

Library of Emory University

255258

MAR 11 1953

BEECHENBROOK;

A

RHYME OF THE WAR.

BY

MRS. MARGARET J. PRESTON.

RICHMOND:
J. W. RANDOLPH, 121 MAIN STREET.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1865, by J T. L. PRIBSTON, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the Confederate States of America, for the Eastern District of Virginia.

Macfarlane & Fergusson, Printers.

A RHYME OF THE WAR.

I.

There is sorrow in Beechenbrook Cottage;—the day
Has been bright with the earliest glory of May;
The blue of the sky is as tender a blue,
As ever the sunshine came shimmering through:
The songs of the birds and the hum of the bees,
As they merrily dart in and out of the trees,
The blooms of the orchard, as sifting its snows,
It mingles its odors with hawthorn and rose;—
The voice of the brook, as it lapses unseen,—
The laughter of children at play on the green,—
Insist on a picture so cheerful—so fair,
Who ever would dream that a grief could be there!

The last yellow sunbeam slides down from the wall,
The purple of evening is ready to fall,

The gladness of daylight is gone, and the gloom
 Of something like sadness is over the room.
 Right bravely all day, with a smile on her brow
 Had Alice been true to her duty,—but now,
 Her tasks are all ended,—naught inside or out,
 For the thoughtfullest love to be busy about ;
 The knapsack well furnished,—the canteen all bright,
 The soldier's grey dress, and his gauntlets, in sight,—
 The blanket tight strapped, and the haversack stored,
 And lying beside them, the cap and the sword :—
 No last, little office,—no farther commands—
 No service to steady the tremulous hands,
 All wife-work,—the sweet work that busied her so,
 Is finished :—the dear one is ready to go.

Not a sob has escaped her all day,—not a moan ;
 But now the tide rushes,—for she is alone.
 On the fresh shining knapsack she pillows her head,
 And wept as a mourner might weep for the dead.
 She heeds not the three-year old baby at play,
 As donning the cap, on the carpet he lay ;
 Till she feels on her forehead, his fingers' soft tips,
 And on her shut eyelids, the touch of his lips.

"Mamma is so sorry !—Mamma is so sad !
 But Archie can make her look up and be glad :

I've been praying to God, as you told me to do,
That Papa may come back when the battle is thro' :—
He says when we pray, that our prayers shall be heard;
And mamma, don't you always know, God keeps his word."

Around the young comforter stealthily press
The arms of his father with sudden caress ;
Then fast to his heart—love and duty at strife,—
He snatches with fondest emotion, his wife.

"My own love! my precious!—I feel I am strong,—
I know I am brave in opposing the wrong ;
I could stand where the battle was fiercest, nor feel
One quiver of nerve at the flash of the steel ;
I could gaze on the enemy,—guiltless of fears,
But I quail at the sight of your passionate tears :
My calmness forsakes me,—my thoughts are a-whirl,
And the stout-hearted man is as weak as a girl.
I've been proud of your fortitude ; never a trace
Of yielding, all day, could I read in your face ;
But a spirit as dauntless, as bold, and as high
As ever flashed forth from a patriot's eye.
I know how you cling to me,—know that to part,
Is tearing the tenderest cords of your heart :
Thro' the length and the breadth of our Valley to-day
No hand could a costlier sacrifice lay

On the altar of Country; and Alice,—sweet wife!
 I never have worshipped you so in my life!
 Poor heart,—that has held up so brave in the past,
 Poor heart! must it break with its burden at last!"

The arms thrown about him, but tighten their hold,
 The cheek that he kisses, is ashy and cold;
 And bowed with the grief she so long has suppressed,
 She weeps herself quiet and calm, on his breast.
 At length in a voice just as steady and clear,
 As if it had never been choked by a tear,
 She raises her eyes with a softened control,
 And thro' them her husband looks into her soul.

"I feel that we each for the other could die,—
 Your heart to my own makes the instant reply:
 But dear as you are, Love,—my life and my light,—
 I would not consent to your stay, if I might:
 No!—arm for the conflict, and on, with the rest;
 Virginia has need of her bravest and best!
 My heart,—it must bleed, and my cheek will be wet,
 Yet never, believe me,—with selfish regret.
 My ardor abates not one jot of its glow,—
 But then, I'm a wife, and a woman, you know!
 —Our cause is so holy,—so just, and so true,—
 Thank God! I can give a defender like you!

•

For home, and for children,—for freedom,—for bread,—
 For the house of our God,—for the graves of our dead—
 For leave to exist on the soil of our birth,—
 For everything manhood holds dearest on earth—
 When these are the things that we fight for,—dare I
 Hold back my best treasure, with plaint or with sigh?
 My cheek would blush crimson,—my spirit be galled,
 If he were not there, when the muster was called!
 When we pleaded for peace, every right was denied—
 Every patient petition, turned proudly aside;
 Now God judge betwixt us!—God prosper the right!
 To brave men, there's nothing remains, but to fight.
 I grudge you not, Douglass,—die, rather than yield—
 And like a stern Spartan,—come home on your shield.'

The morning is breaking :—the flush of the dawn
 Is warning the soldier, 'tis time to be gone :
 The little ones round him expectantly wait—
 His horse all caparisoned, paws at the gate :
 With face strangely pallid,—no soothings,—no sighs,—
 But only a luminous mist in her eyes,
 His wife is subduing the heart-throbs that swell,
 And calming herself for a quiet farewell.

Then falls a felt silence :—the note of a bird
 A tremulous twitter,—is all that is heard ;

The circle has knelt by the holly-bush there,—
And listen,—there comes the low breathing of prayer.

“ Father ! fold thine arms of pity
Round us as we lonely bow ;
Never have we kneeled before Thee,
With such burden'd hearts as now !

Joy has been our constant portion,
And if ill must now befall,
With a filial acquiescence,
We would thank Thee for it all.

In the path of present duty,
With Thy hand to lean upon,
Questioning not the hidden future,
May we walk serenely on.

For this holy, happy home-love,
Purest bliss that crowns my life,—
For these tender, trusting children,—
For this fond and faithful wife,—

Here I pour my full thanksgiving ;
And when heart is torn from heart,
Be our sweetest tryst-word, ‘ Mizpah ’—
—Watch betwixt us while we part !

And if never round this altar,
 We should kneel as heretofore,—
If these arms in benediction,
 Fold my precious ones no more,—

Thou, who in her direst anguish,
 Sooth'dst thy mother's lonely lot,
In thy still unchanged compassion,
 Son of Man! forsake them not!"

The little ones each, he has caught to his breast,
And clasped them, and kissed them with fervent caress
Then wordless and tearless with hearts running o'er,
They part who have never been parted before.
He springs to his saddle,—the rein is drawn tight,—
And Beechenbrook Cottage is lost to his sight.

II.

The feathery foliage has broadened its leaves,
And June with its beautiful mornings and eves,
Its magical atmosphere, breezes and blooms,
Its woods all delicious with thousand perfumes,—
First-born of the Summer,—spoiled pet of the year—
June, delicate queen of the seasons, is here !

The sorrow has passed from the Cottage away ;
The household is lightsome again, as the day :
With innocent prattle her toils to beguile,
In the midst of her children, the mother must smile.
Her matronly cares,—those relentless demands
On the strength of her heart and the skill of her hands,
With work-a-day trials come ceaselessly fraught,
And leave her small space for the broodings of thought.

Thank God !—busy fingers & solace can find,
To lighten the burden of body or mind ;
And Eden's old curse proves a blessing instead—
“ In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou toil for thy bread : ”

For the blessed relief in all labors that lurk,
Aye, thank Him, unhappy ones,—thank Him for work!

Thus Alice engages her thoughts and her powers,
And industry kindly lends wings to the hours :
Poor, petty employments they sometimes appear,
And on her bright needle there flashes a tear,—
Half shame and half passion ;—what would she not dare
Her fervid compatriots' trials to share ?
It irks her—the weakness of womanhood then,—
Yet such are the tears that make heroes of men !

She feels the hot blood of the nation beat high ;
With rapture she catches the rallying cry :
From mountain, and valley and hamlet they come !
On every side echoes the roll of the drum.
A people as firm, as united, as bold,—
As ever drew blade for the blessings they hold,
Step sternly and solemnly forth in their might,
And swear on their altars to die for the right.

The clangor of muskets,—the flashing of steel—
The clatter of spurs on the stout-booted heel,—
The waving of banners,—the resonant tramp
Of marching battalions,—the fiery stamp
Of steeds in their war-harness, newly decked out,—
The blast of the bugle,—the rush and the shout,

The terrible energy, eager and wild,
 That lights up the face of man, woman and child,—
 That burns on all lips, that arouses all powers,—
 Did ever we dream that such times would be ours?

One thought is absorbing, with giant control,—
 With deadliest earnest, the national soul :—
 “ The right of self-government, crown of our pride,—
 Sole right that our ancestors won—is denied !
 Shall we tamely resign what our enemy craves ?
 No ! martyrs we may be !—we cannot be slaves ! ”

Fair women who naught but indulgence have seen,
 Who never have learned what denial could mean,—
 Who deign not to slipper their own dainty feet,
 Whose wants swarthy handmaids stand ready to meet,
 Whose fingers decline the light kerchief to hem,—
 What aid in this struggle, is hoped for from them ?

Yet see ! how they haste from their bowers of ease,
 Aflame with the purest devotion, to seize
 Every feminine weapon their skill can command,
 To labor with head, and with heart, and with hand.
 They stitch the rough jacket ; they shape the coarse shirt,
 Unheeding tho’ delicate fingers be hurt :
 They sew the strong haversack,—knit the grey glove,—
 With zeal that betokens it, service of love.

When ever were people subdued, overthrown,—
 With women to cheer them on, brave as our own?
 With maidens and mothers at work on their knees,
 When ever were soldiers as fearless as these?

June's flower-wreathed sceptre is dropped with a-sigh,
 And forth like an empress, steps stately July:
 She sits all unveiled, amidst sunshine and balms,
 As Zenobia sat in her City of Palms!

Not yet has the martial horizon grown dun,
 Not yet has the terrible drama begun:
 But the tramping of legions,—the rush and the roar
 Break over our borders, like waves on the shore.
 Along the Potomac, the confident foe
 Stands marshalled for onset,—prepared at a blow,
 To strike the rebellion to atoms, and fling
 Utter ruin at once on the horrible thing!

How sovran the silence that broods o'er the sky,
 And ushers the twenty-first day of July;
 —Date, written in fire on history's scroll,—
 —Date, drawn in deep blood-lines on many a soul!

There is peace in the Cottage: on Alice's brow
 Is resting a Sabbath tranquility now,

As softly she reads from the page on her knee,—
“Thou wilt keep him in peace, who is stayed upon thee!”
When Sophy bursts hurriedly into the room,—
“Oh! mother! we hear it,—we hear it! . . . the boom
Of the fierce cannonading!—it seems as it shook
The ground till it trembled, along by the brook.”

One instant, the listener sways in her seat,—
The paralysed heart has forgotten to beat;
The next,—with the speed and the frenzy of fear,
She gains the green hillock, and pauses to hear.

Again and again the reverberant sound
Is fearfully felt in the tremulous ground;
Again and again, on their senses it thrills
Like thunderous echoes astray in the hills.

On tip-toe,—the summer wind lifting his hair,
With nostril expanded, and scenting the air
Just like a young war-horse that tosses his mane,
And frettingly champs at the bit and the rein,
Stands eager,—exultant, a twelve-year-old boy,
His cheeks all bedewed with a passionate joy.

“That's music for heroes in battle array!
Oh! mother! I feel like a Roman to-day!

The Romans I read of in Plutarch ;—Yes, men
 Thought it noble to die for their liberties then !
 And I've wondered if soldiers were ever so bold,
 So gallant and brave, as those heroes of old.
 —There !—listen !—that volley booms out the reply ;
 They prove it is sweet for their country to die :
 How grand it must be ! what a pride ! what a joy !
 —And I can do nothing : I'm only a boy !”

The fervid hand drops, as he ceases to speak,
 And the eloquent crimson fades out on his cheek.

“ Oh Beverly !—brother ! It never would do !
 Who comforts mamma, and who helps her like you ?
 She sends to the battle her darlingest one,—
 She could not give both of them,—husband and son ;
 If she lost you, what's left her in life to enjoy ?
 —Oh no ! I am glad you are only a boy.”
 And Sophy looks up with her tenderest air,
 And kisses the fingers that toy with her hair.

For her, who all silent and motionless stands,
 And over her heart locks her quivering hands,
 With white lips apart, and with eyes that dilate,
 As if the low thunder were sounding her fate,—
 What racking suspenses, what agonies stir,
 What spectres these echoes are rousing for her !

Brave-hearted,—yet quaking,—high-souled,—yet so pale,—

Is it thus that the wife of a soldier should quail,
And shudder and shrink, at the boom of a gun,
As only a timorous girl should have done?
Ah! wait until custom has blunted the keen,
Crushing edge of that sound, and no woman, I ween,
Will hear it with pulses, more equal, more free
From feminine terrors and weakness, than she.

The sunset shoots forth its last, arrowy light,
And day falls asleep on the bosom of night.
The gay-hearted children, but lightly oppressed,
Find perfect relief on their pillow of rest:
For Alice, no blessed forgetfulness comes;—
The wail of the bugles,—the roll of the drums,—
The musket's sharp crack,—the artillery's roar,—
The flashing of bayonets dripping with gore,—
The moans of the dying,—the horror,—the dread,
That gathers so ghastly and cold o'er the dead:—
Oh! these are the visions of anguish and pain,
The phantoms of terror that troop thro' her brain!
She pauses again and again on the floor,
Which the moonlight has brightened so mockingly o'er,
She wrings her cold hands with a groan of despair,—
“Oh! God! have compassion!—my darling is there!”

Thro' the long summer sunshine, the Cottage is stirred
By passers who brokenly fling them a word :
Such tidings of slaughter!—"The enemy cowers;"—
"He breaks!"—"He is flying!"—"Manassas is ours!"
'Tis evening: and Archie alone on the grass
Sits watching the fire-flies gleam as they pass;
When sudden, he rushes, too eager to wait,—
"Mamma! there's an ambulance stops at the gate!"

Suspense then is past:—he is borne from the field,—
"God help me! . . . God grant it be not on his shield!"

With heart, that, from dread, has forgotten to tide,
Flies Alice and hastens to kneel at his side.
Embraces, with frantical wildness, the form
Of her husband, and finds . . . it is living, and warm!

III.

Ye, who by the couches of languishing ones,
Have watched thro' the rising and setting of suns,—
Who silent, behind the close curtain, withdrawn,
Scarce know that the current of being sweeps on,—
To whom outer life is unreal, untrue,
A world with whose toils ye have nothing to do—
Who feel that the day with its multiform rounds,
Is full of discordant, impertinent sounds,—
Who speak in low whispers, and stealthily tread,
As if a faint foot-fall were something to dread,—
Who find all existence,—its gladness, its gloom—
Enclosed by the walls of that limited room—
Ye only can measure the sleepless unrest
That lies like a night-mare on Alice's breast.

Nights come and nights go, and she watches the strife
So evenly balanced, 'twixt death and 'twixt life—
Thanks God he still breathes, as each hour takes wing,
And dares not to think what the morrow may bring.

In the lone, ghostly midnight, he raves as he lies,
 With death's ashen pallidness dimming his eyes:
 He shouts the sharp war-cry,—he rallies his men,—
 He is on the red field of Manassas again.

“Now, courage,—my comrades! Keep steady! lie low!
 What! quailing before such a white-livered foe?
 Ye 'H face without flinching, the cannons' grim mouth,
 For ye're 'Knights of the Horse-Shoe'—ye're Sons of the South!

There's Jackson!—how brave he rides! coursing at will,
 Midst the prostrated lines on the crest of the hill;
 God keep him! for what will we do if he falls?
 Be ready, good fellows!—be cool when he calls
 To the charge: Oh! we'll beat them—we'll turn them, and then

We'll ride them down madly!—On! Onward! my men!”

The passionate frenzy o'erwearies him soon,
 And back on his pillows he sinks in a swoon.

And sometimes when Alice is wetting his lip,
 He turns from the draught, and refuses to sip:
 “Tis sweet, pretty angel!—but yonder there lies
 A famishing comrade, with death in his eyes:
 His need is far greater—Sir Philip, I think—
 Or was it Sir Philip?—go! go—let him drink!”

And oft, with a sort of bewildered amaze,
 On her face he would fasten the wistfullest gaze :
 —“ You are kind,—but a hospital nurse cannot be Like Alice,—my tenderest Alice,—to me :
 Oh ! I know in the Cottage there’s many a tear,
 As she asks all the day—‘ Will he never be here ? ’ ”

But Nature, kind healer ! brings sovereignest balm,
 And strokes the wild pulses with coolness and calm :
 The conflict so equal, so stubborn, is past,
 And life wins the fiercely fought battle at last.

How sweet thro’ the long convalescence to lie,
 And from the low window, gaze out at the sky,
 And float, as the zephyrs so tranquilly do,
 Aloft in the depths of ineffable blue :—
 In painless, delicious half consciousness brood,—
 No duties to cumber,—no claims to intrude—
 Receptive as childhood, from trouble as free,
 And feel it is bliss enough simply to be !

For Alice,—what pencil can picture her joy,
 So perfect, so thankful, so free from annoy,
 As her lips press the lotus-bound chalice, and drain
 That exquisite blessedness born out of pain !
 Oh ! not in her maidenhood, blushing and sweet,
 When Douglass first poured out his love at her feet,

And not when a shrinking and beautiful bride,
 With worshipping fondness, she clung to his side ;
 And not in those holiest hours of life,
 When first she was held to his heart, as his wife ;
 And never in motherhood's earliest bliss,
 Had she tasted a happiness rounded like this !

And Douglass, safe sheltered from war's rude alarms,
 Finds Eden's lost precincts again, in her arms ;
 He hears afar off, in the distance, the roar
 And the lash of the billows that break on the shore
 Of his isle of enchantment,—his haven of rest,—
 And rapturous languor steals over his breast.

He bathes in the sunlight of Alice's smiles ;
 He wraps himself round with love's magical wiles :
 His sweet iterations pall not on her ear,—
 "I love you—I love you :" she never can hear
 That cadence too often ; its musical roll
 Wakes ever an echoed reply in her soul.

—Do visions of trial, of warning, of woe,
 Loom dark in the future of doubt ? Do they know
 They are hiving, of honied remembrance, a store
 To live on, when summer and sunshine are o'er ?
 Do they feel that their Paphian isle of repose,
 Must be rocked by the rudest of tempests that blows ?

Do they dream that afar, on the wild wintry main
Their love freighted bark must be driven again ?

Bless God for the wisdom that curtains so tight,
To-morrow's enjoyments or griefs from our sight !
Bless God for the ignorance, darkness and doubt,
That girdle so kindly, our future about !

The crutches are brought, and the invalid's strength
Is able to measure the lawn's gravel'd length ;
And under the beeches, once more he reclines,
And hears the wind plaintively moan thro' the pines ;
His children around him, with frolic and play,
Cheat the listlessness out of the autumn-like day ;
And Alice, the sunshine all flecking her book,
Reads low to the chime of the murmuring brook.

But the world's rushing tide washes up to his feet,
And leaps the soft barriers that bound his retreat ;
The tumult of camps, surges out on the breeze,
And ever seems mocking his Capuan ease.
He dare not be happy, or tranquil, or blest,
While his soil by the feet of invaders is prest :
What brooks it, tho' still he be pale as a ghost ?
If he languish or fail,—let him fail at his post.

The gums by the brook-side are crimson and brown ;
The leaves of the ash flicker goldenly down ;
The roses that trellis the Cottage, have lost
Their brightness and bloom, at the touch of the frost ;
The ozier-twined seat by the beeches, no more
Looks tempting and fragrant and sweet, as of yore ;
The water glides darkly and mournfully on,
As Alice sits watching it :—Douglass has gone !

IV.

“ I am weary and worn,—I am hungry and chill,
And cuttingly strikes the keen blast o'er the hill;
All day I have ridden thro' snow and thro' sleet,
With nothing,—not even a cracker to eat;
But now as I rest by the bivouac fire,
Whose blaze leaps up merrily, higher and higher,
Impatient as Roland who neighs to be fed,—
For Caleb to bring me my bacon and bread,—
I'll warm my cold heart, that is aching and lone,
By thinking of you, love,—my Alice,—my own!

“ I turn a deaf ear to the scream of the wind,
I leave the rude camp and the forest behind;
And Beechenbrook Cottage, all radiant in white,
Is tauntingly filling my vision to-night.
I catch my sweet little ones' innocent mirth,
I see your dear face, as you sit at the hearth;
And I know by the tender expression I see,
I know that my darling is musing of me!

Does her thought dim the blaze?—Does it shed thro'
the room

A chilly, unseen, and yet palpable gloom?
Ah! then we are equal! You share all my pain,
And I halve your blessedness with you again!

“Don't think that my hardships are bitter to bear;
Don't think I repine at the soldier's rough fare;
If ever a thought so unworthy steals on,
I look upon Ashby,—and lo! it is gone!
Such chivalry,—fortitude,—spirit and tone,
Make brighter, and stronger, and prouder, my own.
Oh! Beverly, boy!—on his white steed I ween,
A knightlier presence has never been seen:
And as yonder he lies, from the groups all apart,
I bow to him loyally,—bow with my heart.

“What brave, buoyant letters you write, sweet!—they ring
Thro' my soul like the blast of a trumpet,—and bring
Such a flame to my eye—such a flush to my cheek,
That often my hand will unconsciously seek,
The hilt of my sword, as I read,—and I feel
As the warrior does, when he flashes the steel
In fiery circles, and shouts in his might,
For the heroes behind him, to follow its light!

True wife of a soldier!—If doubt or dismay,
 Had ever, within me, one instant, held sway,
 Your words wield a spell that would bid them be gone,
 Like bodiless ghosts at the touch of the dawn.

“ Could the veriest craven that cowers and quails
 Before the vast horde that insults and assails
 Our land and our liberties,—could he to-night,
 Sit here on the ice-girdled log where I write,
 And look on the hopeful, bright brows of the men,
 Who have toiled all the day over mountain—thro’ glen—Half-clothed, and unfed,—would he doubt?—would he dare—
 In the face of such proof, yield again to despair?

“ The hum of their voices comes laden with cheer,
 As the wind wafts a musical swell to my ear—
 Wild, clarion catches,—then flute-like and low;
 —Would you like me to give you their Song of the Snow?

Halt!—the march is over!
 Day is almost done;
 Loose the cumbrous knapsack,
 Drop the heavy gun:

Chilled and wet and weary,
Wander to and fro,
Seeking wood to kindle
Fires amidst the snow.

Round the bright blaze gather.
Heed not sleet or cold—
Ye are Spartan soldiers,
Stout and brave and bold:
Never Xerxian army
Yet subdued a foe,
Who but asked a blanket,
On a bed of snow.

Shivering midst the darkness,
Christian men are found,
There devoutly kneeling
On the frozen ground—
Pleading for their Country,
In its hour of woe—
For its soldiers marching
Shoeless thro' the snow.

Lost in heavy slumbers,
Free from toil and strife—

Dreaming of their dear ones—
 Home, and child, and wife,—
 Tentless they are lying,
 While the fires burn low,—
 Lying in their blankets,
 Midst December's snow!

Come Sophy, my blossom! I've something to say,
 Will chase for a moment, your gambols away:
 To-day as we climbed the steep mountain path o'er,
 I noticed a bare-footed lad in my corps:
 "How comes it?" I asked,—“You look careful and bold,
 How comes it you're marching, unshod, thro' the cold?”

“Ah sir! I'm a poor, lonely orphan, you see;
 No mother, no friends that are caring for me;
 If I'm wounded, or captured, or killed, in the war,
 'Twill matter to nobody, Colonel Dunbar.”

Now Sophy!—your needles, dear!—Knit him some socks,
 And send the poor fellow a pair in my box:
 Then he'll know,—and his heart with the thought will be filled,
 There is one little maiden will care if he's killed.

The fire burns dimly, and scattered around,
The men lie asleep on the snow-covered ground ;
But ere in my blanket, I wrap me to rest,
I hold you, my darling,—close, close, to my breast ;
God love you! God grant you His comforting light!
I kiss you a thousand times over!—Good night!”

V.

“To-morrow is Christmas!”—and clapping his hands,
Little Archie in joyful expectancy stands,
And watches the shadows, now short and now tall,
That merrily dance up and down on the wall.

Drawn curtains of crimson shut out the cold night,
And the parlor is pleasant with odors and light ;
The soft lamp suspended, its mellowness throws
O'er fragrant geranium, jasmine and rose ;
The sleeping canary hangs caged midst the blooms,
A Sybarite slumberer steeped in perfumes ;
For Alice still clings to her birds and her flowers,
Sweet, delicate tokens of happier hours.

“To-morrow is Christmas ! but Beverly,—say,
Will it do to be glad when Papa is away ?”
And the face that is tricky and blýthe as can be,
Tries vainly to temper its shadowless glee.

"For you, pet—I'm sure it is right to be glad;
 'Tis a pitiful thing to see little ones sad;
 But for Sophy and me, who are older, you know,
 We dare not be glad when we look at the snow!
 I shrink from this comfort, this light and this heat,
 This plenty to wear and this plenty to eat,—
 When the soldiers, who fight for us,—die for us, lie
 With nothing around and above, but the sky;
 When their clothes are so light, and the rations they
 " deal,
 Are only a morsel of bacon and meal.
 And how can I fold my thick blankets around,
 When I know that my father's asleep on the ground?
 I'm ashamed to be happy, or merry, or free,
 As if war and its trials were nothing to me:
 Oh! I never can know any frolic or fun—
 Any real mad romps till the battles are done!"
 And the face of the boy, so heroic and fair
 Is touched with the singular shadow of care.

Sophy ceases her warbling, subdues her soft mirth,
 And draws her low ottoman up to the hearth:

"But brother,—what good would it do to refuse
 The comforts and blessings God gives us, or use
 Them quite with indifference, as much as to say,
 We care not how soon they are taken away!

I am sure I would give my last blanket, and spread
 My pretty blue cloak, at night, over my bed,— (Mamma, you know, covers herself with her shawl, Since we've sent all our blankets) but then, it's too small.
 Would Papa be less hungry or cold,—do you think,
 If we had too little to eat or to drink?
 So I mean to be busy,—I mean to be glad;
 Mamma says there's time enough yet to be sad;
 I'll work for the soldiers,—I'll pray, and I'll plan,
 And just be as happy as ever I can;
 I've made the grey shirt, and finished the socks:—
 So come let us help; they are packing the box."

How grateful the task is to Alice! her cares
 Are quite put aside, and her countenance wears
 A look of enjoyment as eager, as bright,
 As Santa Claus brings little dreamers to-night;
 For Douglass away in his camp, is to share
 The daintiest cates that her larder can spare.

The turkey well seasoned, and tenderly browned,
 Is flanked by the spiciest a la mode "round;"
 The great "priestly ham," in its juiciest pride
 Is there,—with the tenderest surloin beside;
 Neat bottles, suggestive of ketchups and wines,
 And condiments racy, of various kinds;

And firm rolls of butter, as yellow as gold,
 And patties and biscuit, most rare to behold;
 And sauces that richest of odors betray—
 Are marshalled in most appetizing array.
 Then Beverly brings of his nuts a full store,
 And Archie has apples, a dozen or more;
 While Sophy with gratified housewifery, makes
 Her present of tempting “Confederate cakes.”

And then in a snug little corner, there lies
 A packet will brighten the orphan boy’s eyes;
 For Beverly feels it a pleasure to use
 His last cherish’d hoardings in buying him shoes.
 Sophy’s socks too are there; and she catches afar—
 “There’s somebody cares for me, Colonel Dunbar!”

What subtlest of essences, sovereign to cheer
 What countless, uncatalogu’d tokens are here!
 What lavender’d memories, tenderly green,
 Lie hidden, these grosser of viands between!
 What food for the heart-life,—unreckon’d, untold,
 What manna enclosed in its chalice of gold!
 What caskets of sweets that Love only unlocks,
 What mysteries Douglass will find in the box!

VI.

The lull of the Winter is over; and Spring
Comes back, as delicious and buoyant a thing,
As airy, and fairy, and lightsome, and bland,
As if not a sorrow was dark'ning the land;—
So little has Nature of passion or part
In the woes and the throes of humanity's heart.

The wild tide of battle runs red,—dashes high,
And blots out the splendor of earth and of sky;
The blue air is heavy, and sulph'rous, and dun,
And the breeze on its wings bears the boom of the gun.
In faster and fiercer and deadlier shocks,
The thunderous billows are hurled on the rocks;
And our Valley becomes, amid Spring's softest breath,
The valley, alas! of the shadow of death.
The wreck and the ruin, the plunge and the roll,
Reach down to the depth of the national soul;
It quivers—for since it is human, it must;
But never a tremor of doubt or distrust

Once blanches the cheek, or is wrung from the mouth,
Or lurks in the eye of the sons of the South.

What need for dismay? Let the live surges roar,
And leap in their fury, our fastnesses o'er,
And threaten our beautiful Valley to sweep
With the besom of ruin, most dire, and deep;—
What fear we?—See Jackson! his sword in his hand,
Like the stern rocks around him, immovable stand,—
The wisdom, the skill and the strength that he boasts,
Sought ever from him who is Leader of Hosts:
—He speaks in the name of the Lord:—lo! the tide,
The red sea of battle, is seen to divide;
The pathway of victory opes through the flood:—
And the foe is o'erwhelmed in a deluge of blood!

The spirit of Alice no longer is bowed
By the troubles and tumults and terrors that crowd
So closely and anxiously 'round her:—the stroke,
And the wrench of the tempest, but strengthen the oak.

Yet pale as Cassandra, unconscious of joy,
With visions of Greeks at the gates of her Troy,
All day she has waited and watched on the lawn,
Till the purple and gold of the sunset are gone;
For the battle draws near her:—few leagues intervene
Her home and that Valley of slaughter, between.

The tidings and rumors come thick and come fast,
 As riders fly hotly and breathlessly past ;
 They tell of the onslaught—the headlong attack
 Of the foe with a quadruple force at his back :
 They boast how they hurl themselves—shiver and fall
 Before that stout rampart, the gallant “ Stonewall.”

At length, with the gradual fading of day,—
 The tokens of battle are floated away :
 The booming no longer makes sullen the air,
 And the silence of night seems as holy as prayer.

Gray shadows still linger the beeches among,
 And scarce has the earliest matin been sung,
 Ere Alice with Beverly pale at her side
 Yet firm as his mother, is ready to ride.

With sympathy, womanly, tender, divine,—
 With lint and with bandage, with bread and with wine,
 She goes to the battle-field, eager to bear
 Relief to the wounded and perishing there :
 To breathe like an angel of mercy, the breath
 Of heaven o'er the brows that are fainting in death.

She dares not to stir with a question, her woe,
 One word, and the bitter brimm'd heart would o'erflow,

But speechless, and moveless, and stony of eye,
Scarce conscious of aught in the earth or the sky,
In a swoon of the heart, all her senses have reeled,—
But she prays for endurance,—for here is the field.

The flight and pursuit, so harrassing, so hot,
Have drifted all combatants far from the spot :
And thro' the sparse woodlands, and over the plain,
Lie gorily scattered, the wounded and slain.
Oh! the sickness,—the shudder—the quailing of fear,
As it leaps to her lips ; “ what if Douglass be here ! ”

But ministrants many and skilful, have come
Before her,—to reckon the terrible sum ;
Yet she frames not a question ; her spirit can bear
Oh! anything—all things, but hopeless despair :
Does her 'darling lie stretched on the slope of yon hill?
Let her doubt,—let her hug the suspense, if she will!

She watches each ambulance-burden with dread ;
She looks in the faces of dying and dead ;
And hour after hour, with steady control,
She bends to her task all the strength of her soul ;
She comforts the wounded with pity's sweet care,
And the spirit that's passing, she speeds with her prayer.

She starts as she hears, from her stout-hearted boy,
 A wild exclamation, half doubt and half joy ;—
 “ Oh ! Surgeon !—some brandy ! he’s fainting !—Ah !

now

The color comes back to his cheek and his brow :—
 He breathes again—speaks again ;—listen !—you are ‘ An orderly’—is it ?—‘ of Colonel Dunbar ?’
 ‘ He fought like a lion !’ (I knew it !) and passed
 Untouched thro’ the battle, ‘ unhurt to the last ?’
 My father is safe,—mother !—safe !—what a joy !
 And here is Macpherson,—our bare-footed boy !”

Poor Alice !—her grief has been tearless and dumb,
 But the pressure once lifted, her senses succumb :
 Too quick the revulsion,—too glad the surprise—
 The mists of unconsciousness curtain her eyes :
 ’Tis but for a moment they suffer eclipse,
 And words of thanksgiving soon thrill on her lips.

To Beechenbrook Cottage, with tenderest care,
 The poor, wounded soldier, they hasten to bear ;
 And never hung mother more patiently o’er
 The couch of the child, her own bosom that bore,
 Than Alice above the lone orphan, who lay
 Submissively breathing his spirit away.

He knows that existence is ebbing ; his brain
 Is lucid and calm, in the pauses of pain ;
 But his round boyish cheek with no weeping is wet,
 And his smile is not touched with a shade of regret.

No murmur is uttered—no passionate sigh
 Escapes him ;—so young,—yet so willing to die !
 His garment of flesh he has worn undefiled,
 His faith is the beautiful faith of a child :
 He knows that the Crucified hung on the tree,
 That the pathway to bliss might be open and free :
 He believes that the cup has been drained,—he can find

Not a drop of the wrath that had filled it,—behind.
 If ever a doubt or misgiving assails,
 His finger he puts on the print of the nails ;
 If sometimes there springs an emotion of fear,
 He lays his cold hand on the mark of the spear !
 He thinks of his darling, dead mother ;—the light
 Of the Heavenly City falls full on his sight :
 And under the rows of the palms, by the brim
 Of the river—he knows she is waiting for him.

But the present comes back ;—and on Alice's ear,
 Fall whispers like these, as she pauses to hear.

" Only a private ;—and who will care
 When I may pass away,—
 Or how, or why I perish, or where
 I mix with the common clay ;
 They will fill my empty place again,
 With another as stout and brave ;
 And they'll blot me out, ere the Autumn rain
 Has freshened my nameless grave.

• Only a private :—it matters not,
 That I did my duty well ;
 That all thro' a score of battles I fought,
 And there, like a soldier, fell :
 The country I died for,—never will heed
 My unrequited claim ;
 And history cannot record the deed,
 For she never has heard my name.

Only a private ;—and yet I know,
 When I heard the rallying call,
 I was one of the very first to go,
 And . . . I'm one of the many who fall :
 But as here I lie, it is sweet to feel,
 That my honor's without a stain ;—
 That I only fought for my Country's weal,
 And never for glory or gain.

Only a private ;—Yet he who reads
Through the guises of the heart,
Looks not at the splendor of the deeds,
But the way we do our part ;
And when He shall take us by the hand,
And our small service own,
There'll a glorious band of privates stand
As victors around the throne !”

The breath of the morning is heavy and chill,
And gloomily lower the mists on the hill ;
The winds thro' the pine-trees are shivering low
With a plaintive and sad miserere of woe :
▲ quiet is over the Cottage,—a dread
Clouds the children's sweet faces,—Macpherson is dead !

VII.

'Tis Autumn,—and Nature the forest has hung
With arras more gorgeous than ever was flung
From Gobelin looms—all so varied, so rare,
As never the princeliest palaces were.
Soft curtains of haze the far mountains enfold,
Whose warp is of purple, whose woof is of gold,
And the sky bends as silently, purely above,
As if earth were an Eden of peace and of love.
But thick as white asters in Autumn, are found
The white tents all strewing the carpeted ground;
The din of a camp, with its stir and its strife,
Its motley and strange, multitudinous life,
Floats upward along the brown slopes, till it fills
The echoing hollows afar in the hills.

'T is the twilight of Sabbath,—and sweet thro' the air,
Swells the blast of the bugle, that summons to prayer:
They answer the signal, and soon in the glen
Sits Colonel Dunbar in the midst of his men.

The Chaplain advances with reverent face,
 Where lies a felled oak, he has chosen his place;
 On the stump of an ash-tree the Bible he lays,
 And they bow on the grass, as he solemnly prays.

“God of peace! while here we kneel,
 Underneath thine open sky,
 O'er our spirits, may there steal
 Sacred influence from on high.

We are weary.—cares and woes
 Lay their weight on every breast,
 And each heart before thee knows,
 That it sighs for inward rest.

Thou canst lift this weight away,
 Thou canst bid these sighings cease;
 Thou canst walk these waves and say
 To their restless tossings “peace!”

We are tempted;—snares abound,—
 Sin its treacherous meshes weaves;
 And temptations strew us round,
 Thicker than the Autumn leaves.

Midst these perils, mark our path,
 Thou who art 'the life, the way;'
 Rend each fatal wile that hath
 Power to lead our souls astray.

Prince of Peace! we follow Thee!
 Plant thy banner in our sight;
 Let thy shadowy légions be
 'Guards around our tents to-night.'

Thro' the aisles of the forest, far-stretching and dim,
 As a cluster'd Cathedral, the notes of a hymn
 Float tenderly upward—now soft and now clear,
 As if twilight had silenced its breathing to hear;
 Now swelling, a lofty, triumphant refrain,—
 Now sobbing itself into sadness again.

The Bible is opened, and stillness profound
 Broods over the listeners scattered around;
 And warning, and comfort, and blessing, and balm,
 Distil from the beautiful words of the Psalm.
 Then simply and earnestly pleading,—his face
 Lit up with persuasive and eloquent grace,
 The Chaplain pours forth, from the warmth of his heart,
 His words of entreaty and truth, ere they part.

“I see before me valiant men,
With courage high and true,
Who fight as only heroes fight,
And die, as heroes do.

Your serried ranks have never quailed
Before the battle-shock,
Whose maddest fury, only breaks
Like sea-foam o'er the rock.

You've borne the deadly brunt of war,
Thro' storm, and cold, and heat,
Yet never have ye turned your backs
Or fled before defeat.

Behind you lie your cheerful homes,
And all of sweet or fair,
The only remnants earth has left
Of Eden-life, are there.

Ye know that many a once bright cheek
Thro' toil and care, is wan;
Ye know the old, dear happiness
That blest your hearths,—is gone.

Ye see your comrades smitten down—
 The young, the bold, the brave—
 Ye feel, the turf ye tread to-day,
 May be to-morrow's grave.

Yet not a murmur meets the ear,
 Nor discontent has sway,
 And not a sullen brow is seen,
 Through all the camp to-day.

No Greek, in Greece's palmiest days,
 His javelin ever threw,
 Impelled by more heroic zeal,
 Or nobler aim than you.

No mailed warrior ever bore
 Aloft his shining lance,
 More proudly thro' the tales that fire
 The page of old romance.

Oh! soldiers!—well ye bear your part;
 The world awards its praise:
 Be sure,—this grandest tourney o'er—
 'Twill crown you with its rays!

But there's sublimer work than even
To free your native sod ;
—Ye may be loyal to your land
Yet traitors to your God !

No Moslem heaven for him who falls,
A bribed requital doles ;—
And while ye save your country,—ye
Alas ! may lose your souls !

The patriot's loftiest sacrifice,
The purest ever given,—
Is weak to move the hand that turns
The golden key of heaven.

No glorious deeds can urge their claim—
No merits, entrance win,—
The sacred hand of Christ alone,
Must freely let you in.

Oh ! sirs !—there lurks a fiercer foe,
Than this that treads your soil,
Who springs from unseen ambuscades,
To drag you as his spoil.

He drugs the heedless conscience, till,
 No wary watch it keeps,
And parleys with the treacherous heart,
 While fast the warder sleeps.

He captive leads the wavering will
 With specious words, and fair,
And enters the beleaguered soul,
 And rules, a conqueror there.

Will ye who fling defiance forth,
 Against a temporal foe,
And rather die, than stoop to wear
 The chains that gall you so—

Will ye succumb beneath a power,
 That mind and thought controls,
And fall an easy prey, before
 This enemy of souls ?

Be warned! be roused!—aye,—men—be brave!
 Nor let the despot, sin,
Wrest those immortal rights away,
 Which Christ has died to win.

For Heaven—your home—your fatherland,
 Bear toil, reproach and loss,
Your highest honor,—holiest name—
 The soldiers of the Cross!

VIII.

“My Douglass! my darling!—there once was a time;
When we to each other confessed the sublime
And perfect sufficiency love could bestow,
On the hearts that have learned its completeness to know;

We felt that we two had a well spring of joy,
That earthly convulsions could never destroy,
A mossy, sealed fountain, so cool and so bright,
It could solace the soul, let it thirst as it might.

“’T is easy, while happiness strews in our path,
The richest and costliest blessings it hath,
’T is easy to say that no sorrow, no pain,
Could utterly beggar our spirits again;
’T is easy to sit in the sunshine, and speak
Of the darkness and storm, with a smile on the cheek!

“As hungry and cold, and with weariness spent,
You droop in your saddle, or crouch in your tent;

Can you feel that the love so entire, so true,
 The love that we dreamed of,—is all things to you ?
 That come what there may,—desolation or loss,
 The prick of the thorn, or the weight of the cross—
 You can bear it,—nor feel you are wholly bereft,
 While the bosom that beats for you only, is left ?
 While the birdlings are spared that have made it so blest,
 Can you look, undismayed, on the wreck of the nest ?

There's a love that is tenderer, sweeter than this—
 That is fuller of comfort, and blessing, and bliss ;
 That never can fail us, whatever befall—
 Unchanging, unswerving, unwearied thro' all :
 We have need of the support—the staff and the rod ;—
 Belovéd ! we'll lean on the bosom of God !

You guess what I fain would keep hidden :—you know
 Ere now, that the trail of the insolent foe
 Leaves ruin behind it, disastrous and dire,
 And burns thro' our Valley, a pathway of fire,
 —Our beautiful home,—as I write it—I weep—
 Our beautiful home is a smouldering heap !
 And blackened, and blasted, and grim, and forlorn,
 Its chimneys stand stark in the mists of the morn !

I stood in my womanly helplessness, weak—
 Tho' I felt a brave color was kindling my cheek—

"And I plead by the sacredest things of their lives—
 By the love that they bore to their children,—their wives,
 By the homes left behind them, whose joys they had shared,
 By the God that should judge them,—that mine should be spared.

"As well might I plead with the tiger to pause,
 When his victim lies writhing and crushed in his claws!
 I know that my eye flashed a passionate ire,
 As they scornfully flung me their answer of fire!

"Why harrow your heart with the grief and the pain?
 Why paint you the picture that's scorching my brain?
 Why speak of the night when I stood on the lawn,
 And watched the last flame die away in the dawn?
 'T is over,—that vision of terror,—of woe!
 Its horrors I would not recall;—let them go!
 I am calm when I think what I suffered them for;
 I grudge not the quota I pay to the war!

"But Douglass!—deep down in the core of my heart,
 There's a throbbing, an aching, that will not depart;
 For memory mourns with a wail of despair,
 The loss of her treasures,—the subtle, the rare,

Precious things over which she delighted to pore,
Which nothing,—ah! nothing, can ever restore!

“The rose-covered porch where I sat as your bride—
The hearth where at twilight I leaned at your side—
The low-cushioned window-seat, where I would lie,
With my head on your knee, and look out on the sky :
The chamber all holy with love and with prayer,
The motherhood memories clustering there—
My temple of worship black ruin entwines!
My household Penates are dashed from their shrines!

“Thank God! there 's a dwelling not builded with hands,

Whose pearly foundation, immovable stands ;
There struggles, alarms, and disquietudes cease,
And the blissfullest balm of the spirit is—peace!
Small trial 'twill seem when our perils are past,
And we enter the house of our Father at last,—
Light trouble, that here, in the night of our stay,
Our wilderness lodging was riven away !

“The children—dear hearts!—it is touching to see
My Beverly's beautiful kindness to me ;
So buoyant his mien—so heroic—resigned—
The boy has the soul of his father, I find!

Not a childish complaint or regret have I heard—
Not even from Archie, a petulant word :
Once only—a tear moistened Sophy's bright cheek:—
'Papa has no home now!'—'twas all she could speak.

"A stranger I wander midst strangers; and yet
I never—no not for a moment, forget
That my heart has a home—just as warm and as true,
As if Beechenbrook Cottage still sheltered me too.
God grant that this refuge from sorrow and pain—
This blessedest haven of peace, may remain!
And, then, tho' disaster, still sharper, befall,
I think I can patiently bear with it all:
For the rarest, most exquisite bliss of my life
Is wrapped in a word, Douglass . . . I am your wife!"

IX.

When fearful and thronging, calamities rush
Resistless as Destiny o'er us, and crush
The life from the quivering heart, till we feel Like the victim whose body is broke on the wheel—
When the point of endurance has touched us, at last,
—One throe, and we think that the limit is passed—
When we shivering hang on the verge of despair—
There still is capacity left us to bear.

The storm of the Winter, the smile of the Spring,
No respite, no pause, and no hopefulness bring ;
The demon of carnage still breathes his hot breath,
And fiercely goes forward the harvest of death.

Days painfully drag their slow burden along ;
And the pulse of the nation, so steady and strong,
Stands still, as there comes, from the echoing shore
Of the winding and clear Rappahannock, the roar

Of conflict so fell, that the silvery flood
Runs purple—and rapid and ghastly with blood.

'Tis morn—but the night has brought Alice no rest ;
The roof, seems to press like a weight, on her breast ;
And she wanders forth, wearily lifting her eye,
To seek for relief 'neath the calm of the sky.

The air of the forest is spicy and sweet,
And dreamily babbles a brook at her feet ;
Her children are 'round her, and sunshine and flowers,
Try vainly to banish the gloom of the hours.
With a volume she fain her wild thoughts would assuage,

But her vision can trace not a line on the page,
And the poet's dear strains, once so soft to her ear,
Have lost all their witchery's power to cheer.

The evening approaches—the pressure—the woe
Grows drearer and heavier,—yet she must go,
And stifle between the dead walls, as she may,
The heart that scarce breathed in the free open day.

She reaches the dwelling that serves as her home ;
A horseman awaits at the entrance ;—the foam

Is flecking the sides of his fast-ridden steed,
Who pants overworn with exhaustion and speed ;
And Alice for support to Beverly clings,
As the soldier delivers the letter he brings.

Her ashy lips move, but the words do not come,
And she stands in her whiteness, bewildered and dumb.
She turns to the letter with hopeless appeal,
But her fingers are helpless to loosen the seal.
She lifts her dim eyes with a look of despair,—
Her hands for a moment are lifted in prayer ;
The strength she has sought, is vouchsafed in her need :
—“ I think I can bear it now, Beverly . read.”

The boy with the resolute nerve of a man,
And a voice which he holds as serene as he can,
Takes quietly from her the letter, and reads :—

“ Dear Madam—my heart in its sympathy bleeds
For the pain that my tidings must bear you : may God
Most tenderly comfort you, under his rod !

“ This morning at daybreak, a terrible charge
Was made on the enemy's centre : such large
And fresh reinforcements were held at his back,
He stoutly and stubbornly met the attack.

Our cavalry bore themselves splendidly :—far
In front of his line galloped Colonel Dunbar ;
Erect in his stirrups,—his sword flashing high,
And the look of a conqueror kindling his eye,
His silvery voice rang aloft thro' the roar
Of the musketry poured from the opposite shore :
—“ Remember the Valley !—remember your wives !
And on to your duty, boys !—on—with your lives !”

“ He turned, and he paused, as he uttered the call,—
Then reeled in his seat, and fell,—pierced by a ball.

“ He lives and he breathes yet :—the surgeons declare,
That the balance is trembling 'twixt hope and despair.
In his blanket he lies, on the Hospital floor,—
So calm, you might dream all his agony o'er,
And here, as I write, on his face I can see
An expression whose radiance is startling to me.
His faith is sublime :—he relinquishes life,
And craves but one blessing,—to look on his wife !”

The Chaplain's recital is ended :—no word
From Alice's white, breathless lips has been heard ;
Till rousing herself from her passionless woe,
She simply and quietly says—“ I will go.”

There are moments of anguish so utter, so deep—
That numbness seems over the senses to creep,
With interposition, whose timely relief,
Is an anodyne-draught to the madness of grief.
Such mercy is meted to Alice;—her eye
Is as tearless as tho' sorrow's fountain was dry;
The waves and the billows sweep over her soul,
And she bends to their rush, with a passive control.

Through the dusk of the night—through the glare of the day,
She urges, unconscious, her desolate way:
One image is ever her vision before
—That blanketed form on the hospital floor!

Her journey is ended; and yonder she sees
The spot where he lies, looming white thro' the trees.
The Chaplain advances to meet her:—he draws
Her silently onward;—no question—no pause—
For her finger she lays on her lip;—if she spake,
She knows that the spell that upholds her, would break.

She has strength to go forward; they enter the door,—
And there on the crowded and blood-tainted floor,

Close wrapped in his blanket, lies Douglass :---his brow
Wore never a look so seraphic as now !
She stretches her arms the dear form to enfold,---
God help her ! . . . she shrieks . . . it is silent and cold !

X.

“ Break, my heart, and ease this pain—
Cease to throb, thou tortured brain ;
Let me die,—since he is slain,
—Slain in battle !

Blesséd brow that loved to rest
Its dear whiteness on my breast—
Gory was the grass it prest,
—Slain in battle !

Oh ! that still and stately form—
Never more will it be warm ;
Chilled beneath that iron storm,
—Slain in battle !

Not a pillow for his head—
Not a hand to smooth his bed---
Not one tender parting said,
—Slain in battle !

Hope and joy and peace depart ;
 —Slain in battle !

Rather live, poor heart ! Thy dross
 Needs the cleansing of the cross :
 Christ can win thee gain from loss !
 —Slain in battle !”

’Tis thus through her days and her nights of despair,
 Her months of bereavement so bitter to bear,
 That Alice moans ever. Ah ! little they know
 Who look on that brow, still and white as the snow,
 Who watch,—but in vain,—for the sign or the tear,
 That only comes thick when no mortal is near—
 Who whisper—“how gently she bends to the rod !”
 Because all her heart-break is kept for her God—
 Ah ! little they know of the tempests that roll
 Their ruin and wreck through the depths of her soul !

Afar in our sunny homes on the shore,
 We heed not how wildly the billows may roar ;
 We smile at our fire-sides, happy and free,
 While the rich-freighted argosy founders at sea !
 Tho’ wrapped in the weeds of her widowhood, pale,
 Tho’ life seems all sunless and dim thro’ the veil
 That drearily shadows her sorrowful brow,—
 Is the cause of her Country less dear to her now ?

Does the patriot-flame in her heart cease to stir—
 Does she feel that the conflict is over for her ?
 Because the red-war-tide has deluged her c'er—
 Has wreaked its wild wrath, and can harm her no more Does she stand, self-absorbed, on the wreck she has braved,
 Nor care if her Country be lost or be saved ?

By her pride in the soil that has granted her birth—
 By her tenderest memories garnered on earth—
 By the boon she would leave to her children, alone,—
 Right to live and breathe free, in a land of their own ;
 By the altar where once rose the prayer and the hymn ;
 By the home that lies wasted, forsaken and grim,—
 By the pangs she has suffered,—the ills she has borne—
 By the desolate exile thro' which she must mourn,—
 By the struggles that hallow this fair Southern sod,
 By the vows she has breathed in the ear of her God—
 By the blood of the heart that she worshipped,—the life
 That enfolded her own ; by her love, as his wife ;
 By his death on the battle-field, gallantly brave,
 By the shadow that ever enwraps her---his grave---
 By the faith she reposes, Oh ! Father, in Thee ;
 She claims that her glorious South MUST BE FREE !

