watson offered a bundle he was carrying for the man's inspection, but instead of inspecting it he stretched out his hand and thrust it into the breast of Watson's coat, and laid his hand upon a pistol. This he snatched and levelled at Watson's head, threatening to blow his brains out if he offered to move, at the same time calling on the watchman who was nearest to him to secure the other two. This was a job the watchman did not like, so he ran away and sprang his rattle for assistance. But Thistlewood and young Watson drew pistols from their pockets and fired; one went off, but the other flashed in the pan. At that moment a number of people rushed from a publichouse, and young Watson and Thistlewood took refuge in flight. The patrol handed over his prisoner to these persons, mostly young men, and would have pursued the others; but Watson drawing a dirk he had concealed in a walking-stick, wounded one of the men who was endeavouring to apprehend him, and made such a desperate struggle for freedom that the patrol was forced to lend his assistance to disarm him, and Thistlewood and young Watson escaped into the fields, where it was useless to follow them in the darkness and obscurity of the night. The elder Watson, on being asked his name, told the patrol that he was well known at Bow Street. He was taken to Somer's Town watch-house, the nearest place of detention, and brought before the magistrates next morning.

You may imagine what a panic these events caused among the respectable classes, far greater indeed than the similar panic that occurred under circumstances of almost the same character in 1886. A vigorous search was made for the culprits, and numerous arrests were made in the metropolis, though in most cases the arrested had very little to do with the plots. Among the prisoners was Thomas Preston, who had foolishly not sought safety in flight, and on Feb. 14, Watson, sen., Preston, Hooper, and Keene were committed to the Tower on a charge of high treason. There was not sufficient evidence to bring Keene to trial, so he was afterwards discharged. The search for young Watson and Thistlewood was vigorously prosecuted, and on Tuesday, Feb. 18th, a reward of £500 was offered for either culprit, and declaring that all persons harbouring these atrocious criminals would be guilty of high treason.

The following description of Thistlewood from the proclamation may be of interest to many: "Arthur Thistlewood is about 45 years of age, 5 ft. 11 in. high, has a sallow complexion, long visage, dark hair (a little grey), small whiskers, dark hazel eyes and arched, a wide mouth and a good set of teeth, has a scar under the right jaw, is slender made, walks very upright, and has much the appearance of a military man; was born in Lincolnshire, and has been a lieutenant in the army; he usually wore a French grey coloured coat, buff waistcoat, grey coloured Wellington pantaloons with Hessian boots under them, and at times a dark-brown great coat."

Thistlewood, however, was well concealed, and he was not captured in his country hiding-place till the 27th of April. Young Watson, after remaining in hiding in London and in the country, escaped to America. The elder Watson was charged with high treason before the Court of Queen's Bench and a special jury on the 9th of June. The trial lasted seven days, the principal witness being the Government spy Castles. This man's infamous character was so well shown up by Mr. Wetherall, Watson's counsel, that the jury refused to credit his evidence, and Watson was acquitted. The Attorney-General then declared that he did not intend to press the case against the rest of the prisoners, and the others were also discharged and received a warm welcome from the London Radicals.

For the information of those who may be anxious concerning the natural history of government spies, it may be mentioned that Castles was, apart from his informing qualities, one of the greatest scoundrels at that time unhung. This man had been twice imprisoned, the first time for passing false notes, when he saved his life by giving evidence against his associates, and the second time for assisting the escape of French prisoners; he had also committed bigamy, and was an accomplished scoundrel of the vilest kind. He had been for years in the constant employment of the police, and his imprisonment for assisting prisoners arose out of it; he was employed by a Bow Street officer to seduce persons to assist the escape of French prisoners, with the view of afterwards intercepting their escape and obtaining a reward from the government for the service. Such are the employees and familiar friends of our noble police.

This attempt at revolt had serious consequences. Parliament met on the 28th of January, and was opened by the Prince Regent. As he was returning from the House he was hooted by the people, and somebody chucked some stones and made two holes in the carriage window. This was immediately represented as an attempt to assassinate the Prince Regent with an air-gun; and the government utilised this circumstance, together with the Spa Fields Riots for the purpose of suspending the Habeas Corpus Act, which meant practically that the government would be able to arrest any one they pleased and keep them in prison for months without the least form of trial. They also passed a bill for the total suppression of public meetings. To give some excuse for this extension of arbitrary power, they produced a report from a secret committee of the House of Lords, according to which there existed a formidable conspiracy throughout the country to overturn the government. Every Radical club and association, no matter how moderate, was represented as having a hand in this business, and it was cited as an evidence of the well organised character of the conspirators, that large crowds had collected at Manchester on the day of the Spa Fields riots when the coaches came in to hear the result of the attempt at insurrection. How much was true of the ministerial statements will probably never be known, but as their information came mostly from people of a similar character to Castles, their accuracy may well be doubted. However this may be, the ministers passed their Coercion Bill, so their object was gained. The clubs for advocating parliamentary reform were suppressed; public meetings were prohibited, and many Radical leaders were thrown into prison loaded with chains. Mr. Cobbett, the well-known Radical journalist, the Bradlaugh of his time, took a sudden trip to America to escape a similar fate; but the revolutionary feeling increased throughout the country.

On March 2nd, there are serious riots in Somerset. The colliers at Radstock come out on strike; they attack the pits and buildings, and force the men who are in the pits to come up and join the strikers. Lancers and yeomanry are sent for, who are placed on guard around the pits, while some detachments pursue the miners. The men retreat, but they make a stand at Radstock. They are armed with huge bludgeons, and on seeing the cavalry approach they salute them with cries of "Bread or Blood," and "Hunt for ever." The magistrate with the troops reads the Riot Act, and then warns the colliers that they will incur all sorts of dreadful penalties if they remain together after that. The yeomanry and cavalry ride forward and seize the leaders, and the assemblage disperses with but little resistance. It may be mentioned that the middle-class press traces the outbreak to a number of seditious pamphlets sold by a hawker among the miners at Parton, where the troubles first began.

I may as well say something here about the revolutionary press of the time. Previous to the year of which I am now speaking, there were no papers which really represented the revolutionary section of the Radical party, for Leigh Hunt's Examiner and Cobbett's Annual Register, though using very strong language at times, and even defending rick-burning and machine-breaking as the only means by which the poor people could obtain a redress of their grievances, can hardly be called from their general tone and policy revolutionary publications. They both more accurately reflected the opinions of the middle than of the working-class Radicals. But in the excitement engendered by the attempted insurrection in Spa Fields, a number of revolutionary publications sprang into being. Perhaps the best of these was the Black Dwarf, edited by Jonathan Wooler. The Black Dwarf, though a very Radical publication, was sold at what would now be considered the very high price of 4d. Of course very few workmen purchased it for their private perusal, but a number would club together and buy it, and it would be read aloud to groups of excited listeners in club or tavern. In those days printing and paper were much dearer than what they are now; the Stamp Act too was in force, which made papers still more expensive.

D. J. NICOLL.

(To be continued.)

HASTENING THE REVOLUTION.

THE SUGAR QUESTION.

YEARS ago, Mr. John Ruskin stated that on the Stock Exchange the plunder of investors was reduced to a system. And such has ever been the case as regards the plunder of the people. The classes can exist only by the plunder of the masses. All that the classes eat and drink and use and waste, all comes from the labour of the masses. Whether we take the landlord class, the professional class, or any section of the profit-mongering classes, all live on the labour of the people. And strange to say, with our extremely refined notions, the degree of respectability depends on the extent of the plunder accomplished. And even large numbers of working men look upon the land-thief or the successful speculator (robber) as honourable men, as the benefactors of humanity, and the great landmarks of social order.

But under our modern commercial system not only do the classes as a whole prey upon the people; with the aggregation of large capitals the classes prey upon each other. Class wars resulting from class interests are characteristic of the present conditions of society. Disintegration is an essential feature in our modern system of production and exchange. It operates through all the ramifications of society. The division of labour and the development of labour-saving machinery neutralise to a great extent the trade organisations of the working classes, and even their political enfranchisement, and will in the end destroy even the lofty position of the aristocracy of labour. The socialisation of production and the concentration of capital is sure to operate the same in the sphere of exchange. Just as labour-saving machinery is converting the worker into a revolutionary agent, so are our "rings," our "trusts" or our "syndicates," converting the small trader into a rebel against our modern system of exchange. All this will hasten the revolution.

We are told that the present annual consumption of sugar in the United Kingdom is equal to 72 lb. per head of population, and that the increase of one penny per lb. will amount to about £11,000,000 per annum. That of course includes all sources of consumption, including the manufacture of jam, confectionery, etc. The committee of the Co-operative Union, representing 800,000 heads of families, state that the societies in connection with the union sell annually £2,000,000 of sugar, and that the rise in price will cause them a loss of £50,000 a-year. If the rise in price is maintained, of course there will be less consumption—less jam and confectionery, and less consumed within the family circle. But if the consumption decreased 20 per cent., it would leave from £8,000,000 to 9,000,000 of extra profits to go somewhere, of which at least £5,000,000 would come from the pockets of the working classes. Then we are told that if present prices last only to the end of August the plunder will amount to not less than £4,000,000. We are also assured that if the Sugar Bill passes and the Convention in its present form comes into operation, it is quite likely we shall have sugar at 5d. or even 6d. per lb. Here will be a field for plunder! We are also told that Jay Gould and others have their eyes on the West Indies, in the hope of being able to "corner" the sugar trade of the world. What an enlightened age!

But higher, far higher than any question of "£ s. d." is the surrender of our liberty, our dignity, and our independence as a nation to the keeping of that maker of modern despotisms, Bismarck. In 1878 Salisbury and Co. signed away, by secret treaties, our honour as a nation with the interests of Turkey; and to-day the Government is doing its best to make England the slave to do the dirty work of the blood-stained despotisms of the Continent. We have heard a great deal about boycotting in Ireland, but the Government now propose that one half the world shall boycott the other half, for the honour of Prince Bismarck and the aggrandisement of the syndicates. Nations live by honour as well as by commerce, and the honour of England as a nation is as much at stake as the material wellbeing of her people.

If the Convention is ratified, our freedom as a nation will be gone. Germany, Russia, Holland, and Spain will determine our action; will kindly tell us of whom we may purchase sugar, and will practically decide the price we shall pay and the extent to which we shall enjoy the free breakfast-table. What a field for syndicates, rings, and trusts, and for the supremacy of the German sugar monopoly! Is this to be the answer of the league of despotisms to the French centenary?

Article VII. of the Convention begins: "From the date of the present Convention coming into force, all raw sugar, refined sugar, molasses, or glucose coming from any countries, provinces beyond the seas, colonies, or foreign possessions maintaining the system of open or disguised bounties on the manufacture or exportation of sugar shall be excluded from the territories of the high contracting parties." The paragraph is clear enough. All the contracting powers bind themselves not to receive sugar from any country where a bounty is paid, direct or indirect. And who is to determine that question? Not each country for itself, but a majority of the contracting powers.

Paragraph 4, Article VII., reads: "The fact of the existence in any country, province beyond the seas, colony, or foreign possession, of a system involving open or disguised bounties on raw sugar, refined sugar, molasses, or glucose shall be established by the decision of a majority of the signatory powers of the present Convention." Here, then, is the great point for consideration. England is not a sugar-producing country; we import the raw material from many other countries. France, Sweden, Denmark, Brazil, and the U. S. America refuse to join; Belgium and Austria-Hungary make reservations. All these are sugar-producing countries. Yet by the Convention we bind ourselves not to receive sugar from any of these at the bidding of a majority of the signatory powers—that is, of Von Bismarck and Co. And to a great extent we bind our colonies and foreign possessions as well as ourselves.

As far back as 1886 we find the West India planters asking for a bounty of £2 per ton on all sugar imported from the West Indies into the United Kingdom, or the imposition of a countervailing duty of 1s. per cwt. The thin end of the wedge. Shall we impose an import duty on sugar for the benefit of the West India planters and the sugar-refiners at home? The Argentine Republic pays a bounty on the export of beef. Why not boycott that republic, and have a league to regulate the import of meat? Other countries pay bounties on ship-building; why not boycott them all?

But in the same Article, paragraph 5 runs as follows, and is well calculated to mislead: "It is agreed that privileges under the most-favoured-nation clause existing in other treaties shall not be pleaded with a view to evading the consequences of the application of the second paragraph of the present Article, even on the part of such signatory powers as may hereafter withdraw from the Convention." Paragraph 11 here referred to provides that each of the high contracting powers shall, in carrying out the Convention, either prohibit the importation of sugar, etc., from bounty-paying countries, or shall impose an import duty on such imported sugar, etc., and which duty must be greater than the amount of the bounty, but which duty shall not be imposed on sugars coming from countries not paying such bounties. Now as to our commercial treaties with other countries. We have such treaties with all the leading nations, and in almost every case the said treaty contains what is termed the most-favoured-nation clause. As these most-favoured-nation clauses are very similar, take the following cited by Sir T. Farrar, in our treaty with the U. S. America: "No prohibition shall be imposed upon the importation or exportation of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, or of Her Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe, to or from the said United States, which shall not equally extend to all other nations." Now, the Convention, when ratified, will compel England to violate every one of her commercial treaties with other countries, not at the bidding of Parliament, not at the wish of the people, but at the bidding of a majority of the signatory powers. Such violations on our part will be sure to lead to reprisals, especially on the part of France or America. It will lead to a war of tariffs, in which we are certain to be bested. It will re-create the evils arising from national jealousies, national hatreds, and perhaps of wars, and at the bidding of the crowned monsters of the European continent.

Look at these leagues of the Governments, Parliamentary or otherwise. What a spectacle at the close of the nineteenth century! We talk of the power of the people. Where is it? We boast of our freedom, our wisdom, and our bravery. Where are these qualities to-day? We boast of our greatness as a nation, and we form only a joint in the tails of the despots of Russia and Germany.

And when the time comes—and come it will—for the holy alliance of the peoples, let us not forget these leagues of the despots; or the rings, the syndicates, etc., of the capitalist classes. But these things can only hasten the revolution, for which let us learn to be prepared.

J. SKETCHLEY.

At Mr. Andrew Carnegie's Homestead steel mill, near Pittsburg, has been posted a new scale of wages, averaging 20 per cent. reduction. This affects 2,500 men, and a strike is expected.

Miss Josephine S. Tilton, late of 301 Shawmut Avenue, Boston, Mass., is now in London with a large and varied assortment of American publications on labour and social questions. Her address is 31 Swinton Street, Grays Inn Road.

TOBACCO INDUSTRY IN NEW YORK.—Over 30,000 men, women, and children are employed in the tobacco industry of New York, of whom about 16,000 are cigar-makers proper, the rest being cigarette-makers, strippers, bunchers, packers, pasters, and box-makers. More than 6,000 cigar-makers are women, girls, and small children. Some branches of the trade are almost monopolized by girls—for instance, the making of cigarettes. The nationalities which predominate among the cigar-makers are the Germans, Bohemians, and English; but there are also a number of Poles, Hollanders, Cubans, Hungarians, with a few Spaniards, Americans, French, and Russians. Oh, ye fools of the nineteenth century, why do not you combine, and oust your masters?—W. B.

YANKEE CIRCENSES.

"We stand to-day upon the dividing line between the first and second century of constitutional government. There are no clouds over our head, and no convulsions under our feet. We reverently return thanks to Almighty God for the past, and with confident and hopeful promise march upon sure ground toward the future. The simple facts of these hundred years paralyse the imagination, and we contemplate the vast accumulations of the century with awe and pride."

Thus spoke, addressing the vast multitude assembled before the Sub-Treasury building in the city of New York on May 1st, Chauncey M. Depew, president of the gigantic Vanderbilt railroad system, ex-lobbyist, lawyer, and swell society's most famous after-dinner talker. This honourable gentleman—and who dares, considering his exalted position in the social scale of this country, to doubt his honourableness?—had been appointed by the Centennial Committee to act as official laudation-spouter during the festivities commemorating the centennial of George Washington taking the oath as first president of the United States of America. And no place could have been chosen better in the whole big city of New York where an oration glorifying a century's maintenance and results of capitalism in the "land of the free and the home of the brave" might have been delivered more appropriately than the Sub-Treasury edifice. This structure is situated on the corner of Broad and Wall streets, two thoroughfares entirely composed of the hiding dens of trusts, of syndicates, of corners, of combines, and all such like devil-fishes, which are draining the blood of the people inhabiting this splendid and abnormally rich country.

"There are no clouds over our head and no convulsions under our feet" exclaimed, feigning in his voice optimistic gratification, Dr. Depew; and yet did not the curt but comprehensive refusal of Labour to participate officially in any of the festivities clearly inscribe on all the decorations with which capital had draped its mansions the "Mene, Mene, Tekel, upharsin" of the present society? None so blind as those that will not see. Yes, Labour has had the audacity to refuse to be paraded in golden chains in Capital's triumphal procession, in celebration of an event which but formed in this nation's history the connecting link of a system which served so well for the exploitation of class by class for one hundred years at least. And Labour be thanked for its sturdy action!

We have had plenty of "circenses"¹ of late; however, the "panem" has been sorely missed as yet.

Early on Monday morning the last day of April, the constitutional king of the United States, Benjamin, the second of the tribe of Harrison, left Washington for New York in right royal style, as it well becomes a gentleman occupying such dignified office. His Equality-before-the-law majesty had at the disposal of himself and of his court ten of the most gorgeously fitted up coaches of our railroad system. Usually these coaches are used to carry in safety and ease the valuable bodies of the presidents of the different roads from place to place. No European monarch could travel more luxuriously.

In New York city Benjamin had the good pleasure of being met by our empire city's big merchant robbers, and at once a reception was given him by men representing every profession and trade. They were all there! The clergymen of every denomination, the bank presidents, the heads of trusts, the members of the Stock Exchange, the newspaper men, the liquor dealers, the railroad men, the lawyers, the theatrical men—in fact, as one who witnessed the "drawing-room" remarked, the men who represented religion, law, and commerce, they all had come to do homage to their uncrowned king. But where was Labour?

And they all praised liberty, equality, and fraternity. Yet it is not reported that during the guzzling, the gobbling, the spouting, and the mutual congratulations upon the greatness of this country which occurred soon after, did those present wink at each other, nor did they lose for one moment the serious aspect of their respective countenances. No, not so stupid as all that. Our rulers over here know they are playing a game, and they much intend to keep up all its rules. They play their rôles in the comedy of politics with an extensive knowledge and a clear perception of all the necessary stage decorum which might elicit shouts of admiration from even an Irving or a Toole. They play their game so well, that to the uninitiated, to the "poor in spirit," to the would-be cheated, they appear to be deeply serious, indeed in deadly earnest. However, they themselves do not mistake their acting for reality.

Liberty, equality, fraternity realised in the United States. Great Scott! Imagine his satanic majesty turning "sea-green" with envy, for he was never able to diddle-daddle humanity so easily and well.

And how did New York look? Listen to this scribe of a "cultured paper," the Boston Herald:

"Magnificent stood New York this morning, grand, splendid beyond even her usual magnificence. Radiant she was and glorious with colour from end to end and side to side at the meeting of the waters when day broke. She was as a bride awaiting the bridegroom, and her dress was as gaudy—all aflutter with ribbons—as was ever the garb of ancient Venice in the days doges wedded her to the Adriatic."

O spirit of Napoleon the Small! The scribes specially appointed by the ruler of the Second Empire in France to "work up" his journeys through the provinces surely could not rival this. But we Americans, we are smart, we know "how to get there," we have "no flies on us."

Conceive New York magnificent! A city which is more ugly than London, for in London some remnants of bygone times do relieve the eye. But New York stands there completely unrelieved in all its horrible ugliness of modern cheapness and commercial utility. And the garb laid on for the occasion! Well, mostly it consisted of gutter-coloured ribbon or a picture of something supposed to be Washington, or, last but not least, smart Yankees—a new advertising dodge.

In the evening of Monday the day was celebrated by our upper ten thousand with a ball, the centennial ball, in the Grand Opera House. More than £200 was offered for admission tickets, but refused by the holders. The committee of arrangements had done all in their power to make the affair as exclusive as possible. And now listen to the description a capitalistic paper, the New York Sun, gives of this orgie:

"When the supper room doors were opened, there was a fierce rush. There were many young men in this first attacking party. They made straight for the champagne bar and drank before they ate. There were young women that followed their example. When President Harrison and his party entered the supper room, there was a party of young men who had already become tipsy. They cheered in maudlin style. Wine had even then been spilled upon the floor, and the ladies of the Presidential party in going to the dais at the end of the room had to raise their skirts.

"The staring scene which had distinguished the assemblage in the ballroom was repeated here. All around the circle, within which the thirteen distinguished guests of the evening sat, crowded men and women anxious to see what a President and Vice-president looked like as they ate. The crowd watched Mrs. McKee and Mrs. Morton and Mrs. Harrison and the other ladies with intense interest to discover whether they drank any wine. After the President's party had gone, members of the escort came back and showed what they could do in stowing away champagne. One of them was completely overcome. Supported by two of his companions, he added to the sights of the ball. Young men went about carrying a champagne bottle in the left hand and a glass in the right. They would fill the glass, drain it at one gulp, fill it again, and drain it in another gulp. By and by this had a very disastrous effect.

"But there were other disturbances at the same time in other parts of the immense building. Many of the befuddled men had left the supper room and were wandering about the upper corridors. There were some incidents that were absolutely outrageous. One man was heard to address a very pretty woman whom he had been escorting with the angry exclamation that he didn't like something she had done, and then swore at her and said that he would never bring her to a ball again. It was a pitiable sight to see one young girl, and a pretty girl at that, trying to steady herself as she passed through one of the upper corridors. Her hair was disordered, her face flushed. When one o'clock came the wine room was still open, but shortly after that the police took a hand and attempted to clear the supper room. Men would not go from the room, and they had to be pushed roughly to the door. The ladies who were still in the room were frightened at the rumpus, and on reaching the door found it besieged by a crowd of noisy waiters and intoxicated guests striving to force their way back for more wine. The police formed a barrier there, and not even the waiters were allowed to enter the room again. There was language used which one wouldn't expect to hear at a centennial ball. Finally the police became impatient, and, at Inspector Steers's command, advanced and drove back the oncoming crowd. But it soon formed again, and through this brawling, excited crowd of waiters, guests, and policemen, the unlucky ladies had to crowd their way, while it was impossible for them not to hear the oaths used."

But of course our aristocratic gentry could indulge in these scenes, the public being excluded; and it is curious to note that only one paper at first told the tale, but soon after all the others had to admit its correctness.

The dresses worn by the "ladies" at this occasion were most costly, though little tasty. Queen Harrison is said to have been arrayed in a most gorgeous costume, costing thousands and thousands of dollars. Mrs. Astor had about £50,000 worth of diamonds on her body. She was shadowed all the evening by her detective, and disappeared early. H'm!

And so the days wore on. Military parades, civil parades, industrial parades followed each other in close succession. But Labour abstained from participating in any of the displays, although desperate efforts were made to induce its co-operation.

The police of course had great opportunities to act as the tigers in human skin they are. They used their clubs to the right and to the left; they rode the people down to open a way for the pompous processions. Speaking of the police, one suggestive thing may be mentioned. A day or two before the festivities began, Detective Inspector Byrnes arrested and put into prison all those believed by him to belong to the light-fingered fraternity. He had no warrant, no authority of any kind, "no nothing," as the boy said, to do this. He simply wanted "to keep them out of mischief." "Why don't our American rulers hand over the whole running of the governmental machine to a few mandarins, it would make matters ever so much simpler?" asks John Most in this week's Freiheit; and verily he is right.

The shows are over now. The "Mene, mene, Tekel, upharsin" remains. Smart Yankees have made piles of money. Some millions of public money have been wasted. The millions of tramps and unemployed are still cast about. But what matters that. Some workers' wages were cut down to allow a few bosses to be hilarious in New York. And Labour will have to pay the bill.

"There are no clouds over our head." Hence Bradstreet's reports since 1st of January 221 strikes and 48,924 strikers and over 600 people have shuffled off this mortal coil since January 1, 1889, by committing suicide.

"And no convulsions under our feet." Yet the five bodies of strangled labour martyrs slumbering in Waldheim Cemetery near Chicago city are under our feet.

Boston, Mass., May 6, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES

MAD COMMERCIALISM.

In the greedy scramble for the gifts which mother earth, plus human labour, bestows upon man, people engaged in the mad contest have not time to pause and reflect upon their insane career, which, if it were not fraught with such enormous evil to the millions, would simply merit ridicule. Truly may we exclaim with Shakespeare, "This is a mad world, my masters." Look at the crazy scamper of vehicles of all sorts along our principle thoroughfares, the hurrying to and fro of the slaves in tall hats and black coats, those in smocks, and those in fustians, and then ask what it all means. It means the battle of life; man fighting man to preserve each his own existence. Spend an hour or two at the junction of four cross-roads at any of our thoroughfares, and watch the traffic passing north, south, east, and west. There you will see passing each other in opposite directions, waggons of coal, waggons of timber, butcher's carts, baker's carts, grocer's carts, etc., etc. One would naturally ask, Why all this waste of time and labour? A little organisation would certainly save all this useless waste, and yet we are seriously told that order reigns under our present system. It is no wonder that Socialist principles cannot be understood by tradesmen when they call chaos order. They are too dull to understand co-operative distribution in the interests of the community, and they consider an individual a sharp business man who engages in distribution most successfully in his own interest, i.e., by exploitation and fraud. The co-operators seem to be the only people—ourselves excepted—who see the wickedness, folly, and waste of individual effort in distribution. If, instead of allowing themselves to be robbed over the counter as they are at the present time, the people organised their own distribution, they would be in the possession of central communal depôts, which would not only help to reduce their sufferings considerably during the coming revolutionary period, but would render it an easier matter to snuff out the exploiters of production. A. B.

¹ Panem et circenses—bread and circus plays. During the decay of the Roman Empire, to keep the poor quiet circus plays and free lunches were provided for them by the rich.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication. As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d. Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Workmen's Advocate.—We are always glad to see you make use of poems which we have rescued from their graves in forgotten pages, but, if only for the sake of historical accuracy, should like you to acknowledge the road by which they reach you. D. E.—The pamphlet giving a report of the Reform meeting at Kilmarnock, December 7, 1816, including the speech for which Alexander McLaren was tried at Edinburgh, March 5-7th, 1817, and for printing which Thomas Baird was tried at same time and place, is in the British Museum library, but mutilated. It wants title-page and all after page 44. A perfect copy would probably be found in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
The English Revolutionary Movement, 1815 to 1817: Spa-Fields Riots and Derbyshire Insurrection (continued)	D. J. NICOLL 161
Hastening the Revolution—the Sugar Question	J. SKETCHLEY 162
Yankee Circenses	H. F. CHARLES 163
Mad Commercialism	A. BROOKES 163
Notes on News	H. H. SPARLING 164
Correspondence—St. George's Farm	M. A. MALOY 164
Dyer Strike at Leek	F. KITZ 165
Revolutionary Calendar—Thomas Ainge Devyr	G. D. LAWRIE 165
A New Machine	R. C. SMITH 165
International Notes	VICTOR DAVE 166
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings ..	167
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	168

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday May 22.

ENGLAND	FRANCE	ITALY
Justice	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	Turin—Nuova Gazzetta Operaia
Labour Elector	Fort Worth (Tex)—South West	Rome—L'Emancipazione
Labour Tribune	Newark—Arbeiter-Zeitung	Milan—Il Fascio Operaio
London—Freie Presse	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung
Norwich—Daylight	S. F. Coast Seamen's Journal	SPAIN
Railway Review	St. Louis (Mo.)—Die Parole	Seville—La Solidaridad
Sozial Demokrat	Altruist	Madrid—El Socialista
Seafaring
Worker's Friend	FRANCE	PORTUGAL
	Paris—Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
UNITED STATES	Le Proletariat	Porto—A Revolucao Social
New York—Der Sozialist	Le Coup de Feu	A Revolta
Freiheit	La Revue Socialiste
Truthseeker	L'Attaque	GERMANY
Volkzeitung	Lille—Le Cri du Travailleur	Berlin—Volks Tribune
Jewish Volkszeitung		HUNGARY
The Truth	HOLLAND	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik
Workmen's Advocate	Hague—Recht voor Allen	DENMARK
Boston—Woman's Journal		Social-Demokraten
Investigator	BELOGIUM	SWEDEN
Chicago—Knights of Labor	Ghent—Vooruit	Malmo—Arbetet
Vorbote	Antwerp—De Werker	WEST INDIES
	Liege—L'Avenir	Cuba—El Productor
	SWITZERLAND
	Arbeiterstimme

NOTES ON NEWS.

THERE was an interesting ceremonial at Paris on Saturday. The representatives of 13 American Republics, under the Presidency of the newly accredited United States Minister, gave a farewell dinner to his retiring predecessor. The only monarchy in America—Brazil—stood aloof, as did all those of Europe with the exception of Belgium. Switzerland, of course, was represented, being a Republic. So marked was the abstention of the king-ridden countries, that, as the Times described it, the gathering showed "the Republican world of the future face to face with the Monarchic world of the past." We know well enough that the world of the future must be something more than merely Republican before it is much better than the world of the past or the present either. But, as between Monarchy and Republicanism, there can be no question for us; nor can we deny feeling pleased when the representatives of royalty show, as they have done by their conduct on this occasion, their own abiding sense of the precariousness of kingship.

The banquet was not without its amusing points. The most telling one of these was when M. Paz, of the Argentine Republic, drank to the working-classes. He, as the Times cynically explains, "is in quest of labourers." So that his love for the working classes is disinterested at least!

During the last week a curious thing happened; a judge was found who decided against a policeman, and snubbed the law-'n'-order lambs in general. The case was that of a bricklayer named Smith, who, hearing a disturbance, went out to see what it was. He was at once knocked down, and found Edwin Ford, a policeman, standing by him truncheon in hand. He got up, and was again clubbed, with the result that he was laid up for three weeks. He brought an action in the Gravesend County Court on Thursday, when the defence was that the assault was "accidental," and that Ford had a right to use his truncheon to clear away a crowd! The judge, in summing up, said: "All the jury had to attend to was the amount of compensation to be given. There was not a tittle of justification for the assault. The constable had no more right to strike a man than his honour had. His honour had a right to strike a man in self-defence, and a constable had the same, and no greater, unless the Riot Act had been read.

It must have come as a shock to most of the "force" to hear that they could not do just as they liked with the lives and limbs of an unhappy and helpless public! They have been so used to exercising their brutality upon all and sundry, that they had come to regard the amusement as a prescriptive right of theirs. That belief has received a severe shock from the above decision, and there has no doubt been much cursing and lamenting for days past in the abodes of the bullies of the law.

Almost as much of a shock must it have been to many old fogies when the London County Council declared in favour of women as County Councillors. The debate on the question was an amusing one, for in it were trotted out all the old "arguments" as to woman's simultaneous inferiority and superiority, and the rest of it. Woman was inferior to man and should not claim to cope with him; she was superior to him and should not try to degrade herself to his level.

Of course, Mr. Frederic Harrison found himself on the wrong side, as is now usual with him. This man was one of the few who dared to do public justice to the Commune at the time of its fall, and to defend it in the English magazines. Other things there are that may be placed to his credit in the democratic ledger, wherein are kept the accounts of would-be leaders of the people. But however well filled the credit side of his account may be, he will speedily, if he continue in his present course, leave a very large balance on the other side.

By speaking and voting against popular control of the police, the enfranchisement of women, and many other such-like proposals, he is rapidly exhausting his credit. He is at the same time furnishing another instructive example of how a reputation built up in the study falls to pieces in the market-place, when he who has pretended to teach all men how to deal with their duties in life is brought face to face with his own.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ST. GEORGE'S FARM.

In the years 1874 and 1875 there existed a Mutual Improvement Class; the members of this class met every Sunday morning at the Hall of Science, Rockingham Street, Sheffield, for the purpose of teaching and being taught, or perhaps it would be more correct if I said they met to exchange ideas. Each member took their turn to write a paper on any subject the writer chose and read it before the class, who were expected to discuss or discourse on the merits of the paper. Many very interesting and instructive papers were written by the members; and when the class judged them good enough, they would be afterwards read before the public who patronised the hall on Sunday evenings. About July or August of the year 1875, a member read a paper advocating Communism, and all the members of our class were in favour of a public reading and he read it, and it created much interest and some excitement. He read it in several places, and some other and bolder ones followed, which were read and discussed in Sheffield and other places. Opponents became numerous and adherents few; the writer of this was of these last, and became an ardent advocate of Communism in about six months from the reading of the first paper. A few of us formed a society to propagate Communistic views, our ultimate object being to live the lives of Communists. To do this we proposed buying or leasing some land on which to erect suitable buildings, both for dwelling and business purposes. Of course we knew it would take some time—years—before we could realise this position, for we did not intend to seek any rich man's aid. For some weeks we met at the house of the first mover of the scheme. After a time this was changed, and we met in a small room attached to a warehouse belonging to our president. From this time each member subscribed 1d. per week for current expenses, and what each could afford beside to be banked. Sums varying from 1s. to 5s. were duly paid each week to the treasurer. It was intended to continue subscribing in this way for a year or two, and that in the meantime we should look about for the best and cheapest site for our purpose, teaching each other meanwhile and winning all the converts we could. We went on in this way for a few months, and were very happy in discussing our proposed future career. There was not one doubter in our ranks, and we had, I believe, perfect trust in each other.

About this time the Ruskin Museum at Walkley, about two miles distant from our meeting-place, was about to be opened. The curator, who was a friend of our president, came to some of our meetings, and from him came the suggestion that Mr. Ruskin might interest himself in our movement. We knew that Mr. Ruskin believed that one man should rule absolutely, and all others should unquestioningly obey. We did not believe this, nor did we believe in taking the vow which was required in order to become members of the St. George's Guild—for our society was at this time composed of Secularists, Unitarians, and one Quaker. We made no question of sectarian beliefs, but insisted on the recognition of human duties; therefore we did not at this time fall in with the curator's suggestion. But he was a persevering man, and tried to meet the difficulty by proposing that Mr. Ruskin should lend the money to purchase land, leaving the Communists free to manage their own affairs. Ultimately, a meeting took place between Mr. Ruskin and ourselves at the Museum. Nothing of any apparent importance took place between us at this time, but a few weeks afterwards Mr. Ruskin invited some of our party to look at and choose some land. They chose a farm of between 13 and 14 acres at Dore and Totley, which the then owner wanted to sell. Mr. Ruskin bought it, paying £2,025 for it. He then required each male member of the community to undertake to pay his share of the capital back to him without interest, and every man gave his promise in writing to do so. So that in seven years the whole was to be paid back to Mr. Ruskin, and the farm would then have been ours. Meantime, Mr. Ruskin was owner. He gave us no legal authority to take possession; this I very strongly objected to, but was over-ruled, as all thought they could trust the great man. Now the farm must be kept going; none of our party were farmers and all were earning money at their trades; so we engaged a practical man as working manager, paying him 24s. per week and letting him live in the house rent free. The money we had already subscribed was our capital, and we still continued to subscribe.

A few more joined us about this time, and another man was engaged to work on the farm, receiving the same wages as the first and sharing the farm-house, which was large. We excited much local curiosity; many visitors went to the farm, and newspaper correspondents had some things to say about us, wise and otherwise. Now our expenses were increased and we had to meet them, so we had parties to visit us during the summer taking tea, for which we charged. Another woman member and myself found our hands very full at this time, for between us we prepared all the teas and sold eggs and fruit, doing all we could to add to the income. Every Wednesday we went to Dore and Totley from Sheffield, bringing back fruit, eggs, and vegetables to the meetings, which the members purchased, paying ready money and full value. This went on for about four months, and in the meantime we had employed another man whom Mr. Ruskin had sent; we paid him 16s. per week. Now the man who had originated our society by reading his paper, wrote to Mr. Ruskin, and received from him in reply a cheque for £100, which he cashed, and brought the money to the committee. The committee at once passed a vote of censure on him, and requested our president to write to Mr. Ruskin returning the money, which he did, but Ruskin would not take it back. Now this member, whose aim had been from the first to live with his family on the farm, began to press upon the society to let him take his work there, the society however, to take up his business, paying him the value of it, and in the event of failure at the farm he to take his business back. The committee would not and could not consent to this. I should have stated that his business was a boot-maker's sale-shop. He was much disappointed and very unreasonable at the refusal of the committee; and the next move he made was to consult in secret with the man, who, according to Edward Carpenter, was the most active and least voluble amongst us. This man had no connexion of any sort with us, nor was he even friendly disposed to us. I make this statement because some persons have an impression that our little society owed its origin to a Mutual Help Association with which Harrison Riley was connected. That impression is a mistaken one—but to return to my story. These two men communicated with Ruskin, and the result was that Mr. Carpenter's "best man" went to the farm and took absolute possession of everything, telling our manager that he was master. The poor man came to our meeting looking not too delighted at the change and gave us the information. Now, considering that the society had agreed to pay Ruskin back on his own terms this thing seemed impossible, and a chosen number of the committee went to the farm to seek an explanation. I was not one of the deputation, but I was told that Mr. Riley coolly informed them that he was master there, and that they had no power. He met their remonstrances with sneers, and in one case with threats of personal violence. Two letters were written to Mr. Ruskin seeking his explanation, but no answer was returned to either. Then the committee caused another letter to be written declining all further responsibility or connection with the farm. The story is finished so far as we were practically concerned; and for the present I reserve comment.

M. A. MALOY.

The victimising game is being played very meanly by the Glasgow Tramway Company against the men who dare countenance unionism.

DYER STRIKE AND LOCK-OUT AT LEEK.—The dyers employed at the firms of Messrs. Hammersley and Messrs. Wardle, of Leek, have been working 60 hours per week for an average wage of 13s. 4d., or about 2½d. per hour. They recently held a meeting and decided to form a union. The masters exercised their freedom of contract and promptly discharged all the union men. Some who were asked by the employer if they were in the union, and fearing dismissal replied No, were discharged for telling an "untruth," thus proving that the employer knew the "truth" when he asked the needless question. Friends of the freedom of contract will please note that the discharged men are exercising their portion of it on doles of 2s. 4½d. per week obtained from sympathetic shopkeepers and others. The bulk of the "hands" have now struck in order to obtain the reinstatement of their dismissed shopmates. Meanwhile the masters are using boys and women, and threatening also to import foreign labour to supplant the men. It is doubtful whether Continental dyers, considering the relative purchasing-power of money, are worse off, or could be tempted by the inviting prospect of 2½d. per hour. The avocation of a dyer requires both physical and mental energy. He must have a knowledge of drugs, either technical or acquired, a keen eye for shades, and must labour withal hard with hand in a heated, steam-laden atmosphere. Delicate ladies who go shopping as a recreation on fine summer afternoons may remember as they admire the lustre and tints of their silken purchases, possibly produced in the firms above-mentioned, the operative must work for a wage ranging from 13s. to 18s. per week, or find himself supplanted by female labour if he dares utter a protest against his white slavery. Thus do we preserve the heads of households and keep intact the "family."—F. Kirtz.

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING JUNE 1, 1889.

26	Sun.	1799. James Burnet, Lord Monboddo, died. 1804. Action by W. C. Plunkett, Solicitor-General of Ireland, against William Cobbett for libel. 1817. Trial at Edinburgh of Niel Douglas, universalist preacher, for a "wicked, slanderous, false, and seditious" sermon, preached March 9 previous at the Andersonian Institute Class Room, John Street, Glasgow. 1824. Petition of Robert Owen to the House of Commons for the education and employment of the peasantry of Ireland. 1868. Michael Barrett hung for Clerkenwell explosion: last public execution in England. 1870. Fenian invasion of Canada. 1879. Osinski, Brandner, and Svidenko hanged in Kieff for Socialistic propaganda and resisting arrest. 1887. Thomas Ainge Devyr died.
27	Mon.	1793. Trial of John Frost for having on November 6, 1792, in the Percy Coffee-house, Percy Street, said that "he could see no reason why any man should not be upon a footing with another, it is every man's birthright"; and that "there should be equality and no king." 1797. Babeuf killed himself. 1860. Palermo taken by Garibaldi.
28	Tues.	1807. Agassiz born. 1818. Arthur Thistlewood imprisoned for 12 months for challenging Lord Sidmouth. 1871. Fall of the Commune of Paris. 1887. Trial of 21 Nihilists at St. Petersburg; Lopatine sent to the ravelin of St. Peter and Paul for life.
29	Wed.	1630. Trial in the Star Chamber of the Earls of Bedford, Clare, and Somerset, Sir Robert Cotton, John Selden, and Oliver St. John, Esquires, for publishing "A Proposition for His Majesty's Service to bridle the Impertinence of Parliaments." 1660. English monarchy restored.
30	Thur.	1778. Voltaire died. 1844. Daniel O'Connell fined £2,000 and imprisoned for 12 months; John O'Connell, Thomas Steele, T. M. Ray, Charles Gavan Duffy, John Gray, and Richard Barrett each fined £50 and imprisoned for 9 months; all bound over also for 7 years. 1884. Dynamite-explosions at Scotland Yard, etc. 1887. Co-operative Congress at Carlisle.
31	Fri.	1838. John Thorn shot in Bossenden Wood. 1849. First number of Julian Harney's Democratic Review . 1882. Strike of iron and steel workers in the United States.
1	Sat.	1808. Weavers' riot at Rochdale; the prison stormed and fired. 1821. Major Cartwright fined £500; J. T. Wooler sentenced to 15 months', Maddox 18 months', and Edmunds 9 months' imprisonment for the Birmingham meeting. 1849. Provisional Government formed at Baden. 1873. Second annual congress of the British Federation of the International at Manchester.

Thomas Ainge Devyr.—This life-long servant of the people was born in County Donegal, and died in Brooklyn, New York. He deserves lasting remembrance for his valiant labours in the cause of Ireland and of humanity. He took a leading part in the Chartist movement, and on its collapse was chased by the Government to Liverpool, whence he made his escape to America. Settling in Williamsburg (now Brooklyn) in 1840 as a journalist, he devoted himself to the service of the Free Soil party, and the present Homestead Laws of the United States are the direct result of the agitation maintained by him and his associates. In recent years he was an associate editor of the Irish World, a paper which had the honour of being proscribed in Ireland by the last Gladstone Government, and chiefly on account of the articles from Devyr's pen.

Thomas Ainge Devyr wrote a small treatise on the Land Question as long ago as 1838. In that he advocates a kind of peasant proprietary; and to the end of his life he maintained that to make the tiller the owner of the soil was the only solution of the land question. A few years before his death he brought together into book form his ideas on Land and other reforms. The book, with the curious title, 'The Odd Book of the Nineteenth Century; or, Chivalry in Modern Days,' is a record of rare battling in the cause of reform for the last fifty years.

Unlike Carlyle, Froude, Kingsley, and many Chartists who put their hands to the plough and turned back, Devyr was a consistent and faithful Democrat to the end. Honour to his memory.—G. D. L.

A NEW MACHINE.

REJOICE, white-lead workers, for science has killed the demon of poison and horrid death which was your daily companion!

Mr. Hannay of Glasgow, after years of toil and expense, has completed a system of machinery which makes, at less expense and in less time than the old plan, a poisonless and whiter white-lead. The Star says, "The secret of it is that there is no manipulation. No human hand touches it. The ore is thrown into the furnace, carries itself through the succeeding stages, and comes out at the other end in its ultimate form." Surely this will be a benefit, and Mr. Hannay a benefactor to mankind, for says the Star again, "Mr. Hannay has lessened the cost of production by scientific devices for lessening labour."

Now let us turn over the matter and see what may be on the other side. Mr. Hannay has done a good and no doubt a clever thing. But will the workers benefit by it? They will be freed from the lead-poisoning, no doubt—and most probably many of them from the work too; for remember it is to make white-lead cheaper and quicker; and being freed from the work means that they shall have plenty of opportunity of inhaling a good many other forms of death. They may go home to their wives, children, and mothers and tell them of the splendid success of Mr. Hannay's discovery and machinery, and how for the benefit of mankind it dispenses with their services, and how they must seek a job elsewhere. Elsewhere? Yes, elsewhere; but where is that? Long unemployment follows, and with it want and miseries. The streets for the women, and the jail for the men; and blessed are those whom death snatches.

Rejoice, therefore, ye workers, for neither your own labour nor the toil of your wise men brings you plenty or rest!

But where is the cure? Not in cowardly apathy. Not in the pipe and quart pot, amid the spits and dirty talk. Not in the insane idea that everything is for the best. Nor in the still foolisher idea that others (our M.P.'s and educated men) will do it all for us. No; but in seeing with our minds and hearts that while there exists a single idle man amongst us there is a gross injustice being inflicted on others, and combining in right manly earnestness to weed out the bloodsuckers from amongst us. R. C. S.

INTERNATIONAL NOTES.

GERMANY.

The important strike of the coalminers in the Westphalian province and neighbourhood is still going on, and as the mine-thieves (who call themselves the mine-owners) show no great readiness to comply with the legitimate demands of the workers, it may even go on longer than we can tell. The strikers have brought forward the following claims: (1) The managers of the coal-mines in the district of Dortmund are to bind themselves not to let their miners work over eight hours a-day; (2) Overtime shall be worked in exceptional cases—e.g., when work cannot be postponed or is necessary for the safety of the mine and miners; (3) If working overtime shall become necessary, owing to accumulation of work, then such work is only to be executed after an understanding has been previously come to between the managers on one side and delegates of the workmen on the other; (4) Such delegates are to be selected every year from among those miners who have completed their twenty-fifth year; (5) In the eight hours day, the time taken in the descent and the ascent is not to be included: the descent and ascent shall not last longer than half an hour; in any case they are to be arranged so that the miner does not work underground longer than eight hours; (6) The miners' union in the district of Dortmund is after the fulfilment of the above to see that the wages of the miners are raised in due proportion to the increase in the price of coal; (7) The miners hope that the union will use its influence to stop managers of mines in future from standing in the way of miners on their leaving a pit by arbitrarily giving them unfavourable certificates; (8) The workmen deem it expedient that the miners should only be made to pay as much for powder, oil, and tools as they cost the administration itself, instead of paying higher prices as at present, the surplus obtained from which is paid into relief funds for miners; (9) The miners after resuming work are not to suffer in any way at the hands of the employers on account of the present strike; (10) The delegates of the workmen promise to do their utmost to induce their comrades to accept a compromise based on the above conditions.

It is stated that the mine-thieves are especially averse to paragraph 3, and we easily believe it, the non-existence of such a clause being of very great interest indeed to them. As our readers know from the dailies, the workers and the employers as well have been received by the Prussian monarch, who has told both of them that he takes a considerable deal of interest in their affairs—which can hardly concern him much. Anyhow, the interest he takes in the workers' struggle is of a peculiar kind: "If you have anything to do with the Social-Democrats, I'll have all of you shot down!" And in order to convince the workers' delegates that he really meant what he had spoken, that ruffian of a Kaizer added, "And mark you, my might is great!" Yes, his might is great, but only so because the workers are more or less up to now unaware of the still greater power that lies in them. However, times are drawing near when all toilers, those of the Westphalian land like others, shall have realised the words of the poet:

"That we no master need
To live upon this earth our own
In fair and manly deed."

Meanwhile, the Silesian miners have joined in with their Westphalian comrades. It has been reported that serious disturbances have taken place there, that several pits have been demolished, and some officials of the mines, such as are "of the worst type," like Watrin at Decazeville was, have been threatened and even attacked. May be; but why have six battalions of infantry and eight squadrons of cavalry been sent to the district, but for provoking unarmed and starving men, who only claim an increase of their miserable wages, when they would be entitled to take possession of the very mines altogether?

In spite of the Emperor's interference, the negotiations for bringing about a compromise between the Westphalian miners and the colliery-robbers, on the basis of the above-mentioned clauses, have only been carried through with a great deal of difficulty. The clause of the agreement to which exception was taken was that concerning overtime, and the miners' demand that, should overtime be necessary owing to accumulation of work, the matter should be referred to a standing committee of managers and the miners' delegates, was rejected. On the other hand, the question of leaving the matter to be settled with the individual workmen was reserved.

However, the Westphalian strikes now seem to come to a provisory end, as the miners' delegates have declared that if the conditions agreed upon be not carried out within two months, a fresh strike will begin.

FRANCE.

A few weeks ago we pointed out that in all probability two international working-men's congresses would be held this year at Paris, and that, in case of this event happening, the Socialist League would certainly join in with those Continental bodies which hold the most advanced views and represent really the cause of international revolutionary Socialism. Our French comrades have now issued a circular convoking all Socialists of Europe and America to the Paris Congress, and we give it in full hereunder:

"National Federation of French Trades' Unions: National Council, Bordeaux, 1889.

"Executive Commission of the National Socialist Working Men's Congress of Troyes, 1888—1889.

"INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST WORKING MEN'S CONGRESS, 14th to 21st July, PARIS, 1889.

"Address to the Workmen and Socialists of Europe and America.

"In October 1888 a National Congress was held at Bordeaux, at which were represented upwards of two hundred Trades' Unions and Socialist groups. This Congress resolved that during the Exhibition an International Congress be held in Paris.

"A like resolution was adopted by the National Congress held at Troyes in December 1888, at which were represented all the fractions of the French Socialist party.

"The National Council appointed by the Bordeaux Congress, and the Executive Commission appointed by the Troyes Congress, were charged with the common organisation of the International Congress, and with the invitation—without distinction of party—of all the workers and Socialists of Europe and America whose aim is the emancipation of labour. All this has been carried out.

"On the 28th of February, 1889, an International Conference took place at the Hague, attended by delegates of the Socialist parties of Germany, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, and France. W. Morris, of the Socialist League, and the Danish delegates, sent in excuses, declaring their adherence to the resolutions that should be adopted.

"The Conference of the Hague resolved:

(1) That the Paris International Congress be held from the 14th to 21st July, 1889.

(2) That the Congress be open to the workmen and Socialists of all countries—on conditions compatible with the political laws in force in each.

(3) That the Congress be sovereign with respect to the verification of credentials and the fixing of the order of the day.

"The Conference resolved, provisionally, that the following questions be treated:

(a) International labour legislation; Regulation, by law, of the working day (day-work, night-work, holidays, work of adult males, women, and children).

(b) Inspection of factories and workshops, as well as of domestic industries.

(c) Ways and means to obtain these demands.

"In fulfilment, therefore, of the mandate conferred on us by the Congresses of Bordeaux and of Troyes, and in conformity with the resolutions adopted by the Hague International Conference—

(1) We convoke the Paris International Congress to be held from the 14th to 21st July, 1889.

(2) The questions to be treated are those fixed by the Hague Conference.

(3) We invite the Socialist and working-men's organisations of Europe and America to this Congress, which will lay the foundations of the union of the workers and the Socialists of both hemispheres.

"We have appointed in Paris an Executive Committee to definitely organise the International Congress and make arrangements for the reception of the foreign delegates.

"We send our fraternal greetings to the workmen and the Socialists of the whole world.

"May the universal emancipation of the workers be achieved!

"For the National Council of Bordeaux—The General Secretary, R. LAVIGNE, 16, Rue Sullivan.

"For the Executive Commission of Troyes—The General Secretary, G. BATISSE, Rue de la Grande Planché, 22, à St. André, près Troyes.

"ORGANISING COMMISSION OF THE CONGRESS.

"For the Federation of the Paris Trades' Unions—BOULE, BESSET, MANCEAU, ROUSSEL, and FELINE.

"For the Socialist Organisations of Paris—VAILLANT, GUESDE, DEVILLE, JACLARD, CREPIN, and LAFARGUE.

"For the Socialist Group in the Paris Town Council—DAUMAS, LONGUET, VAILLANT, and CHAUVIERE, Town Councillors.

"For the Socialist Group in the Chamber of Deputies—FERROUL and PLANTEAU, Deputies.

"Secretary for France—BESSET, Bourse du Travail (Labour Exchange), Rue J. J. Rousseau, Paris.

"Secretary for Foreign Countries—PAUL LAFARGUE, Le Perreux, Paris.

SWITZERLAND.

The Swiss bourgeois have endeavoured to convince Bismarck, who accused them of favouring the introduction of Socialism in Germany and in Russia, that they are not in the least tender-hearted for revolutionists. The Federal Council expelled Wohlgenuth, being absolutely unable to act otherwise, but at the same time they expelled the Socialist Lutz. On the other hand, they have now expelled thirteen more foreign Socialists, viz., eleven Russians and two Austrians. The decree of expulsion is as follows:

"Considering that on March the 6th, 1889, two Russians, Jacques Brinstein, alias Nachtigalow, Gutman, or Dembo, from Bernersk, born 1863, and Alexander Dembsky, members of the Russian Terrorist Party, while making at Peterstobel, near Zurich, experiments on explosive matters, caused two bombs to explode, thereby severely wounding themselves; that Brinstein soon afterwards died from his wounds, but that Dembsky is on the way to recovery; that the enquiry, while proving that the idea of an actual plot cannot for one moment be entertained, at any rate has shown that the experiments have been made with a view to add new weapons to the means of action of the Terrorist Party; that George Prokofiew and Marie Gunzburg, active members of the Russian Terrorist Party, seem to have had knowledge of the experiments of Brinstein and Dembsky; that besides these, other persons residing in Switzerland have known about these experiments, or at least belong to the Terrorist party, the leaders of which declare the use of violent means to be legitimate; by application of paragraph 70 of the Federal Constitution, the Federal Council decides that George Prokofiew, Marie Gunzburg, George Beck, Iesaias Kassiusch, Wladimir Wolkowitch, Emanuel Gurewitsch, Max Philippeo, Gabriel Kafianz, Heinrich Frenkel, Sophie Scheinwitz, Felix Daszynsky, and Alexis Tisojew be expelled from Swiss territory."

All these expelled comrades were living very quietly at Zurich, and have done nothing whatever in contradiction to the Swiss laws; they are simply the victims of the egoism of the Swiss bourgeoisie, who have once more acted in the interests of three mighty empires—the German, the Russian, and the Austrian.

Several of our Russian friends being poor, comrade Peter Lavroff has been asked to centralise in his hands any subscriptions which may be sent for the relief of these persecuted Socialists. His address is 328 Rue St. Jacques, Paris.

ITALY.

Important "disturbances" have taken place during the last fortnight in the neighbourhood of Milano, at Casorezzo. The inhabitants of that place, mostly silk and cotton weavers, exasperated against their employers and no longer knowing how to live, have at last resorted to open rebellion, and went with their wives and children to the houses of several industrial magnates, asking them for bread, corn, and money. As they seemed somewhat slow in complying with the people's wishes, the inhabitants smashed their windows and threatened to use violence to get at what they wanted. The syndic of the town at once sent to Milano in order to get support, and bersaglieri were despatched to the spot, who have put the country under martial law. Fifty persons were arrested.

At a short distance from Casorezzo, at Arluno, where misery prevails to such an extent that the poor inhabitants are in complete want of bread, the workers have refused to work any longer if their wages are not at once considerably increased. The blood-suckers having refused to do anything of the kind the house of the syndic has been besieged, and all the shops have been closed for fear of the threats of the people. The furniture of Count del Verme's palace has been burnt right out. After several other houses had been sacked, the military came and occupied the palace and several spots of the town. Night and day the soldiers are watching the streets. All the factories are closed, and even in the fields nobody is to be seen.

At San Giorgio di Legnano, at Osiona, and at Arconate, similar rioting has taken place, accompanied by more or less so-called "violence" on the part of the starving people. Mark! these people, as long as they are at work, earn somewhat between 7d. and 8d. a-day, and instead of resorting to revolt they should declare themselves the most happy men on earth. V. D.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Executive.—At the meeting of the Council on the 20th inst., W. Morris and F. Kitz were elected as delegates to the International Socialist Congress convened in Paris for July.—F. Kitz and W. Blundell were elected delegates to a Conference called by the Finsbury Radical Federation in regard to the Housing of the People.—Mrs. Schack, J. Turner, and A. Brookes as delegates to the Co-operative Aid Association.—Wm. Morris brought to the notice of the Council the fact that he had been invited to speak at a meeting, convened by the S.D.F., in Victoria Park, to be held shortly upon the question of the sentence passed upon the steward of the Berner Street Club. It was resolved that as the S.D.F. had refused to take part with the S.L. in regard to the defence, and as the Defence Committee (composed of delegates of Radical Clubs and organisations) which had done the initial work of defence, such as collecting money, sending out resolutions, and holding public meetings, were entirely ignored by the S.D.F. in the arrangement of their meetings, the secretary be instructed to write and ask for information of the S.D.F., and that if they are willing to accept our co-operation, F. Kitz and W. Morris would speak on our behalf at the meeting.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, June 3, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Commonweals for 1888, handsomely bound in red, are now ready, price 5s.; per post, 5s. 6d.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th, at 13, Farringdon Road. Agenda has been sent to Branches.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Oxford, to end of September. 1889:—Mitcham, to end of February. North London, and St. Georges East, to end of March. Bradford, Hammersmith, and Leicester, to end of April. East London, and Yarmouth, to end of May. Clerkenwell, to end of June.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible.

Propaganda Fund.—Collected at Leman Street on May 5th, 1s. 9d.; ditto on May 19th, 1s. 9d.

The secretary of the Propaganda Committee asks members and friends to forward subscriptions for the purpose of printing leaflets for free distribution, of which there is a great need. Subscriptions to be sent to the Secretary, D. J. Nicoll, 13, Farringdon Road, and will be acknowledged in the Weal. Next meeting of committee on Tuesday, June 11, at 8 p.m.

Defence Committee (Berner Street).—Norwich, 3s.; Glasgow Branch, 5s.; Yarmouth, 3s.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—Blundell, 6d.; R. Turner, 6d.; J. Turner, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; E. W. Cook, 10s.; C. Saunders, 1s.; Rose, 6d.; B. W., 6d.; S. Presburg, 1s.; Samuels, 1s.; Nicoll, 6d.; and Schmitt, 1s. Norwich, 1s.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.—Regents Park—Cantwell, Davis, and Mrs. Lahr spoke. A little opposition from a total abstainer; 2s. 1d. collected. Mile End Waste—Large meeting on Saturday night addressed by Mowbray, Davis, Brooks, Cores, Blundell, and Hicks; 15 Weal sold. Leman Street—Good meeting Sunday morning, addressed by Mowbray, Nicoll, and Turner; 18 Weal sold besides other literature, and 1s. 9d. collected. More speakers wanted this end of London.

MITCHAM.—Successful meeting held Sunday last on Fair Green, addressed by Kitz, Mrs. Schack, and E. Moore. Good sale of Commonweal. Collected for local propaganda, 1s. 6d. In evening at meeting room member's meeting was held.—S. G.

EAST LONDON.—Hall opened to public on Sunday night, when H. H. Sparling lectured on "Rent, Interest, and Profit;" good audience and lively discussion. Fair sale of literature.

ST. GEORGE'S EAST.—Wednesday, May 15th, Rev. Stewart Headlam lectured on "The Sins that cause Poverty" to good audience. Questions and discussion at finish. One new member made and fair sale of literature.

ABERDEEN.—At indoor meeting held on 13th, Leatham lectured on "An Eight Hour's Day." At Castle Street on Saturday night, usual meeting addressed by Duncan and Aiken.—L.

BRADFORD.—Tuesday 7th, Gaskell lectured on "The Futility of Thrift;" good debate. On Sunday 19th, Mitchell lectured to very good audience on "Radicalism v. Socialism," and succeeded in drawing some local Radicals into a warm debate, but their Radicalism is nothing but State Socialism though they don't know it; the lecturer and Minty ably replied.—P. B.

GLASGOW.—Sunday midday, Gilbert, T. and J. Burgoyne, and Carr spoke on Jail Square, and made collection on behalf of Glasgow Tramway Carmen's Union, amounting to 2s. 6d. At Paisley Road, T. and J. Burgoyne spoke; collection for same object 1s. 8d. We regret that the reports for the two previous weeks were sent in too late for insertion.—J. B.

LEEDS.—The Leeds branch are trying to arrange for a Congress of Yorkshire Socialists, to take place during July, hoping thereby to stimulate propaganda in the North. All Socialists who wish to see the cause advanced and strengthened in Yorkshire, are invited to communicate with F. Corkwell, 10, Sykes Street, Beeston Road, Leeds.

MANCHESTER.—Saturday evening we opened new ground, which we mean to work during summer, visiting outlying towns weekly. The factory town of Middleton was the first, and a splendid meeting was held in the Market Square. After opening with a song, Bailie lectured on "The Class War, its latest phases" to about 600 working-men. Many questions were put, the answers being satisfactory. On our departure a desire to hear more was expressed; we return next Saturday. At Stevenson Square on Sunday at 3, Ritson, Leonard Hall, and Barton spoke. At 7.30, enthusiastic meeting was held at Chester Road, when Barton and Ritson, and a friendly "Christian" Socialist spoke.

(Several reports are unavoidably crowded out for want of space.)

HATCHAM LIBERAL CLUB, Portland House, New Cross Road.—Sunday May 26, at 8.30, Rev. Stewart D. Headlam, "Practicable Land Nationalisation."

A NIGHT WITH JOHN BEDFORD LENO, author of 'Drury Lane Lyrics,' 'Kimburton,' 'The Last Idler,' etc.—A Complimentary Smoking Concert, under the patronage of the "Hotspur Club," consisting of Readings and Songs from the works of J. B. Leno, will take place at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet Street, on Monday May 27, at 8.30 prompt. Tickets 1s. and 2s.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½-minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). On Sunday May 26, at 8.30, Debate, "Is a Government necessary during a Revolutionary Crisis?" D. J. Nicoll, affirmative; F. Charles, negative.

East London.—Crown Coffee Tavern, 2 Columbia Road, Hackney Road. Sunday May 26, Members' Meeting at 7 o'clock sharp. At 8.30, C. W. Mowbray, "Socialism and Party Politics."

Hammersmith.—Kelmescott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday May 26, at 8 p.m., A Lecture. Thursday May 30, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 31, at 7.30 p.m., French Class; at 8.30 sharp, Special Business Meeting and discussion of motions for Conference.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m. North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary. On Wednesday May 29, lecture by Vaughan Nash, "Socialist Co-operation."

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Oddfellows' Small Hall, Crooked Lane. Bradford.—Laycock's Temperance Hotel, Albion Court, Kirkgate. Tuesday at 7.30.

Glasgow.—IMPORTANT NOTICE.—The Branch removes from 84 John Street on Saturday. Temporary address and meeting place, Ram's Horn Assembly Rooms, Ingram Street.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m. Manchester.—Working Men's Educational Club, 122 Corporation Street.

Norwich.—Sunday, at 8, Gordon Hall. Tuesday, at 8.30, Members' meeting. Wednesday, at 8.30, Discussion Class. Monday, Thursday, and Friday, Hall open from 8.30. Saturday, 8 until 10.30, Co-operative Clothing Assoc.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m. Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Business meeting every Tuesday evening. Elocution Class at comrade Hadley's every Friday at 8 p.m. Commonweal sold by Mr. Houes, newsagent, George Street.

FRIENDS WILLING TO AID in forming Branches in the undermentioned places are asked to write to the addresses given: Liverpool—W. H. Chapman, Vegetarian Restaurant, 1 Chapman St. Walworth and Camberwell—3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green. Wimbledon and Merton—F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Hoxton—H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road. Streatham—J. Campbell, 98 Wellfield Road, Streatham.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY 25.

7 Hyde Park Brookes, Mrs. Lahr, and Davi
8 Battersea—opposite Christ Church Mowbray, Kitz, and Samuel
8 Mile-end Waste The Branch

SUNDAY 26.

10.30..... Latimer Road Station Lynes, Dean, and Crouch
11.30..... Bethnal Green—Gibraltar Walk Mrs. Schack and Parker
11.30..... Hammersmith—Beadon Road Hammersmith Branch
11.30..... Mitcham Fair Green Charles and Cores
11.30..... Regent's Park Davis
11.30..... Leman Street, Shadwell Turner
3.30..... Hyde Park Davis and Brookes
3.30..... Victoria Park Parker and Charles
7 Clerkenwell Green Brookes
7 Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park Hammersmith Branch
7.30..... Mitcham Fair Green The Branch
7.30..... Streatham Common Charles, Kitz, Cores

TUESDAY 28.

8 Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch.

THURSDAY 30.

8 Ossulton Street Kitz.
8.15..... Hoxton Church Davis.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, 7.30 p.m. Edinburgh.—Sunday: Queen's Park, at 3.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Glasgow Green at 2 p.m.; Paisley Road at 5.30. Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Manchester.—Outdoor meetings every Sunday. Stevenson Square at 3 p.m. Viaduct, Chester Road, at 7.30.

Norwich.—Sunday: Bawburgh, at 11. Crostwick, at 11. North Walsham, at 11. Market Place, at 3.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, every Sunday at 11 and 3.

AUSTRALIAN SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

Sydney.—533 George Street. Lectures and debates every Sunday evening. W. H. McNamara, Secretary.

Melbourne.—"Golden Fleece" Hotel, Russell Street. Lectures and debates every Sunday evening. J. A. Andrews, 18 Ophir Street, Richmond, Secy.

SCOTTISH LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.

Carnoustie.—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant. Dundee.—Meetings every Sunday in Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Edinburgh.—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8. Galashiels.—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, Secretary. Gallatown and Dysart (Fife).—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. A. Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street, Secretary. Kilmarnock.—Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday. H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street, Secretary. West Calder.—Robert Lindsay, West Calder, Secretary.

FERNDALE LIBERAL AND RADICAL CLUB, 35 Bedford Road, Brixton.—Thursday May 30, at 8.30, Mr. A. Howard, "Practicable Land Nationalization."

CLUB AUTONOME, 6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road, W.—Sunday May 26, 8 p.m., a lecture by James Harragan, "Social Revolution, and How to bring it About."

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., New Nelson Assembly Rooms, 24 Lower March, Lambeth.—Sunday May 26, at 8 p.m., Herbert Burrows, "The Relation of Social Democracy to Modern Thought." Tuesday 28, at 8, Annie Besant, "The Basis of Socialism."

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris, Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

F. KITZ,

MERTON CLUB HOUSE, 3 CLARE VILLAS, MERTON ROAD (near High St., Merton, S.W.).

Agent for Socialistic and advanced Literature for Wimbledon, Merton, and neighbourhood.

All orders promptly executed. Commonweal and Australian Radical on sale.

ARBEJDEREN

("The Worker")

DANISH SOCIALIST WEEKLY.

Edited and published by NICOLAJ PETERSEN and GERSON TRIER.

Subscription 3s. a-year.

Nansensgade 28A, Copenhagen.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

299 SHALES Moor, SHEFFIELD.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. 1 copy by post, 3d.; 3 copies, 8d.; 6, 1s. 3d.; 12, 2s. 4d., 4s. 9d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free. 50, post free, 6s. 100, post free, 11s.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

CHEAP EDITION.
NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction. With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by
H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

SEAFARING.

THE ORGAN OF THE SEAFARING CLASS: A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER FOR SEAFARING FOLK AND THEIR FRIENDS.

Published every Saturday, price one penny. Sent to any part of the United Kingdom, or to any of the countries comprised in the Postal Union, post free, at the following rates of subscription: twelve months, 6s. 6d.; six months, 3s. 3d.; three months, 1s. 8d.

Seafaring may be obtained at any branch of the National Amalgamated Sailors' and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland, at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons' Bookstalls, from a newsagent, or at 105 Minories, London, E.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3D. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2S. 6D.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

WORKS BY

JOHN BEDFORD LENO

"THE BURNS OF LABOUR."—Athenæum.

Drury Lane Lyrics. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

The Last Idler, and other Poems. Fcap. 8vo, cloth. 3s.

In the Press, and shortly will be published, a new and enlarged edition of

Kimburton, A PICTURE OF VILLAGE LIFE. Paper Cover. 1s.

The marvellous success of 'Our Father,' 'Bet Graham,' 'Poor Bill,' 'Kimburton Fair,' etc., etc., forming part of the above work, as recitals, at St. James's Hall, London Clubs, etc., caused the first edition to be speedily exhausted.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, W.C., or of the Author, 76 Drury Lane, W.C.

SOCIALIST LEAFLETS.

Single page, 8vo size, 2s. per thousand.

Why be Transported?

"Down with the Socialists!"

The cause of Prostitution.

The Workers' Claims and "Public Opinion."

Tramcar Slavery.

Shall Ireland be Free?

Ireland a Nation.

Songs for the Workers.

The Skeleton or Starvation Army.

Single page, 4to size, 3s. per thousand.

To Working Women and Girls.

Strikes and the Labour Struggle.

The Liberty and Property Defence League.

The Doctrines of the Communists (2 leaflets).

Labour is the source of all Wealth.

2 pages 8vo, 3s. per thousand.

What Socialists Want.

4 pages 8vo, 4s. per thousand.

A Straight Talk to Working Men.

These Leaflets, at prices given above, can be had from the Commonweal manager in any quantities by Branches, members, or sympathisers, for distribution, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.

NOW READY. 20 pp., price 2d., handsome wrapper.

MEN V. MACHINERY.

Suggestive Facts and Figures, urging National Control of National Powers of Production.

By THOMAS SHORE.

With Preface by H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road; or from T. Shore, 33 Newington Green Road, N.

ESSAYS IN MODERN SOCIALIST CRITICISM.

BY ERNEST BELFORT BAX,

Author of 'Jean Paul Marat,' 'Handbook to the History of Philosophy,' etc.

Uniformly bound in red cloth, cr. 8vo; each 2s. 6d.

Second Edition.

I.—THE RELIGION OF SOCIALISM.

"A rather deep but intensely interesting treatise on the fundamental principles of Socialism, as entertained by the leaders of the movement at the present day."—City Press.

"Mr. Bax is by far the ablest of the English exponents of scientific Socialism."—Westminster Review.

"Mr. Bax is a thoughtful man, and is always ready to follow his opinions to their most startling consequences."—Contemporary Review.

II.—THE ETHICS OF SOCIALISM.

CONTENTS:—The New Ethic—Revolution of the Nineteenth Century—Criminal Law under Socialism—Concerning "Justice"—The Morrow of the Revolution—On Some Forms of Modern Cant—Men versus Classes—The Curse of Civilisation—The Will of the Majority—"That Blessed Word"—The Odd Trick—Doctor Faustus and his Contemporaries—Immortality—A free Fantasia on Things Divine and Human.

Swan, Sonnenschein, and Co., Paternoster Square.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

DER ARME TEUFEL.

EDITED BY ROBERT REITZEL.

Offices: 6 Champlain Street, Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Subscription, 2 dols. 50 c. yearly.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEAL

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 177.

SATURDAY, JUNE 1, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

HENRY GEORGE AND THE SINGLE TAX.

THE large audiences which assembled to hear Mr. George during his recent lecturing tour in Scotland, and the enthusiasm with which his denunciation of private property in land was received, are cheering signs to Socialists. It was especially gratifying to observe that almost every speaker who preceded and followed Mr. George at those meetings, spoke more Socialism than Single Tax; and that just in proportion as their utterances were boldly socialistic—and many of them were remarkably so—was the applause and enthusiasm of the meetings.

I think, however, that I am not guilty of bias in saying that when Mr. George attempted to show that land can be nationalised by the imposition of a single tax on land values, there was a palpable fall in his argument, if not from the sublime to the ridiculous, at least from the convincing to the confounding—a fall, too, that was apparent alike in the lecturer's manner of speech and in the audience's manner of receiving it. It is true Mr. George admitted that he did not believe the imposition of a single tax upon land values would do "everything," and that he defined the right of private property in the products of labour in terms that implied Socialism; yet the general tenour of his utterance when eulogising his tax theory and when replying to questions put by Socialists, was so patently sophistical and reactionary, that one could not help agreeing with Dr. Clark when he said—speaking at the farewell meeting in the City Hall, Glasgow—that "He (pointing to Mr. George) was the most Conservative man in Scotland."

As Mr. George's single-tax theory has no doubt charms for those whose minds have been warped by the unhealthy teaching of expedients and palliatives common to all political reformers, and for those who feel almost persuaded to become Socialists but hesitate, looking for some stepping-stone, fearing to take the bold leap, I will endeavour to show briefly the error of fact and thought upon which it is founded. A reply given by Mr. George to a question asked in Glasgow, seems to me to expose the radical defect of perception upon which the whole superstructure of his method is built.

When asked if a man was justified in taking the highest price he could GET for a product of his labour, Mr. George replied "Yes! If I make a rod and line and go and fish in a stream and catch a fish, and if everybody else is equally free to go and do the same, I am certainly entitled to ask, and if possible get, what I please for the fish."

It is hard to believe that Mr. George is not conscious of the utter absurdity that underlies such a declaration. What man ever would pay to another more for a fish than it would cost him to procure one for himself, if he were equally free and able to go and procure it? Fishers do not usually succeed in robbing fishers, any more than lawyers succeed in robbing lawyers. But fishers may easily succeed in robbing lawyers, and lawyers usually do succeed in robbing fishers when they get them in their clutch. It is apparent on the face of it, that the only reason why men can and do make a profit off their fellows is because they have a direct or indirect power to compel their fellows to submit to their extortion. Mr. George declares that he is opposed to all monopoly; but what is monopoly but the possession of some advantage—it may be special opportunity or special knowledge—that gives some the power to get more than the labour-value of what they give? When there is no special advantage or monopoly, profit and interest, which Mr. George justifies, will be impossible.

The streams of our land may be equally free to all who care or can get an opportunity of fishing in them. But if while one man residing near a stream may be free to fish in it, another residing far away from it is surely not so free; and the man who is down in the mine during the day procuring coal to boil, or salt to season the fish, can scarcely be said to be free to fish at all. Are men, therefore, to take advantage of their neighbours' different pursuits, or even of their neighbours' ignorance or misfortune? Shall the fisher make a profit off the miner, the miner off the tailor, and the tailor off the husbandman? And when the one complains to the other, "Oh, you are robbing me!" shall the other answer him, "True, but you are free to rob me or some one else if you can. You are free to turn your hand to my occupation, and then you will no longer be robbed by me!" Surely the complainer would reply, "Yes, but then I again in turn would be robbed by the man who did the work which I now do! I am not free to fish, and bake, and make clothes, and cultivate the ground all at the same time; and unless I can do everything for myself some one or another will rob me!"

I freely admit, that if by any system of land restoration, or by the imposition of any tax, we could achieve a state where men might, even at a great sacrifice, be free to persistently revolt against robbery, or be free to rob others just as much as others robbed them, the problem would be solved. For these men, unless we assume that they had become idiots, would in sheer despair declare for Communism within twenty-four hours. But, alas! no theory of mere land restoration yet expounded, no method of taxation yet proposed, gives the slightest hope of such a result. Mr. George, while admitting that under his single tax system the land would be rented to the highest bidder, and when, as he must know, the highest bidder would be the man with the most capital—the man who to-day can pay the highest rents, the man who would employ as much machinery and as few men as possible—still clings to the belief that his system will make the soil of the country free to the workers, so that they will be able to escape from the oppression of the capitalists and be able to sell their labour for its full, and if they can for more than its full value. There is nothing, however, in his single tax theory per se that implies that a great number of men would on its adoption be drawn from the congested labour market and be employed upon land, not to speak of being free and able to employ themselves upon it. Unless the price of food is increased, it would not pay to employ more than are now employed upon the arable portions of it. Horticulture, it is true, might be substituted for agriculture, and that undoubtedly would employ more; but horticulture is not an exclusive or even an integral principle of the single tax economy. Horticulture could be adopted without the single tax being imposed, and, as a matter of fact, is already largely adopted in many parts of the country.

As for the converting of sheep farms and sporting lands into arable soil, would not the number of men it might be profitable to employ in this way (and this again is not a remedy dependent upon the adoption of the single tax) be counterbalanced by the thousands of domestic servants, flunkeys, gamekeepers, gillies, fence-makers, and indeed cabinet-makers, tailors, etc., etc., who at present make a livelihood by ministering to the landlord class, and whom the dispossessed—or taxed out—landlords and landladies would require to disband? Would not even the 30,000 or 50,000 landlords themselves—who would (if the tax proved effectual) be thrown on all fours upon the labour market to earn their bread by the sweat of their brows—be a somewhat important mob of recruits to the army of unskilled labour?

There are the tramway servants, the match-factory girls, the Cradley Heath chainmakers, the shirt seamstresses, and the thousands of other victims of usury and profit-making—how, I ask, are they going to get on the land? Supposing the curse of Gowrie or the fields of Lincolnshire were waiting for them rent free; without capital they could not go there, and even if they could they would perish of starvation in a single week. And if they cannot go to the land and employ themselves they must submit to be employed by others, and others will only employ them on condition of making a profit off their labour—that is robbing them. And need more be said than this, that any system that gives one class of men the power to be masters over another class, that compels the poor to labour for the profit of the rich, is a system—however hypocritically it may disguise itself—that no Socialist should assist in establishing, and if established every Socialist should war against until its utter destruction was assured.

As for the tax itself, Mr. George says it would, by means of the State, be distributed directly or indirectly to all the people of the country—rich and poor alike. Just so. What the rich got of it would be robbery; for, quibble about land values as Mr. George and his disciples may, there is not an atom of wealth that can be acquired by the State by means of a tax, that does not come exclusively from the labour of those who work. Those who don't work can produce no wealth, either to be taken in the form of taxation or any other form.

and every iota of the land tax which the wealthy idlers received directly or indirectly would be robbery of the poor. On the other hand, that portion of the tax which the poor received back, would also, by the iron law of wages (from which as we have seen the single tax provides no escape) go to the rich—the capitalists—in the form of reduced wages paid to the workers!

Thus the single tax would ultimately become only another means of making the rich richer and the poor poorer. So also would it operate in this way so far as it made unnecessary the exaction of all other direct and indirect taxation; for, while the single tax upon land would relieve the rich capitalist of say £1,000 a-year of indirect and direct taxes, the worker would only be relieved of say £5. The capitalist would in this way be actually receiving a greater share of the value of the land than the poor worker.

There is no real economic distinction between land that can bear taxation and capital. A piece of taxable land is a manufactured article, just like a wheel-barrow or a steam-engine, the difference being really, economically speaking, one of degree. It is true we cannot carry an acre of land upon our back or move it to and fro, and therefore, instead of carrying it or moving it, we have to carry or move ourselves to it; and it is just the labour involved in carrying ourselves and placing our factories and our cities upon any piece of land that gives it whatever value it possesses, apart from actual cultivation, which is a species of manufacture. We cannot, for example, bring our meadows and our mountains to our railways and stations; we have to take our railways and stations to our meadows and mountains. Our meadows and mountains are thus modified by labour, and those who happen to own land thus modified by the labour of others and thus increased in value, can of course charge for that extra value in the form of rent, and become thereby robbers of labour. This value, which Mill termed "unearned increment," and which Mr. George proposes to tax, is a value given solely by labour; it is a value too that accrues to other articles besides land. It is a value, for instance, that accrues to an old violin, or a bottle of old wine, the value in fact of the care and trouble of maturing and preserving the article. Human labour has also this "unearned increment," for by eight hour's labour to-day a mechanic or a mill-worker can do treble or quadruple the value of work that a mechanic or mill-worker could do fifty years ago. This increased value of labour, like the increased value of land, is not given by the efforts of any one man, but by the efforts of the workers and thinkers of the present and past generations; and, therefore, no man can claim that the products of his own labour are exclusively his own. We cannot escape from Communism.

"No man made the land!" cries Mr. George. But no man ever made anything. No man ever made art, education, science, or the knowledge of how to cook, make clothes, or do anything that distinguishes us from brutes. That skill and knowledge is no more made by any one man, or generation of men, than the soil of the country. No man of himself ever made a machine, the raw and even largely the manufactured material was provided him. No man ever of himself, and from his own created knowledge, invented a machine; the science, the skill of workmanship, was preserved for him and supplied to him by society. To society, to the past and present generations of men, he owes everything that distinguishes him from a bushman or a brute; and shall he be allowed to take all things from society and give nothing to society in return? Shall he, in fact, be permitted to be a Communist in taking from the community and an Individualist in giving to it?

Mr. George advises Socialists not to concern themselves so much about the monopoly of capital. The entire capital of the nation, he tells us, does not amount to more than four years national production. The stored product of four years labour! and Mr. George actually thinks that is not of very great account! Why, if every worker in the community had his portion of that capital, the value of four years of his own labour, what would the landlords and capitalist have? Nothing! The workers would own every stick and stone, every atom of material in the country. Then the capitalists would know, what Mr. George apparently does not know, what it is to be without, not four years, but maybe not four weeks or even four days stored labour to fall back upon. And that is the plight of the great portion of our workers to-day, and it is just because of that plight that they are unable to live without hiring themselves to the capitalists who have appropriated their stored labour, or to resist being plundered in the future. It is because of that plight that even did the workers appropriate the entire soil of the country, and squat upon it rent free, they would be unable to subsist upon it without the assistance of the capitalists—unless they appropriated the capital of the country, or at least a mighty large portion of it, as well.

As Socialists, we are all for Land Nationalisation, or Land Communisation, but we do not believe it possible to nationalise or communise the land by a single tax upon it, or any other mere fiscal adjustment. Land Nationalisation is impossible without Socialism, and any attempt to really nationalise the land would be resisted by capitalists and landlords alike, as they now resist Socialism. Let us then dally no further with the matter, but boldly teach our right to obtain, and boldly set ourselves to obtaining, all the wealth and all the means of producing wealth which our labour and the labour of past generations of workers (whose inheritors we are) has produced. Let us appease no superstition by hypocrisy, no prejudice by sophistry, and no fear by untruth, but lift boldly up the banner of revolution and all true and good men will be drawn irresistibly to it.

J. BRUCE GLASIER.

THE ENGLISH REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT, 1815 TO 1817.

SPA-FIELDS RIOTS AND DERBYSHIRE INSURRECTION.

(Continued from p. 162.)

THIS Stamp Act imposed a heavy duty on all newspapers, and the Black Dwarf and similar publications evaded it by publishing no news in their columns, and confining themselves to comment and satire. I will give a few extracts from this paper, so as to give you some idea of the way in which it was written. In an article on the increase of crime in the country, the Black Dwarf holds forth as follows:

"In a state like England, it is impossible that crime should not abound. Some of the laws that pretend to punish guilt, as well as the taxes that produce it, are calculated to give a premium for the commission of the most atrocious deeds. All is enlisted against the wretched. Many poor beings subsist for weeks on less food than the gluttons of to-day devour at a single meal. It is vain for ministers of the church to inveigh against the demoralization of the poor. They should inveigh against the system that has demoralized them. They should inveigh against one man eating the food of twenty, while the remaining nineteen are expected to starve in quiet, or threatened with punishment for complaint. Man is naturally kind to those who surround him. His passions will have weight, but he is not naturally a thief or a murderer. Let those who have made him so tremble for the consequences, and retrace their steps. Ere the lightning flashes or the thunder rolls, let them listen to the voice that has been patient in suffering, and which can eagerly forgive as it can awfully avenge. The people call for an alteration, they demand a reform. They are wearied with disgust at the mismanagement almost everywhere apparent. May those who have mounted in the car of Phaeton be wise enough to moderate their career and repent in time."

The Black Dwarf also points out "that the rich make their fortunes out of the labour of the poor," and that in giving charity they only return a portion of the superfluous wealth they have taken from them. In an answer to complaints of the ministry as to disloyalty in the country, this paper says, "Put George Canning in the workhouse at Bethnal Green, and allow him half-a-crown a-week (and that's more than he is worth to the State), and hear what beautiful tropes and similies he would find for the constitution." George Canning was the principal creature of the ministry. He had once been an advanced reformer, but sold himself for wealth and office.

It required some courage to write like this when the valiant Cobbett had run away in fear of repressive laws, especially as the editor of the Black Dwarf, Mr. Wooler, was then being prosecuted by the ministry for saying "that when the administration talk of patriotism they meant plunder," and that their object in embarking in a war against France was not to conquer that country but ourselves. When prosecuted, he defended himself in a manly and eloquent speech, and though the jury found him guilty, yet through a technical informality the decision was quashed and the Attorney-General did not proceed with a new trial.

Such was the revolutionary literature of the time; and though these men did not see so clearly the root of the evil as we do, yet we can see that they felt the sufferings of the poor as keenly as ourselves.

But now to return to the main part of my subject. I have said that the revolutionary feeling increased among the Radicals. Their societies were repressed, but many of them still met in secret and plotted the overthrow of the tyrannical Government. The most advanced section of the Radicals of Manchester decided to call upon the people to march to London to petition the Prince Regent. On the 3rd of March twenty thousand men gathered at St. Peter's Church to start for this journey. They called themselves "blanketeers," from their each carrying a blanket for camping upon the roads and among fields. Eight troops of yeomanry and a strong force of military are called out. The leaders are arrested and the crowd dispersed by force. A few thousand of the most determined reach the bridge at Stockport, but are charged by troops of yeomanry, who use their sabres. One person is so badly wounded that his life is despaired of. Two hundred prisoners are taken; but a number of the blanketeers ford the river, and five hundred of them reach Macclesfield and are there broken up by a troop of yeomanry. The printer of the placard calling the meeting is arrested and thrown into prison. The triumph of law and order is complete against these unarmed starving men.

But the Government was fated to be confronted with more serious attacks upon the law and the constitution than could be made by a few thousand half-starved men marching to London. On 6th of June a number of delegates were arrested by a troop of cavalry at Thornton Lees, Yorkshire, and almost simultaneously insurrection broke out. Throughout the northern counties there were many men who had taken part in the Luddite movement, and these were not the sort of people to see their leaders thrown into prison and their ordinary liberties crushed beneath the heel of despotism without making something more than a verbal protest. A few days after the arrest of the delegates at Thornton Lees, three hundred men gather near Huddersfield. Many of the people have fire-arms. The yeomanry are called out and come into conflict with the insurgents at Folly Hall Bridge. Shots are exchanged; a yeoman's horse is wounded, and these heroes retreat. A troop of regular cavalry is sent against the insurgents, but they find on arriving on the scene of the conflict that the rebels have dispersed. A considerable number of arrests follow this unsuccessful attempt at insurrection.

But a far more serious attempt was soon to startle the propertied classes of this free and happy country. This was what is known in the newspapers of the time as the Derbyshire insurrection. Living at Nottingham at this time was a man named Jeremiah Brandreth, who had been very active in the Luddite disturbances a few years back. He was known among his companions, on account of his courage and daring, as the Nottingham Captain, and had a great influence among the advanced Radicals in that town. In appearance he was dark and swarthy, and fitted in every way as the leader of a popular insurrection. For some time there had been rumours among the poor in the villages on the borders of Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire that a great rising was about to take place throughout the whole of England. Preparations had been made; pikes were forged; and the starving people hope that the end of their misery is near. On the 8th of June Brandreth appears suddenly, as if he had dropped from the clouds, at Pentridge, a large village on the borders in Derbyshire, inhabited by stocking frame knitters and agricultural labourers. He has good news to tell them: the day of revolt has arrived. To-morrow England will burst into insurrection; an army of starving men will come down from the north like a cloud and sweep tyranny in ruin before them. This is the story he tells to a crowd of wondering rustics in a low-roofed room whose walls are black with smoke and age at Pentridge village inn. To most of those present, save two or three leaders, Brandreth is a stranger, although Pentridge is within less than twenty miles of the town of Nottingham, but they do not doubt that he speaks the truth; and when he repeats certain verses, the watch-words of this jacquarie, akin to the rhymes which were current among the peasantry at the time of Tyler's rebellion, and points out the route of the rebel forces on the map, conviction is redoubled. These are the rhymes—rough enough, but with a certain oracular force about them:

“Every man his skill must try;
He must turn out, and not deny.
No bloody soldier must he dread;
He must turn out and fight for bread.
The time has come, you plainly see;
The Government opposed must be.”

A discussion then springs up as to the amount of arms. William Turner, one of the leaders, states they are best prepared at Wingfield for there the people have forty pikes hidden away in a quarry. It is decided that they are to meet on the next night at a farm near Wingfield, and that they are to be joined at various points on the road to Nottingham by the detachments from the other villages. The plan of insurrection is not a bad one. Just outside Nottingham they are to be met by a picked body of Nottingham insurgents, and these combined forces are to sweep through the town and carry all before them. When these preliminaries are settled the meeting breaks up. At ten o'clock on the 9th of June the insurgents accordingly gather at the old barn near Wingfield; they come up slowly, and it is late before they are ready to march. At last Brandreth and Turner form them in military order, and they march off in the darkness, some forty or fifty strong, to join the Pentridge men, whom they have agreed to meet at a field close to that village. As they march, the inmates of farm-houses upon the road are rudely awakened by blows upon the door from the butt-ends of guns and pikes. They open their windows in fear and trembling, and are ordered by the insurgents—and the request is emphasised by levelling of guns, pistols, and pikes at the heads of the occupants of the houses—to hand over any arms that they may have in the place. At the farmhouse of Samuel Hunt, a confederate, they are well received and are regaled with bread and cheese and beer, Hunt afterwards joining the insurgents with one of his farm servants. They then march to the house of Mrs. Hepworth, the widow of a wealthy farmer, and knock at the door, and when the inmates are awakened make their usual demand for weapons. Their request is refused, and Hunt at a word from Brandreth picks up a huge stone and hurls it at the door. Brandreth with some others rush round to the back to force an entrance there. A window is driven in, and Brandreth, levelling his gun through the window, tells someone who is standing there in darkness to open the door. The man refuses; Brandreth fires; there is a cry of pain, and the man falls forward on the floor, stone dead. The dead man is a servant of the house, Robert Walters by name. No further resistance is made, and the arms are handed out to the insurgents.

Many people will doubtless call this act of Brandreth's a cruel and abominable murder. I waste no terms of reprobation: revolutions are not made with rose-water, and those people who can shriek over a single victim of a popular insurrection are often singularly complaisant over the slaughter of thousands in a wicked and useless war. Dreadful as this act may seem, it certainly proved that Brandreth had in him the material for a revolutionary leader, and if there had been a few thousand more men like him in England, the misery and starvation of the people would not have lasted much longer, and Sidmouth and Castlereagh would have bit the dust before a popular revolt.

The insurgents then continue their march. The people from Pentridge are not at the appointed place, so they march down to the village and arouse the men, who have lost nerve at the last moment. They are here joined by several comrades, and they take arms from the houses of the farmers in the village. Having thus recruited their ranks, they resume their march to Condon, a village near Nottingham, and there stop at a public-house known as the Glass House, where they awake the landlord and are supplied with ale and other refreshment. Here Isaac Ludlam, one of the leaders, an old agricultural labourer, addresses them and urges them vehemently to fight to rid themselves of their slavish wretchedness. They now number about two hundred, and other parties are marching in to join them, but many of the men who have been forced to join at Pentridge and other places are thinking more of flight than fighting, so their strength is more apparent than real. The landlord brings in his bill, but Brandreth informs him that he will be paid after the revolution, and he does not find it convenient to enforce payment. The insurgents then resume their march as the dawn of summer morning breaks over the land.

Leaving them on the road, let us go to Nottingham and see what has occurred there.

D. J. NICOLL.

(To be concluded.)

REVOLUTIONARY CALENDAR.

WEEK ENDING JUNE 8, 1889.

2	Sun.	1777. Trial of John Almon, bookseller, for selling Junius ' 'Letter to the King.' 1780. "No Popery" riots in London. 1793. French Convention surrounded by armed sections under Henriot; Girondins put under arrest at their own houses. 1817. Trial of Andrew McKinlay for administering "unlawful oaths" as a member of a society for obtaining Reform. 1831. Labour riots at Merthyr; red flag carried. 1838. Socialist Congress at Manchester closes with a great demonstration at Bywater's Rooms. 1866. John Lynch, Fenian, died in Woking Prison. 1878. Nobiling's attempt on Kaiser Wilhelm. 1882. Giuseppe Garibaldi died.
3	Mon.	1793. Trial of D. I. Eaton for publishing the second part of the 'Rights of Man.' 1804. Richard Cobden born. 1816. "Illegal assemblage" of weavers at Bradford, Wilts., to protest against power-looms. 1831. Severe fighting at Merthyr between strikers and military. 1842. Unemployed demonstration at Glasgow. 1846. First number of the Reasoner and Herald of Progress , edited by G. J. Holyoake, 2d. weekly. 1864. William Johnson Fox died. 1882. James Thomson ("B.V.") died. 1885. Police outrage at the International Club, Stephen's Mews.
4	Tues.	1793. Adam Smith born. 1798. Sir Edward Crosbie hanged for high treason, Ireland. 1877. Trial of South Russian Workers' Union: sentences—mines 3; Siberia 5; prison 7.
5	Wed.	1816. Five weavers imprisoned with hard labour for "unlawfully combining" in a trade union. 1817. J. T. Wooler tried for "seditious libel" in the Black Dwarf of April 2 upon Lord Castlereagh and Mr. Canning. 1887. Great Socialist feast in Copenhagen.
6	Thur.	1787. Trials of Lord George Gordon for writing, and Thomas Wilkins for printing, 'The Prisoners' Petition to the Right Honourable Lord George Gordon to preserve their Lives and Liberties, and prevent their Banishment to Botany Bay'; and of Lord George Gordon for libel on the Queen of France. 1816. Riot at Chelmsford begun by the rescue of four prisoners charged with machine-breaking; yeomanry routed by the rioters. 1878. Geiking, Captain of Gendarmes at Kieff, killed by Socialists. 1887. Strike of Northumberland miners begins.
7	Fri.	1649. Dinner to Cromwell and thanksgiving in City for the putting down of the Levellers. 1753. Dr. Archibald Cameron hung for being "out in the '45." 1798. James O'Coigley hung. 1832. First Reform Bill passed. 1866. President Johnson's proclamation against the Fenians. 1876. Workers Ossipoff and Obramenko tried at St. Petersburg for Socialist propaganda, and sentenced to mines and prison respectively.
8	Sat.	1688. Imprisonment of the Seven Bishops. 1809. Thomas Paine died. 1831. Serious labour riot at Merthyr, and conflict with the military; many deaths. 1876. Georges Sand died. 1878. Clever escape of Stephanovich, Deitch, and Bukhanovsky from Kieff prison; they reach Switzerland, but returning afterwards, are caught, tried, and sent to the mines for life.

Unlawful Oath.—The following is the "unlawful oath," for administering which at secret meetings in Glasgow, during November and December 1816 and January and February 1817, Andrew McKinlay was tried: "In awful presence of God, I, A B, do voluntarily swear that I will persevere in my endeavours to form a brotherhood of affection among Britons of every description who are considered worthy of confidence, and that I will persevere in any endeavours to obtain for all the people in Great Britain and Ireland, not disqualified by crimes or insanity, the elective franchise, at the age of twenty-one, with free and equal representation, and annual parliaments; and that I will support the same to the utmost of my power, either by moral or physical strength, as the case may require; and I do further swear that neither hopes, fears, rewards, or punishments shall induce me to inform on, or give evidence against, any member or members, collectively or individually, for any act or expression done or made, in or out, in this or similar societies, under the punishment of death, to be inflicted on me by any member or members of such societies. So help me God, and keep me steadfast."

SEAHAM HARBOUR MINERS.—One thousand miners, employed by the Marquis of Londonderry, at Seaham Harbour, have decided to give 14 days' notice to leave work unless concessions in the matter of wages and hours are granted.

RAILWAY SIGNALMEN'S WAGES.—At a meeting of Leeds signalmen on Friday, at which all the railways in the district were represented, a resolution was unanimously adopted to agitate for increased wages and a reduction of hours to eight per day, six days to constitute a week, and wages to be paid as follows: First class men, 5s. a-day; second, 4s. 6d.; third, 4s.; and fourth class men to be abolished.

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS EXHIBITION SOCIETY.—The second exhibition will open in the New Gallery, Regent Street, on the 7th of October; the days for sending in will be the 16th, 17th, and 18th of September. A new departure will be made in the sale of the exhibits, in which it will be remembered the society took no part. The society, however, will make no profit upon the sales. The evening lectures will again be a feature of the exhibition.

HAVE YOU NOT HEARD HOW IT HAS GONE WITH MANY A CAUSE BEFORE NOW: FIRST, FEW MEN HEED IT; NEXT, MOST MEN CONTEMN IT; LASTLY, ALL MEN ACCEPT IT—AND THE CAUSE IS WON

Communications invited on Social Questions. They should be written on one side of the paper, addressed to the Editors, 13 Farringdon Rd., E.C., and accompanied by the name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication. As all articles are signed, no special significance attaches to them because of their position in these pages. None to be taken as more than in a general manner expressing the views of the League as a body, except it be so explicitly declared by the Editors. Rejected MSS. only returned if a stamped directed envelope is forwarded with them. Subscriptions.—For Europe and United States, including postage, per year, 6s. six months, 3s.; three months, 1s. 6d. Business communications to be addressed to Manager of the COMMONWEAL, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. Remittances in Postal Orders or halfpenny stamps.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LUCY PARSONS (Chicago).—Book to hand safely; will be reviewed in a week or two.
JOHN GREENWOOD (Ashwell).—Thanks for letter; will let comrades know of your invitation.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE.
Henry George and the Single Tax J. BRUCE GLASIER	169
The English Revolutionary Movement, 1815 to 1817: Spa-Fields Riots and Derbyshire Insurrection (continued) D. J. NICOLL	170
Revolutionary Calendar—Unlawful Oath H. H. SPARLING	171
Notes on News MAY MORRIS and H. H. SPARLING	172
Correspondence—"Seafaring"—Looking Forward (A Reply to William Morris)	173
Henry George in Manchester WM. BAILIE	173
The Labour Struggle	174
In the United States H. F. CHARLES	174
Executive Announcements, Reports, Lecture Diary, and Notices of Meetings	175
Advertisements, New Publications, etc., etc.	176

Periodicals received during the week ending Wednesday May 29.

ENGLAND	Detroit—Der Arme Teufel	SPAIN
Justice	Milwaukee—National Reformer	Madrid—El Socialista
Labour Elector	Newark—Arbeiter-Zeitung	PORTUGAL
Labour Tribune	San Francisco Arbeiter-Zeitung	Lisbon—O Protesto Operario
London—Freie Presse		Porto—A Revolta
Norwich—Daylight	FRANCE	GERMANY
Railway Review	Paris—Le Parti Ouvrier (daily)	Berlin—Volks Tribune
Sozial Demokrat	Le Proletariat	AUSTRIA
Seafaring	La Revolte	Wien—Gleichheit
Telegraph Service Gazette	Commentary—Le Socialiste	Brunn—Volksfreund
Worker's Friend	Lyon—Le Flambeau Rouge	HUNGARY
INDIA	HOLLAND	Arbeiter-Wochen-Chronik
Bankipore—Behar Herald	Hague—Recht voor Allen	DENMARK
Madras—People's Friend	Anarchist	Social-Demokraten
UNITED STATES	BELGIUM	Copenhagen—Arbejderen
New York—Der Sozialist	Ghent—Vooruit	SWEDEN
Freiheit	Antwerp—De Werker	Malmö—Arbetet
Truthseeker	Liege—L'Avenir	Stockholm, Social-Demokraten
Volkszeitung	SWITZERLAND	Goteborg—Folkets Rost
The Truth	Arbeiterstimme	WEST INDIES
Workmen's Advocate	Geneva—Przedswit	Cuba—El Productor
Boston—Woman's Journal	Bulletin Continental	ARGENTINE REPUBLIC
Liberty	ITALY	Buenos Aytes—Vorwärts
Chicago—Knights of Labor	Rome—L'Emancipazione

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE British traveller is the British traveller always, and be he never so superior a person the cloven hoof shows itself unexpectedly yet. Witness some recent notes by the "Travelling Commissioner" of an enthusiastic and public spirited evening contemporary. After reading an interesting and picturesque description of a visit to the great wall of China, our shocked eyes come across the following naïve and child-like sentence, "The bricks (of the great wall) are so big and heavy that I had to hire a donkey to carry off two of them." The admission of its being a vandalism quite fails in its object of disarming my wrath. Why, I ask lamenting, is the British traveller to leave his mark on even the great Wall of China? "The Innocents Abroad" with their Doctor and his "Chunk busted from the tomb of Abelard and Heloise" are delightful in fiction and in America, but we don't want them too near home.

We execrate the dark trading that goes on between British and American travellers, and some of the hangers-on and doubtful custodians of world-renowned foreign buildings, of "chunks," scraps of carving, etc., and notably and abominably handfuls of the priceless mosaics in the ducal chapel of St. Mark at Venice. I myself have been mysteriously drawn into a corner in that building and offered a handful of these latter some years back, when modern improvements and horrible Salviati mosaic jobs were in full swing; I nearly died in the unsuccessful effort to reproduce in an unfamiliar language some of the flowers of English speech which seemed to me to be appropriate to the occasion. Now, though the bricks of the Chinese Wall are, we are interested to learn, rather larger than the jewel-like squares of Venetian mosaic marble and glass, "the principle remains the same," and I deplore this one faux pas of the brilliant and interesting travelling commissioner of our much-respected contemporary.

Are the bricks, perhaps, necessary for the purpose of confounding the mistaken scientists who some years back denied the existence of the Chinese Wall? If so, I condole with the distinguished traveller if he intends that they shall form part of his luggage back into civilisation and fog.

Last Saturday, there were a good many gratified recipients of the cheap glory which Her Majesty is pleased to bestow on some of the most faithful of her faithful subjects on her most gracious birthday, and such-like Homeric occasions. I should not have thought the subject worth mentioning, but for a little "par" in the Pall Mall Gazette of that date, which describes the qualities of one of the favoured so neatly and concisely, that I cannot resist reproducing it in toto :—

"Mr. William Mackinnon is a fine example of our merchant princes (!), a man who has by his energy and skill helped to extend our commercial supremacy, especially in the transport trade of the East. He is in some respects of the Gordon type, and devotes his wealth to the promotion of causes of a semi-religious and civilising character, with an element of commerce thrown in (!!). He has taken a leading part in sending out Stanley to the relief of Emin Pasha, and is president of the Imperial British East Africa Company, which has undertaken the task of ruling and developing an immense territory. Besides being chairman of the British India Steam Navigation Company he is a director of the Suez Canal Company and other commercial undertakings."

M. M.

The School Board of London has at length made up its mind upon the printing question, and from henceforth all those who would write themselves down as printers to it, must also write themselves down as paying "not less than the minimum standard rate of wages in all the branches of the trade." This is good; not because it is such a very great boon to the working-classes, but that it is a step in advance anyhow. By these little loosening of the great ring of monopoly and competition, that has for so long held prisoner the proletariat, one may in some measure realise the enormous pressure that is now put upon it by the growth of Socialist opinion in the country.

What has happened on the School Board and the County Council will happen elsewhere. The principle is being conceded all round, and its wide-spread application, however it may be resisted, cannot be long delayed. The weary uphill fight maintained against all odds by the Socialists for years past is having its effect, and those who have been discouraged by the apparent endlessness of the strife, cannot fail to take heart and renew their efforts with tenfold intensity.

The Star and Pall Mall have both protested strongly against the lying malevolence that would make murderers of the men who were hung at Manchester for the accidental killing of a constable. With that protest we are most heartily in accord; there are no men in all the world who look on Allen, Larkin, and O'Brien with more respect than do we Socialists. It is not long since the Commonweal told their story at length, lovingly and with due need of praise.

But there are some of us who think that the Star should not protest so loud. We have not forgotten that on the 27th of last November, the first anniversary of the unveiling of the Limerick monument to the Manchester martyrs, the Star went out of its way to vilify and asperse our four comrades of Chicago, and to attack those who were celebrating their memory and protesting against their murder.

In the course of a letter to the editor, the present writer urged that:

"Taking for granted the truth of 'evidence' got up by policemen, and sworn to by paid informers; assuming the justice of a verdict rendered by a packed and paid jury, and a sentence passed by a venal and partial judge, you abuse those who dare to stand up and protest. Do you or your readers 'Remember Orr'? Have you and they forgotten his fate? If they look up his case, and compare with that of the Chicago men, they will find a curious and close parallel. But in Ireland we think Orr a hero; do you? There is nothing in the history of the Chicago affair that cannot be matched with identical happenings in Ireland, which are not thought of with shame. Your line in this matter is that a thousand times taken by the reactionary press there and in this country. It is that of those who called Meagher and John Mitchel 'felons' and talked of the 'righteous doom' of Allan, Larkin, and O'Brien. Such a line is hardly that which one would expect from so 'advanced' an organ as the Star; it unpleasantly recalls that of its forerunner and namesake, which falsified the record of the imprisoned Fenians and suppressed the letters they smuggled out of prison when they were being tortured into madness and death."

Returning to the charge, the Star did as liars are wont to do: it went deeper into the mire, and not only reasserted that the Chicago men "were guilty of inciting to murder," but added that which no one in the wide earth was base enough to say before—that "Lingg handed about his consignment of bombs at their meetings," and that "they shot the policemen before the policemen shot them." The protest of the friends of the condemned against packed juries and a legal murder was called "weak unmanly whining," and the insulting neer showed how much true love of freedom and justice there lay under the shrieking of the Star at what is done in Ireland.

We are always ready to do justice to the Star, and even more than that sometimes; but we would remind it once more of the reparation it owes to four brave men and to those who loved them; a reparation that must be made before its pretensions to speak for them can be half conceded by labour-advocates with long memories. After all, its case is as we pointed out a few weeks ago; it is, like other papers which are run for profit and party warfare, liable to be led astray by the looseness of the journalistic system and the persistent pursuit of low aims.

Like its compeers, it is often cursed with an inability to believe that anybody believes anything, and that so long as a thing "tells," nothing else matters. This infirmity it must conquer if it would continue to lead any large part of the democracy; for "cultivated" scepticism has not yet permeated the masses, and never will. Instead of it there spreads, with ever-increasing rapidity, a belief which, when men hold, they hold with all the strength of their being. This those who would represent them must recognise and take into account.

The days of blind obedience to party leaders and docile swallowing of party lies, are passing away; men reason more than they did, and old shibboleths are losing power. "Justice for Ireland" and a hundred other like things are not enough to stir the blood of workmen nowadays to battle-heat; they are beginning to listen for and follow the slogan of "Justice for ALL!" S.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"SEAFARING."

SIR,—I shall be glad to know if the above journal, which is advertised by you, and was got by me on your recommendation, is endorsed by you in its nefarious action of being printed by non-union men, it being a union organ. If the National Press Agency which prints it is a fair house, and I am mistaken, then it is all right; but what I say is, that no trade-union paper has any call to employ rat printers, and no paper like yours should encourage them to do it. Hoping you will answer at once. Yours, etc.,

RUFFON RATTS.

[We have received other letters to the same effect. If the National Press Agency is not a trades union shop, we agree with our correspondents that it is hardly consistent for the seamen, who have so recently formed their own union, to support it by their printing. We should be sorry to encourage such a proceeding, and have accordingly withdrawn the advertisement for the present, and are making enquiries on the subject. "Fireman" might speak to his local secretary and move in the union itself about the matter. Eds.]

LOOKING FORWARD.

A REPLY TO WILLIAM MORRIS.

Although we must not ignore, but do our level best to overthrow the present embodiment of "the art of establishing the maximum of inequality in our favour," Mr. Morris does well to call for a "moral conscience": the moral must accompany the economic development of the race, and that without its relegation to unconscious evolution, the periodical climax of which is of necessity revolution. We cannot be politically free until we are economically free, and we cannot be economically free until we are morally free; and things that are equal to the same, etc., etc., according to the first proposition of Euclid.

At the same time there are some logical discrepancies with Mr. Morris that I should like to put in relief, noting the while that no writer I have ever consulted has been able to maintain his logical balance throughout; due to the host of phenomena that the finite mind must take in, while being mainly concentrated upon the standpoint and special consideration in hand. The mote, however, in the eyes of each of us need not prevent us from abstracting a similar substance from the eye of our brother, providing the operator has one ocular apparatus unimpaired. Continued, as it has begun, in this spirit, the free discussion may result in an all round improved vision.

The end for all revolutionists is the freedom of the individual; to some it is primary, to others it is secondary; but none dare to ignore it; every formulated system of society contains an endeavour to assure us of its embodiment of the greatest possible amount of individual freedom. Before me I have a work ('Social Architecture,' by an exile from France) which, in the most placid manner, proposes to introduce into its State edifice a regulation "by which all single men and women shall become accustomed to take their seats side by side with each other at the meals, so that every man has a woman as his neighbour at the public table; . . . every alternate chair will be a woman's, easily distinguishable by some peculiar form, size, or inscription." Man's natural rights, however, are no small item with the writer, albeit of noble sentiment and not a little mad.

In like manner, if less glaringly, no sooner does Mr. Morris posit his society in form than he immediately denies it in the content;—I take it he is pleading here for the ideal, the telos, and not for any period of transition; consequently the element of what is usually termed practicability (the compromise of the ideal with supposed exigencies of environment) does not enter. "If freedom from authority means the assertion of the advisability or possibility of an individual man doing what he pleases always and under all circumstances, this is an absolute negation of society, and makes Communism as the highest expression of society impossible; and when you begin to qualify the assertion of the right to do as you please by adding 'as long as you do not interfere with other people's rights to do the same,' the exercise of some kind of authority becomes necessary." Thus, while some individuals will be able to attain an exceedingly high development of the "moral conscience," a development of such perfection as to warrant them in "coercing others not to coerce," the possibility of these others reaching the same moral level is denied. This sentence applied to the semi-moral individual as he exists to-day, contains a plausibility of truth and gives rise to the question as to whether government or liberty is the best condition for the development of the moral sense; to which question, notwithstanding that "La bête n'est par bien loin derrière nous," I answer by all that's Dialectic, Liberty. But applied to the ideal it is exceedingly pessimistic.

"Without a moral conscience there can be no true society." Amen! and if true, with a moral conscience, society is possible, and only by anticipating its insufficiency is a public conscience called for. When everyone is pleased not only to maintain his own liberty, but finds self-satisfaction without overriding the liberty of others, then "the possibility or advisability of an individual man doing what he pleases always and under all circumstances" will be no negation of society, but its constitution. In short, even from the point of view of the authoritarian, the moral conscience denies the necessity of authority, even as authority denies the existence of the moral sense: what one has attained to, all will eventually; while to deny the possibility of any one individual's conception and practice of morality is to deny the right of anyone to govern.

Here it may be mentioned that the whole reasoning depends upon what is conceived as morality, and will be lost or not according to the conception of the ideal. To the State Socialist who conceives of no morality and no society outside of drilled industrial armies of automatic appendages to ponderous fly-wheels, with miles of workshops and numerous other modern aggregations, the conception of all-sufficient morality is more than can be expected, but to many members of the Socialist League it is otherwise. What is morality, and what is a free man?

Let William Morris answer. "Free men, I am sure, must lead simple lives and have simple pleasures; and if we shudder away from that necessity now, it is because we are not free men, and have in consequence wrapped up our lives in such a complexity of dependence that we have grown feeble and helpless. But again, what is simplicity? Do you think by chance that I mean a row of yellow-bricked, blue-slatted houses, or a phalangerie like an improved Peabody lodging-house; and the dinner-bell ringing us into a row of white basins of broth, with a piece of bread cut nice and square by each, with boiler-made tea and ill-boiled rice-pudding to follow? [and the liberty to grumble about it if you like, with the result that you find yourself in possession of the worst cut of beef for a week, and the object of many other particular attentions] No; that's the philanthropist's ideal, not mine; and here I only note it to repudiate it, and to say, Vicarious life once more." Again: "All people should learn one or two elementary arts of life, as carpentry or smithing; and most should know how to shoe a horse, shear a sheep, reap a field, and plough it." 'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished. And when it is consummated every man will scorn to become the slave of another, equally as everyone will scorn to make another his slave; everyone will dwell under his own vine and under his own fig-tree; each will work at his own handicraft, "cajoling none, cheating none," and the snift for surplus-value will be as much a recognised social sin as is theft to-day. With a community of farmers would spring up as many handicraftsmen as would be necessary, and Rent and Interest under such circumstances would not exist; for economic rent would make its exit with other devil-begotten products of modern spread-eagleism. All else would fall in its place. If labour-exchanges will be necessary they would surgissent, and the proprietors would keep each his business within his own power, and no employment of assistants for 30s. per week to earn us £2.

Where then would be any necessity for authority? Co-operation and Communism would then become what alone it can be, to be tolerable to free men, a sentiment and not a necessity, and everyone would be free to enter the association or not. Such a contract must be free or it is no contract, and being free it is not a necessity. That is as far as I can see into a mill-stone; what lies beyond I do not pretend to say. That is society, that is humanity, that for me is the telos, and it is Anarchy.

Bedford.

J. ARMSDEN.

The riveters' strike on the Clyde appears to be serious. About 4,000 men are walking idle; they demand 15 per cent. advance, and are each receiving 10s. weekly from their associations.

The Indiana coal-miners have accepted 20 per cent. reduction in wages. About 4,000 men are affected. The Ohio miners are working at a reduction. The Illinois miners, to the number of 5,000, are still out on strike, awaiting events, and about the same number are out in the vicinity of Pittsburgh.

HENRY GEORGE IN MANCHESTER.—The unprincipled "prophet" of San Francisco addressed a meeting of the Financial Reform Association in the Free Trade Hall on 21st May. His subject was announced to be "How to get rid of our Slums"; written questions sent up to chairman would be answered by the "prophet" at close. Our branch turned up in force, and kept the audience in good humour by singing a number of Socialist songs, which were received with hearty applause, until the platform orators arrived. From these gentlemen we heard that the slums were to be got rid of by shifting the taxes off tea, coffee, gold and silver plate, house property, and incomes, and placing them on the rent of land. The "great taxation reformer" began by informing us he was a Home Ruler and an American (what a coincidence!), and seemed to imagine he had a talisman in the names of Richard Cobden and Free Trade with which to play upon the sentiments of the Manchester folk whom he had before him. However, he had miscalculated its oracular effects, as the audience soon became a diminishing quantity. The amount of flimsy, albeit dramatic, rhetorical effervescence which he unburdened himself of, in place of arguments, to support his patent quack poverty-cure, exceeded anything his fiercest opponents could have attributed to this versatile Yankee. To those who had known or heard him in the earlier days before he had deserted the people and become a party politician and stump orator for Radical capitalists, the man's present moral and intellectual degeneracy is pitiable to behold. A number of questions, including some anent the Anarchist martyrs, were sent up by our members. In the face of announcements around platform and walls inviting questions, the chairman (Provand, M.P.) coolly informed the audience that it was too late to answer any questions, as Mr. George had to return to London! Determined action on our part compelled the "prophet" to get up and attempt some answering, but the principal questions were not read out, nor could the chairman be induced to do so. The American Home Ruler denounced the use of force as a means to any political or social change. At the same time, our party was only saved from forcible expulsion because it was found too numerous for a successful exhibition of force from the other side. Moral: Always denounce the use of force by your opponents, but fail not to use it wherever you believe it can be successful. The meeting ended by our giving three cheers for the social revolution.—WM. BAILIE.

THE LABOUR STRUGGLE.

BRITAIN.

The miners at Manver's Main Colliery have decided to demand the full 10 per cent. advance.

About 200 men employed at the Haigh Moor Colliery, Altofts, have come out on strike in consequence of changes in the working arrangements of the mine.

The rivet makers of the Staffordshire and East Worcestershire districts, numbering between two and three thousand, gave notice of 10 per cent. advance last Saturday.

The Belfast carters have made an earnest appeal to the Scottish trades' societies for assistance in the matter of forming a union in Belfast. The women linen workers have also made a like application.

The counter-sinkers employed in the principal shipbuilding yards in the Hartlepool district struck last week for an advance of one penny per plate. Their action has thrown idle nearly the whole of the riveters in the same yards.

Five hundred colliers have struck work at Aberavon, in the Aberdare Valley, South Wales, in consequence of a dispute with the employers as to the timbering of roadways in the mine. The masters suggested arbitration, but the men declined it.

At a meeting of the South Staffordshire and Worcestershire Miners Wages Board, held at Dudley, it was decided to accept the 5 per cent. advance in wages offered by the employers, who contended that the increase of 10 per cent. asked by the colliers would ruin trade. A strike has thus been averted.

The pony drivers employed at the Denaby Main Colliery have tendered a fortnight's notice to leave work, which will expire on the 5th of June. If the action is persisted in, 1,500 miners will be thrown out of work. The drivers number about 200, and they say that unless they receive the full 10 per cent. advance they will not resume work.

NORTH WALES QUARRYMEN'S UNION.—The 15th annual meeting of this society took place last Saturday at Waenfawr, near Carnarvon. The report showed that 1888 was a year of great depression, and it was said that 1889 was little better. In the evening a public meeting was held, at which a paper was read on "The Necessity for Combination and Mutual Understanding among Workmen," and a resolution passed in favour of placing the slate quarries under government inspection.

HORSENAIL MAKERS.—The horsenail makers in the South Staffordshire and East Worcestershire districts have come out on strike for an advance of 3d. per thousand in wages. The operatives are in a deplorable state of poverty through being unable to earn more than 9s. a-week. The employers unanimously agree that the wages are simply scandalous, but they are unable to improve their workmen's condition owing to the importation of machine-made nails from Belgium and Sweden. The men state they will not resume work until better wages are paid.

WELSH TIN-PLATE WORKERS.—After a strike extending over three months, the tin-plate workers at the Worcester and Upper Forest Works, Glamorgan-shire, numbering 1,000 hands, resumed labour last week. It is estimated that about £10,000 in wages has been lost. An agreement has been drawn up by the arbitrators that the employers undertake to pay the usual rate of wages, according to the scale of 1874, and that future cases of difference between masters and men be referred to the arbitrators, whose decision shall be final. These conditions are accepted by the tin-plate owners and their employes.

ARMY ACCOUTREMENT MAKERS.—On Saturday, the men on strike from Colonel Wallace's Army Accoutrement Factory, Great Dover Street, Borough, met at the Military Harness and Accoutrement Trade Society's house, Old Kent Road, to discuss their position. The men struck owing to a refusal to pay the price fixed for making valises on a contract for the government. The Director-General of Contracts, in his evidence before the Sweating Commission, stated that 6d. extra had been added to the contract price for the benefit of the worker, but only 2½d. of that amount had been paid the men on each valise. Failing to obtain the remainder the men, after making 10,000 out of 16,000 valises, struck. Colonel Wallace has threatened to give the rest of the work to outdoor hands, but if this be done the terms of his contract will be violated, as the work must be done on the premises. The men are determined to hold out, and a sum of £10 towards their support has been voted them by the London Saddle and Harness Makers' Trade Protection Society.

WAGES IN THE COAL TRADE.—The men at the Northumberland soft-coal collieries have accepted 2½ per cent. advance. They had asked for an advance of 7 per cent., to place them on a level with the steam-coal collieries. The steam-coal miners, who were advanced a few months ago to rather more than the rate of wages before the reduction in 1887, are applying for a 10 per cent. advance. The Durham miners will formulate a demand for a 20 per cent. advance in a few days. On Saturday a special council meeting of the Yorkshire Miners' Association was held at the Miners' Hall, Barnsley, to consider the masters' offer of 5 per cent. advance on July 1st, and 5 per cent. on October 1st, with an agreement that neither party should seek to alter the existing rate of wages, which should prevail for twelve months from the 1st of October next. The interest of the meeting was heightened by the fact that many of the largest voting collieries in South Yorkshire had sent their delegates to vote in favour of demanding the full 10 per cent. advance on the 1st of July, in accordance with the resolutions come to at the recent National Miners' Conference held at Nottingham. The lodges which were pledged to the rejection of the masters' offer as presented included Manvers Main, Wath Main, Mitchell's Main, Darfield Main, Shire-oaks, and others. The question gave rise to an animated discussion. Ultimately the following resolution was carried by a slight majority of votes: "That this council, whilst it cannot see its way to accept to the full the coalowners' offer, at the same time can, with the consent of the Manchester Conference, agree to accept the coalowners' offer of 5 per cent. on July 1 and a second 5 per cent. on the 1st of October, 1889." The Council declined to advise the men to enter into an agreement which would prevent them asking for a further advance of wages for twelve months from the 1st of October as desired by the coalowners. The next step was to lay the resolution before the National Conference, which met in Manchester on Tuesday, called solely for the purpose of considering the Yorkshire owners' offer and the result of the miners' votes in Yorkshire. The discussion on the matter is still proceeding as we go to press.

IN THE UNITED STATES.

THE State of Maine seems to be desirous to distinguish itself by abnormal legislation, abnormal even in capitalistic society. The "tramp law" I described some weeks ago, and it seems that this is not the only enactment which may be called atrocious. A "hawker and pedlar law" has also been the production of the legislature of this State, which will come into effect on July 15th. Petitions are already in circulation asking the Governor of Maine to direct the sheriffs not to enforce the law, on the ground that it is "inhuman, unjust, unreasonable, and unconstitutional," but of course they will have no effect. Under this law street hucksters and pedlars of foreign nationality are barred from selling their goods, as licenses are only to be issued to "citizens," and even they are prohibited to sell any other goods but those grown or manufactured in the United States. The law was passed at the instance of the city tradesmen. Go on, Maine, you are on the right road to beat New Jersey or even Illinois as regards "beneficial legislation!"

The Senate Committee on general laws of the Legislature of New York, has reported the result of its investigations into the methods of trusts and combinations. The majority of the committee hold that "legislation is not required to check the evil; that the more is known of trusts the less they are feared; that it is a growing sentiment that the evils of which they are the cause are short-lived; that trusts are the result of a natural law which, while it might be advantageous to the people to subject it (who, the natural law?) to reasonable artificial restraint, still exists, like all natural laws, for some useful purpose, and its total destruction would be a great calamity." The minority report criticises the trusts in strong language, and declares that the only safeguard of the people against them is an "upright judiciary and incorruptible administrative officers." An upright judiciary and incorruptible administrative officers is good, very good; but where are they to be found? In the fair land of Mars, I suppose. On the whole, as the saying goes, betwixt twiddledum and twiddledee, etc. The simplest way to abolish the evil would be, of course, to make the trust property common property, but our legislators don't and can't like simple ways. They are paid not to.

The Malthusians have found a terrible antagonist in Duluth, Dak. There the proprietor of a great broom factory has increased the wages of all his married employes, and has also given notice to the single men that they will not be wanted after the end of this month unless they were married by that time, on which event they would keep their places at increased pay. Evidently this philanthropist desires to keep up a good supply of "free labour." But can this kind of marriage be called a free contract?

The Standard Oil Trust seems to have as great a power to swallow and digest well property as ever the Church did possess. This monster monopoly, not content to own and control the production, the carrying, and the refining business of oil, is stretching its greedy hands out for more. During the last week it has bought, at the enormous price of over one million sterling, the St. Louis Gas Trust and also the White Lead Trust. Pretty soon, I presume, everything and everybody over here will be the property of the Standard Oil Trust.

The three great steel manufacturing concerns of Illinois have amalgamated. The capital stock of the new corporation amounts to five million pounds, and it constitutes the largest combination of steel interests in America.

A new party has been formed in Boston on socialistic principles—the Nationalist Party. Edward Bellamy, who is 'Looking Backward,' and L. Gronlund, who is 'Marching Backward,' are the leading spirits. The name "Socialism" is too ferocious for these gentlemen, so they prefer to style their "Socialism" as "Nationalism." They also do not like the term "Collective ownership of the means of production." They rather prefer to call it "Monopoly." It seems that the amount of confused notions which most people have when hearing or reading something about Socialism is not sufficient for these humanitarians; they desire to add their share to the confusion. Now, can any sane person believe that we make our ideas more palatable or more clear by terming them "Nationalism and Monopoly," and ourselves "Nationalists and Monopolists" (sic)? Why, its absurd on the face of it! The Nationalist is the organ of the new party, and the paper will soon make its appearance.

To-day another new party will be born in Boston: the Christian Socialists. We are getting on, and soon the babylonian confusion about Socialistic parties will be as great in America as it is in France. Well, we may as well go the whole gamut, but I pity the poor individual who undertakes to study Socialism. Why, to find out the meaning of the word "capital" alone, it is necessary to spend in serious investigation and reading up half a lifetime, and after having achieved so much, the poor student still finds himself confronted by the platforms of about fifty different parties, all labelled Socialistic and something else, who assail each other most vigorously and call each other bad names. Why, indeed, ye gods, can't we do without this babble!

A number of Irish-Americans have for a long time been considering the question how they might help in a lasting way the evicted tenants in Ireland, and they have come to the conclusion that the best aid would be of an industrial character. The idea is to establish in one of the poorest districts of Ireland a factory in which evicted tenants could find employment. The scheme has in it features of a colonisation character. The people at present interested propose to incorporate a stock company, selling the shares in all parts of the United States where there are natives of Ireland or friends of the Nationalist cause. To instruct the previous agriculturists in factory work a party composed of about fifty men, some skilled mechanics, some good workmen, and some who have a good all round knowledge, would be sent over to Ireland. It is proposed to manufacture boots and shoes, clothing and underwear. The scheme will be submitted to Parnell, Davitt, and O'Brien. What it really amounts to is, introducing the "benefits" and the "blessings" of the factory system into the green island. Considering what the factory system implies, we may well exclaim, "God save us from the philanthropists; we can deal ourselves with the enemies of humanity."

Suicides are terribly on the increase. On one day, May 11th, not less than seven persons in New York City "removed" themselves from this world to a better sphere.

The St. Paul, Minn., street-car men's strike was declared off. It was a failure, the men accepted a reduction.

A material reduction in the wages of the green-glass bottle blowers is set down for September 1st. Nothing like a good long notice.

About 1,200 men are reported discharged in the Pullman Car works near Chicago, owing to slack trade.

Strikes reported since 1st May, 27. Number of strikers, 20,322.

Boston, Mass., May 14, 1889.

HENRY F. CHARLES.

THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

OFFICES: 13 FARRINGTON ROAD, E.C.

The Offices of the Socialist League will be open for the sale of Commonweal and all other Socialist publications from 8.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday. The Secretary will be in attendance from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Executive.—At the last meeting of the Executive, a letter was read from comrade Lafargue to the effect that Branches of the S.L. are entitled to send delegates to the International Socialist Congress at Paris in July next. Letters were also read from Provincial Branches asking for assistance in the matter of speakers; comrade Mowbray was deputed to go to Norwich. Other answers deferred.

London Members' Meeting.—The next monthly meeting of members will take place on Monday, June 3, 1889, at 13 Farringdon Road, at 9 o'clock sharp.

Commonweals for 1888, handsomely bound in red, are now ready, price 5s. per post, 5s. 6d.

Annual Conference.—The Annual Conference will be held on Whit-Sunday, June 9th, at 13, Farringdon Road. Agenda has been sent to Branches.

Branch Subscriptions Paid.—1888:—Oxford, to end of September. 1889:—Mitcham, to end of February. North London, and St. Georges East, to end of March. Bradford, Hammersmith, and Leicester, to end of April. East London, Manchester, and Yarmouth, to end of May. Clerkenwell, to end of June.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.—Please remit to Central Office your Branch Capitation fees as soon as possible.

Defence Committee (Berner Street).—Norwich, 2s.; Whatnough (Plumstead), 1s.; W. W., 1s.; Sheet 34A, 6½d.

Notice.—All letters on League business, except those intended for Editors of Commonweal, to be addressed to me. No other person is authorised to sign any official communication. FRANK KITZ, Secretary.

"COMMONWEAL" GUARANTEE FUND.

The following further sums have been received towards this fund:—Blundell, 6d.; R. Turner, 6d.; J. Turner, 6d.; Kitz, 6d.; Rose, 6d.; B. W., 6d.; W. W., 1s. 6d.; Davis, 6d.; Mrs. Schack, 1s.; and C. Saunders, 1s. Norwich, 1s.

Guarantors of Provincial Branches are requested to send up their lists at once.

REPORTS.

LONDON OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.—Canterbury Road—A short meeting was held here by Mainwaring and Brookes on Sunday last. Hyde Park—Mainwaring, Brookes, and Hunter Watts (S.D.F.) spoke here to very good audience despite the weather. Battersea—A good meeting was held between Christ's Church and York Road on Saturday night; speakers were Kitz, Mowbray, and Samuels; attentive audience; 27 Commonweal sold. These meetings will be carried on regularly, as there are good signs of a branch being formed here. Mile End Waste—Last Saturday night a very good meeting was addressed by Cores and Brookes; opposition was offered by one of the "dear friends" of Lord Salisbury; 18 Commonweal sold. Gibraltar Walk—Good meeting on Sunday morning; speakers were Parker and Mrs. Schack; fair sale of Commonweal.

CLERKENWELL.—The debate which should have taken place on Sunday evening, "Is a Government Necessary during a Revolutionary Crisis?" between F. Charles (negative) and D. Nicoll (affirmative) did not come off. D. Nicoll partly delivered affirmative, with discussion to follow by audience, as Charles was at Merton. Charles returned by close of discussion, which he renewed in the negative, hoping that at an early date he should be able to fully debate the subject with Nicoll, which will be duly announced.—S. P.

EAST LONDON.—On Sunday, W. Mowbray lectured on "Socialism and Party Politics." Good discussion.

HAMMERSMITH.—Good meeting at Latimer Road on Sunday morning; speakers were Dean, Tochatti, Lyne, sen., Lyne, jun., Crouch, and Maughan. We had Curate No. 2 from St. Clement's, Nottingdale; he told the audience that he was in agreement with a great deal we had said, but thought the land was better under landlords than the way we advocated, viz., the people to be the sole owners; 43 Commonweal sold. Very good meeting at Weltje Road in evening; speakers were Crouch, Dean, and Bullock; 7 Weals sold. In evening at Kelmscott House, Ernest Radford lectured on "Walt Whitman."

MITCHAM.—Good meeting on Fair Green, addressed by Kitz and Cores; 8d. collected for local propaganda; 16 Commonweal sold. In the evening we assisted on new ground at Streatham.—S. G.

ABERDEEN.—At weekly indoor meeting on May 20th. "Mr. Barton's Sermon" in "Looking Backward" was read and discussed. At Castle Street on Saturday night, Duncan and Leatham addressed a large and enthusiastic crowd. A number of questions were disposed of at close.—L.

GLASGOW.—On Sunday, Adams, McCulloch, Tim Burgoyne, and Glasier went to Blantyre, where a meeting of miners was called on the Show Ground. The meeting was somewhat small at first, but latterly some 200 to 250 persons were present. Comrade Small (miner's agent), Glasier, and Tim Burgoyne addressed the meeting, explaining at length the aims of Socialism, and at the conclusion hearty cheers were given for the speakers. Some 50 Commonweal (all we had with us) were sold as quickly as they could be handed out, and also other literature. We have arranged to visit Blantyre again in a month. Members are requested to note change of address in notice column.

LEICESTER.—Sunday last we began open-air propaganda. Peacock (Nottingham) addressed us on "Shams and Monopolies, how to abolish them." Fair audience for a beginning, considering weather and Leicesterian temperament; we sold about 2s. 6d. worth of literature; audience interested and attentive, and put sensible questions at close. Doleman, late secretary of S.L. in Nottingham, has settled among us and is stirring us up. We are arranging for open-air addresses from John Burns, Cunningham Graham, and others, and think we can make the open-air meetings a great success this season.—T. B.

MANCHESTER.—Good meeting Saturday night at Middleton; Leonard Hall, Marshall, and Bailie were speakers; 27 Commonweal sold. In Stevenson Square on Sunday afternoon, Barton, Ritson, Bailie, and Marshall spoke; Weals sold out, also some other literature; Socialist songs were sung. At 7.30, another meeting on Chester Road, Marshall, Barton, Bailie, and Parkinson speakers; a few pamphlets sold.

YARMOUTH.—Another good meeting at Belton on Monday; we intend going every Monday evening. Two meetings at Priory Plain on Sunday, Ruffold and Reynolds speakers. Brightwell held meeting at Bradwell, a village about four miles from Yarmouth, on Sunday morning; sold 5 Weals and announced another meeting for next Sunday; 3s. collected.—C. R.

DUBLIN.—At Progressist Club, 87, Marlboro' Street, May 25th, comrade Smith (late of the Clerkenwell Branch S.D.F.) lectured to a fair audience on "Poverty, its Cause and Cure." There was a good discussion, King, Coulon, and Fuzell taking part.

NOTTINGHAM SOCIALIST CLUB.—Good meeting in Great Market Place on Sunday; Rooke and Proctor spoke on "The International Solidarity of the Workers." At branch meeting at the club afterwards, five new members were made and satisfactory progress reported.—R. P.

LECTURE DIARY.

LONDON.

Clerkenwell.—Hall of the Socialist League, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C. (½ minute from Farringdon Station, 1 minute from Holborn Viaduct). On Sunday June 2, at 8 p.m. sharp, lecture by Rev. Stewart Headlam, "Christian Socialism."

East London.—Crown Coffee Tavern, 2 Columbia Road, Hackney Road. Sunday June 2, Business Meeting at 7 o'clock. At 8.30, G. G. Schaack, "How Women can Help the Socialist Movement."

Hammersmith.—Kelmscott House, Upper Mall, W. Sunday June 2, at 8 p.m., A Lecture. Thursday 6th, at 7.30, Choir practice. Friday 7th, at 8 p.m., French Class; at 8.30 sharp, Business Meeting and discussion.

Mitcham.—3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Meets every Sunday, at 11 a.m.

North London.—6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Rd. Meets every Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Whitechapel and St. Georges in the East.—Branch meetings at International Club, 40 Berner Street, Commercial Road. J. Turner, organising secretary.

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Oddfellows' Small Hall, Crooked Lane.

Bradford.—Laycock's Temperance Hotel, Albion Court, Kirkgate. Tuesday at 7.30.

Glasgow.—The Branch will meet temporarily in the Ram's Horn Assembly Hall, Ingram Street, every Thursday and Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, and on Sunday evenings at 7 o'clock. All communications to be addressed to above Hall.

Leeds.—Clarendon Buildings, Victoria Road and Front Row. Open every evening. Business meeting Saturdays at 8 p.m.

Leicester.—Hosiery Union Offices, 11a Millstone Lane. Fridays at 8 p.m.

Manchester.—Working Men's Educational Club, 122 Corporation Street.

Norwich.—Gordon Hall, Duke Street.

Oxford.—Temperance Hall, 25½ Pembroke Street. Wednesdays, at 8.30 p.m.

Walsall.—Lecture Room, back of Temperance Hall. Mondays at 8 p.m.

Yarmouth.—"Three Fishes" Coffee Tavern, North Howard Street. Business meeting every Tuesday evening. Elocution Class at comrade Hadley's every Friday at 8 p.m. Commonweal sold by Mr. Hous, newsagent, George Street.

FRIENDS WILLING TO AID in forming Branches in the undermentioned places are asked to write to the addresses given: Liverpool—W. H. Chapman, Vegetarian Restaurant, 1 Chapman St. Walworth and Camberwell—3 Datchelor Place, Church Street, Camberwell Green. Wimbledon and Merton—F. Kitz, 3 Clare Villas, Merton Road. Hoxton—H. D. Morgan, 12 Basing Place, Kingsland Road. Streatham—J. Campbell, 98 Wellfield Road, Streatham.

OPEN-AIR PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY 1.

7 Hyde Park Nicoll, Brookes, and Graham
8 Battersea—opposite Christ Church Kitz, Samuels, and Parker
8 Mile-end Waste Davis and Cores

SUNDAY 2.

10.30..... Latimer Road Station G. Spooner, Lyne senr, and Dean
11.30..... Bethnal Green—Gibraltar Walk Davis, Mrs. Schack, and Graham
11.30..... Hammersmith—Beadon Road Hammersmith Branch
11.30..... Kilburn Road—"Canterbury Arms" Mainwaring
11.30..... Leman Street, Shadwell Cores and Turner
11.30..... Mitcham Fair Green Kitz and Parker
11.30..... Regent's Park Nicoll and Mrs. Lahr
3.30..... Hyde Park Cores and Nicoll
3.30..... Victoria Park Demonstration
7 Clerkenwell Green Cores and Graham
7 Weltje Road, Ravenscourt Park Hammersmith Branch
7.30..... Mitcham Fair Green The Branch
7.30..... Streatham—Fountain, High Street Kitz and Parker

TUESDAY 4.

8 Fulham—back of Walham Green Church The Branch

THURSDAY 6.

8 Ossulton Street Parker and Nicoll
8.15..... Hoxton Church Kitz, Mowbray, and Davis

PROVINCES.

Aberdeen.—Saturday: Castle Street, 7.30 p.m.

Edinburgh.—Sunday: Queen's Park, at 3.

Glasgow.—Sunday: Jail Square at 2 o'clock; Paisley Road at 5 o'clock.

Leeds.—Sunday: Hunslet Moor, at 11 a.m.; Vicar's Croft, at 7 p.m.

Leicester.—Sunday: Russell Square, at 11 a.m.; Humberstone Gate, at 8 p.m.

Manchester.—Outdoor meetings every Sunday. Stevenson Square at 3 p.m.

Viaduct, Chester Road, at 7.30.

Yarmouth.—Priory Plain, every Sunday at 11 and 3. A Meeting at Belton every Monday evening.

SCOTTISH LAND AND LABOUR LEAGUE.

Carnoustie.—Meets every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., in the Carnoustie Restaurant.

Dundee.—Meetings every Sunday in Trades Hall, opposite Tay Bridge Station.

Edinburgh.—35 George IV. Bridge. Meetings for Discussion, Thursdays at 8.

Galashiels.—J. Walker, 184 Glendinning Terrace, Secretary. Gallatown and Dysart (Fife)—Meet every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Gallatown Public School. A.

Paterson, 152 Rosslyn Street, Secretary. Kilmarnock.—Branch meets on every alternate Tuesday. H. M'Gill, 22 Gilmour Street, Secretary. West Calder.—Robert Lindsay, West Calder, Secretary.

SOUTHWARK AND LAMBETH BRANCH S.D.F., North Lambeth Radical Club, 108 Westminster Bridge Road, S.E.—On Tuesday June 4, at 8.30, William Morris will lecture on "Monopoly."

NEW LABOUR CLUB, 5 Victoria Park Square.—Thursday June 6th, F. Kitz, "The Criminal Classes, High and Low."

FERNDALE LIBERAL AND RADICAL CLUB, 35 Bedford Road, Brixton.—Thursday June 6, at 8.30, Mr. Harold Cox, "Practicable Socialism."

CLUB AUTONOME, 6 Windmill Street, Tottenham Court Road, W.—Sunday June 2, 8 p.m., a lecture by comrade Humphreys, "Revolutionary Warfare."

HATCHAM LIBERAL CLUB, Portland House, New Cross Road.—Sunday June 2, at 8.30, George Bernard Shaw, "Practicable Socialism."

On Whit-Monday, June 10.

HALL OF THE SOCIALIST LEAGUE, 13 Farringdon Road.—A Grand CONCERT and BALL will be held on Whit-Monday, June 10th, for the benefit of the Propaganda Fund. The following comrades will sing and recite: W. Morris, W. Blundell, Annie Taylor, J. Turner, Miss Emily Fisher, Fred White, F. Kitz, C. W. Mowbray, D. Nicoll, J. Presburg, Mrs. Tochatti, T. Cantwell, A. Brookes, and others. DRAMATIC SKETCH by Darwood and Jeffries. To conclude with a Ball. Admission by Programme, 6d., to be obtained at branches of the League, the International clubs, and of the Secretary, 13 Farringdon Road.

SOCIALIST LEAGUE PUBLICATIONS.

- Chants for Socialists. By William Morris. . 1d
Organised Labour: The Duty of the Trades' Unions in Relation to Socialism. By Thomas Binning (London Society of Compositors). . 1d.
The Commune of Paris. By E. Belfort Bax, Victor Dave, and William Morris. . 2d.
The Aims of Art. By Wm. Morris. Bijou edition, 2d.; Large paper, 3d.
The Rights of Labour according to John Ruskin. By Thomas Barclay. . 1d
The Tables Turned; or, Nupkins Awakened. A Socialist Interlude. By William Morris. In Wrapper . 4d.
The Manifesto of the Socialist League. Annotated by E. Belfort Bax and William Morris. An exposition of the principles on which the League is founded. . 1d.
True and False Society. By Wm. Morris. . 1d.
Useful Work v. Useless Toil. By William Morris. . 1d.
"Vive la Commune!" Cartoon by Walter Crane. Best paper. . 2d.
Mrs. Grundy (Cartoon). By Walter Crane. Fine hand-made large paper. . 6d.

SPECIAL PRICES FOR REMAINDERS.

ALL FOR THE CAUSE.

By W. MORRIS, with Music by E. B. BAX
Threepence.

AIMS OF ART.

By W. MORRIS. On good paper.
Twopence.

The above will be sent on receipt of stamps by Secretary, Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

F. KITZ,

MERTON CLUB HOUSE, 3 CLARE VILLAS, MERTON ROAD (near High St., Merton, S.W.).

Agent for Socialistic and advanced Literature for Wimbledon, Merton, and neighbourhood.

All orders promptly executed. Commonweal and Australian Radical on sale.

ARBEJDEREN

("The Worker")

DANISH SOCIALIST WEEKLY.

Edited and published by NICOLAJ PETERSEN and GERSON TRIER.

Subscription 3s. a-year.

Nansensgade 28A, Copenhagen.

VIVE LA COMMUNE!

A CARTOON BY WALTER CRANE.

PRINTED ON FINE PAPER, FOR FRAMING.

Size, 14 inches by 10.

Price Twopence.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

J. SKETCHLEY'S PUBLICATIONS.

299 SHALESMOOR, SHEFFIELD.

Social Science (New York). Containing splendid full-page Portraits of the eight Chicago Anarchists, with good Biographical Notices of each. 1 copy by post, 3d.; 3 copies, 8d.; 6, 1s. 3d.; 12, 2s. 4d.; 24, 4s. 9d.

The Workman's Question: WHY HE IS POOR. 24 pp., in Wrapper. Price Twopence. 6 or more copies post free. 50, post free, 6s. 100, post free, 11s.

A Review of European Society. With an Exposition and Vindication of the Principles of Social Democracy. By J. SKETCHLEY. An Introduction by WILLIAM MORRIS. 240 pp., post free 1s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 2s. 3d.

The Irish Question. Third Edition. 32 pages, in Wrapper. Price Threepence. 6 or more copies post free

CHEAP EDITION.

NEW ISSUE. NOW READY.

The Chicago Martyrs:

Containing the Speeches of the Men, an Abstract of the Record of the Trial, and a Brief Introduction. With Portraits.

3d.

A. R. PARSONS'

BOOK ON

ANARCHISM:

Its Philosophy and Scientific Basis.

English and German Editions now ready.

PRICES: Handsomely Bound in Cloth and Gilt, 4s. Paper Covers, 2s.—post free.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Rd., London, E.C.

IRISH MINSTRELSY:

Being a selection of

IRISH SONGS, LYRICS, AND BALLADS.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by

H. HALLIDAY SPARLING.

Enlarged and Revised Edition, with Cover designed by MAY MORRIS.

Royal 8vo, 516 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

Walter Scott, Warwick Lane, E.C.

FREIHEIT

INTERNATIONAL ORGAN OF THE GERMAN-SPEAKING ANARCHISTS.

EDITED BY JOHN MOST.

Subscription, 2s. per quarter; under cover, 4s.

John Müller, Post Office Box 3135, New York, U.S.A., or Office of Commonweal.

NOTICE.

Subscribers who find a red mark against this notice are thereby reminded that their subscriptions have expired and must be renewed immediately if they wish to continue to receive Commonweal.

THE REVOLUTIONARY REVIEW.

PRICE 3D. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, 2S. 6D.

The Revolutionary Review wages war with the government of man by man and the exploitation of man by man, and champions the cause of individual liberty in all the relations of life.

HENRY SEYMOUR, Publisher, 35 Newington Green Road, London, N.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIALISM MADE PLAIN.

By FRANK FAIRMAN.

Socialism as it is—The Moral Basis—The Economic Basis—Current Fallacies—Objections—Quack Remedies for Poverty—Methods and Future, etc.

With Preface written by WILLIAM MORRIS.

PRICE 1s.

COMMONWEAL OFFICE, 13 FARRINGDON ROAD, E.C.

ANTI-STATIST COMMUNIST MANIFESTO.

BY JOSEPH LANE.

PRICE ONE PENNY, or 9d. per dozen.

Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.; or 38 Ainsley Street, Bethnal Green.

DER ARME TEUFEL.

EDITED BY ROBERT REITZEL.

Offices: 6 Champlain Street, Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Subscription, 2 dols. 50 c. yearly.

SOCIALIST LEAFLETS.

Single page, 8vo size, 2s. per thousand.

Why be Transported?

"Down with the Socialists!"

The cause of Prostitution.

The Workers' Claims and "Public Opinion."

Tramcar Slavery.

Shall Ireland be Free?

Ireland a Nation.

Songs for the Workers.

The Skeleton or Starvation Army.

Single page, 4to size, 3s. per thousand.

To Working Women and Girls.

Strikes and the Labour Struggle.

The Liberty and Property Defence League.

The Doctrines of the Communists (2 leaflets).

Labour is the source of all Wealth.

2 pages 8vo, 3s. per thousand.

What Socialists Want.

4 pages 8 vo, 4s. per thousand.

A Straight Talk to Working Men.

These Leaflets, at prices given above, can be had from the Commonweal manager in any quantities by Branches, members, or sympathisers, for distribution, 13 Farringdon Road, E.C.

WORKS OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

Just Published, square crown 8vo, 200 pp., 6s.

A TALE OF THE HOUSE OF THE WOLFINGS, and all the Kindreds of the Mark. Written in Prose and Verse.

Library Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE: A Poem in four parts.

The Vols. separately as below—

Vols. I. and II., SPRING AND SUMMER, ninth ed. 16s.
 Vol. III., AUTUMN . . . seventh edition 12s.
 Vol. IV., WINTER . . . seventh edition 12s

Popular Edition of

THE EARTHLY PARADISE, in 10 parts, 12mo, at 2s. 6d. each.

ditto ditto in 5 vols., at 5s. each.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 382 pp., 14s.

THE ÆNEIDS OF VIRGIL. Done into English verse.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, 217 pp., 4s. 6d.

HOPES AND FEARS FOR ART. Five Lectures delivered in Birmingham, London, etc., in 1878-1881.

Second Edition, square crown 8vo, 450 pp., 6s. 6d.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Done into English verse.

Crown 8vo, 248 pp., 8s.

THE DEFENCE OF GUENEVERE, and other Poems. Reprinted without alteration from the Edition of 1858.

Eighth Edition, Cr. 8vo, 376 pp., revised by the Author, 8s.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JASON: A Poem.

Fourth Edition, 345 pp., sq. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF SIGURD THE VOLSUNG, and the Fall of the Niblungs.

Third Edition sq. Crown 8vo, 134 pp., 7s. 6d. With design on side in gold.

LOVE IS ENOUGH, or the Freeing of Pharamond. A Morality.

Square 12mo, 148 pp., 4s. 6d.

A DREAM OF JOHN BALL and A KING'S LESSON. With an Illustration by EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

Recently published, post 8vo, 202 pp., 4s. 6d.

SIGNS OF CHANGE. Seven Lectures delivered on various occasions.

How we Live and How we Might Live; Whigs, Democrats, and Socialists; Feudal England; The Hopes of Civilisation; The Aims of Art; Useful Work versus Useless Toil; Dawn of a new Epoch.

REEVES AND TURNER, 196 Strand, London, W.C.

THE AUSTRALIAN RADICAL

Advocate of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity
New Lambton Road, Hamilton, Australia.

Organ of the Australian Socialist League.

May be had at the Commonweal Office, 13 Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

1½d. per copy; 1s. 6d. per quarter, post free.

Printed and Published by WILLIAM MORRIS and JOSEPH LANE at 13 Farringdon Road, London

THE COMMONWEALTH

The Official Journal of the SOCIALIST LEAGUE.

[REGISTERED FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.]

VOL. 5.—No. 178.

SATURDAY, JUNE 8, 1889.

WEEKLY; ONE PENNY.

NOTES ON NEWS.

THE Royal Duke and the policeman have escaped all possibility of fine or imprisonment for assaulting Mr. Simms. We know by experience that the policeman at least had nothing to fear from a magistrate, even if he had gone to much greater lengths than the collaring of an innocent citizen for the crime of being hustled by a member of the royal family. Yet it was, no doubt, an advantage to him to be in the company of an "August Personage."

Imagination will run away with one in picturing the fun that a person might have, who had a turn for a spree without disagreeable consequences, if he could only secure the co-operation at one and the same time of a member of the royal family and a member of the metropolitan police force. They might have adventures which would quite throw into the shade those of the famous trio—the Caliph Haroun Alraschid, Giaffar the Vizier, and Mesrour the executioner. Indeed, those worthies sometimes got into awkward corners in the course of their sprees; whereas the modern lot would only have to declare themselves in order to walk off with honour and dignity. We get on fast, don't we, in these days of absolute equality before the law?

It is difficult to treat such a matter seriously, and Mr. Simms has only been treated rudely, instead of being wounded first and sent to prison as a plaster for the wound, as many of our friends have been; and yet we cannot help feeling a sense of fresh degradation at such an exhibition of servility to a testy old martinet as the police-courts have given us, in the teeth of all the lying bluster about our freedom and our equality before the law. A Socialist indeed may say that it is not worth while considering such a trifling nuisance as a monarch and a royal family, when we have the real practical whip of capitalism flourished daily over our heads; but we must not forget that this gilded sham of a relic of feudalism, which was once powerful for good and evil, does now represent nothing but that very tyranny of the commercial master and slave-driver, and the executive power which keeps him in his place. It is a significant symbol of our false society that the Duke of Cambridge, the policeman, and the magistrate have been yokefellows in this shabby business.

A vice-consul in Serbia has been telling us that the very simple method of competition which consists of pirating trade-marks, has been damaging British trade in that country. Hats made of brown paper, knives that wouldn't cut, shirtings half made of starch which disappeared on the first washing, etc., have been sold as British goods. Well, well, Serbia is an out-of-the-way place, and possibly traditions of the excellence and honesty of British manufactures linger there, and so we may suppose that this legitimate means of competition, as John Bright would have considered it, may be effective there; but we who live in this great centre of civilisation would be inclined to think that the pirate had thrown away his industry; for in some branches at least it would be difficult to surpass British skill in adulteration; as, for example, in the weighting of cotton cloths with that useful creature, sulphate of barytes—not starch, my consular friend,—a glorious invention of England within the last few years; and there are many such-like inventions.

The correspondence between Mr. Henry George and our friend Cunninghame Graham in the Star, has settled down on the pros and cons concerning competition. Mr. George need hardly have told us that he is in favour of competition, indeed we know that he is prepared to hang people who are engaged in trying to abolish it. Cunninghame Graham, on the other hand, says that Socialists are trying to abolish it; and surely he is right in saying so. Competition will be impossible under genuine Socialism—or let us call it Communism, since all Socialists who know what their aim is know that they are aiming at that. Let us, however, see what we are to understand what we mean by the word competition, since I think the word is used vaguely very often.

Man must live in society of some kind: that society must be either a society of classes or of equals. Now, competition implies the struggle for thriving at other people's expense. In the class society this struggle must go on, and it is threefold: First there is the struggle between the classes, one of which is privileged, the other unprivileged. The privileged class strives to enhance its privilege, the unprivileged strives to reduce it; or in other words is driven by its inferior position to strive to destroy that privilege. Secondly, there is the competition for subsistence amongst the members of the unprivileged class, which is forced upon them by their dependent position. "Don't feed him, master, feed ME; I am the best man," is what each of them is forced to cry out and act on. Thirdly, there is the competition amongst the members of the privileged class each for his own share of privilege. This competition for privilege is what is usually meant by persons who use the word competition, and I must assert it is what Mr. George means when he uses it.

Change the picture, and let us look at a society of equality. How can competition exist in it? There will be no classes, privileged and unprivileged, to tug against one another. That war will be over. There will be no privilege for a robber class to squabble over the partition of. That war will be over. And lastly, as a blessed consequence, since freedom and mutual help will have taken the place of dependence on a master (i.e., slavery), the hideous "competition" or war amongst the unprivileged will have come to an end.

In short, the issue on this matter is clear between Mr. George and the Socialists: he is championing the condition of ceaseless war which is inherent in the present form of society,—the society of the master who has slaves without paying for them; of the slave who is forced to give himself to a master instead of being sold to him by somebody else. This war and the society of which it is an essential part is abhorrent to Socialists. It is by no means inconsistent in Mr. George to champion this competition for privilege. But it would be a mistake to suppose that he is anything else than an enemy of Socialism.

Lord Dufferin is now the hero of the jingo Pall Mall, which has lately outdone itself in an article of magniloquent jingoism; and considering the many benefits which the capitalist class reap from that unlucky country, India, the milch-cow of tyrants for so many ages, it is not wonderful that he should feel himself bound to make the best of the British tyranny there, the latest and worst of all, because it is an economical tyranny. But a curious commentary on this blowing of the British trumpet, as to the beneficence of our rule there, was given me the other day by a friend (a Socialist) who has been many years in India, and who told me when he first went out he tried to get intimate with the natives, but had long ago been forced to give up the attempt. And he is by no means the first person who has told me the like. We are a hated garrison in India, and hold it by means of force and fraud for the advantage of the robber class in England. That is what the heroics of the Pall Mall must be reduced to. W. M.

LAND RATS AND WATER RATS.

THE other night as I took up my evening paper, it was with mingled feelings that I read of various mishaps met with by sundry river steamers through the scant number and incompetence of their rat crews. It was not displeasing to read of the damage incurred by the Company's property, incurred through their own insensate greed, grasping at undue profits on underpaid labour. Nor could any Socialist, at least, refrain from sympathising with the cursing of the rat crews and their rat captains by the men they supplanted, as well as by the frightened passengers. As for these last, the thought that they could not but right well know before they embarked how the Company had behaved to their "hands," modified what commiseration might otherwise have been felt for them. Indeed, some sterner souls might confess to a subdued glee as they read of black eyes and many bruises, that would serve as reminders to the patrons of rat-labour that there was a risk to be run in supporting their proteges.

Most Londoners know how the matter stands, but our readers elsewhere may not. The men employed on the steamboats which ply up and down the river Thames, quite justifiably asked for an increase in the crew of each boat during the busy season, and also for a small rise in wages all round for the same time—another inch of freeboard above starvation-mark. Some attempt was made at organising in support of these demands, but at the last moment some of the men weakened and betrayed their comrades. Then followed a “truly British” scene. Rats came crowding from their lurking-places, and, whether long-shore loafers or “respectable” waterman, were all made welcome by the Company. Those who had dared to be discontented were turned out to muse on the freedom of contract, and their places filled with creatures willing to crawl over a comrade’s ruin to their own selfish and pitiful advantage. There is only one word wherewith to designate either the employers or the employed in this dirty business. They were RATS. We are glad to say that the rats have destroyed themselves by their blundering, and that the company are taking back the dismissed men. If it had not happened so, a rigorous boycott would have been necessary.

Just now there is nothing pleasanter to the tired workman in the way of conveyance homeward than a trip on the river, if only his road lie that way. Father Thames, though he may have lost nearly all his freshness further up, and have fallen under the curse of grime that clings to smoky London, is able still to give good welcome to those who trust themselves upon his bosom. There is on the river a sense of freedom and airiness to be enjoyed nowhere else in London out of the larger parks. But the workman would have had to remember that even as he does to others may be done to him. Even as he patronised rats in his pleasure, so might others support rats in his work. If by his action, however innocent in itself, he strengthen the hand of an exploiter, he is injuring his class and causing misery to many of his fellows.

I speak to workmen especially, for they know best how the boot pinches. To them the enmity of rats has brought many and bitter misfortunes. The pressure of competition, the greed of employers, the growth of machinery, things manifold and far-reaching, have ground them down and depressed them. In all that has been wrung from nature for humanity they have had no share; the advance of science and the spread of civilisation have left them still the toil-worn waiters at the gate of good life. But none of these things has bitten so deeply into their souls, or left such awful marks on mind and body, as the long-continued treachery within their own ranks; treachery that will forever continue and recur unless they, the workmen themselves, decide that it shall be no longer so easy and profitable.

Let the workmen remember! Who has betrayed the tramway-men but those among themselves? Has not the same thing occurred among the coal-miners, the carpenters, the iron-workers? Is it not the treachery of printers that enables rat firms to wax fat and kick? To prolong the list would be easy. By the treachery and cowardice of men of their own class, it is that workmen of all trades are rendered helpless in the hand of their oppressors. Cannot every one recall some striking, even terrible, it may be, instances that have come within his own experience? Who does not know of wages lowered, work intensified, wrong inflicted, iniquity endured, through the weakness, or worse, of his own workmates? Again and again has this happened in the past; again and again it will happen in the future. It must go on unendingly while workmen in one trade are careless of what is done in another.

To feel as a member of the community that every wrong inflicted on another is inflicted on himself; to guard the right of another as jealously as his own; to defend the right and avenge the wrong with never-ceasing vigilance and unflagging zeal; these are the deeds of a good citizen. But the community is not so constituted that one can so feel to-day, if he be a workman and awake to his position. He finds himself in a society, if so it can be called, which is divided into two great camps, or opposing armies, that are never at peace, and never can be in the nature of things until one of them is definitely driven out of the place it occupies. That one in which he finds himself, the weakest and worst equipped, though immeasurably the largest, is waging ceaseless war for the bare leave to live. The other, wealthy and well-armed, is in possession of the earth and all things on it, and is desperately fighting to maintain its control of all the means whereby men live. Year by year and day by day the struggle is becoming more conscious, more embittered, between the classes that control and are controlled. Not in one trade but in all, not in one country but all, is the consciousness of the class-war growing wider and more intense. It is more and more then, as a member of his class that the workman must feel. He may talk as a citizen, he must feel as a workman.

Indeed, if he have studied his position, and can understand his relation to the life around him, he must know his own class to be all there is of true society nowadays, and that the idlers and loungers, rich or poor, however ornamental they may be, are mere parasites upon it, to be shaken off before a fair life is possible to him or his. To feel as a citizen, then, as a member of a community of equals, is above and beyond the workman of to-day; he can hardly realise it as a far dream in the future; but it is not too much to ask of him that, within the limits to which he is confined by the conditions of to-day, he should try to carry out the ideal of comradeship. That he should seek the welfare of all workmen as his own; endeavouring now to be a worthy member of his class, that he may one day be a worthy citizen of a true community. There is absolute solidarity of interest throughout his class; no member of it can be injured without his suffering thereby, though they be separated by the width of the world, and be aliens in race, colour, and speech—can he not understand this and teach it to others? But it is not enough that he should know this and feel this and teach it; he must act upon it.

To belong to his own trade organisation is not enough, though that is a good beginning—not to belong to it is to be a traitor in the camp of Labour and a tool of the enemy. To belong to a trade union is good; to belong to a wider organisation is better. Whichever it is, he must not rest content with merely belonging to it; he must work always to improve it, to extend its influence, and to elevate its aim. Seeking always to consolidate it, he must try to bring it into close relation with all other labour organisations, and to show them their interdependence. He must learn the needs of other men, and do what he can to aid them in their satisfaction. If they be organised, their organisation should be to him as his own; unorganised, he must help them to become so, and strengthen their hands against the common foe. And he must have neither part nor lot with traitors.

He who fights for his own hand without thinking of his fellows is a fratricide, and should be held an outlaw in the labour-world; he is a rat and should be shunned like one. It should not be left to the men of his own trade alone to show detestation of his conduct; everyone who even companies with him thereby partakes in some measure of his crime; everyone who aids and encourages him becomes equally guilty with himself. I do not ask anyone to kill the rats, to stamp them out with bloody feet, as our fathers tried to do less than thirty years ago, but I do ask everyone not to feed them and help them that they may slay us and our fellows. I am asking no man that he should kill another, but only that he should keep his own hands clean; not that he should injure anyone, but that he should refrain from aiding in the injury of others. More, that he should help others to keep their hands clean, and that he should resist and resent any wrong inflicted upon them with all his might, as resolutely and unrelentingly as though it were wrought upon himself. This is a work in which all may help; there are none so weak that they are unable to take part in it. Some small danger there may be of dismissal from employment, and the like, now and then; some occasional discomfort there is sure to be, but nothing that can outweigh the sweet consciousness of something done toward the freedom and happiness of mankind.

